2. Prove to you that all our actions that are regulated by such a well informed conscience are good and honest; so that if this eye be single, the whole body shall be full of light. If the conscience be pure, the man's holy, and so the first part of the text is proved.

2. As it answers to the evil eye, so it denotes an evil conscience, a conscience that do's not give true judgment of duty, ill informed. And this either First wholly so, and then 'tis reprobate sense, such as that of them that call good evil and evil good, from which men are stilled 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 1 Tim. 4. 2. or 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, saith Phavorinus, Rom. 1. 31. Or secondly but in part, and then 'tis either first an erring conscience, or secondly a doubtful conscience, or thirdly a scrupulous conscience, to which also several others will fall in. And I shall show you how every of these do's mislead a man into the dark. The scrupulous raiseth clouds and mists about him, dark errors and discomforts too: the doubtful do's instead of guiding leave him so puzl'd, that he knows not which way to be-take himself; and the erring conscience lights him into the pit, takes him by the hand to thrust him down, guides him into a necessity of sin; and the no conscience, the reprobate sense, it is a darkness somewhat worse then that, the blackness of Hell here. All this I shall do in order.

Upon the other part conscience as it relates to actions already don, so it do's testify, and in so doing either excuse or accuse Rom. 2. 15. Now though conscience in the other former respect hath indeed the greater influence upon our practice, and so to it the text do's more directly answer: yet this latter having some also in order to the making future actions holy by repentance, (for when once the soul hath shipwreckit on a sin, and she is ready to sink and perish, there is no plank on which she can escape but repentance.) Now 'tis this Eye that must look out for that; 'tis an accusing conscience that must set him upon Repentance: this hurry's him about and will not let him rest, 'till he get upon the plank that's fastened to the Anchor, even the Anchor of hope, by which until it be secured, a good conscience never is at quiet. Because I intend to say but little to this, I shall dispatch it now. And that in order to its actions excusing and accusing.

And first if conscience be the Eye: then a clear single eye is a clear conscience; and then of that it must be true that it do's make the man full of light; and so it do's indeed as light do's signify joy and gladness, and so it often do's in Scripture Psalms 4. 6, 7. And truly the applauses of an honest undeceiving heart, that is conscious to itself of cordial endeavors after good, and knows it neither had ill ends nor ill means, they shed comforts beyond all that the earth can give, they shed the peace of God that passeth understanding. If my conscience be clear, let my condition be never so overcast, never so dark and cloudy, yet do I live in shine. This is the only thing that makes every estate gladsome: If my condition be low pressing adversity, yet if my conscience assure me 'tis not my fault that threw me down into it, my sin did not put out the light of God's candle of prosperity that before shone about me; but rather because I would hold fast my duty, and would not let go a good conscience, therefore I was thrown down with them into deep affliction, here my conscience assures me I am in a case which S. James bids me count all joy Jam. 1. 2. and which our Savior do's call blessed Matth. 5. 11. S. Peter tells me: If ye be reproached for the name of Christ (and 'tis so for all duty) happy are ye; for the spirit of Glory and of God resteth on you, 1 Pet. 14. 14. What if I be in the place of Dragons, my conscience do's assure me 'twas my duty not guilt did put me there, that is, God brought me thither, and he is with me there: the Spirit of God resteth on you. What if I be in darkness and dimness of anguish, encompassed with the shadow of death, the Spirit of Glory resteth on me. And then sure a clear conscience makes the man full of light, when it makes him full of glory: when in his darkest solitudes there do's break in the light of God's countenance.

Let them be sadded with afflictions, who understand no delight but in carnalities, whose souls are married to some little comforts of this world. Adversity indeed sweeps all their joys away at once, a cross throws blacks upon them strait, their heart's in mourning instantly. But he that understands the comforts of a good conscience, and knows where to find them, and hath a treasure of them in his breast, will soon be able to allay the other sadnesses.

What can I want while I have a continual feast, for so'is a good conscience? It is not in the power of words to express the happiness of this blisful state. It is the peace of God which passeth all understanding Phil. 4. 7. and though felicity seems to be measured by our perception of it, here we are happy beyond the scanty limits of our narrow apprehensions, do not take in the beatific object, but are ourselves enclos'd, and enter into the joy of our Lord, Matt. 25. 23.

2. In order to the second act, accusing; if conscience be an eye, then the well qualified eye is the tender conscience. I mean not in the modern sense, not only as it is accompanied with, but as 'tis but another word for a weak Judgment and a proud heart; sturdy opposing private opinion or fancy against public authority. And whereas conscience is said to be the eye of the soul, a tender conscience has the sme importance in this case, as when we call a blear or bloudshot, a tender eye. A gentle word for a troublesome malady. The innocent importance of the word is that which denotes, besides weakness in judging, quickness in perception; for conscience is the judgment of the mind concerning actions, and whatsoever is tender is weak; but a conscience which is such, as tender things are always, is sensible of every the least touch of guilt, checks at whatsoever we do amiss; the least thing we do is a wound to it. This is the tender conscience. Such a one as is deeply sensible of the majesty, and power, and justice of Almighty God, and the fatally provoking guilt of sin; fears always, doubts and trembles, foregoes lawful enjoyment, lest they should prove to be unlawful, and flies from every not only approach, but even appearance of evil. This is an uneasy state, but the inconvenience is abundantly repaid by the safety it procures, whilst this flaming sword that turns every way, guards both our Paradise and us, and suspicions render us secure. But if my heart grow hard, not tender, and my conscience insensible, there is no hopes of cure.

I shall content myself with this one instance in answer to the evil eye as it relates to both these actions of accusing and excusing: though I might also name the conscience that accuseth to despair. This is an evil eye indeed that entertains itself with the terrors of utter darkness in their own shapes, that sees nothing but feinds, those spirits of the dark; nor will see any other. An eye that will not endure, but hates the least light of instruction or comfort. A darkness this, out of which the grave hath been counted an escape, the darks of death a refuge, yea to avoid the horror they have run into the shades of Hell. And oh! how great, how insupportable is this darkness?

But God knows in this age we see little cause to fear, nor reason to endeavor to prevent this. Some little beginnings of it would be mercies to most men, the danger now a days is in the insensibleness of conscience, the heart that never do's accuse of its commissions in earnest, nay rather do's find out excuses; it do's not check or sting them to the quick, but rather tickles them. Good God▪ the heathens had a much more tender constitution of soul. The Poet says of guilty souls —ad omnia fulg•ra pallent,

Cum •onat exanimes primo quoque murmune coeli.

They that knew not there was an Hell to recompense iniquity, nor knew that God threaten'd it with plagues; yet when they heard it thunder, their guilt did strike them like the thunderbolts, their souls did faint as it were the voice of God pronouncing wrath to their iniquities, as if its lightnings were the flashes of that brimstone in whose eternal burnings sin must dwell. This conscience did in them, when knowing Christians can stand unappal'd. We read of men of sear'd consciences 1 Tim. 4. 2. and such indeed cannot be tender. Searing do's make insensible of pricks or little touches, that you may lance and gash, and it will not perceive. And so it seems are some men's consciences: and you will find there some other qualifications of such men, they depart from the faith, they give heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of Devils; and it will be no wonder if they desert the holy Christian faith, who have put themselves under the tutorage of Satan, and have imbib'd the doctrine of Devils, who with his institution, have received his flames, whose consciences are feared, that feel no stripes from their commissions, and are such whom sin do's not wound.

We read of a strange evil eye Matth. 7, 3. seest not the beam that is in thine own eye. A beam upon the eye must needs make all dark: but the insensibleness of such an eye, that do's not feel a beam is strange beyond imagination, yet 'twas but fit to word a conscience that was not sensible of the guilt of willful gross deliberate sins; 'tis like an eye that under the dead weight of a mighty beam yet roulds and feels no pressure. A much worse then feared conscience this. That which is seared though it will not shrink for a prick or gash, yet 'twill shrink under load; but this feels no degree of weight; but though it be that weak and tender part the eye, yet is this without feeling under that which the whole body cannot stand under, nothing but pillars can support.

The characters of such a conscience, and its dark consequence (to fit it to my text,) are given by S. Paul Eph. 4. 18, 19. You see here a blind heart like an evil eye creates a darkness such as makes them aliens to the life of God; for indeed they lead the life of feinds the inhabitants of darkness, and they do quickly grow to an estate past feeling, and then they commit evil with greediness.

And indeed 'twere very easy for me to show how this do's grow by deading the tenderness of conscience at the first, by fortifying against its checks and pricks, by seeking little excuses to allay and palliate the sores, either Christ do's not mean so strictly; or getting other principles to set against the strictness, as custom of the age, or honor, or the like; God knows things that will not be principles, nor be allowed in any lest degree, when he comes to examine, but in the mean time they do stop the mouth of conscience, and the doing so frequently, together with the conversations of sin, do clear take off the horror, and the aversation, and by degrees the sense the mind first leaves to be afraid and startle at it, and then leaves to check for it. All this I could deduce at large, but that I hasten to the other remaining consideration of conscience, as it respecteth actions to be don, as it signifies the judgment of the mind informing us what we may or must do, or what we must forbear.

And so, I told you, as it answers to the single eye, so it denotes the pure Conscience, the enlightened eye of the mind, that is, a truly well informed conscience, a conscience that judges according to its rule. And to this I must (what I promised) tell you first, What is the entire Rule of conscience, that so we may know when conscience do's inform us truly this we must do, that not. For conscience being not itself supreme director, it hath a God above it, that conscience may be right, it must be according to its rule, therefore we must enquire of that; and

First 'tis certain that the Law of God in force (as all the law of Christ is to us Christians, particularly that of these Chapters that contain Christ's sermon on the Mount, Repentance, self-denial, Charity, forgiving injuries, humility &c.) is a rule of conscience. And here I will suppose that I do not speak to Antinomians, and that I need not to prove that we are obliged to do what God by his commands has enjoined, and that whether the mandate terminat in duty to himself, or to our fellow men, especially his Vicegerent upon earth the lawful Magistrate. There are some men I know who would acquit themselves to their Governors, if they are content to suffer in case of disobedience: but unless there were guilt in the neglect of active obedience, it would be very unjust to enforce passive, especially when 'tis plain that all the Apostles arguings Rom. 13. do prove an obligation to active duty. 1. Because the Magistrate hath Commission from God; and therefore he that will not yield active obedience to their lawful constitutions, will not obey the Lord's commission v. 2. and then 4. he is the minister of God, his officer; and he that do's refuse obedience to those Constitutions of an officer, which his superior hath impower'd him to make, he do's refuse it to that Superior. And out of these he then infers Wherefore ye must needs be subject.

Yea indeed if the just laws of such Governors do not oblige the conscience, neither can many of God's laws. To instance; God hath commanded me I shall not steal, and I think myself bound in conscience not to do it; but what is it to steal? To take that which of right is another man's against his will. And what do's give a right but human Law? 'Tis according to that, anything is thine or mine. Christ do's not interpose in settling rights; for when the man would have had him speak to his Brother to divide the inheritance with him; answers Man who made me a Judge or a divider amongst you, let the laws do it. That inheritance which here a Man do's claim as eldest, in other places of this very Nation the youngest should have only right too; where the tenure of Burrough English takes place. And again in other places each brother should have equal right to by Gavelkind. And in some other Nations, as in Denmark for example, no child of any second Wife hath any right, according to the example of Abraham: yet all these several ways of right are one as just as another, and in one place the one hath as true a right as the other hath in the other. Establishit laws therefore do give the only right, and by those human Laws thou hast a right in conscience to that which they make thine; for otherwise how can it be a sin against my conscience to take that from thee, which neither thou nor any man else hath a right in conscience to? Such human laws therefore do oblige the Conscience, or else God's eighth and tenth Commandments cannot.

3. There is yet another branch of the Rule of conscience, and that is the law of scandal. In things that both by God's and by man's law are free to me to do or not, if yet by doing any of them, or by not doing, I see others will be ensnared in sin, I am bound in conscience to avoid either such actions or omissions. 1 Cor. 8. from v. 8. Rom. 14.

And here I will not wonder how barefacit temptations to vice, and pressing sin upon a man with all the arts of friendship, or of treachery or force, should grow to be civilities and kindnesses; when an innocent lawful action is so ill character'd because it may prove a stumbling block: but I will only sum up what hath been said in one word: the Will of God is the Rule of conscience, I am bound in conscience to do what God will have; and so the law of Christ, and the just laws of our just Governors (which that we should submit too, is the will of God saith S. Peter) and the law of scandal are the full and entire rule of conscience. Whatsoever they prescribe or forbid, that my conscience, if it be rightly informed, will tell me I must do or forbear; and if I act according to the dictates of a conscience so informed, my actions will be good and honest, and such a single eye makes my whole body full of light, which was the second thing.

Now this is proved in one word; that must needs be a good life, which is regulated by a good conscience, because all good life is called by the name of a good conscience 1 Tim. 1. 19. This was S. Paul's whole charge to Timothy holding faith and a good conscience, there's the belief and duty that's the whole. So 1 Pet. 3. 16. a good conscience is explained by a good Conversation in Christ, and plainer yet Heb. 13. 18. We trust we have a good conscience willing in all things to live honestly. Sincere endeavors to obey the conscience in everything, not boggling with it accepting the persons of duties, and being very conscientious in some things, but taking liberty in other, bribing my conscience to wink like an evil eye, and leave me in the dark as to some actions, this is not to be conscientious; he is so only that is willing to live honestly in all things, and to do so is matter for the Apostles confidence 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . This also was the sum of all S. Paul himself endeavored after Acts 24. 16. And herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offense towards God and towards man. He had no stricter aims, here was the height of his Religion, these were his exercises. And the ancient Father Clemens Alex. Strom. 6. says 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . And what would any man have more? Yea 'tis apparent from the very terms; for if thy conscience truly inform thee of all thy duty, and thou dost accordingly, then thou dost all thy duty, or which is all that we can do. So far as thy hearty endeavor is to this, so far is thy life good and acceptable.

And here I have an hint for application by conviction of those, who guide their conscience, and consequently their lives by humors and fancies, and not by the certain rules of conscience, the laws I have assigned. Some men will call that conscience which is their inclination, though they do not examine whence the inclination springs, from God, or from suggestion of an interest, or an affliction, and think they are bound to do, or may do that they have a mind to do. Some men's rash heats that have something like zeal, and it may be that have good intentions in them, are strait the dictates of their Conscience, and they must actuate those animosities and heats, for they are bound in conscience. Some men are advised by their fears, and that will look like conscience in a little time. Some men's imaginations prompted by loose and libertine interpretations of Scripture or false infusions, are strait their conscience, and then their conscience tells them they must act accordingly. But where's the Law for these? Conscience was, I told you, God's Vicegerent, possessed his throne in man, and was his Deputy, prescribed to all man's actions and took cognizance of them; and accordingly did sentence: and will a man have humor give the Law to God's Vicegerent, or vain imaginations rule 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 that God within us, as the ancients called it, set fancy on the Throne?

Or I might secondly complain of them that would divide the rule of conscience, and pick and choose and take but part of it; the immediate law of God they would think themselves bound to, but for the law of scandal they regard it little. Who did make them the keepers of their brothers soul? If others by misunderstanding of their actions be drawn to sin, at their own peril be it; and at so little rates they value the salvation of that soul, which Christ thought worth his blood, that for their meat or drink, as S. Paul words it, they will let their Brother perish, for whom Christ died, do actions for their interest or security under a close and secret sense of their own, which being not understood by other weaker souls that look on their example with some Reverence, they are led to sin and to perdition.

But much less do they think a law of man a Rule for conscience. According to the Spartan method, to be found out was transgressing the law, the crafty performance was merit and virtue: and whereas only Almighty God has cognizance of the heart, his laws alone can reach designs and the obortive issues of the thought, or those reserved enormities that are committed in the dark, and without the privity of a witness.

Here were a subject for a sad complaint, but that I have occasion for a worse, and that is of the conscience, that answers to the evil eye, the other subject of the parable, that is, an evil conscience, a conscience that do's not give true judgment of duty, ill informed. And first that which is totally, or for the most so, and of that but a word for 'tis not pleasant sure to rake in such a sink.

We read in Scripture, of men given up to a reprobate mind or sense, Rom. 1. 28. and to every good Work reprobate Tim. 1. 16. men who against all the checks of conscience, and in despite of all its oppositions have chosen and pursued forbidden interests and pleasures so long, till custom of them hath made them a part not only of their family but themselves: and they do nothing now but prosecute them by contrivances and actions, and have don this till conscience is stupefied; and as pleasures are especially saith Aristotle, corruptive of principles, from the absolute necessity they have conceived of them they think them little sins, and from a long practice none at all, these men are so far in a reprobate ense, their hearts give a false judgment, as false indeed as Satan would have them give, and falser much then he can give himself of things of Religion, who believes and trembles. For they stick not to think those terrors Clergy men do talk of are but mormo's, vizards of fear, only Religious spectres, shades of terror; those strictnesses of virtue and of the means of practicing it, but the dreams of bigots, foolish self injuries, and those things we with so much eager zeal call sins, the only and not dangerous enjoyments.

'Tis the Apostles asseveration, and it is justified by every days unhappy experience, that evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived 2 Tim. 3. 13. Habits of ill emprove gradually as those of virtue; only with this difference, that the growth is more sudden and prosperous: like that of weeds and noxious plants in respect of those which are medicinal. There is no opinion, nor no practice so bad which men by degrees cannot make plausible; as custom renders vice necessary, so by familiarity it becomes acceptable; the first horrors are soon worn off; and as it fares in War; the enemy is made a servant, and after grows up to be a favorite, and is at length a master. The progress from bad to worse, is like that of heavy bodies downwards, the native weight, gains fresh accessions from the decent already made, and the motion being continued grows still more rapid and irresistible. That fool who said in his heart there is no God, e're long empoves into a wit, and loudly says there neither is or can be one. Conscience galled with perpetual ill usage contracts a callows hardness, and becomes utterly insensible; and by these unhappy steps, ungodly men are dead, while they live 1 Tim. 5. 6. are dead in trespasses and sins. Eph. 2. 1.

O thou the day-spring from on high that cam'st to visit us, who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death, in ignorance and sin, and in the suburbs of eternal darkness, shed thy light in our hearts we beseech thee and by the illuminations of thy Holy Spirit give us enlightened minds, and sanctified wills and affections. Thou hast placed conscience in thy stead within us, to do thy offices and to be thy Vicegerent, to lay thy laws to us for our direction, and to watch over all our actions, to teach us, to convince us, to correct, or comfort us. Furnish we beseech thee then this thy commissioner within us with all qualifications necessary for thy offices, endue it with the knowledge of all thy will, that we may have a right judgment in all things, and then endue us with obsequious hearts, that may be always ready to obey the dictates of our consciences, willing to live piously and honestly in all things, exercising ourselves always in this to have a conscience void of offense both towards God and towards man, and when the good Lord delivers us from this sad state and the occasions of it, and if at any time we do rebel against thy officer our conscience, Lord arm it with thy terrors that it may whip and lash us back again into our duty, and sting, and goad, and never let us rest till we return to our obedience and persevere therein unto the end, then shall we have the blessed comforts of a good conscience here, and the gladsome light of a clear heart in this world; and in the world to come light and Glory with the in thy Kingdom &c.

SERMON XX. THE LIGHT OF THE BODY is the Eye.

Matt. 6. 22, 23.

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thy eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

I Have drawn you the parallel betwixt the Eye and the Conscience, to several of their objects and uses; showed you how the clear eye is not a better guide to a man's walks, nor finds more pleasure in the prospects of those beauties that are made to tempt and entertain the sight, then a pure conscience do's find in looking over the landshape of a life led righteously, soberly, and Godly, which it must needs if it follow the guidance of this single eye, this well-informed conscience: I have lead you also to the confines of that more dismal prospect, the dark of that sad state, which an evil conscience do's lead into. This I have done in one, and that in the worst consideration, that of a sear'd reprobate conscience; there remain three that I proposed to consideration; the first that of an erring conscience, second doubtful, third scrupulous.

And now I am to show how each of these do's lead a man into the dark; the scrupulous raiseth a dust about him, leads into error and discomfort too; the doubtful do's instead of guiding him leave him so puzzl'd that he knows not which way to betake himself; and the erring conscience lights him into the pit, and takes him by the hand only to thrust him down: if in any of these ways the eye be evil, the whole body shall be full of darkness. Of these in their order.

2. An erring conscience, a conscience that gives false information of duty, that either tells me I may or I must do that which either God's Law or some Law in force upon me tells me I must not do; or else tells I must not do that which I am bound to do, or at the least may do. Now that this is a light indeed like those deceitful ones that lead men over precipices into dark ruins; like such lights that were so placed between the rocks as to guide the mariner into a shipwreck, to make it necessary for him to be dashed against the one or the other, is most certain: for so it is here. There is scarce such another infelicity as that this man lies under, whose conscience tells him one thing, when God's Law, or that which is any way his duty do's require the contrary; for if he do according to the Law of God, he acts against his conscience, and so sins; and if he act according to his conscience, he sins against the Law of God. Poor soul! Sin lies on the right and on the left hand, which way soever he do's turn, it seizes on him, and all this I shall prove.

1. That if he act against his conscience he sins, (though the Law of God make it no sin) Scripture and reason shall make good. Rom. 14. 14. I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself, but to him that esteemeth anything unclean, to him it is unclean. God had once forbidden such and such meats under pain of sin to the Jews by Moses Law, and made them unclean, that is, unlawful to their use: Now Christ had taken off this obligation, and made all meats lawful for any man; S. Paul saith that he knew so. I am assured that Christ hath so removed all obligation to the Law of Moses, that to a Christian no meat is unlawful to be eaten: but yet for all this 'tis unlawful to him, who thinks it still prohibited, and if his erring conscience tell him he ought not eat it, though by Christ's certain Law he may, he sins if he do eat against his conscience, and that to such an height, that he whose example wrought with him to eat against the persuasion of his mind, destroyeth the man v. 15. Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died; 'tis therefore a destroying sin to do a lawful thing against a man's conscience. The reason of all this is clear, because no Law of God or man, no rule of duty can be applied unto us, but by the mediation of conscience: for till my conscience lays it to my heart, and tells me such a thing is commanded and my duty, it is to me as if there were no such command, and it were not my duty, for till then I knew nothing of it; this alone therefore do's propose and apply duty to us, and consequently whether that which it proposes be my duty really in itself or no, yet I must needs look upon it as so, having no other direction imaginable what to do or forbear, but what my conscience some way instructed tells me God or my Governors have commanded or forbid me. So that if I am resolved in my mind of the sinfulness and obliquity of an action proposed, though really the thing be innocent, yet to me in my present circumstance 'twill be utterly unlawful, and though the action be innocent, the agent will be guilty.

2. That God hath placed the conscience in us as the only next and immediate rule of all our actions, according to which they are to be directed, which if they be not, they are faulty, as everything that swerves from its rule is not right: though what I have said will sufficiently prove, yet Scripture do's confirm; when it says Rom. 14. 23. Whatsoever is not of faith is sin, that is to say, whatsoever is contrary to the persuasion of lawfulness, that is in other words contrary to conscience, is sin; whatsoever he do's as long as he thinks in conscience he should not do it, he sins whether the thing be sin or no, as that was no sin of which he there spake. And reason good; for we are so far honest hearted lovers of God, as we embrace that which our hearts are really possessed is his service and our duty, and hate the contrary; that is, as we follow our conscience: conscience being nothing but the persuasion that this is duty, which if we go against 'tis sure we like and follow that which in our thoughts is vicious and wicked; be it what it will in itself, to us 'tis so: 'tis sure the inclinations and the actions pursue vice, when they pursue that which they cannot look upon but as vice. Conscience therefore is the rule from which 'tis sin to recede.

'Tis with fair pretence to reason said, that nothing can be a rule which is itself crooked and irregular. That which is strait is indeed said to be index sui & obliqui, and having justified its own rectitude, becomes qualified to be a test of right and wrong in others. For certainly if the man knew what God's Law do's require of him, in that case the conscience do's not err; if he do not know what God's word do's require, how can he follow it against that which his conscience tells him God requires? And it is certain if the man should suspend his action, and have not reason to act according to his erring conscience, he never can have reason to act according to a conscience well-informed, not when it tells him God is to be loved; for it is sure his conscience do's as much propose the error as his duty, as it do's the truth: the man as really believes the one is to be don as the other, and hath no reason to make difference, and therefore if at any time he must follow his conscience, he must always, and it will be sin to act against it, be it what it will.

But then you will hope it will excuse to act according to it. Oh no alas! for that's the second thing in this case of erring conscience: if a man act according to his conscience he sins too, if he act against the Law of God. Scripture will furnish me with several examples and proofs of this, and 'tis a doctrine worth the taking notice of, it having proved to so many persons a plea for actions otherwise abominable; they followed their conscience, 'twas, it may be, mistake in judgment, but 'twas uprightness of heart, sincerity of conscience. Now to take off this color, which I shall do with all imaginable plainness. Our Savior John 16. 2. foretells to his Disciples, they shall put you out of their Synagogues yea the time will come that whosoever killeth you will think that he doth God service, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that he do's offer God an oblation or worship; shall think it not only lawful but acceptable to God, and of the nature of a Sacrifice which propitiates for other offenses, to put you to death. See here a conscience bravely glos'd, when the error looked like Religion and Atonement, (a color not at all strange to our days in such another case,) and yet these Jews that did so (for of them he speaks) were given up to the direst punishments that ever any nation did groan under. Of the same Jews S. Paul says Rom. 10. 2. I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge; that is, I must testify of them, that they are very many of them great zealots for their Law, as that which is commanded them by God, and so in their way and heart zealous to have God obeyed, only for want of knowledge they are mistaken in their zeal. Here is strong conscience granted in these Jews, and that built up upon a Law of God, then indeed outdated, which yet thro a zealous earnestness they were ignorant of: but yet the following this zeal and conscience was plagued with total induration of of that people c. 11. 8, 9, 10.

Nor was this S. Paul's heat against that persecuting nation, but that Apostle do's more plainly yet and home to our matter say of himself, Acts 23. 1. I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day: I have all my life long, even when I was a defender of the Mosaical Law against Christ's reformation, acted sincerely and uprightly according to my conscience: and again 2 Tim. 1. 3. I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with a pure conscience, i. e. whom I have obeyed sincerely all my time, even when thro ignorance I persecuted the Christian faith, doing according to the dictate of my conscience, and as I was persuaded I ought to do. And now if conscience will excuse, there was enough of that, a good conscience and a pure conscience; and will his fiery persecutions now by virtue of his conscience be Christened holy zeal, shall the pure conscience make his bloody hands to be undefiled? Oh no: 'twas Blasphemy, and injury, and persecution, for all 'twas conscience, 1 Tim. 1. 13. I was before a blasphemer, &c. and notwithstanding I did it all in the uprightness and sincerity of my heart, I am the chief of sinners, v. 15. And let us not suppose these aggravations were laid on by S. Paul upon himself because of his unbelief, that that was the only thing that gave guilt to his actions, and that we thro faith and assurance shall escape, if we do such gross actions out of an erring conscience. For on the contrary S. Paul do's bring his unbelief not as the Aggravation, but the Apology of his crimes, he pleads that for himself v. 13. and he finds another occasion for God's remitting him not from his conscience, which might alleviate the faults, but by his being by the horror of his sins a greater instance of God's wonderful grace in forgiving, v. 16. Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe in him to life everlasting. God dealt most mercifully with me, called me from heaven, whilst I was persecuting him, to be a prime object of his patience and longanimity, and in order of time the first that was so miraculously called, that so the wickedest of the Gentiles may in me have an example of hope of mercy, if they shall come in to Christ.

And will it now be fit, my Brethren, with this of S. Paul, who notwithstanding such true pleas of conscience is forced to seek out for such motives of forgiveness, and plead hard ignorance and unbelief, and yet confess himself the chief of sinners, with this I say to parallel some actions of our days, that under the pretence of conscience (which too hath no Law, as that of S. Paul had, though then outdated) will justify forbidden actions even against repentance, men will not ask forgiveness where they can pretend conscience: I could instance in a strange particular of one of my remembrance, and my knowledge of the person and the story sufficiently notorious, who because the Papists believing that to be Christ, which indeed is bread, worship it, therefore thought in his conscience all kneeling at the Sacrament Idolatry, and to that error adding the command Deut. 13. 6, 7, 8, 9. cut off his brother's and his mother's head: yea and when condemned to death by sentence of Law for the action, would not be beaten from his hold, but on the strength of that mistaken place went as boldly with that blood on his hand and his soul to face the judgment seat, as he could have don, had he been washed in Christ's own blood; and of this resolute fury the Zealots of our neighbor country of Scotland have made many recent instances in their revived Ravilliacs. See the sad issue of an erring conscience, an action whose horror feinds would startle at, such a persuasion do's make meritorious, and yet God knows, that erring consciences have brought the Parent of a Nation (a thing of much direr guilt) to the same state; and yet that conscience must be admitted an excuse, when God knows jealousies and suspicions have been all the ground and all the rule for their determinations of conscience, and yet on that stock alone they could misjudge and censure, speak evil of and revile the actions of just Governors, and do that which I dare not say. When against all Laws both of God and man, all ties sacred and civil, obligations of oaths and duties, that it may be impossible to plead ignorance, men yet will act under the banner of such a thin conscience, that never could produce any Law of God for its direction or its quiet, and yet think themselves secure. When a confident persuasion of heart, God knows how taken up, shall quite annual that command of Christ, of taking up the Cross, and change that state which he calls blessed, suffering for righteousness sake, (if there were such a thing) change it into so great a curse, as men will rather embowel themselves in their brother's hearts, involve a Nation in blood and misery, in guilt and ruin, than not throw off the Cross from off their shoulders.

And now 'tis to no purpose to observe, that when perjury and sacriledg and breach of almost every Commandment in the Decalogue shall not only become tolerable, but be the only character of a godly side by virtue of a thing called conscience; surely S. Paul was a weak man, that when he had don some such things out of a good and pure conscience, yet calls himself the chief of sinners. In like manner in the Church new religious fancies are bold to take upon them the holy face of conscience, and then to quicken men into schisms, and all uncharitable separations and factions, withdrawing them from the obedience of them that have the spiritual rule over them, not at all submitting themselves to them, who by God's appointment watch over their souls, but rather flying in their faces, at once with open disobedience, loud reproaches, bitter censures, and severe condemnations. Others, by having had men's persons in admiration, and consequently their opinions, suffered their models to be stamped upon their conscience, and then that must justify Ecclesiastical parricides, destroying their own fathers that begot them to the Church, and at once cutting off the whole line of those progenitors, that can derive their race from Christ, a fairer stem and pedigree than most can show. But alas! my Brethren, if we shall grant that these opinions really possess their souls, and that in the uprightness of their heart they did pursue them, that neither interest nor faction, nor having been disoblig'd, or having suffered, hath puffed up a passion into conscience, but that 'tis all sincerity; yet we have seen that cannot bear us out in such commissions, 'tis but an erring conscience still that animates a man into any breach of duty, and if there be no other Law to warrant actions, the conscience is so far from being able to justify them, that while it errs, it but entangles a man in the necessity of sinning, leads him into such Labyrinths of guilt, that whatever he do's, he offends: on one side if he do what his erring conscience dictates to him, he sins against God's Law; on the other side, if he forbear, he sins against God's Vicegerent, his own conscience; there is the guilt of his deed, here is the guilt of his heart, which do's oblige a man to follow that which it is sin to follow, and which makes him he must and ought to do that, which he must not nor ought to do.

And sure, my Brethren, the only application to such a conscience is to advise the laying it aside, to rectify the error. Good counsel that indeed, but the hardest to be taken in the world; for that a man may rectify, he must know himself in an error, and if he know that, then he hath not an erring conscience: this when it is strongly so, doth not so much as doubt of his opinion, and while he do's not doubt, what temptation hath he so much as to set upon the rectifying? I shall but name some means.

The first will be Prayer for Divine illumination; S. James has directed this, if any man lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, c. 1. 5. and our Savior has promise'd, that he will give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him, Luke 11. 13. whose office, we know, is to lead us into all truth, John 16. 13.

The second means will be, not to be wanting to ourselves, not to shut our eyes against, or resist the truth, Acts 28. 27. 2 Tim. 3. 8. nor by a wretchless unconcern'dness take up with slight appearances, and receive a vulgar error for a sacred revelation, and having men's persons in admiration, Jude 16. believe as doctrines the devices or commandments of men, Matt. 15. 9. not to consider what this celebrated Teacher, or this Sect and Party say, but make our resort to the Law and to the Testament, what Law of God there is for, or against this action. For in this case it is most true, There is one Law-giver, who can save and destroy, James 4. 12. and if sin be the transgression of a law, 1 John 3. 4. it inevitably follows, that where no law is, there is no transgression, Rom. 4. 15. And yet 'tis strange to see, how men amuse and embarras themselves in things that have no bottom or foundation in Scripture, and in the mean time omit the weighty matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith.

Thirdly, if I have been engaged in any practices, of which by the contrary practices of other sober rational men, I see there may be reason, if not to doubt, yet to search into them; then I will take the same course in order to the settling, or the rectifying of my judgment; and especially if any obligations to the contrary have got possession of me, if obedience and meekness, and peace of the State or Church, or any sacred bond, in a word, if any commands of Superiors, or engagements to them seem strong for the other side, then nothing but clear Law of God or my Superiors shall fixe me.

Fourthly, where things are not absolutely convincing on either side, and there is no clear Law on neither, or else so much like Law on both sides; here, as I must suspend if possible my action, for these must needs make doubts, so if I be necessitated to act on one side or other, then if my conscience do mistake, according to the degree of my diligence in examining, so will be the degrees of my guilt. If I have searchit to my utmost, and so offend out of an ignorance I could not overcome, it is the constant doctrine of all, that the mercy of our God by the tenure of the Gospel will not impute the error to a person otherwise of holy life: but if there was a means of knowing, that either heat, or any other thing did hurry me from a sufficient consideration thereof, according to my means so is my sin. Abimelech had a competent ground to think that Sarah was not Abraham's wife, when both herself, and he had told him so, and upon that he says, he took her to him in the integrity of his heart, his conscience reasonably well-informed telling him that he might do it; and yet God pⁿisheth his hast: he determined too speedily, his desire was too quick, did not proceed by those slow steps, that a good careful conscience do's move with, that will examine with all strictness where he discerns there will be gross sin on the other side. The Jews had a strong prejudice against Christ's reformation of the Law, by those so many promises of Scripture that their sacrifices should be eternal, and when for many ages they had been brought up in a Religion so owned by God, and were so hardened in that Religion by all their Teachers, 'twas no wonder they rejected the Apostles preaching out of conscience of their own Religion, Paul himself had don so, and yet God gives them up to final induration for it; because they had sufficient means of knowing Christ was sent by God to reform their Religion, for have they not heard? Rom. 10. 18. Thy diligence therefore shall alleviate the fault, and where it is used in a good measure, probably will not suffer the conscience to be long positive and peremptory in a mistake, but at the most will let it only be a doubting conscience, which how far 'tis an evil eye, and how we are to guide ourselves out of that darkness it do's lead into, we must now show.

A doubting conscience may be either in things of very little moment, and also where there is very little light to guide it, and then we only call it scrupulous; or else in things of consequence, and of these we now treat; and the Position is, that he that acts according to a doubting conscience sins, and this evil eye leads into utter darkness. The Aphorism is a certain reveled pronuncit truth, he that doubteth is damned if he eat, Rom. 14. 23. However sacred the tribunal of conscience can be thought to be, it must not stand in competition with the Throne of Almighty God, and oblige us to do that which the Divine Command has interdicted, or to leave that undon, the doing of which he has expressly charged upon us. It was thought to be a tyrannous hardship which the Egyptian task-masters put upon the Israelites, that they should be beaten because they made not brick, when they had no straw to make it with: but it would seem a more tyrannous cruelty, to punish them if they made, and also to punish if they did not make it. But so it is; he who chooses to do that which his conscience suggests he ought to avoid as being ill, and resolves to omit that which he judges or believes he ought to do as being good, has all the inordination of mind that constitutes the most flagrant guilt; he pursues evil, and turns away from good apprehended to be such, and so has that depravation of mind that constitutes a Devil. But on the other side, our opinions cannot alter the real natures of things, nor will my belief that my act is laudable make it to be so, anymore than my fancy that Poisons are wholesome food, will free them from their noxious venim, and render them restoratives and cordials. In like manner, my adventuring on an action which I think is bad, upon the cold reserve of a possibility, that it may be otherwise, involves the desperate resolution of doing it howsoever; which differs very little from doing it, though I know it to be certainly unlawful. But a doubting conscience admits of a counterpoise from a contrary doubt, and there is fear of sin, as on the one, so also on the other part. I am uncertain whether I may not do ill in acting, and yet whether I may not do worse in forbearing: or thus, I am not sure that what I enterprize is lawful, but yet I have no ground to believe it is unlawful. Now from this exigent thus declared I might deduce resolutions in many cases of our life. As

1. When there is no ground to build a certain judgment on of either side, but it is only probable the thing is not sin, and consequently I cannot be sure it is not, yet if upon that probability I act, this is clear different from the state of the doubting conscience: for though I may have some doubt 'tis possible the thing may not be good, yet having honestly examined it, I have no reason to think it not good, and I am sure of my own heart, that if I thought it were so, I would not do it; here is no choosing of a sin, not with the least degree of inclination. 'Tis this secures the Physician, who cannot possibly be assured there may not something lurk in his Patient's body, (for whose dark and unwholesome closets he hath no prospective,) to which the physic he prescribes may be pernicious; yet because God hath revel'd no certain grounds for guidance in this case, therefore he upon diligent search and grounds of art, which are the best God hath allowed us prescribing what he really believes will do him good, satisfies a good conscience. Upon the same account the Pilot satisfies himself, where he adventures his ship and freight upon shelves and shallows: and the Captain, when he leads his men upon he canon's mouth, and other desperate attempts of war.

Shall I make more familiar instances to you: some have doubted whether celebrating Christ's Nativity be not will-worship, because 'tis not commanded in Scripture; other have doubted of the use of Garments prescribed Ministers from the same ground, and from their being significant. Now as to these, not to show the unreasonableness of these doubts, though I could easily do it: for in God's name why is it to set apart a day to thank God for the Redemption of mankind will-worship, and yet to set apart a day for the deliverance of a Nation from a temporal plague not will-worship? Is the fifth of November in the Scripture anymore than the twenty fifth of December? Or is it the infinitely greater mercy of Christ's Birthday that makes it more unlawful than the Gunpowder-Treason day, and therefore 'tis not lawful because 'tis more fit? And for the Garments of the Clergy, I would they were all significant, but that that is an argument against them in these days. It is true Scripture prescribes them not, and by that rule they should wear none, for it prescribes none: but pray tell me, will not any of these doubting men seek a Pulpit to preach in, or now a days a bason to baptize with, never looking whether they have a warrant in Scripture to command it? Just so, rational and sensible men select a particular habit for a Priest, whereby his words and exhortations may be received with greater respect and authority, and this without any written precept: for as where Scripture commands, it renders everything necessary; so where it is silent, it renders nothing unlawful in such circumstantial.

So a prescribed way of Prayer is boggled at, and why that more unlawful than a limited way of praising God? They had effusions of those in the first times, why do not we as well pretend to the one as to the other? Or why should it be less faulty to have set forms of singing Psalms than have set forms of Liturgy, in which too people might communicate, as they do also join in praises? or indeed would that Rhyme and tune become unlawful, should the Magistrate command them too?

But passing over this, and to speak in short of the whole matter. If the man that doubts, bids his conscience stand aside, and because of legal penalties muffles himself, and resolvedly goes on, notwithstanding his speculative irresolution, with desperate boldness judging it better to trust God with his soul, than the Law with his estate or liberty: if he fears to consider or enquire, least he should get conviction, that suits not with his interest, and thinks it easier to doubt than to be certain, because he's certainly determined to do what is enjoined, though it be never so unlawful. This is a profligate state of mind, that wants nothing but occasion to engage upon the greatest villainies, and close with Apostasy itself, when recommended by impunity. But if this doubting makes another scheme of reasoning, and performs what is enjoined, because the Magistrate's command is certain, but its unlawfulness is only dubious, and the safest course is ever the most innocent, because it is the most prudent; then the obligation to suspend the going on to act in case of doubting, is superseded by another obligation, actually to obey the undoubted injunction of Superiors, and the good Subject will not fail to be a good Christian too.

But alas! why should I busy myself in picking cases which here, I hope, are not useful, when as upon this very Proposition we are now upon, other things do apply themselves to most men's hearts of a more strong concern, and of more daily practice. If an action otherwise lawful will make up an indictment to our condemnation, if don with a doubting conscience; what guilt and damnation is there in those actions that are don against present full persuasion of conscience. Truly, my Brethren, I have no aggravation for sins don against knowledge, that being the worst that can be said of sin; and I shall only add, that they who so defy their conscience, are in the ready way to have no conscience, the sad estate of whom my last did display to you; and in short, 'tis no wonder, if God's Vicegerent do depart, when he is so affronted. There is a great and sad example of this procedure Rom. 1. 18, 19, 20. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness. Because that which may be known of God, is manifest in them, for God hath shown it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head, so that they are without excuse. There is no plea for such, because they did not use their knowledge to his service, but sinned against it, and by their deeds of darkness put out that light, which was vouchsafed them by God, yea indeed did commit those deeds of darkness in the face of light.

I have to what I have already said, one word to add for the scrupulous conscience. Scruples are little suspicions in things of small concern or indifferency, and where there is but little ground; for otherwise they swell into that we call doubts, and which denominates a doubting conscience. Now scruples, which are small particles of dust, do indeed cast dust into the eyes, which dim the sight, and make the eyes to roll, and fret, and grieve; and so do these the mind: they disturb duty wonderfully, by taking up the heart, and making it restless and unquiet, and so quite discompos'd for duty; for the heart is still called aside, & wandering about that which troubles it. And indeed these quite take off the edge of the mind; for while scruples arise, I am unsatisfied in everything I do, and then with what heart can I do them? I am in fear of every performance, and such a fear exceedingly damps love, and quashes all endeavors. I have no cheerfulness in my actions, and consequently never can be eager and forward, but cold and slack; for these do still put demurs, and nothing but discomfort dwells upon my spirit.

A dark and ill state this, and therefore 'tis no wonder if the Spirit of darkness sheds it, especially where he cannot draw in the soul to works of darkness; if he cannot quench the heats of their devotion, then he will strive to cool them by these arts, which like little dashings of water thrown into the fire, if they cannot put it out, yet at least they darken the flame, and change that which was pure and clear into thick fume and smother: so do these raise smoke and cloud in the soul. If the Devil cannot betray the heart to downright vice, but his suggestions are shut out, and temptations scorned, or at least avoided; then he will trouble them in their duties, he will suggest things that under the vizard of nicer and stricter Religious shall be let in, and when they are in, shall put the soul in little combustions, and disturb all its performances. Therefore these are to be combated with, and the heart to be fortified against them; as soon as ever we find these little spies and incendiaries of Satan stirring in the mind, let us strait seize them, and examine what they do there, what account they can give of themselves. Have they any ground or plea? when a thought checks me with a sudden motion of heart, least what I do may be amiss, I will question instantly, hath God said so anywhere, is there any Law that forbids it? If I cannot resolve myself, I will call in counsel; (for if I be not ashamed to whisper the unhandsomnesses of nature to a Physician, to betray uncomely infirmities, shall the cheerful quiet of my Soul, and the comfortable progress of my Religion be less considerable to me?) and if by these means I cannot find God hath forbid it any way, either directly or by consequence, why then shall I do Satan's work for him, help him to disquiet my own heart, make the semblance of Religion hinder my Religion, and with a pudder about duty keep myself from doing duty, much more of which I might perform with less trouble, than I do think of these things, and with infinitely more comfort? No sure, I will make no sins to myself that God hath not made, but in God's name with an upright heart set about my known duty, in full assurance of faith. But Secondly it will become us, whosoever is at any time troubled with these, to consider with ourselves, when we find scruples arise about things of very small concern, to examine, am I thus wary and thus nice in every piece of known duty, have I as sharp checks there, and is my conscience as stirring in every circumstance of sure Religion; if a true object of charity pass by me, or I hear of such an one, whose real wants seem to call upon me for Christ's sake, and I instead of satisfying his needs, satisfy only the importunity of my own thoughts by some little excuse, I have not about me, or let others give that are more able, or why should I give to everyone that asks me? In this case now is my heart restless and scrupulous, least the real wants of the poor soul should make an alms duty, unsatisfied till I either know that, or till I do relieve him?

If when Prayers call, and at the same time either a trifle or something, which I had time enough before to prevent, and knew well enough the fit times of doing one and the other, yet seek to detain me; have I scruples here, and are they strong enough to throw aside the less concerns, and will not let my heart rest till it brings me honestly and zealously to my devotions? If some little slight injury, or it may be inadvertency of another fret my mind, and begin to swell me into a passion, or thicken into a grudge, and I am in present heat of words, and remember him with a slight or a less esteem; do scruples rise as fast as these heats, and my heart become more troubled at itself, than at the little conceived injury, and never well at ease, till I am calm to him? If it be not thus, but we who strain at gnats and swallow camels, we whose eyes boggle at motes in the Sun, can wink, or suffer beams to hood-wink them; we that scruple at things indifferent, things of which we have no rule to judge them sins, and are not nice at all in things of certain duty, have no such scrupulous conscience in known faults, or at least in much more concerning matters, we may do well to consider, whether our nicest carefulness in these do not betray, that in such little things the main of our Religion lies, our hearts lay their greatest stress upon these. There are certain formalities of Religion, things that speak people Professors, distinctive characters of a Party professing Godliness, little things by which they are discriminated, as niceties in habits, or gestures, or modes, or tones of speaking, or forms of doing things in Religion, or some strict forbearances of things that all the world beside themselves never imagined hurt in. Now they that do make such to be the stamp and signature of a Professor, it is no wonder if they be nice and scrupulous in them; and truly to be scrupulous, especially in such indifferencies, do's dangerously look towards that: 'tis certain, where the greatest care and watchfulness is laid, there will the most and greatest scruples be apt to stir; so that if these be most in such indifferencies, either the heart hath entertained some end besides Religion, the seeming strict or a Professor; or else the heart hath been betrayed, and by being bred up to strict cares, especially in such things, it hath let itself be besotted by those strict and handsome appearances, and low spirited as it is, hath raised no higher, but set up his chief rest there; they think if they do these things, they are religious. There cannot be any other reason given of these different strictnesses, this scrupulosity in little things, and negligence in greater interests; and therefore 'tis worth the search in every heart, in which examination whosoever shall find his scruples to be universal, and proportioned to the duty, his heart watchful, especially where the concern is greatest, and there most careful where it most behooves him; let that heart take comfort, that quality is but the nicety, the quickness of a clear, pure eye, that can endure no dust, no soil upon it, and such an eye shall lead a person thro the paths of God's word, which is a light to the feet, and a light unto the paths here to the Land of everlasting light and glory, where in God's light he shall see light for evermore.

SERMON XXI. THE LIGHT OF THE BODY is the Eye.

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thy eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

THE Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a treasure hid in a field, Matth. 13. 44. a field this much richer than it shows for, that provides for several uses of our life, that furnisheth with food and wealth too, and is both granary and treasury; and just such is the word of the Kingdom also, it hath in it more than it promises to sight, there are still hidden treasures besides the food that grows before our eyes: if we search, we shall find still more and more furniture for life, more wealth yet in the bowels of it. These words give us experience of this, from which though we have had several spiritual entertainments, provisions for divers cases of our life, yet have we not exhausted them; for we shall find that yet in another sense The light of the body is the eye, &c.

To the two interpretations, I have given of these words, the first of which that by a single eye should be meant a single intention, an entire, honest meaning, an heart like that of Jacob, plain, simple, and upright, such as may therefore style a man an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile, no doubling, but such an one as lays always to itself good ends, and intends to take in no ill means to compass them, hath been generally adhered to by almost all Expositors. The second, that by the single eye should be meant the pure, clear, good conscience, which to me indeed seems much more proper than the other; to neither of them have I any objection but this, that they do not at all relate to the matter of the discourse, which our Savior hath in hand, and 'tis not imaginable why Christ should in the midst of a Paragraph concerning mortifying the desire and love of wealth, the beginning of which commands laying up treasure in heaven, and the end tells us we cannot serve God and Mammon, should interpose anything of conscience or intentions: and therefore, though what we have delivered of them be exactly consonant to the words, and built upon other certain Scripture, and be the sense of most men, yet we will view one other, which though it be assigned but by one Expositor, that I know of, yet being exactly pertinent to the matter in hand, and having a surer plea for its being the sense of the place, than any of the rest have, it shall not escape us, though no more have lighted upon it. Now the way of finding out the meaning was, not to consider what may be compared to a single eye or an evil eye, for possibly so many things may be; but by seeing what those words do constantly signify in Scripture, and so what light and darkness also do, and then put them together, and see whether they will so here: and we shall take those grounds.

1. Then what a single eye and evil eye do use to signify in Scripture: and for the evil eye, we find it often Prov. 23. 6, 7. Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats; for as he thinketh in his heart so is he; eat and drink, saith he to thee, but his heart is not with thee: which means, eat not the meat of him that is a niggard, who though he do invite thee to it, yet he do's grudge it thee, and grieves thou eatest it; his heart do's not speak in his invitations, but he had rather thou wouldest spare, and he computes thy morsels. So again Prov. 28. 22. He that hasteth to be rich, hath an evil eye, that is, is covetous; he envies every other man's prosperity, (so most Translations render it here) is troubled to see another flourish, and thinks their gain his loss. So Matt. 20. 15. Is thine eye evil, because I am good? he says to them, who though they had contracted for a penny by the day for labor, yet when they saw those that had wrought but a little part receive so much, strait entertained desires and hopes of more than they had bargain'd for, and when they saw they should have nothing but their due, they murmur'd; to whom the Master do's reply, Friend, I do thee no wrong, didst thou not agree with me for a penny, be thou content with that which comes to thy share? This man that came last to work (it being not his fault that he came no sooner, but his not being sooner called, and he having labored honestly and cheerfully ever since he came) shall by me, who accept the will for the deed, be rewarded with the same reward that thou hast; and sure thou hast no reason to complain, that I dispose of my own as I see cause: what reason is there that my bounty to others should be matter of envy and discontent to thee? So that an evil eye signifies unsatisfiedness with ones own condition, and envy at another's, an eye that grieves to see anything go besides itself; in one word, an illiberal, covetous, envious mind. You have its perfect character Ecclesiasticus 14. from v. 3. to 10. Riches are not comely for a niggard, and what should an envious man do with money? He that gathereth by defrauding his own soul, gathereth for others, that shall spend his goods riotously: he that is evil to himself, to whom will he be good? he shall not take pleasure in his goods. There is none worse than he that envieth himself, and if he doth good, he doth it unwillingly. The envious man hath a wicked eye, he turneth away his face, and despiseth men; a covetous man's eye is not satisfied with his portion, and the iniquity of the wicked dries up his soul: a wicked eye envieth his bread, and he is a niggard at his table.

Next for the single eye, that certainly is set as opposite to the evil eye, as meaning liberality and cheerful bounty, and we shall see accordingly that singleness do's signify; for so our Bible almost always translates the word: 2 Cor. 8. 2. Their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality, the riches of their singleness it is in the Original. So chap. 9. 11. being enriched in everything to all bountifulness, to all singleness; again v. 13. liberal distribution, singleness of distribution the Greek do's say; and so in many places which others have observed; and Rom. 12. 8. He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity or singleness, for 'tis the same word still, and there our Margent tells you, that it means liberality. Single therefore do's in Scripture signify bountiful, and we shall find that coupled with the eye, Prov. 22. 9. He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed, for he giveth of his bread to the poor. And so we have the Scripture sense of these two words, the single eye do's signify a liberal mind, and the evil eye a niggardly, uncontented, envious disposition. And here let us stop a little, and say a word on these expressions, why these things to the eye? is that the chief seat of those qualities, is not the heart much rather? 'Tis true indeed that discontent and envy shed themselves into the eye, they dwell there in a cloud, the eye flags and is dull, and do's so certainly betray a niggard, envious heart, that we may see it grudges spirits to its own eyes, and do's restrain that current that is to feed them with a vigorous life: when bounty on the other side flows into the eyes in a cheerful stream of spirits, that make them full and bright. But this is not all the reason; 'tis not only the sign of these same inclinations that hangs out in the eye, but the lust itself do's lodge and dwell there. S. John calls covetousness the lust of the eye, 1 John 2. 16. and that not only because the eye of the covetous is never satisfied with wealth, but lusts still more and more; but there is reason why it should be the lust of the eye, for when goods increase they are increased that eat them, and what good is there to the owners thereof saving the beholding them with their eyes? Ecclesiasticus 5. 11. When plenty do's stream in upon us with a torrent, while we do lay it by and do not use it, then it is clear, that nothing but the eye enjoys it: when we do lay it out, if we dispose it to comply with fashions, or to serve pomp and ostentation, or to feed emulation, because I will not be without what any other hath, or else to entertain sports and delights, it is clear that nothing but the eye is treated with the expense, and with the magnificence of these; neither the back nor belly hath the least relish of them, nor hath the soul any other organ to employ about them, but the organ of seeing. But if thy riches be expended in great provisions for the appetite, unless a man can stretch his belly as he do's his barns and his demesnes, and make all bigger, enlarge his stomach as he do's his table, pull out new sides of appetite, and multiply his hungers as he do's his dishes; the wealthy man himself devours but little more, than when he had not such abundance, only he sees more meat, and sees more eaters of it: so that muchness of wealth, what is beyond sufficient competency, nothing but the eye enjoies, and it is therefore said that that lusts after it; 'tis the eye desires riches, and with them we serve no other part.

And then, my Brethren, this expression of single eye or bountiful eye do s let us see, that liberality is no great pressure to a man, it do's require no inconveniences from him, it do's retrench from nothing but his eye; if we can but get this to be moderate in its objects, get but a single eye, an eye that is not covetous of everything it likes and that delights it, an eye that will be satisfied with competencies, and then a man will have no other uses for much wealth, but only those of doing good with it; for if thine eye be not always gaping after superfluities and daily novelties of entertainments, pursuing everything it fancies, or any other man possesses, and still ambitioning the heights of whatsoever it beholds that pleases it; if he can keep it from thirsting after everything that feeds its own pride, or another's envy: keep, I say, but the eye in bounds of moderation, and there is nothing else in man, that do's require much for its satisfaction. 'Tis nothing else but the unlimited, unwearied eye, that looks thro all the world for entertainments, and must have services from every part of the whole universe; the Indians must dive into the depths of the Abyss, and dig the rocks to get a Jewel that shall dash a little light into thine eye; the Mariner must pass throughout all the variety of climes, must cross the frozen and the torrid Zones to pick up those diversities of things that are to please thy sight, with a new garment for thyself or for thy chamber, or rather are to make a dress, not for thy back indeed or for thy room, but for thy eye, which is not well, except it see fine things; that must have furniture out of the bowels of the worms, and out of the bowels of the earth, have gold and silver utensils, and silken ornaments, and have I know not what: so also several nations must conspire to make up almost any one in the whole variety of sports, which yet do but pass by, and please the eye, and move away as quick as sight itself. It is the eye indeed that endears every excessive sin to us. The Scripture do's most properly express it, when it says the Adulteries of the eye; for its delights, those of variety I mean, for that too hath no other, serve nothing but the eye. So it is in the sin of pride, and covetousness, and pleasure: it is that part spends almost all the riots and intemperances, that drinks in objects minutely, and thirsts for all diversities, these consume. Do but teach that to be content, and there will be enough for charity. If God had bid us rob our bowels for to feed the hungry, divide necessity betwixt us, and deny nature's cravings to hear those of the poor, it had been hard; and though the Lord emtied himself for us, yet sure the croaking of our empty bowels would have sounded much like murmurings at such a precept: but when he bids us only spare a little of the provisions of our eye, which wants nothing at all of them, do but deny thy sight some little portion of its excesses, and lay out some of its unnecessary objects on the Poor, and I will ask no more for charity. This sure is no hard duty. Get but a single eye, an eye that is not niggardly and covetous, that catches at and grasps at everything that likes it; do but moderate its desires and lusts, and all the rest of thee, thy back and belly will be easily contented, will spare enough for liberality: 'tis nothing but an evil eye that hinders. The pinching Miser he can deny all other appetites to gorge his eye, he crucifies his flesh, and almost starves his body to provide for his sight; 'tis this alone he cares for, to have wealth to behold, not use. Could he cure this Wolf, this canine appetite in his eye, that is so greedy to look on wealth, he might afford to give his heaps, for he do's nothing else with them, but see them. And 'tis the very same with them who are as covetous of pleasures for their sight, or things to furnish out the pomps of pride or ostentation of vanity; if their eye would abate in these, bounty would have provisions.

And sure, my Brethren, among the lovely changes that the eye delights in, this might come in for one handsome variety, to see such and so many souls live cheerfully thro the help of thy liberality, to see thy wealth, not only feed the instruments of thy delight, thy Dogs, it may be, or thy Hawks, but feed poor Christians, but feed the members of thy Savior; to see when with a great deal thou canst hardly furnish one room well, much less of it do's furnish such poor laboring families: furniture of a very comfortable prospect it will be at that day, I am sure, when all the other satisfactions of thy eyes are dead, or else dissolving in a flood of fire, then to behold those works which thy estate did help thee to perform; for they shall follow thee to Heaven, Rev. 14. 13. and to see that Christ upon the Throne, whom in his members thou hast oft reliev'd; an object that will comfort such a single eye with everlasting light. And so I pass to the second terms to be expounded, Light and Darkness.

1. Light in Scripture do's often signify Prosperity, as Darkness do's the contrary. I need not cite much Scripture for it, Psalm 18. 28. For thou wilt light my canlde, the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness. Job 21. 17. How often is the candle of the wicked put out, and how oft cometh their destruction upon them? God distributeth sorrows in his anger to them. Isaiah, c. 5. 30. do's express times of affliction thus, and if one look unto the earth, behold darkness and distress, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof. So chap. 8. 22. Behold trouble, and darkness, and dimness of anguish. Now if it mean thus here, then the sense is, a single eye fills the body full of light; Charity makes a man prosperous in all his actions; but if the eye be evil, the body shall be full of darkness, he that either to furnish coffers, pride, or pleasures, or excesses do's retrench from bounty, however he advance these for a while, yet before long God will cut off the opportunities of these; he that will not put a good portion of what he hath to good uses, the time will come, when either he or his, however well provided for, shall not have for their own uses: if their eye be so evil as not to let their candle shed a light to any other but themselves, God will put out their canlde, and uncharitableness shall bring adversity upon them or upon their families; and if the verse mean thus, then it agrees with Solomon's Aphorism Prov. 11. 24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to penury. But to this I have spoke already; now I shall only say, this is a doctrine that we need not only trust on Christ for the truth of, a very Turk believes it, and not the Gospel only, but the Alcoran affirms it: saying, that which they lay out of their wealth in the way of God, in pious charitable uses, is like a grain that brings forth seven stalks. Blessed harvest of Charity, increase more than an hundred fold! and I will add but one place of Scripture to it, which says over the Text in larger and more glorious words Isaiah, 58. 7, 8, 10, 11. To deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house, when thou seest the naked that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh; then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily, and thy righteousness shall go before thee, and the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward: and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon-day: and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in droughts, and make fat thy bones, and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not. The expressions seem to grow upon the Prophet, first he says, Thy light shall break forth as the morning, by little slow degrees of increasing light, which peeps out first in a dawn, and so grows into day; and so shall thy prosperity, which dawns and brightens by degrees, as thou drawest out reliefs: but he corrects these words, and thinks this is not blessing quick enough for this virtue, whose return shall be more eminent, conspicuous, and notable; thy light, says he, shall rise in obscurity, shall have no creeping twilight for to usher it, but they very night shall break into Sun-shine, and in the midst of hopeless affliction the face of joy and gladness shall rise upon thee. Yea more as if the rising light were but weak, and too faint for his meaning, Thy darkness shall be as the noon-day, strong and hot brightness shall break in upon thy occasions of sadness, which shall both cherish and enlighten thee, thaw everything that did sit cold about thine heart, and make all pleasant shine about thee. But where, I pray you, are the Luminaries that are to shed this Noon? The Prophet hath them here, thy Righteousness, that is in Scripture dialect thy Alms, shall go before thee, and the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward: Light expressed not only in terms of overflowing blessedness, but terms of guard and strength; Light he shall have here that shall be glory to him, and shall be fortification to him; the glory of the Lord shall be his reward, as if the charitable man did also dwell in Light that were inaccessible, who is so guarded as to have righteousness in his van for his avantguard, and the glory of the Lord of hosts and victories for his rere-defense; which means in plain words this, that the Lord will make the righteousness of such a man appear, and will do good and glorious things for him in this life. And then let others please themselves to have their wealth break out in shining pomps of bravery about them, or flow in streams of plenty and of delicacy, or of pleasure; alas the spring of these will quickly fail. If any scorching weather come, any fiery trial, any persecution, yea any days of adversity, the wealth will go out that is to furnish them; or if there do not come such days, yet the too full streams will drain the fountain, and there will be no spring to feed the current; yea or however in a while these streams must grow unpleasant, and they will choke the soul that swims in them: but the charitable man, the man that deals his bread, and draws out his soul to the hungry in relief, while he hath the means, and in compassion and assistance while he hath not, whatever fail, the fountain of the glory of the Lord cannot be exhausted, he will have righteousness and glory still about him; the comfortable streams of which are of another relish than those carnal worldly delights which wealth provides, or else can give; of a more blessed goust, the inextinguishable shine of which is surely far more cherishing and gladsome, than the gauds of vanity or fading pleasures. The brightness of God's glory cannot die, cannot be taken from thee, it is its own defense and shine: for righteousness shall go before thee, and the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward, and then 'tis clearly proved, that such a single Eye shall make the body full of light.

2. Light do's signify holiness of life, deeds truly Christian; walk as Lights in the Lord, nothing more common in Scripture: and Darkness signifies a sinful and un-Christian life, a life that's full of deeds of darkness. And then the words mean thus; as the eye is the candle of the body, lightens and directs it well if it be as it ought, but otherwise very ill, and the man is in the dark, if his eye be ill, and do not serve him: so is the heart of man, as to the guidance and direction of his actions; if his eye be single, if he have an heart taken off from the world, a liberal, bountiful mind, not set upon the love and desire of the things of this world, his whole body will be full of light, his whole life will be very Christian, all his actions holy and heavenly, and to the making of them so, liberality of mind hath a very observable influence. It will incline a man wonderfully to pious courses, it is a leading virtue, as the eye is a leading part. But if the eye be evil, but if the heart be worldly set upon wealth, either for itself, or for those heights or fine things, or pleasures which wealth do's procure; if it be unsatisfied in these things for itself, or envious at others for them, the whole body will be full of darkness, the whole life will be very un-Christian; such a disposition of mind as that, quite draws a man off from the temper that Christ requires: the unsatisfied, the envious, and the covetous person can never serve God, but only Sin, those dispositions being the root of all evil. Now if the light that is in thee be darkness, if thy heart be un-Christian, and if thy leading virtue, that was to take thee off from all worldly inclinations, be extinct and dark in thee, how great is that darkness? what an un-Christian life will there be, and whatever light do's shine about thee of the Gospel, whatever light thou dost pretend of knowledge, or of whatsoever else, there is a deep darkness dwells upon thy heart, and is in all thy actions.

Now this sense we see connects what went before and that which follows after, drives on our Savior's design that he is pressing here, and to this sense Scripture always speaks in the expressions of single and of evil eye, of light and darkness; and therefore this was certainly the sense that was intended by our Savior, and to the prosecuting of it I shall show,

1. That to have a generous, liberal mind, an heart taken off from the self uses and advantages of wealth, is the great means, the great engine and instrument of making all the actions very Christian, the life holy.

2. This grace in the heart, bounty of mind, is a great evidence of a true Christian heart.

3. A worldly heart, loving and desiring wealth, troubled at its condition, envying others that are in better, and for the ends of any advantages to itself, straitening its liberality, is not only in itself an un-Christian temper, but such as is the root and cause of a life wholly un-Christian and unholy. Of these in their order.

1. To have a liberal mind &c. That the throwing of this earth out of the heart is a most hopeful way of making the man clean and pure, we have most pregnant Scripture, Luke 11. 39, 40, 41. Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter, but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness. Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without, make *that which is within also? But rather give alms of such things as you have, and behold, all things are clean unto you: which bears this seen, ye hypocritical Pharisees wash your selves as if a man should wash his vessels, the outside of them only, leaving the insides of them full of filthiness; for thus do ye wash your bodies, leaving your souls full of all uncleanness. This is an extreme folly; for it your outward washings were in obedience to God, you would cleanse the insides, your hearts and souls, as well as your bodies. The best way of purifying yourselves, your estates, your meats and drinks, &c. from all pollution cleaving to them, is by works of mercy and liberal alms gifts, and not by washing pots and vessels. Thy broken meats, thy scraps, thy charities shall cleanse thy platters more than washing them shall do, alms shall make all things clean. But how this? To cleanse hath two aspects, either on the guilt of past actions, or on the habits and dispositions to future commissions; and is to cleanse us from the evil that we have don, or to make us clean from those vices that were in us, and which would make us do more evil: the first of these is don by Repentance, not by Alms. Indeed the Wise man says, the alms of a man is as a signet with the Lord, and he will keep the good deeds of a man as the apple of an eye, and give repentance to his sons and daughters, Ecclesiasticus 17. 22. the happiest way of purchase for a family in the world. The give to children an estate perchance is but to give an instrument of vice, bestow the means of sinning on them; at best 'tis but to leave them pomp and superfluity; but to give Repentance to them is to give security of everlasting blessedness, this is as it were to entail Heaven on ones children. But this is not the thing we mean, we are to see how Alms should make us clean from vice. It is observed by a Reverend Expositor, that our Savior speaking Syriac, useth a word for alms, which in that language and Arabic signifies cleansing; that is, give Alms, which as it comes from a word that signifies to cleanse, so all shall be clean to you: and they give this reason of the notion, they derive Alms from a word that signifies to cleanse, quod opes ab inquinamento, & animum ab avaritiae sordibus purgat, because*

1. Alms purgeth our wealth from the pollution and filthiness that adheres to it. As among the Jews it was not lawful for any man to use the increase of his own land or cattle, to eat part of his own harvest, nor feed on his own vineyard, or employ the profits of any one beast of his own herd or flock, till he had given up to God the first-born of that beast, offered the first fruits every year of his fruit-yards, and dedicated a first sheaf of his harvest: this must sanctify all the rest, which till then was unclean, not to be used by him; to this, it seems, our Savior do's look in his direction. There is an unclean tacked in everything that comes from earth, it do's derive a soil and tincture thence, and tastes of the place from whence it came, there is a kind of unsanctifiedness in wealth, which must be purged away. Our Savior do's imply this, when he says, all things shall be clean to thee, intimating, that without some such course be taken 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 all our possessions are unclean to us; and S. Paul says expressly of meat, it must be sanctified. Now says he, the way to cleanse thy meats (and so for all thy wealth) is to give up part of thy meat to God by the now Christian way of sacrificing. Alms: this the truest way of blessing a meal, by engaging God a guest to it, who brings his blessings always with him, and he hath still a share in that meal that the poor partake in. This course is of so great importance to be taken in every sort of our wealth, that holy Job presses an imprecation on himself, if he have not don so, Job 31. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22,

23. If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail, or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; for from my youth he was brought up with me as with a father, and I have guided her from my mother's womb: if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep, then let my arm from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone; for destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure. So that Alms makes 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, all our possessions, all our moderate enjoyments clean, if sanctifies them to our use.

But secondly, which is more to our design, their second reason is, animum ab avaritiae sordibus purgat, it do's draw off the heart from worldly mindedness, and by that means from all unclean carnalities: but to not mistake me, Brethren, that a few, though perhaps noble acts of charity will necessarily take a man off from all vice; he may perchance be willing in some good humor to part with some wealth, that will not part with a lust or an ill custom, and his profuse and inconsiderate bounty may come in amongst his prodigalities, and be his vice, so far it will be from leaving him from vice. But the thing is this, he that hath thus far conquered his heart, and unwrapped is out of the entanglements of riches, that he is perfectly disposed in mind, not once, but by a constant course to dedicate a good portion of what he hath for those compassionate uses, and is very well pleased to look upon such a share as not his own, but set aside and consecrated: 'tis certain that if this be hearty, he that can resolve to part with such a part of income for those uses, must also resolve to part with all worldly or carnal advantages of that income, such things as it procured him, and he cannot have without it. If I will cut off so much from my estate on that good consideration, then I must cut off such degrees of superfluity, I must abate such and such pomps and vanities, I must retrench excesses, and I must part with heights of pleasures, for these are virtually resolved in the other; I cannot have these if I give away the foment, the thing that is to feed and preserve them, these therefore I disposed of with that part of my revenue, nor shall I think them fit to vie with those necessities, that beg or Christ his sake, nay with those wants of Christ himself that begs in those poor men's request and needs, nor shall I for such things draw back or grudge my charities. I can much easier want some portions of those contents, than see so many souls want necessaries; compassion strikes me deeper than those satisfactions, and finds me much more pliant, and more sensible. Lo here a man already brought within the mediocrities of virtue, there too where virtue finds the greatest oppositions of temptation; those of intemperance, and pride, and pleasure, in all these he is moderate and calm, merely by virtue of his bountiful-mindedness: and if he be not so, 'tis certain that the person is not free-hearted, unless it be unto his sins or the companions of them. For if he love his pride, and heights, and honors, and all those pomps that are to serve them and his emulations; or love the superfluities of riots, or love immoderate delights, 'tis certain he loves wealth implicitly, altho he take no notice of it, and he is covetous in his heart, though he do's not discover it; because he cannot but desire passionately that which is to furnish his eager desires, and love immoderately that without which he knows, if he consider what he do's, he cannot have that which he loves immoderately; and if he do resolve to serve those still, and yet do give away, 'tis out of inconsiderateness, not from bounty; he is not liberal but rash and careless, will not weigh how the wealth serves the other ends, but still resolving upon thees, not minding what he do's, disposeth of the other. No he that is truly compassionate and liberal, resolves to deprive himself of somewhat to relieve others wants, that is to say, if he consider what he do's, (and if he do not, 'tis not liberality of heart) to deny himself some of the advantages of his estate, (for to consideration those and his estate are all the same) pomps, profits, and pleasures to sustain those that need: and he that do's so, he hath plainly brought himself into the bounds of all virtues, and for the rest that concern men, 'tis sure he that is so fully disposed in heart, as to deny himself his own advantages merely to do good to others, cannot be inclined to do ill to others for his own advantage, these inclinations cannot dwell together; so that in one word, this bounty of heart engages into all Morality, he will be humble, sober, contented in himself, and live righteously and justly with other men. 'Tis such a leading quality, that merely by virtue of that disposition of mind, when it is seated there in earnest, the other parts of that which we call honesty, come in. And then for all Religion and Piety, if he that out of obedience to God and compassion to the afflicted have brought his heart to such a pass, that he can draw out his soul to the needy, 'tis certain that in doing so he lays up treasures in heaven, v. 20. and by the verse that follows he that lays his treasure there, he sets his heart there also; and he whose heart is set on heaven, I shall not fear to pronounce of him, his actions will drive him thitherwards with all religious violence. Do but think with yourselves how you pursue the things your hearts are set upon in earnest, what out-goings of soul you have to this rencounter of the object of its strong affections, no rest but in the labors that work towards it, no calm but in those violences. And much of this there must be in Religion, where the heart is set upon the hopes of it, on heaven. He must be eager in it, as the covetous is on his gains, the proud man on his pomps, the pleasurer on his sports, the Epicure on his excesses. It is not possible a man should have no heart to that on which his heart is set. He therefore that hath set his heart on heaven, must be religious and holy; and so it is concluded that the liberal-minded must needs be so. The progress of which proof is this, he whose heart is in heaven, his conversation will be there, his life will be Christian and holy: he whose treasure is in heaven, his heart is in heaven: he that hath taken off his heart from the world, and out of liberality of heart gives alms, he lays his treasure up in heaven, and then it is concluded that he is religious.

And this now may apply itself without my help to press it to you. Ah my Brethren choose and strive towards a virtue that will help you to all the rest, that will calm and moderate your affections to this world and the dying follies of it; and that will draw your hearts to heaven, and set them on the world to come. Who would not labor for one disposition of mind that comes with such a train of pieties, that hath all Christianity in its attendance, and brings all into the soul with it? Who would not give alms, if by doing so he give himself a shole of virtue? to whom is this man bountiful, but to himself indeed? Here is a ground for men to beg after the fashion of Lombardy, Be good to yourself, Sir, and bestow an alms upon me: for he indeed is good unto himself, who what he gives lays up in heaven as a treasure for eternity, and at the same time entertains the disposition to all piety in his heart, receives all virtue into him. I shall not need to call in accessory proofs, fetch in auxiliary motives, tell you that works of charity are called good works in Scripture, and the liberal man good. So Rom. 5. 7. the good man signifies, and Tit. 2. 5. where the women are commanded to be good, it is merciful; so works of mercy are called good works, Acts. 9. 36. doing good, Matt. 12. 12. Heb. 13. 16. good fruits James 3. 17. So to work good signifies Gal. 6. 9. and every good work 2 Cor. 9. 8. is works of mercy, as if he did engross all goodness, and that same virtue did fulfil the title. Nay I tell you more, that the merciful man and the perfect man are but two words for the same person, Matt. 5. 48. Luke 6. 36. all Christianity is so sure appendant to this disposition of the heart, (when it is in the soul I tell you, not when it is now and then in the actions) that this alone is perfectness, 'tis entire lacking nothing. And then here is a clear account, why at the last great trial nothing should come upon account but charity, that is the only thing the Judge takes cognizance of at the day of final doom; When I was hungry, ye gave me meat: the words of everlasting Judgment pass only in relation to this, nothing but charity do's come into that sentence, for all the rest is implied in this: and where the heart is liberal, the whole life will be Christian; this is an evidence will pass at God's Assise, stand before the Searcher of the heart and reins. And therefore it may well be a sign to us, and make proof, that this grace in the heart, bounty of mind is a great evidence of a truly Christian heart: the second Proposition.

Blessed Savior, thou that wert all bounty to us, that didst empty thyself to enrich us, and didst choose rather to die thyself than not relieve us when we were sick to everlasting death; give us grace to be like-minded, shed into our hearts this disposition of soul, that will make us so remember thee, a disposition that will make our affections even and moderate to things of this earth, which by teaching us to part with wealth contentedly, will work us out of the world, and teach us not to be enamored on the advantages of wealth, not to be passionate for pomps or pleasures, or for any superfluities which wealth procures, which will set our hearts in heaven, and lay up treasures for us there; which if it rob us of the pomps and the magnificences of this world, will give us for them pomps of piety, the whole train of virtues, a long attendance of graces; if it deprives us of some heights or some excess of pleasures, it will recompense with the satisfactions of relieving Christ in his members here, and reigning with him hereafter in Kingdom:

SERMON XXII. THE LIGHT OF THE BODY is the Eye.

Matt. 6. 22, 23.

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thy eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

PHILOSOPHY do's say that all virtues are so annexed and tied together, that it is not possible for any man to have any one truly and complete, but he must needs have all; they are like pearls upon the necklace, from which if any violence pull one, the string is broke, and all are shattered and disordered. And S. James saith, c. 2. 10. Whosoever shall offend in one point, is guilty of all; and sure the virtue of the Text makes good both these Positions: if liberality of heart be that one point, he that excludes it from his Soul, shuts out the rest at once. All the graces are as train to that leading virtue, are its such close attendants, that they must needs have the same fate, and either dwell together in the heart, or all together be thrust thence: for, if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. An envious discontent, uncharitable mind, makes the whole life un-Christian, and he that do's offend in that one point, must needs be guilty of all; and if Charity, that bond of perfectness in S. Paul, that tie of graces that do's unite them to itself, and with each other, if that be there, all graces must be there, and liberality of heart makes the life Christian; for if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But

I am now to show you that bounty in the heart is a great Sign of a true Christian heart, that that person who not out of easiness or modesty of constitution not knowing how to deny when he is asked, nor out of inconsideration or vanity bestows an alms, or else when importunities do's beg it; but he who out of real compassion to the wants of others, and hearty sense of their calamities, and out of sincere obedience to God resolves with himself to deny himself such and such advantages of his condition to such a good proportion of what God hath bestowed upon him, purposes in his heart to set aside such a portion from his own uses, knowing and considering that by so doing he do's part with such and such satisfactions which did accrue to him by that wealth, yet will do it for the relief of others necessities, that their souls may be comforted, and they may praise God in his behalf. This person hath in himself a great evidence of an heart truly and sincerely wrought upon by the Gospel, and wrought over into the realities of Christianity.

I shall prove this to you, and though I know there be many virtues which seem to have no connection with liberality, and many inclinations in the heart which bounty hath no direct influence upon, several evil tendencies of soul which it hath no formal opposition to, that it should thrust them out of the heart; yet that such a complexion of mind do's either directly or by consequence so oppose them, as not to endure them in the heart, I shall very briefly show you in gross, and by retail.

And first that in gross that is a sign of a true Christian heart, see Col. 3. 12. Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness; it seems that bowels of compassion and bounty is a sign of being such full Christians, that the Apostle takes in all words to complete the Character, and do's it in words of a beloved sense: and let men take them in what sense they please, they do my work, whether as persons chosen out before all time; it seems then to be liberal is a sign of that, and they will have very little reason to conclude themselves elected an eternity before they were, who now they are, and are called and taught by God, do not find this disposition in their hearts: or to take them in their naked meaning, be liberal, as being God's choice and precious ones, (so it signifies, elect, precious, 1 Pet. 2. 6, and in other Scripture elect is the choicest, best,) such as are priz'd and valued by God: as the elect of God, holy, such as have his sanctifying Spirit poured out upon them; and such are beloved by him; as choice and precious things are always dear to us. Now then to be compassionate and bountiful is to be as thus, and liberality of heart is one mark of Election and Holiness, and they that have it, are as God's choice, sanctified, dear ones. Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of compassion and bounty.

2. As it is a sign of our being the Elect of God, and the Inhabitation of the Holy Spirit, so it is also a sign of our being like minded with Christ. S. Paul do's urge his example as a motive to the Corinthians liberality, Ep. 2. c. 8. v. 9. For ye know the grace (or charity) of our Lord Jesus Christ, that being rich, yet for your sakes became poor, that ye thro his poverty might be rich: and therefore for us to do so is to follow his example, and to have our hearts set to it is to be like minded, and truly that is to be Christian enough. If that a person of the God-head emptied himself, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Phil. 2. 7. exhausted himself of Divinity to relieve us; if the God of all the pleasures of the earth and the joies of heaven became the Man of sorrows to rescue us, if that the Lord of everlasting blessedness made himself Prince of sufferings and calamities to ransom us, if this be a temptation to the inclinations of our heart to set us upon going to do likewise in some low weak measure after the rates of our abilities; then to do so considerately, to deprive myself of some advantages, to exhaust somewhat for the sakes of those that want, is to have the like mind in us that was in Christ Jesus our Lord: but because this may possibly evince us to be like-minded only in one thing, therefore

3. In particular, he that is thus minded hath a great evidence of his having overcome the World, a wide and a vast conquest; for, my Brethren, 'tis not only he that is a slave to money, whose heart and actions do importunately pursue the ways of getting or of hoarding that, whom the world overcomes; but he is a slave to the world, whose mind is impotently set upon any of the advantages of this world, the man whose heart do's in too great a proportion either of time or whatsoever else pursue anything which this World is to furnish with, that man's heart is entangled in the pursuit, and it is fettered to the World, which is his motive and pretence for that too eager inclination. And therefore in our Baptism when we renounce the World, we do not only bid defiance to the love of money, but we renounce the Poms and vanities of this wicked World; whatsoever either too great pleasure or height, excess or ostentation, or pride that this World ministers unto. Now then, when a man do's not only now and then give little to them that ask and beg of him, (for so it go's away in such small instances, as will not evidence either much consideration of it, or any great work wrought upon him as to not loving of the World,) but in devout retirements resolves to deny himself in such a proportion, and cut off such a part, 'tis certain he do's cut off such degrees either of pomp or vanity, or plenties, or whatsoever other thing that part of his estate did serve. Now he that can do this resolvedly in his soul, not out of any heat, but from deliberate purpose of heart, 'tis certain he hath to so great a degree disentangled himself from the snares of the pleasures or other advantages of this World, he hath unloosed their fascinations, and weakened all their sorceries; 'tis clear he hath so far withdrawn his heart from the degrees of whatsoever he did love that this World served him in, that he resolves none of them shall engage him to their superfluities: for to prevent that he cuts off their foment, the streams of those contents, they shall not overflow his soul; for he will turn the spring, and make the current run another way. 'Tis evident he hath so torn all beloved earthly satisfactions from the embraces of his heart, as that he will not feed them, not with his own estate, if he cannot also to a virtuous degree feed the poor: he hath so far turned out the love of pleasures, or of poms, or whatsoever, as that he willingly do's part with those degrees of them, cannot be retained together with his liberality. And such a heart sure is without the vicious degree of worldly contents: for vicious inclinations to them use to pursue them as far as they are able, and set no bounds to themselves but those of possibility, will not be limited in their prosecutions by considerations of a virtue as this man's are, and therefore he is too strong for these temptations, and so hath overcome the world.

And now if we consider the advantages of this conquest either in gross, it is a victory over such Enemies as were in Christ's opinion almost invincible, such as did so block up all passages and avenues to blessedness, that he affirms and repetes it is impossible for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Let men think what they will of those occasions of sin, which their dislikes of a low condition or of poverty makes them believe it do's abound with; but I tell you there are such ineluctable temptations to vice in an estate of plenty, as that without a greater measure of God's grace than is sufficient for any other state of life, a man will never overcome them. It is so insuperable a temptation to have that which will furnish him with all his heart or lust can wish for, to have everything that is in his desires put into his power, and so impossible to part with that which serves all his inclinations when God calls for it, as he do's when we cannot at once keep the estate and obey Christ, (which was the occasion of our Savior's words:) and wealth it do's so sauce and invite every vice, it do's so dress objects for lust, and feed with those full plenties, that heat men into it and strengthen for it, do's so pour in provocatives by idleness and excesses, it do's so fill with insolence, or pride, or ostentation and vain glory; it do's so swell and so puff up with heights and scorns, makes men contemn others and oppress them, think anything almost is lawful in their usage of them; yea become careless of Religion, and by degrees contemn it too, wax insolent with God, scoffers at piety, rude in profaneness, anything forsooth they may do; and a whole shole of other such like qualities are the almost certain appendages of men in estate, at least in some degree. In a word, it takes off the heart quite from the Love of God and those things that relate to him, it fixes them so to these worldly satisfactions: yea when it comes to such a pinch, that a man must either wound his conscience, do some great deliberate sin, or part with this so forsooth happy utensil, his estate; break with all the duty in the world rather than part with that which furnisheth him with such convenience of sins, that 'tis no wonder if it be impossible for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

And then for a man to have overcome the General of this great Army of ruinous vices, the only leader that can draw them up against him, to have cut off the source that feeds this inundation of mischiefs, these overflowings of ungodliness from the heart, is a good strong evidence to a man's heart, that he is well resolved against the vices, when that he do's resolvedly deprive himself of the instrument of them, the thing that do's advance them, and hath perfectly divorc'd from them: he needs not doubt but that if it please God to bring him to straits, that he shall rather be content to part with a good portion of his estate, than part with a good conscience, who is content to give away good part of his estate merely to exercise a virtue in obedience to God. He will give it if Christ call for it, who gives it if the poor call for it. He is well secured from feeding pride, excesses, and the other sins of fullness with his plenty, who gives all superfluties away to feed the hungry, his wealth is otherwise employed than in ministering to vice: and however 'tis certain his heart is taken off from the sins that are occasioned by riches, who heartily gives away the occasion of those sins; and though the gate of Heaven be as strait as any needle's eye, yet this wealthy Man, this Camel in one sense of the word as it do's signify a cable rope, when his wealth is divided thus and scattered, when the rope is separated into little threads, then it will go thro the straitest needle's eye, and this rich man enter inter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

And here were argument enough for the triumphs of comfort to an heart that can discern this sign of his Election, this fruit of the Holy Spirit, this instance of like-mindedness to Christ, this assurance of his conquest over that same Enemy, which is the Fleshes auxiliary, and the Devil's instrument, without which neither of them could much prevail upon us; for they do it by the aids the World do's bring, by the temptations and the baits which it do's minister. A consequent fit for Christ to glory in, I have overcome the World, saith he, Matt. 16. 33. and truly if any man, the religiously sincerely bountiful man hath don so to a great degree. He hath unglued his heart from it, they part with ease; you see how he distributes it, and throws it from him: and this is sure encouragement enough to set you upon searching whether you can find this Evidence within you, if it were not a certain sign also of more things, a sign of particular evidences and effects of having overcome the world.

For first, it is a sign of a perfect contentedness in ones condition; for apparently he is not unsatisfied with what he hath, who not only is content, but who contrives to have less, and gives away good part of what he hath. He cannot be discontented that he hath no more than he hath, who is resolved not to have so much, but searches for occasions to distribute what he hath. And if this be an infallible sign of a contented mind, (still I speak of the liberal heart, not only of a scattering hand,) it is an evidence of the greatest happiness in this world; for God hath prescribed one certain remedy for all the evils in the world, a contented heart. This is the only aim of all the arts and all the plenty of the world, it is for this alone men dig the mines of treasures, search the whole circuit of delights, run thro the hurry of an universe of pleasures, wherein, God knows, they seldom find it, but all intend only content. Whether they would be great or rich, or be luxurious, or everything, it is because they seek content in these things; which he that hath in whatsoever state he be, he hath the scope, the price of all the treasures in the world, he hath the sum and comprehension of its felicities, which therefore the liberal heart hath the sure sign of: yea in this he hath the certain evidence of S. Paul's temper that he so much exults in, Phil. 4. 11, 12, 13. I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; everywhere, and in all things I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things thro Christ which strengtheneth me.

Secondly he hath an evidence, that he is freed from envy, and those black disturbing passions that attend it. For certainly he do's not envy other men's greater condition, who willingly diminisheth his own. I am not troubled others coffers are more full than mine, when out of choice •empty mine, and rather choose to lay up my revenues in the bowels of the poor. I do not envy their richer furniture, when I give mine away to furnish needy laboring families, and change the clothings of my rooms into the clothing of the cold bare Christians; and I can much more calmly see my chambers naked, than Christ's members. I have no emulations at the full plenties of other men's provisions; for why should I, when I send away my own provisions to cheer the hungry, to make the hearts of famishing souls rejoice? If I have not so many plenties in my dining Room, yet I make more feasts in the cottages, where every alms is a feast. 'Tis certain he that will not use what he hath to his own interests and advantages, but gives them to advantage others, cannot envy the advantages of others: so that he is free from envy, that rottenness of the bones, that consumption of the soul and body too, that which makes every other man's prosperity his own torment, and though he have a kind of malice wheresoere he sees anything of flourish or of excellency, yet by all those malices he only strives to vex himself; from this the liberal heart is clear.

Thirdly from Covetousness also, and all the griping and injurious passions that are in its train: for it is certain he cannot be inclined to do ill to others for his own advantage, who out of choice parts with his own advantages, that he may do good to others. And indeed I need not prove this; for that a man should be bountiful-hearted and covetous-minded is a contradiction. So that we see the man hath a certain Evidence of being of a contented spirit, and being free from envy and from covetousness, which to be free from will appear to be the great ingredients of a Christian, when you shall see that those three qualities of discontent and envy and of covetousness are the fountains of all the most un-Christian vices of the soul; which was the last Proposition from the later part of the words, For if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. That, as I proved, do's signify, if thy heart be discontented and unsatisfied in its own condition, apt to envy another's prosperity, and covetous of greater things than it possesses, the whole life will be full of most un-Christian actions; they will betray the man, and fill him full of all iniquity. A subject this of a most vast extent, and truly worth considering and staying on: but I shall only point at things, and show you how they are so in a word; for I will dwell no longer on this Theme. First then discontent in ones condition is the Mother of many provocations of God: for

1. It seems with many murmurs and rebellions of heart against the dispositions of God's Providence. You must not think, Beloved, that a discontented Soul is only unwise, though truly so he be to great degrees. He whom a tempest storms in open field, on whom the rain beats and the wind, is sure a fool if he sit down and cry at it, and vex. What relief is it to him to vie shours of tears with those the clouds drop, to return the blasts of wind with sighs and murmurs, and storm at the tempest? Sure there is no one so unwise, but would make hast and seek for shelter rather, and not sit down to fret and weep at it. And yet that is the fashion of the discontented heart; if the least cross be upon their mind, their sad and troubled thoughts make it look very big, (as thick and misty air do's make all objects,) they fancy it insufferable, they look upon it as if God's indignation did lie hard upon them, and he had vexed them with all his storms: and in these storms why do they not fly to God for shelter, nor run under the shadow of his wings for refuge, but vex and cry at it, yea murmur and repine? And what an insolence is this to be angry at the Almighty, because he do's not govern the world as they would have him; to quarrel, because his Providence disposeth of events otherwise than they think is for their interests? Some are discontented when God takes from them anything they did possess. Now since neither health, nor wealth, nor any other good is thine or from thyself, but only lent, vouchsafed during his pleasure and discretion, and whatsoever he takes from thee is only thy not enjoying any longer what is no way due to thee, when he in his wisdom and in his love also to discipline thee calls for what he lent thee. Is this occasion for a contest with the Lord? Must he lend thee his mercies, when his wisdom sees fit to do otherwise in order to the ends of Providence? What irreligious Rebellion is this, to have risings of heart against God's dispositions, to fall out with their Maker, if he will not lend them his mercies as long, and in as great degrees as they would have him? Others are discontented, because they are not in a better, higher, or more plentiful condition; and why do they not as well quarrel with God, because he did not make them Angels; for what they are is his mere gift, and more than their deservings? He was no more obliged to make thee what thou art, than he was bound to make thee a Cherubim or an Archangel: and must thou murmur at the Lord, because thou hast not the disposal of his gifts to lay them out in what degrees thou pleasest? It is the sin of both these discontents, that they do not submit their hearts cheerfully to God's disposals. They that do not so, S. Peter says, are proud, and such as God resists and fights against. And surely then the discontented is a strange person that is proud towards God, and an unhappy person whom God resists and fights against.

2. He renounces his own Prayers; he begs of God, thy will be don, and yet do's murmur that it is so: and what a strange Petitioner is this, who repines if he be heard, and is vexed that God do's grant his Prayers, is angry with the Lord because he do's what he desires? And then shall such a person ever hope that God should hear his Prayers at any time, who is displeased because the Lord do's not deny him?

3. All concupiscences are the effect of this; for because they are not satisfied with their own condition, they desire what is not their own: and so the breach of the tenth Commandment is the certain consequent of this disposition of mind, or indeed rather it is but several instances of forbidding discontentedness with our own condition; and in it, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, is not meant, thou shalt not desire to commit adultery with her; for that was forbidden in the seventh Commandment: but as thou shalt not covet his house, which do's not signify thou shalt not desire once to walk thro it, or to sit and dine in it, but thou shalt not desire the possession nor propriety of what is not thine own, shalt not desire it should be thy house, but be contented with thy lot; so here, thou shalt not be troubled that his wife or servant is not thy wife or servant, and think it as fit thy Neighbor should enjoy the comforts of a happy wife, if God have given him one, or the pleasures and splendors of an estate, or the advantages of a commodious servant, as thou dost think it fit thou shouldst enjoy what is thine; and not desire not only to be theif, but not the owner of them: be content with what is thine.

4. All the Seditions and Rebellions in the world, and those armies of Sins that attend them, that wage their wars, which are upheld by legions of villainies, as numerous as those of men, all the disturbances of States and Churches are but the effects of discontented spirits, men that were unsatisfied with their condition, desired a change, and car'd not by what means they compassed it. They can charge thro seas of blood and sin, over the faces of men and conscience to get out of the condition, which they are not well content with.

I could assign more sins that do attend a discontented heart, when it hath opportunity to break into them: all the effects of anger, and of malice, and of concupiscence, and a whole shole of others are in its train, but that I must reserve one word for Envy.

2. Envy, to say all in one word, however slight a thing we may esteem it. For to envy at another person's having better qualities, or greater dignities, or richer furnitures, or wider estates, or handsomer provisions, this we think do's no mischief to the persons, and therefore is no crying crime. Yet besides that it is more unjust than hatred or than malice, for these have still pretences that do look like reason. I cannot hate a man, but because he do's me some wrong, and that is some reason; for I hate his injustice: but envy hath not any least pretence. Is it a wrong to me, because that person is better qualified, or better endowed? Is he unjust because he is rich, or learned, or well provided? and yet for this I envy him. Besides this, I say, to stab it with one thrust, Envy hath all the vices and all the ruins in the world for its issue, all sin and all damnation is its brood. The Devil envied man's felicity, and therefore tempted him, and so man lost Original Righteousness, and he lost Paradise; and he envies his recovery by Christ, and therefore temts him still until he ruin him eternally. Whatever guilt, and whatever misery is in the world, hence it springs, it is a feind-like devilish humor. And now would you take the prospect of these two qualities, discontent and envy. Lucifer was not satisfied with his condition, and he was therefore cast from Heaven, and all his fellow Angels became Devils; and then he envied man's condition, and changed his Paradise into everlasting misery. These two qualities robbed Heaven itself of those inhabitants that should have filled it, and the Son of God himself, and peopled Hell; it made Angels become Feinds, it made God die, and made men damned, and there is enough for that.

3. Covetousness, I am sure I can say no more of that, than what S. Paul hath said, nor more to my purpose, 1. Tim. 6. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Godliness with contentment is great gain; for we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out, and having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich, fall into a temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition: for the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves thro with many sorrows.

And oh that three such dismal qualities with their accursed trains should breed in that same little part, the eye! An evil eye is the womb wherein they are conceived, and if that one small faculty be so fruitful in guilt and in destructions, how shall we reckon the whole man? Miserable men that we are, who shall deliver us from a whole body of death, and from the state of those deaths, and from darkness, in which this evil eye engages us? A darkness which our Savior could not otherwise express, but by astonishment, How great is that darkness! A darkness great indeed, because 'tis willfully incurable, no state do's so withstand the light as this. The Sun of Righteousness, the Day-spring from on high, that came to visit us, could strike the light thro darkness, and make the shadow of death bright Luke 1. 79. that did shed light, that was a glory, Luke 2. 32. could not yet break in upon a Country clouded with this humor: his Miracles and he were both desired to withdraw, could have no least Reception, when interest and profit came to be touched; and a Legion of Devils, that did plot together, could contrive no surer means to keep out Christ himself, than by setting up an evil eye to look upon him and his Miracles, than by engaging this greedy affection against him, and that but in a small instance. We read a strange story Matt. 8. 28. Mark the contrivance and the policy; the Devils knowing that Christ would cast them out of the two possessed men, and by that Miracle so far show forth his power, that it would probably bring all the Country to believe on him, they desired to prevent this, and thereupon fall on this project, which might incense the men of that Country against him; and in order to it they besought Christ, that if he did cast them out, he would suffer them to go into the herd of Swine; and though he seldom wrought any destructive Miracles, yet that the people might see the virulency of these Devils, how destructive they were, if not restrained by his omnipotent goodness, and so they might understand the mercy don to those that were possessed, and likewise see the mercy now approaching to their Country by the coming of Christ, if they will accept of it, and withal to try whether their love to their Swine was greater than that to their own souls, he permitted the Devils to go into the Swine, he would not restrain them, and they went into them. They who fed the Swine gave to the owners notice of their loss, and did let them know, as the Swine were drowned on the one side, so two men possessed with Devils were recovered, and that Christ had don this since his coming thither. Hereupon the whole City, as being very much concerned in that which had happened, came out to meet and see Jesus, who did such Miracles; and instead of being wrought on by his cure on the men to desire his continuance among them, the consideration of the loss of their Swine made them desire and beseech him that he would depart out of their Coasts. Behold an equal Enemy to Christ and all his Miracles, an Enemy that was too hard for them, even a little worldly advantage! The Senate of Hell hath no project like this to keep out Religion, as this making Religion thwart an interest; rather no Christianity, than abate gain or greatness, or any earthly satisfaction; rather the Swine, than Christ himself.

But we have a worse instance yet than this, and more comprehensive as to our purpose. An evil eye could not endure to see the Son of God alive, and when the second Person of the Godhead was to be betrayed and crucified, the Devil had no other passion to employ on that design, but these same, discontent and envy and a greedy mind, and all these but at little trifles. We find that Judas bore the purse, and S. John says that he robbed it, John 12. 6. was deceitful in the discharge of his office of relieving the poor. Now it happened that a woman spent a box of precious ointment upon Christ, at which Judas was discontent, and envied it his Master, Matt. 16. 8. Mark 14. 4, 5. he murmur'd, and had indignation at it, says the places; his evil eye could not endure to see such a sum should pass his purse, (of which yet he could have purloin'd but very little, for the sum was not great) and missing that, for very envy (for it was immediately upon it Mark 14. 10.) his own covetous heart by the Devil's suggestion put him upon his project of gain to make some advantage by delivering Christ to the hands of the Jews, and upon his consenting to this suggestion the Devil was permitted by God to have this power over him, to enter into him, John 13. 2. and doing so incited him to make a bargain with the Rulers of the Sanhedrim, their great Council, and with their Officers to deliver up Jesus unto them; and he yielding to his incitation, and after Christ's talking with him, and telling him distinctly of it, and the sin and danger attending it, Mark 14. 21. and his not yet relenting, the Devil entered into him again more forcibly than before, John 13. 27. hurried him to the speedy execution: and he went and covenanted with them that he should have thirty shekels, Matt. 26. 15. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Luke 22. 6. and thanked them, altho it were a low and a vile sum, as could be the price of a slave, Exod. 21. 32. yet Judas thank't them for the offer, so covetous he was and glad of an occasion to get money. We see the Devil enters at an evil eye, if that be envious, Satan gets in strait at that eye himself in person, and he possesses hearts set upon gain: and then no wonder if the Kingdom of darkness be in such an heart, when as the King of Hell, the Devil dwells there. Satan entered into him, and when he was there, what design hath he to fill an heart with? nothing but that of getting money, this is effect enough of his possession. The Devil hath don work enough in such a heart as he is entered into really, if he but make it set upon desire of money, though it be but a trifle of gain, but three pounds fifteen shillings. But, Lord God, what will not a worldly heart adventure on; what will not a mind undertake, which envies at another, and is greedy for itself? When such an one did set Judas upon betraying Christ for almost nothing: one vanity, one sport, one dress, one sin's engagement to damnation costs a man more, than what an envious covetous Soul did sell the Son of God, the Ransom of Mankind, the price of all the Souls in the whole world for, yea and was thankful for it too: so low, so fordid, and so base a soul it is that loves increase.

And now, my Brethren, there is no need that I should tell you, that you must bring no evil eye to the Lord's Table to see his body crucified, and his blood poured out in the Sacrament; no discontents, no murmurs, no envious intentions, nor covetous desires must come near that, for they were these betrayed him. If such a soul come thither, Judas is there again; the things that sold him come again to tear his body, and to shed his blood. And do you think that such shall be received and entertained by Christ? Oh no, the bread of the Sacrament will be their Sop; and not Christ, but the Devil enters into such. Oh sure no heart so fit to come to that same feast as the charitable; those that feed him, he will feed: and I could tell you, charity (the offertory I mean, an offering for the poor) was used as an essential part of the Sacrament, and was a service of so high esteem, that preparation was required for it as for the Sacrament; and by the first Councils men guilty of gross sins might not offer, their charities would not be received by the Church. Yea and there was an excommunication from this duty, and to be excluded from bringing their gifts for the poor was a greater censure, than to be shut out from the Sermon or the Prayers. But these are things our world do's not take notice of, nor will understand; to be censured from liberality, and to be excommunicate from bounty, and that receiving of men's alms should be a grace and an indulgence to the givers, are talks that men now have no notions of, nor much care for. But let them be sure no time so proper for our relieving the members of Christ, as when the body of Christ is relieving us to life eternal; no occasion more urgent for us to contribute towards the clothing of the naked body of Christ, than when Christ is clothing us with the crimson glorious garment of his Righteousness; no opportunity more pressing than this to visit his sick members, than when he administering to us 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : nothing do's preach Charity like a Sacrament, nor no Sacrament more than this at the time of his Incarnation, when the Son of God did so exhaust himself for us, as to empty immensity of God-head into a span of weak, poor, helpless flesh, to become really one of the meanest objects of compassion, one that had no revenue in the world but Charity; for while he lived he had not an hole to put his head in, nor when he died a grave to put his body in, but as thro all his life his sustenance was alms, so at his death his burying place was alms too, and yet this was the Heir of both the worlds. And this he did to settle us in an inheritance of infinite, eternal glory; and the approaching day began this state to him, a day sure to be reckoned not with the riots, but with the charities of hospitality, with feasts not for our sins, but feasts for Christ, and for his members; feasts such as his own Table is fit to be the leading entertainment in.

O Lord, who hast taught us, that all our doings without Charity are nothing worth; send thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of Charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before thee: grant this for thine only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen

The First SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. January 27. 1660.

1 PET. IV. 1.

He that hath suffered in the Flesh, hath ceased from Sin.

SO great a flatterer is Man of himself, that from all kind of Events, how various soever, he will adventure to conclude himself in the right way to Blessedness; and rather than want Argument, contradictions shall conspire to make him happy. If he prosper, then God allows his doings; and the success of actions is his mark and Seal, that they are acceptable and dear to Him: And if this Argument be good, The Tribe of Benjamin while it conquered (as they did Conquer those that fought God's Battels; and that by his immediate commission;) yet all that while, those Sodomites and foul Adulterers, the men of Gibeah were Saints; But when calamity does take away this Argument, then on the other side the Gibbet; though the punishment of Villany, is only execution of that Decree, whereby God hath predestinated them, To be conformed to the Image of his Son. As if they died most like Christ, who died with the most Guilt about them, and they will needs be Martyrs when they suffer for their vices; and, if this Argument be good, Egypt was blest with all her Plagues, and the consuming fire that ran upon the ground, was the light of God's countenance upon them. Yet both these Arguments have been made use of lately, by each several party of us, in the variety of God's dispensations to us. Now this each could not do of right. Some Parties of us made false and unjust pleas to them both. Now to decide which did so, not à priori, from the cause; though that alone does guild prosperity, and that alone too makes the Martyr, not the sufferings. But men will never be agreed of that, while whatsoever happens (whether their cause prosper or be oppressed) still proves them in the right. But I shall do it from a plain notorious effect: nor do I know what else can be more reasonable than while some men seem to stand candidates for sufferings, and choose Sedition and Schism, rather than lose the reputation of not being afflicted with their Party; and while others plead the merits of affliction, and Trumpet out their having suffered, as a pretence for the ambition and the covetousness, the luxuries and intemperance, and all the other vices of prosperity, which their late sufferings have before hand expiated; while it is thus on each side, to give both a 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 whereby to judge the Case, which my Text here presents; for, He that hath suffered in the Flesh, hath ceased from Sin.

The words make a single Proposition, and therefore cannot well be taken asunder, nor indeed need they; the Terms being very well understood. The Subject everyone is willing to assume to himself; no one I believe that hears me, but will say he hath suffered in the Flesh. Therefore we have no more to do, but to see whether the other Term agree as universally, which certainly it must, if our Proposition here hold good, if He that hath suffered in the Flesh, hath ceased from Sin.

Therefore in order to this, I shall offer at Three things.

First; Discourse of the truth of the Proposition in General, and see if we can discern how necessary, and how effectual this Instrument of Reformation is, whether it be such as may build a confidence of asserting; That He who hath suffered, hath ceased from Sin.

Secondly; Because discoursing in General, is not so practical and useful, I shall endeavor to discover in particular, By what Artifice of method the Flesh engageth men into courses of sin, and how it works them up to the height of it, and then see how sufferings blast that method, and make the Arts of the flesh either unpracticable, or too weak.

Thirdly; I will attempt to view our own concerns in all this; propose to consideration, Whether this method hath had this effect on us; or, Whether indeed it be as easy to confute God's Word, as to break his Commandments, and contrive that his truth shall no more stand than his will does; but notwithstanding Scriptures bold affirmation here, yet they that have suffered have not cease'd from Sin: and if so, then to propose the danger and infer Christ's Application that at least we begin to cease, and sin no more lest a worse thing come unto us.

I. He that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from Sin: None but He, and He certainly:

When it appeared that Eden had too much of Garden for innocence to dwell in, and although man were made upright, yet amidst such delights he could not be so a whole day, but of the many inventions he found out, the first was to destroy himself immediately, and under the shadow of the Tree of life he wrought out death, and made the Walks of Paradise lead him towards Hell: God saw himself concerned to take another course: He sets a guard of fire about Eden, about the place of pleasure, as well as in the place of torments; and there was as much need of flame to keep man out of Paradise, as flame to fright him from Hell. He makes the Earth not spring with Garden anymore, but bring forth thorns and briars, that might scratch and tear man in the pursuit of things below, which, if the Soul should cleave and cling unto the Earth, might gore and stab it in the embrace; Nothing but sufferings will do us good: The Earth was most accurst to man when it was all Paradise, nothing but the malediction could make it safe and bless it to us; our happiness must be inflicted, executed on us, and we must be goaded into blessedness: and therefore God hath put afflictions into every dispensation since the first. Among the Jews sin did receive immediate punishment by the tenor of the Covenant, and though the retributions of our Covenant be set at distance, as far remote as Hell, yet Christ has dressed his very promises in sackcloth and in ashes, tears and trouble: when he would recompense heroic virtue, he says it shall receive an hundred fold with persecution, Mar. x. 30. and he does grant us sufferings; To you it is given in the behalf of Christ to suffer: Phil. 1. 29. so that the sting of the Serpent is now the tempter; his bitings and his venom moving us to obedience, as much as his lying tongue did our first Parents to rebellion, and when he does fulfill God's threat and wound the heel, he only drives us faster away from him, and makes us haste to him that flies to meet us with healing under his wings. This method God hath always used, and the experience confirmed by the blood of all Ages, even from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of this season: of all the Prophets that went before us, and the Apostles that came after them, as if those were men inspired for ruin, and what ever Judgment they denounced, it was their own burden; and as if these were men chosen out for, and delegated to Persecution, men appointed unto death, as St. Paul expounds their Office, none escaped: and the next succeeding times of Primitive Christianity were but Centuries of Martyrdom, so many years of Fire and Faggot, and worse tortures. This method hath not past by any Grandeur, but of those great ones that have been eminently good, their afflictions have vy'd with their Majesty, the Calendar hath had as much share of them as the Chronicle, the Martyrology as the Annals, and their blood, not their Purple put them in the Rubric. God's Furnace made Crowns splendid, gave them a Majesty of shine, and an Imperial glory, and so all our Crowns indeed must be prepared in the Furnace; he that told us we must be Baptiz'd with fire, saw there was something in us that the Christians water will not cleanse; Baptism may wash sullays but not dross away, That must be washed in flame, and nothing else but fire will take away our base alloy. And it cannot be otherwise, never was there any other way to Glory: for when God was to bring many Sons to glory, he sanctified the very Captain of our salvation through sufferings. Heb. ii. 10. Who though he were a Son, and that the Son of God, yet learned he obedience by the things that he suffered, Heb. v. v. 8. This therefore is the only and most effectual way of teaching it, when God speaks in Judgment: and indeed he counts all other of his Voices but as silence in comparison of this; and though he gave his Law in Thunder, and sent his Prophets daily to denounce wrath to transgression, yet he reckons of all this as if he had said nothing till he speak Plagues and command afflictions; Psal. l. 21. after a Catalogue of sins he tells the man, these things hast thou done and I kept silence; though my Law did warn thee, and my Messengers called to thee, yet I hardly expect that thou shouldst hear those whispers, with all those Voices I did scarce break silence; but now I will reprove thee, and thou shalt hear the rod or hear thy own groans under it: For that we may be sure to hear this Voice, God does by it open the ear, Job xxxiii. 14, 15, 16. God speaks once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not, in a dream and in a vision, then he opens the ears of men by Chastisements, as it follows in four Verses full of them, 91, 20, 21, 22. and sealeth his instruction that he may withdraw Man from his purpose, i. e. that he may make him cease from sin. It seems the place of Dragons is God's chiefest School of Repentance; and we may have a clearer sight of him in the dimness of anguish, than Vision itself does give. When men did not perceive that, saith Job, yet this opened the Ear, and so God sealeth the Instruction: And truly when the Soul dissolves in Tears, and when, as David words it. The heart in the midst of the body is even like melting wax, then only 'tis susceptible of Impression, then is the time for sealing the Instruction. Nor does Chastisement open the Ear only, but the Understanding also; I will give her trouble, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, I will take her into the Wilderness 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 saith he, and speak unto her Heart; There is convincing Experience of all this. Pharaoh that was an Atheist in Prosperity, does beg for Prayers in Adversity; before he suffers, Pharaoh says, Who is the Lord that I should obey his voice? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go, Exod. v. v. 2. but yet Thunder preaches obedience into him, and Pharaoh sent and called for Moses and Aaron and said, I have sinned, the Lord is righteous, and I and my People are wicked, entreat the Lord that there be no more mighty Thundrings, (no more Voices of God, the Hebrew words it) and I will let you go, Exod. ix. 27. And in the Book of Judges you will find that whole Age was nothing but a vicissitude of sinning and suffering, divided betwixt Idolatry and Calamity. When God's hand was not on them they ran after other God's, as if to be freed from Oppression had been to be set free from God's Worship and Service; but when he did return to slay them, then they sought him, and they returned to enquire early after God, and they remembered that God was their Rock, and the high God was their Redeemer. Psal. lxxviii. 34, 35. So that from such induction the Prophet might pronounce, that when God's Judgments are in the Earth, the Inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness, Isaiah xxvi. 9. and S. Peter in the Text, they that have suffered in the flesh, have ceased from sin. Which calls me to my second Task;

2. To show first, by what arts the flesh engages men into courses of sin, and by what methods it does work them up to the heights of it. That I may Secondly declare how sufferings blast those methods, and make all the arts of flesh either unpracticable or too weak.

1. That the carnal appetite should reach after, and give up itself to sensual delights is so far from strange, that it is its nature; 'tis the Law of the members, the very signature of flesh, and inclination imprinted into it, of which it can no more divest itself, than the heated Deer can restrain itself from thirsting and panting after water-brooks: But when Reason and Religion have set bounds to this appetite, for it to scorn these mounds; for that Law in the members to fight with and prevail against the Law in the mind, those original dictates born in it, and Christian Principles infused into it, this is the Flesh's aim and sin. Now this it does by exciting to ill actions, as being sauc'd with pleasures and contents, and by indisposing to good actions, as being troublesome or not at all delightful to the sense, and as for all other delights, it hath no apprehension of, but indisposeth for them perfectly. So that this it does, it engages too much in Pleasures here, and it takes off all cares or thoughts of any joys hereafter; both these I will show you, and thus it works;

1. It prevails with us to indulge ourselves the full use of lawful pleasures, and for this the Flesh will urge, it is the end of their Creation; to do otherwise were to evacuate God's purpose in the making; Did he give us good things not to enjoy them?

Thus every sort of sin insinuates itself at first: Youth will not deny itself converses with temptations, although he have reason to fear they will commit a rape upon his warmer passions, which are chafed by such encounters. But God has not forbid him Conversation; and why should he be an Anchoret and recluse in the throngs of Cities and of Courts? Another that would not by any means be luxurious or intemperate, yet goes as near them as he can, and contrives to enjoy all those delights that do indeed but sauce Intemperance, and make Excess palatable: And truly why should he restrain himself from meats and drinks, and be a Jew again? All these believe they live righteously, soberly, and godly enough. This resolution works in every recreation, pleasure, honor, and advantage of this World, men are content to make as near approaches to the Sin as they can; and indeed believe they have no reason to be morose unto themselves: I will deny myself nothing that God hath not denied me, but enjoy as far as possibly and lawfully I may. But then, by doing thus it

Secondly, does oft take in somewhat of the immoderate and unlawful, which cannot be avoided, both because it is hard to set the exact bounds and limits of what is lawful: The 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the Line that meres out Virtue from its Neighbor Vice, is not so plain in every place as to chalk out exactly to this point thou mayst come, and no farther; hence the man sometimes mistakes himself into a fault; however the extremity of Lawful is, we know the confines and very edge of Vice. And then to him that plays upon the brink of sin, it is a very easy step into it, and indeed unavoidable, when a man is rusht and hurried on, not only by his inward stings and inclinations, but by the practice of the World, which makes use of that holy Name of Friendship, to bring Vice into our acquaintance, and to befriend us into everlasting Death (of such Friends I can have legions in Hell; and the God of this World will serve me, upon this account, to procure for my Sin and my Destruction:) but howsoever when the Appetite is heated, they are not to be denied.

Thirdly, this happening therefore sometimes proves a Snare and bait still to go on, both as it takes away the horror and the aversation of the sins which at the first seem uncouth, till a man be experienced in them; and also as it smoothes the way, for such beginnings do nurse up a Habit and prepare a Custom, and make Vice very easy, which at first it is not, while the Appetite is modest and not able to digest full Doses, till use enlarge and stretch it.

And now the Mind, which by these means tastes diverse Pleasures, and the Degrees of them, and finds a gust in them, yet not being satisfied in any one (as 'tis impossible it should be) stirs up the Appetite to vary and proceed; that that contentment which single pleasures could not afford, diversified might make up. Wretched Nature using that as an Attractive, which should repel; for who would hug a Cloud? embrace that which does not, cannot satisfy? but only Flesh which for that very reason, hunts on and follows the scent. And by doing so a while, it brings upon itself.

Fourthly, Something like a necessity of doing so: Thus Contenance would be some men's Disease, and the Intemperate cannot live without his Vice, but gapes as much as Thirst and Fever do, and if he have not satisfaction, suffers as many qualms and pangs as his Riot used to cause in the Apprentisage of his sin; so that there is a kind of necessity of the practice, and he wisely seeming to make a virtue of necessity, begins to think them the only happiness, at least of this life, freely without reluctancy embracing them.

And now the Flesh is Callous, and if you doubt how it could so harden itself, as not to be pervious to any stings of Conscience, but Proof against all Pricks, though Experiment may persuade you; yet I will show you the Method.

As all Appetite you know is blind, so the Guides also of Carnal appetite; The senses are very short-sighted, they cannot look forward to the next Life, to the hopes of Heaven, or the pains of Hell, to bring them into the balance with the present pleasure, and see which does overweigh. The Flesh only lives extempore, looks but upon that which is before it, scarce on that. We have sufficient experience of this, for when one Vice will not look forwards a year or two to the penury and rottenness some courses do pull down: And when another Vice, as if it had learnt to fulfill our Savior's command, and take no care for the morrow, will not think of the next mornings pains and Headach; Nay, when the ambitious Usurper will not look just before him, to see where he does place his steps, on Precipices and Sword-points, to note how the Pyramids he does climb are made slippery with blood; Pyramids, did I say? pointed Reeds rather, things that have not strength to bear, but only sharpness to stab; and where the man's own weight makes his Upholders fail and wound him both together, at once sink under him and pierce him thorough. Nay, we see many whose sins inflict themselves, who may be truly said to bear their Iniquities, yet choose those sins that bring their Plagues along with them; for we see men with most excessive difficulty practice a Vice only that they may have the Vice, swallow sickness, drink Convulsions and dead Paralysses, foaming Epilepsies, only that all this may be easy to them. And this is but one instance of the many that might be made; just as the King of Pontus, that are Poison that so he might be used to it: Strange! that a man should torture himself with all those deadly symptoms that Poison racks the body with, only that he might eat Poison; yet just such is the Sinners Design, and all the ease and pleasure he acquires at last in sinning, is but familiarity of Poison, custom of Danger, and acquaintance of Ruin. Good God! that men should train and exercise themselves so for perdition! that they should go through a discipline of torments to get an Habit of destroying themselves! that they should work out their own condemnation with hardships and agonies! that as if 'twere too easy to go down the hill to Hell, the descent shall be made craggy, and they force breaches into it, and great headlong Precipices to make the way more painful, and more dangerous, to make the fall more wounding and more irrecoverable! And what shall give a check where difficulty does provoke, and torments do ingratiate.

Well: But though Flesh be so short-sighted and inconsiderate, the mind might trash it by suggesting other sorts of punishments that do await transgression. Why truly if rude and unmannerly Conscience do sometimes thrust in the thoughts of Hell, the Flesh, which I told you, is not terrified with anything but what it feels (now Conscience presents Hell as a thing of hereafter, not till Death be past) it satisfies Conscience with a Repentance of Hereafter, before Death come I will be sorry for my sins, and God is merciful. Conscience being thus quieted, and both Reins and Spur given to the Flesh, it takes its full Carrier, and leaves behind all thoughts of Repentance, and indeed, of God, or Heaven; the hope and joys of which, are the only possible method that is left to take off the Man from his eager pursuit, or to divert him in his course. But as to that also, that I may show you the next heat.

The Mind that is immersed in body, and hath been long accustomed to taste no pleasure but the carnal ones, its fancy filled with those Ideas, it does imbibe such a tincture of sensuality, receives such an infusion of Flesh, and so impregnated with the fumes of Carnality, which clog the Spirit, that its complexion and temper is quite altered, it is diluted and deprest, and so grown stupid and unactive to all higher things. Heaven and all after-things, it may be, are the prejudice of such persons, not their persuasions; some thin conceptions of such things have been thrown into them, but never were improved; for their Mind hath otherwise been employed, and they can have no appetite to them, because they have never had any taste or relish of anything but sensual. And indeed that both longings after, and thoughts of a better Life should be altogether dead in the carnal man, is but a natural and necessary effect of the verge of his Delights. For what motive is there in Heaven to stir up his appetite, to whom Heaven itself would not be a place of Joy? For I am verily persuaded, were the Carnal man in those Eternal Mansions compassed with streams of Glory, it were impossible for him to take delight in them, and he would grope for Paradise in the midst of Heaven: As much impossible as for the most unlearned Idiot to satisfy himself with the pleasures of a Mathematical demonstration: Let him have the Hecatomb, and let Pythagoras be an Epicure on the dimensions of a Triangle, the other hath no palate for these pleasures; and indeed how could the unclean lascivious please himself in the enjoyment of those Felicities that have no Sex, Where they neither Marry, nor are given in Marriage? Or how the Riotous, that Eats to eat, eats to hunger and provoke, not satisfy; how will he content himself there where their happiness is, they shall neither hunger nor thirst, or the Incendiaries that love to set all on fire, what should they do there where there are no flames but such as kindle Seraphim; so that flesh and blood, not only shall not, but cannot enjoy the Kingdom of God: And why then should they long after, or think of it? Nay, I would this unhappy Age, and an unlucky axiom of Aristotle's did not convince that they do think there are no such things; Sensual pleasures, are corruptive of Principles, saith he; and indeed where Damnation is the conclusion, 'tis a much quieter and more easy thing for Men of Wit and Understanding to deny the Principles, than granting them, to lie under the torture of being liable to such an inference; they therefore that resolve to love this Life and all the sinful pleasures of it, at the next step resolve there is no other Life. And now this pamper'd and puffed Flesh is got into the Psalmists Chair, the Chair of Scorners; and 'tis one of the Luxuries of their life to scoff at them who are so foolish as to be Religious, and to deny their flesh its present appetites and pleasures on such thin after-hopes; here their Wit also is an Epicure, and feasts and triumphs, dictates, and professes in that Chair; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in the Chair of Pestilences, as the LXX translate, and very truly, for such men shed a Sphere of Contagion about them, and their Discourses are effluvia of the Plague, and the breath of Pestilence. But how to get Flesh down out of this Chair, that's the difficulty; yet that my Text will tell us, for all this progress of the Flesh is trasht and checked by Sufferings, for, He that hath suffered hath ceased from Sin. Which how, I will briefly show.

The Fleshes first Art was by immersing itself in the full Lawful use of Pleasures, and by consequence, in the immoderate; to prevail with the Soul to find a gust in them, and from a continued enjoyment to conclude them necessary; and so from the importunities of a perpetual temper and an accustomed satisfaction to think of nothing else in this life. Now it is plain Affliction made this Art unpracticable, for that it did do so, was every ones complaint; it robbed them of the immoderate, and even of the lawful use of Pleasures, it took off those customary Delights by which the mind was habituated and glued to them, by not allowing them; and made them so far from being necessary, that they were not acquirable. Thus by denying us even the Lawful use of them, it stabs the Flesh in its first onset: Indeed it does that for us which every man in every state of life in his most plentiful prosperity must sometimes do for himself; that is, Deny himself what he desires, and might enjoy without offense: Which he that does not do, but constantly gives his Appetite every sort and degree of lawful thing it asks, does teach it to crave on, and be importunate, and insolent, and not endure to be resisted, when it did always find him to be so obsequious to it. If David never checked Adonijah, did not at any time displease him, saying, Why hast thou done so? he easily takes confidence to say I will be King, and step into the Throne. 1 Kings i. 5, 6. But he that mortifies sometimes, that does acquaint even his most innocent desires with a denial, how can unlawful ones assault him? For can my Appetite hope to betray me into superfluities, who have taught myself not to wish for necessities? Will he be tempted with Excesses, or hearken to the invitations of Luxury, that will not hear his bowels when they croak for bread? Or he gape for intemperate satisfactions, who will not let thirst call, but shuts his mouth against it? Why should he covet more that hath learnt to give away, and want that which he hath? Now Sufferings inflict this temper on us, and acquaint us with the necessity of all this, and in a while with the liking of it, teach us Content without Lawful Delights? yea, by degrees make that content appear better than an assured enjoyment: For were I offered the choice either of an uninterrupted Health, or of a certain Cure in all Diseases, sure I had rather never need a Potion than drink Antidote and Health itself. And even so the lawful good things of this Life are at the best but Remedies and Reliefs, never good but upon supposition: Therefore while Affliction taught us to want, it hath destroyed this Art of the Flesh.

As for the Second, Then the lulling asleep all sense or thoughts of any Life hereafter, neither minding the fear of one, or hopes of the other; Affliction surely met with this too: For Sufferings bring both the hereafters to remembrance, the Sad one, while every Punishment was an Essay and taste of that which is prepared for those that live after the Flesh, and the more insupportable our Fiery Trial was, the more it caution'd us to beware of that Fire which is never quenched. And for the other Life, surely when our Condition was such, that if we looked unto the Earth, behold nothing but Darkness and dimness of Anguish, and darkness as of the shadow of Death, we could not choose but turn away our Eyes and lift them up to Heaven. When the Soul is thrown down by Oppression, it mounts by a resiliency, and with the force of pressure is crush'd Upwards; or if the Load be heavy, so as to make it grovel and lie prostrate, it is but pressed into the posture of Devotion: When she's disseised of all, turned out of every possession, then she begins to think of an abiding City, and eternal Mansions. For the Soul that is restless, when it sees nothing here below to stay upon, but all is hurried from her, roams about for some hold to rest on, and being able in that case to find nothing but God, there she does grasp and cling; and when the storms splits all enjoyments, and devours Friends which •ke enjoyments comfortable, all perish in one wrack, then she sees she must catch at him that sits above the Water-Floods. I told you out of Job, Affliction did discover better than Revelation, and in the dimness of Anguish we might see more than by Vision; and truly of two Visions which our Savior gave to his most intimate Apostles Peter, James, and John, the one of Glory on Mount Tabor, the other of Sufferings in Gethsemane; showing in the one Heaven and Himself transfigured, a glimpse of beatifical Vision; and in the other Hell transfigured, and a sad Scene of all its Agonies, he thought this a more concerning sight, for when they fell asleep at both, at his Transfiguration, Luke ix. 32. Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with sleep; yet he does not rouse them up to behold his Glory; when they did awake, indeed they saw a glimpse of it, but straight a Cloud did overshadow it, verse 34. But at his Passion he bids them Watch with him, Matth: xxviii. 38. and when he findeth them asleep, he says, What, could ye not watch with me one hour? ver. 40. and bids them watch again, ver. 41. and comes again a third time and upbraids their drowsiness, ver. 45. So much more necessary was it to behold his Agonies, than to see his Felicities: Glory does not discover or invite to Heaven, so much as Sufferings drive to it; and we are more concerned to take a view of that Garden in Gethsemane, than that of Paradise, and the going down from the Mount of Olives does more advantage us in climbing the Eternal hill, than all Mount Tabors height. Nor do Afflictions only drive us toward Heaven, but they beget an hope of it. Knowing that Tribulation worketh Patience, Patience Experience, and Experience Hope, Rom. v. 3. 4. And I will give them the Valley of Achor for a door of Hope, Hos. ii. 14. As if Despair oppressed them into Hope, and that low troublous Valley opened into the highest Firmament. Now he that rides at Anchor of this Hope, though his Anchor lie buried under Waves, yet those rolling Hills of Sea, swelled by storms of Affliction, and raised too by his Tears, do without Hyperbole mount him to Heaven: He that hath entertained these Expectations in earnest, how will he slight Temptations here below? What will he not sacrifice to Christ's Command? See, Abraham that did but hope for Canaan, and that far off too, to be possessed by the Posterity of his Son Isaac, yet when God commands him to slay Isaac before he had any posterity, and so to dash all his own Promises, and quite cut off the very motive to Abraham's Obedience, yet he hopes and obeys even to contradiction, Does both against hope. And had we but the shadow of his hope, as he had but the shadow of our Promises, how would we sacrifice a sin at his Command, and think a Fleshly lust a good exchange for the hope of Heaven, which Tribulation worketh? and he that had suffered in the Flesh, would certainly cease from sin.

And now my last work is to view our own Concern in this, and surely that must be all Exultation and Triumph, and this not so much that our sufferings are ceased, as that our sins are so; not that our Enemies are sunk, but that our flesh is vanquished, that sub hoc signo vincis is thus also come to pass, with the Standard of the Cross, that Cross on which ourselves were Crucified, we have overcome; and with this Christian Banner we have put to flight the Armies of our Heathen Vices. For thus it must be, if my Text be true; and sure it is not possible it should be otherwise: For look upon the Muster-roll of these our Foes which S. Paul does produce, Gal. v. v. 19, 20, 21. and see which of them could escape; it runs thus,

Adultery, Fornication, Uncleaness, Lasciviousness, Idolatry, Witchcraft, Hatred, Variance, Emulations, Wrath, Strife, Seditions, Heresies, Envyings, Murder, Drunkenness, Revelings.

To begin with the great Commanders, those that lead the Van and bring up the Rear, Uncleaness, and Revelings; They that consider how they not only suffered for, but by these Vices, which did misplace men's watches and attendances; sins that were not only like Achan's in our Army, and ruined it by bringing the accursed thing into it, but were like Hannibal's Numidians in the Roman Army, that did at once betray to, and inflict Ruin; sins that did merit and effect Destruction, and made as well as provoked, overthrows; and sins that by God's goodness did cut off themselves, while they did bring men into a condition that would not bear such Vices. These are the guilts of Wealth and Splendor, that do attend Felicity and Pomp; it is not only hopeful that men did resolve to be revenged on these great workers of their mischief, and will no more reset such Traitors in their bosoms; But sure these sins are ceased that did put out themselves.

Then for Seditions; They who consider when they broke the Scepter, they left us nothing but the Rod of God instead of it; a Rod that turned straight into a Serpent, that changed our Seas into Blood, or rather made new Seas of our own blood; that brought Locusts over the Earth, and Frogs into the Temple also, to croak there; that struck Lights here worse than Egyptian Darkness, and destroyed all the first born of the Nation, all the Nobles of the Land; these will easily believe that we have selt this Rod too much to seize upon it hastily again; the Scepter is restored, and this Rod like to that in Israel, laid up, I hope, within the Ark together with the Tables of the Law, never to be dis join'd from God's Commands, nor taken thence against them.

Next for Heresies; Truly we have left us none to revive, or to make new; the mischief both of them and their Cause, the want of Government in the Church is now discerned and remedied: And for Divisions and Schisms, they who reflect on the said issues of them, how well meaning soever all their Causes were, will certainly avoid them: To see how while we quarelled for the Fringes of Religion, we tore the seamless Coat of Christ to pieces; yea, and the body too: How when we first dislik'd a Liturgy, the daily Sacrifice of Prayer was made to cease, and then the House of Prayer was demolisht; next, Christ's, our Lord's Prayer was rejected, that Liturgy of his own framing, thrown away in the Rubbish of his Temple, and then it was a sin to pray at all. His Table we must have removed, and then his Supper was so too; and that great Mystery of our Religion, the Sacrament of our Redemption, was buried in the Ruins of his Altar. To see how thus out of heats of Religion we destroyed all Religion, because that some adjacent Circumstances did not please us, and fetched a Coal from the Altar to set fire to and burn down the Temple, because the building of some out-Court was, we thought, irregular; is Document enough not to attempt this anymore for Religions sake: For now it would be in despite of Christ, who hath almost verified the Jewish accusation of him, Destroy this Temple also, and in three days he will build it up again; and hath built it up we hope, as he did that of his own Body, never to fall again by us: Surely we will not kill this Body of his out of Love to him, and make his Temple his burnt Offering. When God hath set our sins in order thus before our eyes, shown them us in their sad effects, there is no fear that we should fall in love with them.

