1. a tree of the genus Citrus, the Citrus aurantium. The orange is supposed to be native to India and China, but is now cultivated abundantly in the United States, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and other parts of the south of Europe, as also in the Azores. It is a middle-sized evergreen tree, with a greenish-brown bark and white, fragrant blossoms. The leaves are ovate, acute, pointed, and at the base of the petiole are winged. The fruit is globose and reddish-yellow and contains a pulp which consists of a collection of oblong vesicles filled with a sugary and refreshing juice; it is divided into eight or ten compartments, each containing several seeds. The principal varieties are the common sweet or China, the bitter or Seville, the Maltese or red-pulped, the Tangerine, the Mandarin or clove, and the St. Michael's. The leaves, flowers, and rind yield fragrant oils much used in perfumery. The wood is fine-grained, compact, susceptible of a high polish, and is employed in the arts. Several varieties of the orange are extensively grown in the United States, especially in the states of California and Florida.

ȯr'thō-, [from Gr. orthos, straight.]
1. a combining form meaning straight, regular, upright, as in *ortho*dontia, *ortho*gnathous.
2. a combining form meaning right angle, as in *ortho*rhombic.
3. a combining form meaning proper, correct, standard, as in *ortho*graphy.
4. in chemistry, a combining form meaning (a) that acid (of a group containing the same nonmetallic element) which has the largest number of OH groups per atom of the nonmetal, as in *ortho*phosphoric; (b) characterized by substitutions in the 1, 2 position in the benzene ring.
5. in medicine, a combining form meaning correction of deformities, as in *ortho*pedics.
Also, before a vowel, orth-.

ȯr'thō·ax·is, n. [ortho- and axis.] same as orthodiagonal.

ȯr''thō·çär·bon'iç, a. [ortho- and carbonic.] pertaining to, resembling, or containing a species of carbonic acid.
orthocarbonic ether; a liquid, $C(OC_2H_5)_4$, formed by the action of sodium ethylate on chloropicrin.

ȯr·thō·cen'tēr, n. [ortho- and center.] the point of intersection of the three perpendiculars let fall from the angles of a triangle upon the subtending sides or the sides produced.

ȯr''thō·cē·phal'iç (or -sef'ă-), a. [ortho- and -cephalic.]
1. having a skull whose height is 70 to 75 per cent of its length.
2. having a skull midway between brachycephalic and dolichocephalic; mesocephalic.

ȯr·thō·ceph'ȧ·lous, a. orthocephalic.

ȯr·thō·ceph'ȧ·ly, n. the condition of being orthocephalic.

Ȯr·thoc'ē·ras, n. [ortho-, and Gr. keras, horn.] a genus of extinct tetrabranchiate cephalopods, typical of the family Orthoceratidæ. They have a straight shell, central siphuncle, and an aperture sometimes contracted.

ȯr·thō·cer'ȧ·tid, n. an orthoceratite.

ȯr·thō·cer'ȧ·tīte, n. a fossil cephalopod of the family Orthoceratidæ.

ȯr·thō·cer·ȧ·tit'iç, a. pertaining to an orthoceratite; resembling an orthoceratite.

ȯr·thō·cer'ȧ·toid, a. orthoceratitic.

ȯr·thō·cer'ȧ·toid, n. an orthoceratite.

ȯr''thō·chrō·mat'iç, a. [ortho- and chromatic.] of, producing, or having tone values corresponding to natural colors, as a photographic film.

ȯr·thō·çhrō'mȧ·tīze, v.t.; orthochromatized, pt., pp.; orthochromatizing, ppr. in photography, to render orthochromatic.

ȯr'thō·çlāse, n. [ortho-, and Gr. klasis, fracture.] a mineral of the feldspar family, having a vitreous luster and perfect cleavage: it occurs in igneous rocks.

ȯr·thō·clas′tiç, a. having cleavage at right angles, as orthoclase.

orthoclastic feldspar; one of two divisions of feldspar, containing that which has rectangular cleavage.

ȯr·thō·coe′liç, a. [ortho-, and Gr. koilos, hollow.] having the intestines arranged in parallel folds, as certain birds.

ȯr·thō·cȳ′mēne, n. one of the three isomeric forms of cymene.

ȯr″thō·dī·ag′ō·năl, n. [ortho- and diagonal.] in crystallography, the inclined lateral axis in a monoclinic crystal, at right angles to the vertical axis.

ȯr″thō·dī·ag′ō·năl, a. pertaining to the orthodiagonal.

ȯr·thō·dī′ȧ·grȧph, n. [ortho-, Gr. dia, through, and graphein, to write.] an apparatus by means of which the true image of any object may be obtained in any desired position of the drawing plane. It is especially used for determining the exact shape and size of internal organs.

ȯr″thō·dī″ȼhlō·rō·ben′zēne, n. in chemistry, an organic compound, $C_6H_4Cl_2$, in which the two chlorine atoms are on adjacent carbon atoms in the benzene ring.

ȯr′thō·dōme, n. [ortho-, and Gr. domos, house.] in crystallography, a dome parallel to the orthodiagonal axis.

ȯr·thō·don′ti·ȧ (-shi-a), n. [Mod.L.] the branch of dentistry concerned with correcting and preventing irregularities of the teeth so as to bring about proper occlusion.

ȯr·thō·don′tiç, a. of or for orthodontia.

ȯr·thō·don′tist, n. a dentist specializing in orthodontia.

ȯr′thō·dox, a. [from Fr. or LL.; Fr. orthodoxe; LL. orthodoxus; Gr. orthodoxos, from orthos, correct, and doxa, opinion, from dokein, to think.]

ȯr·thō·drom′iç, a. pertaining to orthodromy.

ȯr·thō·drom′içs, n. the art of sailing in a direct course, or on the arc of a great circle, which is the shortest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe.

ȯr′thō·drom·y, n. [ortho-, and Gr. dromos, course.] the art or act of sailing on a great circle.]

ȯr·thō·ĕp′ic (ȯr-thō-ep′ik), a. of orthoëpy.

ȯr·thō·ĕp′ic·ăl (-i-kăl), a. orthoëpic.

ȯr·thō·ĕp′ic·ăl·ly (-i-kăl-y), adv. in an orthoëpic manner.

ȯr·thō′ĕ·pist (ȯr-thō′e-pist), n. a student of or expert in orthoëpy.

ȯr·thō′ĕ·py (-py), n. [Gr. orthoepeia, from orthos, right, and epos, a word.]

1. the branch of grammar dealing with pronunciation; phonology.

2. the customary pronunciation of educated people; standard pronunciation.

ȯr·thog′ȧ·mous, a. of or reproducing by orthogamy.

ȯr·thog′ȧ·my, n. [ortho- and -gamy.] in biology, self-fertilization, as in some plants or animals.

ȯr·thō·gen′e·sis, n. [Mod.L.]

1. in biology, progressive evolution in a certain direction, seen in successive generations and leading toward a definitely new form; determinate evolution.

2. in sociology, the theory that every culture or society follows the same fixed course of evolution, uninfluenced by environment.

ȯr·thō·gē·net′iç, a. of or by orthogenesis.

ȯr·thog·nath′iç, a. same as orthognathous.

ȯr·thog′nȧ·thiśm, n. the condition of being orthognathous.

ȯr·thog′nȧ·thous, a. [ortho- and -gnathous.]

1. having the jaws straight or in line, with the lower jaw neither projecting nor receding.

2. designating a skull with the forehead and lower jaw in line.

ȯr·thog′nȧ·thy, n. same as orthognathism.

ȯr′thō·gon, n. [Gr. orthos, right, and gōnia, angle.] a rectangular figure, or one which has all its angles right angles.

orthogonal projection; same as orthographic projection.

ȯr·thog′ō·năl·ly, adv. at right angles; perpendicularly.

ȯr·thō·graph′iç, ȯr·thō·graph′iç·ăl, a. 1. of orthography.

2. characterized by correct spelling.

3. in geometry, of right angles and perpendicular lines.

ȯr·thō·graph′iç prō·jeç′tion, in geometry and architecture, a projection in which the projecting lines are perpendicular to the plane of projection.

ȯr·thō·graph′iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. according to the rules of proper spelling.

2. in the manner of an orthographic projection.

ȯr·thog′rȧ·phist, n. see orthographer.

ȯr·thog′rȧ·phīze, v.t.; orthographized, pt., pp.; orthographizing, ppr. 1. to spell correctly.

2. to correct the spelling of.

ȯr·thog′rȧ·phy, n.; pl. ȯr·thog′rȧ·phies, [Gr. orthographia; orthos, right, and graphē, writing.]

1. correct spelling.

2. any style or way of spelling.

3. spelling as a subject or science.

4. orthographic projection.

ȯr·thol′ō·ġy, n. [ortho- and -logy.] the study of the correct use of words.

ȯr·thō·met′riç, a. same as orthorhombic.

ȯr·thom′ē·try, n. [ortho-, and Gr. metron, measure.] the art or practice of constructing verse correctly; the laws of correct versification.

ȯr·thō·mȯr′phi·ȧ, n. same as orthopedy.

ȯr·thō·mȯr′phiç, a. [ortho-, and Gr. morphē, shape.] in descriptive geometry, having or preserving the right or original forms of the small parts of a figure, however the forms of the large parts may change.

ȯr·thop′ȧ·thy, n. [ortho-, and Gr. pathos, from paschein, to suffer.] the treatment of disease without the use of drugs.

ȯr·thō·pē′diç, ȯr·thō·pae′diç, a. [from ortho-, and Gr. paideia, training of children, from pais, paidos, child; and -ic.] of or pertaining to orthopedics; used in orthopedics, as an orthopedic brace.

ȯr·thō·pē·diç′ăl, a. same as orthopedic.

ȯr·thō·pē′diçs, ȯr·thō·pae′diçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [from orthopedic.] the branch of surgery dealing with the treatment of deformities, diseases, and injuries of the bones and joints.

ȯr·thō·pē′dist, ȯr·thō·pae′dist, n. an expert or specialist in orthopedics.

ȯr′thō·pē·dy, n. same as orthopedics.

ȯr″thō·phon′iç, a. [ortho-, and Gr. phōnē, sound, voice.] of or pertaining to correct speaking; characterized by the use of a cultured voice.

ȯr·thoph′ō·ny, n. [ortho-, and Gr. phōnē, voice.] the art of articulating correctly; voice culture.

ȯr·thō·phō′ri·ȧ, n. [ortho-, and Gr. pherein, to carry.] regular or correct sending of the optic axes or lines of sight.

ȯr″thō·phos·phor′iç ac′id, [ortho- and phosphoric.] a clear, colorless, sirupy liquid or a colorless crystalline acid, H_3PO_4, produced from phosphorus or phosphate rock and used in the manufacture of fertilizers, textiles, etc.

ȯr′thō·phȳre, n. [ortho- and phyre, contr. from porphyry, porphyre, Gr. porphyra, purple.] syenitic porphyry.

ȯr·thō·pin′ȧ·ȼoid, n. [ortho- and pinacoid.] in crystallography, a plane of the monoclinic system parallel to the vertical and orthodiagonal axes.

ȯr·thop′nē·iç, a. pertaining to or marked by orthopnea.

ȯr·thop·nē′ȧ, ȯr·thop′ny, n. [Gr. orthopnoia; orthos, right, erect, and pnos, breath; pnein, to breathe.] a disease in which respiration can be performed only when in an erect posture.

Ȯr·thop′ō·dȧ, n.pl. [ortho-, and Gr. pous, podos, foot.] an extinct order of dinosaurians, with the feet, pelvis, and other parts resembling those of a bird, and having herbivorous habits.

ȯr′thō·prax·y, ȯr·thō·prax′is, n. [ortho-, and Gr. praxis, from prassein, to do.] the correction of bodily deformities by means of mechanical devices.

ȯr′thō·priśm, n. in crystallography, a prism in the monoclinic system, lying between the orthopinacoid and the unit prism.

ȯr″thō·psȳ·ȼhī′ȧ·try (-sī-kī′), n. [ortho- and psychiatry.] the study and treatment of disorders of behavior and personality, with emphasis on prevention.

ȯr·thop′tēr, n. [Fr. orthoptère, from Gr. orthos, straight, and pteron, a wing.] a type of aircraft designed to be propelled by wing flapping, never proved practical: also ornithopter.

Ȯr·thop′te·rȧ, n.pl. [Mod.L., from ortho-, and Gr. pteron, wing.] an order of insects having biting mouth parts and narrow, hard forewings that cover longitudinally folded, membranous hind wings: so named from the straight folding of their wings. The grasshoppers, cockroaches, and crickets are examples.

ȯr·thop′tēr·ăn, a. same as orthopterous.

ȯr·thop′tēr·ăn, n. a member of the insect order Orthoptera.

ȯr·thop′tēr·on, n.; pl. ȯr·thop′tēr·ȧ, one of the order Orthoptera.

ȯr·thop′tēr·ous, a. pertaining to the order Orthoptera.

ȯr·thop′tiç, a. [orth- and optic.]

1. correcting any deviations of the visual axis of the eye.

2. in mathematics, pertaining to tangents to a given curve which are perpendicular to each other.

ȯr·thop′tiç ex′ēr·cīṣ·eṣ, the exercising of weakened eye muscles by the use of prisms to strengthen them and overcome any deviation.

ȯr·thō·pyr′ȧ·mid, n. in crystallography, a monoclinic pyramid the intercept of which on the orthodiagonal is greater than that of the unit pyramid.

ȯr·thō·rhom′biç, a. [ortho- and rhombic.] in crystallography, indicating crystallization distinguished by three unequal right-angled axes.

ȯr′thō·sȼōpe, n. [ortho- and -scope.] an instrument containing a layer of water which is held in contact with the eye, allowing an examination of the interior of the eye without the distortion due to corneal refraction.

ȯr·thō·sȼōp′iç, a. [from ortho-, and Gr. skopein, to view; and -ic.] giving a true flat image without distortion.

ȯr·thō·sil′i·ċāte, n. [ortho- and silicate.] in mineralogy, a salt of orthosilicic acid: also known as unisilicate.

ȯr″thō·si·lic′iç, a. [ortho- and silicic.] in chemistry, pertaining to or designating an acid of the highest hydroxyl value.

ȯr·thō′sis, n. [Gr. orthōsis.] the correction of physical or mental distortion.

ȯr·thō·spēr′mous, a. [ortho-, and Gr. sperma, seed.] in botany, having straight seeds.

ȯr·thō·stat′iç, a. [ortho- and static.] caused by or pertaining to erect posture; standing upright.

ȯr·thos′ti·ȼhous, a. in botany, characterized by or arranged in orthostichies.

ȯr·thos′ti·ċhy, n.; pl. ȯr·thos′ti·ċhieṣ, [ortho-, and Gr. stichos, row.] in botany, a vertical arrangement of leaves or flowers on a stem.

ȯr′thō·stȳle, n. [ortho-, and Gr. stylos, column.] in architecture, the arrangement of columns in a straight row.

ȯr′thō·stȳle, a. in architecture, of or pertaining to the arrangement of columns in a straight row.

ȯr·thō·tom′iç, a. in geometry, intersecting at right angles.

ọr·thot′ō·mous, a. [Gr. orthos, straight, and temnein, to cut.] same as orthoclastic.

ọr′thō·tōne, a. [ortho-, and Gr. tonos, tone.] retaining or acquiring an independent accent: said of certain particles, etc., as when used interrogatively.

ọr′thō·tōne, n. an orthotone word.

ọr·thot′ō·nus, n. [ortho-, and Gr. tonos, tension.] in pathology, the rigid straightening of the body, as in lockjaw.

ọr·thot′rō·păl, a. same as orthotropous.

ọr·thō·trop′iç, a. in botany, designating, of, or showing vertical growth.

ọr·thot′rō·pism, n. [ortho- and -tropism.] in botany, growth, or a tendency to grow, in a vertical direction or position.

ọr·thot′rō·pous, a. [ortho- and -tropous.] in botany, growing straight: said of a nucellus.

ORTHOTROPOUS OVULE

ọr·thot′y·pous, a. [ortho-, and Gr. typos, form.] in mineralogy, having a perpendicular cleavage.

ọr·thō·xȳ′lēne (-zī′), n. [ortho- and xylene.] in chemistry, xylene showing double substitution in contiguous carbon atoms.

ọr′thros, n. in the Orthodox Eastern Church, a canonical hour, similar to the Roman Catholic lauds, but having a more elaborate service.

ọr′tive, a. [L. ortivus, from ortus, pp. of oriri, to rise.] rising; eastern; orient; as, the ortive amplitude of a planet. [Rare.]

ọr′tō·lăn, n. [Fr.; Pr.; It. ortolano, a gardener, an ortolan; L. hortulanus, from hortus, a garden.]
1. an Old World bunting, prized as a table delicacy.

The true, or African, ostrich, Struthio camelus, inhabits the sandy plains of Africa and Arabia, and is the largest of all existing birds, attaining a height of from 6 to 8 feet. It has a long neck, very long legs with two toes on each foot, and small, useless wings; the white tail and wing feathers of the male are used in millinery and as trimming. Its food consists of grass, grain, etc., and to pulverize this food the ostrich swallows large stones or other hard materials. Three South American birds of the same family, Struthionidæ, but of the genus Rhea, are very closely allied to the true ostrich, differing chiefly in having three-toed feet, each toe armed with a claw. The best known of the three is Rhea americana, the nandu of Brazil, which inhabits the pampas south of the equator and is considerably smaller than the true ostrich. Rhea darwini, a native of Patagonia, is still smaller. The third species is the Rhea macrorhyncha, so called from its long bill.

ox·ă·meth'āne, n. ethylic oxamate, $C_4H_7NO_3$.
ox·ă·meth'yl·āne, n. methylic oxamate, a crystalline compound obtained by saturating methylic oxalate with dry ammonia.
ox·am'iç, a. pertaining to or designating a crystalline acid obtained from oxalic acid and ammonia.
ox·am'ide, n. a white compound obtained by the dry distillation of neutral ammonic oxalate.
ox·am'i·din, n. a crystalline compound known chiefly by its salts.
ox'an, n. a colorless gas of which there are two kinds: it is formed by the contact of nitrogen oxides and hot charcoal.
ox"ă·nil·am'ide, n. a white, flaky substance found among the products of the decomposition of a cyanogen by hydrochloric acid.
ox·an'i·lāte, n. a salt or ester of oxanilic acid.
ox·an·il'iç, a. contained in or derived from oxalic acid and aniline; as, oxanilic acid.
ox·an'i·lide, ox·an'i·lid, n. a crystalline substance, $(CONHC_6H_5)_2$, obtained by heating analine oxalate; diphenyl-oxamide.
ox an'tē·lōpe, a bubaline antelope, as the oryx.
ox'ă·zin, n. same as oxazine.
ox'a·zïne, n. [oxygen, and azine.] any of thirteen compounds having a composition corresponding to the formula C_4H_5NO and composed of molecules which contain four atoms of carbon and one atom each of oxygen and nitrogen united in a ring structure.
ox bälm (-bäm), same as horse balm.
ox'bāne, n. a poisonous South African bulb of the genus Buphane. ox'bīrd, n. 1. a cowbird: also called oxbiter.
2. an African weaver bird, Textor alector.
3. the sanderling, Calidris arenaria. [Brit. Dial.]
4. the dunlin, or red-backed sandpiper.
ox'bīt"ĕr, n. see oxbird, sense 1. ox'blood (-blud), n. a deep red color.
ox bot, a botfly that infests cattle, boring under the skin; also, its larva.
ox'bōw, n. 1. the U-shaped part of an ox yoke which passes under and around the neck of the animal.

OXBOWS
YOKE WITH OXBOWS

2. a crescent-shaped bend in a river.
3. the land within such a bend.
Ox'bridġe, n. [from *Ox*ford, and Cam*bridge*.] Oxford and Cambridge universities thought of as forming a single entity in terms of their similar organization, traditions, and prestige.
Ox'bridġe, a. of or relating to Oxbridge.
ox'en, n. plural of ox.
ox'eȳe (-ī), n. 1. the oxeye daisy, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.
2. any species of Buphthalmum, a plant cultivated in England.
3. one of the Compositæ, Anthemis arvensis.
4. in zoology, a titmouse, especially Parus major, the great titmouse, and Parus cæruleus, the blue titmouse.
5. a cloudy speck presaging a storm, often seen on the African coast.
creeping oxeye; a West Indian plant, Wedelia carnosa. oxeye daisy; (a) a daisylike plant, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum, with flowers of white rays around a yellow disk: also called whiteweed; (b) the black-eyed Susan.
ox'-eȳed (-īd), a. having large full eyes, like those of an ox.
ox'flȳ, n. a fly hatched under the skin of cattle; an ox bot.
ox'fŏrd, sometimes Ox'fŏrd, n. 1. a type of low shoe laced over the instep: also oxford shoe.

2. a type of cotton cloth with a basketlike weave, used for men's shirts, etc.: also oxford cloth.

2. a stupid fellow; a blockhead; a dolt.

ox'hēal, ox'heel, n. a species of hellebore, Helleborus fœtidus.

ox'heärt, n. 1. a large cherry, shaped like a heart.
2. a kind of cabbage.

ox'hīde, n. 1. literally, the hide of an ox; also, the leather made from it.
2. in old English law, a hide of land.

ox'id, n. oxide.

ox"i·dà·bil'i·ty, n. ability to be changed into an oxide.

ox'i·dà·ble, a. same as oxidizable.

ox'i·dāṣe, n. [*oxid*ize and -ase.] any of a group of enzymes which act as oxidizing agents.

ox'i·dāte, v.t. and v.i.; oxidated, pt., pp.; oxidating, ppr. to oxidize.

ox·i·dā'tion, n. 1. the union of a substance with oxygen.
2. the process of increasing the positive valence or of decreasing the negative valence of an element ion.
3. the process by which electrons are removed from atoms or ions.

ox'i·dā·tive, a. of or characterized by oxidation; able to oxidize.

ox'i·dā·tŏr, n. 1. an oxidizer. [Rare.]
2. a device for causing a current of air to impinge on the flame of an Argand lamp.

ox'ide, ox'id, n. [Fr., from Gr. oxys, sour, and Fr. acide, acid.] a binary compound of oxygen with some other element or with a radical.

ox'i·dī·zà·ble, a. that can be oxidized.

ox'i·dīze, v.t.; oxidized, pt., pp.; oxidizing, ppr. 1. to unite with oxygen.
2. to increase the positive valence or decrease the negative valence of (an element or ion).
3. to remove electrons from (an atom or ion).

ox'i·dīze, v.i. to become oxidized. oxidized silver; silver on the surface of which a thin film of the silver sulfide has been formed.

ox'i·dīze·ment, n. oxidation.

ox'i·dī·zēr, n. any substance that oxidizes or causes another to oxidize; oxidizing agent.

ox·id'ū·lā·ted, a. containing oxygen. [Obs.]

ox'ime, ox'im, n. [from oxygen and imide.] any of a series of compounds formed by the action of hydroxylamine on an aldehyde or ketone, in which the oxygen atom of the CHO group of the aldehyde, or of the CO group of the ketone, is replaced by the :NOH group.

ox·in'dōle, ox·in'dōl, n. a crystalline compound, C_8H_7NO, formed with sodium amalgam in acid solution. It forms crystallizable salts with acids and bases.

ox·i·od'iç, a. pertaining to or consisting of a compound of oxygen and iodine.

ox'līke, a. resembling an ox.

ox'lip, n. a plant of the primrose family, Primula elatior, resembling the common primrose or the cowslip: it has yellow flowers.

ox'ō·nāte, n. a salt of oxonic acid.

Ox·ō'ni·ăn, a. of or pertaining to the city or the University of Oxford, England.

Ox·ō'ni·ăn, n. 1. a native or inhabitant of Oxford, England.
2. a student or alumnus of Oxford University.

ox·on'iç, a. [from glyo*x*alic and carbo*nic*.] pertaining to or designating an acid obtained as a potassium salt when a stream of air is passed through a solution of uric acid in potash.

ox'ō·zōne, n. an allotropic variety of oxygen believed to exist in ozone in solution.

ox·ō·zōn'īde, n. an organic oxidation product, obtained from unsaturated hydrocarbons.

ox'peck"ēr, n. an African bird of the genus Buphaga: it destroys the parsites which infest the skin of cattle, antelopes, etc.

