jig (dʒɪg), *sb.*¹ Forms: 6 Sc. ieig, 6-7 iyg, iigge, iygge, gigge, 7 gig, ijgge, 7-8 jigg, 7- jig. [Origin uncertain. Often assumed to be identical with OF. gigue a kind of stringed instrument, a rude fiddle, It. and Sp. giga, MHG. gige, Ger. geige; but as to this there are difficulties: the OF. word had none of the senses of jig, it was also obs. long before jig is known to have existed; moreover, mod.F. gigue the dance, and dance tune (exemplified 1680) is not a continuation of OF. gigue, but is said by Darmesteter to have been simply adopted from Eng. jig. In this uncertainty as to the origin and history of the word, the order of senses here presented is provisional; those in 6 are in part directly from the stem of JIG v.

Apparently the only way in which jig could be connected with OF. gigue, would be its formation from JIG v., the derivation of the latter from F. giguer, ginguer 'to leap, frolic, gambol', and the formation of this from OF. gigue. But not one of these steps is certain: in particular the senses and chronology of JIG v. offer difficulties.]

jig (dʒɪg), v. Also 7 gig, (gidge). [Closely related to JIG *sb.*¹ (q.v.), but not known so early. In some senses it approaches obs. F. giguer (15th c.) to gambol, freak, sport, nasalized ginguer to leap, kick, wanton (which is app. not related to OF. gigue); but this resemblance may be merely accidental, or due to parallel onomatopœic influence, the large number of words into which jig- enters indicating that it has been felt to be a natural expression of a jerking or alternating motion. See the words following, and cf. FIG, FRIG. Some of the senses evidently arose independently from JIG *sb.*¹, and the historical order of the whole is unascertained.]

jingo ('dʒɪŋɡəʊ); int., sb., and a. Also 7 jeingo. [Appears first c 1670 as a piece of conjuror's gibberish, usually hey or high jingo!, prob. a mere piece of sonorous nonsense with an appearance of mysterious meaning. In 1694 by jingo occurs in Motteux's transl. of Rabelais, where the Fr. has par Dieu: this, being contemporary with the conjuror's term, may be presumed (though not proved) to be the same word, substituted, as in many other cases, for a sacred name: cf. by golly, gock, gom, gosh, jabers, etc. In Scotland, by jing (or jings) has long been in common use.

A recent conjecture, since jingo began to attract attention, would identify it with the Basque word for 'God', given by Van Eys and Larramendi as Jinko, Jainko (Yinko, Yainko), Jincoa, Jaincoa; the suggestion being that this may have been caught up from Basque sailors. Such an origin is not impossible, but is as yet unsupported by evidence. The grotesque notion that the word is short for St. Gengulphus is merely a joke of the author of the Ingoldsby Legends.]

Jocko ('dʒɒkəʊ). Also Jacko. [a. F. jocko, erroneously made by Buffon out of engeco, properly ncheke, the native name of the chimpanzee in the Gaboon country, West Africa.] The chimpanzee; sometimes used as a familiar name for any ape (perh. influenced by Jack or Jakanapole).

[Note. Lord Hailes Spec. Sc. Gloss. (c 1776) 18, says 'The etymology of this word remains unknown until not many years ago an old knife was found having this inscription Jacques de Liege, the name of the cutler'. A similar statement is made by Smiles Industr. Biog. (1863) 101, and Jevons Coal Question (1866) 91. The former says 'Jacques de Liege, a famous foreign cutler whose knives were as well known throughout Europe, as those of Rodgers or Mappin are now'. On the face of it this account is plausible: it was not uncommon in Sc. for de to be corrupted to the, e.g. the Bruce; the change of d to t after k is also phonetically simple. But, for the present, Scottish antiquaries have failed to find any confirmation, in knife or document, of Hailes's statement; and inquiries made for us at Liege have been equally unsuccessful in finding any trace of Jacques the cutler.]

jolly ('dʒɒli), a. and adv. Forms: a. 4 iolife, -iffe, -yfe, -ef, 4-5 iolyf, 4-6 iolif. β. 4-6 iolye, 4-7 ioly, (5 iuly, yoly), 5-6 ioyly, 5-7 iolie, 6 iollie, iolly, ioylye, 7 jollie, 7- jolly. [ME. jolif, jolyf, joly, a. OF. jolif, joli, gay, festive, lively, merry, amorous, gallant, brave, finely dressed, handsome, fair, pretty, = It. giulivo merry, pleasant, cheerful, glad, gay (in Florio giolivo 'iollie, pleasant, ioyous, blithe, bonnie, buckesome'), OCat. joliu (Littré). For the loss of the final f in F. and Eng. cf. hasty, tardy. In 15-16th c. app. associated with joy, whence the spelling joyly.

The origin of OF. jolif is uncertain. French etymologists have generally followed Diez in referring it to ON. jól (= OE. geól) YULE, or to a cognate German name (indicated by Gothic juleis November) for the midwinter feast of the northern nations, whence (in ON.) for 'a feast' generally; thus jól-ivus*, jól-if would be = festive. But the historical and phonetic difficulties involved, whether the word is supposed to have been taken into F. from Norse after 900, or to have been Common Romanic, are such as to render this conjecture extremely doubtful. M. Paul Meyer suggests that OF. jolif might be after all:—L. gaudivus*, f. gaudere to rejoice, gaudium joy, with change of d to l, as in cigāda, Pr. cigala, F. cigale, Vadensis, F. Valois, and some other words.]

It has been supposed to be a perversion of JOLYWAT or gellywatte, an earlier name app. for the same or a similar ship's boat of small size. On the other hand the first element bears a strong (written) resemblance to a name (of unknown origin and uncertain age) applied to small boats of various kinds in many Teutonic langs.: e.g. Da. jolle (17th c.), Sw. jol, jalle, julle, LG. jalle, jälle, gälle, gelle (in Fischer 1741 jal or jelle, Brem. jolletjen 'small bark or boat'). But in all these langs. the j is = Eng. y, and the actual corresponding word is F. yole, Eng. yawl. (An alleged F. jol, jelle, seems only to be the Teutonic word mentioned as a foreign word in an Encyclopédie of the 18th c.) Hence the exact historical relations of these words remain unascertained.]

