1861 Mechanics' Mag. 5 Apr. 229/1 A curious statement made in the House of Commons, a few days ago, induces us to offer a few remarks on what may be called, appropriately enough, 'the sacrificial function in metals' . . . Failing . . . to achieve what was intended of it, the copper-protecting process of Davy ceased to be employed; but the failure of it is that which alone concerns us here, as illustrating what we would wish to convey by the words sacrificial metal. 1937 U. R. EVANS Metallic Corrosion Passivity & Protection xii. 531 The protection method is sacrificial, the valuable iron boiler being protected by sacrificing the easily replaceable zinc. 1949 *Jrnl. R. 1. The crime or sin of stealing or misappropriating what is consecrated to God's service. In ecclesiastical use, extended to include any kind of outrage on consecrated persons or things, and the violation of any obligation having a sacramental character, or recognized as under the special protection of the Church. Also, an instance of this offence.

In mediæval writings the classification of 'sacrilege' as a branch of avarice, which is based on the primary meaning of the term, is somewhat inconsistently combined with an enumeration of the varieties of sacrilege implying the wider sense explained above. Cf., e.g. Ayenbite pp. 40-41 Chaucer's Parson's Tale ¶727-9.

b. spec. in popular use as a name for robbery from a church or other place of worship.

The term is not technically used in Eng. Law, though formerly special penalties were imposed for the offence. From the 17th c. a robbery from a church has been regarded legally as a 'larceny' or a 'burglary' according to the circumstances.

1. A member of one of the three 'sects' (the others being the Pharisees and Essenes) into which the Jews were divided in the time of Christ. According to the New Testament and Josephus, they denied the resurrection of the dead, the existence of angels and spirits, and the obligation of the unwritten law alleged by the Pharisees to have been handed down by tradition from Moses.

In origin the Sadducees seem to have been not so much a theological or philosophical sect or school, as a political party composed of the nobility, i.e. the members and connexions of the high-priestly family.

sadic ('sɑ:dɪk, sei-), a. [f. the name of the Count de Sade (see SADISM) + -IC.] = SADEAN, SADISTIC adjs.

1919 R. FRY Let. 5 Jan. (1972) II. 443 A pretty bad melodrama . . . a Sadic German Jew who starts the worship of Astarte. 1926 T. E. LAWRENCE Seven Pillars i. i. 5 What now looks wanton or sadic seemed in the field inevitable. 1928 Daily Tel. 6 Nov. 10/6 The oily warden . . . finds a Sadic pleasure in flogging the life out of his helpless charges. 1976 *Times Lit. Sadie Hawkins ('seɪdɪ 'hɔ:kɪnz). U.S. The name of a character in the cartoon strip Li'l Abner by 'Al Capp' (Alfred Gerald Caplin, 1909–79), used attrib. to designate a day early in November on which, according to a 'tradition' in the cartoon series, women can propose marriage to men, demand dates with them, etc., or to designate events taking place on that day.

1939 Daily Mirror (N.Y.) 4 Nov. 21 Sadie Hawkins Day!! 1940 Ibid. 2 Nov. 12 Oh, happy Sadie Hawkins Day! Befo' the sun goes down Ah'll catch me a man, daid or alive!! Ibid. 8 Nov. 39 The first 'gun'! The Sadie Hawkins Day Race is on. 1941 Sun (Baltimore) 3 Nov. 15/2 Rulman also promised a free marriage to women who catch a man in the Sadie Hawkins footrace. 1942 Ibid. 27 Oct. 16 Your chances are four times as good of marrying up wid him on Sadie Hawkins Day as on Leap Year Day—Sadie Hawkins Day comes once every year. 1952 Ibid. 28 Feb. 32/2 The dean . . . was the only man to get away in the Sadie Hawkins Day race this afternoon. 1977 Guardian Weekly 20 Nov. 19/1 Much of Li'l Abner has been absorbed into American folklore—Sadie Hawkins Day, when sexual roles are reversed and girls chase and catch their men.

'sad-iron. [f. SAD a. or v.] A smoothing iron, properly a solid flat-iron, in contradistinction to a 'box-iron'.

1761 Newport (Rhode Island) Mercury 3 Nov. 4/3 To be sold by Naphtael Hart, jun. . . . sad Irons, Tellescopies, [etc.]. 1815 Niles' Weekly Reg. IX. 94/2 Sad Irons [were manufactured]. 1832 *BABBAGE Econ. sadism ('sei-, 'sɑ:dɪzm). [ad. F. sadisme, f. the name of the Count (usually called 'Marquis') de Sade (1740–1814; infamous for his crimes and the character of his writings): see -ISM.] A form of sexual perversion marked by a love of cruelty.