ōx'rēim, n. [ox, and D. riem, thong or strap.] a strip of oxhide, flat or twisted, used in South Africa for halters, straps, etc.

ox'shōe, n. a shoe for oxen made of a flat piece of iron and nailed on the hoof.

ox'tāil, n. the tail of an ox, especially when skinned and used to make a soup.

ox'tēr, [AS. oxta.] the armpit. [Scot. and Brit. Dial.]

ox'tŏngue (-tung), n. any of a number of related plants, as Picris echioides, having tongue-shaped leaves.

ox'y, a. like an ox; bovine.

ox'y-, [from Gr. oxys, sharp, acid.] a combining form meaning sharp, pointed, acute, or acid, as in *oxy*cephalic, *oxy*moron, *oxy*gen.

ox'y-, [from oxygen.] a combining form meaning containing oxygen: also, before a vowel, ox-.

ox"y·à·çan'thous, a. [oxy-, and Gr. akantha, a spine.] having thorns or sharp spines.

ox"y·à·cē'tiç, a. same as glycolic.

ox"y·à·cet'y·lēne, a. [oxy- and acetylene.] of or using a mixture of oxygen and acetylene.

ox"y·à·cet'y·lēne blōw'pīpe (or tọrch), a blowpipe in which the oxyacetylene flame produced is much hotter than an oxyhydrogen flame, used for cutting and welding steel.

ox·y·ac'id, n. [oxy- and acid.] an acid containing oxygen.

ox"y·aes·thē'si·à, n. [oxy- and æsthesia.] same as oxyesthesia.

ox"y·am·mō'ni·à, n. same as hydroxylamine.

ox·y·as'tēr, n. [oxy- (pointed), and Gr. astēr, star.] a sponge spicule resembling a star in form, the rays of which have a point in common as an origin.

ox·y·ben'zēne, n. same as phenol.

ox·y·brō'miç, a. [oxy- and bromic.] of or containing oxygen and bromine.

ox"y·bū·tyr'iç, a. [oxy- and butyric.] of, pertaining to, or formed from hydroxyl and butyric acid.

ox·y·çal'ci·um, a. [oxy- and calcium.] of or pertaining to the combined action of oxygen and calcium.
oxycalcium light; a light produced by white-hot lime.

ox"y·ce·phal'iç, a. [oxy- and cephalic.] designating or having a skull coming to a more or less cone-shaped point on top.

ox·y·çhlō'riç, a. [oxy- and chloric.] of or derived from oxygen and chlorine.

ox·y·çhlō'rīde, n. [oxy- and chloride.] a basic chloride or compound of metallic chloride with the basic oxides of the same metals, produced by the action of water on certain metallic chlorides.

ox'y·çrāte, n. [Gr. oxykraton, sour wine mixed with water; oxys, sharp, and kerannynai, to mix.] a mixture of water and vinegar. [Rare.]

ox·y·cỹ'mēne, n. same as carvacrol.

ox'yd, n. same as oxide.

ox·y·daç'tyl, a. having slender toes or fingers.

Ox·y·daç'tyl, n. one of the Oxydactyla.

Ox·y·daç'tyl·à, n.pl. [Gr. oxys, sharp, and daktylos, finger.] a group of batrachians, characterized by slender, tapering toes.

ox·y·dī'açt, n. [oxy-, and Gr. di-, two, and aktis, a ray.] a sponge spicule with only two of its axes developed.

ox"y·es·thē'si·à, n. abnormal acuteness of sensation.

ox'y·ġen, n. [Gr. oxys, acid, and gennān, to generate.] a colorless, odorless, tasteless, gaseous chemical element, the most abundant of all elements: it occurs free in the atmosphere, forming one fifth of its volume, and in combination in water, sandstone, limestone, etc.; it is very active, being able to combine with nearly all other elements, and is essential to life processes and to combustion: symbol, O; atomic weight, 16.000; atomic number, 8.

ox'y·ġen ac'id, an acid that contains oxygen; oxyacid.

ox'y·ġen·āte, v.t.; oxygenated, pt., pp.; oxygenating, ppr. to unite or cause to combine with oxygen; to treat or impregnate with oxygen; to oxidize.

ox"y·ġen·ā'tion, n. the act, operation, or process of oxygenating; oxidation.

ox'y·ġen·ā·tŏr, n. an oxidizer.

ox·y·ġen'iç, a. pertaining to, containing, producing, or having some of the properties of oxygen.

ox·y·ġē'ni·um, n. oxygen. [Rare.]

ox'y·ġen·ī·zà·ble, a. that can be oxygenized.

ox'y·ġen·īze, v.t.; oxygenized, pt., pp.; oxygenizing, ppr. to oxygenate; oxidize.

ox'y·ġen·īze·ment, n. oxygenation. [Rare.]

ox·yġ'e·nous, a. oxygenic.

ox'y·ġen tent, a boxlike enclosure supplied with oxygen, in which a patient is kept to facilitate his breathing: used chiefly in cases of pneumonia and cardiac disease.

OXYGEN TENT

ox·y·ġeū'si·à, n. [oxy-, and Gr. geusis, sense of taste.] excessive acuteness of the sense of taste.

ox·yg'nà·thous, a. [oxy-, and Gr. gnathos, jaw.] with jaws smooth or nearly so: said of certain mollusks, as land snails.

ox'y·gon, n. [oxy-, and Gr. gōnia, an angle.] a triangle having three acute angles. [Obs.]

ox·yg'ō·năl, a. oxygonial. [Obs.]

ox·y·gō'ni·ăl, a. having acute angles. [Obs.]

ox·y·haem·à·cỹ'à·nin, ox·y·haem·ō·cỹ'à·nin, n. a substance in the blood of some invertebrates which becomes blue when oxygenated, because of the copper in it.

ox·y·hem'à·tin, n. hematin when combined with oxygen.

ox·y·hēm·ō·glō'bin, ox·y·haem·ō·glō'bin, n. [oxy- and hemoglobin.] a substance found in the arterial blood, formed in the lungs by the loose union of hemoglobin with oxygen, which is thus carried to the body tissues.

ox·y·hỹ'drō·ġen, a. of or using a mixture or combination of oxygen and hydrogen; as, oxyhydrogen gas.
oxyhydrogen lamp; a lamp in which streams of oxygen and hydrogen in regulated quantities are commingled, the resulting flame being directed on a ball of quicklime and forming an extremely bright light.
oxyhydrogen light; light produced by burning some substance, as lime, in an oxyhydrogen flame.
oxyhydrogen microscope; a microscope in which the object is illuminated by oxyhydrogen light.

ox·y·hỹ'drō·ġen, n. oxyhydrogen gas.
oxyhydrogen torch (or blowpipe); a blowpipe which burns a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen at a very high temperature, used for cutting and welding steel.

ox'y·mel, n. [Gr. oxys, acid, and meli, honey.] a mixture of vinegar and honey.

ox·y·mō'ron, n. [Gr. oxymōron, a smart saying which at first view appears foolish, from oxys, sharp, and mōros, dull, foolish.] a figure of speech in which opposite or contradictory ideas or terms are combined (e.g., thunderous silence, sweet sorrow).

ox·y·mū'ri·āte, n. in old chemistry, a name for chloride: so called from the erroneous assumption that chlorine was a mixture of oxygen and muriatic acid.

ox·y·mū·ri·at'iç, a. [oxy- and muriatic.] in old chemistry, pertaining to or made of oxygen and muriatic acid.

ox·y·neū'rine, n. see betaine.

ox·yn'tiç, a. [Gr. oxyntos, verbal adj. of oxynein, to make sharp.] acid; secreting acid: said of certain glands.

ox·y·ō'pi·à, ox'y·ō·py, n. [oxy-, and Gr. ōps, eye.] unusual acuteness of sight, arising from increased sensibility of the retina.

ox"y·os·phrē'si·à, n. [oxy-, and Gr. osphrēsis, smell.] unusual acuteness of the sense of smell.

ox·y·phē'niç, a. [oxy- and phenol and -ic.] pertaining to or specifying oxyphenol or oxyphenic acid.

ox·y·phē'nōl, n. pyrocatechol, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$, obtained in the distillation of catechu.

ox'y·phile, ox'y·phil, a. same as eosinophil.

ox·y·phō′ni·ȧ, ox·yph′ō·ny, n. [oxy-, and Gr. phōne, sound.] an abnormally sharp quality of sound or pitch of voice.

ox·yph′yl·lous, a. [oxy-, and Gr. phyllon, leaf.] having leaves that end in a sharp point. [Rare.]

ox·y·quin′ō·line, ox·y·quin′ō·lin, n. [oxy- and quinoline.] a substance, C_9H_7NO, derived from quinoline.

ox′y·rhīne (-rīn), a. [oxy-, and Gr. rhis, rhinos, nose.] having a sharp-pointed snout; as, the oxyrhine frog.

ox′y·rhyñ·çhȧ, n.pl. the maioid crabs.

ox·y·rhyñ′çhous, a. same as oxyrhine.

ox′y·sȩlt, n. a salt of an oxyacid.

ox″y·sul′fīde, ox″y·sul′fid, n. a compound formed of an element or positive radical with oxygen and sulfur, in which oxygen may be thought of as replacing a part of the sulfur.

ox·y·tō′ci·ȧ (-shi-), n. quickness of childbirth.

ox·y·toc′iç, a. [oxy-, and Gr. tokos, birth.] in medicine, promoting or hastening the process of childbirth by stimulating the contractions of the involuntary muscles of the uterus.

ox·y·toc′iç, n. an oxytocic medicine.

ox·y·tō′cin, n. [from Gr. oxys, quick, sharp, and tokos, birth, and -in.] one of the hormones of the posterior pituitary gland, serving to increase the contractions of the uterus during childbirth and to prevent or stop bleeding afterward.

ox·y·tol′ū·ēne, n. one of the cresols.

ox″y·tō·lū′iç, a. contained in or derived from oxygen and toluic acid; as, oxytoluic acid.

ox′y·tōne, a. [oxy-, and Gr. tonos, tone.] in Greek grammar, having an acute accent on the last syllable.

ox′y·tōne, n. an oxytone word.

ox·y·ton′iç·ăl, a. oxytone.

Ox·y·ū′ris, n. [Gr. oxys, sharp, and oura, tail.] a genus of internal parasitic worms (pinworms) related to the common Ascaris. They multiply with rapidity and pass from the intestine to other organs. Oxyuris vermicularis is often found in the human rectum and is usually about a quarter of an inch long.

ox·y·ū′rous, a. having a sharp-pointed tail, as certain birds. [Rare.]

ō′yĕr, n. [O. Norm. Fr. oyer, hearing; Fr. ouïr, L. audire, to hear.] a copy of a bond or other instrument that is the subject of a suit, given to the opposite party instead of being read aloud, as formerly.

oyer and terminer; a hearing and determining: used in the United States to designate the higher criminal courts. [Archaic.]

ō′yez, ō′yes, n. a cry of oyez.

oys′tĕr, n. [OFr. oistre, huistre; Fr. huitre, from L. ostrea, ostreum, Gr. ostreon, an oyster, akin to osteon, a bone, and ostrakon, the hard shell of a shellfish.]

1. an edible mollusk belonging to the lamellibranchiate genus Ostrea, family Ostreidæ, characterized by an inequivalve shell composed of two irregular lamellated valves, of which the convex, or under one, adheres to rocks, to the shell of another mollusk, etc. The species are numerous and are found especially on the bottom of the sea. The common American oyster is Ostrea virginica, and the common European oyster is Ostrea edulis.

2. any of numerous similar bivalve mollusks, as the scallop, pearl oyster, etc.

3. the oyster-shaped bit of meat contained in a depression on each side of the pelvic bone of a fowl.

Applied figuratively to a taciturn person or to a thing from which profit or advantage can be extracted.

fresh-water oyster; a bivalve of the genus Etheria, or of some related genus, found in rivers of the Southern Hemisphere and somewhat resembling an oyster in form.

thorny oyster; any spiny bivalve of the genus Spondylus.

oys′tĕr bāy (or bär), an oyster shop; an eating place where oysters are served.

oys′tĕr bed, a place on the ocean floor naturally suited to, or artificially prepared for, the breeding and cultivation of oysters.

oys′tĕr catch′ĕr, any of several species of wading birds of the genus Hæmatopus, having a strong, wedge-shaped beak and stout legs, which feeds on marine animals. Hæmatopus ostralegus, the sea pie, is the European species, and Hæmatopus palliatus, the common American species.

OYSTER CATCHER (Hæmatopus ostralegus)

oys′tĕr çrab, a small crustacean often found living as commensals in the gill cavities of oysters; a pea crab, as the Pinnotheres ostreum.

oys′tĕr çrack′ĕr, a small, round cracker eaten with oyster stews, etc.

oys′tĕr dredġe (-drej), a dredge consisting of a heavy iron frame with a net of iron mesh, used to lift oysters from an oyster bed.

oys′tĕr färm, a place where oyster beds are maintained.

oys′tĕr·fish, n. 1. the tautog.

2. the toadfish.

oys′tĕr fish′ĕr·y, the business of fishing for oysters; also, the place from which oysters are dredged.

oys′tĕr·green, n. a seaweed; kelp.

oys′tĕr·ing, n. the act of taking oysters from an oyster bed.

oys′tĕr·ling, n. a small or young oyster.

oys′tĕr·măn, n.; pl. oys′tĕr·men, 1. a man whose business is fishing for, breeding, or selling oysters.

2. a vessel used in gathering oysters.

oys′tĕr plant, 1. salsify, a plant of the genus Tragopogon: so called from its taste when cooked: also called vegetable oyster.

2. the sea lungwort.

Spanish oyster plant; the Scolymus hispanicus, a prickly leaved plant of the Compositæ, having edible roots used like salsify.

oys′tĕr plŏv′ĕr, an oyster catcher.

oys′tĕr rāke, a rake with a long handle and curved teeth for gathering in oysters from shallow waters.

oys′tĕr roo̧t, salsify.

oys′tĕr·shell, n. the shell of the oyster; especially, crushed shells of oysters for feeding to poultry.

oys′tĕr-shell sçāle (or bärk louse), a scale, Mytilaspis pomorum, injurious to the apple and to other fruits.

oys′tĕr stew, a dish consisting of whole oysters in a soup of heated milk or cream, butter, and seasoning.

oys′tĕr tonġs, a kind of tongs used in oyster fishing.

oys′tĕr wench, an oysterwoman. [Archaic.]

oys′tĕr whīte (hwīt), a very light gray, with a creamy or yellowish cast.

oys′tĕr·wīfe, n. an oysterwoman. [Archaic.]

oys′tĕr·wom″ăn (-woom″), n.; pl. oys′tĕr·wom″en (-wim″), a woman whose business is selling oysters.

ō·zē′nȧ, ō·zae′nȧ, n. [Gr. ozaina, from ozein, to smell.] a fetid ulcer in the nostril.

ō·zō·çē′rīte, ō·zō·kē′rīte, n. [Gr. ozein, to smell, and kēros, wax.] a mineral wax consisting of natural paraffins, used in making candles, electrical insulation, etc.

ō′zō·nāte, n. [ozone and -ate.] in chemistry, any of a series of yellow or orange compounds formed by the action of oxygen containing ozone on alkalies: they slowly change to tetroxides on standing.

ō·zō·nā′tion, n. treatment with ozone; also, the act of forming ozone.

ō′zōne, n. [Gr. ozein, to smell.]

1. a blue gas, O_3, with a penetrating odor: it is an allotropic form of oxygen, formed usually by a silent electrical discharge in air, and is used as an oxidizing, deodorizing, and bleaching agent and in the purification of water.

2. pure air. [Slang.]

ō′zōne pā′pĕr, paper covered with moist starch and potassium iodide, becoming blue in the presence of ozone.

ō·zon′iç, a. pertaining to, like, or containing ozone.

ō·zon′iç ē′thĕr, a solution of ethylic ether, hydrogen peroxide, and alcohol, used as an antiseptic.

ō′zō·nid, n. an ozonide.

ō′zō·nīde, n. any of a series of compounds of ozone.

ō·zō·nif′ĕr·ous, a. [from ozone and -ferous.] having or containing ether.

ō·zō″ni·fi·çā′tion, n. [ozone, and L. facere, to make.] the act of producing ozone; treatment with ozone.

ō·zō·ni·zā′tion, n. ozonation.

ō′zō·nīze, v.t.; ozonized, pt., pp.; ozonizing, ppr. 1. to change (oxygen) into ozone.

2. to treat or impregnate with ozone.

ō′zō·nī·zĕr, n. a device for generating ozone.

ō·zō′nō·gr̤aph, n. [ozone, and Gr. graphein, to describe.] same as ozonoscope.

ō·zō·nom′ē·tĕr, n. [ozone, and Gr. metron, measure.] a device used to determine the relative amount of ozone in the air.

ō·zō·nō·met′riç, a. pertaining to ozonometry.

ō·zō·nom′e·try, n. the measurement of ozone.

ō·zō′nō·sçōpe, n. [ozone, and Gr. skopein, to view.] a device to determine the presence or amount of ozone in the air.

ō·zō·nō·sçop′iç, a. pertaining to the ozonoscope; revealing the presence of ozone in the air.

ō′zō·nous, a. ozonic.

ō·zos·tō′mi·ȧ, n. [Gr. ozein, to smell, and stoma, mouth.] bad-smelling breath.

P

P, p (pē), n.; pl. P's, p's, Ps, ps (pēz). 1. the sixteenth letter of the English alphabet: from the Greek pi, a borrowing from the Phoenician.
2. the sound of P or p: p is silent before n in words of Greek origin.
3. a type or impression for P or p.
4. a symbol for the sixteenth in a sequence or group (or the fifteenth if J is omitted).

P, p (pē), a. 1. of P or p.
2. sixteenth (or fifteenth if J is omitted) in a sequence or group.

P (pē), n. 1. an object shaped like P.
2. a Roman numeral for 400: with a superior bar (P̄), 400,000.
3. in genetics, the symbol for parental generation.
4. in chemistry, the symbol for phosphorus.
5. in mechanics, the symbol for: (a) power; (b) pressure.

P (pē), a. shaped like P.

p-, in chemistry, para-.

Pa, in chemistry, protactinium.

2. this plant.
Also called maté.

PARAGUAY TEA
(Ilex paraguayensis)

par·a·hē·li·ot′rō·pism, n. [para-, and Gr. hēlios, sun, and trepein, to turn.] in botany, the adjusting of the surface, as of a leaf, so as to be parallel with the rays of the sun; diurnal sleep of a leaf.

pa·raī′bȧ, n. [Braz.] a Brazilian plant of the genus Simaruba.

par′a·keet, n. [OFr. paroquet.] any of certain small, slender parrots with long, tapering tails: also parrakeet, parroket, paroquet, parroquet.

par·a·laç′tiç, a. [para- and lactic.] designating a modified form or condition of lactic acid, $C_3H_6O_3$. paralactic acid; an acid isomeric with lactic acid, found in muscular tissue and in urine, bile, etc.

par·a·lā′li·ȧ, n. [para-, and Gr. lalia, speech.] a speech disorder characterized by distortions of sound.

par·al′dē·hȳde, n. [par- and aldehyde.] a colorless liquid, $(CH_3CHO)_3$, produced by the polymerization of formaldehyde, having a strong, nauseating smell and used in medicine as a hypnotic and sedative.

par·à·leīp′sis, n. [Gr. paraleipsis, omission, from para-, beyond, and leipein, to leave.] in rhetoric, a device in which a point is stressed by suggesting that it is too obvious or well-known to mention, as in the phrase, "not to mention the expense involved."

par·à·lep′sis, n. same as paraleipsis.

par·al·ġe′si·à, n. [par-, and Gr. algesis, sense of pain, from algos, pain.] any condition marked by abnormal and painful sensations; a painful paraesthesia: also written paralgia.

par·al′ġi·à, n. paralgesia.

pà·rā′li·ăn, n. [Gr. paralios; para, beside, and hals, sea.] one who lives near the sea. [Obs.]

par″à·li·pom′e·nà, n.pl. [Gr. paraleipomena, things omitted, from paraleipein, to omit; para, beyond, and leipein, to leave.]
1. things omitted; a supplement containing things omitted in the preceding work.
2. [P–] in the Douay version of the Bible, the Books of Chronicles, so called because they were regarded as supplemental to the Books of Kings.

Par″à·li·pom′e·non, n.pl. same as paralipomena, sense 2.

par·à·lip′sis, n. same as paraleipsis.

par·ăl·laç′tiç, par·ăl·laç′tiç·ăl, a. pertaining to a parallax.

par′ăl·lax, n. [Gr. parallaxis, from parallas sein, to vary, to decline or wander; para, beyond, and allassein, to change.]
1. the apparent change in the position of an object resulting from the change in the direction or position from which it is viewed.

PARALLAX
P, star; R, point on earth's surface; A, center of the earth; angle RPA, parallax

2. the amount or angular degree of such change; specifically, in astronomy, the apparent difference in the position of a heavenly body with reference to some point on the surface of the earth and some other point, as the center of the earth (diurnal, or geocentric, parallax) or a point on the sun (annual, or heliocentric, parallax): the parallax of an object may be used in determining its distance from the observer.
binocular parallax; the difference between the position of an object as seen by one eye and that in which it is seen by the other, the head remaining unmoved.
horizontal parallax; the geocentric parallax of the sun, moon, or a planet when on the horizon.
optical parallax; same as binocular parallax.
stellar parallax; the annual parallax of a fixed star.

par′ăl·lel, a. [Fr. parallèle; L. parallelus; Gr. parallēlos; para, side by side, and allēlōn, of one another.]
1. extending in the same direction and at the same distance apart at every point, so as never to meet, as lines, planes, etc.: in modern non-Euclidian geometry, such lines and planes are considered to meet at infinity.
2. having parallel parts or movements, as some machines, tools, etc.
3. closely similar or corresponding, as in purpose, tendency, time, or essential parts.
4. in music, having consistently equal intervals in pitch, as two parts of harmony, a series of chords, etc.
parallel bar; (a) one of a pair of horizontal bars, parallel to each other, and supported by posts or a framework at a distance of from four to six feet from the ground, used for gymnastic exercises; (b) in a steam engine, a rod parallel to the working beam, in the system of linkwork which converts reciprocating circular motion into rectilinear reciprocating motion.

parallel circles of a sphere; the circles of a sphere, having planes parallel to each other.
parallel columns; in printing, two or more passages of reading matter printed side by side in space the width of one ordinary column, for the purpose of illustrating their similarity or the difference between them.
parallel forces; mechanical forces which act in directions parallel to each other.
parallel motion; (a) a contrivance invented by Watt, for converting a reciprocating circular motion into an alternating rectilinear motion. The chief use to which the parallel motion is applied is to connect the pump rod and piston rod of a steam engine with the working beam in such a manner that while the points of the beam, to which these rods are attached, move in arcs of circles, the rods are made to move up and down in straight lines parallel to the sides of the cylinder; (b) in music, the movement of two or more parts at fixed intervals, as in a succession of thirds or sixths.
parallel rod; a coupling rod.
parallel ruler; a device for drawing lines parallel to each other, usually a pair of rulers so constructed and connected as to be parallel at all times at whatever distance apart they may be.
parallel sailing; the method of sailing when a ship's course lies along a degree or parallel of latitude.
parallel sphere; the position of the sphere in which, to an observer at either pole, the angle between the planes of the equator and the horizon vanishes.
parallel vise; a vise whose two jaws are always parallel.
Syn.—correspondent, congruous, correlative, analogous, concurrent, equidistant.

par′ăl·lel, n. 1. something parallel to something else, as a line or surface.
2. any person or thing essentially the same as, or closely similar or corresponding to, something else; counterpart.
3. the condition of being parallel; conformity in essential points.
4. any comparison showing the existence of similarity or likeness.
5. any of the imaginary lines parallel to the equator and representing degrees of latitude on the earth's surface.
6. such a line drawn on a map or globe.
7. in electricity, a hookup of lights, cells, etc. in which all positive poles or terminals are connected in one conductor and all negatives in another: also called multiple circuit.
8. in military science, a trench, usually one of a series, running parallel to and opposing a position.
9. [pl.] in printing, a sign (||) marking material referred to in a note.
parallel of altitude; in astronomy, one of the small circles of the sphere parallel to the horizon: also called almucantars.
parallel of declination; one of the small circles of the celestial sphere parallel to the equator.
parallel of latitude; a parallel (senses 5 and 6).

par′ăl·lel, v.t.; paralleled or parallelled, pt., pp.; paralleling or parallelling, ppr. 1. (a) to make (one thing) parallel to another; (b) to make parallel to each other.
2. to be parallel with; to extend parallel to; as, the highway parallels the river.
3. to compare (things, ideas, etc.) in order to show similarity or likeness.
4. to find a counterpart for; to match.

phlō·ġis'tiăn, n. a believer in the existence of phlogiston.

phlō·ġis'tiç, a. 1. of or pertaining to phlogiston.
2. fiery; flaming. [Obs.]
3. in medicine, inflammatory; of inflammation.

phlō·ġis'tiç·ăl, a. phlogistic.

phlō·ġis'ti·çāte, v.t.; phlogisticated, pt., pp.; phlogisticating, ppr. in old chemistry, to combine phlogiston with.

phlō·ġis·ti·çā'tion, n. the act or process of phlogisticating.

phlō·ġis'ton, n. [Gr. phlogistos, from phlogizein, to burn or inflame, phlegein, to burn.] in old chemistry, an imaginary element formerly believed to cause combustion and to be given off by anything burning; the principle or matter of fire in composition with other bodies. Stahl gave this name to a hypothetical element which he supposed to be pure fire fixed in combustible bodies, in order to distinguish it from fire in action or in a state of liberty.

phlō·gō·ġen'iç, a. phlogogenous.

phlō·goġ'e·nous, a. [Gr. phlox, phlogos, flame, and -genēs, producing.] in medicine, causing inflammation.

phlog'ō·pīte, n. [Gr. phlox, phlogos, flame, ōps, face, and -ite.] a magnesium mica having a pearly luster and various shades of copper and bronze color.

phlō·gō'sin, n. [Gr. phlogōsis, inflammation.] a crystallizable, nonnitrogenous substance obtained from cultures of the Staphylococcus aureus.

phlō·gō'sis, n. [Gr. phlogōsis, inflammation.]

inflammation, especially of the skin; erysipelas. [Now Rare.]

phlō·got'iç, a. of, having, pertaining to, or characteristic of phlogosis. [Now Rare.]

phlō·ram'ine, n. a compound obtained by the action of ammonia on phloroglucin.

phlō·ret'iç, a. of, relating to, or obtained from phloretin.

phlor'e·tin, n. [from phlorizin.] a bitter, white glucoside, $C_{15}H_{14}O_5$, derived from phlorizin, and used as a febrifuge.

phlō·rhi'zin (-rī'), n. phlorizin.

phlō·rid'zin, n. phlorizin.

phlor'i·zin, n. [Gr. phloios, bark, and rhiza-, root.] a bitter, white, crystalline glucoside, $C_{21}H_{24}O_{10}$, obtained from the root bark of the apple, pear, plum, and cherry trees, and used in medicine as a tonic and to combat periodic fevers, as in malaria.

phlor·ō·glū'cin, n. [*phlor*izin, and Gr. glykys, sweet.] a sweet crystalline phenol obtained from various barks, as that of the apple tree, and used as a test for woody fiber and for hydrochloric acid.

phlor·ō·glū'cin·ōl, n. same as phloroglucin.

phlō'rōl, n. an oily liquid derived from creosote.

phlō'rōne, n. [*phlor*ol and quin*one.*] a yellow crystalline compound obtained from beechwood and coal tar by distillation and from xylidine by oxidation.