[Note. The etymology of jolt vb. and sb., and their derivatives, and of words apparently allied in form and sense, is, in the present state of the evidence, involved in obscurity and difficulty. Jolt-head is known in 1533; jalt-headed (in the form chalt-headed) in 1552; jolting pate, app. in the sense of jalt-head in 1579; while the simple vb. and sb. jalt, are not known till 1599. But *JOT v.*¹, largely identical in sense with jalt, is quoted at least from 1530, and may be a century earlier. Sense 1 of jalt, both in sb. and vb., has evident affinities with jalt, *jowl sb.*⁴, *v.*¹, and perh. with *jowl sb.*²; but the other senses of jalt vb. coincide with those of jalt vb. Jalt has thus the appearance of an alteration of jalt, influenced by jawl, and perh. by jalt-head, which latter is evidently related in some way to *jowl sb.*⁴ or *jowl sb.*²: the form chalt-headed esp. recalls the challe form of the latter. (Cf. also the mod. dial. chalter-, chawter-headed = JOLTER-HEADED.) It has been suggested that jalt-head may have been a phonetic variant of jalled*- or jawl'd head*, and that jalt vb. was a back-formation from it, perh. through jaltling pate: but this has obvious difficulties, phonetic and semantic. Further evidence may harmonize facts, which are at present somewhat contradictory.]

†jolywat. Obs. Also 5 iolywet, 6-7 gellywatte. [Of obscure origin and uncertain form, the earlier instances having joly-, the later gelly-.

Conjectured by some to be a corruption of Sp. and Pg. galeota, F. galiote, Du. galjoot (GALLIOT!). But this is extremely doubtful. It is difficult to comprehend how galeota could be transformed into jolywat; and the things differ even more than their names, for the galliot was an independent vessel with sails and many rowers, while the jolywat was a ship's boat of small size. It is true that the Pg. galeota appears to have become galleywat or GALLIVAT, in the East Indies, but this, like the original, was a vessel of 60 or 70 tons with sails and 40 or 50 rowers, carrying sometimes 8 guns—a very different thing from the jolywat, to say nothing of the impossibility of any connexion between an Indo-Portuguese word and an English word before 1500. The variation jolly-, gelly-, reminds us of the numerous forms of the Scandinavian and Low German word jol, jolle, gelle, cited under JOLLY-BOAT; but the evidence for this as yet does not carry us back to the date of jolywat.]

Jonathan ('dʒɒnəθən). [A personal name; orig. that of the son of Saul, king of Israel.]

1. (esp. in phrase Brother Jonathan.) A generic name for the people of the United States, and also for a representative United States citizen.

Understood to have originated in the expression Brother Jonathan (cf. 2 Sam. i. 26), said to have been applied to Jonathan Trumbull, Governor of Connecticut, by General Washington, who often sought his advice. Hence it is believed to have been applied at first to a New Englander, and at length, like Yankee, in the wider sense.

The suggestion has been made that Jordan is short for Jordan-bottle, and meant orig. a bottle of water brought from the Jordan by crusaders or pilgrims; that it was thence transferred to 'a pot or vessel used by physicians and alchemists', and thence to the chamber utensil. But the earlier steps of this conjecture app. rest upon nothing but the later form of the word (which may actually be a corruption of something else), and the external probabilities of such an origin. It is remarkable that, though the early accentuation and spellings indicate a French origin, no trace of the word has been found in Old French; nor does the med.L. jurdānus appear to be known outside England. The river Jordan is in L. Jordānēs, a word necessarily familiar to the author of the Prompt. Parv. and other glossarists, who used not this, but jurdanus for the 'jurdan'.]

† 1. A kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians and alchemists. Obs.

As figured in Sloane MS. 73, and elsewhere, it has somewhat the shape of the bulb of a retort, or of a Florence flask with the neck cut off midway between the widest part and the mouth, and the top expanded somewhat to a rim. Possibly it was often used to hold urine for purposes of diagnosis, which would naturally lead to sense 2. Skeat puts the Chaucer example in sense 2.

Josephson (ˈdʒɔʊzɪfsən). Physics. The name of Brian David Josephson (b. 1940), British physicist, used attrib. to denote an effect predicted by him in 1962, whereby an electric current (Josephson current) can flow from one superconducting metal to another with no potential difference between them if they are separated by a sufficiently thin layer of an insulator (owing to tunnelling by coherent pairs of electrons), the application of a potential difference causing the current to oscillate with a frequency equal to the voltage multiplied by $2e/h$ (e = the electronic charge, h = Planck's constant). So Josephson junction, a metal-insulator-metal junction exhibiting this effect.

1963 ANDERSON & ROWELL in Physical Rev. Lett. X. 231/1 There are...four experimental points suggesting that this is indeed the Josephson effect. 1966 Physical Rev. CXLII. 366/2 The Josephson junction behaves as a parametric inductance element in which the voltage is proportional to the frequency. 1966 *McGraw-Hill Encycl. Its frequency should be 4.836×10^{14} cycles per second per volt of potential difference. 1969 J. E. MERCEREAU in R. D. Parks Superconductivity I. viii. 399 Such structures of two superconductors nearly in contact (weakly connected) are now called Josephson junctions... The device provides a unique opportunity to study the coupling of electromagnetic and quantum waves. 1972 Physics Bull. Aug. 457/1 The Josephson effects have led to new types of galvanometer, magnetometer and computer memory elements, to new methods of harmonic mixing of two frequencies and of harmonic generation, and to simple oscillators.

joule (dʒu:l) Physics. Also Joule. [Named 1882, after Dr. J. P. Joule, an English physicist.]

1. An electrical unit, being the amount of work done (or of heat generated) by a current of one ampère acting for one second against a resistance of one ohm. Later adopted as the M.K.S. unit of energy and work in non-electrical contexts also; it is equal to 10 million ergs, and is now incorporated in the International System of Units, in which it is given the equivalent definition of the work done when the point of application of a force of one newton is displaced through a distance of one metre in the direction of the force.

Although some people of this name call themselves (dʒəʊl) and others (dʒəʊl) (D. Jones Everyman's Eng. Pronouncing Dict. (ed. 11, 1956), G. M. Miller BBC Pronouncing Dict. British Names (1971)), it is almost certain that J. P. Joule (and some at least of his relatives) used (dʒu:l). For evidence on this point see Nature (1943) CLII. 354, 418, 479, 602.

