BOOK XIV

(i. 1) HAVING related the history of Queen Alexandra and her death in the preceding book, we shall now speak of the events that followed immediately thereafter, keeping in mind one thing above all else, which is not to omit anything whether through ignorance or fault of memory. For while the relation and recording of events that are unknown to most people because of their antiquity require charm of exposition, such as is imparted by the choice of words and their proper arrangement and by whatever else contributes elegance to the narrative, in order that readers may receive such information with a certain degree of gratification and pleasure, nevertheless what historians should make their chief aim is to be accurate and hold everything else of less importance than speaking ^a the truth to those who must rely upon them in matters of which they themselves have no knowledge.^b with Book XIV Josephus begins to use Nicolas of Damaseus as his chief souree (continuing to Ant. xvii. 206), but it should be noted that Josephus has freely drawn on Nicolas in the preeeding book as well, as some of the notes indicate ; see also the Appendix on sourees in the last volume of this translation. The reader may also be referred to the detailed but often speculative study of the parallelism between Ant. xiv. and B.J. i. by R. Laqueur in Der jüdische Historiker Flavius Josephus, 1920, pp. 128-221.

^a §§ 4-8 have partial parallels in B.J. i. 120-123.

^b Variant "the high priesthood." The reading "royal power" (βασιλείαν) is supported by B.J. i. 120 and other passages, referred to in the following notes.

^c The Olympiad and consular years correspond to 70/69 B.C.; thus Hyrcanus would have assumed royal power two years before the death of Alexandra, if she died in 67 B.C., as is most probable. Moreover we are told in Ant. xiv. 97 and xx. 244 that Aristobulus reigned 3 years and

(2) ^aNow when Hyrcanus assumed royal power,^b in the third year of the hundred and seventy-seventh Olympiad, the Roman consuls being Quintus Hortensius and Quintus Metellus, the same who was surnamed Creticus,^c Aristobulus promptly declared war on him, and in the battle which he fought near Jericho many of the soldiers of Hyrcanus deserted to his brother. Upon this he fled to the citadel, where Aristobulus' wife and children had been confined by his mother, as we have said before.^d And those of the opposite faction who had taken refuge in the precincts of the temple he attacked and seized.^e And after proposing to his brother that they come to an agreement, he ended hostilities on the terms that Aristobulus should be king, while he himself should live without taking part in public affairs, and be undisturbed in the enjoyment of the possessions that he then had.^f This pact they made under the auspices

6 months, and in Ant. xv. 180 that after Alexandra's death Hyrcanus was king 3 months ; this makes a total of 3 years and 9 months for the two reigns ; reckoning back from 63 b.c., when Pompey ended Aristobulus's reign, we arrive at 67 b.c. for the accession of Hyrcanus. Schürer, i. 256 n. 1, is probably right in assuming that Josephus has here relied on a chronological hand-book and has given a date inconsistent with native tradition. ^a*Ant.* xiii. 426.

^e B.J. i. 120 says more concretely that Hyrcanus seized Aristobulus' wife and children as hostages.

^f Josephus here and in the parallel, B.J. i. 121, does not make it clear whether Hyrcanus gave up the high priesthood as well as the throne to Aristobulus, though the language in both passages (especially Ant. xiv. 7) suggests that he did. However, in Ant. xiv. 41, 97 and xx. 243-244 Josephus says plainly that Aristobulus became high priest in place of Hyrcanus. There is therefore no reason to assume, as some scholars do, that Hyrcanus continued as high priest between 67 and 63 b.c. See further A. Schalit, BJPOS 6 (1939), 145-148.

^a Laqueur, pp. 134-136, pointing out that Ant. gives Hyrcanus a less important position than B.J. (which says that “Hyrcanus, while abdicating the throne, should enjoy all his other honours as the king’s brother”), attributes this slight difference, as similar ones, to Josephus’ altered attitude toward the Herodians, whose ancestor Antipater was responsible for Hyrcanus’ later triumph over Aristobulus.

^b Justin Martyr, Dial. c. Tryph. 52, says that Antipater was an Ascalonite; Julius Africanus, ap. Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. i. 7. 11, says that Antipater’s father Herod was a temple-slave of Apollo at Ascalon and that Antipater was of the temple, and after confirming their agreement by oaths and pledges and embracing one another in the sight of all the people, they withdrew, Aristobulus to the palace, and Hyrcanus, as one who was now a private citizen,^a to the house of Aristobulus.

(3) But there was a certain friend of Hyrcanus, The rise of the Idumaeon
Antipater. an Idumaeon called Antipater, who, having a large fortune and being by nature a man of action and a trouble-maker, was unfriendly to Aristobulus and quarrelled with him because of his friendliness toward Hyrcanus. Nicolas of Damascus, to be sure, says that his family belonged to the leading Jews who came to Judaea from Babylon.^b But he says this in order to please Antipater's son Herod, who became king of the Jews by a certain turn of fortune, as we shall relate in the proper place.^c This Antipater, it seems, was first called Antipas, which was also the name of his father,^d whom King Alexander^e and his wife appointed governor of the whole of Idumaea, and they say that he made friends of the neighbouring carried off by Idumaeon robbers as a boy; see further next note.

^c In Ant. xv. In B.J. i. 123 Josephus says merely that Antipater was an Idumacan by race and that "his ancestry, wealth and other advantages put him in the front rank of his nation." For a discussion of Josephus' varying attitude toward the father of Herod the Great and his apologist, Nicolas of Damascus, see Schürer i. 292 n. 3, Laqueur, pp. 136-139, Otto, Her. pp. 15, 17-18 and Jacoby, FGH ii. 381 and Commentary to fr. 96, p. 255. The latter argues that Nicolas really did invent a Babylonian Jewish ancestry for Herod, and that Hölscher, in PW ix. 1971 f., is wrong in believing that a Jewish polemicist has falsified Nicolas' account.

^a According to Julius Africanus (see above, note b), Antipater's father was named Herod.

Arabs and Gazaeans and Ascalonites, and completely won them over by many large gifts. Now the younger Antipater looked jealously on Aristobulus' power,^a and fearing that he might suffer harm because of his hatred for him, he stirred up the powerful^a Jews against him in secret conversations, saying that it was wrong to ignore the fact that Aristobulus wrongly held royal power and had driven his brother from the throne although he was the elder, and now occupied it though it belonged to the other by right of seniority. These were the arguments he unceasingly continued to address to Hyrcanus, adding that he was in danger of losing his life unless he insured his safety by taking himself out of his way.^b For Aristobulus' friends, he said, were losing no opportunity of advising him to do away with Hyrcanus, as he would then hold power securely. But Hyrcanus gave no credence to these words, for he was naturally a decent man and because of his kindliness did not readily listen to slander. But his ineffectualness^c and weakness of will made him seem ignoble and unmanly to those who observed him. Aristobulus, however, was of the opposite nature, being a man of action^c and alert spirit.

(4) ^d And so when Antipater saw that Hyrcanus was paying no attention to what he said, he did not let a day go by without bringing false charges against Aristobulus before him, and slandering him by saying that he wished to kill Hyrcanus ; and by dint of constant pressure he persuaded him to take his advice and flee to Aretas,^a the Arab king, promising that if he followed his advice, he too would be his ally. When Hyrcanus heard that this would be to his advantage, he was ready to flee to Aretas, for Arabia borders on Judaea.^b However, he first sent Antipater to the Arab king to receive sworn assurances that if he came to him as a suppliant, Aretas would not deliver him up to his enemies. When Antipater had received these sworn assurances, he returned to Hyrcanus at Jerusalem ; and not long afterward he slipped out of the city by night, taking Hyrcanus with him, and after travelling a great distance,^c brought him to the city called Petra, where the palace of Aretas was. Being a very good friend of the king, he urged him to bring Hyrcanus back to Judaea ; and as he did this every day without intermission and offered him gifts in addition, he finally persuaded Aretas.^d Moreover Hyrcanus also promised him that if he were restored and received his throne, he would return to him the territory and the twelve cities which his father Alexander had taken from the Arabs.^e These were Medaba,^f Libba,^g Dabaloth,^h Ara-

After his victory many deserted to Hyrcanus, and Aristobulus, being left alone, fled to Jerusalem. Thereupon the Arab king took his whole army and attacked the temple, where he besieged Aristobulus; and the citizens, joining Hyrcanus' side, assisted him in the siege, while only the priests remained loyal to Aristobulus. And so Aretas placed the camps of the Arabs and Jews^k next to one another, and pressed the siege vigorously. But as this action took place at the time of observing the festival of Unleavened Bread, which we call Phaska,^l the Jews of best repute left the country and fled to Egypt. had once in a rainless period prayed to God to end the drought, and God had heard his prayer and sent rain ; this man hid himself when he saw that the civil war continued to rage, but he was taken to the camp of the Jews and was asked to place a curse on Aristobulus and his fellow-rebels, just as he had, by his prayers, put an end to the rainless period. But when in spite of his refusals and excuses he was forced to speak by the mob, he stood up in their midst and said, " O God, king of the universe, since these men standing beside me are Thy people, and those who are besieged are Thy priests, I beseech Thee not to hearken to them against these men nor to bring to pass what these men ask Thee to do to those others." And when he had prayed in this manner the villains among the Jews who stood round him stoned him to death.

(2) But God straightway punished them for this savagery, and exacted satisfaction for the murder of Onias in the following manner. While the priests and Aristobulus were being besieged, there happened to come round the festival called Phaska, at which it is our custom to offer numerous sacrifices to God.^a But as Aristobulus and those with him lacked victims, they asked their countrymen to furnish them with these, and take as much money for the victims as they wished. And when these others demanded that they pay a thousand drachmas for each animal they wished to get, Aristobulus and the priests willingly accepted this price and gave them the money, which they let down from the walls by a rope. countrymen, however, after receiving the money did not deliver the victims, but went to such lengths of villainy that they violated their pledges and acted impiously toward God by not furnishing the sacrificial victims to those who were in need of them.^a But the priests, on suffering this breach of faith, prayed to God to exact satisfaction on their behalf from their countrymen ; and He did not delay their punishment, but sent a mighty and violent wind to destroy the crops of the entire country,^b so that people at that time had to pay eleven drachmas for a modius of wheat.^c

(3) ^d Meanwhile Pompey sent Scaurus also ^e to Syria, as he himself was in Armenia, still making war on Tigranes.^f And when Scaurus came to Damascus, he found that Lollius and Metellus had just taken the city, and so he hurried on to Judaea. On his arrival envoys came to him from both Aristobulus and Hyrcanus, each of whom asked him to come to his aid. Aristobulus offered to give him four hundred ^g talents ; and though Hyrcanus promised him no less a sum, he accepted the offer of Aristobulus, for he was both wealthy and generous and asked for more moderate terms, whereas Hyrcanus was poor and niggardly and held out untrustworthy promises for greater concessions.^a Nor was it as easy to take by force a city which was among the most strongly fortified and powerful, as to drive out some fugitives together with the host of Nabataeans, who were not well fitted for warfare. And so he took Aristobulus' side for the reasons mentioned above, and accepting the money, put an end to the siege by commanding Aretas to withdraw or else be declared an enemy of the Romans. Then Scaurus again withdrew to Damascus, while Aristobulus with a large force marched against Aretas and Hyrcanus, and on engaging them at a place called Papyron,^b defeated them in battle and killed some six thousand of the enemy, among the fallen being Phallion,^c the brother of Antipater.

^a B.J. i. 128 has “Three hundred talents offered by Aristobulus outweighed considerations of justice.” Laqueur, pp. 143-145, attributes the more favourable attitude toward Aristobulus and the criticism of Hyrcanus in Ant. to Josephus’ later anti-Herodian bias.

^b Schlatter, p. 393 n. 1, conjectures that this place, otherwise unknown, was somewhere near Jericho.

(iii. 1) When Pompey not long afterward came to Damascus and was advancing into Coele-Syria,^d there came to him envoys from all of Syria and Egypt and Judaea. Aristobulus, for example, sent him a fine gift, which was a golden vine worth five hundred talents. This gift is also mentioned by Strabo of Cappadocia in the following words. "There also came from Egypt an embassy and a crown worth four thousand pieces of gold, and from Judaca

^a Note that §§ 34-36 refer to the spring of 63 b.c., while §§ 37 ff. (also from Strabo) go back to the autumn of 64 b.c. Josephus has again been careless in combining his new source, Strabo, with his earlier source in B.J., namely Nicolas of Damascus. Pompey's relations with the Jewish factions are also described in Diodorus xl. 2. Cf. further Laqueur, pp. 145-148, who conjectures that the common source of Strabo and Diodorus was Theophanes of Mytilene, the friend and biographer of Pompey.

^a From the description of the object as a vine or garden it may be conjectured that its Heb. name was 'eden = "delight."

^b Does the citation from Strabo end with the preceding sentence, as Naber assumes, or continue to the words "five hundred talents," as Niese assumes, or further, to the words "ruler of the Jews," as Reinach and, apparently, Schürer assume? On this depends the answer to the problem who is meant by "we ourselves." Schürer, i. 295 n. 12, points out that if Josephus were here writing in the first person he would have mentioned the burning of the temple of Jupiter in A.D. 69. Reinach, moreover, argues that the phrase τὸν Ἰουδαίων δυνάστην, "ruler of the Jews," is not in the style of either Josephus or Nicolas. Though this is not either a vine or garden; terpōlē (delight)^a is what they called this work of art. Moreover we ourselves^b have examined this gift, which has been set up in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus at Rome, and has an inscription reading, ‘From Alexander,^c the king of the Jews.’ It was valued at five hundred talents. And it is said to have been sent by Aristobulus, the ruler of the Jews.”

(2) And not long afterward^d envoys again came to him, Antipater on behalf of Hyrcanus, and Nicodemus^e on behalf of Aristobulus; the latter, indeed, also accused Gabinius^f and Scaurus of taking money from him, Gabinius first getting three hundred talents, and Scaurus later four hundred talents; and so Aristobulus made these men his enemies in addition to the others he had. Pompey thereupon told the disputants to come to him,^g and at the beginning of spring, took his force from their winter quarters, and set out for the region of Damascus.

certain, so far as Nicolas is concerned, it must be admitted that it is more in the style of Strabo. For these reasons I also have assumed that “we ourselves” means Strabo.

^c The Epitome has “Aristobulus,” Lat. has “Aristobulus, son of Alexander”; these are probably scribal corrections. It is quite possible that Aristobulus presented a gift with the name of his father Alexander (Jannaeus) inscribed on it, the gift having originally been meant for presentation by Alexander. One may also render the Gr. here, “having an inscription of Alexander, the king of the Jews,” i.e. Alexander’s name may not have appeared as that of the donor. See Reinach, Textes, p. 93 n. 3.

And passing the cities of Heliopolis and Chalcis, he crossed the mountain that divides the region called Coele-Syria from the rest of Syria,^e and came to Damascus. Here he heard the case of the Jews and their leaders, Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, who were quarrelling with one another, while the nation was against them both and asked not to be ruled by a king, saying that it was the custom of their country to obey the priests of the God who was venerated by them, but that these two, who were descended from the priests, were seeking to change their form of government in order that they might become a nation of slaves. brother, he had been deprived of his rights as first-born by Aristobulus, and that he had but a small part of the country under his rule,^a while Aristobulus had the rest, which he had taken by force. He also denounced him as the one who had instigated the raids against neighbouring peoples and the acts of piracy at sea,^b and added that the nation would not have rebelled against him if he had not been a man given to violence and disorder. In making these accusations he was supported by more than a thousand of the most reputable Jews, whom Antipater had provided for that purpose. Aristobulus, on the other hand, blamed Hyrcanus' fall from power on his own character, which was ineffectual and therefore invited contempt; as for himself, he said that he had of necessity taken over the royal power for fear^c that it might pass into the hands of others, and that his title was exactly the same as that of his father Alexander. He then called, as witnesses to these statements, some young swaggerers, who offensively displayed their purple robes, long hair, metal ornaments and other finery, which they wore as if they were marching in a festive procession instead of pleading their cause.^d

(3) When Pompey had heard these claims, he condemned Aristobulus for his violence, but for the moment dismissed the claimants with a courteous speech, saying that he would settle all these matters^e when he came to their country, after he had first seen how things were with the Nabataeans. then he told them to keep the peace ; at the same time he treated Aristobulus with deference for fear that he might incite the country to rebellion and block his passage through it. This, however, was, as it happened, the very thing which Aristobulus did, for without waiting for any of the things to be done of which Pompey had spoken to him, he came to the city of Dium,^a and from there set out for Judaea.

(4) ^b But Pompey, who was angered by this action, took the army that he had prepared against the Nabataeans, and the auxiliaries from Damascus and the rest of Syria, as well as the Roman legions already at his disposal, and marched against Aristobulus. After passing through Pella and Scythopolis, he came to Coreae,^c which is the beginning of Judaea as one goes through the interior, and from there sent to Aristobulus, who had taken refuge in Alexandreion,^d a very beautiful^e stronghold situated on the top of a mountain, and commanded him to come to him. the one hand he cherished the hope ^a that he would obtain the kingdom from Pompey, and so feigned obedience to everything he commanded, and on the other hand, he retired to the stronghold ^b in order not to weaken his force and to prepare for himself supplies for making war, as he feared that Pompey might transfer ^c the royal power to Hyrcanus. Pompey, however, commanded him to deliver up his strongholds and give the orders therefor to his garrison commanders in his own handwriting—for they had been forbidden to accept orders in any other form,—and so he obeyed, but retired resentfully to Jerusalem and set about preparing for war. And not long afterward Pompey led his army against him ; and on the way there came to him messengers from Pontus, who informed him of the death of Mithridates at the hands of his son Pharnaces.^d

(iv. 1) He then encamped near Jericho,^e where they cultivate the palm tree and opobalsamum, that most excellent of ointments, which, when the shrubs are cut with a sharp stone, oozes out like sap, and at dawn set out for Jerusalem.^f And Aristobulus, thinking better of his plan,^g came to Pompey and promising to give him money and admit him into Jerusalem, begged him to stop the war and do as he liked peaceably. On his making this request Pompey pardoned him and sent Gabinius and some soldiers to get the money and take over the city. None of these promises was carried out, however, and Gabinius returned after being shut out of the city and failing to receive the money ; for Aristobulus' soldiers ^a had not permitted the agreement to be carried out. And ^b Pompey, being seized with anger at this, placed Aristobulus under arrest, and himself went to the city, which was strongly fortified on all sides except on the north, where it was weak. For it is surrounded by a broad and deep ravine which takes in the temple, and this is very strongly protected by an encircling wall of stone.^c

(2) But among the men within the city there was dissension, for they were not of one mind concerning their situation ; to some it seemed best to deliver the city to Pompey, while those who sympathized with Aristobulus urged that they shut Pompey out and make war on him because he held Aristobulus prisoner. It was this party that made the first move and occupied the temple, and cutting the bridge that stretches from it to the city,^d prepared themselves for a siege. But those of the other faction admitted Pompey's army and handed over to him the city and the palace. Pompey thereupon sent his legate Piso with an army to guard the city and the palace;^e and fortified the houses adjoining the temple and the places round the temple outside. His first step was to offer conciliatory terms ^a to those within, but as they would not listen to his proposals, he fortified the surrounding places with walls, with Hyrcanus willingly assisting him in all ways. And at dawn ^b Pompey pitched his camp on the north ^c side of the temple, where it was open to attack. But even here stood great towers,^d and a trench had been dug, and the temple was surrounded by a deep ravine; for there was a steep slope on the side toward the city after the bridge was destroyed, and at this spot Pompey by great labour day by day had caused earthworks to be raised, for which the Romans cut down the timber round about. And when these were high enough, though the trench was filled up with difficulty because of its immense depth, he moved up and set in place the siege engines and instruments of war that had been brought from Tyre, and began to batter the temple with his catapults. But if it were not our national custom to rest on the Sabbath day, the earthworks would not have been finished, because the Jews would have prevented this; for the Law permits us to defend ourselves against those who begin a battle and strike us, but it does not allow us to fight against an enemy that does anything else.^e

(3) ^f Of this fact the Romans were well aware, and on those days which we call the Sabbath, they did Pompey captures Jerusalem.

^b Not the third month of the Jewish year (roughly June) but the third month of the siege, as we are told in B.J. i. 149; see next note.

^c The 179th Olympiad (first year) extended from July 64 to July 63 B.C.; the consulship of Antonius and Cicero was in 63 B.C.; the combination of the two dates gives us the first half of 63 B.C. for the capture of the city. This date cannot be harmonized with the mention of the Fast Day, if by this Josephus means the Day of Atonement, which falls on the 10th of Tishri (roughly October). A plausible ex-not shoot at the Jews or meet them in hand to hand combat, but instead they raised earthworks and towers, and brought up their siege-engines in order that these might be put to work the following day. And one may get an idea of the extreme piety which we show toward God and of our strict observance of the laws from the fact that during the siege the priests were not hindered from performing any of the sacred ceremonies through fear, but twice a day, in the morning and at the ninth hour,^a they performed the sacred ceremonies at the altar, and did not omit any of the sacrifices even when some difficulty arose because of the attacks. And indeed when the city was taken, in the third month,^b on the Fast Day, in the hundred and seventy-ninth Olympiad, in the consulship of Gaius Antonius and Marcus Tullius Cicero,^c and the enemy rushed in and were slaughtering the Jews in the temple, those who were busied with the sacrifices none the less continued to perform the sacred ceremonies ; nor were they compelled, either by fear for their lives or by the great number of those already slain, to run away, but thought it better to endure whatever they might have to suffer there beside the altars than to neglect any of the planation of the difficulty was given long ago by Herzfeld (cited by Schürer i. 298 n. 23 and Reinach). Josephus is here supplementing Nicolas' account from those of Strabo and other historians, who, like many pagan writers, erroneously referred to the Sabbath as a fast day ; cf. Strabo xvi. 763, who says Pompey took Jerusalem "on a fast day, they say, when the Jews refrain from all work," and Dio Cassius xxvii. 16, who says that the city was taken "on the day of Kronos" (=the Sabbath). The city probably fell about July 63 B.C. if, as Josephus (or Nicolas) says, the siege lasted three months, since Pompey apparently started operations in the spring of 63 B.C. (cf. § 53 note d).

ordinances. And that this is not merely a story to set forth the praises of a fictitious piety, but the truth, is attested by all those who have narrated the exploits of Pompey, among them Strabo and Nicolas and, in addition, Titus Livius, the author of a History of Rome.

(4) Now when the siege-engine was brought up, the largest of the towers was shaken and fell, making a breach through which the enemy poured in ; first among them was Cornelius Faustus, the son of Sulla, who with his soldiers mounted the wall, and after him the centurion Furius, with those who followed him, on the other side, and between them Fabius, another centurion, with a strong and compact body of men. And there was slaughter everywhere. For some of the Jews were slain by the Romans, and others by their fellows^a; and there were some who hurled themselves down the precipices,^b and setting fire to their houses, burned themselves within them, for they could not bear to accept their fate. And so of the Jews there fell some twelve thousand,^c but of the Romans only a very few.^d One of those taken captive was Absalom, the uncle and at the same time father-in-law of Aristobulus.^e And not light was the sin committed against the sanctuary,^f which before that time had never been entered or seen. ^c §§ 77-78 have no parallel in B.J. Laqueur, p. 162, sees in these sections another (indirect) attack of Josephus on the Herodian usurpers. One wonders why Josephus should here disguise a sentiment expressed so clearly elsewhere in Ant., e.g. § 491. ^h Variant "those in Jerusalem."

on those who were high priests by birth became the privilege of commoners. But of this we shall speak in the proper place.^a Now^b Pompey gave over to Scaurus Coele-Syria and the rest of Syria^c as far as the Euphrates river and Egypt, and two Roman legions, and then went off to Cilicia, making haste to reach Rome.^d And with him he took Aristobulus in chains, together with his family ; for he had two daughters and as many sons ; but one of them, Alexander, got away, while the younger son, Antigonus, was carried off to Rome together with his sisters.^e

(v. 1) Scaurus then^f marched against Petra in Arabia, and because it was difficult of access,^g ravaged the country round about it, but as his army suffered from hunger, Antipater, at the command of Hyrcanus, furnished him with grain from Judaea and whatever other provisions he needed. And when Antipater was sent by Scaurus as an envoy to Aretas because of their friendly relations, he persuaded him to pay a sum of money to save his country from being ravaged, and himself be-

^a In Ant. xv.

^b On the parallelism between §§ 79-126 and B.J. i. 157-186, see Laqueur, pp. 163-165.

^c Conjectured by Niese. ms. P omits "and" after "Coele-Syria"; the other mss. omit "and the rest of Syria." Niese's conjecture is supported by B.J. i. 157.

^d Pompey spent the winter of 63-62 B.C. in Asia Minor, and did not reach Rome until the following winter, 62-61 B.C. Here too, as in § 34, Josephus' chronology is rather confused.

^e Antigonus later escaped from Rome with his father, cf. § 96.

^f The "then" (Gr. δέ) is merely transitional. B.J. has "meanwhile," which is chronologically smoother, as Scaurus marched on Petra in 62 B.C.

^g Variant "difficult to capture."

^a Cf. B.J. i. 159, "and the Arab king was persuaded to pay three hundred talents." Laqueur does not comment on this discrepancy, which, incidentally, is difficult to reconcile with his theory about the anti-Herodian changes in Ant.

^b Gabinius had been consul in 58 B.C. and came to Syria as proconsul in 57 B.C. In B.J. i. 160 Josephus says that he came as successor to Scaurus, overlooking the two intervening governors, cf. Dr. Thackeray's note ad loc. On Gabinius' extortions from the provincials see Dio Cassius xxxix. 55-56 and Cicero, Pro Sestio 43.

came surety for three hundred talents.^a And on these terms Scaurus ended the war, being no less eager to have this come about than was Aretas.

(2) But some time later, while Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, was overrunning Judaea, Gabinius came to Syria from Rome as governor,^b and after achieving many other things worthy of note, also marched against Alexander; for Hyrcanus was no longer able to hold out against the strength of Alexander, who was actually attempting to raise again the wall of Jerusalem which Pompey had destroyed. But this he was stopped from doing by the Romans there.^c He then went round the country and armed many of the Jews, and soon collected ten thousand heavy-armed soldiers and fifteen hundred horse, and fortified the strongholds of Alexandreion near Coreae and Machaerūs^d near the mountains of Arabia.^e Gabinius therefore went out against him, sending ahead Mark Antony with some other officers. These armed the Romans who accompanied them,^f and beside them the Jews who were submissive, led by Peitholaus and Malichus, and taking along

Gabinius becomes governor of Syria and defeats Alexander the son of Aristobulus

^a Schalit, p. 35, suggests that these Romans were negociatores or business agents who had come to exploit Judaea's farms and industries.

^b On these two fortresses see Ant. xiii. 417 notes c and d. Aristobulus had earlier yielded them to Pompey, cf. §§ 50-52. Presumably Alexander now refortified them.

^c Ant. omits the fortress of Hyrcania, mentioned in B.J. i. 161 (on its location see Ant. xiii. 417 note b). Laqueur, p. 217, explains its omission here by supposing that Josephus was ignorant of its location. This seems doubtful, particularly because of its being mentioned together with the other two fortresses below, in § 89.

^a ἑταρικόν is a Thucydidean term (Thuc. viii. 48. 3), for which B.J. has οἱ ἐπίλεκτοι.

^b Josephus omits to say here, as he does in B.J. i. 163, that Antipater's guard ^a also, went to meet Alexander. Gabinius himself followed them with his main body. Alexander therefore retired to the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, where the two forces fell upon each other and a battle took place, in which the Romans killed about three thousand of the enemy, and captured as many alive.^b

(3) Meanwhile Gabinius came to Alexandreion and invited those within to cease hostilities,^c agreeing to pardon them for their past offences. But as many of the enemy were encamped before the stronghold, the Romans set upon them ; and Mark Antony, who fought with distinction ^d and killed many men, was voted the prize for bravery. Finally Gabinius left a part of his army there until the fortress should be taken by siege, and himself went through the rest of Judaea, and whenever he came upon a ruined city, he gave directions for it to be rebuilt. And so there were rebuilt Samaria, Azotus, Scythopolis, Anthedon, Raphia, Adora, Marisa, Gaza and not a few others.^e And as the people obeyed Gabinius' orders, these cities, which had long been desolate, could now be safely inhabited.^f

(4) Having taken these measures throughout the country, Gabinius returned to Alexandreion, and as Alexander submits to Gabinius.

Alexander fled to Alexandreion, which explains why Gabinius attacked it, cf. §§ 86, 89.

^c προκαλεῖτο εἰς διαλύσεις is another Thucydidean borrowing (Thuc. iv. 19. 1), not found in B.J.

^d According to B.J. i. 165 Antony had always fought bravely on every battlefield (πανταχοῦ . . . ἀεὶ).

^e B.J. adds Apollonia, Jamneia and Gamala (variants : Gabala, Gadara). Possibly "Gamala" is a corruption of "Gaza."

^f βεβαίως οἰκηθῆναι is the third Thucydidean phrase (Thuc. i. 2. 1) in this passage.

^a B.J. i. 168 adds “to prevent their serving as a base of operations for another war.”

^b For synhedria B.J. has “synods” (συνδόους).

^c On these terms and the nature of Gabinius’ administrative measures in Judaea see works cited in Appendix L.

^d So also B.J., but with the majority of scholars we must correct “Gadara” to “Gazara” (in N.W. Judaea); cf.

he pressed the siege strongly, Alexander sent envoys to him, asking pardon for his offences and giving up the strongholds of Hyrcania and Machaerūs, and afterwards Alexandreion as well. And so Gabinius demolished them.^a For Alexander's mother, who was on the side of the Romans, since her husband and her other children were held at Rome, came to him with the request that he do this, and he granted it ; and after settling matters with her, he brought Hyrcanus to Jerusalem, to have charge of the temple. He also set up five councils (synhedria),^b and divided the nation into as many districts^c ; these centres of government were : first, Jerusalem, next, Gadara,^d third, Amathūs,^e fourth, Jericho, and fifth, Sepphoris in Galilee.^f And so the people were removed from monarchic rule and lived under an aristocracy.^g Schürer i. 339 n. 5, whose historical argument is sound, although his explanation of "Gadara" as an Aramaized form of "Gazara" is philologically questionable, since d in Aramaic corresponds to z in Heb. only when the latter = proto-Semitic d (but cf. W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity, p. 336 n. 10. It may be that Josephus or a scribe wrote "Gadara" for "Gazara" because the former city lay near Amathūs, the next on the list. Albright, in JBL 56 (1937), p. 162 n. 52, insists that Gadara is not Gazara but "one of the many towns derived from the stem gdr." Schalit, p. 31, also reading "Gadara," identifies it with Gadora (mod. Tell Jadūr near es-Salt) in Transjordan; but Schürer's objections to the similar theory of Schlatter, p. 224, still hold.

^b The variant "Judaea" must be a scribal error.

^c By "aristocracy" Josephus means priestly rule, as he explains in Ant. xi. 111. ^f In 56 B.C.

against him a body of soldiers led by Sisenna, Antony and Servilius^a to prevent him from occupying the place and to arrest him. For many of the Jews had flocked to Aristobulus, both on account of his former glory and especially because they always^b welcomed revolutionary movements. Among others a certain Peitholaus, who was legate^c at Jerusalem, deserted to him with a thousand men. Many^d of those who joined him, however, were unarmed. But Aristobulus, who had decided to retire to Machaerūs, dismissed these men, who were without equipment—for they were of no use to him in action,—and taking the men who were armed, amounting to some eight thousand, marched away. And as the Romans fell upon them valiantly, they were defeated in battle; for though the Jews fought manfully^e and eagerly, the enemy were too strong for them, and they were put to flight. Some five thousand of them were slain, while the rest were scattered and tried to save themselves as best they could. Aristobulus, however, escaped^f to Machaerūs with more than a thousand men, and fortified the place, and though he was faring badly, none the less he was still of good hope.^g But after withstanding a siege of two days and receiving many wounds,^h he was taken prisoner and brought to

^a Antipater's "good sense" is not mentioned in the parallel in B.J. This fact may be adduced as another detail

he found Syria a prey to uprisings and disorder ; for Aristobulus' son Alexander had later come into power a second time and had forced many of the Jews to revolt, and was marching over the country with a large army and killing all the Romans he met, and was closely besieging those who had taken refuge on Mount Gerizim, as it is called.

