TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

THE Periochae, or Summaries, and Obsequens are based for their text on Rossbach (Leipzig, Teubner, 1910). The Oxyrhynchus Summaries have been inserted after the more familiar Summaries of the same Books; the comparison of the two Summaries for such Books as appear in both collections will be found to be of interest. However, a few very scanty fragments from the end of the Oxyrhynchus papyrus will be found by themselves, following the Summary of Book CXLII.

The attempt has been made to give a fairly full report on the text of the traditional Summaries. For the Oxyrhynchus Summaries, the critical notes cover only those additions or corrections to the MS. which seem either to Rossbach or to the present editor to be problematical; the numerous additions made by scholars to the broken text are indicated, but for the names of the scholars to whom these emendations should be credited, the reader is referred to Rossbach.

References in the footnotes to the Summaries are intended to set these scraps of Livy's history in some amount of context, comprising both the extant primary sources and the historical narratives (including Plutarch's biographies) which are better preserved than Livy. An attempt has been made to provide cross references, not only between Summaries, but between Summaries, Fragments, and Obsequens; but the reader is warned not to trust the editor too far, if complete collection of information on a specific point is desired. In some of the cross references, the Oxyrhynchus Summaries are referred to as "O", with the number of the Book following, e.g., O-LII.

The fragments are based on the collections of Weissenborn (Leipzig, Teubner, 1851, reprinted in 1911), Martin Hertz (Leipzig, Tauchnitz, 1863), and H. J. Mueller (Berlin, Weidmann, 1881). At the cost of some clumsiness, the numbering of the Weissenborn series has been maintained, in the hope that, with the appended table of changes in numbering in Hertz' edition, references elsewhere to the fragments of Livy could be found conveniently in this volume. It will be obvious that very few critical notes have been included for the text of the fragments, in the belief that reference to the sources cited will suffice the reader who wishes to scrutinize the text closely.

The present editor considers that a fragment of Livy should consist of a quotation from a lost, not an extant, book, and should probably, if not certainly, refer to Livy's own language, not simply make use of Livy's facts. If the reader prefers a somewhat broader definition, the notes on what the preceding editors have included as fragments may be useful.

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

For the grammarians' fragments, reference is given to the Grammatici Latini of Keil (Leipzig, Teubner, 1857-80; cited as K). Charisius will be found in the first volume, Priscian in the second and third, the anonymous writer in the fifth, and Agroecius and Beda in the seventh.

The present editor has not seen Hertz' discussion De fragmentis T. Livi commentarium (Bratislava, 1864).

In the critical notes on Obsequens, the reader's indulgence is asked for an idiosyncrasy—namely, that the symbol "MS." is used, although the only source of our text is the Aldine editio princeps. The intention was to avoid creating a new symbol; and since Rossbach thinks that the text was not much studied or emended before printing, there may be some propriety in the symbol used.

The notes on Obsequens may give a lead to those whose curiosity, like the editor's, is piqued by these oddities. Book II of Pliny's Natural History gathers together much of this lore.

It has seemed desirable to include maps of Spain, and of the city of Rome, since previous volumes of the L.C.L. Livy have had no occasion to show very much in these areas. The map of Spain will be particularly useful with fragment 18, the most important fragment; and the map of the city may serve to illustrate Obsequens; further light on the communities of Roman citizens mentioned in the latter will be thrown by the maps of Italy in previous volumes of this Livy. The map of Spain is based on Kiepert's Atlas Antiquus; the outline of the map of Rome is based on Richter, Topographie von Rom, Iwan Müller's Handbuch III, Nordlingen, Beck, 1883, by kind permission of the publishers.

FROM OXYRHYNCHUS

BOOK XXXVII

In Spain the Romans were slaughtered.¹ In the consulship of Marcus Fulvius and Gnaeus Manlius, the B.C. 189 Aetolians were for the second time neither granted nor refused peace. Publius Licinius the chief pontiff prevented Praetor Quintus Fabius from setting out for Sardinia, because he was flamen of Quirinus. Peace was granted to King Antiochus. The Lusitanians were ravaged. The colony of Bononia was founded in accordance with a decree of the senate. Acilius Glabrio on seeking the censorship was threatened with prosecution by his rivals and abandoned his undertaking.

BOOK XXXVIII

Ambracia was occupied. The Galatians in Pamphylia were crushed in battle and Phrygia was set free. Origiaco's wife,² a prisoner of high rank, killed a centurion who had assaulted her, when he demanded gold for her release; and she carried his head back to her husband.

The Campanians were given the right to intermarry with Romans. Bloody battles took place between the Achaeans and the Spartans.

In the consulship of Marcus Messala and Gaius Livius B.C. 188 Salinator, the valuable booty from Galatia was brought off by way of Thrace. Lucius Minucius Myrtilus and Lucius Manlius were surrendered to the Carthaginian envoys whom they had struck.

In the consulship of Marcus Lepidus and Gaius B.C. 187 Flaminius, Publius Scipio Africanus went into exile at Laternum after a day for his trial had been set by the Quinti Petillii. Gracchus, a tribune of the people, vetoed his being summoned back. Lucius Cornelius Scipio was condemned on a charge of embezzlement.

BOOK XXXIX

The Ligurians were brought to subjection by Consuls Gaius Flaminius and Marcus Aemilius. The Flaminian and Aemilian roads were built.¹ Twelve thousand Latin persons were compelled to return home from Rome.
When Manlius celebrated an extravagant triumph over the Galatians, the money which was carried in the procession was entirely paid out to individuals.

In the consulship of Spurius Postumius and Quintus B.C. 186 Marcius, on evidence given by Hispala Faecenia, a courtesan, and Aebutius, a ward, against whom his guardian Titus Sempronius Rutilus and his mother Duronias had plotted, the rites of Bacchus were abolished in Italy. The Spaniards were repressed. Contests of athletes were presented for the first time by Fulvius Nobilior. Marcellus persuaded certain Gauls, who had migrated into Italy, to return home. Lucius Cornelius Scipio gave games, with contributed money, in celebration of the war with Antiochus.

In the consulship of Appius Claudius and Marcus B.C. 185 Sempronius, the Ligurians were routed and six towns were taken over from them by storm.

In the consulship of Publius Claudius Pulcher and B.C. 184 Lucius Porcius Licinus, about two thousand persons were convicted by Quintus Naevius of poisoning. Lucius Quinctius Flaminius was removed from the senate by Marcus Cato, because he had, while consul in Gaul, killed with his own hand a prominent Boian, when Flaminius' minion, the Carthaginian Philip, regretted missing a gladiatorial show. The Porcian basilica was built.

In the consulship of Marcus Claudius Marcellus and B.C. 183 Quintus Fabius Labeo, a banquet was given at the funeral celebration of Publius Licinius Crassus, the chief pontiff. Booths for this were placed in the forum, thus fulfilling the prophecy of a soothsayer that there would be booths in the forum. There was a successful campaign in Spain. The surrender of Hannibal was demanded at the court of Prusias by Roman envoys, and Hannibal died by poison.

BOOK XL

In the consulship of Lucius Aemilius and Gnaeus B.C. 182 Baebius, campaigns against the Ligurians and Spaniards were again undertaken. Wars and disputes were settled in Greece and Asia. The Thessalian Theoxena, fleeing with her husband and children, cast herself into the sea. Demetrius was accused by his brother on false charges and was compelled by his father to drink poison.

In the consulship of Publius Lentulus and Marcus B.C. 181 Baebius, the books of Numa were found on the property of Lucius Neryllus,¹ a clerk.

In the consulship of Aulus Postumius and Gaius B.C. 180 Calpurnius, successful campaigns were conducted against the Ligurians and Spaniards. Lucius Livius,² tribune of the people, passed a law defining the age at which a man might stand for each office. He received the nickname Annalis.

In the consulship of Quintus Fulvius and Lucius B.C. 179 Manlius, the enmity of Marcus Lepidus and Fulvius Nobilior was brought to an end at the beginning of their censorship.

¹ The name is given as Petilius in Book XL itself.

XLVI. King Eumenes came to Rome, after straddling in the Macedonian War. To prevent its seeming that he was adjudged an enemy, if he was shut out, or that he had been acquitted, if allowed to enter, a general regulation was passed that no king should be permitted to come to Rome.² Consul Claudius Marcellus defeated the Gauls of the Alps; Consul Gaius Sulpicius Gallus, the Ligurians.³ Envoys from King Prusias complained that Eumenes was devastating Prusias' territory, and said that he had conspired with Antiochus against the Roman People.⁴ An alliance with the Rhodians was entered into at their request.⁵ The half-decade was formally ended by the censors. The count of citizens was three hundred and thirty-seven thousand and twenty-two. The chief of the senate was Marcus Aemilius Lepidus.⁶

left a son Antiochus, a very young boy. This boy B.C. Antiochus and his guardian Lysias were killed by 167-160 Demetrius, the son of Seleucus, who had been a hostage at Rome and had sailed away secretly, because he was not released. Demetrius was received as king.¹ Lucius Aemilius Paulus, who had conquered Perseus, died. His scrupulousness was so great that, although he had brought back vast wealth from Spain and Macedonia, the sum raised at the auction of his effects was hardly large enough to repay his wife's dowry.² The Pomptine Marshes were drained and made arable by Consul Cornelius Cethegus, to whom this task had been officially assigned.³

XLVII. A fine was imposed on Praetor Gnaeus Tremellius, because he had unlawfully opposed Marcus B.C. Aemilius Lepidus, the chief pontiff, and the claim of 160-153 religion won the day over that of civil administration.⁴ A law on bribery was passed.⁵ The half-decade was formally ended by the censors. The number of citizens was three hundred and twenty-eight thousand, three hundred and sixteen. Aemilius Lepidus was chief of the senate for the sixth time.⁶

An agreement was made by the brothers Ptolemy, who were at odds, that one should rule Egypt, the other Cyrene.⁷ Ariarathes, king of Cappadocia, was expelled from his kingdom on the initiative and by the power of Demetrius, king of Syria, and was restored by the senate.⁸

⁵ 159 B.C. A previous law in 181 B.C. is mentioned in XL. xix. 11. When Polybius says (VI. lvi) that bribery is a capital crime at Rome, he is perhaps referring to a feature of the law of 159.

⁶ 159 B.C. It seems likely that the census figures have been confused in transmission. Lepidus' first designation as princeps senatus was in 179 B.C., XL. li. 1, so that this should be his fifth term. Cf. Summary XLVI, note 6.

⁵ 153 B.C.; the date of Rome's founding by this reckoning is 750 B.C., as it is by that of Polybius. The adjustment of the civil year may have been necessary because the calendar had now been set in order, cf. XLIII, Appendix. While

A commission was sent by the senate to settle the ownership of territory as between Masinissa and the Carthaginians.¹ B.C. 160-159

Consul Gaius Marcius campaigned against the Dalmatians, at first without success, but later victoriously. The cause of the war with this people was that they had plundered the Illyrians, who were allies of the Roman People. Consul Cornelius Nasica subdued the Dalmatians.² Consul Quintus Opimius subdued the Ligurians west of the Alps, who had been ravaging Antipolis and Nicaea, towns of the Massilians.³ The book also contains an account of the unsuccessful campaigns in Spain waged by several commanders.⁴ In the five hundred and ninety-eighth year after the founding of the city, the consuls began to enter upon their office on January first. The reason for changing the elections was the uprising of the Spaniards.⁵ The envoys sent to settle the dispute between the Carthaginians and Masinissa reported that they had discovered a large supply of ship timber at Carthage.⁶ Several praetors were prosecuted on a charge of peculation by the provinces, and were convicted.

XLVIII. The half-decade was formally ended by the censurs; there were counted three hundred and twenty-four thousand citizens.⁷ An account is given of the preliminaries of the Third Punic War. When it was reported that a large army of Numidians under Arcobarzanes, the calendar was fast, the year had actually begun near mid-winter, though the calendar gave March as the month.

⁶ The summarizing process makes it seem that these envoys were those mentioned above; cf. note 1; but the dates should be 157 and 153 respectively, and there probably were two embassies according to Livy. Appian mentions only one, and may be following Polybius, while Livy also used Roman sources; cf. his stories of the relations of Rome with Perseus, XLII. xxxvi and xlvi, and with Rhodes, XLIV. xiv. 13 and the note.

⁷ 154 B.C. The censurs were Marcus Valerius Messalla and Gaius Cassius Longinus.

grandson of Syphax, was in Carthaginian territory, B.C. 154-150
 Marcus Porcius Cato advocated that war should be declared on the Carthaginians, because they had an army in their territory which they had brought in ostensibly against Masinissa, but actually against the Romans. After a speech in opposition by Publius Cornelius Nasica, it was voted to send an embassy to Carthage to investigate what was taking place. After rebuking the Carthaginian senate for having an army and ship timber contrary to treaty, the embassy wished to make peace between Carthage and Masinissa, since Masinissa was retiring from the disputed territory. But when the senate said that it would comply with the decision of the ambassadors, Gisgo son of Hamilcar, a riotous fellow who then held a magistracy, so stirred up the people by advocating war against Rome that flight alone saved the envoys from mishandling. Their report of this made a hostile senate still more hostile to Carthage.¹

When Marcus Porcius Cato's son died during his praetorship, his father conducted his funeral at very small expense, according to his means, for he was a poor man.² Andriscus, who insisted vehemently on the lie that he was the son of Perseus, the former king of Macedonia, was sent to Rome.³ Marcus Aemilius Lepidus, who had been chosen chief of the senate by six pairs of censors, instructed his sons on his death-bed to bear him to the grave on a bier spread with linens without purple; for the rest of the funeral, said Lepidus, they were not to spend more than a million asses, for the dignity of the funerals of great men was properly enhanced not by expenditure, but by the parade of ancestral portraits.⁴ An investigation of poisonings was held. Publilia and Licinia, women of social position, were alleged to have murdered their husbands, who were ex-consuls. After a hearing on the case the women assigned real estate to the praetor as bail, and were put to death by decree of their own kinsmen.¹

Gulussa the son of Masinissa reported that recruiting was under way at Carthage, a fleet was being prepared, and obviously war was in the making. Cato advocated declaring war on Carthage; Publius Cornelius Nasica declared that no hasty move should be made; and it was voted that ten envoys should be sent to investigate.²

When Consuls Lucius Licinius Lucullus and Aulus Postumius Albinus were conducting the levy strictly and exempting no one as a favour, they were thrown into prison by tribunes of the people, who were unable to obtain exemption for their friends. When numerous failures in the war in Spain had caused such confusion in the Roman state that no one could be found even to undertake service as military tribune, or to accept a post as staff-officer, Publius Cornelius Aemilianus came forward and announced that he would accept any form of military service to which he should be assigned; by this public-spirited action he aroused everyone to eagerness for military service.³ Though Claudius Marcellus was thought to have reduced all the Celtiberian tribes, Consul Lucullus, his successor, subdued the Vaccae, Cantabri, and other previously unknown Spanish tribes. In the same region, Publius Cornelius Scipio Aemilianus, son of Lucius Paulus, and adopted grandson of Africanus, while serving as military tribune, killed a native challenger, and in the storming of the city of Intercatia exposed himself to an even greater danger, for he was the first to surmount

² The account of these repeated embassies is confusing; Gsell, Histoire Ancienne de l'Afrique du Nord, (1918), III. 333-5: Appian represents the events of 150 B.C. as the first occasion for Roman action against Carthage; G. suggests that Livy has followed, not Polybius, but a Roman annalist who built up Rome's case against her rival.

When the envoys returned from Africa with representatives of the Carthaginians and with Gulussa the son of Masinissa, they reported that they had discovered both an army and a fleet at Carthage. The senate decided to poll the opinions of all the senators. Although Cato and other leading senators urged that an army should be taken to Africa at once, Cornelius Nasica said that he did not believe that there was as yet proper cause for war. Therefore it was voted to refrain from war if the Carthaginians burned their fleet and disbanded their army; if this was not done, the next consuls were to put the question of war with Carthage. When a theatre, contracted for by the censors, was being built, on motion of Publius Cornelius Nasica it was torn down by order of the senate, on the ground that it was inexpedient and would be injurious to the public character; and for some time thereafter the people stood to see theatrical performances.³ When the Carthaginians attacked Masinissa contrary to the treaty, they were beaten. Masinissa was at that time ninety-two years old; his habit was to eat and enjoy plain dry bread without a relish.⁴ The Carthaginians furthermore incurred war with Rome. XLIX. The beginning of the Third Punic War fell in the six hundred and second year after the founding of the city—a war which was concluded within five years from its beginning.² A contest of opposing opinions took place between Marcus Porcius Cato and Scipio Nasica, one of whom was considered a man of the greatest wisdom in the state, while the other had even been adjudged by the senate to be a man of greatest excellence. Cato urged war and the removal and destruction of Carthage, while Nasica opposed him.³ It was voted, however, that whereas the Carthaginians had a navy contrary to the treaty, whereas they had led their army beyond their own territory, whereas they had attacked Masinissa, a friend and ally of the Roman people, and whereas they had not received Masinissa's son Gulussa, who had accompanied the Roman envoys, within their walls, war should be declared on Carthage. Before any troops had been put aboard ship, envoys of Utica came to Rome to put themselves and all they had in the hands of the Romans. This embassy was pleasing as an omen to the senate, and bitter to the Carthaginians.⁴

Games in honour of Father Dis were celebrated at the Tarentum, as prescribed by the Sibylline Books; similar games had been celebrated one hundred years before in the First Punic War, in the five hundred and second year after the founding of the city.⁵

