Secondly, His Soul encouraging calls and promises do invite thee. Ah what an earnest suitor is mercy to thee! how lovingly, how instantly it calleth after thee! how passionately it wooeth thee! Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever. Only acknowledge thine iniquity. Turn O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you: return and I will heal your backslidings. Thou hast plaid the Harlot with many Lovers, yet return unto me, saith the Lord, Jer. 3. 11, 12, 13, 14, 22. As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked but that he turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? Ezek. 33. 11. If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done shall he live. Repent and turn yourselves from all your transgressions, so iniquity shall not be your ruin. Cast away from you all your transgressions, and make you a clean heart, and a new spirit, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God, wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye, Ezek. 18. 21, 23, 30, 31, 32.

Oh melting, gracious words! The voice of a God, and not of a man! This is not the manner of men, for the offending Sovereign to sue to the offending traitorous varlet. Oh how doth mercy follow thee, and plead with thee! Is not thy heart broken yet? Oh that today you would hear his voice!

2. The Doors of Heaven are thrown open to thee; The Everlasting Gates are set wide for thee, and an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven administered to thee. Christ now bespeaks thee, (as she her Husband) Arise and take possession, 1 Kings 21. 15. View the glory of the other world as set forth in the map of the Gospel. Get thee up into Pisgah of the promises, and lift up thine eyes westward, northward, southward, and eastward, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, and that goodly mountain. Behold the Paradise of God, watered with the streams of glory. Arise and walk through the land, in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for all the land which thou seest, the Lord will give it to thee forever, if thou wilt but return, Gen. 13. 14, 15, 17. Let me say to thee, as Paul to Agrippa, Believest thou the Prophets? If thou believest indeed, •o but view what glorious things are spoken of the City of God, Psal. 87. 3. and know, that all this is here tendered in the name of God to thee. As verily as God is true it shall be forever thine, if thou wilt but thoroughly turn.

Behold the City of pure transparent Gold, whose foundations are garnished with all manner of precious stones, whose gates are pearls, whose light is glory, whose temple is God. Believest thou this? if thou dost, art thou not worse than distracted that wilt not take possession, when the gates are flung open to thee, and thou art bid to enter? O ye sons of folly, will ye embrace the dunghills, and refuse the Kingdom? Behold, the Lord God taketh you up into the mountain, shows you the Kingdom of Heaven, and all the glory thereof, and tells you, All this will I give you, if you will fall down and worship me: If you will submit to mercy, accept my Son, and serve me in righteousness and holiness. O fools, and slow of heart to believe! will you court the harlot, will you seek and serve the world, and neglect the eternal glory? What! not enter into Paradise, when the flaming sword, that was once set to keep you out, is now used to drive you in? But you will say, I am uncharitable, to think you infidels and unbelievers. Why, what shall I think you? either you are desperate unbelievers that do not credit it, or stark distracted, that you know and believe the excellency and eternity of his glory, and yet do so fearfully neglect it. Surely you have no faith, or no reason; and I had almost said, conscience should tell you so, before I leave you.

Do but attend what is offered you, Oh blessed Kingdom! A Kingdom of glory, 1 Thes. 2. 1. a Kingdom of righteousness, 2 Pet. 3. 13. a Kingdom of peace, Rom. 14. 17. an everlasting Kingdom, 2 Pet. 1. 11. Here thou shalt dwell, here thou shalt reign forever; and the Lord shall set thee in a throne of glory, Mat. 19. 28. and with his own hand shall set the Royal Diadem upon thine head, and give thee a Crown not of thorns (for there shall be no sinning nor suffering there, Rev. 21. 27. 22, 3, 4, 5.) not of Gold (for this shall be viler than the dirt in that day) but a Crown of Life, James 1. 12. a Crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. 4. 8. a Crown of glory, 1 Pet. 5. 4. Yea thou shalt put on glory as a robe, 1 Cor. 1. 15. 53. and shalt shine like the Sun in the firmament in the glory of thy Father, Mat. 13. 43. Look now upon thy dirty flesh, thy clay, thy worms meat: this very flesh, this lump, this carcass shall be brighter than the Stars, Dan. 12. 3. In short, thou shalt be made like unto the Angels of God, Luke 20. 36. and behold his face in righteousness, Psal. 17. 15. Look in now and tell me, dost thou yet believe? If not, conscience must pronounce thee an infidel, for it is the very word of God that I speak.

But if thou say, thou believest, let me next know thy resolutions. Wilt thou embrace this for thy happiness? Wilt thou forgo thy sinful gains, thy forbidden pleasures? Wilt thou trample on the worlds esteem, and spit in the harlots face, and stop thine ears at her flatteries, and wrest thee out of her embraces? Wilt thou be content to take up with present reproach and poverty, if it lie in thy way to Heaven, and follow the Lord with humble self-denial, in a mortified and flesh-displeasing life? If so, all is thine, and that forever. And art not thou fairly offered? Is it not pity but he should be damned, that will needs go on and perish, when all this may be had for the taking? In a word, wilt thou now close with these proffers? Wilt thou take God at his word? Wilt thou let go thy hold-fast of the world, and rid thy hands of thy sins, and lay hold on eternal life? If not, let conscience tell thee whether thou art not distracted, or bewitched, that thou shouldst neglect so happy a choice, by which thou mightest be made forever.

3. God will settle unspeakable privileges at present, upon thee, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. Though the full of your blessedness shall be deferred till hereafter, yet God will give you no little things in hand.

He will redeem you from your thralldom, John 8. 36. He will pluck you from the paw of the Lyon, Col. 1. 13. the serpent shall bruise your heel, but you shall bruise his head, Gen. 3. 15. He shall deliver you from the present evil world, Gal. 1. 4. Prosperity shall not destroy you; Adversity shall not separate between him and you, Rom. 8. 35, 37, 38. He will redeem you from the power of the grave, Psal. 49. 15. and make the King of Terrors a messenger of peace to you. He will take out the curse from the Cross, Psal. 119. 71. and make affliction the fining-pot, the fan, the phisic, to blow off the chaff, purify the metal, and purge the mind, Dan. 12. 10. Isa. 27. 9. He will save you from the arrest of the Law, and turn the curse into a blessing to you, Rom. 6. 14. Gal. 3. 14. He hath the keys of hell and death, and shutteth that no man openeth, Rev. 3. 7. and 1. 18. and he will shut its mouth, as once he did the Lions, Dan. 6. 22. that you shall not be hurt of the second death, Rev. 2. 11.

But he will not only save you from misery, but install you into unspeakable prerogatives. He will bestow himself upon you, he will be a friend unto unto you, and a father to you, 2 Cor. 6. 18. he will be a Sun and a Shield to you, Psal. 84. 11. in a word, he will be a God to you, Gen. 17. 7. and what can be said more? What you may expect that a God should do for you, and be to you, that he will be, that he will do. She that marries a Prince, expects he should do for her like a Prince, that she may live in a suitable state, and have an answerable dowry. He that hath a King for his Father or Friend, expects he should do for him like a King. Alas, the Kings and Monarchs of the Earth, so much above you, are but like the painted Butter-flies amongst the rest of their kind, or the fair coloured Palmer-worm amongst the rest of the worms, if compared with God. As he doth infinitely exceed the glory and power of his glittering dust, so he will beyond all proportion exceed, in doing for his Favorites, whatever Princes can do for theirs. He will give you grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from you, Psal. 84. 11. He will take you for his Sons and Daughters, and make you Heirs of his promises, Heb. 6. 17. and establish his everlasting Covenant with you, Ier. 32. 40. He will justify you from all that Law, Conscience, Satan, can charge upon you, Rom. 8. 33, 34. he will give you free access into his presence, and accept your persons, and receive your prayers, Eph. 3. 12. Eph. 1. 6. 1 John 5. 14. He will abide in you and make you the men of his secrets, and hold a constant and friendly communion with you, John 14. 23. John 15. 15. 1 John 1. 3. His ear shall be open, his door open, his store open at all times to you. His blessing shall rest upon you, and he will make your enemies to serve you, and work about all things for good unto you, Psal. 115. 13. Rom. 8. 28.

4. The Terms of mercy are brought as low, as possible, to you. God hath stooped as low to sinners, as with honor he can. He will not be thought a fautor of sin, nor stain the glory of his holiness, and whither could he come lower than he hath, unless he should do this? He hath abated the impossible terms of the first Covenant, Ier. 3. 13. Mark 5. 36. Acts 16. 31. Acts 3. 19. Prov. 28. 13. He doth not impose anything unreasonable, or impossible, as a condition of life upon you. Two things were necessary to be done, according to the Tenour of the first Covenant by you. 1. That you should fully satisfy the demands of Justice for past offenses. 2. That you should perform personally, perfectly, and perpetually the whole Law for the time to come. Both these are to us impossible, Rom. 8. 3. But behold God's gracious abatement in both. He doth not stand upon satisfaction, he is content to take off the surety (and he of his own providing too) what he might have exacted from you, 2 Cor. 5. 19. He declares himself to have received a ransom, Job 33. 24. 1 Tim. 2. 6. and that he expects nothing but that you should accept his Son, and he shall be righteousness and redemption to you, John 1. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 30. And for the future obedience, here he is content to yield to your weakness, and remit the rigor. He doth not stand upon perfection (as a condition of life, though he still insists upon it as due) but is content to accept of sincerity, Gen. 17. 1. Prov. 11. 20. Though you cannot pay the full debt, he will accept you according to that which you have, and take willing for doing, and the purpose for the performance, 2 Cor. 8. 12. 2 Chron. 6. 8. Heb. 11. 17. and if you come in his Christ, and set your hearts to please him, and make it the chief of your cares, he will approve and reward you, though the vessel be marred in your hands.

Oh consider your Makers condescension. Let me say to you, as Naaman's servant to him: My Father, if the Prophet had b'd thee do some great thing, wouldst then not have done it? how much rather, when he saith unto thee, wash and be clean? 2 Kings 5. 13. If God had demanded some terrible, some severe and rigorous thing of you, to escape eternal damnation, would you not have done it? Suppose it had been to spend all your days in sorrow in some howling Wilderness, or pine yourselves with famine, or to offer the fruit of your bodies for the sin of your souls, would you not have thankfully accepted eternal redemption, though these had been the conditions? Yea farther, if God should have told you, you should have fryed in the fire for millions of ages, or been so long tormented in Hell, would you not have gladly accepted it? Alas, all these are not so much as one sand in the glass of eternity. If your offended Creator should have held you but one year upon the rack, and then bid you come and forsake your sins, accept Christ, and serve him a few years in self-denial, or lie in this case forever and ever: Do you think you should have stuck at the offer, and disputed the terms, and have been unresolved, whether you were best to accept of the motion? O sinner return and live; why shouldst thou die, when life is to be had for the taking, and mercy should be beholding to thee (as it were) to be saved? Couldst thou say indeed, Lord, I know that thou wast an hard man, Mat. 25. 24. thou hadst some little excuse; but when the God of Heaven hath stooped so low, and bated so far, if now thou shouldst stand off, who shall plead for thee?

Obj. Notwithstanding all these abatements, I am no more able to perform those conditions, (in themselves so easy) of faith and repentance, and sincere obedience; than to satisfy and fulfil the Law.

Answ. These you may perform by God's grace enabling, whereas the other are naturally impossible in this state, even to believers themselves. But let the next consideration serve for a fuiler answer.

5. Wherein you are impotent, God doth offer grace to enable you. I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded, Prov. 1. 24. What though you are plunged into the ditch of that misery, from which you can never get out? Christ offereth to help you out; he stretcheth his hand to you, and if you perish, it is for refusing his help. Behold I stand at the door, and knock: if any man open to me, I will come in, Rev. 3. 20. What though you are poor, and wretched, and blind, and naked, Christ offereth a cure for your blindness, a cover for your nakedness, a remedy for your poverty, he tendreth you his righteousness, his graces, I counsel thee to buy of me gold, that thou mayst be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayst be clothed, and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayst see, Rev. 3. 17, 18. Do you say the condition is impossible, for I have not wherewith to buy? You must know, that this buying is without money, and without price, Isa. 55. 1. This buying is by begging, and seeking with diligence and constancy in the use of God's means, Prov. 2. 3, 4. God commandeth thee to know him, and to fear him. Dost thou say, Yea but my mind is blinded, and my heart is hardened from his fear? I answer, God doth offer to enlighten thy mind and to teach thee his fear: that is presented to thy choice, Prov. 1. 29. For (...) hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord. So that now, if men live in ignorance and estrangement from the Lord, it is because they will not understand, and desire not the knowledge of his ways, Job 21. 14. If thou criest after knowledge, if thou seekest her as Silver, &c. Then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God, Prov. 2. 3, 4, 5. Is not here a fair offer? Turn you at my reproof. Behold I will pour out my Spirit unto you, Prov. 1. 23. Though of yourselves you can do nothing, yet you may do all through his Spirit enabling you, and he doth offer assistance to you. God bids you wash and make you clean, Isa. 1. 16. you say you are unable as much as the Leopard to wash out his spots, Jer. 13. 23. yea but the Lord doth offer to purge you, so that if you be filthy still, 'tis through your own willfulness, Ezek. 24. 13. I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, Jer. 13. 27. O Jerusalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be? God doth wait when you will be made clean, when you will yield to his motions, and accept of his offers, and let him do for and in you, what you cannot do for yourselves. You do not know how much God will do upon your importunity, if you will but be restless and instant with him, Luke 11. 8. and 18. 5.

If God hath not bound himself by express promise to wicked men, to give them grace in the diligent use of the means, yet he hath given them abundant encouragement to expect it from him, if they seek it earnestly in his way. His most gracious nature is abundant encouragement. If a rich and most bountiful man should see thee in misery, and bid thee come to his door, wouldst thou not with confidence expect, at thy coming to find some relief? Thou art not able to believe, nor repent: God appoints thee to use such and such means, in order to thy obtaining faith and repentance: doth not this argue that God will bestow these upon thee, if thou doest ply him diligently in prayer, meditation, reading, hearing, self-examination, and the rest of his means? Otherwise God should but mock his poor creatures, to put them upon their self-denying endeavors, and then when they have put hard to it, and continued waiting upon him for grace, deny them at last. Surely if a sweet natured man would not deal thus, much less will the most merciful and gracious God.

I intended to have added many other arguments, but these have swoln under my hands, and I hope the judicious reader, will rather look upon the weight than the number.

The Conclusion of the whole.

AND now, my brethren, let me know your minds, What do you intend to do? Will you go on and die, or will you set upon a thorough and speedy conversion, and lay hold on eternal life? how long will you linger in Sodom? how long will you halt between two opinions? 1 Kings 18. 21. Are you not yet resolved whether Christ or Barabbas, whether Bliss or Torment, whether the land of Cabul, 1 Kings 9. 13. or the Paradise of God be the better choice? Is it a disputable case, whether the Abana and Pharpar of Damascus, be better than all the streams of Eden? or whether the vile puddle of sin, be to be preferred before the water of life, clear as Cristal, proceeding, out of the throne of God and of the Lamb? Can the world in good earnest do that for you, that Christ can? Will it stand by you to eternity? Will pleasures, titles, lands, treasures, descend with you? Psal. 49. 17. 1. Tim. 6. 7. If not, had you not need look after somewhat that will? What mean you to stand wavering, to be off and on? Foolish Children! how long will you stick between the womb and the world? Shall I leave you at last no farther than Agrippa, but almost persuaded? Why you are forever lost, if left here. As good not at all, as not altogether Christians. You are half of the mind to give over your former negligent life, and to set to a strict and holy course: you could wish you were as some others be, and could do as they can do. How long will you rest in idle wishes, and fruitless purposes? When will you come to a fixed, full, and firm resolve? Do not you see how Satan gulls you, by tempting you to delays? How long hath he tolled you on in the way of perdition? How many years have you been purposing posing to amend? What if God should have taken you off this while?

Well, put me not off with a dilatory answer: Tell me not of hereafter. I must have your present consent. If you be not now resolved, while the Lord is treating with you, and wooing of you, much less are you like to be hereafter, when these impressions are worn out, and you are hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Will you give me your hands? Will you set open the doors, and give the Lord Jesus the full and present possession? Will you put your names into his Covenant? Will you subscribe? What do you resolve upon? If you are still upon your delays, my labor is lost, and all is like to come to nothing. Fain I would, that you should now put in your adventures. Come, cast in your Lot, make your choice: Now is the accepted time, now is the day of thy salvation; today if you will hear his voice. Why should not this be the day from whence thou shouldest be able to date thine happiness? Why shouldest thou venture a day longer, in this dangerous and dreadful condition? What if God should this night require thy soul? O that thou mightest know in this thy day, the things that belong unto thy peace, before they be hid from thine eyes! Luke 19. 42. This is thy day, and 'tis but a day, John 9. 4. Others have had their day, and have received their doom; and now art thou brought upon the stage of this world, here to act thy part for a whole eternity. Remember, thou art now upon thy good behavior for everlasting. If thou make not a wise choice now, thou art undone forever. Look what thy present choice is, such must thine eternal condition be, Luke 10. 42. Luke 16. 25. Prov. 1. 27, 28, 29.

And is it true indeed? is life and death at thy choice? yea 'tis as true as truth is, Deut. 30. 19. why then, what hinders but that thou shouldest be happy? Nothing doth or can hinder, but thine own willful neglect, or refusal. It was the passage of the Eunuch to Philip; See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? So I may say to thee: see, here is Christ, here is mercy, pardon, life, what hinders but that thou shouldst be pardoned, and saved? One of the Martyrs as he was praying at the stake, had his pardon set by in a box (which indeed he refused, deservedly, because upon unworthy terms.) But here the terms are most honorable and easy. O sinner, wilt thou burn with thy pardon by thee? Why do but forthwith give up thy consent to Christ, to renounce thy sins, deny thyself, take up the Yoak and the Cross, and thou carriest the day, Christ is thine, pardon, peace, life, blessedness, all are thine: and is not this an offer worth the embracing? Why shouldest thou hesitate, or doubtfully dispute about the case? Is it not past controversy, whether God be better than sin, and glory better than vanity? Why shouldest thou forsake thine own mercy, and sin against thine own life? When wilt thou shake off thy sloth, and lay by thine excuses? Boast not thyself of tomorrow, thou knowest not where this night may lodge thee, Prov. 27. 1.

Beloved, now the holy Spirit is striving with you. He will not always strive. Hast thou not selt thy heart warmed by the word, and been almost persuaded to leave off thy sins, and come in to God? Hast thou not felt some good motions in thy mind, wherein thou hast been warned of thy danger, and told what thy careless course would end in? It may be thou art like young Samuel, who when the Lord called once and again, he knew not the voice of the Lord, 1 Sam. 3. 6, 7. but these motions and items are the offers, and essays, and calls, and strivings of the spirit. O take the advantage of the tide, and know the day of thy visitation.

Now the Lord Jesus stretcheth wide his arms to receive you. He beseecheth you by us. How movingly how meltingly, how pitifully, how passionately he calleth! The Church is put into a sudden ecstasy upon the found of his voice, The voice of my beloved, Cant. 2. 8. O wilt thou turn a deaf ear to his voice? It is not the voice that breaketh the Cedars, and maketh the mountains to skip like a Calf, that shaketh the Wilderness, and divideth the flames of fire, it is not Sinai's Thunder; but the soft and still voice. It is not the voice of Mount Ebal, a voice of cursing, and terror; but the voice of Mount Gerizim, the voice of blessing, and of glad tidings of good things. It is not the voice of the Trumpet, nor the noise of War, but a message of peace from the King of peace, Eph. 6. 15. 2 Cor. 5. 18, 20. Methinks it should be with thee as with the Spouse; My soul failed when he spake, Cant. 5. 6. I may say to thee, O sinner, as Martha to her Sister. The Master is come, and he calleth for thee, John 11. 28. Oh now with Mary arise quickly, and come unto him. How sweet are his invitations! He crieth in the open concourse, If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink, John 7. 37. Prov. 1. 21. He broacheth his own body for thee. O come and lay thy mouth to his side. How free is he! he excludeth none. Whosoever will let him come and take the water of life freely. Rev. 22. 17. Whose is simple, let him turn in hither. Come eat of my bread, drink of the wine which I have mingled. For sake the foolish, and live, Prov. 9. 4, 5, 6. Come unto me, &c. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls, Mat. 11. 28, 29. Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out, John 6. 37. How doth he bemoan the obstinate refuser? O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered by Children, as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Mat. 23. 37. Behold me, behold me: I have stretched out my hands all the day to a rebellious people, Isa. 65. 1, 2. O be persuaded now at last, to throw yourselves into the arms of love.

Behold, O ye sons of men, the Lord Jesus hath thrown open the prisons, and now he cometh to you (as the Magistrates once to them, Acts 16. 39.) and beseecheth you to come out. If it were from a Palace, or a Paradise that Christ did call you, it were no wonder if you were unwilling (and yet how easily was Adam tolled from thence?) but it is from your prison Sirs, from your Chains, from the Dungeon, from the Darkness that he calleth you, Isa. 42. 6, 7. and yet will you not come? He calleth you unto liberty, Gal. 5. 13. and yet will you not hearken? His Yoak is easy, his Laws are Liberty, his Service Freedom, Matth. 11. 30. James 1. 25. 1 Cor. 7. 22. and (whatever prejudices you have against his ways) if a God may be believed, you shall find them all pleasure and peace, and shall taste sweetness and joy unutterable, and take infinite delight and felicity in them, Prov. 3. 17. Psal. 119. 165. • Pet. 1. 8. Psal. 119. 103, 111.

Beloved, I am loath to leave you. I cannot tell how to give you over. I am now ready to shut up, but fain I would drive this bargain between Christ and you, before I end. What! shall I leave you as I found you at last? Have you read hitherto, and are not yet resolved upon a present abandoning all your sins, and closing with Jesus Christ? Alas, what shall I say? What shall I do? Will you turn off all my importunity? Have I run in vain? Have I used so many arguments, and spent so much time to persuade you, and yet must sit down, at last in disappointment? But it is a small matter that you turn me off: You put a slight upon the God that made you; you reject the bowels and beseechings of a Savior, and will be found resisters of the Holy Ghost, Acts 7. 51. if you will not now be prevailed with to repent and be converted.

Well, though I have called you long, and ye have refused, I shall yet this once more lift up my voice like a Trumpet, and cry from the highest places of the City, before I conclude with a miserable Conclamatum est. Once more I shall call after regardless sinners, that, if it be possible. I may awaken them. O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord, Jer. 22. 29. Unless you be resolved to die, lend your ears to the last calls of mercy. Behold, in the name of God I make open proclamation to you. Hearken unto me, O ye children. Hear instruction, and be wise and refuse it not, Prov. 8. 32. 33.

Ho, everyone that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price. Wherefore do you spend your money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat •e that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear and come ye unto me; hear and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting• Covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David, Isai. 55. 1, 2, 3.

Ho, everyone that is sick of any manner of disease or torment, Mat•h. 4. 23, 24. or is possessed with an evil spirit, whether of pride, or fury, or lust, or covetousness, come ye to the Physician; bring away your sick. Lo, here is he that healeth all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people.

Ho, everyone that is in debt, and everyone that is in distress, and everyone that is discontented, gather yourselves unto Christ• and he will become a Captain over you. He will be your protection from the arrests of the Law; He will save you from the hand of Justice. Behold he is an open sanctuary to you, he is a known Refuge, Heb. 6. 18. Psal. 48. 3. Away with your sins, and come in unto him, lest the avenger of blood seize you, lest devouring wrath overtake you.

Ho, every ignorant sinner, come and buy eyesalve that thou mayest see, Rev. 3. 18. Away with thine excuses; thou art forever lost, if thou continuest in this estate, 2 Cor. 4. 3. But accept of Christ for thy Prophet, and he will be a light unto thee, Isa. 42. 6. Ephes. 5. 14. Cry unto him for knowledge, study his word, take pains about the Principles of Religion, humble thyself before him, and he will teach thee his way, and make thee wise unto salvation, Mat. 13. 36. Luke 8. 9. John 5. 39. Psal. 25. 9. But if thou wilt not follow him, in the painful use of his means, but sit down, because thou hast but one talent, he will condemn thee for a wicked and slothful servant, Mat. 25. 24, 26.

Ho, every profane sinner, come in and live: Return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon thee. Be in•eated. Oh return, come: Thou that hast filled thy mouth with oaths, and execrations, all manner of sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven thee, Mark 3. 28. if thou wilt but thoroughly turn unto Christ, and come in. Though thou wast as unclean as Magdalene; yet put away thy Whoredoms out of thy sight, and thine adulteries from between thy breasts, and give up thyself unto Christ, as a vessel of holiness, alone for his use, and then, though thy sins be as $\langle \phi \rangle$, they shall be as wool, and though they be as crimson, they shall be as white as snow, Luke 7. 37. Hos. 2. 2. 1 Thes. 4. 4. Isa. 1. 18.

Hear, O ye drunkards, How long will you be drunken? put away your wine, 1 Sam. 1. 14. Though you have rolled in the vomit of your sin, take the vomit of repentance and heartily disgorge your beloved lusts, and the Lord will receive you, 2. Cor. 6. 17. Give up yourselves unto Christ, to live soberly, righteously and godly; embrace his righteousness; accept his government; and though you have been swine he will wash you, Rev. 3. 6.

Hear O ye loose companions, whose delight is in vain and wicked society, to sport away your time in carnal mirth and jollity with them, come in at wisdoms call, and choose her, and her ways, and you shall live, Prov. 9. 5, 6.

Hear, O ye scorers, hear the word of the Lord: Though you have made a sport at godliness, and the professors thereof; though you have made a scorn of Christ, and of his ways; yet, even to you doth he call, to gather you under the wings of his mercy, Prov. 1• 22, 33. In a word, though you should be found among the worst of that black roll, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. yet, upon your through Conversion, you shall be washed, you shall be justified, you shall be sanctified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God, ver. 11.

Ho, every formal professor, that art but a lukewarm and dough-baked Christian, and retest in the form of godliness, give over thy halving, and thy halting, be a throughout Christian, and be zealous and repent, and then though thou hast been an offense to Christ's stomach, thou shalt be the joy of his heart, Rev. 3. 16, 19, 20.

And now bear witness, that mercy hath been offered you. I call Heaven and Earth to record against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that you may live, Deut. 30. 19. I can but woo you, and warn you: I cannot compel you to be happy, if I could, I would. What answer will you send me with to my Master? Let me speak unto you as Abraham's servant to them, and now if you will deal kindly and truly with my Master, tell me, Gen. 24. 49. O for such a happy answer, as Rebekah gave to them, Gen. 24. 57, 58. And they said we will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth: And they called Rebekah, and said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? and she said I will go. O that I had but thus much from you! Why should I be your accuser, Mat. 10. 14, 15. who thirst for your salvation? Why should the passionate pleadings and woings of mercy be turned into the horrid aggravations of your obstinacy and additions to your misery? Judge in yourselves. Do you not think their condemnation will be doubly dreadful, that shall still go on in their sins, after all endeavors to recall them? Doubtless, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, yea for Sodom and Gomorrah, in the day of Judgment, than for you, Mat. 11. 22, 24.

Beloved, if you have any pity for your perishing souls, close with the present offers of mercy. If you would not continue and increase the pains of your travelling Ministers, do not stick in the birth. If the God that made you have any Authority with you, obey his command and come in. If you are not the despisers of grace, and would not shut up the doors of mercy against yourselves, repent and be converted. Let not Heaven stand open for you in vain. Let not the Lord Jesus open his wares, and bid you buy without money and without price, in vain. Let not his Ministers and his Spirit, strive with you in vain, and leave you now at last unperswaded; lest the sentence go forth against you, The Bellows are burnt, the Lead is consumed of the fire, the Founder melteth in vain. Reprobate Silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them, Jer. 6. 29, 30.

Father of Spirits, take the heart in hand that is too hard for my weakness. Do not thou have ended, though I have done. Half a word from thine effectual power, will do the work. O thou that hast the Key of David, that openest when no man shutteth, open thou this heart as thou didst Lydia's and let the King of glory enter in: And make this soul thy captive. Let not the tempter harden him in delays. Let him not stir from this place, nor take his eyes from these lines till he be resolved to forgo his sins, and to accept of life upon thyself-denying terms. In thy name, O Lord God, did I go forth to these Labors, in thy name do I shut them up. Let not all the time they have cost, be but lost hours; let not all the thoughts of heart, and all the pains that have been about them, be but lost labor. Lord put in thine hand into the heart of this Reader, and send thy Spirit as once thou didst Philip, to join himself to the Chariot of the Eunuch, while he was reading the word. And though I should never know it while I live, yet I beseech thee, Lord God, let it be found at that day, that some souls are converted by these labors, and let some be able to stand •r•h and say, that by these •ers•asions, they were won unto thee. Amen, Amen. Let him that read say, Amen.

Mr. Alleine's Counsel for Personal and Family-godliness.

BEloved, I despair of ever bringing you to salvation without sanctification: Or possessing you of happiness, without persuading you to holiness. God knows I have not the least hope ever to see one of your faces in Heaven, except you be converted and sanctified, and exercise yourselves unto godliness. I beseech you study personal godliness, and family-godliness.

1. Personal godliness. Let it be your first care to set up Christ in your hearts. See that you make all your worldly interests to stoop to him, that you be entirely and unreservedly devoted unto him. If you willfully, and deliberately, and ordinarily harbor any sin, you are undone, Psal 68. 21. Ezek. 18. 20. See that you unfeignedly take the Laws of Christ, as the rule of your words, thoughts, and actions; and subject your whole man, members and mind faithfully to him, Psal. 119. 34. Rom. 6. 13. If you have not a true respect to all God's Commandments, you are unsound at heart. Psal. 119. 6. Oh study to get the Image and impress of Christ upon you within. Begin with your hearts, else you build without a foundation. Labor to get a saving change within! or else all external performances will be to no purpose. And then study to show forth the power of godliness in the life. Let Piety be your first and great business. 'Tis the highest point of Justice, to give God his due. Beware that none of you be a Prayer-less person; for that is a most certain discovery of a Christless and a graceless person of one that is a very Stranger to the fear of God. Psal. 14. 4. I•b 15. 4. Suffer not your Bibles to gather dust. See that you converse daily with the word, John 5. 39. That man can never lay claim to blessedness, whose delight is not in the Law of the Lord, Psal. 1. 1, 2. Let meditation and self-examination be your daily exercise.

But Piety, without Charity, is but the half of Christianity, or rather impious hypocrisy. We may not divide the Tables, See therefore that you do Justly, and love mercy, and let Equity and Charity run like an even thread, throughout all your dealings. Be you temperate in all things, and let Chastity and Sobriety be your undivided companions. Let Truth and Purity, Seriousness and Modesty, Heavenliness and Gravity, be the constant ornaments of your speech. Let patience and humility, simplicity and sincerity, shine out in all the parts of your conversations. See that you forget and forgive wrongs, and require them with kindness, as you would be found children of the most High. Be merciful in your censures, and put the most favorable construction upon your brethren's carriage, that their Actions will reasonably bear. Be slow in promising, punctual in fulfilling. Let meekness and innocence, affableness, yieldingness and courtesy, commend your conversations to all men. Let none of your relations want that love and loyalty, that reverence and duty, that tenderness, care and vigilanc•, which their several places and capacities call for. This is throughout godliness. I charge you before the most high God, that none of you be found a swearer, or a liar, a lover of evil company, or a scoffer, or malicious, or covetous, or a drunkard, or a glutton, unrighteous in his dealing• unclean in his living, or a quarreller, or a thief, or a backbiter, or a railer: For I denounce unto you from the living God, that destruction and damnation is the end of all such, Prov. 13. 20. I am 5. 12. Rev. 21. 8. 1. Cor. 6. 9, 10 Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21.

2. Family godliness. He that hath set up Christ in his heart, will be sure to study to s•t him up in his house. Let every family with you be a Christian Church; 1 Cr. 16 19. every house a house of prayer; let every householder say with I•shua, I and my •••se wi•• serve the Lord; Josh. 24. 15. and resolve with David, I will walk within my house with a perfect heart, Psal. 101. 2. Let me press upon you a few duties. In general.

First, Let Religion be in ••r families, not as a matter by the by (to be minded at leisure when the world will give you leave) but the standing business of the house. Let them have your prayers as duly as their meals. Is there any of your families, but have time for their taking food? wretched man! canst thou find time to •at in, and not find time to pray in?

Secondly, Settle in upon your hearts, that your souls are bound up in the souls of your family. They are committed unto you, and (if they be lost through your neglect) will be required at your hands. Sirs, if you do not, you shall know, that the charge of souls is a heavy charge, and that the blood of souls is a heavy guilt. O man, hast thou a charge of souls to answer for, and dost thou not yet be•tir thyself for them, that their blood be not found in thy skirts? wilt thou do no more for immortal souls than thou wilt do for thy beasts that perish?

what dost thou do for thy children, and servants? thou providest meat and drink for them, agreeable to their natures, and dost thou not the same for thy beasts? thou givest them medicines, and cherishest them when they be sick, and dost thou not as much for thy swine? More particularly.

1. Let the solemn reading of the word and singing of Psalms, be your family exercises, Isa. 34. 16. John. 5. 39. Psal. 118. 15. [See Christ singing with his family, viz. his Disciples, Mat. 26. 30 Lu 9. 18.]

2. Let every person in your families be duly called to an account, of their profiting by the word heard or read, as they be about doing your own business. This is a duty of consequence unspeakable, and would be a means to bring those under your charge, to remember and profit by what they receive. See Christ's example in calling his family to an account, Mat. 16, 11, 13, 15.

3. Often take an account of the souls under your care, concerning their Spiritual estates; [Herein you must be followers of Christ. Mat. 13. 10, 36, 51. Mark 4 10, 11.] make inquiry into their conditions, insist much upon the sinfulness and misery of their natural estate, and upon the necessity of regeneration and conversion, in order to their salvation. Admonish them gravely of their sins, encourage beginnings. Follow them earnestly, and let them have no quiet for you, till you see them in a saving change. This is a duty of high consequence, but (I am afraid) fearfully neglected. Doth not Conscience say, thou art the Man?

4. Look to the strict sanctifying of the Sabbath by all your households, Exod. 20. 19. Lev. 23. 3. Many poor families have little time else. O improve but your Sabbath days as diligently in laboring for knowledge, and doing your Makers work, as you do the other days in doing your own work, and I doubt not but you may come to some proficiency.

5. Let the Morning and Evening Sacrifice of solemn Prayer, be daily offered up in all your families, Psal. 92. 1, 2. Exod. 30. 7, 8. Luke 19, 10. Beware they be not found among the families that call not upon God's name, for why should there be wrath from the Lord upon your families? Ier. 10. 25. O miserable families, without God in the world, that are without family Prayer! what! have you so many family sins, family wants, family mercies, what! and yet no family Prayer? how do you pray with all prayer and supplication, if you do not with family Prayer? Eph. 6. 18. Say not, I have no time, What, hast thou all thy time on purpose to serve God, and save thy soul? and yet is this it for which thou canst find no time? find but a heart, and I will find time. Pinch out of your meals, and sleep, rather than want for Prayer. Say not My business will not give leave. This is the greatest business to save thyself, and the souls committed to thee. Besides, a whet will be no let. In a word the blessing of all is to be got by prayer, Ier. 29. 11, 12. 2 Sam. 7. 29. and what is thy business without God's blessing? say not, I am not able. Use the one talent, and God will increase, Mat. 25. 24. &c. Helps are to be had, till thou art better able. But if there be no other remedy, thou must join with thine abler neighbor, God hath special regard to joint-prayer, I am 5. 4 10 19 Ac's 12. 5, 10, 12. 2 Cor. 1. 11. and therefore you must improve family advantages for the performing of it.

6. Put everyone in your families upon private prayer. Observe whether they do perform it. Get them the help of a form, if they need it, till they are able to go without it. Direct them how to pray, by reminding them of their sins, wants, and mercies, the materials of prayer. This was the practice of John, and of Jesus, Luke 11. 1, 2, &c.

7. Set up Catechising in your families, at the least once every week. Have you no dread of the Almighty's charge, that you should teach these things diligently to your children, and talk of them as you sit in your houses, &c. Deut 6, 7, 8, 9. & 4. 9, 10. & 11 18, 19, 20. and train them up in the way wherein they should go, Prov 22. 6. the margin. Hath God so commended Abraham, that he would reach his children and household, Gen. 18. 19. and that he had many instructed Servants, Gen. 14. 14. see the margin, and given such a promise to him thereupon, and will not you put in for a share, neither in the praise, nor the promise? Hath Christ honored Catechising with his presence, Lis. 2. 46. and will you not own it with your practice? Say not, they are careless, and will not learn: What have you your authority for, if not to use it for God, and the good of their souls? You will call them up, and force them to do your work; and should you not at least be as zealous in putting them upon God's work? say not, they are dull, and are not capable: If they be dull, God requires of you the more pains and patience, but so dull as they are, you will make them to learn how to work; and can they not learn as well how to live? Are they capable of the mysteries of your Trade, and are they not capable of the plain Principles of Religion? well, as ever you would see the growth of Religion, the cure of Ignorance, the remedy of Profaneness, the downfall of Error, fulfil you my joy in going through with this duty.

Will you answer the calls of divine providence? would you remove the incumbent, or prevent the impending calamities? would you plant nurseries for the Church of God? would you that God should build your houses, and bless your substance? would you that your children should bless you? that your servants should bless you? Oh then set up Piety in your families as ever you would be blessed, or be a blessing; let your hearts and your houses be the temples of the living God, in which his worship (according to all the forementioned directions) may be, with constancy, reverently performed. Prov. 29. 1. He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy. Oh be wise in time that you be not miserable to Eternity.

To all the Ignorant, Carnal, and Ungodly, who are Lovers of pleasures more than God, and seek this world more than the Life Everlasting, and live after the Flesh, and not after the Spirit; These Calls and Counsels are directed in hope of their Conversion to God, and of their Salvation.

He that hath an ear to hear let him hear.

Miserable Souls.

There is that Life and Light and Love in every true Believer, but especially in every Faithful Minister of Christ, which engageth them to long and labor for your Salvation. Life is communicative and active. It maketh us sensible that Faith is not a fantasie, nor true Religion a stage-play, nor our hopes of eternal happiness a dream. And as we desire nothing more for ourselves, than to have more of the Holy Life which we have, alas! in so small a measure, so what is it that we should more desire for others? With the eye of an infallible (though too weak) faith, we see the Heaven which you neglect, and the blessed souls in Glory with Christ, whose companions you might be forever: we see the multitudes of souls in hell, who came thither by the same way that you are going in: who are shut out of the glorious presence of God, and are now among those devils that deceived them, remembering that they had their good things here, Luke 16. 25. and how they spent the day of their visitation, and how light they once set by God, by Christ, by Heaven, by Mercy, whilst Mercy was an earnest solicitour for their hearts: And with our bodily eyes we see at the same time, abundance of poor sinners living about us, as if there were no God, no Christ, no Heaven, no Hell, no Judgment, no nor Death to be expected; as if a man were but a master beast, to rule the rest, and feed upon them, and perish with them. And if it were your own case, to see what souls do in Heaven and Hell, and at once to see how unbelievably, carelessly and senselessly most men live on earth, as if there were no such difference in another world, would it not seem a pitiful sight to you? If you had once seen the five brethren of Dives on earth, eating, drinking, laughing and merry, clothed and faring daily with the best, and at the same time seen their brothers soul in Hell, begging in vain for a little ease, and wishing in vain that one from the dead might go warn his brethren that they come not to that place of torment, would it not seem to you a pitiful sight? would not pity have made you think, [Is there no way to open these Gentlemens eyes? No way to acquaint them what is become of their brother, and where Lazarus is, and whither they themselves are going? No one driveth or forceth them to Hell: and will they go thither of themselves? and is there no way to stop them or keep them back?] Did you but see yourselves what we see by faith (believing God) and at once beheld the Saints in Heaven, the lost despairing souls in Hell, and the senseless sensual sinners on earth, that yet will lay none of this to heart, sure it would make you wonder at the stupidity of mankind. Would you not say, O what a deciver is the Devil that can thus lead on souls to their own damnation? O what a cheater is this transitory world, that can make men so forget the world where they must live forever! O what an enemy is this flesh, that thus draweth down men's souls from God! O what a besotting thing is sin that turneth a reasonable soul into worse than a beast! What a Bedlam is this wicked world, when thousands are so busily laboring to undo themselves and others, and gratifying the Devil, against the God and Savior, who would give them everlasting blessed life.

And as we have such a sight as this by Faith to make us pity you, so have we so much taste of the goodness of God, the sweetness of his ways, and the happiness of believers, as must needs make us wish that you had but once tried the same delights, which would turn the pleasures of sin into detestation. God knoweth that we desire nothing more for ourselves, than the Perfection and Eternity of this holiness and happiness which we believe and taste. And should we not desire the same for you?

And being thus moved with necessary pity, we ask of God, what he would have us to do for your salvation. And he hath told us in Scripture, that the preaching of his Gospel, to acquaint you plainly with the truth, and earnestly and frequently entreat you to turn from the flesh and world to God by Jesus Christ, is the means with which his grace is ready to concur for your salvation, when obstinate resistance causeth not the Holy Spirit to forsake the sinner and leave him to himself, to follow his own Counsels, Lusts and Wills.

In this hope we undertook the Sacred Ministry, and gave up ourselves to this great and most important work: in the great sense of our unworthiness, but yet in the sense of your souls necessity. We were not such fools at our first setting out, as not to know it must be a life of labor, self-denial and patience, and the devil would do his worst to hinder us, and that all sorts of his instruments would be ready to serve him against our labors, and against your souls. Christ our Captain saved us by patient Conquest, and so must we save ourselves and you:

and so must you save yourselves under Christ, if ever you be saved. It was no strange thing to Paul that bonds and afflictions did everywhere abide him, nor did he account his life dear that he might finish his course with joy, and the Ministry committed to him by the Lord. Act. 20. 23, 24. It was no strange thing to him to be forbidden to preach to the Gentiles that they might be saved, by such as were filling up the measure of their sins, and were under God's uttermost wrath on earth. 1 Thess. 2. 15. 16. Devils and Pharisees, and most where they came, both high and low, were against the Apostles preaching of the Gospel, and yet they would not sacrilegiously and cruelly break their Covenant with Christ, and perfidiously desert the souls of men; even as their Lord for the love of souls, did call Peter Satan, that would have tempted him to save his life and flesh, instead of making it a sacrifice for our sins. Mat. 16. 23.

What think you should move us to undertake a calling so contrary to our fleshly ease and interests? Do we not know the way of Ease and Honor, of Wealth and Pleasures as well as others? And have we not flesh as well as others? Could we not be content that the cup of reproach and scorn and slander and poverty and labors, might pass from us, if it were not for the will of God and your salvation? Why should we love to be the lowest, and trodden down by malignant pride, and counted as the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things, and represented to Rulers whom we honor, as schismatics, disobedient, turbulent, unruly, by every Church-usurper, whom we refuse to make a God of? Why give we not over this preaching of the Gospel, at the will of Satan, that is for the everlasting suffering of your souls, under the pretense of making us suffer? Is not all this that you may be converted and saved? If we be herein besides ourselves, it is for you. Could the words of the ignorant or proud, have persuaded us, that either your wants and dangers are so inconsiderable, or your other supplies and helps so sufficient, that our labors had been unnecessary to you, God knoweth we should have readily obeyed the silencing sort of Pastors, and have betaken us to some other land, where our service had been more necessary. Let shame be that hypocrites reward who taketh not the saving of souls, and the pleasing of God, for a sufficient reward, without Ecclesiastical Dignities, preferments, or worldly wealth.

I have told you our motives: I have told you our business and the terms of our undertaking. It is God and you *sinner*s that next must tell us what our entertainment and success shall be. Shall it be still neglect, and unthankful contempt, and turning away your ear and heart, and saying, we have somewhat else to mind? Will you still be cheated by this deceiving world? and spend all your days in pampering your guts, and providing for that flesh that must lie rotting very shortly in a grave? Were you made for no better work than this? May not we bring you to some sober thoughts of your condition, nor one hour seriously to think whither you are going? What! not to one awakened look into the world where you must be forever? Nor one heart-raising thought of the everlasting Glory? Not one heart-piercing thought of all your Savior's love, nor one tear for all your sinful lives? O God forbid: Let not our labor be so despised. Let not your God, your Savior and your souls be set so light by. O let there be no profane person among you like Esau, who for one morsel sold his birth-right.

Poor sinners! We talk not to you as on a stage, in customary words, and because that talking thus is our trade. We are in as good earnest with you, as if we saw you all murdering yourselves, and we are persuading you to save your lives. Can any man be in jest with you who believeth God? who by faith foreseeeth whither you are going, and what you lose, and where the game of sin will end? It is little better to jest with you now in Pulpit or in private, than to stand jesting over your departing souls, when at death you are breathing out your last.

Alas, with shame and grief we do confess, that we never speak to you of these things as their truth and weight deserve, nor with the skill and wisdom, the affection and fervency which beseemeth men engaged in the saving of poor souls. But yet you may perceive that we are in good sadness with you. (For God is so.) What else do we study for, labor for, suffer for, live for? Why else do we so much trouble ourselves, and trouble you with all this ado, and anger them that would have had us silent? For my own part, I will make my free confession to you to my shame; that I never grow cold and dull and pitiiless to the souls of others, till I first grow too cold and careless of my own (unless when weakness or speculative studies cool me, which I must confess they often do.) We never cease pitying you, till we are growing too like you, and so have need of pity ourselves.

When, through the mercy of my Lord, the prospect of that world of souls which I am going to, hath any powerful operation on myself, O then I could spend and be spent for others. No words are too earnest, no labor too great, no cost too dear, the frowns and wrath of malignant opposers of the preaching of Christ's Gospel are nothing to me. But when the world of spirits doth disappear, or my soul is clouded, and receiveth not the vital illuminating influences of Heaven, I grow cold first to myself, and then cold to others.

Come then poor sinners, and help us who are willing at any rate to be your helpers. As we first crave God's help, so we next crave yours: Help us, for we cannot save you against your wills, nor save you without your consent and help. God himself will not save you without you; and how should we? We know that the Devil is against us, and will do his worst to hinder us; and so will all his ministers, by what names or titles soever dignified or distinguished. But all this is nothing if you will but take our parts yourselves: I mean if you will take Christ's part, and your own, and will not be against yourselves. Men and Devils cannot either help or hinder us in saving you as you may do yourselves. If God and you be for us, who shall be against us?

And if you will help us, give over striving against God, and Conscience, give over fighting against Christ and his Spirit: take part no more with the world and the flesh which in your Baptism you renounced: set your hearts to the message which we bring you. Allow it your man-like sober thoughts; search the Scripture, and see whether these things which we speak be so or not. We offer you nothing but what we have resolvedly chosen ourselves: and that after the most serious deliberation that we can make. We have many a time looked round about us, to know what is the happiness of man: And had we found better for ourselves, we had offered better to you. If the world would have served our turns, it should have served yours also; and we would not have troubled you with the talk of another world: But it will not; I am sure it will not serve your turns, to make you happy, nor shall you long make that sorry self-deceiving shift with it as now you do.

But if you will not think of these things; if you will not use the reason of men, alas what can we do to save your souls? O pity them Lord, that they may pity themselves. Have mercy on them, that they may have some more mercy on themselves. Help them that they may help themselves and us. If you still refuse, will not your loss be more than ours: If we lose our labor (which to ourselves we shall not;) if we lose our hopes of your salvation: what is this to your everlasting loss of salvation itself? And what is our suffering for your sakes, in comparison of your endless sufferings.

But, O, this is it that breaketh our hearts, that we leave you under more guilt than we found you; and when we have laid out life and labor to save you, the impenitent souls must have their pain increased, for the refusing of these Calls? And that it will be part of your Hell to think forever how madly you refused our Counsel, and what pains and cost and patience were used to have saved you, and all in vain. It will be so: it must needs be so: Christ saith that it shall be easier for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of Judgment, than for the rejecters of his Gospel-calls. The nature of the thing, and the nature of Justice certainly tell you, that it must be so.

O turn not our complaints to God against you: Turn us not from beseeching you to be reconciled to God, to tell him you will not be reconciled. Force us not to say, that we earnestly invited you to the heavenly feast, and you would not come. Force us not to bear this witness against you, Lord we could have born all our labor and sufferings for them much easilier, if they would but have yielded to thy grace. But it was they themselves that broke our hearts, that lost our labor, that made us preach and entreat in vain: It was easier to preach without maintenance, than without success. It was they that were worse to us than all the persecutors in the world. How oft would we have gathered them, but they would not, but are ungathered still? How many holy faithful Ministers have I known these eleven years last past, who have lived in pining poverty and want, and hardly by charity got bread and clothing; and yet if they could but have truly said [Lord the Sermons, which I preach privately and in danger, have won home many souls to thee] it would have made all this burden easy. But I tell thee senseless impenitent sinner, thou that deniedst God thy heart, and thou that deniedst them thy Conversion, which was the end of all their labors, hast dealt much more cruelly with them, than they that denied them the Levites bread.

Poor sinners! I know that I am speaking all this to those that are dead in sin: but it is a death consisting with a natural life, which hath a capacity of spiritual life: Or else I would no more speak to you than to a stone. And I know that you are blind in sin: but it is a blindness consisting with a reasonable faculty, which is capable of spiritual Illumination: Or else I would no more persuade you, than I would do a beast. And I know that you are in the fetters of your own lusts: your wills, your love, your hearts are turned away from God, and strongly bewitched with the dreams and dalliances of the flesh and world: But your wills are not forced to this Captivity: Surely those wills may be changed by God's grace, when you clearly see sufficient reason for to change them: Else I would as soon preach (were I capable) to Devils and damned souls. Your case is not yet desperate: O make it not desperate: There is just the same hope of your Salvation, as there is of your true conversion and perseverance, and no more:

Without it there is no hope: and with it you are safe, and have no cause to doubt and fear. Heaven may yet be yours if you will. Nothing but your own wills, refusing Christ and a holy life, can keep you out. And shall that do it? Shall Hell be your own choice? And will you not, I say will you not be saved?

O think better what you do! God's terms are reasonable: His word and ways are good and equal: Christ's yoke is easy and his burden light, and his Commandments are not grievous to any, but so far as blindness and a bad and backward heart doth make them so. You have no true reason to be unwilling: God and Conscience shall one day tell you and all the World that you had no reason for it. You may as wisely pretend reason to cut your throats, to torment yourselves, as plead reason against a true conversion unto God. Were I persuading you not to kill yourselves, I should make no question, but you would be persuaded. And yet must I be hopeless when I persuade you from everlasting misery, and not to prefer the world and flesh before your Savior and your God, and before a sure everlasting Joy? God forbid!

Reader, I take it for a great mercy of God, that before my head lieth down in the dust, and I go to give up my account unto my judge, I have this opportunity once more, earnestly to bespeak thee for thy own salvation. I beg it of thee, as one that must shortly be called away, and speak to thee no more, till we come unto our endless state, that thou wouldst but sometimes retire into thyself, and use the reason of a man, and look before thee whither thou art going; and look behind thee, how thou hast lived, and what thou hast been doing in the world till now; and look within thee, what a case thy soul is in, and whether it be ready to enter upon Eternity; and look above thee what a Heaven of Glory thou dost neglect, and what a God thou hast to be thine everlasting Friend or Enemy, as thou chooseth and as thou livest, and that thou art always in his sight: Yea and look below thee, and think where they are, that died unconverted. And when thou hast soberly thought of all these things, then do as God and true Reason shall direct thee. And is this an unreasonable request? I appeal to God, and to all wise men, and to thy own conscience when it shall be awake. If I speak against thee, or if all this be not for thy good, or if it be not true and sure, then regard not what I say: If I speak not that message which God hath commanded his Ministers to speak, then let it be refused as contemptuously as thou wilt. But if I do but in Christ's name and stead, beseech thee to be reconciled to God, 2. Cor. 5. 19, 20. refuse it at thy peril: And if God's beseeching thee shall not prevail against thy sloth, thy lust, thy appetite, against the desires of thy flesh, against the dust & shadows of this world, remember it when with fruitless cries and horror, thou art beseeching him too late.

I know, poor sinner, that Flesh is brutish, and lust and appetite have no reason: But I know that thou hast reason thyself which was given thee to overrule them; and that he that will not be a Man cannot be a Saint, nor a Happy man. I know that thou livest in a tempting and a wicked world, where things or persons will be daily hindering this. But I know that this is no more to a man, that by Faith seeth Heaven and Hell before him, than a grain of sand is to a Kingdom, or a blast of Wind, to one that is fighting or flying for his life. Luke 12. 4. O man! that thou didst but know the difference between that which the Devil and sin will give thee, if thou wilt sell thy soul and Heaven, and that which God hath promised and sworn to give thee, if thou wilt heartily give up thyself to him.

I know that thou mayest possibly fall into company (at least among some sots and drunkards) that will tell thee, all this is but troublesome preciseness, and making more ado than needs: But I know withal what that man deserveth, who will believe a fool before his Maker: (For he can be no better than a miserable fool, that will contradict and revile the word of God, even the word of Grace that would save men's souls.)

And, alas, it is possible thou mayest hear some of the Tribe of Levi, (or rather of Cain,) deriding this serious Godliness as mere Hypocrisy and Phanaticism, and selfconceitedness: As if you must be no better than the Devils slaves, lest you be Proud in thinking that you are better than they: That is, you must go with them to Hell, lest in Heaven you be proud Hypocrites for thinking yourselves Happier than they.

It may be they will tell you, that this talk of Conversion is fitter for Pagans and Infidels to hear, than Christians and Protestants. Because such men's big looks or Coats may make the poison the easilier taken down, I will entreat thee but as before God to answer these following questions, or to get them answered, and then judge whether it be They or We that would deceive thee? and whether, as men use to talk against Learning that have none themselves, so such men prate not against Conversion and the Spirit of God, because they have no such thing themselves?

Qu. 1. I pray ask these men, whether it be a Puritan or Phanatick opinion that men must die? and what all the pomp, and wealth, and pleasure of the World will signify to a departing soul? Ask them whether they will live on Earth forever, and their merry hours, and Lordly looks will have no end? And whether it be but the conceit of Hypocrites and Schismatics, that their Carcases must lie rotting in a darksome grave?

Qu. 2. Ask them whether man have not an Immortal soul, and a longer life to live when this is ended? Luke 12. 41.

Qu. 3. Ask them whether reason require not every man, to think more seriously of the place or state where he must be forever, than of that where he must be but for a little while, and from whence he is posting day and night. And whether it be not wiser to lay up our treasure where we must stay, than where we must not stay, but daily look to be called away, and never more be seen on earth? Math. 6. 19, 20. 2 Cor. 4. 16, 17, 18. and 5. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8.

Qu. 4. Ask them whether God should not be loved with all our heart and soul and might? Math. 22. 37. And whether it be not the mark of an ungodly miscreant, to be a lover of pleasure more than God, 2. Tim. 3. 4. and a Lover of this world above him? 1 John. 2. 15, 16. And whether we must not seek first God's Kingdom and his Righteousness, Matth. 6. 33. and labor most for the meat that never perisheth, Joh. 6. 27. and strive to enter in at the strait Gate, Luke 13. 24. and give all diligence to make our Calling and Election sure? 2. Pet. 1. 10.

Qu. 5. Ask them whether without Holiness any shall see God? Heb. 12. 14. Mat. 5. 8. Tit. 2. 14. And whether the carnal mind is not enmity to God, and to be carnally minded is not death, and to be spiritually minded, life and peace? And whether if you live after the flesh you shall not die, and be condemned? and they shall live and be saved that walk after the Spirit? And whether any man be Christ's that hath not his spirit? Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13.

Qu. 6. Ask them whether any man have a treasure in Heaven, whose heart is not there? Math. 6. 21. And whether this be not the difference between the Wicked and the Godly, that the first do make their bellies their God's, and mind Earthly things, and are Enemies to the Cross of Christ (though perhaps not to his name;) and the latter have their conversation in Heaven and being risen with Christ do seek and set their affections on things above, and not on the things that are on earth, to which they are as dead, and their life is hid (or out of sight) with Christ in God, till Christ appear, and then they shall appear (even openly to all the world) with him in Glory. Phil. 3. 18, 19, 20. Col. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

Qu. 7. Ask them whether is be credible and suitable to God's word or workings, that he that will not give them the fruits of the earth without their labor, nor feed and clothe them without themselves, will yet bring them to Heaven without any care, desire, or labor of their own? when he hath bid them, Care not for the one, and called for their greatest diligence for the other: Math. 6. 25, 33. John. 6. 27. Yea ask them whether these be not the two first articles of all Faith and Religion, 1. That God is; 2. That he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Heb. 11. 6.

Qu. 8. Ask them, yea ask your eyes, your ears, your daily experience in the world, whether all or most that call themselves Christians, do in good sadness thus live to God in the Spirit, and mortify the flesh with its affections and lusts, and seek first God's Kingdom and righteousness, and love him above all, and lay up treasure and heart in Heaven? or rather whether most be not lovers of the world, and lovers of pleasure more than God, and live not after the flesh, and mind not most the things of the flesh? I mention not now the drunkards, the flesh-pleasing Gentlemen, that live in Pride, Fulness and Idleness, and Sport and Play away their precious time; nor the filthy Fornicators, nor the merciless oppressors, nor the malignant haters of a godly life, nor the perjured and perfidious betrayers of men's souls, and of the Gospel, or their Countries good; nor such other men of •eared Consciences, whose misery none questioneth, but such as are as blind and miserable. It's not these only I am speaking of; but the common, worldly, fleshly, and ungodly ones.

Qu. 9. Ask them whether the name of a Christian will save any one of these ungodly persons? And whether God will like men the better for lying and calling themselves Christians when they are none indeed? And whether they dare preach to the people, that a Christian drunkard, or a Christian fornicator, or oppressor, or a Christian worldling, needeth no Conversion?

Qu. 10. Ask them wether they say not themselves that Hypocrisy is a great aggravation of all other sin? and whether God hath not made the Hypocrites and Unbelievers to be the standards in Hell? Luke 25. 51. And whether seeking to abuse God by a mock-religion do make such false Christians better than the poor Heathens and Infidels, or much worse? And whether he be not an Hypocrite that professeth to be a Christian, and a servant of God, when he is none, nor will be? And whether he that knoweth his masters will and doth it not, shall not have the sorest stripes, or punishment? Luke 12. 47.

Qu. 11. Ask them whether in their Baptism, (which is their Christening, as to Covenant,) they did not renounce the flesh, the world, and the Devil, and vow and deliver up themselves to God, their Father, their Savior and their Sanctifier? And whether all or most men perform this vow? And whether a perjured Covenant-breaker against God, is fitter for salvation, than one that never was baptized?

Qu. 12. Ask them whether the holy nature of God be not so contrary to sin, as that it is blasphemy to say that he will take into Heaven, and into the bosom of his eternal delights, any unholy unrenewed soul? 1 Pet. 1. 15, 16.

Qu. 13. Ask them why it was that Christ came into the world? whether it was not to save his people from their sins, Mat. 1. 21. and to destroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. and to purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. and to bring home straying souls to God, Luke 15. and to be the way to the Father? John. 14. 6. And whether Christ save that soul that is not converted by him and saved from his sins? Or whether it be the dead Image only of a Crucified Jesus, that is all their Savior, while they will have no more of him?

Qu. 14. Ask them why they believe, and were baptized into the Holy Ghost, and whether a man can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, that is not born of the Spirit as well as of Water, John 3. 3, 5, 6. and that is not converted, and begins not the world as it were anew, in a teachable, tractable newness of life, like a little child? Matth. 18. 3. And whether it be not a certain truth, that If any man have not the spirit of Christ, the same is none of his, Rom. 8. 9.

Qu. 15. Ask them why Christ gave the world so many warnings of the damnableness of the Pharisees hypocrisy, if Hypocritical Christians may be saved. And what were these Pharisees? They were the Masters of the Jewish Church: The Rabbies that must have high places, high titles, and ceremonies, formal garments, and must be revered of all: That gave God lip-service without the heart, and made void his commands, and worshipped him in vain, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, and strictly tythed Mint and Cumin, while love, mercy and Justice were past by: Who worshipped God with abundance of ceremonies, and built the Tombs, and garnished the Sepulchers of the Saints; while they killed and persecuted those that did imitate them, and hated the living Saints, and honored the dead. They were the bitterest enemies and murderers of Christ, on pretense that he was a blasphemer, and a seditious enemy to Caesar and the common peace, and one that spake against the Temple: They were the greatest enemies of the Apostles, and silencers of those that preached Christ's Gospel, and persecuted them that called on his name. And had these no need of Conversion, because they could say, God is our Father (when the Devil was their Father, John 8. 44.) and that they were Abraham's seed? And are not hypocritical Christians, drunken Christians, fornicating Christians, carnal, worldly, infidel Christians, (the contradiction is your own) persecuting Christians, false-named hypocritical Christians, as bad, yea worse, as they abuse a more excellent profession? Mat. 15. 7, 8. and 23. and 22. 18. and 6. 2, &c. Luke 12. 1.

Qu. 16. Doth not the Holy State of Heaven require Holiness in all that shall possess it? Can an unholy soul there see and love and praise and delight in God forever, and in the Holy Society and employment of the Saints? Rev. 21. 27. Is he not liker a Mahometan than a Christian, that looketh for a sensual and unholy Heaven?

Qu. 17. What is the difference between the Church and the world? Is not the Church a holy Society of Regenerate souls? Yea the Church visible is those only that in Baptism vow Holiness and profess it. Look these hypocrites in the face, and see whether they do not blush, when they repeat in their Creed I believe in the Holy Ghost, I believe the Holy Catholic Church, and the Communion of Saints, who shall have the forgiveness of sins, and life everlasting. Ask them whether they mean Holy Adulterers, holy worldlings, holy perjured persons? Ask them whether they mean a Communion of Saints in a Tavern, in a play-house, in a gaming house, in a whore-house, or a jesting, canting stage-play Communion? If the Church be holy, be holy if you will be of the Church: If it be a Communion of Saints, make it not a Communion of swine, and make not Saints and their Communion seem odious either for their infirmities, or their crossness to your carnal interests or conceits.

Qu. 18. Ask them whether there be a Heaven, and a Hell, or not? If not, why are they pretended Christians? If there be, will God send one man to Heaven, and another to Hell, to so vast, so amazing a difference of states, if there be no great difference between them here? If Holiness no more differenced Christians from others, than saying a sermon, or saying over a prayer, doth difference one from an Infidel, where were the Justice of God in saving some, and damning others? & what were Christianity better than the religion of Antonine, Plato, Socrates, Seneca, Cicero, Plutarch, if not much worse? Go into London streets, and when you have talk with living prudent men, then go to the Painters shop, and see a comely picture, and to the Looking-glass and see the appearances of each passenger in a glass, and to the Periwig shops, and see a wooden head with a Periwig upon the bulk, and you have seen somewhat like the difference of a Holy Soul, and of a dead and dressed formal hypocrite, Psal. 23. 27.

Qu. 19. Ask them whether Kings and all men make not a great difference between man and man; the loyal, and the perfidious, the obedient and the disobedient? And whether they difference not themselves between a friend and a foe, one that loveth them, and one that robbeth, beateth or would kill them. And shall not the most Holy God more difference between the righteous and the wicked? Mal. 3. 17, 18.

Qu. 20. But if they are dead in every point save carnal interests, ask them why they are Preachers or Priests? And if Conversion and Holiness be a needless thing, what use they themselves are of? and why the Country must be troubled with them, and pay them tithes, and owe them reverence? When these twenty Questions are well answered, conclude that you may be saved without Conversion.

But if poor soul, thou art fully convinced, and askest, What should I do to be converted? The Lord make thee willing, and save thee from hypocrisy, and I will quickly tell thee in a few words.

1. Give not over sober thinking of these things, till thy heart be changed. Psal. 119. 59.
2. Come to Christ, and take him for thy Savior, thy Teacher, thy King, and he will pardon all that's past and save thee, John 1. 12. and 3. 16. and 5. 40. 1 John 5. 11, 12.
3. Believe God's love, and the pardon of sin, and the everlasting joys of Heaven, that thou mayest feel that all the pleasures of the world and flesh, are dung in comparison of the Heavenly delights, of Faith and Hope and holy Love, and peace of Conscience and sincere obedience.
4. Sin no more willfully, but forbear that which thou mayest forbear. Isa. 55. 7.
5. Away from Temptations, occasions of sin and evil company, and be a Companion of the humble, holy, heavenly and sincere. Psal. 119. 115. 63.
6. Wait on God's spirit in the diligent, constant use of his own means. Read, hear, meditate, pray: Pray hard for that grace that must convert thee: wait thus, and thou shalt not wait in vain. Psal. 25. 3. and 37. 34. and 69. 6.

Pitty O Lord, and persuade these souls: Let not Christ's blood, his doctrine, his example, his spirit, be lost unto them, and they lost forever. Let not Heaven be as no Heaven to them, while they dream and dote on the shadows in this world. And O save this land from the greater destruction, than all our late plagues, and flames, and divisions which our sins and thy threatenings, make us fear. O Lord in thee have we trusted, let us never be confounded.

Having thus contributed my endeavor in this Preface to the furtherance of the design of this excellent book, I must tell thee Reader that I take it for an honor to commend so masculine a birth unto the World: The Midwife of Alexander or Aristotle need not be ashamed of her office. Who the Author of this treatise was; how he preached, how he lived, how he suffered (and for what) and how he died, his Life and Letters lately printed fully tell you: and I earnestly commend the reading of them to all, but especially Ministers, not to tell them what men have been here forbidden to preach Christ's Gospel, and for what, nor what men they are that so many years have done it: but to tell you what men Christ's Ministers should be: But say not, He killed himself with excessive Labor, and therefore I will take warning, and take my ease. For 1. He lived in perfect health all his days notwithstanding his labors, till after his hard and long imprisonment. 2. It was not the greatest labors of his times of liberty that hurt him, but his preaching 6 or 7 or 8 times a week, after that he was silenced, because he could not speak to all his people at once. O make not an ill use of so excellent an example. Say not like Judas, What need this waste? His labor, his life, his sufferings, his death were not in vain. The ages to come that read his Life, and read this little popular treatise, and his Call to Archippus shall say, They were not in vain. And though he was cut off in the midst of his age, and his longer labors, & more elaborate writings thus prevented, take thankfully this small, but methodical, warm, and serious tractate: Read it seriously, and it cannot be but it must do thee good.

I am one that have looked into books, and sciences, and speculations of many sorts, and seriously tell thee as a dying man, that after all my searches and experience, I have found that Philosophical enquiries into the Divine Artifices, and the Nature of things hath among a greater number of uncertainties, a great many pretty pleasant probabilities, which a holy soul can make good use of in admiring God, & may find us a lawful kind of sport: but in the moralities which Atheists count uncertainties, the knowledge of God, and our duty, and our hopes, the doctrine and practice of Holiness, Temperance, & Charity, and Justice, and the diligent seeking & joyful hopes of life everlasting, is all the true Wisdom, the Goodness, the Rest and Comfort of a soul: whatever be our play, this is the satisfying certainty, the Business, and the beatifying improvement of our lives.

I have done, when I have sought to remove a little scandal, which I foresaw; that I should my selfwrite the Preface to his Life, where himself and two of his friends make such a mention of my name, which I cannot own; which will seem a praising him for praising me. I confess it looketh ill-favouredly in me: But I had not the power of other men's writings, & durst not therefore forbear that which was his due. Had I directed their pens they should have gone a middle way, and only esteemed me [a very unworthy servant of Christ, who yet long to see the peace and prosperity of his Church] and should have forborne their undeserved praise, as other men should have done their slanderous libels. But if the Reader get no harm by it, I assure him the use I made of it was, to lament that I am really so much worse than they esteemed me; and to fear lest I should prove yet worse than I discern myself; who see so much sin and weakness, in my betters, and much more in myself, as to make it the constant sentiment of my soul, that PRIDE of men's GREATNESS, WISDOM and GOODNESS is the first part of the DEVILS IMAGE on man's soul, and DARKNES is the second, and MALIGNITY the third.

R•. Baxter.

TO THE UNCONVERTED Reader.

READER,

HOW well were it if there were no more unconverted ones among us, than those to whom this is directed? Unconverted persons how many are there, but how few unconverted Readers? especially of such Books as this before thee? A Play or a Romance better suits the lusts, and therefore must have more of the eye of such; what will cherish the evil heart is only grateful, not what will change it.

How many are there to whom this is directed, who will not know, that they are the men? and how little hope is there that this excellent Treatise should reach its end, with those who apprehend not themselves concerned in it? Art not thou one of them? Art thou a Convert, or art thou not yet in thy sins? What is sin? What is Conversion? It may be, thou canst tell me neither, and yet a Convert thou sayst, thou art. But to what purpose is it then like to be, for the servant of God to treat with thee about this matter? Let him bid thee believe, thou art a be••ever already; let him bid thee repent and turn to the Lord, that work thou say•• is not now •o do. What can there be said to this man, that's like to bring him to good? Friend, know thyself better, or thou perishest without remedy. Thou mayest pray, but what hope is there in thy praying? Thou mayest read, but what hope is there in thy reading? Yet read on, this little hope there is; In this book there's Eye-Salve that may heal thee of thy blindness. In this book there is a Glass that will show thee thy face. Dost thou know thine own face when thou seest it? Behold thy very Image in those Marks that are given of an unconverted person; Read and consider them, and then say, if thou be not the man.

Be willing to know thyself, and to know the worst of thy case; wink not at the light, hide not thyself from thine own soul. Wilt thou never know thy disease, till thou be past remedy?

Much of our hardest work would be over, if we could see the sinners to whom we are sent, to be convinced sinners. If we could but open the blind eyes, there were hope we should shortly raise the dead.

Sinner, of a truth, thou art in evil case, whether thou know it or not; thou art among the dead, and there is but a step betwixt thee and Hell. Thou wilt not believe it though it be told thee, yet once again let me beseech thee, come to the Glass that is here presented to thee, and narrowly observe whether the very marks of the dead be not found upon thee.

If there be a miscarriage in this first work, if thou wilt not understand thy misery and thy danger, there's an end of all hopes concerning thee. Whilst this self-ignorance abides upon thee, all the Counsels, that are necessary to a man in thy case, will do thee no good; they are never like to prosper with thee, because thou wilt not count them proper for thee. Who will be persuaded to do that, which he believes is already done? Who will take the Counsel of the Physician that does not think himself sick? The man of God may spare his pains of persuading thee to Conversion, whilst thou art confident thou art converted already. Who will be at the pains of repentance that concludes he hath repented? Who will bear the labor and the pangs of the new birth that is confident he is already passed from death to life?

But Friend, let me a little reason with thee; Thou art confident it is well with thee, yet why wilt thou not yield to thus much at least, to put it to the question, am I not mistaken? Thou art worse than mad, if thou thinkest such a question may not be put. Dost thou know that thine heart is false and deceitful, and yet because it speaks good concerning thee, must it not be questioned whether it speak truth or no? Be so wise as to conclude I may be mistaken, and thus come to the trial whether thou art mistaken or not.

And if upon trial by the marks that are before thee, thou come to be undeceived, and see thyself wrapped up in that misery which hitherto thou wouldst not suspect, the next news I expect to hear from thee is, What must I do to be saved? O were it come to that once! Then thou hast an answer at hand in those Means thou wilt find prescribed thee: And because they are such as thou wilt hardly be persuaded to use, take in the Motives that follow, and these will help down the means. Consider both the one and the other, and if thou dost not find the means proper, and the motives weighty, I think I shall do thee no wrong if I tell thee, thou art still of a blind mind and an harder heart.

Friend, the matter which this little book comes to treat with thee about, is of highest importance; 'tis a matter of life and death. If thou sayest, The terms upon which Life is offered, are hard; consider, is it not harder to die? He is worthy to die who will lose his soul to save his labor. If thou couldst step down into the deep, and take a turn or two with those damned souls who are drench'd with fire and brimstone, and bound in everlasting chains of vengeance, & shouldest ask them, Now what do you think of the terms upon which life was offered? Now what think you of that repentance, of that obedience, of that holy circumspection, self denial, and the greatest severity which by the Gospel were imposed upon you? If you might once again have the same terms granted you for your redemption from this place of torment, would you yet say, Hard terms! Let me rather die this death forever, than live such a life! let me broil in this furnace, rather than escape with such difficulty! Shouldst thou ask them thus that have felt what 'tis to be damned, what answer dost thou think they would make? O friend, never again groan under the difficulties of conversion, till thou believe them to be worse than Hell. But I will not farther anticipate my worthy Author.

Nor is there much need I should commend either himself or his works; for the Author himself thou mayest at a small charge get acquaintance with him in that History of his life and death, which is extant; concerning which I shall only say,

Sic mihi contingat vivere sicque mori.

And for this work of his, what commendation I should give of it, would be needed no longer than till thou hast read it over. Thou wilt find such Wine in it as needs no Bush. This only I shall say, as far as my credit will go, it is exceedingly well worth thy most serious perusal. O mayest thou hear that voice, (such a voice from Heaven there is whether thou hear it or no) Tolle & lege, take up and read. Read, friend, and read over again. Read and understand, understand and pray, pray and consider, consider and consent unto him, who by the pen of his servant calls to thee from Heaven, why wilt thou die? turn and live. O suffer this word of instruction and exhortation, to open thy blind eyes, to turn thee from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto God, that thou mayest receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified. Et cum talis fueris memento mei. When it is thus with thee then pray for

The Friend and Servant of thy Soul, Richard Alleine.

Mr. JOSEPH ALLEINE'S CALL TO THE UNCONVERTED.

DEarly Beloved, and longed for, I gladly acknowledge myself a debtor to you all, and am concerned, as I would be found a good steward of the household of God, to give to everyone his portion. But the Physician is most solicitous for those Patients, whose case is most doubtful and hazardous, and the Fathers bowels are especially turned towards his dying child. The numbers of the unconverted souls among you, call for my most earnest compassions, and hasty diligence to pluck them out of the burning, Iud. 23. and therefore to these first I shall apply myself in these lines.

But whence shall I fetch my arguments, or how shall I choose my words? Lord, wherewith shall I woo them? whereby shall I win them? Oh that I could but tell! I would write unto them in tears, I would weep out every argument, I would empty my veins for ink, I would petition them on my knees; verily (were I able) I would, (O how thankfully I would!) if they would be prevailed with to repent and turn.

How long have I travelled in birth with you? how frequently have I made suit to you? how often would I have gathered you? how instant have I been with you? This is that I have prayed for, and studied for, for many years, that I might bring you to God: O that I might but do it! Will you yet be entreated? O what a happy man might you make me, if you would but hearken to me, and suffer me to carry you over to Jesus Christ?

But, Lord, how insufficient am I for this work! I have been many a year wooing for thee, but the damsel would not go with me. Lord, what a task hast thou set me to! Alas wherewith shall I pierce the scales of Leviathan, or make the heart to feel that is firm as a stone, hard as a piece of the nether millstone! Shall I go and lay my mouth to the grave, and look when the dead will obey me and come forth? shall I make an oration to the rocks? or declaim to the mountains, and think to move them with arguments? shall I give the blind to see? From the beginning of the world was it not heard, that a Man opened the eyes of the blind. But thou, O Lord, canst pierce the scales, and prick the heart of the sinner. I can but shoot at rovers, and draw the bow at a venture; do thou direct the arrow between the joints of the harness, and kill the sin, and save the soul of the sinner, that casts his eye into these labors.

But I must apply myself to you, to whom I am sent: yet I am at a great loss. Would to God I knew how to go to work with you! would I stick at the pains? God knoweth, you yourselves are my witnesses, how I have followed you in private, as well as in public, and have brought the Gospel to your doors; testifying to you the necessity of the new birth, and persuading you to look in time after a found and through change. Beloved, I have not acted a part among you, to serve my own advantage; our Gospel is not yea, and nay. Have not you heard the same truths from the Pulpit, by public labors, and by private letters, by personal instructions? Brethren, I am of the same mind as ever, that holiness is the best choice; that there is no entering into Heaven, but by the straight passages of the second birth: that without holiness you shall never see God, Heb. 12. 14. Ah my beloved! refresh my bowels in the Lord. If there be any consolation in Christ, any comfort of love, any fellowship of the spirit, any bowels and mercies, fulfil you my joy. Now give yourselves unto the Lord: 2 Cor. 8. 5. Now set your faces to seek him. Now set up the Lord Jesus in your hearts, and set him up in your houses. Now come in, and kiss the Son, Psal. 2. 12. and embrace the tenders of his mercy. Touch his Scepter, and live: why will you die? I beg not for myself; but fain I would have you happy: This is the prize I run for, and the white I aim at. My souls desire and prayer for you is, that you may be saved. Rom. 10. 1.

The famous Lycurgus, having instituted most strict and wholesome laws for his people, told them, he was necessitated to go a journey from them, and got them to bind themselves in an oath, that his laws should be observed, till his return. This done, he went into a voluntary banishment, and never returned more, that they might, by virtue of their oath, be engaged to the perpetual observing of his laws. Methinks I should be glad of the hard conditions, which he endured (though I love you tenderly) so I might but hereby engage you thoroughly to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Dearly beloved, would you rejoice the heart of your Ministers? Why then, embrace the counsels of the Lord by me: forgo your sins: set to prayer: up with the worship of God in your families: keep at a distance from the corruptions of the times. What greater joy to a Minister, than to hear of souls born unto Christ by him, and that his children walk in the truth? 2 I·h. 4.

Brethren, I beseech you suffer a friendly plainness and freedom with you in your deepest concernments. I am not playing the orator to make a learned speech to you, nor dressing my dish with eloquence, wherewith to please you. These lines are upon a weighty errand indeed, viz. to convince, and convert, and save you. I am not baiting my hook with Rhetoric, nor fishing for your applause, but for your souls. My work is not to please you, but to save you: nor is my business with your fancies, but your hearts. If I have not your hearts, I have nothing. If I were to please your ears, I would sing another song. If I were to preach myself, I would steer another course. I could then tell you a smoother tale; I would make you pillows, and speak you peace, for how can Ahab love this Micaiah, that always prophesies evil concerning him? 1 King. 22. 8. But how much better are the wounds of a friend, than the fair speeches of the harlot, who flattereth with her lips, till the dart strike through the liver, and hunteth for the precious life? Prov. 7. 21. 22, 23. & Prov. 6. 26. If I were to quiet a crying infant, I might sing him into a pleasant mood, or rock him asleep: but when the child is fallen into the fire, the parent takes another course; he will not now go to still him with a song or trifle. I know, if we speed not with you, you are lost: if we cannot get your consent, to arise and come away, you perish forever. No Conversion, and no Salvation. I must get your good will, or leave you miserable.

But here the difficulty of my work again recurs upon me. Lord choose my stones out of the rock. 1 Sam. 17. 40. v. 45. I come in the name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of the armies of Israel. I come forth like the stripling against Goliath, to wrestle not with flesh and blood, but with Principalities, and Powers, and the Rulers of the darkness of this world. Eph. 6. 12. This day let the Lord smite the Philistine, and spoil the strong man of his Armor, and give me to fetch off the captives out of his hand. Lord choose my words, choose my weapons for me, and when I put my hand into the bag, and take thence a stone, and sling it, do thou carry it unto the mark, and make it sink, not into the forehead, 1 Sam. 17. 49. but the heart of the unconverted sinner, and smite him to the ground, with Saul in his so happy fall. Act. 9. 4. Thou hast sent me, as Abraham did Eliezer, to take a wife unto my master thy son. Gen. 24. 4. But my discouraged soul is ready to fear, the woman will not be willing to follow me. O Lord God of my Master, I pray thee send me good speed this day, and show kindness unto my Master, and send thine Angel before me, and prosper my way, that I may take a wife unto thy son. Gen. 24. 12. That as the servant rested not, till he had brought Isaac and Rebekah together, so I may be succesful to bring Christ and the souls of my people together, before we part.

But I turn me unto you. Some of you do not know what I mean by conversion, and in vain shall I persuade you to that which you do not understand; and therefore for your sakes, I shall show what this Conversion is. Others do cherish secret hopes of mercy, though they continue as they be; and for them I must show the necessity of Conversion. Others are like to harden themselves with a vain conceit, that they are converted already; unto them I must show the marks of the Unconverted. Others, because they feel no harm, fear none, and so sleep upon the top of the mountain; to them I shall show the misery of the Unconverted. Others sit still, because they see not their way out; to them I shall show the means of Conversion. And finally for the quickening of all, I shall close with the motives of Conversion.

CHAP. I.

Showing the Negative, what Conversion is not, and correcting some mistakes about it.

Let the blind Samaritans worship they know not what; John. 4. 22. Let the heathen Athenians superscribe their Altar to the unknown God; Act. 17. 23. Let the guileful Papists commend the mother of destruction, Hos. 4. 6. for the mother of devotion: they that know man's constitution, and the nature of the reasonable souls operation, cannot but know, that the understanding having the Empire in the soul, he that will go rationally to work, must labor to let in the light here. Ignorantis non est consensus. And therefore that you may not mistake me, I shall show you what I mean by the conversion I persuade you to endeavor after.

It is storied that when Jupiter let down the golden chaplets from Heaven, all of them but one were stolen: Whereupon (left they should lose a relique of so great esteem) they made five others so like it, that if any were so wickedly minded, as to steal that also, they should not be able to discern which was it. And truly my beloved, the Devil hath made many counterfeits of this conversion, and cheats one with this, and another with that; and such a craft and artifice he hath, in this mystery of deceits, that (if it were possible) he would deceive the very Elect. Now that I may cure the damnable mistakes of some, who think they are converted, when they are not; as well as remove the troubles, and fears of others, that think they are not converted, when they are. I shall show you the nature of conversion, both negatively, or what it is not; and positively, what it is.

We will begin with the negative.

1. It is not the taking on us the profession of Christianity. Doubtless Christianity is more than a name. If we will hear Paul, it lies not in word, but in power. 1 Cor. 4. 20. If to cease to be Jews and Pagans, and to put on the Christian profession had been true conversion, (as this is all, that some would have to be understood by it) who better Christians than they of Sardis and Laodicea? These were all Christians by profession, and had a name to live, but because they had but a name, are condemned by Christ, and threatened to be spewed out, Rev. 3. 1, 16. Are there not many that name the name of the Lord Jesus, that yet depart not from iniquity? 2 Tim. 2. 19. and profess they know God, but in works deny him? Tit. 1. 16. And will God receive these for true converts, because turned to the Christian religion? What, converts from sin, when yet they do live in it! 'Tis a visible contradiction. Surely if the lamp of profession would have served the turn, the foolish virgins had never been shut out. Matt. 25. 3, 12. We find not only professors but preachers of Christ, and wonder-workers turned off, because •yil workers. Matth. 7. 22, 23.

2. It is not in the being washed in the laver of Regeneration•• or putting on the badge of Christ in baptism. Many take the press-money, and wear the Livery of Christ, that yet never stand to their colors, nor follow their leader. Ananias, and Sapphira, and Magus were baptized, as well as the rest. How fondly do many mistake here, deceiving, and being deceived! dreaming, that effectual grace is necessarily tied to the external administration of baptism, (which what is it, but to revive the popish tenent, of the Sacraments working grace, ex opere operato?) and so every infant should be regenerated, not only (Sacramento tenus) sacramentally, but really and properly. Hence men do fancy, that being regenerated already, when baptized, they need no further work.

But if this were so, then all that were baptized (in their infancy) must necessarily be saved: because the promise of pardon and salvation is made to conversion and regeneration. Act. 3. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4. Matth. 19. 28. Our Calling, Sanctification, (as to the beginnings of it) or conversion, (which are but the same thing, under different conceptions and expressions;) is but a middle link in the golden chain, fastened to election at the one end, and glorification at the other. Rom. 8. 30. 2 Thes. 2. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 2. The silver cord may not be broken, nor the connection between sanctification and salvation, between grace and glory, impiously violated. Matth. 5. 8. If we are indeed begotten again, it is to an inheritance incorruptible reserved in Heaven for us, and the divine power is engaged to keep us for it 1 Pet. 1. 5. And if the very regenerate may perish at last in their sins, we will no more say, That he that is born of God, his seed remaineth in him, and that he cannot sin, 1 John. 3. 9. i. e. unto death, nor that it is impossible to deceive the very elect. Matth. 24. 24.

And indeed were this true, then we need look no further to see our names written in Heaven, than only to search the register, and see whether we were baptized: then I would keep the certificate of my baptism, as my fairest evidence for Heaven, and should come by Assurance of my gracious state, with a wet finger: then men should do well to carry but a certificate of their baptism under the registers hand, when they died, (as the Philosopher would be buried with the Bishops bond in his hand, which he had given him for the receiving his alms in another world:) and upon sight of this, there were no doubt of their admission into Heaven

In short, if there be no more necessary to conversion or regeneration, than to be turned to the Christian Religion, or to be baptized in infancy, this will fly directly in the face of that scripture, Matth. 7. 14. as well as multitudes of others. For first, we will then no more say, Strait is the gate and narrow is the way: for if all that are baptized, and of the true religion are saved, the door is become heavenly wide, and we will henceforth say, wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth unto life: for if this be true, whole parishes, yea whole countries, and whole Kingdoms may go in a breast, and we will no more teach, that the righteous is scarcely saved, or that there is need of such a stir in taking the Kingdom of Heaven by violence and striving to enter in. Surely if the way be so easy, as many make it, that there is little more necessary, than to be regenerated in our baptism, and cry God mercy, and be absolved by the Minister at our end, 'tis more ado than needs, to put ourselves to such running, and seeking, and knocking, and fighting, and wrestling, as the word requires, as necessary to salvation. Secondly, if this be true, we will no more say, few there be that find it: yea we will rather say, few there be that miss it: we will no more say, that of the many that are called, but few are chosen, Matth. 22. 14. and that even of the professing Israel, but a remnant shall be saved, Rom. 11. 5. If this doctrine be true, we will not say anymore with the disciples, Who then shall be saved? but rather who then shall not be saved? Then if a man be called a brother (that is, a Christian) and be baptized, though he be a fornicator or a railer, or covetous, or a drunkard, yet he shall inherit the Kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 5. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.

But the Arminian will reply; such as these, though they did receive regenerating grace in Baptism, are since fallen away, and must be renewed again, or else they cannot be saved.

I answer, 1. That there is an infallible connection between regeneration and salvation, as we have already shown, and it to be farther evidencing, but that 'tis against designed brevity. 2. Then men must be again born again, which carries a great deal of absurdity in its very face. And why may not men be twice born in nature, as well as in grace? Why not as great an absurdity to be twice regenerated as to be twice generated? But 3. and above all, This grants however the thing I contend for, that what ever men do, or pretend to receive in baptism, if they be found afterwards to be grossly ignorant or profane, or formal, without the power of godliness, they must be born again, or else be shut out of the Kingdom of God. So then, they must have more to plead for themselves, than their baptismal regeneration.

Well, in this you see all are agreed, that be it more or less that is received in baptism, if (when men come to years) they are evidently unsanctified, they must be renewed again by a through and powerful change, or else they cannot escape the damnation of hell. Friends and Brethren be not deceived, God is not mocked; Gal. 6. 7. whether it be your baptism or what ever else that you pretend, I tell you from the living God, that if any of you be a prayerless person, Job 15. 14. or unclean, or malicious, or covetous, or riotous, or a scoffer., or a lover of evil company, Prov. 13. 20. in a word, if you are not holy, strict, and self denying Christians, Heb. 12. 14. Matt. 16. 24. you cannot be saved, except you be transformed by a further work upon you, and renewed again by repentance.

Thus I have shown, that it is not enough to evidence a man to be regenerate, that he hath been baptized; effectual grace not necessarily accompanying baptism, as some have vainly asserted. But I must answer one objection before I pass.

Obj. The Sacraments do certainly attain their ends, where man doth not ponere obicem, or lay some obstruction, which Infants do not.

Sol. I answer it is not the end of Baptism to regenerate. 1. Because then there would be no reason, why it should be confined only to the seed of believers: for both the law of God, and the nature of Charity, require us to use the means of conversion for all, as far as we can have opportunity. Were this true, no such charity as to catch the children of Turks and Heathens, and baptize them, and dispatch them to heaven out of hand, like the bloody wretches, that made the poor Protestants (to save their lives) to swear they would come to mass, and that they would never depart from it, and then put them forth with to death, saying, they would hang them while in a good mind. 2. Because it presupposeth regeneration, and therefore cannot be intended to confer it. In all the express instances in Scripture, we find that baptism doth suppose their repenting, believing, receiving the Holy Ghost. Act. 8 37. Act. 2. 38. Act. 10. 47. Mark 16. 16. And to imagine, that baptism was instituted for an end of which not one of the first subjects was capable (for they were all adult persons and supposed to have faith and repentance according as they professed, and their children were not baptized till after them, in their right,) were no little absurdity. Were this doctrine true, baptism would make disciples, but we find it doth bespeak them such before hand. Matth. 28. 19. 3. Because Baptism, being but a Seal of the Govenant, cannot convey the benefits, but according to the tenor of the covenant, to which it is set. Now the Covenant is conditional, therefore the Seal conveys conditionally. The Covenant requires faith and repentance, as the condition of the grand benefits, pardon, and life. Act. 16. 31. Act. 3. 19. And what the Covenant doth not convey but upon these conditions, the Seal cannot. So that baptism doth presuppose faith and repentance in the subject, without which it neither doth, nor can convey the saving benefits: otherwise the Seal should convey contrary to the tenor of the Covenant to which it is affixed.

3. It lies not in a moral righteousness. This exceeds not the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, and therefore cannot bring us to the Kingdom of God. Matth. 5. 20. Paul, while unconverted, was touching the righteousness which is in the Law blameless, Phil. 3. 6. None could say black is thine eye. The selfjusticiary could say, I am no Extor•ioner, adulterer, unjust, &c. Luke 18. 11. Thou must have something more than all this to show, or else (however thou mayest justify thyself) God will condemn thee. I condemn not morality, but warn you not to rest here. Piety includes morality, as Christianity doth humanity, and grace reason. But we must not divide the tables.

4. It consists not in an external conformity to the rules of Piety. 'Tis too manifest, men may have a form of godliness, without the power. 2 Tim. 3. 5. Men may pray long, Matth. 23. 14. and fast often, Luke 18. 12. and hear gladly, Matth. 13. 20. and be very forward in the service of God, though costly, and expensive, Isaiah. 1. 11. and yet be strangers to Conversion. They must have more to plead for themselves, than that they keep their Church, and give alms, and make use of prayer, to prove themselves sound converts. No outward service but an hypocrite may do it; even to the giving all his goods to the poor, and his members to the fire. 1 Cor. 13. 3.

5. It lies not in the chaining up of corruption, by education, human laws, or the force of incumbent affliction. 'Tis too common and easy, to mistake education for grace: but if this were enough, who a better man than Iehoash? while Jehoiada his uncle lived, he was very forward in God's service, and calls upon him to repair the house of the Lord, 2 Kings 12. 2, 7. But here was nothing more than good education all this while: for when his good Tutor was taken out of the way, he appears to have been but a wolf chained up, and falls off to Idolatry.

6. In short, it consists not in illumination, or convictions, in a superficial change, or partial reformation. An Apostate may be a man enlightened, Heb. 6. 4. and a Felix tremble under convictions, Act. 24. 25. and a Herod amend many things, Mark 6. 20. 'Tis one thing to have fin alarmed only by convictions, and another to have it captivated and crucified by converting grace. Many, because they have been troubled in conscience for their sins, think well of their case; miserably mistaking conviction for conversion. With these Cain might have passed for a Convert, who run up and down the world, like a man distracted under the rage of a guilty conscience, till with building and business he had worn it away. Gen. 4. 13, 14. Others think, that because they have given off their riotous courses, and are broken off from evil company, or some particular lust, and reduced to sobriety and civility, they are now no other than real Converts; forgetting that there is a vast difference between being sanctified, and civilized; and that many seek to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Luke 13. 24. and are not far from it, Mark 12. 34. and arrive to the almost of Christianity, Act. 26. 28. and yet fall short at last. While conscience holds the whip over them, many will pray, hear, read and forbear their delightful sins: but no sooner is this Lyon asleep, but they are at their vomit again. Who more religious than the Jews, when God's hand was upon them? Psal. 78. 34, 35. but no sooner was the affliction over, but they forgot God, and shown their religion to be but a fit, v. 36, 37. Thou mayest have disgorged a troublesome sin, that will not sit in thy stomach, and have escaped the gross pollutions of the world, and yet not have changed thy swinish nature, all the while. 2 Pet. 2. 20, 22.

You may cast the lead, out of the rude mass, into the more comely proportion of a plant, and then into the shape of a beast, and thence into the form and features of a man: but all the while, it is but lead still. So a man may pass through divers transmutations, from ignorance to knowledge, from profaneness to civility, thence to a form of religion, and all this while he is but carnal and unregenerate, while his nature remains unchanged.

Application. Hear then, O sinners hear; as you would live, so come and hear, Isaiah 55. 3. Why would you so willfully deceive yourselves, or build your hopes upon the sand? I know he shall find hard work of it, that goes to pluck away your hopes. It cannot but be ungrateful to you, and truly it is not pleasing to me. I set about it, as a Surgeon, when to cut off a putrid member from his well-beloved friend; which of force he must do, but with an aking heart, a pitiful eye, and trembling hand. But understand me, Brethren, I am only taking down the ruinous house, (which will otherwise speedily fall of itself, and hurry you in the rubbish,) that I may build fair, and strong, and firm forever. The hope of the wicked shall perish, if God be true of his word, Prov. 11. 7. And wert not thou better, O sinner, to let the word convince thee now in time, and let go thy false and self-deluding hopes, than to have death too late to open thine eyes, and find thyself in hell, before thou art aware? I should be a false and faithless Shepherd, if I should not tell you, that you who have built your hopes upon no better grounds, than these forementioned, are yet in your sins. Let your consciences speak; What is it, that you have to plead for yourselves? Is it that you wear Christ's livery? That you bear his name? That you are of the visible Church? That you have knowledge in the points of Religion, are civilized, perform religious duties, are just in your dealings, have been troubled in conscience for your sins? I tell you from the Lord, these pleas will never be accepted at God's Bar. All this, though good in itself, will not prove you converted, and so will not suffice to your salvation. Oh look about you, and bethink yourselves of turning speedily and soundly. Set to praying, and to reading, and to studying your own hearts, rest not, till God hath made through work with you: for you must be other men, or else you are lost men.

But if these be short of Conversion, what shall I say of the profane sinner? It may be, he will scarce cast his eyes, or lend his ears to this discourse: but if there be any such reading, or within hearing, he must know from the Lord that made him, that he is far from the Kingdom of God. May a man be civilized and not converted, where then shall the Drunkard, and Glutton appear? May a man keep company with the wise Virgins, and yet be shut out? shall not a companion of fools much more be destroyed? Prov. 13. 20. May a man be true and just in his dealings, and yet not be justified of God? What then will become of thee, O wretched man, whose conscience tells thee thou art false in thy trade, and false of thy word, and makest thine advantage by a lying tongue. If men may be enlightened, and brought to the performance of holy duties, and yet go down to perdition, for resting in them, and sitting down on this side of Conversion: what will become of you, O miserable families, that live as without God in the world? And of you, O wretchless sinners, with whom God is scarce in all your thoughts; that are so ignorant, that you cannot, or so careless, that you will not pray? O repent and be converted; break off your sins by righteousness: away to Christ for pardoning and renewing grace: give up yourselves to him, to walk with him in holiness, or else you shall never see God. Oh that you would take the warnings of God • In his name I once more admonish you. Turn you at my reproof. Prov. 1. 23. Forsake the foolish and live. Prov. 9. 6. Be sober, righteous, godly. Tit. 2. 12. Wash your hands you sinners, purify your hearts, ye double minded. James 4. 8. Cease to do evil, learn to do well. Isaiah 1. 16, 17. But if you will on, you must die. Ezek. 33. 11.

CHAP. II.

Showing positively what Conversion is.

I May not leave you with your eyes half opened, as he that saw men as trees walking. Mar. 8. 24. The word is profitable for doctrine, as well as reproof, 2 Tim. 3. 16. And therefore having thus far conducted you by the shelves and rocks of so many dangerous mistakes, I would guide you at length into the harbor of truth.

Conversion then (in short) lies, in the thorough change both of the heart, and life. I shall briefly describe it in its nature and causes.

1. The Author of it is the spirit of God; and therefore it is called, the sanctification of the spirit; 2 Thes. 2. 13. and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Tit. 3. 5. Yet not excluding the other persons in the Trinity: For the Apostle teacheth us, to bless the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for that he hath begotten us again: 1 Pet. 1. 3. and Christ is said, to give repentance to Israel; Acts 5. 31. and is called the everlasting Father; Isaiah 9. 6. and we his seed, and the children which God hath given him Heb. 2. 13. Isaiah 53. 10. Oh blessed birth! Seven Cities contended for the birth of Homer: but the whole Trinity fathers the new creature. Yet is this work principally ascribed to the Holy Ghost, and so we are said to be born of the Spirit. John 3. 8.

So then, it is a work above man's power. We are born, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man; but of God. John. 1. 13. Never think thou canst convert thyself. If ever thou wouldst be savingly converted, thou must despair of doing it in thine own strength. Ier. 31. 18. It is a resurrection from the dead, Rev. 20. 5. Eph. 2. 1. a new creation, Gal. 6. 15. Eph. 2. 10. a work of absolute omnipotency: Eph. 1. 19. Are not these out of the reach of human power? If thou hast no more, than thou hadst by thy first birth, a good nature, a meek and chaste temper, &c. thou art a very stranger to true Conversion. This is a supernatural work.

2. The moving cause is Internal, or External.

The Internal mover is only free grace. Not by works of righteousness which we have done; but of his own mercy he saved us—by the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Tit. 3. 5. Of his own will begat he us: James 1. We are chosen and called unto Sanctification, not for it. Eph. 1. 4.

God finds nothing in man to turn his heart, but to turn his stomach: enough to provoke his loathing, nothing to provoke his love. Look back upon thyself, O Christian. Take up thy verminous rags: Look upon thyself in thy blood. Ez. 16. 6. O reflect upon thy swinish nature, thy filthy swill, thy once beloved mire. 2 Pet. 2. Canst thou think without loathing of thy trow and draugh? Open thy Sepulcher, Mat. 23. 27. Art not thou almost struck dead with the hellish damp? Behold thy putrid soul, thy loathsome members. O stench unsufferable, if thou dost but sense thine own putrefaction! Psal. 14. 3. Behold thy ghastly visage, thy crawling lusts, thy slime and corruption. Do not thine own cloths abhor thee? John 9. 31. How then should holiness and purity love thee. Be astonied O Heavens at this, be moved O earth. Ier. 2. 12. Who but must needs cry, Grace! Grace! Zech. 4. 7. Hear and blush you children of the most High. O how unthankful generation! That free grace is no more in your mouths; in your thoughts; no more adored admired, commended by such as you. One would think you should be nothing but praising and admiring God, where ever you are. How can you make a shift to forget such grace, or to pass it over with a slight and seldom mention? What but free grace should move God to love you, unless enmity could do it, or deformity could do it; unless vomit, or rottenness could do it? How affectionately doth Peter lift up his hands? Blessed be God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who of his Abundant mercy hath begotten us again: 1 Pet. 1. 3. How feelingly doth Paul magnify the free mercy of God in it? God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith be loved us; bath quickened us together with Christ; by Grace are ye saved. Eph. 2. 4, 5.

The External mover is the merit and intercession of the blessed Jesus. He hath obtained gifts for the rebellious; Psal. 68. 18. and through him it is, that God worketh in us, what is well pleasing in his sight: Heb. 13. 21. Through him are all spiritual blessings bestowed upon us in Heavenly things. Eph. 1. 3. He intercedeth for the Elect, that believe not. John 17. 20. Every Convert is the fruit of his travel. Isaiah 53. 11. Oh never was infant born into the world with that difficulty, that Christ endured for us. How emphatically he groaneth in his travel! All the pains that he suffered on his Cross, they were our birth-pains, Act. 2. 24. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the pulls and throws that Christ endured for us. He is made Sanctification to us. 1 Cor. 1. 30. He sanctified himself (that is set apart himself as a Sacrifice) that we might be sanctified. John. 17. 19. We are sanctified through the offering of his body once for all. Heb. 10. 10.

'Tis nothing then without his own bowels, but the merit and intercession of Christ, that prevails with God to bestow upon us converting grace. If thou art a new creature, thou knowest to whom thou owest it, to Christ's pangs and prayers. Hence the natural affection of a believer to Christ. The foal doth not more naturally run after the dam, nor the suckling to the dugs, than a believer to Jesus Christ. And whither else shouldst thou go? If any in the World can show that for thy heart, that Christ can, let them carry it. Doth Satan put in, doth the world court thee, doth sin sue for thy heart? Why, were these crucified for thee? 1 Cor. 1. 13. O Christian, love and serve thy Lord while thou hast a being. Do not even the Publicans love those that love them? And show kindness to those that are kind to them? Matth. 5. 46, 47.

3. The Instrument is either Personal, or Real.

The Personal is the Ministry. I have begotten you to Christ through the Gospel; 1 Cor. 4. 15. Christ's ministers are they, that are sent to open men's eyes, and to turn them to God. Act. 26. 18.

O unthankful world, little do you know what you are doing, while you are persecuting the messengers of the Lord. These are they whose business is (under Christ) to save you. Whom have you reproached, and blasphemed? Against whom have you exalted your voice, and lifted up your eyes on high? Isaiah 37. 23. These are the servants of the most high God that show unto you the way of salvation, Act. 16. 17. and do you thus require them, O foolish and unwise? Deut. 32. 6. Oh sons of ingratitude, against whom do you sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isaiah 57. 3. These are the instruments, that God useth to convert and save you: and do you spit in the faces of your Physicians, and throw your • Pilots over board? Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

The Instrument Real is the word. We were begotten by the word of truth. This is it that enlightens the eyes, that converteth the soul, Psal. 19. 7, 8. that maketh wise to salvation: 2 Tim. 3. 15. This is the incorruptible seed, by which we are born again: 1. Pet. 1. 23. If we are washed, 'tis by the word: Eph. 5. 26. if we are sanctified, 'tis through the truth: John. 17. 17. This generates faith, and regenerates us. Rom. 10. 17. James 1. 18.

O ye Saints, how should you love the word? for by this you have been converted. O ye sinners, how should you ply the word? for by this you must be converted No other ordinary means, but this. You that have felt its renewing power, make much of it while you live, be forever thankful for it. Tie it about your necks, write it upon your hands, lay it in your bosoms. Prov. 6. 21, 22. When you go let it lead you, when you sleep let it keep you, when you wake let it talk with you. Say with holy•David, I will never forget thy precepts, for by them hast thou quickened me. Psal. 119. 93. You that are unconverted, read the word with diligence; flock to it, where powerfully preached; fill the porches, as the multitude of the impotent, blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the waters. John. 5. 3. Pray for the coming of the spirit in the word. Come off thy knees to the sermon: and come to thy knees from the sermon. The seed doth not prosper because not watered by prayers and tears, nor covered by meditation.

4. The final cause is man's salvation, and God's glory. We are chosen through sanctification to Salvation: 2 Thess. 2. 13. Called that we might be glorified: Rom. 8. 30. but especially, that God might be glorified, Isaiah. 60. 21. that we should show forth his praises, 1. Pet. 2. 9. and be fruitful in good works. Col. 1. 10.

O Christian, do not forget the end of thy calling, let thy light shine, Mat. 5. 16. let thy lamp burn, let thy fruits be good, and many, and in season. Psal. 1. 3. Let all thy designs fall in with God's, that he may be magnified in thee. Phil. 1. 20. Why should God repent that he hath made thee a Christian, as in the time of the old world, that he made them men? Gen. 6. 6. Why shouldst thou be an eye-sore in his Orchard, Luke 7. by thy unfruitfulness? or a son that causeth shame, as it were a grief to thy father, and a bitterness to her that bare thee? Prov. 17. 25. Prov. 10. 5. O let the womb bless thee that bare thee. Prov. 17. 21. He that begets a fool, doth it to his sorrow; and the father of a fool hath no joy.

5. The subject is the elect sinner, and that in all his parts and powers, members and mind. Whom God predestinates, them only he calls. Rom. 8. 30. None are drawn to Christ by their calling, nor come to him by believing, but his sheep, those whom the father hath given him. 1 John. 6. 37, 44. Effectual calling runs parallel with eternal election. 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Thou beginnest at the wrong end, if thou disputest first about thine Election. Prove thy conversion, and then never doubt of thine election. Or canst thou not yet prove it? Set upon a present and thorough turning. Whatever God's purposes be (which are secret) I am sure his promises are plain. How desperately do rebels argue! If I am elected, I shall be saved, do what I will: if not, I shall be damned, do what I can. Perverse sinner, wilt thou begin where thou shouldst end? Is not the word before thee? what saith it? Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out. Acts. 3. 19. If you mortify the deeds of the body, you shall live. Rom. 8. 13. Believe and be saved. Acts 16. 31. What can be plainer? Do not stand still, disputing about thine election, but set to repenting and believing. Cry to God for converting Grace. Revealed things belong to thee; in these busy thyself. 'Tis just (as one well,) that they that will not feed on the plain food of the word, should be choked with the bones. Whatever God's purposes be, I am sure his promises be true. Whatever the decrees of Heaven be, I am sure, that if I repent and believe, I shall be saved; and that if I repent not, I shall be damn'd. Is not here plain ground for thee: and wilt thou yet run upon the rocks?

More particularly, this change of conversion passes throughout in the whole subject. A carnal person may have some shreds of good morality, a little near the list, but he is never good throughout the whole cloth, the whole body of Holiness and Christianity: feel him a little further near the ridge, and you shall see him to be but a deceitful piece. Conversion is not a repairing of the old building, but it takes all down, and erects a new structure: it is not the putting in a patch or sowing on a list of holiness; but with the true convert, holiness is woven into all his powers, principles, and practice. The sincere Christian is quite a new fabric, from the foundation to the top stone all fire-new. He is a new man, Eph. 4. 24. a new creature, All things are become new. 2. Cor. 5. 17. Conversion is a deep work, a heart work; Act. 2. 37. and 16. 14. it turns all upside down, and makes a man begin a new world. It goes throughout with men, throughout the Mind, throughout the Members, throughout the motions of the whole life.

1 Thoroughout the Mind. It makes an universal change within. First it turns the balance of the judgment, so that God and his glory do weigh down all carnal and worldly interests. Act. 20. 24. Phil. 1. 20. Psal. 73. 25. It opens the eye of the mind, and makes the scales of its native ignorance to fall off, and turns men from darkness to light. Act. 26. 18. Eph. 5. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 9. The man that before saw no danger in his condition, now concludes himself lost, and forever undone, Act. 2. 37. except renewed by the power of Grace. He that formerly thought there was little hurt in sin, now comes to see it to be the chief of evils; he sees the unreasonableness, unrighteousness, the deformity and the filthiness that is in sin, so that he is affrighted with it, loathes it, dreads it, flies it, and even abhors himself for it. Rom. 7. 15. Job 42. 6. Ezek. 36. 31. He that could see little sin in himself, and could find no matter for confession (as it was said of that learned Ignoramus Bellarmino (who it seems while he knew so much abroad, was a miserable stranger to himself,) that when he was to be confessed by the Priest, could not remember anything to confess, but was fain to run back to the sins of his youth) I say he that could not find matter for confession, unless it were some few gross and staring evils, now sin reviveth with him, Rom. 7. 9. he sees the rottenness of his heart, and desperate and deep pollution of his whole nature: he cries, unclean, unclean, Lev. 13. 45. Lord purge me with Hyssop, wash me thoroughly, create in me a clean heart. Psal. 51. 2, 7, 10. He sees himself altogether become filthy, Psal. 14. 3. corrupt both root and tree. Mat. 7. 17, 18. he writes unclean upon all his parts, and powers, and performances, Isaiah 63. 6. Rom. 7. 18. He discovers the nasty corners that he was never aware of, and sees the blasphemy, and theft, and murder, and adultery that is in his heart, which before he was ignorant of. Heretofore he saw no form nor comeliness in Christ, no beauty that he should desire him; but now he finds the hid treasure, and will sell all to buy this field. Christ is the pearl he seeks, sin the puddle he loathes.

Now according to this new light, the man is of another mind, another judgment, than before he was. Now God is all with him: he hath none in heaven nor earth like him. Psal. 73. 25. He prefers him truly before all the world: his favor is his life: the light of his countenance is more than Corn and Wine and Oil, (the good that he formerly inquired after, and set his heart upon. Psal. 4. 6, 7.) Now let all the world be set on one side, and God alone on the other; let the Harlot put on her paint, and gallantry, and present herself to the soul (as when Satan would have tempted our Savior with her) in all the glory of her kingdoms, yet the Soul will not fall down and worship her; but will prefer a naked, yea a crucified, persecuted Christ before her. Phil. 3. 8. 1 Cor. 2. 2. Not but that a Hypocrite may come to yield a general assent to this, that God is the chief good: yea the wiser Heathens (some few of them) have at last stumbled upon this: but there is a difference between the absolute, and comparative judgment of the understanding. No Hypocrite comes so far, as to look upon God, as the most desirable and suitable good to him, and thereupon to acquiesce in him. This is the converts voice; The Lord is my portion, saith my soul. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth, that I desire besides thee. God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever. Psal. 73. 25, 26. Lam. 3. 24.

Secondly, It turns the Byas of the Will, both as to means and end. (1.) The intention of the will is altered; Ezek. 36. 26. Ier. 31. 33. Isaiah 26. 8, 9. Now the man hath new ends and designs. Now he intends God above all, and desires and designs nothing in all the world so much, as that Christ may be magnified in him. Phil. 1. 20. He accounts himself more happy in this, than in all that the earth could yield, that he may be serviceable to Christ, and bring him glory in his generation. This is the mark he aims at, that the name of Jesus may be great in the world, and that all the sheaves of his brethren, may bow to this sheaf.

Reader, dost thou view this and never ask thyself, whether it be thus with thee? Pause a while, and breath upon this great concernment.

2. The election also is changed, so that he chooses another way. Psal. 119. 30. He pitches upon God as his blessedness, and upon Christ as the principal, and holiness as the subordinate means, to bring him to God. John 14. 6. Rom. 2. 7. He chooses Jesus for his Lord. Col. 2. 6. He is not merely forced into Christ by the storm, nor doth he take Christ for bare necessity, as the man begged from the Gallows, when he takes the wife, rather than the halter: but he comes off freely in the choice, This match is not made in a fright, as with the terrified conscience, or dying sinner, that will seemingly do anything for Christ, but doth only take Christ, rather than hell: but he deliberately resolves, that Christ is his best choice, Phil. 1. 23. and would rather have him to choose, than all the good of this world, might he enjoy it while he would. Again he takes holiness for his path. He doth not out of mere necessity submit to it: but he likes and loves it. I have chosen the way of thy Precepts. Psal. 119. 173. He takes God's testimonies not as his bondage, but his heritage, yea his heritage forever: v. 111. he counts them not his burden, but his bliss; not his cords, but his cordials. 1 John 5. 3. Psal. 119. 14, 16, 47. He doth not only bear, but take up Christ's yoke. He takes not holiness, as the stomach doth the loathed potion, (which it will down with rather than die) but as the hungry doth his beloved food. No time passes so sweetly with him (when he is himself) as that he spends in the exercises of holiness; these are both his aliment, and his element, the desire of his eyes, and the joy of his heart. Job 23. 12. Psal. 119. 82, 131, 162, 174. Psal. 63. 5.

Put thy conscience to it as thou goest, whether thou art the man. O happy man, if this be thy case! But see thou be thorough and impartial in the search.

Thirdly, it turns the Bent of the affections. 2 Cor. 7. 11. These run all in a new channel. The Jordan is now driven back, and the water runs upward against its natural course.

Christ is his Hope. 1 Tim. 1. 1. this is his prize: Phil. 3. 8. here his eye is, here his heart is. He is contented to cast all over board (as the merchant in the storm, ready to perish) so he may but keep this Jewel.

The thirst of his Desires is, not after gold, but grace: Phil. 3. 13. He hungers after it, he seeks it as silver, he digs for it as for hid treasure: he had rather be gracious, than be great: he had rather be the holiest man on earth, than the most learned, the most famous, most prosperous. While carnal, he said: Oh! if I were but in great esteem, and rolled in wealth, and swim'd in pleasure, if my debts were paid, and I and mine provided for, then I were a happy man: but now the tune is changed. O, saith the Convert, if I had but my corruptions subdued; if I had such measures of grace, such fellowship with God, though I were poor and despised, I should not care, I should account myself a blessed man. Reader, is this the language of thy soul?

His Joys are changed. He rejoiceth in the way of God's testimonies, as much as in all riches: Psal 119. 14. He delights in the law of the Lord, wherein once he had little savor. He hath no such joy, as in the thoughts of Christ, the fruition of his company, the prosperity of his people.

His Cares are quite altered. He was once set for the world, and any scraps of by-time, nothing (too often) was enough for his soul. Now he gives over caring for the asses, and sets his heart on the Kingdom. Now all the cry is, What shall I do to be saved? Act. 16. 30. His great solicitude is, how to secure his soul. Oh! how he would bless you, if you could but put him out of doubt of this!

His Fears are not so much of suffering; but of sinning. Heb. 11. 25, 27. Once he was afraid of nothing so much as the loss of his estate, or esteem, the displeasure of friends, the frowns of the great: Nothing sounded so terrible to him, as pain, or poverty, or disgrace. Now these are little to him, in comparison of God's dishonor, or displeasure. How warily doth he walk, left he should tread on a snare? He feareth always: he looks before, and behind; he hath his eye upon his heart, and is often casting over his shoulder, lest he should be overtaken with sin: Psal. 39. 1. Prov. 28. 14. Eccles. 2. 14. It kills his heart to think of losing God's favor; this he dreads as his only undoing. Psal. 51. 11, 12. Psal. 119. 8. No thought in the world doth pinch him and pain him so much, as to think of parting with Christ.

His Love runs a new course. My Love was crucified (said holy Ignatius) that is, my Christ. This is my beloved, saith the spouse. Cant. 5. 16. How doth Augustine often pour his loves upon Christ.

He can find no words sweet enough. Let me see thee, O Light of mine eyes. Come, O thou joy of my spirit; let me behold thee, O the gladness of my heart. Let me love thee, O life of my soul. Appear unto me, O my great delight, my sweet comfort, O my God, my life, and the whole glory of my soul. Let me find thee, O desire of my heart: let me hold thee, O love of my soul. Let me embrace thee, O Heavenly Bridegroom. Let me possess thee, O eternal blessedness, &c.

His sorrows have now a new vent. 2 Cor. 7. 9, 10. The view of his sins, the sight of a Christ crucified, that would scarce stir him before, now how much do they affect his heart?

His Hatred boils, his Anger burns against sin. Psal. 119. 104. He hath no patience with himself: he calls himself fool, and beast, and thinks any name too good for himself, when his indignation is stirred against sin. Psal. 73. 22. Prov. 30. 2. He could once swill in it, with too much pleasure; now he loathes the thought of returning to it, as much as of licking up the filthiest vomit.

Commune then with thine own heart, and attend the common and general current of thine affections, whether it be towards God in Christ, above all other concernments. Indeed, sudden and strong commotions of the affections and sensitive part, are oft times found in hypocrites; especially where the natural constitution leads thereunto: and contrariwise, the sanctified themselves are many times without sensible stirrings of the affections, where the temper is more slow, dry, and dull. The great enquiry is, whether the judgment and will be standingly determined for god, above all other good, real, or apparent: and if the affections do sincerely follow their choice, and conduct, though it be not so strongly and sensibly, as is to be desired, there is no doubt, but the change is saving.

2. Thorowout the Members. These that were before the instruments of sin, are now become the holy utensils of Christ's living Temple. Rom. 6. 19. 1 Cor. 3. 16. He that before made, as it were, a baud, or a barrel of his body, now possesseth his vessel in sanctification, and honor, in temperance, chastity, and sobriety, as dedicated to the Lord. Thes. 4. 4. Gal. 5. 22, 23. 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20.

The eye that was once a wandering eye, a wanton eye, a haughty, or a covetous eye, is now employed, as Mary, in weeping over her sins Luke 7. 38. In beholding God in his works, Psal. 8. 3. in reading his word, Act 8. 30. in looking up and down for objects of mercy, and opportunities for his service.

The ear that was once open to satans call, and that (like a vitiated palate.) did relish nothing so much as filthy, or at least forthy talk, and the fools laughter, is now bored to the door of Christ house, and open to his discipline. It saith, speak Lord for thy servant heareth: It cries with him, veniat verbum Domini, and waits for his words as the rain, and relishes them more than the appointed food, Job. 23. 12. than the very honey and honey-comb. Psal. 19. 10.

The head, that was the shop of worldly designs, is now filled with other matters, and set on the study of God's will, Psal. 1. 2. Psal. 119. 97. and the man beats his head, not so much abouts his gain, but about his duty. The thoughts and cares that now fill his head are principally, how he may please God, and fly sin.

His heart, that was sty of filthy, lusts, is now become an Altar of incense, where the fire of divine love is ever kept in, and whence the daily sacrifice of prayer and praises, and sweet incense of holy desires, ejaculations, and anhelations are continually ascending. Psal. 108. 1. Psal. 119. 20. Psal. 139. 17, 18.

The mouth is become a well of life, his tongue as choice silver, and his lips feed many: Now the salt of grace hath seasoned his speech, and eat out the corruption, Col. 4. 6. and cleansed the man from his filthy communications, flattery, boasting, railing, lying, swearing, backbiting, that once came like the flashes proceeding from the hell that was in the heart. James 3. 6, 7. The throat, that was once an open sepulcher, Rom. 3. 13. now sends forth the sweet breath of prayer, and holy discourse, and the man speaks in another tongue, in the language of Canaan, and is never so well, as when talking of God, and Christ, and the matters of another world. His mouth bringeth forth wisdom, his tongue is become the silver Trumpet of his makers praise, his glory and the best member that he hath.

Now here you shall have the hypocrite halting He speaks it may be like an Angel, but he hath a covetous eye, or the gain of unrighteousness in his hand. Or the hand is white, but his heart is full of rottenness, Mat. 13. 27. full of unmortified cares, a very oven of lust, the shop of pride, the seat of malice. It may be with Nebuchadnezzar's image, he hath a golden head, a great deal of knowledge: but he hath feet of clay, his affections are worldly, he minds earthly things, and his way and walk are sensual, and carnal: you may trace him in his secret haunts, and his footsteps will be found in some by-paths of sin. The work is not throughout with him.

3. Thorrowout the motions, or the life, and practice. The new man takes a new course. Eph. 2. 2, 3. His Conversation is in Heaven. Phi. 3. 20. No sooner doth Christ call by effectual grace, but he straight way becomes a follower of him. Matth. 4. 20. When God hath given the new heart and writ his law in his mind, he forth with walks in his statutes and keeps his judgments, Ezek. 36. 26, 27.

Though sin may dwell (God knows a wearisome and• unwelcome guest) in him, yet it hath no more dominion over him. Rom. 6. 14, 7. He hath his fruit unto holiness; Rom. 6. 22. and though he makes many a blot, yet the law and life of Jesus is that he eyes, as his copy, Psal. 119. 30. Heb. 12. 2. and hath an unseigned respect to all God's commandments. Psa. 119. 6. He makes conscience even of little sins & little duties. Psal. 119. 113. His very infirmities which he cannot help, though he would, are his souls burden, and are like the dusts in a man's eye, which though but little, yet are not a little troublesome. [O man, dost thou read this, and never turn in upon thy soul, by self-examination?] The sincere Convert is not one man at Church and another at home: he is not a Saint on his knees, and a cheat in his shop: he will not tithe Mint and Cumin, and neglect mercy and judgment, and the weighty matters of the Law: he doth not pretend piety and neglect morality, Matth. 23. 14. but he turns from All his sins and keeps All God's Statutes, Ezek. 18. 21. though not perfectly (except in desire and endeavor) yet sincerely, not allowing himself in the breach of any. Rom. 7. 15. Now he delights in the word, and sets himself to prayer, and opens his hand, (if table) and draws out his soul to the hungry. Rom. 7. 22. Psal. 109. 4. Isaiah 58. 10. He breaks off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by showing mercy to the poor; Dan. 4. 27. and hath a good conscience willing in All things to live honestly, Heb. 13. 18. and to keep without offense towards God and men.

Here again you shall find the unsoundness of many professors, that take themselves for good Christians. They are partial in the law, Mal. 2. 9. and take up with the cheap and easy duties of religion; but they go not thorough with the work. They are as a cake not turned, half roasted, and half raw. It may be you shall have them exact in their words, punctual in their dealings, but then they do not exercise themselves unto godliness; and for examining themselves, and governing their hearts, to this they are strangers. You shall have them duly at the Church, but follow them to their families and there you shall see little but the world minded: or if they have a road of family duties, follow them to their closets, and there you shall find their souls are little looked after. It may be they seem otherwise religious, but bridle not their tongues, and so all their religion is in vain: James 1. 26. It may be they come up to closet and family prayer; but follow them to their shops, and there you shall find them in a trade of lying, or some covert and cleanly way of deceit. Thus the hypocrite goes not throughout in the course of his obedience.

And thus much for the subject of Conversion.

6. The terms are either from which, or to which.

1. The terms from which we turn in this motion of Conversion, are sin, Satan, the world, and our own righteousness.

First, Sin. When a man is converted, he is forever out with sin: yea with All sin, Psal. 119. 128. but most of all with his own sins, and especially with his bosom sin: Psal. 18. 23. Sin is now the But of his indignation; 2 Cor. 7. 11. he thirsts to bath his hands in the blood of his sins. His sins set abroad his sorrows. It is sin that pierces his and wounds him: he feels it like a thorn in his side; like a prick in his eyes: he groans and struggles under it, and not formally, but feelingly cries out, O wretched man! He is not impatient of any burden, so much as of his sin. Psal. 40. 12. If God should give his choice, he would choose any affliction, so he might be rid of sin. He feels it like the cutting gravel in his shoes, pricking, and paining him as he goes.

Before Conversion he had light thoughts of sin: He cherished it in his bosom, as Uriah his lamb: he nourished it up, and it grew up together with him; it did eat as it were of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was to him as a daughter: but when God opens his eyes by Conversion, he throws it away with abhorrence; Isaiah 30. 22. as a man would a loathsome toad, which in the dark he had hugged fast in his bosom, and thought it had been some pretty and harmless bird. When a man is savingly changed, he is not only deeply convinced of the danger, but defilement of sin: and O how earnest is he with God to be purified? He loathes himself for his sins. Ezek 36. 31. He runs to Christ, and casts himself into the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness. Zech. 13. 1. If he fall, what a stir is there to get all clean again? He flies to the word, and washes, and rubs, and wrinses, laboring to cleanse himself from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit: he abhors his once beloved sin, Psal. 18. 23. as a cleanly nature doth the trow, and mire, wherein he sees the swine delight.

The sound Convert is heartily engaged against sin. He wrestles with it, the wars against it. He is too often foiled, but he never yields the cause, nor lays down the weapons; but he will up, and to it again, while he hath breath in his body. He will never give quiet possession; he will make no peace; he will give no quarter; he falls upon it, and fires upon it, and is still disquieting of it with continual alarms. He can forgive his other enemies; he can pity them, and pray for them: Act. 7. 60. but here he is implacable, here he is set upon revenge: he hunteth, as it were, for the precious life; his eye shall not pity, his hand shall not spare, though it be a right hand, or a right eye: Be it a gainful sin, most delightful to his nature, a support to his esteem with carnal friends; yet he will rather throw his gain down the kennel, see his credit fall, or the flower of pleasure wither in his hand, than he will allow himself in any known way of sin. Luke 19. 8. He will grant no indulgence, he will give no toleration; but he draws upon sin where ever he meets it, and frowns upon it with this unwelcome salute, Have I found thee, O mine enemy!

Reader, hath conscience been at work, while thou hast been looking over these lines? Hast thou pondered these things in thine heart? Hast thou searched the book within, to see if these things be so? If not, read it again, and make thy conscience to speak whether or no it be thus with thee.

Hast thou crucified thy flesh with its affections and lusts, and not only confessed, but forsaken thy sins, all sin in thy servant desires, and the ordinary practice of every deliberate and willful sin in thy life? If not, thou are yet unconverted. Doth not conscience fly in thy face, as thou readeest, and tell thee that thou livest in a way of lying for thy advantage, that thou usest deceit in thy calling, that there is some way of secret wantonness that thou livest in? Why then, do not deceive thyself, thou art in the gall of bitterness, and bond of iniquity.

Doth not thine unbridled tongue, thy brutish intemperance, thy wicked company, thy neglect of prayer, of hearing and reading the word now witness against thee, and say, We are thy works, and we will follow thee? Or if I have not hit the right, doth not the bird within tell thee, there is such or such a way, that thou knowest to be evil, that yet for some carnal respect thou dost tolerate thyself in, and art willing to spare? If this be the case, thou art to this day unregenerate, and must be changed, or condemned.

Secondly, Satan. Conversion binds the strong man, spoils his armor, casts out his goods, and turns men from the power of Satan unto God. Act. 26. 18. Before, the Devil could no sooner hold up his finger to the sinner, to call him to his wicked company, sinful games, filthy delights, but presently he follows, like an Ox to the slaughter, and a fool to the correction of the stocks, as the bird that hasteth to the prey, and knoweth not that it is for his life. No sooner could Satan bid him lie, but presently he had it upon the top of his tongue: Act. 5. 3. no sooner could Satan offer a wanton object, but he was stung with lust. The Devil could do more with him than God could. If the Devil say, away with these family duties, be sure they shall be rarely enough performed in his house. If the Devil say, away with this strictness, this preciseness, he will keep far enough from it. If he tells him, there's no need of these closet duties, he shall go from day today and scarce perform them. But now he is converted, he serves another master, and takes quite another course: 1 Pet 4. 4. he goes and comes at Christ's beck. Col. 3. 24. Satan may sometimes catch his foot in his trap; but he will no longer be a willing captive. He watches against the snares and baits of Satan, and studies to be acquainted with his devices. He is very suspicious of his plots, and is very jealous, in what comes athwart him, left Satan should have some design upon him. He wrestles against principalities and powers. Eph. 6. He entertains the messenger of Satan as men do the messenger of death. He keeps his eye upon his enemy, 1. Pet. 5. 8. and watches in his duties, left Satan should put in his foot.

Thirdly, the World. Before sound faith, a man is overcome of the world. Either he bows down to Mammon, or idolizes his reputation, or is a lover of pleasure, more than a lover of God. 2. Tim. 3. 4. Here's the root of man's misery by the fall; he is turned aside to the creature, instead of God, and gives that esteem, confidence, affection to the creature, that is due to him alone. Rom. 1. 25. Mat. 10. 37. Prov. 18. 11. Ier. 17. 5.

O miserable man! What a deformed monster hath sin made thee. God made thee little lower than the Angels, sin little better than the devils: John 6. 70. and 8. 44. a monster, that hath his head and heart, where his feet should be; and his feet kicking against Heaven, and everything out of place. The world, that was formed to serve thee, is come to rule thee; and the deceitful harlot hath bewitched thee with her enchantments, and made thee bow down and server her.

But converting grace sets all in order again, and puts God in the Throne, and the world at his footstool; Psal. 73. 25. Christ in the heart, and the world under feet: Eph. 3. 17. Rev. 12. 1. So Paul, I am crucified to the world, and the world to me. Gal. 6. 14. Before this change all the cry was, who will show us any (worldly) good: but now he sings quite another tune, Lord lift up the light of thy countenance upon me, and take the corn and wine whoso will: Psal. 4. 6, 7. Before, his hearts delight and content was in the world: then the song was, Soul take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: but now all this is withered, and there is no comeliness that he should desire it, and he tunes up with the sweet Psalmist of Israel, The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance; the lines are fallen to me in a fair place, and I have a goodly heritage. He blesses himself, and boasts himself in God: Psal. 34. 2. Lam. 3. 24. nothing else can give him content. He hath written vanity and vexation upon all his worldly enjoyments, Ec. 1. 2. and loss and dung upon all human excellencies. Phil. 3. 7, 8. He hath life and immortality now in chase; Rom. 2. 7. he trades for grace and glory, and hath the Crown incorruptible in pursuit. 1 Cor. 9. 25. His heart is set in him to seek the Lord: 1 Chron 22. 19. and 2. Chron, 15. 15. he first seeks the kingdom of Heaven and the righteousness thereof, and religion is no longer a matter by the by with him, but the main of his care, Matth. 6. 33. Psal. 27. 4. Now the gaudy idol is become Nehushtan. 2 Kings 18. 4. and he ups and treads upon it, as Diogenes trampling on Plato's hangings and saying, Caleo Platonis fastum. Before, the world had the swaying interest with him: he would do more for gain than, godliness, 1 Tim. 6. 5. more to please his friend, or his flesh, than to please the God that made him, and God must stand by till the world were first served; but now all must stand by: he hates father and mother and life and all in comparison of Christ. Luke 14. 26.

Well then, pause a little, and look within. Doth not this nearly concern thee? Thou pretendest for Christ; but doth not the world sway thee? Dost thou not take more real delight and content in the world, than in him? Dost not thou find thyself better at ease when the world goes to thy mind, and thou art encompassed with carnal delights, than when retired to prayer and meditation in thy closet, or attending upon God's word and worship? No surer evidence of an unconverted state, than to have the things of the world uppermost in our aims, love, and estimations, 1 John 2. 15. James 4. 4.

With the sound Convert Christ hath the supremacy. How dear is this name to him? How precious is its favor? Cant. 1. 3. Psal. 45. 8. The name of Jesus is engraven upon his heart, Gal. 4. 19. and lies as a bundle of myrrh between his breasts • Cant. 1. 13, 14. Honor is but air, and laughter is but madness, and Mammon is fallen like Dagon before the ark, with hands and head broken off on the threshold, when once Christ is savingly revealed. Here is the pearl of great price to the true Convert; here is his treasure, here is his hope. Matth. 13. 44, 45. This is his glory: My beloved is mine, and I am his. Gal. 6. 14. Cant. 2. 16. Oh 'tis sweeter to him, to be able to say, Christ is mine, than if he could say, the Kingdom is mine, the Indies are mine.

Fourthly, our own righteousness. Before Conversion, man seeks to cover himself with his own fig-leaves, Phil. 3. 6, 7. and to lick himself whole with his own duties. Mic. 6. 6, 7. He is apt to trust in himself, Luke 16. 15. and 18. 9. and set up his own righteousness, and to reckon his counters for Gold, and not submit to the righteousness of God; Rom. 10. 3. But Conversion changes his mind; now he casts away his filthy rags, and counts his own righteousness, but a menstruous cloth: he casts it off, as a man would the verminous tatters of a nasty beggar: Isaiah 64. 6. Now he is brought to poverty of spirit, Matth. 5. 3. complains of and condemns himself, Rom. 7. and all his inventory is, poor, and miserable, and wretched, and blind, and naked. Rev. 3. 17. He sees a world of iniquity in his holy things, & calls his once idolized righteousness, but flesh, and loss, and dogs meat, and would not for a thousand worlds be found in himself; Phil. 3. 4, 7, 8 • 9. His finger is ever upon his sores, Psal. 51. 3. his sins, his wants. Now he begins to set a high price upon Christ's righteousness: he sees the need of a Christ in every duty, to justify his person, and justify his performances; he cannot live without him, he cannot pray without him; Christ must go with him, or else he cannot come into the presence of God; he leans upon the hand of Christ and so he bows himself in the house of his God. He sets himself down for a lost undone man without him. His life is hid in Christ, as the life of man in the heart. He is fixed in Christ, as the roots of the tree spread in the earth for stability and nutriment. Before, the news of a Christ was a stale and sapless thing; but now, how sweet is a Christ? Augustine could not relish his before so much admired Cicero, because he could not find the name of Christ. How pathetically cries he? Dulcissime, amantis. benignis. claris. &c. quando te videbo? quando satiabor de pulchritudine tuâ? Medit. c. 37. O most sweet, most loving, most kind, most dear, most precious, most desired, most lovely, most fair, &c. all in a breath, when he speaks of and to his Christ. In a word, the voice of the Convert is, with the Martyr, None but Christ.

2. The terms to which are either Ultimate, or Subordinate and mediate.

The Ultimate is God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, whom the true Convert takes, as his All-sufficient and eternal blessedness. A man is never truly sanctified, till his very heart be in truth set upon God, above all things, as his portion and chief good. These are the natural breathings of a believers heart, Thou art my portion O Lord: Psal. 119. 57. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord: Psal. 34. 2. My expectation is from him: he only is my rock, and my salvation, he is my defense: in God is my salvation, and my glory, the rock of my strength, and my refuge is in God. Psal. 62. 1, 2, 5, 6, • Psal. 18. 1, 2.

Would you put it to an issue, whether you be converted or not, now then let thy soul and all that is within thee attend.

Hast thou taken God for thy happiness? Where doth the content of thy heart lie? Whence doth thy choicest comfort come in? Come then, and with Abraham lift up thine eyes Eastward, and Westward, and Northward, and Southward, and cast about thee what it is, that thou wouldst have in Heaven or earth to make thee happy. If God should give thee thy choice, as he did to Solomon, or should say to thee, as Ahasuerus to Esther, What is thy petition and what is thy request, and it shall we granted thee; Esther 5. 3. what wouldst thou ask? Go into the gardens of pleasure, and gather all the fragrant flowers from thence: would these content thee? Go to the treasures of Mammon, suppose thou mightest lade thyself, while thou wouldst from hence: go to the towers, to the trophies of honor; what thinkest thou of being a man of renown, of having a name like the name of the great men of the earth? Would any of this, all this suffice thee, and make thee count thyself a happy man? If so, then certainly thou art carnal and unconverted. If not, go further; wade into the divine excellencies, the store of his mercies, the hiding of his power, the deeps unfathomable of his All-sufficiency. Doth this suit thee best, and please thee most? Dost thou say, 'Tis good to be here? Matth. 17. 4. Here I will pitch; here I will live and die? Wilt thou let all the world go, rather than this? Then 'tis well between God and thee: Happy art thou, O man, happy art thou, that ever thou wast born. If a God can make thee happy, thou must needs be happy: for thou hast avouched the Lord to be thy God. Deut. 26. 17. Dost thou say to Christ, as he to us. Thy father shall be my father, and thy God my God? John 20. 17. Here is the turning point. An unsound professor never takes up his rest in God; but converting grace does the work, and so cures the fatal misery of the fall, by turning the heart from its idols, to the living God. 1 Thes. 1. 9. Now says the soul, Lord, whither should I go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. John 6. 68. Here he centers, here he settles, Oh 'tis as the entrance of Heaven to him, to see his interest in God. When he discovers this, he saith, Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. Psal. 116. 7. and it is even ready to breath out Simeons song, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, Luke 2. 29. and saith, with Jacob, I when his old heart revived at the welcome tidings, It is enough. Gen. 45. 28. When he sees he hath a God in Covenant to go to; this is all his salvation and all his desire. 2. Sam. 23. 5.

Man, is this thy case? Hast thou experienced this? Why, then blessed art thou of the Lord. God hath been at work with thee, he hath laid hold on thin heart by the power of converting grace, or else thou couldst never have done this.

The Mediate term of Conversion is either Principal, or less Principal.

The Principal is Christ, the only mediator between God and man. 1 Tim. 2. 5. His work is to bring us to God; 1 Pet. 3. 18. he is the way to the Father, John 14. 6. the only plank on which we may escape, the only door by which we may enter. John 10. 9. Conversion brings over the soul to Christ, to accept of him, Col. 2. 6. as the only means of life, as the only way, the only name given under Heaven: Act. 4. 12. He looks not for salvation in any other, but him; nor in any other with him; but throws himself on Christ alone, as one that should cast himself with spread arms upon the Sea.

Here (saith the convinced sinner) here I will venture, and if I perish, I perish: if I die, I will die here. But Lord suffer me not to perish under the pitiful eyes of thy mercy. Intreat me not to leave thee, nor to turn away from following after thee. Ruth 1. 16. Here I will throw myself. If thou kick me, if thou kill me, Job 13. 15. I will not go from thy door.

Thus the poor soul doth venture upon Christ, and resolvedly adhere to him. Before Conversion the man made light of Christ, minded the •arm, friends, merchandise, more than Christ: Matth. 22. 5. now Christ is to him as his necessary food, his daily bread, the life of his heart, the staff of his life. Phil. 3. 9. His great design is, that Christ may be magnified in him. Phil. 1. 20. His heart once said, as they to the spouse, What is thy beloved, more than another? Cant. 5. 9. He found more sweetness in his merry company, wicked games, earthly delights, than in Christ. He took religion for a fancy, and the talk of great enjoyments, for an idle dream. But now, to him to live is Christ. He sets light by all that he accounted precious, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. Phil. 3. 8.

All of Christ is accepted by the sincere Convert. He loves not only the wages, but work of Christ: Rom. 7. 22. not only the benefits, but the burden of Christ. He is willing not only to tread out the corn, but to draw under the yoke: he takes up the commands of Christ, yea and the Cross of Christ. Mat. 11. Mat. 16. 24.

The unsound closes by the halves with Christ: he is all for the salvation of Christ, but he is not for sanctification: he is for the privileges, but appreciates not the person of Christ. He divides the offices, and benefits of Christ. This is an error in the foundation. Whoso loveth life, let him beware here. 'Tis an undoing mistake, of which you have been often warned, and yet none more common. Jesus is a sweet name, but men love not the Lord Jesus in sincerity. Eph. 6. 24. They will not have him, as God offers, To be a Prince and a Savior. Act. 5. 31. They divide what God hath joined, the King, and the Priest. Yea they will not accept the salvation of Christ, as he intends it; they divide here. Every man's vote is for salvation from suffering; but they desire not to be saved from sinning. They would have their lives saved; but withal they would have their lusts saved. Yea many divide here again; they would be content to have some of their sins destroyed; but they cannot leave the lap of Delilah, or divorce the beloved Herodias. They cannot be cruel to the right eye, or right hand: the Lord must pardon them in this thing. 2 Kings 5. 18. Oh be infinitely tender here: your souls lie upon it. The sound Convert takes a whole Christ, and takes him for all intents and purposes, without exceptions, without limitations, without reserves. He is willing to have Christ, upon his terms, upon any terms. He is willing of the dominion of Christ, as well as deliverance by Christ, he saith with Paul, Lord what wilt thou have me to do? Act. 9. 6. Any thing Lord: He sends the blank for Christ to set down his own conditions. Act. 2. 37. Act. 16. 30.

The less Principal is the Laws, Ordinances, and ways of Christ. The heart that was once set against these, and could not endure the strictness of these bonds, the severity of these ways, now falls in love with them, and chooses them as its rule and guide forever. Psal. 119. 111, 112.

Four things (I observe) God doth work in every sound Convert, with reference to the Laws and ways of Christ, by which you may come to know your estates, if you will be faithful to your own souls; and therefore keep your eyes upon your hearts, as you go along.

1. The Judgment is brought to approve of them, and subscribe to them, as most righteous, and most reasonable. Psal. 119. 128, 137, 138. The mind is brought to like the ways of God, and the corrupt prejudices that were once against them, as unreasonable, and intolerable, are now removed. The understanding assents to them all, as holy, just, and good. Rom. 7. 12. How is David taken up with the excellencies of God's Laws? How doth he expatiate in their praises, both from their inherent qualities, and admirable effects? Psal 19. 8, 9, 10, &c.

There is a twofold judgment of the understanding, Judicium absolutum, & comparatum. The absolute judgment is, when a man thinks such a course best in the general, but not for him, or not under the present circumstances he is in, pro hîc & nunc. Now a godly man's judgment is for the ways of God, and that not only the absolute, but comparative judgment: he thinks them not only best in general, but best for him. He looks upon the rules of religion, not only as tolerable, but desirable, yea more desirable than gold, fine gold, yea much fine gold. Psal 19. 10. His judgment is settledly determined, that it is best to be holy, that 'tis best to be strict: that it is in itself the most eligible course; and that 'tis for him the wisest, and most rational, and desirable choice. Hear the godly man's Judgment. I know O Lord that thy judgments are right. I love thy Commandment above gold, yea above fine gold. I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right, and I hate every false way. Psal. 119, 127, 128. Mark, he did approve of all that God required, and disallowed all that he forbade. Righteous art thou O Lord, and upright are thy judgments. Thy testimonies that thou hast commanded are righteous, and very faithful. Thy word is true from the beginning; and everyone of thy righteous judgments endureth forever, Psal. 119. 86, 160, 162, 163. See how readily and fully he subscribes; he declares his assent, and consent to it, and all and everything therein contained.

2. The desire of the heart is to know the whole mind of Christ. Psal. 119. 125, 144, 169. Psal. 25. 4, 5. He would not have one sin undiscovered, nor be ignorant of one duty required. 'Tis the natural and earnest breathing of a sanctified heart, Lord if there be any way of wickedness in me, do thou discover it. What I know not, teach thou me, and if I have done iniquity, I will do it no more. The unsound is willingly ignorant, 2, Pet. 3. 5. loves not to come to the light. John 3. 20. He is willing to keep such or such a sin, and therefore is loath to know it to be a sin, and will not let in the light at that window. Now the gracious heart is willing to know the whole latitude and compass of his makers Law. Psal. 119. 18, 19, 27, 33, 64, 66, 68, 73, 108, 124. He receives with all acceptation the word that convinceth him of any duty that he knew not, or minded not before; or discovereth any sin that lay hid before. Psal. 19. 11.

3. The free and resolved choice of the will is determined for the ways of Christ, before all the pleasures of sin, and prosperity of the world. Psal. 119. 127, 103, 162. His consent is not extorted by some extremity of anguish, nor is it only a sudden and hasty resolve: but he is deliberately purposed, and comes off freely in the choice. Psal. 17. 3. Psal. 119. 30. True, the flesh will rebel, yet the prevailing part of his will is for Christ's laws and government; so that he takes them not up as his toil or burden, but his bliss. 1 John 5. 3. Psal. 119, 60, 72. When the unsanctified goes in Christ's ways, as in Givens and fetters, he doth them naturally, Psal. 40. 8. Ier. 31. 33. and counts Christ's law, his liberty. Psal. 119. 32, 45. James 1. 25. He is willing in the beauties of holiness, Psal. 110. 3. and hath this inseparable mark, That he had rather (if he might have his choice) live a strict and holy life, than the most prosperous and flourishing life in the world. 1 Sam. 10. 26. There went with Saul a band of men whose hearts God had touched. When God touches the hearts of his chosen, they presently follow Christ, Mat. 4. 22. and (though drawn) do freely run after him, Cant. 1. 4. and willingly offer themselves to the service of the Lord, 2 Chron. 17. 16. seeking him with their whole desire. 2 Chro. 15. 15. Fear hath its use, but this is not the main spring of motion with a sanctified heart. Christ keeps not his subjects in by force, but is King of a willing people. They are (through his grace) freely resolved for his service, and do it out of choice, not as slaves, but as the son or spouse, from a spring of love, and a loyal mind. In a word, the laws of Christ are the Converts love, Psal. 119. 159, 163, 167. desire, v. 5, 20, 40. delight, v. 77, 92, 103, 111, 143. and continual study, v. 99, 97. Psal. 1. 2.

4. The bent of his course is directed to keep God's Statutes. Psal. 119. 4, 8, 167, 168. 'Tis the daily care of his life to walk with God. He seeks great things: he hath noble designs, though he fall too short. He aims at nothing less than perfection; he desires it, he reaches after it, he would not rest in any pitch of grace, till he were quite rid of sin, and had perfected holiness. Phil. 3. 11, 12, 13, 14.

Here the hypocrites rottenness may be discovered. He desires holiness (as one well) only as a bridge to Heaven, and enquires earnestly, what is the least that will serve his turn; and if he can get but so much as may just bring him to Heaven, this is all he cares for. But the sound Convert desires holiness for holiness sake, Psal. 119. 97. Mat. 5. 6. and not only for Heaven sake. He would not be satisfied with so much as might save him from hell; but desires the highest pitch. Yet desires are not enough. What is thy way and thy course? Is the drift and scope of thy life altered? Is holiness thy trade, and religion thy business? Rom. 8. 1. Mat. 25. 16. Phil. 3. 20. If not, thou art short of sound Conversion.

Application. And is this, that we have described, the Conversion that is of absolute necessity of salvation? then be informed, 1. That strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto life. 2. That there be but few that find it. 3. That there is need of a Divine power savingly to convert a sinner to Jesus Christ.

Again, the exhorted, O man, that readest, to turn in upon thine own self. What saith conscience? Doth it not begin to bite? Doth it not twitch thee, as thou goest? Is this thy judgment, and this thy choice, and this thy way, that we have described? If so, then it's well. But doth not thy heart condemn thee? and tell thee, there is such a sin thou livest in against thy conscience? Doth it not tell thee, there is such and such a secret way of wickedness, that thou makest no bones of? Such or such a duty, that thou makest no conscience of?

Doth not conscience carry thee to thy closet, and tell thee how seldom prayer, and reading is performed there? Doth it not carry thee to thy family, and show thee the charge of God, and the souls of thy children and servants, that be neglected there? Doth not conscience lead thee to thy shop, thy trade, and tell thee of some mystery of iniquity there? Doth it not carry thee to the Ale-shop, or to the Sack-shop, and round thee in thine ear for the loose company thou keepest here, the precious time thou mispendest here, for the talents of God which thou throwest down this sink, for thy gaming, and thy swilling? &c. Doth it not carry thee into the secret chamber, and read thee a curtain lecture?

O conscience do thy duty. In the name of the living God I command thee, discharge thine office. Lay hold upon this sinner. Fall upon him, arrest him, apprehend him, undeceive him. What, wilt thou flatter and sooth him, while he lives in his sins? Awake O conscience: What mean'st thou, O sleeper? What, hast thou never a reproof in thy mouth? What, shall this soul die in his careless neglect of God and eternity, and thou altogether hold thy peace? What, shall he go no still in his trespasses, and yet have peace? O rouse up thyself, and do thy work. Now let the preacher in the bosom speak. Cry aloud and spare not, lift up thy voice like a Trumpet; let not the blood of this soul be required at thy hands.

CHAP. III.

Of the Necessity of Conversion.

IT may be you are ready to say, what meaneth this stir? And are apt to wonder, why I follow you with such earnestness, still ringing one lesson in your ears, That you should repent and be converted. Act. 3. 19. But I must say unto you, as Ruth to Naomi, Intreat me not to leave you, nor to turn aside from following after you. Ruth. 1. 16. Were it a matter of indifferency, I would never keep so much ado. Might you be saved as you be, I would gladly let you alone. But would you not have me solicitous for you, when I see you ready to perish? As the Lord liveth, before whom I am, I have not the least hopes to see ever a one of your faces in Heaven, except you be converted. I utterly despair of your salvation, except you will be prevailed with to turn thoroughly, and give up yourselves to God in holiness and newness of life. Hath God said, Except you be born again, you cannot see the Kingdom of God, John 3. 3. and yet do you wonder, why your Ministers do so painfully travel in birth with you? Think it not strange, that I am earnest with you to follow after holiness, and long to see the image of God upon you. Never did any, nor shall any enter into Heaven, by any other way but this. The Conversion described is not an high pitch of some taller Christians, but every soul, that is saved, passes this universal change.

It was a passage of the noble Roman, when he was hasting with corn to the City in the famine, and the mariners were loath to set sail in the foul weather, Necessarium, est navigare, non est necessarium vivere. Our voyage is of more necessity than our lives. What is it that thou dost account necessary? Is thy bread necessary? Is thy breath necessary? Then thy Conversion is much more necessary. Indeed, this is the Vnum Necessarium, the one thing necessary. Thine estate is not necessary: thou mayest sell all for the pearl of great price, and yet be a gainer by the purchase. Mat. 13. 45. Thy life is not necessary: thou mayest part with it for Christ, to infinite advantage. Thine esteem is not necessary: thou mayest be reproached for the name of Christ, and yet happy, yea much more happy in reproach, than in repute. 1 Pet. 4. 14. Mat. 5. 10, 11. But thy Conversion is necessary, thy damnation lies upon it, and is it not needful in so important a case to look about? Upon this one point depends thy making, or marring to all eternity.

But I shall more particularly show the necessity of Conversion in five things: for without this

I. Thy being is in vain. Is it not pity thou shouldst be good for nothing, an unprofitable burden of the earth, a wart, or wen in the body of the universe? Thus thou art, while unconverted, for thou canst not answer the end of thy being. Is it not for the divine pleasure thou art and wert created? Rev. 4. 11. Did not he make thee for himself? Prov. 16. 4. Art thou a man, and hast thou reason? Why then bethink thyself, why, and whence thy being is. Behold God's workmanship in thy body, and ask thyself; To what end did God rear this fabric? Consider the noble faculties of thy Heaven-born soul: to what end did God bestow these excellencies? To no other, than that thou shouldst please thyself, and gratify thy senses? Did God send men like the swallows, into the world, only to gather a few sticks, and dirt, and build their nests, and breed up their young, and then away? The very heathens could see further than this. Art thou so fearfully and wonderfully made, Psal. 139. 14. and dost thou not yet think with thyself, surely it was for some noble and raised end?

O man, set thy reason a little in the chair. Is it not pity such a goodly fabric should be raised in vain? Ver•lie thou art in vain, except thou art for God. Better thou had•• no being, than not be for him. Wouldst thou serve thy end? Thou must repent, and be converted. Without this thou art to No purpose, yea to Bad purpose.

First, to No purpose. Man unconverted, is like a choice instrument, that hath every string broke, or out of tune. The spirit of the living God must repair, and tune it, by the grace of regeneration, and sweetly move it by the power of actuating grace, or else thy prayers will be but howlings, and all thy services will make no music in the ears of the most holy. Ephes. 2. 10. Phil. 2. 13. Hos. 7. 14. Isaiah. 1. 15. All thy powers and faculties are so corrupt in thy natural state, that except thou be purged from dead works, thou canst not serve the living God. Heb 9. 14. Tit. 1. 15.

An unsanctified man, cannot work the work of God. 1. He hath no skill in it. He is altogether as unskillful in the work, as in the word of righteousness. Heb 5. 13. There are great mysteries as well in the practice, as principles of godliness: now the unregenerate knoweth not the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven. Mat. 13. 11. 1 Tim. 3. 16. You may as well expect him that never learned the Alphabet to read, or look for goodly music on the lute, from one that never set his hand to an instrument, as that a natural man should do the Lord any pleasing service. He must be first taught of God, John 6. 45. taught to pray, Luke 11. 1. taught to profit, Isaiah 48. 17. taught to go, H•s. 11. 3. or else he will be utterly at a loss.] 2. He hath no strength for it. How weak is his heart? Ezek. 16. 30. He is presently tired: the Sabbath what a weariness is it? Mal. 1. 13. He is without strength, Rom. 5. 6. yea stark dead in sin Eph. 2. 5.] 3. He hath no mind to it: he desires not the knowledge of God's ways. Job 21. 14. He doth not know them, and he doth not care to know them. Psal. 82. 5. He knows not, neither will he understand.] 4. He hath neither due instruments, not materials for it. A man may as well hew the marble without tools, or limn without colors, or instruments, or build without materials, as perform any acceptable service without the graces of the spirit, which are both the materials, and instruments in the work. Alms-giving is not a service of God, but of vain-glory, unless dealt forth by the hand of divine love. What is the prayer of the lips, without grace in the heart, but the carcase without the life? What are all our confessions, unless they be the exercises of godly sorrow and unfeigned repentance? What our petitions, unless animated all along with holy desires, and faith in the divine attributes and promises? What our praises and thanksgiving, unless from the love of God, and a holy gratitude, and sense of God's mercies in the heart? So that a man may as well expect the trees should speak, or look for Logic from the bruits, or motion from the dead, as for any service holy and acceptable to God, from the unconverted. When the tree is evil, how can the fruit be good? Mat. 7. 18.

Secondly, to bad purpose. The unconverted soul is a very cage of unclean birds, Rev. 18. 2. a sepulcher full of corruption and rottenness, Mat. 23. 27. a loathsome carcase full of crawling worms, and sending forth a hellish and most noisome favor in the nostrils of God. Psal. 14. 3. O dreadful case! Dost thou not yet see a change to be needful? Would it not have grieved one, to have seen the golden consecrated vessels of God's temple turned into quaffing bowls for drunkenness, and polluted with the idols service? Dan. 5. 2, 3. Was it such an abomination to the Jews, when Antiochus set up the picture of a swine at the entrance of the Temple? How much more abominable them would it have been, to have had the very Temple itself turned into a stable, or a sty, and to have the holy of holies served like the house of Baal, to have the image of God taken down, and be turned into a draught-house? 2 Kings 10. 27. This is the very case of the unregenerate: all thy members are turned into instruments of unrighteousness, Rom. 6. 19. servants of Satan; and thy inmost powers, into the receptacles of all uncleanness. Eph. 2. 2. Tit. 2. 15. You may see the goodly guests within, by what comes out. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false, witness, blasphemies, &c. This black guard discovers what a hell there is within.

Oh abuse unsufferable! to see a heaven-born soul abased to the filthiest drudgery: to see the glory of God's creation, the chief of the ways of God, the Lord of the universe, lapping with the prodigal at the trow, or licking up with greediness the most loathsome vomit. Was it such a lamentation to see those that did feed delicately, sit desolate in the streets? and the precious sons of Zion comparable to fine gold, to be esteemed as earthen pitchers? and those that were clothed in scarlet to embrace dunghills? Lim. 4. 2, 5. And is it not fearful much more, to see the only thing that hath immortality in this lower world, and carried the stamp of God, to become as a vessel wherein there is no pleasure? (which is but the modest expression of the vessel, men put to the most sordid use.) Oh indignity intolerable! Better thou wert dashed on a thousand pieces, than continue to be abused to so filthy a service.

II. Not only man, but the whole visible creation is in vain, without this. Beloved, God hath made all the visible creatures in Heaven and earth for the service of man, Ier. 22. 28. and man only is the spokesman for all the rest. Man is in the universe, like the tongue in the body, (which speaks for all the members.) The other creatures cannot praise their maker, but by dumb signs and hints to man, that he should speak for them. Man is, as it were, the High Priest of God's creation, to offer the Sacrifice of praise, for all his fellow creatures. Psal. 147, and 148, and 150. The Lord God expecteth a tribute of praise from all his works; Psal. 103. 22. now all the rest do bring in their tribute to man, and pay it in by his hand. So then, if man be false, and faithless, and selfish, God is wronged of all, and shall have no active glory from his works.

Oh dreadful thought to think of! That God should build such a world as this, and lay out such infinite power, and wisdom, and goodness thereupon, and all in vain; and man should be guilty at last, of robbing, and spoiling him, of the glory of all. Oh think of this while thou art unconverted, all the offices of the creatures to thee are in vain: thy meat nourishes thee in vain, the Sun holds forth his light to thee in vain, the stars, that serve thee in their courses by their most powerful, though hidden influences, Judges 5. 20. Hos. 2. 21, 22. do it in vain; thy cloths warm thee in vain; thy beast carries thee in vain: in a word, the labor unwearied, and continual travel of the whole creation (as to thee) is in vain. The service of all the creatures, that drudge for thee, and yield forth their strength unto thee (that therewith thou shouldst serve their maker) is all but lost labor. Hence the whole creation groaneth under the abuse of the unsanctified world, Rom. 8. 22. that pervert them to the service of their lusts, quite contrary to the very end of their being.

III. Without this thy Religion is in vain. James 1. 26. All thy religious performances will be but lost; for they can neither please God, Rom. 8. 8. nor save thy soul, 1 Cor. 13. 2, 3. which are the very ends of religion. Be thy services never so specious, yet God hath no pleasure in them. Isaiah 1. 14. Mal. 1. 10. Is not that man's case dreadful, whose Sacrifices are as murder, and whose prayers are a breath of abomination? Isaiah 66. 3. Prov. 28. 9. Many under convictions think, they will set upon mending, and that a few prayers and alms will salve all again: but alas, while your hearts remain unsanctified, your duties will not pass. How punctual was Jehu? and yet all was rejected, because his heart was not upright. 2 Kings 10. with Hos. 1. 4. How blameless was Paul? and yet being unconverted, all was but loss. Phil. 3. 6, 7. Men think they do much in attending God's service, and are ready to twit him with it, Isaiah 58. 3. Mat 7. 22. and set him down so much their debtor, whenas (their persons being unsanctified) their duties cannot be accepted.

O soul, do not think when thy sins pursue thee, a little praying and reforming thy course will pacify God: thou must begin with thine heart: if that be not renewed, thou canst no more please God, than one that having unspeakably offended thee, should bring thee his vomit in a dish to pacify thee, or having fallen into the mire, should think with his loathed embraces to reconcile thee.

It is a great misery to labor in the fire. The Poets could not invent a worser hell for Sisyphus, than to be getting the barrel still up the hill, and then that it should presently fall down again and renew his labor. God threatens it, as the greatest of temporal judgments, that they should build and not inhabit, plant and not gather, and their labors shall be eat up by strangers. Deut. 28. 30, 38, 39, 41. Is it so great a misery to lose our common labors, to sow in vain, and build in vain? how much more to lose our pains in religion, to pray, and hear, and fast in vain? This is an undoing and eternal loss. Be not deceived, if thou goest on in thy sinful estate, though thou shouldst spread forth thine hands, God will hide his eyes; though thou make many prayers, he will not hear Isaiah 1. 15. If a man without skill, set about our work, and mar it in the doing, though he take much pains, we give him but small thanks. God will be worshipped after the due order. 1 Chron. 15. 13. If a servant do our work, but quite contrary to our order, he shall have rather stripes, than praise. God's work must be done according to God's mind, or he will not be pleased; and this cannot be, except it be done with a holy heart, 2 Chron. 25. 2.

IV. Without this, thy hopes are in vain. Job 8. 12, 13. The Lord hath rejected thy confidence. Ier. 2. 37.

First, thy hopes of comfort here are in vain. 'Tis not only necessary to the safety, but comfort of your condition, that you be converted. Without this, you shall not know peace. Isaiah 59. 8. Without the fear of God, you cannot have the comforts of the Holy Ghost. Act 9. 31. God speaks peace only to his people, and to his saints. Psal. 85. 8. If you have a false peace continuing in your sins, 'tis not of God's, speaking; and then you may guess the Author. Sin is a real sickness, Isaiah 1. 5. yea the worst of sickness, 'tis a leprosy in the head, Levite. 13. 44. the plague in the heart: 1 Kings 8. 38. 'tis brokenness in the bones, Psal. 51. 8. it pierceth, it woundeth, it racketh and tormenteth. 1 Tim. 6. 10. A man may as well expect ease, when his diseases are in their strength, or his bones out of joint, as true comfort, while in his sins.

O wretched man, that canst have no ease in this case, but what comes from the deadliness of thy disease! You shall have the poor sick man, saying in his lightness, he is well; when you see death in his face. He will needs up and about his business, when the very next step is like to be into the grave. The unsanctified often feel nothing amiss, they think themselves whole, and cry not out for the Physician, but this shows the danger of their case.

Sin doth naturally breed distempers and disturbance in the soul. What a continual tempest and commotion is there, in a discontented mind? What an eating evil is inordinate care? What is passion, but a very fever in the mind? What is Lust, but a fire in the bones? What is Pride but a deadly tympany? or covetousness, but an insatiable and unsufferable thirst? or malice and envy, but venom in the very heart? Spiritual sloth is but a scurvy in the mind, and carnal security, a mortal lethargy. And how can that soul have true comfort that is under so many diseases? But converting grace cures, and so eases the mind, and prepares the soul for a settled, standing, immortal peace. Great peace have they that love thy commandments, and nothing shall offend them. Psal. 119. 165. They are the ways of wisdom that afford pleasure and peace. Prov. 3. 17. David had infinitely more pleasure in the word, than in all the delights of his Court, Psal. 119. 103, 127. The conscience cannot be truly pacified, till soundly purified. Heb. 10. 22. Cursed is that peace, that is maintained in a way of sin. Deut. 29. 19, 20. Two sorts of peace are more to be dreaded, than all the troubles in the world; Peace with sin, and Peace in sin.

Secondly, Thy hopes of Salvation hereafter are in vain: yea worse than in vain; they are most injurious to God, most pernicious to thyself; there is death, desperation, blasphemy in the bowels of this hope. 1. There is death in it. Thy confidence shall be rooted out of thy tabernacles, (God will up with it root and branch) it shall bring thee to the King of terrors. Job 18. 14. Though thou mayest lean upon this house, it will not stand, Job. 8. 15. but will prove like a ruinous building, which when a man trusts to it, falls down about his ears. 2. There is desperation in it. Where is the hope of the hypocrite, when God taketh away his soul? Job 27. 8. Then there is an end, forever, of his hope. Indeed, the hope of the righteous hath an end, but then 'tis not a destructive, but a perfective end; his hope ends in fruition, others in frustration. Prov. 10. 28. The godly must say at death, It is finished; but the wicked, It is perished; and in too sad earnest bemoan himself, (as he in a mistake) Where now is my hope? He hath destroyed me, I am gone, and my hope is removed like a tree. Job. 19. 10. The righteous hath hope in his death. Prov. 14. 32. When nature is dying, his hopes are living; when his body is languishing, his hopes are flourishing, his hope is a living hope, 1 Pet. 1. 3. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . but others a dying, yea a damning, soul undoing hope. When a wicked man dieth, his expectation shall perish; and the hope of unjust men perisheth. Prov 11. 7. It shall be cut off, and prove like the spiders web, Job 8. 14. which he spins out of his won bowels, but then comes death with the broom, and takes down all, and so there is an eternal end of his confidence, wherein he trusted. For the eyes of the wicked shall fail, and their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost. Job 11. 2. Wicked men are settled in their carnal hope, and will not be beaten out of it. They hold it fast, they will not let it go. Yea but death will knock off their fingers. Though we cannot undeceive them, death and judgment will. When death strikes its dark through thy liver, it will let out thy soul, and thy hopes together. The unsanctified have hope only in this life, 1 Cor. 15. 19. and therefore are of all men most miserable. When death comes, it lets them out into the amazing gulf of endless desperation, 3. There is blasphemy in it. To hope we shall be saved, though continuing unconverted, is to hope, we shall prove God a liar. He hath told you, that so merciful and pitiful as he is, he will never save you not withstanding, if you go on in ignorance, or a course of unrighteousness: Isaiah 27. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 9. in a word, he hath told you, that whatever you be, or do, nothing shall avail you to salvation, without you be new creatures, Gal. 6. 15. Now to say, God is mercifu• and we hope, he will save us nevertheless, is to say in effect, we hope God will not do as he saith. We may not set God's attributes at variance. God is resolved to glorify mercy, but not with the prejudice of truth, as the presumptuous sinner will find to his everlasting sorrow.

Obj. Why, but we hope in Jesus Christ, we put out whole trust in God, and therefore doubt not, but we shall be saved.

Ans. 1. This is not to hope in Christ, but against Christ. To hope to see the Kingdom of God, without being born again, to hope to find eternal life in the broad way, is to hope, Christ will prove a false prophet. 'Tis David's plea, I hope in thy word: Psal. 119. 81. but this hope is against the word. Shew me a word of Christ for thy hope, that he will save thee in thine ignorance, or profane neglects of his service, and I will never to to shake thy confidence.

2. God doth with abhorrency reject this hope. Those condemned in the Prophet, went on in their sins, yet (saith the Text) they will lean upon the Lord. Mic. 3. 11. God will not endure to be made a prop to men in their sins. The Lord rejects those presumptuous sinners, that went on still in their trespasses, and yet would stay themselves upon the God of Israel, Isaiah 48. 1, 2. as a man would shake of the briars (as one well) that cleaves to his garment.

3. If thy hope were anything worth, it would purify thee from thy sins: 1 John 3. 3. but cursed is that hope, which doth cherish men in their sins.

Obj. Would you have us to despair?

An. You must despair of ever coming to Heaven as you are, Act. 2. 37. that is while you remain unconverted. You must despair ever to see the face of God without holiness: but you must by no means despair of finding mercy, upon your through repentance and conversion: neither may you despair of attaining to repentance and conversion, in the use of God's means.

V. Without this all that Christ hath done and suffered will be (as to you) in vain; John 13. 8. Tit. 2. 14. that is, it will no way avail to your salvation. Many urge this, as sufficient ground for their hopes, that Christ died for sinners: but I must tell you, Christ never died to save impenitent and unconverted sinners (so continuing.) 2 T^m 2. 19. A great Divine was wont, in his private dealings with souls, to ask two questions. 1. What hath Christ done for you? 2. What hath Christ wrought in you? Without the application of the spirit in Regeneration, we can have no saving interest in the benefits of Redemption. I tell you from the Lord, Christ himself cannot save you, if you go on in this estate.

I. It were against his trust. The mediator is the servant of the father, Isaiah 42. 1. shows his commission from him, acts in his name, and pleads his command for his justification: John 10. 18, 36. John 6. 38, 40. And God hath committed all things to him, entrusted his own glory, and the salvation of his elect with him Mat. 11. 27. John 17. 2. Accordingly, Christ gives his father an account of both parts of his trust, before he leaves the world. John 17. 4, 6, 12. Now Christ should quite cross his fathers glory, his greatest trust, if he should save men in their sins; for this were to overturn all his counsels, and offer violence to all his attributes.

First, To overturn all his counsels; of which this is the order, that men should be brought, through sanctification, to salvation. 2. Thes. 2. 13. he hath chosen them that they should be holy. Eph. 1. 4. They are elected to pardon and life, through sanctification. 1 Pet. 1. 2. If thou canst repeal the Law of God's immutable counsel, or corrupt him, whom the Father hath sealed, to go directly against his Commission, then, and not otherwise, mayest thou get to Heaven in this condition. To hope that Christ will save thee while unconverted, is to hope that Christ will falsify his trust. He never did, nor will, save one soul, but whom the Father had given him in election, and drawn to him in effectual calling. John 6. 37, 44. Be assured, Christ will save none, in a way contrary to his Fathers will, who came on purpose to do his will. John 6. 38.

Secondly, To offer violence to all his attributes. 1. To his Justice. For the righteousness of God's judgment lies, in rendering to all according to their works. Rom. 2. 5, 6. Now, should men sow to the flesh, and yet of the spirit reap everlasting life, Gal. 6. 7, 8. where were the glory of divine Justice, since it should be given to the wicked, according to the work of the righteous? 2. To his holiness. If God should not only save sinners, but save them in their sins, his most pure and strict holiness would be exceedingly defaced. The unsanctified is, in the eyes of God's holiness, worse than a swine, or viper. Mat. 23. 33. 2 Pet. 2. 22. Now what cleanly nature could endure, to have the filthy swine bed and board with him in his parlor, or bed chamber? It would offer extremest violence to the infinite purity of the divine nature, to have such to dwell with him. They cannot stand in his judgment, they cannot abide in his presence. Psal. 1. 5. Psal. 5. 4, 5. If holy David would not endure such in his house, no nor in his sight, Psal. 101. 3, 7. shall we think God will? Should he take men as they be, from the trow to the table, from the harlots lips, from the sty and draugh, to the glory of Heaven, the world would think God were at no such distance from sin, nor had such dislike of it, as we are told he hath: they would conclude, God were altogether such a one as themselves (as they wickedly did, but from the very forbearance of God. Psal. 50. 21.)

3. To his veracity. For God hath declared from Heaven, That if any shall say, they shall have peace, though he should go on in the imagination of his heart: his wrath shall smoke against that man. Deut. 29. 19, 20. That they (only,) that confess, and forsake their sins, shall find mercy. Prov. 28. 13. That they that shall enter into his •ill, must be of clean hands, and a pure heart. Psal. 24. 3, 4. Where were God's truth, if notwithstanding all this, he •hold bring men to salvation without Conversion? O desperate sinner, that darest to hope, that Christ will put the lie upon his Father, and nullify his word to save thee!

4. To his wisdom. For this were to throw away the choicest mercies, on them that would not value them, nor were any way suited to them. First, they would not value them. The unsanctified sinner puts but little price upon God's great salvation. Mat. 22. 5. He sets no more by Christ, than the whole by the physician: Mat. 9. 12. he prizes not his balm, values not his cure, tramples upon his blood. Heb. 10. 29. Now, would it stand with wisdom, to force pardon and life, upon them that would give him no thanks for them? Will the all-wise God (when he hath forbidden us to do it) throw his holy things to dogs, and his pearl to swine, that would (as it were) but turn again and rent him? Mat. 7. 6. This would make mercy to be despised indeed. Wisdom requires, that life be given, in a way suitable to God's honor; and that God provide for the securing his own glory, as well as man's felicity. It would be dishonorable to God, to set his jewels in the snouts of swine (continuing such) and to bestow his choicest riches on them, that have more pleasure in their swill, than the Heavenly delights that he doth offer. God should lose the praise and glory of his grace, if he should cast it away on them, that were not only unworthy, but unwilling. Secondly, they are no way suited to them. The divine wisdom is seen in suiting things each to other, the means to the end, the object to the faculty, the quality of the gift to the capacity of the receiver. Now, if Christ should bring the unregenerate sinner to Heaven, he could take no more felicity there, than a beast, if you should bring him into a beautiful room, to the society of learned men, and a well furnished table; when as the poor thing had much rather be grazing with his fellow-bruits. Alas, what should an unsanctified creature do in Heaven! he could take no content, because nothing suits him. The place doth not suit him, he would be but piscis in arido, quite out of his element, as a swine in the parlor, or a fish out of water. The company doth not suit him. What communion hath darkness with light, corruption with perfection? Filth and rottenness, with glory and immortality? The employment doth not suit him. The anthems of Heaven fit not his mouth, suit not his ear. Canst thou charm thy beast with music? or wilt thou bring him to thy Organ, and expect that he should make thee melody, or keep time with the skilful quire? Or had he skill, he would have no will, and so could find no pleasure, no more than the nauseous stomach in the meat, on which it hath newly surfeited.

Spread thy table with delicacies before a languishing patient, and it will be but a very offense. Alas, if the poor man think a sermon long, and say of a Sabbath, What a weariness is it? Mal. 1. 13. how miserable would he think it, to be held to it, to all eternity? 5. To his Immutability, or else to his Omniscience, or Omnipotency. For this is enacted in the conclave of Heaven, and enrolled in the decrees of the Court above, that none but the pure in heart shall ever see God. Mat. 5. 8. This is laid up with him, and sealed among his treasures. Now if Christ, yet, bring any to Heaven unconverted, either he must get them in without his fathers knowledge, and then where is his Omniscience? or against his will, and then where were his Omnipotency? or he must change his will, and then where were his immutability?

Sinner, wilt thou not yet give up thy vain hope of being saved in this condition? Saith Bildad, Shall, the earth be forsaken for thee? or the rocks removed out of their place? Job. 18. 4. May not I much more reason so with thee? Shall the Laws of Heaven be reversed for thee? Shall the everlasting foundations be overturned for thee? Shall Christ put out the eye of his Fathers omniscience, or shorten the arm of his eternal power for thee? Shall divine justice be violated for thee? Or the brightness of the glory of his holiness be blemished for thee? Oh the impossibility, absurdity, blasphemy, that is in such a confidence! To think Christ will ever save thee in this condition, is to make thy Savior to become a sinner, and to do more wrong to the infinite Majesty, than all the wicked on earth, or devils in hell ever did, or could. And yet wilt thou not give up such a blasphemous hope?

II. Against his word. We need not say, Who shall ascend into Heaven to bring down Christ from above? Or who shall descend into the deep to bring up Christ from beneath? The word is nigh us. Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. Are you agreed, that Christ shall end the controversy? Hear then his own words: Except you be converted, you shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Mat. 18. 3. You must be born again. John 3. 7. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me. John 13. 8. Repent or perish. Luke 13. 3. One word, one would think, were enough from Christ; but how often and earnestly doth he reiterate it, verily, verily, verily, verily, except a man be born again he shall not see the Kingdom of God. John 3. 3, 5. Yea he doth not only assert, but prove the necessity of the new birth, viz. from the fleshliness and filthiness of man's first birth, John. 3. 6. by reason of which, man is no more fit for Heaven, than the beast is for the chamber of the Kings presence. And wilt thou yet believe thine own presumptuous confidence, directly against Christ's word? He must go quite against the Law of his Kingdom, and rule of his judgment, to save thee in this estate.

III. Against his Oath. He hath lifted up his hand to Heaven, he hath sworn, that those that remain in unbelief, and know not his ways, (that is, are ignorant of them, or disobedient to them) shall not enter into his rest. Psal. 95. 11. Heb. 3. 18. And wilt thou not yet believe, O sinner, that he is in earnest? Canst thou hope he will be forsworn for thee? The Covenant of grace is confirmed by oath, and sealed by blood: Heb. 6. 17. Heb. 9. 16, 18, 19. Mat. 26. 28. but all must be made void and another way to Heaven found out, if thou be saved living and dying un sanctified. God is come to his lowest and last terms with man, and hath condescended as far as with honor he could, hath set up his pillars, with a Ne plus ultra. Men cannot be saved, while unconverted, except they could get another Covenant made, and the whole frame of the Gospel (which was established forever, with such dreadful solemnities) quite altered; and would not this be a distracted hope?

IV. Against his Honor. Christ will so show his love to the sinner, as withal to show his hatred to sin. Therefore he that names the name of Jesus, must depart from iniquity, 2 Tim. 2. 19. and deny all ungodliness; and he that hath hope of life by Christ must purify himself, as he is pure: 1 John 3. 3. Tit. 2. 12. otherwise Christ would be thought a fauteur of sin. The Lord Jesus will have all the world to know, though he pardon sin, he will not protect it. If holy David shall say, depart from me all you workers of iniquity, Psal. 6. 8. and shall shut his doors against them, Psal. 101. 7. shall not such much more expect it from Christ's holiness? Would it be for his honor, to have the dogs to the table? or to lodge the swine with his children? or to have Abraham's bosom, to be a nest of Vipers?

V. Against his Offices. God hath exalted him to be a Prince and a Savior, Act. 5. 31. he should against both, should he save men in their sins. It is the office of a King

•arcere subjectis, & debellare superbos;

To be a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them that do well. Rom. 13. 3, 4. He is the Minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath on him that doth evil. Now should Christ favor the ungodly (so continuing,) and take those to reign with him, that would not that he should reign over them, Luke 19. 27. this were quite against his office. He therefore reigns, that he may put his enemies under his feet: 1 Cor. 15. 25. now should he lay them in his bosom, he should cross the end of his Regal power. It belongs to Christ, as King, to subdue the hearts, and slay the lusts of his chosen. Psal. 45. 5. Psal. 110. 3. What King would take the rebels, in open hostility, into his Court? What were this but to betray life, Kingdom, Government and all together? If Christ be a King, he must have homage, honor, subjection, &c. Mal. 1. 6. now to save men while in their natural enmity were to obscure his dignity, lose his authority, bring contempt on his Government, and sell his dear-bought rights for naught.

Again, as Christ should not be a Prince, so neither a Savior, if he should do this. For his Salvation is spiritual: he is called Jesus, because he saves his people from their sins. Mat. 1. 21. So that should he save them in their sins, he should be neither Lord, nor Jesus. To save men from the punishment, and not from the power of sin, were to do his work by halvs, and be an imperfect Savior. His office, as the Deliverer, is, to turn away ungodliness from Jacob: Rom. 11. 26. He is sent to bless men in turning them from their iniquities, Act. 3. 26 to make an end of sin: Dan. 9. 24. so that he should destroy his own designs, and nullify his offices, to save men abiding in their unconverted estate.

Application. Arise then, what meanest thou O sleeper? awake O secure sinner, lest thou be consumed in thine iniquities. Say as the Lepers, If we sit here we shall die. 2 Kings 7. 3, 4. Verily, it is not more certain thou art now out of hell, than that thou shalt speedily be in it, except thou repent and be converted: there is but this one door for thee to escape by. Arise then O sluggard, and shake off thine excuses. How long wilt thou slumber, and fold thy hands to sleep? Prov. 6. 10, 11. Wilt thou lie down in the midst of the Sea, or sleep on the top of the mast? Prov. 23. 34. There is no remedy; but thou must either turn, or burn. There is an unchangeable necessity of the change of thy condition, except thou art resolved to bide the worst of it, and try it out with the Almighty. If thou lovest thy life, O man, arise, and come away. Methinks I see the Lord Jesus laying the merciful hands of an holy violence upon thee: methinks he carries it, like the Angels to Lot, Gen. 19. 15. &c. Then the Angels hastened Lot, saying, Arise, lest thou be consumed. And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, the Lord being merciful unto him, and they brought him without the City, and said, Escape for thy life, stay not in all the plain, escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.

Oh how willful will thy destruction be, if thou shouldst yet harden thyself in thy sinful state! But none of you can say, but you have had fair warning. Yet methinks I cannot tell how to leave you so. It is not enough to me to have delivered my own soul. What, shall I go away without my errand? Will none of you arise, and follow me? Have I been all this while speaking in the wind? Have I been charming the deaf adder, or allaying the tumbling Ocean with arguments? Do I speak to the trees or rocks, or to men? to the tombs and monuments of the dead, or to a living auditory? If you be men, and not senseless stocks, stand still, and consider whither you be going. If you have the reason and understanding of men, dare not run into the flames, and fall into hell with your eyes open: but bethink yourselves, and set to the work of repentance. What, men, and yet run into the pit, when the very beasts will not be forced in! What, endowed with reason, and yet dally with death and hell, and the vengeance of the Almighty! Are men herein distinguished from the very bruits, that they have a foresight of, and a care to provide for, the things to come; and will you not hasten your escape from eternal torments? Oh show yourselves men, and let reason prevail with you. Is it a reasonable thing for you to contend against the Lord your maker, Isaiah 45. 9. or to harden yourselves against his word, Job 9. 4. as though the strength of Israel would lie? 1 Sam. 15. 29. Is it reasonable, that an understanding creature should lose, yea live quite against, the very end of his being, and be as a broken pitcher, only fit for the dunghill? Is it tolerable, that the only thing in this world that God hath made capable of knowing his will, and bringing him glory, should yet live in ignorance of his maker, and be unserviceable to his use, yea should be engaged against him, and spit his venom in the face of his Creator? Hear O Heavens, and give ear O earth, and let the creatures without sense be judge, if this be reason that man, when God hath nourished and brought him up, should rebel against him. Isaiah 1. 2. Judge in your own selves: is it a reasonable undertaking, for briars and thorns, to set themselves in battle against the devouring fire? Isaiah 27. 4. or for the po•sheard of the earth, to strive with his maker? If you will say, this is reason, surely the eye of reason is quite put out. And if this be not reason, then there is no reason that you should continue as you be, but 'tis all the reason in the world, you should forthwith repent and turn.

What shall I say? I could spend myself in this argument. Oh that you would but hearken to me! that you would presently set upon a new course! Will you not be made clean? When shall it once be? What, will nobody be persuaded? Reader, shall I prevail with thee for one? Wilt thou sit down and consider the forementioned arguments, and debate it, whether it be not best to turn? Come and let us reason together. Is it good for thee to be here? Wilt thou sit still, till the tide come in upon thee? Is it good for thee to try whether God will be so good as his word? and to harden thyself in a conceit, that all is well with thee, while thou remainest unsanctified?

But I know, you will not be persuaded, but the greatest part will be as they have been, and do as they have done. I know the drunkard will to his vomit again, and the deceiver will to his deceit again, and the lustful wanton to his dalliance again. Alas, that I must leave you where you were! in your ignorance or looseness, or in your lifeless formality and customary devotions! However, I will sit down and bemoan my fruitless labours, and spend some sighs over my perishing hearers.

Oh distracted sinners! What will their end be? What will they do in the day of visitation? Whither will they flee for help? Where will they leave their glory? Isaiah 10. 3. How powerfully hath sin bewitched them? How effectually hath the god of this world blinded them? How strong is their delusion? How uncircumcised their ears? How obdurate their hearts? Satan hath them at his beck: but how long may I call, and can get no answer? I may dispute with them year after year, and they will give me the hearing, and that is all. They must and will have their sins, say what I will. Though I tell them there is death in the cup, yet they will take it up. Though I tell them 'tis the broad way, and endeth in destruction, yet they will on in it. I warn them, yet cannot win them. Sometimes I think, the mercies of God will melt them, and his winning invitations will overcome them: but I find them as they were. Sometimes that the terror of the Lord will persuade them: yet neither this will do it. They will approve the word, like the Sermon, commend the preacher: but they will yet live as they did. They will not deny me, yet they will not obey me. They will flock to the word of God, and sit before me as his people, and hear my words: but they will not do them. They value and will plead for Ministers; and I am to them as the lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice: yet I cannot get them to come under Christ's yoke. They love me, and will be ready to say they will do anything for me: but for my life I cannot persuade them to leave their sins, to forgo their evil company, their intemperance, their unjust gains, &c. I cannot prevail with them, to set up prayer in their families and closets: yet they will promise me, like the forward son, that said, I go sir, but went not. Mat. 21. 30. I cannot persuade them to learn the principles of religion, though else they will die without knowledge. Job 36. 12. I tell them their misery; but they will not believe, but 'tis well enough. If I tell them particularly, I fear for such reasons their state is sad, they will judge me censorious: or, if they be at present a little awakened, are quickly lull'd asleep by Satan again, and have lost the sense of all.

Alas for my poor hearers! Must they perish at last by the hundreds, when Ministers would so fain save them? What course shall I use with them that I have not tried? What shall I do for the daughter of my people? Ier. 9. 7. O Lord God, help. Alas, shall I leave them thus! If they will not hear me, yet do thou hear me. Oh that they might yet live in thy sight! Lord save them, or else they perish. My heart would melt to see their houses on fire about their ears, when they were fast in their beds: and shall not my soul be moved within me to see them falling into endless perdition? Lord have compassion, and save them out of the burning. Put forth thy divine power, and the work will be done: but as for me, I cannot prevail.

CHAP. IV.

Showing the Marks of the Unconverted.

WHILE we keep aloof in generals, there is little fruit to be expected. It is the hand fight, that does execution. David is not awakened by the Prophets hovering at a distance, in parabolical insinuations: he is forced to close with him, and tell him home, Thou art the man. Few will in words deny the necessity of the new birth; but they have a self-deluding confidence, that the work is not now to do. And because they know themselves free from that gross hypocrisy, that doth take up Religion merely for a color to deceive others, and for the covering of wicked designs, they are confident of their sincerity, and suspect not that more close hypocrisy (where the greatest danger lies) by which man deceiveth his own soul. James 1. 26. But man's deceitful heart is such a matchless cheat, and self-delusion so reigning and so fatal a disease, that I know not whether be the greater, the difficulty, or the displicency, or the necessity of the undeceiving work that I am now upon. Alas for my unconverted hearers! They must be undeceived, or undone. But how shall this be effected? Hi• labor, h•c opus est.

Help O all-searching light, and let thy discerning eye discover the rotten foundation of the self-deceiver, and lead me O Lord God, as thou didst thy Prophet, into the chambers of imagery, and dig through the wall of sinners hearts, and discover the hidden abominations that are lurking out of sight in the dark. O send thine Angel before me, to open the sundry wards of their hearts, as thou didst before Peter, and make even the Iron gates to fly open of their own accord. And as Jonathan no sooner tasted the honey, but his eyes were enlightened: so grant, O Lord, that when the poor deceived souls, with whom I have to do, shall cast their eyes into these lines, their minds may be illuminated, and their consciences convinced and awakened, that they may see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and be converted, and thou mayest heal them.

This must be premised, before we proceed to the discovery, that it is most certain men may have a confident persuasion, that their hearts and states be good, and yet be unsound. Hear the Truth himself, who shows in Laodicea's case, that men may be wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked, and yet know it not: yea they may be confident they are rich and increased in grace. Rev. 3. 17. There is a generation, that is pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness. Prov. 30. 12. Who better persuaded of his case, than Paul, while yet he remained unconverted? Rom. 7. 9. So that they are miserably deceived, that take a strong confidence, for a sufficient evidence. They that have no better proof, than barely a strong persuasion, that they are converted, are certainly, as yet, strangers to Conversion.

But to come more close, as it was said of the adherents of Antichrist, so here, some of the Unconverted carry their marks in their foreheads, more openly; and some in their hands, more covertly. The Apostle reckons up some, upon whom he writes the sentence of death, as in these dreadful catalogues, which I beseech you to attend with all diligence. Eph. 5. 5, 6. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and of God. •et no m•n deceive you with vain words, for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Rev. 21. 8. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the ab•minable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Know you not, that the $\langle\phi\rangle$ us shall not inherit the Kingdom of God? Be not deceived, neither fornicatours, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the Kingdom of God. See Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21. Woe to them that have their names written in these bedrolls: such may know, as certainly, as if God had told it them from Heaven, that they are unsanctified, and under an impossibility of being saved in this condition.

There are then these several sorts, that, past all dispute, are unconverted, they carry their marks in their foreheads.

1. The Vnclean. These are ever reckoned among the goats, and have their names in, whoever be left out, in all the forementioned catalogues. Eph. 5. 5. Rev. 21. 8. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.

2. The Covetous. These are branded for idolaters, and the doors of the Kingdom are shut against them by name. Eph. 5. 5. Col. 3. 5. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.

3. Drunkards, not only such as drink away their reason, but withal, yea above all, such as are too strong for strong drink. The Lord fills his mouth with woes against these, and declares them to have no inheritance in the Kingdom of God. Isaiah 5. 11, 12, 22. Gal. 5. 21.

4. Liars. The God that cannot lie hath told them, that there is no place for them in his Kingdom, no entrance into his hill; but their portion is with the Father of lies (whose children they are) in the lake of burnings. Psal. 15. 1, 2. Rev. 21. 8, 27. John 8. 44. Prov. 6. 17.

5. Swearers. The end of these men without deep and speedy repentance, is swift destruction, and most certain and unavoidable condemnation. James 5. 12. Zech. 5. 1, 2, 3.

6. Railers and Backbiters, that love to take up a reproach against their neighbor, and fling all the dirt they can in his face, or else wound him secretly behind his back. Psal. 15. 1, 3. 1 Cor. 6. 10. 1 Cor. 5. 11.

7. Thieves, Extortioners, Oppressors, that grind the poor, over-reach their brethren, when they have them at an advantage: these must know, that God is the avenger of all such. 1 Thess. 4. 6. Hear O ye false and purloining and wastful servants: Hear O ye deceitful tradesmen, hear your sentence. God will certainly hold his doors against you, and turn your treasures of unrighteousness into treasures of wrath, and make your ill-gotten silver and gold, to torment you like burning metal in your bowels. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. James 5. 2, 3.

8. All that do ordinarily live in the profane neglect of God's worship, that hear not his word, that call not on his name, that restrain prayer before God, that mind not their own nor their families souls, but live without God in the world. John 8. 47. Job 15. 4. Psal. 14. 4. Psal. 79. 6. Eph. 2. 12. & 4. 18.

9. Those that are frequenters and lovers of evil company. God hath declared, he will be the destruction of all such, and that they shall never enter into the hill of his rest. Prov. 13. 20. Psal. 15. 4. Prov. 9. 6.

10. Scoffers at religion, that make a scorn of precise walking, and mock at the messengers and diligent servants of the Lord, and at their holy profession, and make themselves merry with the weaknesses and failings of professors. Hear ye despisers, hear your dreadful doom. Prov. 19. 29. 2 Chron. 36. 16. Prov. 3. 34.

Sinner, consider diligently, whether thou art not to be found in one of these ranks: for if this be thy case, thou art in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity; for all these do carry their marks in their foreheads, and are undoubtedly the sons of death.

And if so, the Lord pity our poor Congregations. Oh how little a number will be left, when these ten sorts be set out! Alas on how many doors, on how many faces must we write, Lord have mercy upon us! Sirs, what shift do you make to keep up your confidence of your good estate, when God from Heaven declares against you, and pronounces you in a state of damnation? I would reason with you, as God with them; How canst thou say I am not polluted? Ier. 2. 23. See thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done. Man, is not thy conscience privy to thy tricks of deceit, to thy chamber pranks, to thy way of lying? Yea are not thy friends, thy family, thy neighbors witnesses to thy profane neglects of God's worship, to thy covetous practices, to thy envious and malicious carriage? May not they point at thee as thou goest, There goes a gaming prodigal; there goes a drunken Nabal, a companion of evildoers; there goes a railer, or a scoffer, a loose liver? Beloved, God hath written it as with a Sun-beam, in the book out of which you must be judged, that these are not the spots of his children, and that none such (except renewed by converting grace) shall ever escape the damnation of hell.

Oh that such of you would now be persuaded to repent and turn from all your transgressions, or else iniquity will be your ruin! Ezek. 18. 30. Alas for poor hardened sinners! Must I leave you at last where you were? Must I leave the tipler still at the ale-bench? Must I leave the wanton still at his dalliance? Must I leave the malicious still in his venom? And the drunkard still at his vomit? However you must know, that you have been warned, and that I am clear of your blood. And whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear, I will leave these three scriptures with them, either as thunderbolts to awaken them, or as searing Irons to harden them to a reprobate sense, Psal. 68. 21. God shall wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy scalp of such a one, as goeth on still in his trespasses. Prov. 29. 1. He that being often reprov'd, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy. Prov. 1. 24. &c. Because I have called, and ye refused, I have stretch'd out my hand, and no man regarded, &c. I will mock at your calamity —when your destruction cometh as a whirlwind.

And now, I imagine, many will begin to bless themselves, and think all is well, because they cannot be spotted with the grosser evils above mentioned. But I must further tell you, that there are another sort of unsanctified persons, that carry not their marks in their foreheads, but more secretly and covertly in their hands. These do frequently deceive themselves and others, and pass for good Christians, when they are all the while unsound at bottom. Many pass undiscovered, till death and judgment bring all to light. Those self-deceivers seem to come even to Heaven-gate with confidence of their admission, and yet are turned off at last. Mat. 7. 22. Brethren Beloved, I beseech you deeply to lay to heart, and firmly to retain this awakening consideration: That Multitudes miscarry by the hand of some secret sin, that is not only hidden from others, but (for want of observing their own hearts) even from themselves. A man may be free from open pollutions, and yet die at last by the fatal hand of some unobserved iniquity: And there be these eleven hidden sins, by which souls go down by numbers to the chambers of death. These you must search carefully for, and take them as black marks (where-ever they be found) discovering a graceless and unconverted estate. As you love your lives read them carefully, with a holy jealousy of yourselves, lest you should be the persons concerned.

1. Gross Ignorance. Ah how many poor souls doth this sin kill in the dark, Hos. 4. 6. while they think verily they have good hearts, and are in the ready way to Heaven! This is the murderer that di•patches thousands in a silent manner, when (poor hearts!) they suspect nothing, and see not the hand that mischiefs them. You shall find whatever excuses you have for ignorance, that 'tis a soulundoing evil. Isaiah 27. 11. 2 Thess. 1. 8. 2 Cor. 4. 3. Ah would it not have pitied a man's heart to have seen that woeful spectacle, when the poor Protestants were shut up a multitude together in a barn, and a butcher comes with his inhumane hands warm in human blood and leads them one by one blindfold to a block, where he slew them (poor Innocents!) one after another by the scores in cold blood? But how much more should our hearts bleed, to think of the hundreds in great congregations, that ignorance doth butcher in secret, and lead them blindfold to the block? Beware this be none of your case. Make no pleas for ignorance. If you spare that sin, know that that will not spare you. Will a man keep a murderer in his bosom?

2. Secret reserves in closing with Christ. To forsake all for Christ, to hate father and mother, yea and a man's own life for him, this is a hard saying. Luke 14. 26. Some will do much, but they will not be of the religion that will undo them; they never come to be entirely devoted to Christ, nor fully to resign to him. They must have the sweet sin. They mean to do themselves no harm. They have secret exceptions for life, liberty, or estate. Many take Christ thus hand over head, and never consider his self-denying terms, nor cast upon the cost; and this error in the foundation mars all, and secretly ruins them forever, Luke 14. 28. Mat. 13. 21.

3. Formality in Religion. Many stick in the bark, and rest in the outside of religion, and in the external performance of holy duties; Mat. 23. 25. and this oft times doth most effectually deceive men, & doth more certainly undo them, than open looseness, as it was in the Pharisees case. Mat. 21. 31. They hear, they fast, they pray, they give alms, and therefore will not believe but their case is good: Luke 18. 11. whereas resting in the work done, and coming short of the heart-work, and the inward power and vitals of religion, they fall at last into the burnings, from the flattering hopes, and confident persuasions, of their being in the ready way to Heaven. Mat. 7. 22, 23. Oh dreadful case, when a man's religion shall serve, only to harden him, and effectually to delude and deceive his own soul!

4. The prevalency of false ends in holy duties. Mat. 23. 5. This was the bane of the Pharisees. Oh how many a poor soul is undone by this, and drops into hell, before he discerns his mistake! He performs good duties, and so thinks all is well, and perceives not that he is acted by carnal motives all the while. It is too true, that even with the truly sanctified, many carnal ends will oft times creep in; but they are the matter of his hatred and humiliation, and never come to be habitually prevalent with him, and to bear the greatest sway. Rom. 14. 7. But now when the main thing that doth ordinarily carry a man out to religious duties, shall be some carnal end, as to satisfy his conscience, to get the repute of being religious, to be seen of men, to show his own gifts and parts, to avoid the reproach of a profane and irreligious person, or the like, this discovers an unsound heart. Hos. 10. 1. Zech. 7. 5, 6. Oh Christians, if you would avoid self-deceit, see that you mind, not only your acts, but withal, yea above all, your ends.

5. Trusting in their own righteousness. Luke 18. 9. This is a soul-undoing mischief. Rom. 10. 3. When men do trust in their own righteousness, they do indeed reject Christ's. Beloved, you had need be watchful on every hand, for not only your sins, but your duties may undo you. It may be you never thought of this, but so it is, that a man may as certainly miscarry by his seeming righteousness, and supposed graces, as by gross sins; and that is, when a man doth trust to these as his righteousness before God, for the satisfying his justice, appeasing his wrath, procuring his favor, and obtaining of his own pardon for this is to put Christ out of office, and make a Savior of our own duties and graces. Beware of this O professors; you are much in duties, but this one fly will spoil all the ointment. ••en you have done most, and best, be sure to go out of yourselves to Christ, and reckon your own righteousness, but rags. Psal. 143. 2. Phil. 3. 8. Isaiah 64. 6. Neh. 13. 22.

6. A secre• enmity against the strictness of religion. Many moral persons, punctual in their formal devotion, have yet a bitter enmity against preciseness, and hate the life and power of religion. Phil. 3. 6. compared with Act. 9. 1. They like not this forwardness, nor that men should keep such a stir in religion. They condemn the strictness of Religion, as singularity, indiscretion, and intemperate zeal; and with them a lively preacher, or zealous Christian, is but a heady fellow. These men love not holiness, as holiness, (for then they would love the height of holiness,) and therefore are undoubtedly rotten at heart, whatever good opinion they have of themselves.

7. The resting in a certain pitch of Religion. When they have so much as will save them, (as they suppose,) they look no further, and so show themselves short of true Grace, which will ever put men upon aspiring to further perfection. Phil. 3. 12, 13. Prov. 4. 18.

8. The predominant love of the World. This is a sure evidence of an unsanctified heart•Mar. 10. 37. 1 John 2. 15. But how close doth this sin lurk oft times, under a fair covert of forward profession? Luke 8. 14. Yea such a power of deceit is there in this sin, that ma•• times, when everybody else can $\langle \diamond \rangle$ man's worldliness and covetousness, he c••not see it himself, but hath so many colors, and excuses, and pretences for his eagerness on the world, that he doth blind his own eyes, and perish in his self-deceit. How many professors be there, with whom the world hath more of their hearts and affections than Christ? who mind earthly things, and thereby are evidently after the flesh, and like to end in destruction? Rom. 8. 5. Phil. 3. 19. Yet ask these men, and they will tell you confidently, they prize Christ above all, God forbid else! and see not their own earthly mindedness for want of a narrow observation of the workings of their own hearts. Did they but carefully search, they would quickly find that their greatest content is in the world; Luke 12. 19. and their greatest care and main endeavor to get and secure the world, which are the certain discoveries of an unconverted sinner. May the professing part of the world take earnest heed, that they perish not by the hand of this sin unobserved. Men may be, and often are kept off from Christ, as effectually by the inordinate love of lawful comforts, as by the most unlawful courses, Mat. 22. 5. Luke 14. 18, 19, 20, 24.