Phlox, n. [Gr. phlox, a flame, from phlegein, to burn, from the appearance of the flowers.]

1. a North American genus of plants, family Polemoniaceæ, with small leaves and clusters of pink, blue, red, purple, or white flowers.

-phōr′ous, [Mod. L. -phorus; Gr. -phoros, from pherein, to bear.] a combining form meaning bearing, producing.

phos′ġēne, n. [Gr. phōs, light, and -gen.] carbonyl chloride, $COCl_2$, a colorless gas formed by the reaction of carbon monoxide and chlorine in the sunlight: used in making dyes and other organic compounds, and as a lung irritant in warfare.

phos·ġen′iç, a. photogenic; light-producing.

phos′ġen·īte, n. a chlorocarbonate of lead, $Pb_2Cl_2CO_3$, occurring in white or yellowish crystals.

phosph-, phospho-.

phos′pham, n. [*phosph*orous and *am*monia.] a white compound derivable from phosphorus pentachloride by the action of ammonia gas.

phos′phà·tāse, n. [from phosphate, and -ase.] any of various enzymes found in body tissues and fluids that split the phosphate-carbohydrate compounds.

phos′phāte, n. 1. a salt or ester of phosphoric acid.
2. any substance containing phosphates, used as a fertilizer.
3. a soft drink made with soda water, sirup, and a few drops of phosphoric acid.

phos·phat′iç, a. relating to or containing phosphates.

phos′phà·tīze, v.t.; phosphatized, pt., pp.; phosphatizing, ppr. to change into, or treat with, a phosphate or phosphates.

phos″phat·op·tō′sis, n. [phosphate, and Gr. ptōsis, fall.] the spontaneous precipitation of phosphates from the urine.

phos·phà·tū′ri·ȧ, n. 1. an excess of phosphates in the urine.
2. phosphatoptosis.

phos·phà·tū′riç, a. of or characterized by phosphaturia.

phos′phēne, n. [Gr. phōs, light, and phainein, to show.] a bright visual image produced by mechanical stimulation of the retina, as by pressure on the eyeball through the closed eyelids.

phos′phid, n. a phosphide.

phos′phīde, n. the compound formed by trivalent phosphorus and a positive element or elements.

phos′phin, n. a phosphine.

phos′phīne, n. 1. hydrogen phosphide, PH_3, a colorless, poisonous gas with a garliclike odor.
2. a synthetic yellow dye.

phos′phīte, n. any salt or ester of phosphorous acid.

phos′phō-, [from phosphorus.] a combining form meaning phosphorus, as in *phospho*protein: also, before a vowel, phosph-.

phos′phō·līte, n. [phosphor, and Gr. lithos, a stone.] an earth united with phosphoric acid.

phos·phol′ō·ġy, n. the doctrine of the effect of excess or deficiency of oxidizable phosphorus compounds in the bioplasm.

phos·phon′iç, a. relating to or derived from phosphorous acid.
phosphonic acid; a compound of phosphorous acid in which a hydrocarbon replaces one of the hydrogen atoms.

phos·phō′ni·um, n. [*phosph*orus and ammonium.] the monovalent radical PH_4, which is related to PH_3 as the ammonium radical NH_4 is related to NH_3.

phos·phō·prō′tē·in, n. any of a group of proteins in which the protein molecule is combined with some phosphorous compound other than lecithin or a nucleic acid, as casein of milk.

phos′phŏr, n. [Gr. phōsphoros; phōs, light, from phaein, to shine, and pherein, to bring.]
1. [P–] the morning star, or Lucifer; Venus, when it precedes the sun and shines in the morning. [Poetic.]
2. phosphorus or any other phosphorescent substance. [Archaic and Poet.]
3. in physics, any substance that gives off light when subjected to radiation.

phos′phŏr, a. phosphorescent. [Rare.]

phos′phō·rāte, v.t.; phosphorated, pt., pp.; phosphorating, ppr. to combine or impregnate with phosphorus.

phos′phōre, n. same as phosphor.

phos·phō·resce′ (-es′), v.i.; phosphoresced (-est), pt., pp.; phosphorescing, ppr. to shine, as phosphorus, by giving off light without noticeable heat or combustion.

phos·phō·res′cence, n. 1. the condition or property of giving off light without noticeable heat or combustion, as shown by phosphorus, decayed wood, etc.
2. such a light.

phos·phō·res′cent, a. showing phosphorescence.

phos·phō·res′cent, n. any substance having phosphorescence.

phos′phō·ret·ed, phos′phō·ret·ted, a. combined or impregnated with phosphorus: also phosphureted, phosphuretted.
phosphoreted hydrogen; a colorless gas, PH_3, smelling like decayed fish, prepared by boiling water-slaked lime and phosphorus.

phos·phor′iç, a. 1. of, like, or containing phsophorus, especially with a valence of five.
2. designating any of three oxygen acids of phosphorus, especially orthophosphoric acid, H_3PO_4, a colorless crystalline acid, soluble in water and used as a reagent.

phos·phor′iç·ăl, a. phosphoric. [Obs.]

phos′phō·riṣm, n. chronic phosphorus poisoning.

phos′phō·rīte, n. 1. a fibrous variety of apatite.
2. any mineral phosphate used as fertilizer.

phos·phō·rit′iç, a. pertaining to phosphorite; of the nature of phosphorite.

phos′phō·rīze, v.t.; phosphorized, pt., pp.; phosphorizing, ppr. to phosphorate.

phos′phō·rō-, a combining form meaning phosphorus or phosphorescence, as in *phosphoro*scope: also, before a vowel, phosphor-.

phos·phor′ō·ġràph, n. [phosphorus, and Gr. graphein, to write.] a representation obtained by phosphorescence.

phos″phō·rō·ġraph′iç, a. of or relating to phosphorography.

phos·phō·rog′rà·phy, n. the act or art of taking phosphorographs.

phos·phor′ō·sçōpe, n. a device used in observing and measuring the persistence of phosphorescence after the source of light has been removed.

phos′phō·rous, a. 1. phosphorescent. [Rare.]
2. [Fr. phosphoreux.] of, like, or containing phosphorus, especially with a valence of three.
3. designating a white or yellowish, crystalline acid, H_3PO_3, that absorbs oxygen readily: used as a chemical reducing agent.
phosphorous anhydrid; a soft, white, readily volatile powder, P_2O_3, prepared by burning phosphorus in a limited supply of air.

phos′phō·rus, n.; pl. phos′phō·rī, [L., from Gr. phōsphoros; phōs, light, and pherein, to bear.]
1. [P–] the morning star, Phosphor.
2. any phosphorescent substance or object.
3. a nonmetallic chemical element, normally a white, phosphorescent, waxy solid, becoming yellow when exposed to light: it is poisonous and unites easily with oxygen so that it ignites spontaneously at room temperature: when heated in sealed tubes it is converted into a red form (red, or amorphous, phosphorus) which is nonpoisonous, and less inflammable than the white: when heated under a pressure of 15,000 atmospheres it is converted into a black powder: symbol, P.; atomic weight, 30.98; atomic number, 15.
phosphorus paste; a poisonous mixture containing phosphorus, used for vermin.

phos′phō·rus diṣ·ēaṣe′, a disease resulting from inhalation of the fumes of phosphorus, characterized especially by necrosis of the jaw.

phos′phō·ryl, n. in chemistry, the radical PO.

phos′phū·ret, n. phosphide. [Obs.]

phos′phū·ret·ed, phos′phū·ret·ted, a. phosphoreted.

phot (or fōt), n. [from Gr. phōs, phōtos, a light.] the C.G.S. unit of illumination, equal to one lumen per square centimeter, or the direct illumination produced by a uniform point source of one international foot-candle upon a surface one centimeter distant.

phō′tiç, a. [Gr. phōs, phōtos, light.]
1. of light.

2. in biology, having to do with the effect of light upon, or the production of light by, organisms.

phō'tiçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the science of light.

phō"tō·aç·tin'iç, a. [photo- and actinic.] that can produce actinic effect, as ultraviolet rays.

phō"tō·bī·ot'iç, a. in biology, needing light for existence.

phō'tō·cell, n. a photoelectric cell.

phō·tō·çhem'iç·ăl, a. relating to or produced by the chemical action of light.

phō·tō·çhem'is·try, n. the branch of chemistry that relates to chemical changes produced by the action of light.

phō"tō·çhrō·mat'iç, a. relating to or derived from photochromy.

phō·tō·çhrō'miç, a. same as photochromatic.

phō"tō·çhrō·mog'rà·phy, n. [photo-, Gr. chrōma, color, and graphein, to write.] the printing of colored photolithographs.

1. an instrument that records motion, as of a bird, in a series of photographs taken at regular, extremely brief intervals.

2. a photograph so taken.

3. in physics, an instrument for recording the exact time of an event by exposing a moving photographic plate to the tracing of a thin beam of light synchronized with the event.

phō"tō·çŏn·duç'tive, a. designating or of a substance, as selenium, which exhibits changed electrical conductivity under varying amounts of radiation.

phō'tō·çop·y, n.; pl. phō'tō·çop·ieṣ, a copy of graphic material made by a device which photographically reproduces the original.

phō'tō·çop·y, v.t.; photocopied, pt., pp.; photocopying, ppr. to make a photocopy of.

phō"tō·dē·grād'a·ble, a. [photo-, and biodegradable.] that will decompose under exposure to certain kinds of radiant energy, especially ultraviolet light, as certain plastics, insecticides, etc.

phō"tō·dis·in"tē·grā'tion, n. [photo- and disintegration.] in physics, the breaking down of the nucleus of an atom by the action of radiant energy.

phō'tō·drà·mà, n. a photoplay.

phō'tō·drōme, n. [photo-, and Gr. dromos, a running, from dramein, to run.]

1. a device for regulating light flashes so that a wheel or disk in rotation appears to be stationary or to have its motion reversed.

2. an instrument by which curious optical effects are produced, by throwing flashes of light upon revolving disks bearing various figures.

phō"tō·dỹ·nam'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.]

1. the effect of light on living organisms, as in causing phototropism.

2. the science dealing with this.

phō"tō·ē·leç'triç, a. 1. of or having to do with the electric effects produced by light, especially as in the emission of electrons by certain substances when subjected to light or radiation of suitable wave length.

2. pertaining to the lowering of electrical resistance of some substances, as selenium, when exposed to certain wave lengths of light.

photoelectric cell; any device in which light controls the electron emission from a cathode, the electrical resistance of an element, or the electromotive force produced by a cell: it is usually incorporated in an electric circuit and used in controlling mechanical devices, as for opening doors: also called electric eye.

phō"tō·ē·leç·tric'i·ty, n. electricity as affected by light; difference of electric potential produced by the action of light.

phō"tō·ē·leç'tron, n. an electron ejected from a system by a photon striking it, or emitted as a result of radiation.

phō"tō·ē·leç'trō·tỹpe, n. an electrotype plate made by a photographic process.

phō"tō·ē·mis'sion (-mish'un), n. [photo-, and emission.] the ejection of one or more electrons from a substance, usually a metal, when subjected to light or other suitable radiation.

phō"tō·en·grāve', v.t.; photoengraved, pt., pp.; photoengraving, ppr. to reproduce by the process of photoengraving.

phō"tō·en·grāv'ing, n. [photo- and engraving.]

1. a process by which photographs are reproduced on printing plates, especially one in which the reproduction is in relief.

2. a plate so made.

3. a print from such a plate.

phō·tō·etch' (-ech'), v.t.; photoetched (-echt'), pt., pp.; photoetching, ppr. to produce by the process of photoetching.

phō·tō·etch'ing, n. the reproduction of a picture by any means in which an etching of the plate and photography are employed.

phō'tō fin'ish, a close finish of a game, competition, etc.: so called from horse racing, in which the finish of the race is photographed to determine the winner.

phō'tō·flash, a. in photography, designating, of, or using a lamp or light, especially a flashbulb, electrically synchronized with the shutter.

phō'tō·flash, n. a photoflash bulb, photograph, lamp, etc.

phō'tō·flood (-flud), a. 1. designating an electric bulb of low voltage which when connected to a circuit of standard voltage burns with a sustained intense light: used in photography.

2. (a) of or for such a bulb; (b) made with the aid of such a bulb.

phō'tō·flood, n. a photoflood bulb or photograph.

phō·tō·gas'trō·sçōpe, n. an instrument by means of which the interior of the stomach may be photographed.

phō·tō·ġel'à·tin, a. of, designating, or produced by a photographic process in which prints are made from a film of hardened gelatin.

phō'tō·ġen, n. [photo- and -gen.] a light solvent or illuminating oil obtained from coal, shale, paraffin, etc. by distillation.

phō'tō·ġēne, n. photogen.

phō'tō·ġēne, n. an impression retained on the retina of the eye after the object itself has vanished; an afterimage.

phō·tō·ġen'iç, a. 1. due to or produced by light. [Rare.]

2. artistically suitable for being photographed; as, a photogenic face or figure.

3. in biology, producing or giving off light; phosphorescent.

phō·tō·ġen'iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a photogenic manner.

phō·tō·glyph'iç, a. [photo-, and Gr. glyphein, to engrave.] pertaining to photoglyphy.

phō·tog'ly·phy, n. 1. the art of engraving by means of photography.

2. photogravure.

phō·tō·gram'me·tēr, n. a form of photographic camera employed in surveying.

phō·tō·gram'me·try, n. 1. the use of photography in surveying.

2. map-making from photographs.

phō'tō·gràph, v.t.; photographed (-gràft), pt., pp.; photographing, ppr. to take a picture of, by means of a camera; as, to photograph a scene or person.

phō'tō·gràph, v.i. 1. to be a photographer; to practice photography.

2. to undergo being photographed, with reference to photogenic qualities; as, she photographs well.

phō·tog'rà·phēr, n. one who photographs; especially, one whose business is taking photographs.

phō·tō·graph'iç, a. 1. of or like a photograph or photography; as, his photographic writing.

2. used in or made by photography, as equipment, records, etc.

3. retaining or recalling in precise detail; as, a photographic memory.

phō·tō·graph'iç·ăl, a. photographic.

phō·tō·graph'iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. in a photographic manner.

2. by a photograph or photographs.

phō·tog'rà·phist, n. one who practises photography.

phō·tog'rà·phy, n. the art or practice of producing images of objects upon a photosensitive surface by the chemical action of light or other radiant energy.

phō"tō·grà·vūre', n. [photo-, and Fr. gravure, engraving.]

1. a photoengraving process by which photographs are reproduced on intaglio printing plates or rolls from which they may be transferred to paper.

2. a print so made, usually with a velvety, satinlike finish.

phō"tō·grà·vūre', v.t.; photogravured, pt., pp.; photogravuring, ppr. to reproduce by photogravure.

phō·tō·hē'li·ō·gràph", n. [photo- and heliograph.] a telescopic camera made especially for taking photographs of the sun.

phō·tō·joûr'năl·iṣm, n. journalism in which news stories, etc. are presented mainly through photographs.

phō"tō·ki·nē'sis, n. [Mod. L.; photo-, and kinesis, motion, from Gr. kinēsis, from kinein, to move.] in physiology, movement in response to light.

phō"tō·ki·net'iç, a. of photokinesis.

phō·tō·lith'ō·gràph, n. [photo- and lithograph.] a lithograph produced by photoengraving.

phō·tō·lith'ō·gràph, v.t. to use photoengraving in the production or reproduction of.

phō"tō·li·thog'rà·phēr, n. one who uses photolithography for producing pictures.

phō"tō·lith·ō·graph'iç, a. pertaining to, like, or obtained by photolithography.

phō"tō·li·thog'rà·phy, n. the art or process of making photolithographs.

phō·tol'ō·ġist, n. a person skilled in photology.

phō·tol'ō·ġy, n. the science of light; photics.

phō·tol'y·sis, n. 1. in chemistry, decomposition brought about by the action of radiant energy, particularly light.

2. in botany, the effect of light on the arrangement of chlorophyll.

phō·tō·lyt'iç, a. of photolysis.

phō"tō·mag·net'iç, a. pertaining to photomagnetism.

phō·tō·mag'net·iṣm, n. [photo- and magnetism.] the relation of magnetism to light.

phō'tō·map, n. a map made by piecing together aerial photographs.

phō"tō·mē·çhan'iç·ăl, a. [photo- and mechanical.] pertaining to any mechanical process of obtaining pictures by using photographic methods, as in photolithography or photogravure.

phō·tom'e·tēr, n. [photo- and -meter.] an instrument for measuring the intensity of light, especially for determining the relative intensity of different lights; a light meter.

phō·tō·met'riç, a. of or by a photometer or photometry.

phō·tō·met'riç·ăl, a. same as photometric.

phō"to·mē·tri'çiăn (-trish'ăn), n. one skilled in photometry.

phō·tom'e·try, n. 1. the measurement of the intensity of light.

2. the branch of optics dealing with this.

phō·tō·mī'çrō·gràph, n. [photo- and micrograph.]

1. a photograph taken through a microscope.

2. a very small photograph, usually requiring enlargement to bring out the details: usually microphotograph.

phō"tō·mī·çrog'rà·phy, n. the art or act of making photomicrographs.

phō·tō·mī'çrō·sçōpe, n. a microscope and camera used to make photomicrographs.

phō"tō·mī·çros'çō·py, n. photomicrography.

phō"tō·mon·täġe' (-täzh'), n. montage done in photographs.

phō·tō·mū'răl, n. a large photograph used as a mural.

phō'ton, n. [photo-, and electr*on.*]

1. a quantum of electromagnetic energy having both particle and wave behavior: it has no charge or mass but possesses momentum: the energy of light, X rays, gamma rays, etc. is carried by photons.

2. a unit of retinal illumination equal to the illumination from a surface having a brightness of one candle per square meter seen through a pupil area of one square millimeter.

phō·tō·neū'tron, n. a neutron given off in the photodisintegration of an atomic nucleus.

phō"tō-ōff'set, n. a method of offset printing in which the pictures or text are photographically transferred to a metal plate from which inked impressions are made on the rubber roller.

phō"tō·ox·i·dā'tion, n. oxidation induced by light or some other form of radiant energy.

1. an abnormal fear of light.
2. in medicine, an abnormal sensitivity to light, especially of the eyes as in measles and certain eye conditions.

phō′tō·phōne, n. [photo-, and Gr. phōnē, sound.] an instrument for communicating sounds by the agency of a beam of light, usually employing a selenium cell.

phō·tō·phon′iç, a. pertaining to the photophone or to photophony.

phō·toph′ō·ny, n. the art, process, or operation of using the photophone, or of transmitting sound by light.

phō′tō·phōre, n. [photo-, and Gr. pherein, to bear.] in zoology, an organ that gives forth light.

phō″tō·phos″phō·res′cent, a. becoming phosphorescent upon exposure to light.

phō′tō·plāy, n. [photo and play.] a play presented in motion pictures; a screen play.

phō′tō·print, n. a picture printed by any photomechanical process.

phō′tō·proc·ess, n. a photomechanical process.

phō·top′si·ȧ, phō·top′sy, n. [photo-, and Gr. opis, sight.] a condition of the eye, in which the patient perceives luminous rays, lines, coruscations, etc.

phō·tō·rā′di·ō·gram″, n. a photograph reproduced at a distant receiving station by means of radio equipment.

phō″tō·rē·liēf′, n. a picture or surface in relief, produced by a photomechanical process.

phō′tō·sçōpe, n. [photo- and -scope.]
1. any device for ascertaining the intensity of light.
2. any device for showing photographs.

phō·tō·sçop′iç, a. of or pertaining to a photoscope or its operation.

phō·tō·sçulp′tūre, n. [photo- and sculpture.] a rapid process of sculpturing statuettes, medallions, etc., by means of a pantograph which traces the outlines of a number of photographs taken simultaneously from different points of view.

phō′tō·sen′si·tive, a. reacting or sensitive to radiant energy, especially to light.

phō·tō·speç′trō·sçōpe, n. an instrument used in making a photographic record of spectra.

phō′tō·sphēre, n. the white-hot envelope of gas surrounding the sun.

phō·tō·spher′iç, a. of or pertaining to the photosphere.

pho′tō·stat, n. 1. a device used in making inexpensive photographic reproductions of printed matter, maps, drawings, etc.: the image is made directly as a positive upon special paper: a trade-mark (Photostat).
2. a reproduction or copy so made.

phō′tō·stat, v.i.; photostated or photostatted, pt., pp.; photostating or photostatting, ppr. to produce or manufacture a photostat or photostats.

phō′tō·stat, v.t. to copy by means of a photostat.

phō·tō·stat′iç, a. of or by a phostat; having the appearance of a photostat.

phō·tō·syn′the·sis, n. 1. in chemistry and physiology, the synthesis of compounds by light.
2. in botany, the formation of carbohydrates in living plants from water and carbon dioxide, by the action of sunlight on the chlorophyll.

phō·tō·syn′the·sīze, v.i. and v.t. 1. in chemistry and physiology, to synthesize (compounds) by light.
2. in botany, to transform (carbon dioxide and water into carbohydrates) by means of photosynthesis.

phō″tō·syn·thet′iç, a. of or by photosynthesis.

phō·tō·taç′tiç, a. of or pertaining to phototaxis.

phō·tō·tax′is, n. [photo-, and Gr. taxis, arrangement.] the movement of an organism in response to stimulus from light.
negative phototaxis; a turning from the light.
positive phototaxis; a turning toward the light.

phō′tō·tax·y, n. phototaxis.

phō·tō·tel′ē·gràph, v.t. and v.i. to send by phototelegraphy.

phō·tō·tel′ē·gràph, n. something sent by phototelegraphy.

phō″tō·tē·leg′rȧ·phy, n. 1. communication by means of light, as by flashing reflections of the sun's rays.
2. the sending of photograph facsimiles by telegraphy.

phō·tō·tel′ē·sçōpe, n. a telescope equipped with a camera and used for photographing the heavenly bodies.

phō″tō·thē·od′ō·līte, n. same as photogrammeter.

phō·tō·ther·ȧ·peū′tiç, a. of or by phototherapy.

phō·tō·ther·ȧ·peū′tiçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] phototherapy.

phō·tō·ther′ȧ·py, n. the treatment of disease, especially of certain skin diseases, by the use of light rays.

phō·tō·thēr′miç, a. [photo- and thermic.] of both light and heat.

phō·tō·ton′iç, a. [photo-, and Gr. tonos, tension.] of or pertaining to phototonus.

phō·tot′ō·nus, n. in biology, the state of being responsive to or irritated by exposure to light.

phō·tō·trop′iç, a. of or by phototropism.

phō·tō·trop′iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a phototropic manner.

phō·tot′rō·pişm, n. [photo- and tropism.] in biology, tropism toward or away from light.