1882 Athenæum 26 Aug. 274/2 Dr. Siemens proposes to add to these [electrical] units four new ones, as follows: (1) a Watt... (2) a Weber... (3) a Gauss... (4) a unit of heat, to be called a 'joule', and to be defined as the quantity of heat generated by an ampère flowing through an ohm for one second. Ibid. 2 Sept. 310/2 Two of his units were unanimously approved—namely, (1) the watt... (2) the joule. 1886 J. A. FLEMING Short Lect. to Electr. Artisans v. 87 An amount of work equal to 10 million ergs is called one joule. Hence one foot-pound = 1·356 joules, or one joule = 7373 foot-pound. 1889 Rep. Brit. Assoc. Adv. Sci. 1888 56 It was also agreed to adopt the name 'Joule' for 10^7 C.G.S. units of work. Thus a Joule is equal to 10^7 ergs. It is the work done in one second by a power of one Watt. 1893 Operator & Electr. World 2 Sept. 175/1 The several governments represented by the delegates of this International Congress of Electricians... hereby recommended to formally adopt as legal units of electrical measure the following... As a unit of work the joule, which is 10^7 units of work in a C.G.S. system. 1896 Rep. Brit. Assoc. Adv. Sci. 1896 154 The amount of heat required to raise the temperature of 1 gramme of water 1° C. of the scale of the hydrogen thermometer, at a mean temperature which may be taken as 10° C. of that thermometer, is 4.2 Joules. 1923 N. SHAW Forecasting Weather (ed. 2) i. 24 Observations for nine stations within greater London, comprising measures of atmospheric pollution at Richmond and South Kensington, total solar radiation at South Kensington in joules, and its average and maximum rate in milliwatts. 1949 Nature 19 Mar. 428/1 It was also agreed [by the ninth International Conference of Weights and Measures] that the unit of heat should be the 'Joule'. 1951 Engineering 11 May 577/1 The international units, as realised in the various national laboratories, differed by small amounts, but it has been agreed that the mean international joule of the various laboratories is equal to 1.00019 absolute joules. Ibid. 577/3 If the value of the 15-deg. calorie is taken as 4.1855 absolute joules, a B.Th.U. is equal to 1054.54 absolute joules. 1963 [see CALORIE]. 1970 Daily Tel. 4 May 3 Adoption of the metric system and loss of the calorie as a unit of energy may increase the hazard of obesity, Prof. J. B. M. Coppock, an expert on nutrition, said yesterday... There was a danger of losing the calorie for another unit, the joule, which was little understood outside physics and engineering... It would be years before the public... could adjust to a new jargon.

2. Used attrib. and in the possessive as the personal name to designate quantities, effects, etc., discovered by Joule or arising out of his work: Joule (†or Joule's) effect, (a) the heating effect of an electric current flowing through a resistance (described by Joule's law (a)); (b) a change in the linear dimensions (esp. length) of a body when it is subjected to a magnetic field; Joule's equivalent = mechanical equivalent of heat: see EQUIVALENT sb. 3 c; Joule heating, the heating that occurs when an electric current flows through a resistance; Joule's law, (a) the law that the heat produced by an electric current i flowing through a resistance R for a time t is proportional to $i^2 R t$; (b) a law concerning ideal gases, now usually given in the form: the internal energy of a given mass of a gas depends only on its temperature; 'Joule-meter, a meter in which the Joule is used as the unit of work or energy.

3. A daily record of commercial transactions, entered as they occur, in order to the keeping of accounts. a. In a general sense = DAY-BOOK. b.

In Book-keeping by Double Entry, A book in which each transaction is entered, in systematic form, with statement of the accounts to which it is to be debited and credited, so as to ensure correct posting in the ledger. These entries are either made at first-hand, or are 'journalized' from a waste-book or day-book, in which they have been entered as they occur, without consideration of the special accounts concerned.

Thus the waste-book entry, 'John Smith paid his acct of £100 due 3 months hence less discount at 5%—£98 15s., od.', would be entered in the journal as 'Dr. Cash £98 15s., P. & L. Discount £1 5s.; Cr. John Smith £100'.

[OE. ceaf (? ceafi), corresp. to OS. kabal* (only in dat. pl. kaflun), mod. Flem. kavel, Du. kevel gum; cf. MHG. kivel, Ger. dial. kiefel, kiffel = kiefe, kiefer jaw, chap; a deriv. of an ablaut stem kef-, kaf-, whence also ON. kjaptr (Sw. käft, Sc. chaft, q.v.). The OE. ceaf regularly gave ME. chavel, whence chaul, chawl. The later jowle, jowl, joul, joll, jole, is not a regular development; even with change of ch to j, chawl would have given jawl. But these forms coincide with the j forms in JOWL² and ³, and they first appear late in the 16th c., contemporaneously with those of JOWL², from cholle, chowle. From that time onward the three words have run together in form, although in this word ch forms have come down dialectally to the present day.

The origin of the j, first in JOWL *sb.*³, and then in JOWL *sb.*¹ and ², is at present unaccounted for; there is no OF. or other Romanic word to the influence of which it can plausibly be referred. This, with the obscurity which attaches to the origin of JOWL *sb.*² and JOWL *sb.*³, and the fact that all are in recent use levelled under the form jowl, makes the group a very puzzling one.]

4. Here perhaps belongs the phrase cheek by jowl, in earlier usage cheek by cheek: see CHEEK sb. 5.

In this the j form is known from 1577, which is somewhat earlier than it is known in sense 1 above. The 17th c. variants cheek by chole, choul, agree in form better with *JOWL sb.*² or ³. But it is probable that, by the time the phrase came into use, all three sbs. were already felt as one. The following examples supplement those under CHEEK.

1577 HANMER Anc. Eccl. Hist. VIII. xxv. 165 Cheeke by iole with the Emperour. 1589 Hay any work (1880) 46 That maidenly Doctor, (who sits cheek by ioll with you). 1590 *SHAKS. Mids. OLG. kela, OHG. chela, Du. keel, Ger. kehle throat). But the etymological relation of ME. cholle to these words is difficult to determine; and it does not appear possible to refer it to any OE. type. The 17th c. chowle was a regular development of ME. cholle: cf. bowle, *BOWL sb.*¹ from ME. bolle; but the j forms, which, as in *JOWL sb.*¹, appear late in the 16th c., are not accounted for. jowl, jole (dʒəʊl, dʒaʊl), *sb.*³ Forms: a. 4–5 choll(e, 5 choule. β. 5–6 iolle, 5 iol, 6–7 iole, 7 jolle, joule, (geoule), 7– 8 joll, joul, joal, 7–9 jole, jowl. [The forms agree generally with those of *JOWL sb.*²; but the j forms appear here much earlier, and the ch forms disappear before 1500; in sense 2, the ch forms are not evidenced at all. For these reasons, and on account of the complete distinction of sense, this is treated provisionally as a distinct word; but its origin remains unknown.

The chronology of the forms of this word, and of *JOWL sb.*¹ and ², suggests that it was in this word that the j forms originated, and that hence they passed in the 16th c. to the two others in which ch was original, so as to level all three under the form jowl, jole. But no extrinsic source of either jolle or cholle in the sense ‘head’ has been found.]