9. Reigning malice and envy against those that disrespect them, or are injurious to them. 1 John 2. 9, 11. O how do many that seem to be religious, remember injuries, and carry grudges, and will return men as good as they bring, rendering evil for evil, loving to take revenge, wishing evil to them that wrong them, directly against the rule of the Gospel, the pattern of Christ, and the nature of God. Rom. 12. 14, 17. 1 Pet. 2. 21, 23. Neh. 6. 17. Doubtless where this evil is kept boiling in the heart, and is not hated, resisted, mortified, but doth habitually prevail, that person is in the very gall of bitterness, and in a state of death. Mat. 18. 34, 35. 1 John 3. 14, 15.

Reader, doth nothing of this touch thee? art thou in none of the forementioned ranks? Oh search, and search again; take thy heart solemnly to task. Woe unto thee, if after all thy profession, thou shouldest be found under the power of ignorance, lost in formality, drowned in earthly mindedness, envenomed with malice, exalted in an opinion of thine own righteousness, leavened with hypocrisy, and carnal ends in God's service, imbittered against strictness: this would be a sad discovery, that all thy Religion were in vain. But I must proceed.

10. Vnmortified Pride. When men love the praise of men, more than the praise of God; and set their hearts upon men's esteem, applause and approbation, it is most certain, they are yet in their sins, and strangers to true conversion. John 12. 43. Gal. 1. 10. When men see not, nor complain of, nor groan under the pride of their own hearts; it's a sign they are stark dead in sin. Oh how secretly doth this sin live and reign in many hearts, and they know it not, but are very strangers to themselves! John 9. 40.

11. The prevailing love of Pleasure. 2 Tim. 3. 4. This is a black mark. When men give the flesh the liberty that it craves, and pamper, and please it, and do not deny and restrain it: when their great delight is in gratifying their bellies, and pleasing their senses; whatever appearance they may have of Religion, all is unsound. Rom. 16. 18. Tit. 3. 3. A flesh-pleasing life cannot be pleasing to God. They that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh, and are careful to cross it, and keep it under, as their enemy. Gal. 5. 24. 1 Cor. 9. 25, 26, 27.

12. Carnal security, or a presumptuous and ungrounded confidence, that their condition is already good. Rev. 3. 17. Many cry peace and safety, when sudden destruction is coming upon them. 1 Thess. 5. 3. This was that which kept the foolish Virgins sleeping, when they should have been working; upon their beds, when they should have been at the markets. Mat. 25. 5, 10. Prov. 10. 5. They perceived not their want of Oil, till the bridegroom was come; and while they went to buy, the door was shut. And oh that these foolish virgins had no successors! Where is the place, yea where is the house almost, where these do not dwell? Men are willing to cherish in themselves, upon never so slight grounds, a hope that their condition is good, and so look not out after a change, and by this means perish in their sins. Are you at peace? Shew me upon what grounds your peace is maintained. Is it a Scripture peace? Can you show the distinguishing marks of a sound believer? Can you evidence that you have something more than any Hypocrite in the world ever had? If not, fear this peace, more than any trouble; and know, that a carnal peace doth commonly prove the most mortal enemy of the poor soul, and while it smiles and kisses and speaks it fair, doth atally smite it as it were under the fifth rib.

By this time methinks I hear my reader crying out with the Disciples, who then shall be saved? Set out from among our congregations all those ten ranks of the profane on the one hand; and then besides take out all these twelve sorts of close and self deceiving Hypocrites on the other hand, and tell me then whether it be not a remnant that shall be saved. How few will be the sheep that shall be left, when all these shall be separated, and set among the Goats? For my part, of all my numerous hearers, I have no hopes to see any of them in Heaven, that are to be found among these two and twenty sorts, that are here mentioned, except by sound conversion they be brought into another condition.

Application. And now conscience do thine office. Speak out, and speak home to him that heareth or readeth these lines. If thou find any of these marks upon him, thou must pronounce him utterly unclean. Levite. 13. 44. Take not up a lie into thy mouth: speak not peace to him, to whom God speaks no peace. Let not lust bribe thee, or self-love, or carnal prejudice blind thee. I sub-poena thee from the Court of Heaven, to come and give in evidence. I require thee in the name of God to go with me to the search of the suspected house. As thou wilt answer it at thy peril, give in a true report of the state and case of him that readeth this book. Conscience, wilt thou altogether hold thy peace at such a time as this? I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us the truth. Mat. 26. 63. Is the man converted, or is he not? Doth he allow himself in any way of sin, or doth he not? Doth he truly love, and please, and prize and delight in God above all other things, or not? Come, put it to an issue. How long shall this soul lie at uncertainties? Oh Conscience bring in thy verdict. Is this man a new man, or is he not? How dost thou find it? Hath there passed a through and mighty change upon him, or not? When was the time, where was the place, or what was the means, by which this through change of the new birth was wrought in this soul? Speak Conscience. Or if thou canst not tell time and place, canst thou show scripture evidence, that the work is done? Hath the man been ever taken off from his false bottom, from the false hopes, and false peace wherein once he trusted? Hath he been deeply convinced of sin, and of his lost and undone condition, and brought out of himself, and off from his sins, to give up himself entirely to Jesus Christ? Or dost thou not find him to this day under the power of ignorance, or in the mire of profaneness? Hast not thou taken upon him the gains of unrighteousness? Dost not thou find him a stranger to prayer, a neglecter of the word, a lover of this present world? Dost not thou often catch him in a lie? Dost not thou find his heart fermented with malice, or burning with lust, or going after his covetousness? Speak plainly to all the forementioned particulars: canst thou acquit this man, this woman, from being any of the two and twenty sorts here described? If he be found with any of them, set him aside, his portion is not with the Saints. He must be converted and made a new creature, or else he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

Beloved, be not your own betrayers, do not deceive your own hearts, nor set your hands to your own ruin, by a willful blinding of yourselves. Set up a tribunal in your own breasts. Bring the word and conscience together. To the law, and to the Testimony. Isai. 8. 20. Hear what the word concludes of your estates. O follow the search, till you have found how the case stands. Mistake here, and perish. And such is the treachery of the Heart, the subtlety of the tempter, and the deceitfulness of sin, Ier. 17. 9. 2 Cor. 11. 3. Heb. 3. 13. all conspiring to flatter and deceive the poor soul, and withal so common and easy it is to be mistaken, that it's a thousand to one, but you will be deceived, unless you be very careful, and thorough, and impartial in the enquiry into your spiritual conditions. Oh therefore ply your work: go to the bottom: search as with candles: weigh you in the balance; come to the standard of the Sanctuary: bring your coin to the touch-stone. You have the archest cheats in the world to deal with: a world of counterfeit Coin is going: happy is he, that takes not Counters for Gold. Satan is master of deceits: he can draw to the life: he is perfect in the trade: there is nothing but he can imitate. You cannot wish for any Grace, but he can fit you to a hair with a counterfeit. Trade warily: look on every piece you take: be jealous: trust not so much as your own hearts. Run to God to search you and try you, to examine you and prove your reins. Psal. 26. 2. Psal. 139. 23, 24. If other helps suffice not to bring all to an issue, but you are still at a loss, open your cases faithfully to some Godly and faithful Minister. Mal. 2. 7. Rest not, till you have put the business of your eternal welfare out of question. 2 Pet. 2. 10. O searcher of hearts, put thou this soul upon, and help him in the search.

CHAP. V.

Showing the miseries of the unconverted.

SO unspeakably dreadful is the case of every unconverted soul, that I have sometimes thought, if we could but convince men, that they are yet unregenerate, the work were upon the matter done. But I sadly experience, that such a spirit of sloth and slumber (Rom. 11. 8. Mat. 13. 15.) possesses the unsanctified, that though they be convinced; that they are yet unconverted; yet they oftentimes carelessly sit still: and what through the avocation of sensual pleasures, or hurry of worldly business, or noise and clamour of earthly cares, and lusts, and affections, Luke 8. 14. the voice of conscience is drowned, and men go no farther than some cold wishes, and general purposes of repenting and amending. Act. 24. 25.

It's therefore of high necessity, that I do not only convince men, that they are unconverted; but that I also endeavor, to bring them to a sense of the fearful misery of this estate.

But here I find myself a ground at first putting forth. What tongue can tell the heirs of Hell sufficiently of their misery, unless 'twere Dives his, that was tormented in that flame? Luke 16. 24. Where is the ready writer, whose pen can decypher their misery, that are without God in the world? Eph. 2. 12. This cannot fully be done, unless we knew the infinite ocean of that bliss and perfection which is in that God, which a state of sin doth exclude men from. Who knoweth (saith Moses) the power of thine anger? Psal. 90. 11. And how shall I tell men, that which I do not know? Yet so much we know, as one would think would shake the heart of that man, that had the least degree of spiritual life and sense.

But this is yet the more posing difficulty, that I am to speak to them that are without sense. Alas, this is not the least part of man's misery upon him, that he is dead, stark dead in trespasses and sins. Eph. 2. 1.

Could I bring Paradise into view, or represent the Kingdom of Heaven to as much advantage, as the tempter did the Kingdoms of the world and all the glory thereof to our Savior: or could I uncover the face of the deep and devouring gulf of Tophet in all its terrors, and open the grates of the infernal furnace, alas he hath no eyes to see it. Mat. 13. 14, 15. Could I paint out the beauties of holiness, or glory of the Gospel to the life; or could I bring above board the more than diabolical deformity and ugliness of sin; he can no more judge of the loveliness and beauty of the one, nor of the filthiness and hatefulness of the other, than the blind of colors. He is alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in him, because of the blindness of his heart. Eph. 4. 18. He neither doth nor can know the things of God, because they are spiritually discerned. 1 Cor. 2. 14. His eyes cannot be savingly opened, but by converting grace: Act. 26. 18. he is a child of darkness, and walks in darkness, 1 John 1. 6. yea the light in him is darkness. Mat. 6. 2. 3

Shall I ring his knell, or read his sentence, or sound in his ear, the terrible trump of God's judgments, that one would think should make both his ears to tingle, and strike him into Belshazar's fit, even to appale his countenance, and loose his joints, and make his knees smite one against the other? Yet alas! he perceives me not: he hath no ears to hear. Or shall I call up all the daughters of music, and sing the song of Moses, and of the Lamb? yet he will not be stirred. Shall I allure him with the joyful sound, and the lovely song and glad tidings of the Gospel? with the most sweet and inviting calls, comforts, cordials of the divine promises, so exceeding great and precious? it will not affect him savingly, unless I could find him ears, Mat. 13. 15. as well as tell him the news.

Shall I set before him the feast of fat things, the wine of wisdom, the bread of God, the tree of life, the hidden Manna? he hath no appetite for them, no mind to them. 1 Cor. 2. 14. Mat. 22. 5. Should I press the choicest grapes, the heavenly clusters of gospel privileges, and drink to him in the richest wine of God's own cellar, yea of his own side, or set before him the delicious honey-comb of God's testimonies, Psal. 19. 10. alas he hath no taste to discern them. Shall I invite the dead to arise and eat the banquet of their funerals? No more can the dead in sin, savor the holy food wherewith the Lord of life hath spread his table.

What then shall I do? shall I burn the brimstone of hell at his nostrils? or shall I open the box of Spikenard, very precious, that filleth the whole house of this universe with its perfume, Mark 14. 3. John. 12. 8. and hope that the savor of Christ's ointments, and the smell of his garments will attract him? Psal. 45. 8. Alas! dead •inners are like the dumb idols, they have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears, but they hear not; noses have they, but they smell not; they have hands, but they handle not; feet have they, but they walk not, neither speak they through their throat. Psal. 1. 5, 6, 7. They are destitute of all spiritual sense and motion.

But let me try the sense that doth last leave us, and draw the sword of the word: yet lay at him while I will, yea though I choose mine arrows out of God's quiver, and direct them to the heart, nevertheless he feeleth not; for how should he, being past feeling? Eph. 4. 19. So that though the wrath of God abideth on him, and the mountainous weight of so many thousand sins, yet he goes up and down as light, as if nothing ailed him. Rom. 7. 9. In a word, he carries a dead soul in a living body, and his flesh is but the walking cossin of a corrupted mind, that is twice dead, Jude 12. rotting in the slime and putrefaction of noisome lusts. Mat. 23. 27, 28.

Which way then shall I come at the miserable objects that I have to deal with? who shall make the heart of stone to relent, Zech. 7. 12. or the lifeless carcase to feel and move? That God that is able of stones to raise up children unto Abraham, Mat. 3. 9. that raiseth the dead, 2 Cor. 1. 9. and melteth the mountains, Nah. 1. 5. and strikes water out of the flints, Deut. 8. 15. that loves to work like himself, beyond the hopes and belief of man, that peopleth his Church with dry bones, and planteth his orchard with dry sticks; he is able to do this. Therefore I bow my knee to the most high God, Eph. 3. 14. and as our Savior prayed at the sepulcher of Lazarus, John 11. 38, 41. and the Shunamite ran to the man of God for her dead child: 2 Kings 4. 25. so doth your mourning Minister kneel about your graves, and carry you in the arms of prayer to that God, in whom your help is found.

O thou all-powerful Iehovab, that workest, and none can let thee; that hast the keys of •ell and of death: pity thou the dead souls that lie here intombed, and roll away the grave-stone, and say, as to Lazarus when already stinking, Come forth. Lighten thou this darkness, O inaccessible light, and let the day-spring from on high, visit the darksome region of the dead to whom I speak: for thou canst open the eyes that death itself hath closed. Thou that formedst the ear, canst restore the hearing. S•y thou to these ears, Ephatah, and they shall be opened. Give thou eyes to see thine excellencies•• a taste that may relish thy sweetness; a sent that may savor thine oin•ments, • a feeling that may sense the privilege of thy favor, the burden of thy wrath, the weight intolerable of unpardoned sin: and give thy servant command to prophesy to the dry bones, and let the effect of this prophesy be, as of thy Prophet's, when he prophesied the valley of dry bones, into a living army, exceeding great. Ezek. 37. 1. &c. The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley, which was full of bones. He said unto me, prophesy upon th•se bones, and say unto them; O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord: Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live. And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live, and ye shall know that I am the Lord. So I prophesied as I was commanded; and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and •ehold a shaking, and the bones came together bone to his bone. And when I behold, Loe the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and covered them above, but there was no breath in them. Then said he unto me; Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy son of man, and say to the wind; Thus saith the Lord God, C•me from the four winds, O breath, and breath upon these slain, that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

But I must proceed, as I am able, to unfold that misery, which I confess no tongue can unfold, no heart can sufficiently comprehend. Know therefore that while thou art unconverted,

1. The infinite God is engaged against thee.

It is no small part of thy misery, that thou art without God. Eph. 2. 12. How doth Micah run crying after the Danites, You have taken away my gods, and what have I more? Judges 18. 23, 24. Oh what a mourning then must thou lift up, that art without God, that canst lay no claim to him, without daring usurpation! Thou must say of God, as Sheba of David; We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. 2 Sam. 20. 1. How pitiful and piercing a moan is that of Saul, in his extremity; The Philistines are upon me, and God is departed from me? 1 Sam. 28. 15. Sinners, what will you do in the day of your visitation? whither will you flee for help? where will you leave your glory? Isaiah 10. 3. What will you do when the Philistines are upon you? when the world shall take its eternal leave of you, when you must bid your friends, houses, lands, Farewell for evermore? What will you do then, I say, that have never a God to go to? Will you call on him, will you cry to him for help? alas he will not own you; Prov. 1. 28, 29. he will not take any knowledge of you, but send you packing, with an I never knew you. Mat. 7. 23. They that know what 'tis to have a God to go to, a God to live upon, they know a little what a fearful misery it is, to be without God. This made that holy man cry out, Let me have a God, or nothing. Let me know him and his will, and what will please him, and how I may come to enjoy him, or would I had never had an understanding to know anything, &c.

But thou art not only without God, but God is against thee. Ezek. 5. 8, 9. Nah. 2. 13. Oh if God would but stand a neuter, though he did not own, nor help the poor sinner, his case were not so deeply miserable. Though God should give up the poor creature to the will of all his enemies, to do their worst with him; though he should deliver him over to the tormenters, Mat. 18. 34. that devils should tear and torture him to their utmost power and skill; yet this were not half so fearful. But God himself will set against the sinner, and believe it, 'tis a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Heb. 10. 31. There's no friend like him, no enemy like him. As much as Heaven is above the earth, Omnipotency above impotency, Infinity above nullity, so much more horrible is it, to fall into the hands of the living God, than into the paws of bears, or lions, yea furies, or devils. God himself will be thy tormenter; thy destruction shall come from the presence of the Lord. 2 Thess. 1. 9. Tophet is deep and large, and the wrath of the Lord like a river of brimstone doth kindle it. Isay. 30. 33. If God be against thee, who shall be for thee? If one man sin against another, the Judge shall judge him: but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him? 1 Sam. 2. 25. Thou, even thou art to be feared; and who shall stand in thy sight, when once thou art angry? Psal. 76. 7. Who is that god, that shall deliver you out of his hands? Dan. 3. 15. Can Mammon? Riches profit not in the day of wrath. Prov. 11. 4. Can Kings, or warriors? No, they shall cry to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand? Rev. 6. 15, 16, 17.

Sinner, methinks this should go like a dagger to thine heart, to know that God is thine enemy. Oh whither wilt thou go, where wilt thou shelter thee? There is no hope for thee unless thou lay down thy weapons, and sue out thy pardon, and get Christ to stand thy friend, and to make thy peace. If it were not for this, thou mightest go into some howling wilderness, and there pine in sorrow, and run mad for anguish of heart and horrible despair. But in Christ there is a possibility of mercy for thee, yea a proffer of mercy to thee, that thou mayest have God to be more for thee, than he is now against thee. But if thou wilt not forsake thy sins, nor turn thoroughly, and to purpose unto God, by a sound Conversion; the wrath of God abideth on thee, and he proclaims himself to be against thee, as in the Prophet Ezek. 5. 8. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I even I am against thee.

I. His face is against thee, Psal. 34. 16. The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them. Woe to them whom God shall set his face against. When he did but look upon the host of the Egyptians, how terrible was the consequence? Ezek. 14. 8. I will set my face against that man, and will make him a sign, and a proverb, and will cut him off from the midst of my people, and you shall know that I am the Lord. 2. His heart is against thee: He hateth all the workers of iniquity. Man, doth not thine heart tremble to think of thy being an object of God's hatred? Jer. 15. 1. Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people, cast them out of my sight. Zech. 7. 8. My soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me. 3. His hand is against thee. 1 Sam. 12. 15. 4. All his attributes are against thee.

First, His justice is like a flaming sword unsheathed against thee. If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgment, I will render vengeance is mine adversaries, and will reward them that hate me. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, &c. Deut. 32. 40, 41. So exact is Justice, that 'twill by no means clear the guilty. Exod. 34. 7. God will not discharge thee he will not hold thee guiltless, Exod. 20. 7. but will require the whole debt in person of thee unless thou canst make a scripture claim to Christ and his satisfaction. When the enlightened sinner looks on justice, and sees the balance in which he must be weighed, and the sword by which he must be executed, he feels an earth-quake in his breast. But Satan keeps this out of sight, and persuades the soul while he can; that the Lord is all made up of mercy, and so lulls it asleep in sin. Divine Justice is very strict; it must have satisfaction to the utmost farthing, it denounceth indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, to every soul that doth evil. Rom. 2. 8, 9. It curseth everyone that continueth not in everything, that is written in the Law to do it. Gal. 3. 10. The justice of God to the unpardoned sinner, that hath a sense of his misery, is more terrible, than the sight of the bailiff or creditour to the bankrupt debtor, or than the sight of the Judge and bench to the robber, or of the irons and gibbet to the guilty murderer. When justice sits upon life and death, oh what dreadful work doth it make with the wretched sinner? Bind him hand and foot, cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matt. 22. 13. Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire. Mat. 25. 41. This is the terrible sentence that justice pronounceth. Why sinner, by this severe justice must thou be tried; and as God liveth, this killing sentence shalt thou hear, unless thou repent and be converted.

Secondly, The holiness of God is full of antipathy against thee. Psal. 5. 4, 5. He is not only angry with thee (so he may be with his own children) but he hath a fixed, rooted, habitual displeasure against thee: he loathes thee, Zech. 11. 8. and what is done by thee, though for substance commanded by him: Isaiah 1. 14. Mal. 1. 10. As if a man should give his servant never so good meat to dress; yet if he should mingle filth, or poison with it, he would not touch it. God's nature is infinitely contrary to sin, and so he cannot but hate a sinner out of Christ.

Oh what a misery is this, to be out of the favor, yea under the hatred of God! Eccles. 5. 4. Ps. 9. 15. that God can as easily lay aside his nature, and cease to be God, as not to be contrary to thee, and detest thee, except thou be changed and renewed by grace! Oh sinner, how darest thou to think of the bright and radiant Sun of purity, upon the beauties, the glory of holiness that is in God! The Stars are not pure in his sight; Job 25. He humbleth himself to behold the things that are done in Heaven. Psal. 113. Oh those light and sparkling eyes of his! what do they espy in thee? and thou hast no interest in Christ neither, that he should plead for thee. Methinks I should hear thee crying out astonished, with the Bethshemites, Who shall stand before this holy Lord God? 1 Sam. 6. 20.

Thirdly, The Power of God is mounted like a mighty Cannon against thee. The glory of God's power is to be displayed, in the wonderful confusion and destruction of them that obey not the Gospel. 2. Thess. 1. 8, 9. He will make his power known in them, Rom. 9. 22. how mightily he can torment them. For this end he raiseth them up, that he may make his power known. Rom. 9. 17. O man, art thou able to make thy party good against thy maker? No more than a silly reed, against the Cedars of God; or a little cock-boat, against the tumbling ocean; or the children's bubbles, against the blustering winds. Sinner, the power of God's anger is against thee: Psal. 90. 11. and power and anger together, make fearful work. 'Twere better thou hadst all the world in arms against thee, than to have the power of God against thee. There is no escaping his hands, no breaking his prison. The Thunder of his power who can understand? Job 26. 14. Unhappy man that shall understand it by feeling it! If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him one of a thousand. He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength; who hath hardened himself against him, and prospered? Which removeth the mountains and they know it not which overturneth them in his anger. Which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble. Which commandeth the Sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the Stars. Behold he taketh away, who can hinder him? who will say unto him, What dost thou? If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do stoop under him. Job. 9. 3, 4, 5, 6, &c. And art thou a fit match for such an antagonist? Oh consider this, you that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you. Psal. 50. 22. Submit to mercy. Let not dust and stubble stand it out against the Almighty. Set not briars and thorns against him in battle, lest he go through them, and consume them together: but lay hold on his strength, that you may make peace with him. Isaiah 27. 4, 5. Woe to him that striveth with his maker. Isaiah 45. 9.

Fourthly, The wisdom of God is set to ruin thee, He hath ordained his arrows and prepared the instruments of death and made all things ready. Psa. 7. 11, 12. 13. His counsels are against thee, to contrive thy destruction. Ier. 18. 11. He laughs in himself, to see, how thou wilt be taken and ensnared in the evil day. Psal. 37. 13. The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day is coming. He sees how thou wilt come down mightily in a moment; how thou wilt wring thine hands, and tear thine hair, and eat thy flesh, and gnash thy teeth for anguish and astonishment of heart, when thou seest how thou art fallen remedilessly into the pit of destruction.

Fifthly, The Truth of God is sworn against thee. Psal. 95. 11. If he be true and faithful, thou must perish if thou goest on. Luke 13. 3. Unless he be false of his word, thou must die, except thou repent. Ezek. 33. 11. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself. 2 Tim. 2. 13. That is, he is faithful to his threatenings, as well as promises, and will show his faithfulness in our confusion, if we believe not. God hath told thee, as plain as it can be spoken; That if he wash thee not, thou hast no part in him. John 13. 8. That if thou livest after the flesh, thou shalt die; Rom. 8. 13. That except thou be converted, thou shalt in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; Mat. 18. 3. and he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself. Beloved, as the immutable faithfulness of God in his promise and oath, afford believers strong consolation; Heb. 6. 18. so they are to unbelievers, for strong consternation and confusion. O sinner, tell me, what shift dost thou make to think of all the threatenings of God's word, that stand upon record against thee? Dost thou believe their truth, or not? If not, thou art a wretched infidel, and not a Christian; and therefore give over the name and hopes of a Christian. But if thou dost believe them, O heart of steel that thou hast, that canst walk up and down in quiet, when the truth and faithfulness of God in engaged to destroy thee: that if God Almighty can do it, thou shalt surely perish, and be damned. Why man, the whole book of God doth testify against thee, while thou remainest un sanctified: it condemns thee in every leaf, and is to thee, like Ezekiel's roll, written within and without with lamentations, and mourning, and woe: Ezek. 2. 10. and all this shall surely come upon thee, and overtake thee, Deut. 28. 15. except thou repent. Heaven and earth shall pass away; but one jot, or tittle of this word shall never pass away. Mat. 5. 18.

Now put all this together, and tell me, if the case of the Unconverted be not deplorably miserable. As we read of some persons, that had bound themselves in an oath, and in a curse to kill Paul: so thou must know, O sinner, to thy terror, that all the attributes of the infinite God are bound in an oath to destroy thee: Heb. 3. 18. O man what wilt thou do? whither wilt thou fly? If God's Omniscieny can find thee, thou shalt not escape. If the true and faithful God will save his oath, perish thou must, except thou believe and repent. If the Almighty hath power to torment thee, thou shalt be perfectly miserable in soul and body to all eternity, unless it be prevented by thy speedy Conversion.

II. The whole creation of God is against thee. The whole creation (saith Paul) groaneth and travelleth in pain. Rom. 8. 22. But what is it that the creation groaneth under? Why, the fearful abuse that it is subject to, in serving the lusts of un sanctified men. And what is it that the creation groaneth for? why, for freedom and liberty from this abuse; for the creature is very unwillingly subject to this bondage. Rom. 8. 19, 20, 21. If the unreasonable and inanimate creatures had speech and reason, they would cry out under it, as a bondage unsufferable, to be abused by the ungodly, contrary to their natures, and the ends that the great Creator made them for. It is a passage of an eminent Divine; The liquor that the drunkard drinketh, if it had reason as well as a man, to know how shamefully 'tis abused and spoiled, it would groan in the barrels against him, it would groan in the cup against him, it would groan in his throat, in his belly against him. It would fly in his face, if it could speak. And if God should open the mouth of the creatures, as he did the mouth of Balaam's ass, the proud man's garments on his back would groan against him. There is never a creature, but if it had reason to know how 'tis abused, till a man is converted, 'twould groan against him. The land would groan to bear him, the air would groan to give him breathing, their houses would groan to lodge them, their beds would groan to ease them, their food to nourish them, their clothes to cover them, and every creature would groan to give them any help and comfort, so long as they live in sin against God. Thus far he. Methinks this should be a terror to an unconverted soul, to think, that he is a burden to the creation. Luke 13. 7. Cut it down why cumbereth it the ground. If the poor inanimate creatures could but speak, they would say to the ungodly, as Moses to Israel; Must we fetch you water out of the rock, ye rebels? Numb. 2. 10. Thy food would say, Lord, must I nourish such a wretch as this, and yield forth my strength for him, to dishonor thee withal? No, I will choke him rather, if thou wilt give me Commission: The very air would say, Lord, must I give this man breath, to set his tongue against Heaven, and scorn thy people, and vent his pride and wrath, and filthy communication, and helch out oaths and blasphemy against thee? No, if thou wilt but say the word, he shall be breathless for me. His poor beast would say, Lord, must I carry him upon his wicked designs? No, I will break his bones, I will end his days rather, if I may have but leave from thee. A wicked man the earth groans under him, and hell groans for him, till death satisfies both, and unburdens the earth, and stops the mouth of hell with him. While the Lord of Hosts is against thee, be sure the Hosts of the Lord are against thee, and all the creatures as it were up in arms, till upon a man's conversion, the controversy being taken up between God and him, he makes a covenant of peace with the creatures for him. Job 5. 22, 23, 24. Hos. 2. 18, 19, 20.

III. The roaring Lion hath his full power upon thee. 1 Pet. 5. 8. Thou art fast in the paw of that Lion, that is greedy to devour, in the snare of the devil, led captive by him at his will. 2 Tim. 2. 26. This is the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2. 2. His drudges they are, and his lusts they do. He is the ruler of the darkness of this world: Eph. 6. 12. that is, of ignorant sinners, that live in darkness. You pity the poor Indians, that worship the Devil for their God; but little think that 'tis your own case. Why 'tis the common misery of all the unsanctified, that the Devil is their God. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Not that they do intend to do him homage and worship; they will be ready to defy him, and him that should say so by them; but all this while they serve him, and come and go at his beck, and live under his government. His servants you are, to whom you yield yourselves to obey. Rom. 6. 16. Oh how many then will be found the real servants of the Devil that take themselves for no other than the children of God? He can no sooner offer a sinful delight or opportunity for your unlawful advantage, but you embrace it. If he suggest a lie, or prompt you to revenge, you readily obey. If he forbid you to read, or pray, you hearken to him, and therefore his servants you are. Indeed he lies behind the curtain, he acts in the dark, and sinners see not who setteth them on work: but all the while he leads them in a string. Doubtless the liar intends not a service to Satan, but his own advantage: yet 'tis he that stands in the corner unobserved, and putteth the thing into his heart. Act. 5. 3. John 8. 44. Questionless, Judas when he sold his master for money, and the Chaldeans and Sabaeans when they plundered Job, intended not to do the Devil a pleasure, but to satisfy their own covetous thirst: yet 'twas he that acted them in their wickedness. John 13. 27. Job 1. 12, 15, 17. Men may be very slaves and common drudges for the Devil, and never know it: nay they may please themselves in the thoughts of a happy liberty. 2 Pet. 2. 19.

Art thou yet in ignorance, and not turned from darkness to light? why thou art under the power of Satan. Act. 26. 18. Dost thou live in the ordinary and willful practice of any known sin? Know that thou art of the Devil. 1 John 3. 8. Dost thou live in strife, or envy, or malice? Verily he is thy father. John 8. 40, 41. Oh dreadful case! However Satan may provide his slaves with divers pleasures; Tit. 3. 3. yet it is but to toll them into endless perdition. The Serpent comes with the apple in his mouth, Oh but (with Eve) thou seest not the deadly sting in his tail. He that is now thy tempter, will be one day thy tormenter. Oh that I could but give thee to see how black a master thou servest, how filthy a drudgery thou dost, how merciless a tyrant thou gratifyest, all whose pleasure is, to set thee on work to make thy perdition and damnation sure, and to heat the furnace hotter and hotter, in which thou must burn for millions of millions of ages.

IV. The guilt of all thy sins lies like a mountain upon thee. Poor soul! Thou feel'st it not, but this is that which seals thy misery upon thee. While unconverted, none of thy sins are blotted out: Act. 3. 19. they are all upon the score against thee. Regeneration and remission are never separated: the unsanctified are unquestionably unjustified, and unpardoned. 1 Cor. 6. 11. 1 Pet. 1. 2. Heb. 9. 14. Beloved, it's a fearful thing to be in debt, but above all in God's debt: for there is no arrest so formidable as his, no prison so horrible as his. Look upon an enlightened sinner, who feels the weight of his own guilt, and oh how frightful are his looks, how fearful are his complaints! His comforts are turned into Wormwood, and his moisture into drought, and his sleep departeth from his eyes. He is a terror to himself and all that are about him, and is ready to envy the very stones that lie in the street, because these are senseless, and feel not his misery; and wishes, he had been a dog, or a toad, or serpent rather than a man, because then death had put an end to his misery, whereas now it will be but the beginning of that, which will know no ending.

How light soever you may make of it now, you will one day find the guilt of unpardoned sin to be a heavy burden. This is a millstone that whosoever falleth upon it shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall, it shall grind him to powder. Mat. 21. 44. What work did it make with our Savior? it pressed the very blood (to a wonder) out of his veins, and broke all his bones: and if it did this in the green tree, what will it do in the dry?

Oh think of thy case in time. Canst thou think of that threat without trembling, Ye shall die in your sins? John 8. 24. Oh better were it for thee to die in a gaol, die in a ditch, in a dungeon, than die in thy sins. If death, as it will take away all thy other comforts, would take away thy sins too, it were some mitigation. But thy sins will follow thee, when thy friends leave thee, and all worldly enjoyments shake hands with thee. Thy sins will not die with thee, 2 Cor. 5. 10. Rev. 20. 12. as a prisoners other debts will; but they will to judgment with thee, there to be thine accusers; and they will to Hell with thee, there to be thy tormentors. Better to have so many fiends and furies about thee, than thy sins to fall upon thee and fasten in thee. Oh the work that these will make with thee! Oh look over thy debts in time. How much art thou in the books of everyone of God's laws? How is everyone of God's commandments ready to arrest thee, and take thee by the throat, for innumerable bonds that it hath upon thee? What wilt thou then do, when they shall altogether lay in against thee? Hold open the eyes of conscience to consider this, that thou mayest despair of thyself, and be driven to Christ, and fly for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope that is set before thee. Heb. 6. 18.

V. Thy raging lusts do miserably enslave thee. While unconverted, thou art a very servant of sin: it reigns over thee, and holds thee under its dominion, till thou art brought within the bond of God's covenant. John 8. 34, 36. Tit. 3. 3. Rom. 6. 12, 14. Rom. 6. 16, 17. Now there's no such Tyrant as sin. Oh the filthy and fearful work, that it doth engage its servants in! Would it not pierce a man's heart to see a company of poor Creatures drudging and toiling, and all to carry together faggots and fuel for their own burning? Why, this is the employment of sins drudges. Even while they bless themselves in their unrighteous gains, while they sing and swill in pleasures, they are but treasuring up wrath and vengeance for their eternal burning; they are but lying in Powder and bullets, and adding to the pile of Tophet, and flinging in oil to make the flames rage the fiercer. Who would serve such a master, whose work is drudgery, and whose wages is death? Rom. 6. 23.

What a woeful spectacle was that poor wretch possessed with the legion? would it not have pityed thine heart to have seen him among the tombs, cutting, and wounding of himself? Mark 5. 5. This is thy case, such is thy work. Every stroke is a thrust at thine heart. 1 Tim. 6. 10. Conscience indeed is now asleep; but when death and judgment shall bring thee to thy senses, then thou wilt feel the raging smart and anguish of every wound. The convinced sinner is a sensible instance of the miserable bondage of sin. Conscience flies upon him, and tells him what the end of these courses will be: and yet such a slave is he to his lusts, that on he must, though he see it will be his endless perdition: and when the temptation comes, lust gets the bit in its mouth, breaks all the cords of his vows and promises, and carries him headlong to his own destruction.

VI. The furnace of eternal vengeance is heated ready for thee. Isaiah 30. 33. Hell and destruction open their mouths upon thee, they gape for thee, they groan for thee, Isaiah 5. 14. waiting as it were with a greedy eye, as thou standest upon the brink, when thou wilt drop in. If the wrath of a man may be, as the roaring of a Lion, Prov. 19. 12. more heavy than the sand; Prov. 27. 3. What is the wrath of the infinite God? If the burning furnace heated in Nebuchadnezar's fiery rage, when he commanded it to be made yet seven times hotter, were so fierce as to burn up even those that drew near it, to throw the three children in: Dan. 3. 19, 22. How hot is that burning oven of the Almighty's fury? Mal. 4. 1. Surely this is seventy times seven more fierce. What thinkest thou, O man, of being a faggot in Hell to all eternity? Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the day that I shall deal with thee, saith the Lord of hosts? Ezek. 22. 14. Canst thou dwell with everlasting burnings? Canst thou abide the consuming fire? Isaiah 33. 14. When thou shalt be as a glowing Iron in Hell, and thy whole body and soul shall be as perfectly possessed by God's burning vengeance, as the fiery sparkling iron, when heated in the fiercest forge? Thou canst not bear God's whip: how then wilt thou endure his scorpions?

Thou art even crushed, and ready to wish thyself dead, under the weight of his finger: how then wilt thou bear the weight of his loins? The most patient man that ever was, did curse the day that ever he was born, Job 3. 1. and even woo death to come and end his misery, Job 7. 15, 16. when God did but let out one little drop of his wrath. How then wilt thou endure, when God shall pour out all his vials, and set himself against thee to torment thee? When he shall make thy conscience the tunnel, by which he will be pouring his burning wrath into thy soul forever; and when he shall fill all thy powers as full of torment, as they be now full of sin? When immortality shall be thy misery, and to die the death of a brute, and be swallowed into the gulf of annihilation, shall be such a felicity, as a whole eternity of wishes, and an Ocean of tears shall never purchase? Now thou canst put off the evil day, and canst laugh and be merry, and forget the terror of the Lord: 2 Cor. 5. 11. but how wilt thou hold out, or hold up, when God shall cast thee into a bed of torments, Rev. 2. 22. and make thee to lie down in sorrows? Isaiah 50. 11. When roarings and blasphemy shall be thine only music, and the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation, shall be thine only drink? Rev. 14. 10. When thou shalt draw in flames for thy breath, and the horrid stench of sulphur shall be thine only perfume? In a word, when the smoke of thy torment shall ascend forever and ever, and thou shalt have no rest night nor day, no rest in thy conscience, no ease in thy bones, but thou shalt be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach for evermore? Ier. 42. 18.

Oh sinner, stop here; and consider. If thou art a man and not a senseless block, consider. Bethink thyself where thou standest: why upon the very brim of this furnace. As the Lord liveth and thy soul liveth, there is but a step between thee and this. 1 Sam. 20. 3. Thou knowest not, when thou liest down, but thou mayest be in before the morning: thou knowest not when thou risest but thou mayest drop in before the night. Darest thou make light of this? wilt thou go on in such a dreadful condition, as if nothing ailed thee? If thou puttest it off, and sayest, this doth not belong to thee; look again over the foregoing Chapter, and tell me the truth, are none of those black marks found upon thee? Do not blind thine eyes, do not deceive thyself: see thy misery while thou mayest prevent it. Think what 'tis to be a vile cast-out, a damned reprobate, a vessel of wrath, into which the Lord will be pouring out his tormenting fury, while he hath a being. Rom. 9. 22.

Divine wrath is a fierce, Deut. 32. 22. devouring, Isaiah 33. 14. everlasting, Mat. 25. 41. unquenchable fire; Mat. 3. 12. and thy soul and body must be the fuel upon which it will be feeding forever, unless thou consider thy ways, and speedily turn to the Lord by a sound conversion. They that have been only singed by this fire, and had no more but the smell thereof passing upon them, Oh what amazing spectacles have they been. Whose heart would not have melted, to have heard Spira's outcries, to have seen Chaloner that monument of justice, worn to skin and bones blaspheming the God of Heaven, cursing himself, and continually crying out, O torture, torture, torture, O torture, torture, as if the flames of wrath had already took hold of him? To have heard Rogers crying out, I have had a little pleasure, and now I must to Hell for evermore; wishing but for this mitigation, that God would but let him lie burning forever behind the back of that fire (on the hearth) and bringing in this sad conclusion still, at the end of whatever was spoken to him to afford him some hope, I must to Hell, I must to the furnace of Hell, for millions of millions of ages. Oh if the fears and fore thoughts of the wrath to come be so terrible, so intolerable, what is the feeling of it!

Sinners, 'tis but in vain to flatter you; this would be but to toll you into the unquenchable fire: know ye from the living God, that here you must lie, with these burnings must you dwell, till immortality die, and immutability change, till Eternity run out, and omnipotency is no longer able to torment, except you be in good earnest renewed throughout by sanctifying grace.

VII. The Law dischargeth all its threats and curses at thee. Gal. 3. 10. Rom. 7. Oh how dreadfully doth it thunder? It spits fire and brimstone in thy face. Its words are as drawn swords, and as the sharp arrows of the mighty. It demands satisfaction to the uttermost, and cries, Justice, Justice. It speaks blood, and war, and wounds, and death against thee. Oh the execrations, and plagues, and deaths, that this murdering-piece is loaded with! (read Deut. 28. 15, 16. &c.) and thou art the mark at which this shot is levelled. O man, away to the strong hold, Zech. 9. 12. away from thy sins: haste to the sanctuary, the City of refuge, Heb 6. 18. even the Lord Jesus Christ; hide thee in him, or else thou art lost without any hope of recovery.

VIII. The Gospel itself binds the sentence of eternal condemnation upon thee. Mark 16. 16. If thou continuest in thine impenitent and unconverted estate, know, that the Gospel denounceth a much sorer condemnation, than ever would have been for the transgression only o the first covenant. Is it not a dreadful case, to have the Gospel itself fill its mouth with threats, and thunder, and damnation? To have the Lord to roar from mount Zion against thee? Joel 3. 16. Hear the terror of the Lord: He that believeth not shall be damned. Except ye repent, ye shall all perish. Luke 13. 3. This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light. John. 3. 19. He that believeth not, the wrath of God abideth on him. John 3. 36. If the word spoken by Angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward: how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? Heb. 2. 2, 3. He that despised Moses law, died without mercy: Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, that hath trampled underfoot the son of God? Heb. 10. 28, 29.

Application. And is it true indeed? is this thy misery? yea 'tis as true as God is. Better open thine eyes and see it now, while thou mayest remedy it, than blind and harden thyself, till, to thy eternal sorrow, thou shalt feel what thou wouldest not believe: and if it be true, what dost thou mean to loiter, and linger in such a case as this?

Alas for thee poor man, how effectually hath sin undone thee, and depraved thee, and despoiled thee even of the reason to look after thine own everlasting good! Oh miserable Caitiff, what stupour and senselessness hath surprised thee! Oh let me knock up and awake this sleep•r. Who dwells within the walls of this flesh? Is there ever a soul here, a rational understanding soul? Or art thou only a walking ghost, a senseless lump? Art thou a reasonable soul, and yet so far brutified, as to forget thyself immortal, and to think thyself to be as the beasts that perish? Art thou turned into flesh, that thou savorest nothing but gratifying the sense, and making provision for the flesh? Or else having reason to understand the eternity of thy future state, dost thou yet make light of being everlastingly miserable? which is to be so much below a brute, as it is worse to act against reason, than to act without it. Oh unhappy soul, that wast the glory of man, the mate of Angels, and the image of God! that wast God's representative in the world, and hadst the supremacy amongst the creatures, and the dominion over thy makers works! Art thou now become a slave to sense, a servant to so base an idol, as thy belly? for no higher felicity, than to fill thee with the wind of man's applause, or heaping together a little refined earth, no more suitable to thy spiritual, immortal nature, than the dirt, and sticks? Oh why dost thou not bethink thee, where thou shalt be forever? Death is at hand. The Judge is even at the door. James 5. 9. Yet a little while, and time shall be no longer. Rev. 10. 5, 6. And wilt thou run the hazard of continuing in such a state, in which if thou be overtaken, thou art irrecoverably miserable.

Come then, arise, and intend thy nearest concernments. Tell me wither art thou going? What, wilt thou live in such a course, wherein every act is a step to perdition? and thou dost not know, but the next night, thou mayest make thy bed in Hell? Oh! if thou hast a spark of reason, consider, and turn, and hearken to thy very friend, who would therefore show thee thy present misery, that thou mightest in time make thine escape, and be eternally happy.

Hear what the Lord saith; Fear ye not me saith the Lord? Will ye not tremble at my presence? Ier. 5. 22. Oh sinners, do you make light of the wrath to come? Mat. 3. 7. I am sure there is a time coming, when you will not make light of it. Why, the very Devils do believe and tremble. James 2. 19. What, you more hardened than they? Will you run upon the edge of the rock? will you play at the hole of the Asp? will you put your hand upon the Cockatrice den? Will you dance about the fire, till you are burnt? or dally with devouring wrath, as if you were at a point of indifferency, whether you did escape it, or endure it? Oh madness of folly! Solomon's mad man, that casteth firebrands, and arrows, and death, and faith, am I not in jest? Prov. 26. 18. is nothing so distracted as the willful sinner, Luke 15. 17. that goeth on in his unconverted estate without sense, as if nothing ailed him. The man that runs on the Cannons mouth, that sports with his blood, or lets out his life in a frolic, is sensible, sober and serious, to him that goeth on still in his trespasses. Psal. 68. 21. For he stretcheth out his hand against God, and strengtheneth himself against the ALMIGHTY. He runneth upon him, even upon his neck, upon the thick bosses of his buckler. Job. 15. 25, 26. Is it wisdom to play with the second death, or to venture into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, Rev 21. 8. as if thou wert but going to wash thee or swim for thy recreation? Wilt thou as it were fetch thy vieze, and jump into eternal flames, as the children through the bonfire? What shall I say? I can find out no expression, no comparison whereby to set forth the dreadful distraction of that soul, that shall go on in sin.

Awake, awake, Eph. 5. 14. oh sinner: arise and take thy flight. There is but one door that thou mayest fly by, and that is the strait door of conversion and the new birth. Unless thou turn unfeignedly from all thy sins, and come in to Jesus Christ, and take him for the Lord thy righteousness, and walk in him in Holiness and newness of life, as the Lord liveth, it is not more certain that thou art now out of Hell, than that thou shalt without fail be in it, but a few days and nights from hence. Oh set thine heart to think of thy case: Is not thine everlasting misery or welfare, that which doth deserve a little consideration? Look again over the miseries of the unconverted. If the Lord hath not spoken by me, regard me not. But if it be the very word of God, that all this misery lies upon thee, what a case art thou in? Is it for one that hath his senses to live in such a condition, and not to make all possible expedition for preventing his utter ruin? O man, who hath bewitched thee, Gal. 3. 1. that in the matters of the present life thou shouldst be wise enough to forecast thy business, foresee, thy danger, and prevent the mischief; but in matters of everlasting consequence shouldst be slight and careless, as if they little concerned thee? Why, is it nothing to thee to have all the attributes of God engaged against thee? Canst thou do well without his favor? Canst thou escape his hands, or endure his vengeance? Dost thou hear the creation groaning under thee, and Hell groaning for thee, and yet think thy case good enough? Art thou in the paw of the Lion, under the power of corruption, in the dark and noisome prison, fettered with thy lusts, working out thine own damnation, and is not this worth the considering? Wilt thou make light of all the terrors of the law, of all its curses, and thunderbolts, as if they were but the reports of the children's pop-guns, or thou wert to war with their paper pellets? Dost thou laugh at Hell and destruction, or canst drink the envenomed cup of the Almighty's fury, as if it were but a common potion?

Gird up now thy loins like a man, for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Job 40. 7. Art thou such a Leviathan, as that the scales of thy pride should keep thee from thy makers coming at thee? Wilt thou esteem his arrows as straw, and the instruments of death as rotten wood? Art thou chief of all the children of pride, even that thou shouldst count his darts as stubble, and laugh at the shaking of his spear? Art thou made without fear, and contemnest his barbed irons? Job. 41. Art thou like the horse, that paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength: he goeth out to meet the armed men? Dost thou mock at fear and art not affrighted, neither turnest back from God's sword? when his quiver rattleth against thee, the glittering Spear and the shield? Job. 39. 21, 22, 23. Well, if the threats and calls of the word will not fear thee, nor awaken thee, I am sure death and judgment will. Oh what wilt thou do when the Lord cometh forth against thee, and in his fury falleth upon thee, and thou shalt feel what thou readest? If when Daniel's enemies were cast into the den of Lions both they and their wives, and their children, the Lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces, ere ever they came at the bottom of the den: Dan. 6. 24. what shall be done with thee, when thou fallest into the hands of the living God? when he shall gripe thee in his iron arms, and grind and crush thee to a thousand pieces in his wrath?

Oh do not then contend with God. Repent and be converted, so none of this shall come upon thee. Isaiah 55. 6, 7. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and he will have mercy on him, and to our God for he will abundantly pardon.

CHAP. VI.

Containing Directions for Conversion.

Mark 10. 17. And there came one, and kneeled to him, and asked him; Good Master, what shall I do, that I may inherit eternal life?

BEfore thou readest these Directions, I advise thee, yea I charge thee before God, and his holy Angels, to resolve to follow them, (as far as conscience shall be convinced of their agreeableness to God's word, and thy estate,) and call in his assistance, and blessing that they may succeed. And as I have sought the Lord, and consulted his oracles, what advice to give thee; so must thou entertain it, with that awe, reverence, and purpose of obedience, that the word of the living God doth require.

Now then attend. Set thine heart unto all that I shall testify unto thee this day, for it is not a vain thing, it is your life. Deut. 32. 46. This is the end of all that hath been spoken hitherto, to bring you to set upon turning, and making use of God's means for your Conversion. I would not trouble you, nor torment you before the time with the forethoughts of your eternal misery, but in order to your making your escape. Were you shut up under your present misery, without remedy, it were but mercy (as one speaks) to let you alone, that you might take in that little poor comfort, that you are capable of, here in this world. But you may yet be happy, if you do not willfully refuse the means of your recovery. Behold, I hold open the door unto you: arise and take your flight. I set the way of life before you, walk in it, and you shall live, and not die. Deut. 30. 19. Ier. 9. 16. It pities me to think, you should be your own murderers, and throw yourselves headlong, when God and men cry out to you, as Peter in another case to his Master, Spare thyself. A noble Virgin, that attended the Court of Spain, was wickedly ravished by the King; and hereupon exciting the Duke her Father to revenge, he called in the Moors to his help: who, when they had executed his design, miserably wasted and spoiled the Country: which this Virgin laying exceedingly to heart, shut herself up in a Tower belonging to her Fathers house, and desired her Father and Mother might be called forth: and bewailing to them her own wretchedness, that she should have occasioned so much misery and desolation to her Country, for the satisfying of her revenge, she told them, she was resolved to be avenged upon herself. Her Father and mother besought her to pity herself, and them: but nothing would prevail, but she took her leave of them, and threw herself off the battlements, and so perished before their faces.

Just such is the willful destruction of ungodly men. The God that made them beseecheth them, and crieth out to them, as Paul to the distracted Jailor, when about to murder himself, Do thyself no harm. The Ministers of Christ forewarn them and follow them, and fain would hold them back. But alas! No expostulations, nor obtestations will prevail; but men will hurl themselves into perdition, while pity itself looketh on.

What shall I say? would it not grieve a person of any humanity, if in the time of a reigning plague he should have a receipt (as one well) that would infallibly cure all the Country, and recover the most hopeless patients, and yet his friends and neighbors should die by the hundreds about him because they would not use it? Men and brethren, though you carry the certain symptoms of death in your faces, yet I have a receipt that will cure you all, that will cure infallibly. Follow but these few directions, and if you do not then win Heaven, I will be content to lose it.

Hear then, O sinner, and as ever thou wouldst be converted and saved, embrace this following counsel.

Direct. I. Set it down with thyself as an undoubted truth, that it is impossible for thee ever to get to Heaven, in this thine unconverted estate. Can any other but Christ save thee? And he tells thee he will never do it, except thou be regenerated and converted. Mat. 18. 3. John. 3. 3. Doth not he keep the keys of Heaven? And canst thou get in without his leave, as thou must, if ever thou comest thither in thy natural condition, without a sound and through renovation?

Dir. II. Labor to get a thorough sight and lively sense and feeling of thy sins. Till men are weary and heavy laden, and pricked at the heart, and stark sick of sin, they will not come to Christ in his way, for ease and cure, nor to purpose enquire, What shall we do? Mat. 11. 28. Act. 2. 37. Mat. 9. 12. They must set themselves down for dead men, before they will come unto Christ, that they may have life, John 5. 40. Labor therefore to set all thy sins in order before thee. Never be afraid to look upon them, but let thy spirit make diligent search. Psal. 77. 6. Enquire into thine heart, and into thy life. Enter into a thorough examination of thyself, and of all thy ways, Psal. 119. 59. that thou mayest make a full discovery; and call in the help of God's spirit, in the sense of thine own inability hereunto: for it is his proper work to convince of sin. John 16. 8. Spread all before the face of thy conscience, till thine heart and eyes be set abroad. Leave not striving with God, and thine own soul, till it cry out under the sense of thy sins, as the enlightened Jailor, What must I do to be saved? Acts 16. 30. To this purpose

Meditate of the Numerousness of thy sins. David's heart failed when he thought of this, and considered that he had more sins than hairs. Psal. 40. 12. This made him to cry out upon the multitudes of God's tender mercies. Psal. 51. 1. The loathsome carcase doth not more hatefully swarm with crawling worms, than an unsanctified soul with filthy lusts. They fill the head, the heart, the eyes and mouth of him. Look backward, where was ever the place, what was ever the time, in which thou didst not sin? Look inward, what part or power canst thou find in soul or body, but it is poisoned with sin? What duty dost thou ever perform, into which this poison is not shed? Oh how great is the sum of thy debts, who hast been all thy life long running upon the books, and never didst, nor canst pay off one penny? Look over the sin of thy nature, and all its cursed brood, the sins of thy life. Call to mind thine Omissions, Commissions, the sins of thy thoughts, of thy words, of thine actions; the sins of thy youth, the sins of thy years &c. Be not like a desperate bankrupt, that is afraid to look over his books. Read the records of conscience carefully, these books must be opened sooner, or later. Rev. 20. 12.

Meditate upon the aggravations of thy sins, as they are the grand enemies against the God of thy life, against the life of thy soul: in a word they are the public enemies of all mankind. How do David, Ezra, Daniel and the good Levites aggravate their sins, from the consideration of their injuriousness to God, their opposition to his good and righteous Laws, the mercies, the warnings that they were committed against. Nehem. 9. Dan. 9. Ezra. 9. Oh the work that sin hath made in the world! This is the enemy that hath brought in death, that hath robbed and enslaved man, that hath blacked the devil, that hath digged hell; Rom. 5. 12. 2 〈ϕ〉 2. 4. John 8. 34. this is the enemy that hath turned the creation upside down, and sown dissension between man and the creatures, between man and man, yea between man and himself, setting the sensitive part against the rational, will against judgment, lust against conscience; yea worst of all, between God and man, making the lapsed sinner both hateful to God, and a hater of him. Zech. 11. 8. O man, how canst thou make so light of sin? This is the traitor, that sucked the blood of the Son of God, that sold him, that mocked him, that scourged him, that spat in his face, that digged his hands, that pierced his side, that pressed his soul, that mangled his body, that never lested, till it had bound him, condemned him, nailed him, crucified him, and put him to open shame. Isaiah 53. 4, 5, 6. This is that deadly poison, so powerful of operation, as that one drop of it, shed upon the root of mankind, hath corrupted, spoiled, and poisoned, and undone his whole race at once. Rom. 5. 18, 19. This is the common butcher, the bloody executioner, that hath killed the Prophets, that hath burnt the Martyrs, that hath murdered all the Apostles, all the Patriarchs, all the Kings and Potentates, that hath destroyed Cities, swallowed Empires, butchered and devoured whole Nations. Whatever was the weapon that 'twas done by, sin was it that did the execution. Rom. 6. 23. Dost thou yet think it but a small thing? If Adam and all his children could be digged out of their graves, and their bodies piled up to Heaven, and an inquest were made, what matchless murderer were guilty of all this blood: it would be all found in the skirts of sin. Study the nature of sin, till thy heart be brought to fear and loath it. And meditate on the aggravations of thy particular sins, how thou hast sinned against all God's warnings, against thine own prayers, against mercies, against corrections, against clearest light, against freest love, against thine own resolutions, against promises, vows, covenants of better obedience, &c. charge thy heart home with these things, till it blush for shame, and be brought out of all good opinion of itself. Ezra 9. 6.

Meditate upon the desert of sin. It crieth up to Heaven: it calls for vengeance. Gen. 18. 20. Its due wages is death, damnation. It pulls the curse of God upon the soul and body. Gal. 3. 10. Deut. 28. The least sinful word, or thought, lays thee under the infinite wrath of God Almighty. Rom. 2. 8, 9. Mat. 12. 36. Oh what a load of wrath, what a weight of curses, what a treasure of vengeance have all the millions of thy sins then deserved! Rom. 2. 5. John. 3. 36. Oh judge thyself that the Lord may not judge thee. 1 Cor. 11. 31.

Meditate upon the deformity, and defilement of sin. 'Tis as black as hell, the very image and likeness of the Devil drawn upon thy soul. 1 John 3. 8, 10. It would more affright thee, to see thyself in the hateful deformity of thy nature, than to see the devil. There is no mire so unclean, no vomit so loathsome, no carcase or carrion so offensive, no plague or leprosy so noisome as sin, in which thou art all enrolled, 〈◊〉 covered with its odious filth, whereby 〈◊〉 art rendered more displeasing to the pure and holy nature of the glorious God, than the most filthy object, composed of whatever is hateful to all thy senses, can be to thee. Job 15. 15, 16. Couldst thou take up a toad into thy bosom? Couldst thou cherish it and take delight in it? Why, thou art as contrary to the pure and perfect holiness of the divine nature, and as loathsome as that is to thee, Mat. 23. 33. till thou art purified by the blood of Jesus, and the power of renewing grace.

Above all other sins, fix the eye of Consideration on these two. 1. The sin of thy nature. 'Tis to little purpose to lop off the branches, while the root of original corruption remains untouched. In vain do men lave out the streams, when the fountain is still running, that fills up all again. Let the axe of thy repentance (with David's) go to the root of sin. Psal. 51. 5. Study thy natural pollution; how universal it is, how deep, how close, how permanent it is, till thou dost cry out with Paul's feeling, upon thy body of death. Rom. 7. 24. Look into all thy parts and powers, and see what unclean vessels, what styes, what dunghills, what sinks they are become. Heu miser, quid sum? vas ferquilinii, concha putredinis, plenus foetore & horrore. August. Solil. c. 2. The heart is never soundly broken, till thoroughly convinced of the heynousness of original sin. Here fix thy thoughts. This is that, that makes thee backward to all good, prone to all evil; Rom. 7. 15. that sheds blindness, pride, prejudices, unbelief into thy mind; enmity, inconstancy, obstinacy, into thy will; inordinate heats and colds into thy affections; insensibleness, benumbedness, unfaithfulness into thy conscience, slipperiness into thy memory, and in a word hath put every wheel of thy soul out of order, and made it of an habitation of holiness, to become a very hell of iniquity. James 3. 6. This is that that hath defiled, corrupted, perverted all thy members, and turned them into weapons of unrighteousness, and servants of sin; Rom. 6. 19. that hath filled the head with carnal and corrupt designs, Mic. 2. 1. the hands with sinful practices, Isaiah 1. 15. the eyes with wandering and wantonness, 2 Pet. 2. 14. the tongue with deadly poison; James 3. 8. that hath opened the ears to tales, flattery, and filthy communication, and shut them against the instruction of life; Zech. 7. 11, 12. and hath rendered thy heart a very mint and forge of sin, and the cursed womb of all deadly conceptions; Mat. 15. 19. so that it poureth forth its wickedness without ceasing, 2 Pet. 2. 14 even as naturally, freely, unweariedly, as a fountain doth pour forth its water, Ier. 6. 7. or the raging Sea doth cast forth mire and dirt. Isaiah 57. 20. And wilt thou yet be in love with thyself, and tell us any longer of thy good heart? O never leave meditating on this desperate contagion of original corruption, till with Ephraim thou bemoan thyself, Ier. 31. 18. and with deepest shame and sorrow smite on thy breast as the publican, Luk. 18. 13. and with Job abhor thyself and repent in dust and ashes. Job 42. 6. 2. The particular evil that thou art most addicted to. Find out all its aggravations. Set home upon thy heart all God's threatenings against it. Repentance drives before it the whole herd; but especially sticks the arrow in the beloved sin, and singles this out, above the rest, to run it down. Psal. 18. 23. Oh labor to make this sin odious to thy soul, and double thy guards, and thy resolutions against it, because this hath, and doth, most dishonor God, and endanger thee.

Dir. III. Strive to affect thy heart with a deep sense of thy present misery. Read over the foregoing Chapter again and again, and get it out of the book into thine heart. Remember when thou liest down, that for ought thou knowest, thou mayest awake in flames, and when thou risest up, that by the next night thou mayest make thy bed in hell. Is it a jesting matter to live in such a fearful case? to stand tottering upon the brink of the bottomless pit, and to live at the mercy of every disease, that if it will but fall upon thee, will send thee forthwith into the burnings? Suppose thou sawest a condemned wretch hanging over Nebuch•dnezar's burning fiery furnace by nothing but a twine thread, which were ready to break every moment: would not thine heart tremble for such a one? Why, thou art the man. This is thy very case, O man, woman, that readest this, if thou be yet unconverted. What if the thread of thy life should break? (Why, thou knowest not but it may be the next night, yea the next moment) where wouldst thou be then? whither wouldst thou drop? verily, upon the crack but of this thread, thou fallest into the lake, that burneth with fire and brimstone, where thou must lie scalding and sweltering in a fiery ocean, while God hath a being, if thou die in thy present case. And doth not thy soul tremble as thou readest? Do not thy tears bedew the paper, and thy heart throb in thy bosom? Dost thou not yet begin to smite on thy breast, and bethink thyself, what need thou hast of a change? Oh what is thy heart made of! Hast thou not only lost all regard to God, but art without any love and pity to thyself?

Oh study thy misery, till thy heart do cry out for Christ, as earnestly, as ever a drowning man did for a boat, or the wounded for a Chirurgeon. Men must come to see the danger, and feel the smart of their deadly sores and sickness, or else Christ will be to them a physician of no value. Mat. 9. 12. Then the manslayer hastens to the City of refuge, when pursued by the avenger of blood. Men must be even forced, and fired out of themselves, or else they will not come to Christ. 'Twas distress and extremity, that made the prodigal think of returning. Luke 15. 16, 17. While Laodicea thinks herself rich, increased in goods, in need of nothing, there is little hope. She must be deeply convinced of her wretchedness, blindness, poverty, nakedness, before she will come to Christ for his gold, raiment, eyesalve. Rev. 3. 17, 18. Therefore hold the eyes of conscience open, amplify thy misery, as much as possible. Do not fly the sight of it, for fear it should fill thee with terror. The sense of thy misery is but, as it were, the suppuration of the wound, which is necessary to the cure. Better fear the torments that abide thee now, than feel them hereafter.

Dir. IV. Settle it upon thine heart, that thou art under an everlasting inability ever to recover thyself. Never think thy praying, reading, hearing, confessing, amending will do the cure. These must be attended; but thou art undone if thou retest in them. Rom. 10. 3. Thou art a lost man, if thou hopest to escape drowning upon any other plank, but Jesus Christ. Act. 4. 12. Thou must unlearn thyself, and renounce thine own wisdom, thine own righteousness, thine own strength, and throw thyself wholly upon Christ, as a man that swimmeth casteth himself upon the water, or else thou canst not escape. While men trust in themselves, and establish their own righteousness, and have confidence in the flesh, they will not come savingly to Christ. Luke 18. 19. Phil. 3. 3. Thou must know thy gain to be but loss and dung, thy strength but weakness, thy righteousness rags and rottenness, before there will be an effectual closure between Christ and thee. Phil. 3. 7, 8, 9. 2 Cor. 3. 5. Isaiah 64. 6. Can the lifeless carcase shake off his grave-cloths, and loose the bonds of death? Then mayest thou recover thyself, who art dead in trespasses, and sins, and under an impossibility of serving thy maker (acceptably) in this condition. Rom. 8. 8. Heb. 11. 6. Therefore, when thou goest to pray, or meditate, or to do any of the duties, to which thou art here directed; go out of thyself, call in the help of the spirit, as despairing to do anything pleasing to God, in thine own strength. Yet neglect not thy duty, but lie at the pool, and wait in the way of the spirit. While the Eunuch was reading, then the Holy-Ghost sent Philip to him. Act. 8. 28, 29. When the disciples were praying, Act. 4. 31. when Cornelius and his friends were hearing, Act. 10. 44. then the Holy-Ghost fell upon them and filled them all. Strive to give up thyself to Christ. Strive to pray, strive to meditate, strive an hundred and an hundred times, try to do it as well as thou canst, and while thou art endeavoring in the way of thy duty, the spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and help thee to do, what of thyself thou art utterly unable unto. Prov. 1. 23.

Dir. V. Forthwith renounce all thy sins. If thou yield thyself to the ordinary practice of any sin, thou art undone. Rom. 6. 16. In vain dost thou hope for life by Christ, except thou depart from iniquity. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Forsake thy sins, or else thou canst not find mercy. Prov. 28. 13. Thou canst not be married to Christ, except divorced from sin. Give up the traitor or you can have no peace with Heaven. Cast the head of Sheba over the wall. Keep not Delilah in thy lap. Thou must part with thy sins, or with thy soul. Spare but one sin, and God will not spare thee. Never make excuses: thy sins must die, or thou must die for them. Psal. 68. 21. If thou allow of one sin, though but a little, a secret one, though thou mayest plead necessity, and have a hundred shifts and excuses for it, the life of thy soul must go for the life of that sin; Ezek. 18. 21. and will it not be dearly bought?

O sinner, hear and consider. If thou wilt part with thy sins, God will give thee his Christ: is not this a fair exchange? I testify unto thee this day, that if thou perish, it is not because there was never a Savior provided, nor life tendered: but because thou preferredst (with the Jews) the murderer before a Savior, sin before Christ, and lovedst darkness rather than light. John 3. 19. Search thy heart therefore with candles, as the Jews did their houses for leaven, before the passover: labor to find out thy sins. Enter into thy closet, and consider, What evil have I lived in? what duty have I neglected towards God? what sin have I lived in against my brother? and now strike the darts through the heart of thy sin, as Joab did through Absalom's. 2 Sam. 18. 14. Never stand looking upon thy sin, nor rolling the morsel under thy tongue: Job 20. 12. but spit it out as poison, with fear and detestation. Alas, what will thy sins do for thee, that thou shouldst stick at parting with them? They will flatter thee, but they will undo thee, and cut thy throat while they smile upon thee, and poison thee while they please thee, and arm the justice and wrath of the infinite God against thee. They will open hell for thee, and pile up fuel to burn thee. Behold the gibbet that they have prepared for thee. Oh serve them like Haman, and do upon them the execution, they would else have done upon thee. Away with them, crucify them, and let Christ only be Lord over thee.

Dir. VI. Make a solemn choice of God for thy portion and blessedness. Deut. 26. 17. With all possible devotion and veneration avouch the Lord for thy God. Set the world with all its glory, and paint, and gallantry, with all its pleasures and promotions on the one hand, and set God with all his infinite excellencies and perfections on the other, and see that thou do deliberately make thy choice. Josh. 24. 15. Take up thy rest in God. John 6. 68. Set thee down under his shadow. Cant. 2. 3. Let his promises and perfections turn the scale against all the world. Settle it upon thy heart, that the Lord is an all-sufficient portion, that thou canst not be miserable, while thou hast a God to live upon. Take him for thy shield and exceeding great reward. God alone is more than all the world. Content thyself with him. Let others carry the preferments and glory of the world, place thou thy happiness in his favor, and the light of his countenance. Psal. 4. 6, 7.

Poor sinner, thou art fallen off from God, and hast engaged his power, and wrath against thee. Yet know that of his abundant grace, he doth offer to be thy God again in Christ. 2 Cor. 6. 17, 18. What sayest thou man? Wilt thou have the Lord for thy God? Why, take this counsel, and thou shalt have him. Come to him by his Christ. John 14. 6. Renounce the idols of thine own pleasure, gain, reputation: 1 Thess. 1. 9. let these be pulled out of the Throne, and set God's interest upmost in thine heart. Take him as God, to be chief in thine affections, estimations, intentions; for he will not endure to have any set above him; Rom. 1. 25. Psal. 73. 25. In a word, thou must take him in all his personal relations, and in all his essential perfections.

First, In all his personal relations. God the Father must be taken for thy Father. Ier. 3. 4, 19, 22. O come to him with the Prodigal, Father I have sinned against Heaven, and in thy sight, and am not worthy to be called thy Son: but since of thy wonderful mercy, thou art pleased to take me, that am of myself a dog, a swine, a devil to be thy child, I solemnly take thee for my father, I commend myself to thy care, and trust to thy providence, and cast my burden on thy shoulders. I depend on thy provision, and submit to thy correction, and trust under the shadow of thy wings, & hide in thy chambers, & fly to thy name. I renounce all confidence in myself. I repose my confidence in thee, I depose my concernments with thee. I will be for thee, and for no other. Again, God the Son must be taken for thy Savior, for thy Redeemer, and righteousness. John 1. 2. He must be accepted, as the only way to the Father, and the only means of life. Heb. 7. 25. Oh then put off the raiment of thy captivity, on with the wedding garment, and go and marry thyself to Jesus Christ. Lord, I am thine, and all that I have, my body, my soul, my name, my estate. I send a bill of divorce to my other lovers: I give my heart to thee. I will be thine undividedly, thine everlastingly. I will set thy name on all I have, and use it only as thy goods, as thy loan, during thy leave, resigning all to thee. I will have no King, but thee: reign thou over me. Other Lord's have had dominion over me: but now I will make mention of thy name only, and do here take an oath of fealty to thee, promising and vowing, to serve, and love, and fear thee, above all competitors. I disavow mine own righteousness, and despair of ever being pardoned and saved for mine own duties, or graces, and lean only on thine all-sufficient sacrifice and intercession for pardon, and life, and acceptance before God. I take thee for mine only guide and instructour, resolving to be led and directed by thee, and to wait for thy counsel, and that thine, shall be the casting voice with me. Lastly, God the Spirit must be taken for thy Sanctifier, Rom. 8. 9, 14. Gal. 5. 16, 18. for thine Advocate, thy Counselor, thy Comforter, the teacher of thine ignorance, the pledge and earnest of thine inheritance. Rom. 8. 26. Psal. 73. 24. John 14. 16. Eph. 1. 14. John 14. 26. Eph. 4. 30. Awake thou North wind, and come thou South, and blow upon my garden, Cant. 4. 16. Come thou Spirit of the most high; here is a house for thee, here is a temple for thee. Here do thou rest forever; dwell here, and rule here. Loe I give up the possession to thee, full possession. I send thee the keys of my heart, that all may be for thy use, that thou mayest put thy goods, thy graces into every room. I give up the use of all to thee, that every faculty, and every member, may be thine instrument, to work righteousness, and do the will of my Father, which is in Heaven.

Secondly, In all his essential perfections. Consider how the Lord hath revealed himself to you in his word: will you take him as such a God? O sinner, here's the blessedst news that ever came to the sons of men. The Lord will be thy God, Gen. 17. 7. Rev 21. 3. if thou will but close with him in his excellencies. Wilt thou have the merciful, the gracious, the sin-pardoning God, to be thy God? O yes (saith the sinner) I am undone else. But he further tells thee, I am the holy, and sin-hating God. If thou wilt be owned as one of my people, thou must be holy, 1 Pet. 1. 16. holy in heart, holy in life. Thou must put away all thine iniquities, be they never so near, never so natural, never so necessary to the maintaining thy fleshly interest. Unless thou wilt be at defiance with sin, I cannot be thy God. Cast out the leaven: put away the evil of thy doings: cease to do evil: learn to do well, or else I can have nothing to do with thee. Isaiah 1. 16, 17, 18. Bring forth mine enemies, or there is no peace to be had with me. What doth thine heart answer? Lord, I desire to have thee as such a God. I desire to be holy, as thou are holy, to be made partaker of thy holiness. I love thee, not only for thy goodness and mercy, but for thy holiness and thy purity. I take thy holiness for my happiness. Oh! be to me a fountain of holiness: set on me the stamp and impress of thy holiness. I will thankfully part with all my sins a thy command. My willful sins I do forthwith forsake; and for my infirmities, that I cannot get rid of, though I would; I will strive against them, in the use of thy means. I detest them, and will pray and war against them, and never let them have quiet rest in my soul. Beloved, whosoever of you will thus accept the Lord for his God, he shall have him.

Again, he tells you; I am the All-sufficient God. Gen. 17. 1. Will you lay all at my feet, and give it up to my dispose, and take me for your only portion? Will you own and honor mine All-sufficiency? Will you take me as your happiness and treasure, your hope and bliss? I am a Sun and shield, all in one: will you have me for your All? 1 Gen. 15. Psal. 84. 11. Now what dost thou say to this? Doth thy mouth water after the Onions and Flesh-pots of Egypt? Art thou loath to exchange thy earthly happiness, for a part in God: and though thou wouldst be glad to have God and the world too, yet thou canst not think of having him, and nothing but him, but hadst rather take up with the earth below, if God would but let thee keep it, as long as thou wouldst? This is a fearful sign. But now if thou art willing to fell all for the pearl of great price; Mat. 13. 46. if thine heart answer, Lord, I desire no other portion but thee. Take the corn, and the wine, and the oil whose will, so I may have the light of thy countenance. I pitch upon thee for my happiness. I gladly venture myself on thee, and trust myself with thee. I set my hopes in thee; I take up my rest with thee. Let me hear thee say, I am thy God, thy salvation, and I have enough, all I wish for. I will make no terms with thee, but for thyself. Let me but have thee sure, let me be able to make my claim, and see my title to thyself; and for other things, I leave them to thee. Give me more, or less, anything, or nothing, I will be satisfied in my God. Take him thus, and he is thine own.

Again, he tells you; I am the Sovereign Lord. If you will have me for your God, you must give me the Supremacy. Mat. 6. 24. I will not be an underling. You must not make me a second to sin, or any worldly interest. If you will be my people, I must have the rule over you. You must not live at your own list, will you come under my yoke? Will you bow to my government? Will you submit to my discipline, to my word, to my rod? Sinner, what sayst thou to this? Lord I had rather be at thy command, than live at mine own list. I had rather have thy will to be done, than mine. I approve of and consent to thy laws, and account it my privilege to live under them. And though the flesh rebel, and often break over bounds, I am resolved to take no other Lord but thee. I willingly take the oath of thy supremacy, and acknowledge thee for my leige Sovereign, and resolve all my days to pay the tribute of worship, obedience, and love, and service to thee, and to live to thee as the end of my life. This is a right accepting of God.

To be short, he tells you; I am the true and faithful God. If you will have me for your God, you must be content to trust me. 2 Tim. 1. 12. Prov. 3. 5. Will you venture yourselves upon my word, and depend on my faithfulness, and take my bond for your security? Will you be content to follow me, in poverty, and reproach, & affliction here, and to see much going out, and little coming in, and to tarry till the next world for your preferment? Mat. 19. 21. I deal much upon trust, will you be content to labor, and suffer, and to tarry for your returns, till the resurrection of the just? Luke 14. 14. The womb of my promise will not presently bring forth; will you have the patience to wait? Heb. 10. 36. Now beloved, what say you to this? Will you have this God for your God? Will you be content to live by faith, and trust him for an unseen happiness, an unseen Heaven, an unseen glory? Do your hearts answer, Lord, we will venture our souls upon thee, we commit ourselves to thee: we roll upon thee, we know whom we have trusted: we are willing to take thy word: we will prefer thy promises, before our own possessions; and the hopes of Heaven, before all the enjoyments of the earth. We will wait thy leisure. What thou wilt here, so that we may have but thy faithful promise for Heaven hereafter? If you can in truth, and upon deliberation, thus accept of God, he will be yours. Thus there must be, in a right Conversion to God, a closing with him suitable to his excellencies. But when men close with his mercy, but not with his sin-hating holiness and purity; or will take him for their benefactor, but not for their Sovereign; or for their Patron, but not for their portion, this is no thorough, and so no sound Conversion.

Dir. VII. Accept of the Lord Jesus, in all his offices, with all his inconveniences, as thine. Upon these terms Christ may be had. Sinner, thou hast undone thyself, and art plunged into the ditch of most deplorable misery out of which thou art never able to climb up. But Jesus Christ is able and ready to help thee, and he freely tenders himself to thee. Heb. 7. 25. John 7. 37. Be thy sins never so many, never so great, of never so long continuance, yet thou shalt be most certainly pardoned and saved, if thou dost not wretchedly neglect the offer, that in the name of God is here made unto thee. The Lord Jesus calleth to thee, to look unto him and be saved, Isaiah 45. 22. to come unto him, and he will in no wise cast thee out. John 6. 37. Yea he is a suitor to thee, and beseecheth thee to be reconciled, 2 Cor. 5. 20. he crieth in the streets, he knocketh at thy door, he wooeth thee to accept of him, and life with him: Prov. 1. 20. Rev. 3. 20. if thou diest, 'tis because thou wouldst not come to him for life. John 5. 40. Now accept of an offered Christ, and thou art made forever. Now give up thy consent to him, and the match is made, all the world cannot hinder it. Do not stand off because of thine unworthiness. Man, I tell thee, nothing in all the world can undo thee, but thine unwillingness. Speak man, art thou willing of the match? Wilt thou have Christ in all his relations to be thine, thy King, thy Priest, thy Prophet? Wilt thou have him with all his inconveniences? Take not Christ hand over head: but sit down first, and count thy cost. Wilt thou lay all at his feet? Wilt thou be content to run all hazards with him? Wilt thou take thy lot with him, fall where it will? Wilt thou deny thyself, take up thy Cross, and follow him? Art thou deliberately, understandingly, freely, fixedly determined to cleave to him in all times, and conditions? If so, my soul for thine, thou shalt never perish, John 3. 16. but art passed from death to life.

Here lies the main point of thy salvation, that thou be sound in thy covenant-closure with Jesus Christ, and therefore if thou love thy life, see that thou be faithful to God and thy soul here.

Dir. VIII. Resign up all thy powers and faculties, and thy whole interest to be his. They gave their own selves unto the Lord. 2 Cor. 8. 5. Present your bodies as a living Sacrifice. Rom. 12. 1. The Lord seeks not yours, but you. Resign therefore thy body with all its members to him, and thy soul with all its powers, that he may be glorified in thy body and in thy spirit, which are his. 1 Cor. 6. 20. In a right closure with Christ, all the faculties give up to him: The Judgment subscribes, Lord thou art worthy of all acceptance, chief of ten thousand. Happy is the man, that findeth thee. All the things that are to be desired, are not to be compared with thee. Prov. 3. 13, 14, 15. The Understanding lays aside its corrupt reasonings and cavils, and its prejudices against Christ and his ways. It is now past questioning and disputing, and casts it for Christ against all the world. It concludes, it's good to be here, and sees such a treasure in this field, such value in this pearl, as is worth all. Mat. 13. 44. Oh here's the richest bargain that ever I made here's the richest prize that ever man was offered: here's the sovereignst remedy that ever mercy prepared: he is worthy of my esteem, worthy of my choice, worthy of my love, worthy to be embraced, adored, admired forever more. Rev. 5. 12. I approve of his articles: his terms are righteous and reasonable, full of equity and mercy. Again, the Will resigns. It stands no longer wavering, nor wishing, and woulding, but is peremptorily determined. Lord, thy love hath overcome me thou hast won me, and thou shalt have me. Come in Lord, to thee I freely open. I consent to be saved in thine own way, thou shalt have anything, thou shalt have all, let me have but thee. The Memory gives up to Christ: Lord, here is a storehouse for thee. Out with this trash; lay in thy treasure. Let me be a granary, a repository of thy truths, thy promises, thy providences. The Conscience comes in; Lord, I will ever side with thee. I will be thy faithful register. I will warn when the sinner is tempted, and smite when thou art offended. I will witness for thee, and judge for thee, and guide into thy ways, and will never let sin have quiet in this soul. The Affections also come in to Christ. O saith Love, I am sick for thee. O saith Desire, now I have my longing. Here's the satisfaction I sought for. Here's the desire of nations. Here's bread for me, and balm for me, all that I want. Fear bows the knee with awe and veneration; Welcome Lord: to thee will I pay my homage. Thy word and thy rod shall command my motions. Thee will I reverence and adore, before thee will I fall down and worship-Grief likewise puts in, Lord thy displeasure and thy dishonor, thy people's calamities, and mine own iniquities shall be that, that shall set me abroach. I will mourn when thou art offended, I will weep when thy cause is wounded. Anger likewise comes in for Christ: Lord nothing so enrages me, as my folly against thee, that I should be so befooled and bewitched, as to hearken to the flatteries of sin, and temptations of Satan against thee. Hatred too will side with Christ. I protest mortal enmity with thine enemies, that I will never be friends with thy foes. I vow an immortal quarrel with every sin. I will give no quarter, I will make no peace. Thus let all thy powers give up to Jesus Christ.

Again, thou must give up thy whole interest to him. If there be anything, that thou keepest back from Christ, it will be thine undoing. Luke 14. 33. Unless thou wilt forsake all (in preparation and resolution of thy heart) thou canst not be his disciple. Thou must hate Father and Mother, yea and thine own life also in comparison of him, and as far as it stands in competition with him. Mat. 10. 37. Luke 14. 26, 27, 28, &c. In a word, thou must give him thyself, and all that thou hast, without reservation, or else thou 〈◊〉 have no part in him.

Dir. IX. Make choice of the Laws of Christ as the rule of thy words, thoughts and actions. Psal. 119. 30. This is the true Converts choice. But here remember these three rules. 1. Thou must choose them all. There is no coming to Heaven by a partial obedience. Read Psal. 119. 6, 128, 160. Ezek. 18. 21. None may think it enough to take up with the cheap and easy part of religion, and let alone the duties that are costly, and self-denying, and grate upon the interest of the flesh. You must take all, or none. A sincere Convert, though he makes most conscience of the greatest sins, and weightiest duties; yet he makes true conscience of little sins, and of all duties. Psal. 119. 6, 113. Mat. 23. 23. 2. For all times, for prosperity, and for adversity; whether it rain, or shine. A true Convert is resolved in his way: he will stand to his choice, and will not set his back to the wind, and be of the religion of the times. I have stuck to thy testimonies. I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes always, even to the end. Thy testimonies have I taken, as an heritage forever. Psal. 119. 31, 111, 117, 44, 93. I will have respect unto thy statutes continually. 3. This must be done, not hand over head, but deliberately and understandingly. That disobedient son said, I go sir, but he went not. Mat. 24. 30. How fairly did they promise: All that the Lord our God shall speak unto thee, we will do it; and it's like they spake as they meant, but when it came to trial, it was found that there was not such a heart in them, as to do what they had promised. De••• 5. 27, 29. If you would be sincere in closing with the laws and ways of Christ, First, Study the meaning, and the latitude and compass of them. Remember, that they are very spiritual: they reach the very thoughts, and inclinations of the heart; so that if you will walk by this rule, your very thoughts, and inward motions must be under government. Again, that they are very strict and self-denying, quite contrary to the grain of your natural inclinations. Mat. 16. 24. You must take the strait gate, the narrow way, and be content to have the flesh curbed from the liberty that it desires. Mat. 7. 14. In a word, that they are very large: for the commandment is exceeding broad. Psal. 119. 66. Secondly, rest not in generals, (for there's much deceit in that) but bring down thy heart to the particular commands of Christ. Those Jews in the Prophet seemed as well resolved as any in the world, and call God to witness, that they meant, as they said. But they stuck in generals. When God's command crosses their inclination, they will not obey. Ier. 42. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. compared with ch. 43 v. 2. Take the Assemblies larger Catechism, and see their excellent and most compendious exposition of the Commandments, and put thy heart to it. Art thou resolved, in the strength of Christ, to set upon the conscientious practice of every duty that thou findest to be there required of thee, and to set against every sin that thou findest there forbidden? This is the way to be sound in God's statutes, that thou mayest never be ashamed. Psal. 119 80. Thirdly, Observe the special duties that thy heart is most against, and the special sins that 'tis most inclined unto, and see whether it be truly resolved to perform the one, and forgo the other. What sayst thou to thy bosom sin, thy gainful sin? What sayst thou to costly, and hazardous, and flesh-displeasing duties? If thou haltest here, and dost not resolve by the grace of God to cross thy flesh, and put to it, thou art unsound. Psal. 18. 23. Psal. 119. 6.

Dir. X. Let all this be completed in a solemn Covenant between God and thy soul. Psal. 119. 106. Neb. 10. 29. For thy better help therein, take these few Directions.

First, set apart some time, more than once to be spent in secret before the Lord.

1. In seeking earnestly his special assistance, and gracious acceptance of thee.
2. In considering distinctly all the terms or conditions of the Covenant, expressed in the form hereafter proposed.
3. In searching thine heart, whether thou art sincerely willing to forsake all thy sins, and to resign up thyself, body and soul unto God, and his service, to serve him in holiness and righteousness all the days of thy life.

Secondly, Compose thy spirit into the most serious frame possible, suitable to a transaction of so high importance.

Thirdly, Lay hold on the Covenant of God, and rely upon his promise of giving grace and strength, whereby thou mayest be enabled to perform thy promise. Trust not to thine own strength, to the strength of thine own resolutions, but take hold on his strength.

Fourthly, Resolve to be faithful, having engaged thine heart, opened thy mouth, and subscribed with thine hand unto the Lord, resolve in his strength never to go back.

Lastly, Being thus prepared, on some convenient time set apart for the purpose, set upon the work, and in the most solemn manner possible, as if the Lord were visibly present before thine eyes, fall down on thy knees, and spreading forth thine hands towards Heaven, open thine heart to the Lord in these, or the like words.

O Most dreadful God, for the Passion of thy Son, I beseech thee accept of thy poor Prodigal now prostrating himself at thy Door: I have fallen from thee by mine iniquity, and am by nature a son of Death, and a thousandfold more the child of Hell by my wicked Practice: But of thine infinite Grace thou hast promised Mercy to me in Christ, if I will but turn to Thee with all my Heart: Therefore upon the Call of Thy Gospel, I am now come in, and throwing down my weapons, submit myself to thy Mercy.

And because thou requirest, as the Condition of my Peace with Thee, that I should put away mine Idols, and be at defiance with all thine Enemies, which I acknowledge I have wickedly sided with against Thee, I here from the bottom of my heart renounce them all, firmly Covenanting with Thee, not to allow myself in any known Sin, but Conscientiously to use all the means that I know thou hast prescribed, for the Death and utter Destruction of all my Corruptions. And whereas I have formerly inordinately and idolatrously let out my affections upon the World, I do here resign my Heart to Thee that madest it, humbly protesting before thy Glorious Majesty, that it is the firm resolution of my Heart, and that I do unfeignedly desire Grace from Thee, that when thou shalt call me hereunto, I may practice this my resolution through thy Assistance, to forsake all that is dear unto me in this world, rather than to turn from thee to the ways of sin; and that I will watch against all its Temptations, whether of Prosperity, or Adversity, lest they should withdraw my Heart from thee: beseeching thee also to help me against the Temptations of Satan, to whose wicked Suggestions I resolve by thy Grace never to yield myself a Servant. And because my own righteousness is but menstruous rags, I renounce all confidence therein, and acknowledge that I am of myself a hopeless, helpless, undone done creature, without righteousness, or strength.

And forasmuch as thou hast of thy bottomless Mercy offered most Graciously to me wretched sinner, to be again my God through Christ, if I would accept of thee: I call Heaven and Earth to record this day, that I do here solemnly avouch thee for the Lord my God, & with all possible veneration, bowing the neck of my soul under the feet of thy most Sacred Majesty, I do here take thee the Lord Jehovah, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for my portion, and chief good, and do give up myself, body and soul for thy servant, promising and vowing to serve thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of my life.

And since thou hast appointed the Lord Jesus Christ, the only means of coming unto thee, I do here upon the bended knees of my soul accept of him as the only new and living way, by which sinners may have access to thee, and do here solemnly join myself in a marriage-Covenant to him.

O blessed Jesus, I come to thee hungry and hardly bestead, poor and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked, a most loathsome polluted wretch, a guilty condemned Malefactor, unworthy forever to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord, much more to be solemnly married to the King of Glory: but since such is thine unparalleled love, I do here with all my power accept thee, and do take thee for my Head and Husband, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, for all times and conditions, to love, and honor, and obey thee before all others, and this to the death. I embrace thee in all thine Offices: I renounce mine own worthiness, and do here avow thee to be the Lord my Righteousness: I renounce mine own wisdom, and do here take thee for mine only Guide: I renounce mine own will, and take thy will for my Law.

And since thou hast told me that I must suffer if I will reign, I do here Covenant with thee to take my lot, as it falls, with thee, and by thy Grace assisting to run all hazards with thee, verily supposing that neither life nor death shall part between thee and me.

And because thou hast been pleased to give me thy holy Laws, as the rule of my life, and the way in which I should walk to thy Kingdom; I do here willingly put my Neck under thy Yoak, and set my shoulder to thy burden; and subscribing to all thy Laws, as holy, just, and good, I solemnly take them as the rule of my words, thoughts, and actions; promising that though my flesh contradict and rebel, yet I will endeavor to order and govern my whole life according to thy direction; and will not allow myself in the neglect of anything that I know to be my Duty.

Only because through the frailty of my flesh, I am subject to many failings; I am bold humbly to protest, That unallowed miscarriages, contrary to the settled bent and resolution of my heart, shall not make void this Covenant, for so thou hast said.

Now Almighty God, searcher of hearts, thou knowest that I make this Covenant with thee this day, without any known guile, or reservation, beseeching thee, that if thou espiest any flaw or falsehood therein, thou wouldst discover it to me, and help me to do it aright.

And now Glory be to thee, O God the Father, whom I shall be bold from this day forward, to look upon as my God and Father; that ever thou shouldst find out such a way for the recovery of undone sinners: Glory be to thee, O God the Son, who hast loved me and washed me from my sins in thine own blood, and art now become my Savior and Redeemer: Glory be to thee O God the Holy Ghost, who by the finger of thine Almighty power hast turned about my heart from sin to God.

O dreadful Jehovah, the Lord God Omnipotent, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, thou art now become my Covenant-friend, and I through thine infinite Grace, am become thy Covenant-servant, Amen, So be it. And the Covenant which I have made on earth, let it be ratified in Heaven.

The Author's advice.

THIS Covenant I advise you to make, not only in Heart, but in Word; not only in Word, but in Writing; and that you would with all possible reverence spread the Writing before the Lord, as if you would present it to him as your Act and Deed. And when you have done this, set your hand to it. Keep it as a Memorial of the Solemn Transactions that have passed between God and you, that you may have recourse to it in Doubts and Temptations.

Dir. XI. Take heed of delaying thy Conversion, and set upon a speedy and present turning. I made hast, and delayed not, Psal. 119. 59. Remember, and tremble at the sad instance of the foolish Virgins, that came not till the door of mercy was shut; Mat. 25. and of a convinced Felix, that put off Paul to another season, and we never find that he had such a season more. Act. 24. 25. O come in while it's called today, lest thou shouldst be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; lest thy day of Grace should be over, and the things that belong to thy peace should be hid from thine eyes. Now mercy is wooing of thee: Now Christ is waiting to be gracious to thee, and the Spirit of God is striving with thee, Now Ministers are calling: now Conscience is stirring: now the Market is open, and Oil may be had, thou hast opportunity for the buying. Now Christ is to be had for the taking. Oh! strike in with the offers of Grace. Oh! now, or never. If thou make light of this offer, God may swear in his wrath, thou shalt never taste of his Supper. Luke 14. 24.

Dir. XII. Attend conscientiously upon the word, as the means appointed for thy Conversion. James 1. 18. 19. 1. Cor. 4. 15. Attend, I say, not customarily, but Conscientiously, with this desire, design, hope, and expectation, that thou mayest be converted by it. Every sermon thou hearest, come with this thought: Oh, I hope God will now come in: I hope this may be the time, this may be the man by whom God will bring me home. When thou art coming to the Ordinances, lift up thine heart thus to God: Lord let this be the Sabbath, let this be the season, wherein I may receive renewing Grace. Oh let it be said, that today such a one was born unto thee.

Object. Thou wilt say, I have been long a hearer of the word, and yet it hath not been effectual to my Conversion. Answer. Yea, but thou hast not attended upon it in this manner, as a means of thy Conversion, nor with this design, nor praying for, and expecting of, this happy effect of it.

Dir. XIII. Strike in with the Spirit, when he begins to work upon thy heart. When he works convictions, Oh do not stifle them, but join in with him, and beg the Lord to carry on convictions to conversion. Quench not the Spirit: do not out-strive him: do not resist him. Beware of putting out convictions by evil company, or worldly business. When thou findest any troubles for sin, and fears about thine eternal State, beg of God, that they may never leave thee, till they have wrought off thy heart thoroughly from sin and wrought it over to Jesus Christ. Say to him, Strike home Lord: leave not the work in the midst. If thou seest, that I am not yet wounded enough, that I am not troubled enough, wound me yet deeper, Lord. Oh go to the bottom of my corruptions: let out the life blood of my sins. Thus yield up thyself to the workings of the Spirit, and hoise thy sails to his gusts.

Dir. XIV. Set upon the constant and diligent use of serious and fervent prayer. He that neglects prayer, is a profane and unsanctified sinner. Job 15. 4. He that is not constant in prayer, is but an Hypocrite, Job 27. 10. (unless the omission be contrary to his ordinary course, under the force of some instant temptation.) This is one of the first things that Conversion appears in, that it sets men on praying. Act 9. 11. Therefore set to this duty• Let never a day pass over thee, wherein thou hast not morning and evening set apart some time for set and solemn prayer in secret. Call thy family also together daily and duly, to worship God with thee. Woe unto thee if thine be found amongst the families that call not on God's name. Ier. 10. 25. But cold and lifeless devotions will not reach half way to Heaven. Be fervent, and importunate. Importunity will carry it. But without violence the Kingdom of Heaven will not be taken. Mat. 11. 12. Thou must strive to enter, Luke 13. 24. and wrestle with tears and supplications, as Jacob, if thou meanest to carry the blessing. Gen. 32. 24. comp. with Hos. 12. 4. Thou art undone forever without Grace: and therefore thou must put to it, and resolve to take no denial. That man that is fixed in this resolution, Well I must have Grace, and I will never give over, till I have a grant. I will never leave seeking, and waiting, and striving with God, and mine own heart, till he do renew me by the power of his Grace; this man is in the likeliest way to win Grace.

Obj. But God heareth not sinners: their prayer is an abomination.

Ans. Distinguish between sinners. 1. There are resolved sinners: their prayers God abhors. 2. Returning sinners: these God will come forth to, and meet with mercy though yet afar off. Luke 15. 20. Though the prayers of the unsanctified cannot have full acceptance; yet God hath done much at the request of such, as at Ahab's humiliation, and Ninivehs fast. 1 Kings 21. 29. Jonah 3. 8, 9, 10. Surely thou mayest go as far as these, though thou hast no Grace: and how dost thou know but thou mayest speed in thy suit, as they did in theirs? Yea, is he not far more likely to grant thee, than them; since thou askest in the name of Christ, and that not for temporal blessings, as they; but for things much more pleasing to him, viz. for Christ, Grace, Pardon, that thou mayest be justified, sanctified, renewed, and fitted to serve him? Turn to those soul encouraging Scriptures, Prov. 2. 1, to 6. Luke 11. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Prov. 8. 34, 35.

Is it not good comfort, that he calleth thee? Mark. 10. 49. Doth he set thee on the use of means, and dost thou think he will mock thee? Doubtless, he will not fail thee, if thou be not wanting to thyself. Oh pray, and faint not. Luke 18. 1. A person of great quality, having offended the Duke of Buckingham, the Kings great Favorite, being admitted into his presence after long waiting, prostrates himself at his feet, saying, I am resolved never to rise more, till I have obtained your Graces favor, with which carriage he did overcome him. With such a resolution do thou throw thyself at the feet of God. 'Tis for thy life, and therefore follow him, and give not over. Resolve thou wilt not be put off with bones, with common mercies. What though God do not presently open to thee? Is not Grace worth the waiting for? Knock, and wait, and no doubt but sooner or later, mercy will come.

And this know, that thou hast the very same encouragement to seek and wait, that the Saints now in Glory once had: for they were once in thy very case. And have they sped so well, and wilt not thou go to the same door, and wait upon God in the same course?

Dir. XV. For sake thine evil company, Prov. 9. 6. and forbear the occasions of sin. Prov. 23. 31. Thou wilt never be turned from sin, till thou wilt decline and forgo the temptations to sin.

I never expect thy Conversion from sin, unless thou art brought to so much self-denial, as to fly the occasions. If thou wilt be nibbling at the bait, and playing on the brink, and tampering and meddling with the snare, thy soul will surely be taken. Where God doth expose men in his providence, unavoidably, to temptations, and the occasions are such as we cannot remove, we may expect special assistance in the use of his means. But when we tempt God by running into danger, he will not engage to support us, when we are tempted. And of all temptations, one of the most fatal and pernicious, is evil company. Oh what hopeful beginnings have these often stifled! Oh the souls, the estates, the families, the Towns, that these have ruined! How many a poor sinner hath been enlightened, and convinced, and hath been just ready to give the Devil the slip, and hath even escaped his snare, and yet wicked company have pulled him back at last, and made him sevenfold more the child of Hell. In one word, I have no hopes of thee, except thou wilt shake off thy evil company. Christ speaketh to thee, as to them, in another case, If thou seek me, then let these go their way. John 18. 8. Thy life lies upon it: Forsake these, or else thou canst not live. Prov. 9. 6. Wilt thou be worse than the beast, to run on, when thou seest the Lord with a drawn sword in thy way? Numb. 22. 23. Let this sentence be written in Capitals upon thy conscience, A COMPANION OF FOOLS SHALL BE DESTROYED. Prov. 13. 20. The Lord hath spoken it, and who shall reverse it? And wilt thou run upon destruction, when God himself doth forewarn thee? If God do ever change thy heart, it will appear in the change of thy company. Oh hear, and fly this Gulf, by which so many thousand souls have been swallowed into perdition. It will be hard for thee indeed, to make thine escape. Thy Companions will be mocking thee out of thy Religion, and will study to fill thee with prejudices against strictness, as ridiculous, and comfortless. They will be flattering thee, and alluring thee: but remember the warnings of the Holy Ghost: My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not. If they say, come with us: cast in thy lot among us: Walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away. For the way of the wicked is as darkness, they know not at what they stumble. They lay wait for their own blood: they lurk privily for their own lives. Prov. 1. 10. to the 18. Prov. 4. 14, to the 19. My soul is moved within me, to see how many of my hearers are like to perish, both they, and their houses, by this wretched mischief, even the haunting of such places, and company, whereby they are drawn into sin. Once more I admonish you, as Moses did Israel, Numb. 16. 26. And he spake unto the Congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the Tents of these wicked men. Oh! fly them as you would those that had the Plague sores running in their foreheads. These are the Devils Panders, and decoys; and if thou dost not make thine escape, they will toll thee into perdition, and will prove thine eternal ruin.

Dir. XVI. Lastly, Set apart a day to humble thy soul in secret, by fasting and prayer, and to work the sense of thy sins and miseries upon thy heart. Read over the Assemblies exposition of the commandments, and write down the duties omitted, and sins committed by thee against every commandment, and so make a Catalogue of thy sins, and with shame and sorrow spread them before the Lord. And if thy heart be truly willing to the terms, join thyself solemnly to the Lord in that Covenant set down in the 9. Direction, and the Lord grant thee mercy in his sight.

Thus I have told thee, what thou must do to be saved. Wilt thou now obey the voice of the Lord? Wilt thou arise and set to thy work? O man, what answer wilt thou make, what excuse wilt thou have, if thou shouldest perish at last through very willfulness, when thou hast known the way of life? I do not fear thy miscarrying, if thine own idleness do not at last undo thee, in neglecting the use of the means, that are so plainly here prescribed. Rouze up oh sluggard and ply thy work. Be doing, and the Lord will be with thee.

A short Soliloquy for an unregenerate sinner.

Ah wretched man that I am! what a condition have I brought myself into by sin! Oh! I see my heart hath but deceived me all this while, in flattering me, that my condition was good. I see, I see, I am but a lost, and undone man; forever undone, unless the Lord help me out of this condition. My sins! My sins! Lord, what an unclean, polluted wretch am I! more loathsome and odious to thee, than the most hateful Venome, or noisome carcase, can be to me. Oh! what a Hell of sin is in this heart of mine, which I have flattered myself to be a good heart? Lord, how universally am I corrupted, in all my parts, powers, performances? All the imaginations of the thoughts of my heart, are only evil, continually. I am under an inability to, averseness from, and enmity against anything that is good; and am prone to all that is evil. My heart is a very sink of all sin: and oh the innumerable hosts, and swarms of sinful thoughts, words, and actions, that have flown from thence! Oh the load of guilt that is on my soul! my head is full, and my heart full; my mind and my members, they are all full of sin. Oh my sins! How do they stare upon me! How do they witness against me! Woe is me, my Creditors are upon me: every commandment taketh hold upon me, for more than ten thousand talents, yea ten thousand times ten thousand. How endless then is the sum of all my debts! If this whole world were filled up from earth to Heaven with paper, and all this paper written over within and without by Arithmeticians: yet, when all were cast up together, it would come inconceivably short, of what I owe to the least of God's commandments. Woe unto me, for my debts are infinite, and my sins are increased. They are wrongs to an infinite Majesty: and if he that committeth treason against a silken mortal, is worthy to be racked, drawn, and quartered: what have I deserved, that have so often lifted up my hand against Heaven, and have struck at the Crown and dignity of the Almighty?

Oh my sins! my sins! Behold a troop cometh. Multitudes! multitudes! there is no number of their Armies. Innumerable evils have compassed me about; mine iniquities have taken hold upon me; they have set themselves in array against me. Oh! it were better to have all the Regiments of Hell come against me, than to have my sins to fall upon me, to the spoiling of my Soul. Lord, how am I surrounded! How many are they that rise up against me! They have beset me behind and before: they swarm within me and without me: they have possessed all my powers, and have fortified mine unhappy soul, as a Garrison, which this brood of Hell doth man, and maintain, against the God that made me.

And they are as mighty, as they be many. The sands are many, but then they are not great: the mountains great but then they are not many. But woe is me, my sins are as many as the sands, and as mighty as the Mountains. Their weight is greater than their number. It were better, that the Rocks, and the mountains should fall upon me, than the crushing and unsupportable load of my own sins. Lord, I am heavy laden: let mercy help, or I am gone. Unload me of this heavy guilt, this sinking load, or I am crushed without hope, and must be pressed down to Hell. If my grief were thoroughly weighed, and my sins laid in the balances together, they would be heavier than the sand of the Sea, therefore my words are swallowed up: they would weigh down all the rocks, and the hills, and turn the balance against all the Isles of the Earth. O Lord, thou knowest my manifold transgressions, and my mighty sins.

Ah my soul! Alas my Glory! Whither art thou humbled! Once the Glory of the creation, and the Image of God: now, a lump of filthiness, a Coffin of rottenness, replenished with stench and loathsomeness. Oh what work hath sin made with thee! Thou shalt be termed Forsaken, and all the rooms of thy faculties Desolate, and the name that thou shalt be called by is Ichabed, or Where is the Glory? How art thou come down mightily! My beauty is turned into deformity, and my Glory into shame. Lord, what a loathsome Leper am I! The ulcerous bodies of Job or Lazarus were not more offensive to the eyes and nostrils of men, than I must needs be to the most holy God, whose eyes cannot behold iniquity.

And what misery have my sins brought upon me! Lord, what a case am I in! Sold under sin, cast out of God's favor, accursed from the Lord, cursed in my body, cursed in my soul, cursed in my name, in my estate, my relations, and all that I have. My sins are unpardoned, and my soul within a step of death. Alas! what shall I do? Whither shall I go? Which way shall I look? God is crowning on me from above; Hell gaping for me beneath; Conscience smiting me within, temptations and dangers surrounding me without. Oh, whither shall I fly? What place can hide me from Omniscience? What power can secure me from Omnipotency?

What meanest thou O my soul to go on thus? Art thou in league with Hell? hast thou made a covenant with death? Art thou in love with thy misery? Is it good for thee to be here? Alas, what shall I do! Shall I go on in my sinful ways? Why then certain damnation will be mine end: & shall I be so besotted and bemaddened, as to go and sell my soul to the flames, for a little Ale, or a little ease; for a little pleasure, or gain, or content to my flesh? Shall I linger any longer in this wretched estate? No: if I tarry here, I shall die. What then, is there no help? no hope? None, except I turn. Why, but is there any remedy for such woeful misery? any mercy, after such provoking iniquity? Yes: as sure as God's Oath is true, I shall have pardon, and mercy, yet, if I presently, unfeignedly, and unreservedly turn by Christ to him.

Why then I thank thee upon the bended knees of my soul, O most merciful Jehovah, that thy patience hath waited for me hitherto: for hadst thou took me away in this estate, I had perished forever. And now I adore thy Grace, and accept the offers of thy mercy. I renounce all my sins, and resolve by thy Grace to set myself against them, and to follow thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of my life.

Who am I, Lord, that I should make any claim to thee, or have any part or portion in thee, who am not worthy to lick up the dust of thy feet? Yet since thou holdest forth the golden Scepter, I am bold to come, and touch. To despair, would be to disparage thy mercy; and to stand off, when thou biddest me come, would be at once, to undo myself, and rebel against thee, under pretence of humility. Therefore I bow my soul unto thee, and with all possible thankfulness accept thee, as mine, and give up myself to thee, as thine. Thou shalt be Sovereign over me, my King, and my God. Thou shalt be in the Throne, and all my powers shall bow to thee, they shall come, and worship before thy feet. Thou shalt be my portion, O Lord, and I will rest in thee.

Thou callest for my heart. Oh that it were any way fit for thine acceptance! I am unworthy, O Lord, everlastingly unworthy to be thine. But since thou wilt have it so, I freely give up my heart to thee. Take it, it is thine. Oh that it were better! But Lord, I put it into thy hands, who alone canst mend it. Mould it after thine own heart; make it as thou wouldst have it, holy, humble, heavenly, soft, tender, flexible, and write thy law upon it.

Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly: enter in triumphantly: take me up for thyself forever. I give up to thee, I come to thee, as the only way to the Father, as the only Mediator, the means ordained to bring me to God. I have destroyed myself, but in thee is my help. Save, Lord, or else I perish. I come to thee, with the rope about my neck. I am worthy to die, and to be damned. Never was the hire more due to the servant• never was penny more due to the laborer, than death and Hell, my just wages, is due to me for my sins. But I fly to thy merits; I trust alone to the value and virtue of thy Sacrifice, and prevalency of thine intercession. I submit to thy teaching, I make choice of thy Government. Stand open ye everlasting doors, that the King of Glory may enter in.

O thou spirit of the most high, the comforter and sanctifier of thy chosen; come in with all thy glorious train, all thy Courtly attendants, thy fruits, and Graces. Let me be thine habitation. I can give thee, but what is thine own already: but here with the poor Widow, I cast my two mites, my soul, and my body, into thy treasury; fully resigning them up to thee, to be sanctified by thee to be servants to thee. They shall be thy patients; cure thou their maladies: they shall be thy agents; govern thou their motions. Too long have I served the world; too long have I hearkened to Satan: but now I renounce them all, and will be ruled by thy dictates, and directions, and guided by thy counsel.

O blessed Trinity, O glorious Unity, I deliver up myself to thee: receive me: write thy name, O Lord, upon me, and upon all that I have, as thy proper goods. Set thy mark upon me, upon every member of my body, and every faculty of my soul. I have chosen thy precepts. Thy law will I lay before me: this shall be the copy, which I will keep in my eye, and study to write after. According to this rule do I resolve, by thy Grace, to walk: after this law shall my whole man be governed. And though I cannot perfectly keep one of thy Commandments, yet I will allow myself in the breach of none. I know my flesh will hang back: but I resolve, in the power of thy Grace, to cleave to thee, and thy holy ways, whatever it cost me. I am sure I cannot come off a loser by thee: and therefore I will be content with reproach, and difficulties and hardships here, and will deny myself, and take up my Cross, and follow thee. Lord Jesus thy Yoke is easy, thy Cross is welcome, as it is the way to thee. I lay aside all hopes of a worldly happiness. I will be content to tarry, till I come to thee. Let me be poor, and low, little and despised here, so I may be but admitted to live, and reign with thee hereafter. Lord, thou hast my heart and hand to this agreement. Be it as the laws of the Medes and Persians, never to be reversed. To this I will stand: in this resolution, by Grace, I will live, and die. I have worn, and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. I have given my free consent, I have made my everlasting choice. Lord Jesus, confirm the contract.

Amen.

CHAP. VII.

Containing the Motives to Conversion.

THOUGH what is already said of the Necessity of Conversion• and of the Miseries of the Unconverted, might be sufficient to induce any considering mind to resolve upon a present turning, or Conversion unto God: yet knowing what a piece of desperate obstinacy and untractableness the heart of man naturally is, I have thought it necessary, to add to the means of Conversion, and Directions for a Covenantclosure with God in Christ, some Motives to persuade you hereunto.

O Lord, fail me not now at my last attempts. If any soul hath read hitherto, and be yet untouched, now Lord fasten in him, and do thy work: Now take him by the heart, overcome him, persuade him, till he say, Thou hast prevailed, for thou wast stronger than I. Lord, didst not thou make me a fisher of men? And have I toiled all this while, and caught nothing? Alas, that I should have spent my strength for naught! And now I am casting my last: Lord Jesus, stand thou upon the shore, and direct, how, and where I shall spread my net; and let me so enclose with arguments the souls I seek for, that they may not be able to get out. Now Lord for a multitude of souls! now for a full draught! O Lord God, remember me I pray thee, and strengthen me this once, O God.

But I turn me unto you.

Men, and Brethren, Heaven and earth do call upon you, yea hell itself doth preach the doctrine of repentance unto you. The Angels of the Churches travel with you, Gal. 4. 19. the Angels of Heaven wait for you, for your repenting and turning unto God. O sinner, why should the devils make merry with thee? Why shouldst thou be a morsel for that devouring Leviathan? Why should harpies and hellhounds tear thee, and make a feast upon thee, and when they have got thee into the snare, and have fastened their talons in thee, laugh at thy destruction, and deride thy misery, and sport themselves with thy damnable folly? This must be thy case, except thou turn. And were it not better thou shouldst be a joy to Angels, than a laughing-stock and sport for devils? Verily if thou wouldst but come in, the Heavenly Host would take up their anthems, and sing, Glory be to God in the highest; the morning Stars would sing together, and all the sons of God shout for joy, and celebrate this new creation as they did the first. Thy repentance would as it were make holy-day in heaven, and the glorious spirits would rejoice, in that there is a new brother added to their society, Re. 22. 9. another heir born to their Lord and the lost son received safe and sound. The true penitents tears are indeed the wine that cheereth, both God, and man.

If it be little, that men and Angels would rejoice at thy Conversion, know that God himself would rejoice over thee, even with singing, and rest in his love. Luke 15. 9. Isaiah 62. 5. Never did old Jacob with such joy weep over the neck of his Joseph, as thy heavenly Father would rejoice over thee, upon thy coming in to him. Look over the story of the Prodigal. Methinks I see how the aged Father lays aside his state, and forgets his years: behold how he runneth! Luke 15. 20. Oh the hast that mercy makes! The sinner makes not half that speed. Methinks I see how his bowels turn, how his compassions yern. (How quick-sighted is love!) Mercy spies him a great way off, forgets his riotous courses, unnatural rebellion, horrid unthankfulness, debauched practices, (not a word of these) but receives him with open arms, clasps about his neck, forgets the nastiness of his rags, kisses the lips that deserve to be loathed, the lips that had been joined to harlots, that had been commoners with the swine, calls for the fatted calf, the best robe, the ring, the shoes, the best cheer in Heavens store, the best attire in Heavens wardrobe, &c. yea the joy cannot be held in one breast; Luke 15. 6, 9, 23. others must be called to participate, the friends must meet and make merry. Angels must wait, but the Prodigal must be set at the table, under his Fathers wing. He is the joy of the feast: he is the sweet subject of the Fathers delight. The friends sympathize, but none knows the felicity the father takes in his new born son, whom he hath received from the dead. Methinks I hear the music and the dancing, at a distance. Oh the melody of the Heavenly Choristers! I cannot learn the song, Rev. 14. 3. but methinks I over-hear the burden, at which all the harmonious quire with one consent strikes sweetly in, for thus goes the round at Heavens table, For this my son was dead, and is alive again; was lost and is found. Luke 15. 23, 24, 32. I need not farther explain the parable. God is the Father, Christ the cheer, his righteousness the robe, his graces the ornaments, Ministers, Saints, Angels the friends and servants, and thou that readest (if thou wilt but unfeignedly repent and turn) the welcome Prodigal, the happy instance of all this grace, and the blessed subject of this joy & love.

Oh Rock! Oh Adamant! What not moved yet! not yet resolved to return forthwith and to close with mercy! I will try thee yet once again. If one were sent to thee from the dead, wouldst thou be persuaded? Why hear the voice from the dead, from the damned, crying to thee that thou shouldst repent. I pray thee that thou wouldst send him to my fathers house: for I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. If one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. Luke. 16. 27, 28, &c. Hear O man, thy Predecessors in impenitence preach to thee from the infernal gibbets, from the flames, from the rack, that thou shouldst repent. O look down into the bottomless pit. Seest thou how the smoke of their torment ascendeth forever and ever? Rev. 14. 11. How black are those fiends? How furious are their tormenters? 'Tis their only music to hear how their miserable patients roar, to hear their bones crack. 'Tis their meat and drink, to see, how their flesh fri•h, and their fat droppeth, to drench them with burning metal, and to rip open their bodies, and pour in the fierce and fiery brass into their bowels, and the recesses and ventricles of their hearts. What thinkest thou of those chains of darkness, of those instruments of cruelty? Canst thou be content to burn? Seest thou how the worm gnaweth, how the oven gloweth, how the fire •ageth? What sayst thou to that river of brimstone, that dark and horrible vault, that gulf of perdition? Wilt thou take up thine habitation here? Oh lay thine ear to the door of hell. Hear•st thou the curses, and the blasphemies, the weepings and the wailings, how they lament their folly, and curse their day? Mat. 22. 13. Rev. 16. 9. How do they roar, and y•ll, and gnash their teeth? How deep are their groans? how feeling are their moans? how unconceivable their miseries? If the shrieks of Korab, Dathan, and Abiram, were so terrible (when the earth clave asunder, and opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and all that appertain'd to them,) that all Israel fl•sd at the cry of them: Numb. 16. 33. 34. oh how fearful would the cry be, if God should take off the covering from the mouth of hell, and let the cry of the damned ascend in all its terror among the children of men? And of all their moans and miseries, this is the piercing killing •mphasis and burden forever, forever. Why as God liveth, that made this soul, thou art but a ••w hours distant from all this, except thou r•p•nt and be converteed.

Oh! I am even lost and swallowed up in the abundance of those arguments that I might suggest. If there be any point of wisdom in all the world, it is to repent and come in: if there be anything righteous, anything reasonable, this is it. If there be anything in the world that may be called madness, and folly, anything that may be counted sottish, absurd, brutish, unreasonable, it is this, to go on in thine unconverted estate. Let me beg thee, as thou wouldst not willfully destroy thyself, to sit down, and weigh, besides what hath been said, these following Motives, and let conscience speak, if it be not reason, that thou shouldst repent & turn.

1. The God that made thee doth most graciously invite thee.

First his most sweet and merciful nature doth invite thee, Oh the kindnesses of God, his working bowels, his tender mercies! They are infinitely above our thoughts, higher than Heaven, what can we do? deeper than hell, what can we know? Job 11. 7, 8, 9. He is full of compassions, and gracious, longsuffering and plenteous in mercy. Psal. 86. 15. This is a great argument to persuade sinners to come in. Turn unto the Lord your God, for he is gracious, and merciful, s••w to anger, of great kindness, and repen•eth him of the evil. If God would not repent of the evil, it were some discouragement to us, why we should not repent. If there were no hope of mercy, it were no such wonder if the rebel did stand out: but never had subjects such a gracious Prince, such piety, patience, clemency, pity to deal with, as you have. Who is a God $\langle \phi \rangle$ unto thee that pardoneth iniquity, &c. Mic. 7. 18. Oh sinners, see what a God you have to deal with; if you will but turn, He will turn again, and have compassion upon you, he will subdue your iniquities, and cast all your sins into the depths of the Sea. v. 19. Return unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will return unto you. Mal. 3. 7. Zech. 1. 3. Sinners do not fail in that they have too high thoughts of God's mercies, but in that 1. They overlook his Justice. 2. They promise themselves mercy out of God's way. His mercies are beyond all imagination, Isaiah 55. 9. great mercies, 1 Chron. 21. 13. manifold mercies, Neh. 9. 19. tender mercies, Psal. 25. 6. sure mercies, Isaiah 55. 3. everlasting mercies, Psal. 103. 17. Isaiah 54. 8. and all thine own, if thou wilt but turn. Art thou willing to come in? Why the Lord hath laid aside his terror, erected a Throne of grace, holds forth the golden Scepter: touch and live. Would a merciful man slay his enemy, when prostrate at his feet, acknowledging his wrong, begging pardon, and offering to enter with him into a Covenant of peace? Much less will the merciful God. Study his name Exod. 34. 7. Read their experience, Neh. 9. 17.

Secondly, His soul-encouraging calls and promises do invite thee. Ah what an earnest suitor is mercy to thee! how lovingly, how instantly it calleth after thee! how passionately it wooeth thee! Return thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever. Only acknowledge thine iniquity. Turn O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you: return and I will heal your backslidings. Thou hast plaid the harlot with many lovers, yet return unto me saith the Lord. Ier. 3. 1, 12, 13, 14, 22. As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die O house of Israel? Ezek. 33. 11. If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him; in his righteousness that he hath done shall he live. Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions, so iniquity shall not be your ruin. Cast away from you all your transgressions• and make you a clean heart, and a new spirit, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye. Ezek. 18. 21, 22, 30, 31, 32.

Oh melting, gracious words! The voice of a God, and not of a man! This is not the manner of men, for the offended Sovereign, to sue to the offending, traitorous varlet. Oh how doth mercy follow thee, and plead with thee! Is not thy heart broken yet? Oh that today ye would hear his voice!

2. The doors of Heaven are thrown open to thee. The everlasting gates are set wide for thee, and an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven administered to thee. Christ now bespeaks thee (as she her husband) Arise and take possession. 1 Kings 21. 15. View the glory of the other world as set forth in the map of the Gospel. Get thee up into the Pisgah of the promises, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, and that goodly mountain. Behold the Paradise of God, watered with the streams of glory. Arise and walk through the land, in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for all the land which thou seest, the Lord will give it to thee forever, if thou wilt but return. Gen. 13, 14, 15, 17. Let me say to thee as Paul to Agrippa, Believest thou the Prophets? If thou believest indeed, do but view what glorious things are spoken of the City of God, Psal. 87. 3. and know, that all this is here tendered in the name of God to thee. As verily as God is true, it shall be forever thine, if thou wilt but thoroughly turn.

Behold the City of pure transparent gold, whose foundations are garnished with all manner of precious stones, whose gates are pearls, whose light is glory, whose Temple is God. Believest thou this? If thou dost, art not thou worse than distracted, that wilt not take possession, when the gates are flung open to thee• and thou art bid to enter• O ye sons of folly, will ye embrace the dunghills, and refuse the Kingdom? Behold, the Lord God taketh you up into the mountain, shows you the Kingdom of Heaven, and all the glory thereof, and tells you; All this will I give you, if you will fall down and worship me••f you will submit to mercy, accept my S•• and serve me in righteousness and holiness. O fools, and slow of heart to believe, will ye court the harlot, will you seek and serve the world, and neglect the eternal glory? What, not enter into Paradise, when the flaming sword, that was once set to keep you out, is now used to drive you in? But you will say, I am uncharitable, to think you infidels and unbelievers. Why, what shall I think you? Either you are desperate unbelievers, that do not credit it, or stark distracted, that you know and believe the excellency and eternity of this glory, and yet do so fearfully neglect it. Sure you have no faith, or no reason: and I had almost said, conscience should tell you so, before I leave you.

Do but attend what is offered you. Oh blessed Kingdom! A Kingdom of glory, 1 Thess. 2. 12. a Kingdom of righteousness, 2 Pet. 3. 13. a Kingdom of peace, Rom. 14. 17. an everlasting Kingdom. 2 Pet. 1. 11. Here thou shalt dwell, here thou shalt reign forever: and the Lord shall set thee in a Throne of glory, Mat. 19. 28. and with his own hand shall set the Royal Diadem upon thine head, and give thee a Crown, not of thorns (for there shall be no sinning, nor suffering there, Rev. 21. 27, 22, 3, 4, 5.) not of Gold, (for this shall be viler than the dirt in that day) but a Crown of life, James 1. 12. a Crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. 4. 8. a Crown of glory. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Yea thou shalt put on glory as a robe, 1 Cor. 15. 53. and shalt shine like the Sun in the firmament in the glory of thy Father. Mat. 13. 43. Look now upon thy dirty flesh, thy clay, thy worms-meat: this very flesh, this lump, this carcase shall be brighter than the Stars. Dan. 12. 3. In short, thou shalt be made like unto the Angels of God, Luke 20. 36. and behold his face in righteousness. Psal. 17. 15. Look in now, and tell me: dost thou yet believe? If not, conscience must pronounce thee an infidel, for it is the very word of God that I speak.

But if thou say, thou believest, let me next know thy resolutions. Wilt thou embrace this for thy happiness? Wilt thou forgo thy sinful gains, thy forbidden pleasures? Wilt thou trample on the worlds esteem, and spit in the harlots face, and stop thine ears to her flatteries, and wrest thee out of her embraces? Wilt thou be content to take up with present reproach and poverty, if it lie in thy way to Heaven, and to follow the Lord with humble self-denial, in a mortified and flesh-displeasing life? I• so, all is thine, and that forever. And art not thou fairly offered? Is it not pity but he should be damned, that will needs go on and perish, when all this may be had for the taking? In a word, wilt thou now close with these proffers? Wilt thou take God at his word? Wilt thou let go thy hold-fast of the world, and rid thy hands of thy sins, and lay hold on eternal life? If not, let conscience tell thee, whether thou art not distracted, or bewitched, that thou shouldst neglect so happy a choice, by which thou mightest be made forever.

3. God will settle unspeakable privileges at present upon thee. 1 Cor. 3. 22. Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. Though the •ull of your blessedness shall be deferred till hereafter, yet God will give you no little things in hand.

He will redeem you from your thralldom. John 8. 36. He will pluck you from the paw of the Lion: Col. 1. 13. the serpent shall bruise your heel, but you shall bruise his head. Gen. 3. 15. He shall deliver you from the present evil world. Gal. 1. 4. Prosperity shall not destroy you, adversity shall not separate between him and you. Rom. 8. 35, 37, 38. He will redeem you from the power of the grave, Psal. 49. 15. and make the King of terrors a messenger of peace to you. He will take out the curse from the Cross, Psal. 119. 71. and make affliction the fining pot, the fan, the physic, to blow off the chaff, purify the metal, and purge the mind. Dan. 12. 10. Isaiah 27. 9. He will save you from the arrests of the Law, and turn the curse into a blessing to you. Rom. 6. 14. Gal. 3. •4. He hath the keys of hell and death, and shutteth that no man openeth, Rev. 3. 7. & 1. 18. and he will shut its mouth, as once he did the Lions, Dan. 6. 22, that you shall not be hurt of the second death. Rev. 2. 11.

But he will not only save you from misery, but install you into unspeakable Prerogatives. He will bestow himself upon you, he will be a friend to you, and a father to you: •Cor. 6. 18. he will be a Sun, and a Shield to you: Psal. 84. 11. in a word, he will be a God to you, Gen. 17. 7. and what can be said more? What you may expect that a God should do for you, and be to you, that he will be, that he will <◇> She that marries a Prince, expects he should do for her like a Prince, that she may live in suitable state, and have an answerable dowry. He that hath a King for his Father, or friend, expects, that he should do for him like a King. Alas, the Kings and Monarchs of the earth, so much above us, are but like the painted butterflies amongst the rest of their kind, or the fair-coloured palmer-worm amongst the rest of the worms, if compared with God. As he doth infinitely exceed the glory and power of his glittering dust, so he will beyond all proportion exceed, in doing for his favorites, whatever Princes can do for theirs. He will give you grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from you. Psal. 84. 11. He will take you for his sons and daughters, and make you heirs of his promises, Heb. 6. 17. and establish his everlasting Covenant with you. Ier. 32. 40. He will justify you from all, that Law, Conscience, Satan, can charge upon you. Rom. 8. 33, 34. He will give you free access into his presence, and accept your persons, and receive your prayers. Eph. 3. 12. Eph. 1. 6. 1 John 5. 14. He will abide in you, and make you the men of his secrets, and hold a constant and friendly communion with you. John 14. 23. John 15. 15. 1 John 1. 3. His car shall be open, his door open, his store open at all times to you. His blessing shall rest upon you, and he will make your enemies to serve you, and work about all things for good unto you. Psal. 115. 13. Rom. 8. 28.

4. The Terms of mercy are brought as low, as possible, to you. God hath stooped as low to sinners as with honor he can. He will not be thought a fauteur of sin, nor stain the glory of his holiness: and whither could he come, lower than he hath, unless he should do this? He hath abated the impossible terms of the first Covenant. Ier. 3. 13. Mark 5. 36. Acts 16. 31. Acts 3. 19. Prov. 28. 13. He doth not impose anything unreasonable, or impossible, as a condition of life upon you. Two things were necessary to be done, according to the tenor of the first Covenant by you. 1. That you should fully satisfy the demands of Justice, for past offenses. 2. That you should perform personally, perfectly, and perpetually the whole law for the time to come. Both these are, to us, impossible. Rom. 8. 3. But behold God's gracious abatement in both. He doth not stand upon satisfaction: he is content to take of the surety (and he of his own providing too) what he might have exacted from you. 2 Cor. 5. 19. He declares himself to have received a ransom, Job 33. 24. 1 Tim. 2. 6. and that he expects nothing, but that you should accept his son, and he shall be righteousness and redemption to you. John 1. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 30. And for the future obedience, here he is content to yield to your weakness, and to remit the rigor. He doth not stand upon perfection (as a condition of life, though he still insists upon it as due,) but is content to accept of sincerity. Gen. 17. 1. Prov. 11. 20. Though you cannot pay the full debt he will accept you according to that which you have, and will take willing for doing, and the purpose for the performance: 2 Cor. 8. 12. 2 Chron. 6. 8. Heb. 11. 17. and if you come in his Christ, and set your hearts to please him, and make it the chief of your cares, he will approve and reward you, though the vessel be marred in your hands.

Oh consider your makers condescension. Let me say to you, as Naaman's servants to him; My father, if the Prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? how much rather, when he saith unto thee, wash and be clean? 2 Kings 5. 13. If God had demanded some terrible, some severe and rigorous thing of you, to escape eternal damnation, would you not have done it? Suppose it had been to spend all your days in sorrow in some howling wilderness, or pine yourselves with famine, or to offer the fruit of your bodies, for the sin of your souls, would you not have thankfully accepted eternal redemption, though these had been the conditions? Yea further, if God should have told you, you should have fried in the fire for millions of ages, or been tormented so long in hell, would you not have gladly accepted it? Alas, all these are not so much as one sand in the glass of eternity. If your offended Creator should have held you but one year on the rack, and then come and bid you take your choice, whether you would renounce your sins, accept his Christ, and serve him a few years in self-denial, or lie in this case forever and ever: do you think you should have stuck at the offer, and disputed the terms, and have been unresolved, whether you were best to accept of the motion? O sinner, return and live: why shouldst thou die, when life is to be had for the taking, and mercy would be beholding to thee (as it were) to be saved? Couldst thou say indeed, Lord I knew that thou wast an hard man, Mat. 25. 24. thou hadst some little excuse; but when the God of Heaven hath stooped so low, and abated so far, if now thou shouldst stand off, who shall plead for thee?

Obj. Notwithstanding all these abatements, I am no more able to perform these conditions, (in themselves so easy) of faith and repentance, and sincere obedience, than to satisfy and fulfil the law.

Answ. These you may perform by God's grace enabling, whereas the other are naturally impossible, in this state, even to believers themselves. But let the next consideration serve for a fuller answer.

5. Wherein you are impotent, God doth offer grace to enable you. I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded. Prov. 1. 24. What though you are plunged into the ditch of that misery from which you can never get out? Christ offereth to help you out; he stretcheth forth his hand to you, and if you perish, it is for refusing his help. Behold I stand at the door, and knock: if any man open to me, I will come in. Rev. 3. 20. What though you are poor, and wretched, and blind, and naked, Christ offereth a cure for your blindness, a cover for your nakedness, a remedy for your poverty: he tendereth you his righteousness, his graces. I counsel thee to buy of me gold that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see, Rev. 3. 17, 18. Do you say, The condition is impossible, for I have not wherewith to buy? You must know, that this buying is without money and without price. Isaiah. 55. 1. This buying is by begging, and seeking with diligence and constancy in the use of God's means. Prov. 2. 3, 4. God commandeth thee to know him, and to fear him. Dost thou say, yea but my mind is blinded and my heart hardened from his fear? I answer, God doth offer to enlighten thy mind, and to teach thee his fear: that is presented to thy choice. Prov. 1. 29. For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord. So that now, if men live in ignorance and estrangement from the Lord, it is because they will not understand, and desire not the knowledge of his ways. Job. 21. 14 If thou criest after knowledge, if thou seekest her as Silver, &c. Then shalt thou understand and the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. Prov. 2. 3, 4, 5. Is not here a fair offer? Turn you at my reproof: behold I will pour out my spirit unto you. Prov. 1. 23. Though of yourselves you can do nothing, yet you may do all things through his spirit enabling you, and he doth offer his assistance to you. God bids you, Wash you and make you clean: Isaiah, 1. 16. you say you are unable as much as the Leopard to wash out his spots: Ier. 13. 23. yea but the Lord doth offer to purge you, so that if you be filthy still, 'tis through your own willfulness. Esek. 24. 13. I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged. Jer. 13. 27. O Jerusaleme, wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be? God doth wait when you will be made clean, when you will yield to his motions, and accept of his offers, and let him do for and in you, what you cannot do of yourselves. You do not know how much God will do, upon your importunity, if you will but be restless and instant with him. Luke 11. 8. and 18. 5.

If God $\langle \diamond \rangle$ not bound himself by express promise... wicked men, to give them Grace in the diligent use of the means: yet he hath given them abundant encouragement to expect it from him, if they seek it earnestly in his way. His most gracious nature is abundant encouragement. If a rich and most bountiful man should see thee in misery, and bid thee come to his door, wouldst thou not with confidence expect at thy coming to find some relief. Thou art not able to believe, nor repent: God appoints thee to use such and such means, in order to thy obtaining faith and repentance: doth not this argue, that God will bestow these upon thee, if thou dost ply him diligently in prayer, meditation, reading, hearing, self-examination, and the rest of his means? Otherwise, God should but mock his poor creatures, to put them upon these self-denying endeavors, and then when they have put hard to it, and continued waiting upon him for Grace, deny them at last. Surely, if a sweet-natured man would not deal thus, much less will the most merciful and gracious God.

I intended to have added many other arguments: but these have swoln under my hands, and I hope the judicious reader, will rather look upon the weight, than the number.

The Conclusion of the whole.

And now my brethren let me know your minds. What do you intend to do? Will you go on and die, or will you set upon a thorough and speedy conversion, and lay hold on eternal life? How long will you linger in Sodom? how long will you halt between two opinions? 1. Kings 18. 21. Are you not yet resolved whether Christ or Barabbas, whether bliss or torment, whether the land of Cabul, 1 kings. 9. 13. or the Paradise of God, be the better choice? Is it a disputable case, whether the Abana and Pharphar of Damascus, be better than all the streams of Eden? or whether the vile puddle of sin, be to be preferred before the water of life, clear as Crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb? Can the world in good earnest do that for you, that Christ can? will it stand by you to eternity? will pleasures, titles, lands, treasures, descend with you? Psal. 49. 17. 1. Tim. 6. 7. If not, had you not need look after somewhat that will? What mean you to stand wavering, to be off and on? Foolish children! how long will you stick between the womb and the world? Shall I leave you at last no farther than Agrippa, but almost persuaded? Why, you are forever lost, if left here. As good not at all, as not altogether Christians. You are half of the mind to give over your former negligent life, and to set to a strict and holy course: you could wish that you were as some others be, and could do as 〈◇〉 can do. How long will you rest in idle wishes, and fruitless purposes? when will you come to a fixed, full, and firm resolve? Do not you see how Satan gulls you, by tempting you to delays? How long hath he tolled you on in the way to perdition? How many years have you been purposing to amend? What if God should have taken you off this while?

Well, put not me off with a dilatory answer. Tell not me of hereafter. I must have your present consent. It you be not now resolved, while the Lord is treating with you, and wooing of you, much less are you like to be hereafter, when these impressions are worn out, and you are hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Will you give me your hands? Will you set open the doors, and give the Lord Jesus the full and present possession? Will you put in your names into his covenant? Will you subscribe? What do you resolve upon? If you are still upon your delays, my labor is lost, and all is like to come to nothing. Fain I would, that you should now put in your adventures. Come, cast in your lot, make your choice. Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation: today if you will hear his voice. Why should not this be the day, from whence thou shouldst be able to date thine happiness? Why shouldst thou venture a day longer, in this dangerous and dreadful condition? What if God should this night require thy soul? Oh that thou mightest know, in this thy day, the things that belong unto thy peace, before they be hid from thine eyes! Luke 19. 42. This is thy day, and 'tis but a day. John 9. 4. Others have had their day, and have received their doom; and now art thou brought upon the stage of this world, here to act thy part, for a whole eternity. Remember, thou art now upon thy good behavior for everlasting. If thou make not a wise choice now, thou art undone forever. Look what thy present choice is, such must thine eternal condition be. Luke 10. 42. Luke 16. 25. Prov. 1. 27, 28, 29.

And is it true indeed? is life and death at thy choice? Yea, 'tis as true as truth is. Deut. 30. 19. Why then, what hinders but that thou shouldst be happy? Nothing doth, or can hinder, but thine own willful neglect, or refusal. It was the passage of the Eunuch to Philip: See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? So I may say to thee: See, here is Christ, here is mercy, pardon, life, what hinders but that thou shouldst be pardoned, and saved? One of the Martyrs as he was praying at the stake, had his pardon set by in a box (which indeed he refused, deservedly, because upon unworthy terms.) But here the terms are most honorable and easy: Oh sinner, wilt thou burn with thy pardon by? Why do but forthwith give up thy consent to Christ, renounce thy sins, deny thyself, take up the Yoke, and the Cross, and thou carriest the day; Christ is thing, pardon, peace, life, blessedness, all are thine: And is not this an offer worth the embracing? Why shouldst thou hesitate, or doubtfully dispute about the case? Is it not past controversy, whether God be better than sin, and glory better than vanity? Why shouldst thou forsake thine own mercy, and sin against thine own life? When wilt thou shake off thy sloth, and lay by thine excuses? Boast not thyself of tomorrow: thou knowest not where this night may lodge thee, Prov. 27. 1.

Beloved, now the holy spirit is striving with you. He will not always strive. Hast thou not felt thy heart warmed by the word, and been almost persuaded to leave off thy sins, and come in to God? Hast thou not felt some good motions in thy mind, wherein thou hast been warned of thy danger, and told what thy careless course would end in? It may be thou art like young Samuel, who when the Lord called once and again, he knew not the voice of the Lord: 1. Sam. 3. 6, 7. but these motions and items are the offers, and essays, and the calls and strivings of the Spirit. O take the advantage of the tide, and know the day of thy visitation.

Now, the Lord Jesus stretcheth wide his arms to receive you. He beseecheth you by us. How lovingly, how meltingly, how pitifully, how passionately he calleth you! The Church is put into a sudden ecstasy upon the sound of his voice, The voice of my beloved! Cant. 2. 8. Oh wilt thou turn a deaf ear to his voice! It is not the voice that breaketh the Cedars, and maketh the mountains to skip like a Calf, that shaketh the Wilderness and divideth the flames of fire, it is not Sinai's Thunder; but the soft and still voice. It is not the voice of Mount Ebal, a voice of cursing and terror; but the voice of Mount Gerizim, the voice of blessing, and of glad tidings of good things. It is not the voice of the Trumpet, nor the noise of War; but a message of peace from the King of peace. Eph. 6. 15. 2 Cor. 5. 18, 20. Methinks it should be with thee, as with the spouse: My soul failed when he spake. Cant. 5. 6. I may say to thee, O sinner, as Martha to her Sister, The master is come, and he calleth for thee. John 11. 28. Oh now, with Mary, arise quickly, and come unto him. How sweet are his invitations! He crieth in the open concourse, If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink. John 7. 37. Prov. 1. 21. He broacheth his own body for thee. Oh come and lay thy mouth to his side. How free he is! he excludeth none. Whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely. Rev. 22. 17. Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither. Come, eat of my bread, drink of the Wine which I have mingled. Forsake the foolish, and live. Prov. 9. 4, 5, 6. Come unto me, &c. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Mat. 11. 28, 29. Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out. John 6. 37. How doth he bemoan the obstinate refusers? O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy Children, as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Mat. 23. 37. Behold me, behold me: I have stretched out my hands all the day to a rebellious people. Easy 65. 1, 2. Oh be persuaded now at last, to throw yourselves into the arms of love.

Behold, O ye sons of men, the Lord Jesus hath thrown open the prisons, and now he cometh to you (as the Magistrates once to them Act. 16. 39) and beseecheth you to come out. If it were from a Palace, or a Paradise that Christ did call you, it were no wonder if you were unwilling (and yet how easily was Adam•olled from hence?) but it is from your prison, sirs, from your chains, from the dungeon, from the darkness that he calleth, you; Isaiah 42. 6, 7. and yet will you not come? He calleth you unto liberty, Gal. 5. 13. and yet will you not hearken? His Yoke is easy, his Laws are liberty, his service freedom: Mat. 11. 30. James 1. 25. 1. Cor. 7. 22. and (whatever prejudices you have against his ways) if a God may be believed, you shall find them all pleasure and peace, and shall taste sweetness and joy•unutterable, and take infinite content and felicity in them. Prov. 3. 17. Psal. 119. 165. 1 Pet. 1. 8. Psal. 119. 103, 111.

Beloved, I am loath to leave you. I cannot tell how to give you over. I am now ready to shut up, but fain I would drive this bargain between Christ and you, before I end. What, shall I leave you as I found you, at last? Have you read hitherto, and are not yet resolved upon a present abandoning all your sins, and closing with Jesus Christ? Alas, what shall I say? what shall I do? Will you turn off all my importunity? Have I run in vain? Have I used so many arguments, and spent so much time to persuade you, and yet must sit down at last in disappointment? But it is a small matter that you turn off me: you put a slight upon the God that made you, you reject the bowels and beseechings of a Savior, and will be found resisters of the Holy Ghost, Act. 7. 51. if you will not now be prevailed with• to repent and be converted.

Well, though I have ca•ed long and ye have refused, I shall yet this once more lift up my voice like a Trumpet, and cry from the highest places of the City, before I conclude with a miserable Conclamatum est. Once more I shall call after regardless sinners, that, if it be possible, I may awaken them. O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord. Ier. 22. 29. Unless you be resolved to die, lend your ears to the last calls of mercy. Behold, in the name of God I make open proclamation to you. Hearken unto me, O ye Children. Hear instruction, and he wise, and refuse it not. Prov. 8. 32, 33.

Ho everyone that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat, yea come, buy wine and milk, without money and without prIEEE. Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat yet that which is good, and let your s•ul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear and come ye unto me, hear and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Isaiah. 55. 1, 2, 3.

Ho everyone that is sick of any manner of disease or torment, Mat. 4. 23, 24. or is possessed with an evil spirit, whether of pride, or fury, or lust, or covetousness, come ye to the Physician; bring away your sick. Loe here is he that healeth all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people.

Ho everyone that is in debt, and everyone that is in distress, and everyone that is discontented, gather yourselves unto Christ, and he will become a Captain over you. He will be your protection from the arrests of the Law: He will save you from the hand of justice. Behold, he is an open sanctuary to you, he is a known refuge. Heb. 6. 18. Psal. 48. 3. Away with your sins, and come in unto him, lest the avenger of blood seize you, lest devouring wrath overtake you.

Ho every ignorant sinner, come and buy eyesalve that thou mayest see. Rev. 3. 18. Away with thine excuses; thou art forever lost, if thou continuest in this estate. 2 Cor. 4. 3. But accept of Christ for thy Prophet, and he will be a light unto thee. Isaiah. 42. 6. Eph. 5. 14. Cry unto him for knowledge, study his word, take pains about the principles of religion, humble thyself before him, and he will teach thee his way, and make thee wise unto salvation. Mat. 13. 36. Luke 8. 9. John 5. 39. Psal. 25. 9. But if thou wilt not follow him, in the painful use of his means, but sit down, because thou hast but one talent, he will condemn thee for a wicked and slothful servant. Mat. 25. 24, 26.

Ho every profane sinner, come in and live. Return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon thee. Be entreated, Oh return, come: Thou that hast filled thy mouth with oaths, and execrations, all manner of sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven thee, Mark 3. 28. If thou wilt but thoroughly turn unto Christ, and come in. Though thou hast been as unclean as Magdalene; yet put away thy Whoredomes out of thy sight, and thine adulteries from between thy breasts, and give up thyself unto Christ, as a vessel of holiness, alone for his use, and then, though thy sins be as scarlet, they shall be as wool, and though they be as crimson, they shall be as white as snow, Luke 7. 37. Hos. 2. 2. 1 Thess. 4. 4. Isaiah 1. 18.

Hear O ye Drunkards, how long will ye be drunken? put away your wine. 1 Sam. 1. 14. Though you have rolled in the vomit of your sin, take the vomit of repentance, and heartily disgorge your beloved lusts, and the Lord will receive you. 2 Cor. 6. 17. Give up yourselves unto Christ, to live soberly, righteously, and godly; embrace his righteousness; accept his government; and though you have been swine, he will wash you. Rev. 3. 6.

Hear O ye loose companions, whose delight is in vain and wicked society, to sport away your time in carnal mirth and jollity with them; come in at wisdoms call, and choose her, and her ways, and forsake the foolish, and you shall live. Prov. 9. 5, 6.

Hear O ye scorers, hear the word of the Lord. Though you have made a sport at godliness, and the professors thereof; though you have made a scorn of Christ, and of his ways; yet, even to you doth he call, to gather you under the wings of his mercy. Prov. 1. 22, 23. In a word, though you should be found among the worst of that black roll, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. yet, upon your through Conversion, you shall washed, be you shall be justified, you shall be sanctified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God, ver. 11.

Ho every formal professor, that art but a lukewarm and dough-baked Christian, and restest in the form of godliness, give over thy halving, and thy halting; be a throughout Christian, and be zealous and repent, and then though thou hast been an offense of Christ's stomach, thou shall be the joy of his heart. Rev. 3. 16, 19, 20.

And now bear witness, that mercy hath been offered you. I call heaven and earth to record against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing, therefore choose life, that you may live. Deut. 30. 19. I can but woo you, and warn you: I cannot compel you to be happy: if I could, I would. What answer will you send me with to my master? Let me speak unto you as Abraham's servant to them; And now if you will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me. Gen. 24. 49. Oh for such a happy answer, as Rebekah gave to them! Gen. 24. 57, 58. And they said, we will call the damsel, and enquire at her mouth. And they called Rebekah, and said unto her. Wilt thou go with this man? and she said I will go. Oh that I had but thus much from you! Why should I be your accuser, Mat. 10. 14, 15. who thirst for your salvation? Why should the passionate pleadings and wooings of mercy be turned into the horrid aggravations of your obstinacy and additions to your misery. Judge in your own selves: Do you not think their condemnation will be doubly dreadful, that shall still go on in their sins, after all endeavors to recall them? Doubtless, it shall be more toleable for Tyre and Sidon, yea for Sodom and Gomorrah; in the day of Judgment, than for such. Mat. 11. 22. 24.

Beloved, if you have any pity for your perishing souls, close with the present offers of mercy. If you would not continue and increase the pains of your travelling Ministers, do not stick in the birth. If the God that made you have any authority with you, obey his command and come in. If you are not the despisers of grace, and would not shut up the doors of mercy against yourselves, repent and be converted. Let not Heaven stand open for you in vain. Let not the Lord Jesus open his wares, and bid you buy without money and without price, in vain. Let not his Ministers, and his Spirit, strive with you in vain, and leave you now at last unperswaded; lest the sentence go forth against you, The bellows are burnt, the lead is consumed of the fire, the founder melteth in vain. Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them. Ier. 6. 29, 30.

Father of Spirits, take the heart in hand that is too hard for my weakness. Do not thou have ended, though I have done. Half a word from thine effectual power, will do the work. O thou that hast the key of David, that openest when no man shutteth, open thou this heart as thou didst Lydia's, and let the King of glory enter in; and make this soul thy happy captive. Let not the tempter harden him in delays. Let him not stir from this place, nor take his eyes from these lines, till he be resolved to forgo his sins, and to accept of life upon thyself-denying terms. In thy name O Lord God did I go forth to these labors, in thy name do I shut them up. Let not all the time they have cost, be but lost hours: let not all the thoughts of heart, and all the pains that have been about them, be but lost labor. Lord put in thine hand into the heart of this Reader, and send thy Spirit, as once thou didst Philip, to join himself to the Chariot of the Eunuch, while he was reading thy word. And though I should never know it while I live, yet I beseech thee Lord God, let it be found at that day, that some souls were converted by these labors: and let some be able to stand forth and say, that by these persuasions, they were won unto thee. Amen. Amen. Let him that readeth say Amen.

CHRISTIAN LETTERS, Full of SPIRITUAL INSTRUCTIONS, Tending To the Promoting of the Power of Godliness, both in Persons, and Families.

LETTER. I. To his Wife to Dispose her to his Ac...ptance of Taunton, on small Maintenance.

My Dear Heart,

BY this time I hope thou hast received mine by Martin, and also an Answer touching their Resolution at Taunton. My thoughts have been much upon that business of late, so small as the outward Encouragements in point of Maintenance are, and methinks I find my heart much inclining that way. I will tell thee the Principles upon which I go.

First, I lay this for a Foundation, That a man's Life con...isteth not in the Abundance of the things that he possesseth. •...t was accounted a wise Prayer that Agur put up of old, that •...e might only be Fed with Food convenient for him. And •...ertain it is that where m...n have least of the World; they •...steem it least, and live more by Faith and in dependence upon God, casting their care and burden upon him. O the sweet breathings of David's soul! the strong actings of his Faith and Love, that we find come from him, when his condition was low and mean in the World. How closely doth he cling? How fully doth he Relie upon God? The Holy Ghost seems to make it a Privilege to be brought to a necess•...ty of living by Faith, as, I think, I have formerly hinted thee, out of Deut. 11. 10, 11. Where Canaan is preferred before Ægypt, in regard of its dependence upon God for the former and latter Rain, which in Ægypt they could live without, and have supplies from the River. And certainly could we that are inexperienced, but feel the Thorns of those cares and troubles that there are in gathering and keeping much, and the danger when Riches increase of setting our hearts upon them, we should prize the happiness of a middle condition much before it. Doubtless, Godliness with contentment, is great gain. Seekest thou great things for thyself (saith the Prophet to Baruch) seek them not. Certainly a good Conscience is a continual Feast, and enough for a happy Life: no man that Wareth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a Soldier. We should be but little encumbered with the things of this World, and withal free from a world of entanglements, which in a great place committed wholly to our charge, would be upon our Consciences as no small Burden.

Secondly, I take this for an undoubted truth, that a dram of Grace, is better than a Talent of Wealth; and therefore such a place where our Consciences would be free, and we had little to do in the World to take off our hearts and thoughts from the things of Eternity, and had the advantage of abundance of means, and the daily opportunities of warming our hearts with the blessed Society and Conference of Heavenly Christians, and no temptations to carry us away, nor discouragements in our walking with God, and the due performance of our duty is (if we pass a true and Spiritual Judgment, as the Holy Ghost in Scripture would) without comparison before another place, void of those Spiritual helps and advantages. Let us think with ourselves, what though our Purses, our Estates, may thrive better in a place of a large maintenance? yet where are our graces, our souls, like to thrive any way answerable to what they are in this? We should have but little in the World, and we could live hereafter; but alas, what is this if it be made up to us, as it will surely be in Communion with God and his People? If we thrive in Faith, and Love, Humility, and Heavenly mindedness, as above all places I know we are likely to do there, what matter is it though we do not raise ourselves in the World? the thing it may well be accounted but mean; but alas, let us look upon it with a spiritual Eye, and then we shall pass another Judgment of it. Oh! who would leave so much Grace, and so much comfort in Communion with Christ and his Saints, as we may gain there, for the probabilities of living with a little more gentility and handsomness in the World? 'Tis a strange thing to see how Christians generally do judge so carnally of things, looking to the things that are seen and Temporal, and not the things that will stick by us to Eternity. What is it worth a year? is the Maintenance certain and sure? What charges are there like to be? these are the questions we commonly ask first, when we speak of settling. But alas, though those things are duly to be considered too, yet what good am I like to do? what good am I like to get? (Both which questions I think might be as comfortably Answered concerning this, as any place in England;) These should be the main interrogatories, and the chief things we should judge of a place to settle in. What if we have but a little in the World? Why then we must keep but a short Table, and shall make but a little noise in the World, and must give the meaner entertainments to our Friends. O but will not this be abundantly made up, if we have more outward and inward Peace, as we may well count we shall have. One dram of saving Grace will weigh down all this. Let others Hug themselves in their Corn, and Wine, and Oil, in their fat Livings, and their large Tables, and their great resort, if we have more of the Light of God's Countenance, more grace, more comfort, who would change with them? surely if Paul were to chose a Place, he would not look so much what 'twas a year, but would wish us to take that where we might be most likely to save our own and others Souls.

Thirdly, That the best and the surest way to have any outward Mercy, is to be content to want it. When men's desires are over-eager after the World, they must have thus much a Year, and a House well Furnished, and Wife, and Children, thus and thus qualified, or else they will not be content; God doth usually, if not constantly, break their wills by denying them, as one would cross a froward Child of his stubborn humor: or else puts a sting into them, that a man had been as good he had been without them, as a man would give a thing to a froppish Child, but it may be with a knock on his Fingers, and a frown to boot. The best way to get Riches, is out of doubt to set them lowest in ones desires. Solomon found it so: Alas, he did not ask riches, but wisdom and ability, to discharge his great Trust; but God was so pleased with his Prayer, that he threw in them into the Bargain. If we seek the Kingdom of God, and his Righteousness in the first place, and leave other things to him, God will not stand with us for these outwards, though we never ask them we shall have them as over measure; God will throw them in as the Vantage. And to this suits the experience of our dear Honorathius: and indeed (saith he, speaking of God) Honorathius finds that his only hiding place and refuge, and a place of succor, from the storms that fall upon him, and hath had such helps at dead lift there, that he is engaged forever to trust the•...e. For when he hath been lowest, and in the greatest straights, he hath gone and made his moan Heaven-ward, with free submission to the rightful disposer of all things, and he hath been so liberally supplied, as makes him very confident the best way to obtain any Mercy, or supply, is to be content to be without it: And he is persuaded nothing set God's Mercies farther off, than want of free submission to want them. Certainly, God will never be behind hand with us. Let our care be to build his House, and let him alone to build ours.

Fourthly, That none ever was, or ever shall be, a loser by Jesus Christ. Many have lost much for him, but never did, never shall any lose by him. Take this for a certainty, whatsoever probabilities of outward comforts we leave, whatsoever outward advantages we balk, that we may glorify him in our Services, and enjoy him in his Ordinances more than elsewhere we could, we shall receive an hundred fold in this life. 'Tis a sad thing to see how little Christ is trusted or believe in the World: Men will trust him no farther then they can see him, and will leave no work for Faith. Alas, hath he not a thousand ways, both outward and inward, to make up a little outward disadvantage to us? What doth our Faith serve for? Have any ventured themselves upon him in his way, but he made good every word of the Promise to them? let us therefore exercise our Faith, and stay ourselves upon the Promise, and see if ever we are ashamed of our hope.

Fifthly, That what is wanting in the means, God will make up in the blessing. This I take for a certain truth, while a man commits himself and his affairs to God, and is in a way that God put him into: Now if a man have but a little income, if he have a great Blessing, that's enough to make it up. Alas, we must not account Mercies by the Bulk. What if another have a pound to my Ounce, if mine be gold for his silver, I will never change with him. As 'tis not Bread that keeps men alive, but the Word of Blessing that proceedeth out of his mouth of God; so 'tis not the largeness of the means, but the blessing of the Lord that maketh rich. Oh! if men did but believe this, they would not grasp so much of the world as they do. Well, let others take their course, and we will take ours, to wait upon God by Faith and Prayer, and rest in his Promise; and I am confident that is the way to be provided for: Let others toil to enlarge their income, (but alas, they will find they go not the right way to work) we will bless God to enlarge our blessing, and I doubt not but we shall prove the Gainers.

Sixthly, That every Condition hath its Snares, Crosses, and Troubles, and therefore we may not expect to be without them where ever we be, only that condition is most eligible that hath fewest and least. I cannot object anything against the proposal of Taunton, but the meanness of the maintenance; but if our income be but short, we can I hope be content to live answerably, we must fare the meaner, that will be all the inconvenience that I know, and truly I hope we are not of the nature of that Animal, that hath his Heart in his Belly. I know how Daniel thrived by his Water and pulfe, and think a mean Diet is as wholesome to the body, yea. and far less hurtful than a full and liberal is; and persuade myself it would be no such hard matter for us contentedly to deny our flesh in this respect. But let us consider how little and utterly inconsiderable this inconvenience is, in comparison of those we must reckon upon meeting with, if God cast us into another place, and whether this be not a great deal less than the trouble we shall have for want of comortable and Christian Society, for want of the frequent and quickening means we shall here have, in wrangling and contending with the Covetous, or else losing our dues, in the Railings and scandalous, and malicious Reports, that are we see raised upon the best by the wicked in most places, in their contentions about their right to the Sacraments, in our intanglement in the cares and troubles of this life, &c. all which we should be here exempted from. Upon these and the like considerations, I find my heart very much inclined to accept of their offer at Taunton. I beseech thee to weigh, and thoroughly consider the matter, and tell me impartially thy thoughts, and which way thy Spirit inclines, •...or I have always resolved the place I settled in should be thy choice, and to thy content. The least intimation of thy will to the contrary, shall overballance all my thoughts of settling there, for I should account it the greatest unhappiness if I should thus settle, and thou shouldst afterwards be discontented at the straightness of our condition. But I need not have Wrote this, hadst not thou fully signified thy mind already to me, I had never gone so far as I have. Well, the Lord whose we are, and whom we serve, do with us as it shall seem good unto him. We are always as mindful as is possible of thee here, both together and apart. Captain Luke desired me to entreat thee to meet him one two hours in a day, for the Commemoration of Mercies upon the twenty third day of every Month. Send word to me of their Resolution at Taunton, in two Letters, least possibly one should miscarry, though never a one did yet. I dare not think of settling under sixty Pound at Taunton, and surely it cannot be less. I have Written as well as I could on a sudden my mind to thee, I have been so large in delivering my Judgment, that I must thrust up my Af•...ctions into a Corner. Well, though they have but a corner in my Letter, I am sure they have room enough in my heart: But I must conclude; The Lord keep thee my Dear, and cherish thee forever in his Bosom. Farewell mine own Soul,

I am as ever thine own Heart, JOS. ALLEINE

LETTER II. [Prepare for Suffering.] To my dearly belo•...ed the Flock of Christ in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most dear Christians,

MY extreme straights of time will now force me to bind my long loves in a few short lines; yet I could not tell how to leave you unsaluted, nor choose but write to you in a few words, that you should not be dismayed neither at our present sufferings, or at the evil tidings that by this time I doubt not are come unto you. Now, Brethren, is the time when the Lord is like to put you upon the trial; now is the hour of temptation come. Oh! be faithful to Christ to the death, and he shall give you a Crown of life. Faithful is he that hath called you, and he will not suffer you upon his faith•...fulness to be tempted above what you are able. Give up yourselves and your All to the Lord, with resolution to follow him fully, and two things be sure of, and lay up as sure grounds of everlasting consolation.

1. If you seek by prayer and study to know the mind of God, and do resolve to follow it in uprightness, you shall not fail either of direction or pardon; either God will show you what his pleasure is, or will certainly forgive you if you miss your way. Brethren, fix upon your souls the deep and lively affecting apprehensions of the most gracious, loving, merciful, sweet, compassionate, tender nature of your Heavenly Father, which is so great that you may be sure he will with all readiness and love accept of his poor Children when they endeavors to approve themselves in sincerity to him, and would fain know his mind and do it, if they could but clearly see it, though they should unwillingly mistake.

2. That as sure as God is faithful, if he do see that such or such a temptation (with the forethought of which you may be apt to disquiet yourselves, lest you should fall away when thus or thus tried) will be too hard for your Graces, he will never suffer it to come upon you. Let not, my dear Brethren, let not the present tribulations or those impending move you. This is the way of the Kingdom: persecution is one of your Land marks: self-denial and taking up the Cross is your A B C of Religion; you have learnt nothing, that have not begun at Christ's-Cross. Brethren, the Cross of Christ is your Crown, the reproach of Christ is your riches; the shame of Christ is your glory; the damage attending strict and holy diligence, your greatest advantage: sensible you should be of what is coming, but not discouraged; humbled, but not dismayed; having your hearts broken, and yet your spirits unbroken; humble yourselves mightily under the mighty hand of God; but fear not the face of man: may you even be low in humility, but high in courage; little in your own apprehensions of yourselves, but great in holy fortitude, resolution and holy magnanimity, lying in the dust before your God, yet triumphing in faith and hope, and boldness and confidence over all the power of the enemies. Approve yourselves as good Soldiers of Jesus Christ, with no Armor, but that of righteousness; No weapons, but strong crying and tears; looking for no Victory but that of Faith; nor hope to overcome, but by patience: now for the faith and patience of the Saints, now for the harness of your suffering Grace: O gird up the loins of your mind, and be sober, and hope to the end: Fight not but the good fight of Faith: here you must contend and that earnestly: Strive not but against sin, and here you may resist even unto blood: now see that you choose life, and embrace affliction rather than sin. Strive together mightily and frequently by prayer: I know you do, but I would you should abound more and more: Share my loves among you, and continue your earnest prayers for me, and be your assured that I am and shall be through Grace, a willing thankful Servant of your Souls concernments.

LETTER III. [Warning to Professors.] To my most dearly beloved, my Christian Friends in Taunton, Salvation.

Most loving Brethren,

I Shall never forget your old kindnesses, and the entire affections that you have shed upon me, not by drops, but by floods, would I never so fain forget them, yet I could not, they are so continually renowned; for there is never a day but I hear of them; Nay, •...ore than hear of them, I feel and taste them. The God that hath promised to them that give to a Prophet though but a cup of cold Water, shall receive a Prophets reward; he will recompense your labor of love, your servant prayers, and constant cries, your care for my welfare, your bountiful supplies who have given me, not a cup of cold water, but the Wine of your loves, with the sense and tidings whereof I am continually refreshed. I must, I do and will bless the Lord as long as I live, that he hath cast my lot in so fair a place, to dwell in your communion; and especially to go in and out before you, and to be the Messenger of the Lord of Host to you, to proclaim his Law, and to Preach his Excellencies, to be his Spokesman to you, and to woo•... for him, and to espouse you to one Husband, and to present you as a chaste Virgin unto Christ. Lord! how unworthy am I, everlastingly unworthy of this glorious Dignity, which I do verily believe the most brightest Angels in Heaven would be glad of, if the Lord saw it fit to employ them in this work! Well, I do not, I cannot repent, notwithstanding all the difficulties and inconveniences that do attend his despised Servants, and hated ways, and that are like to attend them; for we have but sipped yet of the Cup; but I have set my hand to his plow; my Ministry I took up with you, and my Testimony I finished with you, though I thought I had espoused you till death; and when I was entered into that Sacred Office, which through rich Grace I was employed in, I told you in the close of what I spake before the laying of the holy Hands upon me (most gladly do I take up this Office with all the persecution, affliction, difficulties an tribulation and inconveniencies that do and may attend it) and blessed be God, I am through his goodness of the same mind still, and my tribulations for Christ, do (to him be Glory, for to me belongs nothing but shame and confusion of face) confirm my choice and my resolution to serve him with much more than my labors. Verily, Brethren, it is a good choice that I have commended to you: Oh! that there might not one be found among you that hath not made Mary's choice, I mean of that good part which shall never be taken away from you. Brethren, let them take up with the world that have no better portion: be content that they should carry the Bell, and bear away th•... riches and perferments and glory, and splendor of the World. Alas! you have no reason to envy them: verily, they have a lie in their right hand: Ah! how soon will their hopes fail them: how soon will the crackling blast be out, and leave them in eternal darkness: they shall go to the generation of their Fathers, they shall never see light, like sheep they shall be laid in their Graves, and the upright shall have Dominion over them in the morning. But for my Brethren, I am jealous that none of you should come short of the Glory of God. I am ambitious for you that you should be all the heirs of an endless life, the living hopes of the Saints, the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fades not away.

Ah my Brethren! why should not you be all happy? I am jealous for you with a Godly jealousy, lest a promise being left you of entering into his rest, any of you should come short of it. O look diligently, lest any man fail of the Grace of God: Alas! how it pities me to see this Rest neglected: How it grieves me that any of you should fall short of mercy at last! That any of that flock over which the holy Ghost hath made be in part overseer, should perish; when Christ hath done so much for you, and when his under Officers (through his Grace, for we are not sufficient of ourselves) have done somewhat to recover and save them. Ah dear Brethren! I was in great earnest with you when I besought you out of the Pulpit, many a time, to give a Bill of Divorce to your sins, and to accept of the match and the mercy that in the name of God Almighty I did there offer to you. Alas! how it pitied me to look over so great a Congregation, and to think that I could not, for my life I could not, persuade them, one quarter of them, in likelihood to be saved? how it moved me to see your diligence in flocking, not only to the stated Exercises, but to the Repetitions and to most hazardous opportunities, for which you are greatly to be commended, since the Law forbid my public Preaching, and yet to think that many of you that went so far, were like to perish forever for want of going further. I must praise your diligent attendance on all opportunities: Blessed be God that made a willing ministry and a willing people: for I remember how I have gone furnished with a Train! How I went with the multitude to the House of God, with the voice of joy and praises, with the multitude that kept Holy-days. The remembrance of which moves my soul, but, O my flock, my most dear flock, how fain would I carry you farther then the external and outward profession; O! how loath am I to leave you there! How troubled to think that any of you should go far and hazard much for Religion, and yet miscarry forever by the hand of some unmortified lust! as secret pride or untamed passion, or an unbridled tongue, or which I fear most of all, a predominate love of the World in your hearts. Alas! must it be so, and is there no remedy but I must carry you to Heavens-gate and leave you there! Oh, that I should leave the work of your Souls but half done; and bring you no farther than the almost of Christianity, Hear, O my people, hear, although I may command you, upon your utmost peril in the Name of the Lord Jesus that shall shortly judge you, I beseech you, I warn you as a Father doth his Children, to look to the settling and securing of your everlasting condition; and for life take heed of your resting in the outter-part of Religion, but to be restless till you find the through-change of Regeneration within, that you are quite new in the frame and bent of your hearts: for here is the main of Religion in the hidden man of the heart: for Christ's sake, for your Soul-sake look to it, that you build upon the Rock, that you be sure in the Foundation work, that you do unfeignedly deliver over yourselves to the Lord to be under his command and at his dispose in all things: see that you make no exceptions, no reserve, that you cast over board all your worldly hopes, and count upon parting with all for Christ: that you take him alone for your whole happiness. Wonder not that I often inculcate this: If it be well here, it is well all; if unsound here, the error is in the foundation, and you are undone. Brethren, I see great trials coming, when we shall see Professors fall like leaves in the Autumn, unless they be well settled: therefore is it that I would so fain have you look to your standing, and to secure the main. And for you whose Souls are soundly wrought upon, O make sure whatever you do: get and keep your evidences clear! How dreadful would your temptations be, if you should be called to part with all for Christ, and not be sure of him neither: get a right and clear understanding of the terms of life, which I have set before you in that form of Covenanting with God in Christ, that I commended to you. I would that none of you should be without a Copy of it: be much in observing your own hearts, both in duties and out-crying mightily to God for assurance: If you cannot discern your estate yourselves, go to somebody that is albe and faithful, and fully open your Case, your Evidences and doubts, and be extraordinary strict and watchful in your whole course, and I doubt not but you will quickly grow up to assurance.

I cannot tell how to make an end, methinks I could write all the day to you, but my straits of time are great, and my Letter already too long, yet I cannot conclude till I have given you my unfeigned than•... for your most kind and gracious Letter. Surely it shall be in store with me, and laid up among my Treasures; that God is pleased so to unite your hearts to me, and to make use of me for your edification, is matter of highest joy unto me; as also to see your stedfas•...ness in Christ, your unshaken resolutions, notwithstanding all the Tempters wiles. Go on, my dearly Beloved, and the Lord strengthen your hands and your hearts, and lift you up above the fears of men. My most dear Brother Norman salutes you with manifold Loves and Respects, earnestly wishing that you may wear the Crown of perseverance; as also Brother Turner. The Lord strengthen, establish, settle you, and after you have suffered a while, make you perfect: I leave my Brethren in the everlasting Arms, and rest, LETTER IV. [A Call to the Unconverted.] To the Beloved People the Inhabitants of the Town of Taunton, Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Most endeared and beloved Friends:

I Do most readily acknowledge myself a Debtor to you all, and a Servant of all, and therefore I have sent these few Lines to salute you all. My Lines did fall in a fair place when the Lord did cast my lot among you; for which I desire to be thankful. God hath been pleased to work a mutual affection between me and you. I remember the tears and Prayers that you have sent me hither with, and how I saw your hearts in your eyes; How can I forget how you poured out your Souls upon me. And truly you are a People much upon my heart, whose welfare is the matter of my continual prayers, care, and study. And oh! that I knew how to do you good: Ah? how certainly should never a son of you miscarry if I knew how to save you. Ah! how it pities me to think how that so many of you should remain in your sins after so many and so long endeavors to convert and bring them in. Once more, Oh? my beloved, once more hear the call of the most high God unto you. The Prison Preaches to you, the same Doctrine that the Pulpit did Hear, O People, hear; he that hath an ear let him hear. The Lord of Life and of Glory offers you all Mercy, and Peace, and Blessedness: Oh, why should you die! whosoever will, let him take of the Waters of Life sreely; what miss of life when it is to be had for the taking? God forbid. O my Brethren, my soul yerns for you, and my bowels towards you. Ah! that I did but know what Arguments to use with you: who shall choose my words for me that I may prevail with sinners not to reject their own Mercy: how snall I get within them? How shall I reach them? Oh! that I did but know the words that would pierce them? that I could but get between their sins and them. Beloved Brethren, the Lord Jesus hath made me, most unworthy, his Spokesman, to bespeak your hearts for him: And oh, that I knew but how to woo for him, that I might prevail! these eight years have I been calling, and yet how great a part do remain visibly in their sins, and how few, alas! how few souls have I gained to Christ by sound conversion. Once more I desire with all possible earnestness to apply myself to you, I have thought it may be a Sermon out of a Prison might do that which I could not do after my long striving with you, but have left undone: come then, O Friends, and let us reason together.

Many among you remain under the power of Ignorance: Ah! how often have I told you the dangerous, yea, damnable estate that such are in. Never make excuses, nor flatter yourselves that you shall be saved though you go on in this; I have told you often, and now tell you again, God must be false of his Word, if ever you be saved without being brought out of the state of ignorance: If ever you enter in at the door of Heaven, it must be by the Key of Knowledge, you cannot be saved, except you be brought to the knowledge of the Truth. A people that remain in gross ignorance, that are without understanding, the Lord that made them, will not have mercy on them. O why will you flatter your selves, and willfully deceive your own selves? when the God of Truth hath said you shall surely die if you go on in this estate: Oh, for the love of God and of your souls, I beseech you awake and bestir yourselves to get the saving knowledge of God: you that are capable of learning a Trade to live by, are you not capable of learning the way to be saved? yea, I doubt not but you are capable if you would but beat your heads about it, and take pains to get it. And is it not pity that you should perish forever for want of a little pains, and study, and care... to get the knowledge of God: Study the Catechism, if possible get it by heart, if not, read it often, or get it read to you, cry unto God for knowledge; improve the little you have by living answerable. Search the Scripture daily, get them read to you if you cannot read them. Improve your Sabbaths diligently, and I doubt not but in the use of these means you will sooner arrive to the knowledge of Christ than of a Trade. But for thee, O hardened sinner, that wilt make thy excuses that thou hast not time nor abilities to get knowledge, and to sit still without it, I pronounce unto thee that thou shalt surely perish: And I challenge thee to tell me, if thou canst, how thou wilt answer it before the most High God when he shall sit in Judgment upon thee, that thou wouldest be contented to undergo a seven years Apprentiship to learn how to get thy living, and that thou mightest have got the knowledge of the principles of Religion in half the time, but thou wouldest not beat thy head about it.

Many are swallowed up in mere prophaneness: Alas! that there should be any such in a place of such means and mercy...! but it cannot be concealed. Many of them proclaim the...r sin like Sodom, and carry their deadly ...prosie in their for...-heads. I am ashamed to think that in T...nton there should be so many Ale-house-haun...ers and Tiplers, so many lewd Gamesters, and Rioters and debauched livers; so many black mouthed Swearers, who have Oaths and Curses for their common language, so many Raylers at Godliness, and Prcfane Scoffers, so many liars and deceitful Dealers, and unclean and wanton Wretches. O what a long list will these and such like make up, if put together: it saddens me to mention such as these. O how crimson is their guilt! how often have you been warned, and yet are still unreformed, yea loose and profane. Yet one warning more have I sent after you from the Lord to repent. Return, O sinners, what! will you run into everlasting burnings with your eyes open?

Repent, O Drunkards, or else you shall be shut out of the Kingdom of Heaven, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Repent, O swearers, else you shall fall into condemnation, James 5. 12. Repent, O liars, put away lying, and speak everyone truth to his neighbor; else you shall have your part in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, Rev. 20. 8. Repent, O companykeepers, forsake the foolish and live, but a Companion of the wicked shall be destroyed, Prov. 13. 20. Repent you Deceivers of your unrighteous dealings, or else you shall have no Inheritance in the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. The Lord that made us, knows my earnest desire for your conversion and Salvation, and that I speak not this to you out of any evil will toward you, for I will lie at your feet to do you good, but out of a sense of your deplorable estate, while you remain in your sins. I know there is mercy for you if you do soundly repent and reform, and bow to the Righteousness and Government of the Lord Christ: but if you go on, and say, you shall yet have peace, I pronounce unto you, that there is no escape, but the Lord will make his wrath to smoke against you, he will wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his Trespases.

Others have escaped the gross pollutions of the world, but stick in the form of Godliness, and content themselves with a negative Righteousness, that they are no Drunkards, nor Swearers, &c. or at best with an outward conformity to the duties of Religion, or some common workings, instead of a saving. O I am jealous for you that you should not lose the things that you have wrought, and miss you reward for want of sincerity: for the Lord's sake put on, and beware of perishing in the Suburbs of the City of Refuge: beg of God to make through-work with you, and be jealous for yourselves; get a right understanding of the difference between a Hypocrite and a sincere Christian, and try you estates much, but only with those marks, that you are sure from the Scripture will abide God's trial.

But for you that fear the Lord in sincerity, I have nothing but good and comfortable words: I have proclaimed your happiness in the last Token I sent to the Town: I mean the abstract for the Covenant of Grace, upon the Privileges, comforts, mercies there summed up, and set before you. May your souls ever live; what condition can you devise wherein there will not be abundance of comfort, and matter of joy unspeakable, to you. O Beloved, know your own happiness, and live in that holy admiring, commending, adoring, praisings of your gracious God, that becomes the people of his praise. I have been long, yet methinks I have not emptied half my heart unto you: I trespass much, I fear, upon the Bearer, therefore in haste I commend you to God. The good will of him that dwelt in the Bush be with you all. The Lord Create a defense upon you, and Deliverance for you: the Lord cover you all the day, and make you to dwell between his shoulders; I desire your constant, instant, earnest Prayers for me, and rest, LETTER. V. [Trust God, and be sincere.] To my most endeared Friends, the Servants of Christ in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most dearly Beloved and longed for, my Joy and Crown:

MY hearts desire and prayer to God for you is, that yo•... may be saved. I know that you are the But of men's rage and malice: but you may satisfy yourselves as David in his patient sustaining of Shimei's sury and curses: It may be the Lord will look upon our aff•...ction, and require good for their cursing this day. But however it be for that, be sure to hold on your way: your name indeed is cast forth as evil, and you are hated of all men for Christ's-sake, for your profession of his Gospel, and cleaving to his ways and servants: but let not this discourage you, for you are now more than ever blessed: only hold fast, that no man take your Crown. Let not any that have begun in the Spirit, end in the flesh. Do not forsake God, till he forsake you; he that endureth to the end shall be saved: The Promise is to him that overcometh; therefore think not of looking back: Now you have set your hands to Christ's Pow, though you labor hard, and suffer long, the Crop will pay for all: now the Lord is trying what credit he hath in the World, and who they be that will trust him. The unbelieving World are all for present pay; they must have ready money, something in hand, and will not follow the Lord when there is like to be any great hazard and hardship in his service. But now is the time for you, my Beloved, to prove yourselves Believers, when there is nothing visible but present hazard and expense, and difficulty in your Makers service. Now it will be seen who can trust the Lord, and who trusts him not: Now, my Brethren, bear you up, stand fast in the Faith, quit you like men, be strong: now give glory to God by believing. If you can trust in his Promises for your reward now, when nothing appears but the displeasure of Rulers, and Bonds, and losses, and tribulation on every side, this will be somewhat like Believers. Brethren, I beseech you to reckon upon no other but crosses here. Let none of you dream of an Earthly Paradise, or flatter yourselves with dreams of sleeping in your ease, and temporal Prosperity, and carrying Heaven too. Think not to keep your Estates, and liberties and consciences too: Count not upon rest till you come to the Land of Promise. Not that I would have any of you to run upon hazards uncalled: No, we shall meet them soon enough in the way of our duty, without we will balk it, and shamefully turn aside: but I would have you cast overboard your Worldly hopes, and count not upon an earthly felicity, but be content to wait till you come on the other side the Grave. Is it not enough to have a whole eternity of happiness yet behind? If God do throw in the comforts of this life too into the bargain; I would not have you throw them back again, or despise the goodness of the Lord: but I would, my Brethren, that you should use this World, as not abusing it, that you should be crucified to the world, and the world to you; that you should declare plainly that you seek a Country, a better Country, which is an Heavenly. Ah! my dear Brethren, I beseech you carry it like Pilgrims an strangers, I beseech you abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against your Souls; for what have we to do with the customs and courses and fashions of this world, who are strangers in it! Be contented with Travelers lots: know you not that you are in a strange Land? all is well as long as it is well at home; I pray you, Brethren, daily and srequently to consider your condition and station: do you not remember that you are in an Inn; and what though your be but poorly attended, and meanly accommodated? though you •...are hard, and lie hard? Is this a strange thing? what should Travelers look sor else? will you set forth in a Journey, and promise yourselves nothing but sair way and fair weather? Shall a man put forth to Sea and reckon upon nothing but the calm? If you were of the World, the World would love his own. But now God hath chosen you, and called you out of the world, therefore the World hateth you: But remember, my Brethren, it is your duty to love them, even while they hate you; and to pray for mercy for them that will show no mercy, nor do no Justice for us. This I desire you to observe as a great duty of the present times: And let not any so far forget their duty and pattern, as to wish evil to them that do evil to us, or to please themselves with the thoughts of being even with them. Let us commit ourselves to him that judgeth righthously, and show ourselves the children of the most High, who doth good to his Enemies, and is kind to the unkind and unthankful: And what though they do hate us? Their love and good-will were much more to be feared, than their hatred, and a far worse sign. Brethren, keep yourselves in the love of God; here is Wisdom. O happy souls, that are his Favorites! For the Lord's sake look to this, make sure of something: look to your sincerity above all things in the World: let not any of you conclude, that because you are of the suffering party, therefore all is well: Look to the Foundation, that your hearts be soundly taken off from every sin, and set upon God above as your Blessedness: Beware that none of you have only a name to love, and be no more than almost Christians. For the love of your Souls, make a diligent search, and try upon what ground you stand, for it heartily pities me to think that any of you should be in so deep, and hazard so much as these must do that will now cleave to the hated ways of the people of God, and yet lose all at last for want of being thorough and sound in the main work, I mean conversion and Regeneration. None so miserable in all the world as an unsound Professor of Religion now is, for he shall be hated and persecuted of the World, because he takes up a Profession, and yet rejected of God too, because he sticks in a Profession: but when once you bear the marks of God's favor, you need not fear the Worlds frowns: Cheer up therefore, Brethren, be strong in the Lord, and of good courage under the Worlds usage: Fear not, in our Fathers House there is bread enough, and room enough; this is sufficient to comfort us under all the inconveniences of the way, that we have so happy a Home, so worthy a Portion, so ready a Father, so goodly an Heritage, so sure a Tenure. Oh, comfort one another with these words: let God see that you can trust in his Word: let the world see that you can live upon a God. I shall share my Prayers and loves among you all, and commit you to the Almighty God: the Keeper of Israel that never flumbereth nor sleepeth, be your Watchman and Keeper to the end, Farewell. I am LETTER. VI. [Look out of your Graves upon the World.] To my most dearly Beloved Friends, the chosen of God in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most endeared Christian,

MY heart is with you, though I am Absent, as to my Bodily presence from you, and therefore as I have often already, so I have now written to you to stir up your pure minds by way of Remembrance, and to call upon you for your steadfast continuing, and vigorous proceeding in the ways of God. Dear Friends, and fellow Soldiers under Christ the Captain of our Salvation, consider your calling and Station, and approve yourselves as good Soldiers of Jesus Christ, as men of resolution and courage, be discouraged with no difficulties of your present Warfare. As for human affairs, it would have you to be as you are, Men of Peace. I would have you Armed not for resisting, God forbid, but for Suffering only, as the Apostle hints: You should resist, even to the uttermost, striving against Sin. Here you must give no quarter, for if you spare but one Agag, the life of your Souls must go for the life of your sins: you must make no Peace; for God will not smile on that Soul that smiles on Sin, nor have any Peace with him, that is at peace with his Enemy. Other Enemies you must forgive, and love, and pray for (which I again desire you to mind as one special duty of the times) but for these Spiritual Enemies, all your affections, and all your Prayers must be engaged against them; yea, you must admit no Parley: It's dangerous to dispute with Temptations. Remember what Eve lost by Parleying with Satan: you must fly from Temptations, and put them off at first with a Peremptory denial. If you will but hear the Devils Arguments, and the Fleshes Pleas, and fair Pretences, it is an hundred to one but you are ensnared by his Sophistry. And for this present evil World, the Lord deliver you from its Snares. Surely you had need watch and be sober, and use your spiritual Weapons dexterously and diligently, or else this World is like to undo you, and destroy yo•... I have often warned you not to build upon an External happiness. and that you should promise yo•...r selves nothing but hardship here: Oh still remember your station; Soldiers must not count upon Rest, and Fulness, but Hunger, and Hardness. Labor to get right appreh•...sions of the World. Do not think these things necessary; one thing is need•...ul: You may be happy in the want of all outward comf•...s. Do not think yourselves undone, if brought to Want or Poverty: study Eternity, and you will see it to be little material to you, whether you are Poor or Rich; and that you may have never such an opportunity for your advantage in all your lives, as when you put all to hazard, and seem to run the Vessel upon the Rocks. Set your enemies one against the other: Death against the World; no such way to get above the World, as to put yourselves into the possession of Death.

Look often upon your Dust that you shall be reduced to, and imagine you saw your bones tumbled out of your Graves, as they are like shortly to be, and men handling your Skulls, and enquiring whose is this. Tell me of what account will the World be then, what good will it do you: put yourselves often into your Graves, and look out from thence upon the World, and see what Judgment you have of it then. Must not you shortly be forgot among the Dead? your places will know you no more, and your Memory will be no more among men, and then what will it profit you to have lived in fashion and repute, and to have been Men of esteem? one serious walk over a Church-yard, as one speaks, might make a man mor•...ified to the World. Think upon how many you Tread, but you know them not: no doubt they had their Estates, their Friends, their Trades, their businesses, and kept as much stir in the World as others do now. But alas, what are they the better for any, for all this? know you not that this must be your own case very shortly: Oh the unhappiness of deceived man! how miserably is he bewitched, and befooled, that he should expend himself for that which he knows shall forever leave him. Brethren, I beseech you lay no stress upon these perishing things, but labor to be at a Holy indifferency about them: Is it for one that is in his wits to sell his God, his conscience, his soul, for thi•...gs that he is not sure to keep a week, nor a day, and which he is sure after a •...ew sleepings and wakings more, to leave behind him forever? go and talk with dying men, and see what apprehensions they have of the World? if any should come •...o such as these, and tell them here is such and such pr•...ferments for you, you shall have such titles of honor and delights, if you will now disown Religion, or subscribe to iniquity; do you think such a motion would be embraced? Brethren, why should we not be wise in time!

why should we not now be of the mind of which we know we shall be all shortly! woe to them that will not be wise till it be to no purpose! woe to them whose eyes nothing but Death and Judgment, will open! woe to them that though they have been warned by others, and have heard the Worlds greatest Darlings in Death to cry out of its vanity, worthlessness and deceitfulness, and have been told where and how it would leave them; yet would take no warning, but only must serve themselves to, for warnings to others. Ah my Beloved, beware there be no worldly Professors among you, that will part rather with their part in Paradise, than their part in Paris; that will rather part with their Consciences, than with their Estates; that have secret reserves in hearts to save themselves whole, when •...t comes to the pinch; and not to be of the Religion that will undo them in the World. Beware that none of you have your hearts where your Feet should be, and love your Mammon before your Maker. It is time for you to learn with Paul, to be Crucified to the World.

But it is time for me to remember that 'tis a Letter, and contain myself within my limits. The God of all Grace, stablish, strengthen, and settle you in these shaking times, and raise your hearts above the fears of the worlds threats, and above the ambition of its favors. My dearest loves to you all, with my servant desire of your Prayers May the Lord of Hosts be with you, and the God of Jacob your refuge. Farewell my dear Brethren, Farewell, and be strong in the Lord, I am

LETTER VII. [First, Christian Marks: 2. Duties.] To the Beloved, my most endearing, and endeared Friends, the Flock of Christ in Taunton, Salvation.

Most dearly Beloved and longed for, my Joy and Crown:

I Must say of you as David did of Jonathan, Very pleasant have you been unto me, and your love to me is wonderful. And as I have formerly taken great content in that my Lot was cast among you, so through grace I rejoice in my present Lot, that I am called to approve my love to you by suffering for you; for you, I say: for you know that I have not sought yours but you;
and that for doing my duty to your souls, I am here in these Bonds, which I do cheerfully accept through the grace of God that strengtheneth me. Oh! that your Souls might be quicken'd and enlarged by these my Bonds! that your hands might be strengthened, and your hearts encouraged in the Lord your God by our sufferings! See to it, my dearly Beloved, that you stand fast in the power of the Holy Doctrine which we have Preached from the Pulpit; preached at the Bar; preached from the Prison to you: It is a Gospel worth the suffering for: see that you follow after holiness, without which no man shall see God: Oh! the madness of the blind World, that they should put from them the only Plank upon which they can scape to Heaven. Surely the Enemies of Holiness are their own Enemies. Alas for them!

they know not what they do. What would not these foolish Virgins do at last, when it is too late for a little of the Oil of the wise; Oh, for one dram of that Grace which they have scorned and despised. But let not any of you, my dear People, be wise too late: Look diligently lest any man fail of the Grace of God. Beware that none of you be cheated through the subtlety of Satan and deceitfulness of your hearts with counterfeit gr•.... There is never a grace but hath its counterfeit: and there is nothing in all the World that is more common or more easy, than to mistake common and counterfeit Grace for true and saving: and remember you are undone for evermore, if you should die in such a mistake: Not that I would shake the confidence of any sound Believer, who upon often and through searce into the Scripture and his own heart, and putting himself upon God's trial, hath gotten good evidence that his Graces are of the right kind: Build your confidencee sure: See that you get the knowledge of the certain and infallible marks of Salvation, and make sure by great observing your own hearts that these marks be in you, and then you cannot be too confident. But as you love your souls take heed of a groundless confidence. Take heed of •...ing confident before you have tried. Dear Brethren, I would fain have you all secured against the day of Judgment; I would that the state of your souls were all well settled: Oh how comfortably might you think of any troubles, if you were but sure of your pardons! Were your Salvation out of doubt, no matter though other things were in hazard. I beseech you, whatever you neglect, look to this: I am afraid there are among you that have not made your peace with God yet; that are not yet acquainted with that great work of Conversion: such I would warn and charge before the living God to speed into Christ, and without anymore disputes or delays to put away their iniquities, and to come in and deliver up themselves to Jesus Christ, that they may be saved. It is not your Profession, nor performing external duties, nor partaking of external Privileges that will save you: No, no, you must be converted or condemned. It is not enough that you have some love and liking to God's ways and people, and are willing to venture something for them; all this will not prove you sound Christians: have your hearts been changed? have you been soundly convinced of your sins? of your da•...nable and undone condition in yourselves? and your utter ina•...lity to lick yourselves whole again by your own duties? have you been brought at least to such a sight and sense of sin, as that there is no sin, though agreeable to your constitution, though a support to your gain but you do heartily abhor it, and utterly disallow of it? are you brought to such a sense of the beauty of holiness, and of the Laws and ways of God, as that you do desire to know the whole mind of God, and would not excuse yourselves by ignorance from any duty, and that you do not allow yourselves in the ordinary neglect of anything that conscience charges upon you as a duty? are your very hearts set upon the glorifying and enjoying of God, as your greatest happiness, which you desire more than Corn and Wine, and Oil? had you rather be the holiest than the richest and greatest in the world? and is your greatest delight (ordinarily, and when you are yourselves) in the thoughts of God, and in your conversings with God in Holy Exercises? Is Christ more precious than all the world to you? and are you willing upon the through consideration of the strictness and holiness, and self-denyíng nature of his Laws, yet to take them all for the rule of your thoughts, words, and actions? and though Religion may be dear, do you resolve if God will assist you by his Grace, to go through with it, let the cost be what it will? happy the man that is in such a case. This is a Christian indeed, and whatever you be and do short of this, all is unsound. But you that bear in your souls the marks of the Lord Jesus above mentioned, upon you I should lay no other burden, but to hold fast, and make good your ground and to press forward towards the mark. Thankfully acknowledge the distinguishing grace God to your souls: and live rejoicingly in the hopes of the glory of God, the hopes that shall never make you ashamed: live daily in the praises of your Redeemer: be much in admiring God, and study the worthiness, excellency, and glory of his Attributes: let your souls be much taken up in contemplating and commending his glorious perfection, and blessing yourselves, in the goodly portion you have in him: live like those that have a God, and then be disconsolate if you can: If there be not more in an infinite God to comfort you, than in a Prison, or poverty, or other affliction to deject you, our Preaching is vain, and your Faith is vain. Let the thoughts of God be your daily repast: and never be satisfied till your heart... run out as freely, naturally, constantly, unweariedly after God, as others do after the World: a little force upon your hearts for a while to turn them into this holy Channel, may quickly come so to habituate your minds to holiness, that they may naturally run that way. But it is time to shut up: Farewell; my dear Brethren, the Lord God Almighty be a protection to you, and your exceeding great reward: Farewell in the Lord I am

Yours in the Bowels of the Lord Jesus, JOS. ALLEINE

From the common Goale at Juelchester, Sept. 11. 1663.

Just now I received your melting Letter, to which I am not able now to return an answer, but shall with speed: your very great affections for me cannot but move me, and make me ready to repeat again the first words of my letter above. The Lord enable me to return something to you for your great loves; I am sensible I have come very short of my duty to you: but I must needs tell you, my Bowels are moved with your loves, which I hope I shall greatly prize: once more Farewell.

My dear Brother Norman remembers you with much love, desiring that you may be blameless and harmless, the Sons of God without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse Nation, among whom ye should shine as lights in the World.

LETTER VIII. [How to show love to Ministers, and live joyfully.] To the most Loving and dearly Beloved, my Christian Friends in Taunton, Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Most endeared Brethren,

I Have received your moving melting letter, and could not look over such tender expressions of your working affections, without some commotions in my own: I may confidently say, I spent more Tears upon those lines, than ever you did Ink: your deep sense of my labors in the Ministry, I cannot but thankfully acknowledge, and take notice of: yet withal, heartily and unseingedly consessing, that all was but the duty which I did owe to your precious and immortal Souls: which God knows, are very much short of my duty. The omissions, imperfections, defects, deadness, that accompanied my duties I do own, I must and will own; and the Lord humble me for them. But all that was of God (and that was all that was good) be sure that you give to God alone. To him I humbly ascribe both the Will, and the Deed, to whom alone be Glory forever.

My dear Brethren, my business as I have often told you, is not to gain your hearts, or turn your eyes towards me, but to Jesus Christ: his Spokesman I am, will you give your hearts to him? will you give your hands, your names to him? will you subscribe to his Laws, and consent to his Offices, and be at through defiance with all his Enemies? This do, and I have my Errant. Who will follow Christ's Colours? who will come under his Banner? this shall be the man that shall be my Friend; this is he that will oblige me forever. Do these Letters come to none that are yet unsanctified? to no loose sinner? to no ignorant finner? to no unsound professor? Oh that there were none such indeed! oh that I had left no such behind me! but would they do me a kindness as I believe they would, oh then let them come away to Jesus Christ at this call! lie no longer O sinner, in thy swill, be no more in love with darkness! stick no longer in the skirts and outside of Religion, demure no longer, dispute not, and waver no more, halt no further, but strike in thoroughly with Jesus Christ, except nothing, reserve nothing, but come off thoroughly to the Lord, and follow him fully. And then happy man that thou shalt be, for thou will be made forever; and joyful man that I shall be, for I shall save a Soul from death. The earnest and pitiful beggings of a poor Prisoner, do use to move some Bowels: hear O Friends, will you do nothing for a Minister of Christ? Nothing for a Prisoner of Jesus Christ? methinks I hear you answer, [yea, rather what will we not do, he shall never want while we have it; he shall need no office of Love, but we will run and ride to do it.] Yea, but this is not that I beg of you; will you gratify me indeed? then come in, kiss the Son, bow to the Name of Jesus; not in a Complement, with Cap and Knee, but let your Souls bow, let all your Powers bend Sail, and do him homage. Let that Sacred Name be Graven into •...he substance of your hearts, and lie as a bundle of Mirth between your Breasts. Let me freely speak for him, for he is worthy for whom you shall do this thing; worthy to be beloved of you; worthy to have your ve...y hearts, worthy to be admired, adored, praised, served, glorified to the uttermost by you, and every Creature; worthy for whom you should lay down all, leave all: Can anything be too much for him? can anything be too good for him? Or too great for him? come give up all, Resign all, lay it at the Feet of Christ Jesus, offer all as a Sacrifice to him, see that you be universally the Lord's; keep nothing from him: I know through the goodness of God, that with many of you this work is not yet to do: but this set solemn resignation to the Lord is to be done more than once; and to be followed with an answerable practice when it is done: See that you walk worthy of the Lord? but how? in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost; let these two go together. So shall you adorn the Doctrine of God our Savior: and experience, the Heavenly felicity of a Christians life: While Holiness is made the But of others Persecution, do you make it the white, the mark of your prosecution; that you live it up, as much as others cry it down. O watch and keep your Garments about you; the plain, but comely clothing of humility, the seamless Coat of Christian unity, the strait and close Garment of strictness, mortification and self-denial, the warm Winter-garment of love and charity, this Garment will keep you warm in the Winter: love will not be quenched by the Waters, nor cooled by the nipping Frosts of persecution and opposition. Cleave fast to Christ, never let go your hold; cling the faster, because so many are laboring to knock off your fingers, and loosed your hold. Hold fast your Profession, hold fast your Integrity, hold •...ast the beginning of your confidence steadfast to the end: If you do but keep your hold, and make goud your ground, and keep your way; all that the World can do, and all that the powers of darkness can do, can never do you harm. Keep your own Vineyard with constant care and watchfulness, and be sure that there be no Inroad made upon your consciences, that the, Enemy do not get between you and home, between your souls and God; and then let who or what will assail you without, you need not fear: let this be your daily exercise, to keep your consciences void of offense: keep fair weather at home, however it be abroad. But I would not only that you should walk holily, but that you should walk comfortably: But I need say the less to this, because the fear of the Lord, and the comfort of the Holy Ghost, do lie together. On the provision God hath made for your continual joy and comfort: dear Brethren, do but understand your own blessedness, happy men that you are, if you did but know and consider it; who would count himself poor and miserable that hath all the fullness of the Godhead for his: sound in this deep: can you find any bottom? take the heighth of the Divine Perfections if you can, till then you cannot tell your own felicity. Take a servey of Immensity, tell me the longitude or latitude of infinite goodness and mercy, of the Eternal Diety: if you can do this, you may guess at your own happiness. Oh Christians! live like yourselves, live worthy of your Portion, of your Privilege, and your glorious prerogatives. I am in haste, and it is time for me to end; however, that you may walk worthy of your glorious hopes, and may live answerably to the mercies you have received from above, is the great desire of LETTER. IX. [Easie Sufferings.] To the most Loving and Beloved, my Christian Friends at •...aunton, Salvation.