(3) On finding Syria in this condition, Gabinius sent Antipater, who was a man of good sense,^a to the unruly elements, to see whether he could put a stop to their mad behaviour and persuade them to return to a more reasonable frame of mind. And so he came and brought many of them to their senses and induced them to do their duty ; but he could not restrain Alexander, who with an army of thirty thousand Jews went to meet Gabinius, and was defeated in an engagement near Mount Tabor, in which ten thousand of his men fell.^b

(4) Gabinius then settled affairs at Jerusalem in accordance with the wishes of Antipater,^c and marched against the Nabataeans, whom he overcame in battle^d ; and he also sent on their way Mithridates^e and Orsanes,^f fugitives from the Parthians, who had come to him, though the story was that they escaped from

(vii. 1) Crassus, intending to march against the Parthians, came to Judaea and carried off the money in the temple, amounting to two thousand talents, which Pompey had left, and was prepared to strip the sanctuary of all its gold, which amounted to eight thousand talents.^e He also took a bar of solid beaten gold, weighing three hundred mina ; the mina with us is equal to two and a half pounds.^f This bar was given to him by the guardian of the money,^g a priest named Eleazar, not because of rascality—for he was a good and upright man,—but because, being entrusted with the keeping of the curtains of the sanctuary, which were of admirable beauty and costly workmanship, and hung from this bar, he saw Crassus intent on gathering up the gold, and had fears for the whole ornamentation of the sanctuary ; and so he gave him the bar of gold as a ransom for all the rest, receiving his sworn assurance that he would not remove anything else from the sanctuary but would be content merely with what was to be given him by the priest—a present worth many tens of thousands (of drachmas). Now this bar was in a hollow wooden bar, a fact which was unknown to all others, and which Eleazar alone knew. Crassus, however, although he took this bar with the understanding that he would not touch anything else in the temple, violated his oath and carried off all the gold in the sanctuary.

^a This bibliographical note indicates that for part of §§ 106-118, which have no parallel in B.J., Josephus has used Strabo to supplement his earlier source, Nicolas ; cf. the Appendix on Josephus' sources in the last volume of this translation.

^b That is, the gold was worth 8000 talents of silver, as Reinach remarks.

^c In the only other reference to the mina in Josephus, Ant. ii. 33, he equates it loosely with the Heb. shekel. According to Krauss, Talmudische Archäologie ii. 406, the Heb. mina weighed only $1\frac{1}{4}$ Roman pounds. Reinach gives 728 grammes for the Heb. mina and 818 for $2\frac{1}{2}$ Roman pounds. Thus Josephus' equation here is inaccurate.

(2) But no one need wonder that there was so much wealth in our temple, for all the Jews throughout the habitable world, and those who worshipped God,^a even those from Asia and Europe, had been contributing to it for a very long time. And there is no lack of witnesses^b to the great amount of the sums mentioned, nor have they been raised to so great a figure through boastfulness or exaggeration on our part, but there are many historians who bear us out, in particular Strabo of Cappadocia, who writes as follows. “ Mithridates^c sent to Cos and took the money which Queen Cleopatra had deposited there, and eight hundred talents of the Jews.” Now there is no public money among us except that which is God’s, and it is therefore evident that this money was transferred to Cos by the Jews of Asia because of their fear of Mithridates.^a For it is not likely that those in Judaea, who possessed a fortified city and the temple, would have sent money to Cos, nor is it probable that the Jews living in Alexandria would have done this either, since they had no fear of Mithridates. And this same Strabo in another passage testifies that at the time when Sulla crossed over to Greece to make war on Mithridates, and sent Lucullus to put down the revolt of our nation in Cyrene,^b the habitable world was filled with Jews, for he writes as follows. "There were four classes in the state of Cyrene; the first consisted of citizens, the second of farmers, the third of resident aliens sum of 800 talents is not incredible if we remember that contributions to the temple from Jews in the Diaspora consisted of many gifts in addition to the annual didrachm payment, cf. Heichelheim, Rom. Syria, p. 74. However, it would be much easier to accept Josephus' explanation if he had mentioned 80 talents instead of 800. See now J. Cohen, Judaica et Aegyptiaca (1941), pp. 60-64.

^a On Cleopatra III of Egypt and her deposit of money in Cos in 102 b.c. see Ant. xiii. 349. Reinach conjectures that the 800 talents were deposited at the same time by her Jewish generals Chelkias and Ananias, since the sum is much too large to represent the contributions of the Jews of Asia Minor. Similarly Willrich, Urkundenfälschung, p. 74, insists that it was the Jews of Egypt who took away their money in fear of Ptolemy Lathyrus, and he charges Josephus with ignorance of the real situation in 88 b.c. But Strabo’s language suggests that the 800 talents came from a different period (otherwise he would have written, “the money which Cleopatra and the Jews had deposited”). Moreover the

Strabo on
of Cyrene.

^a The last king of Cyrene, Ptolemy Apion, natural son of Ptolemy VII Physcon, on his death in 96 b.c. bequeathed his kingdom to Rome. For several years the Romans left the government in the hands of the Greek cities of Cyrenaica, which did not become a Roman province until 74 b.c. In the winter of 87/6 b.c. Sulla sent Lucullus to restore order in Cyrene, which, according to Plutarch, Lucullus 2, had been disturbed by "continual tyrannies and wars." The Jews are not mentioned. The passage in Plutarch is probably based on Strabo (Jacoby, FGH ii. C, p. 294 is non-committal about Plutarch's use of Strabo here), and Strabo, in turn, probably used Posidonius as a source, cf. Schürer i. 42. It may be that Josephus' text originally contained a reference to the Jewish revolt, which has been accidentally omitted, as Niese supposes, or that he has added the reference to the Jewish uprising on his own account, as Jacoby holds. If we accept the former view, we may suppose that the Cyrenaean Jews were dissatisfied with the civic status granted them by the Greek authorities.

^a Or "in which it has not become dominant," as Charnard and Reinach (Textes, p. 92) translate. Although ἐπικρατεῖν usually means "to gain the mastery," "prevail," it may also mean, as I think it does here, "to make one's power felt." It seems to me unlikely that Strabo (or even Posidonius, who was not particularly friendly to the Jews) would have gone so far as to say that the Jews of the Diaspora dominated the various cities in which they lived. But I should hesitate to press the point. It may be added that one might also translate "which has not been occupied by it."

^b By other historians. Crassus was defeated near Carrhae in Mesopotamia in the spring of 53 b.c. and soon after was killed. Debevoise writes, p. 95, “The disaster which the Roman arms had suffered at Carrhae made certain the

(3) Now when Crassus had arranged everything the way he wished, he set out for Parthia and perished together with his entire army, as has been related elsewhere.^b Cassius,^c however, fled to Syria and took possession of it,^d thus standing in the way of the Parthians who were making incursions into the country as a result of their victory over Crassus. Later he came to Tyre, and then went up to Judaea. Here he fell upon Tarichaeae,^e which he quickly took, and made slaves of some thirty thousand men. He also killed Peitholaus, who had continued the revolt led by Aristobulus; and this he did at the instigation of Antipater, who at that time had great influence with him, and was then held in the greatest esteem by the Idumaeans also, from among whom^f he took a wife of a distinguished Arab family, named Cypros^g; and by her he had four sons, Phasael,

^b On the parallelism between §§ 127-155 and B.J. i. 187-200 see Laqueur, pp. 165-171, 223. Here again Laqueur tries to show that Josephus' attitude toward Antipater and Herod is less favourable in Ant. than is that of his source (Nicolas) in B.J.; at the same time he admits that Nicolas had probably exaggerated the services of Antipater at the expense of Hyrcanus. So too Motzo in a monograph on this subject, cited by Momigliano, Ricerche, pp. 189-190. See further works cited in Appendix L.

^c Caesar defeated Pompey at Pharsalus in August (Julian reckoning), 48 B.C. Pompey was killed when he landed in Egypt in September, 48 B.C.

^d ἐπιμελετής, the title also given to Antipater in the beheading. In this manner he died at Antioch. But his brother and sisters were taken by Ptolemy, the son of Mennaeus,^a who was prince of Chalcis at the foot of Mount Lebanon. And he sent his son, Philippion, to Ascalon to Aristobulus' wife, telling her to send back with him her son Antigonus and her daughters, one of whom, Alexandra, Philippion fell in love with and married. But afterwards his father Ptolemy put him to death and married Alexandra, and continued to look after her brother and sister.

(viii. 1) ^b When Caesar, after his victory over Pompey and the latter's death,^c was fighting in Egypt, Antipater, the governor^d of the Jews, under orders from Hyrcanus^e proved himself useful to Caesar in many ways. quotation from Strabo in § 139, usually = Lat. curator or praefectus, rarely = procurator (Judaeae), as in Ant. xviii. 89. In xvii. 6 it is applied to Saturninus, governor of Syria (= legatus Augusti pro praetore), who is elsewhere called ῆγεμῶν; in B.J. i. 225 Herod is appointed ἐπιμελετής of all Syria, while in the parallel Ant. xiv. 280 he is called στρατηγός. From these passages it would seem that Antipater was given a special office in 48 b.c. by Caesar, or earlier (cf. § 103) by Gabinius. He was not made procurator of Judaea, ἐπίτροπος, until 47 b.c., cf. § 143. Schürer, i. 343 n. 14, suggests that Gabinius had made him procurator, but if so this office must have been extra ordinem, since Judaea had been divided into five districts by Gabinius, as is pointed out by Momigliano, Ricerche, p. 207. It may be, however, that Josephus here anticipates; Caesar came to Egypt in the autumn of 48 b.c. but did not get help from Mithridates and Antipater until the spring of 47 b.c. On this campaign see W. Judeich, Cäsar im Orient, 1885.

^c Hyrcanus is not mentioned in the parallel, B.J. i. 187; cf. above, note b.

^a As Dr. Thackeray notes in B.J. i. 187, Ascalon was 6 days' march from Pelusium, so that Mithridates must have been warned well in advance of the refusal of passage.

^b Text slightly uncertain. This Ptolemy is to be distinguished from the son of Mennaeus in the same region.

at Ascalon,^a Antipater arrived with three thousand heavy-armed Jewish soldiers, and also managed to get the chiefs of Arabia to come to his aid; and it was owing to him that all the rulers of Syria furnished aid, not wishing to be outdone in their zeal for Caesar; among these were the prince Jamblichus and Ptolemy, the son of Soemus,^b who lived on Mount Lebanon, and almost all the cities. Mithridates then left Syria and came to Pelusium, and as its inhabitants would not admit him, besieged the city. Foremost in bravery was Antipater, who was the first to pull down part of the wall, and so opened a way for the others to pour into the city. This was how he took Pelusium. But when Mithridates and Antipater with their men were on their way to Caesar, the Jews^c who inhabited the district of Onias,^d as it was called, prevented them from doing so. Antipater, however, persuaded them too to side with his party on the ground of their common nationality, especially when he showed them a letter from the high priest Hyrcanus, in which he urged them to be friendly to Caesar and receive his army hospitably and furnish it with all things necessary. And so, when they saw that Antipater and the high priest had the same wish, they complied.^a And when those in the neighbourhood of Memphis heard that these Jews had joined Caesar's side, they too invited Mithridates to come to them. Accordingly he came and took them into his army as well.

He and Jamblichus are otherwise unknown. Soemus may possibly be the ruler mentioned in Vita 52; the name is Arabic and Nabataean, found in Petra and Ituraea, cf. Ant. xv. 185, xvii. 54, xx. 158 et al. The original form was perhaps Arab. Suhaym, cf. H. Wuthnow, Die semitischen Menschennamen in griech. Inschrift. u. Pap. d. vord. Orients, 1930, p. 130. On the name Jamblichus see Ant. xiii. 131 note c.

(2) And when he had passed round the region called the Delta, he engaged the enemy at the Camp of the Jews,^b as it is called. Mithridates commanded the right wing, and Antipater the left. And when they met in battle, Mithridates' wing gave way and would have been in danger of suffering a very grave disaster, if Antipater, who had already defeated the enemy (opposite him), had not come running with his own soldiers along the bank of the river and rescued him, at the same time putting to flight the Egyptians who had defcated Mithridates. And continuing in pursuit, he also seized their camp, and brought back^c Mithridates, who had been separated far from him in the rout. Of the latter's men some eight hundred fell, while Antipater lost only fifty.^d Mithridates thereupon wrote an account of this to Caesar, declaring that Antipater had been responsible for their victory and also for their safety ; and as a result of this, Caesar commended Antipater on that occasion, and, what is more, made use of him for the most dangerous tasks throughout the entire war. The natural result was that Antipater was wounded in some of the battles.^e

^a Caesar sailed for Syria in the spring of 47 B.C. to attack Pharnaces, King of Bosporus, who was threatening the Roman forces in Asia Minor; on the chronology see Judeich, pp. 108 ff.

^b Caesar did this to please Antipater, adds B.J. i. 194. Hyrcanus had probably resumed the office of high priest after the imprisonment of Aristobulus in 63 B.C., cf. above, § 7 note a. ^c Text slightly emended: mss. “army.”

(3) Moreover, when Caesar in the course of time concluded the war and sailed to Syria,^a he honoured him greatly; while confirming Hyrcanus in the high-priesthood,^b he gave Antipater Roman citizenship and exemption from taxation everywhere. It is said by many writers that Hyrcanus took part in this campaign^c and came to Egypt.^d And this statement of mine is attested by Strabo of Cappadocia, who writes as follows, on the authority of Asinius.^e “After Mithridates, Hyrcanus, the high priest of the Jews, also invaded Egypt.” And again this same Strabo in another passage writes as follows, on the authority of Hypsicrates.^f “Mithridates went out alone, but Antipater, the procurator^g of Judaea, was called to Ascalon by him and provided him with an additional three thousand^h soldiers, and won over the other princes; and the high priest Hyrcanus also took part in the campaign.”ⁱ These are Strabo’s own words.

(4) But at that time^j Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, also came to Caesar and bewailed the sad fate^k of his father, saying that it was on Caesar’s account that Aristobulus and his brother had died, the one having been put out of the way by poison, and the other executed by beheading at the hands of Scipio^a; and he begged Caesar to take pity on him for having been driven from his realm; and in this connexion he accused Hyrcanus and Antipater of governing the people by violence and having acted lawlessly toward him.^b But Antipater, who was present, defended himself on these points of the accusation which he saw had been brought against him, and declared that Antigonus and his fellows were revolutionaries and fomenters of sedition^c; at the same time he recalled how he had laboured on behalf of the Romans and assisted them in their plans of war, speaking of things to which his own person testified^d; with justice, he added, had Aristobulus been deported to Rome, for he had always been hostile to the Romans and never well-disposed toward them. As for the brother of Antigonus who had been punished^e for brigandage by Scipio, he had met the fate he deserved, and if he had suffered this punishment it was not because of any violence or injustice on the part of him who had inflicted it.

^d The following decree is to be dated, not in the time of Hyrcanus II (the decrees of Caesar issued on his behalf are cited below, §§ 190 ff.), but probably in the time of Simon, him procurator of Judaea.^a He also permitted Hyrcanus, who had asked this favour of him, to rebuild the walls of his native city,^b for they had been lying in ruins ever since Pompey demolished them. And he sent instructions to the consuls at Rome to record these grants in the Capitol.^c And the decree enacted by the Senate was as follows.^d "Lucius Valerius, son of Lucius, the praetor,^e consulted with the Senate on the Ides of December in the Temple of Concord.^f And at the writing of the decree there were present Lucius Coponius, son of Lucius, of the Colline tribe, and Papirius of the Quirine tribe. Whereas Alexander,^g son of Jason, Numenius, son of Antiochus, and Alexander, son of Dorotheus, envoys of the Jews and worthy men and allies, have discussed the matter of renewing the relation of goodwill and friendship which they formerly maintained with the Romans, and have brought as a token of the alliance a golden shield worth fifty thousand gold pieces,^h and have asked that letters be given them to the autonomous cities and kings in order that their country and ports may be secure and suffer no harm,ⁱ it has been de-more exactly in 139 B.C.; cf. 1 Macc. xv. 16-21, where a similar letter of the Roman consul Lucius is cited; cf. further works cited in Appendix J.

^a Or "consul," as the Latin translation has it; on στρατηγός as "praetor" and "consul" see Magie, pp. 74, 81.

^b Schürer, i. 251 n. 22 end, argues against Mommsen (Hermes ix. (1875), 281 ff.) that this may be an earlier Temple of Concord than that built in 121 B.C., and that thus the dating of the decree in 139 B.C. is not excluded.

^c Ritschl proposes to read "Antipater," to make the decree agree with 1 Macc. xiv. 22, which names the envoys Numenius, son of Antiochus, and Antipater, son of Jason.

⁹ Corsini: ἀρχιερεὺς codd. Exc. Lat.

^a There is no reason why Josephus' source should give the date of a Roman decree in terms of the Macedonian calendar; moreover the decree is dated internally on the Ides of December, while Panemus=June-July. The sentence evidently refers to the following Athenian decree, which is to be dated in the time of Hyrcanus I (see notes following); we must, however, emend "ninth" to "twenty-ninth," as Homolle proposes, which would give us 106/5 B.C., agreeing with the date of the archonship of Agathocles; we must creed to form a relation of goodwill and friendship with them and to provide them with all the things which they have requested, and to accept the shield which they have brought." This took place in the ninth year of Hyrcanus the high priest and ethnarch, in the month Panemus.^a Among the Athenian people also Hyrcanus obtained honours, for he had been of great service to them. And they wrote and sent him a resolution, of which the contents were as follows.

"In the presidency and priesthood of Dionysius, son of Asclepiades, on the fifth day before the end of the month of Panemus, a decree of the Athenians was delivered to the magistrates.^b In the archonship of Agathocles,^c when Eucles, son of Xenander, of the Aithalidean deme,^d was scribe, on the eleventh of the month of Munychion,^e on the eleventh day^f of the prytany, a meeting of the presiding officers (proedroi) being held in the theatre, Dorotheus of the Erchian deme^g and his fellow presiding officers also delete the words "and ethnarch," which could hardly have been applied to Hyrcanus I.

^b As Reinach points out, this first sentence is introductory, and refers to the transmission of the decree to the Jews by some Hellenistic city.

^c 106/5 B.C.; see W. B. Dinsmoor, The Archons of Athens in the Hellenistic Age, 1931, pp. 275-277 and W. Pritchett and B. D. Meritt, The Chronology of Hellenistic Archons 1941, p. xxxiv.

^d Reinach's conjecture, on the basis of a contemporary inscription (CLA ii.² 2984) for mss. "son of Menander, of the Alimusian deme."

^e Thus the decree was passed two months earlier than Hyrcanus received it, cf. above, note a.

^f The day of the prytany, missing in the mss., is supplied by Dindorf.

^g Text slightly emended; for Ἐρχίεὺς "of the Erchian deme" the mss. have ἀρχίερεὺς "high priest."

^a Text uncertain; perhaps it read originally, “at the gymnastic games of the Panathenaean and Eleusinian festivals” or, as Reinach suggests, on the basis of con-festivals and at the gymnastic games^a; and that the magistrates shall take care that so long as he continues to maintain his goodwill toward us, everything which we can devise shall be done to show honour and gratitude to this man for his zeal and generosity, in order that by these measures our people may show that it approves of good men and holds them worthy of a fitting reward, and may rival those already honoured in the zeal shown toward us^b; and that envoys shall be chosen from among all the Athenians to convey this resolution to him and request him to accept these honours and to endeavour at all times to do good to our city.” What we have here set down concerning the honours paid to Hyrcanus^c by the Romans and the people of Athens seems sufficient.

(ix. 1) ^dNow when Caesar had settled the affairs of Syria, he sailed away. And Antipater, after escorting Caesar out of Syria, returned to Judaea and at once raised again the wall which had been demolished by Pompey,^e and going about the country suppressed temporary inscriptions, “at the gymnastic games of the Panathenaean and Eleusinian and Ptolemaic festivals.”

^b The text and meaning of the last clause are slightly uncertain. Reinach emends to read, “and that all may rival the one thus honoured (i.e. Hyrcanus) in zeal toward us.” But Reinach’s “thus” ($\omega\delta\epsilon$) would have to be $\omega\sigma\tau\omega\varsigma$, as Prof. B. D. Meritt writes privately through Prof. Capps; Prof. Meritt also suggests that $\zeta\eta\lambda\omega\varsigma$ (v.l. - $\epsilon\iota$) may be an iotaism for $\zeta\eta\lambda\omega\sigma\iota$. Prof. Post reads $\delta\eta\lambda\omega\varsigma$, “reveal the zeal . . . of those already honoured.” But I think $\zeta\eta\lambda\omega\varsigma$ may stand.

disorders therein by both threatening and advising the people to remain quiet. For, he said, those who were on the side of Hyrcanus would be left in peace and could live undisturbed in the enjoyment of their own possessions, but if they clung to the hope of achieving something by revolution and were counting on any gains therefrom, they would have in him a master in place of a protector, and in Hyrcanus a tyrant in place of a king,^a and in the Romans and Caesar bitter enemies in place of rulers.^b For they would not allow any man to be removed from office whom they themselves had placed therein. Through such words he restored order throughout the country by his own efforts.

(2) But as he saw that Hyrcanus was dull and sluggish,^c he appointed his eldest son Phasael governor of Jerusalem and the surrounding region, and entrusted Galilee to his second son Herod, who was still quite young ; he was, in fact, only fifteen years old.^d But his youth in no way hindered him, and being a young man of high spirit, he quickly found an opportunity for showing his prowess. For on learning that Ezekias, a bandit leader, was overrunning the borders of Syria with a large troop, he caught and killed him and many of the bandits with him. This achievement of his was greatly admired by the Syrians, for he had cleared their country of a gang of bandits of whom they longed to be rid. And so they sang his praises for this deed throughout their villages and cities, saying that he had given them peace and the secure enjoyment of their possessions. And through this action he became known to Sextus Caesar, a kinsman of the great Caesar and governor of Syria.^a Thereupon the desire to emulate Herod's achievements seized his brother Phasael, and being moved by the thought of the reputation Herod had won, he was ambitious not to be behind him in achieving like fame; and so he made the inhabitants of Jerusalem feel very friendly toward him, and though he kept the city under his own rule, he did not show any lack of discretion in governing it^b or abuse his authority. This situation made it possible for Antipater to receive from the nation the respect shown a king and such honour as might be enjoyed by one who is an absolute master. With all this glory, however, he did not, as so often seems to happen,^b in any way alter his friendship and loyalty to Hyrcanus.

^b As Otto points out, Herodes, p. 18, Josephus' emphasis on Herod's youth indicates that "fifteen years" is not a scribal error for "twenty-five years." However Josephus is inconsistent ; in Ant. xvii. 148 he tells us that Herod was about seventy when he died (in 4 B.C.), hence he must have been about twenty-five in 47 B.C.

^c §§ 163-167 differ considerably from the account in B.J. i. 208-209 where Antipater appears in a more favourable, and Hyrcanus in a more unfavourable, light. Laqueur, pp. 176 ff., argues that §§ 163-164 in Ant. were a later addition to B.J., which in turn was made to agree with the revised account by being interpolated.

Moreover Antipater had formed a friendship with the Roman generals, and after persuading Hyrcanus to send them money, he took this gift and appropriated it for himself, and then sent it as though it came from him and were not a gift from Hyrcanus. Hyrcanus heard of this but gave the matter no thought; on the contrary he was actually pleased.^a But the chief Jews were in great fear when they saw how powerful and reckless Herod was and how much he desired to be a dictator.^b And so they came to Hyrcanus and now openly accused Antipater, saying, "How long will you keep quiet in the face of what is happening? Do you not see that Antipater and his sons have girded themselves with royal power, while you have only the name of king given you?^c But do not let these things go unnoticed, nor consider yourself free of danger because you are careless of yourself and the kingdom. (4) Having heard these arguments, Hyrcanus was persuaded. And his anger was further kindled by the mothers of the men who had been murdered by Herod, for every day in the temple they kept begging the king and the people to have Herod brought to judgment in the Synhedrion for what he had done.^b Being, therefore, moved by these pleas, Hyrcanus summoned Herod to stand trial for the crimes of which he was accused.^c Accordingly, after he had settled affairs in Galilee as he thought was to his best interests,^d because his father had advised him not to enter the city as a private individual but with the security of a bodyguard, he came with a troop sufficient for the purposes of the journey, and that he might not appear too formidable to Hyrcanus by arriving with a larger body of men and yet not be entirely unarmed and unprotected ; and so he went to his trial. However Sextus, the governor of Syria, wrote to urge Hyrcanus to acquit Herod of the charge, and added threats as to what would happen if he disobeyed.^e The letter from Sextus gave Hyrcanus a pretext for letting Herod go without suffering any harm from the Synhedrion ; for he loved him as a

^c The compulsion exercised by Sextus Caesar is cited by Schalit, p. 60, as evidence that Judaea at this time was still in the position of a civitas stipendiaria, to which it had been reduced by Pompey and Gabinius. But as Julius Caesar had already improved, or was about to improve, the political status of Judaea, it may be that Sextus Caesar was exceeding his authority. See further works listed in Appendix L.

^a Josephus' accounts of Herod's trial in B.J. and Ant. are rather confusing. In B.J. i. 211 he states that Hyrcanus acquitted Herod on orders from Sextus Caesar; in §§ 212 ff. Herod, after being appointed governor of Coele-Syria, came to Jerusalem with an army, prepared to depose Hyrcanus if summoned to a second trial. Whether the second trial was held or why it should be held after Herod's acquittal (cf. Mishnah, Sanhedrin, iv. 1) is not clear. Josephus' statement in Ant., § 170, that Hyrcanus let Herod go (ἀπολῦσαι) evidently refers to an acquittal. The story that follows in §§ 171-176 (which has no parallel in B.J.) should logically precede the statement about Herod's acquittal; it seems to be a later insertion, probably based on Jewish tradition (for son.^a But when Herod stood in the Synhedrion^b with his troops, he overawed them all, and no one of those who had denounced him before his arrival dared to accuse him thereafter ; instead there was silence and doubt about what was to be done. While they were in this state, someone named Samaias,^c an upright man and for that reason superior to fear, arose and said, " Fellow councillors and King, I do not myself know of, nor do I suppose that you can name, anyone who when summoned before you^d for trial has ever presented such an appearance. For no matter who it was that came before this Synhedrion for trial, he has shown himself humble and has assumed the manner of one who is fearful and seeks mercy^e from you^f by letting his hair grow long and wearing a black garment. But this fine fellow Herod, who is accused of murder and has been summoned on no less grave a charge than this, stands here clothed in purple, with the hair of his head carefully arranged and with his a rabbinic parallel see Derenbourg, pp. 146-148). But another difficulty remains in Ant. In § 177 Josephus tells us that Hyrcanus postponed Herod's trial ; in § 182 he states that Herod's friends reminded him of his acquittal (ἀφέσεως). Thus neither of the two parallel accounts makes it clear whether Herod was tried and acquitted or was released without an actual trial. Incidentally, according to Mishnah, Sanhedrin, ii. 2, the king was not competent to act as a judge.

^b The Synhedrion (Heb. Sanhedrin) was the supreme legislative and judicial body of the Jewish state, meeting at Jerusalem.

^c Variants "Sameas," "Samaeus (Samaios)." He is mentioned, in Ant. xv. 3, 370, as a disciple of the Pharisee Pollio. On the relation of Samaias to the rabbinic leaders Shemaiah and Shammai see works listed in Appendix K.

soldiers round him, in order to kill us if we condemn him as the law prescribes, and to save himself by outraging justice. But it is not Herod whom I should blame for this or for putting his own interests above the law, but you and the king, for giving him such great licence. Be assured, however, that God is great, and this man, whom you now wish to release for Hyrcanus' sake, will one day punish you and the king as well." And he was not mistaken in either part of his prediction. For when Herod assumed royal power, he killed Hyrcanus and all the other members of the Synhedrion with the exception of Samaias. Him he held in the greatest honour, both because of his uprightness and because when the city was later besieged by Herod and Sossius, he advised the people to admit Herod, and said that on account of their sins they would not be able to escape him. And of these events we shall speak in the proper place.^a

(5) ^b Now when Hyrcanus saw that the members of the Synhedrion were bent on putting Herod to death, he postponed the trial to another day, and secretly sent to Herod, advising him to flee from the city, for in that way, he said, he might escape danger. Herod accordingly withdrew to Damascus as if fleeing from the king, and coming to Sextus Caesar and making his position secure, he was determined not to obey if he were again summoned to a trial before the Synhedrion. Thereupon the members of the Synhedrion became indignant and attempted

Nor was this fear long in being realized, for Herod did come against him with an army, being angry because of the trial and because he had been summoned to render an account of himself to the Synhedrion. Herod, however, was prevented from attacking Jerusalem^e by his father Antipater and his brother, who went out to meet him and quieted his impetuosity, urging him not to undertake any violent action, but merely to strike terror into Hyrcanus by threats and not proceed further against one who had made it possible for him to attain to his present high office. And as he expressed indignation at having been summoned to stand trial, they begged him to remember his acquittal and to be grateful for it rather than consider the unpleasant side^f and be ungrateful for his deliverance. He ought, they said, to reflect that if the Deity decides the changing fortunes of war, the injustice^g of his cause might weigh more heavily than his military skill^h; for that reason he should not be very saw that his adversary had greater strength” (ώς ἐώρα μείζονα τὸν διάφορον).

confident of a victory when he was planning to make war on his king and comrade, one who had conferred many benefits upon him but had never done him any unkindness ; as for the things of which he complained, if Hyrcanus had given him the merest suspicion and shadow of harsh treatment, it was through civil counsellors and not of his own accord. To these arguments Herod yielded, believing that it was enough for his future plans merely to have made a show of his strength to the people. This, then, was the state of affairs in Judaea.^a is not quoting literally but paraphrasing the text of a senatus consultum (δόγμα, § 198) issued at the end of 47 B.C.; so also Momigliano, Ricerche, p. 201.

^b Perhaps " and " should be deleted.

^c Ms. P " in the city," meaning Rome. According to the other mss. Caesar was providing for hospitality to the Jewish envoys in the cities of Asia while en route.

^d If this means Caesar's first dictatorship (48 B.C.), we should have to add τὸ δεύτερον after ὑπαρχός, cf. Holmes iii. 567. Momigliano dates it in 48 B.C., other scholars in 47, 46 or 44 B.C., see works listed in Appendix J.

^e For " priests " Chamonard and Reinach read " ethnarchs."

^a Variant “high priest.”

^b This would be in 44 B.C. Some scholars, however, emend “fifth time” to “second time” and refer the document to 47 B.C., although Caesar was not Consul in that year, or to 46 B.C.; see next note.

^c As Schürer points out, i. 346 n. 24, Caesar had given Hyrcanus permission to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem in 47 B.C., cf. § 144. Niese therefore assumes that we have here a senatus consultum of 44 B.C. confirming the oral decrees given by Caesar a few years earlier. Mendelssohn and Viereck also assume that a senatus consultum of Feb. 44 B.C.

as those under which their forefathers uninterruptedlly held the office of priest.”^a

(5) “Gaius Caesar, Consul for the fifth time,^b has decreed that these men shall receive and fortify the city of Jerusalem,^c and that Hyrcanus, son of Alexander, the high priest and ethnarch of the Jews, shall occupy it as he himself may choose. And that in the second year of the rent-term^d one kor^e shall be deducted from the tax paid by the Jews, and no one shall make profit out of them, nor shall they pay the same tribute.”

(6) “Gaius Caesar, Imperator for the second time,^f has ruled that they shall pay a tax for the city of Jerusalem, Joppa excluded, every year except in the seventh year,^g which they call the sabbatical year, included parts of the following sections, 205-211. See works listed in Appendix J.

^a μισθώσις “rent-term” was probably taken over from Ptolemaic usage, cf. W. Westermann in AJP 59 (1938), 9. If the “second year of the rent-term” here coincides with a sabbatical year (as one naturally supposes), it confirms the dating of the document in 44 B.C., as the sabbatical year would be that which extended from Oct. 44 to Oct. 43 B.C. This dating, moreover, fits in perfectly with the reckoning of sabbatical years given above, Ant. xii. 378 note a; see also below, § 375.

^b The kor=370 litres or 11 bushels. Either the Romans used the Hebrew name in dealing with Palestine or Josephus (or his source) has substituted the Hebrew name for the Greek.

^c Niese suggests reading, with Lat., “Imperator and Dictator for the second time.” Caesar’s second dictatorship fell in 47 B.C. Niese earlier suggested emending τὸ δεύτερον to τὸ δέ “for the fourth time,” i.e. in 44 B.C.

^d The Lat. reads, “the inhabitants of Joppa shall pay tribute to the city of Jerusalem except in the seventh year”; presumably this means the tribute formerly paid to the Romans, but see below, § 205.

^c Text slightly emended.

^d Viereck cites as a parallel to these exemptions the law De Thermessibus in CIL i. 204.

^e The variant omits " or possess."

^f This apparently refers to Simon's conquest of Joppa in 142 b.c., cf. Ant. xiii. 215 ; Joppa was annexed to the Roman province of Syria by Pompey in 63 b.c., cf. above, § 76.

^g The words " shall pay " are conjecturally supplied ; one ms. adds " shall have " after " Hyrcanus." The sentence is differently translated by Heichelheim, Rom. Syria, p. 232, " and that Hyrcanus, the son of Alexander, and his sons, have as tribute of that city from those that occupy the land and for what they export every year to Sidon, etc." But this rendering requires emendation of the Greek, which Heichelheim does not supply.

^h The word " at " is conjecturally supplied.