Heb. yōbēl, 'jubilee', orig., it seems, 'ram', hence 'ram's horn used as a trumpet', with which the jubilee year was proclaimed. The Latin form jubilæus instead of jōbēlæus shows association of the O.T. word with the native L. jubilum wild cry, shout, and jubilāre to shout to, shout, halloo, huzza (see JUBIL v.); and in Christian L. there was established an association of sense between these words and the Hebrew 'jubilee', which has extended to the modern langs. of Western Christendom. In Eng. the word was often, as in the Bible versions, spelt jubile; this was usually, like the F. jubilé, of 3 syllables; but it was sometimes a disyllable, and referred directly to L. jubilum or med. L. jubilus, in the sense of an exultant shout. Cf. also jubil in jubil-trumpet.]

juddite ('dʒɒdaɪt). Min. [f. the name of John Wesley Judd (1840-1916), English geologist: see -ITE¹.] A mineral of the amphibole group (see quots.).

1908 L. L. FERMOR in *Rec. Geol. Judd, F.R.S., and as a respectful tribute from a former student. 1963 W. A. DEER et al. Rock-Forming Min. II. 369 Although Bilgrami (1955) considered it appropriate to classify the manganese-rich alkali amphibole juddite... with the richterite group, it has been included here in the eckermannite-arfvedsonite series. The mineral has a high content of Na... and high Fe⁺³, as well as high Mn, and the formula (Na_{2.5}Ca_{0.5}(Mg_{2.5}Mn_{1.0}Fe_{0.5})Si_{7.5}Al_{0.5}O₂₂(OH)₂) is typical of the eckermannite-arfvedsonite group: it is suggested that the mineral may be adequately characterized by the name manganarfvedsonite. 1970 *Mineral. judge ('dʒɒdʒ), sb. Forms: 4-6 iuge, 4-5 iugge, (4 iug, 5 iewge, ioge), 6-7 iudge, (7-8 judg), 7-judge. [ME. a. OF. juge = Pr. jutge; cf. Sp. juez, It. judice — L. judicem (nom. judex), f. jū-s right, law + -dic-us speaking, speaker.

1. a. A public officer appointed to administer the law; one who has authority to hear and try causes in a court of justice.

As a generic or descriptive term, judge is applicable to any person occupying such an official position, but by usage, it has, in the United Kingdom, become much restricted as a particular designation. Collectively, the members of the Supreme Court of Judicature are 'His Majesty's Judges'; so we say 'the Judges of the Supreme Court', 'Common Law Judges', 'Chancery Judges', 'Equity Judges', 'Judges of Assize or of the Circuit Courts'; but individually these are mostly styled (Lord, or Mr.) JUSTICE (q.v.). In Scotland, the Judges of the Court of Session and High Court of Judiciary are individually styled LORD. Certain judges have other special designations, as 'President', 'Recorder', etc. But the name is regularly given in England to the presiding officer of a County Court, who is officially styled 'His Honour Judge A—'. The persons presiding judicially, in inferior courts are usually called 'justices' or 'magistrates'. In the United States 'Judge' is more widely applied to the presiding officer of any judicial court below the Supreme Court, in which the official name is 'Justice' (see b below); 'Judge' has also been more used as a designation in some British colonies or dependencies. Historically, the name cleaves to certain noted persons as 'Judge Gascoigne', 'Judge Jeffreys'.

juggins ('dʒɑɡɪnz). slang. [Origin uncertain.]

As a surname of plebeian origin (app. from jug; cf. Jenkins, Tomkins, Dickens, etc.), juggins is known in 1604 (Worcestersh.); it is given to a Lancashire collier in Disraeli's Sybil. But it does not appear whether or how far this is the source of the slang term; some take the latter as a fantastically perverted derivative of mug 'greenhorn', found 1861 in Mayhew London Lab. III. 203, and having also a derivative muggins (but this not certainly earlier than juggins.)

A simpleton, one easily 'taken in' or imposed upon.

1845 Disraeli Sybil III. i, 'Juggins has got his rent to pay, and is afraid of the bums' said Nixon, 'and he has got two waistcoats'. 1882 Punch 7 Jan., 3 'Arry. 'The openin' of a new era. jum, júm: see JOOM.

jumar ('dʒu:mə(r)). Mountaineering. [Swiss name.] A clip which when attached to a fixed rope automatically tightens when weight is applied and relaxes when it is removed, thus facilitating the climbing of the rope; also, a climb using jumars. Hence as v. intr., to climb with the aid of jumars; 'jumaring vbl. sb., the action of so doing.

1966 Climbers' Club J'nal. 77 Somebody spotted him dangling from his Jumars, half-way down one of the fixed ropes. 1968 P. CREW Encycl. Dict. Mountaineering 73/1 Jumars are the most effective device for prusiking, but they have the disadvantage of not working well on iced ropes. 1969 Sunday Times (Colour Suppl.) 16 Feb. 38/3, I dreamed that I was on the ropes setting off for the summit by myself and I was jumaring all night without getting anywhere. 1971 C. BONINGTON Annapurna South Face viii. 90 Once the ropes are in place, the climbers no longer move roped together, but simply clip onto the rope, using on the upward sections a device called a jumar clamp. This is a metal handle, with a knurled lever which is fitted over the rope. It works on a ratchet principle, sliding easily up the rope, but biting into it when put under tension. Ibid. xi. 125 This was the first time that this type of free jumaring had ever been necessary at this altitude in the Himalayas. 1971 D. HASTON in Ibid. xvii. 214 The sun was two hours away from the gully when we started the upward jumar. 1972 — In High Places 2 Onward, outward, creeping on jumars and rimed ropes. It is cold... Dachstein-mitted hands freeze in jumar clutch. Ibid. ix. 104 The hook fitted, a quick move, and I was up. Mick jumared and I pushed on again. 1973 C. BONINGTON Next Horizon ix. 141 Later, I learned that an essential precaution for any jumaring is to tie a knot in the rope, so that if the jumars do slip on the rope, you don't slide straight off the end.

Gram.* vii. 97 If... we compare the combination a furiously barking dog... with the dog barks furiously... there is a fundamental difference between them, which calls for separate terms for the two kinds of combination: we shall call the former kind junction, and the latter nexus. Ibid. viii. 115 In a junction a secondary element (an adjunct) is joined to a primary word as a label or distinguishing mark. 1935 *Jrnl. If, in a single sample, there is a transition from one type to the other, a rectifying photosensitive p-n junction is formed. Ibid. 436 We shall use the word junction to include all the material near the transition region in which significant contributions to the rectification process occur. 1959 R. A. SMITH Semiconductors xii. 444 p-n junctions are generally much more stable mechanically than fine metal point contacts and the modern tendency is to use them whenever possible. 1962 SIMPSON & RICHARDS Physical Princ. Junction Transistors iii. 43 If the change from n+ to n-type is sufficiently gradual, electrons diffusing from the n+ type material will recombine with holes before reaching the n-type material and the n+ n junction will be non-rectifying. 1965 BURFORD & VERNER Semiconductor Junctions & Devices vii. 91 All junctions in semiconductors are inherently rectifying. To make such a p-n junction into an operable rectifier, we merely attach leads to the p and n regions and protect the active element... by suitable encapsulation.