Thirty envoys came to Rome to convey the surrender of Carthage. The opinion of Cato prevailed that the senate should stand by its decision and that the consuls should B.C. 149 set out to war as soon as possible. When the consuls had crossed into Africa, they received the three hundred hostages they had ordered, and all the weapons and engines of war which were at Carthage. They then ordered, on the authority of the senate, that the Carthaginians should build a town elsewhere, but not less than ten miles from the sea. By these insulting terms they drove the Carthaginians to fight. The siege and assault of Carthage was begun by Consuls Lucius Marcius and Manius Manilius.¹ During this siege, when two tribunes with their units rashly broke through the walls where they were carelessly held, and were suffering heavy losses from the townspeople they were extricated by Scipio Africanus. He also relieved with the aid of a few cavalymen a Roman fort which the Carthaginians were storming at night; and when the latter sallied from the city in full force and made a general attack on the Roman camp, Scipio received the chief credit for saving the day. Furthermore, when the consul—for the other consul had gone to Rome for the elections—led his army from its fruitless blockade of Carthage against Hasdrubal, who lay in wait at a difficult pass with abundant forces, Scipio at first advised the consul not to fight on such unfavourable terrain. The opinions of the majority who were jealous both of his wisdom and of his valour prevailed over him, and he entered the pass with the others. When the Roman army was routed and put to flight as he had predicted and two units were trapped by the enemy, he re-entered the pass with a few troops of cavalry, freed the Romans, and brought them back unharmed. This valour of Scipio's even Cato, a man whose tongue was readier for invective, praised in the senate so highly as to say that the others who were serving in the army in Africa were fitting shadows, while Scipio alone was alive; moreover, the Roman people hailed him with such approval that the majority of tribes at the elections voted him into the consulship, although this was illegal because of his age.¹

When Lucius Scribonius, tribune of the commons, proposed a resolution that freedom should be restored to Lusitanians who had been sold in Gaul by Servius Galba after having surrendered at discretion to the Roman People, Cato most vigorously supported the resolution. His speech survives, as part of his History. Quintus Fulvius Nobilior, who had often been assailed by Cato in the senate, answered him on behalf of Galba. Moreover, Galba himself, seeing that he was being condemned, spoke in his own defence so pitifully, clasping his two young sons and the son of Sulpicius Gallus, whose guardian he was, that the resolution was defeated. Three speeches by Galba survive: two were delivered against Libo the tribune of the commons and his resolution about the Lusitanians; the third was against Lucius Cornelius Cethegus, in which Galba admits that he massacred the Lusitanians who were encamped near him, because, he says, he had discovered that they had sacrificed a horse and a man according to their custom and planned to attack his army under cover of the truce.²

A certain Andriscus, a man of the lowest class, styling himself the son of King Perseus, and changing his name to Philip, fled secretly from the city of Rome, to which Demetrius, King of Syria, had sent him precisely because of this false claim of his. Many followers rallied about his lying account as if it were true, and with the army he had collected he seized all of Macedonia either with the consent of the inhabitants or by force. This was the tale he had invented: he was the son of King Perseus and a concu-

bine,¹ and had been given to a certain Cretan to rear, so B.C. 149 that in spite of the accidents of the war which Perseus was then waging against Rome, some scion, as it were, of the royal stock might survive. He had been brought up at Hydramitis² until he was twelve, believing that his father was the man who was rearing him, and without knowledge of his own family. Then when his foster father fell ill and was almost on his death-bed, he finally revealed to Andriscus his parentage and gave his foster mother a writing sealed with the seal of King Perseus, which she was to give to the boy when he reached maturity. His foster father added his dying entreaties that the matter should be kept secret until that time. On reaching maturity, Andriscus was given the writing in which it was said that two hoards of treasure had been left him by his father. At that time he knew that he was a foster son, but did not know his true parentage; his foster mother revealed to him his lineage and begged him, in order to avoid assassination, to depart from that region before the news leaked out to Eumenes, the enemy of Perseus. Frightened by this entreaty, Andriscus said, and also hoping for some aid from Demetrius, he had made his way to Syria and there had first dared to declare who he was.³

By the valour of Aemilianus the army which had been trapped in a defile by the Carthaginians was released . . .
through Charidemus¹ . . . Servius Galba was put on trial for his conduct towards the Lusitanians. His acquittal was secured by his sons, whom he presented with tears to his judges. Macedonia was seized by force of arms by Andriscus, who claimed that he was the son of Philip.
In the consulship of Manilius and Marcius, the fourth² centennial festival which was required, according to the prophecies of the Sibyl, as an offering to Dis, was held at the Tarentum.

L. When the false Philip attempted to invade and seize B.C.
Thessaly, this district was defended by Roman deputies 150-148 at the head of Achaean troops.³ Prusias King of Bithynia, a man of unlimited and basest defects of character, was killed by his son Nicomedes, aided by Attalus King of Pergamum. Prusias had a second son, who is said to have had a single continuous bone growing in place of his upper row of teeth.⁴ Three envoys were sent by the Romans to arrange peace between Nicomedes and Prusias;

the letters poe might also indicate something Carthaginian a schedule of supposed ludi saeculares was drawn up, to justify his celebration of 17 B.C. as the fifth of the series; the first one of these had a head strewn with many scars, another was gouty, and the third was considered stupid in nature. Marcus Cato's comment on that embassy was that it had neither head nor feet nor wits.¹ In Syria, which at that time had a king who was in ancestry the equal of the kings of Macedonia but in idleness and sluggishness resembled Prusias, the kingship was exercised by Hammonius, while the titular king took his ease in cook-shops and brothels. Hammonius put to death not only all the friends of the king, but Queen Laodice and Antigonus the son of Demetrius.²

Masinissa King of Numidia died aged more than ninety, a distinguished man. Among other youthful exploits which he performed during his last years, he was so vigorous even sexually in his old age as to beget a son after he was eighty-six. He left his kingdom undivided to three sons, Micipsa, the eldest, Gulussa, and Mastanabal, who had also been educated in Greek culture, and ordered them to divide it according to the judgment of Publius Scipio Aemilianus. Scipio accordingly assigned the shares of the kingdom which each should rule.³ Scipio also induced Phameas Himilco, commander of the Carthaginian cavalry, a brave man who was of extraordinary service to the Carthaginians, to desert with his force to the Romans.⁴ Of three envoys who had been sent to Masinissa, Marcus Claudius Marcellus was drowned at sea in a storm.⁵ The Carthaginians suspected Hasdrubal, the grandson of Masinissa, who was serving then as their general, of treachery, and killed him in their senate-house.⁶ This suspicion grew from his relationship to Gulussa, who was assisting the Roman auxiliaries. When Publius Scipio Aemilianus stood for the aedileship, he was elected consul by the people. Since he was under age to be made consul lawfully, there was a great struggle between the commons, who campaigned for him, and the senators, who for some time resisted him, before he was exempted from the statutes and declared consul.¹ Manius Manilius stormed several cities surrounding Carthage.² After the false Philip had crushed Praetor Publius Iuventius and his army in Macedonia, he was conquered and captured by Quintus Caecilius, and Macedonia was reconquered.³

office because he had been caught in a sexual offence.¹

In the consulship of Spurius Albinus and Lucius Piso,
His kingdom was divided among his legitimate sons by Aemilianus. Marcellus, sent as envoy to Masinissa, was lost at sea. Hasdrubal, because he was related to Masinissa, was beaten to death with benches in the senate-house by his own people. Scipio Aemilianus was elected consul. A successful campaign was conducted in Africa by Manius Manilius. The army of Praetor Iuventius was crushed in Thessaly. Andriscus was taken prisoner by Metellus. The shrine of Ops and a laurel belonging to the hearth were unharmed by a huge conflagration.³

substantial fleet, but failed to win the naval battle.⁵

possibility is that the figure of four refers to legitimate sons (including the famous four-year-old, cf. the first Summary L), and another figure referred to other sons.

³ Cf. below, Obsequens 19. The shrine was part of the ⁴ 147 B.C. Appian, African Wars 113, follows Polybius in minimizing the success of Mancinus, to the greater glory of Scipio; but Mancinus was elected consul in 145, presumably on the reputation gained before Carthage. Cf. also Zonaras to Valerius Maximus VIII. 15. 4, by decree of the people, according to Appian 112.

difficult terrain near the city of Nepheris, was destroyed along with its garrison by Scipio, who finally took Carthage in the seven-hundredth year after its founding.¹ The greater part of the spoils were given back to the Sicilians from whom they had been taken.² At the final storming of the city, when Hasdrubal surrendered to Scipio, Hasdrubal's wife, who a few days before had been unable to persuade her husband to desert to the conqueror, hurled herself and her two children from the citadel into the midst of the flames of the burning city.³ Scipio, taking his cue from his father Aemilius Paulus, the conqueror of Macedonia, celebrated games and exposed the deserters and fugitive slaves to the wild beasts.⁴ The preliminaries of the Achaean War are recorded as follows: Roman envoys were struck by the Achaeans at Corinth—envoys sent to separate from the Achaean League those states which had been under the control of Philip.⁵

BOOK LI

In the consulship of Publius Cornelius and Gaius Livius, B.C. 147 while Carthage was blockaded the Carthaginians inflicted the most savage cruelties on prisoners.⁶ The besieging Romans damaged Carthage by frequent attacks.

⁵ 148-7 B.C. Personal politics in the Achaean League led to attacks on Sparta by the League, which had gained confidence in dealing with Rome because its troops had put down Andriscus in Macedonia. Rome took the occasion to demand that Sparta, Argos, Corinth, Orchomenus, and Heracleia by Mount Oeta should be dropped from the Achaean League. The mistreatment of the Roman envoys was due to rabble-rousing by Achaean leaders; the lower classes had long been discontented and in difficulties; it is possible that the usual Roman preference for the well-to-do had become apparent. The embassy here referred to was probably that of the spring of 146 B.C., the third Roman embassy which had been disregarded and discourteously treated.

under Viriathus.

² The battle was actually fought at Scarpheia in Loeris, as the Achaean commander did not have the courage to attempt the defence of Thermopylae. Critolaus disappeared during the battle, according to Pausanias VII. xv. 4. Metellus

⁴ Cf. Pausanias VII. xvi. 7f. The standard modern interpretation is that Roman commercial interests wanted to eliminate their chief Greek competitor.

Roman envoys were molested by General Critolaus at B.C. 147
Corinth. The Lusitanians were defeated.¹

In the consulship of Gnaeus Cornelius and Lucius col. VI
Mummio, Carthage was stormed and plundered by B.C. 146 Scipio. When he also set fire to the citadel, the wife of Hasdrubal cast herself with her two sons into the midst of the flames, in order not to put herself in the power of the conqueror. Scipio followed the precedent set by Aemilius, the conqueror of Perseus, in giving games.

LII. Quintus Caecilius Metellus fought a battle at B.C.
Thermopylae against the Achaeans, who had the support 148-144 of Boeotia and Chalcis. After the defeat of the Achaeans, their leader Critolaus committed suicide by poison.²
In his place Diaeus, the original sponsor of the Achaean uprising, was made commander and was defeated at the Isthmus by Consul Lucius Mummio.³ The latter secured the surrender of all Achaea and in accordance with a decree of the senate destroyed Corinth, because the Roman envoys had been mistreated there.⁴ Thebes and Chalcis, which had supported the Achaeans, were also destroyed.⁵
Lucius Mummio himself played a part of extreme self-denial, and none of the works of art and adornments, in which Corinth was very rich, were introduced into his house.⁶ Quintus Caecilius Metellus celebrated a triumph

⁵ This is an exaggeration. The walls of these cities were torn down, some citizens executed, and fines imposed on Thebes for the benefit of Heraclea and Euboea, see Polybius XXXIX. 4-6 (L.C.L.); Pausanias VII. xvi. 9 f.

⁶ On the excellent conduct of Mummio, cf. Polybius XXXIX. 6; his refusal to keep booty is mentioned by Cicero, de Officiis II. 76, Strabo VIII. 381, and others. The stories of Mummio's lack of culture seem to be rhetorical (perhaps originally political) inventions or exaggerations. He gave Corinthian works of art to many communities, even in Spain

this presumably occurred when Mummio was censor in 142

In Spain, Viriathus, first turning from shepherd to hunter, then from hunter to brigand, presently became commander, too, of a regular army, seized all of Lusitania, and captured Praetor Marcus Vetilius after the rout of his army. Next, Praetor Gaius Plautius had no better success, and this enemy raised up such a threat that a consul and a consular army were required against him.²

In addition the book contains an account of the disturbances in Syria and the wars waged between the kings. Alexander, a man of no reputation and of doubtful parentage,³ was ruling in Syria after killing King Demetrius, as has been previously mentioned. This Alexander was slain in war by Demetrius, son of Demetrius, who had at one time been sent away to Cnidus by his father because of the doubtful fortunes of war; he had scorned Alexander's sluggishness and indolence, and had received assistance from Ptolemy, King of Egypt, whose daughter Cleopatra he had taken in marriage.⁴ Ptolemy was severely wounded in the head, and when, in an attempt at healing the wound, the doctors tried to trepan the skull, the king died. His younger brother Ptolemy, the ruler of Cyrene, succeeded to the throne.⁵ Because of the cruelty which Demetrius employed in torturing his subjects, he was defeated in battle by a 148-7 B.C. When Ptolemy saw Alexander's misrule, and Hammonius, Alexander's henchman, tried to assassinate him, he abandoned Alexander, took Cleopatra away from him, and gave her to Demetrius. Diodorus XXXII. 9c, Josephus XIII. 103-109, I Maccabees 10-14, Justinus XXXV. i. 6-11, and Appian, Syrian Wars 67 tell of Demetrius' victory and Alexander's death. The battle was fought at Antioch on the Oenoparas, Strabo XVI. 751.

⁵ Ptolemy's death is related by I Maccabees 11, 14 ff., and Josephus XIII. 119. On the younger Ptolemy's arrangements with his brother, cf. above, Summaries XLVI and XLVII.

Lucius Mummius destroyed Corinth. Diaeus killed his wife and then himself.³ A severe loss was inflicted by the Lusitanians, who avenged the false oaths of the Romans.

In the consulship of Quintus Fabius Maximus and Lucius Hostilius, Marcus Petronius and Lucius Apuleius were sent as ambassadors to Asia,⁴ and Consul Fabius was sent to oppose Viriathus.

In the consulship of Servius Galba and Lucius Cotta, Quintus Metellus, who when praetor had conquered Andriscum, barely won election as consul after being twice rejected. On asking for Spain, he was the target for abuse because he was hated by the commons for his undue strictness.⁵ When Syria was ravaged by wars between the kings, the Roman People did no more than send envoys to them.⁶

³ Cf. Pausanias VII. xvi. 6.

⁴ Polybius XXXII. 16 (28) mentions an embassy by Gaius Petronius and Lucius Apuleius; the difference in one name and the discrepancy, as it seems, of ten years in date make this restoration uncertain.

⁵ The reading is conjectural (see critical note), but is based on de Viris Illustribus 61. 3 and Valerius Maximus VII. v. 4.

⁶ If the restoration is correct, the implication that the Romans might have been expected to intervene directly in Syria at this time would seem to be a notion of the epitomator rather than of Livy.

¹ 143 B.C. Appius Claudius Pulcher took advantage of the strife between the Salassi and the Libicans for the gold-mines of Eporedia, cf. Strabo IV. 205, Dio frg. 74. 1 f. The Salassi were not really "subdued" till Imperial times. Claudius wanted a military victory and got it after some losses; he was refused a triumph by the senate, celebrated it at his own expense, and was protected by his daughter, a Vestal, from a tribune who would have halted him, cf. Valerius Maximus V. iv. 6.

Consul Appius Claudius subdued the Salassi, an Alpine tribe.¹ A second false Philip in Macedonia was slain in the rout of his army by Quaestor Lucius Tremellius.² Quintus Caecilius Metellus as proconsul slaughtered the Celtiberians, and a large part of Lusitania was recovered by Quintus Fabius the proconsul, when he had stormed several cities.³ Acilius, a senator, wrote a history of Rome in Greek.⁴

BOOK LIII

In the consulship of Quintus Metellus and Appius Claudius, the people of Centobriga exposed the children of Rethogenes, a deserter, to the shots of the siege-artillery. Metellus gave up his undertaking,⁵ . . . killed. He received a sword as a present from Tyresius, whom he conquered, gave in return a cloak, and clasped his hand in friendship.⁶ Consul Metellus was harassed by the Lusitanians.⁷ Lucius Mummius distributed statues, monuments, and paintings from Corinth among the towns and adorned Rome with them.⁸

⁷ Metellus campaigned against the Celtiberians (above, first LIII) and it is not clear what he had to do with the Lusitanians. This epitomator mentions the latter with notable frequency.

LIV. Consul Quintus Pompeius subdued the Terrestini in Spain, and made with them and the Numantines a peace-treaty which was repudiated by the Roman People.¹ The half-decade was formally closed by the censors.² The count of citizens was three hundred and twenty-eight thousand, four hundred, and forty-two. Envoys of the Macedonians came to complain of Praetor Decimus Junius Silanus that he had taken bribes and robbed the province. The senate was prepared to investigate their complaints, when Titus Manlius Torquatus, the father of Silanus, successfully requested that the investigation be delegated to him. Having tried the case at his home, he condemned his son and banished him from his sight. When Silanus ended his life by hanging, his father did not even attend the funeral, but sat at home and was at the service of those who wished his advice, as his custom was.³ Proconsul Quintus Fabius won successes in Spain, but marred his record by making a peace with Viriathus which recognized his independence.⁴ Viriathus was assassinated by traitors instigated by Servilius Caepio; he was deeply mourned by his army and given a magnificent burial. He was a great man and a great earliest known instance of this. The Junii Silani took great pride in the relationship thus acquired, and claimed the Manlii as ancestors, cf. Tacitus, Annals III. 76. The condemnation of this Silanus is mentioned also by Cicero, de Finibus I. 24 and Valerius Maximus V. viii. 3. Manlius was an expert in jurisprudence, as is intimated in the last sentence.

⁴ 140 B.C. Fabius' good fortune apparently ran out, and he was compelled to make peace as indicated, or leave the field to his successor, Servilius; the peace was repudiated through the influence of the latter, cf. Appian 69-75. Florus I. xxxiii. 17, and de Viris Illustribus 71. 2 give Popilius, consul in 139 B.C., as the leader against the treaty.

BOOK LIV

Consul Pompeius was thoroughly beaten by the Numantines. A disaster befell the Romans among the Scordisci.²

In the consulship of Quintus Caepio and Gaius Laelius the Wise, Appius Claudius successfully recommended that one year should not see two levies.³ Titus Manlius Torquatus condemned his son Decimus Silanus for his conduct in Macedonia, did not attend his funeral, and on that very day gave answers to those who consulted him in his home. Consul Caepio, perceiving that Tiberius Claudius Asellus, tribune of the commons, was trying to prevent his departure, drew his sword and frightened off the lictor.⁴ Quintus Fabius Maximus, after his defeat by Viriathus, made a disgraceful peace with the enemy. Quintus Occius fell most valiantly when trapped by an ambush of the Lusitanians.⁵ The Anio aqueduct was sacrificed to M. Porcina. The Marcian aqueduct was continued to the Capitol contrary to the Sibylline prophecies.⁶ B.C. 140

¹ This Claudius is presumably the consul of 143 B.C. and father-in-law of Tiberius Gracchus. His resolution against double levies may have been a first move to relieve the commons.