Now understood as cruelty that evidences a subconscious craving and is apparently satisfied, sexually or otherwise, by the infliction of pain on another by means of aggressive or destructive behaviour or the assertion of power over that person; also loosely, deliberate or excessive cruelty morbidly enjoyed.

1888 Pall Mall G. 10 Sept. 4/2. 1897 Lancet 13 Nov. 1263/2 Crimes committed by people afflicted with what is technically known as 'sadism'. 1924 J. RIVIERE et al. tr. Freud's Coll. Papers II. xxii. 261 We should not be astonished to hear that under certain conditions the sadism or destruction instinct which has been directed outwards can be introjected. 1937 H. G. WELLS Brynhild vii. 116 He . . . with an expression of impish sadism . . . prodded his sceptre into young Bates. 1943 H. READ Politics of Unpolitico ii. 18 Sadism is the unconscious impulse to acquire unrestricted power over another person, and to test the fullness of this power by destroying that other person. 1952 Times Lit. Suppl. 11 Jan. 28 Feeling [in France] had been bruised by the war [of 1914–18], but it had not been forced (as happened after the Second World War) to find . . . an outlet in sadism or violence. 1965 H. DEUTSCH Neuroses & Character Types ix. 132 Such observations led Freud to assume that it is the same aggression whether it is attached to the libidinal impulses in the form of sadism or whether . . . it is incorporated in the superego and made the expression of its severity. 1974 I. BIEBER in S. Arieti Amer. Handbk. Psychiatry III. xv. 318/2 In my view sadism is a maladaptive response to threat; it is a paranoid constellation in which the victim is a personified representative of a variety of irrationally perceived threats. 1979 M. GLASSER in I. Rosen Sexual Deviation x. 281 The distinction I am making between aggression and sadism may be illustrated by some simple examples.

sadist ('sei-, 'sɑ:dɪst), sb. (and a.) [f. SADISM: see -IST.] 'An individual affected with sadism' (Syd. Soc. Lex. 1897); more generally, someone who derives satisfaction from inflicting pain or asserting his or her power over others. Also as adj.

1919 H. WALPOLE Secret City I. x. 68 There was something almost sadist . . . in the old gentleman's observation of Markovitch's labours. 1919 M. K. BRADBY Psycho-Anal. x. 133 The need for a greater outlet of emotion and energy in daily life where the sadist has capacity for ruling others by the strength . . . of his personality. 1920 Glasgow Herald 9 Sept. 6 The fatal policy which has given a handful of political cranks, aided by hired mercenaries and sadist abnormals, the right to stand for Russia. 1934 H. G. WELLS Exper. Autobiogr. II. ix. 760 Those mucky little sadists, Stalky and Co. 1954 B. KARPMAN Sexual Offender xix. 355 Every sadist possesses certain elements of masochism. 1962 C. ALLEN Textbk. Psychosexual Disorders vii. 105 Those who retain a sentimental view of the blue-eyed innocence of the child naturally find it difficult to imagine . . . that the ruthless ferocity of the sadist originates at that time. 1974 J. BANCROFT Deviant Sexual Behaviour v. 120 Some interesting studies of suppression of fantasy have been carried out. An example is a sadist treated by Marks.

sadistic ('sɑ:dɪstɪk), a. [f. as prec.: see -STIC.] 'Related to sadism' (Dunglison Dict. Med. Sci. 1893); more generally, of or characteristic of a sadist. WELLS Anatomy of Frustration xx. 255 He hated people who nursed 'wrongs'. The 'wrongs' of Ireland — of India — of women, roused an almost sadistic impatience in him. 1946 H. PEARSON Life O. Wilde xvi. 319 Like all people who believe in punishment, he [sc. the governor of Reading Gaol] was vindictive and sadistic by nature, modelling himself on the God of his fathers as depicted in the Old Testament. 1952 Times Lit. Suppl. 15 Feb. 124/3 The vicarious sadistic lust for power of a disappointed man. 1954 B. KARPMAN Sexual Offender ix. 101 He admits drawing pictures of a sadistic nature; the torture of females, perversion of corpses. 1973 'E. McBAIN' Let's hear It xiv. 209 Teddy normally enjoyed films, except when she was submitted to the excesses of a sadistic nouvelle vague camera. 1977 A. SHERIDAN tr. Lacan's Écrits vii. 270 Regression is no more dependent on the need in demand than sadistic desire is explained by anal demand.

sadistically ('sɑ:dɪstɪkəlɪ), adv. [f. prec.: see -ICALLY.] In a sadistic manner; cruelly.

1922 G. B. SHAW in S. & B. Webb *Eng. saditty ('sædɪtɪ), a. U.S. Blacks. Also seditty. [Orig. unknown.] Affecting an air of superiority.

safety first. A maxim or slogan inculcating the necessity of taking precautions for the avoidance of accident. Also attrib.; occas. applied to the safest kinds of investment.