1. A genus of coniferous evergreen shrubs and trees, of which about thirty species are found in different parts of the northern hemisphere; specifically and originally, the common European species Juniperus communis, a hardy spreading shrub or low tree, having awl-shaped prickly leaves and bluish-black or purple berries, with a pungent taste, yielding a volatile oil (oil of juniper) used in medicine as a stimulant and diuretic, also in the manufacture of gin. The common N. American species is J. virginiana.

The wood is occasionally used in joinery; the seeds and wood were formerly burnt as purifiers of the air. The coal of juniper wood was fabled to have a wonderful power of remaining glowing.

1. In legal use.

1. A company of persons (orig. men) sworn to render a 'verdict' or true answer upon some question or questions officially submitted to them; in modern times, in a court of justice, usually upon evidence delivered to them touching the issue; but in the earliest times usually upon facts or matters within their own knowledge, for which reason they were summoned from the neighbourhood to which the question submitted to them related, or in which the person or persons lived as to whose conduct or death an 'inquest' or investigation was held.

Originally, "The question to be addressed to them may take many different forms: it may or may not be one which has arisen in the course of litigation; it may be a question of fact or a question of law, or again what we should now-a-days call a question of mixed fact and law. What are the customs of your district? What rights has the king in your district? Name all the land-owners of your district and say how much land each of them has. Name all the persons in your district whom you suspect of murder, robbery or rape. Is Roger guilty of having murdered Ralph? Whether of the two has the greatest right to Blackacre, William or Hugh? Did Henry disseise Richard of his free tenement in Dale? The jury of trial, the jury of accusation, the jury which is summoned where there is no litigation merely in order that the king may obtain information, these all spring from a common root" (Pollock & Maitland Hist. Eng. Law I. 118).

Concerning the origin of the jury system in its various applications, and esp. of trial by jury, much has been written; but the name, in its English form, is not known to us till a jury had practically become what it is now, as a grand jury at an assize or at quarter sessions, a common or special jury in a criminal or civil trial, or a coroner's jury at an inquest (see CORONER and INQUEST).

In England, juries in all criminal trials, in civil trials in the superior courts, and in writs of inquiry, consist of 12 people, who must usually be unanimous in their verdict except by agreement of the parties. A coroner's jury may consist of any number from 7 to 11; and in this, a majority verdict is sufficient. Juries in county courts consist of 8. In Scotland, the number of a jury in a criminal trial is 15, and the verdict of a majority is accepted; in a civil trial, the number is 12, as in England.

b. grand jury: a jury of inquiry, accusation, or presentment (as distinguished from a petty jury or jury of trial), consisting of from twelve to twenty-three 'good and lawful men of a county', who were returned by the sheriff to every session of the peace, and of the assizes, to receive and inquire into indictments, before these were submitted to a trial jury, and to perform such other duties as were committed to them. Hist. exc. U.S.

This body represents the grand inquest (q.v.) of earlier times. In England its action by statute and usage became greatly restricted; its principal duty before its abolition in 1933 was 'to examine into accusations against persons charged with crime, and if it see just cause, then to find bills of indictment against them, to be presented to the court'; besides which, however, it could express opinions on changes in judicial procedure, make recommendations on this and kindred subjects, make presentments of nuisances, etc. Formerly, a Grand Jury of twenty-four was summoned also upon a writ of attain, to inquire whether a petty jury had given a false or corrupt verdict (abolished by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50). In Ireland the Grand Jury had, down to 1898, very extensive powers in reference to the general administration of the country. In Scotland grand juries have never existed.

'jury-mast. [Origin unknown.

App. either a corruption of some earlier name, or a jocular appellation invented by sailors. For the suggestion that it may have been short for injury-mast, no supporting evidence has been found.]

1. Naut. A temporary mast put up in place of one that has been broken or carried away.

2. Hence jury- is used in comb. to designate other parts of a ship put together or contrived for temporary use, as jury-rig, jury-rigging (whence jury-rig v., jury-rigged ppl. a.), jury-rudder, jury-tiller; and humorously of other things as jury-buttocks; jury-leg, a wooden leg, or any contrivance to supply the place of a disabled leg (whence jury-legged a.); jury meal.

||jus cogens (dʒas 'kəʊɡenz). [L., compelling law.] A principle of international law which cannot be set aside by agreement or acquiescence. So, in modern use, as laid down by the Vienna Convention on the Law of 'Treaties (1969), 'a peremptory norm of general international law'. (See quots.)

1895 W. H. RATTIGAN Private Internat. Law vi. 163 A jus cogens regulating rights of this description is a product of modern commercial and intellectual activity, and finds no place, for instance, in the jurisprudence of the Roman Empire. 1937 Amer. Jnl. Internat. Law XXXI. 571 The answer to this question depends on the preliminary question, whether general international law contains rules which have the character of jus cogens. 1945 M. WOLFF Private Internat. Law III. 168 Savigny... clearly showed that the rules of an absolute, imperative character (the jus cogens) to be found in any legal system are of two kinds. There are first of all those rules 'that are enacted merely for the sake of persons who are the possessors of rights', such as the laws limiting the capacity to act on account of age or sex, or laws concerning the transfer of property; and secondly the rules that are not made solely for the benefit of single individuals but rest on moral grounds, or on the 'public interest'... jus cogens privatorum pactis mutari non potest. 1957 G. SCHWARZENBERGER Internat. Law (ed. 3) I. xx. 352 In this respect, the rules governing the principle of the freedom of the seas are not jus cogens which as such is unalterable, but as much jus dispositivum as any of the other rules of international law. 1960 F. A. MANN in Brit. Year Bk. Internat. Law 1959 45 Lord McNair must allow the jus cogens of the proper law to override the general principles which are merely incorporated into it. 1965 Texas Law Rev.

XLIII. 455 The problem of international jus cogens can be stated in a simple question: Are there rules of international law which, by consent, individual subjects of international law may not modify? 1969 Vienna Convention on Law of Treaties 18 in Parl. Papers 1968-9 (Cmnd. 4140) LV. 395 Treaties conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). A treaty is void if, at the time of its conclusion, it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law. For the purposes of the present Convention, a peremptory norm of general international law is a norm accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character. 1971 M. AKEHURST Mod. Introd. Internat. Law (ed. 2) iii. 60 The technical name now given to the basic principles of international law, which states are not allowed to contract out of, is 'peremptory norms of general international law', otherwise known as jus cogens.

