STORAGE BATTERY

storage bellows; a horizontal bellows of a pipe organ in which, through the operation of weights, the air is maintained at a uniform pressure.
storage cell; a cell which can give no current until it has been acted upon electrolytically by a current from some outside source. It consists, in its ordinary form, of two lead electrodes, made in the form of a grid to increase the effective surface and immersed in a ten per cent solution of sulfuric acid. While the charging current is passing, the water is broken up into hydrogen and oxygen; the hydrogen passes to the cathode and thence off into the air, while the oxygen goes to the anode and attacks the lead, changing it first to the oxide of lead, then to the peroxide. The cathode remains pure lead. In charging, electrical energy has been transformed into chemical energy. When the charging current is interrupted and the electrodes of the cell are metallically connected, a current passes in a direction opposite to that of the charging current, and the lead peroxide of the anode is reduced to lead oxide, while the pure lead cathode is oxidized to lead oxide. Energy of chemical combination is thus transformed back into electrical energy. When the electrodes are both lead oxide, the cell is discharged.

sun-and-planet wheels; an invention by James Watt in the early history of the steam engine for converting the reciprocating motion of the beam into a rotatory motion. In the accompanying figure, the sun wheel a is a notched wheel fixed fast to the axis of the fly wheel, and the planet wheel b is a similar wheel bolted to the lower end of the connecting rod c; it is retained in its orbit by a link at the back of both wheels. By the reciprocating motion of the connecting rod, the wheel b is compelled to circulate round the wheel a, and in so doing carries the latter along with it, communicating to the fly wheel a velocity double that of its own.

1. an argument or form of reasoning in which two statements or premises are made and a logical conclusion drawn from them.
Major Premise. All ruminants are quadrupeds.
Minor Premise. All deer are ruminants.
Conclusion ∴ All deer are quadrupeds.
The figure of a syllogism consists in the situation of the middle term with respect to the major and minor. In the first figure, the middle is the subject of the major and the predicate of the minor, M—P, S—M, S—P; in the second, it is the predicate of both premises, P—M, S—M, S—P; and in the third, it is the subject of both premises, M—P, M—S, S—P; the fourth figure is the reverse of the first, the middle term being the predicate of the major and the subject of the minor, P—M, M—S, S—P. Every proposition in logic must have one of four possible forms: (a) universal affirmative, all S is P; (e) universal negative, no S is P; (i) particular affirmative, some S is P; (o) particular negative, some S is not P. Each syllogism has three propositions, and by permutation of the four possible forms, there may be constructed sixty-four modes (or moods), of which only nineteen are valid forms of reasoning.

sym"mē·tri·zā'tion, n. a symmetrizing or being symmetrized.

sym'mē·trīze, v.t.; symmetrized, pt., pp.; symmetrizing, ppr. to make symmetrical.

sym'mē·try, n.; pl. sym'mē·tries, [Fr. symétrie; L. and Gr. symmetria, due proportion, from Gr. symmetros, measured together; syn, together, and metron, a measure.] 1. similarity of form or arrangement on either side of a dividing line or plane; correspondence of opposite parts in size, shape, and position; condition of being symmetrical: an attribute of the whole or of the parts of which it is composed. 2. excellence or beauty of form or proportion as a result of such correspondence. 3. in mathematics, the correspondence of parts or relations; similarity of arrangement. Thus, a figure has symmetry with respect to a point called the center of symmetry, or with respect to a line called the axis of symmetry, if, on being turned round on that point or line as a pivot for less than a complete revolution, it coincides with its original position. It has symmetry with respect to a plane of symmetry, if that plane bisects all the lines joining corresponding points. 4. in crystallography, the symmetrical arrangement of nonparallel equivalent elements in a crystal with respect to axes or planes of symmetry. Every symmetrical crystal may be classed in one of thirty-two groups or classes of symmetry.

axis of symmetry of a body; see under axis.

bilateral symmetry; that form of symmetry in which the plane of symmetry is vertical and through the longitudinal axis.

center of symmetry; see symmetry, sense 2.

kinetic symmetry; the condition in which the moments of inertia about the axes through the center of mass of any body are equal.

plane of symmetry; a plane with respect to which any figure is symmetrical.

radial symmetry; symmetry in which similar parts radiate from an axis.

zonal symmetry; the symmetry of annulose or ringed organisms, as earthworms, in which bilateral symmetry is not well marked.

sym·pal'mō·ġraph, n. [Gr. syn, together, palmos, vibration, from pallein, to vibrate, and -graph.] a device by which the composition of two simple harmonic motions at right angles may be illustrated graphically.

sym·pă·thet'iç, a. 1. of, expressing, resulting from, feeling, or showing sympathy; sympathizing. 2. in agreement with one's tastes, mood, feelings, disposition, etc.; congenial. 3. showing favor, approval, or agreement; as, he was sympathetic to our plan. [Colloq.] 4. in anatomy and physiology, designating or of that part of the autonomic nervous system whose nerves originate in the lumbar and thoracic regions of the spinal cord and whose functions include the innervation of smooth muscles, heart muscle, and glands: cf. parasympathetic. 5. in physics and acoustics, caused by vibrations transmitted from a neighboring vibrating body: said of vibrations, sound, etc. 6. operating as if by sympathy or occult influence; as, sympathetic ink.

sympathetic nerve; a nerve of the sympathetic nervous system; particularly, one of two cords connecting a series of ganglia along the spinal column.

sympathetic nervous system; one of the two parts of the autonomic nervous system: see sense 4, above.

sympathetic powder; in alchemy, a preparation reputed to have the property of curing a wound if applied to the weapon that inflicted it or to a cloth dipped in the blood which flowed from it.

sym·pă·thet'i·çăl, a. sympathetic. [Rare.]

sym·pă·thet'i·çăl·ly, adv. in a sympathetic manner; with sympathy.

sym'pă·thist, n. a sympathizer. [Rare.]

sym'pă·thīze, v.i.; sympathized, pt., pp.; sympathizing, ppr. [Fr. sympathiser.] 1. to share or understand the feelings or ideas of another; to be in sympathy. 2. to feel or express sympathy, especially in pity or compassion; to commiserate (with someone or something). 3. to be in harmony or accord.

sym'pă·thīze, v.t. to have sympathy for; to share or participate in; to correspond to. [Obs.]

sym'pă·thī·zēr, n. one who sympathizes.

sym'pă·thy, n.; pl. sym'pă·thies, [Fr. sympathie; L. sympathia; Gr. sympatheia, like feeling, fellow-feeling, from sympathēs, of like feelings; syn, together, and pathos, feeling, from paschein, to suffer, feel.] 1. sameness of feeling; affinity between persons or of one person for another. 2. an action or response arising from this. 3. agreement in qualities; harmony; accord. 4. a mutual liking or understanding arising from sameness of feeling. 5. the entering into or ability to enter into another person's mental state, feelings, emotions, etc.; especially, pity or compassion for another's trouble, suffering, etc. 6. in physics, a relation or harmony between bodies of such a nature that vibrations in one cause sympathetic vibrations in the other or others. 7. in physiology, a relation between parts of the body of such a nature that a disorder, pain, etc. in one induces a similar effect in other. 8. a supposed tendency of certain things to unite with or act on each other; as, the sympathy between the lodestone and iron. [Obs.]

Syn.—fellow feeling, congeniality, commiseration, compassion, pity, tenderness, agreement, condolence.

sym'pă·thy (or sym·pă·thet'iç) strīke, a strike by a group of workers in support of another group of workers who are on strike.

sym·pel'mous, a. [Gr. syn, together, and pelma, the sole of the foot.] having the deep flexor tendons of the toes united: said of some birds.

sym·pet'ăl·ous, a. gamopetalous.

sym·phon'iç, a. 1. pertaining to, resembling, or characteristic of a symphony; as, a composition in symphonic form. 2. of or having to do with harmony of sound. 3. having a similar sound or sounds.

symphonic poem; an extended musical composition for full symphony orchestra, usually in one movement, programmatic in nature, and freer in form than the symphony: also called tone poem.

sym·phō'ni·ous, a. agreeing in sound; harmonious.

sym'phō·nist, n. a composer of symphonies.

sym'phō·nīze, v.t. and v.i.; symphonized, pt., pp.; symphonizing, ppr. to harmonize.

sym'phō·ny, n.; pl. sym'phō·nies, [L. symphonia; Gr. symphōnia, music, from symphōnos, agreeing in sound, harmonious; syn, together, and phōnein, to sound, from phōnē, sound.] 1. harmony of sounds, especially of instruments. 2. harmony of any kind, especially of color. 3. anything, as a picture, characterized by harmonious composition. 4. in music, (a) an extended composition in sonata form for full orchestra, having several (usually four) movements related in subject, but varying in form and execution; (b) an instrumental passage in a composition that is largely vocal or choral; (c) a symphony orchestra; (d) [Colloq.] a symphony concert.

sym'phō·ny ȯr'çhes·tră, a large orchestra for playing symphonic works, composed of string, wind, and percussion sections: distinguished from band.

Sym"phō·ri·çär'pos, n. [LL., from Gr. symphorein, to yield together, and karpos, fruit: so named from the cluster of berries.] a genus of North American shrubs of the honeysuckle family. Symphoricarpos racemosus is the snowberry of the United States. Symphoricarpos vulgaris is the Indian currant, or coralberry.

sym"phō·ri·çär'pous, a. in botany, bearing fruits clustered together. [Rare.]

Sym'phy·lă, n.pl. [Gr. symphylos, of the same stock or race; phylon, a clan, tribe.] an order or suborder of arthropods resembling in some respects true insects and myriapods.

sym·phyl'lous, a. gamophyllous.

sym'phy·lous, a. pertaining to the Symphyla.

sym'phy·nōte, a. [Gr. symphyēs, growing together, and nōton, back.] having the valves firmly fixed at the back or hinge, as some river mussels.

sym'phy·ō-, [from Gr. syn, together, and phyein, to grow.] a combining form meaning growing together.

sym"phy·ō·ġen'e·sis, n. in botany, production by union of formerly separate elements.

sym"phy·ō·ġē·net'iç, a. pertaining to symphyogenesis.

sym"phy·ō·stem'ō·nous, a. [symphyo-, and Gr. stēmōn, stamen.] in botany, monadelphous. [Obs.]

sym·phyş'ē·ăl, a. of or pertaining to symphysis.

sym"phy·şē·ot'ō·my, n. [Gr. symphysis, symphysis, and temnein, to cut.] in surgery, the division of the fibrocartilage of the symphysis pubis, in order to facilitate childbirth by increasing the anteroposterior diameter of the pelvis.

sym·phyş'iç, a. characterized by fusion of adjacent parts.

sym·phys'i·ŏn, n. the middle point of the outer border of the alveolar process of the lower jaw.

sym"phy·si·or'rhā·phy (-rā-), n. [Gr. symphysis, symphysis, and rhaphē, suture.] suture of a divided symphysis.

sym'phy·sis, n.; pl. sym'phy·sēs, [LL., from Gr. symphysis, a growing together; syn, together, and phyein, to grow.]

1. in anatomy and zoology, (a) the growing together of bones originally separate, as of the two halves of the lower jaw or the two pubic bones; (b) the line of junction of such bones.

2. in botany, the growing together of similar parts of a plant; coalescence.

symphysis pubis; the junction of the pubic bones.

sym"phy·sō·daç·tyl'i·å, n. [Gr. symphysis, symphysis, and daktylos, finger.] fusion of the fingers or toes.

sym·phy·sot'ō·my, n. symphyseotomy, sym'phy·tism, n. [Gr. symphytos, growing together; syn, together, and phytos, shaped by nature, grown, from phyein, to grow.] coalescence; fusion. [Rare.]