² This tribune seems to have been antisenatorial; Scipio, as censor in 142, had tried to demote him from his tribe, but Mummius, the other censor, restored him; Claudius in turn during his tribunate brought Scipio to trial, cf. Gellius III. iv. 1 and IV. xvii. 1, Cicero, de Oratore II. 258, 268.

⁶ Cicero, de Legibus III. 20 gives this as the action of the above-mentioned (Gaius) Curiatius, who first clashed with the consuls over a distribution of grain, Valerius Maximus III. vii. 3. The Oxyrhynchus Summary, below also mentions

In the consulship of Gnaeus Piso and Gaius Popilius, B.C. 139 the Chaldaeans were ordered to leave Rome and Italy.¹ Aulus Gabinius, grandson of a home-born slave woman, carried a law that electoral votes should be cast by ballot.² Servilius Caepio was shut up in his headquarters and almost burned by the cavalry whom he had exposed to Viriathus.³ Audax, Minurus, and Ditalco were bribed by Caepio to cut Viriathus' throat.

nickname was Serapio—a name given him in mockery by Curiatius, a tribune of the commons) and Decimus Junius Brutus were holding the levy, an occurrence took place which gave very salutary instruction to the recruits who before the tribunes of the commons of having deserted in the yoke and given a prolonged beating with rods, and was sold into slavery for one sestertius.⁵ Because tribunes of the commons did not succeed in obtaining the right to choose ten men apiece for exemption from the levy, they ordered the consuls taken to the gaol.⁶ Consul Junius Brutus in Spain gave to those who had served under Viriathus land and a town, which is called Valentia.⁷

Marcus Popilius and his army were routed and put to them had been declared void by the senate.⁸ When Servius Licinius as a tribune concerned. Nasica was a consistent antidemocrat, cf. his role in suppressing Tiberius Gracchus, Plutarch, Tiberius Gracchus xiii. 3.

⁷ This may not have been Brutus' first act in Spain, cf. the account below of his campaigns, and also LVI; but if Valentia was the present Valentia, the removal of Viriathus' men to the east coast would have been a good early move.

¹ Mancinus attempted to withdraw from Numantia by night, because the discipline of his army was bad, and there were rumours of uprisings in his rear. The Numantines happened to catch him leaving. The numbers involved are probably exaggerated, but the emended reading is based on Florus I. xxxiv. 2. The repudiation of the treaty by which Mancinus' force was released from the trap was not in accord

Consul Gaius Hostilius Mancinus was offering sacrifice, the chickens flew out of the coop; when thereafter he was going aboard ship to leave for Spain, the cry was heard "Stay, Mancinus!" That these were omens of evil was demonstrated by the outcome. For Mancinus was both defeated by the Numantines and stripped of his camp; when no hope remained of saving his army, he made with them a disgraceful peace, confirmation of which was refused by the senate. Forty thousand Romans were beaten by four thousand Numantines.¹ Decimus Junius thoroughly subdued Lusitania by storming its cities all the way to the Ocean. When his men refused to cross the River Oblivion, he seized the standard from its bearer, carried it across, and thus induced the soldiers to pass over.² The King of Syria, son of Alexander, who was only ten years old, was killed by treachery on the part of his guardian Diodotus, whose nickname was "The Luxurious"; Diodotus bribed the doctors, who represented to the people that the boy was wasting away from suffering with a stone, and killed him on the operating table.³

² I.e., Cotta was acquitted. This interpretation of the over-abbreviated text is based on references to this affair in Cicero, pro Murena xxviii. 58; Divinatio in Caecilium xxi. 69; Valerius Maximus VIII. i. acquittal 11 (Valerius speaks of a trial "before the people," and it should be noted that the words in our text indicating a court are restored). The view of the acquittal here given is the pro-senatorial view; Appian, Civil Wars I. iii. 22 cites the case as typical of the bribery and corruption of senatorial courts. Probably both the prosecution and the acquittal were politically motivated. The date of the trial has been usually given as 132-129 B.C., because Cicero refers to Scipio as twice consul, and conqueror of Numantia; from our text, it is clear that this date must be abandoned, and that Cicero, who wanted to emphasize the great reputation and prestige of Scipio, did not bother to everyone's grief, his funeral was escorted by a gathering of the commons.¹ Deserters were beaten with rods in the assembly place and sold into slavery for a sestertius apiece. When Publius Africanus accused Lucius Cotta, the judges were unwilling to let the defendant lose because of the greatness of the prosecutor's reputation.² The Lusitanians were ravaged. A disaster was inflicted by the Numantines.³ Diodotus the Luxurious killed King Antiochus and took possession of Syria.

In the consulship of Marcus Aemilius and Gaius Hostilius Mancinus, Decimus Brutus after a successful campaign in Spain made no bones about crossing the River Oblivion.⁴

LVI. Decimus Junius Brutus conducted a successful campaign against the Gallaeci in Farther Spain.⁵ The outcome was otherwise when Pro-consul Marcus Aemilius Lepidus marched against the Vaccae: he suffered a reverse comparable to that before Numantia.⁶ In order to release the Roman People from the binding force of the treaty with Numantia, Mancinus was surrendered to the Numantines as the man responsible for this arrangement, note that he had not yet performed his second great feat of arms.

³ Details about the mopping-up in Lusitania and the customary lack of success before Numantia are not known.

⁴ It is not clear what meaning is to be given to planus, referring to Brutus; some editors prefer to change the Latin; I have given a somewhat far-fetched interpretation, which seems to make better sense than the more usual meaning "flat, on the level, not elevated," which is commonly applied to things, and which Rossbach seems to favour, and the possible meaning "bare-footed."

⁵ The final success of Brutus was in 134 B.C., cf. Appian, Spanish Wars 73-75, 99, where the name Sextus is incorrect; Strabo III. 152 f.; Velleius II. v. 1.

⁶ 136 B.C. Lepidus undertook the campaign on his own initiative; he was recalled and fined by the senate, cf. Appian 80-83.

² 134 B.C. The censors were Appius Claudius Pulcher and Quintus Fulvius Nobilior.

³ Cf. Appian, Illyrian Wars ii. 10.

⁴ 135 B.C. Cosconius seems to have continued as governor of Macedonia for several years, since his name appears on inscriptions referring to the disturbances in 133 B.C. after the but was not received by them.¹ The half-decade was formally closed by the censors; the number of citizens enumerated was three hundred and seventeen thousand, nine hundred and thirty-three.² Consul Fulvius Flaccus overcame the Vardaei in Illyricum.³ Praetor Marcus Cosconius fought successfully against the Scordisci in Thrace.⁴ Since the Numantine War was dragging along through the fault of the commanders and to the shame of the State, the consulship was offered to Scipio Africanus on the initiative of the senate and the Roman People. He was forbidden to accept this office by a law which ruled that no one should be consul a second time, but as in his first consulship, Scipio was exempted from legal restrictions.⁵ A slave revolt arose in Sicily, and when the praetors could not suppress it, command was assigned to Consul Gaius Fulvius.⁶ The instigator of this revolt was Eunos, a slave of Syrian nationality; he assembled a force of rural slaves, opened the workhouses, and raised his numbers to those of a regular army. Another slave, Cleon, also assembled as many as seventy thousand slaves, and when the forces had joined, they frequently took the field against the Roman army.⁷

Pergamene kingdom was given to Rome. The Scordisci were raiding from the north-west.

⁶ Cf. Orosius V. ix. 6. Gaius Fulvius (Flaccus) was consul in 134 B.C. with Scipio.

² This side-issue of Scipio's campaign may derive its high colour from a Roman annalist. According to Appian, Spanish Wars xiv. 87, Scipio ravaged the crops of the LVII. Scipio Africanus besieged Numantia and recalled his army to the most stringent military discipline, after it had been corrupted by being allowed to indulge itself.¹ Scipio cut off all apparatus of pleasure; he cast out of camp two thousand prostitutes; he kept the soldiery at work daily and compelled them to carry thirty days' grain and seven stakes apiece. When someone had difficulty in marching because of his load, Scipio would tell him, "When you know how to entrench yourself behind your sword, you may stop carrying your rampart with you." To another who was having difficulty in carrying his shield, Scipio said, "You are carrying a shield larger than the regulation; I don't blame you; you're better at managing a shield than a sword." If a soldier was caught out of ranks, Scipio had him beaten with vines, if a Roman, and with rods, if a foreigner. He sold all the baggage animals, so that they might not relieve the soldiers of their loads. He won frequent successes against enemy sallies. The Vaccaei when besieged slaughtered their wives and children and committed suicide.² When magnificent gifts were sent to Scipio by Antiochus the King of Syria, although it was the custom of other commanders to conceal gifts from kings, Scipio declared that he would receive the gifts with public formality, and he ordered the quaestor to enter all the gifts in the official accounts; from these, said Scipio, he proposed to give presents to brave men. When he had completed the circumvallation of Numantia and saw that the besieged were hard pressed by hunger, he gave orders that the enemy who came out to forage should not be killed, because he said that they would the sooner exhaust what grain they had if there were more of them.

LVIII. Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus, a tribune of the commons, carried a land law against the desires of the senate and the order of knights, to the effect that no one should occupy more than a thousand acres of public land¹; B.C. 133 Gracchus then went so insane as to remove from office by special enactment his colleague Marcus Octavius, who was supporting the other side of the controversy²; Gracchus also had himself, his brother Gaius Gracchus, and Appius Claudius his father-in-law elected as the board of three in charge of distributing the land. He also proposed a second land law, in order to put more land at his disposal, that the same commissioners should judge which land was public and which private. Then when there was less land than could be divided up without incurring the hostility of the commons too, because Gracchus had stirred them up to be greedy enough to hope for a large amount, he declared that he would propose a law that the fortune which had belonged to King Attalus should be divided among those who ought to receive land under the Sempronian Law. For Attalus, son of Eumenes, King of Pergamum had made the Roman People his heir.³

² 133 B.C. Cf. Plutarch, Tiberius Gracchus. Tiberius' action against Octavius was based on a justified sense that a tribune, traditionally a defender of the commons, should not act for the "haves" against the "have-nots"; but balancing one magistrate against another was a key-principle of the Roman constitution. Roman political tact—the instinct for adjusting to the grievances and rights of others—begins to break down at this point; the partisan spirit led to civil war within fifty years. Losses in Spain may have made acute the problems Tiberius was striving to solve.

The senate was deeply stirred by so many actions ignoring its prestige; the ex-consul Titus Annius was especially moved.⁴ After he had delivered a speech in the senate against Gracchus, he was summoned before the people by the latter, and accused before the commons; Annius again made a public address against Gracchus from the Rostra. When Gracchus wished to be elected tribune of the commons for the second time, he was killed on the Capitol by men of the "upper class" led by Publius Cornelius Nasica. Gracchus was first struck down with pieces of a bench, and then with others who were killed in the same riot was thrown unburied into the river. The book also contains an account of the campaigns conducted in Sicily against the fugitive slaves with varying success.

³ Attalus died of disease (Strabo XIII. 624) or sunstroke (Justinus XXXVI. iv. 5). His bequest to Rome is attested by Pergamene inscription 249.

⁴ Titus Annius (Luseus) had been consul in 153 B.C. Cf. Plutarch, Tiberius xiv. Annius' speech against Tiberius is quoted by Festus 316 (= 416 Lindsay).

LIX. The Numantines, being hard pressed by hunger, thrust one another through and slew themselves; Scipio Africanus captured and destroyed the town and celebrated his triumph over it, in the fourteenth year after the destruction of Carthage.¹ Consul Publius Rupilius brought an end to the war in Sicily against the fugitive slaves.² Aristonicus, a son of King Eumenes, seized Asia, although it was to be autonomous after it had been bequeathed to the Roman People by the will of King Attalus. Consul Publius Licinius Crassus, who was also chief pontiff—a situation which had never arisen before—left Italy to oppose Aristonicus, was beaten in battle, and was killed. Consul Marcus Perperna overcame Aristonicus and received his surrender.³ Quintus Pompeius and Quintus Metellus, censors both of plebeian origin—the first time this had happened—formally closed the half-decade; there were enumerated three hundred and eighteen thousand, eight hundred and twenty-three citizens, not counting wards of both sexes, and widows.⁴ Censor Quintus Metellus proposed that everyone should be compelled to marry in order to produce children. His speech is preserved, and was read by Augustus Caesar before the senate as though written for the present day, when the emperor was discussing the problem of marriage (Dives Mucianus). The latter was consul in 131 B.C.; he was a partisan of the Gracchi; as consul he used his power as chief pontiff to bar his colleague, who was also a priest, from the command in Asia, but disregarded the restriction on himself, as hinted in the text. His defeat occurred in 130 B.C., as he was about to retire from the province. Perperna, consul in 130 B.C., was a plebeian and a "new man." He died shortly after the defeat of Aristonicus, who was later executed at Rome.

The exact saying of Scipio about Tiberius is quoted by Velleius II. iv. 4: "If he planned a coup d'état, he was justly killed."

among the upper classes.¹ Gaius Atinius Labeo, tribune of the commons, ordered Censor Quintus Metellus, who had passed him by in revising the roll of the senate, to be thrown from the Tarpeian Rock; the other tribunes of the commons came to the aid of Metellus to prevent this from taking place.² When Carbo, a tribune of the commons, proposed a law that it should be permissible to re-elect a man tribune of the commons as often as he chose, Publius Africanus argued against the law in a very weighty speech, in the course of which he said that he thought that Tiberius Gracchus had been killed justly. Gaius Gracchus on the other hand argued for the law, but Scipio carried the day.³

An account is given of the wars between King Antiochus of Syria and King Phraates of Parthia,⁴ and of the no less disturbed situation in Egypt. Ptolemy, surnamed the Benefactor, being hated by his people because of his excessive cruelty, fled secretly to Cyprus after his palace had been set on fire by the populace. When the crown was given by the people to his sister Cleopatra, whom he had divorced after violating and marrying her virgin daughter, Ptolemy in his anger killed in Cyprus the son he had had by Cleopatra and sent the head, hands, and feet to the child's mother.⁵

Civil disturbances were incited by the board of three—Fulvius Flaccus, Gaius Gracchus, and Gaius Papirius Carbo—elected to divide the land. After Publius Scipio Africanus had appeared in opposition, and had returned home that day in vigorous good health, he was found next day dead in his bedchamber. His wife Sempronia was suspected of having poisoned him, chiefly on the ground that she was the sister of the Gracchi with whom Scipio had been quarrelling. However, no judicial investigation of his death was held.¹ After his death, the disturbances centring around the Board of Three blazed up more fiercely.² Consul Gaius Sempronius at first met with no success against the Iapydae; presently the loss incurred was cancelled by a victory won through the ability of Decimus Junius Brutus, the man who had conquered Lusitania.³

⁴ Antiochus VII Euergetes Sidetes campaigned against Phraates II in 130 B.C. with great success, but was defeated and killed in the following year.

⁵ The involved matrimonial arrangements, of which Livy shows the worst aspect, did not prevent Ptolemy and the two Cleopatras, mother and daughter, from ruling Egypt jointly from 143-2 B.C. to 132-1. Suspicion of foul play was widespread and eagerly adopted as a partisan weapon; but it was directed against Carbo as much as against the Gracchan ladies, and seems to have had no genuine foundation in fact, cf., e.g., Cicero, de Amicitia v. 10-12. 14 and the scholia Bobiensia on pro Milone p. 283.

LX. ⁸ The censors were Lucius Cassius Longinus Ravilla, famed for his enunciation of the judicial principle "Cui bono?" and Gnaeus Servilius Caepio (Frontinus, Aqueducts I. 8; Cicero, Verres II. I. 143; pro Roscio Amerino 84).