Various safety-first campaigns (in factories, schools, etc.) were organized in Britain in the early-twentieth cent. The slogan is said to derive from the American railway industry (see Encycl. Brit. (1926) III. 446). It was widely used as a slogan in Conservative election posters in 1922 and (with reference to Stanley Baldwin) in 1929.

sag (sæg), v. Inflected sagged, sagging. Forms: 5-7 sagge, (6 sacke), 9 sagg, 6- sag; 8-9 dial. seg(g (see E.D.D.)). [First recorded in the 15th c.; the meaning (as well as the 16th c. form sacke) appears to point to connexion of some kind with mod.Du. zakken, MLG. sacken, Sw. sacka, Norw. dial. sakka to subside, settle down (also sakk subsidence), Da. sakke to lag behind (the Du. and Sw. words have also the nautical sense below). With sense 3 cf. Norw. dial. sagga 'to walk heavily and slowly, as from weariness' (Ross), for which other dialects have sigga, sugga.

The Du., LG., and Sw. forms appear to admit of no etymological explanation as native words; on the other hand the Norw. dial. sakka may be related to sekkva (ON. sekkva) to SINK. It seems possible that the word is originally WScandinavian, and has passed (? as a nautical term) into Sw., Du., LG., and (perh. through LG.) into English.

On this hypothesis the representation of the continental Teut. kk by gg would be an instance of the common uncertainty in the phonetic appreciation of foreign sounds. It is uncertain whether the Norw. dial. sagga abovementioned is related to the other words, and whether its resemblance in sense to the Eng. word is more than a coincidence.]

St. Elmo (sənt 'elmoʊ). Also † St. Elm, St. Helmo, San Telmo, sant-elmo. [A corruption, via Sant'Ermo, of the name of St. Erasmus (martyred 303), Italian bishop and patron saint of Mediterranean sailors; cf. It. fuoco di Sant'Elmo.] Used in the possessive, absol., and with of to denote the luminous appearance of a naturally occurring corona discharge about a ship's mast or the like, usually in bad weather. Now usu. as St. Elmo's fire; = CORPOSANT, HELENA.

CHAMBERLAIN Let. 21 July (1939) II. 390 His comming was taken for a goode presage, like the appearing of St. Elmo after a tempest. 1774 Fires of St. Helmo [see FIRE sb. A. 10 b]. 1814 tr. G. H. Von Langsdorff's Voy. & Trav. II. iv. 102 In the winter months the air is often so charged with electricity, that for many hours together in the darkest nights a bluish green electrical light, called St. Helen's, or St. Elm's fire, may be seen. 1845 Encycl. Metrop. IV. 135/1 The fire of St. Elmo, so frequently seen upon the masts of vessels in the mediterranean, and from very early times connected with the names of Castor and Pollux, meets with a very simple explanation on the principle of a pointed conductor imbibing electricity. 1882 Encycl. Brit. XIV. 633/2 This glow is known to sailors as St Elmo's (San Telmo's) fire, in old days Castor and Pollux. 1942 Tee Emm (Air Ministry) II. 56 St. Elmo's Fire... is caused by the aircraft passing through a charged area of cloud and thus charging up itself... A glow, and in more extreme cases long streaks of fire appear at the propellers, wing-tips or nose. 1956 G.

DURRELL My Family & other Animals xvii. 235, I tell you, we'll find the chimney covered with Saint Elmo's fire one night, and before we know where we are we'll be drowned in our beds by a tidal wave. 1969 M. A. UMAN Lightning 244 Ball lightning and St. Elmo's fire are sometimes confused. St. Elmo's fire is a corona discharge from a pointed conducting object in a strong electric field. Like ball lightning, St. Elmo's fire may assume a spherical shape. Unlike ball lightning, St. Elmo's fire must remain attached to a conductor, although it may exhibit some motion along the conductor. Further, St. Elmo's fire can have a lifetime much greater than the lifetime of the usual ball lightning. 1976 Scotsman 20 Nov. (Weekend Suppl.) 1/1 The top of the mast was surrounded with an eerie pale green phosphorescence. This was St. Elmo's Fire—known and feared by seamen of old—caused by static electricity.

The only use surviving in mod.Eng. ('for the sake of') has not been found in OE., and was prob. adopted from ON. It existed, however, in OHG. and OFris., and there is a possibility that it may have been in OE., though not evidenced in the literature. It seems to have arisen from the use of the sb. to denote a litigant's cause or case (see 1 b). Cf. L. causā.]