1. a type or plate upon which a photograph is reproduced.
2. the process by which such a plate is produced.
3. a print from such a block.

phō·tō·tȳp′iç, a. 1. of or like a phototype.
2. by phototype.

phō″tō·tȳ·pog′rȧ·phy, n. any mechanical printing process in which photographs are reproduced in relief for use with type.

phō′tō·tȳ·py, n. the art or act of producing or using phototypes.

phō″tō·vol·tā′iç, a. [photo- and voltaic.] photoelectric.

phō″tō·xȳ·log′rȧ·phy (-zī-), n. [photo-, Gr. xylon, wood, and graphein, to write.] the process of producing an impression on wood by photography and subsequent processes and then printing from the block.

phō·tō·ziñ′ço·gràph, n. [photo- and zincograph.] a plate or a print produced by photozincography.

phō″tō·ziñ·cō·graph′iç, a. of or pertaining to photozincography.

phō″tō·ziñ·çog′rȧ·phy, n. the use of a zinc plate in photoengraving.

phrag′mȧ, n.; pl. phrag′mȧ·tȧ, [Gr., a fence.] in botany and zoology, a false partition, or septum.

phrag′mō·çōne, n. [Gr. phragma, fence, and konos, cone.] the internal chambered cell of a fossil cephalopod.

phrag·mō·sī′phŏn, n. the siphon of a phragmocone.

phrāş′ăl, a. of or forming a phrase or phrases.

phrāşe, n. [Gr. phrasis, from phrazein, to speak.]
1. a manner or style of speech, expression; phraseology.
2. a short, colorful, or forceful expression.
3. a connected series of movements in a formal dance.
4. in grammar, a sequence of a few words conveying a single thought or forming a separate part of a sentence but not containing a subject and predicate; specifically, in linguistics, a group of two or more words that can function as a grammatical structure (e.g., of mine, giving parties, fresh milk.)
5. in music, a short, distinct part or passage, usually of two, four, or eight measures.
6. in fencing, a short period in which there is a continual thrusting and parrying.
7. in shorthand, a group of characters joined in writing and indicating two or more words.

phrāşe, v.t. and v.i.; phrased, pt., pp.; phrasing, ppr. 1. to express in words or in a phrase.
2. in music, to mark off or divide (notes) into phrases.

phrāşe′book, n. 1. a book explaining idiomatic phrases.
2. in shorthand, a book showing the outlines of various phrases.

phrāşe′less, a. not to be expressed or described.

phrā′şē·ō·gram, n. [Gr. phrasis, phraseōs, a phrase, and gramma, a letter.] a mark or symbol representing a phrase, as in shorthand.

phrā′şē·ō·gràph, n. a phrase for which there is a phraseogram.

phrā″şē·ō·loġ′iç, a. same as phraseological.

phrā″şē·ō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. 1. expressing or expressed in phrases.
2. of phraseology.

phrā·şē·ol′ō·ġist, n. 1. a person who deals with, or pays much attention to, phraseology.
2. a person skilled at coining phrases, catchwords, etc.

phrā·şē·ol′ō·ġy, n.; pl. phrā·şē·ol′ō·ġieş, [Gr. phrasis, phrase, and legein, to speak.]
1. manner of expression; choice or pattern of words; diction.
2. a collection of phrases in a language; a phrasebook. [Obs.]

phrāş′ing, n. 1. the act or manner of making phrases; phraseology.
2. in music, the art or act of grouping notes into phrases.
3. in shorthand, the act or art of combining words so as to form a phrase or phrases.

phrā′try, n.; pl. phrā′trieş, [Gr. phratria, a tribe.]
1. a subdivision of an ancient Greek phyle, or tribe.
2. any of the similar units, as clans, of a primitive tribe.

phrē·at′iç, a. [Gr. phrear (-atos), a well.] in geology, underground; specifically, relating to the underground sources of water, as in a well.

phren-, phreno-.

phyl·lō·brañ'çhi·ăl, a. pertaining to phyllobranchiae.

phyl·lō·brañ'çhi·āte, a. provided with phyllobranchiae, as a crustacean.

phyl'lō·çlāde, phyl'lō·çlad, n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and klados, a branch.] a flattened branch or stem functioning as a leaf.

phyl·lō·çlā'di·um, n.; pl. phyl·lō·çlā'di·ȧ, a phylloclade.

phyl·lō·cȳ'ȧ·nin, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. kyanos, blue, and -ine.] a blue coloring matter existing in chlorophyll.

phyl'lō·cyst, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. kystis, bladder.] a cavity within the hydrophyllia of certain oceanic hydrozoans.

phyl·lō·cyst'iç, a. pertaining to a phyllocyst.

phyl'lōde, n. [Gr. phyllōdēs, leaflike, from phyllon, a leaf, and eidos, form.] a flat leaf stalk that functions as a leaf.

a, PHYLLODE (Acacia heterophylla) phyl·lō·din'ē·ous, a. pertaining to or like a phyllode.

phyl·lō·din·i·ā'tion, n. the condition of being phyllodineous.

phyl·lō'di·um, n.; pl. phyl·lō'di·ȧ, a phyllode.

phyl'lō·dy, n. [Gr. phyllōdēs, leaflike, from phyllon and eidos, form.] in botany, the transformation of floral organs into foliage leaves.

phyl·loġ'e·nous, a. [phyllo- and -genous.] growing upon a leaf.

phyl'loid, a. [phyll- and -oid.] like a leaf.

phyl'lō·man·cy, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. manteia, divination.] divination by means of leaves.

phyl·lō·mā'ni·ȧ, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. mania, madness.] an abnormal development of leafy tissue; the production of leaves in unusual numbers or in unusual places.

phyl'lōme, n. [Gr. phyllōma, leafage.] in botany, a leaf or analogous member.

phyl·lom'iç, a. of a phyllome.

phyl"lō·mor'phō·sis, n. [phyllo- and morphosis.] the study of the succession and variation of leaves during different seasons.

phyl'lō·mor·phy, n. same as phyllody.

phyl·loph'ȧ·ġăn, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] any individual of the Phyllophaga, a genus of hymenopterous insects containing the sawflies; any of the Phyllophaga, a division of lamellicorn beetles, feeding on leaves, etc., as, the chafers.

phyl·loph'ȧ·ġous, a. [phyllo-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] leaf-eating; feeding on leaves.

phyl·loph'ō·rous, a. [phyllo-, and Gr. pherein, to bear.] leaf-bearing; producing leaves.

phyl'lō·pod, n. a crustacean belonging to the order Phyllopoda.

phyl'lō·pod, a. pertaining to the Phyllopoda.

Phyl·lop'ō·dȧ, n.pl. [phyllo-, and Gr. pous, podos, foot.] an order of crustaceans of the division Branchiopoda, with leaflike, swimming feet.

phyl·lop'ŏ·dăn, a. and n. phyllopod.

phyl·lop'ō·dous, a. phyllopod.

phyl'lō·rhīne (-rīn), a. [phyllo-, and Gr. rhis, rhinos, nose.] of or pertaining to a subfamily of bats, Phyllorhininæ, having a leaflike membrane around the nostrils and but two phalanges to a toe.

phyl·lō·sō′mȧ, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. sōma, body.] the larval stage of certain crustaceans, as the spiny lobsters.

phyl·lō·stom′ȧ·tous, a. pertaining to the Phyllostomatidæ, a family of leaf-nosed bats of tropical America.

phyl′lō·stōme, n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and stoma, a mouth.] a leaf-nosed bat, a member of the family Phyllostomatidæ.

phyl·los′tō·mīne (or -min), a. relating to the Phyllostomatinæ, a subfamily of leaf-nosed bats; phyllostomatous.

phyl·lō·taç′tiç, a. pertaining to phyllotaxis.

phyl′lō·tax·y, phyl·lō·tax′is, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. taxis, arrangement.]
1. the arrangement of the leaves on the stem of a plant. The three common positions are alternate, opposite, and verticillate.
2. the science of the distribution and arrangement of leaves.

phyl′lō·tax·y, n. phyllotaxis.

-phyl′lous, a combining form meaning having (a specified form or kind of) leaves, leaflets, etc., as in hetero*phyllous*.

phyl·lō·xan′thin (-zan′), n. [phyllo-, and Gr. xanthos, yellow, and -in.] same as xanthophyll.

Phyl·lox·ē′rȧ, n. [phyllo-, and Gr. xēros, dry.]
1. a genus of aphids, or plant lice. Phylloxera vastatrix is very destructive to grapevines.
2. [p–] a member of the genus Phylloxera.

phȳ·lō·ġen′e·sis, n. phylogeny.

phȳ″lō·ġē·net′iç, a. of or pertaining to phylogeny.

phȳ·lō·ġen′iç, a. of phylogeny.

phȳ·loġ′e·ny, n.; pl. phȳ·loġ′e·niēs, [Gr. phylē, tribe, and E. genesis.] the racial history or evolutionary development of any plant or animal species.

phȳ′lon, n.; pl. phȳ′lȧ, [Gr. phylon, race, tribe.] in biology, a phylum.

phȳ′lum, n.; pl. phȳ′lȧ, [Mod. L., from Gr. phyllon, tribe.]
1. any of the broad, basic divisions of the plant or animal kingdom.
2. any of the broad, basic divisions of the linguistic families.

phys·i·oġ′ō·ny, n. [Gr. physis, nature, and gonē, generation.] the production or generation of nature.

phys″i·oġ′rȧ·phēr, n. a specialist in physiography.

phys″i·ō·ġraph′iç, a. pertaining to physiography.

phys″i·ō·ġraph′iç·ăl, a. same as physiographic.

phys·i·oġ′rȧ·phy, n. [Gr. physis, nature, and graphein, to describe.]
1. a description of the features and phenomena of nature.
2. physical geography.

phys·i·ol′ȧ·try, n. [Gr. physis, nature, and latreia, worship.] the cult of the powers of nature; nature worship.

phys·i·ol′ō·ġēr, n. a physiologist. [Rare.]

phys″i·ō·loġ′iç, a. same as physiological.

phys″i·ō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. 1. of physiology.
2. characteristic of or promoting normal, or healthy, functioning.

phys″i·ō·loġ′iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. according to the principles of physiology.
2. so as to be physiological.

phys·i·ol′ō·ġist, n. a specialist in physiology.

phys·i·ol′ō·ġize, v.i.; physiologized, pt., pp.; physiologizing, ppr. to engage in physiological speculation or investigation.

phys·i·ol'ō·ġy, n. [Fr. physiologie; Gr. physiologia; physis, nature, and logos, discourse.]
1. the branch of biology dealing with the functions and vital processes of living organisms or their parts and organs.
2. a book or treatise on this subject.
3. the functions and vital processes, collectively (of an organism).
Distinguished from anatomy, morphology.

phys·i·os'ō·phy, n. a doctrine concerning the secrets of nature.

phys"i·ō·ther"à·peū'tiç, a. relating to physiotherapy.

phys"i·ō·ther"à·peū'tiçs, n. physiotherapy.

phys"i·ō·ther'à·pist, n. one skilled in physiotherapy.

phys"i·ō·ther'à·py, n. the treatment of disease, injury, etc. by mechanical and physical means, such as massage, electricity, exercise, heat, etc.; physical therapy.

phy·sique' (-zēk'), n. [Fr.] the structure, form, constitution, strength, or appearance of the body.

phys'nō·my, n. physiognomy. [Obs.]

phys·ō·clis'tiç, a. same as physoclistous.

phys·ō·clis'tous, a. [Gr. physa, bellows, and kleistos, that can be closed, from kleiein, to close.] pertaining to the Physoclisti, a group of fishes having the air bladder without a duct or closed.

phys'ō·grāde, n. [Gr. physa, bellows, and L. gradi, to go.] one of a group of siphonophores which swim by means of air bladders; a jellyfish having a vesicular organ full of air, which buoys it up and enables it to float on the ocean.

Phȳ·soph'ō·rae, n.pl. [Gr. physa, bellows, and pherein, to bear.] an order of siphonophores having a pneumatophore.

phȳ·soph'ō·răn, a. same as physophorous.

phȳ·soph'ō·rous, a. pertaining to the Physophoræ.

phȳ'sō·pod, n. [Gr. physa, bellows, and pous, podos, foot.] in zoology, a member of the Physopoda.

Phȳ·sop'ō·dà, n.pl. the Thysanoptera. [Obs.]

phȳ·sō·stig'mīne, phȳ·sō·stig'min, n. [Gr. physa, bellows, and stigma, mark, and -ine.] a colorless or pinkish crystalline alkaloid, $C_{15}H_{21}O_2N_3$, extracted from the Calabar bean, used in medicine for stimulating intestinal muscles and for contracting the pupils of the eyes.

Phȳ·sos'tō·mī, n.pl. [Gr. physa, bellows, and stoma, a mouth.] an order of malacopterous fishes with the ventral fins abdominal or absent, and the air bladder when present provided with a duct.

phȳ·sos'tō·mous, a. in zoology, (a) of or pertaining to the Physostomi; (b) having an air bladder supplied with a duct.

phȳ·tal'bū·mōse, n. [Gr. phyton, plant; and albumen, and -ose.] an albumose of vegetable origin.

-phȳte, [from Gr. phyton, plant.] a combining form meaning a plant growing in a (specified) way or place, as in microphyte.

Phȳ·tel'e·phas, n. [Gr. phyton, plant, and elephas, ivory.] a genus of plants inhabiting tropical America, the type of the family Phytelephantinæ. Phytelephas macrocarpa, the ivory plant of South America, resembles the palms in its fronds, which equal those of the cocoanut in dimensions, and also in the structure and weight of its fruit.

phȳ'ti·form, a. [Gr. phyton, plant, and -form.] having the form of a plant.

phȳ'tin, n. [phyt- and -in.] a calcium-magnesium salt derived from the seeds of hemp, sunflowers, peas, beans, etc.

phȳ·tiv'ō·rous, a. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and L. vorare, to eat.] feeding on plants or herbage; herbivorous. [Rare.]

phȳ'tō-, phȳt-, [from Gr. phyton, a plant.] a combining form meaning a plant, flora, vegetation, as in phytogenesis, phytogeography, etc.

phȳ·tō·bī·ol'ō·ġy, n. that branch of biology which treats of plants.

phȳ·tō·braṅ'ċhi·āte, a. provided with leaflike gills, as certain of the Isopoda.

phȳ·tō·ċhem'iç·ăl, a. pertaining to phytochemistry.

phȳ·tō·ċhem'is·try, n. [phyto- and chemistry.] the chemistry of plants.

phȳ'tō·ċhlōre, n. in botany, chlorophyll. [Obs.]

phȳ·tō·ġen'e·sis, n. the history of the development of plants.

phȳ"tō·ġē·net'iç, a. of or according to phytogenesis.

phȳ"tō·ġē·net'iç·ăl, a. phytogenetic.

phȳ·tō·ġen'iç, a. 1. of, or largely of, plant origin, as peat or coal.
2. phytogenetic.

phȳ·toġ'e·nous, a. phytogenic.

phȳ·toġ'e·ny, n. phytogenesis.

phȳ"tō·ġē·og'rà·phēr, n. an expert in phytogeography.

phȳ·tō·ġē·ō·graph'iç, a. pertaining to phytogeography.

phȳ·tō·ġē·ō·graph'iç·ăl, a. phytogeographic.

phȳ"tō·ġē·og'rà·phy, n. the geographical distribution of plants.

phȳ·tog'rà·phēr, n. one skilled in phytography.

phȳ·tō·graph'iç, a. pertaining to phytography or the description of plants.

plan, v.i. to make plans.
plan-, same as plano- (wandering).
plā'năr, a. of or pertaining to a plane; lying in a plane.
Plà·nā'ri·à, n. a genus of turbellarian worms of oblong form, moving by means of cilia, typical of the family Planariidæ.
plà·năr'i·ăn, n. [L. planus, plane, flat.] an annelid of the suborder Planarida.
plà·năr'i·ăn, a. pertaining to the Planarida.
Plà·nar'i·dà, n.pl. a suborder of Turbellaria; the planarians.
plà·nar'i·dăn, n. a planarian.
plà·nar'i·dăn, a. planarian.
plà·nar'i·form, a. [LL. planarius, flat, and L. forma, form.] having a form resembling a planarian.
plà·năr'i·oid, a. [LL. planarius, flat, and -oid.] planariform.
plā'nāte, a. [LL. planatus; L. planus, flat.] having a flat surface; flat or nearly flattened.
plà·nā'tion, n. the process by which a river erodes rocks to a level surface and covers them with an alluvial deposit.
planch'et, n. [Fr. planchette.] a flat piece of metal ready to be stamped as a coin.
plan·chette', n. [Fr.] 1. a three-cornered board, often having as one of its supports a pencil, that is supposed to spell out a message as it moves with the fingers resting lightly on it.
2. a circumferentor.
planch'ing, n. the laying of floors in a building; also, a floor of boards or planks. [Dial.]
Plănck's cọn'stănt, [named after Max Planck, Ger. physicist.] in physics, a universal constant (h) which gives the ratio of a quantum of radiant energy (E) to the frequency (v) of its source: it is expressed by the equation $E = hv$ and its approximate numerical value is 6.625×10^{-27} erg second.
plāne, n. [ME. playn; OFr. plasne; L. platanus; Gr. platanos, from platys, broad: so called from its broad leaves.] any of a number of related trees with large leaves and streaky bark that sheds, as the sycamore.
plāne, a. [L. planus.] 1. without elevations or depressions; even; level; flat; as, a plane surface.
2. in mathematics, (a) lying on a surface that is a plane; (b) of such surfaces.
plane angle; an angle formed by two straight lines lying in the same plane.
plane chart; see under chart.
plane curve; a curve lying in a single plane.
plane figure; a portion of a plane limited by lines either straight or curved. When the bounding lines are straight the figure is rectilinear. When they are curved the figure is curvilinear.
plane geometry; that branch of geometry dealing with plane figures.
plane problem; a problem which can be solved by geometry.
plane scale; in surveying, a scale marked with graduated chords, sines, tangents, secants, geographical miles, etc.
plane surveying; ordinary field and topographical surveying, where only very limited portions of the earth's surface are considered, and its curvature is disregarded.
plane trigonometry; see trigonometry.
plāne, n. 1. a surface that wholly contains every straight line joining any two points lying in it.
2. a flat, level, or even surface.
3. a level of development, achievement, existence, etc.; as, a low plane of culture.
4. an airplane.
5. any airfoil; especially, a wing of an airplane.
Aeby's plane; a plane through the nasion and basion perpendicular to the median plane of the cranium.
Baer's plane; a plane through the upper border of the zygomatic arches.
Blumenbach's plane; a plane parallel with the base of a skull from which the lower jaw has been removed.
Morton's plane; a plane through the projecting points of the parietal and occipital protuberances.
objective plane; see under objective. perspective plane; in perspective drawing, the theoretical surface upon which objects are delineated, supposed to stand vertically between the eye of the spectator and the object.

JACK PLANE

plane of polarization; see under polarization. plane of projection; see perspective plane.
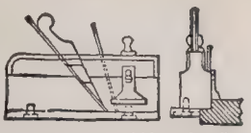
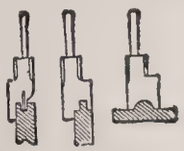
plane of refraction or reflection: in optics, the plane in which are contained the ray of refraction or reflection and the incident ray.



SMOOTHING PLANE



COMPASS PLANE

plāne, n. [Fr.; LL. plana, from planare, to plane, make level, from L. planus, level, flat.]
1. a kind of trowel used for smoothing the surface of sand, clay, etc.

RABBET PLANE

2. a carpenter's tool for leveling, smoothing, or removing wood, consisting of a smooth-soled stock with an aperture through which a piece of edged steel or a chisel passes obliquely. There are various kinds of planes: the jack plane, used for coarse work; the jointer plane, longer than the jack plane, used for obtaining very straight edges; the smoothing plane and block plane, chiefly used for final finished work; the compass plane, similar to the smoothing plane, has a convex undersurface, for forming a concave cylindrical surface; the rabbet plane and the fillister plane, chiefly used for making grooves and sharp corners; the plow plane, for sinking a channel or groove in a surface not close to the edge of it.

FILLISTER PLANE (side and end)

PLOW PLANES

plāne, v.t.; planed, pt., pp.; planing, ppr. 1. to make smooth or level with or as with a plane.
2. to remove with or as with a plane (with off or away).

plāne, v.i. 1. to work with a plane.
2. to do the work of a plane.

plāne, v.i. [Fr. planer, from plan, a plane: from the position of a bird's wings while soaring.]
1. to soar or glide.
2. to rise partly out of the water while in motion at a high speed, as a hydroplane does.

plāne īʹron (-ūrn), the iron blade of a carpenter's plane that cuts the wood.

plāneʹ-parʺăl·lel, a. in optics, having the opposite surface parallel, as a sheet of glass.

plānʹēr, n. 1. a person or thing that planes.
2. a machine that smooths or finishes the surface of wood or metal by planing.
3. in printing, a block of wood used to level type or in taking proofs.

plāʹnēr tree, a tree, Planera aquatica, of the southern United States, having small, egg-shaped leaves and a nutlike fruit: it resembles the elm.

plāne sāilʹing, the act of determining a ship's position, on the supposition that it is moving on a plane instead of a spherical surface.

planʹet, n. [LL. planeta; Gr. planētēs, a wanderer, from planan, to wander.]
1. originally, any of the heavenly bodies with apparent motion (as distinguished from the fixed stars), including the sun, moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn.
2. now, any heavenly body that shines by reflected sunlight and revolves about the sun: the major planets, in their order from the sun, are Mercury, Venus, Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto; the minor planets are the asteroids, or planetoids, which move in orbits between Mars and Jupiter.
3. in astrology, any heavenly body supposed to influence a person's life.

plȧ·nēʹtȧ, n.; pl. plȧ·nēʹtae, [LL.]
1. a garment worn by Roman officials and nobles in the fifth and sixth centuries.
2. in the Roman Catholic Church, a chasuble.

plāne tāʹble, an instrument used in land surveying, for plotting maps in the field: it consists of a drawing board mounted on a tripod with an alidade pivoted over its center.

plan·ē·tārʹi·um, n.; pl. plan·ē·tārʹi·umṣ, plan·ē·tārʹi·ȧ, [Mod.L., from LL. planeta, a planet.]
1. a model of the solar system in which, by means of clockwork, the relative motion of the planets around the sun can be demonstrated; an orrery.
2. an arrangement for projecting the images of the sun, moon, planets, and stars on the inside of a large hemispherical dome by means of a large, complex optical instrument which is revolved to show the principal celestial motions.
3. the room or building in which this is contained.

planʹet·ăr·y, a. [LL. planetarius.]
1. of a planet or the planets.
2. terrestrial; worldly.
3. wandering; erratic.
4. in astrology, under the influence of a planet.
5. in machinery, designating or of an epicyclic train of gears in an automobile transmission.
6. in physics, moving in an orbit, like a planet.
planetary days; the days of the week as allotted to the planets known to the ancient world.
planetary nebula; one of the six classes of nebulae, being circular or slightly oval in form and often colored.

plan·ē·tesʹi·măl, a. [from planet and infinitesimal.] pertaining to minute spatial bodies that move in planetary orbits.

plan·ē·tesʹi·măl, n. a planetesimal body.

plan·ē·tesʹi·măl hȳ·pothʹē·sis, a hypothesis that the planets were formed by the uniting of planetesimals created by the tidal eruptions caused on the sun by the passage of a star close to it.

planʹet gēarʹing, gearing making use of planet wheels.

plȧ·netʹiç, plȧ·netʹiç·ăl, a. pertaining to planets. [Obs.]

planʹet·oid, n. [planet and -oid.] any of a group of minor planets the orbits of which lie between those of Mars and Jupiter; an asteroid.

plan·et·oidʹăl, a. pertaining to a planetoid.

plāne tree, same as plane (tree).

planʹet-strickʹen, planʹet-struck, a. 1. stricken by the supposed influence of the planets; blasted.
2. panic-stricken.

planʹet·ūle, n. a little planet. [Rare.]

planʹet wheel (hwēl), a gear wheel that meshes with and revolves around another wheel in an epicyclic train.

planʹġen·cy, n. the quality or state of being plangent.

planʹġent, a. [L. plangens (-entis), ppr. of plangere, to beat.] beating with a loud or deep sound, as breaking waves, etc.

planʹi-, [from L. planus, flat, level.] a combining form meaning level, plane, flat, as in planimeter.

plan·i·fōʹli·ous, a. [plani-, and L. folium, leaf.] flat-leaved.

planʹi·fȯrm, a. [plani-, and L. forma, form.] having the surfaces almost flat, as in a gliding joint.

plȧ·nimʹe·tēr, n. [plani-, and Gr. metron, measure.] an instrument for measuring the area of a regular or irregular plane figure by tracing the perimeter of the figure.

plan·i·metʹriç, plan·i·metʹriç·ăl, a. of or by planimetry or a planimeter.

plȧ·nimʹe·try, n. [L. planus, and Gr. metrein, to measure.] the measurement of plane surfaces; plane geometry.

plānʹing, a. leveling; smoothing.

plānʹing mȧ·çhīneʹ, 1. a machine for planing wood, acting by means of a rapidly revolving cutter which chips off the surface.
2. a planer for smoothing metals.

plā·niʹpen·nāte, a. of or pertaining to the Planipennia.