Sym'phy·tum, n. [LL.] a genus of plants of the borage family. Symphytum officinale is the comfrey of Europe and North America.

sym"pi·ē·som'ē·tēr, n. [Gr. sympiesis, compression; syn, together, and piezein, to press, and -meter.]

1. an instrument for measuring the weight of the atmosphere by the compression of a column of gas. It consists of a column of oil, supported by atmospheric pressure, and rising against a body of hydrogen gas, which acts like a spring against the column of oil, and as the elasticity of the hydrogen varies with every change of temperature, a movable thermometer scale is attached for making the necessary corrections.

2. an instrument for determining the pressure exerted by currents of water.

sym"pi·ē·zom'ē·tēr, n. same as sympiesometer.

sym·pleç'tiç, a. [Gr. symplektikos, twining together; syn, together, and plekein, to twine.] related or pertaining to the symplectic.

sym·pleç'tiç, n. a bone found in many fishes, situated in the midst of the bones which form the tympanic pedicle.

sym'plē·sīte, n. [Gr. syn, together, and plēsiazein, to approach.] a green monoclinic hydrous iron arsenate, occurring in tufts of small prismatic crystals in cavities in siderite.

Sym·plō·çär'pus, n. [Gr. symplokē, an interweaving, and karpos, fruit.] a genus of araceous plants containing but one species, the skunk cabbage.

sym'plō·cē, n. [Gr. symplokē, an intertwining; syn, together, and plekein, to twine.] in rhetoric, the repetition of a word at the beginning and another at the end of successive clauses. Example: Mercy descended from heaven to dwell on the earth; Mercy fled back to heaven and left the earth.

Sym'plō·ços, n. [Gr., intertwined.] a genus of trees and shrubs of which the horse sugar is a species. The genus includes between 160 and 170 species, native to America, Asia, and Australia.

sym'pōde, n. same as sympodium.

sym·pō'di·ăl, a. pertaining to or characteristic of a sympodium.

sym·pō'di·ăl·ly, adv. in the manner of a sympodium.

sym·pō'di·um, n.; pl. sym·pō'di·å, [LL., from Gr. syn, with, and pous, podos, foot.] in botany, a stem made up of a series of branches growing on each other, giving the effect of a simple stem.

sym·pō'si·aç, a. having the nature of, appropriate to, or pertaining to a symposium; as, symposiac meetings.

sym·pō'si·aç, n. a symposium.

sym·pō'si·ăl, a. symposiac.

sym·pō'si·ärçh, n. [Gr. symposion, a drinking party, and archein, to rule.]

1. in ancient Greece, the master of a feast or symposium.

2. one who presides at a banquet; a toastmaster.

sym·pō'si·ast, n. one of the participants in a symposium. [Rare.]

sym·pō'si·ŏn, n. a symposium.

sym·pō'si·um, n.; pl. sym·pō'si·umş, sym·pō'si·å, [L., from Gr. symposion, a drinking party, from sympinein, to drink together; syn, together, and pinein, to drink.]

1. in ancient Greece, an entertainment characterized by drinking, music, and intellectual discussion.

2. any meeting or social gathering at which ideas are freely exchanged.

3. a conference organized for the discussion of some particular subject.

4. a collection of opinions or essays on a given subject.

symp'tŏm, n. ME. symthoma, from Gr. symptōma, anything that has befallen one, a casualty: usually in a bad sense; syn, together, and piptein, to fall.]

1. in medicine, any condition accompanying or resulting from a disease and serving as an aid in diagnosis; a perceptible change in the body or its functions which indicates disease.

2. a sign or token; that which indicates the existence or occurrence of something else; as, open murmurs of the people are a symptom of disaffection to law or government.

Syn.—indication, mark, sign, token.

symp·tō·mat'iç, symp·tō·mat'i·çăl, a. 1. of or having to do with symptoms.

2. that constitutes a symptom (of something, especially disease).

3. in accordance with symptoms; as, a symptomatic treatment.

symp·tō·mat'i·çăl·ly, adv. by means of symptoms; with regard to symptoms.

symp'tō·mā·tīze, v.t.; symptomatized, pt., pp.; symptomatizing, ppr. to exhibit symptoms of; to show by symptoms; to indicate.

symp·tō·mat·ō·loġ'i·çăl, a. pertaining to symptomatology.

symp·tō·mat·ō·loġ'i·çăl·ly, adv. in a symptomatological manner.

symp"tō·mā·tol'ō·ġy, n. the branch of medicine which treats of the symptoms of diseases; semiology.

symp·tō'sis, n. [Gr. symptōsis, meeting, from syn, together, and ptōsis, fall.] the gradual wasting of the whole body or of any organ or part.

syn-, [from Gr. syn, with.] a prefix meaning with, together with, at the same time, by means of, as in *syn*agogue, *syn*apse: syn- assimilates to syl- before l, as in *syl*logism; sym- before m, p, b, as in *sym*biosis; sys- before s and before an aspirate h, as in *sys*tole, *sys*tem.

syn·aer'e·sis, n. same as syneresis.

syn·aes·thē'si·å (-zhå), n. same as synesthesia.

syn·å·ġoġ'i·çăl, a. pertaining to a synagogue.

syn'å·gogue (-gog), n. [Fr. from LL. synagoga, from Gr. synagōgē, a bringing together, assembly; syn, together, and agein, to bring, drive.]

1. a congregation or assembly of Jews for worship and religious study.

2. a building or place used by Jews for worship and religious study.

3. the Jewish religion as organized in such local congregations.

4. any assembly of men. [Obs.]

The Great Synagogue; in Jewish history, an assembly or council of 120 members said to have been founded and presided over by Ezra after the return from the captivity.

syn·å·lē'phå, n. see synaloepha.

syn·å·lē'phē, syn·å·loe'phē, n. same as synaloepha.

syn·al'ġi·å, n. referred pain; pain at one place caused by a hurt at another.

syn"ăl·lag·mat'iç, a. [Gr. synallagma, a mutual agreement, from synallassein, to have dealings with, to enter into contracts; syn, with, and allassein, to repay, interchange.] in civil law, imposing reciprocal obligations upon the parties.

syn·ăl·lax'ine, a. of or belonging to the genus Synallaxis.

Syn·ăl·lax'is, n. [Gr. synallaxis, commerce, exchange.] a genus of birds resembling the true creepers, ranging from Patagonia to Mexico.

syn·å·loe'phå, syn·å·lē'phå, n. [L. synalœpha; Gr. synaloiphē, lit., a melting together, from syn-, together, and aleiphein, to smear, anoint.] the contraction into one syllable of two adjacent vowels, usually by elision. Example: th'eagle for the eagle.

syn'anġe, n. same as synangium, sense 2.

syn·an'ġi·ăl, a. of, relating to, or designating a synangium.

syn·an'ġi·um, n.; pl. syn·an'ġi·å, [syn-, and Gr. angeion, a vessel, jar.]

1. in anatomy and zoology, a common trunk from which several arteries branch; also, in the lower vertebrates, the terminal part of an arterial trunk.

2. in botany, a boat-shaped spore case produced from a group of epidermal cells, characteristic of ferns of the genus Marattia, or allied genera.

Syn'å·non, n. [after a treatment center founded (1958) in Santa Monica, California: supposedly from a patient's slurred pronunciation of "symposium," and "seminar."] [also s-]

1. a method of group psychotherapy for treating narcotic addiction.

2. a group of inpatients undergoing such therapy.

syn·an'thous, a. [syn-, and Gr. anthos, a flower.] in botany, (a) characterized by synanthy; (b) having the flowers and leaves appearing at the same time.

syn·an'thy, n. in botany, the more or less complete union of several flowers that are usually distinct.

syn·apse', n. [Mod. L. synapsis; Gr. synapsis, union, joining.] the point of contact between adjacent neurons, where nerve impulses are transmitted from one to the other.

syn·ap'sis, n.; pl. syn·ap'sēş, 1. in genetics, the conjugation of maternal and paternal pairs of homologous chromosomes. It is the first step in meiosis.

2. in physiology, a synapse.

syn·ap'tiç, sȳn·ap'ti·çăl, a. of synapsis or a synapse.

syn·ap·tiç'ū·lå, n.; pl. syn·ap·tiç'ū·lae, [LL., from Gr. synaptos, bound together.] one of the various transverse calcareous bars which stretch across the interseptal loculi in the Fungiidæ, and form a kind of trelliswork, uniting the opposite faces of adjacent septa.

syn·ap'tō·sōme, n. [from synapse, and -some.] a nerve ending pinched off at the synapse.

syn·är·tē'sis, n. [from Gr. synartan, to fasten together.] a fastening or knitting together; the state of being closely united; close or intimate union.

syn·är·thrō'di·å, n. same as synarthrosis.

syn·är·thrō'sis, n. [Gr. synarthrōsis, a being joined together; syn, together, and arthroun, to fasten by a joint.] in anatomy, any of various immovable articulations, or joints.

syn'as·try, n. [syn-, and Gr. astēr.] coincidence as regards stellar influence; the state of having similar starry influences presiding over one's fortunes as determined by astrological calculation.

syn·ax'is, n.; pl. syn·ax'ēş, [Gr., from synagein, to bring together; syn, together, and agein, to bring.] in the early church, a congregation; also, a celebration of the Eucharist.

syn'çärp, n. [LL. syncarpium, from Gr. syn, together, and karpos, fruit.] in botany, an aggregate fruit having the pericarps adherent into a solid mass; a collective fruit, as a blackberry.

SYNCARP
(fruit of Anona squamosa) syn·çär'pi·um, n.; pl. syn·çär'pi·å, same as syncarp.

syn·çär'pous, a. [syn-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.]

1. composed of two or more pistils growing together.

2. of a syncarp.

syn·çat·ē·gor·ē·mat'iç, a. [Gr. synkatēgorēmatikos; syn, together, and katēgorēma, a predicate.] in logic, designating a word which cannot be used as a term by itself, as an adverb or preposition.

syn·çat·ē·gor·ē·mat'iç, n. a syncategorematic word.

syn·çat·ē·gor·ē·mat'i·çăl·ly, adv. after the manner of a syncategorematic.

syn·cer'ē·brăl, a. pertaining to a syncerebrum.

syn·cer'ē·brum, n. [syn-, and L. cerebrum, the brain.] in entomology, a compound brain.

syñ·çhon·drō'si·ăl, a. pertaining to or resembling synchondrosis.

syñ·çhon·drō'sis, n. [syn-, and Gr. chondros, cartilage.] a synarthrosis in which the union is of cartilage.

syñ·çhon·drot'ō·my, n. in surgery, symphyseotomy.

syñ·çhō·rē'sis, n. [Gr. synchōrēsis, concession, from synchōrein, to come together, meet.] in rhetoric, a concession allowed, in order to make a more pointed retort.

syn'chrō-mesh, a. [*synchro*nized and mesh.] in motor vehicles, designating or employing a device by which synchronized shifting can be effected.

syn'chrō-mesh, n. 1. a synchromesh gear system.
2. any gear in such a system.

syn'chrō-năl, a. [syn-, and Gr. chronos, time.] same as synchronous.

syn'chrō-năl, n. that which happens at the same time with something else, or pertains to the same time.

syn-chron'ic, a. same as synchronous.

syn-chron'i-căl, a. same as synchronic.

syn-chron'i-căl-ly, adv. in a synchronic manner; simultaneously.

syn'chrō-nism, n. [Gr. synchronismos, agreement of time, from synchronos, contemporaneous; syn, together, and chronos, time.]
1. the fact or state of being synchronous; concurrence of two or more events in time; simultaneousness.
2. a chronological listing of persons or events in history.
3. in painting, the representation, in the same picture, of events happening at different times.