And that they be permitted to enjoy these rights at Lydda also.^d As for the places, lands and farms, the fruits of which the kings of Syria and Phoenicia,^e as allies of the Romans, were permitted to enjoy by their gift, these the Senate decrees that the ethnarch Hyrcanus and the Jews shall have. And that to Hyrcanus and his children and to the envoys sent by him shall be given the right to sit with the members of the senatorial order as spectators of the contests of gladiators and wild beasts; and^f that when they request permission of the Dictator or Master of the horse^g to enter the Senate chamber,

^a The variant omits "and priests." The reference is to priestly revenues.

^b Text doubtful; ἐπί "also" is my emendation of ἐπὶ.

^c These kings are probably dynasts of Syria, to whom Pompey had granted Jewish territory, as Schürer suggests, i. 347 n. 25, not the Seleucid kings, as Reinach suggests. The allusion to their being "allies of the Romans" makes the latter supposition improbable.

the neighbouring Jews, some of your^a envoys also being present, have appealed to me and declared that you are preventing them by statute from observing their national customs and sacred rites. Now it displeases me that such statutes should be made against our friends and allies and that they should be forbidden to live in accordance with their customs and to contribute money to common meals and sacred rites, for this they are not forbidden to do even in Rome. For example, Gaius Caesar, our consular praetor,^b by edict forbade religious societies to assemble in the city, but these people alone he did not forbid to do so or to collect contributions of money or to hold common meals.^c Similarly do I forbid other religious societies but permit these people alone to assemble and feast in accordance with their native customs and ordinances. And if you have made any statutes against our friends and allies, you will do well to revoke them because of their worthy deeds on our behalf and their goodwill toward us."

Pollian tribe, and Publius Serrius.^a Publius Dolabella and Marcus Antonius, the consuls,^b made speeches.^c As for the decision rendered by Gaius Caesar, with the concurrence of the Senate, concerning the Jews, which there was not time to have registered in the Treasury, this matter we wish to be disposed of as the consuls Publius Dolabella and Marcus Antonius have decided, and that these decisions be recorded in tablets and brought to the quaestors of the city, and that they take care to have them inscribed on two-leaved tablets. They were dated the fifth day before the Ides of February^d in the Temple of Concord.^e The envoys from the high priest Hyrcanus were the following : Lysimachus, son of Pausanias, Alexander, son of Theodorus, Patroclus, son of Chaireas, and Jonathan, son of Onias.”

(11) One of these envoys Hyrcanus sent also to Dolabella, who was then governor of Asia,^f requesting him to exempt the Jews from military service and permit them to maintain their native customs and live in accordance with them. And this request he readily obtained ; for Dolabella, on receiving the letter from Hyrcanus, without even taking counsel, sent to all (the officials) in Asia, and wrote to Ephesus, ^b February 9, 44 B.C.

^c The Temple of Concord, however, was the place of registration, not of enactment, of the decree, cf. above, § 219 note b.

^d Dolabella was appointed governor of Syria (not of the province of Asia) in June, 44 B.C., and set out for Syria at the end of the year. On his way through Asia he killed Trebonius, governor of Asia, who had been one of Caesar's assassins. Soon after, in 43 B.C., Dolabella was blockaded in Laodicea by Cassius, and committed suicide.

^c Lucius Lentulus Crus, consul in 49 B.C., was commissioned the chief city of Asia, about the Jews. His letter read as follows.

(12) "In the presidency of Artemon, on the first day of the month of Lenacon,^a Dolabella, Imperator, to the magistrates, council and people of Ephesus, greeting. Alexander, son of Theodorus, the envoy of Hyrcanus, son of Alexander, the high priest and ethnarch of the Jews, has explained to me that his co-religionists^b cannot undertake military service because they may not bear arms or march on the days of the Sabbath; nor can they obtain the native foods to which they are accustomed. I, therefore, like the governors before me, grant them exemption from military service and allow them to follow their native customs and to come together for sacred and holy rites in accordance with their law, and to make offerings for their sacrifices; and it is my wish that you write these instructions to the various cities."

(13) These, then, were the favours which Dolabella granted to our people when Hyrcanus sent an envoy to him. And Lucius Lentulus, the consul,^c declared. "Those Jews who are Roman citizens and observe Jewish rites and practise them in Ephesus, I^d released from military service before the tribunal on the twelfth day before the Kalends of October^e in consideration of their religious scruples, in the consulship of Lucius Lentulus and Gaius Marcellus. As the Romans in pursuance of the practices of their ancestors have accepted dangerous risks for the common safety of all mankind and strive emulously to place their allies and friends in a state of happiness and lasting peace, the Jewish nation and their high priest Hyrcanus^d have sent as envoys to them Straton, son of Theodotus, Apollonius, son of Alexander,^e Aeneas, son of Antipater, Aristobulus, son of Amyntas, and Sosipater,^f son of Philip, worthy and excellent men, and have made representations concerning certain particular matters, whereupon the Senate passed a decree concerning the matters on which they spoke, to the effect

Pergamum.

^a Exactly what priestly revenues (for Jerusalem) are meant is not clear; καπνός in the LXX sometimes means "first-fruits," but here it may include tithes, as Reinach suggests.

^b Text slightly uncertain.

^c A prytanis named Cratippus is mentioned in a Pergamene inscription to be dated 150-50 B.C., according to Juster, i. 134 n. 3, citing Ath. Mitt. 17 (1902), 126 and JÖAI 8 (1905), 238. See further note ^a on p. 582.

^a Most scholars assume that this is Antiochus IX Cyzicenus, son of Antiochus VII Sidetes, cf. Ant. xiii. 246 ff., 270 ff. Some scholars, however, propose to read "son of Demetrius," meaning Antiochus Sidetes, son of Demetrius I (less probably Antiochus VIII Grypus, son of Demetrius II). With the latter I agree. The emendation "son of Demetrius" is not too arbitrary, considering that in several places Josephus' text gives the wrong surname to a Seleucid ruler; see further the following notes.

^b This seems to be a reference to the harbours, including Joppa, taken from the Jews by Antiochus Sidetes, cf. Ant. xiii. 261.

^c The variant "shall not be lawful" makes no sense if "for them" means "for the Jews."

that King Antiochus, son of Antiochus,^a shall do no injury to the Jews, the allies of the Romans ; and that the fortresses, harbours, territory and whatever else he may have taken from them shall be restored to them^b ; and that it shall be lawful^c for them to export goods from their harbours and that no king or people exporting goods from the territory of the Jews or from their harbours shall be untaxed except only Ptolemy, king of Alexandria,^d because he is our ally and friend ; and that the garrison in Joppa shall be expelled, as they have requested. And one of our council, Lucius Pettius,^e a worthy and excellent man, has given orders that we shall take care that these things are done as the Senate has decreed, and that we shall see to the safe return of the envoys to their homes. We have also admitted Theodorus to the council and assembly, accepting from him the letter and the decree of the Senate ; and after he had addressed us with great earnest-

^a Reinach suggests that Ptolemy IX Alexander is meant ; he was called to Egypt from Cyprus by his mother Cleopatra III in 107 B.C. If the Pergamene decree is to be dated in the reign of Antiochus Sidetes (who died in 129 B.C.), Reinach's conjecture is impossible, and Ptolemy VII Euergetes II (Physcon) must be meant. On his friendly relations with Rome, cf. Diodorus xxxiii. 28 a ; he says that Scipio Aemilianus and his colleagues visited Egypt (c. 135 B.C.) and Syria, τὴν προϋπάρχουσαν αὐτοῖς φιλίαν πρὸς ἀπαντας ἀνανεώσαμενοι.

^e F. Münzer in PW 19 (1938), 1381 suggests that in spite of the wording of the text L. Pettius may have been a member of a Commission of the Roman Senate or even a praetor in Rome. This would be more likely if we accepted Reinach's emendation of τῇ βουλῇ for τῆς βουλῆς, meaning that L. Pettius gave orders to the council of Pergamum, not that he was one of the council.

^a The term "allies of the Romans" might still have been used some years after Pergamum became a Roman possession in 133 B.C. For a parallel Prof. James Oliver kindly refers me to an inscription of Sagalassus of A.D. 292 in Suppl. Epigr. Gr. ii. 735.

Antonius to Sardis in § 235 (cf. § 232) is not clear, but the present document seems to be later.

^f W. Tarn, Hellenistic Civilization, p. 176 n. 1, remarks, "οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐν τῇ πόλει Ἰουδαῖοι πολῖται is a contradiction in terms; the interpolation of πολῖται is self-evident." So also Reinach had earlier noted that πολῖται is "très embarrassant," and may be an error arising from the following πολλὰ or else mean πολῖται Ῥωμαῖοι. Conceivably, however, the members of a Jewish politeuma within the Hellenistic polis may have been called πολῖται (for ἴσοπολῖται). See further the appendix on the status of Jews in the Diaspora in the last volume of this translation.

^c πολέμου συνερρωγότος is another Thucydidean phrase (Thuc. i. 66), found also in B.J. and Ap.

years and six months.^a This, however, has been related elsewhere.^b

(2) On the outbreak of the war^c that followed Caesar's death and the dispersal to various quarters of all in authority in order to raise an army, Cassius arrived in Syria to take over^d the armies near Apamea. And after raising the siege, he won over both Bassus and Murcus, and descending upon the cities, he collected arms and soldiers from them, and imposed heavy tribute upon them. Worst of all was his treatment of Judaea, from which he exacted seven hundred^e talents of silver. But Antipater, seeing that affairs were in fearful disorder,^f apportioned the exacting of money and gave each of his sons a part to collect, and gave orders that some of it was to be raised by Malichus,^g who was hostile toward him, and the rest by others. And Herod, being the first to raise the sum set for him from Galilee,^h became especially friendly with Cassius. For he thought it prudent to court the Romans and secure their goodwill at the expense of others.ⁱ But the officials of Cassius becomes master of Syria, and is supported by Antipater and his sons.

^a So B.J. also; Syncellus, i. 576, gives 800, but see note h below.

^b Prof. Post suggests, "viewing events in great terror and confusion." ἐν φόβῳ καὶ τραχῇ is also Thucydidean (Thuc. iii. 79. 3) cf. Ant. ii. 100.

^c Text slightly uncertain. Malichus (or Malchus—both forms are found in mss. of Josephus and contemporary inscriptions) was a Jewish noble who supported Hyrcanus, cf. § 84; he should not be confused with the Arab king Malchus, cf. §§ 370 ff.

^d 100 talents, according to B.J. i. 221. Apparently Syncellus (note e above) has included this with the 700 talents raised in Judaea in the sum obtained by Cassius.

^e "At the expense of others" is a phrase not found in B.J. On this "anti-Herodian" addition see Laqueur, p. 187.

the other cities, every last man of them, were sold as slaves, and at that time Cassius reduced to servitude four cities, of which the most important were Gophna^a and Emmaus,^b the others being Lydda^c and Thamna.^d And Cassius was moved by anger to the point of doing away with Malichus—for he had started to attack him^e—had not Hyrcanus through the agency of Antipater sent him a hundred talents of his own money^f and so stopped his hostile move.

(3) But when Cassius had left Judaea,^g Malichus plotted against Antipater, thinking that his death^g would make for the security of Hyrcanus' rule.^h These plans of his did not, however, remain unknown to Antipater, who, on learning of them, moved across the Jordan and collected an army of Arabs as well as natives. Thereupon Malichus, being a shrewdⁱ fellow, denied the plot and defended himself under oath before both him and his sons,^j saying that with Phasael guarding Jerusalem and Herod having

^o Lat. adds, "with much money." Whether Josephus here refers to the events of the first half of 43 B.C., when Cassius was preparing to fight Dolabella (§ 223) or of the first half of 42 B.C., when he was preparing to fight Mark Antony and Octavian, is not clear. If the latter, he is anticipating events that took place after the murder of Antipater in 43 B.C. (§ 282); cf. Otto, Herodes, pp. 21-22.

^h In B.J. Malichus is said to have plotted against Antipater "to remove one who was an obstacle to his mal-practices." This difference of motive is duly stressed by Laqueur, p. 188.

custody of the arms, he would never have entertained such a notion seeing how impossible it would be ; and so he became reconciled with Antipater, and they came to an agreement at the time when Murcus^a was governing Syria, who, on learning that Malichus was stirring up a revolt in Judaea,^b came very near putting him to death, but on the plea of Antipater spared his life.

(4) ^c Now Antipater in saving Malichus' life had unwittingly, it turned out, saved his own murderer. For Cassius and Murcus collected an army and entrusted the entire charge of it to Herod ; and they made him governor of Coele-Syria,^d giving him ships^e and a force of cavalry and infantry, and also promised to appoint him king of Judaea after the war which they had just then begun with Antony and the young Caesar.^f And as Malichus was now in greater fear than ever of Antipater, he sought to put him out of the way, and with money persuaded Hycanus' butler, at whose house they were both being entertained, to kill Antipater^g by poisoning ; and having soldiers there, he restored order in the city. But to Herod and Phasael, who, on learning of the plot against their father, were incensed, Malichus again denied any part in it and professed to have no knowledge of the murder. This was the manner in which Antipater died, a man distinguished for piety, justice and devotion to his country.^a But while one of his sons, Herod, resolved to avenge his father at once by leading his army against Malichus, the elder son Phasael thought it better to get their man by cunning lest it should be thought that they were beginning a civil war. He^b therefore accepted Malichus' defence and pretended to believe that he had done nothing criminal in connexion with Antipater's death; he then arranged the burial of his father. As for Herod, he came to Samaria and finding it in a sorry condition, repaired the damage, and put an end to the quarrels among its people.

(5) Not long afterwards, when the festival^c took place at Jerusalem, he came to the city with his soldiers, and Malichus in fear sought to persuade Hyrcanus not to permit him to enter. Hyrcanus let himself be so persuaded, and gave the pretext for keeping him out that it was not proper to admit a crowd of foreigners when the people were in a state of ritual purity. But Herod paid little attention to anywhere, one would expect a considerably less favourable estimate in Ant. if Laqueur's theory of the anti-Herodian revision of B.J. in Ant. is correct. But, on the contrary, Ant. is more favourable than B.J. It is significant that Laqueur passes over this difficulty in silence.

^b Apparently Phasael is meant, but possibly, as in B.J., it is Herod who accepts Malichus' defence and buries Antipater.

^c The festival of Tabernacles (Oct. 43 b.c.) is probably meant, cf. Ant. xiii. 372 note d.

his messengers,^a and entered the city by night, to the terror of Malichus, who, however, did not give up his assumption of innocence but wept for Antipater and ostensibly mourned his memory as a friend ; nevertheless he secretly provided himself with a bodyguard.^b But Herod and his friends still thought it best not to unmask his pretence ; on the contrary, they, in turn, treated Malichus with friendliness in order to avoid suspicion.

(6) However Herod wrote to Cassius about the death of his father, and he, knowing what kind of man Malichus was,^c wrote in reply that he should avenge his father, and he secretly sent to the military tribunes at Tyre, ordering them to assist Herod in his plan to carry out justice. Now when Cassius had taken Laodicea,^d and they presented themselves officially, bringing him crowns and money, Herod expected that Malichus would meet his punishment on coming there. He, however, being near Tyre in Phoenicia, suspected what was being done, and played for greater stakes ; and as his son was a hostage in Tyre, he came to the city, determined to steal him away and depart for Judaea and then, when Cassius was marching in haste against Antony,^e to cause the nation to revolt, and seize power for himself. ^b B.J. has merely, "invited him (Malichus) and Hyrcanus to dinner."

^c In B.J. Hyrcanus says more concretely, "Cassius has saved both me and my country by destroying one who conspired against both." Josephus there adds, "Whether he a heavenly power^a and by Herod, who was clever enough to perceive his intention, and sent ahead his servant, ostensibly to prepare a dinner—for he had earlier spoken of entertaining them all^b—but in reality to go to the military tribunes, whom he persuaded to come out against Malichus with their daggers ready. So they came out, and meeting him near the city on the seashore, stabbed him to death. Hyrcanus was struck speechless with amazement at what had been done, and on recovering with some difficulty, inquired of Herod's men what this act might mean and who had had Malichus slain. But when they said that Cassius had ordered this, he commended the deed, saying that Malichus was a very bad man and a conspirator against his country.^c Such, then, was the penalty which Malichus paid for his lawless act against Antipater.

(7) But when Cassius left Syria,^d disturbances arose in Judaea. For Helix,^e who had been left behind with an army in Jerusalem,^f marched against Phasael, and the citizens took up arms. Now Herod was on his way to Fabius, who was governor at Damascus,^g

^d Reinach queries whether this Fabius may not have been the nephew left by Cassius in Syria, whose name is not given by Appian, Bell. Civ. iv. 63 (cf. § 280 note d). Schürer, however, citing Noris, Cenotaphia Pisana, 1681, p. 280, suggests that the nephew was Lucius Cassius, later killed at Philippi, according to Appian, Bell. Civ. iv. 135. If this is true, Fabius must have been the governor appointed to succeed Cassius' nephew, probably early in 42 B.C.

For Malichus' brother, having stirred up a revolt, was then guarding a good many fortresses, including Masada,^a the strongest of all. Accordingly when Herod had recovered from his illness, he came against him and took from him all the fortresses he held, after which he released him under a truce.

(xii. 1) But Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, who had collected an army and sought the favour of Fabius with bribes, was brought back to his country by Ptolemy, the son of Mennaeus, because of their kinship.^b He was also aided by Marion, whom Cassius had left as prince^c of Tyre, for that worthy on occupying Syria had controlled it through small principalities.^d Marion therefore invaded Galilee, which lay on his borders, and captured three strongholds, in which he placed garrisons. But Herod came against him also and took from him all these places^e ; the Tyrian garrison, however, he considerably released, and even gave gifts to some of them out of goodwill to their city.^f After achieving these things,

^c On this meaning of τύραννος see Ant. xiii. 235 note a.

^d Variant "through tyranny" ; the reading here adopted is supported by B.J. i. 239.

^e From the decree of Antony cited below, §§ 314 ff., it appears that Herod was not entirely successful in expelling the Tyrians from Jewish territory.

^f B.J. i. 238 says more frankly, "to procure for himself the favour of the citizens, and for the prince (Marion) their hatred."

But Herod, who was held in great honour by Antony,^a came to him to defend himself against his accusers, and in this way his adversaries did not even get a chance to speak, for this service had been obtained by Herod from Antony with money. And ^b when Antony came to Ephesus, the high priest Hyrcanus and our nation sent an embassy to him, bringing a golden crown and requesting that he would write to the provincial governors to set free those Jews who had been taken captive by Cassius in violation of the laws of war, and restore to them the territory of which they had been deprived in the time of Cassius.^c These demands Antony decided the Jews were justified in making, and so he immediately wrote to Hyrcanus and the Jews. viously carried out by them in Rome, and have conscientiously discharged their present mission on behalf of you and the nation, making clear the goodwill you have for us. Being, therefore, persuaded by both deeds and words that you have the friendliest feelings for us, and being aware of your obliging and pious nature, I regard your interests as my own.^a For when our adversaries and those of the Roman people overran all Asia, sparing neither cities nor temples, and disregarding the sworn agreements they had made, it was not only our own battle but that of all mankind in common that we fought when we avenged ourselves on those who were guilty both of lawless deeds against men and of unlawful acts against the gods, from which we believe the very sun turned away, as if it too were loath to look upon the foul deed against Caesar.^b But their god-defying plots, which Macedonia received as though its climate were proper to their unholy crimes, and the confused mob of half-crazed villains whom they got together at Philippi in Macedonia, where^c they occupied places naturally favourable and walled in by mountains as far as the sea, so that the passage^d could be controlled through only one gate^e—these sent you my edict, and it is my wish that you take care to register it in the public tablets in Latin and Greek characters, and, when it is written, keep it in the most conspicuous place in order that it may be read by all. ‘ Statement of Marcus Antonius, Imperator, one of the triumvirs appointed to govern the republic.^a Whereas Gaius Cassius in the late rebellion^b seized a province which did not belong to him, and after occupying it with armed forces, plundered it and our allies,^c and forced the surrender of the Jewish nation, which was a friend of the Roman people, we, therefore, having overcome his madness by our arms, do establish order by our edicts and decisions in the territories plundered by him, so that they may be restored to our allies. And whatever was sold belonging to the Jews, whether persons or possessions, shall be released, the slaves to be free, as they were originally, and the possessions to be returned to their former owners. (xiii. 1) ^a When Antony afterwards came to Syria, Cleopatra met him in Cilicia ^b and made him a captive of love. And once again ^c a hundred of the most influential Jews came before him to accuse Herod and his friends, ^d putting forward their most skilful speakers. But Messala ^e spoke against them on behalf of the young men in the presence of Hyrcanus, who had by then become Herod's kinsman by marriage.^f And when Antony had listened to both sides at Daphne ^g and inquired of Hyrcanus which were the better leaders of the nation, he replied, "Herod and his people," whereupon Antony, who had been friendly with them because of the hospitable relations which he had formed with their father when he was with Gabinius,^h appointed both Herod and Phasael tetrarchs,ⁱ and entrusted to them the government of the Jews; he also wrote letters (to this effect), and put in chains fifteen of their adversaries,^j

^e M. Valerius Messala Corvinus; see Dr. Thackeray's note on B.J. i. 243.

^g A suburb of Antioch, as B.J. explains.

^h Cf. §§ 84-86.

ⁱ This (with the parallel B.J. i. 244) is the first occurrence in Josephus of this title, so well known from the New Testament in connexion with the later Herodians. Whatever the official position of Herod and Phasael as tetrarchs (see works listed in Appendix L), it is likely that the Romans still regarded Hyrcanus, the ethnarch, as nominally head of the state.

^j Variant "of the rebels." These fifteen were of the influential Jewish spokesmen mentioned above, as B.J. makes clear.

(2) Not even on their return from the embassy, however, did they remain quiet, but again a thousand men met Antony at Tyre, where he had decided to go. And as Antony had already been heavily bribed by Herod and his brother,^b he ordered the local magistrate to punish the envoys of the Jews, who were bent on revolution, and to establish Herod^c in power. But Herod hastily went out to them—for they^d had taken up a position on the beach before the city—, and urged them, Hyrcanus being with him,^e to go away, saying that great harm would befall them if they proceeded to a contest. But as they refused to take his advice, the Romans^f immediately rushed upon them with their daggers and killed some and wounded a still greater number,^g while the rest escaped to their homes and remained there in great terror without moving.^h But when the populace cried out against Herod, Antony in a rage killed those who had been taken prisoners.

^h Ant. omits the statement, in B.J. i. 246, that "burial for the dead and medical attention for the wounded were granted by Hyrcanus."

ⁱ The parallelism between §§ 330-369 and B.J. i. 248-273, dealing largely with the Parthians, is discussed by Laqueur, pp. 189-193.

^j The dating seems to be from about the time of the battle of Philippi (cf. § 301), as the Parthians invaded Syria in 40 n.c. (spring). Olmstead, JAOS 56 (1936), 255 sees an allusion to the Parthian invasion in Enoch, ch. 56. For rabbinic traditions see works listed in Appendix K.

At the same time Ptolemy, the son of Mennaeus, died,^c and his son Lysanias on succeeding to his throne made a pact of friendship with Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, in which matter he found the satrap useful, for he had great influence with him.^d And Antigonus promised to give the Parthians a thousand talents and five hundred women^e if they would deprive Hyrcanus of power and give it over to him, and destroy Herod and his people.^f He did not in fact give them these,^g but nevertheless the Parthians for the sake of these rewards marched against Judaea, bringing Antigonus back to his country; Pacorus went along the sea-coast while the satrap Barzaphrane went through the interior. Now whereas the Tyrians excluded Pacorus, the people of Sidon and Ptolemais admitted him. However, Pacorus sent out a troop of cavalry to Judaea to make a reconnaissance of the country and also to co-operate with Antigonus under the command of the cupbearer of the king, who had the same name as himself.^h And as some of the Jews near Mount

^a Niese's slight alteration of the text (one consonant), here adopted, makes the clause mean that the satrap had great influence with Antigonus; the mss. reading means that Lysanias had great influence with the satrap.

^b According to B.J. i. 248 it was Lysanias who promised the bribe to the Parthians. From this and similar discrepancies, Laqueur argues (unconvincingly) that Ant. shows a more intense nationalism than B.J. But in B.J. i. 257 Antigonus is cited as the one responsible for the promised bribe—a passage that Laqueur does not mention.

^a The text is slightly uncertain. B.J. i. 250 has, "while these troops (of Pacorus) were raiding Carmel, Jews flocked to Antigonus," etc.

^b "With their help" is an emendation of mss. reading, "Antigonus expected them to take," etc.

^c Apparently the Plain of Sharon is meant, cf. Abel, GP i. 414 (who refers to Strabo xvi. 2. 27 f., as does Debevoise, Carmel came to Antigonus^a and were ready to join him in the invasion, Antigonus expected to take some part of the territory with their help,^b namely, the place called The Grove (Drymoi)^c; and although some opponents engaged them, these men got away to Jerusalem,^d and on being joined by others, formed a large body and came against the palace, which they proceeded to besiege. But Phasael and Herod^e came to the assistance of the besieged, and in the battle which was fought in the market-place the young men^f defeated the enemy; and after pursuing them into the temple, they sent some soldiers^g to the adjacent houses to guard them, but as the soldiers were left without reinforcements,^h the people rose against them and burnt them to death in the houses. For this outrage Herod, however, soon afterwards took vengeance on his adversaries, and engaging them in battle, killed many of them.

(4) During the daily skirmishes that took place the enemy were waiting for the arrival of the multitude from the countryⁱ who were coming for the celebration of Pentecost, as it is called, which is a festival. And when this day came, there were many tens of thousands of armed and unarmed men gathered

p. 111 n. 74). Avi Yonah, p. 18, identifies it more closely as a wood near Arsūf (Apollonia).

^d B.J. i. 250 says that Antigonus' partisans "repulsed the enemy and rushed in pursuit to Jerusalem."

^e B.J. here has Hyrcanus in place of Herod, but see next note. ^f B.J. "Herod and his men."

^g B.J. "sixty men."

ⁱ B.J. i. 253 speaks of the arrival of the country people but does not say that the Herodians' enemies were waiting for them. The use of the word "enemies" here points to a source favourable to Herod, i.e. Nicolas of Damascus.

round the temple. The newcomers held the temple and the city except for the palace and its environs, for these Herod was protecting with a few soldiers. And so, while Phasael guarded the wall, Herod with a company attacked the enemy in the suburbs and after a stout fight routed many tens of thousands ^a; some of them fled to the city, others to the temple, and still others to some outer ramparts which were there. And Phasael also gave him assistance. Thereupon Pacorus, the Parthian general,^b at Antigonus' request came to the city with a few horsemen,^c ostensibly to put an end to the uprising, but in reality to help Antigonus obtain power. And when Phasael met him and received him hospitably,^d Pacorus persuaded him to go on an embassy himself to Barzaphrane, for this was part of a plot he had devised against him. Phasael, suspecting nothing, let himself be persuaded although Herod did not approve of what was being done because of the faithlessness of the barbarians, and advised him, instead, to attack Pacorus and the others who had come.^e

(5) And so Hyrcanus and Phasael went off on the embassy, and Pacorus escorted them, leaving with Herod two hundred^f horsemen and ten of the Free-men,^g as they were called. But when they came to

^a Text uncertain; the variant has "those who were in command of the cities"; for "were stationed" Reinach conjectures, from B.J., "those of the enemy who were in revolt."

Galilee, those of the enemy who were stationed in that region^a met them with arms. And though Barzaphrane at first received them cordially and gave them gifts, he then began to plot against them. Phasael and his party were thereupon brought to Ecdippa^b overlooking the sea ; and when they there heard that Antigonus had promised the Parthians a thousand talents and five hundred women at their expense,^c they now had suspicions of the barbarians. Furthermore someone informed them that a plot was being hatched against them to be carried out by night, and that an unseen guard was placed round them ; and they would have been seized had it not been that the enemy were waiting until the Parthians at Jerusalem should have seized Herod lest upon their doing away with the envoys first, Herod should learn of it and escape. And these reports were actually so, and their guards were seen. Accordingly some of the men urged Phasael to mount his horse immediately and not wait any longer ; especially was he pressed to do this by Ophellius, who had heard these things from Saramalla, at that time the wealthiest man in Syria, and he promised him boats for his flight, for the sea was near.^d Phasael, however, did not think it right to desert Hyrcanus or to endanger his brother^e ; but he went to Barzaphrane and told him that he was doing the wrong thing in forming such plots^a against them, for if it was money he wanted, he would get more from him (Phasael) than Antigonus was giving him, and that in any case it was a terrible thing to kill envoys who had come to him trustfully and were doing no wrong.^b But in reply to this speech the barbarian swore that there was no truth in these suspicions and that, on the contrary, the suspicions that disturbed Phasael were false ; he then went off to join Pacorus.^c

(6) But when he had gone, some of the Parthians put Hyrcanus and Phasael in chains, and they^d bitterly reviled the Parthians for their perfidy. Now the cup-bearer^e who had been sent to Herod had orders to lead him outside the walls and seize him. But fortunately messengers had been sent by Phasael to inform him of the faithlessness of the Parthians ; and so, when Herod learned that the enemy had seized them, he went to Pacorus^f and the influential Parthians as the masters of the others. But they, although they knew everything, deceitfully pretended innocence and said that he should go with them before the wall in order to meet the bearers of letters, for they had not yet been seized by their adversaries but had come with a report of all that Phasael had accomplished. Herod, however, did not believe them, for he had heard from others of his brother's capture ; and at the prompting of Hyrcanus'

^a Alexandra, the mother of Mariamme (on the betrothal see above § 300). B.J. i. 262 has "Mariamme, the daughter of Hyrcanus, most sagacious of women"; there, it seems, daughter,^a to whose daughter he was betrothed, he became still more suspicious of the Parthians. Now though the others paid no attention to her, he himself had faith in her as a very sensible woman.

(7) While the Parthians deliberated what they should do—for they did not like the idea of openly attacking so powerful a man—and postponed the matter to the next day, Herod, who was in great perturbation and gave more weight to what he had heard about his brother and the Parthians' plot than to the other side, decided when evening came to take this opportunity to flee and not to delay as if there were some uncertainty of danger from the enemy.^b Accordingly he set out with those soldiers whom he had there, and mounted the women on beasts of burden, including his mother and sister and the daughter of Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, whom he was to marry, and her mother, who was a daughter of Hyrcanus ; he also took his youngest brother and all the servants and the rest of the crowd that was with them, and unknown to the enemy followed the road to Idumaea.^c And no enemy would have been found so hard of heart that on witnessing what was taking place at that time he would not have pitied their fate as the wretched women led their infants and with tears and wailing left behind their native either “ Mariamme ” is a gloss or the text should read “ the daughter of Hyrcanus and the mother of Mariamme,” since the description of the woman fits the mother better than the daughter, as Dr. Thackeray points out in his note on the parallel in B.J.

country and their friends in chains ; nor did they expect anything better for themselves.^a

(8) Nevertheless Herod let his spirit rise above the blow caused by this misfortune, and being himself of good courage ^b in the face of misfortune, went to the others along the road and urged each of them also to have courage and not give himself wholly over to grief, for this, he said, would hinder them in their flight, in which alone their safety lay. And so at Herod's exhortation they tried to bear their troubles. But once when a wagon overturned and his mother was in danger of death, he was near to taking his own life because of his anguish on her account and his fear that as a result of the delay caused by the overturn the enemy might overtake them in pursuit. Indeed he had drawn his sword and was about to stab himself when those about him restrained him and prevailed upon him by their number and also by telling him that it was not right for him to abandon them and leave them in the power of their foes, for it was not the act of a noble man to free himself from danger and disregard that of his friends. And so, being forced to desist from his rash act against himself by shame at their words and by the number of those who stayed his hand from carrying out his plan, he revived his mother and procured for her such care as was possible in the short time at his disposal, and continued on his way, making the journey to the fortress of Masada ^c at great speed. battles he fought with the Parthians who harassed him in pursuit, and he was victorious in all of them.

(9) But during his flight he was not safe from the Jews either, for they too attacked his party when they were sixty^a stades from the city and engaged them in hand to hand combat along the road ; but these too he routed and crushed as if he were in no such helpless and difficult position^b but were excellently prepared for war and had a great advantage; and later when he became king, he built a wonderful palace on the spot where he defeated the Jews, and founded a city round it,^c which he called Herodia.^d Now when he came to a place in Idumaea called Oresa,^e he was met by his brother Joseph, and he held a council to see what he must do about his general situation, for a great number of people, apart from his mercenaries, accompanied him, and the fortress of Masada, in which he proposed to take refuge, was too small to hold so great a crowd. He therefore sent most of them away, numbering over nine thousand, and told them to seek safety in flight to various places in Idumaea, and gave them provisions for the journey. Those, however, who were lightly armed and his nearest relatives he took with him and reached the fortress, where he left the women and their followers, who numbered some eight hundred, for there was sufficient grain and water and other necessities in the place ; and he himself set out for Petra in Arabia. But when day came, the Parthians plundered all the possessions of the people of Jerusalem, as well as the palace, leaving untouched only the funds of Hyrcanus, which amounted to three hundred^a talents. Much of Herod's property, however, escaped, especially all that with his usual foresight he had succeeded in removing beforehand to Idumaea.^b But the Parthians were not satisfied with what they found in the city, and so they went out and ravaged the Jews' country as well, and also destroyed the important city of Marisa.^c

(10) In this way was Antigonus brought back to Judaea by the Parthian king and took over Hyrcanus and Phasael as prisoners. He was, however, very despondent over the escape of the women whom he had planned to give to the enemy, for this was the reward he had promised them together with money.^d And being fearful that the people might restore Hyrcanus to the throne, he went up to him where he was being guarded by the Parthians,^e and cut off his ears,^f thus taking care that the high priesthood

^c Variant "ear." B.J. says that Antigonus "with his teeth mutilated" (λωβᾶται τοῖς ὀδοῦσιν) Hyrcanus' ears. Julius Africanus ap. Syncellus (cf. H. Gelzer, Sextus Julius Africanus, p. 262) says that Antigonus "cut off his ears" (ἀποτεμὼν αὐτοῦ τὰ ᾤτα), while Syncellus himself says that Antigonus "cut off his ears with his teeth" (τοῖς ὀδοῦσιν ἀποτεμὼν αὐτοῦ τὰ ᾤτα). The latter statement seems to be a conflation of the two accounts in Josephus; "cut off" is a strange verb in combination with "teeth."