Plā·niʹpen·nēṣ, n.pl. [plani-, and L. penna, feather, wing.] a suborder of neuropterous insects, including those which have flat wings, of which the inferior pair almost equal the superior ones, and are simply folded underneath at their anterior margins. The ant lions and lacewings are examples of this group.

Plā·niʹpen·niʹȧ, n.pl. same as Planipennes.

plan·i·petʹăl·ous, a. [plani-, and Gr. petalon, petal.] flat-petaled.

plan·iʹros·trăl, a. [plani-, and L. rostrum, beak.] having a broad flat beak, as certain birds.

planʹish, v.t.; planished, pt., pp.; planishing, ppr. [OFr. planir, to flatten, from L. planus.] to render (a metallic surface) level and smooth, by pounding or rolling; as, to planish silver teaspoons or tin plate.

planʹish·ēr, n. one who or that which planishes.

planʹish·ing-rōllʺērṣ, n.pl. rollers used in planishing; in particular, those employed in the final rolling of sheets of metal to be used as coin blanks.

planʹi·sphēre, n. [plani- and sphere.]
1. a map or chart that is the projection of all or part of a sphere on a plane.
2. a projection of the celestial sphere on a plane with the zenith of the North Pole or of the South Pole as the center.

plan·i·sphерʹiç, a. pertaining to a planisphere.

plā·niʹspīrăl, a. [plani-, and L. spira, coil.] having the whorls coiled in one plane, as a flat spiral: also written planospiral.

plañk, n. [OFr. planke; Fr. planche; LL. planca, a board.]
1. a long, broad, thick board.
2. timber cut into planks; planking.
3. something that supports or forms a foundation.
4. any of the articles or principles in a platform, as of a political party.
to walk the plank; to walk blindfold off a plank projecting over the water from the side of a ship, as the victims of pirates were forced to do.

plañk, v.t.; planked, pt., pp.; planking, ppr.
1. to cover, lay, or furnish with planks.
2. to broil and serve on a board, as fish or steak.
3. to lay or set down with force or emphasis. [Colloq.]
4. to pay (usually with down or out). [Colloq.]

plañkʹēr, n. in agriculture, a platform of heavy planks which is drawn over the soil in order to smooth and solidify it: also called a float.

plañkʹing, n. 1. the act of laying planks.
2. planks in quantity.
3. the planks of a structure.

plañkʹ-sheer, n. in shipbuilding, a timber extending around a vessel's hull at the line of junction with the deck.

plañk·tolʹō·ġy, n. [plankton, and Gr. logos, discourse.] that branch of biology which treats of plankton.

plañkʹton, n. [Gr. planktos, wandering, from plazesthai, to wander.] the microscopic animal and plant life found floating or drifting in the ocean or in bodies of fresh water, used as food by fish.

plañk·tonʹiç, a. pertaining to the plankton.

planʹless, a. having no plan.

planned ē·çonʹō·my (pland), organization of the economy of a country by which all phases of production and distribution are planned as an interdependent whole by some central authority.

planʹnēr, n. one who plans or forms a plan.

planʹō-, [from Gr. planos, wandering.] a combining form meaning wandering, as in planoblast: also, before a vowel, plan-.

plāʹnō-, [from L. planus, level, flat.] a combining form meaning plane, flat, or having one side plane and (the other as specified), as in plano-concave.

plāʹnō·blȧst, n. [plano-, and Gr. blastos, germ.] a tiny, free-swimming jellyfish; the medusa form of a hydroid.

plā·nō·blasʹtiç, a. of or pertaining to planoblasts; medusoid.

plāʺnō-çonʹçāve, a. plane on one side and concave on the other.

plāʺnō-çon·içʹăl, a. plane on one side and conical on the other.

plāʺnō-çonʹvex, a. plane on one side and convex on the other; as, a plano-convex lens.

PLANO-CONCAVE LENS

planʹō·gȧ·mēteʺ, n. in biology, same as zoogamete.

plāʺnō-hor·i·zonʹtăl, a. having a level horizontal surface or position.

plā·nomʹe·tēr, n. [plano-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] a plane hard surface used in machine making as a gauge for plane surfaces.

PLANO-CONVEX LENS

plā·nomʹe·try, n. the act of measuring, making, or gauging plane surfaces; the act or art of using a planometer.

plāʺnō-ōr·biçʹū·lăr, a. having one side flat and the other spherical.

Plā·nōrʹbis, n. [L. planus, flat, and orbis, a circle.] a genus of fresh-water shells of a discoidal form, resembling the ammonite, but not chambered.

plā·nō·spīʹrăl, a. planispiral.

plāʺnō-sūʹbū·lāte, a. smooth and shaped like an awl.

plant, n. [Fr. plante; L. planta, the sole.] the sole of the foot. [Obs.]

plant, n. [AS. plante; L. planta, a plant.]
1. a young tree, shrub, or herb, ready to put into other soil for growth to maturity; a slip, cutting, or set.
2. any living thing that cannot move voluntarily, has no sense organs, and generally makes its own food by photosynthesis; a vegetable organism, as distinguished from an animal organism; any tree, shrub, herb, etc.
3. a soft-stemmed organism of this kind, as distinguished from a tree or shrub.
4. the tools, machinery, fixtures, buildings, grounds, etc. of a factory or business.

5. the equipment, buildings, etc. used by any institution, as a hospital, school, etc.
6. the apparatus or equipment for a certain mechanical operation or process; as, the power plant of a ship.
7. a swindling scheme; a trick; trap. [Slang.]
8. a person placed or thing planned to trick, mislead, or trap. [Slang.]

plant, v.t.; planted, pt., pp.; planting, ppr. 1. to put into the ground to grow.
2. to set firmly; to fix in position.
3. to fix in the mind; to implant, as an idea.
4. to establish in a specified place, as a religion.
5. to settle; to found, as a colony.
6. to furnish; to stock, as a piece of land with plants or a body of water with fish.
7. to put a stock of (oysters, young fish, etc.) in a body of water.
8. to deliver (a punch, blow, etc.) on the spot aimed at. [Slang.]
9. to place (a person or thing) in such a way as to trick, mislead, or trap. [Slang.]
10. to hide (stolen articles, etc.). [Slang.]

4. a person engaged in the fishing trade; specifically, in Newfoundland, one who operates a fishery plant.

plant'ēr·ship, n. the business of a planter or the management of a plantation.

Plant'ēr's Punch, [prob. so called because served by planters (plantation owners).] an alcoholic drink made by shaking Jamaica rum, lemon or lime juice, and sugar together with fine ice, served unstrained.

Plan·ti·grā'dȧ, n.pl. a subdivision of carnivorous animals, including those which walk on the whole sole of the foot, as the bears, badgers, etc.

plan'ti·grāde, a. 1. walking on the whole sole of the foot, as bears, man, etc.
2. of or pertaining to the Plantigrada.

plan'ti·grāde, n. [L. planta, the sole of the foot, and gradi, to walk.] a plantigrade animal.

plant'ing, n. 1. the act or operation of setting in the ground for propagation, as seeds, trees, shrubs, etc.
2. a plantation. [Brit. Dial.]
3. in architecture, the act of placing the first row of stone in a foundation. [Brit.]

plan·tiv'ō·rous, a. [L. planta, plant, and vorare, to eat.] feeding on plants, as certain caterpillars.

plant'let, n. a little plant.

plant louse, any of a number of related small, usually green, sucking insects harmful to plants; an aphid.

plan·toc'rȧ·cy, n. [L. planta, plant, and Gr. -kratia, from kratein, to rule.] government by planters; the body of planters collectively. [Rare.]

plan'tū·lȧ, n.; pl. plan'tū·lae, [LL., dim. of L. planta, sole of the foot.] a membranous lobe between the claws of many insects.

plan'tū·lăr, a. pertaining to a plantula.

plant'ūle, n. the embryo of a plant.

plan'ū·lȧ, n.; pl. plan'ū·lae, [LL., dim. of L. planus, flat.]
1. a stage in the development of the embryo, intermediate between the morula and gastrula.
2. the young, free-swimming larva of a coelenterate.

plan'ū·lăn, n. a planula.

plan'ū·lăr, a. pertaining to or resembling a planula.

plan'ū·lāte, a. planular.

plan'ū·li·form", a. [from planula and -form.] of the form of a planula.

plan'ū·loid, a. [from planula and -oid.] resembling a panula.

plȧ·nū'rī·ȧ, plan'ū·ry, n. [Gr. planos, straying, and ouron, urine.] the voiding of urine from an abnormal place.

plañx'ty, n. an Irish or Welsh melody, composed for the harp.

plash'y, a.; comp. plashier; superl. plashiest; full of puddles; marshy; wet.

-plā'si·ȧ (-zhi-ȧ), [Mod. L., from Gr. plasis, a molding, from plassein, to mold.] a combining form signifying change, development, as in cata*plasia*: also -plasis, -plasy.

plaşm, n. [Gr. plasma, from plassein, to form.]
1. a mold or matrix in which anything is cast or formed to a particular shape. [Obs.]
2. same as plasma (senses 1, 2, and 3).

-plaşm, [from Gr. plasma.] a terminal combining form meaning: (a) the fluid substances of an animal or vegetable cell; (b) protoplasm, as in ecto*plasm.*

plaş'mȧ, n. [LL., something shaped or molded; Gr. plasma, from plassein, to form, mold.]
1. a green somewhat translucent variety of quartz.
2. the fluid part of blood, lymph, milk, or intramuscular liquid; especially, the fluid part of blood, as distinguished from the corpuscles.
3. protoplasm.
4. in pharmacy, a glycerite of starch used in preparing ointments.
5. a high-temperature, ionized gas composed of electrons and positive ions in such relative numbers that the gaseous medium is essentially electrically neutral: confinement of plasma for thermonuclear reactions is achieved by magnetic fields.
muscle plasma; a liquid extracted from muscular tissue. It is sometimes injected subcutaneously as a restorative and stimulant.
plasma cells; cells derived from lymphocytes and found in connective tissue: they appear most often in disease, and stain deeply; their nuclei contain a great amount of chromatin arranged in a circular manner.

plaş"mȧ·pher'ē·sis, n. [plasma, and Gr. aphairesis, a removal.] in physiology and medicine, the removal of a considerable amount of blood from a living body, the corpuscles being reinjected after their separation from plasma by centrifuging.

plaş·mat'iç, plaş·mat'iç·ăl, a. 1. having the power of giving form. [Rare.]
2. in biology, of or relating to plasma.

plaş·mā'tion, n. the act of giving form or shape; formation. [Rare.]

plaş'miç, a. plasmatic.

-plaş'miç, a combining form used in forming adjectives derived from nouns ending in -plasm, as in proto*plasmic.*

plaş'mō-, a combining form meaning plasma, as in *plasm*olysis: also plasm-.

plaş'mō·çhin, n. [plasmo- and china bark.] an antimalarial drug, $C_{19}H_{29}N_3O$, prepared synthetically from quinoline: a trade-mark (Plasmochin): also plasmoquine, plasmoquin.

plaş'mō·cyte, n. a white blood corpuscle.

plaş·mō'di·ăl, a. in biology, of, pertaining to, or resembling plasmodium.

plaş·mō'di·ō·çārp, n. [plasmodium, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] in botany, an irregular body which generates the spores of some slime fungi.

Plaş·mō·di·oph'ō·rȧ, n. [plasmodium, and Gr. pherein, to bear.] in botany, a genus of myxomycetous parasites, as Plasmodiophora brassicæ, which causes clubroot in turnips, cabbage, and other cruciferous plants.

plaş·mō'di·um, n.; pl. plaş·mō'di·ȧ, [Mod. L., from Gr. plasma, a molded figure, and eidos, appearance.]
1. a mass of protoplasm with many nuclei, formed by the fusion of a number of one-celled organisms.
2. any of various unicellular parasites found in red blood corpuscles: one variety causes malaria.
plasmodium malariæ; the hematozoon of malaria; a parasite existing in various forms in red blood corpuscles in malaria.

plaş'mō·ġen, n. [Gr. plasma, molded form, and -genēs, producing, from gignesthai, to become.] in biology, the essential part of protoplasm. [Rare.]

plaş·mol'ō·ġy, n. [Gr. plasma, a molded figure, and -logy.] the study of the most minute particles or ultimate corpuscles of living matter.

plaş·mol'y·sis, n. [Gr. plasma, molded form, and lysis, loosening.] a shrinking of the protoplasm of a cell due to loss of water by osmosis.

plaş·mō·lyt'iç, a. tending toward, pertaining to, or characterized by plasmolysis.

plaş'mō·lyze, v.t. and v.i.; plasmolyzed, pt., pp.; plasmolyzing, ppr. to subject to or to undergo plasmolysis.

Plaş·mop'ȧ·rȧ, n. [Gr. plasma, a molded figure, and L. parere, to bring forth.] in botany, a genus of fungi which includes Plasmopara viticola, a mildew destructive to grapevines.

plaș'mō·quin, plaș'mō·quīne, n. plasmochin.

plaș'mō·sōme, n. [Gr. plasma, molded form, and sōma, body.] in biology, the true nucleolus of a cell.

plas'ōme, n. [Gr. plassein, to form.] in biology, a biophore.

-plast, [from Gr. plastos, formed, from plassein, to form.] a combining form meaning a unit of protoplasm, as in chromo*plast*.

plâs'tẽr, n. [Fr. plâtre; OFr. plastre, from L. emplastrum; Gr. emplastron, plaster, from emplassein, to daub over; en, on, in, and plassein, to form, to mold, to shape.]

1. a pasty mixture of lime, sand, and water, hard when dry, for coating walls, ceilings, and partitions.
2. plaster of Paris.
3. a pasty preparation spread on cloth and applied to the body, used medicinally as a curative or irritant.

adhesive plaster; see under adhesive.

fibrous plaster; plaster of Paris containing some fiber, as hair, to prevent breaking.

plaster of Paris; a heavy white powder, a hemihydrate of calcium sulfate, made by calcining gypsum: when made into a thin paste by the addition of water, it soon hardens and slightly expands: used in making casts, in finishing plastered walls, in statuary, etc.

porous plaster; in medicine, a plaster perforated to render it pliable and to keep it from wrinkling.

plâs'tẽr, v.t.; plastered, pt., pp.; plastering, ppr. 1. to cover, smear, overlay, etc. with or as with plaster.
2. to apply or affix like a plaster; as, we plastered posters on the walls.

plâs'tẽr·bōard, n. a thin board formed of layers of plaster and paper, used in building walls, partitions, etc.

plâs'tẽr ҫâst, 1. a copy or mold of a statue or other object, cast in plaster of Paris.
2. in surgery, a rigid cast to hold a fractured bone in place and prevent movement, made by wrapping the limb or part with a bandage of gauze soaked in wet plaster of Paris.

plâs'tẽred, a. intoxicated; drunk. [Slang.]

plâs'tẽr·ẽr, n. 1. one who applies plaster or whose business is plastering.
2. one who makes plaster casts.

plâs'tẽr·ing, n. 1. the act or process of applying plaster.
2. the plasterwork of a building; a covering of plaster.

plas'tẽr stōne, gypsum as found in its natural state.

plâs'tẽr·wŏrk, n. any architectural work done in plaster.

plâs'tẽr·y, a. of the nature of plaster; containing or resembling plaster.

plas'tiç, a. [Gr. plastikos, from plassein, to form.]

1. molding or shaping matter; formative.
2. that can be molded or shaped.
3. impressionable; easily influenced; flexible.
4. dealing with molding or modeling.
5. hypocritically false or synthetic; as, a plastic culture.
6. in biology, capable of undergoing metabolic changes.
7. in medicine, (a) of or helpful in the renewal of destroyed or injured tissue; (b) that can be so renewed.
8. in physics, capable of continuous and permanent change of shape in any direction without breaking apart.

plastic arts; any of the arts concerned with molding or modeling, as sculpture, ceramics, etc.

plastic bomb; a puttylike substance containing explosives, that will adhere to walls, etc. and is detonated by fuse or electricity, as in acts of terrorism.

plastic memory; the tendency of certain plastics to resume their original form when heated.

plastic operation; an operation in plastic surgery.

plastic surgery; surgery dealing with the repair or restoration of injured, deformed, or destroyed parts of the body, especially by transferring tissue, as skin or bone, from other parts or from another individual.

plastic wood; a synthetic product which dries and hardens to the consistency of wood when exposed to the air: used in repairing wooden articles or as a filler in cracks, etc.

plas'tiç, n. 1. any of various nonmetallic compounds, synthetically produced (usually from organic compounds by polymerization), which can be molded into various forms and hardened for commercial use.
2. any article made of plastic.

-plas'tiç, [from Gr. plastikos.] a combining form meaning: (a) forming, developing, as in cyto*plastic*; (b) of ——plasty or a ——plast, as in neuro*plastic*.

plas'tiç·ăl·ly, adv. in a plastic manner.

plas·tiç'i·ty, n. the quality or state of being plastic.

plas'ti·cīze, v.t. and v.i.; plasticized, pt., pp.; plasticizing, ppr. to make or become plastic.

plas'ti·cīz"ẽr, n. any of various substances added to a plastic to keep it soft and viscous.

plas'tid, plas'tide, n. [LL. plastidium, from Gr. plastos, molded, from plassein, to form.]
1. a unit of protoplasm; a cell.
2. a granule of specialized protoplasm occurring in the cytoplasm of some cells.

plas'ti·dūle, n. [plastid and dim. -ule.] a hypothetical protoplasmic molecule.

plas'tin, n. [Gr. plastos, molded, from plassein, to form.] one of the proteides of the cell nucleus.

plas·tïque' (-tēk'), n. [Fr.]
1. same as plastic bomb.
2. the technique or action of making very slow movements in dancing or pantomime, like a statue in motion.

plas'trăl, a. of or relating to a plastron.

plas'trŏn, n. [Fr.; It. piastrone, from piastra, a piaster.]
1. a metal breastplate worn under a coat of mail.
2. a leather breastplate worn over the chest of fencers.
3. a trimming like a dickey, worn on the front of a woman's dress.
4. a starched shirt front.
5. the under shell of a turtle or tortoise.

-plasty, [from Gr. plastos, verbal adj. from plassein, to form.] a terminal combining form meaning: (a) the act or means of forming, growth, development, as in genio*plasty*, dermato*plasty*; (b) plastic surgery in which a (specified) part of the body is involved, as in thoraco*plasty*; (c) plastic surgery in which tissue from a (specified) source is used, as in auto*plasty*; (d) plastic surgery for a (specified) purpose, as in kine*plasty*.

plat, v.t.; platted, pt., pp.; platting, ppr. [a form of plait.] to weave; to form by weaving or interweaving; to braid; to plait; as, to plat a girdle, to plat the hair.

plat, n. a braid; a plait. [Dial.]

plat, v.t.; platted, pt., pp.; platting, ppr. to make a drawing or plan of; to plot; as, to plat a piece of land or a landscape.

2. a map; a plan.

plat, a. flat; level. [Obs.]

plat-, platy-.

Plat·à·nā'cē·ae, n.pl. [L. platanus; Gr. platanos, the plane tree, from platys, broad, in allusion to its broad, flat leaves.] an order of exogenous plants characterized by their round heads of monoecious flowers, their one-celled ovaries, containing one ovule, and the embryo lying in fleshy albumen. The leaves are alternate, with sheathing stipules opposite to the leaves. This order consists of the single genus Platanus, including the trees commonly called buttonwood and sycamore.

plat'ăn, plat'ăne, n. the plane tree.

plat'à·nist, n. [L. platanista, a fish of the Ganges.] the susu.

Plat'à·nus, n. [L.] a genus of large trees of the plane tree family, containing six species.

plat'band, n. [Fr. platebande; plat, plate, flat, and bande, a band.]
1. a border of flowers in a garden, along a wall or the side of a parterre.
2. in architecture, (a) a plain flat ashlar or a molding on a capital from which an arch springs; an impost; (b) a flat fascia, band, or string having a projection less than its breadth; sometimes the lintel of a door or window; (c) the fillet between the flutes of the Ionic and Corinthian pillars.

plāte, n. [from OFr. plate, a metal plate; plat, flat, from Gr. platys, broad.]
1. a smooth, flat, relatively thin piece of any material, as metal.
2. sheet metal made by beating, rolling, or casting.
3. one of the thin pieces or sheets of metal used in armor.
4. armor made of these.
5. a thin flat piece of metal on which an engraving is, or is to be, cut.
6. an impression taken from the engraved metal.
7. loosely, a print of a woodcut, lithograph, etc., especially when used in a book.
8. a full-page book illustration of any kind, printed on paper of a stock different from that which carries the text.
9. dishes, utensils, and similar household articles of silver or gold.
10. metal dishes, utensils, etc. that are plated, or coated with gold or silver.
11. a shallow dish, usually circular, from which food is eaten.
12. a plateful.
13. the food in a dish; a course; as, a fruit plate.
14. food and service for an individual at a meal; as, dinner at three dollars a plate.
15. a dishlike object passed in churches, etc. for donations of money.
16. a thin cut of beef from the forequarter, just below the short ribs.
17. in anatomy and zoology, a thin layer, plate, or scale, as of bone, horny tissue, etc.; lamina; scute.
18. in architecture, a horizontal wooden girder that supports the trusses or rafters of a roof.
19. in baseball, the home base (usually a small five-sided piece of rubber, etc., set into the ground), beside which the batter stands and which a player must touch after a circuit of the bases in order to score a run.
20. in dentistry, (a) that part of a set of false teeth which fits to the mouth and holds the teeth; (b) loosely, a set of false teeth.
21. in electricity, the anode, or positive element, of an electron tube, a flat plate or cylinder toward which the stream of electrons flows.
22. in philately, the impression surface from which a sheet of postage stamps is printed.
23. in photography, a sheet of glass, metal, etc. coated with a film sensitive to light, upon which the image is formed.
24. in printing, a cast to be printed from, made from a mold of set type by the electrotype or stereotype process.
25. in sports, (a) a prize, originally a gold or silver cup, given to the winner of a race or contest; (b) loosely, a contest, especially a horse race, in which the prize is a plate: also called plate race.

plate armor; plates of iron or steel, generally having a case-hardened surface: used for defense, as of a battleship.

plate block; in philately, a block of postage stamps with a serial number in the margin.

plate girder; a girder formed of a single plate of metal or of a series of plates joined together.

plate glass; polished, clear glass in thick sheets, used for shop windows, mirrors, etc.

plāte, v.t.; plated, pt., pp.; plating, ppr. 1. to cover or overlay with any metal or metals in a thin layer by any of various processes, as by electrolysis, welding, or hammering.
2. to add metal plates, sheets, or strips to; to sheathe or dress with plates.
3. in printing, to make a stereotype or electrotype plate of.
4. to beat into thin, flat pieces or laminae.
5. in papermaking, (a) to finish with a high gloss; (b) to size heavily with a tint.

pla·teau' (-tō'), n.; pl. pla·teaus' or plateaux' (-tōz'), [Fr.] an elevated tract of more or less level land; tableland: applied figuratively to a period in the evolution of something, as of an individual's learning, characterized by a relative absence of progress, as represented by a flat extent in a graph, etc.

plāte bōne, the shoulder blade; the scapula.

plāt'ed, a. 1. covered or protected with plates, as of armor.
2. knitted of two kinds of yarn, one forming the face and the other the back.
3. overlaid or coated with a metal, especially a precious one: sometimes used in hyphenated compounds, meaning coated with (a specified metal), as in silver-plated.

plāte'fụl, n.; pl. plāte'fụlș, as much as a plate will hold.

plāte'hōld·ẽr, n. in photography, the movable frame fitted with slides for containing a plate or plates for exposure in a camera.

plāte'lāy·ēr, n. in railroad construction, one who lays down and secures rails.

plāte'let, n. any of certain round or oval disks, one-third to one-half the size of a red blood cell but containing no hemoglobin, found in the blood of mammals and associated with the process of blood clotting; thrombocyte: in full, blood platelet: also called blood plate and blood plaque.

plāte mārk, 1. a legal mark or symbol made on certain gold and silver articles for the purpose of indicating their degree of purity, place of manufacture, or the like; thus, the local mark for London is a leopard's head.
2. the margin mark on an engraved plate.

plat'en, n. [Fr. plat, flat.]
1. in a printing press, a flat metal plate or rotating cylinder that presses the paper against the inked type.
2. in a typewriter, the roller against which the keys strike.
3. in a machine tool, the table holding the work.

plāte pā'pēr, a choice grade of paper having a treated surface specially adapted for engravings and fine plates.

plāte press, any press used in plate printing.

plāte print'ēr, a printer using engraved plates.

plāte print'ing, printing from engraved plates instead of from type, stone, or otherwise.

plāt'ēr, n. 1. one who or that which plates.
2. the part of a papermaking machine calendering the paper.
3. an inferior race horse: see plate, 24 b.

plat·ēr·esque' (-esk'), a. [Sp. plateresco, from plata, silver.] of, relating to, or designating architecture resembling silver tracing or work.

plāte trā'çēr·y, in architecture, a form of tracery, used at the beginning of early English architecture, in which the openings are formed or cut in the stonework, and have no projecting moldings.