Bridges* (1955) 83 Sake is a word I find it convenient to use: . . . it is common in German, in the form sach. It is the sake of 'for the sake of'. . . I mean by it the being a thing has outside itself, as a voice by its echo, a face by its reflection, . . . a man by his name, fame, or memory, and also that in the thing by virtue of which especially it has this being abroad, . . . as for a voice and echo clearness; for a reflected image light, brightness; . . . for a man genius, great achievements. . . In this case it is, as the sonnet says, distinctive quality in genius.

II. Phr. for the sake of (also †for sake of); for (one's, a thing's) sake.

In the latter of these forms, the word which precedes sake is a possessive (noun or pronoun); but down to the middle of the 19th c. the 's of the possessive of common or abstract nouns was very commonly omitted (doubtless owing to the difficulty of pronouncing the two sibilants in succession), and from the 17th to the early 19th c. the two sbs. were often connected by a hyphen, as if forming an attributive compound. The omission of the 's is now obsolete, but it is still not uncommon to write for conscience sake, for goodness sake, for righteousness sake, etc., without the apostrophe which is ordinarily used to mark the possessive of words ending in a sibilant.

The paragraphs marked β contain illustrations of the omission of the 's; some of the early examples there placed must be explained by the fact that the sbs. occurring in them (e.g. soul) had originally no s in the genitive.

6. a. Out of consideration for; on account of one's interest in, or regard for (a person); on (a person's) account.

Salic ('sælik, 'seɪlk), *a.*¹ Also 6 Salicque, 6-7 -like, 7 Sallick, 7-8 Salick, 6-9 Saliee. [ad. F. salique or med.L. Salicus, f. Saliū (see SALIAN²).]

1. Salic law: in early use, and still in popular language, the alleged fundamental law of the French monarchy, by which females were excluded from succession to the crown; hence gen. a law excluding females from dynastic succession. In this sense still often spelt Salique and pronounced ('sælik).

The ancient text which under the name of the 'Salic law' was adduced in favour of the succession of Philip V in 1316, and afterwards used to combat the claims of Edward III of England (and his successors) to the French crown, was really a quotation from the Lex Salica (see sense 2); the words however (cap. lix. §5 of modern editions) have no reference to succession to the crown, but merely state that a woman can have no portion of the inheritance of 'Salic land' (terra Salica); the precise meaning of this term is disputed, and in the earliest form of the code the word 'Salic' is omitted. a 1548 HALL *Chron., Hen. 5. Old Chem. †a. A solid soluble non-inflammable substance having a taste. Obs.
The name originally comprised such substances as resembled common salt (sense 1) in their appearance or properties, e.g. substances produced by the evaporation of watery liquids as salt is produced by the evaporation of seawater. The quality of the taste was not originally considered to be a criterion of the class, but was added in the 18th c., when these substances were ultimately divided into 'acid salts' (salia acido), 'alkaline salts' (salia alkalina), and 'neutral salts' (salia neutro, media, or salsa), corresponding to the modern 'acids', 'alkalis', and 'salts'.

6. Mod. Chem. A compound formed by the union of an acid radical with a basic radical; an acid having the whole or part of its hydrogen replaced by a metal. (In wider theoretical use the term 'salt' includes acids as salts of hydrogen.) Also, †ethereal salt, an ester.

The first marked step towards the modern conception of a chemical salt was Rouelle's definition (a 1770) of a neutral salt as a compound formed by the union of an acid with any substance serving as a base for it and giving to it a concrete or solid form. Various modifications of this or earlier views were put forward until the publication of Lavoisier's definition of a salt as the union of an acid with an oxide; this definition, however, was found to be inadequate when the composition of the halogen compounds, sulphides, etc. came to be accurately known. A further revolution in the theory of salts was made by Berzelius, who divided them into two classes; viz. HALOIO salts, formed of an electropositive element and a halogen, and AMPHIO salts, resulting from the union of an acid and a base; the latter he subdivided into oxy-salts, sulpho-salts, selenio-salts, and telluri-salts. According to more recent conceptions (Arrhenius 1888) salts, including acids, are regarded as composed of positive ions or cations (hydrogen and metals) and negative ions or anions (halogens and acid radicals).
1790 KERR tr. Lavoisier's Elem. Chem. 150-1 Acids may therefore be considered as true salifying principles. . . This view of the acids prevents me from considering them as salts. . . I shall not arrange the alkalies or earths in the class of salts, to which I allot only such as are composed of an oxygenated substance united to a base. 1807 T. saltate ('sæltet), v. [f. L. saltāt-, ppl. stem of saltāre to dance, frequent. of salīre to leap.]

1. intr. To leap; to jump; to skip. Hence 'saltating' vbl. sb. rare.

d. Physical Geogr. A mode of transport of hard particles over an uneven surface in a fluid stream (as a wind or river), in which they progress in leaps, and on falling to the surface either bounce up for another leap or impart their momentum to other particles which on rising are accelerated forward by the stream. Cf. SALTATE v. 2.