syn-chrō-nis'tic, a. pertaining to synchronism; synchronous.

syn-chrō-nis'ti-căl, a. synchronistic.

syn''chrō-ni-zā'tion, n. a synchronizing or being synchronized; as, the synchronization of sound and action in motion pictures.

syn'chrō-nīze, v.i.; synchronized, pt., pp.; synchronizing, ppr. to move or occur at the same time or rate; to have the same timing; to be synchronous; as, the clocks are synchronized.

syn'chrō-nīze, v.t. 1. to cause to agree in rate or speed; to regulate (clocks, a flashgun and camera shutter, etc.) so as to make synchronous.
2. to assign (events, etc.) to the same date or period; to represent as or show to be coincident or simultaneous.
3. in motion pictures, (a) to add or adjust (sound effects or dialogue) so as to coincide with the action of a picture; (b) to add or adjust such sound effects or dialogue to (a picture).

syn'chrō-nīzed shift'ing, a type of gear shifting in motor vehicles, in which the gears to be meshed are automatically brought to the same speed of rotation before the shift is completed.

syn'chrō-nī-zer, n. one who or that which synchronizes; specifically, an instrument for synchronizing clocks.

syn-chrō-nol'ō-ġy, n. [Gr. synchronos, contemporaneous, and -logy.] chronological arrangement of synchronous events side by side.

syn-chron'ō-sc̄ōpe, n. a synchroscope.

syn'chrō-nous, a. [LL. synchronus; Gr. synchronos.]
1. happening at the same time; occurring together; simultaneous.
2. having the same period between movements, occurrences, etc.; having the same rate and phase, as vibrations.
synchronous curve; a synchrone.
synchronous machine; an alternating-current motor, generator, or converter whose normal operating speed is exactly proportional to the frequency of the current by which it is supplied.
synchronous speed; a fixed speed for an alternating-current machine, determined by the frequency of the current by which it is supplied.

syn'chrō-nous-ly, adv. at the same time.

syn'chrō-ny, n. same as synchronism, senses 1 and 2.

syn'chrō-sc̄ōpe, n. [*synchro*nism and -scope.] a device for indicating the degree of synchronism, as between two or more airplane engines: also synchronoscope.

syn'chrō-tron, n. [*synchro*nize and elec*tron.*] a type of cyclotron for accelerating the velocities of charged particles, especially of electrons, through the use of a low-frequency magnetic field in combination with a high-frequency electrostatic field.

syn'chrō-tron rā-di-ā'tion, the electromagnetic radiation given off by high-energy particles, as electrons, as they spiral at a speed close to the speed of light in a strong magnetic field, as in combination with a high-frequency electrostatic field.

syn'chy-sis, n. [Gr. synchysis, a commixture; syn, together, and chysis, a pouring, from cheein, to pour.] confusion; specifically, (a) confusion of words in a sentence; (b) a softening of humors in the eye.

syn-clas'tic, a. [syn-, and Gr. klastos, broken.] having curvatures all in the same direction, that is, all convex or all concave, at any given point: said of a surface, as of a sphere: opposed to anticlastic.

syn-clī'năl (or sing'kli-), a. [Gr. synklinein, to incline together; syn, together, and klinein, to incline.]
1. inclined downward from opposite directions, so as to meet in a common point or line.
2. of, formed by, or forming a syncline. synclinal valley; a valley formed by synclinal strata.

syn-clī'năl, n. in geology, a synclinal line, axis, or fold; a syncline.

syn'clīne, n. in geology, a fold of stratified rock inclining upward in opposite directions from both sides of its axis: opposed to anticline.

syn-clin'i-căl, a. synclinal.

syn-cli-nō'ri-um, n.; pl. syn-cli-nō'ri-ȧ, [LL.] in geology, a mountain or a group of mountains supposed to have been formed by the upheaval of a pre-existent geosynclinal.

syn-clit'ic, a. pertaining to or marked by synclitism.

syn'clit-ism, n. in obstetrics, parallelism between the planes of the fetal head and those of the maternal pelvis.

syn'cō-păl, a. pertaining to or characterized by syncope.

syn'cō-pāte, v.t.; syncopated, pt., pp.; syncopating, ppr. [LL. syncopatus, pp. of syncopare, to swoon; L. syncope, syncopa, a swooning, in grammar, a syncope, from Gr. synkopē, a cutting short; syn, together, and koptein, to cut.]
1. to shorten (a word) by syncope.
2. in music, (a) to begin (a tone) on an unaccented beat and continue it through the next unaccented beat, or to begin (a tone) on the last half of a beat and continue it through the first half of the following beat; (b) to use such shifted accents in (a musical composition, passage, etc.).

syn-cō-pā'tion, n. 1. a syncopating or being syncopated.
2. syncopated music.
3. in grammar, syncope.

SYNCOPATION

syn'cō-pā-tŏr, n. one who syncopates.

syn'cō-pē, n. [L., from Gr. synkopē, a cutting short; syn, together, and koptein, to cut.]
1. in music, syncopation.
2. in grammar, an elision of one or more letters or sounds from the middle of a word, as in Wooster for Worcester.
3. in medicine, a fainting, swooning, or loss of consciousness, caused by a temporary deficiency of blood supply to the brain.

syn'cō-pist, n. one who shortens words by the use of syncope. [Rare.]

syn'cō-pīze, v.t.; syncopized, pt., pp.; syncopizing, ppr. to syncopate.

tēin′land, n. thaneland.

teï′nō·sc̣ōpe, n. [Gr. teinein, to extend, and skopein, to view.] an instrument formed by combining prisms so that the chromatic aberration of the light is corrected and the linear dimensions of objects seen through them increased or diminished.

tein′tūre (tin′), n. tainture. [Obs.]

tek·non′y·mous, a. of teknonymy.

tek·non′y·my, n. [Gr. teknon, child, and onyma, name.] in ethnology, a custom of some primitive peoples of naming parents from their offspring.

tek′tīte, n. [from Gr. tēktos, molten, and -ite.] any of certain small, dark green to black glassy bodies of various shapes, found especially in areas of the East Indies, Australia, North America, central Europe, and eastern Africa, and assumed to have originated in outer space.

tel-, same as tele-.

-tel, same as telo- (end).

tē′lȧ, n. [L., a web.] any weblike tissue, especially the membranous roof of the third and fourth ventricles of the brain, known as tela choroidea.

tel·aes·thē′sị·ȧ, n. same as telesthesia.

tel′ȧ·mon, n.; pl. tel·ȧ·mō′nēs, [L.; Gr. telamōn, bearer.] a supporting column in the form of a man's figure: see also atlantes.

tel·an·ġi·ec̣·tà·sis, tel·an″ġi·ec̣·tā′sị·ȧ, n. [Gr. telos, end, and angeion, vessel, and ektasis, extension.] in medicine, chronic dilatation of the capillary vessels and minute arteries, forming small, reddish tumors in the skin, as of the face.

tel·an·ġi·ec̣′tà·sy, n. telangiectasis.

tel·an″ġi·ec̣·tat′iç, a. pertaining to or of the nature of telangiectasis.

tel·an·ġi·ō′sis, n. [Gr. telos, end, and angeion, vessel.] any disease of the capillary vessels.

tē·lăr′i·ăn, a. [L. tela, a web.] web-spinning, as a spider.

tē·lăr′i·ăn, n. a web-spinning spider.

tel′ȧ·ry, a. [L. tela, a web.]
1. pertaining to a web; spun.
2. spinning webs; as, a telary spider.

tel·ạu′tō·ġram, n. a reproduction by a telautograph.

tel·ạu′tō·ġrȧph, n. [tel-, and Gr. autos, self, and graphein, to write.] a telegraphic apparatus by means of which handwriting, drawings, etc. are reproduced at a distance by an electrically controlled pen that makes the same motions as the transmitting pen: a trade-mark (TelAutograph).

tel′ē-, [Gr. tēle-, from tēle, far off.] a combining form meaning: (a) operating at a distance, as in *tele*graph; (b) of, in, or by television, as in *tele*cast. Also, before a vowel, tel-.

tel·ē·bar′ō·ġrȧph, n. a barograph electrically recording indications made at a distance.

tel″ē·bȧ·rom′e·tẽr, n. a barometer electrically registering indications made at a distance.

tel′ē·c̣ȧst, n. a television broadcast.

tel′ē·c̣ȧst, v.t. and v.i.; telecast or telecasted, pt., pp.; telecasting, ppr. to broadcast by television.

tel″ē·c̣om·mū″ni·c̣ā′tion, n. communication by radio, telephone, telegraph, television, etc.

tel′ē·c̣ourse, n. a course of televised lectures offered for credit by a college or other school.

tē·lec̣′trō·sc̣ōpe, n. an instrument electrically transmitting optical images of objects at a distance.

tel′ē·dụ, n. [Malay teledu.] a small, flesh-eating, burrowing animal, Mydaus meliceps, resembling a skunk, native to Java, Borneo, and Sumatra.

tel′ē·fō·tō, n., v.i. and v.t. telephotograph: a trade-mark (Telefoto).

tē·le′ġȧ, n. [Russ.] a Russian vehicle having a rude box mounted on four wheels without springs.

tel·ē·ġen′iç, a. [tele- and -genic.] artistically suited for being televised, as a person.

tel·ē·ġon′iç, a. of or affected by telegony.

te·leg′ō·ny, n. [tele- and -gony.] the supposed transmission of hereditary characteristics of one sire to offspring subsequently borne to other sires by the same female.

tel′ē·ġram, n. [tele-, and Gr. gramma, writing.] a telegraphic message, or dispatch.

tel·ē·gram′miç, a. of the nature of a telegram; hence, concise. [Rare.]

tel′ē·grȧph, n. [Fr. télégraphe, see tele- and -graph.]
1. originally, any signaling apparatus.
2. an apparatus or system for transmitting messages by electric impulses sent through a wire or converted into radio waves: basically it involves the use of a code of short and long signals, called dots and dashes, produced by the closing and opening of an electric circuit by means of a lever, or key.
3. a telegram.
acoustic telegraph; (a) a telephone; (b) a system of telegraphy in which a sounder is used as a receiving instrument.
automatic telegraph; apparatus for transmitting a telegraph message automatically, a perforated fillet of paper being prepared and inserted in the transmitting apparatus, some form of registering apparatus receiving and recording the message sent. Other forms of automatic telegraph are in use, as those in which the operation of keys resembling those of a typewriter records a message at a distant point.
chemical telegraph; telegraphic apparatus in which the receiver records the signals on a sheet of chemically prepared paper.
copying telegraph; telegraphic apparatus, as the telautograph, reproducing drawings or writing.
dial telegraph; a system of telegraphy in which the movements of a needle over a dial are duplicated by the receiving apparatus.
duplex telegraphy; see duplex, a., 2. electrochemical telegraph; a chemical telegraph.
electromagnetic telegraph; the common system of telegraphy or the apparatus used in such system.
facsimile telegraph; see under facsimile.
fire-alarm telegraph; the apparatus necessary to send in alarms to a central station or to the fire-engine houses in a district from call boxes or from fire-alarm contacts working automatically.
harmonic multiple telegraph; a system of telegraphy transmitting a number of separate and distinct musical notes over a single wire, the separate tones of which are utilized in affecting apparatus tuned in unison with such tones, the receiving operator being in communication with but one operator whose sender is tuned to his receiver.
magnetic telegraph; see under magnetic.
mechanical telegraph; any form of telegraphy in which communication is made by mechanical means.
morse telegraph; any system of telegraphy employing the Morse alphabet.
multiplex telegraph; a system of telegraphy for the simultaneous transmission of more than four separate messages over a single wire.
optical telegraph; a semaphore; also, an electric telegraph making use of a needle or pointer.
pneumatic telegraph; (a) a system of communication formerly used employing a column of water under pneumatic pressure; (b) a system by which signals may be transmitted by the compression of air confined in a tube.
quadruple telegraph; a telegraph by means of which four separate messages may be transmitted simultaneously over one wire.
space telegraph; same as wireless telegraph.
submarine telegraph; a system of telegraphy in which a submarine cable is used instead of a line wire.
wireless telegraph; see wireless telegraphy under wireless.