PLATE TRACERY

plat'e·trōpe, n. [Gr. platys, flat, and trepein, to turn.] in anatomy, one of two organs or parts bilaterally symmetrical.

plāte wheel (hwēl), a wheel having the rim and hub connected by a metal plate instead of by spokes.

plat'form, n. [Fr. plateforme, lit., flat form.]
1. a raised horizontal surface of wood, stone, or metal; specifically, (a) a raised stage or flooring beside railroad tracks, streetcar tracks, etc.; (b) a vestibule at the end of a railway car, streetcar, etc.; (c) a raised flooring or stage for performers, speakers, etc.
2. the statement of principles and policies of a political party or other organization.
platform car; a railroad freight car without a roof or raised sides; a flatcar.
platform scale; a large scale having a flat platform for the object to be weighed.

plat'form, a. 1. designating a shoe sole, from $^1/_2$ to 3 inches thick, usually made of cork or wood.
2. designating a shoe with such a sole.

plat'form, v.t. 1. to place on or as on a stage or platform.
2. to make a plan of; to draw up; to outline. [Obs.]

plat·hel'minth, n. same as platyhelminth.

Plat·hel·min'thēs, n.pl. same as Platyhelminthes.

plat'in-, see platini-.

plat'i·nà (or plà-tē'), n. [Mod. L.; Sp., dim. from plata, silver, orig. thin plate of metal.] platinum. [Obs. or Rare.]
platina mohr; platinum black.
platina yellow; a yellow pigment derived from platinum.

plāt'ing, n. 1. the art, act, or process of a person or thing that plates.
2. an external layer of metal plates.
3. a thin coating of gold, silver, tin, etc.

plat'i·ni-, plat'in-, plat'i·nō-, combining forms denoting platinum, as in platiniferous.

plà·tin'iç, a. of, like, or containing platinum, especially with a valence of four.

plat"i·ni·chlō'riç, a. characterizing the acid derived from a solution of platinum in aqua regia.

plat·i·nif'ēr·ous, a. [platini- and -ferous.] having or yielding platinum.

plat"i·nī·rid'i·um, n. a native alloy of platinum and iridium, often containing other metals.

plat'i·nīze, v.t.; platinized, pt., pp.; platinizing, ppr. to plate with platinum; to combine with platinum.

plat"i·nō·chlō'riç, a. characterizing the divalent compounds of platinum with chlorine, as platinum dichloride, $PtCl_2$.

plat"i·nō·chlō'ride, n. any chloride of platinum with another element or radical.

plat"i·nō·cȳ'an'iç, a. designating or of an acid containing platinum and the cyanogen radical.

plat"i·nō·cȳ'à·nid, n. platinocyanide.

plat"i·nō·cȳ'à·nīde, n. any cyanide of platinum with another element or radical: used in photography, etc.

plat'i·nōde, n. [platin-, and Gr. hodos, way.] the cathode or negative pole of a galvanic cell.

plat'i·noid, a. resembling or characteristic of platinum.

plat'i·noid, n. 1. any of a group of metals with which platinum is invariably found associated. The platinoids include palladium, rhodium, iridium, osmium, and ruthenium.
2. an alloy of copper, nickel, zinc, and wolfram (tungsten), used in electrical resistance coils, etc.

plat'i·nō·tȳpe, n. 1. a process of photography producing a picture in platinum black by using a platinum salt in the sensitizing solution or developer.
2. the picture so obtained.

plat'i·nous, a. of, like, containing, or characteristic of platinum, especially with a valence of two; as, platinous oxide, PtO.

plat'i·num, n. [Sp. platina, from plata, silver.] a steel-gray, malleable, ductile metallic chemical element, highly resistant to corrosion and electricity: used as a chemical catalyst, for acid-proof containers, ignition fuses, jewelry, dental equipment, etc.: symbol, Pt; atomic weight, 195.23; atomic number, 78.
platinum metal; one of a group of metals which resemble platinum in their physical and chemical properties: they include platinum, osmium, iridium, palladium, rhodium, and ruthenium, and, sometimes, rhenium and technetium.
platinum sponge; metallic platinum in the form of a porous, dull-brown mass. It is used to occlude oxygen.

plat'i·num black, a black powder of finely divided metallic platinum, made by reduction of platinum salts and noted for its power to occlude gases, one volume absorbing 800 volumes of oxygen: it is used as a catalyst, as in organic synthesis.

plat'i·num blonde, a girl or woman who has very light pale-yellow hair.

plat'i·num lamp, an electric light having a filament of platinum.

plat'i·tūde, n. [Fr.] 1. commonplaceness; flatness; dullness; insipidity; as, there was much platitude in his remarks.
2. a trite, dull, or commonplace remark, especially one uttered as if it were a novelty or matter of importance.

> An artless platitude is really more artificial than a clever paradox.
> —W. C. Brownell.

plat·i·tū·di·nār'i·ăn, n. one who utters platitudes.

plat·i·tū'di·nīze, v.i.; platitudinized, pt., pp.; platitudinizing, ppr. to write or speak platitudes.

plat·i·tū'di·nous, a. of or like a platitude; characterized by, full of, or using platitudes; trite; commonplace.

plat·i·tū'di·nous·ness, n. the state of being platitudinous.

plat'ly, a. flatly; plainly. [Obs.]

plat'ness, n. flatness; plainness. [Obs.]

plat'oid, a. [Gr. platys, broad, and -oid.] flat.

plà·tom'ē·tēr, n. same as planimeter.

Plà·ton'iç, a. [L. Platonicus; Gr. Platōnikos, from Platōn, Plato.]
1. of, characteristic of, or pertaining to Plato, the philosopher (427–347 B. C.), or to his philosophy, his school, or his opinions.
2. idealistic, visionary, or impractical.
3. [also p–] not amorous or sensual but purely spiritual; as, Platonic love.
Platonic bodies; the five regular geometrical solids, namely, the tetrahedron, hexahedron (or cube), octahedron, dodecahedron, and icosahedron.
Platonic year; the great year; a period of time determined by the revolution of the equinoxes, or the space of time in which the stars and constellations return to their former places in respect to the equinoxes. This revolution, which is calculated by the precession of the equinoxes, is accomplished in about 26,000 of the earth's years.

Plà·ton'iç, n. 1. a Platonist.
2. [also p–] one who manifests Platonic affection; a Platonic lover.

Plà·ton'iç·ăl·ly, adv. after the manner of Platonists; in a Platonic manner.

Plā'tō·nişm, n. [Mod. L. platonismus.]
1. the philosophy of Plato and his followers: it is one kind of philosophical idealism.
2. a doctrine or saying typical of Platonic philosophy.
3. [also p–] the theory or practice of Platonic love.

Plā'tō·nist, a. of Plato, his ideas, or his school.

Plā'tō·nist, n. a follower of Plato, or a student of his philosophy.

2. capable of poisoning. [Obs.]

poi'sŏn ash, same as poison sumac.

poi'sŏn bāy, in botany, Illicium floridanum, a shrub of the magnolia family found in the southeastern part of the United States. Its leaves are supposed to be poisonous.

poi'sŏn bulb, either of two poisonous plants found in the tropics, Crinum asiaticum and Buphane toxicaria, belonging to the amaryllis family.

poi'sŏn cup, a cup formerly supposed to break when any poison was placed in it. [Archaic.]

poi'sŏn dog'wood, n. same as poison sumac.

poi'sŏn el'dēr, same as poison sumac.

poi'sŏn·ēr, n. one who or that which poisons.

poi'sŏn gas, any of several toxic chemical agents, in the form of gases, liquids, or solids, used in chemical warfare to kill or harass through inhalation or contact.

poi'sŏn hem'lock, in botany, Conium maculatum, a bad-smelling plant with finely cut leaves, small white flowers, and a very poisonous root.

poi'sŏn ī'vy, any of several American sumacs, as Rhus toxicodendron, having grayish berries and pointed leaves that grow in groups of three and can cause a skin rash if touched: also called poison oak.

POISON IVY

poi'sŏn nut, in botany, (a) the tree that yields nux vomica; (b) nux vomica.

poi'sŏn ōak, in botany, (a) the poison ivy; (b) Rhus diversiloba, a plant of western North America, resembling the poison ivy in its appearance and properties.

poi'sŏn·ous, a. that can injure or kill by or as by poison; containing, or having the effects of, a poison; venomous.
Syn.—venomous, corruptive, noxious, baneful.

poi'sŏn·ous·ly, adv. in a poisonous manner.

poi'sŏn·ous·ness, n. the quality of being poisonous.

poi'sŏn pēa, an Australian herb, Swainsona greyana, cultivated for its large pink flowers.

poi'sŏn plant, in botany, any one of several Australian plants of the bean family, particularly those of the genus Gastrolobium; also, Swainsona greyana, the poison pea, and Lotus australis.

poi'sŏn·sŏme, a. poisonous. [Obs.]

poi'sŏn sū'maç (or shū'), in botany, Rhus venenata, a shrub growing in the swampy regions of North America, where it attains a height of from 6 to 18 feet. It bears berries of a greenish-white color and leaves made up of 7 to 13 gray leaflets. The shrub is poisonous to touch and can cause a severe rash. Also called poison ash, poison dogwood, and poison elder.

POISON SUMAC

poi'sŏn vīne, in botany, (a) the poison ivy; (b) same as Virginia silk under silk.

poi'sŏn·wood, n. in botany, (a) Rhus metopium, a tree of southern Florida and the West Indies having poisonous leaves: known also as burnwood, coral sumac, mountain manchineel, etc.; (b) Sebastiania lucida, a tree of the spurge family, found in Florida and the West Indies, having poisonous properties.

poi'şūre (-zhūr), n. weight. [Obs.]

poi'trel, n. [Fr. poitrail, from L. pectorale, from pectus (pectoris), the breast.] armor for the breast of a horse. [Obs.]

poize, n. poise. [Archaic.]

pōke, n. [ME.; OFr. poke.]
1. a sack; bag.
2. a pocket.
3. a baglike growth on the neck, especially of sheep.
[Archaic or Dial. in all senses.]

pōke, n. [Am. Ind.] same as pokeweed.

pōke, v.t.; poked (pōkt), pt., pp.; poking, ppr. [D. and L.G. poken, to poke.]
1. to push; to prod; to jab, as with a stick, an elbow, etc.; as, poke him in the ribs.

pōke'ber"ry, n.; pl. pōke'ber"ries, [poke (pokeweed) and berry.]
1. the reddish-purple berry of the pokeweed, containing poisonous seeds.
2. the pokeweed.

pōke bon'net, a large bonnet having a wide, projecting brim.

pōke'lō"ken, n. [Am. Ind.] a swamp that extends some distance from a river or lake.

pōk'ēr, n. [from poke.] one who or that which pokes; specifically, a metal bar used in stirring a fire.

pōk'ēr, n. [corresponds to G. pochspiel, from pochen, to brag; variety of older game brag.] a card game in which the players bet on the value of their hands, the bets forming a pool to be taken by the winner: there are several varieties (see draw poker, stud poker).

pōk'ēr, n. [compare Dan. pokker, the devil, E. puck.] any frightful object, especially in the dark; a bugbear. [Rare.]

pōk'ēr fāce, an expressionless face, as of a poker player trying to conceal the nature of his hand. [Colloq.]

pōk'ēr·ish, a. 1. causing or exciting fear or alarm; as, a pokerish place. [Rare.]
2. stiff or rigid like a poker.

pōke'root, n. same as pokeweed.

pōk'ēr pĭc'tūre, a picture or drawing formed by applying a heated poker to the surface of wood.

pōke'weed, n. any of several North American weeds of the genus Phytolacca, with clusters of purplish-white flowers, reddish-purple berries, and smooth leaves and stems: the roots and berry seeds are poisonous.

pōk'ey, a. same as poky.

pōk'ing, a. drudging; servile. [Rare.]

pōk'ing stick, an instrument formerly used in stiffening the plaits of ruffs. [Obs.]

pōk'y, a.; comp. pokier; superl. pokiest, [from poke, to push.]
1. slow; dull; trifling.
2. small and uncomfortable; stuffy, as a place.
3. shabbily dressed; dowdy.

pō·laç'ça, n. [It. polacca; Fr. polacre, polaque.] a vessel with three masts, used in the Mediterranean. The masts are usually of one piece.

pō·laç'ça, see polonaise.

Pō'lack, n. [from Pol. Polak.]
1. a Pole. [Obs.]
2. a person of Polish descent: vulgar term of prejudice and contempt. [Slang.]

pō·lā'çre (-kēr), n. same as first polacca.

Pō'lănd Chī'nà, an American breed of large hogs, usually black and white.

Pō'lănd·ēr, n. a Pole; a native or inhabitant of Poland.

Pol·à·nis'i·à, n. [Gr. polys, many, and anisos, unequal; an- priv., and isos, equal.] a genus of plants of the order Capparidaceæ. The species are herbaceous plants, native to the warmer parts of Asia and America, with palmate leaves, and terminal clusters of showy flowers.

pō'lăr, a. [Fr. polaire; LL. polaris; L. polus, the pole.]
1. of, connected with, or near the North or South Pole.
2. of a pole or poles.
3. having polarity.
4. having two opposite natures, directions, etc.
5. central and guiding, like the earth's pole or the polestar.
polar angle; the angle at a pole formed by two meridians.
polar axis; that axis of an astronomical instrument, as an equatorial, set parallel to the axis of the earth.

polar bear; see bear, n.
polar body; a polar globule.
polar cell; a polar globule.
polar circles; the Arctic and Antarctic Circles.
polar co-ordinates; in mathematics, elements in a system of co-ordinates in which points are referred to a fixed point in a fixed straight line by means of a variable distance and a variable angle.
polar distance; the angular distance of any point on a sphere from one of its poles; specifically, the angular distance of a heavenly body from the elevated pole of the heavens.
polar equation; an equation that expresses the relation between the polar co-ordinates of every point of a line or surface.
polar front; in meteorology, the region, or belt, serving as the boundary or transition between the cold air of a polar region and the warmer air of the middle or tropical regions.
polar globule; in biology, one of the minute cells which separate from the ovum at maturation.
polar hare; a large arctic hare, Lepus timidus, the fur of which turns white on the approach of winter.
polar lights; (a) the aurora borealis: also called northern lights; (b) the aurora australis.
polar projection; the projection of part of the surface of a sphere on the plane of one of the polar circles, the point of projection being at the center of the sphere.
polar whale; the Greenland right whale.

pō'lăr, n. in analytical geometry, the reciprocal of a pole. The secant drawn through the points of contact of two intersecting tangents to a conic is called the polar of the point of intersection with respect to the conic, and the point is called the pole of the secant.

pō·lar'iç, a. polar.

pō'lăr·i·ly, a. with polarity; in a polary manner. [Obs.]

pō·lăr·im'e·tẽr, n. [polar, and Gr. metron, measure.] an instrument for measuring the degree of polarization in light, the amount of polarized light in a ray, or the amount of rotation of the plane of polarization.

pō·lăr·im'ē·try, n. the art or process of measuring or analyzing the polarization of light.

Pō·lā'ris, n. [LL.] the North Star; polestar; a star of the second magnitude, standing alone and forming the end of the tail of the constellation Ursa Minor: it marks very nearly the position of the north celestial pole.

pō·lar'i·sçōpe, n. [LL. polaris, and Gr. skopein, to view.] an optical instrument for exhibiting the polarization of light or for looking at things in polarized light.

pō·lar·i·sçop'iç, a. of, pertaining to, or obtained through the polariscope.

pō·lăr·is'çō·py, n. the art or process of using the polariscope.

pō·lăr·is'tiç, a. [polar and -istic.] pertaining to or exhibiting poles; arising from or dependent upon the possession of poles or polar characteristics; having a polar arrangement or disposition.

pō·lăr"i·strō·bom'ē·tẽr, n. [LL. polaris, polar, Gr. strobos, a whirling round, and metron, measure.] a form of polarimeter used in saccharimetry, the distinctive feature of which is the determination of certain parallel black lines appearing and disappearing according to the relative position of the polarizer and analyzer, used as a means of ascertaining the position of the rotated plane of polarization.

pō·lar'i·ty, n. 1. the property possessed by bodies having magnetic poles (one positive and attracting, one negative and repelling) of placing themselves so that their two extremities point to the two poles of the earth.
2. any tendency to turn, grow, think, feel, etc. in a certain way, as if because of magnetic attraction or repulsion.
3. the having or showing of two contrary qualities, powers, tendencies, etc.
4. in electricity, the condition of being positive or negative in relation to a magnetic pole.

pō'lăr·ī·zà·ble, a. that can be polarized.

pō"lăr·i·zā'tion, n. 1. the producing of polarity in something, or the acquiring of polarity.
2. in electricity, the production of a reverse electromotive force at the electrodes of a cell, by the depositing on them of gases produced during electrolysis.
3. in optics, (a) a condition of light or radiant heat, in which the transverse vibrations of the rays assume different forms in different planes; (b) the production of this condition.
elliptic polarization; polarization effected after a ray of light is reflected from a metal: also called circular polarization. plane of polarization; that plane in which a ray of polarized light incident at the polarizing angle is reflected to the highest degree. When the polarization is produced by reflection, the plane of reflection is the plane of polarization.

pō'lăr·īze, v.t.; polarized, pt., pp.; polarizing, ppr. to communicate polarity to; to produce polarization in.

pō'lăr·īze, v.i. to acquire polarity.

pō'lăr·ī·zẽr, n. that which polarizes; specifically, in optics, that part of a polariscope by which light is polarized: distinguished from analyzer.

pō'lăr·oid, n. a thin, transparent, filmlike material having marked properties of light polarization and a wide variety of uses in optics, scientific research, photography, etc.: a trade-mark (Polaroid).

pō·là·töuçhe' (-tösh'), n. [Fr., from Russ. poletuchii, flying.] a small flying squirrel, Sciuropterus volans, native to northern Europe and Asia.

pōl'dẽr, n. [D.] a tract of low land reclaimed from a lake, river, or sea by means of high embankments.

Pōle, n. a native or inhabitant of Poland.

pōle, n. [Fr. pole; L. polus, the pole of the heavens, the heavens, from Gr. polos, the axis of the sphere, the firmament, from pelein, to be in motion.]
1. either end of any axis, as of the earth, of the celestial sphere, or of a cell nucleus.
2. a region contiguous to either end of the earth's axis, as the North and South Poles.
3. either of two opposed or differentiated forces, parts, or principles, such as the ends of a magnet, the terminals of a battery, cell, motor, or dynamo, or two extremes of opinion, etc.
4. a point of reference, as for a system of points or lines in mathematics, or for a series of arguments in logic.
5. the polestar. [Obs.]
6. the firmament; the sky. [Obs.]
poles apart; widely separated; having opposite natures, opinions, etc.; at opposite extremes.
poles of a circle of a sphere; the points in which the diameter of the sphere perpendicular to the plane of the circle pierces the surface of the sphere.

pōle, n. [ME.; AS. pol, pal; L. palus, a stake.]
1. a long, slender piece of wood, usually rounded; a long rod of any material; as, a tent pole, telephone pole.
2. a tapering wooden shaft attached to the front axle of a wagon or carriage and to the collars of the horses.
3. a unit of measure, equal to one rod in linear measure or one square rod in square measure. under bare poles; (a) with all sails furled because of the force of a gale; (b) naked; stripped.

pōle, v.t.; poled, pt., pp.; poling, ppr. 1. to furnish with poles for support; as, to pole beans.
2. to bear or convey on poles; as, to pole hay into a barn.
3. to impel by poles, as a boat; to push forward by the use of poles.
4. to stir with a pole.

pōle, v.i. to propel a boat or raft with a pole.

pōle'ax, pōle'axe, n. [from pol (poll), head, and ax.]
1. a long-handled battle-ax.
2. any ax with a spike, hook, or hammer opposite the blade.

POLEAXES

pōle'ax, pōle'axe, v.t. to attack or fell with or as with a poleax.

pōle bēan, any variety of bean trained upon poles, as the Lima bean or the scarlet runner.

pōle'būrn, n. a disease affecting tobacco while it is being cured.

pōle'çat, n. [prob. from Fr. poule, a hen, and cat.]
1. a small, bad-smelling European animal, Putorius fœtidus, akin to the marten, but with a broader head, a blunter snout, and a much shorter tail.
2. any of various small animals having a fetid odor, as a skunk.

pōle'çat weed, the skunk cabbage.

pōle çrab, a double loop on a carriage pole for receiving the breast straps or chains.

pōle·dā'vy, n. a sort of coarse canvas. [Obs.]

pōle flоun'dẽr, a large flounder, Glyptocephalus cynoglossus, found in deep waters along the northern coasts of Europe and America, and greatly esteemed as food.

pōle hоrse, a horse harnessed to the pole of a wagon, tandem, etc., and nearest the wheels.

pōle lā'the, a simple form of lathe in which the work is supported and turned by a strap that passes two or three times round it, the lower end of the strap being connected to the treadle, and the upper end to a spring pole above.

pōle'less, a. having no pole; as, a poleless chariot.

pol'e·märçh, n. [Gr. polemarchos; polemos, war, and archē, rule.] in ancient Greece, originally, the military commander in chief; later, a civil magistrate who had under his care all strangers and visitors in Athens.

pōle mâst, a mast consisting of a single length.

pō·lem'iç, pō·lem'iç·ăl, a. [Gr. polemikos, from polemos, war.]
1. of or involving dispute; controversial; intended to maintain an opinion or system in opposition to others; as, a polemic treatise, discourse, or book; polemic divinity.
2. argumentative; engaged in supporting an opinion or system by contention; as, a polemic writer.

pō·lem'iç, n. 1. a person inclined to argument; a disputant; a controvertist; one who writes in support of an opinion or system in opposition to another.
2. an argument or controversial discussion.

pō·lem'iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a polemic manner; controversially.

pō·lem'i·cist, n. a skilled debater or writer of polemic discussions.

pō·lem'içs, n. pl. [construed as sing.] 1. the art or practice of disputation or controversy.
2. a dispute.
3. that branch of theological science dealing with the history of ecclesiastical controversy.

pol'e·mist, n. an argumentative person.

Pol·ē·mō·ni·ā'cē·ae, n.pl. a family of monopetalous exogens with a trifid stigma, three-celled fruit, and seeds attached to an axile placenta, the embryo lying in the midst of albumen. They consist for the most part of brightly-flowered herbaceous plants, native to temperate countries, and particularly abundant in the northwestern parts of America. The genera Collomia, Phlox, Leptosiphon Gilia, and Polemonium are cultivated for their showy blossoms.

pol·ē·mō·ni·ā'ceous, a. pertaining to the family Polemoniaceæ.

Pol·ē·mō'ni·um, n. [Gr. polemōnion, some kind of plant.] a genus of plants belonging to the family Polemoniaceæ. It includes the Greek valerian, or Jacob's-ladder, a blue-flowered British perennial, growing wild in some places in the north of England, and also cultivated in gardens.

pō·lem'ō·sçōpe, n. [Gr. polemos, war, and skopein, to view.] a perspective glass with an angled mirror, for seeing objects that do not lie directly before the eye.

pol'e·my, n. warfare; also, contention; opposition. [Obs.]

pō·len'tà, n. [It.] a porridge made of barley, chestnut meal, or corn meal, eaten especially in Italy.

pōle plāte, in carpentry, a timber laid on the ends of the tie beams of a roof to receive the rafters.

pōl'ẽr, n. 1. a pole horse.
2. one who poles a boat.

pōl'ẽr, n. an extortioner. [Obs.]

pōle'stär, n. 1. Polaris, a star that is vertical, or nearly so, to the pole of the earth: also called North Star.
2. that which serves as a guide or director.

pōle vault, 1. an event in which the contestant leaps for height, vaulting over a bar with the aid of a long pole.

pol·y·bā′sīte, n. [poly-, and base, and -ite.] an iron-black ore of silver, Ag_9SbS_6, a sulfide of silver and antimony.