Roman lawyers'] phraseology, jus gentium consists of those rules of law which are common to all nations. 1856 BOUVIER Law Dict. (ed. 6) I. 685 Among the Romans by jus civile was understood the civil law, in contradistinction to the public law, or jus gentium. 1880 Encycl. Brit. XLII. 191/1 The ambiguity of the phrase jus gentium enabled the early founders of international law to apply the principles of the jus naturæ to the conduct of states inter se in a way of which there is no example in the Roman law-books. 1959 JOWITT Dict. Eng. Law II. 1035/1 Jus gentium, the law of nations.

1887 F. K. WISCHNEWETZKY tr. Engels's Condition of Working-Class in England in 1844 99 Factory servitude... confers the jus primæ noctis upon the master... If the master is mean enough, his mill is also his harem. 1911 Encycl. Brit. XV. 593/1 Jus primæ noctis or droit du seigneur, a custom alleged to have existed in medieval Europe, giving the overlord a right to the virginity of his vassals' daughters on their wedding-night... The jus, it seems, is a myth, invented no earlier than the 16th or 17th century. 1923 A. HUXLEY Antic Hay xviii. 250 It was on a splendid subject — the 'Jus Primæ Noctis, or Droit du Seigneur'. 1933 'G. ORWELL' Down & Out xxxiv. 256 He had heard... of... the jus primæ noctis (he believed it had really existed). 1970 G. GREER Female Eunuch 228 No serf, writhing under the law of jus primæ noctis,... ever had it worse. 1971 Black Scholar Dec. 13/1 The integration of rape into the sparsely furnished legitimate social life of the slaves harks back to the feudal 'right of the first night', the jus primæ noctis.

4. Theol. The action whereby man is justified, or freed from the penalty of sin, and accounted or made righteous by God; the fact or condition of being so justified.

Protestant theologians regard justification as an act of grace in which God accounts man righteous, not owing to any merit of his own, but through imputation of Christ's righteousness, as apprehended and received by faith. Roman Catholic theologians hold that it consists in man's being made really righteous by infusion of grace, such justification being a work continuous and progressive from its initiation.

K

K (ker), the eleventh letter of the alphabet in English and other modern languages, was an original letter of the Roman alphabet, taken from the Greek Kappa K, originally χ , from Phœnician and general Semitic Kaph κ . Its sound in Greek and Latin was, as in English, that of the back voiceless stop consonant, or guttural tenuis. But at an early period of Latin orthography, the letter C (originally representing Greek Gamma) was employed for the k sound, and the letter K itself fell into disuse, except in a few words, notably the term Kalendæ and the prænomen Kæso, where the traditional abbreviations Kal. and K. kept up the memory of the archaic spelling. But, with the exception of such archaisms, C became the regular Latin symbol of the k sound, and, as such, was substituted for Greek Kappa when Greek words were latinized, as in Κίμων, Kūpos, κόμμα, Cīmōn, Cýrus, comma. In late Latin, when the sound of C before a front vowel had become palatalized, or passed over to (tʃ), as in Italian cento, città, the same fate befell the C of latinized Greek words, such as Cyrus; but later Greek words in living (esp. Christian) use such as kýrie eleison (κύριε ἐλέησον), which retained the Greek pronunciation, continued to be written with K. To Latin scribes of the sixth, seventh, and eighth centuries, K was thus known as a supplementary letter to C, of use in Greek or other foreign words which had the 'hard' or k sound of C before e, i, or y. Hence it was naturally put to use in the writing of Old High German, Old Saxon, Old Frankish, Early Italian, and some dialects of Old French, in which a k sound came before e, i, or y. In writing these languages, C was usually employed, as in Latin, before a, o, u, or finally; but in practice there was considerable overlapping, with the final result that, in German, K ousted C, and is now the proper letter for this sound in that language, as well as in Dutch and all the Scandinavian tongues; while, in French, K was ousted partly by C, partly by Qu, according to derivation. (Thus Old Northern French kanon, karole, katre, ke, ki, kel, became later canon, carole, quatre, que, qui, quel.) So 13th c. It. ke, ki, perké, became later che, chi, perchè.

In the Romano-British alphabet, K was, as in Latin, of rare use, and was not adopted as a regular letter in Welsh or Irish; though, as being quite familiar to Latin scribes, it was occasionally written as a casual variant of C. In Old English, the original Teutonic k-sound was already in the earliest times fronted or palatalized before original front vowels (not the umlauts of back vowels), and for this variety of sound (c) a distinct symbol was provided in the Runic alphabet. Yet, in the OE. use of the Roman alphabet, both the guttural and the palatal sound were represented by C, although in the practice of individual scribes K was by no means infrequent for the guttural, especially in positions where C would have been liable to be taken as palatal, or would at least have been ambiguous, as in such words as Kent, kēne, kennan, akenned, kynn, kyning, kyðed, folkes, céak, picke. But, even in these cases, C was much more usual down to the 11th century; and K can be regarded only as a supplemental symbol occasionally used instead of C for the guttural sound. After the Conquest, however, the Norman usage gradually prevailed, in accordance with which C was retained for the original guttural only before a, o, u, l, r, and K was substituted for the same sound before e, i, y, and (later) n; while the palatalized OE. c, now advanced to (tʃ), was written Ch. Hence, in native words, initial K now appears only before e, i, y (y being moreover usually merged in i), and before n (—OE. cn-), where it is no longer pronounced in Standard English, though retained in some dialects. Medially and finally, k is used after a consonant (ask, dark, twinkle), or long vowel (make, hawk, like, speak, week); after a short vowel, ck is used instead of cc or kk, but the unstressed suffix, formerly -ick (musick), is now ic, though, when a suffix in e or i follows, k reappears (traffic, trafficker, trafficking).

The native K words, being thus confined to ke-, ki-, kn- (with one or two from the dialects in ka-, ky-), are a small company. But their number is greatly reinforced by the foreign words of recent adoption, many of them very imperfectly naturalized, with which this letter is crowded. These include a few modern European words, Germanic or Slavonic; but they consist mainly of names of animals, plants, trade products, and native offices, from Oriental, African, American, Australian, and Oceanic languages. The number of these words is augmented by reason of the fact that some of those languages have two, or even three, distinct gutturals, for which, in ordinary English spelling, K has to stand; the combination kh is similarly put for several fricative and aspirated sounds in Arabic, Turkish, Persian, Hindi, and other tongues. (See the individual words, in the etymology of which the actual origin of the letter is stated.) In giving these words English hospitality, it was formerly usual to follow English analogies and write C before a, o, u, l, r, h; but the more recent tendency has been to favour the use of K in these positions also; giving the non-English initial combinations ka-, kh-, kl-, ko-, kr-, ku-, by which the uncouth or barbarous character of the words is more strongly suggested. Thus cadi, Calmuck, Can (Chan, Cham), cloof, Coran, creese, now more frequently appear as kadi, Kalmuk, Khan, kloof, Koran, kris.