1908 W. J. MCGEE in Bull. Geol. Soc. Amer. XIX. 199 Transportation may be regarded as the general movement of earth matter seaward by streams; it comprises carriage of material (a) in solution, (b) in suspension, and (c) in what may be denoted saltation. 1941 R. A. BAGNOLD Physics of Blown Sand & Desert Dunes ii. 20, I shall use the name 'saltation' for the motion of sand in air, but without prejudice to the question of whether or not the mechanism which causes the grain to jump from the surface is the same in the two fluids. In air it is certainly the impact of a grain with the surface; but this is rarely so in water. 1962 READ & WATSON Introd. Geol. I. iv. 206 The mechanisms of transport in the sea are similar to those already described in connection with rivers, namely, suspension, rolling and saltation. 1977 A. HALLAM Planet Earth 50 The sand grains suspended in the air are the smaller ones, movement of larger particles being along the ground by saltation—by a series of jumps.

†2. spec. Pulsation or spurting forth (of blood).

1672 WISEMAN Treet. Wounds II. ix. 64 If it [sc. the blood] flow... from the left side, we suppose it the Artery, you will discover it by its saltation and florid colour. 1752 C. Wounds* I. 87 When veins are wounded, the blood does not flow with that impetuosity and saltation, as when proceeding from an artery.

3. Biol. a. A mutation, esp. one with marked effects on several characters.

The 'saltations' studied by de Vries (see quot. 1906) are now known to have been translocations, which in Eumero with its unusual system of chromosomes lead to large phenotypic changes.

1870 HUXLEY Lay Serm. xiii. 343 We greatly suspect... that she [sc. Nature] does make considerable jumps in the way of variation now and then, and that these saltations give rise to some of the gaps which appear to exist in the series of known forms. 1906 Pop. Sci. Monthly June 485 The name 'saltation', or in recent years 'mutation', has been applied to extreme fluctuation, the immediate cause of which is unknown. Ibid., Experiments of Dr. Hugo de Vries on the saltations of the descendants of an American form of evening primrose. 1919 Jrnl. Exper. Zool. XXVIII. 381 In our opinion, the attempted distinctions between 'saltations', 'mutations', and 'variations of slight degree' have led rather to confusion of thought than to clearer thinking. To us these are all a single class, 'mutations'. 1930 R. A. FISHER Genetical Theory Nat. Selection vii. 163 Unless such a resemblance formerly existed a gradual mimetic evolution is precluded, and we should be forced to admit that the mimetic females arose as sports or saltations totally unlike their mothers. Ibid. t64 A single saltation from a male of the same species. 1963 E. MAYR Animal Species & Evolution xv. 435 The sudden origin of new species, new higher categories, or quite generally of new types by some sort of saltation has been termed macrogenesis.

b. Change of phenotype occurring within a fungal colony.

1922 F. L. STEVENS in Bull. Illinois Nat. Hist. Surv. XIV. v. 157 The existing differences in definition and usage of the term mutation, as also our very limited knowledge of cytological conditions in the genus Helminthosporium and our ignorance as to whether it has sexual stages, have led me to select the term saltation for the variations here discussed. 1926 Ann. Bot. XL. 223 Changes of a more lasting nature may be conceived as arising gradually as a response or adaptation to certain growth conditions, or by sudden jumps. The latter type of phenomenon, which is known to occur in a considerable number of fungal genera,... is usually described as a 'mutation', or more conservatively as a saltation. 1940 J. RAMSBOTTOM in J. S. Huxley New Systematics 414 The morphological range is often so great that a single saltation will give what would be considered as a new species. 1978 Nature 29 June 755/t The common and poorly understood phenomenon of frequent somatic variation in certain supposedly haploid fungi (saltation) may perhaps be due to the loss of extra chromosomes that had been acquired previously.

Hence salt'ational a., of, pertaining to, or occurring by means of saltation.

1963 E. MAYR Animal Species & Evolution xv. 435 The reorganization of the gene pool, required for successful speciation, is (except in the case of polyploidy) never saltational. Ibid. 437 Some saltational postulates are based on the assumption of essentially invariant evolutionary rates. 1978 Sci. Amer. Sept. 41/1 Even T. H. Huxley... could not accept the gradual origin of higher types and new species; he proposed a saltational origin instead.

saltationist (sæl'teɪʃənɪst), a. and sb. Biol. [f. SALTATION + -IST.] A. adj. Of or pertaining to saltationism. B. sb. One who supports or advocates saltationism.