DEarly Beloved and longed for, my Joy and Crown, for whom I am an Ambassador in Bonds: what thanks to render to God in your behalf, I know not, for your fervent charity towards me, and all the servants of my Lord, for all your labors of love, for all your diligence, and bold •...ess, and resolution, in owning the despised way, and hared ser •...ants of the Lord Jesus, in an evil day. The Lord is not unrighteous to forget this: Is not this upon record with him and •...aled up among his Treasures? surely the Lord will have mercy upon Tauntou: I have no doubt but that the God of •...our Mercies hath yet a choice blessing in store for you; be not weakened by my Bonds. Glory be to God in the Highest, that he hath accounted me worthy not only to Preach the Gospel to you, but also to confirm it by the pa •...ing with my much valued liberty, so dear a People, so swee •... Relations, comforts, conveniencies, which I enjoyed in all a •...dance when I was with you. When I look back upon all the circumstances of the late Providence, I must say as they of Christ upon his Miracles, He hath done all things well; it is all as I would have it, I am fully satisfied in my Fathers good pleasure. Verily there is no little honor and happiness, no little peace and privilege in these Bonds. Verily all is true that I have told you of the All-sufficiency of God, of the fullness of Christ, of the satisfactoriness of the promises of the peace, tranquility, content, and security, that is to be had in a life of Faith. Surely methinks I should be content to seal to these things at a much dearer rate than this; but my gracious Father will not put me to the hardest Les•...on at first: oh what reason have I to speak good of his name! what else should I do all my days, but love, and fear, and preach, and praise, so good a God? when I look back upon the gentle dealings of God with me, I often think he hath brought me up as indulgently as David did Adoni•...ah, of whom it is said, His Father had not displeased him. I have received nothing but good at the hands of the Lord all my days; and now he doth begin to afflict, I see so much Mercy in this very Goal, that I must be more thankful for this than for my prosperity. Surely the name of the place is, The Lord is here: Surely it may be called Peniel. Be strong in the Lord, my Bre•...hren, be patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draws nigh. In nothing be terrified by your adversaries. Now let those that fear the Lord be often speaking one to another. I hear that Satan is practicing to send more of you after me: I desire and pray for your liberty: but if any of you be sorced hither for the testimony of the Gospel, I shall embrace you with both arms Fare you well, my most dearly Beloved: be perfect, and be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of Love and Peace shall be with you. My Brethren in Bonds salute you with much affection, rejoicing to behold your order and the stedfastness of your Faith in Christ: share my heart among you, and know that I am LETTER. X. [The Love of Christ.] To my Beloved in the Lord, the Flock of Christ in] Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most Loving and best Beloved,

MY heart is with you, my affections are espoused to you. And methinks I could even say with the Apostle, (you are in my heart, to live and die with you:) and who can but love where they have received so much love (and continually do) as I have from you! the Lord requi•...e your love which is great (and if compared with his, but little) with his which is infinite; this is a love worthy of your ambition, worthy of your adoration and admiration. This is the Womb that bore you from eternity, and out of which have burst forth all the Mercies, Spiritual and Temporal, that you enjoy. This was the love that chose you, when less Offenders, and those that being converted, might have been a hundred sold more serviceable to their Makers Glory, are l•...ft to perish in their sins: May your souls be filled with the sense of this love. But it may be you will say, how shall I know if I am an object of Electing love? least an unbelieving thought should damp your joy; know in snort, that if you have chosen God, he hath certainly chosen you. Have you taken him for your blessedness? and do you more highly prize, and more diligently seek after conformity to him, a•...d the fru•...tion of him than any, than all the goods of this World? If so, theu away with doubts, for you could not have loved, and have chosen him, unless he had loved you first. Now may my Beloved dwell continually in the thoughts, the views, the tastes of the love. Get you: down under its shadows, and taste its pleasant fruits. Oh the Provisions that love hath made for you, before the Foundation of the World! Ah silly dust, that ever thou shouldest be thought upon so long before thou wast: that the contrivances of the infinite Wisdom, should be taken up about thee! that such a Crawling thing, such a Mite, a Flea, should have the consultations of the Eternal Diety exercised about thee! verily his love to thee is wonderful. Lord what is man! thou tellest us he is Dust and Vanity, a Worm, nothing less than nothing; how then dost thou love him! oh wonderful! be astonished yea Heavens at this: be moved ye strong foundation of the Earth. Fall down yea... Elders, strike up ye Heavenly Quires, and sing yet again, Glory to God in the highest: for all our strings would crack to reach the Notes of love, praise, and admiration that this love doth call for. Oh that ever emptiness and vanity, should be thus prized! that Jehovah should make account of so worthless, so useless a thing as man! that ever baseness should be thus preferred! that ever nothing should be thus dignified! that ever rottenness should be thus advanced, a Clod, a shadow Potsheard, should be thus glorified! Oh Brethren, study beseech you, not to require or retaliate (there's impossibility, and blasphemy in such a thought) but to admire and imitate his love. Let love constrain you, let love put you upon doing, and prepare you for suffering; forget not a love so memorable, undervalue not a love so invaluable; I would have you all the captives of love: may the cords of love draw you towards, and knit you to your Redeemer? may the divided streams be united in him. Alas, that our souls are so narrow, that the Waters are so shallow with us! how little how very little would our love be, if he had it all, infinite less than the Glow-worm to the Sun, or the Atom to the Universe? and have we any of this little to spare for him oh that we might love him with our little Ah! that all our little powers were engaged for him! Brethren, here is no excess: oh love the Lord ye his Saints! he is worthy for whom you shall do this. Do but think what love hath done for you and think if you can, what it means to do for you. This is the love that yarned upon you, when in your Blood no eye pitying you. This is the love that took you up when you were robbed and wounded, and left for dead, and poured in Wine and Oil into your wounds. This is that love that reprieved and spared, and pardoned, when the Law had condemned you, and Justice would have had you delivered up; and your Self-condemning consciences gave up all for lost, including there was no hope. This is the love, the expensive love that bought you from the power of darkness, from the eternal burnings, the devouring fire in which you must otherwise have dwelt. Do you not remember how you were hungry, and it fed you, naked and it clothed you, strangers and it took you in, sick and it visited you, in Prison and it came unto you? you were dead and are alive, you were lost and are found. And methinks I see how love runs to meet you, and falls upon your necks, and kisseth the Lips that deserve to be loathed, and rejoices over you, and makes a Festival, and as it were a Holiday in Heaven to you, inviting Angels to rejoice. And if the friends do rejoice, how much more doth the father? for saith he, These my Sons were dead and are alive, were lost and are sound. Oh melting love! ah Brethren, how strange is this, that our recovery should be Heavens triumph, the joy of God and Angels. That this love should feast us, and feast over us, and our Birth-day should be kept in Heaven: that this should be the round at Heavens Table, and the burden of the Song above: [For this my Son was dead, and is alive,] and well, what remains but that you should be another manner of People, than ever yet you have been, more holy, more humble, more even, more resolved, more lively, more active? where is your Zeal for the Lord of Hosts? will slender returns suffice you in answer to such a love? God forbid. But necessity calls me off from going any further. May the love that chose you, and redeemed you, forever dwell in you, and overshadow you, and bear you safe to the Kingdom. In the Holy Arms of Divine Love I desire to leave you. May you live under its daily Influences, and be melted and overcome with its warming Beams, with its quickening, piercing, powerful Rays. My most dear love, to you all. See that you live not in a dull, fruitless, lifeless course. Be patient, be watchful, instant in Prayer, fervent in Spirit, serving the Lord: I am very healthful and cheerful through grace. See that none of these things move you that befall us. Fare you well my dear Brethren, farewell in the Lord, I am LETTER XI. [Remember Christ Crucified, and crucify Sin.] To the Faithful and Well-beloved People, the servants of Christ in Taunton, Salvation.

Most dear Christians,

I Am by Office a Remembrancer, the Lord's Remembrancer for you and your Remembrancer in the behalf of Christ. My business is, with the Apostle, to stir up your pure minds by way of Remembrance. And what or whom should I remember you of, but your mindful Friend, your Intercessor with the Father, who hath you always in remembrance, appearing in the presence of God for you? May his memory ever live in our hearts, though mine should die: Oh remember his Love more than Wine, remember in what a case he found you, and yet nothing could annihilate his heart, nor divert the purpose of his Love from you: He loathed not your Rags nor your Rottenness: he found you in a loathsome vomit and filthiness, in a nasty and verminous tatters, (think not these expressions too odious: no Pen can describe, no heart can imagine the odiousness of sin in his sight, in which you lay and rolled yourselves as the filthy Swine in the mire) yet he pitied you, his Bowels were moved, and his Compassions were kindled, when one would have thought his wrath should have boiled and his indignation have burned down to Hell against you: he loathed not but loved you, and washed you from your sins in his own Blood: Ah monstrous and polluted Captives? ah vile and putrid Carkases? that ever the holy Jesus should take the hands of you, and shou•...d his own self wash you, and wrinse you! merh•...nks I see him weeping over you; and yet it was a more costly Bath by which he cleansed you. Ah Sinners! look upon the streaming Blood flowing out warm from his blessed Body, to setch out the ingrained filthiness that you by sin had contracted. Alas! what a horrid filthiness in sin, that nothing but the blood of the Covenant could wash away! and what a love is Christ's, than when no Sope nor Nitre could suffice to cleanse us, when a whole Ocean could not wash nor purify us, would open every vein of his heart to do the work! look upon your crucified Lord: do you not see a sacred stream flowing out of every Member? ah, how those holy hands, those unerring Feet do run a stream to purge us! Alas, how that innocent Back doth bleed with cruel scourgings to save ours! how the great drops of blood fall to the ground from his sacred Face in his miraculous sweat, in his bitter and bloody Agony, to wash and beautify ours! how his wounded hearts and side twice pierced, first with love and pity; and then with Soldiers cruelty do pour out their healthful and saving Floods upon us? Lord, how do we make a shift to forget such a love as this? ah mirrors or rather monsters of ingratitude, that can be unmindful of su...h a Friend: do we thus requite him: is this our kindness to such an obliging friend! Christians, where are you affections? to what use do you put your faculties? what have you memories for: but to remember him! what have you the power of loving for, but that you should love him? wherefore serves joy or desire, but to long for him and delightfully to embrace him? may your souls and all their Powers be taken up with him: may all the little doors of your souls be set open to him. Here •...ix your thoughts, he•...e terminate your desire; here you may light your Candle and kindle your fire when almost out. Rub and chafe your hearts well with the deep consideration of the love of Christ, and it is a wonder if they do not get foam warmth. The Lord shed abroad his love in your hearts by the H. Ghost: Oh, that this love might constrain you! Brethren what will you do now for Jesus Christ. Have you never a Sacrifice to lay upon his Altar? come, and I will show you what you shall do, let your hands be in the blood of your sins, fall foul with them, search them out with diligence, search your hearts and your houses; whatever iniquit•...es you find there, out with them, put them far from your Tabernacles; if you crucify them not, you are not Jesus his Friends. Godforbid that there should be a lying Tongue, or any way of deceit in your Shops. That his service should give place to the World in your Families. Far be it from any of you, my Brethr•...n, that you should be careful to teach your children and servants the way of your Trades and Callings, and negl•...t to instruct them in the way of Life. Is weekly Ca•...echising up in everyone of your Families? The Lord convince any of you that may be guilty of this neglect: Oh, set up God in your Houses; and see that you be not slovenly in Closet performances: beware of serving the Lord negligently; serve not the Lord with that which cost you nothing: look to it that you content not yourselves with a cheap and easy Religio•.... Put your flesh to it: be well assured that the Religion that costs you nothing will yield you nothing: keep up the life of Religion in your Family and Closet duties. Fear nothing like a customary and careless performance of God's service. Judge your own selves whether lazy wishes, idie complaints, and yawning Prayers are like to carry you through the mighty difficulties that you must get through if ever you come to Heaven. When you find yourselves going on in a listless, lifeless, heartless course, and have no mind to your work, ask yourselves, is this to take the Kingdom of Heaven by violence, or can I hope to win it without? see that you sacrifice yourselves to the Lord, that you deliver up yourselves to him, that now you live to Christ himself As Christ hath made over his life and death to you, so let it be your care to live and die to him: labor to forget yourselves and look upon all your enjoyments as Christ's goods; upon your time, parts, strength, as his Talents: look upon yourselves only in the quality of Servants and Stewards that are to husband all these for your Lord's advantage, and as those that must give an account. And pray for me that I may take the Counsel that I give. I •...ss the Lord, I want nothing but the opportunity of being •...ceable unto you, and to enjoy you: but I hope the Lord will make my bonds for you to be useful to your edification; that is the White I aim at, if I may glorify God, and serve your Souls best by being here, I shall never wish to come out, though I confess liberty of its self is very precious.

Finally, Brethren, Farewell: be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of Love and Peace shall be with you, I

The ready Servant of your Faith and Joy, JOS. ALLEINE.

My dear Brother Norman salutes you tenderly, desiring you to be patient, to stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

LETTER XII. [For daily Self-Examination.] To the most Beloved People, the Flock of Christ in Taunton, Salvation.

Most dear Brethren:

I Would my time were as long as my heart, that I might open myself to you; but I was not without some discontent diverted, when I was setting myself to have Written at large to you. Now I am pinched, however I could not leave my dear charge altogether unvisited, but must needs salute you in a few Lines. Brethren, how stands it with you? doth the main work go on? do your souls prosper? This is my care, beware that you Flag not, that you faint not now in the evil day. I understand that your dangers grow upon you, may your Faith and courage and resolution grow accordingly, and much more abundantly to overtop them. Some of your enemies I hear are in great hopes to satisfy their lusts upon you: well, be not discouraged my dear Brethren, but bless the Lord who of his abundant Mercy, hath so remarkably preserved you so long beyond all expectation. Let it not be a strange thing to you, if the Lord do now call you to some difficulty: forsake not the Assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is. I plainly see the Coal of Religion will soon go out, unless it have some better helps to cherish it, then a Carnal Ministry, and lifeless Administration. Dear Brethren, now is the time for you that fear the Lord, to speak often one to another: manage your duties with what prudence you •...an, but away with that Carnal prudence, that will decline duty to avoid danger. Is the Communion of Saints worth the venturing for? Shut not up your doors against Godly Meetings. I am told that it is become a hard matter, when a Minister is willing to take pains with you to get place: •...ar be this from you my Brethren. What, shut out the Wor d! suppose there be somewhat more danger to him that gives the Minister entertainment? Is there not much more advantage accordingly? did not O•...ed Edom, and his House get the blessing by entertaining the Ark there? or do you think God hath never a blessing for those that shall with much Self-denial entertain his Messengers, his Sain•...s, his Worship? are you believers, and yet are afraid you shall be losers by Christ? do you indeed not know that he that runs most hazard for Christ, doth express most love to Christ, and shall receive the greatest reward; away with that unbelief, that prefers the present safety, before the future glory.

I left you some helps for daily Examination, I am jealous least you should grow slack, and slight, and car•...less in that duty. Let me ask you in the name of the Lord, doth never a day pass you, but you do solemnly and seriously call yourselves to an account, what your •...arriage hath been to God and Men? speak conscience, Is there never an one within the hearing of this Letter, that is a neglecter of this duty? dot... everyone of your Consciences acquit you? Oh that they did! oh that they could! tell me, would not some of you be put shrewdly to it, if I should ask you when you read or thought over the questions that were given you for your help? and would you not be put to a blush, to give me an answer? and will you not be much more ashamed, that God and conscience should find you tardy? not that I would necessarily bind you up to that very Method, only till you have found a way more profitable: I would desire you, yea, methinks I cannot but deeply charge you, to make daily use of that. Awake conscience, and do thou fall upon that Soul that thou findest careless in this work, and never let him be at rest till thou canst witness for him, that he is a d...ily and strict observer of himself, and doth live in the constant practice of this duty. What shall neither God's charge, nor your promise, nor profit hold you to your work? yet I may not doubt, but some of you do daily perform this duty. The Lord encourage you in it: yet give me leave to ask you what you have gained? are you grown more universally consci...ncious, more strict, more humble, and more sensible of your many and great defects, then you were before? If so, blessed are you of the Lord; if otherwise, this duty hath been performed but slightly by you. What can you say to this question? doth your care of your ways abate, or doth it incr... by the constant use of this duty? If it abate, remember from whence you are fallen, and repent; as good not do it at all, as not to the purpose.

My Pen is apt to run, when I am writing unto you. I beseech you, that my Letters may not be as so much waste Paper to you; may they be provocations to your duty, and Medicines to any corruptions that they m...et with; Oh that they might find out men's sins, and excite their graces! I have run much farther than I thought I should have done, but now I am called upon, and must shur up. The Lord God be a Sun and a Shield to you. My most dear Love to you all, fare you well in the Lord, I am

LETTER XIII. [Motives and Marks of Growth.] To the most Loving, and best Beloved, the servants of Christ in...aunton, Grace and Peace:

Most dear and tender Friends,

WHose I am, and whom under God I desire to serve; to build you up in Holiness, and comforts hath been through grace my great ambition. This is that which I labored for; this is that which I suffer for: and in short the end of all my applications to you, and to God for you. How do your souls prosper? are they in a thriving case? what progress do you make in Sanctification? doth the House of Saul grew weaker and weaker, and the house of David stronger and stronger? beloved, I desire to be jealous of you with a Godly jealousy, lest any of you should lose your ground in these declining times: and therefore cannot but be often calling upon you to look to your standing, and to watch and hold fast, that no man take your Crown. Ah! how su...ely shall you reap in the end if you faint not! take heed therefore that you lose not the things you have wrought, but as you have begun well, so go on in the strength of Christ. and give diligence to the full assurance of hope to the end, 'tis your thriving, I tell you, I drive at.

Do you need Motives?] 1. How much are you behind-band? Oh, the fair advantages that we have lost! what time, what Sabbaths, Sermons, Sacraments, are upon the matter lost? how much work have we yet to do? are you sure of Heaven yet? are you fit to die yet? surely they that are in so much Poverty, under so many great wants, had need to set upon some more thriving courses.

Secondly, Consider what others have gained, whilst we it may be sit down by the loss: Have we not met many Vessels richly laden, while our Souls are empty? Oh, the rich Booties, the golden Prizes that some have won? while we have folded the hands to sleep! have not many of our own standing in Religion left us far behind them?

Thirdly, Consider what a spending time there is coming: Affliction and Tribulation seem to be not far from you: had you not need to be well stocked against such a day? go to the Ant thou sluggard, she layeth up her meat in the Summer. Happy man that can say to his Soul on good grounds, what he vainly spake, Thou hast much good laid up for many years: Who will not Victual the Castle against the Siege? and the Ship against the Voyage?

Fourthly, Consider you will find all little enough when you come to die: the Wise among the Virgins have no Oil to spare at the coming of the Bridegroom; distress and temptations, and death will put all your Graces to it. How much ado have many poor Saints had at last to put into this harbor? David cries for respite till he had recovered a little more strength.

Fifthly, Consider how little it will avail you to thrive in your Estates, and not thrive i... your Souls: Poor Gehazi! what did he get by it when he gained Naaman's Talents, and came off with his Leprosy?

Sixthly, Consider how short your time for gathering in probability is: the Israelites gathered twice so much Manna against the Sabbath as they did at other times, because at that time there was no Manna fell. Brethren you know not how long you have to lay in for.

Seventhly, Consider God's expectations are great from you: he hath been lopping and pruning you, and now he looks for more fruit: he hath had you for some time under his more severer Discipline, and therefore expects you should be better proficience: he hath tried new means with you, and is come to you with a Rod; and he will be angry with a witness if he do not find you now to mend. Times of Afflictions use to be gaining times to God's People; God forbid that you alone should be losers.

Do you ask for marks how you may know your souls to be in a thriving case?

First, If your appetites be more strong. Do you thirst after God, and after grace, more than heretofore? do your cares for and desire after the World abate? and do you hunger and thirst after righteousness! whereas you were wont to come with an ill-will to holy duties, do you come to them as a hungry stomach to its meats?

Secondly, If your Pulses beat more even. Are you still off and on, hot and cold. Or is there a more even spun thread of holiness through your whole course? do you make good the ground from which you were formerly often beaten off?

Thirdly, If your natural heat do grow more vigorous, and your digestion more quick. Do you take more notice of God in everything, than heretofore? and let none of his works, nor words pass without some careful attention, and observation? do you ponder upon, and pray over his Word, and his Providences?

Fourthly, If you do look more to the Compass, and latitude of Religion, and mind more than ever, the carrying on together the duties of both Tables. Do you not only look to the keeping of your own Vineyards, but do you begin to look more abroad, and to lay out yourselves for the good of others, and are filled with zealous desires for their conversation, and salvation? do you manage your talk and your Trade, by the rules of Religion?

Do you eat and sleep by rule? doth Religion form, and mould, and direct your carriage towards Husband, Wife, Parents, Children, Masters, Servants! do you grow more universally conscientious? Is piety more diffusive than ever with you, doth it come more abroad with you, out of your Closets into your Houses, your Shops, your Fields? doth it journey with you, and buy and sell for you? hath it the casting voice in all you do?

Fifthly, If the duties of Religion be more easy, sweet, and delightful to you. Do you take more delight in the Word than ever? are you more in love with secret Prayer, and more abundant in it? cannot you be content with your ordinary Seasons, but are ever and anon making extraordinary visits to Heaven? and upon all occasions turning aside to talk with God in some short Ejaculations? are you often darting up your souls Heaven-wards? Is it meat and drink for you, to do the Will of God? do you come off more freely with God, and answer his Calls, and open at his knocks, with more Alacrity and readiness of mind?

Sixthly, If you are more abundant in those duties which are most displeasing to the Flesh. Are you more earnest upon the duty of Mortification? are you more strict and severe than ever in the duty of daily Self-examination, and holy Meditation? do you hold the Reigns harder upon the Flesh than ever? do you keep a stricter watch upon your Appetites? do you set a stronger guard upon your Tongues? have you a more jealous eye upon your hearts?

Seventhly, If you grow more vile in your own eyes. Pride is such a choking Weed, that nothing will prosper near it. Do you grow more out of love with men's esteem, and set less by it? are you not marvelous tender of being slighted? can you rejoice to see others preferred before you? can you heartily value, and love them that think meanly of you?

Eighthly, If you grow more quick of sense, more tender of sinning, more sensible of Divine influences, or withdrawals. Are you more afraid of sin than ever? are your sins a greater pain to you than heretofore? are your very infirmities, your great afflictions? and the daily workings of corruption a continual grief of mind to you?

Ninthly, If you are acted more by love to God and Faith in these Promises. Fear is a slavish principle: do you find that you are acted less by fear, and more by love? do you look more frequently to the things not seen than ever? and doth the World abate in your esteem? do you go more out of yourselves? do you live upon Christ as the Spring of your life, and make more use of him upon all occasions than ever? do you prize the Promise more, and hug and embrace them with greater dearness, and live more upon them.

Tenthly, If you grow of a more publick Spirit. A selfish spirit is unworthy of a Christian: are the common concernments of God's Glory, and the prosperity of the Church, much upon your hearts? will it no way content you to dwell in plenty, peace, and safety yourselves, except you may see peace upon Israel? do the wounds in God's Name and Glory go deep into you? are the sins of others your sorrows?

Time, and room, and strength fails to add means too, as I intended. I have trespassed in length already, may these be helps to you to put you forward, and to help you in discerning your growth. I must conclude abruptly, and commend you to God with my dear loves to you all, I take leave, and can only tell you that I am,

Yours in the Lord Jesus, JOS. ALLEINE

LETTER XV. [Perswasion to Sinners, and comfort to Saints,] To my dearly Beloved, the Inhabitants of the Town of Taunton, Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Most dearly Beloved,

I Have been through mercy many years with you, and should be willingly so many years a Prisoner for you, so I might eminently and effectually further your salvation. I must again, yea again, and again thank you for your abundant and entire affections to me, which I value as a great mercy not in order to myself, if I know my own heart, but in order to your benefit, and I may thereby be a more likely Instrument to further your good. Surely, so much as I do value your love, which is not a little, yet had I rather (if I am not unacquainted with myself) be forgotten and forsaken of you all, and buried in oblivion, So that your eyes and hearts might be hereby fixed on Christ, and sincerely engaged to him. Brethren, I have not be spoken your affections for myself: O that I might win your hearts universally to Jesus Christ, though I had lost them forever! O that I might be instrumental to convert you to him though you were diverted from me. I am persuaded that I should much rather choose to be hated of all, so this might be the means to have Christ honored, and set up savingly in the hearts of you all. And indeed there is nothing great but in order to God; nothing is much material or considerable as it is terminated in us: It matters not whether we are in Riches or poverty, in sickness or health, in honor or disgrace, so Christ may be by us, magnified in the condition we are in. Welcome Prison and poverty, welcome scorn and envy, welcome pains or contempt, if by these God's glory may be most promoted. What are we for but for God? what doth the Creature signify separated from his God? why just so much as the Cypher separated from the Figure, or the letter from the Syllable, we are nothing or nothing worth, but in reference to God and his ends. Better were it that we had never been, than that we should not be to him. Better that we were dead than we should live, and not to him. Better that we had no understandings than that we should not know him. Better that we were Blocks and Bruis than that we should not use our reason for him. What are our Interests unless as they may be subservient to his Interest? or our esteem or reputation, unless we may hereby glorify him? do you love me? I know you do; but who is there that will leave his sins for me? I mean at my requests: with whom shall I prevail to give up himself in strictness and self-denial to the Lord? who will be entreated by me to set upon neglected duties, or reform accustomed sins? O wherein may you rejoice me? in this, in this, my Brethren, in this you shall befriend me, if you obey the voice of God by me, if you be prevailed with to give yourselves up thoroughly to the Lord? would you lighten my burden; would you loosen my bonds? would you make glad my heart? let me hear of your owning the ways and servants of the Lord in adversity, of your coming in, of your abiding and patient continuing in the ways of holiness. O that I could but hear that the prayerless Souls, the prayerless families among you, were now given to prayer! that the profane sinner would be awakened, and be induced by the Preaching of these Bonds, which heretofore would not be prevailed with, to leave their drunkenness their loose company, their lying and deceit, and Wantonness, by all the threatenings of God that could be pronounced against them, nor all the beseechings, wooings, and entreaties that I was able to use with them! will you not be made clean? when shall it once be? how long shall the patience of God wait for you? how long shall the Lord Jesus stretch out his hands toward you? O sinners, cast yourselves into his Arm? Why should you die? why will you forsake your own mercy? will you perish when mercy woos you? confess and forsake your sins, and you shall find mercy: will you part with Christ, and sell your souls to perdition for a little ease and delight to your flesh? or a little of the gain of unrighteousness? or a little Ale or vain mirth, or loose company? why these are the things that part between sinners and Christ.

I know many are spun with a finer thread, and are not so far from the Kingdom of God, as the prayerless, ignorant, Sabbath-breaking, intemperate sort are. But I must once again warn you of staying in the suburbs of the City of Refuge. O what pity is it that any should perish at the Gates! that any should escape the pollutions of the world and do many things yea, and suffer it may be too, and yet should fall short of the glory of God, for want of a through work of grace! Oh you halting Christians, that halt between Christ and the World, that are as Ephraim like a Cake not turned, dow-baked, Professors, that have Lamps without Oil, that cry, Lord, Lotd, but do not the will of our Father which is in Heaven! how long will you stay in the place of the breaking forth of Children? and stick between the womb and the World? your Religion will carry you among the profane despisers of Godliness, but do own the people of the Lord, and do love the Ministers and ordinances, therefore all is well. I tell you, Godliness is a heart-work, it goes deep, and spreads far: unless the frame of your hearts, and the drifts of your course be changed, unless you be universally conscientious, and unreservedly delivered up to the Lord for all times, and conditions whatever be the cost, you are none of Christ's, how far soever you go in common workings and external performances. Hear then, O people, and let not profaneness swallow you up: let not an almost Christianity deceive you, or ignorance carry you blindfold to perdition. Oh the thousands, and ten thousands that have been undone by one of these! Ah how often have you been warned against them, least you should split against these dangerous Rocks. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, said Christ, and O Taunton, Taunton, may I say from him, 〈...〉 ? who can tell how often, would God's 〈...〉 •...thered you, and you would not? many, very many 〈...〉 would not. But will you now? will you yet come in? I 〈...〉 forbear once more, even out of the Prison to 〈...〉 or sinners, and make one tender of mercy more. O 〈...〉 to the waters of Life, wash you, make you clean; read 〈...〉 diligent observation, the melting passages, Prov. 1. 22. to the end, Isa. 1. 16, 21. Isa. 55. 6, 10. Oh obdurate sinners, if none of these things move you!

But for you, whose very hearts are set against every sin, and are deliberately resolved for God and Holiness •...re all the worlds delight; you that have experience of a thorough change, and are brought to have respect to all God's Commandments, who will have none but God for your happiness, none but Christ for your Treasure, that must and will have him, come what will come, blessed are you of the Lord: O happy Souls rejoice in the Lord, and again. I say, Rejoice: let your souls magnify the Lord, and your spirits rejoice in God your Savior. Live you a life of praise, you are highly favored of the Lord, your Lines are fallen in a pleasant place: only stick you fast to your choice: Beware lest any man beguile you of your reward: watch and keep your garments about you, lest you walk naked, and men see your shame. Many will be plucking to pull you out of Christ's hands; but the harder they pluck, the harder do you cling, and cleave to him, and the better hold fast do you take of him: blessed is he that overcometh.

And now the God of Heaven fill you all with himself, and make all Grace to abound in you, and toward you, and that he may be a Sun to comfort you, and a Shield of protection to you, and shine with his happy Beams of Grace and Glory on you all: Farewell in the Lord, I am LETTER. XVI. [How to live to God.] To the Beloved People, the Inhabitants of the Town of Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most endeared Christians,

TO tell you I love and long for you, seems somewhat needless. I cannot doubt of your confidence that you have a deep share in my tenderest affections: for this let my labors among you, and the hazards for you speak, rather than I myself. Beloved, I am, without a Complement the devoted servant of your souls prosperity, and the interest of Christ in you: way the Lord Jesus be set up higher in your hearts; may his name ever live in you, and be magnified by you, and I have what I ask. If this work be not promoted among you, I shall account all my letters but waste Paper, and all my pains but lost labor. Brethren, I beseech you, that none of you live to yourselves, for this were directly to cross the very end of Christ's death: for therefore he died that you should not live to yourselves, 2 Cor. 5. 15. Oh live to him that died for you! live to him that is the God of your life! live to him that bought your lives with the expense of his own! To him that bought you from destruction; and not only so, but bought your names into the eternal Inheritance, reserved in the Heavens for you. Will a man be easily persuaded to lose his life? how infinitely tender are men here! And yet in the worst sense the most of men do lose their lives, yea, lose them for nothing. Beloved, consider, I beseech you, that life is lost, that is not lived unto God. If you would not lose your lives that you live, see to him who is the end of your lives. Oh remember this, and reckon that day lost which you have not lived unto God! Brethren how great a part of our lives have we really, alas! too really lost? I beseech you take heed: here you are careful about many things, but beware that other things do not put out this which should be the main of your cares, to wit, the spending your days and strength for him that made you. Would it not be dreadful for a man to find at last when he comes to his account with God, that his whole life, or at least the main of it had been but damnable self-seeking. That a man should have so many years allowed him by God, and he should at last be found to have been but a false and wicked servant that had set up for himself with his Masters stock, and alienated his goods, and turned them to his own use? Well, that you may thoroughly learn the grand lesson of living unto God, take these Counsels:

First, Settle it upon your heart that it is the sum of all your business and blessedness to live unto God: 'Tis your business, for his pleasure you are and were created: what have you else to do but to serve your Maker in your general and particular Callings? what was the Candle made for (saith one) but to be burnt? beloved, what else have you strength for, but for God? doth he maintain servants, and shall not he look for their work; Would you endure it that the servants that you find with meat and wages should set up for themselves, that they should eat your bread and all the while do their own work? beloved, God's service is your business, and he made you and keeps you for no other end; and it is your blessedness too. Labor to be under the rooted conviction of this principle, that your very happiness lies in pleasing and honoring of God. Let the sense of this live fresh upon your hearts, and it will regulate your whole course.

Secondly, Remember what a dangerous, yea, damnable thing it is to live to yourselves: To make it our main care and business to please and gratify ourselves, or to have applause from and reputation with others, or to grow rich in the world, and greatness ourselves and posterity, is the certain evidence of a graceless heart. And though the Godly do make God their principle end in general, yet they must know, that for so much of their lives as is spent besides, this end (which is too too much) they shall suffer loss.

Thirdly, Labor to keep alive upon yourselves a deep sense of your strong obligations to God. Often think with yourselves what a righteous, what a reasonable thing it is, that you should with all that you have serve the Lord. Beloved, shall I not the Vessel be for the use of the Potter that made it? Shall not the servant Trade for his Master with whose goods he is entrusted? do you not fetch all your bread from God's door? Is not he the Rock that begat you? the Author of your being and well-being? is not this he that can crucify you or release you? can save you or damn you at his pleasure? Is it not from him that you fetch every breath? your interest obliges you to please him. Why should Beltshazzars charge be against you? that the

God in whose hand your breach is, and whose are all your ways, you have not glorified, Dan. 5. 23.

Fourthly, Do not only intend God as the general end of your course, but in every solemn action actually mind your end. Though a man need not, cannot think of his Journeys-end at every step, yet with care he might come to this in every solemn action, particularly and expressly to mind his end: a man cannot (nor need he) think at every bit that he puts into his mouth, I will eat this for God: yet he might every time he sits down to his Table, remember to eat and drink, not to gratify his flesh, but to glorify God, by getting strength for his work, you cannot think of it in every step in your Journey; but without intending some glory to God by serving his will in your place and station? and so in your visits and labors.

Fifthly, Every morning let this be your first and firm resolution, I will set forth this day in the Name of God. Your first and last thoughts are of greatest consequence; and therefore I advise you to begin and end with this: when ever you lie down, say in yourselves, I will make use of my Bed as an ordinance of God, that a servant of his may be refreshed and fitted for his work: when ever you rise up, think I will spend this day for God, and follow the business of my calling, because I am so appointed by God, Zech. 10. 12. And they shall walk up and down in his Name, saith the Lord, &c.

Beloved, I design the sweetness and comforts, as well as strictness of your lives. Live to God as you are directed, and you shall marvelously prosper in both. I am not sure yet, whether or no I shall see you at the Assizes, which I earnestly desire to do I leave all things to our Fathers wise disposal, and commending you to God, I divide my loves among you, and so rest LETTER XVII. [Motives to set ourselves to please God.] To the most Loving, and best Beloved, the servants of Christ in Taunton, Grace and Peace:

Most dear Christians,

YOUR Prisoner in the Lord saluteth you with all dearness: your are the care of my heart, the desire of my Eyes, the joy of my Bonds, and the sweet of my liberty. I am much satisfied in the wise disposal of our Heavenly Father, whether he see it good for me to be a Bond-man, or a Freeman, so I may but serve your souls to the greatest advantage. Methinks I begin to feel in myself, more than ever the benefit of your Prayers; the influences of Heaven, through the riches of Free-grace (to which alone be the Praise) being more fully sensible, and sweet upon me. I hope the Lord will restore us one to another in his time, much better than we parted; in the mean time, see that you stand fast in the hope of the Gospel. The Lord taketh infinite care for you, see that it be your care, the care of your very hearts, to please the Lord: Set your hearts to it as the business of your lives, and the very end of your beings, to walk worthy of the Lord unto all well-pleasing. Set home on your selyes such considerations as these.

First, It is the very business you were made for, and sent into the world for, to please your Maker. For his pleasure you are, and were Created. Why should the Lord repent that he had made you? Gen. 6. 6 What treacherous and damnable falsehood is this, that when the Lord hath given us Breath and Being, and sent us into the World on purpose on his service, we should like false and wicked servants, set up for ourselves? why should your Creator say, he hath made you in vain?

Secondly, If you set your hearts to please the Lord, you are sure you shall please him. It is not so with men, all the care in the World will not suffice to please some men. How often do Princes forsake their greatest Favorites? so that if you set to please men, you are not sure to attain your end at last; yea, rather you are sure not to attain it. But if the Lord doth see your very hearts be set to please him, he will accept you, though you come short, 2 Cor. 8. 12. Read that sweet passage, 2 Chron. 6. 75.

Thirdly, It will be a certain sign of your sincerity, when the pleasing of the Lord is your greatest business, Phil. 1. 20. To such the Promise runs, Isa. 56. 4. 5. It is a distinguishing evidence truly to seek and prize God's favor, more then Corn, Wine, Psal. 4. 6. 7.

Fourthly, This will set all in order, and bring all your business to a Head, when you have set down this as the one thing necessary, that you are resolved to please the Lord, this will regulate your whole lives, and bring all your business into a little compass. A Christian hath but one thing to do in all conditions, and that is to carry it so in his present state, as that he may please God. A man-pleaser: O how many hath he to please! what an endless work hath such an one to do?

Fifthly, Consider but how careful the Man-pleasing Parafite, and time serving Hypocrite is to please m...: and shall not we take as much care to please our God? oh how doth the flattering Courtier study the humor of his Prince? be you as careful to study, and to be acquainted with the mind of God. What will not men do to screw themselves into the favor of the Mighty? oh that you were but as diligent, and unwearied, and punctual in your endeavors, to get and to keep the favor of the Almighty?

Sixthly, Consider whose favor or displeasure is of that consequence to you, as the Lord's is of. What if men should be angry with you, have they the Keys of Hell, and of Death? no, no, fear them not. Can they undo your Souls? can they send you to Hell? Alas they cannot. See that you dread his displeasure that can. Alas what will their favor avail you? if they be pleased, can they stand between the wrath of God and you? can they pardon your sins? save your souls? secure your Eternal concernments? where is all their favor or good will, when they or you come to die? It will not be worth a Rush when most needed. Therefore beloved Brethren, whatever you do keep in with God. Resolve upon it, He must be pleased, though all the World be displeased. Let it be enough to you to have his good will: let this be the One thing that you bend yourselves to seek, and if you set to seek it, you may be sure to find it. The Messenger stays for me, and so I must here shut up my Letter, as Jude doth his. Ye Beloved, building up yourselves in your most holy Faith, Praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto Eternal life. Unto his Grace I commend you all, and shall add nothing but to share my loves among, and so rest,

Your Ambassador in Bonds, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER, XVIII. [The Worth of Holiness,] To the Beloved People the Flock of God in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most dear Friends, and Brethren,

I Am now a Prisoner of the Lord for you Gentiles, and therefore have sent these few Lines, to beseech you by these Bonds which I gladly endure for your sakes, to hold forth, and hold fast the profession of your Faith without wavering. The Lord make you steadfast in the Holy Doctrine wherein you have been taught. I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole Counsel of God. O remember that by the space of eight years, I ceased not to warn you everyone, and kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have taught you publicly, and from House to House, warning every man, and teaching every man that I might present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. Oh that Impenitent sinners would yet remember the Invitations, and the obsecrations, and the obtestations, that they have had! have they not been sought unto? have they not been entreated? have they not been followed from the Public, to their own Houses? hath not the Word been brought to their Doors? Hath not Mercy wooed them? have they not been called under the Wings of Mercy? And yet they would not. Oh that they would consider it now in the latter days? Jer. 23. 20. Oh that they would remember, and repent, that there might be yet an after Harvest? That they would yet come in and live! Are you yet willing to turn? hear how Wisdom calls after you, Prov. 11. How long ye simple ones will you love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge: turn you at my reproof. But if they will not hear, good were it for them that they had never been born: It shall be more, and better fought Sodom and Gomorrah, then for them.

But for you that have taken upon you the Profession of strict Godliness, I shall only press you to follow on, and press towards the Mark. You have much work yet to do, and God hath given you no time to Loyer in. I beseech you to put on. That Person that sits down when he hath gotten to that pitch that he thinks will bring him to Heaven, is never like to come thither; Grace is one of those things that saith, It never hath enough. Let me urge upon you the Apostles Counsel, Heb. 12. 14. Follow after Holiness.

First, Holiness is the choicest Ornament: it is an adorning in the sight of God, of great prize. It is the Glory of God, and will you count it your shame? Exod. 15. God is glorious in Holiness, and Grace is called Glory, 2 Cor. 3. 18. But we may now cry out as the Psalmist, in his complaint, O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my Glory into shame? Ps. 4. 2. But be of good comfort, the shame of Holiness is real Glory: how confidently doth Paul shake his Chain? Acts 28. 20. We read of some that did glory in their shame in a sad sense, that is in that which was real ground of shame, to wit, their sin, Phil. 3. 19. But we meet with others that in a happy sense, did glory in their shame; that is in the shame of Religion, which is indeed a Crown of Glory. So did Peter and John, Acts 5. 41.

Secondly, Holiness is the safest Muniment: Grace is not only for Ornament, but for Use. Righteousness is a Brestplate that keeps the Vitals, and is a sure defense from any mortal wounds, Ephes. 6. 14. When the Politicians have done their best with all their politick fetches, it is he that walketh uprightly, that walketh surely, Prov. 10. 19. Let integrity and uprightness preserve me, saith David, Psal. 25. Last. I desire no other Protection than Innocency. I desire to be no longer safe than these can preserve me; when I must let go my Integrity or my safety, I will choose the danger rather than the sin:and yet will never doubt but my Integrity will save me harmless, and prevent me forever coming off a Loser. Never persuade me that that man doth choose wisely or will consult in his own safety, that runs upon the displeasure of the infinite God, who is a devouring fire, to fly the danger of man's displeasure. Did you ever read or hear of a man so mad as to run upon the Swords point, to avoid the scratch of a Pin? or to run upon a roaring Canon, rather than danger his being wetshod? why this is the best wisdom of the distracted World, who will sin rather than suffer, and to save themselves harmless in the World, will run upon God, even upon his neck, and the thick Bosses of his Buckler, Job 15. 25. 26.

Thirdly, Holiness will be found to be your real happiness: Eat of this Tree, and you shall be indeed as God. Godliness is God's likeness. The beauty of Holiness is this very Image; Sin is the disease of which Holiness is the Cure. Pride is the Timpany, passion the Feavour of the mind, how restlessly raging is the mind where they reign? holiness, humility, meekness, are a present ease, a present Cure, if the Patient can take but enough. O what peace and tranquility doth Holiness work in the Mind! Great peace have they that love thy Commandments and nothing shall offend them, Psalm 19. 165. Read Isa 48. 18. 22. and 26. 3. and 32. 17. holiness w•...ll be a treasure of Riches, Jam. 2. 5. and a Crown of honor. Acts 17. 11. A Paradise of pleasure to you, Prov. 3 <...> a word, Holiness is the perfection of man's nature, <...> <...> . The Communication of the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4 The earnest of Glory, Mat. 5. 8. And the very entrance of Heaven, Phil. 3. 20.

Let me say now to everyone of you, as our Savior to Martha, John 11. 26. Believed thou this? If you do, live like Believers, and do you follow after Holiness as others follow their Trades or Studies. Let Religion be your business, and not a thing by the by with you: follow as hard upon the pursuit of Grace, as if you did indeed believe riches and honor were in it. Count yourselves well, as long as you keep within the line of your duty. Let holiness sit in your Lips, and season all your Speech with grace. Profess it, own it, plead stoutly and resolve for it, be you Advocates for Holiness, in an Adulterous and wicked Generation, wear it as a Robe of honor, when the spiteful World cast the dung of their Reproaches at you for it: let it dwell in your hearts: Let it adorn your Houses: let it be your Companion in your Closets: Let it Travel with you in your Journies: let it lie down and rise up with you: let it close your eyes in the Evening, and call you out of your Beds in the Morning. Be you the votaries of Holiness: keep her, and she shall keep you.

I shall close with my loves to you all, only because I know you love to hear of my well-fare: I must tell you that goodness and mercy do follow me perpetually every day, and every night, Glory to God in the highest. Dear Brethren, Fare you well in the Lord, I am

Most Dearly Beloved,

This was intended for you a Week sooner then it comes to be communicated. I purposely write in the middle of the Week, that if any Opportunity be suddenly offered, I may have somewhat ready for you: but last week I failed of a Conveyance, I shall not add anything further now, but that I shall follow my Counsels with my Prayers, and shall be an humble Intercessor night and day before God for you: to him I commend you, and to the Word of his Grace, LETTER XIX. [1. Try. 2. Rejoice.] To the most loving, and best beloved, the Flock of Christ in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most endeared Friends,

MY heart is solicitous for you: your Spiritual and Eternal welfare is the matter of my desires and designs. Let not my Beloved think they were forgotten by me, because you heard not from me the last Week: sleep departed from my eyes to write to you at large; but in the morning I concluded it best, to defer the imparting of it to you for a season, that you might have it a better way. Can a woman forget her Child, that she should not have compassion on the Son of her Womb? yea, they may forget, but Christ will earnestly remember you still. Natural Parents may be so far unnatural; spiritual Parents may be so far carnal, as to forget their own Children: I would have you count nothing as certain but Christ's love and care. This you may build upon: You need not fear lest time and distance should wear out the remembrance of you with him: your names are inrolled in the everlasting Decrees of Heaven, and a whole Eternity hath not been able to wear them out. Do any of you question whether you are so happy as to have your names recorded above? I shall bring it to a speedy issue: Do you question whether Christ hath taken your names? whether you are upon his heart? Let me ask you, Is Heaven upon your Hearts? Is the Name of Jesus deeply engraven upon your Souls? Is his Image and Superscription there? If you can find that Heaven is the main of your cares, that your hearts are set upon it as your home and your Country; and that it is your great business to seek it and secure it, then never doubt, if your Hearts be chiefly upon Heaven, your Names are unquestionable written in Heaven. Again, hath Christ recorded his name in your Hearts? Is the Name of Jesus the Beloved name with you? precious above all; next to your hearts? Is there no other Name under heaven so dear and sweet to you? What room hath Christ in you? If anything be deeper in your hearts than he is, you are unsound. As the Father hath given him, so do your hearts give him a Name above every Name: Is Christ uppermost with you in your estimations and affection? Then rejoice and leap for joy, your Names are most precious with Christ, if his Name be above all dear to you. Once more, hath Christ drawn out his own similitude upon You! Is Christ within you? doth he dwell in your Hearts? Then be sure you have a room in his heart: The Image of Christ is in holiness. Is this that which your very hearts are set upon? Do you thirst for Holiness? Do you follow after Holiness? Do you prize it above all prosperity and worldly greatness? Do you hate every sin and long to be rid of it as your most irksome burden? and use all God's means against it as far as you know them? If it be thus with you, Christ hath set his stamp upon your hearts, and so you may be sure he hath set you as a Seal upon his heart.

Rejoice then, O Christians, and bless yourselves in the happy privilege that you have, in being under Christ's care. Fear not little Flock; Stronger is he that is with you, than he that is against you: What though Satan should raise all his Militia against you, adhere to Christ in a patient doing & suffering his pleasure and he shall secure you: The Lord will not forsake you, because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people: God hath entrusted you with his Son: You are his Care and his Charge: Many will be lif•...ing at you, many will be plucking at you, but fear not, you shall not be moved, none shall pluck you out of Christ's hand, he hath all power, Mat. 28. 8. Can Omnipotence secure you? He is all Treasures, Col. 2. 3. Can unsearchable Riches suffice you? In a word, he is all fullness, Col. 1. 21. Can all content you? Can Fulness fill you? if so, you are blessed and shall be blesied.

Beloved, We loose unutterably for want of considering, for want of viewing our own Privileges, and Blessedness. O Man, is Christ thine, and yet dost thou live at a low rate and Comfort? Is thy Name written in heaven, and yet dost thou not rejoice? Shall the Children of the Kingdom, the Candidates of Glory, the chosen Generation, the Royal Priesthood, be like other men? O Christians, Remember who and whence you are, consider your Obligations, put on a better pace; •...stir yourselves, run and wrestle, and be strong for the Lord of Hosts (and earnestly, yet peaceably) contend for the Faith once delivered to his Saints; What shall we make nothing of all that God hath said and done for us? O Christians, shall he that hath gotten an enriching Office boast of his Booty? or he that hath obtained the Kings Patent for an Earldom, glory in his Riches and Honor? And shall the Grant of Heaven signify little with thee? Or Christ's Patent for thy Son-ship and Partnership with himself be like a Cypher? Shall Hamon come home from the Banquet with a glad heart, and glorying in the greatness of his Riches, the multitude of his Children, and all the things wherein the King had promoted him above the Princes? And shall we turn over our Bibles and read the Promises, and find it under God's own hand, that he intends the Kingdom for us, that he will be a Father to us, that he gives and grants all his infinite perfections to us, and yet not be moved? Beloved Christians, live like yourselves, let the Word see that the Promises of God, and Privileges of the Gospel are not empty sounds, or a mere Crack. Let the Heavenly cheerfulness and the restless diligence, and the holy raisedness of your Conversations prove the reality, excellency, and beauty of your Religion to the World. Forget not your Prisoner. Labor earnestly for me in your Prayers, who am night and day laboring and suffering for you. I can never bless God enough for his most tender & indulgent care for you, which appears so wonderfully in his Fatherly Protection, and his Fatherly Provision. See that you receive not the Crace of God in vain. Remember with trembling, that of our Lord, To whom much is given of him much shall be required. With my most dear loves to you all, I commend you to your Father and my Father, your God and my God, remaining

Yours in all manner of Obligations, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER XX. [The Felicity of Believers.] To the most beloved People, the servants of God in Taunton, Salvation.

Most endeared Christians,

I Have longed and waited for a little breathing time, wherein I might write unto you, but I have been oppressed hitherto with so many cares, and such a throng of business, that till now (and scarcely now) I have had no time of respiration, wherein I might sufficiently re•...lect on you, or myself. But although so great a part of Taunton be translated to Juelchester with me, yet I may not, I cannot forget you that are behind.

Alas poor Taunton, how should I bewail thee! did I look upon thee only with the Eye of sense, Alas! for thy wonted liberties, for thy former plenty, and variety wherewith the Lord hath blessed thee? he had spread a Table for thee in the midst of thine Enemies; Bread hath been given thee, and thy Waters have been sure: B•...t now a Famine seems to threaten thee, and the Comforters that should relieve thy Soul are far from thee. Thy Shepherds are removed. Thou seest not thy Signs, nor thy Prophets, and thy wont•... helpers are now disabled from giving thee supplies, Alas, how do thine enemies triumph, and thy Teachers and thine Inhabitants are become their Captives! and how great is the cry of thy poor, and thine oppressed!

Such would be the language of sense, if that were suffered to be the Speaker. But faith will speak in another Dialect. And therefore amongst my other Counsels, that I shall send you, this shall be the first.

Judge not of the present Providences, by the conduct of sense, but by the eye of Faith. Faith will see that we are then-most honored, when we are most vilified, and reproached, and set at naught for the sake of Christ; and that we are then most happy, when the World hath done its worst to make us miserable. Faith will tell you, that GOD is a very present help, when you seem quite to fail of help; and will show you the Well of water, that is near, when the Water in the Bottle is spent. What though you seem to have lost Ministers, Husbands, Friends for a Season? Faith will tell you, that they are well bestowed, and that it will be both your, and their advantage, in the Day of Retribution.

Brethren, what are you for? are you for the present world or for that that to come? are you for your temporal enjoyments, or do you seek for Glory, Honor, and Immortality? If you are for this World, you have made a very imprudent choice, in taking up the Profession of Godliness and cleaving to and owning the hated ways of the Lord; But if you are for Glory, and for Eternity, then be of good cheer, all these things do make for us. You are witnesses how often I have told you of these things, and I can say with the Apostle, I believe therefore have I spoken, and therefore I am nothing moved with all these things, nor with the things that do yet further betide me. I believe, and therefore. I told you, that you should never be losers by Jesus Christ. Nay do I say I told it you, you know the Lord Jesus Christ hath shown you, that the persecuted are doubtly blessed; that such should rejoice, and leap for joy, because great is their reward in Heaven Hath not God said, that if we suffer with him we shall also Reign with him; and that these light afflictions work for us a weight of Glory? And if this be true, I pray you, tell me whether GOD hath not dealt well with us in counting us worthy of this little Tribulation for his Name? Indeed the Sufferings is but little; but verily the Reward will not be little. I know whom I have trusted: I am well assured the Glass is turned up, and every hour reckoned of our Imprisonment, and every Scorn and Reproach of our Enemies is kept in Black and White. I believe, therefore do I speak; GOD is infinitely tender of us, my Brethren, though a Poor and despicable Generation. I value not the Pot gun threats of a frowning world; 'tis well with us, we are GOD'S Favorites. Come my Beloved, let us sit down under his Shadow: Here is safety, and rest, if God be for us, who can be against us? Verily he Bottles all our Tears, and tells all our wanderings: He numbers all our hairs, whosoever toucheth us shall not be Innocent. Know you not that we are the Apple of his Eye? Hath not he reprov'd the greatest for his Peoples sakes, saying reproach not mine anointed? And so we forget how he loved us. Are not we his Jewels? Doth he not own us for his Members, for his Children?

Ah what a Block doth Unbelief make of man? What, do you think that all this doth signify nothing? Can you forget your Children? Will you suffer your Jewels to lie in the Dirt, or make no reckoning of them whether they are lost?

Verily I write not this without shaming reflections upon my own stupidity. What, Beloved of God, adopted by God! What, a Member of Christ Jesus! A Vessel of Mercy! An heir of Glory? What, and not yet swallowed up in the sense of God's infinite love! Blush, Oh my Soul, and be cofounded before the most high, & cover thy face with shame.

I remember what the Heathen Seneca writes, observing the expressions of God's love to man in his common Providence; Verum est, usque in delicias Amamur, That is, it is a very truth, we are Beloved of God even as his darlings.

My Brethren, Have Faith in God. Believe his Promises: Walk in the sense of his love. Comfort yourselves in God's love towards you, under all the hatred and envy of men, and the contradiction of sinners that you meet with. Be strong and of a good Courage, God is for you. Be assured that he that walketh uprightly, walketh surely: Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together. Now see that you speak often to one another, and build up each other in the holy Faith. God knows I cannot do for you, as I would; I would have been larger to you, but I cannot. My most dear loves I desire you to share among you. I am greatly Yours. The Peace that passeth all Understanding keep your hearts and minds. I am Yours to serve you and for you with all readiness of mind. JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER, XXI. [What do you more than others?] To the most dearly Beloved, the Servants in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most loving and entirely Beloved,

YOU are a great Joy to me. I know not what thanks to render to the Lord for you, when I hear of your Constancy, and Fidelity, and Zeal, in adhering to him, and his ways, even in such a time as this, you are highly favored, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, that he hath regarded the low Estates of his Servants: That he should ever Indulge you as he hath, and hover over you, even as the Eagle stirteth up her Nest, and fluttereth over her Young, spreadeth abroad her Wings, taketh them, beareth them on her Wings, for so hath the Lord your God dealt with you: He hath kept you as the Apple of his Eye, and since the Streams of Cherith were dried up, yet to this day he hath not suffered the handful of Meal to wast, nor the Oil in the Cruse to fail, but (though you have no certainty to trust to) hath continually provided for you to the full. How should I love and bless the Lord for this his great Grace towards you, while I live? Now I beseech you my Brethren, that you consider the Kindness of the Lord; for the Lord your God is he that careh for you, and that you love the Lord your God, and fear him forever, for he is your Life, and the Length of your Daies. And as Job had a holy fear of his Children, lest they should have offended: So my most dearly Beloved, I am jealous of you with a Godly jealousy, lest any of you should receive this Grace of God in vain. I must not cease to put you in mind, that God doth look from no small matter from you. Remember my most endeared Charge, that the Lord doth look for singular things from you, that there be not a barren Tree nor a Dwarf Christian among you; where the Lord doth strow much, he looks to gather much; and where he soweth much, he expects to reap accordingly. Whose account my Beloved, is like to be so great as yours? O look about you, and think of the Master coming to Reckon with you for his Talents; when he will expect no small increase. Beloved, what can you do? How much are you grown? What spoil have you made upon your Corruptions? What progress in Grace?

Suppose Christ should put the awakening question to you, What do you more than others? Beloved, God doth expect more of his People, than of any others in the world besides: And well he may. For

First, He hath bestowed more on them than on others: Now where much is given, much shall be required: Can you think of that without trembling? He hath bestowed on them singular Love more than on others; Thou only have I known of all the Families on Earth. He hath a distinguishing Love and favor for his People, and he looks that his love should, be a constraining Argument to Obedience. Again he hath laid out a singular care on his People, more than on others: He cares for no man, for nothing in all the World, in comparison of them. He reproveth Kings for their sakes. He will give Nations, and Kingdoms for their Ransom. So precious are they in his sight, and so dearly Beloved, that he will give men for them, and People for their Life. He withdraweth not his Eyes from the Righteous, he will not endure them out of his sight. The Eyes of the Lord are upon the Righteous, and first the eye of his more accurate Observation: God can wink at others as it were, and overlook what they do with little notice, but he hath a most eurious Eye upon his People, he marketh their steps, & booketh their words, he weigheth their Actions, and pondereth all their goings. And should they not walk more cautiously, and charily, than any alive, that are under so exact and curious an Eye? Secondly the Eye of special Care, and Protection. Behold the Eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him. I will guide thee with mine Eye: And should not they be infinitely tender and careful how to please the Lord, who have his singular Care laid out on them? In short, God hath bestowed on them singular Privileges, more than others: These are a peculiar Treasure to him above all People, a Kingdom of Priests, an holy Nation, a singular separated People, they dwell alone, they are diverse from all People: When the whole world lies in wickedness, these are Called and Chosen, and Faithful, Washed, and Justified, and Sanctified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. The rest are the Refuse: These the Jewels: These are taken, and they are left. Shall not God's Priests be Clothed with Righteousness, and shall not Princes Live above the rate of Peasants?

Secondly, He hath entrusted them with more than others; Not only with the Talents of his Grace (for the increase whereof they must give a strict account) but also with the Jewel of his Glory. How tenderly should they walk, that are entrusted with such a Jewel? Remember, your makers Glory is bound up in your fruitful walking.

Thirdly, He hath qualified them more than others. He hath put into them a Principle of Life, having quickened them together with Christ. He hath set up a light in their Minds, when others lie in Darkness. He hath given them other Aids, than others have, even his Spirit to help their Infirmities, when others lie like Vessels that are Windbound, and cannot stir.

Fourthly, He hath provided for them other manner of things than for others. These are the little Flock to whom it is his good pleasure to give the Kingdom; great are the preparations for them. The Father hath prepared the Kingdom for them from the foundations of the World: the Son is gone to Heaven on purpose to prepare a place for them: The Spirit is preparing them, and making them meet to be partakers of the Inheritance of the Saints in Light: and should these be like other People?

Brethren beloved, God and Men do expect you should do more than others, see that that you be indeed singular. For

1. If you do no more for God than others, he will do more against you than others: You only have I known, therefore will I punish you. The barren Tree in the Vineyard must down, whereas had he been in the Common he might have stood much longer. God looked for Grapes from his Vineyard, on which he had bestowed such care and cost more than ordinary, but when they bring forth wild Grapes, he will lay them waste in a worse manner than the Forest. When Christ came to the Fig-tree seeking fruit, and met with none, he cursed it from the root, whereas had it been a Thorn or Bramble, it might have stood as before..
2. If you do no more than others, you must look for no more than others: If you should put off God with a common obedience, you must expect to be put off with common mercies.
3. Except you do more than others, God will be dishonored more by you than others.

I have been too long with you, but I am earnestly desirous you should be sensible of God's extraordinary expectations from you. And truly, as God looks for more from his own than others, so he looks for more from you than others, even of his own, because that he hath done more: See that you be shining Christians, that you be strong in the grace of God, that you press towards the mark. But I must conclude; I give my loves among you all, being able to add no more, but that I am LETTER XXII. [Christian Care, Faith, Self-denial.] To the most Beloved People, the Servants of God in Taunton, Salvation.

Most endeared Christians,

THE reason why my Letters have not of late come so thick as formerly to you, is not because I forgot to love you, and to care for you; but because I have been busily taken up in other labors of sundry kinds for you. I am yours, and love to be so, being ambitious not to have dominion over your faith, but to be a helper of your Joy. Christ's Officers are so your Rulers in the Lord, as yet to Preach not themselves, but the Lord Jesus Christ, and themselves your servants for Jesus sake. I have no greater felicity under God, than to serve the good of souls. Brethren beloved, how fares it with your souls? are they in health? do they prosper? I wish your temporal prosperity. It is a joy to me to hear when your trade doth flourish: but these are but very little things if we look into Eternity. Brethren, my ambition for you is, that you should be Cedars among the Shrubs, that from you should sound out the Word of the Lord, and that in every place your Faith to Godward should be spread abroad. That Taunton should be as a field that the Lord hath blessed: that you should not only have the Name, but the Spirit, Life, Power, Heat, Growth, Vigour of Christianity among you. Let not Taunton only have the name to live, and be noted for the profession of Religion, but see to it my Brethren, that the Kingdom of God be with you: Oh that everyone of your souls might be a Temple of God! Oh that everyone of your Families might be a Church of God! Beloved, look to it, that everyone that nameth the name of Christ among you do depart from Iniquity, secret as well as open, of the heart as well as of the life. Let no man think that to make an out-cry upon the Wickedness of the times, and to be of the Professing Party, will serve his turn; many go to Hell in the company of the wise Virgins. That no man may be a Self-deceiver, let every man be a Self-searcher. He that keeps no Day-book in his Shop, and no Account, no Record in his Conscience, his Estate and his Soul will thrive both alike. Beloved, I would that you should remember whither you are a going. If a man be after a few Months to be Transported into another Country, never to return more, he will send over whatever he can, and make the best Provision that he may against he comes into another Country. Dear Brethren, you are Strangers and Pilgrims here, and have but a few Months abode in this Country, see that you Traffique much with Heaven. Christ is our Common Factor, O send over to him what possible you can. Give Alms plentifully, pray continually, be much in Meditation and Consideration; Reckon with yourselves daily: Walk with God in your Callings: do all the duties of your Relations as unto God: live not one day to yourselves, but unto Christ: Set forth continually in his Name, so shall you be continually Transporting into another World, and laying up Treasure in Heaven: And O the blessed store that you shall find there after a few Years diligence in such a holy course! Beloved, while you are here in this World, You are but like a

Merchants Ship in a strange Port, the day for your return is set, and you are to stay no longer then till your Freight is ready. Be wise, know your season, improve you time, you are made or marred forever, as you speed in this one Voyage. There is no returning again to this Country to mend a bad Market, God will call in all his Talents, time shall be no longer. Oh, come in, come and buy now while the Market is open, that you that want may have grace and you that have may have it more abundantly. Go and plead with the Lord Jesus, that he hath bid you come, buy and eat without Money, and without Price; that he hath counseled you to come buy of him Gold, Raiment, and Eyesalve; tell him you are come according to his call, and wait upon him for Grace, for Righteousness, for Light and Instruction: Lay hold on his Word, plead it, live upon it; he is worthy to be believed, worthy to be trusted, go out of yourselves to him, unlearn yourselves. There is a threefold Foot that ca...all-self stands upon, our own Wisdom, our own Righteousness, our own Strength, these three Feet must be cut off, and we must learn to have no subsistence in ourselves but only in Christ, and to stand only on his bottom. Study the excellent Lesson of Self-denial, Self-annihilation, A true Christian is like a Vine that cannot stand of itself, but is wholly supported by the Prop it leans on. It is no small thing to know ourselves to be nothing, of no might, of no worth, of no understanding, nor reality; to look upon ourselves as helpless, worthless, foolish empty shadows. This holy littleness is a great matter; when we find that all our Inventory amounts to nothing but folly, weakness, and beggary; when we set down ourselves for Cyphers, our gain for loss, our excellencies for very vanities, then we shall learn to live like Believers. A true Saint is like a Glass without a Foot, that set him where you will, is ready to fall every way till you set him to a Prop: Let Christ be the only support you lean unto. When you are thoroughly emptied and nullified, and see all comeliness to be but as a withered Flower, dead, dried, and past recovery, then you will be put upon the happy necessity of going out to Christ for all.

The Messengers haste forceth me Abruptly to end here: I can add no more, but my Prayers to my Counsels, and so commending you to God, and the Word of his Grace, I rest LETTER XXIII. [Right Reasons in Suffering.] To the most loving, and best beloved, the Flock of Christ in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most loving and dearly Beloved,

I Know not what thanks to render to you, nor to God for you, for all the unexpressable love which I have found in you towards me; and not terminatively to me, but to Christ in me; for I believe it is for his sake, as I am a Messenger and Ambassador of his to you, that you have loved me and done so much every way for me; and I think I may say of Taunton as the Psalmist of Jerusalem, If I forget thee, let my right hand forget her cunning, if I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth. I would not, my dear Brethren, that you should be dejected or discouraged at the late disappointments: for through the goodness of God I am not, but rather more satisfied than before: and this I can truly say, nothing doth sadden me more than to see so much sadness in your faces. As on the contrary nothing doth comfort me so much as to see your cheer and courage. Therefore I beseech you, Brethren, faint not because of my Tribulation, nor of God's delays, but strengthen the hands, and the feeble knees. And the Lord bolster up your hands, as they did the hands of Moses, that they may not fall down till Israel do prevail. Let us fear lest there be some evil among us, that God being angry with us, doth send this farther trial upon us. Pray earnestly for me lest the eye of the most jealous God should discern that in me which should render me unfit for the mercy you desire. And let everyone of you search his heart, and search his house to see if there be not cause there: Let not these disappointments make you to be nevertheless in love with Prayers, but the more out of love with sin. Let us humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, and he shall exalt us in due time. And for the enemies of God, you must know also that their foot shall slide in due time. Let the Servants of God encourage themselves in their God: for in the things wherein they deal proudly, he is above them: therefore fret not yourselves because of evil doers; commit your cause to him that judgeth righteously. Remember that you are bid if you see oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of Judgment and Justice in a Province, not to marvel at the matter: verily, there is a God that judgeth in the Earth: and you have the liberty of appeals: rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him, and fret not yourselves, because of the men that bring wicked devices to pass: take heed that none of you do with Peter begin to sink, now you see the waters rough, and the winds boisterous: these things must not weaken your Faith, nor cool your Zeal: for they are great arguments for the strengthening of it. What clearer evidence can there be for the future judgment and perdition of the ungodly, and Coronation of the Just in another life, than the most unjust proceedings that are here upon Earth: shall not the Judge of all the Earth see right to be done? We lee here nothing but confusion and disorder, the wicked receiveth according to the work of the righteous, and the Innocent according to the work of the wicked. The Godly perish and the wicked flourish; these do prosper, and they do suffer. What, can it be ever thus! no doubtless, there must be a day when God will Judge the world in righteousness, and rectify the present disorders, and reverse the unrighteous Sentences that have been passed against his servants. And this evidence is so clear, that many of the Heathen Philosephers have from this very Argument (I mean the unrighteous usage of the good) concluded that there must certainly be rewards and punishments adjudged by God in another World.

Nor yet lose your Zeal: now is the time that the love of many doth wax cold: but I bless God it is not so with you: I am sure your love to me is, as true Friends should be, like the Chimneys, warmest in the Winter of Adversity: and I hope your love to God is much more, and I would that You should abound yet more and more. Where else should you bestow your Loves? Love ye the Lord, ye his Saints, and cling about him the faster now ye see the world is striving to separate you from him. How many are they that go to knock off your fingers! O methinks, I see what tugging there is. The World is plucking, and the Devil is plucking: Oh, hold fast, I beseech you; hold fast, that no man take your Crown. Let the Water that is sprinkled, yea, rather poured upon your love, make it to flame up the more. Are you not betrothed unto Christ? Oh remember, remember your Marriage Covenant: did you not take him for Richer for Poorer, for better for worse: now prove your love to Christ to have been a true conjugal love, in that you can love him when most slighted, despised, undervalued, blasphemed among men. Now acquit yourselves, not to have followed Christ for the Loaves, now confute the Accuser of the Brethren, who may be ready to suggest of the best of you, as he did of Job, Doth he serve the Lord for naught? And let it be seen that you loved Christ and holiness purely for their own sakes, that you can love a naked Christ when there is no hopes of worldly advantage, or promoting of self-interest in following him.

Yet beware that none of you do stick to the ways of Christ and Religion upon so carnal an account as this, because this is the way that you have already taken up, and you count it a shame to recede from your Principles: I am very jealous lest some Professors should miss of their reward for this: lest they should be accounted Turn-coats and Hypocrites; therefore they will show a stoutness of spirit in going on, since they have once begun, and cannot with honor retreat. Would you chose holiness and strictness, if it were to do again? would you enter yourselves among God's poor people, if it were now first to do. Would you have taken up the Profession of Christ, though you had foreseen all this that is come and coming? This will do much to evidence your sincerity. But I forget •...hat I am writing a Letter, being prone to pass all bounds when I have thus to do with you. The Lord God remember and reward you and your labors of love. The Eternal God be your refuge, and put under you his everlasting Arms. The Peace of God that passeth all understanding keep your hearts. Christ's Legacy of Peace I leave with you, and rest, with my dear affections to you all,

Your Ambassador in Bonds, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER XXIV. [Council for Salvation.] To the most beloved People, the servants of God in Taunton, Salvation.

Most endeared Christians,

MY continual solicitude for your State, will not suffer me to pass in quiet one week without Writing to you, unless I am extraordinarily hindered. Your sincerity, stedfastness, and proficiency in the grace of God, is the matter of my earnest desire, and that which I should account myself happy in. I have a longing desire to see the Faces of you all, and (besides mine expectation) shall (I trust) speedily have the opportunity to see you at the approaching Assizes, which I shall greatly rejoice in, notwithstanding our coming may be otherwise attended with many Inconveniencies. In the mean time I send you a few Prison Counsels. As,

1. To improve for Eternity, the Advantages of your present State. Though you are at many disadvantages with respect to the public Ordinances, yet you have many wondrous and most happy Privilege, which Spiritual Wisdom would make no small improvement of. Oh what a mercy have you that you may serve God while you will in your Families! That you may be as much as you will with God in secret Prayer, and holy Meditation, and Self-examination! I beseech you consider what a Blessing you have above others, that have your Health, and a Competency of the Comforts of this life, and are free from those continual pains, or Heart-eating Cares, that others are disabled by, from looking after God and their Souls, as you may do. Oh consider what a blessed Seed-time you have for Eternity! Now be wise and improve your happy Season, your day of Grace. Prepare for Death, make all sure: Press on towards the Mark, lay up in store for yourselves a good Foundation against the time to come. In the morning sow your Seed, and in the Evening withdraw not your Hand. Treasure up much in Heaven: What profit is it that you have more than others? more Liberty, more Comfort, more Health, more Wealth, than others? except you love God more, and serve him better than others. Now ply your Work, and dispatch your Business, so as that you may have nothing to trouble You upon your Death-Beds.

2. To Consider also the Temptations, and Disadvantages of your State. Study to know your own weaknesses, and where your danger lies that you may obviate Satan, and prevent your miscarrying: There is no Condition but hath its Snares. See that you acquaint yourselves with his Devices, lest you be beguiled by him, and caught in his Trap through your own unwariness. You that are well Provided for in the World, had need to watch yourselves, lest you fall in love with present things, lest you be lifted up, lest you trust in those Carnal props, and put confidence in the Creatures, lest you warp, and decline, and baulk your duties through Carnal fear, and the desire of preserving your Estates. You that have little in the World, are not without your temptations neither: Oh take heed of Envyng others Prosperity, of murmuring and discontent, of diffidence and distrustfulness, of using indirect means to help yourselves: Be sure You make not the Worlds pressures upon you, an excuse from your daily serving of God in your Families, and in secret. Set this down as your Rule, and unchangeable Resolution, that God and your Souls and your Families shall be looked duly and continually after, go the world which way it will. Consider what sins your Tempers, Relations, Callings, do most expose you to. Be not strangers to yourselves. Prove yourselves upright in keeping from your Iniquities.

3. To Converse often with your Dust. Brethren we are going, we are going, the Grave waiteth for us: Oh forget not that Corruption is your Father, and the Worm your Mother, and your Sister. These are your poor kindred that you must shortly dwell with, when you come to your long home: Remember the days of Darkness which shall be many. Take every day some serious turns with Death. Think where you shall be a few days and nights hence, happy he that knew what tomorrow meant for twenty Years together. Believe it, you will find it no little thing to die. Think often how you are provided, how you should receive the Sentence of Death. Were you never within sight of Death? How did it look? What did you wish for most at that time? What did then trouble you most? Oh mark these things, and live according. Often ask your hearts, What if God should this night require my Soul?

4. To serve your Generation with your might while you have time. You have but a very little time to bring God any Glory here, or to do your Friends any good; now up and be doing. Now or never live in the deep and constant sense of the very little time that you have for this world, and the great work you have to do. You are going whence You shall not return. There's no After-Game to be plaid. What! But one cast for Eternity, and will you not be careful to throw that well?

Most dearly Beloved, I covet after your furtherance in Mortification, and growth in Grace. And Oh that I could but represent Death to you, as shortly it will show itself: Or could but open a Window into Eternity to You: How effectually would this do the work. Then the Cripple would fling away his Crutches, and betake himself to his Legs: Then the slothful would pluck his Hand out of his Bosom, and shake off his Excuses, and be night and day at his work. Then the Laodicean would be recovered from his benumbed frame; then we should have no Halving in Religion, no lazy wishing and complaining; but men would ply the Oars to purpose, and sweat at their work.

But Oh unhappy man, how powerfully hath the world bewitched thee! How miserably hath Sin unmaned thee. that thou shouldst look no far•...her than thou canst see, and to be taken up with present things, and forget so momentous concernments as are before thee?

But you my Brethren, lift up yourselves above the objects of sense: may you be men for eternity, and carry it like these that seek for glory, honor, and immortality. I am apt to be too long with you: I commend you to Divine Grace: my dearest loves among you, I am

LETTER. XXV. To the loving and most beloved People, the Servants of God in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most dearly Beloved,

Although I am forced at the present, to be at a distance from you, yet I would not have you ignorant, that the dear remembrance of you is always fresh with me, and the care of your eternal welfare is always living upon my heart. Therefore as my beloved Friends I warn you, and cease not to stir you up by way of remembrance, being jealous for you with a Godly jealou•...ie, that no man take your Crown. My dearly Beloved, I know you have many enemies, and above all, I fear your bosom Enemies: and as the Watchman of the Lord, I give you careful warning, and exhort you all not to be high-minded, but fear. Blessed is the man that feareth always. Look diligently, lest any of you fail of the Grace of God. You have made much and long Profession of the Name of Jesus Christ: Oh look to your foundations, see upon what ground you stand. Look to your sincerity. You must everyone of you stand shortly before the Judgment Seat of Christ, and be tried for your lives: Oh, try yourselves thoroughly first. 'Tis easy to mistake Education for Regeneration, and common Conviction and Illumination for Conversion, and a partial Re•...ormation and external Obedience, •...or true Sanctification. Therefore I beseech you everyone, to examine whether you are in the Faith. Prove your own selves. Tell not me, you hope you are sincere, you hope you shall go to Heaven: Never put it off with hopes, but pray, and try, and search, till you are able to say, yea, and know you are passed from death to life, and that you know you have a Building, not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens.

Suppose I should ask you one by one, where are your Evidences for Heaven? Could you make out your claim? can you bring me Scripture-proof? can you show me the marks of the Lord Jesus? what m•...n you to live at uncertainties? Brethren, it is an intolerable ignorance for any of you in these days of glorious light, not to be able to tell the distinguishing marks of a sound believer. And it is intolerable carelessness of your everlasting welfare, if you do not bring yourselves to the Trial by these marks. What are your hands filled with Books, and your ears filled with Sermons, that tell you so plainly from the Word of God, how you shall know whether you are in Christ, and are you still to seek? Oh, stir up your own selves. Take heed, lest a Promise being left of entering into his rest, any of you fall short of it at last by unbelief. You are a professing People, you pray, and you hear, and you run upon some Adventures for Jesus Christ: But, O look to your since...ity. Look to your Principles, look to your ends, else you may lose all at last. Examine, not only what is done, but whence 'tis done, look to the root as well as to the Fruit. Eye not only your Actions, but your aims. Remember what a strict and severy eye you are under. The Lord Jesus makes strict observation upon all your works and ways. He observes who of you be fruitful, and who be barren and unprofitable. He knows who of you be thriving and who be declining. He observes who be warm, and who lukewarm: who be sound Christians, and who of you have only a name to live.

Return, O backsliding Christians, you have lost your former convictions, and lost your former Affections. You are grown remiss in your watch, and your Zeal is turned into a kind of indifferency, and your diligence into negligence. Your care is turned into security, and your tenderness into senselessness. Oh, your case is dangerous. The Lord Jesus hath a great controversy with you. Oh, remember whence you are fallen, and repent, and do your first works. Strengthen the things that remain, and are ready to die. Oh, rub and chafe your swooning souls, and ply them with warm applications, and rousing considerations, till they recover their former heat. And know ye from the Lord, that the backsliders in heart shall be filled with his own ways.

Oh ye barren and fruitless trees: behold the Axe is lifted up to fell you to the ground, except you bring forth fruits, and those worthy of Repentance. May not Christ say to some among you, Behold these three years have I come, seeking fruit, and findig none? How is it then that you read not the Sentence passed on the fruitless Tree? O sleepy Professors, how long will you drive on in this heavy course? how long will you continue in an unprofitable and customary profession? would you be the joy of our Lord, why know ye, that the thriving Plant is the Masters praise, and his hearts delight. Christians, put on, press towards the Mark, be adding to your Faith, Virtue; and to virtue, knowledge, &c. See that you grow extensively, in being abundant in all sorts of good works. Be pitiful, be courteous, gentle, easily to be entrea...ed. Be slow to anger, soon reconciled. Be patient, be ye t...mperate, be ye cheerful. Study not everyone only his own things, but the good of his Neighbor. Think it not enough to look to your own souls, but watch for other souls Pray for them, warn them, be kind to them, study to oblige them, that by any means you may win them, and gain their souls.

Labor to grow intensively, to do better the things that you did before, to be more servant in Prayer, more free and willing in all the ways of the Lord, to hear with more profit, to examine yourselves more thoroughly, to mind Heaven more frequently than heretofore.

And you, O carnal and unsound Professors, that reckon your •...elves to be in Christ, but are not new Creatures; that because you have the good opinion of the Godly, and are outwardly conformable to the ways of God, persuade yourselves you are in a good condition, although your hearts have not yet to this day been renewed: O repent speedily. Repent, and be converted. What though we cannot distinguish the Tares from the Wheat? yet the Lord of the Harvest can. Christ will find you out, and condemn you for rotten and unsound, unless you be soundly renewed by repentance, and effectually changed by converting Grace.

Brethren, I fervently wish your Salvation, and to this, while I am able, I shall bend my ardent endeavors, I am now taking advice for my health, and hope in some few Weeks to be restored to you. In the mean time I commend me to your Prayers, and you to the grace of God, remaining.

Yours in the Lord Jesus, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER XXVI. [The Character and privileges of true Believers.] To the loving and most beloved People, the Servants of God in Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Most Dearly Beloved,

I Longed to hear of your Welfare, but by reason of the Carryers intermitting his journeys, could not till now obtain my desires, neither had I opportunity till the last week of writing to you. I rejoice to hear by Mr. Ford, of God's continual goodness towards you; he is your Shepherd, and therefore it is that you do not want. Me you have not always, but he is ever with you, his Rod and his Staff shall comfort you; Nay, more then all this, you may hence conclude comfortably for all times, yea, for the whole Eternity to come. Surely Goodness and Mercy shall follow you all the days of your lives, and you shall dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

In this, my dear Brethren, in this rejoice, and again I say rejoice, that God is engaged in so near and so sweet relation to you. Doubtless your Souls shall lodge in goodness, and be provided for carefully, and lie down in everlasting safety, that have the Almighty for our Shepherd. Blessed are the Flock of his hands, and the Sheep of his Pasture, happy is the People that is in such a case.

But who are Christ's Sheep?

Not all Professors, I beseech you take heed how you rest in Profession. It is not Profession, but Conversion that turns a man from a Swine to a Sheep. Let none of you be deceived, nor flatter yourselves, that because you bear the name of Christians, and do many things, and have escaped the open gross pollutions of the World, therefore you are surely among the number of Christ's true Sheep. All this you may attain to, and yet be but washed Swine; here must be an inward deep and thorough and universal Change upon your Natures, Dispositions, Inclinations, or else you are not Christ's Sheep.

In a word, If you will be put out of doubt whether you are his sheep or not, you must try it by this certain Mark that Christ sets upon all his Sheep, even your Sanctification, you that will stand to the trial, answer me truly and deliberately to these Questions. Do you hate every sin as the sheep doth the Mire? Do you regard no Iniquity in your hearts? Do you strive against, and oppose all sin, though it may seem never so necessary, never so natural to you, or have you not your secret haunts of evil? For every Swine will have his swill. Do you abstain from sin out of fear, or out of dislike? Are you at peace with no sin, or do you not hide some iniquity as a sweet morsel under your Tongue? Is there not some practice that you are not willing to know is a sin for fear you should be forced to leave it? Do you love the Commandment that forbids your sin, or do you not wish it out of the Bible, as that evil man wished God had never made the Seventh Commandment? Again, how do you stand affected towards Holiness? Do you love it? Do you choose it? Do you hunger and thirst after it, & desire it more than any Temporal good? Have you chosen the way of God's Precepts, and had rather live holily than be allowed to live in your sins? Do you in your very hearts prefer a Godly strict Life in communion with and conformity to God, before the greatest prosperity of the World? do you chose Holiness, not out of bare necessity, because you cannot go to Heaven without it, but out of love to it, and from a deep sense that you have of the surpassing excellency, and loveliness, and beauty of it? If it be thus with you, you are the persons that the Lord Jesus hath marked for his Sheep.

And now, come ye blessed, all that have this mark upon you, come and understand your happiness; you are marked out for preservation, and let it go how it will with the rest; that I know, it shall go well with you that fear the Lord, that fear before him. You are the separated ones, the sealed ones, upon whom the Angel hath set the Seal of the Living God; and so you are redeemed unto God from among men, being the first fruits unto God, and unto the Lamb, and have your Fathers Name written in your Fore-heads.

Hear, O beloved Flock, I may give you the salutation of the Angels, Hail, you are highly favored of the Lord, Blessed are you among men; though you are but poor and despised, and like little Benjamin among the thousands of Judah; you carry away the blessing and the privilege from all the rest. God hath done more for the least of you than for the whole World of Mankind besides, put all their mercies together. Fear not little Flock, it is your Fathers good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. Blessed are you of the Lord, for yours is the Kingdom of Heaven. All that the Scripture speaks of that Kingdom of Glory, that Kingdom of Peace, of Righteousness, that Everlasting Kingdom, It speaks it all to you. Behold your Inheritance, see that you believe. What know you not your own selves? you are the Sons of God, Inheritours of the Kingdom of Heaven, Joint Heirs with Christ the Lord of Glory. Do you believe this? Take heed you make not God a Lyar: his Word is nigh you: have you not the Writings in your hands? Do I speak anything but what God hath spoken? Shall I tell you of the thing which shall be hereafter? Why thus it shall be. The Son of man shall come in his Glory, and all his holy Angels with him: Then shall he sit upon the Throne of his Glory, and he shall separate you as a Shepherd divideth the Sheep from the Goats, and he shall set you at his own right hand, Then shall the King say, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you.

Do you believe yet? Do you thoroughly believe? If so, then my work is done, then I need not bid you Rejoice, no...bid you be Thankful, only believe. Do this and do all. Believe... and joy will LETTER XXVII. [O... the Second coming of Christ.] To the Faithful, and Beloved, the Servants of God i... Taunton, Grace and Peace.

Loving and most dearly Beloved,

THOUGH I trust my Bonds do preach to you, yet methink that doth not suffice me, but the conscience of my duty, and the workings of my heart towards you, are still calling upon me to stir you up by way of remembrance, notwithstanding you know and be established in the present Truth. And if Paul do call upon so great an Evangelist as Timothy, to Remember that Jesus was raised from the dead according to the Gospel, why should not I be often calling upon myself, and upon you, my dearly Beloved, to remembe... and meditate upon, and closely apply the great and weighty Truths of the Gospel, which you have already received? and in truth, I perceive in myself and you another manner of heat and warmth in the insisting upon the plainest principles of Christianity, and the setting them home upon mine own heart and yours, than in dwelling upon anymore abstruse Speculations, in the clearest handling of which, the Preacher may seem to be too much like the winter nights, very brigh..., but very cold.

But now, my Brethren, I shall not with Paul call upon you so much to remember the resurrection of Christ, as the Return of Christ: Behold, He cometh in the Clouds, and every E...e shall see him; Your eyes and mine eyes: and all the Tribes of the Earth shall mourn because of him: But we shall lift up our heads, because the Day of our Redemption draweth nigh: this is the day I look for, and wait for, and have laid up all my hopes in. If the Lord return not, I profess myself undone, my Preaching is vain, and my suffering is vain, and the bottom in which I have entrusted all my hope... is forever miscarried. But I know whom I have trusted: We are built upon the foundation of that sure Word, we are not built upon the sand of Mortality. Nor do we run so as uncertainly, but the Word of the Lord abideth forever, upon which Word do we hope; How fully doth this Word assure us that this same Jesus that is gone up into Heaven shall so return, and that he shall appear the second time unto Salvation, to them that look for him. Oh, how sure is the thing! how near is the time! how glorious will his appearing be!

The thing is sure, the Day is set, God hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the World by that man whom he hath ordained; the manner of it is revealed, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his Saints: The Attendants are appointed and nominated. The Son of Man shall come in his Glory, and all his holy Angels with him. The thing you see is established, and every circumstance is determined. How sweet are the words that dropped from the precious Lips of our departing Lord! What generous Cordials hath he left us in his parting Sermons, and his last Prayer! and yet of all the rest those are the sweetest, I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am, there you may be also. What need you any further witness: you have heard him yourselves, assuring you of his return. Doubtless he cannot deceive you, you have not only known, but seen and felt the truth of his promises.

And will he come? tremble then ye sinners, triumph ye... Saints, clap your hands all ye that look for the consolation of Israel. O sinners, where will you then appear? how will you look upon him whom you have pierced; whom you have persecuted? whose great Salvation you have neglected and despised? Woe unto you that ever you were born, unless you should then be found to be New-born.

But you, O Children of the most high, how will you forget your travel, and be melted into joy. This is he in whom you have believed; whom having not seen ye loved. But how will love and joy be working (if I may so speak) with pangs unutterable, when you shall see him, and hear his sweet voice commending, applauding, approving of you, and owning you by name before all the World. Brethren, thus it must be, the Lord hath spoken it. See that you stagger not at the Promise, but give Glory to God by believing.

Again, the time is near, Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come. Behold, I come quickly, saith he: And again, The Lord is at hand: Sure you are, that death cannot be far off. O Christian, thou dost not know but the next year, nay, possibly the next week, thou mayest be in Heaven. Christ will not long endure thine absence, but will have thee up to him till the time of his general appearing; when he will take us up altogether, and so we shall be ever with the Lord.

Soul, believest thou this? If thou dost indeed, what remains but that thou shouldst live a life of love and praise; studying to do all the good thou canst till thou come to Heaven; and waiting all the days of thine appointed time till thy change shall come. O my Soul, look out and long. O my Brethren, be you as the Mother of Sisera, looking out at the Windows, and watching at the Latices, saying, why are his Chariot-wheels so long a coming. Though the time till you shall see him be but very short, yet love and longing make it seem tedious.

My Beloved, comfort your hearts with these Words: look upon these things as the greatest realities, and let your affections be answerable to your expectations. I would not have told you these things, unless I had believed them: for it is for this hope that I am bound with this Chain. The blessing of the Holy Trinity be upon you, I am yours and will be. The God of Peace be with you, I rest LETTER XXVIII. [Of the Love of Christ.] To his most endeared Friends, the servants of God in Taunton, Salvation.

Most dearly Beloved,

METHinks my Breasts are not easy, unless I do let them forth unto you. Methings there is something still to do, and my Weeks work is not ended, unless I have given my Soul vent, and imparted something to the Beloved flock that I have left behind And Oh, that my Letters in my absence might be useful to you! Assuredly it is my joy to serve you, and my love to you is without dissimulation: witness my twice lost liberties, and my impaired health, all which I might have preserved, had it not been for my readiness to minister to you.

But what do I speak of my love? it is the sense of the infinite love of God your Father that I would have to dwell upon you. Forget me, so you remember him. Let me be very little, so he be very lovely in your eyes. Let him be as the Bucket that goes up, though I be as the Bucket that goes down. Bury me, so that you do but set the Lord always before you. Let my name be written in the dust, so his Name be written deep up all your Souls

O Lord, I am thy Servant, truly I am thy servant, Glorify thine own Name by me, and thou shalt have my hand to it, that I will be content to be hid in obscurity, and to disappear through the overcoming luster and brightness of thy Glory.

Brethren, understand mine Office, I Preach not myself, but the Lord Jesus Christ, and myself your Servant for Jesus sake. Give him your hearts, and I have my Errand I am but the Friend of the Bridegroom, and my business is, but to give you to understand his love, and to gain your hearts unto him. He is an Object worthy of my Commendations, and of your affections. His Love is worth the writing of, and worth the thinking of, and worth the speaking of. O my Brethren, never forge•..., I beseech you, how he loveth you. He is in Heaven, and you are on Earth; he is in Glory and you in Rags; he is in the shining Throne, a•...d you in dirty flesh, and yet he loveth you. His heart is infinitely tender of you, even now while he is at the right hand of the Majesty on High. How feelingly doth he cry out at the hurt of his poor Members on Earth? Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me! Oh, of what quick sense is the sense of our dear Lord unto us! when we are touched on Earth he feels it in Heaven.

Brethren, Christ is real in all that he speaks unto you: He is not like a flourishing Lover, who fills up his Letters with Rhetoric, and hath more care of the dress of his Speech, than of the Truth. Who ever gave demonstration of the reality of his love at so dear a rate as Christ hath done? Men do not use to die in jest: Who will impoverish himself to enrich his Friend? and divest himself of his honor to advance him? and debase himself to admiration below his own degree to contract affinity with him? and all this but to make him believe that he loves him.

Brethren, possess your very hearts with this, that Christ's love doth go out with infinite dearness towards you. Even now while he is in all his Glory, he earnestly remembers you still. This is the High Priest that now is entered into the Holy of Holies, doth bear your names particularly, remembering every poor believer by name. He bears your names, but where?

upon his Brest-plate, upon his heart, saith the Text, Exod. 28. 29. Ah Christians, I may salute you as the Angel did Mary, Hail you that are highly favored: Bless•...d are you among men. Sure your Lot is fallen in an happy place; what in the bosom of Christ? yea, and verily you may believe, and doubt not. I may apply that of Gabriel, O Daniel, though•... art greatly beloved, unto you; you are beloved indeed, to have your Names written upon the very heart of Christ now he is in Glory.

Oh, let his Name be written then on your hearts. Do not write his Name in the Sand, when he hath written yours upon his own Brest! Do not forget him who hath taken such care, that while he is, he may never forget you, having recorded your names not only on his Book, but on his Flesh, and set you as a Seal upon his heart. He hath you upon his heart, but why? For a memorial before the Lord continually, so saith the Text. Beloved, your Lord is so far from forgetting you in all his Greatness and Glory, that he is gone into Heaven on purpose, there to present you before the Lord, that you may be always in remembrance before him O Beloved, Glory, yea, and Triumph in his love; Doubtless it must go well with us. Who shall condemn? It is Christ that died, and rose again, and is now making Intercession. His interest is potent. He is always present. Our Advocate is never out of Court. Never did cause miscarry in his hand. Trust you safely in him. Happy is that man for whom he shall undertake to speak.

Oh, the Riches of Christ's love! he did not think it enough to die for you. His love and care doth not end with his natural life on Earth, but he ever liveth to make Intercession for us. His love is like his life, ever, ever: knowing no remission in degree, nor intermission of time, no cessation of working, but is ever, ever, in motion towards us.

But when shall I end, if I suffer my soul to run out its length, and my running Pen te enlarge according to the dimensions of this boundless Field of Divine Love? If the Pens of all the World were employed to write Volumes of love, if the tongues of all the living were exercised in nothing else but talking of this love; If all the Hearts that be were made up of love; and all the powers and affections of the mind were turned into one, to wit the power of love, yet this were no less than infinitely too little, either to conceive, or to express the greatness of Christ's love.

O my dearly beloved, may your souls be swallowed up in this love. Think, and think while you will, you can never think how much you are beloved. See that ye love again by way of Gratitude, though not of Requital: what though your souls be but narrow, and your powers but little, yet love him with all you have. Love him with all your hearts, and all your strength. To the Meditations, and to the Embraces of Divine love I leave you, thinking it now not worth while to tell you of my Love, Remaining

Yours in the bonds of your most dear Lord Jesus, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER. XXIX. [Warning t•... Professors of their Danger.] To the Beloved •...ople, the Inhabitants of the Town of <...> , Grace and Peace.

Most dear <...> .

MY <...> my beloved is mine and I am his: but <...> •...ave no joy so great as that you are mine and I <...> •...ou are Christ's. My Relation to Christ is abo•... <...> life and my peace, my riches, and my righteo•... <...> my hope and my strength, and mine Inheritance, <...> •...ying: In him will I please myself forever, and <...> will I glory. I esteem myself most happy and rich, and safe in him, though of myself I am nothing. In him I may boast without Pride, and glory without vanity. Here is no danger of being over much pleased; neither can the Christian exceed his bounds in overvaluing his own riches, and happiness in Christ. I am greatly pleased with the Lot that is fallen to me: the Lord hath dealt bountifully with me, and none shall stop this my confidence of boasting in Christ. But as my lot in him is above all, so I will assure you, it is no small content to me, that my lot is fallen with you. And though many difficulties have fallen to my lot among you (for I have broken my health and lost my liberty once and again, for your sakes) yet none of these things move me. I wish nothing more then to spend and to be spent upon the service of your Faith. I bless the Lord for it as an invaluable mercy, that ever he called me to be an Ambassador of the Lord Jesus Christ to you-wards. In this station I desire to approve myself to him, and that I am withdrawn from my Work for a season, it is but that I may return to you refreshed, and enabled for my work among you. You may not think that I have forgotten you, and consulted my own ease and pleasure: but if God prosper my intentions, I shall be found to have been daily serving you in this retirement. I will assure you, I am very tender of preserving all that little strength that God doth add to me entirely for your sakes: being resolved not so much as once to broach the Vessel till I draw forth to you. I bless the Lord, I am in great tranquility here in this Town, and walk up & down the Corporation without any Questioning me. Only it hath pleased the Lord to add to my Affliction since my coming, by taking away my dear Father, the day of whose glorious Translation was the day after my arriving here. But I bless the Lord, I do believe and expect the return of the Redeemer with all his Saints, and the most glorious Resurrection of my own dead Body with all Believers: and this makes me to rest in Hope, and fills me with unspeakle more Joy than the death of myself or any other Saint can with grief. And now I make it my business to be rendered serviceable to you; and do by this, return you my hearty thanks for your earnest Prayers and Intercessions to God in my behalf, for it is he that must do the Cure: I seem to myself to be retired to this place, as a Vessel rent and shattered and torn in the Service, that it come to recruit in the Harbour: And here I am as it were rigging, and repairing, and Victualling to put forth again in the Service: which I shall do with the first Wind, as soon as I am ready. What is my life u•...less I am serviceable? And though I must for the present forbear my wonted Labor, yet I shall not cease to exhort you, and call upon you while I am absent from you, to stand sast, and to grow up in your holy Faith.

Be warned, my dearly Beloved, that you fall not upon those dangerous Rocks upon which so many Professors have been split.

There are three things which I beseech you carefully to beware of.

First, Lest while Christ is in your mouths, the world run away with your hearts: There is many a seeming Professor that will be found a mere Idolater? Many a Soul goes down to Hell in this sin, in the midst of his Profession, and never discerns it till it be too late. Remember, I beseech You, that the Oxen, the Farm, Wife, Merchandize, all of them lawful Comforts, did effectually keep men from a sound and saving closing with Christ, as the vilest lusts of the worst of men. Whatever you find your hearts very much pleased in, and in love with, among these earthly Comfo•...ts, set a mark upon that thing, and remember that there lies your greatest dan•...r. What you love most, you must fear most; and think of•...en wi•...h yourselves, This, if anything is like to be my 〈...〉 multitudes of Professors that perish forever, by 〈...〉 •...and of this mortal Enemy, I mean the overval•...ing of Earthly things. The hearers compared to the thorn•... Ground, did not openly fall away and cast off their Profession, as the stony ground did; but while others withered away, the blade of Profession was as green and fresh as ever; and yet their inordinate a•...ection to the things of this life, did secretly undo all at last. Little do most Professors think of this, while they please themselves in their estates, while they delight themselves so freely in their Children, in their Wives, in their habitations and possessions; that these be the things that •...re like to undo them forever. How little is that Scripture thought of, which speaks so dreadfully to worldly Professors; Love not the World, for if any man love the World, the Love of the Father is not in him. Are there not many among us, who though they do keep up Prayer, and other holy Duties; yet the strength and vigor of their hearts goeth out after earthly things? And these are their chief care and their chief joy. Such must know, that they are none of Christ's, and they were better to understand it now, and seek to be renewed by Repentance, then hereafter when there shall be no place for Repentance.

2. Lest while Iniquity doth abound, your love to Christ doth wax cold. Remember what an Abomination Laodicea was to Christ because she grew so luke-warm; and what a controversy he had with Ephesus, a sound Church, because she did but flacken and grow more remiss in her love. A friend is born for adversity; and now is, the time, if you will prove the sincerity of your love and friendship to Jesus Christ, by following him zealously, resolvedly, sully, now he is more rejected and opposed.

Thirdly, Lest you keep up a barren and fruit•...ss Profession, with•...ut Progression: See to it my Brethren, that you be not only Professors, but proficiencie: Many Professors think all is well because they keep on in the exercises of Religion; but alas! You may keep on praying, a•...d hearing all the Week long, and yet be not one jot the further. Many there are that kee•... going, but it is like the Horse in the Mill, that is going all day, but yet is no further than when he first began. Nay, it oft times happens in the Trade of Religion, as it doth in trading in the World, where many keep on in trading still, till for want of care and caution, and examining their accounts whether they go forward or backward, they trade themselves out of all. Oh, look to it my Brethren, that none of you rest in the doing of duties, but examine what comes of them. Otherwise as you may trade yourselves into Poverty, so you may hear and pray yourselves into hardness of heart, and desperate security, and formality. This was the very case of wretched Laodicia, who kept up the trade of religious duties, and verily thought that all was well, because the trade still went on, and that she was increased in spiritual goods, and in a gaining way: but when her accounts were cast up at last, all comes to nothing, and ends in wretchedness, poverty, and nakedness. Most dear Brethren, I wish and pray for the prosperity of you all: but above all, I wish your Souls prosperity, with which, after my most dear Loves to you all, having already exceeded the bounds of an Epistle, I commend you to the living God, Remaining LETTER. XXX. [An Admiration of the Love of God.] To the most Loving, and best Beloved, the servants of God in Taunton, Salvation.

My most dear Friends,

I Love you, and long for you in the Lord, and I am weary with forbearing that good and blessed work that the Lerd hath committed to me, for the surtherance of your Salvation. How long Lord, how long shall I dwell in silen•...! How long shall my Tongue cleave to the Roo•... of my Mouth! When will God open my Lips, that I may stand up and praise him? But it is my Fathers good pleasure yet to keep me in a total disability of publishing his Name among you; unto him my Soul shall patiently subscribe. I may not, I cannot complain that he is hard to me, or useth me with Rigour: I am full of the Mercies of the Lord, yea, Brimful and running over, And shall I complain? Far be it from me.

But though I may not murmur, me•...hinks I may mourn a little, and sit down and wish, O if I may not have a Tongue to speak, would I had but Hands to Write, that I might from my Pen drop some heavenly Councils to my Beloved People. Methinks my feeble Fingers do even Itch to Write unto you, but it cannot be, alas my right-hand seems to have forgot her cunning, and hath much ado with trembling to lift the Bread unto my Mouth. Do you think you should have had so little to show under my Hand, to bear Witness of my Care for You, and love to you if God had not shock my Pen as it were out of my Hand? Bu•... all that he doth is done well, and wisely, and therefore I submit. I have purposed to borrow Hands wherewith to write unto my Beloved, rather than to be silent any longer.

But where shall I begin, or when should I end? If I think to speak of the Mercies of God towards me, or mine enlarged affections towards you, methinks I feel already how strait this Paper is like to be, and how insignificant my Expressions will be found, and how insufficient all that I can say will prove at last to utter what I have to tell you; but shall I say nothing because I cannot utter all, this must not be neither.

Come then all ye that fear the Lord, come and I well tell you what he hath done for my Soul. O help me to love that precious Name of his, which is above all my Praises. O love the Lord all ye his Saints, and fear before him! magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his Name together! he hath remembered my low estate, because his Mercy endureth forever. O blessed be you of the Lord, my dearly Beloved, O thrice blessed may you be for all your remembrances of me before the Lord, you have wrestled with the Lord for me, you have wrestled me out of the very Jaws of Death itself: O the strength of Prayer! Surely it is stronger than death. See that you even honor the power and Prevalen•... of Prayer: Oh be in love with Prayer, and have high and venerable thoughts of it. What distresses, diseases. Deaths can stand before it? Surely I live by Prayer, Prayer hath given a Resurrection •...o this Body of mine, when Physicians, and friends had given up their hopes.

Ah my dearly Beloved, methinks it delights me to tell the story of your love, how much more of the love of God towards me. I have not forgotten, O my dearly Beloved, I have not forgotten your tender love in all my distresses. I remember your kindness to me in my Bonds, when once and again I was delivered up to a Prison for your sakes. I remember with much delight, how you refreshed and comforted me in my Tribulations, how open your hearts were, and your hands were not straightened neither, for I was in want of nothing I may not, I must not forget what painful Journies you took to visit me, when in places remote the hand of the Lord had touched me, and though my long sickness almost incredible expensive to me, yet your Supplies did not a little lighten my Burthen.

And though I put it last, yet I do not mind it least, that you have been so ready in returning Praises to God in my behalf, your thanksgiving to God, my dear Brethren, do administer abundant cause to me of my giving thanks unto you.

And now my heart methinks is big to tell you a little of my love to you surely you are dear unto me; but though it be sweet to tell the story of love, yet in this I will restrain my s•...lf For I fear least as the wise man saith of the beginning of strife, so I should find of the beginning of love, that it is like the letting forth of the Water; and the rather I do •...orbear, because I hope you have better Testimonies than Words, to bear witness here unto you.

But if I sing the song of love, O let Divine Love overcarry the praise; I found myself in straights when I began to speak of the natural love between my dear people, and an unworthy Minister of Christ to them; and it seemed that all that I have said was much too little, but now I have to speak of the love God, it seems to be by far too much.

O infinite love never to be Comprehended, but ever to be admired, magnified, and adored by every Creature! O let my heart be filled, let my Mouth be filled, let my papers be filled ever, ever filled with the thankful Commemoration of this matchless love. O turn your eyes from other objects! O bury me in forgetfulness, and let my love be no more mentioned nor had in remembrance among you, so that you may be thoroughly possessed and inflamed with the love of God. This, my Beloved, this is that love which is ever to be commended, and extolled by you. See that you study this love, fill your souls with wonder, and feast your souls with joy, and be ravished with rich contentment in this Divine Love: Take your daily walk, and lose yourselves in the Field of Love: Drink, O Friends, yea drink abundantly, O Beloved, fear no excess. O that your souls may be drenched and drowned in the love of Christ, till you can everyone say with the ravished Spouse, I am sick of love. Marvel not that I wander here, and seem to forget the bounds of a Letter, this love obligeth me, yea, rather constraineth me. Who in all the Earth should admire and commend this love if I should not? I feel it, I taste it, the sweet savor thereof reviveth my soul, it is light to mine eyes, and life to mine heart; the warm Beams of this blessed Sun, O how have they comsorted me, ravished, and refreshed me both in Body and Soul! my benumbed Limbs, my withered hands, my feeble knees, my bones quite naked of flesh do yet again revive through the quickening, healing, and raising influence of Divine Grace and Love. Now my own hands can feed me, and my own seat can bear me, my appetite is quick, my sleep comfortable, and God is pleased to give some increase continually though by insensible Degrees; and shall not I praise that love and grace that hath done all this for me? yea, what is this to all I have to tell you? My heart is enlarged, but I told you Paper could not hold what I have to speak of the goodness of the AllGracious God, in which I live. I am forced to end, lest you should not bear my length. My dearly Beloved, I send my heart unto you, divide my love amongst you all, and particularly tender it to your Reverend and Faithful Pastor, whose presence with you, and painfulness, and watchfulness over you, and Zeal and courage for you in so dangerous a time, is matter of my great Joy and Thanksgivings unto God. The grace of our Lord Jesus be with you all. Fare you well in the Lord, I remain

Your unworthy Minister and servant Well-wisher in the Lor•..., JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER XXXI. To the most Beloved People, the Servants of God in Taunton, Salvation.

Most dearly Beloved and longed for, my Joy and Crown,

MY hearts desire and Prayer for you is, that you may be saved. This is that which I have been Praying and studying, and Preaching for these many Years; and this is the end of my Venturing, and Suffering, and Writing at this present time. God that knoweth all things, he knoweth that this is my wish; Oh that I could but come at their Souls! And that this is the prize and the gain that I run for, that I might win souls. I seek not other gifts, give me your hearts, let me but part between your sins and you; suffer me but to save you; give me leave to carry you over to Jesus Christ, and I will not ask you anymore. I will serve you gladly, I will suffer for you thankfully, so I may but save you. Do not wonder why I follow you so pressingly, why I call upon you so frequently; let not my importunity be grievous to you, all this is but to save you. Christ did not bethink his Blood, and shall I think my Breath, or Ink, too dear in order to your salvation? what pity is it, that any of you should miscarry at last, under the power of Ignorance, or by a profane negligence, or a formal and lifeless profession of strict Godliness.

Beloved, I am afraid of you lest (as to many of you) I have run in vain. I cannot but most thankfully acknowledge, that (considering the paucity of those that are saved) there are not a few of you who are the joy of your Ministers, and the Glory of Christ. But it cannot be dissembled, that far the greater number give little ground to hope, that they are in the state of Salvation. And must not this be a pinching thought to a compassionate Teacher, to think, that he cannot for his heart persuade men, but that the most of them will willfully throw away themselves? Is it not a wosul sight, to behold the Devils driving a great part of our miserable Flocks (as they did once the Herd of Swine, the Keepers themselves amazed looking on.) I say, driving them violently down the hill, till they be choked in the Water, and drowned irrecoverably in the Gulf of endless Perdition? Ah mserable spectacle! What through the willful blindness of some, what through the loseness and sensuality of others, what through the halving, and Cold, and customary Religion of others, how great a number of our poor Flocks, is Satan like to carry utterly away from us, after all that hath been done to save them?

Yet I cannot but call after them. Hearken unto me, O ye Children. How long will ye love Vanity, and follow after leasing, and trust in lying Words? As the Lord liveth you are lost, except you turn: Wherefore turn yourselves and live ye. Ah how Mercy wooeth you! How it waiteth to be gracious to you? Hear, O sinners, hear. See you not how the merciful Savior of the World stretcheth forth his hands all the day long, and spreadeth forth his Wings, and calleth you as a Hen doth her Chickens! hear you not the soundings of his Bowels? He had no need of you; Yet how do his compassions melt over perishing sinners? his heart is turned within him, and shall not this turn your hearts? his repentings are kindled together; and shall not this lead you to repentance? Behold, he standeth at the door and knocketh. O man wilt thou keep •...esus at the door, and lodge Barabbas in thy bosom? and prefer thy cruel Lusts before thy Compassionate Lord? Oh his melting love to sinners! He calleth after them, Isa. 55. 1. He weepeth over them, Luke 19. 41, 42. He crieth to them, Prov. 1. 21, 22, 23. How long ye simple ones, will you love simplicity? Will you not be made clean? When shall it once be? Why will you die? Turn you at my Reproof: Behold, I will pour out my Spirit upon you. Sinner, art thou not yet melted? Oh come in at his loving Calls, Come out from thy sins: Touch the Scepter of Grace and live: Why shouldst thou be dashed in pieces by his Iron Rod? Kiss the Son: Why shouldst thou perish in the way? Set up Jesus as thy King, lest he count thee sor •...is Enemy, because thou wouldst not that he should Reign over thee, and so thou be called forth and slain before him. Oh how dreadful will this Case be, to perish under the pitiful Eyes of his Mercy, and to die by the hand of a Savior! Oh double hell, to have thy Redeemer become thine Executioner! And the hand that was so long stretched forth to save thee, to be now stretched forth to slay thee! And the merciful heart of Christ himself hardened against thee, so as that he should call thee forth, and with his own hand hew thee in pieces, (as Samuel did Agag before the Lord.)

But I have been too too long in prefacing to what I intended forthwith to have fallen upon: Indeed I am apt to run out in matters that do so nearly touch upon your greatest Concernments.

Beloved, I despair of ever bringing you to Salvation, without Sanctification: Or possessing You with Happiness, without persuading you to Holiness. God knows I have not the least hope ever to see one of your Faces in Heaven, except You be Converted and Sanctified, and exercise yourselves unto Godliness. This is that I drive at. I beseech you study to further Personal Godliness, and Family Godliness.

1. Personal Godliness. Let it be your first care to set up Christ in your Hearts. See that you make all your worldly Interests to stoop to him, that You be entirely and unreservedly devoted unto him. If You willfully, and deliberately, and ordinarily harbor any sin, You are undone. See that You unfeignedly take the Laws of Christ, as the rule of your words, thoughts, and actions; and subject •...our whole man, members and mind faithfully to him. If You ha•...e a true respect to all God's Commandments, you are sound at heart. Oh study to get the Image and impress of Christ upon you within. Begin with your hearts, else you build without a foundation. Labor to get a saving change within, or else all external performances will be to no purpose. And then study to show forth the power of Godliness in the life. Let Piety be your first and great business. 'Tis the highest point of Justice, to give God his due. Beware that none of you be a Prayerless person: for that is a most certain discovery of a Christless, and a graceless person, of one that is a very stranger to the fear of God. Suffer not your Bibles to gather dust. See that you converse daily with the Word. That man can never lay claim to Blessedness, whose delight is not in the Law of the Lord. Let ...editation and self-examination be your daily exercise, else the Papists, yea the Pagans, will condemn us. That the short questions, which I have given you as a help to self-examination, may be daily perused by you, is the matter of my passionate request unto you. If ever you come to any growth in Holiness, without the constant use of ...his practice, I am grossly deceived. And therefore I would beseech, yea, even charge you, by the Lord, that you would daily examine yourselves by these questions, till you have found a better help to this duty.

But Piety, without Charity, is but the half of Christia...y, or rather impious Hypocrisy, We may not divide the Tables. See therefore that you do justly, and love mercy, and let Equity, and Charity run like an even Thred, throughout all your dealings. Be you temperate in all things, and let Chastity, and and Sobriety, be your undivided Companions. Let truth and Purity, Seriousness and modesty, Heavenliness and gravity be the constant ornaments of your speech. Let patience and humility, simplicity & sincerity shine out in all the parts of your conversations. See that you sorget & sorgive wrongs, and requi...e them with kindness as you would be found children of the most high. Be merciful in your Censures, and put the most favorable construction upon our Brethren's carriage that their actions will reasonably bear. ...e slow in promising. punctual in fulfilling. Let meekness and in...ocency, Affableness, Yieldingness, and Curt...sie, come...end your conversations to all men. Let none of your Relations want that love and loyalty, that reverence and duty, that tenderness, care, and vigilancy, which their several places and capacities call for. This is throughout Godliness. I charge you before the most high God, that none of you be found a swearer, or a Lyar, a lover of evil company, or a scoffer, or malicious, or covetous, or a drunkard, or a glutton, unrighteous in his dealing, unclean in his living, ...r a quarreller, or a thief, or backbiter, or a railer: for I denounce unto you from the living God, that destruction and damnation is the end of all such, Prov. 13. 20. Jam. 5. 12. Rev. 21. 8. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21.

2. Family Godliness. He that hath set up Christ in his heart, will be sure to study to set him up in his house. Let every family with you be a Christian Church; every house, a house of Prayer; every household a household of saith. Let every householder say, with Joshua, I, with my House will serve the Lord, and resolve with David, Psalm 121. 2. I will walk within my house, with a perfect heart. Let me press upon you a few duties, which I have been long harping upon, but Alas (I speak it to your shame) with many (too too many) of you, to little purpose in general.

First, Let Religion be in your Families, not as a matter by the by, (to be minded at leisure, when the world will give you leave) but the standing business of the house. Let them have your prayers as duly as their meals, is there any of your family... , but have time for their taking food? wretched man! canst thou find time to eat in, and not time to Pray in?

Secondly, Settle it upon your Hearts, that your Souls are bound up in the Souls of your Family. They are committed unto you, and (if they be lost through your neglect) will be required at your hands; Sirs, if you do not, you shall know that the charge of Souls is a heavy charge, and that the Blood of Souls is a heavy guilt. O man, hast thou a charge of Souls to answer for, and dost thou not yet bestir thyself for them, that their Blood be not found in thy Skirts? Wilt thou do no more for immortal Souls, than thou wilt do for thy Beasts that perish? What dost thou do for thy Children, and Servants? Thou providest Meat and Drink for them, agreeable to their Natures, and dost thou not the same for thy Beasts? Thou givest them Medicines, and cherishest them when they be sick, and dost thou not so much for thy Swine? More particularly.

1. Let the solemn Reading of the Word, Isa. 34. 16. John 5. 31. and singing of Psalms, be your Family Exercises, Psalms 118. 15. See Christ singing with his Family, viz. his Disciples, Mat. 26. 30. Luke 9. 18.

2. Let every p...rson in your Families be duly called to an account of their profiting by the word h...rd or read, as they be about doing your own ⟨...⟩ . This is a duty of consequence unspeakable, and would be a means to bring those under your Charge, to remember and prosit by what they receive. See Chirsts Example in calling ...is Family to an account. Mat. 16. 11. 13. 15.

33. Often take an account of the Souls under your care concerning their Spiritual estates Herein you must be Followers of Christ, Mat. 13. 10, 36, 51. Mar... 4. 10, 11. Make enquiry into their conditions, insist much upon the sinfulness and misery of their natural estate, a...d upon the necessity of Regeneration and Conversion in order to their Salvation. Admonish them gravely of their sins, encourage beginnings. Follow them earnestly, and let them have no quiet for you, till you see them in a saving change. This is a duty of high consequence, but (I am afraid) fearfully neglected by some that are Godly. Doth not Conscience say, Thou art the man?

4. Look to the strict sanct...fying of the Sa...bath, by all of your H...holds, Exod. 20. 10. Lev. 23. 3. Many poor Families have little time else. O improve but your Sabbath-days as diligently in laboring for knowledge, and doing your Makers work, as You do the other days in doing your own work, and I doubt not, but you may come to some proficiencie.

5. Let the Morning and Evening Sacrifice of s...lemn Prayer, be daily offered up. in all your Families. Psal. 92. 1, 2. Exod. 30. 7, 8. •...L...ke 1. 9, 10. Beware they be not found among the Families that call not upon God's Name; sor why should there be wrath from the Lord upon your Families? Jer. 10. 25. O miserable Families without God in the World, that are without Family Prayer! What have you so many Family fins, Family wants, Family Mercies, what and yet no Family Prayers? How do you pray with all Prayer and Supplication, if You do not with Family

Prayer? Say not, I have no time. What hast thou all thy time on purpose to serve God, and save thy Soul, and is this that for which thou canst find no time. Find but a heart, and I will find time. Pinch out of your meals and sleep, rather than want for Prayer. Say not my business will not give leave. This is thy greatest business, to save thyself, and the Souls committed to thee. Besides a whet will be no let. In a word, the blessing of all is to be got by Prayer, Jer. 29. 11, 12. 2 Sam. 7. 29. And what is thy business without God's Blessing? Say not, I am not able. Use thy one Talent, and God will increase it, Mat. 25. 24. &c. Helps are to be had till thou art better able. But if there be no other remedy, thou mayest join with thine abler Neighbor. God hath special regard to joint Prayer..., Jam. 5. 14. to 19. Acts 12. 5. to 12. 2 Cor. 1. 11. and therefore you must improve Family advantages for the performing of it

6. Put everyone in your Families upon private Prayer. Observe whether they do perform it. Get them the help of a form, if they need it, till they are able to go without. Direct them how to Pray, by minding them of their sins, w...nts, and mercies, the materials of Prayer. This was the practice of John, and of Jesus, Luke 11. 1, 2.

7. Set up Catechizing in your Families, at the least once every Week. It was my parting, dying request, that you would set up and maintain this duty in your Families. Have You done it all accordingly? Cannot your consciences witness, cannot your families witness you have not? Well, I thought my parting words would have done something with you: I hoped the fervent request of a dying Minister, would have prevailed for such a small matter with You. What, to this day without solemn C...techizing in your houses? Ah, what a discouragement to your Teacher is this? Brethren, shall *I yet prevail with you? Will you reject me now also? O let me persuade you, before you take off your eyes from these Lines, to resolve to set upon the constant exercise of this Duty. Surely I have done and suffered more for you than this comes to: will you deny me? I beseech you, let me find, if ever God do bring me again to visit your houses, that the •...ords of a suffering Minister have some power with you. I have sent you an help on purpose: what shall all my persuasions be but speaking in the wind? and all my pains but laboring in the fire? Beloved you have no dread of the Almighty's Charge, That you should teach these things diligently to your Children, and talk of them as you sit in your hou...,&c. Deut. 6. 6, 7, 8, 9. and 4. 9, 10 and 11. 18, 19, 20. & train them up in the way they should go, Prov. 22. 6. the Margin. Hath God so commended Abraham, that he would teach his children and his household, Gen. 18. 19. and that he had so many ⟨...⟩ servants, Gen. 14. 14. the Margin hath given such a promise to him thereupon, and will not you put in for a share, neither in the praise, nor the Promise? Hath Christ honored Catechizing with his presence, Luke 2. 46. and will not you own it with your practice? Say not, they are careless, and will not learn. What have you your Authority for, if not to use it for God, and the good of their Souls? You will call them up, and force them to do your work; and should you not, at least be as zealous in put...ing them upon God's work? Say not, they are dull and are not capable If they be dull, God requires of you the more pains and patience, but so dull as they are, you will make them learn how to work; and can they not learn as well how to live! Are they capable of the mysteries of your trade, and are they not capable of the plain principles of Religion? well as ever you would see the growth of Religion, the cure of ignorance, the remedy of profaneness, the downfall of error, fulfill you my joy in going through with this duty.*

I have been too long already, and yet I am afraid my Letter will be ended before my work be done, how I...th am I to leave you, before I have prevailed with you to set to the work, to which you are here directed, will you pass your promise, will you give me your hands? Oh that you would! you cannot do me a greater pleasure. Ask what you will of me; See if I will not do as much for you. Oh that your Families might be a joy to me, as that twice noble Ladies to John; who professes he had no greater joy, then to find her Children walking in the truth! Beloved why should you not give the hand one to another, and mutually engage each to other, for more vigorous and diligent endeavors, in promoting Family Godliness. I must tell you, God looks •...or more than ordinary from you, in such a day as this. He expects that you should do, both in your hearts, and in your houses, somewhat more that ever, under these his extraordinary dispensations. My most dearly beloved minc own bowels in the Lord, will you satisfy the longings of a travelling Minister? will you answer the calls of Divine Providence? would you remove the Incumbent, or prevent the impending Calamities? would you plant Nurseries for the Church of God? would you that God should build your Houses, and bless your substance? would you that your children should bless you? that your Father should bless you? Oh, then set up piety in your Families as ever you would be blessed, or be a blessing, let your hearts and your Houses be the Temples of the living God, in which •...is worship (according to all the forementioned directions) may be, with constancy reverently performed. Pardon my pro•...xity and importunity in so earnest pursuing of you; I am yet afraid I have done too soon, and shall end without my Errand. The Lord God persuade you To him I turn me, for I am well assured, he can prevail with you:

O Father of Spirit, that hath set me over thy Flock to match for their Souls, as one that must give an account. I have long studied thy Will, and taught in thy Name, and do unfeignedly bless thee; that any have believed my Report. I have given unto them the Words which thou gavest me, and they have received them. I have manifested thy Name unto them, and they have kept thy Word. And now I am no more with them, but I come unto thee: Holy Father keep them through thine own Name; for they are thine. As they have kept the Word of thy Patience, so keep thou them in the hour of Temptation. They are but a flock a little and a helpless flock: but thou art their Shepherd, suffer them not to want. Do thou feed them, and fold them. Let thy Rod and thy Staff comfort them, and let not the Beasts of prey fall upon them, to the spoiling of their Souls.

But what shall I do for them that will not be gathered. I have called after them, but they would not answer; I have charged them in thy Name, but they would not hear; I have studied to speak persuasively to them, but I cannot prevail. Then I said, I have labored in vain; I have spent my strength for naught, and in vain, yet I cannot give them over, much less may I give thee over Lord persuade Japheth, to dwell in the Tents of Shem. Lord compel them to come in, and lay the hanas of mercy upon them, as thou didst on lingering Lot, and bring them forth, that they may escape for their lives and not be consumed. Lord, I pray thee open their eyes that they may see, and lay hold upon their hearts by thy Omnipotent Grace. Do thou turn them, and they shall be turned: O bring back the miserable Captives, and suffer not the enemy of mankind to drive away the most of the flock before mine eyes, and to deride the fruitless endeavors of thy Laborers, and boast over them, that he can do•...e with them, though he seek to ruin them, than all the beseechings, counsels, and charges of thy Servants that seek to save them. Lord, if I could find out anything that would pierce them, that would make its way into their hearts, thou knowest I would use it. But I have been many years pleading thy cause in vain. O let not these endeavors also be lost. O God, find out every ignorant, every profane sinner, every prayerless Soul, and every prayerless family, and convince them of their miserable condition, while without thee in the World. Set thy Image upon their Souls, set up thy Worship in their Families. Let not pride, ignorance, or slothfulness, keep them in neglect of the means of knowledge. Let thine eyes be over the place of my desires for good, from one end of the year to the other end thereof. Let every House therein be a Seminary of Religion, and let those that cast their eyes upon these lines, find thee sliding in by the secret influence of thy Grace into their hearts, and irresistibly engaging them to do thy pleasure. Amen, Amen.

LETTER. XXXII. [He that endureth to the end shall be saved.] To the most loving, and best beloved, the Servants of Christ in Huntington, Grace and Peace.

Most dear Christians,

I Do thankfully acknowledge, both to God and you, that I am many ways obliged to love, and serve you; and surely, when the Lord shall turn our Captivity, I will (through his Grace) endeavor to show myself thankful, wherein I may unto you. I am the more sensible of your great love, because I cannot be insensible, how little I have deserved such a Mercy, and how little I have been able to do, to oblige you. Able, I say, for I am sure. I have been willing to be much more serviceable to you: But now, Letters and Prayers are all that I have for you; of these I shall be ready to be prodigal. Your love to me hath been very bountiful: I may not forget the liberal Supplies that you have sent, many of you, even out of your poverty to me; and not to me only, but to the whole Family of my Brethren, and FellowPrisoners, who do all bless you, and send by these with me, their thankful respects unto you. I fervently pray, and do not doubt to speed, that you may reap in Grace and Glory, what you have sown to us in bounty. Verily, there is a reward for the Righteous. Ah, how sure is it! And how great and how near is it? Come on, my dear Brethren, and Fellow-Travelers Stir up yourselves, and set to your race. See that you loiter not, but speed apace in your holy course. What mire by the way, or think of looking back, when Heaven is the prize? God forbid. To him that soweth righteousness here shall be a sure reward. What though it should seem slow? As long as it is so sure, and so great, never be discouraged: In the end you shall reap, if you faint not. Wait but a while, and you shall have a blessed harvest. The Lord speaks <...> the Christian, as he to his Creditor in another case. Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. Oh now or Faith and Patience! How safely, how sweetly would these carry us to our home and harbor, through all difficulties. Brethren beloved, be ye followers of them, who through <...> and Patience inherit the Promises. It is want of patience that undoes the world. Patience, I mean, not so much <...> the bearing the inflicted evil, as in waiting for the deserved good. If the reward of Religion would be presently in hand, who would not be Religious? Who but the deceitful world count it doubtful and distant; and they are all for something in hand, and so take up with a present felicity. The Lord deals all upon trust, and upon that account is but little dea...t with. You must have patient, and be content to plow and sow, and wait for the return of all at the harvest, when this life is ended They that like not Religion upon these terms, may see where they can mend their Markets. But you, my Brethren, be steadfast, immovable, abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as you know your labor shall not be in vain in the Lord. Wait a little, there is but a short life between you, and the blessed inheritance of the endless Glory. Ah wretched unbelievers! how worthy are you to be shut forever out of the Kingdom, that did so undervalue all the Glory, that God had promised, as not to count to sufficient to pay them for a little waiting? Beloved, lift. up your eyes and behold your Inheritance, the good Land that is beyond the Jordan, and that goodly Mountain. The Promises are a Map of Heaven. Do but view it believingly and considerately, as it is darkly drawn there, and tell me, what think you of that worthy portion, that goodly Heritage? will not all this make you amends for your stay? Why then act like Believers. Never bethink the pains, nor expenses of Religion. Let no man fear he shall come off a loser. What though you are much upon the spending hand? I might tell you, God is beforehand with you however: but I would have you principally to look forward. It is much that God hath [laid out] upon you; but who can tell what he hath [laid up] for them that fear him? And will you miss of all, for want of patience? God sorbid. Behold the Husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the Earth, and hath long patience, till he receive the early and later rain. Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. What shall the Husbandman have more patience for the fruits of the Earth, than you for the precious fruits of your Faith? The Husbandman hath no such certainty as you: he hath but a probability of an harvest, and yet he hath p...ience; he is content to venture. He is at great pains, and much cost, he is still laying out, and hath nothing coming in, and yet he is content to wait for his rei...bursement, till the Corn be grown. But your harvest is most sure, as sure as the irrevocable Decree, the infallible promise, the immuta...le Oath of a God, a God that cannot lie, that knows no place for Repentance, can make it. Again, the Husbandman hath no such increase to look for as you. Oh, if he were but sure, that every Corn would bear a Crown with what exaltation and joy, rather than patience, would he go through all his cost and labor. Why, Brethren, such is a Believers increase. Every Grain shall produce a Crown; and every Tear shall bring forth a Pearl; and every minute in pains or Prayers, an age of Joy and Glory. Besides, the Husbandman hath long patience, and will not you have a little patience? It is not long patience th...t God doth expect of you: for behold, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Will the Garrison yield when relief is at hand? Or the Merchant sit down and give up his hopes, when within sight of the Harbour? Or will the Husband man despond, and give up all for lost, when he sees the Fields even white for the Harvest? Or shall he do more for a crop of Corn, than you will do for a crop of Glory? far be it. Behold the Judge is even at Door. The Lord is at hand. He cometh quickly, and his reward is with him. He comes with the Crown in his hand, to set upon the head of patience. Therefore cast not away your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. The Prisoners of the Lord, your Brethren in the patience of Jesus, can tell you, it is good suffering for such a Master. We must tell you, as they said to our Lord in another case, He is worthy for whom you should do this. God is beyond measure gracious to us h...re. He shines bright into our prison, blessed be his Name. He waters us from Heaven, and Earth. As we trust, you forgot not the poor Prisoners, when you pray, so we would that many thanksgivings should abound in our behalf. And Prayer being the only Key that can open our Prisons, we trust that you will not slack, nor let your hands be heavy, but pray and not faint: and doubtless Prayer will do it. But I am apt to pass the bounds of a Letter, yet I promise myself now an easy pardon for so loving a trespass. With my dear Loves to you all, I commend you to God, and the Word of his Grace. Though I have done writing, yet not praying. I will promise, where my Letter ends, my Prayers shall begin. Farewell dear Brethren: Fare you well in the Lord, I am LETTER XXXIII. [For Perseverance.] To my dear Friends the Servants of Christ in Luppit, Salvation.

Beloved Christians,

HAVING taken up a Resolution to Write to, and to endeavor to confirm all the Places, where I have gone up and down Preaching the Kingdom of God, You were by no means to be omitted. You were the People that were last upon my heart, before my taking up, and had I not been made a Prisoner, I think I had in a few hours after the time of my Apprehension been with you. Now I can no way but by Prayers, Letters, and Councils visit you; and so have sent these, to let you know, that you are upon my Heart, and that your Welfare is dear unto me. I bless the Lord to hear that his Work doth not cease among you. It is the Joy of our Bonds, Beloved, to hear that the Word is not bound, and that Satan hath not his design upon the People of God, who doubtless intended by these Sufferings to have struck Terror into them, and to have made their Hands weak. Know, dear Christians, that the Bonds of the Gospel are not tedious through Grace unto us, that Christ is a Master worth a suffering for, that there is really enough in Religion to defray all our Charges, to quit all the Cost and Expence you can be at in or upon it; That you may Build upon it that you can never be losers by Jesus Christ, that Christ's Prison is better than the Worlds Paradise, that the Divine Attributes are alone an All-sufficient Livelihood, that the Influences of Heaven, and shines of God's Countenance are sufficient to lighten the darksomest Dungeon, and to perfume and sweeten the noisomest Prison to a poor Believer; that if you can bring Faith and Patience, and the Assurance of the Divine Favor with you to a Prison, you will live comfortably in spite of Earth & Hell. These are Truths that the Prisoners of Christ can in a measure Seal unto; and I would have you to be more soundly assured of, and established in. Brethren we are of the same mind in a Prison, that we were as in the Pulpit; that there is no life to a life of Holiness; that Christ, and his Yoak, and his Cross, are worthy of all acceptance; that it is the best, and wisest, and safest and gainfulllest course in the World to stick close to Christ and his Ways, and to adhere to them in all hazards. Come on, Beloved Christians, come on, slack not your pace, but give diligence to the full assurance of Hope unto the end, and be ye followers of them who through Faith and Patience inherit the Promises. Strengthen the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees. If you faint in the day of Adversity, your strength is small. Chear up, my Brethren, look what a Crown, what a Kingdom here is; What say you? Is not here a worthy Portion, a goodly Heritage? Were it not pity to lose all this for want of Diligence and Patience? Come, dear Christians, and fellow Travelers, I pray you, let us put on: Pluck up the weary Limbs, our Home is within sight. Lift up your Eyes from the Pisga of the Promises: You may see the Land of Rest. Will any of you think of returning into Egypt? God forbid: A little patience, and Christ will come. Behold, the Husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the Earth, and hath long patience till he receive the early and later Rain: Be ye also patient, stablish your Hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. He is not a Christian indeed, that cannot be content to tarry for his Preferment in another World. Cast upon it, my Brethren, that your Kingdom is not of this World; that here you must have Tribulations, and that all is well as long as we are secured for Eternity. Exhort one another daily: strive together in Prayer, unite your strength therein, and pull a main: Mercy will come sooner or later, however we will be content to wait till the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Ah how surely will he come! He will render Tribulation to them that trouble us, and to us that are troubled, rest with him. Only believe and wait: What not watch with him one hour? Why the Judge is even at the door! And how blessed will you be if you do but continue and hold fast till he come! Watch therefore, and stand fast, quit you like men, be Zealous, and let your hearts be strong: God is your Friend, and you may trust him. He is able to bear you out, and bear you up: faint not therefore, but be steadfast, immovable, abounding in the works of the Lord. Speak often one to another, provoke to love, and to good Works. Let the Bay of opposition against Godliness, make the Torrent of your Zeal break over with the more violence. But it's time to end, I have been bold to call upon you, you see; and to stir you up by way of remembrance. May the Spirit of the most high God excite you, encourage you, enflame you: may these poor lines be some quickening to you: may the good-will of him that dwelt in the Bush dwell with you. My dear loves to you all, pray for the Prisoners. Farewell dear Brethren, farewell in the Lord, I am

LETTER XXXIV. [To a Back-sliding Fellow Student.]

Sir,

WHom this will find you, or when, or where, I know not; but I have shot this arrow at a venture. Once you were an Associate with me in Corpus Christi, where I remember your blameless Conversation, and your zealous affection for, and adhesion to the ways and people of God. May you be still found in the same paths of holiness, without which no man shall see God. The vows of God are upon me (which, I confess, I have been to slack to pay) that I would put you in remembrance, and in all Brotherly tenderness advise you, to remember from whence you are fallen. I was informed, before your leaving of England, of many unhappy miscarriages, which the great reproach of your holy profession, you had been too manifestly guilty of, I am not without some hope, that the Lord may have since recalled you, and brought you back to himself: and yet not without more fear, lest, if the power of corruption were so strong, as to precipitate you with such violence, at such a time as that was, and in such a place as England, as Oxford where you had so many encouragements, and inducements, examples, and faithful friendly, watchful observers, you may now much more be carried away, in such a place, and among such company, as now you may be likely to be in. Sir, I beseech you to be assured, that nothing but the conscience of my duty hath engaged me, now you have been so many years a stranger to me, and are at so many thousand miles distance from me, to write notwithstanding to you. And I beseech you, bear a little with me. Is it wisdom after you have begun in the Spirit, to end in the flesh? you did run well, who hath hindered you? I remember your strict walkings, your holy converse, your many tears: will you lose the things that you have wrought? have you found out another, a nearer way to Heaven? do you hope to get in at the wide Gate, in the broad way? need I to mind you, that it had been better for you never to have known the way of Life, then after you have known it, to turn aside from the Holy Commandment? can you ever enter into God's Hill, without you be of clean hands, and a pure heart? I know, you are not ignorant, That strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto Life, and few there be that find it: and will you yet do as the most, and decline the way of strictness, and whole self-denial, and give the flesh the reins? what, when God, that cannot lie, hath said, If you live after the flesh, you shall die? Do you not know that you do in vain name the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, except you depart from iniquity? I am sure you know it: Oh Sir, consider it, improve it. Oh, have you so learnt Christ, as to think, •...at the way of carnal liberty and looseness, the way of evil company and fleshliness, is the way to eternal life? I am not for tying up Salvation to this, or that Opinion: but certainly, let men be of what opinion they will, without str•...ess, self-denial, and holy diligence, they cannot be saved, Mat. 16. 42. Mat. 11. 12. 1 Pet. 15, 16. Once you could say with ⟨...⟩, I am companion to all them that ⟨...⟩ is it so now? O Sir, let not the wicked entice you. Hath not God said, A Companion of fools shall be destroyed, Prov. 13. 20. That you must forfake the foolish, if you desire to live, Prov. 9. 6. Sir, I have no more hopes ever to meet you more on Earth: O that I might meet you in Heaven! let us tread the same path of Holiness, and then we shall doubtless meet there. But surely you must deeply, and timely repent of, and return from your grievous backslidings, or else I desire never to meet in your Heaven. But why should not we, that have so often met in serious and holy Prayer together, we that have so often met at the Lord's Table together, we that have so often eat together, and fasted together, meet in glory together? I beseech your dear Sir, if the Lord hath not already smitten you to the dust, and broken you, and reduced to the ways of holiness, now consider your ways, and turn your •...eet to his Testimonies Oh remember that, The back-slider in heart shall be filled with his own ways. God hath said it, and who shall reverse it? If any man draw back my Soul shall have no pleasure in him. And once again, when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, shall he live? In his Trespass that he hath trespassed, shall he not di•...? I know Prayers can reach you, though at so vast a distance; I shall add to them these Counsels, and commit you to God, remaining

Yours real Friend in Christ, JOS. ALLEINE.

Juelchester, May 18th. 1664.

LETTER XXXV. [Good Counsel to his Wise.]

My most dear Theodosia,

THou seemest to have been long from me: let nothing any longer detain thee, but my Sisters necessity, or Fathers Authority. I am very sorry that thou should lose two Sacraments. I am in a comfortable state of health, through Divine goodness, to which be glory forever. See that thou love and admire that Fountain of our life, and peace; and be ever mindful that 'tis all thy business to love, and serve, and praise thy Creator and Redeemer. I have no other business but this to write to thee about: but this is all our business What be use to call business is but vanity and pastime and some by matter in comparison of this. Remember and forget not that 'tis thy chief end to glorify God, and enjoy him forever. Learn well that Lesson, and know that it is the only thing necessary. Every morning remember that thy serving and pleasing of God, is the whole business of that day, and therefore set out accordingly with an express design and intention to please God in thy eating, drinking, visiting, conversing, calling, and duties of thy Relations throughout the day. My most dear heart, I have nothing in the world that doth concern thee, or me so much to write of to thee, as this is. Oh that thou mayst still be laying up in Heaven! still furthering thy account; still adding to the heap, and increasing thy glorious reward! nothing is done for God, but thou shalt hear of it again. Whatever is not done for God, is but so much lost. Those things which others do being led by their natural affections and desires, those things do thou do with holy aims, for spiritual ends, and then God will put it on the account, as so much done for him. So it is my dearest, God keeps a true account. See that thou believe it, and so plow in hope, and sow in hope, pray and hear with an eye to the sure reward. Let thy hopes be strong and lively, and then thy hands will be strong, and thy resolutions and affections will be strong. My time is very precious, and I would not lose any inch of it. See thou to it, that my time in writing this letter be not lost time. Love God the more, and set thine heart the straighter towards him, and do but practice this one thing, in every solemn action to look to thy ends, and then I have got well, and thou better by these Counsels. My dearest, I love thee in truth and tenderness, but my love signifies little, unless it serve thine eternal good,

I rest thine own, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER. XXXVI. [To his Wife, Desires after Heaven.]

My dear Heart,

MY heart is now a little at rest to write to thee. I have been these three days much disturbed, and set out of frame. Strong solicitations I have had from several hands, to accept very honorable preferment in several kinds, some friends making a Journey on purpose to propound it, but I have not found the invitations (though I confess very honorable, and such as are or will be suddenly embraced by men of far greater worth and eminency) to suit with the inclinations of my own heart, as I was confident they would not with thine. I have sent away my friends satisfied with the reasons of my refusal, and am now ready with joy to say with David. Soul return unto thy rest. But alas, that such things should disturb me, I would live above this lower region, that no passages or providence whatsoever might put me out of frame, nor disquiet my soul, and unsettle me from my desirest rest. I would have my heart fixed upon God, so as no occurrences might disturb my tranquility, but I might be still in the same quiet and even frame. Well, though I am apt to be unsettled, and quickly set off the hinges, yet methinks I am like a Bird out of the nest, I am never quiet till I am in my old way of Communion with God, like the needle in the Compass that is restless, till it be turned towards the Pole. I can say through grace with the Church, with my soul have I desired thee in the night, and with my Spirit within me have I sought thee early, my heart is early and late with God, and 'tis the business and delight of my life to seek him. But alas, how long shall I be a seeking? how long shall I spend my days in wishing and desiring, when my glorified Brethren spend theirs in rejoicing and enjoying? look as the poor imprisoned captive sighs under the burdensome clog of his Irons and can only peer through the Grace, and think of, and long for the sweetness of that liberty which he sees others enjoy: such methinks is my condition: I can only look through the Grate of this Prison my flesh, I see Abraham, and Isaac, and J...ob, sitting down in the Kingdom of God, but alas, I myself must stand without longing, striving, fighting, running, praying, waiting, for what they are enjoying. Oh happy, thrice happy pouls! when shall these Fetters of mine be knocked off? when shall I be set at liberty from this Prison of my body? you are clothed with glory, when I am clothed with dust. I dwell in flesh, in a House of Clay, when you dwell with God in a House not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens. I must be continually clogged with the cumbersome burden of this Dung-hill Body, that had it not a soul dwelling in it like Salt as it were to preserve, it would soon turn to pu...faction and corruption, and be as odious and loathsome as the filthiest Carrion, when you have put on incorruption and immortality. What continual molestation am I subject to by reason of this flesh? What pains doth it cost me to keep this earthen vessel from breaking, it must be fed, it must be clothed, it must be exercised, recreated, and which is worst of all cherished with time-devouring •...ep, so that I live but little of the short time I have allotted me here: but oh blessed souls, you are swallowed up of immortality and life, your race is run, and you have received your Crown How •••rious must I be•...to keep me from dangers, how apt am I to be troubled with the cares and fears of this life, molesting myself with the thoughts of what I shall eat, and what I shall put on, and wherewithal I shall provide for myself and mine, when your souls are taken with nothing but God and Christ, and 'tis your work to be still contemplating, and admiring that love that redeemed you from all this. Alas, how am I encompassed with infirmities, and still carry about me Death in my bosom, what pains and cost must I be at to repair the rotten and ruinous building of this earthly Tabernacle, which when I have done I am sure will shortly fall about my ears; when you are got far above mortality, and are made equal with the Angels. Oh I groan earnestly to be clothed upon with my house which is from Heaven, being willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord: Oh, when shall I come and appear before him. When shall I receive the purchase of my Savior, the fruit of my prayers, the harvest of my labors, the end of my Faith, the Salvation of my soul? Alas, what do I here? this is not my resting place. My treasure is in Heaven, and my heart is in Heaven, Oh when shall I be where my heart is? woe is me that I sojour in Mesech, and dwell in the Tents of K...dar. Oh that I had wings like a Dove, that I might fly away and be at rest. Then would I hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest, and be out of the reach of fears, disturbances, and distractions. How long shall I live at such a distance from my God, at such a distance from my Country? Alas, how can I be merry, how can I sing the Lord Song in a strange Land; no, I will hang my Harp upon the Willows, and sit down and weep when I remember Zion. But yet my flesh •...hall rest in hope, and I will daily bath my soul in the sweet thoughts of my blessed home. I will rejoice in hopes of what I do not yet enjoy, and content myself with the taste of what I shall shortly have my fill of. But stay this Pen runs not beyond thy Commission. Alas, now I •...ceive what I have gotten, I perceive I have set down what I would be rather than what I am, and wrote more of my dears heart than my own penning, rather a Copy for myself, than a Copy of myself. Well, I thank God I have got some heat by it for all, the Lord grant thou mayst get a thousand times more. The Lord grant the request I daily pour out before him, and make us helps and furtherances to each others soul, that we may quicken and promote and forward one another in his ways. Help me by thy Prayers as thou dost always. The God of all peace and comfort be with thee my sweet love, Farewell, Thine beyond Expression, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER XXXVII. [God is a satisfying Portion.]

My most dear Pylades,

HAd not my right hand long since forgot her cunning, and the Almighty shook the Pen out of my hand. I should long ere this have been writing to thee: but it is a wonder of Divine Power and goodness that my soul had not before this time dwelt in silence, and that death had not put the long period to all my writing and converse.

O my Pylades, what shall I say unto thee now I begin to write, where shall I begin, when shall I end? methinks I am as a full Bottle quite inverted, where the forward pressing of the overhasty liquor makes the evacuatin more flow, and my thoughts are like a thronging crowd sticking in the door.

Long is the song of love that I have to tell thee, I rejoice in the constancy of thy love, that the waters of so long a silence, and so great a distance have not yet quenched it, but thy desires are towards me, and thy heart is with me, though providence hath hindered me from thy much desired company. I will assure thee it hath been a pleasure to my heart a good part of this summer to hope that I should come one half of the way to give thee a meeting; but such is my weakness hitherto, that I am forced to put off those hopes till the Spring, when, if God give me strength to ride, I intend to see thee before mine own Home. I thank thee for all the dear expressions of thy fervent love: Methinks I see it, and feel how it runs through all the veins of every •...etter, nay, every Line? I needed not so chargeable a Testomony as thy golden Token, with which I was something displeas'd, because I thought thou needest more than myself: but the love thereby expressed is most dearly welcome to me. What thou talkest of Retribution, and of Justice, doth not so well relish with me, because the Phrases seem improper to the love professed between us, I never looked for any return from thee but love, which is the paying of all thy Debts: my expenses have indeed been vast and almost incredible; but surely goodness, and mercy hath followed me, and do follow me in every place, and in every change of my condition; so that as to temporals I have lack of nothing, and as for spirituals I abound and superabound, and the streams of my comforts have been full and running over; the joy of the Lord hath been my strength at weakest, and in the multitude of my thoughts within me, his comforts have refresh'd my Soul, I have found God a satisfying portion to me, and have sat down under his shadow with full delights, and his fruit is most sweet to my taste: he is my strength and my Song, for I will talk of him, and write of him with perpetual pleasure. Through grace, I can say, methinks I am now in my Element, since I have begun to make mention of him, I am rich in him, and happy in him, and my soul saith unto him with David, Thou hast made me most Blessed for evermore, and happy is the hour that ever I was born to be made partaker of so blisful a Treasure, so endless a felicity, so Angelical Prerogatives, as I have in him; O sweet are his converses, how delightful it is to Triumph in his Love!

Suffer me to be free with thee, where should I pour out my Soul, if not into thy bosom? did the poor woman call upon her friends and neighbors to rejoice together with her at the finding of a lost Groat? and shall not I tell to thee the keeper of the Secrets of my Soul, & the friend of my inmost Bosom, what a friend is the Lord to me, though an unworthy sinner, shall not I run and tell thee what a treasure I have found. And here methinks the story of the Lepers comes not unaptly to thy mind, who said one to another when they had eat and drunk, a...d carried away silver and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it, We do not well, this day is a day of good tidings and we hold our peace. It is sit that I should be clothed with shame; I acknowledge before God, who trieth the hearts, I am unworthy, everlastingly unworthy, but it is not fit that he should lose his praise, nay rather, let him be the more adored, and magnifi'd, and admired forever and ever, and let my Secrets say, Amen. Bless the Lord, O my Soul bless the Lord, O my Friend, let us exhalt his Name together, he is my solace in my solitude, he is my standing comforter, my tried friend, my sure refuge, my safe retreat, he is my Paradise, he is my Heaven; and my heart is at rest in him: and I will sit and sing under his shadow, as a Bird among the Branches; and whither should I go but unto him? Shall I leave the fa...ness of the Olive, and sweetness of the Fig-tree, and of the Vine, and go and put my trust under the shadow of the Bramble? No, I have made my everlasting choice: this is my rest forever, he is my well Beloved in whom I am well pleased. Suffer me to boast a little here, I may Glory without Vanity, and I can praise him without end or measure, but I have nothing to say of myself: I find thou dost overvalue me, and magnify me above my measure; set the Crown upon the head of Christ, let nothing be great with thee but him, give him the glory: but thy love pleaseth me, only I have this exception, that thou art in love with thine own Idol, as Austin somewhere speaks to a friend of his that did too much magnify him, and magnifiest a Creature of thine own fancy, and not thy poor Orestes: God that knoweth all things, knoweth my poverty, how little, how low, and how mean I am, and how short I come of the attainments of the Saints, who yet do themselves come so exceedingly short of the Rule that God hath set before us: I often think of the Complaint of the devout Monsier [I feel myself very poor this week, and very defective in the love of God; if you would know wherein you may pleasure me, love God more; that what is wanting in me, may be made up in the abundance of your love:] in this, my Pylades, in this thou mayest most highly pleasure me; love God a little the better, praise him a little the more for my sake; let me have this to please myself in, that God is a little the better loved for me, and that I have blowed up, if it be but one flash, nay, but one spark of Divine Love in the bosom of my dearest friend towards him.

But why, my Pylades, why is thy style towards me changed? why hast thou lost the old and wonted strain of our former pleasing familiarity? this I could not but observe with some disgust, is it because thy heart is changed; but this is a question in which I cannot ask any resolution; I am satisfied and at rest in thy love, but what this alterations means, I know not; art thou willing by degrees to grow strange; it cannot be, thou seest however that I cannot change my voice.

Besides, I find some jealous passages in thy last lines unto us; but canst thou think that T. B. can be put into the balance against my old friend, my own, my Covenant Pylades, or can a friend of words come into any competition or comparison with thine experienced love? I cannot entertain the thoughts of this without some disdain.

But thy needful cautions are acceptable to me, I desire to foresee and provide for manifold changes and storms; I know I am not yet in the harbor; O pray with me that I enter not into Temptation, for I am very weak in Spirit, as well as in body, God knoweth. But there is no end with me, somewhere or other I must break off, and thou wilt say it is time to shut up; for once only know, that I am thy daily Orator, and will be whilst I am: and yet once more I must have room to add my thankful acknowledgement of thine and thy costly kindness; and so with our most dear affections to you both, I commend you to the God of love, still abiding

Thy fast and sure ORESTES.

LETTER XXXVII. [To a person of Quality to be constant.]

Most Honoured Sir,

MAny charges have passed over both you and myself, since my last Writing to you, but I am glad to hear that in that great change of your condition, you have made so wise and happy a choice. Mine unfeigned desire to God is for your Temporal and Spiritual prosperity; and that the blessings of both Worlds may be heaped up upon you. Yet I should desire you not to expect too much here, nor to count it a strange thing, if you meet with disappointments. Is it enough if you have the Lord for your portion, and Heaven for your Inheritance; though the World should not answer your expectations. I doubt not but you will be likely, as well as we, to meet with manifold temptations: the Lord make you, when you have done all to stand. Hold out a while in faith, patience, and self-denial, and you shall be as sure as God can make you of the Crown. Now arise and shine, and hold forth the power of holiness in all your converse. We have lived in times when Religion was the way to credit and esteem, and then it was more difficult to discern sincerity of ones profession, because men might be drawn to it upon worldly ends. But now is the time when God will prove us, if we will appear for him, and own his ways, when they are the common scorn of the World. Oh Sir, think it not hard if God do call you forth to own him in such a time as this, when few of your rank and quality will bear you company: but look upon it as a special advantage to prove your sincerity, and your fidelity to the Lord your Maker. The holy and blessed life of that noble Marquess Galeacius, I should much commend to your reading and imitation. Court not the World nor its preserments, Moses his self-denying choice. which the World would have branded for unparalled folly, when he voluntarily left all the Court-preferments and pleasures, the wisest Judge commends for the great... wisdom. If Religion will make you vile, resolve with tha...yal Worthy, that you will be yet more vile. Remember who accounted the reproaches of Christ greater riches, than the Treasures of Egypt. Verily it is a greater honor to you to be vilified for Christ, than to be •...ignified with the highest Titles that the greatest on Earth can conser: and to be called Puritan or Phanatique, for the bold and constant owning of the power of Christianity, than to have whole Pages filled up with the honorable offices and marks of Dignity, that Earthly Princes can bestow. Now then is your time to get the true honor. Few of your places and dignity, will take this way to get it: But he that can but use the prospective os Faith, and look as far as the approaching Judgment, will easily see the vanity of the worlds riches and flattering preferments, and the everlasting glory and honor wherewith the despised Saints shall surely be Crowned. Fix your eyes and Meditations here, and that will set you above the worlds temptations, when by its offers or threatenings it would make you to warp, and to let go your hold-fast of Eternal life. Now is the time for you to make Heaven sure, and when that is done, you are prepared for the worst that can come. I desire you to accept of my service and respects, and my Wives, which I do hereby present unto you, and to your most deserving yoke-fellow, whom I unfeignedly honor though I never saw her, not so much for her noble blood, which yet calls sor great respects, as for her far more noble qualifications, and privileges of her second birth. Pardon my boldness with you, in troubling you so long, I am Sir,

Your most Oblidged Friend, and Servant, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER XXXVII.

Dear Cousin,

THough I have been in the valley of the shadow of death, though I have had more than one foot in the Grave, and have been in deaths often, yet the love and remembrance of you, ever liveth on my heart: I have long had neither feet to walk nor hands to write, yet I have borrowed hands as you see, rather than I would stay any longer from warning and admonishing of you. Dear Couzin, that soul of yours, that precious-immortal soul is of no light value with me! I pray hard for its Salvation: I have a Godly fear for you, lest your soul should miscarry in a crowd of worldly business, and of earthly cares Ah, my dear Niece, it comforts me that you are so settled for this world, and are in want of nothing, I bless the Lord for this, but me thinks this doth not satisfy me. Oh, that I could be sure that you were once safe settled in Christ; though you are, I trust comfortably furnished with earthly things, yet in this you are but half provided for: have you a Treasure in Heaven? have you laid hold on eternal life? have you made sure work for everlasting? have you past the straits of the New-Birth? do you bear upon you the marks of the Lord Jesus?

If you shall pass by a sumptuous Fabric, and a great Lordship, and should lay claim to all as your inheritance, and please yourself with the hopes of enjoying all this, when you had nothing to show, no Writing, no Evidence to produce, as a ground for any such hop•..., would not everyone say, this were a piece of strange vanity and imprudence; much greater folly is it to promise ourselves a part in Paradise, and rest satisfied in a mere persuasion that we are the Heirs of Heaven, when we cannot prove our Title from the Book of God, nor produce from within ourselves, the sure and certain marks of the children of God.

Ah, dear Couzin, rouse up yourself make conscience, to deal plainly and freely with your soul, say within yourself, I have hopes for Heaven? but where are my grounds and my Evidences? do I not build without a foundation? do I venture my Salvation upon mere uncertainties? What have I, what do I more than others? I pray, I hear, I read, but may not a mere Hypocrite do all this? I run not with others into the wretched practice of Lying, and Couzening, Whoredom, and the like; but what is this more than a Pharisee may have to say for himself? can I prove by Scripture my claim to Heaven? can I produce Chapter and Verse to justify myself?

Oh Couzin, fear, lest a Promise being left of entering into rest, you should by any mistakes, or self-deceits fall short through unbelief; fear lest you should take Count•...•...old, or some common workings for saving Grace. Oh, there is a world of counterfeit Coin going, multitudes perish by mistake, and wake in Hell, whilst they dreamt they were in Heaven: the temp•...er is very subtle, and will sure deceive if he can: your heart is deceitful above all things, and is willing to cheat you if it can. Therefore am I engaged so earnestly to call upon you, as one that watcheth for your soul, to arise speedily and to set roundly to your work. Oh, consider your danger, and work out your Salvation with fear and trembling: away with these lazy Prayers, away with these cold and heartless Professions, away with this drowsy, lifeless, •...less Religion; bestir yourself to purpose for your soul before it be too late, search your conscience as with Candles, be jealous of yourself; consider, now is your time, what you do you must do quickly, the patience of God is waiting, Christ is knocking, the Spirit of God is striving, and death is at the door: Oh now take your opportunity, and take heed lest a •...thful heart, and the cares of this World, or a presumptuous confidence that all is well and safe already, should at last shut you out of the Kingdom of God.

I cannot write distinctly to your Husband, but I beseech you to call upon him to set his heart to these Counsels which I havee written to you; I earnestly entreat him to make Religion his business, and to look heedfully to it, that the gain of the World prove not the loss of his soul. I desire him that Closer and Family Prayers, and weekly Catechising of his Household, and strict sanctifying of the Sabbath, and reading of the Scriptures singing of Psalms, repeating of Sermons, and diligent attendance upon powerful Preaching may be his continual exercises; that so his house may be a little Church, and God may delight to dwell in his Family: pray give me to understand what is done of these things, for I have a zeal for your welfare, and that you and your household should serve the Lord, that you may enter into his rest, and carry children, and servants, and friends, and all to Heaven with you- As to my own estate, I have lost all my limbs, and about this twelve Months useless, and been again under the sentence of death; but was brought in 〈...〉 -litter to Bath, where God hath wonderfully restored me, so that I can feed myself, and go alone, and speak with a little more freedom. Oh, love the Lord, praise the Lord for me; notwithstanding I continue weak, and have not strength to write, yet I could not tell how to die in silence from you; but have made use of a friendly hand to send these counsels and calls after you, which I beseech you to accept in the fear of God, for it is not unlike that they may be my last to you that ever you may receive: I now commend you to the Lord, and with mine own and my dear Wivet love to you both, Rest,

Your loving and careful Uncle, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER. XXXV. [The Concernments of our Souls especially to be regarded.]

Dear Cousin,

YOU may think you are forgotten with me, because you have not heard so long a time from me; but this may let you know, That though God hath taken away your Father; and suffered your Mother to be helpless to you; Yet you have one friend on earth that careth for you. The welfare of your immortal soul is dear to me, and is the matter of my solicitons care and prayer. Dear Cousin, methinks I feel a Godly jealousy of you within my heart, lest you should lose your soul amongst a crowd of worldly cares and business. O remember the story of him in the Book of the Kings, who relates that he had a Soldier committed to his keeping, upon condition that he should lose his life if he did let him go: But while thy servant went hither and thither, the man escaped. But the King replies presently, Even so shall thy judgment be; thy life shall go for his life. Ah Cousin, take earnest heed, lest while you are going hither and thither, minding many things, 〈...〉 in a hurry of worldly affairs, the enemy run not away with your soul. Oh beware that the World doth not secretly steal away your heart. Consider, that whatever your business be, you must and will have an eating time, and a sleeping time. Oh be as solicitous every day to keep your praying times, which are a thousand times more necessary than a time to eat in, or sleep. Be sure that there doth not a morning or evening pass over your head, in which you have not perfumed your Closer with solemn and fervent prayer. And take heed, if you love your salvation, lest Saran beguile you with the bare outward performance of duties a•...d ou•...ward acts of Religion. See to it, that you do not rest in a Worldly Religion; to give God your knee, while the World carries away your heart. You may pra•..., hear, and read, and all to no purpose, except your very Soul be employed and engaged in these duties; and the •...ife, vigor, and strength of your affections be found to go after God in them. If therefore you will have Christ and Heaven, see that you renounce the world. You must cast overboard your worldly hopes, and take up with God, with a naked Christ, as your wh•... happiness, both for this life, and that which is to come. There is no hopes of your Salvation, without a sound mortification to the world; you must be mortified to your worldly expectations: look not for much from the world; promise not yourself much from the world; seek not great things for yourself: say unto God, So I may have thee for my portion, and thy Kingdom for my inheritance, give or deny me what thou wilt, poverty or riches, anything or nothing, I will be contented with my Lot. Say unto your soul, So I may but have Christ, so I may but carry it for the other world, let this world go which way it will: I must be converted or condemned; I must be born again, or else would I had never been born: but of this present world there is no such necessity; I may be poor, and yet happy: but woe unto me if I remain unsanctified: I must have grace, or perish forever. Dear Cousin, if I live, you shall find me a friend to your worldly prosperity; but whether I live or die, I charge you by the Lord, that you be infinitely tender of your immortal souls everlasting concernments. Will you not spin a fair thread of it, if while you are pursuing after earthly things, you lose your soul in the throng? While I live, I shall pray and care for you. Farewell in the Lord. I am

Your truly loving and careful uncle, JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER. XXXVI. [Godly Counsels.]

Dear Cousin,

THE welcome tidings of your safe arrival at Barbadoes, is come to my ears; as also the News of your escape from a perilous sickness, for which I bless the Lord, and desire to be thankful with you: for I am not without a care for your well being, but do look upon myself as really concerned in you. I have considered, that God hath bestow'd you of a careful Father, and that your Mother takes but little care for you; so that you have none nearer than myself to watch for your Soul, and to charge and admonish you in the Lord, and to take care of you. But yet, Dear Cousin, be not discouraged by these things, but look to Heaven, fly unto Jesus, put away every known sin, set upon the conscientious performance of every known duty; make Christ your choice, embrace him upon his own terms; deliver up yourself, body and soul to him; see that you have no reserves nor limitations in your choice of him; give him your very heart; cast away your worldly hopes and expectations, make Religion your very business. O Cousin, these things do, and you shall be sure of a friend in Heaven to take the care of you; and, if I may be any comfort to you, you shall not fail, while I live, to have one friend on earth to take care for you. You are gone far from me, even to the uttermost parts of the Earth; but I have sent these Letters to call even thither after you; yea, not only to call, but to cry-in your Ears, O what is like to become of your Soul! Where is that immortal Soul of yours like to be lodged forever? Amongst Devils, or Angels? Upon a Bed of Flames, or in the joys of Paradise? Dear Cousin, go aside by yourself in secret, retire from the noise of the World, and say to yourself, Oh my Soul! whither art thou going? do not I know in my very heart that I must be converted or condemned? That I must be Sanctified, or I can never be Saved? Oh my Soul! what seekest thou! what designs do I drive at? what is my chief care? which way do I bend my course? Is it for this World, or the World to-come? Do I first seek the Kingdom of Heaven, and the Righteousness thereof? Do I think Heaven will drop into my mouth? that Glory and immortality will be got with a wet finger, with cold Prayers, and heartless wishes, while the World carries the main of my heart? Do I think to be Crowned, and yet never fight? to get the race, and never run? to enter at the strait gate, and never strive? to overcome Principalities and Powers, and never wrestle? No, no; say within yourself, Oh my Soul, either lay by the hopes of Heaven forever, or else rouse up thyself, put forth thy strength in seeking after God and Glory; either lay by thy Worldly hopes, or thy hopes of immortality; away with thy sins, or thou must let Christ go forever; think not to have Christ and the World too, to serve God and Mammon, it cannot be: If thou follow the World as thy chief desire and delight; if thou live after the flesh, thou must die, count upon it, the Lord hath spoken it, and all the World can never reverse it. Thus reason the case with your own Soul, and give not rest to yourself night nor day, till you are gotten off from the World, broken off from the will•...ull practice of every known sin, and gotten safe into Christ. Dear Cousin, I charge you by the Lord, to observe these things; pray over them, weep over them, read them again and again; do not pass them over as slight and ordinary things: your Soul is at stake, it is your Salvation is concerned in them; think not I am in jest with you. Ah Cousin, I travel in birth with you, till Christ be formed in you. Why should you die? Oh repent and live, lay hold on eternal life, win Christ, and you win all. O be thankful to the Lord, that now you are fatherless and friendless, yet you have one Remembrancer to warn you to fly from the wrath to come. God forbid that I should find you at last in the place of Torments, for your not embracing the Godly Counsels. To conclude, in short, I charge you as a Minister, as a Father to you, Take heed of these three things:

- 1. Lest the gain of the World prove the loss of your Soul:
- 2. Lest the snare of evil company withdraw you from God, and so prove your final ruin.
- 3. L...t a lofty and a worldly heart should thrust you out of the Kingdom of Heaven.

God abhors that the proud should come near him: Oh labor, whatever you do, for an humble heart; be little, be vile in your own eyes; seek not after great things; be poor in Spirit; without this, Heaven will be no place for you, God will be no friend to you. Dear Cousin, your lot is fallen, as I fear, in a place of great wickedness, where your Soul is in much danger, where your temptations are many, and your helps for Heaveu but few; where Godly examples are rare, and many will entice you to sin and vanity. O! if you love me, or love your Soul, look about you, consider your danger, fear lest you should miscarry forever by worldly loss and vain company, which proves to so many the fearful cause of their eternal perdition. I can but warn you, and pray for you: but though you have none to oversee you, remember the strict and severe eye of God is upon you, to observe all your actions, and that he will surely bring all your practices into his Judgment. Your Aunt, with myself, commend our dear love to you; and I commend you to the Lord, and remain,

Your loving and careful Uncle, JOS. ALLEINE,

LETTER XXXVII.

Dear Cousins,

Though you are removed far from me, out of my sight, and the Seas as a great Gulf are fixed betwixt you and me; yet my Prayers follow you, and my good wishes for your present and everlasting welfare, like the wings of a Dove, take speedy flight. I look upon myself, now God hath removed my Brother, to be as in the room of a Father to you, yea and of a Mother too; for I know you have but little help from her.

My Dear Neece, my heart is careful for you; and therefore I cannot cease, while I am in being in this World, to warn and admonish you, as my Children, and to call upon you in the Name of the Eternal God, to awaken yourselves with all Godly fear and holy diligence, lest by any means you should come short of the glory of God.

Let me mind you, dear Cousins, of the dangerous place your stand in, and look about you with trembling. Methinks I see Satan watching for your Souls, as the Dragon did for the Seed of the Woman, waiting to devour it as soon as she should be delivered. Know you not, that you must wrestle with Principalities and Powers? Methinks I see Temptations surrounding you, and belaguering you, as the enemy about the Walls of the Treacherous party within you, I mean carnal affections and corruptions, complo•...tinge how to deliver up the Castle. Know you not, that your fleshly Lusts do war against your Souls? and that your own hearts are not true to you, but deceitful above all things? Lord, what need have you to bestir yourselves, and to fly unto Jesus! to distrust yourselves, and to trust only in him and his Righteousness! Oh work your Salvation with •...ear and trembling: Do you ever think to escape these mighty enemies, to conquer the power, and avoid the plots and snares of those potent adversaries, without most painful diligence? O cry to Heaven for help; watch and pray; fear, lest a promise being left of entering into rest, either of you should come short of it.

My dear Nieces, you have many do watch for your souls, to devour them; but I doubt too few, except myself, do watch for your Souls, to save them: therefore I look upon myself, who am now upon the matter your only Monitor, to be the more concerned to awaken myself to your help, and to look after you, and to watch for you, lest by any means you should miscarry by the deceits and temptations wherewith you are encompassed. I would not have you over-careful for the things of this lise, though I commend your laudable care and diligence, that you may not be burdensome to any man; but I commend to you a better a•...d more necessary care, and that is that which the Apos•...le speaks of, the Virgins care; The unmarried (saith he) careth for the things of the Lord. Ah, let this be your ear; seek first the Kingdom of God, and the Righteousness thereof, and then all these things shall be added; you have God's sure promise for it: If the Lord give me to live and prosper, you shall see and know, that I am not a friend only in words to you; but however that shall be, see that you embrace the Counsels of God from me. Oh make sure of Heaven betimes, walk humbly with God, beware of a proud heart and a lofty spirit; abhor yourselves, else God will not be pleased with you; condemn yourselves, that God may acquit you. The leaven of pride will sour the whole lump, and mar all your Profession and Religion, and render your Persons, and Prayers, and all, an abomination to the Lord, if it prevail in you. Oh therefore be not high minded, but fear; and by prayer and watchfulness restrain and root up this wretched corruption of pride, which is a sin so natural to you, that you had need to use an infinite care and caution to keep it under.

As to myself, these may acquaint you, That I have been often at the very gates of death: I have lost all my limbs; but prayer hath redeemed me from my extremities, and God hath blessed the use of the Bath to me. Oh praise the Lord, praise him for my sake, and give glory to the God of my Life. Love him, honor and glorify him, whose favor and friendship hath filled my Soul with comfort, and given a resurrection to my body. I can now walk alone, and feed myself, but am altogether unable to write, which is the reason why these come to you in another hand. Dear Cousin, you may think me too tedious; but you must pardon me, if I err in my love and zeal for your welfare: And now I shall trespass no more, but with my own and dear Wives love to you, I commend you to God, and rest,

Your loving and careful uncle, JOS. ALLEINE

LETTER XXXVIII. [Do all in reference to God and his Glory.]

Dear Friend,

I Have received yours of the 19th. of September, but it came to me in the time of my sickness, in which I was much a stranger to writing; it con•...nued upon me five months, and to this day so much weakness remains in my arms, that I am not able to put off or on my own clothes. Your Letter was exceeding welcome to me, not only as reviving the remembrance of our old friendship, but also, as bringing me news of some spiritual good that you received by me, which is the best tidings that I can receive: for what do I live for, but to be useful to souls in my generation? I desire to know no other business than to please and honor my God, and serve my generation in that short allowance of time that I have here, before I go hence, and shall be seen no more. Shall I commend to you the Lesson that I am about to learn? But why should I doubt of your acceptance, who have so readily embraced me in all our converses?

The Lesson is, To be entirely devoted unto the Lord, that I may be able to say after the Apostle, To me to live is Christ. I would not be serving God only for a day in the week, or an hour or two in the day; but every day, and all the day. I am ambitious to come up towards that of our Lord and Master, To do always those things that please God. I plainly see, that self-seeking is self-undoing; and that then we do promote ourselves best, when we please God most. I find, that when I have done all, if God be not pleased, I have done nothing; and if I can but approve myself to God, my work is done: I reckon I do not live that time I do not live unto God.

I am •...ain to cut off so many hours from my days, and so many years from my life (so short as it is) as I have lived unto myself. I find no enemy so dangerous as myself, and O that others might take warning by my hurt! O that I had lived wholly unto God! then had every day and every hour that I have spent, been found upon my account at that great day of our appearing before God: then I had been rich indeed, in treasure laid up there, whither I am apace removing; then I had been every day and hour adding to the heap, and increasing the reward which God of his mere grace hath promised, even to the meanest work that is done to him, Col. 3. 24. I verily perceive I am an external loser by acting no more as for God; for what is done to myself, is lost; but what is done for God, is done forever, and shall receive an everlasting reward. Verily, if there be another world to come, and an eternal state after this short life, it is our only wisdom to be removing, and, as it were, transplanting and transporting what we can, from hence, into that Country to which we are shortly to be removed, that what we are now doing, we may be reaping the fruit of forever more. The world think themselves wise; but I will pawn my soul upon it, that this is the true wisdom.

Well, let us be wholly swallowed up in the concerns of Religion, and know no other interest but Jesus Christ's. I cannot say, I have already attained; but this is that my heart is set to learn, That in all that I do, whether sacred or civil actions, still I may be doing but one work, and driving on one design, That God may be pleased by me, and he glorified in me; that not only my Praying, Preaching, Alms, &c. may be found upon my account; but even my eating, drinking, sleeping, visits, discourses, because they are all done as unto God. Too often do I take a wrong aim, and miss my mark; but I will tell you what be the rules I set myself, and do strictly impose upon myself from day today: Never to lie down, but in the Name of God; not barely for natural refreshment, but that a wearied servant of Christ may be recruited and fitted to serve him better the next day. Never to rise up but with this resolution, Well, I will go forth this day in the Name of God, and will make Religion my business, and spend the day for Eternity. Never to enter upon my calling, but first thinking, I will do these things as unto God, because he requireth these things at my hands in the place and station he hath put me into. Never to sit down to the Table, but resolving, I will not eat merely to please my appetite, but to strengthen myself for my Masters work. Never to make a visit, but upon some holy design, resolving to leave something of God where I go; and in every company to leave some good savor behind. This is that which I have been for some time a learning, and am pressing hard after; and if I strive not to walk by these Rules, let this Paper be a witness against me.

I am not now in my former public capacity, such things being required of me to say and subscribe, as I could by no means yield to, without open lying and dissembling with God and Men: yet, that I am unuseful, I cannot say; but rather think, that possibly I may be of more use than heretofore. I thank the Lord, I have not known what it is to want a tongue to speak, but in my sickness; nor a people to hear; but so, as that we both, follow the things that make for peace.

I perceive you are otherwise persuaded in some things, than I am: but however, I trust we meet in our end. Since you are in, may it be your whole study to gain souls, and to build them up in holiness, which is with too many the least of their cares. One duty (miserably neglected) I shall be bold to commend to you from my own experience, and that is, the visiting your whole Flock from house to house, and enquiring into their spiritual estates particularly, and dealing plainly and truly with them about their conversion to God: to the usefulness of this great work, I can set my Probatum est.

I hear you have two Parsonages: O tremble to think how many precious souls you have to look to! and let it be seen, however others aim at the Fleece, you aim at the Flock; and that you have indeed Curam animarum.

You see how free I am with you; but I know your candor.

I rejoice in your happy Yoke-fellow: salute her from your old Friend, and accept the unfeigned respects of him who is, Sir,

Your real and faithful Friend; JOS. ALLEINE.

LETTER. XXXIX. PRISON COMFORTS. [To a Minister in Prison.]

worthy Sir,

I Owe you a Letter, and more than a Letter, for your particular respects to me, your brotherly sympathy, your multiplied and earnest prayers, your tenderness of my health, your welcome Jewel in M. Ruths Letters, from which I trust my soul and others may reap no small benefit. Much more do I owe you for your common respects to the people of my desires; and not only to them, but to the whole Church of God; and in all whose concernments, I see, you are concerned. Your indefatigable labors with us, we do with all thankfulness accept, as the undoubted evidence of your great love: For all which may he requi•...e you, who will shortly say, Inasmuch as thou didst it unto the least of these my Brethren, thou didst it unto me.

It was but a little after my release from my own confinement, but I heard of yours; and now write to you, as one that hath taken a higher degree than ever, and more truly honorable, being commenced Prisoner of Christ. I was once affected with the Picture of a devout man, to whom a voice came down from Heaven, saying, Quid vis fieri pro te, To which he answered, Nihil domine nisi pati ac contemni pro•...e. Undoubtedly, Sir, it is our real glory to be throughout conformed to Jesus Christ, not only in his sanctity, but in his sufferings. Paul counted all things but dung for this, that he might win Christ, &c. and know the fellowship of his sufferings, and be made conformable to his death. I doubt not but your consolations in Christ do much more then superabound in all your tribulations for him: Yet let me add this one Cordial, That now you have a whole shoal of Promises come in to you, which you had not before; I mean, all the Promises to suffering Saints, in which they have not so immediate, but only a remoter right, unless in a suffering state: And doubtless he hath gotten well, that hath gotten such a number of exceeding great and precious Promises. If the men of the world do so rejoice when such or such an Estate is fallen to them? should not you much more, that have such a Treasure of Promises fallen to you?

I can tell you little good of myself; but this I can tell you, That the Primises of God were never so sweet in this world to me, as in and since my imprisoned state. Oh the bottomless riches of the Covenant of Grace! It shames me that I have let such a Treasure lie by so long, and have made so little use of it. Never did my soul know the Heaven of a Believers life, till I learnt to live a life of praise; and by more frequent consideration to set home the unspeakable riches of the Divine Promises, to which, I trust, through grace I am made an heir. I verily perceive, that all our work were done at once, if we could but prevail with ourselves and others to live like Believers; to tell all the world by ourselves and others to live like Believers; to tell all the world by our course and carriage, that there is such pleasantness in Christ's wars, such beauty in holiness, such reward to obedience, as we profess to believe. May ours and our people's conversations but preach this aloud to the world, that there is a reality in what God hath promised; that Heaven is worth the venturing for; that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us!

Verily, Sir, it is but a very little while that Prisons shall hold us, or that we shall dwell in dirty flesh. Porphyry tells us of Photinus, that he was ashamed to see himself in the body; to see a Divine and immortal soul in a Prison of flesh, (for so they held the body to be;) but the worst shackles are those of sin. Well, they must shortly off all together; our Lord doth not long intend us for this lower Region: Surely he is gone to prepare a place for us: Doubtless it is so; yea, and he will come again, and receive us to himself, that where he is, we may be also. And what have we to do, but to believe, and wait, and love, and long, and look out for his coming, in which is all our hope? 'Twill be time enough for us to be preferred then. We know before hand who shall then be uppermost. Our Lord hath shown us where our place shall be, even at his own right hand; and w...at he will say to us, Come ye Blessed, &c. Surely we shall stand in his Judgment: He hath promised to stand our Friend: Let us look for the joyful day: As sure as there is a God, this day will come, and then it shall go well with us. What if Bonds and Banishments abide us for a season? This is nothing but what our Lord hath told us, The ...ld shall rejoice, but ye shall weep and lament: You shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be tu...ned into joy. Oh how reviving are his words! I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh away from you.

If that miserable wretch leapt cheerfully off the Ladder, saying, I shall be a Queen in Hell: With that joy should we do and suffer for God, who have his Truth in pawn, that we shall be Crown'd in Heaven? Verily, they are wonderful Preparations that are making for us: The Lord prepare us ap...e, and make us meet to be Partakers. It was the highest Commendation that ever that worthy R. Baxter received, which fell from the Pen of his scoffing Adversary Tilenus, who saith of him, T...tum Puritanismum totus spirat. Oh that this may be true of us and ours.

Let your true Yoke-fellow, and my Christian Friends with you in the Bonds of the Gospel, have my hearty Commendations: And these Counsels, I pray You, give them from me, for the improving of their present state.

1. To habituate themselves, both as to their thoughts and discourses, more thoroughly than ever unto Holiness. Brethren, I would teach you the Lesson that I resolve to learn with you, That your minds and tongues may as naturally run on the things of Heaven, as others on the things of this World. Why should it not be thus? I am sure God and heaven do as well deserve to be thought on, and talked of by us, as fro...h and vanity can deserve of the World. There are many that have in a great measure learnt this Lesson, and why should not we be some of them? What if it be hard at first? Every thing is so to a beginner. Besides, is not ours a Religion of self denial? Further, if we do but force ourselves a while to holy Thoughts, and Heavenly Discourse, it will ...row habitual to us, and then it will be most natural, familiar, and Heavenly sweet. Oh what gainers will you be, if you do but learn this Lesson?

Verily, 'tis the shame of Religion, that Christians are so unlike themselves, unless upon their knees. Sirs, our lives and language should tell the world what we are, and whether we are going. Christians, let little things content you in the world, but aspire after great things in the grace of God. Many real Christians do little think what high frames of holiness they might grow up to, even in this life, with pains and diligence. Sirs, be you men of great designs: think it not enough if you have wherewith to bear your charges to Heaven; but aspire with an holy ambition to be great in the Court of Heaven, favorites of the most High, of tall growth, great experience, singular communion, that you may burn and shine in your place, and convince the world; that you may savor of Heaven where ever you come, and that there may be an even-spun thread of Holiness running through your whole course. 'Tis the disgrace of Profession, that there is so little difference to be seen in the ordinary conversation of Believers from other men: It is not a shame, that when we are in company with others, this should be all the difference that is to be seen, only that we will not curse and swear, as do the worst of men? Christians, if you will honor the Gospel, bring forth your Religion out of your Closets (the world canit see what you do there) into your Shops, Trades, Visits, &c and exemplify the rules of Religion in the management of all your Relations, and in your ordinary converse. Let there be no place or company that you come into, in which you do not drop something of God: this will be the glory of Religion, and we shall never convince the world till we come to this. May you come my Brethren, out of your Prisons with your faces shining, having your minds seasoned, and your tongues tipped with holiness: may your mouths be as a Well of Life, from whence may flow the holy Streams of edifying discourse: may you ever remember, as you are sitting in your houses, going by the way, lying down, rising up, what the Lord doth then require of you, Deut. 6. 7.

2. To improve their present retirements from the World, for the settling of their spiritual Estates. 'Tis a common complaint amongst Christians, that they want assurance. Oh, if any of you that wanted assurance when you came to Prison, may carry that blessing our, what hap•...y gainers would you be! Now you are called more than ever to self-searching. Now bring your Graces to the Touchstone. Be much in self observation. See what your hearts do with most love and delight, go out unto: what are your greatest hopes, and your chief designs. See whether God's Intrest be uppermost in you: prove this, and prove all. Rest not in probable hopes. Think not that is enough that you can say, you hope 'tis well. God looks for extraordinary dispensation. Be restless till you can say, that you know 'tis well? that you know you are passed from death to life.

Think not that this is a privilege that only a few may expect. Observe but these three things:

- 1. To acquaint yourselves thoroughly with the condition of Life, and take heed of laying the marks of Salvation either too high or too low.
- 2. To be much in observing the frame, and bent, and workings of your own hearts.
- 3. To universally conscientious, and to be constant in even and close walkings, and then I doubt not but you will grow up speedily to a settled assurance, and know and feel that peace of God that passeth all understanding; and this will be somewhat worth your carrying out of Prison.

But I return to yourself. But what shall I say? I have more need to receive from you, than ability to give; only I will tell you my wishes for you: I wish that your body may prosper, as your soul also prospereth. I wish, that you may see the travel of your Soul; that you may find your people thriving under your hands in all manner of holy conversation and godliness, that whosoever converses with them, may see and hear by them, that God is in them of a Truth. I wish your enlargement from your bonds, and your enlargement in them: that your Prison may be but the Lanthorn through which your Graces, Experiences, Communion, and Prison attainments, may shine most brightly to all beholders. I wish your Prison may be a Paradise of Peace, and a Patmos of Divine discoveries. Lord Jesus set to thy Amen. I am, Sir,

Your unworthy Brother and Companion in the Kingdom and patience of Jesus, JO•...
ALLEINE.

LETTER. XL. [Directions to the Ministers of Somersetshire and Wiltshire, for the instructing of Families by way of Catechising.]

Sir,

THIS Letter cometh to you, like the men of Macedonia to Paul, crying to you, Come and help us. O how insufficient do we find ourselves for the praises of God! what reason have we to call upon ourselves, and to call upon all our Friends! and yet we foresee that all will be too little a Sacrifice at last, and too slender a return to the most High God, God, who hath made us such wonders of Mercy, and such signal instances of his Divine Power and rich Grace. You are not ignorant of our Estate, how the Sentence of death had passed upon us; how our flesh and our hearts failed, and friends and Physicians gave up their hopes: but God, that raised the Dead, was pleased to make us the Monuments of his wondrous mercy. O that the same God would make us the special instruments of his praise and glory. Of a Truth Sir, we perceive our hearts are too little, our Tongues are too short, our expressions are too low, either to conceive or utter what we owe to the great God. O help! help! bless the Lord, O our souls: bless the Lord, O our friends: O that all that have wrestled with God for us, might join hand in hand to make some suitable returns to the God of our lives, and may bring in everyone his Sacrifice, and all contribute to make one common stock of Praises, that many thanksgivings may abound to God on our behalves. O what hath Prayer done for us! while we live we must honor Prayer, and admire the power of Prayer, we owe our limbs and our lives to prayer. O that a goodly crop of praise may grow up unto God as a return for his Mercies: that the seed of prayers, and showers of tears, may procure sheaves of joy, and songs of deliverance.

But O what shall we render? wherewithal shall we come before the Lord, or bow ourselves to the most high God? O where shall we find a fitting sacrifice? Verily we will give ourselves and our all to him. But alas, what are we, and what is this little that we call our All? Therefore have we found in our hearts to write to you and others, that we might excite you to the Divine praises with us. And O that the Lord might be loved the better, and glorified the more for our sakes: Will you tell us wherein we may show our love to him? wherein we may best please and serve him? O that you would! herein assuredly you would most highly gratify us. O that we might do some singular thing for God; for certainly they are not common things that he hath done for us. We pray you call upon those that fear the Lord, to help us in celebrating his loving kindness. O how it pleaseth our very hearts to think that God should be loved and honored the better for us: that we may be instruments, if it be but for the blowing up of one flash, nay, the kindling of one spark of Divine love in the heart of his Children towards him! Sir, you cannot pleasure us in anything so much as in th...s, to love and admire God, and spread his praise more and more; that what is wanting through our weakness, may be made up in your abundance. But we have need to crave your pardon for our length; but the love of Christ constraineth us, and we hope you will pass by an error of love.

While we have been devising what to do for our God, we thought we could no way better him, than by providing such as you are to set up his great Name with us. We love and honor you, not only as you are a Member, but a Minister of Christ Jesus our Lord, and therefore deserve to be doubly dear unto us: And because we could think of no more pleasing a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, we have stirred up ourselves and friends with us, to send to you a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, this poor token of love, which though but small, yet we trust will be a sweet savor unto God, and will be accepted with you, being our two Mites cast into God's Treasury. But look not upon yourself as obliged to us hereby: but put it upon the account of Christ, to whose precious Name we dedicate, and from whom (although he be so much already before hand with us, yet) we expect a recompense at the Resurrection of the Just.

And being further desirous to promote the work of God in our low and slender capacities, we have been bold to provoke yourself, with other our Fathers and Brethren in the Ministry, to set about that necessary and much neglected work of Catechising; not a little pleasing ourselves in the sweet hope, that by your means we may be instrumental to spread the sweet savor of the knowledge of our God, in every place: and being well persuaded of your readiness to forward so blessed a work, we have stirred up ourselves and our friends to expend a considerable sum of money to furnish Ministers with Catechisms, a hundred whereof we have sent unto you, beseeching you to use your best prudence and utmost diligence for the spreading of them, and for others improvement by them, that our labor and charge in so good a work, prove not at last of no effect.

Sir, we shall humbly propose unto you, but not impose upon you. But let us be bold with you in Christ, to lay our requests before you as touching this concernment, they being indeed what judicious friends and brethren have thought fit to propound.

1. That that people be publicly and privately instructed about the high necessity and great usefulness of this duty.

2. That the Catechisms be freely given to all that will promise to use them.
3. That you would be pleased to acquaint yourself with all the Schools that are within your Verge; and that you would do your utmost to engage the Teachers thereof to teach their Scholars this Catechism; and that you would furnish all their Scholars that are capable and willing to learn.
4. That you will endeavor from house to house to engage the Master or Mistress of every Family, for the forwardsng of this work.
5. That you will appoint set-times wherein to take an account of the proficiency of all such as have promised to learn; and that, if it may be, they may be engaged to learn weekly a proportion, according to their Capacities.
6. That you would favor us so far, as to let us know as speedily as you may, of the receipt of these lines; and, if we may presume so far upon you, we pray you to indulge us some assurance under your hand, that you will to your power promote this happy design, and that by our Lady-day next you will acquaint Mr. Bernard what progress is made.

Sir, our souls will even travel in Birth for the success of this undertaking; and therefore we request you for the love of God, and by the respect which we are persuaded you bare to us, that you will labor to comfort and encourage us in our endeavors for God, which you can no way in the World do so well, as by letting us see, that there is some blessed fruit of our cost and pains; and that we have not run in vain, nor labored in vain. If there be any of these Catechisms remaining in your hands that you cannot dispose of by our Lady-day, be pleased to send them to Mr. Bernard, or to Mr. Rositer in Taunton. If you should need anymore, give us speedy notice, and you shall not fail to be furnished with what number you desire.

Thus upon the bended knees of our thankful souls, we commend our poor sacrifices, together with yourself, to the eternal God, and remain, Christ's devoted Servants, and your Friends, JOS. BERNARD. and JOS. ALLEINE.

CHAP. I.

The singular Duties of Christians.

I. Case of Conscience on Mat. 5. 45.

What do you more then others?

Q. I. Wherein should Christians be singular in their obedience? Or what may they, and must they do more then others?

A. Take the Answer in these 16 Rules containing the Character and Compass of a Christian.—

Rule I. Heartily to love them that slight you, and to wish and seek the good of those that hate you, and seek to hurt you: This is the very thing urged in the Text: If you salute your brethren only and love them that love you, do not even the Publicans the same? Matth. 5. 44, 46. To love them that do respect and value us, this everyone can do: but to love them truly that think meanly of us, and have prejudices and hard thoughts against us, and to speak well of them that speak evil of us, (as the sweet spirited Calvin, [Let Luther call me Dog or Devil, I will say of him nevertheless, he is a precious servant of Christ Jesus.]) This is to do more then others. Thus the Martyr Cranmer, of whom it was a Proverb, [Do the Bishop of Canterbury a displeasure, and you shall ever have him your friend.] Thus that Holy Man in his much to be admired parting words [I had never any greater pleasure in all my life then to forget and forgive injuries, and to show kindness to them that sought evil to me.] Study who have offended you, and disobliged you, and slighted you, and keep up good thoughts of them (if the case will bear it) and speak nothing but good of them, and think what kindness you may show them: pray for them; wish well to them; so shall you be the children of your Father which is in Heaven, Mat. 5. 45.

Rule II. To swim against the stream of the multitude: The dead fish will swim with, but the living against the stream: Many will turn Jews when their interest will carry it in the world: when religion is the fashion everyone will be in it: But to bear head against the current of the times, and to be for strict Godliness in all your ways, when the stream runs quite against it, to bear it down, and to resolve as David did, to be yet more vile, this is to be, and do more than others. The Samaritans will needs be Jews, when Alexander favors and helps them, but when Antiochus bloodily rages against them (as in the time of the Maccabees) then they will be none of the kin, but pretend themselves to be of another stock: (Which by the way, was the reason of the deadly hatred afterward between the Jews and them). But to be singular in your good choice and resolutions with Joshua, though all should vote against you with one consent, and with Noah to be perfect in our generations when never so wicked and so adulterous; and to walk with God when all flesh have corrupted their way, and tread a contrary course; this is to do more than others. Thus the three Children (or rather the three Champions) who would not fear the flouts of the multitude, nor the frowns of the great ones, nor the charge of singularity, but when all the Princes, Governors, Captains, Counselors, Sheriffs, and all the People, Nations and Languages fell down and worshipped, they stood by themselves and would not sinfully comply, Dan. 3. 3, 7, 18.

Rule III. To take most care of that which is most out of sight. A Christians eye is most on the things least seen; first upon his heart, herein he doth exceed the righteousness of the Pharisees, whose great care was to keep all fair and clean that came to view, but looked no farther: Make great conscience of your carriage in secret, and let your main guard be upon your hearts, and this will be more than others reach to. This was Paul's care to keep his conscience, his inside clean and undefiled, Acts 24. 16. And Job's care that though all the world did reproach him, he might not put a reproach into the mouth of his conscience, Job 27. 6. and David's care that his heart might be clean. 2. Upon his hope. Others look to the things seen, things in hand. but the true believer eyes his hopes, walks by faith, not by sight; and lives quite a different life from any others in the world besides; As living upon the hopes of Heaven, doth differ from living on the pleasures, profits, and honors of this world.

Rule IV. To be merciful to others failings, and very severe to our own. The noble Roman Cato could more easily forgive any than himself: To aggravate our own evils, and to have an excuse ready for our brothers; to censure ourselves freely, and to come with the mantle behind us to cover our brother; this is to do more than others. The hypocrite is a severe censorer abroad: he is like the eye that can see anything but itself: he can discern a moat in his brothers eye, but not a beam in his own. But the servant of God rebukes others with meekness, but falls out easily and bitterly with himself.

Rule V. To suffer rather than to sin: This was Moses choice: But the hypocrites is quite contrary: he chooseth iniquity rather than affliction: To go so far with Christ as our way lies together, is to do no more than an unsound Professor may reach to: The trial is when Christ's interest and ours do cross; and we must either baulk our duty or our safety and advantage. The famous Martyr under Julian, would not give one half-penny towards the building of the Idols Temple, though he was offered his life by the Emperor on those terms. The godly High Priest Eleazer when the Nobles persuaded him to eat other meat under color of swine's flesh, and they would persuade the King Antiochus that he had eaten swine's flesh, would die rather than stain his profession with the appearance of evil. When a man shall lie in outward misery and have a door of deliverance open, if he will but sin, and yet he will not accept it, as those worthies in Paul's Martyrology; this is to do more than others, Heb. 11. 36.

Rule VI. To rejoice in losses for Christ, and glory in the Cross: When others be discouraged at the news of hardship; as that forward and seemingly resolved Disciple; or shall be offended as soon as the Sun of persecution is up. We shall take pleasure in infirmities, in tribulations, and rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Christ; This is to do more than others. When the servants of God shall not only patiently, but triumphantly undergo the Crosses, that crack the brains, and break the hearts of others, and shall shake off the Viper without receiving any hurt; when Paul and Silas shall sing in the stocks, and the resolved Martyrs shall embrace the Faggots & kiss the Stake: When the Valiant Philpot shall say of his Prison [In the judgment of the world we are in Hell, but I find in it the sweet consolations of Heaven:] and the Holy Bradford [My Prison is sweeter to me than any Parlour, then any pleasure I have had in all my life.] This is indeed to exceed others.

Rule VII. To be good when we shall be evil spoken of for our labor. A Pharisee will do those duties that will gain applause with men, but to take up with despised duties, disgraceful duties, and with David to be religious, when it will render him Vile, this is to do more than others. The Philosopher could say, It is noble indeed for a man to do well when he knows he shall hear ill for it. To take up Religion when everyone kicks it off: to stand up alone with Luther for the truth, when the whole world is gone a wandering after the Whore. To have his hand against every man, and to be for Christ with Athanasius against the whole Universe, this is indeed to do some singular thing.

Rule VIII. To strike in with God's interest when it is falling. To join ourselves to the Lord's people when its the weakest side: To espouse their interest with Moses, when they were in deep affliction, Heb. 11. 25, 26. To own ourselves to be some of them, undauntedly, when this way is everywhere spoken against; this is to tread Antipodes to the course of this world.

Rule IX. To be most cruel to the sin that is naturally most dear. The hypocrite hides his sweet morsels under his tongue: he spares as it were the fattest of the Cattel: he saith, The Lord pardon his servant concerning this thing: But when a man shall off with his right hand, out with the right eye, serve his Absalom as Joab did, when he took three darts, and thrust thorough his heart, this is to do more than others. The sincere Christian is most angry with the sin of his temper, against this he aims the arrows of all his prayers: he keeps him from his iniquity: he drives the whole herd of sin before him, but especially shoots at and singles out this to run it down.

Rule X. To live upon the divine promises when others live upon their possessions. Others are all for what is in hand, with them words are but wind; they cannot live upon them: the promises are to them a barren heath and dry breasts: but when we make the promises our heritage, the staff of our life, the life of our hearts, when the promises are the bottle we run to in all our faintings; and while others hope in their Wealth, our hope is in the Word, this is to do more then others.

Rule XI. To love that best and choose it soonest, which doth cross the flesh most? The godly man's rule is, to take the self-denying side, so he be sure it be safe: when others study is to please themselves, his is to curb himself; the life of others is a flesh-pleasing, his a self-denying life: others joy is, when they can gratify themselves, his when he can get victory over himself.

Rule XII. To be most hot in that wherein self is least concerned. Paul is meek as a lamb under personal injuries, 1 Cor. 4. 12. Acts 17. 16. but how is his spirit stirred when God is dishonored? A man of understanding is of a cool spirit, that is, in his own concerns: but Moses the meek waxes hot with indignation at the sight of the calf. To be hot and forward in those duties where the flesh's interest is concerned, is to do no more then a Jehu, 2 Kings 10. 16, 30.

Rule XIII. To make true conscience of the least sins, but most conscience of the greatest. In one of these will the hypocrite be found tardy: It may be he will fly from open sins and startle at gross staring sins; but of little sins he makes little conscience, This he allows of and connives at. Or else he will be very tender of little things, scruple the picking the ears of corn on the Sabbath day, or the curing of the sick, and strain at the gnat; when he will in other things swallow a camel; devour widows houses. The sincere will indulge no sin; grieves for, groans under, cries out feelingly against his very infirmities, but most dreads what God most hates.—

Rule XIV. To allow yourselves in the neglect of no duty, but to reserve your zeal for the duties of most weight. To tythe mint, and cummin, and neglect judgment, mercy and faith; to be zealous for human Ceremonies, Ordinances, and men's Traditions, and omit the weightier matters of the Law, is right the Pharisees guise, Matth. 23. 23. Matth. 15. 2. To eye both the Tables, to join sweetly together morality and piety, to be punctual with Men, but not careless of God; to give to Caesar the things that be Caesar's, but first to give to God the things that be God's, this is to do more then others. The sincere Christian hath respect to all God's Commandments, walks in all his Statutes; he is throughout with God, but he is most zealous in those things that lie next the heart of religion.

Rule XV. To love your Reprovers. Herein David doth more then Ahab, see their contrary frames, 1 Kings 22. 8. Psal. 141. 5.

Rule XVI. To subject all your worldly interest to your Makers glory, and perform holy duties with holy ends, and while others do their best actions with carnal aims; you must do your common and civil actions with heavenly aims.

Q. How we may know whether we be, and do more then others that are unsound?

I shall answer this Question by propounding eight Questions to you, beseeching you to retire to the most solemn and strict examination, and make conscience to give a clear answer to these few Interrogatories, and that will resolve the Case.

Q. I. When others do pick and choose, have you respect to all God's Commandments?—The hypocrite may have great respect to the comforts, but he hath little to the commands of Religion: He is much for the privileges and promises: little for the Precepts and Duties: He is partial in the Law: he will take but here and there where he likes, and where God's commands will serve his interest: or at least will not pinch too hard upon the flesh. The sound Christian sets all God's commands before him: He eyes all his copy; and heartily designs and studies a throughout conformity: He hath no starting holes, nor contrived haunts; nor doth he halt between the Lord and Baal; nor serve two Masters: He doth not fear the Lord and serve other God's; nor divides his service between God and Mammon, but he is all for uniformity and entirely devoted to God's service, and fear alone: He hath a good conscience, willing in all things to live honestly, and doth truly, though not perfectly, forsake all his sins and keep all God's statutes that are known to him: Let me therefore ask you two questions. (1.) When others divide the Tables, do you sweetly conjoin them in your practice? The hypocrite it may be is just and square towards men, but follow him to his family or closet; you shall find but little of God: His family is neglected, his soul is neglected: Or it may be he is a forward first-Table man, but you shall find him tardy in the second: He will make many prayers, and long prayers, yet make no conscience of devouring widows houses: He is a great pretender to piety, but mean while neglects judgment, and mercy: The sincere join altogether: He is so far careful of justice with men, that mean while he will not neglect the first and great part of justice, viz. to give God his due: He doth justly, he loves mercy, but withal walks humbly with God: He walketh soberly, with respect to himself; righteously towards his neighbor, and godly towards his Maker: He is not of those that are good only on their knees, but you shall find him everywhere conscientious: you shall have temperance at his table, chastity and modesty in his behavior; grace and truth in his words; charity in his deeds, faithfulness in his trust justice in his dealings. He doth not only seem to be religious, but bridleth his tongue: He is not only a good Christian, but a good Neighbor, not only a good Man, but a good Husband, a good Master, a dutiful Child, a diligent and faithful Servant, a good Subject. In a word, he makes great conscience of discharging the duties of his relations among men.] (2.) When others stick in externals, do you look to the spiritual part of every command, and principally mind the inwards and vitals of Religion? Do you not only make conscience of performing duties, but do you carefully look to the manner of performing of them, and the ends for which you do perform them? Do you not only make conscience of open but of secret sins? Do you abound above all in secret duties? Do you keep a watch upon your hearts, and make conscience, not only of the gross acts of sin, but even of sinful thoughts, inclinations, and desires? And are grieved even with your very infirmities and the corrupt disposition of your natures, which you cannot help though you would?—

Q. II. When others have their reserves in closing with Christ, do you give up all to him entirely? Have you taken Christ not hand over head, but deliberately, understandingly, sitting down first, and counting the cost? Have you not secret reserves for your own ease, safety, estates, esteem on some beloved sin? Have you upon solemn consideration accepted Christ as the Lord your righteousness, for better for worse, for all changes of times and conditions? to run all hazards with him, and to take your lot with him fall as it will?—

Q. III. When others are for a little of religion by the by, do you make religion your business? Do you not put off God with the worlds leavings? and serve him when you are at leisure? Must not God stand by while the world is first served? and are not your souls the least of your cares? and put off with some by scraps, and ends of your time? Is Religion your Trade, and your conversation in Heaven? do you walk with God? or have you only now and then a turn with him? When you have ended your prayers, is there an end of your religion till you come to them again? or do you carry on a design of religion throughout your whole course? Have you only a list of religion at the outside the piece? or is the woof of religion woven into the whole cloth? into heart and life? into your discourse and trades and tables? do you first seek the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof? Is it the chief care of your lives, that God be served, and your souls be saved? and is this the one thing necessary with you, that you chiefly mind, and are most solicitous about? Do your very hearts say with David, one thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will seek after, &c.—

Q. IV. When others are for the wages of religion, are you for the work? Can you say with David, I have chosen thy precepts? do your hearts come off freely in this choice? Had you rather be holy, than otherwise, if you were at your choice? had you rather be God's servants and live at his command, then at your own lusts? Do you count the Laws of Christ your heritage, or rather do you not count them your bondage? Do you choose not only the wages of righteousness, but the ways of righteousness? Are God's Commandments your delight? and are the sweetest hours of your lives, the hours you spend with him? Do you never enjoy yourselves so much as when you most enjoy God? Is his service the greatest comfort, and is it meat and drink to you to do his will, (unless when you are not yourselves in the time of temptation or desertion.) Do you make use of holy duties only as men do of Physic, when they are ill at ease, when conscience lasheth or affliction stings, as it were, to conjure down the frightful furies? or to pacify God, that he may not hurt you? or else do you use them as your daily bread, the very staff of your life, and means of your comforts?

Q. V. When others are for the cheap and easy religion, are you for self-denial? When others are for the religion that will serve them best, are you for that which will serve God best? When others are all upon the sparing hand, and will spare what may be spared, and study how they may best save charges in going to heaven, are you of Princely spirits, to resolve not to serve the Lord with that which will cost you nothing? Is your course of religion such as doth put your flesh to it, and cross and curb its desires? Or do you love to give it what it craves, and suffer it to take its own way? Have you no enemy you dread so much as self? Do you pamper and please it and make provision for it? or do you pray and watch against it, and grieve for its unhappy infirmities in your actions? and had rather then all the world that this enemy were under your feet:—

Q. VI. When others are for no more of religion then needs must, are you for the height of religion? The hypocrite (as one well) is very inquisitive what is the lowest pitch that a man may have, and go to heaven; and upon this design, if he could find but this, he would look no further: but the sincere Christian though satisfied that his state is safe, will rest in no attainments in grace; but reaches forward and presses on, if it were possible to attain to the resurrection of the dead. He that doth not desire and design and endeavor perfection, never yet came up to sincerity. A true believer desires holiness for holiness sake, and therefore is set upon perfecting holiness; Others desire it only for heavens sake, and therefore are only for so much as will bear their charges thither; others make use of holiness only as a bridge to Heaven, and therefore are for no more then will just serve their turn. The true believer hath a holy nature, and therefore holiness is his element and natural employment; and he must needs desire holiness in its height, because every nature reaches after perfection in its kind: The godly desires not holiness only because it is the way to Heaven, but he loves Heaven the better for the holy way that leads to it, and for the perfect holiness which is there.