tel′ē·grȧph, v.t.; telegraphed (-grȧft), pt., pp.; telegraphing, ppr. 1. to convey or communicate (a message) by telegraph.
2. to send a telegram to.

tel′ē·grȧph, v.i. 1. to send a message or messages by telegraph.
2. to signal by any means.

tel′ē·grȧph cā′ble, an insulated cable containing wires for use in telegraphy.

tel′ē·grȧph clock, 1. a clock regulating other clocks by electricity.
2. one of a system of clocks regulated by telegraphic impressions from a standard clock.

tel′ē·grȧph dī′ăl, a lettered dial with a pointer moved by means of electromagnetism.

tē·leg′rȧ·phēr (or tel′ē-graph-er), n. one skilled in telegraphy; a telegraph operator.

tel″ē·grȧph·ēse′, n. the shortened, sometimes cryptic, language typical of telegrams.

tel·ē·graph′iç, a. 1. of or pertaining to the telegraph; made by a telegraph.
2. transmitted or communicated by a telegraph.
3. in the concise style of a telegram.

tel·ē·graph′i·çăl, a. telegraphic.

tel·ē·graph′i·çăl·ly, adv. 1. by means or use of the telegraph.
2. in a telegraphic manner; in the manner or style of a telegram; concisely; briefly.

tē·leg′rȧ·phist, n. a telegrapher.

tel′ē·grȧph kēy, the instrument used to make and break an electric circuit, as in Morse telegraphy.

TELEGRAPH KEY

tel·ē·graph′ō·phōne, n. a device for making phonographic or graphophonic records at a distance; the system used in making such a record.

tel·ē·graph′ō·scōpe, n. [tele- and -graph and -scope.] an instrument which transmits a picture telegraphically and reproduces its image as a positive or negative.

tel′ē·grȧph plant, a plant of East India, Desmodium gyrans, the leaves of which attract attention by their curious movements.

tel′ē·grȧph pōle, one of a number of poles bearing brackets or insulators for the support of a telegraph line.

tel′ē·grȧph pōst, a telegraph pole.

tel′ē·grȧph reġ′is·tēr, a device in telegraphy which registers the signals it receives.

tē·leg′rȧ·phy (or tel′ē-graph-y), n. 1. the operation of telegraph apparatus or the study of this.
2. transmission of messages by telegraph.
3. the making of telegraph instruments.

Tel′e·ġū, n. Telugu.

tel·ē·hȳ″drō·bȧ·rom′ē·tēr, n. an electrical device registering the height of water at a distance, as in a reservoir or standpipe.

tel″ē·ī·con′ō·grȧph, n. [tele-, and Gr. eikōn, image, and -graph.] a device combining the principles of the telescope and the camera lucida, by means of which the images of distant objects are thrown upon a screen.

tel″ē·ki·nē′sis, n. [tele-, and Gr. kinēsis, movement.] the movement of an object caused while not in contact with the body generating the force, and supposedly caused by spiritualistic methods.

tel″ē·ki·net′iç, a. of or pertaining to telekinesis.

tel·ē·leç′tric, a. [tel- (tele-) and electric.] designating or of the transmission of music, etc. to a distance by electricity.

tē·lel′ō·grȧph, n. a modification of the semaphore introduced about the close of the eighteenth century.

Tē·lem′ȧ·chus, n. [L.; Gr. Tēlemachos.] in Greek legend, the son of Odysseus and Penelope, who helped his father slay his mother's suitors.

tel″ē·mȧ·nom′ē·tēr, n. a device for recording, at a distance, the movements of a manometer.

tel″ē·mē·chan′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [tele- and mechanics.] the science of operating mechanisms by remote control through radio transmission.

tē·lem′ē·tēr, n. 1. an instrument for determining the distance of an object remote from the observer, as the distance of a target in gunnery; a range finder.
2. an electric instrument adapted for recording at a distance the readings of other instruments.

tel·ē·met′riç, a. of, determined by, or pertaining to a telemeter or telemetry.

tē·lem′ē·try, n. the science of the use of the telemeter.

tel′ē·mō·tŏr, n. a hydraulic or electrical device controlling the action of mechanical apparatus at a distance; specifically, such a device controlling the steering gear of a ship.

tel″en·cē·phal′iç, a. of the telencephalon.

tel·en·ceph′ȧ·lon, n. [Mod. L.; tel- and encephalon.] the anterior end of the embryonic brain structure of a vertebrate, from which the cerebral hemispheres are developed.

tē·len′ġi·scōpe, n. [tele-, and Gr. engus, near, and skopein, to view.] a combined telescope and microscope.

tel′ē·ō-, tel′e-, [from Gr. teleos, complete.] combining forms used in various scientific terms to signify perfect, whole.

Tē″lē·ō·ceph′ȧ·lī, n.pl. an order of fishes, widely distributed, including those in which the cranium has the full complement of bones.

tē″lē·ō·ceph′ȧ·lous, a. pertaining to or resembling the Teleocephali.

Tel″ē·ō·des·mā′cē·ȧ, n.pl. in zoology, an order of bivalves with strongly developed hinges.

tē″lē·ō·loġ′i·çăl, a. having to do with teleology; relating to final causes; concerned with design or purpose in nature.

tē″lē·ō·loġ′i·çăl·ly, adv. in a teleological manner.

tē·lē·ol′ō·ġist, n. a student of or believer in teleology.

tē·lē·ol′ō·ġy, n. [Gr. telos, teleos, an end, and -logy.]
1. the study of final causes.
2. the fact or quality of being directed toward a definite end or of having an ultimate purpose, especially as attributed to natural processes.
3. a belief, as that of vitalism, that natural phenomena are determined not only by mechanical causes but by an over-all design or purpose in nature: opposed to mechanism.
4. the study of evidence for this belief.

tē′lē·ō·phōre, n. same as gonangium.

tē′lē·ō·phȳte, n. [teleo-, and Gr. phyton, plant.] a plant composed of a number of cells arranged in tissues.

tē″lē·or·gan′iç, a. essential to organic life.

tē′lē·ō·sȧur, n. a fossil saurian of the genus Teleosaurus.

Tē″lē·ō·sȧu′rus, n. [teleo-, and Gr. sauros, a lizard.] in paleontology, a genus of fossil saurians with long and narrow snouts. They are confined to the oölitic division of the secondary rocks.

tē′lē·ost, tē·lē·os′tē·ăn, a. of, belonging to, or pertaining to the Teleostei.

tē′lē·ost, tē·lē·os′tē·ăn, n. a teleost fish.

Tē·lē·os′tē·ī, n.pl. [teleo-, and Gr. osteon, bone.] a subclass of fishes including the great majority of those having a well-ossified skeleton: it comprises almost all the common fishes, and includes the groups Malacopteri, Acanthini, Acanthopteri, Plectognathi, and Lophobranchii.

Tē·lē·os′tō·mī′, n.pl. a division of fishes including the ganoids and the ordinary fishes.

tē″lē·ō·trō′ċhȧ, n. same as telotrocha.

tē″lē·ō·zō′iç, a. of or pertaining to a teleozoon.

tē″lē·ō·zō′ŏn, n. [teleo-, and Gr. zōon, an animal.] any animal composed of a number of cells and arranged in tissues.

tel·ē·path′iç, a. of, pertaining to, or acting through telepathy.

tel·ē·path′i·çăl·ly, adv. by telepathy.

tē·lep′ȧ·thist, n. 1. a believer in or student of telepathy.
2. a person supposedly possessing telepathic power.

tē·lep′ȧ·thy, n. [tele- and -pathy; coined (1882) by F. W. Myers (1843–1901).] supposed communication between minds by some means other than the normal sensory channels; transference of thought.

tel′ē·phēme, n. a telephonic communication. [Rare.]

tel′ē·phōne, n. [tele- and -phone; adopted by Bell (1876) after use for other sound instruments.] an instrument or system for conveying speech over distances by converting sound into electric impulses sent through a wire: it consists of a transmitter and receiver, often with a dialing mechanism for connecting lines: often shortened to phone.

DIAGRAM OF TELEPHONE

automatic telephone; a system of telephony, or the apparatus used in such a system, by which an automatic switchboard places the person making a call in direct communication with the number called, thus eliminating the need for a central operator.

dial telephone; a telephone having a dial attached to it by means of which a telephone number may be called.

DIAL TELEPHONE

local telephone; a telephone or telephone system for use in a certain district, as in a city or town.

long-distance telephone; a telephone or telephone system for communication with a place at a considerable distance.

string telephone; the simplest form of telephone, often sold as a toy, consisting of two cups having the bottoms of tightly stretched membranes connected by a cord: a true mechanical telephone.

tel'ē·phōne, v.i.; telephoned, pt., pp.; telephoning, ppr. to communicate by telephone; to convey a message by telephone: often shortened to phone.

tel'ē·phōne, v.t. 1. to convey (a message) by telephone.
2. to speak to or reach (a person) by telephone; to call.
Often shortened to phone.

tel'ē·phōne bo̤o̤th, a booth in which one using a telephone may talk without being overheard or disturbed by outside noises.

tel'ē·phōne ex·chānġe', a central office where telephonic connections are made so that telephone conversations may be carried on between any two stations.

tel'ē·phōne gĭrl, a girl operator at a switchboard: also called telephone operator.

tel'ē·phōne num'bẽr, in telephony, a number, or more commonly an exchange call name and a number, by which a subscriber may be called on the telephone.

tel'ē·phōne rē·cēiv'ẽr, that part of a telephone which is held to the ear and converts the varying electrical impulses into sound: it is either a separate unit or a part of a handset.

tel'ē·phōne set, in telephony, a group of devices consisting of a telephone transmitter and receiver, together with the necessary circuit and signaling connections.

tel·ē·phon'iç, a. 1. of or having to do with a telephone or telephones.
2. transmitted by a telephone.

tel·ē·phon'i·çăl·ly, adv. in a telephonic manner; by telephone.

tē·leph'ō·nist, n. a person versed in telephony, or who operates a telephone.

tel·ē·phō'nō·grȧph, n. an instrument for recording telephonic communications.

tē·leph'ō·ny, n. 1. the art, science, or practice of transmitting communications by the telephone.
2. the making or operation of telephones.

tel'ē·phōte, n. [tele-, and Gr. phōs, phōtos, light.] any of various devices for reproducing pictures or photographic images of visible objects at a distance by electricity.

tel"ē·phō'tō, a. 1. telephotographic.
2. designating or of a compound lens that produces a large image of a distant object in a camera of ordinary focal length.

tel"ē·phō'tō, n. a telephotograph.

tel·ē·phō'tō·grȧph, n. 1. a photograph taken with a telephoto lens.
2. a photograph transmitted by telephotography.

tel·ē·phō'tō·grȧph, v.t. and v.i. 1. to take (photographs) with a telephoto lens.
2. to transmit (photographs) by telephotography.

tel"ē·phō"tō·grȧph'iç, a. of, pertaining to, having to do with, or used in telephotography.
telephotographic lens; a telephoto lens.

tel"ē·phō·tog'rȧ·phy, n. 1. the art or process of photographing distant objects by using a telephoto lens or a telescope with the camera.
2. the science or process of transmitting photographs over distances by converting light rays into electric signals which are sent over wire or radio channels: the receiver converts the electric signals back into light rays to which a photographic film is exposed.

tel"ē·pō·lar'i·sc̣ōpe, n. a polariscope and telescope combined.

tel'ē·pōst, n. [Gr. tele, and post, a dispatch.] an automatic, high-speed telegraph system, the transmitter being operated by a perforated tape.

tel'ē·print·ẽr, n. a teletypewriter. [Chiefly Brit.]

tel'ē·ran, n. [from *tele*vision *r*adar *a*ir *n*avigation.] an electronic aid to aerial navigation by which data received by radar, maps of the terrain, etc. are transmitted to aircraft by television.

tel'ẽr·ġy, n. the influence one brain is supposed to have over that of another at a distance through hypothetical mental force.

tel·ē·ryth'rin, n. in chemistry, a crystalline compound of a red color, derived from erythrin.

tel'ē·sc̣ope, n. [It. telescopio (Galileo, 1611); Mod. L. telescopium, from Gr. tēleskopos, seeing from a distance, from tēle, far, off and skopein, to view.] an instrument for making distant objects, as the stars, appear nearer and consequently larger: it consists of a tube or series of tubes containing lenses and is of two types, refracting, in which the image is focused on a lens, and reflecting, in which the image is focused on a mirror.