But where it is not thus, where God's last and most working Method hath been able to produce no good, I must, to keep my word, Apply the Danger: In that case what remains but the Curse of the ground, Heb. vi. 8. which, if after all the Husbandmans methods of Care and Art, it brings forth only thorns and briars, it is rejected by him, he will bestow no more labor on it, but can hardly forbear cursing such an ill piece of ground, and its end is to be burnt: So we after God's Husbandry of Afflictions, when the Plowers plowed upon our backs and made long furrows, and the Iron teeth of Oppressors as it were harrowed us; if we bring forth only the fruits of the Flesh, we are rejected, reprobated, God will bestow no more Arts on us, we are not far from his curse, and there remains only a fearful looking for of Judgment and fiery Indignation. If any did continue refractory to the Rod, sin'd under and against Judgment, and did commit with an high hand even while the Lord's hand was stretch'd out against them, what shall reform, what can express their guilt? To have beheld that tragical iniquity we read of Lions, where when the City was so visited with the Pestilence that scarce any were free, that the Dead without a figure buried their dead, falling down one upon another, each being at once a Carcass and a grave; the Soldiers of the Cittadel would daily issue forth and deflower Virgins now giving up the ghost, defile Matrons even already dead, committing with the dust, warming the grave with sinful heats, and coupling with the Plague and Death; would not this have seemed the Landskip of Hell to us, when they suffer and sin together? Yet when a Church and State were on their death-beds, God's Tokens on them, visited with the treasures of his Plagues, and ourselves sinking in that our Ruin, if any went a whoring after their own flesh, still fulfilling the lusts thereof, and in the midst of Deaths searching for sins; what was this but to do the same things whose story does affright us, while the actions please? and in this case what method will be useful? do we think ourselves of that generous kind that will do nothing by compulsion, but will for kindness; and though we would not be chained, yet we will be drawn to Virtue by the cords of Love; and now God hath shewn mercy on us, we will return him service out of gratitude. Truly, I make no question but most of us have promised some such things to God, how if he would but save us from our Enemies that we might serve him without fear, that we would do it in holiness and Righteousness before him: And if he would restore his opportunities of Worship, how we would use them. Thus we did labor to tempt God, and draw him in to have compassion; and this was Ephraim's Imagination just, I heard Ephraim bemoaning himself, saith the Prophet, as a Bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, turn thou me and I shall be turned; turn my Captivity, and I will turn my life: But this was as a Bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, that did not like the straitness and pressure of it, and would promise anything to get it off, thought it more easy to reform than bear Affliction: But is this hopeful think you? The Soldiers of Lions that would ravish Death, and break into the Grave for Lust, it may be would have been modest, and retired from the fair Palaces that are prepared to tempt and entertain that Vice: Cold and insensible of all those heats that Health and Beauty kindle; but remember it was the taking off God's hand that hardened Pharaohs heart, and a release from punishment was his Reprobation.

And as for those that were humbled under the Rod, and when God had retrench'd from their enjoyments, did put restraints upon themselves, gave over sinning. I have a word of Caution for them, that they examine well and take a care it be a ceasing from sin, like that in the Text, a dying to it, that they no longer live the rest of their time in the flesh to the lusts of men: For if this Old Man be only cold and stiff, not mortified; by the calm and sunshine of Peace, likely to be warmed into a recovery; if thou owe all thy Innocence to thy Pressure, wert only plunder'd of thy sins, and thy Virtue and Poverty hand in hand as they were born, so they will die together, thy Vices and Revenues come in at once: What is this but to invite new Desolations, which God in kindness must send to take away the opportunities and foment of our ruining sins? 'Tis true, when God has wrought such most astonishing miracles of mercy for us, when he did make Calamity contribute to our Happiness; when we were Shipwrack't to the Haven and the Shore; when Ruins did advance us and we fell upwards; it is an hopeful argument God would not do such mighty works on purpose to undo them, we have good ground of confidence that he will preserve his own mercies, and will not throw away the issues of his goodness in which his bounty hath so great an interest and share. But yet if we debauch Salvation, and make it serve our undoing, if we order these opportunities of mercy so, that they only help us to fill up the measure of our sins, if we teach God's longsuffering only to work out our eternal sufferings, these Mercies will prove very cruel to us, and far from giving any color for our hopes. When the Prodigal was received into his Fathers house and arms, had a Ring put on him, and the fatted Calf killed for him, if he should strait have invited the companions of his former Riot to that fatted Calf, and join'd his Harlot to him with that Ring, he had deserved then to be disinherited both from his Fathers house and pity, who would have had no farther entertainment, nor no bowels for him. To prevent such a fate, let us make no relapses, but quite cease from sin; which if we do not, a little Logic will draw an unhappy inference from this Text; if he that hath suffered hath ceased from sin, then he that hath not ceased from sinning hath not suffered, and then what is all this that we have felt and so lain under? What is it if it be not suffering? If this be but preparative, then what is the full Potion, the Cup of Indignation, when all his Vials shall be poured into it? If such have been the beginnings of sufferings, what shall the issues be? If the morning dew of the day of punishment have been so full of blood, what shall the Storm and Tempest be? the deluge and inundation of Fury? Take heed of making God relapse, 'tis in your power to prevent it, your Reformation will be his preservative and Antidote. That is the way to keep all whole; to settle Government and Religion both; at once to establish the Kings Throne and Christ's: For notwithstanding men's pretensions, these Thrones are not at all inconsistent: For that there must be no King but Christ, that there cannot be a Kingdom here of this World, because there is a Kingdom that is not of this World is such another Argument, as that there cannot be an Earth because there is an Heaven. Indeed if we fulfill my Text, then we shall reconcile these Kingdoms, and bring down Heaven into us; for that's a state where there is neither sin, nor suffering, where there shall be no tears because no guilt to merit them, and no calamity to •ke them. Now Reformation does work this here in some degree, and afterwards our comforts that are checker'd with some sufferings, and our Piety which is soiled with spots, shall change into Immortal and unsullied Glories, he prepare us all Who washed us from our sins in his own Blood, and by his sufferings hath made us Kings and Priests to God and his Father, to whom be Glory and Dominion forever and ever, Amen.

The Second SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. October 20. 1661.

PSALM LXXIII. 1.

Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a Clean Heart.

'T WAS a false Confidence the Jews did nourish, That they should dwell securely in their Land, notwithstanding their provocations, because the Worship and the House of God was in it; They did but trust on lying words, the Prophet says, when they did trust upon The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord; As if the Temple were a Sanctuary for those that did profane it, and the horns of the Altar would secure them, when 'twas the blood upon the Altar called for Vengeance. Nor was that after-plea of theirs valid, We are the chosen Israel of God, We have Abraham to our Father; As if when by their works they had adopted to themselves another Parent, were of their Father the Devil, they could claim any but their present Fathers interest, or have the blessings of forsaken Abraham. Now if it be no otherwise with us, but because in our Judah God is known, his Name great in our Israel, with us in Salem, that is, in peace, he hath his Tabernacle now, and his dwelling in Zion: And so much knowledge, such pretences to the Name of God, and to his Worship, are not with other Nations, nor have they such advantages to know his Law: If as each party of us does assume these Privileges to itself, so each do also rest in them, although their Lives answer not these advantages. If while they judge themselves Christ's chosen Flock, boast Covenants and Alliances with God, although they violate all those Relations, they yet trust those will secure them: For why? the being of such a Party and Persuasion is the signature and Amulet that will preserve them in God's favor, the charm through which he will not see Iniquity in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel. Lastly, If we that were the distinctive Character of Israel, that of a Ransom'd, Purchas'd People (for sure our Rescues rise unto the number and the rate of those which brought the Sons of Jacob from the House of Bondage) if we, as they, presume and forfeit upon goodness, and think these gifts of God too are without Repentance, belie••• our being his Redeemed, his Church; conceit our Orthodox Profession (as once we thought our righteous Cause should do) will shield us from the danger of our Enemies, and of our Vices too, and neither let our Foes nor ourselves ruin us; with such my Text and my intentions prepare to meet, lest we should fill the Parallel; and as we equal Israel in our Deliverances, and imitate their practices, we do transcribe the fatal Pattern too in the most full resemblance, and repletion of an entire excision; for although God be truly loving to his Church; yet the ungodly does his soul abhor; however in a signal manner he be good to Israel, yet this his kindness does confine itself to such as are of a clean heart.

The words need not much explication; By Israel is meant the Church of God, and by his goodness to it, all his external mercies also and protections, as the Psalm evinces; and by such as are of a clean heart, those that to the profession of Religion and Holiness of outward conversation, do add internal purity and sincerity; for some translate it, such as are of a clean heart, some, such as are true-hearted and sincere: And it signifies both.

The words thus explicated give me these Subjects of Discourse. First, a general Proposition, Truly God is good to Israel, to his Church. Secondly, an assignation of Conditions under which that general Proposition holds, All are not Israel that are of Israel, it holds only in such as are of a clean heart. And in this we have, first, a quality appropriate to the Church, Cleanness. Secondly, with its subject, the Heart; and there I shall enquire why that alone is mentioned, whether the cleanness of the Heart suffice, and having answered that, shall proceed. Thirdly, to consider them together, in both the given senses as they mean, a sincere heart, and a pure undefiled heart: In each of which Considerations, because the latter part of my Text is a limitation of the former, showing where that general Proposition is of force, where it is not; I shall as I proceed, view all the several guilts opposed to either notion of Cleanness, and see how far each of them does remove from any interest in the Lord's goodness to his Church, which is the natural Application of each part, and shall be mine.

1. Truly God is good to Israel, his Church. And sure this Proposition is evident to us by its own light, to whom God proved his goodness to astonishment, by exercising it to Miracle; while he at once wrought Prodigies of kindness and Conviction; to which we have only this proof to add, That God hath been so plentiful in Bounties, that we are weary of every mention of them, and have so forfeited on Goodness that we do nauseate the acknowledgment. So that his kindness in sustaining his Compassions does vie with that which did effect them, who as he will not be provoked not to be good by such prodigious unthankfulness, so neither will he by the most exasperating use of his Favors: God did complain of Israel, Thou hast taken thy fair Jewels of my Gold and my Silver which I had given thee, and madest to thyself Images: My meat also which I gave thee, my fine Flour, mine Oil, and Honey wherewith I fed thee, and hast even set it before them for a sweet savor. And if men now do offer things, in which God hath the same propriety, to baser Idols, to their Vices; if they do sauce his meat, which he hath given them, to sacrifice to Luxury, take his silver and gold to serve in the Idolatry of Covetousness, and use his Jewels to dress Images also for foulest adorations. If Atheism grow against Miracle and Goodness too, and men do most deny God now when he hath given greatest evidences of his kind Providence; I know not by what argument encouraged, unless his in the Poet, because they see they fare best now, though they deny him most; teaching his goodness to consute his being. If they do look upon the wondrous restitution of God's Service as but a shifting of the Scene of Worship, only another and more gaudy draught and Landskip of Religion shot on the Stage, and do accordingly esteem it as a variety and entertainment for their senses only; for nothing higher is engaged, I doubt me, in those Offices: If they assist in them not out of Principle, but mere indifference to all, and therefore these at present; It is not halting betwixt God and Baal this, it is the bowing of the knee to both, which they can do to each alike, when either is the uppermost, and truly count them Deities alike, I fear. Nay, when the only Ordinance, the Sermon, is but a prize within the Temple, the Preacher but Rhetor dicturus ad aram, that comes to do his Exercise before the Altar, in which men are concerned no farther than to hear and judge, not to be sentenced by: If God endure all this, and do continue still his Church, his Worship, and his other Mercies, then I may well conclude that Truly God is good to Israel.

—Factum quod se dum negat hoc videt beatum,

But I will not be this fastidious Remembrancer: These arguments may prove his goodness, but sure these qualities will not preserve it to us; the limitation, my next part, must suggest them; which tells us. who they are God is good to: Even to such as are of a clean Heart.

1. Clean. Clean, Pure, and Holy, are so essential Attributes of the Israel or Church of God, that though I must not say the Church does take in none but such; For there are Tares, unwholsom Poppy too, and Darnel with the Wheat, yet I must say that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , the Church is but a Congregation of such as are called to be Saints, 1 Cor. i. 2.

In the first Israel almost the whole Discipline of their Religion was purity in type, and all the Ceremonies of their Worship were but figures, rather Doctrines of Cleanness, when they came first to enter Covenant with God at Horeb, and to receive their Law, they were to sanctify themselves and wash their clothes. What purity do those Commandments require, which they must not hear with anything that was unclean about them? which they must wash all to receive? and indeed nothing with them was enterprized without it; they were to cleanse themselves from the impurities of mere Contingency; yea, they were bound to wash their Dreams and purify their very sleeps; and all this is expounded by the Prophet Isaiah, i. 16, 17. Wash ye, make ye clean, put away the evil of your doings, cease to do evil, learn to do well.

And in our Israel by our Covenant there is as much of this required, for we were all initiated into our profession by Washing, regenerated in a Laver, and born again of Water, becoming so Tertullian's Sanctitatis designati, set aside for Holiness, consecrated to cleanness, and made the votaries of purity. How clean a thing then must a Christian be who must be washed into the Name? nor is he thus washed only in the Font, there was a more inestimable fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, Apoc. xi. 5. Jesus Christ hath washed us in his own blood; And Heb. ix, 14. The blood of Christ did purge our Consciences from dead works to serve the living God: How great is our necessity of being clean, when to provide a means to make us so, God opens his Sons side, and our Laver is drawn out of the Heart of Christ: yet we have more effusions to contribute to it, 1 Cor. vi. 11. But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified by the Spirit of our God, and we must be Baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire. A Laver of flame also, to wash away our Scurf as well as sullages, and beyond all these, some of us have been purged too with the fiery trial, and molten in the furnace of Affliction, to separate our dross and purify us from alloy, that we may be clean and refined too; may become Christians of the highest Correct.

Such, among others, are the Obligations, such the Instruments of cleanness in a Christian: Let us inquire next into the importance of the quality, and the degree that is exacted.

And here I need not say that it stands in direct opposition to the licentious practices of Vice; this Scripture calls corruption and pollution, 2 Pet. ii. 19, 20. and the Sinner is there styled the servant of corruption; sure a worthy relation this, a Servant is we know, meaner than whom he serves, at least he is in that consideration as he serves; and then I pray you, in what rank of things is he or she who is below and baser than Corruption? David does also call such open Sepulchers; things all whose horror does not lie in this, that they enclose rottenness and putrefaction, but open Sepulchres are gaping frightful noisomeness; and they do also shed a killing stench. A man that is engaged in conversations with impure sinners, is in a like condition with him who hath no air to draw into him, but that of Funeral Vaults, and does suck in only the breath of Pestilence.

But it is a small thing to say the cleanness of a Christian does abhor such licentious impurities; for it is such that though it may consist with those little stains that come by slips and failings of infirmity (these are the spots of Children) and also with some single fouler acts, into which the man may be surprised, provided they be suddenly washed off in tears: Yet can it not consist with continuance in a known sin, though it be but a breach of a single Commandment: And though the man be strict in other things, yet if he do allow himself one Vice, he is of the number of the unclean; for partial obedience does imply also partial disobedience, and to the worst and foulest mixture; therefore no purity. Herod feared John the Baptist, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him, and when he heard him he did many things, and heard him gladly, Mark vi. 20. Could you but pardon him one Crime, he were a most Religious person, but that indulged makes him the wicked Herod: The matter of Uriah threw dirt; perpetual sticking dirt, into the Character of David, that man after God's heart. There are few persons but some sin or other finds a particular engagement on, and does insinuate especially above all others into them; the vice of Constitution, the Crime of my Bosom, 'tis my own flesh and blood, I cannot tear that from me: Or else another sin does get into my Coffers, the profits of it bribe me to make much on it, and it brings such a reward with it I cannot be unkind to it; Or else the custom of a Vice hath made it my acquaintance and my friend, and then it is so jointed into me that there is no divulsion of it. Now when a Vice hath got any of these relations to me, rather than use a violence upon myself, I must find out some salve now to quiet Conscience, and yet keep the Vice. And truly if it be but one thing that a man transgresses in, he is apt to be gentle to himself, and finds plump grounds to be so. The best man hath his fault, and this is his, only in this the Good Lord pardon him; in other things he will be strict, but this is his particular infirmity, to which his very making did dispose him, having been poisoned by its Principles without his fault or conspiracy.

'Tis true, indeed, men have someone or other sinful inclination, which is a weight and violence upon them, and which they did derive from Adam, whose sin like an infection taken in by divers men, breaks out in several Diseases, according to variety of Constitutions: But truly Adam gave them no ill Customs, and they have no Original habits, themselves did educate their inclinations into Vices: and for those inclinations that are derived into them, the water of their Baptism was therefore poured upon them to cool those inbred heats, and quench those flashings out of Nature, wash away those foul innate tendencies in that Laver of Regeneration; which therefore they who spare and are tender to, because they are original and natural, they spare them for that very reason, for which they there engaged to ruin them, and do renounce their Baptism, as to the aims and uses of it. There thou didst list thyself a Soldier to fight against the Devil, World, and Flesh; now whichsoere of these gets most into thee, wilt thou think fit to spare thy Enemy, because he is thy bosom one? the Risque is greatest when the Foe is Rebel and Traitor too, is got in thy own Quarters, shuffled with thy own Forces, entered thy Holds and thy Defences, and mixes in thy Counsels, does counterfeit thy Guard, so that thou but command'st, and leadst on thy own ruin. Sure here is need of strictest care to rid thyself of so much treacherous danger; so far is it from a defense to say, this is the single force and bent of Nature in me, that if I no not therefore most resist it, I am perjuringly confederate with my Destruction; and howsoever pure I keep myself from other Vices, I am not clean. David will tell me when I am, Psalm xviii. 23. I was uncorrupt before him, and eschewed my own wickedness. God hath not given us Authority to pick and choose our duties; observe him where we like, and leave the rest; and when in the severe contritions of Repentance we come to judge our Lives, we have no leave to spare a Vice because custom hath made it our Companion and Intimate, or 'tis as near to us as the close inclinations of our hearts. He that does so, although he live a careful life in other things, yet all his Innocence is only this, he hath a mind to but one sin; and those he does not care for he forbears, but that which pleaseth him, that he commits. And sure God is beholden to him that there is but one way of provoking which does take him, and therefore must allow him what he hath an inclination to, and pardon him because he does abstain from those he does not like. I shall now only add that in this case S^t James's Aphorism holds, that Whosoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point only, he is guilty of all; he that allows himself to break one Precept, does keep none, but shall be reckoned guilty of those things which he does not commit. For whosoever keepeth the whole Law, and yet thus offendeth in one point, is guilty of all.

And then I need not prove such have no Title to the goodness of the Text, but may conclude, if God be good to Israel, it is to such as are of a Clean Heart; And so I fall upon the subject, Heart.

And here I must first caution not to think the Heart is set as if it were the entire and only Principle by which a judgment might be past upon our doings; as if our Actions so wholly derived denomination from it, that they were pure which came from a clean upright heart; In opposition to which, I shall not doubt to put, That the external actions may have guilts peculiar to themselves, such as are truly their own, not shed into them by an evil mind; and a man may be wicked in the uprightness of his heart, when he does not intend any such thing, but rather the clean contrary. Our Savior tells his Apostles, The time will come that whosoever killeth you will think he doth God service, John xvi. 2. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that he does offer an Oblation or Worship, shall think his Murder Sacrifice; that that would propitiate for other faults; his Crime should seem Religion and atonement to him. (We have seen guilts put on such colors too:) and yet by these same actions which their hearts pursued with Holy aims, out of a Zeal to God, as S. Paul says, Rom. x. 2. they sacrificed themselves and their Nation to God's Vengeance. Once more St. Paul does find reason to call himself the chief of Sinners, 1 Tim. i. 15. for the commissions of that time of which he says that he served God with a pure Conscience, ver. 3. did what he was persuaded in his heart he ought to do, pursued sincere intentions; and after says, he had lived in all good conscience before God until that day, Acts xxiii. 1. So that here was enough of the clean heart, a good and a pure conscience, and could his fiery persecutions by virtue of that flame within be Christened Holy Zeal? Could his Pure Conscience make his Bloody hands undefiled? Oh no! 'twas blasphemy, and persecution, and injury, for all 'twas Conscience; for all his heart was clean from such intentions: I was before a Blasphemer, and a Persecuter, and Injurious, ver. 13. We may not think to shroud foul actions under handsome Meanings and an Innocent Mind; a Conscientious man may yet be chief of Sinners; St. Paul was so, he says, and a clean Heart will not suffice alone. Therefore Heart is put here accumulatively, as that whose cleanness must be added to the purity of Conversation to complete it; and it implies what elsewhere he does set down more expressly Clean Hands, and a Pure Heart, all which a clean Heart may be set to signify, because under God's Holy Spirit it is the principal and only safe agent in the effecting of the rest, as that which only can make the other real, valuable, and lasting.

When a Disease hath once insinuated itself into the Vitals, spread through the Marrow, and seised the garrisons of Life, the Souls strong holds, and after fallies out into the outer parts in little pustles and unhandsome Ulcers; they who make application only to those outward Ulcers, may perchance smooth and cure the skin, make the unhandsomness remove and shift its seat, but all that while the man decays, the Forts of Life are undermin'd and sink, the vitals putrefie, and the whole Skin becomes but the fair Monument of its own rotten Inwards: Just so we have a 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 an inward deep infusion, bed or seedplot of malignity, which sometimes shows itself in outward gross commissions; but if we only use the Lance or corrosive to these, we may perchance make a man shift a sin (thus it is possible that the profane may alter into Factious, or contrary, the profuse Proud man turn Covetous) but till the ground of these be purged away the man's not cured, but only the Disease is changed, and he is as unsound as ever. God's severe Judgments that did lie so long so close upon us, like strong repercussives, may have stricken back the breakings out of former sins or inclinations: But then no care being taken of the Heart, the first heat sent them out again, and Mercy made a restauration of Vices too. But if the Heart once entertain a real and sincere sense of Religion, if it consent to thorough resolutions of Piety, as far as the man discerns, so far the Cure is perfected, and such are fitted for God's goodness; for truly God is good to Israel, even to those that are of such a clean Heart; And so I fall upon them both together, first in the former sense proposed.

That Clean heart signifies sincere true-hearted men, I have not only the assurance of Translations, and among them the Syriac, but the Text itself does evince it, because such only are indeed of Israel; for so our Savior says, Behold an Israelite indeed in whom is no guile, John i. 47. One like the Father of them 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Gen. xxv. 27▪ a man unfeigned, that did seem nothing he was not, all Heart. And such each Israelite, each man that does expect an interest in that goodness which the Lord hath for Israel, must be, sincere and without guile.

1. In his Conversation with Men:

I am not here to say, Sincerity is much, most generous, when it looks like a disingenuous fear to be afraid of my own mind, when my Heart dares not look into my Face, or speak in my Tongue, but must lurk under a disguise of words, or countenance, that are assumed and not its own. Nor is it Secondly, my business to say it is the greatest prudence, or as we call it

Policy, and that not only because it hath most reason to attend and to expect God's Blessing, which other false acts cannot; but because though bold open Truth breeds Anger frequently, yet insincerity breeds hatred and contempt; there being no so ignominious thing as Reputation of Falsness, which yet is unavoidable, for events must discover insincerity, and then how piteous a thing he is when he must turn and wind still in more Mazes, till he be quite lost in his own shifts, and having no clue for his own Labyrinths, betrays himself more by his not knowing where he is; and men must needs be much more angry at pretences when they find them, than they were at displeasing truth at first; when they discern their wants and expectations too deceived, themselves refused and mock'd, find nothing but a Vizard for a Friend: nay, find an Enemy indeed, for so is the Dissembler to mankind. Great Casuists do tell us, that the moral Obligations to speak truth depend upon a right that each man hath who is a member of human society; Man being a sociable Creature merely by virtue of his Speech: But speech could not contribute to cement Society, if there were not an obligation to speak truth; hence they conclude, that Children, Fools, and Madmen who are not truly members of Humane society, and also open Enemies, with whom we are in a state of War, and have broke that society as to all things but Laws and Articles of War; all these and these alone we may deceive, and then surely the false insincere man either esteems all others Fools and Madmen, or holds himself in a state of War with all Mankind, out of all Laws and Obligations of Humane society, and is an Enemy to the World; a Creature by himself, but that there are so many of them. But to pass by such Arguments, God's Precepts of not lying to one another, oblige us and all those that require faithfulness and his Command that Love should be without Dissimulation; that while we speak gently, we should not be hard-hearted, give melting language soft as the airs of Flattery, but yet have crusted inwards, that cannot yearn nor stretch into compassion, Jacob's voice but Esau's rough red hands; Besides God's reasons do enforce this, Putting away lying, speak everyone truth to his Neighbor, for we are members one of another: So that Dissimulation is as great a Treachery as for the Eys to seek Traps to ensnare the Feet, the Hands to sauce stones for a Meal, which may perchance delight the Palate with a transient gust of that they are condited with, but cannot be digested into Nourishment. Go prepare for your hungry stomachs only festival Smells, which may encourage fainting Appetite, but do but mock its emptiness; go warm a cold part with a painted light, cover a naked member with a shadow; when your own parts would take it well from one another to be thus insincerely dealt with, then, not till then, will it be tolerable to Dissemble. For we are members one of another; all fellow-members of Christ's Body the Church; this Israel to which the Text says God is truly good, not in presence or color only, he hath not the hypocrisies of kindness. Now such a true good God he will not be to them who are but counterfeit and mock-parts of his Israel, for what is there in such a man that he can be good to? To the good kind well-spoken part? Alas, that is but shape and varnish, 'tis not the man that speaks, 'tis all a motion and artifice, he puts it on, and then it vanisheth and dies, is not a subject for God's kindness; or to the heart, but that is hard, and is not qualified for his Goodness, our true good God being only such to those that are of a clean, true, and sincere heart towards their brethren.

2. And much more, Secondly, is he such only to them that are sincere in their Religion to him. Christ hath nothing but woes for Hypocrites; the 23d Chap. of S. Matth. is made up of them; when he would word God's Vengeance to Sinners, he says, he shall give them their portion with Hypocrites and Unbelievers. Things strangely coupled sure, that they whose Life does seem all Faith, all Godliness, should be only fit Company in Tophet for the Unbelievers, rank'd and condemned with them; that all their strong belief cannot remove them from an Infidel; Sure they are far enough from the goodness of the Lord, when the portion of Hypocrites is Rhetoric of Hell, is its Torments expressed with Art.

They whose heart is not clean to God in their Pieties, but let their strictnesses take in some temporal aim besides, as Reputation with their Party, or getting Praise, or Wealth; they serve Mammon or Fame with God's Religion, and make the very Worship of the Lord be the Idolatry of Covetousness or of Honor. If Jehu in his Executions on Ahab and his Family intend the cutting off the Regal Line as well as Baals worship, and with their Blood to purple his own Royalty, though God did bid him shed that blood, yet does it stain his Soul with crimson guilt; and God will punish him for his Obedience, I will visit the blood of Jezreel upon the House of Jehu, Hos. i. 4. But he that lets a vicious aim mix with his Virtue, and does good to an ill end, addresses God's Religion to the Devil, and makes Christ minister to Belial; he does sin multipliedly, both in his vicious intention, and in debauching Virtue to serve Vice, and he might much more innocently not have been Pious. Neither is that Virtue or Heart sincere whose intentions are not purely and merely virtuous, but intend to compass some Religious end by means that are not lawful; For such intentions are not clean but mixed with Vice; and 'tis sure I cannot please God with such kind of holy meanings. If Saul will sacrifice with the Sheep and Oxen he was bid to destroy, his very worship loseth him the Throne of Israel: Nor an I serve God with such Pieties. God never does require an action which he sees I cannot compass without sin, for he requires no man to sin, for that were to command me to break his Commands, and I were bound to disobey him in obedience to him, Shall I speak wickedly for God, saith Job? and then shall I do so? Such Religious intentions, the justice of those ends, will never qualify me for God's goodness, when it but makes Damnation just to me, for so S. Paul affirms, Rom. iii. 5, 6, 7, 8. In fine, if there be any wickedness in the heart, it gives so foul a tincture to whatever pious actions we perform, that they become sin to us. 'Tis true, Prayer is as the Incense, David says, and the lifting up of our hands is like the Evening Sacrifice; but if the heart of him that Prays have any heats of Malice in it, truly that man does light his Incense with strange fire, kindles his sacrifice with the flames of Hell, for so S. James does call those heats. He that gives God any of his performances, and hath a naughty Heart, like Nadab and Abihu, he presents his Offering in an unhallowed Censer, and all his holy worship will get nothing else from Heaven for him but a consuming fire as theirs did. He that will offer anything to God, must take a care it be not tainted with such mixtures, which spoil all the Religion, making it not sincere, and also spoil the Heart by making it not clean, and undefiled.
The last remaining sense,

A Clean and undefiled Heart.

Of those things which our Savior says defile the man, some are merely sins of the Heart, such as may be consummated within the Soul; and for the perpetration of which a spirit is sufficient to itself; such are Pride, especially spiritual pride, the sin of those that think none holy as themselves, and cast the black doom of Reprobation upon all that do not comply with their Opinions and interests: such also are uncontentedness with our estates, inward repinings at the dispositions of Providence concerning us, black malice, bitter envyings. Now in these as the mind does need no outward members to consummate them, requires no accessory Organs to work them out; so neither does it require any outward accessory guilt to make them liable to condemnation: we know 'twas one sin of the spirit only that made Angels Devils. If a foul body be abominable to the Lord, shall a foul spirit be less odious? he that defiles his Soul offends God in a much nearer concern of his, because that speaks nearer relation to him than the Body: this was only his workmanship, made out of Earth, the Spirit was created out of himself; a foul body is but filthy Clay, but he that does pollute his Soul does putresie the Breath of God, and stains a beam of the Divinity.

The other sort of things that are said to come from the Heart, and to Defile, are those which S. Paul calls works of the Flesh, such as if they be committed must be committed outwardly, Murders, Drunkenness, Revelings, Revenge, Wrath and Contentions, Seditions, Factions, Schisms, all Uncleanesses, &c. In these indeed the Heart can be but partial Actor, the utmost it can do, is to desire and to intend them, and to contrive and manage the designs of compassing them; which yet Providence or the Innocence of others may put out of the reach of man's power, or his own temporal fears may make him not dare to set upon them, though he do cherish the desires. Now if they be obstructed from committing, most men use to conclude gently of their guilts while they do keep within the Heart; the Execution of them is the only thing that does look mortal; and till the sin be perfected there is no death in it. And truly I confess that, as it happens many times, on a sudden surprise of soul, when a bright gilded temptation strikes the heart, and dazzles the mind, we see that the Will rushes on it instantly, consents and wishes heartily; yet within a while the Spirit does recover out of the surprise, puts by the thrusts of fancy, and the stabs of the temptation, and that Will languishes and dies like a velleity, as if it had been nothing but a wouling; and now the man would not by any means consent to the commission: In this case though there be a guilt to be repented of, and cleansed with many tears, yet this is Innocence in the comparison; but if the Will purpose, contrive, and do its utmost, it is the same to the man as if he had committed. 'Twere easy to demonstrate this, that whatsoever evil thing a man intends and does fixedly resolve, he is guilty of, though he do nothing, or though the thing he chance to do be never so much lawful. Those sayings of St. Paul, I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is no meat unclean of itself, but to him that esteemeth anything unclean, to him it is unclean, Rom. xiv. 14. and he that doubteth is damned if he eat, ver. 23. These could have no truth in them, unless the heart by choosing and pursuing to the utmost anything that it does judge unlawful, incur'd the guilt of that unlawfulness, even to Damnation; and all that merely by itself without the Action, which in that case had nothing sinful in it. A weight that is upheld by a man's hand, and otherwise would rush down to the earth, does surely gravitate as much, it is as heavy though it do not fall quite down, as if it did, and, were it let alone, it would: A settled tendency, a resolved inclination to sin, that presseth with its utmost agitation is that weight, which though it may perchance be stopped in its career, yet it tends to the Abyss, its center, and will not rest but in that Pit that hath nor rest nor bottom; the Heart in this case is as liable as it can be, because here it hath done its worst, and such a Will shall be imputed to its self.

And now I need not tell those who are still designing sin, or mischief in the heart, although it never dares come out of those recesses, how far they are removed from the goodness of God to Israel. A Father finds a way to prove such souls have larger doses of God's Vengeance, who when he had asserted that the soul does not die with the body, and then was asked what it did in that long interval, for sure it is not reasonable that it should be affected with any anticipations of the future Judgment, because the business of the day of Judgment should be reserved to its own day, without all prelibation of the sentence; and the restitution of the Flesh is to be waited for, that so both soul and body may go hand in hand in their Recompences as they did in their demerits, joint Partners in the Wages as they were in the Works: To this he answers; The Soul does not divide all its operations with the Body, some things it acts alone, and if there were no other cause it were most just the Soul should there receive without the Body the dues of that which here it did commit without the Body: That's for the former sort of sins, those merely of the Heart: And for the latter sort, the Soul is first engaged in the commission, that does conceive the sin, lays the design of compassing, and does contrive and carry on the machination; and then why should not that be first in Punishment, which is the first in the Offence?

Go now and reckon that thy outward gross Transgressions are the only dangerous and guilty ones and slight thy sins of Heart; but know that while thy flesh is sleeping in the quiet Grave at rest and ease, thy Spirit then's in Torments sor thy Fleshes sins, and feels a far severer Worm than that which gnaws thy Body: Poor Soul! Eternity of Hell from Resurrection to Forever, is not enough to punish it, all that while it must suffer with the Body, but it must have an age of Vengeance besides particularly for itself, to plague it for those things it could not execute, and punish it for what it did not really enjoy; only because it did allow itself to desire and contrive them; and it must be tormented for those unsatisfied desires: And though indeed desires where they are violent, if they be not allayed by satisfaction, are but so much agony, yet do they merit and pull on them more; these Torments shall be plagued, and the soul suffer for its very passion, even from Death to the last Judgment; and 'tis but just that being it usurp'd upon the pleasures and the sins of Flesh, it should also seize on and take possession of the Vengeance appointed for those sins, it should invade and should usurp their condemnation.

But why do I stand pressing aggravations against uncleanness of Heart in an Age, when God knows Vice hath not so much modesty or fear to keep within those close and dark restraints? Instead of that same Cleanness which the Text requires, we may find Purity indeed of several sorts, but 'tis either pure Fraud, or pure Impiety; the one of these does make a strange expression very proper, pure Corruption, for so it is, sincere and without mixture, nothing but itself, no spots of Clean to chequer it, but all stain: The other is pure white indeed, but it is that of whited Sepulchres; a Life as clean as Light, a bright pure Conversation, but it shines with that light only which Satan does put on when he transforms himself into an Angel of Light, and it is but a glory about a fiend. But yet this shines however, whereas others do stand Candidates of Vice, and would be glorious in wickedness; and that is such a splendor as if Satan should dress himself with the shine of his own flaming Brimstone, and make himself a glory with the streamings of his Lake of Fire. And yet thus is the World, we do not only see men serve someone peculiar vicious inclination, and cherish their own wickedness, but they make every Vice their own, as if the Root of bitterness branch'd out in each sort of Impiety in them, such fertile soyls of sin they are, here insincerity were to be wished; and where there is not cleanness that there were a Mask, that there were the Religion of Hypocrisy. We may remember God was good to Israel of old by Obligation and performance; the one as great as he could enter, the other great to Miracle and astonishment; when after seventy years Captivity and Desolation, he did rebuild a Temple where there was no Monument of its Ruines, and raised a Nation and Government of which there was no Relics. And yet at last when the Religion of some turned into Faction, of others into Profaneness; when the strictest Sect of them, the Pharisees, became most holy outwardly, to have the better means 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to mischief those that were not of their Party, and got a great opinion of Sanctity, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, so as to be believed in whatsoever they did speak against the King or chief Priests; and that so far as to be able openly to practice against both, and raise Commotions. They are Josephus's words of them; and when another Sect, the Zealots, the most pernicious of all, saith Bertram, did commit Murders, Sacrilege, Prophanations, and all kind of Villanies, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, with good Intentions, saith the same Josephus; and when those who did not separate into Sects, but were the Church of Israel, became lukewarm, supine, and negligent in their Profession, yea, and licentious and Profane, fit only to be joined with Publicans, in Christ's expressions; when sin grew generally Impudent; when they did live as if they would be Scandalous as well as vicious, as if they loved the guilt as much as the delights of sin, and cared not to be wicked to themselves, but must debauch, as if they did enjoy the ruin of other persons, sinning just as the Devil does, who does not taste the sin, but feasts upon the Sinners Condemnation: Then did God execute a Vengeance whose prediction was fit to be mistaken for that of the Day of Judgment, and whose event almost fulfilled the terrors of that day.

I need not draw resemblances, show how God's goodness to our Israel does equal that to them; applying to ourselves their Raptures; how when the Lord turned the Captivity of our Zion, we also were like them that dream, surprised with Mercy. Indeed as in a Dream; Ideas are not always well connected, there is no chain or thread of fancies, and the thoughts are not jointed regular and even; but there are breaches and disorder in them still, the Images of sleep being like Nebuchadnezzar's, made of such things as do not well unite. So there is something I confess, like this in our condition, for with our gold and silver, our precious things that are restored, there is Iron and Clay, not only meaner mixtures, but such things as will not close, or be soder'd, but do incline to part asunder, and would molder and tend towards dissolution; and just as in a Dream, the composure of things is no so undisturb'd, but that there is some confusedness; neither our affections nor practices do perfectly cement; but yet I hope it is no dream of mercy, 'tis not a Phantasm or an Apparition of God's kindness, but the Lord will be truly good to us.

Yet if we do proceed as Israel, and equal it in provocations:—

But I will make no parallels, public clamors do that too loud; these do display the factions of iniquity among us, and muster up the several parties of our Vices too; and each man is as perfect in the guilts of all sides that he is not of, as if their memories were the books that shall be opened at the Day of Judgment; some men can point you out our Pharisees and Zealots; others can show you our profane licentious Professors, Lay and Clergy both; and indeed we need not go far to seek any or all of these; nor do we want our Sadducees. Now if all this be true, then as those were the signs of the Son of Man's coming to them in Judgment, so we may fear they are his Harbingers to us. If they be, I am sure the only way to make his coming good to us, is to prepare for it by cleansing from all filthiness and insincerity; then though he come clothed with a Glory of flaming Vengeance, yet will those streams of Fire find nothing to consume or wash away in us; but through that flame the pure in heart shall see God, so as that that sight shall be the Beatifick Vision: Yea, they shall see the Goodness of the Lord in the Land of the Living, they shall see Jerusalem in prosperity all their life long, and Peace here upon Israel, and in his light hereafter in the Jerusalem that is above, To the state of which glorious Light He bring us all, who is the brightness of his Fathers Glory: To whom be Glory, and dominion forever and ever.

Amen.

The Third SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. Second Wednesday in Lent.

LEVIT. XVI. 31.

Ye shall Afflict your Souls by a Statute forever.

THE words are one Single Precept concerning one part of the Celebration of a Day: I shall not take the Precept asunder into parts, for it hath none; but shall frame my Discourse to answer three Enquiries that naturally offer themselves to be considered from these words: And they are,

1. What the Importance of the thing commanded is? What is required in this Injunction, Ye shall afflict your Souls?
2. What Usefulness and Efficacy this Duty had upon that time in which it was prescribed? what the Afflicting of the Soul contributed to the work of that Day? that it should be made so indispensable an ingredient of its performances, tied to it by a Statute forever?
3. Whether that forever do reach us? which is the Application, and brings all home to us.

First, What the Import of the thing commanded, the Afflicting of the Soul is?

The Arab. and Targum of Jerusalem Translate it Fasting; yea, and a Learned Rabbine says, that wheresoever these two words are put together, that is meant. And indeed they are often joined in Scripture to express it, Psalm XXXV. 13. I afflicted my Soul with Fasting. And the Prophet Isaiah speaking of this Day in my Text, says, Is it such a Fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his Soul? Isa. lviii. 5. Somewhat a strange expression it is; for Fasting does afflict the Body properly, and yet we find the like too in the other Extream: We read of pampering the Soul, Psalm lxxviii. 18. They required 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 meat for their Souls; not to supply the Hunger of their Body, that they had before; but to indulge the Lusts of their mind; they did not want for food, but variety; Festival diet, and a Table furnished they would have; and this luxuriancy and wantonness of Meat the Scripture calls meat for the Soul: Such as God says in other places the Soul lusteth after. Indeed forced meats, and things that please merely by being rare and dear, or by being extravagant, these do not feed the Appetite but Opinion, and the Mind; it is the Soul that only hungers after these: Thus when I look after Wine in the glass, and make my Eye a Critique of its accidents, and by the mode and fashion of it teach it to please or displease my judgment, I do not thirst after the cool moisture of it, but the sparkling flame, and do not drink the Wine, but the flavour and color, and this is all but Notion. Now certainly these are not proper objects for our Appetites, meat for the Body, says the Scripture, and it is the Stomach and not the Imagination that is hungry; nor is it Fancy or the Soul that thirsts, but 'tis the Palate, so that these are unnatural and monstrous satisfactions.

And yet to bring men's selves to this, is one of the great masteries of Wit and Art, to force themselves to find a relish in these things, and then contrive them, is a piece of Skill which the advantages of parts and fortune are desireable mostly, as they are useful to: And a well studied Epicure, one expert in the mysteries of Eating, is a singularly qualified and most grateful Person.

It were in vain to ask what else such men can be good for? that being their Profession, they are out at most other things: Indeed the Soul that dwells in Dishes, and is stew'd in its own Luxuries, grows loose and does dissolve, its sinews melt, all its firmness of mind forsakes it, the man is strong for nothing but for Lusts, his faculties are choke'd and stifled, they stagnate and are mir'd within him, and there corrupt and putrefie. And then what Cranes will force out thence, and wind up such a Soul into the practices and expectations of Piety? will make it mind and entertain the hopes and Duties of Religion? what macerations, what Chymistry will defecate a Spirit so incarnated, and rectify it into such a fineness as befits that state where all their blessedness have no sensual relish, but are sublimed into Divine and purely Spiritual.

Lord God! that thou shouldst shed a rational Angelic Soul into us, a thing next to the Being of thy Self, to animate only the Organs of Intemperance, and Gluttony, and their appendant lusts! Only inspire us how to be but more sagacious, indeed but more luxurious Brutes, when thou hast set us here to train and discipline ourselves for a condition of such glorious Joys as are fit to entertain Souls of Reason with, and to make them blessed; which to enter upon, our Bodies must drop from us, our Souls must be clarified from Flesh, and Flesh itself refined into Spirit; that we should make ourselves Antipodes to this, walk contrary to all, and so debase our spirits as that they are qualified for no other satisfaction, but those of dull sense and carnality.

Adam fell his great Fall by Eating, but ever since men fall further by riotous intemperate Eating. He fell from Paradise, and they from Reason; the Man sinks into Beast, and the Soul falls into very Flesh, and hath no other faculties or appetites but fleshly ones.

Such people of all others are not to be raised up by Religion; their fullness gives no place to that, but does exclude it. God did complain of this of old, Deut. xxxii. 15. Jesurun waxed fat and kicked: that we may see they want to brutish quality, who do allow themselves the appetite of Brutes; they that pamper themselves like to fed Horses, will also neigh like them and kick even him that fed them; thou art waxen fat, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God that made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his Salvation. When they came once where they did suck honey cut of the Rock, and Oil out of the flinty Rock, they could not mind the Rock of their Salvation.

Indeed this sensuality as it consumes Estates, eats Time, and all the faculties of the Mind, so it devours all Religion too, it hath not only a particular opposition to someone duty as the other Vices have, but by a direct influence it destroys the whole foundation of Virtue and obedience to God; I mean subordination of the lower appetite to Reason and Religion, which it renverses quite, and breeds an universal cachexy of the Soul as well as Body.

For ever since Adam did eat of the forbidden Fruit, the carnal mind we know is neither subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be, as S. Paul says, Rom viii. 7. because God's Commands are restraints upon those things which Flesh desires eagerly. Now therefore while that Mind is unsubdued, it must needs lust against the Spirit for those things that are forbidden, nor endure to be limited; which he that feeds it, is so far from working towards, that he does give it still more provocation and more power, and makes the Flesh more absolute; for it is clear that Plenty does increase all its desires and their unruliness; it ministers both vigor to it by which it is enabled to fulfill its lusts, and it ministers aptness and incitation also, both by custom of satisfaction, and by adding heat which makes it more prone to rebel, and more impossible to be kept under. The progress of this is apparent in the Scripture, Exod. xxxii, 6. The People sat down to Eat and Drink and rose up to Play: Lusum non denotasset nisi impudicum; he means, to play the wantons. But Jeremy is plainer, *Chap. v. 7, 8. How shall I pardon thee for this? thy Children have forsaken me, when I had fed them to the full, they then committed Adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in Harlots houses: Nor stays it there, but does increase as well as feed to an Excess; we may discern that by the Wisemans Prayer, xxiii. Ecclesiast. 6. O Lord, Father and God of my Life, Let not the greediness of the Belly, not the lust of the Flesh, take hold of me, and give not over me thy Servant to an impudent mind, Giant-like he had called it in the Verse before; and sure the Wiseman in the Proverbs apprehended it as such, and dreaded it accordingly; as if Bellies full gorg'd were those Mountainr which the Giants cast up to storm Heaven on: He looked upon this Vice as that which would bid defiance to God, and out him, and therefore thinks it necessary to beseech the Lord not to afford him so much as would furnish Plenty, Prov. xxx. 8. Give me not Riches, feed me with food convenient for me; < in non-*

Latin alphabet › with an Allowance, with no more than is sufficient for me, lest I be full and deny thee, and say who is the Lord. It seems such persons know no other God besides their Belly; nor is it any wonder if a Soul made Flesh cannot well apprehend a Deity that is a Spirit, or believe it, but thinks all Notions of such beings to be contradiction, when once by the suffusions of Carnality all the impressions of a Spirit are wrought out of itself: And truly this is the most natural and certain way to become Atheists.

Whether this time that hath been almost always set aside for strict Severities, and to work out Repentance (and if it be not so intended now, I know not what pretence did call us hither) (for though there be some relaxation of the severer Dyet of this time, sure there is no indulgence of that Penitence which the strictness of this time designed) and let some men talk what they please of the Intention of their Statutes, yet these Assemblies certainly were not intended for the increase of Cattel, and advance of Fishing; these were for higher aims of Piety: Now whether we employ if so much towards this as to afflict our Souls, i. e. our appetites, and to revenge our superfluities upon ourselves, and to teach our desires to be denied: Or whether we do teach the Dyet of this season to be but a variety of Luxury, and if the Law did not command it, and so make it Pressure by giving it the inconvenience and the uneasiness of being duty and obedience; ourselves could make it be one of the changes of our Vice, only another course, a diverse service of the same Riot, and so defeat the Law by our obedience to it: Or whether we do break the Law outright, and to our superfluities add disobedience to Authority, whether we do the one or other is not for me to say. But if the Nation and we ourselves have any sins to be repented of, and we design this season for that use (as sure some season must be so employed, and why not this as well, rather indeed than any other;) if we be not of those that would be glad to see all thrown again into Confusion; glad to see a return of the same Vengeance, as indeed a return of the same sins, and the abuse of Mercies seem to call for it, while men do live as if they thought God had wrought all these Miracles merely to give them opportunity to serve their Vices or their other ends, to put them in a way to get Places, Estates, and Dignities; and by uncharitable gains, hard-hearted griping, yea by false unworthy treacherous Arts, to heap up Wealth, to raise their Families, or feed their Lusts: These, these cry out to God to renew his Commission to the Sword, to pass through all the Land again, and embowel itself in Church and State; these call for it as loud as the hatanguing Prayers of Seditious Men; and the Lord knows there are too many hands that would unsheath it, if God do not interpose to hinder, and well we have deserved he should. But if we would endeavor to engage him by Repentance, that will require the Afflicting of the Soul by some severities. Do not mistake yourselves; Repentance, as it cannot be wrought out amidst our courses, that were contradiction to return, and yet go on; so also it will not be wrought out amidst the Comforts as we call the jollities, of life.

Tertullian is very pleasant with those who did dislike that in their Penitencies, they were by the Church prescribed to put off Mirth and put on Sackcloth, and take Ashes for Bread; Come, says he, reach that Bodkin there to braid my Hair, and help me now to practice all those Arts that are in Mode to attire it; give me the washes of that Glass, the blushes of that Paper, the foils which that Box hath to beautify and dress my Cheeks; come and set out and dress my Table too, let me have Fowl with costly forced and not a natural Fat; or let me have cramb'd Fish, and cram my Dishes also; get me cheerful Wine too: and if any one ask why I do thus indulge myself? Why I will tell him, I have sinned against my God, and am in danger of Perdition, and therefore I am in great trouble; I macerate (do you not see the signs of it?) and excruciate myself, I take these fearful careful ways that I may reconcile God to me whom I have offended.

Alas, to humble ones self thus in fullness, and to afflict the Soul in cheerful plenties, is such a thing as none but he that sinks under the surfeit of those Plenties understands. I am sure the Lord, when he required his People to repent, required them then to discipline, and use severities upon themselves; they were to fast or die: God took the execution, for whatsoever Soul it be that shall not be Afflicted that same day shall be cut off from among his People, Levite. xxiii. 29. Even cut off by God himself.

And I do verily persuade myself, that one great cause, why men that have sometimes thought to reform their lives, and do resolve against their Courses, yet repent of their Repentance, their resolutions untwist, and become frail as threads of Cobweb, the first assault of a temptation does break through them, is, they do not use mortifications, to work their aversations high and strong against their sins, and fix their resolutions. The universal sense of the whole Primitive Church gives me confidence in this persuasion, who for that very reason in their penitential Excommunications did inflict such severities, as 'tis almost incredible that Christians would submit to; yet they begged to be censured into; and those had S. Paul for their precedent. But now Repentance are but dislikes, little short unkindnesses at our sins, and wouldings to do better: On some moving occasion, if God's Hand or his Spirit lash, it may be Tears will gush out of the Wound, and we in angry sadness do intent against our Vices; but when that fit is over, and the Flesh by indulgences prepared to make or answer a temptation, we fall again, and then it may be shake the head and curse the sin; but yet again commit it, if the invitation be fair: And then are very sorry, account ourselves unhappy, who lie under such a violent infirmity, but act it still. Now if we consider how it comes to pass that we go round like men enchanted, in a Circle of Repenting and of Sinning, we shall find it is for want of Discipline upon ourselves; for had we strove to make our humiliations more low and full of pungent sorrow, the Soul would start and fly at the first glance of that which cost it so much anguish; but who would fear to act that sin which puts him to so little trouble to repent of? as a sad thought, a sigh, a wish, and a loose purpose, thin intentions, and that's all.

Do not complain of the Infirmity of the Flesh for this, and say thou wouldst live Spiritually, but the frailty of thy sensual part betrays thee; its stings and incitations make thee start from duty, and goad and force thee into actions which otherwise thou neither shouldst or wouldst commit. 'Tis thou thyself that arm'st thy Flesh with all its stings; thou givest it strengths, whereby it does subdue the Spirit; thou waterest thy desires with Wines; thou feedest them with strong meat and teachest them to crave; thou cocker'st them with thy indulgence, and thou dost treat Temptations to sin, dost invite wickedness, and nourish the occasions of Ruin; and then it is no wonder if thy resolutions be not strong enough, there is no way but by Austerities to mortify all inclinations that stir against the Spirit, and by denying satisfactions to thy Appetite, to calm and moderate thy affections to everything below, and then Temptations will have neither Aid nor Avenue.

But Secondly, You shall Afflict your Souls, cannot be meant only that ye shall Afflict your Bodies; the Spirit also must be troubled, and we must rent the Heart as well as Garments; that is indeed a Sacrifice fit for a Propitiation day, for it is such a one as God will not despise, Psal. li. 17. and without which all others are but vain Oblations.

God may call fasting the Afflicting of the Soul, because it is the most appropriate and natural means to work it; but when he calls it so he does intend it should produce it. Austerities are humilificandi hominis disciplina, as Tertul. says, Humiliation Discipline; but yet they have not always that effect. The Pharisee that fasted twice a week did not mortify at all, but his Humiliation made him lofty, his emptiness filled him with wind, and puffed him up, and the Publican was more justified than he. And late experiences have taught us, that Fasting does not always humble, when it did gape for Sovereignty, and did afflict then into Power only, when there attended it a sacra fames, an hunger after Holy things, and such as all the relicts of old Sacrilege could not allay, but it devoured Church and State, and yet crav'd still: And the throat of these fasting men was an open Sepulcher indeed; open to bury, and that could no more be satisfied than the Grave.

But 'tis not only these demure impieties, and those that are devout in wickedness, and act it in Religion and the Fear of God, I have to speak against:

But in the general, If Fasting do not humble, and those severities that wear the Flesh break not the heart too and make it contrite, then they are lost upon us, and do not profit us. All these strictnesses of bodily and outward exercise, as S. Paul calls it, are acts of discipline prescribed to make the Sorrows of Repentance more severe and operative, and so to be the Correctives of the distempers of the Soul, to quell the risings of the Appetite and Passions, and bring the sensual part of us under obedience to Reason and Religion; to make all calm and even in us, and put us in the frame of Men and Christians, of Rational and Pious Creatures. And if they do not work this in us, if the Soul do not meet in the performances, they are not acceptable in themselves at all; These are only the mint anise and cummin of our Pieties; and as Origen says, the condimenta actuum the sauces of Religion, not the main standing parts of it, which he therefore that offers solitary gives God a Sacrifice of Sallads, and thinks that will be a Sin-Offering. They do mistake themselves who cherish any hope from having spent a day, or Lent of abstinence; if the Excesses of their Vices be not made over, and evacuated by it; if they continue still full gorg'd with their iniquity; or who think all is well, they have atton'd by having bowed down the head like a bulrush; if the Soul were not also humbled in them; for as S. Paul does say, I may give all my goods to feed the poor, yet have no Charity, and I may give my body to be burnt, yet in those Martyr-fires there may be no heats of Love to God, and then all these profit me nothing, 1 Cor. xiii. 3. So I may chasten myself too, and yet yet receive correction or be discipline'd, and then God's punishments are still due to me.

That Church indeed which hath found out the easy expiation of Indulgences, that hath the Treasure of Christ's merits and all the supererogations of the Saints at her dispose, and by Commission can issue them at pleasure out, and apply those merits to men's uses not by Sacraments, but by a Bull or Brief, and not require Gospel conditions of Faith and Repentance in the Persons that receive them, but visiting a Church in Rome, ascending the steps in such a Chapel in the Lateran on such a day, shall give a plenary remission from sin and punishment; the saying of such a Prayer over daily shall do it for fourscore thousand years (could they but make a Lease for men to live and sin out the indulgence too, that would get them good store of Chapmen) that Church I say, may give encouragement to hope that God may be compounded with at easy rates; that for a Surfeit I may give a Meal and God will pardon it, and let me have Wine too into the bargain (for they allow afflicting of our Souls in Wine) that some weeks change of Dyet may go for a change of Life, for indeed these come up somewhat nearer the just value than some of their Prices. But though there be all the reason in the World they should let men out of Purgatory on what condition they please, when themselves only put them in, and make the breath of a few Pater noster's quite blow out those flames which burn nowhere but in their Doctrines: Yet when without any commission from Christ they make Attrition able to secure men from Hell, and an Indulgence able to release them out of Purgatory; when they make new conditions of Pardon, that is new Gospel, new ways of application of Christ's Merits, and though our Savior God when he found in his heart to die for us, yet in the Agonies of his Compassion could not find in his heart to give us easier terms of Life than such as do require Contrition, Humiliation, and Amendment, which they commute so cheaply with his Vicar: We justly stand astonished at such usurpation on Christ's Blood and Merits, that does assign them at these rates.

I make no question but easy expiations get them many Converts. Rome from its first foundation grew from being an Asylum to the dissolute; but they that go away upon such hopes, 'tis to be feared that easiness betrays them into sins from which those Expiations cannot rescue them, and at once makes them Proselytes to Rome and Hell. Nor are our trusts much more secure, if we rely upon our opus operatum, too, our little outward strictnesses, unless the Soul be engaged, and except there be inward life of Religion, all those will not avail: If I deny myself my meals, and give myself my sins, that is so far from expiation that it aggravates: I am an argument against myself that my crimes are incorrigible, when I will have them though I cut off the Instruments and fomenters of them, and though I meddle not with the Temptation, yet I seize the sin.

What S. Austin does say of Alms, In meliùs vita mutanda, & per eleemosynas de peccatis praeteritis propitiandus est Deus; non ad hoc emendus quodammodo ut semper liceat impune peccare. This is applicable to these performances also, our lives must be Reformed, and so on that Repentance and these strictnesses God will be reconciled, and our offenses done away; but he will not be brib'd by these to let us alone in them; he is not gratified by such performances so as to wink at Vices for their sakes, and suffer us in our Rebellions upon such compositions as these; take a Reward to spare the Guilt: Nor is he such a soft and easy God as to take them for payment of that infinite Debt we owe; that which he bought off with the Blood of God shall not be ours at such unworthy prices. The Prophet Micah seeking for a Present to appease him with, rejects all the Jewish rites though God prescribed them, as insufficient; and in them all things of the like external kind. *Mic. vi. 6, 7. Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and How myself before the most high God? shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with Calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of Rams, or with ten thousand Rivers of Oil? shall I give my first-born for my Transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? If I do offer up whole Hecatombs to God, will that atone for having offered up too plentifully to my Genius? Or if I do remove my Riots from my Table to the Altar, and change my few extravagant Dishes into whole Herds of thousand Sacrifices, shall I by doing so remove the guilt too of my Luxuries? If I give God ten thousand Rivers for my overflowing Cups, will the Intemperance be washed away in those? Or shall I think to expiate an Adultery with a Child? and for that momentary and unclean delight give up the lovely and first issue of my lawful Bed? And who will be content to be his own Priest in such manner? to pay such Sacrifices for sins? But yet that will not do, as it cost more to Redeem Souls, which not Rivers of Oil can cleanse, but streams must flow out of the Heart of Christ to do it; nor the fruit of Mans body make a satisfaction for, but the eternally begotten Son of the Divinity, and none but the first born of God alone, for thus expiation of sins was wrought: Even so to make that expiation mine, besides reliance on it, I must transcribe the Copy of the Sufferings of that Son, transplant the Garden of Gethsemane into my breast. If his Soul be sorrowful even unto Death, my Soul must be afflicted too; Humiliations must prostrate me upon my face to deprecate that Fire and Brimstone, burning Tempest that is the portion of the Sinners Cup, saith David: O my Father let this Cup pass from me! The lustful Fevers of my blood must excern themselves in cold sweat of fear and grief, in Agonies of Penitence; and my excessive draughts not only make me to cry out I thirst, but give me Vinegar and Gall to drink; sorrow as bitter as my riotous egestions have been; my Oaths that have struck through the Name of God, must pierce my Soul with grief as pungent as his Thorns and Nails. In a word, I must so afflict my Soul as to crucify the body of sin, and nail it to his Cross. And this is that which in its own proportion was required of the Jews this Day here in the Text, to the work of which Day how the Afflicting of the Soul in both the given senses does contribute, was my Second and the next Enquiry.*

Secondly, What this Day was the Verse before the Text informs us, it was their Day of Expiation or Atonement. Now that the Jews esteem Fasting and Humiliation expiatory Sacrifices, appears from a Form of Prayer which even yet they use on such a day where he that fasted says, O Lord the Governor of all the World, I have now finished my Fast before thee, thou knowest that when we had a Temple standing, the man that sinned was bound to expiate it by a Sacrifice, the Blood of which was poured out, and the Altar consumed the Fat to make amends for his offense; but now by reason of our many wickednesses, we have neither a Temple, Altar, or Priest to make Atonement for us; I beseech thee therefore O Lord my God the God of my Fathers, to accept of that little portion of my own Flesh and Blood which this days Fasting hath torn from me, in lieu of a Sin-offering, and be thou reconciled unto me for thy mercies sake. Thus when he cannot give a Lamb for his Transgression, he gives some of himself, he offers Hunger for Shewbread, and Thirst for a Drink-offering, he consecrates a Meal instead of a Beast, and sheds a sower fasting sigh for Incense; and this he hopes God will accept as Sacrifice. And truly the Text says no day of Expiation could be kept without it. Nor does the Scripture want great instances of its effect towards Atonement of God's wrath: How when Judgment was given on a Nation or Person, and Execution going out against them, yet this reversed the Sentence; Ahab is a great proof of this, 1 King. xxi. 27. And it came to pass when Ahab heard those words, that he rent his Clothes, and put Sackcloth upon his flesh, and Fasted, and lay in Sackcloth and went softly: And the word of the Lord came unto Elijah the Tishbite saying, Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? Because he humbleth himself before me I will not bring the evil in his days. On Fasting-day secured a Life; the weaknesses it brought upon the body, upheld it against all God's threats, Vengeance pronounced and coming out against him falls to ground if Ahab humble and afflict his Soul. God's stretch'd out Arm will not strike Sackcloth, nor wound through Fasting Garments: One fit of it removes his Judgments a whole Age; and had it been sincere and persevering, how had it wiped them out to everlastingness?

Nineveh is another instance of the practice and success of this even among the Heathens.

Nor should it seem to have less Efficacy among Christians: The Primitive Fathers call these severities Satisfaction for sin, and Compensations, the Price with which they are bought off, the things that cover them, and blot them out, and which Propitiate and appease God for them; not in their sense who force up these Expressions to a strange height of meaning; and yet have quite beat down the Practice as to the public wholesome use of them out of the Church. But though these sayings assign not the Power and just Efficacy of that discipline in itself, yet they do the acceptance and effect of it by virtue of Christ's Satisfaction: A Fainting Body cannot bear indeed the weight of our iniquities, nor will lowest prostrations in the dust bury them in the dust, or Tears alone blot out our Guilt; but Christ having done that which is effectual to all this, and requiring no more of thee to make that thine (as he does everywhere most solemnly avow) but faithful humbling of thyself in an afflictive sorrow for what's past, and so to mortify as to work out Repentance; the doing this is doing what he does require, and consequently will accept: These satisfy the Command, and therefore God, though not by a condignity of performance, yet as Conditions which his Covenant of Grace hath set us, which when they are fulfilled then God is satisfied, thy sins are expiated, and thou art pardoned: And so in this lower sense these are thy Satisfactions with which God is well pleased.

And thus these self Afflictions of the Sinner supply God's Indignation and divert it; They leave no place nor business for it, and by these short severities upon himself he does make void, he does expunge the Sentence of eternal Torments, saith Tertullian: As thou becomest severe against thyself, so will the Lord abate of his severities, and he will spare, and he will pity thee in that he sees thou wilt not spare thyself. How can he choose but be appeased towards thee when he shall see thee executing his Sentence even upon thy own self? and punishing his Enemies although they be thy Members? so that by this means thou dost censure thyself into God's Absolutions, afflict thyself into his Pardons, and dost condemn thyself into eternal Life.

Our Church says the same thing; That in the Primitive Church there was a Godly Discipline; that at the beginning of Lent such Persons as were notorious Sinners, were put to open Penance, and punished in this World, that their Souls might be saved in the Day of the Lord; and she does wish (if her wishes be of any force and value when her Orders and Constitutions are not) that Discipline could be restored. But this I shall not press; if all those whom the Primitive Church Condemned, or S. Paul sentenced were so used, if every Schismatic that lies tearing himself and others off from the Lord's Body were rejected, and if the Fornicator that joins himself to his unclean Accomplice were disjoined from Christ, and not suffered to make his members be the members of an Harlot; if every scandalous debauching Offender that lies corrupting Christ's Body, spreading Contagion, thrusting the Gangreen forward, were cut off, and these and all the rest delivered up to Satan, alas what part would Christ have left of his own Body? Sed illos defendit numerus junctaeque umbone phalanges, and that I fear too in more senses than the Poet means. Therefore I shall not urge the Churches Wish, but only see whether the Statute in the Text says anything to this, and whether the forever do reach us: Which is my Third and last Enquiry.

Thirdly, Divers of the Jews Rites are said to be, and be prescribed forever, although those very Rites and the whole economy of their Covenant were to be changed and cease; among other Reasons, as the Fathers say, because they foreshadow and point at things in the new Covenant, which were to last till Covenants and Rites shall be no more, and so their meaning and signification was to be forever.

Now truly that their Expiation Performances, those which I am upon, did so, the whole Epistle to the Hebrews is employed to prove; the Margin of your Bibles in this Chapter so refer you to the places, that I shall not need to make it out. Christ did fulfill the Temple and the Altar part, yea and the refuse outcast part of the Atonement satisfied the Religion and the contempt of that days Offices, He was the whole true Expiation.

Now does this Expiation as theirs did, require afflicting of the Soul in its attendance, or was that but a Ceremony of their Rite? and though a Jew must mourn and Fast to see his sin killing a Beast, and when he does behold his wickedness eating up a Goat for a Sin-offering, he must deny himself his daily bread, and suffer thirst if his Iniquities drink but the blood of Bullocks; yet when we behold ours embrew themselves in the Blood of the Son of God, not only lay hands and Confessions on his Head, but drive Thorns into it, make him cry out, almost despair and Die; we need not be concerned so much as to do ought of that either in order to the better Celebration of that Expiation, or on the very day of it.

Indeed if we consider most men's practices, it would appear most probable that if we were to expiate our sins as the Jews did by sacrificing of our Flocks not of our Jesus, those satisfactions would more afflict our Souls, and more restrain our Vices than that which was made for us by the Death of Christ, and how can this be rectified, unless by some severities upon ourselves, we give ourselves a piercing sense of what our sin deserves, and grateful apprehensions of what our Surety suffered for us? When in sad private earnest I have thought fit to Afflict my Soul with some austere mortifications, and when my fainting Spirits are scarce able to sustain my Body that sinks under the load of itself, then I may have some tender apprehensions of that weight that sunk the Son of God, and 'twas my weight that he fell under. But he that cannot think fit to revenge a year of follies and of Vices with a few weeks severer life, sure thinks his Savior suffered much in vain; quorsum perditio haec? why must the Blood of God be paid for sin, when I cannot afford a little self-denial for it? Why such great Agonies of the Holy Jesus, when I cannot find in my heart to bear a little strictness for it?

But I could easily deduce (were I not to suppose it done before) that sure as if the Church had thought a Statute had annexed these two forever, they have been join'd from the beginnings of our Christianity; it was the Fast that did attend our Savior's sufferings that in part caused the Contest about Easter, which Polycarp S. John's Disciple managed; and then there was a Fast so soon: and he that tells us this, Irenaeus, Scholar to that Polycarp, says some observed it many days, some forty days also, if we can take the Antient Ruffinus's authority but for a Comma. And if the Antient Fathers do expound aright, Christ himself thought that men were interested so much in his Death, that they would Fast by reason of it; When the Bridegroom is taken from them, then shall they Fast in those days: Upon which words they say the Season was determined to this Duty by the Gospel.

But they may say so, who knew how to persuade men to take up restraints of strictest discipline and of severest Piety. But we cannot engage them into Order or from Scandal; they made them fast, we cannot make them temperate. Blessed Savior! what kind of Christians didst thou hope for thy Disciples, of whom thou werit so confident they would so concern themselves in thy Passion as to Fast because of it? when in our times Christians will not be kept from their Excesses by it? not in those days of Fasting which thy Primitive followers did Celebrate with abstinencies, that did almost mortify indeed and slay the Body of Flesh as well as Sin, and we in imitation of them, in answer of thy confidences, will not abate a Meal, nor an intemperance, will eat and Riot too, and make a Lent of Bacchanals: Thus we prepare load for thy Day of Passion, sin on to add weight to thy Cross, and yet we ourselves will not be humbled under them. It is in vain to tell men thou expectest they should mortify, that it will spirit their Repentance, for they will have no kind of Penitence for sin, but such as will let them return to sin again, suffer no discipline with which their Vices too cannot consist, for they can scarce live if they make not themselves cheerful with them, even in this time of Sadness, and in sight of the Memorial of thy sufferings for them.

Indeed when I consider how this Season is hodg'd in from Vice by all God's Indignation, threatened at first, suffered at last, pronounced in Commination, executed in Passion: Ashwednesday gave us all God's Curses against Sinners, all which Good Friday shows inflicted on our Savior. Thus we began, Cursed are the Vnmerciful, the Fornicators, and Adulterers, the Covetous persons, Worshippers of Images, Slanderers, Drunkards and Extortioners; and we shall see the Son of God made this Curse for them; yea we ourselves said Amen to all, as testifying that that Curse is due to all. When I consider this I say, I cannot choose but be astonished to behold how men can break through all God's Curses and their own to get at Vice, first seal God's Maledictions, then provoke and incur them instantly, as if they loved and would commit a Rape upon Perdition; as if because men have so long in Oaths begged God to damn them, and he hath not done it yet, they would now do it in their Prayers too; make their Devotions as well as Imprecations consign them to the wrath of God. He that does love cursing thus in the Passive sense, surely as David says, it shall come unto him, it shall be unto him as the Garment that covereth him, it shall enter into his bowels like Water, and like Oil into his Bones, Psal. Cix. 17, 18, 19. And truly amongst those things which we did Curse, there are that will fulfill all that most literally; the Riots of thy gaudy bravery that make thee gripe, extort, spend thy own Wealth and other men's, undo thyself and Creditors, be sordid and in Debt, merely to furnish trappings to dress thyself for others eyes and, may be, sins; these bring a Curse to cover thee as does thy Garment, yea and they gird it to thee. The draughts of thy Intemperance carry the malediction down into the Bowels like Water, yea like the Wine into the very Spirits: There is another of them too that will convey the Curse like Oil into the Bones, till it eat out the marrow, and leave nothing but itself to dwell within them, yea till it putrefie the Bones, till it prevent the Grave and Judgment too, while the living Sinner invades the rottenness of the one, and torments of the other; and then the Lents and abstinencies that the sin prescribes shall be observed exactly, only to qualify them for more sin and condemnation, may be at the best but to recover them from what it hath inflicted; when •et alas! they are too soft and tender, the Lord knows, to endure any •rities to work out their Repentance and Atonement: and yet sure •se the Sinner does go through have nothing to commend them which these others do not much more abound with. If those are not grievous to thee because they are so wholesome, and though it be a miserable thing to go through all their painful squalid methods, yet, how disgustful soever, by the benefit of their Cure they excuse their offensiveness, and ingratiate the present injury they do the Flesh, by the succeeding health they help thee to, and by the Death they do secure thee from: Why sure (to omit, that the other have all these advantages, none have so calm and so established health as the abstemious and continent, and their mind is still serene, their temper never clouded, but besides this) the Christians bitter Potions do purge away that sickness that would end in Death eternal, his fastings starve that worm that otherwise would gnaw the Soul immortally; his weepings quench the everlasting burnings, yea there is cheerful Pleasure in the midst of these severities, when God breaks in in Comforts into them: The Glory of the Lord appears in that Cloud too that is upon the penitent sad heart; when he is drench'd in tears the Holy Ghost the Comforter does move upon those waters, and breaths Life and Salvation into them; and he who is the Unction pours Oil into those wounds of the Spirit; and we are never nearer Heaven than when we are thus prostrate in the lowest dust, and when our Belly cleaveth unto the ground in humble penitence, then we are at the very Throne of Grace: And this our light afflicting of the Soul which is but for a moment, does work for us a far more exceeding weight of Glory. To which, &c.

The Fourth SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. October. 12. 1662.

JOHN XV. 14.

Ye are my Friends, if ye do whatsoever I Command you.

THE words are a conditional Assertion of Christ's concerning his Apostles, and in them all Christians: And they do easily divide themselves into two parts. The First is a positive part, wherein there is a state of great and Blessed advantage, which they are declared to be in present possession of: In these words, Ye are my Friends.

In which there are two things that make up that advantage, 1. A Relation, 2. The Person related to. Friends, and My Friends. The Second is a Conditional part, wherein there are the terms, upon which that Possession is made over, and which preserve the Right and Title to them: in these words, If ye do whatsoever I command you: in which there are two things required as Conditions.

I. Obedience, If ye do what I command you.

II. That Obedience Universal; If ye do whatsoever I command you.

The first thing that offers itself to our consideration, is the Relation, Friends.

It is a known common-place Truth, that a Friend is the most useful thing that is in whatsoever state we are: It is the Soul of life, and of content. If I be in prosperity: We know abundance not enjoyed, is but like Jewels in the Cabinet, useless while they are there: It is indeed nothing but the opinion of Prosperity. But 'tis not possible to enjoy abundance otherwise than by communicating it: a man possesseth plenty only in his Friends, and hath fruition of it merely by bestowing it. If I be in adversity; to have a person whom I may intrust a trouble to, whose bosom is as open and as faithful to me, as 'tis to his own thoughts, to which I may commit a swelling secret; this is in a good measure to unlade, and to pour out my sorrow from me; thus I divide my grievances which would be insupportable, if I did not disburthen myself of some part of them: Now there is no bosom so safe as that where friendship lodges; take God's Opinion in the case, Deut. xiii. 6. If thy Brother the Son of thy Mother, or thy Son, or thy Daughter, or the Wife of thy bosom, or thy Friend that is as thine own Soul. This is the highest step in the Gradation; And there is all the reason in the World; for though Parent and Child are as near one to other as anything can be to part of itself; Husband and Wife are but two different names of the same one, yet these may become bitter and unkind: A Parent may grow cross, or a Child refractory, a Mother may be like the Ostrich in the Wilderness, throw off her bowels with her burden; and an ungracious Son is constant pangs and travail to his Mother, his whole life gives her after-throws which are most deadly: Dislikes also may rest within the Marriage-Bed, and lay their heads upon two wedded Pillows; but none of these unkindnesses can untie the Relation; that ends not where the bitterness begins, he is a Parent still though froward, and a Child though stubborn; but a true Friend can be nothing but kind; it does include a dearness in its essence, which is so inseparable from it, that they begin and end together: A man may be an Husband without loving, but cannot be a lover, that is a Friend, without loving.

And sure to have no one Friend in this Life, no one that is concerned in any of my interests or me myself, none that hath any cares or so much as good wishes for me, is a state of a most uncomfortable prospect. The Plague that keeps Friends at a distance from me while I live out of the sphere of my infection, and after gives me Death, hath yet less of Malignity than this; that leaves me the Compassions, the Prayers, all the solitary Comforts, all indeed but the outward entertainments of my Friends; that, though it shut the Door against all company, yet, puts a Lord have Mercy on the Door: But this I now described hath none of that, hath no good wishes, nothing else but hate, is worse than a perpetual Pestilence.

Yet neither is this state so comfortless, in respect of this life, as not to have a Friend in the concernments of the Life to come; none that hath so much kindness for my Soul as every man hath for his Enemies Beast, which if he see fallen in a Ditch he will at least give notice that it may be helped out thence: No one, that when a sin, like to that Falling sickness in the Gospel (and it is such indeed without a Parable) is casting me into the water, quenching my parts, my Reason, and the Immortal spark within me; or throwing me into the Fire, raising Lascivious heats within, which after will break out into Hell fires; none yet that will stretch out his hand to catch me, or to pull me out: None that does care to see me perish to Eternity, or that values my Soul, which yet did cost the Blood of God, at a word speaking: This is to be like Dives in the Flames, to whom they would not lend the help of the tip of a finger, or give the kindness of a drop of Water: I am as it were on the other side the Gulf already, Here is the use of Friendship, the only noble one, that's worthy of that blessed quality: When I have one that will be an assistant Conscience to me, who, when that within me sleeps, or is benumbed, will watch over my actions; will testify them to my Face, will be as faithful to me as the Conscience should be, hold a Glass to my Soul, show me the stains and the proud tumours, the foul Ulcers that are there, and then will fret, and rub, or prick, lance, and corrode, to cure those Tumours, and do off those spots, such an one is a familiar Angel Guardian, is truly of that blessed Heavenly rank, and only less than the Friend in the Text, the Person related to, and my next Part.

My Friends. There are three things from which men use to take the measures of a Friend.

First, From the good things he bestows on them: He that thinks to keep friendship alive only with Air, that gives good words, but parts with nothing, that entertains only with Garbs and Civilities, is but the pageant of a Friend: They that own having but one Soul, and seem to clasp as if they would have but one Body too, cannot keep such distinct and separate proprieties in other little things, as not to have communication one from the other. And,

Secondly, The friendship of these benefits is rated by the measures of our need of them. When Midas was ready to die for hunger, his God was kinder to him in a little bread, than in making all that he touched turn into Gold: Great things engage but little where there is but little use of them: And all these,

Thirdly, Are endeared by the Affection they are given with. Good turns done with design, what need soever I have of them, are hire, and not friendship; it is the kindness only that obligeth, the gift without the love does but upbraid and scorn my want.

Now to measure the Friend here in the Text, by these, were an impossible undertaking, whose Friendship did exceed all bounds and measures. I shall do no more towards it but read the words before my Text, which were the occasion of it, Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his Friends, and then it follows, Ye are my Friends. The token therefore of his Friendship, the gift he gave them was his life, rather that was the least he gave: He gave his glory first, that so he might be qualified to give his life, for 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Phil. ii. 7. He lessened himself from the condition of being Lord of all, into that of a Servant, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Heb. ii. 9. being diminished, made lower, meaner than his Creatures for the suffering of Death. Now with the price of such Divine essential glory to buy only a life, rather only a possibility of Death, that after he might give that life for us, and with his Death purchase us an immortal life, is such a gift as no Romance of friendship ever fancied or did aim at: We may have heard of two Companions that would die for one another, that never quarrelled in their lives, but for this, who should suffer first to save the other, and strave only for Execution: But for a Person of the Trinity to leave his Heaven to come down to us; to dwell with Agonies that he might be at one with us: and be tied to the Cross, that he might be united to us; this is a friendship fit for Ecstasies of apprehension. Of all the things that court thy kindness here below, that spread snares, and lay baits for thy friendship, if any bid so fair, so temptingly, if any will give such a price, in God's name let it have thy love, I shall not blame him that engageth his Affection there: But sure Heaven cannot give a greater gift than this; for what can God give greater than himself? Yea I may say God could not give so much, for he must be Man too, to give his life, and this, saith he, he gave for his Friends, even in our stead, who must have perished else eternally, which intimates the second thing, the need we had of this.

A need great as the gift, necessity invincible, that could break into Heaven, rifle the Trinity to serve itself, throw Death into those Regions of Immortality, and which would not be satisfied but with the Blood of God.

And now is not the kindness and the condescension of Friendship in his expressions too, when he saith, greater love than this hath no man: which was the third Endearment.

There never were such wounds of Love as those that tore this Heart; never such meltings of Affection as dissolved this Lover into sweats of Blood. There was no motive to all this, but his mere love: For all this he designed to us before we were, and therefore sure before we were deserving: And O our God! thou that from all Eternity didst lay Contrivances to give thy Life for us, so to redeem, and then to glorify us; what were we then that thou shouldst do this for us? what were we then when we were not? and yet that thou from the Abyss of Everlastingness, shouldst think thoughts of such kindness to us, and such blessedness for us, who then were not, and deserved nothing; and who since we were, have deserved nothing but Damnation.

And as there was no other motive to all this design but love, so neither was there anything but love in the fulfilling. Look on your Savior in the Garden, and upon Mount Calvary, and you shall find him there in as great Agonies of Affection as Torment, and hanging down his head upon the Cross with languishments of kindness more than weakness. His Arms stretched out and rack'd, as if on purpose to the posture of receiving you to his embraces, and his side opened not only to shed Blood for you, but to make you a passage to his very Heart. Look on him offering up his Tears, his Prayers, and his Soul for Sin, and in the midst of all, projecting happiness to you, as it were praying, O my Father, here I charge myself with all the guilt of those my Friends, I thy only Son God, one with thee, am content to suffer Torments that they all may be acquitted; Here I lay down my Life that they may have eternal Life, let me be Crucified, so they be Glorified. Which was the purchase and the gift of this his Passion to all his Friends, even to those that do what he Commands; which is the first Condition that entitles to his friendship, and my next Part.

Ye are my Friends if ye do what I command you.

I shall not urge, that Great men upon Earth will not take any to their Friendship but upon these terms; nor will I plead the reasonableness of this in Christ, there being no cause why he should be a Friend to any that will daily disoblige him and dishonor him: Nor will I press the whole Economy of Scripture, which says, all the advantages Christ ever gave or meant us, and all the acts of Friendship that he ever did for us were with this design. He gave his grace that brings salvation to save us into an estate of sober Virtue. Tit. ii. ver. 11, 12. He gave himself also to Ransom us from our own evil doings, and to redeem us into his Obedience, Tit. ii. ver. 14. Without which no dependence on him will avail. Matth. vii. 21. He will own no acquaintance with, nor services from them who have friendship with sin; though they have cast out Devils in his Name, if they retain their Vices; though they do Miracles, if they do wickedly, he will bid them depart, profess he never knew them, ver. 22, 23. He will not let such have a bare relation to his Name, nor have the friendship of a Title, 2 Tim. ii. 19. All his Rewards also that he will give are promised to none other, but them that do what he commands, Apoc. xxii. 14. that is, do Evangelically, heartily and faithfully endeavor it, and do this with all diligence expressed by words, that import all strife imaginable, as Running, Wrestling, Fighting, Warring. And persevere also by patient continuance in well-doing, Rom. ii. 7. and he hath nothing else but Vengeance for all others, 2 Thes. i. 8. and we have neither Christ, nor Gospel, nor Religion, but with these terms.

But I shall wave all this, and bound myself within the present words, Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his Life for his Friends. Ye are my Friends if ye do what I command you. When Christ is boasting of his love, making comparisons, and vying friendships with mankind, nay more, contriving heights and depths of Mercy, such as Man hath no comprehension, nor fathom for; when he was preparing to do an act of compassion almost equal to his Divinity, when he had resolutions of so much kindness as to give his life that he might show kindness. Yet could he not then find in his heart to offer or declare one jot of kindness to the men that will not do what he commands, but in the midst of such Agonies of compassion, he thought of nothing but infinite indignation and eternal vengeance to the disobedient. I have but now given my Body and my Blood even to the Traitor Judas, to one who is a Devil: I am going to give my life even for my Enemies, for the World: But I will give no love to any, have no friendship with any but the virtuous: no, though they be my own Disciples, ye are my Friends, ye my Companions and Apostles are my Friends, only on this condition, if ye do what I command you.

And then is it not matter of Astonishment, to see men fancy they have a right in all Christ's Actions and Sufferings, presume upon his favor and their own happy condition, though they do nothing, or but very little towards this, and the main of their life be disobedience, as if all Christ's Commands, appointed them to do no commands, and Christianity were but a liberty from virtue? To pass by those that do nothing but Evil, that which the Devil does suggest, or their flesh dictate, and to consider the Demurer sort of Christians, that pretend a respect to Christ, and to Religion, and see what they will do.

Why sometimes you may find them troubled at their Vices and themselves; and those troubles breath out in Sighs, and in warm wishes that they could do that which Christ prescribes; to will is sometimes strongly present with them, but to perform they know not how. Alas Christ does not tell you that you are his Friends, if you wish well to him, and his Commands, but he requires that you shall do them. These are but vapors of a troubled Soul, which howsoever they may chance rise warm, catch a strong sudden heat, breath up in flashing thoughts. They are but Meteors, little shooting flames that only do catch fire and fall and die; show fair, but they warm nothing: And so these thoughts do never, heat the Heart into Devotions and holy resolutions, the fire is not strong nor does it live enough, to melt and work away the filthiness of the Soul: No, though they grow to aversations; For you may find such men, when wearied with the pursuit of their sins, hating their customs, and the engagements to the practice of them; complaining thus, I know 'tis ill, and 'tis against my heart, that I obey the motions of my passions or Lusts: The incitations of my Appetite, the usance of the World, the Obligations of Civility or mistaken honor do indeed prevail upon me, but 'tis with great reluctancy of mind that I yield to them, but I cannot avoid it. There are not few that satisfy themselves with this condition. Now sure Christ does not say, Ye cannot be my Friends except you sin against me and against your Knowledge, and your Consciences too. 'Tis strange that men should think the Heathen instance of a Witch that cried,

—Video meliora, proboque,

Deteriora sequor—

I know, and do approve of better things, but cannot choose but follow these that are the worser) strange, that this Fury that had the Devil for Familiar, should make Christ a friend; that this should be the state of Gospel Saints, and of God's favorites. 'Tis possible some therefore go yet further to good purposes towards Obedience, and have holy Intentions, but this is not sufficient neither, if to do his Commands be necessary: for to purpose and intend to do them, is not certainly to do them. Yet where are any that do aim at doing anymore? and there is none of these but does presume upon his interest in Christ, and satisfies himself and is secure.

Yet is it hard to find a ground of this their confidence, unless it rise from the unhappy use they make of God's preserving Mercies, and his kindness to them in the concernments of this life. They see without their cares, and upon very weak entreaties indeed, against all provocations both of God and danger; yet his protections secure them, although they neither mind the asking them, nor mind the walking worthy of them. The man whose Sins, not Prayers, prepare him for his Bed, he sleeps well: perhaps more soundly than he who at his Bedside throws himself on his face into God's Arms, and there bequeaths himself to the Securities of the Almighty: And he, whose Sleeps only refresh him for returns to Sin, does often live as long, as safely, and as merrily, as he that daily most Religiously does beg Protections from above. And others that afford the Lord some little homages, themselves some Prayers when their pleasures or occasions permit, God hath a care of them, and their desires flow into them, all does succeed well with them. Now they take confidence hence to conclude, these are the Tokens of God's friendship, and all his mercies will come in at the like easy rates; that such a short Petition as committed them to the refreshments of the night, and after which they wak'd into renewed strengths and pleasures, such another shall lay them down in safety, to the sleeps of that long night, that afterwards will break in happy Resurrection: For why? God will not sure fail his own mercies, but be as friendly to their Souls as he is to their Bodies.

And thus God's Preservations here, in mere defiance of our provocations, which are the arts of his longsuffering, his strivings of Compassion, merely to give us opportunities of being reconciled to him, and to invite us to be so, while we make them occasions of carelessness and security, they are so far from being pledges of his Friendship, that they have all the aggravations of afforded goodness, become Temptations and degrees of Ruin! 'Twere fine indeed it Christ's eternal preparations for his Friends, would come in to us, without care or doing anything, as an accession to our pleasures; if when we had lived many years as in a Garden, our days all flower'd with delight; we might expire into Paradise, and in soft Airs of Music breath into Hallelujah's But alas! the smooth easy way leads down the Hill, and he must strive and pant that will get up into the Mansions and the Bosom of his Savior, and whosoever will be his Friend, must do that he commands.

But is there nothing less indeed will qualify? The Scripture saith, that Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for Righteousness, and he was called the Friend of God, James ii. 23. and then, is Christ more inaccessible, and harder to be made a Friend?

Why, truly God and Christ both are so much Friends to all true Believers, that the Life of Christ was given for them; for, God so loved the World that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life, John iii. 16. Nor are there any qualities more signally peculiar to friendship, more engaging than confidence and trust, dependence and relying, embosoming myself in him: Now these are but the exercise of Faith; and 'tis most certain if we heartily endeavor to do what he commands, there is employment then for all this work of Faith, place for its applications and assurances. My Text does make this good. But when his friendship is made over on Conditions, as 'tis not only in these words, but everywhere in Scripture; (there being not one Promise absolute that does concern God's favor, justification, and eternal Life: he does not once offer Remission of sins, but to those that amend their Lives; nay, does express as if he could not give it otherwise, peradventure they will repent that I may forgive them, Jer. xxxvi. 3.) The Promises therefore being conditional, Faith must be answerable to the Promises that it does rest on and apply; and at the most, can be but an assurance that you shall be partaker of what's promised, that is to say, partaker of the favor and the life of Christ, if ye do his Commands. But then if I perform not this Condition, to trust upon his friendship which I am not qualified for; to think by Faith to receive a Pardon, which in that case I am, was never offered me; to apply to myself Promises which were never made me, for none were ever made to them that do not do: and to assure myself Christ will transgress his everlasting Covenant for my Vices sake, merely to give me leave to enjoy my sins; will do that which God may not do, forgive one that will not repent: If I believe thus against Promise, and against Decree, am confident whether Christ will or no, and will rely upon him in despite of him, if such a faith will make us friends, affronts do reconcile. This is indeed to lay violent hands on his favor, and to invade his friendship, and without Metaphor, take Heaven by force.

But sure I am, that this is not the Faith made Abraham be called the friend of God in that place of S. James, but a Faith that was perfected by doing, ver. 22. of that Chapter, a Faith that made him offer up his only Son upon the Altar, ver. 21. 'Tis true, he did in hope believe against all hope, Rom. iv. 18. So that his faith was stronger than a contradiction, but yet his resolutions of obedience seem stronger than his faith; for he did that even to the cutting of the grounds of all his faith, and hope. He trusted God would make his Promise good to him, make all the Nations of the Earth be blessed in the seed of Isaac; though Isaac had no seed, nor could have, if he should be slain: And he resolved at God's command himself to slay that Isaac, so to make him have no seed. His Faith indeed did not dispute the great impossibility; but his obedience caused it. He did not question, how can God perform with me when I have offered up my Son? I cannot look that a large Progeny should rise out of the Ashes on the Altar; nor will those Flames that devour all my Seed at once, make my seed numerous, lasting and glorious as the Stars in Heaven, which he promised me: But much less did he question, why should I obey in this? He that does his Commands, can but expect what he hath promised; but if I should do this Command and slay my Son, I make his Promise void, and destroy my own expectations: And if I disobey I can but suffer what he bids me do; my own obedience will execute all that his Indignation would threaten to my disobedience. Though Abraham had three days time and journey to the Altar, that Nature might have leisure the mean while to reason with the Precept thus, and his Affection might struggle with his Duty; yet he goes on, resolves to tear out his own Bowels, and cut off his hopes, will Sacrifice his only Son, and Sacrifice God's Promises to his Commands.

And then, he that will trust to Abraham's example of believing, yet will not follow him at all in doing, will obey no Commands; that is so far from offering up an only Son, he will not slay an only evil Custom, nor part with one out of the herd of all his vicious Habits; will not give up the satisfaction to any of his carnal, worldly, or ambitious appetites; not sacrifice a Passion or a lust to all the Obligations that God and Christ can urge him with, he hath, nor faith, nor friendship, no, nor forehead. 'Tis true indeed, he that hath Abraham's faith may well assure himself he is Christ's Friend; but 'tis only on this account, because he that believes as Abraham believed, he will not stick to do whatever Christ commands; which is that universality of obedience, that is the next condition that entitles to Christ's friendship, and my last Part.

Ye are my Friends if ye do whatsoever I Command you.

There is no quality so necessary to a Friend, or so appropriate to friendship, as sincerity. They that have but one Soul, they can have no reserves from one another: But disobedience to one Precept, is inconsistent with sincerity, that hath respect unto all the Commandments; and he that will not do whatever Christ prescribes, hath reserves of affection for some darling sin, and is false to his Savior. He is an Enemy indeed, so that there is no friendship on either side. S. Paul says so of any of one kind; the minding of the flesh, saith he, whether it be providing for the Belly, or any other of the Organs of Carnality, is desperate, incurable Rebellion: Now such a Rebel, is, we know, the worst of Enemies. S. James does say as much of any of those vicious affections that are set on the World: Whosoever will be a friend of the World, is an Enemy of God, James iv. 4. And he calls them adulteresses and Adulterers, who think to join great strict Religion to some little bylove of an Honor, or a profit of this World. Such Men are like a Wife, that not contented with the partner of her Bed, takes in another now and then, she must not count herself her Husbands Friend, though she give him the greatest share in her affections; no, she is but a bosom Enemy: And so any one Vice allowed is a paramour sin, is whoredom against Christ, and our pretended friendship to him in all other obediences, is but the kindness and the caresses of an Adulteress, the mere hypocrisy and treachery of love. If it be necessary to the gaining Christ's friendship, that thou do his Commands, 'tis necessary that thou do them all, that thou divorce thyself from thy beloved sin, as well as any other: Because his Friendship does no more require other obedience than it does that, but is as inconsistent with thy own peculiar Vice as with the rest. Indeed it is impossible that it should bear with any, they being all his murderers. If thou canst find one sin that had no hand in putting Christ to Death, one Vice that did not come into the garden, nor upon Mount Calvary, that did not help to assassin thy Savior, even take thy fill of that: But if each had a stab at him, if no one of thy Vices could have been forgiven, had not thy Jesus died for it, canst thou expect he should have kindness for his Agony, or friendship for the man that entertains his Crucifiers in his heart? If worldly cares which he calls Thorns, fill thy head with Contrivances of Wealth and Greatness, of filling Coffers, and of plating Coronets for thee, as the thorns did make him a Crown too, wouldst thou have him receive thee and these in his bosom, to gore his Heart as they did pierce his Head? If thou delight in that intemperance, which filled his deadly Cup, which Vomited Gall into it, can he delight in thee? That Cup which made him fall upon his face to deprecate, will he partake in as the pledge of mutual love? He that sunk under, could not bear this load of thine, when it was in his Cross upon his shoulders, will he bear it and thee in his Arms, when thou fallest under it? When thou wilt cast a shameful spewing on his glory too, if he own such a Friend? Thou that art so familiar with his Name, as thou werit more his Friend than any in the World, whose Oaths and imprecations, Moses says, strike through that Name, which they so often call upon, thou mayst as well think his Heart did attract the Spear that pierced it, and the Wound close upon its head with Unions of Love, as that he hath kindness for thee. If Christ may make Friendship with him, that does allow himself a sin, he may have fellowship with Belial: For him to dwell in any heart that cherisheth a Vice, were to descend to Hell again. But as far as those Regions of Darkness are from his Habitation of Glory, and the Black Spirits of that place from being any of his Guard of holy Myriads; so for is he from dwelling with, or being friend to him, that is a friend to any wickedness, to him that will not do whatever he commands.

And now if these Conditions seem hard, if any do not care to be his Friend upon these terms, they may betake themselves to others. Let such make themselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness: A Friend indeed that hath not so much of the insincerities as many great ones have: For this will furnish them with all that heart or lust can wish for, all that necessity or wantonness proposeth to itself to dress out pomp or Vice: But yet when with enjoyment the affections grow, and become so unquiet, work them so, as not to let their thoughts or actions rest, make them quicken themselves, and like the motions of all things that go downwards tending to the Earth, increase by the continuance, grow stronger, and more violent towards the end, then when they are most passionate, it fails them: And having filled their life with most unsatisfied tormenting cares, it leaves them nothing but the guilt of all: When their great Wealth shall shrink into a single sheet, no more of it be left, but a thin shroud, and all their vast Inheritances but six foot of Earth, be gone, yet the iniquity of all will stick close to them; and this false Friend, that does it Self forsake them, will neither go along, nor will let its pomp follow them, raises a cry on them as high as God's Tribunal; the cry of all the Blood, all the oppressed rights that bribery till then had stifled, the groans of all those Poor that greatness, covetousness, or extortion had groun'd or crush'd; the yellings of those Souls that were sarv'd for want of the Bread of life, which yet they paid for, and the price of it made those heaps which will that day appear against their Friends and Masters, and prove their Adversaries to eternal Death.

Let others joy in Friends that Wine does get them; such as have no qualification to endear them, but this, that they will not refuse to sin and to be sick with their Companions: Men that do only drink in their affections, as full of friendship as of liquor, and probably they do unload themselves of both at once, part with their dearness and their drink together and alike. I know not whether in be heats of mutual kindness that inflame these draughts, and the desires of them, so as if they did drink thirst; but sure I am, that these hot draughts begin the Lake of fire.

Let others please themselves in an affection that Carnality cements. These are warm friendships I confess, but Solomon will tell us whence they have their heat. Her house, saith he, doth open into Hell, and Brimstone kindles those libidinous flames. There are strait bands, fetters in those affections indeed; for the same Wiseman says, The Closets of that sinner are the Chambers of Death: That none that go unto her return again, or take hold of the paths of life; it seems she is a friend that takes most irreversible dead hold, she is not only as insatiate, but as inexorable as the Grave, and the Eternal Chains of Fate are in those her Embraces. But God keep us from making such strict Covenants with Death; from being at friendship with Hell; or in a word, that I say all at once, with any that are good Companions only in sinning. Such men having no virtue in themselves, must needs hate it in others, as being a reproach to them, and therefore they are still besieging it, using all arts and stratagems to undermine it: and having nothing else to recommend them in men's affections, but their managery of Vice, no way to Merit but by serving iniquity, they not only comply with our own evil Inclinations, that so they may be grateful, and insinuate into us, but they provoke too and inflame those tendencies that they may be more useful to us, having no other means to work their ends. And then such friends by the same reason, must be false and treacherous, and all that we declaim at, and abhor in Enemies, when that shall be the way to serve their ends; because they have no Virtue to engage them to be otherwise: And to be such, is to be constant to their own designs, their dispositions and usances. These are the Pests of all Societies, they speak and live infection, and friendship with them is to couple with the Plague. These do complete and perfect what the Devil but began in Eden: Nurse up Original sin, chase inclination into appetite and habit, suggest and raise desires, and then feed them into Constitution and Nature: In a word, are a brood of those Serpents, one of which was enough to destroy Paradise and Innocence. 'Tis true, a man would think these were our Friends indeed, that venture to Gehenna for us: Alas they are but more familiar Devils, work under Satan to bring us to Torments, and differ nothing from him, but that they draw us into them, and he inflicts them. And when sinful contents come home in Ruin, and pleasures die into Damnation; then men will understand these treacherous loves, and find such Friends are but projectours for the Devil; then they will hate them as they do their own Damnation, discerning these are but the kindnesses of Hell. Nay it is possible, I may slander that place in speaking so ill of it. Dives will let us see there are affections of a kinder and more blessed strain in Hell, Luke xvi. from the twenty seventh Verse; you find he did make truce with Torments, that he might contrive and beg only a message of Repentance for his Brethren; he did not mind at all his own dire Agonies, he minded so the reformation of his Friends. Good God! when I reflect upon these pieties of the Damn'd, together with the practices of those who have given their names in to Religion, when I see Fiends in Hell do study how to make Men virtuous, and Christians upon Earth with all their art debauch them into vice and ruin; I cannot choose but pray, Grant me such Friends as are in Hell. Rather grant us all the Friendship in the Text. But then, we must have none with any Vice. Friendship with that, engageth into Enmity with God and Christ I showed you. And to pass over all those after-retributions of Vengeance Christ hath studied for his Enemies, when he, that now courts us to be our Friend and we will make our Adversary, must be our Judge: For were there none of this, and should we look no further than this life; yet sure we of this Nation know, what it is to have God our Enemy; who for so many years lay under such inflictions, as had much of the character of his last execution; they had the Blasphemies and the Confusion, the dire Guilts, and the black Calamities, and almost the Despair and Irrecoverableness of those in Hell. And though He be at Peace with us at present, at least there is a Truce; yet I beseech you in the presence and the fear of God, to think in earnest, whether the present provocations of this Nation do not equal those that twenty years ago engaged him into Arms against us, and made him dash us so in pieces: Whether those Actions of the Clergy be reformed that made the People to abhor their Function and their Service, the Offerings and Ministers of the Lord, and made God himself spew them out. 'Twere endless to go on the profaneness, to the loose impieties and the bold Atheisms of the Laity, especially of the better sort; in short, what one degree, or state or Sex is better? Sure I am, if we are not better, we are worse beyond expression or recovery: who have resisted every method, and conquered all God's Arts of doing good upon us, been too hard for his Judgments and his Mercies both.

'Tis true, when we lay gasping under his severe Revenges, we then pretended to be humbled, beg'd to be reconciled and be at peace with him, and vowed to his Conditions, promising obedience, and aliened ourselves from our old sins, his Foes. But then, when Christ came to confirm this Amity, came dressed with all his Courtship, brought all the invitations of Love along, our Prince and our Religion, our Church and State, Righteousness and Peace, and the Beauty of Holiness, everything that might make us be an Happy and a Pious Nation, thus he did tempt and labor to engage that Friendship which we offered him and vowed to him: And we no sooner seized all this, but we break resolutions as well as duty, to get loose from him; and laden with the spoils of our defeated Savior's goodness, we join hands with his Enemies, resume our old acquaintant-sins, enrich and serve them with his Bounties, make appear that we only drew him in, to work such Miracles, but to assist our Worldliness, Ambitions and Lusts, to be our opportunities of Vice and provocation of him. And being thus affronted and refused, his Enemy prefer'd, not this God, but Barabbas, any the vilest thing for Friend, rather than Christ, must he not needs be more our Enemy than heretofore? And if he be, that question will concern us, Are we stronger than God? It should behove us not to fall out with him till we are. See how he does prepare himself for the Encounter, Wisd. v. Taking his Jealousy for Armor, putting on Justice, severe and vindicative Justice, as a Breastplate; and, his Wrath sharpening as a Sword; and, arming all the Creatures for Auxiliaries. Alas! when Omnipotence does express itself as scarcely strong enough for Execution, but Almightiness will be armed also for Vengeance, will assume Weapons, call in Aids for fury, who shall stand it? Will our Friends, think you, keep it off us, and secure us? did we consider how uneasy God accounts himself, till he begin the Storm, while he keeps off his Plagues from overrunning such a Land, we would expect them every moment, and they must come. Ah, says he, I will ease me of mine Adversaries, and avenge me of mine Enemies; and then in what condition are we, if God can have no ease but in our ruin, if he does hunger and thirst after it, go to his Vengeance as to a Feast? And if you read the 25th Chapter of Isaiah, you will find there a rich Bill of Fare, which his Revenge upon his Enemies does make; view the sixth Verse. He that enjoys his morsels, that lays out his Contrivances, and studies on his Dishes so as if he meant to cram his Soul, let him know what delight soever he finds, when he hath spoiled the Elements of their Inhabitants, to furnish his own Belly, and not content with Natures Delicacies neither, hath given them forced Fatnesses, changing the very flesh into a marrow, suppling the Bones almost into that Oil that they were made to keep; all •his delight the Lord by his expressions does seem to take in his dread Executions on his Enemies, a sinful People.

And if the vicious Friendships of the World have so much more attractive than Christ's love and favor, and the happy consequences of it, as to counterpoise all the danger of such enmity, you may join hands with them: But if His be the safer and more advantageous, then hearken to his Propositions and beseechings; for He does beg it of you: As he treated this reconciliation in his Blood, so he does in Petitions too. For saith S. Paul, We are Ambassadors for Christ, as if God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, Be you reconciled, and then be Generous towards your GOD and Savior; and having brought him as it were upon his knees, reduced him to entreaties, be friends, and condescend to him and your own Happiness. If He be for you, take no care then, who can be against you. His Friendship will secure you not only from your Enemies but from Hostility itself; for, when a man's ways please the Lord he will make even his Enemies to be at peace with him, Prov. xvi. 7. He will reconcile all but Vices. And afterwards see what a blessed throng of Friends, we shall be all initiated into, Heb. xii. 23. To an innumerable company of Angels, to the general Assembly, and Church of the First-born that are written in Heaven, to God the Judge of all, and to the Spirits of Just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant, &c. And of this blest Corona, we ourselves shall be a noble and a glorious part, inflamed all with that mutual love, that kindles Seraphims, and that streams out into an heavenly glory, filling that Region of immortal love and blessedness; and being Friends, that is, made one with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, that Trinity of Love, we shall enjoy, what we do now desire to ascribe to them, All Honor, Glory, Power, Majesty, and Dominion, for evermore.

Amen.

EZECH. XXXIII. 11.

Why will ye Dye?

THE Words are part of a Debate which God had with the sinful House of Israel, in which there are three things offer themselves to be considered.

First, The Sinners Fate and Choice: He will Die; That's his End, yea, 'tis his Resolution, he will die.

Secondly, God's inquiry for the Ground of this, he seems astonished at the Resolution; and therefore reasons with them about this their so mad choice, and questions Why will ye die? Which words are also,

Thirdly, The debate of his Affections, the reasoning of his Bowels, and a most passionate Expostulation with them on account of that their Resolution, Why will ye die? which as it is address by God directly to the House of Israel, so it would fit a Nation perverse, as that; which mutinies against Miracles and Mercies, is false to God, Religion, and their own Interests; led by a Spirit of giddiness and frenzy, unsteddy in all things but resolutions of Ruin, that would tear open their old Wounds, to let out Life, and they will die. And though the Lord be pleased to work new prodigies of mercy for us, and to say unto us in despite of all our Enemies both Foreign and Domestic, Live: The use we make of all is only to debauch the Miracles, and make God's Mercies help to fill the measure of our Judgments; live as if we would try all the ways to Ruin; and since God will thus deliver us from dangers, we would call for them some other way. But to prescribe to these is above the attempt of my endeavors: May the blessed Spirit of Wisdom and Understanding, the Spirit of Holiness and Peace, and Order, breath on their Counsels whom this is committed to. I shall bend my Discourse to the Conviction of Sinners in particular, and treat upon the words as if they had been spoke to us under the Gospel.

The first thing which my Text and God supposeth, is the Sinners Fate and Choice: He will die. Even the second Death, for it is appointed for all men once to die, and then cometh the Judgment which shall sentence him to another death that is immortal, in which he and his misery must live forever; that is, he must die everlastingly: Such is first his Fate.

That Sin and Death are of so near, so complicated a relation, as that though they were Twins, the birth and Issue of one Womb and moment, yet they are also one another's Off-spring, and beget each other, while Sin bringeth forth Death, as S. James saith, and is the Parent of Perdition, and yet the Man of Sin is the Son of Perdition, as S. Paul saith, and Iniquity is but destruction's birth, only itself derived. And that this Death and Perdition is Eternal in the most sad sense of the word there are a thousand Texts that say. This is the Message of God in the mouth and Blood of his Son, who useth all the artifice of Words affirmative, and negative, to tell us so, as if on purpose to preclude all doubt and subterfuge, calls it Eternal fire, and Eternal punishment, where their worm dieth not, their fire is not quenched, Torment forever and ever, and the like. Your Faith and certainty of which is as strong as your Christianity, and therefore by attempting any farther proof of this, to imply there is reason and necessity for doing so, were to suppose my Hearers Infidels.

But then this being granted that such is the Sinners Fate to lay down positively that it is his Choyce, and that he doth resolve for Death, is to suppose them worse than Infidels, more than irrational and brutish; Beasts cannot so desire against the possibilities of Appetite, break all the forces and instincts of Nature, as to will destruction, and choose misery. Yet that the Sinner does so is the ground of God's Expostulation here, Why will you die? David enquires as if it were a Prodigy to find, What man is he that lusteth to Live? And sure the vicious man does not, for Wisdom that is Virtue, says, He that sinneth against me woundeth his own Soul, and all they that hate me love death, Prov. viii. 36. And 'tis most evident, that they who eagerly, and out of vehement affection pursue and seize those things to which they know destruction is annexed inseparably, they love and choose destruction, though not for itself, yet for the sake of that to which it clings. He that is certain such a Potion, howsoever sweetened and made palatable, is compounded with the juice of deadly Nightshade, if notwithstanding he will have the Poisonous draught, it is apparent he resolves to die.

And that I may evince this is a settled obstinate incorrigible resolution in him, and by what ways and steps it comes to be so, I will lay before you the violent courses he does take to break through difficulties and obstructions that would trash and hinder him: And when the avenues to Death are strongly guarded, how he storms and forces them, overcomes all resistance possible, that he may seize on Sin and Death.

And First, When such persons have entered the Profession of Christianity in Baptism, and by early engagements tied themselves to the observation of its duties, if Principles of probity in Nature, fomented by others, instill'd with Education, have made impressions of duty on the mind, and wrought a reverence and awe of God and of Religion, which is a fence about them, and does keep off Vice, by making it seem strange, uncouth and difficult, while these fears and aversations are rooted in them; why then the first thing that they do, as soon as Youth and the Temptations do stir within them, is to poison these their own Principles by evil Conversation, and from that and Example take infusions, which shall impregnate them with humors of being in the fashion of the World: Thus they labor to strangle the then troublesome modesties of Nature and of Virtuous breeding; thus they look out ill Company to infect themselves: And surely they that seek the Plague and run into infection, we have cause to fear they have a Resolution to die. But,

Secondly, If notwithstanding this in the first practices of Vice, their former Principles stir, and ferment within, and fret the Conscience, set that on working; why then if the sin sting gently, do but prick the heart, and make an out-let for a little gush of Sorrow, then in spite of Scripture, they do teach themselves to think that grief Repentance, and by the help of that conceit this sorrow cools, and doth allay the swelling of the mind, washes away the guilt and thought of the commission, they have been sad, and they believe, repented; as if those stings opened the fountain for transgression, and those little wounds did flow with Balsom for themselves: And by this means that sting of the old Serpent sin, while it pretends to cure by hurting thus, proves indeed the Tempter to go on. For if this be all, why should a man renounce all the Contents and satisfactions of his Inclinations, and mortify and break his nature to avoid a thing which is so easily repented for? No, if it be no worse they can receive this Serpent in their bosom, dare meet his sting, and run upon these wounds, and they do so till the frequent pungencies, and cicatrices have made the Conscience callous and insensible, the heart hardened.

But if their first essays of sin were made unfortunate by Notoreity, or some unhappy circumstance, and so the wound were deep, and the Conscience troublesome and restless, because this is very uneasy, these inward groans make discord in their cheerful airs, make their life harsh, they therefore find it necessary to confront the shame with Courage of iniquity, go boldly on that so they may outlook it, fear their own Conscience that its wounds may not bleed. And as those Fiends of Men who Sacrific'd their Children in the fire to Moloch, that they might not hear their Infants shreek, nor their own Bowels croak, had noises made with Timbrels to out-voice them: So these to drown the cries and howlings of their wounded mind, put themselves in perpetual hurry of divertisement and Vice, make Tophet about themselves, and with the noise of Ryots overcome all other, because they will not hearken to those groans that call for the Physician of Souls, and then sure these resolve to die.

Nay if this will not keep them quiet, you may see them sometimes ruffle with their own Consciences, desire present Convictions in the very instant of Commission, men so set on Death, that they Condemn themselves in that which they allow. And though a man would think there should be little satisfaction in those pleasures which Condemnation thrusts itself into, and which have an alloy of so sad apprehensions; yet such are it seems the satisfactions of sin: For while it slabs and gashes, He brave Hero of Iniquity, can charge the wounds and take the Vice.

Yea Thirdly, though the Lord himself appear, and take part in the Quarrel, join with our Principles and Conscience against the sin, and with importunate Calls alarm us, give us no rest, ordain a Function of men by whom he does beseech us, dresses their Messages with Promises of that which God is blessed in, and arms them too with Terrors such as Devils tremble at, and joins his Holy Spirit too, that Power of the Highest, sends him in Tongues of Fire, that he also may Preach this to our very Hearts, and fright us with more flame: And yet the Sinner breaks these strengths, and vanquishes the Arts and strivings of Divine Compassion. If these Ambassadors speak Charms, it is but what God tells our Prophet in this Chapter, ver. 32. And lo thou art unto them as a very lovely Song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an Instrument. And it does die like that, as it there follows, They hear thy words but they do them not. And if they flash in Hell against their Vices, in torrents of threatening Scripture, they concern themselves no more than they would in the story of a new Eruption of Mount Aetna or Vesuvius. Yea they do quench the Spirit and his fires, do not like the deaf Adder, stop their ears against his whisperings, and the charms of Heaven (that were a weaker and less valiant guilt) but are Religious in hearing them, curious that they may be spoke with all advantages to make it harder not to yield and live, that so they may express more resolution to perish, and with more courage and solemnity may sin and die.

Nay more, when God hath found an Art to draw themselves into a League and Combination against their Vices, bound them in Sacraments to Virtue; made them enter a Covenant of Piety, and seal it in the Blood of God, and by that foederal Rite with hands lift up, and seizing on Christ's Body, and with holy Vows oblige themselves to the performances, or to the Threats of Gospel, which they see executed in that Sacrament before their eyes, see there death is the wages of iniquity, they show themselves its damned consequences, while they behold it tear Christ's Body, spill his Blood, and Crucify the Son of God; yet neither will this frightful spectacle, nor their own ties hold them from sin and ruin, they break these bonds asunder to get at them.

The Wiseman says that wicked men seek death and make a Covenant with it, and so it seems: But sure they are strange willful men, that seek it at God's Table in the Bread of Life, that will wade through an Ocean of mercy to get at Perdition, and find it in the Blood of Christ, will drink Damnation in the Cup of blessing; men that poison Salvation to themselves: They that contract thus for Destruction, and tie it to them at the Altar, with such sacred Rites and Articles, are sure resolved and love to die.

Fourthly, God had provided other Guards to secure men from sin and Death, the Censures of the Church; of which this Time was the great Season, and the discipline of abstinence we now use is a piteous relique, all that the World will bear it seem: But as the Lord appointed them they were so close a fence, that our Savior calls them Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, as if they locked us in the Path of Piety and Life; and we must pick or break all that the Key of Heaven can make fast, burst Locks as well as Vows before we can get out, have liberty to sin. God having bounded in the Christians race as that among the Grecians was, which had a River on one side, and Swords points all along the other, so that Destruction dwelt about it on the borders: And God hath mounded ours with the River of Hell the Lake of Fire, and with these spiritual Swords (as S. Cyprian and S. Jerome call the Censures.) But yet a Mound too weak alas! to stand the Resolution and assaults of Vices nowadays; which do not only make great breaches in the Fence, but have quite thrown it down, and slighted it; and the Church dares not set it up again, should she attempt it they would scoff it down. Men will endure no bar in the way to Perdition; they will have liberty of Ruin; will not be guarded from it; so far from brooking Censures they will suffer no Reproof, nor Admonition, not suffer one word betwixt them and Death eternal.

But Fifthly, Though we will not let Almighty God restrain us with his Censures, yet he will do it with his Rod, and set the sharp stakes of Affliction in our walk, to keep us in; thus he makes sins sometimes inflict themselves, and then we straight resolve to break off from them; and while we suffer shame, and feel destruction in the Vice we shrink and uncling: And now the Sinner would not die, especially if his Precipitance have thrown him to the confines of the grave; and while he took his full careers of Vice, the fury of his course did drive him to the ports of Ruin, and Death seemed to make close and most astonishing approaches, when standing on the brink of the Abyss, he takes a prospect of the dismal state that must receive him and his Vices, then he trembles and flies, his apprehensions swoon, his Soul hath dying qualms, caused as much by the Nausea of sin as by the fear of Hell: he is in agonies of passion and of Prayer both against his former courses, he never will come near them more; and now sure God hath caught him, and his will is wholly bent another way, now he will live the new life if God will grant him any: But alas! have we never seen when God hath done this for him, stretch'd out his Arm of Power, hal'd him from the brow of the Pit, and set him further off, how he does turn and drive on furiously in the very same path that leads to the same Ruin, and he recovers into death eternal?

And now this Will is grown too strong for the Almighty's powerful methods, and frustrates the whole Counsel of God for his Salvation, neglects his Calls and Importunacies whereby he warns him to consult his safety, to make use of Grace in time, not to harden his heart against his own mercies, and perish in despite of mercy. And when he can reject God's Graces and his Judgments thus, defy his Conscience and his own Experience too, there is but one thing left wherein this Resolution can show its courage, and that is,

Sixthly, His own present Interests; All which the Sinner can break through and despise, to get at Death. It is so usual to see any of the gross wasting Vices when it is once espoused, murder the Reputation, and all those great concerns that do depend upon a man's Esteem, eat out his Wealth and Understanding, make him pursue pernicious ways and Counsels, besot him, and enslave him, fill his life with disquiet, shame and neediness, and the sad consequents of that, Contempt, and all that's Miserable and unpitied in this Life; and yet the sin with all these disadvantages is lovely, not to be divorc'd nor torn off from him, that I were vain should I attempt to prove a thing so obvious. I shall give but one instance of the power of the Will, the violence and fury of its inclinations to Ruin.

The man who for another's inadvertency, possibly such as their own rules of Honor will not judge affront, yea sometimes without any shadow of a provocation, merely because he will be rude, does that upon which they must call one another to account, and to their last account indeed at God's dread Judgment-seat; whither when he hath sacrificed two Families, it may be all their hopes and comforts in this Life; two Souls which cost the Blood of God, having assaulted Death when it was armed and at his heart, and charged Damnation to take Hell by Violence; he comes with his own and his Brother's blood upon his Soul to seize his Sentence, Go ye Cursed into everlasting Fire: 'Tis plain against all Interests of this World and the World to come, this man will die. And yet this is one of the laudable and generous Customs of the Age.

Neither doth this man stand alone, the desperate Rebel would come into the Induction, that without any hopes sets all on fire, to consume all here, and to begin his Flames hereafter.

But I have said enough to prove the Resoluteness of a Sinners Will, which is so great indeed that it is this especially which does enhance the guilt of sin into the merit of an endless punishment, this persevering obstinacy does deserve Hell and make it just.

For whatsoever inequality there is betwixt the short-lived pleasures of a sin, which die while they are tasted, and put out themselves, and those eternal never-dying retributions of Vengeance, (As sure there is also betwixt the life of Man, and several of those petty felonies that forfeit it) yet the Law does not murder when it Executes. (I might have instanc'd in the gathering sticks upon the Sabbath day in Israel.) For since the preservation of public safety and propriety is valuable with the lives of many men, and to secure that and affright the Violation, it was necessary to affix such punishments to such offenses; they that know the penalty, and willfully, merely to feed their other Vices, run upon it, justly suffer it: So that Man might not rob himself of that Immortal Glory which God had ordained him when he did see it absolutely necessary, thus to hedge Vice with Eternal Death: And as he set Angels and Flaming Swords to keep him out of Paradise, so to set Fiends and Flames to guard Hell from him, and to entail those Torments on Man's sin, which he had prepared for the Devil, and sealed the Deed in the Blood of his Son. If notwithstanding men renounce the blessedness, and against all their Interests and Obligations, in spite of all the Arts and Powers of Heaven, they will have the Torments; and, (what they never would attempt for Paradise) invade those flames to get to Hell, 'tis very just that God should let them have it; should not break his Decrees, dispence with Holy Laws so confirmed, merely to gratify those that are obstinate for ruin, and against his whole Gospel quench Hell fires because men are resolved to run into them. This Will does, as it were, even the Scales betwixt the Sin and the Damnation, equal the pleasure to the punishment, and fill the distance from a moment to Eternity.

But though this Will do clear God's Justice, yet it does not satisfy his Reason, he seems astonished at the choice; God himself cannot find a Ground for such a Resolution; and therefore does enquire, Why will ye die? Which is God's question, and my second Part.

It is the present pleasure sin does tempt your sensuality withal, whose agitations are so quick and strong that they surprise or break the forces of your Reason, and your Principles, put the Mind in disorder, and then seize it with such violence as to lead it captive to the Law of Sin and Death? 'Tis true indeed thus both of them had their original, so they prevailed in Paradise, for when the Woman saw the Tree was good for food, and pleasant to the eye, and a Tree to be desired to make one wise, she took thereof and she did eat, although she knew that God had said, In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die, Gen. iii. But there was generous pleasure here, such as tempted the Soul, assaulted it with the appearances of Wisdom, and divine Knowledge: Ye shall be as God's, Gen. iii. 5. And sure 'tis no great wonder if the proper pleasures of the mind engage it, therefore when God would give a Precept liable to a Temptation of being broke, he laid it in the sphere of those things that delight the Soul, of Knowledge; but far be it that those of sensuality should ever have prevailed; Man may yield to the pleasure of being like God, but for pleasure to make himself a Beast is contradiction to Nature. For pleasure is but satisfaction of our appetites, and the more natural the inclination is, the higher and more powerful that Nature, and the desire eagerer, so much the more delightful is the satisfaction. Now it is certain that the reasonable faculty, the Soul or Spirit is the highest and most proper nature of a man: In all the rest he's not a step removed from Beasts, unless it be in shape, but in the accurateness of his senses is below them far; and therefore must be so in sensual satisfactions; but in his Soul he borders upon Angels, and does come towards God.

Now then that Soul being man's peculiar nature, the highest part of him, It follows its delights, Spiritual reasonable Joys must needs be the most natural and most proper for it, most conformed to it, and therefore the most taking with it. This may be cleared most irrefragably.

A Beast hath several ingredients of Nature in his making, he is an heavy body, and a Vegetable, and he hath also Sense which is his highest nature. Now though the only inclination of heavy bodies be to fall down to the Earth, and this be also natural to a Beast, we do not find that 'tis his greatest pleasure, sure he had rather feed than tumble in the Pasture; his chief delight lies in the satisfaction of his chiefest faculties, wherein he does excel, his Senses; and as Beasts differ and transcend in these, so do their pleasures also differ and exceed. A man also, as Aristotle says, does live a threefold Life: At first he is but a Plant-man, a growing span of living Creature, and he's born only into Animality, a Life of Sense, and at last educated into reasonable. Now the delights of his first Stages, whilst only Vegetation and Sense live, although proportioned to those states, yet have no savor to the mind; he grows through Nuts and Rattles to the use of Reason, and the pleasures of it also; these must keep even with the growing faculties and become higher, rational, and manly: Which if they do not, but the man still dwell upon the satisfaction of sense, he does confound the Stages, contradict the progresses of Nature; he hath the age and strength of Reason but to play the Child with, to exert it in those things that are but a Man's Rattles, hath the sagacity of an Intelligence merely to find out how to be a brute with greater luxury and relish.

Come therefore, show me now the sins which the delights of Reason do betray you to, and I will admit the Plea: But if you live your own reverse that you may die; renounce all your own pleasures first, that so you may renounce the joys of God and Heaven; and fall from Nature that you may fall into Hell, this case hath no pretence; and those pleasures cannot toll man on to death, which till the man be dead, and the brute only live within him cannot be his pleasures. And it is plain they are not pleasures to a Sober man that lives the life of Reason, not to say of Grace: Nor are they such to any man till he have train'd and exercised himself into an habit of enduring them, and by a discipline of Torment made himself experienc'd for Vice and for Damnation: Nor is there ever any pleasure in some Vices. What is there in the dismal Wishes of man's imprecating passion? there cannot be music in those harsh horrors, and yet the Sinners will destruction so as that they call to God to pour it on them, and tear it down from Heaven, so that Pain and Disease seem to sauce those delights, and Death to be the tempter to the pleasure; 'tis evident men's reasons and their Practices must be first debauched, that they may count them Pleasures, and therefore pleasure cannot be the first mover in the Sinners race to Death.

But I will grant, that the Spirit and Flesh of Man by their so strait alliance and perpetual converse, may grow to have the same likes and dislikes, have but one appetite, and this alas! be that of flesh; to whose only satisfactions the man useth himself, by long Custom of which, the Soul doth so imbibe the Inclinations of the Body, that nothing of another kind can possibly be relish'd. In this case sensuality hath pleasures, yet such as cannot answer God's enquiry; for do but consult man's other Choices and you find a present satisfaction cannot work his Resolutions to forego great after-hopes, or run upon a foreseen ruin. Who will exchange his right to the Reversion of a Crown, which from his Father he shall certainly inherit and succeed to if he do out-live him, for a present Scene of Royalty, and choose a painted Coronet, the pomps and adorations of a Stage, and the applauses of a Croud before the real Glories of his Kingdom, the love and the obedience of his Subjects? And yet my Soul, the disproportion of the Sinners terms is infinitely greater; and there is no hazard, which to make his choice of present things more flattering, the others hopes are liable to: For that Heir of the Crown may die before the Crown fall to him; but it is impossible that we should miss of ours except we put ourselves by, by such choices; except we change it thus. And on the other side we know, men will adventure the Sentence of the Law by Robberies and murders to provide for Lusts, while they hope to be undiscovered: But sure a Prison made delightful by all arts of pleasure, and all plenty of it, will not hire a man to own those actions which shall forfeit him to certain shameful Execution the next Sessions, and yet this is the Sinners state exactly, he is ti'd and bound in the chain of his sins, they are it may be chains of Gold and softened with delices, but they reserve him to the Judgment of the great Assise: And yet he chooses these and puts them on as Ensigns of delight and honor.

Once more; Do not men choose a present Agony to keep off an afterevil, they tear their bowels with a Vomit to prevent a Surfeit, they cup and scarify, and with all artifice or pain upon themselves kill a Disease, yea they are well content to prolong torment so they may but prolong life; and though the preservation of it prove only continued pangs, and all they can effect is only this, that they are longer dying, yet they are glad to be so in all cases, except where the prescription is Virtue, and the death prescribed against Eternal.

Now why do you choose thus only in Sin and Hell? 'Tis clear the very pleasure you change Heaven for, cannot invite you from this Life, and then you that will suffer anything rather than you will die, Why against all resistance will you die forever?

It is Secondly, because you know not what it is to die the second Death? at least your notions of it are so slight and easy, that they cannot fright you from a pleasure or cope with a temptation to it; and so though present satisfactions are not able to engage you upon present ruin they can upon the after-death.

Indeed the Sinner would have reason if it meant no more than hath been taught of late by one that hath gained many Proselytes among the Virtuosi of Religion; After the Resurrection the Reprobates shall be, saith he, in the state that Adam and his Posterity were in after his Sin (i. e.)

the state we are now in, Live as we do, Marry and give in Marriage, and cease to be when they have got some heirs to succeed them in Tophet. Poor unhappy Souls these! that never had any sin to merit being there, nor any Sentence to condemn them thither but this man's: Who must put them there successively one after other, to find employment for Everlasting fire. A Doctrine such as had an Angel Preach'd from Heaven by S. Paul's award he must have been Anathema; when the Devil made Religions, and Theology came from the bottomless Pit, he never found out such an Engine to convey men into it as this pleasant notion of the punishment of sin therein; as if Leviathan were made to take his pastime in that Lake also, by such interpretations, which surely were contrived to make out the Assertion of that Romish Priest, who says, that those in Hell love to be there; nay more, that 'twas impossible for God to do a kinder thing for them than to put them there. Doctrines to be abhor'd as Hell itself; and yet upon these grounds he builds their Church by demonstration, so strong as that the Gates of Hell cannot prevail against it; and in truth they have no reason to assault it on these terms. But to pass by such dotages and frenzies, you will be able sure to check all those presumptions which grow from sleight impressions of the second Death, if you but take that prospect of it which the close of this time gives: look forward through this season, which is designed for you to prepare the way of the Lord to his Passion in, and you shall see the Death that does await iniquity.

If you behold him coming to Jerusalem with Hosannas and Palms about him, as if Death were his Triumph, his Passion so desirable, that he rode to meet it, which he never did at any other time; and then complaining he was straitened until it were accomplished; as he had throws of Longing after it, and singing when he went out to it, you would believe the Sinner never chose his death, sweetened by his most pleasant sin, with a more cheerful eagerness. But then open the Garden and you see his apprehensions of it throw him on his Face to pray against it. See how he sweats and begs, his very Prayer is a Passion, the zeal of it is Agony! and canst thou choose that he so dreads and deprecates? and when he durst not meet the apprehensions, wilt thou stand the storm? see what a sting death hath, when it makes outlets for such clots and globes of Blood, and stings the Soul so too, that it pours out itself in Sweat. And then he sinks again under the deprecation of it, and prays that that Cup may pass from him. Blessed Savior! when thou hadst just now made thy Death thy Legacy, thy Sacrament, dost thou entreat to scape this death? if this Cup pass from thee, what will the Cup of Blessing profit us? thou hadst but now bequeathed a Cup to us which was the New Testament in thy Blood, and now wilt thou not shed that Blood? But dost thou refuse thy Cup? Oh 'twas a Cup of deadly Wine, red with God Indignation, poisoned with Sin! And can the Sinner thirst for the Abyss of this, the Lake that hath no bottom? and when he goes again, and prays the same words the third time, be yet not only so supine as not ask to scape it, seldom and very sleight in any Prayer or wish against it, but also so resolved to have it, as to gape that he may swill it down to everlastingness? Follow him from that Garden and you see him even dying under his Cross, he cannot bear that when it is laden with sin, who yet upholdeth all things by the word of his Power. 'Tis said the time will come when the Sinner will cry out to the Hills to fall on him, any weight but that of iniquity, the burden of that is intolerable, 'tis easier for him to bear a Mountain than a Vice, and yet Christ saith he hath a beam in his Eye, and can he shrink at any weight whose part, that is most sensible, tender to an expression, can bear that which shoulders must fall under, only Pillars can sustain? Oh yes; that which did sink the shoulders of Omnipotence: Then the Mountains rather and the Rocks to cover; but in vain, they will not cover, for thy very Groans will rent them: Christ's were so sad that his did, they tore the Rocks, and that which is much more inflexible, the Monuments: Death started at them, and the bonds of the Grave loosened, and the Dust was frighted into Resurrection; and more, the Hypostatick Union seemed rent by them, the God to have forsaken his own Person. And can the Sinner hope to stand this shock? will the courage of his Iniquity make his heart harder than those Rocks, more insensible than the Grave, and better able to endure than he that was a God? and will you die into this state eternally? which it was necessary for him to have the assistance of Divinity in his Person, that he might be able to endure one day, and which yet notwithstanding made one day intolerable.

The sum is this, a Person so desiring Death and yet so dreading it, and sinking under the essays of it, and this Person the Son of God, and that dread merely because there was sin in the Death, (for if this were not in the cause, no Martyr but had born death with more courage but that Son of God) all this as it does leave no Reason for the Sinners choice of death Eternal, so neither doth it leave a possibility of bearing it: And if so, give me leave in God's Name to Expostulate, the last employment of these words, Why will ye die?