^c Phasael's statement is given as a direct quotation in B.J., which adds (§ 273) that the Parthians were disappointed of should never come to him another time, because he was now mutilated, and the law requires that this office should belong only to those who are sound of body.^a As for Phasael, one must admire his courage, for though he knew that he was marked for slaughter, he did not look upon death as terrible in itself but believed that it was a most bitter and shameful thing to suffer at the hands of a foe ; and so, not having his hands free to destroy himself because of his chains, he dashed his head against a rock and removed himself from the world of the living, which he thought was the best thing to do in view of his helpless position, and thus he deprived the enemy of the power of killing him as they pleased. But some say that when he had incurred this serious wound, Antigonus quietly sent physicians as if to heal it, and had him killed by deadly poisons which they applied to his wound.^b However, before he breathed his last, Phasael heard from some woman that his brother Herod had escaped the enemy, and so he bore his death with cheerfulness, for he left behind one who would avenge his death and was able to punish his foes.^c

(xiv. 1) ^d Herod, however, was not discouraged by the magnitude of the dangers that encompassed him ; instead they made him the keener in attempting^e perilous deeds. And so he went to Malchus,^f their prize, the women promised them by Antigonus, and that they carried Hyrcanus a prisoner to Parthia.

^f Variant " Malichus." He is not to be confused with the Jewish supporter of Hyrcanus mentioned above, § 273. The Arab (Nabataean) King Malchus was a successor of Aretas III, see above, §§ 14 ff. Some of the following incidents are related by Dio Cassius xlvi. 41.

the Arab king, who had previously received many benefits from him,^a in order to receive a return and to get money, which was what he most needed, either as a loan or as a gift from one who had obtained many sums from him. For as he did not know what had happened to his brother, he was in haste to ransom him from the enemy, being ready to pay as his ransom as much as three hundred talents in coin. And for this purpose he also took along Phasael's son, who was seven years old, to offer him as security to the Arabs.^b But he was met by messengers from Malchus, who through them ordered Herod to retire, for the Parthians, he said, had instructed him not to receive Herod ; this he used as a pretext for not repaying his debts, and the influential Arabs urged him on to this in order that they might withhold from Herod the sums which they had received in deposit from Antipater. Thereupon he replied to them that he had come to them with no thought of making trouble but only to discuss matters which were of the greatest importance to him.^c

^d According to B.J. Cleopatra “ hoped to get Herod to

(3) And so from there he set sail for Pamphylia,^f and after encountering a violent storm barely reached Rhodes in safety by throwing the cargo overboard. There he was met by two of his friends, Sappinus^g and Ptolemy. And finding the city damaged from the war against Cassius,^h he did not hesitate to help it even though he was in need of funds, but actually exceeded his means in restoring it.ⁱ He also built a trireme, and setting sail from there for Italy with his friends, landed at Brundisium. ^a This was probably about December 40 B.C., soon after the Pact of Brundisium (October) between Octavian and Antony went to Rome where he first of all related to Antony^a what had befallen him in Judaea, and how his brother Phasael had been seized by the Parthians and put to death, and that Hyrcanus was being held a prisoner by them, and that they had set up Antigonus as king after his promise to give them a thousand talents and five hundred women, who were to be of the first families and of their own race,^b and that he had removed the women by night and had escaped from the hands of his foes after enduring many hardships. Then he said^c that his relatives shared his danger by being besieged, and told how he had sailed through a storm, and how he had made light of every danger in his haste to reach Antony, in whom lay his hope and only help.

(4) Antony was moved to pity by the reverses of Herod, and indulged in the familiar reflection concerning those who are placed in so high a station, that they too are subject to the rule of fortune ; and partly in memory of Antipater's hospitality,^d partly because of the money which Herod promised to give him if he became king,^e as he had promised once before when he was appointed tetrarch,^f but chiefly because of his hatred of Antigonus—for he considered him and the marriage of Antony to Octavian's sister Octavia (November).

^h i.e. of the Jewish race. It may, however, mean " of his (Herod's) family."

^c Text slightly uncertain ; perhaps with the Latin we should read " then he bewailed the fact."

^e As a second motive B.J. mentions Antony's admiration of Herod's prowess (ἀρετὴν), and not the bribe offered him. In this substitution Laqueur, p. 194, sees another instance of the anti-Herodian spirit of Ant. as compared with B.J.

^a Not least because Antigonus was allied with Rome's dangerous enemy Parthia, see below, § 384.

^b Octavian, the later Augustus.

^c Octavian's adoptive father, Julius Caesar; for these campaigns see above, §§ 127-136.

^d B.J. does not mention Octavian's desire to do Antony a favour; instead, it says that Octavian recognized Herod's a seditious person and an enemy of the Romans^a—he was eager to give Herod the assistance he asked for. As for Caesar,^b because of the campaigns in Egypt on which Antipater had served with his father,^c and his hospitality and goodwill at all times, and also as a favour to Antony, who was very zealous on Herod's behalf, he was more ready to grant this rank and to co-operate in the things which Herod wished.^d And so Messala^e and Atratinus^f after him convened the Senate, and presenting Herod, dwelt on the good deeds of his father, and recalled the loyalty which Herod himself had shown toward the Romans; at the same time they brought accusations against Antigonus, whom they declared an enemy, not only because of the first offence he had committed against them^g but because he had received his kingly title from the Parthians, thus showing no regard for the Romans. And when the Senate had been aroused by these charges, Antony came forward and informed them that it was also an advantage in their war with the Parthians that Herod should be king. And as this proposal was acceptable to all, they voted accordingly.^h “enterprising character.” Laqueur, pp. 194-195, mistranslating έποιμότερος in § 383 (as Prof. Post notes), remarks that Ant. does not clearly explain why Octavian showed himself even more zealous than Antony in Herod's behalf.

^d The naming of Herod to the kingship by Antony and Octavian is mentioned also by Strabo xvi. 765, Appian, Bell. Civ. v. 75 and Tacitus, Hist. v. 9.

^a §§ 386-387 have no parallel in B.J.; see below, § 387 note d.

^b The mss. add “Alexander,” probably a scribal error. Aristobulus (III) is meant.

(5) ^aBut this was the greatest sign of Antony's devotion to Herod, that not only did he obtain the kingship for him, which he had not hoped for—he had come to the capital not to claim the kingship for himself, for he did not believe the Romans would offer it to him, since it was their custom to give it to one of the reigning family, but to claim it for his wife's brother,^b who was a grandson of Aristobulus on his father's side and of Hyrcanus on his mother's^c—but he also made it possible for Herod in only seven days altogether to obtain these unexpected grants and leave Italy.^d This youth, however, Herod put to death, as we shall relate at the proper time.^e Now when the Senate was adjourned, Antony and Caesar went out with Herod between them, and the consuls and other magistrates leading the way, in order to sacrifice and to deposit the decree in the Capitol. Then Antony entertained him on the first day of his reign. Thus did Herod take over royal power, receiving it in the hundred and eighty-fourth

^a His father was Aristobulus II's son Alexander, and his mother was Hyrcanus II's daughter Alexandra.

^b Otto, Herodes, p. 28, expresses scepticism about Herod's original intention of claiming the throne for Aristobulus, not for himself, on the ground that Herod was in Italy so short a time; he sees in this passage an attempt to clear Herod of overweening ambition. On the other hand, Laqueur, pp. 195-199, in the interest of his theory about the anti-Herodian alterations and additions in Ant., resorts to a rather artificial explanation of secondary changes in Ant. to make the point that far from clearing Herod here, Josephus is criticising him for making use of Aristobulus in the belief that the Roman policy of retaining the reigning dynasty would make his own appointment as king impossible. Laqueur combines §§ 386-388 with 403-405 and 489 as anti-Herodian revisions of Josephus' source, here supposedly the memoirs of Herod himself.

(6) ^b All this time Antigonus was besieging those in Masada, who had all other necessary provisions and lacked only water^c; on this account Herod's brother Joseph planned to flee with two hundred of his people to the Arabs, for he had heard that Malchus regretted the wrongs which he had done Herod.^d But he was stopped by a rain which God sent in the night, for once the cisterns were filled with water, they no longer needed to flee; instead, they were now encouraged, not merely because they had an abundance of what they had lacked before, but rather because this seemed an act of God's providence^e; and so they sallied out, and engaging Antigonus' men, sometimes openly and sometimes from under cover, destroyed many of them.^f Meanwhile Ventidius,^g the Roman general sent from Syria to keep back the Parthians, after disposing of them,^h made a side-march into Judaea, ostensibly to give aid to Joseph, but in reality the whole business was a device to obtain money from Antigonus; at any rate he encamped very near Jerusalem and extorted from Antigonus as much money as he wanted. Then he himself withdrew with the greater part of his force; but in order that his extortion ^a might not be detected, he left Silo ^b behind with a certain number of soldiers ; to him also Antigonus paid court in order that he might not cause any trouble, hoping at the same time that the Parthians would once more give him help.

(xv. 1) By this time Herod had sailed from Italy ^c to Ptolemais and had collected a not inconsiderable force of both foreigners and his countrymen, and was marching through Galilee against Antigonus. And he was supported by Silo and Ventidius, for they had been persuaded by Dellius,^d who had been sent by Antony, to join in restoring Herod to his country. And so while Ventidius was quieting the disturbances that had been created in the cities by the Parthians, Silo remained in Judaea, having been corrupted by bribes from Antigonus. Nevertheless Herod's strength increased day by day as he went forward, and all Galilee, except for a few of its inhabitants, came over to his side. But when he set out to reach those in Masada—for it was essential to save the people who were being besieged in the fortress, since they were his relatives—he found Joppa in his way, and as it was hostile to him, he had first to capture it in order that no stronghold should be left on his rear in the enemy's hands while he was moving on Jerusalem. But as Silo made this a pretext for departing, and the Jews pursued him, Herod fell upon them with a small body of men and routed them, and so saved Silo, who was defending himself feebly ; and after taking Joppa he hastened to rescue his relatives in Masada. Thereupon the local inhabitants joined him, some because of their friendship with his father,^a others because of his reputation, and still others as a return for benefits received from both of them, but the majority because of the hopes which they placed in him as one who would thereafter have a secure position as king.

(2) Thus a strong force had been collected, and as it advanced, Antigonus occupied the most suitable places for passage with snares and ambushes, but did not the least, or at best only slight, damage thereby to the enemy. ready to forget the offences which his most determined adversaries had committed against him. But Antigonus in answer to Herod's proclamation told Silo and the Roman army that it would be contrary to their own notion of right if they gave the kingship to Herod who was a commoner and an Idumacan, that is, a half-Jew, when they ought to offer it to those who were of the (royal) family, as was their custom. And, he argued, if they were now ill-disposed toward him and were determined to deprive him of the kingship on the ground that he had received it from the Parthians, there were at least many of his family who might lawfully receive the kingship, for they had committed no offence against the Romans, and were priests; and thus they would be unworthily treated if they were deprived of this rank.^a Such things they said to one another and were proceeding to imprecations when Antigonus permitted his men to battle with Herod's men from the wall.^b But the enemy shot their arrows and opposed them with so much spirit that they easily drove them from the towers.

(3) Then it was that Silo showed openly that he had taken a bribe^c; for he got a good many of his own soldiers to cry aloud about the lack of provisions, to demand money for food, and to insist that they be taken to suitable quarters for wintering, since the region about the city was a waste as a result of the merely that "Antigonus issued counter-exhortations forbidding any to listen to these proclamations (of Herod) or to go over to the enemy." See above, § 387 note d, § 390 note b.

^b The text is probably faulty. B.J. reads more intelligibly, "Herod at once gave his men permission to battle with the men on the wall."

ravaging by Antigonus' soldiers ; and so he began to move his camp and attempted to withdraw. But Herod persisted in urging the officers under Silo and their soldiers not to desert him, for Caesar as well as Antony and the Senate had given him encouragement^a; he would, he said, take care that they should have plenty of provisions, and would readily furnish them with an abundance of the things they wanted. After making this plea he at once set out into the country and left Silo no longer any pretext for withdrawing, for he brought back a greater mass of provisions than anyone had hoped for, and also instructed those around Samaria who had become friendly toward him^b to bring down to Jericho grain, wine, oil, cattle and all other things in order that there should be no lack of supplies for the soldiers for some days to come. But these activities did not remain unknown to Antigonus, who at once sent off men throughout the country to obstruct and waylay those who were collecting food ; and in obedience to Antigonus' orders they mustered a large body of armed men near Jericho, and taking up posts in the hills, kept a look-out for the men who were bringing provisions. Herod, however, did not remain still while this was being done, but took ten cohorts, five Roman and five Jewish, and a mixed mercenary force, to which he added a few mounted men, and marched on Jericho ; and while he found the city deserted, he seized five hundred men occupying the heights with their wives and families, but after capturing them, released them ; then the Romans fell upon the city and plundered it, finding the houses full of all kinds of valuable things. And after leaving a garrison at Jericho, the king returned and dismissed his Roman army to their winter quarters in the districts which had joined his side,^a namely Idumaea,^b Galilee and Samaria. At the same time Antigonus through bribery obtained Silo's consent to quarter a part of his army in Lydda,^c seeking to win Antony's favour thereby. And so the Romans put aside their arms and lived on the fat of the land.^d

(4) Herod, however, did not choose to remain inactive, but sent off his brother Joseph to Idumaea with two thousand foot-soldiers and four hundred mounted men,^e while he himself went to Samaria, where he left his mother and his other relatives, who had by now made their way out of Masada, and proceeded to Galilee to capture some of the strongholds which had been occupied by the garrisons of Antigonus. He reached Sepphoris in a snow-storm, and as Antigonus' garrison had quietly withdrawn, he came into possession of an abundance of provisions. From here he then sent out a troop of cavalry and three companies of foot-soldiers against some brigands living in caves, for he had made up his mind to put an end to their depredations^f; these caves were very near a village called Arbela.^a Forty days later he himself came with his entire army, and under the enemy's bold^b attack the left wing of his line gave way, but when he appeared in person with a compact body of men,^c he put to flight those who had before been victorious, and rallied those of his men who were fleeing. And he pressed on in pursuit of the enemy as far as the river Jordan, to which they fled along different^d roads^e; and so he got into his hands all the people of Galilee except those who lived in the caves^f; he then distributed money, giving each of his men a hundred and fifty drachmas, and considerably more to the officers, and dismissed them to their winter quarters. Meanwhile Silo and the officers of the men who were in winter quarters came to him because Antigonus was unwilling to furnish them with food; that worthy had fed them for a month and no longer; he had, moreover, sent out orders to the inhabitants round about that they were to gather up all the provisions throughout the country and flee to the hills in order that the Romans might be entirely without necessary food and so perish of hunger. Accordingly Herod entrusted the care of these men to Pheroras, his youngest brother, and ordered him to fortify Alexandreion also. And he quickly made it possible for the soldiers to have of a later synagogue may still be seen there, cf. E. Sukenik in JPOS 15 (1935), p. 143.

(5) About the same time, while Antony was staying at Athens,^b Ventidius in Syria sent for Silo to join him against the Parthians,^c but instructed him first to assist Herod in the present war and then summon their allies to the Romans' own war. But Herod, who was hastening against the brigands in the caves, sent^d Silo off to Ventidius, and set out against them by himself. Now their caves were in hills that were altogether rugged, having their entrances half-way up the sheer cliffs and being surrounded by sharp rocks; in such dens did they lurk with all their people. Thereupon^e the king, whose men were unable either to climb up from below or creep upon them from above because of the steepness of the hill, had cribs built and lowered these upon them with iron chains as they were suspended by a machine from the summit of the hill. The cribs were filled with armed men holding great grappling hooks, with which they were supposed to draw toward them any of the brigands who opposed them, and kill them by hurling them to the ground. The lowering of the cribs was proving to be a risky business because of the immense depth that lay below them, although the men within them had everything they needed. But when the cribs were let down, none of the men standing near the entrances of the caves dared come forward; instead, they remained quiet out of fear, whereupon one of the soldiers in irritation at the delay caused by the brigands who dared not come out, girded on his sword, and holding on with both hands to the chain from which the crib was suspended, lowered himself to the entrance of a cave. And when he came opposite an entrance, he first drove back with javelins most of those who were standing there, and then with his grappling hook drew his opponents toward him and pushed them over the precipice; after this he attacked those within and slaughtered many of them, whereupon he re-entered the crib and rested. Then fear seized the others as they heard the shrieking, and they despaired of their lives; all action, however, was halted by the coming on of night^a; and many, after sending spokesmen with the king's consent,^b surrendered and made their submission.^c The same method of attack was used the following day, when the men in the baskets^d fell upon them still more fiercely and fought at their doors and threw flaming fire inside, and so the caves, which had much wood in them, were set on fire. Now there was an old man shut up within one of the caves with his seven children and his wife: and when they begged him to let them slip through to the enemy, he stood at the entrance and cut down each of his sons as he came out, and afterwards his wife, and after hurling their dead bodies over the precipice, threw himself down upon them, thus submitting to death rather than to slavery. But before doing so, he bitterly reviled Herod for his meanness of spirit, although the king—for he was a witness of what was happening—stretched out his right hand and promised him full immunity. By such methods, then, all the caves were finally taken.

(6) The king thereupon appointed Ptolemy general in that region, and departed for Samaria with six hundred mounted men and three thousand foot-soldiers to try the issue of battle with Antigonus. Ptolemy, however, was unsuccessful in his command, and the men who had formerly disturbed Galilee fell upon him and took his life; after doing this, they fled in a body to the marshes and other inaccessible places, harrying and plundering the entire country thereabout. But Herod returned and punished them; some of the rebels he slew, and those who had taken refuge in fortified places he subjected to a siege and killed, and demolished their strongholds as well. After putting an end to the rebellion in this way, he also fined the cities a hundred talents.

(7) Meanwhile, after Pacorus had fallen in battle and the Parthians had been defeated,^a Ventidius at the urging of Antony^b sent Machaeras to the assistance of Herod with two legions and a thousand horse.

^a Cf. Ant. xiii. 15 note c.

^b The preceding account of Machaeras' actions differs in some important details from the parallel, B.J. i. 317-319, which says that Antigonus, complaining bitterly of Herod, tried to bribe Machaeras, but the bribe was refused because Machaeras respected the orders of Ventidius and was also tempted by a larger bribe offered by Herod; after being repulsed by Antigonus, Machaeras in shame (nothing is said of his belated recognition of the soundness of Herod's advice)

Now Machaeras, being invited by Antigonus and bribed by him, went off against Herod's wish, as if to reconnoitre his position ; but Antigonus, suspecting his intentions in coming, did not admit him, but kept him away with sling-shots, and so revealed his own purpose. Thereupon Machaeras, perceiving that Herod had given him excellent advice and that he himself had made a mistake in disregarding his counsel, withdrew to the city of Emmaus^a and slaughtered all the Jews whom he met on the way, whether friends or foes, in anger at the treatment he had suffered.^b Enraged at these acts, the king went to Samaria, for he had decided to go to Antony about these matters and say that he had no need of such allies, who would do more harm to him than to his enemies, and that he was quite able to crush Antigonus by himself.^c But Machaeras, who accompanied him, begged him to remain, or, if he were bent on going, at least to leave his brother Joseph as their associate in the war with Antigonus.^d And so, at was forced to retire to Emmaus and rejoin Herod, on the way killing all the Jews he met, not sparing even the Herodians. Otto, Herodes, p. 31 note, assumes that in Ant. Josephus used two contradictory sources, while Laqueur, pp. 202-205, argues that Josephus has tendentiously altered B.J. in writing Ant. out of hostility to Antigonus (while still being hostile to his opponent Herod). But so far as Antigonus is concerned the only difference between B.J. and Ant. is that in the former he tries to bribe Machaeras unsuccessfully, and in the latter succeeds in bribing him. Thus the alleged anti-Antigonus revision of Ant. is not very clear.

^a Contrast B.J. i. 320, "Indignant at these acts Herod hastened to attack Machaeras as an enemy, but restraining his anger, set out instead to lay before Antony an accusation of his lawlessness."

^b Herod's brother Joseph is not mentioned by Machaeras in the parallel, B.J. i. 320.

^a In B.J. Herod's warning to Joseph not to engage Antigonus (nothing is said about quarrelling with Machaeras, although his untrustworthiness is mentioned) follows the account of the siege of Samosata instead of preceding it, as here.

the earnest entreaty of Machaeras, Herod became reconciled and left his brother Joseph there with an army, warning him not to take any risks or to quarrel with Machaeras.^a

(8) ^b He himself hastened to Antony, who was just then besieging Samosata, a place near the Euphrates, with horsemen and foot-soldiers who had come to his assistance.^c When he arrived at Antioch,^d he found many men gathered there who were anxious to reach Antony but dared not set out for fear of the barbarians who were attacking men on the way and slaying many of them ; these he encouraged and became their leader on the road. But two days' march from Samosata^e there was an ambush of barbarians lying in wait for those who were on their way to Antony. And as there were thickets covering the entrance to the plains, they had there placed in ambush^f not a few horsemen to remain quiet until those passing through should reach the place where see Laqueur, pp. 205-210, who assumes that in Ant. Josephus used a second source beside Nicolas of Damascus, namely the Memoirs of Herod himself. But this assumption seems to contradict Laqueur's theory that Ant. is more anti-Herodian than B.J.

^c Antony had come to supersede Ventidius who was besieging the Parthians' ally Antiochus of Commagene. For the ancient sources see W. W. Tarn in CAH x. 53 note 3 and Debevoise, p. 120 note 103.

^d B.J. adds that "Herod quickened his pace, as he saw in this a favourable opportunity for displaying his courage and strengthening his hold upon Antony's affection." The details of Herod's march and reception by Antony in §§ 439-444 are not found in the corresponding sections, B.J. i. 321-322.

horses could be used. As the first men went through, Herod was guarding the rear, and when the men in ambush, numbering some five hundred, suddenly ^a fell upon them and routed those in front, the king rushed up and by the force of his charge at once drove the enemy back ; at the same time he raised the spirits of his men and filled them with courage : and when those who had before been fleeing turned back to fight, the barbarians were killed on all sides. But the king pressed on, slaying as he went, and after recovering all the plunder that had been taken, consisting of a great many pack-animals and slaves, he went ahead. And being attacked by a larger number of men in the thickets near the entrance to the plain, he engaged them too with a stout body of men and routed and killed many of them, thus making the road safe for those who followed. Thereupon they hailed him as their saviour and protector.

(9) And when he came near Samosata, Antony sent his army with his own equipment to meet him, assigning these men as an honour to Herod and also as an aid to him ; for he had heard of the barbarians' attacks upon them. Moreover when Herod arrived, he was very glad to see him, and on learning of his feats on the way, he clasped his hand and expressed admiration of his prowess ; and Antony himself welcomed him with an embrace on seeing him,^b and showed him special honour, for he had recently appointed him king.^c But not long afterwards

^b B.J. says that Herod's arrival "brought the siege to a conclusion." According to Plutarch, Ant. 34, Antony made Antiochus^a surrendered the stronghold,^b and thus the war came to an end ; thereupon Antony entrusted Syria^c to Sossius with instructions to aid Herod, and himself departed for Egypt.^d And so Sossius sent two legions ahead to Judaea to assist Herod,^e and himself followed with the greater part of his army.

(10) Before this, however, Joseph had met his death in Judaea under the following circumstances. Forgetting the orders which his brother had given him when going off to Antony, he pitched camp in the hills—for when Machaeras gave him five cohorts, he hastened to Jericho with the intention of reaping all their grain—and as the Roman army was newly recruited and had no experience of war, being raised mostly from Syria, he was left in a difficult position when the enemy attacked him there, and so he was killed, fighting bravely ; his entire army was also lost, six cohorts being destroyed.^f And Antigonus seized the dead bodies^g and cut off Joseph's head, which his brother Pheroras ransomed for fifty talents. And after this the Galilaeans rebelled against the nobles in their country and drowned the partisans peace with Antiochus on the latter's payment of 300 talents (instead of 1000 earlier demanded by Ventidius). Tarn, loc. cit., calls this story "absurd."

^a "Syria" is conjecturally supplied from B.J.

^b According to Plutarch, loc. cit., Antony returned to Athens from Syria. In B.J. the instructions to Sossius are mentioned after the account of Joseph's defeat at Jericho, instead of before it, as here ; § 447 = B.J. i. 327, while §§ 448-450 = B.J. i. 323-326.

^c Tarn remarks, CAH x. 54, that this was a "rare instance of a foreigner commanding Roman troops."

^b B.J. has "Idumaea," probably the correct reading since, as Otto points out, Herodes, p. 32, Judaea had not been held by Herod, while, according to B.J. i. 303, he had earlier feared a revolt in Idumaea.

of Herod in the lake ^a; a good part of Judaea ^b also revolted. Machaeras then fortificd the place called Gittha.^c

(11) But messengers came to the king to report these happenings, and at Daphne near Antioch they informed him of his brother's fate, which, however, he himself was expecting from certain dream visions which clearly foreshadowed his brother's death.^d He therefore hastened on his way, and when he came to Mount Lebanon, took on eight hundred men of that region, and with a Roman legion as well came to Ptolemais; from there he set out by night with his army and proceeded through Galilee.^e When the enemy met him, they were defeated in battle and were shut up in the fortress from which they had set out the day before; he then attacked them repeatedly at dawn,^f but not being able to do anything because of a severe storm which broke out, he led his army back to the villages nearby. But when a second legion came to him from Antony,^g the men who were holding the fortress were terrified and abandoned it by night. And the king hastened to Jericho with the intention of taking revenge on them for his brother. And when he had found quarters, he entertained the men in authority, and after the party, sent away the guests and went to his room. And from the following incident one may see how well disposed God was toward the king.^a For the roof of the house collapsed^b without killing anyone who was caught within ; so that they all believed that Herod was a favourite of God for having escaped so great and unexpected a danger.

^a B.J.'s language is more dramatic, " springing in dismay from his bed, he was met by the messengers bringing news of the catastrophe."

^b The stop at Ptolemais is not mentioned in B.J. Laqueur, pp. 206-207, argues that in Ant. Josephus has deliberately suppressed the details of his source which showed Herod's passionate haste to avenge his brother. But B.J. is simply more rhetorical than Ant., see preceding note and below, on § 458.

(12) On the following day, however, six thousand of the enemy descended from the summits of the hills to fight, and struck terror into the Romans.^c The light-armed troops came close and cast javelins^d and stones at the king's men who had come out against them, and one of them struck the king himself in the side with a javelin. Antigonus then sent a general named Pappus with a force^e to Samaria, wishing to give the enemy the impression that he was fighting with men to spare. And while he occupied himself with the general Machaeras, Herod took five cities, and after slaughtering those who were caught^f in them—about two thousand—and burning the cities themselves, returned to face Pappus, who had pitched his camp near a village called Isana.^g

^c B.J. i. 332 says, on the contrary, that Antigonus' troops had not the courage to come to close quarters with the Romans. Possibly in Ant. we should read, not ἐφόβουν, but ἐφοβοῦντο (τοὺς Ρωμαίους) "but they were afraid of the Romans."

^a Variant "from Jericho and Judaea"; B.J. "from Jericho and the rest of the country (χώρας)"—probably meaning Judaea. B.J. adds that these recruits came, "some drawn by hatred of Antigonus, others by his own successes, the majority by a blind love of change."

Meanwhile many people streamed to him from Jericho and the rest of Judaea^a; and when he drew near the enemy, they boldly advanced to attack him, but on engaging them in battle he overcame them, and to avenge his brother^b he followed and killed them as they fled to the village. The houses were filled with armed men, and many^c took refuge on the house-tops, but he seized these, and on pulling down the roofs of the houses, saw the space below filled with soldiers wedged in tightly together. Accordingly his men hurled stones at them from above^d and slew them in heaps, one upon another. And the most terrible sight of any during the war was this mass of countless dead bodies lying one upon another within the walls of the houses.^e It was this action which did most to break the spirits of the enemy, who were waiting to see what would happen; for great crowds were seen coming together from a distance about the village, and they now fled; and if a severe storm^f had not prevented, the king's army, made confident by their victory, would have marched on Jerusalem as well and ended the whole business; for Antigonus was already considering headlong flight and withdrawal from the city.

^b This is more dramatically expressed in B.J. i. 336, "with his memories of his murdered brother, hazarding all to be avenged on his murderers." There are several other dramatic phrases in these sections of B.J. not paralleled in Ant.

^c Variant "some"; B.J. supports our text.

(13) ^aAt this point the king ordered his soldiers to have their supper, as it was late, and he himself, being tired out, went into a room to bathe. And here he came into very great danger, but by the providence of God, escaped it. For he was naked ^b and taking his bath, with only a single servant in attendance, in an inner chamber, where several of the enemy, who were armed, had taken refuge out of fear ; and while he was bathing, one of them stole by ^c with his sword drawn, and went out through the door, and after him a second and a third who were similarly armed, but in their consternation they did the king no injury, and were content to have got away into the open without suffering any harm. The following day he cut off the head of Pappus, who had already been slain, and sent it to Pheroras in revenge for what his brother had suffered. For it was Pappus who had been his executioner.^d

(14) ^eWhen the storm subsided, he removed from there and came near to Jerusalem, encamping close to the city. This was in the third year after he had been made king at Rome.^f He then moved his camp and came close to the wall, encamping before the temple, which was the point where the wall could most easily be assaulted, for he had made up his mind to attack at the same place where Pompey had attacked before.^g On this site he made three lines

He then put capable men in charge of these works, and while his army was still encamped, himself went off to Samaria to marry the daughter ^a of Alexander, son of Aristobulus, to whom he was betrothed, as I have said before.^b nation^a being gathered together, that the Jews who were confined^b within the walls fought against Herod and his men; many were the invocations made about the temple, and many were the things said to encourage^c the people, to the effect that God would deliver them from danger. And everything on the land outside the city^d had been carried off, so that nothing was left that might serve as food for men or beasts; and by secret raids also they caused a lack of provisions. But^e when Herod observed this, he took steps against the raids, on the one hand, by posting ambushes in the most suitable places, and against the lack of provisions, on the other hand, by sending divisions of armed men to gather supplies from a distance, so that within a short time they had a great abundance of necessities. And the three lines of earthworks had been raised with ease, for there were a great number of hands now continuously^f at work, and as it was summer,^g there was no hindrance to their erection either from the weather or from the workmen; and so they brought up their engines and battered the wall, trying every expedient. They did not, however, intimidate those within the city, who on their part contrived a good many counter-devices against those of their enemies; they would dash out and set fire to their works, some of them half-finished, others completed; they would also

^a This is another detail not found in B.J. Josephus here seems to say that the siege took place during a sabbatical year, namely that which extended from Oct. 38 to Oct. 37 B.C., as most scholars assume. But there is good reason to believe that this sabbatical year extended from Oct. 37 to Oct. 36 B.C. (see the notes on Ant. xii. 378, xiii. 234, xiv. 201 and below, § 487). We must therefore, it seems, make one of the three following assumptions: (1) Josephus knew that the siege occurred in the summer of the year corresponding to 37 B.C. but was mistaken in saying (or implying) that this fell in a sabbatical year (beginning Oct. 38 B.C.). (2) Josephus assumed that the siege took place during a sabbatical year, in the summer of 36 B.C. This seems to be borne out by the statement below, § 488, that Sossius and Herod captured Jerusalem 27 years after Pompey had done so (63 B.C.); thus Jerusalem fell in 36 B.C. as maintained by Gumpach and Caspari (ap. Schürer i. 358 n. 11). Zeitlin's argument, MT, fight hand to hand, but while they were not inferior to the Romans in daring, they fell short of them in science. Against the siege-engines they devised counter-defences when their first constructions gave way, and fought underground when they met the enemy in the mines ; and acting in desperation rather than with foresight, they persevered in the war to the very end—this in spite of the fact that a great army surrounded them and that they were distressed by famine and the lack of necessities, for a sabbatical year happened to fall at that time.^a The first to mount the wall were twenty^b picked men, and after these came Sossius' centurions. The first wall was taken in forty days,^c and the second in fifteen more ; and some of the porticoes round the temple were burnt, which Herod accused Antigonus of

pp. 20-27, that the 27 years do not give 36 B.C. but Jan. (10th of Tebet), 37 B.C., reckoning 26 years and a fraction from Pompey's entry in the summer of 63 B.C., is invalidated by, among other things, the reference to the summer in § 473. (3) Josephus knew that the siege took place in the summer of 37 B.C. and was referring, rather vaguely, to a sabbatical year that began soon after the fall of Jerusalem, that is, in Oct. 37 B.C. This is not so improbable as it may seem at first. If the inhabitants of Jerusalem were distressed by famine in the summer of 37 B.C., they would not be able to lay in an extra supply of provisions for the latter part of the sabbatical year beginning in October—hence their desperation. To be sure, the 27 years of § 488 make a difficulty here, and we should have to assume that Josephus made a slip in arithmetic.