HAND TELESCOPE

astronomical telescope; a telescope provided with a simple eyepiece by which the image of the object is inverted.

broken telescope; a telescope the tube of which is bent at right angles about midway between the focus and the object glass, a prism or mirror doing the reflecting.

Cassegrainian telescope; a form of the reflecting telescope in which the great speculum is perforated like the Gregorian telescope, but the rays converging from the surface of the mirror are reflected back by a small convex mirror in the axis of the telescope, and come to a focus at a point near the aperture in the speculum, where they form an inverted image, which is viewed by the eyepiece screwed into the tube behind the speculum.

equatorial telescope; see equatorial, n.

Galilean telescope; see under Galilean.

Gregorian telescope; see under Gregorian.

Herschelian telescope; a reflecting telescope in which only one speculum is employed, by means of which an image of the object is formed near one side of the open end of the tube, and to this the eyeglass is applied directly.

Keplerian telescope; a refracting telescope employing a convex lens of a short focus for an eyepiece, available only for astronomical observations.

Newtonian telescope; see under Newtonian.

photographic telescope; a telescope constructed so as to photograph celestial bodies.

prism telescope; a teinoscope.

reflecting telescope; a telescope with a concave mirror at the lower end of the tube, which receives the light from the object and reflects it to a focus near the top of the tube.

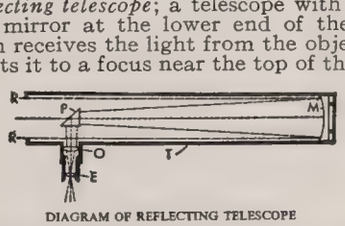

DIAGRAM OF REFLECTING TELESCOPE
T, tube; R, rays reflected from M, mirror to P, prism to O, objective lens to E, eyepiece refracting telescope; 1. a telescope in which a large double-convex lens (object glass) causes light rays to converge to a focus, forming an image magnified by a double-convex eyepiece.

2. a similar telescope, in which the converging rays are intercepted by a double-concave eyepiece.

REFRACTING TELESCOPE

sciatheric telescope; see under sciatheric.

terrestrial telescope; a telescope having an eyepiece with two more lenses than an astronomical one. It inverts the image and shows objects in an erect position.

tel'ē·sc̣ōpe, a. having parts that slide one inside the other.

tel'ē·sc̣ōpe, v.i.; telescoped (-sc̣ōpt), pt., pp.; telescoping, ppr. to slide or be forced one into another like the concentric tubes of a small; collapsible telescope.

tē·tan'iç, a. [L. tetanicus, from Gr. tetanikos, from tetanos, spasm.] of the nature of, pertaining to, characterized by, or producing tetanus.

tē·tan'iç, n. any drug, as strychnine, which in overdoses can cause tetanic spasms of the muscles, often resulting in death.

tet·à·nil'là, n. [LL., dim. of tetanus.] a form of tetany without rigidity but attended by mental changes.

tet'à·nïne, n. a poisonous ptomaine, $C_{18}H_{30}N_2O_4$, obtained from cultures of the tetanus bacillus or the tissues of patients affected with tetanus. It produces paralysis, tetanic convulsions, and death.

tet"à·ni·zā'tion, n. a tetanic state or condition; the production of tetanus.

tet'à·nīze, v.t.; tetanized, pt., pp.; tetanizing, ppr. to affect with or cause tetanus in.

tet'à·noid, a. [Gr. tetanos, spasm, and eidos, form.] resembling tetanus.

tet"à·nō·mō'tŏr, n. a device for the mechanical production of tetanic motor spasm in a muscle.

tet"à·nō·tox'in, n. [Gr. tetanos, spasm; and toxin, poison.] a ptomaine obtained from the cultures of the tetanus bacillus.

tet'à·nus, n. [Gr. tetanos, a spasm, lit., stretched.] 1. in medicine, an acute infectious disease, often fatal, caused by the toxins of a specific bacillus which usually enters the body through wounds: it is characterized by spasmodic contractions and rigidity of some or all of the voluntary muscles. 2. in physiology, the state of continuous contraction of a muscle undergoing a series of rapidly repeated stimuli.

tet'à·ny, n. [from Mod. L. tetania, from Gr. tetanos, spasm.] an abnormal condition characterized by tetanic spasms of the arm and leg muscles, resulting usually from the faulty metabolism of calcium salts.

tē·tärd', n. a gobioid fish, Eleotris gyrinus, found in the southern part of the United States.

tē·tär'tō-, [from Gr. tetartos, fourth.] a combining form meaning one fourth, as in tetartohedral.

tē·tär·tō·hē'drăl, a. [tetarto- and -hedral.] having one fourth of the planes needed for crystallographic symmetery.

tē·tär·tō·hē'drăl·ly, adv. in a tetartohedral form or arrangement.

tē·tär·tō·hē'drism, n. the state or property of being modified tetartohedrally.

tē·tär·tō·hē'drŏn, n. a tetartohedral form.

tetched (techt), a. touched; demented. [Dial. or Humorous.]

tetch'i·ness, n. the state or quality of being tetchy.

tetch'y, a.; comp. tetchier; superl. tetchiest, [var. of techy.] touchy; irritable; peevish: also spelled techy.

tête (tāt), n. [Fr., head.] false hair; a kind of ornamented wig worn by women in the eighteenth century. [Obs.]

tet'rà-, [from Gr. tettares, four.] a combining form meaning four, as in tetrachord; also, before a vowel, tetr-.

tet·rà·bā'siç, a. [tetra- and basic.] designating or of an acid having four replaceable hydrogen atoms per molecule.

tet·rȧ·bō′riç, a. same as pyroboric.

tet′rȧ·brach, n. [tetra-, and Gr. brachys, short.] in ancient prosody, a foot or word of four short syllables; a proceleusmatic.

tet′rȧ·brañch, a. and n. same as tetrabranchiate.

Tet·rȧ·brañ·chi·ā′tȧ, n.pl. an order of Cephalopoda, comprising the two families Nautilidæ and Ammonitidæ. Of this order, the pearly nautilus may be regarded as the type, being the only living member of the order, though its fossil representatives, Orthoceras, Ammonites, etc., are abundant. The characteristic features of the order are the external many-chambered shell, the septa between the chambers of which are perforated by the tube, called a siphuncle, and the four branchiae.

tet·rȧ·brañ′chi·āte, a. of or belonging to the Tetrabranchiata; having four gills (branchiae).

tet·rȧ·brañ′chi·āte, n. one of the Tetrabranchiata.

tet·rȧ·çär′pel·lār·y, a. in botany, having four carpels.

tet·rac′ĕr·ous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. keras, horn.] having four horns or processes resembling horns, as a snail.

tet·rȧ·çhlō′rīde, n. any chemical compound with four chlorine atoms to the molecule.

tet′rȧ·çhord, n. [Gr. tetrachordon, musical instrument, from tetrachordos, four-stringed.]
1. in music, a series of four consecutive full tones comprising a total interval of a fourth; half an octave.
2. a four-stringed lyre.

tet·rȧ·çhord′ăl, a. of a tetrachord.

tet·rȧ·çhot′ō·mous, a. [Gr. tetracha, in four parts, and tomos, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.] having a division by four; separated into four parts or series, or into series of fours.

tet·rac′id, a. [tetr- and acid.] in chemistry, capable of replacing four atoms of hydrogen in an acid; also, having four atoms of hydrogen replaceable by acid radicals.

te·trac′id, n. 1. a base that can react with four molecules of a monobasic acid to form a salt.
2. an alcohol having four OH groups per molecule.

tet·rȧ·çoç′çous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. kokkos, a berry.] in botany, having four cells elastically dehiscing and separating.

Tet·rȧ·çoç′çus, n. a genus or form of microscopic plants made up of a tetrad or of tetrads of cells.

tet·rȧ·çō′lŏn, n. [tetra-, and Gr. kōlon, a member.] in Greek and Latin prosody, a stanza or division of lyric poetry consisting of four verses.

tet″rȧ·çor′ăl, n. any of the Tetracoralla.

Tet″rȧ·çō·ral′lȧ, n.pl. same as Rugosa.

tet′rȧ·çō·sāne″, n. [Gr. tetra, four, and eikosi, twenty.] in chemistry, $C_{24}H_{50}$, a solid hydrocarbon of the paraffin series, particularly the normal type which melts at 54° C.

tet′raçt, a. [tetra-, and Gr. aktis, a ray.] having four rays, as a sponge spicule.

tet′raçt, n. a four-rayed sponge spicule.

tet·raç′ti·năl, tet·raç′tine, a. tetract.

tet·raç·ti·nel′lid, a. pertaining to or characteristic of the Tetractinellida.

tet·raç·ti·nel′lid, n. one of the Tetractinellida.

Tet·raç·ti·nel′li·dȧ, n.pl. [tetra-, and Gr. aktis (-inis), a ray.] a division of siliceous sponges with four-rayed spicules. It includes the families Choristida and Lithistida.

tet·raç·ti·nel′li·dăn, a. tetractinellid.

tet·raç·ti·nel′line, a. tetractinellid.

te·traç′ti·nōse, a. tetractinal.

te·traç′tys, n. [Gr. tetraktys, a group of four.] ten as the total obtained by adding one, two, three and four. [Obs.]

tet·rȧ·cyç′liç, a. having four circles or whorls of floral parts, as flowers.

tet″rȧ·cy′çlo-, a combining form meaning having four circles or four atomic rings.

tet′rad, a. in chemistry, quadrivalent.

tet′rad, n. [Gr. tetras (-ados), the number four.]
1. the number four.
2. a group or set of four things.
3. in chemistry, an atom, radical, or element having a valence of four.
4. a group of four chromosomes formed by the division of a pair during meiosis.

tet·rȧ·daç′tyl, tet·rȧ·daç′tyle, a. having four digits on each limb.

tet·rȧ·daç′tyl, n. a tetradactyl animal.

tet″rȧ·daç·tyl′i·ty, n. the state or quality of being tetradactyl.

tet·rȧ·daç′tyl·ous, a. tetradactyl.

tet′rȧ·därçh″y (-därk″y), n. a tetrachy.

tet·rȧ·deç′ăne, n. [tetra-, and Gr. deka, ten.] one of the paraffins, $C_{14}H_{30}$, found in petroleum and in the light oils obtained by the distillation of coal.

tet·rȧ·deç′ȧ·pod, a. having fourteen feet; pertaining to the Tetradecapoda.

tet·rȧ·deç′ȧ·pod, n. one of the Tetradecapoda.