After this killing Prospect, while the damp of it is on you, let my Bowels debate with you, which yearn more over you than they did over my Beloved Son in whom I was well pleased; when I have sent my only Son, God, one with my own Self, to be made Man, that he might suffer what was necessary to be suffered to preserve you from eternal sufferings; when I have laid on him that was brought up with me from everlasting, and that was daily my Delight, all your Iniquities and my own Indignation, that so you might be freed from both: When I have found out, made an Expiation, with which I am more pleased than ever your transgressions offended me, which hath quite blotted out your sins and my Displeasure; when your Redemption from death is made, the Ransom paid, the Price is in my hand, why do you then refuse yourselves, your own Eternal Blessedness which was thus dearly purchased and is ready for you? Why will you seize that Indignation which you are redeemed from, and force those sufferings on yourselves, which have been laid already and inflicted on another? 'Tis a small thing that you refuse me, the return of my Expence, that which I gave my Son for; but do you renounce Happiness because my Love and Blood is in it? and will you die because you may, and I desire you should live? when my Son went from the essential felicities of my Bosom to embrace Agonies, and died for you; why will you also die? as you have slain his Person, will you Crucify his Kindness too? and crucify yourselves rather than have it? and having used him most despitefully, will you therefore use his favors so? and not let his Death and Passion do you any good? contemn his methods of Salvation, his divine Acts of making you forever Blessed? is your Savior and Life itself so hateful to you? and after such Redemption of your persons is there no redemption of your Will from perishing? nothing of value that can bribe your choice against it? nothing that can betroth you into a desire of Life, and take you off from your resolves to die? had I set no advantage on the other side, if sin had sweetened misery to your Palate, it had been no such great despite and contradiction to Appetite; but when Heaven and the Joys of God are in the Scale against it, to prefer Misery is Wretchless beyond aggravation. Oh why will you rather die? Those very things that tempt your Wills were they abstracted from the death they do inveigle you into, were they sincere and innocent, if they were set against that Life, that blessed life, immortal Life, would vanish quite in the comparison when you should see they are but frolicks of delight, that never take you but when you are turned up to them, in moods and fits; and the complacencies you take in them are but starts of Appetite, that swells and breaks out to them and then falls again, and so the pleasures die even in the birth, and therefore cannot satisfy; indeed do but disquiet an immortal appetite such as man's is, so that it were impossible to choose a life, these rather, although there were no misery annexed to them, if you considered: For it were to resolve that a few drops were more than an immense Ocean of Delight, a Moment longer than Eternity, a Part were bigger than the Whole, an Atom greater than an Infinite. Now there is nothing then that can prefer these to your choice but the Death only; and Oh will ye without and against all Temptation, Will ye die?

O thou my Soul! take other Resolutions, thou seest the things that men with so much care and sin provide to make their lives delightful here, although success answer their care, are vain and helpless things, and life itself as vain, and I must die, and drop from Heaven; and therefore be thou sure to take a care their treacherous comforts do not make me die into the everlasting want of them and of all comforts.

The Artificial pleasures of the Palate whether in meats or drinks, forced tastes, that do at once satisfy and provoke the Appetite, will relish ill when I begin to swallow down my spittle; but sure I am, I am invited to the Supper of the Lamb, to drink new Wine with Christ in my Father's Kingdom; The fatted Calf is dressing for my Entertainment, and shall I choose to be a while a Glutton with the Swine, rather than the eternal Guest of my Father's Table and Bosom? and refuse these for a few sick Excesses which would end in qualms, and gall, and vomits, if there were no guilt to rejolt too, and which will kindle a perpetual Feaver? The Honors and the Glories of this Life will lose their shine when I am going to make my Bed in the Dark, in a black lonely desolate hole of Earth; my Gayeties must die, when I must say to Corruption, thou art my Father, and to the Worm thou art my Mother and my Sister: And if there were pride or ambition in them, their Worm will never die, that Pride will make me fall as low as Lucifer, that Glory will go out into utter darkness, and that Ambition change my Honor into everlasting Shame, Envy, and Torment: But sure I am that there are Glorious Robes, and Thrones, and Scepters in God's Promises; and let thy gayety, my Soul! be in the Robe of Immortality, the Throne of thy Ambition that of Glory.

When I shall lie tortured or languishing in my last Bed, Palaces and Possessions will no more relieve me, than the Landskip of them in the Hangings can do it. And if there were Covetousness, Bribery, Sacrilege, or Injustice in them, I shall be carried out of these, and have no other Habitation assigned me, but with the Devil and his Angels, shall inherit and possess nothing but the Almighty's Indignation forever.

But in my Father's House are many Mansions, Places prepared for me, and an Inheritance as wide as Heaven, as Endless and Incorruptible as Eternity, and God Himself: And sure if I may choose, there I will live where there is neither Will nor possibility to die; where there is Life, fullness of Joy, Pleasures for Evermore. To which, &c.

The Sixth SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL.

PSALM LXXIII. v. 25.

Whom have I in Heaven but thee? and there is none upon Earth that I desire besides thee:

MY Text is the result of the Pious man's Audit, the foot of the account in summing up his whole that he hath either in Possession or Desire; and instead of nice Division of the Words I shall observe in them these Subjects of Discourse.

First, the different tenure, or condition of Estates in the two different Countries we relate to, this here is a Land only of desires, the other is a place of enjoyments, Have in Heaven, Desire on Earth. Yea

Secondly, Though our estate here in this Earth be present, and that other seem removed far off, yet the possessions of that are present and in hand, but the most native satisfactions of the Earth are still at distance, only the object of our aims and expectations I have, now I have in Heaven, on the Earth I but desire.

Thirdly, Here is the matter of both these desires and enjoyments to the Pious man; No Person or nothing (for so it bears also) but God: There is nothing upon Earth that I desire besides thee. And as to Heaven the negation is expressed emphatically by a Question, Whom have I in Heaven but thee?

Yet least this Question should look like an Expostulation, and he that asks it seem unsatisfied with his Portion, we will therefore,

Lastly, see the Importance of it to the Christian, since our Savior is gone up into Heaven, see whom the Christian hath there: And if the Psalmist could find none but God, and David (if he were the Author) could not see the Son of David there, yet since Christ is set at the Right hand of God, the Christians present Interest in Heaven is such, that looking with contempt on all that worldly men applaud themselves in the enjoyment of, rejecting all but thee O Christ, he justly triumphs in resolving of this question to himself, and being satisfied in having thee, he does renounce even the desiring anything but thee.

Of these in their order beginning here on Earth, where our tenure even of earthly things is but desire, this World does give no satisfactions in hand, but still they are only the objects of our Expectations and wishes.

When God hath given Man an erect Countenance, Eyes that do naturally look towards him, and the very frame of him is such, that Heaven is his constant Object; it were no wonder if his looks and thoughts were always there, since both the duty and necessity of that does seem imprest upon him in his making, and to desire things above, is, as it were, the Law in his members.

But when he swims in delicacies here upon the Earth, is immersed in the plenties of all kinds, that these should give him nothing but desires of themselves, that the delights should not be present to him, but he should still pursue and need that which he is encompassed with, that while with open mouth and in a most intemperate current he swills down the pleasures, yet his open mouth should gape only with thirst, and he be sensible of nothing but the want of these, is strange even to astonishment: Yet such it seems the nature of them is. When S. John would enumerate all that is in the World the particular that he gives in is thus, 1 John ii. 16. All that is in the world, the lust of the Flesh, the lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life. He does not say, the objects of these Lusts that are to serve and satisfy them, for there's no such thing as satisfaction, but only lust; and if we make enquiry into the particulars we shall find it.

To begin with that of the Eyes, Covetousness, or the love of Money: 'Tis evident that where an Object is not useful to the faculty, it cannot satisfy, for satisfaction is fulfilling of our needs and uses, but Money is not useful to the sight, nor indeed does it prove useful to, or serve any of the Covetous man's occasions or faculties; rather the contrary in every kind, he does bereave himself of good because he hath it; He is in agonies of trouble and solicitude, lest he should need, and not have that, which when he hath acquired he will still need, and will not have enjoyment of. Nor is it possible it should be otherwise, for since there is no natural original or cause of this his Appetite, for 'tis not emptiness that makes him hungry, who is more ravenous the more full he is, whose most empty bowels shrink and cling together, and having learned not to expect repast, while his bags and desires stretch, and are enlarged by being stuff'd.

Nor is it fear of future want that makes him eager to provide so, for why should he be so unsatisfied in his providing against want, that will want more the more he is provided?

And since as there is no natural cause, so there is also no natural measure for this Appetite of his; for Nature's measure is our real uses of the Object. But this man heaps up useful things that he does never mean to use: Since therefore it hath neither bound nor cause in Nature, 'tis monstrous, and must needs be an unlimited lust, uncapable of satisfaction: And all this man's Wealth does purchase nothing for him but desires, and is not the content but the Lust of his Eye.

And the same reasoning will conclude the next, the Pride of life, which is the Lust of a Sense as wholly unconcerned in all the Poms and garnishes of Pride, as the Eye is in Wealth: 'tis a Lust of the Ear, all is but the man's passion to hear himself, his trappings, or condition commended. The Learned man that's proud, does think of no return for all his toils and watches, all the present racks and tortures of his mind, and all the after-ones that he does pull upon his body, but to be spoken well of: He fasts, mortifies, and denies himself more than the Covetous man can do, merely to fill himself with wind; he reconciles the Babel of all Languages, and Sciences too in his own head but for a word, only to hear an Euge, and this with such solicitude that if the breath of men's Applause should fail him he would straight expire, as if his Soul breathed only at his Ear. If my pride lies in gayeties, all Nature's Wardrobe must be rifled, the beauties of the Universe desloured, the Art and Sweat too of all Nations employed to attire my person, or to dress my Room, rather indeed to dress the Tongues and furnish, out the talk of other persons, who must entertain mine Ears with the discourse of my own splendors; which is all the use I can make of it; the Eastern Rocks must send me Diamonds, merely to dart a line of light into another's eyes, which may return to me in a report that I have such fine Jewels, and I have nothing else of all my sumptuous glories but the mere Echo of their shine, which is reflected and beat back to me in commendations. With so much expense anxiety and sin, I do provide only for other men's discourses, or it may be, envies. Now these are none of my enjoyments, and therefore I have nothing of them but the Lust and the desire.

As for those of the flesh, the third remaining kind, they seem indeed to be exempted from this reasoning; the sensual person gorges his desires, and in Solomon's phrase makes his Soul enjoy good: Yet the same Solomon salves that appearance too, in saying when provisions increase, they are increased that eat them; and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes? My broad and my cramb'd Tables do not more enlarge or serve my appetite, give me no satisfaction but only that of seeing many Dishes full, and many men consuming them, as if Luxury also were a lust of the Eye. It hath been said indeed, that the Eye is the Gluttons most unsatisfied and greedy part, and it must needs be so if its lust lie to all that other men devour, and if it crave not only for the man's own stomach, but for throngs of Clients, Parasites, and attendants. And 'tis too plain the other Twin Intemperance lusts by the same rules and laws: It does not only claim its seat in the Eye, which makes itself a Judge of Liquors for the Palate, and does not choose them by the uses of their moisture, but by their body, by their air, and by the mode, and other Rules of the authentic standard Drinkers; as if men thirsted in the fashion only: But this Eye also, as the Riotous man's did, gapes for company, and thirsts to see the Vice go round, it drinks in nothing with so much delight as the Wine, when a weaker Companion returns it back again in Vomit, at that foul horrid spectacle it sparkles and triumphs. Now 'twere in vain to ask Solomon's question, What good is there in this? or what enjoyment? to urge that meats and drinks cannot give satisfaction to the Eye that hath no Palate, and then cry out Oh Prodigy that it should Lust thus! As for the other kind of Riots, where with arts of Epicurism men contrive to feast and entertain their private Appetites, and put a Patrimony into sauce for their own Palats, men sordidly Luxurious. 'Tis evident that these are studied to provoke, men choose such Wines as they may longest drink, and with elaborate condiments make forced hunger as well as dishes, so that the Riotous design only to Lust, and the whole mystery of Luxury is to create desires.

Lastly, for that one that hath ingross'd the name of Lust, it gives in a full Evidence against itself. For the Adulterer, much more irrational than the most greedy Miser; is insatiate in desiring what he hath, and his Lust will not use his remedy, lest so it should allay and quench the Lust: And whilst with so much fever of desire, he courts nothing else but the change, and values that alone equal with all the discontents of this life, all the miseries of that to come, and will go to the Devil merely for variety, as it is plain: Adultery hath nothing proper to itself but the desire, is a mere looseness of the Fancy, which ranges in wild lusts, and which hath no enjoyment that's peculiar to it but the lusting only; so 'tis also plain that this Lust must be endless, for that principle of Change which gives it all its incitation must never let it rest; for then 'tis not variety. S. John said therefore most expressly, All that is in the World is Lust; men only can desire here, pursuing their desires just as they do their shadows, no eagerness or hast can bring them nearer, still they only pursue, yea like him that would hug and force a Cloud, his empty arms return upon his breast with strokes; and while they seek to catch the Object wound his Bosom: And thus it must be till we fix our passion there, where only there is satisfaction even on God; the object of the pious man's desire, and my next Part.

Nothing besides thee, or with thee: so it signifies also.

There is nothing upon Earth that I desire with thee.

Had he said, Nothing without thee, the emptiness of everything below which the Lord and his Blessing is not in, had made this his determination just and necessary: But sure when God hath put other needs in my making, and hath provided supplies for them, those also are as just and necessary objects of desire, while they are with and under him: But yet, he that had brought all his affections into David's frame, might well say he desired nothing upon Earth besides, nothing with God; for he had weaned his very Flesh and all the craving appetites of Sense from their own objects, and had fixed them upon God in all their strength and vigor. My Soul, saith he, thirsteth for thee, (elsewhere, my Soul gaspeth unto thee, even as a thirsty Land;) and my flesh also longeth after thee, Psalm lxiii. 1. How! My Soul thirsteth for thee? with thee indeed is the Well of Life: But Thirst is an Appetite, gasping a consequent defailance and impatience of the Body; to both which the Soul is a mere stranger, as it is also to the ways by which the Body does desire; •or the Soul is drawn by moral engagements, by persuasions and motives, there is place for deliberation and Choice in her Desires, she can demur in her pursuits, divert her Inclinations, and quench a Desire with a Consideration; but the Flesh pursues in a more impulsive manner, is drawn and spur'd on by such impetuous propensions as are founded in matter: You can no more persuade a thirsty Palate not to thirst, than you can woo a falling Stone to stay its hast, or invite it to turn aside from its direction to the Center. Yea but the Soul also exerts itself in all these appetites of flesh and matter, and with all their violence when it looks on God, when we have once had a taste, or when indeed we but discern our needs of him, whether our Temporal, or Spiritual, those of the Soul or Flesh, all the desires of both then fly at him, and with a tendency most close and uncontrollable, then nothing besides him. For all the appetites of Body crowd into the Soul that they may catch at God, that Thirsts and Gaspes. And the Soul does put on the violent impetuous agitations of the Bodies Appetites; My Soul thirsteth for thee, and my Flesh also longeth after thee. What Longing is, whether an Appetite or Passion of the Flesh or Mind, whose signatures are more express indeed upon the Flesh than those of any other, yet whose impulses are so quick and so surprizing, as they were Spirit; I shall not now enquire: but sure if the Flesh long it should be for some carnal Object, for that is proportioned to it; Flesh and the Creature use to close indeed, and they imbibe each other, as if they knew to fill and satisfy each other; yea some there are that have brought down their Souls to the propensions of Flesh, have given to their very Spirits an infusion of carnality, for they mind only fleshly things. But by the rates of David's practice it should seem the pious man does the just contrary; sublimes his Flesh into a Soul, drains all the carnal Appetites out of it, weans it from all its own desires, and teacheth it those of the Spirit only, makes it long for God. Now he whose flesh is defaecated thus, and as it were inur'd to the condition which it shall put on, when it awakes from its corruption, as if it were already in that place, whose happiness and desires have no use of Body, and were in that state where their Bodies neither hunger or thirst, for these he hath translated from his flesh; 'tis his Soul only thirsts, and that for God: As if he were indeed like Angels now, how can this man desire anything on Earth besides the Lord, who is and does already what they are and do in Heaven, where we have nothing but thee?

But notwithstanding this exalted temper, though we should arrive at this Seraphick constitution of desires, and though God hath now made himself to us the proper object of these appetites, for since God struck the Rock for us which Rock was Christ; since the true Bread came down from Heaven, if our Flesh long for God there is a satisfaction ready, he hath made his Flesh be meat indeed; if our Souls thirst for God, he can furnish drink for a Soul, the Blood of God.

But yet while this Soul sojourns in this earthly Tabernacle, the man will still want other supplies, and may be not desire them; or can he choose indeed? For they that tell us stories of some men, whose hungers and thirsts after God as they devoured all other desires in them, so also gave themselves no other satisfaction but panem Dominum, that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Supersubstantial daily Bread, the Lord; these men I say, would find it hard to make out how bare Species could nourish and sustain a bodily life. Yea Christ himself when he was upon the Earth did hunger, and although it was his meat to do his Father's Will, yet when he was an hungered Angels came and ministered unto him, and then may not our earthly needs desire something besides him?

That while we are upon the Earth all those necessities are in our constitution is certain; but that we need not desire for them, or anything besides Him, is as certain: Because to them that desire him all these things shall be added, they are annexed by Promise, Matth vi. 33. it is for such to be solicitous who would have something they must have alone; something that cannot come along with God. But if I be assured that all my needs shall be supply'd in him, I need desire nothing besides him; now this Promise he must perform; for he that when he put Man in a state of Immortality in Paradise, provided him a Tree of Life that might forever furnish and sustain him: For that Age also that he does design a man a being for his Service here upon the Earth, he must allow him necessaries for his being and his Service, otherwise he can nor serve, nor be: And then if they be certain what need he desire them? 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 saith S. Chrysostom; These are not objects for our careful wishes, but our trusts and confidences, we may assure ourselves of these if we have him, these are his Appendages, and then why should I put them with him into my Devotions? when my Soul lies gasping towards God in Prayer, my desires seizing on his Blessednesses, to take them off from him, and to make my desires turn aside to little earthly things and fix them there, is to affront not my God only, but my Prayer too; and when these things are sure, seems to betray a mind too Earthly and too apprehensive of these needs: Surely I were most strangely necessitous, or strangely greedy, if both God and that which shall be added to him were not enough for me: More wretched, or else more unsatisfied than Hell, if the Almighty were not sufficient for me; if he be my provision, then I need desire nothing besides him.

But yet Necessities will crave; Hunger does croak aloud, Thirst makes the insensate Earth to gasp; as if with open mouth it gap'd not only to receive but beg God's showers, and God expects to be entreated for these things: He feeds but those young Ravens that do call upon him, and the young Lions roar to him and seek their meat at God: The eyes of all things wait on him for that; yea, this our Psalmist in this very Psalm desires other things; and Christ himself hath put into his little Summary these needs and these desires, Give us this day our daily bread; and my Text does but regulate not exclude these desires, if we shall read it in the old Translation, there is none upon Earth that I desire in comparison of thee 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 There's none or nothing that I desire or delight in equally with thee, like thee, so we translate the same word, ver. 5. I shall not doubt to beg what my needs crave: But if God, and any the most signal earthly advantage stand in competition, and I cannot have one with the other, his Providence or his Commands have made them inconsistent, that I will not desire with him, then he shall be my Choice alone: Rather Obedience and my God than any satisfaction how desirable soever!

This is the Touchstone of a Pious man's desires; 'tis not unusual for inclinations to things below, more to possess our thoughts, employ our faculties than any other, and we are far more sensible of their impressions, more busy in the pursuit, and more tender in our cares of them: But if upon contest betwixt God and our inclinations, upon debate betwixt a Pleasure and Command, we can decree for God and for Obedience, pass Sentence with the Precept, we are safe, here the desire is not inordinate. 'Tis a known instance, and you may have seen, a tender Mother spending almost her whole time in caressing her little Infant, you would think she had Eyes for no uses but to view it, and that she had her Arms and Breasts but to embrace and suckle it, to whom these are so wholly given up as if they had no part for any other, as the Husband, had no share in her entertains and caresses of whom are far more sleight and not so pressing: But should it come to this pinch once, that she must straight resolve to part with one of these, however close her Arms would grasp her Child to rescue him (to force whom thence were like the tearing of her bowels from her) yet would she give those bowels to redeem her bosom guest, and the Husband would be the Choice; so that although the other inclinations were more expressive, these are the stronger and the better settled. So it may happen, we may be more sensibly affected to some dear things here below, our thoughts, and Eyes, and our embraces cling and fasten more to these; but if it come to this that we must leave one, break with the Duty or the Passion; if we resolve however not to part with God, but lay hold there and let the other go, then our affections are not only regular when we desire nothing in comparison with him, but our desires are enjoyments, seize and take possession of him, and we have him: So my Text implies here, Whom have I in Heaven but thee? importing that we have him: Which brings me to the other parts that yet remain to be discoursed of.

Three things are here to be considered.

1. That Heaven is the place of Possessions in opposition to this Land of Desires.
2. That God is the possession there.
3. That the Pious man hath this possession in present.

The first of these is so much common place, I shall not stay upon it; those only qualities that make this World to be a Land of Desires, have no place there, to wit, the instability and emptiness of all things in it, he that lays hold on them does but grasp Mercury, which the more he clasps the more he forces it to slip away, and he retains only the soil and the defilement of it, like Lightning which but passes by, stays not to cherish, only dazels, and, it may be, scorches: So the shine of Earthly glories startles the mind, amuses us, inflames desires of them, and goes out. But then above the tenure is Eternity, and that assures immutability; yea, if it be nunc stance, an indivisible Infinity of permanent duration, whose every point does coexist to every point, a perfect and entire possession, all at once, of an interminable life that never can be all possessed; then nothing can pass by us, or cease from us, but we shall always every moment have, what we shall have in every any moment: Our enjoyment also being like him that we enjoy, all in the whole and all in every part; being not only endless in the mass, but every moment of it is immortal: And then there can be nothing but enjoyment; no place for desire there, where there is nothing absent, where all past and all futurity is always present; and where also the Infinite and all-sufficient God is the Possession; which is my next Proposition, and that God himself affirms.

Gen. xv. i. I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward. Yea, this he hath present possession of, which my third Proposition and my Text asserts, in saying, Whom have I in Heaven but thee? importing thee I have.

The things we call most our possessions he both personal and real, and our portions and inheritances: Now David claims God under both these dues, Thou art my portion O Lord and the lot of mine Inheritance; as other men maintain themselves by these, so I live upon thee: And that we may not think that God is such but in Reversion, those are present possessions which men reap the uses of in present to themselves.

Now what is there of God the Pious man hath not the present uses of? His Eyes are over him, and his Ears are open to his Prayers, watch to attend each motion of his heart, and underneath him are the everlasting Arms to carry and sustain him, his right hand wears him as his signet, and his left hand pours down Blessings on him; his wings are spread for him to nestle in that warm security, and hide him in the shadow of; his bowels found and turn within him with compassion over him, and himself self is about his Bed and about all his paths; not so much to spy out his ways, as to preserve him in them all, and he waits that he may be gracious. In a word, all the Securities that God's Preserving Mercies signify, the watches of his Providence, the Blessings that fulfill his Attributes of goodness, all are exerted upon his occasions, are made the present objects and the satisfactions of his nearest senses, and he may taste and see how gracious God is.

And then give me O Lord! seizin of this the Pious man's Estate, I shall not envy other men's possessions; though one lay House to House, and Land to Land till he become the Lord of his Horison, and his Eyes cannot travel out of his Demesne: For notwithstanding that we may have known ill Courses or ill Accidents consume all this, or Force throw him out of all, and that great Lord have no House but a Goal, nor Land enough to make a Grave: But sure I am, that I shall be provided for in all necessities, unless there happen such a one for which there's no relief in God; nor can I be disseis'd, they must void Heaven e're they can disfurnish me: For thee I have in Heaven.

But yet, though chance nor violence cannot put me out, yet I may forfeit this Possession too; for Sin will separate betwixt me and my God, cast me out of his presence and enjoyments, as sure as it did Adam out of Paradise. And then alas! if I had none but him in Heaven, he is now become my Adversary, holds possession against me, as he did that of Paradise with flames; so he does Rain snares, fire and brimstone thence, and this is all the Sinner's portion, Psalm xi. All that I am like to get, unless I have a person that will attribute the cause, or mediate, there is no hopes of a recovery for me if I have none in Heaven but thee.

Now here my last Consideration will come in.

If while my Soul lies groveling under fearful Apprehensions of its Forfeiture, casting about for help and finding none upon the Earth, if it look upwards and enquire whom have I in Heaven? have I none there but my offended Adversary God? it may resolve itself with comfort he hath other interests there. For,

First, I have an Intercessor there, Rom. viii. 34. a Master of Requests, one that will not only hand in my Petitions, get access for my Prayers and my tears to God, but will make them effectual: For saith S. Paul, Seeing we have a great High Priest that's passed into the Heavens, let us come boldly to the Throne of Grace, that we may obtain Mercy and find Grace in time of need, Heb. iv. 14. 16. For though my supplications have not strength nor ardour that can mount them into Heaven, and are too impure, however washed in my repenting Tears, to draw nigh to the Lord, yet being put into the High Priests Censor with the Altar coals to give them holy flame, and wrap'd up in his Cloud and Smoak of Incense that will cover all the failings of my Prayers, they may get access into his Ears and his Compassions. Indeed how can they choose when Christ does join his Intercessions? for my requests will go where the High Priests do go; he carries them, now He himself doth sit at the right hand of God: The intercessions that are made for me are made upon the Throne, and therefore cannot be repuls'd from thence, and such desires command and they create effects.

But should my Prayers fail, and should God hide himself from my Petitions, withdraw himself and hide his face from them, although they be even before his face. Yet.

Secondly, I have an Advocate there too, 1 John ii. 1, 2. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins; one that not only pleads for me, but brings the satisfaction of my Forfeiture in his hands, makes the just value plead; appears there with his Blood, and proves a recompense.

'Tis Jesus Christ the righteous Advocate, that does propitiate and atone son, what he pleads for; purchase what he begs. 'Tis true, that poor Worm, saith he, hath provoked thee often Lord! but thou didst smite the Man that is thy fellow for it; Behold my Hands, and look into my Sides, see there thy Recompence; wilt thou refuse that Satisfaction thyself didst contrive, and thy beloved Son did make? why did a Person of the blessed Trinity descend from Heaven and Divinity to be made Sin and be a Curse; but to Redeem him from the Curse and Sin, and to entitle him again to the possession of Heaven and God? Why was I Crucified but that thou mightest be aton'd and he be pardoned? Thus he solicits for us there, presents himself in our stead, as our Attorney. He was not a public Person only on the Cross, but he is so at the right hand of God; as he was there our Representative and bore our sins, so he is here our Representative and bears our wants; was there our Proxey to the Wrath of God, is here our Proxey to his Mercies and Compassions. He looks upon himself as in our case, whose Cause and Persons he supplies, and so is prompted to desire and beg for our poor sakes, and he looks upon us as on himself, and so obtains as for his own beloved sake, pleads as ourselves, and then as to himself he does decree Sentence and grant: For Thirdly, I have there a Judge, and this is he, who sits at the right hand of God to Judge the quick and dead; I might have said a Savior, for he was exalted to a Savior to give Remission of Sins: But my Judge is as kind a word. For however there be some will cry for Rocks and Hills to hide them from his Face, yet this they are afraid of is the Face but of the Lamb, Apoc. vi. 16.

And it is strange that they who can look upon Hell, and charge Fiends in a sin, should tremble at a Lamb, and fly him so: But to the Faithful and sincere endeavoring Christian though be sins, as his Advocate is his propitiation, so his Judge is his Sacrifice; is that Lamb that does take away the sins of the World, is his in-offering, his expiation only removed off from the Altar to the Judgment-Seat, indeed the Mercy-Seat, the Throne of his Atonement, and his Absolution: Where his Judge notwithstanding that his Forseit shall Decree Possession to him, Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the Kingdom prepared for you.

Lastly, we have our first fruits, for so S. Paul does call our Savior; and then in whatsoever sense that which is done to the first Fruits is applicable to the Harvest (all this being hallowed in their Consecration) in that sense we ourselves are raised to the right hand of God together with this our First Fruits. And now O Lord! whom have I in Heaven but thee? I have myself in pledge and earnest there.

And then they that rather than have these Interests, these Heavenly possessions in present, will have only desires here on Earth, are certainly of a preverse and Reprobate choice. Sure it would make Consideration sick to think of the comparison betwixt the after-expectations of a Pious man, and those things which our worldly persons call present Enjoyments; how for the little spangles of their pride, they are so taken with its rustling Pomp, they reject Glory that can never wither, fade, or sully; forfeit the being clothed upon with Immortality. How they lose all that everlasting Heaven means, for little things that go by in a Whirl-wind, come in storm and so they pass away; refuse immortal Hallelujahs for a Song, cast away solid Joys, and an Eternal weight of Blessedness for froth, for the shadow of smoke. Perchance this may be said for them, the nearness of the object does impose upon them, they choose something in present rather than dry future hopes. But then when that advantage to lies on the other side, their Choice hath no Temptation; when the Pious man's possessions are in hand, the others only in desire; in view indeed they may be, he does catch at and pursue them still; But the hinder Wheel of the Chariot that presses and with larger turns and rowlings hastens after, may as soon hope to undertake the first, as that man reach a satisfaction; still it removes, and he does only heat his appetite in posting after it, only get more desire. Now 'tis prodigious that these great Men of Sense should be men of such Faith and Expectation as to trust and hope in things that have so constantly, so daily mock'd their confidences and desires, yet be not only Infidels to all God's blessed preparations which they have nor reason nor Experience against, but also have no sense nor relish of himself in present: Not taste nor see how gracious the Lord is.

'Tis said, that the desires of Earthly sensual things do make the greatest part of the Torments of Hell: Now though this Doctrine be false and pernicious, yet 'tis plain that Torment must attend strong passions, and most infinite desires which are radicated in the Sinner's heart, and which he carries hence and cannot there deposit, and to which yet satisfactions are impossible, against his knowledge to be mad, to have what he knows all the World cannot make it possible for him to have, this tears his Soul. Affections, these that may be said in some sense to fulfil some of the expressions of the Torments of that place, their Envy makes the gnashing of their Teeth, and their Desires are their Vultures. Thus Tantalus's riotous hunger that does gnaw his bowels, is his Worm that never dies; and his intemperate thirst his everlasting burnings; and his Water that he cannot reach or taste of, is his Lake of fire without Metaphor; So that desire alone without its satisfaction, is so much of Hell, and yet this is the worldly sensual man's estate exactly here on Earth; for he hath nothing but desires and lusts; and his condition is not easier at all, for how is Tantalus more wretched than a Midas, or than any covetous wretch, who in the midst of affluence and heaps, hungers as much as Midas did for meat and for Gold too, and an touch neither for his uses? so that the Worlds delights are very like the miseries of Hell, and men with so much eager and impatient pursuit do but anticipate their torments, and invade Damnation here.

And if the case be so, sure there is no great self-denial in our Psalmist here, when he resolves to desire nothing upon Earth in comparison of his God: 'Tis no such glorious conquest of my Appetite to make it not pursue a present Hell, and an eternal one annexed to it before a Savior: Yet the World does so.

Some there are that desire Money rather; and although when Judas did so, this desire could not bear itself, but cast all back again; and though it did disgorge, it burst him too; the Sin itself supply'd the Law, and his guilt was his Execution. Yet this will not terrify, men will do the like, betray a Master, a Savior, and a God; only not for so little money peradventure. Others, when the Lord paid his own Blood for their Redemption, yet if their wrath thirsts for his Blood that does offend them, their revenge makes their Enemies the sweeter blood, though their own Soul bleed to death in his stream. To others the deservings of the Partner of an unclean moment, are much greater than all that the Lord Jesus knew to merit at their hands or purchase for them. And it is no wonder they are so ungrateful to their Savior, when they are so barbarous to themselves, as to choose not to have present Divine Possessions rather than not suffer the vengeance of their own Appetites; choose merely to desire here, though that be to do what they do in Hell, rather than have in Heaven. O thou my Soul! if thou wilt needs desire, propose at least some satisfaction to thy Appetite, do not covet only needs thirst for a fever, and desire merely to inflame desire and Torments: But seek there where all thy wants will find an infinite happy supply, even in thy Savior; covet the riches of his Grace and Goodness, thirst for the fountain opened for transgression, for the waters of the well of Life, desire him that is the desire of all Nations; yet why should we desire even him? when we have him in Heaven, and we have nothing upon Earth left to desire, but that God who hath exalted him unto his Kingdom in Heaven, would in his due time exalt us also to the same place, whither our Savior Christ is gone before. To whom, &c.

The Seventh SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. Third Wednesday in LENT. 1663/4.

MARK I. 3.

Prepare ye the way of the Lord.

I Shall not break this single short Command asunder into Parts, but shall instead of doing that observe three Advents of our Savior in this Life, before that last to Judgment: For each of which as it must concern us, there must be preparation made by us. In pressing which I do not mean to urge you to do that which none but God can do; It is not in man to direct his own ways, much less the Lord's; The very preparations of the Heart are from him. Therefore supposing the preventings of his Graces, I shall subjoin, that the Comporting with those graces, the using of his strengths to the rooting out of ourselves all aversation to Virtue, and all love of Vice; and planting other inclinations, even Resolutions of good life, is the only thing that can make way for Christ and for his benefits.

Now of those Advents, the

First was, when he came Commission'd by God to reveal his Will, to propose the Gospel to our belief, the coming of Christ as a Prophet, which particularly is intended in the Text. The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as it is written, prepare ye the way of the Lord. The Second was, that coming which the Prophet Isaiah did foresee, and in the astonishment of Vision asked, Who is this that comes from Edom? with died garments from Bozrah, travelling in the greatness of his Strength? Why is he red in his Apparel, and his garments like him that treadeth in the Wine-fat? And it was the Prospect of him when he came to tread the Wine-press of the Wrath of God, to Sacrifice himself for us upon the Cross, his coming as a Priest. The Third is, when he comes to visit for Iniquity, coming coersively as a King with his Iron Rod, to execute his threats on the rebellious; those that will not have him reign over them: This coming also was considered in my Text; for in the parallel place of S. Matth. it is said, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, for this is he of whom it was spoken by the Prophet Isaiah, saying, the Voice of one crying in the Wilderness, prepare yet the way of the Lord.

For each of these in order, I shall show you what prepares his way, beginning with the first, His coming as a Prophet, appearing in the World to reveal his Fathers' Will, the Gospel.

Now the Preparative for this Appearance is discovered easily; we find both in this Chapter, and the parallel places, that John came to make way for it by the Baptism and Preaching of Repentance; and it was Prophecied of him, that he should go before him in the Spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the Fathers with the Children, and the Disobedient to the Wisdom of the Just, (to the minding of just things) so to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke i. 17. And this is a preparative so necessary, that the Nation of the Jews affirm, it is merely for the want of this that he does yet defer his coming: And though the appointed time for it be past, yet because of their sinfulness and impenitence he does not appear; adding If Israel Repent but one day presently the Messias cometh. And it is thus far true, that though it hindered not his coming, yet it hindered his receiving; although it did not make him stay, it made him be refused. I may lay all down in this Proposition.

Where there is not the preparation of Repentance, where there are not inclinations and desires for Virtue; if Christ come with the glad tidings of the Gospel, He is sure to be rejected, his Religion disbeliev'd.

If the Word of the Son of God might be taken in his own case, this would be soon evinced, for when He came unto his own, they were so far from preparing his way, that they received him not, but did reject and would not entertain him as one sent from God; of all this he only gives this account, that he found no other opposition but from vicious humors. John. viii. 43, 44, 45. Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my Word: Ye are of your father the Devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do; and because I tell you the truth ye believe me not. As if he should have said; the reason why you do not regard me or my Doctrine, but reject us both, is not because my Doctrine hath not means to convince your understandings, but 'tis not agreeable to your inclinations: The Works that I have done to make my person be received, and my Words credible, are such as no heart how hard or blind soever can withstand; but the Doctrine I bring along is most unwelcome, ye cannot abide to hear it. Now as he that shuts his Eyes, or turns away his Face because he hates to look upon an object, may not see it though it be all clothed with day; as visible as Sunshine; so your blindness proceeds hence that ye hate the light because your deeds are evil. Neither do you love to hear that which you have no mind to practice; and you will not be persuaded to believe that is your necessary duty, which you are not willing to perform; but will rather choose to think I do my Works by a confederacy with Belzebub the Prince of Devils; although it be apparent that those Lusts which you will do, and which my Works and Doctrine come to drive out of the World, they are Lusts of the Devil; and I, because I tell you the truth, truth I confess somewhat severe, and not so agreeable, therefore you will not believe me.

And is it not strange when nothing can be acceptable to the Understanding but as it hath appearance of Truth, and when Truth comes with evidence and demonstration, though it be but speculative useless truth, yet it does seize and force assent, that yet Christ's truths, which did not want conviction, for they came to them with that infallibility which Miracles can give, should be therefore not believed because they were truths? not strange at all: for his truths were not for their turns, nor humors.

And therefore he says to them, Mat. xxi. 32. Ye repented not that ye might believe them. As if they assented not with their Understandings but their Appetites: And we ourselves have seen too much unhappy evidence of men, whom Libertinism hath made Antimonians, whom a desire of being loose from duty hath made Solifidians, of them whom sensuality hath made Atheists; men that become Proselytes to their Lusts; the converts of their base affections.

And we cannot expect it should be otherwise. For certainly that men who are averse to the duties of Christianity, and cannot bend their minds to the observance of that which Christ's commands, should not care to believe they are his Precepts or their duty is but very natural, they were unwise should they do otherwise, it being far more reasonable to deny the duty and obligation, than granting both, to trample on that obligation which they do acknowledge, and to renounce that Duty which they do confess. Is it not far more prudent to believe that there is not a God that does regard our foolish actions here below, (which are not more worthy or more likely to enter into his considerations, than the buzzings of flies into the notices and observations of a Statesman;) than if we do believe one does severely mark, will take a strict account of, execute a vengeance for them, yet not incline our minds to leave them? if we did suffer this belief to creep into our minds, to lie close unto our hearts, sure it would fret off our averseness to Piety and inclinations to sin; we durst not entertain them both together, these thoughts would prove very ill company; they would distract and tear the mind, our Souls would tremble and disjoint, and we be sure to put one of them off.

Covetous and Adulterous Felix when he began to think that S. Paul's Sermon of a Judgment to come might be true, straight began to shake, and then immediately to turn the Sermon off, bid S. Paul depart till another time. Nor can there any other reason be assigned for this; for in the System of Christ's Religion there is not anything but is so suited to the very Constitution of a natural being, that the Soul would instantly embrace and suck in, if the prepossessions of Vices, which the mind will not resolve to part with and repent of, did not infect, taint the Palate with prejudices, did not keep out the belief. For the morality which it enjoins did long before the birth of this Religion make its way into the Tenants and the Faith of every Sect of whole Mankind, it broke through all the oppositions of corrupted Nature and depraved Habits; nor could all the Devils arts (who then governed the World) stifle or quench the Light of Reason, which through all that darkness did discover such deformity in Vice, such strict agreement betwixt that which we call Virtue, and a rational Creature, that they accounted it, and truly, the essential duty of his nature; he that was wicked was reputed false to his own being; as great an aberration from, and contradiction to Nature, as an Animal that were insensible, or as cold fire.

In this all the most distant Factions conspir'd in despite of Principles. The Stoic, who by fettering all Events, all Consultations and Designs in the lines of inexorable Destiny does seem to make all Virtue worthless, all endeavors towards it useless, yet requires it with as strict necessity as his Fate prescribes with; his reasons are as ineluctable as her Laws. Nay he does seem to break his Adamantine Chain, to make way for this Chain of Virtues, though his Jupiter were bound by that, yet for the sake of these he leaves 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, our appetites, and actions in our power, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that so there may be place for doing well while it is in our choice, and we are free to do it. And on the other side, the greatest enemies to their necessity and to choice too, the Sect that made all actions and things in the whole World to be, not effects of any Agent that intended them, but merely sports of Chance and matter; who taught that their own souls were but the concretion of some Atoms casually met together without any direction and to no end; yet the great Master of it in his Ethics would not suffer any of this blind Contingency to have to do in Humane actions, regulating them by strictest Rules and Laws, and in plain contradiction to his Tenants (from which our Age derives the most of their impiety) although he held there was no God looked on, nor after-life attended, none that did see, or would reward or punish any of his actions, yet requires highest Virtue, yea, and lived such too they say. In a word, many of them raised Morality to such a pitch, as if it had arrived at the same heights from whence our Christian Revelation did pretend to come. And there is nothing so peculiar to Christ's Doctrine in the points of Morality, but you may find it recommended by the Heathen as a thing which no external obligation did impose, but the Law of their making did prescribe, which they read in themselves, and Christian Morality is but a fairer and more perfect Copy of the impressions of Reason on our Soul, cleared from the blurs and defects which they had been tainted with; but Naturales Tabulae Natures Decalogue, wrote by the Finger of the Lord: So that to quarrel with Christ for requiring it, is the same thing as to be angry with our Savior because the nature of the Fire is such as does require that it should burn. Nay many of them were so sensible of the unhappy state of their Corruption, found so great pressures in themselves from the weights of their vicious inclinations, discerned so perfect an antipathy betwixt their being and their actions, that when with all the arts of Reason and the practice of their Philosophy they could not ease themselves, they went to Sorcery and Magic for a Cure, received Catharticks, and a discipline of purity from Hell, the Region of uncleanness; the Devil making them believe he would assist in casting out himself: Such were the stress, the restlessness, the groans, the cry of Nature to be rid of its impurity. These poor Souls were mistaken in their Method; but if the Devil by those worships of his which they were used to, had not stopped the avenues, sure one would judge they had prepared the way for Christianity; there being no obstruction to it, nothing that can hinder its acceptance, but the low esteem and aversation of Virtue: For if men believe the Moral truths, they have no reason in the world to doubt the Supernatural, these being intended for the most part as encouragements to those other, as God's last attempts to kindle in us love of Virtue by such strong incentives; that, that wherein Philosophy was ignorant, and the Law weak, as having neither Promises nor Terrors equal to the force of our Corruptions, that the Gospel might effect, as having both to the utmost possibility of Divine Contrivance: Now this requires us to believe those Supernaturals mostly for this reason, by believing them to make us perform what it enjoins. And it is apparent that because men would not do this, therefore they will not believe those. Shew me but any one that is sincere and strict in Christian duties that does doubt the Principles; if there be such an one be cannot doubt them long, not only for Christ's Promise sake, If any man will do my Will, he shall know of the Doctrine whether it be of God, he will soon know that Doctrine is from God that does prescribe such Godlike lives; nor only for the Churches judgment, which did make Synesius a Christian Bishop before he did believe the Resurrection, upon that confidence they had of him by reason of his Piety: But in reason why should he that does embrace the Piety, disbelieve that which was proposed to his belief only to urge him to embrace, only to crown that Piety? Indeed he that accounts his Vices but sleight tricks of wit, or folly; only pleasant satisfactions to the desires of his Nature; (for he understands no nature but his carnal one) he hath no reason to believe there was a Passion of the Son of God, by making him a Sacrifice for sin so to condemn sin in the flesh; is not prepared to think that there is an Eternal weight of Indignation due and ready for it. He that hath but mean thoughts of Virtue, counts it only pedantry, or as it were the Flatus of the Mind, making the Soul Hypochondriack, it is impossible that he should think God was Incarnated and died to teach it by his Doctrine and Example, and to purchase graces to enable us to live it; or that there is a Resurrection to reward it, a Trinity engaged in working out Salvation for it. I must confess I would believe, that men persuade themselves that the reason of their disbelief is only this, that these things are not testified sufficiently; because I find the Man in Hell would have one sent to his Brethren from the Dead, to testify unto them of that place of Torments, Luke xvi, 28. as if those Truths did want witnessing. But this is not because enough hath not been done for their conviction in the truth of Christ's Religion; for there is hardly anything besides in the whole World that men believe, but they believe upon less grounds. The whole World was convinced in such a manner, as that millions chose to die rather than not confess it; that many Ages proved but Centuries of Martyrdom unto that Truth; all Torments were more eligible than the belief of this Religion, which was confirmed so, that against all arts and power of Opposition, against the Wit and Fury of the World, though all the Subtlety, and all the Strength of Earth resisted it, yet it over-spread the Universe. Besides it is most prudent to believe it too, for if there be another World what then? There was enough done therefore; but Corruptions suffer them not to attend to that which hath been done. And 'tis no wonder they should do so at this distance, for they contrasted with Christ's Miracles when present; and they were so uneasy under the conviction of them, that rather than be pressed so by the mighty power of his Works, they did design to rid themselves of him that wrought them, John xi. 47. you may find them struggling with his demonstrations to keep off the Evidence, What do we? for this man doth many Miracles. Yea, they do conspire against the Miracles themselves, and would put Lazarus also to death, because he was raised from the dead; they could not let the Evidence and the Conviction live, but they must murder that too. Nay more, as if the pertinency of their prejudices could do mightier Works than Christ, and could control, and were above the power of his Miracles, it is said to have bound his hands, and he could do no mighty Works at Nazareth because of it, Mar. vi. 6. At least as saith Theophylact, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, he could not do them where men were not capable they should be done. So that Christ did pronounce from Reason and Experience, If they believe not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. Such an amazing argument might probably astonish, but would not convince, unless it met with honest inclinations; for after the surprise of it were over and had vanish'd, then the corruption that Bosom Sophister, would stir, and goad; and urge incessantly; so that to ease himself, the Man must find out some cross Scruple to weaken the force of that Evidence, and the Conviction would vanish like the Ghost. And if we should examine the Experience of ourselves and others, we should find that just according to the rate of virtuous inclinations and dispositions of heart to part with sin, so are men prepared for the belief of Christ; so are their cares and regards of his Religion: He that is honestly inclined opens his Soul to Christianity, for it speaks to his heart, 'tis right to the grain of his Soul, he looks upon the Promises as made to him, and lays them up as God's encouragements of his inclinations, everything in the Gospel fits the temper of his mind. And he that is but pretty well disposed, that loves Virtue for the most part, but does allow himself someone corruption, he always hearkens to Religion where it sets itself against those Vices, which he hates, but as to his own particular evil inclination there he is a little Infidel, cannot persuade himself that God will be so stern against a single pleasure, that one petty indulgence should be so considerable, that it should provoke to those extremities the Bible threatens; and can by no means believe S. James, that he that offends in one point thus, is guilty of all. And they upon whose constitutions there are weights and Plummetts, that incline them to some vicious courses, and by loose Education have those pronenesses of temper pamper'd; and by having their inclinations followed and indulged taught them to crave, then to get head and to command; and then by conversation with others that mind nothing but satisfaction of those bents of the Brute part, that allow themselves all the desires of constitution, are come to swill the pleasures, profits, and the Honors that do wait on those practices: Or whosoever by whatever steps arrive at an habit of doing thus, and a great liking of them, and so to improbity of Heart, to utter aversations of the strictnesses of Piety, all which they have lived so out of: 'Tis known that not enduring to be bound up in those narrow paths of Piety and Virtue, they burst all the Obligations to them; seek little things to cavil at, or to deride, hoping with those their poisoned Arrows, through the skirts, and the Extremer parts to send a Wound into the very Vitals of Religion; for they aim at the Heart, when they pretend to strike only the out Lap of its Garments; and to say all at once, grow down-right Atheists. And though as once at Corinth, now again the World by Wisdom knows no God; there being Skill and Manage in this Mystery of Infidelity, and it requires Study, Wit, and Parts; yet they proceed just by the Method of King David's Fool, first, he says in his heart there is no God, before he say it in his thoughts and Opinions: He wishes it, and so comes to believe it, the Atheism is rooted in the Seat of the Affections, and it branches thence into the Mind, at least into the Mouth, and finding Hell the greatest check to their Delights, which they cannot determine with themselves to leave and to repent of; therefore because they will not quench it with their tears, they study how to put it out with Arguments: And merely for this reason, that they will not live like Men, they resolve therefore to believe that they shall die like Beasts. But alas! they must live forever with the Devil and his Angels, it that Christ whom they reject, does not lay hold on them, and rescue them from thence as he is in his passage to his Cross, the next Way we must prepare for him; and my next Part.

The Solemn days approaching will discover to you this Way, namely, the Passage from the Garden in Gethsemane to Golgotha; There you will see he does begin his Journey with the Amazements of an Agony, and ended it in something like the horrors and the outcries of Despair; he travailed under such a load as made his life gush out through all the parts of his whole Body, the weight of it did make his Soul faint by the way; and when he was upon the Tree, crush'd it out, and made it expire sooner than the stress of Nature would have done, and forced it to burst out away in Prayers and strong Cries, that so he might sooner escape from under that sad pressure. And then do but consider and look on him under that representation which S. Paul does show of him, how all that time that he was creeping under that dire burden in that dolorous way, he was merely pressing on with all the haste he could to overtake us in our course, and rescue us from Ruin. For that Journey was a Race, and we the Prize. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , I have been laid hold on, saith he, Phil. iii. 12. laid hold on in the Agonistick sense, as in a Race, he so expresses it: And that he was laid hold on by these sufferings, the Epistle to the Hebrews does evince; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , saith Chrysostom, in that Way he pursued me till he caught me; his Agony was but his strife to overtake me, his Sweat the issue of his Race: When he came down from Godhead in his Incarnation, he pursued us then into our nature, he laid hold of our Flesh, and followed us from Heaven to the lowest parts of the Earth. But when he went thus to his Cross here, he pursued us then into our guilts, he laid hold of our sins, and took them up and bore them on the Tree, then he descended into Hell to follow us. This as it was formally done once for all, so in its virtue, influence, and blessed effects, 'tis still in doing, as to thee, and me, and all of us; and the approaching season is to represent it so. Now sure we need no motives to prepare the way for him who runs that he may obtain our Salvation, who though he labored under such a dismal burden, yet still presses on to catch us, so to rescue us from sin and Hell: If he think fit, and can endure to strive thus, I will make all ready, and stand fair to have my guilt seized from me, and to be laid hold on for my Blessedness, to be the Prize, the Crown of all Christ's Agonies, that which he thinks worthy with so much struggling to contend for.

Now the same Preparation is required here, that made way for his other coming, that is, Repentance, in one word, a disposition and sincere desire of heart to part with every evil and corrupt affection, to quit every sin. Sin lying in the way made it so dreadful, God laid upon him the iniquity of us all, and that weight threw him prostrate on the Earth, and sunk him into 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : And yet if any were more galling, 'twas the weight of those that were clogged with Impenitence, this was more heavy, more afflictive to him than his Cross. To bewail this and the issues of it he left off to consider his own Sufferings and required others also to do so, Weep not for me, weep for yourselves. And sure it was for want of such Tears to dilute and temper his sad Potion that his Cup was so amazing to him: It was for this the Angel that came from God's presence to comfort him, left him still in Agonies, could not do it, because the joys and comforts of that presence are at Sinners that Repent, Luke xv. 10. And God himself in Hoseah seeing Ephraim would not reform cries out, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Consolatio abscondita est ab oculis meis: Comfort is hidden from mine Eyes; so the LXX also. Now they that refuse to do themselves this Honor that the Angel could not do, to comfort their God in his Agony, how will he ease himself on them? How will he laugh at their Calamity? be comforted in their Destruction at his coming as a King in Executions? the next Way that we must prepare, and my last Part.

A Progress this, I confess, that is not usual to our King, nor is according to the Method of his Government: God called it his strange Work under the Law, and much more is it so under the Gospel, when he Governs by the Law of Faith: For Faith being the evidence of things not seen, shows us Rewards and Punishments not present, but at distance, out of sight, in the World to come, to keep us in our Duty. And then why should the Ax be now laid to the root of the Tree? when as there is to be an universal Conflagration, where every Tree that beareth not good Fruit shall be cast in? And upon this we see events do not discriminate deservings, things happen to the good and bad alike; we may have seen the wicked in great Power, spreading himself like a green Bay-tree; like a triumphal Garland, as he were all Ensign of Victory, all verdant spreading Conquest. Yea, and when the Ax is at the root of the Tree, we know not whether it designs it for the Temple or the Kitchen, to make a Fire, or to make a God. The Day that cometh shall declare all, when the delay both of Rewards and Punishments shall be compensated with interest: And it does scarce seem equal to inflict them twice. But yet O Lord! in days when Scoffers appear: that walk after their own lusts, and say, where is the promise of his coming? For except that the Fathers fell asleep, some men are dead and others risen in their place, all things else continue as they were from the beginning, there always were vicissitudes of Flourish and Decay in every Nation, and in these things there are no footsteps of a Providence or Judgment: In days when men resist and deny thy Hand because they do not feel it; and since thy Judgments are removed out of their sight, defy Thee too, and dash thyself out of the World; in such days 'tis but just that thou shouldst come to their conviction, and confute them with thy Judgments into Ruin. And truly since it must be horrid provocation that makes him come beyond the compass of his Covenant to Revenge, the Executions are mostly very fatal, as if they were what they seem to prevent, the last Day, and the final Doom upon such Nations. For to the Jews they look as if they had fulfilled all that the Prophecy was mistaken to foretell, and were as irreversible and utter as the Sentence of the Day of Judgment.

Now to prepare for such Approaches of the Lord our King, there is one only means, that is, resolving Fealty and Allegiance to him, and that not formal only, or but idle Homage, but renouncing all Confederacy with his Enemies, Sin, and the Devil, and serving him with all the heart and all the strength. For he is that King in the 19. of S. Luke, who did not only cause his contumacious Enemies, such as would not have him to reign over them to be slain before him, v. 27. making his way over their Necks whose Hearts he could not set up his Throne in; not did only cause those Servants who were so far from preparing his Way, that upon confidence he delay'd his coming they smote their fellow Servants, and did eat and drink with the drunken; were unjust to others, and indulged themselves in all licentious living, cause them to be cut asunder, and to have their portion in the Region of weeping, where these intemperate should have only tears to drink, and for their Riots only gnashing of teeth, Teeth ready to revenge their former Luxuries on themselves, gnashing as to devour one another, Matth. xxiv. 48. But he is that King too that Executed Sloth as well as Treason, in Matth. xxv. 30. who having given one a Talent, trusted him with abilities of doing service in the station he had put him in, which for his not endeavoring to do, though he corrupted not his faculties, because he buried them and did not use them, but indulged to idleness, condemned him therefore to utter darkness, to the proper Mansion of the slothful, all whose time can be nothing but night, since his whole Life is but as sleep. But in a word, S. Matthew hath said all, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand; as it is written, prepare ye the way of the Lord.

And here to stop, and to reflect at once upon ourselves and this which hath been said: And first, on this last way by which he comes as a King in Executions.

Here I cannot but take notice, that we have some that do design and act among us as if they were this King's Harbingers, his Pioneers rather, to prepare the way for his invasion on us; or were his forlorn hope sent out to give the onset of his Executions, and were sure of Him in the reserve to second them: Truly their Threats and their Attempts are big and Insolent, and most men's expectations are not very comfortable.

To say with some, this Confidence of theirs is built on the non-execution of the Laws (which seems slighter than in the old Comparison of Cobwebs) for notwithstanding their fine close contexture, there are holes left for Spiders to creep through; and not the great Flies only, every ruffling and befriended Sinner whether by his Money or Relations, but the lesser too, now they have learned to fly in Swarms, break through, to say that were a Complaint out of my sphere.

And truly when I think on the temper of their fury, how it is hardened in the fire of Execution, charges Death not only in the Field, but on the Scaffold too; I must needs think it hath some stronger Ingredients, and there is something of Religion in it.

Now really there can be nothing else of that but an opinion of the great defection of Virtue in their Enemies: Open Profaneness, public Licence, living without fear of God or Man, makes them look upon them as men designed for excision. Achior is said to give this counsel to the Captain of the Host of Babel, when he went against Judea.

My Lord and Governor, If there be any Error in this People, and they sin against their God, let us consider that this shall be their Ruin, and let us go up and we shall overcome them: But if there be no iniquity in the Nation, let now my Lord pass by, lest the Lord defend them, and their God be for them, and we become a Reproach before all the World. And sure that they who when they were a formidable Body, furnished with Principles as bad as now they can be, and with Weapons too; and flesh'd with Victories and mischief, should at once depart from these advantages, quietly lay them down and all their Interests; and now when they are scattered and disfurnish'd, destitute of every strength but what ourselves afford them, that they should make Attempts which no Courage can sustain, nor Reason countenance; all this I say, admits of no account but this, that they who were amazed at God's exertings of himself, when they saw him appear so visibly on our behalf, and locked upon us as a party purified in the Furnace of Affliction, and the dross and scum gone out of us; (for we had some Reputation then:) Now seeing the return we make to God, as we had been delivered to commit Abominations, they are grown confident God is engaged against us, that we have filled up our measure, have been Fatted for a Sacrifice and are ripe to bleed: And if our supineness give them Weapons, and our iniquities give them Courage, there are enough will count our slaughter an Obligation to the Lord. O! give me leave to contradict the Counsel of my Text, prepare Not this way of the Lord, do not thus make ready for his coming by provoking him to hasten it in Fury; rather Block up all Passages and stop his March; you have wherewith at hand; The duties you are now practicing, those of this Season, Humiliation and Amendment, are Barricadoes strong enough against him, he cannot break through them. He had sent out his Executions against Israel, and Ahab did but Fast and put on Sackcloth and they straight retired, were beat off for a whole Life, Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself? because he humbleth himself I will not bring the evil in his days. The habit of Repentance, if Piety and Virtue get but Countenance, it will divert him in his March; and it must needs, for it prepares his other way, that to the place of Expiations, to the Throne of Grace, his Cross; the Second thing.

And should we not prepare his Way to that by our Repentance, we were false to our own actions that pretend to do it, unjust to the time that calls for it, but most unkind to Christ and to our Souls.

What in that fatal Race, and under all that load he did stretch and press on so to lay hold upon us, to seize our sins and Sacrifice them in himself, that then we should retain them, should not let him have them, but cling to them still; that when he was upon the Cross with naked Breast and open Arms, as it were ready to receive all wounds sin could inflict, and every wickedness of ours had a stab at his Heart, that we should still reserve the envenom'd Ponyard, keep the malice of the wickedness to Crucify Him to ourselves afresh, and kill ourselves also forever! That we should suffer him to swoon and Die under the burden of our guilt, yet we ourselves resolve to keep and not to quit the guilt! For do not you deceive yourselves, Christ did not take away the guilt of any one sin, from any man that does not part with it, but still retains the sin; that would imply a contradiction: Such men are so far from preparing the Lord's way to his Cross, that that whole Journey was to them in vain: They will not let him have their sins to bear upon the Tree, deny their Priest a Sacrifice for them when he was going to the Altar.

Indeed they that come to the Celebration of his Passion thus disposed, plant troubles in his way to his Cross, and make it more grievous; yea they obstruct his passage thither even when they wait upon him to it: Those that come with indevotion to attend that sad Procession, such as they usually go to their Prayers with; these are so far from making his Way smooth and easy, that 'tis they that throw him in that Journey prostrate on his Face, and cast him into Agonies of Prayer, so to expiate and instruct their little sense of that to which such Sufferings were due, and which must have such deprecations. They that come thither with their swelling scornful Pride's and their Ambitions, lay Hills in his way, and when he is so heavy laden and so weak, they make him climb up Precipices, whence their Scorns too throw him down again with his Cross and Incumbrances upon him. All these heights must be level'd and the Mountains be brought low, if we prepare the way for him. The Gaudy people, they that spend the severe hours of this sad Season, and of the preparation for that Passion in the Arts and labors of Attire, that mortify and punish themselves only in cares and in Contrivances to make and dress up Beauties, and the study of these enters with, thrusts out the grand concerns of their own Souls, and the employments of this time, even which they are about: These doubtless are attir'd in Funeral conformity to wait upon him to his Cross, on which he had no other dress but the rags of his own Skin: Come they not rather to expose his nakedness, and shame him from themselves, that so he may go by and not take notice of them in his passage, nor be concerned for them in his Sufferings? The Hypocrites either to God or to their Brethren, that have only the Ceremonies, the Civilities of Honesty of Religion, make show of both, but yet are false to God, and insincere with Man, cruelly betraying or deluding, yea enraging those necessities which with fair speeches they pretend to smooth and salve; they act over again the treacherous malice of his Persecutors, who under the kindness of the Cup of Consolation which was given to them that were condemned to Die, namely, Wine mingled with Myrrh to cheer the Heart and cloud the Understanding, and so lessen sense of Suffering, in scorn and mischief gave him Vinegar and Gall, which though it counterfeit the other taste, serves only to prolong life for more future Torment. The Swearer stabs him all along his Journey; and the Men of Black Designs and Malice, they pour Venom in those Wounds.

But why stand I thus to enumerate particulars? All such come not to the Redemption of the Day, but only to the Scene: Amidst other like Entertainments of this Holy severe Time which the Theater affords, they come also to see the Tragedy of Jesus, to behold the dead march to Golgotha, indifferent and unconcerned in that (as in the rest) whether there were such a procession in earnest, or whether he did come at all indeed; which casts me on his other coming, the last thing, his coming in the first Revealing of the Gospel.

And here I hope I shall have no reflections to make as to preparing for this coming. Christ certainly did find his Way prepared so to this Nation, that we believe he was more early entertained in it, than almost anywhere in the whole Gentile World: And ever since his cares for it were so particular, that they, who would fulfil the Revelation in this Church, seem to err with some reason, when as his regards were so peculiar for this, as if he had not concerned himself in any other. And sure none other ever had so long, such opportunities and advantages; so that I cannot press you to prepare the Lord's Way, since he is among us. Righteous art thou O Lord! and wonderful in thy Mercies! yet if I might plead with Thee concerning them, I would enquire what hast thou done here all this while after thy so long abode among us? what are we the better? The last attempt of God to reclaim Man, when he had shown the World all other means were fruitless, was by Thee his Son! by whom he did convey all the full measures of his Graces; and now what effect of these is there in us? Shew me how all this care and cost hath made us be more just, sober, or chaste; in any way more virtuous than those Heathens whose Religion came from Hell? We find Thee saying, I beheld Satan as Lightning fall from Heaven, his Power vanishing like that which does but flash and perish, never can be recollected. But alas! that falling flash hath kindled foul heats that will break out into Fire and Brimstone. Idolatry 'tis true, is profligated hence; the Devil is not worshipped as he was with a Religion of Impieties, Uncleanesses, Drunkenness, and the like: But yet the same things are now made to consist with thy Religion, as well as with that of the Devil, and we can do all those things and be Christians. Some, as if their Profession were a Charm which made them shot-free from God's threats do they what they will, they will adventure any the most desperate Impiety and choose Damnation in a sin, and yet believe, be confident, and so secure. On others it does work indeed the Form of Godliness, makes them such perfect Pageants of Religion, that they oft fall in love with their own Vizour, and please themselves as if their dress were Nature, while yet under that form there are the greatest falsnesses, and black treacherous designs, the most unjust and Bloody practices that even make the Form of Godliness look dismal; and yet all this joined with so much superciliousness, with such difference to Christ, that you would say the Pharisees were now all of Christ's side. And is this all the Lord came hither for? to be a Sanctuary for the profane, a Cloak for Hypocrites? Give me leave to relate a Story I have read of four or five Vessels of Portugals who were Shipwrack'd to the drowning of almost five hundred men, only fifty three escaped, and they were left naked and hurt upon an Island Desolate, as the Israelites Wilderness, which needed the same Miracle to sustain them, and found the like: For God as it were rained Fish upon them; and so did that which kept them alive, till at last they espied a large Boat of Chineses making to the shore to take in Water in that Island, and the people coming all to Land for their refreshment; which they seeing, resolved to make themselves the Masters of their Boat and Goods, and go away in it: A man would have thought their own sad state in that Land of Desolation should have taught them Compassion; at least God's Mercies to them should have taught them Justice to others. But when men have received great signal instances of God's Protecting mercies, they think then that they are his Favorites, and then they may do anything: They therefore got into a Wood near the Shore and Boat, and it was ordered among them, that when the Captain should pronounce Jesus three times, then they should run out of the Wood and seize the Vessel.

Lord! would not such a word be a Spell and Charm against unmerciful, inhumane, and unjust Designs? would it not exorcize all impious Contrivances? It is no new thing to preface mischief with an holy Name, and bring in Jesus in the Prologue to Iniquity; to talk of God and act the Devil. They seized it, and driving from the Land, left the true Owners of the Vessel to possess their misery; Being secure, they search'd and found no person in it but a Child of thirteen years of age, and they fell to what Victuals they met, and having eaten, with hands lifted up they praised God solemnly, and then proceeded to cut out and share the Silks and Riches of the Vessel: The Boy seeing all this, and drowned in Tears would not be comforted by them, who promised him all friendly usage; but he desired rather to go Die with his Father than live with such wicked people: Being reprehended for that Speech, Would you know, said he, why I said it? Because I saw you when you had filled your Bellies praise your God with hands lift up, and yet for all that, like Hypocrites, never care for making restitution of what you have stolen, but be you sure that after Death you shall feel the rigorous Chastisement of the Lord Almighty. The Captain admiring would needs persuade him to be a Christian: Whereunto earnestly beholding him, he answered; I understand not what you mean, declare it first, and you shall know my mind: And being told by them of the blessed Author and the purity of our Religion, what God did to Redeem us from our sins, and what holy Laws he hath left us: With Eyes and Hands lift up, he weeping, said; Blessed be thy Power O Lord! that permits such people to live on the Earth that speak so well of Thee, and yet so ill observe thy Law as these blinded Miscreants do, who think that Robbing and Preaching are things that can be acceptable to thee: And so returned to his Tears and obstinacy.

To see the strictness of the Christians Obligations, and the looseness of their Lives, to see their Practices dash against their Professions! 'Tis such a thing as makes them be the Scorn of honest Heathen Children. And is this all that men are required to prepare the way of the Lord for? Is this all he can do after so many Centuries of the abode of him and his Religion among us? While there is no more of his influence appears, I must suspect he is not here, the Lord is not among us, but is gone. And certainly if it be possible to drive him out, if there be any Art of doing that, we have Professors of that Mystery, and the Drolls are they. That men should sin against him by transgressing of his Laws is no wonder, for there is invitation to it in the Blood: That some did count him an Impostor is not strange, they had not met it may be, with means of Conviction, or were prepossessed with prejudice; but while men own his Person and Religion, to have a God only to make them sport, as it hath no temptation, so it hath no measures of its guilt: Atheism is an honest refuge from this Vice; it being much more sober and rational to think there is no God, than 'tis to make a mock of him whom they profess to be so. This is indeed to prepare his way to his Cross, for so the Jews and Soldiers did, they put a Scepter in his hand only to take it out and smite him with his Scepter, they bowed the knee and cried Hail King, and so humbly spit in his Face, and they put a Crown, but 'twas of Thorns, on his Head: thus they Worship'd him in scorn and Crucify'd him with his Dignities. And so we serve Religion: When we would have a Scene of Mirth, that must be put in a ridiculous disguise to laugh at, the Son of God must enter Travesty, and our Discourse is nothing but the Gospel in Burlesque. And is it not time for him to retire? But O prepare not this path for him to go away in. The Heathens thought it much more possible to Chain their Deity, than to be safe if he were gone, Any the strangest contradiction is more easy, than Security without him. Now if you but make up S. Peter's Chain, that will hold your God sure: Add to Faith (that's the first Link that unites us to him,) Virtue, and to Virtue Temperance, and the other Graces named there. If he were going; yet Return unto me, and I will return unto you saith the Lord: If you do but prepare to meet him in the Duties of this Season, you are sure to find him at his Cross: and if we do but lay hold on him there, and by the mortifications of a true Repentance partake in his Death; He that is the Way and the Life will through that dust and ashes from that Death, make a way for us to his Eternal Life. To which, &c.

The Eighth SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. October 9. 1664.

1 JOHN V. 4.

This is the Victory which overcometh the World, even our Faith.

These Words, though they explicitly make only one single Proposition, yet they imply several.

First, That the State of Christianity is a state of Warfare; He that is born of God must fight we see, for he must overcome; which is the Second; In this War he must not satisfy himself with being on his Guard; defensive, looking to secure himself, but he must Assault and Conquer, nothing else will serve his turn but Victory.

Thirdly, The Enemy which he must have no Peace with, but must vanquish, is the World.

Fourthly, Faith is sufficient forces to assist him in his Conquest.

Fifthly, Faith where it is rightly made use of is a certain Victory.

But I shall not handle these in Thefi thus, but for the more practical treating of them shall make and answer three Enquiries.

First, What the way is that the World does wage War in? where its Strength lies? and how it manages that force so as to get advantage over men? and how it does improve each such advantage till it gets a perfect Conquest?

Secondly, What the strengths of Faith are? how it charges, breaks the forces of the World, and does enable the Believer to overcome?

Thirdly, How far the Believer must pursue his Conquest? what must be the measures of his Victory? that he may know how to vanquish it so as that the World may not rebel again; not do like Joash smite three times, then leave, but smite until he make an end of danger: Having answered these, I shall endeavor to apply all to ourselves.

Now for the better handling of the first of these, I must show you how the Will of Man may be attacked and taken.

To which purpose I observe, that whatsoever liberty there is in human choice, yet every appetite seems in some sense determined in its tendencies to fix on that which appears simply best for it, for that instant which it chooseth in; I do not say that whensoever Reason peremptorily concludes a thing is best that the Will is determined instantly to that; for by a too unhappy evidence we know, that if the lower Soul does but beckon the Will another way, she can suspend and stop her prosecutions, and too oft finds cause to go along with that against the dictates of the Mind: But this I say, that in her last Executive Determinations she always tends to that which hath the fairest and most vigorous appearances of being best for her at that present time. If it seem strange how, since the Understanding can account the certain expectations of an happy everlastingness much better for the present, than a momentary worldly satisfaction; (for we have our Rules and our proportions by which we rate and choose Reversions rather than Possessions, and those of the other World exceed these beyond all the measures of proportion, and the Understanding does inform impartially of this;) How then if the Will can let those go and take these it can be said always to choose the better for the present? if it may be said to do so though it let those go, then by what wash or Chymick Artifices does she blanch or paint these so as to make them look better for the present? Now we may discover how these both may be, if we only reflect upon the manner of the actings of our own Souls. Where the things that stand in competition for our choice are both of the same kind, and have one common measure of their good or ill; (as for example, are both painful, or both profitable, or delightful) and no consideration of any other motive comes into the Ballance; here the Will must needs choose the best, refuse the worst. For merely out of aversation to pain to run into the stronger Pain, avoid the less; or out of Covetousness to refuse greater Wealth; or for delights sake only to prefer that which is less delightful, are practical contradictions. Where the Objects are of different kinds, one for example, profitable or delightful, but not without sin; and the other Virtuous, and spiteful Reason taking Virtues part, suggests the motives to it, God's Commands, his Promises, and Threats; here, though the inferior faculties prostitute all their baits, they cannot equal those proposals to the Will 'tis true; yet by their importunacies still pressing her, goading her by their stings, they can and do prevail with her to call the Understanding off from her attention to those other motives, and employ the thoughts upon the present

Object that does importune her so, and which by the agitations it does cause within the sensual part, puts the mind in disorder presently, distracts the thoughts, then seizes them; so that the Understanding being now intent to this, the better motives are let go and sink, and then the only ones in view are those of sense, which straight the Will rushes into the embraces of, and the other being vanish'd and no better than appearing, 'tis plain in those she sixes on the best. But if the mind will not be taken off, but Conscience fly in the Man's Face and will not let him rest, nor his Will fix, why then in this unquietness of hers she sets the thoughts on work and will not let them fix till they find out some salvo that can satisfy Carnality and Conscience too, that will let the Man have the sin and not deprive him of God's Favor: And if either application of God's Decrees and Promises without Condition absolutely to himself, and the assurances of Faith and trust will do it, (as we may know it will in some) or if not that, then if hopes of mercy, resolutions of repenting afterwards and leaving off the sin, (as this does do with most) then it is evident in choosing to obey his inclinations, with such salvo the man chooseth that which does appear best for the present. But if the mind unsatisfied with these, and not daring to trust such rotten planks against the very face of storm, object the uncertainty, at least, of these Principles, and the unsafeness of those after-hopes, not fit to be security against God's Threats, and would convince the man that conscience of resisting a temptation, and by that keeping himself free from the clutches of the Devil, and the fears of Hell, together with present assurance of God's favor, are more satisfying at the present than the pleasures of the sin: Yet those pleasant apprehensions of the Conscience of resisting re-encountering with the seeming impossibility of resisting always that which presses so, and will some time or other seize upon him, and finding the temptation to have sharper stings than his Religious fears of things which are not present, and of which he hath had no experience: And besides, he having never had any great sense of God's favor and rewards, the Landskip of them is but dim and faint upon the mind like those representations blind men have of Beauty (to whom if you discourse of exact features, perfect harmony of colors, of a graceful presence, cheerful air, and a good mine, and all those other know not whats, that being seen commit a Rape upon men's faculties, yet his conceptions of them are but very dark, who never hath had any notices of these but such as his Ears give) and though the Understanding chance to be positive and resolute in its determinations concerning them, yet still the apprehensions of them are not clear; futurity, which is one sort of distance, making objects, as all things afar off do, look but confused, and their Ideas not distinct, nor bright or brisk, therefore they move the Will but very coldly: Whereas the other pleasure being known, the apprehensions of it are more vigorous, the draught is strong and lusty on the Fancy, there is force in every line, the very image of it lives, and therefore is more efficacious, and by that prevails, that looking fairest and most tempting at that present, so that from this experience of ourselves in every sort of instance thus deduc'd, the Will does seem always to fix on that which appears simply best for it, for that instant which it chooseth in; the man still takes what he likes better at that present, and he likes better that which looks better for that present: And things are made to look better by these Arts which I have shown you.

This being now the temper and the disposition of the Will, and such the method of her actings, this is the thing the World makes use of, here's its strength, namely, in making things look better for the present. Which how it manages so as thereby to get advantages upon us, how it does improve each such advantage till it get a perfect Conquest, I shall give you in few words; by showing you how the World gets first possession of our Souls, and there raises in us passionate desires that expect present satisfaction, which it hath at hand to serve them with, which by these arts are made look better than any other expectations.

It was observed by the Philosopher most truly, that a Child is born only an Animal, is to be Educated, and brought up into a Man: His reason is the birth of time and institution, for a while nothing but sense does live in him. Now all that while he is incapable of being affected with any other things, but such as strike the senses, things of this present World; and by that means only such possess his mind and inclinations too, the uses and advantages of everything about him are those he is first sensible of, and those alone: and so the World does make the first impressions on our Souls, it does prevent all other in our inclinations, hath our first love and enjoys our first embraces, from which it must be with great reluctancy that we are torn; and whereas these impressions should be weakened and defac'd by the infusion of other Notions and Principles, and the Soul should be weaned from too great liking of these sensitive satisfactions by the cares of those which should be as assistant souls to us, denying us everything that was not very requisite or very moderate, that we might learn to want them, and be taught not to desire them. The contrary alas! is practice'd every way, as soon as e're the mind is capable of being trained into the World's snares we betray it into them, we teach it how to understand and be affected with the bait, and those pomps which we but just before made them renounce, we make them before any things know, and be pleased with; and the first blossom of the mind wherein the Soul exerts itself for the most part is Pride: And for the rest the old complaint is true, ante palatum eorum quàm os instituimus, we teach their Palates sooner than their Tongues, and they can cry for what they cannot name; and yet among their first half words they can name Dainties; and what will he not lust for when he is grown up, that is taught to desire provocatives e're he can chew them? Thus we teach the gayeties and the delights of the World how to insinuate into and take the heart; we water and keep warm the seeds of Worldly Inclinations that are there, make them sprout and cherish them, nurse up original propensions into temper: And as Understanding grows up, we impregnate it with Principles and arts of serving them, turn Reason into a sagacity and skill of catering for those Inclinations, making them like Aristotle's observation backwards, educating them into Creatures of mere sense, teaching them to be rational understanding Brutes. Yet the World thinks sic fiunt homines, this is called making them Men betimes: And when they are thus made, when the age of satisfying all their inclinations is come, and when Temptations are understood, and multiply by Conversation, and the World hath Objects for them all at hand; Objects, that what ever way they turn their Eyes are still before them and thrust themselves into the mind and the advantages that do attend them, and by constant importunacy stir and work desires and serve them too; then we are in that state in which the World hath those advantages I told you of, whereby it does not only war against the Principles of Reason and Religion in us, but it also leads the Will into Captivity, and enslaves her to itself. For it is plain the World hath got possession of the heart, and hath a strong party of heady passions, which whensoever a Temptation does alarm them, presently are up, raise a mutiny, and with the heat of Fancy and commotion of affections they disorder the Understanding so, that it cannot rally up considerations against the assault, but either it concludes, or disputes very faintly: If it do make an effort and struggle, it is but with a slender company of thin weak notions of things afar off, which the man hath had no proof of, nor hath any great confidence in; which while it is in recollecting and enforcing, the World hath its powers ready, seizes on the Will by the means of a corrupted fancy that does give it earnest, foretaste, even the possession of the well-known pleasures that it does invite to, and so melts him down into the sin. Now while the present Profits, Pleasures, Honors that I have from the World fill me, while they feed and clothe me, and provide me all that my necessity or wantonness can wish, and furnish me in hand with whatsoever any of my natural or my forced Appetites do gape for, and lull me with that constant variety of those delights which it procures, the use of which hath so drunk up my Spirits, and my Soul hath so imbib'd the joys, that I know not how to retrench from them, nor from that which is to furnish them. Must I leave all these for things that I have had no taste nor relish of? leave all in present for some future hopes which I have no great confidence of compassing if I should try? and which I also see that very few venture for? Whereas Mankind is swallowed up in the pursuit of these, and to be stored with them does not only serve my needs and Luxuries, but it is the only state of Reputation and Honor. 'Tis not from a rich stock of virtuous qualifications, nor from great and glorious Actions that Esteem and Dignities do generally grow, but from worldly advantages, these constitute conditions, and these are their only Characters. And being it is so, they that are in a Sphere above the ordinary ranks of people, must contrive those things that are become essential to their condition; and they must have worldly Poms although with the expense of Piety, or Charity, and Justice, yea, of every Christian Duty; of Morality indeed, and Heathen virtue, of Humanity itself: They will extort, be ravenous and cruel, will be false and treacherous, cheat and betray to get, and purchase at the price of the most disingenuous, sneaking and unmanly sins: To undermine another they will dig to Hell, as if they meant to give fire to their Mine with the flames of that place whence they have the malice and the arts to do it: And as if they did not care to sink him thither who stands in their way to stop their rise; they are content to die their purple with their own most guilty blushes, and the blood of any one that is their Rival or Competitor.

Add to this, that when these pretences of Condition have got footing in the heart, besides those passionate desires which they stir for themselves, they work out most unquiet Emulations, Envies, Discontents at others. In whatsoever any other does exceed me, his Abundance is my want, straight I am in necessity, not from my own needs, but from his possessions, and I suffer his enjoyments; I labor, fret, and sink under the burden of his Honors, and his greatness is inflicted on me. Nor can I ever be at rest till I am got from under the sad pressure of that deep necessity of having what I see another have. And thus it will be, till Ambition have no further Object, till there be no greater heights to mount. And now this Lust is in its pride, and the victorious World in its Triumphal Chariot. Not that I dare pretend that I have shown you all the Chains by which it drags captive Souls after it, or all the Arts of Tyranny that it does execute: I could name many more, but he alone is able to discover all, that in the twinkling of an Eye did once show all the Kingdoms of the World, and all the beauty of them, and who promised to bestow them all for but one single act of Worship, and whose gift the Glories of it are for the most part, and purchased by those very means. My business is to pull it down from this great height, and show you how to triumph over these Conquests; which my Text says is done by Faith, for this is the Victory that overcometh the World even our Faith: Which how it does, is my second next Enquiry.

It seems a prejudice to this Assertion of my Text, that the great pretenders to Faith, the men that lay the whole stress of their Everlasting Being on believing only, have been branded to be very Worldly; and the Factions of Godliness were the mysteries and arts of Thriving; as if their Faith laid hold indeed upon the Promises of this Life, and if it overcame the World, it was for them to seize and be possessors of. But this is not the Victory my Text secures, a Conquest for the Faith only of Mahomet to make: And while Christian Votaries do only mind such Conquests, and are candidates of Turcism, do they not call it in, and make way for their Sword and their Religion? But the Faith that lays hold on Christ's Promises cannot consist with any such affections. For since Christ's Promises are made only to those that overcome all such desires, and that do it to the end, and none other can be safe; It is impossible for him that does not overcome to trust upon those Promises, and to apply them to himself by Faith: For at once to believe I shall be saved, and yet believe those sayings which affirm none such can be saved, these are most inconsistent. It being then as casie to make contradictions be at peace, as Faith and Worldliness, they cannot suffer one the other; it follows: He that hath this Faith in sincerity must needs overcome the World. And to show you in a word how it is done, you need not but to consider, that Faith is as S. Paul saith, the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen, Heb. xi. 1. Which as the Syriac translates, does say, that Faith is such a certainty of those things that we hope for, as if we actually had them; and it is the revelation of those things that are not seen, it hath so strong a confidence in God, that the Believer assures himself of all God's Promises and Threats, as much as if they were in sight; and though we see them through a glass but darkly, yet we see them by it, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. it being 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . It represents the things of which we have no demonstration from Sense or human reasoning, as convincingly to the mind as if they were before our Eyes: And it is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , the substance, the subsistence and the very being of things that are not yet in being, but in hope: So that the Eye of Faith, like that of God, does see those things that are invisible, and futurity is present to it. Now by this alone it is of force to break the powers of the World, which as we saw while the things of the other World were looked upon as at a great distance, afar off, taking advantage of their absence storm'd the mind with present forces, and had supplies at hand for fresh assaults, so overcame it. Whereas, had the powers of the World to come been present (now by Faith they are made so we see) the other which are so inferior that there is no more comparison than of immensity to a point, a moment to Eternity, could not stand before them. 'Tis too notorious that this is the case: For should a man cry fire in the House, how it had seized the strengths of it, were blotting out the glories of it in thick Smoak, devouring all their shine in flame, we would leave our Devotions, our most eager pleasures to prevent this, and no speed were swift enough to serve our cares and fears. But though a Prophet of the Lord cry Tophet is prepared, the pile thereof is Fire and much Wood, and the Breath of the Lord like a stream of Brimstone kindling it, and do this till his Lungs crack, not one heart is moved, nor brings a drop of tear to quench the flame, because these fires are not present as the other, neither have men any sense of them, were they alike convincing, alike present to the apprehension, 'twere impossible according to what we have demonstrated (that the Will in her choices and her aversations, where the Objects are of alike kind, and have one common measure of their good and evil, is determined to avoid or take that which appears the greatest always; 'twere I say impossible) not to fly these which the Devils do believe and tremble at, with greater dread wherever they appear: Now a strong lively Faith must paint them out and show them in each sin the World insnares into. Neither would any of those rotten planks, which, while the Will does fluctuate betwixt her worldly inclinations and these fears, and is tossed about, offer themselves, as I declared to you, for her to escape upon, though she does dash herself upon God's Threats choosing the present sin; such as the application of Decrees or Promises made absolutely to himself without any condition, confidence in God's Mercies, hopes of Pardon; none of these would be security to one that were convinced in earnest. He that did believe and as it were discern that height which his ambition goads him to aspire to, were upon the brink of the bottomless Pit, whither when he arrived, that very sin that tempts him with the glories of the prospect, would then tumble him down headlong into that Abyss, he would no more dare to ascend it by such false and guilty steps upon such hopes of mercy, trusts on Promises or Decrees, than he would dare to throw himself off from a Pinnacle in confidence God was Almighty and Almerciful, able enough, and kind enough to stretch out his right hand and catch him in the fall, or trusting to that Promise, He will give his Angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone: Or leaning upon any such Decree as makes the term of life immovable and fatal; neither to be hastened or retarded; none of these will make him mad enough to break his Neck, neither would the same presumptions encourage him to cast away his Soul, had he but equal apprehensions of the danger. And it is plain, all the temptations of the World, and all these false encouragements cannot work upon a man, when Death once looks him in the Face; and the great Champions of Profaneness are tame then, not that God's Threatenings are more true, or made more evident to sense or reason than they were before, but their Faith is active, and they apprehend more strongly then.

To see myself trampled upon by pride and malice, or worse yet, begging of him whom my blood it may be helped to streams of plenty, begging like Lazarus the portion of his Dogs, Dogs that are taught to snarl and bite, and make more sores, not lick them; this is a state more killing than my want, able almost to tempt a man to any courses. But then if with the Eye of Faith I do but look beyond the gulf, and there behold the Rich man in his flames begging for water, and although it be the Region of eternal weeping, yet not able to procure one drop of his own tears to cool his Tongue. O then I see 'tis better to be Lazarus, although there were no Abraham's bosom! But if my Faith look through that bosom also into that of God, and there behold the Son of God leaving all the essential felicities of that Bosom to come live a life of Virtue here on Earth, and to teach us to do so; choosing to do this also in a state of the extremist poverty, consecrating want and nakedness, contempt and scorn, making them thus the Ensigns of a divine Royalty.

And to encourage us not to sink under any of the Worlds assaults, he hath proposed Rewards of Virtue, such as God is blessed in; did my Faith give me but a constant view of all this, sure the paint and varnish of these little things below, the twinkling exhalations of the glories of this World could not dazzle my mind and captivate my Soul, I should burst these entanglements to catch at those. 'Tis evident, and 'tis acknowledged, that when our belief shall be all Vision, and our expectation possession, when our Understanding shall become all Sense in Heaven, and we see and taste and have those glories, then we cannot sin, cannot be tempted from them: And therefore by the measures of the nearness of these Objects, of our sight, and of our interest, so are our strengths to stand and overcome Temptations. Now Faith is sight, gives presence we have seen, and it gives interest too, He that believes is born of God, saith the Apostle, and therefore hath a right: Now to be born of one is to receive from him a principle of life: He then that hath received from God a Principle of life such as he can derive, life like his own, such as is led in Heaven; when he does consider his original and looks upon himself as born of God, and consequently heir of God's possessions, which his Faith gives him a prospect of, how will he look down on the tempting glories of this World, on all that makes it grateful and desirable, as upon abject things, and sleight and undervalue whatsoever worldly men, poor Souls! do fear or hope, or long for, and pursue? The Mathematics say that the whole Globe of Earth to one that looks upon it from the Firmament is but as a point, and sure it is demonstrable it must be so: And then how low and how contemptible must it needs seem to him that looks on it as from the Region of the Blessed, from God's Mansion? and when his Soul having defecated and freed itself from all earthy, muddy, gross affections, and become expedite and light, expatiates through those unbounded, unfathom'd extensions of Heaven and glory, and looks upon all as his own, that he is very shortly to come to take the full enjoyment of, and hath already seisin of it by his Faith, how will he despise those narrow, those ridiculous bounds which the great ones of this World with Fire and Sword contend for? when he sees this little point half covered with the Sea, almost as much too hid from us and not to be discovered by our arts or industry; of that which is, much Desert, some parts Frozen, some burnt up, and not inhabited; and then the little remnant of this point to be the strife and the vexation of Mankind, while multitudes of Nations tear one another's bowels, spill the Blood and Souls of Myriads for some little patch or other of it; and those that are not doing so, yet in their sphere too they oppress, deceive, do anything to get; and all the rest are in perpetual hurry of vexatious employments, or of toilsome pleasures, or of ruining Vices: Will he not look on this more unconcerned than we do on the busy labors of a little World of Ants about a Mole-hill, which Philosophers compare us to? The spectacle is much more to be pitied indeed; the crowds and Squadrons of those Ants, though they should have as many traverses and walks as men have, they have not Soul enough to have their guilt: Probably had they Humane understandings, they would then divide their Mole-hill into Empires, would be false and treacherous to one another, Cheat, Defraud, Oppress and Murder one another for the present share; and had they Reason, they would be more Brutes, than now they are but Pismires: For Beasts have less folly too because they are not Men. But he whose Faith mounts him to Heaven his Birth-place, where he nestles in the secret Bosom of his Father, he needs not be concerned in any of the carriages of this World, he is above them all, without the sphere of their attraction or magnetism, without the dangers of temptations from them: The World is but as his slave, and it hath no command upon him, he treads it all under his feet, and therefore certainly hath overcome it: the Condition and degree of which Victory is the next and last thing we are to enquire into.

If you ask the Stoic who is this great Conqueror that overcomes the World, he will answer somewhat to this purpose. It is not any of those great successful Robbers that with Armies forage Nations; it is not he that people's the whole Sea, filling it with his Navies; nor he that sets his Confines on the remotest parts of the Inhabited World, that can call all his own that the Sun views, so that it shines not out of his Dominions: But the Man that hath conquered his own Inclinations to the things below; he that hath raised his mind above the Crosses or Contents of this World, that can march among them both dreadless and unconfus'd; the man whose Soul is nothing dazzled by the brightness of Wealth, it shall not blind his Eyes, but through the varnish or the glory that the shine of it does shed, he can discover and will hate an evil action: he that can severely look on all those blandishments that Prosperity furnishes and decks out pleasure in, and can sit continent and abstemious in the midst of its delights, that when it is all Halcyon day with him, nothing but Sunshine, and he swims in the calm streams of flowing Plenty, is not melted by one or other, does not become loose and dissolute at all; the man also that is not shaken by the tumults of Adversity, when like an Earthquake she renverses all, his mind then stands unmov'd, that does not so much suffer, as receive and welcome all that happens, as if he would not have it happen otherwise: In a word, it is the man that hath raised his mind above all casualties, the man that does but remember that he is a Man, that is, considers if he do abound, and the World prostitute itself to his Delights, that this cannot continue long; or if the World conspire to make him miserable, remembers that he is not so, except he think he is so, a man greater than his perils, stronger than his desires: And thus far the Stoic's Wiseman is victorious. Christ's Believer goes a little farther: That man hath the World Subject to him; but the Christian does not stay at that, he must not treat it as a Subject, but a Traitor, one whose Service is Conspiracy, that does attend on us only to watch and to betray us, to know our weak part, and to storm us there. Therefore as the Lord commanded Israel concerning Amalek, that did by them as the World doth with us in our journey to Canaan, comes upon advantages and smites the feeble, Deut. xxv. 17, 18, 19. Therefore said the Lord, remember what Amalek did to thee by the way, how he met thee by the way and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary, therefore thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, &c. So must we also with the World, put all to death, not spare the best and goodliest as Saul did; yea more, put all to the pomps and cruelties of Death as Gideon used the men of Succoth, tear their flesh with thorns and briars; or as David used the Ammonites, put them under Saws and Iron Harrows; so the Christian must serve the World: Whatever Instruments of Tyranny that used upon his Savior on the Cross, those he must exercise on it again, those Thorns, those Nails, that Spear he must employ like Gideon's Briars, and like David's iron Harrows, it must be Crucified, and then he is a glorious Conqueror, Gal. vi. 14. God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, whereby the World is Crucified to me and I unto the World. He that does march under the Banner of the Cross that Conquering Ensign, as he thereby declares himself upon such terms of enmity with the World that he does look upon himself as one despised by it, counted as an accured thing, for so was that that was Crucified, as it is written, Cursed is everyone that hangeth on the Tree: So also he does look upon his Standard as the Instrument of Execution to the World, on which it must be Crucified unto him, and so it is: He is so taken off from finding any stirring delights in the glories of it, that he accounts it a dead thing, that hath no more attraits than a Carcass; yea, he does look upon this World as on a detestable and accursed thing, as it was indeed; whose Thorns and Briars do not only scratch and tear, and do it most when we embrace it most, but also are a Refuge for the cursed Serpent to lurk in, and add his Stings to their sharps, that Devil Serpent that was doom'd into it, and is always in it, and then most when it is most Paradise. Now he that hath thus used the World, he that hath nail'd it to the Cross of Christ hath overcome the World.

Should we now cast an eye at once upon ourselves and that which hath been thus deduc'd tracing all back again; then

First, It would appear so evident that I were vain, if I should stay to prove that those which have such desires to any of the profits, heights or pomps, or any dear thing else whatever of this World, as that they are impatient if they miscarry in them, and full of strange complacencies if they do answer their desires, these have not overcome the World to any such degree. For had I overcome and Crucified it, sure I should not be so affectionate as to desire, court, and pursue what I had Executed; I should as soon adore the Paintings of my Enemies Tomb, embrace and make love to his Carcass: And were I Crucified to it, had I but one Thorn of my Savior's Crown struck through my Head, but one Nail in my Foot of those that nailed him to his Tree; were my Soul fastened to a Cross, how were it possible I should run gadding after the gay follies of the World, hasty in my desires of it: Nor could I be impatient if the World do not answer my desires and expectations, disquieted and discompos'd, if I be disappointed, when anything in it is not subservient to my heights, and I miss of those respects I looked for; were the World vanquished, Crucified to me, should I look for services from my dead Enemy whom I had slain? or be troubled if the person on the Cross did not do fitting reverences to me? or be impatient if I had not respects and the Attendances of Pomp from one upon the Gibbet? or if I were Crucified to it, certainly these heats would not warm the dead; these are none of the troubles of an Executed person when he is rack'd upon that instrument of Death, he is not grieved because the Nails were not of Silver, the Spears head not bright, or the Cross was not hung with Arras: Aud suppose it were, sure I were very weak if I should please myself with that, and let such poor contents thrust out all the just sadness of my Sentence and demerit: And yet it is as strange to find delights in having any of the Worlds advantages, and pride myself in the possession if I be Crucified to it. But much less is it Crucified to them that will do actions of injustice for the sake of any of the Pomps or profits of the World; there are that grind, and screw, and rack all that they have to deal with; others that deceive and rob in Vizours, plunder in the disguises of fair words and of false arts; Some that dress their Pomps in none of their own trappings, such as they never mean to have a right to, because they never mean to satisfy for them if they can avoid it; they furnish the grandeur of their own condition with the goods of others which they never care to make their own by any recompense, at least not in such ways and seasons as the needs of those that owned them, and the rules of Justice do require; they cram and sauch their Dishes with the vital Blood indeed of those who starve for want of, and who own all that which does provide them their excesses. Now would a man do this to entertain, and feed, and dress the Carcass of his vanquished, his dead Enemy? would he be so vain, so guilty to provide to deck the Cross on which he Crucified his Foe? least of all would he retrench from the proportions of Charity or Piety, deny the calls of Mercy and compassion or Religion for his profits sake, or to furnish out the trains of Pomp, take the Lord's portion to serve the dead World with? If it were overcome and Crucified, they would not feed it with hallowed things (and the Poor's portion is such,) nor rob the Altar to give it excesses, take Consecrated things to make a cursed Carcass gay and proud, strip Christ's Body, starve their Savior (so He does interpret to deny a portion to the naked and hungry) to make Pumps and Riots for an Executed World. In any of these cases he is far from being overcome: And if so, the Second Proposition will apply itself to such, and must conclude they have no Faith; for if they had that were a Victory; and however goodly they pretend, they are but Infidels: But it may be they will boldly own the Consequence, for nowadays it is not gentile to believe anything of Christ's Religion. And sure 'tis for the Reputation of the gallantry and courage of our love unto this World, that when the covetousness of the Gadarenes would not suffer Christ in their Coasts, and for their Swines sake drove him out, when that of Judas would not let him be upon the Earth, but for thirty Silver pieces did betray him up to Death; that of this Age proceeds, and will not let him be in Heaven neither, but it scoffs him thence, and his Faith from the Earth: And because they like this World so well, they will not suffer there should be any other. It is not my part to Combat these; I undertook only to show a way to overcome the World, if they will not use it let them enjoy their Bondage. And yet without all doubt these candidates of Infidelity and Atheism have faith enough to do the work in good degree; for certainly there's none of them but does believe but he shall die, and it is easy for his Faith to look through that thin vapor which our life is styled by, to the end of that small span, and there see a Bed, though gay now and soft as the sleep and sins it entertains, then with the Curtains close, the gayety all clouded in a darkness, such as does begin the desolateness of the Grave; if you draw the Curtain to his Faith it sees a languishing sad Corps which nothing in the World can help or ease, forethrowed in his own dead hue, himself prelude to his winding-sheet, in which within a little while he shall be cast from the society and sight of men, and shall have nothing else of all his Wealth and Pomp: To see all this is no great monstrous difficulty for his Faith. Now though while he is in his prosperity and health, and the World serves every of his desires, and if I should tell him all his superfluities, all that is beyond a mere convenience are but empty things, mere shadows of delight, that only mock his fancy; should I tell him that the silver furnitures of his Tables, and those more wealthy shining ones those in his Cabinet, and the Silken ones of his Rooms, and the more exquisite pieces of rich Art which people must have skill to understand the pomp of, must have been the Disciples of the Pensil to discern how they do serve Pride; tell him these are phantasms, only dreams of Pomp, advantages nowhere but in imagination, I shall not persuade him, but he will despise me. But then if he will ask his Faith how all these will look to him in the state which is now before his thoughts, what his opinion of them will be then? he knows he may as well go to his Pictures now, and entertain his Mirth and Luxuries with them, and hearken to their painted sounds, and dine upon the images of Feasts, as hope in that sad hour from all his Wealth to find comfort or ease, though his hand sweat under the weight of Winter Jewels they will not heal one aching joint: His Plate the greatest Riot of his Table will not make one morsel taste savory; yea more, he knows that then all the worldly uses of these superfluities such as satisfying curiosity, and emulation, and the estimation of the World, to be the talk of people, and the like; these will appear most evidently to be insipid things, mere conceits of delights; things of which there can be no real enjoyment or advantage any time. And if it then appear evidently that in themselves they are so, then they are so always; and a constant Contemplation of that time will make them always seem so. So that a Faith that cannot see into another World, that will but look through this, must needs take off our hearts from the entanglements of those advantages, when it appears how small a thing can dash them all so as that we cannot enjoy them while we have them, and that the enjoyment of them while we do is but imaginary.

And really when we consider how unquiet and disturbed a thing Man is, except he raise himself above the Power of all these, how till the Mind escape out of the whirl and circuit of the Worlds allurements, it cannot but be in perpetual agitations; at every ebb or flow of things without, there is a tide within of swelling or sinking affections; every change abroad does make a change of thoughts and of designs, cross Accidents have cross Passions, and I am as much an Universe of various thwarting contradictory affections, as the World is of motions.

How the Beasts are free, serene and quiet Creatures in comparison, for they not understanding many Objects, consequently have few inclinations, and their satisfactions very obvious; whereas the Comprehensive mind of Man that looks into a world of things, and out of them creates a world of temptations, finds out varieties of Pleasures or of Profits, and then starts as many eager affections in himself to pursue them; his copious understanding does but procure him various Lusts, and his Reason does but make him sagacious in searching out occasions of disquiet. Nor is it possible it should be otherwise, for while my inclinations are chain'd to those external movements, and my slavish mind attends upon those inclinations, I must needs suffer as many servitudes as the world hath changes of temptation: And then putting these two Considerations together, how unsatisfying and how uneasy too it is to be engaged in the Advantages of this World, which are merely Dreams of good things that disturb our rest and make our sleep unquiet, with the working of Imagination, yet do but delude the Appetite, and we find we have had nothing when we awake; sure if I thought there were no other World, yet would I not be greedy after the great things of this, when 'tis more easy far to want them, here would I indulge myself the sensuality of a Contented mind, the luxury of an Ataraxy, of an indifference as to all these things, of being quiet and untroubled by not having them, free from the hurry and disorder of them. The Moralists did so account it certainly, when they called this living according to our Nature, as if all the other were a Violence upon us; and upon the same ground they accounted it not hard to overcome the Allurements of this World, it was only not to invade and use a force upon themselves and vanquish their own natures: And sure we that are Christians, and are so no farther than as we have this Faith here in the Text, we must not count it hard; we who have the Revelations and Example of the blessed Jesus, all that he hath done to make it easy, now saith he 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Courage, for I have overcome the World: They are but broken forces we are to resist, we have the Strengths of Heaven on our side, and therefore sure we may adventure to encounter them; and if we do begin to faint, we have an Almighty Captain of Salvation, and if we have but Faith to lay hold on him, and be not false to our own selves, but keep our hold, if we be foiled, Christ must be vanquished too, and we may fear impossibilities as well. When those poor Heathen march'd on naked, had none of our Weapons to assault the World, or to defend themselves, had neither Shield of Faith, nor Helmet of Salvation, no Sword of the Spirit the Word of God, and yet master'd it in great degrees, shall we that are harnessed turn ourselves back in the day of Battle? and confute this Scripture; and make good that they do overcome the World most easily who never heard that Jesus was the Son of God? 'Tis not only base for us to faint most who have most advantage, but it is a contradiction for them to be overcome that have the Victory: Now this is the Victory that overcometh the World even our Faith; the Victory that overcomes both Worlds indeed; it tramples upon this, and lays hold upon that to come, out-doing what S. Paul sings of it in his 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Heb. xi. His Heroes through Faith subdu'd earthly Kingdoms, but by Faith we overthrow the Kingdom of the Prince and God of this World, and the Kingdom too of the Almighty suffers violence from it, and our Faith takes that by force, forces even a right to it: By it they stopped the mouths of Lions in the Wilderness; by it we stop that roaring Lion's mouth that compasses the Earth seeking whom he may devour; by it they quenched the violence of Fire, we the Everlasting burnings; by that Women received their dead raised to life again: by it we shall rise to Immortality of Life and blessedness, receive all that we do believe, more than we can comprehend, receive the end of our Faith the salvation of our Souls: Which God of his Mercy state us all in for the sake of Jesus Christ the Author and the Finisher of our Faith, and the Captain of our Salvation:

The Ninth SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. Sixth Wednesday in LENT, 1664/5.

GAL. II. 20.

I am Crucified with Christ.

THE Ancient Observation of this Time would justify my Choice, make the Text Seasonable in the most Severe sense it can put on, when in their Exomologeses they ate only the Bread of Sorrow, and tears were their Drink day and night, so as that in the Agonies of their Repentance they did Crucify without a Meraphor, and mortify the Body of Flesh as well as Sin. But it seems to have happened in our Sins as in our great Diseases, men are grown more skilful, and have found out much more grateful ways of Cure, there is no need of going through a discipline of Torments, a whole course of Medicinal Cruelty, but they can heal, at least palliate with more ease and speed. Besides that, Christianity is now of a more delicate and tender make, and cannot bear austerities, neither come I here to call for them, or to provoke their Constitutions; if they have found a softer and more pleasant way to Heaven, on God's Name let them walk in it; only in our walk we are now coming within ken of the Cross of Christ, and we can bear commemorations of his Passion; they make the closing Ceremony of this Season, which was set aside on purpose by the preparations of Humiliation to fit us for the performances and expiations of that Day, by Repentance to put off our Old Man, the whole Body of Sin, that we may hang it on his Cross as we go by. That is the only use of this time, and the only application of that Day. Which I crave leave to show you how to make at once: And without this that Ceremony howsoever solemn, will be merely Pageantry, not Worship; the observation but dramattick; and we shall have no part in the Atonement, only in the Scene of that days Tragedy, rather than Sacrifice: He only Celebrates that Passion, only he partakes that Offering, who can say with S. Paul, I am Crucified with Christ.

In which words we shall first endeavor to discover what this Person is,

Secondly, What the Nature is of that Condition and estate which S. Paul does affirm here of that Person; and that

First, In itself, Crucified; I am Crucified.

Secondly, In its adjunct; with Christ, Which because it cannot signify conjunction in time, he is not now upon the Cross, that I might say, now I am Crucified with him, nor when He was, was I, that I might say then I am Crucified with Christ; but we shall find it hath other importances. First it implies a likeness to Christ's Passion, I am Crucified as he was, so it means through the whole Rom. vi. and the being crucified with Christ is what S. Paul elsewhere expresses by the being made conformable to his death.

Secondly, It imports more, even Communication and partaking with him in his Passion, being planted together in the likeness of his death, Rom. vi. 5. and I am Crucified with Christ, does mean I have a fellowship of his Sufferings, as he words it Phil. iii. 10.

Thirdly, It means also a conjunction of causal Relation, that there is a Virtue and Efficacy in the Cross of Christ to work the Sinner into Crucifying of his sin so the particle must needs import, Ephes. ii. 6. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 he hath set us together with him in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Where we are neither in conformity, nor fellowship, but only in our head and in our cause; so I am Crucified with Christ does mean his Passion hath an influence to Crucify and cause in me the death of Sin.

Of these in order; and

First, what this Person is? I say not who? we know it was S. Paul, but what? and the reason of the Enquiry is because we find indeed elsewhere crucifying the Flesh with the Affections and Lusts required, and we are also bid to mortify our members that are on the Earth; such as

*Fornication and Uncleaness, Covetousness and the like. But these are not I, how am I mortified in these? Is it because it may be they are grown so dear to me, that I am Crucified in their destruction? and long practice and acquaintance hath riveted them into my very heart? Now the Wen we know though an excrescent tumour, but an accessory bag of noxious humors, yet if it lay hold on any noble part, take in some Nerve or Artery, then he must cut the thread of Life that cuts it off: So he must rent my heart indeed that tears my pleasures from me; Life itself does seem to have so little satisfaction without them, that it is a death to me to part with them. Or else hath the Old Man no Soul? is he all Flesh? and hath Iniquity debas'd the whole of him, so that his very Spirit is become Body of Sin, so as that Wickedness should be our very Being, be all one with us, and I, and my corruptions prove denominations of one importance, signify the very same? so it is indeed: Besides the carnal part that is sold under sin, and consequently does deserve the Cross, that punishment of Slaves, the part also that is in the quite opposite extreme, that lusts against the flesh, that must be made away. Be ye ansform'd by the renewing of your mind, Rom. xii. 2. And if there be any sublimer and more dedicated part in that, it must submit to the same Fate, in the spirit of your mind, Ephes. iv. 23. Corruption hath invaded that: To the diviner ruling part, is grown a slave to the Beast part of him, it hath debauched its notions whereby it should discriminate good from evll, so that now it can discern no natural difference between them, but does measure both merely by his present inclinations and concerns, and the eternal Laws of Honesty are blotted out, and principles of interest and irreligion raised there in the place, and buttress'd by false reasonings and Discourses. Now all these Fortresses of Vice that maintain and secure a man in sin must be demolish'd, all such imaginations cast down, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and every thought brought into Captivity to the obedience of Christ: That Spirit of the mind must be destroyed, and we transformed into persons of new notions and reasonings. But above all the remaining part of Man, his own Will must be mortified, which besides its natural and, by perverse inclinings to solicitations of flesh is most corrupted, and most dangerous, in that which way soever it inclines, it draws the whole Man after it: If anything in us be crucified in a Conformity to Christ, it must be this; for in that death wherein Christ offered up himself upon the Cross (where although the Divine Nature gave the value, 'twas only the Humane Nature made the Offering) there it was the crucifying his own Will, that above all other the ingredients made his Death a Sacrifice, and the price of our Redemption. God that had given him his Blood and Life, might call for it again when and how he saw good, and being due, it was not properly a price that could be given him for sin; but his free voluntary choice, his being willing to endure the Agonies and Contempts of the Cross, his stabbing his own natural desires with a resolute determination, Not my will, but thine be done: This his own Will was his own Offering; and such is ours, if we be Crucified with Christ, made conformable to his death; if we present ourselves a Sacrifice acceptable to the Lord; for our will is not given up to him, till it do perfectly comport with his; but that it cannot do, till we renounce our own desires, till we have brought ourselves to an indifference in outward things, to such a resignation as she is storied to have had, who being in her Sickness bid to choose whether she rather would have Health or Death, made answer, *Vehementissime desidero ut non facias voluntatem meam Domine, this above all I desire, that thou wilt not do my will, I would have thee not do what I desire and would have. So that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the whole of us, the Spirit, Soul and Flesh, go to make up this Person; and the body of Sin is the Old man entire. I, whole I am nothing but a mass of guilts, my Senses are the bands of wickedness, that procure for my evil inclinations, my members are the weapons of unrighteousness, my Body is a Body of Sin and Death, and the affections of my Soul are Lusts, its faculties are the powers of Sin, yea, and the Spirit of my mind, that Breath of God is putrefied; that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that Angel-part of me is fallen and turned Apostate; and however I be partly Son of Man, and partly Son of God, yet I am wholly Child of Wrath, and so fit to be Crucified.

Which calls me to the next Enquiry, to the nature of the duty here intended, I am Crucified.

What is designed by it S. Paul does perfectly declare Rom. vi. 6. Our old man is crucified with Christ that the body of Sin might be destroyed, that we should no longer serve sin: So that it means a through Repentance, and abandoning of former evil Courses: A Duty which there are few men but in some instants of their life think absolutely necessary, and persuade themselves they do perform it. At some time or other they are forced to recollect and grow displeased and angry at their sins, and have some sad reflections on them, beg for mercy and forgiveness, and do think of leaving them; and when they have returned to them again, they shake the head, and chafe, and curse at their own weakness, and renew their purposes it may be; and do this as oft as such a Season as this is, or other like occasions suggest it to or move them: And with this they satisfy themselves, and hope if God do please to take them hence in some such muddy, gloomy fit of their Repentance, all's well. Now shall we call this being Crucified? are there Racks and Tortures in this discipline? hath a Spear prick'd them to the heart, and no blood nor no water, no tears gush out thence? hath it made no issue for some hearty Sorrow to purle out?

Indeed I must confess, the Scripture does sometimes word the performance of this Duty in expressions that are not so sower, but of an easier importance; as first, put off the Old Man, as if all were but Garment; put it off I say, not as they strip'd our Savior in order to his Scourgings and his Cross, but intimating to us what an easy thing it is to cast off Sin for them, who do begin with it betimes, before it get too close to the heart. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, &c. saith Theophyl▪ even as easy as putting off thy Cloaths, and thy Repentance is but as thy Shift, thy change of life like changing thy Apparel.

But alas! for all the easiness which this expression hints, where the sins also lie in the Attire, as besides emulation, pride, vainglory, great uncharitableness and inhumanity, cruel injustice and oppression often do, when many are undone through want of those dues which do furnish other men with the excesses of this kind: when the sins therefore lie in the Attire, and they may put them off without a Metaphor, yet it is so hard that it cannot be done; sometimes the worth of a whole Province hangs upon a slender thread about a Neck, a Patrimony thrust upon one joint of one least Finger, and these warts of a Rock or a Shell-fish with the appendages eat out Estates and starve poor Creditors; for whom indeed they should command these stones to be made bread; but that's a Miracle too stubborn for their Virtue. And then how will they proceed to the next expression of this Duty? Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskin of your hearts, Jer. iv, 4. These are harder and more bloody words, they differ in the pain and anguish that they put us to, as much as to uncloath and flea would do. It appears indeed this punishment of fleaing often went before the Cross. To 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 saith Ctesias of one, having his Skin pulled off he was Crucified: And the scourges in some measure did inflict this on our Savior, when they put off his Cloaths they strip'd his Skin also; left him no covering but some rags of that which whipping had torn from his flesh. Yet this expression sounds harsher, when it bids us circumcise the foreskin of our hearts, and tear it from thence, flea that: When long Conversation with the pleasures of a sin hath not only given them Regallias, but hath made them necessary to us, so as that we cannot be without them; when Custom craves with greater fever than our thirst; when if we want it, we have qualms, saintings of Soul, as if the life were in that blood of the grape, when men can part as easily with their own bowels, as the Luxuries that feed them; if you take away their Dishes, then you take their Souls which dwell in them; when the sins of the Bed are as needful and refreshing as the sleeps of it; when to bid a man not look, not satisfy his lustful eye, is every jot as cruel as that other, I• thine eye offend thee pluck it out: For if he must no more find pleasure in his sight, he hath no use of it; yea if this be indeed a kindness not to leave him Eyes to be to him the same as Appetite to Tantalus, that which he must not satisfy, and is his hell: 'Tis easy if the Lust be got no further than the Eye to pull them out together; but if through that it shoot into the Blood and Spirits, mix heats with those, if it enwrap the heart, twist with its strings, and warm the Soul with its desires; so that it Spirit all the motions, all the thoughts and wishes of the heart; when it is thus, to make the heart to stifle its own motions, stab its thoughts, and strangle all its wishes; to untwist and disentangle and to tear it thence, if this be to be Circumcised with the Circumcision of Christ, and he that hath not the sign of this, the Seal of the New Covenant, as he that in the Old had not the other, was, must be cut off; our long habituated hardened Sinners must not think that there is anything of true Repentance in their easy, perfunctory, sleight performances; there is something like Death in the Duty, which yet is required of us farther under variety of more severe expressions; for we are bid thirdly to slay the Body of Sin, Rom. vi. 6. to mortify our members, Col. iii. 5. and to Crucify, Gal. vi. 14. which how it may be done, the next consideration of S. Paul's condition in the Text, and my next part declare. I am Crucified with Christ, that is, first as he was, by being made conformable to his Death.

And truly should we trace him through all the stages of his Passion, we should hardly find one passage but is made to be transcribed by us in dealing with our sins.

First he began it with Agony, when his Soul was exceeding heavy, for it labor'd with such weight of indignation as did make the Son of God to sink under the mere apprehension: And he was sorrowful unto Death, so as that his whole Body did weep Blood. The Sinners passion, his Repentance is exactly like it, it begins always with grief and sense of weight, whoever is regenerate was conceived in sorrow, and brought forth with pangs, and the Child of God too is born weeping. And for loads, the Church when she does call us to show forth this Death of Christ, as if she did prescribe that very Agony, requires that we should find that Garden at the Altar, makes us say we are heartily sorry for our misdoings, the remembrance of them is grievous unto us, the burden of them is intolerable. So that the Sinner's Soul must be exceeding heavy too.

Secondly, There he is betrayed by his own domestic, sold for the poorest Price imaginable, as a Slave for thirty pieces of silver. I shall not mind you what unworthy things the love of Money does engage men to; to sell a Christ, a Savior, and a God! and rather than stand out, at such a base rate, as we scorn to buy a sin at; every single act's engagement to Damnation, costs more than the Ransom of the World is sold for; and the Blood of God is purchased cheaper than any one opportunity of Vice does stand us in! But I only mind you here, that he shall have a better hire that will but be a Judas to his own iniquities: do but betray the Regent sins, deliver them up and thou shalt have everlasting Heaven.

Thirdly, We find him next carried before the High Priest. And the strictest times of Christianity would serve their sins so, to receive his doom upon them, to be excommunicated into Reformation: But I shall not urge how we can discover to a Physician our shames, all our most putrid Guilts as well as Ulcers, and make him our Confessor in our most secret sins; neither will I be inquisitive why the Physicians of our souls are balk'd; but will pass this part of the Conformity, and follow Christ to Pontius Pilate. And for this part we ourselves are fitted, the whole furniture of a Judicial Court, all that makes up both Bench and Bar is born within us. God hath given us a Conscience whereby we are a Law to ourselves, Rom. ii. We have 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which the Jews did want; such evidence as is sufficient to condemn us; the same Conscience that is privy to our doings, and stands by our thoughts, and sees through our intentions, is a thousand witnesses: And that there may be a Prosecutor, our own thoughts accuse us saith S. Paul; and if we will give them way, will aggravate each Circumstance of guilt and danger, bark, and howl, and cry as loud against us, as the Jews did against Christ, for Sin is of so murdering a guilt it will be sure to slay itself: and that he may not want his deserved Ruin, the Sinner makes his own Indictment, yea, and his own Sentence too, for our own heart condemns us, saith S. John: And when ever it does so, Oh that we would follow it through all the gradations that brought Christ to Death! and use our wickedness as he was used; strip it from its Cloaths, bare it from its fair pretexts it useth to be dress'd in! Lay our anger naked from all those excuses which our provocations, that either wrath or humor will be sure to think intolerable, do make for it! strip our Pride and Vanity from those paints and dresses which the Custom of the Age, that does require and warrant strange things, dawbs the sin with! use our Luxuries and Intemperances so, and the other greater and more thirsty dropsy, that of Wealth, and of unjust unworthy gains, which there are richer Luxuries in too! And there are none of these but have their pleas, their colors which they set themselves out in, to please the Appetite and to deceive the Mind, all which we must strip off; and then when we have laid them naked, spit upon them, vomit all our spleen and contumelious despite at that which hath made us so ugly in God's sight; scourge it with Austerities, and buffet it as they did Christ, and S. Paul did himself, 1 Cor. xvi. 27. And when the Body of Sin is thus tamed and weakened, it will be easy then to lead it out and crucify it. A Crucifixion this that does make our Good-Friday be a day of Expiation and Atonement to us: A sight which next to that of his own Son upon the Cross, is the most acceptable to the Lord; when he does see us execute his Enemies although they be ourselves, and Crucify the dear Affections of our bosom as God did. This is indeed to be conformed unto the death of Christ.

If I might have leave to go before you and to let you into the Example, draw the Curtain from before the Passion, I would call my Sins out, drag them to behold that Prospect, hale them into the Garden, show them how he was used there. You my Extravagancies of my youth my mad follies and wild jollities, come see my Savior yonder, how he swoons when guilt began to make approaches towards him! and can I make myself merry with nothing else but that which made him die? tickle, cheer, and heighten myself with Agonies? You my intemperate Draughts, my full Bowls and the riotous Evenings I have past, look yonder what a sad night do these make Christ pass! look what a Cup he holds, which makes him fall lower to deprecate, than ever my Excesses made me lie. You my lazy Luxuries, Fulness of Bread, and Idleness, whereby I have control'd God's Curse, and only in the Sweat of others Faces eat my Bread, and in that dew drank up the Spirits of those multitudes that toil to faintings to maintain my dissolute life, see how he is forced to bear the whole Curse for me! how the Thorns grow on his head, and how he Sweats all over. You my supine Devotions which do scarce afford my God a knee, and less an heart, not when I am deprecating an Eternity of all those Torments which killed Christ! look yonder how he prays, behold him on his Face petitioning, see there how he sweats and begs. You my little Malices and my vexatious Angers, that are hot and quick as Fire itself, and that do fly as high too, that are up at Heaven strait for the least wrong on Earth! look how he bears his, how his patience seems wounded only in a wound that fell upon his Persecutors! and when one that came to apprehend him wrongfully was hurt, as if the Sword of his defense had injured him, he threatened and forever curs'd the black deeds of that angry Weapon, and made restitution of what he had not taken, made his Adversary whole whom he had not hurt! See how with his cruel Judges he is as a Sheep, that not before his shearers only, but before his Butcher too, is dumb. You my Scorns, and my high Stomach that will take no satisfaction but Blood and Soul for the faults of inadvertency, for such as not the wrong, but humor makes offenses: look how they use him, they buffet, and revile and spit upon him. Ye my dreadful Oaths and bitter imprecations which I use to lace my speeches with, or belch out against any one that does offend me in the least, making the Wounds and Blood of God, and other such sad words, either my foolish modes of speaking, or the spittings of my peevishness. There you may see what 'tis I play with so, you may behold the Life of Christ pouring out at those Wounds which I speak so idly of, and what I mingle with my sportive talk is Agony, such as they that beheld afar off struck their breasts at, and to see them only was a Passion. Ye my Atheisms and my Irreligion—but alas you have no prospect yonder, it's but faint before you who out-do the Example; whatsoever Judas and the rest did to the Man Christ Jesus, you attempt on God, you invade Heaven, Sentence, Crucifie Divinity itself.

And now having shown my Sins this Copy of themselves, what they are in their own demerits, when my bowels do begin to turn within me at that miserable usage which Christ underwent, it will be a time to execute an act of Indignation at myself, who have resetted in my bosom all these Traitors to my Savior; made those things the joy and entertainment of my life which had their hands in the Blood of my God; and what a stupid senseless Soul have I, that was never troubled heartily at that, which did make him almost out of hope? and if this be the effect of sin, then it is time for me to throw it off, O my Jesu! sure I am, I am not able to support the weight of that thou didst sink under. Thou didst come to bear our sins in thy own Body on the Tree, therefore in thy Body they were nailed to the Cross, and then certainly I will not force and tear them thence: No, there I leave them, and will never re-assume them more; which resolution is the effect of that virtue and efficacy which is in the Cross of Christ to the crucifying of sin, which is the second sense in which the Christian does profess with S. Paul, I am Crucified with Christ.

There are some Learned Men, that when they would assign reasons sufficient to move God to lay the punishment of our iniquities upon his Son, and execute that Indignation that was due to us on the most innocent, most Holy Jesus, give this only, that this was the highest and most signal way imaginable to discover God's most infinite displeasure against Sin, and by consequence to terrify men from the practice of it: For if anything in Heaven or in Earth could make us fear, and from henceforth commit no such evil, it was surely this, to see Sin sporting in the Agonies of Christ, Iniquity triumphing in the Blood of God: To see those dire instances of the deservings of a Sinner, those amazing preclusions to his expectations; and consider it was easier for God to execute all this upon his Son than suffer Sin to go unpunish'd. Indeed they make all that is real in the whole account they give of satisfaction made to God for sin to consist in this, that the temporal Death of Christ (which God by virtue of his absolute Dominion may inflict on the most innocent, taking away that which himself had given, especially since Christ who had that right over his own life, which none else had, did of his own accord submit to it; and he laid down his life, who had a power to do so.) That Death I say, might justly be ordained by God for an Example of his Wrath and Hatred against Sin, and then might be accepted in the stead of their death, who were warned by that example, and affrighted from committing sin. And truly there is color for it, for all satisfaction seems either of a loss sustained, which is acquired by compensation, or the satisfaction of our Anger, which is commonly appeased by the sufferings of the injurious party; or else the satisfaction of our fears and doubts, that we may be secure not to sustain the like again, which is most likely to be best provided for by punishment: For sure one will not venture upon that which he must suffer for the doing.

Now of all these the first, the satisfaction of compensation, as it cannot properly be made to God who could sustain no real diminution by Man's sin: For though thy wickedness, saith Job, may hurt a man as thou art, yet if thou sinnest what doest thou against God? or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou to him? but only as the breaking of his Law does in S. Paul's expression dishonor him amongst men; so also it were easy to demonstrate that this one example does exalt more of God's attributes, and to a greater height, than either if his Law had been obeyed or executed, if that either were our business, or if this sort of satisfaction did not properly belong only to the offended party, not the supreme Judge or Governor as such, under which notion God is here to be considered. As neither does the second satisfaction, that of anger, the Judge being to be like his Law, that hath no passions or affections. And truly ••e the things that do satisfy our angers and revenges are no real goods, the satisfactions of them are unnatural, and therefore surely not Divine: Monstrous appetite that hath learned to desire mischief, hath also taught us to delight in misery, and be satisfied with the griefs of others, which being nothing to us cannot be our good: And although we are stilled Children of Wrath, as if our portion were to be only Plagues, our inheritance Perdition, and the fearful issues of God's Fury: Yet since to be angry signifies in God no more than this, to testify what great abhorrency he hath to sin, how contrary to him, how not to be indur'd it is: It was impossible for God when he had once resolved to pardon sin, to testify that more than by resolving not to pardon it without such an Example; so that it did satisfy his anger perfectly. But all true satisfaction lies in the provision that is made by punishment against future offenses.

This is that which the Magistrate and Law requires, nec enim irascitur, sed cavet; for by Punishment they cannot call back the offenses that are past, undo or make them not have been: but they can make men not to dare to do them again, nor others by their example.

This is the end why they annex Penalties to their Laws, expressly said so, Deut. xix. 20. Which end therefore when they attain by Punishment, the Law and Magistrate is satisfied. For it is not so much the Death of the Offender that is satisfaction of the Law, as the Example of Terror that it gives; and therefore human Lawgivers have oft thought fit to change the Penalty; and where Death was appointed, to assign other sufferings that consist with Life, and prolong Misery and Terror, as Proscription, and the Gallies, &c. Accordingly to propose an Example of Terror to us, God laid all the severe inflictions of the Passion-day upon his own Son. Now it is evident that the example of a Man suffering for the breach of Laws does certainly hedge in those Laws, keep them more safe from violence; therefore we see those Laws are best observed which the Magistrate's Sword does most guard; and Experience would quickly make it good, a Land would prove but a mere Shambles, and a Man's life cheaper than a Beast's, if Murderers and Duellists shall get impunity more easily than he that steals an Horse or Sheep. When on the other side, that Nation from whom we most receive the fashions of our Vices also, whom the honor of that sin is most peculiar to; though they seemed to value it above Estate, and Life, and Family, and Soul, yet we know could be beaten from it be some sharp Examples. And then when our Lawgiver, as he spake his Laws at first with Thunder and with Lightning, as if they brought their Sentence along with them, and the very promulgation was a Copy and Example of their Execution: So also he did write those Laws in Blood, to let us see what does await transgression, how he that spared not his own dear Son, will certainly not spare any impenitent, this could not choose but have some influence, if 'twere considered. Should we call to mind the kindness God had at this time to lost Man, how he so longed to pity him, that he resolved not to pity himself; how yet in all those turnings of his bowels within him, his repentings over Man, when his Compassion was at such an height as to give his well beloved Son to satisfy for our transgressions; in the midst of all those inclinations to us, at that very time how yet he did so hate our sins, that nothing else could satisfy him, but the Blood of God: How he made the Son of God empty himself of his Divinity and of his Soul, and all to raise a sum only to purchase one example of that Indignation that attends a Sinner; it will be easy then to recollect how unsupportable that Wrath will be to the impenitent in the Day of his fierce Anger; when he shall have no kindness left for them, but the Omnipotence of Mercy will become Almighty Fury: Who shall be able to avoid or to endure the issues of it? shall I think to scape them when he spared not his own Son? or shall I venture upon bearing that to all Eternity which that Son was not able to support some hours? Thus as S. Paul expresses, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, a Sacrifice for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that is, he shown what did await iniquity, that men by so great an example of his Wrath, might be frighted from the practice. Et si quis morte Christi admonitus paeniteat, iste per mortem Christi peccato mortuus esse dicitur, saith Origen on Rom. vi. 1. He who seeing that Example of Christ Crucified for sin is warned by it into Repentance, he is crucified with Christ. God dealing with us as Men do with a young Prince, that must be discipline'd by the correction of another for his faults; and in this sense also, our chastisement was upon Christ, and by his stripes we are cured.

And now though I propose not this as if I thought this Reason were sufficient of itself, which seems to give no good account how any could be ransomed e're Christ suffered: (which yet certainly they were, the virtue of his Death extending to all former Ages, as it proved most evidently Heb. ix. 25. a place which Crellius himself does give no satisfaction to) if the satisfaction, of his Death consisted only in its being an Example, it could no more satisfy for the sins of former Ages, than it could be an Example e're it was in being: If that Death were accepted in the stead of their death, who by that Example are frighted into Repentance, what was accepted for their sins, who had no such vision of it, as that it could not or did affright them, yet repented? Yet to them that have beheld it in its vigor, they that can control this check to Vice, and when to show us an Example it cost God the life of his own Son, after the prospect of whose Cross he hath not any Terror to propose, this being the contrivance of the Divine Mind, and the stress of all his most Almighty Attributes conjoin'd in one compounded Miracle, can yet make all this vain and fruitless and have no effect, are not feared nor warned by it; but as if it signified no peril to their sins, they can come once a year to entertain themselves with the Example and go from the Agonies unconcerned to the sins that inflicted them, and that show forth themselves in them: Who act as if those were the only soft and pleasant things that crush'd his Blood and Soul out, as if those which did make the Son of God cry out as if he did almost despair, were the only fit things to make men jolly: And do thus as they did it in despite to this great method of Salvation, as if they did enjoy the indignation of the Wrath of God, as if those Agonies like the other difficulties of their sins did more provoke to them, or like the Paschal bitter herbs that typified them, were as sauce to the Riots of their Vices. These certainly are men of a most desperate appetite and courage. But 'tis much more to be lamented that the Law of God does not seem better guarded by this dire Example than it was of old among the Jews, when it showed the Sinner his deservings only by the dying of his Breast, and had no other sense nor satisfaction than the blood of Bulls and Goats: It is not very visible that it hath wrought upon consideration so as to make us more fear and beware; nay, we may question whether the example of my Bullock dying for my sin, would not restrain and terrify me more than that of Jesus crucified for it: If I were to expiate the Blood with which I word my Anger and my Oaths, with the blood of my own Flocks, if that Luxury which pluriders every Element and brings a little Universe at once upon my Table to treat itself withal, were but to kill one Heiser for the Temple, and I to expiate each surfeit by one such Religious Riot: Were I to quench the feavers of an Intemperance with a drink-offering, 'tis possible I should not be so prone to sacrifice to my Genius, if I must sacrifice to God for doing so, and I should be more tender of my Beasts than I am of my Savior. Now how comes this to pass? It is impossible that we should be so apprehensive of our own demerits, should we see them represented in the suffering of a Beast, as when they are shown to us in those of the Son of God. What is it then? Should we account ourselves to suffer in our Beast? His Death were our own loss and punishment: And had we no communion in this Death of Christ? was not that our own? or account we our concern and share in that less valuable than in that of our Beast? Far be this from us, we are no further Christians than we can affirm with St. Paul (who challengeth a fellowship in all Christ's sufferings, and boasts it, saying) I am Crucified with Christ. Which brings me to the last sense of the words; I have a share and am a Partner in that Cross, and all the satisfactions that were wrought upon it.

This is that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 Phil. iii. 10. a partaking in Christ's Passion, having his Sufferings communicated to us, made our own, as if we had been crucified with him: as much as he that offered a peace-offering was said to be 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 1 Cor. x. 18. to communicate with the Altar, and partake the Sacrifice which he really did. We read indeed there in the sixteenth verse, that in the Sacrament there is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the shedding of Christ's Blood is there communicated, reckoned to us, but it is communicated in a Cup of Blessing.

And is this to be a Partner in his Crucifixion, to partake only the Sacrament of Crucifixion? not to receive the Wounds and Torments, but the Benefits, the pledge of the satisfactions of the Cross, the Seal of the Remissions that he purchased on it? Blessed Jesu! we should have born thy pangs, and all the dire things thou didst suffer, ought to have been ours eternally; that Agony which an Angels comfort could not calm, that dreadful Terror which expressed itself in the cold Sweat of clotted Blood, that greater Terror which came so near Despair as to make thee cry out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? all should have been our portion to everlastingness, and spent their fury on our Souls: And wilt thou have us bear no more of this than the remembrance? All our Mount Olivet and Golgotha be only the Lord's Table and his Entertainment? dost thou communicate thy Agonies in Eucharistick wine? and is this to be Crucified with Christ? so he does account it seems. He that by virtue of the Cross of Christ hath crucified his body of Sin, Christ's satisfactions are accounted to him, he is esteemed to have a fellowship in all the sufferings, to have had an hand in all that was done for Man on the Cross, they are all reckoned his: And as Christ bore the guilt of all our doings on the Tree, so he will have us bear the name, and merit, and reward of his; for as S. Paul does express, Rom. vi. 5. We are planted together in the likeness of his death, by being made conformable to that in crucifying of our sins, we are inoculated as it were, and both together engrafted in into the Cross, and so there is derived to us the virtue of that Stem, that Root of Expiation and Atonement; and by this insertion being as the same S. Paul says, Phil. iii. 9. found in him, we have his Righteousness. That poor Soul that does throw himself down in the strict humiliations of Repentance at the footstool of the Cross, and there beholds his Savior dying for him, and that is himself by Penitence incorporated into him, grafted into his Death, and planted in his very Passion, as Origen and Thomas interpret. He may take confidence to say, Behold Lord, if the satisfactions of thy Eternal Justice be acceptable to thee, if the blood of God that is offered up without spot be a well-pleasing Sacrifice, look down at once on thy Messiah and on my poor Soul! turn not thy face from me, for whatever my guilts are, I have an equal Sacrifice, those are my satisfactions, and that blood my Offering, the Passion and propitiation of the Cross are 〈ϕ〉 . I am Crucified with Christ.