Pol·y·braṅ′chi·à, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] a division of gastropods, particularly those having many branchial cerata on the back.

pol·y·brō′mīde, n. [poly- and bromide.] a bromide having two or more atoms of bromine in a molecule.

pol·y·ç̣är′pel·lăr·y, a. [poly-, and LL. carpellum, carpel.] made up of many carpels, as the lemon.

pol·y·ç̣är′piç, a. [poly-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] bearing fruit many times, or year after year; fruiting again and again.

pol·y·ç̣är′pous, a. with two or more carpels in the ovary or fruit.

pol·y·ceph′à·lous, a. [poly-, and Gr. kephalē, head.] with many heads; bearing many heads, as a plant.

Pol·y·chae′tà, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. chaitē, long hair.] a division of annelids, especially those with fascicles of setae.

pol·y·chae′tous, a. 1. having many setae.

2. of or resembling the Polychæta.

pol·y·ç̣hā′si·um, n.; pl. pol·y·ç̣hā′si·à, [Mod. L., from poly- and Fr. chasis, division.] a broad cluster of flowers in which each main stem sends forth more than two branches.

pol·y·ç̣hlō′rīde, n. a chloride having two or more atoms of chlorine in a molecule.

pol·y·ç̣hoe′rà·ny (-kē′), n. [poly-, and Gr. koiranos, ruler.] a government having many chiefs. [Obs.]

pol′y·ç̣hord, a. [poly-, and Gr. chordē, string.] having many chords or strings.

pol′y·ç̣hord, n. a ten-stringed musical instrument resembling a bass viol, to be played with a bow or by the fingers.

pol′y·ç̣hrest, a. [poly-, and Gr. chrēstos, useful; chrēsthai, to use.] useful in many conditions.

pol′y·ç̣hrest, n. a medicine useful for many diseases.

polychrest salt; in medicine, potassium sulfate or tartrate of sodium and potassium. [Obs.]

pol·y·ç̣hres′tiç, a. having many uses, as a drug, or as a word of many meanings.

pol′y·ç̣hres·ty, n. [Gr. polychrēstia.]

1. the quality or character of being polychrestic.

2. the use of polychrestic expressions or of polychrestic drugs.

pol′y·ç̣hrō·iṣm, n. same as pleochroism.

pol·y·ç̣hrō′māte, n. the salt of any polychromic acid.

pol·y·ç̣hrō′māte, n. any substance which is polychromatic.

pol″y·ç̣hrō·mat′iç, a. changing in color; having many colors.

polychromatic acid; aloetic acid, derived from aloes by treatment with nitric acid.

pol′y·ç̣hrōme, n. [poly-, and Gr. chrōma, color.]

1. a many-colored picture, bas-relief, etc.

2. esculin: so called because of its fluorescence in solution.

pol′y·ç̣hrōme, a. 1. polychromatic.

2. done in several colors; as, polychrome painting.

pol·y·ç̣hrō′miç, a. polychromatic.

pol·y·ç̣hrō′mous, a. polychromatic; relating to polychromy.

pol′y·ç̣hrō·my, n. [poly-, and Gr. chrōma, color.] the art of using many colors, especially when in harmonious combinations, as practiced by the Greeks in architecture and sculpture, and in modern color printing.

pol·y·ç̣hrō′ni·ous, a. chronic. [Rare.]

pol·y·ç̣lin′iç, n. 1. a medical institution in which instruction is given by clinics in various kinds of diseases.

2. a hospital for the treatment of various kinds of diseases.

pol·y·ç̣on′iç, a. based upon or relating to many cones.

polyconic projection; a type of map projection in which the parallels are arcs of non-concentric circles and the meridians are curves equally spaced from the central, straight meridian.

pol·y·ç̣ot·y·lē′dŏn, n. [poly- and cotyledon.] a plant having three or more cotyledons in the embryo.

pol·y·ç̣ot·y·led′ŏn·ăr·y, a. having the villi grouped into cotyledons or distinct masses, as the placenta in ruminants.

pol·y·ç̣ot·y·lē′dŏn·ous, a. having three or more cotyledons.

pō·lyç′rà·cy, n. [poly-, and Gr. kratein, rule.] polyarchy; power in many hands.

pol·y·çrot′iç, a. [poly-, and Gr. krotos, noise.] in physiology, having several beats; showing several secondary waves, as a pulse.
pol·yç′rō·tiṣm, n. in physiology, the condition of being polycrotic.
pol·y·cȳç′liç, a. [poly-, and Gr. kyklos, circle.] 1. with many whorls, cycles, or volutions; as, a polycyclic shell. 2. in electricity, multiphase.
pol·y·cys′tiç, a. [poly-, and Gr. kystis, bag.] having many cysts.
pol·y·cys′tid, n. one of the Polycystina or Polycystidea. pol·y·cys′tiç, a. of or relating to the Polycystina or Polycystidea.
Pol″y·cys·tid′ē·ā, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. kystis, bag.] an order of sporozoans in which the endosarc has two or more chambers.
Pol″y·cys·tī′nȧ, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. kystis, a bag.] a family of radiolarians having a siliceous instead of a calcareous shell. They are all minute, and are frequently found in great multitudes, forming a colored cloud on the surface of the sea.
pol·y·cys′tīne, n. an animal of the Polycystina.
pol·y·cys′tīne, a. relating to the Polycystina; designating a division of Radiolaria.
pol″y·cȳ·thē′mi·ȧ, n. [poly-, and Gr. kytos, cavity, and haima, blood.] superabundance of red blood corpuscles.
Pol″y·cyt·tā′ri·ȧ, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. kyttaros, cell.] a group of radiolarians having numerous central capsules.
pol·y·daç′tyl, pol·y·daç′tyle, a. [poly-, and Gr. daktylos, finger, toe.] having more than the normal number of fingers or toes.
pol·y·daç′tyl, n. an animal or person exhibiting polydactylism.
pol·y·daç′tyl·iṣm, n. the condition of being polydactyl.
pol·y·dae′mŏn·iṣm, n. [poly-, and Gr. daimōn, demon.] a form of religion in which a multitude of demons or spirits are thought to govern natural phenomena.
pol·y·dip′si·ȧ, n. [poly-, and Gr. dipsa, thirst.] extreme thirst; continual craving for drink.
pol·y·ē′drous, a. same as polyhedral.
pol·y·eī′diç, a. [poly-, and Gr. eidos, form.] having several forms of larvae.
pol·y·eī′diṣm, n. the condition of being polyeidic.
pol·y·em′bry·ō·nāte, a. in botany, composed of or possessing several embryos; pertaining to polyembryony.
pol·y·em·bry·on′iç, a. same as polyembryonate.
pol·y·em′bry·ō·ny, n. [poly-, and Gr. embryon, an embryo.] the development of two or more embryos in a single ovule or ovum.
pol·y·ēr′ġiç, a. [poly-, and Gr. ergon, work.] having the power of acting in many ways.
pol′y·es·tēr, n. [*poly*mer, and ester.] any of several polymeric resins formed chiefly by condensing polyhydric alcohols with dibasic acids: used in making plastics, fibers, etc.
pol″y·eth′yl·ēne, n. [*poly*mer, and ethylene.] any of several thermoplastic resins $(C_2H_4)_n$, made by the polymerization of ethylene: used in making translucent, lightweight, and tough plastics, films, containers, insulation, etc.
pol′y·foil, n. [poly- and foil.] in architecture, a figure composed of more than five foils.
pol′y·foil, a. having more than five foils.
Pō·lyg′ȧ·lȧ, n. [poly-, and Gr. gala, milk.] 1. a genus of plants of the family Polygalaceæ. The species abound in milky juice, and are found in most parts of the world. The root of Polygala senega, seneca root, or Virginian snakeroot, is used as a diuretic and expectorant. Polygala vulgaris, or milkwort, is a British plant, common in dry pastures.

POLYGALA
(Polygala senega)

2. [p–] a plant belonging to this genus.
Pol″y·gȧ·lā′cē·ae, n.pl. the milkwort family of polypetalous plants, characterized by the union of their stamens into a single body, by their one-celled anthers opening with a pore, and by their irregular petals, one of which is often bearded. The family consists of herbaceous plants or shrubs, the leaves of which are usually bitter and the root milky.
pol″y·gȧ·lā′ceous, a. pertaining to the Polygalaceæ.
pō·lyg′ȧ·liç, a. relating to or produced from Polygala senega.
polygalic acid; polygaline; saponin.
pō·lyg′ȧ·line, n. saponin.
Pol·y·gā′mi·ȧ, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.] in the Linnean system, a class of plants bearing hermaphrodite and unisexual flowers on the same plant or on different plants.
pol·y·gā′mi·ăn, a. relating to the Polygamia.
pō·lyg′ȧ·mist, n. one who practices or upholds polygamy.
pō·lyg′ȧ·mīze, v.i.; polygamized, pt., pp.; polygamizing, ppr. to practice polygamy. [Rare.]
pō·lyg″ȧ·mō·dī·oe′cious, a. in botany, both polygamous and dioecious.
pō·lyg′ȧ·mous, a. 1. of, engaging in, or characterized by polygamy. 2. in botany, of or relating to Polygamia; having hermaphrodite and unisexual flowers on the same plant or on different plants. 3. in zoology, having more than one mate of the opposite sex.
pō·lyg′ȧ·my, n. [poly-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.] the state or practice of having two or more wives, husbands, or mates at the same time; plural marriage or mating.
pol′y·gär, n. same as poligar.
pol·y·ġen′e·sis, n. [poly- and genesis.] in biology, (a) derivation from more than one kind of germ cell; (b) the theory that different species are descended from different ultimate ancestors.
pol″y·ġē·net′iç, a. 1. having more than one source or origin. 2. in biology, of or characterized by polygenesis.
pol·y·ġen′iç, a. polygenetic.
pō·lyġ′e·niṣm, n. [poly-, and Gr. genos, kind.] the theory that the human species has been derived from more than one ancestral type.
pō·lyġ′e·nist, n. an advocate of polygenism.
pō·lyġ′e·nous, a. [poly-, and Gr. genos, kind.] consisting of many kinds of elements; as, a polygenous mountain is composed of strata of different kinds of rock.
pō·lyg′e·ny, n. polygenism.
pol′y·glot, a. [poly-, and Gr. glōtta, tongue.] 1. having or containing many languages; as, a polyglot lexicon or Bible. 2. speaking or writing several languages; as, a polyglot people.
pol′y·glot, n. 1. a person who speaks or writes several languages. 2. a book written in several languages. 3. a mixture or confusion of languages.
Complutensian Polyglot; the first complete polyglot edition of the Bible: see Complutensian.
pol·y·glot′iç, a. same as polyglottous.
pol·y·glot′tous, a. [Gr. polyglōttos; polys, many, and glōtta, tongue.] speaking or using many languages.
pol′y·gon, n. [poly-, and Gr. gōnia, an angle.] in geometry, a plane figure with several angles and sides, usually over four; as, an equilateral polygon; a regular polygon.
force polygon; in mechanics, a polygon formed by lines representing in order the direction and the magnitude respectively of a number of forces acting at a point in different directions, when these forces are in equilibrium.
funicular polygon; in mechanics, a polygon formed in a vertical plane by a series of weights suspended from a cord whose two ends are fixed.
Pol″y·gō·nā′cē·ae, n.pl. [*polygon*um and -aceæ.] a family of plants, the buckwheat family, characterized by alternate entire leaves, and stipules in the form of scarious or membranous sheaths at the strongly-marked, usually tumid, joints of the stem.
pol″y·gō·nā′ceous, a. of, pertaining to, or like the Polygonaceæ.
pō·lyg′ō·nȧl, a. of, or having the form of, a polygon.
polygonal numbers; in arithmetic, the successive sums of a series of numbers in arithmetical progression; figurate numbers.
Pol·y·gon′ȧ·tum, n. [poly-, and Gr. gony, gonatos, knee.] a genus of liliaceous plants with a recurved stem growing from a thick rootstock which is marked with a large round scar left by the previous stem: the typical species is called Solomon's-seal.
pol″y·gō·neū′tiç, a. [poly-, and Gr. gonos, offspring.] in zoology, producing several broods in a single year or season.
pol″y·gō·neū′tiṣm, n. the state of being polygoneutic.
pol″y·gō·nom′e·try, n. [polygon, and Gr. metron, measure.] the branch of mathematics dealing with polygons.
pō·lyg′ō·nous, a. same as polygonal.
Pō·lyg′ō·num, n. [poly-, and Gr. gony, gonatos, knee.] a genus of plants of the buckwheat family, of wide distribution in the temperate zones, represented by knotweed, prince's-feather, lady's-thumb, etc.
pō·lyg′ō·ny, n. any plant of the genus Polygonum, especially knotgrass, Polygonum aviculare.
Pol·y·gor′di·us, n. [poly-, and Gr. Gordios, king of Phrygia, with allusion to the Gordian knot.] a genus of marine worms typical of the family Polygordiidæ.
pol′y·gram, n. [poly-, and Gr. gramma, a writing.] a figure made by a polygraph.
pol′y·gráph, n. [poly-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] 1. a device for reproducing writings or drawings; especially, a gelatin copying pad. 2. a person who writes many works or many kinds of work.
pol·y·graph′iç, a. 1. pertaining to polygraphy; as, a polygraphic instrument. 2. done with a polygraph; as, a polygraphic copy or writing.
pol·y·graph′iç·ăl, a. same as polygraphic.
pō·lyg′rȧ·phy, n. the art of operating a polygraph.
pol′y·groove, v.t.; polygrooved, pt., pp.; polygrooving, ppr. to cut many grooves in, as in a column, a facing, or a piece of furniture.
pol′y·ġyn, n. a plant of the order Polygynia.
Pol·y·ġyn′i·ȧ, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. gynē, a female.] in the Linnean system, an order of plants having many styles.
pol·y·ġyn′i·ăn, a. same as polygynous.
pō·lyg′y·nist, n. one who believes in or practices polygyny.
pol″y·ġy·noe′ciăl (-shăl), a. [poly-, and LL. gynoecium, and -al.] in botany, produced by the massing of the gynoecia of many flowers, as in multiple fruits like the mulberry.
pō·lyġ′y·nous, a. 1. in botany, having many styles; pertaining to the order Polygynia. 2. characterized by or pertaining to polygyny.
pō·lyġ′y·ny, n. [poly-, and Gr. gynē, a female.] 1. the state or practice of having two or more wives or concubines at the same time. 2. the mating of a male animal with several females.
pol·y·ġy′răl, a. [poly-, and Gr. gyros, circle.] having many gyres or turns, as in the shell of a univalve mollusk.
pol·y·ġyr′i·ȧ, n. a condition in which there is an unusually large number of convolutions in the brain.
pol·y·hal′īte, n. [poly-, and Gr. hals, salt.] a mineral occurring in masses of a fibrous structure, of a brick-red color, being tinged with iron but essentially a hydrous sulfate of calcium, magnesium, and potassium.
pol·y·hē′drăl, a. [*polyhedr*on and -al.] of, or having the form of, a polyhedron.
polyhedral angle; an angle made by the passing of three or more planes through the same point.
pol·y·hē′driç, pol·y·hē′driç·ăl, a. same as polyhedral.
pol·y·hē′drŏn, n.; pl. pol·y·hē′drŏns, pol·y·hē′drȧ, [poly-, and Gr. hedra, seat.] 1. in geometry, a solid figure with several plane surfaces, usually more than six. 2. in optics, a polyscope, or multiplying glass. 3. in botany, a cell of angular form in Hydrodictyon utriculatum, the water net.
conjugate polyhedra; two polyhedra of such form that each has a face for every vertex in the other, and vice versa.
pol·y·hē′drous, a. same as polyhedral.
pol·y·hē′mi·ȧ, pol·y·hae′mi·ȧ, n. [poly-, and Gr. haima, blood.] in medicine, excessive blood supply: also polyemia.
pol″y·hi·drō′sis, n. [poly-, and Gr. hidrōs, sweat.] excess in the secretion of sweat.
pol·y·his′tŏr, n. [poly-, and Gr. histōr, knowing.] one versed in varied learning; a universal scholar. [Rare.]
pol·y·hȳ′driç, a. [poly-, and *hydr*oxyl, and -ic.] in chemistry, a compound containing more than two hydroxyl groups.

Pol·y·hym′ni·à, n. [L., from Gr. Polymnia; polys, many, and hymnos, hymn.] in Greek mythology, the Muse of sacred poetry: also Polymnia.

pol′y I:C (ī′sē′), [*poly*inosinic-poly*c*ytidylic acid.] a synthetic ribonucleic acid that promotes the production of a cellular protein that fights viruses.

pol·y·ī′ō·dīde, n. [poly- and iodide.] in chemistry, an iodide containing more than one atom of iodine to the molecule.

pol·y·lem′mà, n. [poly-, and Gr. lēmma, proposition.] a predicament; a dilemma with many equally objectionable alternatives.

pol·y·lep′i·dous, a. [poly-, and Gr. lepis (-idos), scale.] having many scales: said of a bud, an involucre, or a bulb.

pol′y·lith, n. [poly-, and Gr. lithos, stone.] a structure composed of many stones: the opposite of monolith.

pol·y·lith′iç, a. built of or containing many stones.

pō·lyl′ō·quent (-kwent), a. [poly-, and L. loquens (-entis), ppr. of loqui, to speak.] loquacious; talkative. [Rare.]

pol·y·mag′net, n. [poly- and magnet.] a combination of two or more electromagnets placed so that a variable magnetic field may be produced.

pol·y·mas′ti·à, n. the presence of more than two mammae or breasts.

pol·y·mas′tiç, a. [poly-, and Gr. mastos, breast.] having an abnormal number of breasts or nipples.

pol′y·math, n. [Gr. polymathēs; polys, much, and manthanein, mathein, to learn.] a person having a wide range of knowledge; a polyhistor.

pol·y·math′iç, a. pertaining to polymathy; possessing varied learning.

pō·lym′à·thy, n. the knowledge of many arts and sciences; acquaintance with many branches of learning or with various subjects.

pol·y·mē′li·à, n. [poly-, and Gr. melos, limb.] the presence of supernumerary limbs.

pol·y·mē′li·ăn, a. pertaining to polymelia; having supernumerary limbs.

pol·y·mē′li·us, n. a fetus with more than the normal number of limbs.

pol′y·mē·ly, n. same as polymelia.

pol′y·mēr, n. [from Gr. poly, many, and meros, a part.] any of two or more polymeric compounds, especially one with a higher molecular weight.

pol·y·mer′iç, a. composed of the same chemical elements in the same proportions by weight, but differing in molecular weight.

pō·lym′ēr·işm, n. the condition of being polymeric or polymerous.

pol·y·mēr·i·zā′tion, n. 1. the process of joining two or more like molecules to form a more complex molecule whose molecular weight is a multiple of the original and whose physical properties are different.
2. the changing of a compound into a polymeric form by this process.

pol′y·mēr·īze, v.t. and v.i.; polymerized, pt., pp.; polymerizing, ppr. [*polymer*ous and -ize.] to subject to or undergo polymerization.

pō·lym′ēr·ous, a. [Gr. polymerēs; polys, many, and meros, part.]
1. in botany, consisting of many parts or having many members in each whorl.
2. in chemistry, polymeric. [Obs.]

pol·y·met·à·mer′iç, a. [poly- and metameric.] in biology, pertaining to or connected with three or more metameres.

pō·lym′ē·tēr, n. [poly-, and Gr. metron, measure.] an apparatus for measuring angles.

pol″y·me·tō′çhi·à, n. [poly-, and Gr. metochē, a participle.] the frequent use of participles in speaking or writing.

pol·y·mī′çrō·sçōpe, n. a microscope in which a movable band is used as a support for the objects to be examined, so that shifts to various parts of the field can be made quickly.

pol·y·mig′nīte, n. [poly-, and Gr. mignynai, to mix, and -ite.] a shiny, black, crystalline mineral, containing titanium, zirconium, yttrium, cerium, calcium, iron, magnesium, manganese, potassium, and silica.

Pō·lym′ni·à, n. 1. same as Polyhymnia.
2. a genus of the Compositæ, consisting of coarse shrubs or herbs having strong-scented, downy foliage and yellow flowers.

pol′ym·nīte, n. [poly-, and Gr. mnion, moss, and -ite.] a stone marked with dendrites and black lines which resemble rivers, marshes, and ponds.

pol′y·morph, n. [from Gr. polymorphos; from poly-, many, and morphē, shape.]
1. in biology, a polymorphous organism or one of its forms.
2. in chemistry and mineralogy, (a) a substance that can crystallize in two or more different forms; (b) one of these forms.

pol·y·mor′phiç, a. same as polymorphous.

pol·y·mor′phişm, n. the condition or quality of being polymorphous.

pol″y·mor·phō′sis, n. [poly- and morphosis.] in zoology, the development of different structural forms having the same function, as in sponges.

pol·y·mor′phous, a. [Gr. polymorphos; polys, many, and morphē, form.] having, occurring in, or passing through several or various forms.

pol′y·mor·phy, n. same as polymorphism.

pō·ly·moun′tain (-tin), n. same as poly.

Pol″y·mȳ·ō′dī, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. mys, muscle, and ōdē, song.] a group of singing birds having five pairs of vocal muscles in the syrinx: now classed as the Oscines.

pol″ȳ·my·ō′dous, a. pertaining to the Polymyodi; polymyoid.

pol·y·mȳ′oid, a. [poly-, and Gr. mys, muscle, and -oid.] having several pairs of vocal muscles, as the Polymyodi.

pol·y·mȳ·ō·sī′tis, n. [poly-, and Gr. mys, muscle, and -itis.] inflammation affecting several muscles.

pol′y·nēme, n. [poly-, and Gr. nēma, thread.] a sea fish of the genus Polynemus.

POLYNEME
(Polynemus quadrifilis)

Pol·y·nem′i·dae, n.pl. a family of fishes represented by the genus Polynemus.

pol·y·nem′i·form, a. shaped like a polyneme.

pol·y·nē′moid, a. resembling or pertaining to the Polynemidæ.

Pol·y·nē′mus, n. [poly, many, and Gr. nēma, a thread.] a genus of fishes belonging to and typical of the family Polynemidæ, having the ventral fins abdominal instead of thoracic. The species have a compressed head entirely covered with deciduous scales, a blunt, prominent nose, and filiform appendages to the pectoral fins.

Pol·y·nē′şiăn, a. of Polynesia, its people, their language, or culture.

Pol·y·nē′şian, n. 1. a member of the brown people of Polynesia, including the Hawaiians, Tahitians, Samoans, and Maoris.
2. the group of Austronesian languages of Polynesia.

pol·y·neū′răl, a. [poly-, and Gr. neuron, nerve.] pertaining to or supplied by several nerves.

pol″y·neū·rī′tis, n. [poly- and neuritis.] neuritis affecting several nerves.

pō·lyn′i·à, n. [Russ. poluiniya, an opening in an ice field.] an opening in a frozen sea.

Pol·y·nī′cēş, n. [L. Polynices; Gr. Polyneikēs.] in Greek legend, a son of Oedipus and the brother of Eteocles.

Pō·lyn′ō·ē, n. [poly-, and Gr. nein, to swim.] a genus of sea worms characterized by many segments covered with small paired scales.

pol′y·noid, a. [polynoe and -oid.] pertaining to the Polynoe and related genera.

pol′y·noid, n. a member of the genus Polynoe.

pol·y·nō′mi·ăl, n. [poly- and bi*nomial*.]
1. in algebra, an expression consisting of two or more terms; as, $x^2 - 2xy + y^2$ is a polynomial.
2. in biology, a species name consisting of more than two terms.

pol·y·nō′mi·ăl, a. of, belonging to, or constituting a polynomial.

pol·y·nō′mi·ăl·işm, n. nomenclature consisting of polynomials; a system using polynomials.

pol·y·nō′mi·ăl·ist, n. one who uses polynomials.

pol·y·nū′çlē·ăr, a. having many nuclei.

pol·y·ō′mà vī′rus, [poly-, and -oma.] a virus that causes various types of cancer in mice and other rodents.

pol·y·om′mà·tous, a. [poly-, and Gr. omma (-atos), eye.] having many eyes.

pol′y·ō·nym, n. 1. a polynominal name.
2. a synonym. [Rare.]

pol″y·ō·nym′iç, a. polyonymous; polynomial.

pol·y·on′y·mous, a. many-titled; having many names.

pol·y·on′y·my, n. polynomialism; the giving of many names to the same thing.

pol·y·ō′pi·à, n. [poly-, and Gr. ōps, ōpos, face.] double or multiple vision; the condition in which one object appears as two or more objects: also written polyopsia, polyopsy, polyopy.

pol″y·ō·rä′mà, n. [poly-, and Gr. horama, view, from horān, to see.] a view of many objects; also, an optical instrument presenting such views.

pol·y·ọr′çhis, n. [poly-, and Gr. orchis, testis.] a person with more than two testicles.

pol′yp, n. [L. polypus; Gr. polypous; polys, many, and pous, foot.]
1. any of a number of small, flowerlike water animals having a mouth fringed with many small, slender tentacles at the top of a tubelike body, as the sea anemone, hydra, etc.
2. a smooth projecting growth of hypertrophied mucous membrane in the nasal passages, bladder, rectum, etc.
3. an octopus. [Obs.]

pō·lyp′à·rous, a. [poly-, and L. parere, to produce.] producing many seeds, eggs, or young at a time.

pol′y·pà·ry, n.; pl. pol′y·pà·ries, [from polyp.] in zoology, the base or the connecting tissue to which each member of a colony of polyps is attached; a polypidom.

pol′ype, n. same as polyp.

pol·y·pē′ăn, a. pertaining to a polyp or polyps.

pol·y·pē′ăn, n. a polyp.

pol·y·pep′tīde, n. [poly-, and peptide.] a substance containing two or more amino acids in the molecule joined by peptide linkages.