Tet″rȧ·dē·çap′ō·dȧ, n.pl. the Arthrostraca, an order of crustaceans the typical adult of which has seven pairs of feet.

tet″rȧ·dec′yl al′çō·hol, [tetra-, decyl and alcohol.] in chemistry, $C_{14}H_{29}OH$, one of the higher alcohols of the methane series, particularly that obtained by reducing myristic aldehyde, which yields a waxlike solid.

tet″rȧ·dī·ȧ·pā′şŏn, n. a quadruple diapason or octave: also called a quadruple eighth or twenty-ninth.

tet·rad′iç, a. of or pertaining to a tetrad.

Tet′rȧ·dīte, n. [from Gr. tetras, four.] one of certain sects, as the Manichees, who believed there were four persons in the Godhead.

tet′rȧ·drachm (-dram), n. a silver coin of ancient Greece worth four drachmas.

tet·rad′y·mīte, n. [Gr. tetradymos, fourfold: so named because it occurs in compound twin crystals.] a native bismuth telluride, Bi_2Te_3, a pale, steel-gray mineral in foliated form.

Tet″rȧ·dy·nā′mi·ȧ, n.pl. [tetra-, and Gr. dynamis, power.] in botany, a former classification of plants having six stamens, four of which are longer than the others.

tet″rȧ·dy·nā′mi·ăn, tet·rȧ·dyn′ȧ·mous, a. having six stamens, four of which are uniformly longer than the others; pertaining to the Tetradynamia.

tet·rȧ·eth′yl lead (led), same as lead tetraethyl.

tē·traġ′ē·nous, a. splitting into groups of four: said of bacteria.

tet′rȧ·gon, n. [tetra-, and Gr. gōnia, angle.]
1. in geometry, a plane figure with four sides and four angles; a quadrangle.
2. in astrology, an aspect of two planets with regard to the earth, when they are distant from each other ninety degrees, or the fourth of a circle.

TETRAGONS

1. square, 2. parallelogram or oblong, 3. rhombus, 4. rhomboid, 5. trapezoid, 6. trapezium tet·rag′ō·năl, a. 1. of, or having the form of, a tetragon; quadrangular.

2. designating or of a system of crystallization in which the three axes are at right angles, the two lateral axes being of equal length, and the third shorter or longer.
3. in botany, having four prominent longitudinal angles, as a stem.

te·trag′ō·nous, a. tetragonal.

tet′rȧ·gram, n. 1. a word of four letters.
2. [also T–] the Tetragrammaton.

Tet·rȧ·gram′mȧ·ton, n. [tetra-, and Gr. gramma, a letter.] the four consonants of the ancient Hebrew name for God (variously written JHVH, IHVH, JHWH, YHVH, YHWH), considered too sacred to pronounce: the word Adonai (Lord) is substituted for this name in utterance, and the vowels of Adonai or Elohim (God) are inserted in Hebrew texts, so that the modern reconstructions are Yahweh, Jehovah, etc.

tet′rȧ·ġyn, n. one of the Tetragynia.

Tet·rȧ·ġyn′i·ȧ, n.pl. [tetra-, and Gr. gynē, a female.] in botany, a former classification of hermaphrodite plants having four styles.

tet·rȧ·ġyn′i·ăn, a. tetragynous.

te·traġ′y·nous, a. in botany, hermaphrodite with four styles; pertaining to the Tetragynia.

tet·rȧ·hē′drăl, a. 1. pertaining to or having the form of a tetrahedron.
2. in crystallography, (a) having the form of the regular tetrahedron; (b) pertaining or relating to a tetrahedron, or the system of forms to which the tetrahedron belongs.
tetrahedral angle; a solid angle which has four plane angles for its boundaries.

tet·rȧ·hē′drăl·ly, a. in a tetrahedral manner.

tet·rȧ·hē′drīte, n. [Gr. tetraëdrit.] a gray to blackish mineral occurring in tetrahedral crystals, essentially a sulfide of copper and antimony, $3Cu_2S{\cdot}Sb_2S$: in many forms the copper is partly replaced by iron, lead, silver etc.

tet·rȧ·hē′droid, n. in geometry, the envelope of a quadric surface contiguous to eight given lines.

TETRAHEDRON

tet·rȧ·hē′drŏn, n.; pl. tet·rȧ·hē′drŏns, tet·rȧ·hē′drȧ, [tetra-, and Gr. hedra, a base.] a solid figure with four triangular surfaces.

tet·rȧ·hex·ȧ·hē′drăl, a. pertaining to or of the form of a tetrahexahedron.

tet·rȧ·hex·ȧ·hē′drŏn, n. a solid bounded by twenty-four equal faces, four corresponding to each face of the cube.

TETRAHEXAHEDRON

tet″rȧ·kis·hex·ȧ·hē′drŏn, n. a tetrahexahedron.

tet′rȧ·kō·sāne, n. [tetra-, and Gr. eikosi, twenty.] same as tetracosane.

te·tral′ō·ġy, n.; pl. te·tral′ō·ġies, [Gr. tetralogia; see tetra- and -logy.]
1. a series of four dramas, three tragic and one satiric, performed together at ancient Athens at the festival of Dionysus.
2. any series of four related dramatic, operatic, or literary compositions.

Te·tram′e·rȧ, n.pl. [tetra-, and Gr. meros, a part.] a division of coleopterous insects, distinguished by having all the tarsi four-jointed, as in the Rhynchophora.

te·tram′ĕr·ăl, a. tetramerous.

te·tram′ĕr·ous, a. consisting of or divided into four parts; characterized by having four parts; specifically, (a) in botany, applied to a flower or other complex organ having its parts in fours: often written 4-merous; (b) in zoology, having or seeming to have four joints in the tarsi.

te·tram′e·tĕr, n. [Gr. tetrametros; see tetra- and meter (rhythm).]
1. a line of verse containing four metrical feet or measures. Example: "Tĕrĕnce, / thís ĭs / stúpĭd / stúff."
2. verse consisting of tetrameters.

te·tram′e·tĕr, a. having four metrical feet or measures.

tet·rȧ·meth′yl·ēne, n. [tetra- and methylene.] a bivalent radical, $-CH_2CH_2CH_2CH_2-$.

tet′rȧ·morph, n. [tetra-, and Gr. morphē, form.] in Christian art, the union of the four attributes of the evangelists in one figure, winged, and standing on winged fiery wheels, the wings being covered with eyes.

Te·tran′drі·ȧ, n.pl. [tetra-, and Gr. anēr, andros, a male.] formerly, the fourth class of plants in the Linnaean system, including those that have four stamens.

te·tran′dri·ăn, a. in botany, belonging to the class Tetrandria.

te·tran′drous, a. tetrandrian.

tet·rā′ō·nid, n. one of the Tetraonidæ.

Tet·rā·on′i·dae, n.pl. the grouse family, a family of birds belonging to the order Gallinæ, type genus Tetrao.

tet·rȧ·pet′ăl·ous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. petalon, leaf.] in botany, having four distinct petals.

tet·rȧ·phär′mȧ·çon, n. [tetra-, and Gr. pharmakon, a drug.] a combination of wax, resin, lard, and pitch, composing an ointment.

tet·rȧ·phē′nōl, n. furan. [Rare.]

tet·rȧ·phyl′lous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. phyllon, leaf.] in botany, having four leaves; consisting of four distinct leaves or leaflets.

Tet′rȧ·plȧ, n. [tetra-, and Gr. -ploos, fold.] an edition of the Old Testament in four versions, specifically, an edition of the Greek Testament compiled by Origen, containing four different versions.

Tet·rap·neū′mō·nȧ, n.pl. [tetra-, and Gr. pneumōn, lung.] a division of Araneida, four-lunged spiders having two pairs of lung sacs and two pairs of spinnerets. The division includes the trap-door spiders.

tet″rap·neū·mō′ni·ăn, n. a member of the Tetrapneumona.

tet′rȧ·pod, a. having only four perfect legs, as certain butterflies.

tet′rȧ·pod, n. a four-footed animal; specifically, an insect having only four perfect legs, as certain Lepidoptera.

te·trap′ō·dy, n. in prosody, a set or measure of four feet.

te·trap′ō·lis, n. [tetra-, four, and Gr. polis, city.] four cities grouped or confederated; a grouping or alliance of four municipalities.

tet·rà·pol'i·tăn, a. of or relating to a tetrapolis.
Tetrapolitan Confession; in church history, a confession of faith submitted by the municipalities of Constance, Strasbourg, Memmingen, and Lindau to the Diet of Augsburg, in 1530.
te·trap'tĕr·ăn, n. [tetra-, and Gr. pteron, wing.] any four-winged insect.
te·trap'tĕr·ous, a. 1. in biology, having four wings.
2. in botany, having four winglike parts; as, tetrapterous fruit.
tet'trap·tōte, n. [tetra-, and Gr. ptōsis, a case.] in grammar, a noun that has four cases only.
tet"rà·pỹ·rē'nous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. pyrēn, a fruit stone.] in botany, four-stoned, as certain fruit.
te·tra·quē'trous (-tra-kwē'), a. [tetra-, and L. quadratus, square.] having four very sharp and almost winged corners, as the stalks of some plants.
tē'trärch (or tet'), n. [ME. tetrarche; LL. tetrarcha; L. tetrarches; Gr. tetrarchēs, from tetra-, four, and archos, ruler.]
1. in the ancient Roman Empire, the ruler of part (originally a fourth part) of a province.
2. a subordinate prince, governor, etc.
tē'trärch, a. in botany, having four points of origin.
tē'trärch·āte, n. the fourth part of a province under a Roman tetrarch; also, the territory under the jurisdiction of a tetrarch.
tē·trärch'i·çăl, a. pertaining to a tetrarch or a tetrarchy.
tē'trärch·y, n.; pl. tē'trärch·ies, 1. the rule, jurisdiction, or territory of a tetrarch.
2. government by four persons.
3. a group of four rulers.
4. a country divided into four subordinate governments.
tet·rà·schis'tic, a. in biology, divided into four parts by fission.
tet'rà·sēme, a. [tetra-, and Gr. sēma, a sign.] in prosody, constituted of or having the measure of four morae.
tet·rà·sep'ăl·ous, a. in botany, having four sepals.
tet·rà·spas'tŏn, n. [tetra-, and Gr. span, pull, stretch.] in mechanics, a machine in which four pulleys act together.
tet·rà·spēr'mous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. sperma, seed.] in botany, having four seeds.
tet'rà·spō·range, n. a tetrasporangium.
tet"rà·spō·ran'gi·um, n. in botany, a tetraspore-producing sporangium.
tet'rà·spōre, n. in botany, any of the asexual spores, usually four in number, produced in certain algae.
tet·rà·spor'iç, a. of or pertaining to tetraspores.
tet'ra·stiçh, n. [L. tetrastichon; Gr. tetrastichon, from tetra-, four, and stichos, verse.] a stanza, epigram, or poem consisting of four lines.
tet·rà·stiçh'iç, a. 1. of a tetrastich.
2. in tetrastichs.
3. having four lines.
tē·tras'ti·chous, a. [tetra-, and Gr. stichos, row.] in botany, in four vertical rows, as the flowers on some spikes.
tet'rà·stỹle, n. in architecture, a building with four columns in front.
tet'rà·stỹle, a. in architecture, having four columns in front.
tet"rà·syl·lab'ic, tet"rà·syl·lab'i·çăl, a. consisting of four syllables.
tet·rà·syl'là·ble, n. a word consisting of four syllables.
tet·rà·thē'çăl, a. [tetra-, and Gr. theka, a case.] in botany, having four cells or cavities in the ovary.
tet'rà·thē·ism, n. in theology, the doctrine of a Godhead, in which there are four distinct offices or functions, the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost, and a Divine Essence.