Q. VII. When others are all for the Salvation of Christ, are you as truly for Sanctification by Christ? Do you take Christ as God offers him with all his offices, and benefits, to be both a Prince and a Savior, to give you repentance as well as remission of sins? Are you willing of the dominion of Christ, as well as deliverance by Christ? Do you close with his burden, as well as his benefits? do you count his laws your liberty? his government, not your bondage but your privilege? his service your freedom? Do you go in Christ's ways, as in jives or fetters? or do you run with enlargement of heart, delight or real willingness?

Q. VIII. When others do make self their end, do you set up God above all as your highest end? The hypocrite doth the same duties with the godly, but with different ends: He eats for himself and fasts for himself, and prays with no better then self ends, and therefore is rejected. Now is it your great design in your whole course to glorify God and enjoy God? Do you count this your whole business and blessedness? do you make other business to stoop to this? other interest to yield to this? Do your souls breath after this above all worldly good, that Christ may be magnified in you? Do you count your name and your estate as loss, and the delights of sense but puddle-water in comparison of Christ? If conscience give in a comfortable and clear answer to these Questions, Go in peace, Blessed are you of the Lord: God is your Friend. Heaven is your Heritage: The Promises are your Portion: Christ is yours, all is yours; For he that doth these things shall never be moved, Psal. 15. 5.

A Necessary Case on 1 Thess. 4. 1.

Q. What may, and must a Christian be, and do, that he may please God?

A. To your pleasing of God something is necessary as to your persons or estates, and something as to your performances and acts?

First, As to your persons or estates, it is necessary in general that you be in a state of reconciliation with God: If you would walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, you must first be friends with him: for how can two walk together except they be agreed? Get the controversy taken up between God and thee, and then shalt thou with Levi, walk with God in peace. Labor to get the breaches made up, to have the enmity slain, to have divine displeasure removed: till thy pardon be obtained, and thy peace made, nothing thou canst do will please God: he will be angry with thy person, and angry with thy prayers: What a tart Message is that to impenitent sinners, Malachi. 1. 10. God cannot take pleasure in their persons: I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of Hosts] nor in any of their performances; neither will I accept an offering at your hand.] He professeth that his soul had no delight in them, and tells them they are unto him as a Vessel wherein there is no pleasure, Gen. 22. 28. It's the modest expression of that Vessel into which Nature empties itself. Come in then, and touch the golden Scepter; yield to mercy; kiss the Son; resign to Christ: accept of the peace tendered you in the Word of Reconciliation, and then God will be friends. More particularly, that you may be in a state of reconciliation, and so in a capacity of pleasing God, you must follow these directions.

1. Put off every sin: It is your iniquity that separateth between you and your God: this is the make-bate. If thou wouldst have God pleased, turn every sin out of doors, pluck it out, cast it from thee: If thou regard iniquity in thy heart, God will not hear thee, nor regard thee, Psal. 66. 8. If thou art of them that have pleasure in unrighteousness, the Lord hath no pleasure in thee. He is not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness; evil shall not dwell with him: the foolish shall not stand in his sight: he hateth all the workers of iniquity. See that thou abandon every sin that thou knowest; spare not one Agag; not a right eye, not an Herodias; for then God will not spare thee: Give the Darling of thy bosom a Bill of divorce: say to all thy Idols, get thee hence. God will not look to that man that looks pleasantly upon any sin: The Jealous God will not endure to see thee hankering on the Harlots lips; embracing any sin with delight: He will not bear it, to see thee smile upon any sin: He holds thee for a Traitor to his Crown, if thou willingly harbor his Enemy: Though thou be very diligent in God's Service, and presentest him with multitude of Sacrifices, and many Prayers, he will be pleased with nothing, but hide his Face, and stop his Ears, whilst thou keepest thine iniquities in thine hands, Isa. 1. 16, 17, 18. God will not amicably treat with them that will not put away the evil of their doings. O look into thy hands! look into thy heart! look into thy house! into thy shop! thy trade! thy calling! see if there be not some way of wickedness, that thou art found in. Thou canst not have peace with God, nor he pleasure in thee till this be removed; put off therefore the old Man with his deeds.

2. Put on the Lord Jesus Christ, Rom. 13.]

First, The red Robe of his Righteousness for Justification: The Lord will never give thee a good look, nor a good word but in Christ: He is a revenging, a consuming fire out of Christ: but get on his robes, & he will be well pleased. Enoch had this testimony that he pleased God: but Christ had much more that God was well-pleased with sinners, in and for him. Away with these rags, and with these fig-leaves. How can the righteous soul of God but abhor you, whilst in the menstruous clothes of your own righteousness? Dare not to come to God but with Christ in your Arms? Approach him not but in the garments of your elder Brother, lest you carry away the curse. Joshua's filthy garments must be put off, and Christ's Rayment put on: or else there is no standing before the bright and burning eyes of infinite holiness. Put on the Lord Jesus in believing; that is, accept of him in all his Offices, with all his inconveniencies, and deliver up thyself to him; and this will entitle thee to his merits, and righteousness: Without this nothing will avail. If thy head were waters, and thine eyes a fountain of tears, if thou shouldst wear thy tongue to the roots with praying, if thou shouldst weep an Ocean, and wash thyself in thine own brine; all could not get out one spot: nothing can be accepted while thou art out of Christ; and therefore in the first place apply thyself to him. God will accept of no Gift but off his Altar.

Secondly, The white Robe of his grace of Sanctification, Rev. 5. 11. Thou that art in the flesh, that is, unrenewed, unsanctified, canst not please God, Rom. 8. 8. Never think to make up the matter by a little mending and reforming particular Acts: Man thy heart must be renewed; thy state must be clean altered; or God cannot be pleased, Matth. 7. 16, 17, 18. The Tree must be made good; the Fountain must be healed, or else the Stream will be salt and the Fruit sour. If Christ be once formed in thee, that is, his image in his grace: Likeness is the ground of Love: Similitude and suitableness of nature, is the loadstone of Affection. God cannot but love his own likeness, wouldst thou have his Favor? wouldst thou be his Delight? then conform to his pleasure, study to be like him, purify thyself as he is pure. The righteous Lord loveth righteousness: he desireth truth in the inward parts, and takes infinite complacency in the graces of his people. These are the Spikenard and the Saffron, the Spices, the Beds of Lilies; the sweet Ointments that Christ is so taken up with: These are the Cinamon and the Trees of Frankincense, the Calamus and the Camphire; the Myrrh and the Aloes: the Chains of the neck, and the precious Pearls that he is so ravished withal, and doth so superlatively commend, Cant. 4. 9. This is the Rayment of Needlework, and Gold of Ophir, wherein the Queen is presented to her Royal Husband, Psal. 45. 9, 13. Therefore as the Elect of God holy and beloved, Col. 5. 12, 13. Put ye on bowels of mercy, kindness: put off all these, anger, wrath, malice, filthy communication, and put on the new Man, Col. 3. 9, 10. Particularly, let me commend to you some special graces which God doth manifest himself to be wonderfully pleased withal. As ever you would please God get on these:

I. Be clothed with Humility, 1 Pet. 5. 5. This is a Garment which must be put on, or else you cannot be accepted or saved, Matth. 18. 3. Here is the dress that you must come to God in. He must be served in humility of mind, Acts 20. 14. You must humble yourselves to walk with him, Mich. 6. 8. Humility is a plain, but yet a comely garment. This grace doth eminently honor God; and therefore God doth put a peculiar honor upon, and manifest a most special delight in this. Of all the men in the world this is the man that God will lock unto; even he that is poor and of a contrite spirit that trembleth at his Word, Isa. 66. 2. Though he be the high and lofty One, who inhabiteth Eternity, whose Name is Holy, (from whence the trembling soul is ready to conclude, that surely such a fearful Majesty, cannot but despise him; such sin hating purity cannot but abhor him; yet he will lay (Isa. 47. 15.) aside his Majesty and bear with man's impurity, and condescend to most familiar and constant communion and cohabitation with his poor dust, when contrite at his feet, and prostrate in humility. If thou wouldst be accepted of God, come as Benhadad's servants to the King of Israel with a rope about thy neck, and ashes on thy head, 1 King. 20. 32. think meanly of thyself, and God will honor thee, 1 Sam. 2. 30. Put thyself in the lowest room, and God will set thee higher. Be little in thine own eyes, and thou shalt be high in his. A proud heart and a proud look is with God the first-born of abomination. As ever thou wouldst have God well-pleased with thee, be thoroughly displeased with thyself: If thou dost thoroughly loath thyself, God doth love thee: If thou abhorrest thyself, God delighteth in thee. Be angry with thyself, and the Almighty will turn away his anger from thee: Condemn thyself and God will acquit thee. In no wise extenuate thy sins, nor justify thyself. Think the worse of thyself, and be willing that others should think meanly of thee, and heartily love them that slight thee. This is the frame in which God is well-pleased: pass sentence on thyself, and God will absolve thee: Set thyself at his footstool, and he will lift thee up into the Throne, Rev. 2.

II. Labor for sincerity: This is not a distinct grace from the rest; yet for Doctrines sake I speak to it distinctly. Uprightness is the great thing that God looks after, and covenants for, Gen. 17. 1. It renders all our persons and performances acceptable before God, Prov. 15. 8. Such as are upright in the way are God's delight, Prov. 11. 20. To these are all the promises of peace, Salvation, Pardon, preservation, Blessedness, Psal. 87. 10. In a word, there is no good thing God will with-hold from them that walk uprightly, Prov. 28. 10. This was Noah's praise that he was upright in his generation: This was that set off Job at such a rate that God doth so extol him for, and as it were make his boast of him, the singular sincerity and integrity of his heart. Study to be upright: See that the main bent of your hearts be to please God, and honor him: That God's interest be uppermost with you: That he hath the chief share in you, and the eye of the soul be principally to him; for in this sincerity doth consist, as to your main state. Let your great care be of your hearts: Here is a Christians great work. The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh to the heart: see therefore that thou look to it: Let thine eye be chiefly there where God's eye is: He looketh not so much what thou dost as with what a heart: Go then and do likewise: yet be not satisfied in this that you are upright as to your states, but labor to approve yourselves in uprightness to God in your particular actions: Do common as well as spiritual actions with holy ends: Much of our lives are lost for want of this: So much as is done for God, of his strange grace he accounts himself our debtor. But what is done for no higher end than self, is lost from our account.

III. Put on a spirit of zeal and activity. How wonderfully is God pleased with Phineas zeal, Numb. 25. 11, 12, 13. What a great approbation doth he manifest of him? What an attestation doth he give to him? he is so greatly pleased with his zealous appearance for him, that he turns away his displeasure from the whole congregation of Israel, and overlooks their crimson provocations against him. On the contrary, there is nothing that God is more displeased with than the remissness, and lifelessness, and indifferency in Religion. The luke-warm water is not a greater offense to the stomach, then the luke-warm Professor is to God; and therefore he will spew such a one out of his mouth, Rev. 3. 16. Christians, where is your zeal for the Lord of Hosts? Christ's redeemed must be zealous of good works: Tit. 2. 14. not slothful in business but fervent in spirit serving the Lord, Acts 18. 25. Rom. 12. 11. Acts 26. 6, 7. instantly night and day for the hope of the promise: do not only that which is right in the sight of the Lord, but do it with all your heart: The Lord loveth a willing servant: Bestir yourselves for the Lord. Be ye followers of Christ who went up and down doing good. Every Christian should be a common blessing. A public good. This is to be the children of your Father which is in Heaven, who is good unto all, and his tender mercies are over all his works: And be sure the Father doth best love that child that is most like him: A private narrow spirit is a low and a base spirit; unworthy of a Christian. A Catholic communicative spirit, full of great desires, and great designs. A large heart, set upon doing good, whose fire though ever hottest within, will be breaking forth of his breast and provoking others: whose love will not be confined to a party; but gladly and thankfully owneth Christ where ever he sees him. This Catholic spirit, I say, is the glory of Religion; the Churches blessing, and God's delight.

IV. Live by faith, Heb. 10. 38. This is a precious grace in God's account, 2 Pet. 1. 1. 1 Pet. 1. 7. It giveth glory to God; and therefore God taketh no small pleasure in it. By faith Enoch obtains that testimony that he pleased God, Rom. 4. 20. Heb. 11. 5. 2 Cor. 4. 18. Heb. 11. 39. Matth. 8. 10. If you would so walk as to please God, you must walk by faith. Christians must look to the things unseen; they must not live at the common rate: Christ must be their life and breath, their prayers and their promises, their daily bread. By faith did the Elders obtain that good report: 'twas Faith that Christ was so greatly taken with in the Centurion, which made him to commend him for a none-such. This was that which won such a singular praise and approbation from our Savior to the woman of Canaan; even her victorious faith, Matth. 15. 28. Thou hast taken away my heart, my Sister, my Spouse, thou hast taken away my heart with one of thine eyes, Cant. 4. 9. that is, with thy faith. Live in the power of faith, and thou wilt please him to the heart: Give glory to him by believing. Let the life thou now livest in the flesh be by faith of the Son of God.

Live by faith in prosperity, though thou hast the world about thee, let it not be above thee: Keep it at thy feet; use it as thy servant: Be much in the views of glory, and contemplation of Eternity: Buy as though thou possessed not, rejoice as though thou rejoicedst not, love as though thou lovedst not, use this world as not abusing it, it is but a fashion not a substance, and that which it is passeth away, 1 Cor. 7. 30, 31. Use it therefore with mortified affections, and prove the sincerity of your faith by the victory over your inordinate content and delight in, and desires after, and cares for the things of this world, 1 John 5. 4.

Live by faith in adversity: Weep as though you wept not; enduring the cross and despising the shame, as looking unto Jesus, Heb. 12. 2. Heb. 11. 26. accounting Christ's reproaches your riches, his shame your glory, Acts 5. 41. Compare these light afflictions with the weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. Rom. 8. 18. Ply your hearts with the Promises. Count if you can the riches that are laid up in them. Roll yourselves upon the Lord, Psal. 37. 5. and know that your heavenly Father hath no greater delight, then to see his Children trust him with confidence, when all visible helps are out of sight, and he seems to be their enemy, Job 13. 15.

V. Put on the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, this is in the sight of God of great price. 1 Pet. 3. 4. Study to be like your Father, slow to anger, ready to forgive, Psal. 130. 1. 8. forgetting injuries, loving enemies, requiting ill-will with kindness, ill words with courtesies, neglects with benefits; and if any wrong you, do him a kindness the sooner: so shall you bear his likeness and be his delight. And know ye that are of unmortified passions and unbridled tongues God hath an especial hatred and displeasure against, a froward heart and a froward tongue, Prov. 3. 32. 11, 20. 1. 12. 8. 12. Oh seek meekness: How can the holy Dove rest in a wrathful heart. Christ is a Lamb of meekness: how can he take pleasure in an unquiet contentious spirit: Verily with the froward he will show himself froward, Psal. 18. 26. If you will not forgive others he will not forgive you. Art thou hard to be pleased, a froward wife, a froward master, a cross and willful servant? surely God will not be pleased with thee: he will mete to you as you measure to others, Matth. 16. 24.

VI. Get a spirit of self-denial. God is then pleased best when self is displeased most: When we can be content to be emptied, content to be abased, that God may be honored; and with the Holy Baptist, are willing to be eclipsed by Christ; willing to decrease that he may increase: counting ourselves no losers whilst his interest is a gainer: John. 3. 29, 30. rejoicing that we are made low for Christ's advancement: This is well-pleasing unto God: How greatly was he pleased with Solomon's self-denying choice, and gives him his asking, throwing in riches, and honors into the bargain? 1 Kings 3. 10, 11, 12. Strange was Abraham's self-denial. What! to sacrifice with his own hand, the whole hope of his Family! the Heir of Promise! the Child of his Years! a Son! an only Son! when his life was bound up in the lads life! Was ever mortal thus put to it? But Abraham shall not be a loser. God gives him a testimony from Heaven: blesses him, blesses his Seed: blesses all Nations in him, Gen. 22. 15, 16, 17, 18. Wonderful was Moses his self-denial; but more wonderful was his acceptation and reward, Heb. 11. 24. none like Moses, Deut. 34. 10. God preferred him in another manner than Pharaoh could. He must speak with him face to face as a man with his friend: His word shall be as it were a Law with God: Speak for whom he will, they shall be spared though they seemed to be devoted to destruction. But speak against him who durst, he shall be sure to bear his iniquity, Numb. 12. 8. Forget self: Renounce thine own wisdom; thine own worthiness; thine own will; Bite in thy passions: Curb thine appetite: Bridle thy tongue: This do and thou shalt be greatly accepted: and shalt find that God's favor will infinitely reward thee, for all the murmuring oppositions and discontents of thy flesh, which will be ready to be impatient to have the reins held so hard.

VII. Maintain a spirit of resolution and constancy in the ways of God, Heb. 10. 38. This was the renown of the three Worthies, Dan. 3. They feared not the fierceness of Nebuchadnezzar's rage, nor the fire of the furnace: all the world could not make them bow: and how gloriously did God own them, and miraculously evidence his pleasure in them: Stand your ground: Resolve to live and die by substantial godliness: cleave to the Lord with full purpose of heart: Let no difficulties make you change your station, then shall you be an honor and a pleasure to the God that made you.

Well then, would you know what frame of heart is pleasing to God? why this humble, sincere, zealous, active, frame, this believing, meek, self-denying, resolved frame; this is the frame that is well pleasing in the sight of God?

Secondly, As to your performances, more briefly that those may please God, you must heedfully look to these five things.

1. That they be done by the right Rule; which is God's Word; You must not follow the imaginations of your own hearts, Numb. 15. 39. you must not do that which is right in your own eyes: In all sacred actions you must have God's command to warrant you: you may not offer to God of that, of which you are not able to say, Thou requirest these things at our hands, Isa. 1. 12. In all civil actions you must have God's allowance: Be sure he will never accept that which his Word condemns; under pains of God's displeasure, dare not to set your hands to what the Word forbids.

2. That they be done to the right end, which is God's glory: How damnably did the Pharisees err! How miserably did Jehu miscarry! and both in acts for the matter commanded, for want of aiming at this end.

3. That they proceed from right Principles. (1.) Faith, without which it is impossible to please God: Prayer will not avail except it be the prayer of Faith, Heb. 11. 6. We believe, and therefore we speak. (2.) Love: If we should give our goods to the poor, and bodies to the fire, and not from Love, it would profit us nothing. Where the slavish fear of hell only, or of the lashes of conscience, or the love of man's praise, carries men to duties, or where any other carnal principle is predominant in the act, it cannot please God. (3.) Fear: we cannot serve God acceptably, without reverence and godly fear (not slavish fear.) The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in them that hope in his mercy. Observe the happy mixture, where these two are conjoined; that is, a true filial fear and faith. Saith David I will come into thy House in the multitude of thy mercy (Behold his faith) and in thy fear will I worship towards thy holy Temple (there is his fear with faith) Faith without fear were bold presumption: Fear without faith is sinful despair: join them together and God is well-pleased.

4. That they be done in a right manner: Preparedly, not rashly and inconsiderately in the presence of so dreadful a Majesty: prudently, for lawful acts may be spoiled, and be done unlawfully without consideration had to the offense that may (in some cases attend them): yea holy Duties as well as common Actions may be turned into sins, by being ill-timed, and for want of a due attending the present circumstances: Holily, not rashly, uttering anything with our mouths before God; but behaving ourselves as in his sight: Heartily, not feignedly: with our lips going, when our minds are gadding.

5. That they be directed through the right means, that is, Jesus Christ the only way to the Father: Bring all thy Sacrifices to the High Priest, offer all upon this Altar, else all is lost: not that it is enough to say (Through our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen) at the end; but in every duty you must come with lively dependence on him for righteousness and strength, for assistance and acceptance. Remember to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus: to come leaning upon his hand, without this all your services will be rejected at last.

CHAP. II.

A third Case of Conscience grounded upon the words of our Savior.

John 8. 29. For I do always those things that please him.

Qu. I. Is any man able in this life to come up to the Example of Christ in this, To do always those things that please God?

Ans. In regard there is none that doth good and fineth not, and God is not, nor can be pleased with sin, no not in his own people, but most of all hates it in them, it cannot be that any man in this life should fully come up to Christ's Example in this: yet may we come so far on towards it, as that not only in our immediate addresses to God, but in the general course of our lives, we may come to please God. Thus Enoch and Noah walked with God: i. e. in their general course they walked so as to please God, and approve themselves in his sight. Thus the meanest of actions if done by us as unto the Lord, as the Servants of Christ, have a promise of acceptance and reward, Col. 3. 22, 23, 24.

Q. II. How may we come in our measure to be followers of Christ in this, to do always those things that please God?

Ans. In order to this there is something necessary with reference 1. To our Persons: 2. To our Principles: 3. To our Practices, with reference to our Persons: and here it is necessary 1. That there be an alteration of our natures by renewing grace: for they that are in the flesh cannot please God, Rom. 8. 8.

These wild Vines must needs bring forth sour grapes, Isa. 5. 4. The fruit that they bear (how specious and fair soever to the eye) is evil fruit, Matth. 7. 17. Where there is not a good treasure of grace in the heart, a man cannot in his actions bring forth good things, Matth. 12. 36.

Many enlightened sinners think by reading, and praying; forsaking some conscience-wasting sins, to pacify God, and set all right: Mistaken souls, let me undeceive you: you begin at the wrong end, your first and greatest care must be, to get your hearts and natures changed and renewed by the power of converting grace: you labor in vain at the streams, while the fountain of corruption in the heart remains in its strength. You must not think it is with you as it is with a ruinous house, where the mending of here and there a little will make up all again; no, but the old building must be quite book down, and the foundation stone laid anew, in a sound repentance from dead works, and through conversion unto God. Till this be done you must know that God hath no pleasure in you, neither will accept an offering at your hand, Mal. 1. 10. as he doth from those that are his friends.

2. That there be the Acceptation of your persons through faith in Christ Jesus: For in him alone it is that God will be well-pleased, Matth. 3. last, so that without faith, interressing us in him, it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6.

For the better understanding both these Particulars, know that there are two Attributes of God to which you must bear a conformity, or else you cannot please him.

1. The holiness of God: for he is not a God that hath pleasure in iniquity; He heareth not sinners: The foolish shall not stand in his sight; He hateth all the workers of iniquity, Psal. 5. 4, 5. John 9. 31. God can no more take pleasure in the unsanctified, then we in swine or serpents.

2. The Justice of God: for he will by no means clear the guilty, Exod. 34. 7. Could we have inherent holiness in us in our unpardoned state, yet justice could not but be infinitely offended while guilt lieth unremoved: as you may see in Christ. For though he were perfectly holy, yet being under the guilt of our sins imputed to him, the severity of God's justice broke out against him.

Now man being naturally an offense both to the holiness and justice of God, there must of necessity pass upon him in order to his pleasing God, this twofold change.

1. The real change of Sanctification: I call this a real change, because by this there is a real change infusing of new qualities and dispositions, making him of proud humble, of carnal spiritual, and heavenly, &c.

2. The relative change of Justification: I call this a relative change, because this is not a change in a man's nature, but in his condition, making him to stand in a new relation to the Law, with reference to which he was before guilty and condemned: but now the Law pronounces the same man clear and acquitted; and this is not for any righteousness infused into him, but for the satisfaction and payment of another laid down for him: satisfaction there must be, and a righteousness must be tendered, or else God cannot be at peace. We have nothing to pay, Luke 7. 42. Oh sinner! away to Christ for it, Hide thee in the Clifts of that Rock; Run to the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness. Appear not before God but in the Robes of Christ's Righteousness. He sends you to Jesus, as he did them to Job, Chap. 42. the last. Go to my servant Job, he shall pray for you, him will I accept: Get out of yourselves: fly to Christ, labor to be found in him; else all your endeavors in wringing and washing yourselves will be to no effect.

2. With reference to our Principles. And here it is necessary that some corrupt principles be unlearnt, and some holy principles. be received and retained.

Some corrupt Principles must be unlearnt. As 1. That it is enough if we serve God on the Lord's day, and we may serve ourselves all the rest of the week. Though God hath reserved one day in seven wholly for his immediate service, which is therefore in a peculiar sense called the Lord's day, yet we must know that every day is his, and that he hath not allowed us one hour nor inch of time, but only for his service. Indeed he hath service of more sorts than one: but we must know that the business of our ordinary affairs, if rightly done, is a serving of the Lord Christ, Col. 3. 24. God is as truly served by you in the working days labor, as the Sabbath days rest, if you do it in a right manner and to holy ends.

There are a generation whose Religion is but a Sundays Religion, which they put on and off with their Sundays Cloaths; and then they think God is fairly served for the week: although God knows, that little they do then, is but poorly done neither. Never think God will accept it at thy hands when thou livest six days to the world and thyself, for one that thou spendest for him. This shows thee to be under the unmortified power of self-love and not to be the Lord's: for none of his, liveth to himself, Rom. 14. 7. You must remember that you are but to learn, upon the Sabbath, how to serve God all the week, and not think when the Lord's day is ended his work is done.

2. That if God be served morning and evening it is enough, though we serve ourselves the rest of the day: God must be served every day and all the day Prov. 23. 17. You must be serving him not only in your Fasts, but at your Meals; not only on your Knees, but in your Callings.

Some think that if they keep up religious duties they may do what they list at other times: that if they be intermperate, lascivious, unrighteous, it is but to make even again with God at night, and all will be well. Like the whore in the Proverbs, that having made her offering was presently ready for new wickedness, Prov. 7. 14. as if she had paid off the old score, and might now boldly run upon a new. These are not the Children of God, but of Belial.

Others think that though they may not serve the Devil at any time, yet giving God his dues morning and evening they may serve themselves the rest of the time. But in vain do they lay claim to God, who live more to themselves than they do to him. This will be found horrible sacrilege to put off God but with the tenth. God is to be eyed, and served in all that you do; and this is that I drive at, that we may not divide ourselves between God and the world; between his service and our own ends, and so put off him with a partial service, but that we may do all in obedience to him, and we may be entirely the Lord's. That he in all things may be glorified by us, and we may not lose our Reward.

2. Some holy Principles must be received and retained. As

Pr. 1. That the pleasing of God is our only Business, and our highest Blessedness. First our only Business: what is it that we call or count our Business? 1. That is a man's Business which his livelihood and subsistence depends upon. The Lawyer counts the Law his Business: And the Tradesman counts his Trade his Business; because upon this their livelihood and subsistence depends. Brethren, our whole depends upon the pleasing of God: Do this and do all: miss in this, and you mar all: please him and you are made forever: if he be not pleased you are undone forever. How careful is the selfish Courtier to please his Prince? how will he crouch and flatter? and if he can but divine what will gratify and please him, he thinks himself happy: And why? but because all his dependence is upon his Princes favor: Much more do we depend upon the favor of God. Blessed is the man whom he chooseth, Psal. 65. 4. In his favor is life, Psal. 30. 5. But woe to them that have God against them: these are perfectly miserable: Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them, Jer. 6. 30. If the Lord do but say to a man as he did to Moses, Thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name, Happy is that man. But if he thus say, I have no pleasure in thee, you may cover the face of that man, as they did Haman's, and carry him away: miserable must his end be if he so continue.

2. That is a man's Business which he hath his Stock and Talents for: If a Man be entrusted as a Steward or a Factour, his Business is to buy in the Commodities that are useful. Beloved, all our Time, Parts, Interests, Food, Rayment, and whatever Mercies spiritual or temporal, are the Stock wherewith God hath entrusted us, and all for his own use and service. And is it not a sad and fearful case, that God should have so great a Stock going, as lies in the hands of all the Sons of Men, and yet have, (if I may so so speak) so little profit of it? I mean so little glory by it: That he should sow so much and reap so little; strew so much and gather so little? Is it not sad that men should have so much in vain? Hast thou health or wealth, and dost not use in for God, it is all in vain. Hast thou understanding, and yet improvest it but for contriving thine own affairs, and worldly designs, thy reason and understanding are become, in vain. Oh how wilt thou answer it, that thou hast had so great a stock in thine hands, and made so little improvement of it? It had been good for some men if they had never had a foot of Land, or an hours ease, if they had never had the understanding of men, because they have not used their Talents for God, and for the ends for which they were put into their hands.

3. That is a man's Business which his capacities do call for: It is a man's Business if in the capacity of a Judge, to do justice; or of a Servant to do his Masters will. Brethren, all your capacities do evidence it to be your business to please God: you are his Friends, you are his Servants, therefore must please him well in all things, Titus 2. 9. His children, And therefore must set yourselves to honor him, Malachi. 1. 6. his Spouse, and therefore it is your business to please your Husband, 1 Cor. 7. 34.

4. That is a man's Business which he hath his maintenance for: If a man be maintained in the place of a Schoolmaster, it is his Business to teach: if of a Soldier, it is his Business to fight. Beloved, do you not know at whose finding you are? And do you think God keeps so many servants to be idle, or to mind their own designs and pleasures? God hath cut you out everyone his work: every man his hands full: So much work is to be done within door, and so much without door; so much towards God, towards your Neighbor, towards your own selves: that you have no time to be idle in. And you shall dearly reckon for it, if you will eat his Bread and will not do his work: And as pleasing God is our chiefest Business, Secondly, So it is also our highest Blessedness: For man's happiness lies in God's favor, Psal. 4. 6. Our happiness is in attaining the end of our being; and therefore the great quary amongst the Philosophers still was, What was the end; or the happiness of man. Now the true end of our Being is, that we may please God: for his pleasure we are and were created, Rev. 4. 11. And for this end also we were new created that we should yield ourselves unto God, Rom. 6. 13. and being built up a spiritual house, should offer up to him spiritual sacrifice, (1 page duplicate) (1 page duplicate) (1 page duplicate) (1 page duplicate) acceptable through, Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 5. This is the end of our Redemption that we should serve not ourselves but him, in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives, Luke 1. 75. And that we should not henceforth live to ourselves but to him that died for us, 2. Cor. 5. 15. 'Tis the end likewise of our Justification, that our consciences being purged we should acceptably serve the living God. In a word, 'tis the end of our Glorification, that being translated into Heaven we should perfectly please God, and serve him night and day is his Temple, Rev. 7. 15. and 22. 3. So that the pleasing of God is the whole end or whole happiness of Man, Eccles. 12. 13. And this will be clear, because We do then promote ourselves most when we please God best: For by this you shall have this twofold advantage.

First, You shall be the favorites of God. O glorious promotion! Haman thought himself no little man when he was Abasuerus his right hand; and yet he was at length but preferred to the Gallows, Esther 5. 11. and 7. 10. But what shall be done to the man whom God delights to honor? Oh blessed is that man! woe to him that toucheth him: It had been better for him that a millstone had been hanged about his neck, and he drowned in the midst of the sea then that he should offend such a one, Luke 17. 2. God is infinitely chary of his favorites. The apple of his eye is touched when they are injured, Zechariah 2. 8. Whosoever toucheth them shall not be innocent, Psal. 107. 15. God hath a blessing for those that show them a kindness, Gen. 12. 3. He will render vengeance upon the ungodly for every hard speech they utter against them, Jude 15.

O man doth not thy soul say, Happy is the people that is in such a case: will not thy condition be most Blessed when God shall be thus infinitely tender of thee, to take all the kindnesses done to thee as done to himself? Matth. 25. 45. and all the injuries done to thee as affronts to himself? Acts 9. 4. This is the happy Case of his Favorites.

Secondly, Every thing you do shall be found upon your account with God. Brethren, are you Believers, or are you not? Do you believe the Immortality of the Soul, and the Life to come, or do you not? The ways of the most do declare them to be real Infidels, though professed Christians. If you think there be an eternal State to come, will it not be your highest wisdom to be providing for it, and laying up what possibly you can, that you may inherit it in the other world? Will not every wise man that knows he is shortly to be removed into another Country be careful to transport all that he can, that he may enjoy it at his coming? Beloved, if you do believe indeed that you must be forever in another world, will it not be your best course to be doing that, the fruit whereof you shall enjoy forever? Were not he a mad man that having but a very short term upon a Living, should yet go to building and planting there when he had Land of Inheritance to build upon? Infinite is the mischief that comes of self-seeking and self-pleasing. You are eternal losers by it: God will say, you have your reward, Matth. 6. 5. Something you may have in hand, but the eternal reward is lost. Brethren, I am ambitious for you, that what you do, you should do forever: that all you do should meet you in the other world, and that there you should reap the everlasting fruit of what you are a doing now. A wise Builder will build forever, and not only that which shall last for a day or for a year. O that you would be wise Builders! Do all for God, and you shall have eternal advantage. Learn but this Lesson, to set yourselves in all things to please God, and you will be promoting and advancing yourselves in all that ever you do, always laying up a treasure in heaven still adding to the heap. And O what riches will you come to, when by every day, and every hour, and every action you are gainers? For God will not let the least thing that is done for him, no not a cup of cold water go without an everlasting reward, Matth. 10. 42. not your labor be in vain, 1 Cor. 15. 58.

Pr. 3. That when you have done all, if God be not pleased you have done nothing. Settle it upon your hearts, That all is in vain that is not done for God: when you do not please God you do not profit yourselves. When men offer never so richly, and freely, if not in such a manner as is pleasing to God, all is but a vain oblation, Isa. 1. 13. If men will do more then ever God required, and be zealous in things that God hath not commanded, it is but in vain that they worship him, Matth. 15. 9. Beloved, so much time as you have lived to yourselves you have lived in vain; because it was quite besides your end. O it is a heart-cutting consideration to a tender Christian to think of this; that when his life is so short, and time so little in all, yet he must be fain to cut off so much! why man, so many hours must thou cut off from thy days, and so many years from thy life, as thou hast lived not to God but to thyself; They are all lost as to the ends of life and time. If on repentance thou be forgiven, thou art not rewarded for them.

Beloved, You must count that you have lived no longer then you have lived unto God, Phil. 1. 21. To me to live is Christ. I should account I did not live, if I did not live to him: 'Tis the only employment of my life to serve him. I should not tell what to do with my life unless it were to spend it for him.

Christian, Thus thou must reckon; so much time as I have lived to Christ, so much have I lived; and so much as I have lived to myself, so much I have lost. 'Tis not the Man but the Beast that lives, while we live below our reason, which distinguishes the human life from that of Bruits. Now while we live not to God, we live utterly below our reason itself; which is sufficiently discovered in that God is the Author and End of Man. Doth not reason dictate that God should have the glory of his own work, and the Vessel should be to the Potters use? Doth any plant a Vineyard, or keep a Flock and not expect the Fruit or the Milk? 1 Cor. 9. 7. God hath made thee, O man, for himself, Prov. 16. 4. And hast thou the face of a man and dost not blush at this, to think that God should make and maintain thee in vain? If thou hast one grain of ingenuity thou wilt abhor the thought of this, that thou shouldst be in vain. Why, so much as thou art for thyself thou art for nothing. It may be thou livest a very busy life: but if thou actest not for God thou art all this while but busily doing nothing. Thou mayst sit down in the evening, and say, I have been all this day doing nothing. Thou wilt find a blank in God's Book for that day, nothing upon thine account: on this sad record, such a day spent and nothing done: God hath his Day-book and takes notice of all your carriages, how you rise and how you go forth to your labors, how you speak, how you eat, and whether you eye him and his glory in all, or look no higher then yourselves. Luke 5. 5. We have been toiling all night and caught nothing. May not this be the sad complaint of many a man? I have been toiling all my life and yet I have done nothing; because what I did was not done unto the Lord. How would you take it of your servants, if coming home in the evening, you should find everyone of them minding their own business, and pleasure, and your work left undone? Is it not, sad, sirs, that so many hours and days should pass over us, and we no nearer our end then ever we were before? Your little Children are busy from morning to night, and yet all the while have been doing nothing: And so are you when you are but seeking your carnal selves, and not serving and pleasing God in what you undertake.

Pr. 4. That the favor all of the world can nothing stead you if God be not pleased with you, and by you. If there were any that could save you from his wrath, you need not be so solicitous to please him: but if he be not pleased we are all undone. Thou, even thou art to be feared and who shall stand when once thou art angry? Psal. 76. 7. Isa. 43. 13. When men have slight thoughts of God's anger, and the fear and dread of him is not upon their hearts, no wonder if they be not careful to please him: you must be convinced, that the displeasure of God is the most formidable thing in the world, or else you will never learn this great Lesson. Beloved, if you should please men, and all the world should be on your side, what would this avail while God is your enemy? If all men should bless you and speak well of you, what would this profit when God should rise up in judgment against you and condemn you? It is not at man's Bar, but God's that you must stand: It is not at men's Votes that you must be cast or quitted. It will not go by most voices, but God himself is the Judge, Psal. 75. 7. In his Breast it is whether you shall live or die. If a man were upon a trial for his life, what would it avail him that all his fellow prisoners, and the whole crowd about him were for him, when the whole Bench and Jury were against him? If your Lives and Estates were in question, to whom would you go to make your friend? the Judge or the People? Sirs, be convinced that if God be against, you, tis as bad as if God and all the world were against you. For all signifies nothing without him. Oh, whatever you do, study to get in and keep in with him. I tell you, the time is coming when the breath of men will signify nothing: when their Commendation will do you no good. O man! though all the world should give thee their hands, and subscribe thy Certificate, it would signify nothing in God's account, or his Court. Many build their hopes for Heaven upon the good opinion that others have of them: But I tell thee man, though thou couldst carry Letters of commendation with thee when thou diest, and all the Ministers of the Gospel should give thee their Bene discessit, all would be no more then a blank paper; and he would not save thee a jot the sooner, if he should find thee to have been but a secret hypocrite, a rotten-hearted Professor all the while.

Pr. 5. That God would not be pleased with you in anything, except you make it your care to please him well in everything. You will be one day ashamed, except you have respect to all God's Commandments, Psal. 119. 6. you have not a good conscience, except it be your care in all things to live honestly, Heb. 13. 18. If Naaman must be excused in one thing, to bow in the house of Rimmon that he might not displease his Master, this is enough to spoil everything, 2 Kings 5. 18. Some will needs keep God's good will and the worlds too, and so will give both their turns; They will serve God at home, and conform to the world abroad; and it shall be a great thing indeed that they will not swallow, rather then lose the good will of men, especially great men. These men have two faces, and two tongues; the one for the good, and the other for the bad company that they come into. Some held two first principles, the one the common Fountain of all good (which is God,) and the other the cause of all evil, and they worshipped both the good principle for love, and the evil for fear: Just such a Religion are many among us now of. But let them know whoever they are, that while they grasp all, they lose all: For God will never own time-servers, nor men-pleasers for the Servants of Christ, Ephes. 6. 6. Gal. 1. 10.

3. With reference to your practices. And here as ever you desire to come up to this blessed life of doing always those things that please God, you must carefully follow these six Rules.

Rule 1. Look round about you to the whole latitude and compass of your duty. Great is the latitude of Christianity. The Commandment is exceeding broad, Psal. 119. 96. And many Professors do scarce look more then one way: but while they intently mind one thing, they neglect another. It may be while they are taken up with the care of religious duties, they forget relative duties: Or they are careful of personal duties, but very remiss in the duties that they owe to the souls of their families; Or they complain and mourn over their own sins, but lay not to heart others sins: It may be they are more punctual in their more immediate duties towards God, but are very negligent in their duties towards men; or they will spend much time for their souls, but do little lay to heart the case of the Church, and the misery of perishing souls that are round about them. Possible they keep the Sabbath strictly, and pray, and hear, and fear an oath: but in the mean time make little conscience of breaking their promises; passing hasty and uncharitable censures; spending time vainly, being unprofitable in their discourse, Close handed to godly uses; suffering sin to go unreproved; letting out their passions at every petty cross: Many will mind their duty to them that are within, and in the mean time are very short in their duties to them that are without. This is too common a case. Where is the Christian almost that seriously bethinks himself, what might I do to win souls? It may be you will go into the company of the godly, where you may be edified, but when do you go to your poor neighbors, whom you see to live in a sinful state, and tell him of his danger, and labor to gain him unto Christ? yea, so much is this great duty neglected, and out of fashion, that I am afraid many question whether it be a duty or no. As if you might let sin lie upon the soul of your Brother and yet be innocent, Levite. 19. 17. If it were but his Ox or his Ass that lay ready to perish, you would make no question but it were your duty to help him out of the ditch: And do you think in earnest, that you owe more to these, then you do to his soul? Is it to Ministers only, or to all Believers that Scripture belongs, Prov. 11. 30. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he that winneth souls is wise? Surely the lives of too many Christians do speak the same language that Cain spake with his mouth, Am I my Brothers keeper? Gen. 4. 9. 'Tis true, God will have you keep everyone within the bounds of your proper stations, but so as to take occasions, yea to seek occasions as you are able to be doing good to others. Do you not know how to get within your poor neighbors? Carry an alms with you, do him a kindness, oblige him by your courteous and winning carriage. Then I shall look to see the Kingdom of Christ flourish gloriously, when everyone that professeth godliness, shall arise and take hold of the skirt of his neighbor. Oh see your neglects in this, Do not think it enough to keep your own Vineyard: Let your Friends and Neighbors have no quiet for you, till you see them setting in good earnest to seek after Heaven. Oh if you might bring in but everyone his man to Christ, what a blessed thing were this! I lose myself in this Argument, but I am content to do so, this duty being so miserably neglected.

Too many live as if Religion lay all in praying and hearing holy conference, and the like; forgetting that pure Religion and undefiled is this, to visit the Fatherless and the Widow in their affliction, Jam. 1. 27. The other should be so done, as that this should not be left undone. You make conscience of being just and true, and faithful; but do you not forget to win upon others by your kindness and affableness? as if it were not written in your Bibles; be pitiful, be courteous, having compassion one of another, 1 Pet. 3. 8. Say not, It is not my nature; What doth grace serve for, but to correct the evils of your temper? Is not ours a Religion of self-denial? Do not the Rules of our Religion enjoin us, to be followers of whatsoever is lovely, and of good report, and may render Religion amiable to the world? Phil. 4. 8.

Rule 2: Use a wise forecast, that every duty may fall in in its time and order; and every work may have its room. It is not enough to do God's work, but it must be done in his order. That which in itself is good and necessary, may be so ill timed, as to become a sin. It is a duty to tell your Brother of his sin: but to rip it up in your passion, or to be retorting upon him when he is christianly admonishing you is a sin. Your worldly business must not shut out Religion, nor religious Duties take you so up, as to neglect your callings. But every duty must have its place. But for the doing all in God's order, Take these Five Directions.

Direct. 1. Begin at home in provoking to good: Why should God plead with you? Thou that teachest another teachest thou not thyself? Rom. 2. 21. Be an example of thine own rule, else the hypocrites charge will come in against thee. Mat. 23. 4. They bind heavy burdens, but will not touch them with one of their fingers. Observe God's order, Deut. 6. 6, 7. These words which I command thee shall be in thine heart. That must be our first care. And then having got our Lesson well ourselves, we must then Teach it to others: And thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children, and tell of them when thou, &c. At least if thou hast not already attained it, be sure to learn with the first: and when thou pressest a duty, intend thyself first, and speak most to thine own heart.

2. In reproving evil: Otherwise thou wilt be branded for an hypocrite; Matth. 7. 5. First cast the beam out of thine own eye. We may not think as many do mistakingly, that we must not reprove another when we are guilty of the same sin. But we must in such a case be sure to cast the first stone at ourselves. Be soonest angry with thyself, and more severe to thine own sins, then any others. 'Tis strange to see the great ensoriousness of Professors to others, and how tender they are of their own corruptions, and impatient of reproof: Reader, fear and avoid this sin.

Direct. 2. Let God be first served. Let God have the first of thy thoughts, the first of the day, the first of thy strength: How heavily is God displeased with the profane Priests, because they will serve themselves first with the Sacrifices before him, 1 Sam. 2. 15, 16. And it is the holy Counsel that one gives: Hold the door of thy heart fast against the world in the morning, till thy heart hath been first in Heaven, and seasoned and fortified from thence against the Temptations that thou art like to meet with as soon as thou comest down below. Indeed all must be done as God's service: but so as that his immediate service must be done first. It is the counsel of several Heathens, That all our undertakeings should be begun with prayer. Saith Aratus, Let us begin with God: And the very Mohammedans begin their Books always as men do use to do their Wills, In the Name of God.

Direct. 3. First cleanse the inside. Matth. 23. 26. Cleanse first that which is within the Cup. Though they are much out that live as if all their work did lie within door, yet remember that it lies chiefly here. Its a most preposterous course in religion to begin first with the outside. Jer. 4. 14. O Jerusalem wash thine heart! when once this is done, reformation will soon follow in the life, but not otherwise. Many are careful that all that appears to men should be beautiful, but their hearts are neglected: These carry upon them the marks of the hypocrite, Matth. 23. 27, 28. And what will it profit thee, O vain man, to have all kept secret from men, since God knows and detests thee? And hath appointed a day when he will rip open all thy pack, and anatomize thy heart, before the world, 1 Cor. 4. 5. Eccles. 12. 14. Rom. 2. 16.

Direct. 4. Eye those duties most that are of most importance, Matth. 23. 23. The hypocrite is very punctual in lesser matters, but neglects the weightiest things of the Law, Judgment, and Mercy, and Faith: He is for a religion that will cost him little: and therefore words being good cheap, he will be as forward in talk as any; mighty zealous in the circumstantials of Religion, and marvelous ensorious of others that come not up to this mind, as men of wide principles and large consciences: But in the mean time, he is very negligent in secret duties, a great stranger to self-denial, and walking humbly with God. He strains wonderfully at a Ceremony; but it may be he can swallow the gains of unrighteousness, or the baits of intemperance fast enough: It may be he will decry Superstition, and never wants a stone to fling at a profane Church-man: But in the mean time walks loosely in his Family, makes little conscience of his dealings; or will take up his Cups as freely as another so he be not drunk: Or if he will not take a penny of his neighbors estate, he is most unmerciful to his good name, and will take up any report that is going. Brethren you must make conscience of the least sin, and of the least duty. But it is a fearful sign when men are zealous against lesser sins, and yet connive at greater (as these are,) Matth. 23. 24.

Direct. 5. Take the first opportunity when God gives a fit season for any duty: Let not Satan beguile you, by telling you of another or a better time. It may be thou hast a purpose to reprove thy brother for his sin, but how long wilt thou be a purposing? Now God gives thee an opportunity, it may be thy backward heart saith, [not now, but another time.] And so it is put off, till he or thyself are removed, or he is hardened, or at least thou art guilty of the sin that he commits in the mean while: because thou hast not done thy duty to prevent it. It is in thine heart to deal with thine unconverted friend or neighbor about his spiritual estate, but it may be while thou art delaying, death comes and snatches him away in his sins, or takes thee off, and so farewell forever to any opportunity for doing the soul of thy Brother any good. How often are our closet-duties hindered, or miserably disturbed for want of care to lay hold on the first opportunity? we think another hour in the day may do as well: but then one thing or another unexpectedly falls in, that nothing is done, or nothing to purpose. Therefore beware of this cheat. A man can scarce peep into the world but one brier and thorn or another will catch him. Therefore take opportunity by the fore-top. Our Savior would take his season for prayer before day, when his other work was pressing, Mark 1. 35.

Rule 3. Do nothing of things Sacred without God's command: nothing in things Civil without God's allowance; Offer not with strange fire. In God's worship you must see you be well able to answer that question, Who hath required these things at your hands? Here the command must be observed without adding or diminishing. Deut. 12. 32. yet understand this with two Cautions.

1. Though men may not stamp their invented Ceremonies with a moral signification, nor impose nor use them, though with good intentions of edifying the people by devised means. Matth. 15. 9. As if Christ had not sufficiently provided for the edifying of his people without their devices: And though nothing may be used as a part of worship that God hath not commanded, Col. 2. 23. (for it is enough to make anything rejected by the Lord (of divine worship) if he shall say [I commanded it not, spake it not, neither came it into my mind.] Jer. 7. 31. and 19. 5. Yet nevertheless those things that are merely circumstantial, and are in their general kind necessary, and not intended as any part or means of worship, may be determined of by human prudence according to the general Rules of the Word, which must always be observed, 1 Cor. 14. 26. 40. And for want of understanding, many have ignorantly condemned preaching by an Hour-glass, in a high Place, in Churches, by way of Doctrine and Use, &c. running from one extreme to another.

2. We may not think that God's Ordinances remaining for substance his, may be forsaken, because of some faults of the administratours, or in the way of their administration. The administering of God's Ordinances belongs not to the People, but to the Minister: And if he fail in his duty by administering them in a way that is not fit, and is less edifying, it is my grief, but his sin. Hophni and Phineas were corrupt in their lives, and brought in much corruption and rudeness into the service of God: yet Elkanah and Hannah with others of the Godly, did nevertheless attend God's Worship and Sanctuary, 1 Sam. 1. 2. Much corruption was crept in both into the Doctrine and Worship, and Lives of the Administratours in the Church of the Jews: yet our Savior (though he still cried down the Corruptions, and would not join in them) never prohibited Communion with them in God's Worship, but enjoins it, Matth. 5. 24. Mark 1. 40. Luke 5. 14. and practices it, both he, his Parents, and Apostles, Luke 2. 21, 22, 24, 39, 41, 42, 46. Acts 21. 23, 24, 26.

But now in things Civil, it is sufficient that you have the allowance of the Word, though not the command: always provided that the general Rules be here observed, to do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. And not to abuse our lawful liberty to the offense of others, Rom. 14. 21. Now your actions being thus justifiable as to the matter of them (without which it is impossible, had you never so good intentions, of please God) the influence and verture of holy Ends into them will be so effectual, as to turn all into religious Duties; as the touch of the Philosophers Stone turns the baser Mettal into Gold.

Rule 4. In every action let God be uppermost; but in religious Actions let God be all. Let none of your actions terminate in yourselves, but labor to be able in sincerity to give this account of anything you set about, that this you do because it is pleasing unto God, because this is his will concerning you. Set a mark upon this Caution. Beware in those Actions wherein self may bear a part, lest it should sweep Stakes and carry all. You may in your common actions have an eye to your outward commodity, and comfortable being in the world: but this must not be the chief thing much less the all that you design herein: for by looking no higher then self you incur this double mischief. 1. You lose so much from your own account. 2. You usurp upon the great Prerogatives of God. I fear we are not aware of the fearful evil that is in self-seeking; It is no less then justling God beside the Throne, and setting ourselves in his room. It is God's great Prerogative, and the proper Worship that is due to him as God, that he should be the last end of all the operations of us his Creatures, and that all our motions should terminate in him. Now when we eye our own commodity and not God; or look to this more then unto God, we arrogate the divine Prerogative to ourselves, and set ourselves above him, which is no less then heinous Idolatry: And if it be such a heinous sin to bow down to an Image, which is but the giving God's outward worship to the Creature, how much more to seek and honor ourselves before God? which is to give his inward worship, which of all is the principal, to the Creature. Oh how many that pass for good Christians will be found heinous Idolaters! because they have sought their own carnal ends more then God and his glory. And many real Christians, though they mainly design God and his glory, yet in many particular actions contract great guilt by looking no higher then themselves in what they do. I know you cannot be always thinking of God: yet I would have you never to forget what you have been taught, In the entrance of every solemn action to remember God and make him your end, Lie down in the Name of God every Evening: Go forth in his Name every Morning, resolving to undertake all for him. When you enter upon your Callings, sit down to your Meals, make any Journey, or visit, do it as unto the Lord, with a design to please him therein. This you may come to with care and watchfulness.

Again, In religious actions let God be all. Here self (I mean carnal self;) must be shut out: otherwise this dead Fly will spoil the Box of most precious Ointment. 'Tis true, self will be crowding in, but you must knock it down carefully: otherwise if this be the predominant ingredient, all your duties will be but lost labor. What more pleasing to God then prayer? This is as incense before him, Psal. 141. 2. what more delightful then alms? This is a sacrifice acceptable and well-pleasing unto him. Phil. 4. 18. How happy a Testimony had Cornelius, Thy Prayers and Alms are come up as a memorial before God! Acts 10. 4. Yet when self is predominant in those Duties, Prayers, Alms, &c. all are lost, Matth. 6. 7. and 23. 5.

Rule 5. When you have done all, be careful to deny all, Luke 17. 10. not denying God's mercy in enabling and assisting you: This must be with all thankfulness observed: But attributing nothing to yourselves, and giving God all the glory. Take the pattern of holy David, 1 Chron. 29. 14. But who am I, and what is my people, that we should offer so willingly? of thine own have we given thee.] And of Blessed Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 10. Not I, but the grace of God which was with me.] And of good Nehemiah, who when he had done most eminent service for God, flies at last to pardoning mercy, Nehe. 13. 22. Remember me, O God, concerning this also; and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy.

Rule 6. Do all in the Name of the Lord Jesus, Col. 3. 17. Having carefully set out for God in the morning, and directed your common actions to him as your end, throughout the day, doing all as in his sight, and with a desire to please him therein, bring all to Christ in the evening, and present all unto God by him, confidently expecting God's acceptance and reward for all that you have done. For this he hath promised, be your actions never so mean, because they were done as his service, Col. 3. 22, 23, 24. Ephes. 6. 6, 7, 8. If you neglect this, you lose all at last: For God will accept of no Sacrifice but from the hand of the Priest: and therefore you must look for no acceptance with God, nor any reward from him, but only through Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 5. John 14. 6. You must be sure therefore not only to make a formal mention of Christ's Name, but to build all your hope of success only upon him, and to come to GOD with an Actual and Lively dependence upon him:—

Thus I have resolved the Case propounded. I will but Answer an Objection, and briefly press your Duty by some Motives, and so conclude.

Object. You bind heavy burdens: what must we be always in the traces? surely this severity of Religion is more then needs.

Answ. 1. Burden man! why, it is thy Happiness: If Holiness and pleasing God be a burden, Health is a burden; Heaven and Happiness are burdens.

Answ. 2. This is no other burden then what God himself hath bound upon your consciences; Rom. 9. 20. Who art thou, O man, that repliest against God! Have I put upon you a devised and unnecessary strictness? or bound that burden upon you which I will not touch with one of my fingers? 1 Cor. 9. 8. Say I this as a man, or saith not the Law the same also? I pray you whose word is this? Be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long, Prov. 23. 17. Do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. Exercise thyself unto godliness, 1 Tim. 4. 7. What have I pressed but what the Saints have practiced? Phil. 3. 13, 14. One thing I do, I press towards the mark, Psal. 27. 4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will seek after. And Psal. 119. 38. Thy servant that is devoted to thy fear. Gen. 5. 22. Enoch walked with God three hundred years. What is this but what the Scripture hath foretold shall be? They shall walk up and down in the Name of the Lord, Zech. 10. 12. There shall be upon the Bells of the Horses, and every Pet in Jerusalem Holiness to the Lord, Zech. 14. 20, 21. Dispute not against God, but up and be doing. It's an ill sign when the heart rises against the strictness of the duty: you utterly mistake in thinking this life of strictness to be a bondage. Who have joy unspeakable and full of glory? Who do know the peace that passeth all understanding, if not those that do thus walk with God?

Now, my Brethren, let me beseech you to be the conscientious Practitioners of this great Lesson. Study to do always those things that are pleasing unto God. Oh that I knew but how to engage you; that I could but get you to set these Rules before you all the days of your lives for your practice! 'Tis not enough that you give the hearing, and like the Preacher, and approve the Doctrine. But Sirs, what will you do? Too many of my Hearers are like Ezekiel's, Chap. 33. 32. What say you Brethren, will you learn with me? O that I might lead you on to a through acquaintance with the strictness and power of Religion, and to that holy frame that will be God's delight and your felicity. Brethren, what seek I for? God knows this is my ambition, that I may but help you on in the way of holiness: I would not that you should be such bad Proficients, as to be always of the lower form, and to keep on merely in a dull and barren course. My desire for you is, that you should not be Shrubs, but Cedars, of tall growth, choice Experience, singular Communion, walking with God, shining to the conviction of the world. Will you let me but prevail with you in so good a Design? why should you mourn at the last, and say, How have I hated Instruction, and my heart despised Reproof! I have not obeyed the voice of my Teachers, nor inclined my ear to them that instructed me, Prov. 5. 11, 12, 13. That I may incite you to this holy course, Consider,

1. It is very possible: for first, God is very easy to be pleased: He is not like a froward Master that cannot, that will not be pleased: If you do but make it your study and your care to please him, and thoroughly set your hearts to it, your willing mind shall be accepted, 2 Cor. 8. 12. And though you should not go through with the work, God will say, thou didst well that it was in thine heart, 2 Chron. 6. 8. when the heart is set to please the Lord, and we do unfeignedly put to it, though there be very many failings, God will overlook them, 2 Chron. 30. 18, 19, 20.

Secondly, God hath told you what will please him, and hath cut out your work to your hand. You need not say, Wherewith shall we come before the Lord? he hath shown you what is good, and what he requireth of you, Micah 6. 6, 7, 8. You need not say, Who shall ascend into Heaven to bring down the mind of God from Heaven? No, the word is nigh you, Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. God hath set before you in his Law as in a Table, on one side the things that please, on the other, those that displease him: oh that you may be found among those that choose the things that please him, Isa. 56. 4, 5. Otherwise since you know your Masters will, and yet do it not, you will be found worthy of many stripes, Luke 12. 47.

Thirdly, God hath given particular Rules for the doing of all your work in that manner, that will please him. Had God told you only what must be done, and not how it must be done; you might have been at a loss: but he hath prescribed the very manner, how everything must be done, that you might have full direction, Rom. 12. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 11. He hath shown you how you must pray, and hear, and give alms: how you must carry it in all your relations: he hath told you not only how you must fast, but how you must eat, to wit, with watchfulness, and temperance; not as those who have nothing to do, but to fill their paunches; but with an eye to his glory, as those that are feeding and relieving the servants of Jesus Christ. He hath shown you, not only how you should rest on the Lord's Day, but how you must follow your Calling on the rest, to wit, with diligence and discretion, minding him as your end, as those that herein serve the Lord Christ. He hath told you how you must manage your dealings, with equity and charity, doing the very same to others, that your consciences tell you you would have them in the like case to do unto you: how you must sleep, even as those that know he compasseth your path and your lying down; and how you must wake; to wit, so as to be still with him.

Fourthly, God hath given you special helps to this end: You have the mind of Christ, 1 Cor. 2. 16. and you have the Spirit of Christ, 1 Cor. 2. 12. Indeed they that are in the flesh cannot please God: but you are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, Rom. 8. 8, 9. You that are Believers have not the Law only in your Bibles, but in your hearts, Heb. 8. 10.

II. It is very profitable: Glorious advantages shall you have by this course. First, this is the most speedy and certain way to assurance: for want of which many of you complain; but henceforth you must complain no more: For either you will follow this course, and then you will have it: or you will not, and then cease your hypocritical complaints, when it is through your own willful, disobedience that you are without it. When once you are habituated to this course, and do find it to be the chief of your care, and that which your very hearts are set upon above all things else, to glorify and please God, and approve yourselves in his sight, you cannot want assurance, unless through your own ignorance: For this is the most undoubted evidence in the world, that you are the children of God, whatever unallowed failings you may be guilty of.

Secondly, Hereby you shall be certain of God's gracious and favorable presence always with you. See the Text, He that sent me is with me; for I do always those things that please him.

Thirdly, By this means you shall be always laying up a Treasure in Heaven: Brethren, what are you for? Are you men for Eternity, or are you for present things? Is your design for Glory, Honor and Immortality? Are you for riches in the other world? or of dunghill spirits, preferring your part in Paris before a part in Paradise? If you are for true riches, here is your way; By this you shall be daily and hourly increasing the stock of your own glory: my vehemency is only, that fruit may abound to your account; that all you do might meet you in Heaven, and Christ may show your good works another day, as the Widows did Dorcas her Garments, Acts 9. 39.

CHAP. III.

A Fourth Case of Conscience.

WHAT weariness in, and unwillingness to duties may stand with grace, and what not?

For the resolving this, some Distinctions must be premised, and then some Conclusions elicited.

Distinct. This weariness and unwillingness must be distinguished, 1. According to the degrees of it, and so it is either partial and gradual, or else prevalent and plenary. 2. According to the subject of it: and so this weariness is either of the Members, or else of the mind: 3. According to the prevalency of it, and so it is either transient and occasional, or else settled and habitual. 4. According to the sense we have of it, and so it is either matter of Allowance to us, or matter of annoyance. 5. According to the cause of it, and so it is either from a fixed dislike of the food, or else from an Accidental distemper of the stomach. 6. According to the effects of it: for either it is victorious and makes us give over duties, or else abhorred and repulsed by grace, the Christian still holding on in the way of Duty.

Conclu. 1. Where the weariness is only in the Members (or at least chiefly) but there is still a willingness of the mind, this is no matter of questioning our Estates: where the mind out-goes and out-does the body, and the appetite to duties continues in vigor, though there be a languishing of the natural strength, and weariness of the bodily organs, this is not our sin but affliction. But too commonly the body hath so much influence upon the mind, and causeth a listlessness and sluggishness there, and makes it negligent in its office: Yet when this doth proceed from the failing of the spirits tired with bodily labor and exercise, and from the distemper of the parts, our most pitiful Father considers our frame, and remembers we are but dust: and our merciful High Priest that is not untouched with the sense of our infirmities is ready to frame our excuse, that the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak.

2. Where our weariness in and unwillingness to duties, is only gradual and partial, not plenary and prevalent, it is not sufficient to conclude ourselves graceless: While the twins are together in the womb, and two Nations within our bowels, there will be contrary inclinations. The flesh will never say Amen, to a good motion as such, but will be lusting against the spirit, and will hang back when the spirit puts forwards, and pull down when the spirit bends upwards: So that while corruption remaineth, there will be always a dissenting party, and continual conflicts: from whence it is no wonder there should arise some weariness: yet the spirit is the prevailing interest, and though oftentimes failed, yet hath mostly the mastery in the combat, and carries it against the flesh, though not without much resistance and reluctancy from the rebel opponent.

3. Where this weariness is only transient, during the present temptation or defection, which as soon as the tired soul can get out of, it returns to its former temper and pleasure in holy duties, there is only matter of humiliation. But when it is the settled permanent and habitual frame of the mind, it is matter of questioning our conditions. The holy Psalmist under a dissertation was even almost persuaded to give over with Religion; but when he is himself nothing is so sweet, nothing so lovely and desirable to him as the duties of holiness. But for them who have in their ordinary settled course and frame, no mind to duties, but are halled to them by conscience, or engaged by company or custom, or the like, their case is fearful in that measure that duty is displeasing and not loved.

4. Where this weariness of, and unwillingness to Duties is paniful and grievous, as a sore in the eye, as a sickness in the heart, the state is good: But where it is naturally allowed, and meets with little or no resistance, it is a black mark: for this argues there is nothing but flesh, that there is no contrary principle in such a heart. For if there were, the spirit would at least make opposition: This was the very frame of those unsanctified sinners that counted the Sabbaths and Service of God an unprofitable burden, a very weariness, a bondage not to be born, Mal. 1. 13. A gracious heart when under such a distemper, as that God's service seems a weariness, is even weary of himself: while this is burdensome he is a burden to himself: he cannot enjoy himself, while in such a frame wherein he cannot enjoy God: and if this be the Case, our State is good though the frame be bad.

5. Where this weariness and unwillingness is, not from a rooted dislike of the food, but an accidental and preter natural indisposition of the stomach, or being disappointed of God's presence in duties, the main state is safe. You know under a distemper the appetite may disgust, and nauseate the food that a man doth love above all other meats when he is well: and so it is here: Do you when you are yourselves, relish more sweetness in God's service than in your Meats and Drinks? are no sweets so delightful to you as fellowship and communion with God when you can attain to it in duties? Do you come away discontented because you cannot meet with God? Is the ground why your countenances fall, and your hearts be discouraged, because you have (with them) toiled and spread the net, and have not caught what you went for; because you have no answer nor income from God? If it be thus, it is a sign your hearts be set upon God, and that you place the happiness and comfort of your lives in God, and so that your state is safe: Otherwise when there is a fixed antipathy to duties, and an habitual dislike of them and contrariety to them, the Case is very sad.

6. Where our weariness and unwillingness is such as makes us to give over our duties, so as to live in the ordinary neglect of them, it is a fearful sign: but where notwithstanding present discouragements, we hold on in the performance of our duties, and a humble waiting upon God for removal of our difficulties till we are brought to a better frame, this argues well. The Church herself may be greatly deserted: but then she gives not over duties, but seeks after her beloved, and makes diligent enquiring, and will not be at rest until she hath found him. But the hypocrite gives up and will not wait upon the Lord any longer. Not but that a deserted soul, may under the violence of temptations omit duties for a time: But his condition this while is most painful, restless and grievous to him, and he quickly returns-again, and never comes to live in a quiet, and ordinary omission of known duties.

Conclu. 7. When our weariness and unwillingness is such as makes us fall out with the service of Christ, and willing to ease ourselves of his yoke, and to throw off his burden: This is a bad sign. But when we fall out with ourselves; and justify and approve Christ's Ways and Service, it is well. Thus it was with Paul: he doth not quarrel with the Law as too strict, and too severe, nor think of breaking off his bonds, and taking his liberty, but he pleads for the Law, and greatly approves it, and commends it, and condemns the backwardness of his own nature, Rom. 7. 12. 25. When men are more willing to be rid of Christ's burden, then of the distemper that makes it grievous, and cast about for ease, by widening their bonds, and not by bringing their minds to them, it is a woeful discovery of an unsound heart. And thus much for this Case.

Awakening Questions propounded to the VNCONVERTED:

And Counsels to the CONVERTED.

THat I may reach every Mans Case, I shall speak something to the Unconverted, and something to the Converted.

For the Unconverted, there are these Six Questions which I would advise them daily to put to their Souls.

Q. I. What estate did my Soul come into the world in? Was it not in a state of Death, Ephes. 2. 1. An estate of Wrath? Verse 3. Sirs, awake and bethink yourselves where you are, and whither you are going. While you are in your natural unconverted unbelieving state, all your sins are unpardoned, and the wrath of God abideth on you, Acts 3. 19. John 3. 36. Suppose you saw a poor creature hanging over a burning fiery furnace by nothing but a twine-thread like to break every moment, would not your hearts shake for such a one? Sirs, it is your very case, you hang over the infernal burnings by nothing but the small thread of your lives, which you know not but it may crack the next moment, and then where are you? Is this a Case for you to go on merrily, and contentedly in?

Q. II. What condition is my soul now in? Am I changed and renewed by conversion, or am I not? Speak Conscience, hath this man, this woman man been soundly and savingly changed both in heart and life? where are your evidences? Can you show the marks of the Lord Jesus upon your souls? Let your conscience answer: where was the place? what was the means? when was the time, that thy soul was thoroughly renewed? At least if you cannot show the time, place, nor means, can you prove the thing? Can you say with him [one thing I know, that whereas I was blind I now see.] Sirs, be not deceived, I tell you whatever you be, and whatever you do, nothing will avail you to salvation except you be new creatures, Gal. 6. 15.

Q. III. What if I should lose my soul? What fair work should I make of it then? This is very possible, Matth. 16. 26. Yea it is the case of the most: There are but few, few of the children of men that do escape safe to Heaven, Matth. 7. 14. Sirs, be aware of your danger, and fear lest a promise being left of entering into Rest, any of you should at last come short of it, Heb. 4. 1. Suppose a man were to travel through some perilous Wood or Wilderness, having but one Jewel in all the world, in which his All was bound up, and should see some stand on one hand and some on the other, and hear one company in this place and another in that, crying out under the hands of some cruel Robbers: Oh in what fear would this Traveler go least he should lose this Jewel, and be Robbed of all at once? Why thou art the man. This Traveler is thyself; This Jewel is thy Soul; This Wilderness or Wood is this World thou art to Travel through. Swarms of sins, Legions of Devils, a whole world of Temptations, these are the Robbers that lie in wait for thy Soul: and if all that these can do can keep thee out of Heaven thou shalt never come there. Oh what if thy Pride, or worldliness, thy delays, and triflings in Religion, should at last betray thy Soul into the Robbers hands? Other losses may be repaired; But thy Soul being once lost, God is lost, Christ is lost, Heaven, all lost for evermore.

Q. IV. What do I do for my Soul? What have I a Soul and immortal Soul to care for, and look no better after it, nor bestow no more of my time, nor pains upon it, no more of my thoughts about it? When Augustus the Emperor saw the out-Landish Women carrying Apes, and such kind of strange Creatures in the Streets in their Arms, he asked what! have the Women in these Countries no children? So it may be said of many among us, that are early and late at their worldly business, but let the care of Religion lie by neglected; what have these men no Souls? why man hast thou a Soul, and yet dost so little in thy Closet, so little in thy Family, from day today for it? what meanest thou O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God, that thou perish not, Jonah 1. 6. what will become of thy Soul, it thou lookest to it only at this careless rate?

Q. V. What if God should this night require thy Soul? where would death land thee? Luke 12. 19, 20. There was one that promised himself many merry days, and years, as it is like thou doest, but that same night God called for his Soul. Sirs are you in your postures? are you fit to die? oh dare not to live in such a case, nor in that course in which you would not dare to die?

Q. VI. What a happy case were I in if I had but secured my Soul? oh if this were but once done, how sweetly mightest thou live! Then thou mightest eat thy bread, and drink thy wine with a merry heart, when assured that God accepteth thee and thy work, Eccle. 9. 7. Then thou mightest lie down in peace, and rise up in peace; go out and come in in peace: then thou mightest look death in the face, thou mightest look dangers in the face, yea, look Devils in the face, and never be afraid. Oh Sirs if there be any ensurance office for Souls in all the world, one would think you should be seeking to it. And thus much for the Questions, which though of use to all, yet were intended chiefly for unconverted impenitent Souls.

Counsels and Cordials for the CONVERTED.

The Counsels are These

Coun. I. THat you put hard to it to get that by these hazardous opportunities that may quit all your Cost. What pity is it that you should adventure much and yet gain but little? How sad would it be if you should at last suffer deeply for your Conscientious attendance upon God in such seasons, and when you come into a Prison or into Banishment, should find that you had not got that by them that would bear you out.

Coun. II. That you value no mercy barely as it serves in content to your flesh; but as it stands in order to Eternity; and may serve to the furthering of your Makers Glory. God hath preserved your liberties, and hath restored mine: But what of all this? unless we improve our liberties for Eternity, what are we better then those that are in Prison? If this be all the advantage we have, a little more content to our flesh. The Cypher put to the Figure is of great consideration, but put by itself it signifies nothing at all. These Creature comforts separated from their respect to God, and Eternity, are of no value: but in order to these ends, they signify much. We have ease and fullness, when many others are in pains, and in poverty; And we have much the start of them if we be wise to improve our health in laying in apace against a wet day, and preparing apace for Eternity: and if we serve the Lord with the more abundant diligence, and cheerfulness, and gladness of heart, in the abundance of all things. But if this be all we have by it, that our bones do lie a little softer, and our pallats are tickled with a little the more delight, what profit have we by our health, or our estates? If they that be sick, or poor do love the Lord as well, or serve the Lord as much as we, they have the advantage of us; and better were it for us to be poor and sick as they be.

Coun. III. Rest not in probabilities for Heaven, but labor for certainties. Beloved, certainty may be had: or else the counsel of God to make our Calling and Election sure were in vain, 2 Pet. 1. 10. Else the experience of the Saints were but a delusion, who tell us they know they are passed from death to life, 1 John 3. 14. 2 Cor. 5. 1. Job 19. 25. 26. else the power of self-reflection were to no purpose, and the spirit which is in man should not know the things of the man, 1 Cor. 2. 11. Now if a certainty may be had, will you not put in for it, and turn every stone but that you will get it? Sirs, now if ever, you have need to put hard to it to get assurance: We are at miserable uncertainties for all outward enjoyments; we know not how soon we may be called to part with them all: Christians, what do you mean? will you be content to have nothing sure? will you not settle your everlasting conditions, now you are so unsettled as to your outward condition? What will you do in the day of visitation, when extremity comes upon you, if you have not assurance that God will receive you? It would make ones heart tremble to think of being put upon such a fearful temptation to part with all for Christ, and not to be sure of him neither? O man, what an advantage will the tempter now have upon thee, when he shall suggest [wilt thou be such a fool as to let go all at once? Thou seest Heaven is not sure, Christ is not sure, therefore keep the world while thou hast it, and hold what thou hast sure:] Beloved, what a fearful slighting of God and contempt of Heaven and Glory and all the Promises doth this argue, that you can be content to be at uncertainties, whether they be yours or not? How many of you be there that do not know whether you be going to Heaven or to Hell? and what desperate carelessness doth this argue, to go on from week to week in such a case? Some hopes you have that you shall do well, but put not me off with hopes, never be satisfied till you are able to say, not only, I hope I shall be saved, but I know I am passed from death to life; I know that when the earthly house of this Tabernacle shall be dissolved, I have a building not made with hands, &c. 2 Cor. 5. 1.

Coun. IV. Be not satisfied with the truth of Grace, but reach after the Growth. Do not think all is done when you have attained the evidence of Grace; but put on hard towards the increase. That person that doth not desire and design perfection, never came up to Sincerity. He that desires Grace truly, desires it not barely as a Bridge to Heaven, and so to seek no more then will just bear his charges thither: but he desires it for its own sake; And therefore desires the height of it. That person that desires Grace only for Heavens sake, and inquires what is the lowest measure of Grace that any one may have and come to Heaven (by which he meaneth but to be saved from misery) upon this design, that if he could but come to that pitch he would desire no more, that person is rotten at the heart. Christians, the Lord doth expect of you, that you should not be Babes and Dwarfs, He looks now especially that you should make some progress: What do you more then heretofore? What! do you feel his spurs in your sides, and his whip at your backs; And yet never mend your pace in Religion, nor stir one jot the faster? Let me commend to you Paul's study Phil. 3. 12. 13. 14. It argues a base and unworthy spirit to content ourselves with little things in Religion.

Coun. V. Labor that Holiness may become your nature, and Religion your business. Then you are come to somewhat indeed in Religion, when the work of God is become your natural, and beloved employment, your Meat and Drink, your Work and Wages. When your Tongues and Hearts do as naturally run on God, as others on and of the world: much of that may be attained by constant care and prayer. Brethren let God's work be done by you, not by the by, but as your greatest business: Seek first the Kingdom of God Matth. 6. 33. And so wherever you be, you may be able to give that account of yourselves, that our Savior did when they inquired of him, That you are about your Fathers business, Luke 2. 59.

Coun. VI. Confine not your Religion to your knees, but carry on an even spun thread of Holiness through your whole Course. Brethren, 'tis the disgrace of Religion that Christians are so unlike themselves, unless it be when they are in holy duties. This wounds Religion to the quick, when it shall be said of Professors, these men indeed will pray like Angels, but for ought we can see they are as Peevish, and as Touchy as any other men, and they are as Hard in their Dealings, and make as little Conscience of their Words as others do. Beloved, think not Religion lies only or chiefly in Praying, Hearing, Reading. No you must be throughout Religious. Sirs, bring forth your Religion out of your Closets into your ordinary Course. Let there not be a life of Holiness on the outside of the Cloth: But Let Holiness be woven into the whole of your Conversations. Here lies the excellency & difficulty of Religion: when you have the baits of intemperance before you, then to hold the Reins hard, and deny your flesh: when you have provocation before you, then to bite in your passions, and bridle the unruly member? When you have dealings with others, then to proceed by that golden rule of Equity and Charity, To do to others as your Consciences tell you, you would have them do in the like case to you. When you are called upon in your several relations, then to behave yourselves with that tenderness and love, with that reverence and obedience, with that courtesy and condescension, and kindness that becomes you in your various capacities; In this I say lies the Excellency of Religion.

Coun. VII. Ever walk with your End in your Eye. It is true, according to the usual and useful similitude, The Traveler thinks not of his Journeyes end every step, nor need he: yet there is no Traveler but thinks of it at his setting out: Brethren, there is nothing hinders but that with Prayer and Watchfulness you might come to this, in every solemn action to mind God as your End: Impose this upon yourselves as your daily rule to walk by, never to lie down but with these thoughts [Well I will make use of my Bed as an Ordinance of God for my natural refreshment, that a weary Servant of his may be fitted for his work.] Never to rise up but with these thoughts I will set forth this day in the Name of the Lord, and make it my business this day throughout to please him:] Never to set to your callings but in the entrance to think thus [I will set about my employment in obedience to God, because this is his will, that I should walk with him in my place and station.] Never to sit down to your Tables but thinking [I will now Eat and Drink not merely to feed my flesh, but to cherish a Servant of Christ Jesus, that he may have strength for his service:] Charge this upon yourselves, and examine in the evening, how you have minded it, and check yourselves wherein you come short. Once learn this, and you are come up to something: and you shall have the undoubted evidence of your sincerity, and shall know the inside of that blessed mystery of walking with God.

Coun. VIII. Be and do more then ordinary in your Familys, and Closets now in the defects of the more Public Ordinances.

1. In your Closets: See that your Consciences be able to bear you witness, that under God's extraordinary providences, you do more then ever in answer thereunto. It may be you Prayed twice in the day heretofore; why should you not at such a time as this is, make one visit more then ordinary to Heaven, daily to represent before God the calamities of his Church. This be sure of, that somewhat more then heretofore must now be done, else God will look upon himself as intollerably slighted; and upon his Church as most unnaturally neglected, if we do not now put to it. Be more then ever in self-examination. God doth look that when he is trying of us, we should be much in the trial of ourselves. And here let me put it to your Consciences: How are your rules for daily examination looked after? Do you try yourselves by them from day today? Ah wretched negligence! what have you given your approbation and passed your promise, and yet even in such a day as this so much forget your duty? God expects it of you, that now you see him angry, you should with more jealous fear and tender circumspecton and holy watchfulness and self-denial walk before him; else you will greatly incense his indignation, when he shall see that you slight his anger.

2. In your Families: Christians, now the Lord calls aloud upon you to set your houses in order. Oh see what is amiss in them, and strive to cast out that which may be a provocation. Three things I advise you to with reference to your Families.

1. That you set up the Solemn exercise of Catechising weekly among them: Methinks I would not question but that in every Godly Family there is a care of the Catechism. But when Governors do only impose it in general upon their Families; and occasionally take an account, I find but little progress is made: and therefore I beseech you, to make it a Solemn, standing, and constant exercise; and to expect of your children and servants as due an account weekly of what they have learnt in the Principles of Religion, as of any business of your own. Oh the incredible benefit that would speedily come of this, if I could but persuade and prevail with my hearers in so small a request as this!

2. That you be often enquiring into their spiritual estates; Follow them close, and let them have no quiet till you see they seriously mind and seek spiritual things. Put them upon secret Prayer: Provide helps for them till they are able to go without them: Shew them often the necessity of Regeneration, and Conversion, and the nature thereof. Put them in mind of the fearful misery of an unregenerate estate. Ask them often whether they are Converted or not. Shew them the danger of delaying in such a case. Beloved, 'tis too sadly evident that as the Ordinances are now somewhere managed, there is little of Conversion work like to be done. Oh you Governors of Families, do but your duty in your several places, and I doubt not but many Souls will nevertheless be Born to Christ, even in such a day as this.

3. Call them to an account of their proficiency by every opportunity. If there be but a Sermon, or a Chapter read, let them give you some account of it. Thus our Savior, when the Disciples (his Family) were in private, he was asking them whether they did understand, and profit by what they heard in public.—Mat. 13. 1.

Coun. IX. Be not discouraged by the present Difficulties of Religion, but rather rejoice in the opportunity to show your Love and Loyalty to your Lord. Do not think God hath dealt hardly with you now your Religion is like to cost you something, and presently think of shrinking, and drawing back to preserve your safety: If you do love the Lord Jesus you should Rejoice, and be exceeding glad in the opportunity to show it. Brethren, what hath your Religion cost you hitherto? And for shame suffer not your shrinking, and withdrawing to tell the world that you have not Love enough to Christ to engage you to run any hazard for him. Do you indeed Love the Lord? oh then now rejoice and be exceeding glad, for never had you such an opportunity in all your lives to show your Love as now; For never were you called to adventure so for him, and his service, as now you be. Now resolve, that if Religion will make you Vile, you will be yet more Vile; and let your Zeal and resolution for God be intended and heightened by the opposition.

The Cordials follow, which are Sacrament-Cordials.

Most Dearly Beloved Brethren,

THis holy Sacrament is appointed as a Sealing Ordinance between Christ and you. The Covenants are made, the terms agreed to on both sides; God is willing to be yours to all intents and purposes; your Shield and exceeding great Reward, your Refuge and your Rest, your God, and your Guide. While Christ hath it you shall never want; and what God is to him, that he (in your order) will be to you.

You again (through grace) are willing to be his: His in his own way, and on his own terms: willing to serve him; willing to fashion yourselves after him, willing to be betrothed to him and to be commanded by him; to use his remedies, to follow his counsels, and to acquiesce in him as your Blessedness: Thus all are agreed; the Articles are drawn; The Covenants both on God's part and yours are ready written: And here you are come to put all past controversy, and mutually to seal and subscribe: Oh happy and blessed meeting! Christians, do not forget your errand, Remember where you are, and what you are come for, and know that you are upon the solemnest transaction that ever passed between the Creator and the Creature: It is God's admirable condescension that he will be tied to us, and enter into bonds to us, to bless us, and reward us. And because our Faith is weak he hath brought his Surety with him, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is a Surety on his part, as well as ours, to undertake for the fulfilling of the promises. And he hath brought the visible signs and pledges by which all shall be firmly past and ratified before your eyes. This is the New Testament in my Blood, Luke 22. 20. Written in my Blood: Ratified in my blood. Oh Sirs, this is that which God doth here reach forth unto you with his own hand this day; The New Testament in Christ's Blood. Christians, prepare your Ears; And rouse up your Faith, and now believe and hear some of the blessed Articles of that Covenant that God doth here Sign and Seal to you: I shall mention only Nine, which I advise you to lay next your hearts while you have a day to live. And you shall find the virtue of these Cordials strong and operative in all conditions.

Arti. I. That he will fulfil to you the place of all Relations 2 Cor. 6. 18. I will be a Father to you, and ye shall be my Sons and Daughters. Whatever Children may expect from a Father, that you may look for from me: I will find you Meat, be not thoughtful, I know that you have need of all these things, Matth. 26. 31, 32. You shall be Clothed out of my Ward-robe, Matth. 6. 28, 29, 30. and wear my Livery: And when you have need of Correction, I will Remember to do it in mercy, and you shall find, that as a man chasteneth his Son, so the Lord your God chasteneth you, Deut. 8. 5.

I will be a Husband to you and will betroth you unto me forever, Hosea. 2. 19. You shall not need to fear, your Maker is your Husband: I will give you my choice Love: I will give you my heart.

I will be a Lord and Sovereign to you: The Lord is your Judge: The Lord is your Lawgiver: The Lord is your King: Fear not the unrighteousness of men; I will judge your cause, I will defend your Rights, you shall not stand or fall at man's Bar; you shall not be cast at their Votes: Let them Curse, I will Bless: Let them Condemn, I will Justify: Who shall accuse, when I shall acquit you? Who shall lay anything to your charge, when I do discharge you? When you come upon trial for your life to have your eternal state decided, you shall see your Friend, your Father on the Bench: And you shall surely stand in judgment, and be found at the right hand among the sheep and hear the King say, Come ye Blessed.

I will be a Shepherd to you, fear no evil, for I am with you, you shall not want for I will feed you: you shall not wander to be lost, for I will restore you: I will cause you to lie down in green Pastures, and lead you beside the still waters: if my Officers be careless, I will do it myself: As for you O my flock, thus saith the Lord God, I will judge between Cattel and Cattel, I will feed my flock, saith the Lord God, and cause them to lie down. I will seek that which is lost, and bring again that which is driven away, and bind up that which is broken, and strengthen that which is sick; but I will destroy the Fat, and the strong, and will feed them with judgment.

I will be a Physician to you. I will heal your backslidings, and cure all your diseases, fear not, never did soul miscarry that left itself in my hands and would but follow my prescriptions.

Well this is one of the Articles that God here sealeth to, that he will be to you in the place of all Relations. Silence thou quarreling unbelief, methinks I hear thy whispers, that this is too good to be true, that it were presumption in us to count upon all this. What shall they that must say to corruption, thou art my father, be able to say to the incorruptible God, thou art my Father; Shall they that must say to the worm thou art my mother, and my sister, be able to say to the Angels of Light, ye are my fellow Servants? And to the King of Glory, Thou art my Brother, and my Kinsman? Shall Majesty espouse himself to misery, and the worms meat be married to Immortality and life, How can these things be?

Nay but O heart of Infidelity, who art thou that repliest against God? Dost thou, under a sly pretence of humility, question with thy Maker and call his Veracity into doubt? Is not this his Word, his Promise, his Covenant? and is not here his Seal? why then dost thou doubt O thou of little Faith?

Art. II. That he will entitle you to all the Divine Persons and Perfections, Gen. 17. 7. I will be a God unto thee; mark, God gives away himself; and he gives his Son to you, Isa. 42. 6. I will give thee for a Covenant of the people. This is the Churches triumph, Isa. 9. 6. unto us a Son is given. And he gives his Spirit to you, John 14. 16. He shall give you another Comforter. And Believers acknowledge the Receipt, 1 Cor. 2. 12. We have received the Spirit which is of God. Thus you see all the Persons of the God-head are made over to you; and so are all the Perfections of the God-head; for so the Covenant runs, Gen. 17. 1. I am the All-mighty God, or the All-sufficient God, walk before me and be upright: these are the terms between God and a believer, Be thou upright before me, and I will be All-sufficient to thee: The All-sufficiency of God is the comprehension of all his Perfections. Truth without Power, or Power without Wisdom, or both without Goodness, would not be All-sufficiency: All-sufficiency takes in all that is in God (it we may speak of God's most simple Essence according to the shallow reach of our present capacity) yea it comprehends infinitely more then can be said or thought. Why now this is the Covenant of grace which God establishes with you this day, that he will be a God All-sufficient to you.

Christians rouse up your Faith: Now appropriate and apply the Promises: Now believe strongly, and steadfastly, and believing will fill you with joy unspeakable, and full of glory. I do not wonder if your Faith be put to it in so high and great a mystery; To draw nigh to the infinite Majesty, and consideringly, and without hesitancy to say, Thou art mine and all that thou hast, this is no easy thing. But thou mayst not dare to doubt it. Canst thou question him who is the Truth? can the strength of Israel lie, or his word deceive thee? But the soul is ready to reply, oh the thing is too high, and too great for me to presume to believe, and is ready with Peter, astonished to cry out, Depart Lord, for I am a sinful man. But why doth thine hand tremble, and thy heart fail thee, and thy feet (with Peters when walking on the waters) begin to sink? What doest thou stick at? Is it at the truth of the Promise? No saith the trembling soul, but sure so much can never belong to me so sinful, I am afraid it is not mine, why, what saith the Promise? only be upright. What though thou hast an hundred failings, yet thy heart is upright: the bent of thy heart is mainly for God and Holiness; thou makest conscience of all sin, little as well as great, secret as well as open, and doest not deliberately allow thyself in any: thou doest in the settled frame of thy heart prefer the pleasing of God, and value his favor, and fellowship above all worldly good, therefore thou art upright, these marks are infalliable. What, doest thou object thy failings? Art thou under a Covenant of works? Do you think God now stands upon Perfection? The Covenant is plain: God conditions but for uprightness, and God hath wrought in thee the condition that he requirts of thee. What can be plainer? wilt thou suffer the Devil and unbelief to catch the Bread out of thy hand, when God tells thee it is thine? wilt thou be against thyself, and refuse thine own peace, when God is come to Seal thee up to the day of Redemption: This is that which the Lord here Seals to thee, That he will be God All-sufficient to thee. O believe, and be thankful, and rejoice in thine own blessedness: O happy, thrice happy souls, whom the living God thus Signeth and Sealeth to, and Assigns over all his infinite Perfections as its everlasting possession.

Art. III. That he will discharge you from all your Debts. Heb. 8. 10, 12. This is the Covenant, I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more, Isa. 1. 18. Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as Snow. Believest thou this? Come near beloved Christian, approach believingly, and here thou shalt see the Lord Crossing our all thy Debts, taking away the hand writing that is against thee, declaring that he hath received a Ransom and is satisfied, Content, and Paid. Oh happy man that shall leave all thy sins behind thee, why this is the very thing that the faithful God doth here Seal unto thee. Thy Pardon is written in this Sacred blood, which is here shed for the remission of sins. So that thou mayest triumph with the Apostle, Who is he that condemneth, it is Christ that died, Rom. 8. 34.

Art. IV. That he will save you from all your enemies, not from the Combat, but from the Conquest. The victory shall be sure, so far God is engaged. So the Covenant runs in its first discovery, That the Seed of the Woman should break the Serpents head, though he should bruise his heel, Gen. 3. 15. by the Seed of the Woman, understand not Christ only, but all Believers: by the Serpent understand not Satan only, but all his party, the ungodly persecuting world, which are his Children; and all our Tyrannous Lusts which are his brood, his works. By his bruising our heel, understand his molesting, and wounding of us, but not mortally. By our breaking his head, understand the total and final victory which we shall most certainly obtain over him and all his party at last. Christians, what should you fear! Death? The Covenant here Sealed makes over Death as a Legacy to you, and behold it brings you the head of your conquered enemy in a Charger. 1 Cor. 3. 22. Death is yours: O blessed and most grateful present. Satan? The Covenant assures you God will bruise him under your feet shortly, Rom. 16. 20. The World? Be of good cheer, Christ hath overcome the World, John. 16. 33. Hell? There is no Condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, Rom. 8. 1. Sin? This indeed is to be dreaded, but with a watchful and cautious fear: not with a fainting discouraging fear: sin shall not have dominion over you, Rom. 6. 13, 14.

Christians, here now is meat for your Faith, What do all these holy Promises nothing move you? or carry little savor, or relish with them? What, shall the All-mighty God give it to thee under his own hands that thou art a freeman, and thou make little account of it? shall he give thee thy protection, and thou lay it by as a useless paper that signifies little? O sirs, when your hearts are ready to faint because of the Sons of Anak that be in the way, when you see the black guard gaping upon you, and the King of Terrors levelling at you, and a wicked World armed with rage against you, and full of malice, and the thieves and conspiratours in the bosom watching their opportunity to betray all to them, yet let not this discourage you: These were enough indeed to make a considering man's heart to melt, and die within him, but that the Covenant of Grace yields such ample relief against all. Oh be ever mindful of the Covenant: Remember what hath past this day between the Living God and your Souls: Watch O Christian, and stand fast, quit thee like a man. The Conquest is sure: Who would not fight with courage that hath assurance of the Victory.

Art. V. That he will befriend you in all conditions. He will be a fast friend to you in every change, and turn all things to your good, even when you are ready to say unbelievably with Jacob, All these things are against me, Rom. 8. 28. Gen. 42. 36. If he brings you into the Wilderness, There he will speak comfortably to you, Hosea 2. 14. In the fire, And in the water he will be with you, Isaiah 43. 2. He will be a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, and a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall, Isa. 25. 4.

Beloved, here the Lord is come to Seal all these Promises to you: Oh go home and bless yourselves in the sweet security of your estate. God hath promised you that what ever condition you be in, you shall have succor, and support from him, and enjoy his presence with you; and see his Finger in all your troubles, sweetly turning all to the best: Go away and live like Believers. Be not afraid of suffering, but show that you believe what God hath promised, that afflictions shall not hurt you. The next time any trouble comes upon you, Remember what a Promise God hath passed unto you this day, and wait on him believingly for the happy issue and event of every trial that shall befall you.

Art. VI. That he will take upon him the care of all your Concernments. You must be Carefull in nothing, Phil. 4. 6. He careth for you, 1 Pet. 5. 7. Take no thought what you shall eat or drink, neither be of doubtful mind, but rather seek you the Kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added to you, Luke 12. 29, 31. Come you to this holy Ordinance in any distress or trouble? Methinks you should go from it as Hannah, and your countenance be no more sad. God will number your hairs, and will take care that nothing be lost, John 6. 39. Luke 12. 7. He will take care of your names, and bring forth your Righteousness as the Light, Psalm 37. 5, 6. of your subsistence, He will give meat to them that fear him, and be ever mindful of his Covenant, Psalm 111. 5. of your seed, for he will be a God unto them, and will entail the blessing upon them, Gen. 17. 7. He commands that your Widows and Fatherless Children should be left on him. He is by Covenant to look after their concerns, you need not be solicitous. He is tender of you when he seems most to neglect you, as Moses sister that was secretly watching behind the Bush, and wistly looking on, to see what was done to the Child, though to the Finders it seemed exposed to Famine, and Death in the Flags.

Art. VII. That he will give you, or be himself to you instead of all Comforts. He will be a Sun and a shield, and will give Grace and Glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly, Psalm 84. 11. Oh the treasure in these words. I am thy Shield and exceeding great Reward! I will undertake both for thy Protection and Provision: When any evil assailes thee I will be a Shield to thee: When any good is wanting I will be a Supply. Thou shalt have Children, or I will be better to thee than ten Children. Thou shalt have Riches, or I will be thy Store. Thou shalt have Friends if best for thee, or else I will be thy Comforter in thy solitude, thy Counselor in thy distress. My Secrets, my Ear, and my Door shall be ever open to thee, Mark 10. 30. He shall receive an hundred fold now in this time: Though he have not the things themselves, yet he shall have all these, and more then all in me: I will be House, and Friend, and Father to him all in one. If you should have an hundred Candles burning in a Room, and should put out everyone, and open the window and let in the Sun, this would be better then the hundred lights that were put out: So here, though thou shouldst be called to forsake all, 'twill be but as the letting the Cistern run and open to thee the Fountain.

Arti. VIII. That he will maintain you all your days in his service. He will be your Guide even unto Death, Psalm 48. 14. Christians, whilst you have a day to live, God will stand by you: He will never leave you nor forsake you, Heb. 13. 5. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow you all the days of your lives, Psalm 23. 6. And the Lord will never turn away from you to do you good, Jer. 32. 40. Oh happy Covenant that the Lord Sealeth to you.

Art. IX. That when you come to Age he will give the Kingdom to you. God saith to the Believer here: Thine is the Kingdom: What ever is promised in the Covenant, is Sealed in the Sacrament, Luke 12. 32. It is your Fathers good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, Luke 22. 29. I appoint unto you a Kingdom, mark the promise is pregnant with a Kingdom. 'Tis no less then a Crown, a Kingdom, that is here delivered to you, Luke 19. 12. A certain noble man went into a far Country to receive to himself a Kingdom and to return: This is the business you are come for hither, to receive to yourselves a Kingdom and so to return. Oh methinks you should forget what ground you go upon, as you are going home, to think what you have received here: methinks you should go forth as Haman from the Banquet joyful and with a glad heart. Sirs, do you know what you are doing? why the Lord doth by these signs give you the Kingdom as a man by the delivering to you a Turf or a Key gives possession of an House, or Land. Brethren, have you ever read of the Kingdom of joy, of the Crown of life, of the Robes of Righteousness, of the Thrones of Glory? Why all this God here makes over to you: I tell you Sirs, these are not big words, nor cunningly devised fables. God All-mighty is here come to certify you of the reality of his promises. As sure as you do now sit on your seats, you shall shortly sit on your Thrones. As sure as you are now clothed with flesh, so surely shall you be clothed with Glory. Are you sure that you are now on Earth? so surely shall you be shortly in Heaven. The Lord intendeth you but for a very little while in this lower Region, you must dwell above; where Christ is, there you must be also. As sure as you now see a Crucified Christ, so sure shall you shortly see a Glorified Christ. The Lord Jesus doth anticipate his sentence here, and calls to you, Guests, Come ye Blessed, inherit the Kingdom. Take the writing, behold the Seals, here are the Conveyances of the Kingdom: The donation is sure and full, unalterable, irrevocable.

Christians, do you believe? If you do, methinks you should be ravished: methinks you should be filled with joy unspeakable and full of Glory! But do you stagger at the promise through unbelief? Do you sey, oh it is too much, and too great? why how can that be? What! too great for God to make good? thou darest not think so: But it is too great for me to count upon. Why but man, dost thou not bear upon thee the marks of the Lord Jesus; Whose Image and Superscription is this? Doth not your very heart prize Christ above all the world? Hast thou not made a deliberate choice of him, for thy Head and Husband? Hast not thou entered into a solemn contract with him, to be his for all times and conditions, and to love, honor and obey him, before all others to the death? And doth not thy heart stand to this choice? Hast not thou taken him with his Yoke, and with his Cross? And dost not thou in thy practice first seek the Kingdom of God, and the Righteousness thereof? And hast not thou chosen the way of the Kingdom? Art not thou in love with Holiness, and desirest grace more then Gold? Dost not thou prefer a holy and spiritual life, before all the grandeur of the world, and pleasure of the flesh? And all this not only for a fit or a flash, but in the settled frame and disposition of thy heart? surely thou must wrong God and thyself, if thou deniest it to be thus with thee. Why these are the marks of the Lord Jesus upon thee, the sure marks: fear not, these cannot deceive thee, They evidence that thou art born of God, that thou art a Son, and so an Heir; and therefore mayest lay claim to the inheritance.

Come then Beloved Christians be of good comfort, why shouldst thou doubt? Thou hast the mark of the sheep, And therefore thy portion shall be at the Right hand, and thy Sentence among the Blessed. Well then, receive this Holy Sacrament as the pledge of all this. Go home and look over all these blessed Promises, and count them thine: Do not read them (as too often heretofore) as if they did not concern thee: Remember what God hath here promised under hand and Seal to thee, and let not all be left behind thee, when thou goest hence; but let the remembrance, the fruit and sweet of this, abide upon thee whilst thou hast a day to live, Never forget what the Lord hath here spoken to thy Soul: make more of the Promises then ever in thy life before: Bless thyself in them: Remember how the Lord delivered thee the Promises: how he Sealed to the several Articles: how he sprinkled the blood upon the Book of the Covenant and gave it to thee, and said, This is the New Testament in my Blood: Oh live henceforth a life of joy, and Faith, as a man that is elevated above the world. Do not live at thy old, dull, and slothful rate, carry it like a Believer, and in a word, walk as one that doth indeed take all for Truth that the Lord hath spoken to thee this day. Let that of the Apostle be a close to all, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Having therefore these Promises dearly beloved, let us Cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh, and spirit, perfecting Holiness in the fear of God.

The Epistle.

READER.

There needs no more to commend this Book (Remains of Mr. Joseph Alleine) to thee, but to assure thee that it is his own, and though a Posthumous, yet no spurious birth. Though some parcels come to thee with this disadvantage, only as they were taken from his mouth as he preached, yet much of it was written with his own hand. If thou hast tasted that divine and warm spirit, which run through his other Writings already published, it will sure set thee a thirsting after what else hath drop'd from the same holy lips or hands. The labors of a man of God, so mighty in the Sriptures, and in the power of God, will not be either unuseful, or unacceptable: though what thou hast here, be but fragments, yet thou wilt find them to be of the same bread, with those loves which have been already dealt out to thee, by the same hand The Publisher hath gathered up these fragments, it being pity they should be lost. For my part, I have not had the time to read through the whole Book since it came to my hands, but have so far looked into it, that I Judge it to be singularly useful, for the engaging thee in, and directing and quickening thee to that even, spiritual, active life, which will be both thy beauty and thy comfort.

That the spirit of the living God, which so eminently furnished the head, fired the heart, and filled up the life of this holy man, may so animate these holy lines, that they may become effectual to the forming their very Image upon thy soul and life, is the prayer of,

Thy Friend in Christ, Richard Alleine.

The Art of Dying well.

Luk. 12. 19, 20.

Soul thou hast much goods laid up for many years — But God said, Thou fool this night shall thy soul be required of thee.

Qu. Since no man hath one days certainty of his life, what may we do to be secured from being surprised by death?

1. Sit loose from the world, that you may be able to pack up •...nd be gone upon sudden warning. Here was the folly and misery of this rich man, that he had set his heart upon the world, his mind did run upon his Barns, and upon his Belly; his Goods, were his God's, he wi•...hes no other felicity, than to eat and be merry: If you would be sit for your great Journey to your long home, you must lay aside every weight, and in special, the incumbring and intangling, and insnaring clog and burden of worldly affections; you must take heed to yourselves, least at any time your hearts be over-charged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and the cares of this life; if you would not have that day come upon you unawares. It is said, there is a <◇> whose heart is in his Belly; would there were no such Monsters among men. Certainly, that man whose heart is in his Belly, or on his Cosfer, that Idolizes his friends, or his reputation; is no more fit for the assaults of Death, than the unhappy Trojans buried in Sleep and Wine, for the Invasion of the well-appointed Greeks: or the secure Laish for the subtle Danites: or the Shechemites when sore and unwieldy, for the Sons of violence, and Instruments of cruelty. Study to be Crucified to the world, to use all earthly comforts in a mortified manner, as those that are taking their long leave, and let Death find you dead besorehand; and then let it come when it will, and do its worst.

2. Intrench not on God's Prerogative, in carving out the future time. Reckon not upon hereafter; this was the unhappiness of this rich fool, he counts upon many years; God had given him much goods, and now he is so bold, as to cast upon many merry days to spend them; but God is angry at his usurpation, and since he would presume to be his own carver, God rebukes his boldness, and will show his Prerogative, and will cut him short enough, this night shall thy soul be required. Remember your times are in God's hands, improve with all possible diligence your present allowance; he gives you wealth to lay up for hereafter, but he keeps your time in his own hands; so that you shall not know one day whether you shall ever have another, or be allowed to live till the n•...xt; cast not upon tomorrow. Live this day well. When shall we learn to practice the received Lesson, to live every day as if it were our last? Blessed men that we should be, if we would but live up to this short rule. Christians, why are our lives so far wide of our rules, and principles? Doth Conscience witness that you live up to this? If the rule be good, why do you not da•...lie study to consorm to it? is it not a shame, that a heathen should teach you? think, saith he, every morning when thou risest, I may never lie down again; and every night thou liest down, it may be I may never rise again; when thou goest out, I may never return; when thou comest in, I may never more go out. Christian, let it be thy serious thought every morning, I will spend this day for eternity.

3. Store up in Heaven •...pace, and see that you be rich towards God. It was the want of this, that made this rich worldling to be branded for a fool. Give Alms plentifully, and provide for yourselves Bags, that wax not old; be sparing as to yourselves, but lay out, and spare not upon the Service of God. Give yourselves unto prayer, let reading the Word, Meditation•..., Self-examination, be your daily exercises, do good to all men, serve your generation with diligence, study to be useful, sill up your relations with duties, and when you have done all, go out of your selves, look wholly unto Jesus, and live by faith, this do, and you shall have treasure in Heaven; and let death come, when it will, it will but set you in possession of glory. But woe to them that have laid up nothing on the other side the Grave; Death will break them forever, and will prove their eternal undoing.

4. Be the death of your sins, that they may not fasten like Hell-hounds upon you, when you are most helpless. Mortify your corruptions, and then the bitterness of Death is past. Sin is the sting of Death, that makes it dreadful, that makes it hurtful; O do not arm your enemy against you, death cannot hurt you, but by the weapons that you put into its hands by your sins; if Sin be dead, death is conquered. This is the top of misery, when sin and death shall sly upon a poor creature together, when death, as the unclean Spirit, taking with him seven other Spirits worse than himself, shall set a man's Sins all upon him, and besides the terror of its own apaling looks, shall show him the more ghastly, and affrighting faces of those Fiends and Furies, his unpardoned sins; this is the sting of death, and makes that the King of terrors.

5. Observe the approaches of your enemy daily, and remember that you are for ought you know, more than half dead already. Let not gray hairs be here and there upon you, and you know it not; observe all the warnings of death, and consider in all your pains and insirmities, that these are but twitches, and items from death. How often is death knocking at your doors? Death hath a great part of you already in possession; whatsoever is past, is death's; and how little, how very little is to come, God knows; sure I am, nothing is yours but the present time. Christians, shall Death get ground upon you every day, and be marching up towards you, and will not you provide accordingly, and make preparations for it every day? as Death comes daily towards you, do you labor to make it good against Death. Let your fortifications go on daily, let some breach be made up; let somewhat be mended every day, forget not that holy Counsel to meditate every evening, that seeing thy days are numbered, there is one more of thy number spent, and thou art now nearer to thy end by a day.

6. Dare not to live in such a case or course, that you would not dare to die in. How know you but your next step may be into the grave? and would you be found in your sins? how do you know, but death may meet you at the next turning? and O how unwelcome a meeting will it be, if you be found by it laden with the gains of unrighteousness, or with lusts, and pleasures! would you have Death to find you out of your harnesses? would you meet your enemy, without a weapon? or be found by him in a careless, secure, and sleeping posture? If not, how dare you live at such a rate? are you at an agreement with Death.

7. Be always in your Fathers business, that Death may not be able to find you doing evil, or doing nothing; the holy Calvin would not sorhear his labors in his dying Sickness; but, when persuaded to give over, replied, what shall my Lord come and find me idle? it was said of the laborious Willet, who was always very early at his work, that he was half way on his journey before others did set out. Blessed is that Servant whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing. Remember in what you undertake, that Death may overtakq you before you have ended: therefore see that you do noth•...ng without God's warrant, carry this with you, and you need not fear Death's surprisal. Woe unto you if Death find you, with your work to do. How holily, how happily, ended that Blessed Saint Mr. Lovo, who could dare to say in his last Prayer, Father, I have glorified the•... on Earth, I have sinished the work which thou gavest st•...ma to do, and now, O Father glorify me withthy own self? Surely the end of that man was peace. The last words that ever he spake, were Blessed be God for Jesus Christ. Blessed be God for peace of Conscience. He lived a life of exemplary diligence, and the comfort of his death, answered the holy painfulness of his life. This was Paul's joy, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth is laid up for me the Crown of life.

8. Get Conscience to be your friend, least that should set Death upon you, to worry you, when you come to die. Beware you mistake not the slumber of Conscience, for a settled peace; the Serpent may be but frozen in your bosoms, when you think him dead. Death will rouse the sleeping Lyon, and then Oh fearful work that he will make! his roaring will shake the heart of Rock, and pale the countenance of Kings, and loose their joints, and break all their bones. If you be wise, get and keep a good Conscience; carry it to the fountain opened for sin, and for uncleanness, get it sprinkled with the blood of Christ. Exercise yourselves to keep a Conscience void of offence towards God... (d) towards all men. In all your undertakings, let Conscience have the casting voice, ask counsel of it diligently, hear its rebukes patiently, thankfully, as a precious balm that will not break your heads; make it to give in its judgment about your Estates: If it be confident, be sure it be upon Scripture evidence; if it be doubtful, get it well settled in time; if it condemn you, away with speed to your Redeemer; sue out your pardon, get it purified, and pacified. Follow after peace and holiness, but accept of no peace but of God's speaking. Please Conscience, rather than all the world; keep her, and she shall keep you; they that are careless of defending Conscience, are preparing for their own torment at death.

9. Remember your Sick-bed resolutions, and set a mark upon those things that did make death look most ghastly. Woe to you if Sickness find you again in the same sins which formerly stung you. what will you say to Conscience, or how will you look Death in the face, if you be found at last to have been false to your Sick-bed vows? Alphonsus King of Aragon, sent to the Bishop, to know how he should do to become a good man; he answered, he should be the man he promised to be, when last sick of the Gout.

10. Keep no long Reckonings, but let Conscience bring you in the accounts every day before you sleep. Keep a Day book in your own hearts, speedily make up any controversies that may fall out between God and your Souls, 'twil be sad to find old things to reckon for, when you come to die: you cannot imagine the torment that one sin unrepented of, or unhumbled for, may cost you; study to keep all clear, and even daily within: This made dying Oecolampadius clap his hand upon his Breast, saying, hic sat est Lucis, 'tis all light within; daily selfexamination will make you to live holily, and die comfortably; but if you let things run long, you will be all at a loss.

11. Set your houses in order that you may not have your estates in the world to settle, when God requires your Souls: Make your wills in your health and vigor, and therein be sure so to settle your estates, as that God and good uses be not shut out, nor forgotten. Wretched men that have so many hundreds to settle upon their Children, can scarce find in their hearts to settle one in the hundred upon God's special Service.

12. Look often into your Coffins, and behold your bones and dust, as shortly others shall, when turned out of your Graves: Be not strangers to the thoughts of death; expect it, wait all the days of your appointed time when your change shall come; familiarize the thoughts of Death to yourselves, that you may be always safe, you must never be secure; you must pray, and set a watch, and be always upon your guard; walk every day some serious turns with Death, let it never come unlook'd for; God forbid Death should come upon you, and you say, I did not think of it: You must daily think of it, and look for it. How holy and happy a man was he, that could say, I have not known what tomorrow meant this twenty years? Consider your latter end, learn to number your days: God doth number them, why should not you? if the man of the house had known what hour of the night the Thief would have come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his House to be broken up; but it is too late to think of it, when the House is risled: Be not of them that put far off the evil day; he that remembers not his end, remembers nothing as he should: It is the remembrance of Death puts life into our Prayers, into our Graces, and all our motions. He that puts off the thoughts of Death, gives his enemy unspeakable advantages: Death comes upon the sleeping and secure sinner, as Jael upon Sisera, and strikes the fatal nail through his temples, and fastens him to the earth: or as David upon the Amalckites, when he and his mighty men came upon them, chafed in their minds, as a Bear robbed of her Whelps, when they found them spread abroad upon the earth, eating, drinking, dancing, and smote them from the twilight to the evening of the day.

13. Above all speed to the City of refuge.

- First, Get into it, close soundly with Jesus Christ. O dreadful work that Death makes with those, that are not found in him; it tears the body and soul asunder, it drags the soul to Hell, and locks up the dust in Prison, till the terrible Judgment, it puts an eternal end to all comforts, and enters the sinner upon unchangeable misery, and delivers over the Prisoners to the tormentors; but if you give up yourselves entirely, beforehand, and accept Christ by believing, on his own terms; this will secure you in him, then the danger of this is over. Look to this, whatsoever you neglect, once in Christ, and you have the victory; you may send a challenge to Death, and with Paul triumph before the Battle, and make the Bonfires, and ring out the Bells, as sure of the conquest, and go with shouts of joy, and palms of victory, and garments of salvation to encounter with, or rather to make spoil upon your already conquered enemy.
- 2. Keep you in it, when you have received Christ Jesus the Lord, you must walk in him; wander from him, and you betray your safety; O look to it that death find you not venturing out of your refuge, by loose walking. God bespeaks you here as Solomon did Shimei, 1 Kings 2. 36, 37. And the King sent for Shimei, and said unto him, build thee an house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither, for on the day thou goest out thou shalt know for certain thou shalt surely die.

14. Lay in a stock of promises now in time against the assaults of Death; that come when it will, thou mayst have a Cordial ready, and be provided with an Antidote. Delight thy soul in meditating on the 6th of John, and 1 Cor. Chap. 15. and the fifth Chapter of the second Epistle of the Corinthians.

15. My last, but not my least advice is, that you suffer not the state of your immortal souls to lie any longer at uncertainties. Put to it with all your might for assurance, try an hundred times, and make diligent search into the state of your hearts. What blessed helps have you in Mr. Baxter's Works, Mr. Richard Alleines, and others, to put all out of doubt? there you have sure marks, ply your hearts with them, be diligent observers of the workings of your souls; lie at God's door night and day, and put yourselves on God's trial; if all this will not do it, apply yourselves to some faithful and experienced Minister, and above all close with Christ anew, solemnly engage yourselves in Covenant with him, according to the Directions in Mr. Richard Alleine's Book Vindication of Godliness, to this purpose; how can you live one day, or die without some evidence that it shall be well with you forever? Ah the woeful case that the poor trembling Soul must needs be in, when it thrusts out into the Ocean of Eternity, not knowing whither it is going, whether it shall be landed in the Region on of eternal darkness, or the Land of light, when it must go forth it knows not whether into the Arms of Angels, or the teeth and talons of cursed Fiends and Harpies; my soul hath often relented at the thoughts of that pathetick moan of dying Adrian, who thus bespeaks his anxious soul, when ready to be delivered up (I cannot but spoil it by Englishing it) ah my poor, little, trembling, wandering Soul, whether art thou going, into I know not what rough and horrid places? and it is a heart piercing complaint of poor Beringarius, who was one of the first lights in the time of the thickest AntiChristian darkness; who having often dallyed with Conscience, recanting over and over to avoid Death (though he did afterwards still return to the Preaching, Pro...ssion, and Practice of the truth, has bemoaned himself on his death bed: Now I am going to appear before my Judge, not knowing whether I shall be saved, as I hope; or damned, as I fear. Brethren, if you would not be surprised by Death, with these uncertainties put all out of question now, without delay in your health and strength.

PSAL. 4. 4.

Commune with your own heart upon your Bed.

Doct THat it is the great duty of every man, to be often conferring with, and taking an account of his own heart, 2 Cor. 13. 5, Examine yourselves, prove yourselves; know you not your own selves? It is the duty of a man not to take the Report of his heart, but he must search his heart, he must be often putting questions to his heart. The heart cannot be easily found out. The Reasons of the point are these two.

First, Reas. 1. Is taken from the dissiculty of coming to know our own hearts. Therefore 'tis a necessary duty, because it is so hard to know our own hearts. Now this appears,

First, Because men are so generally mistaken in their own hearts: and that both bad men, and good men. Bad men, how osten do they boast of their good hearts? And though our Savior tells us that out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, &c. yet all this while they think their hearts are good, they see nothing of these things in their hearts.

When Hazael heard of his heart, he w...red that he should have such a heart. ⟨◇⟩ would not believe that there was such ⟨◇◇⟩ nature in his heart. He thought it w... ⟨◇⟩ Dogs, and Tigers to do this: and yet a...wards he did all this. And so for Good m...; how did Peter fail in this, that he would ⟨◇⟩ for him? And Christ could scarce put him out of this conceit. And it is like that he did intend what he spake, yea, he did try sarter than the rest did, sor he only did draw his sword. And who would have thought that there was that swearing, and cursing in his heart as there was? And so of David's Adultery, 2 Sam. 12.

Secondly, It appears in that it hath cos... men so dear to know their h...ts. (1) It hath cost them sharp trials. Deut. 8. 2. God led thee these forty years in the Wilderness, to know what was in thine heart. That is, to make you to know, One would have thought that they had never been guilty of such horrid unbelief to distrust God, when they did feed upon, and weared miracles. (2) It hath cost them many sad falls to know them. 2 Chron. 32. 31. Hezekiah nor nobody else would have thought that there could have been that in his heart, after God had wrought a miracle for him; And yet God left him that he might try what was in his heart. Brethren take heed that you be not too sure of your own hearts, be often fearful of your own hearts. (3) It hath cost them many tears and Prayers to know them. Though some of God... people have been Students of their own hearts twenty or forty years, yet after all this, they do find, sometimes, their hearts be too hard for them.

Thirdly, The difficulty of this appears, Because the Saints have called in the special help of God, without which they could not come to know it. So did David Psal. 139. 23. Search me O God, &c. Our own hearts are too hard for us unless we take God's special assistance with us. Our hearts will deal with us, without this, as a bad neighbor will do when we come to search for our Goods, they will not let you in, except you come with the Kings Officer. Now the difficulty of this lies (1) In that the heart of man is so deep, Eccl. 7. 24. That which is exceeding deep who can find it out? Now so is the heart of man; for so Psal. 64. 6. And the heart is deep. The heart of man is deep as earth, yea, as Hell. •...m. 3. that is, the hell that is in the heart. •...2) The heart is very dark. Eph. 4. 18. Having the understanding darkened, &c. There •...ou have two parts of the misery of man in his natural estate. 1. He is a stranger to God; 2. To Himself. He cannot see a jot into his own heart, till the Lord do spring into the soul with a new light; as he did into the Prison, they cannot see what there is in the heart. And we need not any further evidence for this, than that common good opinion that men have of their hearts. Though their hearts are full of odious poison, and the like, yet they cannot see it till God open their eyes by conversion; and then they can see it: But yet it is but candle-light that the best of us have here of our hearts. (3.) Because the heart is very deceitful, above all things. There have been great deceits in the world; yet put all together, none in the world is so cunning as the heart, there is no comparison. You would think if a man were told beforehand, there is a known Cheater come to deal with him therefore he should take heed of dealing wit... him, such a man would think sure that h... should not be too hard for him; but yet th... Saints have known this, that the heart is so de ceitful; and they have been twenty or fort... years learning it; yet their hearts are too har... for them.

Reas. 2. Secondly, Because the knowledge of the heart is so exceeding necessary. If a man... turn over all the Books in the world, and be... not learned in his own heart, it is nothing.

Use. The use is to stir us up to know our... own...rights. I beseech you what ever you neglect, neglect not this duty.

Now there be sundry ways of Communing with our own hearts. Sometimes by way of Consolation. Return to thy Rest O my Soul, &c. Psal. 116. 7. Sometimes by way of expostulation. Why art thou cast down O my soul, &c. Ps. 42. Sometimes by way of Exhortation, to quicken and excite our hearts. Psal. 62. 5. My soul wait thou only upon God. Here he stirs up his heart in believing in God. So awake, up my Glory. that is, my heart or soul. The soul of man, that is his honor, Gen. 49. 6. And see how David doth exhort his soul: up my heart, my Glory. He found his heart, it may be, somewhat dead and dull, and therefore he stirs it up, sometimes by way of Instruction, Psal. 16. 2. 7.

But sometimes by way of Examination and Inquiry, that is the principal on which all the rest do depend, and therefore I intend to insist on that; and I beseech you to stir up yourselves to this duty. My Brethren, you should be often questioning with your own hearts; It is sad to think how Papists, yea Pagans do outpass us in this, and what a shame is it that we should be such strangers to this duty? After we have been told of it, and have confessed that it is a duty!

Now you must know there is a double Communication. Ordinary, and Extraordinary. Ordinary, and that is either Transient, or more solemn. The first we should be in continually, every hour in the day. The want of this is the reason that we are such strangers to our own hearts, Christian, Remember this and step in often into thy own heart and thoughts, the heart of man is always talking to itself; and you should often step in and see what it is that they are talking of, see if they are well employed; and if they be not, set them a Task, especially before, in, and after duties; especially after duties to search what evil we have committed in the duty, or else we shall not find matter for examination of our hearts in the evening; we should take notes of our hearts all the day, & read them over in the evening. And then besides this, there must be a solemn Examination. And here I should beseech you Christians, every evening to spend some time for this work; a quarter, or half an hour. I speak of the Evening because the Scripture speaks so much of this time; and the practice of good men have been in this time: A very Heathen could do this, and you shall find this was David's practice. Psal. 16. 7. My Reins instruct me in the Night-season. Well then, I would advise thee Christian, to take this advice.

Every Evening before you sleep, set some time apart, more or less, from the world, and set thy heart as in the presence of God, and charge it before God, to answer to these interrogatories.

First. With reference to your Duties.

First. Did not God find me on my bed when he looked for me on my knees? This question might be a shaming question, and I cannot without indignation speak of this, that many of us should be so willing to please ourselves a little case, when we should enjoy those pleasant hours with God! How do you think that God will take this at your hands? there be many persons that do spend many hours in their beds, that they might enjoy Communion with God in, and then they are fain to up their duties in a co•...ner, I beseech you that this may be left off. It may be, many of you have not so much to do in the world as others, they have not the business that others have, and therefore they need not rise so soon, but lie longer than others. Ah Christian! do not make that use of it, thou hast no more time for sloth than others. I tell thee from God, he hath not given thee any time to be idle in. I am afraid that many of you do not know what it is to sleep by Rule If thou dost not, this is a shame to thee, a Christian should do nothing but by Rule. It may be some will say, what Rule must we use? Ans. We must have respect to our Bodies, what may be for one man, may not be for another; but for healthy bodies six or seven h•...urs is enough in conscience; let every man give his body no more than his body will require. And remember this general Rule, to be sure that you do use some Self-denial about your sleep: That general Rule should be observed, though the particular Rule cannot be given. That excellent servant of God, Mr. Jordan, that kept assurance of God's love thirty years, did up at three or four a clock every morning, and if he did not, he did bewail it; O that it were thus with you!

Secondly. Have I not prayed to no purpose, or let Roving thoughts eat out my Duty? Take an account every Evening what you have gained by that days Prayers, if we did so, this would be brave; then we should grow apace. But this is our great loss, that we content ourselves with the duty done, and do not look to the manner of performance, or the doing of the Duty; therefore if thou wouldst gain by thy duties, see HOW as well as WHAT thou didst pray. How did I pray! was my heart lively or dull? Let it not be enough that your hearts do acquit you in this, that you have not neglected duty, but whether you have not been slack in the duty. And because vain thoughts are our great enemies here, look that these do not eat up thy Sacrifice; we have been often complaining of these, but we are not eased of them: And what is the reason? because we do not take our hearts to Task about it, for our vain thoughts in duty every day; if we did but ask our hearts this every Evening, our hearts would be ashamed to be found guilty every day.

Thirdly. Have I not neglected, or been very overly in the Reading of God's holy Word? I am afraid that many of us do neglect this duty, doth not there pass over our heads many a day wherein we Read not a Chapter? And yet I fear more of the manner how you Read. Did you begin with Prayer, and observe what promises, or Commands, or Threatenings, or Examples were there for you to Imitate, or to fear and avoid? And did you turn it into Prayer afterwards? That I would advise you to, to turn some of the Chapter into prayer afterward. O that we should slight the word, that the Saints of God have set such a price upon! The word! why 'tis the word of God, and when we see the hand of God to it, this should affect us.

Fourthly. Have I digested the Sermon I heard last? Have I prayed it over, and Repeated it over? Brethren, would you know why we are such Dwarfs in Christianity, why we grow so little? Here is one grand Reason, we take in much and digest but little; it may be thou art greedy of taking opportunities, there cannot be a Sermon but thou must be at it, or else it is not well; but dost thou Pray it over, and Repeat it over again? The want of this is the reason that we grow no better, therefore content not thyself that thou hast heard such a Sermon; it is never well till God hear of it, in Confession, Prayer, and praise for such mercies as were discovered to thee. This is the way to thrive, and you will never Thrive till you come to this. The Reason why there have been so much sowing and so little fruit, is because the seed hath not been covered by Meditation, and watered by prayer, the Devil or evil thoughts come and steal away the seed.

Fifthly, Was there not more of custom and Fashion in my Family-Duties, than of Conscience?

Brethren, if my observation fail not, Christians are more apt to be formal in these Duties than in others. Now this should be a cause of shame to us, this is a very great evil, we are very formal in such duties as do come ordinarily, especially if we are not the Speaker, but do join with others: whereas, if thou didst but make this use of it, thankfully to prize, and gladly improve such opportunities, thou wouldest thrive more abundantly. Say with thyself, now I have an opportunity to worship God in the Family. You that are Heads of Families it is a great mercy that you have, that you can lead your Families into the presence of God: and you that are members of the Family, have a great mercy that you live in a Family where you can come twice a day, at least, to God beyond many others, and do you labor to improve it.

Sixthly, Wherein have I denied myself today for God? Brethren, you have not lived like Christians this day, if so be you have not used some self-denial today; If thou hast not denied thy flesh, but hast given it so much case as it would have: and thy Appetite, but hast let it have so much as it would, and thy tongue, but let it go out whither it would; thou hast not lived as a Christian.

Seventhly. Have I redeemed my time from too long and needless visits, Idle imaginations fruitless Discourses, unnecessary Sleep, morethan needs of the world? It is a duty incum bent upon every Christian to redeem his time, this hath sate heavy upon the best of God's servants, that they have no more redeemed time; now if you would redeem your time, there be these time-Robbers and devourers that must be watched.

First. Too long and needless visits. Many men are so LONG in their visits, that they loose much time of their own, and others too; whom they go to visit. Ask thy heart have not I been too long in such a visit, and so steal away others time as well as my own? And so for NEEDLESS visits, when there is no need; be sparing and short in your visits or else you will loose your time, and make others to loose their time also.

Secondly. Idle imaginations. These steal away our time, and we think not of it; If this were looked to how might we grow in grace? When a man is on his Journey, how might he have good thoughts, whereas our hearts are talking of vanity; and so in our Shops.

Thirdly. Fruitless Discourse. Ask thy heart whether thou hast not failed in this duty? what a shame is this that many Christians do come together and scarce anything of God in their mouths while they be together!

Fourthly. Unnecessary Sleep. There is much evil in this, when persons do take up so much time in their sleep, that there is scarce time left for Religious Duties.

Fifthly. More than needs of the World. Men must be very watchful of this or else the world will Rob them of their time, if a man will not use some self-denial about his worldly occasions, but serve God no more than the world will give him leave, he shall serve God but little.

Eighthly. Have I done anything more than ordinary, for the Church of God, in a time extraordinary? Brethren, we shall never be able to stand before our own Consciences in the evil day, if our hearts cannot acquit us in this, that we have put ourselves to it more than ordinary for the Church of God. You know the troubles of the Church at this day, and we should everyone of us run with his Bucket, and put out this fire. God is crying to us, as Moses to Aaron, Num. 16. 46. Take a Censer — and go quickly unto the Congregation, and make an atonement for them; for there is wrath gone out from the Lord, the Plague is begun. O let us run for the Tokens of his displeasure are in the land! 〈◇〉 your tears that must quench these flames that the Bush, the Church is burning in. How is it that we do not weep over the Church? we sit here at ease through God's blessing, but how is it with the Church of God abroad in the land? How far are our hearts from the temper of God's worthies heretofore? It was said of One, that when there was any •...ad news, concerning the Church, they were fain to conceal it from her, least her heart should be overwhelmed with the news of it.

If we had some certain news that our Estates were at undoing, how would we break our sleep? and yet how is it that we are so careless of the Church of God! How is it that others are so wounded and sick, and ready to die with grief, and yet we take so little notice of it? It was the saying of One to me, I wonder how any can laugh (said she) when God's Church is in such distress. I beseech you take some more time with God than you were wont to heretofore, for the Church of God. What if thou didst pray twice a day heretofore, and now thou doest pray three times a day, once a day the more though but a quarter of an hour. to seek to God for the Church, and sometimes a whole day; it will come in upon thy account, when the troubles come upon the Church, that thou didst labor with thy Bucket, if it were possible, to put out the fire.

Ninthly. Have I took care of my Company? Many times many of us are very great Losers by this, by vain company; to be sure if they do us no other harm, they Rob us of our Time, and that is no small hurt; and therefore fly from their Company as from a Plague-fore. Or if sometimes thy Calling do call thee to them, yet do not go among them, before thou hast Prayed to be delivered from the evil of their Company.

Tenthly. Have not I neglected some Relative Duty today, as of Husband, Wife, Pa rent, Child, Master, Servant.

Secondly, for your sins.

First. Doth not Sin sit light? This is 〈◇〉 cause of no small mischief to our souls, this is the cause why Christ is no more 〈◇〉 , and the promises no more sweet; 〈◇◇〉 sits so light: why we can hear the 〈◇◇〉 a common lovely thing, and be but 〈◇◇〉 fected with it? If thou couldst but 〈◇〉 a 〈◇〉 sense of sin upon thy spirit, this would be a speedy course of preventing sin; this is a cutting down of a great limb of sin. When a man cuts down a Limb of the Tree, a great deal of brush will come down with it; and so if thou dost but cut down this Limb, let sin sit heavy, down comes self, and pride, and many sins will come down with it. How is it that Paul could say, O wretched man that I am &c. and we are no more distressed with the sense of sin?

Secondly. Am I a Mourner for the sins of the Land? My Brethren, we have great reason, I doubt, to check ourselves sharply here, that when God hath made it so plainly a duty to us, and yet we are so little affected with the sins of the Land, when God doth set a mark upon them (only) for preservation, that Cry for all the abominations that are done in the midst of the Land; yet we remain insensible! Can our hearts acquit us now in this thing? O let us never leave our hearts, but be checking of them for this. If thy name were but wounded, it would break thy heart almost; and yet how is it that we can hear of God's name to be dishonored and yet not break for it! Can our hearts witness for us that we do never hear of the blasphemy that is in the land, and of the Superstition and Idolatry of the land, but God doth hear of it again by us, before we sleep, by Prayer? This should be for a lamentation to us, that the wounds that are given to God are no more upon our hearts. We may say of the glory of God as they of David. 2 Sam. 18. 3. 'Tis worth ten thousand of us. Our estates, and names, and all that is dear to us, yea, our very souls are not so much worth as the honor of God. And how is it then that we can see God dishonored, and we cannot mourn sor it? God's glory is his Crown that is upon his head; and shall we see his Crown trodden, down in the dirt and not be affected with it? we are far from the disposition of God's Saints and servants heretofore. When Moses saw the Idolatry of the people, he was so zealous, that he overturned the Tables that God wrote with his own finger. And Ezra when the people had taken strange wives he sate down and his clothes. Ezr. 9. Brethren how may we blush to hear and read this, and to think how far our hearts are from this frame! It may be you do think it enough that you did cry out upon it when you hear... the Blasphemy, so that you are free from yourself, but this is your sin, if you do no... mourn over it. (1 Cor. 5. 2. 7. No doubt the godly Corinthians did detest this sin, but the Apostle tells them that is not enough, whil... they did not mourn over it:) When wic...ness doth reign, as if it were the time of Devils incarnation; as if Hell itself were •...ken loose upon us to Act its part ground, and we not mourning ov...r it Thirdly. Do not I live in that I know or fear to be a Sin? If I do thus, there is no peace with God or Con... to be h... sor you. Psal. 66. 18. If I in my heart, God will not hear my Prayers. It is a sign that God doth not regard thee, if thou art one that dost live in the practice or allowance of any sin; and he will not own thee for this. Rom. 6. 16. If thou dost yield up thyself to any sin willingly, that is a manifest sign that thou art none of God's.

Thirdly, For your hearts. Ask several questions.

First. Have I been much in holy ejaculation? Thus we ought to Pray continually; not only at our set and solemn times, but upon all occasions, to step aside and speak a word or two with God; in our Journeys, and Occupations, this is walking with God indeed; when we do not only take a turn or two with him in the morning, and so in the evening, but all the day long. It is said of Mr. Dod, that he never got up his Horse, but he prayed before he came off. Thus did Nehemiah, while the King was talking with him, he was praying to God. Nehem. 2. 4. So I prayed to the God of Heaven, this was a Heavenly ejaculation; this would keep your hearts a praying all the day long. When the hearts of men do naturally bend to God, as the sparks fly upward this is a good thing indeed; when we cannot go by the door, but we must step in and have a turn with God; you will take it as a great kindness for a man not only to come on set times to visit you, but when he comes in every time he comes by the door to see you; And when thy heart is thus wont to turn into God, this will be an 〈◇〉 to thee that thy heart is used to converse with God.

Secondly. Hath not God been out of mind, Heaven out of sight? put that question to thy heart. My Brethren, this is our great sin, and should be our great shame, that the thoughts of God are such strangers to our souls; that we are so little in heaven in the day, as we are. O what a loser is God by this in his glory! what losers are we by this in our graces and comforts! O were our hearts on all occasions thus thinking of God how holy a frame should we quickly grow into? Why should not our hearts be as much with God, as the hearts of the Worldlings be with the Creature? Doth not God deserve it as much as the Creature? His heart is always talking with the World: If he come to hear, his heart is talking with the world. If he come to pray, his heart is always with the World. Why should not our hearts be talking with God while our hands are employed about this world? It was a Heavenly breathing of a gracious spirit, a confounding passage, that I met with; Lord as formerly I lived without thee in the world, so now let me 〈◇〉 without the world in thee. If we did but love God as well as a worldly man doth love his wealth and riches, we should be so taken up with the love of God as quite to forget the world. For the world makes them forget God, that he is not always in their thoughts. Yea, says he, we should be taken up always with God.

My Brethren, what shall we say for this! How shall we excuse this, that we should be so unmindful of God, while the Worldling is so mindful of the world? O what a shame is this! For shame, be ashamed at yourselves before we go away hence. I profess Christians, I have wondered 〈◇〉 God will throw away his kingdom upon some that do care so little for it as we do. O shame thyself out of this evil frame! Brethren, why do not we carry it towards the world, as the world doth towards us? The world doth carry it towards us as 〈◇〉; and we know not what it will do to us. Why should not we carry it more strangely towards it? O never leave, till the thoughts of Heaven be thy natural thoughts, O check thy heart roundly in the Evening for this sin, if 〈◇◇〉 find thy heart faulty here; and never leave till thou ha•... brought it into a right frame.

Thirdly. Have I been often looking into my 〈◇〉, & made conscience even of vian thoughts? you know your Rule, Keep thy heart with all 〈◇〉, 〈◇◇〉 of it are the Issues of life. Now hast thou been keeping thy heart with all diligence? Brethren, you may be sure your work will go but badly on, unless you look to your hearts, and keep your hearts. Examine then in the Evening, how hath my heart been employed today, hath it not been a thorough-fare of vain thoughts? of evil imaginations? I fear that many of us do make little con•... of this. It may be thou dost make conscience of vain thoughts in duty: but I fear that few ⟨◇⟩ do make conscience of vain thoughts at other times. Ah Brethren, you ⟨◇⟩ not known what it is to live the life of Christianity, if you do not look to this. This must be mended. Brethren, what a blessed thing would this be, if we had but once attained this frame! If our hearts did but naturally run in a hollow Channel? This is attainable, and many of the Christians have attained to it. And if it be attainable, ⟨◇⟩ we should never be quiet till we have attained it. Why, Christian, take this Rule, force thy heart a while to it; keep thy heart for a while in this Tract, set it some holy Subject, some good Task, and make it to ply its work; and when thou hast got to this, then by degrees it will be sweet to thee. It is not enough to say, what hurt is there in such vain thoughts? It is enough that there is no good in them, that there is no profit in them; yea, there is a great deal of hurt in letting thy thoughts to run abroad. My Brethren, you do, I believe, everyone of you that are Christians indeed, complain of the burden of your vain thoughts. I believe, that this is the greatest trouble of many Christians here, for the vanity of their thoughts in holy duties. And what is the reason of this? Because they do let out their hearts at other times; this is the reason that we have no more command of our hearts in holy duties, because we do not keep them in at other times. God complains of Jerusalem, Jer. 4. 14. (and may he not complain so of us?) O Jerusalem, how long shall vain thoughts lodge within thee? Have not we, many of us, been complaining these seven or twice seven years of vain thoughts, and yet they are lodging in us? And if you take this course with your hearts, you will find more benefit in it, than ever you did in anything that you have tried hitherto.

But I know what the flesh will say here, what to be always taken up with holy things? this will be an intolerable burden. O but do not hearken to the evil report, that the flesh will bring upon the ways of God. Indeed I confess it will bring some dissiculy, yet I trust, you will be willing to be at some pain for so great a good as this is, but after a little while you will find it easy. There is nothing that is easy to a Learner, but if it be a Trade or such a Tongue ⟨◇⟩ a little while that he is used to it, it is his d•...light. And so will this be the sweetest thing in the world to thee, if thou dost but keep thy heart to it a while. And therefore never leave watching and praying, till thou hast got thy heart into this frame.

Fourthly. Have not I given way to the working of pride or passion today? My Brethren, the Spirit of God is a holy Dove that will not rest in an unquiet and froward heart. It was a passage os a very Holy man, Whatsoever you do, take ⟨◇⟩ of passion. 2 King. 3. 15. Elijah was sain to call for a Minstrel before he could allay his passion; I beseech you to watch your hearts when there is a temptation to pride, and a provocation to passion before you, or else you will grieve the good spirit of God, and make him to withdraw himself from you. It is a saying of Mr. Baxter, when there is a temptation to pride before me, I am fain to watch my heart as narrowly as I would do the Thatch of my house, when fire is put to it; and presently to throw on it the water of •...testation, Resolution, and recourse to God. And so must you do if ever you mean to attain to a heavenly heart. I remember it is written in the Life of a Holy man, that he did fear and tremble more when he did hear his commendation, than when it never so dreadfully thundered; and this frame should be in thee. O fear temptations to pride, I besech you take... heed of pride, that your hearts do not grow haughty. If you do not take good heed, you are like to fall, That Servant is never like to do much for God that is puffed up with pride, If thou hast got down thyself, and trod upon the neck of pride, then thou art become a great Victor indeed. This is the reason why God doth not employ us in his service more, because he sees that there is such an evil heart in 〈ϕ〉, that we would make his mercies fuel for our pride and Lust. Let it be your daily practice to get the victory over this enemy, the pride of your heart. It was a very exemplary pattern that is set before us in that holy man; Says he, concerning himself, Methinks I am broken all in pieces before God when I speak to him, as when I tread upon an Egg and trample it all to pieces. It was a passage in one of his Letters writing to comfort another, I pray God make use of me a poor Rush, to do you some good. Let us lay this pattern before us. But more especially, look to our holy and humble Jesus; and you shall find rest to your souls. Follow your pride and passion thus with observation and detestation every day, and this will weary it out at last.

Fourthly, For your tongues. Ask these questions.

First, Have I bridled my tongue, and forced it in? This is a very necessary question that must be inquired into. I tell thee if thou hast no measure to bridle thy tongue, thou art no Christian. Jam. 1. 26. On the other side if thou hast once got this skill to govern thy tongue, thou art a grown Christian, Jam. 3. 2. He that can govern his tongue, hath attained to some good growth and good perfection in grace. Ah Brethren, you had need to set up David's resolution daily, Psal. 39. 1. I said I will take heed to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue, Psal. 17. 3. I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress. And distrusting his own strength you may see how he runs to God for strength, Psal. 14. 1. 3. Set a watch (O Lord) before my mouth: keep the door of my lips.

Secondly, Have I spoke evil of no man? This is an express charge of the Apostle, Tit. 3. 1, 2. Put them in mind to speak evil of no man. And the Apostle Peter chargeth us that if we will grow in grace, to put away the evil of evil speaking. This is a great and universal sin among us; that we are apt to speak evil of others. When we do hear of anything that is evil in any one, how do we speak of it to our friends? See that you have good ends & a lawful call to tell, before you tell of another's evil. Brethren, this cannot be sufficiently bewailed, that there should be so great an evil among us, that we should be so backward to speak of our brothers evil to himself, and so prone to publish it to those that we should not.

Thirdly, Hath the law of God been in my mouth, as I sate in my house, went by the way, lying down, rising up? How great is the charge of God given us! And how great is our negligence in this work! Deut. 6. 7. Thou 〈ϕ〉 teach them diligently unto thy Children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou 〈ϕ〉 up. Christian can thy heart acquit thee here now? Can thy family acquit thee; that this is thy work when thou art sitting by the fire with them? Can thy yoke-fellow witness for thee, that the word of God is in thy mouth when thou liest down, and risest up? Can thy fellow-traveler say that these are thy talks when though... walkest? Deut. 11. 8. What benefit would this be to others, if thou didst but do this? When wilt thou come to the full resolution of them? Well, set this resolution with thyself, that thou wilt not let thy Conscience alone till thou dost come to this.

Fourthly, Have I come into no Company but I have dropped something of God there, and left some good savor behind? O what a shame is it that Christians should be so unlike themselves! that when they come into company, it cannot be seen who is the Christian, and who is not! O how should we be ashamed of this, that we should be ashamed of our God! O That thou wouldst make conscience of this, not to come •...nto any company, but to drop something of God there.

Fifthly, For your Tables.

First, Did not I sit down with no higher end than a beast, merely to please my appetite? Did I eat, and drink for the glory of God? you cannot know what it is to be a Christian, till you come to do all things by Rule. Make conscience of this, to set your ends right when you sit down to your Tables.

Is it not a shame, that a Christian, should sit down with no higher end than a beast to his meat? Beasts do eat and drink to satisfy their hunger. Remember that thou sit down with an eye upon God. This will make thy table to be sanctified to thee.

Secondly, Did I not rise from my table without dropping something of God there? Christian, how often dost thou contradict the example of thy Savior? You shall find his discourse when he sate at the table still that he was always speaking of God. And is it not a shame that thou should st imitate thy Savior no better?

Thirdly, Was not my appetite too hard for me? Brethren, I doubt many of us are little skilled in the duty of temperance. It may be many of us do think, we may eat as long as it is pleasing to our appetites. This is a great, though I fear a common evil: that as Juae says they feast without fear. Here, observe this general rule, never to sit down to your tables but to use some Self-denia. And for an exact rule; we cannot give an exact rule to every one; but this, for healthy bodies to eat so at one meal, that we may be hungry at the next I am verily afraid that this sin of gluttony is a very common sin: Therefore Christian set a special watch upon thy appetite.

There are two sorts of intemperance that we should beware of; either with respect to the Quantity, or to the Quallity of what we eat. We offend in the first when we eat more than we can digest. In the other, when a man gives himself to eat that which the Physician tells him is not fit for him. And what a shame is this that neither reason nor grace, should keep a person from breaking out into intemperance.

Fourthly, Did I not mock with God when I pretended to crave a blessing and return thanks? If I may judge by my own experience, I think that we are more formal in this than in any other thing. Well let this be amended by us, It is a sad thing that we should mock God when we pretend to serve him.

Sixthly, For your callings. Four questions here.

First, Have I been diligent in the duties of my Calling?

Secondly, Have I defrauded no man? Have I observed that golden rule of justice in my dealings this day, that I have done no otherwise to any man than I would be done unto? When I have considered it, I find that there is more of Christianity in our moral duties than we are aware of. This is not to be a Christian, to be so only in prayer, and hearing, &c. but to be a Christian in your Shops, and fields, &c. If thou art no second table-man thou art no Christian. Remember that, this is to be a reproach to Religion.

Thirdly, Have I dropped never a lie in my shop or trade? You that have dealings in the world you had need to look to this every hour. I beseech you Christians look to this: this is a fearful sin, and it is a sign that there is nothing of Christianity in thee if this prevail. Therefore set a guard upon thy mouth; and beg of God to keep thy mouth, that there may nothing but truth come from it. And in the evening examine how thou hast kept thy charge in this respect.

Fourthly, Did not I rashly make or safly break some promise? There is a great and reigning evil in this respect among those that trade in the world. Be very wary and very sparing in making a promise; and when thou hast made it, be sure to perform it. I wonder how you can read that Scripture, Psal. 15. Of those that shall enter into the holy hill of the Lord, That he sweareth to his own hurt and performeth it.

And thus I have given you materials for the examining of your own hearts. Now my further business to you is to know how you resolve to perform this? will you not content yourselves with the approving of these rules only? But will you set it forth in practice? I beseech you do not $\langle \diamond \rangle$ in ba...e resolution and intention, but resolve that never a day shall pass before these things be done by you.

To stir you up hereunto let me give you these three motives.

First, Consider, that there will be no such means in the world for you to get a sound and thorough conquest over your corruptions. You have been striving a great while with your corruptions: some with vain thoughts, some with pride, some with passion, and it may be you have got but little victory: And what is the reason? Because you have not followed it with constancy. If thou didst but take thy heart to task every day about it thou wouldst surely get the victory over it. As a holy man much experienced in this did use that comparison: Thou must watch thy corruptions (says he) as a cat doth her prey; either it must keep in, or else she hath it. If thou didst thus, thou wouldst quickly find the theif, & so wouldst bring it to the bar before hand, & have execution done upon it. We must be daily in the pursuit of our corruptions, we must never give it over, not in one prayer or one day, and then we are like to get the victory over it.

Secondly, Consider this is a ready way to Assurance, Brethren, the great reason why Christians are without assurance, is for want of self-examination: for want of pain and diligence in observing their own heart. But now if you set upon this duty you will be skil'd in your own hearts. I doubt this work of self-examination is seldom done by many Christians, except it be upon some special occasion.

Thirdly, Consider hereby you shall come to a thorough acquaintance with your own hearts, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Prove yourselves, and then follows, know you yourselves? he that proves himself oft, shall know himself at length.

DEUTERONOMY 32. 46.

And he said unto them, set your hearts unto all the words which I testisie among you this day.

The words foregoing my Text are called the Song of Moses, what is storied of the Swan is made good in the Saints; they sing sweetest when they are about to die. It is said of Christ, that never man spake like to him, and he never spake more like himself than a little before his passion. What tender words, what yearning, melting bowels, what endearedness of affection doth he express to his poor sorrowful Disciples in the 15, 16, 17. Chapters of John? There is (saith One of the Ancients) more worth in these three Chapters than in all the Books in the world. Moses, that famous servant of God, Israel's guide, Prophet, Governor, Father, Husband, being about to take his leave of that perverse, stiff-necked people, begins to sing of Mercy and Judgment. And he sings sweetly in the ears of God, but dolefully, I doubt in the ears of Israel. Having ended his Song, he doth enforce both it and the Counsels given in the <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> foregoing Chapter with this vehement exhortation in the words of my Text. Set your hearts &c.

By [All these words] we are to understand not only the mercies and judgments spoken of in this Chapter, but the precepts laid down in the foregoing Chapter, and therefore he adds in the next words after my text, [which you shall command your Children to observe to do, all the words of this law,] I shall not stand any longer upon the words but presently give you this Doctrine.

Doct. That when God hath-discovered any duty to his people, he looks that they should set their hearts to it.

In the prosecution of this Doctrine I shall speak to these three things. (First) show you what it is to set your heart to any duty, and shall speak particularly to that duty that God hath lately laid open to us, from those words. Commune with your own hearts. (Secondly,) I shall propound some motives to stir up those to it that have not yet begun, & to stir up those that have begun to go on in it. (Thirdly,) I shall prescribe some directions for the conscionable, constant, easy performance of the duty.

First, What 'tis to set the heart to any duty. This carries in it. First, Remembrance. Secondly, Serious consideration. Thirdly, Resolution. Fourthly, Love. Fifthly, Life. Sixthly, Labor. Seventhly, Care. Eighthly, Constancy.

First, Remembrance, or a minding of our duty. Heb. 2. 1. Give the more earnest heed to the things that you have heard, lest at any time you let them slip. The memory of man is a leaking vessel, apt to let out as fast as God pours in. It is like a grate in the water-course; still the trash doth stick by us; but the pure water, the things of God and of another world are soon out and gone. Beloved, it is very strange, and yet very true, those things that we are most affected with, which are most fresh in our minds, that our thoughts do most naturally run upon, in a few weeks or months, the savor of them die, and the things are buried in oblivion: and perhaps scarce ever come to mind again. Concerning this excellent course that we have been directed to, I pray God that I may never live to see it dead and buried: and thus I pray for you all. I confess, I am afraid of myself, lest time should wear out the sense or remembrance of so great a duty: but the Lord be better to me than my fears, and to all others whose fear this is. Neither is it implied only that we should never forget this duty, or think upon it only now and then, but that our thoughts should run upon it. That which a man sets his heart upon, he will often mind. The voluptuous man sets his heart upon his pleasure, and therefore will mind his pleasure. The Covetous man sets his heart upon his riches, and therefore minds his riches. Their thoughts are so taken up with those things that they scarce think upon anything else. So it should be with us. When we are sitting at our tables, lying down, rising up, alone, in company, going to any duty, in our shops, about our callings, we should remember this course. We should be as well able to forget to eat as to forget the rule by which we should eat. We should be as well able to forget to sleep and speak, and follow our callings, as to forget the rule by which we should do it. I shall shut up this particular with the prayer of David, so full to this purpose, 1 Chron. 29. 18. O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel our fathers, keep this forever in the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee.

Secondly, Serious Consideration, or a pondering of the duty in our heart; as the expression in Luke is, chap. 2. 19. Now there are these three things that we are to consider when God doth discover any duty to us. (First,) What have I done? Hath not this command of God been neglected by me? Have not I been a mere stranger to the duty now laid open? or, is not this the duty, that the minister and my conscience hath pressed upon me from time to time, and yet I have neglected it. (Secondly,) What must I do? Is not this the command of God? And dare I do otherwise than obey it! Is it not the God of heaven that speaks unto me? examine thyself; commune with thy own heart. Is this God to be slighted? His authority to be despised? darest thou, O my Soul, to say the God of heaven nay! (Thirdly,) What shall I do? What will become of me in the day of visitation, and in the day of judgment, if I daily neglect this known duty, this weighty duty, this necessary duty? When troubles shall come slowing in upon me like the waves of the Sea, one upon the neck of another how shall I be able to stand under them? If I think to go to God for refuge, Conscience will fly in my face, and tell me this is the God, that thou hast despised, whose voice thou hast not hearkened to. How shall I stand in the day of judgment. and look God in the face, if I am contentious and will not obey the truth? What can I expect but tribulation, and anguish, and wrath, Rom. 2. 8, 9. A Scripture which me thinks may be as a thunder-bolt in the hearts of any that hath a secret purpose in himself to neglect this duty. If we are careless in this duty, what can we expect but tribulation, and anguish, and wrath?

Thirdly, Resolution, A settled, fixed purpose of heart to do what God commands. When God tells us this is my command, thus and thus you must do; our hearts should answer the will of God we will obey: thus and thus we will do. Thus did David, The Lord said seek my face; and my heart answered, thy face Lord will I seek. Beloved, we hear our duties, and read our duties many a time; and we are apt to acknowledge that this should be done, and to pray too, that it might be done; but for want of adding of resolution, many a time our convictions and prayers come to nothing. Concerning this duty let us not dispute but determine: let us not stand reasoning shall I, shall I, but resolve upon it.

Fourthly, Love to the duty, Christians should not only receive the truths of God, but receive them in love. The commands of God, like meat that pleaseth the pallat, must go down sweetly, duties must not be so much our task as our choice: that which we would rather do than neglect, were we left to our liberty. Beloved, let us not only take up this course as necessary only, but let us love it as an excellent course. Let us not go to this work as a sick man goes to take down a loathsome potion, but as a sound healthy man goes to his ordinary meal.

Fifthly, Life, That which a man sets his heart upon he will be lively in, and do it to purpose. Rom. 12. 11. Not slothful in business; but fervent in spirit serving the Lord. Standing water is not wholesome; and wine that hath lost its spirit, is not pleasant. God is a spirit, and they that worship him; must worship him in spirit. He is a most pure act: and he will be served with activity. God would not accept a blind, torn, lame sacrifice under the law; and will he accept of a dead sacrifice under the Gospel? He would not have, the Ass offered to him, because it was a dull sluggish creature. Nor the Snail, because a slow lingering creature. We must not come to duties with dead hearts: with dull, drowsy, sleepy souls. When we are going to our work of communing with our hearts, we should stir up our hearts, call in our thoughts, compose our affections, rub our memories and consciences, till we have fetched life into them. Every faculty of the soul should act its part in this work: And here let me tell you that 'tis no fit time to set about this work, when we are between sleeping and waking: when the spirits are so far spent, and the senses tired, that we can scarce see the question, or to hear the answer that conscience gives. It will be good for everyone to observe the temper of his body for this work, that so drowsiness may not detain him from it, or make him slight and over...lie in it.

Sixthly, Labor, we must take pains in duty, Eccl. 9. 10. What soever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might. There must be labor before the duty, to break thorough difficulties and to bring the heart to it. There must be labor in the duty to keep the heart close to it. The heart will be unwilling to come to it, and therefore must be compelled. It is apt to wander, and therefore must be restrained and held in. We must not only do well, but be patient in well-doing. The flesh must be crossed: carnal ease and contentment must be denied, when they stand in the way of our duty, or would steal away the heart from God. God required that the Male should be offered up to him in sacrifice, because that was stronger than the other: to signify to us that we must take pains and lay out our strength in duty. Beloved, wheresoever you are when you should se... about this work, say to your souls as Christ to the disciples, Arise, let us go hence. If the heart be backward, lay the cord of God's command upon it; and by this cord hale it to the duty. Tell it, that the work must be done and shall be done. When thou art come to the work, bind thy heart to the good behavior. When thou art in it, often call upon thy heart to mind the work that it is about. When it would give thee the slip, hold it fast. When it would run from any question before it hath given any determination to it, pull it back: adjure it before the living God, in whose presence thou art, and whose honor is concerned in it, to speak out the truth concerning this matter: whether thou art guilty or not guilty.

Seventhly, Care, That duty is well done, that is carefully done.

Eighthly, Constancy, That which a man's heart is set upon, he will be hardly taken off from it. We must be constant in duties as well as fervent in them, Rev. 2. 3. Beloved, the work that I am now pressing you to, is not to be done once a week, or a month, or every other day; but every day. Every evening, conscience being mounted upon its tribunal, you are to give accompt of all the things that have passed that day. And remember this, that you never take any excuse for the omitting of this duty, at any time, but what you dare plead before God in the great day of accompt. It is to be performed every day: as sure as the night follows the day. Neither is this the work of a week, or a month, or a year, or of an evil time only, while the rod of God is upon your backs; no, it is the work of your life: it is a duty that you must live and die in.

We should not take up this course, as the traveler takes up his cloak, which he wears in a storm, but throws off when the Sun shines. This is a duty as well in prosperity, as in adversity. It is Summer-fruit as well as winter-fruit. And I pray God, that neither summers heat, may be able to blast, nor winters cold be able to kill those good beginnings of reformation, that are now, to be found among us. I am afraid, that when God hath broken off one yoke from our necks, we shall cast away another. When God shall break off the cords of the wicked from us, we shall cast away the cord of duty from us. I pray God, that when we come into Canaan, we may not forget nor cast off what we promised in the wilderness. Remember it is for your life. I shall press this upon you in the words of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, &c.

Objection. It is a hard work, a painful duty; a heavy yoke. Now there are several things that I shall speak, to answer this very briefly.

First, This complaint doth argue a very careless, loose heart. Ah Christian, didst thou keep a strict hand over thyself in the day, thou wouldst not find thy evening work so difficult. And hast thou a careless spirit? the more need there is that thou shouldst set upon this work, that thou mightest bring it into a better government.

Secondly, Wouldst thou neglect this duty because it is painful? upon the same account thou mayst cast of other duties. Thou canst not pray, nor hear, as thou shouldst without pain.

Give way to this objection, and for ought I know, in a little time, thou mayst bid farwel to all thy Religion: thou mayst cast off every duty. Thou canst not imagine what a plague it may be to thee, if thou shouldst give way to this objection. Give Satan an inch and he will take an ell: forbear one duty because of difficulty, and he will easily persuade men to forbear others.

Thirdly, Consider who it is that buzzes this in thine ear. Certainly it is the devil, the grand enemy of thy soul. God says, Commune with thy own heart: Satan says, no, it is too painful. Why, who wilt thou be ruled by, God or Satan? thy best friend, or thy worst enemy? Christian, in these outward concernments, thou wilt not advise with thy mortal enemy in things that concern thy life: And why wilt thou be such a fool in the matters of thy soul?

Fourthly, What dost thou cry out of pain? It is thy very calling and profession to take pain. What mean those expressions in Scripture else whereby the life of a Christian is set forth by striving, wrestling, fighting, pressing toward the mark? To take pain is essential to Christianity, and without this thou canst not be a Christian. To leave any duty because it is painful is a contradiction to thy profession thou dost herein deny thyself to be a Christian.

Fifthly, The more difficult the work is, the more profitable thou wilt find it. That duty that cost's us nothing, will yield us nothing: and that duty that cost's us much pain, will yield us much peace and comfort.

Sixthly, Consider, is not grace worth the taking pains for? What wilt thou take pain for, if not for grace? Look about in the world: see how the men of the world run and ride, sweat and tire themselves for toys and trisles. What pains then shouldst thou take for grace, one dram of which is more worth than a world. By this means, thou mayst grow in grace more in one month than in some years before.

And let me tell thee I have not Charity enough to think thee a Christian indeed, if thou dost not think grace worth any labor or pain that thou canst possible be at in the getting of it.

Seventhly, Consider Christian, what pain Christ did take, and what misery he did undergo for thee. Thy soul was dearer to him than his own glory: and thy salvation, than his own life and blood. And shall not his glory, his commands be dearer to thee, Christian, than a little carnal ease? Think upon it, if thou hast any spark of ingenuity this consideration will prevail upon thee to set about this work.

I come now to propound some motives to stir up those that have not begun this work, to set about it. And those that have begun, to go on in this work.

First, Consider it is the command of God. It is not the voice of man, but of God. It is God that speaks to thee, Commune with thy own hearts: Examine thyself. Christian, I urge the command of God upon thy Conscience, wilt thou obey or wilt thou not? darest thou to set thyself against God! and set thy will above the will of God! O think upon it.

Secondly, Consider the time when, and the manner how you consented to set to the performance of this duty. It was in a time of love; at a feast of love; and after a Song of love. Consider what a rich mercy God hath bestowed upon you, in giving you liberty to draw nigh to him in such an ordinance as you lately sate under. It was but a little while ago, beloved, that you thought that you should drink no more of the fruit of the vine, till you drank it in your fathers kingdom. And behold contrary to your expectations, the King hath sent to you, saying, come and sup with me: come and sit at my table.

Hath God dealt so with any people? He hath feasted you in a time of famine: and spread a table for you in a howling wilderness. Doth not this extraordinary providence think you, call upon you for some extraordinary duty? And do not you think in your consciences that it is this duty? Why else hath God propounded it to you, and urged it upon you, in such a time as this is? If you neglect it, it may cause God to take away the Corne and wine from you; and to break the staff of  .

Thirdly, What do you know but God put it into the heart of his servant, to press this duty at that time, to try whether you were real in that love and loyalty which you did then profess to him? I suppose you all understand the transactions that passed there between God and you: that God did put his seal to the Covenant, that he would make good all the mercy promised: and that you did put your seal, thereby binding yourselves to the performance of all the duties required.

Fourthly, Consider when another such opportunity is offered to you how will you be able to look God in the face? Methinks that man should not dare to come to the Sacrament, and again put his seal to the Covenant, that hath knowingly and willingly broken his last engagement.

Fifthly, Doth not your own looseness, and the enemies profaneness, and the present dispensations that you are under, call upon you for more than ordinary strictness in your lives and conversations? The Lord have mercy upon us, what prejudice have we brought to the Gospel by our carnal, careless conversations! What pitch of profaneness are the enemies of God risen to! They are not afraid to bid him defiance at his face! In what a doleful case are many of our brethren abroad in the world, and how sad is it like to be with us? The glory of God is gone from the public to your houses, and are you not afraid? I am sure there is reason enough to think, that it will take its flight from thence too. And doth not all this call upon us aloud in the language of the prophet, Lam. 3. 40. Let us search and try our ways and turn unto the Lord. If we look behind us, and see what we have been: If about us, and see how devilish men are: And above us, to see the black clouds that hang over our heads; we cannot but see that it is time to take another course, to live more like Christians, And what course so likely to effect this, as daily self-examination? serious consideration is the best way to sound and thorough reformation.

Sixthly, Consider the excellent advantages that will come to thee by taking this course. Christian, wouldst thou have peace of conscience? The sense of God's love shed abroad upon thy heart! wouldst thou live in heaven? wouldst thou walk in the light of God's countenance, grow in grace, have thy corruptions overcome and subdued? Behold a most excellent receipt: the best that ever was prescribed.

Seventhly, Consider with what face wilt thou be able to go to God and beg of him to subdue thy corruptions, and to strengthen thy graces when thou wilt not use the means? Think upon it with what face wilt thou be able to look up to God and put up such a petition?

Eighthly, How wilt thou be able to excuse thyself from hypocrisy, if thou neglect this duty? When thou dost hear it laid down as a Character of sincerity, not to live in the neglect of any known duty.

Ninthly, Consider what base ingratitude you will be guilty of, both to God in sending his servant among you: and to his servant for all the care and pains that he hath taken for your souls?

Tenthly, Consider what answer will you be able to make to God, or how you will be able to look his servant in the face another day; when he and you must stand together and give up your accompt: he of his doctrine, and you of your obedience to it.

Eleventhly, Consider how conscience will sting thee for this neglect when thou comest to die. Ah Christian, when thou shalt be ready to leap into eternity, and shalt want assurance, not knowing whether thy lot shall fall either in heaven or hell. And conscience shall tell thee if thou hadst taken such a course thou mightest have had assurance: when thou shalt with grief of soul remember this and the other miscarriage, and that if thou hadst taken this course, thou mightest have prevented this trouble; O how will this add to thy sorrow and break thy heart!

I come now to give some directions for the constant, conscionable, easy performance of this duty

First. Set about this course speedily. The longer thou dost delay the work, the more difficult thou wilt find it. What is said of repentance is true here, he that is not fit today will be less fit tomorrow.

Secondly. Be deeply humbled that thou hast neglected such a duty so long. Hath it been out of ignorance? bewail thy ignorance. Hath it been out of laziness? bewail that when men would make the building strong, they will lay the foundation low. It is a good way to be constant and successful in any duty, to begin with sorrow and humiliation.

Thirdly, Do it out of a principle of conscience in obedience to God's command: because it is thy duty, and God commands it.

Fourthly. Bless God for making known this duty, and prescribing to thee so easy away for the performing of it. Bless God for making known the duty, a...d God will bless thee in the doing of it.

Fifthly. When you come together let this duty be the matter of your conference; or at least, be osten speaking one to another of it. Doubtless, it will be good for the carrying on of this work to choose out a Christian friend, and for these to agree together, and unbosom themselves each to other, what doth hinder the work; and what benefit they find &c. and engage one another to take up this course, and be constant in it whatsoever times may come.

Sixthly, Take heed of formality, or keeping on a round in the duty without a due regard of the end of the duty. Take some time once in a week, or fortnight, and call thy heart to an accompt how thou hast sped, what thou hast got.

Seventhly, Take heed of resting in the duty. If thou do $\langle \diamond \rangle$ make an Idol of the duty God will make nothing of it: God will curse the work and blast thy design.

Eighthly, Be careful to live up to those Rules by which thou hast engaged to examine thy self? As he said of prayer, If thy praying do not make thee leave off sinning, thy sinning will make thee leave off praying. So here, if thy examining thyself, do not make thee to leave off thy remissness; thy remissness will certainly make thee leave off thyself-examination. When a man hath been careless in the day, and come to read over these questions, and conscience shall answer guilty in most of these things, this will make the work so tedious, that thou wilt never long bear the trouble of it. Unless thou art able to live up to these rules, thou wilt never be able to hold on in it long. And therefore remember this, if at any time you find that you have been careless •...n the day foregoing, be sure in the next morning to set up a new resolution to stick close to these rules. Undo all that you have done before, as it were, and begin again. Try in the strength of God what you can do this day; how exact you can be this day.

Ninthly, Let us set about the work with some shore ejaculation to God for his Assistance in it, and his blessing upon it.

Tenthly, Solemnly engage to God that you will take up this course and be constant in it, and never lay it down what ever times may come, and temptations may assault you. When God doth enjoin any duty, he requires all the means that tend to the performing of that duty. Now this is the best means that can be thought upon for everyone to engage to God, that he will set upon it and be constant in it. I know that the deceitful heart will be very backward, they are very shy of such engagements. But if they are, remember this, that there is something in the bottom which you will do well to look out: And when you have found it out, to cast it forth with indignation. Why should we be backward to do that between God and our selves, which we have done publicly before many witnesses, and I believe shall be called to do again. To set about this work is no more than you have done already, when you sate under that great ordinance and set your seals that you would perform all the duties of the new Covenant. And did you except this? You will find this engagement a great help to the work. Let us this night before we sleep put this direction in practice; engage yourselves to God in some such words as these,

O eternal God, thou that searchest the heart, and wilt not hold them guiltless that take thy name in vain, especially in solemn Covenants made with thyself, I do here solemnly promise, that I will set upon this duty of daily self-examination, and in this practice to live and die. Such engagements God is well pleased with, Jerem. 30. 21, Who is this that engageth his heart to draw nigh to me? As if the Lord had said, come thou art welcome, I take this kindly from thee.

A serious call to Christians, to win Souls to Christ with helps thereunto.

Prov. 11. 30.

And he that winneth Souls is wise.

IN this verse we have set forth unto us the excellency of a Righteous man: and that in two things. First, He is more useful than others. Secondly, He is more skilful than others.

First. He is more useful than others. The fruit of the Righteous is a tree of life. The Righteous is not a barren tree; but he is a fruitful bough, as Joseph was. And he doth not bring forth his fruit unto himself. His fruit is a tree of life. As the tree of life would give life to them that should eat thereof: so the fruit of the Righteous is such, that those th...t will hearken to his Counsel, shall partake with him of eternal life. When others are as thorns and brambles, fruitless, unuseful, of no value in God's world? the Righteous is a fruitful tree, and as a tree of life in the midst of the world.

Secondly, He is more skilful and ...wise than others; And would you know wherein his wisdom lies? It is in winning of Souls.

Doct. That it is a chief part of a Believers, duty, and the chief point of a Believers wisdom to gain Souls unto God.

First, 'Tis the [duty] of a Believer to gain Souls. Though he must begin at home, with his own soul, yet he must not Terminate there; but he must look abroad after others Souls. He must not be as a tree that bringeth forth fruit to himself alone: but he must be a tree of life, that whosoever plucketh of his fruit, to make use thereof, shall live.

And then Secondly, 'tis his [wisdom.] As in the text, so Daniel. 12. 3. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. They be the wisemen that turn others to Righteousness.

Here I shall show you. (First,) That 'tis ⟨ϕ⟩ chief part of his duty. (Secondly,) That ⟨ϕ⟩ a chief point of his wisdom to gain Souls.

Firstly, That 'tis a chief part of his duty and this appears,

First, Because this is one chief point of ⟨ϕ⟩ love to Jesus Christ. Wherein did Paul discover his love to Jesus Christ in anything, as ⟨ϕ⟩ this, in his zeal and industry to save Souls? Rom. 9. 1, 2, 3. And thus doth Moses evidence his love. Exo. 32. 31, 32. If you would show your Love to Jesus Christ, this is the best way in all the world to evidence it. Math. 25. You may see how carefully Christ takes notice of any kindness done to the bodies of his elect: but O how much more will he take notice of the love to the Souls of his Elect?

(Secondly,) Because this is the chief point of our love to our Brethren. You know that Christ tells us that all the Law and the ...phets hang upon this, thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. And thy Neighbor as thyself. If the Law doth bind thee to preserve the Chastity and estate of thy Neighbor, how much more doth God require of thee that thou preserve the Soul of thy Neighbor? This is the principal point of love. Jam. 5. 20. He that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a Soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins, If God requires that thou help thy Neighbors Ox and his Ass, how much more must thou help thy Neighbors Soul from hell?

(Thirdly,) Because this is the principal means of bringing glory to Christ. Every soul that is brought in to Christ is a Jewel put into the Crown of Christ. And wouldest thou not be ambitious of such a service as this? Every soul thou bringest into Christ is an eternal Monument, set up by thee to the name of Jesus Christ. Wouldest thou have much service done for Jesus Christ? O then labor to bring in Souls to him, that may do his work here in the world. Wouldest thou have much praise to the name of Christ? O then labor to bring in Souls to Jesus Christ. Every Soul brought in to Jesus Christ is a Trumpet of his praise. The glory of a King is in the multitude of his subjects. And so 'tis of Christ. This is the great way wherein we are capable to further the glory of Christ in the world, to bring in many Souls to Jesus Christ.

Secondly, That 'tis the chief point of a Christians wisdom to gain Souls unto Christ. This appears,

(First,) Because Souls are the goodly pearls that are of great price with Christ. O there is no Merchandise like to that of Souls. No gain like to the gain of Souls. One Soul is of more worth than all the world. You may see of how great price Souls are with Jesus Christ, by the great price that he laid down for Souls. Did Christ spend, his blood for Souls; and wilt thou not spend thy breath for Souls? This is a principal part of wisdom, to deal like wise Merchants, in goodly pearls. A wise man will not spend his time for trifles, that is Childish; but his wisdom doth appear in the weight of those things that he lays out his time and pains upon. Oh if you would appear to be wise, lay out your time and strength for Souls! If thou couldest gain but one Soul, what a happy gain would that be?

(Secondly,) Because Souls will be the most glorious Crown in the day of Christ. No Crown like to this, the Crown of Souls. The time is coming, when a Crown of Soul... will be found to be of another manner of value than a Crown of gold. What was the Crown that Paul wishes for? It was for the Souls that he had converted. 1 Thes. 1. 19. What is our hope, or joy, or Crown of rejoicing! are not even ye in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? Why were these Paul's Crown? because he had converted them by his Ministry, upon the same account he calls the Phillipians (Phil. 4. 1.) My joy and Crown of rejoicing.

Thirdly. Because we shall most effectually promote the good of our own Souls by endeavoring to gain others Souls. By teaching of others thou shalt teach thyself. By exhorting others, thou shalt excite and stir up thyself. And nothing will redound to thy advantage so much as thy laboring to gain Souls; though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorified.

(Fourthly,) Because this will be an evidence of our own sound conversion, if we lay out our strength and time to convert others. In John 1. 41. We shall see those young converts, when they were but touched, they labor to bring in others presently. So that if thou wouldest evidence thine own sincerity to thy Soul, thou shouldest lay out thy endeavor for the good of others Souls.

First Use, Is it so that 'tis a chief part of a Christians duty, and a chief point of a Christians Wisdom, to gain Souls to Christ? Then here is matter of Reproof; to reprove those that profess the name of Christ; that lay out their zeal no more this way. That lay not out their strength to gain Souls. Yea that do not long for, nor endeavor after the conversion of Souls. Surely, this speaks sadly to those that wholly neglect this duty. But how exceedingly are many of the people of God themselves to be blamed for their Negligence in this? doth not thy heart know that there is a brother of thine doth live in such a sin; and yet thou never tell him of it? What a great evil is this! and unsuitable to the pattern of the Lord Jesus Christ? How did he go up and down doing good? and so taken up with Souls, that he could scarce spare time to eat his bread: insomuch that his carnal friends began to take hold of him, and thought that he had been beside himself. O how far art thou from this, that thy friends may live in their sins, and die in their sins, before thou wilt labor to save their Souls? The devil he laboreth to destroy Souls; and how few be there that do labor to save Souls? He may carry away the poor soul, and none labors to take the soul from him. We should be watchful and vigilant for souls; for our own souls. and others souls: because this enemy is always taking opportunities to destroy souls. Sure it argues that you have very little Love... to Jesus Christ, that you do no more for souls. That you have little zeal for Jesus Christ, and that you have little Love for your Brethren, that you take no more care for their souls. It may be you are careful for the bodies of those that are under your charge; but how little do you for their souls? How many live without the worshi of God in their Families? Without Catechizing their Children or instructing them? And think they have done well if they provide for their bodies. Oh, but man God will find out thy neglects: it was their souls that was thy charge also. If you look only after their bodies, this you will do for your swine. And will you do no more for your Children's souls than for your swine? many are ready to say as Cain, am I my Brothers keeper? If this be not the language of thy tongue, is not this the language of thy Life? What dost thou do for thy brother to save his soul from death?

Second Use, is of exhortation. To stir you up to perform this duty to labor to be skilful in this duty, to win souls to Christ. Brethren, if you would be wise indeed, and if you will gain indeed, labor to gain souls. Oh look upon the woeful condition of perishing souls! How few of thy friends and acquaintance hast thou good grou...ds to think they have a share in Jesus Christ? What wilt thou have no compassion of thy Brothers soul? Thou wouldest have compassion on the body of thy Neighbor: If thou sawest the house on fire about them, and they asleep, wouldest thou not be stirred up, and with zeal forget thyself, and labor to call upon them and awake them? O how many of our carnal friends do remain in a carnal state, and we sit still and let them alone! I beseech you stir up your souls to relieve the souls of others. This is the best Charity and best pleasing to Christ.

It may be many of you have not wherewith to show your Charity to the bodies of your brethren: but this way thou mayst show it, in showing kindness to their souls. Exhort them, and strengthen them in their duty: comfort them, support them. If thou canst not give them an alms, give them an exhortation.

But you will say what should we do, or what means must we make use of to do good to to souls?

I answer, you must do it.

First, By Scripture demonstration. When thou goest to deal with souls, be sure to make use of God's weapons. Bring the word of God with thee. Go forth in the name of God. Pour out thy supplication to God to prosper the work. And then show thy brother the Scripture, to convince him out of the Scripture, as Apollos did. Thou canst never throw down the devils strong holds, but by the use of God's own weapons. No Cannon but this will batter down the strong holds of sin and Satan. Therefore bring the Scripture with thee to him.

Secondly, By earnest supplication. This was Paul's course who did so earnestly thirst for the salvation of his brethren. He strove mightily with God in prayer for them. Rom. 10. 1. My hearts desire and prayer is, that Israel may be saved. Carry thy friends to God, and go to God by prayer, and weep over their carnal and unsanctified state. Bring thy dead Husband and child &c. to God, and put up thy Request to God for them, as Abraham did Ishmael. O That they might live before thee! How did the prophet prevail by his prayers for the restoring the dead child? As the prophet did pray in life into the dead child, so thou shouldest strive with God in prayer for dead souls. If thou didst but wrestle with God for thy dead wife, or child, or neighbor What dost thou know what God might do for them? What knowest thou O man, but thou mayest save thy Wife? &c. Thus we are taught by our Lord in that great petition Thy Kingdom come. Thus if thou strive by the word of God and prayer, then thou mayest be like to prevail mightily for the good of souls, thou dost converse with.

3. By kind Obligation. This is another way by which thou shouldest labor to gain souls. Observe that great rule of the Apostle be pitiful, be courteous, tis the Rule that he gives. Labor by kindness and courtesy to gain upon all thou dost converse with, that thou mayst get within him, that thou mayst be in a capacity to do good to his soul. Shew...wing all meekness to all men. And when thou art thou... kind to all men, this will be a means to do good to them by what thou dost. If they be such as stand in need of thy Charity, open thy hand to relieve their necessity, and that will be a way to open their hearts to thee to receive in thy counsel.

Fourthly, By faithful reprehensions. Lev. 19. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy Neighbor, and not suffer sin to rest upon him. Observe that 'tis quite contrary to Christian Love to suffer sin to lie upon him: for 'tis called hating of him. Oh Brethren, show your Love to the souls that you are among by this, by the faithful rebuking of their sins that they fall into. Manifest it not as a token of your displeasure, but as an ordinance of God. Deal with him in all gentleness and meekness. Not gentle with their sins; you must be plain and saithful with their souls. You must show them the danger of such a way: but you must do it with such tenderness to them as may make this bitter pill to go down. How do many souls miscarry to all eternity for want of professors faithful dealing with them? Oh is it not enough that we have the guilt of our own sins upon us, but must we needs have the guilt of our Neighbors sin upon us too? Ah Brethren, this is enough to convince us that we have little Love to our Brethren's souls, in that we have so little care to reprove their sins.

Fifthly, By your convincing conversations. Live before all thou dost converse with, in the convincing power of a holy Life. This is the way to convince them, 1 Pet. 3. 1, 2. Likewise you wives be in subjection to your own husband, that if any obey not the word, they also may without the word, be won by the conversations of the wives: while thy behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.

Observe here. (First,) That even those that be weakest, and seemingly out of a capacity to win souls, may by their Godly conversations win souls. Women, who more weak than they? Do not you think that this belongs only to Ministers to win souls: this belongs to all.

(Secondly,) Observe that a careful and tender walking in the duties of our Relations towards men, with a conjunction with the duties of piety towards God, is a most powerful means to convert souls. When wives shall be strict in their profession, and yet not be in subjection to their husbands, this will offend the men, and not work upon them. Your profession and practice must one answer the other: and then you are like to gain others, I beseech you take this course to gain souls to Christ, let there be a suteableness in all the parts of your conversation, be the same at home that you are abroad: and bring forth your Religion into your Shops, and Trades, and Fields: That whosoever converse with you may see the power of Godliness in you.

Sixthly. By your frequent exhortations. Hebrews. 3. 13. But exhort one another daily, while 'tis called today, lest any be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Observe it, 'tis not the duty of Ministers only to abound in exhortations, but 'tis the work of you all. Everyone must look to his Neighbors Soul: and that daily. There must be instancy and frequency in this work: and the reason, is, lest he be hardened. Dost thou see such a Neighbor fall into sin? go to him. It may be thou wilt do it hereafter: why it may be the man may be hardened. It may be the man may die: or thou mayest not have the opportunity: or you may be removed from one another; and the work may be forever cut off, if thou Neglect it.

Seventhly. By your careful observation, of all those advantages that God hath put into your hands for the dealing with your Brothers Soul. Consider and study with thyself, what advantages thou hast upon him.

(First,) Take the advantage of affliction. It may be he is taken down by affliction Now go and warn him of his sin. It may be now he will hearken to thee. Job 36. 8. 9. 10.

(Secondly,) Make use of thy Relation. It may be thou art some near Relation in the flesh to him: take that advantage to be dealing with him, for his eternal good.

(Thirdly,) Make use of his dependence upon thee. It may be he is such a one as is concerned in thy good-will to him: it may be he works for thee, or depends upon thy Charity for his livelihood: take this advantage upon him: it may be he will hearken to thee.

(Fourthly,) Make use of thy interest in him. It may be he hath some affection for thee: make use of it for God. And this may be a means to win him to Christ.

Rev. 3. 1.

I know thy works, that thou hast a name, that thou livest and art dead.

These words are part of Christ's Epistle from heaven to the Church of Sardis, wherein he shrewdly checks her hypocrisy and formality, and throughout gives counsels and directions, for her recovery out of that sad estate; from the words we have given you this observation.

Doct. That the Lord Jesus Christ, doth take special notice of, and makes strict observation upon the works and ways of his professed people. He takes notice of their works! for the matter of them, for the quantity, for the quality of them; as hath been shown.

We gave you the Reasons for confirmation, and made entrance into the Application, and have applied it as to the two first branches; to wit, the matter, and the quantity of our works. To come now to the Application of the third thing, namely, the quality of them.

Use. Is it so that the Lord Jesus Christ doth take such notice of our works for the quality of them? then this may be useful by way of Reprehension and Exhortation.

First. For Reprehension, this reproves us that we rest so much in the work done, and do so little enquire into the quality of our works as to the sincerity and soundness of them. O my Brethren! how often do we pray, and never examine how we have prayed? and hear, and never enquire, how we have carried it, while we have been hearing? O how many a man's bosom am I now in? Brethren, this is a great evil among men. Yea, I fear among God's own people, that there is not that care to look into their duties, how they are performed. Brethren, if the Lord Jesus Christ did as you, look no farther than the outside of your duties, and the work done, then you may rest in that; O but Jesus Christ he looks into the inside of them, and he labors to see what there is of soundness and sincerity in them: And seeing the Lord Jesus Christ looks so narrowly into them, should not you? This is the cause of many sins and mischiefs among Professors.

First. This is the cause of much undoing Self-deceit, when persons rest in the work done, and do not carefully examine, what principles they did act by, and ends they did act for; this doth cause many souls to be undone to their destruction. This was the reason why Sardis was so miserably out, and Laodicea, that she was so much mistaken, they kept on the trade of Religious duties, and because the thing was done, and the duty performed with con•...tancy, they thought they were in a good state. You know the speech of that Church, I am rich &c. you are to understand it of spiritual Riches, she thought herself upon the growing hand. O but when Jesus Christ comes and sees how little sincerity there was in them, he disrellisheth them, and shows them that their works were not perfect before him. And thus it is with many Professors in these days, that because they keep on in Familyprayer and good duties, they think all is well, and for want of looking into the Spring of their duties, and their ends in them, they are undone by them. O what a miserable deceit is this! when a poor creature shall reckon that he hath so much gold, so much treasure laid up in heaven, and when it comes to be tried, all his Gold shall prove but Counters! O consider what a miserable estate that will be, when you shall come with them, Lord, Lord, we have been a praying people, and have owned and followed thee; and he shall say, away you Hypocrites, you shall have the reward of Hypocrites, there was not the soundness of Religion in you; O what a miserable disappointment will this be! Jam. 1. 26. He speaks there of some, that did but [seem] to be religious, and deceive their own souls. There be some men, their Religion will serve for no other end but to deceive their own souls; to undo them, because they are unsound in their Religion. There are many Professors, that when they come to receive the reward of their du•...ies they will receive another manner of reward than they thought of; they think to receive the reward of their prayers, and keeping the Sabbath and the like; but he that taketh notice of the heart, knoweth their prayers were, but a taking of his name in vain. When they think to have eternal life for their reward, God will say, I will give you the reward of your works. I sound your works to be but hypocrisy, and you shall have the reward of Hypocrites. O Brethren, I beseech you consider it! It is an awakening truth, but deserves your consideration; there are many that will not only be undone by their swearing, and deceiving, and the like; but many will be undone by their praying and hearing, I mean they will be undone by them, by making them the matter of their righteousness before God; and by their confidence and trust, and leaning to their duties. There be many persons, whose prayers and good duties will serve for no other end, but to blind them, and harden them to their own destruction. If you perform religious duties, and do not look into the manner of performing them, and take care that you be upright, you may come to blind, and harden yourselves by them. O there are multitudes of Professors in Hell this day for wanting care to enquire into this, what ingredients there were in their duties; whether they sprang from principles of grace, or, but from common convictions; whether they were done for, and from themselves, more than from and for God, This made Luther say that he was afraid more of his good works, than of his sins, for his good works were apt to lift him up, but his sins did keep him humble. O Brethren! you had need to look about you, Satan can make a snare of your good duties, to catch your souls by. There are two ways whereby men may be undone by their duties, (1) when they make them as a supposed righteousness, when men do perform Religious duties, and expect that these should obtain the favor of God, and remission of sins, or, at least, should help with the merits of Jesus, to make up a righteousness for them, on which they may climb up to heaven, and stand before God. Thus those carnal Jews, though they were zealous of their duties required by the Law, yet they were lost by going about to establish those as a righteousness of their own. Rom. 10. 3 (2) when they make them as a mistaken evidence. There are many persons (I conceive) that are so far convinced of the sinfulness of their duties, that they do not lean to these as their Righteousness before God, that those should obtain God's favor, and their pardon; yet they do conclude that this is an evidence that they have an interest in Christ; and hereby they deceive their own souls-

Object. But you will say, are not our good duties signs of our right to Christ? doth not the Scripture say, [he that doth Righteousness is righteous?] I answer, good works are indeed a good sign of faith: but then you must look to this, that they be sincerely good. But •...ow many do conclude, because the work is done, that therefore they are in Christ, when as they do not look into the bottom of their duties, whether they be done in sincerity or hypocrisy, and so do but deceive their own souls by trusting to them; because their duties are not sincere. O my Brethren, how effectually are many Professors undone by this! That are so hardened in their estate, that it is more hard to bring them into Jesus Christ, than those that are openly profane. Thus it was observed in our Savior's ministry, that it was more hard to bring in the Self-justifying Pharisees, than the Self-condemning Publicans.

Secondly, Another mischief of this, is, this is the cause of so much pride and self-confidence in duty. Had Laodicea but made a due search into her duties, you should have heard another manner of speech from her. O my poverty! Hypocrisy! Deadness! Formality! Lord pity my woeful state! this would have been the language you would have heard from her: but now because she did not search into the bottom, this did lift her up; and made her think so well of her case. The reason why we are so well persuaded of ourselves, is, because we do not see into ourselves. Did we but thoroughly reflect upon, and search into our duties, when they are performed, we should run to God for pardoning grace. As Neh. last 22. Remember me O my God, for good. He did thus after his great zeal for God, and work of Reformation. He lies to God to pardon the sins of his duties, O Christian! if thou didst look into thy duties, thou wouldst see enough to make thee ashamed of them, thou wouldst be ready to cross what thou hast written, and to cut out thy work, and pick it out stitch by stitch. But now persons not searching into their duties, this makes them stick, and be confident in them.

Thirdly. This is the cause of so much barrenness & inprosciency in the ways of God, did the Christian but duly examine his own duties and espy the defects of the present duty, and be sure to amend that the next time, that was am...ss now, this would make him, in a little time, come to a wonderful prosciency in godliness. But when men go on in a customary course, and do not find out their errors, it is no wonder they go on in their errors, in one tract, duty after duty, yea one year after another: A Christian that is careless in the examining of his duties, that doth not observe the failings of his duties, to amend at one time what was amiss before, he will be but a Bungler in Religion all his days. But he that is careful to examine it. that he may amend what was amiss, this man will soon come to be his Crafts-master in his Trade.

Fourthly, This is the cause of so much ignorance of our own estate; It is no wonder that so many Professors are at a loss about their condition; it is for want of looking into their Religion. They do not know whether they be sound or unsound, whether they be going forward, or going backward, all this is from want of care, to examine and enquire into their duties.

For want of this men do not know whether they be sound or unsound, for how doth a man know the tree but by the fruit? When all is done, 'tis men's actual obedience that is the great evidence, that their estates must be tried by. Whatsoever seeming principles of grace and life, and love, may seem to be within, and good resolutions, yet if all this, be not strong enough to bring forth the fruits of obedience, in a holy, self-denying, and flesh displeasing godliness, all is unsound. But then we m... not look only to the outside of our obedience, we must not take the Carcass without the soul. Now when persons do not look into their duties, but rest in the work done, how can they make any judgment into their estate by them.

So many that are sound Christians, do not know whether they are decaying or increasing for want of this, because they do not look into their duties how they perform them. Christians, how do you perform your duties? Do you more look into them, how sweet they are to you? whether it is better than it was? Christians, you must look to this, are you more extensive. and intensive in your duties? Are you more extensive? Heretofore you looked only at home, to do yourselves good; do you do good now to others? Heretofore, Religion was consined to your knees, but now do you bring it forth into your Shops, and Callings? Here...osore, you were for personal godliness, but are you now for Relative godliness? Heretofore, you were for duties of the first Table only, but now do you put both Tables together? this would be a good sign, but for want of men's searching into this, they are at a loss; they do not know whether they are better or worse, declining or increasing.

Fifthly. This is the cause of so much in duty. When a know that there will be a strict into him, his preparation will be : but when he fears not that, he the more remiss. So 'tis here, If we a strict examination into our hearts, then they will be the more careful to ply the work the more, when they know they shall be looked after. But when they know they shall not be looked into, they will do the work thereafter. Beloved, if we would do the work of Religion to purpose, we must deal by our hearts, as we would by trewantly servants, if you would have anything done, you must keep your eye upon them, If you keep yourselves to this course constantly, to enquire into your duties, how they were done, then your hearts will be careful to make thorough work of it. And indeed this enquiring into your duties, is not only a means to make your hearts sincere in duty, but it is a great part of sincerity. That man that makes no enquiry into his heart, that man is an hypoerite, there is no soundness in that man. And the less care thou hast in looking into thy heart, the less there is of Christianity in thee.

Sixthly. This is that, that puts Christ so much out of use. O Brethren! would you know the Reason, why Christ is so little set by? Why, it is because we are not thoroughly acquainted with our defects. Were we much searching into our duties, then we should fly to our Advocate, and make use of him. And after the performing of our duties, fly to him for a covering of our nakedness and shame.

Second Use of exhortation. Let us do likewise, if Christ take such notice of our duties, O be much in observing your own duties. How your hearts carry it in your duties. If I could but persuade myself and my hearers to the observing of these two Directions, we should make another manner of progress in Religion. O That you would be but persuaded!

First, In the entrance of your duties, set before you your rule fo...hat duty; as the Scholar doth his copy, and do your work by rule You know the Mason will lay the line before he will lay the stone in the foundation, or else he may commit many errors, and the building may come to nothing. So when you come to perform your duties, set your rule before you. Suppose you come to pray, have some thoughts of it, what be the rules you are to pray by. Consider you are not to come in your own names but in Christ's. Take heed that you come not in your own Righteousness, but Christ's. And go out to Christ for strength. Remember that God calls for faith and life induty. And so when you come to hear, consider what rules have I to hear by. And so in giving your Alms. And then your work is like to be done to purpose.

Secondly, Reflect upon your rule in the close of your duty, and examine whether your work hath been done by rule or no. Observe what graces have been acting in your duty, and thankfully take notice of the influences of your graces. Take notice what corruptions have been working in your duty, and take the shame of it before God that you should thus miscar...y. If these two rules were but observed by us, we should come to another manner of proficiency in Religion than we do. But more particularly let me give you three directions for your duties.

First, Take special notice of the ends of your duties. O How many do miscarry for want of a Right understanding in this? Come see my zeal for the Lord of hosts, said John. And all this while he was ...t Acting for himself. And because he did God's work for such carnal ends, God accounts the blood that he had shed to be so much murder and requires it afterwards at his hands, Hos. 1. 4. The Pharisees were a very strict generation in the performance of their duties. Much in Alms, and much and long in prayer, and yet all rejected, because they did it for carnal ends, Math. 23. 5. Therefore I beseech you as you Love your souls, look to your ends in praying. When you come to prayer Consider what end do I propound in this duty? Is not this done out of custom, because 'tis the custom of my family to pray morning and evening? When you go to visit the sick, is it only a civil custom that I am going about? or am I going to visit Jesus Christ in a sick servant of his? And so of our Alms. If a man set out with never so much diligence in the morning, and it be to a wrong point, he is all the while out of his way. Although a man cannot in every motion of the day mind his end, yet in every solemn action (as I have shown you formerly) with care and pains taking with your hearts, you may come to mind your end, and the rule for that particular action. As for example, When you go to your callings, or to pray, or to eat, and the like; in these solemn actions of the day you may come particularly to renew your intentions in your work. And this will manifest your sincerity, and you will come to have the comfort and Joy of your work. And if this be not well looked to, all your duties may serve at last for nothing, but to harden, and blind, and deceive you, rather than to save you.

Secondly, Look well to your principles in duty, What principles you acted by and from. There may be many good things that may be done, that may be good for the matter, but yet because they do not act from a principle of Grace, God will reject them. There is no external duty of Religion, but an hypocrite, an unsound professor may do it (for ought I know) as well as a Godly man; only they differ in their principles and ends. Therefore consider that thy duties come from a renewed heart. Examine, art thou acquainted with the new birth? Hast thou been acquainted with God's converting grace? renewing thy heart! If it be not thus, all thy duties without this will do thee no good.

Thirdly, Look to what affections are stirring in your duties. O how was Christ out with Laodicea for this! That because, though much were done, yet there was not much warmth in duty; there was no Life in them. It is observed that the artificial breath is a cold breath but a living breath is a warm breath. As ever you would have the comfort of your duties, you must look to the warmth of your duties. My soul followeth hard after thee, said the Psalmist Psalm. 63. 8. and thy right hand upholdeth me.

Ten parting Counsels.

First, Counsel. Observe the degrees of God's departing, and mourning after a departing God. The Lord, seems to me, to take his leave of us by degrees. And because it is by such insensible degrees, I am afraid we are apt to take the less notice of it. God hath not thought good to take his farewell of us all at once. We thought, God had intended to take all from us at first. You know ministers were excluded from their public labors, and then God lengthened out their liberty in private. And since an Act hath passed against our private meetings, so that we have had our liberties with the more difficulty. And now an Act hath passed whereby your Ministers are to be removed farther from you. However the Ministers of Christ are sinful poor men of themselves as others: but yet considering the capacity of their office, they are the great representatives of Jesus Christ. And when the Ministry is removed, this is a degree, and a great degree of God's removal. You see God hath removed Ministers by degrees, farther and farther; and what will be the next remove! Me thinks the glory seems to be departing by degrees from the nation, as it was in the time of the prophet Ezekiel in the 10, 11, 12 chap. If we are left without the powerful preaching of the gospel, and the likely means of conversion, what will it signify though God should give this nation never so much outward plenty? If God should make this nation to wash their steps in butter, and fill our bellies with his hid Treasures, what will all this be, if our generations should go down to the pit of destruction by the thousands? If there be preaching, yet if there be not a powerful preaching, that will save souls, what will it be? And this great mercy God hath deprived us of by degrees. Oh mourn after a departing God! Take heed that you be affected with this providence of God. How will God take it of you, if you do not stir up yourselves to take hold of God, now he is departing? Woe to them when I shall depart from them: Woe to this nation, and this place when God departs.

Second Counsel. Take heed that when the public bellows are broken, the fire of Religion go not out. The Ministers of Christ are as the common bellows to blow up this sacred fire. And now God seems to have broken these bellows; Oh take heed lest now Religion should die away! and the heat and warmth thereof should decay, and by insensible degrees should go out. We are too too much like green wood, the fire keeps no longer in, than while we are blowing the bellows I fear lest you shall see professors too too much like Christ's disciples, who when Christ was taken went everyone to his home: so weak their faith, and prevalent their infidelity, that they went their way, as if their work had been done. Take heed lest the like Apostasy creep in among you, that when these helps do fail, you go back again and remit your zeal. Oh Brethren! what ever you let go, be sure you do not let go your hold in Christ; do not let go your hold in Religion. Do but keep your ground there, and no matter what becomes of any other interest.

Third Counsel. When God takes down the common sun, take the more earnest heed to the light that he sets up within. The ministry of the Gospel, and preaching of the word is like the public light of the common Sun. And this light seems much to fail, and the shadows of the evening are stretched out: and the Sun is like to set upon the Churches. Well then if it be so take the more earnest heed to the directions of Conscience. You know when the Sun is down every man kindles his candle, and takes heed to that. The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord. Conscience, is the light in every man's bosom. Not that the light within, (as some do talk of) is sufficient without the direction of God's word, to guide a man into the ways of Life: But yet a well informed Conscience, instructed in the Scriptures, and well studied in the mind of God, and acquainted with the nature and principles of Religion, may be a great help to a Christian to guide him in his common course. My Brethren, if God deprive you of the preacher in the Pulpit take the more earnest heed to the preacher in your bosom. Set Conscience faithfully on work. This is the preacher in the bosom that tells every man of his duty and of his sins. Harken now to the instructions of Conscience, to the reproofs and rebukes of Conscience. See and hear what Conscience will speak and direct. What that will touch on, why God hath brought on us these judgments. Oh, take heed! that what ever preacher be silenced; that this preacher be not silenced. Oh! take heed, how you stop the mouth of Conscience. How you desile and harden your Conscience. If Conscience be faithful and free, and you take earnest heed unto him, it may be a standing blessing to you, when the preachers in the Pulpit are removed from you.

Fourth Counsel. Be sure that none of those extraordinary providences do drive you from God, but that they drive you to God. I fear lest this may be the issue of these providences to many, that they may be driven off from God, that they will give over their diligence and zeal; and give up all for lost and gone. O this will be sad indeed! If these providences drive you from God, this will be a sad sign of reprobation; take heed that these drive you nearer to God. Be sure that the more frowning the providences of God are to you, the more do you cleave to him, the more tenderly do you walk before him. 'Tis a fearful sign of an unsound heart, never savoured, and seasoned with true grace, when afflicting providences do drive men farther and farther off from God. God doth intend by his Rod to whip his children home to him, to make them walk more tenderly; to caution them against sin, that he corrects them for. But now if any of you should make this use of his providences, that after all, you should go farther from God, oh how sad would this be! This is to be like King Ahaz. 2 Chron. 28. 22. O let these Chastisements from God, drive you everyone the nearer to God. And cause you everyone to enquire into his way, and the iniquity that is in his hand, that he may reform.

Fifth Counsel. Let your own eyes be your Overseers, when God deprives you of your public Overseers. The Ministers of Christ, they are termed Seers, and Overseers; Now God is like to deprive you of these, oh take the more careful Oversight everyone of yourselves; be the more strict in your inspection into your own ways, in the examining of, and inquiring into your own hearts. Beloved it is a duty that I have some time since pressed upon you, and I hope you do yet make conscience of it, daily to examine your hearts and ways by those questions; which we gave you for this end, as a great help to this duty: I beseech you whatever you intermit, constantly to keep up, and maintain that duty. And now especially when God deprives you of your public Overseers, you should take care of yourselves. I have never any hopes that you will come to any proficiency in the ways of God, unless you come up to the strict observation of these Rules, that so you may become sensible of your errors, that one days humiliation, may be the matter of the next days Reformation.

Sixth Counsel. Whatever become of your other Trade, be sure that you keep up the Trade of Religion. Beloved, though God see it good to impoverish you and undo you in this world yet 'tis all well; if you keep on in Religion. That is a happy man that hath a thriving and flourishing soul, though he is declining in his estate; but if you go back in grace, though you should get all the world, you are miserable losers. Therefore be sure of this, how ever God do frown upon you in the world, that you do not go behind in grace. Oh, you may sadly fall and go behind hand, before you think of it, if you do not take heed to it; though there be no total falling away from grace for a Believer, yet there may be sad degrees of falling, and God may let you fall so, that you may be sadly wounded & you may break all your bones; and be a common scandal to Religion all your days Therefore look to this, that however God deal with you in other things, account it happy with you if your souls be thriving; & whatever prosperity God gives you, yet if these do not thrive, let none of these things content you. Many persons while they are blessing themselves in their outward increase, are declining in grace. Oh poor Soul! I should pity thy gain, that addest to thy gain in the world, the loss of thy soul to all eternity.