One hardly knows which assumption to prefer, in view of the apparently irreconcilable inconsistencies in Josephus himself, apart from his inconsistency with other ancient sources (see below, § 487-488 notes).

^a B.J. does not give the number.

^o Laqueur, pp. 213-214, ingeniously argues that the seemingly anti-Herodian details in these two added sections really conceal the pro-Herodian bias of Josephus' source here, namely Herod's Memoirs.

^b The Upper City lay on the western hill.

setting on fire, making an effort to draw upon him the hatred of the Jews by this charge.^a And when the outer precincts of the temple and the Lower City had been captured, the Jews fled into the inner precinct of the temple and the Upper City^b; and fearing that the Romans would prevent them from offering the daily sacrifices to God, they sent an embassy to beg that they would permit them to have only victims brought in for them; and this request he granted, in the belief that they would yield. But when he saw that none of the things he expected of them was being done, and that, on the contrary, they were resisting strongly for the sake of Antigonus' kingship, he attacked them and took the city by storm. And soon every quarter was filled with the blood of the slain,^c for the Romans were furious at the length of the siege,^d while the Jews on Herod's side were anxious not to leave a single adversary alive. And so they were slaughtered in heaps, whether crowded together in alleys and houses or seeking refuge in the temple; no pity was shown either to infants or the aged, nor were weak women spared, but even though the king sent word around, urging them to forbear, not one of them held his hand, but like madmen they fell upon persons of every age. It was then that Antigonus, without stopping to reflect either on his former or his present fortunes, came down from the castle, and fell at Sossius' feet.

^a At this point is resumed the close parallelism with B.J.; §§ 479-486 = B.J. i. 351-356.

^b According to B.J. i. 351 the Jews sustained the siege into the fifth month, while Ant., below, § 487, appears to state that the city fell in the third month (of the siege) or even less (see above, § 476); but the point of time to which "the third month" refers in Ant. is by no means certain.

He, however, did not in the least pity him for suffering a change of fortune, but applauded him ^a unrestrainedly, and called him Antigone ^b; nevertheless he did not leave him unguarded, as a woman would have been, but had him put in chains and kept under guard.

(3) And Herod, after checking his enemies, took care also to check his foreign allies; for the crowd of strangers was bent on getting a view of the temple and the holy things in the sanctuary, and the king held them back, in some cases by appeals, in others by threats, and sometimes even by arms, for he regarded victory as something more bitter than defeat if any of the things forbidden to men's eyes should be seen by them. He also tried to prevent the plundering that went on throughout the city by strenuously arguing with Sossius that if the Romans emptied the city of its wealth and its men, they would leave him king of a wilderness, and that he would consider the sovereignty of the habitable world a poor recompence for the murder of so many citizens. And when Sossius said that he had been right to permit his soldiers this plundering in return for their labours in the siege, Herod replied that he himself would distribute rewards to each of them out of his own purse. In this way he purchased security for the rest of the city, and fulfilled his promise; for he gave splendid gifts to every soldier and proportionate gifts to their officers, while to Sossius himself he made most regal presents, so that all went away with a goodly share of wealth.

^d More nearly 26 years, see above § 475 note a and cf. § 66 on Pompey's capture of the city in 63 B.C. περὶ τρίτον μῆνα τῇ τῆς νηστείας ἡμέρᾳ. Dio Cassius, loc. cit., says that the city was taken ἐν τῇ τοῦ Κρόνου καὶ τότε ἡμέρᾳ ὥρομασμένῃ, evidently meaning the Sabbath (as in the case of Ptolemy I, cf. Ant. xii. 4, and Pompey (?), Ant. xiv. 66 with notes); but by νηστείας Josephus here seems to mean the Day of Atonement, which in 37 B.C. fell on October 3rd. There has been considerable discussion of the actual date of the city's fall, and various attempts have been made to reconcile the conflicting data; see the detailed discussions (with bibliography) in Schürer i. 358 n. 11, Otto, Herodes, p. 33 n. 2, Zeitlin, MT, pp. 20-27, Laqueur, pp. 211-212 and Kugler, pp. 418-422. Here it may suffice to remark that while the year 37 B.C. is certain, the month cannot be determined with absolute certainty, but was probably July and not October. The former is more likely if we assume, with Otto, that the reference to the Day of Atonement (if vηορείας here means that fast day and not an earlier fast day in the calendar, e.g. the fast of the month Tammuz) is based on a popular tradition that sought to discredit Herod by making him responsible for invading the city on the very sacred Day of Atonement.

(4) ^aThis calamity befell the city of Jerusalem during the consulship at Rome of Marcus Agrippa and Caninius ^bGallus, in the hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad,^c in the third month, on the day of the Fast, as if it were a recurrence of the misfortune which came upon the Jews in the time of Pompey, for they were captured by Sossius on the very same day, twenty-seven years later.^d And Sossius dedicated a golden crown to God and departed from Jerusalem, taking Antigonus in chains to Antony.^e But Herod feared that if Antigonus were kept under guard by Antony and brought to Rome by him, he might plead the justice of his cause before the Senate and show that he was descended from kings while Herod was a commoner, and that his sons ought to reign by virtue of their lineage, even though he himself had committed offences against the Romans^f;

^e Antony had left Italy for Greece in the autumn of 37 B.C. and soon after went to Antioch. It was here that Antigonus was brought to him in the winter of that year, cf. Wilcken in PW i. 2420 and Tarn in CAH x. 54-55.

^f Apparently Herod had no confidence that the Romans would continue to prefer him to the Hasmonaeans as they had done in 40 B.C., see above, § 386.

and because of this fear Herod gave Antony a large bribe and persuaded him to put Antigonus out of the way.^a And when this was done, Herod was freed of his fear, and at the same time the rule of the Asamonaean line came to an end after a hundred and twenty-six years.^b Theirs was a splendid and renowned house because of both their lineage and their priestly office, as well as the things which its founders achieved on behalf of the nation. But they lost their royal power through internal strife, and it passed to Herod, the son of Antipater, who came from a house of common people and from a private family that was subject to the kings.^c Such, then, is the account we have received of the end of the Asamonaean line.

^b This would take us back to 163 or 162 B.C. Apparently Josephus is placing the beginning of the Hasmonaean dynasty at about the time when the last Oniad high priest, Onias IV, fled to Egypt, cf. Ant. xii. 385-388.

BOOK XV

(i. 1) How Sossius and Herod took Jerusalem by force and in addition took Antigonus captive has been related in our preceding book. We shall now speak of the things that followed those events. When Herod had got the rule of all Judaea into his hands, he showed special favour to those of the city's populace who had been on his side while he was still a commoner,^a but those who chose the side of his opponents he harried and punished without ceasing for a single day. Especially honoured by him were Pollion the Pharisee and his disciple Samaias, for during the siege of Jerusalem these men had advised the citizens to admit Herod, and for this they now received their reward. This same Pollion^b had once, when Herod was on trial for his life, reproachfully foretold to Hyrcanus and the judges that if Herod's life were spared, he would (one day) perse-

(2) But at that particular time, when he had taken Jerusalem, Herod collected all the equipment ^b in the kingdom and also despoiled the well-to-do, and when he had amassed a great sum of silver and gold, he used all of this to make gifts to Antony and his ^c friends. He also killed forty-five of the leading men of Antigonus' party, and stationed guards at the gates of the walls in order that nothing ^d might be brought out together with the dead. And they searched the dead bodies, and whatever silver or gold or other valuable was found (on them) was brought to the king. And there was no end to their troubles, for on the one hand their greedy master, who was in need (of money), was plundering them, and on the other hand the seventh year, which came round at that time,^e forced them to leave the land unworked, since we are forbidden to sow the earth in that year. Now Antony, on taking Antigonus captive, decided to keep him until his triumph,^f but when he heard that the nation was rebellious and had remained loyal to Antigonus out of hatred for

^b Antony and Cleopatra spent the winter of 37–36 B.C. in

Herod, he decided ^a to behead him in Antioch,^b for the Jews could hardly be kept quiet in any other way. And my words are borne out by the testimony of Strabo of Cappadocia, who writes as follows. "When Antigonus was brought to Antioch, Antony beheaded him.^c He was the first Roman who decided to behead a king, since he believed that in no other way could he change the attitude of the Jews so that they would accept Herod, who had been appointed in his place. For not even under torture would they submit to proclaiming him king, so highly did they regard their former king.^d And so he thought that the disgrace would somewhat dim their memory of him ^e and would also lessen their hatred of Herod."^f That is Strabo's account.

(ii. 1) When the high priest Hyrcanus, who was a captive with the Parthians,^f heard that Herod had got possession of the kingship, he came to Herod after being released from captivity in the following way. Barzaphrane and Pacorus, the Parthian generals, had captured Hyrcanus, who had first been Antioch, see Ant. xiv. 488 note e (add a ref. to Tarn, CAH x. 69). The execution of Antigonus probably took place a few months after the fall of Jerusalem in the summer of 37 B.C.

^c On the method of execution see Ant. xiv. 490 note a (add ref. to Plutarch, Ant. 36, who also says that Antony had Antigonus beheaded—έπελέκισε).

^d Klausner, HBŚ iii. 271, explains Antigonus' popularity as due to the Jews' devotion to the Hasmonaean dynasty and their distrust of the Romans. In Ant. xiv. 490 Josephus stresses Herod's bribing of Antony because of his fear of Antigonus' popularity; see also Ant. xiv. 382 note e. Herod's fear of Aristobulus' popularity appears clearly below, in § 30.

(2) When Hyrcanus was brought there, the Parthian king Phraates treated him very leniently because he had learned of his distinguished and noble lineage. For this reason he released him from his bonds and permitted him to settle in Babylon,^c where there was a great number of Jews. These men honoured Hyrcanus as their high priest and king, as did all of the Jewish nation occupying the region as far as the Euphrates. This was gratifying to him. But when he learned that Herod had taken over the kingship, his feeling changed to one of hope, for he had been on cordial terms with him from the beginning and expected that Herod would be mindful of the favours done him ^d when, being on trial and about to be sentenced to death, Hyrcanus had saved him from that danger and from punishment.^e Accordingly, he spoke of this to the Jews, for he was eager to go to Herod.^f But they sought to hold him there and asked him to remain, mentioning the services and honours given him, and saying that among them he would lack nothing in the way of high-priestly or kingly honour and, what was more

(3) In spite of their offering such inducements, Hyrcanus had a strong desire to depart. And Herod wrote, urging him to ask Phraates and the Jews of that region not to begrudge his virtually sharing the kingship with Herod, for this was the moment for the one to repay and the other to receive payment for the kindness that Herod had received in being maintained and having his life saved by him. When writing this to Hyrcanus, he also sent his envoy Saramalla ^d and a good many gifts to Phraates with the request that he would not prevent him from showing the same kindnesses to his benefactor as he had received. His zeal did not, however, spring from these motives but from the fact that he himself had no just claim to rule and he feared that a change might be made with good reason; and so he was eager to get Hyrcanus into his power or even to put him out of the way altogether; and this he did do later on.^e

(4) At the moment, however, when he came (to Judaea) after allowing himself to be persuaded and with the consent of the Parthian king and the financial support of the Jews, Herod received him with all honour, assigned him the first place in meetings,

^a Quintus Delliūs, mentioned earlier, in Ant. xiv. 394 (parallel to B.J. i. 290). Dio Cassius xlix. 39 describes him as a “lover” or “favourite” (παιδικά) of Antony. Before the battle of Actium he deserted Antony for Octavian, and later wrote a history of Antony’s Parthian campaigns. Horace request, but his friend Dellius ^a came to Judaea on some business, and when he saw Aristobulus, he was amazed ^b at his charm and was filled with admiration of his height and beauty, and no less with (the beauty) of Mariamme, the king's wife. And he made it plain that he thought Alexandra was the mother of beautiful children. Accordingly, when she entered into conversation with him, he persuaded her to have portraits of both of them painted and to send them to Antony, saying that if he saw them, she would not be denied anything she might ask. Alexandra was elated by these words and sent the pictures to Antony.^c And Dellius spoke in extravagant terms, saying that her children seemed to him to be the offspring of some god rather than of human beings, for he was busy on his own account, trying to entice Antony into (sexual) pleasures. But Antony was embarrassed to send for the girl because she was married to Herod and because he wished to avoid being denounced to Cleopatra for such an act. And so he instructed him to send the lad in an outwardly respectable way, adding, "if this be no burden." When this was reported to Herod, he decided that it would not be safe for him to send Aristobulus, who addresses him as " moriture Delli " in the Ode (ii. 3) beginning "Aequam memento rebus in arduis."

^b Variant "fell in love with."

^c According to B.J. i. 439, Mariamme was accused by her enemies of having sent her portrait to Antony in Egypt. It is not clear whether this is a variant of the story told above or refers to a different occasion. In any case, the incident related here must have taken place in 36 or 35 b.c., sometime before Antony's invasion of Armenia (34 b.c.). For more detailed, though not conclusive, discussions of the chronology see Schürer, GJV i. 362 n. 3 and Otto, Herodes, pp. 40-41.

was then most handsome—being just sixteen ^a—and of a distinguished family, to Antony, who was more powerful than any Roman of his time, and was ready to use him for erotic purposes and was able to indulge in undisguised pleasures because of his power. He therefore wrote in reply that if the youth were merely to leave the country, the whole land would be filled with disorder and war, because the Jews had formed hopes of an overturn of the government and the rule of another king.^b

(7) After putting off Antony with these excuses, Herod and Alexandra are temporarily reconciled. Herod decided not to leave the lad and Alexandra entirely without honour, especially because his wife Mariamme pressed him urgently to restore the high priesthood to her brother, and also because he thought it to his own advantage that Aristobulus, once placed in office, would not in fact be able to leave the country. He then called a council of his friends and bitterly accused Alexandra of having secretly plotted against his throne, saying that through Cleopatra she was working to get Antony to deprive him of his power and have the youth take over the government in his place. But this purpose ^c of hers, he said, was unjust, since her daughter ^d would at the same time be deprived of the honour which she now had, and she herself would be bringing disorder into a kingdom for which he had worked so hard and had acquired after undergoing no small danger. said, he would not keep in mind the improper things that she had done nor cease to treat them justly, but would even give the high priesthood to her son now, for he had earlier appointed Ananel only because Aristobulus was a mere lad. He spoke in these terms not thoughtlessly but with design and due deliberation, in order to deceive the women ^a and the friends who had been called in for advice. Alexandra, being greatly moved both by joy at this unexpected turn of things and by fear of being under suspicion, was in tears as she made her defence. As for the (high) priesthood, she admitted having done everything possible (to get it for her son) because of the dis-honour (which he had suffered), but as for the royal power, she had no designs on it nor would she wish to have it even if it came her way, since she now had enough honour because of the power which he held and the security which came to her whole family from the fact that he was better able to rule than any others. And now, she said, being overcome by his benefactions, she would accept the office for her son and would be obedient in all respects. She also asked to be forgiven if, through concern for her family and her usual outspokenness, she had acted too impulsively in the way she had expressed indignation over the treatment which she had received. Such were the words which they exchanged, and with more cagerness than speed^b they gave each other assurances of good faith and broke up their meeting, all suspicion, as it seemed, having been removed.

high priesthood away from Ananel, who was, as we said before,^a not a native (of Judaea) but (was descended) from the Jews who had been transported beyond the Euphrates, for not a few tens of thousands of this people had been transported to Babylonia ; and Ananel, who came from there, was of a high-priestly family ^b and had long been treated by Herod as a valued friend. Just as he once had honoured him, when he took over the kingship, so he now dismissed him in order to end his domestic troubles. But in this he acted unlawfully, for never had anyone ^c been deprived of this office when once he had assumed it, except that Antiochus Epiphanes had violated this law first when he removed Jesus and appointed his brother Onias ^d ; and the next was Aristobulus, who removed his brother Hyrcanus ^e ; and the third was Herod when he took the office away (from Ananel) and gave it to the young Aristobulus.

(2) And so, for the time being, Herod seemed to have healed his domestic troubles. But still he did not long remain free of suspicion, as is natural after a reconciliation, for he had reason to fear from Alexandra's past attempts that she would try to overthrow his government if she found an opportunity. He therefore ordered her to remain in her palace and not to do anything on her own authority^f ; and as a careful watch was kept, nothing escaped him, not even what she did in her daily life. All this gradually made her wild with rage and caused hatred to grow in addition,^a for she had a full share of womanly pride and resented the supervision that came from his suspicion, and she thought anything was better than to be deprived of her freedom of action and to live the rest of her life in slavery and fear in spite of appearing to have honour. She therefore wrote to Cleopatra, making a long sustained lament about the state in which she found herself, and urging her to give her as much help as she possibly could. Thereupon Cleopatra told her to escape secretly with her son and come to her in Egypt. This seemed to Alexandra a good idea, and she contrived the following scheme. She had two coffins made as if for the transporting of dead bodies, and placed herself and her son in them, after giving orders to those of her servants who knew of the plan to take them away during the night. From there they had a road to the sea and a ship ready for them to sail in to Egypt. But her servant Aesop inadvertently reported this to Sabbion, one of her friends, thinking that he knew of the plan. When Sabbion learned of it—he had, as it happened, formerly been an enemy of Herod because he was believed to be one of those who had plotted to poison Antipater,^b—he saw a chance to change Herod's hatred into goodwill by informing him of what was going on, and so he told the king all about Alexandra's plot. The king permitted things to proceed as far as the carrying out of the plan, and then caught her in the very act of fleeing. But he overlooked her offence because he did not dare take any harsh measures against her, even though he would have liked to,^a for Cleopatra, out of hatred toward him, would not have allowed her to be accused ; and so he made a show of magnanimity as if forgiving them out of kindness rather than for another reason.^b He was determined at all costs, however, to get the youth out of the way ; but it seemed to him that he would be more likely to have his motives escape detection if he did not act at once or immediately after what had happened.

(3) When Tabernacles came round—this is a festival observed by us with special care—he waited for these days to pass,^c while he himself and the rest of the people gave themselves up to rejoicing. But it was the envy arising from this very occasion and clearly working within him that led him to carry out his purpose more quickly. For Aristobulus was a youth of seventeen^d when he went up to the altar to perform the sacrifices in accordance with the law,^e wearing the ornamental dress of the high priests and carrying out the rites of the cult, and he was extraordinarily handsome and taller than most youths of

^a Since Josephus says below, in § 56, that Aristobulus died at the age of eighteen after being high priest for one year, he must have been appointed to this office just before or just after his seventeenth birthday.

^b Most Rabbinic authorities of about the time of Josephus seem to have held that in theory all priests should be at least twenty years old when officiating in the Temple, basing this ruling on 2 Chron. xxxi. 17, in which they interpreted the word "Levites" to include priests. But some Rabbis made the age of puberty the lower limit of age of service. See Bab. Talmud, Hullin 24b.

But with darkness coming on while he swam, some of the friends, who had been given orders to do so, kept pressing him down and holding him under water as if in sport, and they did not let up until they had quite suffocated him. In this manner was Aristobulus done away with ^a when he was at most eighteen years old and had held the high priesthood for a year. This office Ananel again obtained for himself.

(4) When this sad event was reported to the women, they suddenly gave way to lamentation over the dead body that lay before them and to ungovernable grief.^b The city,^c too, was greatly saddened when the report was circulated, and every household felt the misfortune as if it had happened to one of its own members and not to a stranger. But Alexandra was most deeply affected of all because she understood what the death (of her son) meant. But although she had the greater pain for knowing how it had been brought about, she held it necessary to bear up bravely in anticipation of a still greater evil. Often she came close ^d to ending her life with her own hands, but still she held back, hoping that if she lived she might help to avenge ^e the son who had been treacherously and lawlessly killed. For that reason she was all the more encouraged to live, and thought that by giving no indication of suspecting that her son's death had been premeditated she would have sufficient opportunity for revenge.

And so she resolutely kept her suspicion to herself. Herod also convincingly dispelled any thought in the minds of outsiders that the lad's death had been premeditated, not only by showing all the signs of mourning but also by giving way to tears and exhibiting real perturbation of soul. It may be, too, that emotion overcame him when he looked upon the youthful beauty of the lad even though his death had been considered necessary for his own safety. But it was clear that he was taking these measures to excuse himself. At any rate, he made all the more display of lavishness in the burial rites, providing a very fine tomb and a great quantity of perfumes and burying with him a great amount of fine apparel,^a and so he drove out some of the sorrow ^b felt by the grieving women and consoled them to this extent.

(5) Alexandra, however, was not won over ^c by any such actions. The memory of her misfortune, which caused her ever greater pain, made her the more querulous and resentful, and she wrote to Cleopatra about Herod's plot and the killing of her son. Since she had long been eager to come to the help ^d of Alexandra in answer to her pleas, and pitied her ill fortune, Cleopatra made the whole matter her own concern, and did not cease urging Antony to avenge the murder of Alexandra's son, for, she said, it was not right that Herod, who had been appointed by him as king of a country which he had no claim to rule, should have exhibited such lawlessness toward

^a Cleopatra's intervention probably took place during the winter of 35–34 B.C. while Antony was in Egypt or sometime before he invaded Armenia early in 34 B.C. On the appointment of Herod as king through Antony's influence see Ant. xiv. 385. That Herod laid particular stress on the beginning of his titular reign in 40 B.C. in contrast to that of his de facto reign in 37 B.C. has been plausibly argued on the basis of those who were the real kings.^a Being persuaded by this argument, Antony, on setting out for Laodicea,^b wrote to Herod, ordering him to come there and clear himself of the charges relating to Aristobulus, for, he said, he had acted criminally^c in the plot if it had been formed by him. Thereupon Herod, in fear of both this accusation and the hostility of Cleopatra, who had never ceased doing her best to make Antony his enemy, decided to obey, since there was nothing else to do. So he left his uncle^d Joseph in charge of the affairs of the realm, secretly giving him instructions that if anything (fatal) happened to him while he was with Antony, Joseph should at once do away with Mariamme too.^e For, he said, he was very much in love with his wife and feared the outrage (it would be to his memory) if even after his death she were pursued by another man because of her beauty. All this was a way of indicating Antony's desire for the woman, of whose beauty, as it happened, he had long before casually heard.^f And so, with these instructions and with

^d In B.J. i. 441 Josephus calls Joseph the husband of Herod's sister Salome but says nothing of his being Herod's uncle. Below, moreover, in Ant. xv. 169 Josephus seems to be unaware of such a relation between Joseph and Herod. For that reason one is inclined to agree with several scholars that in this passage θεῖον "uncle" is an error for πενθερόν "brother-in-law."

^e Cod. V adds "as we have related more clearly in the first book of the Halosis" (i.e. B.J.), and then breaks off to the end of § 87.

uncertain hopes concerning the outcome of the whole matter,^a he went off to meet Antony.

(6) Now ^b Joseph, while administering the affairs of the kingdom and for that reason repeatedly meeting with Mariamme about public business or because of the respect which he was bound to show her as the queen, repeatedly fell into talks about Herod's affection and great love for her. And when in women's fashion she and, even more so, Alexandra, affected not to believe his statements, Joseph in an excess of zeal to reveal the king's feelings let himself go so far as to speak of the instructions given him, offering them as proof of the fact that Herod could not live without her nor, if he should suffer a malign fate, would he even then consent to be separated from her by death. That was Joseph's argument. But the women, as was natural, were chiefly impressed ^c not with Herod's feeling of great love but with his cruelty, reflecting that not even by his death would they escape the doom of a tyrannical death themselves, and so in what was told them they found an implication of cruelty.

(7) At this juncture a report went round the city of Jerusalem, coming from those who hated Herod, that Antony had tortured him and put him to death. This rumour, as was natural, excited all the people in the palace, especially the women. And Alexandra persuaded Joseph to leave the palace with them and flee for refuge to the standards of the Roman legion,^d which at that time was encamped about the city to protect the king's position ^a and was under the command of Julius.^b For, she said, through this (force of Romans) ^c they would, in the first place, live in greater security by having the Romans friendly to them if any disturbance should take place in the palace ; in the second place, she also hoped to obtain everything she wanted if Antony were to see Mariamme, for through him they might recover the throne and so lack for nothing which it was proper for those of royal birth to have.

(8) While they were occupied with these thoughts, a letter came to them from Herod concerning the affairs of the country, which was contrary to rumour and to what had earlier been reported.^d For when he had met with Antony he had quickly won him over with the gifts which he had brought from Jerusalem, and by his speeches he had quickly disposed him not to feel angry toward him. As for the arguments of Cleopatra, they were of little avail against Herod's way of currying his favour, for Antony had said that it was improper to demand an accounting of his reign from a king, since in that case he would not be a king at all, and those who had given a man this office and conferred authority upon him should permit him to exercise it. At the same time he told Cleopatra that she would be better off if she did not meddle in ^e the affairs of the

This was the content of Herod's letter, in which he also recounted the other honours which he had received from Antony, such as sitting with him when he gave judgment and being entertained at dinner by him every day ; and (he told) how he received such privileges in spite of Cleopatra's bitter charges against him, for in her desire to possess his land she demanded his throne for herself and sought by every means to get him out of the way. Herod, however, had found Antony fair and he no longer expected anything unpleasant to happen but would in fact soon come home with the assurance of having strengthened Antony's goodwill toward his throne and his government. And Cleopatra, he said, could no longer cherish any hope of fully satisfying her greed, for Antony had given her Coele-Syria ^a instead of the territory which she had asked for and in this way had placated her while at the same time ridding himself of the appeals which she had been making for Judaea.

(9) When this letter was delivered, the women abandoned the project of fleeing to the Romans which they had formed in the belief that Herod was dead. ately revealed to him what the intentions of Alexandra and her friends had been. Salome also spoke against her husband Joseph, accusing him of having frequently had intercourse with Mariamme. She said these things because for a long time she had hated Mariamme, who had shown a proud spirit in their disputes and had reproached Salome's family with their low birth. Herod, who had always felt a burning love for Mariamme, was at once violently disturbed and was scarcely able to bear his jealousy, but he had enough control of himself all this time not to do ^a anything rash because of his love. But goaded by his intense emotion and jealousy, he privately questioned Mariamme about her relations with Joseph. As she denied everything on oath and in her defence said everything that could possibly be said by a woman who had done no wrong, the king gradually let himself be persuaded and got over his anger, and being overcome by his fondness for his wife, he actually apologized for seeming to believe what he had heard. He freely admitted his gratitude for her modest behaviour and he acknowledged how fond of her and how devoted to her he was. Finally, as is usual with lovers, they fell to weeping and to embracing one another with great intensity. But as the king continued to assure her of his feeling for her and to urge her to share this,^b Mariamme said, "It was not the act of a lover to command that if anything serious should happen to him at the hands of Antony, I should be put to death

^a In B.J. i. 441-444 Josephus relates the same story about Mariamme and Joseph except that there Mariamme too is said to have been put to death by her jealous husband. Moreover, in Ant. xv. 185-231 Josephus narrates a similar too, though not guilty of anything." When these words came out, the king became violently indignant and at once released her from his arms, crying out and tearing his hair and saying that he now had clear and damning proof of Joseph's sexual intimacy with her, for he would not have disclosed what he had been privately told if there had not been full confidence between them. Being in this state, he was near to killing his wife, but being overcome by his love for her, he restrained the impulse, though the effort was painful and difficult. He did, however, give orders for Joseph to be executed without even being admitted to see him, and he kept Alexandra in chains and under guard on the ground that she was partly to blame for all these troubles.^a

(iv. 1) ^b Meanwhile there was confusion in the affairs of Syria, for Cleopatra did not give up trying to make Antony attack all (its rulers) and to persuade him to take away the dominions of each and give them to her ; and she had a great influence over him because of his passion for her. Since she was prone to covetousness by nature, there was no lawless deed which she did not commit ; she had already caused the death by poisoning of her brother when he was only fifteen years old because she knew that he was to become king,^c and she had her sister Arsinoë killed by Antony when she was a suppliant incident involving Herod's friend Soēmus on the occasion of Herod's visits to Octavian in 30-29 B.C. The accounts in Ant. appear preferable to that in B.J. with its evident anachronisms.

Antony gives Cleopatra some parts of Syria.

^b §§ 88-107 have a partial parallel in B.J. i. 359-363.

^c This was Ptolemy XIII (surnamed Theos Philopator after his elder brother, Cleopatra's boy-husband, had mysteriously disappeared in 47 B.C.), who died soon after Cleopatra returned to Egypt from Rome in 44 B.C.

^a According to Dio Cassius, xlviii. 24. 2, Antony killed Cleopatra's ἀδελφούς after dragging them out of the temple of Artemis in Ephesus. Appian, B.C. v. 9, says that he had her sister Arsinoë killed when she was a suppliant of Artemis Leukophryene "in Miletus," an error for "Ephesus," since "Megabyzos," whom Appian there mentions as the priest of Artemis, was the official Persian name of Artemis' priest in Ephesus, as pointed out by D. Magie, Roman Rule in Asia Minor, ii. 887 note 86, 1279 note 5.

^b The infinitive "to satisfy" is conjecturally supplied from the Latin.

at the temple of Artemis in Ephesus.^a For the sake of any money which there was the slightest hope of getting, both temples and tombs were violated. No sacred place was considered so inviolable that it did not have its furnishings removed and there was no secular place that did not suffer every kind of forbidden treatment so long as it was likely to satisfy ^b to the full the greed of this wicked woman. In sum, nothing was enough by itself for this extravagant woman, who was enslaved by her appetites, so that the whole world failed to satisfy the desires of her imagination.^c That was why she continually prodded Antony to take away the possessions of others and give them to her. And when she passed through Syria with him, she thought of ways to get it into her possession. She therefore accused Lysanias, the son of Ptolemaeus, of bringing in the Parthians against the interests of the (Roman) government,^d and had him killed. She also asked Antony for Judaea and Arabia, requesting him to take them away from their royal rulers.^e Now Antony was so much dominated by this woman, as it happened, that it seemed as if he obeyed her every wish not only because of his intimacy with her but also because of

^c The meaning is not quite clear; possibly the text means "she imagined that she lacked everything if she lacked anything that she desired."

^a This was in 40 b.c., when Lysanias was allied with Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, see Ant. xiv. 330-333. Lysanias was ruler of Chalcis or Ituraea, a small territory E. of Mt. Hermon and S. of Damascus. According to Plutarch and Dio Cassius (see above, § 79 note a) Lysanias was killed in 36 b.c., while Josephus makes it appear that Lysanias was killed in 34 b.c., see above, § 80 note b.

being under the influence of drugs. The openness of her wrongdoing, however, made him feel ashamed and kept him from being so obliging as to commit the most serious crimes. And so, in order not to refuse her altogether or openly to appear wicked by carrying out all her orders, he took away some parts of either's ^a territory and presented them to her. He also gave her the cities between the Eleutherus River and Egypt ^b with the exception of Tyre and Sidon, which he knew to have been free from the time of their ancestors, although she earnestly pleaded that they be given to her.^c

(2) After obtaining these grants and escorting Antony as far as the Euphrates on his expedition against Armenia,^d Cleopatra returned and stopped in Apamea and Damascus. She then went on to Judaea, where Herod met her and leased from her those parts of Arabia that had been given to her and also the revenues of the region about Jericho.^e This country bears balsam, which is the most precious thing there and grows there alone,^f and also palm trees, which are both numerous and excellent.^g Being in this situation and having Herod's company very often, Cleopatra attempted to have sexual relations with the king, for she was by nature used to enjoying this kind of pleasure without disguise. haps, too, she really felt some measure of passion for him or, what is more probable, she was secretly arranging that any violence which might be done her should be the beginning of a trap for him. In short, she gave the appearance of being overcome by desire. But Herod had for a long while been far from friendly to Cleopatra, knowing how vicious she was to everyone, and at this time he had reason to think her particularly contemptible if it was through lust that she went so far ; and if she was making such advances in order to trap him,^a he would have to hurt her before she could hurt him. He therefore evaded ^b her proposals and took counsel with his friends whether he should kill her while he had her in his power. In this way, he said, he would rid of many evils all those to whom she had already been vicious or was likely to be in future. At the same time, he argued, this would be a boon to Antony, for not even to him would she show loyalty if some occasion or need should compel him to ask for it. But his friends prevented him from acting upon this plan. In the first place they pointed out that it was not worth his while to incur the very obvious danger of this serious step, and they also urgently begged him not to act impulsively. Antony, they said, would not tolerate such action even though one were to place its advantages before his very eyes ; for one thing, his love would flame up the more fiercely if he thought that she had been taken from him by violence and treachery, and, for another, no excuse could appear reasonable for making an attempt against a woman who held the greatest position of those living at that time. As for the benefit from it, if any such might be thought to exist, it would be viewed together with his reckless disregard of Antony's attitude. Such a course, it was not hard to see, would bring a host of unending ^a evils upon his throne and his family. Moreover, it lay open to him to avoid the sin to which she was inviting him and to deal with the situation in a respectable way. By frightening him with such arguments and making plain to him the danger which would probably result from his attempt, they kept him from carrying it out. Instead, he courted Cleopatra with gifts and escorted her on the way to Egypt.