Gaius Gracchus, the brother of Tiberius and a better speaker than his brother, carried as tribune of the commons several ruinous laws, among which were: a law on the grain supply, that grain should be sold for six and one-third asses to the commons; a second law concerning land, such as his brother also had carried; and a third law, as a means of seducing the order of knights, which was at that time in harmony with the senate, to the effect that six hundred of the knights should be joined to the body of the senate and, since at that time there were only three hundred senators, that these three hundred senators should be amalgamated with six hundred knights, which meant that the order of knights would have a two-to-one majority in the senate. When Gracchus was continued as tribune for a second year, he passed land laws and brought about the foundation of several colonies in Italy and one on the site of destroyed Carthage; for the last, he himself was appointed to the Board of Three and founded the colony.¹

In addition, the book contains an account of the campaign of Consul Quintus Metellus against the Baleares, whom the Greeks call Gymnesians, because they spend the summer unclothed. They are called Baleares because of hurling missiles, or else after Balius, a companion left behind there by Hercules when he sailed after Geryon.² An account is also given of the disturbances in Syria, during which Cleopatra put to death her husband Demetrius, and then her son Seleucus, because she resented his assuming the crown without her permission, after she had killed his father.³

LXI. Proconsul Gaius Sextius conquered the Salluvian tribe and founded the colony of Aquae Sextiae, which was named after the abundance of waters from hot and cold springs, and after the name of the proconsul.¹ Proconsul Gnaeus Domitius fought successfully against the Allobroges before the town of Vindalium. The reason for waging war on them was that they received Toutomotulus the king of the Salluvii, when he had fled, and assisted him with all their power; also that they had devastated the land of the Aedui, allies of the Roman People.² Gaius Gracchus, after passing a riotous tribuneship, proceeded also to seize the Aventine with an armed mob, and was routed and killed by Lucius Opimius the consul, in accordance with a decree of the senate, after the people had been summoned to arms. Along with Gracchus was killed Fulvius Flaccus, an ex-consul, and his comrade in like madness.³ Consul Quintus Fabius Maximus, grandson of Paulus, fought successfully against the Allobroges and Bituitus the king of the Arverni.⁴ One hundred and twenty thousand of Bituitus' army were killed; after the king himself had set out for Rome to make his peace with the senate, he was placed in custody at Alba, because his return to Gaul seemed not to be in the interest of peace. It was also decreed that his son Congonnetiacus should be arrested and sent to Rome.⁵ The surrender of the Allobroges was accepted. LXII. Consul Quintus Marcius routed the Styni, an Alpine tribe.¹ Micipsa king of Numidia at his death left his kingdom to three sons, Adherbal, Hiempsal, and Jugurtha, his brother's son, whom he had adopted.² Lucius Caecilius Metellus subdued the Dalmatians.³ Jugurtha assailed his brother Hiempsal in war; the latter was conquered and killed. Jugurtha drove Adherbal out of his kingdom. This prince was restored by the senate.⁴ Lucius Caecilius Metellus and Gnaeus Domitius Ahenobarbus as censors removed thirty-two from the senate.⁵ In addition, the book contains the disturbances in Syria and among the kings.⁶

LXIV. Adherbal was assailed in war by Jugurtha, B.C. 112-109 besieged in the town of Cirta, and put to death, contrary to the proclamation of the senate. On this account, war was declared against Jugurtha,² and Consul Calpurnius Bestia was ordered to conduct it. He concluded with Jugurtha a treaty unauthorized by the people and the senate.³ Jugurtha was summoned and came to Rome under safe-conduct to reveal the sponsors of his plots, because it was being said that he had corrupted by bribes a large number of senators. He proceeded to murder a certain prince, Massiva by name, who was laying claim to Jugurtha's kingdom because the latter was in bad odour with the Romans. On this account Jugurtha was in danger of standing trial for his life, and fled secretly. As he left the city he is said to have remarked, "O venal city! How soon it will perish if it find a purchaser!"⁴ Aulus Postumius, a staff officer, lost a battle to Jugurtha and further perpetrated a disgraceful peace treaty, which the senate voted not to ratify.⁵

LXV. Consul Quintus Caecilius Metellus routed Jugurtha in two battles and devastated all Numidia.⁶ Consul B.C. 109-107 Marcus Junius Silanus lost a battle to the Cimbri.⁷ The senate refused the demand of envoys of the Cimbri for an abode and land on which to settle.⁸ Proconsul Marcus Minucius fought successfully against the Thracians.⁹ Consul Lucius Cassius and his army were slaughtered in time since King Tarquin, and he was cashiered.¹ In the triumph of Gaius Marius, Jugurtha with his two sons was led before the triumphal chariot and was killed in the gaol.² Marius entered the senate in his triumphal dress, which no one previously had done. Because of dread of the war against the Cimbrī, Marius' consulship was renewed for several years. The second and third times he was away when elected, and he achieved a fourth consulship by a pretence of making no campaign for it.³ Gnaeus Domitius was elected chief pontiff by vote of the people.⁴ The Cimbrī devastated all the land between the Rhone and the Pyrenees, crossed through a pass into Spain, and there after devastating many districts were routed by the Celtiberians. also.¹ The latter drove back from the Alps and put to flight Proconsul Quintus Catulus, who was trying to block the Alpine passes, and who had left a lofty fort at the Atesis River which he had garrisoned with one cohort. This cohort, however, extricated itself by its own unaided gallantry and overtook the fleeing proconsul and his army.² The Cimbri had by this time crossed into Italy, and were beaten in battle by the combined forces of the above-mentioned Catulus and Gaius Marius. In this battle it is recorded that one hundred and forty thousand of the enemy were killed and sixty thousand were captured.³ Marius was hailed with the unanimous applause of the whole state, but was satisfied with a single triumph instead of the two which were offered him at that time.⁴ The leading men of the state, who had for some time held a grudge against him as a man without family background who had been elevated to posts of such importance, now admitted that the state had been preserved by him.⁵

Publicius Malleolus, who had killed his mother, was the first to be sewn into a sack and hurled into the sea.⁶ The report is given that the sacred shields were shaken and rattled before the conclusion of the Cimbric War.⁷ The book also includes the wars waged in the royal family of Syria.⁸

² The land law was for the benefit of Marius' veterans, cf. Plutarch xxix, Appian, Civil Wars I. 29-31; Saturninus also planned to make the veterans citizens in colonies, cf. Cicero, pro Balbo 48. The city populace rioted in opposition to this extension of their privileges, and Saturninus conducted counter-riots. A special clause requiring the senate to uphold the law was perhaps aimed at Metellus, whom both Marius and Saturninus hated. On Metellus' behaviour, cf. also Cicero, ad Familiares I. ix. 16; Seneca, Epistles xxiv. 4. (L.C.L.).

slain by the soldiers, was elected tribune of the commons B.C. 100 by violence.¹ He conducted his tribunate as lawlessly as his campaign; after passing a land law by violence, he indicted Metellus Numidicus because he had not sworn to uphold it. The better class of citizens rallied to Metellus' defence, but to avoid being a cause of strife, he went into voluntary exile at Rhodes, and there found distraction in hearing and reading distinguished philosophers.² After Metellus left, Gaius Marius, the man responsible for the civil strife, who had bought his sixth consulship by strewing money among the tribes, banned Metellus from fire and water.³ The same Apuleius Saturninus, tribune of the commons, killed Gaius Memmius, a candidate for the consulship, because he feared him as an opponent of his proceedings.⁴ The senate was aroused at these crimes; and Gaius Marius too, being a man of shifting and changeable nature, and one to shift his policy as chance directed, had come over to their side. Saturninus, along with Praetor Glaucia and other comrades in the same madness, was put down by military force and killed in a sort of war.⁵ Quintus Caecilius Metellus was brought back from exile to the loud applause of the whole state.⁶ Proconsul Manius Aquilius put an end to a slave war which had arisen in Sicily.⁷

⁴ Memmius was anti-senatorial; Glaucia, named below as an associate of Saturninus, was a candidate for the consulship.

⁵ Considering that Marius did not wish to be dominated by Saturninus and Glaucia, and that he may even have disapproved at this time of continued murdering of opponents as a political measure, the charge of shiftiness seems overdone; but Marius was not a shrewd or long-sighted political calculator. LXX. When Manius Aquilius was standing trial for extortion, he was unwilling to make an appeal to the jury, but Marcus Antonius, who was concluding his speech in defence of Aquilius, tore the shirt from his chest in order to display his honourable scars. Aquilius was acquitted with no hesitation. Cicero is the only writer who tells of this incident.¹ Proconsul Titus Didius fought successfully against the Celtiberians.² Ptolemy king of Cyrene, whose personal name was Apion, died and left the Roman People as his heir; accordingly the senate decreed that the cities of that kingdom should be independent.³ Ariobarzanes was restored to the throne of Cappadocia by Lucius Cornelius Sulla.⁴ Envoys of the Parthians, sent by king Arsaces, came to Sulla to seek the friendship of the Roman People.⁵ Publius Rutilius, a man of unblemished conduct, was hated by the order of knights, because as deputy of Proconsul Gaius Mucius he had protected Asia against the injustice of the tax gatherers. Since the knights had control of the courts, Rutilius was condemned for extortion and sent into exile.⁶ Praetor Gaius Sentius lost a battle to the Thracians.⁷ The senate refused to endure the licence of the order of knights in managing the courts, and began to bend every effort to transfer control to the senate itself. The cause of the senate was supported by Marcus Livius Drusus, tribune of the commons, who stirred up the commons with the ruinous hope of gratuities in order to strengthen his position.⁸ The book also includes disturbances in Syria and among the kings.⁹

LXXI. Marcus Livius Drusus, tribune of the commons B.C. 91 had undertaken to support the cause of the senate; in order to bring greater resources to the maintenance of this task, he stirred up the allies and the peoples of Italy to hope for Roman citizenship. With the assistance of the Italians he carried by force laws on the distribution of land and grain, and also pushed through a law on the courts, to the effect that control of the courts should be equally shared by the senate and the order of knights. When after these events the promised grant of citizenship for the allies could not be effected, the Italians were enraged and began to promote a revolt. Their gatherings and conspiracies, and the speeches in conference of their leading men are reported in the book. These events made Livius Drusus detested even by the senate as being a promoter of rebellion among the allies; he was cut down in his own home by an unknown assassin.¹

LXXII. The following Italian peoples rebelled: the Picentes, Vestini, Marsi, Paeligni, Marrucini, Samnites, and Lucanians.² The opening move of the war was made by the Picentes; in the town of Asculum, Proconsul Quintus Servilius and all the Roman citizens who were in the town were killed.³ The Roman people donned military cloaks. Servius Galba was arrested by the Lucanians and was released from captivity by the action of a lone woman with whom he had been lodging. The colonies of Aesernia and Alba were besieged by the Italians. An account is given of the troops sent by the Latin Name and foreign nations to the relief of the Roman People; also recorded are campaigns and the storming of cities by both sides.

LXXIII. Consul Lucius Julius Caesar lost a battle to the B.C. 90 Samnites.¹ The colony of Nola came into the hands of the Samnites, along with Praetor Lucius Postumius, who was put to death by them.² Numerous peoples deserted to the enemy. After Consul Publius Rutilius had fought unsuccessfully against the Marsi and had fallen in that battle, his deputy Gaius Marius was more successful in a battle against the enemy.³ Servius Sulpicius routed the Paeligni in battle.⁴ Quintus Caepio, a deputy of Rutilius, was besieged and made a successful sally against the enemy; because of this success his authority was made equal to that of Gaius Marius. Caepio thereupon grew reckless, was lured into an ambush, and fell in the rout of his army.⁵ Consul Lucius Julius Caesar fought successfully against the Samnites.⁶ Because of this victory, military cloaks were laid aside at Rome. That the fortunes of war might be fickle, the colony of Aesernia, along with Marcus Marcellus, fell into the hands of the Samnites.⁷ For the Romans again, Gaius Marius routed the Marsi in a battle, after Hierius Asinius the general of the Marrucini had been slain.⁸ Gaius Caecilius subdued a rebellion of the Salluvii in Transalpine Gaul.⁹

The deputy Sulpicius crushed the Marrucini, and recovered that whole region. Gnaeus Pompeius as proconsul received the surrender of the Vestini and Paeligni.² The Marsi also were broken by the deputies Lucius Cinna and Caecilius Pius in several battles and began to ask for peace. Mithridates King of Pontus.¹ When the consuls Quintus Pompeius and Lucius Sulla opposed him, Sulpicius met them with violence, and Quintus Pompeius, son of Consul Quintus Pompeius and son-in-law of Sulla, was killed, whereupon Consul Lucius Sulla entered the city with an army and, battling the party of Sulpicius and Marius in the city itself, drove them out.² Of this party twelve, including Gaius Marius senior and junior, were adjudged public enemies by the senate.³ While Publius Sulpicius was hiding in a certain country-house, he was dragged out and killed on information given by his own slave. The slave was given his freedom, in order to pay him the reward promised to an informer, and was thrown from the Tarpeian Rock because of his crime in betraying his master.⁴ Gaius Marius junior crossed over to Africa. The elder Marius hid in the swamps belonging to Minturnae, but was dragged out by citizens of that town. A slave of Gallic nationality was sent to kill him, but withdrew appalled by the dignity of so great a man. Marius was put aboard a ship by the town and carried to Africa.⁵

Lucius Sulla established order in the state, and thereafter sent out colonies.⁶ Consul Quintus Pompeius set out to take over the army of Proconsul Gnaeus Pompeius, and was murdered at the instigation of the latter.⁷ Mithridates King of Pontus seized Bithynia and Cappadocia and routed the deputy Aquilius; he then entered Phrygia, a province of the Roman people, with a large army.⁸

He assailed the city of Rhodes, which alone remained loyal to the Roman People, but retired after being beaten in several naval battles. Archelaus the King's officer came into Greece with an army and seized Athens. The book also includes the turmoil in the cities and islands, as some tried to draw their states to the side of Mithridates, others to that of Rome.¹

B.C. 87

LXXIX. When Consul Lucius Cornelius Cinna was passing ruinous laws by violence and force of arms, he along with six tribunes of the commons, was driven from the city by his colleague Gnaeus Octavius.² After Cinna was deprived of his authority, he brought the army of Appius Claudius under his control by bribery and made war on the city of Rome, after summoning Gaius Marius, along with the other exiles, from Africa.³ In this campaign two brothers, one of Pompeius' army, the other from that of Cinna, came unwittingly to blows; when the winner was stripping his slain rival, he recognized his brother, broke into loud laments, and when he had built his brother's pyre, he stabbed himself on it and was consumed in the flames with his victim.

Although the struggle could have been crushed at its outset, Cinna and Marius were strengthened not only by the treachery of Gnaeus Pompeius, who lent strength to Cinna by cultivating both sides, and did not come to the aid of the better sort till their situation was desperate,⁴ but also by the inertia of the consul. The rebels besieged Rome with four armies, two of which were entrusted to LXXX. The citizenship was granted by the senate to the peoples of Italy.² The Samnites, who alone took up arms again, joined Cinna and Marius. The deputy Plautius and his army were beaten by these Samnites.³ Cinna and Marius, along with Carbo and Sertorius, attacked the Janiculum, were routed by the consul Octavius, and retired. Marius stormed the colonies of Antium, Aricia, and Lanuvium. When no hope of holding out remained to the better sort, because of the inertia and treachery both of the commanders and of the soldiers,⁴ who because of bribery either refused to fight or deserted to the opposite side, Cinna and Marius were received in the city, and proceeded to ravage it with slaughter and plundering as if they had captured it. Consul Gnaeus Octavius was killed, and all the outstanding men of the opposing party were slaughtered, among them Marcus Antonius, a most eloquent man, and Gaius and Lucius Caesar; their heads were placed on the Rostra. The younger Crassus was killed by the cavalry of Fimbria. The elder Crassus stabbed himself with his sword, to avoid suffering a fate unworthy of his valour.⁵

to be cast from the Tarpeian Rock; and after committing B.C. 87 innumerable crimes, Marius died on the thirteenth of January, a man about whom it would be hard to say, if his vices and virtues are scrutinized together, whether the excellence of his services in war outweighed the damage he did in peace, or the reverse. So true is it that as a soldier he saved the state, and as a civilian first confounded that same state with all manner of trickery, and in the end made devastating war on it.¹

LXXXI. Lucius Sulla besieged Athens, which had been seized by Archelaus, Mithridates' officer; when after severe exertions Sulla captured the town, he left it its autonomy and its property.² Magnesia, the only city in Asia which had remained loyal, was defended against Mithridates with the utmost valour.³ The book also contains raids by the Thracians into Macedonia.⁴

Papirius Carbo a se ipsis consules per biennium creati bellum contra Syllam praepararent, effectum est per L. Valerium Flaccum principem senatus, qui orationem in senatu habuit, et per eos qui concordiae studebant, ut legati ad Syllam de pace mitterentur. Cinna ab exercitu suo, quem invitum cogeat naves conscendere et adversus Syllam proficisci, interfectus est. Consulatum Carbo solus gessit. Sylla cum in Asiam traiecisset, pacem cum Mithridate fecit ita, ut his cederet provinciis: Asia, Bithynia, Cappadocia. Fimbria desertus ab exercitu, qui ad Syllam transierat, ipse se percussit impetravitque de servo suo, praebens cervicem, ut se occideret.

LXXXIII. Flavius Fimbria routed in battle several officers of Mithridates in Asia, captured the city of Pergamum, and narrowly failed to capture the King in the course of the siege. Fimbria stormed and destroyed the city of Ilium, which was waiting to hand itself over to Sulla, and recovered a large part of Asia.¹ Sulla cut the Thracians to pieces in numerous battles. When Lucius Cinna and Gnaeus Papirius Carbo, self-appointed as consuls for two years, were preparing a campaign against Sulla, Lucius Valerius Flaccus, the chief of the senate, made a speech in the senate and with the help of those who were pressing for harmony brought it about that envoys were sent to Sulla to discuss peace. Cinna was put to death by his army, which he was trying to force against its will to embark and set out against Sulla. Carbo held the consulship without colleague.² When Sulla crossed over to Asia, he made peace with Mithridates on condition that the latter evacuate the following provinces; Asia, Bithynia, and Cappadocia.³ Fimbria was abandoned by his army, which deserted to Sulla; he stabbed himself, offered his neck to his slave, and persuaded the latter to kill him.⁴

LXXXIV. Sulla replied to the envoys who had been sent by the senate that he would submit to the authority of the senate, if the citizens who had taken refuge with him after being driven out by Cinna were reinstated. Although this stipulation seemed fair to the senate, agreement was prevented by Carbo and his party, who thought that war was more to their interest. The same Carbo wished to demand hostages from all the towns and colonies of Italy, in order to secure their loyalty against Sulla, but he was prevented by the united sentiment of the senate.⁵ The right to vote was given by decree of the senate to the new Freedmen were distributed among the thirty-five tribes. The book also contains the preparations for the campaign which was being drummed up against Sulla.