1954 R. A. FISHER in J. S. Huxley et al. Evolution as Process 93 Darwin's criticism of the saltationist theory of M. Mivart. 1978 Sci. Amer. Sept. 44/1 They were essentialists and saltationists, and they looked on mutation as the probable driving force in evolution. 1980 Nature 4 Dec. 430/1 T. H. Huxley himself was unable fully to accept Darwin's gradualism, and preferred the saltationist camp.

So saltationism, the theory that new species arise suddenly as a result of major mutations.

1975 KELLY & McGRATH Biology vii. 213/2 DeVries... insisted that a new species could arise by the introduction of a single mutation in an organism. His theory, called saltationism..., has been disproved, with one exception. 1978 Sci. Amer. Sept. 41/1 Saltationism was also popular with such biologists as Hugo De Vries, one of the rediscoverers of Gregor Mendel's laws of inheritance. 1979 M. RUSE Darwinian Revolution ix. 249 There were scientific reasons why many favored saltationism.

saltatory ('sæltətəri), a. and *sb.*¹ [ad. L. saltātōri-us, f. saltātor: see SALTATOR.] A. adj.

1. Of, pertaining to, characterized by, or adapted for dancing.

1656 BLOUNT Glossogr., Saltatory... of or belonging to dancing, vaulting, &c. 1821 EDGEWORTH Mem. I. 93. I soon began to avoid exhibiting my saltatory talents, and I seldom danced. 1851 HAWTHORNE Snow Image, etc., Old News 1. 155 There is an incidental notice of the 'dancing-school near the Orange-Tree', whence we may infer that the saltatory art was occasionally practised. 1869 J. MARTINEAU Ess. II. 183 He could make a saltatory automaton.

2. a. Pertaining to, characterized by, or adapted for leaping; spec. = SALTATORIAL 2.

1847 L. HUNT Men, Women, & B. I. iii. 43 The way in which sheep carry themselves on abrupt and saltatory occasions. 1874 MIVART Common Frog 1 What is a Frog?.. 'The Frog is a small saltatory Reptile', will probably be the reply of the majority. 1877 HUXLEY *Anat. Inv. b. Path. = SALTATORIC.

1881 J. ROSS Dis. Nervous Syst. II. 341 Saltatory Spasm. 1899 Allbutt's Syst. Med. VIII. 106 Or when placed on her feet [a patient] may be forced to progress by a series of springing movements (saltatory spasm).

c. fig. Proceeding by abrupt movement.

1844 EMERSON Ess., Experience Wks. (Bohn) I. 183 Nature hates calculators; her methods are saltatory and impulsive. 1894 H. F. OSBORN From Greeks to Darwin 200 Another highly characteristic feature of his theory was, that he [St. Hilaire] included in it what has recently been termed 'saltatory evolution', and strongly opposed Lamarck's fundamental principle that all transformation is extremely slow.

d. Physiol. Used to designate the mode of transmission in a myelinated nerve in which the nerve impulse 'jumps' from node to node.

1934 Amer. Jnl. Physiol. CX. 308 The pictures could be accounted for if progression were saltatory and by a process such as Lillie (1925) has described as occurring in the iron wire model... Here, due to reactivation by eddy currents flowing around the segments, activity progresses in jumps from node to node and consequently is more rapid than in the simple model. 1949 Jnl. Physiol. CVIII. 339 The finding... that a large decrease in node spacing can occur without a drop in conduction velocity is shown not to conflict with the theory of saltatory conduction. 1977 Proc. Nat. Acad. Sci. LXXXIV. 211/1 Myelinated nerve conducts by transmission of electrical excitation from node to node through local electrical circuits. This 'saltatory' mode of conduction results from a discontinuity in the excitability properties of the axon: excitable regions (nodes) alternate with nonexcitable passive core conductors (myelinated internodes).

e. Biol. Of the movement of small particles within cells: proceeding in directed jerks.

1964 L. I. REBHUN in Allen & Kamiya Primitive Motile Syst. in Cell Biol. 503 Particles may at one time undergo Brownian movement and suddenly undergo a process converting this to sudden, discontinuous motion, i.e., saltatory motion. 1970 Nature 7 Feb. 559/1 It may well be... that microtubules in brain function in the saltatory transport of material and vesicles from their site of formation in the cell body to their site of utilization at the synaptic endings. Ibid. 5 Sept. 1006/2 Translocation has been pictured as a saltatory interaction between enzyme-containing vesicles and fibrous proteins, chiefly microtubules.

3. Biol. saltatory replication, a hypothetical evolutionary event in which very many identical copies of a short section of DNA are added to a genome.