(3) When Antony had seized Armenia,^b he sent off Artabazes,^c the son of Tigranes, a prisoner to Egypt with his sons and satraps, making Cleopatra a present of them and of all the trappings which he had captured with their kingdom. And Artabazes' eldest son Artaxias,^d who had escaped at the time, became king of Armenia. Then Archelaus^e and Nero Caesar^f expelled him and restored his younger brother Tigranes^g to the throne. But these things happened later.

patra for the land given her by Antony, Herod fulfilled his contract, since he thought it would be unsafe to give her any reason to hate him. And the Arab king, for whose payment of the tribute Herod had taken responsibility, continued for some time to send him the two hundred talents, but eventually he became refractory and was slow in making the payments. Indeed, he could hardly be made to settle even some portion of his obligation, and not even that did he see fit to give without withholding part of it.^a

(v. 1)^b Since the Arab king^c was being refractory in this way and finally refused any longer to do what he was rightly supposed to, Herod got ready to march against him but made the Roman war an occasion of delay. As the battle of Actium was expected, which, as it happened, took place in the hundred and eighty-seventh Olympiad,^d when Caesar was to contest with Antony for the empire of the world, Herod, whose country had been yielding him rich crops for a long time, having procured revenues and resources, enrolled an auxiliary force for Antony and furnished it with the most carefully chosen equipment. Antony, however, said that he had no need of his help and ordered him to march against the Arab king, of whose disloyalty he had heard from both Herod and Cleopatra. Now Cleopatra had requested this, thinking that it would be to her profit if either of the two kings were to be weakened by the other. When this order came to him from Antony, Herod turned back and kept his army together with the intention of invading Arabia immediately. And after equipping a force of cavalry and infantry, he came to Diospolis,^a where the Arabs met him, for his war-measures had not escaped their notice. A fierce battle took place, and the Jews were victorious. But afterwards a large army of Arabs gathered at Kanata,^b which is a region in Coele Syria,^c and Herod, who had been informed of this in advance, came to meet them with the largest part of his force. When he drew near them, he decided to camp in a favourable spot^b and to put up a palisade as a vantage-point from which to make his attack. But as he was arranging this, the multitude of Jews clamoured for him to end the delay and lead them against the Arabs. What spurred them on was their confidence in being well organized; and the most eager of them were those who had been victorious in the first battle and had not even allowed their adversaries to fight hand to hand. Because of the uproar and the great zeal which they showed, the king decided to exploit the eagerness of his men, and after telling them that he would not be outdone by them in manly fighting, he armed himself and led them out, all of them following in their appropriate positions. Consternation quickly seized the Arabs, for after a brief resistance they saw that the Jews were unbeatable and full of spirit, and so most of them avoided battle and fled. And they would have been destroyed if Athenion had not attacked Herod and the Jews. He was one of Cleopatra's generals, in charge of her forces there, and was at odds with Herod. As he watched the action, he was not unprepared for its outcome, for he had made up his mind to remain inactive if the Arabs performed brilliantly, but if they were defeated, as they actually were, to attack the Jews with a force of his own that he had prepared from the natives of the region who had joined him. He then unexpectedly fell upon the Jews, who were weary and imagined themselves victorious, and he slaughtered a great many of them.^a For since the Jews had spent all their ardour on their declared enemies and were enjoying their victory without thought of danger, they were quickly beaten by their assailants and suffered great losses on ground which was stony and unsuitable for horses and more familiar to those who attacked them.^b And while the Jews were in this bad situation, the Arabs regained confidence, returned and killed them after their rout. ^b According to B.J. i. 369, this calamity was brought upon Herod "by the insubordination of his officers."

^a Reckoning from the effective beginning of Herod's reign in 37 B.C., see Ant. xv. 63 note a.

^b Apparently the earthquake occurred in the spring of 31 B.C., several months before the battle of Actium in September of that year. But it is dated in the spring of 30 B.C.

found shelter in their camp. Then King Herod in despair of the outcome of the battle rode off to get aid but in spite of his haste he was not quick enough in bringing help, and the Jews' camp was taken. But the Arabs were exceedingly fortunate in winning so unexpected a victory and one which had been far from their grasp, and in destroying a large part of the enemy's force. From then on Herod resorted to brigandage and overran many parts of the Arabs' territory, which he damaged in his raids. Camping in the mountains and always avoiding open battle, he still did considerable damage by his incessant and energetic movements, and he was also very careful of his own men, using every means to make good his losses.

(2) Meanwhile the battle of Actium took place between Caesar and Antony, in the seventh year of Herod's reign,^a and there was an earthquake in Judaea, such as had not been seen before, which caused great destruction of the cattle throughout the country.^b The earthquake in Judaea. Herod decides to address the people.

And about thirty thousand persons also perished in the ruins of their houses, but the army, which lived by Schwartz, apud Otto, p. 49, and the same date is assumed by Judah Goldin, Journal of Religion, 26 (1946), 270, who believes that it influenced Hillel in ruling that the paschal lamb may be offered on the Sabbath, whereas the priests feared that the people could not afford it during a Sabbatical year, since Goldin further assumes that a Sabbatical year had begun in the autumn of 31 B.C. If, however, the reckoning of Sabbatical years adopted in this translation is correct (see Ant. xii. 278 note a, xiii. 234 note b, xiv. 475 note a), the Sabbatical year in question began in the autumn of 30 B.C. For the archaeological evidence of this earthquake at the site of the Essene settlement near the Dead Sea in Wady Qumran see James Kelso, "The Archaeology of Qumran," Journal of Biblical Literature, 74 (1955), 141-147.

^a Herod's speech here, §§ 127-146, reads differently from that in B.J. i. 373-379, of which Thackeray notes ad loc. that in the open, was not at all harmed by this calamity. When the Arabs learned of it—what had happened had been reported in a form that went beyond the truth by some persons who tried to please their hearers in their hatred (of the Jews)—, they became over-confident in the belief that the enemy's land was in ruins and his men destroyed, for now, they thought, there was no longer anything to stand against them. And they seized and killed the envoys of the Jews, who had come to make peace with them as a result of these events, and with great eagerness they marched against their camp. The Jews did not withstand their attack, for they were discouraged by their misfortunes and gave up their cause as lost. And they were in the greatest despair, since they had no hope either of getting to be on equal terms after their defeats in earlier battles or of getting help (from abroad) with their affairs at home in such bad condition. In this state of things the king tried to give his commanders confidence in a speech and sought to raise their fallen spirits. Having first made an impression upon some of the better men and given them courage, he then ventured to address the majority, which he had hesitated to do before in the fear of finding them recalcitrant because of their reverses. And so he exhorted the masses, speaking in these terms.

in some respects it recalls Pericles' speech in Thucydides ii. 60 ff. The present version also contains Thucydidean echoes (esp. from ii. 45 ff., 51 ff.), such as φθόρον ἐποίησεν in § 121, ἀθύμως . . . προτίεντο in § 125, οὐκ ἐπιζήμιον in § 134 (cf. Thuc. i. 32) and τὸ εὑψυχον in § 141. Both versions, however, contain the same general themes of hope for victory with God's help and condemnation of the Arabs' barbarity.

we have met many obstacles in our undertakings, and in such circumstances it is not likely that even men of superior prowess will keep up their courage. But since we are pressed to fight and nothing that has happened is so bad that it cannot be made good by one action well performed, I propose to encourage you and at the same time show you how you can keep your proper spirit. But first I wish to speak of the war and to prove that we are justly fighting one into which we have been forced by the outrageous acts of our opponents, for if you understand this, it will be the greatest cause of zeal on your part. Next I wish to point out that there is nothing to fear in our situation and that we have every reason to hope for victory. I will begin with the first point and make you the witnesses of what I say, for you surely know how lawless the Arabs are and how faithlessly they also deal with all other nations, as is to be expected of a barbarous people without any conception of God. But it is chiefly with us that they have come into conflict because of their greed and envy, biding their time so as to take sudden advantage of our confusion. But why should I speak at length? I need only ask who (but we) freed them from fear when they were in danger of losing their autonomy and becoming slaves of Cleopatra. For it was my friendship with Antony and his goodwill toward us that were the reason why these Arabs did not suffer irreparable harm, since Antony was careful not to take any measure that might seem suspect to us. When, however, it was his wish to present certain parts of both our dominions to Cleopatra, it was I who managed this too, and by giving him many gifts from my private means, I obtained security for both of us. I myself assumed the costs, giving him two hundred talents and becoming surety for another two hundred, which went toward her revenue, but of this sum we ourselves have been cheated by these Arabs. And yet no one had a right to expect the Jews to pay tribute for their possessions to anyone ^a or to give up a portion of their land. And even if it were, we should at least (not have been expected to pay) on behalf of these men whom we ourselves have saved. Nor should the Arabs, after making a bargain, wrong us by cheating us of a sum which they originally regarded as a concession and favour,^b especially when we are not their enemies but their friends. For if indeed there is room for good faith even toward one's greatest enemies, it must surely be most necessary to keep faith with one's friends. But that is not the case with these men, who suppose that gain is best and to be got by any means, and that there is no harm in acting unjustly if only gain can be got thereby. Is there then any question in your minds whether we should punish these unjust men, especially when God wishes this and always exhorts us to hate arrogance and injustice, and when, too, we are carrying on a war that is not only just but also necessary? For those things which are admitted by both Greeks and barbarians to be most lawless, these men have done to our envoys and have cut their throats, although the Greeks have declared heralds ^c to be which ought to give us greater hopes? And how can we possibly be terrified by men who are beaten every time they fight in an honest way, and if they seem to win, achieve this only by unjust means? But even if someone thinks them heroic, how could we possibly fail to be spurred to greater efforts by this very thought? For a stout heart is shown not by attacking those who are weaker but by being able to conquer even those who are stronger. But if any should be terrified by our own sufferings and the effects of the earthquake, he should first of all bear in mind that this very situation is deceiving the Arabs, who have assumed that things are worse than they actually are, and in the second place that it is unseemly that we should be cowardly for the same reason for which they are daring. For these men get their stoutness of heart not from any good quality of their own but merely from the hopes which they base on the belief that we have already been exhausted by our misfortunes, and if we go out against them, we shall take from them their overconfidence and at the same time regain the advantage of fighting against men who have become discouraged. For we have not been so badly hurt nor is what has happened to us a sign of God's wrath, as some believe. These things are only accidents and casual misfortunes; and if they have been inflicted in accordance with God's will, it is clear that they have also come to an end in accordance with His will, after His being satisfied with what has happened. For if He had wished to harm us still more, He would not have changed His mind.^a That He wishes this war to be carried on and knows it to be a just one He Himself has made clear, for though numbers of persons throughout the country were killed by the earthquake, no one in the armed forces suffered any harm, and you were all unhurt. Thus God has made it plain that even if you had taken the field in a mass with your children and wives, the net result would have been your escaping irreparable misfortune. Bearing in mind these things and—what is more important—that you have God as your protector at all times, go out with justice and manliness to attack men who are unjust to friendship, truce-violators in battle, sacrilegious toward envoys and always unequal to your prowess."

(4) After hearing this speech the Jews began to be in much better spirits for the battle. Then Herod performed the customary sacrifices,^a and moving in haste, led them against the Arabs. Crossing the river Jordan, he encamped near the enemy^b but thought it wise to seize the fortress that lay between them, for he thought that in this way he would have the advantage, either by joining battle more quickly or, if it should be necessary to postpone it, by having a fortified camp prepared for him. But since the Arabs had the same thing in mind, a contest began for the place. At first there was only skirmishing, but as they closed in, more and more fell on either side until those from the Arab camp were beaten

^a i.e. Herod asked the priests of the temple in Jerusalem to offer sacrifice.

^b According to B.J. i. 380, Herod encamped in the neighbourhood of Philadelphia = the biblical Rabbath Ammon and the modern 'Ammān (capital of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan).

and withdrew.^a This at once contributed not a little to raising the hopes of the Jews, and when Herod observed that the enemy's force would rather have done anything than go into battle, he attempted the more boldly to break down their palisades and to get nearer to their camp and attack it. When they were forced out by these means, they advanced in disorder and without the slightest eagerness or hope of victory.^b They fought hand to hand, however, because they were more numerous and also because they were led by necessity to act with reckless speed.^c And there followed a stubborn battle, in which not a few fell on either side.^d But finally the Arabs were routed and began to flee; and so great was the slaughter when they gave way that they were not only killed by the enemy but also contributed to their own misfortunes, being trampled by the multitude of those rushing along in disorder, and falling upon their own weapons. At least five thousand of them were left dead. And while the rest of their number succeeded in reaching the shelter of their palisades, they had no sure hope of being saved, because of their lack of provisions, especially water. And the Jews pursued them but did not succeed in entering their camp with them, and so they surrounded their breastworks and kept watch over them, preventing from entering any who came to help them, and preventing from leaving those who wanted to flee.

(5) Being in this (difficult) situation, the Arabs sent envoys to Herod, first to discuss a truce, and next, since their thirst was pressing, offering to accept any condition whatever so long as they might obtain safety for the moment. But Herod refused to accept the envoys or a ransom ^a for the prisoners or any other moderate terms because he was grimly intent upon taking vengeance for the lawless acts committed by them against the Jews. And so, being compelled by a number of things, especially their thirst, they came forward and handed themselves over to be led away in chains. In the course of five days the number of those who were taken prisoner in this way was four thousand, and on the sixth day all the rest decided to sally out in a warlike attack upon their adversaries, choosing to make this attempt, even if they should have to suffer disaster, rather than be ingloriously destroyed a few at a time. With this intention they came out from behind their palisades but were unable to make a fight because, being afflicted in body and soul, they had no chance to battle with glory, and so they counted it a gain to die and a misfortune to live. In the terrible ^b battle some seven ^c thousand of them fell. After suffering such a blow they lost the spirit of confidence which they had had before, but they admired the qualities

^a Or “protector.” Otto, p. 50, suggests that the statement may be “pure invention” or that possibly Josephus has misunderstood a technical term of Hellenistic political usage. Momigliano, in CAH x. 325 note 2, observes that the precise meaning of the term προστάτης here is obscure. A parallel to the meaning “ruler” occurs in B.J. i. 633, where Augustus is referred to as προστάτης τῆς οἰκουμένης (see also Ant. xii. 161 note d). For parallels to the meaning “protector” in a non-political or only semi-political sense see Ant. xiv. 157, of leadership which Herod showed in the midst of his own reverses, and thereafter they submitted to him and proclaimed him ruler ^a of their nation. And so, thinking himself entitled to take great pride in his successes, Herod returned home, having acquired new prestige from this brave exploit.

(vi. 1) ^b Now while things went well for Herod in other respects, since he was unassailable on every side, he did find himself in danger threatening his whole power as a result of Caesar's victory over Antony in the battle of Actium.^c For at that time his situation seemed desperate both to Herod himself and to the enemies and friends around him as well, since it appeared unlikely that he would remain free from punishment for the great friendship which he had formed with Antony.^d His friends, therefore, gave up hope for him, while those who were hostile to him appeared outwardly to share his trouble but secretly experienced a feeling of pleasure at the prospect of having a change for the better. And Herod himself, seeing that Hyrcanus was the only one left of royal rank, thought it would be to his advantage not to let him stand as an obstacle any longer. He believed that, if, on the one hand, he were to survive and escape danger, it would be safest not to have a man who was worthier than himself of obtaining the kingship wait to seize his opportunity at such a time of difficulty for himself^a; if, on the other hand, he were to suffer death at Caesar's hand, he wished because of envy to remove the only man who might succeed him as king.

(2) While he was occupied with these thoughts, an opportunity was given him by his opponents. Now Hyrcanus because of his mild character did not choose either then or at any other time to take part in public affairs or start a revolution, and he submitted to Fortune and appeared to be pleased with whatever she brought about.^b But Alexandra^c was aggressive, and being undiscourageably hopeful of a change, she kept telling her father that he ought not forever to put up with Herod's lawless treatment of their family but move betimes to secure the safety of their future hopes. And she begged him to write of this matter to Malchus, who was ruler of the Arabs,^d and ask him to receive them^e and lead them to safety. For, she said, if they got away and things turned out badly for Herod, as was likely in view of Caesar's enmity to him, they would be the only candidates for the royal power both because of their lineage and because of the goodwill of the masses toward them. But though she tried to persuade him in this way, Hyrcanus rejected her arguments. Since, however, she had an aggressive and very womanly nature and did not leave off either night or day but always kept speaking to him about this matter and about Herod's treacherous designs against them, he finally let himself be persuaded to give to Dositheüs, one of his friends, a letter in which it was arranged that the Arab should send him some horsemen who were to take them and escort them to Lake Asphaltitis,^a which is three hundred^b stades^c from the borders of Jerusalem. Now he had faith in Dositheüs because he was devoted both to himself and to Alexandra and had no slight reasons for being an enemy of Herod, for he was a relative of Joseph, whom the king had slain,^d and a brother of the men who had earlier been murdered at Tyre by Antony.^e These considerations, however, did not induce Dositheüs to be faithful in serving Hyrcanus, and since he counted on hopes of greater reward from the king than from Hyrcanus, he handed the letter over to Herod. The king expressed satisfaction with his loyalty but urged him to do him the further service of folding and sealing the letter and taking it to Malchus, and to bring back a letter from him, for, he said, it was of great importance for him to know how Malchus felt. This service Dositheüs willingly performed. And the Arab ruler wrote in reply that he would receive both Hyrcanus himself and all his party and as many of the Jews as sympathized with his cause, and that he would send a force to bring them in safety, and Hyrcanus would lack nothing for which he asked. When Herod received this letter, he immediately sent for Hyrcanus and questioned him about the agreements which he had made with Malchus. When the other denied having made any, Herod showed the letters to the Council^a and had the man put to death.^b

(3) We have written about these matters as they are found in the Memoirs^c of King Herod. But other sources do not agree with this account, for they hold that it was not for such reasons that Herod killed Hyrcanus but rather that he did so after bringing charges against him which were invented with characteristic trickery. Their account is as follows. Once, while they were at a banquet, Herod, without giving Hyrcanus any ground for suspicion, put the question to him whether he had received any letters from Malchus, and when Hyrcanus admitted having received greeting-cards from him, he asked also whether he had taken any gift from him, and the other replied that he had received nothing more than four beasts for riding, which Malchus had sent him. This act Herod construed as evidence of bribetaking and treason, and ordered the man to be strangled.^a And as proof that it was without committing any crime that he came to such an end they specify his mildness of character and the fact that not even in his youth did he give any sign of boldness or recklessness nor yet when he himself had royal power,^b but even then yielded the greatest part of the administration to Antipater. Then, too, he was at this time eighty-one years old^c and knew that Herod was altogether secure in his rule. Moreover, when he crossed the Euphrates and left behind on the other side of the river those who held him in honour, it was to put himself wholly in Herod's power. It is therefore most unlikely and out of keeping with his nature, they say, that he should have attempted anything like revolution, and these charges were a pretext invented by Herod.

(4) This, then, was the way in which Hyrcanus The character of was fated to end his life after experiencing a lifetime of diverse and varied fortunes. ^b According to this reckoning Hyrcanus II would have been born c. 110 B.C. But his parents, Alexander Jannaeus and Salome Alexandra, had been married sometime after 103 B.C., when Salome's first husband died. Hyrcanus therefore was in his early seventies when he was executed, as was pointed out by Wellhausen in his Israelitische und jüdische Geschichte (8th ed., p. 307 note 2).

on the death of his mother he held it for three months, but was driven from it by his brother Aristobulus. When it was restored to him later by Pompey, he received all his honours back and continued to enjoy them for forty years more.^a But he was deprived of them a second time by Antigonus, mutilated in body, and taken prisoner by the Parthians. From their country he returned to his own land some time later because of the hopes held out to him by Herod, but none of these was fulfilled in accordance with his expectations, after he had experienced much suffering in his lifetime. But what was most painful of all, as we have said before, was that in his old age he came to an unworthy end. For he seems to have been mild and moderate in all things and to have ruled by leaving most things for his administrators to do, since he was not interested in general affairs nor clever enough to govern a kingdom. That Antipater and Herod advanced so far was due to his mildness, and what he experienced at their hands in the end was neither just nor an act of piety.

(5) And so, after getting Hyrcanus out of the way, Herod hastened to Caesar, and not being able to hope that any favour would be shown to his cause because of his past friendship with Antony, he held Alexandra in suspicion, fearing that she would seize the opportunity to cause the people to revolt and bring factional strife into the government of the kingdom. And he entrusted all his affairs to his brother Pheroras, and placed his mother Cyprus and his sister and all his children in Masada,^a and instructed (Pheroras) to take charge of the government if they heard any bad news about him. As for his wife Mariamme—since it was impossible for her to live in the same place because of the quarrel between her and his mother and sister,—he placed her in Alexandreion ^b with her mother Alexandra, leaving in charge there his steward Joseph ^c and Soēmus the Ituraean, who from the beginning had been most faithful to him and on this occasion were left to keep the women under surveillance under the pretext of showing them honour. And they, too, were given instructions that if they learned that anything bad had happened to him, they were to dispose of both women at once and do everything in their power to preserve the kingdom for his sons together with his brother Pheroras.

(6) ^d Having given these instructions, he himself hastened to Rhodes to meet Caesar. And when his ship arrived at the city, he removed his diadem but did not leave off anything else that belonged to his rank.^e And when, on meeting (Caesar), he was permitted to converse with him, he showed still more

^b Mod. Qarn Sarṭabeh, c. 3 miles S.W. of the confluence of the Jabbok and Jordan Rivers; cf. Ant. xiii. 417 note c.

^c The name Joseph may possibly be due to a confusion with Herod's brother-in-law Joseph, the husband of Salome, with whom Herod supposedly had left Mariamme on an earlier occasion, the meeting with Antony described above in §§ 65-87.

^d §§ 187-201 are parallel to B.J. i. 387-395.

^e According to B.J. i. 387, Herod appeared before Octavian “without a diadem, a commoner in dress and bearing but with the proud spirit of a king.” Here the text seems to mean that Herod did wear royal insignia except for the diadem, but perhaps it is merely his bearing that is referred to. The meeting with Octavian took place in the spring of 30 b.c.

fully the greatness of his spirit by neither turning to supplication, as would have been natural in the circumstances, nor offering a petition as if in acknowledgment of transgression; instead, he gave an account of what he had done, and this without making excuses for himself.^a For he told Caesar that he had had the greatest friendship for Antony and had done everything in his power to bring control of affairs into his hands. He had not, to be sure, taken part in his campaign because he had been distracted therefrom by the Arabs, but he had sent him money and grain though these were more modest contributions than he ought to have made. For when a man acknowledges himself to be another's friend and knows that friend to be his benefactor, he ought to share his danger by risking every bit of his soul and body and substance. In this he had behaved less well than he ought but in one respect at least he was conscious of having done well, namely in not having abandoned Antony after his defeat in the battle of Actium and in not shifting his hopes when Antony's fortune was clearly changing. Instead, he had continued to show himself, if not a valuable fellow-fighter, at least a very skilful ^b adviser to Antony, to whom he had suggested that the only way to save himself and not lose his power was to do away with Cleopatra. "For," he said, "if she had first been got out of the way, it would have been possible for him to keep his power, and he would have found it easier to come to an understanding

^a Or possibly "without fear of punishment." In B.J. Herod's speech is given entirely in direct discourse. Otto, p. 50, expresses strong doubt about the truthfulness of Herod's statements as reported by Josephus.

 Antony was questionable in view of the reference below to with you than remain at enmity. But he paid no attention to any of these suggestions, and preferred his own lack of prudence, which was as unprofitable for him as it was beneficial to you. If now in your anger at Antony you also condemn my zeal (in his cause), I will not deny that I have acted in this way nor will I be ashamed to speak openly of my loyalty to him. But if you disregard the outward appearance ^a and examine how I behave toward my benefactors and what sort of friend I am, you can find out about me from what you learn concerning my past actions. For with merely a change in name the very ideal of firm friendship,^b as exemplified in me, will no less fully win approval."

(7) By such words and by his general behaviour he showed his freedom of soul, and greatly attracted Caesar, who was honourable and generous, so that the acts which had caused charges to be brought against Herod now served to form the basis of Caesar's goodwill toward him. He then restored his diadem to him, at the same time urging him to show himself no less a friend to him than he had formerly been to Antony. He also bestowed all sorts of honours upon him, adding that Quintus Didius ^c had written that Herod had most zealously supported him in the matter of the gladiators. Having been Didius who, as governor of Syria, intercepted the gladiators who had been trained for Antony at Cyzicus and had been sent to help him after the battle of Actium.

^a Josephus here anticipates the account of Octavian's visit to Egypt given below in § 199.

^b The mss. here have "Alexander" but the parallel in B.J. i. 393 correctly gives "Alexas"; cf. Plutarch, Antony 72, who writes that Alexas, a friend of Antony and tool of Cleopatra, had been sent to dissuade Herod from deserting granted so favourable a reception and seeing his throne restored to him more firmly than ever beyond his hopes by the gift of Caesar and the decree of the Romans, which Caesar had obtained for him in the interest of his security, he escorted him on his way to Egypt, giving him and his friends more costly presents than he could afford and showing the utmost generosity.^a He also requested that Alexas,^b one of Antony's close friends, should not suffer the penalty of death,^c but this request was refused since Caesar was already bound by an oath. Then he returned to Judaea with even greater honour and freedom of action, thereby causing consternation among those who had expected the contrary, for it seemed as if he were one who by the kindness of God always achieved more brilliant success in the midst of danger.^d And so he at once prepared for the reception of Caesar, who was about to invade Egypt from Syria. And when Caesar arrived, Herod received him at Ptolemais with all royal attendance^e and furnished his army with gifts of welcome and an abundance of provisions. He was also counted among the loyalest friends of Caesar, with whom he would ride along as he reviewed his forces, and he lodged him and his friends in a hundred and fifty apartments,^f which were all appointed with rich magnificence for their comfort. And when they were crossing the desert, but was himself persuaded to desert to Octavian. He was, however, put to death by Octavian while Antony was still alive, in spite of Herod's plea for him.

^a Lit. "anything fatal."

^c The following narrative concerning Herod's jealousy of

he supplied them lavishly with things urgently needed, so that they lacked neither wine^a nor water, which was even more of a necessity for the soldiers. As for Caesar himself, Herod made him a present of eight hundred talents and thereby gave everyone the idea that he was making a show of greater and more splendid service than the kingdom which he possessed could afford.^b This caused Caesar to have even greater faith in his loyalty and devotion, and what brought particular credit to Herod was that he had suited his generosity to the needs of the moment. And when they returned from Egypt, he appeared no less ready to serve than he had been on the first occasion.

For being persuaded—as it was natural to suspect—that they had been placed in that fortress^d not for the safety of their persons but to be in custody and without any authority over others or themselves, they were angry. And Mariamme considered the king's love to be a pretence and a sham especially meant for his own advantage. She was also vexed by the thought that because of him she would not have any hope of remaining alive even if he suffered grave harm. And she recalled the instructions which had been given to Joseph,^e so that she now began to court the favour of her guards, especially Soēmus, whom she knew to be in full charge. Now at first Soēmus was faithful (to the king) and neglected none of the instructions given him by Herod, but after the women had persistently wooed him with words and gifts, he gradually began to yield, and finally he disclosed all the king's instructions, chiefly because he did not expect that Herod would return with the same authority (as he had before). In so doing he was especially mindful of the probability that he would escape danger from the king and also greatly please the women, who, it was natural to suppose, would not lose their present rank but would improve their position either by becoming sovereigns themselves or by being close to the sovereign. Nor did he take less hope ^a from the thought that even if Herod returned with everything arranged as he had planned, he would not be able to gainsay any of his wife's wishes, for Soēmus knew that the king's love for Mariamme was beyond all reason. It was these considerations that induced him to disclose his instructions. Mariamme heard them with resentment, wondering whether there would never be an end of the danger ^b threatening her from Herod, and in her resentful state she prayed that he would not obtain favourable treatment (from Caesar), for in her judgment life with him would be intolerable if he should succeed. And this she later showed clearly, for she did not conceal any of her inner feelings.

(2) Now when Herod returned from his sea-voyage^a after achieving greater success than he had hoped for, he naturally brought the good news to his wife first of all, and because of his love for her and the intimacy between them he singled her out from all others to embrace her. But when he told her of the good time^b he had had, she was actually more depressed than happy, and it was also impossible for her to conceal her feelings. Instead, because of her disesteem^c (of him) and the superiority of her birth she groaned aloud at his embrace, and she made it plain that she was more displeased than pleased by his reports, so that it was not merely his suspicion but the obvious fact (of her dislike) that greatly disturbed Herod. For he was dismayed to see that his wife's unreasonable hatred of him was unconcealed, and he was grieved by this fact, but being unable to control his love, he did not long remain either angry or reconciled but kept passing from one extreme to the other and in either case was in great suspense. And though he was caught between hate^d and love and was often ready to retaliate for her disdain, still, because of the hold which she already had on his feelings, he had not the strength to put the woman away. In sum, though he would gladly have punished her, he was afraid that if she died he would unwittingly inflict greater punishment (upon himself than) upon her.^e

^b There may be some confusion here about Herod's visits to Octavian at Rhodes (see above, §§ 187 ff.) and in Egypt, as some scholars believe, but note that below, in § 217, Josephus says that Herod met Octavian in Egypt as "an

(3) When his sister and mother saw that he felt this way about Mariamme, they thought it an excellent opportunity to satisfy their hatred of her, and they provoked Herod's anger against her by continually spreading serious slanders about her, which would be likely to fill him with hatred and jealousy at the same time. And he was neither unwilling to listen to such statements nor courageous enough to take any action against his wife through belief in them. However, he became more and more hostile toward her, and each of them was incensed against the other, for she, on the one hand, would not conceal her feelings about him, while he, on the other hand, continually changed from love to anger. And some irreparable harm would soon have been done to her if the news had not just then come that Caesar had won the war and with the death of Antony and Cleopatra ^a was in possession of Egypt. Herod thereupon hastened to meet Caesar and left affairs at home just as they were.^b But as he was leaving, Mariamme brought Soēmus to him and acknowledged her gratitude for the care which he had given her, and asked that the governorship of a district ^c be given him by the king. This office Soēmus obtained. And when Herod came to Egypt,^d he began to discuss matters with Caesar with greater freedom, as an old friend, and was granted very great favours. For example, Caesar presented him with the four hundred Gauls who had been Cleopatra's bodyguards, and gave him back the territory which had been taken

(4) On obtaining these possessions Herod became still more renowned. And he escorted Caesar on the way to Antioch, and then returned home. But the more he believed himself to be increasingly successful in external affairs, so much the more did he fail in domestic affairs, especially in his marriage, in which he had formerly seemed to be so fortunate. For the love which he felt for Mariamme was no less intense than those justly^d celebrated in story. As for her, she was in most respects prudent and faithful to him but she had in her nature something that was at once womanly and cruel, and she took full advantage of his enslavement to passion. Since she did not take into account that she was subject to the king and that he was her master, as would have been proper under the circumstances,^e she frequently treated him with arrogance. He for his part pretended to take this lightly^f and bore it with self-restraint and patience. But she openly jeered at both his mother and his sister for their low birth and reviled them, so that for some time there had been dissension and implacable hatred among the women, but at this particular time even more serious slanders were spread. And the suspicion which was thereby “ “ Storm ” is a free rendering.

^b One ms. and the Epitome have “ grandfather,” probably a correction of an original slip on Josephus’ part. The reference is, of course, to Mariamme’s grandfather, Hyrcanus (see above, § 173), and not to her father, Alexander, who was nourished extended for the space of a year from the time when Herod returned from his visit to Caesar. Finally, however, the storm ^a which had long been kept under control burst upon them on the following occasion. One noon the king lay down to rest and out of the great fondness which he always had for her called for Mariamme. And so she came but she did not lie down (with him) in spite of his urging. Instead, she expressed contempt for him and bitterly reproached him for having killed both her father ^b and her brother. ^c And when he showed resentment of her arrogance and was about to do something rash, the king's sister Salome, who perceived how greatly he was disturbed, sent his butler, who had long before been prepared for this, and ordered him to say that Mariamme had tried to persuade him to help her prepare a love-potion for the king. And (she said) if Herod should be disturbed and ask what it was, (he should reply that he did not know),^d for Mariamme had poured ^e the drug while he had (merely) been requested to serve it. But (she said) if Herod were not excited over the love-potion, he should let the matter drop, for it would not involve him in any danger. Having given him these instructions in advance, she sent him in to speak to Herod on that occasion. And so he went in obediently ^f executed in 49 B.C. by the proconsul of Syria at the order of Pompey (Ant. xiv. 125) without the participation of Herod.