Seventh Counsel. Take heed whom and what you hear. I fear lest after the departure of Ministers, wolves should enter not sparing the sheep. And I am afraid least any should be found among you of itching ears, hearkening after novelties, and heap up Teachers to yourselves. Labor to know what Doctrine they bring you before you hear them. Take heed lest men of corrupt principles and dangerous doctrines should make a harvest of you, and draw Disciples after them; and overthrow the faith of some. And I cannot be faithful to you without warning you of this miserable danger; you are to take heed to the Call of God. Beware whom and what you hear, hearken to those that are the sent Ministers of Christ. It is like enough that Seducers may take the advantage of the present time, that under pretence of further courage and boldness than Ministers have, may seem to alienate the people from their Ministers, as flying from their flocks as hirelings.

Eighth Counsel. Maintain with constancy and frequency the Communion of Saints. Now is the time my Brethren for those that fear the Lord, to speak often one to another. Now you are deprived of your public Overseers, take the more careful oversight one over another, rebuke one another, admonish one another, provoke one another to love and to good works, now if ever, there will be special need of this. If you forsake the Assembling of yourselves together, we shall see Religion dying as the coal that is put in the middle of the Room by itself.

Ninth Counsel. Walk together in the order and unity of the Gospel. Take heed of any dividing principles, mark them that cause Divisions, and avoid them. Those that are not for peace be not you for them, what ever pretence they may have to purity attend them not, unless they are men that are for peace. If once the ranks be broken, the Army is quickly routed, and if once the unity of Christians be broken, then Satan hath got his advantage; and is like to have his will. O take heed that you keep together in the unity and peace of the Gospel, that your Ministers and that Jesus Christ may rejoice to behold your order and your steadfastness in Christ.

Tenth Counsel. Keep up the Life and power of Religion. Be so much the more vigorous in your Families, by how much the more you are deprived of your public helps. Christians, be advised by me, and let Satan be disappointed in this design. He thinks to break the Churches of Christ: Oh but now let every Family be a Church, and let every Master be a Priest and Prophet to teach their Family. Praise and pray for them, and do so much the more in your Families, by how much the more God hath deprived you of your Preachers.

Brethren, so it is that the preaching of the Gospel is like to be scarce, and the means of Conversion is like to be at a stand; and what shall be done for the Conversion of souls? Oh be dealing with them, and never leave them, till you see they mind their souls and Religion. Put them upon secret prayer, and the Catechism, and Repeating the Principles of Religion, oh that I may prevail with you to set up this duty of Catechising in your Families in this evil time! And if so be you would but try the use of that help, that I have caused to be printed on purpose for that end, I do not doubt but you would find it a happy means, for the letting in the light into their souls.

Psalm. 74. 1.

O God why hast thou cast us off forever? why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture?

This Psalm, and particularly these words, do contain the Churches sad lamentation over her deep affliction; together with her earnest expostulation with God about the cause. Two things there are, that the Church in these words doth plead with God. First, The greatness of her Affliction. Secondly, The nearness of her Relation.

First, The greatness of her Affliction. And there were three things in her affliction that did make it lie very heavy upon her. First, The root of this affliction, and that was God's [anger] why doth thine ANGER smoke? &c. (Secondly,) The height of this affliction. God was not only angry, but he did [smoke] in his anger. (Thirdly,) The length of this affliction. It was so long that God did seem to cast them off for [ever.]

Secondly, The nearness of her Relation. Against [the sheep of thy pasture] as if they should have said, Lord, if thou hadst done this against thine enemies it had been no wonder. If thou hadst poured out thy wrath, against the vessels of wrath, it had not been so much. But what, wilt thou draw out thy sword against the sheep of thy pasture! It were no wonder that thou shouldst take the fat and the strong, and pour out thy judgments upon them; but wilt thou do it to thy sheep! There be several doctrines that I may raise from the words, as

First Doct. That God's people are his sheep.

Second Doct. That God may be sorely angry with his own people. With his own sheep.

Third Doct. That when God is angry with his people, it becomes them carefully to enquire into the Cause.

Fourth Doct. That when God's people are under affliction, they ought to take notice of, and be much affected with his anger from which they do proceed.

Fifth Doct. That God's people under affliction, are, or should be more affected with his anger, than with their smart. This is that the Church doth complain of: Not that the Church did so smart, but that God was so displeased and angry. That did most affect her.

Six Doct. That God's people are apt to have misgiving thoughts of God, when they are under sore afflictions. God was angry with his people, and their hearts did misgive them, as if God did cast of his people.

Seventh Doct. That God may be angry with with his people so sore, and so long, that in the judgment of sense, it may seem, that they are forever cast off.

Eight Doct. That though the people of God may not murmur against his proceedings; yet they may humbly expostulate with him about the cause. Why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture? I have spoken heretofore to the first of these doctrines, I shall speak now to the second. To wit.

Doct. That God may be angry, and sorely angry with his own people. I have already in the audience of some proved this point. And answered several questions. As (first) How anger may be ascribed to God? (secondly) How far he may be angry with his own people. (Thirdly,) What is the difference between God's being Angry with his own people, & with the wicked I shall not respeak anything of what I have spoken, but proceed to a fourthquestion.

Fourth Question. By what signs and evidences may we come to know whether God be angry? and here I shall first premise four Propositions: & then answer the question in six Conclusions. First, I shall premise these 4 propositions.

First Proposition. That a person or people may verily think themselves to be in God's favor, when they are indeed under his anger and displeasure.

Second Prop. That neither God's favor, nor his anger can be known [merely] by his outward dispensations.

Third Prop. That God's anger or favor must be judged of, rather by our carriage toward him, than by his carriage towards us.

Fourth Prop. That for the discovering of God's favor or anger, we must consult rather the book of Conscience, and of Scripture, than the book of providence.

First Proposition. That a person or people may verily think themselves to be in God's favor when they are indeed under his anger and displeasure. This is an awakening consideration, and therefore should be duly laid to heart. A Church may think herself in a very good and safe condition, and yet Jesus Christ may loath it, and be ready to spew her out of his mouth. As of the Church of the Laodiceans. Men may cry to themselves peace and safety, when sudden destruction may come upon them. And may say, Is not the Lord among us? No evil can come unto us; and yet be upon the very brink of destruction. Men may have great hopes of the presence of God with them, and yet evidences of God's departing from them. And may cry the temple of the Lord, when God is even casting them out of his sight. We read of some that had a great deal of confidence of God's favor; they would still lean on the Lord, and were confident that he had favor for them; and yet the Lord was ready to break out upon them to their destruction, Micah 3. 11, 12. They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity &c. Yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, is not the Lord among us? None evil can come upon us. Therefore shall Zion for your sakes be ploughed as a field. They may think that because the ordinances of God are among them, that God is among them; when God may be turning them up as a field that is ploughed. This ought to startle and awaken men. Sirs, it is not your Confidence, but your evidence that will carry it. Many times there are none so confident of God's favor, as those that are marked out for the objects of his eternal wrath and displeasure. The carnal Jews, they would not be beaten out of their carnal confidence. And though the prophet told them of the wrath of God that was coming against them, yet they would not hear him, till wrath came upon them, and there was no remedy.

Second Prop. That neither God's favor nor his anger can be known, [merely] by his outward dispensations. No man knoweth either Love or hatred by the things that are before him. Men have very shrewdly erred by judging of God's favor, or wrath by his outward dispensations. When the Psalmist took his mark by this, how sorely was his faith shaken, and his feet almost gone? When he beheld the Godly in affliction and under suppression; and the wicked prospering in their wickedness. The 73 Psalm gives you a true account, what a sad bout he had by this. He observed they had no bonds in their death, and they were not plagued like other men. Their eyes stand out with fatness, they have more than heart could wish. They were very wicked and yet very prosperous. Full of sin, and yet full of pleasure, and riches and all outward accommodation. Whereas on the other side, he observed that he was •...fflicted, and other of the Godly with him. And was tempted from this, that God did regard the wicked so much, or more than he did the Godly. And therefore 'tis a very dangerous mistake among the multitude. Many think on the one side, that because God doth prosper them, and bless them as he doth, that therefore they are in the favor of God: for if they were not, he would never deliver them, and carry them through so many troubles as he doth, if he did not love them. This is a dangerous mistake. And so some on the other hand, because God doth afflict them here, that therefore he hath mercy for them hereafter. They have their hell here, and therefore they shall not go to hell hereafter. Alas man! thou mayst have thy hell begun here, and lengthened out hereafter to all eternity. Thou canst not say from this, that thou shalt escape the torments of hell: but notwithstanding all this, thou mayst hear God say to thee at last as to Dives, Son remember that thou in thy Life-time receivedst thy good things: but now thou art tormented.

Third Prop. God's favor or anger must be judged of rather from our carriage towards him, than from his carriage towards us. If our walk be according to God's rule, we may be sure that peace shall be upon us. Gal. 6. 16. If we are such as fear God and work Righteousness, then we may be certain that we are accepted with God. Acts. 10. 35. If we do well, we shall be accepted. They that by patient contim•...nce in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, shall have eternal life. They are under promise Rom. 2. 6, 7. But on the contrary, tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doth evil. Those that walk disorderly, and in disobedience to the will of God, however God may prosper them in their ways, as they may seem, yet they must know that God's anger is against them. They may know that his anger is against them, because they walk against him: against the flat command of his word. For these things cometh the wrath of God upon the Children of disobedience, Eph. 5. 6. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven, against all ungodliness, and unrighteousness of men, Rom. 1. 18. So they that walk in ways of unrighteousness, and ungodliness, they may know by this that they are under the wrath of God; however God may seem to carry it towards them. Men may not conclude that because God doth not presently smite, that therefore he is not angry with them. God may speak never a word, neither strike a blow; and yet may treasure up wrath against them at the last, and they never think of it. Many a poor wretch thinks, that God, because he is silent that he approves of them, Psal. 50. 21. These things hast thou done and I kept silence. Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such a one as thyself; but I will reprove thee and set them in order before thine eyes. God would make them know, that though for the present he spake nothing, and did not show his anger; yet he would make it known against them. If our carriage be dutiful, and humble toward God, what ever his carriage be towards us, we may be sure that his love is towards us. God doth many times carry it as if he were angry, for the trial of his people, to see whether they will trust him, and walk by faith and not by sense. Whether they will believe though it be against their own feeling. He will many times put his Children upon this exercise, not in anger, but in Love. As the tender Nurse doth the Child. So on the other hand, God may let men alone, and let them prosper in the world, though he be dreadfully angry with them.

Fourth Prop, That the favor or anger of God, is rather to be gathered from the book of Scripture, and of conscience, than from the book of providence. Many times the book of providence is very dark, and seems to speak that God favors those men; whereas if we look into the Scripture, we shall see that they are the vessels of his wrath. And the book of providence may seem to tell us, that such a people are the objects of his wrath, which if we look into Scripture we shall find, that they are the people of his love. Therefore the Psalmist, when he could not know by the book of providence, he went to the Scripture, to the Sanctuary, to the oracles, and had those things opened there. This book was a key to open those riddles that he could not understand before. He sees that those men that did prosper thus, were the objects of his wrath. And on the other hand, that the poor and afflicted were the only beloved of God. Though this was against his mind before, Psal. 77. 13. Thy way O God is in the Sanctuary. That is, in the place where thy word is preached, and explained, there is thy way, the meaning and sense of thy providence is discovered. Those that have the Scripture against them, these are they that bear the marks of God's anger upon them. And those that have the Scripture for them, what ever others judgments be, these be the men of his delight. Therefore let the word of God be your judge. And with the book of Scripture, compare the book of Conscience. For, saith the Apostle if our hearts condemn us not, than have we confidence towards God. But if our hearts condemn us, God is greater then our hearts and knoweth all things Let conscience be consulted with, when thou art trying thy case, whether thou art in the favor or under the anger of God. And that will be able, comparing thy state with the Scripture to give a great guess to this, whether God have favor for thee or be against thee.

Now I must add six Conclusions, in which the question shall be resolved. How it may be known that God is angry with any people.

First Conclusion. The Raign and dominion of sin is a most certain evidence, that any person or people, are under God's anger. Where sin is reigning, and abounding, gross and heinous sins abounding in any nation or place, you need not any other evidence that God is angry with that people. Especially, when those Iniquities are tolerated by Magistrates, or found in persons that are in a public place, then they are fearful signs of God's anger: then you may know there is great misery for such people, though he may seem at present to prosper them. And so for any particular person, whether the sin be gross or close, if thou art under the power of any one unmortified sin, thou mayst be sure thou art under the anger and wrath of God, Eph. 6. 5. For these things cometh the wrath of God upon the Children of disobedience. Rom. 2. 8, 9. But to them that are contentious, and obey not the truth indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish unto every soul that doth evil. Art thou yet in thy Natural unconverted state, unrenewed? thou mayst go away with sadness; thou goest up and down with Cain, with certain marks of God's displeasure upon thee; for we are by Nature Children of wrath. If thou art in the estate thou wert in by Nature, thou art surely under the wrath of God. If thou remainest in thy old unbelief, thou needest no more dispute about this matter, the wrath of God abideth on thee: The whole book of God, and the threatenings of God, do rise up with open mouth to condemn thee that livest in any unmortified sin. Now sin is unmortified, when persons go on in a purpose of sinning, and in a willingness to practice sin. Rom. 6. 16. Know ye not, that to whom you yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants you are to whom you obey? whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto Righteousness. To whom you [yield] yourselves servants to obey. The servant of God is taken [captive] by his sin under a temptation; but if you yield yourselves servants to them, you are the servants of sin. Yield yourselves servants to [obey] whom do you ordinarily [obey]? If the devil can do more with you to draw you from God, than God can to keep you to him; if he can do more with you to make you neglect prayer, than God can to keep you to it; or if he can prevail with you to commit any sin, more then God can to keep you from it, you are under the wrath of God. There is a twofold anger, a stated anger, and occasional anger or temporal anger. Occasional and temporal anger, and so the Children of God may fall under his anger: but by their application to him in Christ that anger may be taken off again. But there is a •...ate of anger, and that is with the wicked. And this thou art under, who dost live in unmortified sin. Thou art in a state of anger, in a state of wrath.

Second Con When the threats and menaces of God's Word are against men, this is a sure evidence of his anger. You know we may discern the anger of men by their Rebukes, and threats, and the like. If the word of God be against thee, be sure the anger of God is against thee. Therefore consult the Scripture. If the Scripture do speak sadly of thy state, that is an undeniable evidence of God's anger, Zeph. 2. 5. Woe to the inhabitants of the Sea coast, the word of the Lord is against you. O woe to them that the word of the Lord is against! There is wrath from the Lord against that man. Therefore if the Lord do speak against thee, Make thy peace with speed. Do as Haman, when he saw the King rise up in hast: he stood up to make request for his life to the Queen. Est. 7, 7, So if thou dost find that there is evil intended against thee by thy sins, O fall down upon thy knees and make up thy peace.

Third Con. Public calamities, except when they come upon a people for Righteousness sake, are the evident tokens of God's anger. When God doth strike a nation or a people with war, or with pestilence, or with famine, or the like this is a manifest token of God's anger with such a nation or people. This you may see throughout the book of Judges. Still it was when the people had sinned, and God was angry, that these public calamities were brought upon them, Judge. 2. 13, 14, 19, 20, 21. and 3. 7, 8. and 10. 6. There you may see that public calamities did proceed from the sins that were among them. And if sin be a sign of God's anger, you may easily make application. Should not we fear and tremble? should not we humble ourselves in the dust, and clothe ourselves with sackcloth? God hath sent all his three greatplagues together upon our nation, Famine, Sword, and War. O apply this, and see that you be sadly affected with God's displeasure against our Nation.

But here I put in an exception [When they come upon a people for Righteousness sake] then though the calamities be common and public. Yet it is not a sign of God's anger. In the primitive times, the Christians were fearfully persecuted everywhere, and were killed by the thousands, and therefore this was rather Martyrdom, then signs of God's anger.

Here two things must be considered: whether these afflictions did find them cleaving to the Lord in their duty: Or, going off from him, and declining their duty. Now if they do find them decaying and remitting their zeal and diligence, then those evils, though they do come upon them for Righteousness sake, yet they come for God's anger too. And so though they should rejoice in them as coming from wicked men, yet they should be humbled, and take notice too of the hand of God against them in correcting their vices.

Fourth Con. When God doth suffer men to prosper in an evil way, this is a fearful sign of God's anger. Prosperity is so far from being a sign of God's favor, that when prosperity doth attend men, and follow them in an evil way, it is one of the most dreadfulest marks in the world against a person or people. Whom the Lord loves he rebukes, and chastens, that is, if they wander and go out of his way. And we are judged of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world, Cor. 11. 32. So when the Lord lets men go on in their evil ways unpunished, it is a sign he intends they shall be condemned with the world. Brethren, be jealous of yourselves, if God let a person go on in a way of wickedness, it is a fearful sign. Hos. 4. 14. I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom &c. Therefore the people that doth not understand shall fall. It is a sign that he intends higher displeasure against a person, when he lets them go on in a way of sin, and will not stop them, but let them take their swinge in sin. Those whom he intends love to, shall be corrected here, and stopped: but others shall have the gibbet kept for them at last.

Fifth Con. Spiritual judgments are ever to be taken as sore evidence of God's anger. Many times God doth inflict temporal judgments with an intention to reform them, and amend a people: but when he gives up a person or people to Spiritual judgments, this is a token of his highest displeasure. God doth threaten as one of the sorest evidences of his displeasure [a Famine of the word] So Psal. 78. 59, 60. When God heard this he was wrath, and greatly abhorred Israel: so that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh the tent which he had placed among men. When God forsook the tabernacle, and deprived them of the former tokens of his presence in their ordinances, this was a sign that he abhorred Israel. So our Savior as his tokens of his displeasure against the Church threatens that he would remove his Candlestick. He would unchurch them as one of his most fearful threatenings, Rev. 2. 5. Rom. 1. 23, 24, 28. The Apostle speaks of some that were under the fearful token of God's wrath in this. This was a fearful token of God's wrath against them indeed, when God should give them up to such spiritual judgments. Psal. 81. 10, 11. My people would not hearken to my voice: so I gave them up to their own hearts lusts. O this was dreadful indeed! This was the sorest expression of God's anger that could be against that people, so 2 Thes. 2. 11, 12. God shall send them strong delusions, &c. Rom. 11. 7. 8. The elect hath obtained it; but the rest were blinded, &c. O do you see any such souls thus delivered up? O let your hearts tremble for such persons This is a shrewd evidence, that they are persons given up to great judgments.

Six Con. Temporal afflictions, when they find the people of God straying, and wandering, and declining from him, are evident tokens of God's anger. They are not always tokens of his anger. When they find us keeping close to God, they are for trial, and not signs of God's displeasure? Job was highly commended by the Lord when the affliction was upon him. Therefore we must consult conscience whether it was not for such a sin that God is now afflicting thee. And if thou dost find it was for sin, thou hadst need run quickly and make the atonement. But if otherwise, you may conclude it is but for proof and trial and exercising those graces that God hath given you.

A Discourse made by Mr. Joseph Alleine on a night of solemn Thanksgiving, which he held with his people in Taunton, some days before the five-mile-Act came in force, by virtue of which he was then to leave them.

MOST dearly beloved Brethren, with no little Joy and Thankfulness have I thought of this time, when I should once more see your faces together: and be so truly glad, with so heart contenting a mercy, as to rejoice with the Joy of God's people and to glory with his inheritance.

It is a time, that to some, may seem unseasonable to set up Thanksgivings when our calamities are so near approaching. But surely, if I had never hopes to enjoy one day with you more, the last day should be a day of praise. And if I were sure that we were now to take our farwell of Christians and Ministers, and of all our former liberties, I should exhort you that we might join once more in lifting up hearts and hands in bl...ssing God for all the mercies that we have met with together. Your Condition is never such but your mercies are infinitely greater, and more then your afflictions. Neither may the sense of misery at any time surprise you, so as to drown the Thankful acknowledgement of God's mercies. God that hath been always good to you, hath never been better then since you have had affliction. Elijah was never so happily fed at a full Table as when it was a time of great Famine: when God sent him every bit of bread and flesh by the mouth of a Raven. Oh how sweetly do you think that every bit of this bread did relish with the man of God? when he saw that he received it immediately out of God's own hand?

Brethren, though it hath been a time of great calamity, yet God hath herein heightened his mercy to you; you have seen the Bush of God burning and yet not consumed. The portion of God's Children hath been taken away, and yet our cheeks have been fat. We have been cast with Daniel into the Lions den: but God hath sent his angel and shut the Lions mouth, and we have not been destroyed but are here together to praise the Lord.

Methinks there are several periods of time, •...ine the time of our calamities, wherein God hath appeared to us, when we thought all had been gone. One period was when your Ministers were shut out of public by the Act of Uniformity. Another when we were cast out of our private Meetings, by the Act made against •...ditions Conventicles. So called by the iniquity of the times. Another by this Act that doth now cast Ministers out of their Habitations. And me thinks every period should end with praise. We read, that when they removed the Ark, that when they had passed such a number of paces then they slew a sacrifice: so me thinks as we pass thief periods of time, at the end of every period we should offer pr•...ise. What though God hath separated your preachers from you, ye as he said, if the Soldier dies fighting, and the preacher preaching, and the swan singing, then the Saints should part praising. Oh Christians this is the spirit that should be in you, that what ever God doth with you for the time to come, you should resolve to end in his praise for the mercies past. If it were the last day we should have together, surely methinks we should end in praise. And since the Alarm hath been sounded, by the late unhappy Act, that saying of Sampson hath run often in my mind, let me die with the Philistines: so methinks I would say, let me die with praise. And now O God, let my hands and heart be lifted up with thy praise: that I may touch their hearts; that every heart of theirs, may sound forth thy heavenly praise. But 'tis easy to be lost in praise, the mercies of God are a deep that cannot be fathomed. Where shall I begin or end? How shall I reach to the top? or when shall I come to the bottom? however I will not say nothing, because I cannot say all. Let me touch a little of the mercies of God: a little this Evening to show the mercy of God to you. And let it live upon your hearts as long as you live. Consider now what great things God hath done for you, whether you are the people of God in general; or people of Taunton in particular. How great are the mercies of God to you!

First, As you are the people of God in general. This is the top of all your mercies. In this says our Savior rejoice, not that the spirits are made subject to you: but in this that your names are written in heaven. Brethren we have many mercies to praise the Lord for: but this is that should most affect us, God's peculiar mercy to us, as we are his chosen generation, and peculiar people. Consider now what the Lord hath done for you. Let me open it to you in six or seven particulars.

(First.) You are the Election of Grace. (Secondly,) You are the first born of God. (Thirdly,) You are the first fruits of the Creation. (Fourthly,) You are the Remnant of escape. (Fifly,) You are the Burgesses of heaven. (Sixthly,) You are the Members of Christ. (Seventhly,) You are the living stones of the Temple. Blessed is the man, you will say, whose happiness this is. But this damps my Joy and comfort, lest I should not be the man. Now lest this should damp thy Joy, let me give thee two Characters, by which thou mayst come to know whether this be thy case. Thou mayst know it by the Transactions that have passed between Christ and thy Soul: and by the Treasure that hath been made choice of by thee.

First, By the Transactions that have passed between Christ and thee. Hast thou passed under the Bond of his Covenant? as Christ hath offered himself to thee, hast thou again delivered up thyself to him? hast thou renounced all thy known sins? And took the Lord Jesus Christ for •...hy Head and Husband, to love, honor, obey him above all? hast thou considered the conditions of Christ, and accepted of them all? and sayest as my Lord saith, so I will do. Doth thy heart close with the selfdenying laws of Christ, and art resolved not to allow thyself in any known sin; but to rise again by repentance? If so, thou art the man I am speaking of.

Secondly, Thou mayst know it by the Treasure that hath been made choice of by thee. Every man is known by what he pitcheth his heart upon for his Treasure. What is it, man, that carrieth thy heart? The things seen, or the things unseen? Who hath most of thy heart, God or the world? Which way stands the bent of thy heart? a godly man must not judge of himself by what he is at worst, under a prevalent Temptation: Nor others by what they are at best in a fit: but where is thy constant bent? What is thy chiefest care and delight? Is it to converse with God? And be like to God? What doth please thee best, when thou art contriving thy happiness? Doth this, that God is thine? Or is it something here below? What is thy care? Is it to please God? If it be thus, thou art the man that I am speaking to. And now you that are thus, that have passed under the bond of God's Covenant; and have made choice of him for your happiness, know and understand.

First, That you are the election of Grace. The election h...th obtained it, saith the Apostle, but the rest were blinded. You are the handful that God hath taken out but the heap are left. Oh Christians, the great Transaction of God from all eternity hath been about you. And the great transactions of God in time have been about you. The Lord did from all eternity enter into a league with his Son for you: and did give him to you. God was laying the foundation of your happiness before he laid the foundation of the world. God was making provision for you from all eternity. Our Savior is often speaking of this gift in John 17. so John 10. 29. My father which gave them me is greater then all, John. 6. 39. And this is the Fathers will that of all that he hath given me I should loose nothing. And so, All that the Father hath given me shall come unto me. Oh Christian, doth not this assect thy heart? that the eternal Counsel of the great God should be taken up about thee? that God should be bargaining and agreeing with his Son about thee! that thou shouldst be mentioned by name from all eternity? Christ knows his sheep by name. And he bids such rejoice, because their names are written in heaven. O man, did God design thee from all eternity by name! How should this affect thy heart? what did God build all this world for? It was that Christ might have a seed. And why do he continue the world? 'tis because Christ might have the elect sinished, when the elect are numbered the Trumpet shall sound, and away he comes together his elect. Christ's coming, what was it for? that he might ransom his sheep. And his second coming, what is it sor, but that he might receive his elect? John 14. 3. I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am ye may be also, Math. 24, 31. He shall send his angels, with a great sound of a Trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of the heavens to the other. What was the end of Christ's low Humiliation, even to death, but to save his people from their sins? Math. 1. 21. And what is the end of Christ's glorious exaltation, to all power and greatness? it was all for the elect, John 17. 2. Christ hath all power in heaven and earth delivered to him for your sakes; for the elect. That he might give eternal life to the elect. Oh man, what a heart hast thou, if all this cannot move thee! if thou hadst stood by, when he laid the foundation of the fabric of this world, wouldst thou not have said surely 'tis for some great end? if thou hadst stood by when Christ was Crucised, and known the mystery, wouldst thou not have said, surely this is for some great end? why all this was for thee.

Secondly, You are the first born of God, Heb. 12. 23. you are come to the general Assembly, the Church of the first born which are written in heaven, The Apostle speaks of our privileges as if we were come to heaven already. You [are] come &c. you are God's Israel; and beside, you are admitted to have fellow ship with Jesus Christ, and by faith are made one with him. Now Christ is God's first born, and we being joined to him are made one with him. We are joint heirs with Christ. Now the first born had many privileges, As.

(First,) The first-born had the dearest affection, Zach. 12. 10. They shall be in bitterness as one for his first-born. There is the great sorrow, because there run out the great stream of affection, in this respect you are the firstborn of God: you are they that have his dear affection, Eph. 5. 1. You are called the dear children of God. O the dear expressions, that he useth to you, and the dear affections that he hath for you! you are called the dearly beloved of his soul. O what drops of love doth God drop in these sacred leaves of this book? how full is the book of the Canticles? My love, My dove, My undesiled. God doth out bid the love of all the parents in the world. Can a woman forget her sucking child? sho may; but I will not forget thee, saith the Lord. The dearest mother when she lets her child out of her hands may forget it, but you are never out of my hands: you are engraven there. O what rolling bowels are there in those words, Jer. 31. 20. Is Ephraim my Son? is he a pleasant child? For since I spake against him I do earnestly remember him still: therefore My bowels are troubled for him, I will surely have mercy upon him saith the Lord. Oh man dost thou consider that all this is spoken to thee? All this love, God hath in his heart for thee; yea beyond all expression dear art thou to God.

(Secondly,) The first-born do carry the inheritance. This is your case, the inheritance is for you. Though a man have many Sons, yet not many heirs: 'tis his first-born is his heir, though a King hath many Sons, yet but one King: 'tis the first-born that is King after him. In this respect God's children are the first-born: for they are all heirs, you are all Kings, you that are begotten again, you are begotten to an inheritance, to a heavenly, that fadeth no... away.

(Thirdly,) The first-born had a special blessing, Gen. 27. 19. I am Esau thy first-born. And you know when Esau knew that Jacob had got the blessing of the first-born, he accounted himself undone: and he lifted up his voice and wept. Brethren, you have the blessing. Let others glory in their wealth and riches; whoever have these benefits 'tis you have the blessing. Beloved, you are the Jacob's, when others are the Esau's: you carry the blessing of the first-born. Nay and God ratisies the blessing on you as that upon Jacob. I have blessed him and he shall be blessed. Balaam was sensible of this; He hath blessed and I cannot reverse it. You that are God's firstborn, God hath made you unchangeably happy, you are unalterably blessed, God hath blessed you and it cannot be reversed.

(Fourthly,) The first-born did carry the honor, and were accounted the excellency and strength of the family. Gen. 49. 3. Reuben, thou art first-born, my might and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power. And God says of his first born as Jacob of his. Thou art the excellency of dignity. So God says of you: I will make of you an eternal excellency. You know if a Knight have many Sons, there is but one Knight. And so of a Lord 'tis the first-born is Lord after him: he carries the honor of the family. So you my Brethren, you carry the honor: you are the only honorable persons in God's account. Since thou hast been precious in my sight thou hast been honorable. And, those that honor me I will honor. Brethren, put this together, and see if there be not reason to lift up the praise of God on high: and to say Now I will lift up thine horn on high. Surely God hath listed up your horn on high.

Thirdly, You are the first fruits of the Creation. Jam. 1. 18. Of his own will begat he us with his word of truth that we should be a kind of first fruits of his Creatures. Now there were several things observable in the first-fruits, As.

(First,) The first fruits, they were the choice of the fruits. And therefore God, that did ever require them to bring the best, would require them to bring the first-fruits of the Creatures. Believers are the first fruits of God's works. And God sets more value upon this workmanship than upon anything else beside. Other things they show some footsteps of God: but the new creature hath the very Image of God, and so is the first fruit of all. The first fruits are of a more higher price and esteem than any other. So are you: you are those that he calls his excellent ones. Those whom he binds up amongst his Jewels. The Saints are the desire of his eyes, and the joy of his heart. Christians, I speak this to you and you must apply it. You are the desire of Christ Psal. 4. 5. 11. He asks no other portion but you, Psal. 2. 8. And you are his delight as well as his desire. Prov. 8. The wisdom of the Father from all eternity, had his delight in the habitable part of the earth. Isaiah 53. He shall see his seed, and he shall see of the Travail of his soul and be satisfied. You are his seed, you are the Travail of his soul. Christ is content and satisfied to have this portion. And as the woman forgets her sorrow when she sees her seed, that a man child is born: so Christ forgets all his pain and trouble, when he sees his seed the travail of his soul.

(Secondly,) The first fruits were but few in number, in comparison of the full number and harvest. So 'tis here, the Saints are but few Thou art the fewest in number of all people, saith Moses to Israel: so may I say to you, you are as two or three Olives upon the uppermost boughs, or four or five upon the outmost branches. God's first fruits are but few. Ah Christian, stand still and admire free grace, that thou shouldst be one of this few. Christ doth manifest himself to you, and not to the world. He prays for you, and not for the world, you are a peculiar people to him. O what a little flock of kids hath Christ, in comparison of the herds and droves, and swarms that Satan drives before him to destruction! and art thou one of that number that stand with the lamb upon mount Zion? O how shouldst thou cause the praises of the Lord to be heard? they are but few of the number of mankind that are admitted into this grace wherein you stand. Therefore as you have special favor from God, engage in the praise of God.

(Thirdly,) The first fruits were holy to the Lord. These God did reserve for himself, as it were, for his own eating. As you know, the first fruits are preserved for to be presented to Kings at their table for their eating. So are you. Thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God, Psal. 4, <math>\langle \diamond \rangle. Know ye that the man that is Godly, God hath set apart for himself. God says as it were, set this man by for me. God says of his first fruits, these shall be set aside for me. These shall be mine, Mal. 3. 17. As God would put a special honor upon the Sabbath day above all other days, because upon this day he rested from his Labor: so you are the honor of all the Creation: because you are a people that God hath set apart for himself. Ah Brethren, here is your dignity and privilege above all people, that you are separate to the Lord: that you have special relation to him. This makes you to be above all other people, because the Sun of God's favor shines peculiarly upon you.

(Fourthly,) The first fruits were to be gathered into the Sanctuary, Deut. 26. God had in his Temple, the Chambers into which was to be gathered the first fruits, as peculiarly dedicated unto God. So we read, in Neh. 12. 44. Thus you are God's first fruits. And God will gather his first fruits into his Chambers, into his glory shortly. He shall gather his wheat into his garner, Math. 3. 12. Math. 13. 30. The husbandman there, (who is no other than God himself) he speaks to his servants, that they should let alone the tares for a season, and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, gather you together first the Tares, and bind them in bundles, and burn them but gather the wheat into my Barn. This harvest is the end of the world: and the angels are the reapers; and heaven is the barn; and you are the fruits, and God will send shortly, and gather you into his barn; when the wicked shall be turned into hell in bundles, they shall be cast into Tophet; but you shall be gathered into God's barn; into his glory. God do but stay awhile till the fruits be ripe and ready, and then you shall be all brought safe into his Treasury.

(Fifthly,) The first fruits were to be set before the Lord as a monument of his faithfulness, Deut. 26. 1. &c. Where you may observe these particulars. First, The first fruits, they were to be presented before the Lord as a thank-offering, so you. Secondly, The first fruits were to be brought to the priest, though you are the first fruits, yet you can expect nothing of God but at the hands of the priest, the Lord Jesus Christ. Thirdly, They were to be offered up with a thankful acknowledgement of God's mercy, and their former misery, the priest shall take the basket out of thine hand, and set it down before the altar of the Lord thy God; and thou shalt speak and say, A Syrian ready to perish was my Father, and he went down into Egypt and sojourned there with a few, and became there a Nation great, mighty, and populous. Fourthly, They were to be set before the Lord as a monument of his faithfulness: thus believers, my Brethren, they shall be taken by Christ, and presented by him unto God as a monument of his faithfulness. And thou shall profess before the Lord thy God, I am indeed come unto the Country concerning which the Lord sware unto me: surely the Lord is faithful in all that he hath promised: and there hath not one word failed of all that he hath said by the mouth of all his prophets.

Fourthly, You are the remnant of escape, 'tis Ezra's phrase. Brethren, you know that all mankind was interested in Adam: all in one common bottom. Adam miscarried and so all mankind is shipwrecked at once. And O how few are the number of those that escape! and art thou one of them? O how should you bless the Lord! methinks, you that God hath taken out of all the kindreds of the earth, you should run to God, as the several messengers to Job, Thy Sons and thy Daughters were eating and drinking wine, and the house fell upon them, and they are dead; and I only am escaped to tell thee. So should you say, oh so many of the Tribes of the earth are famished, and I am left alone to tell thee: to praise thee. O methinks so should the redeemed of the Lord compass him about. O methinks I should see you in the posture of those redeemed, lifting up your voices together as the voice of many waters. Oh Christians, look back to your former bondage. Do not forget the Egypt that you were in bondage in: and the bonds of your lu•...s, that you were held Captive in. O look back to the house of bondage and to the Iron furnace, the cruelty and tyranny from whence y•... have made your escape, and now lift up the praise of your Redeemer. How should you stand upon the brink and look down into the horrible pit from which God hath plucked you! Brethren, you all suffered in that common shipwreck; yet, as in the voyage of Paul, they all escaped safe to land, so God hath ordered you, that all that were with Jesus Christ are escaped. O methinks you are like the world full of corn, and in comes Satan, and mows down whole swarfs, and you are left as a single ear here and there upon a ridge. O remember •...ire and brimstone is coming down upon the world, and God hath laid his hand up you and made you escape, and provided a Zoar for you. O while you see the Egyptians drowned upon the shore and you escaped, how should you be much in praising the Lord? the deluge is coming down upon the world, and but one Ark of men shall be saved. And are you the men that God hath purposed to save? are you the men that God hath put forth his hand and took in? O •...less the Lord for this mercy.

Fifthly, You are the Burgesses of heaven. Heb. 12. 23. To the general assembly and Church of the first born, which are written in heaven. We read of a City that hath foundations; whose builder and maker is God, of that City art thou a Denizen. Thou art no more a stranger and forreigner but a fellow Citizen, and of the household of God: though heaven and earth are so distant in place, yet there is a real communio•... the Saints here are free burgesses of heaven. Christian, thou art the man, that art made free of heaven: and who art born free.

Sixthly, You are the members of Christ, we are members of his body; of his flesh and bone. Consider Christian, beleivest thou this? if thou dost, thou needest not be called u•...on to praise. O what to be a real member of Christ's living body! yet so 'tis. If thou be touched 'tis Christ suffers wrong. Saul, Saul, why ‹⋄› thou me? He is as tender of you as of a member of his own body: and as dear doth he love you. And as sure as he carried the members of his body into heaven, so sure will he carry thee. And as sure as the members of his natural body are glorified in heaven, so surely will he glorisie thee.

Sevently, You are the living stones of the Temple, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Thou art cut out of the common quarry with others, as rugged a stone as the rest: but thee hath God pitched upon and chosen to be a polished stone for his own building. When God hath left others he hath pitched on thee. Christian, it little matters though thou art undervalued of men; yet herein God hath honored thee, those that men rejected God hath made the chief of the building.

Now put all this together and see whether God hath not done much for you, you are the election of grace, the first born of God, the first fruits of the Creation, the remnant of escape, the Burgessesses of heaven, the members of Christ, the living stones of the Temple. O whence should God have praise if not from you? who should lift up his name if not you? but,

Secondly, Consider what God hath done for you as you are the inhabitants of Taunton in particular. Though the former should ever ring loudest and carry the principal part in your praise; yet the other may not be forgotten.

Now will I sing a song to my well-beloved, touching his vineyard, Isa. 5. 1. The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the Town of Taunton, and the inhabitants thereof his pleasant plant. And now I will tell you what God hath done for his vineyard. He hath plucked up the fence thereof, and yet it is not eaten up. Her hedges are broken down; yet they that pass by the way do not pluck her, nor the wild Boars of the sorrest eat her: nor the beasts of the field devour her. She is burnt with fire; and yet is not burnt up. O what hath God done for his vineyard here? O remember now, O people what the enemy consulted, and what the Lord answered; they said come let us curse Taunton and let us defy the people of God: But who shall curse whom the Lord hath not cursed? And $\langle \diamond \rangle$ whom the Lord hath not defied? God hath blessed, and who shall reverse it? happy art thou O people: who is like thee O Taunton, saved by the Lord the shield of thy power, the sword of this excellency? The archers have shot at thee, yet they have not hurt thee.

Shall I particularize the mercies of God to Taunton? why, consider he hath been a Savior to you: a shepherd to you: a keeper to you.

1. He hath been a Savior to you. He hath saved your throats from the sword, your habitations from the flames, your lives from the plague your persons from the prison. (1.) He hath saved your Throat from the sword, have you forgotten that you were a people devoted to destruction, by the sons of violence? but God disappointed them and gave you your lives for a prey.

(2.) Your habitations from the flames. The flames have been set in Ambush against you, and yet your habitations are not burnt down to this day.

(3.) Your lives from the plague. It hath been devoured by the plague heretofore, and yet it hath not devoured you. How eminently hath God preserved you in this place in the time of common calamity that hath been among others. O think not that it was because those were greater sinners than are in Taunton: No, but because God hath a peculiar intention of saving you. Yet I say to you as Christ...o them, think not that those upon whom the Tower in Siloam fell, were greater sinners than any in Jerusalem. I tell you nay, but except you repent ye shall all likewise perish. We have had the same sins, and yet God hath preserved us.

(4.) Your persons from the prison. How often hath God preserved you? he hath been like the cloud upon Israel: and upon all the glory there hath been a defense. Once indeed some of you have tasted of a prison: but what a mercy was it, that it was but once? I might tell you what a mercy 'tis to you, that you have not been troubled with the prelates Courts. but,

Secondly, God hath been a shepherd to you. Therefore you have not wanted. Who is it that drives you by the still waters, though you are as a lamb in a large place, 'tis because God is your shepherd Whence is it that you lie down in green pastures? 'tis because God is your shepherd. How hath God provided for you formerly and of late?

Thirdly, God hath been a keeper to you. When you were sent to prison God did keep you. O do not forget the mercies of a prison. I believe, that of all the passages of our lives, many of us have no such experience of God's mercy as in a prison. O the provision that God did make for us there! O the constant meals, the sweet meals that God did make for us there.

Brethren now let us thankfully commemorate all these mercies. Let me call upon you as the Psalmist, rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous; and again rejoice O ye people, let your voice be heard on high. Let us worship and fall down before the Lord our maker. Let it be said, praise waiteth for thee a God in Taunton. Well might praise wait for God in Taunton, for God hath waited to be gracious to us. There was the place that he chose to put his name there. There break $\langle \phi \rangle$ the Arrows and the spear. Who is like our God who rideth on the Heaven for our help, and on the sky for our aid? Blessed is the people that heareth the joyful sound, they shall rejoice in thee O Lord. The Lord is our deliverance, and the holy one of Israel is our King. Shout therefore, O inhabitants of Taunton, for great is the work of the Lord with you. And now, O Lord, Bless them, and accept the work of their hands, and lift them up: and let them lift thee up forever.

A Sermon preached in order to the Sacrament, on a Sacramental day.

Luke. 2. 10, 11.

And the angel said unto them, •...ear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings, of great joy, which shall be to all people.

For unto you is born this day in the City of David, a Savior which is Christ the Lord.

MY Brethren, good tidings, I know must needs be welcome to you at such a time as this. Now God hath sent me to you with the most blessed news that ever came to man: that is, that to you is born a Savior.

You have here the History of our Savior's birth. The shepherds, they were abroad in the fields watching over their flocks by night, v. 8. and while they were thus diligent in attending their stocks, then the angel brought this news to them. From whence observe by the way, how good it is to be following our lawful callings. The fruits of these tidings was great fear, that fell upon the shepherds when they saw the angel. And against this fear, the angel bid them be of good comfort. Then you have here, the news, behold I bring you good tidings &c. where you have observable. First, Th•...e •...senger; the Angel. Secondly, The fruits of it; great joy to all people.

Thirdly, The matter of this news; That to them was born a Savior. From the words observe this Doctrine.

Doct. That it is the blessedest news that ever came to the ears of man, news worthy of angels from God to be the Messengers of it, that unto us is come a Savior.

Brethren, I must needs commend the Grace of God to me this day, in making me the messenger of such news to you as this is. I am unworthy to bring you this news, it is for angels to bring this news, they were sent with this message, as you see; yet God hath been pleased to send me as a Messenger with these tidings to you. Now I shall show you that this is the best news that ever came to the ears of man, and that.

First, If you consider the deplorable condition that he found man in.

Secondly, If you consider what a great salvation he hath wrought for man.

First, If you consider the deplorable condition that he found us in, we were all gone out of the way: we had fallen among thieves; and between sin and Satan, we were robbed and wounded: and this Samaritan found us, and he cured us, and it cost him no less than his own blood. So desperate a disease is sin, that nothing will cure us, but the death of Christ. He found us shut up in sin, and were not able to get out; and then he roll'd away the stone for us, and knocked off our fetters, and wrought deliverance for us. This was the misery of man's condition, that he was in a helpless condition, Rom. 5. 6. There was no possibility for us ever to recover ourselves. Neither was there help in any other, beside Christ, Act. 4. 12. Heaven nor earth could not find out a way to deliver man, till God found out a way. And because heaven and earth could not find out a way, God and man must come together; and as he was God he must satisfy; and as he was man he must suffer; and so we must come out. He found us stinking in our grave as he did Lazarus. The stinking carrion doth not stink more than we did when Christ found us.

Secondly, If you consider what a great salvation he hath wrought for us. This will appear, if you consider from what he hath saved us; and how he hath saved us.

First, From what he hath saved us.

First, From the Roaring-Lion.

Secondly, From our raging-lusts.

Thirdly, From the •...ming furnace.

Fourthly, From the King of terrors.

First, From the roaring Lion. So is our adversary, the Devil called, 1 Pet. 5. 8. This is he that Christ hath delivered us from. We were all in the Paw of this lion, and Christ came and delivered us from him. This is the D•...vid that slew the lion, and the bear, and saved us, when we were like to be destroyed. When Satan did think to triumph over Christ, then did Christ triumph over him. Col. 2. 15. All the powers of hell did combine together, and labored to give Christ the overthrow; they had brought him to the cross, and there triumph over him, and thought that then they had done all; and yet then did he overthrow them. Oh! what a mercy is this, to be delivered (not only from the bondage of Egypt, but) from the spiritual Egypt! Col. 1. 13. Who hath deliveed us from the power of darkness &c. My Brethren, we were fast shut up in prison, in the prison of which Satan was the Jailor: and there was no possibility of getting loose from him. We were laid up as slaves under him, and were led captive by him at his will. Now what praise do we owe to him, that hath delivered us from such a Tyrant as this! this is our deliverance, (Act. 26. 18.) to be turned from the power of Satan unto God. This hath Christ done for us: he hath delivered us from the power of Satan. We were once in his family, and did his work, Eph. 2. 2, 3. Eph. 6. 12. They are called the rulers of the darkness of this world. That is, poor ignorant souls, that were lying in our ignorance. And that not some of us only, but all of us.

Secondly, From our raging lusts. As from the slavery of Satan, so from the dominion of sin. Rom. 6. 14. By Christ we are freed from the dominion of sin. My brethren, Christ doth not only free us from the damnation, but from the, dominion of sin. To be the servant of sin, is a most miserable slavery. What a mercy is it to be delivered from a master, whose work is drudgery; and whose wages is destruction! such a one is Satan. Would it not have pitied us to have seen the poor man in the Gospel, going up and down among the tombs, and doing nothing but cutting and wounding himself? such a one is every unsanctified person: they go up and down wounding of themselves. And though they feel not their wounds that sin gives them, yet there is a day coming, when (conscience being awakened) they will seel it. Do you know, my brethren, what the work is that sin sets us upon? it is to destroy ourselves, John 8. the Jews, they plead that they were free; and what did our Savior tell them of making them sree? Oh! but they were servants to their lusts, which was the greatest slavery, my brethren, to be under the power of a man's lusts, is a most perfect slavery. Do but look upon a sinner that hath an enlightened conscience, and see how he rends and tears, and is in a worse condition than the most woofull galley-slave that is in the world. And then he vows and covenants against his sin, and then his sin eggs him on again, and then to his conscience falls upon him. Oh, this is a sad condition! now this Christ hath delivered us from. Sin will be in us, but Christ hath promised that it shall not reign in us. And this is the blessed deliverance he hath wrought in us; and this he will perfect at the last day. And by the way, you may see and try whether you have any part in Christ or no. Why how may we know it? are you delivered from your sins? though sin be in you, is it there against your consent? if so, you are they whom Christ died for. But if it be in you in its dominion, you have no part nor portion in this matter. A man were better be the most perfect galleyslave in the world, than to be under the power of sin. Now this Christ hath delivered you from.

Thirdly, From the slaming furnace. This is another thing that Christ hath delivered you from. If the furnace heated to show the terribleness of Nebuchadnezzar's rage was so hot, that it burnt up those that cast in the three children; how hot is the surnace of the Almighty God, that is kindled by him, great rivers of brimstone running out into it, and the breath of the Lord doth kindle it? Oh, you know not what 'tis to be damned! you may know what 'tis to be sick or the like; but you know not what this word DAMNATION means. 2 Thes. 1. 8, 9. In $\langle\phi\rangle$ fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, &c. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. When we see wicked men under the Terrors of conscience, how do they wish for death, that they might know what their torment is? as Spira, and William Rogers. Oh, can you tell what this terrible furnace is? this is that which Christ, hath delivered us from. When I consider what this gul•... is, I c•...not but wonder at my own and others stupidity, that we are not ever! ever, praising the Lord! if the terror of the Lord be so great, that when he doth let out but a drop of it upon a poor creature, how terrible is all that wrath, the treasure of that wrath that is laid up for the ungodly! Rom. 2. 5. 8. 9. Jam. 5. 3. Those wicked rich men, there, they had, as they thought, heaped up treasures of riches by oppressing the poor: but the Apostle tells them they heaped up treasures of wrath. And this we were all born to, had not Christ cut off the entail. O man, woman, canst think of burning forever in the fire of the Lord's wrath, and not be praising the Lord that thou art yet out of hell? O bless the Lord, that delivered thee from so great a death: and hath endured such torments that thou mayst be set free. He did bear the rod of God's wrath that thou mayst be saved to all eternity. If Christ had not been, where had we been! as the Son of God, coming among the three children, saved them from burning; so 'tis here: 'tis Christ's coming hath said us from burning in this <◇> surnace. How terrible this furnace is, you may see, Rev. 14. 10. The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of h•... indignation, and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever. And they have no rest day nor night. O methinks the very sight of this surnace at a distance should startle our Souls, and make us list up our hands, and eyes, and souls and praise the Lord. O methinks we that are the redeemed of the Lord, we should stand together about the pit, and look down, and list up our hearts and praise the Lord.

Fourthly, From the King of terrors. He hath saved you, as from the Devil, so from Death. You know death is the mortal enemy of man, 'tis his great and last enemy: and now this enemy hath Christ destroyed, and delivered us from. And that both from the sting and victory of it.

(First,) From the sting of death. He hath not delivered us from the stroke of death, but he hath from the sting of death. When the sting is out, the serpent may hiss, but he cannot sting. Death will put you into the possession of that which Christ hath provided for you: so that death now is become desirable, now there is beauty in it. There is no friend can do that for you, that death can do. It will at once deliver you from sin and Satan, and give you a possession in heaven. The Apostle, looking upon death through Christ, longs for death: having a desire to depart &c. Phil. 1. 23. This great robber, through Christ is become our greatest gain. That which would have mar'd us for ever, will now make us forever. O that this King of terrors should become desirable, what a mercy is this! O my beloved, did you know what the terrors of death be to an enlightened sinner, you would account it a great privilege to be sree from the sting of death. When all his comforts are taking their everlasting farewell of him, you would account it a great salvation then. When he shall feel death putting in his cold hands, and pulling out his heart, when he s•...ail see his house of his body falling down about his ears, and he cannot stay there any longer: and he sees the hell-hounds stand about him and waiting upon him to carry him to Hell, O what horror doth this work upon his heart! this hath Christ delivered us from. Death hath lest its sting in Christ, it can hurt us no longer.

(Secondly,) From the victory of death. It is true we must lie in the grave for some time; yet Christ will fetch us thence, in John. 6. He promiseth no less than four times, I will raise them up at the last day. And this is the fruit of his purchase, 1 Thes. 4. 14. Christ's resurrection is a certain pledge of ours, so 1 Cor. 15. Therefore let us not fear death, but embrace it with comfort: for death cannot touch our souls: it cannot deliver us over into the second death. He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death. Therefore let us not fear death, but let our flesh rest in hope. When we die, we may commit our bodies to the dust with comfort: it cannot hurt our souls; and it shall keep our bodies but a little while neither. God will receive our souls immediately; & our bodies after a little while. How doth Job comfort himself in this? I know that my redeemer liveth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, &c. Thus may we triumph over death, that in this flesh we shall see God. And though death for the present do make such work upon us, and cast us into the grave, yet the earth will be but the mould wherein we shall receive a glorious body, so that death shall conduce to our great advantage. This is no little victory, to be able to triumph with the Apostle. O death, where is thy victory? This is no small privilege. Bless your redeemer for this privilege. What a privilege well this be, when all the Sons and daughters of God shall be brought forth and made to stand up before him? then it shall appear that the grave was not able to hold them. Then will they triumph, and sing songs of salvation, when they shall set their feet upon their last enemy, death.

Secondly, It will appear what blessed news this is, if you consider, how he hath saved you. He hath saved you two ways, by might, and by merit.

•...irst, By merit, Brethren, your salvation cost your redeemer dear, no less a price than his own invaluable blood. O believer, look upon thyself, art not thou a worthless thing to be redeemed with the price of Christ's blood? O how should we admire the goodness of Christ here? we are not worthy that Christ <◇> s...end one of his thoughts upon us, much less that he should spend his blood for us.

Seconly, By might, my brethren, it was absolutely requisite for our salvation, that our redeemer. as he should be of infinite merit, so of infinite might. If he had not been of infinite merit, he could never have been purchaser of heaven for us. The soul of one man is more worth than a whole world: and then what worth or value must that be of, that is able to buy a world of souls? and yet this purchaser must be able to buy heaven too: and this hath Christ done for us. Could heaven and earth have done this? no, no, it would have broken them all if they had done it. But now Christ hath done all for us: and therefore he must be of infinite merit. And not infinite in merit only but might too: for he was to bear all the wrath of God, and to bring us off with victory. If the wrath of God's finger be so intolerable, that it makes poor creatures to cry out under it, what is the wrath of his loins? and if the wrath of God against one man is so great, what is his wrath against so many men?

When the price was laid down, the devil would not yield up his hold, till Christ must come and cast him down, and pluck us from him. And therefore it was necessary that our redeemer should be of infinite power. He hath destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the devil. Ah brethren, we may behold the Lord Jesus Christ upon the cross, bowing himself as Sampson did, and pulling down the house about his enemies, and carrying away the posts and all, and setting us free. This is our Sampson that hath carried all away, and destroyed our enemies for us. The price was sufficient to satisfy the justice of God for us: but when the price was paid, and paid to God; then Satan would not let us go: and therefore he must be overcome too.

First Use, Is it such blessed news that to us is born a Savior? then my brethren, let this stir you up to Joy and thankfulness for this salvation. O let me hear you say with Mary, my soul doth magnify the Lord, my Spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior, Luke 1. 46. Brethren, methinks you should now meet your redeemer with songs of salvation. Methinks you should come forth to meet him, as they did Saul and David, when they returned from their victory, the women came out, singing and dancing &c. and they answered one another as they played, saying, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands. Thus should you meet your Redeemer. You should go forth to meet him as Miriam and the women with her with timbrels and with dancings, and sing unto the Lord, Exod. 15. 20. 21. Oh brethren, with what joyful heart should you welcome Jesus Christ your Savior! this is glad •...idings to all them that are saved by him. Blessed be God that giveth us cause to triumph in him. 'Tis true, in many other things it goes sad with us: but here is cause always for us to •...o triumph in Christ, for the Spiritual deliverance that he hath wrought for you; which is a sure pledge that Christ will deliver you in outward respects. How blessed a time was the year of Jubile to the slaves that were in bondage how did they reckon every day and week till it came? how glad was that sound that sounded their deliverance? methinks I see the prison doors open, and the prisoners running out and crying, salvation to our God. O methinks nothing but the songs of salvation should be heard in your tabernacles. O let not complaining be heard for outward calamities. What are those outward flea-bitings to that which our Savior hath delivered us from? go home and bless the Lord: and what ever ill news you hear, let this comfort your heart that Christ hath made such a deliverance for you.

Second Use, Is it such blessed news &c. then this reproves our unthankfulness for Christ, and the news of Christ in the Gospel. Oh brethren, how is it that the praise of our redeemer is no more in our hearts, and no more heard in our mouths? how is it that we can be so unmindful of, and •...thankful for this Savior? hath God sent us •... Savior, and shall not we be thankful for him? It is a great sin to be unthankful for his creatures; but how much more to be unthankful for his Christ? he hath given you Christ, and what can he give you more? how is it that you are so seldom in blessing the Lord for this mercy? bless the Lord, O my soul, (saith David) and forget not all his benefits: that is, none of his benefits. If God had given you all this worlds goods, and had not given you Christ, what would it have done for you? what had it been, but a smooth and pleasant way to hell? what if the Lord had given you honor, and made your brethren's sheaf to bow before yours, and had not given you Christ; what good would it have done you? if a man were condemned at London, to be hanged drawn and quartered, and were to be brought down into the Country to be executed, and all his way should be strowed with rushes, and he attended with Musicians, what would all this have done him? O what should we have done, if Christ had had not step'd in and s•...ved us! none could have redeemed man but Christ. Heaven and Hell, and the Earth and the Sea would have said it is not in me: all the things in the world could never have satisfied for our sins. Wilt thou look to thy brethren? wilt thou look to the angels; they could not do it. The Spirits of just men made perfect could not save themselves: none could do it but Christ: and can you be unmindful of this? the Heavens and the Earth will be astonished at this, if you are not thankful for it.

There are two things that will heighten this •...in.

First, Because Christ hath given you so many helps to it.

Secondly, Because thankfulness is all that he expects from us.

First, Because he hath given us so many helps. All the calls and invitations of the Gospel are as so many helps to this duty. But more than these, he hath appointed a special day, and a special ordinance.

First, A special day. The Sabbath day. Wherefore was this day changed? but that you may be mindful of this mercy?

(Secondly,) A special Ordinance. The Sa•... of the Supper is appointed upon this account that we might remember this mercy to our souls.

Secondly, It is much aggravated by this, because this is all that he expects from you, for all that he hath suffered for you. Christ hath done and suffered beyond all you can conceive, or I can express to you: and what Homage doth he now expect from you? nothing but that you should be thankful to him. And will you be unthankful now for this mercy? This is that he expects by way of requital and return, that you be thankful, Had the Lord required some great thing of you, or some hard condition, if he would have died for you and redeemed you, would you not have done it? and how much more, now he hath done it, and and requires no more but this, that you be thankful? had you lain but one million of years in hell, with what gladness would you have heard that sound, that he would have redeemed you? would you have stood upon the terms? no, no, any terms then should have served.

Third Use, Then prepare to receive your Savior. Oh if he be come, take heed that you receive him in. Let him not complain of you as he did of his native Country-men the Jews, that he came unto his own, and his own received him not. When this news come, that there was a Savior born, one would have thought that all the world should have received him with triumph: but there was no room for him in all the world, but he was thrust out in the m•...nger. Let it not be so with you.

Question, But how shall we receive him? I shall show you whither and how.

First. Whither you shall receive him. receive him into your hearts; not in your stal, as he was at first, but into your parlor, into your hearts. Your parlor, is but a stable. Thou mayst wonder that Christ will accept of thy heart, send the key of your hearts to Christ, let him take his choice where to lie: give him the upper room in your hearts.

Secondly, How, or after what manner you should receive him.

(First,) As the Centurion did, humbly. I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof. So should you receive him, with a deep sense of your everlasting unworthiness. Receive him with a lively sense of your sins, that you have wronged him. This is a right receiving of Christ, when he is received penitently. Thus did that woman entertain him: and Christ liked better of this, than of the Pharisee. Luke 7. She received Christ in her heart. This is the entertainment, that he is well pleased with: receive him thus, and this will be acceptable to him. Though thou hast nothing at all in thee, but the sense of thy nothingness, Christ will be sure to accept of this.

(Secondly,) Receive him, as •...cheus did, Joyfully, When Christ called him down from the tree, and told him that salvation was come to his house, how glad was the man's heart? Luke 19. O methinks I see with what unspeakable joy he received him. He thought not of Christ's coming to his house: his highest ambition was that he might have a sight of Christ: and Christ sees and takes notice of it, and tells him that Salvation was come to his house. O methinks, I should see thee looking as he did, when Christ will come this way where thou art. Why, now he is come in his ordinances, now receive him joyfully, take him into thy heart. Let thy joy break out, as the waters of Jordan did; or as when the Lord broke up the fountain of the great deep. Brethren, one would think, that one should need no arguments to persuade miserable captives to receive a Savior. O how welcome would such offers be to them that are in captivity? Brethren, if ever you have seen your lost condition without Christ, you cannot but receive him when he is offered to you. O methinks this Name of JESUS should be marrow to your bones, and wine to your hearts, and Music to your ears. Oh as God hath, so do you. give him a name above every name. This blessed name, the name of Jesus, methinks it should be as oynment poured forth upon you, giving a sweet smell.

Thirdly. Receive him as old Simeon did, believingly. You must clasp the arms of your faith about him. O how sweetly did old Simeon clasp him in his arms? but you must think that he did clasp him more gladly in his heart. If you will but entertain him, Christ and Salvation come to everyone in this house.

Fourthly, Take him submissively. So as to be subject to him. He hath wrought out Salvation for you; therefore let him rule over you.

A Thanksgiving Sermon, preached on the 10th. of July, 1665. at Mr. R. M's by Mr. Joseph Alleine, &c.

Psalm 147. 20.

He hath not dealt so with any Nation — praise ye the Lord.

The sweet Psalmist of Israel, a man skilful in praises, doth begin and end this Psalms with Allelujah. In the body of the psalm he doth set forth the mercy of God, both toward all creatures in general in his common providence; and towards his Church in particular. So in this close of the psalm: He showeth his word unto Jacob, and his statutes to Israel He hath not dealt so with any nation. In the original, 'tis he hath not dealt so with every nation. That is, with $\langle \phi \rangle$ nation.

In the Text you may observe a position, and a conclusion. A position. And that is, that God deals in a singular way of mercy with his people above all other people. And then the Conclusion, praise ye the Lord.

Doct. That God deals in a singular way of mercy with his people, and therefore expects singular praises from his people.

God expects of his people, return of praise according to the mercy that they have received. $\langle \phi \rangle$, was a man not altogether forgetful of the mercy of God; yet he rendered not according to the benefit he had received from God. Christ expects that (Math. 5. 47.) his disciples should do more than others: that seeing they do receive more from him in a way of mercy they should return him the more praise and glory.

The Application (my Brethren) is unto you. If God do expect that his people should do more than others, see that you do accordingly. Let this be a provocation to you, my Brethren, to lift up your hearts and voices in the praises of the Lord. What people doth the Lord expect such returns from, as from this people? he hath not dealt so with any people, therefore he expects praises from you more than from any other people. Therefore consider with me what the Lord hath done for you more than for any others. If we look upon ourselves as common members of the nation, and so God hath done more for us than for any others. Or if we look upon ourselves with reference to the particular place to which we belong, and so God hath done more for us than he hath done for others, or, if we look upon ourselves as to our particular persons, God hath dealt with us so, as he hath not dealt with any other people.

First, Let us look upon the mercies of God to us and the nation in common. Surely we may say with the Psalmist, he hath not dealt so with any nation. This is a land which he hath set his heart upon, and watch... over it from one end of the year to the other. I will not speak of the outward mercies of this nation, though we have a Land flowing with milk and $\langle \phi \rangle$. I will speak to spiritual blessings. Oh, let it be remembered by us what spiritual mercies we have had! how soon did the Lord plant the Gospel with us? and how long hath it continued to us? what would the world have been without the Gospel? what is the world without the Sun, but the beginning of Hell as it were? I may say of you blessed are your eyes, for they see: and blessed are your ears, for they hear. Psa. 89. 15. Blessed are the people that hear the joyful sound, they shall walk in the light of his countenance, and in his name shall they rejoice. None can tell what a blessing the Gospel is. Blessed be God who hath brought to light immortality through the Gospel. Oh! think upon our fathers who went into the land of forgetfulness by thousand's and had none to teach them. And how long hath the Gospel continued here? we have it from good History, that in the primitive times the Gospel was planted here. And when the Gospel was again clouded by the invasion of the bloody Saxons, that were heathens, God was pl•... to send Ministers again to propagate the Gospel, which was about 600 years after Christ, when Austin was sent over from Rome. ⟨ϕ⟩ after, God raised up famous preachers of the Gospel.

And though God was pleased to suffer another cloud to cover the Gospel, when Antichrist prevailed; God raised up from one time to another, some to testify against him, and to seal it with their blood.

But I ⟨ϕ⟩ more particularly speak of these ⟨ϕ⟩ mercies of God to our nation. God hath made this nation signal in mercy. First, In the multitude of her converts. Secondly, In the honor of her ⟨ϕ⟩. Thirdly, In the Crown of ⟨ϕ⟩. Fourthly, The glory of her Ministers. Fifthly, Her singular and choice deliverances.

⟨ϕ⟩, In the ⟨ϕ⟩ of her converts. Herein God hath blessed this n•...tion above other n•...tions, an•... herein we have cause to bless the Lord. There is but little of the profession of Godliness in other nations, to what there is in this n•...tion, ⟨ϕ⟩ a great glory to any place or people to have a multitude of converts born to God out of it. This was the commendation of those places, that this, and that man was born there, Ps•...lm 87. 4, 5, 6. This is cause of singular joy and praise which they were wont to sing to the Lord in those days with instruments of Music.

Secondly, In the honor of her Sabbaths. This is that, my Brethren, where in the Lord hath vouchsafed singular favor to this nation Oh, bless God for honoring this nation with his Sabbaths as he hath done: that they should be so sa•...ctised as they be. Nehemiah reckoneth this as a singular mercy of God to them. So Isaiah 58. 13. Thou shalt call the Sabbath a delight, and shalt honor it. If you honor them, they will be an honor and blessing to you.

Thirdly, In the Crown of her Martyrs. Ah Brethren, this is the Crown of glory upon the head of England, that God should raise up so many Martyrs in this kingdom, of our flesh, and kindred: that there should be so many caught up like Elijah in siery Chariots to heaven. Who can tell of what effect their prayers and blood hath been for our good? so that according to that holy prophesic of Latimer, when going to the stake, God hath lighted up such a light by this as shall never be put out.

Fourthly, In the glory of her ministers. Brethren, I confess myself not worthy to speak to you of the worth of this mercy. However vain men have accounted them the off-scouring of the world, &c. yet you whose hearts are touched with the sense of spiritual blessings, you must needs know and understand, the Ministers of Christ not only to be the glory of the nation, but are so far honored as to be said to be the glory of Christ, 2 Cor. 8. 23. Oh, bless the Lord this day, that he hath blessed this nation with such an unspea•... bl•...ssing. Do not undervalue such a mercy. Tis a Cov•...ant-gift of Christ to his Church. He gave some Apostles some Pastors and Teachers. And 'tis part of the grand Legacy that Christ hath bequeathed to believers in the Gospel; ⟨ϕ⟩ Paul or Apollo all are yours. And though God hath now observed this mercy ye we may not forget former mercies. Neither hath God l•...t them unuseful, you know, neither to your nor others souls. In this respect I may boldly say, God hath not dealt so with any ⟨ϕ⟩. Those that have had experience intravelling other Countries have sadly bewailed this, how little heat and vigor there is in the labor of the Ministers abroad, in other nations for the most part.

Fifthly, In her singular and choice deliverances. Herein hath God dealt with us signally. I would that all those mercies might be remembered by us this day to our forefathers: for they were our mercies though not in our days. Oh, what a mercy was it that God did deliver us from the Spanish invasion; This mercy was our mercy and therefore we may not forget it. And then when they thought to do that by plot, what they could not do by force in the powder-plot, when they were like to cut o... the ⟨⟩ of our nation at one blow. God was pleased you know to prevent it just at the nick of time, and bring it upon their own heads Oh, what cause have we to bless the Lord, who saved us from so cruel a bondage, as neither we nor our fathers were able to bear? Oh forget not such a mercy wherein God hath broken the yoke and brought in that light that h... hath commanded into the nation.

Secondly, If we come nearer, & look upon the Place of our desires, you shall find that he hath not dealt so with any other place. If you consider it, in the long ⟨⟩ of your Ministry. The powerful success of the Gospel. In the peace and unity of its professors. In the plenty and variety of its provision. In the strange preservation of your liberty. In s...ving you by your enemies Counsel. In emin...nt and gracious returns of your prayers. in keeping you from the Ecclesiastical Courts. In your glorious Salvations and deliverances. Put these nine things together, and tell me whether God ⟨⟩ dealt so with any place as with this place.

First, In the long continuance ⟨⟩ your Ministry. Forty years was God striving with Isracl, but many more years hath God been striving with Taunton i... the powerful preaching of the Gospel. We read of God's coming the first and s...cond year, and ⟨⟩ no f...uit, would have cut it down the third, had not ⟨⟩ dressor prayed sor it. But 'tis not three years, but threescore years that God hath come waiting on Taunton, notwithstanding all their praying, and their great unprofitableness for the greatest part of them. I beseech you think of it. Is it a little mercy? there are many of you that have been born and bred under the powerful preaching of the Gospel. Look upon many other places, and how many may you see left to blind guides? Oh, bless God that you have not been bred up under such Ministers, and in such places. It was the lot of many, and it might have been your lot to have been brought up there.

How many places may you look upon again, where there have been excellent Ministers, and they have been flocked to from all about: but God hath put out those lights, and now if you come there, you shall scarce find the very foot steps of Religion. And God might have done so to you, but God hath sent you one Minister after another, one out of one Country, another out of another for you. Oh bless the Lord for it.

Secondly, In the powerful success of the Gospel. True it is, and sadly to be bewailed, the Gospel hath not had so desired an efficacy: but however, we must not forget God's signal and singular mercy to this place, in that he hath brought so many to the profession of his Gospel. Oh, how many Parishes are there where professors are so thin, that they are for signs and wonders, to be pointed at? Oh bless the Lord that he hath cast your lines in that place, where there are so many to strengthen your hands. How doth David bemoan himself in the want of this mercy, that he dwelt in the tents of Kedar! you might have lived out in those places and Parishes where you might have had none to help you.

Thirdly, In the peace and unity of its professors. Here in God hath been singular in his mercy. This is a mercy not slightly to be valued. Do but look abroad into other Cities and Towns, and see what work there hath been by the breaches that have been made one upon another. Oh, do but consider the mischief of strife and contention, and you will be raised to praise, Jam. 3. 16. Where envying and strife is, there is every evil work. Oh bless the Lord that the hearts of believers have been made one in this place, Psal. 133. 1. How good and beautiful is it to see Brethren dwell together in unity? bless the Lord you his people, because the Lord hath blessed his people with peace.

Fourthly, In the plenty and variety of its provision. Oh remember this this day, and forget not how God hath provided for you all along: and that at that day, when you did account that all was cut off. How little did we dream of such a mercy? had any told us then of these things, we should have replied as that Lord did, behold if the Lord would make windows in heaven might this thing be? Ah Brethren, should it have been told you beforehand that for so many years after that fatal day you should spend so many Sabbaths in the worship of God, and so many Sermons in one Sabbath and so many Ministers sent to you, and so many Sacraments to feed you as you have had, you would have been ready to say, if the Lord should open windows in heaven could this thing be? and yet all this God hath done for you. Oh bless the Lord for this mercy.

Fifthly, In the strange preservation of your Liberty. Herein hath God been singular in his mercy to you; hath not Christ fulfilled his word to you, he that loseth his life for my sake, (so he that loseth his liberty for my sake) shall it? you have hazarded your liberties and have •...ept them. Many have declined their duty to preserve their liberty: but blessed be God that you have adventured your liberty and God hath kept you in safety. Indeed, I can give you no time of your liberty: but I can assure you that if you lose it sor him, you shall by your loss. Methinks Christ says to us as to his disciples, wh... I s...nt you forth without shoes or scrip, ye anything? and they said, nothing: so here, when you have gone forth adventuring your liberties for Christ, have you lost them? you say, no.

Sixthly, I... s...rving you by your Counsel.•...ow visibly hath God turned what the enemy intended sor •...vil, to be good to us? so we may say as Joseph to his Br...thren, as for you you th...ght •...vil to me, but God meant it for good. You know how they have despitefully removed the Magistracy of the place, but behold how much the Lord hath turned it for your good! had they set up a Magistracy, it had been the loss of your liberty. They had a spiteful eye upon you; and it was thought that long ago would have been too hot for her inhabitants; & yet behold what freedom and liberty we have lived in! behold, men curse, but God hath blessed us the more. Oh, how strange a thing is this that you should eat and drink in peace! and go forth and come in in peace! that you should attend the ordinances in peace.

Seventhly, In eminent and gracious returns to your prayers. Brethren, this is not to be forgotten this day. Returns of prayer, do certainly call for great returns of praise. It hath been observed by those that have been longer with you, than I, that they never remember that God was earnestly sought unto for any particular mercy in this place but he did send a visible return; except once, when if God had sent you an answer according to your prayer, it had been the hazzarding of the people of God in this place. So that I may say to you, what people is like to you, who have God so near unto you in all that you have $\langle \diamond \rangle$ upon him for?

Eighthly, In keeping you from the ecclesiastical Courts. This is a mercy that we should be mindful of. Indeed all along the Church malignant, have been one of the persecuting enemies of the Church of God. Witness the Scribes and Pharisees. Witness the $\langle \diamond \rangle$, who were all along the stirrers up of men against the Church. And so in divers $\langle \diamond \rangle$ men of late. Nay, and at this day, through the rigor of these Courts, especially in other Counties, many stand excommunicated: many are threatened with Writs, and some taken and cast into prison for term life, unless God raise some unexpected means. Now of all places one would have thought that we should have been dragged to prison by them. And yet you see how God hath preserved us.

Ninthly, In your glorious Salvations and deliverances. Oh, my Brethren remember and forget not the dealings of God with this place. Let God hear of it throughout your praises now his day, what he hath done for you, in saving you with such wonderful Salvation. The Sword, and Famine, and Plague, and Fire have been upon you to consume you; and yet you are here to bless the Lord at this day, methinks the Lord calls upon you as in Micah. 6. 5. O my people, remember now what Balaak King of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the Son of Beor answered him, from Shittim unto Gilgal, that you might know the righteousness of the Lord. Such is the Language of the Lord to you. Remember now what thine enemies consulted against thee: how they had gathered themselves against thee and besieged thee, and did resolve to devour thee with thy children, and not to leave thee one stone upon another. O remember my people when your houses were on fire, and the Plague in the street, and the widows crying, and the children fatherless crying. Ah! pitiful condition. O remember now how I have helped thee, that thou mightest know that I am the Lord thy Savior.

Thirdly, If we come yet nearer, and look upon ourselves with reference to our particular persons, as we are Christians, and so God hath done more for us than he hath done for any others beside, therefore praise you the Lord.

And here I am in such a field that I know not the way out, you are the members of Christ, the children of your father which is in heaven: what hath God done for you! O you that fear the Lord, praise the Lord. You may stand amazed to see what the Lord hath wrought for your souls. This is the Life of all, when you can remember the everlasting loving kindness of God to you. O friends consider now, you that are the Lord's peculiar people; consider what God hath done for you above all other people.

Consider he hath made you, the people of his choice. The pillars of his name. The vessels of his glory. The Temples of his presence. The Trumpets of his praise. The men of his Counsel. The Jewels of his Crown. The Inheritors of his Kingdom. Herein God hath done more for you than for others: and should not you do more than others? look upon these things, and see then whether you should not do more for God than others.

First, You are the people of his choice, when others are but the refuge. You are the pillars of his name, when others are but broken and useless pot-sheards. You are the vessels of his glory, when others are the vessels of his wrath. You are the Temples of his presence, when others are the styes of uncleanness. You are the Trumpets of his praise, when others are the instruments of unrighteousness. You are the men of his Counsel, when others are strangers and Aliens. You are the Jewels of his Crown, when others are but the dross and lumber. You are the Inheritors of his Kingdom, when others are the Sons of perdition. Look over these things, and see what God hath done for you more than he hath done for others.

But methinks, I see something that will spoil and damp all. Oh, says the poor soul, I am afraid that this is not my right. I should bless •...he Lord indeed were I sure that all this were mine. How shall I know that this is my condition?

Now lest unbelief and distrust should damp your Joy, and spoil your work of praise, let me show you to whom I speak: and let you know, how you may know that you are those that I speak to. Let me show you in two marks, whereby you may come certainly to know it: you may know it by your Cares..., and by your Comforts. What is your chief care and your chief comfort? look upon yourselves and judge of yourselves by these two marks.

First, By your Cares. Brethren, what is the chief care of your heart? what is it that lies with most weight upon your heart? or that you do prosecute with most care in your life? you are the people of God if this be your great care, to please God, eschew sin, and save yourselves. If this be your great care, then you are the men. Methinks this should not be so hard to be discerned. Dost thou not know what is the main scope and drift of thy life?

First, To please God. If this be your great endeavor whether you are present or absent, alone or in company, that you may please God, this is the true disposition of God's servants. Do you study to watch over your hearts as in God's sight? and carry it in your lives as of sincerity and in the sight of God? 2 Cor. 1. 12. and 2. 17. Is your labor of love, and work of saith (that is, working faith) and your patience of hope (in bearing the Cross) not in vain-glory but in sincerity? do you study so to walk as to approve your hearts to God, that you endeavor to please him? that you might do those things that are pleasing in his sight? then know and be assured that you are the people to whom this doth belong. If God say well done, you have your hearts desire, let the world say what they will to you.

Secondly, To •...chew sin. This was Jobs character, that he was a man fearing God and •...chewing sin, Job 1. 8. This was David's mark, that he did not regard iniquity in his heart Psalm 66. 8. This was that did comfort Paul, as the sure evidence of his sincerity, though he did evil many times, being overtaken with temptation, yet he allowed it not, Rom. 7. 18. Brethren, what is your greatest fear? do you study duty more than safety? do you fear sin more than danger? do you keep up a constant watch against sin, all sin, little sins, secret sins, heart sins, especially are you afraid of your constitution-sin, your sweet sin? And do you prosecute against this with double diligence?

Thirdly, To save your souls. This was Paul's care, 1 Cor. 9. latter end. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly: so fight I, not as one that be...eth the Air: but I keep under my body and bring it into subjection lest that by any means when I have preached to others I myself should be a cast away. He was one that was in good earnest he did run as one in a race: and fight as one for his life: and all lest he should come short of that salvation, that he had preached to others. So Phil. 3. 13, 14. One thing I do — I press toward the mark for the price of the high-calling. His eye was upon the Crown of Life. And this is so far from sinful mercenariness, that 'tis made the condition of eternal Life: that they are such who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory honor, immortality; eternal Life, Rom. 2. 7. Now Brethren, what say you to this? what is your great care, and what is your great enquiry that you enquire after? Is it what shall I do to be rich or great? Is it with the carnal company, who will show us any good? any outward good, a good bargain or the like, or with him, Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. And with the convert in the Acts, Sir, what must I do to be saved? how shall I secure my soul? what can you say to this! Do you first and above all seek the Kingdom of God?

Secondly, As you may know it by your cares. so by your comforts. Is it the great comfort of your lives to converse with God? and is he your portion and treasure? a man's treasure may be known by his heart. Is it that that doth yield the sweetest comfort and content to your hearts? are your sweetest hours, the hours that you spend with God? do you never more enjoy yourselves, than when you most enjoy God. And is this your ordinary frame, except in a time of temptation, or under desertion? and when 'tis otherwise are you out of your center, and cannot be quiet till you be otherwise? Is God your refuge and riches, your portion, your principal choice, your Treasure? and do you bless yourselves in him? can you say there is more gladness in your hearts, in the favor and enjoyment of God, than when the Corn and Wine and Oil increaseth? do you indeed prefer a day in his Courts, before a thousand in the pleasures of the wicked, and tents of wickedness? If it be thus with you habitually, then you bear upon you the certain characters of God's people. And rejoice you with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and boast yourselves in him: for all the things that I shall speak of, belong to you. And now if you find it thus with you, then apply to yourselves these following comforts. And bless yourselves in your God, he hath done more for you, than for any others.

First, You are the people of his choice, when others are but the refuse. O my Brethren, I may say to you, as God said to Israel by Moses, Deut. 7. 6. For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God, the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people to himself, above all people of the earth. This is your case, I beseech you Christians, erect you faith, and let not your consideration be idle. Hear him speaking thus to you, as in Exod. 19. 5. You shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people, for all the earth is mine. Ah, beloved I must call upon you to rejoice in the Lord: and again must I call upon you to rejoice: and lift up your heads before the Lord; you are the chosen vessels of the Lord. What! will you hear these things with low Affections and common hearts. Do you believe or do you not? If you do not, why are you called Christians? If you do, Oh what an ecstasy of Joy should your hearts be raised too? Oh look upon the miserable condition of the perishing world, the reprobate world! look down, and see what burnings do betide them! better for them that they had never been born. And shall it but a little affect you that God hath separated you from them all? I may say of you, as the Apostle doth with thankfulness of his Thessalonians, 2 Thess. 2. 13. We are bound to give thanks to God for you Brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to Salvation. Oh how should you bless the Lord for his eternal purpose, which he purposed toward you, Eph. 1. 4. O let sree grace now be exalted, hath God made you. (I mean believers) to be the choice of his heart, and will you hear this with little and low affections, as if it did but little concern you, when you are the people of God's choice? Oh how did Christ bless the Lord for you! and should not you for your s...lves? he was transported with Joy for this, s...ke. 10. 21. He rejoiced in spirit and said Father I thank thee that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and h...st made them known to babes. And he calls upon his Disciples to rejoice in this: rejoice not in this that the devils are made subject to you: but rejoice in that your names are written in heaven. Your names are written in the lambs book of life, while others are written in the s...rth. What! are there, but few chosen in the world, and are you some of those few? and will you not rejoice in this? Oh rejoice in this. God speaks of your privileges as if they were already come, Heb. 12. 22. But you are come to ⟨ϕ⟩ Zion, to the Church of th... living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an ⟨ϕ⟩ company of ⟨ϕ⟩ , to the general assembly, and Church of the ⟨ϕ⟩ - ⟨ϕ⟩ , which ⟨ϕ⟩ written in heaven, and to God the judge of ⟨ϕ⟩ , and to the spirits of just s...en s...ade perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the New Cove...s...

Secondly, You are the pill...rs of his name, when others are but broken, useless pot sheards. My brethren, God hath raised you up for quite another end, than he hath others. You know what the Lord speak of Pharaoh, Exod. 9. 16. And in every deed for this cause have I raised thee up, to show in thee my power, that my name may be declared throughout all the earth. That God might show in him the power of his wrath and severity. But now beloved, you are raised up for another end, that you may bear up the name of God, and be the instruments of the glory of God before all men. God hath no active glory from the rest of the world. But you are the people whom God hath raised up on purpose for his name and for his glory, s...S... 18. 18. Absalom, we read had taken and reared a pillar for himself: and he called the pillar after his own name. Thus hath the Lord God erected you as pillars to keep up ⟨ϕ⟩ name in remembrance. For the unreasonable Creatures they cannot, but by dumb and silent ⟨ϕ⟩ to man, praise their Creator. For the ungodly, they do the contrary, they dishonor his name. And were it not for you, the name of God would not be kept up in the world. God would be cast out, and the very remembrance of him out of his own world. Oh my brethren, I may say of you, of everyone of you that are believers, as God speak concerning Paul, Act. 9. 15. You are chosen vessels to bear God's name before the world. Alas! for others! of how little use are they in the world? this is a miserable case to be of no use; better to have no being than to be of no use. How contemptible doth the Lord speak of that wicked King Coniah? he calls him a despised broken Idol. Such a kind of one is every unsanctified person, they are but as broken useless pot-sheards: let them be so great as they will, yea they are worse than for no purpose, they are for bad purposes. Oh, what cause have you then to bless the Lord, that you are the people that must bear up his name?

Thirdly, You are the vessels of his glory, when others are the vessels of his wrath, you are not as others, vessels of wood and stone; but you are all vessels of gold and silver: vessels not to dishonor, but to honor. Vessels sanctified, and made meet for the Masters use, and prepared for every good work, 2 Tim. 2. 20, 21. Ah brethren, read (and rejoice with trembling) what is written, Rom. 9. 18. onward, where the Apostle lively sets forth this great distinction. H... hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. Hath not the potter power over the clay to make one vessel to honor and another to dishonor? What if God willing to show his wrath and to make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath sitted to destruction: and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy which he had afore prepared unto glory? Ah brethren, when others are vessels of wrath sitted to destruction, you are vessels of mercy, vessels of glory made for this blessed use and service that you may be the instruments of God's glory and mercy before the world: that God may take you and single you out at the great day, when you shall be severed as a man severeth the sheep from the goats. God shall take you and single you out before the world, and tell the world, what a God can do for a poor creature: to make you the monuments of his magnificence and bounty, to show how he could exalt the dust of the earth. This is the use you serve for in the world. Do not live as if you were made for little things, and for little use: you are made for this use, that you should be vessels prepared to have the infinite fullness of God pouring into you, as vessels standing by for the same purpose, and running over to all eternity. When you shall be ever full and running over with the glory of God. When the Al-sufficiency of God shall be forever emptying itself into you. How is it that God hears no more of you? hath he done so for any other? no, he hath prepared them for vessels of wrath on whom he will be pouring out his wrath to a...l eternity. Both of these vessels were made of one sort of clay; and yet see what difference here is that free grace hath made.

Fourthly, You are the Temples of his presence, when others are the styes of uncleanness, God doth live in you, and walk in you: this is the honor that God doth put upon you. The Apostle tells you, that you are God's hou...e, Heb. 3. And God says of you his spiritual house, as he did of the Typical house, (for the sense belongs more to the thing typified, then to the house,) 1 Kings 9. 3. God says of every believer as of that house, I have hallowed this house to put my name there forever. And mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually. Thus doth God for th...e believer, that art his house. Or as it is in, 2 Kings 21. 7. In this house and in Jerusalem which I have chosen out of all the Tribes of Israel will I put my name forever. That was but a typical Temple, you are the real Temples of the holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 6. 19. What, know you not that your body is the Temple of the holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? every believer, is a real Temple wherein God is especially present, so 1 Cor. 3. 16. Know you not that you are the Temple of God? and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? Brethren, if you indeed believe, methinks this privilege should be matter of unspeakable Joy to you. What! art thou of no meaner use then this to be a habitation of God through the spirit? What! art thou a Temple for God to dwell in? will God make of this Soul a Temple, where all manner of lusts have dwelt? and say of thy soul, here will I dwell forever, this is my rest for I have desired it? Oh, adore the riches of God's condescending grace! others are the vessels of uncleanness, the coffins of rottenness, in whom Satan hath set up his throne, 'tis true of every wicked man, what God says of Coniah, Jer. 22. 28. He is a vessel wherein is no pleasure, He is a vessel of the most noisome filthyness in the world.

Fifthly, You are the trumpets of his praise, when others are the instruments of unrighteousness. O what base use are the others put too, in their bonds of wickedness? to the worst of drudgery. They are the vessels of sin, and slaves of Satan, Rom. 6. 16. a miserable service! this is a miserable Master indeed! none have such miserable lives as those who have the work of sin to do... Why, would it not pity ones heart to see a company of poor Creatures laboring and toiling for their own ruin? to see them tugging and sweating hard at, it were to carry together faggots for their own burning. This is that the wicked are doing, they are but treasuring up the wrath of God against themselves at the last day, they are but carrying together faggots and fuel for their own burning.

They labor and sweat all their days to pile up faggots and fuel, pile upon pile, to fill Tophet for their own burning. But you are not of this use, you are to be the Trumpets of God's praise. Oh blessed employment! your work is the work of Angels, whiles others are doing the work of Devils. Isaiah 61. 3. That they might be called trees of renown, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified. And so in another place, this people have I formed for myself, that they may be for my praise. Isa. 43. 7. I have created him for my glory, I have formed him, yea I have made him. When others shall be venting their malice and blasphemy against God, you shall be the silver Trumpets that shall be ever sounding forth the praises of the Lord.

Sixthly, You are the men of his Counsel, when others are strangers and aliens. You are no more foreigners and strangers, but fellow Citizens and of the household of God. You are the attendants of his person, you are of his privy Counsel. You are the friends of God. This was Abraham's privilege, Jam. 2. That he was called the friend of God. Brethren, all the long and magnificent titles of all the Monarchs of the Earth do not signify half so much as this that I am speaking to you. Now this is your prerogative. Henceforth I call you not servants but friends: and why so? because you are the men of his Counsel. The servant knoweth not what his Lord doth, but whatsoever I have heard of the Father that have I declared unto you. Herein Christ hath put a marvelous distinction between you and the men of the world, I may say of you as Christ of them, blessed are your eyes for they see, and your ears for they hear. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. So Psa. 147. He showeth his word unto Jacob, & his statutes unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any Nation.

Seventhly, You are the Jewels of his Crown, when others are but the dross and lumber. And they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts in the day when I make up my Jewels, Mal. 3. 17. Beloved, you that are believers, you are the very glory of Christ. Every believer is as a pearl put into the Crown of Jesus Christ. The Apostle speaks of believers, of his converts, that they were a great Crown to him. He calls them his Joy and Crown of rejoicing, Phil. 4. 1. But this is but little that you should be your Ministers Crown: I tell you, you are Christ's Crown and glory, Isa. 62. 3. Thou shalt also be a Crown of glory, in the hand of the Lord, and a Royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

Eighthly, You are the inheritors of the Kingdom, when others are the sons of perdition, Luk. 12. 32. Fear not little flock 'tis your Fathers good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, So come ye blessed of my Father inherit the Kingdom prepared for you. Who can utter the sweetness of that promise? 'tis our Saviors parting promise to his disciples at his last supper, Luke 22. 28. 29, 30. You are they which have continued with me in my Temptations and I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that you may eat and drink at my Table in my Kingdom, and sit upon thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. Oh how sweet are these words. Lay the mouth of Faith at these promises, and suck the sweetness of them. Look upon it as a reality, that God prepared for you a Kingdom, 'tis so, why should God go to deceive you? and you may lay your claim to it boldly: God delights to see your humble boldness. The spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are the sons of God, and if Sons, then heirs; joint heirs with Christ: Heirs of his Kingdom.

Fourthly, If you look upon yourselves as prisoners, and so God hath done more for you than he hath for others. Ah Christians, this is the meaning of this day that you might celebrate the kindness of God to you in prison. O remember and forget not how signally God hath owned you. Brethren, 'tis your privilege and mercy that God hath given you hearts to own him in times of danger. And blessed be God he is not behind hand with you; he that owned you in your prison state. Brethren how hath God owned you in clearing your cause for which you are suffering here? If the Kingdom of heaven be promised to them that suffer for righteousness sake, then sure it is promised to you: for you are suffering here upon that account. And then for your call: how sweetly and joyfully did we come hither? though God knows we had not inquired into what we entended, as to our subsistence here; yet God sent us all hither joyfully together; and I hope God will send us home as joyfully again.

But let me show you, in some particulars wherein God hath done more for you than for others, as you are prisoners.

First, You are better fed than others. Who do live upon the bounty of God's extraordinary providence like you? may not God almighty speak to you, as the Apostie to them, 1 Cor. 9, 7. Who of you goeth a warfare at his own charges? When our Savior sent forth his disciples without scrip or shoes, says he, lacked ye anything? they answered, nothing. May not we say so? if he say to us, lacked you anything? we must say no, he hath poured out his kindness upon us. O how sweetly did the holy prophet, think you, relish every bit of meat when God provided every bit so extraordinarily for him, 1 Kings. 17. 6. And the Rave brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening, God doth not send it to us by a Raven; but by friends: but all he sends: bread and flesh in the morning and bread and flesh in the evening without our care. And is not God to be observed in this? you know there is a kind of a Famine abroad, but God will not have it a Famine here. Who ever wants, God will be sure that his prisoners shall not want. As the King took care of Jeremiah, Jer. 37. 21. Then Zedekiah the King commanded, that they should commit Jeremiah to the Court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the Bakers-street until all the bread in the City was spent. When Jeremiah was in prison, God would be sure that he should not want as long as there was any bread to be had in the City. So God commands concerning his prisoners; though there be a kind of Famine abroad, God will not suffer his prisoners to want.

Secondly, You are better taught than others. Who is like to you O people, about whose tents the Manna raineth, not every morning only, but morning and evening: week days, and Sabbath days, God doth open his door to you, and make every day as a Sabbath to you.

Thirdly, You have more promises than others. Now there are come in to us a whole shoal of of promises, that we would not not so properly claim before, 1 Pet. 2. 20. If when you do well and suffer for it, you take it patiently, this is acceptable with God, 1 Pet. 4. 13. 14. Rejoice in as much as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding Joy. If you be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you, Jam. 1. 12. Blessed is the man that endureth Temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the Crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. If you suffer with him you shall also reign with him, 2 Tim. 2. 12. Blessed are they that suffer for righteousness sake: for theirs is the Kingdom of heaven. Blessed are you when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my name sake, rejoice and be exceeding glad for great is your reward in heaven, Math. 5. 10, 11, 12. Time would fail me to go over all those promises that are come in now upon us all at once. Oh we are an unthankful people, if all these promises do not raise our faith and joy. Is it a light thing my brethren, that you should be heirs of the promises?

Fourthly, God hath honored you more than others. To others with you 'tis given to believe; but to you 'tis given to suffer for his sake; which the Apostle reckons up as a step higher than others attain to, Philip. 1. 29.

Fifthly, God hath entrusted you with his honor more than others. God hath put more into your hands, than into the hands of any other. God's glory is trusted morewith the sufferers of Christ than with any others. O be infinitely tender of God's honor! O see that you love him more than others: praise him more than others.

A Sacramental speech grounded on

Psalm. 40. 7.

Lo I come.

IT is my purpose to speak to you of the coming of the Son, Lo I come.

Now concerning this coming, I shall show you. First, Who it is that is come. Secondly, How he is come. Thirdly, Whence he is come. Fourthly, Why he is come.

First, Who it is that is come. This is the first thing that I shall desire you to consider with reference to the coming of Christ.

(First,) The bridegroom is come. God sends his Ministers to you with that cry Math. 25. 6. Behold the bridegroom cometh. O with what joy doth the Bride receive her Bridgroom? so should believers receive Christ. Arise you Virgins then and come away. Awake you virgins this is the call of your Bridgroom, Cant. 2. 8. The voice of my beloved! behold he cometh, &c. And what was this voice of her beloved, that doth so ravish her heart? see verse 10. arise my love; my fair one, and come away, and so ver. 13. Christ calls again and again; and you should come away.

(Secondly,) Your King is come. God sends his Ministers to you with that glad news, that he put in the Prophets mouth, Zach. 9. 9. rejoice greatly O daughter of Zion, behold thy King cometh. Brethren, this is that which should cause you to rejoice and shout for joy, that your King is come. And great reason have: for he is a great King and hath salvation with him, Luke 19. 9. This day is salvation come to this house.

(Thirdly,) The deliver is come, Rom. 11. 26. Brethren, I know good news must needs be welcome to you at such a time as this: why hear you then the blessed news that ever came to the ears of man, Luke 2. 10. Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people for unto you is born — a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. Ah Brethren! that the Savior is come, the deliverer is come this is the blessed news that ever man heard. Hear what the Lord saith with reference to this, in that of the Prophet, Isa. 62. 10. 11. He calls upon his people to cast up and prepare the way, &c. say ye to the daughter of Zion, behold thy salvation cometh, &c. Ah brethren, this is good news for Zion, and this is the news God hath sent me with: behold the deliverer, the Savior is come. O with what a welcome should such as this be received when he comes? how welcome was the news to the captives, that brought the news of their liberty? why, such should be the welcome, that you should give to the news the Gospel brings you of a deliverer. Now is your Jubilee, blessed are the people that hear the joyful sound Psa. 89. 15. He alludes to the sound of the Trumpets, in the time of the Jubilee: but it is to be understood of the joyful sound of the Gospel. It is blessed news that Christ the deliver is come.

Secondly, I am to show you, how he is come, There is a twofold coming of Christ: his gracious, and his glorious coming. His glorious coming is not till hereafter, at the last day. This is the coming that he speaks of, Rev. 1. 7. He speaks of it as if it were present: because 'tis as certain as if it were present. Every eye shall see him. But then there is his gracious coming, and that is twofold corporal, or spiritual. His corporal coming, in his admirable Incarnation: his spiritual coming in the Gospel Invitation.

(First,) His corporal coming in his admirable incarnation. And this is blessed news to the world, at this his coming there were a quire of angels to celebrate his praise, Luke 2. 13, 14. And suddenly, there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host; praising God & saying, glory to God in the highest, and on Earth peace, good will towards men. We read that the great and glorious works of God, they are celebrated by the angels. And there are these four great works celebrated by them.

First, The work of Creation. So that $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Job. 38. 7. When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for Joy. It is spoken with reference to the Creation, the angels did list up their voices, and sang the praise of their Creator.

Secondly, The work, of conversion, Luke 15. 10. There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth. The work of conversion is a great and admirable work: and therefore celebrated by angels.

Thirdly, At Christ's incarnation, so Luke 2. 10, 11.

Fourthly, At the resurrection. Then all the angels of God shall appear, then shall be a most glorious and general appearance of the angels to celebrate that work, heaven shall empty itself of all its glorious inhabitants.

(Secondly,) There is the spiritual coming of Christ: and this is in his Ordinances. This is his Chariot wherein he rides on conquering, Psa. 45. 3, 4. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, and in thy Majesty ride prosperously. This is to be understood of Christ's going forth in the sound of the Gospel, which is his sword, whereby he rides on to conquer the world. Now in this respect Christ is come, exhibiting himself in the voice of the Gospel: there Christ doth show himself, and impart himself to his people.

Thirdly. I am to show you whence he is come. He is come from the throne of his glory. From the court of his Angels. From the hosome of his Father.

(First,) From the Throne of his glory. O what a wonderful descent was this! that he should come from the Throne of his glory, to the manger among the beasts? from the company of the angels, to be crucified among the thieves! he came among the beasts; the world would not receive him, but he was thrust out among the beasts. Man by his Apostasy had brought himself among the beasts; and hither did Christ come to find him. But he was humbled more yet; from the throne to the cross. From the height of his glory, to the extremity of shame. O how should we think of the strange abasure of Christ, that he that was heir to the Crown of glory, should become man, and viler then any of the Sons of men, in some respect! this should have your great admiration.

(Secondly,) From the Court of his angels. The Lord Jesus Christ, he was the brightness of his Fathers glory, the express image of his person, that made his angels spirits and his Ministers a flaming fire. All the angels you must know were his Messengers. And what abasure was here, that he should come from the company of angels to be contemned by the basest of men!

(Thirdly,) From the bosom of his Father. The Lord Jesus Christ, he was the Son of God's delight: his darling; the beloved object of his soul, Math. 11. 27. Christ is he that lies in the bosom of the Father; and he alone is able to reveal the secrets of the Lord to the world, so John 1. 18. Now that the Lord Jesus Christ should come from the bosom of God, to the belly of hell, that he should leave the glory of heaven, for the torments of hell, and all for our sakes; what a strange wonder of Love was this! hence was it that Christ came for us. This is the bread that came down from heaven, that a man may eat of and not die.

Fourthly, I shall show you why he is come. And that is To seek and to Save.

(First,) To seek. That is one end of his coming, so Luke 19. 10. And who do you think that he is come to seek? It is us that were lost. All we like sheep have gone astray, now Christ is that great & good sheapherd that came to seek and to save that which was lost, in Luke 15 you read of the lost groat, the lost sheep, and the lost Son: and who do you think this was; this was the lost sinner, ver. 32. who was it, think you, that sought us, and found us when we were lost? It was Jesus Christ: it was he that sought us. We had never found him, had not he sought us. I am found of them that sought me not, 〈◇〉 . 65. 1. If Christ had stayed for us till we sought him, our salvation had never been wrought. The Lord Jesus Christ he sought us not, and laid hold on us. He took not hold of angels, but of the seed of Abraham. In effectual calling, there he takes hold of the sinner, he is fain to run after them and stop them, or else they would run into perdition.

(Secondly,) He is come to save, so the Apostle to Timothy, 1 Tim. 15. This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation that Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief. He puts in for one. Oh brethren, this is that should make the coming of Christ welcome to you, he came to seek and save you. O therefore welcome him at his coming.

Use. Is it so, that Christ is come? then go you forth to meet him. Math. 25. 6. That was the cry there, this is that which God sends his Messengers to call upon you for, that you may go forth to meet him.

But how should you go forth to meet him? First, as a Bride doth her bridegroom. Secondly, as redeemed Captives do their deliverer. Thirdly, as dutiful subjects do their King.

First, As a Bride doth her Bridegroom. This I shall open to you in three particulars. First, Put off the raiment of your captivity. Secondly, put on the wedding Garment. Thirdly, trim up all your Lamps.

First, Put off the raiment of your Captivity. If the poor Captive woman were to shave her head, and pair ber nails, and put off the raiment of her captivity, &c. (Deut. 21. 13.) before she was to be married to any one of the Tribes of Israel: how much more should you put off the old man and your sinful deeds, that are to be married to Christ? If so be the Children of Israel were to wash and sanctify themselves, and wash their clothes, when the Lord was to come down upon Mount Sinai, Exod. 19. how much more should you, when the Lord 〈◇〉 comes down to you? you know that Children may not come at their fathers Table with unwashed hands: neither must you to eat of the dainties spread in the Gospel.

(Secondly,) You must put on the wedding garment. You will say, what is this? it is a conjugal love to Jesus Christ. And this is compared to a garment: for we are bid to put on charity, or love. And its set forth as the best part of the Christian raiment: and above all things put on Charity; for what more fits a marriage than a conjugal affection? you should bring forth your most strong and ardent affections and love to him, you should meet him with songs, and what songs? such as the Psalmist doth Ps. 45. title. A song of Loves, let your eyes be fixed upon Christ in the Gospel, till your eyes affect your heart: and while your heart is musing, the fire will be kindling; where will you bestow your love, but where the bridegroom is so lovely?

(Thirdly,) You should trim up all your Lamps, you should snuff all your lights, and trim up all your lamps, to go forth to meet him, And receive him and feed upon him when he is offered: he is held out to you on purpose, in the Gospel, for you to take and receive him. Gal. 3. 1. Foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been ardently set forth crucified among you. But you will say was Christ crucified in Galatia? he was in the preaching of the word: he was crucified among them.

Secondly, You must meet him as redeemed captives do their deliverer, would you know how this is? it is with palms of victory in your hands with garments of salvation; with songs of deliverance. These are the three things wherein this stands. you have all together, in Rev. 7, 9, 10. They were in white robes, the garments of Salvation: and palms of victory, and they had the songs of salvation too, ver. 10. Oh Brethren, if you have any sense of your spiritual bondage and captivity, to be the servants of sin, under the fear of death, under the King of terrors; then be glad in your redeemer meet him with songs of praise. O how should the high praises of God be heard in your mouths? you should meet him as the virgins did David at his return from his victory, 1 Sam. 18. 6. with singing and dancing — with joy, &c. Thus should you meet your deliverer, you should compass him with songs of praise. O my Brethren, you that are the redeemed of the Lord, look down into the horrible pit, and then look up and sing songs to the Lord. O it is a glorious salvation that Christ hath wrought for us. How welcome was he to good old Simeon? how sweetly doth he hug Christ in his arms? (and much more, you must think in his heart) now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. This we have seen, we have seen Christ coming to us in the Gospel. We have seen him like Sampson, pulling down the house about our enemies, and carrying away the posts, and setting them up as Trophies of his victory. It was he that was condemned, that you might be freed. O let your lips praise him, and the souls which he hath redeemed, let me call upon with the Psalmist, Psalm 98. A psalm on purpose to Jews and Gentiles to sing to the Lord for their deliverance, verse 3. He hath remembered his mercy and truth toward the house of Israel: all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God. And what use doth the Psalmist make of this? verse 4. make a joyful noise unto the Lord all the earth, &c. He goes on calling upon all the Creatures to praise God for this. If the Sea must roar, and the floods clap their hands, how much more should you do it, that are the redeemed of the Lord.

Thirdly, Meet him as dutiful subjects do their King. This is the news sent to Zion, behold thy King cometh. Then meet him as a King, receive him with acclamation and praise, as they did when Solomon was proclaimed King, 1 Kings 1. 39, 40. They blew the Trumpet, and all the people said God save the King. And the people piped with pipes and returned with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them. O if they met King Solomon with such joy, how should you meet Christ? It is another manner of King that comes to you than Solomon was, you should say to Christ as they did to Gideon, Judge 8. 22. Rule thou over us: for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian. Thus should you say to Christ, rule thou over us: for he hath delivered you, not from the hand of Midian, but from Satan. But how should we meet our King? prepare the way, bow the knee.

(First,) Prepare the way, Math. 3. 3. Christ had his fore-runner going before him, that was John, saying, prepare you the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. How must the way of the Lord be prepared? every Mountain must be brought low &c. every Mountain of pride and opposition that are in our hearts must be laid low. O if there be such preparing for the King, where he is to lodge and go, how much more should you for the King of glory where he is to lodge!

(Secondly,) Bow the knee, we read of Joseph, (and you know he was a type of Christ.) that when Pharaoh had exalted him from the prison to such dignity, he prepares some to go before him, and cry, bow the knee. So God hath set up Christ and exalted him, and given him a name above every name; now let me call upon you (and myself with you) that you bow the knee to him. I speak not of the bodily knee: it is more than your cap and knee that he requireth. He will have you to bow before him. O then see that you bow before him, see that you do him homage. Now your King is set up in another manner than he was upon the Cross, behold your King. That is the duty that I would persuade you to now: behold your King and look that you bow to him. Let your souls and all that is within you bow to him. Let your understandings bow to him, by a right apprehension of him, by a right conceiving of him, as worthy to be loved and feared. Let your wills bow, by an utter rejection of your sins: and a most ardent desire to receive Christ. Let all your affections come in and bow, and not dare to stir more than his commands give you leave. In a word let all that is within you bow before him, and give place to Jesus Christ. Now down with the world, out with your lusts, and make ready for Christ. Let all your worldly business bow before him, and give place to Jesus Christ, away with this foolish deceitful world; let all be at the seat of Christ: and let all your souls be in subjection to him. This will be an acceptable meeting with him, if you so meet him.

A SACRAMENTAL Speech grounded on,

Isaiah. 9. 6.

And his name shall be called wonderful.

Quest. WHY is it that Christ hath given to him this name of wonderful.

Answ. There are so many wonders that meet together in Christ, that tis no wonder at all, that he should have this name, wonderful. Christ was every way wonderful. He was wonderful in his Person; wonderful in his Passion. Wonderful in his Conception, being conceived by the power of the holy Ghost: wonderful in his Birth, being born of a pure virgin: wonderful in his Life; wonderful in his death, and the effects of it: wonderful in his Resurrection, that a dead person should be raised and that by his own power: wonderful in his Ascension. In a word he was every way wonderful: wonderful in his Humiliation and Exaltation.

Ah Christians if you would see a wonder, look upon Christ, and here see a wonder, here is a wonder, above all that the world can show. There are two sorts of wonders that God hath to show, the wonder of his power; and the wonder of his grace.

First, The wonder of his Power. What a wonder is it, to see such a fabric as heaven and earth, all come out of nothing by the power of God. Christians 'tis a great evil in us that we do no more wonder at this great power. What a wonder is the Sun, in its bigness and brightness, flying many Millions of miles in a minute of an hour!

Secondly, But all these wonders are nothing to what his wonder of grace is. In Christ you may see all these wonders swallowed up. Let me show you a little of this wonder. In Christ are to be seen these following wonders. 1. God manifest in the flesh. 2. God suffering in the flesh. 3. Justice and mercy sweetly reconciled. 4. The greatest good coming out of the womb of the greatest evil. 5. Perfect justice raging against perfect innocence. 6. Infinite wisdom at cost upon man's worthlessness. 7. The Son of the blessing made to be a curse. 8. The Father of mercy forgetting his bowels to his own Son.

•...irst, God manifest in the flesh, John 1. 14. And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, &c. O brethren, this is a wonder indeed. The Apostle tells you, that without controversy this is a great Mystery, that God should be manifest in the flesh. Here we may cry out deservedly, with wonder and astonishment, God is come down to us in the likeness of man. God manifest in the flesh! why, what is flesh? all flesh is grass, that is, fading, withering, dying. What! the word made flesh! shall the immortal put on mortality? and incorruption, put on corruption? O what a wonder is this! O behold and wonder; see if Christ do not deserve the name of wonderful. Holy Abraham, was ashamed of his meanness in this respect, when he came before God, because he was but dust and ashes. Behold, I have taken upon me to speak to the great God, who am but dust and ashes. O then how is it to see God clothed with the flesh of man? This was the wonder of angels. O how did they wonder to see their maker clothed with flesh! O come to the cross of Christ, to the cratch of Christ, and there bow and worship. Let not the Humble abasement of Christ, hinder you from adoring him in his greatness. The wisemen found Christ in poverty & meanness; yet they knew what glory was veiled under this meanness: and fell down and offered gold, frankincense, myrrh, &c. go ye and do likewise.

Secondly, God suffering in the flesh, well may he have his name wonderful upon this account. 'tis said that the Philosopher, observing the unnatural eclipse of the Sun at the suffering of Christ, cried out, either the God of nature is suffering, or the world is at an end. When Christ was suffering, it was God that suffered, though he did not suffer in the Godhead, but in the Manhood. Beloved, if you should have seen the judgment, that befell, Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, would you not have been astonished at such a sight as this was? much more if hell should have opened, and you have seen the torments of the damned, would you not have been astonished, and wonder at this? but in this that God should suffer, is more then if all the men in the world should have suffered to all eternity. O how did the angels stand by the Cross, wondering, to see him whom they adored and worshipped, to be mocked and Crucified.

Thirdly, Justice and mercy sweetly reconciled. The Justice and mercy of God, seemed to be, as it were, at a controversy about fallen man.

Darius, you know, had made a decree, that he that did offer any petition to any God or man, except to himself, within such a time, should be cast into the den of Lions. Daniel comes within the danger of this decree: and what must be done now? either Daniel must be spared; and then, what would become of the Laws of the Medes and Persians? or, else Daniel must be devoured; and then the King would have been cruel to himself. Yet providence did so order it, that the Law was executed and Daniel spared.

So here, man had sinned; and God said that he should die, and now either man must die, or God must be false of his word. Now what shall be done? The wisdom of God steps in, and finds out a person that should die, and so God's truth be saved, and his mercy magnified. But where shall this person be found? the Angels could not do it: nor man could not do it. But God would take the human nature upon him, and that should suffer, that God and man might be reconciled. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.

Mercy and truth are met together, how can this be? it seems they were at a great distance, & could not be brought together. Truth said, that man should die: & mercy said that man should be saved. Truth said, if he die not, I am a liar; and where then is the honor of my truth? but mercy pleaded, if he die, where is the honor of my Grace and mercy? Why now, wisdom puts in a surety, and that •...oes for the principal.

Righteousness and peace have kissed each other. How can this be? God's justice and righteousness did require that man should give satisfaction: but this is all reconciled in Christ, he reconciled God and man together.

Fourthly, The greatest good coming out of the womb of the greatest evil. Sin, is the mother of all evil. You will say, can any good come out of such a womb as this? It is true, it cannot naturally come; but God did so order it, that it should be the occasion of it. Were it not a wonder, to see grapes come of thorns? and Olives of thistles? such a wonder you may see in Christ. You may see, out of the sin of man, comes great glory to God, and good to man.

First, Great glory to God: for had not man sinned, neither God's justice nor mercy had been so magnified. His justice had not been seen at all, in a manner, in punishing the offenders; but 'tis eminently seen in punishing of Christ, who died for sinners. This is a louder demonstration of the Justice of God, than if God had turned all heaven and earth into confusion upon the sin of man.

Again, hereby is way made for magnifying God's mercy. The sin of man, as God hath ordered it, hath given way to God in the demonstration of his mercy in forgiving, and his justice in punishing. It could not have been thought, that God had been of so gracious a nature, able to put up such great affronts as man had given him, had not sin given him occasion to magnify his mercy.

Secondly, Again, as the sin of man hath given occasion to the advancing of God's glory, so for the promoting of man's good. By this man is raised to a higher state of happiness and felicity than ever he should have been. Now there is a nearer conjunction between God and man, than ever was before the fall, or ever should have been had it not been for the sin and fall of man. Before it was said, that man was made a little lower than the angels: but now it may be truly said, that he is so much higher than the Angels: more nearly joined to God. Had man continued in innocence, he had had only a lengthening out of his temporal life in paradise but now by his sin Christ hath opened the door of heaven to him. O then wonder at the power of Christ!

Fifthly, Perfect justice, raging against perfect innocence. You know that God is perfect in his Righteousness and justice. A God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he. And yet notwithstanding, his perfect Justice was set against his own son, in whom there was nothing but perfect innocence. He was the Lamb of God: a lamb without spot and blemish; full of grace and truth. No guile was sound in his mouth; and yet you know how the wrath of God brake out upon him. It brake out upon him to the very uttermost: that if he would but put himself into the room of man, he must die for it, though Justice itself said I find no fault in him, yet he must dy: all could not save him: but if he will stand between God & offending man, and take our sins upon himself, though he had none of his own, yet justice takes hold of him. Let me say as the Apostle behold the goodness & severity of God. Goodness to thee, but severity unto Christ. O what had come upon you, if you had been to bear the blow! you see how Justice runs upon the Son of God, and falls upon him, and tears him to the ground, and lets out his blood, and would not spare him, though he were the only beloved Son of God. O consider, how fearful a thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God!

You read, how when Daniel's enemies were cast into the Lions den, that they brake all their bones before they came to the bottom of the den. O how wouldst thou have been torn, had the Justice of God taken hold of thee!

Sixthly, Insinite wisdom at cost upon mere worthlessness. God expects the blood of his own Son, which was of insinite value, to redeem worthless man. Would you not wonder to see a wise man to be changing Pearls for pebbles? yet here it is a greater wonder: the wise God, redeeming by the death of his own Son, sinful man out of the hands of his own justice. Why what is man? are not all the nations of the world as nothing before him? and yet upon this nothing, this vanity, is God's insinite wisdom at this cost, that he might save us from eternal death.

Seventhly, The Son of the Blessing made to be a curse, Gal. 3. 13. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us. Observe it, 'tis not said he was ACCURSED for us, but a CURSE for us. Christ hath delivered us from the curse: but how? by taking the curse upon himself. You know the curses of the Law that were denounced against sinners: all these curses met together upon one Jesus Christ. How is the book of God's word full from one end to the other with Curses against sinners! what a load then was there upon the back of Christ, when all these curses met together upon him? what a wonder is it that God should be cursing of his own Son! to hear God say, all my curses shall meet upon thee: cursed shalt thou be in thy body; and cursed shalt thou be in thy soul. To hear the great God speaking thus to his own Son, go thou Cursed, I will engage my Justice and wrath against thee, to torment thee and put thee to death. O what a sight was this! yet thus it was with Jesus Christ. He had as many torments as members: and all the torments that he endured had the curse of God in them.

Eighthly, The Father of mercy forgetting his Bowels to his own Son. We read of a very strange thing that was done by the King of Moab, 2 Kings 3. 27. When he saw that the Battle was too sore for him, &c. he took his own Son that should have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt offering, what a strange sight was this? yet there is a greater wonder than this to be seen in Christ: to see God sacrificing his own Son, and offering him up for a burnt-offering, to appease his wrath against sinful man: O shall not your hearts stand a wondering at this! to see, he that was a God of mercy to have no mercy for his own son? he that had bowels of pity for you, to have no pity for his Son; O behold and wonder. By this time I hope you are convinced that Christ is wonderful.

A SACRAMENTAL Speech grounded on

Eph. 3. 19.

And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge.

Quest. Wherein doth the Love of Christ appear to be a surpassing love? This appears in his putting himself into our Nature. His putting himself into our room. Putting our lives into his purchase, putting his name into our bond. Putting our names into his will. Putting his spirit into our hearts. Putting his glory into our hands.

First, It appears in putting himself into our nature. What admirable love and condescension was this? as we were Creatures there was an infinite distance between us and Christ: much more as we are sinners, but this infinite condescension was nothing to the love of Christ. He stepped from the Court of his angels, to the reproaches of men at one step. O what a step was this! for Christ to take our nature upon him, is more than for an Emperor to become a beggar. Yea there is no comparison that can express it. This was love indeed; surpassing love, that the Lord Jesus Christ should have such a love to man: that he should become of $\langle \diamond$ \rangle to sinners: flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone; here is matchless unparalleled love.

Secondly, It appears in putting himself in our room. Christ did not only become man with us, he doth not only take the rags of our Nature upon him, but our condition upon him, the pain, shame, curse that was due to us upon him. He was content to be in our stead: to suffer, dy for us: herein is love, Christ knew, before hand, what it would cost him if he would become surety for us: he knew the death we had deserved, the wrath that was our portion; and yet he was content to put himself into our room, that we might be exempted and excused, Christ hath put in himself for us, not to be bound for us for a time: but did engage himself, resolving to pay for us that we might be excused. It was much that Christ did become man for us: but now that he should not only take our nature upon him, but our curse upon him too, and become sin for us, and a curse for us, this makes it more wonderful. It is strange that Christ should take our nature upon him; but if you consider the end why he did it, this would be more wonderful: it was that he might be miserable, and become capable to be accursed for us! that he might be cursed and killed by the wrath of God! He had not become man, had it not been for this end. Now that he should become man for this end, how great was this? and yet this was his end. When Justice must have blood, that he would take his blood and give it for us: and that he might, he would take himself a human body and soul.

Thirdly, It appears in putting our lives into his purchase. This is another strange expression of the love of Christ. O if Christ had died for others and not for us: if he had put in others names and not ours, then we might have passed our days with sorrow: and gone into the Mountains, and pined away in sadness. But now that he should leave out any others names and put in ours, O here is distinguishing love! did you ever hear of a man that took in a beggar from the door to be his heir? but suppose such a thing might be done: did you ever hear of a man that took in his enemy to be his heir, and made over all that he hath to him? thus hath Christ done for us. Ah Brethren, how may we stand astonished at this love, and say, as he, John 14. Lord whence is it that thou dost manifest thyself to us and not to the world? That thou hast put in our names and not others? surely here is great grace. O the free grace of God to us! though Christ hath died, yet you know the greatest part of the world shall be never the better for his death. Though he hath died for man, yet the most of men, through the obstinacy and hardness of their hearts do resist him: but he hath overcome the obstinacy of our hearts and hath made us partakers of his death.

Fourthly, It appears in putting his name into our bonds. Herein is the love of Christ manifested, in that he should become surety and bound for us. You know that the surety is to set his name to the bond. Now a man will be very wary for whom he is bound; the man is not a man that is insufficient. Did you ever hear of a man that bound himself for one, that he knew that he should pay it himself? thus hath Christ done for us: he knew that all our debts would come upon him; and yet notwithstanding he did engage himself for us. Beloved, the debt of sin is a very formidable debt: it is such a debt as if so be, the debt of the least sin had been laid upon all the Saints and Angels in glory to give satisfaction for it, they had been drowned in everlasting perdition. But now Christ undertook to pay for all out of his own stock, though he knew what it would cost him, if he did become bound for us, O what love is $\langle \diamond \rangle$!

Fifthly, It appears in putting our names into his will. Brethren, herein is the love of Christ seen towards his people, in that he hath distinguished between them and others. When he made his last Will and Testament, he put in believers names and left out the rest, Rev. 21. 27. There shall in no wise enter anything that $\langle \diamond \rangle$, &c. But they which are written in the ...mbs book of Life. This is a privilege indeed to have your names written in his book, upon his will. Our Savior bid his disciples rejoice in this that their names were written in heaven, in Christ's book, and upon his will: this is matter of joy. But how shall we know whether our names are written in heaven? who shall ascend up into heaven to fetch it down from thence? I answer; we have the copy of his will here upon earth: This word is the copy of his will that is in heaven. If our names be in this book, our names are in his heart. Now let us go to the Law and Testimony, what saith that? that saith, if thou believe thou shalt be saved. If thou repent and be converted, thy sins shall be blotted out Act. 3. 19

Sixthly, It appears in putting his spirit into our hearts, Ezek. 36. 27. And I will put my spirit within you. Brethren, herein is the infinite goodness and love of Christ seen, that he should bestow so great a gift upon so unworthy a receiver. O what love is this, that those hearts that have been the stables of unclean $\langle \diamond \rangle$, that Christ should take up his abode there! here is strange love indeed. Is it true indeed, will God dwell on earth, 1 Kings 8. 27. And if it were matter of wonder to Solomon, that God should show some Token of his presence in so excellent a fabric as that was; what matter of wonder is it that he should come, and make show of his presence in our hearts!

Seventhly, In putting his glory into our hands. This is the greatest trust that can possibly be <ϕ> into our hands, this is more worth than all the world: for all the world was made for this end, to promote God's glory. Yea, it is better than the blood of Christ: for the end is better than the means. Now the blood of Christ was shed to this end, for the glory of God. Now then what a great trust is this, that is entrusted with you in your hands? surely he loves you well, that trusts his glory with you. Your unworthy walking will more dishonor Christ, than anything in the world beside. None can honor Christ as you; and none can dishonor him as you: let me put in that by the way. They that have such a Jewel put into their hands, had need be careful. I hope by this time you are fully convinced that the love of Christ is a surpassing love.

Use, There are two things that I shall hence press you to. 1. To Remember. 2. Answer and imitate this love of Christ.

First, To Remember this Love. O Christians, be sure that you never forget such love as this, Cant. 1. 4. We will remember thy love more than Wine: this is the duty that I am pressing you to, thus to remember Christ's love. Brethren, methinks it should be impossible for you to forget such love as this. Methinks it should be needless to bid you remember this love. Let my right hand forget her cunning rather than I should forget the love of Christ. Let my tongue forget to speak, rather than not to speak of this love. We should sooner forget to eat than for get Christ. And yet how apt are we notwithstanding, though we have to•... much reason to remember him, to have the memory of Christ and his love out of our minds! the memory of Christ should be written upon us in Marble and Brasse, never to be blotted out. Consider this love is a mindful, and a memorable love.

First, A mindful love. Never had persons so mindful a friend a•... we have in Christ: our names are ever before him, they are engraven upon the palms of his hands. He can as soon forget himself as forget us: he can as soon forget his heart as forget us. Exod. 28. 29. And Aaron shall bear the names of the Children in the breast-place of Judgment, upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place for a memorial before the Lord continually. Here you may see what a mindful friend Christ is, for these things were typical of Christ. Observe•..., (1.) The place where the names were to be written; upon the breast-place of judgment upon his heart. (2.) The <ϕ> why they were written there: For a memorial before the Lord. He hath your names there that he might never forget you. (3.) Observe the •...petuity of this; for a memorial before the Lord continually. And observe, these were to be carried by the high priest before God when he went into the high place. Christ hath not forgotten our names, now he is gone into the high place. You know how it was with the Butler when he was gone into Pharaoh's presence, he forgot Joseph and all his afflictions. But Christ, he remembers Joseph and his afflictions all the while, though he be in heaven.

(Secondly,) It is a memorable Love. As Moses spake of the night of Israel's deliverance, it is a night much to be remembered: so say I of this love of Christ; it is a love never to be forgotten. If Christ do bear your names upon his heart, methinks that you should ever bear his name upon your hearts. The love of Christ is worthy to be for a perpetual memorial upon our hearts. And therefore I may say to you of Christ, as they of him, he is worthy for whom thou shouldst do this.

Quest. But what kind of remembrance should we have of this love?

Answ. It must be a feeling, and a lasting remembrance.

First, A feeling remembrance, it should not be a bare Historical remembrance of Christ, but all your affections should be drawn out after Christ. He did not only remember you, his remembrance of you was an affectionate remembrance; he hath made it to appear with a witness. Such should our remembrance of Christ be.

(Secondly,) A lasting remembrance, it should not be at the quickening of a Sermon or the like, but an abiding remembrance of him. Brethren, our remembrance of Christ should be a living remembrance. It should be with us as with a loving husband that hath lost his wife; it seems that where ever he is, she should be with him: thus it should be with us, we should have Christ ever with us. What Solomon speaks of the Law of Christ we should say of the remembrance of Christ. When we go it should lead us, when we awake it should talk with us, Prov. 26. 22. So Cant. 1. 13. A bundle of Myrrh is my well-beloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts. That is, say the Dutch Divines, the love of my beloved, especially of his death and sufferings, shall continually be upon my heart; and I will keep it close with me, to be my Nose-gay: and the like. He shall lie between my breasts; that is, I will keep the remembrance of his love upon my heart to comfort me.

Secondly, As you should remember, so you should be careful to imitate and answer his love. Beloved, as the Apostle says of God's love to you; what manner of love is this, &c. So it should be said of your love to Christ, what manner of love is this that you bear to Christ? It should be such a love, as that people may be forced to say, what manner of love is this that they bear to Christ? Labor to have such a love to Christ, so great a love, as that all other things may be nothing to you in comparison of the love of Christ. And when you have loved Christ as much as you can, weep that you can love him no more.

A SACRAMENTAL Speech, grounded on

Eph. V. 2.

But walk in love as Christ also hath loved us, and given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice unto God.

MY beloved, this subject, of the love of Christ to sinners, is indeed an inconceivable Subject. I have been backward to meddle with it, for how shall I speak of that which I do not know? For the love of Christ passeth all knowledge. Yet I shall a little open it to you, and shall make it appear that the love of Christ is great to his people: though I cannot comprehend it in the length and breadth, and height and depth of it, yet this we may know, that he hath a very tender love to us, Rev. 1. 5. To him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood. Christ hath loved us: and would you have a proof of his love to us? he hath loved us and washed us. He found us in our sins as swine in the mire; and yet he loved us and washed us, when he was fain to stop his breath as it were and hold his nostrils, yet he would come and wash us: yea he would make a bath of his own blood. Christ commended Mary, that she washed his feet with her tears: but how is the love of Christ commended in that he hath washed us in his blood? Christ hath our names down upon his book, Rev. 21. 27. There shall in no wise enter into it anything that desileth, &c. But they that are written in the book of life. Mark, Christ keeps his book for you, lest you should be forgotten, or there should be any mistake. It is a metaphor taken from men that keep their books, because they will not let anything be mistaken or forgotten. Yea, but books may be mislaid: therefore Christ hath your names written on his breast. The High priest was to have the names of the twelve Tribes upon his breast. So doth Christ, he hath you, for remembrance sake, engraven upon his hands, Isaiah 4. 9. 15. Can a woman forget her sucking child, &c. She may forget: but I have engraven thee upon my hands: yea he hath you upon his heart. He challengeth all the world for his love to you. He tells you that a woman may forget her child, but he will not forget you. A woman cannot choose, but have a very tender respect for her child: for this child (saith she) have I born many a bitter throw and pain: now, for you did Christ travail, Isaiah 53. 11. And so the Apostle Peter, speaking of the Resurrection of Christ (Acts 2.) he tells us, that he being freed from the pains of death, it being impossible he should be holden of them. The word in the Greek signifies birth-pains. Believers, they did as it were, come forth of the womb of his love. There is the very picture of a believer upon the heart of Christ. So that he cannot look upon his hands or his heart but he must be put in mind of us: so dear was was his love to us. What characters of love be there that cannot be found in Christ? Love covereth a multitude of faults. And O how may this be seen in Christ? we have many sins; and yet Christ passeth by them all. Thou art all fair, there is no spot in thee, Cant. 4. 7. Again Love is strong as death. And so it was in Christ, his love was stronger than death: he under went death itself for us. He was not afraid to pass under the pangs of death that he might redeem us. Again, love fills the heart with love to the person beloved what a dear respect hath Christ for his spouse! everything of theirs is sweet to him. Come my Love that art in the clefts of the Rock, in the secrets places of the stairs, let me see thy Countenance, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely, Cant. 2. 14. The Church says she is black but Christ says she is comely. But more particularly, I shall show you some evidences of the greatness of Christ's love. His letters, are letters of Love. His lips, they are lips of Love. His Tokens, are the tokens of Love. His Test...meant, is the evidence of Love. His Blood is a stream of Love.

1. His letters are the letters of Love, the Gospel, is the book sent down from heaven, wherein every chapter is a letter of love. Thou art ready to faint sometimes, Christian, and unbelief is ready to prevail: here thou mayst read the promises under Christ's own hand, sent down from heaven to thee. Here thou mayst read how love did care for thee, when thou wast in thy blood; he said Live. Here thou mayst read what expressions of love there was between Christ and thee, when he was wooing of thee: here are the letters of his love. Here thou mayst read those loving, melting passages of his, whereby he wooed thee and prevailed with thee. Here he shows, though he be absent for a while, yet he will come again. Here he hath set the time and the day when thou shalt be married to him: even when the body of Christ is complete. O how canst thou hear these letters of love, and not be in love with Christ again?

Secondly, His lips are lips of love, the kisses of his mouth are sweeter than wine; the words of his mouth are better than life. His lips drop as the Honey-comb. Never man spake like this man: all that heard him bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth. Well did Mary choose to sit at the seat of Christ, rather than at the feast: she found more sweet in the Honeycomb of Christ's lips, than at the feast. Let us but look over the last sermon of Christ, and the last prayer of Christ, and how may this set us a loving of Christ.

Look over his last sermon, John 14. 15 and 16. chapters, how lovingly doth he dispute down the unbelieving fears of our hearts? Let not your heart be troubled. And he propounds loving arguments: though he be gone, he will send us the comforter: and he will not be long from us neither, and then we shall be in no worse a case or place than he himself. And in the mean time, his going from us is out of love to us: not because he wanted love for us, but because he went to prepare a place for us.

Look into his last prayer, and how lovingly doth he carry us in his arms to his Father, when he was going out of the world, begging his Father that he would sanctify us, and keep us from the evil of the world, and that he would at length bring us to enjoy his glory.

Thirdly, His tokens are tokens of love. As a woman will be often looking over her tokens, because in these she sees the heart of her beloved; so if you would be in love with Christ be often looking over the love-tokens of Christ. Thou canst not turn thy eye but thou must see his tokens. But there are three or four tokens especially that you should be looking into.

(First,) He hath sent thee a pardon for thy sins. O what a blessed token is this? Psa. 32. 1, 2. Blessed is the man whose sin is forgiven, &c. He is blessed and blessed again: over and over blessed; he is a thrice happy man that hath got his pardon, why, this is the token that Christ hath sent thee that art a believer. O look after thy pardon, and thou shalt find that thy pardon is written in the blood of Christ: for it was his blood that made satisfaction. He loved thee, and therefore washed thee from thy sins in his blood. O with what joy and sweetness shouldst thou look over thy pardon, Christian! it is that which must carry thee through all thy dissiculties. Doth the Devil assault thee? do but show thy pardon and this will worst him. Doth the Lord frown upon thee? show him thy pardon, this will silence him. Doth thy Conscience accuse thee? show it thy pardon, and that will quiet it.

(Secondly,) He hath sent thee a Patent for heaven, this hath Christ given you that are believers: he hath made over to you in his Gospel a sirm conveyance of heaven. So that I may say a believer hath as true a right to heaven as Christ can make him; yea as Christ hath himself. You are they that have endured in my temptations, and I appoint unto you a Kingdom as my Father hath appointed me, &c. Now believers, can you tell the worth of this token? can you cast up the worth of endless glory? can you tell what God and heaven is worth? then you may tell me what this token is worth; never was there such a token sent as this is?

(Thirdly,) He hath sent thee the golden chain of the Jewels and bracelets of thy graces. As when the servant of Abraham, went to take Rebekah for wife to Isaac he gave her bracelets, &c. So hath Christ to you: he hath given you the chain of all the graces. These are the Jewels he hath adorned you with. Dost thou find any faith, love, &c. in thee? though it be like a grain of Mustard-seed, and like a spark on the hearth? O bless the Lord Christ upon the bended knees of thy soul, that he hath given thee this. He hath done more for thee in this, than he hath done for all the world beside. O how thankful should you be, that have received such a token from him? Christian, when ever thou dost feel the operation of the spirit of Christ within thee, let this mind thee of the love of him that hath sent thee all this.

(Fourthly,) He hath sent thee the seal and testimony of his spirit. Hast thou received the spirit of adoption teaching thee to cry Abba Father? It was he that sent it. Hast thou so sure a guide, as the sweet compassionate spirit? so loving a Counselor as the spirit of Christ in thee? O take notice of the love of Christ's in sending him to thee.

Fourthly, His testament is the evidence of love, beloved, it is impossible for me to utter, or you to conceive the riches of Christ's love expressed to you in his testament, his Covenant: herein, Christian, thou mightest read the strange love of Christ to thee, in that he hath given thee his testament, and delivered it to thee as his act and deed, sealed with his own blood. O how much did David make of this? It was the last words of that sweet singer of Israel. Although my house be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting Covenant, ordered in all things and sure and this is all my sa'vation and all my desire, 2 Sam. 23. He had all that heart could wish sor in this Covenant. O Christian, hath Christ given thee his covenant? O make much of this covenant, 'tis a sweet token indeed. O the great privileges and sweet immunities that are conveyed to believers here! freedom from sin; from the guilt and power of sin. Freedom from misery; from the wrath of God, the curse of the law, from the sting of death, from the evil of the world, from the danger of hell. And beside all this, what legacies hath he given thee in the covenant? God for thy Father, himself for thy Savior, his spirit for thy comforter and sanctifier, his Ministers for thy teachers, his ordinances for thy furtherance in grace: there he hath given thee thy adoption and assurance for heaven. Do but look over this, and say if thou canst, that Christ hath not loved thee.

Fifthly, His Blood is a stream of love, dost thou doubt of the love of Christ? do but look upon him on his cross, how his feet and hands and heart are pierced: thou mayst see the love of Christ flowing out of every part.

Use, Now since Christ hath so loved you, you that are his people do you love him again O where should you bestow your love, place your affections, fix your hearts but here? I shall give you two motives. He desires your love: and he deserves your love.

First, Consider he desires your love. You have seen a little how Christ doth love you; and what doth he expect, but that you should love him again? and can there be anything less that he could require! O methinks thou shouldest give up thy heart to Christ. This is all that he expects for this love, that you should love him again. This Christ will accept, and nothing short of this will he accept. Love cannot be satisfied, but by love again. It must be paid in its own coin, Cant. 8. 7. If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned. As no Treasure in the world can buy love, purchase love; so no sufficiency in the world will be sufficient for love, unless, you give love your love again, 1 Cor. 13. 3. Now Christian, be persuaded then to give away thy heart out of hand to Christ. O bestow thy love upon him, whereast thou such a thing in thee, but that thou shouldst love Christ? doth any man plant a vineyard, and not expect to eat of the fruit of it? hath he put love into thee, and doth not he expect that thou shouldst love him?

Secondly, He deserves your love. I may say of him as they of the Centurion: he is worthy thou shouldst do this thing for him; for he loveth our nation. Worthy is the lamb that was slain to receive honor and strength, &c. He is worthy to receive all, that you can give unto him. If there were anything else that were worthy of your love, there might be some excuse that you did not bestow it upon Christ. But alas there is nothing here that doth deserve your love. As Paul said, was Paul Crucified for you, &c. so may I say were these things crucified for you? but Christ was crucified for you: he hath deserved your love. This is he that came in to the world to seek and to save. That came and found you naked and dead and wounded: and then let out his blood and cured you. This is he that when he came, you spit upon him, and refused him; yet he would not be put off from you so, but he would do you good. How often hath he come and refreshed you with the refreshings of his love? how often hath he taken you into his galleries and filled you with his secrets? you that are believers may remember the places where he hath given you visits, and made you taste of the powers of the world to come.

A SACRAMENTAL Speech, grounded on

Math. 15. 28.

O woman, great is thy faith.

WE have read many noted and remarkable stories of sundry great exploits, that have been done by the renowned worthies of the world: but there are no exploits nor achievements, so renowned as those that been done by faith.

The Scripture give us many instances of this kind; and shows us how greatly the Lord Jesus Christ was pleased with the lively actings of his people's faith. Faith is of great price with, and shall obtain great praise from the Lord Jesus Christ.

In this chapter, you have a most notable victory that was obtained by a poor woman, by the power and strength of her faith, Here a poor weak woman by the strength of her faith wrestling with Jesus Christ, obtains the victory; that he could no longer hold but grants her request. Her faith did notably discover itself in putting her upon saying to Christ. Nature will send men in their distresses to natural helps; but faith will send them to Christ, to seek their help in him. And then her faith discovers itself in putting her upon pursuing of Christ. Christ seems to give a repulse to her faith, he answereth her not a word; he was resolved to put her faith to it: that he might exercise her faith. Yea when the Disciples came to speak for her; he answered, I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. But she makes another onset upon Christ. Then came she, and worshipped, saying, Lord help me. Well, but he gives her another repulse, he seems to put her off with a check; 'tis not meet to give the Children's bread to dogs. But behold the importunity of faith; she pursues the victory still, she confesses that she was but a dog, but she pleads that she might have the privilege of a dog: even the dogs have the crumbs that fall from their masters table, and though I be a dog, yet let me have the crumbs. Well now, he could no longer hold, but, as Joseph he breaks out in the praise of this woman's faith. O woman great is thy faith.

In Luke 5. you have the sick of the Palsy suing to Christ for cure and observe how earnest he is, when they could not find which way to come to Christ, they went to the house top and let him down in the midst before Jesus. Here was a lively faith indeed, it could by no means be kept off from Christ, and how greatly was Christ pleased with this? Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee. O this was the voice that faith would have had: this was the word that faith looked for. As Christ is pleased with faith, so he gratifies it, and gives it the answer that it would have, what word can be so sweet to faith, as Son thy sins are forgiven thee?

Quest. But why is Christ so greatly pleased with his people's faith.

Answ. First, Because this is the great thing commanded by him. Christ lays more stress upon this command than upon all the rest: to wit the command of believing, John 6. 29. This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent. This is THE work of God. THE work with an emphasis, none to this; This is the great command, 1 John 3. 23. This is his command, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ. There are many other commands, but this is the great command of all. And therefore 'tis that Christ doth so generally please himself in, his people's faith: because this is the great thing that he requires of us.

Secondly, Because this is that which doth set so great esteem upon him. Christ prizes faith, for faith above all things prizes Christ, and gives glory to Christ. Christ is not magnified and glorified in anything so much, as by his people's faith. Faith empties us of ourselves, and gives all the glory to Jesus: makes us vile in our own eyes, and magnifies Christ in our eyes, 1 Pet. 2. 7. Unto you therefore that believe he is precious. Faith and Christ they are mutually precious one to another. O the sweet embraces there are between these two friends when they meet! O precious faith, faith Christ, 2. P...t. ⟨◇⟩ . ⟨◇⟩ . And O precious Christ, saith faith. O precious Savior, saith faith, and O precious servant, saith Christ. •...aith saith, none but Christ; and Christ saith, none but faith: only believe. Since therefore Christ is so precious unto faith, no wonder that faith is so precious unto Christ.

Now then beloved, stir up your faith; abound in the lively exercise of your faith: and thereby you may be very pleasing to Jesus Christ nothing will please him like this. If thou art a believer, I know it is in thine heart to please thy Lord. If thou knewest what would please him, woulst thou not do it? How is the church pleased, to think how she would please Jesus Christ? Cant. 1. 12. While the King fitteth at his Table, my ⟨◇⟩ sendeth forth the smell thereof. It gave her great content, to think how she would please Jesus Christ. Would you know how to please Jesus Christ? here you are directed: be much in believing, learn the skill of believing; be much in the exercise of your faith. As David danced before...e the Ark with all his might, so put forth your faith with vigor and activity. In this above all things you will be pleasing to Jesus Christ. We read how Herod was pleased with Herodias daughter when she danced before him, Mar. 6. 22. insomuch that he swore to her, to give her what she should ask, even to the half of his Kingdom. Thus do thou put forth thy faith in a lively activity, and he will be pleased infinitely with this, that he will swear to thee thou shalt have thy asking. Now for a lively faith, to lay hold of Christ. Where is thy faith, Christian, try now what thy faith can do.

Quest. But wherein should your faith act so vigorously, that you may please Jesus Christ?

Answ. First, In a way of Annihilation. Or emptying yourselves of yourselves. This was the way, the Centurion's faith did please Christ so much, making him so little in his own eyes. And this was the way the woman of Canaan did please Christ with her faith. Faith is a grace that will exceedingly little us, and abase us, it will make thee that art as big as a Camel, to be little enough to go through an eye of a needle. It will make thee seem less and worse than nothing. It will make thee not only to cease admiring thyself, but to abhor thyself, and repent in dust and ashes. It will show thee what Christ is; and seeing him by thee, thou shalt disappear, and see nothing in thyself but unworthiness. The glow-worm shines in the night; but when the day Springs it cannot so much as be seen. When this Orient Sun Christ ariseth, to the eye of faith, then self will not be seen, it will not appear. Faith will lay thee where thou shouldst be, in the dust And then Christ will be where he should be, in the Throne. When man stands for a Cypher th...n Christ signifies somewhat indeed. When man sets down himself for a Bankrupt, then he s...es out for the unsearchable riches of Christ. O be much in exercising thy faith, and that will empty thee to purpose. This is the language of faith, Lord I am undone, do thou set me up, I am a Bankrupt, do thou pay my debt. Lord, my righteousness is but rags: my beauty, is but rottenness: my pedigree, is but baseness: my portion, mere poverty: my power, mere infirmity: Lord, here is work for thee: help Lord! This is the language of faith: and therefore it is, that Christ and faith do fit so well together. Faith hath need of everything that Christ hath, and Christ hath a supply for every want that Faith hath. As for unbelievers, they make light of Christ, they are rich, and need not his gold: they are well, and have no need of his salve. But now faith, that empties and humbles the man, and makes him to sue out to Christ: faith will fetch out all that is in Christ. Lord, here is a beggar for thy bounty Here is a Lazarus, for thy cure. Here is a palsy hand, a blind eye, here is a wound for thy salve. Christ, he comes as an open fountain, and faith brings an empty vessel. Christ comes with a full purse, and faith with an empty hand. Christ comes with an open hand, and faith with an open mouth... Christ comes giving, and faith comes gaping. Faith comes, Lord, here is a belly for thee to fill: here is a back for thee to cover. I am poor and am robbed of all, I have not a penny left, and none can help me but thee, I starve unless thou help. Thus faith comes as a hungry child fixes his eye upon the eye of his Father, earnestly looking upon him, when some relief will come to him: so doth faith upon Christ, looking when somewhat will come to him.

Secondly, By way of acceptation, receiving of Christ, To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons •...od even to them that believe on his name, John 1. 12. Faith sits like the cripple at the beautiful gate of the Temple to receive an alms. Beloved, the Gospel is the great Mart, and your Souls are the ship, and faith is the receiver, to take in the lading. O let your faith be active, that you may go away greatly loaden. As Christ said, receive you the holy Ghost, so do you receive Christ: accept of Christ, while he tenders himself to you. While he is tendering himself to you, let your Souls answer, Lord, with my whole heart do I accept thee, I take thee at thy word to all intents and purposes. I take thee not only to receive thy pay, but to fight under thy banner: not only to be justified by thy righteousness, but to be governed by thy laws. This is the great and vital act of faith, that is of absolute necessity to salvation. The Lord Jesus Christ is offered to you. In the name of the eternal God I offer him to you all; see that you take him by faith. O saith faith Lord I accept thee, you will all say we will have Christ, we must perish else: but consider it, be not rash, know the manner of your husband: if you will have Christ, you must not live as you list: you must be under government, and strict government, you must not have him and the world too; you must cast your worldly hopes over board. You must take him upon his own conditions. His condition is very low sometimes in the world, sometimes he hath a bed, and sometimes he hath none: you must run all hazards with him; you must suffer with him if you ‹› reign with him. Now what saith your faith to this? O saith faith, I will take him with all my heart. Faith saith as Ruth to Naomi, Ruth 1. 16. whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge, thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God

But how must your faith accept of Christ?

(First,) Accept the person of Christ. The Lord Jesus Christ is offered in a marriage covenant to you in the Gospel: and a marriage, is not between a person and patrimony; but person and person: true faith is not only for the benefits of Christ but the person of Christ. There is great difference between the sick man, and the sick spouses taking the physician: the sick man takes him for his skill, but the spouse for his person. The sick man takes him till the cure be done, and than values not the physician: but the spouse for hers in all conditions forever; she takes his person. Thus must your faith do; you must choose the Lord Jesus Christ, not for the salvation only that he brings, but the excellency that is in him. As Christ will not be contented with anything of yours, but you: so should you do, be contented with nothing of Christ, but himself.

Secondly, You must accept the pardon of Christ. Christ, with his person doth offer you all his ‹› . And as 'tis in marriage that then, and then only, and not otherwise shall the wife have the State. So take Christ and you have all the benefits that come by him. He comes with his pardon in his hand, and if you will accept him, you shall have his pardon by him.

(Thirdly,) The promises of Christ. All the promises are in him yea, and in him Amen. Take Christ and you may lay hold of all the promises as yours.

Thirdly, By way of exultation, rejoicing in Christ, triumphing in Christ, 2 Cor. 2. 14. Thanks be to God, that giveth us always cause to triumph in Christ. Your faith should be triumphing, you should triumph in the victory, mercy, merit, promises, riches, kingdom of Christ. O you that are believers, you have cause indeed always to triumph in Christ. what! have you received the Lord Jesus Christ? are you married to such a Husband? O how should you boast of him, O how should you please him? how should you glory in the booty that you have got? you have got a prize indeed. Thou that hast got Christ, hast a husband indeed: let your hearts rejoice in him Thou art a believer, thou art really espoused to Jesus Christ: thou mayst make as real a claim to the Lord Jesus Christ, as a wife to her Husband. And thou mayest make as real a claim to the purchase of Jesus Christ, as a wife to the state and goods of her Husband. These are not vain and empty words: no, no, there is the greatest reality in the world in this; 'tis as true as anything in the world can be true. Thou hast a real interest in the Lord Jesus Christ, and mayest boldly make thy claim to him as thine own Husband: do I speak anything but what the Lord hath spoken? you are married unto Christ that was raised from the dead, that you might bring fruit unto God, Rom. 7. 4. mark, 'tis not my word, 'tis God's word. Take heed thou dost not blaspheme: dost thou think that God doth go to deceive thee? far be it from thy thoughts. Believer, 'tis so: of a truth Christ is thine; thy husband, and thou mayst boldly lay claim to him. Consider what a husband Christ is: is not he the King of the Kings of the earth? This is he unto whom Angels, and authorities and powers are made subject: This is he whom all the Angels of God do worship: Heaven and earth are at his beck: he is exalted above all heavens, and hath a name above every name that is named: this is thy beloved and friend. O should not thy faith triumph in him?

Fourthly, By way of resignation, in giving up yourselves to Jesus Christ. Faith, as it takes Christ, so it delivers up the soul to Christ. Faith makes a happy exchange for us, giving away the man to Christ, and receiving Christ for us. Thus, between Christ and a believer, there is a mutual delivery of themselves over to one another. As faith receives Christ, so it gives up the soul to Christ, and all that it hath; Lord, saith faith, I here resign to thee: I quit all claim to myself, I am not my own: and will own it henceforth, that I have no right to myself. I give up soul and body to thee: I will hold back no part of the price. And as faith takes first the person of Christ, and then the benefits of Christ: so it gives away the person of the man to Christ, and then with the person it gives all the rest; the estate, interest, and all to Jesus Christ, thus you should be exercising your faith.

Fifthly, By way of Adoration, thus saith should put forth its self upon Christ: casting our Crowns before him: setting up the Lord Jesus Christ in the throne of his own excellency, and we should admire nothing but him, breaking in pieces all our Idols, and pulling them down, that Christ alone may be exalted.

Sixthly, By way of Appreciation, prizing and esteeming of Christ, debasing self and all other excellencies in comparison of Christ: accounting all things but dung for Christ, such was Paul's faith.

Seventhly, By way of Appropriation, so your faith should put forth itself. It should not only put forth itself in a way of Affiance only, leaning upon Christ: but in a way of assurance. You should labor to come up to this, not only to believe that Christ died for his people in general; but to believe his death was intended for you in particular to appropriate him to yourself. Thus faith acts upon Christ. This was Thomas, his faith when once it was stirred up. My Lord, and my God. Applying Christ to himself as his. Lord, saith faith, I am weak, but thou art my strength. I am a sinner, but thou art my righteousness, I am unclean, but thou art my sanctification. I am miserable, but thou art my redemption.

A SACRAMENTAL Speech grounded on,

Mark 1. 15.

Repent ye, and believe the Gospel.

MY dearly beloved brethren, you have often heard our Savior preaching to you by his Ambassadors: but now he is come to preach to you, as it were, in his own person. What was said of Abel is true of Christ, he being dead yet speaketh. Christ being dead yet preacheth to you.

But what doth Christ preach to you, now he is dead?

Why, he preacheth no other thing to you, now he is dead, than he did in his life: Repent, and believe the Gospel. That, Christ preacheth to you, faith and repentance, repentance towards God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

First, Repentance towards God, see here Christian what thy sins hath done. Now is a time to have your hearts filled with sorrow, and your faces with shame, to see what you •...ave brought upon Jesus Christ. Look upon him, every wound in his body, and thorn in his head, calls upon thee to repent. The wounds in his side, and the blood that flowed from thence, calls upon thee to repent. Now let thy repentance by stirring, seeing he calls thee to repentance, what shall stir thee up to repent, if this shall not? here you may see the Lord's severe wrath against sin. See it here in the beloved Son of God, who is slain before your eyes for your sins. Ah, Christian, if thou hadst stood with Abraham, and seen the fire of Sodom. Or with Adam, and seen God commanding, and then thrusting them out of the garden. If thou hadst been in heaven, and seen what the wrath of God did there, what work it made when the Angels sinned. Or if thou hadst been in hell, and seen and heard the damned there, how wouldst thou look upon thy sin? O see here, more than all this; God's wrath burning against his own Son, for thy sin.

O see here the love of Christ! in vain were all thy tears and sorrow, had not Christ made way for thee. O see him, and hear him speaking from the cross, my wounds shall heal thy soul, if thou wilt but repent. These hands shall work out thy salvation, if thou wilt but return and repent. Ah sinner! what is not thy soul melted yet? methinks I should hear thee making thy submission, and return to the Lord, as one that melteth at the word of his Lord. Lord is thy mind thus? shall I have all this if I will but repent? behold, I cover my head with sackcloth. I am the offender, as for this lamb what hath he done? O Lord it repenteth me of my rebellions: I lay down my weapons: I swear, I will be a resolved enemy against sin, as long as I live.

Secondly, Another thing that Christ in his costly death preacheth to you, is faith. Faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, he calls upon you to believe now he is upon his cross. Methinks $\langle \diamond \rangle$ hear him calling upon you from the cross. Believe the reality and greatness of my love. Believe the infiniteness of my power. The full expiation of all thy sins. The truth of all God's threatenings. The certainty of all my promises. Thy unquestionable right and title to the Kingdom of glory.

First, Believe the reality and greatness of my love. Methinks he speaks thus to thee, O man, what should I have done more to testify my love to thee than I have done? read all the Antiquities, and see whether there was any love like mine! thou canst not believe, but that thy parents love thee, when they take care of thee: but whose love is like mine? did these ever suffer for thee or do for thee what I have done? what are all these sufferings that I have suffered for thee? did I despise my fathers glory, and leave it for thee... & did not love $\langle \diamond \rangle$? O slow of heart to believe all that I have done and suffered for thee! if I did not love thee, what should move me to die for thee? did anything in thee? no, did any profit from thee move me? no, I knew that man is not profitable to God. Was it any returns from thee? no, I knew how thou wouldst be: how unkind thou wouldst be to me. O Christian, doubt not of my love to thee. Doubt not of my help, dost thou think that I would give myself for thee, and will not give my hand for thee? do not doubt that I will cast thee off, dost thou think that I have suffered all this for thee, and that I will cast thee off at last? no, no.

Secondly, Believe the infiniteness of my power. This is the language of Christ from his cross, believe the exceeding greatness of my power. He speaks thus: O man, what if thou shouldst have no friend but I, cannot I uphold thee? These shoulders, that did bear up under all that Hell could invent against me, shall not they uphold thee? fear not to commit thyself with confidence to me. See, I am able to keep what thou committest to my trust.

Thirdly, Believe the full expiation of all thy sins. I am here a satisfaction for thy sin. Fear not, I am thy atonement, thy peace, thy propitiation of thy sins, what though thou art empty? behold the fullness of my satisfaction, what am I here for? I am cut off, but not for myself, 'tis for thee. This is my meaning in my death: this is the end why I am upon the cross, to make expiation for sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness. All you like sheep are gone... astray, and God hath laid on me the iniquities of you all. Believe it, God will not require the debt of the principal and surety too. Dost $\langle \diamond \rangle$ trouble thee at any time? sprinkled... it but with this blood, and it will be at peace. Art thou afraid to come into the presence... of God? do but carry me with thee, and thou shalt be safe.

Fourthly, Believe the truth of all God's threatenings: here thou seest all the threatenings of God executed upon me. See here, and believe what God will do to those that go on in their trespasses. If he laid so much on me, what will he do to them? believe also his threatenings of correcting you, 〈◇〉 you sin: for he will punish your sins with rods, and your iniquities with chastisements.

Fifthly, Believe the certainty of all my promises, this is another word that Christ's cross and death speaks to you, what 〈◇〉 the meaning of this death of mine, and of this blood and satisfaction of mine, but that the covenant might be ratified, and all the promises sealed, and nothing diminished, but all my Testament and covenant might be ratified forever? Behold, this blood that flows from my wounds is sprinkled upon the people for the purifying of them. All is as sure as my death and blood can make them. Here thou seest all ratified in my blood. Man, thinkest thou that I would die with a lie in my mouth? dost thou think that I would suffer all this for thee, is I meant not to do thee good?

Sixthly, Believe thy unquestionable right and title to the Kingdom of glory. Why here thou dost see the price and ransom, the money paid down: and what meaneth all this thinkest thou, but to buy in thy name into the inheritance?

Now Christians, where is your faith? O methinks your sails should be up. Methinks you should be triumphing, though you are here in the world. As Paul, Who is he that condemns? it is Christ that died. Why? what objections can be made? what can unbelief say, that cannot be answered here in the death of Christ? shall I muster up all its force, & tell you what the death of Christ doth speak to it? give me leave to touch upon some of them.

First, methinks I hear unbelief objecting from the terribleness of God's threatenings. O says the soul, my heart melteth within me, while I hear the wrath of God threatened against sin, methinks I come lately from Mount Sinai, where I heard the Law given with the Trumpet, & a shout, and a curse pronounced upon all that kept not the words of this Law. O how can my soul bear up against all these curses?

But now how sweetly doth the cross of Christ, and death of Christ answer thy fears? Hear thy Saviors language.

O soul be not afraid, do not thou fear and flag: all these threatenings were intended against me; all were fulfilled upon me. Justice hath nothing to say to thee: all the curses are met together upon me. That is the meaning of it: that thou mayst be free, though I take in the wrath of the Lord into my own body. Oh! behold me, behold me: see how full I am of the wrath of God in body and soul: my soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death.

Methinks I should hear thee say, now Lord, I see my liberty, in thy bonds. My salvation, in thy torment and pain. I have seen thy sorrow and out-cry, and understood the meaning and intent of all: that it was to remove the curse from me. Now arise O my soul and inherit the blessing. Therefore was Christ made a curse that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles. What was the blessing of Abraham? I will bless thee, and make thee a blessing. I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee. And again, I establish my Covenant between me and thee. Rejoice, O my soul rejoice, and let my soul rejoice in God my Savior. O my soul, God hath blessed thee, and shall bless thee. Fear not, now the mouth of the Law is forever stopped thou shalt never hear one curse more of the flaming mouth of the Law. O soul, what canst thou wish for that is not laid up in the everlasting covenant? he hath said, he will be a God to thee. Canst thou be able to know the immensity of his covenant? all is made over to thee.

Second, Object. But sin begins to rise up. The soul begins to cry out of his sins: O the multitude, multitude of my sins! they are gone over my head, and I am sore afraid, I have nothing to pay my debt.

But hear now what Christ speaks to thee. This is the language of his death and wounds, fear not sin. Have I been so long with thee and dost thou not know me, Philip? so saith he to thy soul, what! been here so long with me, and conversed with me so long, and dost thou not know me yet? are thy sins infinite, and are not my mercies infinite? are thy sins great, and am not I God above all, equal with the father? O look unto me, and rest in the fullness of my satisfaction: I am thy surety. All thy debts be upon me: all thy wants are upon me, what if thou hast nothing to pay? I have enough for me and thee. I am the Scape-goat that have carried away thy sin into a land of forgetfulness, I have slain the enmity of sin upon the cross, and have reconciled you to my Father. Here is redemption, full redemption, plentiful redemption, behold, my blood speaketh peace to you. Wilt thou not believe the voice of my death and blood to thee? thus Christ's death can speak sufficiently to all that thy sins can say' against thee.

Now doth not thy faith stand upright yet, Christian? methinks I should hear thee say, Lord 'tis enough, thou hast laid down thy life for a ransom: I see my cure in thy wounds. I doubt not but thy blood is sufficient to cleanse me from all my sins.

And who now shall appear-against me? Ah Justice, once a terrible word, now I can see thy face with comfort. Once Justice was so terrible, as never was the face of a judge more terrible to the prisoner at the bar, than that to me, but now 'tis pleasing to me. Once, I had rather have fallen into the lions mouth, than to come to it. O how did my soul grow pale, and my heart ready to die like Nabal's within me, when I saw the balance held up in one hand, and the sword in the other! but now, I see, that the death of Christ and his blood shall be put into the balance with me, I am not afraid. Here now see a great wonder: the pure holiness of God taking pleasure in a sinner: and the strictest justice shaking hands with the offender, now the justice of God is become my friend.

Third, Object. O but unbelief seems yet to object from the multitude, and strength, and policy of the enemy. Methinks I see the trembling soul in the posture of the prophets man, who beheld the mountain beset with Charriots and Horses, and crying out O Master! what shall we do? If it were but flesh and blood it were not altogether so much: but 'tis principalities, and powers; who can break thorough the host of these Philistines? But Christian, look to this cross: look to a dying Christ, look what his death speaks to thee, wherefore art thou ready to fall with these fears, and ready to sink under them? methinks, I see him taking thee by the hand as he did

Peter, O thou of little faith, why didst thou doubt? look here by my cross, and see all thine enemies lie slain by my death: and what wilt thou be afraid, that thy slain-enemies will rise again, and pursue thee? methinks, soul, I should hear thee triumphing and crying out, what can you do, O my enemies? I have seen captivity led Captive: and for whom did he overcome but for me? as for me, now I will throw out the gantlet, and bid defiance to my enemies. Who is he that condemns? It is Christ that died, who shall separate us from the love (or death) of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, &c. Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors &c. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. I see now all overcome in the death of Christ. Devils, I fear you not; I behold all your legions in chains, and made captives by Christ. Death, I fear thee not; for I know that thou art slain, by him that had the power of death and devils. I know that thy commission is altered, and thou comest, not with authority to arrest me; but with an invitation, to invite me to feast with the Lord. And thanks be to God who hath given us the victory.

To the most beloved people the flock of Christ in Taunton, Salvation.

Loving and most dearly beloved,

I have lately received your affectionate letter; and though I never question your affections to me, and need no verbal testimony; yet I cannot but take it thankfully, and read it delightfully, when I see it attested under your own hands. And I cannot but tell you, you are the people of my cares, the desire of my eyes, the people of my delights, & of my prayers. My labors with you for many years, though some time attended with difficulty, and danger, yet were not tedious; but my time passed like Jacob's, when he served for Rachel and my sufferings for you are not irksome, through grace, because I trust they are for your edification, and are a seal of my love to you, and more especially of the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ, which I have long preached among you. The Lord God teach me, with humility, and thankfulness to bear such honor, that I should be set for the defense, and consirmation of the Gospel. And now, my dearly beloved, (though you should not be insensible of God's great visitation upon you, yet) I would not have you inordinately disquieted, that I am removed from you to a prison for a season; but rather imitate the Heroic virtue of that most gracious mother, in the Martyrologie; who, when the Son of her bowels came, not to a prison, but to a stake to be sacrificed in the flames for Christ, fell down on her knees, and blessed the Lord, that ever she should be so happy, as to have a Son to suffer for Jesus Christ. Ah my dear flock! how glad should 〈◇〉 be, if God would send me forthwith among you again, to feed you as in the days of old, and to go in and out before you, that you might find pasture? yet be not dismayed, fear not little flock; though you are little, and despised, and hated of all men for Christ's name sake; Christ's relation to you, and tenderness of you is such, that you cannot miscarry. He liveth, and his care liveth. The Godly wife of that worthy Cornish Divine Mr. Vincent, being left in great want, with many little Children, would often answer them, when t...y came crying about her for bread, and she had none to give, with this gracious expression, be quiet, children, our God 〈◇〉. And surely, that, my brethren, may be a quieting, comforting consideration, both for you and me, though the bread do 〈◇〉 fail. But at length this gracious woe... being left quite destitute, and her children calling upon her, when she had neither bread nor money, breaks out into a bitter weeping, which one of the little ones observing, he comes, and pulls his mother by the Apron, saying, Mother why do you weep thus? Is God dead now? such a rebuke did the Lord send her, by the mouth of a poor babe. Brethren be not dismayed, Christ liveth, and therefore let your hopes live, let your courage live, let your faith live also. Christ liveth ever, therefore let your hearts live forever, Psal. 22. 26. He liveth to make intercession for you, and from his living, you may be assured of life, John 14. 19. of your Justification, Rom. 8. 34. Of your Salvation, Rom. 5. 10.

Beloved, do but seriously think of Christ's relation to you, and you cannot want comfort. Why, he is not ashamed to call you Brethren. Even when he was entered upon his state of exaltation, risen from the dead, far above the state of mortals, he owned poor weak believers for his brethren, John 20. 17. Go to my Brethren. Math. 28. 10. Go tell my Brethren. Yea when he cometh with all his holy Angels with him, and sits upon the throne of his glory, he will own the very least, and lowest among poor believers, before all the world, for his Brethren, Math. 25. 31. with ver. 40. keep this, my beloved, as a Cordial at your heart, that Christ stands related to you as your Brother. Ah what consolation is here for a considering Christian! for, First, This may give you boldness with him, and that, both in your coming to him. and at his coming to you. I say in your coming to him. It may make you come with boldness to the throne of grace, that you have such a friend in court, that can have what he will, that is indeed all and in all in heaven: that you have a kinsman, a Brother there, a man like unto yourselves, of the same race, and nature, and so sensible of human infirmity, Heb. 4. 15, 16. Christ's human nature, by which he is a Brother to us, may make us come boldly and with full assurance, Heb. 10. 19, 20, 22. We might tremble to approach God's terrible Majesty, to come near the consuming fire, but that we have a brother like unto us, a days-man, a Mediator, the man Christ Jesus, between God and us. Again, it may give us boldness at his coming to us. Let not the Terror he will come with affright us Christians; for he is our brother, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone. Had even Dives himself a regard of his Brethren, that they might not come into that place of torment? and shall we think, Christ will send his brethren thither? How secure would he be whose life or estate were in controversy; if the matter were put into the hand of his own brother? Secondly, Then you may presume upon your interest in him. You may have boldness to speak and confidence to speed. You may make use of him, on all occasions, for yourselves, and for your friends. You cannot stretch your interest. He upbraideth not that you make too bold, or come too often, or ask too much. Thirdly, Then you may d...d upon it that he will help in extremity. (∞) friend loves at all times, and a brother is born for adversity, Pro. 17. 17. He is not such a brother as David's were Psa. 69. 8. Or as Jobs were, Job 6. 14, 15, 16, 17. He will own and delight in his, in their afflictions, Canticles 2. 14. 4. you may not question his affection. Love is the Natural duty, between Brethren, 1 Pet. 3. 8. Christ hath not only the name but the heart of a brother. He is not such a brother as Cain, that said, am I my brothers keeper, that hated his brother in his heart. Nor as Jacob, that took his brother by the heel, a supplanter, that deceived him of the birth-right. But such a brother as Joseph was, who was all along his eminent type. 1. Joseph... Received great unkindnesses, and wretched usage from his Brethren. They conspired against his life, they sold him and pitied him not, when they saw the anguish of his soul. And is not the blood of Christ to be found upon the skirts of his Brethren? Touch him, and the body will bleed upon you. Look upon his mangled body: why, these are the wounds that he hath received in the house of his friends, by the hands of his brethren: I mean by their sins. Isa. 53. 5. 2dly. He shown melting affections to his brethren after their unkindness to him. He weeped aloud over them, Gen. 45. 1, 2. to wit with tears of love, and joy. His bowels yearned over his brother, and he seeks where to weep, Gen. 43. 30. But there are no bowels to Christ's. No yearnings like to his. How unkindly had his brethren dealt with him? One sold him, another denied him, all forsook him. Yet when one would have expected a Message of d...iance he sends them a message of peace. The sweetest tidings that ever were sent; John 20. 17. Thirdly, Joseph was sent before to provide for his brethren, Gen. 45. 5. So is Christ. It is his business in heaven to prepare, and provide for his brethren. The provision you have for soul and body is from him: but all this is but as the corn to keep you alive upon the way. What is the store, that Joseph hath laid up in Egypt? the preparations that Christ hath made in heaven! Fourthly, Joseph saved the lives of his brethren, that sought his, Gen. 45. 7. And hath not Christ saved them that had their hands in his death? Fifthly, Joseph when he frowned with greatest severity, had his heart full of yearnings, and tenderness to his brethren. He spake roughly but could not forbear to turn about, and weep. Gen. 42. 24. So it is with Christ. He seems to repulse the woman of Canaan, and to put her off: but you know what was all the while in his heart. When he speaks hard sayings, and writes bitter things, and uses us roughly, his thoughts are thoughts of peace, and not of evil; peace is in his heart; He doth it but for your trial. When he seems to have forsaken you, he is but a withdrawing behind the curtain. He seems to have exposed you to perish, as Moses among the flags; but you see not how he stands like Moses his Sister behind the bush, wistly looking, what was done with her brother, the chil•... Sixthly, God so over ruled the wickedness of Joseph his brethren, that it tends greatly, to their good and his preferment. So that God made, that horrid sin in slaying Christ to be for our salvation, & his exaltation, Phil. 2. 〈◇〉, 9, 10. And the Lord hath preferred him as Pharaoh did Joseph, Gen. 41. 41, 42, 43, 44. Seventhly, Joseph provided for his brethren the fat, and the best of all the land. Gen. 47. 11. He bid, •...y, and make ready when his brethren were to be with him. Gen. 43. 16. And doth not Christ mingle his wine, and kill his Oxen, and his 〈◇〉, and think nothing is to good? Prov. 9. Math. 22. He calls for the best robe, and fatted calf, Luke 15. He prepares for you a Goshen, the good land, the inheritance of the Saints in light. Luke 22. 28, 29, 30. Eighthly, Joseph was never satisfied, though he had all the glory of Egypt, till he had his brethren down to him. As Haman, in another case; boasted of the glory of his riches, and all the things wherein the King had promoted him, above the Princes and servants of the King; and •...t, says he, all this avails me nothing, &c. so all the glory to which Christ is exalted, far above all principalities, and powers, wi•...l not content him till he hath his brethren with him; in no worse a place, and no worse a case then himself. John 17. 24. Ninthly, Joseph presents his brethren unto Ph•...oh, and leads them into his presence Gen. 47. 2. so doth Christ for believers. He leads them to the father, John 14. 6. Josephs brethren, who would otherwise have been an abomination (being herdsmen) yet were treated kindly for Josephs sake, Gen. 47. And so doth God to us for our brothers sake. To conclude, what affliction is there, wherein Christ's relation to you will not yield abundant consolation? But I have exceeded, pardon me: it is for two weeks: having been necessarily diverted from writing to you the week foregoing. The Lord teach you to live upon these cordials, in these sorrowful days. Fare you well, dear brethren: farewell in the Lord.

I am yours in the bonds of the Lord Jesus Christ.

To the much beloved, the flock of Christ in Taunton; grace, and peace.

Most Loving, and beloved.

YOur prisoner in the Lord hath sent these lines to salute you, and to call upon you, or rather to beseech you, to walk worthy of the high calling in which you, re called in Jesus Christ. Beloved, our word with you hath not been yea, and nay, uncertain and unstedfast. The prison sounds forth to you the same doctrine, that the pulpit ever did: the Lord give you to hear; and receive from the prisoner, that which was not so thoroughly embraced from the preacher. But what doth the prison preach? it preaches repentance to you. God hath called to you from the pulpit often, and now he sendeth to you from the prison, that you should repent. Who is so deaf, as not to hear the louds calls of the living God to England, that they should repent? you have long had Moses and the Prophets; but now the Lord hath sent you; as it were, what Dives asked; that one should come to you from the dead and testify to you that you should repent. From the dead, I say for you know, that in the sense of the Law, your Ministers are dead. But being dead we yet speak; yea our death; our removal, our silence doth speak; and all speaks the same thing, that you should repent. O that I could lift up my voice to you; that your streets, your houses, your ears, your hearts might be filed with this cry, repent O Taunton; repent and turn. Repent O profane, or else your iniquities will be your ruin. Repent O professors or else the Lord will not repent of the evil that he is about to bring upon us. The Lord now ringeth that thundering peal in your ears: *Cleanse your hands ye sinners, purify your hearts ye double-minded, Draw nigh unto God and he will draw nigh unto you. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned into mourning, and your joy into heaviness. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall list you up. O hear the voice of the Lord. He that hath an ear to hear let him hear. Repent, O back sliding Children, or else the Lord will fill you with your own ways. Speedily make up the breach, and endeavor to repair your decays, to regain your ground, and recover your first love. O at last bethink yourselves, from whence you are fallen, and repent, and do your first works. Repent O sluggard; when wilt thou awake out of thy sleep? what hath God kindled a fire in his Church, ready to devour us all, and wilt thou sleep with the house on fire about thine ears? What? wilt thou not ply thy bucket, and settle to thy work to purpose? wilt thou lie still and see the Tide coming in upon the? what...ot pluck thy handout of thy Bosom, nor rise out of thy bed-sloth, when the Almighty thunders from heaven, and scatters his lightning, and and sends abroad the tokens of his displeasure? repent O Laodicean. The Lord calleth to thee to be zealous and repent. Away with this lukewarm profession. Away with this heartless, listlesse, lifeless Religion. The Lord hates this halting and halving in Religion. As good not at all, as not to purpose. Never dream that lazy wishes and idle complaints, and key cold prayers, will carry it.*

Judge in your own selves; is this the seeking, knocking, striving, fighting, running, wrestling, that the Scripture everywhere requires, as necessary to all that would be saved: but especially necessary at such a day of rebuke as this is? O quicken yourselves, call up all your powers, and put you every man his strength to the rope. Cry mightily as Nineveh did. Humble yourselves greatly before the Lord as Manasseh did. Let prayer be made without ceasing night and day, if ever you mean to pray open the prisons, and recover your spiritual privileges. Repent O thou of Sardis, that hast a name to live but art... dead. The name may serve to deceive thyself, and to deceive others, but God will not be $\langle \hat{\phi} \rangle$ ed: he searcheth the heart. O prepare for ...is search and for his scrutiny. Woe unto th \bullet ..., is he pronounce of thee, and write against thee as against ...elshazzar; thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting. Hear the voice of the living God; hear and live. Remember what you have received, and heard, and hold fast, and repent: and be watchful, and strengthen the things that remain and are ready to die, lest the Lord come upon you as an enemy at unawares. Repent O worldly professor, that hast Christ in thy mouth and Mammon in thy heart. Ah what a Demas wilt thou quickly show thyself, except thou repent! how sadly will the fears of loosing thy estate betray thee! How surely will the cares of this world choke thee! how surely will the prevailing love of earthly things undo thee! except thou repent, O study the vanity and vexation of the Creatures; the emptiness, insufficiency, transitoriness of present enjoyments; the superlative excellency of Jesus Christ, and his exceeding great reward, till thy very heart do breath with the Martyr; none but Christ; and with Paul, doubtless I account all things but loss, &c. O sinner pray over, and study over these things, till thy heart be brought to a low esteem of perishing things. Walk so often with death, till thou art dead to the world, and canst look upon it, as a man would, that should peep out of his grave. Repent, O sleepers, that livest in carnal security, and layest not to heart the afflictions of Joseph. Doth the whole world ring of God's Judgments upon England, and dost not thou awake yet, and call upon thy God? is the Church afflicted, and tossed with tempests, and not comforted, and yet art not thou roused up? is the ship even filled with water, and the disciples crying; Master save us, we perish, and all in jeopardy, and yet art thou unasfected? is our Lord ready to be betrayed into the hands of Sinners, and wilt thou sleep on now? art thou not yet come to thy senses? Alas, that there should be such a disease as security going now, at such a time as this! now methinks the dumb should speak, and the dead should wake. Was the tongue of King Croesus his son, dumb from his birth, loosed when he saw his Father about to be murdered? and shall the Children of Zion see the knife even at the throat or heart of their mother; and yet be silent and unmoved? but what do I dwell on particulars? the Lord calleth on all men everywhere to repent. Repent, O ossicers, that you have not been so vigilant in the ossices which you have born, and in fulfilling the oaths that you have taken, in repressing of abounding sins as you should have been. This guilt will lie heavy at many doors, without repentance. Repent, O Masters, of your unnecessary hardness, and rigor to the bodies; but especially of your cruelty to the souls of your servants. Have you been as careful to train them up in the knowledge of their C...eator, as in the knowledge of your trades? have you taught them how to pray, as well as how to work? and instructed them in the mystery of their salvation, as much as in the mystery of their callings? have you looked for as good an account of the principles of Religion, or or of the Sermon of them, as of the task you have set them? and the work in which you have employed them? O that you had! repent, O you •...usbands, of your harshness, bitterness, not dwelling with your wives as men of knowledge. Repent, you Parents, of your fond indulgence to Children, sparing their sins, neglecting their souls. Repent you wives, of your willfulness, and frowardness, and disrespectfulness to them, towards whom the Almighty calls for your reverence and obedience. Repent, O Children of your fearful ingratitude, in slighting and disobeying your Parents, a sin under which the earth do groan. Repent you Servants, of your slothfulness, wastfulness, unfaithfulness, and eye-service, and disobedience, that all families almost are filled with the complaint of. O that there might be some way to recover the credit of Religion from the wounds, that it hath received, by the neglect of relative duties: well let every man resolve to mend one. O see what hath been amiss in your hearts, and in your houses, and set upon repenting, and reforming. Without this our prayers will return upon our own heads without an Answer. Never think the storm will cease, till the Jonas be thrown over. Beloved, this is that, that God doth wait for. Throw over the head of Sheba and the ◊ will be soon broken up.

I am apt to transgress. I shall conclude my Counsels, with my prayers, that a spirit of Repentance and Reformation may be poured out upon you, and so rest, yours in all manner of obligations to serve you and to suffer for you. Joseph Alleine.

To the dearly beloved the flock of Christ in Taunton, Salvation.

Most loving and dearly beloved,

THE care of you is continually upon me. I desire no other felicity than to serve the glory of Christ in you: and to enjoy him with you. And blessed be his name he is no stranger, neither to us, nor you. Let all his prisoners praise him: let all his people praise him. Now is the sweetness, beauty, excellency of Christ to be seen. Now may we learn the suavity of his communion, the worth of his promises, the all-sufficiency of his fullness. Now taste and see. Sit you down under the safest, sweetest shadow of his protection, and eat of his fruit. The tree is good for food, and pleasant to the eyes, (except fully blind) And a tree to be desired to make one wise. Take of the fruit thereof and eat, not as Jonathan, who tasted but a little of the honey upon the top of his rod, but eat abundantly. This is no forbidden fruit. Here is no surfeiting. You must live upon him every day, and in every duty. May everyone of you be able to say as Paul, to me to live is Christ: then you live like Christians when Christ is the staff of your life. When Christ is both its Spring and its end. When you take root in him, and grow up into him. May everyone of you be a tree of Righteousness, whose roots may spread into him, whose aspiring top may be still shooting upward, reaching out toward him: live as those that have no life but in him. And study to be able to say as Paul, that it is not you that live, but Christ living in you. You live in vain while you live not for him: without Christ you are dead while you live. You are of him, and through him, and for him. From whom shall he have glory, if not from you? the inanimate & unreasonable Creatures, cannot praise him, unless in a dumb and silent manner, as they are the occasion and incentives of our praising him. The devils and ungodly will not praise him. The silver Trumpet of his praise is found only in the hands of a few poor believers. Ah! sound you forth his praise in the world; let your lips sing, let your light shine. Let your lives be at last as a candle wasted and burnt out in holding forth the light. Now beloved, study that you may go out with comfort, that you may have your hearts as full as they can hold, with joy; to think when you are ready to breath forth your last, well my days are run out for Christ, and my strength is exhausted in the service of Christ. My time is gone, and my labor done, but my Oil is wasted in the work of God. I have spent my Fathers allowance in my Fathers business. This will make you to arise and say, I will go to my Father, with boldness and confidence: and not as the Prodigal, (when he had spent the portion of goods which his Father had allotted him) with diffidence, and fears of his being rejected. You know my business is but to bespeak you for Christ. I have four requests to present you for him. Thus are my requests, but his Commands.

First, Let the balance be turned by Christ. Let Christ and his interest turn the scale against all the world. Let him be the Pearl, and the world the dung. Let Jesus be King, and Mammon as a despised broken Idol, or as the stamped Calf. Let Christ be the prize, & the rest but loss. Let gain give way to godliness. Let credit crack rather than Conscience stretch, be nobody with the world rather than dishonor Christ, to keep up your reputation with men. Let all the flowers of pleasures wither, the paint fall off this harlots face, when set by Christ. Let the silver shrines and great Diana be as Nehushtan. 2. Kings 18. 4. And the crown fall from the head of honor, and the great Idol to come down into the dust before Jesus Christ, and lie like Dagon before the Ark, with head and hands broken off upon the threshold. Keep the world at your feet as a servant, or rather underfoot as an enemy. But if it hath the heart you are undone. Where Christ hath not the swaying-interest all is rotten at the bottom.

Secondly, Let the Bias of your wills be set towards Christ. The needle of the will was at first touched with a magnetick verttue, which turned it towards God, as the needle is turned towards the pole: but now by the fall it hath quite lost its virtue: and will stand anywhere, but where it should. But God by fanctifying grace doth new-touch this needle. & though it may (by an accidental violence) be too too easily shaken yet it will never rest at a wrong point, but be unquiet and in continual restlessness and agitation till it stand direct towards Christ. If anything but Christ would content you, you are none of his. Can you acquiesse nowhere but in him? do your wills cleave to him? is he your settled, resolved choice against all competitors? if so, doubtless it is well between you and him. Thus it must be, Christ must have your assent & consent. The judgment must prize him and the will must choose him as the chief good.

Thirdly, Let the bent of your affections be to Jesus Christ. Look upon the height of his stature, and the goodliness of his countenance, and you will say surely he is worthy. Surely this is the Lord's anointed. Frequently, and thoroughly view his excellencies, till your eye affect your heart. Let me set him among the other objects, like Saul among the people. and I must say to you as Samuel, see you him whom the Lord hath chosen. There is none like him. O let all your affections, be moved at the sight of him, and shout with the joyful people, let the King live, let Christ have all. Let Sorrow sit with the melting penitent, weeping at her Savior's feet. Let your strongest burning love be kindled, when you do but think of Christ, and fire your hearts, and so bring them forth as a flaming sacrifice to welcome him. Let fear make her obeisance, and with humble reverence and lowliest veneration bow the knee of the soul to Zion's King. Let Joy be triumphant when you meditate on Christ. And call upon the daughters of Music to praise and celebrate his excellency. Let desire be upon the wing, and spread the hands, and open the mouth wide, and pant for him. Let the most lively and pregnant hope sit by the way and look for him, and wait for his coming. And get up in every Ordinance like Zacchaeus on the Sycamore-tree that he might see Jesus as he passeth by; and big with earnest expectation of enjoying him. In a word, you must see to it that Christ be chief in your affections; That he be your chief desire; Your chief joy: And this will evidence you to be his: and without this all is unsound.

Fourthly, Let the Butt of all your Actions be no other but Christ. Whatsoever you do, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Here take your aim. Here let all your designs meet. Hither let all your motions tend. That Christ may be magnified in you, Phil. 1. 20. This is a mark undeniable. But he that hath more eye to the pleasing of men, his own advantage, or any worldly good, than to the pleasing and honoring of Christ, is no better than a Hypocrite.

I must do as much as I can in a little time, 'tis time now to close. I have given you together in these four heads the highest duties and surest characters of every true believer. I must add nothing farther, but only to send my prayers after my papers, and to let you know the Lord's prison is not without his presence, and most refreshing influence. And that your prisoner is yours

To the most endearing and beloved people, the servants of Christ in Taunton, Salvation.

Most loving and best beloved,

YOur late most affectionate lines are now in my hands, your hearts cannot but be a most grateful and welcome present to me, I return you mine, not willingly, but thankfully, rejoicing to be yours; while the Lord will your preacher; and while the Lord will your prisoner; still yours. I acknowledge I am not my own. If I have any interest in heaven, it is yours, to be improved for you. If I have any talents of goods they are consessedly yours, your claim, your stock. By the grace of God I am what I am. I have nothing, but what I have received from above; and I have received for your use. I love to think how much I am yours. Make your claim with freedom; nothing can please me more. My strength is yours; my labor, my liberty, my losses yours: Ultimately Christ's, but nextly yours. I accept with all thankfulness your manifold respects. May whatever honor you put on me reflect upon Christ, whose I am, and whom I serve. He is all, and therefore I must needs be nothing. Let no man set me above my place. I am too to selfish (to my shame and grief I acknowledge it; may your prayers be the cure of it) yet surely, I should choose to be lower, so Christ might sit the higher in all your hearts, I am only the friend of the Bridegroom. My soul rejoiceth to hear how fast you stand, how close you cleave to him; my Joy is now fulfilled. What greater joy to the friend of the Bridegroom, than to hear the Bridegrooms voice, how sweetly he converses with his Bride, and she with him, and to see the sweet passages of love between them, when he hath been a means to bring them together? This is my joy, it refreshes me; I am full of consolation, to hear how tender he is of you; to see him spreading the skirts of his love, the wing of his power and care over you. Happy thou! Who is like unto thee O people? A people saved of the Lord, the shield of thy strength, the sword of thine excellency. My dearly beloved, let the name of Jesus be more sweet and precious than ever to you. Verily, I am but his spokesman. Forget me, neglect me, anything if you will but love him, and adore him, and admire him the more. I rejoice, as to hear the sweet voice of the Bridegroom to you, so to hear of your love and $\langle \diamond \rangle$ to him. Surely, the Lord hath a singular blessing for you. A... poor and despised d...spised, the Butt of human malice, the eye-sor... of thy potent enemies! The Archers have shot sorely at thee, the Hunters have made thee the deer of the Chase, singled from the rest of the $\langle \diamond \rangle$, and designed for the Game, for the prey of the ...ungry pursuers, quick upo... the scent, following upon the scent, with full cry; and yet the beloved of the Lord $\langle \diamond \rangle$ in sasety by him, $\langle \diamond \rangle$, $\langle \diamond \rangle$ cov...reth thee all the day long: thou dwellest between his shoulders. O people of desires, hear the ...rauld of God: (glorious office! Lord how unworthy am I of this strange grace, who am not worthy to stoop down and unloose the latchet of thy shoes!) yet here me as an $\langle \diamond \rangle$ of God; unto you O people, it is commanded that you kiss the Son. That you shall down and worship, not the human Idol, but him whom Jehovah hath set up, and sworn that every k...e shall bow, and every tongue confess to him, or be cast into the burning siery surnace os his tormenting wrath, seventimes hotter, yea seventy times seven than $\langle \diamond \rangle$ was. Unto you it is commanded that you receive his mark in your foreheads, by open and bold profession; in your hands, your right hands by suitable works, in a holy diligent, active conversation; above all in your hearts, there he must be set as a seal (as well as write upon the palms of ...our $\langle \diamond \rangle$) by most vehement servant affection. Let everyone of your hearts be all on fire with strongest burning love to the name of Jesus, and offered as a flaming sacri... to him.

Beloved, I am afraid almost to tell you what Christ looks for from you. I think of his mercies to you with fear and great joy. Know my beloved, and remember, that he Looks for great things from you; you have received much, and God will $\langle \diamond \rangle$ much. I beseech you be not as other people. My mouth is open to you, my heart is enlarged, but my time is very straight. Sleep hath departed from my eyes to write a few lines unto you: but I am upon your service when you know it not; yet I cannot end, without telling you that you had need look to it, that you be in all things more than ordinary, because the Lord looks for extraordinary prosiciency from you.

Brethren let your hearts be entire with God; be abundant in secret Duties, Prayer, Meditation, Self-examination, Watchfullness, Self-denial. Let none of you be another thing in your Families or Closets, from what he is in the Assembly, and the open profession that he makes. Look to the heartwork, See that you be truly, thoroughly and unreservedly the Lord's. Beware lest with any of you a secret root of Hypocrisy, should spoil a forward and goodly profession. Care above all things in the world, to approve your hearts to the piercing eye of the ...lous God. Let your good works shine before men, but reckon yourselves to be no more, than what you are in secret. Maintain a holy jealousy of yourselves, till upon much prayer, and trial, and self-observation, you have found out by Scripture-marks the certainty of your state. But I intrench on other things to wade thus far. To my keeper I commend you, and with dearest loves to you all in the Bowels of our Lord, I remain

Your Ambassador in Bonds. Joseph Alleine.

My dear father and brother Norman remembers you tenderly, desiring you to hold fast what you have received and heard, and that you be holy, harmless, exemplary, and without offense in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation.

A Practical CASE on

Phil. 3. 13, 14.

This ONE thing I do, I press toward the Mark.

Q. How may we come to make Religion our business?

Rule. 1. You must thoroughly acquaint yourselves with the rule and the compass that Religion steers by. Unless the Mariner know every point of his Compass, he is like to make but foul work of it. The word is a believers Compass, Gal. 6. 16. As many as walk according to This rule, &c. A believer walks by Rule, and by this Rule, the Rule of the word; you can never manage the business of Religion, except you do thoroughly know, and often eye your Rule, and put the rule to your work. How can you trade religiously unless you know the Rules you are to deal by? Or pray rightly, if ignorant of the Rules you are to pray by? Beloved, the commandment is exceeding broad, and prescribes you Rules for your whole Man, and sor the right behaving of yourselves in every part of your conversation; Oh hide the word in your hearts! lay up the Rules you are to work by; and the Rules that you are to give by; the Rules that you are to speak by; and the Rules that you are to hear by; and the Rules that you are to examine yourselves by: Be sure there be no part of your conversation, but that you have some Rules that you do set to yourselves about it.

How can you carry yourselves Religiously in your Relations, unless you do conscientiously observe the Rules that you are to carry yourselves by? If wives do not know their Rules, and husbands their Rules, and servants their Rules, and children their Rules, how can you bring your profession to anything? beloved as ever you would make anything of Religion, know the Rules of your places, set it down with yourselves, you husbands, you wives, you children, you servants; these be the Rules that I will walk by, and wherein I sail of these Rules I will see my error, and study to come up to what is lacking.

Resp. 2. You must have the whole lump of the heart leavened and seasoned with Religion, Matth. 13. 33. The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto leaven which a woman hid, &c. The word is this leaven, The heart is this lump in which this leaven is hid: now when the whole lump is thoroughly seasoned, then their will be such a suitableness between the heart and the work, that Religion will become a pleasure. A true Christian hath the law of the Spirit of Life within him, he hath a transcript of the word in his soul. Now where the law of Religion is in the heart, there will be a love of, delight in, and propensity to the work of Religion, Rom. 8. 2.

Heb. 8. 10. I delight to do thy will, thy law is within my heart, Psal. 40. 8. who naturally careth for your state, Phil. 2. 20. where Religion hath taken deep root in the heart, the concerns of Christ will become its natural care. Now that which is natural is delightful, and when a man loves his work, he will be much in it. Again, that which is natural is constant, so that when the heart is naturalized and habituated to Religion, the man will constantly follow it. To a heart thoroughly sanctified, Religion is the very Element it lives in, whereas a carnal heart in holy exercises is like a fish out of the water, it cannot away with the strictness of a holy self-denying life, when the heart is renewed, and made spiritual, twill naturally mind the things of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 5. Joh. 3. 6.

Rule. 3. You must have these six Principles inwrought and deeply engraven into your souls.

Prin. 1. That Religion is the very end of your being, that you were made and maintained for. This is the end and use of all your powers and faculties, That you may serve and glorise the God that made you, He made you for himself, Prov. 16. 4. For his pleasure you are and were created, Rev. 4. 11. Oh man look upon thyself; think whence thou art, and for what a little while since thou wast not, how camest thou to be? hath not the hand of God framed thee? Think with thyself, wherefore serve all these powers and faculties? To what end were they given me? what to eat, and drink, and sleep, and sport? If I had been a brute, I could have done this, why should it repent the Lord that he hath made me a man, that he hath given me an understanding soul? wherefore have I reason above the rest of the Creatures? but that I should understand the Law of my Creation, and the end of my being, and know my makers ends, and do his pleasure? Better I had never been born, than not to answer my end. Better I had been a Brute, than a Man, unless I glorify God with my understanding and employ my powers and faculties in his service.

Oh let these thoughts live daily upon your hearts, fix it upon yourselves that you are of no use nor worth in the world, except you serve your makers ends: that he is the Potter, and you the Clay; and that you are good for nothing, except you are for the use of him that formed you: think with yourselves; Is it not pity so excellent a piece of God's workmanship, as man is, should be all in vain? That God should lay out so much of his power and wisdom, and grace upon thee, and loose his end at last? That he should furnish Man completely for the end he was made for, and send him into the world to dispatch his business, and Man should forget his errand, and neglect the very end of his being?

Beloved, the reason why men do mind Religion no more, is beause they do mistake their business. And is it not pity, that when Man only of all the vissible Creatures hath an understanding to know his end, he only should mistake and miss his end?

Prin. 2. That look as you do manage the business of Religion, so are you made or marred to all Eternity, settle it upon your hearts, that if this business doth miscarry, you are undone for evermore; you may miscarry in any other business, and yet do well enough at last; your goods may be wreck'd, your friends disengaged, your times spilled, and yet you may be happy; but if you do not go through with the business of Religion you are undone men. This made Paul to ply the Oars, and follow it with such diligence, 1 Cor. 9. 26, 27. So run I, so fight I,

&c. This made him engage with might and main, and put forth every limb in the race, because his Eternal undoing lay upon it: He runs through fire and water, he doth not beat the Air, and brandish his sword like a vapouring coward; he is not like the Fencers that strike as if they could kill each other at every blow, but mean one another no hurt: no, he is earnest, he fights as for the precious Life, least otherwise after all his Preaching and pains he should prove a Castaway, 1 Cor. 9. 27. Sirs, you had need look how you do carry it now, Immortality, Eternity hangs upon it, your patient continuance in well doing, will bring forth Eternal life; but you miss all, if you do not keep doing, and doing well, and patiently continue so doing; If you come short of this, your portion is indignation and wrath.

Sirs, consider where you are, and look about you. Oh you careless sinners, you remiss and Luke-warm Christians, consider what is before you. The furnace is ready heat for you, if you go not through with your work. The Crown is ready prepared, if you hold out in your race; you are speeding on to Eternity, as fast as the wings of time can carry you; and that is more swiftly, than the Eagle flying in the Air.

Believe it, Religion is no trisling matter If thou be careless and idle, and remiss here, thou art a damned Man. If a Man be upon trial for his Life, I warrant you will find him serious here. If a man have a business that will prove his utter ruin, if it miscarry, depending; be sure he will stretch his wits, and engage his interest, and turn every stone. Beloved the reason why Religion is minded with so little care, is because Men do not consider the consequence of Religion. Sirs, can you die, can you burn? If not, take heed of trisling in Religion, and selling Heaven for want of a little Pains-taking. Oh where ever you be unserious, be sure you be serious and in earnest in the business of Religion, and that you may be so, let this ever dwell upon your hearts, that halving and trisling will undo all.

Prin. 3. That nothing is well done except it be Religiously done. Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus. Whatever you do, do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. Col. 3. 17. Remember, that the rules of Religion do not only reach your praying, hearing, almesgiving, &c. but your eating, drinking, trading, marrying. You must not think to put off God with an hour in the morning, and an hour in the evening; you must be serving him throughout the day, managing your callings, visits, discourses, according to his rules. Count that arrow lost, that is not levelled at some Religious end; that hour lost that is not spent Religiously, that visit lost, in which you have not promoted the ends of Religion in yourselves and friends. Count that you eat amiss, unless you eat Religiously. So much of Religion as there is in your actions, so much there is of true gold, so much as there is of self and carnal ends, so much embasing mettle is mingled therewith; your lying down, and rising up must be managed Religiously, or else they are not well managed; and you must impose it upon yourselves, to be serving God not only on your knees, but in your shops, at your Tables, in your journeys, that God may be glory...ied by you in all things.

Prin. 4. That the Trade of Religion of all others, yields the sweetest pleasure, and surest gain. A true Christian is a Merchant Man that dealeth in no small matters, but for goodly Pearls, Mat. 13. 45. A holy Life is a spiritual trading, Mat. 25. 16. Now there is no Trade to this. A Believer Trades for Grace and Glory: Oh how glorious is the prize, and how excellent and unvaluabable is the income of Religion! Wisdom is more precious than Rubies, all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared to her, Read Prov. 8. 11. & Prov. 3. to the 19. They that come from the Indies laden with Gold and Spices, with Pearls and Diamonds, have but a poor Trade in comparison of a Christian: follow the work of Religion to purpose, and you will find the true Riches flowing in upon you; your faith will grow exceedingly, and your love will abound, and as riches increase, your hearts will be set upon them, and your gains will increase your diligence. Every man will be dealing in that commodity, that yields great profit. The reason why Men have so little heart for Religion is because they have secretly an opinion that there is little to be got by it. They reckon an hour spent in Religion, to be an hour lost. They say in their hearts. It is in vain to serve God, Mal. 3. 14. And what profit should we have if we pray to him? Job 21. 15. But when a man tastes the pleasure, and sins the gain of Religion, then he will set to it to purpose, and like the wise Merchant employ all his stock here, Mat. 13. 44, 46.

Beloved, as ever you would go through with the work of Religion, you must have your hearts thoroughly possessed with the advantage and profit that comes in by Religion. when a man doth think he can benefit himself more other where, he will have little heart to follow after Christ, but when he knows not where to be better, then he will stick resolvedly to him, John. 6. 66, 67, 68. There are two great Pillars upon which Religion stands; The one is a belief that God is, and the other that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, Heb. 11. 6. Well let this dwell upon you then, that you cannot better your state, nor promote your happiness any way in all the world, so much as by Religion. No pleasure, nor profit to that of Religion, Riches and honor are with her, all her ways are pleasantness, she is a tree of Life to them that lay hold upon her, and happy is he that retaineth her, Prov. 3. 17, 18. Here is true delight, Psal. 40. 8. Rom. 7. 22. Here is meat and drink, John 4. 34. work and wages, Psal. 19. 11.

Pr. 5. That your time is short, and your work great, and must be done now or never. Our Savior made Religion his business, Luke 2. 49. And Oh how busy was he! He went up and down doing good; and so much was he taken up with his work, that he had not time to take his bread; yea his carnal friends, seeing how earnest he was, said he was besides himself, and began to lay hold on him, Act. 10. 38. Mark 3. 20, 21. And what did put him upon this earnest diligence? The sense of the shortness of his time, John. 9. 4. Oh Sirs remember with him, that now you have a day to work in, and you have but a day, and the night is hastening upon you, when there is no work to be done: no more praying, no more hearing, no more exhorting, nor admonishing. Now serve your generation, now exhort one another daily; do good with your Estates; call upon your friends daily, for it must be now or never, let it ever dwell upon you, That there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou art going, and that will put you upon doing the work of Religion with all your might. Be convinced of the weight of your work, and that will make you answer intervening disturbance that would take you off, as Nehemiah did, Chap. 6. 3. Then remember of what dreadful consequence tis, your salvation is at stake, and therefore you must work it out with fear and trembling.

Prin. 6. That except you make it your business, all your Religion is in vain. While you halt and halve it in Religion, you come but half way to heaven. Settle it upon your hearts, that except you are throughout Religious, you are Religious to no purpose. Be sure you shall never come to heaven except you seek it in God's order, Mat. 6. 33. First seek, &c. It were not suitable to the wisdom of God, so to undervalue his Christ and glory, as to throw them away on those that account other matters better worth their pains and care.

Rule. 4. You must have the love of God and Religion, lying next your hearts; Love is a busy Grace, 1 Thes. 1. 3. Your labor of Love. We may say of Love, as Solomon of the virtuous woman, she layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff, she eateth not the bread of idleness, she worketh willingly with her hands, Prov. 31. Love will constrain you, and put you upon a willing and dilligent keeping God's commandments, 2 Cor. 5. 14. 1 John. 5. 3. Get your hearts in love with the Laws and Waies of God: who more busy than David? Morning, evening, and noon, he was praying and praising, yea talking and thinking of God and his ways, all the day, and all from his love to them, Psal. 55. 17. & 119. 147. & 118. & 71. 24. Oh how I love thy Law! Psal. 119. 97. Lord I have loved the habitation of thy house, Psal. 26. 8.