We have gone through all the Parts, all the Considerations of this Expression, and have no more now to take notice of but this, that all of them must go together, that they never are fulfilled asunder, but he only whom the efficacy of the Cross of Christ hath wrought on to the Crucifying of sin, he only hath the satisfactions of the Cross imputed to him, he is planted with, engrafted into Christ: For if any man be i Christ, he is a new creature, old things are done away, 2 Cor. v. 17. Whosoever is not such he hath no interest in the Jesus of that day. He may perchance in someone of those easy Savior's which these times afford, wherein Opinions called holy, or a sanctify'd Faction give such interests, and to be in a party is to be in Christ; or else he may depend upon that Christ, that may be had with mere Dependance, that is ours if we persuade ourselves he is so. Now sure, he that is persuaded he is Christ's, is either truly so persuaded or else falsely; if but falsely, that will not advantage him, for God will never save a man for believing a lie; but that he should truly be persuaded so without this Duty is impossible, for he that is Christ's hath crucified the Flesh with the Affections and Lusts: therefore by good Logic he that hath not crucified them is not Christ's, and evidently whosoever is not crucified at all, he is not crucified with Christ.

And sure I need not put you in remembrance, that the man in whom sin reigns, and whensoever his Lusts and Passions bid him go he goeth, or come he cometh, or do this he doeth it, that the body of sin is not crucified in him; that which were nailed and fettered on the Cross and slain there could not command and rule him so.

Or if sins dominion be not so absolute but God hath got some footing, so as that his Law hath power in the man's mind so as to make him make resistances against his sin, and he dislikes it but alas commits it still, yet what he does allows not, but returns to do it at the next Temptation, afterwards would fain be good yet does not find how to perform, something governs in his members, leading that Law in his mind into captivity to the law of sin, this man although he hath the body of death, yet 'tis not crucified and slain; for it does live and exercise the greatest tyranny upon him, forces him to serve and to obey against his mind, it overcomes his own heart, and all inclinations to good, and conquers God within him: Till men have left off the custom of the works of sin, and all gross deeds of the flesh it were as vain to prove they are not crucified, as that he is alive that walks and eats. Those works they are the fruits of the flesh, the offspring of its lusts, and were that crucified, and we by likeness to Christ's death planted into the Cross, we could no more produce them, than that dead Tree the Cross could bear fruit, or than a Carcass could have heat to generate, the Grave become a Womb, or the dust bring forth.

Secondly, Yea more, they perform not the outward actions of life who have but the image of death on them; and a man asleep works not, yet is alive, his fancy and his inwards work; and if sin be only kept from breaking out, and men commit not gross deeds of the flesh, but yet indulge to these things in imagination and the heart, cherish them in fancy, and design, and wish, only restrain the practice, or indulge to spiritual wickednesses; you may as well say that a man is dead because he does not walk abroad, because he keeps within doors, and lives only in his Closet or his Bed Chamber, as say that sin is crucified, which while it stirs but in the heart, it is not dead.

Thirdly, Once more, we part from all acquaintance with the dead, the Corps of one that had the same Soul with us; howsoever we may have some throes of grief to leave it, yet we put it from us, we admit it to no more embraces; but if 'twere the loathsome Carcass of a Villain Traitor that was Executed, we turn from the sight as from a Fiend, it is a detestable and accursed spectacle. And so he that hath put his Body of sin to death would have great aversations to it, yea how dear soever it had been, he would no more endure the least acquaintance with it, than he would go seek for his old conversations in the Chambers of Death; he would shun the sight of any the most bosom custom, as he would the Ghost of his dead Friend, he would abandon it as a most ghastly dreadful spectacle; he would also bury these his dead out of his sight. Thus he must needs be disposed that hath crucified his Old man.

And they that are thus dead with Christ shall also live with him, yea those that are thus crucified with him, he hath already raised up together, and hath made them sit together in Heavenly places in Christ Jesus. There already in their cause, and in their right and pledge, and there hereafter in effect and full enjoyment.

The Tenth SERMON, Preached at CHRIST-CHURCH IN OXFORD, Novemb. 5. 1665.

Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of.

THE state of that great Controversy which the words suppose between the Jews and the Samaritans as it then stood, seems briefly thus: Those that were planted in the Regions of Samaria by Salmaneser, however great Idolaters at first; having admitted in a while the God of Israel among their God's, and after having an High Priest of Aaron's Line, a Temple too built on that place where Abraham and the Fathers of the Hebrews, friends of God, did choose to offer Sacrifice; and on that very place where God himself enjoin'd the Law and all the Blessings of it to be published to the People, on Mount Gerizim; which therefore seem to have pretences to vye with Mount Zion, for there also the Lord commanded the Blessing. An Altar too, saith Benjamin in his Itinerary made of the same stones that God commanded to be taken out of Jordan and set up for a memorial of his Peoples passage through it: And besides all this having the Law of Moses too; when they had all these pretensions to the God of Israel, they clave to him alone, and wholly threw off their Idolatry. So Epiphanius does affirm expressly. And their Country being as Josephus says, the receptacle of all discontented fugitive Jews, a great part of it too planted with them by Alexander, they espoused the Worship of the Jews, and came to differ very little either in the Doctrine or the practice of Religion, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , having all things as it were the very same, the only distance seems to be betwixt their Temples, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , just as the Woman states it to our Savior, Joh. iv. Our Fathers Worshipped in this Mountain, but ye say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to Worship: So that if we audit the account of the Samaritan guilt, they separated from the place of Worship which God had appointed, and set up another; in a word, they were Schismatics.

Whether this be such a guilt as should make those terms equivalent He is a Samaritan and hath a Devil, I shall not say; but it is such as makes our Savior say somewhat exclusively, Salvation is of the Jews. All the Blessings and Salvations of the Law did indeed hover on Mount Gerizim, were given thence, that was the place of them; but they were cut away when Schism came: The Church is not a place of blessing when 'tis built against the Church; The Altar hath no Horns to lay hold on for refuge, but to push and gore only, when it is set up against the Altar; And Gerizim is Ebal when it stands in competition with Mount Zion. Well; this only thing does breed the greatest distances imaginable in the Nations, nothing more divides than Separation and Schism; and then these Samaritans as all Separatists do, grew such Opiniastres and so violent in their way, as to deny humanity to those that would not join with them; they would not grant the Civilities of Passage to one that intended for Jerusalem to Worship: They refuse it to our Savior here because his Face was thitherward, ver. 53. A Schismatic will reject a Christ if his Face be fromward their new Establishment, if he but look towards the Antient Worship: At this the Sons of Zebedee are offended, zealous for their Master, as being most particularly concerned in him, two of his nearest intimates; and their zeal would needs break out into flame. And why not? a rudeness to Elijah was revenged by him with Fire from Heaven, which consumed twice fifty Soldiers and their Captains, though they came to do the King's Command: And shall these hated Schismatics be rude to Thee? and reject the Messiah, and yet go unpunished? Lord, shall we command fire to come down from Heaven to consume them, even as Elias did? Which our Savior answers with this sharp rebuke, Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of.

Not to divide but to explain my Text, and so instead of parts present you with some Subjects of Discourse.

By Spirit here is meant that disposition and complexure of Christian Piety and Virtues, that course and Method of Religion which the Spirit does prescribe to Christ's Disciples, and does guide them in; or in a word, the temper of the Gospel is so called: And this in opposition to the Law, the difference of these being expressed by a diverse manner of Spirit; the one is called Spirit of Bondage, the other Spirit of Adoption; so here Ye know not of what Spirit ye are, ye do not judge aright, if you believe the temper of the Gospel is like that of the Law: The course that I prescribe to my Disciples differs much from that of Prophets under the Old Testament, you must be guided by another Spirit than Elijah's was in calling for Fire, if my Spirit dwell in you, For I came not to destroy men's lives on any such account. In this sense it affords these Propositions.

First, To destroy Men's lives, or other temporal rights on this account merely, because they are Apostates, Schismatics, or otherwise reject the true Religion, or Christ himself, is inconsistent with the temper of the Gospel, This is that which Christ reproves here, telling them that would do so, Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of.

Secondly, Because the Spirit of Elias, which the Gospel Christian Spirit here is set in opposition to, opposed the Magistrate, destroyed those that came commissioned from the Prince, and Christ designedly does say ye must not do now what Elias did, therefore, to attempt upon or against the Magistrate, on the account of Christ, or of Religion, is inconsistent with the Spirit of the Gospel.

First, Of the first that to destroy men's lives, &c.

But here I must observe, that since these fiery Disciples that did give occasion for our Savior's rebuke, here were no Magistrates, nor did Christ himself that gave the rebuke assume, but renounce openly all such Authority; therefore no observation grounded on these words can control the Magistrates just Power in punishing Offences done against his Laws, although pretences of Religion and Conscience give color to those offenses; the Gospel does diminish no rights of the secular Powers: Now Supreme Magistrates, though as such they have no right to judge in Articles of Faith, to define what is true Religion, what not; for then the Pagan Princes who had never heard of Christ, and yet are as much Magistrates as any, would have right to judge what Doctrines Christ delivered down to be believed.

But certainly when Christ Commission'd his Faith to run through all the World not only independently from all the Powers of it but in perfect opposition to them, they can have no right to judge in that, which whatsoever they shall Judge we are alike bound to receive (the Faith of Christ) without any the least difference to their judgment. But though they have no right to judge of this, they have Authority to determine what Faith shall have the privileges of their State and what shall not; which shall be publicly professed, and which they will inhibit with Penalties: For sure the Privileges of the State and power of Penalties are the proper rights of the Supreme Power, and therefore none but that can judge and determine of them. In a word, since it is most evident that the tranquility of a State does depend upon nothing more than the profession and priviledging of Religion; it follows that those Powers to whose Judgment and Decrees the care and Tranquillity of the State is committed, must have the power to judge and to determine what Faith shall be publicly professed and privilege'd by the State: In which Judgment and administration if they err, and privilege a false Faith and inhibit the true; they use their Power ill, and are responsible to God for doing so, but they do not invade or usurp a Power that is not their own. Rather 'tis most certain if the Principles of any Sect, or else if not they, yet the pursuance of any Principles do tend directly towards, or are found to work Commotions and Treasonable enterprises, the Supreme Power hath as much right to restrain, yea and Punish them, although with Death according to their several merits, as he hath to punish those effects in any other instances wherein they do express themselves.

Nor must Religion secure those practices which it cannot sanctify, but does envenome. For by putting an everlasting concern into men's Opinions and actions their undertakings are made by it more desperate and unreclaimable. What Wounds and what Massacres must the State expect from them that stab and murder it with the same Zeal that the Priest kills a Sacrifice? that go to act their Villanies with Devotion, and go to their own Execution as to Martyrdom?

'Twere easy for me to deduce the practice of this Power from the best Magistrates in the best times, if that were my business; who had only this temptation to say thus much, that I might not seem to clash with the Magistrates Power of coercion in Religious causes when I did affirm, that to destroy men's Lives or other temporal Rights on this account merely because they are Apostates, Schismatics, or otherwise reject the true Religion, or Christ himself, is inconsistent with the temper of the Gospel.

If you would discover what the temper of the Gospel is, you may see it in its Prophecy and Picture in the Prophet Isaiah, The Wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard shall lie down with the Kid, the sucking Child shall play on the hole of the Asp, and the weaned Child shall put his hand on the Cockatrice den, and the Serpent shall eat the dust. Whatever mischief these have in themselves, there's nothing of devouring, or of hurt to one another in this state; 'tis like Paradise restored, the prospect of the Garden of the Lord. Rather whereas there these Creatures only met, here they lie down and dwell together: And the Asp and Serpent that could poison Paradise itself, have now no venomous tooth to bite, no not the heel, nor spiteful tongue to hiss.

But to speak out of Figure, the Gospel in itself requires not the Life of any for transgression against itself, it calls all into it, and waits their coming; those that sin against it, it useth methods to reform, hath its Spiritual Penalties indeed, whereby it would inflict amendment and Salvation on Offenders: But because final impenitence and unbelief are the only breaches of the Covenant of this Religion, therefore it does wait till life and possibilities of Repentance are run out; and then its Punishments indeed come home with interest, but not till then. The Law 'tis true was of another temper, it required the life of an Apostate to Idolatry, whether 'twere a single Person, or a City, Deut. xiii. To the Jew that was a Child, as S. Paul says, and so not to be kept in awe by threats of future abdication, things beyond the prospect of his care, but must have present punishments, the Rod still in his eye; and was a refractory Child that seemed to have the Amorite and Hivite derived into him, a tincture of Idolatry in his Constitution, that was as ready to run back into the superstitions as the Land of Egypt, as eager for their Deities as their Onions, and had the same appetite to the Calf and to the fleshpots, to make the one a God, the other a Meal; to such a People Death, that was the only probable restraint, was put into the Law by God who was himself Supreme Magistrate in that Theocracy, against whom 'twas exact Rebellion and Treason to take another God, and therefore was by him punished with Death. But the Spirit whom Christ sends breaths no such threats, for he can come on no Designs but such as Christ can join in, but saith Christ, I came not to destroy men's lives.

Secondly, The temper of the Gospel is discovered in its Precepts. I shall name but one, Matth. v. 43, 44. Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy Neighbor and hate thine Enemy: But I say unto you, love your Enemies, &c. Where if Enemy did not mean the man whom private quarrel had made such, and Him it could not mean, it being said to them that they must love that Enemy, Exod. xxiii. 4, 5. But, as the Jews neighbor was everyone of his Religion, and he lived near him that lived in the same Covenant with him, so enemy being opposed to that, must signify one not of his Religion: An Alien, an Idolater, with any of which they were indeed to have no exercise of love or friendship, no commerce: and to some Enemies, the Canaanites, no mercy, but they were to hate them to destruction, Deut. vii. If so, then our Savior's addition here, But I say unto you, love your Enemies, does say that we must love even these; the Christian hath no Canaanites, but the most prosligated adversaries of his Religion he must love, and pray for them although they persecute him: (Which makes appear it does at least include Enemies of Religion, for Persecutions seldom were on any other ground, and Religion which should have nothing else but Heaven in it, as if it had the malice and the Flames of Hell, breaths nothing else but Fire and Faggot to all those that differ in it.) But whether it be an addition and mean thus or no, since it is sure that both they and we are bound to love the Neighbor, and Christ hath proved, Luke x. that the Samaritan, he whom our two Disciples would consume, that Schismatic and rejecter of Christ is yet a Neighbor, therefore him also we must love and pray for. Now 'tis a strange way of affection to destroy them, to love them thus to the death, to get admission to their hearts with a Swords point, to pray for them by calling for Fire down from Heaven to consume them. S. Greg. Nazian. calls the founder of that Faction that began this practice in the Church, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and if so, we know well of what Spirit he is that does call for fire to devour those that differ from him in Religion; 'tis sure one of this Legion, or it rather is the leader of them, that did dwell in Tombs, and does in flames, things which he loves so to inflict; one that was the first Rebel too, which leads me to my second Observation: That

Secondly, To attempt upon, or against the Prince on the account of Christ, or of Religion, is most inconsistent with the Spirit of the Gospel. For it was the Spirit of Elias who destroyed those whom the Magistrate did send, that Christ opposes here the Spirit of the Gospel to, in this severe rebuke, ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of.

The other warm Apostle meets a greater check in the like case, S. Peter's zeal, that they say made him chief of the Apostles, as it made him promptest to confess the Lord, so it did heat him to be readiest to defend him; as fiery to use his Sword as his Tongue for his Master: But his Master will not let a Sword be drawn in his own cause; put up again thy Sword into his place: The God of our Religion will not be defended by Treason, and from Murder by the wounding of another, nor will his Religion suffer a Sword out of the sheath against the Power of the Magistrate, no not in behalf of Christ himself; but goes beyond its proper bounds to threaten things that are not Gospel punishments, even excision in this life, to them that do attempt it, They that take the Sword, shall perish with the Sword. Here the Gospel becomes Law, and turns zealot for the Magistrate though persecuting Christ himself. Our Savior does not think it sharp enough to tell S. Peter that he did not know what Spirit he was of, for when this Disciple would have kept these sufferings from his Master only by his counsel, he replies to him, get thee behind me Satan: He was then of that manner of Spirit; therefore now that he does so much worse, when he attempts to keep them from him with a Sword, and drawn against the Power, as if Christ did not know how to word what Spirit such attempts did savor of, he does not check and rebuke now, but threaten and denounce. And 'tis obvious to observe, that this same Peter who would needs be fighting for his Master, in few hours with most cursed imprecations forswears him: And so irregular illegal violences for Religion usually flame out into direct opposition to that they are so zealous for; fly in the face of that Religion they pretend to strive for; to let us see they do not rise from Divine Zeal, and from true Piety, but from Hypocrisy, Ambition, Revenge, or Interest; and that warm shine that kindles there pretended Angels of Light, is but a flash of Hell, a glory about a fiend. Therefore afterwards none was more forward than S. Peter was to press submission to the Magistrate, though most unjustly persecuting for Religion; talks of no Fire but the fiery trial then, in Epist. 1. Cap. iv. and If ye suffer for the Name of Christ the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you, he knows what manner of Spirit such are of: When they are in the place of Dragons, then the Holy Ghost and God is with them; when the darkness of the shadow of death is on their Souls, even then the Spirit of glory resteth on them. Accordingly the after-Fathers urge the same not only towards Heathen Emperors, but relaps'd Heretics and Apostates: As Julian, and Constantius, Valens, Valentinian; and upon the same account S. Ambrose says, Spiritus Sanctus id locutus est in vobis, Rogamus, Auguste, non Pugnamus: The Holy Spirit spake these words in you, we beg O Valentinian, we oppose not. And S. Greg. Nazianzen says, to do so was the Christian Law most excellently ordained by the Spirit of God, who knew best to temper his Law with the mixture of what is profitable to us, and honest in itself. They knew what manner of Spirit that of Christianity was: It does assume no power to inflict itself: 'Tis not commissioned to plant itself with violence, or destroy those that refuse or oppose it. It wages War indeed with Vices, not with men: And in the Camp of our Religion as once in Israel, there is no Sword found but with Saul and Jonathan his Son, only the Princes Sword. Our Spirit is the Dove, no Bird of prey that, nor indeed of gall or passion: If Christian Religion be to be writ in Blood, 'tis in that of its own confessors only; if men's false Opinions make no parties nor mischiefs in the State, we are not to make them Martyrs to their false Opinions; and if they be not so happy as to be Orthodox, send them down to Hell directly: tear out one another's Souls to tear out that which we think an Error. Sure they must not root out smutted Corn that must not root out Poppy; we may let that which is a little blasted grow, if we must let the Tares and Darnel grow. The Soldiers would not crucify Christ's Coat, nor make a rent there where they could find no seam: But now men strive so for the Coat, that they do rent his Flesh to catch it, and to gain an inclosure of the name of Christians tear all other members from the Body of Christ; care not to sacrifice a Nation to a supposed Error; will attempt to purge away what they call dross in a Furnace of consuming flame: The Christian Spirit's fiery Tongues must kindle no such heats, but his effusions called Rivers, came to quench such fires: Effusions that were mistaken for new wine indeed, but never looked like Blood. Nor are they that retain to this Spirit, those that have him called down on them in their Consecration, impowered for such uses. When Christ sent his Disciples to convert the World, Behold saith he, I send you forth as Lambs among Wolves: And sure that does not sound like giving a Commission to tear and worry those that would not come into the Flock: The Sheep were not by that impowered to devour the Wolves. Our Lord's directions to his Apostles when a City would not receive their Doctrine was shake off the dust of your feet; let nothing of theirs cleave to you, have no more to do with them; cast off the very dust that settled on your Sandals as you passed their Streets. And surely then we must be far from animating to give ruin to, and seize the Sword, the Scepter, and the Thrones of Kings, if they refuse to receive Christ or his Kingdom, or his Reformation, or his Vicar. If I must not have the dust of any such upon my feet, I must not have their Land in my possession, their Crowns on my head, their Wealth in my Coffers, their Blood upon my hands, nor their Souls upon my Sword. It will be ill appearing so when we come to give an account how we have executed our Commission; and shall be asked, did I send you to inflict the Cross, or preach it? to save men's Souls or to destroy their lives, yea and Souls too? And when in those Myriads of Souls that have perished in the desolations which such occasions have wrought their Blood shall cry from under the Altar, as being sacrificed to that Duty and Religion which was the utmost that they understood (if so be that there were no Treason to discolour it) and they that did inflict all this appear but Christian Dioclesians, and stand at that sad Day in the train of the Persecutions, on the same hand: O then those Fires which these Boutefeus called for and kindled shall blaze out into everlasting burnings!

And now it may seem strange that they who most of all pretend the Spirit of Christ, are yet of the most distant temper in the World from that of Gospel; always endeavoring to do that which our Savior here checks his Disciples for proposing, and did threaten Peter for attempting. There are among ourselves that seem to live by Inspiration, that look and speak as in the frame of the Gospel, as if every motion were impulse from Heaven: and yet as if Christ had fulfilled his promise to them without Metaphor, baptized them with the Holy Ghost and fire, only that they might kindle fire, and the unction of the Spirit did but add Oil to those flames; as if the cloven Tongues of fire in which the Spirit did descend, were made to be the Emblems of Division, and to call for fire; these men's life, their garb, their very piety is faction: they pray, rebel, and murder, and all by the Spirit. 'Tis true indeed they plead now what we seem to say, that they should not be persecuted for not being satisfied in their Conscience; so they mince their breaking of the Laws for which they suffer. But do these know themselves what manner of Spirit they are of? or are we bound not to remember when they had the Power how they persecuted all that would not do at once against their King, their Conscience, and the Law? And we do thus far know what Spirit they are of, and if they have not yet repented of all that, then it is plain if they can get an opportunity they will do it again, nay they must by their Spirit think themselves obliged to do it.

But these are not all: those that above all the World pretend to the Infallible assistance of the Spirit, our Church is bold in her Offices of this day to say, do turn Religion into Rebellion; she said it more severely heretofore, and the attempts of this day warrant the saying, when not like our Disciples that would call for fire from Heaven on the Village that rejected Christ, these will raise up fire from Hell to consume their own Prince and his Progeny, the whole line of Royalty, the Church and Nation also in their Representative; and all this only for refusing him that calls himself Christ's Vicar. There are, I must confess, among them that renounce the practice, and say 'twas the device only of some few desperate male-contented, wicked Catholics, and designed by the Devil: And they will allow their Father Garnett to have had no other guilt, but that he did not discover it having received it in Confession. And this gives me occasion to propose a story to your patience and conjectures.

Not long before the time of this Attempt, a Priest of the Society of Jesus in a Book he published, does propose this case of Conscience, Whether a Priest may make use of what he hath learned in Confession to avert great impendent mischiefs to the Government? as for Example, One confesses that himself or some other had laid Gunpowder, and other things under such an House, and if they be not taken thence the House will be burnt, the Prince must perish, all that pass throughout the City will be either certainly destroyed or in great peril; and resolves it thus. 'Tis the most probable and safe Opinion, and the more suitable to Religion, and to that reverence which is due to the Sacrament of Confession, that it is not lawful to make use of this his knowledge to that end. That his Holiness Clement the 8. had just before by a Bull sent to the Superiors of the Regulars commanded most studiously to beware they make not use of anything which they come to know by Confession to the benefit of the secular Government. He adds, that in cases of Confession the Priest must not reveal though death be threatened to him, but may say he knows it not, nor ever heard it, quia reverà non scit nec audivit ut homo, seu pars reipub. Yea he may swear all this if he but mentally reserve, so as to tell you. 'Tis Del Rio in 6th. Book of his Mag. dis. 1. Cap. Sec. 2. It seems 'tis safer to break all the Obligations to Allegiance and to truth, his duty and his Oaths, the Princes and God's bonds, than the Seal of Confession.

But I did not mention this to let you see the kindness these men have to Princes and their Government: I shall avoid producing any the Opinions of particular persons howsoever horrid in my arguments this day; but I only ask whether it be not very probable this instance was the thing to be attempted on this day? Whether the resolution was not published, the Pope's Bull if not made yet produced at least to caution any Priest that should receive it in Confession, and should be so honest as to abhor the Fact, yet from betraying it and hindering the Execution of it. If it were the case, this was not then any rash attempt of some few desperate malecontents; but a long contrivance and of many heads, and its taking its effect was the great care of their Church.

Well they are even with us yet▪ and lay as horrid Projects to the charge of Protestants. Among our other Controversies this is one, whether are the worse Subjects? bloody sayings are produced from Authors on both sides; yea there is the Image of both Churches, Babel and Jerusalem, drawn by a Catholic Pen, and then you may be sure all Babel's divisions and confusions make the draught of ours, and are said to be the issue of the Protestant Doctrines: Whereas such things are countenanc'd by some particular Authors of their Church, were never owned by any public Act, or Doctrine of a general Council to which they provoke us. I must confess our Calendar can show a thirtieth of January, as well as a fifth of November. There are indeed that say, the Romanists hatched that days guilt, and challenge any man to call them to account for saying so. But whether so or not; which Churches Doctrines such things are more suited to, I will now put to trial, that we may know what Spirit each is of: And I will try it by the public Acts and most established Doctrines of the Churches, and here undertake to show the Church of England most expressly does declare against all practices against the Prince for the cause of Religion. But the Romish in those acts wherein she hath most reason to expect infallibility of Spirit, also in the public Acts of the Church representative, in General Councils does abett the doing them, not only for Religion, but for the cause of Holy Church.

First, If the Church of Rome have reason to expect infallible assistance of the Spirit in any case, it is as much in Canonizing of a Saint as in any other, it being as unhappy to determine a false Object for Religious Worship to their Church as a false Article of Faith; there is as much need that there should be an infallible proposal of the one as other; for when she does Decree by the Authority of the Omnipotent God such a one is a Saint, received in Glory, and so renders him the Object of their Worship, if he should chance to be a Reprobate; to cause the People to fall prostrate to the Shrine of one that's damned, and call his flames to warm God's Altar and the Votaries breast, to make the whole Church worship one that is in Hell, is liable to greater aggravations of impiety than an erroneous Opinion in very many of their points of Faith can be.

But it is known their Church hath Canoniz'd one of this Nation, Becket, who though he was indeed illegally and barbarously Murthered, yet 'tis not the Suffering, but the Cause that makes the Martyr, now he did not fall a Sacrifice for his Religion, but was slain because he did disturb the State by suspending all the Bishops that upheld the Kings just cause against him, so that neither King nor State could live in peace for him; for opposing also those Laws which himself had sworn to, Laws that were not only truly Sovereign Rights, but are maintained even unto this day as Privileges by the Gallican Church, and they not branded for so doing: In a word, he was slain for those actions which his own Bishops condemned him for, as a perjur'd man and a Traitor: And for persisting in them to the death he was Sainted.

Now whatever the estate of this man be in the next World, (I meddle not with that;) Yet for Disobedience and Rebellion to place one in Heaven, whence for those things Lucifer did fall; does seem to show what Spirit they are of that Canonize such Saints: For the Church to pray to Christ that by the wounds of this Saint he would remit their sins, does express what rate their Church does set upon the merits of resisting Princes, and disturbing States in the behalf of Holy Church: When such actions make men fit to be joint purchasers with Christ in the Redemption of the World. But when the French Histories say 'twas disputed long after in Paris whether he were Damn'd or Sav'd, that the Church in her public Offices should pray to go thither where he is gone to have his Society; though it express their most infallible assurance of the condition of those men, who for their sakes resist the Secular Powers, yet O my Soul! enter not thou into their counsels in this world, neither say a Confederacy to whom they say a Confederacy: much less pray to be in their Society, who by resisting S. Paul says, do receive unto themselves Damnation.

Secondly, It is notorious that in their first General Council at Lions, Anno 1245. the Emperor Frederick the second, by the Sentence of the Pope and the whole Council after long deliberation and producing several Arguments which they say are not sleight, but effectual to prove the suspicion of Heresy, is deprived of his Empire, all his Subjects are absolved from their Oath of Allegiance, and by Apostolical Authority forbidden to obey him: Therefore that such things may be done in the cases of Religion hath the Authority of a General Council, 'twas that Council that Decreed Red Hats to Cardinals: Hats red it seems not only with the Royal Purple, but with the Blood of Kings and of Royalty itself.

Thirdly, I should have urged the well known Canon of the General Council of Lateran, (the greatest their Church ever boasted of) which says, That if the temporal Lord shall neglect to purge his Territories from such as the Church there declares Heretics, he shall be Excommunicated by the Metropolitan, and if he do not mend within a year complained of to the Pope, that so he may declare his Subjects absolved from their Allegiance, and expose his Lands to be seized by Catholics; who shall exterminate the Heretics, saving the right of the chief Lord: Provided he give no impediment to this. But the same law shall be observed to those that have no chief Lord's; that is, who are themselves Supreme.

This I should urge, but that some say that penal Statutes which are leges odiosae, tantum disponunt, quantum loquuntur: Therefore this Canon since it does not name Kings, it does not, they say, concern them, although 'tis plain it do sufficiently enough. But that there may be therefore no evasion, Fourthly, In the General Council of Constance, that part of it I mean that is approved by their whole Church. The Pope and Council join together in commanding all Arch-Bishops, Bishops, and Inquisitors to pronounce all such Excommunicate as are declared Heretics in such and such Articles (and that of Transubstantiation, half-Communion, and the Pope's Supremacy are among them) or that favor or defend them, or that Communicate with them in public or in private, whether in sacred Offices or otherwise; etiamsi Patriarchali, Archiepiscopali, Episcopali, Regali, Reginali, Ducali, aut aliâ quâvis Ecclesiasticâ, aut mundanâ proefulgeant dignitate: And Commands them also to proceed to Interdicts, and deprivation of Dignities, and Goods, and whatsoever other Penalties, vias & modos. Thus that Council though it took away the Peoples right to the Blood of Christ, denying them the Cup in the Sacrament, gave them in exchange the Blood of their own Kings, making them a right to that.

And that they extend the force of these Canons to the most absolute Princes, even to him that pleads exemption most, to the King of France is plain, because when Sixtus the fifth thundered out his Bulls against the then King of Navarre, afterwards King Henry the fourth of France, and the Prince of Condé, depriving them not only of their Lands and Dignities, but their Succession also to the Crown of France, absolving their Subjects from their Oaths, forbidding them to obey them, he declared he did it to them as to relapsed Heretics, favorers and defenders of them, and as such fallen under the Censures of the Canons of the Church. Now there are no other Canons that do take in Kings but these which can touch him, for that of Boniface the eighth which says the Pope hath power to judge all temporal Powers, is declared not to extend to France. Cap. meruit de privilegio in extravag. communibus.

Thus by the public Acts of their Church, and by the Canons of their General Councils we have found in causes of Religion Deprivation of Princes, Wars and Bloodshed, and the other consequent Miseries are established; Rebellion encouraged by a Law: And if Rebellion be as the sin of Witchcraft then we know what manner of Spirit they are of that do encourage it; sure Witches have no spirit but the Devil for familiar.

But the Church of England on the other side, in her public Doctrine set down in the Book of Homilies, established in the 39. Articles of her Religion, says in express words, that it is not lawful for Inferiors and Subjects in any case to resist and stand against the Superior Powers: that we must indeed believe undoubtedly that we may not obey Kings, Magistrates, or any other, if they would command us to do anything contrary to God's Commands. In such a case we ought to say with the Apostle, we must rather obey God than Man. But nevertheless in that case we may not in any wise withstand violently, or Rebel against Rulers, or make any Insurrection, Sedition, or Tumults, either by force of Arms or otherwise, against the Anointed of the Lord, or any of his Officers, 1 Book of Hom. 2 part of the Serm. of Obed. Not for Reformation of Religion; for what a Religion 'tis that such men by such means would restore, may easily be judged even as good a Religion surely as Rebels be good men, and obedient Subjects. 2 Book of Hom. 4 part of the Serm. against willful Rebellion. The very same thing is defined in the first of the Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical of the year 1640. for Subjects to bear Arms against their King, offensive, or defensive, upon any pretence whatever, is at least to resist the Powers which are ordained of God: and though they do not invade but only resist, S. Paul tells them plainly, he that resists receives unto himself damnation. This was the Doctrine of the Church in those her Constitutions; and although there was no Parliament then sitting to enact these Canons into Laws, yet since that time the Law of England is declared to say the same; and we obliged by it to acknowledge, that it is not Lawful upon any pretence whatsoever, to take up Arms against the King, by this Parliament, whose memory shall be forever blessed.

And now it is not hard to know what manner of Spirit our Church is of, even that Spirit that anoints the Lord's Anointed, that is, which Commissions them, God's Spirit, as we find it phras'd in Scripture: And 'tis obvious to each eye that there is much more resemblance betwixt present Rome, and the Image of Babylon, as S. John hath drawn it in the Revelations, than there is of Babel and the Church of England, as to those Confusions which seditious Doctrines make, as the Romanists pourtrai'd her.

But far be it from me to conclude hence that all of their Communion do allow their Doctrines: Though they stand on the same bottom that their Faith of half-Communion, and Transubstantiation do; even Acts of the same Councils, yet I doubt not multitudes of loyal Souls of this our Nation do abhor the Tenants, by what Rule of theirs I know not I confess. Nor shall I enquire what Security a Prince can have of the Allegiance of those, who by the most infallible Rules of their Religion can be loyal only on Condition, by the leave of those who are his Enemies, on whose will and power all their Oaths and duty are depending. If the most essential interest of Princes will not move them to consider this, sure I am I shall not undertake it: But I shall take the confidence out of the premises to infer, that no Religion in the World does more provide for the security of Kings, than the Christian as it is professed in our Church does. And when we see the Interest of the Crown and Church were twisted by God in the preservations of this day, nor could be separated in the late dismal Confusions, but died and revived together in the Resurrection, they that hate the execrable mischiefs of those times, or love the Crown, or do not come to mock God when they come to give him thanks for his great glories of this day, cannot choose but have good will for our Zion, cannot have an unconcernedness for this Religion, a cold indifference to it or any other; which where-ere it is, alas I fear betrays too openly indifference and unconcernedness for Religion itself. For if I should appeal to our most Sceptic Statists, and not beg one Principle of a Religion, but take their own: Religion was contrived, they say, by pretending to engage a God to uphold his Vicegerent, and by putting after, everlasting punishments before men's fears, (for they saw present ones restrained not Treason) was contrived I say, to uphold States: Then that must be the best with them that best upholds, and then I have evinced the Christian is secure, as 'tis prosess'd by our Church. But then shame to those who to gratify their lusts merely, labor to persuade themselves and others there is no such thing in earnest as a Resurrection to punishments: who by public raillery in sacred things, and turning all to merriment, endeavor to take off the sense of all Religion, and have done it in great measure; and so thrown down the best-Basis on which Government subsists: which they themselves confess was necessary to be framed on purpose for it. For if there be no after fears, he that is stronger than to need to fear the present may rebel, kill Kings.

These Atheists are Fanatics, I am sure in Politicks; more traitorous than our mad Enthusiasts, or than the Canons of the Popish Councils: To these Sadducees in Christianity we may say, ye know not what spirit ye are of, who know not whether there be any Spirit. But it is indeed because they are all flesh themselves: But then if the works of the flesh be manifest, Adultery, Fornication, Seditions, Heresies, Murders, Drunkenness, &c. we know what manner of Spirit they are of; even the spirit that did enter into the Swine, the Legion indeed of Spirits, one Spirit is not Devil enough to animate the flesh into so many of those works. But the fruits of the Spirit that Gospel Spirit which we Christians are of, are love, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, joy in the Holy Ghost; and they that do bring forth such fruits are baptized indeed with the Holy Ghost; and if with fire, fire that came down from Heaven too, 'twas only to consume their dross that they may be pure metal, fit as for the King's Inscription, meek Christians, good Subjects, so for God's Image to be stamp'd upon, that is, renewed in Righteousness and true Holiness. Fire this that will sublime our very flesh into spiritual body, that we may begin here that incorruptible which our corruptible must put on, when our vile Bodies shall be made like to the glorious Body of our Savior: To which state that Spirit which raised up Jesus from the dead bring us, by *quicken*ing our mortal Bodies.

To whom, &c.

The Eleventh SERMON, Preached at CHRIST-CHURCH IN OXFORD, Novemb. 8. 1665.
Being the Monthly Fast-day for the Plague.

LUKE XVI. 30, 31.

Nay Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.—

And he said unto him, if they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

THAT God who purchased for us the possibilities of Repentance with the Son of his Bosom, and requires nothing more in exchange of the Blood and Life of Christ, but some unfeigned tears and reformation of our lives, that He should be contriving methods to bring men to Repentance is nothing strange; for this is but to take care that all that ever he hath done for them be not in vain and lost: But that in Hell, a place which nothing but Repentance can destroy; there should be such designs seems stange, yet not if we consider the condition of the place, whose Torments are not only of so dire a nature, that he that is condemned to them wou•• be alone in them, but were made so dire on purpose that they mig•• be preservatives against themselves; nothing being judged more effectual to terrify men from those pains, than the exceeding greatness of those pains, which he that feels thinks the relation alone will do; for he said, Nay Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent, &c.

The words do willingly suggest occasion for several Inquiries, and some of those of the nicer and more curious kind, but truly I shall not attend to those suggestions, but shall choose to handle some few of the most obvious and popular Considerations that the words break into, and they are three.

First, The Rich man's Charity to his Brethren, his unsatisfied desire and care that they may be brought to Repentance, expressed in these words, Nay Father Abraham, though they have Moses and Prophets, yet let them have one method more.

Secondly, We have here his choice of that method, that which he thought would do though nothing else would; in these words, If one went unto them from the dead they will repent. In the handling of which, we shall examine what the grounds were upon which this Rich man was so confident that that would work upon them; and here we find he chose with several advantages.

First, One from the dead;

Secondly, That one Lazarus; and he

First, One out of Abraham's Bosom:

Secondly, One that had seen him also in his Torments and could testify of them, v. 27.

Thirdly, We have here these fancied hopes all dash'd in Abraham's answer, And he said unto him, if they believe not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

First of the first, the Charitable, careful contrivances this Rich man in Hell had for his Brethren upon Earth: Nay Father Abraham, &c.

It is commonly reported of men who know themselves infected by the Plague, that they desire to infect as many others as they can; they contrive to spread the Contagion, and love society of Ruin; and we are sure it is so in that Plague of the Soul, Sin. This humor did not content itself to debauch Heaven, and unpeople Paradise, but all the Ages of the World make up its Triumph, and every sin that ever was, and misery that shall be, is its issue. Lucifer's pride would have a train of Angels and Mankind to wait upon him in Destruction: And in such an attendance, though to his everlasting cost, he does still pride himself; he feeds upon that Envy that devours him, and cheers himself with adding fuel to his flames that do torment him; and upon this account enjoys his own Agonies and God's Indignation: And then it is no wonder if his Agents upon Earth enjoy the sport; and if the Devil does not more please himself to see his Dominions enlarged and the business of Hell go forward, than wicked men do in having others become like themselves; as if they did derive to themselves, and possess the pleasure, as they do the guilt of those whom they draw in; and the delight like the sin, were all in all, and all in every part of the whole Company that join in wickedness. But it should seem 'tis otherwise with the Sinners in Hell. Our Rich man here when he saw his own estate remediless, so vast a gulf betwixt him and a Bosom of Comfort, that not the least drop of refreshment, no 〈...〉 hopes nor wishes of it could pass thence to him; but Torment sealed upon him by an irreversible Decree; he begins then to contrive for his Brethren, how their falling into the like estate with him might be prevented, ver. 27, 28. Nor satisfied with this, when Abraham replies, they are provided well enough, they have Moses and the Prophets, the one Preaching the Law to them, whose Rules they have made as familiar to them as their dress, they put on daily God's Commandments, and their duty; make his Precepts their frontlets and their wristbands. And the other the Prophets, are Commissioned from God to lay before their eyes the issue of transgressions, give them a vision of the Judgments that await their sins, and come to them burdned with the foreknowledge of the Sinners expectations; so that except they will resolve to choose destruction willfully to assault their own perdition, there is no fear they should come thither; those tell them as much as any from the dead can do: Ah! but thinks he, all those methods I had, yet I am here; and then let them have one other; for as now after this little taste of Torments were I to live again, I should most certainly avoid this place, and lead another kind of life than that which does expire into this Tophet; So if one went to tell them how it is with me, sure then they would repent and not come hither; therefore I pray thee send; Nay Father Abraham, &c.

I cannot here assent to Cardinal Cajetan's account that all this earnestness was only pride in our Rich man, and a desire to have the glory of his Family advanced; which as he labored to raise here by Wealth, so now finding by sad experience that was but a weak foundation to build a lasting House upon, and that all the shine of it was but false treacherous light, such as did end in flame with him; and having made discovery of other greater glories, that Abraham and Lazarus possessed, he would have his Family as high and bright as they; and this their Repentance, which he took such care for, was but in order to that exaltation.

If it were so, truly it is the first pride I ever read of that would content itself with no meaner a dress than the Robes of Immortality, and was ambitious of the Throne of Glory. I have heard I confess of a proud lowliness, where the humility is but the manage and the art of being lofty, is only assumed condescension whereby men but descend to be extol'd, and stoop to take advantage for their mount: But never heard of any pride that aimed to raise itself by the humiliations of Repentance, that laid its groundwork in that dust and ashes, clothed itself in the sackcloth and neglected rudenesses of a pious penitent sorrow: The prides of this side Hell are of a different garb I am sure, if theirs be such; if they design by those just means to settle the inheritance of Heaven in their Families, sure the vices of Hell may be fit patterns for our Religious performances, and 'twere to be desired that all Christians had this man's ardencies and flames in their affections to their Houses.

Yet neither can I from this one particular instance draw any general proposition concerning the kindness of that place to Sinners upon Earth, although all those that make this History not Parable would give me color for it: But waving that, since Christ hath so framed the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet › , (which is a relation of such words as they would have spoke, had they spoke on this occasion) I shall take that as ground enough to apply it to the conviction of those who are so far from these Charitable designs to the Souls of others, that they contrive nothing more than how to have the company of their Friends in those ways that lead to this place of Torment; prevail with them to join in sinning, and show a Vice how to insinuate into them.

The kindnesses of our man here in the flames were divine God like Charities compared to these. Our Savior says, Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for I say unto you that in Heaven their Angels do always behold the Face of my Father which is in Heaven, Matth. xviii. 10. Which one expounds, if we neglect to do what is in our power to preserve the meanest Christians from Vice, and sleight their sinning, their Tutelary Angels that have continual recourse to God, and are high in his favor, will make complaints of us in their behalf, at least they will if we offend them, and any action of ours prove an occasion of their sins. And if a favourite of Heaven shall accuse us to the Lord for that, Then how will he complain of us when we tempt? when he shall have to say against us, that we have ensnared and drawn such a Soul into a Custom that will ruin it eternally; and when he shall bring against us an instance out of Hell here, and the kindnesses of one among the Devils shall come in Judgment against us; where we see the Rich Man thought not of his own condemnation so much he thought of the averting that of his Brethren. We might suppose a man in his condition could not consider anything but his own Tortures. O yes, to preserve others from them; yet, when the man in Hell does so, the men on Earth do think of nothing more than to entice others into them. And is it not a strange Age then, when to tempt is the only mode of kindness, and men do scarcely know how to express themselves civil to their Friends but by pressing them to sin and so be sick with them? as if this were the gentile use of Societies, to season Youth into good Company, and bring the Fashionable Vices into their acquaintance.

And 'tis well if they stay there; it happens so that Parts and Wit, Faculties and Acquisitions do ingratiate men into these treacherous kindnesses, and qualify them for the desires and friendships of such persons as entertain them by softening them into looseness and then into profaneness; debauch their manners, and then their Principles; teach them to sport themselves with Vice, and then with Holy things, and after with Religion itself; which is a greater Luxury than that their Riots treat their Appetites withal, the Luxury of Wit. And thus they educate them into Atheism, and these familiar Devils are called Acquaintances and Friends: And indeed the Companions in sin a man would think should be dear Friends, such as pour an heart into one another in their common Cups, shed Souls in their Lusts, are friends to one another even in ruin, and love to their own Condemnation, are kind beyond the Altar-flames, even to those everlasting fires; such communications certainly cement affections so that nothing can divide them: And let them do so, but Lord send me the kindness of Hell rather, one that will be a friend like this man in his Torments, that with unsatisfied cares minded the reformation of his Friends, Nay Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent; which brings me to the Choice, the second thing.

If a Ghost should indeed appear to any of us in the midst of our Commissions, it would certainly hurry us from our Enjoyments; and there are no such ties & unions by which the advantages of sin do hold us fixed and jointed to them, but the shake and tremble we should then be in, would loosen and dissolve them all, and make us uncling from them, if we may believe discourses that tell us such a sight is able to startle a man however he be fixed by his most close Devotions; for what the Jews were wont to say, we shall die because we have seen an Angel of the Lord from Heaven, most men do fear if they should see the Spirit of a dead man from the Earth. Indeed the affrights which men do usually conceive at the mere apprehension of such an Apparition, do probably arise from a surprise, in being minded hastily of such a state for which they are not then prepared so as they would wish or hope to be, to which they think that is a Call, for we shall die said the Jews.

But not to ask the reason of this now, but find the reason why our Rich Man thinks when Moses and the Prophets cannot make a man repent, such a Ghost should: We have it in ver. 28, they do but discourse to us, but one from the dead could testify, he could bear witness that it is so as they say, speak his own sight and knowledge, and therefore though they hear not Moses and the Prophets, yet if one went unto them from the dead they will repent. For

First, One from the Dead could testify that when we die we do not cease to be; and he would make appear that our departing hence is not annihilation, and so would dash the hopes of Epicures; such as I was, and I may fear they are; who as they live like Beasts do think to die so too: and who are rational in this alone that they desire to be but Animal. And all the rest of men whether worldly or sensual, that enclose their desires and enjoyments within this life, and above all the Atheist that dares not look beyond it, all these would be convinced by such an evidence. Indeed this would take away the main encouragement of all ungodliness, which upon little reasonings how thin soever, that there's no life after this does quicken and secure itself, Wisd. 2. and therefore every Sect of men that did prescribe Morality did teach an after life, nothing was more believed among the Heathen; Their Tribunal below, where three most severe Judges were appointed, meant the same thing with our last Assize, and their Elizian fields were but Poetical Paradise, their Phlegethon, River of Fire, was set to express our stream of Brimstone flame: Thus Resurrection in fable made them virtuous; the guess at it made Socrates die cheerful, and though his hopes had faint weak Principles they had Heroic almost Martyr resolutions.

And on the other side, of those that among them denied an after life, though we are told that Epicurus was a virtuous man, yet his Sect did give name to Vice; and is still the expression for it, and all that did espouse the Tenants of it, did the Vices too; the Sadducees among the Jews are called Epicures, not only for Opinions sake, because they did make God a body, and totally denied his Providence, as Zakuth says, but Epicures also for their practice sake; For they used to scoff at the Pharisees for afflicting themselves by Fasting and Austerities in this life, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 when there is nothing at all of recompense for them in any life to come. Yea and Josephus says of them they were the worst of all Sects, living like savage Beasts towards one another, and uncourteous to their own Sect as to strangers; and this, says he, was but a natural effect of their Opinion, which wholly denied the Immortality of the Soul, and all Rewards and Punishments after this Life; which Principle one coming from the dead would rectify, and so contribute to Repentance. Especially if

Secondly, That one were Lazarus, if he that at the Supper of the Lamb sits next the Father of the faithful, and the friend of God, in one of the higher Seats of Paradise, in Abraham's Bosom; if he would go and speak his knowledge of the Pleasures of that Bosom which he tastes, and of the glories of that Place, and but compare them with the little gayeties of my Fathers House; show them the difference betwixt their Structures and that Foundation whose builder and maker God is, betwixt the entertainments of their riotous Palats, and the Festivals of the Blessed Trinity, then sure they would disrellish those, and catch at these, which do exceed them by a whole Infinity, and will out-live them an Eternity. And here should I attempt, what he would have had Lazarus perform, to dash out the blessedness of that place, making the first draught of them with notions of delight, not such as the Understanding cannot apprehend, but such as seize the heart with pleasure in this Life, and that give it the strongest agitations here; and sweetening that by those transcendencies which I could fill it up with, and should I raise it then with shadow, evince that reason, though it cannot fathom, can yet by sure Discourse conclude the greatness of those Glories, which I would leave for your expectations to loose themselves into; should I attempt all this I were an insolent undertaker. Yet were it very easy to describe them so as that viewing them with the things below, these would vanish in the comparison. And to do so much was the utmost that our Rich Man could design by sending Lazarus, who if he could have been believed might probably have done the work; for if Faith did but do what Lazarus did, look into Abraham's Bosom, were it but turned into a little Vision, and but as clear an evidence of things not seen as eye-sight hath of its temptations, had the spiritual Object but that advantage the carnal hath of being present, (now it is the work of Faith to give it that advantage) sure it would be impossible for the sensitive Objects, the pleasures or the Profits of this World, which ae so far inferior to the other in desireableness, and only make advantage of their being present, when the other is so far off, 'twould be impossible for them to gain our wills consent at any time; and therefore when those glories shall be present to the Soul, 'twill be impossible for any other Object to steal, or ravish, any way to engage one thought away from them: In Heaven they cannot wish to sin. Nay the flash alone of that glory fascinates the heart; Peter, and James, and John, saw but a glimpse of it, and that transfigur'd too, (only the other way that Moses and Elias were, for the glory suffered an exinanition) and they but wak'd into the sight of it, so that 'twas but an apparition of Heaven; and yet they never would have left the place which it once lightened, Master it is good for us to be here, let us go down no more, never converse with anything beneath Mount Tabor, but let us build three Booths, such Tents would be like that which He hath spread, and such Booths be some of the many Mansions of his House, who spreadeth out the Heavens for a Tent for himself to dwell in. But the truth is while men do only hear of Joys above, and have but thin neglected notions of them, and on the other side a sense of present profits, pleasures, honors which the World affords, they will not be affected with the future dry hopes of those as with all these in present, will nor have as effectual a taste of the Supper of the Lamb, as of their own delicious daily fare, nor be as much wrought upon by the Promises of being Cloath'd upon with the white Robe of Immortality, and by the mentions of a Crown, although of Glory, as they are pleased with their own Royal Purples, they have much surer Conviction of the delights of present things, than of those far removed futurities; but now if Lazarus would go from Abraham's Bosom, he might Convince them from his own Experience, and then they would Repent. Especially Thirdly, because Lazarus hath seen me in my Torments, and can give account of them, wherefore I pray thee Father Abraham send him, for if such an one went unto them from the Dead, one that could testify of this place, he would tell them such sad stories of my condition here, how in lieu of all my sumptuous fare I have nothing now but gnashing of teeth, streams indeed of Brimstone, and a lake of fire, but everlasting fever of thirst for my delicious intemperate Palate; my short-lived sins turned to eternal Agonies; sure this would prevail with them to cut off their sins by Repentance, before Death cut off their sin and them together; and so they might prevent the coming hither. And very probably it might have taken; for upon such Conviction 'tis hard not to resolve to change, for who is he that can resolve thus with himself, well I will now content myself with everlasting Condemnation and this sin, for I see they are consequent, now this I cannot leave therefore let the other come; they that were once affected with the apprehensions of the greatness and the certainty of that Damnation cannot resolve thus, and therefore we see fewer men adventure to transgress Man's Law, whose Punishment is near and most assured, than God's Commandments. And when their fears of the Lord's Judgments stare them in the face, they quickly tremble into the terrors and the agonies of Penitence. For who dares sin, and who does not repent upon his Death-bed? he sinks at the remembrance of his former draughts, when he does apprehend his next is like to be in the Infernal Lake, he hath the frost of the Grave on him when he but thinks of his lascivious heats, and does think too that his hot lustful Bed will turn him off straight into Tophet: And then if Lazarus could raise these apprehensions in them, sure they would repent. 'Tis plain these were the grounds our Rich Man built this his request upon, I do not lay them as infallible, I make no question but that men are able to defy their knowledge, and charge through their own belief to sin and to destruction; but commonly men do not lay things deep enough to their heart to be thoroughly convinced in earnest, and thus he believed; for had Abraham granted his desire, and sent Lazarus to testify the Glories he had tasted in himself, and the Torments he had seen their Brother in, all he could hope from this was but to make them more believe the one and other; therefore he thought for want of this they would miscarry, and this alone would do it; so that we may conclude, that in the judgment of one that died without Repentance, having resisted all God's Methods, and knew upon what score he did it, and suffered the deserved pains of so doing; the reason why men do not repent, is because they are not sufficiently convinced of the next Life, and of its two Eternities of Joy and Torment, they do not credit them, but notwithstanding all that God hath done his truths want witnessing, for if one went unto them from the Dead, one that could testify, they would Repent.

I should now make reflections on this and ourselves together, and truly all this would bespatter foully such as go on in a Vice, for it does conclude concerning them that they do not believe God's Truths, but in the midst of their professions of Religion are Infidels; 'tis plain they are so in the acknowledgments of one of their own Tribe, who in the anguish of his

Torments does confess this of them from his own experience: But worse things will appear when we have seen that God hath done all this to us with more advantage than this man in Hell did think sufficient, or indeed desire; which was my next undertaking, and I shall manage it in the same order.

First, If one went unto them from the dead, says he, they will Repent. And now to answer that, Christ is come from the dead; an Article this is that made its way through all the Swords, and all the Racks, and torturing Engines that the powerful witty malice of a whole World could find out and execute: And shall it find its death among the softs and glories of its own victorious profession? when it was instant Ruin to acknowledge the belief of it, then Myriads ran into the flames, at once to own and to partake Christ's Resurrection: but now they that profess it are so well here in this Life, that in defiance of their own profession, they will not think there is another Life.

It is not out of Principle they doubt (as it were easy to demonstrate) but out of improbity; They have an aversion to severe Piety, and are uneasy under anything that does engage to it, and must therefore work themselves out; and here they storm; Unkind men to themselves! not only in imprudence, who adventure all upon such hazards; but in disparaging themselves, who being men of reason, and that set it up to such an height as to make it contend with God, and dispute out his Power of raising them again, yet can think such a reasoning Soul was given them for no other end but to procure for, and to animate the Organs of their sensuality. But this is dash'd if Christ be risen, because His Resurrection did make Faith that he would Judge the World in Righteousness, on purpose to make them Repent; Acts xvii, 20, 21. So that this his first expectation is most fully answered to us.

But Secondly, if Lazarus would go, one out of Abraham's Bosom then they would Repent. And hath there not a greater than Lazarus been with us? one not out of Abraham's but God's Bosom? even the Son of his Bosom, one that himself prepared those Joys for them that would believe him and obey him: one that from all Eternity enjoyed them in the Bosom of the Divinity. And who could better reveal them to us than the Author and the God of them? who knew them more than he that did create them and possess them? Yea when this Son of God would be Incarnate and take Flesh, and was to carry it through all the Miseries that Sin deserved and God's Wrath could inflict, he thought these Joys encouragement enough to do it willingly, these Pleasures were worth Agonies which none but a God could suffer, Heb. xii. 2. Now sure he that prepared these Joys did understand them, and he that is the Word of God knew best how to reveal them too. And now how poor a wish was that of our Rich Man? Let Lazarus go tell them: why a Person of the Trinity hath told us; indeed how could God do more than come himself to reveal the truth of them, and himself die for them to reveal the greatness of them? Good God! that nobody could serve thy turn to tell us of the pleasures of thy Bosom but the Son of thy Bosom! that thou shouldst think it worth an Incarnation to reveal them, and we not think it worth a little Reformation to have them; that he should part with Blood and give his Life for those Joys, and we not be content to forsake a Custom, to give away the pleasures of a Lust, the neither pleasures nor profits of an Oath, the sick delights of an Excess, nor the vexations of a Passion in exchange for them! what will Hell say to us when one there said, if Lazarus will go they will repent? If Lazarus, Thirdly, one that saw me in Hell, and so can testify the Torments of this place, yet God hath out done this too. Our Creed will tell us who descended into Hell, and the Psalmist saying concerning him, God should not leave his Soul in Hell. S. Austin asks, Quis ergo nisi infidelis negaverit fuisse Christum apud inferos? 'Twere easy for me to produce enough besides that say so. Clem. Alex, Origen, Hier. Greg. Naz. Fulgent. Euseb. Emissenus. Caesarius. Anastas. Jobius. Damascenus. Oecumenius, &c. But because we are not agreed what he did there, I will take a surer medium. That no Lazarus can decipher the condition of a Sinner after the pleasures of his iniquity have left him to the recompenses of it, so well as Christ who not only did prepare the Plagues, and therefore can describe them, but also himself bore the pains, and found a few hours bearing them to be too heavy for him, is most evident. His Agonies will give you a relation beyond the skill of Lazarus that saw the Torments, or of all that suffer them. Look but into the Garden, and see if you do not behold there a more dismal Landshape than that which Lazarus had beyond the Gulf, and was desired to give account of? there you shall find Christ at the first approaches saying, my Soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death, Matth. xxvi. 38. As if the only apprehension of his sufferings had inflicted them, and he could not live under the thoughts of them: and then he went a little farther and fell upon his face and prays, saying, O my Father if it be possible let this Cup pass from me. And what was there in this Cup which so empoyson'd it as to make it dreadful to the Son of God? Oh 'tis the Sinners potion that he must swill to everlastingness, and when he was in this condition there appeared an Angel from Heaven strengthening him, Luke xxii. 43. yet v. the 44. we find him still in an Agony. Angels cannot comfort one that is sensible of the guilt of sin upon him; and he prays more earnestly in that same place, Abba Father all things are possible with thee, take away this Cup from me. He does not leave an Attribute unattempted, he does adore the Majesty, for he falls upon his Face and Prays: A Person of the Trinity prostrated in the dust to deprecate those pains; he woos him to it, Abba Father, canst thou deny thy well beloved, only begotten Son, thy Son that is thyself, when he comes to thee with such tender compellations of kindness? with words of so much bowels? Abba Father: he takes hold too of his Omnipotence, all things are possible with thee; and he does it with all the earnestness possible to such a Person: for saith St. Luke there, he does it more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of Blood falling to the ground, and what Agony is there in the Torment, when there is Agony in the deprecation of them? such a Passion could not be prayed against with earnestness enough, but that that very earnestness will prove a Passion: Yea and he goes again the third time and prays the same words, as if, if nothing else, importunity should prevail, and when we shall consider that the Person doing this is the Son of God, to whom nothing could be truly insupportable, yet that he should not be able to bear sin; the weight of that we see makes him cry out My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? as if God could forsake that Person in whom the Godhead was of his Person: Or indeed as if the condition did even separate between him and himself.

And now could any from the dead have given such a frightening account? is there not as much warning in this prospect, as if ourselves had tasted all of it? for is it not more that these Torments should be so terrible to him than that they should be insupportable to us? Blessed

Savior! if the first apprehensions did assault thee with such killing fury, can we resolve to stand the storm? if we do not resolve that, then if all this will not scare us, but notwithstanding all these fears we will have our delightful, yea and our tormenting sins, what other method will be able to reclaim us? they that hear not Moses and the Prophets, nor yet Christ, neither will they be persuaded sure though any other come unto them from the dead. And so I fall on my last part in these words.

If they hear not Moses and the Prophets neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. Here the expression should be first taken notice of: For that is changed, it should go regularly thus, as in the proposal, Nay Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent, so in his answer, if they repent not for Moses and the Prophets, neither will they repent though one rose from the dead. But here 'tis otherwise; as if to repent and be persuaded, yea and to hear Moses and the Prophets were the same things. And if it were our Age had got a fair pretence for bringing all Religion to the Ear; but sure Repentance costs the eyes and heart more than it does that part, and yet the Scripture useth oft the like expression: So in 1 Tim. iv. 16. it is said of Timothy, that by continuing in his Doctrine he should save them that hear him. So also 1 Cor. xv. 2. by which ye are saved if ye keep in memory the things which I have Preach'd unto you. 'Tis pity when the Ear and Memory are so privilege'd, that the Tongue hath not the like advantage; but not everyone that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; yet to know hath as great, for this is Life eternal to know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent, John xvii. 3. Which Life Eternal, and the being saved, or justified, we may not think are so attributed to these, as if to hear, or to remember, or to be persuaded, that is to believe or know, any or all of these alone, shall be rewarded so; or that these necessarily do produce all the rest that is necessary to attain those ends: But only that it is so reasonable that they should produce them, that the Scripture does presume they will; and therefore affirms, He that says he knows God and keeps not his Commandments is a Lyar. 1 John ii. 4. and he that sinneth hath not seen him neither known him, 1 Joh. iii. 6. Nor heard of him it seems by the Text here: For it is so irrational that they who have had notice of the advantages of serving God, and the sad issues of Iniquity, should not reform; that the Scripture does not suppose them guilty of it, but does choose to word it thus, they hear not: A sharp rebuke for them all whose Religion is much hearing without doing; the men whose Soul dwells in their Ear, and that dwells by the Pulpit, that these should be adjudged as men that never heard; and so they shall in every respect indeed, but in the innocence of not having heard, that they do hear so much shall aggravate their Sentence: and yet their Crime is that they hear not Moses and the Prophets, and then neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

Where I note Secondly, that our Savior does not intend here to commit Prophecy and Miracles, and set them one against the other, to show which were most efficacious in begetting Faith: for Predictions being God's exerting of his Omniscience, as raising from dead is the exerting of his Omnipotence, the one a miracle of Knowledge, as the other is of Power, Prophecy therefore is not to be opposed to Miracle, because it works merely as one; indeed it is a miracle in Expectation, or at distance, and the other present: Nor are they to be made to vie, since both conspire, and both are best in different cases: Besides our Savior is not talking here of begetting Faith, but making men repent, and the whole meaning of the words is briefly this. Thy Brethren being Jews have Moses and the Prophets, those contain all the motives of Repentance, God's Commands, his Promises, and Threats; even Heaven and Hell as themselves confess, all these have been confirmed already by great Miracles, and as such have been long since received by the whole Jewish Church, with so immovable an Opinion of the truth of them, that there needs no new Miracle to give accession of credit to them. And then what can one coming from the dead persuade? new motives he can bring them none; Man's nature is not capable of any other kinds, for he can act but from his affections, or his Reason; all which are baited to the height by those motives they have; the Understanding and the Appetite whether it love, or hate, or hope, or fear, (which set on work whatever we perform) all these I say Heaven and Hell are Object for even to the utmost possibility of motion; If he can bring no new ones, those they have when they are once truly believed then they have all the vigor they can have; belief being the application of those active motives to their work, but all the strength to act being in those motives themselves; all I mean in opposition to the miracle. I know that there are other strengths of Grace, but those do help as well the Miracle as Motive; those have influence on the believing too, by their exciting and assisting: (But this strength which may be common to both is not to be considered when one vies with the other:) What therefore shall he go for who can give no new motives nor strength to those they have? If any should not be confirmed enough in that which Moses and the Prophets say, how shall they be convinced that this Ghost is of more credit than they were? but if he should be so far heeded, as to add new Confirmation to them, yet if improbity hath been able to dead the force of the activity of all that Moses says, although acknowledged, with that veneration which the Jews receive Moses with, whose credit they themselves do say no Miracle can be wrought so great as to be able to add to, or diminish from: why then that same improbity within a while will with more ease work off the force of this new Confirmation, so that it will be vain. Indeed 'tis possible that the surprise of such a Miracle just as any other sudden and amazing accident may make a man consider, what though he did afore believe, yet he did not mind nor lay to heart; yet when the astonishment of that is over, the motives then are left to their own strength, and can work only by their own activity, which we see hath been able to do nothing; so that a Miracle at most can be but a more awful remembrancer.

Now sure to bring this to ourselves, we want none such, nor do they prove much useful: Occasions of astonishment and such fatal remembrancers have come and taken up their habitation in our Land, and make approaches towards, hover over every place. Long Bills of mortality, and sad knells, and dreadful passing bells, these are all messengers from the dead, that come posting to us swift as God's Arrows: And one would think we should take notice of their message, hear them when they pass so near us, when they seem to call out to ourselves, when a thousand do fall besides us, and ten thousand at our right hand; wherefore should not an Army of such Carcasses become as moving as one Ghost? should Lazarus come forth with all his sores, they would not be so terrible as these carbuncles and ulcers of the Plague: And the destroying Angel out of Heaven with his Sword drawn, one would expect, should be as efficacious as a Preacher out of Abraham's Bosom. And yet men do not seem to hearken anymore to these than they do to us, when we either Preach, or which they think much less, when we read Scripture to them, that is, when they hear Moses and the Prophets. Men have the same security as to their sins which they had in the freest times, whatever fears possess them, they are not the fears of God, those that make men depart from evil, none of those that fright into Repentance; we have no Religious cares upon us now more than at other times, but Vice as if that also had a Sanctuary under the Lord's wings, and might retire under his feathers to be safe, dreads no Terrors of the Night, nor Arrows of the Day, but walks as open and as unconcerned as ever. And now should we behold a mad man on his deathbed spending his only one remaining minute in execrations; the paleness of a shroud upon his face, but Blood and crimson Sins upon his tongue; the frost of the Grave over all his parts, but a lascivious heat in his discourse; in fine, one that had nothing left alive of him but his Iniquity; would not an horror seize you at that sight? and the same frost possess you but to hear him? and yet his madness is his excuse, and his disease his Innocence. Should we see one that had no other madness, no other sickness but his sin do thus, would it not be more horrid? and is it not the same to see a Nation as it were upon its Death-bed, visited with all the treasures of God's Plagues, his tokens on it, and every place and man in fearful expectations, and yet no allay of Vice? Wickedness as outrageous as ever? while it is thus, with what face can we beg of God to keep from us this Plague and grievous sickness? when we do only mean to make this use of such indulgence, to cherish another Plague in our own hearts? What can we say to prove it would not be a mercy to us to be suddenly cut off, even in the midst of our iniquity? when by our going on in sin in the midst of Destruction, we make appear if he should let us live, yet we would only live to finish our iniquities: And longer time would have no other use but to fill up a greater measure of sin. What answer do we make to all these Messengers of Death that come so thick about us? what do we that may justify God's care in sending us so many warnings? But 'tis no Wonder if the only neighbourhood of Death have not been able to prevail upon us; have you not seen one whom his own iniquity, or God's immediate Hand, hath by a Sickness, or by some sad Accident cast to the very brink of Death, so as the Grave seemed to begin to take possession of him? and all his hopes sickned and di'd? so that recovery from that condition may be well, as 'tis in Scripture often called a Rising? have you not seen him in that state, when he supposed that sinning was now done with him, and the next thing was Judgment, when God's Tribunal seemed to be within his view, and Hell to gape for him as wide as the Grave, both opening to receive their parts of him at the same time, and himself ready to divide himself into those two sad Habitations? With what effectual Sermon will he then Preach to himself against his sins? and that you may be sure shall work upon him; he instantly resolves against his Vices, he will not carry them along with him out of this Life, but cast them off as too sad dangerous Company, nor yet if God shall lend him life will he retain them, but it shall be a New Life which he will lead: And yet when God hath raised him up, after a while he returns to his Vomit, his Sins recover with his Body▪ he owes his Innocence but to his Weakness, nor is it more long-lived; his holy purposes decay as his strength grows, and die as soon as settled health does come: And he who never would commit the Sin again when he was Dying, mends into it again: And then what hopes is there in this mistaken Method? when we see men come themselves from the Dead unto themselves, yet cannot make themselves Repent. But if we are not all concerned in this, take a more spreading and more visible experiment. If ever one came from the Dead, this Church and State came thence: And by as great a Miracle of Resurrection. But where is the Repentance such a Miracle may have flattered our Expectations with, as I am confident the resolutions of it did in that sad dying state? are not some men as violent in those wicked practices that merited our former Ruin? and others in those cursed Principles that did inflict it, as they ever were? 'tis said by many that have evil will at Zion (and it is our concern to take a care they speak not truth) that in the Church some that are risen up again have still the silence of the Grave upon them, and are as dumb, as if their mouth were yet full of their monument Earth: And yet as if it were not full of Earth, nor had been satisfied with it in the Sepulcher, they gape still like the Grave that never can be satisfied. And we see others who as if this Resurrection were but a start out of a sleep, or lucid interval of former madness, have their hands ready not only to tear off the hair, the unessential accessory beauties of the Body of the Church and State, but to scratch the Face, pull out the Eyes, and tear open those Wounds which their last fit of Fury did inflict, so to let life out again. And as for the Community of the Nation, 'tis true we are as it were risen from the Grave, but have we not brought up with us the Plague sores? are not the Spots upon us still? the Venom, Ulcer, and infection about us? Yea more contracted Stench and Putrefaction? such as Death and the Grave do add? and coming from the dead we will not yet part with these, but dress ourselves in those infected and defiled grave-clothes, and rise into corruption, and so confute God's Method of a Resurrection. 'Twere happier if we would so far confute the Text, that coming ourselves from the dead, we would renounce communion with all Deaths adherencies; begin the incorruptible, which shall be consummated when we shall rise again a Church triumphant: when Death shall be swallowed up in Victory, and neither Sin nor Repentance shall be anymore, but Holiness, and Life, and Glory too shall be Immortal and unchangeable.

To Which, &c.

The Twelfth SERMON, Preached at CHRIST-CHURCH IN OXFORD, Decemb. 31. 1665.

LUKE II. part of the 34. verse.

Behold this Child is set for the Fall and Rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be spoken against.

AND Simeon Blessed them, and said, &c. A Benediction sure of a most strange importance: If to bring forth one that is to be a large Destruction, if to be delivered of a Child that must be for the Fall of many, and the killing of the Mothers self, be blessed; if Swords and Ruins be Comforts, then my Text is full of these: But if this be to Bless, what is it to forespeak and abode ill? Yet however ominous and fatal the words are, they give us the event and the design too of the Blessed Incarnation of the Son of God, the Child of this Text and of this Season: A short view of God's Counsel in it; and the Effects of it. The Effects in these Particulars.

1. This Child is for the Fall of many.
2. For the Rising again of many.
3. For a Sign: With the quality of that sign; he is for a sign that shall be spoken against.

2. The Counsel and Design of this is signified in the word here 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : he is set, and preordain'd to be all this.

And here I shall but only name that way whereby many men set this Child for their own Fall, while they make his holy Time to be but a more solemn opportunity of •••ing: We know many celebrate this great Festival with Surfeits and Excesses, the usual appendages of Feasting, Oath• and Curses the ingredients of Gaming; Dalliance and Lasciviousness the attendants of Sporting; of all which this seems as it were the Anniversary, a set time for their return. Thus indeed the Israelites did solemnize the Birth of their Idol-Calf, They sate down to Eat and Drink, and rose up to Play. And must we celebrate this Child too like that Calf, because he was born among Brutes? And must his Votaries also be of the Herd? And he live and be worshipped always in a Stable? Because God became Man, must Men therefore become Beasts? Is it fit to honor that Child with Iniquity and Looseness, that did come into the World upon designs of Holiness, to settle a most strict Religion? Nothing can be more incongruous than this; and certainly there is nothing of God's Counsel in it. But to you whose time seems nothing else but a constant Festival, always hath the Leisure, and the Plenties, and the Sports of one, who as to these things keep a Christmas all your life, this Season as it does not seem to challenge those things to itself peculiarly, so I shall not now insist on them; but proceed to those ways by which Simeon did Prophecy, This Child would be for the fall of many in Israel. And they are three,

1. This Child whom I but now declared God had prepared to be the Glory of his People Israel, yet his Birth was so inglorious, and his Life answerable to it shall be so mean and poor, and his Death so full of shame and curse, that these shall prove a scandal to his People, who shall be offended at them; and being prepossess'd with prejudices of a Pompous Royal Messiah, they will not believe in this, but reject a Savior that comes upon those disadvantages, which will therefore prove occasions of falling to them.

That is was so is expressly said, Behold, I lay in Zion a Chief Corner-stone, a stone of stumbling, and a Rock of offense. And that it was so upon this account is clear, the Great ones cry out of him, This fellow we know not whence he is: They that seemed to know whence did upbraid him with it, Is not this the Carpenter? And therefore with a deal of scorn they question, Do any of the Rulers or the Pharisees believe in him? Yea Christ himself knew this would be so great a Scandal, that in the 11. Chapter of S. Matthew, in the close of many Miracles which he wrought on purpose to demonstrate he was the Messiah, he adds verse. 6. and blessed is he that shall not be offended in me. As if he thought his mean condition would prove a greater argument against him than his mighty Works were for him: And it were a vaster Prodigy to see the Savior of the World, the promised Messiah, poor and abject; than to see one cure the Blind, and heal the Lamé, and raise the Dead; and they might think they had a stranger Miracle to confirm their unbelief, than any he would work to make them believe in him.

And really, that the Kingdom of the Messiah, which the Prophets did express in terms as high as their own Extasies and Raptures, in transported words, as if it vied with God's Dominion, both for extent and for duration, should prove at last an Empire only over twelve poor Fishermen and Publicans, and one of them a Traitor too: And that He that was born this King, should be born in a Stable; while he lived that he should not have an hole to put his Head in, nor his Corps in when he died, but his Grave too must be Charity; this would startle any that did wait for the Redemption of Israel in those glorious expresses which the Prophets trac'd it out in. To you indeed that are Votaries to this Child, are confirmed Christians, these seeming disadvantages can give no prejudice: However mean and abject his condition were, that cannot make you to despise him, who from that must needs reflect how dear you were to God, when for your sakes merely he became so mean an abject. He became poor, saith S. Paul, that you through his poverty might be made rich: He was made the Child of Man, that you might be made Sons of God; it was to pay the price of your Redemption that he so emptied himself; thus he valued you; and men do not despise merely because, and by those measures that, they are esteemed, these are not the returns of love; its passionate, obliging, ravishing effects do not use to be thus requited; this his great descent cannot occasion your fall, who know he descended only to assume you up to glory. But 'tis worth inquiry, why, since it was certain that for this this Child should be the fall of Israel, that for this they would reject him; and the meanness of his condition would prove an unremovable obstruction to their belief, as it is to this day; Why yet he would choose to be born in a condition so in the utmost extreme to his own nature, so all contradiction to his Divinity, and so seemingly opposite to the very end of his coming.

The Jew indeed will find no excuse for his Infidelity from this condition: For whatever that were, yet those Miracles that made the Devils to confess him, brought conviction enough to make Jews inexcusable. And it was obvious to observe, that He who fed five thousand with five Loaves and two Fishes, till they left more than was set before them, needed not to be in a condition of want or meanness, if it were not otherwise more needful he should not abound. God, that when he brought this first begotten Son into the World, said, Let all the Angels of God worship him, might have put him into an estate which all Mankind most readily would have done homage to: As easily have dress'd his Person with a blaze of Pomp and Splendor, as his Birthday with a Star; if there had not been necessity it should be otherwise. And such there was. For when the fullness both of Time and Iniquity was come, when Vice could grow no further, but did even cry for Reformation, and when the Doctrine that must come to give the Rules of this Reformation, was not only to wage War with Flesh and Blood, with those desires which Constitution gives, but which perpetual universal Custom had confirmed; and which their God's also, as well as Inclinations did contribute to; which their Original sin, and their Religion equally •omented; for Vice was then the Worship of the World, Sins had their Temples, Theft its Deity, and Drunkenness its God, Adultery had many, and to prostitute their bodies was most •acred, and their very Altar-fires did kindle these soul heats, whence Uncleanness is so often called Idolatry in Scripture: And besides all this, when all the Philosophy, and all the power of the World were engaged in the belief and practice of this, and resolved with all their wit and force to keep it so. When it was thus, the Doctrine that must come to oppose, control, reform all this, must come either armed with Fire and Sword, design to settle itself by Conquest, or come in a way of Meekness and of suffering: The first of these Religion cannot possibly design, because it cannot aim to settle that by violence, which cannot be forced; and where 'tis force, is not Religion. One may as well invade, and hope to get a Conquest over thoughts, and put a Mind in Chains, and force a man to will against his will. All such motives are incompetent to demonstrate Doctrines, for however successful their force proves, yet it cannot prove the Doctrines true; for by that Argument is proves that Religion that it settles true, it proves that which it destroys was true before, while it prevailed and had the Power. Had this Child come so, he had only given such a testimony to the truth of Christianity, as Heathenism had before, and Turcism hath since: He might indeed, have drowned the wicked World again in another Deluge of their own Blood: But sure, never had reformed it thus. Therefore that Religion, that must oppose the Customs and the Powers of the World, upon Principles of Reason and Religion, must do it by Innocence and Patience, by doing good, (and which was necessary, then by consequence as the World stood,) by suffering evil: parting with all, not only the Advantages but the Necessaries of this life, and life itself too, where they stood in competition, and were inconsistent with men's duties, and their expectations: And by this means they must show the World that their Religion did bring in a better hope than that, which all the profits, pleasures, glories of this World can entertain and slatter.

Thus they did, and thus they did prevail. For the first Ages of the Church, were but so many Centuries of Men, that entertained Christianity with the Contempt of the World, and Life itself. They knew that to put themselves into Christ's Service and Religion, was the same thing as to set themselves aside for spoil and Rapine, dedicate themselves to Poverty and Scorn, to Racks, and Tortures, and to Butchery itself. Yet they entered into it; did not only renounce the Poms and Vanities of the World in their Baptism, when they were new born to God; quench their affections to them in those waters; but renounced them even to the death; drowned their affections to them in their own heart blood: ran from the World into flames, and fled faster from the satisfactions and delights of Earth, than those flames mounted to their own Element and Sphere: In fine, they became Christians so, as if they had been Candidates of death, and only made themselves Apprentises of Martyrdom. Now if it were not possible it should be otherwise than thus, as the World stood, then it was necessary that the Captain of Salvation should lead on, go before this noble Army of Martyrs; if it were necessary that they must leave all who followed him; then it was not possible that he should be here in a state of Plenty, Splendor, and Magnificence; but of Poverty, and Meanness; giving an Example to his followers, whose condition could not but be such. To give which Example was, it seems, of more necessity, than by being born in Royal Purple, to prevent the fall of many in Israel, who for his condition despised him.

I am not so vain as to hope to persuade any from this great Example here to be in love with Poverty, and with a low condition, by telling them this Birth hath consecrated meanness, that we must not scorn those things in which our God did choose to be install'd; that Humility is, it seems, the proper dress for Divinity to show itself in. But when we consider, if this Child had been born in a condition of Wealth and Greatness, the whole Nation of the Jews would have received him; whereas that he chose proved an occasion of falling to them: Yet that God should think it much more necessary to give us an Example of Humility and Poverty below expression; then it was necessary that that whole Nation should believe on him. When of all the Virgins of that People, which God had to choose one out to overshadow, and impregnate with the Son of God, he chose one of the meanest, (for he hath regarded the low estate of his Handmaiden, said she,) and one of the poorest too, for she had not a Lamb to offer, but was purified, in formâ pauperis. When he would reveal this Birth also, that was to be the joy of the whole Earth, he did it to none of that Nation, but a few poor Shepherds, who were laboring with midnight-watches over their Flocks; none of all the great Ones, that were then at ease, and lay in softs, was thought worthy to have notice of it: Lastly, when the Angels make that poverty a sign to know the Savior by. This shall be a sign unto you, You shall •ind the Babe wrap'd in swaddling clothes, and laid in a Manger: As if the Manger were sufficient testimony to the Christ, and this great meanness were an evidence 'twas the Messiah: From all these together, we may easily discover what the temper is of Christianity. You see here the Institution of your Order: the First born of the Sons of God, born but to such an Estate. And what is so original to the Religion, what was born and bred with it, cannot easily be divided from it. Generatio Christi generatio populi Christiani, natalis Capitis, natalis Corporis. The Body and the Head have the same kind of Birth, and to that which Christ is born to, Christianity itself is born. Neither can it ever otherwise be entertained in the heart of any man, but with poverty of spirit, with neglect of all the scorns and the Calamities, yea, and all the gaudy glories of this World, with that unconcernedness for it, that indifference and simple innocence that is in Children. He that receiveth not the Kingdom of Heaven as a little Child, cannot enter thereinto, saith Christ: True indeed, when the Son of God must become a little Child, that he may open the Kingdom of Heaven to Believers. Would you see what Humility and lowliness becomes a Christian? see the God of Christians on his Royal Birth-day. A Person of the Trinity, that he may take upon him our Religion, takes upon him the form of a Servant; and He that was equal with God, must make himself of no Reputation, if he mean to settle and be the Example of our Profession. And then, when will our high spirits, those that value an hu• of Reputation more than their own Souls, and set it above God himself, when will these become Christian? Is there anymore uncouth or detestable thing in the whole World, than to see the great Lord of Heaven become a little one, and Man that's less than nothing magnify himself? to see Divinity empty itself, and him that is a Worm, swell and be puffed up? to see the Son of God descend from Heaven, and the Sons of Earth climbing on heaps of Wealth, which they pile up, as the old Giants did Hills upon Hills, as if they would invade that throne which he came down from? and as if they also were set for the fall of many, throwing everybody down that but stands near them, either in their way or prospect? Would you see how little value all those interests that recommend this World, are of to Christians? see the Founder of them choose the opposite extreme: Not only to discover to us that these are no accessions to felicity▪ This Child was the Son of God without them: But to let us see that we must make the same choice too, when ever any of those interests affront a Duty, or solicit a good Conscience; whensoever indeed they are not reconcilable with Innocence, Sincerity, and Ingenuity. It was the want of this disposition and temper that did make the Jews reject our Savior. They could not endure to think of a Religion that would not promise them to fill their basket, and to set them high above all Nations of the Earth, and whose appearance was not great and splendid, but looked thin and maigre, and whose Principles and Promises showed like the Curses of their Law, called for sufferings, and did promise persecution; therefore they rejected him that brought it, and so this Child was for the fall of many in Israel.

2. This Child is for the fall of many by the holiness of his Religion: while the strictness of the Doctrine which he brings, by reason of men's great propensions to wickedness, and their inability to resolve against their Vices, will make them set themselves against it, both by word and Deed: For they will contradict and speak ill of, yea, they will openly renounce, and fall away from it and him.

1. For that reason they will contradict, speak ill of him and of his Doctrines: This is said expressly in the last words of my Text, He is for a sign that shall be spoken against; that is, that very holiness both of his Life and Doctrine, that shall make him signal, it shall make him be derided and blasphemed. As if his being a 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 for an Ensign lifted up, a Standard for all Nations, were not for them to betake themselves to, but to level all their batteries against. Accordingly we find they called him Beelzebub, because he cast out Devils. And all this was foretold? For although he were fairer than the Children of men, Psalm xlv. Yet Isai. liii. It is said, He hath no form nor comeliness, when we shall see him, there is no beauty in him, that we should desire him, he is despised and rejected of men. Surely because his holiness did cloud and darken all his Graces. Devotion in a Countenance does writh and discompose it, prints Deformity upon it; and Eyes lifted up with ardency, look as bad as eyes distorted, set awry. Nay Majesty when it was most severe and pious, never yet could guard Religion from these scorns. David, that great and holy King, says of himself, I wept and chastened myself with fasting, and that was turned to my reproof; as if Repentance were among his Crimes, and he must be Corrected for his Discipline. I put on Sackcloth also, and they jested upon me, they that sate in the gate spake against me, and the Drunkards made songs upon me. Sure these jolly men are not companions to those Angels, in whose presence there is joy over one sinner that repenteth; that his Virtue should be a rejoicing, and a song to them too: Certainly the penitent man's tears do not fill their Cheerful bowls, nor his groans make those Airs which they set their drunken Catches to. But that we may be sure it never will be otherwise, S. Peter tells us, That in the last days there shall come scoffers, walking after their own lusts. Now the men of our days have the luck to obey Scripture thus far as to make that Prophecy to come to pass; for those scoffers are come in power and great glory. The Psalmist tells us of a Chair of Scorners, as if these were the only men that speak ex cathedra: And sure scoffs and taunts at Religion are the only things that may be talked with confidence, aloud: They imprint an Authority on what is said, and conversations that are most insipid on all other scores, get account as they come up towards this practice: Hence they gain degrees; commence ingenious as they border on these Atheistical and irreligious Blasphemies; and when it is pure scorn, then it is in the Chair.

But it stays not there; For Secondly, Upon the same account of strictness of Religion, men will fall off from, and openly renounce both Christ and his Religion. This is that our Savior himself found, Light, saith he, is come into the World, and men loved Darkness rather than the Light, because their deeds were evil. And he said of the Pharisees, They repented not that they might believe, as knowing it impossible that they could venture to believe that Doctrine which condemned those courses that they would not repent of.

And if I should affirm, that it is nothing else but men's unwillingness to be obliged to those things, which if there be a God, and a Religion which this Child was set to institute, they must account themselves obliged to; nothing else I say but this, which makes them so unwilling to believe a God or Christ; yea, openly renounce them both, and their Religion; I should have for proof of this, not only the late instance of a Nation in the Indies; which, by institution of the Portugals, was easily persuaded to embrace the Christian Creed, and was Baptized into our Faith; but when they were required to lead their lives according to Christ's Precepts, and renounce their Heathen Licences, they chose rather to renounce their Creed and Savior, and returned instantly to their indulgent Heathenism. But to this experience, give me leave to add this Reason, that it is not the Difficulty of the Mysteries of Faith, and their being above our Comprehension, which makes them not to be received; because there are as great difficulties in things that we are certain of. For in the very Sphere of Reason, within the lines and measures of their own Infallibility, in things of which she does assure herself by Diagrams and sense, yet she is as much amazed, as at those Objects in the highest and remotest Regions of Faith; and Mathematics hath her Paradoxes that stand in as great danger of a contradiction as any of Religions Mysteries; while Reason cannot cape what she demonstrates, but is to seek how those things can be possible which she proves most certain; and they are incomprehensible to her, even when they are most evident: And then sure if we can think there is a God, we must needs think He can do things which we cannot comprehend, when it is plain our Reason cannot comprehend what she herself does find out and create. It is not therefore contradiction to Reason, but to Appetite, that makes things of Religion so incredible; which I thus demonstrate to the Atheist.

Those very difficulties, to avoid which he denies a God; to wit, Those of an Eternal Being that is of himself; those very things he must and does acknowledge in the being of the World, if that either be it self Eternal (as the Atheist of the Peripatetick Tribe will have it) or else if its atoms, out of which it was concreated, were: (as those of Epicurus herd assert.) In a word, if they say the World or its materials were made, they grant a God that made it; If they say they were not made, they assert then an Eternal Being of itself; that is, they allow those difficulties for which they pretend to deny a God.

There being therefore the same difficulties, (Greater I could prove them, from the diverse natures of corporeal and spiritual beings; for we are sure, in bodies that are still in motion, and so subject to succession, those things are impossible; but if there be a Being that is not in motion, and by consequence, not subject to the laws of our time, all these knots untie themselves, those difficulties vanish and have no place: But to say no more than I have shown, there being the same Difficulties in the Atheist's Hypothesis as in the other, 'tis apparent, not the difficulties of belief, but practice, make him fix upon his own against the common notions of the World. So that 'tis not his understanding, but his Appetite frames his hypothesis; and without figure, 'tis his Will that he believes with. And it is most evident, that because men do not love the Precepts of Religion, would not have them be their duty, therefore they would have the Doctrines of it not be truths; and in this they are the Disciples only of their Lusts, and because they cannot resolve to be otherwise, therefore they resolve not to be Christ's Disciples, but reject him for his holy Doctrines sake: And so this Child is for the fall of many.

But it were strange if upon this account, Christ should be for the fall of any of us; who have learned a trick to reconcile his severe Doctrines and our Sins together. Where Vice most abounds, though it be willful, and men persevere in it, they are so far from finding any reason to fall off from him, or from his Gospel for this, that they therefore take the faster hold of it, rely upon Him with the bolder, stronger confidence. As if good old Simeon were mistaken, when he thought, because men would not leave those sins which Christ so threatened, therefore they would leave him: Because they could not bear those his hard sayings, to pull our the lust and the Eye too; cast away the treasures of unrighteousness, and the right hand that receives them also; therefore they would cast off him: For, for this reason they betake themselves to him more eagerly, devolve and cast themselves upon him with assurance. 'Tis possible indeed that the new Christian'd Indians might believe themselves obliged to lead their lives according to the Vow that they had made in Baptism, knew not how to live a contradiction, to be Christian Pagans; therefore they thought it absolutely necessary to renounce the one; and to reject Christ and his strict Religion was easier they thought. Our Savior also might suppose, that when he brought Light into the World, men would not receive that Light, because their deeds were evil: But our modern wickednesses that are of the true Eagle kind, are educated, bred up to endure, and to defy the Light: Our deeds of Night have learned to face both Sun and Men, yea and face the Sun of Righteousness, and the light of those flames that are to receive them. Our Savior told the Pharisees indeed, that they repented not, that they might believe; for thinking it impossible they could assent to what he did affirm, except they would consent to what he did Command, He therefore thought they were not able to believe, because they would not purpose to amend. But there is nothing difficult in this to us, who at the same time, are so perfectly resolved that every threat of Gospel is so Divine truth, as that we assure ourselves, that we could be content to die Martyrs to the truth of them, rather than enounce one little of them; yet even then are Martyrs to those Lusts and Passions which those Threats belong to: Who, at once, believe this Book of God, that says, except ye repent ye shall all perish; and believe also, that notwithstanding we do not Repent, yet by Believing we shall scape; not perish, but be saved. And is not this directly to believe ourselves into Damnation? the third and the great fall, which this Child is set for.

3. This Child is for the fall of many, to wit, of all those who on these, or any other grounds do not believe in, or do not obey him; who shall not obey him: who shall therefore fall into Eternal Ruin.

this our Savior does affirm, S. John iii. 19. This is the Condemnation that Light came into the World, &c. This does aggravate the guilt, and Sentence. We were fallen before indeed in Adam: And I dare not undertake to be so learned to say whether; to determine with some men that was but a fall from Paradise into the Grave, and we were forfeit to Death only: But I may adventure to affirm, that in the second Adam, Sinners finally impenitent shall fall much farther than we did in the first Adam: Now their pit shall have no bottom, but this light that came to lighten them, shall be to them consuming fire and everlasting burnings. And all reason in the world. For, upon that fall of ours in Adam, help was offered us: an easy way not only to repair those ruins, but to better infinitely that estate which we were fallen from; and a way that cost God dear to purchase; cost him, not this Incarnation only, but the Death and Passion of his Son, and divers other blessed methods of Salvation: Now if we refuse the mercy of all this, and scorn these miracles of condescending goodness, and defy those methods, that he makes use of to raise us from our Fall, it is apparent we provoke and choose deeper ruin; this refusal hath in it such desperate malignity, as to poison this great mercy of the Incarnation, and all the rest. 'Tis but a small thing to say, that they who Stumble at this Rock of their Salvation, spurning at it by their willful disobedience, that these make an infinite mass of loving-kindness to be lost upon them, so as that Salvation cannot save them; for alas Salvation ruins them the deeper, and this Child is for their fall. The condition they were forfeit to before by reason of their breach of the first Covenant was advantage, comfortable in comparison of that which Christ does put them in: This is the Condemnation, that he came into the World; And it had been infinitely better for them, that this Child too had never been born. The unreformed have the least reason in the world to solemnize this Festival, they do but celebrate the birth of thie own Ruin: bow down, and do reverence to their Fall: Had it not been for this, they had not gone to so severe an Hell. So that they do but entertain the great occasion of their greater Condemnation. Such it proves to them, and that it might be so, He was fore-ordained for it: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ▪ This Child is set for the fall of many, which does lead me to God's Counsel in all this: My next Part.

This Child is set for the fall of many, even by God's direct appointment; for saith Grotius, Accedo its qui putant non nudum eventum sed & consilium Dei significari. I am of their opinion, who understand not the success alone, but the design of this Childs coming, and God's Counsel in it is intended here. And without disputing of God's antecedent Will, and consequent, this is safely said: God designed this Child should be such an one, that they who had no inclinations for Virtue, would not entertain the love of it, but counted it a mean pedantick thing, and all its Rules and Laws unreasonable servitude, these loose men would certainly reject Him and his Doctrines, which were so severe and strict, That those who did pretend friendship for Virtue, and a service for Religion, but withal must be allowed to maintain correspondence with the World, seek the Honors and advantages of Earth, and will trespass on Religion where it interferes with these, break with Virtue when their interest cannot consist with it, that these false hypocritical pretenders, should be offended with the mean condition of this Child, and of his followers in this World, and with the poor spirited Principles of his Religion. In sum, they that upon these, or any other grounds finally disbelieve, or disobey him, God designed this Child to be a means of bringing sorer Punishments, even to everlasting ruin upon such.

A black Decree this, one would think. He that had so much kindness for Mankind, to give away the only Son both of his Nature, his Affections, and his Bosom to them; could he then design that Gift to be the Ruin of the greatest part of men? This Child, Simeon said but just before my Text, is God's Salvation, which he had prepared before all people; and does he now say God hath set him for their fall? The Angels preached this was a Birth that brought glad tidings of great joy that should be to all people; and is there so much comfort in destruction, that most men should rejoice at that which is ordained to be the great occasion of it to them?

But we have no reason to complain: 'Tis not unkind to deny Mercy to them that refuse the offers of it; that will not accept Salvation, when their God himself does come to bring it to them: tenders it upon condition of accepting and amending: Which if they despise, and prefer Hell before Repentance, choose sin rather than God's blessed retributions, 'tis but reason to deny them what they will not have, and let them take their chosen Ruin; to will their Judgment which they will themselves; set and ordain Him to be that to them, which themselves do ordain, and make him to be to themselves. So S. Peter says expressly: He is a Stone of stumbling and a Rock of offense to them who being disobedient stumble at the Word, whereunto they were appointed, Disobedience, where it is obdurate, alters so the temper of our God, that it makes Him who swears he would not have the Sinner die, yet set out his Son to make such sinners fall into eternal Death. Makes Judgment triumph over Mercy, even in the Great contrivances and executions of that Mercy; and while God was plotting an Incarnation for the everlasting Safety of Mankind, prevails with him to decree Ruins by the means of that Salvation; to Decree even in the midst of all those strivings of his Mercies, that that Issue of his kindness should be for the fall of such as they. Oh! let us consider, whether they are likely to escape that which is set and ordained for them by God? Whether they can hope for a Redemption, when the only great Redeemer is appointed for the Instrument of their Destruction; and God is so bent on their ruin, that to purchase it he gives this Child his Son. Yea, when he did look down upon this Son in Agonies, and on the Cross, in the midst of that sad prospect, yet the Ruin of such sinners, which he there beheld in his Sons Blood, was a delight to him, that also was a Sacrifice, and a sacrifice of a sweet smell to him. For S. Paul says, We are unto God a sweet savor of Christ in them that perish, because we are the savor of Death unto death to them: As if their Brimstone did ascend like Incense, shed a perfume up to God, and their evllasting burnings were his Altar-fires, kindled his holocausts; and he may well be pleased with it, for he ordained it.

'Tis true indeed, This Child riding as in Triumph, in the midst of his Hosannas, when he saw one City whose fall he was set for on this very account; He was so far from being pleased with it, that he wept over it in pity. But alas, that only more declares the most deplored and desperate condition of such sinners. Blessed Savior! hadst thou no Blood to shed for them? nothing but Tears? or didst thou weep to think they very Bloodshed does but make their guilt more crimson, who refuse the mercy of that Bloodshed all the time that is offered? Sad is their state that can find no pity in the Tears of God, and remediless their Condition for whom all that the Son of God could do, was to weep over them, all that he did do for them, was to be for their fall; too sad a part indeed for festival Solemnity, very improper for a Benedictus and Magnificat. To celebrate the greatest act of kindness the Almighty could design only by the miseries it did occasion: to magnify the vast descent of God from Heaven down to Earth, only by reason of the fall of Man into the lowest Hell of which that was the cause. My Text hath better things in view: The greatness of that fall does but add height to that Resurrection which He also is the cause of: Behold this Child is set for the rising again of many: My remaining Part.

Rising again, does not particularly and only refer to the foregoing fall here in the Text, which this Child did occasion, as I shown you; but to the state wherein all Mankind, both in its nature and its Customs, lay ingul'd, the state of Ignorance and sin: A state from which recovery is properly 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a resurrection and a reviving in this Life, and so called in Scripture often; as Ephes. v. 15. Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉 and arise from the dead. And Rom. vi. 13. Yield not your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive form the dead. Now to raise us from the death of sin into the life of Righteousness, by the amendment of our own lives, to recover us into a state of Virtue, is the thing this Child is said here to be set for. This was that which God thought worth an Incarnation: Neither was there any greater thing in the prospect of his everlasting Counsel, when he did decree his Son into the World, than that 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, He is set for this. The Word was made Flesh; to teach, practice, and persuade to Virtue: To make men Reform their lives, was valued at the price of a Person of the Trinity. Piety and his Exinanition, yea his Blood and Life, were set at the same rates; All of him given for our recovery.

The time would fail me if I should attempt only to name the various methods he makes use of to effect this. How this Child that was the brightness of his Fathers Glory, came to lighten us; shining in his Doctrine and Example: How he sent more light, The fiery Tongues, Illuminations of the Holy Ghost to guide us in the ways of Piety: How he suffered Agonies and Death for sin to appale and fright us from it. How he Rose again to confirm Judgment to us, to demonstrate the rewards of Immortality to them that will repent and leave their sins, and everlasting Torments to those that refuse this Grace; Grace purchased with the Blood of God, to enable them to repent and leave. Besides all these, the Arts and Mesnage of his Providence, in preventing and following us by Mercies and by Judgments, importuning us, and timeing all his blessed Methods of Salvation to our most advantage. Arts, God knows, too many, if they serve us only to resist, and turn to wantonness and aggravation; if we make no other use of Grace but this, to sin against, and overcome all Grace, and make it bolster Vice; by teaching it to be an encouragement to go on in it, from some hopes we entertain by reason of this Child, instead of doing that which he was set, Decreed to make us do.

And really I would be glad to see this everlasting Counsel of the Lord had had some good effects, some, though never so little, happy execution of this great Decree, and that that which God ordained from all Eternity, upon such glorious and magnificent terms, were come to pass in any kind, Now, certainly there are no evident signs of any great recovery this Child hath wrought among us, in the World that's now called Christian. After those Omnipotent inforcives to a virtuous life, which he did work out, if we take a prospect of both Worlds, it would be hard to know which were the Heathen; and there would appear scarce any other notice of a Christ among us, but that we blaspheme Him or deride Him. Sure I am, there are no Footsteps of him in the lives of the community of Men: And I am certain that you cannot show me any Heathen Age outgoing ours, either in looseness and foul Effeminacies, or in sordidness and base injustice, or in frauds and falness, or malignity, hypocrisy, or treachery, or to name no more, even in the lowest, most ignoble, disingenious sorts of Vice. In fine, men are now as Earthly, Sensual, yea and Devilish, as when Sins and Devils were their God's.

Yea, I must needs say, that those times of dark and Heathen Ignorance, were in many men times of shining Virtue; and the little spark of Light within them, brake out through all obstructions into a glory of Goodness, to the wonder and confusion of most Christians: 'Tis true, we are pretty well revenged on them for setting us Examples so reproachful to us; calling their Heroic Actions, splendida peccata, only beauteous sins, and well-fac'd wickednesses; and we have a reason for it; because they never heard of Christ, whose Name and Merit 'tis most certain, is the only thing that can give value and acceptance to men's best performances: While on the other side, we Christians comfort and secure ourselves in our transgressions from this Child, and form his Name. But if this Child were set to raise us up from sin, and to establish stronger arguments for a good life than the Heathen ever heard of, more especial Divine engagements to Virtue; then if their Virtues were, because they never heard of these engagements to them, sins; what censure will be past upon their Actions that know all those engagements and despise them? a sharper certainly unless to defy knowledge, and provoke against all Divine Obligations, all that God could lay, shall prove more tolerable than to labor to obey without them, without knowing why. 'Tis true, they had not heard it may be of the Name, than which there is no other Name under Heaven given unto men whereby they may be saved. Yet they endeavored in some measure to do that, which He that owns that Name, and wrought the Covenant of those Salvations, does require. We know that Name, and have it called upon us, and know too, that he that names that Name, (that calls himself a Christian, owns the being a retainer to the Holy Jesus) must depart from iniquity, otherwise it is no Name of Salvation to him, yet we never mind the doing that; and then which hath the better Plea? the Heathen's sure were better, though he were not virtuous.

And if so, give me leave to tell you, how not only this Child, but this Resurrection too is for our fall.

In the first Chapter to the Romans we shall find, those Heathens, when they did neglect to follow the direction of that Light within them, by which they were able to discover in some measure the invisible things of God; when they did no longer care to retain God in their knowledge; then they quickly left off to be Men: And when they cease'd to hearken to their Reason, they soon fell into a reprobate sense. What was it else to change God into stocks and stones? and Worship into most abominable wickedness? to make the Vilest creatures Deities? and the foulest Actions Religion? to turn a disease into a God, and a sin into Devotion? a stupidity, which nothing else but God's desertion and reasons too, could have betrayed them to, and made them guilty of.

And then, if by how much greater Light and means we have resisted, we shall be proportionably more vile in the consequents of doing so; keep at equal rates of distance from those Heathens, that the aggravations of our guilt stand at from theirs; Whether, alas! are we like to fall?

'Tis an amazing reflection, one would tremble to consider, how the Christian World does seem to hasten into that condition which S. Paul does there decipher: You would think that Chapter were our Character: But that we have reason to expect we shall fall lower, into much more vile affections than those Heathens did, as having fallen down from a greater height than they.

Consider whether men do not declare they like not to retain God in their thoughts, when they endeavor to dispute and to deride him too out of the World! 'Tis true, they have not set up any sins or monsters in their Temples yet, as they did: But if they can empty them of God and Christ, and their Religion, and make room, we may imagine easily whose Votaries they will be, that live as if they thought themselves unhappy that they had not lived in those good Pagan days, when they might have sinned with devotion, been most wickedly Religious, and most God-like in unchastities and other Villanies; I dare say none of our fine Gentlemen, or our great Wits, would have been Atheists or irreligious then.

Think whether those are not already in that reprobate sense S. Paul does speak of, who have case off all discriminating notions of good or evil, who say in their hearts, and affirm openly, there are none such in truth and nature: It would appear they were if we should try by those effects, verse 29, 30, 31. or by that essential signature, verse. 32. they not only commit such things, but have pleasure in them that do them; which because they cannot have from those Commissions when they do not commit them, therefore their debauched minds must be satisfied there is no evil in those doings, and must reap the pleasure only of such satisfactions: That is, have the satisfactions and pleasures only of a Reprobate sense. In fine, (because I dare not prosecute the Character) Men sink so fast, as if they were resolved to fall as far below Humanity, as this Child did below his Divinity.

O do not you thus break Decrees, frustrate and overthrow the everlasting Counsel of God's Will for good to you. He set, ordained this Child for your rising again: Do not throw you selves down into Ruin in despite of his Predestinations. He hath carried up your nature into Heaven, placed Flesh in an union with Divinity, set it there at the Right hand of God in Glory: Do not you debase and drag it down again to Earth and Hell by Worldliness and Carnal sensuality. Make appear this Child hath raised you up, already made a Resurrection of your Souls and your affections; they converse, and trade in Heaven: And that you do not degenerate from that nature of yours that is there. Then this Child who is Himself the Resurrection and the Life, will raise up your Bodies too, and make them like his glorious Body, by the working of his mighty Power, by which he is able to subdue all things to himself. To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghost be all Blessing, Power and Praise, Dominion and Glory for evermore.

The Thirteenth SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. Novemb. 17. 1667.

St. JAMES IV. 7.

Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you.

These Words are easily resolved into two parts: The first, a Duty; and the second, to encourage the performance, an assurance of an happy issue in the doing it.

The First, the Duty in these words, Resist the Devil; the happy issue in those other, he will flee from you.

For the more practical and useful handling of these parts, I shall endeavor to do these three things.

1. View the Enemy we are to resist, the Devil; see his Strengths, and what are his chief Engines, his main Instruments of Battery, whereby he shakes, and does endeavor to demolish the whole frame of Virtue in men's lives, shatters and throws down all Religious, holy Resolutions, and subjects men to himself and Sin.
2. See what we are to do in opposition to all this; and how and by what means we must resist.
3. Prove to them that do resist, the happy issue which the Text here promiseth.

First of the first.

Though no man can be tempted (so as to be foiled by the temptation) but he that is drawn away by his own Lust, an enticed, James i. 14. and all the blandishments of this World, all the wiles and artifices of the Prince and God of it, the Devil, are not able to betray one into sin, till his own Lust conceive that sin, and bring it forth; Man must be taken first in his own Nets, and fall into that pit himself hath digged, before he can become the Devil's prey: Yet Satan hath so great an hand in this affair, that the Tempter is his Name and Office, Matth. iv. 3. And the War which is now before us is so purely his▪ that we are said to fight, not against flesh and blood (those nests and fortresses of our own Lusts) but against Principalities and Powers, against the Rulers of the darkness of this World, against spiritual wickednesses in high places; that is, against the Enemy here in the Text, the Devil.

Now to bring about his ends upon us he hath several means. The first that I shall name is Infidelity. With this he began in Paradise, and succeeded by it: for he had no sooner told the Woman that she should non surely die, and so made her doubt of, not believe, and consequently nor fear, that which God had threatened, but she took of the forbidden fruit, and she did eat, and gave it to her Husband too, and he did eat Now if a Serpent siding with her inclination could so quickly stagger and quite overthrow her Faith; if she, because she sees and likes a pleasing Object, can, in mere defiance of her own assured Conviction, when the Revelation looked her in the face, and God himself was scarce gone out of sight, straight give credit to a Snake, that comes and confidently gives the lie to God▪ her Maker, offers her no proof at all of what he says, but only flatters her desires with promises and expectations of the knows not what Ye shall not die, but ye shall be as God's; if in spite of Knowledge she turn Infidel so soon and easily: 'Tis no great wonder if that Serpent do, at this distance from Revelation, prevail on men, whose conversation being most with Sense (their satisfactions also consequently gratifying of their Sense) they do not willingly assent to anything but that which brings immediate evidence and attestation of the Senses, which the Objects of our Faith do not (especially if it give check to and restrain those satisfactions, as those do) on such men, I say, that do not care, no• use, in things that are against their mind, to apply the Understanding close and strongly to reflect on those considerations which should move assent, and work belief. Considerations which I dare affirm, if with sincerity adverted to (if there be no improbity within to trash their efficacy, no sensual inclination cherished that must hinder their admittance, as not being able to endure to lodge in the same breast with those persuasions) would make disbelief appear not only most imprudent, but a thing next to impossible. But in those that give themselves no leisure, have no will thus to advert, 'tis not strange if, through Satan's arts, in things of this remote kind they have only languid opinions, which sink quickly into doubts, and by degrees into flat Infidelity.

S. Paul does fetch the rise of unbelief of Charistianity from hence, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; In whom the God of this World hath blinded their minds: That is, if the Christian Doctrine do not appear to be the truth of God to any, 'tis to obstinate persons only, whom the Devil hath besotted so with the advantages and pleasures of this World, that their affections to these will not let the other be admitted. For,

The Carnal prejudice can cast a mist before the mind, or that a bright an glittering Temptation of this World may dazzle it so as that it cannot see that which is most illustriously visible, we have this demonstration.

Those Works which Christ and his Apostles wrought, which made the whole World that was Heathen then, so many Millions of such distant Nations as could never meet together to conspire an universal change in their Religions, made them yet agree to lay aside their dear gods and their dearer vices, and do that to embrace a Crucified Deity, a God put to a vile ignominious death, as one worse than the worst of men; and a Religion that was as much hated, counted as accursed as that God of it, He and Doctrine crucified alike; and a Religion too that had as great severities in its Commands as in its Persecutions, that did itself enjoin as hard and cruel things to flesh and blood as they that hated it inflicted, the duties and the punishments equally seem executed on its followers; and a Religion whose performances had no retributions here but fatal ones, no otherwise rewarded but with fire and faggot, and whose after-promises were most incredible: Those works that could produce all this, had certainly Omnipotent conviction in them; sure we are there must be prodigy of Miracle either in the causes, or in the effect. And yet the Scribes and Pharisees are not wrought on by them. Their carnal Prejudices would not be removed, not by the Finger of God: The mean and despicable, and, as to all their worldly expectations and affections, the unsatisfying condition of our Savior, had so clouded all his Works, and their own pride so blinded them, that they could see no argument in Miracle.

Now 'tis the Devil, that God of the World, that hath the power of its Glories, and the managery of its temptations, who, by raising these affections, dazzles so and blinds the minds of men, that they should not believe. S. Paul affirms it: And 'tis plain that unbelief is no one's Interest but Satan's. For it is not Man's. Not the virtuous man's certainly: He's concerned as much as Happiness amounts to, to believe there is a God, whose cares and Providence watch over him, whose Ears and Arms are open to him, whose Bowels yearn for him, whose Blood did purchase him, whose everlasting Blessednesses do await him. 'Tis his Interest to trust that Virtue, which the World so scorns or pities, was yet worthy God should be Incarnated to teach it, die to purify us into it, and will raise us up again to crown it. Neither is this Unbelief Man's real Interest, abstracting from these prejudices of Religion. For if it were Man's real Interest, then it were every man's wisest course to pursue that Interest. But if every man did so, and should persuade himself into Infidelity, and that Religion and a Deity were but dreams or artifices, and so arrive so far as to have no fear of God, nor sense of Honesty or Virtue, the whole World must needs return into the first confusions of its Chaos: Villany and Rapine would have right.

When those Mounds are thrown down, there is nothing that can hinder but that every man may lawfully break in upon and invade everything. There is no fence to guard thy Coffers nor thy Bed, no not thy very Breast: Rather indeed there can be nothing thine. This is, 'tis true, Leviathan's state of Nature; and 'tis so indeed with the Leviathans of Sea and Land, the wild Beasts of the Deep and of the Desert. But to prevent the necessary and essential mischiefs of this state amongst us Men, he will have Nature to have taught us to make Pacts and Oaths: But if there's no such things as Virtue or Religion, then there is no Obligation to keep Pacts or Oaths. And why should he observe them that can safely break them? Here it is indeed that Doctrine ends; to this their Infidelity does tend. And therefore 'tis no Interest of States or Princes. This the Atheist will confess; God's and Religions, he says, were invented for the mere necessities of Governors, who could not be secure without those higher Obligations, and these after-fears. And are they not kind Subjects then who, by promoting Atheism, labor to break down that fence which themselves account necessary? Or are they not good rational Discourers too, who labor to throw out a thing as false and vain, because 'tis necessary? So necessary sure, that they who weaken these bonds of Religion, quite dissolve those of Allegiance, all whose Sinews are made of those Sacred Ties, which if you untwist, the other Cords are burst as easily as threads of Cobweb. Nay these Doctrines lay Principles that justify Rebellion and King-killing. Nor if there's no such thing as Virtue or Religion, then those are no Crimes. And it is no wonder Treason hath been loved, when Blasphemy hath been so. They that hear men droll on God Almighty, raille their Maker, and buffoon with Him, will quickly learn to speak with little reverence of their Superiors. There's no Kingdom but the Devil's that can have support from Infidelity; 'tis the Interest of that indeed. His work goes more securely on, when there are no Religious apprehensions to check it: Allow'd Vice cannot be at ease if it but think those things are true. It is the infinite concern of wickedness, that the Laws of Virtue and Religion should be only Spiders webbs, Snares for innocent and lesser Flies, while venomous Spiders, can pass safely through them, and the Wasps can burst them; are Entanglements only for the Weak, the Phlegmatick, and Hypochondriack: and that there should be no God that can bring them to an afterreckoning. They that flatter and betray, that hug and then trip up, or that plot villainies and ruins under fair and godly vizards; must needs be unwilling to believe that there is one who tries the reins, and serches hearts, and that will render everyone according to his works. The Drunkard, who nor must nor can keep the remembrance of his Cups, cannot endure to apprehend he must be called to an account of them. The man whose Lust prevents the Grave, that putrefies alive, and drops by piecemeal into rotten dust ere he return to Earth, must needs be loath that there should be a Resurrection, to collect the scattered, the soul atoms of his Sin and his Disease, and show them at that dread Tribunal, before God, his holy Angels, and Mankind. Such as these are the only men that are concerned against Religion. Here we see whose Interest such promote who promote Infidelity. And truly 'tis so much the Devil's Interest, that by those very measures that he weakens Faith, he strengthens every sort of Wickedness: By the steps and degrees of Infidelity men ascend towards the heights of sin: And when they have surmounted all Religious apprehensions, then they are upon the Precipice of Vice. When the Flood-gates are removed, the Torrent must break in impetuously. For what is there that can hinder? nothing certainly, if present Interest be not able: But 'tis plain that Thieves, and Murderers, and Rebels, in fine, everyone whom we call Sinners, do pursue that which they account their present Interest: That therefore if there were no other, would not be sufficient, since the Devil does make use of that to work with under Infidelity. This indeed he batters, makes his spreading ruins with: Therefore S. Paul calls him 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ,the spirit that works in filiis diffidentiae, saith the Vulgar: In the Unbelievers, so it bears: in filiis insuasibilitatis, in the men that will not be persuaded to believe. In these 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 they are his 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , Possess'd and agitated by him: 'tis he spirits what they do: their actions are his incitations and motions: In sum, as to wickedness, they are mere Demoniacks. This therefore is his chief and the first Engine.

The second Instrument by which he does demolish whatsoever hopes of Virtue we are built up to is Want of Employment: And in order to this, he hath so far prevailed on the Opinions of the World, that they believe some states of men not only have no Obligation to be busied, but to have no Calling is essential to their condition; which is made more eminent upon this account that they have no business. Wealth, how great soever, if with an employment or Profession, makes a man only a more gentile Mechanic: But Riches and nothing to do make a Person of quality. As if God had made that state of men, far the most generous part of the whole kind, and best appointed for the noblest uses of the World, to serve no other ends but what the Grashoppers and Locusts do, to sing and dance among the Plants and Branches, and devour the Fruits; and Providence had furnished them with all advantages of Plenty for no better purposes. Such persons think not only to reverse God's Curse, and In the sweat of others faces eat their bread, but reverse Nature too; for Job saith, Man is born to labor as the sparks fly upwards; in his making hath a Principle to which Activity is as essential as it is to fire to mount; from which nothing else but force can hinder it: As if man did do violence to his making when he did do nothing; and it were his hardest work and pressure, not to be employed; it were like making flame go downwards. I am sure it is one of the busiest ways of doing Satan's work. Our Savior in a Parable in the 12. Chap. of S. Matth. from the 43. ver. saith, When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he goeth through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none: Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there. Where, under the similitude of a man cast out of his habitation, who, while he wanders through none but desert places seeking for a dwelling, he is sure to meet with none; but if he find an House that's empty, swept and garnished, he hath found out not a receptacle only, but an invitation, an house dress'd on purpose to call in and to detain Inhabitants: He signifies, that when a Temptation of the Devil is repel'd, and himself, upon some working occasion, by a resolute act of holy courage thrown out of the heart, as he finds no rest in this condition, every place is desert to him but the heart of man, is indeed Hell to him, for he calls it Torment to be cast out thence; yea he accounts himself bound up in his eternal Chains of darkness; when he is restrained from working and engaging man to sin; so while he goeth to and fro, seeking an opportunity to put in somewhere, if he find that heart from which he was cast out, or any other heart, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , (so the word is) idling, not employ'd or busied (so it signifies) such an heart is empty, swept, and garnished for him, 'tis a dwelling that's dress'd properly to tempt the Devil, fitted to receive him and his forces too, prepared for him to Garrison, and make a strong hold of, whence he cannot be removed; for he takes unto him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there. No doubt they are the Patron-Guardian spirits of the seven deadly Sins, their Tu•elary Devils. Some of those good qualities that are the attendants of Idleness you may find decypher'd in the Scripture. S. Paul says, when people learn to be idle, they grow tattlers, busy bodies, speaking things which they ought not. 'Tis strange that Idleness should make men and women busy bodies, yet it does most certainly in other folks affairs. Faction, than which nothing in the world can be more restless, is nurs'd by it. Where are States so censured, so new model'd, as at certain of our Refectories, places that are made merely for men to spend their time in which they know not what to do with? At those Tables our Superiors are dissected; Calumny and Treason are the common, are indeed the more peculiar entertainments of the places. In fine, where persons have no other employment for their time but talking, and either have not so much Virtue as to find delight in talking good things, or not so much skill as to speak innocent recreation, there they talk of others, censure, and backbite, and scoff. This is indeed the only picquant conversation; Gall is sauce to all their Entertainments: And that you may know these things proceed from that old Serpent, they do nothing else but hiss and bite. 'Tis the poison of Asps that is under their lips which gives relish to their Discourses; 'tis the sting that makes them grateful, venom that they are condit'd with.

More of the brood of this want of Employment you may find at Sodom; namely, Pride and Luxury: For saith Ezekiel, This was the Iniquity of Sodom; Pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of Idleness was in her and in her daughters. And indeed the Idle person could not possibly know how to pass his hours, if he had not Delicacies to sweeten some, Wine to lay some asleep, and the solicitous deckings of Pride to take up others: But the studious gorgings of the inside, and the elaborate trimmings of the outside, help him well away with them.

Good God! that for so many hours my morning eyes should be lift up to nothing but a Looking-glass! that that thin shadow of myself should be my Idol, be my God indeed, to which I pay all the devotions I perform! And when with so much care and time I have arrayed and marshall'd myself, that I should spend as much more too in the complacencies of viewing this! with eager eyes and appetite surveying every part, as if I had set out, exposed them to myself alone, and only dress'd a prospect for my own sight! and since Nature, to my grief, hath given me no eyes behind; that I should fetch reliefs from Art, and get vicarious sight, and set my back parts too before my face, that so I may enjoy the whole Scene of myself! And why all this? for nothing but to serve vain Ostentation, or negotiate for Lust, to dress a Temptation, and start Concupiscence. And that the half of each Day should be spent thus! the best part of a reasonable Creatures and a Christians life, be laid out upon purposes so far from Christian or reasonable!

And truly Luxury will easily eat the remainder up, that sure Companion of Idleness. For when the Israelites were in the Wilderness, where they could not eat but by Miracle, and the Rock must give them drink; yet, having no Employment, they made Feasts: They sate down to eat and drink and rose up to play. Nor would eating to the uses of their nature serve them, but they must have entertainments for their wantonness. Had they been employed to get their Bread, their labor would have made their morsels sweet: But since God, as the Wiseman says, sent them from Heaven bread prepared without their labor, they must have varieties to sweeten it; they require him to prepare a Table also in the Wilderness, and furnish them with choice. And although they had the food of Angels, able to content every man's delight, and agreeing to every taste, and serving to the appetite of the eater, it tempered itself to every man's liking, and what could they fancy more? The latitude of Creatures, the whole Universe of Luxury could do nothing else; in every single morsel they had sorts, Variety, all choice; as if that Desert had been Paradise, that Wilderness the Garden of the Lord: Yet so coy is Idleness, so apt to nauseate, that they abhor the constancy of being pleased. And though they were not sated neither, he that gathered much had nothing over, only to his eating, God as well providing for their Health and Virtue, as Necessity, and dieting their Temperance as he did their Hunger: Yet their very liking does grow loathsome to them. When their Bodies were thus excellently well provided for, having no employment, nothing to take up their Minds and Entertain their Souls, they require 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 meat for their Souls, meat not to serve the uses of their bodies, but to feed their fancies, their extravagant minds. Thus Idleness requires to be dieted. And all this but to pamper and feed high men's inclinations, so to make Temptations irresistible, and by consequence Vice necessary.

It were easy to recount more of those ways by which the Devil does make use of men's want of Employment to debauch their lives, and ruin all the hopes of Virtue in them. S. Jude finds more of its effects at Sodom: They gave themselves over to Fornication, and went after other flesh, and are set forth for an Example, suffering the vengeance of Eternal fire. Indeed these are most certain consequents of not being employed: Quaeritur Aegysthus—is too known an instance: and great holy David is another. But its dire influence is sufficiently visible in that which it rain'd down upon those Cities. Since it did fulfill the guilt of Sodom, and made Heaven furnish Hell for it, and God himself turn Executioner of fire and brimstone to revenge it; this shall serve to prove it is one of the Devil's Master-pieces.

3. Next succeed his fiery darts, as S. Paul calls them, namely, Persecutions, or Calamities of any kind: Which he manageth either by inflicting pressures, and he was so confident of the force of these, that he did tell God he would make Job curse him to his face with them: Or if he find men in necessities and pressures, then by tempting them to get from under them by methods which he shall direct; and he had such assurance of the strength of this Temptation, that by it he tried our Savior, to find out whether he were the Son of God or no, believing none but he that was so would be able to resist it.

Indeed the trials are severe which this Temptation does present, to draw men from their Duty, and to overcome their Constancy; Whether it solicit by inflicting punishment (as on the Mother and her Children, 2 Maccab. vii.) or by offering to withdraw it, if they will submit to their unlawful terms (and so they tried her youngest Son there, verse 24.) or at leastwise by some feigned act, some ambiguous words or practices, will pretend compliance; (so they dealt with Eleazar, Chap. vi. 21. whom they would have had to bring flesh of his own provision, such as he might use without offense, and so only seem to eat forbidden meat.)

Each of which is as great a trial also, and to stand against them reckoned up amongst as vigorous acts of Faith, as those that held out in the greatest tortures persecuting malice could invent: Heb. xi. 17. They were stoned, sawn asunder, were tempted.

Now to fetch an instance of the sad success of these, I shall not need to go so far as to those Persecutions of Antiochus, nor those of the primitive times of Christianity; when they had no other choices but these, to deliver up their Bibles or their Lives; either to sacrifice to Idols, or at least procure a Ticket which should certify that they had done it, or to be themselves an Holocaust, and give those Idols a Burnt-offering with their martyr-flames. Which made the Traditores, Lapsi, the Thurificati and the Libellatici to be so numerous. Through God's blessed mercy there is no use of such instances, as there is no fear of such a trial; 'tis not death to be a Christian now: For if the Son of Man or Satan's self should come to try us at those rates, 'twere a great doubt whether the one or other would find Faith upon the Earth; whether they would sacrifice a life to our Religion, who are not content to sacrifice a little interest or pleasure to it; whether they are likely to resist unto blood fighting against sin, who will not resist to tears nor sober resolutions. Alas! what Religion should we be of, if God should raise a Dioclesian, come to tempt us with the fiery trial? Martyrs as we are to nothing but our Passions and our lusts! Nor shall I produce more known and near experiences, when, by reason of such storms of Persecution, men made shipwreck, if not of their Faith, yet of good Conscience. When by order or permissions of Providence they were brought to such a straight, that either they must let go their possessions or their honesty, acting against Principles, and Conscience of Duty: I shall not remember, how, when God did shake his angry hand thus over them, they fled to the Devils kindness, and made Hell their refuge, to save them from their Fathers rod: how they grew so Atheistical, as to believe a Perjury or other crime greater security, that would preserve their selves and their condition better than all God had promise'd; were such Infidels, that they did rather trust their being here to the commission of a sin, than to the Providence and the Engagements of the Almighty. For indeed what need I instance in these greater cases, where the trial was so sharp, as not to offer any easier choice than this, either to part with Conscience or with all they had? God knows, we find less Interests will do: The Devil by no more than this, driving the Gadarenes swine into the Sea, was able to drive Christ out of their Coasts. You have the story Matth. viii. from the 28. verse. A legion of those evil spirits did possess two men; and finding Christ would cast them out, and by that Miracle so far show forth his Power, that in probability the whole Country would believe on him, they fall upon this project to prevent it; they besought him, if he would cast them out, to suffer them to go into an herd of Swine there feeding; hoping by destroying them to incense the Owners against Christ: And, to try them, he permitted this. The possessed Swine ran violently down into the Lake, and perished. Now a man would think the virulency of these Devils, which were so destructive when they were at liberty and not restrained, would have endeared the mercy that had cast them out of the poor men, and came to dispossess the Country of them; and that their astonishment at so great a Miracle would possess them all with Reverence and belief of him; and that they would therefore seise and possess him also, and not let the mercy go: But, on the contrary, the whole City and Country came out to meet Jesus, and in consideration of the loss of their Swine, desire him to depart out of their Coast. Lo here an equal Enemy to Christ and all his Miracles, that was indeed too hard for them. The Senate of Hell had no project to keep out Religion like to this, to make Religion thwart an Interest. Rather no Christianity than lose an Earthly satisfaction by it: Rather have the Swine than Christ himself.

4. But if he chance to fail in this Assault (as by our Savior he was beaten off) he hath yet a reserve in which he places his last, strongest confidence; with which he ventured to charge Christ, when it is probable he knew he was the Son of God. He takes him up into an high Mountain, and shows him all the Kingdoms of the Earth in the twinkling of an eye, and the glory of them, and says, All these things will I give thee. He thought it was impossible for such a Prospect not to make impression on the Appetite, raise some desire, or stir one Covetous or Ambitious thought: which if it could but do, he made no scruple then to clog the Gift with such conditions as that there, All these things will I give thee. if thou wilt fall down and worship me. 'Tis said indeed, the Covetous man is an Idolater: And here we see the God he does do homage to, and worship. The Devil does require, that those whom he gives Wealth to (now 'tis he that gives it to the Covetous, to all indeed that get it with injustice or with greediness;) he requires, I say, that these should pay all their Religion to Himself: And the Ambitious, in however high a place he sets them, must fall down to him. And truly these two dispositions can give worship to no other God but such an one as is Abaddon, the Destroyer of Mankind. For all the great Commotions of the World, all those Convulsions that tear Provinces and Empires, all Seditions and Rebellions with those Armies of Iniquities that attend them, and that wage their Designs, which are upheld by legions of Villanies as well as men, all the Disturbances of States and Church, are but attempts of Covetous and Ambitious spirits, men that are unsatisfied with their condition, and desire a change, and care not how they compass it: They can charge through Seas of Blood and Sin, over the face of Men and Conscience, to get out of that condition, which they therefore are not well content with, because something they like better beckons their ambitious and their covetous Desires. Would you see what one of these will venture at? When Christ our Savior was to be betrayed, when a Person of the Godhead was to be delivered up and Crucified, the Devil had no passion to employ on that Design so fit as the desire of getting money; and when that desire was once entertained, we see he enters really in person, and possesses such a Soul: and when he is there, he designs no farther but to warm and stir that passion: 'Tis sufficient fruit of his possession, he hath done enough in such an heart wherein he dwells, if he but keep alive that desire of Money; For he knows that will make the man adventure upon any guilt; for it made Judas undertake to betray Christ. And as for the other passion which the Devil did design the glories of his prospect to give fire to, though he could not stir it in our Savior, yet he knew it vanquished him himself when he was Angel. What height is there which Ambition will not fly at, since it made this spirit aim at an equality with the Most High? Heaven itself was not sufficient to content him, while there was a God above him in it. And since this affection peopled Hell with Devils, 'tis no wonder if it people Earth with Miseries and Vices.

5. The remaining Trial with which Satan did assault our Savior, when he tempted him with Scripture and God's Promises, and sought to ruin him with his own privileges: with that also,

6. His being a lying spirit in the mouth of all the Prophets; by which long ago he did destroy an Ahab, in the 1 Kings xxii. 22. But since by sad experience we know, he ruined the best King, purest Church, and most flourishing State, by the same Stratagem. But these, with those other which S. Paul does call his wiles, I must omit; sufficient hath been said already to enforce the necessity of resisting, which is the Duty, and the next considerable.

Resist the Devil: That is, do not you consent to his Temptations: for there is no more required of us, but this only, not to be willing to be taken and led captive by him. For let him suggest, incite, assault and storm us, no impression can be made upon us till we yield, and till we give consent no hurt is done. It is not here as in our other Wars: In those no resolution can secure the Victory, but notwithstanding all resistance possible, we may be vanquished; yea, sometime men are overpress'd and die with Conquering, and the Victor only gains a Monument, is but buried in the heaps of his slain Trophies. But in these Wars with the Devil, whosoever is unwilling to be vanquished, never can be: For he must first give consent to it, and will the ruin; for men do not sin against their wills. Only here we must distinguish betwixt Will and thin Velleity and Woulding. For let no man think when he commits deliberate iniquity with averseness and reluctancy of mind, allows not what he does, but does the evil that he would not, what he hates that he does; that this is not to be imputed to the Will; that in this case he is not willing, but here the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak, and yields through mere infirmity: For, on the contrary, the Devil finds the Flesh so strong in this case, that with it alone he does assault the mind, and breaks through its reluctancies and aversations, bears down all its resolutions, triumphs over all that does pretend to God or Virtue in him. Where 'tis thus, let no man flatter or persuade himself he does what he would not, when it is plain he does impetuously will the doing it. Let him not think that he allows not, but hates that which he does; when it is certain, in that moment that he does commit, not to allow that which he does resolve and pitch upon and choose; to hate what with complacency he acts; or to do that unwillingly which he is wrought on by his own Concupiscence to do, and by his inward incitations, by the mutiny of his own affections which the Devil raises, and when it is the mere height and prevailency of his appetite that does make him do it (as it must be where there is reluctancy before he do it, his desires and affections there are evidently too strong for him) or at last, to hate the doing that which 'tis his too much love to that makes him do, are all impossibilities; the same things as to will against the will, desire against appetite. But do but keep thyself sincerely and in truth from being willing, and thou must be safe: For God expects no more but that we should not voluntarily yield to our undoing. He hath furnished us with his own complete Armor for no farther uses of a War, but to encourage us to stand. Take unto you the whole Armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil: And again, Put ye on the whole Armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. There is no need to do more than this, not to be willing and consent to fall; for no man can be beaten down but he that will fall.