LXXXV. Sulla crossed to Italy with his army; he sent envoys to discuss peace, and when they were mistreated by Consul Gaius Norbanus, Sulla conquered this same Norbanus in battle.³ When Sulla was about to attack the camp of the other consul, Lucius Scipio, with whom he had made every effort to come to terms without success, the entire army of the consul, on being invited by soldiers sent by Sulla, carried their standards over to Sulla. Although Scipio might have been executed, he was released.⁴ Gnaeus Pompeius, son of the Gnaeus Pompeius who had taken Asculum, enrolled a volunteer army and came to Sulla with three legions.⁵ All the leading men made their way to Sulla, so that the pilgrimage to his camp left Rome deserted. In addition, an account is given of the marching and counter-marching of the commanders of both factions all over Italy. ^{B.C. 83} of his cruelty and greed.¹ Lucius Philippus, a staff officer of Sulla, seized Sardinia after the defeat and death of Praetor Quintus Antonius.² Sulla came to terms with the peoples of Italy, to preclude his being regarded as a threat to their recently gained status as citizens with the right to vote. Again, out of confidence in the victory which was now assured, he ordered men who brought suits before him to deposit their bonds at Rome, although the city was still in the possession of the other party. Praetor Lucius Damasippus assembled the senate by decision of Consul Gaius Marius, and butchered all of the leading men who were in Rome. Among these, Quintus Mucius Scaevola, the chief pontiff, was cut down as he fled in the entry to the temple of Vesta.³ The book also includes the renewal by Lucius Murena of war in Asia against Mithridates.⁴

Among other enormities he ordered all the Praenestines, who were disarmed, to be cut down, and put Marius, a man of senatorial rank, to death after breaking his legs and arms, cutting off his ears, and gouging out his eyes.¹ When Gaius Marius was besieged in Praeneste by Lucretius Ofella, a man of Sulla's party, he tried to escape by a tunnel which was blocked by the hostile army, and determined on death. That is, in the very tunnel, when he realized that he could not escape, he and Telesinus, his companion in flight, both drew their swords and dashed at each other; Marius killed Telesinus and, being himself wounded, persuaded his slave to kill him.²

proscribed of the right to stand for office, and auctioned off their property, a very large amount of which he pocketed for his own use. The proceeds were three hundred and fifty million sesterces.¹ Quintus Lucretius Ofella dared to seek the consulship against Sulla's wishes; Sulla ordered him to be cut down in the Forum; and when the Roman People took this amiss, Sulla called a public meeting and announced that he had ordered the deed.² Gnaeus Pompeius conquered and killed in Africa Gnaeus Domitius, one of the proscribed, and Hierta, King of Numidia, who were stirring up a war. At the age of twenty-four, while still a Roman Knight, Pompey celebrated a triumph for his African campaign—an unprecedented honour.³ When the ex-consul Gaius Norbanus, a proscribed man, was arrested in the city of Rhodes, he killed himself.⁴ Mutilus, one of the proscribed, came secretly with muffed head to the rear door of the house belonging to his wife, Bastia; he was not admitted, his wife saying that he was proscribed; and so he stabbed himself and besprinkled his wife's doorway with his blood.⁵ Sulla recovered Aesernia in Samnium. under the leadership of Crixus and Spartacus. They defeated in battle the deputy Claudius Pulcher and Praetor Publius Varenus.¹ Proconsul Lucius Lucullus destroyed the army of Mithridates near the city of Cyzicus by starvation and sword; after driving from Bithynia the King, who was broken by various disasters of war and shipwreck, Lucullus compelled him to seek refuge in Pontus.²

XCVI. Praetor Quintus Arrius crushed Crixus, the leader of the runaways, together with twenty thousand men. Consul Gnaeus Lentulus lost a battle to Spartacus. The same leader defeated Consul Lucius Gellius and Praetor Quintus Arrius in battle.³ Sertorius was killed at a banquet by Marcus Perperna, Manius Antonius, and other conspirators, in the eighth year of his leadership—a great leader, more often than not the victor over two generals, Pompey and Metellus, but towards the end savage and prodigal. The command over his faction was transferred to Marcus, whom Gnaeus Pompeius conquered, took prisoner, and put to death; Pompey recovered Spain in about the tenth year after the war was begun.⁴ Proconsul Gaius Cassius and Praetor Gnaeus Manlius lost a battle to Spartacus, and this campaign was entrusted to Praetor Marcus Crassus.⁵

XCVII. Praetor Marcus Crassus first fought a winning battle with a portion of the runaway slaves, which was made up of Gauls and Germans, and killed thirty-five thousand of the enemy, as well as their leaders Castus and Gannicus. Then Crassus fought to a finish with Spartacus,

These consuls restored the power of the tribunes.⁵ The juries were also transferred to the Roman knights by Praetor Marcus Aurelius Cotta.⁶ Mithridates was compelled by his hopeless situation to take refuge with Tigranes King of Armenia.⁷

He brought the war against them to an end in Cilicia, received the surrender of the pirates and gave them land and cities.⁷ The book also includes the achievements of Quintus Metellus against the Cretans, and an exchange of letters between Metellus and Gnaeus Pompeius. Quintus Metellus complains that the glory of his achievements has been stolen by Pompey, who sent his officer to Crete to receive the surrender of cities. C. Gaius Manilius, tribune of the commons, to the great indignation of the leading men passed a law to entrust the Mithridatic War to Pompey. His address was excellent.¹ Quintus Metellus completely subdued the Cretans and established regulations for an island which up to that time had been free.² Gnaeus Pompeius set out to wage war against Mithridates, renewed the friendship with Phraates King of the Parthians, and defeated Mithridates in a cavalry battle.³ The book also includes the war fought between Phraates King of the Parthians and Tigranes King of the Armenians, and thereafter the war between the younger Tigranes and his father.⁴

CI. Gnaeus Pompeius defeated Mithridates in a night engagement and compelled him to flee to Bosphorus.⁵ Pompey received the surrender of Tigranes and restored the rule of Armenia to him after depriving him of Syria, Phoenicia, and Cilicia.⁶ A conspiracy, formed by those who had been condemned for bribery in their campaign for the consulship, and aimed at the assassination of the consuls, was suppressed.⁷ While Gnaeus Pompeius was in pursuit of Mithridates, he penetrated to most remote and unknown tribes; he conquered in battle the Hiberi and Albani, who tried to deny him passage. The book also includes the flight of Mithridates through the Colchians and Heniochi, and his actions in Bosphorus.⁸

CII. Gnaeus Pompeius organized Pontus as a province.⁹ Pharnaces son of Mithridates made war on his father. He besieged Mithridates in his palace; Mithridates took poison, but had little success in bringing about his own death, so begging a Galatian soldier named Bitocus to help him, he received his death-blow from him.¹ Gnaeus Pompeius subdued the Jews; he captured their holy city Jerusalem, which had previously remained inviolate.² After Lucius Catilina had twice suffered defeat in the consular elections, he conspired with Praetor Lentulus, Cethegus, and many others to slaughter the consuls and the senate, set fire to the city, and destroy the commonwealth; an army was also made ready in Etruria. This conspiracy was extirpated by the energy of Marcus Tullius Cicero. Catiline was driven from the city, and the other conspirators were executed.³

CIV. The first part of the book contains a description of the geography and customs of Germany. Gaius Caesar led his army against the Germans who had crossed over into Gaul under the leadership of Ariovistus. Caesar's help was invited by the Aedui and Sequani, whose territory was being occupied. A panic among his soldiers, caused by their fear of the unfamiliar enemy, was checked by Caesar in a speech to his army; he defeated the Germans in battle and drove them from Gaul.⁵ At the instance of Pompey, among others, and of the tribune of the commons Titus Annius Milo, Marcus Cicero was brought back from exile, amid great rejoicing on the part of the senate and of all Italy.⁶ Supervision of the grain supply for a period of five years was assigned to Gnaeus Pompeius.⁷ Caesar conquered in battle and received the surrender of the Ambiani, Suessiones, Viromandui, Atrebates, and the Belgian tribes, whose numbers were huge. Thereafter he fought at great risk against the Nervii, one of the latter peoples, and so wiped out this tribe which had made war, that of sixty thousand fighting men, five hundred remained,

CVI. Julia, Caesar's daughter and Pompey's wife, died, and the people voted her the distinction of being buried in the Campus Martius.¹ Several peoples of Gaul, under the leadership of Ambiorix King of the Eburones, revolted. They trapped Cotta and Titurius, Caesar's staff-officers, in ambush and killed them along with the army which they commanded. The camps of other legions also were besieged, and were defended with great difficulty, among them the camp among the Treveri commanded by Quintus Cicero; but Caesar himself routed the enemy in battle.² Marcus Crassus crossed the Euphrates with the intention of invading Parthia, and was beaten in a battle in which his son also fell. When Crassus had withdrawn the remnants of his army to a hill, he was summoned to a parley by the enemy, whose leader was Surenas, as if they meant to discuss a truce; Crassus was then seized, and when he resisted, to avoid suffering indignity while alive, he was killed.³

CVII. After overcoming the Treveri in Gaul, Caesar crossed into Germany again, found no enemy there, and on returning to Gaul, overcame the Eburones and other states which had banded together, and pursued Ambiorix in his flight.⁴ When Publius Clodius was slain on the Appian Way near Bovillae by Titus Annius Milo, who was standing for the consulship, the commons burned Clodius' body in the senate house. There were riots caused by the candidates for the consulship, Hypsaeus, Scipio, and Milo, who were contending with armed force; Gnaeus Pompeius was deputized to check these riots . . . and he was made consul for the third time by the senate in his absence and without colleague, which had never been done for anyone else. An investigation of the death of Publius Clodius was voted; Milo was condemned by the court and sent Praetor Marcus Caelius Rufus stirred up riots in the city by inciting the commons with the hope of a cancellation of debts; he was deprived of office and driven from the city, and joined Milo the exile who had assembled a force of runaway slaves. Both men were put to death while trying to stir up war.⁴ Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, was driven from the throne by her brother Ptolemy.⁵ Because of the cruelty and greed of Praetor Quintus Cassius, the people of Cordova in Spain and two of Varro's legions deserted Caesar's cause.⁶ Gnaeus Pompeius was besieged by Caesar at Dyrrachium and after storming the latter's fortifications with great loss to the defending side, released himself from the siege, moved the theatre of operations to Thessaly, and was beaten in battle at Pharsalia.⁷ Cicero, a man destined by nature for anything rather than war, remained in Pompey's camp.⁸ All those on the opposing side who put themselves into the victor's hands were pardoned by Caesar.⁹

CXII. Which is the Fourth on the Civil War.

An account is given of the panic and flight of the defeated side to various parts of the world. When Gnaeus Pompeius made for Egypt, he was killed by Achilles, to whom the crime had been assigned, in a small boat before he set foot on land, by order of King Ptolemy, Pompey's own ward, instigated by Pothinus and Theodotus the king's tutor, whose influence with the king was great. Cornelia, Pompey's wife, and Sextus Pompeius, his son, took refuge in Cyprus. The third day thereafter Caesar arrived in pursuit, and when Theodotus brought him Pompey's head and ring, he was indignant and burst into tears.¹ In spite of rioting, Caesar entered Alexandria safely. Caesar was made dictator, restored Cleopatra to the throne of Egypt, and when Ptolemy attacked him at the instigation of the same men at whose advice he had killed Pompey, Caesar won through after incurring great personal risk. While Ptolemy was fleeing, his boat sank in the Nile.² The book also includes the toilsome march of Marcus Cato with his legions through the deserts of Africa,³ and a campaign conducted with little success by Gnaeus Domitius against Pharnaces.⁴

When Cato at Utica heard of this defeat, he stabbed himself; his son intervened and tried to care for him, but he tore open the wound again while the nursing was going on and breathed his last, in the forty-eighth year of his age. Petreius killed Juba and himself. Publius Scipio was surrounded on his ship, and added to his honourable death a saying to match: for when his enemies called for "the general," he said, "The general is doing nicely." Faustus and Afranius were killed. Cato's son was granted a pardon.⁶ Brutus,⁷ Caesar's deputy in Gaul, won a battle over the rebellious Bellovaci.

were expelled from office.¹ For these reasons a conspiracy was formed against him, the ringleaders of which were Marcus Brutus, Gaius Cassius, and of the followers of Caesar, Decimus Brutus and Gaius Trebonius. Caesar was done to death in Pompey's senate-house with twenty-three wounds, and the Capitol was seized by his assassins.² Thereafter when amnesty for this murder had been voted by the senate, and hostages had been delivered to them from among the sons of Antony and Lepidus, the conspirators came down from the Capitol.³ By Caesar's will, Gaius Octavius, his sister's grandson, was named his heir with half the estate, and was adopted as his son.⁴ While Caesar's body was being carried to the Campus Martius, it was burned by the commons before the Rostra.⁵ The office of dictator was banned forever.⁶ Chamates, a fellow of the lowest station, who claimed to be the son of Gaius Marius, began to cause disturbances among the credulous commons and was executed.⁷

CXVII. Gaius Octavius came to Rome from Epirus (for Caesar had sent him ahead there because he was planning on a campaign in Macedonia) and being received with favourable omens also took the name of Caesar.⁸ Amid political confusion and rioting Marcus Lepidus pre-empted the office of chief pontiff.⁹ Consul Marcus Antonius also exercised a reckless tyranny, carried by violence a law concerning changes in the assignment of provinces, and inflicted great wrongs on Caesar, too, when he sought Antony's support against the assassins of his great-uncle.¹ Caesar therefore began to acquire resources against Antony, both for his own benefit and for that of the state, by calling out the veterans who had been settled in colonies. The Fourth and Martian legions also transferred their allegiance from Antony to Caesar. Thereafter many more persons deserted to Caesar because of the savagery of Marcus Antonius, who butchered right and left those in his camp whom he suspected.² Decimus Brutus occupied Mutina with his army, in order to head off Antony, who was making for Cisalpine Gaul.³ The book also includes the scattering of men on both sides to take over provinces, and the preparations for war.

CXVIII. In Greece Marcus Brutus gained control over the army commanded by Publius Vatinius, and the province as well, on the pretext of the public welfare and of the campaign against Marcus Antonius which had been undertaken.⁴ Gaius Caesar, who had as a private citizen taken up arms for the state, was given authority as propraetor with the insignia of a consul by the senate, with the further provision that he be a senator.⁵ Marcus Antonius besieged Decimus Brutus in Mutina ; and envoys sent him by the senate to treat for peace had little success in arranging it. The Roman people donned military cloaks.⁶ Marcus Brutus in Epirus reduced Praetor Gaius Antonius and his army to submission.⁷

CXIX. Gaius Trebonius was killed in Asia by the treachery of Publius Dolabella. For this crime Dolabella was adjudged an enemy by the senate.¹ When Consul Pansa suffered a reverse against Antony, Consul Aulus Hirtius came up with his army and by routing the troops of Marcus Antonius, brought into balance the fortunes of the two sides. Antony, being defeated thereafter by Hirtius and Caesar, fled into Gaul and acquired the support of Marcus Lepidus and the legions which he commanded; Antony was declared an enemy by the senate together with everyone who was within his lines. Aulus Hirtius, who after his victory had fallen in the very camp of the enemy, and Gaius Pansa, who died of the wound received in the battle he lost, were buried in the Campus Martius.² The senate showed too little gratitude towards Gaius Caesar, the only survivor of the three commanders; for it voted the distinction of a triumph to Decimus Brutus who had been freed from siege at Mutina by Caesar, but made an insufficiently grateful reference to Caesar and his men. For this reason Gaius Caesar came to terms with Marcus Antonius through the mediation of Marcus Lepidus, came to Rome with his army, and stunning those who were ill-disposed towards him by the arrival of this force, was elected consul at the age of nineteen.³

CXX. Consul Gaius Caesar passed a law to bring to justice those concerned in the murder of his father; Marcus Brutus, Gaius Cassius, and Decimus Brutus were cited under that law and condemned by default.⁴ Asinius Pollio and Munatius Plancus also joined Marcus Antonius with their armies and enlarged his strength. Moreover, Decimus Brutus, whom the senate had commissioned to pursue Antony, fled when deserted by his legions and was put to death by order of Antony, into whose power he had come, being struck down by Capenus, a Sequanian.¹ Gaius Caesar made terms with Antony and Lepidus, providing that he, Lepidus, and Antony, should be a board of three for regulating the commonwealth for a term of five years, and that each should proscribe his personal enemies. In this proscription, there were included a very large number of Roman knights, and the names of one hundred and thirty senators, among them Lucius Paulus, the brother of Lepidus, Lucius Caesar, the uncle of Antony, and Marcus Cicero. The last was slain at the age of sixty-three by Popillius, a legionary soldier, and his head and right hand were also placed on the Rostra.² The book also includes the achievements of Marcus Brutus in Greece.³

CXXI. Which is Said to have been Published After the Death of Augustus.

Gaius Cassius had been commissioned by the senate to conduct a campaign against Dolabella when the latter was declared an enemy; armed with the authority of the state, he gained control of Syria with three legions which were in that province, blockaded Dolabella in the city of Laodicea and compelled him to die.⁴ Also, by order of Marcus Brutus, Gaius Antonius was taken prisoner and executed.⁵

CXXII. Marcus Brutus for a time conducted a successful campaign against the Thracians, and when all the overseas provinces and armies had been brought under his control and that of Gaius Cassius, the two men met at Smyrna to determine plans for the coming war.⁶ By common agreement they pardoned their prisoner Publicola at the plea of his brother Marcus Messala.⁷

He encountered this unfavourable weather, in addition to the Parthian campaign which he had so un- luckily undertaken, by his own fault, since he was unwilling to winter in Armenia, in his hurry to join Cleopatra.³

CXXXI. Although Sextus Pompeius put himself under the protection of Marcus Antonius, he took steps to make war on him in Asia, and being surprised by Antony's deputies, was killed.⁴ Caesar checked an uprising among the veterans which caused great damage, and subdued the Iapydae, Dalmatians, and Pannonians.⁵ Antony enticed Artavasdes king of Armenia by giving him his word, and then ordered him to be thrown into chains; Antony gave the throne of Armenia to his son born of Cleopatra, with whom he had long been madly in love, and whom he now began to treat as his wife.⁶

CXXXII. Caesar overcame the Dalmatians in Illyricum.¹ Marcus Antonius because of his passion for Cleopatra, by whom he had two sons, Philadelphus and Alexander, was unwilling to return to Rome or to lay down his command when his term on the Board of Three ended; he organized a campaign of invasion against Rome and Italy, and gathered huge forces on sea as well as on land for this purpose, and sent a notice of divorce to Octavia, Caesar's sister. Caesar crossed with an army to Epirus. A description is given of the ensuing naval battles and cavalry engagements, in which Caesar was victorious.²

CXXXIII. Marcus Antonius was defeated at sea off Actium and fled to Alexandria; when besieged by Caesar and reduced to complete hopelessness, he was driven to suicide above all by the false report that Cleopatra had been killed.³ When Caesar had reduced Alexandria, and Cleopatra had died a voluntary death to avoid falling into the hands of the victor,⁴ Caesar returned to Rome to celebrate three triumphs, one for the campaign in Illyricum, a second for his victory at Actium, and the third over Cleopatra.⁵ He made an end of the civil wars in their twenty-second year.⁶ Marcus Lepidus, son of the Lepidus who had been on the Board of Three, formed a conspiracy against Caesar and while taking steps towards war was caught and killed.⁷

FROM BOOK XII?

1. Servius, note on Aeneid I. 456: Livy: "if Pyrrhus had not been a consummate master of tactics, but excellent in a battle rather than in a campaign."