TETRASTYLE TEMPLE

tet·rà·thi'on·āte, n. a salt of tetrathionic acid.
tet"rà·thī·on'iç, a. [tetra-, and Gr. theion sulfur.] designating an unstable acid of sulfur containing oxygen and hydrogen, $H_2S_4O_6$.
tet·rà·tom'iç, a. 1. designating or of a molecule consisting of four atoms.
2. having four replaceable atoms or groups.
3. tetravalent. [Rare.]
te·tra·vā'lence, n. quadrivalence.
te·tra·vā'lent, a. 1. having a valence of four.
2. having four valences.
Also, esp. for 2, quadrivalent.
te·trax'i·ăl, a. in biology, provided with four axes; as, tetraxial spicules.
te·trax'ile, a. tetraxial.
te·trax'ŏn, n. a tetraxial spicule.
te·trax'ŏn, a. having four axes; tetraxial.
te·traz'o-, a combining form used in chemistry to designate, (a) a compound containing four atoms of nitrogen; (b) the presence of four azo groups.
tet'rà·zōne, n. any member of a series of basic compounds characterized by four atoms of nitrogen.
tet'ri·çe, tet'ri·çăl, a. froward; perverse; harsh; sour; rugged. [Rare.]
tet'ri·çăl·ness, n. frowardness; perverseness. [Obs.]
te·tric'ity, n. crabbedness; perverseness. [Rare.]
tet'ric·ous, a. tetric. [Obs.]
te·trin'iç, a. containing a radical with four carbon atoms; as, tetrinic acid, $C_4H_3O_3(CH_3)$. tet'rōde, n. [tetr- and -ode.] an electron tube having four elements (usually a cathode, a plate, a control grid, and a screening grid).
Tet'rō·don, n. 1. a genus of teleostean fishes, apparently having four large teeth, the jaws being each divided by a central suture.
2. [t-] a fish of the genus Tetrodon.
tet'rō·dont, n. a tetrodon: also written tetraodont.
tet'rō·dont, a. of or relating to tetrodons.
tet'rŏl, n. [Gr. tetra, four.] a hypothetical hydrocarbon, C_4H_4. tet·rol'iç, a. designating a monobasic acid, $C_4H_4O_2$.
te·trox'id, n. same as tetroxide.
te·trox'ide, n. any oxide with four atoms of oxygen in each molecule.
tet'ry·lēne, n. same as butylene.
tet'tĕr, n. [AS. teter, prob. from Celt.]
1. any of various skin diseases characterized by itching, as eczema, psoriasis, etc.
2. a cutaneous disease of animals which spreads on the body in different directions and causes a troublesome itching.
tet'tĕr, v.t.; tettered, pt., pp.; tettering, ppr. to affect with tetter in any of its types.
tet'tĕr ber'ry, a plant, Bryonia dioica; also, its red berry, formerly reputed to be a cure for tetter. [Brit.]
tet'tĕr·ous, a. of or characterized by tetter.
tet'tĕr-tot"tĕr, n. same as titter-totter.
tet'tĕr·wŏrt, n. either of two papaveraceous plants, Chelidonium majus, or Sanguinaria canadensis: so called because reputed to cure tetter.
tet'tix, n. [Gr. tettix, a cicada.]
1. a cicada. [Obs.]
2. [T-] a genus of acridian grasshoppers.
teūch'it, n. a bird, the lapwing. [Scot.] Teū'çri·ăn, a. and n. [from Teucer, first king of Troy.] Trojan. teū'çrin, n. a crystalline glucoside, $C_{21}H_{24}O_{11}$, extracted from the plant Teucrium fruticans.
Teū'çri·um, n. a genus of labiate plants, including many species, some of which are valued for their medicinal qualities.
teū'fit, n. [imitative.] teuchit. [Brit. Dial.]
teūk, n. a snipe, the redshank. [Brit. Dial.]
Teū'tŏn, n. [from L. Teutones.]
1. a member of the Teutones.
2. a member of any Teutonic people; especially, a German.
Teū·tō'nēs, n.pl. [L.] an ancient tribe, variously considered as Teutonic or Celtic, that lived north of the Elbe in Jutland.

thē″ō·my·thol'ō·ġy, n. [Gr. theos, a god, and mythologia, mythology.] a mixture or combination of theology and mythology; as, the theomythology of the Iliad. [Rare.]

Thē·ō·pas'çhīte, n. [L.Gr. Theopaschitēs, from theos, a god, and paschein, to suffer.] one who believes that God suffered in Christ's crucifixion; a Monophysite.

thē·ō·pas'ç̣hi·tiṣm, n. the doctrine taught by the Theopaschites.

thē"ō·pa·thet'iç, thē·ō·path'iç, a. pertaining to theopathy.

thē·op'a·thy, n.; pl. thē·op'a·thieṣ, [Gr. theos, a god, and pathos, passion.] religious emotion; mystical ecstasy.

thē·ō·phan'iç, a. relating to a theophany; making an actual appearance to man, as a god.

thē·oph'a·ny, n.; pl. thē·oph'a·nieṣ, [Gr. theos, god, and phainesthai, to appear.]
1. a supposed manifestation of God or of gods to man by actual appearance.
2. [T–] the festival of the Epiphany.

thē·ō·phil·ăn·throp'iç, a. relating to theophilanthropism or to its adherents.

thē"ō·phi·lan'thrō·piṣm, n. love of both God and man; the doctrines or tenets of the theophilanthropists: also written theophilanthropy.

thē"ō·phi·lan'thrō·pist, n. [Gr. theos, a god, and philanthrōpos, a lover of man.]
1. one who practices or professes theophilanthropism.
2. one of a society formed at Paris during the first French revolution. It had for its object to establish a new religion in place of Roman Catholicism, which had been abolished by the Convention. The system of belief thus attempted to be established was pure deism.

thē"ō·phi·lan'thrō·py, n. same as theophilanthropism.

thē'ō·phile, n. [Gr. theos, a god, and philein, to love.] one who loves or is loved by God.

thē·ō·phil·ō·soph'iç, a. combining or pertaining to the combination of theism and philosophy.

Thē·ō·phrō'ni·ănṣ, n.pl. same as Agnoetae, sense 1.

thē·ō·phyl'lïne, thē·ō·phyl'lin, n. [from Mod. L. thea, tea, and Gr. phyllon, leaf; and -ine.] a colorless, crystalline alkaloid, $C_7H_8O_2N_4·H_2O$, extracted from tea leaves: an isomer of, and used like, theobromine.

thē·op·neūs'tiç, thē·op·neūs'ted, a. given by inspiration of the Spirit of God. [Rare.]

thē'op·neūs·ty, n. [Gr. theopneustos, inspired of God, from theos, a god, and pnein, to breathe.] divine inspiriation; the mysterious power which the Divine Spirit exercises in making men know and communicate the revealed truth.

thē·ọr'bist, n. a performer on the theorbo.

thē·ọr'bō, n. [It. tiorba; Fr. théorbe.] an obsolete musical instrument, very popular in the seventeenth century. It resembled a large lute, but had two heads, to each of which some of the strings were attached.

thē'ō·rem, n. [Fr. théorème, from Gr. theōrēma, from theōrein, to look at, to view.]
1. a propostion that is not self-evident but that can be proved from accepted premises and so is established as a law or principle.
2. an expression of relations in an equation or formula.
3. in mathematics and physics, a proposition embodying something to be proved.
binomial theorem; see under binomial.
universal theorem; a theorem which is applicable to any quantity whatever.

thē'ō·rem, v.t. theoremed, pt., pp.; theoreming, ppr. to reduce to a theorem; to express as a theorem. [Rare.]

thē"ō·rem·at'iç, a. pertaining to a theorem; comprised in a theorem; consisting of theorems; as, theorematic truth.

thē"ō·rem·at'i·çăl, a. theorematic.

thē·ō·rem'ạ·tist, n. one who formulates theorems.

thē·ō·rem'iç, a. theorematic.

thē·ō·ret'iç, a. same as theoretical.

thē·ō·ret'iç, n. same as theoretics.

thē·ō·ret'i·çăl, a. [LL. theoreticus; Gr. theōrētikos.]
1. of or constituting theory.
2. limited to or based on theory; hypothetical; ideal: opposed to practical or applied.
3. tending to theorize; speculative.

thē·ō·ret'i·çăl·ly, adv. in or by theory; in speculation; speculatively; according to a theory; as, some things appear to be theoretically true which are found to be practically false.

thē·ō·re·ti'ciăn, n. a person who is a student of or authority on the theory of some art, science, etc.

thē·ō·ret'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] that part of any field of knowledge which deals in theories or speculations.

thē·or'iç, a. of or pertaining to the theorica.

thē'ō·riç, a. of or pertaining to theory; theoretical. [Obs.]

thē'ō·riç, n. speculation; theory. [Obs.]

thē·or'i·ça, n.pl.; sing. thē·or'i·çon, in ancient Greece, public money devoted to the formation of a fund for furnishing to all citizens not absent from Attica the sum of two oboli, the price of seats at the great dramatic festivals.

thē·or'i·çăl, a. theoric. [Obs.]

thē·or'i·çăl·ly, adv. theoretically. [Obs.]

thē'ō·rist, n. one who forms theories; especially, one who specializes in the theory of some art, science, etc.

thē"ō·ri·zā'tion, n. the process or the result of theorizing; the formulation of theories.

thē'ō·rīze, v.i.; theorized, pt., pp.; theorizing, ppr. to form a theory or theories; to speculate.

thē'ō·rīz·ẽr, n. a theorist.

thē'ō·ry, n.; pl. thē'ō·rieṣ, [Fr. théorie, from L. theoria, a theory, from Gr. theōria, a looking at, contemplation, speculation, theory.]
1. originally, a mental viewing; contemplation.
2. an idea or mental plan of the way to do something.
3. a systematic statement of principles involved; as, the theory of equations in mathematics.
4. a formulation of apparent relationships or underlying principles of certain observed phenomena which has been verified to some degree: distinguished from hypothesis.
5. that branch of an art or science consisting in a knowledge of its principles and methods rather than in its practice; pure, as opposed to applied, science, etc.
6. popularly, a mere hypothesis, conjecture, or guess; as, my theory is that he never got the letter.
Syn.—hypothesis, speculation, scheme, ideal.

thē'ō·soph, thē·os'ō·phẽr, n. a theosophist.

thē·ō·soph'iç, a. pertaining to theosophy or theosophists.

thē·ō·soph'i·çăl, a. theosophic.

thē·os'ō·phiṣm, n. belief in theosophy, or one of its doctrines.

thē·os'ō·phist, n. one who believes in theosophy.

thē·os·ō·phis'tiç·ăl, a. theosophic.

thē·os'ō·phīze, v.i.; theosophized, pt., pp.; theosophizing, ppr. to practice theosophy.

thē·os'ō·phy, n. [ML. theosophia; L. Gr. theosophia, knowledge of divine things; theos, god, and sophia, wisdom, from sophos, wise.]
1. any of various philosophies or religious systems that propose to establish direct contact with divine principle through contemplation, revelation, etc. and to gain thereby a spiritual insight superior to empirical knowledge.
2. [often T–] the doctrines and beliefs of a modern sect of this nature that incorporates elements of Buddhism and Brahmanism.

thē·ō·teç'niç, a. pertaining to the action or intervention of the gods; operated or carried on by the gods.

thē'ō·teç·ny, n. [Gr. theos, god, and technē, art.] the introduction of supernatural beings into any piece of literary composition.

thē·ō·ther'ạ·py, n. [Gr. theos, god, and therapeia, treatment.] the treatment of disease by prayer and religious exercises.