It were very easy for me to prescribe you how to fortify against those Engines of the Devils battery which I produced to you. But that I may not stay upon particulars, directing those whom he prevails upon through want of Employment to find out honest occasions not to be idle (and sure it is the most unhappy thing in the World, for any man to be necessitated to be vicious by his having nothing else to do, and because, while the World accounts it a Pedantick thing to be brought up by Rules and under Discipline, he cannot learn how to employ himself to his advantage) to pass by these, I say, the universal strength against this Enemy is Faith. Your adversary the Devil, like a roaring Lion, goeth up and down seeking whom he may devour; whom resist steadfast in the Faith. And that not only as it frustrates all that he attempts by means of Infidelity, but it also quenches all his fiery darts; whatsoever bright Temptation he presents to draw us from our Duty, or whatever fiery trial he makes use of to affright and martyr with. For the man whose Faith does give him evidence and eye-sight of those blessed Promises eye hath not seen, and gives substance, present solid being to his after-hopes, and whose heart hath swallowed down those happy expectations which have never entered in the heart of man to comprehend; what is there that can tempt or fright him from his station? To make all that which Satan gave the prospect of prevail on such a Soul, the Kingdoms of the Earth must out-vie God's Kingdom, and their Gauds out-shine his Glory, and the twinkling of an eye seem longer than Eternity: For nothing less than these will serve his turn, all these are in his expectations. Or what can fright the man whose heart is set above the sphere of terrors? who knows calamity, how great soever, can inflict but a more sudden and more glorious blessedness upon him; and the most despiteful cruel usage can but persecute him into Heaven. 'Tis easy to demonstrate that a Faith and Expectation of the things on Earth, built upon weaker grounds than any man may have for his belief of things above, hath charged much greater hazards, overcome more difficulties than the Devil does assault us with. For sure none is so Sceptical, but he will grant that we have firmer grounds to think there is another World in Heaven, than Columbus (if he were the first Discoverer) had to think there was another Earth; and that there are far richer hopes laid up there in that other World, for those that do deny themselves the sinful profits and the jollities of this, and force them from their inclinations, than those Sea-men could expect who first adventur'd with him thither. For they could not think to gain much for themselves, but only to take soism of the Land (if any such there were) for others covetous Cruelty; could get little else but only richer Graves, and to lie buried in their yellow Earth. Nor are we assaulted in our Voyage with such hazards, as they knew they must encounter with; the path of Virtue and the way to Heaven is not so beset with difficulties as theirs was; when they must cut it out themselves through an unknown new World of Ocean, where they could see nothing else but swelling gaping Death, from an Abyss of which they were but weakly guarded, and removed few inches only: And as if the dangerousest shipwrecks were on shore, they found a Land more savage and more monstrous than that Sea. Yet all this they vanquished for such slender hopes, and upon so uncertain a belief. A weak Faith therefore can do mighty works; greater than any that we stand in need of to encounter with our Enemy: It can remove these Mountains too; the golden ones that Covetousness and Ambition do cast up: Yea more, it can remove the Devil also; for if you resist him steadfast in the Faith, he flies; which is the happy issue, and my last Part.

Resist the Devil, and he will Fly from you. And yet it cannot be denied but that sometimes when the messenger of Satan comes to buffet, though S. Paul resist him with the strength of Prayer (which when Moses managed he was able to prevail on God himself, and the Lord articted with him, that he might be let alone) yet he could not beat off this assailant, 2 Cor. xii. 7, 8, 9. When God, either for prevention, as 'twas there, v. 7. or for exercising or illustrating of Graces, or some other of his blessed ends, gives a man up to the assaults of Satan, he is often pleased to continue the temptation long; but in that case he does never fail to send assistances and aids enough against it. My grace is sufficient for thee, saith he to S. Paul there. And when he will have us tempted for his uses (if we be not failing to ourselves) he does prevent our being overcome; so that there is no danger in those Trials from their stay. But yet it must not be denied but that the Devil does prevail sometimes by importunacy, and by continuance of Temptation; so that Resistance is not always a Repulse, at least not such an one as to make him draw off and fly. It is not strange to find him siding with a natural Inclination, with the bent of Constitution, still presenting Objects, laying Opportunities, throwing in Examples, and all sorts of Invitation, always pressing so, that when a man hath struggled long he does grow weary of the service, not enduring to be thus upon his guard perpetually, watching a weak heart with strong inclinations, busy Devils do lay siege to; and so growing slack and careless, he is presently surprised: Or else, despairing that he shall be always able to hold out, lays hold upon a tempting opportunity, and yields; by the most unreasonable and basest cowardice that can be, yields, for fear of yielding; lest he should not hold out, he will not, but gives up; and puts himself into that very Mischief which he would avoid, merely for fear of coming into it. For which fear there is no reason neither; For 'tis not here as in our other Sieges, where, if it be close, continuance must reduce men to necessity of yielding, Strengths and Ammunitions will decay, Provisions fail, and, if the Enemy cannot, their own Hunger will break through their Walls, and make avenues for Conquest, time alone will take them; but in these Spiritual Sieges, one Repulse enables for another; and the more we have resisted, the Temptation is not only so much flatter, and more weak and baffled, but the inward Man is stronger: Victory does give new forces, and is sure to get in fresh and still sufficient supplies. For God giveth more grace, saith S. James: And, they shall have abundance, saith our Savior. So that where the Devil after several repulses still comes on with fresh assaults, we may be sure he does discern there is some treacherous inclination that sides with him: And although the man refuse himself the satisfaction of the sin, the Devil sees he hath a mind to it, his refusals are but faint, not hearty; though he seem afraid to come within the quarters of the Vice, he keeps, it may be, correspondence with the incentives to it, entertains the opportunities, plays with the Objects, or at best he does not fortify against him. Now this gives the Tempter hopes, and invites his assaults, and does expose the person to be taken by him.

But where he sees he is resisted heartily, his offers are received with an abhorrency, discerns Men are in earnest, watch to avoid all opportunities and occasions, and prepare, and fortify, and arm against him, there he will not stay to be the triumph of their Virtue. We may know th^o by his Agents, those that work under the Devil, whom he hath instructed in the mysteries of waging his Temptations. Where they are not like to speed (and as to this they have discerning spirits) they avoid, and hate, and come not near, but study spite and mischief only there. The intemperate men are most uneasy with a person whom they are not able to engage in the debauch; the rudeness and brutality of their excesses are not so offensive to the sober man, as his staid Virtue is to them; they do not more avoid the crude egestions, shameful spewings of their overtaken fellows Riot, then they do the shame and the reproach that such a man's strict Conversation casts on them, which does in earnest make them look more foul and nasty to themselves. In fine, every Sinner: shuns the Company of those whom he believes Religious in earnest; 'tis an awe and check to them; they are afraid, and out at it, as their Great Master also is, who when he is resisted must be overcome: And as they that are beaten have their own fears also for their Enemies, which are sure to charge close, put to slight, chase and pursue them; so it seems he also is afraid of a sincere and hearty Christian, for he flies him: So he did from Christ, Matth. iv. verse 11. and so the Text assures, If you resist him, he will fly from you.

And now, although we all did once renounce the Devil and his works, were listed Soldiers against him, took a Sacrament upon it, and our Souls, the immortality of life or misery, depend upon our being true and faithful to ourselves and Oaths, or otherwise; nor is there more required of us but resolution and fidelity, only not to be consenting to our Enemies Conquest of us, not to will Captivity and Servitude: Yet as if, in mere defiance of our Vows and Interests, we not only willed the ruin, but would fight for it, we may find, instead of this resisting of the Devil, most men do resist the Holy Ghost; quench not the fiery darts of Satan, but the Spirit and his flames, by which he would enkindle love of God and Virtue in them. If he take advantage of some warm occasion to inflame their courage against former follies, heat them into resolutions of a change; as soon as that occasion goes off, they put out those flames, and choke these heats until they die. If he come in his soft whispers, speak close to the heart, suggest, and call them to those joys of which himself is earnest; to all these they shut their ears, can hear no whispers, are not sensible of any sounds of things at such a distance, sounds to which they give no more regard, than to things of the same extravagance with the Music of the Spheres. Nay, if he come with his more active methods, as the Angels came to Lot, send mercy to allure and take them by the hand, as they did, to invite and lead them out of Sodom; if that will not, Judgments then to thrust them out, as they did also, come with fire and brimstone to affright them; they not only like the men of Sodom, do attempt a violence and Rape upon those very Angels, but they really ally debauch the Mercies, and profane the Judgment, having blinded their own Eyes, that they might see no hand of God in either: using thus unkindly all his blessed methods of reclaiming them, till they have grieved him so that he forsake and leave them utterly. As if they had not heard that when the Holy Spirit is thus forced away, the evil spirit takes his place, 1 Sam xvi. 14. As if they knew not that to those who close their eyes and stop their ears against the Holy Spirit's motions, till they are grown dull of hearing and blind to them, God does send a spirit of slumber, that they should not see nor hear; and that for this dire reason, that they may not be converted, nor be saved. Five times he affirms it in the Scripture. Yea, once more in words of a sad Emphasis, 2. Thess. ii. 12, 13. He sends them strong delusions that they may believe a lie, that they all may be damned who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness: And that, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. Blessed God! Is it so easy for such Sinners to believe and be converted, that thysself shouldst interpose to hinder it, and hide the possibilities of mercy from their eyes, that they may never see them, nor recover! What can then become of those for whom God does contrive that they shall not escape? when instead of those bowels that did make him swear he would not have the sinner die, but would have him return and live, he puts on so much indignation at such Sinners, as to take an order they shall not repent, and take an order that they shall be damned.

And yet all this is only to those men, who, being dull of hearing the suggestions of the Spirit, and not willing to give entertainment to his holy motions, grieve him so, that they repel and drive him quite away; and so by consequence only make way for the Devil: Whereas there are others that directly call him, force him to them, ravish and invade occasions to serve him. Some there are that study how to disbelieve, and with great labor and contrivance work out arguments and motives to persuade themselves to Atheism: Others practice, discipline, and exercise themselves to be engaged in Vice. Some dress so as to lay bai•s, snares, to entrap Temptation, that they may be sure it may not pass them: Others feed high to invite and entertain the Tempter, do all that is possible to make him come, and to assure him that he must prevail, when they have made it most impossible for themselves to stand and to resist.

Some there are indeed whom he does not overcome so easily, but is put to compound with them, takes them upon Articles: for when he would engage them to a sin to which he sees they have great inclinations, with some fears, he is fain to persuade them to repent when they have done; to lay hold upon the present opportunity, and not let the satisfaction escape them, but be sorry after, and amend. For where these resolutions of Repentance usher in transgression, there we may be sure it is the Devil that suggests those resolutions. But if he can get admittance once thus, by prevailing with a person to receive him upon purposes of after-Penitence; he is sure to prosper still in his attempts upon the same condition: For Repentance will wash out another sin, if he commit it; and so on. And it is evident that by this very train he does draw most men on through the whole course of sin and life: For never do they till they see themselves at the last stage, begin repenting. When they are to grapple with Death's forces, then they are to set upon resisting of the Devil: And when they are grown so weak that their whole Soul must be employed to muster all its spirits, all their strength, but to beat off one little spot of phlegm, that does besiege the avenues of breath, the ports of life, and sally at it, and assault it, once, again, and a third, many times, and yet with all the sury of its might cannot break through, nor beat off that little clot of spittle; when it is thus, yet then are they to wrestle with, and Conquer Principalities and Powers, all the Rulers of the utter darkness, pull down the strong holds of sin within, cast down imaginations, and every high thing that did exalt itself against the knowledge of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ; and with those feeble hands that they are scarcely able to lift up in a short wish, or prayer, they must do all this; resist the Devil, and take Heaven by force.

Now sure to put it off to such a fatal season is a purpose of a desperate concern. In God's Name let us set upon the doing it while there is something left of Principle and vigor in us, ere we have so grieved God's Spirit, that he do resolve to leave us utterly; and before the Devil have so broke us to his yoke, that we become content and pleased to do his drudgery. We deceive ourselves if we think to do it with more ease when Constitution is grown weaker; as if then Temptations would not be so •rong: For the Habits will be then confirmed, Vice grown Heroical, and we wholly in the power of Satan, dead and senseless under it, not so much as stirring to get out. But if we strive before he have us in his clutches, we have an Enemy that can vanquish none but those who consent to, and comply and confederate with him, those that will be overcome: So that if we resist, he must be Conquer'd; and Temptation must be conquered too, for he will fly, and then by consequence must cease to trouble and molest us. This is the sure way to be rid of Temptations, to put to flight the great Artificer and Prince of them, subdue and overcome him and ourselves: And to him that overcometh thus Christ will grant to sit with him on his Throne, as He also overcame, and sate down with his Father on his Throne.

The Fourteenth SERMON, Preached at WHITE-HALL. Last Wednesday in LENT, 1667/8.

PHILIPP. III. 18.

For many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the Enemies of the Cross of Christ.

Though many by the Cross of Christ here understand any sort of Suffering for the sake of Christ or Religion (it being usual with the Scripture to entitle Christ to every evil that befalls a man for doing of his duty,) yet others looking on it properly as that on which Christ himself suffered, by the Enemies of the Cross understand those that set themselves against the whole design and influence of Christ's death upon it.

Now to name that in few words, the Cross of Christ not only is one of the greatest Props on which our Faith of the whole Gospel leans, which it establisheth the truth of as Christ's Blood shed upon it was the sanction of the Covenant on God's part, who by that federal Rite of shedding Blood engaged himself; and we may certainly assure ourselves, he cannot fail to make good whatsoever he hath promised in that Covenant, who would give the Blood of his own only Son, who was so holy, and who was himself to Seal that Covenant; and his Blood is therefore called the Blood of the Everlasting Covenant.

But besides this extrinsic influence of it, all the blessed Mercies also of the Gospel, are the Purchase of this Cross, and all the main essential duties of the Gospel are not only Doctrines of the Cross, such as it directs and does enforce, but the Cross also hath an immediate efficacy in the working of them in us: For S. Paul saith by the Cross of Christ the World is Crucified to me and I unto the World. On it the Flesh is also crucified with the Affections and Lusts: And to say all that comprehensive Duty of the Gospel, Self-denial, is but another word for taking up the Cross: And then as for the Mercies of the Gospel on the Cross the satisfaction for our sins was made, the Price of our Redemption paid, and that effected: There was wrought our Reconciliation with our God; Lastly, that was the consideration upon which Grace was bestowed whereby we are enabled to perform our duty: With good reason, therefore S. Paul calls the Gospel 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the word or Doctrine of the Cross; so that the Enemies of the Cross of Christ are in a word the Enemies of Christianity, and so the blessed Polycarp in his Epistle to these same Philippians seems to understand it: And they that walk as Enemies to it, are such as do not only hate the Duties of the Gospel, those especially which the Cross directly does enforce; but their course of life is ordered so as to break the very Frame and Power of Christianity, they set themselves against all that Christ came to do upon and by the Cross, resist, and wage War with the Doctrines, and by consequence oppose the mercies of it.

The words being thus explained, I have no more to do but only answer two Enquiries which they give occasion for.

The first is, What sort of men those are that walk as Enemies to the Cross, and wherein their hostility does express itself?

The second is, What the danger and the sadness is of that condition, that they should make S. Paul think it necessary frequently to warn them of it, and to do it now with so much passion? For many walk, saith he, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, &c.

First for the first. And here I shall not strive to give you in a perfect list of all that walk as Enemies to the Cross, but shall take that which S. Paul hath made ready to my hands in the next words.

And first the Enemies which he brings up in the front, are the Sensualists, the Men whose God is their Belly.

Secondly, They whose glory is in their shame.

Thirdly, Who mind Earthly things, to which as being their confederates, and near Allies I shall add Fourthly, Those that he reckons up in the 1 Cor. i. the wise men of this World.

First, The Sensualists.

That Men who diligently mind the serving of their appetite in Meats and Drinks, that study and contrive its pleasure, and with industry have learned, and practice Arts of Luxury, and in those have set up their delights, that these should be accounted Enemies of the Cross of Christ there is but too much reason. For their course of life is perfect opposition to that Cross, and to the whole design of Christianity, and to the very being of all Virtue. For since Virtue is but moderation and restraint of Appetites and Passions, and since sensuality indulges, and does raise and heat them: since the whole design of Christianity, is to mortify the deeds of the Body, those our members upon earth, that Body of Sin and Death; and since Voluptuousness quickens, pampers and does make them vigorous; lastly, since the Doctrines and the Influences of the Cross of Christ do aim at Crucifying the flesh with its Affections and Lusts, and Luxuries do gorge and make them ramping, sure the Enmity is too apparent to be proved.

It is the business of Religion to instruct and frame men into reasonable Creatures: God himself chose to die upon the Cross that we might live like Men here, and then afterwards die into Sons of God, and become equal to the Angels.

He suffered on the Tree, that we might be renewed into that constitution which the Tree of Knowledge did disorder and debauch. Before Man a•e of that, his lower Soul was in perfect subordination to his mind, and every motion of his appetite did attend the dictates of his Reason, and obey them with that resignation and ready willingness which our outward faculties do execute the Wills commands with; then anything, however grateful to the senses, was no otherwise desired than as it served the regular and proper ends and uses of his making; there was a rational harmony in all the tendencies of all his parts, and that directed, modulated by the rules and hand of God that made them: In fine, then Grace was Nature, Virtue Constitution.

Now to reduce us to this state as near as possible is the business of Religion (as it had been in some kind the attempt also of Philosophy.) But this it can in no degree effect, but as it does again establish the subordination of the sensual to the reasonable part within us: That is, till by denying satisfactions to the Appetite (which is now irregular and disorderly in its desires) we have taught it how to want them, and to be content without them, and by that means have subdu'd its inclinations; or by taking down the Body have abated of its powers and its provocations; and where it is stubborn, heady, and rebellious, there by cutting off provisions from the flesh, and by sharp methods vanquished and reduced it into a condition of Obedience; and (whenever that is also necessary) weakens so that insolent untamed part of ourselves, that we make it lie fainting, groveling at our feet (these are the Doctrines of the Cross, and this the method of its Discipline:) And withal by those rational and divine heavenly encouragements which above all Doctrines in the World our Christianity suggests and furnisheth with infinite advantage, have so fortified the mind that it resumes its principality, governs, and carries on the lower Soul in its obedience to Duty easily without resistance, as they say the higher Heaven moves the inferior Orbs along with it although their proper tendencies are contrary: At leastwise if impressions from without or inbred inclinations stir, raise passions, and mutinies, yet the mind keeps so much power that they shall not beat it off, and force it from its prosecutions of good; nor shall, unless by a surprise, engage its consent in the pursuit of evil. This is that which Religion aims at, thus to make us men, teach us to live according to our nature, to put Reason in the Throne, and vindicate the Spirit from the tyranny of its own Vassal flesh.

But sensuality is most perfect opposition to this whole design; for it renverses that subordination without which there is no possibility of Virtue as I showed you; and it puts that whether Lust or Passion in the Throne, which either constitution, conversation, or whatever accident, did give possession of our inclinations to: And makes the strangest prodigy of Centaure where the Beast is uppermost and rides the man; where the Beast is God indeed; for the sensual man acknowledges no other God but his own belly, so S. Paul does character him here. And truly if we look on the attendances, and careful services he gives it, and how studiously and wholly he does consecrate himself to please it, one would think it most impossible he should have any other God: but if we number the drink-offerings, and meat-offerings, the whole Hecatombs he gives it, and whereas other Deities had only some peculiar appropriate Creatures for their Sacrifices, how this Votary rifles the Universe, goes through the whole latitude of beings for Oblations, one would think he did out•number all the Heathen Legions in his God's; and yet all this is only for his Belly. Now he that deifies his Appetite, and that is so attent and so solicitous in its service, he that sets up such an Antigod as this to Christ, appears a scornful insolent Enemy to Him, his Cross and his Religion, near the state of those men whom the Wiseman couples with the sensual, persons of an impudent mind, the very disposition of those Enemies of the Cross of Christ whom S. Paul brings up in the second place,

Those that glory in their shame.

Amongst the uses of the Cross of Christ, one chiefly meant, was by the ignominy of that most accursed infamous punishment to represent the vileness of Iniquity; to which shame and confusion were so due, that there were to be Contumelies as well as Agonies in the Death that was to expiate it; And it seems not sufficient that the Blood of God be shed for it, but that Blood must be stained too with the imputation of a Malefactor; Christ was to suffer the insulting scorns and vilifyings of his Crucifiers, his Honor must be sacrificed as well as his Life, Barabbas must be preferred even before that Pers'n of the Trinity to whom sin was to be imputed, and who was to bear the just shame of it, such infinite debasement and contempt being a most essential ingredient in the wages of Iniquity, of which this Cross of Christ was the express.

And then how is it possible for men to wage a more professed hostility against the Cross of Christ, than by endeavoring to put Reputation on the thing on which that Cross was set to throw Disgrace? by raising Trophies to themselves for that which raised a Gibbet to their Savior? giving themselves a value for the thing which hath such infinite diminution in it, that it made the Son of God esteemed worse than Barabbas.

These men are too successful Enemies of the Cross that thus triumph over it, and when it was erected as an Ensign to display the vileness of iniquity, and to shame sin out of the lives of mankind, vindicate and rescue sin from that contempt, and throw the Cross and shame upon Religion itself; while they exult in their commissions as in commendable things, and too truly verifying the Apostles aggravations against willful Sinners, Crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame, while they put scorns on that contempt he suffered: For the Agonies and Contumelies he endured on that account of sin must needs be most ridiculous to them who count Sin gay and Honorable. Thus they trample and insult upon his Passion, thus tread underfoot the Son of God even on his Cross, and upon that footstool they exalt themselves by putting sin in countenance and credit with the Age▪ For it is plain it is so when men once can glory in it▪ For our actions raise a glorying in us only in relation to the sentiments of others, that growing from a confidence of having praise and value for them in the World. So that they must assure themselves that most men or the most considerable will applaud their Vices; otherwise they could not glory in them, but would be ashamed. And such a judgment we may safely pass upon an Age or Nation, where great Crimes not only have impunity but Reputation; and men glory in them. Had it been so in the Heathen World when Christ and his Cross first appeared there, Christianity had wanted one of its convincing pleas. Tertullian in his Apology for our Religion to them that blasted it with all imaginable imputations of Impiety, discourses thus:

Omne malum out timore out pudore Natura perfudit: Nature hath dash'd every Vice with fear or shame; all Malefactors labor to lie hid, and if they are laid hold upon they tremble, and deny when they are accused, hardly confess it to the Rack; and when they are found guilty they bewail, upbraid themselves, and aggravate confessions of their Crimes. Christianus vero quid simile? But what does the Christian like this? None of us is ashamed of his Religion, or repents, except it be because he was not sooner of it: If he be branded for it he rerejoyceth, if you accuse him of it he does own it, triumphs in it; if he be condemned for it he calls his Execution his Martyrdom, his sufferings his Crown. Quid hoc mali est quod naturalia mali non habet? Now what strange kind of impiety is this that hath none of the natural affections of it? not the shame nor fear, tergiversations or repentance, or deplorings of it? Quid hoc mali est cujus reus gaudet, cujus accusatio votum est, & poena faelicitas? What a kind of evil's this, which he that is found guilty of is glad? to be accused of it is his ambition? to suffer for it is his happiness?

Alas, the World hath taught Vice nowadays to use this plea with a much greater confidence, and he that would apply this argument to our experiences might plead thus for the Religion of sin. For now they are but piteous puisny sinners who feel those things which in Tertullian's days were natural and essential to sin, to blush, and be ashamed, and have regrets. Men do not only own it as those primitive persons did their Christianity, but they out-vie the Martyrs heats; for they accuse themselves, and boast of their performances in Villany, yea falsity, bely themselves in sin, and usurp Vice, steal the glorious Reputation of exceeding sinfulness, as if the impiety were meritorious.

And truly as that Christian Confidence and Magnanimity brought in the World as Proselytes to the Cross, so this other confidence brings Sholes of Votaries to Vice: For when once there is no need to be ashamed of it, there are but very few but will venture to commit it. And indeed this sort of men do manage their hostility so dexterously, as to use those very Weapons Christianity was successful with, against itself. 'Twas by a discipline of shame (for that was the great strength of the Church Censures) that our Religion did at first prevail almost to the exterminating Vice out of the World: The temporal Sword was never so victorious as this weapon of our Spiritual Warfare was, which yet in those times drew no blood, unless it were into the face, in blushes. But since men have found or made pretexts to glory in iniquity, and several Crimes are become honorable; Virtues are dress'd up as mean, poor spirited, sneaking qualities; some look melancholic, sad, are hypocondriack, some pedantick, some unmanly, some irrational, and worse; so that men are now ashamed of Duty; 'tis a disparagement to own the doing it: Thus they have as it were excommunicated Religion. It is accounted a contemptible, or at best foolish thing; which is the very sentence of the third sort of Enemies the Wise men of this World, though in non-Latin alphabet that mind earthly things (the fourth sort) in which all their wisdom lies. Which two last sorts of Enemies I shall attack together.

The Cross of Christ amongst its other ends was set to be an instrument whereby the World is to be Crucified to us, and we unto the World; to be the means whereby we are enabled to prevail upon and overcome our worldly lusts and inclinations; and to sleight, yea and detest all the temptations of its Wealth, Delights, and Heights, when they attempt to draw us into sin or take us off from Duty. Now to this it works by these three steps.

First, showing us the Author and the finisher of our Faith nailed himself to that Cross; his joints rack'd on it, his whole Body strip'd, and nothing else but Vinegar and bitter potions allowed his thirst: and thus convincing us that if we will be his Disciples we must take up his Cross and follow him, at leastwise we must have preparedness of mind to take it up when ever it is fixed to Duty; to renounce all profits, honors, and delights of this World that are not consistent with our Christian profession: This is the Doctrine of the Cross of Christ; it being otherwise impossible to to be the Disciples of a Crucified Master. And when this great Captain of our Salvation was himself consecrated by his sufferings, and had for his Standard his own Body lifted up upon the Cross, we that are listed under him, and with that very badge the Cross too; crucis Consecranei, Votaries and fellow Soldiers of that Order, if we shall avoid our Duty when it is attended with a Cross, or straitened any ways, and the provisions of this World are cut off from it, and betake ourselves rather to the contents of Earth; we do not only shamefully fly from our Colours; Fugitive, and Cowards, Poltrons in the Spiritual Warfare; but are Renegadoes, false and traitors to ourselves too, such as basely ran away not only from our Officer, but from Salvation, which he is the Captain of; and which we cannot possibly attain, except we be resolved to follow him, and charge through whatsoever disadvantages to attend Religion, vanquishing all those temptations with which the World assaults us in our course to Duty. Thus the Cross of Christ first shows us the necessity we have to renounce and Crucify the World.

But to encourage and enable us to do so, it does also show us

Secondly, The certainty of a good issue in the doing it, assures us, that those who deny themselves forbidden satisfactions here, that will be virtuous maugre all the baits and threats of Earth, will embrace Duty when it is laden with a Cross, although so heavy as to crush out life, and kill the body; assures us that those lose not, but exchange their lives, shall save their Souls, and that there is another World wherein their losses shall be made up to them, and repaired with all advantage. To the truth of this the Cross of Christ is a most pregnant and infallible testimony. For as by multitudes of Miracles Christ sought to satisfy the World that he was sent from God to promise all this, and justified his Power to perform it by experiment, raising some up from the dead; so when they said he did his Miracles by Beelzebub, he justified it further with his Life; affirming that he was the Son of God (no 'tis impossible but he must know whether he were or no) and consequently sent and able to do all he promised, and resolved to do it also for our more assurance in himself, that he would raise himself up from the dead within three days; and saying this when he was sure he should be Crucified for saying so, and sure that if he did not do according to his words, he must within three days appear a mere Impostor to the world, and his Religion never be received.

Now 'tis impossible for him that must needs know whether all this were true or no to give a greater testimony to it than his Life. For this that Blood and Water that flowed from his wounded side upon Cross, which did assure his Death, is justly said to bear witness to his being the Son of God, and consequently to the truth of all this, equal to the testimony of the Spirit (whether that which the Spirit gave when he came from Heaven down upon him in his Baptism, or the testimony which he gave by Miracle;) for there are three that bear witness upon Earth, the Spirit, the Water and the Blood. Thus by his Death Christ did bring Life and Immortality to light: his choosing to lay down his own life for asserting of the truth of all this, was as great an argument to prove it as his raising others from the dead: and Lazarus's empty Monument, and walking Grave-clothes were not better evidence than this Cross of Christ.

4. Once more, this Cross not only proves the certainty of a future state, but does demonstrate the advantage of it; and assures us that it is infinitely much more eligible to have our portion in the life to come than in this life: That to part with everything that is desireable in this World rather than to fail of those joys that are laid up in the other, that to be poor here or to be a spoil, to renounce or to disperse my wealth, that so I may lay up treasures for myself in Heaven, and may be rich to God; never to taste any one of these puddle transient delights, rather than to be put from that right hand where there are pleasures for evermore; to be thrown down from every height on Earth, if so I may ascent those everlasting Hills, and Mount Zion that is above; that this is beyond all proportion the wisest course it does demonstrate; since it shows us him who is the Son of God, who did create all these advantages of Earth, and prepare those in Heaven, and does therefore know them both: Who also is the Wisdom of the Father, and does therefore know to value them, yet for the joys that were set before him choosing to endure the Cross and despising the shame. On that Beam he weighed them, and by that his choice declared the Poms of this World far too light for that exceeding and eternal weight of Glory; that the whole earth was but as the dust upon the Ballance and despised it, and to make us do so, is both the Design and direct influence of the Cross of Christ.

But as at first the Wise men of this World did count the Preaching of the Cross mere folly, to give up themselves to the belief and the obedience of a man that was most infamously Crucified, and for the sake of such an one to renounce all the satisfactions, suffer all the dire things of this Life, and in lieu of all this only expect some after Blessednesses and Salvations from a man that they thought could not save himself, seemed to them most ridiculous: So truly it does still appear so to the carnal reasonings of that sort of men, who have the same objections to the Cross of Christ, as it would Crucify the World to them, and them to it; as it would strip them of all present rich contents, and give them certain evils, with some promises of after good things, which they have no taste for, nor assurance of.

Now this being in their account folly, then the contrary to this they must think Wisdom: as it is indeed the Wisdom of this World; which Wisdom since it does design no further than this World, and hath no higher ends than Earth and its Felicities, it must needs put men upon minding the acquist and the enjoyment of these Earthly things, for that is only to pursue and to achieve their ends, to catch at and lay hold on their felicity; and accordingly we see it does immerse them wholly in those cares. So that it is no wonder if their God and Religion can get no attendance from them, it being most impossible they should, when Mammon hath engaged them in the superstitious services of Idolatry; and when they sacrifice their whole selves to pleasure and make their bodies the burnt offerings of their Lusts, and when Ambition, even while it makes them stretch and climb and mount, causes them also to fall low, prostrate, make their temper, nature stoop, lie down to every humor, and to every Vice they think themselves concerned to court and please.

And though a man would think these so great boundless cares are very vain and foolish upon several accounts; for common sense as well as Scripture does assure us that this life and the Contents of it do not consist in the abundance of the things that we possess; that it is all one whether my draught come out of a small Bottle or an Hogshead; the one of these indeed may serve excess, and sickness better, but the other serves my Appetite as well; the one may drown my Virtue, but the other quenches thirst alike. And every days experience also does convince us, that the least cross accident, pain or affliction on our persons or some other that is seated near our hearts, or the least vexation or cross passion will so sour all those advantages, that we cannot possibly enjoy them while we have them; sickness makes the richest plenty only a more nauseous trouble, a more costly loathing; then the poorest Soul that is in health is that great rich man's envy.

And there's no man also but does see so far into futurity as to satisfy himself that he shall die, and then the shadow of Death will cloud and put out all these Glories. And universal Reason also does tell every man that to deny himself or want his present satisfactions of this helpless dying kind, and suffer present evils, is in prudence to be chosen for avoiding of a future evil or achieving of a good to come which do transcend those other infinitely, and to all Eternity continue. Sure as no man pities the poor Infant in the Womb because he lies imbrued in Blood, hath no inheritance there at all, is fettered, confined as it were in that dark Cell; if he be to be born to an Estate, to live a full age here in gaiety of mind, and health of body, in Reputation, and all plenty of delights, we never are concerned or troubled at his other nine months Dungeon. So if this life be to the next as the Womb is to this; and if our hopes be no more on the Earth than in the Belly; and we have no inheritance or abiding place here, as we had not there; although the waters of affliction, and to be in our blood should be as natural to us as to the Child, yet if we thus press forward to the other birth, to be delivered into immortality of joys, this state were not to be lamented, but endeavored for with all our powers. Lastly, the same reason does assure us, that if those futurities (which are most certain) were but only possible, yet to part with everything, and suffer anything here to prevent miscarriage in relation to those two Eternities is certainly the safest course, and then by consequence the wisest. And this does appear a truth to all men when they go to die: And if it be the truth then, 'tis always so.

Yet notwithstanding all this, he that minds these earthly things, whose heart is set upon them, whose desires the World serves, provides to satisfy every imagination of delight: His heart is so entangled in affections to them, and in prejudices for them, and hath so imbib'd the impressions of them, that he hath no taste for any other, and by consequence no satisfying notions of them: And if he hath not then it is not possible that he should really and from his heart, out of conviction and inward sense value these beyond the earthly ones:

and it is plain we see he does not; and if he do not, to deprive himself of all the sweet contentments of his life, and tear out his own bowels that yearn after them, and cling to them; and instead of those embrace a Cross, and do this for things which he cannot value more, and counts uncertain, he must needs think a mad folly: Consequently to contrive and seize the present to the best most plentiful advantage is the wisest course; and therefore they that by whatever arts do thrive, advance themselves, live high and in delights, they are Wise men; because they do attain their ends, by means appropriate to those ends.

And now the enmity betwixt the Cross of Christ and the wisdom of the World appears: first, their designs are most directly opposite; the cross designs to take us up from earth and from its satisfactions, which have also thorns and briars in them, that Earths Curse, things that pierce and wound as fatally as the Nails and Thorns and other cruelties of Christ's Cross; and to lift us towards Heaven, to direct our hearts and our affections thither as our harbingers, to take possession for us of those joys the Cross did purchase for us, but no Cross can ever trouble. But the Wisdom of this World designs to lay out all its cares and its contrivances within this World, minds nothing else but earthly things, and does not lift an eye or thought to any other.

Secondly, Their Principles wage war: For earthly good things being the design, the main end of this worldly wisdom, consequently that does justify all courses without which men cannot gain those ends, by which they do, though they be never so unlawful by the Rules of that which we call Virtue and Religion; it does justify, I say, all such as prudent. But the Principles of the Doctrines of the Cross of Christ are positive, that we must renounce all earthly satisfactions, when they cannot be enjoyed without transgressing Christ's Commands, and embrace Duty even when it executes itself upon us.

But Thirdly, there's no enmity so fatal to the Cross of Christ as is the practice of those men who minding Earthly things, and all their wisdom lying as to them, they therefore think themselves concerned to represent the Doctrines of the Cross, which does so contradict their wisdom, as mere madness, and the Cross itself as the Ensign of folly; And accordingly they do, treat it en ridicul; and make the proper Doctrines of it, the strict duties of Religion, matter for their jests, and bitter scoffs: They character Religion as a worship that befits a God whose shape the Primitive persecutors painted Christ in, Deus Onochaetes, as if Christianity were proper Homage only to an Asses person, as Tertullian words it; And the Votaries transformed by this their service and made like the God they worship, were what they were called then Asinarii creatures only fit for burden, to bear, what they magnify, a Cross and scorns. No persecutions are so mortal as those that Murder the reputation of a thing or person; not so much because when that is fallen once then they cannot hope to stand, as because those murder after death, and poison memory, killing to immortality. They were much more kind to Religion and more innocent that clothed the Christians in the skins of Bears and Tigers, that so they might be worried into Martyrdom; Than they that clothe their Christianity in fools Coat, that so it may be laugh'd to death, go out in ignominy and into contempt. If to sport with things of sacred and Eternal consequence were to be forgiven, yet to do it with the Cross of Christ: Thus to set that out as foolishness which is the greatest mystery the Divine wisdom hath contrived to make mercy and truth meet together, righteousness and peace kiss each other, to make sin be punished, yet the Sinner pardoned: Thus to play and sin upon those dire expresses of God's indignation against sin, are things of such a sad and dangerous concern, that S. Paul could not give a caution against them but with tears, For many walk, saith he, of whom I have told you often and now tell you even weeping, &c. Which calls me to my last Consideration.

Indeed the Cross of Christ does represent Almighty God in so severe a shape, and gives the lineaments of so fierce displeasures against sin, as do exceed all comprehension. There was a passion in Christ's Prayer to prevent his Passion, when he deprecated it with strong cries and tears, yea when his whole body wept tears as of blood to deprecate it; and yet he cried more dreadfully when he did suffer it; The Nails that bor'd his Hands, the Spear that pierced his Heart and made out-lets for his Blood and Spirits, did not wound him as, that sting of death and torments, sin did, which made out-lets for God to forsake him, and which drove away the Lord that was himself out of him. Neither did his God forsake him only, but his most Almighty attributes were engaged against him: God's Holiness and Justice were resolved to make Christ an example of the sad demerit of Iniquity, and his hatred of it: Demerit so great, as was valuable with the everlasting punishment of the World, fallen Angels and fallen Men; for to that did it make them liable. Now that God might appear to hate it at the rate of its deservings, it was very necessary that it should be punished, if not by the execution of that sentence on Mankind as on the Devils, yet by something that might be proportionable to it, so to let us see the measures God abhors it by, to what degrees the Lord is just and holy by those torments, torments answerable to those attributes.

Now truly when we do reflect on this we cannot wonder if the Sinner be an enemy to the Cross, and hate the prospect of it, which does give him such a perfect copy of his expectations, when our Savior's draught which he so trembled at shall be the everlasting portion of his Cup: For if God did so plague the imputation of Iniquity, how will he torment the willful and impenitent commission of it.

But then when we consider those torments were the satisfaction for the sins of man, methinks the Sinner should be otherwise affected to them: Christ by bearing the Cross gave God such satisfaction, as did move him in consideration thereof to dispence with that strict Law, which having broken we were forfeit to eternal Death, and to publish an act of Grace whereby he does admit all to pardon of sins past, and to a right to everlasting Life that will believe on him, forsake their sins and live true Christians. He there appears the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the World, for that he does as being a Lamb slain, then he was our Sacrifice, and that Cross the Altar. And the humbled Sinner that repents (for, notwithstanding satisfaction, God will not accept a Sinner that goes on; by all those Agonies his holiness would not be justified, if when he had forsaken and tormented his own Son for taking sin upon him, he should yet receive into his favor and his Heaven, Sinners that will not let go, but will retain their sins: but the penitent) may plead this expiation: Lo here I poor Soul prostrate at the footstool of the Cross lay hold upon the Altar, here's my Sacrifice on which my fins are to be charged, and not on me, although so foul I am, I cannot pour out tears sufficient to cleanse me, yet behold Lord, and see if there ever were any Sorrow like the sorrow of thy Son wherewith thou didst afflict him for these sins of mine: And here is Blood also, his Blood to wash me in: and that Blood is within the Vail too now, and that my Offering taken from the Cross up to thy Throne, thou hast accepted it, and canst not refuse it now my Advocate does plead it, and claims for me the advantage of the Cross.

Now that men should be Enemies to this, and when they are forfeit to eternal Ruin, hate that which is to redeem the forfeiture; that they should trample on the Cross whereon their satisfactions were wrought; tread down the Altar which they have but to lay hold on and be safe; wage war with, beat off, and pursue a Lamb, that Lamb of God that comes to take away their sins: and make a spoil and slaughter of their Sacrifice; hostilely spill upon the ground that Blood, that was appointed for their Blood upon the Altar, for their blood of sprinkling, and was to appear in Heaven for them. If men resolve to be on terms of Duel with their God, and scorn that Satisfaction shall be made for them by any other way than by defiance; and although their God do make the satisfactions for them to himself, yet not endure it, but choose quarrel rather; this is so perverse and fatal an hostility as no tears are sufficient to bewail.

But possibly men sleight these satisfactions because some terms are put upon them which they know not how to comport with; the merits of the Cross must not be accounted to them but upon conditions which they are not able to perform; they are required to master all their wicked Customs, their untamed appetites, and settled habits, to keep under their Concupiscence, to calm their inclinations and their passions: Now on such severe articles friendship with the Cross they think is too hard bought.

But therefore Secondly, the Cross was the consideration upon which Grace is offered us, whereby we are enabled to perform all this; tho' power to will and strength to do, all necessary aids from Heaven are granted to us as Christ merited them for us by his Sufferings; and that Blood he shed upon the Cross it is the Fountain, 'tis the Ocean of all Grace: And if temptations storm thee, lay hold on that Cross, it is the Anchor of Salvation thou hast hold on; tell thy God although thou art not able to resist and stand, thou hast the price of strength, that which did purchase it was paid down for thee on the Cross, and is at his right hand, he hath it: give me therefore grace for it, let me have the value of that Blood, the Blood of God in spiritual succors, which may make me able to resist thy Enemies, and do thy will. Now God will never be unjust to deny any man those aids that were so dearly purchased for him, and for which he hath received the price.

And then that men should be Enemies of the Cross which is their Magazine of strength against their Enemies! As men that do resist the having Grace, lest it should change their inclinations! as men that will not be impowered against Vice, but will oppose the Aids of Heaven, fight against the succors that are given them, and destroy their own forces, lest with them they should be able to encounter sin and overcome it! Thus willfully to run against and charge their Anchor of Salvation; to poison to themselves the Fountain the whole Ocean of their graces, is the state of them only that do resolve and that had rather perish.

Once more, on that Cross was wrought a reconciliation betwixt God and Man; and that upon such terms of honor to us Men, that God does seem to condescend as far in this his Treaty, as in coming down from Godhead into Flesh; there is Exinanition in his yieldings and compliance. He sent his Son to move us to be reconciled, as if he did acknowledge us the offended party; and as if he meant to give us satisfaction, in his Blood, he dies upon the Cross to effect that Reconciliation. When our Savior would magnify a Love he thus expresses it, Greater love than this hath no man, that a man lay down his life for his friend: But behold here is greater love, for Christ commended his love to us in that when we were Enemies he died for us, only out of hopes to make us friends; Love strong as doath indeed, that brought him to the Grave who could not die. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, affection violent as Hell, that brought God to 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and made him descend to Hell: For so low he stoop'd; thus he humbled himself to persuade us to be reconciled, and to prevail with us to be at peace with God.

And is a Reconciliation with the Lord so hateful to us, that we will be Enemies to the Cross that works it? are we so assured of worsting God Almighty, that we will resist whatever makes towards a peace with him? are the Sinners expectations so tempting? do we look for such advantage from the Covenant we have made with Death, and the agreement we are at with Hell, that we will have the League defensive and offensive? will be foes to their foes? and will have War with God because he is their Enemy? are we thus resolved to be revenged upon the Triumphs of the Cross? and because our Savior spoiled Principalities and Powers, triumphing over them on it; therefore set ourselves against that Trophee of his Victories over our friends the Devil and his Fiends? is the love of Christ so injurious to us that we will be Enemies to the Expresses of it? and when his affection threw him down so low for our sakes, humbled him to Hell to beg and to procure our friendship, will we go to trample on him there rather than not go thither, and rather than we will not be forever there?

W•• 〈...〉 for this! O blessed Savior, that thou didst pray against thy Cup 〈◇〉 earnestly, because of Man's ingrateful 〈◇〉 to it• because th••ast to 〈◇〉 God Almighty's Indignation in it, and the Si••ers hatred for it? because it was the Cup of the Lord's 〈◇〉, and 〈...〉 squeezed into it all the d•egs of his Wrath, and 〈...〉 into it? and when the one will make thee drink it up, the 〈...〉 it in thy face? was it not because thou wert to take a Cross up which thou couldst not bear the Torments of, and 〈◇〉 will not endure the blessings of? but most despitefully treads down that 〈...〉 thou art sinking under it laden with their weight? this is, alas, a state so sad that neither S. Paul's tears, nor Christ's blood hath sufficient compassion for.

And yet though one wept the other died for them, these men have neither tears nor pity for themselves. Yet one would think this were a subject worthy of them: 'Tis storied of Xerxes, that when he took a view of his vast Army which he went to Conquer Greece with (an Army such as the Sun never saw, and it could scarce see that, which the Historian says did Coelo minitari tenebras, as it covered and drank up the Sea, and took up and devoured the Earth, so it did seem to darken Heaven too: An Army which consisted, saith Herodotus, when mustered at Thermopylae, of Five Millions, Two Hundred Eighty Three Thousand, Two Hundred and Twenty Men, besides Laundresses, Harlots, and Horses; and it had Twelve Hundred Gallies for Sea-fight, besides Twenty Hundred Ships for carriage.) When upon this view he had for a while gloried in his happiness to behold and command so many Nations, and so Powerful a Fleet and Army: notwithstanding on a sudden he burst into tears on this Consideration, that in one Hundred years there should not one survive of that great marvelous multitude: (And truly through his folly in one hundred weeks scarce any one but was the prey of Enemies, and Death and Infamy.) But 'tis a sadder Contemplation to reflect on the far greater Army of the Enemies of the Cross, who, if they do not end that quarrel, will in fewer years be all dead and in Hell. I know not whether such a sad reflection called out S. Paul's tears, but sure I am it does deserve their own: And there is nothing will avail in their behalf without their tears. It may be tears are piteous things for such brave Sinners: But then what will these insulting Enemies of the Cross do, when they shall see that Sign of the Son of Man coming in the Clouds of Heaven? When this Cross shall usher in the great Assize? When they shall look on him that they have pierced and Crucified upon it? And when that Crucified offended Enemy shall come there to be their Judge? That takes himself to be offended much more in his kindness, than his Person; and will judge this more severely that we would not let his Cross and Passion do us any good, than that we Crucified him on it.

Let us then be caution'd in the fear of God to be no longer Enemies to that which is to reconcile our judge to us. If we have his Friendship on the Cross, we may be sure to have it on the Judgment Seat. He that on the Cross parted with Godhead and with Life for us, will on the Bench adjudge us that Inheritance which his Cross did purchase for us. He sits there to pronounce happiness upon all faithful $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Christians, to proclaim Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the Kingdom prepared for you.

To which, &c.

SERMON XV. WHITE-HALL. Novemb. 15. 1668.

MARK X. 15.

Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little Child, he shall not enter therein.

THE Kingdom of God, especially as it is concerns the forepart of the Text, signifies nothing else but that of the Messiah, or in one word, Christianity; and that both as to the profession and the practice, the Doctrine and the life of it: For so the \langle in non-Latin alphabet \rangle , by which Theophylact expounds the words, the Preaching of the Doctrine is itself called the Kingdom of God by our Savior, Mat. 21. 43. 'Tis not delivering of a message only in weak empty words, 'tis Jurisdiction and exercise of Sovereignty: And the Commission that authoriz'd to it was the delegation of the Powers of Omnipotence: All Power, saith our Lord, is given to me both in Heaven and in Earth, And (which the Syriac adds in that place also) as my Father sent me, so send I you, go ye therefore and teach all Nations, teaching them to observe whatsoever I have Commanded you. As if this were execution of the greatest and most Kingly Power, and every Doctrine had the force of Proclamation, every denunciation were Sentence; as it will be certainly to them that do not give obedience to it.

Which obedience is Secondly, and that most properly entitled the Kingdom of God; Rom. 14. 17. for by that he Reigns; without this our great universal Lord were a Prince of no Subjects, had a Kingdom but of Rebells only: So that to receive the Kingdom of God is by the obedience of Faith to submit to the Gospel, to receive the Doctrines of it by believing, and the Precepts by obeying them: The duty which our Savior here directs, and which with such severity he threatens non-performance of, even with exclusion from that blessed Immortality of Joyes which the Kingdom of God imports, which is that sense it bears in the last words of my Text. In which we must consider,

First, the Object both of the Duty and the Threat a Kingdom, and that the Kingdom of God.

Secondly, our concern and duty in relation to that Kingdom we have only to receive it. Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God.

Whatever bustle men are well content to make to get possession of any Earthly Dignity or Power, sometimes to wage War with their Conscience and all obligations, violate all Rights both Humane and Divine, and assault greatest difficulties and yet greater guilts, to invade men's Crowns, and other rights, there's no such need in this; we have no more to do but let this Kingdom come, and not resist the having it. For therefore also,

Thirdly, the manner we are by our Savior here prescribed to receive this Kingdom in is, as a little Child. Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little Child, as one that cannot stand against the power of a Kingdom when it comes; that hath not strength nor malice, neither force nor will to oppose; which they that do must needs keep themselves out of it; Which is,

Fourthly, the thing threatened, they shall not enter therein; there being neither reason, nor indeed a possibility men should possess that which they will not receive.

Lastly, Christ's asseveration is added to all this, Verily I say unto you whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little Child, he shall not enter therein.

But because the main thing Christ intended in the Text (which he so oft repeated upon several occasions) was by the significative emblem of a little Child, visibly to inform us of some dispositions that are absolutely necessary to the entertaining Christianity, either in our minds by Faith, or in our lives by practice; I shall therefore wholly attend that design of his in the words, and handle them particularly as they seem here to be spoken in relation to the Doctrine of it. This being most of use now in an Age when men not only tear Religion with disputes, but aim to baffle it with reproaches quite out of the World: Now against such the Text is positive, Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God, the Doctrine of Christianity as a little Child, be cannot enter therein, neither into the possession of the Promises of Christianity, nor indeed into the profession of it.

And here I need not labor much to find that in a Child which Christ requires of those that come to be Disciples in Religion; for it is plain that Children being impotent, unable to sustain or to direct themselves, they give themselves up to the aids and the directions of others, those especially whom they are committed to, and with whose cares of them they are acquainted; to whose guidance they resign themselves entirely, laying hold on them in any dangerous appearance, and not trusting to themselves at all: And when their Age first makes them capable of having anything infus'd into them, being empty and unseason'd Vessels they will easily receive all and sincerely without taint: And being neither filled beforehand with prejudicate opinions, nor with windy vain conceits of their own skill or knowledge, they must needs take in without any let 〈◊〉 hindrance whatever is infus'd, and submit themselves to be directed wholly by their teachers, without contradiction or dispute, for they Judge not, nor examine, but receive. Now such a resignation seems the proper disposition which our Savior expects in a Disciple. It is plain that his pretended Vicar and that Church expect it, that men shall submit their Faith entirely to the Church, believe whatever she proposeth as revealed by God merely on that account as she proposeth it, for otherwise it is not a right faith: Yea she requires that men give their assent to the determinations of her head, the Pope, in matters of fact also, where they are as competent to Judge as he; and though with all their industry, and using the same means, they cannot find the fact to be as he determines, yet they are obliged in conscience to that superior to depart from their own Judgment, and to yield and sign their assent to his determinations. Witness the matter of Jansen. Yea their great Cardinal is positive that If the Pope could err so far as to call evil good, good evil, to prohibit virtues or command vices, the Church were bound in conscience to believe those vices good and honest, and those virtues evil. So far he.

Indeed if that Church be the Mother and Nurse of all Christians, 'tis from her breasts only they must seek the sincere Milk of the word: Now that she is so, they must take her word, as Children do their Parents words that they are so. And indeed this is properly to receive the Doctrine as a little Child, not judge, nor reason, not examine, but believe it. And such legendary doctrines as well as Histories, which they deliver are most fit to be received by such as Children. Yet as if this had been the proper method among Christians always, in S. Austin's time we find the Manichees derided Christianity, that discipline of Faith because by that men were commanded to believe and were not taught how to distinguish truth from falsehood by clear reason, and again, that it requires us to assent before we have a reason for it. And long before that Celsus did advise the Christians to receive no doctrines but on the account of reason, credulity being the inlet to deceit, saying, they that without grounds believe, are like those that admire and are satisfied with jugglers, and take appearances and sleight of hand for truth, adding many of the Christians, neither would receive, nor give a reason of their faith but used to say 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, do not you examine, but believe, 'tis your faith shall save you; and as if from the beginning it were so we cannot but have heard the story of that man that reading Genesis where Moses says, In the beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth. And he said let there be light and there was light, &c. Swore at him, saying, this Barbarian only asserted boldly but proved nothing. As if Argument and Reason never had place in the Jewish or the Christian Religion, only those who were the institutors of each Religion, did deliver it; others had no more to do but to believe it, that is, to receive it as a little Child.

Whether these reproaches, and the Oath of these known enemies may go for proofs that it was so, I shall not now enquire. But it is certain on the other side S. Paul requires of his new Christian Corinthians, that they be not Children in understanding, that they be in malice Children, but in understanding Men. Now a Man and a Child differ not in this, that the one hath an understanding reasonable soul, and the other hath not; but in that the one cannot use his understanding or his reason, and the other where he acts as man does: So that our Religion in requiring that we be in understanding men, does require of us that we use our reason in it.

And since assenting to a thing as truth is an Act of the highest faculty of the soul of man as it is properly and truly reasonable, namely as it understands and judges, it is not possible a man should really believe a thing unless he satisfy himself that he hath reason for so doing. Yea, whether that be true or not which many men so eagerly contend for, that the will though free is bound, and cannot choose but will that which appears best at that time it wills, yet it is sure that he who with his understanding, which is not free in her apprehensions and judgments, but must necessarily embrace that which hath most evidence of truth: He I say who really assents to any proposition does satisfy himself that he hath better and more cogent reasons for that than the contrary: And therefore it is impossible that any man can verily believe a thing which he is thoroughly convinced is contrary to clear and evident right reason, for he cannot have a better reason for the thing that is so; and were it possible for any man to believe so, there could be neither grounds nor Rules for such a ones belief; for there is nothing in the World, so false and so absurd although he were assured it were so, but he might assent to it, for whatever demonstrations could be offered why he should not, yet it seems he might believe against acknowledged evident truth and reason, but this were only wish, or fancy and imagination, not belief. And to prevent such Childish weak credulity was the great work and care of Christ, so far is he from requiring we should be as Children in this kind. For when he was ascended up to heaven he gave some Apostles, some Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers, he shed down the Holy Spirit and his gifts, that we might not be as Children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of Doctrine; Eph. 4. 14.

First, For want of rational grounds instable in our Faith as Children are in body, and in judgment also, taking all appearances for truths. If men were only to believe, there must needs be as great variety of Religions as of teachers. And though God hath appointed that some Church should be as perfectly infallible as that of Rome pretends to be; yet since there are so many Churches, and the true one therefore could be known no otherwise then by some marks, there must be disquisition before Faith; and men must reason and examine ere they can believe upon good grounds; for were they to receive Religion as a little Child, be nursed up with the Doctrine as with milk, a Child we know may suck infection from the poison'd breast of an unwholesom mother, or some other person, for it knows not to distinguish; and so may be nursed to death. A soul like theirs that is but rasa t'ubula, white paper, is as fitted to receive the mark of the beast, as the inscription of the living God, just as the first hand shall impress. Therefore we are bid not to believe every Spirit, not every Teacher though he come with gifts, pretend and seem to be inspired, but try them; and our Savior forewarn'd the Jews of false Christ's that should come with signs and wonders. Something therefore must be known first and secured, before the understanding can be thus obliged to give up its assent; and Captivate every thought into obedience, as S. Paul directs. Now what that was here to the hearers in the Text is easily collected, namely that he was the Christ that does require it: And S. Paul expresses it in the forecited place; where he says we must bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, to wit, of that Christ, who as he does himself profess that if he had not done among them the works which no other had done, they had not had sin: John, 15. 24. If his demonstrations had not convinced them it had been no fault not to believe: So when he had made appear he was that person whom their propheties had pointed out, the Messiah, the Son of the living God, and this not only his Disciples had acknowledged; but the multitudes; yea, when his miracles had made one of the Pharisees confess, Rabbi we know thou art a Teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles, except God be with him. Then if the Pharisees dispute against his Doctrine of Divorce, urge the authority of Moses and God's Law; and the Disciples press the inconveniences that will happen, If the case of Man be such with his wife; he may answer them: He that will not receive my Doctrines without dispute, that is to say, He that will not receive the Kingdom of God as a little Child shall not enter therein. This King that cometh in the name of the Lord may well determine how we shall receive the Kingdom of God. If he propose strange precepts to our practice, it appears that he is sent from God, and God's commands are not to be disputed but obeyed; if his revelations present dark unintelligible Mysteries to our faith, his promises offer seeming impossibilities to our hope, why yet he hath made proof he comes from God; and surely we are not so insolent as to doubt that God can discover thing above our understanding; and do things above the comprehension of our reason. Therefore since we are as Children to all these, it is but just we should receive them even as little Children: With a perfect resignation of our understandings and of our whole souls. Here 'tis most true what S. Austin says, Those are not Christians who deny that Christ is to be believed, unless there be some other certain reason of the thing besides his saying, Si Christo etiam credendum negant nisi indubitata ratio reddita fuerit Christiani non sunt. For to them that are convinced of that, 'tis such a reason that he is the Christ.

There is indeed no other name now under heaven, to whom we are obliged to give such deference, for however the modern Doctrines dare assert, that Christ hath given the very same infallibility which himself had to all S. Peters successors as often as they speak ex Cathedrâ; and that in matters both of right and of particular fact; yet not to countenance this monster by admitting combat with it, nor to put myself into the circle which these men commit who talk of the Authority of the Church, to which they require us to resign our Faith. I shall not stay to rack them on that their own wheel: This I dare affirm, it is impossible for any person or assembly to produce a delegation of authority in more ample terms than the great Council of the Jews could show, signed both by God and Christ. According to the sentence of the Law which they shall teach thee, and according to the Judgment which they shall tell thee thou shalt do; thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall show thee, to the right hand, nor to the left, faith God, Deut. 17. 11. compared with 2 Chron. 19. 8, 9, 10, 11. And our Savior says, They sit in Moses Chair, all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do, Mat. 23. 2. Let them of Rom• produce you a better and more large commission. Yet did not this suppose that Council was infallible either in the interpreting the Law, or in attesting of tradition, or in judging of a Prophet, or that the Jews were blindly to give up their assent and their obedience to their sentence; God did not mean the people should imagine that when he prescribed a Sacrifice for expiation of their errors in their Judgment when they found it out. Lev. 4. 13. As their own Doctors do expound it: Therefore God supposed that they might err, and we know that their Traditions did evacuate the Law, Mat. 23. 15. They judged and slew true Prophets, v. 37. They declared the Messiah an impostor, Mat. 27. 63. and blasphemer, and for that condemned him, Mat. 26. 65. and decreed what the Apostles told them they must not obey, Act. 5. 25.

But though there be no such Authority that's absolute, over the Faith of Men now upon Earth; yet if this Jesus did acquire such by his Works; if by the Miracles he wrought, his raising others from the Dead, his own Death and his Resurrection, he sufficiently justified the Divinity of his Doctrine; (And if those Miracles were true, they were not doubt sufficient) and if those that did pretend they were eye witnesses and ministers of all this, his Apostles and the Seventy Disciples, and those others that accompanied him, who conversed with him continually, and could not therefore be deceived if they profess they heard and saw all this, and Preacht it in the face of those that would have contradicted if they could, and rather than their lives have proved all false; yea Preacht it everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following. If they consign'd that Word in Writing also which they Preacht, to be a measure and a Standard of that Doctrine to futurity; which Word so Preacht and Written by agreeing, would in aftertimes give mutual illustrious evidence to one another; and if any Hetero•ies should at any time creep by degrees into the Articles or the external practice of the Church, they might be easily discovered by those Records.

And if the multitudes that heard, and saw, and did receive all this, and which were grown extremely numerous almost in every Nation of the then known World, while those Apostles and Disciples lived; if these delivered what they must needs know whether 'twere true or not, delivered both that Doctrine and those Books of it as most certain truth, by Preaching, and by Writing, and by Living to it, and by Dying for it, and engaging their Posterity to do so; and they also did that to all Ages; if all this, I say, be true, then it is easy to conclude that we are to receive the Doctrine of that Jesi, and this Book the Records of it, with the resignation of a little Child, and absolutely to submit our Faith to them.

But that it was thus; first as sure as any of us here, who have not seen the thing can be, that Christianity is now professed; the Bible now received in all the Regions round about us throughout Europe, or indeed that there are •ch Regions and places, so sure we may be, for we have the testimony of the World, that for example in the days of Dioclesian 'twas over the World professed both with their mouths and lives; owned in despite of Spoyl, of Torments, and of Death; and they did value the Records of this Doctrine so much dearer than their Lives or their Estates, that in prosecution of those Edicts, wherein the Christians were required to deliver up their Bibles to be burnt, in one Month 17000, were put to death: And the Persecution lasted at that rate for ten years time; so that in Egypt only it is said there were slain 144000, and 70000 banished. (The Laity it seems were allowed Bibles then.) Or put the case higher in Adrian's, or Trajan's time, who both lived within an Hundred years of Christ, who Martyred them 'till weariness slackned the Execution, and they gave off only as it were that so they might cease to persecute themselves; and we have the Officers engaged attesting this, all which must needs be as notorious as the Light.

Now Secondly, 'tis most impossible those so vast multitudes of every Nation should have met together, forged a Code of Doctrines, and agreed so uniformly in professing a Religion, and in dying for it; for we may as easily believe that there were never any men before this Age we live in but that these began the kind, as that those of that Age began the Christian Religion.

Thirdly, 'tis as impossible that their immediate Ancestors who lived in the Apostles Age, who heard their Preaching, received their Writings, saw the Miracles they did, if they did any, and many of them must have seen Christ also after he was risen if it were so; yea multitudes of them were themselves parties in the gifts of Tongues and Miracles, if there were any, and so could not be imposed on, but must necessarily know whether they were truths or forgeries: It is as Impossible, I say, so many should agree together to betray all their Posterity into the profession of a Religion from which they could look for no advantage but the certain total Ruin of themselves and their posterity; it was not possible they could have done this if they had not thought all this was true; and since they did know whether it were true or not, if they thought it was true, they did know it was, and if they knew it was, then it is certain that it was so; and these Scriptures, and the Doctrines Christians deliver (so far as they have not varied since that time from these Authentical Records) they have the Seal of God, Miracles to attest they come from God.

I might have urged completion of Prophecies to prove the same. First those in the Old Testament of the Messiah, which so eminently came to pass in Christ, that they sufficiently clear those Books to be Divine: Next Christ's predictions in the New, particularly those about Jerusalem, which saith Eusebius He that will compare with what Josephus an eye-witness and no Christian, writes of it (or what ourselves know of that Nation and that place indeed) he must acknowledge the Divinity of his words. But enough hath been said to prove they come from God, and therefore we must so receive them as the Word of God, with perfect resignation of our Souls, and submission of our judgments, denying every apprehension that would start aside from and not captivate itself to that prime truth which cannot be deceived nor lie; and renounce all discourses Reason offers that resist such abnegation of itself and all our other faculties, that is, receive this word of the Kingdom as a little Child. <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate>

I do not here affirm, by saying this, that our Religion does disdain, or keep distance from the service of any of Mans faculties, for it sometimes admits them not as Ministers only, but as Judges: 'Tis plain the senses were the first, I do not say conveyance only, but, Foundation of Faith, which was built on the first believers eyes and ears; they heard the Doctrine, saw the Miracles, were sure they saw and heard them, and so, supposing the signs sufficient to confirm the Doctrine to have come from God, were certain of their truth, without any Authority of a Church to influence that faith into divine: And S. John therefore does not only call in, and admit, and urge their testimony, That which we have heard, which we have seen with our Eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of Life, that declare we unto you; But our Savior in the highest point of Faith appeals directly to their Judgment: Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless but believing: And S. Austin also gives them the decision of a point of Doctrine which of all others now troubles the Church most; for speaking of the Eucharist, he says, that which you see is Bread, and 'tis a Cup, it is that very thing which your eyes tell you 'tis. Tertullian also long before that had appealed to them in that very cause. And in an instance where their sentence passes, 'tis not strange if Reason also take the Chair, and do pretend to Judge. And truly when the Scripture that does call those Elements Christ's Body and his Blood, does also call them after Consecration Bread and Wine; and since they must be called one of them by a figure, for they cannot be in Substance both; and since that Scripture hath not told us where the Figure lies, hath not expressly said, 'tis this but in resemblance, that in Substance: Here if Reason that hath Principles by which to judge of Bodies, which are exposed to all the notices and trials of our several faculties, and to which a Trope is not a stranger, it can judge of figurative speeches; when it therefore finds if it admit the figure in that form This is my Body, 'Tis but just the same which was in the Jews Sacrament the Paschal Lamb: which they called the Body of the Passover, though it were but the memorial, a figure which was always usual in Sacraments, and is indeed essential to Sacraments: And which is used in all things that are given by exhibitiv signs. But if it should resolve it to be Bread and Wine only in a figure, besides a most impossible acknowledged Consequence, that a man can be nourished by them, which the Romanists dare not deny; nor yet dare grant that men can feed upon a trope, be nourishit with a figure; besides this, if reason shall resolve that, it must judge against all Rules it hath of judging by, and judge in contradiction to known Principles, and trample on all Laws of sense and understanding, which (especially when the Scripture hath nowhere defined expressly) must be most unreasonable; yea most impossible, to judge that true (that is to say, believe that thing) which it sees is most irreconcilable with known truths. Here therefore Reason is not insolent if it give verdict by its proper evidences; men are not bound to swallow contradictions as they do the Wafer, or receive as a little Child, that discerns the Lord's Body, no more then it does the repugnancies that are consequent to their Hypothesis concerning it.

Or to make another instance, when the Scripture says, God is a Spirit, yet does also give him hands, and eyes, and ears, and wings, and these of strange prodigious dimensions; neither tells us which of these is proper and which figure: Here if Reason that can prove God cannot be a Body, and cannot endure his God should be a monster, shall be called in to pass sentence; they that make Philosophy interpret Holy Writ in this case, and give the last resort to Reason, do no more usurp or trespass on Religion, then they that make use of Authors, or a Dictionary judge of the sense of any Greek or Hebrew word in Scripture.

But notwithstanding this we may not think the mysteries of Faith are to be measured by the Rules of natural Reason, so to stand or fall as they approve themselves to its discourse or Principles: for though it be impossible that any Revelation can contradict right Reason (truth cannot be inconsistent with truth:) yet it is very possible God can reveal those truths which we have neither faculties analag, nor Principles or notions proportioned to, nor any natural ways of judging or examining. And if those faculties which are not capable of cognizance will judge; and judge of things removed from all our notices; (such as Spiritual, Infinite, Eternal being is) and do it by principles gathered from the information of our Sences, and by analogy with things of another kind; corporeal finite things that are about us; reason need not be informed how liable such judgments must be to mistakes; and how that which we call repugnancy in one may have no place in the other. Here therefore to submit our understandings, and believe is but modest justice, and to receive as Children what our Heavenly Father says.

And therefore they that will presume to comprehend what ere they are commanded to believe, and those that will believe nothing but what they are able to comprehend, are alike insolent, if not pernicious. 'Tis true God by the Gospel hath revealed and brought to light many things which before appeared only as he himself did in the Temple, in a Cloud; namely concerning the Divine nature, Persons, Properties, and the Eternal being, and the Incarnation of his Son; but still, as God himself is said to do, these also dwell in Light, that no man can approach unto. Which he that will needs gaze and pry too near to, must be dazzled into blindness, and be only so much more in the dark. But he that proudly does conceit his little spark of Reason can bear up with that Divinity of brightness, and enlighten him to look through all those inaccessible discoveries, with Lucifers assuming he hath reason to expect his fall. The one of these that will needs clear all mysteries, the other will take them all away; the one that with his Pencil will presume to figure him who is the brightness of God's glory, and trace out the lineaments by which that everlasting Father did impress the character, and express Image of his person on him, and the other that with a bold hand dashes out the Person from the Nature; the one that will untie the knots of the Hypostatick union; and the other that will cut them and the union too asunder; the one that will needs prove by Reason whatsoever is in Scripture, and the other that speaking of Christ's Satisfaction, saith for my part if it were not only once but oftentimes set down in holy Scripture, yet would not I therefore believe it, because forsooth it was against his reasonings: Neither the one or other of these sure receive revelation as a little Child, not like young Samuel, Speak Lord for thy Servant heareth.

But these, as all extravagance is wont, are profited into much worse: The one that would be proving, making reasons for, the mysteries, often God knows framed only shadows, and the other by their light of Reason being able to dispel and make those shadows vanish, that so easy victory encouraged them to frame reasons against, and to attacke the mysteries themselves; and then others finding there was something that was taken to be reason not agreeing with some chief heads of Religion, as they had been still received; took occasion thence to conclude against the whole Religion; and by scruples at some Articles taught themselves to dispute all the Creed; and now a difficulty in one Doctrine makes the rest suspected, and regarded only as things made to amuse, and the unusual wording of a Command is thought ground enough to turn all Christian duty into Raillery.

For instance; If Christ intending by prescribing patience, to teach men how to escape not only from the guilt, and present torture that a Spirit which will needs return each sleight offense is subject to, but also from the future and eternal recompenses of revenge, shall in phrasing his injunctions but bid them turn the other cheek, no Gentleman can be of his Religion; and that is cause enough I hope not only to renounce, but scorn it. If in mere compassion meaning only to make virtue easy, by advising us against the snares and the occasions of Vice, he word his Counsel in prescriptions to pull out the right eye, cut off the right hand: His Religion is a much worse Tyranny then the Covenant Naash offered to the men of Jabesh Gilead, and they think themselves as much concerned to make parties against it: In fine, if that he might at once instruct us how to pull up the root of all evil, he forbid us to lay up treasures upon the Earth, and tell us that our treasures should be laid up in Heaven, and say it is impossible for a rich man to enter into Heaven; here they cry out mainly he supposeth us, and treats us just as Children: This Command requires indeed that they who do receive it should be Children, whom we use to cheat of gold by the same methods, telling them it is not good for them at present that it shall be laid up for them; and therefore when Religion does attempt to deal with men so, 'tis concluded it designs to cozen them, as they think it does indeed, and is a cheat, and all that minister about it are mere fourbes: And truly if we racked the Consciences of dying men, and if so be they would give so much to this Cloyster or that Order promised them remission of their sins, and worse than Judas, sold the purchase of Christ's Blood at those base rates, and betrayed the Redemption so, on God's name let them so account us; but if we do attempt on nothing but men's vices, and would only steal their Souls from Hell, and cheat them into piety and blessedness, these we hope are very unreprouchful frauds. But alas! to talk to them of these after-things, of Heaven and Hell is altogether as much liable to their contempt as the commands are. If we tell them of a Resurrection to Judgment, and of everlasting fire to punish wicked men, because their reason cannot comprehend how flame can hurt a Soul; or for the Body how devouring fire can repair the food it preys upon, that it may keep alive and nourish torment to eternity; or how each man's peculiar dust that is digested into several men's being and so become no one man's peculiar, when it shall be also blended with the ashes of the Universe, can be singled out and parted to its proper owner, when there are so many own it, because their reason cannot comprehend all this, therefore Scriptures lake of fire must be no more then the Poets Acheron; and Resurrection was framed (as the apparition of a Ghost is wont to do) to fright men merely; and however 'tis attested Christ did never rise, but all is fable: Thus from such premises as these our rational disputing men conclude.

And here I shall not ask how these men dare presume, that if there be a God who hath declared that he will bring such things to pass, yet he must be unable to affect them, if they cannot comprehend the manner how he does them; or be confident they can look through those beams that come out of his hand, in which the hiding of his Power is: But this I shall say to our men of reason, theirs is the most unreasonable way of arguing in the world; to dispute against plain matters of fact, the being and the Works of such and such so many ages since, and witnessed by a greater testimony then the World can show for any other thing; and ever since appearing in their visible and vast effects, as the Conversion, Suffering, Faith, of the whole Earth almost. Now to attempt the confutation of such matter of fact by reasonings drawn from difficulties in some things which those men are witnessed to have delivered, or to conclude, that there can never have been any such persons in the World, because they cannot understand all that those persons taught, or possibly because they can take some occasions to buffoone on what they taught, is most ridiculous. Thus History must have been false, and several known places not to have been, because the story hath been turned into Burlesque: Thus he that with the Ancients cannot comprehend how it is possible that there should be Antipodes, or the Earth can be anything but a plain flat, otherwise he thinks the inhabitants must fall down to Heaven; may as rationally despise all the discoveries of the Earth, assure himself our constant Navigations which persuade us 'tis a Globe inhabited on both sides, bring home from the Indies nothing else but false relations, and that indeed there are no Indies.

I need not urge how Christianity approves itself even to the reasoning of the sober part of mankind; and the morality of it had the suffrage of the World before itself appeared: For while the evidence stands good, if the matter of fact be true, the Doctrine must be true, and the commands obeyed: and to use such arguings to resell such matter of fact is just like that which Zeno did attempt, namely, by subtleties to prove it was impossible there could be any motion, while another did disturb his Lecture by his motion up and down the Schools; it is the same thing as to take a bowl to cut with, or the vessels of the Danaid's to carry water in: For such reasonings are alike improper for that work.

And indeed these arguings are not the exceptions of reason, but the strugglings of men's vices against Religion. And it must be impossible so many Thousands would give up their Bodies, rather than their Bibles to the fire in Dioclesian's days, because it is a book which they can find no other pleasure in but that of railing it, or helping them with subjects to be profane upon. It must be false that Christ did feed 5000 with 5 loaves and 2 small fishes, 'till 12 baskets full of broken pieces did remain; yet not so much because they know not how their eating could nourish the victuals so, and make it grow; as because they are angry with the worker of the miracle, who forbids and upbraids the excesses of their luxury, which can easily, and does daily consume the price of that that would suffice 5000, without miracle on 5 single persons; and all that when 'tis dressed according to the modern mode of eating well, dissolved, turned into juyces, and exalted into the Elixir of the Epicure, shall leave, alas! no broken pieces for the Alms-basket: This is the quarrel; this does make the miracle impossible. And yet methinks upon the same account they should allow, that at a feast he turned so many pots of water into wine, because that seems to gratify the thirsts of their intemperance. In fine, we do not live as men prepared or willing to be called to an account of all our doings, therefore we have no mind to rise again to give it: When we are thus minded, it is not hard to meet with difficulties that encourage the opinion that we shall not rise. Which difficulties when we look into, we cannot find how it is possible we can be raised, and 'tis easy then to think we cannot, that it is impossible, especially when it is our will and interest to think so; and then it must be false whatever is in Scripture that we shall. These are the processes of those that reason against Christianity, such the grounds that they dispute upon: But their reasons are but Sophisms of lust and interest, which will guild and paint whatever they are much in love with, and it is no wonder they find colors for it, and can think them reasons, for they always did so against present evident conviction. When Moses by his miracles endeavored to let Pharaoh know who was the Lord, and to persuade him to let Israel go; while God permitted the Magicians to counterfeit those miracles, it looked like reasonable indeed that Pharaoh should not be convinced; but when they could not imitate, but did confess the finger of the Lord, and themselves suffered those plagues which they could not either conjure up or down; then if Pharaoh will not be persuaded, 'tis plain nothing but his interest, not the wonders which were brought by the Magicians, were the reasons that prevailed with him; for those were not reasons against more and greater miracles; yet they were effectual with him to the destruction of himself and his nation. Again when they who knew the mighty works Christ did, and were forewarned by him of false Christ's and false Prophets, that would come with signs and lying wonders; God allowing Satan leave to struggle at his last gasp, and to make a blaze when he was to fall from heaven as lightning, but far beneath the glory of his only begotten Son: when they who knew both these, chose yet to follow a Barchocab, a false falling Meteor, who came indeed with greater show, and not with such strict mortifying Doctrines, nor only with the thin encouragement of after-expectations as Christ did, for he gave them hopes of present temporal enjoyments; but he did no wonder besides spitting fire (S. Jerome says) and throwing great stones from his knee as from an Engine, say his followers; which yet could not scare the Soldiers, neither did the Roman Eagles (which were true-bred) fear those flames he spate, but destroyed some millions of them. Now 'tis evident by the comparison of the several signs that Christ and this Barchocab wrought, the only reasons that gave efficacy to that sleight imposture, and did make it over-power Christ's mighty works, was their earthly desires and affections which Christ's severe Doctrines could not gratify, and therefore they receiving not the love of the truth, but having pleasure in unrighteousness, gave themselves up to delusions to believe a lie; yet still those delusions went for reason with them. Once more Tertullian challenging the Heathen says, Produce before your judgment-seats some, whom you will, of those who are inspired by any of your God's, when gaping ore the Altar they have in its fumes (according to their custom) taken in the Deity 'till they are great with it, & ructando conantur, while they are in travel with him, as it were, have belching throws, that they burst almost 'till they are delivered of the inspiration: while it is thus, let but any Christian adjure them by the name of Christ, and if the spirits that they are possessed with do not presently confess that they are Devils, ibidem illius Christiani procacissimi sanguinem fundite, let the saucy petulant Christian lose his life. He speaks of this as a known frequent trial. And Minutius Felix says, their chiefest God's have been forced out of their Votaries, and acknowledged they were evil spirits. Now here was reason and experience; the miracle was so evident, that Tertullian bragging says, do not believe it if your eyes and ears can suffer you; and the reason was more pressing then the fact, Nec enim Divinitas deputanda est quae fubdita est homini, it being most impossible that that should be a God which a man could rule and triumph over, so imperiously manage him, as with a bare command to force him from his hold, and make him shame himself so villainously before both his adorers and his enemies, as to say, He was a Devil. Yet the Heathens still found colors to do out all this conviction; and their old acquaintance with their God's, together with the Custom of their vicious Worships, had more force with them then miracle and reason. And while the Christian dispossessed their

Deities, he was himself turned out of all his own possessions; and although he made their God confess himself a Devil, yet still poor he was made to suffer as a malefactor.

And 'tis not strange if men now stick as closely to their vices, as those did to the God's that patronized them, and it be as hard to exorcise the Devil out of their affections and practices, as it was then out of Heathen Votaries or Temples. They are as fierce against the Christian Religion for their lusts sake, as those for their Venus, and the very same account that made those Heathen Customs, or the lying wonders of false Christ's, or Pharaoh's Magicians sings, be more persuasive then the other more real miracles; namely, because they sided with their inclinations and interests. This very account makes little difficulties (which Almighty God hath left in our Religion, as he suffered signs and lying wonders heretofore, for trials) yea, makes cavils, mere exceptions, pass for reasons most invincible, be disputed, urged with great concern and passion, against all those methods of conviction which God hath afforded Christianity.

Now if this be to receive Religion as a little Child, 'tis with the frowardness of Children, when they are displeased or ill at ease; who resist and quarrel with the thing that is to make them well or please them, and return the Parents cares to ease and quiet them with little outrages and vexing. And do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? Is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? Hath he not made thee and established thee? Ask thy Father and he will show thee, thy Elders and they will tell thee, Deut. 32. 6, 7. Now have Children any other way to know their Parents, then to let their Father show them, and their Elders tell them? Or should we cast off the relation and renounce all the obedience due to it, because we are not sure of it ourselves? For ought we know those may not be our Parents, we have only testimony for it: Thus we serve our God on that account; and yet Hath he not made thee and established thee? As he began us, so did he not nurse and bear us in his arms, and carry us in all our weakness and difficulties, 'till he brought us up to a full strength? 'Till by a miraculous and signal providence he had established, settled us? and after all these cares bestowed upon us, do we prove a generation of vipers only, such as do requite the bowels that did bear and nourish them, by preying on them and consuming them? Or like the of-spring of a Spider, who, when he hath spent himself with weaving nets, and working of them into labyrinths, to be the granaries and the defences of his brood, to catch them prey, and to secure them; then the strongest of his young ones, when he is by these his cares established and grown ripe to destroy, makes those threads fatal to his parent, which he spun out of his bowels to be thread of life to him. And shall we be such Children to our Father that established us? Make all his plenties turn to poison in us, and invenome us against himself? make his miraculous mercies furnish us for the abuse and provocation of him? His blest Providence serve only to afford us arguments against itself; help to confute itself because it hath so prospered, doth still suffer us? but after all this, is he not thy Father that hath bought thee? who to all his titles to us, his endearing obligations, notwithstanding our despites and provocations of them; yet did give the life of his own Son to purchase over again the same relation to us, that we might have right to the inheritance of his Kingdom: And then however we have hitherto affronted, let us be content now to be bought and hir'd, to receive that Kingdom of God as his Children; for if Children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, who died to make us Kings and Priests to God and his Father.

To whom be glory, &c.

AT THE CONSECRATION OF THE Right Reverend Fathers in God,

- GILBERT Lord Bishop of Bristol,
- EDWARD Lord Bishop of Norwich,
- NICHOLAS Lord Bishop of Hereford,
- WILLIAM Lord Bishop of Gloucester.

By RICHARD ALLESTRY D. D. Canon of Christ-Church in Oxford, and one of His Majesty's Chaplains.

Right Reverend Father in God, GILBERT, Lord Bishop of London, and Dean of His Majesty's Chapel Royal.

My LORD,

WHEN I consider with what reluctancies I appear thus in public; I have all reason to suspect and fear, lest this offering, which like an unwilling Sacrifice was dragged to the Altar, and which hath great defects too, will be far from propitiating either for its self or for the votary. But I must crave leave to add, that how averse soever I was to the publishing this rude Discourse, I make the Dedication with all possible zeal, and ready cheerfulness. For I expect your Lordship to be a Patron, not only to my Sermon, but to my Subject. Such a separate eminence of virtue and of sweetness mixed together may hope to ingratiate Your Function, to a Generation of men that will not yet know their own good, but resist mercy, and are not content to be happy. And for myself, Your Lordships great goodness and obligingness hath encourag'd me, not $\langle \diamond \rangle$ to hope that you will pardon all the miscarriages of what I now present, but also to presume to shelter it and myself under your Lordships Name and Command, and to honor myself before the World by this address, and by assuming the relation of▪

My Lord,

SERMON XVI. IN S^t PETERS WESTMINSTER. January 6. 1660.

ACTS XIII. 2.

The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

AND as they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the holy Ghost said,— Although that ministering to God by prayer and fasting, be the indicted and appropriate acts to preface such Solemnities as this; and that not Sermons, but Litanies and intercessions, are the peculiar adherents of Embers, and of Consecrations; and those vigorous strivings with Almighty God by Prayer are the birth-pangs in which Fathers are born unto the Church: Yet since that now this Sacred Office is itself opposed, and even the Mission of Preachers preached against, and the Authority that sends despised as Antichristian, whilst separation and pretence unto the Holy Ghost set up themselves against the strict injunction of the Holy Ghost to separate; the Pulpit that otherwhiles hath fought against it, must now atone its errors, by attending on the Altar, and the bold ungrounded claims of Inspiration, that false Teachers have usurp'd, be superseded by the voice of the Holy Ghost himself, who in this case becomes the Preacher, and says, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

My Text is a Commission parole from Heaven, in it you have,

First, the Person that sends it out; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , The Holy Ghost said.

Secondly, the Persons to whom it is directed; implied in the verb 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 separate, more particularly expressed in the foregoing words.

Thirdly, the thing to which they were impowr'd by the Commission, or which was required of them; set down in the remaining words of the Text, wherein you have.

1. The Act enjoin'd; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , separate.
2. The Object; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , separate me Barnabas and Saul.
3. The end for what; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 for a work.
4. The determination of that work; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 for the work whereunto I have called them.

Of these in their Order: and first,

I The Holy Ghost said.

Of those five things for want of which the second Jewish Temple sunk below the first, and its Glory seemed faint in the comparison, the Chiefest was the Holy Ghost; who became silent; his Oracles ceased then, and he spake no more by the Prophets. A thing not only confessed by the Thalmudists, (who say our Rabbins have delivered to us, that from the time of Haggai, Zechary and Malachi, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 The Holy Ghost was taken away from Israel) but so notorious in experience, that when St. Paul meets Disciples at Ephesus, Acts 19. 1. and asks them if they have received the Holy Ghost, whether at their Baptism the Spirit came down upon them as he did then on others; they answer ver. 2. We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost, any extraordinary effusions of the Spirit, whether he do come down in Gifts and Afflations, such as we know were usual in the first Jewish Temple, but have not been for a long time, and we have not yet heard they are restored, (for of this pouring out of the Holy Ghost they must needs mean it, not of himself, of whom they could not doubt, nothing was more known in the Jewish Church.)

But as our Savior did supply the other four with all advantage, and so fulfilled the Prophecy, and made the glory of that Temple greater: so for the fifth, the spirit, he was restored in kind with infinite improvement, that of Joel fulfilled, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh, for they were all baptized with the Holy Ghost; baptized in rivers of living waters, which did flow out of the belly of themselves, for this he spake of the Spirit, which all that believed on him should receive Joh. 7. 39. so that Joel did scarce feel or fore see enough to prophesy of this abundance, but the inundations were almost like Christ's receivings, without measure. Nor were his Inspirations as of old, dark and mysterious Oracles, direction in rapture, where the Message itself was to have another revelation, and it must be prophecy to understand as well as utter: But in the Gospel his effusions run clear, and transparent as the Water that expresseth them, revealing even all the unknown languages that were the conduits and conveighances; all plain express direction, such as that of the Text.

Now amongst all the several uses of the Holy Ghost for which he was poured out in this abundance, amongst all the designs he did engage himself in, and advance, he does not seem to have a greater agency nor to interest himself more in any, than in qualifying for, and separating to Church-Offices. This seems to be his great work: And indeed how can he choose but be particularly concerned in those Officer which are his own 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, his gifts? Timothy's is expressly called so, in each of his Epistles, 1 Tim. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 6. And when our Savior, Ephes. 4, 8. is said to give the gifts of the Holy Ghost to men, it is added how, ver. 11. He gave some Apostles, some Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Ministry, namely because those gifts enabled for those Offices, and all the reason in the World that he should have a special hand in giving, where himself is to be received. Receive the Holy Ghost, that was from the beginning, and is yet the installation to them: And if we take them from their divine original, from that great Pastor and Bishop of our souls, who was the maker of them too, Thus he was consecrated; the spirit of the Lord is upon me, therefore he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel, Luke 4. 18. And when he comes to ordain succession, he says, as my Father sent me, so send I you: And he breathed upon them, and said, Receive the Holy Ghost, Joh. 20. 21. And after bids them tarry at Jerusalem 'till they should be endued with power from above, Luk. 24. 47. That is, endued with the Holy Spirit, Act. 1. The present Barnabas and Saul were sent by his Commission in the Text; and v. 4. And Saint Paul tells the Elders of the Churches of Asia, the Holy Ghost made them overseers, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Act. 20. 28. Timothy had his Office, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, by immediate designation of the Holy Ghost, 1 Tim. 4. 14. Clemens Rhomanus saith, the Apostles out of those they had converted, did ordain Bishops and Deacons 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, having first tried them by the Holy Ghost, and so taught by his revelation who should be the men. And Clemens Alexandrinus says, John after his return to Asia, ordained throughout all the regions about, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet › , such as were signified and designed by the Holy Ghost. So that Oe••menius pronounces in the general, ‹ in non-Latin alphabet › , the Bishops that were made, they made not inconsiderately on their own heads, but such whom the Spirit did command. Chrysostom said as much before, and Theophylact. Nor can we doubt that he maintains his interest in this affair even at this day: But that our Veni Creator Spiritus, come Holy Ghost eternal God, does call him to preside in these so concerning Solemnities; For Christ, when he commissioned his Apostles, assuring them, behold I am with you even to the end of the World; which promise he performs only vicriâ Spiritûs prasentiâ, by the presence of the Holy Ghost, who is his Vicar, as Tertullian expresses; nor can the Spirit be with them till then, but by making them be till then; which being done by Ordination, that Ecclesiastical procreation, (for so they derive themselves to the Worlds end;) upon the strength of that promise we may assure ourselves he does assist as truly, though not so visibly, as when he said here, separate.

The Holy Ghost's concernment being thus secured, I have this one thing only to suggest; that they who set themselves against all separation to these Offices and Orders, in and for which the Holy Ghost hath so appeared, (what they be I dispute not now) they fight against the Holy Ghost, and thrust him out of that in which he hath almost signally interested himself. And they that do entitle the Spirit to this opposition, do not only make God's Kingdom divided against itself, or raise a faction in the Trinity, and stir up division betwixt those Three One Persons; but they set the same Person against himself and make the Holy Spirit resist the Holy Ghost. You know the inference pressed upon them that did this but interpretatively in the Devils Kingdom, and did make Satan cast out Satan: And is it not here of force? And they who make the Spirit cast out the Holy Ghost, contrive as much as in them lies God's Kingdom shall not stand. I will not parallel the guilts. Those Pharisees blasphemed the Holy Spirit in his Miracles, ascribing that to Beelzebub which was the immediate work of the Holy Ghost: (and such indeed do sin unpardonably, because they sin irrecoverably; for Miracles being the utmost and most manifest express wherein the Holy Ghost exerts himself, they who can harden their understandings against them have left themselves no means of conviction, and cannot be forgiven, because they cannot be rectified or reclaimed.) These others do blaspheme the Spirit in his immediate inspirations and ‹ in non-Latin alphabet › , ascribing to the spirit of Antichrist all those Offices and Orders, which these gifts of the Holy Ghost were power'd from Heaven immediately to qualify for, and separate to; things in which he hath as signally appeared as in his Miracles: and as he made these means to convince the World, so he made those the Officers of doing it, and set them to out last the other. Now in the same nearness that these two guilts come up one towards the other, just to the same degree these sin the sin against the Holy Ghost. For the Holy Ghost said, separate.

So I pass to the second, to those whom this Injunction is directed to. And thence I do observe in general, that Notwithstanding all the interest and office that the Holy Ghost assumes in these same separations, yet there is something left besides for Man to do. Although he superintend, they have a work in it: He is the Unction, but it must be applied by laying on of hands. I have called them, saith he in the Text; and yet to them that ministered, the Holy Ghost said, do ye separate. I do not now examine what degree and order of men they were whom the Holy Ghost here commissions for this Office. The Judgment of the Antient Church in this affair is enough known, by the condemnation of Arius, and by the Fate of Ischyras and Colluthus: and for the present instance, in which they are called Doctors that are bid to do it, there hath enough been said to prove 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 a Title of a Bishop; to which I shall only add, that it was a variation of Name that stuck by them until Bede's age, in which, what Bishops signified does come under no question; for he does say, that Austin called together to the Conference, Episcopos sive Doctors, the Bishops or the Doctors of the Province. Besides that there was then in Antioch a Bishop 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, In the time of Claudius Emperor of Rome, and of Euodius, whom the Apostle Peter had ordained at Antioch, those that before were called Nazarenes and Galileans, were called Christians: A thing which happened a little before this separation in the Text, as you find Chap. 11. 26. But who they were that used to separate for every Execution of these holy Offices, will appear from the Instances that I shall make to prove the present Observation, that, besides that of the Holy Ghost there was an outward call: And whom soever the Spirit sent, he commanded that they should have Commission from Men. And all my former Testimonies for the Holy Ghost, bear witness for this too. The Text is positive; here was a Conge d'estire for Barnabas and Saul. Timothy had his Office 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, be designation of the Spirit, 1 Tim. 4. 14. yet 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, with laying on of hands, ibid. yea 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, by the laying on of my hands, 2 Tim. 1. 6. And Timothy was placed at Ephesus, as Titus also left at Crete, to ordain others in the same manner; St. Paul providing for the succession of the Rite and Ceremony as well as of the Office. And in St. Clement's Testimony, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉; the Spirit tried, but the Apostles constituted. And down as low as Trajan's time, when St. John's date was almost out, his life and his Commission expiring, and the Churches of Asia to be provided with succession, the Men were 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, signified by the Holy Ghost: But the Chron. Alex. saith, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 that he went clean throughout Asia and the adjacent Regions, constituting not only Bishops, but others of inferior Clergy: And even in the lowest thus it was; when the first Deacons were to be made, Men full of the Holy Ghost and Wisdom were to be looked out, Act. 6. 3. But yet that did not authorize them, the Holy Ghost and Wisdom did not make a Deacon: For besides that, the Apostles will appoint them over their business, ibid. and they are brought to them, and they do lay their hands upon them, v. 6. Thus it was in those times of full effusion of the Holy Ghost: Men always had to do in giving that Commission: so that whoever pleads an Order of the Spirit for his Office, (although such a Commission of the Spirit, if he had it, would evidence itself, and if it were, it would appear, for 'twas the manifestation of the Spirit that was given to every man to profit withal; yet) if we yield him his pretensions, and let his own incitations pass for inspirements, and his strong fancy for the Holy Ghost, if the Holy Ghost did call him, who did separate him? Whom the Holy Ghost calls, he sends to his Officers to empower; they both work, He says, do ye separate.

And here a Consideration offers itself unto those holy Fathers, whom the Spirit makes his Associates in separating men to sacred Offices; that when they set apart even to the lowest stalls of the Church, they labor to perform it so that the Holy Ghost may be engaged, and act along with them in the performance: Separate such as they may presume the Spirit hath called, and will own. He does not call the ignorant, or appoint blind eyes for the Body of Christ, or make men Seers to lead into the pit. The Holy Spirit calls not the unclean, or the intemperate; we know it was another fort of Spirit that went into the swine: nor does he ever say, Separate me those who separate themselves, the Schismatics: the Spirit calls not such as break the unity of the Spirit; nor sets into the rank of higher members in Christ's body those who tear that body, and themselves from it: the factionous, those that will not be bound neither in bonds of peace nor of obedience, but break all holy ties, that make commotions, and rave and foam, sure 'tis the Legion that sends them, and not the Holy Ghost. He whom the spirit will call, must not be under the reputation of a Vice, but should be of a good report, lest he fall into reproach, and so into the snare of the Devil, 1 Tim. 3. 7. i. e. lest he fall into reproach, and then his teaching do so too, and men learn to slight or not heed the doctrines of such a one as is under scandal for his life, and so the Devil get advantage over them, and do ensnare them. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . For to be to any an occasion of falling, is to be the Devils snare. Now Christ's Fishers of men, those whom the Holy Ghost appoints to spread nets for the catching Souls to God, their lives must not lay snare for the Devil, and entangle Souls in the toils of perdition. Those also that come to you out of Ambition or of greediness of gain, the spirit calls not neither: He calls we see 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , to a work; so that they who seek more then they can well attend the labor of, or are qualified for the work of, they are not of his sending. But of all men the Holy Ghost will least deal with the Simoniackal, that come not to a work, but to a market, that contract with Patrons for the spirits call, or, worse than their master Simon, would hire the Holy Spirit himself to say, Separate me them: The Successors of the Apostles have a Canonical return to these, Your money perish with you. They whom the Holy Ghost does call must have his gifts and temper; St. Paul hath set all down to Timothy and Titus, and those who minister in this employment, if they will be what he hath made them, joint Commissioners with him, and his Co-workers, they must order it so that he may work and act, which he does not but where he calls, nor does he call but those whom he hath qualified: And 'tis of those only whom he hath called, that he says, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , Separate.

The Third particular, the thing enjoin'd; And the Holy Ghost said, Separate.

The separateness of the Functions of the Clergy, the incommunicableness of their Offices to persons not separated for them, is so express a doctrine both of the Letter of the Text, and of the Holy Ghost, that sure I need not to say more, though several heads of Probation offer themselves: As first the condition of the Callings, which does divide from the Community, and sets them up above it; And here I might tell you of bearing rule, of thrones, of stars and Angels, and other words of as high sense, and yet not go out of the Scripture bounds, although the dignity did not die with the Scripture Age, or expire with the Apostles: the age as low as Photios words it thus, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . That Apostolical and Divine Dignity, which the chief Priests are acknowledged to be possessed of by right of Succession. Styles which I could derive yet lower, and they are of a prouder sound than those the humble ears of this our age are so offended with. But these heights it may be would give Ombrages; although 'tis strange that men should envy them to those, who are only exalted to them, that they may with the more advantage take them by the hands to lift them up to Heaven. Those nearnesses to things above do but more qualify them to be 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in Theoph. and to draw near to God on your behalf, that those your Angels also may see the face of your Father which is in Heaven, and those stars are therefore set in Christ's right hand, that they may shed a blessed influence on you from thence.

The 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, The Work and labor of the work, (the one is the 〈ϕ〉, and the other Saint Paul's word) require a whole man, and therefore a man separate: and if St. Paul, one of our separated persons here, who had the fullness of the Spirit, and the fullness of Learning too, that was brought up in the Schools, and brought up in Paradise, taught by the Doctors, and taught by the mouth of the Lord in the third heaven, snatched from the feet of Garaliel to the presence of God, to have a beatifical Vision of the Gospel, if after all this he cry out, who is sufficient for these things? sure they are not sufficient, who in those little intervals which their trades and necessities afford them, fall into fits and frenzies of Religion, have a sharp Paroxysm of irregular convuls'd Divinity, as if they were its 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, possessed with their Theology 'till their weariness, and not knowing what to say do exorcise them.

But not to speak only to the wild fancies of this Age, the Scripture says of the men of these callings, they are taken from among Men, and ordained for Men in things pertaining to God. And such discriminations are evinced by all the expressions of a Church in Scripture. 'Tis called the body of Christ: Now the parts of a body, as where they are so separate that they divide from one another, they do not make a body, but are an Execution; so where they are not separate in a diversity of Organs, for several faculties and operations, it may be a dead Element, as similar bodies are, but cannot be that body which St. Paul describes, 1 Cor. 12▪ Which is not one Member, but many, ver. 14. And if they were all one member, where were the body? v. 19. and indeed all that Chapter is inspired for this Argument. In Christ's Church 'tis as impossible that everyone can be 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 an Overseer, as that every part in the body can be an Eye: And the whole frame of Man may be nothing else but a Tongue, as well as every Christian may be a Preacher: And if it might, where indeed were the hearing? as St. Paul does ask. The Church is also called abuilding, and God's house: Now it is true that every Christian is by St. Peter called a lively stone, and all of them built up a Spiritual house, an holy Priest-hood, 1 Pet. 2. 5. and they all are a Royal Priest-hood, an holy Nation, a peculiar separate people, verse. 9. Yet all this is no more of privilege than is affirmed in the very same words of the Jewish Nation, Exod. 19. 6. Where yet God had his separated Levites, Priests and High-priests too. But sure 'tis manifest enough that in this building, as in others, stones have their separate places and distinct; everyone cannot bear up the Corner, or be a pillar and foundation-stone; much less can everyone place itself in the Ephod, assume to be one of the Urim and the Thummim-stones, and there break out in Oracles, and give Responses; and every rubbish stone set itself in the Mitre, and shine in the head ornaments, as if it were one of the precious stones of Zion. In fine, (to speak now out of Metaphor;) not only the transactions of the Text, which is a precedent for men to commission such and such, but also all Scripture rules direct a Choice; and where there is Election, there is also dereliction, and both evince a separation: And if all the Nations in the World have had their distinct Officers for Religion, and, as it were, to signalize the separateness of their function, in many Nations they did live apart from Men: The Priests had their adya as well as the Deities; dark solitary Groves were made choice of, not so much for the God, as for his Officers retirement; so that every appearance of him also was a Vision, and the Priest was revealed as well as the Oracle▪ and all this at the first to make a kind of sacred Pomp for the solemnity of awfulness, (though afterwards it often proved but opportunity for foul performances.) And if to this uniform practice of the World God's attestation be set, who ordered it in his own Government; nor that as a Levitical or Jewish administration, but it was practiced amongst his own from the beginning, and when dominions were but greater families, there were still distinct persons for the employments of Religion; that was the office and the privilege of the first-born: Esau was called profane for selling that birth-right of his: (And the word in the Text here, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 separate, is the same which God does word the sanctifying the first-born for him with, Exod. 13. 2.) 'Twere easy to deduce all this out of all ancient Jewish Records. And when the practice ever since hath been the same in Christ's Religion; after all this, sure nothing else but absolute defection of the Notions of Mankind, and blotting out all the impressions of Universal Nature and Universal Religion, or else an absolute Command from Heaven, could alter this Establishment; from which command we are so far, that 'tis the Holy Ghost himself that said expressly 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 separate.

Now this 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, this Separateness in Function, does infer upon us a separateness in Life and Conversation, and they who are thus set apart from the World, must keep themselves unspotted from the World. To separate and Consecrate are but two words for the same thing: Separate three Cities is the Command in Deut. 19. 2. and they sanctified three, Josh. 20. 7. Our Offices assume them both, and all are holy Orders. Now separate and pure are both so primitive, and so essential notions of holy, that truly I cannot determine which of them is original, and which secondary: Our Consecration does challenge both; and as we will be separate in our calling, so we must be separate in our lives, not conforming ourselves to the World, for I have chosen you out of the World, saith Christ. A torrent license of an Age must not carry us along; an Universal Custom of the World must be no precedent, and can be no excuse for us to do what is irregular. We are 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 separate; and that the World does such things is no more a plea for us to do so, than that because the World is Common ground, therefore the Church is so too, fit to be put to all the uses of the field, or of worse places. Were it a reasonable argument; because I see that the whole Country's tilled, why should I not break up the holy places, and plow the Temple? Why, so we are enclos'd for God, and separated for the uses of Religion, and to preserve ourselves pure for them. Our Savior says that the Community of Christians is a City upon an hill; and then sure the consecrated Persons are the Temple of that City, the separate places of it; and then as they are most in sight (the Church is ordinarily the most visible building) so truly he that sees one of them, it should be as if he saw an open Church, where there is nothing else but holy duty, as if his life were Liturgy, public Service▪ and Worship of God. Hath your zeal never rose, at least your indignation, at the profane fury of this Age, which never made a stop in violation of things sacred, when to its heap of other Sacrileges, it added most contemptuous defilements of God's honors; making the place that Angels met us in to Worship, and Goddwelt in to bless us there, the place appointed for the Divinest Mysteries of our Redemption, for the Celebration of Christ's Agonies, for the Commemoration of the blessed Sacrifice, the place for nothing but Christ's Blood, then to become the place of a most odious and insolent uncleanness? If I had worded this more aggravatingly, it had been only to infer that then to see a consecrated person to pollute himself with those black foulnesses that made hell and made fiends, is sure a sadder and a more unhappy spectacle. If an Apostle become wicked, he is in our Savior's Character a Devil; Have I not chosen Twelve, and one of you is a Devil? Yea if the good Saint Peter do become a scandal; tempt to that which is not good; Get thee behind me, Satan. Christ calls his nearest Officers Stars; Emblems of a great separateness those, that teach them how far their Conversation should be removed from Earth; for they are of another Orbe, Heaven is the Region of Stars: But they are Emblems of a greater purity; there's nothing in the World so clean as light, 'tis not possible so much as to fully shine; it may irradiate dung-hills, but they do not defile it; you may Eclipse a Star but cannot spot it; you may put out the light, you cannot stain it. 'Tis a word for God's purity: only his light is glory; and as his holiness is so separate that it is incommunicable, so his Light is inaccessible; Yet sure they that are stars in Christ's right hand, they do come near, and mix their light with his; and they of all men must be pure and holy, whom the spirit calls to that place, as he does all whom he calls to that separation that he did Barnabas and Saul, the Persons and the next Part; Separate me Barnabas and Saul.

I intend not to make particular reflections upon these persons, although the Character of Barnabas be registered the 11. Chap. v. 24. He was a good man, full of Faith, and of the Holy Ghost, and the good influence that that had upon the people follows; And much people was added to the Church. And as for Saul, though he began the Christian persecution, and was baptized in the first Martyr-blood, and breathed out threatenings, so that nothing but thunder could out-voice him, and at last was born as an 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as an untimely birth, aborting through those wounds which his own hands had made in the Church, and making himself a birth with ripping up her bowels; yet this Abortive proved the strongest birth, and 'twas a Miscarriage into the chiefest Apostle. As he began the after-sufferings of Christ in Stephen; so he fulfilled the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and made up all that was behind, in himself, being in deaths more than those he inflicted. The sound of his preaching was louder than that at his Conversion, out-voic'd the thunder; for this went out into all lands, as if himself alone meant to execute the whole Commission, Preach the Gospel to every creature: which he did almost, not only preaching to those places where Christ was not named, without the other Apostles line; but even where the rest employ'd themselves, he wrought as much as they, in Asia as Saint John, at Antioch as Peter; yea and at Rome too, having as much to do in their foundation: If I had said more, I could have brought the Popes own Seal for evidence; where not only both are, but Saint Paul hath the right hand: And truly if they had had the luck to think at first of founding all their pretensions on Saint Paul, his care of all the Churches would have born them out, as well as feed my Lambs does now. But these considerations I pass; though they would give a Man that hath done mischief in the Church a pattern for the measures of his future Service to the Church. The thing I shall concern myself in, is the solemn separation here of those who were before separated to the work of the Gospel; Barnabas sent by the Church of Jerusalem to Antioch, Act. 11. 22. and Paul not only separated from his Mothers womb, Gal. 1. 15. but chosen by express Revelation, and by the laying on of Ananias's hands that so he might receive the Holy Ghost, qualified to Preach the Gospel to the Gentiles and to Kings. In which work both of them had for some years exercised themselves. Yet here is a new consecration, and they are taken up to a condition more separate and distinct from what they were before. And all those vast advantages in which these persons did excel; the one of Faith and fullness of the Holy Ghost, the other, besides those, of express and immediate mission from Heaven; and the most strange success their labors had been blest with, all these I say, did not qualify them to assume these powers which the Holy Ghost commands another separation to enstall them in: And 'twas this 〈◇〉 that called Paul to be an Apostle, Rom. 1. 1. (as from this time he is always called Paul, not sooner.) Nor do we find any least footsteps of their being Apostles before, though Barnabas were sent to Antioch, yet he does not undertake what Peter and John did at Samaria in the very same case; for they confirm and give the Holy Ghost, Act. 8. 15, 37. but Barnabas does nothing but Exhort, Act. 11. 23. and he and Paul together Preacht the Word abroad, but we find nothing else they enterpriz'd: but from this time they exercise Jurisdiction, settle Churches, and ordain them Elders in the Churches, Ch. 14. 22, 23. and (as it does appear) singly derived these powers to others, to be exercised by them singly. To Titus most expressly, Tit. 1. 5. the like also to Timothy, with all the other Acts of Jurisdiction, (of which their Epistles are the Records) particularly that of Censures, which Paul himself had inflicted on offenders in the Churches he had planted. Powers these, which by such steps and by degrees of separation an Apostle himself receives, and does not execute 'till he ascend the highest, that which they have a new solemnity ordained from Heaven to enstate them in, by a new laying on of hands, and the holy Ghost himself commanding, separate.

The separateness of this highest order in the Church is a doctrine handed down to us both by the writings of all Ages and the practices; (two things, which as they scarcely do concur in such a visible degree in any other things in our Religion, so also when they do concur, they make and secure tradition beyond all contradiction, give it sufficient infallibility: and truly he that does refuse the evidence which such tradition gives to all the motives of believing Christianity, if he be not a Socinian, he must be an Enthusiast, and can receive his Religion only from Revelation.) Now the matter of fact of this tradition is a subject for Volumes, not for a discourse, and it hath filled so many, that there is nothing left unsaid, or to be said against, as to the main: And they that pick some little sayings seeming against this order out of those Ancients which were themselves of it, and wrote much expressly for it, and think by those means to confute it, do the same thing with that Romanist, who tore some little shreds, that look as if they favored some opinions of the Romanists, out of the Books of Protestants, most of which were directly writ against the Church of Rome; and putting those together went about by them to convince the world there never were any such things as Protestants, but they that did profess to be so were all Papists.

But I will say no more then my Text hath done, which evidences it not a separation only of Degree, but Order, by a new Ceremony, and commissionating to new powers. If I would stay on words, 'tis expressed here by one that speaks very great distances, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , separate, which does in Scripture word the distances that the censures of the Church do make, Luke 6. 22. and still in the Greek Liturgies, when absolution is given, 'tis said to be 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , to free them from all curse and separation; as if to pass into the bounds of this uncall'd, were such a thing as to leap over the Censures of the Church, over the Line of Excommunication; and to break through this wall of separation, were to break through Anathema's and Curses: Yea, 'tis used to express the distance betwixt the Lord's two hands, his right hand and his left, at the day of Doom, Mat. 25. 32. betwixt which hands there is a 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , a most insuperable gulf.

But these I shall urge. Indeed the Fathers of the Church have been in these last days counted 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , separate in the severest sense, cast out as the dung of the Earth; and the calling itself was under reprobation, as if it separated only to the left hand of God: But so it was with their Predecessors in the Text, Saint Paul says of himself and the rest of his Order, that they were counted 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , as the filth of the World, and the off-scouring of all things, 1 Cor. 4. 13. and as if they were called only to ruin, and consecrated for a sacrifice, he says, the Lord hath set us forth as men appointed to death, verse. 9. Indeed since God hath pleased to own you as his Churches, Angels, we are not troubled if some have counted you as the off-scouring of the Earth, while we know Angels do relate to Heaven: And let them consider how they will reprobate those to the left hand of God, whom Christ calls stars in his right hand, and he is at the right hand of his Father; and while you were accounted so you did but follow them that went before in Sufferings as well as Office; and to do so was part of the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , the work that they were separated to; which is the next part, For the work.

I shall but run this over, and reflect upon it as I pass, according as it is of persent Concernment; and

First, Saint Paul's work was to Preach the Gospel, and we find him doing it from this time forward to his End. The high Priest of the Jews was called the Angel of the Lord of Hosts; of which name an Heathen does give this account, that he was called so, because he was, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , the Angel or the Messenger of God's Commands: so Diodorus Siculus. And Malachi gives the same reason, Mal. 2. 7. he was the Substitute to him upon Mount Sinai, and gave the Law also, only without the thunder. Our Governors succeed into the Name, they are the Churches Angels; and when we hear the word from them, we have it as it were from Heaven again, and we receive our Law too 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , by the disposition of Angels. Indeed the Case now is not like Saint Paul's, the Gospel then was to be first revealed to all the World, and by continual inculcating secured against the depravations which all the malice of the Devil and the World sought to infuse, and the unskillfulness of infant Christians did make them apt to entetrain: But now we are all confirmed Christians: Yet truly the time is now such as did give occasion for Saint Paul's charge to Timothy, 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2, 3. a time wherein they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers. He therefore that is in Timothy's place must heap up Reproofs and Exhortations; or he must heap good sound dispensers of them: Such as will feed the Lambs with sincere milk, not chaf'd and heated with commotion and busy restless Faction; not embitter'd with overflowings of a too-full gall; not sour'd with eager sharpnesses of a malicious or a dissatisfied mind; not empoisoned with the foul tinctures of a scandalous life, nor the Corrosive infusions of Schismatical and turbulent opinions. He that caters thus for his flock, and provides such as by doctrine and by practice do instruct them to live quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty; He, like the Angel on Mount Sinai, gives the Law to a Nation together, preaches to his whole Diocese at once, Continually.

The second work was praying for, and blessing them: This does begin, and close every Epistle; that he asserts of himself constantly, and 'tis well known the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , gifts of those times inspired for this Work. Now thus our Angels also are Angels of Incense, the High Priests Office in especial: Those that did daily Minister performd a service of Incense too, that did accompany the prayers of the people, and sent them up in perfume; but the High Priests Incense was part of the Expiation, and was the Cloud that covered the transgressions of the people when he came with them all about him before the Mercy-seat. And they who shall consider that the prayer of Moses (Now Moses and Aaron were among the Priests, Psal. 99. 6. and He was the chief Priest) did withhold the Arm of God when it was stretched forth in fury to destroy, and did commit a violence upon the Lord, such as he could not grapple with, but seems to deprecate, and fain avoid, and says, Let me alone, that I may destroy them, Exod. 32. 10. If thou wilt permit me, my fury shall prevail upon them, saith the Arabic, but if thou pray it cannot; therefore let go thy prayer, saith the Chaldee. and let me alone. And they who shall consider also that his prayer did maintain a breach against the Lord, when he had made one, and was coming to enter in a storm of indignation, then this made head against him, and repulsit him, Psal. 106. 23. They that consider these effects, will certainly desire the Prayers and Benedictions of those God's chiefest Officers of blessing, those that are consecrated to bless in the Name of the Lord; and will have them in love for his works sake.

Their Third work is Government, which may be some do look upon as privilege and not as work; the expectation and delight of their ambitions, and not the fear and burden of their shoulders. But ambition may as rationally fly at Miracles as Government, and as hopefully gape after diversity of Tongues, as at presiding in the Church, the powers of each did come alike from Heaven, and were the mere gifts of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 12. 18. It was so in the Law; when God went to divide part of Moses burden of Government amongst the Lxx, he came down and took off the Spirit that was upon him, and gave it to the Lxx, Num. 11. 25. A work this that may have reason to supersede much of that which I first mentioned: For notwithstanding all Saint Paul's Assistances of Spirit, he does reckon that care that came upon him daily from the Churches amongst his persecutions, and it sums up his Catalogue of sufferings, 2 Cor. 11. Such various Necessities there are by which Government is distracted, and knows not how to temper itself to them. For sometimes it must condescend: Paul notwithstanding Apostolical decrees made in full Council that abrogated Circumcision, (as the Holy Ghost had declared it void before,) yet is fain to comport so far with the violent humors of a party as to Circumcise Timothy, at the very same time when he delivered those decrees to the Churches to keep, Act. 16. 3, 4. yet afterwards when Circumcision was looked on as Engagement to the whole Law, and to grant them that one thing, was but to teach them to ask more, and to be able to deny them nothing; then he suffers not Titus to be Circumcised, nor gave place to them by submission, no not for an hour, Gal. 2. 3, 5. Thus the Spirit of Government is sometimes a Spirit of meekness, does it work by soft yieldings, and breaks the Adamant with Cushions which Anvils would not do: The Ocean with daily billows and tides, helped on with storms of violence, and hurried by tempests of roaring fury, assaults a rock for many Ages; and yet makes not the least impression on it, but is beat back, and made retire in empty some, in insignificant passion: when a few single drops that distil gently down upon a rock though of Marble, or a small trickle of water that only wets and glides over the stone, insinuate themselves into it, and soften it so as to steal themselves a passage through it. and yet Government hath a rod too, which like Moses's can break the rock, and fetch a stream out of the heart of quarre; and which must be used also: The Holy Spirit himself breathed tempest when he came, blew in a mighty boisterous Wind: nor does he always whisper soft things, he came down first in a sound from heaven, and spoke thunder; nor did it want lightning, the tongue was double flame. Of some we know we must have a Compassion, but others must be saved with terror, Jude 22. 23. which drives me on to the last piece of their work.

The Censures of the Church, the burden of the Keys; which (passing by the private use of them in voluntary penitences, and discipline upon the sick) as they signify public exclusion out of the Church for scandalous Enormities, and re-admission into it upon repentance, have been sufficiently evinced to belong to the Governors of the Church. The Exercise of these is so much their work that Saint Paul calls them the Weapons of their spiritual Warfare, by which they do cast down imagination and every high things that exalteth itself against the Knowledge of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. A blessed victory even for the Conquered; and these the only Weapons to achieve it with. If those who sin scandalously, and will not hear the admonitions of the Church, were cast out of the Church; if not Religion, Reputation would restrain them somewhat: Not to be thought fit Company for Christians would surely make them proud against their Vices. Shame, the designed Effect of these Censures, hath great pungencies, the fear of it does goad men into actions of the greatest hazard, and the most unacceptable; such as have nothing lovely in them, but are wholly distasteful. There is a Sin whose face is bloody dismal, and yet because tis countenanc'd by the Roysting Ruffian part of the World, men will defy Reason and Conscience, Man's and God's Law, venture the ruin of all that is beloved and dear to them in this World, and assault death, and charge and take Hell by violence; rather than be ashamed before those valiant sinners, Satan's Hectors: and, they must ever come into such Company if they do not go boldly on upon the sin, is of more force with them than all the indearments of this World, than all their fear of God, and Death, and that which follows. Now if Religion could but get such Countenance by the Censures of the Church; and every open sinner had this certain fear, I should be turned out of all Christian company, shall be avoided as unfit for Conversation; would it not have in some degree the like effect? and if the motive beas much exactly, would not men be chaste or sober or obedient for that very reason for which they will now be killed and be damned? Without all question Saint Peter's Censure on the intemperate, 1 Cor. 5. must needs be reformation to him: 'Tis such a sentence to the drunkard, not to company with him, whose Vice is nothing but the sauce of Company; and who does sin against his Body and against his faculties and against his Conscience, is sick, and is a Sott, and goes to ▪ Hell merely for Societies sake. Now the infliction of these Censures is so much the work to which Church-governors are called by the Holy Ghost, that they are equally called by him to it and to Himself; both are alike bestowed upon them: Receive the Holy Ghost, whose sins ye retain they are retained, John 20. 22. And in the first derivations of this office, it was performed with severities, such as this Age I doubt will not believe, and when they had no temporal sword to be auxiliary to these Spiritual weapons.

And now to make reflections on this is not for me to undertake, in such a state of the Church as ours is; wherein the very faults of some do give them an Indemnity, who having drawn themselves out of the Church, from under its authority, are also got out of the power of its Censures: So Children that do run away from their Fathers house, they do escape the Rod; but they do not consider that withal they run away from the inheritance: And many times in those that do not do so, but stay within the family; long intermission of the Rod, and indulged license makes them too big and heady to be brought under discipline. And is it not so with us? Among many of those that stay within the Church, (I know not whether I do well to say so, when of these I mean there is little other Evidence of their doing so but this, that they will swear and drink of the Churches side; blessed Sons of a demolished Church, who think to raise their Mother a Temple by throwing stones at her;) by reason of the late overthrow of Government and discipline, and the consequent licences, Vice hath been so nursed up, not only by an universal, barefac'd, uncorrected practice; but by principles of liberty, that can dispute down all Ecclesiastical restraints, and have set up the Religion of License: that now sin is grown so outrageous, as to be too strong for discipline; nay rather than it should be set up, 'tis to be feared they would endeavor to reverse all in the Church, and enterprise as much in their vices quarrel, as others have done for mistaken Religion. And indeed to what purpose were the Censures, whose first and medicinal effect is shame, amongst men, where 'tis in very many instances the only shameful thing not to be vicious; where men stand candidates for the reputation of glorious sinners, take to themselves sins they have not committed, that are not theirs, and usurp Vice; sins and damnations hypocrites? What work is here for discipline? But this state wants not precedents; the censures of the Church were not only lay'd aside in the Vastations of the Arian heresy and persecution; when the weapons of the Churches warfare were too weak to make defense against all their cruelties and impieties: and before that in Diocletian's days against the Lapsi: But we find also that Saint Paul is forced to break out only in a passionate wish, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, I would they were even cut off that trouble you (cut off by excommunication he means) Gal. 5. 12. When he saw the ill humors were too spreading, and too tough also; Sedition and Sehisme, wide and obstinate; so that neither his authority could reach, nor his methods cure, but were more likely to exasperate them: Then he does excommunicate them only in desire▪ And again, 2 Cor. 10. 6. And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience when your obedience is fulfilled. It becomes therefore everyone that hath good Will for Zion, to labor to fulfill his own obedience, that so the Church may be empower'd to use Christ's Method for reforming of the rest. And that that will not do so, must know they shall not only answer for their sins, but for refusing to be saved from them, that they resist all medicine, as men resolved that nothing shall be done towards their Cure, as men that rather choose to perish, and prefer destruction. And for the seasons and degrees of putting this work into Execution, Wisdom must be implor'd from that Spirit of Wisdom that calls unto this work: The last Part; Whereunto I have called them.

The Nature of the calling of the Holy Ghost is a Subject that would bear a full discourse. But waving those pretensions which Necessity, and inward incitation do make to be the Calls of the Holy Ghost I shall positively set down that the call of God and of the Holy Ghost; to any Work or Office, (for I enquire not of his calling, to a privilege or state of favor;) is his giving abilities and gifts qualifying for that Work or Office: The call immediate when the gifts were so, but mediate and ordinary, when the abilities are given in his blessing on our ordinary labors. 'Tis so in every sort of things, Exod. 31. 2. See I have called Bezaleel, and I have filled him with the Spirit of God in Wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of Workmanship, to devise cunning works, and to work in all manner of Workmanship; and behold I have given him Aholiab, and in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put Wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee: And he repeats the same again, Chap. 35. 30. adding that he hath put in his heart that he may teach both he and Aholiab; so that giving this skill to work and teach is named God's calling. So in another case, the Lord does say of Cyrus, I have called him, Isaiah▪ 48. 15. which he explains in the 49. I have holden him by my right hand to subdue Nations before him, to loose the loins of Kings, I have girded him, So when Isaiah saith, the Lord hath called me from the Womb, or rather says that of our Savior, Isa. 49. 1. he tells you how, ver. 5. he formed me and prepared me from the Womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob to him. And throughout the New Testament, as his Call to a privilege is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, his grace, in allowing such a state of favor; so his calls to a Work are his 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, his gifts enabling for it.

The Gifts of these Apostles by which they were enabled for their Office, and which made up their call, are set down: Those of Barnabas in the fore-cited 11 Act. He was a good man, full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost; and Paul's call was a little Extraordinary. If we look into times, we shall find reason to believe those Revelations in 2 Cor. 12. were given to Paul a little before this consecration of him in the Text. That Epistle was writ, saith Baronius, in the second year of Nero, and this separation was in the second of Claudius, as may be gathered also in some measure from the famine mentioned in the 28th verse of the 11th chap. betwixt these two were fourteen years: now saith Saint Paul when he wrote that, he had his revelation somewhat above 14. years before; a little therefore before this solemnity. Here was a call indeed, called up to the third heaven to receive instructions for his Office, and for ought he did know, called out of his own body too, that he might be the fitter for it; whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell, God knows, v. 2. and that again, v. 3. They whom God's Spirit qualifies for Consecration to separate to these diviner Offices may be stilled Angels well, when they are called from all regards or notices of anybody that belongs to them; their gifts and graces set them above the consideration of flesh: In the entertainment of these qualifications the Soul is swallowed up so, that it cannot take cognizance whether it have a body of its own, and is not sensible of that deer partner of itself, it is so only sensible of this Employment. 'Tis not for an Apostle (or for his Successor) to think of things below with much complacency: When these have all their uses, all their glories on, they but make pomp to dress the body; which an Apostle does not design for, nor knows whether he be concerned at all in. He becomes something without a body, and above the Earth, who for a preparative must be taken up to Paradise, and called from all commerce and all intelligence with his own body. Saint Paul was called from Heaven to preach the Gospel; but he was called to Heaven to qualify him for this higher separation, to an Apostle and Church-Governor.

And now you see your calling, Holy Fathers: And to pass by such obvious unconcerning observations as at first sight follow, that those who are not qualified are not called; I shall only take notice hence of the counter-part of this call, the charge God takes upon him, when he calls to this charge; and that is, he owns and will protect whom himself calls. 'Twas that he promised to the Founder and God of your Order; I the Lord have called thee, and I will hold thine hand, and I will keep thee, Isai. 42. 6. And when he said of Cyrus, I have called him, he said also, be shall make his way prosperous, Isai. 48. 15. And so he shall be the way what it will; for thus he said to Jacob, I have called thee, when thou goest through the Water I am with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee, Isai. 43. 1, 2. There was Experience of all this in one of the chief Princes of your Order; when the Apostles were scarce safe within their Ship, they were so tossed with waves and fears, yet if our Lord will call him, Peter is confident he shall be safe even in the Sea; Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the Water, saith he; and the Lord did but call him, and he went down and walked on the water safely: As if the swelling billows did only lift themselves to meet his steps, and raise him up from sinking. And when his own doubts, which alone could, were near drowning him, and he but called the Lord; immediately he stretched out his hand and caught him: He answers his call, if we answer ours; if we obey when he says come, then will he come and save when we call to him. And so Peter received no hurt, but a rebuke; O thou of little faith, why didst thou doubt? couldst thou imagine I would not sustain thee in the doing what I bid thee do? In answering my call? But why seek we experience of so old a date? There is a more encouraging miracle in these late calls themselves. Had God sustain'd the Order in its Offices and dignities amidst those waves that rack'd the Church of late, it had been prodigy of undeserved Compassion to our Nation: But whenas all was sunk, to bid the Sea give up what it had swallowed and consumed; this is more than to catch a sinking Peter, or to save a falling Church. The work of Resurrection is emphatically called the working of God's mighty power, and does out-sound that of his ordinary conservation. And truly 'twas almost as easy to imagination, how the scattered Atoms of men's dust should order themselves, and reunite, and close into one flesh; as that the parcels of our Discipline and Service that were lost in such a wild confusion, and the Offices buried in the rubbish of the demolisht Churches, should rise again in so much order and beauty. Stantia non poterant tect a probare Deum. This calling of the Spirit is like that when the Spirit moved upon the face of the abyss; and called all things out of their no-seeds there; or like the call of the last Trump. Thus by the miraculous mercies of these calls God hath provided for our hopes, and warranted our faith of his protections! yet he hath also sent us more security, hath given us a Constantine, if his own be not a greater Name, and more deserving of the Church; for which (it is well known to some) he did contrive and order, when he could neither plot nor hope for his own Kingdom; and did with passion labor a succession in your Order, when he did not know how to lay designs for the Succession of himself or any of his Fathers house to his own Crown and Dignity.

Nor is the secular arm all your security: God himself hath set yet more guards about his consecrated ones, he hath severe things for the violaters of them: Moses, the meekest man upon the Earth, that in his life was never angry, but once at the rebellious; seems very passionate in calling Vengeance on those that stir against these holy Offices. Smite through the loins of all that rise against them, and of them that hate them, that they rise not again: The loins (we know) are the nest of posterity; so that, strike through the loins, is, stab the succession, destroy at once all the posterity of them that would cut off this Tribe, and hinder its Succession. Nor was this Legal Spirit; Gospel is as severe. Those in Saint Jude that despise these Governors, that do as Corah and his Complices did, (who gathered themselves against Moses and Aaron, and said, You take too much upon you, ye Sons of Levi, since all the Congregation is holy, everyone of them, and the Lord is among them, wherefore then lift you up yourselves above the Congregation of the Lord? words these that we are well acquainted with, and which it seems St. Jude looks on as sins under the Gospel:) these perish in the gainsaying of Core; whom God would not prepare for punishment by death, but he and his accomplices went quick into it: He would not let them stay to die, but the Lord made a new thing, to show his detestation of this sin, and the Earth swallowed it in the Commission, and all that were alli'd and appertain'd to them that had an hand in it. And truly they may well expect strange recompenses, who do attempt so strange a Sacrilege, as to pull stars out of Christ's own right hand: From whence, we have his word, that no man shall be able to pluck any; but if they shine thence, on their Orbs below, and convert many to righteousness, their light shall blaze out into glory, and they shall ever dwell at his right hand: To which right hand He that brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd and Bishop of the Sheep, and set him there: He also bring you our Pastors, and us your flock with you; and set us with his sheep on his right hand. To whom with the same Jesus and the Holy Ghost, be ascribed all blessing, honor, glory, and power, from henceforth forever. Amen.

A SERMON PREACHED AT HAMPTON-COURT ON The Twenty Ninth of May 1662. Being the Anniversary of His Sacred Majesty's Most happy Return.

BY RICHARD ALLESTRY D. D. and Chaplain to His MAJESTY.

TO THE Right Honorable EDWARD Earl of CLARENDEN, Lord high Chancellor of England, and Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

My LORD,

TO vouch your Lordships commands for the publishing this Discourse, I might reasonably think, would be to libel your judgment; and the prefixing your Name to it, and this mean address, would look rather like revenge than homage or obedience: If I did not know that low performances are due to the transcendency of such a subject as I then discoursed upon, and such a Patron as I now Dedicate to: So I lie prostrate under my great Arguments, here insufficiency is Art and Rhetoric. And the truth is, My Lord, it was not this which made me so solicitous to avoid your injunctions, but apprehensions of the unusefulness of the Discourse itself.

When God's most signal methods of all sorts do not seem to have wrought much conviction; when neither our own dismal guilts, nor miseries, nor most express miracles of deliverance have made us sensible, but after the equally stupendous Thirtieth of January and Twenty Ninth of May, and the black time that interven'd; we are still the same perverse intractable people; when luxury is the retribution made for plenty, license for liberty, and Atheism for Religion, whilst miracles of mercy are acknowledged only by prodigies of ingrateful disobedience: And on the other side, when factious humors swell against all Laws, as they would either overflow those mounds, or make them yield and give way to them; when Declarations and Decrees, which infallible when they came only from a party of a part of a Parliament, are neither of force nor esteem when they have all solemnity and obligation that just and full authority can give; alas, what hopes of doing anything can a weak Harangue entertain? But, My Lord, since you are pleased to Command, I give up both it and my understanding to Your Lordship, and the weaker the Discourse is, so much the more pregnant testimony is it of the obsequiousness of.

My Lord,

Your Lordships most devoted and most humble Servant, RICH. ALLESTRY.

SERMON XVII. AT HAMPTON-COURT May 29. 1662.

HOSEA III. 5.

Afterward shall the Children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their King, and shall fear the Lord and his goodness.

HE has said in the words before, that the Children of Israel shall abide many days without a King and without a Prince, without a Sacrifice and without an Image or Altar, and without an Ephod and without Teraphim. Now when they shall have been for many years in such a state of helpless desolation, shall have no King under whose shadow they, their Laws and Rights, might hope for shelter; no Prince to guard them from the sad calamities of wild confusion or usurping violence; shall have no exercises of Religion to allay and soften those calamities, and give them comfort in the bearing of them; no Altar to lay hold on for security against them, or to stretch out their hands towards, for deprecation of them; no nor a God to put an end to this sad state; nor any means of direction what to do under it, no Ephod to ask Counsel at; nor yet the pageantry, the fallacy of these, no Teraphim for Ephods, nor Image for a God; the same destruction having seized these and their worshippers, the people and their Idols going into Captivity together, and the only true God having forsaken them: Now when the Prophet had denounced this state of Woe, which was to dwell with them so long as that their very expectations of deliverance should be dying, having continued threescore years and ten, a longer and more wearisome age of patience than life, he then proceeds to sweeten all by telling them of a return, and what things they shall do in it; and they are three.