1968 R. J. BRITTEN in Carnegie Inst. Year Bk. 1966-7 72/2 Saltatory replications, the hypothetical events by which families of hundreds of thousands of similar nucleotide sequences are produced in the DNA of an organism... Families are produced in a time short compared to the time required for their loss by divergence (a few hundred million years). 1968 — & KOHNE in Ibid. 84/1 Events in which very many copies [of a DNA segment] are made in a short time interval (saltatory replication). Evidence is now available which clearly indicates saltatory replication. Ibid. 88/1 A saltatory replication producing 100,000 copies of the right sort of gene is a candidate for a genetic event with immense potentiality. 1970 Nature 12 Dec. 1043/2 Such gene expansion has been designated saltatory replication and is illustrated in Fig. 1 C.

Salvation Army. 1. An organization, on a quasi-military model, founded by the Rev. William Booth for the revival of religion among the masses in Great Britain and other countries.

The name was adopted in 1878 (the body until then was styled 'the Christian Mission'). The officers bear military titles ('general', 'captain', etc.). In its early years, open-air evangelistic services were the most prominent feature of the Salvation Army's work; it has since become notable for its charitable service among the poor and homeless.

†salve, v.² Obs. [app. ad. L. salvāre to SAVE.

In the astronomical sense t, the L. form was prob. adopted because the vernacular save did not sufficiently indicate the technical import of the word. In this use the word became virtually equivalent to 'solve', 'explain', and it seems probable that sense 2 (though in our quotes appearing earlier) arose as a generalized application of this notion. The remaining uses were no doubt suggested by mod. Latin phrases like salvo jure, salvo honore, etc.; see SALVO sb.¹)

G. BENNETT Manuf. of Leather xx. 256 Samming is an exceedingly important operation by which leather is brought into a uniformly half-dry condition, this state being quite necessary for many of the finishing operations... The 'sammed' condition may be obtained in three ways—by drying out completely and then wetting back by dipping through water (often tepid) and leaving 'in pile' for some hours; by drying the wet goods in suspension to the required consistency and no further, wetting back any parts that have become drier than the bulk and leaving in pile for a time to become uniform; and by machine samming, in which case the superfluous moisture is removed by the pressure of machine rollers.

same (seim), a. (pron., adv.) Forms: 4-7 sam, 5 ssame, 6 some, 3- same. [ME. same, a. ON. same masc., sama fem., neut., rarely in str. form sam-r (Sw. samma, samme, Da. samme); a Com. Teut. word, but lost in OE. and OS. (which have only the derived adv., in OE. swā same, OS. so sama, -o, likewise) and in the mod. Teut. langs. retained only in Eng. and Scandinavian. Cf. OHG. sama same (rare, though the derived adv. sama, -o, likewise, similarly, is common), Goth. sama same:—Indogermanic somo-*, whence Skr. samā level, equal, same, Gr. ὁμός same (cf. ὁμαλός level), OIrish same same.

Ablaut-variants of this root are (1) sem-* in Gr. εἶς (:- sems*) one; (2) s-m-* in OTeut. somo-* some, OIr. sama any, every, Gr. ἅμα together, L. similis like, OIrish samail likeness, image, Welsh hafal like; also as prefix in Skr. sakṛt acting at once, Gr. ἁπλός, L. simplex simple; (3) sōm- in Skr. sāma similarity, Osl. samú same, OE. sōm agreement (see SEEM v.).]

The ordinary adjectival and pronominal designation of identity, equivalent to the older *ILK a.*¹, to L. idem, Gr. ὁ αὐτός, Ger. derselbe. Normally preceded by the, exc. after a demonstrative; the omission of the article occurs only in dialectal or vulgar speech and in certain specially elliptical varieties of diction (e.g. in commercial correspondence). As the prefixed article is functionally a part of the word, it is often difficult to distinguish the simple predicative use (= 'identical') from the absolute and elliptical uses.

A. adj.

1. Not numerically different from an object indicated or implied; identical.

1. With forward reference: Identical with what is indicated in the following context.

It is remarkable that this use is all but entirely absent from the writings of Shakspeare; the only clear instance appears to be quot. 1598 in 4 below.

a. Followed by a clause with relative pronoun (that, who, which) or relative adverb (when, where). Cf. VERY a.

In this construction that sometimes has not the strict pronominal syntax, but is equivalent in meaning to 'in (on, by, etc.) which', 'where', 'when'. Cf. the similar use of F. que.

d. Followed by as. Now the commonest construction.

Four varieties of use may be noted. (a) As may serve as a relative adv. or pron. introducing a clause (cf. 1 a); (b) it may precede the subject or object of a verb omitted by ellipsis; (c) by ellipsis of the copula, it may be followed by sb. or pronoun denoting that with which identity is stated; (d) it may elliptically precede an adv. or phrase.

3. a. Expressing the identity of an object designated by different names, standing in different relations, or related to different subjects or objects. In this use the sb. qualified by same often denotes an indeterminate or hypothetical object, so that the becomes (with a sing.) functionally equivalent to the indefinite article, or (with a plural) redundant; hence result occasional ambiguities.