You must beware of taking too much of the world into your hands. When a man's heart and head is full as it can hold of worldly care and businesses, and he cannot tell which way to turn himself, in a crowd and throng of worldly affairs, how can the care of Religion live in such a ones heart? Luke 10. 41, 42. If Martha will trouble herself about many things, the ONE THING needful shall be neglected. You must buy, and marry, and weep, and rejoice, and trade, and care for these things, as if you did it not; not laying too much stress upon these things, nor engaging too eagerly in seeking after them, or else you will neglect the better things, and learn to pray, and hear, and read, as if you did it not, 1 Cor. 7. 30. Tis true that the work of your callings is part of your business for Heaven; but then you must be sure to keep your affairs so at command, as that you may have so much room for daily Prayer and Meditation, and self-reflection, as may season your worldly business with Religion, and sanctisie it to you, that it may become a help, and not a snare.

Rule 6. You must always work as under your Masters eye. When the Masters eye is known to look on, there is as much work done in an hour, as many times is done in two, when the sense of his oversight doth not quicken the workman, Psal. 16. 8. I have set the Lord always before me.

Rule 7. You must ever carry your eye upon your mark. So did Paul in the text, I press towards the Mark, for the prize of the high-calling of God in Christ, The mark that a Believer ay...s at, is God's Glory, and his own, that God may be glorified in him, and he with God. This glorious prize will animate you to your work, and swallow up the sense of labor and difficulty, and make you for the joy set before you, to endure the Cross, and despise the shame, Heb. 12. 2. Paul carried the Crown incorruptible in his eye, and that made him with patience invincible to run, and fight, and keep under his body, 1 Cor. 9. 25, 26, 27. All the afflictions, and reproaches that attended God's poor people and ways, in the time of their thralldom, could not discourage Moses, when he eyed the recompense of reward, Heb. 11. 25. 26. Keep heaven in sight, and your work will go on with pleasure, and all your difficulties will seem light and easy, and not worthy once to enter into comparison with the expected bliss, 2 Cor. 4. 17 18.

Rom. 8. 18.

Rule 8. You must at the entrance of every action, remember the Rules that you are to act by. Else in vain do you receive and lay up Rules, if when occasion is, you do not apply them to the particular Case. To what purpose have you rules for prayer, if you do not remember and use them when you come to prayer? To what purpose have you rules to examine yourselves by, if you do not observe them in examining yourselves accordingly? As ever you desire to make anything of your Religion, remember when you come to your tables, the rules that you are to eat by; when you go to your callings, make visits, read, or hear the word, be sure you think on the rules that you are to read by, or discourse by, or hear by, &c. You cannot think of God in every motion, but with a little pains, watchfulness, and prayer, you may come to this, to mind your rule and your end at the entrance of every solemn action. And this I desire you to enjoin upon yourselves, and take a daily account of yourselves, how tis performed. This would be indeed to keep up the power of Christianity. Oh be at the pains to put to this, and you will know what it is to walk with God, and to be in the fear of the Lord all the day long, and will have learnt that happy •...sson, To walk up and down in the name of the Lord, Prov. 23. 17. Zech. 10. 12.

Rule 9. Be sure every morning to set out to a right point of the Compass. If a Man takes a wrong turning and misseth his way at setting forth, he goes miserably out, it may be, a great part of the day, cut out your business in the moning, and let your aim be well; Set the hand of your watch to a right point, and wind it up carefully, and that will be a means to keep it right •...oughout the day. Never rise from your beds but with some such thoughts as these. I will set forth this day in the name of God. Religion shall be my business this day. I will surely spend this day for Eternity, David would begin with God, Ps•...l. 139. ver. 18. & 5. 3.

Rule 10. Let the present days practice be still the me•...ding of the past days errors. If you would go through with the work of Religion, you must take this course. Every evening strictly to examine yourselves about your whole carriage that day with reference to your Duties, Sins, Hearts, Tongues, Tables, Callings, as I have elsewhere directed you; and when you find yourselves tardy in anything this day, be sure to amend it the next day. Was the Appetite too much indulged? when you sit at meat the next day remember the error, and hold the reins faster then. Do you find that you were not heavenly in your discourse? be sure that you be not caught in the same fault again the next day. Have you let loose your Passions, or given your tongues the reins? be humbled, and be sure that you be not caught again the next day in the same fault; else to what purpose are all yourself-examinations? Psal. 119. 59. In vain do we think on our ways, except we turn our feet to God's Testimonies.

Rule 11. You must deny yourselves, and keep under your carnal lusts and affections. Where self bears the sway, that will set you on work, and you shall have enough to do to follow its carnal designs. If you 〈◇〉 your lusts and earnal assections to command you, to be sure they will find you work enough, you then will have little room, and little leisure, but these will be all the day long calling upon you to gratify. One while the appetite will be calling, and there must be time to give to that what it craves, another while revenge will be calling, and employing you to contrive how to vent it, and give it satisfaction; another while pride will set you on work to satisfy that: and then lust will be calling that you must gratify; and then covetousness will be chiding that you have neglected it, and be putting you on satisfying that. Thus your lusts will find you business night and day; and your employment will be to make provision for the flesh, Rom. 13. 14. Get these therefore under, or else the business of Religion will never, can never go on.

Psalm 144. 3.

Lord, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him? or the son of man, that thou makest account of him?

The Psalmist in the foregoing words, had eminently set forth the strange goodness and Grace of God towards him, upon which he breaks out into admiration of him, that ever God should look upon him. What is man, &c.

Hence observe.

Doct. That it is a wonder above all wonders, that ever the great God should make such account of such a thing as man.

This I shall open to you in these three generals.

- 1. It will appear if you consider what a great God the Lord is.
- 2. What a poor thing Man is.
- 3. What a great account the great God hath of this poor thing Man.

First, If you consider what a great God the Lord is. And here I may be confounded, to think that I can speak no more of his greatness. When I am studying to speak to you of his greatness, that comes to my mind, canst thou by searching find out God? Alas, we may all complain as Jobs friends did, Job 8. 9. We are but of yesterday and know nothing, yet notwithstanding, though we are not able to comprehend, much less to express the greatness of God; yet something we may see, and accordingly should conceive of it, and should labor to set it out to others.

It is seen in his Works, and Word.

1. In his Works. Herein God doth discover to us his wonderful greatness, Job 36. 24. 25. Remember that thou magnisie his work which men behold. Every man may see it, man may behold it afar off. Man may see afar off if he do... but cast his eye as he runs, what a great God that is that made all the world. If we do but cast our eyes upon the Fabric of the world that he hath made; if we look down-ward, and see how every creature serveth its end that it was made for: if we see how the earth hangs upon nothing; if we are in our wits what should we do but praise whatever we are doing? whether plowing, or eating, &c. this Hymn is to be sung to him, It was he that gave me strength to work, and appetite to eat, Psal. 19. 1, 2. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy work; day unto day uttereth speech, &c. Every day cloth preach to us this Doctrine, what a great, wise, good, glorious God he is, who doth order every season, and their occurrences, Rom. 1. 20. Dost thou find thy heart begin to be listed up with pride? Do...t thou begin to forget thy maker? Do but behold his Works; see if thou canst do any such thing: say, let there be light, and see whether there will be light. Try whether thou canst bring forth such a thing as this. This doth God demand of Job, Chap. 38. But if man cannot come near any of these works of God, then let him adore his power and greatness, and subject himself to him.

2. In his word. What glorious descriptions do we find made of him in the Scriptures? Psal. 104.
1. O Lord thou art very great, &c. Job. 25. 4, 5, 6. Man, in comparison of God, is but a worm, a vile worm, as the word signifies; such a thing is man. A worm that is bred in flesh, which is the wor...t of all. Now is it not a wonder of all wonders that God should look upon such a one as man? That God that humbles himself to behold the things that are done in heaven, that this great God should look upon us? or take any pleasure or delight in us? O how should we admire this Grace!

Secondly. If you consider what man is. What a Vain, what a Vile thing he is.

1. What a vain thing he is. His vanity appears,

1. By God's testimony of him. 2. By man's own hand subscribing to it.

(1.) By God's testimony of him, Isa 40. 15, 16, 17. All nation before him are as vanity. They are as the drop of a (∅) , and as the small dust of the balance, &c.

(2) You shall see man's own hand subscribing to it. If you will but look into other places of Scripture, you shall see man setting his own hand to it, Psal. 39. 11. Surely, every man is vanity, mark, every man. Men of all Ranks and conditions, Psal. 62. 9. Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are alye: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity. The Psalmist doth not speak it rashly, but as one that had trial of what man was; and yet he g...ves this as the result of his experience and trial, that if man were put into one balance, and vanity in the other, it would weigh... him down. So Psal. 39. 5. Verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity: Not vain, but vanity itself: yea every, yea altogether, yea at his best state, he is altogether vanity. Job 11. 11. For he knoweth vain men. That is the proper Epethite that belongs to man. Man is a vain thing, and that in two particulars. He is Worthless, and Useless.

1. He is a worthless thing, Job 11. 12. For vain man would be wise. In the original 'tis Empty man. Man is by Nature empty of every good thing. So the Apostle, in me, that is in my flesh dwelleth no good thing. There is nothing that is spiritually good left; all is lost by man's Apostasy from God. Yea, man is not only nothing worth, but worse than nothing. We use to say that a man that is over head and ears in debt, is many thousands (it may be) worse than nothing: so is man, he is infinitely in his makers debt, and cannot come out, as we acknowledge in that petition forgive our debts; where we acknowledge two things. (1) That we are in debt to God. (2) That we cannot pay him. This is the condition of man, he is infinitely in God's debt, & he cannot pay anything: he hath nothing to pay.

2. He is a useless thing. Able to do the Lord no service, Eph. 2. 1. Yea when he is recovered by grace, 'tis very poor service, that he can do for his maker. And therefore our Savior teacheth his disciples to say they are unprofitable servants when they have done their duty. Yea we are so far from doing him any acceptable service, that we cannot but sin against him, and offend him. Now put these things together, and doth it not appear to be a wonder that God should make such account of man? Is he a vain thing, Worthless and Useless, and yet will God set his heart upon him? what a wonder is this!

2. Man is a vile thing. If he were only empty of good, this were something; but now he is not only empty of all that is good, but he is full of all that is displeasing to God, Job 15. ver. 16. Man drinketh in iniquity like water. This is the condition of man, he drinketh in sin as the fish drinks in water: Sin is his proper Element. The filthy carcass lying before us is not more loathsome to us than we are to God in our sins. Man, before God in himself is like a carcass lying in its crawling worms. Now is it not strange that so vain, yea, so vile a thing as man have any room in God's heart? How should we cry out with the Psalmist here in the text, Lord what is man, &c.

Thirdly. This will appear by considering What great account this great God hath of this poor thing man.

What great account God hath of him, will appear (1) In what he hath laid out upon him. (2) In what he hath laid up for him. (3) By the near union he hath taken him into, with himself. (4.) By his near relation to him. (5) By his entertaining such familiar communion with man.

First. If you consider what God hath laid out upon him. The care, and the cost.

1. The care. Ah brethren, this is strange grace, that the infinite God should lay out his care, his thoughts upon such a thing as man is, yet thus he doth, 1 Pet. 5. 7. For he careth for you. Now this will appear worthy of your admiration, if you consider what this care is. 'Tis a Paternal care, a Personal care, a Perpetual care.

1. It is a Paternal care. A Fatherly care. As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. So Mal. 3. 17. God calls them his Jewels. Now if a man's house be on fire, he will be sure to save his Jewels. But if a man's children be in the house, he will rather loose his Jewels than his children. And if he saveth any Child, then that that is the dutiful child. So God will spare them as a son that serveth him.

Now this Paternal care is, upon that account, Natural, Constant, Vigorous.

(1) It is a natural care which is in fathers, and this is in God. This the Apostle commend ed Timothy for, Phil. 2. 20. That he (ϕ) rally cared for their state. That which is n...tural is delightful: so is God's care of his people; he takes pleasure in it, in his projects and designs to bring his people to glory. Yea God is so Ambitious (as we may so speak,) that he is angry when we will not cast our cares upon him. He would have us be careful for nothing.

(2) Upon this account, it is also constant and uninterrupted. That whis is Natural is constant. As the fire doth naturally give heat, therefore it always doth so. But that which is contrary to Nature is quickly gone: As if you heat water over the fire, the heat is quickly gone again; because it is against nature. Now God's care is Natural, and therefore Constant.

(3) That which is Natural is vigorous. That which is done against Nature is done slowly. As when you cast a stone upward. Now God's care is a Natural care, and therefore a vigorous care.

2. It is a Personal care. God will look to us himself, Isa. 66. 2. It is true God doth put others to look to us, but he will not trust us with these, but he will look to us himself.

3. It is a perpetual care. As when Daniel was to be cast into the Lions Den, Dan. 6. 14. The king set his heart upon Daniel to deliver him, &c. So God's heart is set upon us. He is bent for our good, he is still designing for us, Psal. 40. 5. Many O Lord — are thy thoughts to us ward, &c.

2. As it appears by the care, so by the cost that God hath laid out upon man. (1) The Riches of his love. (2) The gold of his grace.

1. The riches of his love. The free grace, favor and love of God is called Riches in Scripture, Ephes. 1. 7. The Apostle speaking of the Riches of Christ shows how unsearchable they are, Ephes. 3. 8. So Rom. 11. 33. O the depth of the Riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. Now all these were laid out to determine man's deliverance. They are glorious Riches that God doth lay out upon his sons and servants, Rom. 2. 7. And well may these be called Riches. There must be two things to make Riches, there must be (1) Plenty. (2) Preciousness.

First. There must be Plenty. For a little of never so good, will never make a man Rich.

Secondly, There must be Preciousness, for abundance of that which is worthless will never make a man Rich. Now both of these are in God's Mercy, there is plenty, and 'tis precious. The Mercy and Grace of God is very precious. David sought most for this, when others set their hearts upon other things, Psal. 4. And as 'tis of great worth, so 'tis of great plenty. It is abundance of grace that God doth put forth in repairing man's Nature, and making him a New Creature.

But this great cost of God upon us will further appear, in that he hath laid out upon us. (1) His Creatures. (2) His Christ.

1. His Creatures upon us. That he should lay out all these Creatures upon us, These Heavens, and this Earth to be for the comfort of man, Oh how doth this discover God's goodness to man! This made David admire him, Psal. 8. 5, 6, 7, 8. Here you may see what an account God doth make of man, in that he should make him a little god among the Creatures; that their sheaf should bow to his sheaf; that they must spend and be spent for man: yea, the invisible Creatures, the Angels, they must be ministering spirits, for them who are the heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1. ult.

2. In that he hath laid out his Christ upon us. This was a costly gift indeed. It is much that God should give his Creatures to die for us, to give us food: but oh that he should give us his Christ to die for us, Oh how incredibly hath the Lord advanced man in this! In this he hath abundantly shown how man was esteemed by him. This shows that he had a great regard to us. We were redeemed by the blood of Christ, which was the blood of God himself, Act. 20. 28. Now is it not an admirable thing, that so mean a purchase should be made with so great a price? This was that which God did commend his strange love with, (1 Joh. 3. 16.) that he laid down his life for us. Look into thyself man, what hast thou that thou shouldst have this great purchase to be laid out for thee? Oh How should man be continually in the praise... of God!

2. In the gold of his grace, that God hath la...d out upon m...n. Grace is called the true Riches, and this hath been laid out upon man, Rev. 3. 18. It is called gold, yea 'tis much more precious than gold. When you see the Qu...n attired in Gold, Psal. 45. all this is to set forth the Grace that is upon the Saints of God. I tell thee Christian, thou that hast but one dram of Grace, he hath give... thee more than if he had given thee a whole world. In the Creation there were some footsteps of God upon other Creatures; but upon man there was his Image. And now that God should distinguish thee from others by one dram of Grace, this is admirable!

Secondly. It appears what great account this great God hath of this poor thing, Man, in what he hath laid up for him. This makes the Psalmist to cry out as one overcome with admiration, Psal. 31. 19. O How great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee! It is much that God hath laid out for us, but more that he hath laid up ...or us. The Psalmist could not express it, he could but $\langle \diamond \rangle$ it only, 1 Cor. 2. 9. Eye hath not seen, nor $\langle \diamond \rangle$ heard, neither have entered into the h...rt of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. Eye hath no... seen. The eye of man hath seen much; especially those that have travailed in other Countries. But the eye of man hath not seen anything that may be compared with this that God hath prepared. Nor ear heard. We have heard o... more than we have seen; We have heard of gold Mines and the like, that are in other parts o... the world; but the ear hath not heard of anything like this. And though the eye hath seen much, and the ear hath heard more; yet the heart of man can conceive of more again; yet the heart of man cannot conceive of what God hath laid up for them that love him.

Now lay these two together, what God hath laid out upon man, and what he hath laid up for him, and will it not appear that the great God makes a great account of man? How can you choose but cry out in the words of the Psalmist, What is man, &c. But,

Thirdly. This will appear by that near union that he hath taken him up into, with himself. Oh how wonderfully hath God dignified man in this? By uniting his Nature to the nature of man, as 'tis in the second person of the Trinity, Joh. 1. 14. And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, or, in us. That God should take up the nature of man into personal union with himself, what an unspeakable dignity is this! So the Apostle, he took not upon him the nature of Angels, but the seed of Abraham, Heb. 2. 16. Herein is man dignified above the Angels of glory, in the near union between God and man in the Godhead. This is that which the Angels do desire to pry into: well may the Apostle say, great is the mystery of godliness: and this is the top of it, God manifest in the flesh. Greatly hath God dignified man in these two things, that Man should be partaker of the Divine Nature; and that God should partake of the Humane Nature.

1. That Man should partake of the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. Oh this is a great privilege that we should bear the Image of God. Let the world scorn at holiness; yet I tell thee, Man, that hast one dram of grace, he hath done more for thee, than he hath done for all the world. How ever this is out of fashion in world, I am sure 'tis not in heaven. O glory in this, you that are made partakers of God's Nature.

2. In his taking upon him our Humane Nature. In this, man's Nature is more exalted yet. The Nature of Man in Christ is lifted up far above all Principalities and Powers, 1 Pet. 3. ult. Angels, and Authorities, and Powers being made subject unto him. This is spoken of Christ, not only in his Divine Nature, but his Humane Nature, for his Divine Nature was there before: therefore it must be understood of his Humane Nature. And he hath all power of Angels and Authorities, and he sends them forth to Minister at his people's need, Heb. 1. $\langle \phi \rangle$, Ephes. 1, 20, 21, 22. Which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at... his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all Principality, and power, and might, and dominion- And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the Church. Mark, the Man Jesus Christ is head and Lord over all things: for it is spoken of Christ as to his Humane Nature (as I told you before) for 'tis spoken of him as raised from the dead, which was his Humane Nature. So that you see how wonderfully man's Nature is exalted in Christ.

Fourthly. It appears by his near Relation to him. This is another way by which God hath signified what a great account he hath of man, that he will take him near to himself. You know 'tis a great honor to be next to the King. Now what a great honor is it for a man to be next to God? now he hath taken man near to him. (1) As a husband. (2) As a father. (3) As a friend.

1. As a Husband. They twain shall be one flesh. God hath owned man in this Relation, Isa. 54. 5. Thy Maker is thy husband, the Lord of hosts is his name. O what a thing is this that he should not be ashamed to own us in that Relation! Jer. 3. 14. I am married unto you, Eph. 5. 30. We are flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, Hos. 2. 19. I will betroth thee unto me forever. 2 Cor. 11. 2. I have...spoused you unto one husband. O what a great exaltation is this, that we should become the bride of Christ, the wife and spouse of Christ! what honor hath the Bride, the Lamb's wife! A believer is espoused to Christ: and therefore the Apostle propounds the example of Christ to his Church, unto men towards their wives, to imitate his example in the performance of their duties to them. Now what a wonder is this that such beggars as we are...hold be taken from the dunghill & be made a bride prepared for him!

2. As a Father. So he is nearly related to us. This is an astonishing consideration, 1 Joh. 3. 1. O what a wonder is this, that he should take such a thing as man, so near to himself as to make him become his son! That he should take him from the dunghill of sin, From the dungeon of darkness, The family of Satan, The furnace of hell.

There be two dignities conferred upon man here. (1) He is taken into his family. (2) Admitted to sit at his Table.

(1) He is taken into his family, Ephes. 3. 15. Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named. Mark, the Lord is a great house-keeper, and all believers are his family. And though these be in different degrees and orders, some glorified in heaven, and some here on earth; yet we are all but one family; so that we are taken into the same family and household that the Saints in glory be in. And what a dignity is this! Ephes. 2. 19. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God. We that were sometimes strangers, are now by our Adoption become of God's household. You may think they shall not want good keeping, 1 Tim. 5. 8. He that provides not for those of his own house, is worse than an infidel. God will be sure to provide for those that be of his own house. Now we that are his children, shall thus be provided for. O how doth David commend their state that shall be admitted to dwell in God's house? He prefers it above all the honor of Princes dignity, Psal. 84. This is our privilege. We are in God's house, of his family. If the Queen of Sheba did think the servants of Solomon blessed, how much more blessed are they that are the servants of Jesus Christ? Happy (said she) are those thy servants, &c. but how much more may this be said of God's children.

(2) We are admitted to sit at his Table. God doth admit his children to his own Table. This is the children's portion; and when he hath fed them a while at his table here, he will translate them to an upper-table in the other world, Luk. 23. 28, 29, 30. Ye are they which have continued with me in my Temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my Table. This is the privilege of God's children, O what a dignity is this, to sit and eat and drink with Christ at his Table! This is in part given us here, and shall be perfected upon us hereafter. God says to believers as David said to Mephibosheth, 2 Sam. 9. 7. I will surely show thee kindness, &c. and thou shalt eat bread at my Table continually. And therefore since we are admitted to this privilege to eat and drink at God's Table, let us do as he, and say with him, verse. 8. And he bowed himself and said, what is thy servant, that thou shouldest look upon such a dead dog as I am? When Nathan would express the tenderness of the poor man to his $\langle \diamond \rangle$, he doth it by this, (2 Sam. 12. 3.) That it did eat of his own meat, and drink of his own cup, and lay in his bosom: This is the privilege that Christ vouchsafes us, to eat of his own bread, and drink of his own cup, and be as his children.

3. The Relation of a friend. This you know is a very familiar and loving relation. Among...t others there may be some strangeness, but this is a most familiar relation. Abraham was called the friend of God. It is the Epithite that Christ gives his Disciples, I call you friends. Friends, you know, do unbo some their secrets one to another. Thus it is with God and believers. The Lord opens his secrets to them; and they rip op...n their hearts to God. The secrets of the Lord are with them that sear him.

Fifthly. It appears that God makes a great account of man, in that he doth ente...tain such ...amiliar communion with man. O how wonderfully doth Go! condescend to man on this account! How familiarly doth he treat with us? He doth open all his mi...d to us. Joh. 14. 2. In my fathers house are many Mansions, if it were $\langle \diamond \rangle$ so, I would have told you. Intimating that he would keep back nothing from them that would be sor their good. He tells all his heart and mind to believers. And this account he gives to his father when he leaves the world; he shows his father that he had taught them, and opened his mind to them, Joh. 17. 6 8, 14. Christ doth open and reveal the fathers mind and will to believers. And as he is pleased to converse familiarly with us, so he doth let us converse with him. My Brethren it is an unspeakable dignity that God doth admit man to, in that he will speak with him. Herein Moses did commend the people of Isra...l, in that there was no Nation like to them, that God should speak to them, and they spea... unto God. This is a glorious privilege that God will speak to man; especially that he will speak to him by his Son, Heb. 1. 1. This is more than for God to speak to him out of the fire. This is a great condes...ention on God's part, and exaltation on man's part. And then not only that God should speak to man, but that man should speak to God. Ah brethren, this is that should make us stand amazed, that we should be admitted to speak to the great God. This did astonish Abraham, Gen. 18. 27. Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and Ashes. He wondered at this great dignity •...hat the great God should let him converse with him. That his ear should be open to us, and we should come and knock at his door, and have admission, O what a privilege is this! what an honor is this, that we should have the honor to speak with the King, let him be in what company he w•...ll, and be carried into his bed-chamber! And yet thus it is. Oh admire this rich grace of God, and cry out with the Psalmist in the text, Lord, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him? or the son of man that thou makest account of him?

Luk. 15. 23, 24.

Bring hither the fatted Cals, and kill it, and let us eat, and be merry. For this my Son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found.

MY beloved this text is so full of mercy, on God's part, and so full of comfort for us, that methinks I may close the book, and have done as soon as I have begun: methinks the text might be a Sermon of itself. In it you have set before you the joy and triumph of heaven for the recovery of poor, dead, lost sinners.

1. You have heavens joy and triumph for them. Bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it and let us eat, and be merry. Under this is signified the Joy that is in heaven over one returning sinner. The Angels of God, yea, the God of the Angels, do rejoice in the conversion of one lost sinner.

2. You have the cause of this Joy, and that was from that blessed and happy change that had passed upon this prodigal. And there is a twofold change that we find upon him, In his heart, and in his state.

1. In his Heart. That you have in the verses above. When he came to himself, he said, how mauny hired servants of my fathers, have bread enough, and to spare, and I perish with hunger? Here is a great change wrought upon his heart, he is now come to his sense...s again. An impenitent finner is beside himself: none in the world is so distracted as he is. All the madness in the world is nothing to this. He that throws fire-brands at his head, is not in so bad a $\langle \diamond \rangle$ as he that throws fire-brands at God. Well, the man is now come to his senses: and what was the effect.

- (1) He was sensible of his misery, I perish with hunger. This is one of the first things that God doth for his people, when he brings them home, to make them sensible of their misery.
- (2) He was sensible of his sin too. Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee. Not only misery, but the sense of sin must be set home upon the heart of a poor sinner, or else the conversion will not be true.
- (3) You have his confession and conversion: His confession, Father I have Sinned. And his conversion, he returned home to his Father.

2. A change in his State. When he comes to his father, you shall see what an Alteration it made in his Father.

- (1) From Nakedness to Clothing, ver. 22. But the father said to his servants, bring forth the best robe, and put it on him, and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet. He was now new clothed from top to toe: yea, not onely for necessity, but for ornament, a ring on his hand. O what a change was here! from Rags to Robes. And no other but the best Robes.
- (2) From Penury, to Plenty. Bring hither the fatted calf. Alas! the poor starveling would have been glad but a little before, to have eat of the husks that he fed the swine with, but he could not have them. But now the fatted calf must be fetched out and killed for him.
- (3) From being lost, to be found. He was lost, and is found.
- (4) From being dead, to be alive again.

There are four Observations that I shall commend to you from the words.

1. Observ. That a Sinner in his Natural condition, is not only diseased, but dead: not only strayed, but lost.

2. Obs. That there is a possibility even for dead Sinners to be raised, for lost sinners to be recovered. Consider this you that are here, that are touched with the sense of your misery. If any souls are touched with the sense of their misery and undone condition, consider this that you may be found. It hath been thus with all the saints of God. They were dead and lost; and yet are alive and are found: and why may not you as well as they? Oh pray and use the means: Why should not you be turned too?

3. Obs. That it is a most glorious and blessed change that God doth work in the state of a believer when he bringeth him to himself, from the state that he was in; no less than from being dead to be alive; from being lost to be found.

4. Obs. That it is mateer of Heavens joy and triumph, when poor dead Sinners are revived; and lost Sinners are recovered. Bring hither the f...ted calf, &c. and why so? This my son was dead and is alive again; was lost, and is found.

It is the third of these Observations that I intend to insist upon. That it is a most blessed and glorious change that God doth work in the state of a believer, &c. I shall open this in its several parts. It is a great change that God doth work.

(1) From being dead to be alive. Regeneration is not such a change as doth consist in performing such a duty, or leaving such a sin that thou couldest not well live in. It is pitiful to think, how many take the leaving of one sin to be the new birth; No, it is no less than from being dead to be alive again.

(2) It is such a change, as from being lost to be found. A sinner, in his Natural state is a lost man, in a lost condition: but when he is recovered by conversion he is found again. The Son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost. And so in this Luke 15. What was this lost sheep, and lost groat, and lost Son? What was the meaning of all this, but the recovering of lost Souls? So that its a great change, a coming from death to life; from being lost to be found. If our gospel be hid, 'tis hid to those that are lost: (that is, for the present they are lost,) but when they are converted, then, of lost they are found.

Use. Is it so blessed and glorious a change, that God doth work in the condition of a believer, when he bringeth him to himself; no less than from being dead to be alive, from being lost to be found? Then you that are believers rejoice in, and be thankful for that blessed and happy condition that God hath translated you into. Ah brethren, how may you look one upon another, and consider what God hath done for you?

1. How that you were dead, and are alive again; You were diseased, yea dead creatures. diseased, full of all that may render you miserable: all diseases are met together in a poor sinner. Now that God hath recovered thy diseased soul, yea, thy dead soul, and brought thee to life again, Oh what matter of joy is this! How should you wonder at so great a change as this? We read that at the Miracles that our Savior did upon the diseased, there was great astonishment among the people; they were amazed at this, but here are more miraculous cures than those; the cure of dead souls is more than the cure of dead bodies. O Brethren, if all the diseased that Christ had cured should have conferred together, what strange stories would they have told? One would have said, I was born deaf; and he said Ephatha, and my ears were opened. Another I was born blind and he anointed mine eyes, & I washed and received my sight. Another, I was thirty eight years under a disease, and by a word of his mouth I was healed. Another, I was eighteen years in a sad condition, and by a touch of his garment I was cured. And so of the rest. Ah brethren, you were not only diseased, but dead; and Christ hath recovered you. O! what matter of thankfulness is here? You that are believers, should not look one upon another without wondering. What should move you to wonder if not this? It will be a strange change when we shall see all the sons of Adam come forth at last out of their graves; when we shall see those that were buried in the great deep, brought forth by the power of Christ; and made all appear together, this will be a strange change. But the change of dead bodies is not so great as the change of dead souls. O how should you praise God that hath raised you from so great a death as this! How is it that we are taken up no more with wonderment for this that he hath done for our souls? God doth rejoice over it; it is heavens joy when a lost sinner is found. And doth God and Angels take notice of it, and rejoice, and do you not take notice of it? O what ingratitude is this!

This should excite sinners to •...eed their return to God; for this will rejoice heaven and earth. Shall I leave my wine (saith the Vine) whereby I make glad the heart of God and man? I may say truly, the recovery of a sinner makes glad the heart of God and man; not only will Christians and Ministers rejoice over thee when thou turnest to God: but God himself will rejoice over thee, when thou returnest: he will call for the fatted Calf, &c. O the Mirror of unthankfulness, that is upon our hearts, that we should be no more moved with any work that God hath done upon our souls! You that are converted and wrought upon by Sanctification, one would think that you should be able to enter upon no other talk than this, to tell what God hath done for your Souls. My brethren, if while we are here together, we should see our dead friends, that have been dead ten, or twenty, or thirty years ago, to eat and drink, and walk, and talk, and converse with us, how should we be astonished at it? And how would they wonder one at another? One that died at such a time; and another, that died at such a time and here they live again, and talk again. But now here is a greater wonder than this; here are dead souls, and they are brought together and live again, and talk again. O! me thinks you should wonder to see one another restored from so great a death.

Obj. But you will say, how shall I know that I am recovered from death to life?

Ans. I shall give together the Characters, and the privileges of you that are recovered from death to life, that so your evidence and comfort may be promoted together.

And there are these four that belong to you First. He hath raised you from a state of corruption and rottenness, to a state of health, and holiness. You know a state of death is a state of corruption: the grave is a place of rottenness and putrifaction. You that lie in your old lusts still, certainly you have no portion or part in this matter. But you that are changed are brought from this state: a state of sin, is a state of corruption. The Scripture everywhere speaks of sin by the Metaphor that carries in it the highest pitch of filthiness, Psal. 14. 3. They are altogether become silthy, or stinking. And so in Job 15. 16. How much more abominable and silthy is man, which drinketh in iniquity like water? Man in his natural state is a most silthy creature: no comparison is 〈◊〉 to set forth the odiousness of his condition, before he is sanctified by grace; and the reason is, because he drinketh in iniquity like water. As the fish doth swim in, and take in water naturally: so sin is his very element wherein he doth naturally live as it were. Thus the Apostle, Rom. 3. 13. Their throat is an open Sepulcher. And so our Savior compares the Pharisees to whited Sepulchers. But now you that are believers, God hath raised you from a state of Rottenness to a state of health and holiness. Grace is the health of the soul; Holiness is the soundness of the soul. An upright heart, is a sound heart. O beloved, what a privilege is this to be translated from a state of corruption, to a state of holiness? O what cause have you of thankfulness, that can find the stamp of God again upon your souls? you are highly favored indeed whom God hath privileged with this. There is all that is desirable in grace and holiness; Riches, Wealth, beauty, all. How often do we read of the beauty of Holiness? And so of its Riches too; I counsel thee to buy of me gold, that thou mayest be Rich, Rev. 3. 18. 'Tis the true Riches. And so it is Health and Soundness too, Prov. 3. 8. It shall be health to thy Navel, and marrow to thy bones.

Secondly, From a state of darkness, to a Land of Light. You know the grave is a place of darkness; and death, a state of darkness. Thus is it in the Spiritual death. Dead souls are all in darkness, under the power of darkness, Act. 26. 18. The grave for our dead bodies is a place of darkness: but the grave for dead souls, is a place of utter darkness, of everlasting darkness. The grave is Formidable, and deep. You know when a body is dead, it must be buried, that it may not annoy us. God hath provided a grave to bury dead souls in out of his sight; and where do you think that this grave is? Why Hell is the grave for dead souls. The rich man was dead, and was buried, but where was he buried? His soul was in Hell, so some translate this place, And being buried, in Hell he lift up his eyes, Luke, 16. 22, 23. Hell is a place of darkness, and thick darkness. O that is horrible indeed, that is reserved for poor impenitent sinners; the blackness of darkness forever, Jude 13. He doth not only say darkness, but blackness of darkness forever. Ah brethren, this is that which Christ hath recovered you from, from death to life. If you go down into the grave, and see how the dead do lie in darkness, and silence, how formidable is that! But oh how will it be, to see the grave of hell where dead souls are buried! This was your place before you were sanctified. Ah brethren, what manner of praise, what < ϕ > of deliverance should you compass the throne of God's grace withal, who have such a change wrought upon you?

Thirdly, From a < ϕ > of Impotence, to a state of power. A natural state is an impotent state, Rom. 5. 6. When we were yet without strength, in due time, Christ died for the ungodly. As a dead man is not able to move a finger to put off the worms that crawl upon his body and face: So a dead soul cannot get the victory over his flesh, and lusts. He is under an impossibility of doing anything acceptable before God. But now God hath given you strength, that you should leap and walk, < ϕ > praise God. God did put strength into thy feet when he recovered thee from death to life, that though... should... be able to go thorough dissiculties for his names sake. Brethren, those that are altogether without strength were certainly never brought to a true and spiritual life. If thou art brought from death to life, thou hast some strength. it may be it is but a little strength; But every Saint hath a little strength, so that he doth not live in the wilsul practice of any sin. If thou hast not thus much thou art dead in thy sins.

Fourthly, From a state of Insensibleness, to a state of Sense. A Dead man is without sense; He hath Eyes, but he seeth not; and Ears, but he heareth not: And thus it is with a dead soul. But now you that are believers, you are raised from this miserable state. I may say to you, Blessed are your Eyes, for you see; and your Ears, for you hear. O what a change hath he wrought upon you!

1. He hath opened your eyes, when others are in blindness. Brethren! what a change is this? How many do you see that live where the Gospel is Preached, and yet remain ignorant? O! what thankfulness should this provoke you to? You are restored to your spiritual sense. Before, you thought it the smallest matter in the world to sin against God: Now, you look upon it after another manner. O how should you bless God in those words of our Savior, I thank thee,

O Father, Lord of Heaven and Earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. O! How many be there of the wise men, & great men of the world that have their eyes closed? God hath hid these things from them that they cannot see them: But your eyes see, give God the glory.

2. He hath bored your Ears, when others are in deafness. When others are like the deaf Adder, he hath given you the hearing Ear, the obedient Ear; O! consider this, and be thankful. Thou hast of thyself a heart as obstinate as any other heart i... the world. Now if God hath given thee ears to hear, O bless his Name! How often may we call upon a Dead man, and he never hear? so we may call upon dead souls, and they hear not, with their souls at least, though they hear with their ears.

3. God hath loosed your Tongues, when others are dumb and silent. O what mercy is this? Beloved, you could not breath before God your Prayers and Requests with lise and fervor as you do, unless God did unlose your tongues, and open your mouths. Man's lips are locked up, and his tongue tied up, that he cannot utter himself be...ore God; or at least, not with that fervency that others can: O bless the Lord that he hath loosed your tongues.

4. He hath given you Appetites, when others relish not the things of God. Dost thou find any hungerings and thirstings after Christ, and his Righteousness? Is this that which thou dost pant after, to be made more conformable to the Lord? Dost thou pant after Christ, as others pant after the world? O bless God that hath put such a difference between thee and others. When others relish not the things of God, they ar... sapless things; yea, many times they seem burdenfome things to them, God hath given thee such an appetite, that thou findest a relish in them, that nothing goes down so sweetly, as the service of God.

5. He hath given you your feeling, when some others are past feeling. We read of some that were past feeling, Eph. 4. 19. You know a dead man hath no sense or feeling; if you lay a Mountain upon him, he feels it not: So it is with a dead soul, he feels not the burden of his si...s, he complains not for his sins: Now canst thou say, that thy sins be the greatest trouble to thee in all the world? O bless the Lord for this! It is a great privilege; you that are Believers do groan under this burden, and 'tis your duty so to do; yet under this there is some life, or else you would not feel your corruptions as you do.

And now to close all, let me renew the Exhortation, Rejoice and be Thankful; that though you were lost, you are found again. O remember what a condition you were in when you were lost! Do you not remember what bitterness did seize upon you? How many times did you give up your souls, and did believe that you should never be found, or restored? And did God find you when you were lost? O consider who it was that found you. Christ came from Heaven to Earth to take thee up, poor lost sheep, upon his shoulders, to carry thee to Heaven; O be not forgetful, •...ut Rejoice, and be Thankful.

A Letter sent by him to an Intimate Friend.

NOW will I make known to my dearest Friend, some of the thoughts of my heart this morning, before I begin to write to thee; There was once a poor soul imprisoned in 〈◇〉 , and clogged with the Iron fetters of corruption, that retired within itself, and would needs take a view of the best and worst sight imaginable at once. Well, he sets open the Floodgates, and in he dives into the fathomless depths of an evil heart, but there he could sinned no bottom; Then up he springs, and begins to take the Dimensions, and view the Massy weight of the Crown incorruptible: His heart grew hot within him, and while he was musing, the fire burned, and on a sudden he pathetically smites on his breast, and out he breaks into this Language,

Ah wretch, what a sight is here! methinks my heart is like the Chambers of Imagery, I can turn me no way, but the loathsome sight and silthy stench of my Corruptions comes up into my Eyes and Nostrils, my pollutions are so foul, that I cannot tell how to look upon them, and yet so common, so universal, that I cannot look besides them: which way soever I look into myself, I can cast my eye on nothing but the loathsome sight of some filthy Ulcer, which makes me filthy in my own eyes, and how much more to the pure eyes of my spotless maker; when I turn my eye inward, and go about from Cell to Cell, I pass from one to the other, and am fain to write, Lord have mercy upon me on every door: Every faculty is as a cage of unclean Birds, and O the noisome lusts that lodge and live within them! I looked into my memory, and O what a Magazine of wickedness was there! weak I find it, and slippery when any good is committed to it: Alas, methinks I am like a narrow mouthed bottle, that takes in but drops when the bounty of Heaven pours down by showers. Though the dew of Heaven distill as the rain, yet how little do I take in? how much is spilled besides? but yet this is not all, there is a leak in my Vessel that lets all that is good run out, only the dregs are left behind. 'Tis little good that I take in amongst a world of evil, and presently my Rudder lets go the good corn, and the chaff is kept behind: Capacious it is to receive, faithful to retain what should be forgotten: well thought I, I will shut up this, but I heard the voice, as to the Prophet of old, speaking to me, turn thine Eyes, and thou shalt see yet greater Abominations than these. Look into thine understanding. But good Lord, what a sight have I here? why it is all overspread with Egyptian darkness; yea, much more intolerable, it being not my plague only, but my sin: Alas, how do I grope about in blindness and ignorance, and wander in the path of error, and though the light shine in darkness; yet the darkness comprehendeth it not: How mean and shallow is my capacity? so dull that I cannot conceive, nor apprehend the mysteries of Godliness, but am ready to ask with unskillful Nicodemus, what do these things mean? what Riddles are many Gospel truths to my soul? I am apt rather to dispute them, than to believe them; as if I had rather judge of things by the light of reasons candle, than God's Sun: O fool that I am, and slow of heart to believe, how is my understanding tied to my senses, that I am apt to believe little but what I see? what poor low conceptions have I of God, how little a portion do I know of him? he goeth by me, and I see him not; he passeth on, and I perceive him not; how little is it that my understanding will reach too? and how grossly do I apprehend and conceive that little? Although Christ hath anointed my eyes, yet my imperfect sight of the things of the Gospel is like his we read of, who saw men walking as trees. But you, O Blessed Souls who are now in Glory, you see face to face what I see in a glass darkly; your Sun is risen, you see by the clearest Meridian light, what I am fain to grope for in the dark; those mists of darkness and ignorance are dispelled from your understandings, and you have the blessedness to see, what I have scarce faith to believe; Thrice happy Souls, your day ends not, your Sun sets not, you have perfect day, no clouds overcast you; you have perfect knowledge, no scruples molest you; you are perfect light, and perfect life: The mysteries hid from us, are made known to you, your light is increased, your capacities are enlarged, your veil removed, and you are filled with all the fullness of God: mysterious Providences are all unravelled to you, you see the glorious contexture of every piece, and all the art and contrivances of that curious Tapestry, of which I can see but here an arm, and there a leg, and know not how to put passages together, nor what to make of them. O when shall that which is in part be done away? when shall the day dawn, and the day star arise in my heart? my soul waits for the Lord, more than they that wait for the morning, yea, more than they that wait for the morning. Alas, how doth my spirit sink oftentimes, when I consider the imperfections of my understanding? how I am at every turn baffled and posed in my own thoughts, and perplexed in a labyrinth of difficulties, out of which I cannot extricate myself. Oh when will the time come that I shall see as I am seen; and that I shall have all my objections answered, my doubts resolved, my difficulties removed? Ah this cloud of flesh, what glory dost thou keep from shining in upon me? how can I see through all this dirt? well but in thy light Lord I shall see light: In the mean while I should be contented, if I could walk up to that dim light I have; but alas: I have so stubborn, so headstrong a will, that it will not use the light I have; my understanding is backward in assenting to the truths propounded, but how much more backward is my will in consenting and practicing? so that I am even like them in the Prophet, Brutish in my knowledge. Who would believe, did they see my coldness, and deadness... in •...oly Duties, how remiss I am, when begging pardon of sin, for mortifying and quickening grace, that I were begging for my life? who would think by my negligence in the ways of God, and that wretched indifferency that is in my heart, that I did believe the Kingdom of Heaven was to be taken by violence, and that the gate was so strait, and the way so narrow that leads to life. Oh Hypocrisy! I preach up diligence, and I live in sloth; I preach up humility, and live in pride; I speak of the vanity of the creature, yet I idolize it; of the sinfulness of sin, yet I cherish it; of the lise of faith, yet am a stranger to it. I believe that sin is the greatest evil, and that God's wrath is the greatest Curse; but alas! how strangely do I live below these principles! how am I apt and ready notwithstanding, to choose sin, rather than affliction, and venture the displeasure of the Almighty, to gain credit and applause amongst men? If it be hard to believe, how much harder is it to practice? I know but little, and yet how little do I of what I know? The flesh is still lusting against the spirit, so that I cannot do the things that I would; yet though my strength be but weak, how short do I come of doing all I can? and what a secret Antipathy is there in my heart against the truths of God, and the ways of God? though my understanding be over-poured with the evidence of truth; yet I do not receive it in the love of it. O the deep enmity that there is in my heart against Christ, notwithstanding all the personal excellencies that I know to be in him, and all the benefits I have received from him! he shed his heartblood for me, and yet I do begrudge any service for him. Oh how willingly did he bear the Cross for me! Yea, was exceedingly straitened till that Baptism was accomplished, I delight (saith he) to do thy will O God, and yet he tells us this was the will of his Father, that he should lay down his life for his Sheep; yet do I murmur to bear anything from or for him. Alas, he did far more readily part with his life for me, than I do with a lust for him; Yea, those sins that were my Savior's Murderers, do I entertain and cherish in my heart, and yet I say I love him; but how can I love two Masters? so much of the love of sin as there is in my heart, so much enmity is there against Christ; and O how much is there then in my heart? to this day I flatter myself that I love him, but alas! where is my tenderness of his honor, my care to please him, my zeal for him, my delight in him, my longing after him: Ah where are these fruits of my love to him? Alas! what a stranger am I to these things! well may he reply upon me, as she upon Sampson, How canst thou say thou lovest me, when thy heart is not with me? I can see him pouring out his Soul on the Cross for me, praying, sweating, bleeding for me, conflicting with the Torments of Hell for me, and wrestling with the wrath of the infinite God for me, that I might be delivered; and yet, O Rock of Adamant that I am, I bleed not, I melt not, I mourn not, I can read the story of his Loveletters to my soul, and view all the passages of his love to me, his compassions towards me, his care of me, his provision for me, upholding, protecting, strengthening, deliveri...g me; yet nothing moves me: Ah how I read the story of his bitter death and passion, with dry eyes, and a hard heart! and all passes away like a Tale that is told; sometimes it may be my heart may be warmed, and my affections will seem to be in a flame, and O then what I will do, how I will live, how zealously I will act, and how cheerfully I will suffer for Christ, I will spend and be spent for him, not a lust shall be spared, not a duty that shall be baulked; but alas! my Righteousness is like the morning dew, and like the ea...lie cloud that vanisheth away. 'Tis strange to see how soon my fire is out, and my affections congealed, upon a sudden I am all over ice again, and O what a rubbing and a chafing must I use, to keep alive a little heat, a little warmth! and all is scarce enough neither, when will the blessed time come, when shall I be swallowed up in Love? Oh Blessed are you who are now with Christ, that live continually in the sweet embraces of those blessed Arms, you are all the Beloved Disciples, and have the privilege to lean on his Breast; you are always in the Lap, and are warmed continually in his bosom, when my affections freeze with cold, you feel the beatings of his heart, and see the tender workings within, the warm influence whereof melts you into the like affection; and thus are you forever Blessed, receiving, and returning love; when my wretched heart to this day retains abundance of enmity against him, who loved me, and gave himself for me. A great misery it is not to have a return of love, but my misery is not to return love for love. Ah wretched heart, who can but be out of love with such a heart, as will not be in love with such a Savior? Oh it troubles me, not so much that I receive no more Love Tokens from him, but that I can send him no more. I beg not so much to be beloved by him, as that I may love him: I could be content to have fewer expressions of love from him, so I might have more love wrought in my heart towards him: well, but the time will come when my spark shall be all in a flame, and I shall be all love, when I shall forever dwell in God, and dwell in Love. I shall shortly be where no nipping winter shall cool the heat of my affections, where no waters shall be able to quench my flame, no, my fire shall never go out more; But I shall be continually taken up in loving and admiring, and my soul shall be forever possessed with perfect Love: I shall then need no pains to warm, no Sermons to quicken me, no faith to raise me; but mine eye shall affect my heart, and my fowl shall make me as the Chariots of Aminadab. I hear of him now by the hearing of the Ear, at a great distance, but then my Eye shall see him; yea, with these eyes shall I see God, with these Arms shall I embrace him; then shall I see the wounds in his side, and in his heart, and put my singer into the print of the nails, and be no more faithless, but believing; O blessed time, when he shall take me by the hand, and own me before Men and Angels, me unworthy wretch, when I shall hear that ravishing Sentence from his blessed mouth, Come thou blessed of my Father, come inherit the Kingdom that I have prepared for thee, that I have purchased for thee: Surely then I shall not need to be bid to love him, when David had made an end of speaking, it is said, The heart of Jonathan was knit with the heart of David, and he loved him as his own Soul: So surely will it be with me, when I have heard that blessed sentence; no jarring then between my understanding and my will; between my will and my affections; between myself and my brethren, but a sweet and perfect Harmony. Star-light shall, then become perfect day, and my affections and life perfectly consonant, and I shall forever join with that blessed Choir praising, and admiring that love, that now I have so much ado to believe, sing out the high praises of our God, and of the Lamb, who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood. O will it not be a welcome time? I know you begin to cry out, how long Lord, how long; why this is thy portion, embrace it, count upon it; let us lift up our heads, the day of our redemption draws nigh; yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry.

I would have my Friend inflamed by this, though all this while I have scarce gotten myself into any heat. Well, I conclude with the Martyr, pray, pray, pray; I know you do, but be importunate; I know you are, but continue to be, and the Lord fill you with himself, and cherish you in the secrets of his presence; Farewell, Christ's and Yours Joseph Alleine.

TO THE READER.

He that hath an Ear to hear let him hear.

Precious Souls,

There is that Life and Light and Love in every true Believer, but especially in every Faithful Minister of Christ, which engageth them to long and labor for your Salvation. Life is communicative and active. It maketh us sensible that Faith is not a Fantasie, nor true Religion a Stage-play, nor our hopes of our Eternal Happiness a Dream. And as we desire nothing more for ourselves, than to have more of the Holy Life which we have, alas in so small a measure; so what is it that we should more desire for others? With the eye of an infallible (though too weak) faith, we see the Heaven which you neglect, and the blessed Souls in Glory with Christ, whose companions you might be forever: we see the multitudes of Souls in Hell, who came thither by the same way that you are going in: who are shut out of the glorious presence of God, and are now among those Devils that deceived them, remembering that they had their good things here, Luk. 16. 25. And how they spent the Day of their Visitation, and how light they once set by God, by Christ, by Heaven, by Mercy, whilst Mercy was an earnest solicitour for their Hearts: And with our bodily eyes we see at the same time, abundance of poor sinners living about us, as if there were no God, no Christ, no Heaven, no Hell, no Judgment, no nor Death to be expected; as if a man were but a master beact, to rule the rest, and feed upon them, and perish with them. And if it were your own case, to see what Souls do in Heaven and Hell, and at once to see how unbelievably, carelessly and senselessly most men live on earth, as if there were no such difference in another World, would it not seem a pitiful sight to you? If you had once seen the five Brethren of Dives on Earth, eating, drinking, laughing and merry, clothed and faring daily with the best, and at the same time seen their Brothers Soul in Hell, begging in vain for a little ease, and wishing in vain that one from the dead might go warn his Brethren, that they come not to that place of Torment, would it not seem to you a pitiful sight? would not pity have made you think, [Is there no way to open these Gentlemens eyes? No way to acquaint them what is become of their Brother, and where Lazarus is, and whither they themselves are going? No one driveth or forceth them to Hell, and will they go thither of themselves? and is there no way to stop them or keep them back?] Did you but see yourselves what we see by faith (believing God) and at once beheld the Saints in Heaven, the lost despairing Souls in Hell, and the senseless sensual sinners on earth, that yet will lay none of this to heart, sure it would make you wonder at the stupidity of mankind. Would you not say, O what a deceiver is the Devil that can thus lead on souls to their own damnation? Oh what a cheater is this transitory World, that can make men so forget the World where they must live forever! O what an enemy is this flesh, that thus draweth down men's Souls from God! O what a besotting thing is sin that turneth a reasonable soul into worse than a beast! what a bedlam is this wicked world, when thousands are so busily laboring to undo themselves and others, and gratifying the Devil, against the God and Savior, who would give them everlasting blessed life.

And as we have such a sight as this by Faith to make us pity you, so have we so much taste of the goodness of God, the sweetness of his ways, and the happiness of believers, as must needs make us wish that you had but once tried the same delights, which would turn the pleasures of sin into detestation. God knoweth that we desire nothing more for ourselves, than the Perfection and Eternity of this Holiness and Happiness which we believe and taste. And should we not desire the same for you?

And being thus moved with necessary pity, we ask of God, what he would have us to do for your Salvation. And he hath told us in Scripture that the preaching of his Gospel, to acquaint you plainly with the truth, and earnestly and frequently entreat you to turn from the Flesh and World to God by Jesus Christ, is the means with which his grace is ready to concur for your Salvation; when obstinate resistance causeth the Holy Spirit to forsake the Sinner and leave him to himself, to follow his own Counsels, Lusts and Wills.

In this hope we undertook the Sacred Ministry, and gave up ourselves to this great and most important work: in the great sense of our unworthiness, but yet in the sense of your Souls Necessity. We were not such Fools at our first setting out, as not to know it must be a life of labor, self-denial and patience, and the Devil would do his worst to hinder us, and that all sorts of his instruments would be ready to serve him against our Labors, and against your Souls. Christ our Captain saved us by Patient Conquest, and so must we save our selves and you: And so must you save your lives under Christ, if ever you be saved. It was no strange thing to Paul that bonds and afflictions did everywhere abide him, nor did he account his life dear that he might finish his course with joy, and the Ministry committed to him by the Lord, Acts 20. 23, 24. It was no strange thing to him to be forbidden to preach to the Gentiles that they might be saved, by such as were filling up the measure of their sins, and were under God's uttermost wrath on Earth, 1 Thes. 2. 15, 16. Devils and Pharisees, and most where they came, both high and low, were against the Apostles preaching of the Gospel, and yet they would not sacrilegiously and cruelly break their Covenant with Christ, and perfidiously desert the Souls of Men, even as their Lord for the Love of Souls, did call Peter Satan, that would have tempted him to save his life and flesh, instead of making it • sacrifice for our sins, Mat. 16. 23.

What think you should move us to undertake a calling so contrary to our fleshly ease and interests? Do we not know the way of Ease and Honor; of Wealth and Pleasures, as well as others? and have we not flesh as well as others? Could we not be content that the Cup of reproach and scorn and slander and poverty and labors, might pass from us, if it were not for the will of God and your salvation? Why should we love to be the lowest, and trodden down by malignant Pride, and counted as the filth of the World and the Off-scouring of all things, and represented to Rulers, wh•m w• honor, as scismaticks, disobedient, turbulent, unruly, by every Church-usurper, whom we refuse to make a God of? Why give you not over this preaching of the Gospel, at the will of Satan, that is for the everlasting suffering of your souls, under the pretence of making us suffer? Is not all this that you may be converted and saved? If we be herein besides ourselves, it is for you. Could the words of the ignorant or proud, have persuaded us, that either your wants and dangers are so inconsiderable, or your other supplies and helps sufficient, that our labors had been unnecessary to you, God knoweth we should have readily obeyed the silencing sorts of Pastors, and have betaken us to some other land where our service had been more necessary. Let shame be the hypocrites reward, who taketh not the saving of souls, and the pleasing of God, for a sufficient reward, without Ecclesiastical Dignities, preferments, or worldly wealth.

I have told you our motives: I have told you our business and• the terms of our undertaking. It is God and you sinners that next must tell us what our entertainment and success shall be. Shall it be still neglect, and unthankful contempt, and turning away your ear and heart, and saying, we have somewhat else to mind? Will you still be cheated by this deceiving World? And spend all your days in pampering your guts, and providing for your flesh that must lie rotting very shortly in a Grave? Were you made for no better work than this? May not we bring you to some sober thoughts of your condition, nor one hour seriously to think whither you are going? What! not to one awakened look into the World where you must be forever? Nor one heart-raising thought of the everlasting Glory? Not one heart-piercing thought of all your Savior's love, nor one •ear for all your sinful lives? O God forbid: Let not our labor be so despised. Let not your God, your Savior, and your souls be set so light by. O let there be no profane person among you like Esau, who for one morsel sold his birth-right.

Poor sinners! We talk not to you as on a stage, in customary words, and because that talking thus is our trade. We are in as good earnest with you as if we saw you all murdering yourselves, and we are persuading you to save your lives. Can any man be in jest with you who believeth God? who by Faith foreseeeth whither you are going, and what you lose, and where the game of sin will end? It is little better to jest with you now in Pulpit or in private, than to stand jesting over your departing souls, when at death you are breathing out your l•st.

Alas, with shame and grief we do confess, that we never, speak to you of these things as their truth and weight deserve, nor with the skill and wisdom, the affection and fervency which beseemeth men engaged in the saving of poor souls. But yet you may perceive that we are in good sadness with you. (For God is so.) What else do we study for, labor for, suffer for, live for? Why else do we so much trouble ourselves, and trouble you with all this ado, and anger them that would have had us silent? For my own part, I will make my free Confession to you to my shame: that I never grow cold and dull and pittiless to the Souls of others, till I first grow too cold and careless of my own (unless when weakness or speculative studies cool me, which I must confess they often do.) We never cease pitying you, till we are growing too like you, and so have need of pity ourselves.

When through the mercy of my Lord, the prospect of the world of souls which I am going to, hath any powerful operation on myself. O then I could spend and be spent for others. No words are too earnest, no labor too great, no cost too dear, the frowns and wrath of malignant opposers of the preaching of Christ's Gospel are nothing to me. But when the World of Spirits do disappear, or my Soul is clouded, and receiveth not the vi•all illuminating influences of Heaven, I grow cold first to myself, and then to others.

Come then poor sinners, and help us who are willing at any rate to be your helpers. As we first crave God's help, so we next crave yours. Help us, for we cannot save you against your wills, nor save you without your consent and help. God himself will not save you without you; and how should we? know that the Devil is against us, and will do his worst to hinder us; and so will all his Ministers by what names or titles soever dignified or distinguished. But all this is nothing, if you will but take our parts yourselves: I mean if you will take Christ's part, and your own, and will not be against yourselves. Men and Devils cannot either help or hinder us in saving you as you may do yourselves. If God and you be for us, who shall be against us?

And if you will help us, give over striving against God, and Conscience, give over fighting against Christ and his Spirit: take part no more with the World and the flesh which in your Baptism you renounced: set your hearts to the message which we bring you. Allow it your manlike sober thoughts; search the Scriptures, and see whether the things which we speak be so or no. We offer you nothing but what we have resolvedly chosen ourselves: and that after the most serious deliberation that we can make. We have many a time looked round about us, to know what is the happiness of man: And had we found better for ourselves, we had offered better to you. If the World would have served our turns, it should have served yours also; and we would not have troubled you with the talk of another world; but it will not; I am sure it will not serve your turns, to make you happy, nor shall you long make that sorry self-deceiving shift with it as now you do.

But if you will not think of these things; if you will not use the reason of men, alas what can we do to save your souls? O pity them Lord, that they may pity themselves. Have mercy on them, that they may have some more mercy on themselves. Help them that they may help themselves and us. If you still refuse, will not your loss be more than ours: If we lose our Labor (which to ourselves we shall not;) if we lose our hopes of your Salvation: what is this to your everlasting loss of Salvation itself? And what is our suffering for your sakes, in comparison of your endless sufferings.

But, O, this is it that breaketh our hearts, that we leave you under more guilt than we found you; and when we have laid out life and labor to save you, the impenitent souls must have their pains increased, for the refusing of these Calls. And that it will be part of your Hell, to think forever how madly you refused our Counsel, and what pains and cost and patience were used to have saved you, and all in vain. It will be so: it must needs be so: Christ saith it shall be easier for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of Judgment than for the rejectors of his Gospel-calls. The Nature of the thing, and the nature of Justice certainly tell you, that it must be so.

O turn not our complaints to God against you: Turn us not from beseeching you to be reconciled to God, to tell him you will not be reconciled. Force us not to say, that we earnestly invited you to the Heavenly Feast, and you would not come. Force us not to bear this Witness against you, Lord, we could have born all our labor and sufferings for them, much easilier, if they would but have yielded to thy grace. But it was they themselves that broke our hearts, that lost our labor, that made us preach and entreat in vain: It was easier to preach without maintenance, than without success. It was they that were worse to us than all the Persecutors in the World. How oft would we have gathered them, but they would not, but are ungathered still? How many Holy, Faithful Ministers have I known these eleven years last past, who have lived in pining poverty and want, and hardly by Charity got Bread and Clothing; and yet if they could but have truly said [Lord the Sermons, which I preach privately and in danger, have won many Souls to thee] it would have made all this burden easy. But I tell thee senseless and impenitent Sinner, thou that deniedst God thy Heart, and thou that deniedst them thy Conversion, which was the end of all their labors hast dealt much more cruelly with them, than they that denied the Levites Bread.

Poor Sinners! I know that I am speaking all this to those that are dead in sin: but it is a death consisting with a natural life, which hath a capacity of spiritual life: Or else I would no more speak to you than to a stone. And I know that you are blind in sin: but it is a blindness consisting with a reasonable faculty, which is capable of spiritual illumination: Or else I would no more persuade you than I would do a beast. And I know that you are in the fetters of your own lusts: your wills, your love, your hearts are turned away from God, and strongly bewitched with the dreams and dalliances with the flesh and world: But your wills are not forced to this Captivity: Surely those wills may be changed by God's Grace, when you clearly see sufficient reason for to change them: Else I would as soon preach (were I capable) to Devils and damned souls. Your case is not yet desperate, O make it not desperate: There is just the same hope of your Salvation as there is of your Conversion and perseverance, and no more. Without it there is no hope: and with it you are safe, and have no cause to doubt and fear. Heaven may be yet yours if you will. Nothing but your own Wills, refusing Christ and a holy life, can keep you out. And shall that do it? Shall Hell be your own choice? And will you, I say will you not be saved.

O think better what you do! God's terms are reasonable: His Word and Ways are good and equal: Christ's Yoke is easy and his Burden light, and his Commandments are not grievous to any, but so far as blindness and a bad and backward heart doth make them so. You have no true reason to be unwilling: God and Conscience shall one day tell you and all the World that you had no reason for it. You may as wisely pretend reason to cut your throats, to torment yourselves, as plead reason against a true Conversion unto God. Were I persuading you not to kill yourselves, I would make no question, but you would be persuaded. And yet must I be hopeless when I persuade you from everlasting misery, and not to prefer the world and flesh before your Savior and your God, and before a sure everlasting joy? God forbid!

Reader, I take it for a great mercy of God, that before my head lieth down in the duct, and I go to give up my account unto my Judge, I have this opportunity once more, earnestly to bespeak thee for thy own Salvation. I beg it of thee, as one that must shortly be called away, and speak to thee no more, till we come unto our endless state, that thou wouldst but sometimes retire into thyself, and use the reason of a man, and look before thee whither thou art going; and look behind thee how thou hast lived, and what thou hast been doing in the World till now; and look within thee, what a case thy soul is in, and whether it be ready to enter upon Eternity, and look above thee what a Heaven of Glory thou dost neglect, and what a God thou hast to be thine everlasting Friend or Enemy, as thou chooseth and as thou livest, and that thou art always in his sight: Yea and look below thee, and think where they are, that died unconverted. And when thou hast soberly thought of all these things, then do as God and true Reason shall direct thee. And is this an unreasonable request? I appeal to God, and to all Wise Men, and to thy own Conscience when it shall be awakened. If I speak against thee, or if all this be not for thy good, or if it be not true and sure, then regard not what I say: If I speak not that message which God hath commanded his Ministers to speak, then let it be refused as contemptuously as thou wilt. But if I do but in Christ's name and stead, beseech thee to be reconciled to God, 2 Cor. 5. 19, 20. refuse it at thy peril: And if God's beseeching thee shall not prevail against thy sloth, thy lust, thy appetite, against the desires of thy flesh, against the dust and shadows of the World, remember it when with fruitless cries and horror, thou art beseeking him too late.

I know, poor Sinner, that Flesh is brutish, and lust and appetite have no reason: But I know that thou hast reason thyself which was given thee to over-rule them; and that he that will not be a Man cannot be a Saint, nor a Happy man. I know that thou livest in a tempting and a wicked world, where things or persons will be daily hindering this. But I know that this is no more to a man, that by Faith seeth Heaven and Hell before him, than a Grain of Sand is to a Kingdom, or a blast of Wind, to one that is fighting or flying for his life, Luke 12. 4. O man! that thou didst but know the difference between that which the Devil and sin will give thee, if thou wilt sell thy soul and Heaven, and that which God hath promised and sworn to give thee, if thou wilt heartily give up thyself to him.

I know that thou mayest possibly fall into Company (at least among some sots and drunkards) that will tell thee, all this is but troublesome preciseness, and making more ado than needs: But I know withal what that Man deserveth, who will believe a Fool before his Maker: (for he can be no better than a Miserable Fool, that will contradict and revile the Word of God, even the Word of Grace that would save Men's Souls.)

And, alas, it is possible thou mayest hear some of the Tribe of Levi, (or rather of Cain,) deriding this Serious Godliness as mere Hypocrisy, and Fanaticism, and Self-conceitedness: As if you must be no better than the Devils slaves, lest you be Proud in thinking that you are better than they; That is, you must go with them to Hell, lest in Heaven you be Proud Hypocrites for thinking yourselves happier than they.

It may be they will tell you, that this talk of Conversion is fitter for Pagans and Infidels to hear, than Christians and Protestants. Because such men's big Looks or Coats may make the poison the easilier taken down, I will entreat thee but as before God to answer these following questions, or to get them answered, and then judge whether it be they or we that would deceive thee? and whether as men use to talk against Learning that have none themselves, so such men prate not against Conversion and the Spirit of God, because they have no such thing themselves?

Quest. 1. I pray ask these men, whether it be a Puritan or Fanatick Opinion that men must die? and what all the Pomp, and Wealth, and Pleasure of the World will signify to a departing Soul? Ask them whether they will live on Earth forever, and their merry hours, and Lordly looks will have no end? And whether it be but the conceit of Hypocrites and Schismatics, that their Carcases must be rotting in a dark-some Grave?

Quest. 2. Ask them whether man have not an Immortal Soul, and a longer life to live when this is ended? Luke 12. 41.

Quest. 3. Ask them whether reason require not every man, to think more seriously of the place or state where he must be forever, than of that where he must be for a little while, and from whence he is posting day and night. And whether it be not wiser to lay up our treasure where we must stay, than where we must not stay, but daily look to be called away and never more to be seen on earth? Mat. 6. 19, 20. 2 Cor. 4. 16, 17, 18. and 5. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8.

Quest. 4. Ask them whether God should not be loved with all our heart, and soul, and might? Mat. 22. 27. And whether it be not the mark of an ungodly miscreant, to be a lover of pleasure more than God, 2 Tim. 3. 4. and a lover of this World above him? 1 Joh. 2. 15, 16. And whether we must not seek first God's Kingdom and his Righteousness, Mat. 6. 33. and labor most for the meat that never perisheth, John. 6. 27. and strive to enter in at the strait gate, Luke 13. 24. and give all diligence to make our calling and election sure? 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Quest. 5. Ask them whether without. Holiness any shall see God? Heb. 12. 14 Mat. 5. 8. Tit. 2. 14. And whether the carnal mind is not enmity to God, and to be carnally minded is not death, and to be spiritually minded, life and peace? And whether if you live after the flesh you shall not die, and be condemned? and they shall live and be saved that walk after the spirit? and whether any man be Christ's that hath not his spirit. Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13.

Quest. 6. Ask them whether any man have a Treasure in Heaven, whose heart is not there? Mat. 6. 21. And whether this be not the difference between the wicked and the Godly, that the first do make their bellies their God's, and mind earthly things, and are Enemies to the Cross of Christ (though perhaps not his name) and the latter have their conversation in Heaven, and being risen with Christ do seek and set their affections on things above, and not on the things that are on earth, to which they are as dead, and their life is hid (or out of sight,) with Christ in God, till Christ appear, and then they shall appear, (even openly to all the world) with him in Glory. Phil. 3. 18, 19, 20. Col. 4. 1, 2, 3• 4. 5.

Quest. 7. Ask them whether it be credible or suitable to God's word or workings that he that will not give them the fruits of the earth without their labor, nor feed and clothe them without themselves; will yet bring them to Heaven without any care, desire, or labor of their own? When he hath bid him Care not for th• one, and called for their greatest diligence for the other, Mat. 6. 25. 33. Joh. 6• 27. Yea, ask them whether these be not the two first articles of all Faith and Religion, 1. That God is; 2. That he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him, Heb. 11. 6.

*Quest. 8. Ask them, yea ask your eyes, your ears, your daily experience in the World, whether all or most that call themselves Christians, do in good sadness thus live to God in the Spirit, and mortify the flesh with its affections and lusts, and seek first God's Kingdom and Righteousness, and love him above all, and lay up treasure and heart in Heaven? or rather whether most be not lovers of the World, and lovers of pleasure more than God, and live not after the flesh, and mind not most the things of the flesh? I mention not now the drunkards, the flesh pleasing Gentlemen, that live in Pride, Fulness and Idleness, and Sport, and Play away their precious time; nor the filthy Fornicator nor the merciless Oppressors nor the malignant Haters of a Godly life, nor the perjured and perfidious betrayers of men's souls and of the Gospel or their Countries Good; nor such other men of seared Conscience, whose misery none questioneth, but such as are as blind and miserable. It's not these only I am speaking of; but the common, worldly, fleshly and ungodly ones.*

Quest. 9. Ask them whether the name of a Christian will save any of these ungodly persons? And whether God will like men the better for lying and calling themselves Christians when they are none indeed? and whether they dare preach to the people that a Christian Drunkard, or a Christian Fornicator, or Oppressor, or a Christian worldling, needeth no Conversion?

Quest. 10. Ask them whether they say not themselves that Hypocrisy is a great aggravation of all other sin? and whether God hath not made the Hypocrites and Unbelievers to be the standards in Hell? Luke 25. 51. And whether seeking to abuse God by a Mock Religion, do make such false Christians better than the poor Heathens and Infidels, or much worse? and whether he be not an Hypocrite that professeth to be a Christian, and a servant of God, when he is none, nor will be? And whether he that knoweth his Masters will and doth it not, shall not have the sorest stripes, or punishment. Luke 12. 47.

Quest. 11. Ask them whether in their baptism (which is their Christening, as a Covenant,) they did not renounce the flesh, the World, and the Devil, and vow and deliver up themselves to God, their Father, their Savior and their Sanctifier? And whether all or most men perform this vow? And whether a perjured Covenant-breaker against God, is fitter for Salvation, than one that never was baptized.

Quest. 12. Ask them whether the holy nature of God be not so contrary to sin, as that it is blasphemy to say that he will take into Heav•n, and into the bosom of his eternal delights, any unholy unrenewed Soul, 1 Pet. 1. 15, 16.

Quest. 13. Ask them why it was that Christ came into the World? whether it was not to save his people from their sins, Mat. 1. 21. And to destroy the works of the Devil, 1 Joh. 3. 8. and to purify to himself, a peculiar people zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. And to bring home straying souls to God, Luk. 15. and to be the way to the Father, John 14. 6. And whether Christ save that soul that is not converted by him and saved from his sins? Or whether it be the dead Image only of a Crucified Jesus, that is all their Savior, while they will have no more of him?

Quest. 14. Ask them why they believe, and were baptized into the Holy Ghost, and whether a man can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, that is not born of the Spirit as well as of Water, Joh. 3. 3, 5, 6. and that is not converted, and begins not the world as it were anew, in a teachable, tractable newness of life, like a little child? Mat. 18. 3. And whether it be not a certain truth; that, If any man have not the spirit of Christ the same is none of his, Rom. 8. 9.

Quest. 15. Ask them why Christ gave the world so many warnings of the damnableness of the Pharisees Hypocrisy; if Hypocritical Christians may be saved. And what were these Pharisees? They were the Masters of the Jewish Church? The Rabbies that must have high places, high titles, and ceremonies, formal garments, and must be revered of all: That gave God lip-service without the heart, and made void his commands, and worshipped him in vain, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, and strictly •the Mint & Cumin, while love mercy, and Justice were past by? Who worshipped God with abundance of Ceremonies and built the Tombs, and garnished the Sepulchers of the Saints; while they killed and persecuted those that did imitate them, and hated the living Saints, and honored the dead. They were the bitterest enemies and murderers of Christ, on pretence that he was a blasphemer, and a seditious enemy to Caesar and the common peace, and one that spake against the Temple: They were the greatest Enemies of the Apostles. And silencers of those that preached Christ's Gospel, and persecuted them that called on his name. And had these no need of Conversion, because they could say, God is our Father (when the Devil was their Father, Joh. 8. 44.) and that they were Abraham's Seed? and are not Hypocritical Christians, Drunken Christians, Fornicating Christians, Carnal, Worldly, Infidel-Christians, (the contradiction is your own) Persecuting Christians, Falsenamed Hypocritical Christians, as bad, yea worse, as they abuse a more excellent profession? Mat. 15. 7, 8. and 23. and 22. 18. and 6. 2. &c. Luke 12. 1.

Quest. 16. Doth not the Holy State of Heaven require Holiness in all that shall possess it? Can an unholy soul there see and love and praise and delight in God forever, and in the holy society and employment of the Saints? Rev. 21. 27. Is he not liker a Mehometan than a Christian, that looketh for a sensual and unholy Heaven?

Quest. 17. What is the difference between the Church and the World? Is not the Church a holy Society of regenerate souls? Yea the Church visible, is only those that in baptism vow Holiness and profess it. Look those hypocrites in the face and see whether they do not blush, when they repeat in the Creed, I believe in the Holy Ghost, I believe in the Holy Catholic Church, and the communion of Saints, who shall have the forgiveness of sins, and live ever-lasting. Ask them whether they mean, Holy Adulterers, holy worldlings, holy perjured persons? Ask them whether they mean a Communion of Saints in a Tavern, in a Play-house, in a Gaming-house, in a Whore-house •or a jesting, canting stage-play Communion? If the Church be holy, be holy if you will be of the Church: If it be a Communion of Saints, make it not a Communion of Swine, and make not Saints and their Communion seem odious either for their infirmities, or their crossness to your carnal interests or conceits.

Quest. 18. Ask them whether there be a Heaven and a Hell, or not? If not, why are they pretended Christians? If there be, will God send one man to Heaven, and another to Hell, to so vast, so amazing a difference of states, if there be no great difference between them here? If Holiness no more differenced Christians from others, than saying a Sermon, or saying over a Prayer, doth difference one from an Infidel, where were the Justice of God in saving some and damning others? and what were Christianity better than the Religion of Antonine, Plato, Socrates, Seneca, Cicero, Plutarch, if not much worse? Go into London streets, and when you have talked with living prudent men, then go to the Painters shop and see a comely picture, and to the Looking-glass and see the appearances of each passenger in a Glass, and to the Periwig-shops, and set a wodden-head with a periwig upon the Bulk, and you have seen somewhat like the difference of a Holy Soul, and of a dead and dressed formal hypocrite, Psal. 23. 27.

Quest. 19. Ask them whether Kings and all men make not a great difference between man and man; the loyal and perfidious, the obedient and the disobedient? And whether they difference not themselves between a friend and a foe, one that loveth them, and one that robbeth, beateth, or would kill them. And shall not the most Holy God more difference between the righteous and the wicked? Mal. 3. 17, 18.

Quest. 20. But if they are deaed in every point save carnal interests, ask them why they are Preachers or Priests? And if Conversion and holiness be a needless thing, what use they themselves are of? and why the Country must be troubled with them, and pay them Tythes, and owe them reverence? When these twenty Questions are well answered, conclude that you may be saved without Conversion.

But if poor soul, thou art fully convinced, and askest, What should I do to be Converted? The Lord make thee willing and save thee from hypocrisy and I will quickly tell thee in a few words.

- 1. Give not over sober thinking of these things, till thy heart be changed, Psal. 119. 59.
- 2. Come to Christ, and take him for thy Savior, thy Teacher, thy King, and he will pardon all that's past and save thee, Joh. 1. 12. and 3. 16. and 5. 40. 1 Joh. 5. 11, 12.
- 3. Believe God's love, and the pardon of sin, and the everlasting Joys of Heaven, that thou mayest feel that all the pleasures of the World and flesh, are dung in comparison of the Heavenly delights, of Faith and Hope, and holy Love, and peace of Conscience and sincere obedience.

- 4. Sin no more willfully, but forbear that which thou mayest forbear, Isa. 55. 7.
- 5. Away from temptations, occasions of sin and evil company, and be a companion of the humble, holy, heavenly, and sincere, Psal. 119. 115, 63.
- 6. Wait on God's spirit in the diligent, constant use of his own means, Read, hear, meditate, pray: Pray hard for that grace that must convert thee: wait thus, and thou shalt not wait in vain, Psal. 25. and 37. 34. and 69. 6.

Pity O Lord and persuade these Souls: Let not Christ's Blood, his Doctrine, his Example, his Spirit, be lost unto them, and they lost forever. Let not Heaven be as no Heaven to them, while they dream and dote on the shadows in this world. And O save this Land from the greater destruction, than all our late plagues, and flames, and divisions, which our sins and thy threatenings, make us fear. O Lord in thee have we trusted, Let us never be confounded.

Having thus contributed my endeavor in this Preface to the furtherance of the design of this excellent Book. I must tell thee, Reader, that I take it for an honor to commend so masculine a birth unto the World: The Midwife of Alexander or Aristotle need not be ashamed of her office. Who the Author of this Treatise was, how he preached, how he lived, how he suffered (and for what) and how he died, his Life and Letters lately printed fully tell you: and I earnestly commend the reading of them to all, but especially to Ministers, not to tell them what men have been here forbidden to preach Christ's Gospel, and for what, nor what men they are that so many years have done it: but to tell you what men Christ's Ministers should be: But say not he killed himself with excessive Labor, and therefore I will take warning, and take my ease. For, 1. He lived in perfect health all his days, notwithstanding his labors, till after his hard and long imprisonment. 2. It was not the greatest labors of his times of liberty that hurt him, but his preaching 6 or 7 or 8 times a week after that he was silenced, because he could not speak to all his people at once. O make not an ill use of so excellent an example. Say not like Judas, what needs this waste? His labor, his life, his sufferings, his death were not in vain. The ages to come that read his Life, and read this little popular treatise, and his Call to Archippus shall say, they were not in vain. And though he was cut off in the midst of his age, and his longer labors, and more elaborate writings thus prevented, take thank fully this small but methodical, warm, and serious tractate: Read it seriously, and it cannot be but it must do thee good.

I am one that have looked into Books and Sciences, and Speculations of many sorts, and seriously tell thee as a dying man, that after all my searches and experience, I have found that Philosophical enquiries into the Divine Artifices and the Nature of things, hath among a greater number of uncertainties, a great many pretty pleasant probabilities, which a holy Soul can make good use of in admiring God, and may find us a lawful kind of sport; but in the moralities which Atheists count uncertainties, the knowledge of God, and our duty, and our hopes, the doctrine and practice of Holiness, Temperance, and Charity, and Justice, and the diligent seeking and joyful hopes of life everlasting, is all the true Wisdom, the goodness, the Rest and Comfort of a soul: whatever be our plea, this is the satisfying certainty, the Business, and the beautifying improvement of our lives.

I have done, when I have sought to remove a little scandal, which I foresaw; that I should myself write the Preface to his life, where himself and two of his friends make such a mention of my name, which I cannot own; which will seem a praising him for praising me. I confess it looketh ill favouredly in me: But I had not the power of other men's writings, and durst not therefore forbear that which was his due. Had I directed their pens they should have gone a middle way, and only esteemed me [a very unworthy servant of Christ, who yet longs to see the peace and prosperity of his Church] and should have forborne their undeserved praise, as other men should have done their slanderous libels. But if the Reader get no harm by it, I assure him the use I made of it was, to lament that I am really so much worse than they esteemed me; and fear lest I should prove yet worse than I discern myself, who see so much sin and weakness, in my betters, and much more in myself, as to make it the constant sentiment of my soul, that PRIDE of men's GREATNESS, WISDOM, and GOODNESS, is the first part of the DEVILS IMAGE on man's soul, and DARKNESS is the second, and MALIGNITY the third.

Richard Baxter.

READER,

HOW well were it if there were no more Unconverted ones among us, than those to whom this is directed? Unconverted persons how many are there, but how few Unconverted Readers especially of such Books as this before thee? A Play or a Romance better suits the lusts, and therefore must have more of the eye of such; what will cherish the evil heart is only grateful, not what will change it.

How many are there to whom this is directed, who will not know, that they are the men? and how little hope is there that this Excellent Treatise should reach its end, with those who apprehend not themselves concerned in it? Art not thou one of them? Art thou a Convert, or art thou yet in thy Sins? What is Sin? What is Conversion? It may be, thou canst tell me neither, and yet a Convert thou sayst thou art. But to what purpose is it then like to be, for the Servant of God to treat with thee about this matter? Let him bid thee believe, thou art a believer already; let him bid thee repent and turn to the Lord, that work thou sayst is not now to do. What can there be said to this man, that's like to bring him to good? Friend, know thyself better, or thou perishest without remedy. Thou mayest pray, but what hope is there in thy praying? Thou mayest read, but what hope is there in thy reading. Yet read on, this little hope there is; in this Book there's Eye-Salve that may heal thee of thy blindness. In this Book there is a Glass that will show thee thy face. Dost thou know thine own face when thou seest it? Behold thy very Image in those marks that are given of an Unconverted Person; Read and consider them, and then say, if thou be not the man.

Be willing to know thyself, and to know the worst of thy case? wink not at the light, hide not thyself from thine own soul. Wilt thou never know thy disease, till it be past remedy.

Much of our hardest Work would be over, if we could see the sinners to whom we are sent, to be convinced sinners. If we could but open the blind eyes, there were hope we should shortly raise the dead.

Sinner, of a truth, thou art in evil case whether thou know it or not; thou art among the dead, and there is but a step betwixt thee and Hell. Thou wilt not believe it though it be told thee, yet once again let me beseech thee, come to the Glass that is here presented to thee, and narrowly observe whether the very marks of the dead be not found upon thee.

If there be a miscarriage in this first work, if thou wilt not understand thy misery and thy danger, there's an end of all hopes concerning thee. Whilst self-ignorance abides upon thee, all the Counsels, that are necessary to a man in thy case, will do thee no good; they are never like to prosper with thee, because thou wilt not count them proper for thee. Who will be persuaded to do that, which he believes is already done? Who will take the Counsel of the Physician that does not think himself sick? The man of God may spare his pains of persuading thee to Conversion, whilst thou art confident thou art converted already. Who will be at the pains of repentance that concludes he hath repented? Who will bear the labor and the pangs of the new birth that is confident he is already passed from death to life?

But Friend, let me a little reason with thee; thou art confident it is well with thee, yet why wilt thou not yield to thus much at least, to put it to the question, am I not mistaken? Thou art worse than mad, if thou thinkest such a question may not be put. Dost thou know that thy heart is false and deceitful, and yet because it speaks good concerning thee, must it not be questioned whether it speak truth or no? Be so wise as to conclude I may be mistaken, and thus come to the trial whether thou art mistaken or not.

And if upon trial by the marks that are before thee, thou come to be undeceived, and see thyself wrapped up in that misery which hitherto thou wouldst not suspect, the next news I expect to hear from thee is, What must I do to be saved? O were it come to that once! Then thou hast an answer at hand in those Means thou wilt find prescribed thee: And because they are such as thou wilt hardly be persuaded to use, take in the Motives that follow, and these will help down the means. Consider both the one and the other, and if thou dost not find the Means proper, and the Motives weighty, I think I shall do thee no wrong if I tell thee, thou art still of a blind mind, and an harder heart.

Friend, the matter which this little Book comes to treat with thee about, is of highest importance; 'tis a matter of Life or Death. If thou sayest, The Terms upon which Life is offered, are hard; consider, is it not harder to die? He is worthy to die who will lose his Soul to save his Labor. If thou couldest step down into the Deep, and take a turn or two with those Damned Souls, who are drench'd with Fire and Brimstone, and bound in Everlasting Chains of Vengeance, and should ask them, Now what do you think of the terms upon which life was offered? Now what think you of that Repentance, of that Obedience, of that Circumspection, Self-denial, and the greatest Severity which by the Gospel were imposed upon you? if you might once again have the same terms granted you for your Redemption from this place of Torment, would you yet say, hard terms! Let me rather die this death forever, than live such a life! let me broil in this Furnace, rather than escape with such difficulty! shouldst thou ask them thus that have felt what 'tis to be damned, what answer dost thou think they would make? O friend, never again groan under the difficulties of Conversion, till thou believe them to be worse than Hell. But I will not farther anticipate my worthy Author.

Nor is there much need I should commend either himself or his works; for the Author himself, thou mayest at a small charge get acquaintance with him in that History of his life and death, which is extant; concerning which I shall only say,

Sic mihi contingat vivere sicque mori.

And for this work of his, what commendation I shall give of it, would be needed no longer than till thou hast read it over. Thou wilt find such wine in it as needs no Bush. This only I shall say, as far as my credit will go, it is exceedingly well worth thy most serious perusal. O mayest thou hear that voice, (such a voice from Heaven there is whether thou hear it or no) Tolle & lege, take up and read. Read Friend, and read over again. Read and understand, understand and pray, pray and consider, and consent unto him, who by the Pen of his servant calls to thee from Heaven, Why wilt thou die? Turn and live. O suffer this word of instruction and exhortation, to open thy blind eyes, to turn thee from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto God, that thou mayest receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified. Et cum talis fueris memento mei. When it is thus with thee, then pray for

The Friend and Servant of thy Soul, Richard Alleine.

Mr. JOSEPH ALLEINE'S CALL TO THE UNCONVERTED.

DEarly Beloved, and longed for, I gladly acknowledge myself a debtor to you all, and am concerned, as I would be found a good steward to the Household of God, to give to everyone his Portion. But the Physician is most solicitous for those Patients, whose case is most doubtful and hazardous, and the Fathers bowels are especially turned towards his dying child. The numbers of the unconverted souls among you, call for my most earnest compassions, and hasty diligence to pluck them out of the burning, Iud. 23. and therefore to these first I shall apply myself in these lines.

But whence shall I fetch my arguments, or how shall I choose my words? Lord, wherewith shall I woo them? whereby shall I win them? Oh that I could but tell! I would write unto them in tears, I would weep out every argument, I would empty my veins for Ink, I would petition them on my knees; verily (were I able) I would, (O how thankfully I would!) if they would be prevailed with to repent and turn.

How long have I travelled in birth with you? how frequently have I made suit to you? how often would I have gathered you? how instant have I been with you? this is that I have prayed for, and studied for, for many years, that I might bring you to God: O that I might but do it! Will you yet be entreated? O what a happy man might you make me, if you would but hearken to me, and suffer me to carry you over to Jesus Christ.

But, Lord, how insufficient am I for this work! I have been many a year woing for thee, but the Damsel would not go with me. Lord, what a task hast thou set me to do! Alas, wherewith shall I pierce the scales of Leviathan, or make the heart to feel that is hard as a stone; hard as a piece of the nether millstone! Shall I go and lay my mouth to the grave, and look when the dead will obey me and come forth? shall I make an Oration to the Rocks? or declaim to the Mountains, and think to move them with arguments? shall I give the blind to see? From the beginning of the world was it not heard that a man opened the eyes of the blind. But thou, O Lord, canst pierce the scales, and prick the heart of the Sinner. I can but shoot at rovers and draw the bow at a venture, and do thou direct the arrow between the joints of the harness, and kill the sin, and save the Soul of the sinner, that casts his eyes into these labors.

But I must apply myself to you, to whom I am sent: yet I am at a great loss. Would to God I knew how to go to work with you! would I stick at the pains? God knoweth, you yourselves are my witnesses, how I have followed you in private, as well as in public, and have brought the Gospel to your doors, testifying to you the necessity of the new birth, and persuading you to look in time after a sound and through change. Beloved, I have not acted a part among you, to serve my own advantage; our Gospel is not yea, and nay. Have not you heard the same truths, from the Pulpit, by public labors, and by private letters, by personal instructions? Brethren, I am of the same mind as ever, that holiness is the best choice, that there is no entering into Heaven, but by the straight passages of the second birth: that without holiness you shall never see God, Heb. 12. 14. Ah my beloved! refresh my bowels in the Lord. If there be any consolation in Christ, any comfort of love, any fellowship of the spirit, any bowels and mercies, fulfil you my joy. Now give yourselves unto the Lord: 2 Cor. 8. 5. Now set your faces to seek him. Now set up the Lord Jesus in your hearts, and set him up in your houses. Now come in and kiss the Son, Psal. 2. 12. and embrace the tenders of his mercy. Touch his Scepter, and live: why will you die? I beg not for myself; but fain I would have you happy: This is the prize I run for, and the white I aim at. My souls desire and prayer for you is, that you may be saved, Rom. 10. 1.

The famous Lycurgus, having instituted most strict and whole••m L•ws for his people, told them he was necessitated to go a journey from them, and got them to bind themselves in an oath, that his laws should be observed, till his return. This done, he went into a voluntary banishment, and never returned more, that they might, by virtue of their oath, be engaged to the perpetual observing of his laws. Methinks I should be glad of the hard conditions which he endured (though I love you tenderly) so I might but hereby engage you throughly to the Lord Jesus Christ

Dearly beloved, would you rejoice the heart of your Minister? Why then, embrace the counsels of the Lord by me: forgo your sins: set to prayer: up with the worship of God in your families: keep at a distance from the corruptions of the times. What greater joy to a Minister, than to hear of souls born unto Christ by him, and that his Children walk in the truth? 2 John 4.

Brethren, I beseech you suffer a friendly plainness and freedom with you in your deepest concernments. I am not playing the orator, to make a learned speech to you, nor dressing my dish with eloquence, wherewith to please you. These lines are upon a weighty errand indeed, viz. to convince, and convert, and save you. I am not baiting my hook with Rhetoric, nor fishing for your applause, but for your souls. My work is not to please you, but to save you; nor is my business with your fancies, but your hearts. If I have not your hearts, I have nothing. If I were to please your ears, I could sing another song. If I were to preach myself, I would steer another course; I could then tell you a smoother tale: I would make you pillows, and speak you peace; for how can Ahab love this Micaiah, that always prophesies evil concerning him? 1 Kings 22. 8. But how much better are the wounds of a Friend, than the fair speeches of the Harlot, who flattereth with her lips, till the Dart strike through the liver, and hunteth for the precious life? Prov. 7. 21, 22, 23. and Prov. 6. 26. If I were to quiet a crying Infant, I might sing him to a pleasant mood, or rock him asleep: but when the child is fallen into the Fire, the parent takes another course; he will not now go to still him with a song or trifle. I know, if we speed not with you, you are lost: if we cannot get your consent to arise, and come away, you perish forever. No Conversion, and no Salvation: I must get your good will, or leave you miserable.

But here the difficulty of my work again recurs upon me. Lord choose my stones out of the rock. 1 Sam. 17. 40, 45. I come in the name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of the Armies of Israel. I come forth like the stripling against Goliath, to wrestle not with flesh and blood, but with Principalities and Powers, and the Rulers of the darkness of this World. Eph. 6. 12. This day let the Lord smite the Philistine, and spoil the strong man of his Armor, and give me to fetch off the captives out of his hand. Lord choose my words, choose my weapons for me, and when I put my hand into the bag, and take thence a stone, and sling it, do thou carry it to the mark and make it sink, not into the forehead, 1 Sam. 17. 40. but the heart of the unconverted sinner, and smite him to the ground, with Saul in his so happy fall, Acts 9. 4. Thou hast sent me, as Abraham did Eliezer, to take a wife unto my master thy son. Gen. 24. 4. But my discouraged soul is ready to fear, the woman will not be willing to follow me. O Lord God of my Master, I pray thee send me good speed this day, and show kindness to my Master, and send thine Angel before me and prosper my way, that I may take a wife unto thy son, Gen. 24. 12. That as the servant rested not, till he had brought Isaac and Rebekah together, so I may be successful to bring Christ and the souls of my people together, before we part

But I turn me unto you. Some of you do not know what I mean by conversion, and in vain shall I persuade you to that which you do not understand; and therefore for your sakes, I shall show what this Conversion is. Others do cherish secret hopes of mercy, though they continue as they be; and for them I must show the necessity of Conversion. Others are like to harden themselves with a vain conceit, that they are converted already; unto them I must show the marks of the Unconverted. Others, because they feel no harm, fear none, and so sleep upon the top of the mast; to them I shall show the misery of the unconverted. Others sit still, because they see not their way out; to them I shall show the means of Conversion. And finally for the quickening of all, I shall close with the motives of Conversion.

CHAP. I. Showing the Negative, what Conversion is not, and correcting some mistakes about it.

LET the blind Samaritans worship they know not what, John. 4. 22. Let the Heathen Athenians superscribe their Altar to the unknown God, Acts 17. 23. Let the guileful Papists commend the mother of destruction, Hos. 4. 6. for the mother of devotion: they that know man's constitution, and the nature of the reasonable souls operation, cannot but know, that the understanding having the Empire in the Soul, he that will go rationally to work, must labor to let in the light here. Ignorantis non est consensus. And therefore that you may not mistake me, I shall show you what I mean by the conversion I persuade you to endeavor after.

It is storied, that when Jupiter let down the golden Chaplets from Heaven, all of them but one were stolen: Whereupon (lest they should lose a relique of so great esteem) they made five others so like it, that if any were so wickedly minded, as to steal that also, they should not be able to discern which was it. And truly my beloved the Devil hath made many counterfeits of this Conversion, and cheats one with this, and another with that; and such a craft and artifice he hath, in this mystery of deceits, that (if it were possible) he would deceive the very Elect. Now that I may cure the damnable mistakes of some, who think they are converted when they are not; as well as remove the troubles, and fears of others, that think they are not converted, when they are; I shall show you the nature of conversion, both negatively, or what it is not; and positively, what it is.

We will begin with the negative.

1. It is not the taking on us the Profession of Christianity. Doubtless Christianity is more than a name. If we will hear Paul, it lies not in word, but in power, 1 Cor. 4. 20. If to cease to be Jews and Pagans, and to put on the Christian profession had been true conversion, (as this is all, that some would have to be understood by it) who better Christians than they of Sardis and Laodicea? These were all Christians by profession, and had a name to live, but because they had but a name, are condemned by Christ, and threatened to be spewed out, Rev. 3. 1, 16. Are there not many that name the name of the Lord Jesus, that yet depart not from iniquity? 2 Tim. 2. 19. and profess they know God, but in works deny him? Tim. 1. 16. And will God receive these for true converts, because turned to the Christian Religion? What, converts from sin, when yet they do live in sin! 'Tis a visible contradiction. Surely if the lamp of profession would have served the turn, the foolish Virgins had never been shut out, Mat. 25. 3, 12. We find not only professors but Preachers of Christ, and Wonder-workers turned off, because evil workers, Mat. 7. 22. 23.

2. It is not the being washed in the laver of Regeneration, or putting on the badge of Christ in baptism. Many take the press-money, and wear the Livery of Christ, that yet never stand to their colors, nor follow their leader. Ananias and Sapphira, and Magus were baptized as well as the rest. How fondly do many mistake here, deceiving, and being deceived! dreaming, that effectual grace is necessarily tied to the external administration of Baptism, (which what is it, but to revive the Popish element, of the Sacraments working grace, ex opere operato?) and so every Infant should be regenerated, not only (Sacramento tenens) sacramentally, but really and properly. Hence men do fancy, that being regenerated already, when baptized, they need no further work.

But if this were so, then all that were baptized (in their infancy) must necessarily be saved: because the promise of pardon and salvation is made to conversion and regeneration. Acts 3. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4. Mat. 19. 28. Our Calling, Sanctification, (as to the beginnings of it) or Conversion (which are but the same thing, under different conceptions and expressions;) is but a middle link in the golden chain, fastened to election at the one end, and glorification at the other, Rom. 8. 30. 2 Thes. 2. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 2. The silver cord may not be broken, nor the connection between Sanctification and Salvation, between grace and glory, impiously violated, Mat. 5. 8. If we are indeed begotten again, it is to an inheritance incorruptible reserved in Heaven for us, and the divine power is engaged to keep us for it, 1 Pet. 1. 5. And if the very regenerate may perish at last in their sins. we will no more say, that he that is born of God, his seed remaineth in him, and that he cannot sin, 1 John. 3. 9. i.e. unto death, now that it is impossible to deceive the very elect, Mat. 24. 24.

And indeed were this true, then we need look no farther to see our names written in Heaven, than only to search the Register, and see whether we were baptized: then I would keep the certificate of my baptism, as my fairest evidence for Heaven, and should come by assurance of my gracious state, with a wet finger: then men should do well to carry but a certificate of their baptism under the Registers hand, when they died (as the Philosopher would be buried with the bishops bond in his hand, which he had given him for the receiving his alms in another world:) and upon sight of this, there were no doubt of their admission into Heaven.

In short, if there be no more necessary to conversion or regeneration, than to be turned to the Christian Religion, or to be baptized in infancy, this will fly directly in the face of that Scripture, Mat. 7. 14. as well as multitudes of others. For first, we will then no more say, strait is the gate and narrow is the way: for if all that are baptized, and of the true Religion, are saved, the door is become heavenly wide, and we will henceforth say, wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth unto life; for if this be true, whole Parishes, yea whole Countries, and whole Kingdoms may go in a breast, and we will no more teach, that the righteous is scarcely saved, or that there is need of such a stir in taking the Kingdom of Heaven by violence and striving to enter in. Surely if the way be so easy as many make it, that there is little more necessary, than to be regenerated in our baptism, and cry God mercy, and be absolved by the Minister at our end, 'tis more ado than needs, to put ourselves to such running, and seeking, and knocking, and fighting, and wrestling, as the word requires, as necessary to salvation. Secondly, if this be true, we will no more say, few there be that find it: yea we will rather say, few there be that miss it: we will no more say, that of the many that are called, but few are chosen Mat. 22. 14. and that even of the professing Israel, but a remnant shall be saved, Rom. 11. 5. If this Doctrine be true, we will not say anymore with the Disciples, Who then shall be saved? but rather who then shall not be saved? Then if a man be called a brother (that is, a Christian) and be baptized, though he be a fornicator, or a railer, or covetous, or a drunkard, yet he shall inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 5. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.

But the Arminian will reply; such as these though they did receive regenerating grace in Baptism, are since fallen away, and must be renewed again, or else they cannot be saved.

I answer, 1. That there is an infallible connection between regeneration and salvation, as we have already shown, and I itch to be farther evidencing, but that 'tis against designed brevity. 2. Then men must be again born again, which carries a great deal of absurdity in its very face. And why may not men be twice born in nature, as well as in grace? Why not as great an absurdity to be twice regenerated as to be twice generated? But 3. and above all, This grants however the thing I contend for, that whatever men do, or pretend to receive in baptism, if they be found afterwards to be grossly ignorant or profane, or formal, without the power of godliness, they must be born again, or else be shut out of the Kingdom of God. So then, they must have more to plead for themselves, than their baptismal regeneration.

Well, in this you see all are agreed, that be it more or less that is received in baptism, if (when men come to years) they are evidently unsanctified, they must be renewed again by a thorough and powerful change, or else they cannot escape the damnation of Hell: Friends and Brethren be not deceived, God is not mocked; Gal. 6. 7. Whether it be your baptism or what ever else that you pretend, I tell you from the living God, that if any of you be a prayerless person, Job. 15. 14. or unclean, or malicious, or covetous, or riotous, or a scoffer, or a lover of evil company, Prov. 13. 20. In a word, if you are not holy, strict, and self-denying Christians, Heb. 12. 14. Mat. 16. 24. you cannot be saved, except you be transformed by a further work upon you, and renewed again by repentance.

Thus I have shown, that it is not enough to evidence a man to be regenerate, that he hath been baptized; effectual grace not necessarily accompanying baptism, as some have vainly asserted. But I must answer one Objection before I pass.

Obj. The Sacraments do certainly attain their ends, where man doth not ponere obicem, or lay some obstruction, which Infants do not.

Sol. I answer, it is not the end of Baptism to regenerate, 1. Because then there would be no reason, why it should be confined only to the seed of Believers: for both the law of God, and the nature of Charity, requires us to use the means of conversion for all, as far as we can have opportunity. Were this true, no such charity as to catch the children of Turks and Heathens, and baptize them, and dispatch them to Heaven out of hand; like the bloody Wretches, that made the poor Protestants (to save their lives) to swear they would come to Mass, and that they would never depart from it, and then put them forthwith to death, saying, They would hang them while in a good mind. 2. Because it presupposeth regeneration, and therefore cannot be intended to confer it. In all the express instances in Scripture, we find that baptism doth suppose their repenting, believing, receiving the Holy Ghost, Acts 8. 37. Acts 2. 38. Acts 10. 47. Mark 16. 16. And to imagine, that baptism was instituted for an end of which not one of the first subjects was capable (for they were all adult persons and supposed to have faith and repentance according as they professed, and their children were not baptized till after them, in their right,) were no little absurdity. Were this Doctrine true, baptism would make Disciples, but we find it doth bespeak them such before hand, Mat. 28. 19. 3. Because Baptism, being but a Seal of the Covenant, cannot convey the benefits, but according to the tenor of the Covenant, to which it is set. Now the Covenant is conditional, therefore the Seal conveys conditionally. The Covenant requires faith and repentance, as the condition of the grand benefits, pardon, and life, Act. 16. 31. Acts 3. 19. And what the Covenant doth not convey but upon these conditions, the Seal cannot. So that Baptism doth presuppose faith and repentance in the subject, without which it neither doth, nor can convey the saving benefits: otherwise the Seal should convey contrary to the tenor of the Covenant to which it is affixed.

3. It lies not in a moral righteousness. This exceeds not the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, and therefore cannot bring us to the Kingdom of God, Mat. 5. 20. Paul, while unconverted, was touching the righteousness which is in the Law blameless, Phil. 3. 6. None could say black is thine eye. The selfjusticiary could say, I am no Extortioner, Adulterer, Unjust, &c. Luke 18. 11. Thou must have something more than all this to show, or else (however thou mayest justify thyself) God will condemn thee. I condemn not morality, but warn you not to rest here. Piety includes morality, as Christianity doth humanity, and grace reason. But we must not divide the tables.

4. It consists not in an external conformity to the rules of Piety. 'Tis too manifest, men may have a form of godliness, without the power, 2 Tim. 3. 5. Men may pray long, Mat. 23. 14. and fast often, Luke 18. 12. and hear gladly Mat. 12. 20. and be very forward in the service of God, though costly and expensive, Isaiah 1. 11. and yet be strangers to Conversion. They must have more to plead for themselves, than that they keep their Church, and give alms, and make use of prayer, to prove themselves sound Converts. No outward service but an hypocrite may do it; even to the giving all his goods to the poor, and his members to the fire, 1 Cor. 13. 3.

5. It lies not in the chaining up of corruption, by education, human laws, or the force of incumbent affliction. 'Tis too common and easy, to mistake education for grace; but if this were enough, who a better man than Iehoasb? While Iehojadah his uncle lived, he was very forward in God's service, and calls upon him to repair the house of the Lord, 2 Kings 12. 2, 7. But here was nothing more than good education all this while: for when his good Tutor was taken out of the way, he appears to have been but a wolf chained up; and falls off to Idolatry.

6. In short, it consists only in illumination, or conviction, in a superficial change, or partial reformation. An Apostate may be a man enlightened, Heb. 6. 4. and a Felix tremble under convictions, Acts 24. 23. and a Herod amend many things, •ar. 6. 20. 'Tis one thing to have sin alarmed only by convictions, and another to have it captivated and crucified by converting grace. Many, because they have been troubled in conscience for their sins, think well of their case; miserably mistaking conviction for Conversion. With these Cain might have passed for a Convert, who ran up and down the World, like a man distracted under the rage of a guilty conscience, till with building and business he had worn it away, Gen. 4. 13, 14. Others think, that because they have given off their riotous courses, and are broken off from evil company, or some particular lust, and reduced to sobriety and civility, they are now no other than real Converts; forgetting that there is a vast difference between being sanctified, and civilized; and that many seek to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Luke 13. 24. and are not far from it, Mark 12. 34. and arrive to the almost of Christianity, Acts 26. 28. and yet fall short at last. While conscience holds the whip over them, many will pray, hear, read, and forbear their delightful sins: but no sooner is this Lyon asleep, but they are at their vomit again. Who more religious than the Jews, when God's hand was upon them? Psal. 78. 34, 35. but no sooner was the affliction over, but they forgot God, and shown their Religion to be but a fit, v. 36, 37. Thou mayest have disgorged a troublesome sin, that will not sit in thy stomach, and have escaped the gross pollutions of the World, and yet not have changed thy swinish nature all the while 2 Pet. 2. 20, 22.

You may cast the lead, out of the rude mass, into the more comely proportion of a plant, and then into the shape of a beast, and thence into the form and features of a man: but all the while it is but lead still. So a man may pass through divers transmutations, from ignorance to knowledge, from profaneness to civility, thence to a form of Religion, and all this while he is but carnal and unregenerate, while his nature remains unchanged.

Application. Hear then, O sinners hear; as you would live, so come and hear; Isaiah. 55. 3. Why would you so willfully deceive yourselves, or build your hopes upon the sand? I know he shall find hard work of it, that goes to pluck away your hopes. It cannot but be ungrateful to you, and truly it is not pleasing to me. I set about it, as a Surgeon, when to cut off a purified Member from his well-beloved friend; which of force he must do, but with an aking heart, a pitiful eye, a trembling hand. But understand me, Brethren, I am only taking down the ruinous house, (which will otherwise speedily fall of itself, and bury you in the rubbish,) that I may build fair, and strong and firm forever. The hope of the wicked shall perish, if God be true of his word. Prov. 11. 7. And wert not thou better, O sinner, to let the word convince thee now in time, and let go thy false and self-deluding hopes, than to have death too late to open thine eyes, and find thyself in hell, before thou art awake? I should be a false and faithless Shepherd, if I should not tell you, that you who have built your hopes upon no better grounds, $\langle \diamond \rangle$ these orementioned, are yet in your $\langle \diamond \rangle$. Let your conscience speak; what is it, that you have to plead for yourselves? Is it that you wear Christ's livery? that you bear his name? that you are of the visible Church? that you have knowledge in the points of Relig•••, are civilized, perform religious duties, are just in your dealings, have been troubled in conscience for your sins? I tell you from the Lord, these pleas will never be accepted at God's Bar. All this though good in itself, will not prove you converted, and so will not suffice to your salvation. Oh look about you, and bethink yourselves of turning speedily and soundly. Set to praying and to reading, and studying your own hearts; rest not, till God hath made through work with you: for you must be other men, or else you are lost men.

But if these be short of Conversion, what shall I say of the profane sinner? It may be, he will scarce cast his eyes, or lend his ears to this discourse: but if there be any such reading, or within hearing, he must know from the Lord that made him, that he is far from the Kingdom of God. May a man be civilized and not converted, where then shall the Drunkard, and Glutton appear? May a man keep company with the wise Virgins, and yet be shut out? Shall not a companion of fools much more be destroyed? Prov. 13. 20. May a man be true and just in his dealing, and yet not be justified of God? What then will become of thee, O wretched man, whose conscience tells thee thou art false in thy trade, and false of thy word, and makest thine advantage by a lying tongue? If men may be enlightened, and brought to the performance of holy duties, and yet go down to perdition, for resting in them, and sitting down on this side of Conversion: what will become of you, O miserable families, that live as without God in the World? And of you, O wretchless sinners, with whom God is scarce in all your thoughts: that are so ignorant, that you cannot, or so careless, that you will not pray? O repent and be converted; break off your sins by righteousness: away to Christ for pardoning and renewing grace: give up yourselves to him, to walk with him in holiness, or else you shall never see God. Oh that you would take the warnings of God! In his name I once more admonish you. Turn you at my reproof. Prov. 1. 2. 3. Forsake the foolish and live, Prov. 9. 6. Be sober, righteous, godly. Tit. 2. 12. Wash your hands you sinners, purify your hearts ye double minded. James 4. 8. Cease to do evil, learn to do well, Isaiah. 1. 16, 17. But if you will on, you must die. Ezek. 33. 11.

CHAP. II. Showing positively what Conversion is.

I May not leave you with your eyes half open, as he that saw men as trees walking. Mar. 8. 24. The word is profitable for doctrine, as well as reproof; 2 Tim. 3. 16. And therefore having thus far conducted you by the shelves and rocks of so many dangerous mistakes, I would guide you at length into the harbor of truth.

Conversion then (in short) lies, in the thorough change both of the heart, and life. I shall briefly describe it in its nature and causes.

1. The author it is the spirit of God; and therefore it is called, the sanctification of the spirit; 2 Thes. 213. and the renewing of the holy Ghost. Tit. 3. 5. Yet not excluding the other persons in the Trinity: For the Apostle teacheth us, to bless the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for that he hath begotten us again: 1 Pet. 1. 3. and Christ is said to give repentance to Israel; Acts 5. 31. and is called the everlasting Father, Isaiah. 9. 6. and we his seed, and the Children which God hath given him, Heb. 2. 13. Isaiah. 53. 10. O blessed birth! Seven Cities contended for the birth of Homer: but the whole Trinity Fathers the new creature. Yet is this work principally ascribed to the Holy Ghost, and so we are said to be born of the spirit. John. 3. 8.

So then it is a work above man's power. We are born, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man; but of God. John 1. 31. Never think thou canst convert thyself. If ever thou wouldst be savingly converted, thou must despair of doing it in thine own strength. Ier. 31. 18. It is a Resurrection from the dead, Rev. 20. 5. Eph. 1. 2. a new creation, Gal. 6. 15. Eph. 2. 10. a work of absolute omnipotency: Eph. 1. 19. Are these out of the reach of human power? If thou hast no more than thou hadst by thy first birth, a good nature, a meek and chaste temper, &c. thou art a very stranger to true conversion. This is a supernatural work.

2. The moving cause is Internal, or External.

The Internal mover is only free grace. Not by works of righteousness which we have done: but of his own mercy he saved us—by the renewing of the Holy Ghost, Tit. 3. 5. Of his own will begat he us, I am. 1. We are chosen and called unto Sanctification, not for it. Eph. 1. 4.

God finds nothing in man to turn his heart, but to turn his stomach: enough to provoke his loathing, nothing to provoke his love. Look back upon thyself, O Christian. Take up thy verminous rags: Look upon thyself in thy blood. Ez. 16. 6. O reflect upon thy swinish nature, thy filthy swill, thy once beloved mire. 2 Pet. 2. Canst thou think without loathing of thy trough and draugh? Open thy sepulcher, Mat. 23. 27. Art not thou almost struck dead with the hellish damp? behold thy putrid soul, thy loathsome members. O stench unsufferable, if thou dost but sense thine own putrifaction! Psal. 14. 3. Behold thy ghastly visage, thy crawling lusts, thy slime and corruption. Do not thine own clothes abhor thee? Job. 9. 31. How then should holiness and purity love thee. Be astonished O Heavens at this, be moved O Earth. Ier. 2. 12. Who but must needs cry. Grace! Grace! Zech. 4. 7. Hear and blush you Children of the most high. O you unthankful generation! that free grace is no more in your mouths, in your thoughts; no more adored, admired, commended by such as you. One would think you should be nothing but praising and admiring God, whatever you are. How can you make a shift to forget such grace, or to pass it over with a slight and seldom mention? What but free grace should move God to love you, unless enmity could do it, or deformity could do it, unless vomit, or rottenness could do it? How affectionately doth Peter lift up his hands? Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who of his abundant mercy hath begotten us again. 1 Pet. 1. 3. How feelingly doth Paul magnify the free mercy of God in it? God who is rich in mer•• for his great love wherewith he loved us; hath quickened us together with Christ; by Grace are ye saved, Eph. 2. 4, 5.

The external mover is the merit and intercession of the blessed Jesus. He hath obtained gifts for the rebe••ious; Psal 68. 18. and through him it is, that God worketh in us, what is well pleasing in his sight, Heb. 13. 21. Through him are all spiritual blessings bestowed upon us in ••venly things, Eph. 1. 3. He intercedeth for the Elect, that believe not. John. 17. 20. Every Convert is the fruit of his travel. Isaiah, 53. 11. O never was infant born into the world with that difficulty, that Christ endured for us. How emphatically he groaneth in his travel? All the pains that he suffered on his Cross they were our birth pains, Act. 2. 24. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 the pulls and throws that Christ endured for us. He is made sanctification to us, 1 Cor. 1. 30. He sanctified himself (that is set apart himself as a sacrifice) that we may be sanctified. John 17. 19. We are sanctified through the offering of his body once for all, Heb. 10. 10.

'Tis nothing then without his own bowels, but the merit and intercession of Christ, that prevails with God to bestow upon us converting grace. If thou art a new creature, thou knowest to whom thou owest it, to Christ's pangs and prayers. Hence the natural affection of a believer to Christ. The •oal doth not more naturally run after the Dam, nor the suckling to the dugs, than a believer to Jesus Christ. And whither else shouldst thou go? If any in the World can show that for thy heart, that Christ can, let them carry it. Doth Satan put in, doth the World court thee, doth sin sue for thy heart? Why, were these crucified for thee? 1 Cor. 1. 13. O Christian, love and serve the Lord while thou hast a being. Do not even the Publicans love those that love them? And show kindness to them that are kind to them? Mat. 5. 46, 47.

3. The Instrument is either Personal, or Real.

The personal is the Ministry. I have begotten you to Christ through the Gospel, 1 Cor. 4. 15. Christ's Ministers are they that are sent to open men's eyes, and to turn them to God. Acts 26. 18.

O unthankful World, little do you know what you are doing, while you are persecuting the Messengers of the Lord. These are they whose business is (under Christ) to save you. Whom have you reproached and blasphemed? Against whom have you exalted your voice, and lifted your eyes on high? Isaiah. 37. 23. These are the servants of the most high God, that show unto you the way of salvation, Acts 16. 17. and do you thus requite them, O foolish and unwise? Deut. 32. 6. O sons of ingratitude, against whom do you sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isaiah. 57. 3. These are the Instruments that God useth to convert and save you: and do you spit in the face of your Physicians, and throw your Pilots overboard? Father forgive them, for they know not what they do.

The Instrument Real is the word. We were begotten by the word of truth. This is it that enlightens the eyes, that converteth the soul, Psa, 19. 7, 8. that maketh wise to salvation, 2 Tim. 3. 15. This is the incorruptible seed, by which we are born again. 1 Pet. 1. 33. If we are washed, 'tis by the word, Eph. 5. 26. •f we are sanctified, 'tis through the truth, John. 17. 17. This generates faith, and regenerates us. Rom. 10. 17. I am. 1. 18.

O ye Saints, how should you love the word? for by this you have been converted. O ye sinners, how should you ply the word? for by this you must be converted. No other ordinary means but this. You that have felt its renewing power, make much of it while you live, be forever thankful for it. Tie it about your necks, write it upon your hands, lay it in your bosoms. Prov. 6. 21, 22. When you go let it lead you, when you sleep let it keep you, when you wake let it talk with you. Say with holy David, I will never forget thy precepts, for by them hast thou quickened me. Psal. 119, 93. You that are unconverted, read the word with diligence, flock to it, where powerfully preached; fill the porches, as the multitude of the impotent, blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water. John 5. 3. Pray for the coming of the spirit in the word. Come off thy knees to the sermon: and come to thy knees from the sermon. The seed doth not prosper because not warred by prayers and tears, nor covered by meditation.

4. The final cause is man's salvation, and God's glory. We are chosen through sanctification to Salvation, 2 Thes. 2. 13. Called that we might be glorified, Rom. 8. 30. but especially, that God might be glorified, Isaiah. 60. 21. that we should show forth his praises, 1 Pet. 2. 9. and be fruitful in good works, Col. 1. 10.

O Christian, do not forget the end of thy calling, let thy light shine, Mat. 5. 16. Let thy Lamp burn, let thy Fruits be good, and many, and in season, Psal. 1. 3. Let all thy designs fall in with God's, that he may be magnified in thee, Phil. 1. 20. Why should God repent that he hath made thee a Christian, as in the time of the old world, that he made them men? Gen. 6. 6. Why shouldst thou be an eye sore in his Orchard, Luk. 7. by thy unfruitfulness? or a son that causeth shame, as it were a grief to thy father, and a bitterness to her that bare thee, Prov.

17. 25. Prov. 10. 5. O let the womb bless thee that bare thee, Prov. 17. 21. He that begets a fool doth it to his sorrow; and the father of a fool hath no joy.

5. The subject is the elect sinner, and that in all his parts and powers, members and mind. Whom God predestinates, them only he calls. Rom. 8. 30, None are drawn to Christ by their calling, nor come to him by believing, but his sheep, those whom the father hath given him, 1 John 6. 37, 44. Effectual calling runs parallel with eternal election. 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Thou beginnest at the wrong end, if thou disputest first about thine election. Prove thy conversion, and then never doubt of thine election. Or canst thou not yet prove it? Set upon a present and thorough turning. Whatever God's purposes be (which are secret) I am sure his promises are plain. How desperately do rebels argue? If I am elected I shall be saved, do what I will: If not, I shall be damned, do what I can. Perverse sinner, wilt thou begin where thou shouldest end? Is not the word before thee? What saith it? Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, Acts. 3. 19. If you mortify the deeds of the body, you shall live, Rom. 8. 13. Believe and be saved, Act. 16. 31. What can be plainer? Do not stand still, disputing about thine election, but set to repenting and believing. Cry to God for converting grace. Revealed things belong to thee, in these busy thyself. 'Tis just (as one well) that they that will not feed on the plain food of the word, should be choked with the bones. What ever God's purposes be, I am sure his promises be true. Whatever the decrees of Heaven be, I am sure, that if I repent and believe I shall be saved; and that if I repent not, I shall be damned. Is not here plain ground for thee: and wilt thou yet run upon the rocks.

More particularly, this change of conversion passes throughout in the whole subject. A carnal person may have some shreds of good morality, a little near the list, but he is never good throughout the whole cloth, the whole body of Holiness and Christianity; Feel him a little further near the ridge, and you shall see him to be but a deceitful piece. Conversion is not a repairing of the old building, but it takes all down and erects a new structure: it is not the putting in a patch or sowing on a list of holiness; but with the true convert, holiness is woven into all his powers, principles, and practice. The sincere Christian is quite a new fabric, from the foundation to the top-stone all fire-new. He is a new man, Eph. 4. 24. a new creature. All things are become new, 2 Cor. 5. 17. Conversion is a deep work, a heart work; Acts 2. 37, and 16. 14. it turns all upside down, and makes a man begin a new world. It goes throughout with men, throughout the Mind, throughout the Members, throughout the motions of the whole life.

1. Throughout the mind. It makes an universal change within. First it turns the balance of the judgment, so that God and his Glory do weigh down all carnal and worldly interests. Acts 20. 24. Phil. 1. 20. Psal. 73. 25. It opens the eye of the mind, and makes the scales of its native ignorance to fall off, and turns men from darkness to light. Acts 26. 18. Eph. 5. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 9. The man that before saw no danger in his condition, now concludes himself lost, and forever undone, Acts 2. 37. except renewed by the power of Grace. He that formerly thought there was little hurt in sin, now comes to see it to be the chief of evils; he sees the unreasonableness, unrighteousness, the deformity and the filthiness that is in sin, so that he is affrighted with it, loathes it, dreads it, flies it, and even abhors himself for it, Rom. 7. 15.

Job 42. 6. Ezek. 36. 31. He that could see little sin in himself, and could find no matter for confession (as it was said of that learned Ignoramus Bellarmino (who it seems while he knew so much abroad, was a miserable stranger to himself,) that when he was to be confessed by the Priest, could not remember anything to confess but was fain to run back to the sins of his youth) I say he that could not find matter for confession, unless it were some few gross and staring evils, now sin reviveth with him, Rom. 7. 9. he sees the rottenness of his heart, and desperate and deep pollution of his whole nature: he cries, unclean, unclean, Lev. 13. 4. 5. Lord purge me with Hyssop, wash me thoroughly, create in me a new heart, Psal. 51. 2, 7, 10. He sees himself altogether become filthy, Psal. 14. 3. corrupt both root and tree, Mat. 7. 17, 18. he writes unclean upon all his parts, and powers, and performances, Isaiah. 63. 6. Rom. 7. 18. He discovers the nasty corners that he was never aware of, and sees the blasphemy, and theft, and murder, and adultery that is in his heart, which before he was ignorant of. Heretofore he saw no form nor comeliness in Christ, no beauty that he should desire him; but now he finds the hid treasure, and will sell all to buy this field. Christ is the pearl he seeks, sin the puddle he loathes.

Now according to this new light, the man is of another mind, another judgment, than before he was: Now God is all with him: he hath none in Heaven nor in Earth like him, Ps. 73. 25. He prefers him truly before all the World: his favor is his life: the light of his Countenance is more than Corn and Wine and Oil, (the good that he formerly inquired after, and set his heart upon, Psal. 4. 6, 7.) Now let all the World be set on one side, and God alone on the other? Let the Harlot put on her paint, and gallantry, and present herself to the soul (as when Satan would have tempted our Savior with her) in all the glory of her Kingdoms, yet the soul will not fall down and worship her; but will prefer a naked, yea a crucified, persecuted Christ before her, Phil. 3. 8. 1 Cor. 22. Not but that a Hypocrite may come to yield a general assent to this, that God is the chief good: yea the wiser Heathens (some few of them) have at last stumbled upon this: but there is a difference between the absolute, and comparative judgment of the understanding. No Hypocrite comes so far, as to look upon God, as the most desirable and suitable good to him, and thereupon to acquiesce in him. This was the converts voice; The Lord is my portion saith my soul Whom have I in Heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth, that I desire besides thee. God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever, Psal. 73. 25, 26. Lam. 3. 24.

Secondly, it turns the bias of the Will, both as to means and end (1.) The intension of the wist is altered, Ezek. 36. 26. Ier. 31. 33. Isaiah 26. 8, 9. Now the man hath new ends and designs. Now he intends God above all, and desires and designs nothing in all the world so much, as that Christ may be magnified in him, Phil. 1. 20. He accounts himself more happy in this, than in all that the earth could yield, that he may be serviceable to Christ, and bring him glory in his generation. This is the Mark he aims at, that the name of Jesus may be great in the world, and that all the sheaves of his brethren may bow to this sheaf.

Reader, dost thou view this and never ask thyself, whether it be thus with thee? Pause a while, and breathe on this great concernment.

2. The election also is changed, so that he chooses another way, Psal. 119. 30. He pitches upon God as his blessedness, and upon Christ as the principal, and holiness as the subordinate means, to bring him to God. John. 14. 6. Rom. 2. 7. He chooses Jesus for his Lord. Col. 2. 6. He is not merely forced into Christ by the storm, nor doth he take Christ for bare necessity, as the man begged from the gallows, when he takes the wife, rather than the halter: but he comes off freely in the choice. This match is not made in a fright, as with the terrified conscience, or dying sinner, that will seemingly do anything for Christ, but doth only take Christ, rather than hell: but he deliberately resolves, that Christ is his best choice, Phil. 1. 23. and would rather have him to choose, than all the good of this world, might he enjoy it while he would. Again, he takes holiness for his path. He doth not out of mere necessity submit to it: but he likes and loves it. I have chosen the way of thy Precepts, Psal. 119. 173. He takes God's testimonies not as his bondage, but as his heritage, yea his heritage forever: v. 111. he counts them not his burden, but his bliss, not his cords but his cordials. 1 John. 5. 3. Psal. 119. 14, 16, 47. He doth not only bear, but take up Christ's yoke. He takes not holiness, as the stomach doth the loathed potion, (which it will down with rather than die) but as the hungry doth his beloved food. No time passes so sweetly with him (when he is himself) as that he spends in the exercises of holiness; these are both his aliment, and his element, the desire of his eyes, and the joy of his heart. Job. 23. 12. Psal. 119. 82, 131, 162, 174. Psal. 63. 5.

Put thy conscience to it as thou goest, whether thou art the man. O happy man, if this be thy case! But see thou be thorough and partial in the search.

Thirdly, it turns the bent of the affection. 2. Cor. 7. 11. These run all in a new channel. The Jordan is now driven back, and the water runs upward against its natural course.

Christ is his Hope, 1 Tim. 1. 1. this is his prize Phil. 3. 8. here his eye is, here his heart is. He is contented to cast all over board (as the merchant in the storm, ready to perish) so he may but keep this Jewel.

The thirst of his Desires is, not after gold, but grace, Phil. 3. 13. He hungers after it, he seeks it as silver, he digs for it as for hid treasure: he had rather be gracious, than be great; he had rather be the holiest man on earth, than the most learned, the most famous, most prosperous. While carnal, he said: Oh! If I were but in great esteem, and rolled in wealth, and swim'd in pleasure, if my debts were paid, and I and mine provided for, then I were a happy man: but now the tune is changed. Oh, saith the Convert, if I had but my corruptions subdued; if I had such measures of grace, such fellowship with God, though I were poor and despised, I should not care, I should account myself a blessed man. Reader, is this the language of thy soul?

His *Joy*s are changed. He rejoiceth in the ways of God's testimonies, as much as in all riches, Psa. 119. 14. He delights in the Law of the Lord, wherein once he had little favor. He hath no such Joy, as in the thoughts of Christ, the fruition of his company, the prosperity of his people.

His Cares are quite altered. He was once set for the World, and any scraps of by-time, nothing (too often) was enough for his soul. Now he gives over caring for the Asses, and sets his heart on the Kingdom. Now all the cry is, What shall I do to be saved? Acts. 16. 30. His great solicitude is, how to secure his soul. Oh! how he would bless you, if you could but put him out of doubt of this!

His Fears are not so much of suffering, but of sinning, Heb. 11. 25, 27. Once he was afraid of nothing so much as the loss of his estate, or esteem, the displeasure of friends, the scorns of the great: nothing sounded so terrible to him, as pain, or poverty, or disgrace. Now these are little to him, in comparison of God's dishonor, or displeasure. How warily doth he walk, left he should tread on a snare? He feareth always, he looks before and behind; he hath his eye upon his heart, and is often casting over his shoulder, left he should be overtaken with sin, Psal. 39. 1. Prov. 28. 14. Eccles. 2. 14. It kills his heart to think of losing God's favor; this he dreads as his only undoing, Psal. 51. 11, 12. Psal. 119. 8. No thought in the world doth pinch him and pain him so much, as to think of parting with Christ.

His Love runs a new course. My Love was crucified (said holy Ignatius) that is, my Christ. This is my beloved, saith the Spouse Cant. 5. 16. How doth Augustine often pour his loves upon Christ.

He can find no words sweet enough. Let me see thee, O Light of mine eyes. Come, O thou joy of my spirit; Let me behold thee, O the gladness of my heart. Let me love thee, O life of my soul. Appear unto me, O my great delight, my sweet comfort, O my God, my life, and the whole glory of my soul. Let me find thee, O desire of my heart: Let me hold thee, O love of my soul. Let me embrace thee, O heavenly Bridegroom. Let me possess thee, O eternal blessedness, &c.

His Sorrows have now a new vent. 2 Cor. 7. 9. 10. The view of his sins, the sight of a Christ crucified, that would scarce stir him before, now how much do they affect his heart?

His Hatred boils, his Anger burns against sin, Psal. 119. 104. He hath no patience with himself: he calls himself fool, and beast, and thinks any name too good for himself, when his indignation is stirred up against sin, Psal. 73. 22. Prov. 30. 2. He could once swill in it, with too much pleasure; now he loathes the thought of returning to it, as much as of licking up the filthiest vomit.

Commune then with thine own heart, and attend the common and general current of thine affections, whether it be towards God in Christ, above all other concernments. Indeed sudden and strong commotions of the affections and sensitive part, are oftentimes found in hypocrites; especially where the natural constitution leads thereunto: and contrariwise, the sanctified themselves are many times without sensible stirrings of the affections, where the temper is more slow, dry and dull. The great inquiry is, whether the judgment and will be standingly determined for God, above all other good, real or apparent: and if the affections do sincerely follow their choice, and conduct, though it be not so strongly and sensibly, as is to be desired, there is no doubt, but the change is saving.

2. Thorowout the Members. These that were before the instruments of sin, are now become the holy utensils of Christ's living Temple, Rom. 6. 16. 1 Cor. 3. 16. He that before made, as it were, a band or a barrel of his body, now possesseth his vessel in sanctification, and honor, in temperance, chastity, and sobriety, as dedicated to the Lord, 1 Thes. 44. Gal. 5. 22, 23. 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20.

The Eye that was once a wandering eye, a wanton eye, a haughty, a covetous eye, is now employed, as Mary, in weeping over her sins, Luk. 7. 38. in beholding God in his works Psal. 8. 3. in reading his word, Acts 8. 30. in looking up and down for objects of mercy, and opportunities for his service.

The Ear that was once open to Satan's call, and that (like a vitiated palat) did relish nothing so much as filthy, or at least frothy talk, and the fools laughter, is now bored to the door of Christ's house, and open to his discipline. It saith, Speak Lord for thy servant heareth. It cries with him, veniat verbum Domini, and waits for his word as the rain, and relishes them more than the appointed food, Job 23. 12. than the honey and the honey comb, Psal. 19. 10.

The Head, that was the shop of worldly, designs, is now filled with other matters, and set on the study of God's will, Psal. 1. 2. Psal. 119. 97. and the man beats his head, not so much about his gain, but about his duty. The thoughts and cares that now fill his head are principally, how he may please God, and fly sin.

His Heart, that was a sty of filthy Insts, is now become an altar of Incense, where the fire of divine love is ever kept in, and whence the daily sacrifice of prayer and praises, and sweet incense of holy desires, ejaculations, and anhelations are continually ascending, Psal. 108. 1.

The Mouth is become a well of life, his Tongue as choice silver, and his Lips feed many: Now the salt of grace hath seasoned his speech, and eat out the corruption, Col. 4. 6. and cleanseth the man from his filthy communication, flattery, boasting, railing, lying, swearing, backbiting, that once came like the flashes proceeding from the hell that was in the heart. James 3. 6. 7. The Throat, that was once an open sepulcher, Rom. 3. 13. now sends forth the sweet breath of prayer, and holy discourse, and the man speaks in another Tongue, in the Language of Canaan, and is never so well, as when talking of God, and Christ, and the matters of another World. His Mouth bringeth forth wisdom, his Tongue is become the silver Trumpet of his makers praise, his glory and the best member that he hath.

Now here you shall have the hypocrite halting. He speaks it may be like an Angel, but he hath a covetous eye, or the gain of unrighteousness in his hand. Or the hand is white, but his heart is full of rottenness, Mat. 13. 27. full of unmortified cares, a very oven of lust, a shop of pride, the seat of malice. It may be with Nebuchadnezzar's Image, he hath a Golden head, a great deal of knowledge: but he hath feet of clay, his affections are worldly, he minds earthly things, and his way and walk are sensual, and carnal, you may trace him in his secret haunts, and his footsteps will be found in some by-paths of sin. The work is throughout with him.

3. Thorowout the motives, or the life, and practice. The new man takes a new course, Eph. 2. 2, 3. His Conversation is in Heaven, Phil. 3. 20. No sooner doth Christ call by effectual grace, but he strait way becomes a follower of him, Mat. 4. 20. When God hath given the new heart and writ his law in his mind, he forthwith walks in his statutes and keeps his judgments, Ezek. 36. 26, 27.

Though sin may dwell (God knows a wearisome and unwelcome guest) in him, yet it hath no more dominion over him. Rom. 6. 14, 7. He hath his fruit unto holiness, Rom. 6. 22. and though he makes many a blot, yet the law and life of Jesus is that he eyes, as his copy, Psal. 119. 30. Heb. 12. 2. and hath an unfeigned respect to all God's commandments, Ps. 119. 6. He makes conscience even of little sins & little duties, Psal. 119. 113. His very infirmities which he cannot help, though he would, are his souls burden, and are like the dust in a man's eye, which though but little, yet are not a little troublesome. [O man, Dost thou read this, and never turn in upon thy soul by self-examination?] The sincere Convert is not one man at Church, and another at home: he is not a Saint on his knees, and a Cheat in his shop: he will not tithe mint and cummin, and neglect mercy and judgment, and the weighty matters of the Law: he doth not pretend piety and neglect morality, Mat. 23. 14. but he turns from all his sins and keeps all God's Statutes, Ezek. 18. 21. though not perfectly (except in desire and endeavor) yet sincerely, not allowing himself in the breach of any, Rom. 7. 15. Now he delights in thy word, and sets himself to prayer, and opens his hand, (if able) and draws out his soul to the hungry, Rom. 7. 22. Psal. 109. 4 Isaiah. 58. 10. He breaketh off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, Dan. 4. 27. and hath a good conscience willing in all things to live honestly, H•b. 13. 18. and to keep without offense towards God and men.

Here again you shall find the unsoundness of many professors, that take themselves for good Christians. They are partial in the law, Mat. 2. 9. and take up with the cheap and easy duties of religion, but they go not thorough with the work. They are as a cake not turned, half roasted, and half raw. It may be you shall have them exact in their words, punctual in their dealings, but then they do not exercise themselves unto godliness; and for examining themselves, and governing their hearts, to this they are strangers. You may have them duly at the Church, but follow them to their families, and there you shall see little but the world minded, or if they have a road of family duties, follow them to their closets, and there you shall find their souls are little looked after. It may be they seem otherwise religious, but bridle not their tongues, and so all their religion is in vain, I am. 1. 26. It may be they come up to closet and family prayer; but follow them to their shops, and there you shall find them in a trade of lying, or some covert and cleanly way of deceit. Thus the hypocrite goes not throughout in the course of his obedience.

And thus much for the subject of Conversion.

6. The terms are either from which, or to which.

1. The terms from which we turn in this motion of Conversion, are sin, Satan, the world, and our own righteousness.

first, Sin. When a man is converted, he is forever out with sin: yea with all sin. Psal. 119. 128. but most of all with his own sins, and especially with his bosom sin, Psal. 18. 23. Sin is now the But of his indignation, 2 Cor. 7. 11. he thirsts to bathe his hands in the blood of his sins.

His sins set abroad in sorrows. It is sin that pierces him and wounds him: he feels it like a thorn in his side, like a prick in his eyes, he groans and struggles under it, and not formally, but feelingly cries out, O wretched man: he is not impatient of any burden so much as of his sin, Psal. 40. 12. If God should give him his choice, he would choose any affliction, so he might be rid of sin. He feels it like the cutting gravel in his shoes, pricking, and paining him as he goes.

Before Conversion he had light thoughts of sin: he cherished it in his bosom, as Uriah his lamb: he nourished it up, and it grew up together with him; it did eat as it were of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was to him as a daughter: but when God opens his eyes by conversion, he throws it away with abhorrence, Isaiah. 30. 22. as a man would a loathsome toad, which in the dark he had hugged fast in his bosom, and thought it had been some pretty and harmless bird. When a man is savingly changed, he is not only deeply converted of the danger, but defilement of sin: and O how earnest is he with God to be purified? He loathes himself for his sins, Ezek. 36. 31. He runs to Christ, and casts himself into the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, Zec. 13. 31. If he fall what a stir is there to get all clean again? He flies to the word, and washes, and rubs, and rinches, laboring to cleanse himself from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit: He abhors his once beloved sin, Psal. 18. 23. as a cleanly nature doth the trough, and mire, wherein he sees the swine delight.

The sound Convert is heartily engaged against sin. He wrestles with it, he wars against it. He is too often foiled, but he never yields the cause, nor lays down the weapons; but he will up, and to it again, while he hath breath in his body. He will never give quiet possession, he will make no peace; he will give no quarter, he falls upon it, and fires upon it, and is still disquieting of it with continual alarms. He can forgive his other enemies; he can pity them, and pray for them, Acts 7. 60. but here he is implacable, here he is set upon revenge: he hunteth, as it were, for the precious life; his eye shall not pity, his hand shall not spare, though it be a right hand or a right eye: Be it a gainful sin, most delightful to his nature, a support to his esteem with carnal friends; yet he will rather throw his gain down the kennel, see his credit fall, or the flower of pleasure whither in his hand, than he will allow himself in any known way of sin, Luke 19. 8. He will grant no indulgence, he will give no toleration, but he draws upon sin where ever he meets it, and frowns upon it with his unwelcome salute, Have I found thee, O mine enemy!

Reader, hath conscience been at work, while thou hast been looking over these lines? Hast thou pondered these things in thine heart? Hast thou searched the book within, to see if these things be so? If not, read it again, and make thy conscience to speak whether or no it be thus with thee.

Hast thou crucified thy flesh with its affections and lusts; and not only confessed, but forsaken thy sins; all sin in thy servant desires, and the ordinary practice of every deliberate and willful sin in thy life? If not, thou art yet unconverted. Doth not conscience fly in thy face, as thou readest, and tell thee that thou livest in away of lying for thy advantage, that thou usest deceit in thy calling, that there is some way of secret wantonness that thou livest in? why then, do not deceive thyself, thou art in the gall of bitterness, and bond of iniquity.

Doth not thy unbridled tongue, thy brutish intemperance, thy wicked company, thy neglect of prayer, of hearing and reading the word, now witness against thee, and say, We are thy works and we will follow thee? Or if I have not hit the right, doth not the bird within tell them, there is such or such a way, that thou knowest to be evil, that yet for some carnal respect thou dost tolerate thyself in, and art willing to spare? If this be the case, thou art to this day unregenerate, and must be changed or condemned.

Secondly, Satan. Conversion binds the strong man, spoils his armor, casts out his goods, turns men from the power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18. Before, the Devil could no sooner hold up his finger to the sinner, to call him to his wicked company, sinful games, filthy delights, but presently he follows, like an Ox to the slaughter, and a fool to the correction of the stocks, as the bird that hasteth to the prey, and knoweth not that it is for his life. No sooner could Satan bid him lie, but presently he had it upon the top of his tongue, Act. 5. 3. no sooner could Satan offer a wanton object, but he was stung with lust. The Devil could do more with him than God could. If the Devil say, away with these family duties, be sure they shall be rarely enough performed in his house. If the Devil say, away with this strictness, this preciseness, he will keep far enough from it. If he tells him there's no need of these closet duties, he shall go from day today and scarce perform them. But now he is converted, he serves another master, and takes quite another course, 1 Pet. 4. 4. he goes and comes at Christ's beck. Col. 3. 24. Satan may sometimes catch his foot in his trap; but he will no longer be a willing captive. He watches against the snares and baits of Satan, and studies to be acquainted with his devices. He is very suspicious of his plots, and is very jealous, in what comes athwart him, lest Satan should have some design upon him. He wrestles against principalities and powers, Eph. 6. He entertains the messenger of Satan as men do the messenger of death. He keeps his eye upon his enemy. 1 Pet. 5. 8. and watches in his duties, lest Satan should put in his foot.

Thirdly, the World. Before sound faith, a man is overcome of the world. Either he bows down to Mammon, or idolizes his reputation, or is a lover of pleasure, more than a lover of God, 2 Tim. 3. 4. Here's the root of man's misery by the fall; he is turned aside to the creature, instead of God, and gives that esteem, confidence, affection to the creature, that is due to him alone, Rom. 1. 25. Mat. 10. 37. Prov. 18. 11. Ier. 17. 5.

O miserable man! What a deformed monster hath sin made thee. God made thee little lower than the Angels, sin little better than the devils, John. 6. 70. and 8. 44. a monster that hath his head and heart, where his feet should be, and his feet kicking against Heaven, and everything out of place, the world, that was formed to serve thee, is come to rule thee; and the deceitful harlot hath bewitched thee with her enchantments, and made thee bow down and serve her.

But converting grace sets all in order again, and puts God in the Throne, and the world at his footstool, Psal. 73. 25. Christ in the heart, and the world under feet, Eph. 3. 17. Rev. 12. 1. So

Paul, I am crucified to the world, and the world to me, Gal. 6. 14. Before this change all the cry was who will show us any (worldly) good: but now he sings another tune. Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, and take the corn and wine whose will, Psal. 4. 6. 7. Before, his hearts delight and content was in the world; then the Song was, Soul take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: but now all this is withered, and there is no comeliness that he should desire it, and he tunes up with the sweet Psalmist of Israel, The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance; the lines are fallen to me in a fair place, and I have a goodly heritage. He blesses himself, and boasts himself in God, Psal. 34. 2. Lam. 3. 24. nothing else can give him content. He hath written vanity and vexation upon all his worldly enjoyments, Ec. 1. 2. and loss and dung upon all human excellencies, Phil. 3. 7, 8. He hath life and immortality now in chase, Rom. 2. 7. he trades for grace and glory, and hath the Crown incorruptible in pursuit, 1 Cor. 9. 25. His heart is set in him to seek the Lord, 1 Chron. 22. 19. and 2 Chron. 15. 15. He first seeks the Kingdom of Heaven and the righteousness thereof, and religion is no longer a matter by the by with him, but the main of his care, Mat. 6. 33. Psal. 27. 4. Now the gaudy idol is become Nehushtan; 2 Kings 18. 4. and he up and treads upon it, as Diogenes trampling on Plato's hangings, and saying Calco Platonis fastum. Before the world had the swaying interest with him: He would do more for gain than godliness, 1 Tim. 6. 5. more to please his friend, or his flesh, than to please the God that made him, and God must stand by till the world were first served; but now all must stand by: he hates father and mother and life and all in comparison of Christ, Luke 14. 26.

Well then, pause a little, and look within. Doth not this nearly concern thee? Thou pretendest for Christ; but doth not the world sway thee? Dost thou not take more real delight and content in the world, than in him? Dost not thou find thyself better at case when the World goes to thy mind, and thou art encompassed with carnal delights, than when retired to prayer and meditation in thy closet, or attending upon God's Word and Worship? No surer evidence of an unconverted estate, than to have the things of the world uppermost in our aims, love, and estimations, John. 2. 15. I am. 4. 4.

With the sound convert Christ hath the supremacy. How dear is this name to him? How precious is its savor? Cant. 1. 3. Psal. 45. 8. The name of Jesus is engraven upon his heart, Gal. 4. 19. and lies as a bundle of mirth between his breasts, Cant. 1. 13. 14. Honor is but air, and laughter is but madness, and Mammon is fallen like Dagon before the Ark, with hands and head broken off on the threshold, when once Christ is savingly revealed. Here is the pearl of great price to the true Convert; here is his treasure, here is his hope, Mat. 13. 44. 45. This is his glory: My beloved is mine, and I am his, Gal. 6. 14. Cant. 2. 16. O 'tis sweeter to him to be able to say, Christ is mine, than if he could say, the Kingdom is mine, the Indies are mine.

Fourthly, your own Righteousness. Before conversion, man seeks to cover himself with his own sig-leaves, Phil. 3. 6, 7. and to lick himself whole with his own duties, Mic. 6. 6, 7. He is apt to trust in himself, Luk. 16. 15. and 18. 9. and set his own righteousness, and to reckon his Counters for Gold, and not submit to the righteousness of God, Rom. 10. 3. But Conversion changes his mind; now he casts away his filthy rags, and counts his own righteousness, but a menstruous cloth: he casts it off, as a man would the verminous tatters of a nasty beggar, Isaiah. 64. 6. Now he is brought to poverty of spirit. Mat. 5. 3. complains of and condemns himself, Rom. 7. and all his inventory is, poor, and miserable, and wretched, and blind, and naked, Rev. 3. 17. he sees a world of iniquity in his holy things, & calls his once idolized righteousness, but flesh, and loss, and dogsmeat, and would not for a thousand worlds be found in himself, Phil. 3. 4, 7, 8, 9. His finger is ever upon his sores, Psal. 51. 3. his sins, his wants. Now he begins to set a high price upon Christ's righteousness: he sees the need of a Christ in every duty, to justify his person, and justify his performances: he cannot live without him, he cannot pray without him; Christ must go with him, or else he cannot come into the presence of God; he leans upon the hand of Christ and so he bows himself in the house of his God. He sets himself down for a lost undone man without him. His life is hid in Christ, as the life of a man in the heart. He is fixed in Christ, as the roots of the tree spread in the earth for stability and nutriment. Before, the news of a Christ was a stale and sapless thing: but now how sweet is a Christ? Augustine could not relish his before so much admired Cicero, because he could not find the name of Christ, How pathetically cries he? Dulcissime, amantisbenignis. Caris. &c. quando te videbo? quando satiabor de pulcritudine tua? Medit. c. 37. O most sweet, most loving, most kind, most dear, most precious, most desired, most lovely, most fair, &c. all in a breath, when he speaks of and to his Christ. In a word, the voice of the Convert is, with the Martyr, None but Christ.

2. The terms which are either Ultimate, or Subordinate and Mediate.

The Ultimate is God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, whom the true Convert takes, as his All-sufficient and eternal blessedness. A man is never truly sanctified, till his very heart be in truth set upon God, above all things, as his portion and chief good. These are the natural breathings of a believers heart, Thou art my portion O Lord, Psal. 1. 9. 57. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord, Psal. 34. 2. My expectation is from him: he only is my rock, and my salvation, he is my defense: in God is my salvation, and my glory, the rock my strength, and my refuge is in God, Psal. 62. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7. Psal. 18. 1, 2.

Would you put it to an issue, whether you be converted or not, now then let thy soul and all that is within thee attend.

Hast thou taken God for thy happiness? Where doth the content of thy heart lie? Whence doth thy choicest comfort come in? Come then, and with Abraham lift up thine eyes, Eastward, and Westward, and Northward, and Southward, and cast about thee what it is, that thou wouldst have in Heaven or earth to make thee happy. If God should give thee thy choice, as he did to Solomon, or should say to thee, as Ahasuerus to Esther, What is thy petition, and what is thy request, and it shall be granted thee; Esther 5. 3. What wouldst thou ask? go into the gardens of pleasure, and gather all the fragrant flowers from thence: would these content thee? Go to the treasures of Mammon, suppose thou mightest lade thyself, while thou wouldst from hence: go to the towers, to the trophies of honor; what thinkest thou of being a man of renown, and having a name like the name of the great men of the earth? Would any of this, all this suffice thee, and make thee count thyself a happy man, if so then certainly thou art carnal and unconverted. If not, go further; wade into the divine excellencies, the store of his mercies, the hiding of his power, the deeps unfathomable of his All-sufficiency.

Doth this suit thee best, and please thee most? Dost thou say, 'Tis good to be here. Mat. 17. 4. Here I will pitch, here I will live and die? Wilt thou let all the world go, rather than this? Then 'tis well between God and thee: Happy art thou, O man, happy art thou, that ever thou wast born. If a God can make thee happy, thou must needs be happy: for thou hast avouched the Lord to be thy God, Deut. 26. 17. Dost thou say to Christ, as he to us, Thy father shall be my father, and thy God my God, John. 20. 17. Here is the turning point. An unsound professor never takes up his rest in God; but converting grace does the work, and so cures the fatal misery of the fall, by turning the heart from its idols, to the living God, 1 Thes. 1. 9. Now says the soul, Lord, whither should I go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, John. 6. 68. Here he centers, here he settles. Oh 'tis as the entrance of Heaven to him, to see his interest in God. When he discovers this, he saith, Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. Psal. 116. 7. and it is even ready to breath out Simeons song, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, Luke 2. 29. and saith, with Jacob, when his old heart revived at the welcome tidings, It is enough, Gen. 45. 28. When he sees he hath a God in Covenant to go to; this is all his salvation and all his desire, 2 Sam. 23. 5.

Man, is this thy case? Hast thou experienced this? Why, then blessed art thou of the Lord. God hath been at work with thee, he hath laid hold on thine heart by the power of converting grace, or else thou couldst never have done this.

The Mediate term of Conversion is either Principal, or less Principal.

The Principal is Christ, the only mediator between God and Man, 1 Tim. 2. 5. His work is to bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. he is the way to the Father, John. 14. 6. the only plank on which we may escape, the only door by which we may enter, John. 10. 9. Conversion brings over the soul to Christ, to accept of him, Col. 2. 6. as the only means to life, as the only way, the only name given under Heaven, Acts 4. 12. He looks not for salvation in any other, but him; nor in any other with him; but throws himself on Christ alone; as one that should cast himself with spread arms upon the Sea.

Here (saith the convinced sinner) here I will venture, and if I perish, I perish: If I die, I will die here. But Lord suffer me not to perish under the pitiful eyes of thy mercy. Intreat me not to leave thee, or to turn away from following after thee, Ruth 1. 16. Here I will throw myself. If thou kick me, if thou kill me, Job 13. 15. I will not go from thy door.

Thus the poor soul doth venture on Christ, and resolvedly adhere to him. Before Conversion, the man made light of Christ, minded the Farm, Friends, Merchandise, more than Christ: Mat. 22. 5. now Christ is to him as his necessary food, his daily bread, the life of his heart, the staff of his life, Phil. 3. 9. His great design is, that Christ may be magnified in him, Phil. 1. 20. His heart once said, as they to the Spouse, What is thy beloved, more than another? Cant. 5. 9. He found more sweetness in his merry company, wicked games, earthly delights, than in Christ. He took Religion for a fancy, and the talk of great enjoyments for an idle dream. But now to him to live is Christ. He sets light by all that he accounted precious for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, Phil. 3. 8.

All of Christ is accepted by the sincere Convert. He loves not only the wages, but work of Christ, Rom. 7. 22. not only the benefits, but the burden of Christ. He is willing not only to tread out the corn, but to draw under the yoke: he takes up the commands of Christ, yea and the Cross of Christ, Mat. 11. Mat. 16. 24.

The unsound closes by the halves with Christ: he is all for the salvation of Christ, but he is not for sanctification: he is for the privileges, but appreciates not the person of Christ. He divides the offices and benefits of Christ. This is an error in the foundation. Who so loveth life, let him beware here. 'Tis an undoing mistake, of which you have been often warned, and yet none more common. Jesus is a sweet name, but men love not the Lord Jesus in sincerity, Eph. 6. 24. They will not have him, as God offers, To be a Prince and a Savior, Acts 5. 3. They divide what God hath joined, the King, and the Priest. Yea they will not accept the salvation of Christ, as he intends it; they divide here. Every man's voice is for salvation from suffering; but they desire not to be saved from sinning. They would have their lives saved; but withal they would have their lusts saved. Yea many divide here again, they would be content to have some of their sins destroyed; but they cannot leave the lap of Delilah, or divorce the beloved Herodias. They cannot be cruel to the right eye, or right hand: the Lord must pardon them in this thing, 2 Kings 5. 18. Oh be infinitely tender here: your souls lie upon it. The sound Convert takes a whole Christ, and takes him for all intents and purposes, without exceptions, without limitations, without reserves. He is willing to have Christ, upon his terms, upon any terms. He is willing of the dominion of Christ, as well as deliverance by Christ; he saith with Paul, Lord what wilt thou have me to do? Acts 9. 6. Any thing Lord. He sends the blank to Christ to set down his own Conditions, Acts 2. 37. Acts 16. 30.

The less Principal is the Laws, Ordinances, and ways of Christ. The heart that was once set against these, and could not endure the strictness of these bonds, the severity of these ways, now falls in love with them, and chooses them as its rule and guide forever, Psal. 119. 111, 112.

Four things (I observe) God doth work in every sound Convert, with reference to the Laws and ways of Christ, by which you may come to know your estates, if you will be faithful to your own souls; and therefore keep your eyes upon your hearts, as you go along.

1. The Judgment is brought to approve of them, and subscribe to them, as most righteous, and most reasonable, Psal. 119. 128, 137, 138. The mind is brought to like the ways of God, and the corrupt prejudices that were once against them, as unreasonable, and intolerable, are now removed. The understanding assents to them all, as holy, just, and good. Rom. 7. 12. How is David taken up with the excellencies of God's Laws? How Doth he expatiate in their praises, both from their inherent qualities, and admirable effects, Psal. 19. 8, 9, 10, &c.

There is a twofold judgment of the understanding, Judicium absolutum, & comparatum. The absolute judgment is, when a man thinks such a course best in the general, but not for him, or not under the present circumstances he is in, pro hic & nunc. Now a Godly man's judgment is for the ways of God, and that not only the absolute, but comparative judgment: he thinks them not only best in general, but best for him. He looks upon the rules of Religion, not only as tolerable, but desirable, yea more desirable than gold, fine gold, yea much fine gold, Psal. 19. 10. His judgment is settledly determined, that 'tis best to be holy, that 'tis best to be strict: that it is in itself the most eligible course; and that 'tis for him the wisest and most rational, and desirable choice. Hear the godly man's Judgment; I know O Lord that thy judgments are right. I love thy Commandments above Gold, Yea above fine gold. I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right, and I hate every false way, Psal. 119. 127, 128. Mark, he did approve of all that God required, and disallowed of all that he forbad, Righteous are thou O Lord, and upright are thy judgments. Thy testimonies that thou hast commanded are righteous, and very faithful. Thy word is true from the beginning; and everyone of thy righteous judgments endureth forever, Psal. 119. 86. 160. 102, 163. See how readily and fully he subscribes; he declares his assent, and consent to it, and all and everything therein contained.

2. The desire of the heart is to know the whole mind of Christ, Psal. 119. 125. 124. 169. Psal. 25. 4, 5. He would not have one sin discovered, nor be ignorant of one duty required. 'Tis the natural and earnest breathing of a sanctified heart, Lord if there be any way of wickedness in me, do thou discover it. What I know not, teach thou me, and if I have done iniquity, I will do it no more. The unsound is willingly ignorant, 2 Pet. 3. 5. loves not to come to the light, John. 3. 20. He is willing to keep such or such a sin, and therefore is loath to know it to be a sin, and will not let in the light at that Window. Now the gracious heart is willing to know the whole latitude and compass of his makers Law. Psal. 119. 18, 19, 27, 33, 64, 66, 68, 73, 108, 124. He receives with all acceptation the word that convinceth him of any duty that he knew not, or minded not before; or discovereth any sin that lay hid before, Psal. 19. 11.

3. The free and resolved choice of the will is determined for the ways of Christ, before all the pleasures of sin and prosperity of the World, Psal. 119. 127, 103, 162. His consent is not extorted by some extremity of anguish, nor is it only a sudden and hasty resolve: but he is deliberately purposed, and comes off freely in the choice, Psal. 17. 3. Psal. 119. 30. True, the flesh will rebel, yet the prevailing part of his Will is for Christ's Laws and Government; so that he takes them not up as his toil or burden, but his bliss, 1 John. 5. 3. Psal. 119. 60, 72. When the unsanctified goes in Christ's ways, as in Gyves and Fetters, he doth them naturally, Psal. 40. 8. Ier. 31. 33. and counts Christ's Law, his liberty, Psal. 119. 32, 45. James. 1. 25. He is willing in the beauties of holiness, Psal. 110. 3. and hath this inseparable mark, That he had rather (if he might have his choice) live a strict and holy life, than the most prosperous and flourishing life in the world, 1 Sam. 10. 26. There went with Saul a band of men whose hearts God had touched. When God touches the hearts of his chosen, they presently follow Christ, Mat. 4. 22. and (though drawn) do freely run after him, Can. 1. 4. and willingly offer themselves to the service of the Lord, 2 Chron. 7. 16. seeking him with their whole desire. 2 Chron. 15. 15. Fear hath its use, but this is not the main spring of motion with a sanctified heart. Christ keeps not his subjects in by force, but is King of a willing people. They are (through his grace) freely resolved for his service, and do it out of choice, not as slaves, but as the Son or Spouse, from a spring of love, and a loyal mind. In a Word, the laws of Christ are the Converts love. Psal. 119. 159, 163, 167. desire, v. 5, 20, 40. delight, v. 77. 92, 103, 111, 143. and continual study, v. 99. 79. Psal. 2. 2.

4. The bent of his course is directed to keep God's Statutes, Psal. 119. 4, 8, 167, 168. 'Tis the daily care of his life to walk with God. He seeks great things: he hath noble designs, though he fall too short. He aims at nothing less than perfection; he desires it, he reaches after it, he would not rest in any pitch of grace, till he were quite rid of sin, and had perfected holiness, Phil. 3. 11, 12, 13, 14.

Here the hypocrites rottenness may be discovered. He desires holiness (as one well) only as a Bridge to Heaven, and enquires earnestly, what is the least that will serve his turn; and if he can get but so much as may just bring him to Heaven, this is all he cares for. But the sound Convert desires holiness for holiness sake, Psal. 119. 97. Matt. 5. 6. and not only for Heaven sake. He would not be satisfied with so much as might save him from Hell; but desires the highest pitch. Yet desires are not enough. What is thy way and thy course? Is the drift and scope of thy life altered? Is holiness thy trade, and religion thy business, Rom. 8. 1. Mat. 25. 16. Phil. 3. 20. If not, thou art short of sound Conversion.

Application. And is this, that we have described, the Conversion that is of absolute necessity to salvation? then be informed, 1. That strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto life. 2. That there be but few that find it. 3. That there is need of a Divine power savingly to convert a sinner to Jesus Christ.

Again, then be exhorted, O man, that readest, to turn in upon thine own self. What saith conscience? Doth it not begin to bite? Doth it not twitch thee as thou goest? Is this thy judgment, and this thy choice, and this thy way? that we have described? If so, then 'tis well. But doth not thy heart condemn thee, and tell thee, there is such a sin thou livest in against thy Conscience? Doth it not tell thee, there is such and such a secret way of wickedness, that thou makest no bones of? Such or such a duty, that thou makest no conscience of?

Doth not conscience carry thee to thy closet, and tell thee how seldom prayer, and reading is performed there? Doth it not carry thee to thy family, and show thee the charge of God, and the souls of thy children and servants, that be neglected there? Doth not conscience lead thee to thy shop, thy trade, and tell thee of some mystery of iniquity there? Doth it not carry thee to the Ale-shop, or to the Sack-shop, and round thee in thine ear for the loose company thou keepest there, the precious time thou mispendest there, for the talents of God which thou throwest down this sink, for thy gaming, and thy swilling, &c. Doth it not carry thee into the secret chamber, and read thee a Curtain Lecture?

O Conscience do thy duty. In the name of the living God I command thee, discharge thine office. Lay hold upon this sinner. Fall upon him, arrest him, apprehend him, undeceive him. What, wilt thou slatter and sooth him, while he lives in his sins? Awake, O conscience: What meanest thou, O sleeper? What hast thou never a reproof in thy mouth? What, shall this soul die in his careless neglect of God and eternity, and thou altogether hold thy peace? What, shall he go on still in his trespasses, and yet have peace? O rouse up thyself: and do thy work. Now let the Preacher in the bosom speak. Cry aloud and spare not, lift up thy voice like a Trumpet; let not the blood of this soul be required at thy hands.

CHAP. III. Of the Necessity of Conversion.

IT may be you are ready to say, what meaneth this stir? And are apt to wonder, why I follow you with such earnestness, still ringing one lesson in your ears, That you should repent and be converted, Acts 3. 19. But I must say unto you, as Ruth to Naomi, entreat me not to leave you, nor to turn aside from following after you, Ruth 1. 16. Were it a matter of indifferency, I would never keep so much ado. Might you be saved as you be, I would gladly let you alone. But would you not have me solicitous for you? when I see you ready to perish? As the Lord liveth, before whom I am, I have not the least hopes to see ever a one of your faces in Heaven, except you be converted. I utterly despair of your salvation, except you will be prevailed with to turn thoroughly, and give up yourselves to God in holiness and newness of life. Hath God said, Except you be born again, you cannot see the Kingdom of God, John 3. 3. and yet do you wonder, why your Ministers do so painfully travel in birth with you? Think it not strange, that I am earnest with you to follow after holiness, and long to see the Image of God upon you. Never did any, nor shall any enter into Heaven, by any other way but this. The Conversion described, is not an high pitch of some taller Christians, but every soul, that is saved, passes this universal change.

It was a passage of the Noble Roman, when he was hasting with Corn to the City in the $\langle \diamond \rangle$ mine, and the Mariners were loath to set sail in the foul weather, Necessarium est navigare, non est necessarium vivere. Our voyage is of more necessity than our lives. What is it that thou dost account necessary? Is thy Bread necessary? Is thy breath necessary? Then thy Conversion is much more necessary. Indeed, this is the Vnum necessarium, the one thing necessary. Thine estate is not necessary: thou mayest sell all for the Pearl of great price, and yet be a gainer by the purchase. Mat. 13. 45. Thy life is not necessary: thou mayest part with it for Christ to infinite advantage. Thine esteem is not necessary: thou mayest be reproached for the name of Christ, and yet happy, yea much more happy in reproach, than in repute. 1 Pet. 4. 4. Mat. 5. 10, 11. But thy Conversion is necessary, thy damnation lies upon it, and is it not needful in so important a case to look about? Upon this one point depends thy making, or marring to all eternity.

But I shall more particularly show the necessity of Conversion in five things: for without this,

1. Thy being is in vain. Is it not pity thou shouldst be good for nothing, an unprofitable burden of the earth, a wart, or wen in the body of the universe. Thus thou art, while unconverted, for thou canst not answer the end of thy being. Is it not for the divine pleasure thou art and wert created, Rev. 4. 11. Did not he make thee for himself, Prov. 16. 4. Art thou a man, and hast thou reason? Why then bethink thyself, why, and whence thy being is. Behold God's workmanship in thy body, and ask thyself, to what end did God rear this fabric? Consider the noble faculties of thy Heaven-born soul: to what end did God bestow these excellencies? To no other, than that thou shouldst please thyself, and gratify thy senses. Did God send men like the swallows, into the world, only to gather a few sticks and dirt, and build their nests, and breed up their young, and then away? The very heathens could see further than this. Art thou so fearfully and wonderfully made, Psal. 139. 14. and dost thou not yet think with thyself, surely it was for some noble and raised end?

O man, set thy reason a little in the chair. Is it not pity such a goodly fabric should be raised in vain? Verily thou art in vain, except thou art for God. Better thou hadst no being, than not be for him. Wouldst thou serve thy end? Thou must repent, and be converted.

without this thou art to no purpose, yea to bad purpose.

First, to No purpose. Man unconverted, is like a choice instrument, that hath every string broke, or out of tune. The spirit of the living God must repair, and tun• it, by the grace of regeneration, and sweetly move it by the power of actuating grace, or else thy prayers will be but howlings• and all thy services will make no music in the ears of the most holy. Eph. 2. 10. Phil. 2. 13. Hos. 7. 14. Isaiah. 1. 15. All thy powers and faculties are so corrupt in thy natural state, that except thou be purged from dead works, thou canst not serve the living God, Heb. 9. 14. Tit. 1. 15.

An unsanctified man, cannot work the work of God. 1. He hath no skill in it. He is altogether as unskillful in the work, as in the word of righteousness, Heb. 5. 13. There are great mysteries as well in the practices, as principles of godliness: now the unregenerate knoweth not the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, Mat. 13. 11. 1 Tim. 3. 10. You may as well expect him that never learned the Alphabet to read, or look for goodly music on the Lute, from one that never set his hand to an instrument, as that a natural man should do the Lord any pleasing service. He must be first taught of God, John. 6. 45. taught to pray, Luk. 11. 1. taught to profit, Isaiah 48. 17. taught to go, Hos. 11. •. or else he will be utterly at a loss.] 2. He hath no strength for it. How weak is his heart? Ezek. 16. 30. He is presently tired: the Sabbath• what a weariness it it? Mal. 1. 13. He is without strength, Rom. 5. 6. yea stark dead in sin, Eph. 2. 5.] 3. He hath no mind to it: he desires not the knowledge of God's ways, Job 21. 14. He doth not know them, and he doth not care to know them, Psal. 82. 5. He knows not, neither will he understand.] 4. He hath neither due instruments, nor materials for it. A man may as well hew the marble without tools; or limn without colors or instruments, or build without mat•rials, as perform any acceptable service without the graces of the Spirit, which are both the materials, and instruments in the work. Alms-giving is not a service of God, but of vain glory, unless dealt forth by the hand of divine love. What is the prayer of the lips, without grace in the heart, but the carcass without the life? What are all our con•essions, unless they be the exercises of godly sorrow and unfeigned repentance? What our petitions, unless animated all along with holy desires, and faith in the divine attributes and promises? What our praises and thanksgivings, unless from the Love of God, and a holy gratitude, and sense of God's mercies in the heart? So that a man may as well expect the trees should speak, or look for Logic from the bruits, or motion from the dead, as for any service holy and acceptable to God, from the unconverted. When the tree is evil, how can the fruit be good? Mat. 7. 18.

Secondly, to bad purpose. The unconverted soul is a very cage of unclean birds, Rev. 18. 2. a sepulcher full of corruption and rottenness, Mat. 23. 27. a loathsome carcass full of crawling worms, and sending forth a hellish and most noisome savor in the nostrils of God. Psal. 14. 3. O dreadful case! Dost thou not yet see a change to be needful? Would it not have grieved one, to have seen the golden conseciated Vessels of God's Temple turned into quaffing bowls for drunkenness, and polluted with the idols service, Dan. 5. 2, 3. Was it such an abomination to the Jews, when An•us set up the picture of a swine at the entrance of the Temple? How much more abominable then would it have been, to have had the very Temple itself turned into a stable, or a sty, and to have the holy of holies served like the house of Baal, to have the Image of God taken down, and be turned into a draught-house, 2 Kings 10. 27. This is the very case of the unregenerate: all thy members are turned into instruments of unrighteousness, Rom. 6. 19. servants of Satan; and thy inmost powers into the receptacles of uncleanness, Eph. 2. 2. Tit. 2. 15. You may see the goodly guests within, by what comes out. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies, &c. This black guard discovers what a Hell there is therein.

Oh abuse unsufferable! to see a heavenborn soul abased to the filthiest drudgery, to see the glory of God's creation, the chief of the ways of God, the Lord of the Universe, a lapping with the prodigal at the trough, or licking up with greediness the most loathsome vomit. Was it such a lamentation to see those that did feed delicately, to sit desolate in the streets? and the precious sons of Zion comparable to fine gold, to be esteemed as earthen pitchers; and those that were clothed in scarlet to embrace dunghills? Lam. 4. 2, 5. And is it not fearful much more, to see the only thing that hath immortality in this lower world, and carried the stamp of God, to become as a vessel wherein there is no pleasure? (which is but the modest expression of the vessel, men put to the most sordid use.) Oh indignity intolerable! Better thou wert dashed in a thousand pieces, than continue to be abused to so filthy a service.

II. Not only man, but the whole visible creation is in vain, without this. Beloved, God hath made all the visible creatures in Heaven and earth for the service of man, Ier. 22. 28. and man only is the spokesman for all the rest. Man is in the universe, like the tongue in the body, (which speaks for all the members.) The other creatures cannot praise their maker, but by dumb signs and hints to man, that he should speak for them. Man is, as it were, the High Priest of God's creation, to offer the Sacrifice of praise, for all his fellow creatures, Psal. 147, and 148. and 150. The Lord God expecteth a tribute of praise from all his works, Psal. 10•. 22. now all the rest do bring in their tribute to man, and pay it in by his hand. So then, if man be false, and faithless, and selfish, God is wronged of all, and shall have no active glory from his works.

Oh dreadful thought to think of! That God should build such a world as this, and lay out such infinite power, and wisdom and goodness thereupon, and all in vain; and man should be guilty at last, of robbing, and spoiling him of the glory of all. Oh think of this, while thou art unconverted, all the offices of the creatures to thee are in vain: thy meat nourishes thee in vain, the Sun holds forth his light to thee in vain, the Stars, that serve thee in their courses by their most powerful, though hidden influence, Judges 5. 20. Hos. 2. 21, 22. do it in vain; thy Cloaths warm thee in vain; thy Beast carries thee in vain: in a word, the labor unwearied, and continual travel of the whole creation (as to thee) is in vain. The service of all the creatures, that drudge for thee, and yield forth their strength unto thee (that therewith thou shouldst serve their maker) is all but lost labor. Hence the whole Creation groaneth under the abuse of the unsanctified world, Rom. 8. 22. that pervert them to the service of their lusts, quite contrary to the very end of their being.

III. Without this thy Religion is in vain. Jam. 1. 26. All thy religious performances will be but lost; for they can neither please God, Rom. 8. 8. nor save thy soul, 1 Cor. 13. 2, 3. which are the very ends of Religion. Be thy services never so specious, yet God hath no pleasure in them. Isaiah. 1. 14. Mal. 1. 10. Is not that man's case dreadful, whose Sacrifices are as murder, and whose prayers are a breath of abomination? Isaiah 66. 3. Prov. 28. 9. Many under convictions think they will set upon mending, and that a few prayers and alms will salve all again: but alas, sirs, while your hearts remain unsanctified, your duties will not pass. How punctual was Jehu? and yet all was rejected, because his heart was not upright, 2 Kings 10. with Hos. 1. 4. How blameless was Paul? and yet being unconverted all was but loss, Phil. 3. 6, 7. Men think they do much in attending God's service, and are ready to twit him with it, Isaiah 58. 3. Mat. 7. 22. and set him down so much their debtor, when as their persons being unsanctified) their duties cannot be accepted.

O soul, do not think when thy sins pursue thee, a little praying and reforming thy course will pacify God: thou must begin with thine heart: if that be not renewed, thou canst no more please God, than one that having unspeakably offended thee, should bring thee his vomit in a dish to pacify thee, or having fallen into the mire, should think with his loathed embraces to reconcile thee.

It is a great misery to labor in the fire. The Poets could not invent a worsers Hell for Sisyphus than to be getting the barrel still up the hill, and then that it should presently fall down again and renew his labor. God threatens it, as the greatest of temporal judgments, that they should build and not inhabit, plant and not gather, and their labors shall be eat up by strangers, Deut. 28. 30, 38, 39, 41. Is it so great a misery to lose our common labors, to ow in vain, and build in vain? how much more to lose our pains in Religion, to pray, and hear, and fast in vain? This is an undoing and eternal loss. Be not deceived, if thou goest on in thy sinful estate, though thou shouldst spread forth thine hands, God will hide his eyes; though thou make many prayers, he will not hear, Isaiah 1. 15. If a man without skill, set about our work, and *m*rr it in the doing, though he take much pains, we give him but small thanks. God will be worshipped after the due order, 1 Chron. 15. 13. If a servant do our work, but quite contrary to our order, he shall have rather stripes than praise. God's work must be done according to God's mind, or he will not be pleased; and this cannot be, except it be done with a holy heart, 2 Chron. 25. 2.

IV. Without this, thy hopes are in vain, Job 8. 12, 13. The Lord hath rejected thy confidence, Ier. 2. 37.

First, thy hopes of comfort here are in vain. 'Tis not only necessary to the safety, but comfort of your condition, that you be converted. Without this, you shall ot know peace, Isaiah 49. 8. Without the fear of God, ou cannot have the comforts of the Holy Ghost. Acts 9. 31. God speaks peace only to his people, and to his Saints, Psal. 85. 8. If you have a false peace, continuing in your sins, 'tis not of God's speaking; and then you may guess the Author. Sin is a real Sickness, Isaiah 1. 5. yea the worst of sickness, tis a leprosy in the head, Levite. 13. 44. the plague in the heart, 1 Kings 8. 32. 'tis brokenness in the bones, Psal. 51. 8. it pierceth, it woundeth, it racketh, it tormenteth, 1 Tim. 6. 10. A man may as well expect ease, when his diseases are in their strength, or his bones out of joint, as true comfort, while in his sins.

O wretched man, that canst have no ease in this case, but what comes from the deadliness of thy disease! You shall have the poor sick man, saying in his lightness, he is well; when you see death in his face. He will needs up and about his business, when the very next step is like to be into the grave. The unsanctified often feel nothing amiss, they think themselves whole, and cry not out for the Physician, but this shows the danger of their case.

Sin doth naturally breed distempers and disturbance in the soul. What a continual tempest and commotion is there in a discontented mind? What an eating evil is inordinate care? What is passion, but a very fever in the mind? What is lust but a fire in the bones? What is Pride, but a deadly tympany? or covetousness, but an unsatiabl• and unsufferable thirst? or malice and envy, but venom in the very heart? spiritual sloth is but a scurvy in the mind, and carnal security a mortal lethargy; and how can that soul have true comfort that is under so many diseases? But converting grace cures, and so eases the mind, and prepares the soul for a settled, standing, immortal peace. Great peace have they that love thy commandments, and nothing shall offend them, Psal. 119. 165. They are the ways of wisdom that afford pleasure and peace. Prov. 3. 17. David had infinitely more pleasure in the word, than in all the delights of his Court, Psal. 119. 103, 127. The Conscience cannot be truly pacified, till soundly purified. Heb. 10. 22. Cursed is that peace, that is maintained in a way of sin, Deut. 29. 19, 20. Two sorts of peace are more to be dreaded, than all the troubles in the world; peace with sin, and peace in sin.

Secondly, Thy hopes of Salvation hereafter are in vain: yea worse than in vain, they are most injurious to God, most pernicious to thyself; there is death, desperation, blasphemy in the bowels of this hope. 1. T• is death in it. Thy confidence shall be rooted out of thy tabernacles, (God will up with it root and branch) it shall bring thee to the King of terrors, Job 18. 14. Though thou mayest lean upon this house it will not stand, Job 8. 15. but will prove like a ruinous building, which when a man trusts to, it falls down about his ears. 2. There is desperation in it. Where is the hope of the hypocrite, when God takes away his soul? Job 27. 8. Then there is an end forever of his hope. Indeed, the hope of the righteous hath an end, but then 'tis not a destructive, but a perfective end; his hope ends in •ruition, others in frustration, Prov. 10. 28. The godly must say at death, it is finished; but the wicked, it is perished; and in too sad earnest bemoan himself, (as he in a mistake) Where now is my hope? He hath destroyed me, I am gone, and my hope is removed like a tree, Job 19. The righteous hath hope in his death, Prov. 14. 32. When nature is dying, his hopes are living: when his body is languishing, his hopes are flourishing, his hope is a living hope, 1 Pet. 1. 3. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , but others are dying, yea a damning, soul-undoing hope. When a wicked man dieth his expectation shall perish; and the hope of unjust men perisheth, Prov. 11. 7. It shall be cut off, and prove like the spiders web, Job 8. 14. which he spins out of his own bowels, but then comes death with the broom, and takes down all, and so there is an eternal end of his confidence, wherein he trusted. For the eyes of the wicked shall sail, and their hope sh••• be as the giving up of the Ghost; Job 11. 2. •cked men are settled in their carnal hope and will not be beaten out of it. They hold it fast, they will not let it go. Yea but death will knock off their fingers. Though we cannot undeceive them, death and judgment will. When death strikes his dart through thy liver, it will let out thy soul, and thy hopes together. The unsanctified have hope only in this life, 1 Cor. 15. 19. and therefore are of all men most miserable. When death comes, it lets them out into the amazing gulf of endless desperation. 3. There is blasphemy in it. To hope we shall be saved, though continuing unconverted, is to hope, we shall prove God a liar. He hath told you, that so merciful and pitiful as he is, he will never save you notwithstanding, if you go on in ignorance, or a course of unrighteousness, Esa. 27. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 9. in a word, he hath told you, that whatever you be, or do, nothing shall avail you to salvation, without you be new creatures, Gal. 6. 15. Now to say, God is merciful, and we hope he will save us nevertheless, is to say in effect, we hope God will not do as he saith. We may not set God's attributes at variance. God is resolved to glorify mercy, but not with the prejudice of truth, as the presumptuous sinner will find to his everlasting sorrow.

Object. Why, but we hope in Jesus Christ, we put our whole trust in God, and therefore doubt not, but we shall be saved.

Answ. 1. This is not to hope in Christ, but against Christ. To hope to see the Kingdom of God, without being born again, to hope to find eternal life in the broad way, is to hope Christ will prove a false Prophet. 'Tis David's plea, I hope in thy word, Psal. 119. 81. but this hope is against the word. Shew me a word of Christ for thy hope, that he will save thee in thine ignorance, or profane neglects of his service, and I will never go to shake thy confidence.

2. God doth with abhorrency reject this hope. Those condemned in the Prophet, went on in their sins, yet (saith the Text) they will lean upon the Lord, Mic. 3. 11. God will not endure to be made a prop to men in their sins. The Lord rejects those presumptuous sinners, that went on still in their trespasses, and yet would stay themselves upon the God of Israel, Isaiah 48. 1, 2. as a man would shake off the briars (as one well) that cleave to his garment.

3. If thy hope were anything worth, it would purify thee from thy sins, 1 John. 3. 3. but cursed is that hope, which doth cherish men in their sins.

Obj. Would you have us to despair?

Ans. You must despair of ever coming to Heaven as you are, Act. 2. 37. that is, while you remain unconverted. You must despair ever to see the face of God without holiness: but you must by no means despair of finding mercy, upon your thorough repentance and conversion: neither may you despair of attaining to repentance and conversion, in the use of God's means.

V. Without this all that Christ hath done and suffered will be (as to you) in vain; John. 13. 8. Tit. 2. 14. that is, it will no way avail to your salvation. Many urge this as sufficient ground for their hopes, that Christ died for sinners: but I must tell you, Christ never died to save impenitent and unconverted sinners (so continuing.) 2 Tim. 2. 19. A great divine was wont, in his private dealings with souls, to ask two questions, 1. What hath Christ done for you? 2. What hath Christ wrought in you? Without the application of the spirit in Regeneration, we can have no saving interest in the benefits of Redemption. I tell you from the Lord, Christ himself cannot save you, if you go on in this estate.

I. It were against his trust. The Mediator is the servant of the Father, Isaiah 42. 1. shows his commission from him, acts in his name, and pleads his command for his justification: John 10. 18, 36. John 6. 38, 40. And God hath committed all things to him, entrusted his own glory, and the salvation of his elect with him, Mat. 11. 27. John. 17. 2. Accordingly, Christ gives his Father an account of both parts of his trust, before he leaves the world. John. 17. 4, 6, 12. Now Christ should quite cross his fathers glory, his greatest trust, if he should save men in their sins; for this were to overturn all his counsels, and offer violence to all his attributes.

First, To overturn all his counsels; of which this is the order, that men should be brought through sanctification, to salvation, 2 Thes. 2. 13. He hath chosen them that they should be holy. Eph. 1. 4. They are elected to pardon and life, through sanctification, 1 Pet. 1. 2. If thou canst repeal the Law of God's immutable counsel, or corrupt him, whom the Father hath sealed, to go directly against his Commission, then, and not otherwise, mayest thou get to Heaven in this condition. To hope that Christ will save thee while unconverted, is to hope that Christ will falsify his trust. He never did, nor will, save one soul, but whom the Father had given him in election, and drawn to him in effectual calling, John 6. 37, 44. Be assured, Christ will save none, in a way contrary to his Fathers will, who came on purpose to do his will, John 6. 38.

Secondly, To offer violence to all his attributes 1. To his Justice. For the righteousness of God's Judgment lies, in rendering to all according to their work, Rom. 2. 5, 6. Now, should men sow to the flesh, and yet of the spirit reap everlasting life, Gal. 6. 7, 8. where were the glory of Divine Justice, since it should be given to the wicked, according to the work of the righteous? 2. To his holiness. If God should not only save sinners, but save them in their sins, his most pure and strict holiness would be exceedingly defaced. The unsanctified, is in the eyes of God's holiness, worse than a swine or viper, Mat. 23. 33. 2 Pet. 2. 22. Now what cleanly nature could endure to have the filthy swine bed and board with him in his parlor, or bed chamber? It would offer extremest violence to the infinite purity of the divine nature, to have such to dwell with him. They cannot stand in his judgment, they cannot abide in his presence, Psal. 1. 5. Psal. 5. 4, 5. If holy David would not endure such in his house, no nor in his sight, Psal. 101. 3, 7. shall we think God will? Should he take men as they be, from the trough to the table, from the Harlots lips, from the sty and draught to the glory of Heaven, the world would think God were at no such a distance from sin, nor had such dislike of it, as we are told he hath: they would conclude, God were altogether such a one as themselves (as they wickedly did, but from the very forbearance of God, Psal. 50. 21.) 3. To his veracity. For God hath declared from Heaven, That if any shall say they shall have peace, though he should go on in the imagination of his heart: his wrath shall smoke against that man, Deut. 29. 19, 20. That they (only,) that confess, and for sake their sins, shall find mercy, Prov. 28. 13. That they that shall enter into his hill, must be of clean hands, and a pure heart, Psal. 24. 3, 4. Where were God's truth, if notwithstanding all this, he should bring men to salvation without Conversion? O desperate sinner, that darest to hope, that Christ will put the lie upon his Father, and nullify his word to save thee! 4. To his wisdom. For this were to throw away the choicest mercies, on them that would not value them, nor were any way suited to them. First, they would not value them. The unsanctified sinner puts but little price upon God's great Salvation, Mat. 22. 5. He sets no more by Christ, than the whole by the Physician, Mat. 9. 12. he prizes not his balm, values not his cure, tramples upon his blood, Heb. 10. 29. Now, would it stand with wisdom, to force pardon and life, upon them that would give him no thanks for them? Will the all-wise God (when he hath forbidden us to do it) throw his holy things to dogs, and his pearls to swine, that would (as it were) but turn again and rent him, Mat. 7. 6. This would make mercy to be despised indeed. Wisdom requires, that life be given, in a way suitable to God's honor; and that God provide for the securing his own glory, as well as man's felicity. It would be dishonorable to God, to set his Jewels in the snouts of swine (continuing such) and to bestow his choicest riches on them, that have more pleasure in their swill, than the Heavenly delights that he doth offer. God should lose the praise and glory of his grace, if he should cast it away on them, that were not only unworthy, but unwilling. Secondly, they are no way suited to them. The Divine Wisdom is seen in suiting things each to other, the means to the end, the object to the faculty, the quality of the gift to the capacity of the receiver. Now, if Christ should bring the unregenerate sinner to Heaven, he could take no more felicity there, than a Beast if you should bring him into a beautiful room, to the society of learned men, and a well furnished table; when as the poor thing had much rather be grazing with his fellow bruits. Alas, what should an unsanctified creature do in Heaven! He could take no content, because nothing suits him. The place doth not suit him, he would be but piscis in arido, quite out of his element, as a swine in the parlor, or a fish out of water. The company doth not suit him. What communion hath darkness with light, corruption with perfection? Filth and rottenness, with glory and immortality? The employment doth not suit him. The anthems of Heaven fit not his mouth, suit not his ear. Canst thou charm thy Beast with Music? or wilt thou bring him to thy Organ, and expect that he should make thee melody, or keep time with the skilful Choir? Or had he skill, he would have no will, and so could find no pleasure, no more than the nauseous stomach in the meat, on which it hath newly sur-eited. Spread thy table with delicates before a languishing patient, and it will be but a very offense. Alas, if the poor man think a Sermon long, and say of a Sabbath, What a weariness is it? Mal. 1. 13. how miserable would he think it, to be held to it to all eternity? 5. To his Immutability, or else to his Omniscieny, or Omnipotency. For this is enacted in the Conclave of Heaven, and enrolled in the degrees of the Court above, that none but the pure in heart shall ever see God, Mat. 5. 8. This is laid up with him, and sealed among his treasures. Now if Christ, yet, bring any to Heaven unconverted, either he must get them in without his Fathers knowledge, and then where is his Omniscieny? or against his will, and then where were his Omnipotency? or he must change his will, and then where were his Immutability?

Sinner, wilt thou not yet give up thy vain hope of being saved in this condition? Saith Bildad, shall the earth be forsaken for thee? or the rocks removed out of their place? Job 18. 4. May not I much more reason so with thee? Shall the Laws of Heaven be reversed for thee? Shall the everlasting foundations be overturned for thee? Shall Christ put out the eye of his Fathers Omniscieny, or shorten the arm of his eternal power for thee? Shall divine justice be violated for thee? or the brightness of the glory of his holiness be blemished for thee? Oh the impossibility, absurdity, blasphemy, that is in such a confidence! To think Christ will ever save thee in this condition, is to make thy Savior to become a sinner, and to do more wrong to the infinite Majesty, than all the Wicked on Earth, or Devils in Hell ever did, or could. And yet wilt thou not give up such a blasphemous hope?

II. Against his Word. We need not say, who shall ascend into Heaven to bring down Christ from above? Or who shall descend into the deep to bring up Christ from beneath? The word is nigh us. Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. Are you agreed, that Christ shall end the controversy? Hear then his own words: Except you be converted you shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Mat. 18. 3. You must be born again, John. 3. 7. If I wash thee not thou hast no part in me, John. 13. 8. Repent or perish, Luk. 13. 3. One word, one would think, were enough from Christ; but how often and earnestly doth he reiterate it, verily, verily, verily, verily except a man be born again he shall not see the Kingdom of God, John. 3. 3, 5. Yea he doth not only assert, but prove the necessity of the new birth, viz. from the fleshliness and filthiness of man's first birth, John. 3. 6. by reason of which, man is no more fit for Heaven than the beast is for the Chamber of the Kings presence. And wilt thou yet believe thine own presumptuous confidence, directly against Christ's word? He must go quite against the Law of his Kingdom, and Rule of his Judgment, to save thee in this estate.

III. Against his Oath. He hath lifted up his hand to Heaven, he hath sworn, that those that remain in unbelief, and know not his ways (that is, are ignorant of them, or disobedient to them) shall not enter into his rest, Psal. 95. 11. Heb. 3. 18. and wilt thou not yet believe, O sinner, that he is in earnest? Canst thou hope he will be forsworn for thee? The Covenant of Grace is confirmed by an oath, and sealed by blood, Heb. 6. 17. Heb. 9. 16, 18, 19. Mat. 26. 28. But all must be made void, and another way to Heaven found out, if thou be saved, living and dying unsanctified. God is come to his lowest and last terms with man, and hath condescended as far as with honor he could, hath set up his pillars, 〈◊〉 a Ne plus ultra. Men cannot be saved, while unconverted, except they could get another Covenant made, and the whole frame of the Gospel (which was established forever, with such dreadful solemnities) quite altered, and would not this be a distracted hope?

IV. Against his Honor. Christ will so show his love to the sinner, as withal to show his hatred to sin. Therefore he that names the name of Jesus must depart from iniquity, 2 Tim. 2. 19. and deny all ungodliness; and he that hath hope of life by Christ must purify himself as he is pure, 1 John. 3. 3. Tit. 2. 12. otherwise Christ would be thought a fautor of sin. The Lord Jesus would have all the world to know, though he pardon sin, he will not protect it. If holy David shall say, depart from me all you workers of iniquity, Psal. 6. 8. and shall shut the doors against them, Psal. 101. 7. shall not such much more expect it from Christ's holiness? Would it be for his honor, to have the dogs to the table? or to lodge the swine with his children? or to have Abraham's bosom, to be a nest of Vipers.

V. Against his Offices. God hath exalted him to be a Prince and a Savior, Acts. 5. 31. he should act against both, should he save men in their sins. It is the Office of a King.

Parcere subjectis, & d•bellare sup•rbos.

To be a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them that do well, Rom. 13. 3, 4. He is a Minister of God, a revenger to •ecute wrath on him that doth evil. Now should Christ favor the ungodly (so continuing) and take those to reign with him, that would not that he should reign over them, Luke 19. 27. this were quite against his office. He therefore reigns, that he may put his enemies under his feet: 1 Cor. 15. 25. now should he lay them in his bosom he should cross the end of his regal power. It belongs to Christ, as King, to subdue the hearts, and slay the lusts of his chosen, Psal. 45. 5. Psal. 110. 3. What King would take the rebels, in open hostility, into his Court? What were this but to betray Life, Kingdom, Government and all together? If Christ be a King, he must have homage, honor, subjection, &c. Mal. 1. 6. now to save men while in their natural enmity, were to obscure his dignity, lose his authority, bring contempt on his Government, and sell his dear-bought rights for naught.

Again, as Christ should not be a Prince, so neither a Savior, if he should do this. For his Salvation is spiritual, he is called Jesus, because he saves his people from their sins, Mat. 1. 21. So that should he save them in their sins, he should be neither Lord nor Jesus. To save men from the punishment, and not from the power of sin, were to do his work by halves, and be an imperfect Savior. His office, as the Deliverer, is, to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, Rom. 11. 26. He is sent to bless men in turning from them their iniquities, Acts 3. 26. to make an end of sin, Dan. 9. 24. so that he should destroy his own designs, and nullify his offices, to save men abiding in their unconverted estate.

Application. Arise then, what meanest thou O sleeper? Awake, O secure sinner, lest thou be consumed in thine iniquities. Say as the Lepers, if we sit here we shall die, 2 King. 7. 3, 4. Verily, it is not more certain thou art now out of hell, than that thou shalt speedily be in it, except thou repent and be converted: there is but this one door for thee to escape by. Arise then, O sluggard, and shake off thine excuses. How long wilt thou slumber, and fold thine hands to sleep? Prov. 6. 10, 11. Wilt thou lie down in the midst of the Sea, or sleep on the top of the mast, Prov. 23. 24. There is no remedy; but thou must either turn or burn. There is an unchangeable necessity of the change of thy condition, except thou art resolved to bide the worst of it, and try it out with the Almighty. If thou lovest thy life, O man, arise, and come away. Methinks I see the Lord Jesus laying the merciful hands of an holy violence upon thee: methinks he carries it like the Angels to Lot, Gen. 19. 15. &c. Then the Angels hastened Lot, saying arise, lest thou be consumed. And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, the Lord being merciful unto him, and they brought him without the City and said, Escape for thy life, stay not in all the plain, escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.

Oh how willful will thy destruction be, if thou shouldst yet harden thyself in thy sinful state! But none of you can say, but you have had fair warning. Yet methinks I cannot tell how to leave you so. It is not enough to me to have delivered my own soul. What, shall I go away without my errand? Will none of you arise, and follow me? Have I been all this while speaking in the wind? Have I been charming the deaf adder, or allaying the tumbling Ocean with arguments? Do I speak to the trees or rocks, or to men? to the tombs and monuments of the dead, or to a living auditory? If you be men, and not senseless stocks, stand still, and consider whither you be going, If you have the reason and understanding of men, dare not to run into the flames, and fall into hell with your eyes open: but bethink yourselves, and set to the work of repentance. What, men, and yet run into the pit, when the very beasts will not be forced in! What, endowed with reason, and yet dally with death and hell, and the vengeance of the Almighty! Are men herein distinguished from the very bruits, that they have no foresight of, and a care to provide for the things to come; and will you not hasten your escape from eternal torments? O show yourselves men, and let reason prevail with you: is it a reasonable thing for you to contend against the Lord your maker? Isaiah 45. 9. or to harden yourselves against his word? Job 9. 4. as though the strength of Israel would lie? 1 Sam. 15. 29. Is it reasonable that an understanding creature should lose, yea live quiet against the very end of his being, and be as a broken pitcher, only fit for the dunghill? Is it tolerable, that the only thing in this world that God hath made capable of knowing his will, and bringing him glory, should yet live in ignorance of his maker, and be unserviceable to his use, yea should be engaged against him, and spit his venom in the face of his creator? Hear, O Heavens, and give ear, O earth, and let the creatures without sense be judge, if this be reason, that man, when God hath nourished and brought him up, should rebel against him, Isaiah. 1. 2. Judge in your own selves: Is it a reasonable undertaking, for briars and thorns, to set themselves in battle against the devouring fire? Isaiah 27. 4. or for the potsherd of the earth to strive with his maker? If you will say, this is reason, surely the eye of reason is quite put out. And, If this be not reason, then there is no reason that you should continue as you be, but 'tis all the reason in the world, you should forth with repent a d turn.

What shall I say; I could spend myself in this argument. Oh that you would but hearken to me! that you would presently set upon a new course! will you not be made clean? When shall it once be? What, will nobody be persuaded? Reader, shall I prevail with thee for one? Wilt thou sit down and consider the forementioned arguments, and debate it, whether it be not best to turn? Come and let us reason together. Is it good for thee to be here? Wilt thou sit still, till the tide come in upon thee? Is it good for thee to try whether God will be so good as his word? and to harden thyself in a conceit, that all is well with thee, while thou remainest unsanctified?

But I know you will not be persuaded, but the greatest part will be as they have been, and do as they have done. I know the drunkard will to his vomit again, and the deceiver will to his deceit again, and the lustful wanton to his dalliance again. Alas, that I must leave you where you were! in your ignorance or looseness, or in your lifeless formality and customary devotions! However, I will sit down and bemoan my fruitless labors, and spend some sighs over my perishing hearers.

O distracted sinners! What will their end be? What will they do in the day of visitation? Whither will they flee for help? Where will they leave their glory? Isaiah, 10. 3. How powerfully hath sin bewitched them? How effectually hath the God of this world blinded them? How strong is their delusion? How uncircumcised their ears? How obdurate their hearts? Satan hath them at his beck: but how long may I call, and can get no answer? I may dispute with them year after year, and they will give me the hearing, and that is all. They must and will have their sins, say what I will. Though I tell them there is death in the cup, yet they will take it up. Though I tell them 'tis the broad way and endeth in destruction, yet they will on in it. I warn them, yet cannot win them. Sometimes I think, the mercies of God will melt them, and his winning invitations will overcome them: but I find them as they were. Sometimes that the terror of the Lord will persuade them: yet neither this will do it. They will approve the word, like the Sermo, commend the Preacher: but they will yet live as they did. They will not deny me, yet they will not obey me. They will flock to the word of God, and sit before me as his people, and hear my words: but they will not do them. They value and will plead for Ministers; and I am to them as the lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice: yet I cannot get them to come under Christ's yoke. They love me, and will be ready to say they will do anything for me: but for my life I cannot persuade them to leave their sins, to forgo their evil company, their intemperance, their unjust gains, &c. I cannot prevail with them, to set up prayer in their families and closets: yet they will promise me, like the forward son, that said, I go sir, but went not, Mat. 21. 30. I cannot persuade them to learn the principles of Religion, though else they will die without knowledge, Job 36. 12. I tell them their misery; but they will not believe, but 'tis well enough. If I tell them particularly, I fear for such reasons their state is bad, they will judge me censorious: or, if they be at present a little awakened, are quickly lull'd asleep by Satan again, and have lost the sense of all.

Alas for my poor hearers! Must they perish at last by the hundreds, when Ministers would so fain save them? What course shall I use with them that I have not tried? What shall I do for the daughter of my people? Jer. 9. 7. O Lord God help. Alas, shall I leave them thus! If they will not hear me, yet do thou hear me. Oh that they might yet live in thy sight! Lord save them, or else they perish. My heart would melt to see their houses on fire about their ears, when they were fast in their beds: and shall not my soul be moved within me to see them falling into endless perdition? Lord have compassion, and save them out of the burning. Put forth thy divine power, and the work will be done: but as for me, I canit prevail.

CHAP. IV. Showing the Marks of the Unconverted.

WHile we keep aloof in generals, there is little fruit to be expected. It is the hand-fight that does execution. David. is not awakened by the Prophets hovering at a distance, in parabolical insinuations: he is forced to close with him, and tell him home, Thou art the man. Few will in words deny the necessity of the new birth; but they have a self deluding confidence, that the work is not now to do. And because they know themselves free from that gross hypocrisy, that doth take up Religion merely for a color to deceive others, and for the covering of wicked designs, they are confident of their sincerity, and suspect not that more close hypocrisy (where the greatest danger lies) by which man deceiveth his own soul, James 1. 26. But man's deceitful heart is such a matchless cheat, and self delusion so reigning and so fatal a disease, that I know not whether be the greater, the difficulty, or the displicency, or the necessity of the undeceiving work that I am now upon. Alas for my unconverted hearers! They must be undeceived, or undone. But how shall this be effected? Hic labor, hoc opus est.

Help, O all searching light, and let thy discerning eye discover the rotten foundation of the selfdeceiver; and lead me, O Lord God, as thou didst thy Prophet, into the chambers of Imagery, and dig through the wall of sinners hearts, and discover the hidden abominations that are lurking out, of sight in the dark. O send thine Angel before me; to open the sundry Wards of their hearts, as thou didst before Peter, and make even the Iron gates to fly open of their own accord. And as Jonathan no sooner tasted the Honey, but his eyes were enlightened: so grant, O Lord, that when the poor deceived souls, with whom I have to do, shall cast their eyes into these lines, their minds may be illuminated, and their consciences convinced and awakened, that they may see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and be converted, and thou mayest heal them.

This must be premised, before we proceed to the discovery, that it is most certain men may have a confident persuasion, that their hearts and states be good, and yet be unsound. Hear the Truth himself, who shows in Laodicea's case, that men may be wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked, and yet know it not; yea they may be confident they are rich and increased in grace. Rev. 3. 17. There is a generation that is pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness, Prov. 30. 12. who better persuaded of his case, than Paul, while yet he remained unconverted? Rom. 7. 9. So that they are miserably deceived, that take a strong confidence, for a sufficient evidence. They that have no better proof, than barely a strong persuasion, that they are converted, are certainly, as yet, strangers to Conversion.