First, Seek the Lord their God, apply themselves to his Worship and Obedience, and cleave to him; for so the word is rendered 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Lev. 19. 23. and Jeremy repeating this c. 30. 9. words it, shall serve the Lord their God, and David their King.

Which is the second thing they were to do. As the Ecclesiastical state was to be settled, so the secular too upon its just foundations, Religion and Loyalty both running in their ancient current.

Thirdly, They shall fear the Lord and his goodness▪ Not only tremble before him, who is the Lord, that did exert his power in their destruction; but shall much more revere his goodness, that did flow out in such plentiful miraculous expresses of deliverance.

Now these being not only prophecy what in that juncture they would do, nor only duties what they were to do, but also counsels and directions immediately from God what they were best to do, the only prudent and safe course according to the policies of heaven; the direct view of these particulars in reference to that state of theirs is not an unconcerning prospect at this season, which is the Anniversary of an equal return; and therefore I shall lay them so before you, and the reflection on them in our practice shall make the application.

1. They shall seek the Lord their God is my first part, and the Lord's prime direction for the repairing of a broken Nation. Neither indeed can any other course be taken; for 'till we have found him, while he does hide his face, nothing but darkness dwells upon the land; or if any light do break out, 'tis but the kindlings of his anger: So he expresses, Deut. 31. 17. Th•• people will forsake me and break my Covenant, then my anger shall be kindled against them, and I will forsake them, and hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them, so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us because our God is not amongst us? This absence is only another word for desolation: Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, saith God by Jeremy, c. 6. 8. lest my soul depart from thee, and I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited: As if without him there were nothing else but solitude in Cities and in Courts, and all were desert where he does not dwell. Yea there is something beyond desolation, Hos. 9. 11, 12. As for Ephraim, their glory shall flee away like a bird from the birth and from the womb, and from the Conception: though they bring up their Children, yet I will bereave them that there shall not be a man, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 yea woe also to them when I depart from them. And it must needs be so; for let our state be never so calamitous, if God be not departed, there is comfort in it, and a deliverer at hand: If we are in the place of Dragons, his presence will make heaven there; and although we be covered with the shadow of death, if the light of his Countenance break in, we are in glory; and the brightness of that will soon damp and shine out the fiery Trial. But if the Lord depart, then there is no redemption possible; God hath forsaken him, persecute him and take him, for there is none to deliver him, Psal. 71. 11. But if there were deliverance some other way, yet the want of God's presence is an evil, such as nothing in the whole world can make good: The presence of an Angel in his stead does not. When the Lord said to Israel, I will not go up in the midst of thee, but I will send an Angel with thee, and drive out the Amorite, the Hittite, &c. yet when the people heard these evil tidings, they mourn'd, and man did put on his Ornaments, Exod. 33. 4. Nay more, I shall not speak a contradiction if I shall say, that the most intimate presence of the Godhead does not supply God's absence; and such a small withdrawing of himself as may consist with being united hypostatically, was too much for him to bear, who was Immanuel when he complained God was not with him: I mean our Savior on the Cross. He, who although he did beseech against his cup with fervencies that did breath out in heats of bloody sweat, with agonies of prayer, yet when he fell down under it, did cheerfully submit to it, saying, Not my will, but thy will be done; yet when God hides himself, he does expostulate with him, crying out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? His God could no more forsake him, than himself could be not himself: And yet the apprehension of that which could not be was even insufferable to him, to whom nothing could be insufferable.

He seems to feel a very contradiction while he but seems to feel the want of the Lord's presence.

Such is the sad importance of God's not being with us; and this same instant tells us what drives him away. 'Twas sin that he withdrew from them: Christ did but take on him our guilt, and upon that the Lord forsook him: God could no more endure to behold wickedness in him, than the Sun could to see God suffer; Iniquity eclipsed them both, and sin did separate betwixt him and himself, and made that person who was God cry out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And it will do the same betwixt God and a people. Isaiah. 59. 1, 2. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; nor his ear heavy that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear. His face is clothed with light, we know; but when Wickedness over-spreads a people, those deeds of darkness put out the light of his Countenance. His hand although it be not shortened, yet it contracts and shuts itself, not only to grasp and withhold his mercies from them, but to smite: Iniquity builds such a wall of separation as does shut out omnipresence, and makes him who is everywhere, not be with such a people; not be in hearing of their needs; for when their sins do cry, no prayers can be hearkened to; he will not hear you, saith the Prophet. And that gives us the very 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 of the Lord's departure from a people, and the manner of it.

He is taking away his peace and mercies from a Nation when he will hear no prayers for it; and he declares that he will hear no prayers when he withdraws once from his house of prayer, and makes his Offices to cease. The place appointed for these Offices, the Sanctuary, he calls, we know the Tabernacle of meeting, that is, where he would meet his votaries, and hear and bless them; calls it his house; his dwelling place, his Court, presence, and his throne: And if so, when he is not to be found in these, when he no longer dwells nor meets in them, we may be sure that he hath left the land. The Psalmist, when he does complain men had done evil in the Sanctuary, the adversaries roared in the midst of the Congregations, and set up their banners there for trophies; they broke down all the carved work thereof with axes and hammers, and had defiled the dwelling places of God's name even to the ground, and burnt up all the houses of God in the land; he does suppose that God was then departed when they had left him no abiding place: And therefore cries out, O God wherefore art thou absent from us so long? Remember Zion where thou hast dwelt. But 'tis not only upon these Analogies I build; this method of departure we shall find exactly in Ezekiel's Vision of that case to which my Text refers: It begins ch. 9. 3. And the glory of the God of Israel, (i. e. the shining cloud, the token of his presence in the Sanctuary,) went up from the Cherub whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house, as going out; and then verse. 8. he does refuse to be entreated for the land: After that ch. 10. 18. the glory went from off the threshold to the midst of the City; and ch. 11. 23. it went from thence to the mountain without the City, and so away: And then nothing but desolation dwelt upon the land, until the Counsel of my Text was followed, and they did seek the Lord their God: For then the glory did return into the Sanctuary just as it went away, as you may find it chap. 43.

And having seen when and how God forsakes a people, and for what, that does direct us how to seek him, and it is thus, When men forsake those paths in which they did not only err and go astray, but did walk contrary to God, so that they did forsake each other; and do return, walk in his ways, the ways of Commandments, and return also to his Church, and seek him in his house, fall low before his footstool, beg of him to meet in his tabernacle, renew his worship, and all invitations of him to return into his dwelling-place. For sure as it is in vain to seek him but in his own ways, nor can we hope to meet him but in his Tabernacle of meeting; so also Scripture calls both these to seek the Lord, and promises to both the finding him. To the first, Deut. 4. 29, 30. If from thy tribulation thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient to his voice. And the second, Jer. 29. 12. speaking of this sad state to which my Text relates, then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me; and I will hearken unto you, and I will be found of you, saith the Lord, and I will turn away your Captivity. I could produce you instances of Asa making all his people swear to seek the Lord: But because my Text speaks of David, he shall be the great explication, as he was the practice of this duty in both senses. In the former, 119. Psal. I have sought thy Commandments above Gold or precious stone; more than that which does make and does adorn my Crown, than that which furnishes all the necessities and all the pomps of Royalty. And for the other, Psal. 63. 1, 2. O God, thou art my God, early will I seek thee: My soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land where no water is: To see thy power and thy glory, as I have seen the in the Sanctuary. His very words do seem to labor too, and he does seek expressions to tell us how he seeks. The hot fits of a thirsty palate that call so oft and so impetuously are in his soul; it hath a pious fever, which cannot be allay'd but by pouring out of his soul to God in the Temple, by breathing out its heats in his devotion Offices. Nay, more, he longs, hath that I know not whether appetite, or passion, which is not to be understood, but only suffered; to which all the unreasonable violences which passion can be heated into, all the defaillances nature can be oppressed into, are natural; it is the bodies Extasie. Now this he had towards the worship of the Sanctuary; his very flesh found rapture in those exercises, and when he was in a barren and dry land, was driven from the plenties of a Court, and from the glories of a throne into a desert solitude, he found no other wants but of God's house; did mind, pant, and long after nothing else, did neither thirst for his necessities, nor long for his own Crown, but for the Tabernacle only. And besides the Religion of this, he had reason of State too to be thus affected; this was the best means to engage his Subjects to him and secure his Throne. He knew, if by establishing God's worship, and by going with the multitude, as he did use, to the exercises of it; if by Royal Example and encouragements of virtue, and by discountenancing and chastising impiety, by doing as he did profess to do, Psal. 101. (that Directory for a Court) he could people his land with holy living, and his Temple with holy Worship; he knew he should then have good Subjects, Loyal to him and at peace with themselves. I they will seek their God, then they will seek their King. The Lord saw this dependence, and therefore counseled this course should be taken. The Master of our Politicks discerned it too, and therefore does advise that the first and chiefest public cares should be about things of Religion, that and the same profession of it being 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , the cement of Communities, and the very foundation of all legislative, and indeed all power in the Magistrate: And in the people 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , 'tis a most efficacious philtre, a charm, a Gordian knot of kindness. And as a Jew observed of their own Nation, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , To have one and the same opinions of God, and not to differ in their rites from one another, breeds the best harmony in men's affections. When on the other side no obligations, though the most signal and divine, will hold them in obedience and peace, if their ambitions or interests look another way: And if at any time present advantage, or an expectation, or some passion do incline them to seek David their King; yet the appearance of a change of Interest, that expectation defeated, or a cross animosity will burst those bonds, unless Religion and Communion in Worship help to twist them. David had had experience of this.

Abner knew of God's Oath to David that after Saul he should be King over all Israel; but he was otherwise concerned, and therefore he made Ishbosheth King, maintained a long and sore War even against what he knew God was engaged to bring about, and made himself strong for the house of Saul, 2 Sam. 2, 3, ch. But when a quarrel happened betwixt Ishbosheth and him, then, So do God to Abner and more also, except as the Lord hath sworn to David, even so I do to him, to set up the throne of David over Israel and over Judah. And he sent Messengers to him saying, Whose is the land? Make but thy league with me, c. 3. 9, 10, 11, 12. Do but look forward, and you find when Abner was cut off, and Ishbosheth was slain, and Israel had no leader, then they came to David, saying, behold we are thy bone and thy flesh, and the Lord said to thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, c. 5. 1, 2. They knew all that before, yet would not let him do it, 'till they had no other leader. Nay, when they had done that, by Absalom's insinuations (who in a way of treacherous pity did instill dislikes against the Government, and did remonstrate in good wishes, as some men do in prayers, c. 15. 3, 4.) they were all drawn into Rebellion against this David, and made him fly out of the land, and became Subjects to that Absalom. When he was dead indeed they speak of bringing back the King, c. 19. 10. and when his own Judah had done it, quarrel'd, ver. 43. because that their advice was not first had: And though Judah had nothing but their service, for, have we eaten at all of the Kings cost, or hath he given us any gift? say they, v. 42. yet Israel in angry, because he came not back upon their score, for they forsooth have ten parts in him, v. 43. and yet the next day every man of Israel went after him that said, we have no part in David, Sheba a man of Belial, ch. 20. 1. Thus no allegiance, no tie however sacred and divine will hold them who follow not upon God's score. Nay at the last, because that Reoboam would not ease the Taxes, all Israel cry out, What portion have we in David? see to thine own house, David. And to make this secession perpetual (which all the former did not prove) Jeroboam did use no other policy, but to change the Worship and the Priests: He knew he should divide their hearts and Nations forever, when he had altered once the Service and the Officers; and if he could but keep them from seeking God at Jerusalem, he was secure they would not seek David their King. And so it proved. Now the Lord to prevent divisions had provided so far for Uniformity in his Worship, that he required a single Unity; and that it might be but in one manner, he let it be but in one place.

And truly, when men once depart from Uniformity, what measures can they set themselves of changing? What shall confine or put shores to them? what Principle can they proceed upon which shall engage them to stay anywhere? And why may not divisions be as infinite as men's fancies? And though, when those are but in circumstantial things, those who are strong, and know them to be such, are no otherwise concerned to contend for them than on Authorities behalf, (to which every change is a Convulsion fit.) and on the account of decency, and of compliance with the universal Church: yet when others do dogmatize, and put conscience in the not doing them, and stand at such a distance from them as to choose Schism, Disobedience, and Sedition rather, and therefore must needs look upon damnation in them; these differences make as great a gulf and chasm as that which does divide Dives from Abraham's bosom. It is one God, one Faith, one Worship makes hearts one. Hands lifted up together in the Temple they will join and clasp: And so Religion does fulfil its name à religando, binds Prince and Subjects all together; and they who thus do seek the Lord their God, will also seek David their King, God's next direction, and my second part.

2. And here three things offer themselves, a King, their King, and David their King.

I am not here to read a Lecture of State-policy upon a vie of Governments; why seek a King, not any other sort of Government; and why their King, one that already was so by the right of Succession, not whom addresses or election should make so. And though I think, 'twere easy to demonstrate only Monarchy had ever a divine or natural original, and that elective Monarchy is most unsafe and burthensome, full of dangerous and uneasy consequences; and this so much to sight, that choice for the most part bounds itself, proves but a ceremony of Succession: yet this I need not do, for I am dealing with the Jews, who had God's judgment in the case, and his appointment too; and to me that is argument enough. And when God hath declared, for the transgressions of a land many are the Princes thereof; many at once, as in a common-wealth, or many several families successively, (for so God reckons also one or many; 'tis still, we see, David their King, while 'tis in David's line, and so the King does truly never die, while his race lives.) If either of these many be God's punishment, for the sins of a land; I will not say that they who love the many Princes love the transgressions which God plagues so; but I will say, they who do choose that which God call his plague, that quarrel for his vengeance, and with great strife and hazard take his indignation by force, I can but pity them in their own opinions and enjoyments: But, O my soul, enter not thou into their counsels.

As for seeking their King, I shall content myself with that which Calvin says upon the words; Nam aliter vere & ex animo Deum quaerere non potuit, quin se etiam subjiceret legitimo imperio cui subjectus erat: For they could not otherwise truly and with all their heart seek God, except they did subject themselves to his Government to whom they did of right belong as Subjects. And I shall add that they who do forsake their King, will soon forsake their God. The Rabbin's say it more severely of Israel that they at once rejected three things, the Kingdom of the house of David, and the Kingdom of Heaven, and the Sanctuary. And truly, if we do consult that State from the beginning, we shall find that when they were without their King, they always were without their God.

Moses was the first King in Jeshurun, and he was only gone into the Mount for forty days, and they set up a Golden Calf; they make themselves a God if they want him whom the Lord makes so, as he does the Magistrate: If they have not a Prince, that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, living Image of God, then they must have an Idol. When Moses his next successor was dead, we read that the man Micah had an house of God's, and consecrated one of his Sons to be his Priest: And truly he might make his Priest who made his Deities. And the account of this is given, in those days there was no King in Israel, Jud. 17. 5, 6. The very same is said, ch. 18. 1. to preface the Idolatri of the Tribe of Dan▪ There was no heir of restraint, as it is worded ver. 7. It seems, to curb impiety is the Princes Inheritance, which 'till it be suppressed, he hath not what he is heir to. But Vice will know no Boundaries if there be no King, whose Sword is the only mound and fence against it: for if we read on there, 19, 20, 21. ch. we shall find those dismal Tragedies of Lust and War, the one of which did sin to death the Levites wife; the other, besides 40000. slain of them who had a righteous cause, and whom God did bid fight, destroyed also a Tribe in Israel: These all sprang from the same occasion, for so the story closes it, In those days there was no king in Israel, ch. 21. 25.

Just upon this; when God in their necessities did raise them Judges, that is, Kings, read all their story, you will find to almost every several Judge there did succeed a several Idolatri: God still complaining, the Children of Israel did evil again after the death of such an one, 'till he raised them another. Those 450. years being divided all betwixt their Princes and their Idols. After them Jeroboam, he that made the great secession of that people from their Prince, hath got no other Character from God but this, the Man that did make Israel to sin, at once against God and against their King. Yea upon this account they are reckoned by God to sin after both their Idolatri and State were ended, when their calves and their Kingdom were destroyed. Ezek. 4. 4, 5. the Lord does bid the Prophet lie on his left side 390 days, to bear the iniquity of Israel according to the number of the years of their iniquity. But this was more then the years of their State, which were only 255, 390 years indeed there were betwixt the falling off of the Ten Tribes, and the destruction of Jerusalem by the King of Babel; but those ten Tribes were gone, their Kingdom perfectly destroyed above 130 years before: But their iniquity was not, it seems, that does outlive their State, so long as that God's Temple, that King's house did stand from which they did divide. As if Seditious men and schismatics sin longer then they are, even while those are whom they do sin against in separating from.

'Tis true, there was an Ahaz and Manasseh in the house of David, but Hezekiah and Josiah did succeed. Mischief did not appear entailed on Monarchy, as 'tis upon rebellion and having no King. It does appear their Kings were guards also to God and his Religion, the great defenders of his faith and worship. God and the Prince for the most part stood and fell together: Therefore St. Paul did afterwards advise to pray for Kings, that we might live in godliness and honesty; and still they were the same who sought the Lord their God, and David their King.

But why David their King? For could his Kingdom disappear and be to seek; of whom the Lord had said, I have sworn once by my Holiness, I will not fail David? Psal. 89. And his Throne therefore was as sure as God is holy. But yet the Lord had said to the people of Israel, If ye do wickedly, ye shall be destroyed both you and your King. There are other sins besides Rebellion and Treason that murder Kings and Governments. Those that support their Ills by their dependencies, and use great shadows for a shelter to rapacity, oppression, or licences, or any crying wickedness; those prove Traitors to Majesty and themselves, strike at the root of that under which they took covert, fell that and crush themselves. National vices have all Treason in them, and every combination in such sins is a Conspiracy. If universal practice palliate them, we do not see their stain in may be, think them slight; but their complexion is purple: Common blood is not deep enough to color them, they die themselves in that that's sacred. Nay these do seem to spread contagion to God, as if they would not let the Lord be holy, nor suffer that to be which he swore by his holiness should be: For the Psalmist cries out, Where are thy old loving kindnesses which thou swarest unto David? But sure some of God's Oaths will stand; if not those of his kindness, those will by which he swears the ruin of such sinners, and God that is holy will be sanctified in judgment upon them. Yea, upon more then the offenders, for the guilty themselves are not a sacrifice equal to such piacular offences. Innocent Majesty must bleed for them too; If you do wickedly, you shall be destroyed both you and your King. Thus when God would remove Judah out of his sight, good Josiah must fall; and the same makes them be to seek David their King.

But how David their King, when 'twas Zerubbabel? For with Theodoret and others I conclude he must be meant the first literal importance of the words.

It was the custom of most Nations from some great eminent prince to name all the Succession, so at once to suggest his Excellencies to his followers, and to make his glory live. Now without doubt David was Heroe enough for this, and his valor alone sufficient to ground the like practice upon. And though we do not find that done, yet we do find his piety and his uprightness made the standard by which that of his Successors is meted. Of one 'tis said, he walked in the ways of David his Father, of another, he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, but not like unto David his Father. And because David went aside, and was upright with an Exceptionation, once therefore it is said, The Lord was with Jehoshaphat, because he walked in the first ways of his Father David. But besides this, his very name is given to two, Zerubbabel, and the Messiah; both which were to be the restorers of their people: The one from Sin and Hell, to reestablish the Kingdom of heaven itself; the other to deliver his people from Babel, and to repair a broken Nation and demolish'd Temple. And for this work God bids them seek David their King.

The ways from Babel to Jerusalem, from the Confusion of a people to a City that is at unity in itself, the City of God where he appears in perfect beauty, and where the throne of the house of David is, must be the first ways of David: In those he walked to Zion, and did invest his people in God's promises, the whole land of Canaan. In those Zerubbabel brought them back to that land and Zion. And in these our Messiah leads us to Mount Zion that is above, to the celestial Jerusalem; does build an universal Church and Heaven itself. And all that have the like to do must walk in those first ways, fulfil that part of David, and must Copy Christ. Such the repairers of great breaches must be: These are the ways to settle Thrones, the only ways in which we may find the goodness of the Lord; which to fear is the third direction, and my last part.

They shall fear the Lord and his goodness.

3. That Israel who came but now out of the furnace should fear the Lord whose wrath did kindle it, whose justice they had found such a consuming fire as to make the Temple itself a Sacrifice, and the whole Nation a burnt-offering, is reasonable to expect: But when his goodness had repair'd all this, to require them to fear that, does seem hard. That that goodness which when it is once apprehended does commit a rape upon our faculties, and being tasted melts the heart, and causes dissolution of soul through swoons of complacency, that this should be received with dread and trembling, is most strange. Indeed the Psalmist says, There is mercy with God that he may be feared; for where there not, we should grow desperate. But how to fear those mercies is not easy. 'Tis true, when God made his goodness pass fore Moses, shown him the glory of it, as he says, in those mo^o comfortable Attributes, the sight of which is beatifick Vision, Exod. 34. 6, &c. The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin; if that which follows there be part of it, and that will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children unto the third or fourth Generation; if this be one ray of the glory of goodness, if it dart out such beams, alas, 'tis as devouring as the lake of fire, his very goodness stabs whole successions at once, and the guilty may tremble at it for themselves and their posterity. But if those words do mean as we translate those very words, Jer. 46. 28. I will not leave thee altogether unpunish'd, yet will not utterly cut off, not make a full end of the guilty, when I visit Iniquities upon the Children, but will leave them a remnant still; then there is nothing dreadful in it, but those very visitations have kindness in them, and his rod comforts, and this issue of his goodness also is not terrible but lovely. To fear God's goodness therefore is to revere it, to entertain it with a pious astonishment, acknowledging themselves unworthy of the crumbs of it, especially not daring to provoke it by surfeiting, or by presuming on it, or by abusing it to serve ill ends, or any other than God sent it for, those of piety and obedience: Not to comply with which, is to defeat God's kindness, and the designs of it. If when they sought the Lord, he was found of them, and came to his dwelling place only to be forced thence again by their abominations; if when his goodness had restored all to them, they had David their King but to conspire against, an Altar only to pollute, and a Temple to separate from, as Manasseh the Priest, Sanballat's son-in-law, with his accomplices did do; this were both to affront and to renounce that goodness, which above all things they must dread the doing: For if this be offended too, ruin is irreversible; there is no other attribute in God a sinner can fly to with any hope. His Holiness cannot behold iniquity, his Justice speaks nothing but condemnation to guilt, his Power without kindness is but omnipotent destruction; but if we have his Goodness on our side, we have an Advocate in his own bosom that will bear up against the rest, for his mercy is over all his Attributes as well as Works: But if this also be exasperated, and kindness grow severe, there is no refuge in the Lord, no shadow of him to take Sanctuary under; for there is nothing to allay the anger of his Compassion and Bounty. This sure is the extremist terror, we are to dread his kindness more than his severity and wrath; we have an antidote, a buckler against those, but none against the other if it be provoked; and if the heats of love take fire and rise into indignation, 'tis unquenchable flame and everlasting burning. Therefore when God hath done all things that he can do or they can wish, then most of all they must fear the Lord and his goodness.

My Text and I have spoke all this while to the Jews: Nor do I know whether I need to address any other way, all this did so directly point at us. The glories of this day need not the foil of those calamities from which this day redeemed, to set them off; or you may read them in my Prophet here, and our own guilts will make too sad a Comment on his Text, who were more barbarous Assyrians to ourselves. We also were without a Prince and without Sacrifice, had neither King, nor Church, nor Offices, because we ourselves had destroyed them, and that we might not have them had engaged or covenanted against them; tied to our miseries so, that without perjury we could neither be without them, nor yet have them. As we had broke through all our sacred Oaths to invade and usurp calamity and guilt, so neither could we repent without breach of Vows, if this were not enough to make us be without a God too, then to drive him away we had defiled his dwelling places to the ground, and by his ancient gifts of remove he was certainly gone. There was indeed exceeding much Religion among us, yet, God knows, almost none at all, while Christianity was crumbled into so many, so minute professions, that 'twas divided into little nothings, and even loft in a crowd of itself; while each man was a Church, every single professor was a whole multitude of Sects. And in this tumult, this riot of faiths, if the Son of man should have come, could he have found any Faith in the Land? Virtue was out of countenance and practice, while prosperous and happy Villany usurped its name; while Loyalty, and conscience of Oaths, and Duty were most unpardonable crimes, to which nothing but ruin was an equal punishment; and all those guilts that make the last times perilous, Blasphemy, Disobedience, Truce-breakings and Treasons, Schisms and Rebellions, with all their dismal consequences and appendages, (for these are not single, personal crimes, these have a politick capacity) all these did not only walk in the dress of piety, and under holy Masks, but were themselves the very form of Godliness, by which 'twas constituted and distinguished, the Signature of a party of Saints, the Constellation of their graces: And on the other side, the detestation of such hypocrisy made others Libertines and Atheists; while seeing men such holy counterfeits, so violent in acting, and equally engaged for every false Religion, made them conclude there was none true, or in earnest. And all this was because we were without our King; for 'twas the only interest of all those usurpations that were, to contrive and preserve it thus. And when we had roll'd thus through every form of Government, address to each, moved every stone, and raised each stone to the top of the Mount, but everyone still tumbled down again, and ours like Sisyphus's labor was like to have no end, only restless and various Calamity; necessity then counsel'd us, and we applied to God's directions in the Text, I know not whether in his method, but it is plain we did seek David our King. And my heart is towards the Governors of Isral, that offered themselves willingly among the people: Bless ye the Lord: Yea, Thou O Lord, bless them. May all the blessings which this was the birth-day of, all that my Text encloses, all the goodness of the Lord, be the sure portion of them and their Families; may they see the King in his beauty, and peace upon Israel, and may their Names be blest in their Posterities for evermore. We sought him with the violent impatiencies of necessitous and furious desires, and our eyes, that had even failed with looking for him, did even fail with looking on him, as impotent and as unsatisfied in our fruitions as expectations; and he was entertained with as many tears as prayed for; as one whom not our Interests alone, but out guilts had endeared to us, and our tears: He was as necessary to us as repentance, as without whom it was impossible for us to repent and return from those impieties to him, of usurping his rights, of exiling, of murthering him by wants, because we could not do it by the Axe or Sword; without him 'twas impossible for us to give over the committing these; and the tears that did welcome him were one of our best lavers to wash off that blood that we had pulled upon ourselves. One endeared also to us by God's most miraculous preservations of him for us: We cannot look upon his life but as the issue of prodigious bounty, snatched by immediate Providence out of the gaping jaws of tyrannous, usurping, murderous malice, merely to keep him for our needs, and for this day: One whom God had train'd up and managed for us, just as he did prepare David their King, at thirty years of age to take possession of that Crown which God had given him by Samuel about twelve years before; and in those years to prepare him for Canaan by a Wilderness, to harden him with discipline, that so the luxuries and the effeminacies of a Court might not emasculate and melt him; by constant Watches, cares and business to make him equal for, habituated to, careful of and affected with the business of a Kingdom; and by constraining him to dwell in Mesech, with Aliens to his Religion, to teach him to be constant to his own, and to love Zion. And hath he not prepared our David so for us? And we hope hath prepared for him too the first days of David, having no Sheba in the Field, not Achitophel in the Council, nor an Abiathar in the Temple, not in that Temple which himself hath raised, God having made him instrument of that which he would not let David do, building his house, and furnishing it with all its Offices, and making it fit for God to meet us in; when we do seek him also, which was the other perquisite of our Condition.

There never was so much pretence of seeking God as in those late days of his absence from us; and it should seem indeed we knew not where to find him, we took such several ways to seek him. But if God did not look down from heaven then as he did Psal. 14. to see if any did understand and seek after God, should he not then have found it here as there? They are altogether gone out of the way; their throat is an open sepulcher, with their tongues have they deceived, the poison of asps is under their lips, their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness, their feet are swift to shed blood: destruction and unhappiness is in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known; there is no fear of God before their eyes: They eat up my people as it were bread; and, which is worse in these then them, they even then call upon God; as if they craved a blessing from the Lord upon that meal that did devour his people, and when they did seek God, they meant to find a prey. Yet where were any others that did seek him? Or that do cleave to him now? The Schismatic does not seek God, who shuns the place where he appears, and meets, and dwells; nor does he cleave to God who tears himself off from the Lord's body. Mark such as cause divisions, saith S. Paul, and avoid them: and if all Christians must avoid them, then I am sure God is not with them. The other Schismatics that divide from the World by cutting off the World from them; do they seek God that are diverted by so many Saints and Angels? that terminte divinest Worship in a creature? Or do they cleave to God, when their devotion embraceth stocks and stones? Or did they seek God for the purpose of my Text, who did not seek David their King, but did apply themselves to several foreign Princes, and to others which they hoped would set up their Golden Calf? Incendiaries, that make fires and raise commotions, these are far from God; for the Lord was not in the fire, or in the Earth-quake, but in the still small voice, in the soft whispers of peace and love. The Atheist, he that says in his heart there is no God, will not seek God, you may be sure; nor does he care to seek David his King, who is equally well under all Governments that will allow his Licences, and who hath no Religion to tie him to any. If he at all disliked the former, it was upon reasons of Burthen, or of Pride, or Libertinism: So much Religion, though counterfeit, was a reproach to him, and the face of such strictness was uneasy to him. These are so far from seeking God, that God says these did drive him out of Israel, Ezek. 9. 9. And then when that hath so long been the Wit, that it is now the Complexion of the Age, and they who thought fit to show their not being Hypocrites by License, and (to give it an easy word) by drollry in sacred things, have now made nothing to be sacred to them; how shall the Lord dwell among such? They are enough to exercise God out of a Nation. The Hypocrite also, for all his Fasts and Prayers never did seek God, for he is but a whited Sepulcher, our Savior says. Now who would seek the Living God among the dead? the Lord of Life sure is not to be found in Graves. Golgotha was a place to crucify him in, not Worship him: He takes not in the Air of Funeral Vaults for Incense; it was a Demoniac that used to be among the Tombs. The subtle, false, and faithless men that walk in Mazes, never shall meet God: These are the windings and the tracts of the Old Serpent, and they lead only to his habitation. They that do climb as if they meant to find God on his own Throne, that follow Christ up to a pinnacle of the Temple, or to the top of that exceeding high Mount, whence they can overlook the glories of the World, and pick and choose, these do not go to seek Christ there: It is the Devil that does carry up thither, upon his own designs. Nor is it possible to seek the Lord in the ways that lead to the strange Woman's house, for her house is the way to hell, Solomon says, (and he did know;) nay more, her steps take hold on hell, seise on those everlasting burnings which her foul heats kindle and begin. In a word, they that seek their own, that turn all merely to their advantage, they cannot seek God too, he will not be joint God with Mammon. And then where are the men that sought him? That did retrieve him to us? Or with whom does he dwell? If he be not among us, we do in vain flatter ourselves in our prosperity and peace, gawd it in all our bright appearances. Have we not seen the Sun rise with a glory of day about him, and mounting in his strength chase away all the little receptacles and recesses of the night, not leave a cloud to shelter the least relics of her darkness, or any spot to chequer or to fleck the countenance of day? When strait a small handful of vapor raised by that Sun itself, did creep upon his face, and by little and little getting strength be-dashed his shine, and poured out as full streams of storm as he had done of light; 'till it even put out the day, and shed a night upon the Earth in spite of him? So may prosperity itself, if the Lord and his blessing be not in it, raise that which will soon overcast and benight the most glorious condition of a Nation. That Wine which now makes your hearts glad, may prove like that which did commit the Centaures, and the Lapithae, first kindle Lusts, then Wars, and at last only fill a Cup of trembling and astonishment; and that Oil that does make you cheerful countenances, may make your paths slippery, and nourish flames that will devour and ruin all.

But God, who is found of them that seek him not, nay who himself sought the lost sheep and carried him, when with his straying he was wearied into impossibility of a return, as also sought, and found, and brought together us and our great Shepherd: For this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes. These ways of his also are so past finding out, that we may well conclude they are the mere foot-steps of his incomprehensible goodness, and we have only now to fear that goodness.

But give me leave to say, Those that despise his goodness, do not fear it; and they whom it does not lead to repentance, do despise it. S. Paul says, Rom. 2. 4. Despisest thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long-sufferance, not knowing that the goodness of the Lord leads thee to repentance?

And now, O Lord, what sort of men among us hath thy goodness wrought upon, and made repent? Those whom it was directed to convince, and came on purpose to, to prove by their own only argument they had of providential Miracles, they were not in the right, but that destruction and misery were in their ways; yet these choose rather to deny their own conclusions, and resist God's goodness, then to be convinced and repent: For we have seen them as bold Martyrs to their Sin as ever any to Religion, signalize their resolved impenitence with cheerful suffering, as if the fire they were condemned to were that Triumphal Chariot, in which the Prophet mounted up to Heaven. Others that did not go so far in condemnation nor guilt as they, and therefore think they have no reason to repent of that, do they repent of what they did contribute to it? Of those that lifted up their hands to swear and fight, how many are there that have made them fall, and smite their own thigh, saying, What have I done? Do not all rather justify as far as they themselves proceeded? And if all that were well, why do not we repent of our Allegiance and Loyalty? If all that were well, what hath thy goodness done, O Lord, that hath reversed it all? And for the rest, those that do not partake the plenties of thy goodness, murmur and repine at it; are discontent at having what they prayed for, what they would have died for. Those that have been partakers of it, have turned it into wantonness, have made it furnish them for base unworthy practices; such as have not the generosity of Vice, have not a noble, manly wickedness, are poltron sins; have made it raise a cry on the Faithfullest party, the best Cause, and the purest Church in the World. While we have debauched God's own best Attribute, made his goodness procure for our most wicked or self-ends; and the face of things is so vicious in every order and degree and sex, that—But the Confession is only fit for Litanies, and we have need to make the burden of ours be, Lord, give us some afflictions again, send out thy Indignation, for we do fear thy goodness, it hath almost undone us; and truly, where it does not better, it is the most fearful of God's Attributes or Plagues, for it does harden there. St. Paul says so in the forecited place; and Origen does prove this very thing did harden Pharaoh's heart, indulgence was his induration. Now induration is the being put into Hell upon the Earth: There is the same impenitence in both, and judgment is pronounced already on the hardened, and the life they lead is, but the interval betwixt the Sentence and the Execution, and all their sunshine of Prosperity, is but kindled Brimstone, only without the stench. And then to make the treasures of God's bounty be treasures of wrath to us! to make his kindness, his longsuffering; that is St. Peter says, salvation, condemn us, his very goodness be Hell to us! But sure so great a goodness as this we have tasted, cannot have such deadly issues; and it was great indeed, so perfectly miraculous in such strange and continued successes, resisting our contrivances and our sins too, overcoming all opposition of our vices, and our own policies, that do not comport with it, and in despite of all still doing us good; it was fatality of goodness. Now sure that which is so victorious will not be worsted by us. But Oh! have we not reason so much more to fear the goodness? The greater and more undeserved it is, the more suspicious it is: As if it were the last blaze of the Candle of the Lord, when its light gasps; its flash of shine before it do go out, the dying struggles and extreme efforts of goodness, to see if at the last anything can be wrought by it. And if we did consider how some men manage the present goodness, make use of this time of it, and take, and catch, we would believe they did fear the departure of it: But yet it is in our power to fix it here. If we repent, God's gifts then are without repentance, but one of us must change: Bring Piety and Virtue into countenance and fashion, and God will dwell among us. Nay St. Paul says, Goodness to thee if thou continue in his goodness: If we ourselves do not forsake it, and renounce it, not fear it so as to fly from it, but with the fears of sinking men, that catch and grasp, lay fast dead hold upon it, if, as God promises, he so put his fear in our hearts, that we never depart from it, fear that hath love in it, and is as unitive as that, then it shall never depart from us; but we shall see the goodness of the Lord, in the Land of the Living, and shall be taken thence to the eternal fullness of it. This day shall be the Birth-day of Immortal Life, the entering on a Kingdom that cannot be moved. A Crown thus beautified, is a Crown of Glory here, and shall add weight and splendor to the Crown hereafter: A Church thus furnished, is a Church Triumphant in this World, and such a Government is the Kingdom of Heaven upon Earth; and then we shall all reign with him who is the King of Kings, and who washed us in his Blood, to make us Kings and Priests to God and his Father. To whom be glory and dominion forever. Amen.

MATH. V. 44.

But I say unto you, love your Enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you.

I Need no Artifice to tie this Subject and this Day together. The Saint whose memory we celebrate was the Martyr of this Text: And 'tis impossible to keep the Feast but by a resolution of obeying these Commands, you being called together on this day to beseech God to grant that you by the Example of this first Martyr St. Stephen, who prayed for his Murderers, may learn to love your Enemies, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you.

A strange command in an Age, in which we scarcely can find men that love their Friends, nor anything but that which serves their interests or pleasures, that indeed love nothing but themselves; nor is it only injury that works their hate and enmity, but difference in opinion divides hearts, and men are never to be reconciled that have not the same mind in everything; as if one Heaven should not hold them that have not one judgment in all things, we see that one Church cannot hold them, and they that have but one same God, one Redeemer and Savior, one Holy Spirit of Supplication, cannot agree yet in one Prayer to him, though they have but one same thing to pray for to him: will not meet in their Worship because they do not in some Sentiments; and 'tis no wonder all Christ's reasonings and upbraidings, all the Advantages he does propose to them that love, the shames he casts on them that do not, by putting them out of his Train into the condemnation of Publicans; 'tis no wonder all this does not work with them whom their own sufferings and black Calamities will not convince. There is not one of us but knows that thus our miseries began but few years since, and yet we that have suffered for and by our Divisions, whose quarrels wounded the whole Nation and ourselves, who have wept so much blood at once to vent and to bewail our differences, are still as full of the same animosities as ever, and want nothing but opportunity to confound all again, Religion and ourselves: And in the name of God what did Christ mean when he prescribed this Precept? when he disputed? pressed it thus? or what do Christians mean when they do break and tear this Precept and themselves? Though I be far from any hopes to reconcile our Parties, (as by God's help I shall ever be from making any,) yet I will offer an Expedient to make them not so noxious; namely, if they will keep the differences of their judgments from breaking out into their affections and actions. And though while meekness and obedience to Governors, and the whole constellation of Gospel-graces, do not seem to shine so fair as man's own reputation, or humor, or possibly some strict opinion which they have owned, and the show of holiness that glitters in it, while 'tis thus, I say, we cannot look any party will yield, all do or will believe themselves to be in the right; yet I will give them leave to think so, and my prescription shall concern them equally although they be; and by addressing my Discourse to them that are so really, I shall conclude more forcibly them that are not, who ere they be; for sure I am none can be more in the right than those whom Christ lays this injunction upon, than his Disciples and Apostles, as relating to those that would be their Enemies as such: Yet 'tis to them he speaks here; I say unto you, love your Enemies, &c.

The words contain a Duty prescribed, and the Authority prescribing it: The Prescription and the Authority in these words, I say unto you, the Duty in the rest: where it is set down 1. in general: Love your Enemies, and that to be considered under a double prospect: 1. As it is placit in opposition to something that was before indulged the Jews, or presumed so to be by them; signified here by the particle But; and then as it stands by itself, in its own positive importance: Love your Enemies. And Secondly, this Duty is particularized in several exercises of the Act commanded, Love, in relation to several sorts of the Objects of that Act, Enemies: As 1. Those that curse you, you must bless: 2. Those that hate you, you must do good to: 3. Those that use you despitefully and persecute you, you must pray for.

These I shall treat of in their given order, beginning with the general Duty, and viewing that at once in both the lights that it doth stand in, that one may clear and fortify the other. But I say unto you, love your Enemies.

Of all the Points of Christian Religion those which did most stagger the faith of some, and check their acceptation of it, or adherence to it, (saith Marcellinus writing to St. Austin) were these 3; The incarnation of our Lord: The meanest of his Miracles, which they thought the works of Apollonius equal'd; and thirdly, the prescriptions in the Text, It seems they looked upon these Duties as the mysteries of Practice; that spoke as loud a contradiction to their active principles and inclinations, as the other appeared to do so, those of Speculation and Discourse, a God made flesh, and flesh and blood made so lame and passive, sweetened so, being alike impossible to their belief: As if no flesh could certainly be so, except that of which God was made, and the Word incarnate only could fulfill, these words here in my Text: They looked upon this as a much-more mighty work than any of his Miracles; as if 'twere easier to snatch one out of the arms of Fate from the embraces of the Grave, than to receive an enemy into ones own: As if Christ had done more when he prayed for his Crucifiers then when he prayed Lazarus out of his grave: For their Magicians, they say, vied Miracles with him, but none of their Religions or God's did ever aim at this Prescription, ut quae sit propria bonitas nostra; saith Tertullian; this being a sort of Piety peculiar to the Christians. Nor did they only think it unpracticable, but unreasonable; as carrying opposition to all Government, to the Prosperity and Peace of every Polity; for he that does require that I shall have no return of injuries, but for a wrong, makes me in debt a kindness, not only supersedes judiciary proceedings, but does secure Rapine by Law, and encourage it by reward; and truly if it were impossible for him that does affect a person to dislike his evil actions, and to desire he may have condign punishment, such as by Gospel-measures may be satisfaction equal to his fault, and warning to himself and others, these men had reason: But if a Father can at once love and correct his Child; if when I am with indignation displeas'd at my offenses against God, and by severities revenge them on myself, I do then love myself most passionately; and if I can pray with all the vigor of my soul for that false Traitor-bosom-enemy, my flesh, while it lies goading me to sin, and with temptation persecuting me to everlasting death, then no reason of State, or of my own requires I should not do all these acts of kindness to my Adversary. In that thou hast an exact pattern for thy enmity to them that wrong thee, and thou shalt hate thine enemy as thyself, is a most perfect Gospel-Rule: that being most cons•••nt with and directive of this Duty, love your enemies. But yet there is so great a difference indeed betwixt this Act here and its object (Enemy being constituted such by enmity, that is aversion and hate) that love, and that seem strangely coupled, things that can be put together only for a contest, just as heat and cold, to weaken one another, that both the love and enmity, may be refracted into a luke-warmness. Therefore I shall divide them, handling Love first by itself, viewing the import of that as it is sincere, lest the enemy appearing with it, make it shrink into a very slender Duty: and having done that, secondly, see whether an others enmity; and thirdly, whether enmity with that appropriation here, your enemies, can take off from the Obligation of that Duty, Love.

Now Love shows fairest to our purposes in those dresses which S. Paul presents her in, 1 Cor. 1. 13. and 1. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 v. 4. and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; v. 5. it suffers long, if not the damage, yet the malice of repeated injuries, as knowing it is bound to forgive 'till 70 times 7 times: And 'tis not easily provokeit, not apt for sudden violent heats, instantly all one fire, quick as lightning. Such heats are from another passion; which though sometimes they do but flash and die, yet oft they have their Thunder-bolt, and most what do fore-run a storm: whereas the heats of Charity are calm as sun-shine, such as do not consume, but cherish: For 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in the same verse, Love is kind and gracious, full of humanity: This Virtue is a kind of universal friendship, hath nothing of reserved, morose or sour an humor, that makes solitude in the midst of Society, and makes men only their own company, their Rule, and scope; and such a person Aristotle says must be either a God, who can enjoy nothing beside himself, is his own blessed and immortal entertainment, or a wild beast whose nature is unsociable because 'tis savage, whereas Love is a pious complaisance to all, 'tis condescension too; for 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in the 5. v. does not think anything unseemly, how contemptible soever, nor unworthy of him; so he may do his Neighbor good; he will debase himself to meanest Offices to work a real kindness. Thus Christ, because he loved his own, knowing the Father had given all things into his hand, he took a Towel, and girded himself, and put water in a Basin and washed his Disciples feest, making the lowest act of servitude be his Expression, and our Example: That is but slender Charity that will keep state, Heaven could not unite Majesty and Love: But to exercise this, God did descend from Glory into the extremity of Meanness. 'Tis Bowels that express compassion, and tender kindness; Now those we know of all parts of the Body are employed in the most low ignoble Offices; and to such Love condescends, where 'tis true. Again, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, it cover all; the naked with a garment, and the deformed, the leprous Sinner with a covering too; for Charity covers a multitude of sins, hides his own wrong from his own eyes; this Love too like that in the Poets, cannot see, yea covers all that is no fit for light, suffers only the graces to be naked near him, and not to name all, which you may find there, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, ver. 7 believeth all things, however incompatible to love, and to be wise have been accounted, yet this Love is S. James his Wisdom that came down from Heaven, Cap. 3. 17. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, 〈◇〉 interpret anything to the most favorable sense, and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, easy to •persuaded, still believes the best, and where it cannot, yet 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 hopes the best: Affection while it lives cannot despair, for then it must deposit its desires, which are only the warmth of Love, and 'till it die cool not, but if all do not answer hopes, yet 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, he does wait for it, is not discouraged with relapses and the repetitions of injuries, but still expects, and suffers all the contradictions of spite and wrong.

Now if all these acts and the many other there are essential to Love and all be under Obligation; and S. Paul says there, they are so much Duty that without these performances all Faith and all Graces profit nothing: the Preaching Rhetoric of Men and Angels would be nothing else but tinkling, and working Miracles, but showing tricks. It follows then these Acts must necessarily have a certain object, there must be somebody that we are bound to love thus: And if that Object be or Neighbor (as that is most sure) 'tis clear my Neighbors injury, or hate or enmity to me, cannot take off nor yet diminish in the least that Obligation I have to all those Acts, but I must love him though he be mine enemy in every of those instances. For it is plain, his having wronged me does not make him cease to be my Neighbor; nay more, that enmity does formally dispose and qualify my Neighbor for the Object of my love: And many of its Acts cannot relate but to a man that injures me; it must be in respect to provocations that love is said to cool into such a temper as is not easily provoked; For men are not provoked with kindnesses. I cannot suffer anything but wrong, nor suffer long except there be continuation and frequency of wrongs. Nor is it possible I should forgive unless it be offenses done against me. And so for divers of the rest: Now it were strange the enemy should supersede the obligation of the Duty, which cannot be a Duty but in order to an Enemy; that injury should give me a release, from doing that which I can never have cause or occasion to do but in the case of injury; that I should have leave not to obey the Command for that mere reason which alone makes it possible to obey it, and which alone makes the Command: Whereas indeed because I must needs love in these expresses, therefore he must needs be my enemy whom I must love.

But if he be without all provocation very unjustly so, if his hate be his sin, so that he hath offended God too in it, may I not then espouse God's quarrel thus far, not to love his Enemy if I must mine own, not to love the injurious, the sinner? Vice certainly is the most hateful thing that is, and therefore it must needs render the subject not to be beloved; accordingly 'tis said, that the ungodly and his ungodliness are both alike hateful unto God, Wis. 14. 9. and David does comply with God in this, Psalm 139. Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee? yea I hate them with perfect hatred, I count them mine enemies. And when I reflect on mine under this Notion, or if mine be such as set themselves against Religion and the peace and quietness of the Church, am I bound to love them? If so, then I may be allowed to do it with a little regret sure. But yet if we consider how these in the Text are designated by that Appropriation, your enemies, which means those that hate you, my Disciples, those that in the last words of my Text, will persecute you even for your being mine; and yet those they are bid to love, we may conclude in the next place we may not hate our enemies as Sinners: Nor yet does enmity with God, his Church, or his Religion qualify a person for our aversation or mischiefs. I except here Apostasy and utter obduration in it; a state that incapacitates for mercy, and by consequence for love and kindness. There is a sin which S. John would not say that we should pray for, and the Church thought that there was such a sinner, I·dian, but as to less degrees, they that are supposed to persecute Disciples, and in doing so persecute Christ himself, may well be granted sinners, enemies to God and Christianity; but yet says he, I say unto you, love these your enemies. Tertullian understood this so, and writing to the Governor of Carthage, who threatened all the Christians of that Province with Excision, that he might persuade him from his purpose, thus began his Proposals: We do not write as fearing for ourselves, or dreading anything that we are like to suffer, for we did enter our Religion on the condition of suffering, we covenanted to endure, and staked our lives when we began our profession; but 'tis for you we fear, for you our enemies, whom our Religion does command us to love and to do good to. And though we must hate Vice, and do our best to root out Infidelity and Atheism, destroy Profaneness, Irreligion and Heresy and Schism: These are fit objects for the zeals of Hate, and for the feavers of our Passion, and if our enemies be such we may meetly endeavor they may have appropriate restraints, yet not to exercise the Acts of Charity and kindness to them we have no allowance: No sins can make it lawful for us to ruin, or not to do good to the Sinners. In fine the only persons that the Jews pretended to have ground to hate were Enemies, and Enemies, indeed to their Religion, the Idolatrous Gentile-world, therefore that being now forbid to us, there is not sort of men, nor any man whom it is lawful for a Christian not to love; and all the reasons urged here by our Savior, do prove, that all mankind whether good or bad is the object of a Christians love: Because God does good to all, his methods of Mercies are universal; he makes his Clouds drop fatness even upon them that consume the increase on their Lusts, and sacrifice it to their Riots, making their belly be their God: He gives abundance of his good things unto those that love them only as they advantage Vanity and Sin, and that turn God's-store into provision for Vice and for Destruction. He gives gold to them that make gold their Idol, and bestows large portions of Earth on them that are Children of Hell, and them who for the pleasures of that Earth despise his Heaven. Yea, the whole order of things does teach us this, the Creatures do service to the whole kind, they acknowledge the man, and not the Country-man and Friend; but alike the rich and poor, the good and grateful, the wicked and ungrateful too. The Sun does not Collect his Rays and shed more day to gild the gaudy and gay person whose Cloaths and Jewels will reflect his light, return him as much almost as he sends, and vie brightness with him, than he does to the poor dark, sordid rags that even damp his beams: He sheds the same unpall'd day even on those men that draw such streams of blood as with their mists endeavor to put out or stain his shine: The Air gives breath to them that putrefy it, as well as those that send it out a Perfume. Yea the Creatures of sense and, perception do not yet discriminate their Lord's, but with that same indifference serve all: The Ox knows his Owner, and the Ass his Master, not his Religion, not his Virtues; and then as there is something in man, as man which God is kind to; something in man, as man for which the Creatures serve; so there is something in man, as he is man which we must love, and consequently we must love every man. And 'till thou hast found one so much a Monster that no creature will fear or obey, and such a one as God will show no kindness to at all, will not let his Sun shine, or his Rain rain upon, but while as others are in Goshen, sets him in the storm and dark of Egypt, 'till then, I say, thou hast not found a person whom thou mayst not love, no though he be thine enemy in mind, and thought, indeed, for if he Curse thee, thou must bless, and must do good to him which hates thee, which are the particular expresses to the love in the Text, the first of which is,

Bless them that Curse you.

Bless being here opposed to Curse, must signify wish well to them that wish you evil: Though 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, also do import speak well of, as that is opposed to railing, 1. Pet. 3. 9. not rendering railing for railing, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, but contrariwise Blessing. And both are the duty of this place, which does intend that all sorts of loving words should be the Christians returns to the offenses of the tongue, whether by Curse or contumely. And truly when I do consider how the other way, the rendering like for like, and giving him that does wish or speak evil as good language as he brings, is so far from all shadow of compensation, that there is really a loss of honor in those dismal imprecating words, the anger that does belch them out, does swell and stretch and rack the passion, blushes at itself, the malice drinks those spirits up which it lurks in, and the envy that Snake, sucks all the blood away, leaves nothing but its own pale venom in the stead: In a word, the very Essence of impatience is vexation and fret; and then that men should call that recompense for suffering which is itself a present agony, and hath no prospect of any after good, that they should satisfy themselves in that does make that bold assertion of the Romanist, who says that those in Hell do will and love their being there not strange at all, for indeed there is one and the same reason of both, that in the paroxysm of a passion, whensoever a man is seized by an affection with violence (as they in Hell are always, and those that speak evil are for the present,) He does for that time love, cherish and pursue the affection: and in good earnest, if so be that men can please themselves in the extreme impatience of a fruitless choler, it looks like demonstration, that the damned may please themselves in their damnation; as to that part of it, that which tears the Soul, the rage of its own passions when they are loose and unmuzzel'd, and the more because we have good reason to believe theirs are the very passions we are now upon, Envy, and Hate, and Shame; and they do vent themselves in the same manner too, in Blasphemy and Curses; and differ nothing, but that their's are endless, and then let such men please themselves in the returns of calumny and imprecations, we will allow them the delights of Hell in doing so, and they do taste those very only satisfactions that the fiends do in their torments, and much good may they do them. 'Tis true then what the Psalmist says, that he who thus delights in Cursing, it shall enter into his bowels like water, and like Oil into his bones; like pleasure and refreshment, like water to allay his passionate heats, and Oil to make him cheerful after his vexation: For so indeed the venting of his Curses seems to do; but alas if to pour them out do make them enter into him, into his bowels and his bones, his most substantial parts, and his most necessary inwards; if it leave nothing there but Curse, poison instead of marrow in the bones, and in the bowels fiery indignation for water, if this be the effect, then if you do resolve not to obey the Text and will not love your enemy, yet for your own sakes, out of self-love do not execute your Enemies ill wishes on yourselves, and in mere spite to him make all his maledictions come to pass upon you, but that blessing may not be far from you, Bless them that Curse you, do good to them that hate you, the next part.

Do good. If to do good, mean only those Acts of Charity that are under general precept, relieve necessities, help in needs, and the like; then it is plain another's hate to me takes not away my obligation, unless it take away his wants, and the wrongs he hath done me do not render me not bound to succor him, unless it put him in a state that needs no succor. For if thine Enemy hunger, thou must feed him, if he thirst, give him drink, Rom. 12. 20. Yea, though his hatred be to thy Religion: Do good to all, the Scripture says, and the Father porrigat manum Jupiter & accipiet: If the heathen Idols that have mouths indeed, but as they cannot speak, so neither can they eat, if they, I say, could hunger, and did ask, I would feed them, and I would give their God, that is the Devil if he wanted. But if 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 signify do kindness and favors, be good, as that means bountiful and full of courtesies and grace, be more than merciful by rule and general command. which the Gospel calls righteous, (and truly 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in 1 Tim. 3. 1. does mean a work of excellency, in a state of virtue without precept) and if it be here so too, enmity seems to have advantage above friendship in the Gospel, and brings kindness under an obligation; graces and favors that in their notation and essence employ the being free, yet are not so to hatred, which hath by Christ's

Law just pretences to them. I will not be too positive in my affirmings, yet from the words will offer this, that if a kindness lie before me, and I have no reason to deny it a man, but this because he hates me, I must not, deny it him, and if Christ's reasonings do enforce the other it will conclude this too. For if we must relieve the wants of them that hate us, that we may be Children of our Father, who does so, upon the same account we must be good and kind too to them, for he is, and he will scarce prove a true lawful issue of this Father, who is in this unlike to him that tries and owns his progeny by these resemblances. So that whatever strength of argument there is in one, the other hath it. And truly we have reason to believe that there is more then motive in it, when first Christ hath set this principle both to himself and us, with what measure you meet, it shall be measured to you again, Matt. 7. 2. As if the Lord had brought himself into that law of Justice with us men, whatsoever ye would that others should do to you, do you also to them: And it be also, whatsoever ye would that God should do unto you, do ye also to others; and Secondly, when he practiseth just as the rates we do, for with the froward God learns frowardness, and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and is kind to the kind, so Ps. 18. 25. recalls a grace from him that would not do one, Matt. 18. from 23. nay thirdly, when he gives us leave to beg his kindnesses, but just in the proportion we do ours, forgive as we forgive, we ask no more, and praying so, we undertake to have endeavored thus; assure God that we practice so, and upon that score beg. Now he that will forgive to the bounds of necessity, but never into favor, there he will stay his hand, will so much serve his turn from God? And can he be content with such a portion? Take heed, O severe man, what thou dost ask, when thou dost put up this petition. As thou shouldest say, I knew that notwithstanding we offend God constantly, yet besides all the mercies of his Covenant, (and that's a Covenant of Grace) his kindness too is over all his works; he does not only furnish our necessities, but serves our pleasures and our fancies, prevents us with the blessings of his goodness, and watches over us, and waits to be kind to us in the rescues of his providence, and beyond these gives us means of Salvation more than barely sufficient, the plenties of his grace, the five and ten Talents, the expresses of his temporal spiritual and eternal favors towards them that provoke him, are as immense and as innumerable as their guilts, but all these I shall rather part with, then be good and do favors to him that is mine Enemy; I will nevr have any kindness for that man that hates me, nor do beg any of Thee, O Lord. And wouldest thou say all this to God, if it were put in words at length in thy petition? Or dost thou think thou dost not say as much in praying so? And thou that makest so ill requests for thy own self, how wilt thou pray for them that despitefully use thee and persecute thee? Which is the last particular command. Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you.

As in this Character of Enemies, Christ hath not left out anything that does express hostility, hating in heart, cursing in word, and persecution in deed, and which to some is more provoking than a persecution, spiteful usage; (For persecution may make them serious, and look at their demerits, the other only stirs their spleen and gall) all which, all that an enemy can speak, or wish, or do, must be no bar to our affection: So to express the unfeignedness of that, he hath not left out any exercise of Love, we must speak well of them, but that a crafty passion may do, and blessing may be but more plausible and cunning hatred: We must therefore also do good to them, but this a generous pride may do, as knowing it more glorious to raise up a distressed adversary, then to trample on him when he is down, and to make him my creature rather than my footstool: All this I may do therefore yet love nothing but my vanity or my designs: But when I take my Enemy into my Closet and into my heart, give him a share in the petitions of my soul, divide the aims and interests of my devotion to him, and make my prayers concerned in the forgiveness of his sins as of my own, there's nothing but obedience to my Savior, and the Love of my Enemy can make a man do this. And truly 'tis a piece of kindness that is as necessary for ourselves, as those that injure us. For them it is very necessary for persecution, or despightful usage, offending God, as by a disobedience to his precept; so also by the sufferings it does inflict on man, to forgive or require which that man hath right: God does not use to put the injured person by this right, or by its paramont Authority assume to pardon the man's part of the wrong, but does retain the sin till that either in deed or desire do satisfied for, or remitted, there being 'till then an obstruction to God's forgiveness, for 'till then the man hath not repented; but when the sufferer does pray for him, in doing so he pleads that that obstruction is removed, that his part is remitted, and so leaves no bar in the way to that pardon which he begs for him of God, and which that bar being gone, the Lord is used to grant with all advantage, the prayers of our Martyr, in the seventh of the Acts, are a demonstration, to which the Fathers say the Church did owe not only her deliverance from all the violent intentions of Saul, but all that Christianity which St. Paul planted; the dying voice of that petition, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge, was answered by that voice from Heaven, which converted Saul in his career of fury: One prayer for a persecutor, puts an end to persecution, & si Stephanus non orasset & Ecclesia non habuisset Paulum. Job's miserable comforters, whose visits proved afflictions to him, could not a tone themselves to God by their burnt offerings, but Job must pray for them 42. Chr. 8. seven Bullocks and seven Rams cannot expiate, but one petition from the sufferer will do it; for him I will accept, saith God, and he accepted him, not for them only, but for himself, for the Lord turned the Captivity of Job, when he prayed for them. verse. 10. These intercessions speed sooner than direct supplications, and such a petition is heard to ourselves, when 'tis made for others. And reason good, for such requests lay the condition of our pardon before God, making evidence of our performance, and they cry, for we forgive, and so call for pardon. And to encourage this procedure, our Savior before he did commend his own spirit into the hand of his Father, he commended his Executioners to the mercies of his Father; Our Martyr did not so indeed, but first prayed for himself, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit, Acts. 7. 59. But though Heaven opening he saw that Jesus standing at the right hand of God, as ready to receive it, yet his spirit would not leave his body so, yet made him live yet to endure more stoning from his persecutors, for whom he had not prayed yet, but when he once fell on his knees, not beaten down by their storm, but his Charity, and prayed, Lord lay not this sin to their charge, when he had said so he fell asleep, v. 60. his Spirit taken hence as it were osculo pacis, though by the most violent death, and he lies down in a perpetual rest and peace, that thus lies down in Love. These are requests to breath out a soul into heaven in, and heaven itself did open to receive that soul that came so wafred.

And now we are at the top of Christ's Mount, the highest and the steepest point of christianity, which view with that •o which our Martyrs Spirit did ascend: For it makes perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect; it sets our heads within those higher and untroubled Regions, wherein there are no Meteor-fires, the flame of Passion cannot wing it thither, for he that is above the power of injury, discontent, cannot look up to him, it is with him as in the upper Orbs, where there is only harmony and shine, all is peace and love, the state of heaven itself. Now as it does happen to them that look down from great heights, every Object below is dwarf'd: And if the distance of the prospect be as great as that from Heaven to Earth, they tell us this whole Globe would be but like a spot, all being swallowed in itself; so if from this great height of duty, we should look down upon the World of Christianity, would it not almost wholly disappear and vanish? Something like a dark spot of it you may perchance behold, stained and discolour'd with the Blood of Christians, which their constant quarrels shed: Some it may be die that Blood in colors of Religion, their Animosity is christened Zeal, they kill only for Sacrifice, thus they interpret and fulfill Christ's precepts, this they call holy love, as if Christ when he bid his Disciples take no Staves with them, meant they should carry Swords; as if the love he had commanded we should have for them that are in error (if our enemies be so indeed) were but to murder them forsooth out of their errors. Next for the kindnesses that Christians do to those that hate them, or have disoblig'd them, they are God knows so little, that no perspective can show them from this height we are upon: And yet 'tis not for want of light we cannot see them, 'tis very rare men do those things in the dark; for if they do not blazon them themselves, the enemy whom they oblige, must do it. The distance also is too great to hear the prayers that are made for those that treat men with despiteful usage; perhaps it is because they are put up in secret; bur then what means the yelling of those curses? That ill Language that is banded to and fro? While none will be behind in the returns of these; how far soever we are off, like Thunder these are heard: And thence you may behold them also tearing Christ's wounds wider to mouth their swelling passion; We may see their anger redden with his Blood, and themselves spitting out that Blood by imprecations at the face of him that did provoke them; we may see them raking Hell to word these prayers, sending themselves thither in wishes, that they may express them with more horror. The Hatreds and Revenges which men act on them that have offended them (hates that seldom ever die 'till themselves do, which the Frost of the Grave only cools, yea, many times they are rak'd up, and keep their heat in the ashes, live in the grave, and are as long lived as the families, which for the most part is more careful and tenacious of them than of their Inheritance.) The executions of these are often writ in Characters legible at utmost distance; in this Mount of the Lord they may be seen, but where now are the Christians of my Text and of this day? There's no appearance of them in the face of the whole Globe of our Profession; nay worse, it is scarce possible they should appear, the Duties of loving enemies, of returning affronts with kindnesses, these are banished thence; other virtues are practic'd down, but these are scorned and quarrel'd down. 'Tis become a base thing and not to be endured to be a Christian in these instances: See pride and passions swoln up to an height, which Christ's Mount cannot reach, and which he must not level by his precepts: For since he was not pleased to consider how inconsistent in this last age of the World his rules would be with those of honor, and in making his Laws, took no care of the reputation of a Gentleman, 'tis fit his Laws should give way to the constitutions' of some Hectors, and he must bear the violation of them: And all this must be reasonable too. Good God! what prodigy of age is this, when Christ the Lord cannot be competent to judge either of right, of honor, or of reason? When to be like God, and to be perfect as our Father in Heaven is perfect, is to be most fordid and unworthy of a Gentleman? and in the name of God these men that are too great for virtue, that brave out Religion, and will needs give rules to God, what rank do they intend up stand in at God's Judgment seat on the last day? Lord God! grant us to stand among the weak, on that hand with the sheep, and those that are too poor in spirit to defy their enemies and thy commands: for however the meek maketh himself a prey, and is so far from enjoying the promise of inheriting the Earth, that the virtue is scarce allowed to sojourn in the Earth, as if it had breathed it's last in this our Martyrs prayer, took it's flight with his spirit, and those stones that flew him were the Monument of loving enemies, of praying for those that persecute and murder; and such Charity were not to be found among us anymore, yet sure I am these Charitable persons shall enjoy the friendship and the glories of that Lover, that did Bless, do good to, Pray, and Dye for Enemies; and these meek men shall reign with the Lord, who was slain, and is worthy to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing, all which be ascribed to him, and to the Father of all mercies, the God of Consolation, and to the Spirit of Love, now and for evermore.

PRIVATE DEVOTIONS For several OCCASIONS, ORDINARY And EXTRAORDINARY.

LONDON, Printed for T. Garthwait, at the little North Door of St. Paul's Church, 1660.

CHRISTIAN READER.

I Have, for the help of thy Devotions, set down some FORMS of PRIVATE PRAYER, upon several occasions: If it be thought an omission that there are none for Families, I must answer for myself, that it was not from any opinion that God is not as well to be worship'd in the Family as the Closet; but because the Providence of God and the Church hath already furnished thee for that purpose, infinitely beyond what my utmost care could do. I mean the PUBLICK LITURGY or COMMON PRAYER, which for all public addresses to God (and such are Family prayers) are so excellent and useful, that we may say of it as David did of Goliath's sword, 1 Sam. 21. 9. There is none like it.

DIRECTIONS for the MORNING.

As soon as ever thou awakest in the morning, lift up thy heart to God in this or the like short Prayer.

LORD, as thou hast awaked my Body from sleep, so by thy grace awaken my Soul from sin, and make me so to walk before thee this day and all the rest of my life, that when the last trumpet shall awake me out of my grave, I may rise to the life immortal, through Jesus Christ.

WHen thou hast thus begun, suffer not (without some urgent necessity) any worldly thoughts to fill thy mind, till thou hast also paid thy more solemn Devotions to Almighty God, and therefore during the time thou art dressing thyself (which should be no longer than common decency requires) exercise thy mind in some spiritual thoughts: as for example, consider to what Temptations thy business or company that day are most like to lay thee open, and arm thyself with Resolutions against them; or again, consider what Occasions of doing service to God, or good to thy neighbor are that day most likely to present themselves, and resolve to embrace them; and also contrive how thou mayst improve them to the uttermost. But especially it will be fit for thee to Examine whether there have any sin escaped thee since thy last nights examination. If after these considerations any further leisure remain, thou mayst profitably employ it in meditating on the general Resurrection (whereof our rising from our beds is a Representation) and of that dreadful Judgment which shall follow it, and then think with thyself in what preparation thou art for it, and resolve to husband carefully every minute of thy time towards the fitting thee for that great account. As soon as thou art ready, retire to some private place, and there offer up to God thy Morning Sacrifice of Praise and Prayer.

Prayers for the Morning. At thy first kneeling down, say,

O Holy, Blessed and Glorious Trinity, three persons and one God, have mercy upon me a miserable sinner.

LORD, I know not what to pray for as I ought, O let thy Spirit help my infirmities, and enable me to offer up a spiritual Sacrifice acceptable to thee by Jesus Christ.

A Thanksgiving.

O Gracious Lord, whose mercies endure forever, I thy unworthy servant who have so deeply tasted of them, desire to render thee the tribute of my humblest praises for them: In thee, O Lord, I live & move and have my being, thou first madest me to be, and then that I might not be miserable but happy, thou sendest thy Son out of thy bosom to Redeem me from the power of my sins by his Grace, and from the punishment of them by his Blood, and by both to bring me to his glory. Thou hast by thy mercy caused me to be born within thy peculiar fold, the Christian Church, where I was early consecrated to thee in Baptism, and have been partaker of all those spiritual helps which might aid me to perform that Vow I there made to thee; and when by my own willfulness or negligence I have failed to do it, yet thou in thy manifold mercies hast not forsaken me, but hast graciously invited me to repentance, afforded me all means both outward and inward for it, and with much patience hast attended and not cut me off in the acts of those many damning sins I have committed, as I have most justly deserved. It is, O Lord, thy Restraining grace alone by which I have been kept back from any the greatest sins, and it is thy Inciting and Assisting grace alone, by which I have been enabled to do any the least good, therefore not unto me, not unto me, but unto thy name be the praises. For these and all other thy spiritual blessings, my soul doth magnify the Lord, and all that is within me praise his holy Name. I likewise Praise thee for those many outward Blessings I enjoy, as health, friends, food and raiment, the comforts as well as the necessaries of this life, for those continual Protections of thy hand, by which I and mine are kept from dangers, and those gracious Deliverances thou hast often afforded out of such as have befallen me; and for that mercy of thine whereby thou hast sweetened and allayed those Troubles thou hast not seen fit wholly to remove: for thy particular Preservation of me this night, and all other thy goodness towards me; Lord, grant that I may render thee not only the fruit of my lips, but the obedience of my life, that so these blessings here may be an earnest of those richer blessings thou hast prepared for those that love thee, and that for his sake whom thou hast made the Author of Eternal Salvation to all that obey him, even Jesus Christ.

A Confession.

O Righteous Lord, who hatest iniquity, I thy sinful creature cast myself at thy feet, acknowledging that I most justly deserve to be utterly abhorred and forsaken by thee; for I have drunk iniquity like water, gone on in a continued course of sin and rebellion against thee, daily committing those things thou forbiddest, and leaving undone those things thou commandest; mine heart, which should be an habitation for thy spirit, is become a cage of unclean birds, of foul and disordered affections; and out of this abundance of the heart my mouth speaketh, my hands act, so that in thought, word and deed I continually transgress against thee. [Here mention the greatest of thy sins.] Nay, O Lord, I have despised that goodness of thine which should lead me to Repentance, hardening my heart against all those means thou hast used for my amendment. And now, Lord, what can I expect from thee but judgment and fiery indignation, that is indeed the due reward of my sins? But, O Lord, there is mercy with thee that thou mayest be feared, O fit me for that mercy by giving me a deep and hearty Repentance, and then according to thy goodness let thy anger and thy wrath be turned away from me; look upon me in thy Son, my blessed Savior, and for the merit of his sufferings pardon all my sins: And, Lord, I beseech thee by the power of thy grace so to renew and purify my heart, that I may become a new creature, utterly forsaking every evil way, and living in constant, sincere, universal obedience to thee all the rest of my days, that behaving myself as a good and faithful servant, I may by thy mercy at the last be received into the joy of my Lord: Grant this for Jesus Christ his sake.

A Prayer for Grace.

O Most gracious God, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, I wretched creature that am not able of myself so much as to think a good thought, beseech thee to work in me both to Will and Do according to thy good pleasure. Inlighten my mind that I may know thee, and let me not be barren or unfruitful in that knowledge; Lord, work in my heart a true Faith, a purifying Hope, and an unfeigned Love towards thee, give me a full Trust on thee, Zeal for thee, Reverence of all things that relate to thee; make me Fearful to offend thee, Thankful for thy mercies, Humble under thy corrections, Devout in thy Service, Sorrowful for my sins; and grant that in all things I may behave myself so as befits a creature to his Creator, a servant to his Lord; enable me likewise to perform that Duty I owe to myself, give me that Meekness, Humility, and Contentedness whereby I may always possess my soul in Patience and Thankfulness; make me Diligent in all my duties, Watchful against all temptations, perfectly pure and Temperate, and so moderate in my most lawful enjoyments, that they never become a snare to me; make me also, O Lord, to be so affected towards my Neighbor, that I never transgress that royal Law of thine, of loving him as myself; grant me exactly to perform all parts of Justice, yielding to all whatsoever by any kind of Right becomes their due; and give me such bowels of Mercy and compassion that I may never fail to do all acts of Charity to all men, whether friends or enemies, according to thy command and example. Finally, I beseech thee, O Lord, to sanctify me throughout, that my whole spirit and soul and body may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; to whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be all honor and glory forever.

Amen.

Intercession.

O Blessed Lord, whose mercy is over all thy works, I beseech thee to have mercy upon all men, and grant that the precious ransom which was paid by thy Son for all, may be effectual to the saving of all. Give thy enlightening Grace to those that are in darkness, and thy converting grace to those that are in sin; look with thy tenderest compassions upon the Universal Church, O be favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem, unite all those that profess thy Name to thee, by Purity, and Holiness; and to each other by Brotherly love. Have mercy on This desolate Church, and sinful Nation, thou hast moved the Land and divided it, heal the sores thereof for it shaketh; make us so truly to repent of those sins, which have provoked thy Judgments, that thou also mayest turn, and repent, and leave a blessing behind thee. Bless those whom thou hast appointed our governors, whether in Church or State, so rule their hearts, and strengthen their hands, that they may neither want will nor power to punish wickedness and vice, and to maintain God's true Religion and Virtue. Have pity, O Lord, on all that are in affliction; be a Father to the fatherless, and plead the cause of the Widow, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, heal the sick, relieve the needy, defend the Oppressed, & administer to everyone according to their several necessities; let thy blessings rest upon all that are near and dear to me, and grant them whatsoever thou seest necessary either to their bodies or their souls. [Here name thy nearest Relations] Reward all those that have done me good, and pardon all those that have done, or wisht me evil, and work in them and me all that good which may make us acceptable in thy sight, through Jesus Christ.

For Preservation.

O Merciful God, by whose bounty alone it is, that I have this day added to my life, I beseech thee so to guide me in it by thy grace, that I may do nothing which may dishonor thee, or wound my own soul, but that I may diligently apply myself to do all such good works, as thou hast prepared for me to walk in; and Lord I beseech thee, give thy Angels charge over me, to keep me in all my ways, that no evil happen unto me nor any plague come nigh my dwelling, but that I and mine may be safe under thy gracious protection, through Jesus Christ.

O Lord, pardon the wanderings and coldness of these petitions, and deal with me, not according either to my prayers or deserts, but according to my needs and thine own rich mercies in Jesus Christ, in whose blessed Name and Words, I conclude these my imperfect Prayers; saying, Our Father, &c.

Directions for Night.

AT NIGHT, when it draws towards the time of rest, bethink thyself how thou hast passed the day, examine thine own heart, what sin either of Thought, Word, or Deed thou hast committed, what opportunity of doing good thou hast omitted, and whatsoever thou findest to accuse thyself of, confess humbly and penitently to God, renew thy purposes, and resolutions of amendment, and beg his pardon in Christ, and this not slightly, and only as of course, but with all devout earnestness, and heartiness, as thou wouldest do, if thou wert sure thy death were as near approaching, as thy sleep, which for ought thou knowest may be so indeed, and therefore thou shouldest no more venture to sleep unreconciled to God, then thou wouldest dare to die so. In the next place, consider what special and extraordinary mercies thou hast that day received, as if thou hast had any great deliverance, either in thy inward man, from some dangerous temptations, or in thy outward, from any great and apparent danger, and offer to God thy hearty and devout praise for the same; or if nothing extraordinary have so happened, and thou hast been kept even from the approach of danger, thou hast not the less, but the greater cause to magnify God, who hath by his protection so guarded thee, that not so much as the fear of evil hath assaulted thee. And therefore omit not to pay him the tribute of humble thankfulness, as well for his usual and daily preservations, as his more extraordinary deliverances. And above all endeavor still by the considerations of his mercies to have thy heart the more closely knit to him, remembering that every favor received from him is a new engagement upon thee, to love and obey him.

Prayers for Night.

O Holy, blessed and glorious Trinity, three persons and one God, have mercy upon me a miserable sinner.

Lord I know not what to pray for as I ought, O let thy Spirit help my infirmities, and enable me to offer up a spiritual Sacrifice acceptable unto thee by Jesus Christ.

A Confession.

O MOST Holy Lord God, who art of purer eyes then to behold iniquity, how shall I abominable wretch dare to appear before thee, who am nothing but pollution? I am defiled in my very nature, having a backwardness to all good, and a readiness to all evil; but I have defiled myself yet much worse by my own actual sins and wicked customs; I have transgressed my duty to Thee, my Neighbor, and my Self, and that both in thought, in word, in deed, by doing those things which thou hast expressly forbidden, and by neglecting to do those things thou hast commanded me. And this not only through ignorance and frailty, but knowingly, and willfully, against the motions of thy Spirit, and the checks of my own conscience to the contrary. And to make all these out of measure sinful, I have gone on in a daily course of repeating these provocations against thee, notwithstanding all thy calls to, and my own purposes and vows of amendment; yea, this very day I have not ceased to add new sins to all my former guilts. [Here name the particulars.] And now, O Lord, what shall I say, or how shall I open my mouth, seeing I have done these things? I know that the wages of these sins is death; but O thou who willest not the death of a sinner, have mercy upon me; work in me I beseech thee a sincere contrition, and a perfect hatred of my sins, and let me not daily confess, and yet as daily renew them, but grant, O Lord, that from this instant I may give a bill of Divorce to to all my most beloved lusts, and then be thou pleased to marry me to thyself in truth, in righteousness & holiness. And for all my past sins, O Lord, receive a reconciliation; accept of that ransom thy blessed Son hath paid for me, and for his sake whom thou hast set forth as a propitiation, pardon all my offences, and receive me to thy favor. And when thou hast thus spoken peace to my soul, Lord keep me that I turn not anymore to folly, but so establish me with thy grace, that no temptation of the world, the Devil or my own flesh may ever draw me to offend thee, that being made free from sin, and becoming a servant unto God, I may have my fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Thanksgiving.

O thou Father of Mercies, who art kind even to the unthankful, I acknowledge myself to have abundantly experimented that gracious property of thine, for notwithstanding my daily provocations against thee, thou still heapest mercy and loving kindness upon me. All my contempts and despisings of thy spiritual favors have not yet made thee withdraw them, but in the riches of thy goodness and long suffering thou still continuest to me the offers of grace and life in thy Son. And all my abuses of thy temporal blessings thou hast not punished with an utter deprivation of them, but art still pleased to afford me a liberal portion of them. The sins of this day thou hast not repaid as justly thou mightest, by sweeping me away with a swift destruction, but hast spared and preserved me according to the greatness of thy mercy. [Here mention the particular mercies of that day.] What shall I render unto the Lord, for all these benefits he hath done unto me? Lord, let this goodness of thine lead me to repentance, and grant that I may not only offer thee thanks and praise, but may also order my conversation aright, that so I may at the last see the salvation of God, through Jesus Christ.

Here use the Prayer for Grace and that of Intercession appointed for the Morning.

For Preservation

O blessed Lord, the Keeper of Israel, that neither slumbrest nor sleepest, be pleased in thy mercy to watch over me this night, keep me by thy grace from all works of darkness, and defend me by thy power from all dangers, grant me moderate and refreshing sleep, such as may fit me for the duties of the day following. And, Lord, make me ever mindful of that time when I shall lie down in the dust; and because I know neither the day nor the hour of my Masters coming, grant me grace that I may be always ready, that I may never live in such a state as I shall fear to die in, but that whether I live, I may live unto the Lord; or whether I die, I may die unto the Lord, so that living and dying I may be thine, through Jesus Christ.

Use the same concluding prayer as in the Morning.

AS thou art putting off thy clothes, think with thyself that the time approaches that thou must put off thy body also, and then thy Soul must appear naked before God's judgment Seat, and therefore thou hadst need be careful to make it so clean and pure by repentance and holiness, that he who will not look on iniquity may graciously behold and accept it.

Let thy Bed put the in mind of thy Grave, and when thou liest down, say,

O Blessed Savior, who by thy precious death and burial didst take away the sting of death and power of the grave, grant me the joyful fruits of that thy victory, and be thou to me in life and death advantage.

I will lay me down in peace, and take my rest, for it is thou Lord only that makest me dwell in safety.

Into thy hands I commend my spirit, for thou hast redeemed it, O Lord, thou God of truth.

IN the *ANTIEN*T CHURCH there were besides morning and night, four other times every day which were called HOURS OF PRAYER, and the zeal of those first Christians was such as made them constantly observed. It would be thought too great a strictness now in this lukewarm age to enjoin the like frequency, yet I cannot but mention the example, and say, that for those who are not by very necessary business prevented, it will be but reasonable to imitate it, and make up in public and private those FOUR TIMES of PRAYER, besides the OFFICES already set down for MORNING and NIGHT: and that none may be to seek how to exercise their devotions at these times, I have added divers COLLECTS for several Graces, whereof every man may use at each such time of prayer so many as his zeal and leisure shall point out to him, adding, if he please, one of the confessions appointed for morning or night, and never omitting the LODRS PRAYER.

But if any man's state of life be really so busy as will not allow him time for so long and solemn devotions, yet certainly there is no man so overlaid with business, but that he may find leisure oftentimes in a day to say the LORD'S PRAYER alone, and therefore let him use that, if he cannot more. But because it is the Character of a Christian, Phil. 3. 20. That he hath his conversation in Heaven, it is very fit that besides these set times of Prayer, he should divers times in a day by short and sudden EJACULATIONS dart up his soul thither. And for this sort of devotion no man can want leisure, for it may be performed in the midst of business; the Artificer at his work, the Husband man at his Plough may practice it. Now as he cannot want time, so that he may not want matter for it, I have thought it not unuseful out of that rich storehouse, the BOOK of PSALMS, to furnish him with some texts, which may very fitly be used for this purpose, which being learned by heart will always be ready at hand to employ his devotion; and the matter of them being various, some for Pardon of sin; some for Grace; some for the light of God's countenance; some for the Church; some for Thanksgiving, &c. every man may fit himself according to the present need and temper of his soul. I have given these not as a full collection, but only as a taste, by which the Readers appetite may be raised to search after more in that Book, and other parts of holy Scripture.

For Faith.

O Blessed Lord, whom without Faith it is impossible to please, let thy spirit I beseech thee work in me such a Faith as may be acceptable in thy sight, even such as worketh by love, O let me not rest in a dead ineffectual Faith, but grant that it may be such as may show itself by my works, that it may be that victorious Faith which may enable me to overcome the world, and conform me to the Image of that Christ, on whom I believe, that so at the last I may receive the end of my Faith, even the salvation of my soul, by the same Jesus Christ.

For Hope.

O Lord, who art the hope of all the ends of the earth, let me never be destitute of a well grounded hope, nor yet possessed with a vain presumption; suffer me not to think thou wilt either be reconciled to my sins, or reject my repentance, but give me, I beseech thee, such a hope as may be answerable to the only ground of hope, thy promises, and such as may both encourage and enable me to purify myself from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit, that so it may indeed become to me an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, entering even within the veil, whither the forerunner is for me entered, even Jesus Christ my High Priest and blessed Redeemer.

For the Love of God.

O Holy and gracious Lord, who art infinitely excellent in thyself, and infinitely bountiful and compassionate towards me, I beseech thee suffer not my heart to be so hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, as to resist such charms of love, but let them make deep and lasting impressions on my soul. Lord, thou art pleased to require my heart, and thou only hast right to it. O let me not be so sacrilegiously unjust as to alienate any part of it, but enable me to render it up whole and entire to thee. But, O my God, thou seest it is already usurped, the world with its vanities hath seized it, and like a strong man armed keeps possession, O thou who art stronger come upon him, and take this unworthy heart of mine as thine own spoil, refine it with that purifying fire of thy love, that it may be a fit habitation for thy Spirit: Lord, if thou see it fit, be pleased to let me taste of those joys, those ravishments of thy love, wherewith thy Saints have been so transported. But if in this I know not what I ask, if I may not choose my place in thy Kingdom, yet O Lord, deny me not to drink of thy cup, let me have such a sincerity and degree of love, as may make me endure anything for thy sake, such a perfect love as may cast out all fear and all sloth too, that nothing may seem to me too grievous to suffer, or too difficult to do in obedience to thee, that so expressing my love by keeping thy Commandments, I may by thy mercy at last obtain that Crown of life, which thou hast promised to those that love thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For Sincerity.

O Holy Lord, who requirest truth in the inward parts, I humbly beseech thee to purge me from all hypocrisy and unsinceritie. The heart O Lord, is deceitful above all things, and my heart is deceitful above all hearts; O thou who searchest the heart and reins, try me, and seek the ground of my heart, and suffer not any accursed thing to lurk within me, but purify me even with fire, so thou consume my dross. O Lord, I cannot deceive thee, but I may most easily deceive myself, I beseech thee let me not rest in any such deceit; but bring me to a sight and hatred of my most hidden corruptions, that I may not cherish any darling lust, but make an utter destruction of every Amalekite; O suffer me not to speak peace to myself, when there is no peace, but grant I may judge of myself as thou judgest of me, that I may never be at peace with myself, till I am at perfect peace with thee, and by purity of heart be qualified to see thee in thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ.

For devotion in Prayer.

O Gracious Lord God, who not only permittest, but invitest us miserable and needy creatures, to present our petitions to thee; grant I beseech thee, that the frequency of my prayer may be somewhat proportionable to those continual needs I have of thy mercy: Lord, I confess, it is the greatest honor and greatest advantage, thus to be allowed access to thee, yet so sottish and stupid is my profane heart, that it shuns or frustrates the opportunities of it. My Soul, O Lord, is possessed with a spirit of infirmity, it is bowed together, and can in no wise lift up itself to thee. O be thou pleased to cure this sad, this miserable disease, to inspirit and enliven this earthly drossy heart, that it may freely mount towards thee, that I may set a true value on this most valuable privilege, and take delight in approaching to thee, and that my approaches may be with a reverence some way answerable to that awful Majesty I come before, with an importunity and earnestness answerable to those pressing wants I have to be supplied, and with such a fixedness and attention of mind, as no wandering thoughts may interrupt; that I may no more incur the guilt of drawing near to thee with my lips, when my heart is far from thee, or have my prayers turned into sin, but may so ask that I may receive, seek that I may find, knock that it may be opened unto me: that from praying to thee here, I may be translated to the praising thee eternally in thy glory, through the merits and intercession of Jesus Christ.

For Humility.

O Thou High and Loftie one, that inhabitest Eternity, yet art pleased to dwell with the humble spirit, pour into my heart I beseech thee, that excellent grace of Humility, which may utterly work out all those vain conceits I have of myself; Lord convince me powerfully of my own wretchedness, make me to see that I am miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked, and not only dust, but sin, that so in all thy dispensations towards me, I may lay my hand upon my mouth, and heartily acknowledge that I am less then the least of thy mercies, and greater then the greatest of thy judgments. And O Lord, grant me not only to walk humbly with my God, but even with men also, that I may not only submit myself to thy rebukes, but even to those of my fellow Christians, and with meekness receive and obey their admonitions. And make me so to behave myself towards all, that I never do anything through strife or vain glory; and to that end grant, that in lowliness of mind I may esteem every other man better then myself, and be willing that others should esteem them so also; that I never nourish any high opinion of myself, nor covet one among others, but that despising the vain praise of men, I may seek that praise which cometh from thee only. That so instead of those mean servile Arts I have used to recommend me to the esteem of men, I may now employ all my industry and care to approve myself to thee, who resistest the proud, and givest grace to the humble grant this, O Lord, for his sake, who humbled himself unto the death of the Cross, Jesus Christ.

For the Fear of God.

O Glorious Majesty, who only art high, and to be feared, possess my soul with a Holy awe and reverence of thee, that I may give thee the honor due unto thy Name, and may bear such a respect to all things which relate to thee, that I may never profane any holy thing, or sacrilegiously invade what thou hast set a part to thyself. And, O Lord, since thou art a God that wilt not clear the guilty, let the dread of thy justice make me tremble to provoke thee in anything; O let me not so misplace my fear, as to be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man, who shall be made as grass, and forget the Lord my Maker; but replenish my soul with that fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom, which may be as a bridle to all my brutish appetites, and keep me in a constant conformity to thy Holy will. Hear me,

O Lord, I beseech thee, and put this fear in my heart, that I may not depart from thee, but may with fear and trembling work out my own salvation, through Jesus Christ.

For Trust on God.

O Almighty Lord, who never failest them that trust on thee, give me grace, I beseech thee, in all my difficulties and distresses, to have recourse to thee, to rest and depend on thee; thou shalt keep him, O Lord in perfect peace, whose mind is staid on thee, O let me always rest on this firm Pillar, and never exchange it for the broken reeds of worldly succors, suffer not my heart to be overcharged with the cares of this life, taking thought what I shall eat, or drink, or wherewithal I shall be clothed, but grant, that having by honest labor and industry done my part, I may cheerfully commit myself to thy providence, casting all my care upon thee, and being careful for nothing, but to be of the number of those whom thou ownest and carest for, even such as keep thy Testimonies and think upon thy Commandments to do them. That seeking first thy Kingdom and the righteousness thereof, all these outward things may be added unto me, in such a measure as thy wisdom knows best for me; grant this O Lord, for Jesus Christ his sake.

For Thankfulness.

O most Gracious and bountiful Lord, who fillest all things living with good, and expectest no other return, but praise & thanksgiving; let me O Lord, never defraud thee of that so easy tribute, but let my heart be ever filled with the sense, and my mouth with the acknowledgement of thy mercies. It is a joyful and a pleasant thing to be thankful, O suffer me not I beseech thee, to lose my part in that Divine pleasure, but grant that as I daily receive blessings from thee, so I may daily from an affectionate and devout heart offer up thanks to thee, and grant that not only my lips, but my life may show forth thy praise, by consecrating myself to thy service, and walking in Holiness and Righteousness before thee all the days of my life, through Jesus Christ my Lord and blessed Savior.

For Contrition.

O Holy Lord, who art a merciful embracer of true penitents, but yet a consuming fire towards obstinate sinners, how shall I approach thee, who have so many provoking sins to inflame thy wrath, and so little sincere repentance to incline thy mercy! O be thou pleased to soften and melt this hard obdurate heart of mine, that I may heartily bewail the iniquities of my life; strike this rock, O Lord, that the waters may flow out, even floods of tears, to wash my polluted conscience; my drowsy Soul hath too long slept securely in sin, Lord awake it though it be with thunder, & let me rather feel thy terrors than not feel my sin. Thou sentest thy blessed Son to heal the broken hearted, but Lord, what will that avail me if my heart be whole. O break it that it may be capable of his healing virtue; and grant, I beseech thee, that having once tasted the bitterness of sin, I may fly from it, as from the face of a Serpent, and bring forth fruits of repentance in amendment of life, to the praise and glory of thy grace in Jesus Christ our blessed Redeemer.

For Meekness.

O Blessed Jesu, who wast led as a sheep to the slaughter, let, I beseech thee, that admirable example of Meekness quench in me all sparks of anger and revenge, and work in me such a gentleness and calmness of Spirit as no provocations may ever be able to disturb. Lord grant I may be so far from offering the least injury, that I may never return the greatest any otherwise then with prayers and kindness, that I who have so many talents to be forgiven by thee, may never exact pence of my brethren, but that putting on bowels of mercy, meekness longsuffering, thy peace may rule in my heart, & make it an acceptable habitation to thee, who art the Prince of peace, to whom with the Father & holy Spirit be all honor and glory forever.

For Chastity.

O Holy and Immaculate Jesus, whole first descent was into the Virgins womb, and who dost still love to inhabit only in pure and virgin-hearts, I beseech thee send thy Spirit of purity to cleanse me from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit; my body, O Lord, is the Temple of the Holy Ghost, O let me never pollute that Temple with any uncleanness. And because out of the heart proceed the things that defile the man, Lord grant me to keep my heart with all diligence, that no impure or foul thoughts be harboured there, but enable me, I beseech thee, to keep both body and soul pure and undefiled, that so I may glorify thee here both in body & spirit, & be glorified in both with thee hereafter.

For Temperance.

O Gracious Lord, who hast in thy bounty to mankind afforded us the use of thy good creatures for our corporal refreshment, grant that I may always use this liberty with thankfulness and moderation; O let me never be so enslaved to that brutish pleasure of taste, that my Table become a snare to me, but give me, I beseech thee, a perfect abhorrence of all degrees of excess, and let me eat and drink only for those ends, and according to those measures which thou hast assigned me for health and not for luxury. And Lord grant that my pursuits may be not after the meat that perisheth, but after that which endureth to everlasting life, that hungering and thirsting after righteousness I may be filled with thy grace here, and thy glory hereafter, through Jesus Christ.

For Contentedness.

O Merciful God, thy wisdom is infinite to choose, & thy love forward to dispence good things to us; O let me always fully and entirely resign myself to thy disposals, have no desires of mine own, but a perfect satisfaction in thy choices for me, that so in whatsoever estate I am, I may be therein content. Lord grant I may never look with murmuring on my own condition, nor with envy on other men's. And to that end, I beseech thee, purge my heart of all covetous affections; O let me never yield up any corner of my soul to Mammon, but give me such a contempt of these fading riches, that whether they increase or decrease I may never set my heart upon them, but that all my care may be to be rich towards God, to lay up my treasure in heaven, that I may so set my affections on things above, that when Christ who is my life shall appear, I may also appear with him in glory. Grant this, O Lord, for the mercies of the same Jesus Christ.

For Diligence.

O Lord, who hast in thy wisdom ordained that man should be born to labor, suffer me not to resist that design of thine by giving myself up to sloth and idleness; but grant I may so employ my time and all other talents thou hast entrusted me with, that I may not fall under the sentence of the slothful and wicked servant; Lord, if it be thy will, make me some way useful to others, that I may not live an unprofitable part of mankind; but however, O Lord, let me not be useless to myself, but grant I may give all diligence to make my calling and election sure: My soul is beset with many and vigilant adversaries, O let me not fold my hands to sleep in the midst of so great dangers, but watch and pray, that I enter not into temptation, enduring hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, till at the last from this state of warfare thou translate me to the state of triumph and bliss in thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ.

For Justice.

O Thou King of righteousness, who hast commanded us to keep judgment and do Justice, be pleased by thy grace to cleanse my heart and hands from all fraud and injustice, and give me a perfect integrity and uprightness in all my dealings. O make me ever abhor to use my power to oppress, or my skill to deceive my brother, and grant I may most strictly observe that sacred rule of doing as I would be done to, that I may not dishonor my Christian profession by an unjust or fraudulent life, but in simplicity and godly sincerity, have my conversation in this life, never seeking to heap up treasures of wickedness, but preferring a little with righteousness before great revenues without right. Lord, make me exactly careful to render to every man what by any sort of obligation becomes his due, that I may never break the bond of any of those relations that thou hast placed me in, but may so behave myself towards all, that none may have an evil thing to say of me, that so, if it be possible, I may have peace with all men, or however I may by keeping innocence and taking heed to the thing that is right, have peace at the last, even peace with thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For Charity.

O Merciful Lord, who hast made of one blood, and redeemed by one ransom all Nations of men, let me never harden my bowels against any that partake of the same nature and redemption with me, but grant me an universal charity towards all men. Give me, O thou father of compassions, such a tenderness and meltingness of heart, that I may be deeply affected with all the miseries and calamities outward or inward of my brethren, and diligently employ all my abilities for their succor & relief. O let not an unchristian self-love possess my heart, but drive out that accursed spirit, and let thy Spirit or love enter and dwell there, and make me seek not to please myself, but my neighbor for his good to edification, even as Christ pleased not himself. Lord, make me a faithful steward of all those talents thou hast committed to me for the benefit of others, that so when thou shalt call me to give an account of my stewardship, I may do it with joy and not with grief. Grant this merciful Lord, I beseech thee for Jesus Christ his sake.

For perseverance.

O Eternal and unchangeable Lord God, who art the same yesterday and today and forever. Be thou pleased to communicate some small ray of that excellence, some degree of that stability to me thy wretched creature, who am light and inconstant, turned about with every blast; my understanding is very deceivable, O establish it in thy truth, keep it from the snares of seducing spirits, that I may not be led away with the error of the wicked and fall from my own stedfastness: my will also, O Lord is irresolute and wavering, and doth not cleave steadfastly unto God, my goodness is but as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it passeth away. O strengthen and confirm me, and whatever good work thou hast wrought in me, be pleased to accomplish and perform it until the day of Christ. Lord thou seest my weakness, and thou knowest the number and strength of those temptations I have to struggle with, O leave me not to myself, but cover thou my head in the day of battle, and in all spiritual combats make me more then conqueror through him that loved me. O let no terrors or flatteries either of the world or my own flesh ever draw me from my obedience to thee, but grant that I may continue steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; and by patient continuing in well doing, seek and at last obtain glory, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Brief Paraphrase of the LORD'S PRAYER To be used as a Prayer.

[Our Father which art in Heaven.]

O Lord, who dwellest in the highest heavens, thou art the Author of our being, thou hast also begotten us again unto a lively hope, and carriest towards us the tenderness & bowels of a compassionate father. O make us to render to thee the love and obedience of children; and that we may resemble thee our father in heaven (that place of true delight and purity) give us a holy disdain of all the deceitful pleasures and foul pollutions of this world, and so raise up our minds that we may always have our conversation in heaven, from whence we look for our Savior the Lord Jesus Christ.

[1. Hallowed be thy Name]

Strike such an awe into our hearts, that we may humbly reverence thee in thy Name, which is great, wonderful and holy, and carry such a sacred respect to all things that relate to thee and thy worship, as may express our reverence to thy great Majesty. Let all the people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee.

[2. Thy Kingdom come.]

Establish thy Throne and rule forever in our souls, & by the power of thy grace subdue all those rebellious corruptions that exalt themselves against thee, they are those enemies of thine which would not thou shouldst reign over them, O let them be brought forth and slain before thee, and make us such faithful subjects of this thy Kingdom of Grace, that we may be capable of the Kingdom of Glory, and then Lord Jesus come quickly.

[3. Thy will be done in earth, &c.]

ENABLE us by thy grace cheerfully to suffer thy will in all thy inflictions, and readily perform it in all thy commands, give us of that heavenly zeal to thy service, wherewith the blessed Angels of thy presence are inspired, that we may obey thee with the like fervor and alacrity, and that following them in their obedience, we may be joined with them to sing eternal praises in thy Kingdom to God, and to the Lamb forever.

[4. Give us this day our, &c.]

GIVE us that continual supply of thy grace, which may sustain and nourish our souls unto eternal life. And be thou pleased also to provide for our bodies all those things which thou seest fit for their support, through this our earthly pilgrimage, and make us cheerfully to rest on thee for them, first seeking thy Kingdom and the righteousness thereof, and then not doubting but all these things shall be added unto us.

[5. Forgive us our Trespases, &c.]

HEal our souls, O Lord, for we have sinned against thee, let thy tender mercies abound towards us, in the forgiveness of all our offenses; And grant O Lord, that we may never forfeit this pardon of thine, by denying ours to our brethren, but give us those bowels of compassion to others which we stand in so much greater need of from thee, that we may forgive as fully and finally upon Christ's command, as we desire to be forgiven, for his merits and intercession.

[6. Lead us not into Tempt. &c.]

O LORD, we have no strength against those multitudes of temptations that daily assault us, only our eyes are upon thee, O be thou pleased either to restrain them or assist us, and in thy faithfulness suffer us not to be tempted above that we are able, but in all our temptations make us a way to escape, that we be not overcome by them, but may when thou shalt call us to it, resist even unto blood, striving against sin, that being faithful unto death, thou mayest give us the crown of life.

[For thine is the Kingdom, &c.]

HEAR us and graciously answer our petitions, for thou art the great King over all the earth, whose Power is infinite, and art able to do for us above all that we can ask or think, and to whom belongeth the Glory of all that good thou workest in us or for us. Therefore blessing, honor, glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, to our God forever, and ever,

Amen.

For the Church.

OBE favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

O God, wherefore art thou absent from us so long? Why is thy wrath so hot against the sheep of thy pasture?

O think upon thy Congregation, whom thou hast purchased and Redeemed of old.

Look upon the Tribe of thine Inheritance, and Mount Zion where thou hast dwelt.

It is time for thee, Lord, to say to thy hand, for they have destroyed thy Law.

THE use of this Catalogue of Sins is this: Upon days of Humiliation, especially before the Sacrament, read them consideringly over, and at every particular ask thine own heart, Am I guilty of this? And whatsoever by such Examination thou findest thyself faulty in, Confess particularly, and humbly to God, with all the heightening circumstances, which may any way increase their guilt, and make serious Resolutions against every such Sin for the future; after which thou mayest use this Form following.

O LORD, I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, for my iniquities are increased over my head, and my trespass is grown up even unto Heaven. I have wrought all these great provocations, and that in the most provoking manner; they have not been only single but repeated acts of sin: for, O Lord, of all this black Catalogue which I have now brought forth before thee, how few are there which I have not often committed, nay, which are not become even habitual and customary to me? And to this frequency, I have added both a greediness, and obstinacy in sinning, turning into my course as the Horse rusheth into the battle, doing evil with both hands, earnestly, yea, hating to be reformed, and casting thy words behind me, quenching thy spirit within me, which testified against me, to turn me from my evil ways, and frustrating all those outward means whether of judgment or mercy, which thou hast used to draw me to thyself. Nay, O Lord, even my repentances may be numbered amongst my greatest sins, they have sometimes been feigned and hypocritical, always so slight and ineffectual, that they have brought forth no fruit in amendment of life, but I have still returned with the dog to his vomit, and the sow to the mire again, and have added the breach of resolutions and vows, to all my former guilts. Thus, O Lord, I am become out of measure sinful, and since I have thus chosen death, I am most worthy to take part in it, even in the second death, the lake of fire and brimstone. This, this, O Lord, is in justice to be the portion of my cup, to me belongs nothing but shame and confusion of face eternally. But to thee, O Lord God, belongeth mercy and forgiveness: though I have rebelled against thee, O remember not my sins and offenses, but according to thy mercy think thou upon me O Lord for thy goodness. Thou sentest thy Son to seek and to save that which was lost, behold, O Lord, I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost, O seek thy servant, and bring me back to the Shepherd and Bishop of my soul; let thy spirit work in me a hearty sense and detestation of all my abominations, that true contrition of heart, which thou hast promised not to despise. And then be thou pleased to look on me, to take away all iniquity, and receive me graciously, and for his sake who hath done nothing amiss, be reconciled to me, who have done nothing well; wash away the guilt of my sins in his blood, and subdue the power of them by his grace, and grant, O Lord, that I may from this hour bid a final adieu to all ungodliness and worldly lusts, that I may never once more cast a look toward Sodom, or long after the fleshpots of Egypt, but consecrate myself entirely to thee, to serve thee in Righteousness and true Holiness, reckoning myself to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord and blessed Savior.

This Penitential Psalm may also fitly be used.

PSALM 51.

HAVE mercy upon me O God, after thy great goodness, according to the multitude of thy mercies do away mine offenses.

Wash me thoroughly from my wickedness, and cleanse me from my sin.

For I acknowledge my faults, and my sin is ever before me.

Against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight, that thou mightest be justified in thy saying, and clear when thou art judged.

Behold I was shapen in wickedness, and in sin hath my mother conceived me.

But lo, thou requirest truth in the inward parts, and shalt make me to understand wisdom secretly.

Thou shalt purge me with Hyssop, and I shall be clean, thou shalt wash me, and I shall be whiter then snow.

Thou shalt make me hear of joy and gladness▪ that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.

Turn thy face from my sins, and put out all my misdeeds.

Make me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right Spirit within me.

Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me.

O give me the comfort of thy help again, and stablish me with thy free Spirit.

Then shall I teach thy ways unto the wicked, and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God, thou that art the God of my health, and my tongue shall sing of thy righteousness.

Thou shalt open my lips, O Lord, and my mouth shall show thy praise.

For thou desirest no sacrifice, else would I give it thee, but thou delightest not in burnt offering.

The sacrifice of God is a troubled spirit, a broken and contrite heart, O God, shalt thou not despise.

O be favorable and gracious unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

Then shalt thou be pleased with the Sacrifice of righteousness, with the burnt offerings and oblations, then shall they offer young bullocks upon thine altar.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost.

As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be, world without end.

Amen.

PRAYERS BEFORE the Receiving of the Blessed SACRAMENT.

O Most merciful God, who hast in thy great goodness prepared this spiritual feast for sick and famished souls, make my desires and gaspings after it, answerable to my needs of it. I have with the prodigal wasted that portion of grace thou bestowedst upon me, and therefore do infinitely want a supply out of this treasury: But, O Lord, how shall such a wretch as I dare to approach this holy Table? I am a dog, how shall I presume to take the children's bread? Or how shall this spiritual Manna, this food of Angels be given to one who hath chosen to feed on husks with swine, nay to one who hath already so often trampled these precious things underfoot, either carelessly neglecting, or unworthily receiving these holy mysteries? O Lord, my horrible guiltiness makes me tremble to come, and yet makes me not dare to keep away; for where, O Lord, shall my polluted soul be washed, if not in this fountain which thou hast opened for sin and for uncleanness? Hither therefore I come, and thou hast promised that him that cometh to thee thou wilt in no wise cast out: This is, O Lord, the blood of the New Testament, grant me so to receive it, that it may be to me for remission of sins. And though I have so often and so wretchedly broken my part of that Covenant, whereof this Sacrament is a seal, yet be thou graciously pleased to make good thine, to be merciful to my unrighteousness, and to remember my sins and my iniquities no more; and not only so, but to put thy laws into my heart, and to write them in my mind, and by the power of thy grace dispose my soul to such a sincere and constant obedience, that I may never again provoke thee; Lord, grant that in these holy mysteries I may not only commemorate, but effectually receive my blessed Savior, and all the benefits of his Passion: and to that end give me such a preparation of soul as may qualify me for it, give me a deep sense of my sins and unworthiness, that being weary and heavy laden, I may be capable of his refreshings, and by being suppled in my own tears, I may be the fitter to be washed in his blood; raise up my dull and earthly mind from groveling here below, and inspire it with a holy zeal, that I may with spiritual affection approach this spiritual feast; and let, O Lord, that infinite love of Christ in dying for so wretched a sinner, inflame my frozen benumbed soul, and kindle in me that sacred fire of love to him, and that so vehement, that no waters may quench, no floods drown it, such as may burn up all my dross, not leave one unmortified lust in my soul, and such as may also extend itself to all whom thou hast given me command and example to love, even enemies as well as friends. Finally, O Lord, I beseech thee to clothe me in the wedding garment, and make me though of myself a most unworthy, yet by thy mercy an acceptable guest at this holy Table, that I may not eat and drink my own condemnation, but may have my pardon sealed, my weakness repaired, my corruptions subdued, and my soul so inseparably united to thee, that no temptations may ever be able to dissolve the union, but that being begun here in grace, it may be consummated in glory. Grant this, O Lord, for thy dear Sons sake, Jesus Christ.

Another.

O Blessed Jesus, who once offeredst up thyself for me upon the Cross, and now offerest thyself to me in the Sacrament, let not I beseech thee, my impenitence and unworthiness frustrate these so inestimable mercies to me, but qualify me by thy grace to receive the full benefit of them. O Lord, I have abundant need of thee, but am so clogged with guilt, so holden with the cords of my sins, that I am not able to move towards thee; O loose me from this band, wherewith Satan and my own lusts have bound me, and draw me that I may run after thee; Lord, thou seest daily how eagerly I pursue: he paths that lead to death, but when thou invitest me to life and glory, I turn my back and forsake my own mercy. How often hath this feast been prepared, and I have with frivolous excuses absented myself, or if I have come, it hath been rather to defy then to adore thee? I have brought such troops of thy professed enemies, unrepented sins along with me, as if I came not to commemorate, but renew thy passion, crucifying thee afresh, and putting thee to open shame: And now of what punishment shall I be thought worthy, who have thus trampled underfoot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing! Yet O merciful Jesu, this blood is my only refuge, O let this make my atonement or I perish eternally: Wherefore didst thou shed it, but to save sinners? Neither can the merit of it be overwhelmed either by the greatness or number of sins. I am a sinner, a great one, O let me find its saving efficacy. Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful to me for my soul trusteth in thee, and in the clefts of thy wounds shall be my refuge until thy Fathers indignation be over-past. O thou who hast as my high Priest, sacrificed for me, intercede for me also, and plead thy meritorious sufferings on my behalf, and suffer not, O my Redeemer, the price of thy blood to be utterly lost: And grant, O Lord, that as the sins I have to be forgiven are many, so I may love much. Lord, thou seest what faint, what cold affections I have towards thee, O warm and enliven them: and as in this Sacrament that transcendent love of thine in dying for me is shed forth, so I beseech thee let it convey such grace into me as may enable me to make some returns of love: O let this divine fire descend from Heaven into my soul, and let my sins be the burnt offering for it to consume, that there may not any corrupt affection, any cursed thing be sheltered in my heart, that I may never again defile that place, which thou hast chosen for thy Temple. Thou diedst, O dear Jesu, to redeem me from all iniquity, O let me not again sell myself to work wickedness, but grant that I may approach thee at this time with most sincere and fixed resolutions of an entire reformation, and let me receive such grace and strength from thee, as may enable me faithfully to perform them: Lord, there are many old habituated diseases my soul groans under. [Here mention thy most prevailing corruptions.] And though I lie never so long at the Pool of Bethesda, come never so often to thy Table, yet unless thou be pleased to put forth thy healing virtue, they will still remain uncured. O thou blessed Physician of souls, heal me, and grant I may now so touch thee that everyone of these loathsome issues may immediately staneh, that thess sicknesses may not be unto death, but unto the glory of thy mercy in Pardoning, to the glory of thy grace in Purifying so polluted a wretch. O Christ hear me, and grant I may now approach thee with such humility and contrition, love & devotion, that thou mayest vouchsafe to come unto me, & abide with me; communicating to me thyself, and all the merits of thy Passion. And then, O Lord, let no accusations of Satan or my own conscience amaze or distract me, but having peace with thee, let me also have peace in myself, that this Wine may make glad, this Bread of life may strengthen my heart, and enable me cheerfully to run the way of thy Commandments. Grant this merciful Savior for thine own bowels and compassions sake.

EJACULATIONS to be used at the LORD'S TABLE.

LORD, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof.

I have sinned: What shall I do unto thee, O thou preserver of men?

[Here recollect some of thy greatest sins.]

If thou, Lord, shouldst be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord, who may abide it?

But with the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous Redemption.

Behold, O Lord, thy beloved Son in whom thou art well pleased.

Hearken to the cry of his blood which speaketh better things then that of Abel.

By his Agony and bloody Sweat, by his Cross and Passion, good Lord deliver me.

O Lamb of God which takest away the sins of the world, grant me thy Peace.

O Lamb of God which takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon me.

Immediately before Receiving.

THou hast said that he that eateth thy flesh and drinketh thy blood hath eternal life.

Behold the servant of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word.

At the receiving of the Bread.

By thy Crucified body deliver me from this body of death.

At the receiving of the Cup.

O Let this blood of thine purge my conscience from dead works to serve the living God.

Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean.

O touch me, and say, I will, be thou clean.

After Receiving.

WHat shall I render unto the Lord for all the benefits he hath done unto me?

I will take the Cup of Salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord.

Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

Therefore blessing, honor, glory and power be to him that sitteth upon the Throne, and to the Lamb forever and ever. Amen.

I have sworn, and am steadfastly purposed to keep thy righteous judgments,

O hold thou up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.

A Thanksgiving after the Receiving of the Sacrament.

O Thou fountain of all goodness, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, and to whom all honor and glory should be returned, I desire with all the most fervent and inflamed affections of a grateful heart, to bless and praise thee for those inestimable mercies thou hast vouchsafed me: Lord, what is man that thou shouldst so regard him as to send thy beloved Son to suffer such bitter things for him? But, Lord, what am I the worst of men, that I should have any part in this atonement, who have so often despised him and his sufferings? O the height and depth of this mercy of thine, that art pleased to admit me to the renewing of that Covenant with thee which I have so often and so perversely broken! That I who am not worthy of that daily bread which sustains the body, should be made partaker of this bread of life which nourisheth the soul, and that the God of all purity should vouchsafe to unite himself to so polluted a wretch! O my God, suffer me no more, I beseech thee, to turn thy grace into wantonness, to make thy mercy an occasion of security, but let this unspeakable love of thine constrain me to obedience, that since my blessed Lord hath died for me, I may no longer live unto myself but to him: O Lord, I know there is no concord between Christ and Belial, therefore since he hath now been pleased to enter my heart, O let me never permit any lust to chance him thence, but let him that hath so dearly bought me still keep possession of me, and let nothing ever take me out of his hand. To this end be thou graciously pleased to watch over me, and defend me from all assaults of my spiritual enemies, but especially deliver me from myself, from the treachery of my own heart, which is too willing to yield itself a prey. And where thou seest I am either by nature or custom most weak, there do thou, I beseech thee, magnify thy power in my preservation. [Here mention thy most dangerous temptations.] And Lord let my Savior's sufferings for my sins, and the Vows I have now made against them never depart from my mind, but let the remembrance of the one enable me to perform the other, that I may never make truce with those lusts which nailed his hands, pierced his side, and made his soul heavy to the death. But that having now anew listed myself under his banner, I may fight manfully, and follow the Captain of my Salvation, even through a sea of blood. Lord, lift up my hands that hang down, and my feeble knees, that I faint not in this warfare; O be thou my strength who am not able of myself to struggle with the slightest temptations. How often have I turned my back in the day of battle? how many of these Sacramental vows have I violated? And Lord, I have still the same inconstant deceitful heart to betray me to the breach of this. O thou who art Yea and Amen, in whom there is no shadow of change, communicate to me, I beseech thee, such a stability of mind, that I may no more thus start aside like a broken bow, but that having my heart whole with thee I may continue steadfast in thy Covenant; that not one good purpose which thy Spirit hath raised in me this day may vanish, as so many have formerly done, but that they may bring forth fruit unto life eternal. Grant this, O merciful father, through the merits and mediation of my Crucified Savior.

A Prayer of Intercession to be used either before or after the receiving of the Sacrament.

O MOST gracious Lord, who so tenderly lovedst mankind as to give thy dear Son out of thy Bosom to be a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, grant that the effect of this Redemption may be as universal as the design of it, that it may be to the salvation of all. O let no person by impenitence and willful sin forfeit his part in it, but by the power of thy grace bring all, even the most obstinate sinners to repentance. Inlighten all that sit in darkness, all Jews, Turks, Infidels and Heretics, take from them all blindness, hardness of heart and contempt of thy Word, and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, unto thy fold, that they may be saved among the number of the true Israelites. And for all those upon whom the Name of thy Son is called, grant, O Lord, that their conversations may be such as becometh the Gospel of Christ, that his Name be no longer blasphemed among the Heathens through us. O Blessed Lord, how long shall Christendom continue the vilest part of the world, a sink of all those abominable pollutions, which even Barbarians detest? O let not our profession and our practice be always at so wide a distance. Let not the Disciples of the holy and Immaculate Jesus be of all others the most profane and impure. Let not the subjects of the Prince of Peace be of all others the most contentious and bloody; but make us Christians in deed as well as in name, that we may walk worthy of that Holy vocation wherewith we are called, and may all with one mind and one mouth glorify thee the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Have mercy on this languishing Church, look down from Heaven the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies towards us? Are they restrained? Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity forever; but though our backslidings are many, and we have grievously rebelled, yet according to all thy goodness let thy anger & thy fury be turned away, & cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary which is desolate, for the Lord's sake; and so separate between us and our sins, that they may no longer separate between us and our God. Save and defend all Christian Kings, Princes & Governors, especially those to whom we owe subjection; plead thou their cause, O Lord, against those that strive with them, & fight thou against those that fight against them, & so guide & assist them in the discharge of that office whereunto thou hast appointed them, that under them we may lead quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness & honesty. Bless them that wait at thine Altar, open thou their lips that their mouth may show forth thy praise; O let not the lights of the world be put under bushels, but place them in their Candlesticks, that they may give light to all that are in the house. Let not Jeroboams Priests profane thy Service, but let the seed of Aaron still minister before thee. And O thou Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, succor and relieve all that are in affliction, and deliver the outcast and poor, help them to right that suffer wrong, let the sorrowful sighing of the prisoners come before thee, and according to the greatness of thy power, preserve thou those that are appointed to die; grant ease to those that are in pain, supplies to those that suffer want, give to all presumptuous sinners a sense of their sins, and to all despairing, a sight of thy mercies, and do thou, O Lord, for everyone above what they can ask or think. Forgive my enemies, persecutors and slanderers, and turn their hearts. Pour down thy blessings on all my friends, and benefactors, all who have commended themselves to my Prayers. [Here thou may est name particular persons.] And grant, O merciful Father, that through this blood of the Cross, we may all be presented pure and unblameable and unreprouvable in thy sight; that so we may be admitted into that place of purity, where no unclean thing can enter, there to sing eternal praises to Father, Son and Holy Ghost forever.

A Prayer in times of common Persecution.

O BLESSED Savior, who hast made the Cross the badge of thy Disciples, enable me I beseech thee, willingly and cheerfully to embrace it; thou seest, O Lord, I am fallen into days, wherein he that departeth from evil maketh himself a Prey, O make me so readily to expose all my outward concernments, when my obedience to thee requireth it, that what falls as a Prey to men, may by thee be accepted as a Sacrifice to God: Lord preserve me so by thy grace that I never suffer as an evil doer, and then, O Lord, if it be my lot to suffer as a Christian, let me not be ashamed, but rejoice that I am counted worthy to suffer for thy Name: O thou who for my sake enduredst the cross; and despisedst the shame, let the example of that love and patience prevail against all the tremblings of my corrupt heart, that no terrors may ever be able to shake my constancy, but that how long soever thou shalt permit the rod of the wicked to lie on my back, I may never put my hand unto wickedness: Lord thou knowest whereof I am made, thou rememberest that I am but flesh; and flesh, O Lord, shrinks at the approach of anything grievous. It is thy Spirit, thy Spirit alone, that can uphold me, O stablish me with thy free Spirit, that I be not weary and faint in my mind. And by how much the greater thou discernest my weakness, so much the more do thou show forth thy power in me, and make me, O Lord, in all temptations steadfastly to look to thee, the author and finisher of my faith, that so I may run the race which is set before me, and resist even unto blood, striving against sin: O dear Jesus, hear me, and though Satan desire to have me, that he may winnow me as wheat, yet do thou O blessed Mediator, pray for me that my faith fail not, but that though it be tried with fire, it may be found unto praise and glory and honor at thy appearing. And, O Lord, I beseech thee grant that I may preserve not only constancy towards God, but charity also towards men, even those whom thou shalt permit to be the instruments of my sufferings: Lord, let me not fail to imitate that admirable meekness of thine, in loving and praying for my greatest persecutors; and do thou, O Lord, overcome all their evil with thy infinite goodness, turn their hearts, and draw them powerfully to thyself, and at last receive both me and mine enemies into those mansions of peace and rest, where thou reignest with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, one God, forever.

A Prayer in time of Affliction.

O JUST and holy Lord, who with rebukes dost chasten man for sin, I desire unfeignedly to humble myself under thy mighty hand, which now lies heavy upon me, I heartily acknowledge, O Lord, that all I do, all I can suffer, is but the due reward of my deeds, and therefore in thy severest inflictions I must still say, righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments. But, O Lord, I beseech thee in judgment remember mercy, and though my sins have enforced thee to strike, yet consider my weakness, and let not thy stripes be more heavy, or more lasting then thou seest profitable for my soul; correct me but with the chastisement of a father, not with the wounds of an enemy, and though thou take not off thy rod, yet take away thine anger: Lord, do not abhor my soul, nor cast thy servant away in displeasure, but pardon my sins, I beseech thee; and if yet in thy Fatherly wisdom, thou see fit to prolong thy corrections, thy blessed will be done, I cast myself O Lord, at thy feet, do with me what thou pleasest. Try me as silver is tried, so thou bring me out purified. And Lord make even my flesh also to subscribe to this resignation, that there may be nothing in me, that may rebel against thy hand, but that having perfectly suppressed all repining thoughts, I may cheerfully drink of this cup. And how bitter soever thou shalt please to make it, Lord, let it prove medicinal, and cure all the diseases of my soul, that it may bring forth in me the peaceable fruit of righteousness. That so these light afflictions which are but for a moment, may work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, through Jesus Christ.

A Thanksgiving for Deliverance.

O Blessed Lord, who art gracious and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil; I thankfully acknowledge before thee that thou hast not dealt with me after my sins, nor rewarded me according to my iniquities. My rebellions, O Lord, deserve to be scourged with Scorpions, and thou hast corrected them only with a gentle and fatherly Rod; neither hast thou suffered me to lie long under that, but hast given me a timely and a gracious issue out of my late distresses. O Lord, I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy, for thou hast considered my trouble, and hast known my soul in adversity. Thou hast smitten, and thou hast healed me, O let these various methods of thine have their proper effects upon my soul, that I who have felt the smart of thy chastisements may stand in awe and not fin, and that I who have likewise felt the sweet refreshings of thy mercy may have my heart ravished with it, and knit to thee in the firmest bands of love, and that by both I may be preserved in a constant, entire obedience to thee all my days, through Jesus Christ.

Directions for the time of Sickness.

WHEN thou findest thyself visited with Sickness thou art immediately to remember that it is God, which with rebukes doth chasten man for sin. And therefore let thy first care be to find out what it is that provokes him to smite thee, and to that purpose Examine thine own heart, search diligently what quilts lie there, confess them humbly and penitently to God, and for the greater security renew thy Repentance for all the old sins of thy former life, beg most earnestly and importunately his mercy and pardon in Christ Jesus, and put on sincere and zealous resolutions of forsaking every evil way for the rest of that time which God shall spare thee. And that thy own heart deceive thee not in this so weighty a business, it will be wisdom to send for some godly Divine, not only to assist thee with his prayers, but with his counsel also. And to that purpose open thy heart so freely to him that he may be able to judge whether thy Repentance be such as may give thee confidence to appear before God's dreadful Tribunal, and that if it be not, he may help thee what he can towards the making it so. And when thou hast thus provided for thy better part, thy Soul, then consider thy Body also, and as the Wise man saith, Ecclus. 38. 12. Give place to the Physician, for the Lord hath created him: Use such means as may be most likely to recover thy health, but always remember that the success of them must come from God; and beware of Asa's sin, who sought to the Physicians, and not to the Lord, 2 Chro. 6. 12. Dispose also betimes of thy temporal affairs, by making thy Will, and setting all things in such order as thou meanest finally to leave them in, and defer it not till thy sickness grow more violent, for then perhaps thou shalt not have such use of thy Reason as may fit thee for it, or if thou have, it will be then much more seasonable to employ thy thoughts on higher things, on the world thou art going to, rather than that thou art about to leave; we cannot carry the things of this world with us when we go hence, and it is not fit we should carry the thoughts of them. Therefore let those be early dispatched that they may not disturb thee at last.

A Prayer for a sick person.

O Merciful and Righteous Lord, the God of health and of sickness, of life and of death, I most unfeignedly acknowledge that my great abuse of those many days of strength and welfare, which thou hast afforded me, hath most justly deserved thy present visitation. I desire, O Lord, humbly to accept of this punishment of mine iniquity, and to bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. And, O thou merciful Father, who designest not the ruin but the amendment of those whom thou scourgest, I beseech thee by thy grace so to sanctify this correction of thine to me, that this sickness of my body may be a means of health to my soul, make me diligent to search my heart, and do thou O Lord, enable me to discover every accursed thing, how closely soever concealed there, that by the removal thereof, I may make way for the removal of this punishment. Heal my soul, O Lord, which hath sinned against thee, and then if it be thy blessed will, heal my body also, restore the voice of joy and health unto my dwelling, that I may live to praise thee, and to bring forth fruits of repentance. But if in thy wisdom thou hast otherwise disposed, if thou hast determined that this sickness shall be unto death, I beseech thee to fit and prepare me for it, give me that sincere and earnest repentance, to which thou hast promised mercy and pardon; wean my heart from the world, and all its fading vanities, and make me to gasp and pant after those more excellent and durable joys which are at thy right hand forever. Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, and in all the pains of my body, in all the agonies of my spirit, let thy comforts refresh my soul, and enable me patiently to wait till my change come. And grant, O Lord, that when my earthly house of this Tabernacle is dissolved I may have a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. And that for his sake who by his precious blood hath purchased it for me, even Jesus Christ.

A Thanks giving for Recovery.

O Gracious Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose hand my time is, I praise and magnify thee that thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption, and restored me to health again; it is thou alone, O Lord, that hast preserved my life from destruction, thou hast chastened and corrected me, but thou hast not given me over unto death; O let this life which thou hast thus graciously spared be wholly consecrated to thee. Behold, O Lord, I am by thy mercy made whole, O make me strictly careful to sin no more lest a worse thing come unto me. Lord, let not this reprieve thou hast now given me, make me secure, as thinking that my Lord delayeth his coming, but grant me I beseech thee to make a right use of this long suffering of thine, and so to employ every minute of that time thou shalt allow me, that when thou shalt appear I may have confidence and not be ashamed before thee at thy coming. Lord I have found by this approach towards death, how dreadful a thing it is to be taken unprepared. O let it be a perpetual admonition to me to watch for my Masters coming. And when the pleasures of sin shall present themselves to entice me, O make me to remember how bitter they will be at the last. O Lord hear me, and as thou hast in much mercy afforded me time, so grant me also grace to work out my own salvation, to provide oil in my lamp, that when the Bridegroom cometh I may go with him to the marriage. Grant this I beseech thee for thy dear Sons sake.

A Prayer at the approach of Death.

O Eternal and everliving God, who first breathedst into man the breath of life, and when thou takest away that breath he dies and is turned again to his dust, look with compassion on me thy poor creature who am now drawing near the gates of death, and which is infinitely more terrible, the bar of Judgment. Lord my own heart condemns me, and thou art infinitely greater than my heart, and knowest all things. The sins I know and remember, fill me with horror; but there are also multitudes of others, which I either observed not at the time, or have since carelessly forgot, which are all present to thee. Thou settest my misdeeds before thee, and my secret sins in the light of thy countenance; and to what a mountainous heap must the minutely provocations of so many years arise? How shall one so ungodly stand in thy Judgment, or such a sinner in the Congregation of the Righteous? And to add yet more to my terror, my very repentance I fear will not abide the trial; my frequent relapses heretofore have sufficiently witnessed the unsinceritie of my past resolutions. And then, O Lord, what can secure me that my present dislikes of my sins are not rather the effects of my amazing danger than of any real change? And, O Lord, I know thou art not mocked, nor wilt accept of anything that is not perfectly sincere. O Lord, when I consider this, fearfulness and trembling comes upon me, and an horrible dread overwhelmeth me, my flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and my heart is wounded within me. But, O Lord, one deep calleth upon another, the depth of my misery upon the depth of thy mercy; Lord, save now or I perish eternally. O thou who willest not that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, bring me, I beseech thee, though thus late, to a sincere Repentance, such as thou wilt accept, who triest the heart. Create in me, O God, a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me: Lord, one day is with thee as a thousand years, O let thy mighty spirit work in me now in this my last day, whatsoever thou seest wanting to fit me for thy mercy and acceptation. Give me a perfect and entire hatred of my sins, and enable me to present thee with that sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart, which thou hast promised not to despise; that by this I may be made capable of that atonement which thy dear Son hath by the more excellent oblation of himself made for all repenting sinners. He is the propitiation for our sins, he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was on him, O heal me by his stripes, and let the cry of his blood drown the clamour of my sins. I am indeed a child of wrath, but he is the Son of thy love, for his sake spare me, O Lord, spare thy creature whom he hath redeemed with his most precious blood, and be not angry with me forever. In his wounds O Lord, I take Sanctuary, O let not thy vengeance pursue me to this City of refuge: my soul hangeth upon him, O let me not perish with a Jesus, with a Savior in my arms. But by his Agony and bloody sweat, by his Cross and Passion, by all that he did and suffered for sinners, good Lord deliver me; deliver me, I beseech thee, from the wages of my sins, thy wrath and everlasting damnation, in this time of my tribulation, in the hour of death, and in the day of Judgment. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, and do not now repay my former neglects of thy calls, by refusing to answer me in this time of my greatest need; Lord, there is but a step between me and death, O let not my sun go down upon thy wrath, but seal my pardon before I go hence and be no more seen. Thy loving kindness is better then the life itself, O let me have that in exchange, and I shall most gladly lay down this mortal life. Lord, thou knowest all my desire, and my groaning is not hid from thee; deal thou with me, O Lord, according to thy Name, for sweet is thy mercy; take away the sting of death, the guilt of my sins, and then though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil; I will lay me down in peace, and Lord when I awake up, let me be satisfied with thy presence in thy glory. Grant this merciful God for his sake who is both the Redeemer and Mediator of sinners, even Jesus Christ.

PSALMS.

PUT me not to rebuke, O Lord, in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy heavy displeasure.

There is no health in my flesh because of thy displeasure, neither is there any rest in my bones by reason of my sins.

For my wickednesses have gone over my head, and are a sore burden too heavy for me to bear.

My wounds stinck and are corrupt through my foolishness.

Therefore is my spirit vexed within me and my heart within me is desolate.

My sins have taken such hold upon me that I am not able to look up, yea, they are more in number then the hairs of my head, and my heart hath failed me.

But thou, O Lord God, art full of compassion and mercy, longsuffering, plenteous in goodness and truth.

Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery.

If thou Lord shouldst be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord, who may abide it?

O remember not the sins and offenses of my youth, but according to thy mercy think thou upon me for thy goodness.

Look upon my adversity and misery, and forgive me all my sin.

Hide not thy face from thy servant, for I am in trouble, O haste thee and hear me.

Out of the deep do I call unto thee, Lord hear my voice.

Turn thee, O Lord, and deliver my Soul, O save me for thy mercies sake.

O go not from me, for trouble is hard at hand, and there is none to help.

I stretch forth my hands unto thee, my Soul gaspeth unto thee, as a thirsty land.

Draw nigh unto my soul and save it, O deliver me, because of my enemies.

For my Soul is full of trouble, and my life draweth nigh unto hell.

Save me from the Lions mouth, hear me from among the horns of the Unicorns.

O set me up upon a rock that is higher then I, for thou art my hope, and a strong Tower for me against the enemy.

Why art thou so heavy, O my soul, and why art thou so disquieted within me?

Put thy trust in God for I will yet give him thanks for the help of his countenance.

The Lord shall make good his loving kindness towards me, yea, thy mercy, O Lord, endureth forever, despise not then the work of thine own hands.