Pol·y·pet′à·lae, n.pl. a large group of plants characterized by having the corolla made up of many separate petals; a subdivision of dicotyledons.

pol·y·pet′ăl·ous, a. [poly-, and Gr. petalon, a petal.] in botany, having many separate petals; as, a polypetalous corolla.

pol·y·phā′ġi·à, n. [Gr. polyphagia, from poly, many, and phagein, to eat.]
1. an abnormal or excessive desire for food.
2. the practice of subsisting on many kinds of food.

pol·y·phaġ′iç, a. [poly-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] subsisting on many kinds of food.

pō·lyph′à·gous, a. same as polyphagic.

pō·lyph′à·gy, n. polyphagia.

pol·y·phär′mà·cy, n. 1. a prescription made up of too many ingredients.
2. the practice of using an excessive number of ingredients in a prescription.
3. the use of many kinds of medicine at the same time.

pol′y·phāşe, a. in electricity, having or generating two or more phases.
polyphase armature; an armature so wound as either to produce polyphase currents or to be operated by such currents.
polyphase currents; currents differing in phase from one another by a definite amount, and suitable for the operation of polyphase motors or similar apparatus.
polyphase dynamo; a polyphase generator.
polyphase generator; an alternator which delivers two or more alternating currents definitely differing in phase.
polyphase motor; a motor operated by means of polyphase currents.
polyphase transmission; transmission of power by means of polyphase currents.

pol′y·phāş·ēr, n. in electricity, a polyphase alternator or generator.

Pol·y·phē′mus, n. [L.; Gr. Polyphēmos.] in Greek legend, the Cyclops who confined Odysseus and his companions in a cave and ate two of them daily, until Odysseus blinded him with a stake as he slept and escaped along with those still alive.

Pol·y·phē′mus mọth, a large, yellowish-brown American bombycid moth, Telea polyphemus, with an eyelike spot on each hind wing.

pol′y·phōne, n. [poly-, and Gr. phōnē, voice, sound.] in phonetics, a polyphonic letter or other symbol.

pol·y·phon′iç, a. [Gr. polyphōnos, having many tones, from poly, many, and phōnē, a voice, sound.]
1. having or making many sounds.
2. in music, (a) of, having, or in polyphony; having two or more harmonized melodies; contrapuntal; (b) that can produce more than one tone at a time, as a piano.
3. in phonetics, representing more than one sound, as c in cat and cereal.

pō·lyph′ō·nism, n. same as polyphony.

pō·lyph′ō·nist, n. 1. one who is skilled in the art of the multiplication of sounds; an imitator of sounds; a ventriloquist. 2. in music, one skilled in polyphony.

pō·lyph′ō·nous, a. polyphonic.

pō·lyph′ō·ny, n. [poly-, and Gr. phōnē, voice.] 1. multiplicity of sounds, as in an echo. 2. in music, a combining of a number of individual but harmonizing melodies, as in a fugue, canon, etc.; counterpoint: opposed to monody, homophony. 3. in phonetics, the representation of two or more sounds by the same letter or symbol, as c in ace and act.

pol′y·phōre, n. [poly-, and Gr. -phoros, from pherein, to bear.] in botany, a receptacle bearing many ovaries. [Rare.]

pol′y·phōte, a. [poly-, and Gr. phōs, phōtos, light.] in electricity, of or designating arc lamps so constructed that more than one may be used on a single circuit.

pol″y·phy·let′iç, a. [poly- and phyletic.] in biology, derived from more than one ancestral type.

pol·y·phyl′lous, a. [poly-, and Gr. phyllon, leaf.] in botany, having many leaves; as, a polyphyllous calyx or perianth.

pol′y·phyl·ly, n. in botany, increase of the number of parts in a whorl.

pol·y·phy′ō·dont, a. [poly-, Gr. phyein, to produce, and odous, odontos, tooth.] having several sets of teeth.

pol·y·phy′ō·dont, n. an animal with several sets of teeth.

Pol′y·pī, n.pl. [from L. polypus.] the polyps as a group.

pol′y·pīde, n. [polyp and -ide.] any of the separate zooids of a polyzoarium.

pō·lyp′i·dŏm, n. [polyp, and Gr. domos, house.] a polypary.

pol′y·piēr, n. [Fr.] a polypary.

pol′y·pi·fēr, n. any of the Polypifera; a polyp.

Pol·y·pif′e·rà, n.pl. the Polypi.

pol·y·pif′ēr·ous, a. [polyp, and L. ferre, to bear.] producing polyps; bearing polypites.

pol′y·pi·form, a. of the form of a polyp.

pol·y·piġ′ēr·ous, a. polypiferous.

pol·y·pip′à·rous, a. [polyp, and L. parere, to bring forth.] polypiferous.

pol′y·pīte, n. [polyp and -ite.] 1. the fundamental element in the structure of a hydrozoan; a single zooid, consisting of a sac with an ingestive or oral opening at one end, leading into a digestive cavity; a hydranth. 2. a fossil polyp. 3. the manubrium of a medusa.

Pol″y·plà·çoph′ō·rà, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. plax, plakos, tablet, and pherein, to bear.] an order of gastropods; the chitons.

pol′y·plāne, n. same as multiplane.

pol·y·plas′tiç, a. [poly- and plastic.] in biology, containing many structural or constituent elements; also, undergoing many changes of form.

pol·y·pleç′tron, pol·y·pleç′trum, n. [poly-, and Gr. plēktron, plectrum.] an old musical instrument in which the tones were produced by the friction of a number of slips of leather acting upon strings, and moved by pressing or striking keys, as in the piano; a kind of harpsicord.

pol′y·ploid, a. [poly- and -ploid.] having the number of chromosomes in the somatic cells more than twice the haploid number.

pol′y·ploid, n. a polyploid cell or organism.

pol·yp·noe′à, n. [poly-, and Gr. pnoia, breathing, from pnein, to breathe.] a rapid or panting respiration.

pol′y·pod, a. [poly-, and Gr. pous, podos, foot.] having many feet, as a myriapod.

pol′y·pod, n. 1. a polypod animal; a myriapod. 2. in botany, a polypody.

Pol·y·pō·di·ā′cē·ae, n.pl. [polypodium and -aceæ.] a family of ferns, which can be taken as the type of the whole, having erect or creeping rootstocks and an elastic jointed ring nearly surrounding the spore cases.

pol·y·pō·di·ā′ceous, a. pertaining to the Polypodiaceæ.

Pol·y·pō′di·um, n. [L., polypody.] a genus typical of the Polypodiaceæ.

pol′y·pō·dy, n.; pl. pol′y·pō·dieș, [poly-, and Gr. pous, podos, foot.] a plant of the genus Polypodium or family Polypodiaceæ, having rather coarse and leathery leaves. Polypodium vulgare is the common polypody.

pol′y·poid, a. [polyp and -oid.] of the nature of or resembling a polyp or polypus.

Pol″y·pō·mē·dū′sae, n.pl. the hydrozoans.

Pol″y·pō·ri·ā′cē·ae, n.pl. [polyporus and -aceæ.] an order of fungi of which the genus Polyporus is the type.

pō·lyp′ō·roid, a. of or resembling the genus Polyporus.

pō·lyp′ō·rous, a. many-pored.

Pō·lyp′ō·rus, n. [poly-, and Gr. poros, pore, passage.] a genus of parasitical fungi.

pol′y·pō·stўle, n. same as dactylozooid.

pol′y·pō·tōme, n. [polypus, and Gr. -tomos, from temnein, to cut.] a surgical instrument for removing a polypus.

pol′y·pous, a. of or like a polyp.

pol″y·prag·mat′iç, pol″y·prag·mat′iç·ăl, a. [poly- and pragmatic.] overbusy; overzealous; forward; officious. [Rare.]

pol″y·prag·mat′iç, n. a busybody; a meddler. [Rare.]

pol·y·prag′mà·ty, n. [polypragmatic and -y.] the state of being officious. [Rare.]

pol·y·prag′mŏn, pol·y·prag′mŏn·ist, n. a busybody. [Obs.]

pol′y·priṣm, n. a prism formed of several prisms of the same angle connected at their ends: a beam of light passing through the various component parts of such a prism is variously refracted and dispersed.

pol″y·priṣ·mat′iç, a. [poly- and prismatic.] in mineralogy, having crystals presenting many prisms in a single form.

pol·y·prō′tō·dont, n. one of the Polyprotodontia.

pol·y·prō′tō·dont, a. pertaining to the Polyprotodontia.

Pol·y·prō·tō·don′ti·à (-shi-), n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. prōtos, first, and odous, odontos, tooth.] a division of marsupials having more than two lower incisors and well-developed canine teeth.

Pō·lyp·te·roi′dē·ī, n.pl. [Polypterus, and Gr. eidos, form.] a suborder of ganoid fishes with many dorsal fins: the genus Polypterus is the type.

Pō·lyp′te·rus, n. [poly-, and Gr. pteron, feather.] a genus typical of the Polypteroidei, including the bichir.

pol·yp·tō′ton, n. [poly-, and Gr. ptōtos, verbal adj. of piptein, to fall.] in rhetoric, a form of speech in which a word is repeated in different cases, numbers, genders, and the like. The following line is an example:

> My own heart's heart, and ownest own, farewell. —Tennyson.

pol′yp·tyçh, n. [poly-, and Gr. ptyx, ptychis, fold.] any arrangement, as an altarpiece, having more than three leaves or panels hinged or folded together.

pol′y·pus, n.; pl. pol′y·pī, [poly-, and Gr. pous, podos, foot.] a polyp.

pol·y·rhī′zous (-rī′), a. [poly-, and Gr. rhiza, root.] having many rootlets.

pol·y·saç′çhà·rīde, n. [poly- and saccharide.] any of a group of carbohydrates that decompose by hydrolysis into more than three molecules of monosaccharides.

pol·y·sär′ci·à, n. [poly-, and Gr. sarx, sarkos, flesh.] in medicine, corpulence or obesity.

pol·y·sär′çous, a. corpulent; obese.

pol·y·sçhē′mà·tist, a. [poly-, and Gr. schēma (-atos), form.] in ancient prosody, having many possible forms: said of meter.

pol′y·sçōpe, n. [poly-, and Gr. skopein, to view.] 1. a glass that makes a single object appear as many objects; a multiplying glass. 2. in surgery, an instrument for illuminating a body cavity and making it visible.

pol·y·sep′ăl·ous, a. [poly-, and LL. sepalum, sepal.] in botany, having the sepals separate from each other, as a calyx.

pol·y·sī′phŏn·ous, a. [poly-, and Gr. siphōn, tube.] having more than one siphon, as certain seaweeds.

pol″y·sō·mat′iç, a. [poly-, and Gr. sōma (-atos), body.] in mineralogy, having a grained structure.

pol″y·sō·mit′iç, a. [poly-, somite, and -ic.] made up of a collection of united somites, as the abdomen of an arthropod.

pol′y·spast, n. [Gr. polyspastos, drawn by many cords; polys, many, and spān, to draw.] 1. a machine consisting of many pulleys for raising heavy weights. [Obs.] 2. a similar apparatus formerly used in surgery to reduce dislocations. [Obs.]

pol′y·spērm, n. [poly-, and Gr. sperma, seed.] a tree whose fruit contains many seeds. [Obs.]

pol·y·spēr′mous, a. containing many seeds; as, a polyspermous capsule or berry.

pol′y·spēr·my, n. [polysperm and -y.] the entrance of more than one spermatozoon to one ovum.

pol″y·spō·ran′ġi·um, n. in botany, a sporangium with many spores. [Rare.]

pol′y·spōre, n. [poly-, and Gr. sporos, seed.] in botany, a spore with several cells. [Rare.]

pol·y·spōr′iç, a. polysporous.

pol·y·spōr′ous, a. having many spores.

pol·y·stą́u′ri·um, n. same as stauracin.

pol·y·stēm′ō·nous, a. [poly-, and Gr. stēmōn, warp, stamen.] having many stamens; having stamens more than double the number of petals and sepals.

pō·lys′ti·çhous, a. [poly-, and Gr. stichos, row.] in biology, arranged in many rows or ranks: distinguished from monostichous, distichous.

pol′y·stigm (-stim), n. [poly-, and Gr. stigma, point.] a figure made up of several points.

Pol·y·stom′à·tà, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. stoma (-atos), mouth.] a section of the Protozoa, in which the inceptive apparatus consists of a considerable number of tentacular organs, each of which is used for grasping or as a tubular sucking mouth.

pol·y·stom′à·tous, a. pertaining to the Polystomata.

pol′y·stōme, a. [poly-, and Gr. stoma (-atos), mouth.] polystomatous.

pol′y·stōme, n. any of the Polystomata.

pol′y·stўle, a. [poly-, and Gr. stylos, column.] having a large number of columns; supported or surrounded by many columns.

pol·y·stў′lous, a. in botany, having many styles.

pol·y·stў′rēne, n. a clear, colorless plastic material, a polymer of styrene (C_8H_8).

pol·y·sul′fīde, n. [poly- and sulfide.] a binary compound of sulfur containing more atoms of sulfur than the valence of the combining element requires.

pol″y·syl·lab′iç, pol″y·syl·lab′iç·ăl, a. 1. having many, or more than three, syllables. 2. characterized by polysyllables.

pol·y·syl′là·bism, pol″y·syl·lab′i·cism, n. the state or quality of being polysyllabic, or of having many syllables.

pol′y·syl·là·ble, n. [poly- and syllable.] a word of more than three syllables.

pol·y·syl′lō·ġism, n. [poly- and syllogism.] in logic, a syllogism formed by a chain of connected syllogisms.

pol·y·syl·lō·ġis′tiç, a. having the character of a polysyllogism.

pol″y·sym·met′riç·ăl, a. [poly- and symmetrical.] capable of being divided into similar parts by more than one plane, as all regular flowers.

pol″y·sym·met′riç·ăl·ly, adv. in a polysymmetrical manner.

pol·y·sym′me·try, n. the state of being polysymmetrical.

pol″y·syn·det′iç, a. characterized by polysyndeton.

pol·y·syn′de·ton, n. [poly-, and Gr. syndetos, from syndein, to bind together.] in rhetoric, the use or repetition of conjunctions in close succession: opposed to asyndeton.

pol·y·syn′the·sis, n. polysynthetic character or structure; polysyntheticism.

pol″y·syn·thet′iç, a. in philology, compounded of several elements, each retaining a kind of independence; as, a polysynthetic word.

pol″y·syn·thet′iç·ăl, a. polysynthetic.

pol″y·syn·thet′i·cism, n. polysynthetic character or structure.

pol·y·teçh′niç, a. [poly-, and Gr. technē, art.] of or providing instruction in many scientific and technical subjects (and, formerly, arts).

pol·y·teçh′niç, n. a polytechnic institution, usually one offering instruction in engineering.

pol·y·teçh′niç·ăl, a. polytechnic.

pol·y·teçh′niçs, n. the science of the mechanical arts. [Rare.]

pol·y·tēr′pēne, n. any substance polymeric with a terpene, as gutta-percha.

Pol″y·thà·lā′mi·à, n.pl. [poly-, and Gr. thalamos, a chamber.] an order of compound Protozoa, occupying compound chambered cells of microscopic size.

pol·y·thal′à·miç, a. pertaining to the Polythalamia.

pol·y·thal′à·mous, a. [poly-, and Gr. thalamos, chamber.] many-chambered, as the shells of cephalopods.

pol′y·thē·ism, n. [Fr. polythéisme; Gr. polys, many, and theos, god.] belief in or worship of many gods, or more than one god: opposed to monotheism.

pol′y·thē·ist, n. a person who believes in or practices polytheism.

pol″y·thē·is′tiç, pol″y·thē·is′tiç·ăl, a. 1. pertaining to or characterized by polytheism. 2. advocating or believing in polytheism.
pol″y·thē·is′tiç·ăl·ly, adv. in a polytheistic manner.
pol′y·thē·īze, v.i.; polytheized, pt., pp.; polytheizing, ppr. to believe in or teach the doctrine of polytheism.
pol·y·thē′liṣm, n. [poly-, and Gr. thēlē, nipple.] the occurrence of more than one nipple on a mammary gland.
pŏ·lyt′ō·çous, a. [poly-, and Gr. -tokos, from tiktein, to bring forth.] in zoology, multiparous; producing several eggs; bringing forth many at a birth.
pŏ·lyt′ō·mous, a. [poly-, and Gr. tomē, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.] 1. in botany, designating a leaf having narrow lobes not articulated with the midrib. 2. having more than two branches or parts.
pŏ·lyt′ō·my, n. [poly-, and Gr. tomē, a cutting.] 1. in logic, a division into several parts. 2. in biology, division into three or more branches at a place.
pol″y·tō·nal′i·ty, n. [poly- and tonality.] in music, the simultaneous use of several, or especially of two, keys in the various voices, or parts, of a composition.
pŏ·lyt′rō·çhă, pol′y·troçh, n. [poly-, and Gr. trochos, wheel.] 1. an embryo worm with several circles of cilia. 2. [P–] a division of Rotifera in which the cilia are arranged in several circles.
pol·y·trō′çhăl, a. 1. pertaining to the Polytrocha. 2. characterized by several circles of cilia.
pol·y·troph′iç, a. [Gr. polytrophos, nutritious.] in bacteriology, obtaining nourishment from more than one kind of organic material, as many pathogenic bacteria.
pol·y·tung′stāte, n. a salt of any polytungstic acid.
pol·y·tung′stiç, a. [poly- and tungstic.] pertaining to or designating any one of several acids that contain more than one atom of tungsten in the molecule.
pol′y·tȳp·āġe, n. an old mode of stereotyping by which facsimiles of wood engravings, etc. are produced by pressing a woodcut into semi-fluid metal, thus producing an intaglio matrix. From this matrix, in a similar way, a polytype is obtained.
pol′y·tȳpe, n. [poly-, and Gr. typos, type.] a cast or facsimile of an engraving, matter in type, etc. produced by polytypage.
pol·y·typ′iç, a. having or involving several different types.
pol·y·typ′iç·ăl, a. same as polytypic.
pol″y·un·sat′ū·rā·ted, a. [poly-, and unsaturated.] containing more than one double or triple bond in the molecule, as certain vegetable and animal fats and oils.
pol″y·ū′rē·thāne, n. [poly-, and urethane.] any of several synthetic rubber polymers produced by the polymerization of a hydroxyl (OH) radical and an NCO group from two different compounds: used in cushions, insulation, molded products, etc.
pol·y·ū′ri·ȧ, n. [poly-, and Gr. ouron, urine.] excessive urination, as in certain diseases.
pol·y·ū′riç, a. of or characterized by polyuria.
pol·y·vā′lence, pol·y′vȧ·lence, n. the quality or state of being polyvalent.
pol·y·vā′lent, a. 1. in bacteriology, designating a vaccine containing two or more strains of the same species of bacteria. 2. in chemistry, having more than one valence.
pol·y·vī′nyl, a. designating or of any of a group of polymerized vinyl compounds.
polyvinyl resin; any of various plastics made from polymerized vinyl compounds or copolymers of vinyl and other resins, used in various molded or extruded products, coatings, adhesives, sizes, etc.
pol′y·vol′tine, n. [poly-, and It. volta, turn, time, and -ine.] a species of silkworm that produces cocoons several times in a season.
pol·y·wą′tēr, n. [*poly*meric, and water.] a viscous laboratory substance, formed in minute quantities in capillary tubes, and variously identified as a hydrosol, a new form of water, contaminated water, etc.
Pŏ·lyx′ē·nȧ, n.; in Greek legend, a daughter of Priam and betrothed of Achilles.
Pol·y·zō′ȧ, n.pl. a class, mostly marine, of molluscoid invertebrates propagated by budding and living in colonies, or polyzoaria.
pol·y·zō′ăn, n. a member of the Polyzoa.
pol·y·zō′ăn, a. relating to or having the characteristics of Polyzoa.
pol″y·zō·ăr′i·um, n.; pl. pol″y·zō·ăr′i·ȧ, 1. an aggregation of individual polypides; a polyzoan colony. 2. its supporting skeleton.
pol·y·zō′ȧ·ry, n.; pl. pol·y·zō′ȧ·ries, [polyzoon and -ary.] a polyzoarium.
pol·y·zō′iç, a. 1. of the polyzoans. 2. consisting of many zooids. 3. designating or of a spore that produces many sporozoites.
pol·y·zōn′ăl, a. [poly-, and Gr. zōnē, zone, belt.] consisting of many zones or rings; as, a polyzonal lens.
pol·y·zō′oid, a. [poly- and zooid.] resembling or pertaining to the Polyzoa.
pol·y·zō′on, n.; pl. pol·y·zō′ȧ, [poly-, and Gr. zōon, animal.] a polypide.
pŏm′ăce, n. [LL. pomacium, cider; L. pomum, apple.] 1. the crushed pulp of apples or other fruit pressed for juice. 2. the crushed matter of anything pressed, as seeds for oil.
Pō·mā′cē·ae, n.pl. same as Pomeæ.
Pō·mȧ·cen′tri·dae, n.pl. [Gr. pōma, lid, and kentron, center.] a family of tropical pharyngognathous fishes of bright colors, found near coral formations: also called coral fishes.
pō·mȧ·cen′troid, a. belonging or pertaining to the Pomacentridæ.
pō·mā′ceous, a. [LL. pomaceus; L. pomum, apple.] 1. consisting of or pertaining to apples; as, pomaceous harvests. [Poetic.] 2. in botany, of or like the pomes.
pō·māde′, n. [It. pomada; LL. pomatum; L. pomum, apple.] a perfumed ointment, now usually one for the hair: said to have been made originally with apples.
pō·māde′, v.t.; pomaded, pt., pp.; pomading, ppr. to apply pomade to.
Pō·mȧ·der′ris, n. [Gr. pōma, cover, lid, and derris, skin.] a genus of hoary pubescent shrubs found in Australia and New Zealand, yielding a hard, close-grained wood.
pō·man′dēr, n. [earlier pomamber; OFr. pomme d'ambre, apple or ball of amber.] 1. a ball made of a mixture of perfumes, formerly carried as a supposed safeguard against infection or bad luck. 2. a case for carrying this, as a perforated box, bag, or hollow ball.
pō′mȧ·rīne, a. [LL. pomarinus, from pomatorhinus; Gr. pōma (-atos), cover, and rhis, rhinos, nose.] having the nostrils covered or partly covered, as with scales: said of a bird. pomarine jager; a gull-like bird, Stercorarius pomarinus, of the northern seas.
pō·mā′tum, n. [Mod. L.] pomade.
pō·mā′tum, v.t.; pomatumed, pt., pp.; pomatuming, ppr. to pomade.
pōme, n. [L. pomum, apple.] 1. in botany, any fleshy fruit containing a core and seeds, as the apple, pear, etc. 2. in medieval times, a small metal globe filled with hot water, used by a priest to keep his hands warm while handling the elements, so as to prevent accident on account of numbness.
pōme, v.i. [Fr. pommer, from pomme, apple.] to form a head in growing. [Obs.]
Pō′mē·ae, n.pl. a division of rosaceous plants in which the calyx tube becomes fleshy or pulpy and consolidated with from two to five ovaries to form a compound pistil and the kind of fruit called a pome; the apple family.
pōme′cit·rŏn, n. a citron apple; a citron. [Obs.]
pome′gran·ăte, n. [L. pomum, an apple, and granatum, grained.] 1. a small tree, Punica granatum, of the family Lythraceæ, having oblong or lanceolate leaves, a leathery calyx shaped like a top, and many scarlet, white, or yellowish petals: it is native to western Asia or northern Africa. 2. the fruit of Punica granatum, about the size of an orange, covered with a hard rind, and containing many large seeds, each enclosed in juicy pulp of a reddish color and of an acid taste. 3. an ornament resembling a pomegranate.