But to come more close: as it was said of the adherents of Antichrist, so here; some of the unconverted carry their marks in their foreheads, more openly; and some in their hands, more covertly. The Apostle reckons up some, upon whom he writes the sentence of death, as in these dreadful catalogues, which I beseech you to attend with all diligence, Eph. 5. 5, 6. For this ye know that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath an inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words, for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, Rev. 21. 8. But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Know you not, that the unrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God? be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolators, and adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, or extortioners, shall inherit the Kingdom of God. See Gall. 5. 19, 20, 21. Woe to them that have their names written in these bedrolls: such may know, as certainly, as if God had told it them from Heaven, that they are unsanctified, and under an impossibility of being saved in this condition.

There are then these several sorts, that, past all dispute, are unconverted, they carry their marks in their foreheads.

- 1. The unclean. These are ever reckoned among the goats, and have their names, whoever be left out, in all the fore-mentioned catalogues, Eph. 5. 5. Rev. 21. 8. 1. Cor. 5. 9, 10.

- 2. The Covetous. These are ever branded for idolaters, and the doors of the Kingdom are shut against them by name. Eph. 5. 5. Col. 3. 5. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.
- 3. Drunkards, not only such as drink away their reason, but withal, yea above all, such as are too strong for strong drink. The Lord fills his mouth with woes against these, and declares them to have no inheritance in the Kingdom of God, Isaiah. 5. 11, 12, 22. Gal. 5. 21.
- 4. Liars. The God that cannot lie hath told them, that there is no place for them in his Kingdom, no entrance into his hill; but their portion is with the Father of lies (whose children they are) in the lake of burnings, Psal. 15.1, 2, Rev. 21. 8, 27. John. 8. 44. Prov. 6. 17.
- 5. Swearers. The end of these men without deep and speedy repentance, is swift destruction, and most certain and unavoidable condemnation, I am. 5. 12. Zech. 5. 1, 2, 3.

Railers and Back-biters, that love to take up a reproach against their Neighbor, and fling all the dirt they can in his face, or else wound him secretly behind his back; Psal. 15. 1. 3. 1 Cor. 6. 10. 1 Cor. 5. 11.

- 7. Thieves, Extortioners, Oppressors, that grind the poor, over-reach their brethren, when they have them at an advantage, these must know, that God is the avenger of all such, 1 Thes. 4. 6. Hear O ye false and purloining and wasteful servants: Hear, O ye deceitful tradesmen, hear your sentence. God will certainly hold his door against you, and turn your treasures of unrighteousness into treasures of wrath, and make your ill-gotten silver and gold, to torment you like burning Metal in your bowels, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. I am. 5. 2, 3.
- 8. All that do ordinarily live in the profane neglect of God's worship, that hear not his word, that call not on his name, that restrain prayer before God, that mind not their own nor their families souls, but live without God in the world, John. 8. 47. Job. 15. 4. Psal. 14. 4. Psal. 79. 6. Eph. 2. 12. & 4. 18.
- 9. Those that are frequenters and lovers of evil company. God hath declared, he will be the destruction of all such, and that they shall never enter into the hill of his rest, Prov. 13. 20. Psal. 15. 4. Prov. 9. 6.
- 10. Scoffers at Religion, that make a scorn of precise walking, and mock at the messengers and diligent servants of the Lord, and at their holy profession, and make themselves merry with the weaknesses and failings of professors. Hear ye despisers, hear your dreadful doom, Prov. 19. 29. 2 Chron. 36. 16. Prov. 3. 34.

Sinner, consider diligently, whether thou art not to be found in one of these ranks: for if this be thy case, thou art in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity; for all these do carry their marks in their foreheads, and are undoubtedly the sons of death.

And if so, the Lord pity our poor Congregations; Oh how little a number will be left, when these ten sorts are set out! Alas on how many doors, on how many faces must we write, Lord have mercy upon us! Sirs, what shift do you make to keep up your confidence of your good estate, when God from heaven declares against you, and pronounces, you in a state of damnation? I would reason with you, as God with them; How canst thou say I am not polluted? Ier. 2. 23. See thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done. Man, is not thy conscience privy to thy tricks of deceit, to thy chamber pranks, to thy way of lying? Yea are not thy friends, thy family, thy neighbors, witnesses to thy profane neglects of God's worship, to thy covetous practices, to thy envious and malicious carriage? may not they point at thee as thou goest, there goes a gaming Prodigal; there goes a drunken Nabal, a companion of evildoers; there goes a railer, or a scoffer, a loose liver? Beloved, God hath written it as with a Sun beam, in the book out of which you must be judged, that these are not the spots of his Children, and that none such (except renewed by converting grace) shall ever escape the damnation of Hell.

Oh that such of you would now be persuaded to repent and turn from all your transgressions, or else iniquity will be your ruin! Ezek. 18. 30. Alas for poor hardened sinners! Must I leave you at last where you were? Must I leave the tipler still at the Ale-bench? Must I leave the wanton still at his dalliance? Must I leave the malicious still in his venom? And the drunkard still at his vomit? However you must know, that you have been warned, and that I am clear of your blood. And whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear, I will leave these three scriptures with them, either as thunderbolts to awaken them, or as earing Irons to harden them to a reprobate sense, Psal. 68. 21. God shall wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one, as goeth on still in his trespasses, Prov. 29. 1. He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy, Prov. 1. 24, &c. Because I have called, and ye refused, I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded. &c. I will mock at your calamity —when your destruction cometh as a whirlwind.

And now I imagine, many will begin to bless themselves, and think all is well, because they cannot be spotted with the grosser evils above mentioned. But I must further tell you, that there are another sort of unsanctified persons, that carry not their marks in their foreheads, but more secretly and covertly in their hands. These do frequently deceive themselves and others, and pass for good Christians, when they are all the while unsound at bottom. Many pass undiscovered, till death and judgment bring all to light. Those self-deceivers seem to come even to Heaven gate with confidence of their admission• and yet are turned off at last, Mat. 7. 22. Brethren, Beloved, I beseech you deeply to lay to heart, and firmly to retain this awakening consideration: That Multitudes miscarry by the hand of some secret sin, that is not only hidden from others, but (for want of observing their own hearts) even from themselves. A man may be free from open pollutions, and yet die at last by the fatal hand of some unobserved iniquity: And there be these eleven hidden sins, by which souls go down by numbers into the chambers of death. These you must search carefully for, and take them as black marks (wherever they be found) discovering a graceless and unconverted estate. As you love your lives read them carefully, with a holy jealousy of yourselves, lest you should be the persons concerned.

1. Gross Ignorance. Ah how many poor souls doth this sin kill in the dark, Hos. 4. 6. while they think verily they have good hearts, and are in the ready way to Heaven! This is the murderer that dispatches thousands in a silent manner, when (poor hearts!) they suspect nothing, and see not the hand that mischiefs them. You shall find whatever excuses you have for ignorance, that 'tis a soul undoing evil, Isaiah. 27. 11. 2 Thes. 1. 8. 2 Cor. 4. 3. Ah would it not have pitied a man's heart to have seen that woeful spectacle, when the poor Protestants were shut up a multitude together in a barn, and a butcher comes with his inhumane hands warm in human blood, and leads them one by one blindfold to a block, where he slew them (poor Innocents!) one after another by the scores in cold blood? But how much more should our hearts bleed, to think of the hundreds in great Congregations, that ignorance doth butcher in secret, and lead them blindfold to the block? Beware this be none of your case. Make no pleas for ignorance. If you spare that sin, know that that will not spare you. Will a man keep a murderer in his bosom?

2. Secret reserves in closing with Christ. To forsake all for Christ, to hate father and mother, yea and a man's own life for him, this is a hard saying, Luk. 14. 26. Some will do much, but they will not be of the religion that will undo them; they never come to be entirely devoted to Christ, nor fully to resign to him. They must have the sweet sin. They mean to do themselves no harm. They have secret exceptions for life, liberty, or estate. Many take Christ thus hand over head, and never consider his self-denying terms, nor cast up the cost; and this error in the foundation mars all, and secretly ruins them forever, Luk. 14. 28. Mat. 13. 21.

3. Formality in Religion. Many stick in the bark, and rest in the outside of Religion, and in the external performances of holy duties; Mat. 23. 25. and this oftentimes doth most effectually deceive men, and doth more certainly undo them, than open looseness; as it was in the Pharisees case, Mat. 21. 31. They hear, they fast, they pray, they give alms, and therefore will not believe but their case is good, Luk. 18. 11. whereas resting in the work done, and coming short of the heart-work, and the inward power and vitals of Religion, they fall at last into the burning, from the flattering hopes, and confident persuasions, of their being in the ready way to Heaven, Matth. 7. 22, 23. Oh dreadful case, when a man's Religion shall serve only to harden him, and effectually to delude and deceive his own Soul!

4. The prevalency of false ends in holy duties. Mat 23. 25. This was the bane of the Pharisees Oh how many a poor soul is undone by this, and drops into hell, before he discerns his mistake! He performs good duties, and so thinks all is well, and perceives not that he is acted by carnal motives all the while. It is too true, that even with the truly sanctified, many carnal ends will oft times creep in; but they are the matter of his hatred and humiliation, and never come to be habitually prevalent with him, and to bear the greatest sway, Rom. 14. 7. But now when the main thing that doth ordinarily carry a man out to religious duties, shall be some carnal end, as to satisfy his conscience, to get the repute of being religious, to be seen of men, to show his own gifts and parts, to avoid the reproach of a profane and irreligious person, or the like, this discovers an unbound heart, Hos. 10. 1. Zech. 7. 5, 6. O Christians, if you would avoid self-deceit, see that you mind, not only your acts, but withal, yea above all, your ends,

5. Trusting on their own righteousness, Luke 18. 9. This is a soul undoing mischief, Rom. 10. 3. When men do trust in their own righteousness, they do indeed reject Christ's. Beloved, you had need be watchful on every hand, for not only your sins, but your duties may undo you. It may be you never thought of this, but so it is, that a man may as certainly miscarry by his seeming righteousness, and supposed graces, as by gross sins; and that is, when a man doth trust to these as his righteousness before God, for the satisfying his justice, appeasing his wrath, procuring his favor, and obtaining of his own pardon: for this is to put Christ out of office and make a Savior of our own duties and graces. Beware of this, O professors; you are much in duties, but this one fly will spoil all the ointment. When you have done most, and best, be sure to go out of yourselves to Christ, reckon your own righteousness but rags, Psal. 143. 2. Phil. 3. 8. Isaiah 64. 6. Neh. 13. 22.

6. A secret enmity against the strictness of religion. Many moral persons, punctual in their formal devotion, have yet a bitter enmity against preciseness, and hate the life and power of religion, Phil. 3. 6. compared with Act. 9. 1. They like not this forwardness, nor that men should keep such a stir in religion. They condemn the strictness of Religion, as singularity, indiscretion, and intemperate zeal; and with them a lively preacher, or lively Christian, is but a heady fellow. These men love not holiness, as holiness, (for then they would love the height of holiness) and therefore are undoubtedly rotten at heart, whatever good opinion they have of themselves.

7. The resting in a certain pitch of Religion. When they have so much as will save them (as they suppose,) they look no further, and so show themselves short of true Grace, which will ever put men upon aspiring to further perfection. Phil. 3. 12, 13. Prov. 4. 18.

8. The predominant love of the World. This is the sure evidence of an unsanctified heart. Mar. 10. 37. 1 John. 2. 15. But how close doth this sin lurk oftentimes under a fair covert of forward profession? Luke 8. 14. Yea such a power of deceit is there in this sin, that many times when everybody else can see the man's worldliness and covetousness, he cannot see it himself, but hath so many colors, and excuses, and pretences for his eagerness on the world, that he doth blind his own eyes, and perish in his self deceit. How many professors be there, with whom the world hath more of their heart and affections than Christ? Who mind earthly things, and thereby are evidently after the flesh, and like to end in destruction? Rom. 8. 25.. Phil. 3. 19. Yet ask these men; and they will tell you confidently, they prize Christ above all, God forbid else! and see not their own earthly mindedness for want of a narrow observation of the workings of their own hearts. Did they but carefully search, they would quickly find that their greatest content is in the world, Luke 12. 19. and their greatest care and main endeavor to get and secure the world, which are the certain discoveries of an unconverted sinner. May the professing part of the world take earnest heed, that they perish not by the hand of this sin unobserved. Men may be and often are kept off from Christ, as effectually by the inordinate love of lawful comforts, as by the most unlawful courses, Mat. 22. 5. Luke 14. 18, 19, 20, 24.

9. Reigning malice and envy against those that disrespect them, or are injurious to them, 1 John. 2. 9, 11. O how do many that seem to be religious remember injuries, and carry grudges, and will return men as good as they bring, rendering evil for evil, loving to take revenge, wishing evil to them that wrong them, directly against the rule of the Gospel, the pattern of Christ, and the nature of God, Rom. 12. 14, 17. 1 Pet. 2. 21, 23. Neh. 6. 17. Doubtless where this evil is kept boiling in the heart, and is not hated, resisted, mortified, but doth habitually prevail, that person is in the very gall of bitterness, and in a state of death. Mat. 18. 34, 35. 1 John 3. 14, 15.

Reader doth nothing of this touch thee? art thou in none of the forementioned ranks? O search, and search again; take thy heart solemnly to task. Woe unto thee, if after all thy profession, thou shouldest be found under the power of ignorance, lost in formality, drowned in earthly mindedness, envenomed with malice, exalted in an opinion of thine own righteousness, leavened with hypocrisy, and carnal ends in God's service, imbittered against strictness: this would be a sad discovery that all thy Religion were in vain. But I must proceed.

10. Unmortified Pride. When men love the praise of men, more than the praise of God; and set their hearts upon men's esteem, applause and approbation, it is most certain, they are yet in their sins, and strangers to true conversion. John 12. 43. Gal. 1. 10. When men see not, nor complain of, nor groan under the pride of their own hearts, it's a sign they are stark dead in sin. O how secretly doth this sin live and reign in many hearts, and they know it not, but are very strangers to themselves! John. 9. 40.

11. The prevailing love of pleasure, 2 Tim. 3. 4. This is a black mark. When men give the flesh the liberty that it craves, and pamper, and please it, and do not deny and restrain it: when their great delight is in gratifying their bellies, and pleasing their senses; whatever appearance they may have of Religion, all is un•ound. Rom. 16. 18. Tit. 3. 3. A flesh-pleasing life cannot be pleasing to God, They that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh, and are careful to cross it, and keep it under, as their enemy, Gal. 5. 24. 1 Cor. 9. 25. 26, 27.

12. Carnal security, or a presumptuous and ungrounded confidence, that their condition is already good. Rev. 3. 17. Many cry peace and safety, when sudden destruction is coming upon them, 1 Thes. 5. 3. This was that which kept the foolish Virgins sleeping, when they should have been working; upon their beds, when they should have been at the markets. Mat. 25. 5, 10. Prov. 10. 5. They perceived not their want of Oil, till the bridegroom was come; and while they went to buy, the door was shut. And oh that these foolish Virgins had no successors! where is the place, yea where is the house almost, where these do not dwell? Men are willing to cherish in themselves, upon never so s•ght grounds, a hope that their condition is good, and so look not out after a change, and by this means perish in their sins. Are you at peace? Shew me upon what grounds your peace is maintained. Is it a Scripture peace? Can you show the distinguishing marks of a sound believer? Can you evidence that you have something more than any Hypocrite in the world ever had? If not, fear this peace, more than any trouble; and know, that a carnal peace doth commonly prove the most mortal enemy of the poor soul, and while it smiles and kisses, and speaks it fair, doth fatally smite it as it were under the fifth rib.

By this time methinks I hear my reader crying out with the Disciples, who then shall be saved? Set out from among our Congregations all those ten ranks of the profane on the one hand; and then besides take out all these twelve sorts of close and self-deceiving Hypocrites on the other hand, and tell me then whether it be not a remnant that shall be saved. How few will be the sheep that shall be left, when all these shall be separated, and set among the Goats? For my part, of all my numerous hearers, I have no hope to see any of them in Heaven, that are to be found among these two and twenty sorts that are here mentioned, except by found conversion they be brought into another condition.

Application. And now Conscience do thine office. Speak out, and speak home to him that heareth or readeth these lines. If thou find any of these marks upon him, thou must pronounce him utterly unclean. Levite. 13. 44. Take not up a lie into thy mouth: speak not peace to him, to whom God speaks no peace. Let not lust bribe thee, or self-love, or carnal prejudice blind thee. I subpoena thee from the Court of Heaven, to come and give in evidence. I require thee in the name of God to go with me to the search of the suspected house. As thou wilt answer it at thy peril, give in a true report of the state and case of him that readeth this book. Conscience wilt thou altogether hold thy peace at such a time as this? I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us the truth. Mat. 26. 63. Is the man converted or is he not? Doth he allow himself in any way of sin, or doth he not? Doth he truly love, and please, and prize and delight in God above all other things, or not? Come, put it to an issue. How long shall this soul lie at uncertainties? Oh Conscience bring in th• verdict. Is this man a new man, or is he •jot? How dost thou find it? hath there passed a through and mighty change upon him, or not? When was the time, where was the place, or what was the means, by which this through change of the new birth was wrought in this soul? Speak Conscience. Or if thou canst not tell time and place, Canst thou show scripture evidence, that the work is done? Hath the man been ever taken off from his false bottom, from the false hopes, and false peace wherein once he trusted? Hath he been deeply convinced of sin, and of his lost and undone condition, and brought out of himself, and off from his sins, to give up himself entirely to Jesus Christ? Or dost thou not find him to this day under the power of ignorance, or in the mire of profaneness? Hast not thou taken upon him the gains of unrighteousness? Dost not thou find him a stranger to prayer, a neglecter of the word, a lover of this present world? Dost not thou often catch him in a lie? Dost not thou find his heart fermented with malice, or burning with lust, or going after his covetousness? Speak plainly to all the forementioned particulars: canst thou acquit this man, this woman, from being any of the two and twenty sorts here described? If he be found with any of them, set him aside, his portion is not with the Saints. He must be converted and made a new creature, or else he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

Beloved, be not your own betrayers, do not deceive your own hearts, nor set your hands to your own ruin, by a willful blinding of yourselves. Set up a tribunal in your own breasts. Bring the word and conscience together. To the Law and to the Testimony. Isa. 8. 20. Hear what the word concludes of your estates. O follow the search, till you have found how the case stands. Mistake here, and perish. And such is the treachery of the Heart, the subtlety of the temper, and the deceitfulness of sin, Ier. 17. 9. 2 Cor. 11. 3. Heb. 3. 13. all conspire to fla••er and deceive the poor soul, and withal so common and easy it is to be mistaken, that it's a thousand to one, but you will be deceived, unless you be very careful, and thorough, and impartial in the enquiry into your spiritual conditions. Oh therefore ply your work: go to the bottom: search as with candles: weigh you in the balance; come to the standard of the Sanctuary: bring your coin to the touch stone. You have the archest cheats in the world to deal with: a world of counterfeit Coin is going: happy is he, that takes no Counters for Gold. Satan is master of deceits: he can draw to the life: he is perfect in the trade: there is nothing but he can imitate. You cannot wish for any Grace, but he can fit you to a hair with a Counterfeit. Trade warily: look on every piece you take: be jealous: trust not so much as your own hearts. Run to God to search you and try you, to examine you and prove your reins. Psal. 26. 2. Psal. 139. 23, 24. If other helps suffice not to bring all to an issue, but you are still at a loss, open your cases faithfully to some Godly and faithful Minister. Mal. 2. 7. Rest not, till you have put the business of your eternal welfare out of question. Pet. 2. 10. O searcher of hearts, put thou this soul upon and help him in the search.

CHAP. V. Showing the Miseries of the Unconverted.

SO unspeakably dreadful is the case of every unconverted soul, that I have sometimes thought, if we could but convince men, that they are yet unregenerate, the work were upon the matter done. But I sadly experience, that such a spirit of sloth and slumber (Rom. 11. 8. Mat. 13. 15) possesses the unsanctified, that though they be convinced, that they are yet unconverted; yet they oftentimes carelessly sit still: and what through the avocation of sensual pleasures, or hurry of worldly business, or noise and clamour of earthly cares, and lusts, and affections, Luke 8. 14. the voice of Conscience is drowned, and men go no farther than some cold wishes, and general purposes of repenting and amending. Acts 24. 25.

It's therefore of high necessity, that I do not only convince men that they are unconverted; but that I also endeavor, to bring them to a sense of the fearful misery of this estate.

But here I find myself aground at first putting forth. What Tongue can tell the heirs of Hell sufficiently of their misery, unless 'twere Dives his that was tormented in that flame? Luke 16. 24. Where is the ready Writer, whose pen can decipher their misery, that are without God in the world? Eph. 2. 12. This cannot fully be done, unless we knew the infinite ocean of that bliss and perfection which is in that God, which a state of sin doth exclude men from. Who knoweth (saith Moses) the power of thine anger? Psal. 90. 11. And how shall I tell men, that which I do not know? Yet so much we know, as one would think would shake the heart of that man, that had the least degree of spiritual life and sense.

But this is yet the more posing difficulty, that I am to speak to them that are without sense. Alas, this is not the least part of man's misery upon him, that he is dead, stark dead in trespasses and sins. Eph. 2. 1.

Could I bring Paradise into view, or represent the Kingdom of Heaven to as much advantage, as the tempter did the Kingdoms of the world and all the glory thereof to our Savior: or could I uncover the face of the deep and devouring gulf of Tophet in all its terrors, and open the gates of the infernal furnace, alas he hath no eyes to see it, Mat. 13. 14, 15. Could I paint out the beauties of holiness, or glory of the Gospel to the life; or could I bring above• board the more than diabolical deformity and ugliness of sin, he can no more judge of the loveliness and beauty of the one, nor the filthiness and hatefulnes of the other, than the blind of colors. He is alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in him, because of the blindness of his heart. Eph. 4. 18. He neither doth nor can know the things of God, because they are spiritually discerned. 1 Cor. 2. 14. His eyes cannot be savingly opened, but by converting grace, Acts 26. 18. he is a child of darkness, and walks in darkness, 1 John 1. 6. yea the light in him is darkness. Mat. 6. 2, 3.

Shall I ring his knell, or read his sentence, or sound in his ear, the terrible trump of God's judgments, that one would think should make both his ears to tingle, and strike him into Belshazer's fit, even to appall his countenance, and loose his joints, and make his knees smite one against another? Yet alas! he perceives me not: he hath no ears to hear. Or shall I call up all the daughters of music, and sing the song of Moses, and of the Lamb• yet he will not be stirred. Shall I allure him with the joyful sound, and the lovely song and glad-tidings of the Gospel? with the most sweet and inviting calls, comforts, cordials, of the divine promises, so exceeding great and precious? it will not affect him savingly, unless I could find him ears, Mat. 13. 15. as well as tell him the news.

Shall I set before him the feast of fat things, the wine of wisdom, the bread of God, the tree of life, the hidden Manna? he hath no appetite for them, no mind to them. 1 Cor. 2. 14. Mat. 22. 5. Should I press the choicest grapes, the heavenly closters of Gospel-privileges, and drink to him in the richest wine of God's own cellar, yea of his own side, of set before him the delicious honey-comb of God's Testimonies, Psal. 19. 10. alas he hath no taste to discern them. Shall I invite the dead to arise and eat the banquet of their funerals? No more can the dead in sin, savor the holy food wherewith the Lord of life hath spread his table.

What then shall I do? shall I burn the brimstone of hell at his nostrils? or shall I open the box of Spikenard, very precious, that filleth the whole house of this universe with its perfume, Mark 14. 3. John. 12. 8. and hope that the savor of Christ's ointments, and the smell of his garments will attract him? Psal. 45. 8. Alas! dead sinners are like the dumb Idols, they have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears, but they hear not; noses have they, but they smell not; they have hands, but they handle not; feet have they, but they walk not, neither speak they through their throat. Psal. 1. 5, 6, 7. They are destitute of all spiritual sense and motion.

But let me try the sense that doth last leave us, and draw the Sword of the word: yet lay at him while I will, yea though I choose mine arrows out of God's quiver, and direct them to the heart, nevertheless he feeleth it not; for how should he, being past feeling? Eph. 4. 19. So that though the wrath of God abideth on him, and the mountainous weight of so many thousand sins, yet he goes up and down as light, as if nothing ailed him. Rom. 7. 9. In a word, he carries a dead soul in a living body, and his flesh is but the walking Cossin of a corrupted mind, this is twice dead, Jude 12. rotting in the slime and putre•action of noisome lusts, Mat 23. 27, 28.

Which way then shall I come at the miserable objects that I have to deal with? who shall make the heart of stone to relent, Zech. 7. 12. or the lifeless carcase to feel and move? That God that is able of Stones to raise up Children unto Abraham, Mat. 3. 9. that raiseth the Dead, 2 Cor. 1. 9. and melteth the Mountains, Nah. 1. 5. and strikes water out of the flints, Deut. 8. 15. that loves to work like himself, beyond the hopes and belief of man, that peopleth his Church with dry bones, and planteth his Orchard with dry sticks; he is able to do this. Therefore I bow my knee to the most high God, Eph. 3. 14. and as our Savior prayed at the Sepulcher of Lazarus, John. 11. 38, 41. and the Shunamite ran to the man of God, for her dead Child, 2 Kings 4. 25. so doth your mourning Minister kneel about your graves, and carry you in the arms of prayer to that God, in whom your help is found.

Oh thou all powerful Jehovah, that workest, and none can let thee; that hath the keys of hell and of death, pity thou the dead souls that lie here intombed, and roll away the grave-stone, and say, as to Lazarus when already stinking, Come forth. Lighten thou this darkness, O inaccessible light, and let the day spring from on high, visit the darksome region of the dead to whom I speak: for thou canst open the eyes that death itself hath closed. Thou that formedst the ear, canst restore the hearing. Say thou to these ears, Ephatah, and they shall be opened. Give thou eyes to see thine excellencies; a taste that may relish thy sweetness; a scent that may savor thine ointments; a feeling that may sense the privilege of thy favor, the burden of thy wrat•, the weight intolerable of unpardoned sin: and give thy servant command to prophesy to the dry bones, and let the effect of t•is prophesy be, as of thy Prophet, when he prophesied the valley of dry bones into a living army, exceeding great, Ezek. 37. 1. &c. The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley, which was full of bones. He said unto me, prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them; O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord: Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live. And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up fles• upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live, and ye shall know that I am the Lord. So I prophesied as I was commanded; and as I prophesied, there was a noise and behold a shaking, and the bones came together bone to his bone. And when I beheld, Loe the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and covered them above, but there was no breath in them. Then said he unto me; prophesy unto the wind, prophesi• son of man, and say to the wind: thus saith the Lord God, come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

But I must proceed, as I am able, to unfold that misery, which I confess no tongue can unfold, no heart can sufficiently comprehend. Know therefore, that while thou art unconverted.

1. The infinite God is engaged against thee.

It is no small part of thy misery, that thou art without God. Eph. 2. 12. How doth Micah run crying after the Danites, You have taken away my God's, and what have I more? Judges. 18. 23, 24. O what a mourning then must thou lift up, that art without God, that canst lay no claim to him, without daring usurpation! Thou must say of God, as Sheba of David; We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. 2 Sam. 20. 1. How pitiful and piercing a moan is that of Saul in his extremity; The Philistians are upon me, and God is departed from me? 1 Sam. 28. 15. Sinners what will you do in the day of your visitation? whither will you flee for help? where will you leave your glory? Isaiah 10. 3. What will you do when the Philistines are upon you? When the World shall take its eternal leave of you, when you must bid your friends, houses, lands, farewell for evermore? What will you do then, I say, that have never a God to go to? Will you call on him, will you cry to him for help? alas he will not own you, Prov. 1. 28, 29. he will not take any knowledge of you, but send you packing, with an I never knew you. Mat. 7. 23. They that know what 'tis to have a God to go to, a God to live upon, they know a little what a fearful misery it is to be without God. This made that holy man cry out, Let me have a God, or nothing. Let me know him and his will, and what will please him, and how I may come to enjoy him, or would I had never had an understanding to know anything, &c.

But thou art not only without God, but God is against thee, Ezek. 5. 8, 9. Nah. 2. 13. Oh if God will but stand a neuter, though he did not own, nor help the poor sinner, his case were not so deeply miserable. Though God should give up the poor creature to the will of all his enemies, to do their worst with him; though he should deliver him over to the tormentors, Mat. 18. 34. that devils should tear and torture him to their utmost power and skill; yet this were not half so fearful. But God himself will set against the sinner; and believe it, 'tis a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Heb. 10. 31. There's no friend like him, no enemy like him. As much as Heaven is above the Earth, Omnipotency above Impotency, Infinity above Nullity, so much more horrible is it, to fall into the hands of the living God, than into the paws of Bears, or Lions, yea furies, or devils. God himself will be thy tormentor; thy destruction shall come from the presence of the Lord. 2 Thes. 1. 9. Tophet is deep and large, and the wrath of the Lord like a river of brimstone doth kindle it. Isaiah 30. 33. If God be against thee, who shall be for thee; If one man sin against another, the Judge shall Judge him: but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him? 1 Sam. 2. 25. Thou, even thou, art to be feared; and who shall stand in thy sight, when •ce thou art angry? Psal. 76. 7. Who is that God, that shall deliver you out of his hands? Dan. 3. 15. Can Mammon? Riches profit not in the day of wrath, Prov 11. 14. Can Kings, or Warriours? No, they shall cry to the Mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand? Rev. 6. 15, 16, 17.

Sinner, methinks this should go like a dagger to thine heart, to know that God is thine enemy. Oh whither wilt thou go, where wilt thou shelter thee? There is no hope for thee unless thou lay down thy weapons, and sue out thy pardon, and get Christ to stand thy friend, and make thy peace. If it were not for this, thou mightest go into some howling wilderness, and there pine in sorrow, and run mad for anguish of heart and horrible despair. But in Christ there is a possibility of mercy for thee, yea a proffer of mercy to thee, that thou mayest have God to be more for thee, than he is now against thee. But if thou wilt not forsake thy sins, nor turn thoroughly and to purpose unto God, by a sound Conversion, the wrath of God abideth on thee, and he proclaims himself to be against thee, as in the Prophet Ezek. 5. 8. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I even I am against thee.

I. His face is against thee, Psal. 34. 16. The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them. Woe unto them whom God shall set his face against. When he did but look upon the host of the Egyptians, how terrible was the consequence? Ezek. 14. 8. I will set my face against that man, and will make him a sign, and a proverb, and will cut him off from the midst of my people, and you shall know that I am the Lord. 2. His heart is against thee: He hateth all the workers of iniquity. Man, doth not thine heart tremble to think of thy being an object of God's hatred? Ier. 15. 1. Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people, cast them out of my sight. Zech. 7. 8. My soul loathed them, and their souls also abhorred me. 3. His hand is against thee. 1 Sam. 12. 14, 15. All his attributes are against thee.

First, His Justice is like a flaming sword unsheathed against thee. If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgment, I will render vengeance to mine adversaries, and will reward them that hate me. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, &c. Deut. 32. 40, 41. So exact is Justice, that 'twill by no means clear the guilty, Exod. 34. 7. God will not discharge thee, he will not hold thee guiltless, Exod. 20. 7. but will require the whole debt in person of thee, unless thou canst make a Scripture claim to Christ and his satisfaction. When the enlightened sinner looks on justice, and sees the balance in which he must be weighed, and the sword by which he must be executed, he feels an earth quake in his breast. But Satan keeps this out of sight, and persuades the soul while he can; that the Lord is all made up of mercy, and so •ulls it asleep in sin. Divine Justice is very strict; it must have satisfaction to the utmost farthing; it denounceth indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, to every soul that doth evil, Rom. 2. 8, 9. It curseth everyone that continueth not in everything that is written in the law to do it. Gal. 3. 19. The justice of God to the unpardoned sinner, that hath a sense of his misery, is more terrible, than the sight of the Bailiff or creditor to the bankrupt debtor, or than the sight of the Judge and Bench to the robber, or of the Irons and gibbet to the guilty murderer. When justice sits upon life and death, Oh what dreadful work doth it make with the wretched sinner? Bind him hand and foot, cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Mat. 22. 13. Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire. Mat. 25. 41. This is the terrible sentence that justice pronounceth. Why sinner, by this severe justice must thou be tried; and as God liveth, this killing sentence shalt thou hear, unless thou repent and be converted.

Secondly, The holiness of God is full of antipathy against thee. Psal. 5. 4, 5. He is not only angry with thee (so he may be with his own children) but he hath a fixed, rooted, habitual displeasure against thee: he loathes thee, Zech. 11. 8. and what is done by thee, though for substance commanded by him: Isaiah. 1. 14. Mal. 1. 10. As if a man should give his servant never so good meat to dress; yet if he should mingle filth, or poison with it, he would not touch it. God's nature is infinitely contrary to sin, and so he cannot but hate a sinner out of Christ.

O what a misery is this, to be out of the favor, yea under the hatred of God! Eccles. 5. 4. Hos. 9. 15. that God can as easily lay aside his nature and cease to be God, as not to be contrary to thee, and detest thee, except thou be changed and renewed by grace! O sinner, how darest thou to think of the bright and radiant Sun of purity, upon the beauties, the glory of holiness that is in God! The Stars are not pure in thy sight; Job 25. He humbleth himself to behold the things that are done in Heaven. Psal. 113. Oh those light and sparkling eyes of his! What do they espy in thee? and thou hast no interest in Christ neither, that he should plead for thee. Methinks I should hear thee crying out astonished, with the Bethshemites, Who shall stand before this holy Lord God? 1 Sam. 6. 20.

Thirdly, The power of God is mounted like a mighty Cannon against thee. The glory of God's power is to be displayed, in the wonderful confusion and destruction of them that obey not the Gospel. 2 Thes. 1. 8, 9. He will make his power known in them, Rom. 9. 22. How mightily he can torment them. For this end he raiseth them up, that he might make his power known. Rom. 9. 17. O man, art thou able to make thy party good with thy maker? No more than a silly reed, against the Cedars of God, or a little cock-boat, against the tumbling ocean; or the children's bubbles, against the blustering winds. Sinner, the power of God's anger is against thee: Psal. 90. 11. and power and anger together, make fearful work. 'Twere better thou hadst all the world in arms against thee, than to have thee power of God against thee. There is no escaping his hands, no breaking his prison. The thunder of his power who can understand? Job 26. 14. Unhappy man that shall understand it by feeling it! If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him one of a thousand. He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength; who hath hardened himself against him, and prospered? Which removeth the Mountains and they know it not, which overturneth them in his anger. Which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble. Which commandeth the Sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the stars. Behold he taketh away, who can hinder him? who will say unto him, what dost thou? If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do stoop under him. Job 9. 3, 4, 5, 6. &c. And art thou a fit match for such an antagonist? Oh consider this, you that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you. Ps. 50. 22. Submit to mercy. Let not dust and stubble stand it out against the Almighty. Set not briars and thorns against him in battle, lest he go through them, and consume them together: but lay hold on his strength, that you may make peace with him, Isaiah 27. 4, 5. We to him that striveth with his maker. Isaiah 45. 9.

Fourthly, The wisdom of God is set to ruin thee. He hath ordained his arrows and prepared the instruments of death and made all things ready. Psal. 11. 12, 13. His counsels are against thee, to contrive thy destruction. Ier. 18. 11. He laughs in himself, to see, how thou wilt be taken and ensnared in the evil day. Ps. 37. 13. The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day is coming. He sees how thou wilt come down mightily in a moment; how thou wilt wring thine hands, and tear thine hair, and eat thy flesh, and gnash thy teeth for anguish and astonishment of heart, when thou seest how thou art fallen remedilessly into the pit of destruction.

Fifthly, The truth of God is sworn against thee. Psal. 95. 11. If he be true and faithful, thou must perish if thou goest on. Luk. 13. 3. Unless he be false of his word, thou must die, except thou repent. Ezek. 33. 11. If we believe not yet, he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself. 2 Tim. 2. 13. That is, he is faithful to his threatenings; as well as promises, and will show his faithfulness in our confusion, if we believe not. God hath told thee, as plain as it can be spoken, That if he wash thee not, thou hast no part in him. John 13. 8. that if thou livest after the flesh, thou shalt die,

Rom. 8. 13. That, except thou be converted thou shalt in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; Mat. 18. 3. and he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself. Beloved, as the immutable faithfulness of God in his promise and oath, afford believers strong consolation; Heb. 6. 18. so they are to unbelievers, for strong consternation and confusion. O sinner tell me what shift dost thou make to think of all the threatenings of God's word, that stand upon record against thee? Dost thou believe their truth, or not? If not, thou art a wretched idol, and not a Christian; and therefore give over the name and hopes of a Christian. But if thou dost believe them, O heart of steel that thou hast, that canst walk up and down in quiet, when the truth and Faithfulness of God is engaged to destroy thee: that if God Almighty can do it, thou shalt surely perish, and be damned. Why man, the whole book of God doth testify against thee, while thou remainest unsanctified: it condemns thee in every leaf, and is to thee, like Ezekiel's roll, written within and without with lamentation, and mourning, and woe: Ezek. 2. 10. and all this shall surely come upon thee and overtake thee, Deut. 28. 15. except thou repent. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but one jot, or tittle of this word shall never pass away. Mat. 5. 18.

Now put all this together, and tell me, if the case of the Unconverted be not deplorably miserable. As we read of some persons, that had bound themselves in an oath, and in a curse to kill Paul: so thou must know, O sinner, to thy terror, that all the attributes of the infinite God are bound in an oath to destroy thee, Heb. 3. 18. O man what wilt thou do? whither wilt thou fly? If God's omniscience can find thee, thou shalt not escape. If the true and faithful God will save his oath, perish thou must, except thou believe and repent. If the Almighty hath power to torment thee, thou shalt be perfectly miserable in soul and body to all eternity, unless it be prevented by thy speedy Conversion.

II. The whole creation of God is against thee. The whole creation (saith Paul) groaneth and travelleth in pain. Rom. 8. 22. But what is it that the creation groaneth under? why, the fearful abuse that it is subject to, in serving the lusts of unsanctified men. And what is it that the creation groaneth for? why, for freedom and liberty from this abuse; for the creature is very unwillingly subject to this bondage. Rom. 8. 19, 20, 21. If the unreasonable and inanimate creatures had speech and reason, they would cry out under it, as bondage unsufferable, to be abused by the ungodly, contrary to their natures, and the ends that the great Creator made them for. It is a passage of an eminent Divine; The liquor that the drunkard drinketh, if it had reason as well as a man, to know how shamefully 'tis abused and spoiled, it would groan in the barrels against him, it would groan in the Cup against him, it would groan in his throat, in his belly against him. It would fly in his face, if it could speak. And if God should open the mouth of the Creatures, as he did the mouth of Balaam's Ass, the proud man's garments on his back would groan against him. There is never a creature but if it had reason to know how 'tis abused, till a man be converted, it would groan against him. This land would groan to bear him, the air would groan to give him breathing, their houses would groan to lodge them, their beds would groan to ease them, their food to nourish them, their clothes to cover them, and the creature would groan to give them any help and comfort, so long as they live in sin against God. Thus far he. Methinks this should be a terror to an unconverted soul, to think that he is a burden to the Creation. Luke 13. 7. Cut it down why cumbereth it the Ground. If the poor inanimate creatures could but speak, they would say to the ungodly, as Moses to Israel; Must we fetch you water out of the rock, ye rebels? Numb. 2. 10. Thy food would say, Lord, must I nourish such a wretch as this, and yield forth my strength for him, to dishonor thee withal? No, I will choke him rather, if thou wilt give me commission: The very air will say, Lord, Must I give this man breath, to set his tongue against Heaven, and scorn thy people, and vent his pride and wrath, and filthy communication, and belch out oaths and blasphemy against thee? No, if thou but say the word: he shall be breathless for me. His poor beast would say, Lord, must I carry him upon his wicked designs? No, I will break his bones, I will end his days rather, if I may have but leave from thee. A wicked man the earth groans under him, and Hell groans for him, till death satisfies both, and unburdens the earth, and stops the mouth of Hell with him. While the Lord of Hosts is against thee, be sure the Hosts of the Lord are against thee, and all the creatures as it were up in arms, till upon a man's conversion, the controversy being taken up between God and him, he makes a covenant of peace with the creatures for him. Job 5. 22, 23, 24. Hos. 2. 18, 19, 20.

III. The roaring Lion hath his full power upon thee, 1 Pet. 5. 8. Thou art fast in the paw of that Lion, that is greedy to devour; in the snare of the Devil, led captive by him at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26. This is the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2. 2. His drudges they are, and his lusts they do. He is the ruler of the darkness of this world: Eph. 6. 12. that is of ignorant sinners, that live in darkness. You pity the poor Indians, that worship the Devil for their God, but little think that 'tis your own case. Why, 'tis the common misery of all the unsanctified, that the Devil is their God. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Not that they do intend to do him homage and worship, they will be ready to defy him, and him that should say so by them; but all this while they serve him, and come and go at his beck, and live under his Government. His servants you are, to whom you yield yourselves to obey. Rom. 6. 16. O how many then will be found the real servants of the Devil, that take themselves for no other than the children of God? he can no sooner offer a sinful delight or opportunity for your unlawful advantage, but you embrace it. If he suggest a lie, or prompt you to revenge, you readily obey. If he forbid you to read, or pray, you hearken to him, and therefore his servants you are. Indeed he lies behind the curtain, he acts in the dark and sinners see not who setteth them on work: but all the while he leads them in a string. Doubtless the liar intends not a service to Satan but his own advantage: yet 'tis he that stands in the corner unobserved, and putteth the thing into his heart. Act. 5. 3. John 8. 44. Questionless Judas when he sold his Master for money, and the Chaldeans and Sabaeans when they plundered Job, intended not to do the Devil a pleasure, but to satisfy their own covetous thirst: yet 'twas he that acted them in their wickedness. John. 13. 27. Job 1. 12, 15, 17. Men may be very slaves and common drudges for the Devil, and never know it, nay they may please themselves in the thoughts of a happy liberty, 2 Pet. 2. 19.

Art thou yet in ignorance, and not turned from darkness to light? why thou art under the power of Satan. Act. 26. 18. Dost thou live in the ordinary and willful practice of any known sin? Know that thou art of the Devil. 1 John 3. 8. Dost thou live in strife, or envy, or malice? verily he is thy Father. John. 8. 40, 41. O dreadful case! How ever Satan may provide his slaves with divers pleasures, Tit. 3. 3. yet it is but to toll them into endless perdition. The Serpent comes with the apple in his mouth, O but (with Eve) thou seest not the deadly sting in his tail. He that is now thy tempter, will be one day thy tormentor. O that I could but give thee to see how black a master thou servest, how filthy a drudgery thou dost, how merciless a Tyrant thou gratifiest, all whose pleasure is, to set thee on work to make thy perdition and damnation sure, and to heat the furnace hotter and hotter, in which thou must burn for millions of millions of ages.

IV. The guilt of all thy sins lies like a mountain upon thee. Poor soul! Thou feelest it not, but this is that which seals thy misery upon thee. While unconverted, none of thy sins are blotted out: Act. 3. 19. they are all upon the score against thee. Regeneration and remission are never separated: the unsanctified are unquestionably unjustified, and unpardoned. 1 Cor. 6. 11. •Pet. 1. 2. Heb. 9. 14. Beloved, it's a fearful thing to be in debt, but above all in God's debt: for there is no arrest so formidable as his, no prison so horrible as his. Look upon an enlightened sinner, who feels the weight of his own guilt, and oh how frightful are his looks, how fearful are his complaints! His comforts are turned into wormwood, and his moisture into drought, and his sleep departeth from his eyes. He is a terror to himself and all that are about him, and is ready to envy the very stones that lie in the street, because they are senseless, and feel not his misery; and wishes he had been a dog, or a toad, or serpent rather than a man, because then death had put an end to his misery, whereas now it will be but the beginning of that which will know no ending.

How light soever you may make of it now, you will one day find the guilt of unpardoned sin to be a heavy burden. This is a millstone that whosoever falleth upon it shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall, it shall grind him to powder. Mat. 21. 44. What work did it make with our Savior? It pressed the very blood (to a wonder) out of his veins, and broke all his bones: and if it did this in the green tree, what will it do in the dry?

Oh think of thy case in time. Canst thou think of that threat without trembling, Ye shall die in your sins, John. 8. 24. Oh better were it for thee to die in a goal, die in a ditch, in a dungeon, than die in thy sins. If death, as it will take away all thy other comforts, would take away thy sins too, it were some mitigation. But thy sins will follow thee, when thy friends leave thee, and all worldly enjoyments shake hands with thee. Thy sins will not die with thee, 2 Cor. 5. 10. Rev. 20. 12. as a prisoners others debts will; but they will to judgment with thee, there to be thine accusers; and they will to hell with thee, there to be thy tormentors. Better to have so many fiends and furies about thee, than thy sins to fall upon thee and fasten in thee. Oh the work that these will make with thee! Oh look over thy debts in time! How much art thou in the books of everyone of God's laws? How is everyone of God's commandments ready to arrest thee, and take thee by the throat for innumerable bonds that it hath upon thee? What wilt thou then do, when they shall altogether lay it in against thee? Hold open the eyes of conscience to consider this, that thou mayest despair of thyself, and be driven to Christ, and fly for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope that is set before thee. Heb. 6. 18.

V. Thy raging lusts do miserably enslave thee. While unconverted, thou art a very servant to sin: it reigns over thee, and holds thee under its dominion, till thou art brought within the bond of God's covenant. John 8. 34, 36. Tit. 3. 3. Rom. 6. 12, 14. Rom. 6. 16, 17. Now there's no such Tyrant as sin. Oh the filthy and fearful work, that it doth engage its servants in! would it not pierce a man's heart to see a company of poor creatures drudging and toiling, and all to carry together faggots and fuel for their own burning? Why, this is the employment of sins drudges. Even while they bless themselves in their unrighteous gains, while they sing and swill in pleasures, they are but treasuring up wrath and vengeance for their eternal burning; they are but laying in powder and bullets, and adding to the pile of Tophet, and flinging in Oil to make the flame rage the fiercer. Who would serve such a master, whose work is drudgery, and whose wages is death? Rom. 6. 23.

What a woeful spectacle was that poor wretch possessed with the legion? Would it not have pitied thine heart to have seen him among the tombs, cutting, and wounding of himself? Mark 5. 5. This is thy case, such is thy work. Every stroke is a thrust at thine heart. 1 Tim. 6. 10. Conscience indeed is now asleep; but when death and judgment shall bring thee to thy senses, then thou wilt feel the raging smart and anguish of every wound. The convinced sinner is a sensible instance of the miserable bondage of sin. Conscience flies upon him, and tells him what the end of these things will be and yet such a slave is he to his lusts, that on he must, though he see it will be his endless perdition: and when the temptation comes, lust gets the bit in his mouth, breaks all the cords of his vows and promises, and carries him head-long to his own destruction.

VI. The furnace of eternal Vengeance is heated ready for thee. Isaiah. 30. 33. Hell and destruction open their mouths upon thee, they gape for thee, they groan for thee, Isaiah. 5. 14. waiting as it were with a greedy eye, as thou standest upon the brink, when thou wilt drop in. If the wrath of a man may be, as the roaring of a Lion, Prov. 19. 12. more heavy than the sand; Prov. 27. 3. What is the wrath of the infinite God? If the burning furnace heated in Nebuchadnezers fiery rage, when he commanded it to be made yet seven times hotter, were so fierce as to burn up even those that drew near it, to throw the three children in: Dan. 3. 19, 22. How hot is that burning oven of the Almighty's fury? Mal. 4. 1. Surely this is seventy times seven more fierce. What thinkest thou, O man, of being a faggot in hell to all eternity? Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong in the day that I shall deal with thee, saith the Lord of hosts? Ezek. 22. 14. Canst thou dwell with everlasting burnings? Canst thou abide the consuming fire? Isaiah. 33. 4. When thou shalt be as a glowing Iron in hell, and thy whole body and soul shall be as perfectly possessed by God's burning vengeance, as the fiery sparkling iron, when heated in the fiercest forge? Thou canst not bear God's whip: how then wilt thou endure his scorpions? Thou art even crushed, and ready to wish thyself dead, under the weight of his finger: how then wilt thou bear the Weight of his loins? The most patient man that ever was, did curse the day that ever he was born, Job 3. 1. and even woo death to come and end his misery, Job 7. 15, 16. when God did but let out one little drop of his wrath. How then wilt thou endure, when God shall pour out all his vials, and set himself against thee to torment thee? when he shall make thy conscience the tunnel, by which he will be pouring his burning wrath into thy soul forever; and when he shall fill all thy powers as full of torment, as they be now full of sin? When immortality shall be thy misery, and to die the death of a brute, and be swallowed into the gulf of annihilation, shall be such a felicity, as a whole eternity of wishes, and an Ocean of tears shall never purchase? Now thou canst put off the evil day, and canst laugh and be merry, and forget the terror of the Lord, 2 Cor 5. 11. but how wilt thou hold out, or hold up, when God shall cast thee into a bed of torments, Rev. 2. 22. and make thee to lie down in sorrows? Isaiah. 50. 11. When roarings and blasphemy shalt be thine only music, and the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the Cup of his indignation, shall be thine only drink? Rev. 14. 10. When thou shalt draw in flames for thy breath, and the horrid stench of sulphur shall be thine only perfume? In a word, when the smoke of thy torment shall ascend forever and ever, and thou shalt have no rest night nor day, no rest in thy conscience, no ease in thy bones, but thou shalt be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach for evermore? Ier. 42. 18.

O sinner, stop here; and consider. If thou art a man, and not a senseless block, consider. Bethink thyself where thou standest: why upon the very brim of this furnace. As the Lord liveth and thy soul liveth, there is but a step between thee and this, 1 Sam. 20. 3. Thou knowest not, when thou liest down, but thou mayest be in before the morning: thou knowest not when thou risest, but thou mayest drop in before the night. Darest thou make light of this? Wilt thou go on in such a dreadful condition, as if nothing ailed thee? If thou putt'st it off, and sayest, this doth not belong to thee; look again over the foregoing Chapter, and tell me the truth, are none of those black marks found upon thee? Do not blind thine eyes, do not deceive thyself: see thy misery while thou mayest prevent it. Think what 'tis to be a vile cast-out, a damned reprobate, a vessel of wrath, into which the Lord will be pouring out his tormenting fury, while he hath a being, Rom. 9. 22.

Divine wrath is a fierce, Deut. 32. 22. devouring, Isaiah 33. 14. everlasting, Mat. 25. 41. unquenchable fire; Mat. 3. 12. and thy soul and body must be the fuel upon which it will be feeding forever, unless thou consider thy ways, and speedily turn to the Lord by a found conversion. They that have been only singed by this fire, and had no more but the smell thereof passing upon them; Oh what amazing spectacles have they been. Whose heart would not have melted, to have heard Spira's outcries, to have seen Chaloner that monument of Justice, worn to skin and bones, blaspheming the God of Heaven, cursing himself, and continually crying out, O torture, torture, torture, O torture, torture, as if the flames of wrath had already took hold on him? To have heard Rogers crying out, I have had a little pleasure, and now I must to Hell for evermore; wishing but for this mitigation, that God would but let him lie burning forever behind the back of that fire (on the hearth) and bringing in this sad conclusion still, at the end of whatever was spoken to him, to afford him some hope, I must to Hell, I must to the furnace of Hell, for millions of millions of Ages. O If the fears and forethoughts of the wrath to come be so terrible, so intolerable, what is the feeling of it!

Sinner, 'tis but in vain to flatter you: this would be but to toll you into the unquenchable fire: know ye from the living God, that here you must lie, with these burnings must you dwell, till immortality die, and immutability change, till Eternity run out, and omnipotency is no longer able to torment, except you be in good earnest renewed throughout by sanctifying grace.

VII. The Law dischargeth all its threats and curses at thee. Gal. 3. 10. Rom. 7. Oh how dreadfully doth it thunder? It spits fire and brimstone in thy face. Its words are as drawn swords, and as the sharp arrows of the mighty, it demands satisfaction to the uttermost, and cries, Justice, Justice. It speaks blood, and war, and wounds, and death against thee. Oh the execrations, and plagues and deaths, that this murdering• piece is loaded with (read Deut. 28. 15, 16. &c.) and thou art the mark at which this shot is levelled. Oh man, away to the strong hold, Zech. 9. 12. away from thy sins: haste to the sanctuary, the City of refuge, Heb. 6. 18. even the Lord Jesus Christ; hide thee in him, or else thou art lost without any hope of recovery.

VIII. The Gospel itself binds the sentence of eternal damnation upon thee. Mark 16. 16. If thou continuest in thine impenitent and unconverted estate, know that the Gospel denounceth a much sorer condemnation, than ever would have been for the transgression only of the first Covenant. Is it not a dreadful case, to have the Gospel itself fill its mouth with threat• and thunder, and damnation? To have the Lord to roar from Mount Zion against thee? Joel 3. 16. Hear the terror of the Lord. He that believeth not shall be damned. Except ye repent, ye shall all perish. Luke 13. 3. This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light. John 3. 19. He that believeth not, the wrath of God abideth on him, Joh. 3. 36. If the word spoken by Angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward: how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? Heb. 2. 2, 3. He that despised Moses law, died without mercy: Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy• that hath trampled underfoot the sons of God•Heb. 10. 28, 29.

Application. And is it true indeed? Is this thy misery? yea 'tis as true as God is. Better open thine eyes and see it now, while thou mayest remedy it, than blind and harden thyself, till to thine eternal sorrow, thou shalt feel what thou wouldst not believe: and if it be true, what dost thou mean to loiter, and linger in such a case as this?

Alas for thee poor man, how effectually hath sin undone thee, and depraved thee, and despoiled thee even of the reason to look after thine own everlasting good! Oh miserable Caitiff, what stupidity and senselessness hath surprised thee! Oh let me knock up and awake this sleeper. Who dwells within the walls of this flash? Is there ever a soul here, a rational understanding soul? Or art thou only a walking Ghost, a senseless lump? Art thou a reasonable foul, and yet so far brutified, as to forget thyself immortal, and to think thyself to be as the beasts that perish? Art thou turned into flesh, that thou favourest nothing but gratifying the sense, and making provision for the flesh? Or else having reason to understand the eternity of thy future state, dost thou yet make light of being everlastingly miserable? which is to be so much below a brute, as it is worse to act against reason, than to act without it. O unhappy soul, that wast the glory of man, the mate of Angels, and the image of God! that wast God's representative in the world, and hadst the supremacy amongst the creatures, and the dominion over thy makers works! Art thou now become a slave to sense, a servant to so base an Idol, as thy belly? for no higher felicity, than to fill thee with the wind of man's applause, or heaping together a little refined earth, no more suitable to thy spiritual, immortal nature, than the dirt, and sticks? Oh why dost thou not bethink thee where thou shalt be forever? Death is at hand, the Judge is even at the door. I am. 5. 9. Yet a little whil•, and time shall be no longer. Rev. 10. 5, 6. And wilt thou run the hazard of continuing in such a state, in which if thou be overtaken, thou art irrecoverably miserable.

Come then, arise, and intend thy nearest concernments. Tell me whither art thou going? What, wilt thou live in such a course, wherein every act is a step to perdition? And thou dost not know, but the next night, thou mayest make thy bed in hell? Oh! If thou hast a spark of reason, consider, and turn, and hearken to thy very friend, who would therefore show thee thy present misery, that thou mightest in time make thine escape, and be eternally happy.

Hear what the Lord saith; Fear ye not m^e saith the Lord? Will ye not tremble at my presence? Ier. 5. 22. O sinners, do you make light of the wrath to come? Mat. 3. 7. I am sure there is a time coming, when you will not make light of it. Why, the very Devils do believe and tremble, James 2. 19. What, you more hardened than they? Will you run upon the edge of the Rock? will you play at the hole of the Asp! will you put your hand upon the Cockatrice den? Will you dance about the fire, till you are burnt? or dally with devouring wrath, as if you were at a point of indifferency, whether you did escape it, or endure it? O madness of folly! Solomon's mad man, that casteth fire-brands, and arrows and death, and saith, am I not in jest? Prov. 26. 18. is nothing so distracted as the willful sinner, Luke 15. 17. that goeth on in his unconverted estate without sense, as if nothing ailed him. The man that runs on the cannons mouth, that sports with his blood, or lets out his life in a frolic, is sensible, sober, and serious, to him that goeth on still in his trespasses. Psal 68. 21. For he stretcheth out his hand against God, and strengtheneth himself against the ALMIGHTY. He runneth upon him, even upon his neck, upon the thick bosses of his Buckler. Job 15. 25, 26. Is it wisdom to delay with the second death, or to venture into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, Rev. 21. 8. as if thou wert but going to wash thee or swim for thy recreation? Wilt thou as it were fetch thy vieze, and jump into eternal flames, as the children through the bonfire? What shall I say? I can find out no expression, no comparison whereby to set forth the dreadful distraction of that soul, that shall go on in sin.

Awake, awake, Eph. 5. 14. Oh sinner, arise and take thy flight. There is but one door that thou mayest fly by, and that is the strait door of conversion and the new birth. Unless thou turn unfeignedly from all thy sins, and come into Jesus Christ, and take him for the Lord thy righteousness, and walk in him in Holiness and newness of life, as the Lord liveth, it is not more certain that thou art now out of Hell, than that thou shalt without fail be in it, but a few days and nights from hence. Oh set thine heart to think of thy case• Is not thine everlasting misery or welfare that which doth deserve a little consideration? Look again over the miseries of the unconverted. If the Lord hath not spoken by me, regard me not, But if it be the very word of God, that all this misery lies upon thee, what a case art thou in? Is it for one that hath his senses to live in such a condition, and not to make all possible expedition for preventing his utter ruin? O man, who hath bewitched thee, Gal. 3. 1. that in the matters of the present life thou shouldest be wise enough to forecast thy business, foresee thy danger, and prevent the mischief; but in matters of everlasting consequence should be slight and careless, as if they little concerned thee? Why is it nothing to thee to have all the attributes of God engaged against thee? Canst thou do well without his favor? Canst thou escape his hands, or endure his vengeance? Dost thou hear the creation groaning under thee, and hell groaning for thee, and yet think thy case good enough? Art thou in the paw of the Lion, under the power of corruption, in the dark and noisesome prison, fettered with thy lusts, working out thine own damnation, and is not this worth the considering? Wilt thou make light of all the terrors of the law, of all its curses, and thunderbolts, as if they were but the report of the Children's pot-guns, or thou wert to war with their paper pellets? dost thou laugh at hell and destruction, or canst drink the envenomed cup of the Almighty's fury, as if it were but a common potion?

Gird up now thy loins like a man, for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Job 40. 7. Art thou such a Leviathan, as that the scales of thy pride should keep thee from thy makers coming at thee? Wilt thou esteem his arrows as straw, and the instruments of death as rotten wood? Art thou chief of all the children of pride, even that thou shouldst count his darts as stubble, and laugh at the shaking of his spear? Art thou made without fear, and contemnest his barbed irons? Job 41. Art thou like the horse, that paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength: he goeth out to meet the armed men? Dost thou mock at fear and art not affrighted, neither turnest back from God's sword? When his quiver rattleth against thee, the glittering Spear and the shield? Job 39. 21, 22, 23. Well, if the threats and calls of the word will not fear thee, nor awaken thee, I am sure death and judgment will. Oh what wilt thou do when the Lord cometh forth against thee, and in his fury falleth upon thee, and thou shalt feel what thou readest? If when Daniel's enemies were cast into the den of Lions both they and their wives and their children, the Lions had the Mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces, ere ever they came at the bottom of the den, Dan. 6. 24. what shall be done with thee, when thou fallest into the hands of the living God? When he shall gripe thee in his Iron arms, and grind and crush thee to a thousand pieces in his wrath?

Oh do not then contend with God. Repent and be converted, so none of this shall come upon thee. Isaiah. 55. 6, 7. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and he will have mercy on him, and to our God for he will abundantly pardon.

CHAP VI. Containing DIRECTIONS for Conversion.

Mark 10. 17. And there came one, and kneeled to him, and asked him; Good Master, what shall I do, that I may inherit eternal life?

BEfore thou readest these Directions, I advise thee, yea I charge thee before God, and his holy Angels, to resolve to follow them, (as far as conscience shall be convinced of their agreeableness to God's word, and thy estate,) and call in his assistance, and blessing that they may succeed. And as I have sought the Lord, and consulted his oracles, what advice to give thee; so must thou entertain it, with that awe, reverence, and purpose of obedience, that the word of the living God doth require.

Now then attend. Set thine heart unto all that I shall testify unto thee this day; for it is not a vain thing, it is your life, Deut. 32. 4. 6. This is the end of all that hath been spoken hitherto, to bring you to set upon turning, and making use of God's means for your Conversion. I would not trouble you, nor torment you before the time with the forethoughts of your eternal misery, but in order to your making your escape. Were you shut up under your present misery, without remedy, it were but mercy (as one speaks) to let you alone, that you might take in that little poor comfort, that you are capable of, here in this world. But you may yet be happy: if you do not willfully refuse the means of your recovery. Behold, I hold open the door unto you: arise and take your flight. I set the way of life before you, walk in it, and you shall live, and not die. Deut. 30. 19. Ier. 9. 16. It pities me to think, you should be your own murderers, and throw yourselves headlong, when God and men cry out to you, as Peter in another case to his master, Spare thyself. A noble Virgin, that attended the Court of Spain, was wickedly ravished by the King; and hereupon exciting the Duke her Father to revenge, he called in the Moors to his help, who when they had executed his design, miserably wasted and spoiled the Country: which this Virgin laying so exceedingly to heart, shut herself up in a Tower belonging to her Fathers house, and desired her Father and Mother might be called forth: and bewailing to them her own wretchedness, that she should have occasioned so much misery and desolation to her Country, for the satisfying of her revenge, she told them she was resolved to be avenged upon herself. Her Father and Mother besought her to pity herself and them: but nothing would prevail, but she took her leave of them, and threw herself off the battlements, and so perished before their faces.

Just thus is the willful destruction of ungodly men. The God that made them beseecheth them, and crieth out to them, as Paul to the distracted Jailor, when about to murder himself, Do thyself no harm. The Ministers of Christ forewarn them and follow them, and fain would hold them back. But alas! No expostulations, nor obtestations will prevail; but men will hurl themselves into perdition, while pity itself looketh on.

What shall I say? Would it not grieve a person of any humanity, if in the time of a reigning plague he should have a receipt (as one well) that would infallibly cure all the Country, and recover the most hopeless patients, and yet his friends and neighbors should die by the hundreds about him, because they would not use it? Men and Brethren, though you carry the certain symptoms of death in your faces, yet I have a receipt that will cure you all, that will cure infallibly. Follow but these few directions, and if you do not then win Heaven, I will be content to lose it.

Hear then, Oh sinner, and as ever thou wouldst be converted and saved, embrace this following counsel.

Dir. I. Set it down with thyself as an undoubted truth, that it is impossible for thee ever to get to Heaven, in this thine unconverted state. Can any other but Christ save thee? And he tells thee he will never do it, except thou be regenerated and converted. Mat. 18. 3. John 3. 3. Doth he not keep the keys of Heaven? And canst thou get in without his leave, as thou must, if ever thou comest thither in thy natural condition, without a sound and through renovation?

Dir. II. Labor to get a thorough sight and lively sense and feeling of thy sins. Till men are weary and heavy laden, and pricked at the heart, and stark sick of sin, they will not come to Christ in his way, for ease and cure, nor to purpose enquire, What shall we do? Mat. 11. 28. Acts 2. 37. Mat. 9. 12. They must set themselves down for dead men, before they will come unto Christ, that they may have life, John 5. 40. Labor therefore to set all thy sins in order before thee. Never be afraid to look upon them, but let thy spirit make diligent search, Psal. 77. 6. Enquire into thine heart, and into thy life, Enter into a thorough examination of thyself, and of all thy ways, Psal. 119. 59. that thou mayest make a full discovery; and call in the help of God's spirit, in the sense of thine own inability hereunto: for it is his proper work to convince of sin. John 16. 8. Spread all before the face of thy conscience, till thine heart and eyes be set abroad. Leave not striving with God, and thine own soul, till it cry out under the sense of thy sins, as the enlightened Jailor, What must I do to be saved? Acts 16. 30. To this purpose

Meditate of the numerousness of thy sins. David's heart failed when he thought of this, and considered that he had more sins than hairs, Ps. 40. 12. This made him to cry out upon the multitudes of God's tender-mercies. Psal. 51. 1. The loathsome carcase doth not more hatefully swarm with crawling worms, than an unsanctified soul with filthy lusts. They fill the head, the heart, the eyes and mouth of him. Look backward, where was ever the place, what was ever the time, in which thou didst not sin? Look inward, what part or power canst thou find in soul or body, but it is poisoned with sin? What duty dost thou ever perform into which this poison is not shed? Oh how great is the sum of thy debts, who hast been all thy life long running upon the hooks, and never didst, nor canst pay off one penny? Look over the sin of thy nature, and all its cursed brood, the sins of thy life. Call to mind thy Omissions, Commissions, the sins of thy thoughts, of thy words, of thine actions; the sins of thy youth, the sins of thy years, &c. Be not like a desperate Bankrupt, that is afraid to look over his books. Read the records of conscience carefully. These books must be opened sooner, or later. Rev. 20. 12.

Meditate upon the aggravations of thy sin, as they are the grand enemies against the God of thy life, against the life of thy soul; in a word they are the public enemies of all mankind. How do David, Ezra, Daniel and the good Levites aggravate their sins, from the consideration of their injuriousness to God, their opposition to his good and righteous Laws, the mercies, the warnings that they were committed against. Nehem. 9. Dan. 9. Ezra. 9. O the work that sin hath made in the world! This is the enemy that hath brought in death, that hath robbed and enslaved man, that hath blacked the devil, that hath digged hell; Rom. 5. 12. 2 Pet. 2. 4. John 8. 34. This is the enemy that hath turned the creation upside down, and sown dissension between man and the creatures, between man and man, yea between man and himself, setting the sensitive part against the rational, will against judgment, lust against conscience? yea worst of all, between God and man, making the lapsed sinner, both hateful to God, and a hater of him. Zec. 11. 8. O man, how canst thou make so light of sin? This is the traitor that sucked the blood of the Son of God, that sold him, that mocked him, that scourged him, that spat in his face, that digged his hands, that pierced his side, that pressed his soul, that mangled his body, that never left, till it had bound him, condemned him, nailed him, crucified him, and put him to open shame. Isaiah. 53. 4, 5, 6. This is that deadly poison, so powerful of operation, as that one drop of it, shed upon the root of mankind, hath corrupted, spoiled, and poisoned, and undone his whole race at once. Rom. 5. 18, 19. This is the common butcher, the bloody executioner, that hath killed the Prophets, that hath burnt the Martyrs, that hath murdered all the Apostles, all the Patriarchs, all the Kings and Potentates, that hath destroyed Cities, swallowed Empires, butchered and devoured whole Nations. What ever was the weapon that 'twas done by, sin was it that did the execution. Rom. 6. 23. dost thou yet think it but a small thing? If Adam and all his children could be digged out of their graves, and their bodies piled up to Heaven, and an inquest were made, what matchless murderer were guilty of all this blood: it would be all found in the skirts of sin. Study the nature of sin, till thy heart be brought to fear and loath it. And meditate on the aggravations of thy particular sins, how thou hast sinned against all God's warnings, against thine own prayers, against mercies, against corrections, against clearest light, against freest love, against thine own resolutions, against promises, vows, covenants of better obedience, &c. charge thy heart home with these things, till it blush for shame, and be brought out of all good opinion of itself, Ezra. 9. 6.

Meditate upon the desert of sin. It crieth up to Heaven: It calls for vengeance, Gen. 18. 24. Its due wages is death, damnation. It pulls the curse of God upon the soul and body. Gal. 3. 10. Deut. 28. The least sinful word or thought, •aies thee under the infinite wrath of God Almighty, Rom. 2. 8, 9. Mat. 12. 36. Oh what a load of wrath, what a weight of curses, what treasure of vengeance have all the millions of thy sins then deserved! Rom. 2. 5. John. 3. 36. Oh judge thyself that the Lord may not judge thee. 1 Cor. 11. 31.

Meditate upon the deformity, and defilement of sin, 'Tis as black as hell, the very image and likeness of the Devil drawn upon thy soul, 1 John 3. 8, 10. It would more affright thee, to see thyself the hateful deformity of thy nature, than to see the devil. There is no mire so unclean, no vomit so loathsome, no carcase or carrion so offensive, no plague or leprosy so noisome as sin, in which thou art all enrolled, and covered with its odious filth, whereby thou art rendered more displeasing to the pure and holy nature of the glorious God, than the most filthy object, composed of whatever is hateful to all thy senses, can be to thee. Job 15. 15, 16. Couldst thou take up a toad into thy bosom? Couldst thou cherish it and take delight in it? Why, thou art as contrary to the pure and perfect holiness of the divine nature, and as loathsome as that is to thee, Mat. 23. 33. till thou art purified by the blood of Jesus, and the power of renewing grace.

Above all other sins, fix the eye of Consideration on these two. 1. The sin of thy nature. 'Tis to little purpose to lop the branches, while the root of original corruption remains untouched. In vain do men lave out the streams, when the fountain is running, that fills up all again. Let the axe of thy repentance (with David's) go to the root of sin, Psal. 51. 5. Study how deep, how close, how permanent it is, thy natural pollution; how universal it is, till thou dost cry out with Paul's feeling, upon thy body of death. Rom. 7. 24. Look into all thy parts and powers, and see what u•clean vessels, what styes, what dunghills, what sinks they are become. Heu miser, quid sum? vas sterquilinii, concha putredinis; plenus faetore & horrore. August. Solil. c. 2. The heart is never soundly broken, till thoroughly convinced of the heynousness of original sin. Here fix thy thoughts. This is that that makes thee backward to all good, prone to all evil; Rom. 7. 15. that sheds blindness, pride, prejudices, unbelief into thy mind; enmity, inconstancy, obstinacy, into thy will; inordinate heats and colds into thy affectious; insensibleness, benumbedness, unfaithfulness into thy conscience, slipperiness into thy memory, and in a word, hath put every wheel of thy soul out of order, and made it of an habitation of holiness, to become a very hell of iniquity. James 3. 6. This is that that hath defiled, corrupted, perverted all thy members, and turned them into weapons of unrighteousness, and servants of sin; Rom. 6. 19. that hath filled the head with carnal and corrupt designs, Mic. 2. 1. the hands with sinful practices, Isaiah 1. 15. the eyes with wandering and wantonness, 2 Pet. 2. 14. the tongue with deadly poison; I am. 3. 8. that hath opened the ears to tales, flattery, and filthy communication, and shut them against the instruction of life; Zech. 7. 11, 12. and hath rendered thy heart a very mint and forge of sin, and the cursed womb of all deadly conceptions; Mat. 15. 16. So that it poureth forth its wickedness without ceasing, 2 Pet. 2. 14. even as naturally freely, unweariedly, as a fountain doth pour forth its waters, Ier. 6. 7. or the raging Sea doth cast forth mire and dirt. Isaiah 57. 20. And wilt thou yet be in love with thyself, and tell us any longer of thy good heart? O never leave meditating on this desperate contagion of original corruption, till with Ephraim thou bemoan thyself, Ier. 31. 8. & with deepest shame and sorrow smite on thy breast as the Publican, Luke 18. 13. and with Job abhor thyself and repent in dust and ashes, Job 42. 6, 2. The particular evil that thou art most addicted to. Find out all its aggravations. Set home upon thy heart all God's threatenings against it. Repentance drives before it the whole herd, but especially sticks the arrow in the beloved sin, and singles this out, above the rest, to run it down, Psal. 18. 23. O labor $\langle \diamond \rangle$ make this sin odious to thy soul, and double thy guards, and thy resolutions against it, because this hath, and doth, most dishonor God, and endanger thee.

Dir. III. Strive to affect thy heart with deep sense of thy present misery. Read over the foregoing Chapter again and again, and get it out of the book into thine heart. Remember when thou liest down, that for ought thou knowest, thou mayest awake in flames, and when thou risest up, that by the next night thou mayest make thy bed in hell. Is it a just matter to live in such a fearful ease? to stand tottering upon the brink of the bottomless pit, and to live at the mercy of every disease, that if it will but fall upon thee; will send thee forthwith into the burnings? Suppose thou sawest a condemned wretch hanging over Nebuchadne•ar's burning fiery furnace, by nothing but a twine thread, which were ready to break every moment, would not thine heart tremble for such an one? Why thou art the man. This is thy very case, O man, woman, that readest this, if thou be yet unconverted. What if the thread of thy life should break? (Why, thou knowest not but it may be the next night, yea the next moment) where wouldst thou be then? whither wouldst thou drop? Verily, upon the crack but of this thread, thou fallest into the lake, that burneth with fire and Brimstone, where thou must lie scalding and sweltering in a fiery Ocean, while God hath a being, if thou die in thy present case. And doth not thy soul tremble as thou readest? Do not thy tears bedew the paper, and thy heart throb in thy bosom? Dost thou not yet begin to smite on thy breast, and bethink thyself what need thou hast of a change? O what is thy heart made of! Hast thou not only lost all regard to God, but art without any love and pity to thyself?

Oh study thy misery, till thy heart do cry out for Christ, as earnestly, as ever a drowning man did for a boat, or the wounded for a Chirurgeon. Men must come to see the danger, and feel the smart of their deadly sores and sickness, or else Christ will be to them a Physician of no value, Mat. 9. 12. Then the manslayer hastens to the City of refuge, when pursued by the avenger of blood. Men must be even forced, and fired out of themselves, or else they will not come to Christ. 'Twas distress and extremity, that made the Prodigal think of returning, Luke 15. 16, 17. While Laodicea thinks herself rich, increased in goods, in need of nothing, there is little hope. She must be deeply convinced of her wretchedness, blindness, poverty, nakedness, before she will come to Christ for his Gold, raiment, eyesalve, Rev. 3. 17, 18. Therefore hold the eyes of conscience open, amplify thy misery, as much as possible. Do not fly the sight of it, for fear it should fill thee with terror. The sense of thy misery is but as it were the suppuration of the wound, which is necessary to the cure. Better fear the torments that abide thee now, than feel them hereafter.

Dir. IV. Settle it upon thine heart, that thou art under an everlasting inability ever to recover thyself. Never think thy praying, reading, hearing, confessing, amending will do the cure. These must be attended; but thou art undone if thou restest in them, Rom. 10. 3. Thou art a lost man, if thou hopest to escape drowning upon any other plank, but Jesus Christ, Act. 4. 1. Thou must unlearn thyself, and renounce thine own wisdom, thine own righteousness; thine own strength, and throw thyself wholly upon Christ, as a man that swimmeth casteth himself upon the water, or else thou canst not escape. While men trust in themselves, and establish their own righteousness, and have confidence in the flesh they will not come savingly to Christ, Luke 18. 19. Phil. 3. 3. Thou must know thy gain to be but loss and dung, thy strength but weakness, thy righteousness rag's and rottenness, before $\langle \diamond \rangle$ will be on effectual closure between Christ and he, Phil. 3. 7, 8, 9. 2 Cor. 3. 5. Isaiah. 64. 6. Can the lifeless carcase shake off his grave cloths, and loose the bonds of death? Then mayest thou recover thyself, who $\langle \diamond \rangle$ dead in trespasses and sins, and under an impossibility of serving thy maker (acceptably) in this condition, Rom. 8. 8. Heb. 11. 6. Therefore, when thou goest to pray, or meditate, or to do any of the duties, to which thou art here directed: go out of thyself, call in the help of the spirit, as despairing to do anything pleasing to God, in thine own strength. Yet neglect not thy duty, but lie at the pool, and wait in the way of the spirit. While the Eunuch was reading, then the Holy Ghost sent Philip to him, Act. 8. 28, 29. when the Disciples were praying, Act. 4. 31. when Cornelius and his friends were hearing, Acts 10. 44. then the Holy Ghost fell upon them, and filled them all. Strive to give up thyself to Christ. Strive to pray, strive to meditate, strive an hundred and an hundred times, try to do it as well as thou canst, and while thou art endeavoring in the way of thy duty, the Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and help thee to do, what of thyself thou art utterly unable unto, Prov. 1. 23.

Dir. V. Forthwith renounce all thy sins. If thou yield thyself to the contrary practice of any sin, thou art undone, Rom. 6. 16. In vain dost thou hope for life by Christ, except thou depart from iniquity, 2 Tim. 2. 19. Forsake thy sins, or else thou canst not find mercy: Prov. 28. 13. Thou canst not be married to Christ, except divorced from sin. Give up the traitor, or you can have no peace with Heaven. Cast the head of Sheba over the wall. Keep not Delilah in thy lap. Thou must part with thy sins, or with thy soul. Spare but one sin, and God will not spare thee. Never make excuses: thy sins must die, or thou must die for them, Psal. 68. 21. If thou allow of one sin, though but a little, a secret one, though thou mayest plead necessity, and have a hundred shifts and excuses, for it, the life of thy soul must go for the life of that sin; Ezek. 18. 21. and will it not be dearly bought?

Oh sinner, hear and consider. If thou wilt part with thy sins, God will give thee his Christ: Is not this a fair exchange? I testify unto thee this day, that if thou perish, it is not because there was never a Savior provided, nor life tendered: but because thou preferredst (with the Jews) the Murderer before thy Savior, sin before Christ, and lovedst darkness rather than light, John 3. 19. Search thy heart therefore with candles, as the Jews did their houses for Leven, before the Pass-over: Labor to find out thy sins. Enter into thy Closet, and consider, what evil have I lived in? what duty have I neglected towards God! what sin have I lived in against my brother? and now strike the darts through the heart of thy sin, as Joab did through Absalom's, 2 Sam. 18. 14. Never stand looking upon thy sin, nor rolling the morsel under thy tongue, Job 20. 12. but spit it out as poison, with fear and detestation. Alas, what will thy sins do for thee, that thou shouldst stick at parting with them? They will flatter thee, but they will undo thee, and cut thy throat while they smile upon thee, and poison thee while they please thee, and arm the justice and wrath of the infinite God against thee. They will open hell for thee, and pile up fuel to burn thee. Behold the gibbet that they have prepared for thee. Oh serve them like Haman, and do upon them the execution, they would else have done upon thee. Away with them, crucify them, and let Christ only be Lord over thee.

Dir. VI. Make a solemn choice of God for thy portion and blessedness, Deut. 26. 17. With all possible devotion and veneration avouch the Lord for thy God. Set the world with all its glory, and paint, and gallantry, with all its pleasures and promotions on the one hand, and set God with all his infinite excellencies and perfections on the other, and see that thou do deliberately make thy choice, Josh. 24. 15. Take up thy rest in God, John. 6. 68. Set thee down under his shadow, Cant. 2. 3. Let his promises and perfections turn the scale against all the world. Settle it upon thy heart, that the Lord is an all-sufficient portion, that thou canst not be miserable, while thou hast a God to live upon. Take him for thy shield and exceeding great reward. God alone is more than all the world. Content thyself with him. Let others carry the preferments and glory of the world, place thou thy happiness in his favor, and the light of his countenance, Psal. 5. 6, 7.

Poor sinner, thou art fallen off from God, and hast engaged his power, and wrath against thee. Yet know that of his abundant grace, he doth offer to be thy God again in Christ. 2 Cor. 6. 17, 18. What sayest thou man? Wilt thou have the Lord for thy God? Why take this counsel, and thou shalt have him. Come to him by his Christ, John. 14. 6. Renounce the idols of thine own pleasure, gain, Reputation • 1 Thes. 1. 9. Let these be pulled out of the Throne, and set God's interest upermost in thine heart. Take him as God, to be chief in thine affection, estimations, intentions; for he will not endure to have any set above him, Rom. 1. 25. Psal. 73. 25. In a word, thou must take him in all his Personal relations, and in all his essential perfections.

First, In all his personal relations. God the Father must be taken for thy Father, Ier. 3. 4. 19. 22. O come to him with the Prodigal, Father, I have sinned against Heaven, and in thy sight, and am not worthy to be called thy Son: but since of thy wonderful mercy, thou art pleased to take me, that am of myself a dog, a swine, a devil, to be thy child, I solemnly take thee for my Father, I commend myself to thy care, and trust to thy providence, and cast my burden on thy shoulders. I depend on thy provision, and submit to thy corrections, and trust under the shadow of thy wings, and hide in thy chambers, and fly to thy name. I renounce all confidence in myself, I repose my confidence in thee, I depose my concernments with thee. I will be with thee, and for no other. Again, God the Son must be taken for thy Savior, for thy redeemer, and righteousness, John 1. 2. He must be accepted, as the only way to the Father, and the only means of life, Heb. 7. 25. O then put off the raiment of thy captivity, on with the wedding garment, and go and marry thyself to Jesus Christ. Lord I am thine, and all that I have, my body, my soul, my name, my estate. I send a bill of divorce to my other lovers, I give my heart to thee. I will be thine undividedly, thine everlastingly. I will set thy name on all I have, and use it only as thy goods, as thy loan, during thy leave, resigning all to thee. I will have no King but thee: reign thou over me. Other Lord's have had dominion over me: but now I will make mention of thy name only, and do here take an oath of fealty to thee, promising and vowing to serve, and love, and fear thee, above all competitors. I disavow mine own righteousness, and despair of ever being pardoned and saved for mine own duties, or graces, and lean only on thine all-sufficient sacrifice and intercession, for pardon, and life, and acceptance before God. I take thee for mine only guide and instruction, resolving to be led and directed by thee, and to wait for thy counsel, and that thine, shall be the casting voice with me. Lastly, God the Spirit must be taken for thy sanctifier, Rom. 8. 9, 14. Gal. 5. 16, 18. for thine Advocate, thy Counselor, thy Comforter, the teacher of thine ignorance, the pledge and earnest of thine inheritance, Rom. 8. 26. Psal. 73. 24. John 14. 16. Eph. 1. 14. John 14. 26. Eph. 4. 30. Awake thou North wind, and come thou South, and blow upon my Garden, Cant. 4. 16. Come thou Spirit of the most high; here is a house for thee, here is a Temple for thee. Here do thou rest forever; dwell here, and rest here. Lo I give up the possession to thee, full possession. I send thee the keys of my heart, that all may be for thy use, that thou mayest put thy goods thy graces into every room. I give up the use of all to thee, that every faculty, and every member may be thine instrument, to work righteousness, and do the will of my Father, which is in Heaven.

Secondly, In all his essential perfections. Consider how the Lord hath revealed himself to you in his word: will you take him as such a God? O sinner, here's the blessedst news that ever came to the sons of men. The Lord will be thy God, Gen. 7. 17. Rev. 21. 3. if thou wilt but close with him in his excellencies. Wilt thou have the merciful, the gracious, the sinpardonning God, to be thy God? O yes (saith the sinner) I am undone else. But he further tells thee, I am the holy, and sin-hating God. If thou wilt be owned as one of my people, thou must be holy, 1 Pet. 1. 16. holy in heart, holy in life. Thou must put away all thine iniquities, be they never so near, never so natural, never so necessary to the maintaining thy fleshly interest. Unless thou wilt be at defiance with sin, I cannot be thy God. Cast out the leaven: put away the evil of thy doings: cease to do evil, learn to do well, or else I can have nothing to do with thee, Isaiah. 1. 16, 17, 18. Bring forth mine enemies, or there is no peace to be had with me. What doth thine heart answer? Lord, I desire to have thee as such a God. I desire to be holy, as thou are holy, to be made partaker of thy holiness. I love thee, not only for thy goodness and mercy, but for thy holiness and thy purity. I take thy holiness for my happiness. Oh! be to me a fountain of holiness: set on me the stamp and impress of thy holiness. I will thankfully part with all my sins at thy command. My willful sins I do forthwith forsake; and for my infirmities, that I cannot get rid of, though I would, I will strive against them in the use of thy means. I detest them, and will pray and war against them, and never let them have quiet rest in my soul. Beloved, whosoever of you will thus accept the Lord for his God, he shall have him.

Again, he tells you; I am the All-sufficient God, Gen. 17. 1. Will you lay all at my feet, and give it up to my dispose, and take me for your only portion? Will you own and honor mine All-sufficiency? Will you take me as your happiness and Treasure, your hope and bliss? I am a Sun and Shield, all in one: will you have me for your all? Gen. 1. 15. Psal. 84. 11. Now what dost thou say to this? Doth thy mouth water after the onions and flesh-pots of Egypt? art thou loath to exchange thy earthly happiness, for a part in God: and though thou wouldest be glad to have God and the world too, yet thou canst not think of having him, and nothing but him, but hadst rather take up with the earth below, if God would but let thee keep it, as long as thou wouldest? This is a fearful sign. But now if thou art willing to sell all for the Pearl of great price; Mat. 12. 46. If thine heart answer, Lord I desire no other portion but thee. Take the Corn, and the Wine, and the Oil whoso will, so I may have the light of thy countenance. I pitch upon thee for my happiness. I gladly venture myself on thee, and trust myself with thee. I set my hopes in thee, I take up my rest with thee. Let me hear thee say, I am thy God, thy salvation, and I have enough, all I wish for. I will make no terms with thee, but for thyself. Let me but have thee sure, let me be able to make my claim, and see my title to thyself, and for other things, I leave them to thee. Give me more, or less, anything or nothing, I will be satisfied in my God. Take him thus and he is thine own.

Again, he tells you; I am the Sovereign Lord. If you will have me for your God, you must give me the supremacy, Mat. 6. 24. I will not be an underling. You must not make me a second to sin, or any worldly interest. If you will be my people, I must have the rule over you. You must not live at your own list. Will you come under my yoke? Will you bow to my Government? Will you submit to my discipline? to my word, to my rod? Sinner, what sayest thou to this? Lord I had rather be at thy command, than live at mine own list. I had rather have thy will to be done, than mine. I approve of and consent to thy laws, and account it my privilege to lie under them. And though the flesh rebel, and often break over bounds, I am resolved to take no other Lord but thee. I willingly take the Oath of thy supremacy and acknowledge thee for my liege Sovereign, and resolve all my days to pay the tribute of worship, obedience, and love, and service to thee, and to live to thee as the end of my life. This is a right accepting of God.

To be short, he tells you; I am the true and faithful God. If you will have me for your God, you must be content to trust me, 2 Tim. 1. 12. Prov. 3. 5. Will you venture yourselves upon my word, & depend on my faithfulness, and take my bond for your security? Will you be content to follow me, in poverty, & reproach, and affliction here, and to see much going out, and little coming in, and to tarry till the next world for your preferment? Mat. 9. 21. I deal much upon trust, will you be content to labor, and suffer, and to tarry for your returns till the Resurrection of the just? Luke 14. 14. The womb of my Promise will not presently bring forth; will you have the patience to wait? Heb. 10. 36. Now beloved, what say you to this? Will you have this God for your God? Will you be content to live by faith, and trust him for an unseen happiness, an unseen Heaven, an unseen Glory? Do your hearts answer, Lord, we will venture our souls upon thee, we commit ourselves to thee: we roll upon thee, we know whom we have trusted: we are willing to take thy word: we will prefer thy promises, before our own possessions; and the hopes of Heaven, before all the enjoyments of the Earth. We will wait thy leisure. What thou wilt here, so that we may have but thy faithful promise for Heaven hereafter? If you can in truth, and upon deliberation, thus accept of God, he will be yours. Thus there must be, in a right Conversion to God, a closing with him suitable to his excellencies. But when men close with his mercy, but not with his sinhating holiness and purity; or will take him for their benefactor, but not for their Sovereign; or for their Patron, but not for their Portion, this is no thorough, and so no sound Conversion.

Dir. VII. Accept of the Lord Jesus, in all his Offices, with all his inconveniences, as thine. Upon these terms Christ may be had. Sinner, thou hast und one thyself, and art plunged into the ditch of most deplorable misery, out of which thou art never able to climb up. But Jesus Christ is able and ready to help thee, and he freely tenders himself to thee, Heb. 7. 25. John. 7. 37. Be thy sins never so many, never so great, of never so long continuance, yet thou shalt be most certainly pardoned and saved, if thou dost not wretchedly neglect the offer, that in the name of God is here made unto thee. The Lord Jesus calleth to thee, to look unto him and be saved, Isaiah 45. 22. to come unto him, and he will in no wise cast thee out, John 6. 37. Yea he is a suitor to thee, and beseecheth thee to be reconciled, 2 Cor. 5. 20. he crieth in the streets, he knocketh at thy door, he wooeth thee to except of him, and live with him: Prov. 1. 20. Rev. 3. 20. if thou diest, 'tis because thou wouldst not come to him for life, John 5. 40. Now accept of an offered Christ, and thou art made forever. Now give up thy consent to him, and the match is made, all the world cannot hinder. Do not stand off because of thine unworthiness. Man, I tell thee, nothing in all the world can undo thee, but thine unwillingness. Speak man, art thou willing of the match? Wilt thou have Christ in all his relations to be thine; thy King, thy Priest, thy Prophet? Wilt thou have him with all his inconveniences? Take not Christ hand over head, but sit down first, and count the cost. Wilt thou lay all at his feet? Wilt thou be content to run all hazards with him? Wilt thou take thy lot with him, fall where it will? Wilt thou deny thyself, take up thy Cross, and follow him? Art thou deliberately, understandingly, freely, fixedly, determined to cleave to him in all times, and conditions? If so, my soul for thine, thou shalt never perish, John 3. 16. but art passed from death to life. Here lies the main point of thy salvation, that thou be found in thy covenant-closure with Jesus Christ, and therefore if thou love thy life, see that thou be faithful to God and thy soul here.

Dir. VIII. Resign up all thy powers and faculties, and thy whole interest to be his. They gave their own selves unto the Lord, 2 Cor. 8. 5. Present your bodies as a living Sacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. The Lord seeks not yours, But you. Resign therefore thy body with all its members to him, and thy soul with all its powers, that he may be glorified in thy body and in thy spirit, which are his, 1 Cor. 6. 20. In a right closure with Christ, all the faculties give up to him. The Judgment subscribes, Lord thou art worthy of all acceptation, chief of ten thousand. Happy is the man that findeth thee. All the things that are to be desired, are not to be compared with thee, Prov. 3. 13, 14, 15. The understanding lays aside •s corrupt reasonings and cavils, and its prejudices against Christ and his ways. It is now past questioning and disputing, and casts it for Christ against all the World. It concludes, it's good to be here, and sees such a treasure in this field, such value in this pearl, as is worth all. Mat. 13. 44. Oh here's the richest bargain that ever I made: here's the richest prize that ever man was offered: here's the sovereignst remedy that ever mercy prepared: he is worthy of my esteem, worthy of my choice, worthy of my love, worthy to be embraced, adored, admired for evermore, Rev. 5. 12. I approve of his Articles: his terms are righteous and reasonable, full of equity and mercy. Again, the will resigns. It stands no longer wavering, nor wishing and wouling, but is pe•emptorily determined. Lord, thy love hath overcome me: thou hast won me, and thou shalt have me. Come in Lord, to thee I freely open, I consent to be saved in thine own way, thou shalt have anything, thou shalt have all, let me have but thee. The memory gives up to Christ: Lord, here is a storehouse for thee. Out with this trash; lay in thy treasure. Let me be a granary, a repository of thy truths, thy promises, thy Providences, The Conscience comes in; Lord I will ever side with thee. I will be thy faithful register. I will warn when the sinner is tempted, and smite when thou art offended. I will witness for thee, and judge for thee, and guide into thy ways, and will never let sin have quiet in this soul. The affections also come in to Christ. O faith Love, I am sick of thee. O saith Desire, now I have my longing. Here's the satisfation I sought for. Here's the desire of nations. Here's bread for me, and balm for me, all that I want. Fear bows the knee with awe and veneration. Welcome Lord, to thee will I pay my homage. Thy word and thy rod shall command my motions. Thee will I reverence and adore, before thee will I fall down and worship. Grief likewise puts in, Lord thy displeasure and thy dishonor, people's calamities, and mine own iniquities shall be that, that shall set me abroad. I will mourn when thou art offended, I will weep when thy cause is wounded. Anger likewise comes in for Christ: Lord nothing so enrages me, as my folly against thee, that I should be so befooled and bewitched, as to hearken to the flatteries of sin, and temptations of Satan against thee. Hatred too will side with Christ. I protest mortal enmity with thine enemies, that I will never be friends with thy foes. I vow an immortal quarrel with every sin. I will give no quarter, I will make no peace. Thus let all thy powers give up to Jesus Christ.

Again, thou must give up thy whole interest to him. If there be anything, that thou keepest back from Christ, it will be thine undoing. Luke 14. 33. Unless thou wilt forsake all (in preparation and resolution of thy heart) thou canst not be his Disciple. Thou must hate Father and Mother, yea and thine own life also in comparison of him, and as far as it stands in competition with him, Mat. 10. 37. Luke 14. 26, 27, &c. In a word, thou must give him thyself, and all that thou hast, without reservation, or else thou canst have no part in him.

Dir. IX. Make choice of the Laws of Christ as the rule of thy words, thoughts and actions, Psal. 119. 30. This is the true Converts choice. But here remember these three rules. 1. Thou must choose them all. There is no coming to Heaven by a partial obedience. Read Psal. 119. 6, 128, 160. Ezek, 18. 21. None may think it enough to take up with the cheap and easy part of Religion, and let alone the duties that are costly, and self-denying, and grate upon the interest of the flesh. You must take all, or none. A sincere Convert, though he makes most conscience of the greatest sins and weightiest duties; yet he makes true conscience of little sins, and of all duties, Psal. 119. 6. 113. Mat. 23. 23. 2. For all times, for prosperity, and for adversity; whether it rain, or shine. A true Convert is resolved in his way: he will stand to his choice, and will not set his back to wind, and be of the religion of the times. I have stuck to thy testimonies, I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes always, even to the end. Thy testimonies have I taken, as an heritage forever, Psal. 119. 31, 111, 117, 44, 93. I will have respect unto thy statutes continually. 3. This must be done, not hand over head, but deliberately and understandingly. That disobedient son said, I go sir, but he went not Mat. 24. 30. How fairly did they promise: All that the Lord our God shall speak unto thee, we will do it; and it's like they speak as they meant, but when it came to trial, it was found that there was not such a heart in them, as to do what they had promised, Deut. 5. 27, 29. If you would be sincere in closing with the laws and ways of Christ, First, Study the meaning, and the latitude and compass of them. Remember, that they are very spiritual: they reach the very thoughts and inclinations of the heart; so that if you will walk by this rule, your very thoughts, and inward motions must be under government. Again, that they are very strict and self-denying, quite contrary to the grain of your natural inclinations, Mat. 16. 24. You must take the strait gate, the narrow way, and be content to have the flesh curbed from the liberty that it desires, Mat. 7. 14. In a word, that they are very large: for the Commandment is exceeding broad, Psal. 119. 66. Secondly, rest not in generals, (for there's much deceit in that) but bring down thy heart to the particular commands of Christ. Those Jews in the Prophet seemed as well resolved as any in the world, and call God to witness, that they meant, as they said. But they stuck in generals. When God's command crosses their inclination, they will not obey, Ier. 42. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. compared with ch. 43. v. 2. Take the Assemblies larger Catechism, and see their excellent and most compendious exposition of the commandments, and put thy heart to it. Art thou resolved, in the strength of Christ, to set upon the conscientious practice of every duty that thou findest to be there required of thee, and to set against every sin that thou findest there forbidden? This is the way to be sound in God's statutes, that thou mayest never be ashamed, Psal. 119. 80. Thirdly, Observe the special duties that thy heart is most against, and the special sins that 'tis most inclined unto and see whether it be truly resolved to perform the one. and forego the other. What sayest thou to thy bosom sin, thy gainful sin? What sayest thou to costly and hazardous and flesh displeasing duties? If thou haltest here, and dost not resolve by the grace of God to cross thy flesh, and put to it, thou art unsound, Psal. 18. 23. Psal. 119. 6.

Dir. X. Let all this be completed in a solemn Covenant between God and thy soul. Psal. 119. 106. Neh. 10. 29. For thy better help therein, take these few directions.

First, set apart some time, more than once to be spent in secret before the Lord.

- 1. In seeking earnestly his special assistance, and gracious acceptance of thee.
- 2. In considering distinctly all the terms or conditions of the Covenant, expressed in the form hereafter proposed.
- 3. In searching thine heart, whether thou art sincerely willing to forsake all thy sins, and to resign up thyself, body and soul unto God, and his service, to serve him in holiness and righteousness all the days of thy life

Secondly, Compose thy Spirit into the most serious frame possible, suitable to transaction of so high importance.

Thirdly, Lay hold on the Covenant of God, and rely upon his promise of giving grace and strength, whereby thou mayest be enabled to perform thy promise. Trust not to thine own strength to, the strength of thine own resolutions, but take hold on his strength.

Fourthly, Resolve to be faithful, having engaged thine heart, opened thy mouth, and subscribed with thy hand unto the Lord, resolve in his strength never to go back.

Lastly, Being thus prepared, on some convenient time set apart for the purpose, set upon the work, and in the most solemn manner possible, as if the Lord were visibly present before thine eyes, fall down on thy knees, and spreading forth thine hands toward Heaven, open thine heart to the Lord in these, or the like words.

O Most dreadful God, for the Passion of thy Son, I beseech thee accept of thy poor Prodigal now prostrating himself at thy Door: I have fallen from thee by mine iniquity, and am by Nature a Son of Death, and a thousandfold more the Child of Hell by my wicked practice: But of thine infinite Grace thou hast promised Mercy to me in Christ, if I will but turn to Thee with all my Heart: Therefore upon the Call of thy Gospel, I am now come in, and throwing down my weapons, submit myself to thy Mercy.

And because thou requirest, as the Condition of my Peace with Thee, that I should put away mine Idols and be at defiance with all thine Enemies, which I acknowledge I have wickedly sided with against Thee, I here from the bottom of my heart renounce them all, firmly Covenanting with thee, not to allow myself in any known sin, but conscientiously to use all the means that I know thou hast prescribed, for the death and utter destruction of all my corruptions. And whereas I have formerly inordinately and idolatrously let out my affections upon the World, I do here resign up my heart to Thee that madst it, humbly protesting before thy Glorious Majesty, that is the firm resolution of my heart, and that I do unfeignedly desire Grace from Thee, that when thou shalt call me hereunto, I may practice this my resolution through thy assistance, to forsake all that is dear unto me in this world, rather than to turn from thee to the ways of sin; and that I will watch against all its temptations, whether of Prosperity, or Adversity, lest they should withdraw my heart from thee: beseeching thee also to help me against the temptations of Satan, to whose wicked Suggestions I resolve by thy grace never to yield myself a Servant. And because my own righteousness is but menstruous rags, I renounce all confidence therein, and acknowledge that I am of myself a hopeless, helpless, undone creature, without righteousness or strength.

And forasmuch as thou hast of thy bottomless Mercy offered most graciously to me wretched sinner, to be again my God through Christ, if I would accept of thee: I call Heaven and Earth to record this day, that I do here solemnly avouch thee for the Lord my God and with all possible veneration, bowing the neck of thy Soul under the feet of thy most Sacred Majesty, I do here take thy the Lord Jehovah, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for my portion, and chief good, and do give up myself, Body and Soul for thy Servant, promising and vowing to serve thee in Holiness and Righteousness all the days of my life.

And since thou hast appointed the Lord Jesus Christ, the only means of coming unto thee, I do here upon the bended knees of my Soul accept of him as the only new and living way, by which sinners may have access to thee, and do here solemnly join myself in a Marriage Covenant to him.

O blessed Jesus, I come to thee hungry and hardly bestead, poor and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked; a most loathsome polluted wretch, a guilty condemned Malefactor unworthy forever to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord, much more to be solemnly married to the King of Glory: but $\langle \diamond \rangle$ such is thine unparallell'd love, I do here with all my power accept thee, and do take thee for my Head and Husband, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, for all times and conditions, to love, and honor, and obey thee before all others, and this to the death. I embrace thee in all thine Offices: I renounce mine own worthiness, and do here avow thee to be the Lord my Righteousness: I renounce mine own wisdom, and do here take thee for mine only Guide: I renounce mine own Will; and take thy Will for my Law.

And since thou hast told me that I must suffer if I will reign, I do here Covenant with thee to take my Lot, as it falls, with thee, and by thy Grace assisting to run all hazards with thee, verily supposing that neither life nor death shall part between thee and me.

And because thou hast been pleased to give me thy Holy Laws, as the rule of my Life, and the way in which I should walk to thy Kingdom, I do here willingly put my Neck under thy Yoak, and set my shoulder to thy burden; and subscribing to all thy Laws, as holy, just, and good, I solemnly take them as the rule of my words, thoughts and actions; promising that though my flesh contradict and rebel, yet I will endeavor to order and govern my whole life according to thy direction; and will not allow myself in the neglect of anything that I know to be my duty.

Only because through the frailty of my flesh, I am subject to many failings; I am bold humbly to protest, That unallowed miscarriages, contrary to the settled bent and resolution of my heart, shall not make void this Covenant, for so thou hast said.

Now Almighty God, searcher of hearts, thou knowest that I make this Covenant with thee this day, without any known guile, or reservation, beseeching thee, that if thou espiest any flaw or falsehood therein, thou wouldst discover it to me, and help me to do it aright.

And now Glory be to thee, O God the Father, whom I shall be bold from this day forward, to look upon as my God and Father; that ever thou shouldst find out such a way for the recovery of undone sinners. Glory be to thee, O God the Son, who hast loved me and washed me from my sins in thine own Blood, and art now become my Savior and Redeemer: Glory be to thee O God the Holy Ghost, who by the finger of thine Almighty Power hast turned about my Heart from Sin to God.

O dreadful Jehovah, the Lord God Omnipotent, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, thou art now become my Covenant-friend, and I through thine infinite Grace, am become thy Covenant-servant, Amen, So be it. And the Covenant which I have made on Earth, let it be ratified in Heaven.

The Authors advice.

THIS Covenant I advise you to make, not only in Heart, but in Word; not only in Word, but in Writing; and that you would with all possible reverence spread the Writing before the Lord, as if you would present it to him as your Act and Deed. And when you have done this, set your hand to it. Keep it as a Memorial of the Solemn Transactions that have passed between God and you, that you may have recourse to it in Doubts and Temptations.

Dir. XI. Take heed of delaying thy Conversion, and set upon a speedy and present turning. I made haste, and delayed not, Psal. 119. 59. Remember, and tremble at the sad instance of the foolish Virgins, that came not till the door of mercy was shut; Mat. 25. and of a convinced Felix; that put of Paul, to another season, and we never find that he had such a season more, Acts 24. 25. O come in while it's called today, lest thou shouldst be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; lest thy day of Grace should be over, and the things that belong to thy peace should be hid from thine eyes. Now mercy is wooing of thee: Now Christ is waiting to be gracious to thee, and the Spirit of God is striving with thee. Now Ministers are calling: now Conscience is stirring; now the Market is open, and Oil may be had, thou hast opportunity for the buying. Now Christ is to be had for the taking. Oh! strike in with the offers of Grace. Oh! now, or never. If thou make light of this offer, God may swear in his wrath, thou shalt never taste of his Supper, Luk. 14. 24.

Dir. XII. Attend conscientiously upon the word as the means appointed for thy Conversion, James 1. 18, 19. 1 Cor. 4. 15. Attend, I say, not customarily, but conscientiously; with this desire design, hope and expectation, that thou mayest be converted by it. Every Sermon thou hearest, come with this thought: Oh, I hope God will now come in. I hope this day may be the time, this may be the man by whom God will bring me home. When thou art coming to the Ordinances, lift up thine heart thus to God: Lord let this be the Sabbath, let this be the season wherein I may receive renewing Grace. Oh let it be said, that today such a one was born unto thee.

Object. Thou wilt say, I have been long a hearer of the word, and yet it hath not been effectual to my conversion. Ans. Yea, but thou hast not attended upon it in this manner, as a means of thy Conversion, nor with this design, nor praying for, and expecting of this happy effect of it

Dir. XIII. Strike in with the Spirit, when he begins to work upon thy heart. When he works convictions, O do not stifle them, but join in with him, and beg the Lord to carry on convictions to Conversion. Quench not the Spirit: do not out-strive him: do not resist him. Beware of putting out convictions by evil company, or worldly business. When thou findest any troubles for sin, and fears about thine eternal State, b•g of God, that they may never leave thee till, they have wrought off thy heart thoroughly from sin, and wrought it over to Jesus Christ. Say to him, Strike home Lord: leave not the work in the midst. If thou seest, that I am not yet wounded enough, that I am not troubled enough, wound me yet deeper, Lord. O go to the bottom of my corruptions: let out the life blood of my sins, Thus yield up thyself to the workings of the Spirit, and hoise thy sails to his gusts.

Dir. XIV. Set upon the constant and diligent use of serious and fervent prayer. He that neglects prayer, is a profane and unsanctified sinner, Job. 15. 4. He that is not constant in prayer, is but an hypocrite, Job 27. 10. (unless the omission be contrary to his ordinary course, under the force of some instant temptation.) This is one of the first things Conversion appears in, that it sets men on praying, Acts 9. 11. Therefore set to this duty. Let never a day pass over thee, wherein thou hast not morning and evening set apart some time for set and solemn prayer in secret. Call thy family also together daily and duly, to worship God with thee. Woe be unto thee if thine be found amongst the families that call not on God's name, Ier. 10. 25. But cold and lifeless devotions will not reach half way to Heaven. Be servant, and importunate. Importunity will carry it. But without violence the Kingdom of Heaven will not be taken, Mat. 11. 12. Thou must strive to enter, Luke 13. 24. and wrestle with tears and supplications, as Jacob, if thou meanest to carry the blessing, Gen. 32. 24. comp. with Hos. 12. 4. Thou art undone forever without grace: and therefore thou must put to it, and resolve to take no denial. That man that is fixed in this resolution, Well I must have Grace, and I will never give over, till I have a grace, and I will never leave seeking, and waiting, and striving with God, and mine own heart, till he do renew me by the power of his Grace; this man is in the likeliest way to win Grace.

Obj. But God heareth not sinners: their prayer is an abomination.

Ans. Distinguish between sinners: 1. There are resolved sinners: their prayers God abhors. 2. returning sinners: these God will come forth to, and meet with mercy though yet afar off, Luke 15. 20. Though the prayers of the unsanctified cannot have full acceptance; yet God hath done much at the request of such, as at Ahab's humiliation, and Nineveh's fast, 1• Kings 21. 26. Jonah 3. •, 9, 10. Surely thou mayest go as far as these• though thou hast no Grace: and how dost thou know but thou mayest speed in thy suit, as they did in theirs? Yea, is he not far more likely to Grant thee, than them; since thou askest in the name of Christ, and that not for temporal blessings: as they; but for things much more pleasing to him, viz. for Christ, Grace, Pardon, that thou mayest be justified, sanctified, renewed, and fitted to serve him? Turn to those soul encouraging Scriptures, Prov. 2. 1. to 6. Luke. 11. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Prov. 8. 34, 35.

Is it not good comfort, that he calleth thee? Mark 10. 49. Doth he set thee on the use of means, and dost thou think he will mock thee? Doubtless, he will not fail thee, if thou be not wanting to thyself. O pray and faint not, Luke 18. 1. A person of great Quality, having offended the Duke of Buckingham, the King's great Favorite, being admitted into her presence after long waiting, prostrates himself at his feet, saying, I am resolved never to •is• more, till I have obtained your Grace's favor, with which carriage he did overcome him. With such a resolution do thou throw thyself at thee feet of God. 'Tis for thy life and therefore follow him, and give not over. Resolve thou wilt not be put off with bones, with common mercies. What though God do not presently open to thee? Is not grace worth the waiting for? Knock, and wait, and no doubt but sooner or later, mercy will come.

And this know, that thou hast the very same encouragement to seek and wait, that the Saints now in glory once had: for they were once in thy very case. And have they sped so well, and wilt thou not go to the same door, and wait upon God in the same course?

Dir. XV. Forsake thy evil company, Prov. 9. 6. and forbear the occasions of sin, Prov. 23. 31. Thou wilt never be turned from sin, till thou wilt decline and forgo the temptations to sin.

I never expect thy Conversion from sin, unless thou art brought to some self-denial, as to fly the occasions. If thou wilt be nibbling at the bait, and playing on the brink, and tampering and meddling with the share, thy soul will surely be taken. Where God doth expose men in his providence, unavoidably, to temptations, and the occasions are such as we cannot remove, we may expect special assistance in the use of his means. But when we tempt God by running into danger, he will not engage to support us, when we are tempted. And of all temptation, one of the most fatal and pernicious, is evil company. Oh what hopeful beginnings have these often stisled! Oh the souls, the estates, the families, the Towns, that these have ruined! How many a poor sinner hath been enlightened, and convinced, and hath been just ready to give the Devil the slip, and hath even escaped his snare, and yet wicked company have pulled him back at last, and made him sevenfold more the child of Hell. In one word, I have no hopes of thee, except thou wilt snake off thy evil company. Christ speaketh to thee, as to them, in another case. If thou seek me, then let these go their way, Job. 18. 8. Thy life lies upon it: Forsake these, or else thou canst not live, Prov. 9. 6. Wilt thou be worse than the beast, to run on, when thou seest the Lord with a drawn sword in thy way? Num. 22. 33. Let this sentence be written in Capitals upon thy conscience, A COMPANION OF FOOLS SHALL BE DESTROYED, Pro. 13. 20. The Lord hath spoken it, and who shall reverse it? And wilt thou run upon destruction, when God himself doth forwarn thee? If God do ever change thy heart, it will appear in the change of thy company. Oh fear, and fly this Gulf, by which so many thousand souls have been swallowed into perdition. It will be hard for thee indeed, to make thine escape. Thy Companions will be mocking thee out of thy Religion, and will study to fill thee with prejudices against strictness, as ridiculous and comfortless. They will be flattering thee, and alluring thee; but remember the warnings of the Holy Ghost, My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not. If they say, come with us: cast in thy lot among us: Walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away. For the way of the wicked is as darkness, they know not at what they stumble. They lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives, Prov. 1. 10. to the 18. Prov. 4. 14. to the 19. My soul is moved within me, to see how many of my hearers a•e like to perish, both they, and their houses, by this wretched mischief, even the haunting of such places, and company, whereby they are drawn into sin. Once more I admonish you, as Moses did Israel, Num. 16. 26. And he spake unto the Congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the Tents of these wicked men. Oh! fly them as you would those that had the Plague sores running in their foreheads. These are the Devils Panders, and decoys; and if thou dost not make thine escape, they will toll thee into perdition, and will prove thine eternal ruin.

Dir. XVI. Lastly, Set apart a day to humble thy soul in secret, by fasting and prayer, and to work the sense of thy sins and miseries upon thy heart. Read over the Assemblies Exposition of the Commandments, and write down the duties omitted, and sins committed by thee against every Commandment, and so make a Catalogue of thy sins, and with shame and sorrow spread them before the Lord. And if thy heart be truly willing to the terms, join thyself solemnly to the Lord in that Covenant set down in the 9. Direction, and the Lord grant thee mercy in his sight.

Thus I have told thee, what thou must do to be saved. Wilt thou not now obey the voice of the Lord? Wilt thou arise and set to thy work? Oh man, what answer wilt thou make, what excuse wilt thou have, if thou shouldst perish at last through very willfulness, when thou hast known the way of life? I do not fear thy miscarrying, if thine own idleness do not at last undo thee, in neglecting the use of the means, that are so plainly here prescribed. Rouze up oh sluggard and ply thy work. Be doing and the Lord will be with thee.

A short Soliloqui for an unregenerate sinner.

Ah wretched man that I am! what a condition have I brought myself into by sin! Oh! I see my heart hath but deceived me all this while, in flattering me, that my condition was good. I see, I see, I am but a lost, and undone man; forever undone, unless the Lord help me out of this condition. My sins! My sins! Lord, what an unclean, polluted wretch and I! more loathsome and odious to thee, than the most hateful Venome, or noisome carcass, can be to me. Oh! what a Hell of sin is in this heart of mine, which I have flattered myself to be a good heart? Lord, how universally am I corrupted, in all my parts, powers, performances? All the imaginations of the thoughts of my heart, are only evil, continually. I am under an inability to, averseness from, and enmity against anything that is good; and am prone to all that is evil. My heart is a very sink of all sin: and oh the innumerable hosts, and swarms of sinful thoughts, words, and actions, that have flown from thence! Oh the load of guilt that is on my soul! my head is 〈◇〉 and my heart full; my mind and my members, they are all full of sin. Oh my sins! How do they stare upon me! How do they witness against me! Woe is me, my Creditors are upon me: every commandment taketh hold upon me, for more than ten thousand Talents, yea ten thousand times ten thousand. How endless then is the sum of all my debts! If this whole world were filled up from earth to Heaven with paper, and all this paper written over within and without by Arithmeticians: yet when all were cast up together, it would come inconceivably short of what I owe to the least of God's Commandments. Woe unto me for my debts are infinite, and my sins are increased. They are wrongs to an infinite Majesty: and if he that committeth Treason against a silken mortal, is worthy to be tacked, drawn and quartered: what have I deserved, that have so often lifted up my hand against Heaven, and have struck at the Crown and dignity of the Almighty?

Oh my sins! my sins! Behold a troop cometh! Multitudes! multitudes! there is no number of their Armies. Innumerable evils have compassed me about; mine iniquities have taken hold upon me; they have set themselves in array against me. Oh! it were better to have all the Regiments of Hell come against me, than to have my sins to fall upon me, to the spoiling of my Soul. Lord, how am I surrounded! How many are they that rise up against me! They have beset me behind and before: they swarm within me and without me: they have possessed all my powers, and have fortified mine unhappy soul, as a Garrison, which this brood of Hell doth man, and maintain, against the God that made me.

And they are as mighty, as they be many. The sands are many, but then they are not great: the mountains great, but then they are not many. But woe is me, my sins are as many as the sands, sand as mighty as the Mountains. Their weight is greater than their number. It were better that the Rocks and the Mountains should fall upon them, than the crushing and unsupportable load of my own sins. Lord, I am heavy laden: let mercy help, or I am gone. Unload me of this heavy guilt, this sinking load, or I am crushed without hope, and must be pressed down to Hell. If my grief were thoroughly weighed, and my sins laid in the balances together, they would be heavier than the sand of the Sea, therefore my words are swallowed up: they would weigh down all the rocks and the hills, and turn the balance against all the Isles of the Earth. O Lord, thou knowest my manifold transgressions, and my mighty sins.

Ah my soul! Alas my Glory! Whither art thou humbled! Once the Glory of the Creation, and the Image of God: now, a lump of filthiness, a Coffin of rottenness, replenished with stench and loathsomeness. Oh what wor• hath sin made with thee! Thou shalt be term• Forsaken, and all the rooms of thy faculties •solate, and the name that thou shalt be called 〈◇〉 is Icabod, or where is the Glory? How 〈◇〉 thou come down mightily! My beauty is turned into deformity, and my Glory into shame Lord, what a loathsome Leper am I! The ulcerous bodies of Job or Lazarus were not more offensive to the eyes and nostrils of men, than I must needs be to the most holy •od, whose eyes cannot behold Iniquity.

And what misery hath my sins brought upon me! Lord, what a case am I in! Sold under sin, cast out of God's favor, accursed from the Lord, cursed in my body, cursed in my soul, cursed in my name, in my estate, my relations, and all that I have. My sins are unpardoned, and my soul within a step of death. Alas! what shall I do? Whither shall I go? Which way shall I look? God is frowning on me from above? Hell gaping for me beneath; Conscience imiting me within, temptations and dangers surrounding me without. Oh, whither shall I fly? What place can hide me from Omniscency? What power can secure me from Omnipotency?

What meanest thou O my soul to go on thus? Art thou in league with Hell? Hast thou made a Covenant with death? Art thou in love with thy misery? Is it good for thee to be here? Alas what shall I do! Sh•ll I go on in my sinful ways? Why then certain damnation will be mine end: and shall I be so besotted and bemaddened, as to go and sell my soul to the flames, for a little Ale, and a littl• ease; for a little pleasure, or gain, or content to my flesh? shall I linger any longer in this wretched estate? No: If I tarry here, I shall die. What then, is there no help? no hope? None, except I turn. Why, but is there any remedy for such woeful misery? any mercy, after such provoking iniquity? Yes, as sure as God's Oath is true, I shall have pardon, and mercy, yet, if I presently, unfeignedly, and unreservedly turn by Christ to him.

Why then •hank thee upon the bended knees of my soul, O most merciful Jehovah, that thy patience hath waited for me hitherto: for hadst thou took me away in this estate, I had perished forever. And now I adore thy Grace, and accept the offers of thy mercy. I renounce all my sins and resolve by thy grace to set myself against them, and to follow thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of my life,

Who am I, Lord, that I should make any claim unto thee, or have any part or portion in thee, who am not worthy to lick up the dust of thy feet? Yet since thou holdest forth the golden Scepter, I am bold to come, and touch. To despair, would be to disparage thy mercy; and to stand off when thou biddest me come, would be at once to undo myself, and rebel against thee, under pretence of humility. Therefore I bow my soul unto thee, and with all possible thankfulness accept thee, as mine, and give up myself to thee, as thine. Thou shalt be Sovereign over me, my King, and my God. Thou shalt be in the Throne, and all my powers shall bow to thee, they shall come, and worship before thy feet. Thou shalt be my portion, O Lord, and I will rest in thee.

Thou callest for my heart. Oh that it were any way fit for thine acceptance! I am unworthy, O Lord, everlastingly unworthy to be thine. But since thou wilt have it so, I freely give up my heart to thee. Take it, it is thine. Oh that it were better! But Lord, I put it into thine hand, who alone canst mend it. Mould it after thine own heart; make it as thou wouldst have it, holy, humble, heavenly, soft, tender, flexible, and write thy Law upon it.

Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly: enter in triumphantly: take me up for thyself forever. I give up to thee, I come to thee, as the only way to the Father, as the only Mediator, the means ordained to bring me to God. I have destroyed myself, but in thee is my help. Save, Lord, or else I perish. I come to thee, with the rope about my neck. I am worthy to die, and to be damned. Never was the hire more due to the servant, never was penny more due to the laborer, than Death and Hell, my just wages, is due to me for my sins. But I fly to the merits; I trust alone to the value and virtue of thy Sacrifice; and prevalency of thine intercession. I submit to thy teaching, I make choice of thy Government. Stand open ye everlasting doors, that the King of Glory may come in.

O thou spirit of the most high, the comforter and sanctifier of thy chosen; come in with all thy glorious train, all thy Courtly attendants, thy fruits, and graces. Let me be thine habitation. I can give thee, but what is thine own already: but here with the poor Widow, I cast my two mites, my soul, and my body, in to thy treasury; fully resigning them up to thee, to be sanctified by thee, to be servants to thee, They shall be thy patients; cure thou their maladies: they shall be thy agents; govern thou their motions. Too long have I served the world; too long have I hearkened to Satan: but now I renounce them all, and will be ruled by thy dictates, and directions, and guided by thy counsel.

O blessed Trinity, O glorious Unity, I deliver up myself to thee: receive me: write thy name, O Lord, upon me, and upon all that I have, as thy proper goods. Set thy mark upon me, upon every member of my body, and every faculty of my soul. I have chosen thy precepts. Thy Law will I lay before me: this shall be the copy, which I will keep in my eye, and study to write after. According to this rule do I resolve, by thy Grace, to walk: after this law shall my whole man be governed. And though I cannot perfectly keep one of thy Commandments, yet I will allow myself in the breach of none. I know my flesh will hang back: but I resolve, in the power of thy Grace, to cleave to thee, and thy holy ways, what ever it cost me. I am sure I cannot come off a loser by thee: and therefore I will be content with reproach, and difficulties and hardships here, and will deny myself, and take up my Cross, and follow thee. Lord Jesus thy Yoke is easy, thy Cross is welcome, as it is the way to thee. I lay aside all hopes of a worldly happiness. I will be content to tarry till I come to thee. Let me be poor and low, little and despised here, so I may but be admitted to live, and reign with thee hereafter. Lord, thou hast my heart and hand to this agreement. Be it as the laws of the Medes and Persians, never to be reversed. To this I will stand: in this resolution, by Grace, I will live and die. I have sworn, and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. I have given my free consent, I have made my everlasting choice. Lord, Jesus confirm the contract.

Amen.

CHAP. VII. Containing the Motives to Conversion.

THOUGH what is already said of the Necessity of Conversion, and of the Miseries of the unconverted, might be sufficient to induce any considering mind to resolve upon a present turning, or Conversion unto God: yet knowing what a piece of desperate obstinacy and untractableness the heart of man naturally is, I have thought it necessary, to add to the means of Conversion, and Directions for a Covenant-closure with God in Christ, some Motives to persuade you hereunto.

O Lord, fail me not now at my last attempts. If any soul hath read hitherto, and be yet untouched, now Lord fasten in him, and do thy work: Now take him by the heart, overcome him, persuade him, till he say, Thou hast prevailed, for thou wast stronger than I Lord, didst thou not make me a fisher of men? And have I toiled all this while and caught nothing? Alas, that I should have spent my strength for naught! And now I am casting my last: Lord Jesus stand thou upon the shore, and direct, how, and where I shall spread my net; and let me so enclose with arguments the souls I seek for, that they may not be able to get out. Now Lord for a multitude of souls! now for a full draught! O Lord God, remember me I pray thee, and strengthen me this once, O God.

But I turn me unto you.

Men and Brethren, Heaven and Earth do call upon you, yea Hell itself doth preach the Doctrine of repentance unto you. The Angels of the Churches travel with you, Gal. 4. 19. the Angels of Heaven wait for you, for your repenting and turning unto God. O sinner, why should the Devils make merry with thee? why shouldst thou be a morsel for that devouring Leviathan? Why should harpies and hell-hounds tear thee, and make a feast upon thee, and when they have got thee into the snare, and have fastened their talons in thee, laugh at thy destruction, and deride thy misery, and sport themselves with thy damnable folly? This must be thy case, except thou turn. And were it not better thou shouldst be a joy to Angels, than a laughing-stock and sport for devils? Verily if thou wouldst but come in, the Heavenly Host would take up their anthems, and sing, Glory be to God in the highest; the morning Stars would sing together, and all the sons of God shout for joy, and celebrate this new creation as they did the first. Thy repentance would as it were make holy-day in heaven, and the glorious spirits would rejoice, in that there is a new brother added to their society Rev. 22. 9. another heir born to their Lord, and the lost son received safe and sound. The true penitents tears are indeed the wine that cheereth both God and man.

If it be little, that men and Angels would rejoice at thy Conversion, know that God himself would rejoice over thee, even with singing, and rest in his love, Luke 15. 9. Isaiah. 62.

5. Never did old Jacob with such joy weep over the neck of his Joseph, as thy heavenly Father would rejoice over thee, upon thy coming in to him. Look over the story of the Prodigal. Methinks I see how the aged Fathers lays aside his state, and forgets his years: behold how he runneth! Luke 15. 20. Oh the hast that mercy makes! The sinner makes not half that speed. Methinks I see how his bowels turn, how his compassions yearn. (How quick sighted is love!) Mercy spies him a great way off, forgets his rigorous courses, unnatural rebellion, horrid unthankfulness, debauched practices, (not a word of those) but receives him with open arms, clasps about his neck, forgets the nastiness of his rags, kisses the lips that deserve to be loathed, the lips that had been joined to harlots, that had been commoners with the swine, calls for the fatted Calf, the best Robe, the ring, the shoes, the best cheer in Heavens store, the best attire in Heavens Wardrobe, &c. yea the joy cannot be held in one breast; Luke 15. 6, 9, 23. others must be called to participate, the friends must meet and make merry. Angels must wait, but the Prodigal must be set at the Table under his Fathers wing. He is the joy of the feast: he is the sweet subject of the Fathers delight. The friends sympathize, but none knows the felicity the father takes in his new born son; whom he hath received from the dead. Methinks I hear the music and the dancing, at a distance. Oh the melody of the Heavenly Choristers! I cannot learn the song, Rev. 14. 3. but methinks I over-hear the burden, at which all the harmonious quire with one consent strikes sweetly in, for thus goes the round at Heavens table, For this my son was dead, and is alive again; was lost and is found, Luke 15. 23, 24, 32. I need not farther explain the parable. God is the Father, Christ the cheer, his righteousness the robe, his graces the ornaments, Ministers, Saints, Angels the friends and servants, and thou that readest (if thou wilt but unfeignedly repent and turn) the welcome Prodigal, the happy instance of all this grace, and the blessed subject of this joy and love.

Oh Rock! Oh Adamant! What not moved yet! not yet resolved to turn forthwith and to close with mercy! I will try thee yet once again: If one were sent to thee from the dead, wouldst thou be persuaded? Why hear the voice from the dead, from the damned, crying to thee that thou shouldst repent. I pray thee that thou wouldst send him to my fathers house: for I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. If one went unto them from the dead, they will repent, Luke 16. 27, 28. &c. Hear O man, thy Predecessors in impenitence Preach to thee from the infernal gibbets, from the flames, from the rack, that thou shouldst repent. O look down into the bottomless pit. Seest thou how the smoke of their torment ascendeth forever and ever, Rev. 14. 11. How black are the fiends? How furious are their torments? 'Tis their only music to hear how their miserable patients roar, to hear their bones crack. 'Tis their meat and drink, to see how their flesh frieth and their fat droppeth, to drench them with burning metal, and to rip open their bodies, and to pour in the fierce burning brass into their bowels, and the recesses and ventricles of their hearts.

What thinkest thou of those chains of darkness, of those instruments of cruelty? Canst thou be content to burn? Seest thou how the worm gnaweth, how the oven gloweth? how the fire rageth? what sayest thou to that river of brimstone, that dark and horrible vault, that gulf of perdition? wilt thou take up thine habitation here? O lay thine ear to the door of Hell. Hearest thou the curses and the blasphemies, the weepings and the wailings, how they lament their folly, and curse their day? Mat. 22. 13. Rev. 16. 9. How do they roar and yell, and gnash their teeth? how deep are their groans? how feeling are their moans? how unconceivable their miseries? If the shrieks of Corah, Dathan and Abiram, were so terrible (when the earth clave asunder, and opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and all that appertained to them,) that all Israel led at the cry of them, Numb. 16. 33, 34. Oh how fearful would the cry be, if God should take off the covering from the month of hell, and let the cry of the damned ascend in all its terror among the children of men? And of all their moans and miseries, this is the piercing, killing emphasis and burden, forever, forever. Why, as God liveth, that made thy soul, thou art but a few hours distant from all this, except thou repent and be converted.

Oh! I am even lost and swallowed up in the abundance of those arguments that I might suggest. If there be any point of wisdom in all the world, it is to repent and come in: if there be anything righteous, anything reasonable, this is it. If there be anything in the world that may be called madness, and folly, anything that may be counted sottish, absurd, brutish, unreasonable, it is this, to go on in thine unconverted estate. Let me beg thee, as thou wouldst not willfully destroy thyself, to sit down and weigh, besides what hath been said, these following Motives, and let conscience speak, if it be not reason, that thou shouldst repent and turn.

1. The God that made thee doth most graciously invite thee.

First, his most sweet and merciful nature doth invite thee; Oh the kindness of God, his working bowels, his tender mercies! they are infinitely above our thoughts, higher than Heaven, what can we do? deeper than hell, what can we know? Job 11. 7, 8, 9. He is full of compassion, and gracious, long suffering, and plenteous in mercy, Psal. 86. 15. This is a great argument to persuade sinners to come in. Turn unto the Lord your God, for he is gracious, and merciful, slow to anger, of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. If God would not repent of the evil, it were some discouragement to us, why we should not repent. If there were no hope of mercy, it were no such wonder if the rebel did stand out: but never had subjects such a gracious Prince, such Piety, patience, clemency, pity to deal with, as you have. Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity &c. Mic. 7. 18. Oh sinners! see what a God you have to deal with; if you will but turn. He will turn again, and have compassion upon you, he will subdue your iniquities, and cast all your sins into the depths of the Sea, v. 19. Return unto me, saith the Lord of Hosts, and I will return unto you, Mal. 3. 7. Zech. 1. 3. Sinners do not fail in that they have too high thoughts of God's mercies, but in that 1. They overlook his justice. 2. They promise themselves mercy out of God's way. His mercy is beyond all imagination, Isaiah. 55. 9. great mercies, 1 Chron. 21. 13. manifold mercies, Neh. 9. 19. tender mercies, Psal. 25. 6. sure mercies, Isaiah. 55. 3. everlasting mercies, Psal. 103. 17. Isaiah. 54. 8. and all thine own, if thou wilt but turn. Art thou willing to come in? Why the Lord hath laid aside his terror, erected a Throne of Grace, holds forth the golden Scepter: Touch and live. Would a merciful man slay his enemy, when prostrate at his feet, acknowledging his wrong, begging pardon, and offering to enter with him into a Covenant of peace? Much less will the merciful God. Study his name, Exod. 34. 7. Read their experience, Neh. 9. 17.

Secondly, his soul-encouraging calls and promises do invite thee. Ah what an earnest suitor is mercy to thee! how lovingly, how instantly it calleth after thee! how passionately it wooeth thee! Return thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever. Only acknowledge thine iniquity. Turn O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you: return and I will heal your backslidings. Thou hast plaid the harlot with many lovers, yet return unto me saith the Lord, Jer. 3. 11, 12, 13, 14, 22. As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? Ezek. 33. 11. If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him; in his righteousness that he hath done shall he live. Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions, so iniquity shall not be your ruin. Cast away from you all your transgressions, and make you a clean heart, and a new spirit, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye, Ezek. 18. 21, 23, 30, 31, 32.

Oh melting gracious words! The voice of a God and not of a man! This is not the manner of men, for the offended Sovereign, to sue to the offending traitorous varlet. Oh how doth mercy follow thee, and plead with thee! Is not thy heart broken yet? Oh that today ye would hear his voice!

2. The doors of heaven are thrown open to thee. The everlasting gates are set wide for thee, and an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven administered to thee. Christ now bespeaks thee, (as she her husband) Arise and take possession, 1 Kings 21. 15. View the glory of the other world as set forth in the map of the Gospel. Get thee up into the Pisgah of the Promises, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, and that goodly mountain. Behold the Paradise of God, watered with the streams of glory. Arise and walk through the land, in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for all the land which thou seest; the Lord will give it to thee forever, if thou wilt but return, Gen. 13. 14, 15, 17. Let me say to thee as Paul to Agrippa, Believest thou the Prophets? If thou believest indeed, do but view what glorious things are spoken of the City of God; Psal. 87. 3. and know, that all this is here tendered in the name of God to thee. As verily as God is true it shall be forever thine, if thou wilt but thoroughly turn.

Behold the City of pure transparent Gold, whose foundations are garnished with all manner of precious stones, whose gates are pearls, whose light is glory, whose temple is God. Believest thou this? If thou dost, art thou not worse than distracted, that wilt not take possession, when the gates are flung open to thee, and thou art bid to enter? O ye sons of folly, will ye embrace the dunghills, and refuse the Kingdom? Behold, the Lord God taketh you up into the mountain, shows you the Kingdom of Heaven, and all the glory thereof, and tells you, All this will I give you, if you will fall down and worship me. If you will submit to mercy, accept my Son, and serve me in righteousness and holiness. O fools, and slow of heart believe, will you court the harlot, will you seek and serve the world, and neglect the eternal glory? What not enter into Paradise, when the flaming sword, that was once set to keep you out, is now used to drive you in? But you will say, I am uncharitable, to think you infidels and unbelievers. Why, what shall I think you? either you are desperate unbelievers, that do not credit it, or stark distracted, that you know and believe the excellency and eternity of his glory, and yet do so fearfully neglect it. Surely you have no faith, or no reason; and I had almost said, conscience should tell you so, before I leave you.

Do but attend what is offered you, Oh blessed Kingdom! A Kingdom of glory. 1 Thes. 2. 12. a Kingdom of righteousness, 2 Pet. 3. 13. a Kingdom of peace, Rom. 14. 17. an everlasting Kingdom. 2 Pet. 1. 11. Here thou shalt dwell, here thou shalt reign forever: and the Lord shall set thee in a throne of glory, Mat. 19. 28. and with his own hand shall set the Royal Diadem upon thine head, and give thee a Crown, not of thorns (for there shall be no sinning, nor suffering there. Rev. 21. 27. 22. 3, 4, 5.) not of Gold, (for this shall be viler than the dirt in that day) but a Crown of life, James 1. 12. a Crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. 4. 8. a Crown of glory. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Yea thou shalt put on glory as a robe, 1 Cor. 15. 53. and shalt shine like the Sun in the firmament in the glory of thy Father, Mat. 13. 43. Look now upon thy dirty flesh, thy clay, thy worms-meat: this very flesh, this lump, this carcass shall be brighter than the Stars, Dan. 12. 3. In short, thou shalt be made like unto the Angels of God, Luke 20. 36. and behold his face in righteousness, Psal. 17. 15. Look in now and tell me: dost thou yet believe? If not, conscience must pronounce thee an infidel, for it is the very word of God that I speak.

But if thou say, thou believest, let me next know thy resolutions. Wilt thou embrace this for thy happiness? Wilt thou forgo thy sinful gains, thy forbidden pleasures? Wilt thou trample on the worlds esteem, and spit in the harlots face, and stop thine ears at her flatteries, and wrest thee out of her embraces? Wilt thou be content to take up with present reproach and poverty, if it lie in thy way to Heaven, and to follow the Lord with humble self-denial, in a mortified and flesh-displeasing life? if so, all is thine, and that forever. And art not thou fairly offered? Is it not pity but he should be damned, that will needs go on and perish, when all this may be had for the taking? In a word, wilt thou now close with these proffers? Wilt thou take God at his word? Wilt thou let go thy hold-fast of the world, and rid thy hands of thy sins, and lay hold on eternal life? If not, let conscience tell thee, whether thou art not distracted, or bewitched, that thou shouldst neglect so happy a choice, by which thou mightest be made forever.

3. God will settle unspeakable privileges at present upon thee. 1 Cor. 3. 22. Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. Though the full of your blessedness shall be deferred, till hereafter, yet God will give you no little thing in hand.

He will redeem you from your thralldom. John 8. 36. He will pluck you from the paw of the Lyon, Col. 1. 13. the serpent shall bruise your heel, but you shall bruise his head. Gen. 3. 15. He shall deliver you from the present evil world. Gal. 1. 4. Prosperity shall not destroy you, adversity shall not separate between him and you. Rom. 8. 35, 37, 38. He will redeem you from the power of the grave, Psal. 49. 15. and make the King of terrors a messenger of peace to you. He will take out the curse from the Cross, Psal. 119. 71. and make affliction the fining-pot, the fan, the physic, to blow off the choff, purify the metal, and purge the mind, Dan. 12. 10. Isaiah. 27. 9. He will save you from the arrests of the Law, and turn the curse into a blessing to you, Rom. 6. 14. Gal. 3. 14. He hath the keys of hell and death, and shutteth that no man openeth, Rev. 3. 7. & 1. 18. and he will shut its mouth, as once he did the Lions, Dan. 6. 22. that you shall not be hurt of the second death, Rev. 2. 11.

But he will not only save you from misery, but install you into unspeakable Prerogatives. He will bestow himself upon you, he will be a friend unto you, and a father to you: 2 Cor. 6. 18. he will be a Sun, and a shield to you: Psal. 84. 11. in a word, he will be a God to you, Gen. 17. 7. and what can be said more? What you may expect that a God should do for you, and be to you, that he will be, that he will do. She that marries a Prince, expects he should do for her like a Prince, that she may live in suitable state, and have an answerable dowry. He that hath a King for his Father, or friend, expects that he should do for him like a King. Alas, the Kings and Monarchs of the earth, so much above you, are but like the painted butterflies amongst the rest of their kind, or the fair coloured Palmer-worm amongst the rest of worms, if compared with God. As he doth infinitely exceed, the glory and power of his glittering dust, so he will beyond all proportion exceed, in doing for his favorites, what ever Princes can do for their*. He will give you grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from you, Psal. 84. 11. He will take you for his sons and daughters, and make you heirs of his promises, Heb. 6. 17. and establish his everlasting Covenant with you, Ier. 32. 40. He will justify you from all that Law, Conscience, Satan, can charge upon you, Rom. 8. 33, 34. he will give you free access into his presence, and accept your persons, and receive your prayers, Eph. 3. 12. Eph. 1. 6. 1. John. 5. 14. He will abide in you, and make you the men of his secrets, and hold a constant and friendly communion with you, John. 14. 23. John. 15. 15. 1 John. 1. 3. His ear shall be open, his door open, his store open at all times to you. His blessing shall rest upon you, and he will make your enemies to serve you, and work about all things for good unto you. Psal. 115. 13. Rom. 8. 28.

4. The terms of mercy are brought as low, as possible, to you. God hath stooped as low to sinners, as with honor he can. He will not be thought a fautor of sin, nor stain the glory of his holiness: and whither could he come lower than he hath, unless he should do this? He hath abated the impossible terms of the first Covenant. Ier. 3. 13. Mark 5. 36. Acts 16. 31. Acts 3. 19. Prov. 28. 13. He doth not impose anything unreasonable, or impossible, as a condition of life upon you. Two things were necessary to be done, according to the tenor of the first Covenant by you. 1. That you should fully satisfy the demands of Justice for past offenses. 2. That you should perform personally, perfectly, and perpetually the whole Law for the time to come. Both these are to us impossible, Rom. 8. 3. But behold God's gracious abatement in both. He doth not stand upon satisfaction: he is content to take of the surety (and he of his own providing too) what he might have exacted from you. 2 Cor. 5. 19. he declares himself to have received a ransom, Io. 33. 24. 1 Tim. 2. 6. and that he expects nothing, but that you should accept his Son, and he shall be righteousness and redemption to you. John. 1. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 30. And for the future obedience, here he is content to yield to your weakness, and to remit the rigor. He doth not stand upon perfection (as a condition of life, though he still insists upon it as due,) but is content to accept of sincerity. Gen. 17. 1. Prov. 11. 20. Though you cannot pay the full debt he will accept you according to that which you have, and will take willing for doing, and the purpose for the performance: 2 Cor. 8. 12. 2 Chron. 6. 8. Heb. 11. 17. and if you come in his Christ, and set your hearts to please him, and make it the chief of your cares, he will approve and reward you, though the vessel be marred in your hands.

Oh consider your makers condescension. Let me say to you, as Naaman's servant to him; My father, if the Prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather, when he saith unto thee, wash and be clean? 2 Kings 5. 13. If God had demanded some terrible, some severe and rigorous thing of you, to escape eternal damnation, would you not have done it? suppose it had been to spend all your days in sorrow in some howling Wilderness, or pine yourselves with famine, or to offer the fruit of your bodies for the sin of your souls, would you not have thankfully accepted eternal redemption, though these had been the conditions? Yea further, if God should have told you, you should have fryed in the fire for millions of ages, or been tormented so long in Hell, would you not have gladly accepted it? Alas, all these are not so much as one sand in the glass of eternity. If your offended Creator should have held you but one year upon the rack, and then come and bid you take your choice, whether you would renounce your sins, accept his Christ, and serve him a few years in self-denial, or lie in this case forever and ever: do you think you should have stuck at the offer, and disputed the terms, and have been unresolved, whether you were best to accept of the motion? O sinner return and live; why shouldst thou die, when life is to be had for the taking, and mercy should be beholding to thee (as it were) to be saved? Couldst thou say indeed, Lord I knew that thou wast an hard man, Mat. 25. 24. thou hadst some little excuse; but when the God of heaven hath stooped so low, and bated so far, if now thou shouldst stand off, who shall plead for thee?

Obj. Notwithstanding all these abatements, I am no more able to perform those conditions, (in themselves so easy) of faith and repentance, and sincere obedience, than to satisfy and fulfil the Law.

Answ. These you may perform by God's grace enabling, whereas the other are naturally impossible, in this state, even to believers themselves. But let the next consideration serve for a fuller answer.

5. Wherein you are impotent, God doth offer grace to enable you. I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded, Prov. 1. 24. What though you are plunged into the ditch of that misery, from which you can never get out? Christ offereth to help you out; he stretcheth forth his hand to you, and if you perish, it is for refusing his help. Behold I stand at the door, and knock: if any man open to me, I will come in. Rev. 3. 20. What though you are poor, and wretch•d, and blind, and naked, Christ offereth a cure for your blindness, a cover for your nakedness, a remedy for your poverty, he tendereth you his righteousness, his graces. I counsel thee to buy of me gold that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see, Rev. 3. 17, 18. Do you say, the condition is impossible, for I have not wherewith to buy? You must know, that this buying is without money and without price. Isaiah. 55. 1. This buying is by begging, and seeking with diligence and constancy in the use of God's means. Prov. 2. 3, 4. God commandeth thee to know him, and to fear him. Dost thou say, yea but my mind is blinded and my heart is hardened from his fear? I answer, God doth offer to enlighten thy mind, and to teach thee his fear: that is presented to thy choice. Prov. 1. 29. For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord, So that now if men live in ignorance and estrangement from the Lord, it is because they will not understand, and desire not the knowledge of his ways. Job 21. 14. If thou criest after knowledge, if thou seekest her as Silver, &c. Then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. Prov. 2. 3, 4, 5. Is not here a fair offer? Turn you at my reproof: Behold I will pour out my spirit unto you. Prov. 1. 23. Though of yourselves you can do nothing, yet you may do all things through his spirit enabling you, and he doth offer his assistance to you. God bids you, wash you and make you clean: Isaiah. 1. 16. you say you are unable as much as the Leopard to wash out his spots: Ier. 13. 23. yea but the Lord doth offer to purge you, so that if you be filthy still, 'tis through your own willfulness. Eze, 24. 13. I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged. Jer. 13. 27. O Jerusalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be? God doth wait when you will be made clean, when you will yield to his motions and accept of his offers, and let him do for and in you, what you cannot do of yourselves. You do not know how much God will do, upon your importunity if you will but be restless and instant with him. Luke 11. 8. and 18. 5.

If God hath not bound himself by express promise to wicked men, to give them Grace in the diligent use of the means: yet he hath given them abundant encouragement to expect it from him, if they seek it earnestly in his way. His most gracious nature is abundant encouragement. If a rich and most bountiful man should see thee in misery, and bid thee come to his door, wouldst thou not with confidence expect, at thy coming to find some relief? Thou art not able to believe, nor repent; God appoints thee to use such and such means, in order to thy obtaining faith and repentance: doth not this argue, that God will bestow these upon thee, if thou dost ply him diligently in prayer, meditation, reading, hearing, self-examination, and the rest of his means? Otherwise, God should but mock his poor creatures, to put them upon these self denying endeavors, and then when they have put hard to it, and continued waiting upon him for grace, deny them at last. Surely if a sweet-natured man would not deal thus, much less will the most merciful and gracious God.

I intended to have added many other arguments: but these have swoln under my hands, and I hope the judicious reader, will rather look upon the weight, than the number.

The Conclusion of the whole.

And now my brethren let me know your minds. What do you intend to do? Will you go on and die, or will you set upon a thorough and speedy conversion, and hold on eternal life? how long will you linger in Sodom? how long will you halt between two opinions? 1 King. 18. 21. Are you not yet resolved whether Christ or Barabbas, whether bliss or torment, whether the land Cabul, 1 Kings 9. 13. or the Paradise of God, be the better choice? Is it a disputable case, whether the Abana and Pharphar of Damascus, be better than all the streams of Eden? or whether the vile puddle of sin, be to be preferred before the water of life, clear as Crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb? Can the world in good earnest do that for you, that Christ can? Will it stand by you to eternity? will pleasures, titles, lands, treasures, descend with you, Psal. 49. 17. 1 Tim. 6. 7. If not, had you not need look after somewhat that will? What mean you to stand wavering, to be off and on? Foolish Children! how long will you stick between the womb and the world? Shall I leave you at last no farther than Agrippa, but almost persuaded? Why, you are forever lost, if left here. As good not at all, as not altogether Christians. You are half of the mind to give over your former negligent life, and to set to a strict and holy course: you could wish that you were as some others be, and could do as they can do. How long will you rest in idle wishes, and fruitless purposes? when will you come to a fixed, full, and firm resolve? Do not you see how Satan gulls you, by tempting you to delays? How long hath he tolled you on in the way of perdition? how many years have you been purposing to amend what if God should have taken you off this while?

Well, put me not off with a dilatory answer. Tell not me of hereafter. I must have your present consent. If you be not now resolved, while the Lord is treating with you, and woing of you, much less are you like to be hereafter, when these impressions are worn out, and you are hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Will you give me your hands? Will you set open the doors, and give the Lord Jesus the full and present possession? Will you put in your names into his Covenant? Will you subscribe? What do you resolve upon? If you are still upon your delays, my labor is lost, and all is like to come to nothing. Fain I would, that you should now put in your adventures. Come, cast in your lot, make your choice. Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation: today if you will hear his voice. Why should not this be the day from whence thou shouldst be able to date thine happiness? why shouldst thou venture a day longer, in this dangerous and dreadful condition? What if God should this night require thy soul? O that thou mightest know, in this thy day, the things that belong unto thy peace, before they be hid from thine eyes! Luke 16. 42. This is thy day, and 'tis but a day. John 9. 4. Others have had their day, and have received their doom; and now art thou brought upon the stage of this world, here to act thy part, for a whole eternity Remember, thou art now upon thy good behavior for everlasting. If thou make not a wise choice now, thou art undone forever. Look what thy present choice is, such must thine eternal condition be. Luke 10. 42. Luke 16. 25. Prov. 1. 27, 28, 29.

And is it true indeed? is life and death at thy choice? yea, 'tis as true as truth is. Deut. 30. 19. why then, what hinders but that thou shouldst be happy? Nothing doth or can hinder, but thine own willful neglect, or refusal. It was the passage of the Eunuch to Philip: See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? So I may say to thee: see, here is Christ, here is mercy, pardon, life, what hinders but that thou shouldst be pardoned, and saved? One of the Martyrs as he was praying at the stake, had his pardon set by in a box (which indeed he refused, deservedly, because upon unworthy terms.) But here the terms are most honorable and easy: O sinner, wilt thou burn with thy pardon by? Why do but forthwith give up thy consent to Christ, renounce thy sins, deny thyself, take up the Yoak, and the Cross, and thou carriest the day; Christ is thine, pardon, peace, life, blessedness, all are thine: and is not this an offer worth the embracing; Why shouldst thou hesitate, or doubtfully dispute about the case? Is it not past controversy, whether God be better than sin, and glory better than vanity? Why shouldst thou forsake thine own mercy, and sin against thine own life? When wilt thou shake off thy sloth, and lay by thine excuses? Boast not thyself of tomorrow: thou knowest not where this night may lodge thee. Prov. 27. 1.

Beloved, now the holy Spirit is striving with you. He will not always strive. Hast thou not felt thy heart warmed by the word, and been almost persuaded to leave off thy sins, and come in to God? Hast thou not felt some good motions in thy mind, wherein thou hast been warned of thy danger, and told what thy careless course would end in? It may be thou art like young Samuel, who when the Lord called once and again, he knew not the voice of the Lord: 1 Sam. 3. 6, 7. but these motions and items are the offers, and essays, and the calls and strivings of the spirit. O take the advantage of the tide, and know the day of thy visitation.

Now the Lord Jesus stretcheth wide his arms to receive you. He beseecheth you by us. How movingly, how meltingly, how pitifully, how passionately he calleth! The Church is put into a sudden ecstasy upon the sound of his voice, The voice of my beloved! Cant. 2. 8. O wilt thou turn a deaf ear to his voice! it is not the voice that breaketh the Ceders, and maketh the mountains to skip like a Calf, that shaketh the Wilderness and divideth the flames of fire, it is not Sinai's Thunder; but the soft and still voice. It is not the voice of Mount Ebal, a voice of cursing, and terror; but the voice of Mount Gerizim, the voice of blessing, and of glad tidings of good things. It is not the voice of the Trumpet, nor the noise of War, but a message of peace from the King of peace, Eph. 6. 15. 2. Cor. 5. 18, 20. Methinks it should be with thee as with the spouse; My soul failed when he spake, Cant. 5. 6. I may say to thee, O sinner, as Martha to her sister, The Master is come, and he calleth for thee, John. 11. 28. Oh now, with Mary, arise quickly, and come unto him. How sweet are his invitations! He crieth in the open concourse. If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink. John. 7. 37. Prov. 1. 21. He broacheth his own body for thee. Oh come and lay thy mouth to his side. How free is he! he excludeth none. Whosoever with, let him come and take the water of life freely, Rev. 22. 17. Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither. Come, eat of my bread, drink of the wine which I have mingled. For sake the foolish, and live, Prov. 9. 4, 5. 6. Come unto me, &c. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Mat. 11. 28, 29. Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out. Joh. 6. 37. How doth he bemoan the obstinate refuser? O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy Children, as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under hot wings, and ye would not. Mat. 23. 37. Behold me, behold me: I have stretched out my hands all the day to a rebellious people. Isaiah. 65. 1, 2. O be persuaded now at last, to throw yourselves into the arms of love.

Behold, O ye sons of men, the Lord Jesus hath thrown open the prisons, and now he cometh to you (as the Magistrates once to them Acts 16. 39.) and calleth you to come out. If it were from a Palace, or a Paradise that Christ did call you, it were no wonder if you were unwilling (and yet how easily was Adam tolled from hence?) but it is from your prison, sirs, from your chains, from the dungeon, from the darkness that he calleth you? Isaiah. 42. 6, 7. and, yet will you not come? He calleth you unto liberty. Gal. 5. 13. and yet will you not hearken? His yoke is easy, his Laws are Liberty, his service freedom: Mat. 11. 30. James 1. 25. 1 Cor. 7. 22. and (Whatever prejudices you have against his ways) if a God may be believed, you shall find them all pleasure and peace, and shall taste sweetness and joy unutterable, and take infinite delight and felicity in them. Prov. 3. 17. Psal. 110. 165. 1 Pet. 1. 1. Psal. 119. 103. 111.

Beloved, I am loath to leave you. I cannot tell how to give you over. I am now ready to shut up, but fain I would drive this bargain between Christ and you, before I end. What, shall I leave you as I found you at last? Have you read hitherto, and are not yet resolved upon a present abandoning all your sins, and closing with Jesus Christ? Alas, what shall I say? what shall I do? Will you turn off all my importunity? Have I run in vain? Have I used so many arguments, and spent so much time to persuade you, and yet must sit down at last in disappointment? But it is a small matter that you turn off me: you put a slight upon the God that made you, you reject the bowels and beseechings of a Savior, and will be found resisters of the Holy Ghost. Acts 7. 51. if you will not now be prevailed with, to repent and be converted.

Well, though I have called long and ye have refused, I shall yet this once more lift up my voice like a Trumpet, and cry from the highest places of the City, before I conclude with a miserable Conclamatum est. Once more I shall call after regardless sinners, that, if it be possible, I may awaken them. O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord, Ier. 22. 29. Unless you be resolved to die, lend your ears to the last calls of mercy. Behold, in the name of God, I make open proclamation to you. Hearken unto me, O ye Children. Hear instruction, and be wise, and refuse it not, Prov. 8. 32, 33.

Ho, everyone that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat, yea come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear and come ye unto me, hear and your soul shall live, and I Will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Isaiah 55. 1, 2, 3.

Ho, everyone that is sick of any manner of disease or torment, Mat. 4. 23, 24. or is possessed with an evil spirit, whether of pride, or fury, or lust, or covetousness, come ye to the Physician; bring away your sick. Lo here is he that healeth all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people.

Ho, everyone that is in debt, and everyone that is in distress, and everyone that is discontented, gather yourselves unto Christ and he will become a Captain over you. He will be your protection from the arrests of the Law; He will save you from the hand of Justice. Behold, he is an open sanctuary to you, he is a known refuge, Heb. 6. 18. Psal. 48. 3. Away with your sins, and come in unto him, lest the avenger of blood seize you, lest devouring wrath overtake you.

Ho, every ignorant sinner, come and buy eyesalve that thou mayest see, Rev. 3. 18. Away with thine excuses; thou art forever lost, if thou continuest in this estate, 2 Cor. 4. 3. But accept of Christ for thy Prophet and he will be a light unto thee, Isaiah. 42. 6. Eph 5. 14. Cry unto him for knowledge, study his word, take pains about the principles of Religion, humble thyself before him, and he will teach thee his way, and make thee wise unto salvation, Mat. 13. 36. Luke 8. 9. John 5. 39. Psal. 25. 9. But if thou wilt not follow him, in the painful use of his means but sit down, because thou hast but one talent, he will condemn thee for a wicked and slothful servant, Mat. 25. 24, 26.

Ho, every profane sinner, come in and live. Return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon thee. Be entreated, Oh return, come: Thou that hast filled thy mouth with oaths, and execrations, all manner of sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven thee, Mark 3. 28. if thou wilt but thoroughly turn unto Christ, and come in. Though thou wast as unclean as Magdalene; yet put away thy Whoredoms out of thy sight, and thine adulteries from between thy breasts, and give up thyself unto Christ, as a vessel of holiness, alone for his use, and then, though thy sins be as scarlet, they shall be as wool, and though they be as crimson, they shall be as white snow, Luke 7. 37. Hos. 2. 2. 1 Thes. 4. 4. Isaiah. 1. 18.

Hear O ye drunkards, How long will you be drunken? put away your wine, 1 Sam. 1. 14. Though you have rolled in the vomit of your sin, take the vomit of repentance, and heartily disgorge your beloved lusts, and the Lord will receive you. 2. Cor. 6. 17. Give up yourselves unto Christ, to live soberly, righteously, and godly; embrace his righteousness; accept his government; and though you have been swine he will wash you, Rev. 36.

Hear O ye loose companions, whose delight is in vain and wicked society, to sport away your time in carnal mirth and jollity with them, come in at wisdoms call, and choose her, and her ways, and forsake the foolish, and you shall live, Prov. 9. 5, 6.

Hear O ye scorers, hear the word of the Lord. Though you have made a sport of godliness, and the professors thereof; though you have made a scorn of Christ, and of his ways; yet, even to you doth he call, to gather you under the wings of his mercy, Prov. 1. 22, 33. In a word, though you should be sound among the worst of that black roll, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. yet, upon your through Conversion, you shall be washed, you shall be justified, you shall be sanctified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God, ver. 11.

Ho, every formal professor, that art but a luke-warm and dough-baked Christian, and retest in the form of godliness, give over thy halving, and thy halting; be a throughout Christian, and be zealous and repent, and then though thou hast been an offense to Christ's stomach, thou shalt be the joy of his heart, Rev. 3. 16, 19, 20.

And now bear witness, that mercy hath been offered you. I call Heaven and Earth to record against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing, therefore choose life, that you may live, Deut. 30. 19. I can but woo you, and warn you: I cannot compel you to be happy: if I could, I would. What answer will you send me with to my Master? Let me speak unto you as Abraham's servant to them; and now if you will deal kindly and truly with my Master, tell me, Gen. 24. 49. Oh for such a happy answer, as Rebekah gave to them! Gen. 24. 57, 58. And they said, we will call the damsel, and enquire at her mouth. And they called Rebekah, and said unto her. Wilt thou go with this man? and she said, I will go. Oh that I had but thus much from you! Why should I be your accuser, Mat. 10. 14, 15. who thirst for your salvation? Why should the passionate pleadings and woings of mercy be turned into the horrid ag•avations of your obstinancy and additions to your misery. Judge in yourselves: Do you not think their condemnation will be doubly dreadful, that shall still go on in their sins, after all endeavors to recall them? Doubtless, it shall be more tolerable for Tire and Sydon, yea for Sodom and Gomorrah, in the day of Judgment, than for you, Mat. 11. 22, 24.

Beloved, if you have any pity for your perishing souls, close with the present offers of mercy. If you would not continue and increase the pains of your travelling Ministers, do not stick in the birth. If the God that made you have any authority with you, obey his command and come in. If you are not the despisers of grace, and would not shut up the doors of mercy against yourselves, repent and be converted. Let not Heaven stand open for you in vain. Let not the Lord Jesus open his wares, and bid you buy without money and without price, in vain. Let not his Ministers and his Spirit, strive with you in vain, and leave you now at last unperswaded; lest the sentence go forth against you, The Bellows are burnt, the Lead is consumed of the fire, the Founder melteth in vain. Reprobate Silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them, Ier. 6. 29, 30.

Father of Spirits, take the heart in hand that is too hard for my weakness. Do not thou have ended, though I have done. Half a word from thine effectual power, will do the work. O thou that hast the key of David, that openest when no man shutteth, open thou his heart as thou didst Lydia's and let the King of glory enter in; and make this soul thy happy captive. Let not the Tempter harden him in delays. Let him not stir from this place, nor take his eyes from these lines till he be resolved to forg• his sins, and to accept of life upon thysself-denying terms. In thy name O Lord God did I go forth to these Labors, in thy name do I shut them up. Let not all the time they have lost; be but lost hours, let not all the thoughts of heart, and all the pains that have been about them, be but lost labor. Lord put in thine hand into the heart of this Reader, and send thy spirit, as once thou didst Philip, to join himself to the Chariot of the Eunuch, while he was reading thy word. And though I should never know it while I live, yet I beseech thee Lord God let it be found at that day, that some souls are converted by these labors: and let some be able to stand forth and say, that by these persuasions, they were woe• unto thee.

Amen. Amen. Let him that readeth say Amen.

Reading Mr. Joseph Allein Book, entitled An Alarm to the unconverted.

REader, who ere thou art dost chance to look,

Bless God directed thee to such a Book:

Be serious when thou readest, 'tis no droul,

But that which aimeth to convert thy soul.

What mad besotted desperado can Take prejudice against this holy man?

Who did sincerely nothing else desire,
But to prevent thy leaping in the fire;
And penned this Book out of a true endeavor
To keep thee from that lake which burns for
I do beseech you read it over; why ever.
Will you be obstinate and choose to die?
Know you what Heaven is, or can you tell
The torments of those damned souls in Hell?
Now read and pray, O pray that God will give
A true repentance, that your soul may live:
This Book needs no Commendum, for no doubt
You will commend it, if you read it out:
What did I care, so sinners understood,
If each word were a tear or drop of blood?

THE PREFACE.

READER,

IF Custom had not made it common to prefix Epistles to Books, I had freely permitted thee to read the following Discourse without the trouble of a preliminary Salutation: but the truth is, I like not to be either Singular or Uncivil:

And yet, I confess I have but very little to acquaint thee with: for as I intend not to court your kind acceptance of the following Discourse, so neither do I design to disparage it, or discourage thee from perusing it.

Only if I can prevail, I heartily wish thou wouldest read without prejudice, and with that Candor that becomes an impartial and discreet Reader: and then, either give, or deny it entertainment as you think fit; for I assure thee The Author desires to impose nothing upon thy faith, but what is able to abide the test. If he has erred, he is only ambitious to have no followers.

When I gave way to the publishing of the former Discourse, I expected not to have met with so many Enemies. But I see the old saying holds good, veritas odium parit. As for those severe censures some men have urged, I have endeavored to remove them in the following Discourse, especially in the Appendix. For personal reflections (the only weapons others have made use of; although they be as Ignorant who I am, as I desire they should be,) these I may very rationally contemn, without the fear of censure from the strictest Zoilus.

I confess next to no adversary, a fair and ingenuous one is the most desirable; but whether it has been my Good fortune (or if you please to say Fate) to be blessed with such, after thou hast perused both what they and I say thou wilt be able to judge.

And upon this account (though not only) I heartily wish thou wouldest be pleased to compare the Reply and Answer, and both with the First Discourse, which accidentally (I assure thee not designedly) gave birth to them; in doing of which if thou reapest no advantage thyself, yet I am sure thou shalt oblige the Booksellers to give thee thanks.

FAREWEL.

A DEFENCE OF THE BOOK, ENTITLED, A Discourse concerning the Period of HUMANE LIFE.

There never was any age in which the itching humor of writing many Books was more truly visible, than in the present: we may now with the Poet regrave, that, Scribimus indocti doctique, every man thinks himself fit enough to spin out a discourse for the Press; hence is it, that the World is even ready to complain of the Burden. I know it is usual to pretend the importunity of necessity, a very fair and specious pretext, but I much doubt, if it be always real and true.

BUT least I seem accessory to the fault I so much condemn, I here enter my solemn protest; that as it was no piece of vanity that engaged me to write the former discourse, so neither am I now acted by that principle to defend it: If it had been any unworthy motive that did first animate me, I should now have appeared in Sackcloth, with a free and ingenuous confession of the crime.

BUT having in the Preface to that discourse already satisfied the World concerning the design, both of the Author, and of the Book: I shall now forbear to give a more tedious account.

AND because I promised if the judicious should dislike anything in the Book, either to satisfy them, or yield to the force of their clearer discoveries: I am now come to tell them, that I will keep my promise; and stand to that engagement.

MUCH has been said in private Cabals against both Author and Book: that the Author is an Arminian, is but a modest censure, which I assure them does not in the least offend me. As for their more severe thunderings, in condemning the Book to the flames, and the Author to the Pillory; it is good their power is not able to effect what they please. I see if they cannot answer the Book, they are resolved to make both it and the Author odious enough. But all the slanders that malice can invent, shall never discourage me from defense of the Truth.

IF the great Captain of our Salvation was said to be a Samaritan, and to have a Devil: It is but a small matter that I should meet with disingenuous men, who yet brand me with more gentile crimes. If my own familiar friends should carry themselves demurely towards me, this is no harder measure than what better men than I have experienced. It is an old, but true saying, Veritas odium parit. The great Apostle of the Gentiles did find it so, Am I become your Enemy because I tell you the truth? And since this is also my lot, I shall bear those various censures very patiently, not intending to render reviling for reviling, but Blessing for Cursing: Lord, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

BUT that I may not be further tedious, I shall pass by all private censures, and now only consider an Answer, which was sent me by the Gentleman who published my former Books, with the following Letter.

SIR,

BEing informed that there was an Answer to your late discourse concerning the Period of Humane Life, intended for the Press; I ceased not 'till I had spoke with the person that had it: And although I had but small acquaintance with him, yet his ingenuity was such, that I obtained a sight of it; but finding it so long that I could not then peruse it, I earnestly desired to know if he had the confidence to trust me with it; freely adding, that I knew how to communicate it to you (not telling who you were,) at first he seemed to refuse, but after I had shown him the reasonableness of my desire, he condescended. Sir, The Answer is thought to be no ways despicable; therefore if your affairs of greater concern can allow, I assure you your speedy answer to; and return of these Papers, will be very acceptable to;

SIR,

Your obliged Servant.

I have here set down this Letter, that men may know by what means I obtained a sight of the answer before it was Printed.

The REPLY.

SIR,

SOME few days ago I received yours, with the bundle of Paper. I heartily thank you for the pains you have taken in that particular. I have now perused those Papers, which I find are bespattered with very much Gall and bitterness; it is a severe challenge, that I have fallen upon very bad principles, and maintain a position contrary both to the Doctrine of our Church, and of all sober and Orthodox Divines. If this were true as it is false, the Author might be excused for his over much zeal▪ but since the censure is altogether void of truth, he must pardon me to say, that the calumny is inexcusable: but I love not to fling Dirt upon those, who take the liberty to bespatter me with it; it were easy to recriminate, but our great Master never taught any such lesson.

BUT as I do not know of what Church the Author is a Member, (for it may be, I oppose, that Doctrine that is hotly taught in some particular Churches) so neither do I know what Divines may be Orthodox in his account: Sure I am, that both the best and most learned Writers of this and former ages, have maintained the sentiments I have embraced.

WHETHER the Authors opinion or mine does best agree with the humors of bad men, needs but very little judgment to determine. Pray, how can it gratify any wicked man to tell him, that he may prolong his days (a thing the most vicious and aptest to wish) if he would obey the Laws of Heaven? And upon the other hand, that his days shall be shortened (a heavy and unpleasant message to bad men, who have no other heaven but what they enjoy upon Earth)

if he continues in his wickedness? Methinks this principle is so far from encouraging men to sin, that it quite opposeth it; affording men most excellent encouragements to promote piety, and to shun all manner of vices, which lead down to the Chambers of Death.

BUT if we now enquire how the Doctrine of absolute and irresistible decrees do encourage men to be holy, we shall weary ourselves ere we find one reason to prove it. There can be no Doctrine more pleasing to bad men, for indeed hereby they labor to excuse themselves, telling us, that God has from Eternity absolutely determined everything they should do, and therefore they cannot help it. O how luscious is the high relish of this Doctrine to bad men!

FROM all this it may appear, that the Gentleman might have very well spared that Pathetick Query. Shall we let it abroad to infect men, without ever discovering the danger of it? No sure Sir, that were a great fault; pray involve not yourself (by a sinful silence) in so much guilt: But alas! if I should put the Author to tell me wherein lies the danger, I could hazard ten to one that he should be puzzled to tell. But this must pass for current Coin, and be as strongly believed, as if it were proved by ten thousand Mathematical Demonstrations; else we will be called credulous, and not having so much Faith, as a Grain of Mustard-Seed.

I CONFESS the Author pretends to be very unwilling, to engage in the nice speculations of controversial Divinity; but yet it seems he is of so good and condescending a nature, that he cannot resist the great importunity of a noble Friend; he will rather hazard one single look into things that (as he says) are hid, than disoblige his Friend, or (and indeed this is a strong reason) suffer the good cause to be ruined by his silence. And thus we see that by his gracious condescension, he luckily bestows a couple of favors, one upon his friend, and the other upon truth. Sure never was there any man more fortunately happy; but I forgot it was his fate to do so, and no thanks to him for all this.

THE Gentleman needed not, I think, have troubled himself much with the state of the controversy, since I had done it plainly enough; and I leave you to guess if the Author has done it more clearly.

BUT passing lesser circumstances, I come now to examine the Arguments he brings, to prove, that the Period of every man's life is unalterably fixed by the Divine Decree: this is the grand point he maintains; a Doctrine long since introduced by the Stoics, and of a later date, espoused by Mahomet and his followers.

AND yet if we will believe the Author, this Doctrine is every whit consonant to Scripture, and undoubtedly proved by reason: Well then, let us follow the Author in his search, and see whether such an uncouth notion has a favorable aspect from either of the two.

AS for Scripture, 1. he tells us, there are many plain Texts which do upon that account, express a kind of propriety, that men may claim in this last Period. O wonderful subtle disputer! I know no man could argue so profoundly if not a Disciple of Voetius: but let us consider the Texts of Scripture he brings to prove this; the first is Eccl. 9. 12. Man also knoweth not his time. Now the Author makes this to be the import of the words: The Period (says he) of man's life is fixed by one absolute Decree, and therefore he may call it [his time.] This is indeed a very ingenious Comment, only it is faulty in that it is singular; for I dare promise, few men ever thought this was the meaning of the Text: If I had been in the Pulpit I had readily raised this Doctrine; that the time of our Dying is very uncertain, and I had proved it by Solomon's words, man also knoweth not his time. Another Text he brings, is Psal. 39. 5. Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days. But I remember I have already shown how strangely this Text is brought to confirm a Doctrine it is utterly unacquainted with; see The Period of Humane Life, pag. 109. Edit. 1. by this brief reply the Author may easily guess what strength is in these or the like Phrases to confirm his opinion.

THE next argument he urgeth is every whit as impertinent; for it is an old and true saying, Omnis similitudo claudicat: this the Author seems to smell; but he pretends that he is so wise, as to press them no farther than the scope of the comparisons lead him; but whether this be so or not, I shall briefly examine. First, Scripture (he says) frequently compares the life of man to the Grass; the flourishing and decaying of which, is fixed and determined. Answ. It will trouble the Author to prove, that all Grass doth flourish in the Morning, and decays in the Evening. But I shall grant that there are some Flowers that do; yet this can never prove that the Period of Humane Life is fatally determined. If I remember well, Commentators say, such similitudes are made use of to denote the brevity of man's life. I shall instance but one sacred Text, to prove this is the import of the similitude; the place is Job 14. 1, 2. Man that is born of a Woman, is of few days and full of trouble, he cometh forth as a Flower, and is cut down. Secondly, He tells us, that the life of man is compared to a Race, Heb. 12. 1. Answ. It is so, and that very aptly; but not because the bounds are unalterably fixed, but because of the noble price that is appointed for those who obey the Divine Precepts, and who do not faint in well doing; and the only intent of the comparison is, that if we expect that Heavenly reward, we must persevere in well doing; as those who run in a Race do not faint and give over, if they expect to obtain the price. Thirdly, The life of man (says he) is compared to a shadow. Answ. I know it is, but sure not because it hath determined limits, but because of its duration; for as a shadow quickly passeth away, so the days of man are but few. Hence Job tells us, He fleeth as a shadow. cap. 14. 2. and the Psalmist speaking of himself says, I am gone like a shadow when it declineth. But I have insisted too long in answering such trivial arguments. I will now view if the plain (as he calls them, implying that the former were not) Texts of Scripture he brings, be urged to any better purpose.

THE first plain Text is Job 14. 5. Seeing his days are determined, &c. this is indeed the most remarkable place of Scripture we have seemingly standing against us; but in my former discourse I have fully shewn, that it does no way contradict any position I defend. I shall therefore now only consider what he urges against what I there replied, and judge you which of us does succumb.

I cannot (says he) but admire the Author's impudence in making this Text the Basis of his discourse. Good Sir, is this the effect of a mild and gentle Spirit? but i'll pardon this, since may be it is the result of your holy zeal; but if you be not resolved to be an admirer, I will endeavor to cure that distemper. The reason then why I made choice of that Text was, because I judged it the main place urged in defense of the opinion you maintain; and if this were well cleared and duly explained, and made to make nothing for you, I easily foresaw how little difficulty there would be in answering other Texts.

LET us now view how artificially he draws Job's words in a Syllogystick fear, If God (says he) has so determined man's days, that he cannot pass those prefixed bounds, then the Period of Humane Life is not mutable; but the first is unquestionable. Ergo. Answ. If the Author had but remembered how he had stated the case, he had never made use of this argument▪ for he grants, that both he and I may maintain, that the Period of Humane Life is both mutable and immutable. I did not deny but our days are determined, see pag. 81. and the Author must know, that all the debate is concerning the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

But (says the Author) I am heartily glad that he acknowledgeth the infinity of the Divine knowledge. When I first did read this, I thought the Author had forgot himself, for he is but seldom in so good an humor; but when I again viewed what follows, I saw all was spoken Ironice; which will make me ever afterwards suspect his Compliments: And if he kiss again, I shall be upon my Guard that he do not betray.

HOW the Divine knowledge is not conjectural, although it be not founded on an absolute Decree, has been briefly manifested in the first Discourse. But because I must follow the Author, I shall forbear to speak of it here, because it comes afterwards to be considered.

A SECOND plain Text of Scripture is Psal. 90. 3. Thou turnest man to destruction, and sayest, return ye Children of men. I am the most deceived, if this Text proves what it is brought for: Sure the only intent of the Royal Psalmist here is to show, that God is the supreme Lord and Master of the Universe; who exerciseth an uncontrolable Dominion, and who can according to his pleasure either shorten or prolong the days of man; but there is not one word here of any absolute Decree.

A THIRD plain Text equivalent to the former is Psal. 68. 20. Unto God the Lord belong the passage to Death. Now let us hear the Author's Comment, that is (says he) the Period of every man's life is in the hand of God. Now this is indeed very well said; but he sees better than his Neighbors; who says it is spoken to the purpose. But further, what if he and Voetius have given a bad Translation of the Text, if I might hazard to our English, (which I think is one of the best Translations) I dare say it is so; for there we read, Unto God the Lord belong the [issues from] Death.

THE last plain Text is Act. 17. 26. He hath determined the bounds of our Habitation. Strange! the Author can never find the word determine, but he instantly concludes, that we are to understand an absolute and irrelative Decree. He knows well enough that I grant that the Period of Humane life is determined, why then does he urge these Texts against me?

IN the next place, the Author brings a great many instances to prove the Period of those men's lives, who die a casual and violent Death, is fixed and determined; but he needed not to have put himself to so much trouble, since I never maintained, that the World is left to its own casual revolutions. If he had pleased, he might have viewed pag. 76. where he will find, I grant, that the most seemingly usual periods of men, are ordered by an infinite Wisdom, and fall under the Divine Rule and Dominion.

NEITHER needs the Author redouble his NOW, NOW we have the Author yielding; because I said, we never doubted, but the great Governor of the World may make what reserved cases he pleases from the general Rule, and the ordinary course of things, pag. 111. This methinks is a very plain Truth; but that I may do all I can to satisfy the Author, I shall add, that the reason why some men's lives may be unalterably determined, and yet the Period of other men's may for ordinary be left mutable, is, because the supreme Governor of the World thinks fit it should be so. If this will not suffice the Author, let him choose as he thinks best.

BUT to proceed, since the first step (says he) and moment of our Beings is determined, it is but reasonable to think that the last is also fixed. Answ. It is extremely reasonable, only we must take heed that we do not wrest Scripture: to patronize our own self-chosen opinions: Now the Text brought to prove that the first moment of our Being is determined, is Psal. 139. 16. which is a very odd Paraphrase of the Author's, for the Psalmist there is not speaking of the Divine Decrees, but of the infinity of the Divine knowledge, which is a depth he confesses he cannot Fathom. Now that God doth know both the first and last moments of our life, is a Truth I am as ready to defend as the Author.

BUT I see the Author is resolved to dispute with me, as if I were an enemy to a particular Divine Providence; else to what purpose does he bring his following troop of Arguments? As

1. All the actions and works, all the ways and steps of man, are ordered by God. Answ. All this is confessed by me; if he urgeth them against any other, let those concerned make answer.

2. All other animate Beings (says he) are determined. Answ. To what and how are they determined? I know they have a Being, and that they are all dependent Creatures. But do you seriously think that God from Eternity did by an absolute Decree determine the Period of every Creature? Can you without a certain reluctancy say, that the supreme and adorable Being of whom we ought to entertain noble and becoming thoughts, did by an absolute Decree determine the particular Period of every Flea? Pray consider, Sir, what you say.

3. Inanimate Beings (says he) are also limited. Answ. When God first Created the World, he put everything in a fit and convenient Station; and so exactly ordered every piece of the Creation, that it should be subservient to the whole. Hence he set bounds to the Waters, and appointed the Sun, Moon, and Stars, to be for Signs, and for Seasons, and for Days, and Years; and according to the Primitive Precept, everything (Angels and Men excepted) stands according as he ordered. But yet these inanimate things are not so fixed, as that upon extraordinary occasions he cannot alter their course.

4. Do we not (says he) read of the determined Period of Kings and Kingdoms? Answ. Undoubtedly we do, but what then? Do you imagine that God by an absolute Decree did determine the Periods of particular Kings and Kingdoms? Pray consider what the Majesty of Heaven hath said, 1 Kings 9. 4, 5, 6, &c. If thou wilt keep my Statutes and Iudgments, then I will Establish the Throne of thy Kingdom upon Israel forever; but if you will not keep my Commandments and my Statutes, then will I cut off Israel, &c. Surely the most High ruleth in the Kingdom of men, he putteth down one, and setteth up another, and according as men obey his Statutes, so he dispenseth his favors to them.

5. It is a dangerous thing (says he) to grant, that the most inconsiderable thing is exempted from the Hand of Divine Providence. Answ. I am very far from thinking, that the Author is an Enemy to the Divine Providence; but truly of the two opinions, that which he maintains seems to enervate it more than mine; for if God has from Eternity absolutely decreed everything, then a particular providence whereby he superintends and governs all things, seems not to have any place; but the opinion I maintain puts all things in the hands of God, who may do in Heaven and in Earth as he thinks fit. He may shorten or prolong my life, he may do with me as he pleaseth, for he is our Maker, and we the work of his own hands. This encourageth me to wait and depend upon him, because I know he is the Governor of the World, and has so absolute a Dominion, that none can stay his hand, or say unto him, what dost thou?

HENCE not only those things which sustain and uphold men in Being, but also the Period of every man's life depends upon God: As he may either give or deny those necessary things, so may he also shorten or prolong our life. And thus there is no need of running to the absolute Decree.

6. It is (says he) an old and unquestionable Maxim of Philosophers, cujusque contradictionis altera pars determinate vera est, altera falsa. Answ. The Maxim is very true, but not very pertinently applied. For supposing there had never been a World, and so no Decree concerning anything future; yet this had been true, both parts of a contradiction cannot be true. But now if the Author means, that the operations of free Agents are all absolutely determined; this he must prove by some other medium than that Philosophick Maxim, which only infers that one part of the contradiction is true, but leaves us ignorant which of the two.

AFTER all this he comes at length to Catechize me most severely. Will ye (says he) have your recourse to a Stoical fate, or Turkish necessity? No, good Sir, I assure you I will not, but I am afraid some others may. Will ye plead (says he) from the fortuitous concourse of Epicurean Atoms? Or—Pray Sir hold, for it is so long since I was last examined, that I have almost forgot the trick of answering. If I should permit you to proceed, I could only say No to all your Questions; and I believe you knew well enough that I was as much an Enemy to all these as yourself.

BUT I see what you have yet said are but slender attempts, and only in order to a more noble and grand design. It is well your small Shot, discharged in these light Skirmishes, have not hurt us. Come let us proceed, and see the event of the fight.

If God (says he) has not by an absolute Decree determined the Period of every man's life; how can the certainty of the Divine foreknowledge be defended? Answ. Could the Author be contented with it as the Scriptures leave it, there need be little debate in the case. The Gentleman is pleased to say, that I seem to be like a Ship tossed with a great Storm; but he might have more truly said, that I think that it is a bold enquiry which concerns not us to know, the depths of the Divine Wisdom are too profound for Mortals to measure; and since Sacred Writ calls it a depth, I am sure it is safest to break out into that ecstasy of admiration with the Apostle, Rom. 11. 33. O the depth of the Riches, both of the Wisdom and Knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his Judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Counselor?

IF God had ever designed that we should know those secrets, he had certainly disclosed them in his revealed Word; but since Scripture is silent, it is our Wisdom to forbear a curious search into things which he hath reserved within his own peculiar Jurisdiction.

BUT I see this will not serve the Author's turn, he will have the very manner of God's knowledge of future things determined; and if I cannot tell, yet he can unfold this Secret, by saying, that God has from Eternity absolutely Decreed everything, therefore he certainly knows everything. And now because this is the grand Doctrine he always repeats, I shall without being very tedious, first show him, that we have no ground to believe that every future action is absolutely decreed. And secondly, I shall endeavor to show, that the Divine knowledge is notwithstanding certain and infallible.

1. WE have no ground to believe, that every future action is absolutely decreed, because God does certainly know all sinful and criminal actions, and yet we cannot rationally conclude that he has absolutely decreed those actions, for this doth neither agree with the justice nor goodness of God. Do you think that a just and good God (who is the Judge of all the Earth) would punish men with everlasting Torments, if he had by an absolute decree determined that they should commit all these Sins? Methinks if this were the case of these miscreants, they might reasonably excuse themselves before their Judge, by alleging, that they could not do otherwise. But truly there is no ground for this plea, for he hath left men inexcusable, and doth not tempt any man to Sin.

BUT I remember the Author distinguisheth between an effective and permissive decree. Answ. I could never yet well understand what they mean by a permissive decree: If they say, God only permits Sin, they say right; but from thence they can expect no sanctuary, for this cannot according to them be a ground to infer any certain knowledge; for to permit Sin, is in this case only a not hindering of men in their wicked courses and ways. If you yet add, that in that permissive decree, the will of man, with all the circumstances of time and place are included. I Answer, that the decree is not then absolute but respective; since both persons and their qualifications are considered: And I must confess this is very agreeable with several phrases of Scripture, particularly with that Rom. 8. 29. For whom he did foreknow, them also he did predestinate. So that if we even run up to the knotty point of predestination, we shall find that the Decrees, both of election and reprobation consider the qualifications of persons, and that foreknowledge preceeds any Decree▪ and indeed this was the opinion of all learned men before S. Augustine's time. Scriptores veteres (saith Melancthon, cited by Episcopus, in his second Epistle to Bererovicus) omnes preter unum Augustinum, putarunt aliquam causam electionis in nobis esse.

2. WE have clear evidences from Scripture informing us, that God did certainly know many things which should have been really future, if the conditions upon which their futuration depended had been placed. Our Savior Christ tells us, that if the mighty works which were done in Chorazin and Bethsaida, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they had repented. God knew that if Cain had done well, he should have been accepted. The whole tenor of the Scriptures abounds with many such like instances. If Nineveh had not repented, God knew that they should have been destroyed. It is not absurd to think that God would have threatened to inflict that punishment which he did not know; as certainly he would not, if their Doctrine concerning the absolute Decrees be true. But I remember I have in the former discourse insisted upon this argument; I shall therefore only now consider what the Author answers to the Texts of Scripture there cited.

THE first Text is 1 Sam. 23. 11, 12. which plainly shows, that God did certainly know, that if David had not departed from Keilah, the Keilites had delivered him into the hands of Saul. To this he answers, That David was not curiously inquisitive concerning the Divine Will, for that was a Secret▪ Reply. This is a strange fancy, for is it not as certain as anything can be, that David inquired of the Lord whether Saul was come to Keilah, and if the Keilites would deliver him up; which David had not known ('till it may be, too late) if God had not revealed both. But he says, there was no prediction of anything which should be. Answ. It's true, Saul did not come to Keilah, but certainly he should have come, if David had remained. And thus the prediction is of what should have happened, if David had not left Keilah. And do you think that God would have foretold anything but what he certainly knew? Again he adds, that the prediction was not concerning David's being delivered up, but concerning the inclinations of the people. Answ. The Text speaks nothing of the inclinations of the people, but of a thing future; They will deliver you up, viz. if you stay with them: and so David does not inquire if Saul intends to come up, neither does the Answer he receives imply any such thing.

THE other Text is 2 King. 13. 19. where the Prophet is angry with the King of Israel, for smiting upon the ground but thrice; telling him, that if he had smitten five or six times, he had smitten Syria, till he had consumed it. To this he answers, that is is altogether groundless to imagine, that God had decreed that Joash should smite the Ground more that thrice. Answ. We do not say that God had absolutely decreed how oft he should smite the Ground. Scripture makes no mention of any Decree, only this he tells us, that if Joash had smitten five or six times, he had totally subdued Syria. And truly, since we find the Prophet angry with him because he only smote thrice; we may rationally suppose that God had not absolutely decreed that he should smite no oftener. To suppose that the Revelation was general, is only a may be; and we may more warrantably say, what if it was not general?

3. LET us now come to examine the dangerous effects of this Doctrine of this absolute and unconditional Decrees, and the bad consequences which naturally proceed from it. 1. I have shown that it destroys the freedom of Humane nature. And 2. That it makes all lawful means unnecessary; see the Period of Humane Life, pag. 103. 3. It leaves no place for praise to the learned Physician, nor for dispraise to the unskillful Empyrick, pag. 105. And 4. If this Doctrine be pursued to the uttermost, it engages men to expose themselves like fools or mad men to any danger.

BUT 2. Although God has not absolutely Decreed every future action, yet he hath an universal and certain cognizance of everything. For 1. That I may argue (as they speak) ad hominem, I hope the Author will not deny that God knows everything that is possible, and yet no man ever said, that God decrees what things are possible, and what not. God knew how to raise up Children unto Abraham out of the Stones, and yet I think there was no Decree concerning this. 2. God knows whatsoever is true, but all future actions are true; if it be true that Titius died this day, in such a place, and of such a malady; this was from Eternity true, that he should die this day, and in such a place. But ye say, an action is not future, but because it is decreed. Answ. That I may quickly dispatch this, I shall now freely impart what has fully for a long time satisfied me.

THE great and wise Creator, out of his mere pleasure, freely Created this World, and furnished it with varieties of Creatures, of different natures; amongst those, Man made after the Image of his Maker, was created a free Agent. Now since the Eternal Wisdom thought it expedient, that there should be such a Creature as Man; we must not take from him that free principle bestowed upon him in his Creation: And since it is the good pleasure of Heaven, that Man in all his actions should act freely and without constraint, what reason have we to think that there is any absolute Decree which is inconsistent with this freedom? And thus, that there ever was such a Creature as Man, this is the mere result of the Divine Will; that Man acts freely and without constraint, this is also the effect of Divine Goodness: and thus all things depend upon the Divine Will. And because the Divine Knowledge is infinite, he therefore knows everything that Man is to act; for whatsoever he acts is true, and so consequentially was from Eternity true. This methinks is a plain and easy way, to secure both the certainty of the Divine Knowledge, and the freedom of Humane Nature.

HAVING thus dispatched these two things I proposed, I now return to the Author; where first we find him fighting lustily with Molina and Fonseca, and Cursing their Bastard (begotten, he says, in the dark, pardon this innocent piece of Drollery) Scientia media, with Job's imprecation

ALTHOUGH it be a digression to discourse of this, yet since the Author thinks he has thereby ruined and undermined all I have said, I shall follow the Author, and briefly examine his arguments he urges against this Doctrine.

THE first assault he makes, is, That I have recourse to the Jesuitical Port. Answ. He having before compared me to a Ship tossed with a great Storm, it is no wonder though I be glad to get to any safe Haven; if it belongs to the Jesuits, the business is not great, since the Port is secure. And I am sure the Author's Doctrine of Physical predetermination is the invention of the Dominicans; jam sumus ergo pares.

BUT are there no Protestant Divines, who own and maintain, that God knows that many things should have been future, if such and such conditions had been placed? Does the Author know, that Gomarus, Waleus, and many other Foreign Theologs, have recourse to Scientia media: And at home, how many learned Doctors do defend it? Nay indeed your own D. Twisse, who seems to be one of the greatest Enemies to it, yet maintains a notion every whit as unconcieveable (as you are pleased to call this) his Decretum generale de ciendis Creaturas agere, congruenter ipsarum naturis, is, may be, not much different from this.

BUT if the opinion be true, it matters not much who defends it. Let us now hear what he Objects. I shall (says he) only in a word or two manifest the unconcieveableness of this position. Answ. I dare hazard for all this promise, he shall have thirdly beloved, 'ere he has done. His first word is, Since antecedently to the Decree all things are purely possible, how can God know that such things are either absolutely or conditionally future? Answ. 1. I confess God always knows things as they are, so that if there be nothing future, he could not know them to be future. 2. I grant that it is only the result of the Divine Goodness, that there was ever such a Creature as man. Yet 3. Since God did make man a free Agent, and gave him power to act without constraint; not Physically predetermining his Will, nor by any absolute Decree fatally overpowering his inclinations, leaving him no liberty for choice: Hence it is, that all and every act that man elicits, is certainly fore-known, although not absolutely determined. For by virtue of that Primitive Precept, men act as freely, as rational Agents act necessarily.

AND thus that grand Objection does not militate against us. For we grant that antecedently to the Decree, Man, and all his future actions were only possible; but after Almighty God had decreed or purposed to make Man, all his future actions, although not absolutely determined, were yet certainly known: and the reason of both, is, because Man being made a free Agent, there can be no absolute Decree everting and overthrowing his nature; and since he was to elect such and such actions, an infinite understanding behooed to know them.

HIS second argument is, That all knowledge depending upon conditions, is first suspended, and secondly conjectural. Answ. We do not say that Divine Knowledge does depend upon conditions; all that we claim, is, that God knows that many things should have been future, if the conditions had been placed: And this we judge is altogether agreeable to Sacred Writ. So that it is only the futuration of things, and not the Divine Knowledge, that depends upon conditions.

'TIS true, man being a free Agent, he may either act or not act, even then when all things requisite for acting are placed: but yet it must be granted, that the Will cannot always hang in an aequilibrio; since it is a self-determining principle, it must either will or nill the doing of such a thing, and this an infinite intellect doth certainly know.

3. HE Objects, There is nothing conditionally future in respect of God: For either the Condition is to be placed, and so it becomes absolutely future; or else it is never to be placed, and so it is only possible. Answ. I have frequently heard this argument urged, as if it were unanswerable; but I must confess, if my judgment be any ways regardable, it is the only result of ignorance. For first, those who urge it, seem to mistake what is meant, when men distinguish betwixt things absolutely and conditionally future. Things absolutely future, are those things which do not depend upon any condition: but things conditionally future, are such things as are really future, if the conditions be placed; and should not have been future, if they had not been placed.

NOW although the condition be not placed, yet they differ hugly from things which are merely possible; for the things merely possible, are not future upon the placing of whatsoever condition: but things conditionally future, should have been really future, if the conditions had been placed.

BUT the Author adds, That all conditions are included in the absolute Decree. Answ. If there be any conditions included in the Decree, it ceaseth to be absolute, as every man's reason will easily teach him.

AFTER all this the Author tells me, it is not in his power to reconcile me with myself. Strange! what an unknown quarrel is this? alas! have I been so unwary as to contradict what I had formerly said; and is the Author willing, but unable to take up the difference? Since he pretends he is not, I will essay what may be done. First, We have no ground to think that God decrees every future action. And the reason I said so, was, because there are many sinful actions which the Majesty of Heaven forbids, and therefore does not absolutely Decree them: And yet I grant, that the most contingent actions depend immediately upon the Divine Will: Because the reason why Man was made a free Agent, and acts without constraint, is, because God did Will both.

AND thus I have examined what the Author brings in defense of his own opinion. I come now to survey what he answers to what I urge against it. And▪

1. I TOLD, That this Doctrine is a good plea for wicked men. To this he Answers, that in the Schools they speak of a twofold Decree, the one effective, the other permissive. Reply. I have already discovered the insufficiency of this Answer, and therefore shall not repeat.

2. I TOLD, That it is inconsistent with the freedom of Humane nature. In Answer to this, he alledgeth, That the decree does not hinder, but helps Men to act freely. Reply. Let us examine if it be so; you affirm that God has by an absolute Decree, determined the Period of Titius his Life, and that he has also as absolutely decreed everything that he shall do; now I desire to know of Titius, who is a free Agent, that can do any other thing but what is decreed, or if he can do otherwise? If you say he cannot, then pray how is he left a free agent, since he must do all that is decreed, and can do no other thing.

BUT he says, All kinds of necessity are not inconsistent with liberty. Answ. What then, is there no kind of necessity inconsistent with it? And is not Man become a necessary Agent, if he cannot but act so and so? Is there any resisting of the decree? But he adds, We only plead for a determination of events. Answ. The Will is then left free, and God only determins the thing, but not the Will. Pray how absurd is this in this Authors own judgment.

3. I TOLD, That this opinion leaves no place for praise to the learned Physician, nor for dispraise to the unskillful Empyrick. He Answers, That the Physicians deserve praise, because they act as freely as if there were no Decree. Reply. The Author had done well if he had made this plain, for that which he alledgeth is all along denied by us; and the reason we gave, was, because if the Physician does only prescribe those Medicaments, he was absolutely decreed to ordain; and if he can prescribe no other, then he deserveth no praise, since he does no more but what he could not but do.

4. I TOLD, That this opinion by a genuine consequence induceth men to expose themselves to any danger: For if the Terminus vitae est immobilis; what need men fear to run upon the mouth of the roaring Cannon; if it be their fate to die, they cannot by all their Art and Skill evite death; if it be not fatally determined, then let us face any danger, we have good enough proof against it. To this he answers, That it is just like that argument which Satan propounds to our Lord Christ, Matth. 4. 6. Reply. I am not advising any Man to cast himself upon those dangers, only I tell what is the consequence of this Doctrine. Now our blessed Master is justly offended with Satan, because of his malicious design in urging that argument. But there is no question but the argument was strong, and this Christ does not challenge.

But (says he) we must not make the secret determinations of the Divine Council our rule. Reply. If they be secret Councils, we cannot make them our rule: But sure they can no more be said to be secret, since so many Men pretend to know, that God has absolutely determined everything.

I HAVE quickly dispatched his Answers, because they are indeed slight and inconsiderable. Now let us hear how he vindicates his opinion from that unjust (as he calls it) imputation I have cast upon it; namely, that I say, it is only the opinion of the Stoics, dressed up in better apparel: The word Fate is hateful (says he) in the Christian Schools. Reply. May be the Author will find himself to be in a mistake here: I shall only recommend to him an Author, with whom he seems to be intimately enough acquainted; and that is, Voetius de vitae termino; in Answer to Object. 6. Apud Philosophos (says he) variae occurrunt fati explicationes, quarum aliquae à veritate & pictate nihil alienum sonant.—Nec desunt inter antiquos et recentiores veri Docti qui Stoicorum placitum in dextram partem interpretentur.

AND indeed any man that compares the two opinions, will find them to be upon the matter the same: the difference that the Author gives betwixt the two, is the very same that I mentioned and told him of. But it is needless to insist here, for the thing is palpable and cannot be denied.

IN the last place the Author comes to answer those arguments I urged in defense of the mutability of the Period of Humane life. My first argument was, upon the observance of the Divine Laws, there are many promises in Scripture assuring us of length of days; and on the other side, there are many threatenings of cutting short the days of the Wicked. In Answer to this, the Author alledgeth many things.

1. HE tells us, The words prolong, shorten, &c. do not properly signify to make longer or shorter, but only imply length or shortness of days. Reply. I confess I do not well understand this distinction; but suppose the words were to be understood as the Author takes them, yet all we plead for stands firm: for those that obey the Statutes shall live long, which (with the Author's leave) is the same with having their days prolonged.

2. In these promises (says he) God deals with Men, as Parents use to deal with their sick Children: They promise them many things, rather to encourage them to take the bitter potion prescribed, than out of a real intention to bestow such things. Reply. This Answer is indeed unworthy to be considered, since it so much reflects upon the Divine wisdom and goodness, of which we and all men ought to entertain generous and becoming thoughts: His promises and threatenings too, are real and serious. It is not to allure or flatter Men to live holily, that he promiseth to lengthen their days; when he well knows he had absolutely fixed the Period of their life.

3. HE says, A good life is a long life, and that Abraham died in a good old age, because he was a good Man. Reply. I know not whether I should smile at the wit and ingenuity of this Answer, or commend the Author for his happy invention: But it matters not which of them we admire.

4. The wicked (says he) are said not to live out half their days, because according to the ordinary course of nature, the date of their lives might have been longer. Reply. But if the Period of their lives be absolutely determined, this supervenient Decree takes away that supposed possibility of their living longer. 2. This Answer is so slight and inconsiderable as to the end for which it is produced, that it does not in the least agree with the words of the Text; for in this sense, many godly Men may be said not to live out half their days. But the Psalmist by such a phrase holds out, that the impiety of the wicked is the cause that their days are shortened; which he could not have said, if their days had been absolutely determined.

5. HE says, The wicked may be said not to live out half their days, in respect of their hopes and expectations. Reply. The sacred Text makes no mention of the hopes and expectations of the wicked; nor does this Paraphrase any ways agree with the Psalmists intention.

1. THE Psalmists intention was to show, that wickedness is the reason and cause of Men's short lives. Now if he had only meant their hopes and expectation, he needed not have made any mention of the wicked; for this might have been applicable to the most part of Men, both good and bad.

2. IT agrees not with the Text, for if their days be determined, they live out their whole time, let them die whensoever: So that he could never have said, They shall not live out half their days. And indeed this had been no great punishment inflicted upon the wicked for their Sins, if it mean only their hopes; for good Men may thereby be as well included: and the wicked are not a whit more unhappy than others, if the case be so.

THE Author is angry with me, because I said, That if we consult experience, we shall find the Religious and Virtuous Men enjoy ordinarily far the longest lives. Truly I see no reason to repent what I said, nor does the wise Man's Observation any ways contradict this; for all that he aims at there, is to show, that a good Man's Righteousness will not be able to defend him from the malice and cruelty of the Wicked, and that Wicked Men may pass on in their Sins without control.

THAT the Divine promises are notable encouragements to live holy and devoutly, is very plain and undoubtable: But yet it may be questioned whether, according to some Men's principles, they be useful for the foresaid end.

A SECOND argument I did urge, was taken from the pious and devout Prayers of the Righteous, and their turning from their Sins by an hearty Repentance. To this he Answers, That the Divine Statutes, although they be irrevocable, yet do not exclude the use of Prayer, because it is included in the Decree. Reply. I have already told if there be any condition, the Decree is not absolute: But because I find the Author has always recourse to this fancy, I shall briefly evidence, that the Author cannot make use of such an evasion. Prayer and Repentance (says the Author) are conditions absolutely decreed, and therefore they are necessary. Reply. The Stoics may have recourse to this, as well as you: For Prayer and Repentance are hereby made necessary, not because Men elicit those acts as parts of their duty, but because they cannot do otherwise. And thus the Prophet Daniel could not but pray, that God's anger should be removed from his people Israel; because it was absolutely before decreed. The like was David's case, and others, mentioned by the Author.

BUT by this means, the promises of Scripture can be of no use to induce us to live holily, for they are not conditional: Thus, if you obey the Divine Statutes, ye shall live long; and if ye rebel, ye shall be punished. But you shall obey the Divine precepts, and live long; and you shall live wickedly, and have your days shortened.