In words from Greek also, many prefer to retain K, instead of latinizing it to C; and this spelling is generally accepted in some words of recent formation, as kaleidoscope, kamptulicon, katabolism, kinetic, kudos, while in others, as kainozoic, kakodyle, krasis, C and K still struggle for predominance. In a very few words (not of English formation), K represents Greek χ , esp. in the words in kilo-, as kilogram(me), kilometre, etc.

1. The letter. The plural appears as Ks, K's, ks, k's. (Although now generally pronounced (ker), the pronunciation (ki:r) was formerly also current.)

2. Used, like the other letters of the alphabet, to express serial order, as in numbering the sheets or quires of a book, lettering parts of a figure, enumerating items of a list, etc.; the successive groups or sections of a classification; the companies of a military force; the batteries of the Royal Artillery; the different MSS. of a work, etc.

In serial order K is the 11th or 10th member, according as J is or is not reckoned as a member of the series (see J).

3. a. In Chem. K is the symbol for Potassium (mod.L. kalium). It was formerly used to designate a compound of gold (Syd. Soc. Lex.). In Meteorol. K = cumulus. In Assaying, etc. K = carat. In Astron. k designates Gauss's Constant, the square of which is a measure of the mass of the sun. For k in Quaternions, see I (the letter) 6; in Cryst. see H 7.

1853 SIR W. R. HAMILTON Lect. Quaternions 59 Let i, j, k, denote three straight lines equally long, but differently directed [etc.]. 1886 Encycl. Brit. XX. 161/2 The fundamental i, j, k of quaternions.

b. In Physics k (or K) is the symbol of thermal conductivity. [Introduced by J. B. J. Fourier, 1822.]

[1822 J. B. J. FOURIER Théorie anal. de la Chaleur i. 54 Nous avons choisi ce même coefficient K, qui entre dans la seconde équation, pour la mesure de la conductibilité spécifique de chaque substance.] 1850 in Trans. R. Soc. Edin. (1864) XXIII. 137 The specific heat of the metal being known, we can convert this amount of heat or flux across x into absolute measure; for the Flux is = - K dv/dx and dv/dx is known... Thus every experiment becomes an independent means of finding K. 1880 *Encycl. c. Physics. The designation of one of the strongest Fraunhofer lines, situated in the extreme violet at a wavelength of 3934 Å and due to absorption by calcium ions.

1879 Proc. R. Soc. XXVIII. 367 The calcium line with wave-length 4226... appears more or less expanded with a dark line in the middle...; the remaining bright lines of calcium are also frequently seen in the like condition, but sometimes the dark line appears in the middle of K (the more refrangible of Fraunhofer's lines H), when there is none in the middle of H. 1897 Ibid. LXI. 437 The H and K lines have become thin and defined. 1967 R. G. GIOVANELLI in J. N. Xanthakis Solar Physics xii. 353 The Balmer lines and the H and K lines of ionized calcium are... strong Fraunhofer absorption lines.

d. In Physics and Chem. k is the symbol of Boltzmann's constant.

1901 Sci. Abstr. IV. 230 For a comparison of his own reasoning with that of Boltzmann on gas molecules, the author deduces from k an estimate (6.175 × 10²³) for the number of molecules in the gramme molecule of any element. 1915, etc. [see BOLTZMANN]. 1962 W. B. THOMPSON Introd. Plasma Physics ii. 17 A temperature of 11,600°K is needed to give an energy kT of 1 eV so that the mean kinetic energy of a molecule, $\frac{3}{2}kT$, reaches 1 eV only when T = 7,730°K.

e. In Physics K is used to designate the series of X-ray emission lines of shorter wavelength obtained by exciting the atoms of any particular element (cf. L 7a); these arise from electron transitions to the innermost, lowest-energy atomic orbit, of principal quantum number 1, which is thus termed the K-shell, and electrons in this shell K-electrons. K(-electron) capture, the capture by an atomic nucleus of one of the K-electrons.

1911 C. G. BARKLA in Phil. Mag. XXII. 406 It is seen that the radiations fall into two distinct series, here denoted by the letters K and L. [Note] Previously denoted by letters B and A... The letters K and L are, however, preferable, as it is highly probable that series of radiations both more absorbable and more penetrating exist. 1923 H. L. BROSE tr. Sommerfeld's Atomic Struct. & Spectral Lines iii. 144 If the excitation occurs through the agency of cathode rays, it is easy to imagine that the tearing-off of the 'K-electron' is effected by the impact of a cathode-ray particle that has penetrated into the atom. 1923 E. N. DA C. ANDRADE Struct. Atom vi. 100 Moseley identified in the K series the two lines which he called α and β ... In the L series he identified five lines. 1938 L. B. LOEB Atomic Struct. iii. 83 A tube with 1,470 volt electrons may excite K x-rays of Al, while it takes 60,600 volt electrons to excite the K x-rays of tungsten. 1946 H. SEMAT Introd. Atomic Physics (ed. 2) viii. 322 Probably the most clearcut example of K-electron capture is the radioactive disintegration of vanadium, ²³V⁴⁹, into titanium, ²²Ti⁴⁹, with the capture of a K electron by the vanadium nucleus to form a titanium atom in the K state. 1951 J. DOUGALL tr. Born's Atomic Physics (ed. 5) viii. 220 K-capture should therefore compete with β -decay. 1970 HURST & TURNER Elem. Radiation Physics ii. 24 A few nuclei... capture an atomic electron from outside the nucleus, most often from the K-shell, and emit a neutrino.

f. Physics and Chem. In the old quantum theory k is the azimuthal or subordinate quantum number (introduced by N. Bohr 1920, in Zeitschr. f. Physik II. 445), which determines the shape of electronic orbits of the same n; (now superseded by the quantum number l). In molecular spectroscopy K is a quantum number which in diatomic and linear molecules represents the total angular momentum apart from electronic spin (now usu. replaced by N), and in polyatomic molecules represents the component of the total momentum about an axis of symmetry.