^c This was the young high priest Aristobulus, treacherously killed by drowning at Herod's order in the autumn of 35 B.C., some five years earlier than the present events.

^a The text is probably defective here.

^e This verb is conjectured for mss. "had had." The emendation requires merely the transposition of the first two letters of the verb.

^f Or perhaps "with a plausible story."

and with alacrity, saying that Mariamme had first given him gifts and then tried to persuade him to give the love-potion to the king. When Herod showed great excitement over this and asked what the love-potion was, the butler said that it was a drug which had been given him by Mariamme and that he did not know its properties, and for that reason he had informed Herod about it, for he had decided that this was the safer course for both himself and the king. On hearing these statements Herod, who was already in an ugly mood, was even more provoked, and to learn about the drug he proceeded to torture the eunuch ^a who was most faithful to Mariamme, for he knew that it would have been impossible for her to do anything great or small without him. But in his extremity the man could not say anything about the things which he was being asked under torture. He did say, however, that the hatred which his wife felt for the king had arisen from the things which Soēmus had told her. And while he was still speaking, the king cried aloud, saying that Soēmus, who had all along been most faithful to him and his realm, would never have betrayed his instructions if he had not gone too far in his intimacy with Mariamme. And so he gave orders that Soēmus should be arrested and put to death at once, while to his wife he conceded the right to ^b a trial. Calling together those who were closest to him,^c he brought an elaborately framed accusation against her concerning the love-potions and drugs which she was alleged ^d to have prepared. Since he was intemperate in speech and too angry to judge (calmly), those who were present realized in what a state he was, and finally condemned her to death. But after sentence had been passed, it occurred both to him and to some of those present that she ought not to be done away with so hastily but be put away in one of the fortresses of the kingdom. But Salome and her friends made every effort to get rid of the poor woman, and they prevailed upon the king to do so by advising him to take precautions against the popular disturbances which would break out if she should be allowed to live. That is how Mariamme came to be led to execution.^a

(5) Alexandra, considering the situation and having small hope of escaping similar treatment from Herod, changed her attitude in very unseemly fashion to one which was the opposite of her former boldness. For in her desire to make plain her ignorance of the things with which Mariamme was charged, she sprang up and in the hearing of all the people cried out and reproached her daughter with having been wicked and ungrateful to her husband, and said that she was suffering just punishment for her reckless behaviour, for she had not properly requited the benefactor of them all. In so indecently acting a part and even daring to seize Mariamme by the hair she naturally incurred the strong disapproval of the others for her unseemly play-acting. Especially was this clear in the case of the condemned woman

^a Late in 29 B.C., if we rely upon the accuracy of Josephus' statement above in § 221 that Herod's suspicion of Mariamme lasted for a year from the time of his visit to Octavian. But according to B.J. i. 442, Mariamme was executed soon after Herod's visit to Antony, which was in 34 B.C. See Ant. xv. 87 note a.

herself, for she spoke not a single word nor did she show confusion as she watched her mother's disgusting behaviour, but in her greatness of spirit she did make it plain that she was indeed greatly distressed by her offence in behaving in this conspicuously disgraceful manner. Mariamme herself, at least, went to her death with a wholly calm demeanour and without change of colour, and so even in her last moments she made her nobility of descent very clear to those who were looking on.

(6) Thus died Mariamme, a woman unexcelled in ^{The character of} continence and in greatness of soul, though lacking in reasonableness and of too quarrelsome a nature. ^{Mariamme.} But in beauty of body and in dignity of bearing in the presence of others she surpassed her contemporaries more greatly than one can say. And this was the chief source of her failure to please the king and to live with him agreeably. For being constantly courted by him because of his love, and expecting no harsh treatment from him, she maintained an excessive freedom of speech. And since she was also distressed by what had happened to her relatives,^a she saw fit to speak to Herod of all her feelings, and finally succeeded in incurring the enmity of the king's mother and sister and his own as well, though he was the one person from whom she had mistakenly expected not to suffer any harm.

(7) But once she had been disposed of, the king's desire for her burned still more strongly, for such had been his feeling even earlier, as we have related.^b

For his love for her was not passionless nor such as arises from familiarity, but in its very earliest beginnings had been a divine madness, and even with freedom of cohabitation it was not restrained from growing greater. But now more than ever he seemed to be a prey to it as if by a kind of divine punishment for the death of Mariamme. And he would frequently call out for her and frequently utter unseemly laments. He would also devise all kinds of distraction possible, and arrange banquets and parties for himself, and yet none of these would help. And so he put aside the administration of the kingdom, and was so far overcome by his passion that he would actually order his servants to summon Mariamme as if she were still alive and able to heed them. While he was in this state there arose a pestilential disease which destroyed the greater part of the people and also the most honoured of his friends, and this caused all to suspect that their misfortune had been brought upon them by God in His anger at what had lawlessly been done to Mariamme. This, therefore, made the king himself feel worse, and finally he went off to the wilderness, where under the pretext of hunting he gave way to his suffering ; but he did not hold out for many days before he succumbed to a serious illness. This was an inflammation and pain^a in the back of his head, and the loss of his reason temporarily. And none of the remedies tried was effective enough to help him ; instead, they had the opposite effect and finally brought him to the point where his life was despaired of. And all the physicians who surrounded him, partly because the illness did not

^a The plague and Herod's illness are not mentioned in connexion with Mariamme's death in the partial parallel, B.J. i. 444. For rabbinic legends about Mariamme's execu-

yield to any of the medicines which they themselves applied, and partly because the king was in no condition to follow any regimen other than that which his illness forced upon him, thought it best to give him whatever he might be moved to ask for, thus leaving to Fortune the faint hope of his recovery, which depended upon his regimen.^a And so he suffered from this illness in Samaria, (later) called Sebaste.^b

(8) When Alexandra, who was staying in Jerusalem, learned of his condition, she made an effort to seize control of the fortified places in the city. There were two of these ; one (guarded) the city itself, and the other the temple. Whoever was master of these had the whole nation in his power, for sacrifices could not be made without (controlling) these places, and it was impossible for any of the Jews to forgo offering these, for they would rather give up their lives than the worship which they are accustomed to offer God. Alexandra therefore argued with those in charge of these defences, saying that they ought to surrender them to her and to Herod's sons lest upon Herod's death someone else should seize power before them ; and, on the other hand, if he should be restored to health, no one would guard them more securely than his nearest of kin. These arguments of hers they listened to without sympathy ; in fact, though they had been faithful (to Herod)^c before this, they now continued to be even more faithful, both because they hated Alexandra and because they considered it impious to give Herod up for lost while he was still alive. For they were old friends of the king, and one of them, Achiabus, was actually his cousin.^a They therefore immediately sent someone to inform him of Alexandra's intention, and without delay he gave orders for her to be put to death.^b As for the king himself, having barely recovered from his illness after suffering greatly, he was in an ugly mood, and being afflicted in mind and body at once, he found fault with everything and was quick to use any and every pretext to inflict punishment on those who fell into his hands. Indeed, he slew his closest friends, Costobarus,^c Lysimachus and Antipater, surnamed Gadia,^d and also Dositheüs,^e for the following reason.

(9) Costobarus^f was of Idumaean race and was one of those first in rank among them, and his ancestors had been priests of Koze,^g whom the Idumaeans believe to be a god. Now Hyrcanus^h had altered their way of life and made them adopt the customs ^f This Edomite (Idumaean) name is not listed in H. Wuthnow's Die semitischen Menschennamen in griechischen Inschriften u. Papyri d. vorderen Orients (Leipzig, 1930). It is semitized as Qozgeber by Klausner, iv. 9 notes 2, 26 on the basis of older inscriptions (which may, however, refer to a different God—Qawsı). However, it is quite possible that the form Kostobaros is a miswriting of an original Kosgarbaros, as suggested by, among others, S. A. Cook, The Religion of Ancient Palestine in the Light of Archaeology (London, 1930), pp. 203-204.

and laws of the Jews. When Herod took over royal power, he appointed Costobarus governor of Idumaea and Gaza, and gave him (in marriage) his sister Salome, after putting to death Joseph, her former husband, as we have related.^a Costobarus gladly received these favours, which were more than he had expected, and in his great elation over his good fortune he gradually exceeded all bounds. For he did not think that it was proper for him to carry out the orders of Herod, who was his ruler, or for the Idumaeans to adopt the customs of the Jews and be subject to them. And so he sent to Cleopatra, saying that Idumaea had always belonged to her ancestors and for that reason it was right that she should ask Antony for this territory. He himself, he said, was ready to transfer his loyalty to her. This he did not because he was especially pleased to be under Cleopatra's rule but because he thought that if Herod were deprived of the greater part (of his power), it would be a simple matter for him to become ruler of the Idumaeon nation and to achieve greater things. And he set no limit to his hopes, having good reason for this both in his lineage and in the wealth which he had acquired through continual and shameless profit-seeking ; and it was no small matter that he had in mind.^b Cleopatra, therefore, asked Antony for this territory, but she was refused. And when these things were reported to Herod, he was ready to kill Costobarus but at the request of his

^b The word γράμματα is also used by Josephus in Ant. iv. 253 in place of LXX βιβλίον ἀποστασίου, rendering Heb. sepher k'ritut, A.V. "bill of divorce," which the Rabbis called a get.

^c Dent. xxiv. 1 states that the bill of divorce must be issued by the husband. According to the Mishnah, Gittin ix. i-3, the essential formula of the bill of divorce is "Lo, thou art free to marry any man," but there are certain sister and mother let him go and granted him a pardon. But from that time on he always regarded him as suspect because of the attempt made then.^a

(10) Some time afterwards Salome had occasion to quarrel with Costobarus and soon sent him a document^b dissolving their marriage, which was not in accordance with Jewish law. For it is (only) the man who is permitted by us to do this, and not even a divorced woman may marry again on her own initiative unless her former husband consents.^c Salome, however, did not choose to follow her country's law but acted on her own authority and repudiated her marriage,^d telling her brother Herod that she had separated from her husband out of loyalty to Herod himself. For, she said, she had learned that her husband together with Antipater and Lysimachus and Dositheüs was planning to revolt. As proof of her charges she cited the fact that the Sons of Baba^e had been kept safe by Costobarus for a period of exceptions which some authorities recognize as valid. Louis Epstein in The Jewish Marriage Contract, trans. into Hebrew by Mosheh Maisels (New York, 1954), p. 128, concludes that "according to Jewish law the wife may not divorce her husband," i.e. take the initiative by sending him a writ. On the bearing of this passage on Mark x. 12 see Ralph Marcus, "Notes on Torrey's Translation of the Gospels," Harvard Theological Review 27 (1934), 220-221.

^a The Rabbis appear to have recognized the validity of a pagan divorce instituted by the wife through a repudium, see Boaz Cohen, "Concerning Divorce in Jewish and Roman Law," Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research 21 (1952), 3-34.

twelve years now, as was really the case.^a This news, which the king heard with surprise, made a very strong impression upon him, and he was the more disturbed because the report was so unexpected. For in the case of the Sons of Baba he had earlier made an effort to take steps against them because they were hostile in their attitude to him, but now after so long a time had passed they had quite escaped his memory. His enmity and hatred toward them had arisen from the following circumstances. When Antigonus was king ^b and Herod's force was besieging the city of Jerusalem, under the stress of the miseries which came upon the besieged many of them called upon Herod for help and were already placing their hopes in him. But the Sons of Baba, who had a high position and great influence with the masses, remained loyal to Antigonus and were always speaking ill of Herod and exhorting the people to preserve for the kings ^c the power which was theirs by birth. Such was the policy followed by these men in the belief that it was to their advantage. And when Herod was in control of things after the capture of the city, Costobarus was appointed to block the exits and guard the city in order to prevent the escape of those citizens who were in debt ^d or followed a policy of opposition to the king. Since Costobarus knew that the Sons of Baba were held in esteem and honour by all the people, and believed that by saving them

At the same time he assured Herod on oath—for a suspicion of the truth had entered the king's mind ^a—that he knew absolutely nothing about these men, and so he disposed of his misgivings. And even when the king later proclaimed a reward for information about them and devised every kind of inquiry, he did not bring himself to confess, for he was convinced that having first denied (any knowledge of them) he would not go unpunished if they were caught, and so he was bound to keep them concealed not only by loyalty (to them) but also by necessity. When the king was informed of these things by his sister, he sent (his men) to the place where they were reported to be staying, and had them kill both these men and those who were accused with them, so that none was left alive of the family of Hyrcanus,^b and the kingdom was wholly in Herod's power, there being no one of high rank to stand in the way of his unlawful acts.

(viii. 1) ^c For this reason Herod went still farther in departing from the native customs, and through foreign practices he gradually corrupted the ancient way of life, which had hitherto been inviolable. As a result of this we suffered considerable harm at a later time as well, because those things were neglected which had formerly induced piety in the family of Hyrcanus" Josephus must be thinking only of the males, since, as Schürer reminds us, i. 387 note 55, according to Ant. xvii. 92, the daughter of Antigonus was many years later married to Herod's son Antipater.

^a Schürer, i. 366 note 8, conjectures that §§ 267-298 (ch. viii) come from a different source and that originally §§ 299 ff. followed directly after § 266.

^b Remains of this theatre were discovered by Schick some seventy years ago near Wady Yasul, 850 metres S. of Jerusalem, see Palestine Exploration Fund, Quarterly Statement, 1887, pp. 161-166. Schick is thought to be in error, however, in taking these remains to be those of the amphitheatre. A masses. For in the first place he established athletic contests every fifth year ^a in honour of Caesar, and he built a theatre in Jerusalem, and after that a very large amphitheatre in the plain,^b both being spectacularly lavish but foreign to Jewish custom, for the use of such buildings and the exhibition of such spectacles have not been traditional (with the Jews). Herod, however, celebrated the quinquennial festival in the most splendid way, sending notices of it to the neighbouring peoples and inviting participants from the whole ^c nation. Athletes and other classes of contestants were invited from every land, being attracted by the hope of winning the prizes offered and by the glory of victory. And the leading men in various fields were assembled, for Herod offered very great prizes not only to the winners in gymnastic games but also to those who engaged in music and those who are called thymelikoi.^d And an effort was made to have all the most famous persons come to the contest. He also offered considerable gifts to drivers of four-horse and two-horse chariots and to those mounted on race-horses. And whatever costly or magnificent efforts had been made by others, all these did Herod imitate in his ambition to see his hippodrome, probably also built by Herod, is mentioned in Ant. xvii. 255 (parallel to B.J. ii. 44), see H. Vincent and F.-M. Abel, Jérusalem (2 vols. in 4, Paris, 1912-1926), ii. 34, pl. I. Dalman, SSW, p. 278, thinks that the amphitheatre and hippodrome were identical.

^b This protest against the trophies was the forerunner of a spectacle become famous. All round the theatre were inscriptions concerning Caesar^a and trophies of the nations which he had won in war, all of them made for Herod of pure gold and silver. As for serviceable objects, there was no valuable garment or vessel of precious stones which was not also on exhibition along with the contests. There was also a supply of wild beasts, a great many lions and other animals having been brought together for him, such as were of extraordinary strength or of very rare kinds. When the practice began of involving them in combat with one another or setting condemned men to fight against them, foreigners were astonished at the expense and at the same time entertained by the dangerous spectacle, but to the natives it meant an open break with the customs held in honour by them. For it seemed glaring impiety to throw men to wild beasts for the pleasure of other men as spectators, and it seemed a further impiety to change their established ways for foreign practices. But more than all else it was the trophies that irked them, for in the belief that these were images surrounded by weapons, which it was against their national custom to worship,^b they were exceedingly angry.

more serious protest against the Roman legionary standards introduced into Jerusalem by Pontius Pilate, see Ant. xviii. 55-59 (parallel to B.J. ii. 169-174), because of the Jews' feeling that the objects were idols. See Carl H. Kraeling, "The Episode of the Roman Standards in Jerusalem," Harvard Theological Review 35 (1942), 263-289, and A. D. Nock, "The Roman Army and the Roman Religious Year," id. 45 (1952), 187-252. In the recently discovered Dead Sea (Qumran) Commentary on Habakkuk, vi. 3-5, there is a reference to the Kittim, i.e. Romans, as sacrificing to their standards (Heb. 'ototim = σημεῖα) and venerating their weapons.

(2) That the Jews were highly disturbed did not escape Herod's notice, and since he thought it inopportune to use force against them, he spoke to some of them reassuringly in an attempt to remove their religious scruples.^a He did not, however, succeed, for in their displeasure at the offences of which they thought him guilty, they cried out with one voice that although everything else might be endured, they would not endure images of men being brought into the city—meaning the trophies,—for this was against their national custom. Herod, therefore, seeing how disturbed they were and that they could not easily be brought round if they did not get some reassurance, summoned the most eminent among them and leading them to the theatre, showed them the trophies and asked just what they thought these things were. When they cried out “Images of men,” he gave orders for the removal of the ornaments which covered them and showed the people the bare wood. So soon as the trophies were stripped, they became a cause of laughter; and what contributed most to the confusion ^b of these men was the fact that up to this point they had themselves regarded the arrangement as a disguise for images.^c

(3) When Herod had put off the people in this way and had dissipated the force of the anger which they felt, most of them were inclined ^d to change their attitude and not to be angry any longer. But some of them persisted in their resentment of these practices as departures from tradition, and in the belief that the violation of the customs of their country would be the beginning of great evils, they thought it a sacred duty to undertake any risk rather than seem to be indifferent to Herod's forcible introduction of practices not in accord with custom, by which their way of life would be totally altered, and to his behaving in appearance as the king but in reality as the enemy of the whole nation. For this reason ten of the citizens conspired together, swearing to undergo any danger and placing daggers under their clothes. . . .^a Among them was a man who had lost the use of his eyes but had joined the conspiracy out of indignation at what he heard. And though he was not able to do anything effective in their attempt, he held himself in readiness to suffer too if any serious harm should come to them, and so he gave no small encouragement to the conspirators.

(4) Having made this decision, they (severally) went to the theatre, as had been agreed. It was their hope that Herod himself would not escape if they fell upon him unexpectedly but, they thought, even if they should not come upon Herod himself, they would at least kill many of his men. It seemed to them that even if they should die for it, they would have achieved enough by making the people and the king himself understand what outrages he was, in their opinion, committing. And having made these preparations, they were eager to act. But one of the men appointed by Herod to investigate and report such matters to him discovered the whole plot and revealed it to the king as he was about to enter the theatre. Herod, therefore,—for when he considered the hatred which many of the people felt for him and the disturbances which invariably followed every incident, he did not think the report improbable—retired to his palace and summoned by name the men who were accused. And as they were caught in the act by his servants who fell upon them, they knew that they could not escape, but they gave dignity to the inevitable end of their lives by not flinching in their resolution. For they confessed no shame at their act nor did they deny it but showed their daggers already held in readiness, and professed that their conspiracy had been formed with a noble and pious intent, not for the sake of gain or because of their own feelings but, what was more important, on behalf of their communal customs, which all men had the duty either to preserve or to die for. Such was the bold tone used by these men in speaking of the plot which they had undertaken. And so they were led away by the king's men, who had surrounded them, and were put to death after enduring every torment. Not long afterwards the informer was seized by some men who hated him, and they not only killed him but also cut him apart, limb from limb, and threw him to the dogs. This act was witnessed by many of the citizens, but no one informed the authorities until Herod had a very strict and relentless inquiry made, and some women confessed under torture that they had seen the act committed. And when the perpetrators were punished Herod for their rashness penalized their entire families as well. But the steadfastness ^a of the people

^a In B.J. iii. 36 Josephus speaks of Gaba as being adjacent to Carmel and called "the city of cavalry" from the cavalry who on their discharge were settled there by Herod. See A. Alt, "Die Reiterstadt Gaba," ZDPV 62 (1939), 3-21, and Abel, GP ii. 319-320. Recently Gaba has been identified called Gaba^a in Galilee, and in Peraea (he rebuilt) Esebonitis.^b These several measures for security he kept thinking up from time to time, and he placed garrisons throughout the entire nation so as to minimize the chance of their taking things into their own hands and plunging into disturbances such as they continually made when the slightest incitement was given, and to keep them from starting any trouble without his learning of it through some of his men who were stationed near them at all times and thus could discover and prevent it. And at this time, being eager to fortify Samaria, he arranged to have settled in it many of those who had fought as his allies in war and many of the neighbouring populations. This he did because of his ambition to erect it as a new (city)^c by his own action, for hitherto it had not been among the famous cities, and even more because he made his ambitious scheme a source of security to himself. He also changed the city's name, calling it Sebaste,^d and apportioned the near-by territory, which was the best in the country, among its inhabitants in order that they might find prosperity so soon as they came together to live there.^e He surrounded the city with a strong wall, using the

^a The remains of Herod's buildings at Samaria-Sebaste are described by G. A. Reisner, C. S. Fisher and D. G. Lyon in Harvard Excavations at Samaria, 1909–1910, 2 vols. (Cambridge, Mass., 1924), and more recently and fully by J. W. Crowfoot, K. M. Kenyon and E. L. Sukenik, The Buildings at Samaria (London, 1942). For briefer accounts see R. W. Hamilton, Guide to the Historical Site of Sebastieh (Jerusalem, 1936), and Watzinger ii. 47–54.

^b A little over two miles.

^c The temple of Augustus, surrounded by a colonnaded portico in the Corinthian order, was built on an artificial platform on the western part of the summit of the hill. The stairway and other parts of the construction can still be seen. According to Watzinger, the temple was more Hellenistic than Roman in style (he compares it with the temple of Dionysos at Pergamon), while Crowfoot, Kenyon and Sukenik remark, pp. 126–127, that "The building up of artificial steep slope of the place as a means of strengthening it.^a And he enclosed an area that was not of the same size as that of the former city but did not fall short of that of the most renowned cities, for it was twenty stades ^b (in circumference). Within it, at its centre, he consecrated a precinct of one and a half stades (in circumference), which was adorned in a variety of ways, and in it he erected a temple which in size and beauty was among the most renowned.^c The various parts of the city he also adorned in a variety of ways, and seeing the necessity of security, he made it a first-class ^d fortress by strengthening its outer walls. He also made it splendid in order to leave to posterity a monument of the humanity that arose from his love of beauty.

platforms for the forecourts of temples was quite a usual practice in Syria in the early Roman period, and in a number of cases subterranean corridors and vaults were employed as in the Second Roman period at Samaria. The most striking parallel is Herod's rebuilding of the Temple at Jerusalem."

^a Or "major."

^e This would be 25/24 B.C. The rebuilding of Samaria probably began in 27 B.C. Schürer, i. 366 note 8, therefore supposes that ch. ix. 1 (§§ 299 ff.) originally followed right after ch. vii. 10 (§ 266) and that the words "in the same year" do not refer to the time when Samaria was rebuilt but to that of Costobarus' execution. Otto, p. 80, agrees with Schürer that §§ 299 ff. are from a different source than the immediately preceding sections (§§ 267-298), which he ascribes to a "Jewish Anonymous," but he does not consider §§ 299 ff. a direct continuation of § 266 because he regards the latter as part of an anti-Herodian source while §§ 299 ff. are, he thinks, in the style of Nicolas of Damascus. Otto admits, however, that Nicolas may have referred to the completion of the rebuilding of Samaria in 25 B.C.

angry or because misfortune occurs in such cycles. For in the first place, there were continual droughts,^a and as a result the earth was unproductive even of such fruits as it usually brought forth by itself. In the second place, because of the change of diet brought about by the lack of cereals bodily illnesses and eventually the plague prevailed, and misfortunes continually assailed ^b them. For their lack of medical care and nourishment increased the intensity of the pestilential disease, which had begun violently enough, and the death of those who perished in this manner deprived the survivors of their courage also, because they were unable by any diligence to cope with their difficulties. And since, too, the fruits of that year were destroyed and those which had been stored up had been consumed, there was no hope of relief left, for their bad situation gradually became worse than they had expected. And it was not only for that year that they had nothing left, but the seed of the crops that survived was also lost when the earth yielded nothing the second year.^c So their necessity made them find many new ways of sustaining themselves. And the king himself, as it happened, was in no less want, for he was deprived of the revenue which he received from the (products of the) earth, and he had used up his money in the lavish reconstruction of cities. And there was nothing that seemed adequate to meet the case, for these misfortunes had already brought upon him the hatred of his subjects, and when people do not get on well, there is always a tendency to blame those who rule over them.

^b More literally "were successively doled out to."

^c Otto, pp. 69-70, takes the text to mean that the earth did not yield a second harvest that year but the context is against his interpretation, I think. Otto also differs from other scholars in supposing that the drought began in the winter of 26-25 rather than 25-24 B.C.

(2) Being in such straits, Herod considered how to meet the crisis, but this was difficult both because the neighbouring peoples could not sell grain, having suffered no less themselves, and because he did not have the money, even if it were possible to obtain small quantities at a high price. Thinking it best, however, not to neglect any source of help,^a he cut up into coinage all the ornaments of gold and silver in his palace, without sparing even objects made with special care or having artistic value. And this money he sent to Egypt, where Petronius^b had received the office of prefect from Caesar. Petronius, to whom a great many persons had fled because of the same needs, was a friend of Herod and wished to rescue his subjects, and so he gave them priority in the export of grain (from Egypt), and fully assisted them to purchase and transport it by ship, so that the greater part if not the whole of this aid came from him.^c For on the arrival of these provisions Herod attributed their coming to his own solicitude, and thus he not only brought about a reversal of attitude on the part of those who had formerly been hostile to him, but also made a very great demonstration of his goodwill and protective attitude toward them. For in the first place, to those who were able to provide food for themselves by their own labour he distributed grain in very exact proportions.^a Then, since there were many who because of old age or some other attendant infirmity were unable to prepare the grain for themselves, he provided for them by putting bakers to work and furnishing them food already prepared. He also took care that they should go through the winter without danger (to health), including that of being in need of clothing, for their flocks had been destroyed and completely consumed, so that they had no wool to use or any other material for covering themselves. And when these things had been provided for his subjects, he also applied himself to aiding the neighbouring cities, and gave seeds to the inhabitants of Syria. And this brought him not a little profit, for his generosity was so well timed as to bring a good harvest, so that enough food was produced for them all. In sum, when the time drew near for harvesting the land, he sent into the country no fewer than fifty thousand men, whom he himself fed and cared for, and in this way, when he had helped his damaged realm recover by his unfailing munificence and zeal, he also did not a little to relieve the neighbouring peoples, who were in the same difficulties. For there was no one who asked for aid in his need and was turned away without getting such help as he deserved. Moreover, both peoples and cities and those private persons who found themselves in need because they had provided for too many others, on applying to him for help received what they asked for, so that when the reckoning is made, there were ten thousand kors—

^a As usual, Josephus is inconsistent in equating Hebrew with Greek measures. In Ant. iii. 321 he says that 70 kors are equal to 41 Attic medimnoi, which would make 1 kor equal c. 4/7 of a medimnos. Actually the kor equals about 7 Attic medimnoi.

^b See Ant. xv. 365 and xvi. 64 for later instances of Herod's generosity in times of need.

the kor equals ten Attic medimnoi^a—given to those outside the realm, and about eighty thousand to those within the kingdom itself. Now Herod's solicitude and the timeliness of his generosity made such a powerful impression upon the Jews and were so much talked about by other nations, that the old hatreds which had been aroused by his altering some of the customs and royal practices were completely eradicated throughout the entire nation, and the munificence shown by him in helping them in their very grave difficulties was regarded as full compensation.^b He was also well spoken of among foreign nations, and it seemed that although difficulties had beset him to an extent hard to describe and had devastated his realm, still they greatly contributed to his reputation. For the unexpected greatheartedness which he showed in this time of difficulty brought about a reversal of attitude among the masses, so that he was thought to have been at bottom not the kind of person that their earlier experiences indicated but the kind that his care for them in their need made him out to be.

(3)^c It was at that time^d also that he sent to Caesar five hundred picked men from his bodyguards as an auxiliary force, and these men were very useful to Aelius Gallus, who led them to the Red Sea.^e And when Herod's affairs were again in good order and increasingly prosperous, he built a palace in the Upper City,^a in which he constructed exceedingly large, high rooms and decorated them in very costly fashion with gold, stones ^b and colour-washes.^c Each of them had enough couches to hold a great many persons, and they varied in size and name, one being called Caesar's, and another Agrippa's.^d And at the prompting of his amorous desire he married again, for he had no qualms about living solely for his own pleasure. His marriage came about in the following way. There lived in Jerusalem a well-known priest named Simon, the son of one Boethus,^e an Alexandrian, who had a daughter^f considered to be the most beautiful woman of her time. And since there was much talk about her among the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Herod, as it happened, first became excited by what he heard, and then, on seeing her, was greatly smitten by the girl's loveliness, but he dismissed the thought of abusing his power in order to achieve his full desire, for he suspected with good reason that he would be accused of violence and tyranny, and so he thought it better to take the girl in marriage. And since Simon was, on the one hand, not illustrious enough to become related (to the king) but, on the other hand, too important to be treated with contempt, Herod fulfilled his desire in a rather reasonable way by increasing his and his daughter's prestige and making their position one of greater honour. That is to say, he promptly removed Jesus, the son of Phabes,^a from the high priesthood and appointed Simon to this office, and contracted marriage with his daughter.

^a This was the citadel of Herod, more fully described in B.J. v. 156-183, cf. Abel, HP i. 365-367. It lay at the N.W. corner of the Upper City (near the beginning of the Joppa Road), W. of the Hasmonaean Palace, and is to be distinguished from the Antonia which was at the N.W. corner of the Temple precinct (see above, § 292 note).

(4) When the wedding-ceremonies were concluded, Herod constructed another fortress ^b in the region where he had defeated the Jews after his expulsion from the realm, when Antigonus was in power.^c This fortress, which is some sixty stades ^d distant from Jerusalem, is naturally strong and very suitable for such a structure, for reasonably near by is a hill, raised to a (greater) height by the hand of man and rounded off in the shape of a breast. At intervals it has round towers, and it has a steep ascent formed of two hundred steps of hewn stone. Within it are costly royal apartments made for security and for ornament at the same time. At the base of the hill there are pleasure grounds built in such a way as to be worth seeing, among other things because of the way in which water, which is lacking in that place, is brought in from a distance and at great expense.^e The surrounding plain was built up as a city second

Herod builds another fortress (Herodeion).

^b It is called Herodeion in B.J. i. 419, where Josephus says that there were two fortresses of this name ; one was in the hill country on the Arab frontier (its identification with Machaerus by Clermont-Ganneau is questioned by Otto, p. 82) ; the other one is the same as that mentioned here, sixty stades from Jerusalem.

^c Cf. Ant. xiv. 360.

^d About 7 miles. The site is thought to be the modern Jebel el-Fureidis or Frank Mountain, c. 4 miles S.E. of Bethlehem, cf. Schürer i. 390 note 66, and Abel, GP ii. 348.

^e Traces of an aqueduct can still be seen extending from the spring of Urtas, which is on the road from Bethlehem to Etam.

(5) Since all his affairs were prospering as they should and as he hoped, Herod had not the least suspicion that any disturbance might arise in the kingdom itself, for he kept his subjects submissive in two ways, namely by fear, since he was inexorable in punishment, and by showing himself greathearted in his care of them when a crisis arose. He also surrounded himself with security on the outside, as though making this a reinforcement for himself against his subjects, for he treated the (gentile) cities skilfully and humanely, and he cultivated their local rulers, making them the more grateful to him because of the nice timing of the gifts which he presented to each of them.^a And his natural magnanimity he used in a manner appropriate to his royal power, so that his position became stronger in all ways as his affairs prospered. But because of his ambition in this direction and the flattering attention which he gave to Caesar and the most influential Romans, he was forced to depart from the customs (of the Jews) and to alter many of their regulations, for in his ambitious spending he founded cities and erected temples—not in Jewish territory, for the Jews would not have put up with this, since we are forbidden such things, including the honouring of statues and sculptured forms in the manner of the Greeks,—but these he built in foreign and surrounding territory.^a To the Jews he made the excuse that he was doing these things not on his own account but by command and order,^b while he sought to please Caesar and the Romans by saying that he was less intent upon observing the customs of his own nation than upon honouring them. On the whole, however, he was intent upon his own interests or was also ambitious to leave behind to posterity still greater monuments of his reign. It was for this reason that he was keenly interested in the reconstruction of cities and spent very great sums on this work.

^a A list of Herod's gifts to Hellenistic cities is given by Josephus in B.J. i. 422-428.

^b A. Tcherikover, 'Ereṣ Yiśra'el i (1951), 101 note 23 (in Hebrew), makes the valid point that Herod's hellenizing policy differed from that of the pre-Maccabaeon high priests Jason and Menelaus in that Herod made no attempt to force Hellenism upon the Jews in Jewish territory.