O GOD, thou art my God, early will I seek thee.

My Soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh also longeth after thee, in a barren and dry land where no water is.

Like as the heart desireth the water brooks, so longeth my Soul after thee O God.

My Soul is athirst for God, even for the living God, when shall I come to appear before the presence of God?

How amiable are thy dwellings, O Lord of Hosts!

My Soul hath a desire and longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord, my flesh and my heart rejoice in the living God.

O that I had wings like a Dove, for then would I fly away and be at rest.

O send out thy light and thy truth, that they may lead me, and bring me unto thy holy Hill, and to thy dwelling.

For one day in thy Courts is better then a thousand:

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

I should utterly have fainted, but that I believed verily to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living.

Thou art my helper and my redeemer, O Lord, make no long tarrying.

EJACULATIONS.

O LORD, of whom may I seek for succor but of thee, who for my sins art justly displeased? Yet O Lord God most Holy, O Lord most Mighty, O Holy and most Merciful Savior, deliver me not into the bitter pains of eternal death.

Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of my heart, shut not up thy merciful eyes to my prayer, but hear me, O Lord most Holy, O God most Mighty, O Holy and Merciful Savior, thou most worthy Judge eternal, suffer me not at my last hour for any pains of death to fall from thee.

Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am not worthy to be called thy child, yet O Lord, do not thou cast off the bowels and compassions of a Father, but even as a father pitieth his own children, so be thou merciful unto me.

Lord, the prince of this world cometh, O let him have nothing in me, but as he accuseth, do thou absolve; he lays many and grievous things to my charge, which he can too well prove, I have nothing to say for myself, do thou answer for me, O Lord my God.

O Lord I am clothed with filthy garments, and Satan stands at my right hand to resist me, O be thou pleased to rebuke him, and pluck me as a brand out of the fire, cause mine iniquities to pass from me, and clothe me with the righteousness of thy Son.

Behold, O God, the Devil is coming towards me, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time, O save and deliver me lest he devour my soul like a Lion, and tear it in pieces while there is none to help.

O my God, I know that no unclean thing can enter into thy Kingdom, and I am nothing but pollution, my very righteousness are as filthy rags, O wash me and make me white in the blood of the Lamb, that so I may be fit to stand before thy Throne.

Lord, the snares of death compass me round about▪ O let not the pains of hell also take hold upon me, but though I find trouble and heaviness, yet O Lord I beseech thee deliver my soul.

O dear Jesus, who hast bought me with the precious price of thine own blood: challenge now thy purchase, and let not all the malice of Hell pluck me out of thy hand.

O blessed high Priest, who art able to save them to the utmost, who come unto God by thee, save me I beseech thee, who have no hope, but on thy merits and intercession,

O God I confess I have defaced that Image of thine, thou didst imprint upon my Soul, Yet O thou faithful Creator, have pity on thy creature.

O Jesu, I have by my many and grievous sins crucified thee afresh, yet thou who prayedst for thy persecutors, intercede for me also, and suffer not, O my Redeemer, my soul (the price of thy blood (to perish.

O Spirit of grace, I have by my horrid impieties done despite to thee, yet, O Blessed Comforter, though I have often grieved thee, be thou pleased to succor and relieve me, and say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

Mine eyes look unto thee, O Lord, in thee is my trust, O cast not out my soul.

O Lord in the have I trusted, let me never be confounded.

O Blessed Lord, who scourgest every Son whom thou receivest, let me not be weary of thy correction, but give me such a perfect subjection to thee the Father of Spirits, that this chastisement may be for my profit, that I may thereby be partaker of thy holiness.

O thou Captain of my Salvation, who wert made perfect by sufferings, sanctify to me all the pains of body, all the terrors of mind which thou shalt permit to fall upon me.

Lord, my fins have deserved eternal torments, make me cheerfully and thankfully to bear my present pains, chasten me as thou pleasest here, that I may not be condemned with the world.

Lord, the waters are come in even unto my soul, O Let thy Spirit move upon these waters, and make them like the pool of Bethesda, that they may cure whatsoever spiritual disease thou discernest in me.

O Christ, who first sufferedst many and grievous things, and then enteredst into thy glory, make me so to suffer with thee, that I may also be glorified with thee.

O dear Jesus, who humbledst thyself to the death of the Cross for me, let that death of thine sweeten the bitterness of mine.

When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, thou didst open the Kingdom of heaven to all believers.

I believe that thou shalt come to be my Judge.

I pray thee therefore help thy servant whom thou hast redeemed with thy most precious blood.

Make me to be numbered with thy Saints in glory everlasting.

Thou art the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in thee, though he were dead, yet shall he live: Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief.

My flesh, and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever.

I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ which is far better: Lord, I groan earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with that house from heaven.

I desire to put off this my tabernacle, O be pleased to receive me into everlasting habitations.

Bring my soul out of prison that I may give thanks unto thy name.

Lord, I am here to wrestle not only with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers, and spiritual wickedness, O take me from these tents of Kedar, into the heavenly Jerusalem, where Satan shall be utterly trodden under my feet.

I cannot here attend one minute to thy service, without distraction, O take me up to stand before thy Throne, where I shall serve thee day and night.

I am here in heaviness through many tribulations, O receive me into that place of rest, where all tears shall be wiped from my eyes, where there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain.

I am here in a state of banishment and absence from the Lord, O take me where I shall forever behold thy face, and follow the Lamb whither soever he goeth.

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness,

O Blessed Jesu, who hast loved me, and washed me from my sins in thine own blood, receive my soul.

Into thy hands I commend my Spirit, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord thou God of truth, Come Lord Jesu, come quickly.

PRAYERS for their use who Mourn in secret for the PUBLICK CALAMITIES, &c.

Psalm 74.

O God, wherefore art thou absent from us so long: why is thy wrath so hot against the sheep of thy pasture? &c.

Psal. 79.

O God, the Heathen are come into thine inheritance: thy holy temple have they defiled, and made Jerusalem an heap of stones, &c.

Psal. 80.

Hear, O thou shepherd of Israel, thou that ledest Joseph like a sheep: show thyself also, thou that sittest upon the Cherubims, &c.

A Prayer to be used in these times of Calamity.

O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth, I desire humbly to confess before thee, both on my own behalf, & that of this Nation, that these many years of calamity we have groaned under, are but the just, (yea mild) returns of those many more years of our provocations against thee, and that thy present wrath is but the due punishment of thy abused mercy. O Lord, thou hast formerly abounded to us in blessings above all people of the earth. Thy candle shined upon our heads, and we delighted ourselves in thy great goodness, Peace was within our walls, and plenteousness within our palaces, there was no decay, no leading into Captivity and no complaining in our streets: but we turned this Grace into wantonness, we abused our Peace to Security, our Plenty to riot & luxury, and made those good things which should have endeared our hearts to thee, the occasion of enstranging them from thee. Nay, O Lord, thou gavest us yet more precious mercies, thou wert pleased thyself to pitch thy Tabernacle with us, to establish a pure and glorious Church among us, and give us thy Word to be a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our paths; but O Lord, we have made no other use of that light, then to conduct us to the Chambers of death, we have dealt proudly, and not hearkened to thy Commandments, and by rebelling against the light, have purchased to ourselves so much the heavier portion in the outer darkness. And now, O Lord, had the overflowings of thy vengeance been answerable to that of our sin, we had long since been swept away with a swift destruction, and there had been none of us alive at this day to implore thy mercy. But thou art a Gracious God, slow to anger, and hast proceeded with us with much patience and longsuffering, thou hast sent thy Judgments to awake us to repentance, and hast also allowed us space for it: But alas! we have perverted this mercy of thine beyond all the former, we return not to him that smiteth us, neither do we seek the Lord, we are sliden back by a perpetual backsliding, no man repenteth him of his wickedness, or saith what have I done? 'Tis true indeed we fear the rod, (we dread every suffering, so that we are ready to buy it off with the foulest sin) but we fear not him that hath appointed it, but by a wretched obstinacy harden our necks against thee, and refuse to return▪ now, O God, what balm is there in Gilead that can cure us; who when thou wouldest heal us, will not be healed, we know thou hast pronounced that there is no peace to the wicked, and how shall we then pray for peace, that still retain our wickedness? This this, O Lord, is our sorest disease, O give us Medicines to heal this sickness, heal our souls, and then we know thou canst soon heal our Land. Lord, thou hast long spoken by thy Word to our ears, by thy Judgments even to all our senses, but unless thou speak by thy Spirit to our hearts, all other Calls will still be ineffectual. O send out this voice, and that a mighty voice, such as may awake us out of this Lecharge: Thou that didst call Lazarus out of the grave, O be pleased to call us who are Dead, yea, putrefied in trespasses and sins, and make us to awake to righteousness. And though, O Lord, our frequent resistences even of those inward Calls, have justly provoked thee to give us up to the Lusts of our own heart; yet, O thou boundless Ocean of mercy, who art good not only beyond what we can deserve, but what we can wish, do not withdraw the influence of thy grace, and take not thy holy spirit from us. Thou wert found of those that sought thee not, O let that act of mercy be repeated to us who are so desperately, yet so insensibly Sick, that we cannot so much as look after the Physician, and by how much our case is the more dangerous, so much the more sovereign Remedies do thou apply; Lord help us, and consider, not so much our unworthiness of thy aid, as our irremediable ruin if we want it; save Lord, or we perish eternally. To this end dispense to us in our temporal Interest what thou seest may best secure our Spiritual; if a greater degree of outward Miserie will tend to the curing our inward, Lord, spare not thy Rod, but strike yet more sharply. Cast out this Devil, though with never so much Foaming & tearing. But if thou seest that some Return of mercy may be most likely to melt us, O be pleased so far to condescend to our wretchedness as to afford us that, and whether by thy sharper or gentler methods, bring us home to thyself. And then, O Lord, we know thy hand is not shortened, that it cannot save, when thou hast delivered us from our sins, thou canst and wilt deliver us from our troubles: O show us thy mercy and grant us thy salvation, that being redeemed both in our bodies and spirits, we may glorify thee in both, in a cheerful obedience, and praise the Name of our God, that hath dealt wonderfully with us, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Prayer for This Church.

O Thou great God of recompenses, who turnest a Fruitful land into Barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell therein; thou hast most justly executed that Fatal Sentence on this Church, which having once been the perfection of Beauty, the joy of the whole earth, is now become a Scorn and derision to all that are round about her. O Lord, what could have been done to thy Vineyard that thou hast not done in it, and since it hath brought forth nothing but wild Grapes, it is perfectly just with thee to take away the hedge thereof, and let it be eaten up. But O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, yet do thou it for thy Names sake, for our backslidings are many, we have sinned against thee. O the hope of Israel, the Savior thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? Why shouldst thou be as a man astonied, as a mighty man that cannot save? Yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name, leave us not; deprive us of what outward enjoyment thou pleasest, take from us the opportunities of our luxury and it may be a mercy, but O take not from us the means of our Reformation, for that is the most direful expression of thy wrath. And though we have hated the Light because our deeds were evil, yet, O Lord, do not by withdrawing it condemn us to walk on still in darkness, but let it continue to shine till it have guided our feet into the way of peace. O Lord, arise, stir up thy strength and come and help us, and deliver not the soul of thy Turtle Dove (this disconsolate Church) unto the multitude of the Enemy, but help her, O God, and that right early. But if, O Lord, our rebellions have so provoked thee, that the Ark must wander in the Wilderness till all this murmuring Generation be consumed, yet let not that perish with us, but bring it at last into a Canaan, and let our more innocent Posterity see that which in thy just judgment thou deniest to us. In the mean time let us not cease to bewail that Desolation our sins have wrought, to think upon the stones of Zion, and pity to see her in the dust, nor ever be ashamed or afraid to own her in her lowest and most persecuted Condition, but esteem the Reproach of Christ greater riches than the Treasures of Egypt, and so approve our constancy to this our afflicted Mother, that her blessed Lord and Head may own us with mercy when he shall come in the glory of thee his Father with the holy Angels. Grant this merciful Lord, for the same Jesus Christ his sake.

A Prayer for the Peace of the Church.

LORD Jesus Christ, which of thine Almightyness, madest all creatures both visible and invisible, which of thy godly wisdom governest and settest all things in most goodly order, which of thine unspeakable goodness keepest, defendest and furtherest all things, which of thy deep mercy restorest the decayed, renewest the fallen, raisest the dead; vouchsafe we pray thee at last, to cast down thy countenance upon thy well beloved Spouse the Church, but let it be that amiable and merciful countenance wherewith thou pacifiest all things in Heaven, in earth, and whatsoever is above Heaven and under the earth: vouchsafe to cast upon us those tender and pitiful eyes with which thou didst once behold Peter that great

Shepherd of thy Church, and forthwith he remembered himself and repented; with which eyes thou once didst view the scattered Multitude and wert moved with compassion, that for lack of a good Shepherd they wandered as sheep dispersed and strayed asunder. Thou seest (O good Shepherd) what sundry sorts of Wolves have broken into thy sheep-cotes: So that if it were possible the very perfect persons should be brought into error: Thou seest with what Winds, with what Waves, with what storms thy silly ship is tossed, thy ship wherein thy little flock is in peril to be drowned. And what is now left but that it utterly sink and we all perish? Of this tempest and storm we may thank our own Wickedness and sinful living, we discern it well and confess it, we discern thy Righteousness, and we bewail our unrighteousness: But we appeal to thy Mercy which surmounteth all thy works; we have now suffered much punishment, being scourged with so many Wars, consumed with such Losses of goods, shaken with so many floods, and yet appears there nowhere any Haven or Port unto us, being thus tired and forlorn among so strange evils, but still every day more grievous punishments and more seem to hang over our heads. We complain not of thy sharpness, most tender Savior, but we discern here also thy Mercy, forasmuch as much grievous plagues we have deserved. But O most merciful Jesus, we beseech thee that thou wilt not consider nor weigh what is due for our deservings, but rather what becometh thy Mercy, without which neither the Angels in Heaven can stand sure before thee, much less we silly vessels of clay. Have mercy on us, O Redeemer, which art easy to be entreated, not that we be worthy of thy mercy, but give thou this Glory unto thine own Name. Suffer not those which either have not known thee or do envy thy glory, continually to triumph over us, and say, Where is their God, where is their Redeemer, where is their Savior, where is their Bridegroom that they thus boast on? These opprobrious words redound unto thee. O Lord, while by our evils men weigh and esteem thy Goodness, they think we be Forsaken whom they see not amended. Once when thou sleptst in the Ship, and a Tempest suddenly arising threatened death to all in the Ship, thou awokest at the outcry of a few Disciples and straightway at thine Almighty word the Waters couched, the Winds fell, the Storm was suddenly turned into a great calm; the dum waters knew their makers voice. Now in this far greater Tempest, wherein not a few men's bodies be in danger, but innumerable Souls: we beseech thee at the cry of thy holy Church, which is in danger of drowning, that thou wilt awake. So many thousands of men do cry, Lord save us, we perish, the Tempest is past Mans power; it is Thy word that must do the deed, Lord Jesu, only say thou with a word of thy mouth, Cease, O tempest, and forthwith shall the desired calm appear. Thou wouldst have spared so many thousands of most wicked men, if in the City of Sodom had been found but ten good men. Now here be so many Thousands of men which love the glory of thy Name, which sigh for the beauty of thy House, and wilt thou not at these men's Prayers let go thine Anger, and remember thine accustomed and old mercies? Shalt thou not with thy heavenly policy turn our folly into thy glory? Shalt thou not turn the wicked men's evils into thy Churches good? For thy mercy is wont then most of all to succor, when the thing is with us past Remedy, and neither the Might nor Wisdom of men can help it. Thou alone bringest things that be never so out of order into order again, which art the only Author and maintainer of Peace. Thou framedst that old Confusion wherein without order, without fashion confusedly lay the discordant seeds of things, and with a wonderful order the things that of nature fought together, Thou didst ally and knit in a perpetual band. But how much greater Confusion is this, where is no Charity, no Fidelitie, no bonds of Love, no reverence neither of Laws nor yet of Rulers, no agreement of Opinions, but as it were in a misordered Choir, every man singeth a contrary note! Among the Heavenly Planets is no dessention, the Elements keep their place, everyone do the office whereunto they be appointed: And wilt thou suffer thy Spouse, for whose sake all things were made, thus by continual discords to perish? Shalt thou suffer the wicked Spirits, which be authors and workers of discord, to bear such a swing in thy Kingdom unchecked? Shalt thou suffer the strong Captain of mischief, whom thou once overthrewest, again to invade thy Tents, and to spoil thy Soldiers? When thou wert here a man conversant among men, at thy Voice fled the Devils. Send forth, we beseech thee, O Lord, thy Spirit, which may drive away out of the breasts of all them that profess thy Name, the wicked Spirits, masters of riot, of covetousness, of vain-glory, of carnal lust, of mischief and discord. Create in us, O our God and King, a clean heart, and renew thy holy Spirit in our breasts, pluck not from us thy holy Ghost. Render unto us the joy of thy saving health, and with thy principal Spirit, strengthen thy Spouse and the Heardmen thereof. By this Spirit thou reconciledst the earthly to the Heavenly: By this thou didst frame and reduce so many Tongues, so many Nations, so many sundry sorts of men into one body of a Church, which body by the same Spirit is knit to thee their Head. This Spirit if thou wilt vouchsafe to renew in all men's hearts, then shall all these foreign miseries cease, or if they cease not, they shall turn to the profit and avail of them which love thee. Stay this Confusion, set in order this horrible Chaos (O Lord Jesus) let thy Spirit stretch out itself upon these Waters of evil wavering Opinions. And because thy spirit, which according to thy Prophets saying, containeth all things, hath also the Science of speaking; make, that like as unto all them which be of thy House, is one Light, one Baptism, one God, one Hope, one Spirit; so they may also have one Voice, one Note, one Song, professing one Catholic truth. When thou didst mount up to Heaven triumphantly, thou threwst out from above thy precious things, thou gavest Gifts amongst men, thou dealtest sundry rewards of thy Spirit. Renew again from above thy old bountifulness, give that thing to thy Church, now fainting and growing downward, that thou gavest unto her shooting up, at her first beginning. Give unto Princes and Rulers the grace so to stand in awe of thee, that they so may guide the Common-weal, as they should shortly render accompt unto thee that art the King of Kings. Give wisdom to be always assistant unto them, that whatsoever is best to be done, they may espy it in their minds, and pursue the same in their doings. Give to the Bishops the gift of Prophecy, that they may declare and interpret holy Scripture, not of their own brain, but of thine inspiring. Give them the threefold Charity which thou once demandest of Peter, what time thou didst betake unto him the charge of thy sheep. Give to the Priests the love of Soberness and of Chastity. Give to thy people a good will to follow thy Commandments, and a readiness to obey such persons as thou hast appointed over them. So shall it come to pass; if through thy Gift thy Princes shall command that thou requirest, if thy Pastors and Herdmen shall teach the same, and thy People obey them both, that the old Dignity & Tranquillity of the Church shall return again with a goodly order unto the glory of thy Name. Thou sparedst the Ninevites appointed to be destroyed as soon as they converted to repentance; and wilt thou despise thy House falling down at thy feet, which instead of sackcloth hath sighs, and instead of ashes tears? Thou promisedst Forgiveness to such as turn unto thee, but this self thing is thy Gift, a man to turn with his whole heart unto thee, to the intent all our goodness should re•ound unto thy glory. Thou art the Maker, repair the work that thou hast fashioned. Thou art the Redeemer, save that thou hast bought. Thou art the Savior, suffer not them to perish which do hang on thee. Thou art the Lord and owner, challenge thy possession. Thou art the Head, help thy members. Thou art the King, give us a reverence of thy Laws. Thou art the Prince of Peace, breath upon us brotherly love. Thou art the God, have pity on thy humble beseechers; be thou according to Paul's saying, all things in all men, to the intent the whole Choir of thy Church with agreeing minds and consonant voices for mercy obtained at thy hands, may give thanks to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, which after the most perfect example of concord be distinguished in property of Persons, and one in nature, to whom be praise and glory Eternally.

Amen.

TO THE READER.

WERE Man self-sufficient and independent, thoughts of this nature would be impertinent and unseasonable; but seeing there are hopes and fears, blessings and curses scattered in this veil of misery, and laid up in heaps against the time of the revelation of the Righteous Judgment of God; how stupid and forlorn must that soul be, which lives without God in the world; though a spacious curtain be drawn over the globe of this Earth; though we cannot perceive the regular motions of the several wheels of Providence, yet in all Estates flourishing or decaying, we ought to confide in, and depend upon his goodness, and power, and wisdom, who is the fountain of all Beings, and the Great Governor of the World; under whose conduct the good man is safe; and to the Throne of whose Grace there may be a fair access, if our prayers are managed aright, in which way I leave thee; and if these following papers can assist thee, bless God for the occasion, which is the End of the Author's Hope in this undertaking.

Farewell.

To the Honorable Mary Montague, Wife to the Right Honorable Lord chief Baron.

Madam,

SEeing it is the heart which God alone accepts, as a Sacrifice of retribution, I humbly crave you would be pleased to take a view of the counterpart of my Soul, wherein is set down the joyful correspondency it has had with Heaven; and the rather because joy and immortality, our entrance into the Blessed Mansions above, is the common interest and design of all who appeal to Heaven in the name of Christ: I know your Closet is plentifully stored with holy Ejaculations, that Sacred perfume which sweetens the very breath of the Soul, and is more acceptable to God, than costly odors, the scent of Myrrh and Frankincense, yet these Papers possibly may find entertainment; because they are penned by one whose Soul has been many years travelling that way, and therefore chiefly endeavors to speak the dialect & Language of that Kingdom: no friendship is so strong as that which is contracted by Travelers in this journey; and though I have the honor to have the same blood of R. A's. running in my veins, yet I esteem myself more happy in the beginnings of our Christian alliance and eternal duration of it, when we shall pass from this state of grace to that of glory. How glorious must your entrance be into the Holy Land; for Persons placed in so high a station by holy example command their attendants: & when you enter into the land of promise, your numerous train must follow; in which retinue to be admitted is the humble and hearty Prayer of

Madam,

Your Ladyships most humble Servant and Relation. R. A.

THE PREFACE.

I Chose the Psalms of David for the Platform of my Devotions, because nothing can be supposed more acceptable to God in duties of this nature, than to follow his steps, who was a man after God's own heart. The Original is so well penned, so full and lofty in its expressions, that Cowley, when he gave his censure of the Translators, says, that Shimei hardly reviled David more, than some of them have done. However, I reckon not myself concerned in that charge, seeing I follow the best Translation our Language bears. Were this Book of Psalms duly weighed, and considered, men might find materials for their addresses to Heaven fitted for all states and conditions; as if it were a mirror of the Passages of Humane Life, and comprehended all the desires and offices of a good man. Though David's Composures were elegant and harmonious in their native dress, yet 'twas not the Instrument, but the strings of his heart made the sweetest melody. Nothing is more charming than a soul so well tuned, so well skilled in all the parts of Divine music: Thus we join consort with the harmony of the spheres; we may be assured that the Echo is rebounded with the exultation and Hallelujahs of Heaven itself.

CHOICE MEDITATIONS Out of the PSALMIST.

Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice unto him with reverence, 2.11. But know, that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself: the Lord will hear me when I call upon him, 4.3. Offer the sacrifices of Righteousness, and put your trust in the Lord, v. 5. For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee, 5.4. For thou, Lord, wilt bless the Righteous: with favor wilt thou compass him as with a shield, 12. God judgeth the Righteous, and God is angry with the Wicked every day. If he turn not, he will whet his Sword, he hath bent his Bow, and made it ready; 7.11, 12. The Wicked shall be turned into Hell, and all the Nations that forget God. For the Needy shall not always be forgotten: the expectation of the poor shall not perish forever, 9.17, 18. The Lord trieth the Righteous; but the Wicked, and him that loveth violence, his Soul hateth. For the Righteous Lord loveth Righteousness, his countenance doth behold the upright, 11.56.7. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise saith the Lord, I will set him in safety, from him that pusseth at him. The words of the Lord are pure words, as silver tried in a furnace of Earth purified seven times in the fire, 12.5, 6. The Lord looked down from Heaven upon the children of Men, to see if there were any that would understand and seek after God, 14.2. Lord, who shall abide in thy Tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy Hill? He that walketh uprightly and worketh Righteousness, and speaketh the Truth in his Heart, 15.1, 2. In whose eyes a wise person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord: he that sweareth to his neighbor, and disappointeth him not. Thou wilt show me the path of Life; in thy presence is the fullness of joy, at thy right hand there is pleasure for evermore, 16.11. I will call upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be safe from mine enemies, 18.3. I was upright before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity: therefore the Lord hath recompensed me according to my Righteousness, and according to the cleanness of mine hand in his eye-sight. With the merciful thou shalt show thyself merciful, with an upright man, thou shalt show thyself upright; verse. 23, 24, 25. He delivereth me from mine enemies: yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the violent Man. Great deliverance giveth he to his King, and showeth mercy to his anointed, to David, and to his Seed for evermore, verse. 48, 51.

The Heavens declare the glory of God; and the Firmament showeth his handy-work, 19.1. The Lord hear thee in the day of Trouble; the Name of the God of Jacob defend thee, 20.1. Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy Counsel, verse. 4. Our Fathers trusted in thee, and thou didst deliver them; 22.4. For he hath not despised, nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him, but when he cried unto him, he heard him, verse. 24. The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall want nothing, 23.1. He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart, who hath not lift up his Soul to vanity, nor sworn deceitfully, 24.4, 5, He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the Lord of his Salvation. Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thy honor dwelleth, 26.8. Wait upon the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord, 27.14. I hate them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the Lord. I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy, for thou hast considered my trouble, thou hast known my Soul in adversities, 31.6, 7. For my life is spent with grief, my strength faileth me because of my Iniquity, and my bones are consumed, verse. 10. Blessed is he whose Transgression is forgiven, and whose Sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not Iniquity, and in whose spirit is no Guile. I acknowledge my Sin unto thee, and mine Iniquities have I not hid: I said, I will confess my Transgression unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my Sin. Be glad in the Lord, ô ye Righteous, and rejoice, and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart, 32.1, 2, 5, 11. He loveth Righteousness, and Judgment, the Earth is full of the goodness of the Lord. Let all the Earth fear the Lord, let all the Inhabitants of the World stand in awe of him. The Lord looketh from Heaven: he beholdeth all the Sons of Men. Depart from evil and do good, seek Peace, and pursue it. From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the Inhabitants of the Earth. He fashioneth all their hearts alike: he considereth their works. There is nothing saved by the multitude of an Host, neither a mighty man delivered by great strength. Behold, the Eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, and upon them that hope in his mercy: To deliver their Soul from Death, and to keep them alive in Famine, 33.5, 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19.

I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth. O magnify the Lord with me, and let us extol his Name together. I sought the Lord, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears. The poor crieth, and the Lord heareth him, and saveth him out of all his troubles. The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. O taste and see how good the Lord is to them that fear him, and trusteth in him. O fear the Lord, ye his Saints, for there is no want to them that fear him. The poor do lack, and suffer hunger, but they that seek the Lord shall want no manner of thing that is good. Keep thy Tongue from evil, and thy Lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil and do good; seek peace and pursue it. The Eyes of the Lord are over the Righteous, and his Ears open unto their cry. The Face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the Earth. The Righteous cry, and the Lord heareth and delivereth them out of all their troubles. The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite Spirit. Many are the troubles of the Righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all. Evil shall slay the Wicked, and they that hate the Righteous shall be desolate. The Lord redeemeth the Souls of his Servants, and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate, 34.1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22. For he flattereth himself in his own Eye, until his abominable Sins be found to be abominable. For with thee is the fountain of Life: and in thy Light, shall we see Light. O continue thy loving kindness unto them that know thee, and thy righteousness to them that are upright in heart 36.2, 9, 10. Fret not thyself because of the evil doers, neither be envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down like the Grass, and wither as the green herb. Trust in the Lord, and be doing good, so shalt thou dwell in the Land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently upon him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man that bringeth wicked devices to pass. Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil: For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the Land. A little that the Righteous man hath, is better than the riches of the ungodly. The Wicked borroweth and payeth not again, but the Righteous showeth mercy, and giveth. For such as be blessed of God, shall inherit the Land: and they that be cursed of him, shall be cut off. The steps of a good man is blessed of the Lord, and he delighteth in his way. Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand, I have been young, and now am old; yet never saw I the Righteous forsaken, nor their seed begging their Bread. He is ever merciful, and lendeth, and his Seed is blessed. Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the Land; when the Wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it. I have seen the Wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay-tree; Yet he passeth away, and lo, he was gone: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found. Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. The Salvation of the Righteous is of the Lord, he is their strength in the time of trouble. And the Lord shall help them, and deliver them from the Wicked, and save them, because they put their trust in him. 37.1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40. For in thee O Lord do I hope thou wilt hear, O Lord my God, 38.15. I said, I will take heed to my ways that I offend not with my Tongue: I will keep my mouth with a Bridle, while the Wicked is before me. Behold, thou hast made my days as an hand breath, and my days are as nothing before thee: verily, every man at his best state is altogether vanity, Selah. When thou with rebuke doth chasten man for Sin, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth fretting a Garment, surely every man is vanity, Selah. 39.1, 5, 11. Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his Trust: and respecteth not the proud, nor such as go about with lies, 40.4. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive, and he shall be blessed upon the Earth, and thou wilt not deliver him to the will of his Enemies, 41.2. As the Hart panteth after the Water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O my God. Why art thou cast down O my Soul, and why art thou so disquieted within me? hope thou in God, for I will yet praise him, for the light of his countenance, 42.5. God is my refuge and my strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will I not fear, though the Earth be moved, and the Mountains be carried into the midst of the Sea, 46.1, 2. For the Lord most high is terrible, he is a great King over all the Earth, 47.2. Hear this all ye People, give ear all ye Inhabitants of the Earth, 49.1. The mighty God, even the Lord hath spoken, and called the Earth from the rising of the Sun unto the going down of the same. For every Beast of the Forest is mine, and the Cattel upon a thousand Hills. I know all the Fowls upon the Mountains, and the wild Beasts of the Fields are mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, for the World is mine, and the fullness thereof. Call upon me in time of trouble, I will hear thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit, 50.10, 11, 12, 15, 19. Thy Tongue deviseth mischief, like a sharp Razor; thou lovest evil, more than good; and Lying rather than to speak Righteousness, Selah. But I am like a green Olive-tree in the House of my God. I trust in the mercy of God, forever and ever, 52.2, 3, 8. It was thou mine own familiar Friend, my guide, and my acquaintance, that hath done me this dishonor. Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the Righteous to be moved. But thou, O Lord, shalt bring them down into the pit of Destruction: bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days, but I will trust in thee O Lord, 55.13, 22, 23. In God I will praise his Word, in God I have put my trust, I will not fear what flesh can do unto me. Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the Righteous to be moved. But, O Lord, thou shalt bring them to the pit of Destruction: bloody and deceitful men, shall not live out half their days, but I will trust in thee. In God will I praise his Word, in God I have put my Trust, I will not fear what Flesh can do unto me. When I cry unto thee, then shall mine Enemies turn their Back: this I know, for God is for me, in God have I put my trust, I will not be afraid what man can do unto me, 56.4, 9, 11. Truly my Soul waiteth upon God, for of him cometh my Salvation. He only is my Rock and my Salvation: he is my defense, so that I shall not greatly be moved. Trust not in oppression, and in Robbery: if Riches increase, set not your heart upon them. God hath spoken once, twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God. Also unto thee O Lord, belongeth mercy: for thou rendrest to every man according to his Works, 62.1, 2, 10, 11, 12. He Ruleth by his Power forever, his eyes behold the Nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves, Selah. O bless our God, ye People, and make the voice of his praise to be heard. For thou, O God, hast proved, thou hast tried us, even as Silver is tried. Sing forth the honor of his Name, make his praise glorious, 66.2, 7, 8, 10. He is a Father of the Fatherless, and Judge of the Widows. God is in his holy Habitation. He that is our God, is the God of our Salvation: and unto God, belongeth the issues from Death, 68.5, 20. The humble shall see this and be glad, and your Soul shall live that seek God. For the Lord heareth the poor, and despiseth not his Prisoners, 69.32, 33. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the Souls of the needy. He shall redeem their Souls from deceit and violence, and precious shall their Blood be in his sight, 72.13, 14. The Prosperity of the Wicked; they are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued like other Men, therefore pride compasseth them about as a Chain, violence covereth them as a Garment. Their Eyes stand out with fatness, they have more than heart can wish. My Flesh and my Heart faileth, but God is the strength of my Heart, and my portion forever. Surely thou didst set them in slippery places, thou castest them down into Destruction. How are they brought into Desolation, as in a moment they are utterly consumed with terrors. But it is good for me to draw near unto God, I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works, 37.6, 18, 19, 26, 28. All the horns of the wicked will I cut off, but the horns of the Righteous shall be exalted, 5.10. Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercy? Selah. 77.8, 9. Therefore the Lord heard this, and was wroth: so fire was kindled against Jacob, and his anger also came up against Israel. Because they believed not in God: and trusted not in his Salvation. Give ear O my people, to my Laws, incline your Ears to the words of my Mouth. That they might set their hope in God, and not forget the work of God, but to keep his Commandments, 78.1, 7, 21, 22. The Wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down the chosen men of Israel. For all this they sinned still, and believed not for all his wondrous Works. But he being full of compassion, forgave all their Iniquities, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his Wrath. For he remembered that they were but flesh, a wind that passed and cometh not again, 78.31, 32, 38, 39. God standeth in the Congregation of the Mighty: he judgeth among the God's. Defend the Poor and Fatherless: do Justice to the Afflicted and Needy. Deliver the Poor and Needy out of the hand of the Wicked, 82.1, 3, 4. Thou hast forgiven the Iniquity of thy People, thou hast covered all their Sins. Thou hast taken away all thy Wrath: thou hast turned thyself from thy fierce anger. Turn us O God of our Salvation, and cause thine anger to cease from us, 85.2, 3, 4. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good, and our Land shall give her increase, verse. 12. For thou O Lord art good, and ready to forgive, and plentious in Mercy unto all them that call upon thee. In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee: for thou wilt answer me. For great is thy mercy towards me, for thou hast delivered my Soul from the lowest Hell. For thou O Lord, art a God full of compassion, and gracious: long suffering, and plentious in mercy and truth, 86.5, 7, 13, 15. Thy Wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy Waves and Stormes. But unto thee have I cried O Lord, in the morning shall my Prayer prevent thee, 88.7, 13. Thou rulest the raging of the Sea, when the Waves thereof arise, thou stillest them. The Heavens are thine, the Earth also is thine: as for the World and the fullness thereof, thou hast founded them. For the Lord is our defense, and the holy One of Israel is our King. His Seed also will he make to endure forever: and his Throne as the days of Heaven. If his Children forsake my Law, and walk in my Judgments: If they will break my Statutes, and keep not my Commandments: Then will I visit their Transgressions with the Rod, and their Iniquities with stripes. Nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him: nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My Covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not fail David. His Seed shall endure forever, and his Throne as the Sun before me. How long Lord, wilt thou hide thyself, forever? shall thy Wrath burn like fire, 89.9, 11, 18, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 46. O satisfy us early with thy mercy, that we may rejoice, and be glad all our days. Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us: and the year wherein we have seen evil. 90, 14, 15. Only with thine Eyes thou shalt behold, and see the reward of the Wicked. There shall no evil befall thee, neither any Plague come near thy dwelling. He shall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands lest thou dash thy Foot against a Stone. He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble, I will deliver him, and honor him. With long Life will I satisfy him, and show him my Salvation, 91.8, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16. Lord, how long, how long shall the Wicked triumph? The Lord knoweth the thoughts of Man, they are but vain. Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy Law. For the Lord will not cast off his People: neither will he cast off his Inheritance. When I said, my Foot slipped, thy mercy O Lord held me up. In the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my Soul. My Lord is my defense: and my God is the Rock of my refuge, 94.3, 11, 12, 14, 18, 19, 22. Come let us worship and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord our Maker, 95.6. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye Righteous, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness, 97.12. Let them praise thy great and terrible Name, for it is holy, 99.3. I will behave myself wisely, with a perfect heart, O when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within my House with a perfect heart. A froward heart shall depart from me: I will not know a wicked person. Whoso privily slandrest his Neighbor, him will I destroy: him that hath a high look, and a proud heart, I will not suffer; my Eyes shall be upon the faithful in the Land, they shall dwell with me. He that walketh in a perfect way, he shall be my Servant. He that worketh deceit, shall not dwell in my House: He that telleth Lies, shall not tarry in my sight I will early destroy all the wicked of the Land, that may cut off all the wicked doers from the City of the Lord, 101.2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. For he hath looked down from the height of his Sanctuary, from Heaven did the Lord behold the Earth: To hear the groaning of the Prisoners, to loose those that are appointed to death, 102.19, 20. Bless the Lord O my Soul, and all that is with me bless his holy Name. Bless the Lord O my Soul and forget not all his benefits. Who forgiveth all their iniquity: who healeth all thy Diseases. For as the Heaven is above all the Earth, so great is his mercy towards them that fear him. The Lord is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He will not always chide, neither will he keep his anger forever. He hath not dealt with us after our Sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquity. As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he set our Sins from us. Like as the Father pitieth his Children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame, he remembereth we are dust, 103.1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. As to the Seas thou hast set bounds that they pass not over: that they turn not again to cover the Earth. O Lord, how manifold are thy Works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the Earth is full of thy riches. So is this great and wide Sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great Beasts, 104.9, 24, 25. Glory ye in his holy Name: Let the Heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord. Seek the Lord and his strength: seek his face evermore. Remember his marvelous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth. He is the Lord our God, his judgments are in all the world. And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a Law, and unto Israel for an everlasting Covenant. Saying, unto thee will I give the Land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance. He suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, he reproveth Kings for their sakes: Saying, touch not my Anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. Moreover, he called for a Famine upon the Land: he brake the whole Staff of Bread. He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a Servant. Whose feet they hurt with fetters, he was laid in Iron. Until that time the Word came, the Word of the Lord tried him. The King came and loosed him: even the Ruler of the People, and let him go free. Israel also came out of Egypt, and Jacob sojourned in the Land of Ham. He turned their Water into Blood, and slew their Fish. Their Land brought forth Frogs in abundance, in the Chamber of their King. He spake, and there came divers sorts of Flies, and Lice in all their Coasts. He opened their Rocks, and the Water gushed out; they ran in the dry places like a River, 105.3, 4, 5, 7, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 29, 30, 31, 41. Our Fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt, neither remembered the great multitude of thy Mercies, but provoked him at the Sea, even at the Red-Sea. He rebuked the Red-sea also, and it was dried up: so led them through the depths as through the Wilderness. And he saved them from the hand of him that hated them: and redeemed them from the hand of the Enemy. The waves covered their Enemies: there was none of them left. And a Fire was kindled in their company, the flame burnt up the Wicked. Therefore he said he would destroy them, had not Moses stood before them in the breach, to turn away his Wrath lest he should destroy them. Yea, they despised that pleasant Land, they believed not his Word. But murmured in their Tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord. Therefore he lifted up his hand against them, to over-throw them in the Wilderness. Thus they provoked him to anger, with their inventions, and the Plague came upon them. Then stood up Phineas, and so the Plague ceased. They angered him also at the Waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sake. They served their Idols which were a snare unto them. And shed innocent Blood, even the blood of their Sons and of their Daughters, whom they Sacrificed unto the Idols of Canaan, and the Land was polluted with Blood. Thus were they defiled with their own Works, and went a Whoring with their own inventions. Therefore was the Wrath of God kindled against his People, insomuch that he abhorred his own Inheritance. Nevertheless, he regarded their affliction when he heard their cry. And he remembered them for his Covenant, and repented him according to the multitude of his Mercies. He made them also to be pitied of them that carried them away Captive, 106.7, 9, 10, 18, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 32, 36, 38, 39, 44, 45, 46. Blessed are they that keep Judgment, and he that doth Righteousness at all times, 106.3. They hunger and thirst, their Soul fainteth in them. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses. O that Man would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful Works to the Children of Men. For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he saved them out of their distress. Fools, because of their Transgressions, and because of their Iniquities are afflicted. And a fruitful Land is turned into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein. He turneth the Wilderness into a standing Water, and dry ground into Water-springs. The Righteous shall see it and rejoice, and all Iniquity shall stop her mouth. Whoso is wise, and will observe those things, shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord, 107.5, 6, 8, 9, 13, 14, 17, 33, 35, 42, 43.

For thy Mercy is greater than the Heavens, and thy Truth reacheth unto the Clouds. O help us against the Enemy, for vain is the help of Man. Through God we shall do great Acts, for vain is the help of Man, 108.4, 12.13. I will give thanks unto the Lord, with my whole heart secretly among the Faithful, and in the Congregation. His work is worthy to be praised, and in honor, and his Righteousness endureth forever. The merciful and gracious Lord hath so done his marvelous works, that they ought to be had in remembrance. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wisdom, a good understanding have all they that do his Commandments; his praise endureth forever, 111.1, 3, 4, 10. Blessed is the Man that feareth the Lord, he hath great delight in his Commandments. Riches and plenteousness shall be in his House, and his Righteousness endureth forever. Unto the godly there ariseth Light in the Darkness, he is Merciful, Loving, and Righteous: A good man is merciful and lendeth, and will guide his Words with discretion, he will not be afraid of any evil tyding. His heart standeth fast, and believeth in the Lord. His heart is Established, and will not shrink, until he seeth his desire upon his Enemies. He hath dispersed and given to the Poor, and his Righteousness remaineth forever. His Horn shall be exalted with Honor, 121.1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9. He maketh the Barren Woman to keep house, and to be a joyful Mother of Children, 113.8 verse.

Tremble thou Earth at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob, 114.7. As for our God he is in Heaven, he hath done whatsoever pleased him, but thou House of Israel, put thou thy trust in the Lord, he is their helper and defense; ye that fear the Lord, he is their helper and defender, he shall preserve them that fear the Lord, both small and great, 115.3, 9, 11, 13. The Lord hath inclined his Ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live. I shall find trouble and heaviness, and I shall call upon the Name of the Lord. O Lord I beseech thee deliver my Soul. Gracious is the Lord and righteous; yea, our God is merciful; the Lord preserveth the simple; I was in misery, and he helped me; I will offer unto thee the sacrifice of Thanksgiving: and call upon the Name of the Lord, 116.4, 5, 6, 15. It is better to trust in the Lord, than to put any confidence in Man: it is better to trust in the Lord, than to put any confidence in Princes; the Lord is on my side, I will not fear what Man can do unto me; thou art my God, I will praise thee; thou art my God, I will thank thee, O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is gracious, and his Mercy endureth forever, 118.6, 8, 9, 28, 29. thou hast charged that we should diligently keep thy Commandments; wherewithal shall a young Man cleanse his way, even by ruling himself after thy word; teach me, O Lord, the way of thy Statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end; O give me understanding, and I shall keep thy Law; yea, I shall keep it with my whole heart; O turn away my eyes, lest they behold vanities, and quicken thou me in thy way; O establish thy word in thy Servant, that I may fear thee; O think upon thy Servant as concerning thy word, wherein thou hast caused me to put my trust; the same is my comfort in my trouble; for thy word hath quickened me: O Lord thou hast dealt graciously according to thy word; before I was troubled I went wrong; but now I have kept thy word, thou art good and gracious; O teach me thy Statutes: O let my heart be sound in thy Statutes that I be not ashamed; quicken me after thy loving kindness, and so shall I keep the Testimonies of thy mouth: O how sweet are thy words unto my Taste, yea sweeter than Honey unto my Mouth; through thy Commandments I get understanding, therefore I hate all wicked ways; let the free-will offerings of my mouth please thee; O Lord, teach me thy Judgments: O establish me according to thy word that I may live, and let me not be disappointed of my hope; hold thou me up, and I shall be safe; yea my delight shall ever be in thy Statutes; O deal with thy Servant according to thy loving Mercy, and teach me thy Statutes; order my steps in thy word, so shall no wickedness have Dominion over me; O deliver me from the wrongful dealing of Men, so shall I keep thy Commandments; Righteous art thou O Lord, and true in thy Judgment; I call with my whole heart, O Lord, hear me, I will keep thy Statutes: Early in the Morning, O Lord, do I cry unto thee, for in thy Word is my trust: hear my voice, O Lord, according to thy loving kindness: quicken me as thou art wont, Psalm 119. O consider my Adversary and deliver me, for I do not forget thy Law; I am as glad of thy word as one that findeth great spoils; great is the grace that they have which love thy Law, and they are not offended at it; I have kept thy Commandments and Testimonies, for they are not offended at it: O let my Soul live, and it shall praise thee, and thy Judgments shall help me; I have gone astray like a Sheep that is lost; O seek thy Servant for I do not forget thy Commandment, when I was in trouble I called upon the Lord, and he heard me, my help cometh even from the Lord which hath made Heaven and Earth; the Lord shall preserve my going out and my coming in, from this time forth, and for evermore, 120.1.121.2, 8. Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the Heavens, 123.1. They that put their trust in the Lord shall be even as Mount Zion, which may not be removed, but standeth fast forever; the Hill standeth about Jerusalem; even so standeth the Lord round about his people from this time forth, and for evermore, 125.1, 2. If thou, O Lord, be extreme to mark what is done amiss; O Lord, who may abide it? there is mercy with thee, therefore shalt thou be feared, O Israel, trust in the Lord, for with the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous Redemption, and he shall redeem Israel from all their sins, 130.3, 4, 7, 8. the Lord hath made a faithful oath unto David, and he shall not shrink from it; if they will keep my Covenant and my Testimony, that I shall learn them, their Children also shall sit upon thy seat for evermore, 132.11, 13. Behold how good and pleasant a thing it is for Brethren to dwell together in unity; for the Lord promises his blessing and life for evermore, 133.1, 4. Lift up your hand in the Sanctuary, and praise the Lord, 134.3. whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in Heaven, and in Earth, in the Sea, and in all deep places; thy Name, O Lord, endureth forever; so doth thy Memorial, O Lord, from one Generation to another, for the Lord will avenge his people, and be gracious unto his Servants, 135.6, 16, 14. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth forever, 136.1. O Lord, thou hast searched me out and known me; thou knowest my down-sitting, and my up-rising; thou understandest my thoughts long before; thou art about my path, and about my bed, and spiest out all my ways: for loe, there is not a word in my Tongue, but thou, O Lord, knowest it altogether: try me, O Lord, and seek the ground of my heart; prove me, and examine my thoughts; look well if there be any way of Wickedness in me, and lead me in the way everlasting, 139.1, 2, 3, 23, 24. O Lord God thou strength of my health, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle, sure I am, the Lord will avenge the poor, and maintain the cause of the helpless, the Righteous also shall give thanks unto thy Name, and the Just shall continue in thy sight, 140.7, 12, 13. Lord I call upon thee, haste thee unto me, and consider my voice when I cry unto thee, O let not my heart be inclined to any evil thing, let me not be occupied in any ungodly work, with the Men that work wickedness, lest I eat of such things as please them, 141.1, 4. I poured out my complaint before him, and shown him of my trouble; when my Spirit was in heaviness, thou knewest my path; in the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me, 142.2, 3. Hear my Prayer, O Lord, and consider my desire; hearken unto me, O Lord, for thy Truth and Righteousness sake; teach me to do the thing that is right, for thou art my God; let thy loving Spirit lead me forth into the Land of Righteousness, 143.1, 10. The Lord is loving unto every Man, and his mercy is over all his works; great is the Lord and marvelous, worthy to be praised; there is no end of his greatness; the Lord upholdeth all such as fall, and lifteth up all those that be down; the eyes of all wait upon thee, O Lord, and thou givest them Meat in due season; thou openest thine hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousness; the Lord is Righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works; the Lord is nigh unto all that call upon him; yea, all such as call upon him faithfully; he will fulfill the desire of them that fear him; he also will hear them, and will help them, 145.3, 9, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. O praise the Lord, for it is a good thing to sing praise unto our God; yea, a joyful and a pleasant thing it is to be thankful; he healeth those that are broken in heart, and giveth Medicine to heal their sickness; he telleth the number of the Stars, and calleth them all by their Names; great is our Lord, and great is his power; yea, his Wisdom is infinite, which giveth fodder to the Cattle, and feedeth the young Ravens that call upon him; but the Lord's delight is in them that put their trust in his mercy, 147.1, 3, 4, 5, 9, 11. For the Lord hath pleasure in his people, and helpeth the meek hearted, 149.4. O praise God in his Holiness, praise him in the Firmament of his Power; Praise him in his noble Acts; praise him according to his excellent greatness; let everything that hath breath praise the Lord, 150.1, 2, 6.

O Lord, let the Words of my Mouth and the Meditations of my Heart be now, and evermore acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer.

A Prayer for the Morning.

HEar me when I call O God of my Salvation; for thou hast set me at liberty when I was in trouble; have mercy upon me, and hearken to my Prayers; Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me; ponder my Words O Lord: O Lord consider my Meditations, O hearken thou unto the words of my calling, my King and my God; for unto thee will I make my Prayer; my Voice shalt thou hear betimes in the Morning: O Lord, early in the morning will I direct my Prayer unto thee, and will look up, for thou art the God that hast no pleasure in Wickedness, neither shall any evil dwell with thee. Lead me O Lord in thy Righteousness, because of my Enemies; make my way plain before my face; Let all them that put their trust in thee rejoice; they shall ever be giving of thanks, because thou defendest them: they that love thy Name, shall be joyful in thee. O Lord rebuke me not in thine Indignation, neither chasten me in thy heavy displeasure. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am weak; O Lord heal me, for my bones are vexed; my soul also is sore troubled; how long wilt thou punish me? turn thee O Lord, and deliver my Soul, and save me for thy mercies sake; my Beauty is gone for very trouble, and worn away because of all mine Enemies. The Lord hath heard my Petition; the Lord will receive my Prayer: O let the wickedness of the Ungodly come to an end, but guide thou the Just; my help cometh of God, which preserveth them that are true of heart. I will give thanks unto the Lord, according to his Righteousness, and will pray in the Name of the Lord, the most High: have mercy upon me O Lord, consider the trouble which I suffer of them that hate me; thou that liftest me up from the gates of death: Why standest thou so far off (O Lord) and hidest thy face in the needful time of trouble? Arise (O Lord God) lift up thine head, forget not the poor. How long wilt thou forget me O Lord, forever? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? Hearken unto my voice O Lord, when I cry unto thee; have mercy upon me, and hear me. O hide not thou thy face from me, nor cast thy Servant away in displeasure: thou hast been my succor, leave me nor, neither forsake me, O God of my Salvation. O Son of Righteousness, who comest from the bosom of thy Father, the Fountain of Glory and Light, to enlighten the darkness of the World. I praise thy Name, for that thou hast preserved me from the dangers of this Night: and continued still the opportunities of serving thee, and advancing my hopes of a blessed Eternity. Let thy mercy shine brightly, and dissipate the Clouds and Darkness of my Spirit and Understanding: rectify my Affections, and purify my Will and all my Actions, that whatsoever I shall do or suffer this day, or in my whole Life, my Word and purposes and thoughts, may be Sanctified and acceptable to thy Divine Majesty: And all this I beg for thy mercies sake, Amen.

A Collect.

ALmighty and everlasting God, who dost govern all things both in Heaven and in Earth, mercifully hear the Supplications of thy Servant, and grant me thy Grace all the days of my Life, and Peace through Jesus Christ my only Lord and Savior, Amen.

The Second Collect.

ALmighty and Everlasting God, mercifully look upon mine Infirmities, and in all my dangers and necessities, stretch forth thy right hand to help and defend me, through Jesus Christ my Lord, Amen.

A Prayer for a penitent Person for Remission of his sins.

HOw long shall I seek Counsel in my Soul, and be so vexed in my heart? how long shall my Enemies triumph over me? consider and hear me, O Lord my God; lighten my eyes that I sleep not in Death, lest mine Enemies say, we have prevailed against him: If I be cast down, they that trouble me will rejoice at me, but my trust is in thy Mercy, and my Heart is joyful in thy Salvation; I will sing of the Lord because he hath dealt so lovingly with me; yea, I will praise the Lord most high. Preserve me, O God, for in thee have I put my trust; O hold up my going in thy path, that my footstep slides not; I have called upon thee, O God, for thou shalt hear me; incline thine Ears unto me, and hearken unto my words; show thy marvelous loving kindness unto me, thou that art the Savior of them that put their trust in thee, from such that resist thy right hand; keep me as the Apple of thy Eye; hide me under the shadow of thy wing from the ungodly that trouble me; mine enemies compass me round about, to take away my Soul, disappoint him and cast him down; deliver my Soul from the ungodly, which is a Sword of thine; I will call upon the Lord which is worthy to be praised, so shall I be safe from mine enemies; in my trouble I will call upon the Lord, and complain unto my God, so shall he hear my voice out of his holy Temple; my complaint shall come before him, it shall enter even into his Ear; the Lord shall reward me after my Righteous dealing, and according to the cleanness of my hand shall he recompense me; but Lord deal not with me according to my sins, neither reward me after mine Iniquities; who can tell how oft he offendeth? O cleanse thou me from my secret sins, keep thy Servant also from presumptuous sins, lest they get the Dominion over me, so shall I be undefiled and innocent from the great offense; save Lord, and hear me, O King of Heaven when I call upon thee; the Lord is my Shepherd, therefore shall I lack nothing, but be not thou far from me; O Lord thou art my succor, haste thee to help me; unto thee, O Lord, will I lift up my Soul; my God, I have put my trust in thee, let me not be confounded, neither let mine enemies triumph over me; show me thy ways, O Lord, and teach me thy paths: lead me forth in thy Truth, and learn me, for thou art the God of my Salvation, in thee hath been my hope all the day long: call to remembrance, O Lord, thy tender mercy, and thy loving kindness which hath been ever of old: O remember not the sins and offenses of my youth, but according to thy mercy think upon me, O Lord, for thy goodness, for thy Name sake; O Lord, be merciful to my sin, for it is great; turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery, the sorrows of my heart is enlarged: O bring thou me out of my trouble; look upon my adversity and misery, and forgive me all my sins; consider mine enemies how many they are that bear a tyrannous heart against me; O keep my Soul and deliver me; let me not be surrounded, for I have put my trust in thee; let perfect and righteous dealing wait upon me, for my hope hath been in thee; deliver Israel, O God, out of all his troubles; be thou my Judge, O Lord, for I have walked innocently; my trust hath been also in the Lord, therefore shall I not fall; examine me, O Lord, and prove me: try out my Reins and Heart, for thy loving kindness is always before mine eyes; and I will walk in thy Truth: But as for me, I will walk innocently: O Lord, deliver me, and be merciful unto me; hearken unto my voice, O Lord, when I call unto thee; have mercy upon me, and hear me: my heart hath talked of thee; seek ye my face, thy face, Lord, will I seek; O hide not thou thy face from me, nor cast away thy Servant in displeasure; thou hast been my succor, leave me not, nor forsake me, O God of my Salvation; teach me thy way, O Lord, and lead me in the right way, because of mine enemies: Hear the voice of mine humble petitions when I cry unto thee: when I hold up mine hand towards thy mercy Seat, of thy Holy Temple; O pluck me not away, neither destroy me with the ungodly and wicked doers, which speak friendly to their Neighbors, but imagine mischief in their hearts: Save thy people, and give thy blessing to thine Inheritance; feed them and set them up forever: I will magnify thee, O Lord, for thou hast set me up, and made my foes to triumph over me; O Lord my God, I cry unto thee, and thou hast healed me: Hear, O Lord, and have mercy upon me; Lord be thou my helper, O most merciful God, whose property is always to have Mercy, and to forgive; behold with the eyes of thy pity, and compassion, the state of thy humble Servant, made most miserable by reason of my sins; hear the voice of my weeping; pity my groaning; strengthen me, for I am weak, for my bones are vexed, and deliver my Soul from Death; that being saved from the bottomless pit, I may give thanks to thy Holy Name; O turn from the severity of thy displeasure, and visit me with thy mercy and salvation, for all my sins procure great sorrow and contrition, and in my sickness let thy comfort sustain me, through Jesus Christ my Lord, Amen.

The Collect.

O God, who knowest me to be set in so many great dangers, that by reason of the Frailty of Man, I cannot always stand upright, grant to me such strength and protection, that may support me in all dangers, and carry me through all Temptations, through Jesus Christ my only Lord and Savior. Amen.

Another.

Almighty and Everlasting God, who hatest nothing that thou hast made, and dost forgive the sins of all them that be penitent; create and make in me a new and contrite Heart, that I may worthily (lamenting my sins, and acknowledging my wretchedness) obtain of thee, the God of all mercy, perfect remission and forgiveness, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Confession of sins, and a Prayer for pardon.

IN thee, O Lord, have I put my trust, let me never be put to confusion; deliver me in thy Righteousness: bow down thine Ear to hear me, make haste to deliver me; be thou my strong Rock and the house of Defense, that thou mayest save me, for thou art my strong Rock, and Castle; be thou also my guide, and hear me for thy mercy sake: draw me out of the Net that they have privily laid for me, for thou art my strength; into thy hand I commend my Spirit, for thou hast redeemed me; O Lord, thou God of truth, have mercy upon me; O Lord, for I am in trouble: mine eyes are consumed for very heaviness, yea my soul and my body; for my life waxeth old with heaviness, and my years with mourning; my strength failed me, because of mine iniquity, and my bones, but my hope hath been in thee. O Lord, I have said thou art my God; show thy Servant the light of thy countenance, and save me for thy mercies sake; I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord, his Prayers shall ever be in my Mouth: O continue forth thy loving kindness unto them that fear thee, and thy Righteousness unto them that are true of Heart; put me not to rebuke, O Lord, in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy heavy displeasure; for thine Arrows stick fast in me, and thine hand presseth me sore; forsake me not, O Lord my God, be not thou far from me, haste thee to help me, O Lord God of my Salvation; take away thy Plague from me, for I am consumed by the means of pain, Hear my Prayers, O Lord, and with thine Ears, consider my calling: hold not thy peace at my tears: O Lord, spare me for thy mercy sake, that I may recover my strength, before I go hence, and be no more seen; withhold not thou thy mercy from me; save me for thy Mercy sake; let thy loving kindness and thy truth always preserve me: O Lord let it be thy pleasure to deliver me; make haste, O Lord, to help me; let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my Soul to destroy it; let them be driven backward and put to rebuke that wish me evil; let all those that seek thee, be joyful and glad in thee; and let such as love thy Salvation, say always, the Lord be praised; thou art my helper and my Redeemer: make no long tarrying, O my God; O Lord, be merciful unto me, heal my Soul, for I have sinned against thee; be merciful unto me, O Lord, raise thou me again, because my trust is in thy mercy; by this I know thou favourest me, that my enemies do not triumph over me: like as the Hart desireth the Water-brooks, so longeth my Soul after thee, O God; my Soul is a thirst for God; yea, even for the living God; when I shall come and appear before the presence of God; God is my hope and my strength, a very present help in trouble; the Lord of Hosts is with me; the God of Jacob is my refuge; call upon me in time of trouble, so will I hear, and thou shalt praise me: O Lord open thou my Lips, that my Mouth may set forth thy praise: Have mercy upon me, O God, after thy great goodness, according to the multitude of thy mercy, do away mine offenses; wash me thoroughly from my wickedness, and make me clean from my sins, for I acknowledge my fault, and my sin is ever before me; against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight, that thou mightest be justified in thy saying, and clear when thou judgest; thou shalt purge me with Hyssop, and I shall be clean: thou shalt wash me, and I shall be whiter than Snow; thou shalt make me hear of joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice: O give me the comfort of thy help again, and establish me with thy free Spirit; make me a clean Heart, O God, and renew a right Spirit within me; cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me: O be favorable and gracious unto Zion, and build thou the Walls of Jerusalem: Save me, O God, for thy Name sake, and avenge me in thy strength; hear my Prayers, O God, and hearken unto the words of my Mouth; behold, God is my helper; the Lord is with them that uphold my Soul: O Lord God Eternal, Judge of Men and Angels, whose property is always to have mercy, and to forgive: have mercy upon me, who confess my sins unto thee, to be so great and many, that were not thy mercy infinite, I might despair of having my unrighteousness forgiven, or misery covered: O dear God, preserve me from the great Plague that remains for the ungodly, and let thy mercy embrace me, on every side: impute not unto me the sins I have multiplied against thee, and against all the World: for I have been like to a Horse and Mule, without understanding; brutish in my passion, sensual in my affections, of unbridled heats and distemperatures, but thy Mercy is as infinite as thyself: O let not thy hand be heavy upon me, but forgive the wickedness of my sin, and compass me about with songs of deliverance; then shall I be glad and rejoice in thee, O Lord, who art become my mighty Savior, and most merciful Redeemer Jesu. Amen.

The Collect.

Almighty God, give me Grace that I cast away the work of darkness, and put upon me the Armor of Light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when he shall come to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise in the Life Immortal; through him who liveth and Reigneth with thee, and the Holy Ghost, now and forever. Amen.

A Prayer that we may despise perishing riches, and put our trust in God only.

HEar my Prayer, O God, and hide not thyself, from my petition; take heed unto me, and hear me, how I mourn in my Prayer, and am vexed; as for me, I will call upon God, and the Lord shall save me: O cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall nourish thee, and shall not suffer the Righteous to fall forever; whensoever I call upon thee, then shall mine enemies be put to flight: this I know, for God is on my side; in God's word will I rejoice; in the Lord's word will I comfort me: yea, in God have I put my trust; I will not be afraid what Man can do unto me: be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me, for my Soul trusteth in thee, and under the shadow of thy Wing shall be my refuge until this Tyranny be overpast: deliver me, from mine enemies, O God: defend me from them that rise up against me; deliver me from wicked doers, and save me from blood thirsty Men; my strength I will ascribe unto thee, for thou art the God of my Refuge: God showeth me his goodness plenteously, and God will let me see my desire upon mine enemy; unto thee, O God of my strength will I sing; for thou, O God, art my Refuge, and my merciful God: O be thou my help in trouble, for vain is the help of Man: Hear my crying, O God, and give ear unto my Prayer, he truly is my health and my Salvation; he is my defense, so that I shall not greatly fall: in God is my strength and my glory, the Rock of my Might: in God is my trust, O put your trust in him always: ye people, pour out your hearts before him, for God is my hope: Hear my voice, O God, in my Prayer; preserve my Life for fear of the Enemy: Turn me from the gathering together of the froward, and from the insurrection of wicked doers: if I incline unto wickedness with my heart, the Lord will not hear me: O God, be merciful unto me, and bless me, and show me the light of thy countenance, and be merciful unto me: Hear me, O my God, in the multitude of thy mercy; even in the truth of thy salvation. Hear me, O Lord, for thy loving kindness is comfortable; turn thee unto me, according to the multitude of thy mercies, O Lord Jesus thou only Redeemer of Souls; who by thy death and passion, deliveredst me from the place of Hell: give me grace to put my whole trust in thee, and in the riches of thy Mercy and loving kindness; always remembering my end, the vanity and shortness of my Life, and the certainty of my departure: O teach me to despise the World and worldly things, and to lay my treasure up in Heaven by Charity, and actions of Religion, that while I live here, I may have my Conversation in Heaven; by love, by hope, and by desire; that my beauty shall consume in the Sepulcher out of my Earthly dwellings, I may be received into Everlasting habitations, always to enjoy thee, who livest and Reignest, Eternal God, World without end. Amen.

The Collect.

O Lord God, who seest that I 〈◊〉 not my trust in anything that I do, mercifully grant that by thy power I may be defended against all adversity, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

Another Collect.

O Lord, who hast taught me, that all my doings without Charity, is nothing worth, send thy holy Ghost, and pour it into my heart, that most excellent gift of Charity, the very bond of peace, and all virtue, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before thee; grant this for thine only Son Jesus Christ sake. Amen.

A Prayer for pardon of sins, and restitution of God's favor.

Hide not thy face from thy servant, for I am in trouble. O haste thee, O God, to deliver me. Make haste to deliver me, O Lord. Let them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul. Let them be turned backward, and put to confusion that wish me evil. Let all those that seek thee be joyful and glad in thee; and let all those that delight in thy salvation, say always, The Lord be praised, for me, I am poor and in misery, haste thee unto me, O my God, thou art my helper and my Redeemer, O Lord, make no long tarrying: in thee, O Lord have I put my trust, let me never be put to confusion, but help me, and deliver me in thy Righteousness; incline thine Ear unto me and save me; be thou my strong hold, whereunto I may always resort: thou hast promised to help me, for thou art my house of defense, and my Castle: deliver me, O my God out of the hand of ungodly men, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man; for thou O God art the thing that I long for, for thou art my hope even from my youth; through thee have I been holpen up; ever since I was born thou art he that took me out of my Mother's womb, my praise shall be always of thee: O let my mouth be filled with thy praise, that I may sing of thy glory and honor all the day long. O cast me not away in the time of age. Forsake me not when my strength faileth me. Go not far from me, O my God; O God, haste thee to help me. Forsake me not, O my God, when I am gray-headed, until I have shewn thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to all them that are yet for to come. What great trouble and adversity hast thou shown me, and yet didst thou turn and refresh me, yea and broughtest me from the depth of the Earth again. O let not the simple go away ashamed, but let the poor and needy give praise unto thy name. O remember not my old sins, but have mercy upon me, and that right soon; for I am come to great misery, help me, O God of my salvation, for the glory of thy Name. O deliver me, and be merciful unto my sins, for thy Names sake. Turn us, O God of our salvation. Shew the light of thy countenance, and we shall be whole. O God of Hosts, how long wilt thou be angry with thy people that pray. O most merciful God, who art great, and the multitudes of thy mercies are innumerable, Have mercy upon me, for my sins are before me presented by the continual accusations of a troubled conscience. I have sinned against thee, and done evil in thy sight, and yet because thou art the God of mercy, and fountain of eternal life, delighting in the conversion and salvation of a sinner, I present unto thee the sacrifice of a troubled spirit, of a broken and a contrite heart; beseeching thee to let the dew of thy favor, and the fire of thy love wash away my sins, and purify my soul. Make me a clean heart, O God, and pure hands, though my sins be as scarlet, yet make them like wool; though they be as purple, yet make them as white as snow. Restore the voice of joy and gladness unto me: Let me not be ever separated from the sweet refreshings of thy favor and presence, but give me the comforts of thy help again, and let thy free Spirit loose me from the bondage of sin, and stablish me in the freedom and liberty of the Sons of God, so shall I sing of thy Righteousness, and my Lips shall give thee praise in the Congregations of thy Redeemed ones; now, henceforth, and forever-more. Amen.

The Collect.

ALmighty and everlasting God, who hast nothing that thou hast made, and doest forgive the Sins of all them that be penitent; create and make in me a new and contrite Heart, that I may worthily lament my Sins, and acknowledge my Wickedness, that I may obtain of thee, the God of all comfort, perfect Remission and forgiveness, through Jesus Christ my Lord, Amen.

Another Collect.

ALmighty God, who through thy only Son Jesus Christ, hast overcome Death, and opened unto us the Gate of Everlasting Life: I humbly beseech thee, that as by thy special grace preventing us, thou doest put in our Minds good desires, so by thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect, through Jesus Christ our Lord, who Liveth, and Reigneth with thee, and the Holy Ghost, ever one God; world without end. Amen.

A Prayer that we may trust, in God, only in all our trouble.

TURN again thou God of Hosts, look down from Heaven; behold and visit thy Servant. O Lord God of Hosts, hear my Prayers, hearken O God of Jacob, behold, O God my defender, and look upon the face of thine Anointed; O Lord God of Hosts, blessed is the Man that putteth his Trust in thee: Turn thou me O God of my Savior, and let thine Anger cease from me. Shew me thy mercy O Lord, and grant me thy Salvation. Bow down thine ear, O Lord, and hear me, for I am poor and in misery: Preserve thou my Soul, for I am thy Servant; my God, save him that putteth his trust in thee. Be merciful unto me, O Lord, for I will daily call upon thee: comfort the Soul of thy Servant, for unto thee O Lord, do I lift up my Soul; for thou O Lord, art my Defender, and thou art good and gracious, and of great mercy to all them that Call upon thee; give ear O Lord, unto my Prayer, and ponder the voice of my humble desires; in the time of trouble will I call upon thee, for thou hearest me, for thou art good, and doest wonderful things; thou art God alone, teach me thy way O Lord, for I will walk in thy Truth. O knit my Heart unto thee, that I may fear thy Name. I will thank thee, O Lord, my God, with my whole heart, and will praise thy Name for evermore; for great is thy Mercy towards me, for thou hast delivered my Soul from the neathermost Hell, and thou Lord God art full of mercy and compassion, longsuffering, and of great goodness and Truth. O turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; give thy strength unto thy Servant, and help the Son of thine Handmaid: Shew some good Token upon me for good, that they which hate me may see it, and be ashamed; because thou Lord, hast helpen and confirmed me, O Lord God of my Salvation. I have lamented Day and Night before thee: O let my Prayer enter into thy presence. Incline thine Ear unto my Calling, for my soul is full of Trouble, and my Life draweth nigh unto Hell; thine Indignation lieth hard upon me, and thy hand presseth me sore. Unto thee O Lord, do I cry, and early shall my Prayer come before thee. O Lord, why oppressest thou my Soul, and hidest thy face from me? I am in misery like unto him that is at the point of Death. Even from my youth up, thy Terrors have I suffered, with a troubled Mind. O Lord God of Hosts, who is like unto thee? Thy Truth most mighty God, is on every side; for the Lord is on my side. The Lord God of Israel is my Defense, the holy One of Israel is my King. O Lord, where is thy old loving kindness, which thou swarest unto David thy Servant in thy Truth? Remember Lord the Rebuke that I thy Servant have, and how I do bear in my bosom the Rebuke of many People. O Lord, thou hast been our Refuge from one Generation to another. O teach me to number my days that I may apply my Heart unto Wisdom. O turn thee again O Lord at the last, and be gracious unto thy Servant. Satisfie me with thy mercy, & that soon so shall I rejoice at thy mercy, and be glad all the days of my Life. O comfort thou me again, after the time wherein thou hast plagued me, and for the years wherein I have suffered Adversity. Shew thy Servants thy Work, and their Children thy Glory: for the Lord promised his Blessing, and Life forever more. When I called upon thee, thou holdest me, and enduest my Soul with much strength. O Lord thou hast searched me out, and known me; thou knowest my down-sitting, and mine up-rising; thou understandest my thoughts long before; thou art about my path, and about my bed, and espiest out all my ways; for loe, there is not a word in my tongue, but thou, O Lord, knowest it altogether. Look well, O Lord, if there be any ways of wickedness in me, and lead me in the way everlasting. Try me, O Lord, and seek the ground of my heart. Prove me, and examine my thoughts, seeing there is nothing unknown unto thee. O my God, let not mine heart be inclined to any evil thing. Let me not be occupied in any ungodly words, with the men that work wickedness, lest I eat of such things as please them, but let mine eyes look unto thee. O Lord God, in thee is my trust, O cast not out my soul. Keep me from the snare that they have laid for me, and from the traps of wicked doers. O Lord God, from whom cometh my salvation, thou art my defense and strength, my health, and my glory; give me thy grace, that I may put my trust in thee always; and that I pour out my heart before thee in all my troubles; that I may wait upon thee for the performance of all my expectation, in all my longings and desires. Be thou my defense; uphold me that I may not fall into those great sins that lay waste my conscience, or into such miseries as make me without hope or remedy, the miseries of despair, obstinate malice, or the woes of sad eternity. Teach me to despise Riches, to disclaim all trust in the creatures; not to delight in lies, or vanities; not to multiply wrongs and robbery, that when thou shalt come with power and great glory, to reward every man according to his works, thou mayest be merciful unto me, pardoning my sins, and accepting me to life eternal; through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

O God, the strength of all them that put their trust in thee, mercifully accept my praise; and because through the weakness of my mortal nature I can do no good thing without thee, grant me the help of thy grace, that in keeping of thy Commandments I may please thee, both in will and deed, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

Another Collect.

O Lord, who never failest to help and govern them, whom thou dost bring up in thy steadfast fear and love, keep me I beseech thee under the protection of thy good providence, and make me to have a perpetual love to thy holy Name, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for Spiritual Blessings, and for fruitfulness of the Earth.

O Thou strength of my health, thou hast covered my head in the day of Battle: O Lord God, consider my complaint, for I am brought very low, O deliver me from my persecutors, for they are too strong for me: Hear my prayers, O Lord, consider my desire, hearken unto me for thy Truth and Righteousness sake: Hear me, O Lord, and that soon, for my Spirit waxeth faint; hide not thy Face from me, lest I be like to them that go down to the pit: deliver me; O Lord, from mine enemies, for I fly unto thee to hide me; teach me to do the thing that pleaseth thee, for thou art my God, let thy loving Spirit, O Lord, lead me in the way of Righteousness; quicken me, O Lord, for thy name sake, and for thy righteousness sake: bring my Soul out of trouble, and of thy goodness slay mine enemies, and destroy all them that vex my Soul, for I am thy Servant. The Lord is Righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works; the Lord is gracious and merciful, long suffering and of great goodness in all his ways, & holy in all his works, the Lord is gracious and merciful, long suffering, and of great goodness; the Lord upholdeth all such as fall, and lifteth up all those that be down. O God, the hope of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that remain in the broad Sea, be thou merciful unto my sins, and let not my misdeeds prevail against me; so as to make me habitually sinful, or endlessly miserable, but give me the blessings of thy chosen; let me receive the influences of thy Grace and Benediction, by the participation of thy Word and Sacrament in thy holy Temple; and as thou embracest me with thy hand, showing wonderful things in thy Righteousness and Salvation; so let thy right hand be under my head, and give me such a portion of Temporal blessings, as shall be necessary for me; make the Earth plenteous, and bless the increase of it; crown the year with goodness, and let the Clouds drop fatness, that the Valleys standing thick with Corn; may laugh and sing thy praises, and that we being refreshed with the multitude of thy blessings, may praise thee in Zion, and at last be satisfied with the pleasures of thy House in the Celestial Jerusalem, where thou livest and reignest, one God, World without end. Amen.

A Collect.

O Lord, I beseech thee mercifully to hear me, and grant that I to whom thou hast given an hearty desire to pray, may through thy mighty Aid be defended and comforted in all dangers and miseries, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Another Collect.

O God, the Protector of all them that trust in thee, mercifully accept my prayers, and grant my request. O my God, without thee, nothing is strong, nothing is holy; increase and multiply upon me thy blessing, that thou being my Ruler and Guide▪ I may pass through things temporal, that I lose not things eternal; grant this, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ his sake, my only Lord and Savior. Amen.

A Prayer to God for all Faithful People for a blessing and deliverance from our Enemies.

MAke me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. O Lord my God, give me the spirit of grace and wisdom. Hear my prayers, and let my cry come unto thee. O Lord answer my expectations, for Christ's sake, and turn away thy face from my sins; and blot out all my offenses. O Lord my God, remember me according to the multitude of thy mercies; do away all my offenses, according to the favor thou bearest to thy people. O visit me with thy salvation. I have sinned with my Forefathers, I have done amiss, I have done wickedly; woe am I that I have gone astray from thee. Great is my grief that have lead my life in sin. Woe is me that I have forsaken thee, and lived after my own thoughts and fantasie, and not as thou wouldest, but have run from sin to sin, following the desires of my own corrupt heart, and not as thou wouldest, yet force me to repent of my evil; therefore O Lord deal not with me according to my sins, neither reward me after mine iniquities; for thy mercy is greater than the Heavens, and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds. O deliver me from my bosom sin, O help me against the enemy, for vain is the help of man; but deal thou with me, O Lord my God, according to thy Name, for sweet is thy mercy, O deliver me, for I am helpless, and poor, for my heart is wounded within me, help, O Lord my God, oh save me according to thy mercies; O look upon me, and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to be unto those that love thy Name; For I am weary of my groaning; every night wash I my bed, and water my Couch with my tears, therefore haste thee to help me, O Lord God of my salvation, and they shall know how that this is thy hand, and that thou, Lord, hast done it. O Lord God, my Helper and Redeemer, have mercy upon me, and all thy faithful people; make haste and help us, O God against all those that seek after our souls to do us mischief. Make us to delight in thee, to wait upon thy salvation, to trust in thy mercies, to rejoice in thy excellencies and perfection, that our feet being directed by thy guidance, our weaknesses strengthened by thy power, our sins pardoned by thy mercies, and our souls justified by thy free grace, we may always give thee praise with the humble addresses of devotion and thanksgiving, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

O God, who hast prepared for them that love thee, such good things as pass man's understanding, pour into our hearts such love towards thee, as pass man's understanding, that we loving thee above all things, may obtain thy promises, which exceed all we can desire, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for the continuance of God's Favor to me, even to my old Age, and longing for a happy departure.

O Lord God, foolish men are plagued for their offenses, and because of their wickedness; so when they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, he delivered them out of their distress. O that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness, and declare the wonders that he doth for the children of men. A fruitful Land maketh he barren, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein, yet he satisfies the empty soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness, such as sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, being fast bound in misery and Iron. O that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness, and declare the wonders that he doth for the children of men. O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all. The Earth is full of thy Riches. O remember the marvelous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth. O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob, his chosen; he hath been always mindful of his Covenant and Promise, that he made to a thousand generations; in the multitude of the sorrows that I had in my heart, thy comforts have refresh'd my soul; for the Lord is my Refuge, and my God is the strength of my confidence. The Lord is a great God, and King above all God's. O ye that love the Lord, see that ye hate the thing that is evil. The Lord preserveth the souls of his Saints, he delivereth them from the hand of the ungodly. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, and give thanks in remembrance of his holiness. O let me have understanding in the ways of godliness. A froward heart, shall depart from me. I will not know a wicked person. Mine eyes look upon such as be faithful in the Land, that they may dwell with me. Whoso leadeth a godly life, shall be my servant. There shall no deceitful person dwell in my house. He that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight. I shall soon destroy all the ungodly that are in the Land, that I may root out all wicked doers. O Lord God, deliver me from among the wicked, and save me for thy mercy sake, and let not my wicked sins prevail against me. Hear my prayers, O Lord, and let my cry come unto thee. O Lord God, my house of defense, and my Castle, who by thy mercies and loving Spirit hast taught me in thy ways from my first years until now; thou hast brought me to great honor, even the honor of being a Christian; the honor of Adoption, to be thy child and heir of thy glorious promises, co-heirs with thy Son Jesus Christ, and hast comforted me on every side with a continual stream of thy mercies and refreshments. Give me thy grace that I may love thee, and long for thee above all the things in this world. As thou hast holpen me up ever since I was born, so let thy mercy go along with me all the days of my life. Cast me not off in the time of Age. Give me grace that I may never cast thee off, or thy Laws from me. Let not thy grace, and the great strength I derive from thy thee, forsake me, when my natural strength fails me; but let my spirit grow upon the advantages of the flesh, and begin to receive the happiness of Eternity, by an absolute conquest over the weak, and decaying body, that after I have by thine Aid passed through the great troubles and adversities thou showest unto all thy children in the world, I may lie down in thy Righteousness, and with thy favor, that when thou bringest me out of the deep of the earth again, I may have a joyful resurrection to the society of Saints and Angels, and the full fruition of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Collect.

O God, who hast prepared for all them that love thee, such good things that pass man's understanding, pour into my heart such love towards thee, that I loving thee above all things, may obtain the promises which exceed all that I can desire, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for obtaining of Christ's Kingdom.

Hide not thy face from me, O Lord, in the time of my trouble, and incline thine ears unto me when I call. O hear me, and that right soon; for thou art full of mercy and compassion, long suffering, and of great goodness; thou art not always chiding, neither keepest thou thine anger forever; thou dost not deal with me after my sins, nor rewardest thou me according to my wickedness; for look how high the Heaven is in comparison of the Earth, so far hast thou set my sins from thee; yea, like as a Father pitieth his own Children, even so the Lord is merciful to them that fear him; for he knoweth whereof we be made; he remembereth we are but dust, and the merciful goodness of the Lord endureth forever, and ever, to them that fear him, and his Righteousness to his Children's Children, even upon such as keep his Covenant, and think upon his Commandments, to do them. Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, he hath great delight in his Commandments, his seed shall be mighty upon earth; the generation of the faithful shall be blessed; riches and plentiousness shall be in his house, his Righteousness endureth forever. Unto the godly there riseth up light in the darkness; he is merciful, loving and righteous. A good man is merciful and lendeth, and will guide his words with discretion, for he shall never be moved, and the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance; for he will not be afraid of any evil tidings, for his heart standeth fast, and is stablished in the Lord, and will not shrink, until he seeth his desire upon his enemies; therefore not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but give the praise unto thy Name, for thy loving mercy, for thy Truth sake; as for our God, he is in Heaven, he hath done whatsoever pleased him. Gracious is the Lord, and righteous, yea our God is merciful. O blessed Jesu, who didst descend from Heaven into the womb of the blessed Virgin, like Rain into a fleece of wool; thou that punishest the wrong doer, and defendest the Children of the poor, and them that have no helper, have mercy upon thy Church, be pleased by her Ministry to extend thy blessing upon thy dominion, from the one Sea to the other, even to the worlds end, that all the Kings of the earth may fall down before thee, and all Nations may do thee service. Make thy righteous people to flourish, and subdue their enemies under them; deliver them from falsehood and wrong, that they may be blessed with abundance of grace, and be satisfied with thy righteousness and salvation, through thy mercies, O blessed Savior and Redemer Jesu. Amen.

The Collect.

THE Lord of all power and might, who art the Author and giver of all good things, graft in my heart the love of thy Name; increase in me true Religion, enrich me with all goodness, and of thy great mercy keep me in the same, through Jesus my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer that we may have our portion in God, and not in the good things of the men of this world.

O Lord God, who art loving unto all thy people, even unto such as are of a clean heart, give me a heart humble and merciful, that I may never be holden with pride, nor overwhelmed with cruelty; and sanctify my words and lips, that I may never blaspheme thy holy Name, nor my talking be ever against thee, or thy honor. O God most highest, give unto me such religious and mortified affections, that I may never thirst after temporal advantages and prosperity of the world. Set not my feet in slippery places, lest I be suddenly cast down, and have my portion in the lot of the wicked, who perish and come to a fearful end. Guide me with thy counsel, that I holding me fast by thee, and putting my trust in thee, O God, thou mightest be the strength of my heart, the hope of my soul, and the ground of all the confidence and content in this life, and after this life is ended thou mayest receive me with glory, and be my portion forever, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer that we may fear God's Judgments, and be freed from the terrors of men, and a Motive to move thereunto.

THE Lord preserveth the simple. I was in misery, and he helped me, for his merciful kindness is ever more and more towards me, and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise the Lord, O give thanks unto the Lord for he is gracious, because his mercy endureth forever. I called upon the Lord in trouble, and he heard me. The Lord is on my side, I will not fear what man can do unto me. The Lord taketh my part with them that help me, therefore I shall see my desire upon mine enemies. It is better to trust in the Lord, than to put any confidence in Princes. The Lord is my strength and my song, he is become my salvation. The Lord hath chastened and corrected me, but he hath not given me over unto death. Help me now, O Lord, send me now prosperity. Thou art my God, I will praise thee. Thou chargest that I should diligently keep thy Commandments. O that my ways were made so direct, that I might keep thy Statutes: so shall I not be confounded while I have respect unto thy Commandments. I will keep thy Testimonies, O forsake me not utterly. Blessed art thou O Lord; teach me thy Statutes. I have had as great delight in the ways of thy Testimonies, as in all manner of riches. My delight shall be in thy Statutes, and I will not forget thy Word; therefore O Lord, do well unto thy servant, that I may live and keep thy Word. Open thou mine eyes, that I may see the wonders of thy Law. Turn not from me, neither rebuke me, for I have kept thy Statutes. My soul melteth away for very heaviness. O comfort thou me according to thy Word. Take from me the way of lying, and cause thou me to make much of thy Law. I have chosen the way of Truth, and thy Judgments have laid before me. I have stuck unto thy Testimonies. O Lord confound me not. O Lord God, whose dwelling is in the Heaven, and thy Name is great in all the world, plant the dread and reverence of thee, and thy power in my heart. Let threatenings, and thy Judgments which are heard from Heaven, and executed upon disobedient and gainsaying people, make me to tremble at the remembrance of my sins, and in consideration of my weaknesses and demerits, and let thy mercies, and the remembrance of thy infinite loving kindnesses, make my heart still full of eavenness and tranquility, that I may not fear the fierceness of man, or the wrath of those spirits thou can refrain, lest I be disturbed in my duty towards thee, that I never offend against thee, but may pass from fear to love, from apprehensions of thy wrath, to the sense and comforts of thy mercies, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

O God, whose never failing providence ordereth all things both in Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech thee to put away from me all hurtful things; to give me those things that be profitable for me, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer that God may remove from me all fearfulness and doubt of his favor and mercy.

TEach me O Lord, the way of thy Statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end. Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy Law, yea I shall keep it with my whole heart. Make me to go in the path of thy Commandments, for therein is my delight. Incline my heart to thy Testimonies, and not to covetousness. O turn away mine eyes, lest they behold vanities, and quicken thou me in thy way. O stablish thy Word in thy servant, that I may fear thee. Take away the rebuke that I am afraid of, for thy Judgments are good. Behold my delight is in thy Commandments, O quicken me in thy Righteousness. O take not the word of thy Truth utterly out of my mouth, for my hope is in thy Judgments, so shall I always keep thy Law, yea forever and ever. O think upon thy servant. as concerning thy Word wherein thou hast caused me to put my trust; the same is my comfort in my trouble, for thy Word hath quickened me. O turn me into true understanding and knowledge, for I have believed thy Commandments. Before I was troubled I went wrong, but now I have kept thy Word. Thou art good and gracious, O teach me thy Statutes. It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I might learn thy Statutes. O let thy loving mercies come unto me, that I may live, for thy Law is my delight. O let my heart be sound in thy Statutes, that I be not ashamed. O quicken me after thy loving kindness, so shall I keep the Testimony of thy mouth. If my delight had not been in thy Law, I should have perished in my trouble. I will never forget thy Commandments, for with them thou hast quickened me. I am thine, O save me for thy mercies sake, for I have sought thy Commandment. The ungodly laid wait for me to destroy me, but I will consider thy Testimonies. I desire to refrain my feet from every evil way, that I may keep thy Word. I am troubled above measure, quicken me O Lord according to thy Word, and deliver me for thy mercy sake. O God, who dost wonders, and hast declared thy power amongst all people, let the observation of thy mercies and loving kindnesses make deep impression in my heart and memory, that when I am in heaviness, I may remember the years of thy right hand, and call to mind the wonders of old time, although thou sometime withdrawest the brightness of thy countenance from me, and shuttest up thy loving kindness in sore displeasure, yet the experience of thy old mercies, which never fail, may sustain mine infirmities, and the expectation of thy loving kindnesses may cure all my impatience, till in thy due time the sense of thy favors may actually relieve all my distresses, and thy right hand lead me like a sheep into the folds of eternal rest and security, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

GRant unto me, O Lord, I humbly beseech thee, the Spirit, to think and do all such things as be rightful, that I who cannot do anything that is good without thee, may be enabled to live according to thy Will, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for God's free mercy in the the pardon of my sins, and a prayer for the continuance and the increase of his mercies to me.

LET the free-will offering of my mouth please thee, O Lord, and teach me thy Judgments. I have applied my heart to fulfill thy Statutes always even unto the end. Thou art my defense and my shield, and my trust is in thy Word. O stablish me according to thy Word, that I may live, and let me not be disappointed of my hope. Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe, yea my delight shall ever in thy Statutes. I desire with my whole heart to do the thing that is lawful and right. O give me not over unto my oppressors. O make thou thy servant to delight in that which is good, that they which hate me do me no wrong. O deal with thy servants according to thy loving kindness, and teach me thy Statutes; I am thy servant, O grant me understanding, that I may know thy Testimonies; it is time for thee, Lord, to lay too thy hand, for they have destroyed thy Law; therefore hold I straight all thy Commandments, for all false ways I utterly abhor. O look upon me, and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to do unto those that love thy Name, O most gracious God, who art reconciled unto me, in my Savior Jesus, having for his sake forgiven the offenses of thy people, and covered all their sins with the Robe of his most immaculate sanctity and Righteousness. Let thy grace convert and quicken me, that I may rejoice in thee, and thy salvation, in faith of thy promises, in the hope of actual communication, and of thy mercy to me, and in love to thee for so a great blessing and redemption; and when thou hast spoken peace to my soul, and reconciled me to thyself in the blood of thy Son, give me the grace of perseverance, that I may never turn again to folly, but may follow mercy and truth all my days, and at last be satisfied with thy Righteousness, and peace eternal, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

LET thy merciful ears, O Lord, be open to the Prayers of thy humble servant, and that he may obtain his petitions, make me to ask such things as shall please thee, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

ORder my steps in thy Word, O Lord, so that no wickedness have dominion over me. Deliver me from the deceitful dealings of men, so shall I keep thy Commandments. Shew the light of thy countenance upon thy servant, and teach me thy Statutes. Righteous art thou, O Lord, and true in thy Judgments. Trouble and heaviness have taken hold upon me, yet my delight is in thy Commandments. Except the Lord build the house, their labor is but lost that build it. Except the Lord keep the City, the watchman watcheth but in vain. I looked for the Lord; my soul doth wait for him; in his Word is my trust. O Israel, trust in the Lord, for with the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption; for he shall deliver Israel from all his sins. Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, to dwell together in unity; thy Name, O Lord, endureth forever; so doth thy memorial, O Lord, from one generation to another: For the Lord will avenge his people, and be gracious to his servants. O Lord God, good and gracious, and of great mercy unto all them that call upon thee, give ear unto my prayers, and ponder the voice of my humble desire, whenever I call upon thee in my trouble. Let the soul of thy servant be refreshed with thy comforts, and defend me from the congregations of proud and naughty men. Turn thee unto me with mercy; give thy strength unto me; teach me thy Law; make me to walk in thy Truth; give me the fear of thy Name, and knit my heart unto thee, with the indissoluble bands of charity and obedience, that my soul being saved from the neathermost hell, I may worship in spirit and truth, which thou hast manifested unto me in my deliverance and redemption, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

O Lord, who declarest thy Almighty Power, most chiefly in showing mercy and pity, mercifully grant unto me such a measure of thy grace, that I running the ways of thy Commandments, may obtain thy gracious promises, and be made partaker of thy heavenly treasure, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer in time of Sickness, and in danger of Death.

THE Lord is loving unto every man, and his mercy is over all his works. The eyes of all wait upon thee, O Lord, and thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest thy hand, and fillest all things living with plentiousness. The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works. The Lord is nigh unto all that call upon him, yea all such as call upon him faithfully. He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him, he will hear their cry, and will help them. The Lord will preserve all them that love him, but scattereth abroad all the ungodly. My mouth shall speak the praises of the Lord; and let all flesh give thanks unto his holy Name. The Lord looseth men out of prison: The Lord giveth sight to the blind: The Lord helpeth them that are fallen: The Lord careth for the Righteous: The Lord careth for the strangers; he defendeth the fatherless and the widow; as for the way of the ungodly, he turneth it upside down; he healeth those that are broken in heart; he giveth medicine to heal their sickness; he telleth the number of the Stars, and calleth them all by their name. Great is our God, and great is his power; yea his wisdom is infinite. O Lord God of my salvation, who for my sake was wounded, and didst die and lie in the grave, but yet alone of all that ever died, wert free among the dead, and by thine own power didst rise again, with victory and triumph, have mercy upon thy servant, for thine indignation lieth hard upon me; thou hast vexed me with all thy storms, my soul is full of trouble, by reason of my sins, and my life draweth nigh to the grave. O restore unto me thy favor, and let me not go down into the dark, nor my life into the place where all things are forgotten; but let me show forth thy loving kindness amongst thy Redeemed ones in the Land of the Living, for the Living, the Living, they shall praise thee, and confess the holiness and the marvelousness of thy holy Name. O hide not thou thy face from me, but give me health of body, and restore and preserve me in the Life of Righteousness, and so bless me with opportunities of doing thee service, that I may redeem the time past, and by thy grace may grow rich in good works, always abounding in the work of the Lord, that when thou shall demand my soul to be rendered up into thy hands, my soul may not approve of thee, nor suffer thy terrors, but may feel an eternity of blessing in the Resurrection of the Just, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

ALmighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear, than I to pray; and art wont to give more than I either desire or deserve, pour down upon me the abundance of thy mercy, forgiving me those things whereof my conscience is afraid, and give me those good things which I am not worthy to ask, but through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, thy Son, my Lord. Amen.

A Meditation for Death, and a Prayer preparatory to it.

THE Lord is with them that fear him, and put their trust in his mercy; for the Lord hath pleasure in his people, and helpeth the meek hearted. The Lord of Hosts can do all things; there is nothing too hard for him; therefore let everything that hath a mouth praise the Lord. Open my mouth, O my God, that I may set forth thy praise. Hear my voice, O Lord, according to thy loving kindness; quicken me as thou art wont. Be thou nigh at hand, O Lord, for all thy Commandments are true. I call with my whole heart, hear me, O Lord, and I will keep thy Statutes; yea, even upon thee do I call, and I shall keep thy Testimonies. O consider mine adversity, and deliver me. Avenge thou my cause, and deliver me, and quicken me according to thy Word; for great is thy mercy, O eternal God, whose being was before the mountains were brought forth, before the Earth and the World was made, even from everlasting, World without end. Have mercy upon me, weak, and impotent, poor servant of thine, the child of man, who fades away suddenly like the grass, remove my misdeeds far from before thee, and my secret sins from the sight of thy countenance. Be not angry with me, neither consume me in thy displeasure. Teach me to number all the days of my life, and to reckon on still to the day of death, that when my days are gone, and my years are brought to an end, like a tale that is told, thou mayest turn unto me at the last, and be gracious unto me in the free pardon of all my sins, in restraining the power and malice of all my Ghostly enemies; in giving me opportunity of all spiritual assistances and advantages, that my lamp being trimmed and burning bright, with charity and devotion, I may enter into the Bridechamber, there forever to behold the glorious Majesty of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Collect.

A Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh, that thy people do unto thee return laudable service, grant I beseech thee, that I may so faithfully serve thee in this life, that I may not finally fail to attain thy heavenly promises, through the merit of Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for Protection in all Dangers.

O Lord, quicken me as thou art wont, and hide not thy face from me in time of distress. As for lies, I hate and abhor them, but thy Law do I love. Consider O Lord, how I love thy Commandments; O quicken me according to thy loving kindness, for I am glad of thy Word, as one that findeth great spoils. Great is the peace that they have which love thy Law, and are not offended at it. Lord, I have looked for thy saving health, and done after thy Commandments. O let my complaint come before thee. O Lord, give me understanding according to thy Word, and let my supplication come before thee, and deliver me according to thy Word. Let thine hand help me, for I have chosen thy Commandments: I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost; O seek thy servant, for I do not forget thy Commandments. When I was in trouble I called upon the Lord, and he helped me. Deliver my soul, O Lord, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue. O Lord God, my hope, and my strong hold, have mercy upon me, and defend me under the shadow of thy wing, that I trusting under thy defense, may by thy faithfulness and truth be defended and covered, as with a shield and buckler. Give thy Angels charge concerning me, and my habitation, that I may be preserved and kept in all my ways, and that no evil happen unto me, no plague come nigh my dwelling, no terrors of the night, no arrows of thy vengeance by day may disturb my peace or safety: Let thy ministering Spirits bear me in their hands, and keep me from precepeice, from fracture of bones, from dislocations, noisome or sharp diseases, stupidity and deformity, that I may tread under my feet all the snares of the roaring Lion, and the great Dragon the Devil, who seek my bodily and ghostly heart, do thou O Lord, set thy love upon me, and deliver me from all my troubles, and put an end to all my discontents which I suffer of them that hate me without a cause; and at the end of my days, show me thy salvation, and satisfy me with long life, even of a blessed eternity in this heavenly Kingdom, through Jesus Christ my Lord and Savior. Amen.

The Collect.

Keep, I beseech thee, O Lord, thy Church, with thy perpetual mercy, and because the frailty of man without thee cannot but fall, keep me and all thy people ever by thy help, from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable to our salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for the Protection of the godly, and a Meditation of the great Works of God in the destruction of the wicked.

I Will lift up mine eyes unto the Hills from whence cometh my help; my help cometh even from the Lord, which made Heaven and Earth. Behold he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord himself is my defense upon my right hand: The Lord shall preserve me from all evil; yea, it is even he that shall keep my soul. The Lord shall preserve my going out, and my coming ‹◊› from this time forth and forever more, unto thee I lift up mine eyes. O thou that dwellest in the Heavens, have mercy upon me, for I am utterly despised, yet my help standeth in the Name of the Lord, which hath made Heaven and Earth. They that put their trust in the Lord, shall be even as the Mount Zion, which may not be removed, but standeth fast forever. Do well, O Lord, unto those that be good and true of heart, and reform what is amiss in me, for thy mercy sake. O let thine ears consider well the voice of my complaint. If thou Lord, wilt be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord, who may abide it? for there is mercy with thee, therefore thou shalt be feared. O Lord God, thou art the highest for evermore, thy works are glorious, and thy thoughts are very deep: make my heart and tongue loud instruments of thy praises, that I may tell of thy mercy in the morning, and of thy truth in the night season; that I may rejoice in giving thee thanks for the operations of thy hand all the days and nights of my whole life. Let thy merciful kindness descend evermore upon the righteous, that they may flourish like a Palm Tree, being continually watered with the dew of temporal and spiritual blessings, and may bring forth fruit of a holy conversation, and grant that thy servant being planted in the house of God, and firmly fixed in the blessed communion of Saints, may flourish in the Courts of thy house, and in thy Ecclesiastical Temple to all Eternity. O let not my portion be amongst the ungodly and unrighteous. Make me not to communicate in their wickedness, so much as by consent or approbation, that I may never perish and be destroyed in the furiousness of thine anger, which thou treasurest up against the day of vengeance, and righteous Judgment, even the day of the appearing of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Collect.

Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh, that thy faithful people do give unto thee all true and laudable service, grant I beseech thee that I may faithfully serve thee in this life, that I fail not faithfully to attain thy heavenly promise, through the merits of Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer that God would preserve his Church against the storm and flood of Persecution.

I Looked for the Lord; my soul doth wait for him; in his Word is my trust; therefore keep me O Lord, and thy whole Church from the hands of the ungodly. Preserve me from the wicked men which are purposed to overthrow my going; sure I am that the Lord will avenge the poor and innocent, and maintain the cause of the helpless. Lord, I call upon thee, haste thee to help me, and consider my voice when I cry unto thee. Let my prayer be set forth in thy sight, as the incense, and the lifting up of my hands be as an evening Sacrifice. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keep the door of my lips. O let me hear thy loving kindness in the morning, for in thee is my trust. Shew me the way that I should walk in, for I lift my soul unto thee. Deliver me, O Lord, from the evil man, and preserve me from the wicked man that seeketh to overthrow my going. O Lord God, Judge of all the World, to whom vengeance belongeth, and execution of Righteous Judgment, have mercy upon us: Chasten us with thy gentleness and fatherly correction when we sin against thee. Teach us thy Law. Be our refuge and confidence in trouble; and give patience in time of adversity, that in the multitude of sorrows thy comforts may refresh us, thy mercies may relieve us, thy grace may pardon and confirm us, that our feet slip not, and our souls be not put to silence; have pity upon all distressed and miserable people. Do justice upon all that murder the Widow, that put the fatherless to death, that grind the face of the poor. Fail not thy people, O Lord, and forsake not thine inheritance, but destroy the devises of all them that imagine evil as a Law, and are confederate against the Righteous, to condemn the innocent, to discountenance Religion, to disadvantage thy worship and service, that in the day of eternal vengeance, when thou shalt reward the proud after their deserving, and the pit be digged by the ungodly; we may have the lot of thine inheritance, and reign in the fellowship of Saints, who give honor and praise to thee, O Lord God, Almighty, world without end. Amen.

The Collect.

Keep I beseech thee, O Lord, thy Church with thy perpetual mercy, and because the frailty of man without thee, cannot but fall, keep us ever by thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable for our salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Invitation to the Worship of God, and a Prayer for Obedience to his Will.

O Great God, the Lord, our Maker, who art a King above all God's, give me the graces of humility, and holy Religion, that I may worthily praise and worship thy glories and perfections infinitely. I am the Sheep of thy Pasture; let thy mercies lead me and feed me, and refresh my soul with the Divine nutriment of thy Word and Sacraments. I am the sheep of thy hands, do thou guide me that I may never go astray; or if I do, bring me home into the Sheepfold of the great Shepherd, that I hearing his voice, may not harden my heart, neither tempting thy mercies, nor provoking thy wrath; but my heart being preserved from errors, and my ways from obliquity and crookedness, I may at last enter into thy eternal rest, through the merits and guidance of my great Shepherd, Jesus Christ, my Mediator and Redeemer. Amen.

The Collect.

O Lord, I beseech thee let thy continual pity cleanse and defend thy Church; and because it cannot continue in safety without thy succor, preserve it ever more by thy help and goodness, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Adoration and magnifying the Glories of God.

O Lord God, in whose Sanctuary is power, and honor, before whose presence is glory and worship. Fill my lips and soul with great devotion and reverence towards thee my God. Make me to love thy Goodness, to adore thy Omnipotency, to reverence thy Justice, to fear thy Majesty, to tremble at thy Omniscience and Omnipresence, and to contemplate with the greatest zeal and affections all those glories which thou communicatest to the Sons of men, in the revelations of the Gospel of thy Creator, and of thy miracles, that I may tell of thy greatness, and declare thy salvation from day today; and when thou comest with Righteousness to judge the Earth, and all people with thy truth, I may rejoice in thee everlastingly, and sing eternally Hallelujah to thee, in thy Sanctuary; grant this for Jesus Christ his sake, my Lord and only Savior. Amen.

The Collect.

O Lord, I beseech thee, grant thy grace to withstand the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil, and with pure hearts and minds, to follow thee the only God, through Jesus Christ our only Lord and Savior. Amen.

A Prayer for Mercy and Salvation.

O Lord our King, Lord of the whole Earth, have mercy upon me, and sanctify me with thy grace, that I may hate everything that is evil; that I may love thee, give thanks unto thy Name, and rejoice in the remembrance of thy holiness, that in the day of Judgment and great terrors, when thou shalt sit in thy seat supported with Righteousness and Judgment, and a fire shall go forth from thy presence, to burn up thine enemies on every side, thou mayest preserve my soul in safety from the hands of mine enemies, and a light may spring up unto me, to preserve me from eternal darkness, and the want of the light of thy countenance, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

O Lord God, for as much as without thee I am not able to please thee, mercifully grant that thy holy Spirit may in all things direct and rule my heart, through Jesus Christ my Lord and Savior. Amen.

A Thanksgiving for the Redemption of mankind by Jesus Christ.

O Most powerful Jesus, who with thine own Right hand, and with thy holy Arm hast begotten to thyself on our behalf the victory over sin, hell, and the grave, remember this thy mercy and truth which thou hast promised to all that believe in thee, give me pardon of all my sins sealed unto me by the testimony of the Holy Spirit, and a good conscience, and grant that I may by thy strength fight against my ghostly enemies, and by thy power may overcome them, that I may rejoice in a holy peace, and sing, and give thanks for my victory, and my Crown, extend this mercy, and enlarge the effect of thy great Victories to the Heathen, that all the ends of the world may sing a new song unto thee, and see the salvation of God, that when thou comest to judge the Earth, we may find mercy, and be joyful together before thee in the fruition of a blessed Eternity, through thy mercies, O blessed Savior and Redeemer Jesu. Amen▪

The Collect.

O Almighty and most merciful Lord God, of thy bountiful goodness and mercy keep me, I beseech thee, from all things that may hurt me, that I being ready both in body and soul, may accomplish those things that thou wouldest have done, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Psalm of Praise to God for his Mercy and Truth.

The Prayer.

O Lord our God, Who hast created us out of nothing, and hast redeemed us from misery and death when we were thy enemies, showing great expresses of thy loving kindnesses when we were vessels of wrath, and inheritours of perdition, revealing thy Truth unto us in the Sermons of the Gospel; teach us to walk as thou hast commanded us, to believe as thou hast taught, that we may inherit what thou hast promised us; for thou art the way, the truth, and the life. We are thy people, and the sheep of thy Pasture; thou art our guide, and our defense; let thy grace teach us to serve thee, and thy holy Spirit assist and promote our endeavors with the blessing of gladness and cheerfulness of spirit, that we may love to speak good of thy Name, and at last go to the Courts of thy Temple with praise and a song in our mouths, to thy honor and eternal glory, whose Mercy and Truth is everlasting, and revealed unto the Church in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Collect.

LOrd, I pray thee, that thy grace may always prevent and follow us, all the days of our life; make us continually be given to all good works, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for a holy Life.

O Lord God, of eternal purity, who who art of pure eyes, and canst behold no iniquity or impurity, enlighten my understanding, that I may have knowledge in the way of godliness; make my path straight, and my heart perfect; take from me the sins of unfaithfulness; correct and mortify in me all froward and peevish dispositions; let me love the society of the Saints, and hate the fellowship of the wicked, that I may not be destroyed with the ungodly, nor be rooted out from the City of the Lord, nor banished from the sweetness of thy presence; for with thee is light and health, and salvation to thy Name, be all honor, and glory, and praise ascribed world without end. Amen.

The Collect.

Almighty and Everlasting God, give unto me the increase of Faith, Hope, and Charity, that I may obtain that which thou dost promise; make me to love that which thou dost command, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for Comfort in sadness of spirit in Sickness, or in any other affliction.

O Eternal God, who endurest forever, and thy remembrance throughout all generations, have mercy upon me according to the infinite treasures of thy loving kindness; hear the voice of my groaning, for thy indignation and thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and my sins have put an edge upon thy sword, and a thorn upon my wounded conscience. O hold up the reins of my soul; repair the breaches of my comfort, and my hope, and let thy glory now appear, for that shines brightly in the beams of thy mercy, and when thou turnest unto the prayer of the poor destituted, it becomes an eternal monument and a record of thy honor, and all generations which shall be born shall praise thee. Look down, O Lord, from thy Sanctuary, hear the mourning of me, and all distressed people; send me life and health so long as it may be a blessing, and not shorten my days in wrath, but give me grace so to spend all my time in the work of repentance and holiness, that when my years fail, and my change is come, I may be translated to the new Heaven which shall never perish, nor wax old, there to continue and stand fast in thy sight forever, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

The Collect.

O Lord, I beseech thee absolve thy people from their offenses, that through thy bountiful goodness we may be delivered from the bondage of those sins, which by our frailty we have committed; grant this, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ his sake, our blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.

A Thanksgiving to God for all his benefits and mercies.

O Most merciful God, whose mercies are as high as the Heavens, as many as the moments of eternity, thou hast opened thy hand wide to me with thy blessing, and the sweet effects of thy loving kindness: Thou art pitiful as a Father, tender as a Mother, careful as a Guardian, and exceeding merciful to all them that fear thee. I pray thee to fill my soul with apprehension and impresses of thy unspeakable mercy, that my thankfulness may be as great as my need of mercy is; and let thy merciful loving-kindness endure forever and ever upon thy poor servant, that putteth his trust in thee. Keep no anger in store for me. Chide me not in thy displeasure. Satisfie my mouth with good things. Remove all my sins from me, as far as the East is from the West. Heal all my infirmities, and save my life from destruction, for all these are mercies that thou delightest in; and because I cannot praise thee according to thy excellencies, take my soul in thy due time into the land of everlasting praises, that I may spend a whole Eternity in ascribing to thy name praise, and honor, and dominion; grant this for Jesus Christ his sake, my Lord and only Savior. Amen.

The Collect.

ALmighty and everlasting God, absolve thy people from their offenses, that through thy bountiful goodness we may be delivered from the bonds of those sins, which by our frailty we have committed; grant this heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ his sake, our blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.

A Thanksgiving for deliverance from misery and danger.

O Lord God, gracious and good, whose mercy endureth forever, in my trouble I cry unto thee, for when my heart is brought down through heaviness; there is none to help me up, or to deliver me out of my distress, but only thou, O Lord: I have sinned, I have rebelled against thee, and lightly regarded thy counsel. I have walked and sate in darkness, and in the shadow of death, being fast bound in the captivity and misery of sin; O bring thou me out of darkness; and break my bonds in sunder. Guide me through the desert of the world, in which grows nothing but sadness, and discontent, still the tempest, and smooth the floods of misery which are ready to overwhelm me; and in thy due time bring me to eternal rest, and to the Haven where I would fain be, that in the Congregation of thy holy people I may praise thee for thy goodness, and declare thy wonders that thou hast done for me in delivering me from sins, misery and death, and bringing me to a City to dwell in, where there is life and light, and joy eternal in the beholding the face of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Collect.

GRant, I beseech thee, O merciful Lord, to thy faithful people, pardon and peace, that they may be cleansed from all their sins, and fear thee, with a quiet mind, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer of Thanksgiving for all the mercies and salvation which are given us in Christ Jesus.

O Most gracious God, and most merciful Father, my strength and my salvation, for thy mercy endureth forever, be thou on my side; take part with them that help me, and forsake me not in time of need; let the voice of joy and health be in my dwelling; and when thou chastenest and correctest me for my sins, give me not over unto death, but fix my faith and hopes upon the head stone in the corner, even my Lord Jesus Christ, that in all the assaults made against me by my ghostly enemies, the right hand of the Lord may have the preeminence, and bring mighty things to pass, even victory and deliverance unto thy servants, that I putting no confidence in the best of men, may trust in thee, O Lord, till at last when thou openest the everlasting gates of righteousness, I may enter in, and give thee praise and thanks through Jesus Christ my Lord and only Savior. Amen.

The Collect.

O God, my Refuge and Strength, who art the Author of all godliness, be ready to hear the devout prayer of thy Church, and grant that those things which we ask faithfully, we may obtain effectually, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer that God would be pleased to pardon my many and great sins, and direct me in the ways of Righteousness.

O Lord, my Judge and my Redeemer, hearken unto me for thy Truth and Righteousness sake, and deliver me from the guilt of all my sins, and from those great punishments which are due unto me for the same, enter not into judgment with me, for in thy sight no man can be justified by any worthiness of his own: Endue my soul with a righteousness of a holy life, living and working by charity: Shew me the way that I should walk in: Teach me to do whatsoever pleaseth thee: Quicken my soul in the path of life, and so continue the conduct of thy Spirit in me, that it may never leave me, till I be brought forth of this world into the Land of Righteousness, to dwell with thee eternally, through Jesus Christ my Lord and only Savior. Amen.

The Collect.

O God, my Refuge and Strength, who art the Author of all godliness, be ready, I beseech thee, to hear the devout prayer of thy Church, and grant that those things which I ask faithfully, I may obtain effectually, through Jesus Christ my Lord and only Savior. Amen.

A Thanksgiving for the benefit of the holy Gospel, particularly of the blessed Sacrament.

O Blessed Jesu, whose Righteousness endureth forever, thy work is worthy to be praised, and had in honor, for that thou hast been merciful to us, and hast given meat, even the fruit of a blessed Sacrament, unto them that fear thee, that by the participation of thy holy Communion, we should have thee in remembrance, and ever be mindful of thy Covenant, plant in our hearts the fear of thy Name; give us wisdom and good understanding; make us to have pleasure in thee, and all thy works, that we obeying the precepts of thy holy Gospel, and performing the conditions of thy Covenant, which thou hast established forever in truth and equity, in verity and judgment, we may worthily praise and adore thy reverend and holy Name among the faithful in this life, and in the Congregation of thy Saints in the life to come, through thy mercies, O blessed Jesu, to whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, be honor and glory, now and forever more. Amen.

The Collect.

Almighty and everlasting God, who dost govern all things both in Heaven and in Earth, mercifully hear the supplications of thy people, and grant us thy grace, all the days of our life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for a Penitent Sinner.

O Lord, withdraw not thou thy loving mercies from me: Let thy loving kindness, O Lord, and thy truth always preserve me: O Lord, let it be thy pleasure to deliver me from all my fear: Make haste O Lord to help me. As for me, I am poor and needy, but the Lord careth for me: Thou art my Helper and Redeemer, make no long tarrying, O my God. Hearken to my voice, O Lord, when I cry unto thee, have mercy upon me, and hear me. O hide not thou thy face from me, and cast not away thy servant in displeasure. Thou hast been my succor, leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation. Consider my complaint, O Lord, for I am brought very low. O deliver me from my persecutors, for they are too strong for me. Hear my prayer. O Lord, consider my desire, hearken unto me for thy Truth and Righteousness sake, and enter not into judgment with thy servant, for in thy sight no man living can be justified. Hear me, O Lord, and that soon, for my spirit waxeth faint. Hide not thy face from me, lest I be like to them that go down to the pit. O let me hear thy loving kindness betimes in the morning, for in thee is my trust. Shew thou me the way that I should walk in, for I lift up my heart unto thee. Deliver me O Lord, from mine enemies, for I fly unto thee, to hide me. Teach me to do the thing that pleaseth thee, for thou art my God. O let thy Spirit lead me forth into the Land of Righteousness. Quicken me, O Lord, for thy Names sake, and for thy Righteousness sake bring my soul out of trouble, O my God, and all for Jesus Christ his sake, my blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.

A Commemoration of God's frequent pardons and mercies to the penitent.

O Lord God, full of mercy and pity, who didst many times deliver thy people from their adversity, when thou for their rebellion against thee, and their inventions, hadst given them into the hands of the Heathen. Remember me, O Lord, according to the favor thou bearest unto thy people, and visit me with thy salvation. And though I have done amiss, and dealt wickedly against thee and thy Covenant, yet be pleased to help me for thy Name sake. Make thy power to be known in the mighty deliverance and redemption of me from so many dangers and miseries wherewith thou hast delivered me. Give me grace to believe thy word, to obey thy counsel, and to walk in thy Laws; to relinquish my own sinful and vain desire, to obey my Governors, Ecclesiastical and Civil, that I may not have the lot of Dathan and Abyram, but at last may receive my portion in thine inheritance, which thou hast prepared for thy chosen people, giving thee thanks with thine inheritance, for that thou hast turned from me thy wrathful indignation, pitying me, and saving me according to the multitude of thy mercies, thy Name be blessed, O Lord God, everlastingly, and world without end, through Jesus Christ my Lord▪ Amen.

A Prayer for Victory against our Enemies,

O Lord God, whose mercy is greater than the Heavens, and thy glory above all the Earth, be thou exalted in thine own strength, and magnify thy power and thy mercy in defending me, and thy holy Church against all our enemies temporal and spiritual. Forsake me not, O God, my strength and my defense, for vain is the help of man: Do thou strengthen me, and go along with me, and stand by me in the day of battle, that I being defended and armed by thee, may do acts great and good, fighting thy battle, and putting my confidence in thy Righteousness only, and thy salvation, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for the Fear of the Lord, for Gravity, and the blessing of the Righteous.

O Lord God, who art to be feared in the generations of the world, teach me the fear of thy Name, that I may fear to offend thee, and that delighting in thy Commandments, I may serve thee without fear of my enemies in holiness and righteousness all my days. Let thy Light arise upon the darkness of my understanding. Let thy mercies and gentleness turn all the thoughts of unmercifulness in me, and make me charitable, of tender bowels, earning with pity over the need of the poor. Teach me to guide my words with discretion. Make me never to be moved from my purposes of holy living. Stablish my heart in thy love, that in the day of restitution of all things, thou mayest give the portion of the charitable, the rewards of thy Right hand; and when the wicked shall gnash with their teeth, and consume away in a sad Eternity, I may be satisfied with the Riches and plentifulness of thy house forever, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer against my Adversaries▪ and for Confidence in the True God.

O Lord God, at whose presence the Earth trembles, who worketh salvation and deliverance for thy Church in Ages, thou hast done whatsoever pleaseth thee in Heaven and in Earth, give me thy grace, that in all my troubles I make thee my succor and defense, and put my whole trust in thee only, that I receiving thy mercies, and the satisfaction of all my hopes from thy plentifulness and loving kindness, I may give praise unto thy Name, never ascribing unto myself any honor, or the glory or thanks of any good action, or prosperous success, but to thee who art the Author and giver of all good things; preserve me from all evil of soul and body, from vain imaginations, and making anything to be my confidence besides thee, my God, that so thou mayest be mindful of me, and bless me in all my ways and actions, and when I die and go down into silence, I may have my portion among the blessed of the Lord, in the inheritance of thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Prayer.

O Thou Almighty Goodness, the Father of the Fatherless, the portion of the poor, and protector of strangers, cast thy gracious eyes upon a miserable sinner, who with humility implores thy mercy. When I look on myself, I dare scarce be so bold as to lift up mine eyes unto thee. When I think in what condition I am, and what I have done, it so confounds me, that I can hardly think of anything else; it is the greatness of my misery alone, that constrains me to the presumption of prostrating myself at thy feet; the weight of which presseth me so much, that it hath left me no more power than to expose myself before thee, as an admirer of thy wondrous charity. O my sins are wondrous great, in which all comfort forsakes my soul. O thy terrors have consumed me, how dreadful are they! O the affliction and torment I endure! what tongue can express it! my soul is parch'd and dried up; my spirits are consumed by the heat of thy displeasure; may I not now beg one drop of comfort from thee? O my God, my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a barren and dry ground. I remember thy loving kindness of old time; I can but wish at least to see thy power and thy glory, as I have known thee in thy Sanctuary. There is none in Heaven that I desire but thee, nor on Earth besides thee. My soul followeth hard after thee, O when wilt thou come unto me? O hide not thy face from thy servant, lest I come to misery. Hear me speedily, for I am poor and needy. Make haste unto me, O my God, thou art my helper and deliverer. O Lord, make no long tarrying, I am come a great way from my friends and kindred, and here is none to pity me. O my God, be not thou far from me. Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it. I am poor and sorrowful, let thy salvation set me up on high, for thou who searchest the heart, knowest that I set my heart only to seek thee. I desire to leave all the world, that I may find my happiness only in thee. O heavenly Father, with my whole heart I desire to do thy blessed will in all things; yea thus far I acknowledge thou hast most gratefully conducted me. Hitherto I have been highly favored, and wonderfully helped and preserved by thee, and wilt thou now at last abandon me, who desire at last to have abandoned all things else for thy sake. Hast thou called me from mine own Country, and from my Fathers house, and now to be forsaken by thee? O my God, give me leave to plead for a soul that I thought was once dear unto thee: Pity, O pity an heart which thou hast made too great for all the world, and cannot be satisfied with less than thee: Canst thou see it die for want of one smile from thee? yea, canst thou let it die of love to thee, for that hath brought me thus far to seek thee, and wilt thou suffer it to die at thy feet? canst thou endure to behold it in thine arms into which it now throws itself with all the force it hath? shall it miscarry full of prayers and longings after thee? shall it expire in cries and tears when it calls for mercy? O where are thy bowels? what is become of thine ancient loving kindness? are they all forfeited by one offense against thee? O my God, I cannot think so hardly of thee; I begin to live, methinks, because thou permittest these addresses to thee; it inspires me with some hopes to find these holy breathings in me; it rejoices me much that I feel thee drawing my very heart after thee; O take it, I beseech thee, take it quite away from me, unto thyself, shape it after thine own heart; make it such as thou canst embrace it; create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me. Restore to me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free spirit, and all this for Jesus Christ his sake. Amen.

Ejaculations to be used at the Lord's Supper.

LORD, I am not worthy thou shouldst come under my roof; I have sinned, what shall I do unto thee O thou preserver of men? Here recollect some of thy greatest sins; If thou Lord, shouldst be extreme to mark what is done amiss. O Lord, who may abide it? but with the Lord there is mercy, and with him there is plentiful redemption. Behold, O Lord, thy Beloved Son, in whom thou art well pleased. Harken to the cry of his blood, which speaketh better things than that of Abel; by his Agony and bloody Sweat, by his Cross and Passion, good Lord deliver us. O Lamb of God, which takest away the sins of the world, grant us thy peace. O Lamb of God, which takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon me, O Lord, for thy mercy sake. Amen.

Devotions for the Help and assistance of all Christian People in all occasions and necessities.

Almighty God, who hast commanded us to pray unto thee without ceasing, and hast added many glorious promises for our encouragement, let thy holy Spirit teach me how to pray. Give me just apprehension of my want, zeal of thy glory, great resentments of thy mercies, love of all spiritual employments that are pleasing unto thee, and do thou help mine infirmities that the Devil may not abuse my fancy with illusions, nor distract my mind with cares, nor alienate my thoughts with impertinencies, but give me a perfect mind, great devotion, a heart fixed upon thy Divine Beauties, and an actual intention and perseverance in prayer, that I may glorify thy Name, do unto thee true and laudable service, and obtain relief for all my necessities; hear me, O King of Heaven, when I call upon thee, for thou hast promised mercy to them that pray in the Name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Penitential Prayer, a Form of Confession of sins to God, to be said upon days of public or private Humiliation.

O Lord God of mercy and pardon, give me a just remembrance, and sad apprehension of my many and great sins. Teach me to bewail them with as great indignation and bitterness, as I have committed them with complacency and delight. Let my prayers and my confession come unto thy presence, and obtain a mercy for me, and a pardon. Let not thy Justice and thy severity so remember my sins, as to forget thine own mercy; and though I have committed that for which I have deserved to be condemned, yet thou canst not lose that glorious Attribute, whence flows comfort to us, and hopes to be saved. Spare me therefore, O merciful God, for to give pardon to a sinner that confesseth his sins, and begs Remission, it is not impossible to thy Power, nor disproportionate to thy Justice, nor unusual to thy Mercy and sweetest Clemency. Blessed Jesu, acknowledge in me whatsoever is thine, and cleanse me from whatsoever is amiss. Have pity on me now in the time of mercy, and condemn me not when thou comest to judgment: For what profit is there in my blood? Thou delightest not in the death of a sinner, but in his conversion there is joy in Heaven. And when thou hast delivered me from my sins, and saved my soul, I shall praise and magnify thy Name to all eternity; mercy sweet Jesus, mercy.

Christ have mercy upon us.

Lord have mercy upon us.

Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

I Am not worthy, O Lord, to look up to Heaven, which is the Throne of thy Purity; for my sins are more in number than the hairs of my head; and my heart hath failed me; Lord be merciful unto me a sinner: I have not lived according to thy will, but in the vanity of my own thoughts, in idle, sinful, and impertinent language, in foolish actions, in blindness of heart, in contempt of thy holy Word and Commandments. I have not loved thee with my whole heart, nor feared thee with all my soul, nor served thee with all my might, according to thy holy precepts, nor loved my neighbor as myself.

Lord be merciful unto me a sinner.

I Have been an unprovident Steward of the good things thou hast given me; I have loved them inordinately, and sought after them greedily and unjustly, dispensed them idly, and parted with them unwillingly. I have not been so charitable to the poor, or so pitiful to the afflicted, or so compassionate to the sick, or so apt to succor and give supplies to the miseries of my neighbors, as I ought, but have too much minded things below, not setting my affections upon Heaven and heavenly things, but have been unlike thee in many things; I have been unmerciful and unjust.

Lord be merciful unto me a sinner▪

Mine Eyes, O Lord, have wandered after vanity, beholding and looking after things unseemly without displeasure, despising my neighbors, prying into their faults, but have been blind, not seeing mine own sins, and infinite irregularities.

Lord be merciful unto me a sinner.

I Have employed all my members and faculties both of soul and body in the ways of unrighteousness. I have transgressed in all my relations, and in all my actions and traverses of my whole life; even when I might have had most confidence, I find nothing but weakness and imperfection.

Lord be merciful unto me a sinner.

I Have broken my vows and purposes of obedience and holy life: I have been inconstant to all good, refractory to counsels, disobedient to commands, stubborn against admonition, churlish and ungentle in my behavior, mindful and revengful of injuries, forgetful of benefits, seeking my own ends, deceiving my own soul.

Lord be merciful unto me a sinner.

MY secret sins, O Lord, are innumerable, sins secret to myself through inadvertency, forgetfulness, willful ignorance, or stupid negligence, secret to the world, committed before thee only, under the witness of mine own conscience. I am confounded with the multitude of them, and the horror of their remembrance.

Lord be merciful unto me a sinner.

O Son of David, blessed Redeemer, Lamb of God that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon me. O Jesu, be a Jesus unto me; thou that savedst thy servant Peter that denied thee thrice; thou that didst cast seven Devils out of Mary Magdalene, and forgavest the woman taken in adultery, and didst bear the converted Thief from the Cross, to the joys of Paradise, have mercy upon me also; for although I have massed together more sins than all these in conjunction, yet not their sins, nor mine, nor the sins of all the world can equal thy glorious mercy, which is as infinite and eternal as thyself. I acknowledge, O Lord, that I am vile, but yet redeemed with thy precious blood. I am blind, but thou art the Light of the world: I am weak, but thou art a strong Rock: I have been dead in trespasses and sins, but thou art my Resurrection and my Life; thou, O Lord, lovest to show mercy, and the expressions of thy mercy, the nearer they come to infinite, the more proportionable they are to thy essence, and like thyself. Behold then, O Lord, a fit object for thy pity; my sins are so great and many, that to forgive all will be but an act of glorious mercy, and all the praises which did accrue to thy Name by the forgiveness of David, and Manesseh, and St. Paul, and the Adulteress, and the Thief, and the Publican, will be multiplied to thy honor in the forgiveness of me so vile, so unworthy a wretch, that I have nothing to say for myself, but that the greatness of my misery is a fit object for thy miraculous and infinite mercy. Despise me not, O Lord, for I am thy Creature: Despise me not, for thou didst die for me. Cast me not away in thine anger, for thou comest to seek me, and to save me. Say unto my soul, Thou art my salvation. Let thy Holy Spirit lead me from the errors of my ways, into the paths of Righteousness, to great degrees of Repentance, through all the parts of a holy life, to a godly and a holy death; grant this, O blessed Jesus, for thy mercy, for thy pity sake. Amen.

A penitential Prayer for the Morning, with particular Confession of sins, desiring God earnestly to free him from the guilt and punishment that is due unto him for his many and great sins, and to give him grace to lead a new life.

O Eternal God, most gracious and merciful Father, look not upon me as I am in myself, but look upon me in the face of Jesus Christ, in him and through him, be merciful unto me, according to thy Word, for I have done amiss, and dealt wickedly; I have sinned against Heaven and before thee, and am not worthy to be called thy Son, or numbered amongst the meanest of thy servants, yet my sins are but the sins of a mortal man, but thy mercy is the mercy of an Infinite God, therefore have mercy on my sinful soul, pardon and forgive me all my known and secret sins, which in thought, word and deed I have done and committed against thy Divine Majesty; for it repenteth me of my evil deeds, therefore, O Lord, have mercy upon me, pardon and forgive the sins of my youth and age, which are many and great, namely the wicked sins of my pride, anger, dissimulation, lying, lust, unjust dealing, too much love of the world, and the vanity thereof, too little love of thee and thy Kingdom, but empty and void of all spiritual grace; be merciful unto me, O Lord, for these are the sins wherewith I have grieved thy Holy Spirit: O Lord, the remembrance of them is grievous unto me, and the burden of them is intolerable, too heavy for me to bear; therefore O Lord God be merciful to me according to thy tender compassion bury them all in the burial of Christ, set the weight of thy mercy upon them, so that they may never rise up in this world to shame me, nor in the world to come to condemn me. O Lord, give me an assurance of the free pardon and forgiveness for these many sins, that I may rejoice in the greatness of thy mercy, and magnify thy holy Name, to all Eternity; for the future give me greater measure of grace, to serve, honor, and humbly obey thee with all the strength of my heart, soul and body. Mortify and kill all vice in me, that my life may express all faith in thee. Mercifully hear the humble supplications of thy poor servant, and grant me thy peace all my days: graciously pardon all mine infirmities, and defend me from all dangers of soul and body this day, and forever more. O Lord, guide me in this world with thy counsel, and after this bring me to thy glory. O Lord, bless all thine all the world over, all mankind, especially this sinful Land and Nation wherein we live, turning from us those plagues which the sins of this Nation do cry for. In mercy O Lord prevent the ruin thereof, lest the Heathen should say, where is now their God. O Lord, bless with the choicest of thy blessings, our most gracious Sovereign Lord King Charles, endue his Royal heart with grace, wisdom and understanding; clothe his enemies with shame, but upon his head let his Crown flourish; and grant that his days may be long, prosperous, virtuous, and happy. Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and all the rest of the Royal Family; endue them with thy grace, and defend them from all evil. Bless all our Magistrates and Ministers with all those graces necessary for their places; govern thou them, that they may govern us in peace and godliness, and true Religion. O Lord, in much mercy, bless all my friends and my relations, with all those blessings and benefits needful both for their souls and for their bodies. O Lord, be merciful to all those poor souls that are under any kind of want, need or necessity, or under any kind of affliction; in much mercy be unto them a present help in trouble; support them, sustain, and lay no more upon them than they shall be able to bear; and send them a happy issue out of all their troubles. O Lord God, for thy mercies sake, bestow a double portion of thy blessing upon those whom thou hast made nearest or dearest unto me. O Lord, pardon all their sins, supply all their wants, relieve all their necessities, and reform whatsoever is amiss in them, and give them grace to lead a new life, and make them thy true and faithful servants; preserve them and me this day from doing or receiving any hurt or harm; preserve us from all evil, especially from the evil of sin, and the evil of punishment, and from all sad accidents. O Lord, bless us this day in our going out, and in our coming in; bless and prosper us in whatsoever we go about to do; let us have all our direction from thy will, and the happy success from thy merciful hand, and when this mortal life is ended, O Lord, for Christ Jesus his sake, grant that we may enjoy Heaven, and the Righteousness thereof, and in the mean time grant unto everyone of us thy loving countenance, thy favor, and thy grace; and here I will praise and magnify thy great and glorious Name for electing us in thy love, for creating us after thine own Image, and for redeeming us by thy dear Son, and for sanctifying us by the grace of thy holy Spirit, and for thy gracious preservation of us this night past: Likewise I praise thee O Lord, for our life, health, strength, liberty, food and raiment, humbly beseeching thee, O Lord, to continue thy loving kindness towards us, from time to time, so long as it may be a blessing unto everyone of us, and our thankfulness towards thee for all thy goodness bestowed upon our souls and our bodies, which exceeds our memories, and our thanks; and all for the sake of thy dear Son, and our blessed Savior Jesus Christ. Amen. In whose Name I further call upon thee, as he hath taught us, saying, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

O Lord Jesus Christ, Son of the Eternal God, interpose thy holy Death, thy Cross and Passion between thy Judgments and my soul, now and in the hour of death, granting unto me grace and mercy, and unto all the faithful pardon and peace, to the Church unity and amity, and to all sinners repentance and amendment, to all life and glory everlastingly, who liveth and reigneth ever one God world without end. Amen.