THAT Prayer and Repentance have been the means of prolonging many Men's lives, is obvious to experience; some few instances to confirm so plain a truth, I laid down in the first discourse. I shall therefore now only examine the Author's Answer.

THE first instance was concerning the case of Nineveh, where I told, That their Repentance did prevent the Execution of the threatened Judgment. To this he answers; 1. That Prayer and Repentance do not move God to change his Decree. Reply. We do not say that they do, only we say, there was no absolute, but conditional Decree in the case. 2. He says, That their Repentance was from Eternity decreed. Reply. How then could the threatening be serious? Do you think that a holy, wise, and just God would threaten to inflict a Judgment upon a people, when he had absolutely decreed that such a Judgment should not be inflicted? To this, which he could not but take notice of, he answers, That such threatenings only imply, that the nature of the crime deserved to be punished with this Judgment. Reply. I know the merit of every Sin is death, but this is no Answer to the difficulty, for the threatening not only implies the demerit of the offense, but also expressly declares, that the Judgment threatened should be inflicted, if they did not by their Prayers and Repentance prevent the Execution of it.

A SECOND instance I urged, was Hezekiah's recovery, &c. To this he Answers, 1. That we must distinguish between the threatenings and decrees of God. Reply. Well, we shall observe this caution, but upon this proviso, that the Author will not make the threatening inconsistent with the Decree: for if God had absolutely decreed that Hezekiah should not die 'till the fifteen years were expired, then how could the threatening, Thou shalt surely die and not live, be serious? But that the first was not absolutely decreed appears to be plain; for otherwise, how could the fifteen years be said to have been added to his life?

2. HE says, The denunciation of death was a conditional commination absolutely propounded, inducing Hezekiah to Repentance, having no respect to the absolute Decree. Reply. This Answer is not conformed nor agreeable to the Author's principles, for he alledgeth that both the threatening and Repentance are absolutely decreed: now if the threatening had been an argument to engage Hezekiah to Repentance, we must suppose that Repentance was not absolutely decreed, but a thing depending upon Hezekiah's will; otherwise both the threatening and Repentance were slight, and of no force: Nay indeed, since the commination was only a Moral act, it might have been an inefficacious motive. But since it had (as the Author will say) its efficacy from the internal operation of the holy Spirit, hence is it, that Repentance can be no condition required on Man's part, since it is not in his power not to Repent when God works it in him. And truly this makes the threatening ridiculous, for how can it be a motive to induce to Repentance, since Repentance is absolutely decreed, and in time by a Physical predetermining act wrought in Man nill he will he.

HOW the Author will be able to absolve himself from having any respect to the two dangerous opinions, he says we must by all means avoid, I wish he would seriously consider.

I DO not well understand the meaning of one phrase the Author useth, viz. That God did not Will that Hezekiah should die when he threatened him; only he willed that there should be such a threatening. This is indeed pretty subtle, but I know not for what end it was brought: Sure it is not very pertinently alleged, if he thinks hereby to prove, that there is no opposition between the Decree and the threatening; as may appear by what I have already said.

3. WE must distinguish (says he) between the conjectural certainty of death, inferred from the fatal events which frequently accompany dangerous Diseases; and the infallible certainty of death, inferred from the Decree. Reply. The distinction is without controversy good, and it is but reason we believe it; but I assure the Author's application is not always allowable. I shall make this out by considering how he applies this distinction. In respect of the first (says he) Hezekiah's death might have been said to be certain. Reply. We are not to debate what might have been, but what really was. Now that denunciation, Thou shalt certainly die and not live; was no conjecture taken from the danger of the disease, but a prediction or prophecy revealed by God to his servant Isaiah.

ANOTHER instance I urged, was Ier. 18. 7, 8. where we have a lively proof of the virtue and efficacy of Prayer and Repentance. To this he repeats his old answer, That they are therefore efficacious because included in the Decree. Reply. If they be indeed as absolutely decreed as the end, then they are truly efficacious, but not as conditions required of us to perform, but because they cannot but be efficacious, because▪ decreed: And thus all things come to pass fatally.

A THIRD argument to prove that our lives may be extended or shortened, I urged from the use of Medicaments. To this he Answers, That it is a precarious principle to separate the means from the end, since the Decree is of both. Reply. If the Decree including both be absolute, then both the means and the end must be: But then, as I already told, the means are placed not in reference to the end, but because they could not but be placed. There were but two consequences which we have always alternatively urged; namely, if the Period of Humane life be absolutely determined, then either Humane care and industry is needless, since all the Medicaments of the World cannot prolong our life one moment beyond the Divine decree; nor the neglect thereof shorten our life: Or else those Medicaments we must use are likewise absolutely decreed, and then we must of necessity use them: And thus all care and choice, all consultation and deliberation is quite destroyed. The skillful Physician upon this account deserves no praise, nor the ignorant any challenge; for the necessity that is placed excludes both.

NOW if the opinion the Author maintains does not condemn the use of Medicaments, yet it introduceth a fatal necessity, which is every whit as repugnant as the former, and inconsistent with the principles of Reason and Religion.

AND thus Abraham could not neglect the care of his Son Isaac; and Hezekiah could not but use the means, notwithstanding he knew fifteen years should be added to his life: for in the Author's judgment both were absolutely decreed.

4. I TOLD, Nothing is more evident, than that there are several things which have a Physical efficacy, both in the prolonging and shortening of our lives. He Answers, 1. That God does not hinder second causes from acting, according to that power he hath implanted in them. Reply. Although this be no Answer to the argument, yet I shall take notice of it, as I have done of many things which did not much deserve to be regarded. And 1. That God does not for ordinary hinder second causes from acting, according to that power implanted in them in their Creation, is true: But yet in extraordinary cases, the supreme Governor of the World may overpower the Wills of the free Agents, and hinder them from acting what their Wills are bent to commit, and he may impede natural Agents in acting what naturally they are determined to do. But 2. How can the Author imagine this to be reconcilable with his opinion? For it is the nature of a free Agent to elicit actions freely; but if God has from the out-goings of Eternity absolutely decreed everything they shall do, they are no more left at liberty to do or not do, but they most of necessity elicit the act they are determined to. But the Author adds, That all things which conduce, either to the prolonging or shortening of our life, are included in the Decree. Reply. If they be indeed included in the Decree, then it is not absolute but conditional, and upon foresight of men's being placed in those circumstances; but if he say that all circumstances are absolutely decreed, then I again tell him that he must show us how all things come not to pass by a Fatal necessity.

THE last argument I urged, was, That many Men had lived longer, if they had not foolishly exposed themselves to danger. To this he Answers, That Men's exposing themselves to danger was included in the Decree. Reply. If the Author means that God did foresee all the circumstances which Men are placed in, in time, and then decreed the Period of their life; he may indeed say, that Men's exposing of themselves to danger is included in the Decree: But if he thinks that God did decree that Men should be exposed to those dangers which put a Period to their lives; then he entertains unbecoming thoughts of God; and wherever he learned this Doctrine, I am sure it hath no Foundation in Scripture. See this more fully cleared, Period of Humane Life, pag. 133, 134.

THERE remains no more now, but that I conclude with my earnest entreaty, that Men would heartily comply with the last words of the Author's discourse; namely, That it is our wisdom and advantage to live as those, who know that e're long a Period shall be put to their Beings. If the Author be offended that I have considered his Answer, I hope I shall please him by saying, Non equidem vellem, sed me mea Fata trahebant.

FINIS.

AN APPENDIX.

WHEREIN SEVERAL OBJECTIONS, URGED In private Conferences, are examined. TOGETHER WITH A Survey of Mr. GALE'S severe, but groundless charge.

THE great desire I have to clear all doubts which can be urged against the opinion I defend, has engaged me in several private conferences to try what arguments men of better judgment than myself can produce.

But the truth is, instead of arguments, all I could hear urged was odious censures, which as I have always accounted unquestionable evidences of a bad cause, so do I apprehend that method very incongruous, either to convince others, or to find out the truth.

And although I have no great desire to put my hand into a Hornets Nest, yet because I now intend to put a close to this debate, I shall briefly examine all those particular charges I have met with, hoping that henceforth men will show more candor and ingenuity, and not rashly and inconsiderately calumniate an Author they know not, nor condemn an opinion with hard words, when they can urge nothing of reason against it.

The first heavy charge I met with, is, that the opinion I defend is not Orthodox, and that the Author is an Arminian; this censure I have in part already considered, I shall therefore now only desire to know by what rule they measure an opinion to be true or false? If they will make Scripture judge, I am sure their charge is false; see Period of Humane Life, pag. 118, 119, &c. Nay, if they will but stand to the determination of reason, they will find themselves at a loss; but if they run from Scripture and reason, and make their own crooked fancy the rule, I cannot help the matter.

Common experience convinceth us, that the most uncouth notion is judged Orthodox by some men, and that the best opinion has not had the good hap to be entertained by all men; but the odious censures of men is not enough to make a good opinion bad, otherwise we should be continual seekers, but never find one Truth.

I confess they are but little acquainted with the Writings of Orthodox Divines, who say they oppose the mutability of the Period of Humane Life; for my own part I could never find any condemn it but the Stoics of old and of late Mr. Hobbes, and his Disciples, and those who run up to the absolute decrees of Election and Reprobation. And although it be rejected and disallowed by such, yet I hope they are not the only Orthodox Divines.

The present age (God be thanked) is wiser than to be affrighted with the word Arminian; those who use such Objections may please themselves to dispute with Children; but if they combat with Men, they will be but jeered and contemned. I confess some few years since it was scandal enough to be called an Arminian; but those dark days are gone, and I hope in after ages that which some men account an opprobrious charge, shall be esteemed Honorable.

Notwithstanding all this, I do not say that I am an Arminian, nor am I offended at others who call themselves Calvinists: But methinks it were more Christian like to reject all such names which keep up differences amongst us, than to say, I am of Paul, and I of Apollo, and a third distinct from both, I am of Cephas.

2. Some men have told me, if the shortening or lengthening out of our life doth depend upon our use, or neglect of the means, then God's particular providence in Governing the World is enervated, if not quite destroyed.

Answ. I have been far rather induced to believe, that the Antithesis of the opinion we defend, opposeth the Divine providence; for truly if all things are fatally fixed from Eternity by an absolute Decree, whether there be any providence or not, things must come to pass according to that sempiternal series and concatenation of causes; but by maintaining the mutability of the Period of Human Life, the Divine providence doth most conspicuously appear, sometimes in removing those things which should have put a Period to our Being; sometimes permitting us to be exposed to unseen and unexpected dangers. O how wonderful, wise, and mysterious are the ways of God! His Providence is universal, and extending to the most inconsiderable actions. But yet we must not foolishly imagine, men are acted like mere Machins. The Divine providence doth not destroy the innate freedom of Human natures. It is indeed evident by the light of nature, that the great Creator of the World should order and govern it. No Parent is so regardless of his Children as to expose them to the dangers of the World. The very Brutes by a natural instinct guard, secure, and take care of their young. And can we think that our kind Creator who has implanted these principles of Care and Kindness in his Creatures towards their off spring, shall be less regardless of his own Creatures.

We then heartily accord that the Divine providence is vigilant and universal, and the opinion we maintain gives us all the encouragements that can be, to entertain so noble and generous thoughts of that adorable Being, who upholds us in Being. How frequently had a Period been put to our lives, if his watchful eye and careful providence had not red us from imminent dangers.

When I consider that the Period of my life is not immutably and absolutely fixed, but may be Millions of ways shortened, this encourages me to cast myself upon the Divine ear and providence. But for others who are of a contrary opinion, I confess I cannot see how they have any motive to do so, for they being once confirmed in that opinion, that their days can neither be extended nor shortened, they need use no diligence for their safety; they cannot be encouraged to address themselves to their Heavenly Father by Prayer, since all Care, Diligence, Prayer, &c. are ineffectual, and cannot alter the determination.

3. Others have told me, that I make the Creature independent.

Answ. They may as well say, I make the Creature the Creator, for both are equally false. I confess it is not in my power to keep men from deducing illegal consequences, and leading an opinion with inferences it is utterly unacquainted with: yet, since they are pleased to observe this method, I will first vindicate my own opinion, and then examine whether theirs can be more justly condemned.

First, then altho I grant that the Period of Humane Life, is for Ordinary, Mutable; yet, I constantly affirm, That God is the Supreme Moderator and Governor of the world, and is this to make the Creator independent? nay, Almighty God not only adhibets a general concurrence, but he also in a more special and particular providence, either affords or withdraws occasions of Safety: It is in his power to Shorten or Prolong our lives, and this he does many different ways, which because they are sometimes ordinary and common, we but seldom regard them, but when by an extraordinary providence he affords us unexpected deliverances, we are then more Sensible that his hand brought us help; And is all this a deifying of the Creature?

That Man, Created a free agent should be absolutely and Physically predetermined to act, is a harsh notion, quite contradictory to the common sentiments of mankind, and yet by opposing this Predetermining influx, I do not make man an independent Creature; for an independent Creature is a plain contradiction; but it is evident enough, that it implied no contradiction, for God to Create a free agent, who shall not stand in need to be Physically predetermined to every act. Now this once being admitted, it may easily appear, that the Period of Humane Life is not immutably fixed; for since man acts freely, he may either choose or reject, this or the other means upon which the extension, or abbreviation, of his Life consists.

And yet Man is not hereby made an independent being; for as God hath set bounds to him, over which he cannot pass, It being appointed for all men once to die; So hath he also absolute rule of him, and may say, return ye Children of men. And thus although man is made a free agent, yet he is not exempted from the Divine Providence.

But, Those who defend the contrary opinion, although they grant that man does in all his actions depend upon God, yet, they of necessity must deny that he immediately depends upon him: for, besides the Divine eternal Volition, they more over add a Physical predetermining influx, efficaciously and irresistibly moving the will, which must necessarily mediate between the Creator and Man.

And thus, although God has not absolutely decreed the Period of every Mans Life, nor does by a Physical predetermining impulse move him to act, which should make him rather a Machin than a Man, yet Man is not independent in acting, but depends immediately upon the Divine Will, as I have already explained.

Indeed he who thinks the Creature is independent, if it be not Physically predetermined to act, entertains a strang notion of independency: for it is certain that the Humane Will is not thus predetermined to sinful acts, and I also desire to know if necessary agents be thus acted: methinks such a superadded determination is very needless since that natural propention, which the great Creator endued them with, is fixed and permanent and sufficient enough to determine them to act: for instance the Fire, by it's natural determination, necessary burns the wood, and it needs no impulse, or superadded motion to determine it, and yet neither the Human Will nor free agent are independent beings.

But not to insist in the refutation of such trivial censures, which the Authors can never form in mode and figure against what I have laid down in that discourse, I shall now in the close examine Mr. Gales severe charge laid down in his Court of the Gentiles part 3. page.

As an Appendix (Says he) to natural Philosophy, we may add Medicine which has had a powerful influence upon Atheism in this regard, because these proud Naturalists observing by long experience many excellent qualities, virtues and Medicinal influences, in several Minerals, Stones, Plants, Animals, &c. hence would fain persuade themselves and the World, the term of Mans Life was not fixed but variable and determinable by their art and Medicaments, which piece of Atheism continues to this very day very common.

Methinkes Mr. Gale if he had been so good natured, might have very well spared this Scandalous language and not have treated those Learned men so contemptuously; but I see it is his humor to make everything have an influence upon Atheism, and to quarrel with all Philosophy but his own Reformed Scheme: and yet it is ten to one if some ill natured Inquisitive men find not out some vanity, and malignity in his own, which whether it may arise from the vanity and malignity of the object. Or 2. From the vanity and malignity of the subject. Or, 3. from the curse of God or both, is an Enquiry I shall not determine in, till I better understand what sense these phrases can admit.

But methinks it is a strange thing why he is so much offended with Pagan Philosophers, since he alleadges as a prime cause of vain Philosophy, the innate, congenite darkness or the native ignorance of the understanding; now how unreasonable is it to challenge men for erring if ignorance be congenite or native to the understanding? He may as well be angry with them because they had not these clear revelations of the Divine mind we are now blessed with.

And yet, although there were many errors in their Philosophy, we must not therefore condemn natural Philosophy nor reject all those arts and sciences which have errors necessary (in this imperfect state) annexed to them; if we do so we must reject all arts and sciences and even his (I had almost mistaken and said) own reformed Philosophy. That Idolatry, Atheism, &c. are the effects of natural Philosophy, is a dangerous position of the Authors; for by the dark light of nature men may know that there is a God and that Divine worship and adoration is only to be given to that Supreme and Adorable Being, and if natural Philosophy be rejected how shall we be able to dispute with Atheists who wickedly deride Sacred Writ.

But as natural Philosophy hath no powerful influence upon Atheism, so neither hath Medicine, which he adds as an appendix to the former, however the Authors unbounded Zeal transports him beyond the just bounds of civility and moderation.

And now, that I may more particularly examine this censure, I shall first show that Mr. Gales memory is as weak as his judgment▪ and that he has quite forgot that he makes this piece of Atheism the effect of Pagan Philosophy. Secondly, I shall make it evident that those proud (as he imprudently and with more arrogance calls them) Naturalists were neither proud in there observations he contemns, nor proud in the inference deduced from thence: and Thirdly, I shall make it plain that Mr. Gale may be justly charged with maintaining more dangerous opinions.

I begin with the First, to show that Mr. Gale elsewhere seems to condemn himself for saying, that it is the effect of Pagan Philosophy to say, the Period of Humane Life is variable; to make out this I shall only desire him to review part 4, page 455. Where he will find himself saying I am not ignorant (the words are Mr. Gales) how much some of late, as well Divines as Physicians, have essayed to exempt the Period or term of Humane Life from the immutable determination of Divine providence; but how much this hypothesis contradicts both Pagan and Sacred Philosophy, will be more fully evident, by what follows.

Now, methinkes the Author took too much pains to note, that an effect of Pagan Philosophy, which he confesseth, is contradicted by it: but not to take anymore notice of the Authors fighting with himself: I shall proceed to the Second; Namely, that Physicians were neither Arrogant in there observations▪ he is pleased to mention none yet in that inference deduced from hence.

First they were nor proud in their observations; for to take notice of the excellent qualities and virtues of Herbs, Minerals, Animals, &c. is so far from being discommended and reprehended, that it is rather to be regrated, that men of learning and abilities should want encouragements to proceed in such enquiries: and truly those who lay out there time in such a commendable study, will unquestionably be celebrated by posterity, when the names of those who discourage them shall be unsavory if not extinguished.

Can it be questioned by any, who pretends reason, that there are excellent noble and specific virtues in some Plants, Animals, and Minerals against several destempers? if this be doubted common experirience will abundantly attest it; but since this is so plain and evident is it not lawful from hence to infer that the Period of Human Life, is not absolutely fixed: for if this were true it were needless to search out the virtues and effects of those things, which can be used to no purpose.

But the great charge is, that to affirm the term of Men's lives is mutable, is a piece of Atheism.

To prevent such calumnies there is no help but according to the old saying si accusasse sat esset quis foret innocens? And I am sure the Scriptures teach us another lesson and right reason too; as for Pagan Philosophy I confess I am not so much concerned to examine it. I Know he has the Stoic Philosophers Patronizing his notion, while in health, but I doubt if sickness does not alter their judgments. It is indeed good company to see the most strict Stoic and those of that persuasion, post away messengers for the Physician when under diseases; which is evidence enough that they do not believe the truth of what they maintain.

That the Hypothesis we defend contradicts neither natural nor Sacred Philosophy, has been plainly enough demonstrated in our former discourse, neither doth Mr. Gale for all his promise, urge it with any argument, but instead of doing so he himself seems to be guilty of that which he injuriously blames in others: And thus I am led to the third thing proposed to be discussed; namely, that Mr. Gale may be justly charged with maintaining more dangerous opinions; and to make good this charge I shall only (because of the intended brevity) mention two particulars.

The first is laid down in the Court of the Gentiles page 367. where distinguishing God's Justice in Absolute and Ordinate he adds, that God by his absolute justice and dominion can inflict the greatest torments even of Hell itself on the most innocent Creature. This is indeed a morsel which sober men cannot well swallow; it being so quite contrary to that common notion which all mankind entertain of God, and to those excellent attributes of his glorious nature; by which he has discovered himself to the world both by his word and works.

That Almighty God is to be admired for his excellent power and works of wonder, no sober man ever doubted, but to admit an unlimited power incompatible with the principle attributes and perfections of his Glorious nature, such as his Goodness, Holiness, Mercy and Justice, this were instead of exalting his excellent power, a denying of a Deity or at least a making him, who is altogether Holy, merciful and Good, seem (it is horrid to speak it) Savage and Cruel. The Divine goodness, truth and sanctity assure us that he can do nothing that is unbecoming his Glorious nature nor repugnant to his chief perfections displayed in his Sacred Word and daily evident by his Works.

Let us here appeal to judicious Mr. Calvin lib. de Etern. Dei predest. Sorbonicum illud dogma in quo sibi plaudunt Papales Theologastri detestor, quod potentiam absolutam Deo affingit: Solis enim lucem à calore evellere facilius erit, quam Dei potentiam separare à justia and page 191. facessant ergo procul à pijs mentibus, monstrosoe illoe Speculationes, plus aliquid Deum posse quam conveniat, velem sine modo ac ratione quicquam agere, &c.

Surely if to destroy the righteous with the wicked temporally was rejected by Abraham as a piece of injustice, unbecoming the Divine goodness. Gen. 18 25. That be far from thee to slay the righteous with the wicked, Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right: how much rather may we say so, when men tell us that God can inflict the greatest torments even of Hell itself on the most innocent Creature; it were easy to answer all the silly instances brought in defense of this horrid Doctrine, but I have said enough in the passing against it, only I must add that this is a most dangerous opinion inclining men to entertain unworthy conceptions of a Deity. Plutarch lib. de Superst. discoursing of the folly of the Pagans, to pacify there offended God's Sacrificed men and women to them, adds that Diagoras, and his Followers more reasonably maintained the Being of such God's than those who confessed a God, and believed they could be appeased by such Savage cruelty.

The Second particular I shall instance, is laid down pag 483. and frequently else where, God (says he) is the prime efficient cause of the material entitive act of Sin. I know some others have undertaken the defense of this infamous Tenet, but patronize it who will, it is an uncouth opinion and chargeth the Holy Lord, who is not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, with Men's Sins.

I confess, I could never yet understand what more was asserted by those blasphemous Heretics, who boldly affirmed that God was the Author of Sin; for which pious antiquity did jointly condemn them; for if the evil or obliquity of Sin be (as they say) either privation or relation, it is evident that they necessarily result from the placing of such actions and cannot but follow their acts.

It is indeed pity, that our Reformed Divines should be all blamed for the faults only of a few who have imbibed this Dominican venom, and I have often regrated to see the Jesuits so miserably baffle men, maintaining this odd and uncouth notion, and yet it is but unhandsom dealing to charge that notion upon all reformed Churches, which has been always condemned by the most Judicious Writers we have.

But to dispatch this as quickly as I can, I shall only desire a satisfactory Answer to the few following Queries.

First, If God be the prime efficient cause of the material entitive act (that I may use his phrase) of Sin, does not God necessitate the Will to Sin? since Man is hereby made the Instrumental cause and God the principal overruling efficient cause; and do you think that the Instrumental cause, can resist when the principle cause irresistibly determines it to act?

Secondly, Is not the act prescinded from the object? A mere fancy and notion: Can there be either Love or hatred when their is no object to terminate them upon?

Thirdly, If the material act of Sin be Good, is not every sinful act Morally Good as well as Morally Evil.

Fourthly, When we enquire if there be anything in the hatred of God that is good, do we not Speak of a particular act terminat upon its object, and not of a Chimerical act which can have no being?

Fifthly, Is not that Sinful which is prohibited? but the act itself is forbidden Men, or forbidden to do such and such things, and their doing or acting makes them liable to punishment. Do not Men by doing or omitting that which the Divine precepts forbid, become guilty? Is not Sin a transgression of the Law, and do not men transgress and violate the Divine precepts when they either commit or omit the forbidden action? Hence is it that very many Learned Men rationally conclude that Sin is not a privation, but a positive thing, since the act is always forbidden, and therefore it must be formally evil; and I confess it is a hard matter to conjecture what can be the foundation of that privation; or if the act be placed, how the obliquity does not necessarily result.

Sixthly, To permit is properly a not hindering or impeding Men to act; therefore the act is permitted, for what can be hindered cannot be properly said to be permitted, but the obliquity is such.

Seventhly, If it were the obliquity and not the act that is permitted, then neither Devils nor Men could tempt us to Sin, for they cannot do anymore but Intice and Allure us to the committing or omitting of the Acts, which being placed, the obliquity does necessarily result.

Eighthly, Are Man any other ways said to be hindered from Sinning, but because they are impeded from committing the Act; how then can the Holy Lord, be the prime efficient cause of the substrate matter, or material entitative Act of Sin?

I have indeed seen an excellent M. S S. where this odious opinion, which has made our Church is solidly rejected; till such time as that become public, these few Arguments I have pitched upon, may be of use to convince us that Mr. Gale is in a mistake.

I should now have proceeded to the consideration of those Arguments he brings in defense of his opinion, but I find this will be more pertinent afterwards, when a more fit occasion may offer.

Now to conclude, it is my hearty desire that we may not, while we are disputing about the Period of our Lives, forget our Mortality. Ere it be long a Period will be put to our beings; and is it not our greatest concernment to mind this in time, that when this Life is ended we may be admitted into that glorious assembly of the Saints above, who Live, but can die no more?

THE INTRODUCTION.

MAN in his original condition, when he first came out of the hands of his Maker, was a very noble and venerable Creature, adorned with many peculiar excellencies; and as the Psalmist observes, Only made a little lower than glorious Angels: But of all his perfections, Holiness, as it was the principal and most oriental, so did it also give a beauty and luster to the rest; It made his Authority and Power lovely and desirable, his Wisdom and Knowledge venerable, and every other attribute, which without this is terrible and dreadful, to be comely and praise-worthy. This was that single perfection that raised Man above the beasts

〈2 pages missing〉

'Tis, indeed, matter of great sadness to consider the lofty and intolerable affronts that are now cast upon Holiness; how men are arrived at that pitch of impiety, to scorn and deride

Religion, which former ages were at some pains to advance; as if Holiness were inconsistent with the principles of Generosity, and only becoming mean and morose spirits.

How transcendent a folly and madness this is, will easily appear by what I shall afterwards lay down. Me thinks the naked representation of Holiness, should be motive enough (if not to court it, yet) to engage men to correct their unreasonable prejudices they entertain against it; and even force its greatest Antagonists to become its Advocates. But alas! vice hath cast such a dark shadow upon men's Judgments, that they are become as unfit Judges of its beauty, as blind men are of colors; otherwise we might yet expect to see contemned Virtue much more in vogue than ever Vice was.

To excite our desires, Scripture has represented it under the most comely dress, has discovered its beauty and excellency, and recommended it by the most endearing motives which are apt to work both upon our hope and fear: Upon our hope, by proposing an infinitely-valuable reward to the righteous, besides the present advantages that attend it. Upon our fear, by opening to our view the powers of the world to come, and discovering the insupportable misery that the damned suffer day and night; so that if men would but so far actuate their Reason, as soberly to consult their own interest and happiness, I doubt not but this alone should be motive enough to excite them to the practice of Holiness, and scare them from those ways of sin that lead down to the chambers of death.

It would make (one would think) the greatest Sensualist to relinquish the momentary pleasures he enjoys here, to be possessed of those eternal joys that the pure in spirit shall reap in the Kingdom of their Father: and the most hardened and impregnable sinner tremble, to think of dwelling with devouring flames.

Now the only infallible way to attain those coelestial felicities, and to evite the miserable consequences of vice, and those pains and tortures that it exposeth its votaries to, is to abandon every lust, be it never so impetuous, and to cleanse ourselves (as the Apostle adviseth us) from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and to perfect holiness in the fear of God.

For the better directing our present inquisition, I shall first briefly represent the nature of true Holiness, and show the beauty and excellency of it. Secondly, I shall discourse of its rule, and more particularly discover the several branches of Holiness. Thirdly, I shall propound several motives and inducements to engage men to the practice of Holiness; and indeed this is what I chiefly intend to insist upon. Fourthly, I shall remove all those Cavils and Objections that are urged against Holiness. And Lastly, conclude with some short Reflections and Inferences.

CHAP. I. Of the nature of Holiness.

I Intend not here to descend to the consideration of every particular branch of holiness, but to discourse of it in the general, as it is the combination of all Christian virtues: and as it is thus considered, I need not, I think, in the description of it, accurately study all those Logical rules Philosophers require in a good definition For my part, it fully enough satisfies me to know, that holiness is a conformity to the Divine Law, and a hearty and sincere compliance with those original dictates of human nature, and the Commands revealed in sacred Writ.

So long as man remained obedient to the Laws of his Maker, his holiness was untainted, and his Beauty and primitive congenite comeliness continued; but by his woeful apostasy he lost that noble embellishment of his nature, which did indeed give a grace to all his other accomplishments, and is now become ugly and deformed. Holiness and purity of Spirit are different words, but of the same signification, and are promiscuously used in Scripture to express the same 〈2 pages missing〉 present state, expects not more from us than we are able to perform. He is not so rigorous a Lord to require Brick where there is no Straw: the terms of the Gospel are accommodated to our capacities, and only require a holiness which is possible for the Creature to attain; at least it exacts and expects no more, but that we endeavor sincerely and unfeignedly to obey all those precepts he has enjoined; that we habituate ourselves to perform good actions; that the general propension and inclination of our wills and appetites be towards the doing of what is imposed upon us, and abstaining from all kind of evil.

By what hath been said, it may appear, that holiness consists not in Speculation, but in Practice: 'Tis not the knowledge of duty, but the actual performance of it that entitles men to be holy; and that too, not superficially, or in a good mode, and rarely performed; but sincerely, and throughout the whole course of our lives. For men to know their duty and not perform it, is to inhance their own misery, and to secure to themselves double stripes: and to perform some good actions, and abstain from the grosser pollutions of the world, and yet to be vicious in the general course of their lives, this is such a holiness that will never profit any man. The rule of holiness, to which we must heartily study an actual conformity, does not dispense, no not with the commission of the least sin, nor omission of the smallest duty.

But because general descriptions of things are frequently overlooked, I shall not think it unnecessary to descend to a more particular survey, and consider Holiness in its several branches, as they are plainly described by the Christian rule of Holiness.

CHAP. II. Of the Rule of Holiness.

Although the whole Canon of Scripture is useful to instruct us in our duty; yet because many things, if not approved, yet dispensed with under the old dispensation, are now quite antiquated and abrogate, I shall therefore at present confine my discourse to the Gospel-Economy, and by the rule discover wherein the Nature of true Holiness, and undefiled Religion before God consists.

touch. 'Tis an odd and strange operation, that streams of Love only meet with contempt and disdain.

Sure I am, there is a concurrence of all sorts of motives and arguments to engage us to love God; and those indeed so charming and endearing, that it is strange anybody should fail in it.

Methinks the work itself is so sweet and delectable, so ravishing and lovely, that men need not be courted to it by persuasion. O what a great deal of satisfaction, of ineffable delight, does the devout soul find in those actings of love towards God! And if the Voluptuous and Sensualist would but abandon those sinful delights he now finds so charming and bewitching, and betake himself to the practice of holiness: If he would change the object of his love, and place it where it ought to be; I doubt not but he should quickly perceive there is more pleasure, more contentment and satisfaction in the love of God, than in the enjoyment of all carnal pleasures.

That man that shall make a just estimate of things, shall be easily convinced there is nothing worthy of love in comparison of God. Alas! the pleasures of this world are but shadows and fancies, which will soon disappear! Its beauty and splendor is but gilded and delusory: and is it reasonable, nay, is it not extreme madness to place the strength of our affections on such uncertain and quickly-removed vanities?

The usual arguments of love amongst men, are Relation, Interest, or the Beauty and Excellency of the Object. Now all these lay much stronger obligatiions upon us to love God. For Relation, is he not our Lord and Maker, who gave us life and being, who as a tender Father kindly compassionates our condition, and in our low estate has carefully minded us, when our other Relations have accounted us aliens and strangers? This the Royal Psalmist experimented; and I make no question but many good men have been, and are living instances of this truth.

And indeed, that man that consults his own interest, cannot but be strongly excited to love that God who is the best benefactor, and equally willing and able to bestow favors upon him. It is an argument of a very base and mean spirit, to despise our benefactors: but thus have we requited God, who daily loadeth us with mercies, and reneweth his blessings every morning: we have, God knows, most insolently carried ourselves, even then, when he has been displaying a banner of love over us.

*As for Beauty and Excellency, what in the world can compete with him, who is glorious in holiness, and whose Name is excellent in all the earth? How quickly are all created beauties winked into darkness? At the best they are but streams derived from this glorious being; and is it not hugely reasonable, that he who is the original of these, should be the chief object of our love, and make us with the Psalmist say, *Whom have I in the heaven but thee; and there is none upon the earth I desire besides thee?

I know there is no man would take it well, nay who would not be highly incensed, and think himself much wronged, to have his Love called in question; but God knows how little reason the far greater part of Mankind have to pretend love, who stand not to break his Laws, to cast behind them, and lightly esteem his precepts, the obedience of which is made the best and surest character of Love.

*Would God it were as easy to persuade as it is to propose our duty. But how hard is it to convince men of the folly, the extreme and strange madness, of being lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God? But the truth is, there is such a mire and puddle of pollution in our hearts,* that it quite choaks and extinguisheth all sparks of Love, makes us violate the principles of humanity, and become more unguete than the beasts who have no understanding.

But if this Divine flame be kindled in our Hearts, if it be sincere and superlative as it ought to be, it will easily employ all the faculties of our soul in his service; it will engage, and enable us too, to perform the several Duties of Piety the Laws of Christianity enjoin; which because they are some of the particular branches of Holiness, I shall briefly mention, with their encouragements; and for method and order reduce to four Heads. First, it will instruct and enable us to trust and depend upon God. Secondly, to submit and obey his Will. Thirdly, to honor and reverence his great and sacred Name. And Lastly, to worship and adore him according to the method he hath himself prescribed.

I begin with the first, namely, That Love where it is sincere, is a noble and generous 〈2 pages missing〉 (says our Lord) I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what you shall eat, or what you shall drink; neither for your body, what ye shall put on: Is not the life more than meat? and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? &c. Matth. 6.25, 26. 'Tis rejected and condemned as a Pagan and Heathnish sin, to be querulous and solicitous of what we shall eat, or what we shall drink, or wherewithal we shall be clothed: for after all these things do the Gentiles seek, v. 31, 32.

I confess, as I cannot sufficiently enough pity the madness of some men, who will trust God with their Souls, but not with their secular Concerns; so could I never yet project what may be the reason why better men than the former are so apt to distrust God in times of danger and want. I wish such men would consider how shrewd a presumption this is of Atheism, at least of establishing the Epicurean notion of a Deity who is quite unconcerned about inferior beings, and sequestered from the care of sublunary affairs. For if we did indeed think that he takes notice of us, we could not but confidently rely upon his care.

Secondly, we are by the perfect rule of Piety and Holiness instructed to submit to the divine Will, and comply with the Gospel-precepts, which concerning all things are right. Perhaps the lot infinite Wisdom has carved out to us, is no ways relishing to flesh and blood. Whilst others are walking amongst roses, enjoy all secular advantages, and are placed in the sunshine of prosperity; may be we are forced to hang our harps upon the willows, and spend our few days in sorrow and grief. However, let us, not even under these sad circumstances, charge God foolishly, or be impatient under the severity of his correction; for this is no argument of the hatred of a Father. Let us rather in this case view the unspeakable reward, and the divine promises, which are sufficient arguments to revive our fainting and most languishing hopes, and able to form our souls to true patience.

Philosophers, if ever they attained to a perfection in any virtue, it was in their patience under the instability of worldly things; and yet their grounds and motives to patience were sandy and ineffectual, and no ways comparable to the arguments 〈2 pages missing〉 habit and custom, while this is the very thing that enhances their guilt: neither will it, I think, a whit lessen the crime, that Great persons have given it such a vogue in the world.

The Name of God is a sacred thing, which must not be appealed to, but in the most weighty and serious cases: Thou shalt swear (says the Prophet) that the Lord liveth, in truth, justice, and judgment. If we either affirm or promise anything by oath, it must be after mature deliberation, after we have ascertained ourselves of the truth and lawfulness of it: this the very Poet could dictate,

Nec Deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus

Inciderit—

It were to be wished, that the Hectors of this age would learn of the very Heathens more reverence; and that those men that pretend to good breeding, would be so civil, even sometimes for the companies sake, as to forbear those Oaths that tender ears cannot hear without offense.

In the last place, the divine Love, if scattered in our Hearts, will excite us to worship God after the method himself hath prescribed: It will direct us to the rule of Piety, where we shall find everything that relates to our immediate intercourse with God in divine Ordinances and Worship exactly ordered. I confess, the Heathen-world, as they were confused in their notions of a Deity, and almost quite ignorant of the eternal reward; so were they superstitious in their Worship, and sometimes ignorantly erected Altars to an unknown God. Their Worship was attended with a great deal of external pomp, was very grateful to their external senses; but it reached not the Heart. But the Christian rule instructs us to worship God in Spirit, and prescribes the best method of devotion: It requires that We worship and bow before the Lord our maker, with all possible humility and reverence; that we possess our Hearts with the greatness and glory of that Majesty we adore; that we be intent in our devotion, and not suffer secular concerns to intrude and interrupt us; that we act faith upon him, and believe that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him; and that we approach the throne of grace in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

If Devotion were not a duty, yet methinks the advantages thereof should invite (2 pages missing) and that which finally excludes from the Kingdom of Heaven, where nothing that pollutes can enter, 2 Cor. 6.9. Rev. 21.27.

'Tis indeed not wonder though the Religion of the Gentiles, which contained a prodigious mixture of vanity and impiety, gratified the inclinations of uncleanness: for if we consult their writings, we shall observe, that the most abominable vice wanted not a Deity to patronize it amongst them; which upon the matter was an establishing iniquity by Law, and an argument more sufficient to encourage than to correct vice: And although the Writings of some Philosophers have been more refined, yet the Lives even of such were full of the foulest actions. Nay, the rules which the best Masters of Morality amongst them prescribed, never reached to the purifying of the Heart.

I confess, that man that shall take notice (and who, having eyes in his head, can evite this, when men proclaim their sin like Sodom?) of the prodigious uncleanness this profane age has arrived at, shall be strongly tempted to suspect the purity of the Christian Rule, if he make no farther enquiry than to the practices of most that are called Christians. We may indeed very aptly write to the professors of this age, as the great Apostle did to the Church of Corinth: It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named amongst the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 5.1. And I am a little afraid, if the Church should strictly observe that charge that the Apostle gives there, and excommunicate all such wicked persons, that our Church should not need to brag much of the number of Christians.

'Tis indeed matter of great sadness, to consider how much the Christian Religion has suffered, upon the account of the scandalous practices of Titular Christians; and I make no doubt but this age has been at more pains than any that precedes it, to increase the scandal: but sure 'tis but a silly artifice to challenge the exactness of the Rule, and with Celsus impudently allege that the Christian Religion encourageth men to the practice of immorality and vice, since of all Religions, the Christian only can produce the strictest Laws against all filthiness of flesh and spirit. 'Tis a Doctrine, as blessed Apostle tells us, according to godliness, and lays undispensible obligations upon its followers, both to think upon, and to do, 〈2 pages missing〉 dearing a quality, and so noble an embellishment of our nature, that where this is wanting, all other advantages are little regarded; and not only men, but the great God also resists the proud, it being a vice which, besides Christianity, Morality also-condemns, as universally unbecoming to Humane nature; and that which not only disturbs ones self, but also disquiets whole societies: But God gives grace to the humble; he takes such persons into favor, as being more pliable to receive the impress of his love.

And as a humble, so also a meek and quiet spirit is in the sight of God of great price. And can there be a more convincing motive than this, to recommend meekness to Christians? And indeed we cannot pretend to be the Disciples of holy Jesus, if we refuse to learn that lesson he hath copied out to us, Matth. 11.29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart.

Although a calm and quiet spirit is a reward to itself, as every virtue is; yet it wants not a claim to a temporal felicity also, Matth. 5.5. Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth. These be the persons to whom by right of promise this stately Fabric of earth belongs. And if we now view that unpleasant vice of Anger opposite to it, this will yet add more to its luster, and help to recommend it the more effectually. Anger being such an unpleasant humor, that it makes those men it possesses unfit for human society, it being not unfitly defined by the Poet to be a short madness; which indeed agrees very well with the Wise man's verdict of it, Eccl. Anger rests in the bosom of fools. If then men would but compare the calm and happy serenity of Meekness, with that inward and outward trouble and disquietment that is the effect of Anger, they could not but esteem the one, and declaim against the other.

In the next place, our Christian rule recommends contentment as the most precious Jewel in the Saints Diadem; 'tis that noble ingredient that makes the most bitter cup sweet and pleasant: it renders things, otherwise unsavory and burthensome, to be indeed relishing and easy. This is it that seasons the meanest meal; makes a dish of herbs a feast, and a cup of cold Water please the palate: This is that virtue which makes men in the midst of storms represent a calm, and in the saddest circumstances to sing sweetly. He 〈2 pages missing〉 us in those duties that concern our selves; so it also teacheth us how to carry towards others. And in the first place, it recommends the Royal Law of love, as the spring and source of all other duties, Rom. 13.9. If there be any other commandment, 'tis briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. This, for its excellency and comprehensiveness, is said to be the fulfilling of the Law, as those who neglect it are said to sin against the Law.

Now if this rule of Charity were well observed, it would help to correct, first, all undue Thoughts and Wishes. Secondly, all injurious Words and Speeches. And thirdly, all unjust Actions and Dealings towards our Neighbors.

First, it would very much conduce to the regulating of our wishes, and to the keeping of our minds in a meek and peaceable temper towards others. Charity, if sincere, is a noble and generous virtue, which believeth and hopeth the best of all men: It thinketh no evil, as the Apostle amongst many of its other good properties observeth, 2 Cor. 13.5. It eradicates and supplants all censorious thoughts, and is incompatible with those tormenting passions of Malice and Revenge, which, as the Wise man describes, suffer not men to sleep except they have done mischief, Prov. 4.16.

And indeed this is but the least part of a Christians duty, 'tis but an evidence of the lowest degree of Charity, to retrench those irregular and undue wishes, which oftentimes do more prejudice to ourselves than others: If it be sincere, it will have a further and more important influence; it will help us to govern our tongues also that we may, as the great Apostle adviseth us, speak evil of no man, Tit. 3.2. to lay aside all malice, and all guile and hypocrisy, and evil speaking, 1 Pet. 2.1. and according to this precept did primitive Christians walk.

But alas! we have degenerated in nothing more conspicuously from their practice than in this: In place of their love, we have substituted an industrious search into the iniquities of others, Psal. 64.4. and have fully verified the Apostles description of the tongue, Jam. 3.8. that it is an unruly evil which no man can tame, a world of iniquity that sets the whole creation on fire.

Neither Majesty nor innocence can now guard against its darts; its malignity 〈2 pages missing〉 blessings, v. 10. and it is noted as an evidence that the love of God dwelleth not in those persons, who having this worlds goods, shut up their bowels of compassion from those that have need, 1 Joh 3.17. Alas! little do men know how quickly the balance may change; how soon the richest may be in poverty, and stand in need of that supply that they now in the days of their plenty deny others the instances to prove this, are more numerous than that they can be doubted or need to be related.

Indeed the performance of this duty passeth not without a temporal reward God, who accounts it a lending to himself, hath promised to repay it; and sure there cannot be better security than his promise. And I question not but all ages can attest the truth of what the Wise man observeth, Prov. 11.24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.

*I confess, I know no virtue more becoming a Christian than Charity, and scarce anymore scandalously neglected; and I am sorry to think that those good men who compassionate the wants of the indigent, should be so unworthily scandalized, as if they were but lukewarm Protestants, and established the Popish Merit: but this is a piece of madness I shall rather pity than inveigh against; and although I be no friend to merit, yet I cannot but speak honourably of those whose charity and good works make them lovely in the sight of God, who has accounted it pure religion and undefiled, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, Jam. 1.27.*

In the next place, the Christian rule requires Justice in our intercourse and commerce, and that in our dealings we be exactly conscientious, according to that great rule of equity, Matth. 7.12. All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets. Injustice is a vice so mean and ignoble, that I cannot but admire how great men should court it: and if men would but actuate their Reasons, I am sure they should never become guilty of that which, if charged with, they cannot patiently endure, nor be reconciled with the persons which freely reprove them. There is no man, I think, that would be satisfied to be called a Cheat; and is it not unreasonable to think they shall evite this character who practice injustice?

〈2 pages missing〉

were easy to show how miserably they failed. The famous Peripatetick pleaded for the revenging of Injuries: The divine Plato allowed the community of Wives: The strict Stoics patronized the lawfulness of Self-murder; and thus professing themselves to be wise, they became fools.

And yet (to the shame of Christians) how conspicuous was the moral gallantry of the Romans! how famous and glorious are they esteemed for their Justice and Constancy in friendship by all succeeding ages! their virtue did conquer respect and esteem from their Enemies, and made them beloved by those who feared their power. And here I cannot but take notice of St. Augustine's commendation of the old Romans: Because God (says he) would not bestow Heaven upon the Romans, they being Pagans, he bestowed the Empire of the world upon them, because they were virtuous.

And yet the best rules those Illustrious Hero's and Law-givers taught, are not comparable to the Laws of Christianity, upon these three accounts. First, the Pagan Law is deficient in many things, and many particular Laws mightily tend to the promoting of vice; their Law-givers being ignorant of the introduction of sin, never made any precepts against the first motions to forbidden objects. Secondly, those good Laws they taught, are more clearly revealed in the Gospel, Which hath brought life and immortality to light. As the Gospel commands only such things that are good, and forbids only vice; so it more conspicuously manifests what is good, that we may do it, and what is evil, that we may evite it. The good Laws that Epaminondas in Thebes, Lycurgus in Lacedemon, and Aristides in Athens taught, are in the Gospel-Economy more excellently confirmed; and we are now undoubtedly secured, that we do well in observing what is commanded, and in abstaining from what is prohibited; which Numa Pompilius, Marcus Antonius, and all the Law-givers either of Greece or Rome, could never be fully ascertained of. Thirdly, we have better encouragements and inducements to obey the Gospel-precepts than any other Religion prescribes. The best motive to virtue amongst the Heathens was, that virtue is a reward to itself; that it is the means to be celebrated by after-ages, and such like; which were but insignificant encouragements, if compared with the eternal and 〈2 pages missing〉 gives of the Gospel, Rom. 1.16. That it is the power of God to salvation.

CHAP. III. Motives and inducements to the practice of Holiness.

AS the naked proposal and representation of an excellent and beautiful object, is motive enough to excite our love, and draw out our affections to it: so methinks Holiness, which of all, things is the most noble, most excellent, and the most lovely, should, even abstracted from the considerations of its utility and advantages, conquer our esteem. But God knows how much our depraved natures in this lapsed estate stand in need of encouragements to excite us to our duty; and I wish common experience did not make it too certain, that all motives are little enough to form us to Holiness.

In the former Chapters I have only laid a foundation to this: for I thought it fit to tell men what I understand by Holiness, before I should excite them to it. In this dark age of the world we want not instances (God knows, too many) of men's too frequent mistaking vice for virtue; to prevent which error, it was thought necessary to show men their duty; and having done this, the next thing I proposed, was to lay down several motives and inducements to engage men to the practice of Holiness, founded solely upon this, that all those endearing arguments that prevail with us to perform any duty or action relating to our secular concerns, do more powerfully oblige us to be holy.

This is, I confess, a subject which for its nobleness deserves a better judgment, a more clear wit, and a more enlivened and quick fancy to handle it than I can pretend to: yet if I can but prevail with others to perfect what I have begun, I shall not think I have much mis-employed my time in writing this Discourse.

This Chapter is like to be somewhat disproportionable to the rest in length, it being at first the only designed subject to be discoursed on; I shall therefore divide it into several Sections.

SECT. 1. The noble pattern of Holiness.

The great inclination of Mankind to Imitation, gave ground (I doubt not)

〈2 pages missing〉

And now, seeing Examples, have so much force, methinks I hear the Captain of our salvation saying, as Abimelek said to the men that were with him, Judge. 9.48. Make haste, and do as I have done. Christ Jesus hath by his example taught us our duty, 1 Pet. 1.15, 16. As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy as I am holy. Upon which account we are seriously exhorted in Scripture to look unto Jesus, and to walk as he walked; and can any consideration more abundantly serve to inspire and excite us to live holy, than this? Methinks our having so brave an example should provoke us to follow his footsteps, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth.

There are two chief reasons that greatly prevail with us to imitate other examples. First, the dignity and greatness of the person. Secondly, Interest and advantage. Now both these motives should most powerfully prevail with us to make Christ the copy of our lives: For first, if we consider the dignity and worth of his person, is he not the Son of the living God, who in the days of his humiliation thought it no robbery to be called equal with God? He was not a person of a mean and low extraction, how meanly soever he lived here, but one of extraordinary worth, who by partaking of human nature elevated it to the highest degree of honor: He was not only the chiefest amongst ten thousands, but the delight of Heaven and Earth, before whom the Princes of the Earth must appear, and the great men, to give him an account of their works. And as for Interest, I shall afterwards make it plain, that we in nothing more cross our advantage, than in walking contrary to Christ.

But alas! how little are we moved by this noble president to mind Holiness? how seldom do we express in our actions the virtues of our spiritual King? although there is nothing more rational, more equitable and just, than to follow his footsteps who hath called us to his Kingdom and Glory; nothing more honorable, nor can advance our happiness more than to be conform to the image of Christ; yet in opposition to the most endearing encouragements, we have as much set at naught his example, as Herod and his men of war did his person, Luke 23.11. Alas! what tears are sufficient to express and set forth this exceeding great madness and insolency?

〈2 pages missing〉

us to learn meekness and humility of him, Mat. 11.29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. Throughout the whole course of his life he did evidence a spirit full of calmness and quietness. If we trace his footsteps from the Cradle to the Cross, we shall not find him either by his words or actions discovering the least expression of wrath, or revenge; but the most admirable disposition of gentleness and meekness, even then when his insulting Enemies endeavored to cast upon him the most ignominious affronts. We read, Numb. 12.3. of Moses his great meekness; but how was he once and again transported with passion! but never did our meek Jesus, by the most insufferable abuses he received, ever discover a discomposed spirit. Isa. 53.7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth. He did indeed frequently meet with extraordinary provocations to anger; but yet how sweet were his reproofs? when the Samaritans refused to receive him, Luke 9.53. he did not treat them with contumelious speeches, nor revenge himself upon them, although he could have done it with ease; but being desired by his exasperated Disciples to call for fire from Heaven to consume them, he rebuked their revengeful motion with The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. It would be too prolix a business to instance the several examples of his Gentleness and Meekness; only let us view the last scene of his life, where we shall behold lively instances to confirm this. When he did find his three Disciples, whom he had commanded to watch, sleeping, he did not upbraid them for their negligence, but gently asks them, What, could not ye watch with me one hour? and when he was treacherously accosted by his own Disciple, who became leader to a great multitude who came out with Swords and Staves to apprehend him, with what astonishing mildness did he entertain this Traitor, who had the impudence to betray him with a kiss? Friend, wherefore art thou come? Mat. 26.50. or, as another of the Evangelists expresseth it, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? This was all the hard language he treated him with. And after he was apprehended, with what horrid contumelies and affronts did his barbarous Enemies entertain him? they did spit in his face, and buffet him; (the highest affronts imaginable) they stripped him of his ordinary clothes, and put upon him a fools robe and a Crown of Thorns; and being thus disguised, they expose him to the mockery and contempt of the Spectators: Notwithstanding of all which, he opened not his mouth; but with a most sedate and serene temper he received all these abuses, as the Apostle Peter expresseth it, 1 Pet. 2.23. When he was reviled he reviled not again, when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously.

Meekness, I confess, is so noble a virtue, accompanied with so many admirable and charming advantages, that it needs (as one would think) but few words to recommend it to men; but no argument is like to prevail more with generous minds, then the example of so excellent and perfect a Pattern. Sure I am, it is the most unaccountable thing imaginable, for the Disciples of so meek a Master to be of a disposition and temper quite opposite to his.

But as his meekness, so is his humility also recommended to our imitation: As he was of a meek, so also of a lowly spirit. His first appearance upon earth was but mean and despicable; he was born (as the Scripture informs us) in a low estate, more fit for the meanest of his Disciples, than for so great a Prince. He was not brought forth in some stately Palace, nor born in a Chamber curiously decked, but in a vile Stable where the brute beasts had their residence. Nay, after he had discovered himself by his illustrious works to be a great Prophet, the true Messiah who enlighteneth everyone that cometh into the world, yet how humbly did he walk! his Companions he did choose were but mean Fishermen; his Occupation and Employment was no ways honorable; and his Revenues were but small, as he himself did testify, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air nests; but the Son of man hath not where he may lay his head.

Although his descent and extraction was incomparably great, yet he rather endeavored to conceal than to brag of it; and so humble was he, that he chose rather to attribute the praise of his admired works to his Father, than take the honor of them to himself, Joh. 8.28. I do nothing of myself, but as my Father hath taught me I speak these things.

He was not ambitious of Rule and Government, but modestly refused to be a Ruler and Judge. Nay, when the multitude thought to make him a King, he shunned their society by an invisible removal, it being quite contrary to his design in coming into the world, (as he tells us, Matth. 20.28.) he came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. And to correct the insolent pride and ambition of his followers, how did he stoop to wash his Disciples feet! a most admirable evidence of his lowliness of spirit.

And now since our great Lord and Master did so wonderfully debase himself to the form of a Servant; since in all his actions he did manifest that he was meek and lowly, how prodigiously incongruous is it for those who profess themselves to be his Disciples to be proud and lofty?

I confess, Humility is a grace well becoming our state as creatures; we are but dependent beings, having life and motion, and all those endowments we are proud of, from the Father of spirits, from whom every good gifts cometh. The fresh communications of his love we constantly participate of, are freely bestowed; which he may therefore, when he thinks fit, with an equal freedom and ease remove, without being guilty of injuring us.

Humility is that peculiar grace that qualifies and fits us to receive the divine aid and assistance; as the Apostle St. James tells us, he gives grace to the humble. Upon which account we may with the Wise man well conclude: Better is it to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud, Prov. 16.19.

I doubt not but every considering man will find his own Reason suggest a sufficient store of arguments to confute the imperious assaults of Pride and Ambition: but methinks none can more powerfully prevail with ingenuous spirits, than the consideration of Christ's humility: with this how effectually may he repel every temptation to pride, by saying, Was my Master lowly of spirit, and does it become me to be proud?

Thirdly, Christ is also set forth as our Pattern in his sufferings: If when ye do well (saith the Apostle) and suffer for it ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God; for even hitherto were ye called: for Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his <2 pages missing> there than allays the distemper, though it augments the degrees of our trouble, and disables us to bear the stroke of Adversity; yet we will not be persuaded to a calm and quiet submission to the divine Will. Though impatience exasperates the pain, yet we think we do well to be angry. If we meet with injuries, our appetite of revenge is stirred up; flesh and blood we say cannot endure such affronts; we imagine it stains our Reputation and Honor in the world, and is degenerated and servile.

Thus do we sew Fig-leaves to cover our nakedness; but the all-seeing God knows that all these repinings are arrows directed against his providence; otherwise we should with the Royal Psalmist say, I will not open my mouth, for thou didst it. To this impregnable Fortress he had his recourse, when causelessly cursed and reviled by Shimei: it was this that silenced old Eli, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good: he durst not quarrel at the message, but quietly he submits. There is a secret providence which doth overrule the most terrible accidents, and is not accountable to human Reason. All those calamities and sufferings we undergo, are ordered by infinite Counsel; and in repining at such dispensations, we indirectly blame Almighty Goodness and Wisdom.

Is it fit and congruous that God should take measures from men in his Economy of the World? is it reasonable that the whole course of things should be put out of order, to satisfy every private man's humor? can there be any greater madness, than to prescribe rules of Government to infinite Wisdom? Why then are we dissatisfied with our adverse state? why do we repine and complain?

If we did indeed compare our Mercies with our Sufferings, our Receipts with our Merits, or our Condition with that of some others, we could not but be convinced of our folly: but we still pore upon the sore; all our thoughts are taken up and in exercise about our affliction: if we would deal rationally, let us view the sufferings of our blessed Redeemer, and see if we dare make a contrary conclusion to that of the Apostle, 1 Pet. 4.1. Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in flesh, let us arm our selves likewise with the same mind: He suffered patiently and calmly for us; and it is but reasonable that Servants imitate their Master, and suffer the disasters they meet <2 pages missing> our rule, yet how ready are we to despise it, if in the least it cross our humors or carnal interest? Alas! little do we consider, that obedience is essentially necessary in order to our supreme happiness; and that torments, as severe and intolerable as they are lasting, are the lot of the disobedient.

It were to be wished that the rebellious posterity of Adam would but seriously ponder what they will be able to say in the great day of Audit. Sure I am, the whole Contexture and Harmony of the divine Precepts and Doctrines are equitable and just, and therefore call for our hearty compliance with them. The wise God never issued out any Command which could not be obeyed; he is not like the Egyptian Task-masters, to require Brick while there is no Straw. Nay indeed our duty and interest are coupled together so closely, that if we disobey and rebel, we may thank ourselves for the misery we have chosen. .

And as his Obedience is set before us for imitation, so is his Love, Charity, and Compassion also. His whole life was spent in doing good to men: how transcendent is his love in pitying us in our degenerate and forlorn estate? when we were at odds with Heaven, and incapable to help ourselves, then, even then, did he commiserate our case, and by his own Blood reconciled us to the Father. It is the greatest demonstration of love imaginable, for a man to lay down his life for his friend, Joh. 15.13. and yet more wonderful was the love of our Redeemer in passing through so many cruel sufferings for us, who were but Rebels and Enemies. O how should the remembrance of his boundless compassions transport and ravish us with love? how strange is it, that the highest endearments of Love have not inflamed our spirits, and made Love mutual and reciprocal?

Love is a most excellent affection, of a noble original, by which we resemble the best of beings; the great God being by the beloved Disciple described to be Love: and indeed well does this description suit with his dealings with men. But alas! how unlike are we to God in this? there is scarce any duty more frequently inculcated by our Savior than Love, John 15.12. This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you: and yet how little efficacy has either his precept or example with us?

Blessed Redeemer! how unworthy do <2 pages missing> since it hath produced so little love in us to himself. But however, I need not take much pains to prove that hereby we demonstrate ourselves to be of all men the most ungrate, and justly liable to the severest punishment ever inflicted upon the greatest criminal.

It would be too prolix to enumerate the several instances wherein Christ is set forth as our Pattern: sure I am, he hath by his example taught us the exercise of all virtues; and I may say (as himself said in another case) If we know these things, happy are we if we do them.

To sum up this Section, it will not be amiss to obviate an Objection, which is indeed but very trivial, although it be too commonly urged: the Objection is, How is it possible for men to conform to Christ, and be holy as he is holy? Ans. I have already told, that it is not expected that we should imitate our blessed Redeemer in all and every of those actions he performed: but in all those moral duties which he hath enjoined by his righteous precepts, and encouraged us by his example to perform, these we must by no means neglect: and to manifest the possibility of doing these, we may satisfy ourselves by viewing the pious and devout lives of primitive Christians. It is a great mistake to think we are commanded to a rigorous and strict conversation which cannot be attained; the faithful in former ages have run the same race that is set before us; they have fully enough cleared the possibility of our duty: Wherefore seeing we also (as the Apostle argues) are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, Heb. 12.1. For shame, let us rather imitate the excellent holiness of primitive Christians, than the impure practices of those who are strangers from the sacred Covenant.

O the perfect love and imitable kindness of the first professors of the Gospel! what purity, what integrity and innocence appeared in their lives? how ravishing and splendant were their virtues and graces; their Patience in suffering, their Courage and Magnanimity in death, their Temperance and Moderation, their Charity and Compassion, their Equality and Justice, and their Contempt of this World and all earthly concerns for the sake and honor of their Master? These were the virtues they were adorned with, which

There is nothing more certain, than that only holy souls are in a capacity of participating of that future felicity; and these may without the least charge of presumption claim an interest in it: But for those vicious wretches, who are wholly polluted, who have devoted themselves to commit sin with greediness, and take pleasure in doing evil; how utterly incapable are they (if they continue such) to dwell in his presence, who is not a God that taketh pleasure in wickedness?

And now seeing there is such an inseparable connection between Happiness and Holiness, it cannot be amiss if we take a short view of the excellency of this coelestial felicity, that it may more plainly appear what a notable encouragement and motive it is to holiness.

There be two things that forcibly recommend the excellency of that future state of bliss. First, A perfect freedom and immunity from all evils. And Secondly, a perpetual enjoyment of the chief good.

First, it is a blessedness wholly exempt from evils whether of sense or loss; 'tis a happiness attended with no inconveniencies, nor dismal circumstances, as the happiest state here is:

we now walk in the midst of perplexing doubts and fears; temptations increase our inquietudes, and dangers our continual fears: our complaints are by far more numerous than our joys; nay, what is our whole life, but a scene where sorrow and fears act their parts! Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of evil.

But our future blessedness quite excludes all those evils; there is nothing admitted to embitter that pleasant state, Rev. 21.4. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be anymore pain; for the former things are passed away. The holy soul shall then no more complain of any dolorous hours; the heavenly Jerusalem is a place unacquainted with everything that is uneasy and troublesome.

And yet this is but the least part of the Saints felicity: for as they shall enjoy a perfect freedom from evil, so shall they also be advanced to the fullest fruition of that God, where all the streams of goodness do finally empty themselves: Blessed are the pure in spirit, for they shall see God, Matth. 5.8. They shall see him, not as now through a Glass darkly, but then face to face, 1 Cor. 13.12. they shall, as the Angels in heaven, always behold the face of their Father, Matth. 18.10. in whose presence (as the Psalmist assures us) is fullness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore, Psal. 16.11. O the unspeakable delectability of the Saints future state! where the most blessed God shines forth in his Glory, where the beams of beauty ravish the beholders, who stand continually in his presence receiving the manifestations of his Glory!

Sure if the faint expectation of enjoying the company of virtuous men in their fancied Elyzium, did instigate some Heathens to imitate their virtues; how much more persuasive should the heavenly Jerusalem, and the City of the living God be? where the holy Soul shall be admitted to converse with an innumerable company of holy Angels, and taken into the blessed Society and Church of the first-born; where all those imperfections that embitter our communion here, are removed; where the holy Soul shall see Jesus the blessed Mediator of the new Covenant, Heb. 12. who suffered so much for sinners, now sitting in glory and majesty; not crowned (as once he was) with thorns, nor wearing a purple robe; but having on his head the most transplendent Diadem, and clothed with Majesty and Beauty. Methinks the thoughts of beholding this glory, and participating of so much felicity, should excite the most lazy to follow Holiness, and to walk worthy of him who hath called us to his Kingdom and glory.

But I confess I am not able to express half of the glory of that future felicity: The blessed Apostle seems to intimate, that all Hyperbolic expressions fall short in describing it, 2 Cor. 4.17. where he stiles it, A far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: and 1 Cor. 2.9. he tells us, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive what God hath prepared for those that love him. For although we may be assured that the reward is of infinite value, and that the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father: yet the most glorious part is hid from the eyes of viators; 'tis only those who taste the Honey-comb that can best discover its sweetness.

And yet it is prodigiously strange that the imperfect glance of future Glory that men may here behold, is so ineffectual to form them to Holiness; that men who know they may be forever happy, if they would study and endeavor to be holy in all manner of conversation, yet live as if they thought such a happy state not worthy to be noticed.

I confess, if the faithful and true God had not promised this state of blessedness, and discovered by revelation the truth and reality of it, we could never have dreamed of partaking of so much happiness. The Heathen world could never be ascertained (by Nature's dim light) that the Soul is beyond all doubt immortal, and that there is a future state of rewards and punishments. The wisest of their Philosophers, by their most laborious search, were exceedingly confused in their thoughts about it, and could at the most only entertain some probable guesses and conjectures, founded upon moral arguments, which could never perfectly conquer their doubts: They did indeed think it was very reasonable to believe that God (who is holy, just, and good) would in another life (since he did it not in this) reward good men, and punish the bad; but they could not be, beyond all doubt, ascertained that it would be so. The most celebrated Socrates, who parted with this life in expectation of a better, plainly told his Friends, it was God only who knew whether there were a future felicity or not; much less could either he or any other, without revelation, discover the nature and quality of the blessedness of that future state. And indeed, although they entertained some imperfect notions of a future life of bliss for the Soul, yet they never thought of the resurrection of the Body: although 'tis true, the felicity they formed, was more congruous by far to satisfy sensual appetites than rational Soul: the Poets Elyzium being much of the same nature with the Mahometan Paradise, exactly accommodated to their flesh and senses.

In these thick clouds of darkness and ignorance did the wisest of the Heathens walk: Exceedingly perplexed they were what to think, their doubts being greater than their hopes. But the arising of the Sunshine of Righteousness hath wholly dispelled all that darkness; the Gospel hath brought life and immortality to light, 2 Tim. 1.10. and hath undoubtedly assured us that there is a reward for the Righteous, and that Holiness shall be crowned with Happiness.

SECT. 3. Holiness the only safe way to escape the wrath to come.

Fear is a passion so extremely violent, and repugnant to Humane nature, that nothing imaginable is of more force to conquer the unruly wills of men to duty. Hence is it, that even human Laws are much more secured by punishments than rewards: Therefore if the promise of Heaven be not forcible enough to work upon our rebellious Wills, we have a Map of eternal and intolerable torments to excite our fear, and to affright us from the commission of those sins that lead down to the chambers of death; and that drawn so exactly, that it is the greatest miracle, that men will notwithstanding slight Holiness, which is the only means to evite these lasting tortures.

In sacred Writ, the torments of the damned are represented by such terrifying expressions, that it is a wonder they impress not a fear and terror upon the most daring sinner. The Apostle St. Jude describing Hell, calls it, The vengeance of eternal fire, and the blackness of darkness forever, Jude 7, 13. And the Apostle St. John calls it, A lake of fire and brimstone, Rev. 20.10, 15. Our Savior more emphatically describes it to be A fire that can never be quenched, and where the worm dieth not, Mark 9.46. All which phrases do most significantly express the severity and intolerableness of the torments: for what punishment is so terrible as that of Fire? and how unspeakably does it inhanse the misery, in that it is eternal? and that too, as inflicted by an offended God, who is executing his vengeance upon sinners.

Would God sinners would seriously consider whether they are able to endure the eternal pains of a gnawing Conscience? or can patiently dwell with devouring Flames? Whether the momentary pleasures of sin, are to be balanced with those furious reflections, those horrid stings and intolerable tortures the damned suffer day and night, where nothing of life remains but the sense of pain? Alas! will no argument prevail with men? how amazing is it to think that the everlasting God has used all the methods of love to excite men to Holiness, and to reclaim them from sin, and all to no purpose? May I not well say to such men, as St. Paul said to the Galatians, Vnwise sinners, who hath bewitched you?

〈2 pages missing〉

they endure, we may also add that celestial felicity they are forever excluded from. How tormenting will it be to think of an everlasting separation from the divine Presence, and instead of a holy Society, to keep a continual correspondency with impure Spirits?

Would God that this brief discovery of the powers of the world to come, might prevail with men to be holy in all manner of conversation.

But methinks I hear the over-zealous Professor too ignorantly objecting▪ that it is servile, mercenary, and legal, to be holy for love of Heaven, or fear of Hell. Truly if it were so as these men teach, I know not what can be the intent and design of all the promises and threatenings of the Gospel. And although I question not but it is a generous and Christian principle, to serve God out of pure love; yet I can never be induced to think, that to be holy for love of Heaven and fear of Hell, can be separate from that principle of love to God.

God knows how much in need men stand, both of arguments to work upon their hope and fear, to excite them to duty. And since he who knows our natures, has used promises to allure us, and threatenings to awaken us, we must not pretend to be wiser than God, and reject those motives he has thought fit to prescribe: and indeed, if it were not for the fear of evil, and the hope of good, 'tis to be feared, the pressing of other motives should be but a mere beating of the Air.

But that this is not servile and mercenary, needs no other argument to prove it, but our Savior's enduring the Cross, and despising the Shame, for the joy that was set before him; a Scripture sufficient enough to stop the mouths of all opponents.

SECT. 4. Holiness the main design of the Gospel, and the end of all Christ's sufferings.

Subjects who know the intent and design of those Laws issued forth by their Prince, will be loath to contemn his Authority, especially when the whole intent of these is to make them by their obedience the more happy; and sure 'tis the most unaccountable thing that can be, if they notwithstanding despise his Laws, and quite counter-act his design.

Now the main design of the Christian <2 pages missing> help himself, our blessed Lord redeemed us from our captivity, by offering up himself a ransom to satisfy divine Justice; and all this, that we might walk in newness of life. And now what ingratitude is it to despise so much love? Sure, If he that despised Moses law died without mercy, of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden underfoot the Son of God, and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing? Heb. 10.28, 29.

He must certainly be of a very base and disingenuous spirit, who takes pleasure in sin, when he considers how dearly Christ paid for it. Hath he been at so much pains, undergone such dismal sufferings to purchase our peace, and will we notwithstanding frustrate his design? how strange to astonishment is this, that men should prefer captivity to freedom?

Alas! is it not enough that our blessed Master was so barbarously and despitefully used by the Jews and Roman Soldiers, but must we be also Actors in the Tragedy, and by our sins crucify him again?

Did he not die that we might live? and shall we spend our life in offering despite unto him? Strange, that so much madness should lodge in the breasts of any into whom God hath breathed the breath of life!

I might here also add, that it is a contemning, and offering of the greatest despite to the Holy Spirit, to despise Holiness: for upon this account is the third person of the blessed Trinity called the Holy Ghost, because his peculiar office is to enable us to perform holy actions: now if we continue in our rebellion, if we reject the offers of grace, and the internal motions of the Spirit to Holiness, we do hereby become guilty of quenching the Spirit of God, and offering despite unto him; which is so horrid a piece of villainy, that Heaven threatens it with the severest torments.

SECT. 5. Holiness the most proper and effectual means for attaining length of days.

Of all outward and temporal blessings, length of days hath justly the precedency, since without this all others can afford little or no comfort: The possession and enjoyment of other mercies, can bestow no satisfaction to men lying on their beds <2 pages missing> Prov. 23.29, 30. Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath wounds without cause? they that tarry long at the wine, &c. Holiness is repugnant and inconsistent with excess, which naturally puts a period to the lives of men: It forbids all manner of vice, which leads down to the chambers of death; and keeps men within due bounds in their eating and drinking.

Before mankind had corrupted themselves by their notorious and impudent vitiousness, we read of their great length of days; but the increase of sin multiplied diseases, which hurry men to untimely deaths.

I deny not but the great Lord and Master of the Universe may, for holy and wise ends known unto himself, cut short the lives of the righteous; yet surely if we consult either Experience or Reason, we shall find it certain beyond doubt, that virtuous men enjoy, for ordinary, far the longest lives.

Some good men may be naturally of a brittle constitution, yet how strangely has their life been protracted by their moderation and sobriety? and how many strong men have had their days shortened by their intemperance and excess?

Indeed, he that considers this well, shall find, that Holiness is the most effectual means to promote long life, both upon a moral and natural account. Upon a moral account, long life is the reward which the divine promises do secure to such men; and on the contrary, wickedness is threatened with shortness of days. Upon a natural account, the fire doth not more naturally produce heat, than Holiness does procure health and length of days; and there is nothing more evident, than that the most of vices have a physical efficacy in the shortening of human life. That this is the necessary product and genuine effect of intemperance and lasciviousness, needs no other argument to prove it, but the daily examples of multitudes, whom those sins have hurried to their graves. And truly there is not any vice which does not like fire in men's bosoms torture and consume them; and so disorders and discomposes them, that they even neglect the necessary means of their health. See Period of Humane life, pag. 111, 124. Edit. 2.

SECT. 6. Holiness that which makes men honorable; vice rendering men mean and ignoble.

Honor is an ornament so noble and venerable, that he is but very sottish, if not quite brutish, who doth not court and caress it. Upon this account it is nothing strange, that ancient Philosophers, who wanted the assistance of revelation, placed man's happiness in it.

How many brave and gallant actions have been performed, which if they had wanted the bait of Honor had never been attempted! Gallant souls, who despise all other rewards, have been hereby excited to undergo the greatest dangers.

Now, since honor is so highly esteemed, especially by those who pretend to generosity; I shall, to encourage such to befriend Holiness, endeavor to prove, that the most effectual means to procure Honor, and to be in esteem both with God and man, is to live (as the Apostle adviseth men) soberly, righteously, and godly.

Only before I proceed to prove this, I shall premise one Caution, namely, that by Honor I do not chiefly understand one dignified with any extrinsical honor arising either from his Birth or Office; though both these are to be highly esteemed, and must not be denied that external respect due unto them: but by Honor I understand that esteem and reputation that the best and wisest men do give to any whose Moral honor is conspicuous; and under this notion the Stoic-Moralists hath very well expressed it, which upon the matter disagrees not much from that sacred position of the Wise man, Prov. 22.1 A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches.

Having premised this, I come now to prove that Holiness is the path-way to Honor. And indeed, this is so plainly asserted in Scripture, that it is needless to insist. The God of Heaven hath assured us, that those that Honor him, he will honor; and those that despise him shall be lightly esteemed, 1 Sam. 2.30. Much like to this, is that inducement to Holiness urged by our Lord Christ, Joh. 12.26. If any man serve me, him will my Father honor. Now men cannot honor God more, than by being holy: for the word is comprehensive, and includes all those duties that God hath enjoined; but every vice is a despising of his sacred Authority. If then holy men are those only whom God will honor, and vicious men those whom he will contemn, we may easily conclude, who are the honorable, and who are the base and ignoble. Sure those men must be honorable, whom the Fountain of Honor esteems such.

'Tis upon this account that the Saints are called (in Scripture) the excellent of the earth, and the worthies of the world, (how meanly soever men esteem them) of whom the world is not worthy: And the righteous is said to be more excellent than his neighbor. And indeed, Holiness doth not only promote the honor and esteem of private persons, but of public Communities and Kingdoms also, Prov. 14.34. Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people.

This is a truth which the wisest of the Heathens, who yet wanted Revelation, constantly taught, namely, That Honor is the reward of virtue. Hence the large Lectures they have written in the commendation thereof: it would be too tedious to transcribe even the Elogies that they have written in the praise of Virtue; and indeed it is well worthy of our observation, that as they have illustrated Virtue by their large Encomiums of it, so Virtue (which they courted) hath made them venerable to posterity, and transmitted to us their memories under the most amiable Encomiums imaginable: And however their birth was but mean and almost regardless, yet their virtues have made them more famous than Princes and Emperors. The virtues of Aristides, Socrates, Seneca, Marcus Regulus, and many others, have made their renown glorious; whileas many Emperors and great men have had their names buried in silence.

Let a man be as rich as ever any of Adam's posterity was, or (that I may extend it farther) as high as his ambitious thoughts can wish; let him be wise as Solomon, and endued with all other perfections and advantages; yet if he want virtue, how insipid will his Name be to posterity? It is Virtue alone that conduceth to fame. 'Tis true, some wicked men (called in Scripture vile, notwithstanding their authority) have been set in high places, and honored for fear, when alive; yet they never received that honor which hath in all ages accompanied the Righteous. They have had the external, (which is indeed due to men by virtue of their Descent or Office) but wanted that internal reverence and honor which is only due to good men: and I doubt not to say, that there is nothing more incongruous and unsuitable, than to see Honor given to such men. As snow in summer, and as rain in harvest; so honor is not seemly for a fool, Prov. 26.1.

Vice is in the judgment of all considering men so mean and base, that it casts a stain and reproach upon men; makes their names unsavory, and stink in the nostrils of after-ages: but Holiness forces a veneration from men, and makes posterity raise Elogies in their memory; but the memory of the wicked shall be forgotten.

Virtue was that alone whereby many Kingdoms and Empires have been raised; was that which made them so flourishing and potent, and prevailed more to their establishment and advancement, than Strength or Policy. Thus it was with the old Romans, (for their virtues are a shame to the present state of that Empire) their Clemency and Justice conquered Kingdoms, and made Rome renowned and glorious beyond all other Kingdoms and Commonwealths: and as Virtue hath raised Kingdoms, so hath it also particular Persons; whileas Vice hath cast Emperors from their Thrones, and made them as unfortunate as they were wicked.

Many of the primitive Martyrs, who were renowned by Kingdoms and Commonwealths (who keep Festivals in honor of their memories) were but of an inferior degree, and had nothing to recommend them to posterity but their Holiness and Sanctity; and indeed, any man that consults Reason, will easily find himself constrained to reverence and esteem virtuous men.

'Tis a wonder that any man who pretends to generosity should be vicious, there being nothing so mean and base as Vice, which like to cowards always lurketh, and dares not approach the light. I doubt not but this present age hath arrived at as high a confidence in proclaiming their sins as Sodom, as ever any former age acquired; and it may (to the reproach of it) be said, as ever any is like to reach to: yet till men cast quite off humanity, it cannot be expected that Vice shall have Advocates to plead in its defense. 'Tis a noble saying of the great Moralist Seneca; Licet Deus nesciret nec homo puniret peccatum, non tamen peccarem ob peccati vilitatem.

'Tis no wonder then though Vice appear (as the Devil in Samuel's mantle) under the cloak of Virtue; though Lust mask itself with the pretence of Love, and Cruelty of Zeal: but by this means it proclaims its timorousness, not daring to own publicly what it really is.

It were a large field, to descend to the consideration of every particular virtue and vice, and show that there is not any virtue but tends to the advancement of a man's honor and fame, and no vice which is not ungentile, mean, and base: But the brevity I have designed will not allow me to enlarge; only in brief I shall demonstrate the truth of this by some few Instances.

Justice is so gallant a virtue, that it advanced the renown of those whom it adorned, beyond what riches or preferment could ever bestow. The Romans were more famous, and (where they were Enemies) more formidable for their Justice than their Power: it was this virtue which in a peculiar manner made Scepters and Kingdoms submit to their Government. But Injustice is so base and contemptible a vice, that it hath made those who are captivated by it, despised as the unworthiest of men, not deserving to be taken into friendship, but to be excluded from human Societies. How unsavory hath the name of unjust Judges been to posterity, while everyone is ready to strew some Elogies in honor of the just!

To this I may annex Constancy in friendship, as a virtue as noble as amiable: For who will not admire and celebrate the man who remains fixed to his friend, whatever alterations or changes there may be in his condition? And sure whosoever fails in his friendship, lays himself open to the most merciless condition, and needs expect to be left to befriend himself when the wheel of Providence lays him below those he thought unworthy of his favor.

Of all virtues, Liberality, Charity, and Compassion are so noble, that common speech adapts this Elogie to them by way of emphasis; and indeed, I think I need not say much to raise an estimate of these: for no man can be so base as to despise those who bestow favors upon him. Sure there is no virtue that makes men more famous, that wins the hearts and affections of people more, than Liberality: but Avarice is ungentile and sordid; and so odious a vice, that it ever lessens all other virtues, and makes those it possesses the most hateful of men.

Charity is an obliging virtue; and as it hath its original from, so doth it also necessarily produce Love, and esteem too: he who prefers the necessities of others before his own superfluities, and who does supply the wants of others, does so cheer the languishing hearts of the needy, that nothing can be more generous, nor generally meets with a greater recompense of honor and esteem.

To compassionate the case of the Fatherless, of the Poor and Needy, is so noble a virtue, that the Apostle makes this qualification alone the evidence of pure and undefiled religion. It is a most unnatural and more than brutish sin, to slight and forget such.

Meekness and Humility are such noble embellishments of human nature, as I have formerly shown, that none but proud and insolent spirits, who have been always condemned as insufferable, durst ever disesteem them.

To these I may join Affability or Courtesie, as a virtue near allied to Humility and Meekness; which being noble in its causes and effects, cannot but denominate the person it illustrates both noble, and amiable, and lovely: 'Tis indeed an evidence of a very base and abject spirit, to be sullen and morose. Persons of a noble education and original, are frequently known by their condescending and obliging behavior; and I am sure Reputation and Esteem are the apparent effects of Courtesie.

Temperance and Moderation are virtues more noble than that they need eloquence to advance their value, as its contraries are too mean and beastly to be inveighed against. How brutish and contemptible is a drunken man, who is rather an object of pity, (as mad-men are) than reproach; who being a more apt resemblance of a beast than a man, deserves as little Honor, as he is ignorant what Honor means?

SECT. 7. Holiness attended with the most solid and real pleasures.

In all things that concern practice, there is scarce any motive more forcible than Pleasure; and of all pleasures, those that entertain the Soul are the most excellent. We indeed need no argument but experience, to demonstrate how ravishing sensual pleasures and delights are, how much they are caressed and courted, till men be glutted and filled with them. But alas! how inconsiderable are all sensitive delights? the enjoyment of these cannot raise us above the beasts that perish; but those pleasures which are fitted for the rational nature, are noble and lasting; and such are all those delights that arise from a holy conversation; no joy, without this, being able to make a man's life pleasant and delightful.

There is in Holiness an internal delectability, that is better felt, than it can be expressed; but how loathsome and odious is Vice? it is compared in Scripture to the most ugly and unpleasant things: But Holiness is so comely, so delightful, and ravishing, that it is very fitly (according to the Scripture-Epithet of it) called, the Beauty of Holiness. It is this alone that produces a calm and serene Conscience; from which necessarily results acquiescence and delight: and indeed, this is no fantastick and imaginary joy, (as the Atheists of this Age would make men believe) but a true and real one, affording much more complacency and satisfaction, than all the pleasures of sense. To the truth of which, I doubt not but those men who question it should assent, if they would but make the experiment; and till they do this, they give us too evident an instance of their folly, in denying the reality of those raptures of joy resulting from a holy conversation.

But besides Experience, this truth is likewise confirmed by Reason: For who is in more probable circumstances to participate of pleasures, than he who is Master of his Passions, who hath subdued his appetites, and freed himself from those imperious Lord's, who denied him the liberty of tasting and relishing pleasures? The pious Soul may have no large allowance of temporal mercies; yet having Contentment, he is richer than the wicked man whose coffers are full.

But we need not doubt of the reality of those pleasures; the Wise man hath long since put this out of question, Prov. 3.17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness. There is here a concurrence of all those circumstances that contribute to make anything delectable: 'tis a way pleasant for its plainness, and desirable for its end. There is not indeed anything wanting in it, that usually draws out men's delight.

All beauty falls inconceivably short of this; it being Holiness alone, that makes the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father: without this, all natural comeliness is imperfect, and, as the Wise man expresses it, is deceitful and vain, Prov. 3.30.

And yet what an universal Empress is external beauty become? nothing being of equal force to attract the eye of beholders as it doth. How hath she conquered the mighty, and made the Nobles of the Earth Vassals to lacquey after her? There is an almost irresistible power and force in her charmings, which conquereth the hearts of men insensibly.

*Now if Beauty mixed with so much deformity, accompanied with so much attendance and slavery, be so enchanting and attractive; how much more powerfully should the Beauty of Holiness, which is every whit perfect and unspotted, and attended with no dismal accidents, raise our admiration, and make us say (as David of Goliath's Sword) *There is none like it?

Alas! all earthly beauty will be quickly laid in the dust! a little time will deface the fairest face, and make its beauty consume like a Moth: an unexpected accident may disfigure it, and mar the most lovely features; and there is no doubt but old Age, which draws on apace, will make wrinkles in the smoothest face, and make it wither as a flower: But the Beauty of Holiness is lasting; it fades not with time, nor can it be impaired by the most loathsome and nauseating disease.

Since then Pleasure is so ready to excite our affections, and draw out our complacency, 'tis pity that the noblest, the most satisfying, and most lasting should be so much contemned. Eccl. 5.10. He that loveth silver, shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance, with increase. All the caresses of this World are unable to satisfy the Soul; but how ravishing are the joys of a holy conversation? The pleasures of this world are short and momentary, are only (as the Apostle phraseth them) for a season, which quickly passeth; but the joy of the Holy Ghost is as lasting as unspeakable; and this joy (saith Christ to his Disciples) no man shall take from you. It is without the reach of the malice of men and Devils too.

Alas! how diminutive does it make the pleasures of the wicked, to say they are short? how exceedingly does this one circumstance diminish them? But indeed this were not so very considerable, if there were a concurrence of no worse circumstances; but that which mostly is an allay and damp to temporal pleasures, is the consequence, a painful and lasting eternity of the severest punishments. 'Tis this life that puts a period and conclusion to the joys of wicked men; whileas the pious have Rivers of pleasures for evermore to delight and ravish them: 'tis at Death that they enter into joy of their Lord.

This is a subject so ravishing and pleasant, that I cannot without reluctance conclude it. O how unsatisfactory are all the delights of Sense, if compared with those Spiritual Joys the holy Soul partakes of! The delights that the Drunkard hath in his Cups and Companions, the Covetous in his Riches, the Ambitious in his Preferments, &c. fall all incomparable short of that joy that is the lot of the righteous.

The delights that the holy man enjoys do upon a double account far over-poise the transitory pleasures of the wicked. First, the present satisfaction that the holy Soul tastes of in this valley of tears, is incomparably greater than the delights that arise from sense. The soul that hath once tasted of the love of God, finds more pleasure in the very acts of mutual love, than in all the feasts of delight that sense is capable to enjoy. Food is indeed sweet to the hungry, and drink to those who are languishing with thirst: the taste does without doubt find some meats sweet and relishing, even where there is no extremity of hunger, much more where it is: for, to the hungry every bitter thing is sweet. Beauteous Sights ravish the Eye, melodious Music the Ear, and Odoriferous things please the Smell: But alas! how far beyond these is the delight which the devout soul receives in Ordinances! the antipasts of joy which their Heavenly Father bestows upon them, are more delightful than the concurrence of all sensual pleasures. The soul that is in trouble can fetch more consolation from the promises of the Word, than the carnal man can from his pleasures: Unless thy Law had been my delight (saith the Psalmist) I had perished in my affliction. Other things could not avail him, they could afford no relief: but to have access to God in prayer, and to pour out our complaints to our willing God, this is more ravishing than I can express. And I am sure there is no man who hath tasted these joys, who would part with them for sensual pleasures; and no man dare inveigh against those spiritual delights, but strangers who intermeddle not with this joy.

The very Heathens have taught us, that Virtue is a reward to itself; they experimented more real satisfaction in moderation and temperance, than in Drinking and Whoring. But Christianity gives us more uncontrolable evidences of the reality of that joy that good men even in this state of absence taste of. Into what a rapture and inexpressible ecstasy of joy did the abundance of revelation St. Paul met with put him! and the Apostle St. Peter was so transported with joy when he did see Christ in his Transfiguration, that he could not forbear crying, Master, it is good being here. How full of joy have Martyrs been in the midst of the flames? what comforts have they even then expressed? And is not all this evidence, that the joy of holy men is more real, more sweet and ravishing, than the transitory pleasures of the wicked, which in several seasons can afford no delight? a little pain or disease is such an allay and damp to their pleasures, that it quite extirps them.

But besides those foretastes of joy that the holy Soul experiments here, which, as I have shown, infinitely overwhelms all trouble and pain; that which contributes most to advance the joy of good men, are those felicities above, which are prepared for them; and to these wicked men can lay no claim, their farthest prospect being confined to temporal delights.

What abundance of delights and inexpressible pleasures are laid up for the holy Soul above! How delectable will it be, to be constant residents in the Heavenly Jerusalem, whose Streets are pure Gold, and whose Gates are Pearl? how ravishing will it be, to be always in his presence, where there are Streams and Rivers of perpetual pleasures? How sweet will it be, to be a member of that blessed Society of the first-born in Heaven, where there is a perfect concord and agreement? But I confess, I am not able to express half the joy of this future felicity: Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the hearts of men to conceive, what a store of happiness God hath laid up in Heaven for those who are holy in all manner of conversation.

SECT. 8. Holiness accompanied with Peace.

There is nothing more suitable to, and agreeable with Humane nature, that Peace; as those who endure trouble and vexation can fully attest: Amongst earthly blessings it deserves not the last place, it being a mercy which crowns all others, and without which, the fullest fruition could not prove satisfactory.

Those languishing, and much to be pitied, Kingdoms, which now lie bathed in blood, can attest the evils and mischiefs of War, much more pathetically than words can express. How sweet and acceptable would Peace (a word always sounding sweetly) be to them?

Now the Apostle St. James hath given us a brief, but unquestionably true, account of the real causes of Wars and Fightings, Jam. 4.1. From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? From these sinful causes have all the disorders and jars in Kingdoms and private Societies had their real (I speak not of their pretended) original. How impetuous are the lusts of turbulent spirits! like the raging waves of the Sea, they are still in motion, casting forth filth and dirt. Ambition is so unquiet and restless a passion, that no man is ignorant what desolations it hath wrought in the earth: How many famous Kingdoms hath it ruined and destroyed? what inquietudes and disorders are occasioned by discontentment? All these are things so evident, that I need not enlarge upon them: but how repugnant are these vices to Holiness? and can it be rationally imagined that their genuine and proper effects can be more reconcilable with it?

I confess, Religion hath too frequently been pretended as a Cloak to cover the greatest Villanies, Confusions, and Rebellions: but sure I am, nothing imaginable contains a greater contradiction, than to say these impieties have a warrant from the sacred Laws of the Gospel, the combination of which is the rule of Holiness, as I have formerly explained. Is not Christ called the Prince of Peace, and the Gospel, the Gospel of Peace? and it is certain, if men would be ruled by the Laws of so peaceable a Prince, they should be of a calm and quiet spirit: then should we indeed see Righteousness and Peace kissing each other.

When ever therefore we read in ancient prophesies of the great peace that shall be in the Messiahs reign, we must thereby understand, that the nature of the Gospel and its precepts are such, that if men would conform their lives to them, there should be an universal Peace. How strictly are all the causes of Envy, Contention, Ambition, and Rebellion, prohibited? and sure if these causes were removed, their effect should have no place: Then should the Bow be broken, and the Spear cut in sunder: Swords should be turned into Plough shares, and the Instruments of War into more necessary uses: War should cease unto the ends of the earth, and Peace should be within each wall.

By this it is apparent how much holiness conduceth to the establishment of public peace. But that which I would more especially take notice of, is, the internal serenity and calmness of Conscience, which is the only effect of holiness: and truly upon this account there is no peace to the wicked.

I might here appeal to every man's breast, whether Holiness does not calm and quiet the Consciences of men; whileas a natural horror results from the commission of vice, more heavy than the severest lashes ever inflicted by Ceditius or Rhadamanthus. What unspeakable peace and ease does attend holiness of life! there is no jar nor contention, no check of Conscience, nor wound of spirit, to disturb the inward repose of the Righteous: but that remorse that results from the commission of sin, even after men have acquired what they sinfully lusted after, is like that hand-writing, Dan. 5.5. which made the stout heart of Belshazzar to tremble, and his knees to smite one against another: It troubles the thoughts of the most daring sinner, and makes him a terror to himself. There is no imaginable torment that can equal the terrors of an awakened guilty Conscience; it hath put men to choose strangling and death rather than life: all which is fully verified by the Word of truth: The spirit of a man can sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear?

O the secret pangs and fears that possess the spirits of wicked men! the severe checks and lashes of Conscience that seize upon transgressors, which all imaginable divertisements cannot quite stifle and suppress! All the attendance of the most dear Relations cannot give ease and comfort to them. How dismal and inconsolable was Spira's condition? how amazing are the very thoughts of those gnawings and horrors of Conscience he suffered? The fears and apprehensions of a future misery, mar all the joy and mirth of carnal men. In their most flourishing state it continually haunts them, and so fills them with horror and inquietude, that they cannot quietly enjoy themselves. Whilst the Soul acts within the Body, it cannot but present those horrid and disquieting reflections.

Hi sunt qui trepidant & ad omnia fulgora pallent.

These are the men who in the midst of outward felicity are amazed with tormenting fears, which cannot be eradicated but by a sincere repentance.

But the holy Soul, in the extremity of outward troubles, enjoys an internal calmness and quiet of mind: the very Pagan, who could not be beyond doubt assured of the certainty of a future reward, could yet say,

— Hic murus ahenaeus esto,

Nil conscire sibi, nulla palescere culpa.

But the Word of truth hath made this more unquestionably sure: Psal. 119.165. Great peace have they that love thy Law, and nothing shall offend them.

SECT. 9. Holiness the best evidence of true Wisdom, and real Worth, and Courage.

Wisdom and Courage having their rise and source from nobler Principles than external helps, have therefore in all Ages been esteemed excellent and venerable virtues; and much preferable to those others which depend upon external advantages. Wisdom is (as the Wise man speaks) the principal thing, Prov. 4.7. It is that virtue which in a peculiar manner raiseth the Humane nature above that of Brutes, who act without consideration and counsel. And Courage is that which subdueth that ignoble passion of fear, which hindereth men from attempting actions praise-worthy. Hence it is, that to be called a Fool, or Coward, are such reproachful denominations, that nothing imaginable is more shameful.

That Holiness is an infallible evidence of true Wisdom, is more plain than it can be doubted. In sacred Writ, Wisdom and Religion are used as convertible terms, as words expressing the same thing. And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, and to depart from evil, that is understanding, Job 28.28. Hence the impious and wicked are frequently called Fools, and men void of understanding and wisdom. And however this profane Age of ours hath accounted those men great wits, who have cast off all Religion, and who Burlesque Scripture; who think it the greatest folly to be kept in awe by the fears of future danger, and to be kept in thralldom by the apprehension of an invisible being: yet men who consider things aright, have in all ages accounted those Atheists both fools and mad-men.

Fools, in condemning that which all wise men have assented too. But 'tis no wonder, since sin is that which overclouds and stupifies the judgment, and deprives them of those intellectual abilities whereby men acquire a right judgment of things. Alas! why should such be accounted wise, who cast themselves in the dirt and puddle, who contaminate and pollute their Souls, who prefer a temporal to an eternal felicity, who blindly and inconsiderately expose themselves to the wrath of a God revenging sin? Sure the greatest Idiots are not comparably so unwise as these men, who venture their Souls upon such hazards.

There is nothing that doth so much debase Humane nature, as sin: the Psalmist, who but upon a surprisal vented his impatience and envy, yet characterizeth himself a fool for doing so, Psal. 73.22. So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before thee. 'Tis Religion alone that is the most certain and uncontrovertable difference betwixt men and bruits. The very Pagan Satirist could say,

— Separat haec nos

A grege brutorum —

Reason will easily convince every man that will but take pains to consider, that those men who neglect their greatest interest, can never shun to be esteemed fools. Now to be serious and careful about the Soul, to be ascertained how it shall go with us in the other world, this is the greatest concern of man, about which the greatest care and diligence possible is little enough: and sure those men who design happiness (a thing implanted in the natures of men) must either make use of the right means in order to their acquiring of it, otherwise they too plainly proclaim their folly: but the holy Soul makes Religion its whole business; he knows that it is his greatest interest to be holy, and that without this he can never expect to be happy hereafter. And indeed, whatever may be the present apprehensions and thoughts of men, yet they shall ere long pass this verdict of circumspect walkers, That they were the only wise men: and the God of wisdom, who can give the best judgment in the case, does account the Saints to be wise men. Let us then hearken to the Apostles advice, Eph. 5.15. See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise.

But as Holiness doth thus entitle men to wisdom, so doth it also promote true valor; it mightily conduceth to inspirit men with courage and magnanimity: The righteous are bold like a lyon; but the wicked flee when no man pursueth. And the reason of both is plain: the one hath secured his future state; but the other expects no better inheritance. And however wicked men may be very daring, yet they cannot be said to be truly valiant; for this is always rational and deliberate: but if wicked men should soberly consider the unspeakable hazard they run upon, they durst not be so daring; for what considering man would thus expose himself to danger to be esteemed gallant, who knows if he miscarry he is everlastingly miserable? If this merits the Encomium of courage, why may not those mad-men who inconsiderately expose themselves to danger, be also accounted valiant? Nay, the Horse that undauntedly, but inconsiderately, runs so many dangers, encounters so many perils in battle, may be as truly said to be valiant, as those men: But this is to mistake quite the true notion of courage.

That man that is affrighted with a small danger because it is present, but nothing amazed with a future danger which is certain and intolerable, is certainly both Fool and Coward. A Fool, in judging so badly, and mistaking his own interest and well-being: A Coward, in being afraid for a danger because it is present. He who runs from his Colours in time of Battle, proclaims himself to be a coward, although thereby he exposeth himself to a greater danger

if he be apprehended, even the severe Sentence of the Martial Law justly inflicted upon Fugitives. How then can those men be accounted valiant, who for fear of some small danger they may run the hazard of here for Holiness, expose themselves to those vials of fury which is the portion of ungodly men hereafter?

SECT. 10. Holiness universally profitable, and above all things most advantageous.

In all secular affairs that concern practice, Gain and Advantage is the great argument and attracting inducement that prevails upon men; it is like oil to the wheel, making its motion more easy and swift. There is no danger so terrifying, but men have hazarded on, who have had this motive to animate them: this is it that prompts the Mariner to expose himself to the dangers of the merciless Ocean, that excites Servants to toil so industriously, and encourageth Soldiers to fight battles.

That men may also be inspirited and allured to court Holiness upon the account of its utility and profit, I shall (abstracting from those advantages I have already instanced) now briefly discover, that Holiness is, first, profitable to men in every condition and state. Secondly, that it is attended with all outward blessings, and wants not a claim to a temporal felicity. Thirdly, That without it all other mercies are useless, and unable to quiet the Soul. Fourthly, That it is the most incomparable blessing, and frees the Soul from the worst of evils. Fifthly, That it is the best evidence of our being in favor with God, and of our adoption to God's Family. And Lastly, That it is the best cordial against the fears of death, and affords the greatest satisfaction to men lying on their beds of languishing.

That Holiness is profitable and advantageous

That Holiness is profitable and advantageous to men in every condition and state, seems to be clearly enough asserted by the Apostle, when he says, Godliness is profitable for all things. But besides Scripture, Experience and Reason do jointly agree in the proof of this. That man that is advanced above others in riches, has no ground to expect honor and reverence from men, if he walk not according to the rule of Holiness; that is, if he be not moderate and compassionate, if he restrains not his ambition and pride: And sure, without this love and reverence from others, his condition is not very happy, he lies exposed to infinite dangers.

Again, if a man be exposed to a mean and adverse estate, is environed with an infinite number of perplexing difficulties; yet this case is not altogether hopeless: for if he be not vicious, but on the contrary religious, besides the divine aid that is engaged for his relief, the circumstances he is stated in are apt motives to stir up bowels of compassion towards such a person.

Unless the Magistrate, who is invested with Supreme Power and Authority, imitate God in goodness as well as in greatness, his Authority will produce fear rather than love. The very Moralist could say, Sine bonitate nulla majestas. Those who will be at the pains to consult Experience, shall find that good Princes have always been in the greatest esteem; and sure it is the most unpardonable villainy to attempt any evil against religious Kings.

Holiness is also profitable for Subjects to teach them obedience, and to submit, not merely upon the account of wrath, but for Conscience sake; which is certainly the only safe expedient to secure the obedience of Subjects: And, I confess, I know not how that man can be a true Subject to his earthly Prince, who stands not to offend the God of Heaven. I know some who have pretended to much Holiness, have been the greatest villains; but this proves not that the rule of Holiness gives a Supersedeas or allowance to any to disobey Authority.

Art thou a Parent? the rule of Holiness (to which holy men conform) will instruct thee to be gentle and tender to thy Children, and not to provoke them to wrath, which is the only thing that lessens their affection. Art thou a Child? it will teach thee to reverence and honor thy parents; in doing of which, thou entitlest thyself to the promise annexed to the fifth Commandment. In a word, it is profitable to make all manner of Relations live in quietness and peace, and to bestow mutual offices of love upon each other. It instructs men to be faithful in every calling and employment: and certainly the good man is to be trusted far rather than the wicked; for Religion lays an awe and restraint upon the one, but the other pretends no such motive to engage him to fidelity, especially if he may deceive and not be noticed. To this purpose Plutarch hath a notable saying: Pietate (saith he; Nat. Deor. lib. 1.) sublata sides etiam & Societas humanae generis, & una excellentissima virtus justitia tollitur.

There are several things useful for some men, but altogether unprofitable for others; but Holiness is equally profitable for all; there are none exempt from tasting its utility, but those who exclude themselves by a vicious conversation.

Secondly, Holiness is attended with all outward blessings, and wants not a claim to a temporal felicity, Matth. 6.33. Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you. The promise of inheriting the Earth (by which all temporal felicity is meant) is made to the meek: Matth. 5.8. Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth. And indeed, we find this blessing even promised to the posterity of those that fear the Lord, Psal. 25.13. And to put this beyond all doubt, we find the Psalmist repeating this five times in one Psalm, Psal. 37.9, 11, 22, 29, 34. And the great Apostle tells us, that it is Godliness that hath the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4.8. The God of Heaven hath also assured us, that he will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly. Upon this account well might Wisdom say, Prov. 8.18. Riches and honor are with me: a plain instance of which, we have in Solomon, who because of his asking Wisdom to govern his Subjects, when he might as freely have asked Riches and Honor, he receives this answer from God, I have also given thee both riches and honor, 1 King. 3.13.

But however this discriminating providence doth not so discernedly appear here, yet there is no man but can attest Vice hath impoverished thousands; there being several sins that have a natural tendency to poverty. By means of a whorish woman, a man is brought to a piece of bread, Prov. 6.26. The like we may truly enough say of several other sins. I have seen (saith the Psalmist) the wicked great in power, and spreading himself like a green bay-tree; yet he passed away, and lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found, Psal. 37.35, 36. I confess, good men may be reduced to great wants, may be destitute of necessary provisions; nay, how frequently is this the lot of the most excellent and gallant Souls? yet this may be safely said, That a little that a righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked.

But then those things that best deserve the name of riches, because of their enriching the Soul, which being more excellent than the Body, must upon that account be of greater value than these things that only respect the Body, these are only peculiar to holy men: and such are the graces of the Holy Spirit, the combination of Christian virtues, the price of which is above that of Rubies. These are riches which are of a more lasting nature than those which the ignoble of the world call riches; they are not subject to the casualties which Gold and Silver and precious Stones are; which upon that account cannot be called a man's own, as Pagan Moralists have largely and excellently confirmed: And if we will not dispute with God, and contest his determination, we shall find one single virtue receiving a more ample commendation than ever riches did; 1 Pet. 3.4. The ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is in the sight of God of great price.

Although the holy and devout Soul may be reduced to our Savior's straits, not to have where to lay his head; yet how can he be said to be poor, since he possesses him who is All? The most adverse chances that befall such a Soul, cannot denominate it poor; there is a Crown and Princely Inheritance which belongs to it. Nay, besides that glorious reversion, we have express promises that such Souls shall not be altogether destitute of necessaries to sustain and support them in this their pilgrimage.

I have already shown, that Honor and Pleasures are the attendants of Holiness: What in the world is more glorious, than for a man to conquer those lusts and inordinate appetites that seek the mastery over him? what pleasure is able to contest with those ravishing joys which result from a holy conversation? There is nothing imaginable that so exhilarates and revives men, as a calm and quiet Conscience. But I pass this.

In the next place I come to show, that the enjoyment of all other blessings can never profit that man that wants Holiness. This is plainly attested by our Savior, saying, What hath a man profited if he should gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? To have an affluence of temporal mercies, cannot so much as contribute to a present felicity, where the forementioned qualification is lacking. Outward favors, not attended and chained with real Holiness, contribute only to enhance the misery of their possessor; they being proper fuel to increase the flame of inquietude and restlessness, but unfit to allay it. The greatest plenty of riches cannot satisfy the covetous mind, which like the Grave cries, Give, give. The whole world could not satisfy Alexander's insatiable ambition; but, as the Poet speaks, Aestuat infoelix angusto limite mundi.

'Tis indeed impossible for a man to enjoy that earthly felicity he designs, if he want Holiness: For, suppose he be possessed of it, yet the secret acknowledgement of a superior power, impairs the delights that do arise from such a state, and makes him in the height of his fancied felicity startle and quake. Conscience, upon the apprehension of guilt, and the vengeance due to it, recoils upon the sinner, and disturbs his quiet enjoyment of the pleasures he might otherwise freely enough delight in. O how does it molest and torment him to have an inward principle of Fear haunting the sinner in his most retired enjoyment of pleasures, which cannot be silenced by his utmost endeavors! This, this is it that torments him with anguish and confusion, that allays the imaginary pleasure of the most charming Lust, and in the midst of laughter makes his heart heavy: which fully verifies the truth of what I said; that the enjoyment of all other blessings can never free a man from torment, nor a whit profit him that is destitute of Holiness.

Fourthly, Holiness is the most incomparable blessing, and frees and Soul from the worst of evils. What David said of Goliath's Sword, I may more safely say of Holiness, There is none like it; nothing in the world so apt to remove those disasters and turmoiling fears that inwardly work upon and damp the minds of men with severe checks and lashes, as Holiness, which being diametrically opposite to sin, which is the worst of evils, must therefore by a necessary consequence be the best of blessings.

Now seeing contraries placed near to other are the more discernible, I shall therefore take a short view of the evil and malignity of sin, that hereby the beauty and excellency of Holiness may appear the brighter, and have the greater force to conquer our affections.

To express the evil and malignity of sin, Scripture represents it by the most ugly and abominable things, by the most dangerous and terrible Diseases: Nay, the great Apostle seems to want language and comparisons too, to express the evil of it, when he calls it exceedingly evil, as if he had said, it infinitely transcends all other evils; the malignity of which, no Pen can fully delineate and describe, either in its nature or consequences.

In its Nature; the Scripture-character of it is, it is an enmity against God; a transgression and voluntary violation of his most holy and righteous Law; a disobedience of his Authority, and a wicked contempt of all the divine Attributes: 'tis the woeful stain and blemish of our Natures, the disease of our Souls, and the reproach of our Reason.

The consequences of sin are fearful and fatal. So bad a cause can never fail to produce the worst effects; for besides all the temporal calamities and mischiefs that befall Mankind, those unspeakable miseries and extreme torments that accompany men to the other world, are also the dreadful and sad effects of sin. I have already shown, that every vice is naturally attended with some particular punishment: but that indeed which is most terrible, which should mightily amaze and startle the sinner, are the dreadful miseries of another world: Alas! how dismal is the condition of those men who have lost the divine Image, and consequently his love and favor, and are liable to his fury and wrath? who are possessed with a legion of impure lusts, which lead them captive, and hurry them headlong to perdition, where they must have their everlasting abode with impure spirits and devouring flames.

How impossible is it to give a just List and Catalogue of the sad and dreadful consequences of sin, or fully describe the evil and malignity of it! But yet this imperfect glance may in part satisfy and inform us, that a holy and virtuous life, which excludes all those mischiefs and inconveniencies which both in this and the next life attend sin, is the best of blessings, and frees us from the worst of evils.

Fifthly, Holiness is the best evidence of our being in favor with God, and of our adoption to God's Family. How sedulous and inquisitive are many good Christians to understand their spiritual state and condition, that they may know into which of the two regions of the other world they shall be stated after death? This is certainly a matter of the greatest consequence, and deserves every man's most serious consideration; a mistake here being so exceedingly dangerous, like a wound in the vital parts, it proves mortal and incurable if continued in. Now the most infallible mark and character of our being in favor with God, and that which comprehends all others, is that which the beloved Apostle sets down, 1 Joh. 3.7, 8, 9, 10. Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doth righteousness is righteous. (And everyone that doth righteousness is born of God, Chap. 2.29.) He that committeth sin is of the Devil—Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin— In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil: Whosoever doth not righteousness, is not of God. Let men pretend what they will, if they be destitute of righteousness, they are of their Father the Devil, and can claim no interest in God as their Father; seeing it is purity of Spirit that gives us a title to be the Children of the most high; 2 Cor. 6.17, 18. Be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. The whole tenor of the Scripture abounds with so many such instances, that I shall supersede a tedious citation of texts.

This then being so infallible and certain a character, methinks every rational man may quickly come to the knowledge of his spiritual estate. A bad man may certainly enough know whether he breaks the divine Laws, and goes in a continued course of sin; and a good man may sufficiently know whether he obeys the divine Laws, and is sincere in his actions. These are things so plain and undeniable, that all doubts of this kind are ridiculous. Now 'tis no difficulty to draw these plain inferences: I break the divine Laws, therefore I am not of God: or, I obey them, therefore I am a Child of God. And this every considering man, who impartially considers, and exactly examines his life and actions, may be fully enough ascertained whether he be a Child of God or not. Alas! how useless and dangerous is it to ascend unto Heaven to search the secret and eternal Decrees of God, which belong not to us to pry into, that we may know whether our Names be written in the Book of Life or not? He that doth righteousness needs not fear any latent Decree concerning his reprobation; and it is the vainest thing imaginable, for impenitent and obstinate sinners to dream that God hath from eternity elected them to life. The pure nature of God is so perfectly opposite to sin, that it is quite impossible there can be any agreement betwixt him and sinners, no more than there can be betwixt light and darkness. The Psalmist acquaints us, That he is not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness. And the Apostle hath told us, That the wrath of God is revealed from Heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. But yet the righteous Lord loveth the righteous: These are the men whom he esteems his Children, to whom the promises of eternal life belong.

In the last place, there is nothing in the world that will prove so effectual to comfort men at the hour of death, as the sweet thoughts of their being separated from the pollutions of the world. How unspeakably comfortable is it for men, when they are just stepping into the other world, to reflect upon the good life they have led, and that they carry in their bosoms Consciences void of offense both toward God and towards man? This is indeed that noble and Sovereign Cordial that revives the spirits of good men, in their passage through the valley and shadow of death, and makes their comforts abound and overflow.

Death is not so small a matter as some men think; in Scripture it is not unfitly called the King of terrors: Now nothing can free men from the terror of it, but a good Conscience; and this cannot be had without Holiness, which makes all calm and serene within. It will afford men little pleasure when they come to die, to reflect upon the earthly pleasures they have enjoyed: these things profit not in the day of wrath; but the Conscience of well doing makes men salute death without dread and astonishment, and lift up their heads with joy, because the day of their redemption approacheth.

But with the ungodly and wicked it is not so; then their sins stare them in their face, and so terrify and affright them, that no wonder though in the extremity of their agony they prefer strangling and death to life. If holy Job doth so heavily complain of the terrors of God, how much more terrifying shall the apprehensions of a severe and terrible judgment be to the unsanctified and polluted? To think how shortly he must be everlastingly separate from the good things he enjoyed here, and be cast into utter darkness, to have his portion with the damned in devouring Flames, to be an everlasting resident in the Lake of fire and brimstone, where he shall be continually tormented with that gnawing worm that never dies: These are the amazing thoughts that will seize upon the sinner: his Conscience then will not sleep; nothing will be able to allay those Storms and Tempests that are raised by the fearful expectation of the reward due to sin. At death, men are generally wiser than at other times; then they begin to consider what they have been doing, and call themselves fool a thousand times for their disobedience and wickedness. The smoke of worldly cares that formerly blinded their eyes, are now dispelled; they see their folly, when it is too late to mend it; and if they do no more, yet Balaam-like, they will cry, O that I might die the death of the righteous!

CHAP. IV. Frivolous Cavils and Objections removed.

The former Chapters having discovered the Beauty of Holiness, and the mighty power and force of Arguments that excite to the practice of it; one who weighs all this by the measures of equity, cannot (as any man would think) but look upon it as the strangest prodigy, that so just a Cause should raise of its effect, and find the sons of men, who pretend to be such Masters of Reason, so monstrously foolish in rejecting it upon the account of some frivolous and very fallacious cavils: But the truth is, resolute Impiety is set upon the bench and made Judge; and no wonder though it pass an unjust sentence, and condemn Holiness because of its opposition to Vice.

The common imputations and prejudices which wicked men load Holiness with, I shall reduce to the four following Heads. First, Holiness lays upon men heavy burdens, and grievous to be born, which makes human life joyless and uneasy, they being so inconsistent, first, with Peace; and secondly, with Pleasure and Satisfaction.

Secondly, Experience informs us, that wicked men enjoy pleasure and satisfaction in their ways, there being no men so jovial and merry as they; and that men who pretend to Holiness are fullen and melancholy, and are exposed to heavy sufferings and trials.

Thirdly, 'Tis singularity and ambition that prevail more with men than any other motive to be holy.

Fourthly, 'Tis the greatest piece of folly, ignorance, and impudence, for men to quit with present pleasures for mere uncertainties.

The first being the most material Objection, I shall therefore more largely and distinctly examine it; and in doing of this, I shall desire these four things may be considered. First, that the divine Laws are not grievous and uneasy. Secondly, that Vice is much more troublesome and difficult than Virtue. Thirdly, that Holiness conduceth both to the Peace and Happiness of human Societies, and to the temporal Advantage of private persons. And Fourthly, that there is a great deal of more pleasure in the ways of Holiness, than in the commission of sin.

That the divine Laws are not grievous and uneasy, but extremely reasonable and wise, is a truth I have already made plain, when I discoursed of the rule of Holiness. The whole tenor of the Laws of Christianity being so exceedingly suitable to the very nature of men, it cannot be rationally supposed that they can be grievous to them. St. Paul to the Philippians, gives us a brief and compendious, but very full and comprehensive, account of what things the Laws of our Christianity enjoin, viz. Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report: all which are so agreeable to Reason, that even the light of Nature prompts men to the doing of them, and fully discovers itself to be an irreconcilable Enemy to all kind of vices.

'Tis not then Reason, but the impetuous Lusts of men, that determines a holy Law to be grievous and uneasy: and indeed, no wonder though this unjust Judge make Holiness appear formidable, and represent it as grievous to Mankind; it being so much the interest of this partial Judge to condemn it as criminal, and to decree it as a yoke intolerable and grievous to be born. 'Tis not probable that the most innocent shall pass uncondemned, when an Enemy is set up in the Judgment-seat to pass Sentence: our blessed Savior must be pronounced guilty by Pilate, although even this unjust Judge openly professed, he found no fault in him. And seeing our great Law-giver met with so severe a sentence, who can expect anymore upright verdicts should pass upon his Laws?

But that the divine Laws are not indeed grievous to be born, may easily appear from plain Texts of Scripture (which is the only infallible rule.) Our great Lord hath himself taught his Disciples, That his yoke is easy, and his burden light. And one of his inspired Disciples has assured us, that his commands are not grievous: two Texts sufficient methinks to remove all those prejudices that are cast upon a holy life, as if it were full of fatigue and trouble.

But besides Scripture, Reason and Experience too, come in to witness this truth. First, Reason bears witness that the divine Commands are extremely reasonable and natural; and is it not against the common vote of Mankind, to say, What is natural, is uneasy and difficult? Men who impose hard and grievous tasks upon others, are by all men condemned as unreasonable; which certainly implies, that whatever is reasonable, is not grievous and difficult. 'Tis true, sinners, who by their many-repeated acts of disobedience have contracted a habit of sin, do indeed commit it with less trouble than those who first engage to this Tyranny; as Slaves, who by custom look upon that as easy, which at their first entrance upon such a slavery was very difficult and grievous: And yet whatever ease the most daring sinner may pretend is to be found in the acts of sin, I durst appeal to his own breast, whether he might not with a great deal of more ease, and less fatigue, have kept the divine Laws, than he met with in breaking of them.

I confess, the Laws of Christianity are not natural in a strict and confined sense; but only in so far as they correspond with, and are suitable to, the nature of Mankind: hence some sins are said to be unnatural; not because all sins may not adopt to themselves that title, but because upon a more peculiar and special account, all men are sensible that they are brutish, and unbecoming any who carry in their bosom a rational Soul. There is not any vice, but it infests and prejudges Nature. Anger is a degree of Madness, that violently transports men, and quite mars their inward ease and repose. Revenge, a more lasting and deliberate fury, preys upon the Soul where it resides, and so distracts and hurries it with inquietude and restlessness, that nothing imaginable can be supposed a greater Enemy to Nature, how sweet soever and luscious it may seem to depraved nature. Intemperance, and Uncleanness, are sins which debase Humane nature below that of beasts, and are the cause of many intolerable pains and Diseases, which make Humane life but an uneasy burden. But besides all these troubles, we may add that horror of Conscience that haunts the sinner with fear and astonishment. All which contribute to clear the truth of what I assert.

Again, Reason tells a man, that it cannot be grievous to him to perform that which is so much his interest and advantage. Men in their secular concerns find no difficulties in any undertaking wherein their interest is concerned; and sure it is man's greatest interest to keep the divine Precepts, as I have already at some length discovered. 'Tis an excellent saying, of as excellent an Author: Reason (says he) must first cease to be Reason, and commence Phrenzie, before 'tis possible it can set itself in defiance of those Laws of Christ, which are accommodated to its greatest interest. Causes of the decay of Christian Piety, Chap. 5.

But besides Reason, Experience bears also witness to this truth, that the divine Laws are not grievous. But before I proceed to prove this, I shall premise two Cautions: First, when I say that Experience makes it plain, that the Laws of Christianity are not grievous; I do not mean that a sinner when he first forsaketh his sins, and betakes himself to a holy and virtuous life, shall encounter with no difficulties; no sure, this cannot reasonably be expected: for his former habit in sin will at the first give him work enough; he has an old custom to oppose and struggle with, which will cost him no small pains to overcome. Secondly, far less must we fondly imagine that the Law of Christianity is so easy, as supersedes and gives a discharge to human industry, vigilancy, and care: they are but strangers to a holy life, and never knew what it is to obey God's Commands, who never were at any pains, nay who are not very industrious and careful to observe them. When our Savior says, his yoke is easy, he does not hereby intend to persuade men to be like Solomon's sluggard; sure Heaven was never designed for loiterers in God's Vineyard: but his intent there, is to remove a common prejudice men were like to entertain against Christianity, as if it were an intolerable yoke, and insupportable task: now this Christ forewarns his Disciples is not true.

These two things being premised, I now appeal to Experience (which often corrects error in speculation) whether the Laws of Heaven or Hell are most grievous. And to condescend as far as possible, I shall not here call in the Experiences of good men, who all unanimously assent that there is more ease and less fatigue in obeying, than in breaking the divine Laws; but I shall submit to the sinners own testimony, when he is in his most sober state; I mean, when he is under the extremity of some pain inflicted by his sins, or when he lies upon his death-bed: at other times, when he is in the pursuit of some Lust, no wonder though he pass as unjust a sentence as sick men do of tastes, who having their palates infected with some venomous and filthy humor, judge everything, be it really never so pleasant, to be bitter and harsh.

Go then to sinners when they come to themselves (as it is said of the Prodigal, He came to himself, as if he had been before mad or distracted) and ask them whether they find more trouble in their doing or omitting of sin? Ask the Drunkard, who by his intemperance lies smarting under the tormenting pains of the Gout, whether he had been wiser, and suffered less trouble, if he had been temperate, and abstained from excess? Nay, besides the diseases that many, if not most of vices bring upon men; there are some sins that make men sensibly in the time find pain and trouble. Go to the Lascivious and Wanton person who is tormented with the Pox, and ask whether his sin be grievous to him or not? There are few sins which are not attended with grievous concomitants. But I shall not insist.

I confess, no men's Experiences are so likely to demonstrate this truth, nor are more pertinently appealed to, as theirs who have once experimented the pleasures and pains of both states: Ask therefore those who were once Drunkards and Adulterers, but are now sanctified and settled in a course of Holiness; and I am sure they shall verily testify, that it is only Satan's Yoak that is uneasy and burthensome.

But granting that there is some difficulty in the exact observation of the Laws of Christianity, (as sure any man who consults the corruption of his own nature, and the depraved inclinations thereof, against which they are levelled, will never deny) yet if this shall be judged a good Argument to cancel the Laws of Christianity, all Laws whatsoever shall be quite dashed out, and banished the world; for who shall be guilty, if he may have the liberty to use this for a relevant excuse?

This being then so unreasonable to imagine, (and if it should be admitted, should yet never a whit excuse the sinner, who to his experience finds sin to be so uneasy and troublesome) yet I shall add two Considerations that demonstrate, the Laws of Christianity are more easy than any other Laws that ever were invented; and that they are not (as carnal men represent them) hard sayings which none can bear. First, the Author of the Gospel-precepts hath offered to us an assistance, able to conquer all the difficulties that can be supposed to attend the keeping of his Mandates. 'Tis true, if Christ had enjoined his followers to obey a Law which could not possibly be kept; I confess, in that case, his Commands had been grievous, and his Yoak insupportable: Or if he had been satisfied with no less than perfect innocence, and unsinning obedience, I do not see how this prejudice and cavil could have been removed. But he who prescribed those Precepts, considered the frailties of our nature, and the weakness of man in this lapsed estate; and therefore he has provided help for us, if we will but be at the pains seriously to implore it; For he giveth his Spirit to them that ask it. And upon this account the beloved Apostle encourageth Christians to obey the precepts of the Gospel, because Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

Secondly, The excellency of the Reward that is promised to the obedient, is a most noble consideration to make men (as the Psalmist speaks) run the way of God's Commandments. The promissory part of the Gospel, renders the preceptive part easy. Methinks the holy Soul should with comfort thus express itself, when the greatest difficulties offer: Good God! shall I be discouraged to obey the hardest (if anything proceeding from infinite Wisdom and Goodness can be said to be difficult) of thy Commandments, when so glorious a prize is the reward thereof? If a terrene and temporal felicity animates others to encounter the most Giant-difficulties, how much more unconcernedly should I slight all hazards, and contemn by a fearless courage all dangers, for that blessed hope that is set before me? Can I remember there is a Kingdom promised, and yet be terrified from it by supposed difficulties, or complain that the way is inaccessible? Do I really know that it is indeed a good Land, and am yet discouraged to attempt the taking of it, because it will require some violence? Shall I, like the Reubenites and Gadites, set up my rest on this side of Jordan, notwithstanding this proposal of Canaan? No sure, eternal Life is too noble a prize to be lost, for fear of fighting the Good sight. I regard no difficulties while I eye the Crown; I cannot think those Precepts grievous, that are enforced by so many excellent promises. So great a recompense of reward should, methinks, inspire the dullest Heart, and sweeten the hardest Service; should make any one willing and content to sacrifice his most beloved lusts, to cut off the right Hand, and pluck out the right eye, which stand in the way, and hinder him from entering into Heaven.

Having thus endeavored to explain upon what account the Laws of Christianity are not grievous, I hope I shall not need to insist long upon the following particulars. At first sight it seems plain, that since the case is so, Vice must certainly be more troublesome than Virtue; and that it is easier for men to live holily, than wickedly: and yet, I know not by what strange artifice, Holiness has had the bad luck to be represented as being extremely difficult. I confess, I intend not to inveigh against the sacred Tribe of Levi, who have represented Heaven almost as inaccessible, as the Israelitish Spies did the good Land of Canaan; knowing they thereby only design to raise men's endeavors: although I could have wished that they had considered better, how readily men of corrupt minds and vicious practices lay aside all care of God's Commandments, upon this suggestion, that they are grievous; and are deterred from a holy and virtuous life.

But that Vice is more troublesome and uneasy than Virtue, will (besides what I have formerly said) appear to be so, from the following Considerations. First, Sacred Records represent sinners as men who wear themselves with sin; and the Prophet Isaiah describes their trouble by a very apt similitude, Isa. 57.20. The wicked is like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. The ways of sin are frequently called crooked paths, and wicked men are said to walk astray; whileas the way of Holiness and Virtue is said to be a straight and high way: All which Phrases plainly enough imply, that the former is full of intricacy and perplexities, and the latter plain and easy.

Experiences to prove this, are every day so multiplied, that they may abundantly serve to silence all doubts. The Drunkard can experimentally tell the costliness of his sin, and the tormenting diseases that are frequently the effect of an overcharged Stomach; the uneasy belchings and overturnings within, the grievous pains of Head and Joynts. The Wanton and Lascivious can produce his painful boils and sores, to witness the uneasiness of Lust; at best, he can only produce an hectic Body. But besides those loathsome diseases that are the effects of Lasciviousness, how restless and uneasy is the condition of such persons? But how impossible is it to give a just list of those miseries that Wantonness and Intemperance hurry men to? To what a multitude of amazing difficulties does Pride expose men! what mischiefs, jars and contests does it raise? Envy and Revenge torment men's spirits, and so disquiet and perturb them, that men may as well take fire into their bosom, and pretend they perceive no torment, as lodge those horrid lusts in their breasts without the sense of their extreme misery and pain. The Covetous mind is never at rest, but is ever craving and desirous of more. But to show how troublesome the practice of every sin is, requires a larger discourse than I can well allow.

But how easy is Virtue, if compared with Vice? At what trouble and pains are men, to invent a lie? and when they have contrived it, they cannot but be afraid lest it be discovered. But how easy is it to speak the truth? With how much art and pains do men trouble themselves to conceal their vices? The Adulterer is wearied with watching convenient opportunities, and afraid lest he be discovered; whileas the chaste person enjoys himself quietly, & is troubled with no such attender. The covetous Miser is cruciate and tormented with a desire of what he cannot expect; is extremely tormented by an incessant care, lest he lose what he hath, and ever toiling to acquire more; whileas the virtuous Soul is contented with what he enjoyeth, and grudgeth not to bestow a part of what is his to others.

There is no man who is not quite given up to commit all manner of wickedness, and whose conscience is not seared as with a hot Iron, but can tell by his experience, how perplexing and uneasy Vice is. And to make this yet more plain, I shall add these few following Reasons. First, the nature of Vice is so reproachful, that men are even troubled to coin shifts to avoid the owning it; and sure this cannot but be uneasy to men. Secondly, the most viciously inclined persons, who will not practice, yet are force for their interest to pretend Virtue, and usually indeed become greater Zealots than those who are really virtuous: But this cannot but be exceedingly troublesome to them, it being against their inclinations, and contradictory to the internal sentiments of their minds. And besides, at what pains are they to make other men believe that they are real in what they only pretend? Thirdly, Vice is very perplexing and difficult, upon the account that it requires hard, if not impossible performances: the Covetous mind is prompted to attempt many difficulties to obtain what it craves, and after all is disappointed. Nay, indeed, Covetousness is a vice so uneasy and troublesome, that it proposeth what can never be acquired: for after it hath got what is designed, it is restless, and as ready to say Give, give, as ever. But Lastly, that which contributes most to render Vice uneasy, are those after-pangs of Conscience which fill the Soul with horror and amazement; the consciousness of guilt stings and torments it, and makes the sinner a terror to himself. 'Tis impossible either to gag or corrupt Conscience, that it shall never give any check. But now how quieting and solacing is Virtue? no man ever yet complained that terrors haunted him for living holily. O how do the thoughts of a virtuous life refresh men in the midst of greatest dangers? Let us go to sinners on their deathbed, and then we shall find this truth preached to the full; an evidence valid enough to condemn sin as the uneasiest thing imaginable.

And thus we have seen how many difficulties attend sin, both before, and after it is committed. And now what reason can any man allege for the pretended easiness of sin? I confess, I know not anything, except it be custom, that can be pertinently adduced; but how weak is this Plea? for although Custom, which is a second nature, may contribute very much to stupefy the Judgment, and harden the Conscience, and so consequently make Vice the more easy; yet we can hardly suppose that ever Humane nature will so far assimilate the nature of mere Animals, as to be deprived of Reason and Conscience: And sure, so long as any of these remain, Vice must needs meet with opposition. But Secondly, if men will compare the easiness of Virtue and Vice, they must put them in equal circumstances; and then I doubt not but Vice shall stand condemned, as the great troubler of peace and quietness. For instance, let us suppose that a man is accustomed to a holy life, and is habituate to live soberly, righteously, and godly; in this case, let any man make but the experiment, and I am sure he shall ingenuously acknowledge, that a good life affords more tranquility and peace, than Vice dares lay claim to.

And yet, I know not by what bad luck, Holiness has been represented as opposite to men's present welfare, and hurtful to their peace and tranquility. How groundless this prejudice is, I have already endeavored to show. I shall therefore now only in a few words make it plain, that Holiness is the most effectual method that can be taken, to exalt the public peace and happiness of a Nation. And Secondly, that it infinitely conduceth to the happiness, peace, and tranquility of particular persons; and that nothing is so inconsistent with, and hurtful to both, as sin.

How much Holiness tends to the advancement of public peace in a Kingdom and Nation, appears very plainly from the Wise man's observation, Prov. 14.34. Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is the reproach of any people. And the Apostle St. James gives us a true account of the causes of public jars, Jam. 4.1. From whence come wars and sightings amongst you? are they not hence, even from your lusts that war in your members? If mankind had not corrupted their ways, and degenerated from their pristine purity, how peaceable and happy had human societies been? but in this lapsed state, Ambition, Pride, and Injustice act their tragical parts, and so tend to the destruction of human societies, that if there did not remain some sparks and remainders of Religion, 'tis not possible that human society could evite an utter ruin. And he that well ponders the settled course of divine Providence, shall easily assent, that in all Ages Righteousness and Virtue have been rewarded with a temporal tranquility and happiness; and that fruitful lands have been turned into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein. And indeed 'tis very reasonable to think that the divine Justice will reward a righteous Nation, and punish a rebellious People. 'Tis true, he may defer his Judgments for a while, yet his Justice will not always give place to mercy and forbearance; but a Nation that continueth and increaseth its provocations, must expect to be punished in this world, (which is the only proper place) as a righteous Land may expect a present reward.

That Holiness doth also conduce to the peace and quietness of particular persons, is nothing less evident from Scripture: Psal. 119.165. Great peace have they that love thy Law, and nothing shall offend them: but the wicked is like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt, Isa. 57.20. I have once and again shown, that there can be no inward tranquility and peace, where Holiness is wanting: the very thoughts of God, which above all things are most sweet, are notwithstanding troublesome to wicked men. But because Humane nature is in this degenerate state extremely sunk down into Sense, and more apt to be wrought upon by temporal advantages, than what only concern the Soul, and have a prospect to things that are future; I have also in the former part of this Discourse endeavored to make plain, how advantageous Holiness is upon the foresaid account; and that length of days are in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor: That her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths peace: That Godliness is great gain, having the promises of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come. And indeed, any man, who considers the nature and reason of the thing, cannot but be inclined to think it must be so: For how can that man be exposed to trouble and disquietment, who hath gotten the mastery over his Passions? And I dare appeal to the sinners own experience, whether vices have not been prejudicial to his health, macerated his Body, and filled him with tortures and pains? whether some sins have not brought him to poverty and disgrace, ruined both his estate and fame? Can any man produce any good effect that ever sin caused? sure, if men would speak impartially, they should acknowledge all this to be true.

That there is a great deal of more pleasure in the ways of Holiness than in the commission of sin, (which is the fourth thing proposed to be considered) needs not puzzle any man to prove it. How delightful are all acts of Piety and Virtue? how inexpressible is that comfort that the devout Soul finds in conversing with God? Well might the Psalmist say, Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart, Psal. 97.11. he often experienced that sweetness and satisfaction that is the result of obedience; whileas Solomon, who could pass the best verdict of sensual pleasures, yet concludes them to be but vanity and vexation of spirit.

There be two things that allay the pleasures of sin: First, the unruliness of immoderate passions, which fret and vex the minds of men, and hinder the sinner from tasting its pleasure. Secondly, the fear of an invisible being, armed to punish them for their misdemeanors: Conscience, upon the apprehension of guilt, recoils upon the sinner, and mars all the pleasure he promised himself to enjoy: This made Belshazzar, a King, and environed with his Nobles, tremble and quake in the midst of his cups. But supposing vices did bring as much pleasure along with them as they pretend, yet upon two accounts they are not half so delicious as the pleasure that spring from a good life. First, the pleasures of sin are so interrupted, of a short duration, or, as the Apostle expresseth them, they are but for a season: how quickly will a period be put to all these pleasures, which now make so much noise? They are very fitly compared by Solomon, to the crackling of thorns under a pot, which are scarce sooner in a blaze, than they vanish; but the joys that spring from a good conversation, are at their lowest ebb here: they do indeed continue, for no man taketh away this joy; but Heaven is the designed place for the good Soul to feed upon those Rivers of pleasures that are at God's right hand for evermore. Secondly, sensual pleasures do soon cloy men's appetites: we cannot enjoy long any sensual delight, but we are quickly weary of it: but it is not so with spiritual delights; 'tis only the absence of them, when suspended for our sins, that troubles and molests us. 'Tis impossible that sensual pleasures can satisfy the soul of man, which was never framed for a Mahometan Paradise; nor can it be rationally expected, that he who is conscious to himself of guilt, should be free from fear; which being so tormenting, can never permit men to enjoy pleasure freely.

But let us descend to sensual pleasures, and we shall find, that he who is temperate and moderate, is more likely to relish the pleasantness of Meat, Drink, and Pastime, than the intemperate and immoderate. He who relieves the Poor, and refresheth the Needy, cannot but find more real sweetness and satisfaction in doing so, than he who drinks away his Estate. He who speaks the truth, finds not those tormenting checks of Conscience which are the just reward of lying. But all this will more plainly appear, by the Solution of the next Objection.

The second Imputation is brought from Experience; namely, that wicked men are for ordinary very jovial and cheerful, and enjoy a great deal of satisfaction in their ways; whereas men who pretend to Piety and Holiness, are very sad and disconsolate.

To this I answer; That the Question is not whether wicked men have some pleasure in their sins, or not? but, whether that pleasure that ariseth from a good life, be not infinitely preferable to these? Alas! the most promising sensual pleasure (supposing it to be lawful) is much inferior to the satisfaction and comfort that springs from a good Conscience. How much more inconsiderable must sinful pleasures be, which are attended with so black and dismal consequences? Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doth evil. Sinful pleasures are at the best but short; and sure this consideration contributes very much to lessen their value: But that which makes them so mean, and not worth the enjoying, is the painful Eternity that succeeds to them.

However then the wicked may appear jovial and merry, yet their inward thoughts (if we could discover them) cannot be at quiet and ease: Whatever pleasure they may reap in the present act, yet they cannot afterwards look unto themselves without horror and amazement: The after-stings of sin are so painful, that he buys those present pleasures at a rate no reasonable man would purchase them.

But that wicked men cannot really enjoy that pleasure and contentment they pretend to, seems very plain from Reason. For first, How can any man be satisfied with those actions which are so cross to his very nature, and opposite to Reason, as every sin is? Can a man find pleasure in doing that which he knows he ought not to do? sure the reboundings of Conscience, upon the apprehension of doing amiss, will soon rase out any pleasure that sin affords; and a sick man may more rationally expect rest, than those men pleasure and contentment. Secondly, it can afford little pleasure to men, to act quite contrary to their own interests; it is rather like the laughter of fools and mad men, than a real pleasure, that such men can pretend to. Now every sinner quite ruins his interest and happiness, while he runneth headlong to destruction; and for a present pleasure, which is only grateful to the sensual appetite, loseth those lasting Rivers of pleasure, which, though future, are yet certain, and which are calculated for the Soul. Thirdly, What pleasure can any man enjoy, who is sure to be eternally tormented? As there is no peace, so no pleasure to the wicked, who are at odds with God, whose favor is better than life.

But what reason have good men to be sad and disconsolate, since all the causes of grief are removed from them? Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart; so that the Apostle had good reason to double that Exhortation, Rejoice in the Lord, again I say rejoice. O how satisfying and pleasant is it for men to act reasonably, and to be assured that they have done their duty, and have acted for their own interest! Our rejoicing is this, (saith the Apostle) the testimony of our consciences, that in all simplicity and godly sincerity we have had our conversation in the world.

Sure there was never any man who was troubled for living holily, there being no reason why any should: 'Tis true, good men may be of a melancholy disposition, and naturally inclined to sadness; but this can be no reflection on Holiness, as if it were the cause of that melancholy temper: nay, the best of men have their own failings, and no wonder though these breed some trouble and disquiet: But this is not to be disconsolate for being good, but for doing evil. And indeed, I may add, that the great abominations and profanity, the contempt of Religion, and dishonor that is done to God that abounds, may very rationally make good men with the Psalmist say, Rivers of tears run down my eyes, because men observe not thy Law.

And thus this imputation cast upon Holiness, is easily wiped off. Grief and sadness are not the effect of a good life; but of an imperfect obedience: And while our sins call for mourning and fasting, it were a piece of madness for men to be jovial and merry, and entertain themselves with those deceitful melodies, which will end in weeping and gnashing of teeth.

And yet the sorrow of truly good men is not so obvious to the eye of men, as it is to him who is the searcher of the heart; it is rather the artifice of the formal Penitent, and hypocritical Professor, than the character of the Righteous, to disfigure their faces, and appear sad and demure. A good man chooseth rather, with David, to mourn in secret, and when he appears in public to wash his face, than with those Hypocrites of whom Isaiah speaks, who bow down their head like a bull-rush, who have chosen affliction rather than innocence.

The next imputation cast upon Holiness is, that it is but a piece of singularity, and a vain ambition to walk alone. Ans. I am heartily sorry that the universal deluge of Impiety should make good men say as once Elijah did in another case, I am only left: the few number of good men, compared with the vast multitude and Armies of transgressors, makes them to be esteemed singular and precise; and brings upon them the wrath and fury of ungodly sinners, because they will not run with them to the same excess of riot, and wallow in the mire as they do. But truly this charge is not more rational, than if a company of mad men should call one a singular fool, because he does not comply with them in all their extravagant actings, which do really rather require pity and compassion than imitation.

I doubt not but Singularity in some cases is a very intolerable temper, and unbecoming any man who pretends wisdom: but yet, if it be universally condemned, and in no case admitted as reasonable, I do not see but the charge will rebound upon the sinner, who in this degenerate age thinks the worse of himself, if he exceed not others in wickedness.

But since Holiness is so conformable to Humane reason, so advantageous and beneficial to every man; what madness is it to condemn it as singular? Sure, he who intends to walk as a man who is of a good understanding, (as good men are said to be) who intends to mind his interest and happiness, will never be frightened from Holiness, because may be it is not in vogue, nor become the mode of the Kingdom. If a whole Kingdom (excepting a few) should rebel against their Prince, would it be any blot upon these few Loyal Subjects, that they affected Singularity?

But this cavil is so insignificant and silly, that I need not enlarge. Sure, since Holiness is the peculiar excellency and noble embellishment of Humane nature; since it is so venerable and lovely, and of all perfections the most excellent; he must be degenerate to the brutal nature, who condemns Singularity in Holiness; for this is in truth a condemning a man because he is more excellent than his neighbor, as the righteous is said to be in Scripture.

The last heavy Charge is, that it is folly and madness for men to quit with their present pleasures, and expose themselves to grievous troubles, for a future reward which is uncertain, and which nobody ever saw. To this I Answer, First, it is a great mistake to think that Holiness exposeth men to relinquish temporal and sensual pleasures, there being no men in the world so qualified to experiment the sweetness of these, none who live in so happy and flourishing condition, who are more healthful, and enjoy a greater measure of peace and quietness, than good men. The only inconveniency they are exposed to, is affliction upon the account of Religion; which when Christianity did commence, was no rare thing, but now is not so ordinary. But supposing good men were exposed to greater afflictions than other men, yet there is a great deal of satisfaction in submitting to them, since they are but light afflictions, and momentary too, which work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. These small evils are rather to be endured, than lasting pains and torments. Sure, Of two evils, the least is to be chosen.

Secondly, Although the reward of Holiness be future, yet 'tis not uncertain. We have as great assurance that there will be a reward for the Righteous in another world, as the nature of the thing is capable of: and sure he is an unwise man that asks any other demonstration or proof. Now that there is a reward laid up for good men, which though unseen, is yet as certain as if it were obvious to sense, we have the greatest rational evidence, and the best moral arguments to confirm it. For first, if there be a God; Secondly, if the Scriptures be the Word of God, then there is not anything more certain, than that there is a state of rewards and punishments after this life. First, if there be a God, then we can have no reasonable scruple about the future reward: for since God is holy and just (perfections essential to a Deity) then certainly he will, as the great Governor of the World, reward Virtue, and punish Vice. But this doth not always fall out so here; therefore it is reasonable to conclude, that he hath reserved the wicked till that great day of wrath, and prepared a reward for the righteous. Secondly, If the Scripture be the Word of God, then he who runs may read this truth.

We have then the greatest moral assurance possible, that there is a future reward; which may sufficiently encourage men to hazard all they enjoy here, for the expectation of it. But I shall only suppose that the future reward is possible; (which I think few will deny, or can prove it to be impossible) yet even upon this supposition, good men who part with the transitory things of this life, prove a great deal wiser than those who condemn them: For if there be no life after this, all the loss a good man suffers, is that of temporal conveniency; he hath denied himself the enjoyment of sensual pleasures, so far as he judgeth them sinful; he is not so intemperate as other men, and perhaps is exposed to some hazards for his Religion; at the most, all that he is to hazard is but very small. But if there be a future reward, in what a dismal state are the wicked, who shall everlastingly be deprived of it, and be irrecoverably plunged into a state of lasting and severe torments?

But since we are assured of a future reward, and know certainly, that the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father, and that the wicked shall be cast into utter darkness; What folly and madness is it to be careful for the Body, and careless what becomes of the Soul; to provide for Time, and neglect Eternity? Sure 'tis no wonder though the Wise man does so frequently characterize the sinner a fool, and represents him as one that lacketh understanding: And indeed, we may rationally say, This their way is their folly; their foolish choice proclaims, that those workers of iniquity have no knowledge.

The Conclusion.

WE have now seen the Excellency and Beauty of Holiness, have discovered the absolute Perfection of its Nature, and the Compleatness of its Rule; have taken a view of its Allurements and powerful Motives, and have discovered the weakness of those Cavils that are urged against it: and what remains, but that we set about this work with the greatest seriousness imaginable; that we give no sleep to our eyes, nor slumber to our eye-lids, till we forsake our sins, and enter upon a course of Holiness?

If God had imposed upon us a heavy and intolerable yoke; if he had commanded us to perform some grievous and uneasy service, had we not been obliged to have obeyed? But since he only commands us to wash and be clean, requires only our consent to what is so much our own interest, only exacts that we separate ourselves from those lusts that pollute and defile us, that vex and torments our minds, and which (if continued in) will certainly ruin and undo us; what fools and mad men are we if we refuse to hear his voice?

Almighty God has been drawing us with the Cords of Love; has presented to us the most charming motives to excite our love and esteem; has carried us (as it were) to the Pinnacle of the Temple, and discovered to us all the glory and beauty of this world; has taken us to Pisgah, and given us a view of the good Land of Canaan, of the City of the living God, of which glorious things are spoken; and promised, that all these things shall be ours, if we will but be holy in all manner of conversation: And to excite our fear, he has opened to our view, the powers of the world to come; has plainly told us of the pains and torments that the damned suffer day and night, and that indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, remains as the due portion of those that do evil. And now may he not take up that same protestation that he used to his ancient People the Jews; What more can I do for you? But alas! we have in the most insolent manner despised all these charms of Love, and, like the mad man in the Gospel, have broken to pieces the strongest Fetters and Chains. We are, God knows, as deeply sunk into sensuality and brutishness, as those to whom the Grace of God that bringeth salvation hath never appeared. 'Tis not credible, (I may say possible) that men could have been more wicked than they now are, supposing they had never heard of Heaven or Hell.

'Tis a wonder (as any one would think) that those very men who profess they believe in Christ, should so grossly and openly contradict his plain Precepts; that those who believe, that without holiness no man shall see the Lord, and that the wrath of God is revealed from Heaven against all ungodliness, yet persist in their abominable wickedness, and are neither awed with fears, nor animated with hopes. What is all this, but for men to expose themselves to the contempt rather than pity of discerning men?

We have surveyed the several advantages which attend Holiness; have discovered how much man's temporal as well as his eternal welfare and happiness depends upon it: We have explained how in her right hand is length of days, and in her left hand are riches and honor: that her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths peace: And now may we not give the same testimony of it which Joshua and Caleb did of Canaan, Numb. 14. The land which we passed through to search, it is an exceeding good land? The Sons of Anak (I mean the pretended difficulties) are not so strong as some men represent them to be; we need not be discouraged to encounter with them; greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. Alas! what Objection can men possibly make against a Duty that is so excellent, useful, and necessary, that is founded upon such mighty motives, as may prevail with any who is not quite petrified in desperate Impiety? Good God! what stupid folly is this, that men hide their hands in their bosom, and will not so much as stretch them out to this tree of Life, that they may eat of this fruit, which is pleasant to the eye, and profitable both to our present and future happiness.

'Tis indeed pity, that men should be thus permitted to run headlong to destruction. Alas! is perdition so lovely and desirable, that, like Rachel, a double servitude is thought light for it? and shall wise and discerning men be Eye-witnesses of the bad bargain those men make, and not warn them of their folly? I know this is a duty chiefly incumbent to our spiritual Watchmen to discharge; I doubt not but many of them stand upon their watch, and warn men of their danger. It were to be wished that all and every of them were thus faithful; but sure every man is in some manner concerned to be his brothers keeper; and he is highly criminal, who should see a mad man running upon danger, and not stop him in his course.

I wish some new-coined Doctrines had not an inauspicious influence upon the bad practices of many, had not too much countenanced and authorized vice: but my present design is so far from controversial, that I shall rather think myself concerned to inveigh against needless disputes, than start any. If I may speak from my own experience, I ingenuously confess, I find Disputes so insipid and fruitless, and in the review so unsatisfactory, that I am resolved henceforth to bid an eternal adieu to them, and to condemn them as the great underminers of Christian Piety: And if any shall after this fair warning assault any Doctrine I have elsewhere owned, I hope discerning men will neither esteem me nor the Cause the worse, that I draw not my Sword in its defense.

And now what shall I say more, but conclude with Moses's passionate Exhortation, Deut. 32.46. Set your hearts to the words which I testify to you this day: for it is not a vain thing, because it is your life. Let us no longer delay and put off this duty; while it is called today, let us not harden our hearts through the deceitfulness of sin; but seriously search and try our ways, and turn to the Lord: this is the proper season for so necessary a work; ere long there will be no time left us to consider our ways: O that in this our day we did understand the things that belong to our peace, before they be hid from our eyes! If men would but be induced to imitate the Psalmists Example, Psal. 119.59. I thought on my ways, I doubt not but they should also imitate the course he did take, I made haste and delayed not to keep thy commandments: But men consider not what they are doing, and so no wonder though they perish, no wonder that they prefer darkness to light, and despise Holiness as a thing of no value. Let us therefore humbly and heartily invoke the Father of Lights to open the Eyes of men, whom the God of this world hath blinded, that they may flee from the wrath to come, by cleansing themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

A DISCOURSE Concerning the PERIOD OF Humane Life: Whether Mutable or Immutable.

By the Author of The Duty of Man laid down in Express Words of Scripture.

LONDON, Printed by H. C. for Enoch Wyer, at the White Hart in St. Paul's Church-yard, 1677.

To the Honorable College of Physicians at London.

Generous Gentlemen,

THAT I presume to prefix your great Name to so mean a Book, proceeds not from any confidence I have of its value; but from the nature of the Discourse, which your excellent Profession is so much concerned in. For I must say, that since I could understand the Debate, I have thought their opinion, who maintain the Period of every man's Life to be unalterably fixed by an absolute Decree, does endanger your Profession so much, that the truth is, if it be true, you may seek out some new world for your practice; for here you should be only like the Idol-God's, who could neither do good nor evil.

This the excellent Jo. Beverovicus did prudently foresee, and partly endeavored to satisfy both himself and others, by asking the advice of the Learned men of his age.

But that the Period of Humane Life may be both extended and shortened, common experience does sufficiently attest. How many have 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 been hurried to their Graves by the unskillfulness of Empericks; and are there not multitudes also that can witness, you have been (under God) the cause their Lives have been prolonged.

Gentlemen, I know you can expect no Panagyrick from such an unfit person as I acknowledge myself to be. And methinks I also hear all men say, that that is a business only for a Homer to perform. If 〈◇〉 meanness of this Present be censured by some, yet I know you are more generous than to do so; especially since the bestowing of a more valuable and signal evidence of respect, is only impeded by the inability of, Honoured Gentlemen, Your most devoted Servant, R. E.

The Preface.

Reader,

THE following Discourse is of so small bulk, that a Preface may seem as needless and ridiculous as an Index. In some few hours it may be perused, and then both the design of the Author and of the Book may be known. It may be thou desirest to know, what was the occasion of the following Discourse. But I know not if I be obliged to answer this and such like idle questions; yet to satisfy thy curiosity, know, that the Author was unhappily engaged to converse with a society of men, who frequently debated this and such like queries; and mostly he was opposed by the greater part, as maintaining an unreasonable position. Whether their charge be true or false, is a thing better determined by others unconcerned, than either by them or me. I know very well their clamorous calumnies and reproaches, which since I cannot shun, I shall endeavor to slight, as indeed unworthy to be regarded.

If men of good consideration dislike anything in the discourse, I promise them, upon Information I shall either endeavor to satisfy them, or to rest satisfied with what they say. Nay further, if there be any Line in it inconsistent with Piety and Religion, freely reject it; for I persuade thee (if the Author knew any such) he would burn the Book for its sake.

But I hope upon trial there shall be found no harsh notion in it to offend the most squeamish conscience. For the opinion I have rejected is, in my judgment inconsistent with the Divine Goodness and Holiness, repugnant to the freedom of Humane Nature, and destructive of all lawful means for the preservation of a man's life. While as that sentiment I embrace, begets in men's minds, noble and generous conceptions to promote real Piety and Religion, and to shun all manner of wickedness and intemperance; upon the account that Piety is the means to prolong our lives, and wickedness the cause of our short lives. And that this is no cheat or delusion, the wisest of men has left upon record, Prov. 11. 19. As righteousness tendeth to life so he that pursueth evil, pursueth it to his own death. This brings to my memory the Psalmists advice, with which I shall conclude; Whatman is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil, and do good. Seek peace, and pursue it. But the wicked and deceitful man shall not live out half his days.

OF THE PERIOD OF Humane Life.

Job xiiij. 5, 6.

Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee, that he cannot pass.

Turn from him, that he may rest, till he shall accomplish as an hireling his days.

THIS excellent Book of Job represents to us a plain and unquestionable instance of the various successes all human actions are liable to, and of the promiscuous administration of Divine Providence to particular persons. Here we may read of Job's happy and flourishing condition, that he was the greatest of all the men of the East. And of his low and afflicted state, poor even to a Proverb, and in a condition that only pleaded pity and compassion; and how again the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning.

From this various administration of Providence, men have taken occasion to make divers inferences. The scoffing Atheist hath from thence wickedly concluded, that God hath no care of human affairs. If God (say these scoffers) had any care of this world, he would never suffer those men who have corrupted their ways by treachery and deceit, to prosper and enjoy an affluence of all worldly delights; whereas the virtuous and godly man, who takes heed to his ways, lest he sin, and who throughout the whole course of his life has carefully studied to keep a conscience void of offense towards God and man, is notwithstanding a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief; as plagued all the day long, and chastened every morning, and hath waters of a full Cup wrung out to him. If God (say they) concerned himself with human affairs, he would never suffer the Tabernacles of Robbers to prosper, and the house of the upright to be ruined and destroyed.

This is without all contradiction a great stumbling-block and offense to the blind Atheist; and hath even been a sad trial to the best of God's people. Wherefore does the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously? was a question Jeremy could hardly at first resolve. And we find Job and the Prophet Habbakkuk very much puzzled with it; and the Psalmist plainly consesseth, that his feet were almost gone, and that his steps had well nigh slipped, when he saw the prosperity of the wicked, Psal. 73.

To see bad men prospering in their wicked purposes and undertakings, and good men unsuccessful and frustrated in their just attempts, has been none of the least Topics the Epicurean Atheists have made use of, in their exempting this world from the Divine Rule and Dominion. It was this single consideration that made Cato. (who was once a Preacher of Providence; how orthodox, I enquire not) accuse the Dominion and Government of the God's, of instability and unjustness, that Caesar who tyrannically invaded the Rights of the Commonwealth of Rome, should be successful in so unjust attempts; and Pompey put to the worst, and overthrown in the lawful defense of his Country: this stumbled him exceedingly. 'Tis true, some few of the learned and sober Heathens did not thus rashly fall foul upon Providence; but very wisely inferred the being of a future state, where the virtuous shall be rewarded, and the vicious punished. And those holy men in Scripture, who did fret because of the prosperity of the wicked, quickly perceived their folly and error, and that the wicked were only fed like sheep for the slaughter; and as the Poet excellently expresseth it, tolluntur in altum ut lapsu graviore ruant.

Job's Friends, though they did not directly fall foul upon the Divine Providence, yet it is evident they were of opinion, that God would never have afflicted Job with such sad calamities, if he had been upright and sincere. Remember (saith Eliphaz) whoever perished being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off? ch. 4. 7. Bildad tells Job, If thou wert pure and upright, surely now he would awake for thee, ch. 8. 6. To both these Zophar succeeds, with a charge as grievous and bitter, For thou hast said, my Doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes: But O that God would speak, and open his lips against thee, ch. 11. v. 4, 5.

These were the Cordials Job's Friends afforded him, while-as his afflicted condition pleaded pity from his friends. These accusations were heavy; but he saw it was needless to tell them, that God might destroy the perfect as well as the wicked; and altho he would not plead not guilty, for then he confesseth his own lips should prove him perverse; yet he humbly conceived, that it was a dangerous principle to conclude love or hatred from any such outward dispensations.

Therefore finding all his entreaties rejected, and his plea's for his own defense slighted; he is at length forced to beg their silence, desiring far rather to plead his cause with his Maker, who could discern his sincerity; and therefore having ordered his cause, ch. 13. 18. and taken an exact and accurate examination of his former ways, he begins his pleadings for a mitigation of his present calamity, from v. 23, which he continues till interrupted by Eliphaz, ch. 15. and amongst the many arguments he urgeth, that taken from the determined days, and unpassable bounds prefixed to men is not the smallest: Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee; thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass. Turn from him that he may rest, till he shall accomplish as an hireling his day.

These words being the ground of the following Discourse, it is but reasonable I should spend a little time in their explanation.

Seeing his days are determined, &c. The word which our Translators render seeing, is in the Original 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 if, which some Expositors think is used by way of query, thus, If his days be determined? But the Context seems to warrant our Vulgar Translation, and there is no doubt, but it is very emphatick; for it contains an implicit affirmation, a phrase very ordinary, when the thing for its certainty is confessed and acknowledged. But let us suppose, that the words should be rendered by way of query, yet there are two doubts that must be removed, else their quarrelling with our Translation is vain and impertinent. 1. It seems to be very evident, that it has then been a received opinion, that the days of men are determined; else Job had never made use of this argument, in his pleadings for a cessation from trouble. 2. If Job had indeed doubted, that man's days were determined, it was no wise nor rational plea, especially since he was pleading with God, who knew whether it were so or not; and since he might have made use of indubitable Topics. But I pass by this debate as trivial.

His days, &c. It is debated by some, why Job makes use of the third person, and not of the first. The reason some give is this, because the third person used for the first, denotes contempt and modesty; and therefore Job in his low state is pleased thus to abase himself, especially since pleading with his Maker. But this conjecture is not fully satisfactory, for Job in several of his other pleas, makes use of the first person; which methinks he would not have done, if he had made use of the third person upon the account of the former consideration; therefore from the promiscuous usurpation of the persons, we may easily conjecture, that when the argument he brings does in a more peculiar manner reach his own private condition, then he makes use of the first person: an instance of this we have ch. 13. 23, 24, &c. But now this argument taken from the determined days, and unpassable bounds set to men, is a general one, which all men as well as he might plead; therefore he speaketh in the third person, yet always eying his own condition. The like instance we find in the beginning of this Chapter, Man that is born of a woman, is of few days, and full of trouble. Here he speaks in the third person, and not in the first; for to be of few days, and full of trouble, is the character of every man. Few and evil (says Jacob to Pharaoh) have the days of the years of my life been, Gen. 47. 9.

Are determined, &c. This word in the Original properly signifieth to dig, or cut thorough; here it is to be understood metaphorically; because God doth as exactly know the number of men's days, as if the most accurate search were made. 'Tis true, in all human determinations, it is reasonable that consultation precede. Some space must intervene betwixt their knowing of a thing and their determinations about it. I confess, it is disputed, whether the Humane Will be of itself a knowing faculty? or if it must follow in its choice the dictates of the intellect? I will not dispute this now; but there is truth in that general Maxim, ignoti nulla cupido. But to fancy that there is any such priority between the Divine knowledge and volition, is a gross mistake, irreconcilable with the Infinite and Eternal perfections of God: who uno actu & ictu, (as they speak) comprehendeth and willeth all future Events.

The number of his Months are with thee, &c. This Phrase holds out these two things: First, the Exactness and Infiniteness of the Divine knowledge; and Secondly the Divine rule and dominion. First, it holds out the Divine knowledge to be Infinite and Exact, The number of his months are with thee. That is, thou art a God whose knowledge reacheth the smallest portion of our time, even to months and days; thou alone knowest all those circumstances; and to know the particular portion of days allowed to every man, does certainly require an infinite and exact knowledge. I will not curiously enquire, what truth there is in the pretended diabolical predictions of future Events; and whether Stargazers from the Conjunctions, and contrary Aspects of Celestial Bodies, can foretell the future number of the days and months of terrestrial and inferior Sublunary beings: a passing view of this I will have occasion to take afterwards; at present we rest satisfied with this; that an exact and comprehensive knowledge of our days and months; is only the prerogative of him who holds our lives in being; the pretended knowledge any Creature boasteth of, is conjectural and uncertain, if not (as frequently it is) fictitious, unless when the Divine wisdom for some secret, and to us unknown ends, reveals to his creatures such future Events. But Secondly, the Phrase holds out the Divine Rule and Dominion, The number of his months are with thee: that is, they are in thy power, thou mayest either prolong or shorten the days of Men: and I think the meaning of this whole verse is comprehended under these two heads, which I shall afterwards discourse of at more length.

Thou hast appointed his bounds, &c. It is not Fate or Fortune, but the wise God who appoints to every Man his time; now the bounds set to Men may be considered under a twofold notion. First, As it signifies that common and ordinary Period which the God of Nature has settled, which Men by the common course of Nature may fulfill, if no accidental circumstance hinder: and it seems the Psalmist only understands this common term of Humane Life, Psal. 90. 10. The days of our years are Threescore years and Ten, and if by reason of Strength they be fourscore; &c. or Secondly, It may be understood in a more strict sense, as it is taken for the last moment of every individual and particular person; and of both these I shall more fully discourse afterwards and show, that the words seem to refer to the common term of Humane Life; or if they mean this particular term, in what sense they are to be understood determined, appointed, &c.

These and such like condescending Phrases, have been most unhappily used, and sadly misunderstood in the Schools. Some men no sooner read in Scripture of God's determining or appointing, but they instantly conclude a physical previous necessitating act, which inevitably and irresistibly determines Men: and this kind of determination they plead for in all cases: so that Men even in their vicious actions are irresistibly determined to do so. I know no opinion which has rendered the reformed Church more odious than this: would to God I could say the Censure is causeless, and that I were forced to apologize, for saying our Divines have erred in this case. But alas the opinion is grown strong, and not long since it was not much less than Heresy to condemn it: and even to this day it is the study of some Teachers, to instill it into the hearts of their Hearers. For the correcting of this sour opinion, I shall have occasion to add some things in this following discourse; now I shall desire it to be considered, that while we speak of the Divine determinations, appointment, &c. we speak of things our knowledge cannot reach, the best conceptions we can frame to ourselves of the Divine volitions, are dangerous and imperfect; our capacities in this lapsed state are more narrow than we are aware of: and altho they were raised to a higher pitch, yet we can never comprehend his way of working, who in all his ways is unsearchable. 'Tis truly sad to see the contending World so serious and restless in digging those deeps that are unfathomable; it were to be wished that Men did not found their pretended knowledge of the Divine volitions, on the basis of their own silly volitions and did not argue from what we find in ourselves to be the same in God. 'Tis true the holy Spirit hath condescended to express things suitable to our Understanding & mean capacities, therefore we read in Scripture of the Divine determinations, appointments, &c. but yet to abuse such condescending expressions, and to imagine that there were really such purposes, and volitions in God as these we perceive in ourselves: this were a heinous crime, pray let us satisfy ourselves with this, that God in an eminent and transcending manner doth these things, which we cannot do without willing, decreeing, &c.

That he cannot pass, or as others render it, and he shall not pass; which Phrase is not to be understood, as if the particular Period of every Mans life were so fatally fixed that he can neither shorten nor prolong it, for this is contrary to many clear Texts of Scripture, as shall afterwards fully appear: but by this Phrase, we are to understand the common term of Humane Life, which is not mutable as the particular term is, and yet is not so fixed, that it cannot be altered; for God has still reserved in his own power the shortening and prolonging of it. And further we must not apprehend that the particular term of Humane Beings is so mutable, that God knows them not, and cannot foretell the precise Period of every man's life, or that the Divine Counsel concerning things Future is mutable; no sure, God has declared the contrary, I am God, and there is none like me, (saith the Almighty) declaring the End from the Beginning, and from ancient time the things that are not yet done; saying, my Cousenl must stand, and I will do all my pleasure, Isa. 46. 9. Two things there be which occasion men to change their purposes and resolutions. 1. Their want of Power to execute them. 2. their finite and shallow Knowledge, which cannot foresee those future circumstances which render their Designs ineffectual. But now there is no difficulty that can pose the Almighty; with him all things are possible, it is the Prophets argument, the Lord of Hosts hath purposed, who shall disannul it? his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back? Isa. 24. 17. And further there is no circumstance or condition that lies in the dark, and unseen to him, whose knowledge is infinite, and who equally comprehends things past, present and to come. Therefore is it that men cannot pass these bounds prefixed by the Divine foreknowledge: But of this afterwards.

Turn from him, &c. it is queried whether Job here petitioneth a withdrawing of God's supporting presence, and a cessation by death, or a cessation from the affliction and trouble he lay under. There be three things that plead for the former Interpretation. 1. Because the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 placed absolutely, signifieth to cease by death, 1. Sam. 2. 5. and they that were hungry ceased, i. e. died. 2. Because the supporting hand of Providence being removed, men return to the Dust. Thou hidest thy face they are troubled, thou takest away their Breath, they die, and return to their dust, Psal. 104. 29. 3. It is not inconsistent with Jobs former desires, Chap. 3. and 6. Why died I not from the Womb? why did I not give up the Ghost when I came out of the belly? for now should I have lien [still] and been [quiet;] I should have [slept,] then had I been at [rest]: O that I might have my request, even that it would please God to destroy me!

That the phrase can never admit the former gloss evidently appears from the words immediately following, for if Job had been pleading for death, why is that reason added, that he might accomplish his day? It is only then a cessation from his grievous affliction that he so earnestly entreateth; as if he had said, Lord, thy afflicting hand is heavy, and what am I but weak dust, not able to bear thy heavy Chastisments? my Soul is overburdened with grief, and wilt thou set thy terrors before me to afright me? hath not poor man in this lapsed state, Troops of miseries attending him, from which he may expect no freedom till Mortality be swallowed up in Life? and are not his few days labor and sorrow, pain and affliction? and wilt thou to those inseparable evils, superadd a burden of pain more grievous and insufferable? O do not measure out so dismal a Condition to thy silly Creature! make me not the object of thy direful vengeance, but in the midst of wrath remember mercy. Art thou not Goodness itself, and far more compassionate than the most tender parent? and shall it be said thou hast measured out so acute torments to vex thy poor Creatures? I confess Perfection is not the thing I plead; yet may not I say, it is not for my iniquity, nor for my sin, that thou hast afflicted me? and let this Consideration also prevail with thee, that my untender friends sadly mistake thy design in afflicting me; they conclude it is for some secret heinous crime, that thy judgments are upon me: O that thou wouldst turn from thy wrath, that I may enjoy some rest, before I go whence I shall not return?

This phrase turn from him, is sometimes taken in a very bad sense. Thus we find the wicked sadly characterized, as a people who desire God to depart from them; but as it is uttered by the people of God under the pressure of afflictions, it implies no more but a serious desire that God would be pleased to remove that burden. Now in such innocent petitions there appeareth no crime, for it is certain, that afflictions simply considered, are grievous even to the best of Mankind: there is no affliction (saith the Apostle) for the present that is joyous but grievous. 'Tis true impatience under affliction is an excess which no excuse whatsoever can pardon: there are some persons of such hasty complexions, that they rise in passion against God if they meet with the least affliction; just like that wretched man who said, this evil is of the Lord why should we wait any longer upon him? But those petitions of the Faithful in holy writ, altho at the first view they seem to be peremptory and absolute, yet they are truly qualified and submissive; and at the most, only express the harmless resentments of innocent nature, that cannot but express how contrary afflictions are to it.

That he may rest; ut quiescat sc. paululum, that his affliction being removed he may yet enjoy a little space to solace himself, till he accomplish his day. I will purposely decline the answer of that querie, Whether it is lawful to wish death when our condition is charged with a surplusage of calamity; for the brevity I design will not suffer me to survey the difficulties of that case, only in the general I shall add two things. 1. If the affliction be violent, fierce, and seemingly durable, rendering us incapable of exercising any duty; I question not but common reason will suggest to every sober man, that in that case Death is more eligible than Life. Yet 2. since we are ignorant what God designs to us, by sending us such afflictions, it is our part to submit to the Lord's will, and say, Good is the will of the Lord. Thus altho we may comparatively and submissively wish Death upon the account of some acute trials, yet it is never lawful to be peremptory and absolute in such desires; for frequently the happy event makes men conclude that it was good for them they were afflicted.

Rest, &c. Methinks the very sound of this word is full of ravishing sweetness and pleasure, and yet to those who are stated in a condition of Woe and Misery, it is bitter and harsh; as the most ravishing and pleasant Music is in the Ear of him who is sad: those who never tasted the honeycomb, know not its sweetness: the men who have been always drudges and slaves, have no discerning what Liberty is; and those who from their birth have been accustomed to pain, know not their misery so sensibly. But to have once enjoyed blessings, and on a sudden to be deprived of them, not only the unexpected change, but also their former happiness, adds to their misery, and makes their condition more unsufferable. If man had been created to toil and labor, his eating of bread in the sweat of his face, had been no curse: but to have been placed in a blessed and happy state, and by his folly to be hurled into a state of misery and pain, that completes his calamity, and makes him sensible, how miserable a thing it is to have been happy.

This single consideration seems to add very much to Jobs misery, his condition was once more than ordinary happy; and the amission of the comforts he formerly enjoyed, makes him pathetically cry out, O that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me; but now (as he sadly complains) they that are younger than I, have me in derision.

If Job in this state of woe had been persuaded of the certain change of his condition, and that his latter end should be more blessed than his beginning, the expected hopes of this had served to allay and mitigate his sorrow, and to render his case more sufferable and easy. It is the hops of rest, that puts strength in the wearied traveler; it was the expected reward and assurance of a future blessedness and better resurrection, which made those Worthies Heb. 11. so cheerfully undergo suffering. What the happiness of the Saints rest is, I am not able to represent, it being so far above anything we can in this imperfect state conceive or imagine. The advantages that attend our present tranquility and rest, are many and great, which to enumerate would be prolix and tedious: but if from that, we should frame to ourselves an Idea of that Celestial Rest, how imperfect would it be? any Rest we enjoy here, is uncertain: an unthought-of causality may impair it, but the Rest that remains for the people of God is everlasting, there is no fear of losing it: Heaven is a place free from trouble, and there is nothing that can embitter that pleasant state.

Philosophers have a saying, that the end of Motion is Rest; this is indeed true of all those motions and trials the servants of God meet with; the way to the Kingdom is spread over with thistles; thorough many tribulations we must enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: but those Waves of affliction will quickly over; and when the day breaks, these shadows will flee away. This Winter will soon be past; and the singing of the Birds will come; and Christians, who by saith and patience continue in well-doing, shall ere long be placed in those mansions of Rest, that are in Emanuel's land.

Alas, how insensible do we remain under the enjoyment of our outward comforts! when we are blessed with food, liberty and health, we are but sensibly stupid and ignorant, what is the value of those mercies: but if hunger and want begin to pinch us, if our former liberty be hedged in, if sickness and pain seize upon us, then we begin to gather some sense, and we accuse ourselves for our ingratitude to God.

Till he shall accomplish as an Hireling his day: for the better understanding of this similitude, I shall in four particulars compare the days of man with the days of an Hireling, and in each of them make application to Jobs case. 1. The days of an Hireling, denotes a time, set, prefixed and limited for the performance of some particular piece of service; and are not the days of man also allotted him for to do his masters business? We were not born to be idle and negligent, sure God had some greater design in the Creation of man than this: now this particular quadrates very well with Jobs case, and seems to make the meaning of Jobs words to run thus; Lord, thou hast given me a being, and appointed me a work to accomplish: but alas while I am thus excruciated with horror and pain, I am unfitted for thy service, the surplusage of misery measured out to me, disinables me to go about thy work, be entreated therefore O merciful father to turn from thy displeasure, remove the present heavy calamity I am overburdened with; that I may yet accomplish the remainder of my time in thy work and service. 2. This set and fixed day of the Hireling is full of pain, labor and toil; he is (poor wretch) both late and early at work, and seldom has he any intervals of rest, unless his master be more than ordinary gentle and benign; and when he is thus indulged a little ease, he must not with the sluggard say, O si hoc esset laborare, he must to his work again, for upon this depends his payment; no wages is the result of not working; and in some cases stripes and whipping is the fruit of negligence. And what is man's life? at the best state it is but sorrow and trouble, till mortality be swallowed up in life. Our pleasures (upon which we put the highest value) are either purchased, or accompanied with pain and labor. If we be in a prosperous state, our minds are either distracted with care to make it more prosperous; or with fears puzzled and perplexed, lest it be overclouded, and if we be in a low and adverse state, we grieve and repine; nay knowledge, the most excellent of earthly pleasures, is yet in the judgment of the wisest of men, but vexation of spirit; for in much Wisdom there is much grief, and he that increaseth Knowledge increaseth Sorrow. The life of man is not unfitly compared to Ezekiel's Roll, which was full of woes. If one misery or woe passeth, behold another cometh, as one wave succeeds another. And by all these calamities we may learn what an evil Sin is, the fruit of which are all those calamities we meet with; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread till thou return unto the ground. And upon this account Job may be supposed to plead with God thus; Lord, is not my time at best but lamentable and miserable? and wilt thou superadd to this inevitable misery, a surplusage of pain and affliction? O deal kindly with thy servant who is devoted to thy fear, turn from me that I may rest till I shall accomplish as an Hireling my day. Thirdly, True it is that the Hirelings day is but Labor and Pain; yet the brevity and shortness thereof makes him regard it the less. It is but a day, and that will quickly be over and gone; and what is the life of man? it is but as a hand-breadth of a small extension; or like to a passing shadow, which we scarce sooner perceive than it vanisheth. Man that is born of a Woman is of few days, he cometh forth like a Flower and is cut down: his decaying is within some few minuts of his budding; as the Poet speaketh of Roses, & dum nascuntur consenuisse Rosas. Now from this reason Job may be supposed to argue thus; Lord, thou knowest how frail and brittle I am, and if thou contend thus with me, how quickly shall I return to the dust. I beseech thee consider that my time is however but short, and let thy Goodness appear in removing thy stroke away from me, for I am consumed by the blow of thine hand; O spare me that I may recover strength, before I go hence and be no more. Fourthly, Therest and wages the Hireling expecteth, makes the accomplishing of his day more easy and tolerable. The word rendered accomplish, signifieth to will and delight in a thing earnestly; donec optata veniat dies. 'Tis a day wished and longed for, and much delighted in when it comes. And indeed the strength of the comparison seems to lie in this, which makes the meaning of Jobs words to be this; Lord, now my trouble and pain excruciate and torments me, and my life is more wearisome to me than the Hirelings day can be to him; therefore turn away thy wrath from me, that in the finishing of my course I may be as jovial and cheerful, as the Hireling is when his day is accomplished: and thus I have done with the Explanation of these words.

The next thing I designed in this undertaking, is to enquire how the days of every man's life may be said to be determined; and whether the Period of every man's life were so fixed and bounded, that by his care, good managery, and use of the means, it cannot be extended; nor shortened by his negligence, intemperance, or exposing of himself to Famine, Sword, or Plague, it is very certain from this plain text of Scripture, that the days of every man's life are determined; but the manner how, is left unexplained: and this we do not learn from Scripture. And it were to be wished that our curiosity would forbear any enquiry into things that are hid: but alas our inclinations are so wicked and perverse, that nitimur in vetitum, we are always bent and eager in our enquiries after things of a mysterious alloy; and God knows how miserably some men have mistaken in their enquiries after a solution of the present doubt: and if I could promise to myself to rectify those huge mistakes some men have fallen into, this would be a sufficient justification of my present undertaking.

But in order to the unfolding of this doubt, I shall premise four things which will contribute to the better understanding of it.

First, There is no doubt that every man's life hath a Period. It is appointed for all men once to die; this is a warfare from which there is no discharge: what man is he that liveth and shall not see death? as to this, the Prince and Peasant stand upon even terms, and as the wise-man tells us, the rich & poor meet together: there is no justling in the Grave for precedency. I confess it were not worth the pains to consider the trivial instances, taken from the translation of Euoch and Elias, to infringe this position. For first, we are not to debate what God may do, he has a Sovereignty over his Creatures, and must not be called to give a reason of his actions; all whose ways are tracts of wisdom and goodness. Secondly, We know nothing of the manner of their translation: he who will positively say, that they did not undergo that which is equivalent to death, will say more than he can prove. I am apt to believe that no sober man will say, that they entered their Heavenly habitation with their unrefined bodies; no more than those who rise at the sound of the last Trumpet, in the twinkling of an eye, are carried into Heaven without any change.

Secondly, It is also unquestionable, that Sin introduced this Period to every man's life; the primitive threatening runs thus, in the day thou eats thou shalt die. And the Apostle hath as plainly expressed it as it can be, wherefore as by one man sin entered into the World, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned, Rom. 5. 12. where it is plain, that Death is a punishment inflicted for Sin, so that if man had never sinned, we have no reason to think he should have died. I confess without Revelation, we could never have guessed this to be the cause of Death. The Heathen Philosophers were exceedingly confused in their notions concerning the origin of Sin, and the cause of Death: many of them thought that Death was a natural accident, originally appurtenant to Humane Nature. And indeed if Revelation had not declared the contrary, I had been fully satisfied, that Death had been no other thing but such a natural accident; but it is strange that any man that has conversed with sacred writ, should be of this opinion. And yet we find, the Pelagians of old were great sticklers for it: hence is it that the ancient Fathers and Councils have condemned it with a Curse. In the Milevitan Council Can. 2. we read thus Placuit, ut quicumque dicit, Adam primum hominem mortalemsactum, ita ut sive peccaret, sive non peccaret, moreretur in corpore, hoc est, de corpore exiret, non peccati merito sed necessitate naturae, anathema sit. In after-ages the Scotists (the most subtle of all Scholastic writers) inclined much to this opinion, against whom the Thomists (their irreconcilable Enemies) took up the cudgels: amongst modern writers the seemingly rational Socinians, have owned this groundless conceit. But I cannot stay to debate this at length, only in brief, if Death had been natural to man in the state of Innocency, it behooved to have been because of these following reasons.

1. Because Adams natural constitution implied mortality; the Materials of his constitution were not so amicable as to entertain a lasting amity and friendship.
2. It was the primitive precept, be fruitful and multiply; now it is plain that procreation includes mortality in its notion; and farther it seems to be unconceivable how this little Map of Earth should have contained a numerous multiplying and never-dying offspring.
3. Humane Nature in the state of Innocency did stand in need of Meat and Drink, as is plain from Gen. 1. 19. now the end of eating and drinking is not only to hold up, but to repair the decays of our Bodies, which would sudenly return to dust, if they were not this renewed & strengthened. 4. If Death were only the effect of Sin, and the Devil were called a Murderer from the beginning, because of his tempting our first parents to eat of the forbidden Fruit, it will follow, that since Christ came to take away the sins of the World, and to destroy the works of the Devil, that he also took away the wages of sin, which is Death; than which nothing is more contrary to daily experience. 5. Immortality seems to be entailed only to the state of future Glory, where Corruption shall put on Incorruption, and Mortality shall be swallowed up in life: and then there shall be no more death, Rev. 21. 4. These are the most material reasons I can find for the proof of this opinion, in answer to which I shall desire the Five following considerations may be weighed.

Consid. 1. It is not to be doubted that the Eternal wisdom, furnished our first parents with all these accomplishments their specific nature could suffer: the signatures of Wisdom and Goodness were legible in the lowest & least regarded piece of the creation; but in Man in a more eminent manner conspicuous. It is almost impossible for us in this fallen state, to conceive what those endowments <2 pages missing> is taken Conditionally: and so under various considerations it may be attributed either, First, To perfected Saints who are stated in Glory, where the primitive Image lost by man's fall, is renewed and perfected; and of those our Savior in the Gospel of Luke tells us, that they can die no more, Luke 20. 36. or Secondly, to our first parents in the State of Innocency. For so long as they remained obedient to the Laws of Heaven, Immortality was entailed upon their nature: for the tenor of the primitive threatening is, in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt die: where temporal Death seems to be threatened, which had been idle and vain if men had died altho they had never eaten the forbidden Fruit. I know some men think that Sin only laid a necessary obligation upon men to die; and provoked God to remove that Supernatural and Superadded quality and gift, which preserved them from Death. With such sort of men I have no great quarrel, altho I think that God could as easily have made man's constitution so lasting, and the constituent parts of his fabric so harmonious, that he should have never died if he had not sinned, as to create a superadded being to preserve him safe. For reason would plead, that that superadded gift required another, and so in infinitum.

But farther, 'tis very unreasonable to infer man's corruption from that precept, be fruitful and multiply; for altho in some sense generatio unius est alterius corruptio, yet the state of being, even since the fall, (to which that axiom has only respect) is not so brittle, as that the production of the Child infers the destruction of the Parent.

Neither doth that curious query concerning the place for that supposed numerous offspring, carry with it more reason; for First, It is not to be doubted, but the Wise Creator who gave being to man, knew well enough how to provide an habitation for his offspring. Secondly, the precept be Fruitful and Multiply, carries with it a Limitation, and replenish the Earth; so that we can never well conclude from it, that Generation should have continued after the replenishing of the Earth. But Thirdly, What suppose this little Map of Earth had not been able to contain so numerous an offspring could not God have translated man after he had lived some space upon the Earth to some better habitation, as he did with Enoch and Elijah?

Consid. 3. Though man in the state of Innocency stood in need of Meat and Drink, yet his nutriment was not noxious and hurtful to him, as now it is. It was for man's disobedience that a Curse was upon the ground, before which there was no fear of hurt from the Fruit of the Trees, and the Herbs of the Field: (which were the only things granted to men for food in that state.) And indeed if we but consider that even in this fallen state, there is a huge difference between the lives of those who live upon wholesome food, and observe a moderate diet; and of those who are careless in their diet, and feed upon husks; we cannot but think the former consideration reasonable, especially since that blessed state excluded all manner of excess.

Consid. 4. Great and Manifold are the blessed benefits that are conferred upon Mankind, upon the account of his Redeemer: now Man▪ who was at odds with his Maker upon the account of his Rebellion, is again taken into favor; and the disobedient World is reconciled unto God. And altho the being of sin is not quite abolished, yet the Curse is removed; and Death is not properly now a punishment.

Consid. 5. Immortality conjoined with a state of perfect felicity, is reserved for Heavens favorites: in the state of Innocency our first parents were liable to Death if they rebelled, but the Saints above are confirmed in their blessed state: and as our Lord Christ tells us, they can die no more. But this much may suffice for the removing the former doubts.

The Third thing I premise is, that 'tis very usual in Scripture, as it is in all Languages, to put the Whole sometimes for the Part: thus Man is said to die, to cease, to be mortal, because the Body is liable to Corruption, and not that the whole Man, or all the Essential constituent parts cease. And thus when we dispute concerning the Period of every Mans life, we must not foolishly fancy that a Period is put to the being of the Soul, but only that its union with the body is dissolved: otherwise a dismal stroke would be given to our Religion, and what would become of the virtuous? I confess it is very hard and difficult to demonstrate the immortality of our Souls by natural reason: 'tis true, by reason I may prove that our Natures are spiritual, and that we elicit acts which are beyond the power of matter; but yet we could never be fully ascertained that there is a Life after this; if Revelation had not plainly discovered it. The Heathen Philosophers very wisely entertained some hopes of a life after this; upon moral arguments taken from the goodness of God, and his justice in distributing Rewards and Punishments: but alas how doubtful were their hopes, and with how much hesitation did they discourse of it! But by the help of Revelation, these doubts are fully removed, and we now know that there is a Resurrection from the dead, and that the Souls of Believers at death go immediately into glory.

Fourthly, Because the explication of terms is very necessary for the unfolding of doubts; I shall consider the twofold notion and acception, the Period of Humane Life is liable to. 1. Sometimes it is taken in a large sense, for that common and ordinary Period which the Author of our natures hath settled, which Men by the common course of nature arrive at:

now many learned men upon good grounds think that this is the determined bounds mentioned in Scripture. 2. Sometimes it is taken for the last moment of every man's life at whatever time it happeneth; whether 1. in the beginning of man's days; or 2. in the midst of his days; thus the Psalmist prays, that God would not cut him off in the midst of his days. or 3. When men come to be of a good old age and full of years, as it is said of Abraham, he died in a good old age, an old man and full of years, Gen. 25. 8.

That there is such a common Period of Humane life seems to be certain and indubitable: we evidently enough perceive that men in the age and place wherein we live, exceed not (unless rarely) the bounds fixed upon Psal. 90. 10. The days of our years are threescore years and ten, and if by reason of more strength they be fourscore years, &c. and if we shall descend to the consideration of other Animals and Vegetables, we will find it true enough that the individuals of every specific nature, have a common Period which doth not sensibly alter; but where there is a manifest difference of the climate, temperature, and soil. Again it is very unquestionable that this common Period hath not been equally extended in all ages and places. 'Tis true for many hundred years by-past it hath suffered very little alteration, but sure from the beginning it was not so, nor can we upon any good ground be ascertained that it will continue the same that it is now, till the end of all flesh come. Tho I will not positive affirm that men's lives will be insensibly shortened, till they become incapable for procreation.

But to determine what hath been the common Period of Humane Life in by past-ages of the World, is a Theme very difficult and hard: for 1. Altho from Abraham's time till this present age it hath altered but little or nothing, as we may collect from Gen. 15. 13, and 16. where a generation is equalled to an Hundred years (as the verses collated make it evident); yet before the Flood and in some few ages following it, this common Term was not concluded within the short bounds it is now; although then it was indeed exceedingly mutable. Before the fatal Flood we read not of any who lived not above seven hundred years, (unless Abel who was murdered, and Enoch whom God took to himself): nor of any who exceeded nine Hundred sixty and nine years. Now the common Period not being so denominated from some few particular instances, but from what happens to the most of Mankind in every age who die a natural death, we may suppose that Eight Hundred years was the common Period before the Flood. But then after the Flood, the mutability of this common Period is conspicuous; for in the next age after the Flood, it was cut short two hundred years; and in the next three succeeding generations it was abridged to four hundred years; and in the three succeeding ages to the former it was reduced to two hundred years; and in Abraham's time it seems not to have been extended to an hundred years.

In reducing the Life of Mankind into shorter bounds now than it was in the infancy of the World, the Divine wisdom and goodness do very plainly appear: for 1. Altho it is true that Sin was the cause of Misery, yet it is manifest that as Men began to multiply, so they became more corrupted; and as the Earth was replenished with Men, so with multiplied Miseries; and those not only particular but common. War and bloodshed, slavery and toil, pains and diseases, were in the first ages of the World very rare and singular; now these are ordinary and common: and is it not then a great mercy that the days of our life are few, since so full of evils? But 2. If Men lived as long now as in the first ages of the World, a Land would not be able to contain its inhabitants: and this is a far greater inconvenience and disadvantage, than the shortening the lease of our beings can be supposed to be. In the first ages of the World, the lives of Men were extended, that the earth might be replenished; and it is very plain, that this common Period was shortened according as Man multiplied. I confess God threatens to destroy the inhabitants of a Land for their transgressions; it was because Men had corrupted themselves, that God brought a Flood of waters upon the World: and yet the Divine Justice was accompanied with astonishing goodness; for he did not (as justly he might have) instantly cut off that perverse generation, but he gave them the space of an Hundred and Twenty years to repent. Yet (saith God) his days shall be an Hundred and Twenty years, Gen. 6. 3. That is, although this be a perverse and corrupt generation, yet because Man is but flesh, I will give him this time to repent of his wickedness; and if notwithstanding he will not after such warning mend his manners, I will destroy him. I know many learned Men think that God here only threatens to shorten the common Period of Men's lives, and that it should be contracted within the bounds of an Hundred and twenty years: but this exposition is not agreeable to the experiences of some ages next following the Flood, in which Men lived much longer than an Hundred and Twenty years.

But they say, God uses not to anticipate his time in bringing judgments upon a nation or people: to which I answer, it is very true; but methinks men have no ground to think, that in the present case God anticipates the time in bringing judgments upon them; for we cannot think that Noah was complete five Hundred years old, when God threatened to destroy the World. And indeed any Man who is but a little acquainted with the Jewish custom of reckoning of years, knows how usual it is with them, to name the greater part of anything for the whole. St. Austin is so clear in this, I will rather set it down in his words than my own: Intelligendum est hoc Deum dixisse, cum circa finem quingentorum annorum esset Noah. i. e. quadragintos octoginta vitae annos agere, quos more suo Scriptura quingentos vocat; nomine totius maximam partem plerumque significans. Aug. de Civ. Dei, lib. 15. c. 24.

Thus much I have spoken of the common Period of Humane Life, in respect of the ages of the World. I shall now add a little concerning its changeableness, in respect of places: and I confess in this case it is so variable, that it is a hard matter to pitch upon particulars; only in the general it is certain, that this common Period is not the same in all places: in a temperate climate this common term is extended; but where there is an excess of heat, or an inconstancy of the weather, in those places this common Period is shortened.

But passing this I come now to consider the particular Period of every man's life: there be two ways it is commonly taken. 1. As it implies the disunion of the parts, by reason of the excess of someone quality or other: or 2. as it implies the Period of Humane Life whatever way it is occasioned, without any relation either to the defect, or excess of any quality: and thus the learned Episcopius states the case in his first Epistle to Jo. Beverovicus. But to make this yet more plain, I shall consider that text, 1. Sam. 26. 10. As the Lord liveth the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come to die, or he shall descend into battle and perish. Tho David was anointed King, yet he durst not stretch forth his hand against the Lord's anointed; neither would he permit Abishai, (who inconsiderately offered) to do it; knowing, none could do so and be guiltless. Therefore he comforts and solaces himself with this consideration, that God should rid him of Saul one of these three ways: 1. By smiteing him with some disease; and now to what a numberless number of diseases are our frail natures incident? variety of maladies prey upon frail man, and millions of miseries attend him; the Pestilence walketh at noon-day, and the Air which he breaths may blow out the spark of his life. 2. Or his day will come; that is, or he will die a natural Death: now Saul was well-stricken in years, and he knew that by the course of nature he could not live long. 3, Or he shall descend into battle and perish: That is, if some disease cut him not off, or if his day come not, yet he shall be exposed to a violent Death, or he shall descend into battle. Sometimes a violent Death is purely casual; thus it was with those eighteen upon whom the Tower in Siloam fell, Luke 13. 4. Sometimes it is only improperly casual, as when one of two equally exposed to danger is only killed: and sometimes it is only and properly violent, such was Saul's death, such was Ahithophel's and Haman's.

The way to this discourse in hand being thus far cleared, I shall now prosecute the design of it in this method. 1. I shall set down those erroneous opinions into which some men have unhappily fallen in their enquiry for satisfaction in the present case. 2. I shall lay down the two common opinions that offer fairest for solving this doubt. 3. I shall attempt a full and satisfactory answer: and lastly I shall conclude with some reflections upon the whole discourse.

I begin with the first to give an account of those erroneous sentiments some men have unhappily embraced in their inquiry for satisfaction in this matter. And that I may shun tediousness, I shall reduce them to the two following heads. 1. Some have foolishly imagined that the Period of Humane Life is fatal and necessary. 2. Others upon the contrary extreme, have as groundlessly thought, that it is altogether fortuitous and casual.

Amongst those who ascribe everything to the dispensation of a sure and inevitable destiny, the Stoics have been always reckoned the chiefest combatants. It is well known that those stupid and senseless Philosophers did teach, that all effects were necessarily produced by the natural order and series of causes, which were from the outgoings of Eternity inseparably chained together; so that neither Humane industry, nor the Divine power could alter what such a conjunction of causes was to produce.

That human Industry, care, and good menagery, cannot alter the decree of Fate, the Stoic moralist Seneca very fairly confesseth.

Fatis agimur, cedite fatis:

Non sollicitae possunt curae

Mutare rati stamina fusi.

Seneca in Oedip.

The same Seneca also affirms that the supreme being is so strictly tyeh to the Sempeternal series and order of Causes, that he must follow, but cannot gain-say what is thus established. Quicquid est quod nos sic vivere jussit, sic mori, eadem necessitate Deos alligat, irrevocabilis humana ac Divina pariter cursus vehit. Sen. lib. de provid. 5.

There are two very dangerous Authors of great name and fame, who amongst many other bad opinions, have recalled this Stoical dream, which was long since rejected; the one is the famous Mr. Hobs; the other the subtle author of that Book, entitled Tractatus Theologico politicus: Both which I may perhaps have occasion to examine more particularly.

But if all things were thus established by a fatal necessity, sound reason would suggest to sober Men, that it were a needless thing for the sick to call for the Physicians aid. And indeed Cicero very ingeniously confesseth this: Si fatum tibi est ex hoc morbo convalescere, sive tu medicum adhibueris, sive non adhibueris, convalesces. — Si fatum tibi est non convalescere, sive medicum adhibueris, sive non non convalesces, & alterutrum fatum est, medicum ergo ad hibere nihil valet. Cic. lib. de fato. And altho Seneca thinks he has fallen upon a very good answer, yet it is truly never a whit better. Cum sanitas (inquit) videatur de fato debetur et medico, quia ad nos beneficium fati per hujus manus venit, lib. 2. nat. cap. 35. By which means the Physician is as fatally determined to prescribe the cure, as the sick man's recovery is destined.

The ages in which these Men lived being dark and blind, we ought as much to pity their case, as correct and reprehend them. It is our happiness that we are not left to the conduct of natural reason; and would God our thankful acknowledgments were answerable to the greatness of this blessing. I shall not need to stand in rejecting this Dream, I think the hazards this speculation hath exposed some of its favorites to, will be forcible enough to afright others from embracing it. I remember I have read of some whom this conceit had so far distracted, that they did cast away their Swords and other weapons when their Enemies approached: saying, If it be our Fate to die to keep our weapons will never preserve us from Death. 'Tis also reported of the deluded Mohammedans, that in battle they take courage from this, that they are no sooner born than fate seals upon their foreheads, how long they shall live, and what death they shall die. Alas who would not pity Men thus infatuated and bewitched! surely, as St. Augustine excellently speaks Si cor tuum non esset fatuum, non crederes fatum, Tract. 37. in Joh.

Next the Stoic stand the Stargazers and Astrologers, who attribute the shortness or extension of our lives to the bad or benign Aspect and Conjunction of the Stars in the time of our Nativity. Now although I deny not that the Heavens have an influence upon inferior things, yet surely this secret and occult dominion Stargazers plead for, is so manifestly cross to reason and daily experiences, that no man in his wit will affirm it. The Prophet hath long since advised us, not to be dismayed at the signs of Heaven; adding, the Heathen they are dismayed at them, Jer. 10. 2. As if it had been only peculiar to the Heathen part of the World, who were ignorant of God's Providence, to believe the vain predictions of Astrologers. Babylon was upbraided for her trusting Astrologers, Stargazers, and monthly prognosticators. Isa. 47. 13. These men confidently presumed to foretell the time of Men's Death, and the easly deceived multitude gave a ready assent to whatever they speak: so easy a matter it is to impose anything upon the belief of the vulgar. The Palmaster as foolishly pretendeth, that God hath sealed upon every man's hand how long he shall live, and that observing men (as they would have us believe they are) can understand this by the lines and draughts in the palm of the hand. And or proof of this they aledg. Job 37. 7. where it is said, he sealet up the hand of every man; that all men may know his work. But from this place no such thing can be collected: for Elihu is there taken up in expressing the greatness of God's works, and the Divine power in commanding the Snow and the Rain, small and great, to be on the Earth; and he addeth, he sealet up the hand of every man. That is, when Snow and Rain are upon the Earth, men cannot labor and toil; their hand is sealed up, they cannot work.

Epicurus and his followers could never be reconciled to this opinion, but yet the account they give of this matter is every whit as extravagant and irrational: they being equally unhappy in the account they give of the beginning and Period of beings.

The account these men give of the original of beings is so incredible, that no rational man can have any temptation to believe it; but this belongs not to the present discourse. I shall therefore only consider what they say of the Period of beings; and briefly their opinion is, that it is no more but the casual and fortuitous separation of those particles of Matter that were united by a happy chance and hit.

This error is of an old date, and had long ere now past prescription, if it had not been so suitable to the humors of bad men. The Sadducees, whose Religion it was to contradict the Pharisees, were very great sticklers for this dream: some men have confined the Divine providence to the Stars, and plucked our sublunary beings from his immediate Rule and Dominion. Cicero could not be persuaded that God had any knowledge of things contingently future. Some to mend the matter, confess God may know the general kinds of things, but they will not allow that he knows every particular. For this they think is inconsistent with the immutability of the Deity: But others have been more illiberal in their concessions, thinking it enough if they grant that God hath a care of Mankind, altho he never regard lesser matters: and that,

Curat magna Deus, fortunae parva relinquit.

By means of these wild conceits this Error has proceeded from bad to worse, yet very few of the old Philosophers, or any other rank of men; (Atheists those Anomalous births excepted) had ever that confidence in impiety, to say with the Epicureans, that the World is perfectly left to its own fortuitous and casual resolutions, or that I may express it in their Poets own phrase.

Sive nihil positum est, sed sors incerta vagatur,

Fert{que} refert{que} vices, & habent mortalia casum.

That the Period of every man's life is not so casual and fortuitous as these men imagine, may be made evident by clear testimonies from Scripture concerning the particular Providence whereby God takes care of every particular thing in the World. But because I will have occasion to consider this afterwards, I shall now add only an instance or two from Scripture, whereby it may appear that the most seemingly casual Periods of men are ordered by an infinite Wisdom, and fall under the Divine Rule and Dominion. And first the man-slayer, who killeth his Neighbor unawares, seems to be as casual a business as can be: and yet we may read how far the Divine providence is concerned in this particular, Exod. 21. 13. But farther, one of Epicurus Discples would readily conclude that Ahab's death was a piece of chance, and governed by no Supreme power. It was but an Archer's drawing his Bow at a venture, which by chance killed Ahab. But the word of truth informs us, that by this means the prophecy 1 Kings, 21. 19. was fulfilled: and that it came not to pass without the Divine providence, who rules among the children of Men.

And now I have done with the two erroneous extremes which some men have inconsiderately run to for shelter: the next thing I premised was to lay down the two common opinions that offer fair for removing the difficulty; but I must say (for the thing is palpable,) that I am now only to give the two former rejected opinions of the Stoics and Epicureans dressed up in better apparel, and much refined from the impure dregs of Heathenism: as,

- 1. Some run to the absolute and inconditionate Decrees of God, and tell us, that from the outgoings of Eternity, previous to the Divine consideration of circumstances in which men are to be placed, God has so absolutely determined the Period of every man's life, that it can neither be lengthened nor extended by care and diligence; nor shortened by intemperance, Sword or Plague.
- 2. Others who see the inconveniencies and absurdities that follow upon the granting that opinion to be true, are induced to believe that the Period of every man's life is ordinarily mutable; and may be both extended & shortened: yet still they grant that God may, as it seems good to him, either extend or shorten it.

There are four very considerable particulars that seem to strengthen the first opinion. First, There are many plain places of Scripture that conclude the days of every man to be bounded by the Divine determination. Secondly, There are many examples in Scripture which show that the Period of every Mans Life is from the out-goings of Eternity, set and bounded in by the Divine will. Thirdly, It is a common opinion that the futurition of all things depends upon the Divine will, antecedently to which, things are only possible: and therefore, Fourthly, we can never give a rational and satisfying account, how the Divine knowledge concerning the Period of Humane Life is infallible and certain, if it be not founded upon the Basis of the sure absolute Decree.