1922 A. D. UDDEN tr. Bohr's Theory of Spectra II. iii. 44 The perturbations are periodic, so that we may assume that to each energy value of a stationary state of the unperturbed system there belongs a series of discrete energy values of a whole number k. Ibid. iii. 85 Where it is necessary to differentiate between orbits corresponding to various values of the quantum number k, a central orbit, characterized by given values of the quantum numbers n and k, will be referred to as an n_k orbit. 1930 R. S. MULLIKEN in Physical

Rev. XXXVI. 613 In [Hund's] case b, $Ah/2\pi$ and the nuclear angular momentum combine to give a quantised resultant. . . For the corresponding quantum number... the designation K is now recommended. The possible values of K are $A, A+1, A+2, \dots$. There is usually a small magnetic field in the molecule parallel to K , so that K and S form a resultant J. 1934 H. L. BROSE tr. Sommerfeld's Atomic Struct. & Spectrol Lines (ed. 3) ii. 115 In wave mechanics the azimuthal quantum number, our n_ϕ or Bohr's k ..., becomes replaced by the quantity $l = n_\phi - 1, l = 0, 1, 2, \dots$ 1961 POWELL & CRASEMANN Quantum Mech. i. 24 A perturbation of the force, such as might be produced by the presence of other electrons, has the effect of removing the degeneracy, so that states with the same value of n but different values of k have different energies. 1962 P. J. & B. DURRANT Introd. Adv. Inorg. Chem. vii. 226 Paschen-Back effect [for diatomic molecules] (strong magnetic field)... K and S are not coupled together but are coupled directly to the field. 1966 C. N. BANWELL Fund. Molecular Spectroscopy iii. 94 Parallel Vibrations [of Symmetric Top Molecules]. Here the selection rule is: $\Delta v = \pm 1, \Delta J = 0, \pm 1, \Delta K = 0$.

g. Psychol. The letter chosen to represent the spatial factor, or aptitude for remembering form and structure, in some ability-tests.

1935 Brit. J. Psychol. Monogr. Suppl. xx. vii. 65 In order to distinguish these eight tests from the rest of the table they may for convenience be called the K tests. Ibid. 75 Therefore there is in them [sc. specific correlations], over and above 'g', one group factor; this we name the K factor. 1944 L. L. THURSTONE Factorial Study Perception iii. 117 It is quite likely that the factor K is determined by experimental dependence. 1950 SPEARMAN & JONES Human Ability xii. 132 For the first time, the spatial test does, in some degree, measure K. 1969 P. E. VERNON Intelligence & Cultural Environment ix. 59 Embedded Figures and the Kohs Block test are good measures of the k factor of British psychologists... and this is much the same as Thurstone's original S (spatial) factor.

If we say that a certain computer has a memory capacity of 4 K words, then, this means either 4,000 or 4,096 words, depending on whether the computer in question has a decimal or binary address system. However, the usage is a little loose: the number $2^{16} = 65,536$ is written either as 64 K or 65 K. 1970 Daily Tel. 3 Dec. 21/3 (Adv.), All progs. Lorenzen 1884, in Meddelelser om Grønland VII. 27), f. Kaersut, name of the locality (on the shore of Umanak Fiord on the west coast of Greenland) where it was first found; see -ITE ¹.] A dark brown or black kind of hornblende characterized by a high titanium content and occurring as a constituent of many volcanic rocks.

1886 Jrnl. Chem. Soc. L. 519 Analyses of minerals from Greenland... Kaersutite, colour black, streak brown. 1939 Trans. & Proc. R. Soc. N.Z. LXIX. 305 It appears that in the Dunedin district brown monoclinic amphiboles occur very generally in the only slightly alkaline basalts and trachybasalts of the first and second volcanic phases, and prove to be basaltic hornblendes which in the two samples analysed have just sufficient content of TiO₂ to permit their being classed as kaersutite. 1966 W. A. DEER et al. Introd. Rock-Forming Min. II. 177 Kaersutite is a typical constituent of alkaline volcanic rocks, and occurs as phenocrysts in trachybasalts, trachyandesites, trachytes... and alkali rhyolites; in the more silica-rich rocks it occurs also as a groundmass constituent. 1968 Mineral. Mag. XXXVI. 1001 Aoki (1963) considered an amphibole from a trachyte with 4.36% TiO₂ (0.49 Ti) as not a typical kaersutite... It is clear that any lower limit of titanium for kaersutite must be an arbitrary one.

Hence kaersutitic a., of the nature of or resembling kaersutite.

||kairos ('kairɒs). [Gr. καίρος right or proper time.] Fullness of time; the propitious moment for the performance of an action or the coming into being of a new state.

1936 E. L. TALMEY tr. Tillich's Interpretation of Hist. II. ii. 129 We call this fulfilled moment, the moment of time approaching us as fate and decision, Kairos. In doing this we take up a word that was, to be sure, created by the Greek linguistic sense, but attained the deeper meaning of fullness of time, of decisive time, only in the thinking of early Christianity and its historical consciousness. 1939 V. A. DEMANT Religious Prospect viii. 220 A teaching that all man can know is how to respond to the Unconditioned at each moment of decision, which he calls the Kairos. 1948 J. L. ADAMS tr. Tillich's Protestant Era (1951) I. iii. 47 Every kairos is... implicitly... an actualization of the unique kairos, the appearance of the Christ. Ibid. 48 We are convinced that today a kairos, an epochal moment of history, is visible. 1963 AUDEN Dyer's Hand III. 140 The Greek notion of Kairos, the propitious moment for doing something, contained the seed of the notion of punctuality.

[Ultimately ad. In OE. cāsere and ON. keisari the terminal syllable was assimilated to the -ere, -ari of agent-nouns. OE. cāsere normally gave early ME. cāser KASER; the usual ME. forms kaiser, keiser, and later variants, were adopted afresh from other Teutonic languages. Ormin used both kasere, kaserr from OE. and keɟssere from ON.

In 14-15th c. the word was mainly northern, and the ai-form prevailed. About the middle of the 16th c. ei (ey) again became usual, prob. under Dutch or German influence. The mod. form kaiser is directly adopted from G., in which it represents a Bavarian (and Austrian) spelling which supplanted the normal keiser in the 17th c. (see Grimm and Kluge, s.v.).]

sense, was merely local, or had become obsolete. The common assertion that it really means 'I don't understand' (the supposed reply of the native to his questioner) seems to be of recent origin and lacks confirmation. (See Morris Austral English s.v.)

Kantian ('kæntjən), a. and sb. Also Kantean. [f. the name of the celebrated German philosopher Immanuel Kant (1724-1804) + -IAN.]

A. adj. Of, pertaining to, or connected with Kant or his philosophy.

Kant's characteristic doctrine was that a critical analysis of our experience discloses: (a) in logic, that thought actively synthesizes the matter of sense under certain laws ('forms' and 'categories') which are a priori determinable as universally valid for and within experience; (b) in ethics, that an absolutely valid moral 'law' is similarly determinable, whence the reality of God, Freedom, and Immortality is deducible as 'practically necessary', even though to speculative thought the nature and very existence of the non-phenomenal or noumenal must remain 'problematic'.

Hence Kantian tends to connote 'apriorism' or 'transcendentalism', viz. the view that certain necessary truths are determinable as implications of our logical and moral experience. (R. R. Marett.)