A Form of Thanksgiving, with a particular enumeration of God's Blessing.

O Most glorious Lord God, infinite in mercy, full of compassion, long suffering, and of great goodness, I adore, and praise, and glorify thy holy Name, worshipping thee with the lowliest devotions of my soul and body, and give thee thanks for all the benefits thou hast done unto me, for whatsoever I am, or have, or know, or desire, as I ought, it is all from thee, thou art the fountain of being and blessing, of sanctity and pardon, of life and glory.

Praise the Lord O my soul, and all that that is within me, praise his holy Name.

THou, O God, of thine infinite goodness, hast created me out of nothing, and hast given me a degree of essence next to Angels, imprinting thine Image on me, enduing me with reasonable faculties of will and understanding, to know and choose good, and to refuse evil, and hast put me into a capacity of a blessed immortality.

O praise the Lord with me, and let us magnify his Name together.

THou, O God, of thine infinite goodness, hast created me out of nothing, and hast given me grace to know thy will, and hast fed and clothed me, hast raised me friends, and blessed them, hast preserved me in all dangers, hast rescued me from the peril of the sword, from the rage of pestilence, from dangers of Lyers and Robbers, from perishing in public distemperatures and diseases epidemical, from terrors and affrightments of the mighty) from the delusions of the Devil, and sad separation, and from many imminent dangers; thou hast been my guide in my journeys, my refreshment in sadness, my hope and my confidence in all my grief and desolations, and a present help in trouble.

I will give thanks unto the Lord of Lord's, for his mercy endureth forever.

BUT above all mercies, it was not less than infinite love whereby thou lovedst me, and all mankind, when we were lost and dead, and Rebels against thy Divine Majesty. Thou gavest thine own begotten Son to seek us when we went astray; to restore us to life when we were dead in trespasses and sin, and to reconcile us to thyself by the merits and the atonement of an everlasting Covenant.

He is our God, even the God of whom cometh our salvation; God is the Lord by whom we scape death.

O Most glorious Spirit, I will praise and magnify thee for the inspiration of the Apostles and Prophets, for thy providence and mercies, in causing holy Scriptures to be written, and preserving them from the corruptions of Heretics, from the violences of Pagans, and enemies of the Cross of Christ.

I will always give thanks unto the Lord, his praise shall ever be in my mouth.

I Bless thy Name for those holy Promises and Threatenings, those Judgments and Mercies, those holy Precepts and Admonitions, which thou hast registered in Scripture, and in Records and Monuments of the Church, for all those graces, and helps, and comforts, whereby thou promotest me in piety, and in the ways of true Religion, for baptismal and penitential grace, for the opportunities and sweet refreshings of the Sacrament of the Eucharist, for all the advantages thou hast given me, of good society, Tutors and Governors, for the fears thou hast produced in me, as deliveries and impediments of sins, for all my hopes of pardon, and expectation of the promises made by our Lord Jesus Christ, to encourage me in the paths of life, and sanctity, for those blessed waitings and knockings at the door of my heart, patiently tarrying for me, for all the holy Sermons, spiritual Books and Lessons, for all the good Prayers and Meditations, loving and inviting me to repentance, without ceasing admonishing me, and reproving me with the check of a tender conscience, with exterior and interiour motives, and for whatsoever means or incentives of holiness thou hast assisted me withal.

I Magnifie and praise thy holy Name, for thy goodness to all Nations whom thou hast made and sanctified, they shall come and worship thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy Name, for thou art great, and dost wondrous things; thou art God alone, and great is thy mercy towards me; thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell; therefore shall every good man sing of thy praise without ceasing. O my God, I will give thanks unto thee forever, with Cherubims and Seraphims, and all the company of the heavenly Host, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabbath, holy is our God, holy is the Immortal, holy is the Almighty, the Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost, to whom be honor and glory, dominion and power ascribed of all spirits, and all men, and all creatures, now and for evermore. Amen.

A Prayer preparatory to the Receiving of the blessed Sacrament.

O Most immaculate and glorious Jesu, he hold me a miserable sinner, drawing near unto thee with the approaches of humility, and earnest desire to be cleansed from my sins, and to be united to thee by the nearest and most mysterious union of Charity and Sacramental participation of thy most precious body and blood, I presume nothing of my own worthiness, but I am most confident of thy mercies and infinite loving kindness. I know, O Lord, I am blind, and sick, and dead, and naked, and therefore I come the rather; I am sick, and thou art my Physician, thou arisest with healing in thy wings, by thy wounds I come to be cured, and to be healed by thy stripes. I am unclean, but thou art the fountain of purity; I am blind, but thou art the great Eye of the World, the Son of Righteousness▪ in thy light I shall see light. I am poor, but thou art rich unto all, the Lord of all the Creatures; I therefore humbly beg of thy mercy, that thou wouldest be pleased to take from me all my sins, to cure all mine infirmities, to cleanse my filthiness, to lighten my darkness, to clothe my nakedness with the Robe of thy Righteousness, that I may with reverence and faith, and holy intention, receive thy blessed body and blood in the mysterious Sacrament, that it may be unto life, and pleasantness, and holy nourishment, and that I may be firmly and indelutely united to thy mystical body, and may at last see clearly and without veil, thy face in glory everlasting, who livest and reignest ever one God, world without end. Amen.

The Second.

I Adore and bless thy glorious Majesty, O blessed Jesu, for this great dignation and vouchsafing to me, that art pleased, for all the infinite multitudes of my sins, and innumerable violating of thy holy Laws, still to give thyself unto me, to convey health, and grace, and life, and hopes of glory in the blessed Sacrament. I adore thee, O most Righteous Redeemer, that thou art pleased under the visible signs of Bread and Wine, to convey unto our souls thy holy body and blood, and all the benefits of thy bitter Passion. O my God, I am not worthy thou shouldst come under my roof, but let thy holy Spirit with his purities, prepare for thee a lodging in my soul. Thou hast knocked often, O blessed Jesu, at the door of my heart, and wouldest willingly have entered, behold, O Lord, my heart is willing, ready to receive thee, cast out of it all worldly desires, all lust and carnal appetites, and then enter, and there love to inhabit, that the Devil may never return to a place that is swept and garnished, to fill me full of iniquity. O thou lover of souls, grant that this holy Sacrament may be light to my eyes, a guide to my understanding, and joy to my soul, that by its strength I may subdue and mortify the whole body of sin in me, that it may produce in me fullness of wisdom, and constancy of faith, perfection, accomplishment of all the Righteous Commandments, and such blessed union with thee, that I never more live unto myself, or to the world, but to thee only, and by the refreshment of an holy hope, I may be lead through the paths of a good life, and persevering piety, to the communion and possession of thy Kingdom, O blessed Jesu, who livest and reignest ever one God, world without end. Amen.

A Prayer after the Receiving of the Sacramental Bread.

I Give hearty thanks unto thee, Almighty God, that thou hast not rejected me from thy holy Table, but hast refreshed my soul with the salutary refection of the body, thy dear Son Jesus Christ. Lord, if I had lived innocently, and had kept all thy Commandments, I could have not expected so transcendent a mercy, but since I have lived in all manner of sin, and multiplied provocations against thy Divine Majesty, thy mercy is so glorious and infinite, that I am amazed at the consideration of its Immensity. Go on, O my dear God, to finish so blessed a Redemption, and now that thou hast begun to celebrate a Marriage, and a holy Union between thyself and my soul, let me never throw off the Wedding-garment, or stain it with pollution of deadly sin, nor seek after other Lovers, but let me forever and ever be united unto thee, being transformed into thy will in this life, and to the likeness of thy glories in the life to come, who livest and reignest ever one God, world without end. Amen.

After the Receiving of the Cup.

O Just and dear God, who out of the unmeasurable Abysses of wisdom and mercy hast redeemed us, and offerest life and grace, and salvation to us by the real exhibition of thy Son Jesus Christ in the Sacrifice of his death upon the Altar of the Cross, and by commemoration of the bitter Agonies in the holy Sacrament, grant that that great and venerable Sacrifice which we now commemorate sacramentally, may procure of thee for thy whole Church mercy and peace, and great assistance in all trials, deliverance from all heresies, schisms, sacrilege, and persecutions; to all sick people health, and salvation, redemption from captivity, competency of living to the indigent and necessitous, comfort to the afflicted, relief to the oppressed, repentance to all sinners, softness of spirit, and a tender conscience to the obstinate, conversion to the Jews, Turk, and remedy to all that are in trouble or adversity, and grant to us, O Lord, that this Sacrament and Sacrifice of commemoration, by virtue of that painful and proper Sacrifice upon the Cross, may obtain for me, and for us all who have communicated this day, pardon and peace, and that we may derive from thee by this mystery, grace to expel our sins, to mortify all our lusts, to exterminate all concupiscence, to crucify all inordinate irregularities, to produce in us humility, and chastity, and obedience, and meekness of spirit, and charity, and let us not be harmed by the violence & invasions of all our ghostly enemies, and temporal disadvantages, and give us grace and favor that we may not die in the commission of a sin without repentance, nor without receiving the blessed Sacrament, but that we may so live and die, that we may at last rest in thy bosom, and be embraced with the comprehensions of thy eternal Charity, who livest and reignest ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Prayers preparatory to Death.

A Prayer for a Blessed Ending, to be said in time of Health or Sickness.

O Blessed Jesu, fountain of eternal Mercy, the life of the soul, and glorious Conqueror over Death and Sin, I humbly beseech thee to give me grace so to spend this transitory life in virtue and holy exercises, that when the day of my death shall come, in the midst of all my pains I may feel the sweet refreshings of thy holy Spirit comforting my soul, sustaining my infirmities, and relieving all my spiritual necessities, and grant that in the unity of the holy Catholic Church, and in the integrity of Christian Faith, with confidence and hope of thy mercy in great love towards thee, in peace towards my neighbors, and in charity with all the world, I may through thy grace depart hence out of this veil of misery, and go into that glorious Country, where thou hast purchased an inheritance for us, with the price of thy most precious blood, and reignest in it gloriously in the unity of thy Father and ours, of thy Holy Spirit and our ghostly Comforter, ever one God world without end. Amen.

All blessing, and praise, and honor, be unto thee, O blessed Redeemer, and to thee I the banished and miserable Son of Adam do call for mercy and defense in this needful time of trouble, to thee I sigh and cry in the valley of tears, O dearest Advocate, turn those thy merciful eyes towards me, and show me thy glorious face in thy heavenly Kingdom, where no tears, or sighing, or fears, or sadness can approach, Amen sweetest Jesu, Amen.

A Prayer to be said in the beginning of Sickness.

O Lord my God, who chastisest everyone whom thou receivest, and with thy fatherly correction smitest those whom thou consignest to the inheritance of Sons, write my soul in the book of life, and number me amongst thy chosen children, whom thou hast smitten with the Rod of Sickness, and by thy chastisements hast brought me into the lot of the Righteous. Thou, O blessed Jesus, who art a helper in the needful time of trouble, lay no more upon me than thou shalt enable me to bear, and let thy gentle corrections in this life prevent the unsupportable stripes of thy vengeance in the life to come. Smite me now, that thou mayest spare me to all eternity; and yet O blessed High Priest, who art touched with a sense of our infirmities, smite me friendly, and reprove me with such a tenderness as thou bearest unto thy children, to whom thou conveyest supplicatory comforts, greaten not the pains of thy chastisements, and in due time restore me to health, and to thy solemn Assemblies again, and to the joy of thy countenance. Give me patience and humility, and the grace of Repentance, and an absolute dereliction of myself, and resignation to thy pleasure and providence, with a power to do thy Will in all things, and then do what thou pleasest with me, in health or sickness, in life or death; let me feel thy comforts refreshing my soul, and let thy grace pardon all my sins; grant this O heavenly Father for thy dear Sons sake my blessed Savior and Redeemer. Amen.

A Prayer for a sick person in danger of Death.

O Lord Jesus Christ, our health and our salvation, our life, our hope, and our resurrection from the dead, I resign myself up to thy holy will and pleasure, either to life, that I may live longer to thy service, and my amendment, or to death, to the perpetual enjoyment of thy presence, and of thy glory, into thy hands I commend my spirit, for I know, O Lord, that nothing can perish which is committed to thy mercy: I believe, help thou my unbelief. I believe, O Lord, that I shall receive my body again at the resurrection of the Just: I relinquish all care of that, only I beg of thee mercy for my soul; strengthen it with thy grace against all temptation; let thy loving kindness defend it as with a shield against all violence and hostile assaults of Satan; let the same mercy be my guard and defense, which protected thy Martyrs, crowning them with victory in the midst of flames, horrid torments, and most cruel deaths. There is no help in me, O Lord; I cannot by my own strength or power give a minutes rest to my wearied body, but my trust is in thy mercies, and I call to mind, to my unspeakable comfort, that thou wert hungry, and thirsty, and wearied, and whipt, and crowned with thorns, and mocked, and crucified for me; O let that mercy of thine which made thee suffer so much, pardon me, and save me; let thy merits answer for my impieties; let thy Righteousness cover my sins, thy blood wash away my stains, and thy comforts refresh my soul; as my body grows weaker, let thy grace be stronger; let not my faith doubt, nor my hope tremble, nor my charity grow cold, nor my soul be affrighted with the terrors of death, but let the light of thy countenance enlighten mine eyes, that I sleep not in death eternal, and when my tongue fails, let thy Spirit teach my heart with strong crying and groans that are unutterable. O let not the enemy do me any violence, but let thy holy mercies, and thy Angels repel and defeat his malice, and find that my soul may by thy strength triumph in the joys of eternity, in the fruition of thee, my life, my joy, my hope, my exceeding great reward, my Lord, and and my Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Prayer for a dying person in or near the Agonies of Death.

MOST merciful and blessed Savior, have mercy upon the soul of this servant; remember not his ignorance, nor the sins of his youth, nor age, but according to thy great mercies remember him in the mercies and glories of thy Kingdom. Thou O Lord, hast opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all Believers; O let the everlasting gates be opened, and receive his soul; let the Angels, who rejoice at the conversion of a sinner, triumph and be exalted in his deliverance and salvation. Make him partaker of the benefits of thy holy Incarnation, Life and Sanctity, Passion and Death, Resurrection and Ascension, and all the Prayers of the Church, that the Joy of the Elect, and the Fruits of the blessed Communion of the Saints, may be fulfilled, and the Glory of thee, of our Lord Jesu, and daily add to the number of thy beautified servants, such as shall be saved, that thy coming may be hastened, and the expectation of the Saints may be fulfilled and advanced, and all the whole Church singing praise to the honor of thy Name, who liveth and reigneth ever one God world without end.

Amen.

The 51.

O Most merciful Jesu, who didst die to redeem us from death and damnation, have mercy upon this thy servant, whom thy hand has visited with sickness, of thy goodness be pleased to forgive him all his sins, and seal his hopes of glory with the refreshments of thy Holy Spirit Lord, give him strength & confidence in thee, assuage his pain, repel the assaults of his ghostly enemies, and give him a guard of holy Angels, preserve him in the unity of the Church, keep his senses entire, his understanding right; give him great measure of contrition, true faith, a well grounded hope, and abundant charity; give him a quiet and a joyful departure; let thy ministering spirits convey his soul to the mansions of peace and rest, there with certainty to expect a joyful Resurrection to the fullness of Joy at thy right hand, where there is pleasure forever more. Amen.

A Prayer for the Joyes of Heaven.

O Most glorious Jesu, who art the portion, and the exceeding great reward of all faithful people, thou hast beautified human nature with glorious Immortality, and hast carried the same above all Heavens, above the seat of Angels, beyond the Cherubims and Seraphims, placing it on the right hand of thy heavenly Father, grant to us all the issues of thy abundant charity, that we may live in thy fear, and die in thy favor; prepare our souls with heavenly Joyes, making us righteous here, that we may be blessed hereafter through thy great mercy.
Amen.

A Prayer for the Morning at the first kneeling down, saying,

Holy, blessed, and glorious Trinity, Three Persons, and One God, have mercy up-me a miserable sinner.

Lord, I know not what to pray for as I ought, O let thy Spirit help my infirmities, and enable me to offer up a spiritual Sacrifice acceptable to thee by Jesus Christ.

O Most gracious Lord, whose mercies endureth forever, I thy unworthy servant who have so largely tasted of them, desire to render thee the tribute of my humblest praises for them. In thee, O Lord, I live, move, and have my being; thou hast made me to be, and then that I might not be miserable, but happy, thou sendest thy Son out of thy bosom to redeem me from the power of my sins by his grace, and from the punishment of them by his blood, and by both of them to bring me to his glory: Thou hast by thy mercy caused me to be born within thy particular fold, the Christian Church, where I was early consecrated to thee in Baptism, and have been partaker of all those spiritual helps which might aid me to perform that vow I there made to thee; and when by my own willfulness or negligence I have fallen to do ill, yet thou in thy manifold mercies hast not forsaken me, but hast graciously invited me to Repentance, aforded me all means both outwardly and inwardly for it, and with patience hast attended, and not cut me off for the acts of those many damning sins I have committed, as I have most justly deserved; thou art glorious in thy manifold mercies, O Lord, in thy restraining grace by which I have been kept back from any of the greatest sins, and in thy inciting grace, by which I have been enabled to do the least good, therefore not unto me, but unto thy Name be praises, for these and all other spiritual blessings. My soul doth magnify the Lord, and all that is within me praise his holy Name. I likewise praise thee for those many outward blessings I enjoy, as health, friends, food and raiment, the comforts as well as the necessaries of this life; for those continual protections of thy hand, by which I and mine are kept from dangers, and those gracious deliverances thou hast often afforded out of such as have befallen me, and for that mercy of thine whereby thou hast sweetened and allayed those troubles thou seest not fit wholly to remove; for thy particular care of me this night, and all other thy goodness towards me. Lord, grant that I may render unto thee not only the fruit of my lips, but the obedience of my life, that so these blessings here may be an earnest of those richer blessings thou hast prepared for those that love thee, and that for his sake, whom thou hast made the Author of eternal salvation to all that obey him, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Confession.

O Righteous Lord, who hatest iniquity, I thy sinful creature cast myself at thy feet, acknowledging that I most justly deserve to be utterly abhorred and forsaken by thee; for I have drunk in iniquity like water, gone on in a continued course of sin and rebellion against thee, daily committing those sins thou forbidest, and leaving undone those things thou commandest: Mine heart which should be an habitation for thy Spirit, is become a cage of unclean birds, of foul and disordered affections; and out of this abundance of the heart my mouth speaketh, my hands act; so that in thought, word and deed, I continually transgress against thee. O Lord, I have done amiss, I have dealt wickedly; the good I would do, I do it not, but the evil I should not, that do I. O my God, be merciful unto me for my luxury, pride, covetousness, and all wandering thoughts, and worldly imaginations. Nay, O Lord, I have despised that goodness of thine which should have lead me to repentance, hardening my heart against all those means thou hast used for my amendment; and now, Lord, what can I expect from thee but judgment and fiery indignation? that is indeed the due reward of my sins: But, O Lord, there is mercy with thee that thou mayest be feared: O fit me for that mercy, by giving me a deep and a hearty Repentance, and then according to thy goodness let thine anger and thy wrath be turned away. Look upon me in thy Son, my blessed Savior, and for the merits of his sufferings, pardon all my sins; and Lord, I beseech thee, by the power of thy grace, so to renew and purify my heart, that I may become a new creature, utterly forsaking every evil way, living in constant, sincere, universal obedience to thee all the rest of my days, behaving myself as a good and faithful servant, I may at the last be received into the Joy of my Lord; grant this for Jesus Christ his sake. Amen.

A Prayer for Grace.

O Most gracious God, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, I a wretched sinner that am not able of myself so much as to think a good thought, beseech thee to work in me both to will and to do of thy good pleasure what thou requirest of me; enlighten my mind, that I may know thee, and let me not be barren or unfruitful in that knowledge. Lord, work in my heart a true faith, a purifying hope, and an unfeigned love towards thee. Give me a full trust in thee, zeal for thee, reverence in all things that relate to thee. Make me fearful to offend thee, thankful for thy mercies, humble under thy corrections, devout in thy service, sorrowful for my sins▪ & grant that in all things I may behave myself so, as befits a creature to his Creator, a servant to his Lord; enable me likewise to perform that duty I owe to myself. Give me that meekness, humility, and contentedness, whereby I may always possess my soul in patience, and thankfulness. Make me diligent in all my duties, watchful in all temptations, perfect, pure, and temperate, and so moderate in all my most lawful enjoyments, that they never may become a snare to me. Make me also, O Lord, to be so affected towards my neighbor, that I never transgress that Royal Law of thine, of loving him as myself. Grant me exactly to perform to all a part of Justice, yielding to all whatsoever by any kind of right is their due. Give me such bowels of mercy and compassion, that I may never fail to do all acts of charity to all men, whether friends or enemies, according to thy command and example: Finally, I beseech thee, O Lord, to sanctify me within and without, that my whole spirit, and soul, and body, may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honor and glory forever. Amen.

Intercession.

O Blessed Lord, whose mercy is over all thy works, I beseech thee to have mercy upon all men, and grant that the precious Ransom which was paid by thy Son for all, may be effectual for the saving of all. Give thy enlightening grace to those that are in darkness, and thy converting grace to those that are in sin. Look with thy tenderest compassion upon the Universal Church. O be favorable and gracious unto Zion; build thou the walls of Jerusalem; unite all those that profess thy Name to thee, by purity, and holiness, and to each other by brotherly kindness. Have mercy on this desolate Church, and sinful Nation; Thou movedst the Land and divided it; heal the sores thereof, for it shaketh; make us so truly to repent of those sins which have provoked thy Judgments, that thou also mayest turn and repent, and leave a blessing behind thee. Bless those whom thou hast appointed our Governors, whether in Church, or State; so rule their hearts, and strengthen their hands, that they may want neither will nor power to punish wickedness and vice, and to maintain God's true Religion and Verity. Have pity, O Lord, on all that are in affliction; be a Father to the Fatherless, and plead the Cause of the Widow; comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, relieve the needy, defend the oppressed, and administer to everyone according to their several necessities. Let thy blessing rest upon all that are near and dear unto me, and grant them whatsoever is needful and necessary both for their souls and for their bodies; here name thy dearest Relations. Reward all those that have done me or them good; pardon all those that have done or wish us evil; work in me and them all that good which may make us acceptable in thy sight, Jesus Christ. Amen.

For Preservation.

O Merciful God, by whose bounty and love it is, that I have this day added to my life, I beseech thee so to guide me in it by thy grace, that I may do nothing which may dishonor thee, or wound my own soul, but that I may diligently apply my own soul to do all such good works as thou hast prepared for me. And, Lord, I beseech thee, give thy Angels charge over me, to keep me in all my ways, that no evil happen unto, nor any plague come nigh my dwelling, but that I and mine may be safe under thy protection, through Jesus Christ my Lord and Savior. Amen.

O Lord, pardon the wanderings and coldness of these Petitions, and deal with me, not according either to my prayers, or deserts, but according to my needs, and thine own rich mercy in Jesus Christ, in whose blessed Name and words I conclude these my imperfect prayers, saying, Our Father, &c.

Prayers for Night.

O Holy, blessed, and glorious Trinity, Three Persons, and One God, have mercy upon me a miserable sinner. Lord, I know not what to pray for as I ought; O let thy holy Spirit help mine infirmities, and enable me to offer up a spiritual Sacrifice acceptable unto thee, by Jesus Christ.

A Confession.

O Most holy Lord God, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, how shall I an abominable wretch, appear before thee, who am nothing but pollution? I am defiled in my very nature, have a backwardness to all good, and a readiness to all evil, but I have defiled myself much worse by my own actual sins and wicked customs; I have transgressed my duty to thee, my neighbor, and myself, and that both, in thought, word, and deed, by doing those things thou hast expressly forbidden, and neglecting to do those things thou hast commanded me, and this not only through ignorance and frailty, but knowingly and willfully, against the motion of thy Spirit, and the checks of mine own conscience to the contrary; and to make all these out of measure sinful, I have gone on in a daily course of repeating these provocations against thee, notwithstanding all thy calls to, and my own purposes and endeavors of amendment; yea this very day I have not ceased to add new sins to my former guilt, (here name the particulars) and now, O Lord, what shall I say, or how shall I open my mouth, seeing I have done these things? I know that the wages of sin is death, but O thou who willest not the death of a sinner, have mercy upon me; work in me, I beseech thee, a sincere contrition, and perfect hatred of all my sins; let me daily confess them, but yet not as duly renew them; and grant, O Lord, that from this instant I may give a bill of divorce to all my most beloved lusts, and then be thou pleased to marry me to thyself, in Truth, in Righteousness, and true Holiness, all the days of my life: and for all my sins past, O Lord, receive a Reconciliation, accept of that Ransom thy blessed Son hath paid for me, and for his sake whom thou hast set forth as a propitiation, pardon all my offenses, and receive me to thy favor; and when thou hast thus spoken peace to my soul, Lord keep me that I turn not anymore to folly, but stablish me with thy grace, that no temptation of the World, the Devil, or my own Flesh, may ever draw me to offend thee, that being made free from sin, and becoming a Servant unto God, I may have my fruit unto holiness, and in the end everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

A Thanksgiving.

O Thou Father of mercy, who art kind even to the unthankful, I acknowledge myself to have abundantly experimented that gracious property of thine; for notwithstanding my daily provocations against thee, thou still heapest mercy and loving kindness upon me; all my contemnings and despisings thy spiritual favors hath not yet made thee withdraw them, but yet in the riches of thy goodness thou still continuest to me the offers of thy grace and life in thy Son, and all my abuses of thy temporal blessings thou hast not punished with an utter depravation of them, but still art pleased to afford me a liberal portion of them, the sins of this day thou hast not repaid, as justly thou mightest, by sweeping me away with a swift destruction, but hast spared me and preserved me according to the greatness of thy mercy; here mention the particular mercies of this day; What shall I render unto the Lord for all these benefits he hath done unto me. Lord, let this goodness of thine lead me to hearty repentance, and grant that I may not only offer thee thanks and praise, but may also order my conversation aright, that so I may at the last see the salvation of God, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Here use the Prayer for grace, and that Intercession appointed for the morning.

For Preservation.

O Blessed Lord, keeper of Israel, that neither slumberest nor sleepest, be pleased in thy mercy to watch over me this night; keep me by thy grace from the works of darkness, and defend me by thy power from all dangers; grant me moderate rest and sleep, such as may fit me for the duties of the next day following; and, Lord, make me ever mindful of that time when I shall lie down in the dust, and I know neither the day nor the hour of my Master's coming; grant me grace that I may always fear thee, and that I may never live in such a state as I shall fear to die, but that whether I live, I may live unto the Lord, or whether I die, I may die unto the Lord; so that living and dying I may be thine, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Let thy Bed put thee in mind of thy grave, and when thou liest down, say,

O Blessed Savior, who by thy precious death and burial didst take the sting of death, and the power of the grave; grant me the joyful fruits of that victory, and be thou to me in life and death advantage. I will lay me down in peace, and take my rest, for it is thou, O Lord only that makest me dwell in safety, into thy hands I commend my spirit, for thou hast redeemed it, O Lord, thou God of Truth.

Collects for several Graces.

For Faith.

O Blessed Lord, seeing without Faith it is impossible to please thee, let thy Spirit, I beseech thee, work in me such a Faith as may be acceptable in thy sight, even such as worketh by Love. O let me not rest in a dead ineffectual Faith, but grant that it may be such as may show itself by my works; that it may be that victorious Faith which may enable me to overcome the world, and conform me to the Image of that Christ on whom I believe, that so at the last I may receive the end of my Faith, even the salvation of my soul, by the same Jesus Christ. Amen.

For the Love of God.

O Holy and gracious Lord, who art infinitely excellent in thyself and infinitely bountiful and compassionate towards me, I beseech thee suffer not my heart to be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, but let the offers of thy Love, make deep impressions on my soul. Lord, thou art pleased to require my heart, and thou only hast right to it. O let me not be so sacriliciously unjust as to alienate any part of it, but enable me to render it up whole and entire to thee; but, O my God, thou seest it already usurped, the world with its vanities hath seized it, and like a strong man armed keeps possession. O thou who art stronger, come upon him, and take this unworthy heart of mine as thine own spoil; refine it with that purifying fire of thy Love, that it may be a fit habitation for thy Spirit. Lord, if thou seest it, be pleased to make me taste of those Joyes, those ravishments of thy Love, wherewith thy soul hath been so transported: But if in this I know not what I ask, if I may not choose my place in thy Kingdom, yet, O Lord, deny me not to drink of thy Cup; let me have such a sincerity and degree of Love, as may make me endure anything for thy sake; such a perfect Love as may cast out all fear, and all sloth too, that nothing may seem to me grievous to suffer, or too difficult to do in obedience to thee, that so expressing my love by keeping thy Commandments, I may by thy mercy at last obtain that Crown of Glory, which thou hast promised to those that love thee, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

For Devotion in Prayer.

O Most gracious Lord God, who not only permittest us, miserable sinners and needy creatures, to present our petitions to thee, grant I beseech thee, that the frequency of my prayer may be somewhat proportionable to those continual needs I have of thy mercy. Lord, I confess it is the greatest honor, and greatest advantage thus to be allowed access to thee; yet sottish and stupid is my profane heart, that it shuns or frustrates the opportunities of it. My soul, O Lord, is possessed with a spirit of infirmity, it is bowed together, and can in no wise lift up itself to thee: O be thou pleased to cure this sad, this miserable disease, to raise, and enliven this earthly drowsy heart, that it may freely mount towards thee, that I may set a true value on this most valuable privilege, and take delight in my approaching to thee; and that my approaches may be with a reverence, some way answerable to that awful Majesty I come before, with an importunity and earnestness answerable to those pressing wants I have to be supplied, and with such a fixed attention of mind, as no wandering thoughts may interrupt; that I may no more incur the guilt of drawing near to thee with my lips, when my heart is far from thee, or my prayers turned into sin, but may so ask, that I may receive, seek, that I may find, knock, that it may be open unto me, that from praying to thee here, I may be translated to the praising thee eternally in thy glory, through the merits and intercession of Jesus Christ. Amen.

For the Fear of God.

O Most glorious Majesty, who only art High, and to be feared, possess my soul with a holy awe and reverence of thee, that I may give thee the honor due to thy Name, and may bear such a respect to all things which relate to thee that I may never profane any holy thing, or sacriliginously invade what thou hast set apart to thyself. And, O Lord, since thou art a God, that wilt not clear the guilty, let the dread of thy Justice make me tremble to provoke thee in anything. O let me not so mis-place my fear, as to be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the Son of Man, who shall be made as grass, and forget the Lord my Maker, but replenish my soul with the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom, which may be as a bridle to all my brutish appetites; and keep me in a constant conformity to thy holy Will. Hear me, O Lord, I beseech thee, and put this fear in my heart, that I may not depart from thee, but may with fear and trembling work out my own salvation, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

For Thankfulness.

O Most gracious and bountiful Lord, who fillest all things with goodness, and expectest no other return, but praise and thanksgiving, let me, O Lord, never defraud thee of that so easy tribute, but let my heart be ever filled with a sense, and my mouth with the acknowledgment of thy mercies. It is a joyful and pleasant thing to be thankful; O suffer me not, I beseech thee, to lose my part in that Divine pleasure, but grant that as I daily receive blessings from thee, so I may daily from an affectionate and devout heart offer up thanks to thee; and grant that not only my lips, but my life may show forth thy praise, by consecrating myself to thy service, and walking in holiness and righteousness before thee all the days of my life, through Jesus Christ my Lord and blessed Savior. Amen.

For Chastity.

O Holy and Immortal Jesus, whose first descent was into the Virgins Womb, and who didst love to inhabit only in pure and Virgins hearts, I beseech thee, send thy Spirit of purity to cleanse me from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit. My body, O Lord, is the Temple of the Holy Ghost, O let me never pollute that Temple with any uncleanness; and because out of the heart proceed the things that defile the man. Lord, grant me to keep my heart with all diligence, that no impure or foul thoughts be harboured there; but enable me, I beseech thee, to keep both soul and body pure and undefiled, that so I may glorify thee here, both in body and soul, and spirit, and be glorified in both with Christ hereafter. Amen.

For Contentedness.

O Merciful God, thy Wisdom is infinite to choose, and thy Love forward to dispence good things to us, O let me always fully and entirely resign myself to thy disposals; have no desire of my own, but a perfect satisfaction in thy chusings for me, that so in whatsoever state I am, I may be therein content. Lord, grant I may never look with murmuring on my own condition, nor with envy on other men's; and to that end, I beseech thee, purge my heart of all covetous desires and affections O let me never yield any corner of my soul to Mammon, but give me such a contempt of these fading riches, that whether they decrease, or increase, I may never set my heart upon them, but that all my care may be to be rich towards God, to lay up my treasure in Heaven, that I may so set my affections on things above, that when Christ who is my life shall appear, I may also appear with him in glory; grant this, O Lord, for the merit of the same Jesus Christ. Amen.

For Perseverance.

O Eternal and unchangeable Lord God, who art the same yesterday, today, and forever, be thou pleased to communicate some rays of that excellency, some degree of that stability to me thy wretched creature, who am light and inconstant, turned about with every blast. My understanding is very deceivable, O stablish it with thy truth; keep it from the snares of seducing spirits, that I may not be lead away with the errors of the wicked, and fall from mine own stedfastness. My will also, O Lord, is irresolute and wavering, and doth not cleave steadfastly unto God. My goodness is but as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it passeth away: O strengthen and confirm me; and whatsoever good thou hast wrought in me, be pleased to accomplish it, and perform it until the day of Christ. Lord, thou seest my weakness, and knowest the number and strength of those temptations I am to struggle with; O leave me not to myself, but cover thou my head in the day of battle; and in all spiritual combats, make me more than Conqueror through him that loved me. O let no terrors or flatteries either of the world, or my own flesh, ever draw me from my obedience to thee; but grant that I may continue steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; by patient continuance in well doing, seeking, and at last obtain glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer before the Receiving of the Blessed Sacrament.

O Most merciful God, who hast in thy great goodness prepared this Spiritual Feast for sick and famished souls, make my desires and longings after it, answerable to my needs of it. I have, with the Prodigal, wasted that portion of grace thou bestowedst upon me, therefore do infinitely want a supply out of this Treasury; but, O Lord, how shall such a wretch as I dare to approach this holy Table? I am a Dog, how shall I presume to take the Children's bread? or how shall this spiritual Manna, this food of Angels be given to one who hath chosen to feed on husks with Swine? nay, to one who hath already so often trampled these precious things underfoot, either carelessly neglecting, or unworthily refusing those holy precious Mysteries. O Lord, my horrible guiltiness makes me tremble to come, and makes me not dare to keep away; for where, O Lord, shall my polluted soul be washed, if not in this fountain which thou hast opened for sin and for uncleanness? hitherto therefore I come, and thou hast promised, that him that cometh to thee, thou wilt in no wise cast out. This is, O Lord, the Blood of the New Testament, grant to me so to receive it, that it may be to me for remission of sins; and though I have so often, and so wickedly broken my part of that Covenant, whereof this Sacrament is a seal, yet be thou graciously pleased to make thine good, to be merciful to my unrighteousness, and to remember my sins and my iniquities no more; and not only so, but to put thy Laws in my heart, and to write them in my mind; and by the power of thy grace dispose my soul to such a sincere and constant obedience, that I may never again provoke thee. Lord grant that in these holy Mysteries I may not only commemorate, but effectually receive my blessed Savior, and all the benefits of his passion; and to that end give me such a preparation of soul as may qualify me for it. Give me a deep sense of my sins and unworthiness, that being weary and heavy laden, I may be capable of his refreshings, and being encompassed with my own tears, and truly sorry for my many sins, I may be the fitter to be washed in his blood. Raise up my dull and earthly mind from groveling here below, and inspire it with a holy zeal, that I may with a spiritual affection approach this spiritual Feast. And let, O Lord, that infinite Love of Christ, in dying for so wretched a sinner, inflame my frozen benumbed soul, and kindle in me that sacrifice of love to him, and that so vehement, that no water may quench, no floods drown it; such as may burn up all my dross, not leave one unmortified lust in my soul; such as may also extend itself to all whom thou hast given me command and example to love, even mine enemies as well as friends. Finally, O Lord, I beseech thee to clothe me in the Wedding-garment, and make me, though myself a most unworthy sinner, yet by thy mercy an acceptable guest at this holy Table, that I may not eat and drink my own damnation, but may have my pardon sealed, my weakness repaired, my corruptions subdued, and my soul inseparably united to thee, that no temptation be ever able to dissolve the union; but that being begun here in grace, it may be consummated in glory; grant this, O Lord, for thy dear Son sake, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Another Prayer for the Receiving of the Holy Communion.

O Blessed Jesus, who once offeredst up thyself upon the Cross for me, and now offerest thyself to me in the Sacrament, let not, I beseech thee, my impenitence and unworthiness frustrate these so inestimable mercies to me, but qualify me by thy grace to receive the full benefit of them. O Lord, I have abundant need of thee, but am so clogged with guilt, so holden with the cords of my sins, that I am not able to move towards thee. O loose me from these bands wherewith Satan and my own lusts have bound me, and draw me that I may run after thee. Lord, thou seest daily how eagerly I pursue the paths that lead to death; and when thou invitest me to life and glory, I turn my back, and forsake the hopes of mercy. How often hath this Feast been prepared, and I have with frivolous excuses absented myself; or if I have come, it hath been rather to defile, than to adore thee. I have brought such Troops of thy professed enemies, and unrepented sins along with me, as if I came not to commemorate, but to renew thy passion, crucifying thee afresh, and put thee to open shame; and now of what punishment shall I be thought worthy, who have thus trampled underfoot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing; yet, O merciful Jesu, this is my only Refuge. O let this make my atonement, or I perish eternally; wherefore didst thou shed it, but to save sinners; neither can the merit of it be overwhelmed either by the greatness or number of my sins. I am a sinner, a great one, O let me find this saving efficacy: Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful, for my soul trusteth in thee; and in the clefts of thy wounds shall be my Refuge, until thy Fathers indignation be over past. O thou who hast, as my High Priest, sacrificed for me, intercede for me also, and plead thy meritorious sufferings on my behalf, and suffer not, O my Redeemer, the price of blood to be utterly lost; and grant, O Lord, that as the sins I have to be forgiven are many, so I may love much. Lord, thou seest what faint and cold affections I have towards thee; O warm and enliven them; and as in this Sacrament that transcendent love of thine, in dying for me is shed forth, so I beseech thee, let it convey such grace into me, as may enable me to make some returns of love. O let this Divine fire descend from Heaven into my soul; and let my sins be the burnt offering for it to consume, that there may not any corrupt affection, any cursed thing be sheltered in my heart; that I may never again defile that place which thou hast chosen for thy Temple. Thou dyedst, O dear Jesu, to redeem me from all iniquity, O let me not again sell myself to work wickedness, but grant that I may approach unto thee at this time with most sincere and fixed resolutions of an inward Reformation; and let me receive such grace and strength from thee, as may enable me faithfully to perform them. Lord, there are many old habituated diseases my soul groans under; here mention thy most prevailing corruptions; and though I lie never so long at the Pool of Bethesda, come never so often to thy Table, yet unless thou be pleased to put forth thy healing virtue, they will still remain uncured. O thou blessed Physician of souls, heal me, and grant that I may now so touch thee, that everyone of these loathsome Issues may immediately stench, that my sickness may not be unto death, but unto the glory of thy mercy in pardoning, to the glory of thy grace in purifying so polluted a wretch. O Christ, hear me, and grant I may now approach unto thee with such humility and contrition, love and devotion, that thou mayest vouchsafe to come unto me, and abide with me, communicating to me thyself, and all the merit of thy passion; and then, O Lord, let no occasions of Satan, or mine own conscience, amaze or distract me; but having peace with thee, let me also have peace in myself, that this Wine may make glad, this Bread of Life may strengthen my heart, and enable me cheerfully to run the way of thy Commandments; grant this merciful Savior, for thine own bowels and compassions sake. Amen.

Immediately before Receiving.

Thou hast said, that he that eateth thy flesh, and drinketh thy blood, hath eternal life; behold thy servant O Lord, be it unto me according to thy Word.

At the Receiving of the Bread.

By thy crucified Body deliver me from the body of this death.

At the Receiving of the Cup.

O Lord, let this blood of thine purge my conscience from dead works, to serve the ever Living God. Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean; O touch me, and say, I will, be thou clean.

After Receiving.

What shall I render unto the Lord for all the benefits he hath done unto me; I will receive the Cup of Salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and a blessing; therefore blessing, honor, glory and power, be to him that sitteth on the Throne, and the Lamb forever and ever. Amen.

I have sworn, and am steadfastly bent to keep thy Righteous Judgments; O Lord hold thou up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.

O Thou fountain of all goodness, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, and to whom all honor and glory shall be returned, I desire with all the most fervent and inflamed affections of a grateful heart to bless and praise thee for those inestimable mercies thou hast vouchsafed me. O Lord, what is man that thou shouldst so regard him, as to send thy Beloved Son to suffer such bitter things for him? But Lord, what am I, the worst of men, that I should have any part of this Sacrament, who have so often despised him, and his sufferings? O the height and depth of this mercy of thine, that art pleased to admit me to the renewing of that Covenant with thee, which I have so often and perversely broken! that I who am not worthy of that daily bread which sustains the body, should be made partaker of this bread of life, which nourisheth the soul; and that the God of all purity should vouchsafe to unite himself to so polluted a wretch. O my God, suffer me no more, I beseech thee, to turn thy grace into wantonness, to make thy mercy an occasion of security, but let this unspeakable love of thine, confirm me to obedience, that since my blessed Lord died for me, I may no longer live unto myself, but to him. O Lord, I know there is no concord between Christ and Belial; therefore since he hath now been pleased to enter my heart, O let me never permit any lust to chase him thence; but let him that hath so dearly bought me, still keep possession of me; and let nothing ever take me out of his hand: To this end be thou graciously pleased to watch over me, and defend me from all assaults of my spiritual enemies, but graciously and specially from myself, from the treachery of my own heart, which is too willing to yield itself a prey; and where thou seest me either by nature or custom most weak, there do thou, I beseech thee, magnify thy power in my preservations; here mention thy most dangerous temptations; and Lord, let my Savior's sufferings for my sins, and the vows that I have now made against them, never depart from my mind; but let the remembrance of the one, enable me to perform the other, that I may never make truce with those lusts which nailed his hands, piercing his side, and made his soul heavy to the death; but that having now anew listed myself under his banner, I may fight manfully, and follow the Captain of my salvation, even through a Sea of blood. Lord, strengthen the hands that fall down, and feeble knees, that I faint not in this warfare. O be thou my strength, who am not able of myself to struggle with the slightest temptations: how often have I turned my back in the day of battle? how many of these Sacramental Vows have I violated? and Lord, I have still the same inconstant deceitful heart to betray me to the breach of this. O thou who art Yea and Amen, in whom there is no shadow of change, communicate unto me, I beseech thee, such stability of mind, that I may no more thus start aside like a broken Bow, but that having my heart wholly with thee, I may continue steadfast in thy Covenant, that not one good purpose which thy Spirit hath raised in me this day may vanish, as so many have done formerly, but that they may bring forth good fruit unto life eternal; grant this, O merciful Father, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ my only Savior. Amen.

A Prayer of Intercession to be used either before or after the Receiving of the Sacrament.

O Most gracious Lord, who so tenderly lovest all mankind, as to give thy Son out of thy bosom to be a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, grant that the effect of this Redemption may be as universal as the design of it; that it may be to the salvation of all. O let no person by impenitence, and willful sin, forfeit his part in it, but by the power of thy grace bring all, even the most obstinate sinners to repentance, enlightening all in darkness, Heretics, Jews, Turks and Infidels; take from them all blindness, hardness of heart, and contempt of thy Word, and so fetch them home. Blessed Lord, bring them into thy fold, that they may be saved among the number of the true Israel, and for all those, upon whom the Name of thy Son is called, grant, O Lord, that their conversion may be such as becometh the Gospel of Christ, that his Name be no longer blasphemed amongst the Heathens through us. O blessed Lord, how long shall Christendom continue the vilest part of the world, a sink of all abominable pollutions, which even Barbarians detest? O let not our profession and our practice be always at so wide a distance; let not the Disciples of the holy Immaculate Jesus be of all others the most profane and impure; let not the subjects of the Prince of Peace be of all others the most contentious and bloody, but make us Christians indeed, as well as in Name, that we may walk worthy of that holy Vocation wherewith we are called, and may all with one mind, and one mouth glorify the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Have mercy on this languishing Church; look down from Heaven the habitation of thy holiness, and of thy glory, where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels, and of thy heart towards us? are they restrained? be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember our iniquities forever; but though our backslidings are many, and we have grievously rebelled, yet according to all thy goodness, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away, and cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary, which is desolate, for the Lord's sake, and so separate betwixt us and our sins, that they may no longer separate between us and our God. Save and defend all Christian Kings, Princes and Governors, specially to whom we owe subjection; plead thou their Cause, O Lord, against those that strive with them, and fight thou against those that fight against them; and so guide and assist them in the discharge of that Office whereunto thou hast appointed them, that under them we may lead a quiet and a peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty. Bless them that wait at thine Altar; open thou their lips, that their mouth may set forth thy praise. O let not the Light of the World be put under bushels, but place them in their Candlesticks, that they may give light to all that are in the house. Let not Jeroboams Priests profane thy service, but let the seed of Aaron's Hill minister unto thee. And O thou Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, succor and relieve all that are in affliction; deliver the outcast and poor, help them to right that suffer wrong; let the sorrowful sighing of the prisoners come before thee, and according to thee greatness of thy power, preserve them that are appointed to die: Grant ease to those that are in pain, supplies to those that are in want: Give to all presumptuous sinners a sense of their sins, and to all despairing, a sight of thy mercies; and do thou, O Lord, for everyone abundantly above what they can ask or or think: Forgive my enemies, persecutors and slanderers, and turn their hearts: Pour down thy blessings upon all my friends and benefactors, all who have commended themselves to my prayers; here thou mayest name particular persons; and grant, O most merciful Father, that through this blood of the Cross, we may be presented pure and unblameable, and unprovable in thy sight, that so we may be admitted into that place of purity, where no unclean thing can enter, there to sing all eternal praises, to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, forever. Amen.

A Prayer in time of Affliction.

O Just and holy Lord, who with rebukes dost chasten man for sin, I desire unfeignedly to humble myself under thy mighty hand, which now lies heavy upon me: I heartily acknowledge, O Lord, that all I do, all I can suffer, is but the due reward of my deeds, therefore in thy severest inflictions I must still say, Righteous art thou, O Lord, righteous are thy Judgments, but, O Lord, I beseech thee in Judgment remember mercy; although my sins have enforced thee to strike, yet consider my weakness, and let not my stripes be more heavy, or more lasting, than thou seest proportionable for my soul: Correct me, but with the chastisement of a Father, not with the wounds of an enemy; and though thou take not off thy Rod, yet take away thine anger. Lord, do not abhor my soul, and cast not away thy servant in displeasure, but pardon my sins, I beseech thee: and if yet in thy fatherly wisdom thou seest fit to prolong thy corrections, thy blessed will be done. I cast myself, O Lord, at thy feet, do with me what thou pleasest, try me as silver is tried, so that thou bring me out purified. And Lord, make me, even my flesh also to subscribe to this Resignation, that there be nothing in me that may rebel against thy hand, but that I may suppress all repining thoughts, and may cheerfully drink of this Cup, how bitter soever thou art pleased to make it. Lord, let it prove medicinal, and cure all the diseases of my soul, that it may bring forth in me the peaceable fruit of Righteousness, that so these light afflictions which are but for a moment, may work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Thanksgiving for Deliverance.

O Blessed Lord, who art gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest of the evil, I thankfully acknowledge before thee, that thou hast not dealt with me after my sins, nor rewarded me according to my iniquities; my Rebellions, O Lord, deserve to be scourged with Scorpions, and thou hast corrected them only with a fatherly Rod; neither hast thou suffered me to lie long under that, but hast given me a timely and gracious issue out of my late distresses. O Lord, I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy, for thou hast considered my trouble, and hast known my soul in adversity: Thou hast smitten, and thou hast healed me; O let these various methods have their proper effects upon my soul, that I who have felt the smart of thy chastisements, may stand in awe and sin not; and that I who have likewise tasted the sweet refreshings of thy mercy, may have my heart ravished with it, and knit to thee in the firmest bands of love, and that by both I may be preserved in a constant, entire obedience to thee all my days, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Prayer for a Sick Person.

O Merciful and righteous Lord, the God of health, and of sickness, of life and of death, I most unfeignedly acknowledge that my great abuse of those many days of strength and welfare, that thou hast afforded me, hath most justly deserved thy present visitation; I desire, O Lord, humbly to accept of the punishment of the Lord for my iniquity, and to bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. And O thou merciful Father, who designest not the ruin, but the amendment of those whom thou scourgest, I beseech thee by thy grace so to sanctify this correction of thine to me, that this sickness of my body may be a means of health to my soul. Make me diligent to search my heart, and do thou, O Lord, discover every cursed thing, how close soever concealed there, that by the removal thereof, I may make way for the removal of this punishment. Heal my soul, O Lord, which hath sinned against thee, and then if it be thy blessed will, heal my body also. Restore the voice of joy and health into my dwelling, that I may live to praise thee, and to bring forth fruit of Repentance; but if in thy wisdom thou hast otherwise disposed, if thou hast determined that this sickness shall be unto death, I beseech thee to fit and prepare me for it: Give me that sincere and earnest Repentance, to which thou hast promised mercy and pardon. Wean my heart from the world and its fading vanities, and make me to gasp and pant after those more excellent and durable Joyes, which are at thy right hand, forever. Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, and in all the pains of my body, in all the agonies of my spirit, let thy comforts refresh my soul, and enable me patiently to wait till my change come; and grant, O Lord, that when my earthly Tabernacle is dissolved, I may have a building not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens; and that for his sake, who by his precious blood hath purchased it for me, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Thanksgiving for Recovery.

O Most gracious Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose hand my time is, I praise and magnify thee, that thou hast in love to my soul delivered me from the pit of destruction, and restored me to health again. It is of thy mercy alone, O Lord, that thou hast preserved my life from destruction; thou hast chastened and corrected me, but thou hast not given me over unto death: O let this life which thou hast thus graciously spared, be wholly consecrated unto thee. Behold, O Lord, I am by thy mercy made whole, O make me strictly careful to sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto me. Let not this reprieve thou hast now given me, make me secure, as thinking my Lord delayeth his coming; but grant me, I beseech thee, to make a right use of this longsuffering of thine, and so to employ every minute of that time thou hast allowed me, that when thou shalt appear, I may have confidence, and not be ashamed before thee at thy coming. Lord, I have found by this approach towards death, how dreadful a thing it is to be taken unprepared. O let it be a perpetual admonition to me to watch for my Masters coming; and when the pleasures of sin shall present themselves to entice me, O make me to remember how bitter they will be at last. O Lord, hear me, and as thou hast in much mercy afforded me time, so grant me all grace to work out my salvation, to provide Oil in my Lamp, that when the Bridegroom cometh, I may go in with him to the marriage; grant this I beseech thee, for thy dear Sons sake. Amen.

A Prayer at the approach of Death.

O Eternal and everlasting God, who breathed into man the breath of life, and when thou takest away that breath, he dies, and is turned again into dust, look with compassion on me thy poor creature, who am now drawing near the gates of death, and which is infinitely terrible, the Bar of Judgment. Lord, my own heart condemns me, and thou art infinitely greater than my heart, and thou knowest all things; the sins I remember fill me with horror: There are also multitudes of other sins which I either observed not at all times, or have since carelessly forgotten, which are all present with thee: Thou settest my misdeeds before thee, and my secret sins in the sight of thy countenance, and what a mountainous heap those eminent provocations of so many years arise to? how long shall so ungodly a sinner stand in thy Judgment, or such a sinner in the Congregation of the Righteous? And to add more terror, my very countenance, and repentance, I fear, will not abide thy trial; my frequent relapses heretofore have sufficiently witnessed the insincerity of my heart, and best resolutions; and then, O Lord, what can secure me that my present dislikes of my sins are not rather the effects of my amazing danger, than of any real change. And, O Lord, I know thou art not, nor wilt accept of anything that is not sincere. O Lord, when I consider this, fearfulness and trembling comes upon me, and a horrible dread overwhelms me; my flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and my heart is wounded within me. But, O Lord, who wills not the death of a sinner, be merciful unto me. One deep calleth upon another, the depth of my misery upon the depth of thy mercy: Lord, save me now, or I perish eternally. O thou who willest not that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, such as thou wilt accept, who tryest the heart, create in me, O God, a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me. O Lord, one day with thee is better than a thousand elsewhere. O let thy mighty Spirit work in me now in this my last day, whatsoever thou seest wanting, to fit me for mercy and acceptation. Give me a perfect and an entire hatred of all my sins, and enable me to present thee with a sacrifice of a broken and a contrite heart, which thou hast promised not to despise, that by this I may be made capable of that atonement, which thy dear Son hath by the more excellent oblation of himself, made for all repenting sinners; he is the Propitiation for our sins; he was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisements of our peace was upon him: O heal me by these stripes, and let the cry of his blood cry down the clamour of my sins. I am indeed the child of wrath, but he is the Son of thy Love; for his sake spare me, O Lord, spare thy poor creature, whom he hath redeemed with his most precious blood, and be not angry with me forever. O let not thy vengeance pursue me to this City of Refuge; my soul hangeth upon him; Oh let me not perish with a Jesus, with a Savior in my arms, but by his agony and bloody sweat, by his Cross and Passion, by all that he did and suffered for sinners, good Lord deliver me; deliver me, I beseech thee, from the wages of sin, thy wrath and everlasting damnation, in the time of my tribulation, in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, and do not repay me for my former neglects of thy calls, by refusing to answer me in this time of my greatest need. Lord, there's but a step between me and death; but seal my pardon before I go hence and be no more seen: Thy loving-kindness is better than life itself; Oh let me have that in exchange, and I shall most gladly lay down this mortal life. O Lord, thou knowest all my desire, and my groaning is not hid from thee; deal thou with me, O Lord, according to thy Name, for sweet is thy mercy; take away the sting of death, the guilt of my sins, and then though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; I will lay me down in peace, and Lord, when I awake, let me be satisfied with thy presence in thy glory; grant this merciful God, for his sake, who is both the Mediator and Redeemer of sinners, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

PUT me not to rebuke, O Lord, in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy heavy displeasure. There is no health in my flesh, because of thy displeasure, neither is there any rest in my soul by reason of my sins; for my wickedness is gone over my head, and are a sore burden, too heavy for me to bear. My wounds stink and corrupt through my foolishness; therefore is my spirit vexed within me, and my heart within me is desolate. My sins have taken such hold upon me, that I go in mourning all the day long; yea they are more in number than the hairs of my head; and my heart hath failed me; but thou, O Lord God, art full of compassion and mercy, longsuffering, plenteous in goodness and truth; turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery. If thou Lord shouldest be extreme to mark what is done amiss, O Lord who may abide it? O remember not the sins of my youth, and my offense, but according to thy mercy think upon me for thy goodness; look upon my adversity and misery, and forgive me all my sins. Hide not thy face from thy servant, for I am in trouble. O haste thee and hear me, out of the deep do I call unto thee; O Lord, hear my voice. Turn thee, O Lord, and deliver my soul, O save me for thy mercy sake. O go not far from me, for trouble is hard at hand, and there is none to help me. I stretch forth my hand unto thee, my soul gaspeth unto thee, as a thirsty land; draw nigh unto my soul and save it. O deliver me, because of mine enemies, for my soul is full of trouble, and my life draweth nigh unto hell. Save me from the Lions mouth: Hear me from among the horns of the Unicorns. O set me upon the Rock that is higher than I, for thou art my hope, and a strong Tower for me against the enemy; Why art thou so heavy, O my soul, and why art thou so disquieted within me? put thy trust in God, for I will yet give him thanks, for the help of his countenance. The Lord shall make good his loving kindness towards me; yea, thy mercy, O Lord, endureth forever, despise not then the work of thine own hands. O God, thou art my God, early will I seek thee. My soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh also longeth after thee, in a barren and a dry Land, where no water is. Like as the Hart desireth the water-brooks, so longeth my soul after thee, O my God. My soul is athirst for God, even for the Living God: When shall I come and appear before the presence of God? How amiable are thy dwellings, O Lord God of Hosts? my soul hath a desire, a longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord. My flesh and my heart rejoiceth in the Living God. O that I had wings like a Dove, for then would I flee away and be at rest. O send out thy Light and thy Truth, that they may lead me, and bring me to thy Hill, and to thy dwelling; for one day in thy Court is better than a thousand elsewhere. I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. I should utterly have fainted, but that I believed verily to have seen the goodness of the Lord in the Land of the Living. Thou art my Helper and my Redeemer, O Lord, make no long tarrying.

O Lord, I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, for my iniquities are increased over my head, and my trespass is grown even unto Heaven. I have wrought all these great provocations, and that in the most provoking manner; they have not been only single, but repeated acts of sin; for, O Lord, of all this black Catalogue of sin, which I have now brought before thee, how few are there which I have not often committed? nay, which are not become even habitual, and accustomed to me? and to this frequency I had added both a greediness and obstinacy in sinning, turned into my course, as a horse rusheth into the battle, doing evil with both hands, earnestly; yea, hating to be reformed, and casting thy words behind me, quenching the Spirit within me, which testified against me, to turn me from my evil ways, frustrating all those outward means, whether of judgment or of mercy, which thou hast used to draw me to thyself? Nay, O Lord, even my Repentances may be numbered amongst my greatest sins; they have sometimes been feigned and hypocritical, always so slight and ineffectual; they have brought forth no fruit to amendment of life; but I have added the breach of resolutions and vows to all my former guilt. Thus, O Lord, I am become out of measure sinful, and since I have thus chosen death, the lake and brimstone, this, O Lord, is in justice to be the portion of my Cup; to me belongs nothing but shame and confusion of face eternally, but to thee, O Lord God, belongeth mercy, redemption, and forgiveness: Though I have rebelled against thee, O remember not my sins and offenses, but according to thy mercy think upon me, O Lord, for thy goodness. Thou sendest thy Son to seek and to save that which was lost, behold, O Lord, I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost, O seek thy servant, and bring me back to the Shepherd and Bishop of my soul. Let thy Spirit work in me a hearty sense and detestation of all my abominations, and true contrition of heart, which thou hast promised not to despise, and then be thou pleased to look on me, to take away all my iniquity, and receive me graciously; and for his sake who hath nothing amiss, be reconciled unto me, wash away the guilt of my sin in his blood, and subdue the power of them by his grace, and grant, O Lord, that I may from this hour, bid a final adieu unto all ungodliness and worldly lusts, never once more cast a look towards Sodom, or long after the flesh pots of Egypt, but consecrate myself entirely unto thee, to serve thee in Righteousness and true Holiness all the days of my life, reckoning myself to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord and blessed Savior. Amen.

The 51 Psalm is fit to be read upon this Occasion.

Ejaculations.

O Lord, of whom may I seek for succor but of thee, who for my sins art justly displeased, yet, O Lord God, most holy, O Lord, most mighty, O holy and most merciful Savior, deliver me not at my last hour into the bitter pains of eternal death. Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of my heart, shut not thy merciful eyes upon my prayer, but hear me, O Lord, most holy, O God, most mighty, O holy and most merciful Savior, thou most worthy Judge Eternal, suffer me not at my last hour, for any pains of death, to fall from the Father. I have sinned against Heaven, and before thee, and am not worthy to be called thy child; yet, O Lord, do not thou cast off the bowels and compassion of a Father; but even as a Father pitieth his own children, so be thou merciful unto me. Lord, the Prince of this world cometh, oh let him have nothing in me, but as he accuseth, do thou absolve: he lays many grievous things to my charge, which he can too well prove; I have nothing to say for myself, do thou answer for me, O Lord my God. O Lord, I am clothed with filthy garments, and Satan stands at my right hand to resist me, O be thou pleased to rebuke him, and pluck me as a brand out of the fire. Cause mine iniquity to pass from me, and clothe me with the Righteousness of thy Son. Behold, O Lord, the Devil is coming towards me, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time: O save and deliver me, lest he devour my soul like a Lion, and tear it in pieces, while there is none to help. O my God, I know no unclean thing can enter into thy Kingdom, and I am nothing but pollution. My very Righteousnesses are as filthy rags, O wash me, and make me white in the blood of the Lamb, that so I may be fit to stand before thy Throne. Lord, the snares of death compass me about; O let not the pains of Hell also take hold upon me, but though I find trouble and heaviness, O Lord, I beseech thee, deliver my soul. O dear Jesus, who hast bought me with the precious price of thine own blood, challenge now thy purchase, and let not the malice of Hell pluck me out of thine hand. O blessed High Priest, who art able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by thee, save me, I beseech thee, who have no hope, but by thy merit and intercession. O God, I confess I have defaced that Image of thine thou didst imprint upon my soul, yet oh thou faithful Creator, have pity on thy creature. O Jesu, I have by many and grievous sins crucified thee afresh, yet thou who prayest for thy persecutors, intercede for me also, and suffer me not, O my Redeemer, my soul, the price of thy blood, to perish. O Spirit of grace, I have by my horrid impieties done despite unto thee, yet O blessed Comforter, though I have offended thee, and often grieved thy Holy Spirit, be thou pleased to succor and relieve me, and say unto my soul, I am thy salvation. Mine eyes look unto thee, O Lord, in thee is my trust. O cast not out my soul. O Lord, in thee have I trusted, let me never be confounded. O blessed Lord, who scourgest every Son whom thou receivest, let me not be weary of thy correction, but give me such a perfect submission to thee the Father of spirits, that this chastisement may be for my profit, that I may thereby be partaker of thy holiness. O thou Captain of my salvation, who wert made perfect by sufferings, sanctify to me all the pains of body, all the terrors of mind, which thou shalt permit to fall upon me. Lord, my sins have deserved eternal torments, make me cheerfully and thankfully to bear my present pains; chasten me as thou pleasest here, that I may not be condemned with the world. Lord, the waters are come in even unto my soul; O let thy Spirit move upon the waters, and make them like the Pool of Bethesda, that they may cure whatsoever spiritual disease thou discernest in me. O Christ, who first sufferedst many and grievous things, and then enteredst into thy grave, make me so to suffer with thee, that I may also be glorified with thee. O dear Jesus, who humbledst thyself to the death of the Cross for me, let that death of thine sweeten the bitterness of mine. When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all Believers; I believe that thou shalt come to be my Judge, I pray thee therefore help thy servant whom thou hast redeemed with thy most precious blood: make me to be numbered with Saints in glory everlasting. Thou art the Resurrection and the Life, he that believeth in thee, though he were dead, yet shall he live: Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief. My flesh and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever. I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, which is far better. Lord, I groan earnestly, desiring to be clothed upon with that house from Heaven; I desire to put off this Tabernacle, O be pleased to receive me into everlasting habitations; bring my soul out of prison, that I may give thanks unto thy Name. Lord, I am here to wrestle not only with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers, and spiritual wickedness: O take me from these tents of Kedar, into the heavenly Jerusalem, where Satan shall be utterly trodden underfoot. I cannot here attend one minute to thy service without distractions. O take me up to stand before thy Throne, where I shall serve thee day and night. I am in heaviness through many tribulations; O receive me into that place of rest, where all tears shall be wiped away from my eyes; where there shall be no more death nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain. I am here in the state of banishment and absence from the Lord. O take me where I shall forever behold thy face, and follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of glory. O blessed Jesu, who hast loved me, and washed me from my sins in thine own blood, receive my soul. Into thine hands I commend my Spirit, for thou hast redeemed me. O Lord, thou God of Truth, come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen.

A Prayer for the Morning.

O Most mighty and gracious God, full of incomprehensible Power and Majesty, whose glory the very Heaven of Heavens is not able to contain; look down from Heaven upon me thy unworthy servant, who here prostrate myself at the footstool of thy Throne of grace, not as I am in myself, but look upon me, O Father, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, thy beloved Son, in whom thou art well pleased, for of myself I am not able to stand in thy presence, or to speak with my unclean lips to so holy a God as thou art; for thou knowest that in sin I was conceived and born, and that I have lived ever since in iniquity, so that I have broken all thy holy Laws and Commandments, by sinful motions, unclean thoughts, evil words, and wicked works, omitting many of those duties of piety which thou requirest for thy service, and committing many of those vices which thou under the penalty of thy displeasure hast forbidden; here thou mayest confess to God thy secret sins, which most burden thy conscience, with the circumstances of the time, place, person, and the manner how it is committed, saying, but more especially, I do here with grief of heart confess unto thee, for these my sins, O Lord, I stand guilty of thy curse, with all the miseries of this life, and the life to come, namely, everlasting torment in Hell fire, when this wretched life is ended. If thou shouldest deal with me according to my deserts; yea Lord, I confess thy goodness which endureth forever is the cause I have not been long ago consumed and confounded, but with thee, O Lord, there is mercy and plenteous redemption; in the multitude therefore of thy mercies, and confidence in Christ's merits, I entreat thy Divine Majesty, that thou wouldest not enter into judgment with thy servant, neither be extreme to mark what I have hitherto done amiss; for if thou dost, then no flesh can be justified in thy sight, nor any living stand in thy presence; but be thou merciful unto me, and wash away all the uncleanness of my sins, in the merits of that precious blood which Jesus Christ hath shed for me; and seeing that he hath born the burden of that curse, which was due for my transgression, O Lord, deliver me from my sins, and from all those Judgments which hang over my head as due unto me for them, and separate them as far from thy presence, as the East is from the West; bury them in the burial of Christ, that they may never rise up in this world to shame me, nor in the world to come to condemn me. And I beseech thee, O Lord, not only to wash away my sins with the blood of thy Immaculate Lamb, but also to purge my heart by thy Holy Spirit from the dross of my natural corruptions, that I may feel thy Spirit more and more killing my sins in the power and practice thereof, so that I may with more freedom of mind, and liberty of will, serve thee the ever living God, in Righteousness and true Holiness this day, and give me grace, that by the direction and assistance of thy Holy Spirit, I may persevere to be thy faithful and unfeigned servant unto my life's end, and when this mortal life is ended, I may be made partaker of immortality, and everlasting happiness in thy heavenly Kingdom. In the mean time, O Lord, whilst it is thy blessed will and pleasure, that I may continue to spend and end that small number and remnant of my days, that I may apply my heart to wisdom; and as thou dost add days to my life, so I beseech thee to add repentance and amendment to my sinful days, that as I grow in years, I may grow in grace and favor with thee, and all thy people; and to this end, give unto me a supply of all those graces which thou knowest to be wanting in me, and necessary for me, with an increase of all those good gifts wherewith thou hast already endowed me, that so I may be the better enabled to lead such a godly life, and an honest conversation, as that thy Name may thereby be glorified, others may take good example by me, and my soul may cheerfully feed on the peace of a good conscience, and be more replenished with the Joy of the Holy Ghost: And here, O Lord, according to my bounden duty, I give the most humble and hearty thanks for all those blessings which of thy goodness thou hast bestowed upon me; and namely, for that thou hast of thy free grace and love, according to thine eternal purpose, elected me before the foundation of the world was laid, unto salvation, in Jesus Christ: For that thou hast created me in thine own Image, and hast begun to restore that in me which was lost in our First Parents: For that thou hast effectually called me by the working of thy Holy Spirit, in the Preaching of the Gospel, and the Receiving of thy Sacrament, to the knowledge of thy saving grace, and obedience to thy blessed Will: For that thou hast bought and redeemed me with the blood of thy only begotten Son, from the torment of Hell, and thralldom of Satan: For that thou hast by Faith in Christ, freely justified me, who am by nature the child of wrath: For that thou hast in good measure justified me by thy Holy Spirit, and given me so large a time to repent, together with the means of Repentance: I thank thee likewise, good Lord, for my life, health, wealth, liberty, food, raiment, peace, prosperity and plenty, and for that thou hast preserved me this night from all perils and dangers of soul and body, and hast brought me safe to the beginning of this day; and as thou hast now awakened my body from sleep, so I beseech thee to awaken my body from sin, and carnal security; and as thou hast caused the light of the day to shine in our bodily eyes, so good Lord, cause the light of thy Word, and Holy Spirit, to illuminate my understanding, and give me grace, as one of thy children of light, to walk in all holy obedience before thy face this day, and all the days and time of my whole life, and that I may endeavor to keep faith and a good conscience towards God, and towards all men, in all my thoughts, words and dealings; and so good Lord bless all studies and actions, which I shall take in hand this day, as that they may tend to thy glory, the good of others, and the comfort of my own soul and conscience in that day, when I shall make my final request unto thee for them. O my God, keep thy servant, that I do not evil unto any man this day, and let it be thy blessed will, not to suffer the Devil, nor his wicked Angels, nor any of his evil members, or my malicious enemies, to have any power to do me any hurt or harm this day, but let the eyes of thy holy providence watch over me for good and not for evil, and command thy holy Angels to pitch their tents round about me, for my defense and safety in my going out, and my coming in, as thou hast promised they should do about them that fear thy Name; for into thy hands, O Father, I do here commend my soul and body, my actions, and all that ever I have, to be guided and protected by thee, being assured that whatsoever thou takest into thy custody, cannot suffer or take any hurt or harm; and if I at any time, this day, shall through frailty, forget thee, yet Lord, I beseech thee, do thou in mercy remember me: And I pray not alone for myself unto thee, O Father, but I beseech thee also be merciful unto thy whole Church, and chosen people, wheresoever they live upon the face of the whole Earth, defend them from the rage and tyranny of the Devil, the World, and Antichrist; give thy Gospel a free and a joyful passage through the world, for the conversion of those who belong to thine Election and Kingdom: Bless the Church and Kingdoms wherein we live, with the continuance of peace and true Religion, and Justice: Defend our gracious King Charles from all his enemies, and grant him a long life in health and all happiness to reign over us▪ Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and all the rest of the Royal Family▪ increase in them all heroical and spiritual graces which may make them fit for those places for which thou ordainedst them; direct all the Nobility, Bishops, and Magistrates of this Kingdom and Commonwealth; govern thou them that they may govern the Commons in true Religion, Justice, Obedience, and Tranquility: Be merciful unto all the people that fear thee, and call upon thy Name; and comfort as many among them as lie sick, or are comfortless in body, or mind; especially be favorable to all such as suffer any trouble or persecution for the testimony of the Truth and holy Gospel, and give them a gracious deliverance out of all their troubles, which way it shall seem best to thy wisdom, for the glory of thy Name, the farther enlarging of the Truth, and the more ample increase of their comfort and consolation: Hasten thy coming, O blessed Savior, and end these sinful days, and give me grace, that like a wise Virgin, I may be prepared with Oil in my Lamp, to meet thee, the sweetest Bridegroom of my soul at thy coming, whether it be by the day of death, or the day of judgment, and then Lord Jesus, come quickly, even Lord Jesus come when thou wilt, these, and all other graces which thou knowest to be needful and necessary both for my soul and my body, this day and forever, I humbly beg and crave at thy hands; O Father, giving thee thy praise and glory, in that absolute form of prayer, which Christ himself hath taught me, to say unto thee, Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be thy Name, &c.

Another Shorter Morning Prayer.

O Most gracious God and merciful Father, I thine unworthy servant do acknowledge that as I have been born in sin, so I have lived in iniquity, and broken everyone of thy commandments, in thought, word and deed, following the desires of my own will, and lusts of my flesh, not caring to be governed by thy holy Word and Spirit; therefore I have justly deserved all shame and misery in this life, and everlasting condemnation in Hell fire; if that thou shouldest but deal with me according to thy Justice, and my deserts. Wherefore, O heavenly Father, I humbly beseech thee, for thy Son Jesus Christ his sake, and for the merits of that bloody death and passion, which I believe he hath suffered for me, that thou wouldest pardon and forgive me all my sins, and deliver me from the Hell and vengeance which is due unto me for them, and send thy holy Spirit into my heart, which may assure me that thou art my Father, and that I am thy child, and that thou lovest me with an unchangeable love; and let thy good Spirit lead me into all truth, and crucify in me more and more carnal lusts, that my sin may more and more die in me, and that I may serve thee in Righteousness and true Holiness all the days of my life; and when this mortal life is ended,

I may through thy mercy in Christ be made partaker of thine everlasting glory, in thy heavenly Kingdom. And here, O Lord, from the bottom of my heart, I humbly thank thee for all thy blessings bestowed upon my soul and body, for electing me in thy Love, for redeeming me by thy Son, sanctifying me by thy Spirit, and preserving me from my youth up, until this present day and hour by thy gracious providence; I thank thee more especially for that thou hast defended me this night past from all danger, and hast brought me safe to the beginning of this day; and now, good Lord, I beseech thee, keep me this day from all peril and danger, and from all evil that may hurt me, and from falling into all sin that should offend thee; set thy fear before mine eyes, and let thy holy Spirit so rule my heart, that all that I shall think, do, or speak this day, may tend to thy glory, the good of others, and the peace of my own conscience; and to this end I commend myself, and all my ways and actions, together with all that do belong unto me, unto thy gracious protection this day, praying thee to keep both thine and me from all evil, and to give a blessing to all our honest labors and endeavors; defend thy whole Church from the tyranny of this world, and of Antichrist; preserve our gracious King from all conspiracy and treason; grant him a long reign in health and happiness over us: Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and all the rest of the Royal Family, endue them with thy grace, and defend them from all evil: Bless all our Ministers and Magistrates with all those graces and gifts which thou knowest necessary for their places: Be favorable to all those that fear thee, and call upon thy Name, and tremble at thy judgments▪ Comfort all those that are sick, or any way comfortless O Lord, keep me in a continual readiness by faith and repentance for my last end, that whether I live or die, I may be found thine own, to thine eternal glory, and my everlasting salvation, through Jesus Christ my only Savior, in whose blessed Name I beg these mercies at thy hands, and give unto thee thy praise and glory, in that prayer which he hath sanctified with his own lips, saying, Our Father, &c.

A Prayer for the Evening.

O most gracious and loving Father, who art about my bed, and knowest my lying down, and my rising up, and art near unto all that call upon thee in Truth and sincerity, I a wretched sinner do humbly beseech thee to look upon me with the eyes of mercy, and not to behold me, as I am in myself, for then thou shalt see but an unclean and defiled creature, conceived in sin, and living in iniquity, so that I am ashamed to lift up my eyes unto thee, knowing how grievously I have sinned against Heaven and before thee; for, O Lord, I have transgressed all thy Commandments and Righteous Laws, not through negligence and infirmity, but oftentimes through willful presumption, contrary to my knowledge, and the motions of thy holy Spirit reclaiming me from them, so that I have wounded my conscience, and grieved thy holy Spirit, by whom thou hast sealed me to the day of Redemption. Thou hast consecrated my soul and body to be the Temple of the Holy Ghost, I wretched sinner have defiled both, with all manner of pollution and uncleanness; mine eyes in taking pleasure to behold vanities, that I am ashamed to lift up my eyes unto thee; mine ears in hearing impure and unclean speeches; my tongue in evil speaking; my hands are so full of impurity, that I am ashamed to lift them up unto thee; and my feet have carried me after mine own ways; my understanding and reasonings, which are so quick in all earthly matters, are only blind and stupid; when I come to meditate or discourse of spiritual and heavenly things, my memory which should be a treasury of all goodness, is not so apt to remember anything, as those things that are vile and vain; yea Lord, by woeful experience I find that naturally all the imaginations of the thoughts of my heart are only evil altogether, and continually; for these my sins are more in number than the hairs of my head, and they have grown over me, like a loathsome leprosy, from the crown of my head, to the soles of my feet; there remains no part which they have not infected; they make me seem vile in mine own eyes, how much more abominable must I appear in thy sight! the custom of sinning hath almost taken away the conscience of sin, and pulled upon me such dullness of sense, and hardness of heart, that thy judgments denounced against my sins, by the faithful Preachers of thy Word, do not terrify me to return unto thee with unfeigned repentance; and if thou Lord shouldst but deal with me according to thy Justice, and my deserts, I should utterly be confounded and condemned; but seeing that of thine own mercy thou hast spared me so long, and still waitest for my repentance, I humbly beseech thee for the blood, death and passions sake, which Jesus Christ hath suffered for me, that thou wouldest pardon and forgive me all my sins, and mine offenses, and open unto me that ever-streaming fountain of the blood of Christ, which thou hast promised to open under the New Testament, to the penitent of the house of David, that all my sins and uncleanness may be so bathed in his blood, buried in his death, and hid in his wounds, that they never more be seen to shame me in this life, nor to condemn me in the world to come, before the judgment seat of God. And for as much, O Lord, as thou knowest that it is not in man to turn his own heart, unless thou first give him grace to convert: And seeing it is as easy with thee to make me righteous and holy, as to suffer me to be such, O my God, give me grace to do what thou hast commanded, then command what thou wilt and thou shalt find me willing to do what thou commandest, and to observe thy blessed Will in all things; to this end give unto me thy Holy Spirit, which thou hast promised to give to the worlds end, unto all thine elect people; and let the same Holy Spirit purge my heart from the dross of my natural corruption; heal my soul and body, that they may become the Temple of the Holy Ghost, to serve thee in Righteousness and true Holiness all the days of my life, that when by the direction and assistance of thy Holy Spirit I shall finish my course in this short and transitory life, I may cheerfully leave this world, and resign my soul into thy fatherly hands in assured confidence of enjoying everlasting life with thee in thy heavenly Kingdom, which thou hast prepared for thine Elect Saints who love the Lord Jesus, and expect his appearing. In the mean while, O Father, I beseech thee, let thy Holy Spirit work in me such a serious repentance, as that I may with tears lament my sins past, with grief of heart be humbled for my sins present, and with all my endeavors resist the like filthy sins for the time to come, and let the same Holy Spirit keep me in the Unity of the Church, lead me in the Truth of thy Word, and preserve me that I may never swerve from the same to Popery, or any other error or false Worship; and let thy Spirit open mine eyes more and more, to see the wondrous things of thy Law; and open my lips that my mouth may set forth thy praise; increase in me those good gifts with which thou hast already endowed me of thy mercy, and give unto me a penitent spirit, and a chaste heart, a contented mind, pure affections, a wise behavior, and all other graces which thou seest necessary for me to govern my heart in thy fear, and to guide all my life in thy favor, that whether I live or die, I may live and die unto thee, who art my God and my Redeemer. And here, O Lord, according as I am bound, I render unto thee, from the Altar of my humblest heart, all possible thanks and praise for all those blessings and benefits which graciously and plentifully thou hast bestowed upon my soul and body, for this life, and that which is to come, namely, for my Election, Creation, Redemption, Justification, Sanctification and Preservation, from my childhood until this present day and hour, and for the firm hope which thou hast given me of my Glorification: Likewise for my Life, Liberty, Food and Rayment, a competent estate for the maintenance of this present life, and prosperity; more especially, for that thou hast defended me this day now past from all peril and dangers, both of body and soul, furnishing me with all necessary good things that I stand in need of; and as thou hast ordained the day for man to travel in, and the night for him to take his rest; so I beseech thee to sanctify unto me this nights rest and sleep, that I may be the better disposed to serve thee in all honesty and godliness, and that I may enjoy the same as thy sweet blessing and benefit, that so dull and wearied a body of mine being refreshed with moderate rest and sleep, I may be the better enabled to work before thee, doing all such good works as thou hast provided for me; and when it shall please thee by thy divine providence to awaken me the next morning, do thou, O Lord, who art the keeper of Israel, who never slumberest nor sleepest, watch over me in thy holy providence, to protect me from all dangers, so that neither the evil Angels of Satan, nor any wicked enemy may have any power to do me any harm, or evil; and to this end give a charge unto thy holy Angels, that they at thy appointment may pitch their tents round about me for my defense and safety, as thou hast promised they should do about them that fear thy Name; and knowing that thy Name is a strong Tower of defense unto all those that trust therein, I here recommend myself, and all that belongs unto me unto thy holy protection and custody, if it be thy blessed will to call for me in my sleep. O Lord, for Christ his sake, have mercy upon me, and receive my soul unto thy heavenly Kingdom; and if it be thy blessed pleasure to add more days to my life, add more amendment unto my days, and wean my mind from the love of the world, and the vanity thereof, and cause me more and more to settle my conversation on Heaven and heavenly things, and perfect daily in me that good work which thou hast begun, to the glory of thy Name, and the salvation of my sinful soul. O Lord, I beseech thee likewise, save and defend from all evil and danger thy whole Church, our gracious King Charles, and grant him a long and prosperous Raign over us: Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and all the Royal Family; endue them with thy grace, and defend them from all evil: Bless the Nobility, Magistrates, and Ministers of these Churches and Kingdoms, each of them with those graces and benefits which are expedient for their places and callings; and be thou, O Lord, a comfort and a consolation to all thy people, whom thou hast thought meet to visit with any kind of sickness, cross, or poverty, or calamity. Hasten, O Father, the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; make me ever mindful of my last end, and of the reckoning that I am to make unto thee therein; and in the mean while, carefully so to follow Christ in the generation, during this life, as that with Christ I may have a portion in the resurrection of Christ, when this mortal life is ended: These graces, and all other blessings, which thou, O Father, knowest to be required and necessary for me, I humbly beg and crave at thy hands, in the Name and Mediation of Jesus Christ, thy Son; and in that form of Prayer which he himself hath taught me to say, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

Another Short Evening Prayer.

O Eternal God, and heavenly Father, if I were not taught and assured by the promises of thy Gospel, and the example of Peter, Mary Magdalene, the Publican, the Prodigal Child, and many other penitent sinners, that thou art so full of compassion, and so ready to forgive the greatest sinners who are heaviest laden with sin, at what time soever they return unto thee, with penitent hearts, lamenting their sins, and imploring thy grace, I should despair for my own sins, and be utterly discouraged from presuming to come into thy presence, considering the hardness of my heart, and the unruliness of my affection, and the uncleanness of my conversation, by means whereof I have transgressed all thy holy Laws and Commandments, and deserved thy Curse, which might cause my body to be smitten with some fearful disease, my soul to languish with the death of sin, my good name to be traduced with some scandalous reproaches, and make myself liable to all manner of crosses and casualties. And I confess Lord, that thy mercy is the cause I have not been long ago consumed and confounded: But, O my God, as thy mercy only stayed thy judgments from falling upon me hitherto, so I humbly beseech thee, in the bowels of thy mercy in Jesus Christ, in whom only thou art well pleased, that thou wilt not deal with me according to my deserts, but that thou wouldest freely and fully remit unto me all my sins and my transgressions, and that thou wouldest wash them clean from me, with the virtue of that precious blood, which thy Son Jesus Christ hath shed for me; for he alone is my Physician, and his blood only is the medicine that can heal my sickness; and is the true brazen Serpent that can cure that poison wherewith the fiery serpents of my sins have stung and poisoned my sick and wounded soul; and give me, I beseech thee, thine holy Spirit, which may assure me of mine Adoption, and that may confirm my Faith, increase my Repentance, enlighten my Understanding, purify my Heart, and rectify my Will and Affection, and so sanctify me throughout, that my whole Body, and Soul; and Spirit may be kept unblamable until the glorious coming of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And now, O Lord, I give unto thee, most humble and hearty thanks and praise, for that thou hast this day preserved me from all harm and dangers, notwithstanding all my sins and evil deserts; and I beseech thee likewise to defend me this night from the roaring Lion, which night and day seeketh to devour me: Watch thou, O Lord, over me this night, to keep me from his temptations and tyranny, and let thy mercy shield me from his unspeakable rage and malice; and to this end I commit myself into thy hands, and almighty protection, beseeching thee, O my Lord and my God, not to suffer Satan, or any of his evil members to have power to do me any hurt or harm this night; and grant, good Lord, that whether I sleep or wake, live or die, I may sleep, wake, live or die unto thee, and to the glory of thy Name, and the salvation of my soul. Lord, bless and defend all thy chosen people everywhere; Grant our gracious Sovereign long life, and a happy Raign over us: Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and all the Royal Family, together with all our Magistrates and Ministers; comfort them who are in misery, need or sickness, or under any kind of Cross or Calamity; give me grace to be one of those wise Virgins, which may have my heart prepared like a Lamp, furnished with the Oil of Faith, and Light of good works, to meet the Lord Jesus, the sweet Bridegroom of my soul, at his second and sudden coming in glory; grant this, good Father, for Jesus Christ his sake my only Savior, Redeeder, and Mediator; in whose blessed Name, and in whose own words I call upon thee, as he hath taught me; Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

A Morning Prayer for a Family.

O Lord our God and heavenly Father, who art the only Creator of Heaven and of Earth, and all therein contained, we confess that we are unworthy to appear in thy sight and presence, considering our manifold sins and offenses, which we have committed against Heaven, and before thee: and how that we have been born in sin, and do daily break thy holy Laws and Commandments contrary to our knowledge and consciences; albeit we know thou art our Creator, who hast made us, our Redeemer, who hast bought us with the blood of thy only begotten Son, and our Comforter, who bestowest upon us all the good and holy graces which we enjoy in our souls, and in our bodies; and if thou shouldest but deal with us as our wickedness and unthankfulness have deserved, what other thing might we, O Lord, expect from thee, but shame and confusion in this life, and in the world to come wrath and everlasting condemnation; yet, O Lord, in the obedience of thy Commandments, and in the confidence which we have in thy unspeakable and endless mercy in thy Son, and our Savior Jesus Christ the Righteous, we thy poor servants appealing from thy Throne of Justice, to thy Throne of Grace, whose mercy reigneth to pardon abounding sin, do from the bottom of our hearts, most humbly beseech thee, to remit and forgive unto us all our sins and our offenses, and misdeeds, that by the virtue of the precious blood of Jesus Christ, thy innocent Lamb, which he so abundantly shed upon the Cross, to take away the sins of the world, all our sins, both original and actual, may be so cleansed and washed from us, that they may never be laid to our charge, nor ever have power to rise up in judgment against us; and we beseech thee, good Father, for Christ his death and passion sake, that thou wilt not suffer to fall upon us that fearful curse and vengeance which thy Law hath threatened, and our sins have justly deserved: And for as much, O Lord, as we are taught by thy Word, that no Idolaters, Adulterers, covetous men, contentious persons, drunkards, gluttons, and such inordinate livers, shall inherit the Kingdom of God; pour the grace of thy Holy Spirit into our hearts, whereby we may see the filthiness of our sins, and abhor them, and may be more and more stirred up to live in newness of life, and love of thy Majesty, so we may daily increase in the obedience of thy words, and in conscionable care of keeping thy Commandments. And now, O Lord, I render unto thee most hearty thanks, for that thou hast elected, redeemed, called, justified us in good measure in this life, and given us an assured hope that thou wilt glorify us in thy heavenly Kingdom, when this mortal life is ended. Likewise we thank thee for our life, health, wealth, liberty, prosperity, and peace; especially, O Lord, for the continuance of thy holy Gospel amongst us, and for sparing us so long, and granting us so gracious a time of repentance: Also we praise thee for all other thy mercies bestowed upon us; more especially for preserving us this night past, and from all dangers that might have befallen our souls or bodies; and seeing thou hast now brought us safe to the beginning of this day, we beseech thee protect and direct us in the same: Bless and defend us in our going out and in our coming in, this day, and ever more; shield us, O Lord, from the temptations of the Devil, and grant us the custody of thy holy Angels, to defend and direct us in all our ways; and to this end we recommend ourselves, and all those that belong unto us, and are abroad from us, unto thy hands and almighty tuition; Lord defend them from all evil, prosper them with all graces, and fill them with thy goodness: Preserve us likewise this day, from falling into any gross sins, especially those whereunto our natures are most prone; set a watch before the door of our lips, that we offend not thy Divine Majesty by any rash or false oaths, or by any lewd or lying speeches; give unto us patient minds, pure and chaste hearts, and all other graces of thy Spirit, which thou knowest to be needful for us, that we may be the better enabled to serve thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life; and seeing that all men's labors are in vain, without thy blessing, bless everyone of us in our several places and callings; direct thou the works of our hands upon us, even prosper thou our handy-works; for except thou guide us with thy grace, our endeavors can have no good success; and provide for us all things which thou, O Father, knowest to be needful for everyone of us, in our souls and bodies this day, and grant that we may pass through the pilgrimage of this short life, that our hearts being not settled upon any transitory things, which we meet with in the way, our souls may every day be more and more ravished with the love of our home, and thine everlasting Kingdom: Defend likewise, O Lord, thy universal Church, and every particular member thereof; especially we beseech thee to continue the peace and tranquility of these Churches and Kingdoms wherein we live; preserve from all evil and dangers our most gracious King Charles, endue his Royal heart with more and more grace, wisdom and understanding, and grant that his days may be long, prosperous and happy: Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and all the Royal Family, multiply their days with bliss and felicity, and afterwards crown them with everlasting joy and glory: Bless all our Ministers and Magistrates with all graces needful for their places, govern thou them, that they may govern us in peace, godliness, and true Religion; and of thy mercy, O Lord, comfort all our Brethren that are distressed, sick, or comfortless, especially those who are afflicted either with an evil conscience, because they have sinned against thy Word, or for a good conscience, because they will not sin against the Truth; make the first to know that not one drop of the blood of Christ was a drop of vengeance, but all drops of grace, powerful to procure pardon upon repentance, for the greatest sins of the chiefest sinners in the world; and for the other, let not, O Lord, thy long sufferance, either too much discourage them, or too much encourage their enemies; but grant them patience in suffering, and a gracious and speedy deliverance, which may stand best with thy glory, and their comfort; and give everyone of us grace to be always mindful of his last end, and to be always prepared with faith and repentance, as with a wedding garment, against the time thou shalt call for us out of this sinful world; and that in the mean while, we may in all things, and above all things, seek thy glory, that when this mortal life is ended, we may then be made partakers of Immortality and Life eternal in thy heavenly Kingdom; these, and all other graces and blessings, which thou, O heavenly Father, seest to be necessary for us, and for thy whole Church, we humbly beg and crave at thy hands, concluding this our imperfect prayer, in that most perfect form of prayer which Christ himself hath taught us, saying, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

Evening Prayer for a Family.

O Eternal God, and most merciful Father, we thine unworthy servants here assembled, do cast down ourselves at the foostool of thy grace, acknowledging ourselves that we inherit our Fathers corruption, in thought, word and deed, transgressing thy holy Commandments, so that in us naturally, there dwelleth nothing that is good; for our hearts are full of secret pride, anger, impatience, dissembling, lying, lust, vanity, profaneness, distrust, too much love of ourselves, too little love of thee, and thy Kingdom, but full of enmity, and void of love, patience, and every spiritual grace; if thou therefore shouldest enter into judgment with us, and search out our natural corruptions, and observe all the cursed fruit and effects that we have derived from thence, Satan might justly challenge us for his own, and we could not expect any from thy Majesty, but thy wrath, and our condemnation, which we have long ago deserved: But, good Father, for Jesus Christ his sake, who is thy dear Son, in whom only thou art well pleased, and for the merits of that bitter death and passion, which we believe he hath suffered for us, have mercy upon us, and free us from the shame and confusion which is due unto us for them, that they may never seize upon us to our confusion in this life, or to condemnation in the world which is to come: And for as much as thou hast created us, to serve thee, as all other creatures to serve us, so we humbly beseech thee inspire thy Holy Spirit into our hearts, that by his illumination and effectual working we may have the inward sight and feeling of our sins, and natural corruptions; and that we may not be blinded in them through custom, as the Reprobate are, but that we may more and more loath them, and be heartily grieved for them, endeavoring by the use of all good means to overcome them, and get out of them. O let us feel the power of Christ's death killing sin in our mortal bodies, and the virtue of his Resurrection, raising up our souls to newness of life; convert our hearts, subdue our affections, regenerate our minds, purify our natures, and suffer us not to be drowned in the streams of those filthy vices, and sinful pleasures, wherewith thousands are carried headlong to eternal destruction, but daily frame us more and more to the likeness of thy Son Jesus Christ, that in Righteousness and true Holiness we may so serve and glorify thee, that living in thy fear, and dying in thy favor, we may in thy appointed time, attain to the blessed Resurrection of the Just unto eternal life; in the mean while, O Lord, increase our faith in the sweet promises of the Gospel, and our repentance from dead works, the assurance of our hopes in thy promises, our fear of thy Name, the hatred of all our sins, and our love unto thy children, especially whom we see to stand in need of our help and comfort, that so by the fruit of piety, and a righteous life, we may be assured that thy Holy Spirit doth dwell in us, and that we are thy children by grace and adoption; and grant us, good Father, the continuance of health, peace and maintenance, and all other outward good things, so far forth as thy Divine Wisdom shall think meet to be requisite and necessary for everyone. And here, O Lord, according to our bounden duty, we confess that thou hast been exceeding merciful unto us all in things of this life, but infinitely more merciful in the things of a better life; therefore we do here from our very souls, render unto thee most humble and hearty thanks from our very souls, for all thy blessings and benefits bestowed upon our souls and our bodies, acknowledging thee to be that Father of Light from whom we have received all those good and perfect gifts, and unto thee alone for them we ascribe to be due, all glory, honor, might, majesty and praise, both now and forever more: But more especially we praise thy Divine Majesty, for that thou hast defended us this day past from all perils and dangers, so that none of those Judgments which our sins have deserved have fallen upon any one of us. Good Lord, forgive us the sins which this day we have committed against thy Divine Majesty, or our Brethren, and for Christ his sake, be reconciled unto us for them; and we humbly beseech thee likewise of thine infinite goodness, to defend and protect us this night, and all that belong unto us, from all perils and dangers of fire, robbery, terrors of evil Angels, or any other fear, which for our sins might justly have fallen upon us, and that we may be safe under the shadow of thy wings; and to this end and purpose we here recommend our bodies and souls, and all that we have unto thine Almighty Protection; Lord bless and defend both us and them from all evil; whilst we sleep, do thou, O Father, who never slumberest nor sleepest, watch over thy children, and give a charge to thy holy Angels to pitch their tents round about our houses and dwellings this night, to guard us from all dangers, that sleeping with thee, we may the next morning be awakened by thee, and so being refreshed with moderate sleep, we may be the fitter to set forth thy glory in the conscionable duties of our callings; and we beseech thee, O Lord, to be merciful likewise to thy whole Church, and to continue the tranquility of these Kingdoms wherein we live, turning from us those plagues which the crying sins of this Nation do cry aloud for. O Lord, preserve the principal member thereof, our most gracious King Charles, endue his Royal heart with grace, wisdom and understanding, and grant that his days may be many, prosperous, virtuous and happy; clothe his enemies with shame, but upon his head let his Crown flourish: Bless our gracious Queen Katherine, James Duke of York, and the rest of the Royal Family, endow them with thy grace, and defend them from all evil: Bless all our Magistrates and Ministers with all those graces and gifts necessary for their places; govern thou them, that they may govern us in peace, godliness, and true Religion: Bless all that fear thee, and call upon thy Name; all our Christian Brethren and Sisters, that suffer sickness, or any other affliction, or misery, especially those who do anywhere suffer persecution for the testimony of thy holy Gospel▪ grant them patience to bear thy Cross, and deliverance when, and which way it shall seem best to thy Divine Wisdom; and Lord, suffer us never to forget our last end, and those reckonings which then we must render unto thee; in health and prosperity make us mindful of sickness, and of the evil day that is behind, that these things may not overtake us as a snare, but that we may in some good measure, like wise Virgins, be found prepared for the coming of Christ, the sweet Bridegroom of our souls. And now, O Lord, most holy and just, we confess there is no cause why thou who art so much displeased with sin, shouldest hear the prayers of sinners, but for his sake who suffered for sin, and sinned not, in the only mediation therefore of thine eternal Son Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior, we humbly beg these and all other graces which thou knowest to be needful for us and for thy whole Church, shutting up these our imperfect requests in that most holy prayer which Christ himself hath taught us to say unto thee, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

A Morning Prayer for the Sabbath Day.

O Most High, O Eternal God, all whose works are glorious, all whose thoughts are very deep, there can be no better thing than to praise thy Name, and declare thy loving kindness in the morning, on thy holy and blessed Sabbath day, for it is thy Will and Commandment, that we should sanctify this day in thy service, and praise him, and in the thankful remembrance of the Creation of the world, by the power of thy Word, so of the Redemption of mankind by the death of thy Son; thine, O Lord, I confess is greatness, and power, and glory, and victory, and praise, for all that is in Heaven and Earth is thine; thine is the Kingdom, O Lord, and thou excellest as head over all, both riches and honor come of thee, and thou raigest over all, and in thine hand is power and strength; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give grace unto all; now therefore, O my God, I praise thy glorious Name, that whereas I wretched sinner having so many ways provoked thy Majesty to anger and displeasure, thou notwithstanding of thy favor and goodness, passing by profaneness and infirmities, hast vouchsafed, O heavenly Father, to add this Sabbath again to the number of my days; and vouchsafe, O heavenly Father, for the merits of Jesus Christ thy Son, whose glorious Resurrection thy whole Church celebrateth this day, to pardon and forgive me all my sins and misdeeds; especially, O Lord, cleanse my soul from those filthy sins which my corrupt nature is most prone unto, with the blood of thy most pure and undefiled Lamb, and let thy Holy Spirit more and more subdue my corruptions, that I may be renewed after thine own Image, to serve thee in Righteousness, and true Holiness all the days of our life; and as of thy mercy thou hast brought me safe to the beginning of this day, so I beseech thee to make it a day of Reconciliation betwixt my sinful soul and thy Divine Majesty; give me grace to make it a day of Repentance unto thee, that thy goodness may seal it to be a day of pardon unto me; and that I may remember, that the keeping holy of this, is a commandment which thine own finger hath written, that on this day I might meditate on thy glorious works of our Creation and Redemption, and learn how to keep all the rest of thy holy Laws and Commandments; and when anon I shall with the rest of the holy Assembly appear before thy presence, to offer unto thee our morning Sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, and to hear what thy Spirit, by the preaching of thy Word, shall speak unto thy servant, oh let not my sins stand as a cloud, to stop my prayers from ascending unto thee, or keep back thy grace from descending by thy Word into my heart. I know, O Lord, and tremble to think, that three parts of the good seed falls upon bad ground; O let not my heart be like the high way, which through hardness and want of true understanding receives not the seed, till the evil one cometh and catcheth it away; nor the stony ground, which heareth with joy for a time, but falleth away as soon as persecution ariseth for the Gospels sake; nor like the thorny ground, which by the cares of this world, and deceitfulness of riches choketh the Word which it heareth, and maketh it altogether unfruitful; but that like unto the good ground, I may hear thy Word with an honest and a good heart, understand it, and keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience, in that measure that thy Divine Wisdom shall think meet for thy glory, and mine everlasting comfort. Open likewise, I beseech thee, O Lord, the door of utterance unto thy faithful servant, whom thou hast sent unto us to open our eyes, that we may turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that we may receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them which are sanctified by Faith in Christ; and give me grace to submit myself to his Ministry, as well when he terrifieth me with judgments, as when he comforteth me with thy mercies; and that I may have him in a singular love for his works sake, because he watcheth for my soul, as he that must give an account for the same unto his Master; and give me grace to behave myself in the holy Congregation with comeliness and reverence as in thy presence, and in the sight of thy holy Angels. Keep me from drowsiness and sleepiness, and from all wandering thoughts, and worldly imaginations; sanctify my memory, that it may be apt to receive, and firm to remember those good and profitable doctrines which shall be taught unto us out of thy Word, and that through the assistance of thy holy Spirit, I may put the same lessons in practice, for my directions in prosperity, for my consolation in misery, for the amendment of my life, and the glory of thy Name; and that this day which godless and profane persons spend in their own lusts and pleasures, I as an obedient servant of thine may make my chief delight to consecrate it to thy honor and glory, not doing my own ways, nor seeking mine own will, nor speaking a vain word, but that ceasing from the works of sin, as well as from the work of my ordinary calling, I may through thy blessing feel in my heart the beginning of that eternal Sabbath, which with unspeakable joy & glory I shall celebrate with thy Saints and Angels to thy praise and worship in thy heavenly Kingdom for evermore; all which I humbly beg and crave at thy hands, in the Name and Mediation of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in that form of prayer which he hath taught me, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

A Private Evening Prayer for the Sabbath Day.

O Holy, holy, holy Lord God of Sabbath, suffer me who am but dust and ashes, to speak unto thy glorious Majesty; I know that thou art a consuming fire, I acknowledge that I am but wretched stubble, my sins are in thy sight, and Satan stands at my right hand to accuse me for them; I come not to excuse, but to judge myself worthy of all those judgments which thy justice might most justly inflict upon me, a wretched creature, for my sins and my transgressions, the number of them is so great, and the nature of them is so grievous, that they make me seem vile in mine own eyes, how much more loathsome in thy sight. I confess they make me so far from being worthy to be called thy Son, that I am altogether unworthy to have the name of thy meanest servant; and if thou shouldst but recompense me according to my deserts, the Earth, as weary of such a sinful burden, should open her mouth, and swallow me up like one of Dathans Family, into the bottomless pit of Hell; for if thou didst not spare the natural branches, those Angels of glorious excellency, but hurledst them down from thy heavenly habitation in the pains of hellish darkness, to be kept unto damnation, when they sinned but once against thy Majesty, and didst expel our first Parents out of Paradise, when they did but transgress one of thy Laws: Alas, what a vengeance may I expect, who have not offended in one sin only, but heaping sin upon sin, without any true Repentance, drinking in iniquity as it were water, ever pouring in, but never pouring out any filthiness; and transgressed all thy Laws and Commandments; yea this present day thou hast straightly commanded me to keep holy to thy praise and worship, I have not so religiously kept and observed, nor prepared my soul in that holiness and chastity of heart as was fit to meet thy blessed Majesty in the holy Assembly of thy Saints: I have not attended to the Preaching of thy Word, nor to the administration of thy Sacrament, with that humility, reverence and devotion that I should; for though I was present at those exercises in my body, yet Lord, I was overtaken with much drowsiness, that when I was awake, my mind was so distracted and carried away with vain and worldly thoughts, that my soul seemed to be absent, and out of the Church. I have not so duly as I should meditated with myself, nor conferred with my Family upon those good instructions which I have heard and received out of thy holy Word, by the public Minister, for default whereof, Satan hath stolen the most part of those instructions out of my heart, and I wretched creature, have forgotten them, as though they had never been heard; and my family doth not thrive in knowledge and satisfaction under my government, as they should, though I know that many of my poor Brethren live in want and necessity; some in pain, and comfortless, yet I have not remembered to relieve the one with my alms, nor the other with my consolations, but have feasted myself, and satisfied mine own lust; I have spent most part of the day in idle talk, vain sports and exercises; yea, Lord, I have, &c. here confess what faults thou hast done that day, by omission or commission, and then fetching a deep sigh from thy heart, and for all these my sins, my conscience cries guilty, thy Laws condemns me, and I am in thy hand to receive the sentence and curse that is due to the willful breach of so holy a Commandment: but what if I am by the Law condemned, yet Lord, thy Gospel assures me that thy mercy is above all thy works, and that thy grace transcends thy Law, and thy goodness delights there to reign, where sinners do most abound. In the multitude of the mercies and merits of Jesus Christ my Savior, I beseech thee, O Lord, who despisest not the sighing of a contrite heart, nor desirest the death of a penitent sinner, to pardon and forgive unto me all these my sins, and all the errors of that day, and of my whole life, and free my soul from that curse and judgment which is due unto me for them. Thou that didst justify the contrite Publican for four words of confession, and receivedst the prodigal Child when he had spent all the stock of grace, into favor, upon his repentance, pardon all my sins likewise, O Lord, and suffer me not to perish for my transgressions. O spare me for thy mercy sake, and receive me unto favor again. Wilt thou, O Lord, reject me, who hast received all Publicans and sinners, that upon repentance sued unto thee for grace. Shall I alone be excluded from thy mercy? far be it from me to think so, for thou art the same God of mercy unto me that thou wast unto them, and thy compassion never fails; wherefore, O Lord, deal not with me after my merits, but according to thy great mercy, execute not thy severe justice against me a sinner, but execute thy long-sufferance in forbearing thine own creature. I have nothing to present unto thee for a satisfaction, but only those bloody wounds, bitter death and passion which thy blessed Son, my only Savior, hath suffered for me, him, in whom only thou art well pleased, I offer up unto thee, for all my sins wherewith thou art displeased; he my Mediator, the request of whose blood speaking better things than that of Abel, thy mercy can never gainsay, illuminate my understanding▪ and sanctify my heart with thy holy Spirit, that it may bring to my remembrance all those good and profitable lessons which this day, or at any other time hath been taught unto me out of thy holy Word, that I may remember them; thy Commandments to keep them, thy Judgments to avoid them, and thy sweet promises to rely upon them in time of misery and distress; and now, O Lord, I resign myself to thy most holy Will, O receive me into thy favor, and so draw me by thy grace unto thyself, that I may as well be thine by Love and Implantation, as by Calling and Creation, and give me grace so to keep holy thy Sabbath in this life, as that when this life is ended, I may with all thy Saints

Devotions for several Occasions.

In the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

A Morning Prayer.

O Eternal Son of Righteousness, who camest from the bosom of the Father, to enlighten the darkness of the world, I praise thy Name that thou hast preserved me from the danger of this night, and hast continued to me still the opportunities of serving thee, and advancing my hopes of a blessed eternity, let thy mercies shine brightly upon me, and dissipate the clouds and darkneses of my spirit and understanding; rectify my affections, and purify my will, and all my actions, that whatsoever I shall do or suffer this day, or in my whole life, my words and purposes, my thoughts, and all my intentions, may be sanctified, and be acceptable to thy Divine Majesty. Amen.

Grant that my understanding may know thee, my heart may love thee, and all my faculties and powers may give thee due obedience, and serve thee; preserve me this day from all sin and danger, from all violences and snares of mine enemies, visible, or invisible; let thy holy fear be as a bridle to my distemperatures, and thy love so enkindle and actuate all my endeavors, that no pleasures or allurements of the world may draw me from thy service, nor any difficulty or temptation may be my hindrance; let the profound humility and innocence of my blessed Savior keep from me all pride and haughtiness of mind, all self-love and vain-glory, all obstinacy and disobedience, all fraudulency, and hurtful dissimulation, and let the graces of the Holy Ghost take such absolute possession and seisure of my soul, and all his faculties, that I may bring down, and cast out the spirit of uncleanness and intemperance, of malice and envy, idleness and disdain, that I may never despise any of thy creatures, but myself, that so being little in my own fight, I may be great in thine. Amen.

An Evening Prayer.

In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

O Lord God, who art the light and splendor of souls, in the brightness of thy countenance is eternal day, that knows no night; in thy arms, and in thy protection is all quietness, tranquility and everlasting repose, while the darkness covers the face of the earth, receive my body and soul into thy custody; let not the spirits of darkness come near my dwelling, neither suffer my fancy to be abused with the illusions of the night. Lord, I am thy servant, and the sheep of thy pasture, let not the Devil, who goeth up and down seeking whom he may devour, abuse my body, or make a prey of my soul, but defend me from all those calamities which I have deserved, and protect my soul, that it consent not to any work of darkness, lest mine enemy say, he hath prevailed over me, or do mischief to a soul redeemed with thy most precious blood. Amen.

Pardon and forgive me all the sins and offenses of my youth and age, the errors of mine understanding, the inordination of mine affections, the irregularity of all my actions, and particularly of whatsoever I have transgressed this day, in thought, word, or deed. Lord, let not thy wrath arise, for although I have deserved the extremest pressure of thine indignation, yet remember my infirmity, and how thou hast sent thy Son to reveal thy infinite mercy to us, and convey pardon and salvation to the penitent. I beseech thee also to accept the heartiest devotion, and humble acknowledgment of a thankful heart for all thy blessings and preservation of me this day; for unless thy providence and grace had been my defense and guide, I had committed more and more grievous sins against thee, and had been swallowed up by thy just wrath, and severest judgments, mercy sweet Jesus. Amen.

Grant unto thy servant true humility, great contrition, a tender conscience, and obedient heart, an understanding always busied in honest and pious thoughts, a willing, tractable heart, and ever prone to do good, affections even and moderate, a watchful custody over my senses, that by those windows sin may never enter in, nor death by sin; make me to watch over my tongue, and keep the door of my lips, that no corrupt or unseemly communication proceed out of my mouth, that I may never slander, calumniate, or detract from the reputation of my neighbor, that I be not busy in the faults of others, but careful to correct my own, being gentle and merciful to others, severe towards myself, that I may speak much of thy praises, and what I can for the edification of my Brethren. Amen.

Give me a soul watchful in the service of Religion, constant in holy purposes, ingenious and free from sordid ends, or servile flattery, a modest gravity in my deportment, affability, a fair, courteous demeanour towards all men, austerity in condemning my own sins, sweetness in fraternal correction, and reprehending others, mature judgment, a chaste body, and a clean soul, patience in suffering, deliberation in my words and actions, good counsels in all my purposes; make me just in performing promises, and in all my duties, sedulous in my calling, profitable to the Commonwealth, a true Son of the Church, and of a disposition meek and charitable towards all men. Amen.

O Lord, let thy grace be so present with me, that though my body sleep, yet my soul may forever be watchful, that I sleep not in sin, or pretermitt any opportunity of doing thee service: Let the remembrance of thy goodness and glory be first and last with me, and so unite my heart unto thee with habitual charity, that all my actions and sayings may be directed to thy glory, and every motion and inclination, either of soul or body, may in some capacity or other receive a blessing from thee, and do thee service, that whether I sleep or wake, travel or rest, eat or drink, live or die, I may always feel the light of thy countenance shining so upon me, that my labors may be easy, my rest blessed, my food sanctified, and my whole life spent with so much sanctity and peace, that scaping from the darkness of this world, I may at last come to the land of everlasting rest, in thy light to behold light and glory through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Blessed be the holy and undivided Trinity now and ever more.

Another Prayer for the Evening.

Visit, we beseech thee, O Lord, this habitation with thy mercy, and us thy servants with thy salvation, and repel far from us all the snares of the enemy. Let thy holy Angels dwell here to keep us in peace and safety, and thy blessing be upon us forever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Lord Jesus Christ, the lively Image of thy Fathers mercy and glory, the Savior of all them that put their trust in thee, we offer and present to thee all our strength, and powers of our souls and body, and whatsoever we are, or have, to be preserved, governed, and possessed by thee; preserve us from all vicious, vain and proud cogitations, unchaste affections, from all those things which thou hatest; grant us thy holy charity, that we may love thee above all the world, that we may with all sincerity of intention, and zealous affections, seek thee alone, and in thee alone take our rest, inseparably joining ourselves unto thee, who art worthy to be beloved and adored of all thy creatures with lowest prostration, and highest affection, now and forever more. Amen.

O Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, let thy blessing be upon us, and upon all the members of thy holy Church, all health and safety both of body and soul; assist us against all our enemies, visible and invisible, now and forever more; send us a quiet night, and a holy death in the actual communion of the Catholic Church, and in thy charity, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

Now and in all dangers and afflictions of soul and body, in the hour of death, and in the day of Judgment, save and deliver us, O sweet Savior and Redeemer Jesus. Amen.

Short Prayers for several Occasions for the King.

O Lord our heavenly Father, high and mighty, King of Kings, who in thy hands hast the heart of Kings, and canst turn them as the Rivers of water, send the light of thy countenance and abundance of blessings upon thy servant our Sovereign Lord King Charles, make him as holy, valiant, and prosperous as King David, wise and rich like Solomon, zealous for the honor of thy Law and Temple as Josiah, and give him all sorts of great assistances to enable him to serve thee, to glorify thy holy Name, to protect thy Church, to promote true Religion, to overcome all his enemies, to make glad all his people, that he serving thee with all diligence, and utmost of his endeavors his people may serve him with honor and obedience, in thee, and for thee, according to thy blessed Word and Ordinance, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For the Queen.

O God of Heaven, Father of all mercies, have mercy upon our most gracious Queen, unite her unto thee with the hands of faith and love, preserve her to her lives end in thy favor, and make her instrumental of glory to thy Name, of refreshment to the Church, of Joy to the all faithful people of this Kingdom, and crown her with an eternal weight of glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For our Children.

O Father of Heaven, God of all the creatures, by whose providence mankind is increased, I bless thy Name for bestowing on me that blessing of the righteous man, the blessing of children; Lord, bless them with health, with life, and good understanding, with fair opportunities and advantages of education, society, tutors and governors, and above all with the graces of thy holy Spirit, that they may live and be blessed under thy protection, grow in grace, and be in favor with God and man, and at last make up the number of thine elect Children, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer of a Wife for her Husband.

O My God, who hast graciously been pleased to call me to the holy state of Matrimony, bless me in it with the grace of chastity, with loyalty, obedience, and complacency to my husband; and bless him with long life, with healthful body, with an understanding soul, with abundance of thy graces, which may make him to be and continue thy servant, a true Son of the Church, and a supporter and guide to his Wife, a blessing and a comfort to his Children, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Of a Husband for his Wife.

O Merciful God, who art a Father to us thy Children, espouse to thy holy Church a Savior, and a Redeemer to all mankind; have mercy upon thy Handmaid my Wife, endow her with all the ornaments of thy heavenly grace, make her to be holy and devout, as Hester, loving and amiable, as Rachel, fruitful, as Leah, that being filled with grace and benediction here, she may be partaker of thy glory hereafter, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For safety in Childbirth.

O Blessed Jesu, Son of the Eternal God, who according to thy humility, wert born of a holy Maid, who conceived thee without sin, and brought thee forth without pain, have mercy upon me thy humble servant, and as by thy blessing I have conceived, so grant that by thy favorable assistance I may be safely delivered. Lord, grant me patience, and strength, and confidence in thee, and send thy holy Angel to be my Guardian in the hour of my travel. O shut not up my soul with sinners, nor my life with them that go down to the Pit; I humbly also beg mercy for my Child, grant a comely body, and an understanding soul, life, and an opportunity of Baptism, and thy grace from the cradle to his grave, that it may increase the number of Saints in that holy fellowship of Saints and Angels, where thou raigest and livest, Eternal God, world without end. Amen.

Before a Journey.

O Lord, who didst lead thy servants Abraham, and Jacob, thy people Israel, thy servant Tobias, and wise men of the East, in their several Journies, by thy providence, by thy Ministry of Angels, by a Pillar of Fire, and by the guidance of a Star, vouchsafe to preserve us thy servants in the way that we are now to go, be, O Lord, a guide unto us in our preparation, a shadow in the day, and covering by night, a rest to our weariness, and a staff to our weakness, a portion in adversity, a protection from danger, that by thy assistance we may perform our Journey safely to thy honor, to our own comfort, and last bring us to the everlasting Rest of our heavenly Country, through him who is the way, the truth and the life, our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

For Afflicted persons.

O Lord God, merciful and gracious Father, whose compassion extends to all that are in misery and need, that takest delight in relieving the distresses of the afflicted, give refreshment to all the comfortless, provide for the poor, give ease to all them that are tormented with sharp pains, health to the diseased, liberty and redemption to the captives, cheerfulness of spirit to all them that are in great desolation. Lord, let thy Spirit confirm all them that are strong, strengthen all them that are weak, and speak peace to the afflicted conscience, that the light of thy countenance being restored to them, they may rejoice in thy salvation, and sing praises unto thy Name, who hast delivered their souls from death, their eyes from tears, and their feet from falling; grant this for the honor of thy mercy, and the glory of thy Name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer against Temptations.

O God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, thy Name is great, thy Essence infinite, thy Goodness is Eternal, and thy Power hath no limit, thou art the God and Father of all, blessed forever more, look down in mercy and compassion from thy dwelling, hear my prayers and supplications, and deliver me from all temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil; take not thy grace from me; let me never want thy help in my need, nor thy comfort in the day of my danger or calamity; never try me beyond my strength, nor afflict me beyond my patience, nor smite me but with a fatherly Rod: I have no strength of my own, thou art my confidence, my Rock, and my strong salvation; save me O God, from the miseries of this world, and never let me suffer the calamities of the next; rescue me from the evils I have deserved, and preserve me from the punishment of this world, that living before thee with a clean heart, and undefiled body, and a sanctified spirit, I may at the day of Judgment be presented pure and spotless by the blood of the Lamb, that I may sing eternal Hallelujahs in heavenly places, to the honor of God our Savior, who hath redeemed our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling; grant this in the riches of thy mercy, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A General Confesson.

Almighty God, I a miserable sinner, do humbly confess that I am truly sorrowful for my many and great, my innumerable and intolerable crimes, of which my conscience does accuse me, by night and by day, and by which I have provoked thy severest wrath and indignation against me. I have broken all thy Righteous Laws and Commandments by word or deed, by vain thoughts, or sinful desires. I have sinned against thee in all my Relations and capacities, in all places, and at all times; I can neither reckon their number, nor bear their burden, nor suffer thine anger, which I have deserved; but thou, O Lord God, art merciful and gracious, have mercy upon me, pardon me for all the evil I have done; judge me not for all the good I have omitted; take not thy favor from me, but delight thou to sanctify and save me, and work in me to will and to do of thy good pleasure, all my duty which thou O Lord requirest of me, that being sanctified by thy Spirit, delivered from my sins, I may serve thee in a religious and holy conversation through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer used by His late Majesty in the time of his trouble and restraint.

O Most glorious Lord God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, I here humbly adore thy most sacred Majesty, and I bless and magnify thy Name, for that thou hast been pleased so often and strangely to deliver me from the striving of my people: Father, forgive them who have thus risen up against me, and do thou yet turn their hearts both unto thee, and unto me, and do thou afford me help, that I, being firmly established in the Throne thou hast placed me in, may defend thy Church committed to my care, and keep all this thine and my people in truth and peace, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for pardon of Sin.

ALmighty and most merciful Father, look down upon me thy unworthy servant, who here prostrate myself at the footstool of thy Throne of Grace, yea look upon me, O Father, through the mediation, and in the merits of Jesus Christ, in whom only thou art well pleased, for of myself I am not worthy to stand before thee, or to speak with my unclean lips unto thee, most holy and eternal God; for as in sin I was conceived and born, so likewise I have broken all thy holy Laws and Commandments, by my sinful motions, unclean thoughts, evil words, and wicked works, omitting my duties I ought to do, and committing many vices which thou hast forbidden under pain of death, of thy heavy displeasure. As for my sins, O Lord, they are innumerable, wherefore I stand here liable to all the miseries of this life, and everlasting torment in that to come; if thou shouldest deal with me according to my deserts, I confess Lord that it is thy mercy which endureth forever, and thy compassion which never fails, which is the cause I have not been long ago consumed; but with thee there is mercy and plenteous redemption; in the multitude therefore of thy mercies, and by the merits of Jesus Christ, I entreat thy Divine Majesty that thou wilt not enter into judgment with thy servant, nor be extreme to mark what is done amiss, but be thou merciful unto me, and wash away all my sins and transgressions with that precious blood that my Savior shed for me; and I beseech thee, O Lord, not only to wash away all my sins, but also to purge my heart by thy holy Spirit from the dross of my natural corruption, and as thou dost add days to my life, so, good Lord, I beseech thee, to add repentance to my days, that when I have past this mortal life, I may be partaker of thy heavenly Kingdom, through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer and Confession in and for the time of Affliction.

Almighty and most merciful Father, it is only thy goodness that admits of my imperfect prayers, and the knowledge that thy mercies are infinite, which can give me any hope of thy acceptance, or granting them; for it is my bounden and necessary duty to confess my sins freely unto thee, and of all men living I have need of, and most reason so to do; no man living hath been so much obliged by thee, for that degree of knowledge which thou hast given me, adding likewise the guilt of my transgression; for it is through failing and imperfection that I have so many ways provoked thy gracious Majesty to wrath and indignation against me, but with shame and grief I confess that I have done amiss, and dealt wickedly, that therein I followed the persuasion of worldly wisdom, forsaking the dictates of a right informed conscience; wherefore, O Lord, I have no excuse to make, no hope left, but in the multitude of thy mercies; for I know my repentance is weak, and my prayers are faulty, grant therefore, O most merciful Father, so to strengthen my repentance, and amend my prayers, that thou mayest clear the way for thine own mercies, to which, O let thy Justice at last give place, putting a speedy end to my deserved afflictions: In the mean time give me patience to endure, constancy against temptations, and a discerning spirit to choose what is best for thy glory, and my comfort, and the good of others; grant this, O most merciful Father, for thy Son Jesus Christ his sake, our only Savior. Amen.

A Prayer in time of Captivity.

O Powerful and Eternal God, to whom nothing is so great that it may resist, or so small that it is contemned, look upon my miseries with the eye of mercy, and let thy infinite power vouchsafe to limit out some proportion of deliverance unto me, as to thee shall seem most convenient; let not injury O Lord, triumph over me, and let my falls by thy hand be corrected; and make not my unjust enemies the Ministers of thy Justice; but yet my God, if in thy wisdom this be the aptest castisement for my inexcusable transgressions; if this ungrateful bondage be fittest for my over high desires; if the pride of my not enough humble heart be to be thus broken, O Lord, I yield to thy Will, cheerfully embracing what sorrow thou wilt have me suffer; only thus much let me crave of thee: Let my craving, O Lord, be acceptable unto thee, since it even proceeds from thee, that by goodness, which is thyself, thou wilt suffer some beam of thy Majesty so to shine in my heart, that I, who acknowledge it my noblest title to be thy creature, may still in my greatest affliction depend confidently on thee; let calamity be the exercise, but not the overthrow of my virtue: O let not their prevailing power be to my destruction; and if it be thy will that they more and more vex me with punishment, yet, O Lord, never let their wickedness have such a hand, but that I may still carry a pure mind, and a steadfast resolution ever to serve thee without fear or presumption, yet with that humble confidence which may best please thee; so that at the last I may come to thy eternal Kingdom, through the merits of thy Son our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Prayer to be said for the Sick by them that visit him.

O Merciful Father, who art the Lord and giver of life, to whom belongeth the issues of death, we thy children here assembled, do acknowledge that in respect of our manifold sins, we are not worthy to ask any blessing for ourselves at thy hands, much less to become suitors to thy

Divine Majesty in the behalf of others, yet because thou hast promised, that the prayers of the righteous shall avail much with thee, in the obedience therefore of thy commandment, and in confidence of thy gracious promise, we are bold to become humble suitors to thy Divine Majesty in the behalf of this our dear Brother or Sister, whom thou hast visited with the chastisement of thy own fatherly hand, we could gladly wish the restauration of his health, and a longer continuance of his life, and Christian-fellowship amongst us; but for as much as it appeareth, as far as we can discern that thou hast appointed by this visitation to call for him out of this mortal life, we submit our wills to thy blessed will, and humbly entreat thee, for Jesus Christ his sake, and the merits of his bitter death and passion which he hath suffered for him, that thou wouldest pardon and forgive unto him all his sins, as well that wherein he was conceived and born, as also the offenses and transgressions which ever since to this day and hour he hath committed, in thought, word and deed, against thy Divine Majesty; cast them behind thy back; remove them as far from thy presence as the East is from the West; blot them out of the book of thy remembrance; lay them not to his charge; wash them away with the blood of Christ, that they may never be more seen; and deliver him from all the Judgments which are due unto him for all his sins, that they may never trouble his conscience, nor rise in judgment against his soul; and impute unto him the Righteousness of Jesus Christ, whereby he may appear righteous in thy sight; and in his extremity at this time we beseech thee look down from Heaven upon him with those eyes of grace and compassion, wherewith thou art wont to look upon thy children in their affliction and misery; pity thy wounded servant, like the good Samaritan; for here is a sick soul that needeth the help of such a heavenly Physician, O Lord, increase his faith, that he may believe that Christ died for him, and that his blood cleanseth all his sins; and either assuage his pain, or else increase his patience, to endure thy blessed will and pleasure in all things: And good Lord, lay no more upon him than thou wilt enable him to bear: heave him up unto thyself with those sighs and groans that cannot be expressed; make him now to see what is the hope of his calling, and what is the exceeding greatness of thy mercy and power towards them that believe in thee; and in his weakness, O Lord, show thou thy strength; defend him against the suggestions and temptations of the Devil, who as in all his life-time, will now in his weakness seek to assail him, and to devour him; oh save his soul, and reprove Satan, and command thy holy Angels to be about him, and aid him; and chase away all evil and malignant spirits far from him; make him more and more to loath the world, and desire to be loosed, and to be with Christ; and when that good hour and time shall come, wherein thou hast determined to call for him out of this present life; give him grace peacefully and joyfully to yield up his soul into thy merciful hands, and do thou receive him unto thy mercy, and let thy blessed Angels carry him into thy Kingdom; make his last hour his best hour, his last words his best words, his last thoughts his best thoughts, and when the sight of his eyes is gone, and his tongue shall fail to do his office, grant O Lord, that his soul with Stephen may behold Jesus Christ in Heaven ready to receive him; and that thy Spirit within him may make requests for him with sighs that cannot be expressed. Teach us in him to read and see our own ends and mortality, and therefore to be careful to prepare ourselves for our last end, and put ourselves in readiness against the time that thou shalt call for us in the like manner. Thus, O Lord, we recommend this our dear Brother (or Sister) thy sick servant, unto thy eternal grace and mercy in that prayer which Christ our Savior hath taught us, saying, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, thy love, O heavenly Father, thy comfort and consolation, O holy Spirit, be with us all, and especially with this thy sick servant, to the end, and in the end. Amen.

LET them read often unto the sick some special Chapters of the holy Scriptures; as the 14th and 19th chapters of Job, the 34th chapter of Deuteronomy, the two last chapters of Joshua, the 17th chapter of the first of Kings, the 2d, 4th, and 12th chapter of the 2d of Kings, the 38th, 40th, and 65th chapters of Isaiah, the history of the passion of Christ, the 8th chapter to the Romans, the 15th chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, the 4th of the first to the Thessalonians, the first of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, the first and the last of St. James, the 11th and the 12th to the Hebrews, the first Epistle of Peter, the three first, and the three last chapters of the Revelations, or some of these, exhorting the sick to wait upon God by faith and patience, till he send for him; and praying the Lord to send them a joyful meeting in the Kingdom of Heaven, and a blessed resurrection at the last day, that then they may depart at their pleasure, in the peace of God.

A Prayer in time of imminent Danger.

O Most merciful Father, though my sins are many and grievous, that I may rather expect the effects of thine anger, than so great a deliverance as to deliver me from my present great danger, yet, O Lord, since thy mercies are over all thy works, and thou never failest to relieve all those who with humble and unfeigned repentance come to thee for succor, it were to multiply, not to diminish my transgressions, to despair of thy heavenly favors; wherefore I humbly desire thy Divine Majesty, that thou wilt not only forgive all my sins, but also free me out of the hand of mine enemies, and protect me from the malice of my cruel adversary; but if thy wrath, and my heinous sins and offenses will not otherwise be satisfied, than by suffering me to fall under my present afflictions, thy will be done; yet with humble importunity I do, and shall never leave to implore the assistance of thy heavenly Spirit, that my cause, as I am thy distressed servant, may not suffer through my weakness, or want of courage. O Lord, so strengthen and enlighten all the faculties of my mind, that with clearness I may show forth, and manfully endure this bloody trial, that so my sufferings may not only glorify thee, but likewise be a furtherance to my salvation hereafter; grant this, O heavenly Father, for his sake who suffered for me, even Jesus Christ the Righteous. Amen.

A Prayer of Thanksgiving for any great Deliverance.

O God, my God and Father, thou hast strangely preserved and rescued me from all evil, and for the glory of thine own Name, thou hast diverted the Arrow that was directed against me; what am I, O Lord, and what can I do, or what have I done, that thou shouldest do this for me? I am, O God, a miserable sinner, and I can do nothing without thy mighty grace, and I have done nothing by myself, but what I am ashamed of; and I have received great mercies, and miracles of providence: I see, O God, that thy goodness is the cause and measure of all my hopes, and all thy good, and upon the confidence and greatness of that goodness, I humbly beg of thy sacred Majesty, to keep and defend me from all evil, by thy wise providence, to lead me into all good, by the conduct of thy Divine Spirit; and where I have done amiss, give me pardon; and where I have mistaken, give me pity; and where I have been injured, give me thy favor, and a gracious exchange, that I may serve thee here with diligence, and hereafter may rejoice with thee, and love thee, as I desire to love thee, and as thou deservest to be loved, even with all the powers and degrees of passion of essence, to eternal Ages, in the inheritance of Jesus Christ, whom I love, for whom I will not refuse to die, to whom with thee, O gracious Father, and the holy Spirit, be all glory and honor, love and obedience, forever and forever. Amen.

A Prayer wherewith to conclude all our Devotions.

ALmighty God, who hast promised to hear the Petitions of all them that ask in thy Sons Name, I beseech thee mercifully to incline thine ears unto me, who have now made my prayers and supplications unto thee, and grant that those things which I have faithfully asked in thy Sons Name, according to thy Will, may be effectually obtained to the relief of my necessity, and to the setting forth of thy glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Blessing.

THE Peace of God which passeth all understanding, the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost, the Virtue of Christ's blessed Cross and Passion, be with me, and all mine, now and at the last hour. Amen.