References to the campaigns of Pyrrhus in Italy are found in Summaries XII and XIII. The Roman opinion that Pyrrhus was weak on strategy may have arisen from their natural inability to perceive that war with Rome was to Pyrrhus a side issue, an excuse for establishing suzerainty over "Great Greece"—south Italy and Sicily.

FROM BOOK XIII?

2. Servius, note on Aeneid I. 476: Both Livy and Sallust inform us that our ancestors used scythed chariots.

Archæological evidence for chariot fighting in Italy seems to be lacking, unless the use of a chariot as the general's vehicle in a triumph is such evidence. The war with Pyrrhus would provide a good loophole for the insertion of such a picturesque detail by some annalist, especially a Greek who knew his Xenophon.

FROM BOOK XVI?

5. Servius, note on Aeneid I. 343: Sichaeus is called Sicharbal; Belus, the father of Dido, Methres; Carthage was named from Cartha, as the name is given. This information is found in the history of the Carthaginians, and in Livy.

For the name which Vergil changed, presumably for metrical reasons, to Sichaeus, cf. Justinus XVIII. 4. 5, who draws on Timaeus, cf. F.H.G. I. 197, fr. 23. The city after which Carthage is supposed to have been named (but see below, fr. 6) is called Cartha in Servius, Aeneid IV. 670, Carthada in Solinus xxvii. 10. Summary XVI mentions the founding of Carthage.

6. Servius, note on Aeneid I. 366: "Carthage" means "Newtown" in the Carthaginian language, as Livy informs us.

This is one ancient etymology confirmed by modern scholars.

7. Servius, note on Aeneid I. 738: Bitias was the admiral of the Carthaginian fleet, as Livy informs us.

8. Priscian XIV, p. 44K: "The day before the Nones; the day before the Ides"—Livy, From the Founding of the City, Book XVII.

FROM BOOK XVIII

9. Charisius, p. 95K: Moreover, one speaks of "imberbi," not "imberbes." For so says not only Varro in the fifth book of his On Theatrical Performances: "imberbi iuvenes" (beardless youths); but Cicero as well says "imberbum perduxit" (he induced the beardless boy), not "imberbem," and in his speech of January first On the Agrarian Law, uses "imberba lege agraria, "imberba iuventute." Titus Livius autem XVIII imberbes vulgariter.¹ Beda, de orthographia, p. 276K: Titus Livius autem "imberbis" singulariter. Anon. ap. Barth, Adversaria XXXVII. 14: Varro "imberbi iuvenes"; ita et Cicero; sed contra Titus Livius.

10. Valerius Maximus I. 8, ext. 19: Serpentis quoque a T. Livio curiose pariter ac facunde relatae fiat mentio. Is enim ait in Africa apud Bagradam flumen tantae magnitudinis anguem fuisse ut Atilii Reguli exercitum usu amnis prohiberet; multisque militibus ingenti ore correptis, compluribus caudae voluminibus elisis, cum telorum iactu perforari nequiret, ad ultimum ballistarum tormentis undique petitam silicum crebris et ponderosis verberibus procubuisse, omnibusque et cohortibus et legionibus ipsa Carthagine visam terribiliorem. Atque etiam cruore suo gurgitibus imbutis, corporisque iacentis pestifero afflatu vicina regione polluta, Romana inde summovisse castra. Dicit etiam beluae corium centum viginti pedum in urbem missum.

iuventute' (beardless young men). But Titus Livius in his eighteenth Book uses "imberbes" commonly. Beda, On Orthography, p. 276K: Titus Livius, however, uses "imberbis" in the singular. Unknown author, quoted by C. von Barth, Adversaria, XXXVII. 14: Varro uses "imberbi iuvenes," so does Cicero; but Titus Livius does the opposite.

The text of Charisius is somewhat uncertain, see the critical note, but the general, and somewhat minor, point that Livy treats imberbis as a third-declension word seems clear. No context is extant for Cicero's words from de Lege Agraria I. fr. 1.

10. Valerius Maximus, I. viii. ext. 19: Let me mention also the serpent described by Titus Livius no less exactly than eloquently. For Livy says that in Africa at the Bagradas River, there was a snake of such size that it kept the army of Atilius Regulus from using the river. It caught many of the soldiers in its huge jaws, and crushed large numbers of them in the coils of its tail. Hurling missiles could not penetrate its skin, but at last when it was attacked on all sides with missiles from the catapults, it succumbed to the continuous heavy blows of the stones. Both legions and auxiliary troops without exception regarded it as more to be feared than Carthage itself. Even after death the pools were stained with its blood, and the area round about was defiled with the poisonous stench of the exposed body, till it drove the Roman camp away from there. Livy also says that the monster's skin, measuring one hundred and twenty feet, was sent to Rome.

11. Censorinus, On the Birthday, xvii. 10: The third Festival of the Age occurred, as (Valerius) Antias and Livy tell us, in the consulship of Publius Claudius Pulcher and Gaius Junius Pullus.

12. Servius, note on Aeneid VI. 198: The story is told in Livy that when a certain consul who was anxious to conduct a campaign was prevented from departing by a tribune of the commons, the consul ordered the chickens to be brought. When these failed to eat the grain scattered before them, the consul, mocking the omen, said, "Let them drink, then", and flung them into the Tiber. After that as he was triumphantly returning in his fleet to Africa he lost his life at sea, along with all his men.

The year was 249 B.C. Summary XIX identifies the omen-defying consul as the Claudius of this year, but makes his fate less directly a vindication of the omen. Cf. also XXII. xlii. 9; Summary XLIX, p. 31 and note 2; and especially Polybius I. xlix. 3-li. 12.

FROM BOOK XX

12a. Note in margin of Paris Latin MS. 3858: Livy in Book XX: Publius Cloelius, a patrician, was the first to go against the ancient custom by marrying a wife within the seventh degree of relationship. On this account, Marcus Rutilius, a plebeian, complained that his betrothed was taken from him by an unprecedented sort of marriage; he stirred up a riot of the people so severe that the senators in terror took refuge on the Capitol.

The rule of marriage here recorded forbade marriage between second cousins, or those more closely related. Nothing further is known about this incident.

done by Romulus, cf. Livy I. x. 4-7), the second to Mars (as

15. Plutarch, Sulla vi: When he (Sulla) entered the city, he was declared consul together with Quintus Pompeius, Sulla being at the age of fifty, and he made a very distinguished marriage with Caecilia, the daughter of Metellus, the chief pontiff. On account of this, the popular party composed many lampoons against him, and many of the leading citizens were indignant, considering that the man whom they had judged worthy of the consulship was not worthy of the lady, as Titus puts it.

88 B.C.; this was Sulla's fourth marriage, and he divorced Cloelia to make it possible, which may have had something to do with the objections felt by some senators; Caecilia Metella now married for the second time.

15a. Suidas, article "Sulla": In Sulla's consulship, the Roman civil war broke out. Livy and Diodorus say that there were portents of the harvest of evils to come. From cloudless air and a wide expanse of clear sky, the blast of a trumpet was heard, uttering a shrill and lamentable sound. Those who heard it were one and all beside themselves with fear. But the Etruscan soothsayers pronounced that the portent indicated a change of the race and a new era. For, they said, there are eight races of men, differing in their modes of life and their characters from each other. An epoch has been assigned to each race by God, ending with the completion of a cycle of the Great Year. At any rate, as the former cycle ends and another sets in, some miraculous sign from earth or heaven is sent forth, from which it becomes clear to those expert in these matters that men have been

The whole passage is given as a quotation from the authors cited. It occurs almost word for word in Plutarch's Sulla vii. 3-4, but Plutarch allows for a change to a more godly race, as well as the Hesiodic deterioration which stands alone in Suidas. In accordance with Boissvain, Cassius Dio, I, p. cxxi, I do not regard this passage as a fragment of Dio, as Hertz places it.

At the same time, the tower which was the city's chief bulwark began to gape with great cracks as its foundations were undermined, and then was set on fire as blazing torches were thrown in. Terror-stricken by the threat of fire and collapse together, the people of Contrebia in panic fled back from the wall, and the whole crowd set up a shout that envoys should be sent to surrender the city. That same valour which had caused them to attack those who challenged them made the conqueror the readier to give terms. When he had received hostages, he exacted a moderate sum of money, and deprived them of all their weapons. He ordered the free deserters to be brought to him alive; the runaway slaves, whose number was far greater, he ordered the townspeople themselves to kill. The slaves' throats were cut, and they were thrown from the wall.

Contrebia was reduced after forty-four days with a large loss of soldiers. Sertorius left Lucius Insteius in the town with a strong garrison, and led his own force to the Ebro River. There he constructed winter quarters by the town called Camp Aelia, and remained there with his forces; by day he held a conference in the town of the cities allied with him. He issued an order that throughout the province arms should be manufactured according to the capacities of the several peoples. After he had inspected the new weapons, he ordered his soldiers to turn in the arms they had which had become unserviceable either because of the frequent marches or because of sieges and battles. He distributed the new weapons to his men through their centurions, equipped his cavalry also with new arms, distributed clothing which had been previously prepared, and issued pay.

He diligently searched out smiths from all about, and brought them in for the service of the military workshop which he had set up, after drawing up a schedule of what could be produced day by day. And so all the sinews of war were being made ready at the same time; there was no lack of materials for the artisans who were supplied first of all by the strenuous zeal of the cities, nor was any sort of artisan lacking for his peculiar task.

He then called together embassies from all the tribes and cities, and presented his thanks because they had furnished the supplies for the infantry forces which had been demanded. He laid before them his achievements in defending his allies and in storming cities of his enemies, and encouraged them to continue in the war after a brief explanation of the advantages to the province of Spain if his side had the upper hand. He thereupon dismissed the gathering, bidding them all be of good cheer and return to their states.

As spring opened he sent Marcus Perperna with twenty thousand infantry and fifteen hundred cavalry to the tribe of Ilercaones to defend the seacoast of that region; he gave Perperna instructions as to the routes he was to use in coming to the rescue of allied cities which Pompey would attack, as well as those routes from which he was to attack Pompey's own column from ambush.

At the same time he also sent dispatches to Herennuleius,¹ who was in the same region, as well as to Lucius Hirtuleius in the other province, instructing them how he wanted the war to be managed, especially that Hirtuleius was to protect the allied cities in such a way as not to meet Metellus in battle, since he was no match for Metellus either in personal prestige or in military power. Sertorius said that he had no intention of meeting Pompey head on, nor did he believe that Pompey would offer battle. If the war were prolonged, the enemy would receive provisions by ship from all directions, since he had the sea at his back and all the provinces under his control. Sertorius, on the other hand, having used up during the previous summer the accumulation of supplies, would lack everything. Perperna, said Sertorius, had been given command in the seaward region so that he might be able to protect whatever was so far undamaged by the enemy, and might attack them when they were momentarily off their guard, if some opportunity presented itself.

Sertorius himself with his own forces decided to march against the Berones and Autricones, who had, as he had learned, frequently begged aid from Pompey during the winter, while Sertorius was assailing the Celtiberian cities. Moreover, these peoples had sent men to show the Roman army the roads, and with their cavalry had often harassed Sertorius' soldiers whenever during the siege of Contrebia they had gone out from camp to gather fodder or grain. At that time also these tribes had had the audacity to invite the Arevaci to change sides. He thought therefore that he would furnish a sample of his campaigning before deciding which enemy and which province to make for, and whether to turn to the sea coast, in order to keep Pompey away from Ilercaonia and Contestania, both of which tribes were Sertorius' allies, or whether to turn against Metellus and Lusitania.

With these thoughts in mind, Sertorius led his army up the Ebro River through friendly territory in a peaceful and harmless fashion. He then advanced into the territory of the Bursanes, Cascantium, and Graccuris, ravaging everything and trampling the crops, and arrived at Calaguris Nasicam, a town of his allies. He crossed the river near the city on a bridge which he had built and pitched camp. Next day he sent his quaestor Marcus Marius to the Arevaci and Cerindones to enroll soldiers from among those tribes, and to transport grain from there to the Contrebia which is called Leucada, past which city there was the most convenient passage out from the Berones, no matter to which region he might decide to lead his forces. He also sent Gaius Insteius, his cavalry commander, to Segovia and among the tribe of the Vaccaei to recruit cavalry, giving him orders to await him with the cavalry in Contrebia. After these officers had been sent off, Sertorius himself set out, led his army through the territory of the Vascones, and pitched camp on the border of the Berones. The next day he went in advance with cavalry to reconnoitre the roads, and ordered the infantry to follow in squared column; he reached Vareia, the strongest city of that region. His arrival by night was by no means unexpected by the Berones. From all about, cavalry both of their own tribe and of the Autricones . . .

This occurred in 75 B.C., and was Cotta's measure of conciliation to prevent further rioting over a scarcity of grain.

20. Servius, note on Aeneid IX. 715: In his ninety-fourth book, Livy says that Inarime is in a portion of Maeonia, where for fifty miles the countryside is scorched with fire. Livy's opinion is that Homer also meant this region.

Maeonia, synonymous with Lydia to the poets, meant north-east Lydia to the geographers, cf. Ptolemy V. ii. 16. In this area, along the Hermus River, Strabo (XIII. iv. 5 (626)) speaks of a region called Catacecaumene ("destroyed by fire") which is no doubt the volcanic area Livy had in mind. The reference had some connection with the campaigns of Lucullus against Mithridates.

The ancient error by which Homer's ein Arimois, Iliad II. 783, (among the Arimi) became "Inarime" is well known. Vergil's Inarime was in the volcanic area near Naples.

Later, it had twenty-four, and later still, only two, Cnossus and Hierapytna, so we are told, although Livy says that Metellus stormed a larger number.

Some Roman lack of information, or a hyperbole, must be behind the alleged reduction of Cretan cities to two; references to a larger number are reasonably continuous.

But those in charge of the sacrifices none the less continued their sacred service, and were not compelled to run away either by fear for their lives or by the multitude of those who were already being slaughtered. They deemed it better to await whatever suffering they must endure by the very altars, rather than to transgress any point of the law. That this is no mere story, parading praise of a fictitious piety, but rather the truth, is supported by the testimony of all who have recorded the achievements of Pompey. Among these are Strabo and Nicolaus, and in addition Titus Livius, the author of the history of Rome.

The capture of Jerusalem is mentioned in Summary CII, together with the Catilinarian conspiracy. There is a brief allusion in Strabo XVI. ii. 40 (762). The "fast" was probably the sabbath, as interpreted by some Gentile, cf. Marcus ad loc. VII. 480 and 700-1. (L.C.L.).

The author's name also appears as Iornandes in the MSS. Summary CV ends with mention of Caesar's campaign in Britain.

FROM BOOK CIX

31. Orosius VII. 2: In the seven-hundredth year of its existence, Rome had fourteen of its streets devastated by a fire of unknown origin, nor was it ever ravaged by a greater blaze, so Livy says. As a result, Caesar Augustus several years later donated a large sum of money from the public treasury to the rebuilding of the structures consumed at that time.

32. Orosius VI. 15: When Caesar had crossed the Rubicon, he presently came to Ariminum, and there explained his plan of action to the five cohorts which were all that he had at that time—with which, as Livy puts it, he assailed the whole world.

Cf. Caesar, Civil War I. vii f.; Caesar's force is usually referred to as one legion; whether the "five cohorts" is an estimate of actual strength present, or a piece of rhetoric without military foundation does not appear, but cf. Civil War I. xi. 4. William of Malmesbury, Historia Novella II § 478 Stubbs, follows Orosius.

32a. Note on Lucan, Pharsalia III. 182 (Usener, 100): In the first book on the civil war, Livy says: "for the Athenians barely mustered two ships as relics of their great reputation for sea-power."

32b. Note on Lucan, Pharsalia III. 59 (Usener, 92): As Livy says, he drove Marcus Cato from the province.

The reference is to Curio, cf. Caesar, Civil War I. xxx. 5; Plutarch, Cato liii; Appian, Civil Wars II. vi. 40 f.

32c. Note on Lucan, Pharsalia IV. 354 (Usener, 132): Livy's words are: "and we are incompetent as commanders in war, since it is on our account that you were able to win without bloodshed. Our request redounds to Caesar's credit, for we ask that you make provision, after their surrender, for those whom you spared while they were still embattled."

This is presumably from a speech by Afranius at the final surrender in Spain, cf. Caesar, Civil War I. 72 and 84 f.

Cf. Caesar, Civil War III. xci, xcix. The second quotation clarifies the use of "recently" in the first.

moment when the battle began, and said to the bystanders, "Now the affair is going forward, and the gentlemen are going into action." And later, turning to his observations and beholding the signs, he leaped up inspired, crying out, "Yours is the victory, Caesar." When the bystanders were dumb-founded, he removed the wreath from his head and said with an oath that he would not replace it until the fact bore witness to his art. These things Livy definitely affirms to have taken place in this manner.

This striking story also appears in Dio XLI. lxi. 5; Obsequens 65a; Gellius XV. xviii. 1-3.

34a. Note on Lucan, Pharsalia VII. 62 (Usener, 223): Titus Livius says that he (Cicero) was in Sicily, because of ill-health, at the time when the battle at Pharsalus took place, and that he received there a letter from the victorious Caesar, bidding him be of good cheer.

The reference to Sicily is a mistake, mechanical or otherwise, of the commentary on Lucan, cf. Summary CXI ("Cicero stayed in the camp"—also inexact); Cicero, On Divination I. 68.

the Moors, Bogud, of which Livy gives a genitive of the third declension, Bogudis, as follows: Cassius and Bogud also attacked the camp from different directions and were not far from breaking through the entrenchments.

In 47 B.C., Cassius Longinus, a Caesarian propraetor in Spain, quarrelled with his quaestor, Marcellus, who seceded with part of the troops. Cassius summoned Bogud to help him overcome Marcellus, who had succeeded in shutting Cassius up in the town of Ullia. The strife was finally settled by the armed intervention of the governor of Nearer Spain, Lepidus. Cf. [Caesar], Alexandrine War lxii-lxiv.; below, fr. 43a. For previous events, cf. Summary CXI.

40. Note on Lucan, Pharsalia X. 471: The envoys whom the king had sent were two, one of them being Dioscorides and the other Serapion. One of these was killed, as Titus Livius mentions in the fourth book (of the civil war).