(6)^c And when he observed that there was a place near the sea, formerly called Strato's Tower, which was very well suited to be the site of a city, he set about making a magnificent plan and put up buildings all over the city, not of ordinary material but of white stone.^d He also adorned it with a very costly palace,^e with civic halls and—what was greatest of all and required the most labour—with a well-protected harbour, of the size of the Piraeus,^f with landing-places and secondary anchorages inside. But what was especially notable about this construction was that he got no material suitable for so great a work from the place itself but completed it with materials brought from outside at great expense. Now this city is located in Phoenicia, on the sea-route

Herod rebuilds Strato's Tower as Caesarea.

^a The description of Caesarea that follows is closely parallel to that given in B.J. i. 408–415; cf. Leo Haefeli, Cäsarea am Meer (Münster, 1923). For a brief account of a recent exploration of the site see A. Reifenberg, "Caesarea, a Study in the Decline of a Town," Israel Exploration Journal 1 (1950–1951), 20–32 (with photographs).

^d According to B.J. i. 410, the harbour of Caesarea was larger than Piraeus.

to Egypt, between Joppa and Dora. These are small towns on the seashore and are poor harbours because the south-west wind beats on them and always ^a dredges up sand from the sea upon the shore, and thus does not permit a smooth landing ^b; instead, it is usually necessary for merchants to ride unsteadily at anchor off shore. To remedy this inconvenient feature of the land Herod laid out a circular harbour enclosing enough space for large fleets to lie at anchor near shore, and (along this line) he sank enormous rocks to a depth of twenty fathoms. Most of these rocks were fifty feet in length, and no less than eighteen in breadth,^c and nine in height, some of them being larger, some smaller than that. The structure ^d which he set in the sea as a barrier was two hundred feet (in width). Half of it was opposed to the surge of the waves and held off the flood of waters breaking there from all sides, and was therefore called a breakwater. The other half, supported on a stone wall, was divided at intervals by towers, of which the largest, a very handsome thing, is called Drusus,^e taking its name from Drusus, the stepson of Caesar, who died young.^f Into it had been built a series of vaulted recesses^g as shelters for sailors.

^f Nero Claudius Drusus was the son of Augustus’ wife Livia, by her first husband Tiberius Claudius Nero, and the brother of the future emperor Tiberius. He died suddenly in Germany in 9 b.c. when he was only thirty. Presumably Herod named this tower after him while he was still alive, since the building of Caesarea was begun much earlier.

And before them ^a there was a wide quay which encircled the harbour and was a very pleasant place to walk around for those who wished to do so.^b The entrance or mouth of the harbour was made to face north, for this wind always brings the clearest weather. The foundation of the whole circular wall on the left of those sailing into the harbour was a tower resting ^c upon piled stones as a broad firm base to withstand pressure (from the water), while on the right were two great stone blocks, larger than the tower on the other side, which were upright and joined together. In a circle round the harbour there was a continuous line of dwellings constructed of the most polished stone, and in their midst was a mound on which there stood a temple of Caesar,^d visible a great way off to those sailing into the harbour,^e which had a statue of Rome and also one of Caesar. The city itself is called Caesarea and is most beautiful both in material and in construction. But below the city the underground passages and sewers^f cost no less effort than the structures built above them. Of these some led at equal distances from one another to the harbour and the sea, while one diagonal passage connected all of them, so that the rainwater and the refuse of the inhabitants were easily carried off together. And whenever the sea

Only excavation will show whether we have in these remains the vestiges of Caesar's temple . . ."

^f Remains of these are not mentioned by Reifenberg. The aqueducts revealed by the survey were probably built after the time of Josephus.

^a The variant omits “ of stone.”

^b What “ farther back ” means here is not clear but see next note.

^c Cf. Reifenberg, op. cit. (§ 331 note c), p. 25, “ Now the building to the south of the harbour was a theatre and not an amphitheatre. It seems, therefore, that this passage has to be amended by changing ‘ amphitheatre ’ into ‘ theatre ’ and vice versa. This would also meet the postulate that a wide view could be obtained over the sea, which is true for the theatre only. Neither from the amphitheatre nor from the hippodrome can a wide view over the sea be obtained.” See also on Ant. xvi. 136.

was driven in from offshore, it would flow through the whole city and flush it from below. Herod also built a theatre of stone ^a in the city, and on the south side of the harbour, farther back,^b an amphitheatre large enough to hold a great crowd of people and conveniently situated for a view of the sea.^c Now the city was completed in the space of twelve ^d years, for the king did not slacken in the undertaking and he had sufficient means for the expenses.

(x. 1)^e At this juncture, with Sebaste already built as a city, he decided to send his sons Alexander and Aristobulus ^f to Rome to present themselves to Caesar. And when they arrived, they stayed in the house of Pollio,^g who professed himself one of Herod's most devoted friends. And permission was given (them) to stay with Caesar himself, for he received the boys with the greatest consideration. He also gave Herod the right to secure in the possession of his kingdom whichever of his offspring he wished, Herod sends his sons Alexander and Aristobulus to Rome. Augustus gives him additional territory in northern Transjordan.

^a According to Ant. xvi. 136, the rebuilding of Caesarea took ten years, and since its completion is there dated in the 28th year of Herod's reign (= 10-9 B.C.), the beginning of the work would have to be dated in 20 B.C. But the number "twelve" given here for the duration of the work is to be preferred for various reasons, and we should therefore date the beginning of the rebuilding in 22 B.C.; see Schürer i. 368 ff., and Otto, p. 70.

and in addition he gave him the territory of Trachonitis,^a Batanaea^b and Auranitis,^c which he had taken over^d for the following reason. There was a certain Zenodorus who had leased the domain of Lysanias,^e but not being satisfied with the revenues, he increased his income by using robber bands in Trachonitis. For the inhabitants of that region led desperate lives and pillaged the property of the Damascenes, and Zenodorus did not stop them but himself shared in their gains. The neighbouring peoples, feeling these serious losses, protested to Varro, who was then their governor,^f and asked him to write to Caesar about the misdeeds of Zenodorus. When these reports were brought to Caesar, he wrote back that he should drive out the robber bands and assign that territory to Herod in order that through his supervision Trachonitis might cease to be an annoyance to its neighbours. For it was really not easy to restrain people who had made brigandage a habit and had no other means of making a living, since they had neither city nor field of their own but only underground shelters and caves, where they lived together with their cattle. They had also managed to collect supplies of water and of food beforehand, and so they were able to hold out for a very long time in their hidden retreat. Moreover, the entrances (to their caves) were narrow, and only one person at a time could enter, while the interiors were incredibly large and constructed to provide plenty of room, and the ground above their dwellings was not high but almost level with the (surrounding) surface. The whole place consisted of rocks that were rugged and difficult of access unless one used a path with a guide leading the way, for not even these paths were straight, but had many turns and windings. Now when these men were prevented from harming their neighbours, their custom was to rob even one another, so that no form of lawlessness was meanwhile left untried. But when Herod received this grant from Caesar and reached their territory with the help of experienced guides, he put a stop to their criminal acts and brought security and peace to the surrounding peoples.

(2) Zenodorus, however, was angry in the first place at having his eparchy^a taken away from him, and was still more angry in the next place because he was envious of Herod, who had taken it over. He therefore went up to Rome to bring charges against him, but he returned without accomplishing anything. Now Agrippa^b was sent as Caesar's deputy^c to the countries beyond the Ionian Sea, and as he was wintering in Mitylene,^d Herod, who was one of his closest friends and companions, went to meet him there and then returned to Judaea. And when some of the Gadarenes^e went to Agrippa with charges against Herod, he sent them in chains to the king without even giving them a hearing. Then the Arabs, who had long been hostile to Herod's rule, were stirred up and now attempted to revolt against his authority on what they thought were very reasonable grounds. For Zenodorus, who by now despised of his own cause, had hastened to sell them a part of his eparchy, (namely) Auranitis, for fifty talents. And since this was included in Caesar's grant (to Herod), they disputed (his possession of it) on the ground that they had been deprived of it unjustly. Sometimes they overran his territory and attempted to take it by force, and at other times they resorted to legal proceedings. They also won over those soldiers who were poor and hostile (to Herod), and were always hopefully inclined ^a toward revolution, which is especially welcome to those who fare badly in life. And though he knew that this had been going on for a long time, Herod still did not take any hostile action, but sensibly tried to soothe them, for he did not think it wise to give them an excuse for causing disorder.

(3) And when Herod had completed the seventeenth year of his reign, Caesar came to Syria.^b And on this occasion most of those who inhabited Gadara denounced Herod as being too severe in his orders and tyrannical. These charges they dared to make because Zenodorus was particularly insistent in his accusations against him and offered them sworn assurances that he would not give up making every effort to have them removed from Herod's kingdom and joined to the territory governed by Caesar.^a Persuaded by these assurances, the Gadarenes raised a great outcry, for they were emboldened by the fact that Herod had let off the men turned over (to him) by Agrippa for punishment, and had done them no harm. He had, indeed, the reputation of being the most inexorable of all men toward those of his own people who sinned, but magnanimous in pardoning foreigners. And so they accused him of violence and pillage and the overthrowing of temples. But Herod, unperturbed, was prompt to defend himself, and Caesar greeted him with friendliness and in no way changed his attitude of goodwill because of the disturbance made by the crowd. Speeches about these matters were made on the first day, but the inquiry did not proceed farther on the following days, for the Gadarenes saw to which side both Caesar himself and his council were inclined, and since they expected, as they had reason to do, to be turned over to the king, they were afraid of being maltreated, and so some of them cut their own throats during the night, while others threw themselves down from high places or wilfully destroyed themselves by jumping into the river.^b This was regarded as (self-) condemnation of their rashness and guilt, and consequently Caesar, without any delay, acquitted Herod of the charges made against him. Moreover, a substantial piece of good fortune came his way in addition to the earlier ones. For Zenodus suffered a ruptured intestine, and losing a great quantity of

It lay between Traehonitis and Galilee, and eontained Ulatha ^a and Paneas ^b and the surrounding country. He also asscoiated him with the proeurers of Syria,^c instrueting them to obtain Herod's consent to all their actions. Altogether he reached such a height of good fortune that as for the two men who ruled the mighty Roman empire, (namely) Caesar, and next to him Agrippa, to whom he was devoted, there was no one after Agrippa whom Caesar held in greater esteem than Herod, while Agrippa gave Herod the first place in his friendship after Caesar. Enjoying, therefore, so great a measure of freedom of speeeh, Herod asked of Caesar a tetrarchy ^d for his brother Pheroras, and allotted to him from his own kingdom a revenue of a hundred talents in order that, if he should suffer death, the position of Pheroras might be safe, and that his (Herod's) sons might not seize possession of this (tetrarchy). And when he returned home after escorting Caesar to the sea, he erected to him a very beautiful temple of white stone in the territory of Zenodorus, near the place ealled Paneion.^e In the mountains here there is a beautiful cave, and below it the earth slopes steeply to a precipitous and inaccessible ^a depth, which is filled with still water, while above it there is a very high mountain.^b Below the cave rise the sources of the river Jordan. It was this most celebrated place that Herod further adorned with the temple which he consecrated to Caesar.

(4) It was at this time ^c also that Herod remitted to the people of his kingdom a third part of their taxes, under the pretext of letting them recover from a period of lack of crops, but really for the more important purpose of getting back the goodwill of those who were disaffected. For they resented his carrying out of such arrangements as seemed to them to mean the dissolution of their religion and the disappearance of their customs. And these matters were discussed by all of them, for they were always being provoked and disturbed. Herod, however, gave the most careful attention to this situation, taking away any opportunities they might have (for agitation) and instructing them to apply themselves at all times to their work. No meeting of citizens was permitted, nor were walking together or being together permitted, and all their movements were observed. Those who were caught were punished severely, and many were taken, either openly or secretly, to the fortress of Hyrcania ^d and there put to death. Both in the city and on the open roads there were men who spied upon those who met together. And they say that even Herod himself did not neglect to play a part in this, but would often put on the dress of a private citizen and mingle with the crowds by night, and so get an idea of how they felt about his rule.^a Those who obstinately refused to go along with his (new) practices he persecuted in all kinds of ways. As for the rest of the populace, he demanded that they submit to taking an oath of loyalty, and he compelled them to make a sworn declaration that they would maintain a friendly attitude to his rule. Now most of the people yielded to his demand out of complaisance or fear, but those who showed some spirit and objected to compulsion he got rid of by every possible means. He also tried to persuade Pollion the Pharisee and Samaias^b and most of their disciples to take the oath, but they would not agree to this,^c and yet they were not punished as were the others who refused, for they were shown consideration on Pollion's account. And those who are called by us Essenes were also excused from this necessity. This is a group which follows a way of life taught to the Greeks by Pythagoras.^d Now about these men

^a Josephus is probably thinking of certain ascetic and mystical aspects of Essenism that he (or his source) regarded as generally similar to Pythagorean traits. But this comparison probably does not involve much more than does his comparison of Pharisees with Stoics and of Sadducees with Epicureans. On the problem of possible direct influence of Pythagoreanism on Essenism see, inter alia, E. Zeller, Philosophie der Griechen iii. 2 (4th ed.), 307-377; Isidore Lévy, La Légende de Pythagore de Grèce en Palestine (Paris, 1927); F. ^c In spite of this statement about Herod's regard for the Essenes it has been suggested by C. T. Fritsch, “Herod the Great and the Qumran Community,” Journal of Biblical Literature 74 (1955), 173-181, that Herod was so hostile to the Essenes that they were forced to migrate to Damascus from their headquarters at Qumran in the Wilderness of Judaea near the N. end of the Dead Sea (where the Dead Sea Scrolls were found).

(5) There was a certain Essene named Manaēmus,^d whose virtue was attested in his whole conduct of life and especially in his having from God a fore-knowledge of the future.^e This man had (once) observed Herod, then still a boy, going to his teacher,^f and greeted him as "king of the Jews." Thereupon Herod, who thought that the man either did not know who he was, or was teasing him, reminded him that he was only a private citizen. Manaēmus, however, gently smiled and slapped him on the backside, saying, "Nevertheless, you will be king and you will rule^g the realm happily, for you have been found

The predictions of the Essene Manaēmus (Menahem) about Herod.

Law and Lore (Philadelphia, 1955), suggests (p. 101) that Menahem was the leader of the conservative group of Pharisees and was removed from this office when he went over to the Essenes, as is stated in the Mishnah, Menahot ix. 2 [read: Hagigah ii. 2?], according to the interpretation of the Palestinian Talmud. For other rabbinic traditions about Menahem see Klausner, iv. 148, who believes that some of the derogatory statements in the Talmud about Menahem may be due to confusion of the Herodian Menahem with Menahem, son of Judas, a Galilean, who led a detachment of rebels in the war against Rome almost a century later (cf. B.J. ii. 443-449).

^e The gift of prophecy is ascribed to other Essenes by Josephus, e.g. to a certain Judas, contemporary with Aristobulus I, see Ant. xiii. 311.

^f Presumably this was Herod's tutor in Greek studies.

worthy of this by God. And you shall remember the blows given by Manaēmus, so that they, too, may be for you a symbol of how one's fortune can change. For the best attitude for you to take would be to love justice and piety toward God and mildness toward your citizens. But I know that you will not be such a person, since I understand the whole situation. Now you will be singled out for such good fortune as no other man has had, and you will enjoy eternal glory, but you will forget piety and justice. This, however, cannot escape the notice of God, and at the close of your life His wrath will show that He is mindful of these things." At the moment Herod paid very little attention to his words, for he was quite lacking in such hopes, but after gradually being advanced to kingship and good fortune, when he was at the height of his power, he sent for Manaēmus and questioned him about the length of time he would reign. Manaēmus said nothing at all. In the face of his silence Herod asked further whether he had ten years more to reign, and the other replied that he had twenty or even thirty, but he did not set a limit to the appointed time. Herod, however, was satisfied even with this answer and dismissed Manaēmus with a friendly gesture. And from that time on he continued to hold all Essenes in honour. Now we have seen fit to report these things to our readers, however incredible they may seem, and to reveal what has taken place among us because many of these men^a have indeed been vouchsafed a knowledge of divine things because of their virtue.

(xi. 1) ^a It was at this time, ^b in the eighteenth year of his reign, after the events mentioned above, that Herod undertook an extraordinary work, (namely) the reconstructing ^d of the temple of God at his own expense, enlarging its precincts and raising it to a more imposing height. For he believed that the accomplishment of this task would be the most notable of all the things achieved by him, as indeed it was, and would be great enough to assure his eternal remembrance. But since he knew that the populace was not prepared for or easy to enlist in so great an undertaking, he thought it best to predispose them to set to work on the whole project by making a speech to them first, and so he called them together and spoke as follows. "So far as the other things achieved during my reign are concerned, my countrymen, I consider it unnecessary to speak of them, although they were of such a kind that the prestige which comes from them to me is less than the security which they have brought to you. For in the most difficult situations I have not been unmindful of the things that might benefit you in your need, nor have I in my building been more intent upon my own invulnerability than upon that of all of you, and I think I have, by the will of God, brought the Jewish nation to such a state of prosperity as it has never known before. Now as for the various to B.J. i. 401, Herod began to restore the temple in the fifteenth year of his reign =23-22 b.c. Possibly, as Schürer suggests, i. 369 note 12, the earlier date given in B.J. refers to the preliminary arrangements, but Otto, p. 84 note, objects that Ant. itself refers to the preliminaries, and he therefore considers the "fifteenth" in B.J. a simple error.

^a One ms. and the Epitome read “seven.” Josephus has already given the height of Zerubbabel’s temple as sixty cubits (Ant. xi. 99, following Scripture) but earlier (Ant. viii. 64) had given the total height of Solomon’s temple as one hundred and twenty cubits (see note ad loc. on the con-buildings which we have erected in our country and in the cities of our land and in those of acquired territories, with which, as the most beautiful adornment, we have embellished our nation, it seems to me quite needless to speak of them to you, knowing them as you do. But that the enterprise which I now propose to undertake is the most pious and beautiful one of our time I will now make clear. For this was the temple which our fathers built to the Most Great God after their return from Babylon, but it lacks sixty ^a cubits in height, the amount by which the first temple, built by Solomon, exceeded it. And yet no one should condemn our fathers ^b for neglecting their pious duty, for it was not their fault that this temple is smaller. Rather it was Cyrus and Darius, the son of Hystaspes, who prescribed these dimensions for building, and since our fathers were subject to them and their descendants and after them to the Macedonians, they had no opportunity to restore this first archetype of piety to its former size. But since, by the will of God, I am now ruler and there continues to be a long period of peace ^c and an abundance of wealth and great revenues, and —what is of most importance—the Romans, who are, so to speak, the masters of the world, are (my) loyal friends, I will try to remedy the oversight fusion between the temple and the porch measuring a hundred and twenty cubits, according to 2 Chron. iii. 4).

^b Lit. “the fathers,” but just above the possessive personal pronoun of the first plural is used with “fathers.” Thus Herod is here presented as identifying himself with the Jewish people.

^c Only five years earlier Herod had sent troops to aid the Romans in their war with the Arabs in southern Arabia, see above, § 317. Apparently five years was considered “a long period” of peace.

(2) These were Herod's words, and most of the people were astonished by his speech, for it fell upon their ears as something quite unexpected. And while the unlikelihood of his realizing his hope did not disturb them, they were dismayed by the thought that he might tear down the whole edifice and not have sufficient means to bring his project (of rebuilding it) to completion. And this danger appeared to them to be very great, and the vast size of the undertaking seemed to make it difficult to carry out. Since they felt this way, the king spoke encouragingly to them, saying that he would not pull down the temple before having ready all the materials needed for its completion. And these assurances he did not belie. For he prepared a thousand wagons to carry the stones, selected ten thousand of the most skilled workmen, purchased priestly ^a robes for a thousand priests, and trained some as masons, others as carpenters, and began the construction only after all these preparations had diligently been made by him.

(3) After removing the old foundations, he laid down others, and upon these he erected the temple,^b which was a hundred cubits in length . . . ^c and twenty more in height, but in the course of time this

^a Cf. B.J. v. 36 on Agrippa II's attempt to underpin the sanctuary, which was interrupted by the outbreak of the war with Rome. The height of the sanctuary itself was sixty cubits, according to B.J. v. 215 (cf. Ant. xv. 385 note), dropped as the foundations subsided. And this part we decided to raise again in the time of Nero.^a The temple was built of hard, white stones, each of which was about twenty-five cubits in length, eight in height and twelve in width.^b And in the whole of it, as also in the royal portico, either side was the lowest, while the middle portion was the highest, so that this was visible at a distance of many stades to those who inhabited the country, especially those who lived opposite or happened to approach it. The entrance-doors, which with their lintels were equal (in height) to the temple itself, he adorned with multicoloured hangings, with purple colours and with inwoven designs of pillars. Above these, under the cornice, spread a golden vine with grape-clusters hanging from it,^c a marvel of size and artistry to all who saw with what costliness of material it had been constructed. And he surrounded the temple with very large porticoes,^d all of which he made in proportion (to the temple), and he surpassed his predecessors in spending money, so that it was thought that no one else had adorned the temple so splendidly.

but “the first building” (presumably the Porch) was ninety cubits high according to B.J. v. 209. It is difficult to get a clear picture of the structure from Josephus’ various accounts.

^b Josephus tells us in B.J. v. 224 that some of the stones in the building were forty-five cubits in length, five in height and six in breadth. The stones in the foundation, according to B.J. v. 189, measured forty cubits (no separate dimensions specified). All these figures appear to be exaggerated, judging from the size of the stones still preserved, cf. Dalman, p. 285.

^c As Thackeray points out in his note to the parallel in B.J. v. 210, Tacitus, Hist. v. 5, alludes to the golden vine found in the temple.

^d Simons, op. cit. (see above, p. 444 note b), p. 400, takes these to be the porticoes on the outer border of the temple area, double porticoes on three sides, and a triple one on the south.

^a The text is slightly uncertain.

^b Perhaps we should emend the text to read "Our king Solomon first, etc."

Both (porticoes) were (supported) by a great wall,^a and the wall itself was the greatest ever heard of by man. The hill was a rocky ascent that sloped gently up toward the eastern part of the city to the topmost peak. This hill our first king, Solomon,^b with God-given wisdom surrounded with great works above at the top. And below, beginning at the foot, where a deep ravine runs round it, he surrounded it with enormous stones bound together with lead. He cut off more and more of the area within as (the wall) became greater in depth, so that the size and height of the structure, which was square, were immense, and the great size of the stones was seen along the front surface, while iron clamps on the inside assured that the joints would remain permanently united. When this work reached the top of the hill, he levelled off the summit, and filled in the hollow spaces near the walls, and made the upper surface smooth and even throughout. Such was the whole enclosure, having a circumference of four stades, each side taking up the length of a stade.^c Within this wall

^a The stade was between 585 and 660 feet. According to the Mishnah tractate Middot ii. 1, each side of the temple area (called "the mount of the House") was 500 cubits; if the "royal cubit" is meant, as is probable, this would make c. 850 feet for each side. The dimensions of the present Haram es-Serif, which presumably covers the ancient temple area, are as follows, according to Hollis, op. cit. (see p. 444 note b), pp. 260-261: 929 feet on the south, 1041 feet on the north, 1556 feet on the east, and 1596 feet on the west; "and making allowance for the extension on the north side, for the inclined approaches on the south and the porticoes on the other sides, we obtain approximately 850 feet on the south, widening out to 870 feet on the north, and about 770 feet on both the east and the west sides." This figure agrees more closely with that of the Mishnah than with that of Josephus.

^b In Ant. xx. 221 Josephus says that the eastern portico was the work of King Solomon. Cf. Simons, op. cit. (see § 391 note b), p. 421: "Indeed, even if we rule out almost a priori that any Solomonic structure of considerable size survived down to the period of Agrippa II, the proposal of the Jews that he should 'rebuild the eastern portico' warrants the conclusion that at any rate a part of the eastern enclosure of Herod's enlarged ἱερόν was not built by the

and on the very summit there ran another wall of stone, which had on the eastern ridge a double portico of the same length as the wall, and it faced the doors of the temple, for this lay within it.^a This portico many of the earlier kings adorned.^b Round about the entire temple were fixed the spoils taken from the barbarians,^c and all these King Herod dedicated, adding those which he took from the Arabs.

(4) At an angle on the north side^d there had been built a citadel, well fortified and of unusual strength. It was the kings and high priests of the Asamonaean family before Herod who had built it and called it baris.^e Here they had deposited the priestly robe which the high priest put on only when he had to offer sacrifice. This robe Herod kept safe in that place, and after his death it was in the custody of the Romans until the time of Tiberius Caesar. In his reign Vitellius, the governor of Syria, visited Jerusalem,^f and because the populace gave him a very splendid reception, he wished to make some return for their kindness, and since they asked to have the sacred robe under their own authority, he wrote to Tiberius Caesar about the matter. Tiberius granted their request, and authority over the robe remained with the Jews until the death of King Agrippa.^a After that event Cassius Longinus, who then governed Syria,^b and Cuspius Fadus, the procurator of Judaea,^c ordered the Jews to deposit the robe in (the citadel of) Antonia, for, they said, the Romans ought to be masters of it, just as they had been before. Thereupon the Jews sent envoys to Claudius Caesar to petition him concerning this matter, and on their arrival the younger Agrippa,^d who happened to be in Rome, requested and received this authority from the emperor, who so instructed Vitellius, the legate of Syria.^e Formerly it was under the seal of the high priest and the treasurers (of the temple), and one day before a festival the treasurers would go to the commander of the Roman garrison and, after inspecting their own seal, would take the robe. Then, when the festival was over, they would bring it back to the same place, and after showing the commander of the garrison a seal corresponding (to the first one), would again deposit the robe. Now this digression has been occasioned by the sad experiences that happened later.^f At the time mentioned, however, Herod, the king of the Jews, made this baris stronger for the safety and protection of the temple, (Cf. Simons, pp. 37 ff.; 52 f.) The gate, anciently known as "Coponius," corresponds in location to the modern "Gate of the Chain," which goes back to the Crusaders. Several arches (5/6 cent.?) of the structure supporting the viaduct remain to-day and are known as "Wilson's Arch" after the discoverer, Sir Charles Wilson. On the gates *cf. (5) In the western part of the court (of the temple) there were four gates. The first led to the palace by a passage over the intervening ravine,^a two others led to the suburb,^b and the last led to the other part of the city,^c from which it was separated by many steps going down to the ravine and from here up again to the hill. For the City^d lay opposite the temple, being in the form of a theatre and being bordered by a deep ravine along its whole southern side. The fourth front of this (court), facing south, also had gates in the middle, and had over it the Royal Portico, which had three aisles, extending in length from the eastern to the western ravine.^e It was not possible for it to extend farther. And it was a structure more noteworthy than any under the sun. For while the depth of the ravine was great, and no one who bent over to look into it from above could bear

^b This probably would be comprised of the Upper City and the Lower City (to the S. and S.W.). The ravine is the "Valley of Hinnom" or "Gehenna."

^c i.e. from the Kedron Valley to the Tyropoeon. At the eastern end was a high tower, identified in early tradition with the so-called "Pinnacle" (cf. Matt. iv. 5 = Luke iv. 9); at the western end a viaduct led over the Tyropoeon. Some remains of the latter, chiefly of the exit, are extant, built into the lower part of the present west wall. This is known as "Robinson's Arch," after the discoverer, the famous nineteenth-century archaeologist, Edward Robinson.

to look down to the bottom, the height of the portico standing over it was so very great that if anyone looked down from its rooftop, combining the two elevations, he would become dizzy and his vision would be unable to reach the end of so measureless a depth. Now the columns (of the portico) stood in four rows, one opposite the other all along—the fourth row was attached to a wall built of stone,—and the thickness of each column was such that it would take three men with outstretched arms touching one another to envelop it^a; its height was twenty-seven feet, and there was a double moulding running round its base. The number of all the columns was a hundred and sixty-two, and their capitals were ornamented in the Corinthian style of carving, which caused amazement by the magnificence of its whole effect. Since there were four rows, they made three aisles among them, under the porticoes. Of these the two side ones corresponded and were made in the same way, each being thirty feet in width, a stade in length,^b and over fifty feet in height. But the middle aisle was one and a half times as wide and twice as high, and thus it greatly towered over those on either side. The ceilings (of the porticoes) were ornamented with deeply cut wood-carvings representing all sorts of different figures. The ceiling of the middle aisle was raised

"Or "the front of the wall." The meaning of this and the immediately following Greek is not very clear, and has resulted in diverse interpretations.

^b The so-called "Court of Gentiles," a modern designation. The total area of the enclosure was about 35 acres, or 144,000 square metres (Schick); cf. Hollis, pp. 105-122.

^c This court (Court of Israel) was open to all Jews, but an eastern enclosure, divided off by a wall running north and south, was known as the Court of Women (see below, § 419), probably because it was designated as a place for them to worship. Cf. Hollis, pp. 168 f.; 167-192.

^d Cf. Ant. xii. 145 for a similar notice under Antiochus III, c. 200 B.C. The present inscription was in Greek, and one complete and two fragmentary examples are known. The complete copy, discovered and published (PEF, p. 132) by Clermont-Ganneau in 1871, reads as follows: Μηθένα ἀλλογενῆ εἰσπορεύεσθαι ἐντὸς τοῦ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν τρυφάκτου καὶ περιβόλου. ὃς δ' ἂν ληφθῇ ἑαυτῷ αἴτιος ἔσται διὰ τὸ ἔξακολουθεῖν to a greater height, and the front wall ^a was cut at either end into architraves with columns built into it, and all of it was polished, so that these structures seemed incredible to those who had not seen them, and were beheld with amazement by those who set eyes on them. Such, then, was the first court.^b Within it and not far distant was a second one,^c accessible by a few steps and surrounded by a stone balustrade with an inscription prohibiting the entrance of a foreigner under threat of the penalty of death.^d On its southern and northern sides the inner court had three-chambered gateways, equally distant from one another, and on the side where the sun rises it had one great gateway,^e through which those of us who were ritually clean used to pass with our wives. Within this court was the sacred (court) which women were forbidden to enter, and still farther within was a third court into which only

For the Greek text and other data see B.J. v. 194 note c. It will also be found in Reinach, ad loc., and has often been reproduced. For the text and a discussion of the large fragment discovered in 1935 see J. H. Iliffe in QDAP 6 (1936), 1-3. Cf. also Simons, p. 300; Hollis, pp. 157 ff.; Bickermann in JQR 37 (1946-1947), 387-405, with comments by Zeitlin, ibid. 38 (1947-1948), 111-116. Bickermann contains further bibliography and a review of ancient parallels. Cf. the account in Acts xxi. 26-30.

^e Nicanor's Gate, the Corinthian Gate of brass. But this with less probability has been identified with the east gate leading into the Court of Women, which is not mentioned here by Josephus. The arguments pro and con are reviewed by Hollis (pp. 167-188); cf. Simons, pp. 405 f. The gate has been identified also with the Beautiful Gate of Acts iii. 2, 10; but this is uncertain.

priests were permitted to go. In this (priests' court) was the temple, and before it was an altar, on which we used to sacrifice whole burnt-offerings to God. Into none of these courts did King Herod enter since he was not a priest and was therefore prevented from so doing. But with the construction of the porticoes and the outer courts he did busy himself, and these he finished building in eight years.

(6) The temple itself ^a was built by the priests in a year and six ^b months, and all the people were filled with joy and offered thanks ^c to God, first of all for the speed (of the work) and next for the king's zeal,^d and as they celebrated they acclaimed the restoration. Then the king sacrificed three hundred oxen to God, and others did similarly, each according to his means. The number of these (sacrifices) it would be impossible to give, for it would exceed our power to give a true estimate. And it so happened that the day on which the work of the temple was completed coincided with that of the king's accession, which they were accustomed to celebrate, and because of the double occasion the festival was a very glorious one indeed.

(7) There was also made for the king a secret underground passage which led from the Antonia to the eastern gate of the inner sacred court, and above

^a The statement in Ant. xx. 219 f. that the temple was not finished until the time of the Procurator Albinus (A.D. 62–64) must refer to the entire complex of buildings. Cf. B.J. v. 36-38 on the work under Agrippa II. Or, as Simons (p. 399) and others suggest, the subsequent work may have been mainly in the nature of ornamentation and repairs, the B.J. account being exaggerated. The same may perhaps be said this he had a tower built for himself in order to be able to go up into it through the underground passage and so protect himself if there should be a revolt of the people against its kings. And it is said that during the time when the temple was being built no rain fell during the day, but only at night, so that there was no interruption of the work. And this story, which our fathers have handed down to us, is not at all incredible if, that is, one considers the other manifestations of power given by God. Such, then, was the way in which the temple was rebuilt.^a of John ii. 20, "The Temple has been in the building [or, "has been built in "] forty-six years," which has been interpreted to mean that it was completed c. A.D. 28-30 or was still incomplete. On this problem cf. Corbishley in JTS 36 (1935), 26 f.; Badcock in Exp. T. 47 (1935), 40 f.; and Cadoux in JBL 56 (1937), 180 note 6.