Cf. the Fr. 'Deux mots qui signifient une même chose', 'De mêmes causes doivent produire de mêmes effets' with the ambiguous English 'Two words which signify the same thing', 'The same causes must produce the same effects'.

DU TOIT Our Wandering Continents iv. 62 A major geosyncline...traversing Bolivia, north and central Argentina, Cape, Weddell Sea, passing east of King Edward VII Land and through Edsel Ford land, crossing Tasmania and the eastern part of Australia to New Guinea... This feature, which seems to have played so vital a rôle during the evolution of Gondwana, can conveniently be called the 'Samfrau' Geosyncline—a contraction of the words 'South America—South Africa—Australia'. 1959 New Biol. XXIX. 14 A further example of this type is the Samfrau geosyncline, of which Du Toit has suggested the remnants now occur in South America, South Africa, and Australia. 1971 M. Also attrib. Cf. BELTANE.

The OIr. form samain is used only with reference to the ancient Celts. 'Samhain Eve' (quot. 1904) and 'the night of Samhain' (quot. 1910) are different renderings of Ir. oidhche Shamhna 'Hallowe'en'.

MACCULLOCH Celtic & Scandinavian Religions I. viii. 58 Samhain, which means 'summer end', naturally pointed to the fact that the powers of blight, typified by winter, were beginning their reign. But it may have been partly a harvest festival. 1957 W. R. KERMACK Scottish Highlands 153 At Samhain (Hallowe'en, 31st October, the beginning of Winter) the Lewismen made libation to the sea-god Shony, who could send them plenty of seaweed to manure their fields. 1958 T. 1692 TYRRELL tr. Cumberland's Law Nat. III. §13. 126 The strictest Sanction which any Sovereign Power can give unto its Laws, is, when it . . . hath . . . declared, That it will confer a sufficient share of good Things, or Rewards, for so doing; and of Evils, or Punishments, upon any breach, or neglect of its Commands. 1727 J. d. Pol. Esp. in pl., economic or military action taken by a state or alliance of states against another as a coercive measure, usu. to enforce a violated law or treaty.

Come, now, put on your beard, fly over to Italy, and—sanctions or no sanctions—put into his stocking your One Hundred and Eighty-Ninth Volume.' 1937 A. HUXLEY Ends & Means ix. 109 Military sanctions are war. Economic sanctions, if applied with vigour, must inevitably lead to war-like reactions on the part of the nation to which they are applied, and these war-like reactions can only be countered by military sanctions. 1943 H. 3. Ethics. A consideration which operates to enforce obedience to any law or rule of conduct; a recognized motive for conformity to moral or religious law, operating either through the agent's desire for some resultant good or through his fear of some resultant evil.

As a technical term of Ethics, the word is favoured by the Utilitarians. For the classification of the different 'sanctions' see QUOTE. 1780 and 1887. The sanction of law in the strict sense (see 2 above) is distinguished as 'legal' or 'political'. Bentham's 'moral sanction' corresponds to the 'social sanction' of other writers.

II. (1817) 55 To supply what was much more wanting than lessons of morality, stronger moral sanctions, and clearer assurances of a future judgement. 1817 JAS. MILL Brit. Morals II. III. 144 Physical sanctions are the pleasures and pains which follow naturally on the observance or violation of physical laws, the sanctions employed by society are praise and blame, the moral sanctions . . . are . . . the approval and disapproval of conscience; lastly, the religious sanctions are either the fear of future punishment, and the hope of future reward, or, to the higher religious sense, simply the love of God, and the dread of displeasing Him. 1896 'M. FIELD' Attila IV. 102 For he rejects our sanctions, he is bound By nothing we are bound by.

4. Binding force given to an oath; something which makes an oath or engagement binding; †a solemn oath or engagement.

II. 5. a. A church or other sacred place in which, by the law of the mediæval church, a fugitive from justice, or a debtor, was entitled to immunity from arrest. Hence, in wider sense, applied to any place in which by law or established custom a similar immunity is secured to fugitives.

By English common law, a fugitive charged with any offence but sacrilege and treason might escape punishment by taking refuge in a sanctuary, and within forty days confessing his crime and taking an oath which subjected him to perpetual banishment. By the act 21 Jac. I. c. 28 §7 (1625) the right of sanctuary in criminal cases was abolished. Certain places, chiefly actual or reputed precincts of former royal palaces, as Whitefriars, the Savoy, and the Mint, continued to be sanctuaries in civil cases until their privilege was abolished by the acts 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 27 §15 (1696-7) and 9 Geo. I. c. 28 (1722). The abbey of Holyrood is still by law a sanctuary for debtors, but the abolition of imprisonment for debt has rendered the privilege useless.