50. Seneca the Rhetorician, Suasoriae VI. 17 (VII): From Titus Livius: Marcus Cicero had taken his departure from the city shortly before the arrival of the Board of Three; he was convinced of what was actually the case, that he could no more be saved from the clutches of Antony than Cassius and Brutus could be from those of Caesar. First he fled to his Tusculan estate, thence he set out by cross-country routes for his place at Formiae, for he planned to take ship at Caieta. From that port he put out to sea several times, but sometimes contrary winds drove him back, and again he was unable to bear the tossing of the ship, as a ground swell heard it. Finally a weariness both of flight and of life came upon him; he went back to his upper country house, which is a little more than a mile from the sea, and said, passibus a mari abest, "Moriar," inquit, "in patria saepe servata." Satis constat servos fortiter fideliterque paratos fuisse ad dimicandum; ipsum deponi lecticam et quietos pati quod sors iniqua cogeret iussisse. Prominenti ex lectica praebentique immotam cervicem caput praecisum est. Nec satis stolidae crudelitati militum fuit. Manus quoque, scripsisse in Antonium aliquid exprobrantes, praeciderunt. Let me die in the fatherland I have so often saved." It is definitely known that his slaves were ready to fight bravely and loyally, but he bade them set down the litter and endure without rebellion what a hostile fortune forced upon them. As he thrust his head out of the litter and held his neck steady, he was decapitated. Nor was this enough for the brutish cruelty of the soldiers. They also cut off his hands, reproaching them for having written something against Antony. Thus the head was brought back to Antony and by his order placed between the two hands on the Rostra. There Cicero in his consulship, and again often as ex-consul, and again that very year in opposing Antony, had been heard with admiration for his eloquence such as had never been accorded to another human voice. People could hardly raise their eyes for their tears, in order to look at his butchered parts.

He lived sixty-three years, so that if he had suffered no violence, his death would not have seemed to be even untimely. His nature was fortunate both in its achievements and in its rewards for achievement; he enjoyed a long-continued good fortune and a prolonged state of prosperity, yet was from time to time smitten with severe blows, his exile, the downfall of the party he represented, the death of his daughter, and his own sad and bitter end. None of his adversities did he bear in a manner worthy of a gentleman except his death; and this, if one weighs the matter accurately, might seem the less undeserved, because he suffered from a victorious personal enemy nothing crueller than he would himself have done, had he attained to the same success. However, if one balances his faults against his virtues, he was a Acron, note on Horace, Satires I. v. 29: Since there still remained certain left-overs of dispute between Augustus and Antony, Cocceius Nerva, the great-grandfather of the Nerva who was later Emperor of Rome, enjoined on Augustus that he should send envoys to discuss the whole situation. Accordingly, Maecenas was sent with Agrippa, and they gathered both armies into one camp, as Livy says in Book CXXVII. We are to understand, however, that after Fonteius had been sent by Antony, Augustus sent out Maecenas and the others to the same place.

52. Porphyrio, on the same: When a disagreement arose between Caesar Augustus and Antony, Cocceius Nerva, the grandfather of the man who was later Emperor of Rome, asked Caesar to send to Tarracina someone to discuss the whole situation. And first Maecenas, then presently Agrippa joined them, and these pledged faith with all solemnity and ordered the standards of both armies to be brought together in one camp. the envoys came together were that they should discuss the whole situation, and settle the disagreement which had arisen between the above-mentioned commanders. They proceeded to do so, and moreover gathered both armies near Brundisium into one camp, amid great rejoicing, as Livy notes in Book CXXVII.

The "omission" of Fonteius Capito by Livy seems to be due to a confusion on the part of the commentators between the negotiations of 40 B.C., described by Livy in Book CXXVII, cf. Summary, and those of 37 B.C., in which Fonteius was probably Antony's agent. 57. Seneca, On Wrath I. xx. 6: As is said in the works of Titus Livius, a very talented gentleman, “A man of great, rather than good, character.”

58. Pliny, Natural History I, preface: I must say I am surprised that Titus Livius, that most famous author, in a certain book of his Histories, in which he went back to the beginnings of Rome, began as follows, “I have now earned fame enough, and might make an end, except that my restless mind feeds on the work.”

59. Pliny, Natural History III. i. 4: Titus Livius and Cornelius Nepos give as the width of the strait of Gibraltar seven miles, where it is narrowest, and ten miles where it is widest.

Modern measurement gives a minimum width of 14 kilometers, or about nine and a half Roman miles.

60. = 68.

61. Servius, note on Aeneid II. 148: These are the words, as we find in Livy, of a commander taking a deserter under his protection, “Whoever you are, you shall be ours.”

62. William of Malmesbury, History of England V. § 412, p. 488 ed. Stubbs:

“My mother bore me to be a general, not a warrior.”

This is given by William as a saying of Scipio, and might be from Livy.

63. Gelasius Papa, Epist. adv. Andromachum (Baronii Annal. Eccles. 35 [anno 496]): Dic mihi, cum saepe numero in Romanis historiis legatur, Livio auctore,¹ saepissime in hac urbe exorta pestilentia infinita hominum millia deperisse, atque eo frequenter ventum ut vix esset unde illis bellicosis temporibus exercitus potuisset ascribi, illo tempore deo tuo Februario minime litabatur? An etiam cultus hic omnino nihil proderat? Illo tempore Lupercalia non celebrabantur? Nec enim dicturus es haec sacra adhuc illo tempore non coepisse, quae ante Romulum ab Euandro in Italiam perhibentur illata. Lupercalia autem propter quid instituta sint (quantum ad ipsius superstitionis commenta respectant) Livius secunda decade loquitur; nec propter morbos inhibendos instituta commemorat, sed propter sterilitatem, ut ei videtur, mulierum, quae tunc acciderat, exigendam.

64. Servius ad Vergil. Aen. IV. 242: Secundum Livium legati pacis caduceatores dicuntur.

65. Servius ad Vergil. Aen. VI. 861: Livius argentum grave dicit, id est massas.

66. Servius ad Vergil. Aen. VII. 10: In hoc summo (promontorio Circeo) oppidum fuit, quod et Circeium dictum et Circei. Nam utrumque Livius dixit.

63. Pope Gelasius, Letter refuting Andromachus, Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum 35. 1, pp. 456 f.:

Tell me, since we read often in the history of Rome, on the authority of Livy, that at very frequent intervals an epidemic arose in this city and slew numberless thousands of persons, and many times matters came to such a pass that there was hardly a source from which in those war-filled times an army could be enrolled, was there at that time no ceremony at all in honour of your god Febrarius? Or was even this worship of no value at all? At that time were the Lupercalia not performed? For surely you will not say that these rites had not yet begun in that period, since they are said to have been introduced into Italy by Evander before the time of Romulus. Moreover, as to the reason why the Lupercalia were established (in so far as they are connected with the falsehoods of superstition itself), Livy gives information in his second group of ten books; and he records that they were established, not to check diseases, but to eliminate, so he supposes, the sterility of women that had at that time befallen them.

64. Servius, note on Aeneid IV. 242: According to Livy, ambassadors for peace are called "bearers of Mercury's rod."

65. Servius, note on Aeneid VI. 861: Livy speaks of "massive silver," that is, bullion.

66. Servius, note on Aeneid VII. 10: On this height (Cape Circeium) there was a town, which was called both Circeium and Circei. For Livy used both.

Livius tam iniquus Sallustio fuit ut hanc ipsam sententiam " Res secundae mire sunt vitiis obtentui " tamquam translata et tamquam corruptam dum transfertur obiceret Sallustio. Nec hoc amore Thucydidis facit ut illum praeferat. Laudat quem non timet et facilius putat posse a se Sallustium vinci si ante a Thucydidē vincatur.

74. Seneca, Controversiae IX. ii. 26 (xxv): T. Livius de oratoribus qui verba antiqua et sordida consecrantur et orationis obscuritatem severitatem putant preface, for Livy frequently makes a fresh start, as after the burning of the city by the Gauls, and at the end of a consular year.

For Livy's fresh starts, cf. the opening of Book VI (as mentioned by Servius), Book XXI, and above, fr. 58. The annalistic practice of marking the start of each consular year hardly seems worthy of Servius' attention in this connection, but I do not know how to interpret his final phrase in a different sense. Weissenborn prints completis consulibus as a separate fr. 60.

71. Unknown author, On Nouns of Uncertain Gender, Keil V, p. 592: Vepres (briar) is of feminine gender, e.g. in Titus Livius, " these (fem.) briars."

72. See below, fr. 87.

73. Seneca the Rhetorician, Argumentation IX. i. 14 (xxiv): Titus Livius was so hostile to Sallust that he reproached Sallust for this very epigram, " Success is a wonderful cloak for faults," on the ground that it was a translation and spoiled in the translating. Nor does he do this out of affection for Thucydides, in order to give him the better of it. He praises the man he is not afraid of, and thinks that Sallust can be more easily beaten by himself if he is first beaten by Thucydides.

Sallust's epigram is found in the Oration of Lepidus (Historiae I. 55 Maurenbrecher) sec. 24; the Greek quoted by Seneca, but not included above, does not appear in our Thucydides; the sentiment, in slightly different words, is found in [Demosthenes] On the Letter of Philip 13.

74. Seneca the Rhetorician, Argumentation IX. ii. 26 (xxv): Concerning orators who pursue obsolete and vulgar words and mistake obscurity for austerity, Titus aiebat, Miltiadem rhetorem eleganter dixisse, “ ἐπὶ τὸ λεξικὸν¹ μαίνονται.”

75. Quintilian, Institutio Oratoris VIII. ii. 18 : In hoc malum a quibusdam etiam laboratur, neque id novum vitium est, cum iam apud T. Livium inveniam fuisse praeceptorem aliquem qui discipulos obscurare quae dicerent iuberet, Graeco verbo utens, σκοτίσων. Unde illa scilicet egregia laudatio, “ Tanto melior; ne ego quidem intellexi.”

76. Quintilian, Institutio Oratoris X, i. 39 : Fuit igitur brevitatis illa tutissima quae apud Livium in epistola ad filium scripta, “ legendos Demosthenem atque Ciceronem; tum ita ut quisque esset Demostheni et Ciceroni simillimus.

77. Quintilian, Institutio Oratoris VIII. iii. 53 : Vitanda μακρολογία, id est longior quam oportet sermo, ut apud Livium : “ Legati non impetrata pace retro, unde venerant, domum reversi sunt.”

78. Incertus auctor, de Generibus Nominum, p. 591K : Scalper, generis masculini, sicut culter, ut Titus Livius, quamvis quidam scalprum dicant.

Livius used to say that Miltiades the professor had put it neatly : “ They have a passion for the dictionary.”

An alternative emendation gives : “ They are raving against their neighbour.”

75. Quintilian, Oratorical Studies VIII. ii. 18 : Certain persons even undergo toil to attain this evil, nor is this vice an innovation, since I find even in Titus Livius that there was a certain instructor who bade his students “ darken ” what they had to say, using the Greek word skotison. From the same source comes, if you please, that glorious praise, “ So much the better; I didn’t understand it myself.”

76. Quintilian, Oratorical Studies X. i. 39 : The safest thing, then, was the epigram written by Livy in a letter to his son, “ Read Demosthenes and Cicero; after that, the more each author is like Demosthenes and Cicero, the better.”

Cf. also Quintilian II. v. 20 for an abbreviated version of this reference.

77. Quintilian, Oratorical Studies VIII. iii. 53 : Long-windedness is to be avoided, that is, any expression longer than is proper, as in Livy : “ The envoys, having failed to obtain peace, returned back home, whence they had come.”

Substantially the same statement is found in Charisius, III p. 271K (and cf. p. 449K). Hertz points out that, while the exact words are not found in the extant books of Livy, similar expressions occur in IX. ii. 10; XXIV. xx. 3; XXIV. xl. 9; and XXXVIII. xvi. 6.

78. Anon. On Nouns of Doubtful Gender, p. 591K : Scalper (chisel) is of masculine gender, like culter (knife), as in Titus Livius, although some say scalprum.

79. Plinius, Naturalis Historia III. xix. 132: (Alpis patere tradit) in latitudinem autem Cornelius Nepos C̄, Titus Livius IIĪ stadiorum, uterque diversis in locis.

80. Iona, vita S. Columbani, Migne 87. 1015C: ut Livius ait, nihil tam sanctum religione tamque custodia clausum quo penetrare libido nequeat.

¹ The attribution of this fragment to Livy is questioned by Mueller. He also includes as his fr. 67 the reference in Tacitus, Annals IV. 34, to the freedom enjoyed by Livy to praise Brutus, Cassius, and especially Pompey. Other passages cited by Hertz and Mueller as fragments, but referable also to extant text, are the following: Quintilian I. vii. 24 = fr. 78M, use of the spelling sibe and quase; Priscian XVIII. 231, = fr. 68H, 79M, phrase in milites, cf. in pedites, XXXIV. lii. 11; Priscian XVIII. 292 = fr. 69H, 80M, assertio, cf. adsertor, III. xvi. 7; fr. 70H, 81M, fourth declension neuters. Cf. also Hertz frs. 65-7 on clipeum, callis (fem.), and Livy's "teen" numerals; fr. 71, text and attribution doubtful.

The last clause is not included by Keil, but appears in the citation by Haupt, Ovid's Halieutica, etc., p. 101. The neuter scalprum appears, e.g., in XXVII. xlix. 1.

79. Pliny, Natural History III. xix. 132: Moreover, the width of the Alps is said to extend over one hundred miles by Cornelius Nepos, and three thousand stades by Titus Livius, each of whom refers to a different region.

As pointed out by Rackham, L.C.L., Pliny, vol. II, p. 98, the figure given for Livy's measurement, 360 Roman or 333 English miles, assuming an Olympic stade of 178.6 metres, is too large; something like DL or DC would be preferable, as corresponding to the figure of seventy miles given by Pliny as a minimum, after he has mentioned one hundred miles as a somewhat under-estimated maximum. It seems likely that Livy took his Greek measurement from Polybius.

80. Jonah, Life of Saint Columban, Migne 87, 1015C. As Livy says, nothing is made so holy by awe, or kept so remote by watchfulness, that lust cannot reach it.¹

FRAGMENTS SOMETIMES
ATTRIBUTED TO LIVY

81. Anon. On the Seven Wonders of the World, in Haupt, Ovidii Halieutica, etc., pp. xxviii and 70 f. = fr. 4W. This contains a list of the principal mountains of Sicily, and is assigned to Livy; but elsewhere the quotation appears as from Julius Titianus, see Hertz I. xii.

82. Note on Lucan, Pharsalia I. 319 = fr. 28W. This is a comment on Pompey's superintendence of the grain supply. The letters lv in the MS. represent the name of the author quoted, but the quotation is not from Livy, but Boethius, Consolation III, prose iv.

83. Appian, Civil War III. xi. 77 = fr. 44 Weissenborn. Perizonius proposed reading "Livy" in place of "Libo" in this passage, but the emendation is generally rejected.

84. Priscian VIII, p. 382K. = fr. 67W. Weissenborn reads "Livius" for "Aelius" as the source for this quotation, but the rather technical legal language does not sound like Livy.

85. Nonius Marcellus, p. 308 L. Mueller, Leipzig, Teubner, 1888 = fr. 69W. A garbled quotation is assigned by the MSS. to Titus Livius, but Mueller assigns this to Livius Andronicus, since one MS. cites "Ajax Bearing a Whip" as the work cited, i.e., a tragedy after Sophocles (= Warmington, Remains of Old Latin, fr. 16-17).

86. Nonius Marcellus, p. 599 Mueller = fr. 70W. Again the MSS. name Titus Livius, but the quotation sounds poetic, and is assigned by Mueller to Andronicus.

87. Sallust, Histories II. 43 ed. Maurenbrecher = fr. 72W. This badly broken fragment shows the names of Publius Lentulus Marcellinus, King Apion, and Quintus Metellus Creticus, and was formerly assigned to Livy, cf. Weissenborn ad loc., but is now given to Sallust, cf. Hertz I. p. xii.

88. Anon. de Dubiis Nominibus p. 575K: Cancer, the swelling, is of neuter gender, as in Livy, "the evil is wont to hide—the incurable cancer." It is tempting to put this alongside fr. 27; but there is a suggestion of metre in the Latin immedicabile cancer, and the text is uncertain.

89. Beda, de Orthographia p. 292K: "Torque" is a noun of common gender, for in the story of Marius, Livy makes "torque" of masculine gender, and Cicero makes it feminine.

If we read "Manlius" for "Marius," this would refer to VII. x. 11, but there was a Gaul connected with Marius, cf. Summary LXXXVII.

90. Anon. de Dubiis Nominibus p. 572K: The phrase "laxisque bracis" (slack trousers), quoted as from Livy, is found in Ovid, Tristia V. vii. 49, which may indicate that textual emendation is in order.

1. The temple of Juno Lucina was struck by lightning, in such a way that the gable and the doors were damaged. In neighbouring towns many things were struck by lightning. At Nursia storm-clouds gathered from a clear sky, and two persons were killed. At Tusculum there was a shower of earth. A mule at Reate produced a colt. A day of prayer was observed by ten boys with living fathers and mothers, and as many girls. (XXXVII. iii. 2-6.¹)

When elections occurred marked by great corruption, and for this reason a session of the senate was being held on the Capitol, a kite came flying and dropped into the midst of the assembled Fathers a weasel that it had caught inside the temple of Jupiter. About this same time the temple of Safety was struck by lightning. On the Quirinal hill, blood oozed from the ground. At Lanuvium a meteor was seen in the sky by night. Several things were knocked to pieces by lightning at Cassinum, and the sun was seen for several hours at night. At Teanum Sidicinum a boy was born with four hands and as many feet. 29. During a storm at night many temples on the Capitol were shaken. At Rome and near by several things were overthrown by lightning. Mount Aetna, with an earthquake, scattered fire far and wide around its summit, and near the Liparae Islands the sea boiled up, burned certain ships, and stifled several mariners with fumes; it scattered about a large amount of dead fish. The Liparians took to them too greedily at their feasts, and were carried off by a poisoning of the stomach, so that the islands were devastated by an unheard-of plague. This portent, according to the answer of the soothsayers, prophesied the civil strife that occurred after these times. 36. Several things were damaged by lightning in Rome and near by. At Praeneste there was a rain of milk. The spears of Mars in the Regia moved. At Privernum the earth sank into a hollow over an area of four and a half acres. At Saturnia a hermaphrodite ten years old was found and sunk in the sea. Twenty-seven maidens purified the city with a chant. The rest of the year was peaceful. 40. A firebird and an owl were seen in the city. In the quarries one man was devoured by another. In accordance with the Sibylline Books, sacrifice was offered on Cimolos Island by thirty freeborn boys with living fathers and mothers, and as many maidens. Many thousand persons were overwhelmed in floods of the Po and the lake of Arretium. Twice there was a rain of milk. At Nursia twins were born to a free woman, a girl with all her members intact, and a boy with his belly open in front so that the bare intestine could be seen, whereas at the rear the child was without opening; he gave a cry and breathed his last. An encounter with Jugurtha was successful. (Firebird, Pliny, Natural History X. 36 [xvii].—Pliny cannot identify the bird; Jugurtha, Summary LXV.)

Territory near Thurii was ravaged by runaway slaves and deserters. The Cimbri crossed the Alps after ravaging Spain, and united with the Teutoni. A wolf entered Rome. Vultures on a tower were struck dead by a lightning bolt. At the third hour of the day an eclipse of the sun brought on darkness. A swarm of bees settled in front of the temple of Safety. In the voting-ground there was a rain of milk. In Picenum three suns were seen. In the neighbourhood of Volsinii flame rising from the ground seemed to touch the sky. In Lucania two lambs were born with horses' feet; one of them had the head of a monkey. Near Tarquinii streams of milk sprang copiously from the earth. According to an answer from the soothsayers two armed olive-wood statues were set up and prayer was offered. In Macedonia the Thracians were subdued. 51. A nine-day ceremony was held because there had been a rain of stones among the Volscian people. At Volsinii a new moon was eclipsed and did not reappear till the third hour of the following day. A girl with two heads, four feet, four hands, and double female parts was born dead. A firebird was seen and killed. Among the Vestini it rained stones within a country house. A meteor appeared in the heavens, and the whole sky appeared to be on fire. The ground oozed blood and grew hard. Dogs gnawed stones and tiles at many points. At Faesulae a large crowd was seen among the graves, walking in a group by day with dark garments and pale faces. Under the leadership of Nasica the Spanish chieftains who revolted were disposed of by execution and their cities rased.

When the entrails of a bull-calf were being removed, twin calfflets¹ were found in its belly. At Arretium a bronze statue of Mercury sweated. In Lucania flame surrounded, without burning anything, a flock of wethers, both while they were feeding and in the fold at night. At Carseoli a torrent of blood flowed. Wolves entered Rome. At Praeneste wool flew through the air. In Apulia a mule foaled. A kite was caught in the temple of Apollo at Rome. Though Consul Herennius offered a second sacrifice, the head of the liver failed to appear. During a nine-day ceremony, the banquet spread for a goddess was devoured by a dog before it had been tasted. At Volsinii flame was seen to flash from the sky at dawn; after it had gathered together, the flame displayed a dark grey opening, and the sky seemed to divide; in the gap tongues of flame appeared. Expiation was successfully accomplished by ceremonies of purification. For the whole year was without disturbance at home and abroad. B.C. 98

53. An owl was caught in the temple of Knightly Fortune and breathed its last in the hands of its captors. At Faesulae a roaring in the ground was heard. A boy was born to a maidservant with no opening in his private parts where liquid is excreted. A woman was discovered with double private parts. A meteor was seen in the sky. A cow spoke. A swarm of bees settled on the gable of a private house. At Volaterrae a stream of blood flowed. At Rome it rained milk. At Arretium two hermaphrodites were discovered. A four-footed cock was born. Several things were struck by lightning. A day of prayer was held. The people brought a collection to Ceres and Proserpina. Twenty-seven maidens sang a chant and purified the city. The tribe of the Maedi in Macedonia caused bloody havoc in the province.

54. While the war of Italy was gathering during the legislative activity of Livius Drusus, tribune of the commons, many portents appeared in Rome. About sunrise a ball of fire flashed forth from the northern heavens with a great noise in the sky. At Arretium, as men were breaking loaves of bread, blood flowed from the middle of them. Among the Vestini there was a rain of stones and sherds for seven days. At Aenaria a flame rising from a crack in the ground flashed up to the sky. In an earthquake around Regium part of the city and of its wall was demolished. Near Spoletium a gold-coloured fireball rolled down to the ground; increased in size, it seemed to move off the ground towards the east, and was big enough to blot out the sun. In Cumae on the citadel an image of Apollo sweated. The temple of Duty in the Circus Flaminius was struck by lightning while closed. At Asculum during a festival the Romans were massacred. As the Latins were driving herds and flocks from the country to Rome, people perished on every side. The flocks were stirred to such madness that by ravaging their masters they foreshadowed a bitter war, and dogs weeping with many signs of emotion foretold disaster to their people. 55. Caecilia Metella related that she had dreamed that Juno the Deliverer was fleeing away because her precincts were being desecrated with filth, and that Metella had by her prayers with difficulty induced her to return. Metella cleaned out the temple, which was befouled by ladies' attention to dirty and vile physical needs, and in which under the very image of the goddess, a bitch had her lair and her litter; ceremonies of prayer were held, and the temple restored to its original lustre. Romans were barbarously tortured by the people of Picenum. Disaster befell everywhere in Latium. Rutilius Lupus scorned divine lore when he had failed to find the head of the liver among the entrails; he lost his army and fell in battle. 56. Pompe dius Silo entered the city of Bovianum in triumphal procession after he had captured it; he thereby displayed an omen of victory for his enemies, because a triumphal procession is customarily led into the conquering city, not the conquered. At Stratopedon,¹ where the senate usually meets, crows killed a vulture by striking it with their beaks. In the same place a huge star fell from the sky. A vision of Isis seemed to attack the "harp"¹ with a thunderbolt. When Mithridates set fire to a grove of the Furies, gigantic laughter was heard, with no one to utter it. When by order of the soothsayers, he was sacrificing a maiden to the Furies, laughter issuing from the throat of the girl disrupted the rite. The fleet of Mithridates was lost in battle with the Romans off Thessaly.² (Silo, cf. 61a.)

56a. While Cinna and Marius were displaying a cruel rage in their conduct of the civil war, at Rome in the camp of Gnaeus Pompeius the sky seemed to fall, weapons and standards were hit, and soldiers struck dead. Pompeius himself perished by the blast of a heavenly body.³ The people wrecked his bier, and dragged his corpse with a hook, because during the peril to his fellow-citizens, he continued to avoid coming to the rescue of his endangered fatherland, although he had both magistral authority and very large forces. (Summary LXXIX; Orosius V. xix. 18.)

² There is some confusion, grammatical as well as factual, in this statement; cf. the critical note and Appian, Mithridatic Wars iv. 25 and v. 29; and for the opening of Mithridates' campaign, Summary LXXVII.

³ This curious phrase may be found in Pliny, Natural History II. 108, where the L.C.L. translation is "paralysed by a star"; and a similar phrase occurs in Petronius, Satyricon 2. One would suspect that it might cover many sorts of sudden seizure; but Orosius (see reference below) and Granius Licinianus (p. 22 F) interpreted it as meaning "struck by lightning."

56b. While Sulla was toiling day after day over the siege of Piraeus, one of his soldiers, who was bringing up earth for a mound, was struck dead by a thunderbolt. The soothsayer gave answer that because the head of the corpse pointed towards the city, the event indicated the entering in and victory of the Romans. After a short while Athens and Piraeus were taken by Sulla. When Ilium was burned by Gaius Fimbria, the temple of Minerva was also consumed, but amid the wreckage an image of great age remained standing unharmed, and foretold hope of restoration for the town. 57. During the era of Sulla a great clash of standards and of arms, with dreadful shouting, was heard between Capua and Volturum, so that two armies seemed to be locked in combat for several days. When men investigated this marvel more closely, the tracks of horses and of men and the freshly trampled grass and shrubs seemed to foretell the burden of a huge war. In Etruria at Clusium a matron bore a live snake, which by order of the soothsayers was cast into a stream and swam up against the current. Lucius Sulla returned victorious to Italy after five years and greatly terrified his enemies. By the malfeasance of a temple attendant the Capitol burned down in a single night. CONSULSHIP OF GAIUS CAESAR AND PUBLIUS
SERVILIUS

65a. When Pompey was marshalling his line of battle against Caesar in Macedonia and had summoned some peoples friendly to himself, lightning flashes gave them an unfavourable omen as they were advancing from Dyrrhacium. A swarm of bees on the standards foretold ruin. There were panics at night in the army. Pompey himself on the day before the battle dreamed that he was being received in his own theatre with great applause. Immediately afterward he was defeated in battle, and was put to death in Egypt. On that very day, it is well known that in many places statues turned about of their own accord, battle-cries and the clash of arms were heard at Antioch, so that twice the walls were manned; the same sounds were heard at Ptolemais, and the noise of timbrels at Pergamum. A growing palm sprang up to full-grown size in Tralles in the temple of Victory, between the joints of the stones below the statue of Caesar. Gaius Cornelius, an augur, announced at Padua on that very day, since it was indicated by the birds, that the action was taking place, and that Caesar was conquering. By night when the doors of his bed-chamber were closed, they opened of their own accord, so that Calpurnia was awakened by the moonlight which streamed in brightly. Caesar himself was riddled with twenty-three wounds by the conspirators in Pompey's senate-house. (Summary CXVI; fr. 46.)

drew the eyes of everyone. Since this star appeared at the festival of Venus, it was decided to dedicate it as a crown-jewel to the deified Julius. Though Caesar himself suffered much because of the unnatural malice of Consul Antony, he showed a gallant steadfastness in withstanding him. Earthquakes were frequent. The shipsheds and many other things were struck by lightning. By the violence of a tornado a statue, which Marcus Cicero had placed before the temple-chamber of Minerva on the day before he was exiled by decree of the commons, fell on its face with its limbs detached and its shoulders arms, and head broken; this foretold disaster to Cicero himself. Bronze tablets were torn by the tornado from the temple of Loyalty. The doors of the temple of Wealth were broken. Trees were torn up by the roots, and many roofs were overturned. A meteor in the sky was seen to travel towards the west. A conspicuous star blazed up for seven days. Three suns shone, and around the lowest sun a wreath like the wreath of grain flashed into view surrounding it, and afterward when the sun had been reduced to a single orb, its light was sickly for many months. In the temple of Castor some letters were struck from the names of the consuls Antony and Dolabella, which meant that both would be estranged from the fatherland. The howling of dogs was heard by night before the residence of the Chief Pontiff, and the fact that the largest dog was torn by the others foretold unseemly disgrace to Lepidus. At Ostia a school of fish was stranded on dry land when a flooding sea in turn receded. The Po overflowed, and when it returned within its banks, left a great abundance of vipers. B.C. 44

¹ The name of Antony which appears in the Latin is an intrusion for which no wholly satisfactory remedy has been proposed; see critical note. I translate without it, which secures agreement with Dio's account.

² Dio interprets the portents as applying to the state.

The civil wars between Caesar and Antony had their beginning. (Octavian, Pliny, Natural History II. 28 (98); Suetonius, Augustus 95; Orosius VI. xx. 5; comet, Dio XLV. vii. 1; cf. 69. When distinctions and military authority against Antony were conferred by vote on Caesar, double entrails appeared as he offered sacrifice. Success in his undertakings proceeded to attend him. A mounted statue of Consul Gaius Pansa collapsed at his home.¹ A horse with trappings, while dashing along before his very eyes, fell dead. One of the populace slipped in the blood of the victims and gave Pansa, as he was setting out, a palm spattered with gore. These portents were deadly to the consul himself, for presently as he was fighting against Antony, he was mortally wounded.² A vision of armour and weapons seemed to rise with a crash from earth to heaven. The standards of the legion which had been left by Pansa as a garrison for Rome were seen to be wrapped in spiderwebs spun over them, as though from long disuse. Several things were struck by lightning. In Caesar's camp at dawn an eagle lighted on the ridge of the headquarters above the awning, and then, being disturbed by smaller birds flying around it, disappeared from sight. At the oracle of Apollo a cry was heard,

“Madness of wolves in the winter, in summer no reaping of grain.” When the veterans demanded the consulship for Caesar, there was a dreadful disturbance at Rome. When Caesar was parading his forces on the Campus Martius, six vultures appeared. When thereafter he mounted the Rostra after his appointment as consul, again six vultures were seen and so, by the omen vouchsafed to a Romulus, gave the starting signal to the one who was about to found the city anew. After a reconciliation had been effected between Caesar, Antony, and Lepidus, there followed an atrocious proscription of the leading citizens. In the neighbourhood of Mutina the memorial to the victory of Marius, which faced south, of its own accord turned towards the north at the fourth hour. While these omens were being averted by sacrifices, three suns were seen about the third hour of the day, which presently drew together into a single orb. At the Latin Festival on the Alban Mount, blood dripped from the shoulder and thumb of Jupiter while sacrifice was being offered. Campaigns were conducted under Cassius and Brutus in the provinces by plundering the allies. It was regarded as a portent that Publius Titius, as praetor, ejected a colleague from office because of disagreements; and before a year had passed, Titius died. It is known B.C. 42 that no one who had deprived a colleague of office has lived for a year afterward. The following acted in this manner: Lucius Junius Brutus, as consul, with Tarquinius Collatinus, Tiberius Gracchus with Marcus Octavius, Gnaeus Octavius with Lucius Cinna, Gaius Cinna, as tribune of the commons, with Gaius Marullus, Tullius . . .

As Brutus and Cassius were strenuously preparing for battle against Caesar and Antony, a swarm of bees settled in the camp of Cassius. The place was cut off by drawing the rampart farther in, on the order of the soothsayers. A huge throng of vultures and other birds which feed on the carnage of battle flew up to the army. A boy who was being carried in procession in the costume of Victory, fell from the barrow. At the purification, the lictor placed the laurel on the fascies when they were reversed. As Brutus' men marched out to battle an Ethiopian met them at the gate and was stabbed by the soldiers. Cassius and Brutus perished. (Omens in Italy, Dio XLVII. xl; Titius, Dio XLVI. xlix. 1 f. In Germany in the camp of Drusus, a swarm of bees settled on the tent of Hostilius Rufus, the prefect of the camp, in such a way that it enveloped the forward guy rope and the spear planted before the tent. The whole force of Romans was crushed in an ambush. (Summary CXLII, end; Pliny, Natural History XI. 18 (55). Since Pliny points out that the immediate sequel to the bees was success by Drusus, either Obsequens has picked on some details of Drusus' campaign in order to support the conventional view that a swarm of bees is a bad omen, or else, as Rossbach suggests, the disaster was that of Varus, the lapse of time being disregarded.)

FOREWORD TO INDEX

THIS is primarily an index of names. An effort has been made to include every occurrence of every proper name in the extant books of Livy, in the summaries of the lost books, in the fragments, and in the Liber Prodigiorum of Obsequens. In many cases, however, particularly with place names, large blocks of pages have been included under a single inclusive reference. On the other hand, many passages are cited where a person or place is referred to but not named. For example, Livy may recount a year's campaign in Greece without the word 'Greece' appearing a single time; and more frequent are long passages where the minor characters are named, but the principal ones are referred to simply as 'the consul' and 'the other consul.' In addition, there are many articles dealing with political, social, religious, and military antiquities. These, however, do not pretend to be exhaustive.

Names of citizens are given in the fullest form known, whether or not Livy happens to use the cognomen or cognomina of the particular individual. The names in most cases have been taken from Broughton's Magistrates of the Roman Republic. This work has been of the greatest value, particularly in dividing the careers of persons of like names. The alphabetizing of personal names is based first on the nomina, then the cognomina, and finally the praenomina. When these are all alike, the order is chronological. In addition, all cognomina are listed in their alphabetical places with cross references to the nomina with which they are found. Where a Roman is mentioned in an article not his own, the triple name is used. By exception, the nomina are omitted with the Cornelii Scipiones, the Quinctii Flaminii, and the Claudii Marcelli; and the chief figures of the last days of the Republic are usually called by the names in common use today (e.g., Sulla, Caesar). Philip and Antiochus without qualifying number or expression are always Philip V and Antiochus III.

Items dealing with a country or city and those dealing with its people are usually combined in a single article in a single chronological order. Although this sometimes entails a clumsy shifting back and forth between singular and plural verbs, it should prove convenient since Livy uses the names of states and of their peoples interchangeably. In the few cases where a people play an important role quite apart from the state (as do, for example, the Numidians) they are given a separate article.

As far as practicable all items are dated. In any article items appearing before the first date are for some reason undateable. The dates should aid the user of the index in identifying the article in which he is interested, and still more in locating items within the longer articles. In the case of Romans who held office, the highest office with its date is given at the beginning of the article, unless this appears as the first item in the article.

Except in the earlier books Livy regularly makes separate mention of a man's election to an office and of his entry on the office. Unless there is special reason to note the election, the page reference to it is included with that of the entry on office, both being placed under the year of the office. Regular proration of office is not mentioned. It is to be assumed that a man's activities in the years immediately following a term as consul or praetor are as proconsul or propraeor unless otherwise indicated.

The index is based on the translation, the text having been consulted only when some problem was raised by the translation. Place names are given in the forms used by the translators where the latter agree. Where for a particular name different forms are used by different translators (or by the same translator on different pages), the Latin form is usually preferred, with cross references from the English or Greek forms where necessary. For headings of articles dealing with political and religious antiquities, English transliterations of Latin terms have been used when available; otherwise the Latin term has usually been kept.

RUSSEL M. GERR

I have taken advantage of the reprinting of this volume to add on pages 558-573 a table of parallel references, which will make it possible to use this Index with editions of Livy other than the present one.

TABLE OF PARALLELS

The following table will make possible the use of this index with editions of Livy other than the present one. The Roman numerals in the left of each pair of columns are the volumes of the Loeb edition, and the figures that follow are the pages of the translation. The lower-case Roman numerals in the other column are the books of Livy, and the figures that follow give the chapter and section with which the corresponding Loeb page begins. In most cases the section will have begun on the preceding page.