Thē·ot'ō·ços, n. [Gr. theotokos, bringing forth or giving birth to a god; theos, god, and tokos, bringing forth, from tiktein, to bring forth.] in theology, the Mother of God: an epithet applied to the Virgin Mary.

Ther·ạ·peū'tae, n.pl. [LL., from Gr. therapeutēs, an attendant or servant, from therapeuein, to serve.] a mystic Jewish sect of devotees of the first century: so called from the extraordinary purity of their religious worship.

ther·ạ·peū'tiç, ther·ạ·peū'ti·çăl, a. [Gr. therapeutikos, from therapeuein, to nurse, serve, or cure.]
1. serving to cure or heal; curative; concerned in discovering and applying remedies for diseases.
2. of therapeutics.

Ther·ạ·peū'tiç, n. a member of the traditional sect of Therapeutae.

ther·ạ·peū'ti·çăl·ly, adv. in a therapeutic manner.

ther·ạ·peū'tiçs, n. pl. [construed as sing.] that part of medical science which relates to the treatment and cure of diseases; therapy.

ther·ạ·peū'tist, n. one skilled in therapeutics.

ther'ạ·pist, n. a therapeutist. [Rare.]

ther'ạ·py, n.; pl. ther'ạ·pieṣ, [Mod. L. therapia; Gr. therapeia, from therapeuein, to nurse, cure.]
1. therapeutics: often used in compounds, as, hydro*therapy.*
2. therapeutic nature or power.
maggot therapy; in pathology, treatment with live maggots, usually those of the bluebottle fly, to remove dead tissue in suppurative infections.
physical therapy; see under physical.
serum therapy; in immunology, the treatment of disease by injection with blood serum from an animal that has been inoculated with the causative agents of the disease.

there (thãr), adv. [ME. ther, there, where; AS. ther, thær, there, where.]
1. at or in that place: often used as an intensive, as, John there is a good ball player.
Darkness there might well seem twilight here. —Milton.
2. toward, to, or into that place; thither; as, go there.
3. at that point in action, speech, etc.; then.
4. in that matter, respect, etc.; as to that; as, there you are wrong.
5. at the moment; right now; as, there goes the whistle.
There is also used (a) in interjectional phrases of approval, encouragement, etc. (e.g., there's a fine fellow!); (b) with pronominal force in impersonal constructions in which the real subject follows the verb (e.g., there is very little time, there are three men here).
all there; being prepared for any action. [Slang.] here and there; see under here.

there, n. that place; as, we left there at six.

there, interj, there is used as an exclamation expressing: (a) defiance, dismay, satisfaction, etc. (e.g., there, that's done!); (b) sympathy, concern, etc. (e.g., there, there! don't worry).

there'ạ·bouts", there'ạ·bout", adv. 1. near that place.
2. near that time or point in action, speech, etc.
3. nearly; near that number, degree, or quantity; as, ten men or thereabouts.
4. concerning that. [Rare.]

there·ạft'ẽr, adv. [AS. thæræfter, after that.]
1. after that; afterward.
2. according to that; accordingly. [Archaic or Rare.]
3. of or after that sort. [Obs.]

there'ạ·gain" (-gen"), adv. thereagainst. [Obs.]

there'ạ·gainst" (-genst"), adv. against or contrary to that; in opposition.

there'ạ·nent", adv. concerning, or with reference to anything. [Scot.]

there·at', adv. 1. at that place.
2. at that time; when that occurred.
3. at that; on that account.
Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it blusheth thereat. —Hooker.

there'ạ·wāy", adv. 1. away; from that place or direction.
2. about there or that; thereabouts. [Colloq.]

there"bē·fōre', adv. beforehand; before that time. [Obs.]

there·bȳ', adv. 1. by that; by that means; in consequence of that.
2. connected with that: used chiefly in expressions such as thereby hangs a tale.
3. thereabouts.
to come thereby; to come into possession of it.

there·for', adv. for that; for this; for it.

there'fōre, conj. and adv. for that; for this or that reason; consequently; hence.
I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. —Luke xiv. 20.
He blushes; therefore he is guilty. —Spectator.

there·from', adv. from this; from that; from it.

there·in', adv. 1. in there; in or into that place or thing.
2. in that writing, speech, etc.
3. in that matter, detail, etc.

there·in·ạft'ẽr, adv. in the following part (of that document, speech, etc.).

there·in'tö, adv. 1. into that place or thing.
2. into that matter, condition, etc.

ther'e·min, n. [after Leo Theremin (1896–), Russ. inventor.] an electronic musical instrument whose tone and pitch are controlled by moving the hands through the air varying distances from two projecting antennas: a trade-mark (Theremin).

there·of' (-ov'), adv. 1. of that; of it; concerning that or it.
2. from that as a cause, reason, etc.; therefrom.

there·on', adv. 1. on that; concerning that subject, etc.
2. immediately following that; thereupon.

there·out', adv. 1. out of that or this. [Archaic.]
2. without; out of doors. [Obs.]

there's, there is.

there·through' (-thrö'), adv. through that; by that means.

there·to', adv. 1. to that place, thing, etc.; thereunto.
2. moreover; also; besides; in addition to that. [Archaic or Poet.]

there·to·fōre', adv. before that time; before that; until then.

there·un'dēr, adv. 1. under that; under it.
2. under that in number; fewer than that.
3. under that title, etc.; by that authority.

there·un·tō', adv. thereto (sense 1).

there·up·on', adv. 1. upon that; concerning that subject, etc.
2. in consequence of that.
3. immediately; promptly; quickly.

there·whīle' (-hwīl'), adv. at the same time; for that time; also, presently. [Obs.]

there·with', adv. 1. with that, this, or it.
2. in addition to that; withal.
3. straightway; thereupon.

there·with·al', adv. 1. over and above; besides; with all that or this.
2. at the same time. [Obs.]
3. with that or this; therewith. [Obs.]

thē'ri·aç, n. [L. theriaca; Gr. thēriakē, treacle.] a former antidote for poison, Theriaca andromachi, or Venice treacle, a compound of sixty-four drugs, prepared, pulverized, and reduced by means of honey to an electuary.

thē'ri·aç, a. theriacal.

thē·rī'a·çā, n. same as theriac.

thē·rī'a·çăl, a. pertaining to theriac; medicinal.

thē'ri·ăl, a. theriacal. [Rare.]

thē"ri·an·throp'iç, a. 1. that combines human and animal form, as the centaur.
2. of religions having therianthropic gods.

thē·ri·od'iç, a. malignant.

thē'ri·ō·dont, a. belonging or pertaining to the Theriodontia.

thē'ri·ō·dont, n. any reptile of the Theriodontia.

Thē"ri·ō·don'ta, n.pl. same as Theriodontia.

Thē"ri·ō·don'ti·a (-shi-), n.pl. [Gr. thērion, a wild beast, and -odont.] a group of extinct South African reptiles having turtlelike heads and biconcave vertebrae.

thē"ri·ō·mor'phiç, a. [Gr. thērion, a wild beast, and morphē, form.] conceived of as having the form of an animal: said of gods.

thē"ri·ō·mor'phous, a. theriomorphic.

thērm, n. [Gr. thermē, heat; thermai, hot baths.]
1. a hot bath; also, a pool of water. [Obs.]
2. in physics, (a) a great calorie or, occasionally, a small calorie; (b) a unit of heat equal to 1,000 great calories; (c) a unit of heat equal to 100,000 B T.U.'s.
Also spelled therme.

thēr'mae, n.pl. hot springs or baths; specifically, the public baths of the ancient Romans.

thērm·aes·thē·si·om'e·tēr, n. same as thermesthesiometer.

thēr'măl, a. [Fr. thermal, from Gr. thermē, heat.]
1. having to do with heat, hot springs, etc.
2. warm or hot.
3. designating or of a loosely knitted material with air spaces for insulation to help retain body heat; as, thermal underwear.
thermal capacity; the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of a body one degree.
thermal conductivity; the amount of heat that passes in unit time through a plate whose surfaces differ by one degree in temperature, with unit area and thickness.
thermal diffusion; heat diffusion by radiation, convection, or conduction.
thermal equator; on the earth's surface, the line of greatest heat.
thermal paradox; in physics, an experiment in which a closed beaker of boiling water is removed from the heat to which it has been subjected, and is inverted and made to boil again by the application of cold.
thermal pollution; the discharge of heated liquid or air into lakes, rivers, etc., as by an industry or nuclear power plant, causing such a rise in the water temperature as to affect the life cycles within the water and disrupt the ecological balance.
thermal unit; a heat unit.

thēr'măl·ly, adv. by means of heat.

thēr"man·es·thē'si·a, thēr"man·aes·thē'si·ä, n. same as thermoanesthesia.

thēr·man'ti·dōte, n. an East Indian apparatus for producing a current of cool air.

thērm·es·thē'si·ä, thērm·aes·thē'si·ä, n. [Mod. L.] in physiology, the sense by which heat and cold are perceived; temperature sense.

thērm"es·thē·si·om'e·tēr, n. an instrument for measuring sensibility to heat and cold.

thēr'miç, a. [Gr. thermē, heat.] of or caused by heat; thermal.
thermic anomaly; the difference between the mean temperature of a place and the average temperature of its parallel of latitude.
thermic fever; sunstroke.

Thēr·mi·dor', n. [Fr., from Gr. thermē, heat, and dōron, gift.] the eleventh month (July 19–August 17) of the French Revolutionary Calendar, adopted by the First Republic in 1793.

Thēr·mi·dō'ri·ăn, n. [from the 9th Thermidor, when the Reign of Terror ended.] one of those who in 1794 took part in the overthrow of Robespierre and the Jacobins in France.

thērm'i·on, n. [therm- and ion.] an electrically charged particle emitted by an incandescent material: positively charged thermions are called ions, and negatively charged, electrons.

thērm·i·on'iç, a. of or operating by means of thermions.
thermionic current; an electric current caused by directed thermionic emission.
thermionic emission; emission of thermions from a heated cathode, as in a vacuum tube: also called Richardson effect.
thermionic rectifier; a vacuum tube rectifier or valve which permits the passage of current in one direction only, using the principle of thermionic emission: usually composed of a heated cathode or electron emitter and a cold anode or electron receiver.
thermionic tube; a vacuum tube which depends on the emission of electrons from a heated cathode for its function.
thermionic valve; an electron tube. [Brit.]

thērm·i·on'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the study and science of thermionic activity.

thēr'mit, n. a mixture of powdered aluminum and an oxide of iron or other metal, which produces great heat and is used in welding and in incendiary bombs: a trade mark (Thermit).

thēr'mīte, n. thermit.

thēr'mō-, [from Gr. thermē, heat.] a combining form meaning: (a) heat, as in thermodynamics; (b) thermoelectric, as in thermocouple. Also, before a vowel, therm-.

thēr"mō·an·es·thē'si·ä, thēr"mō·an·aes·thē'si·ä, n. [Mod. L.] the lack or loss of the ability to perceive heat and cold: also thermanesthesia, thermanaesthesia.

thēr·mō·bar'ō·gräph, n. a combination of a thermograph and a barograph for determining both the pressure and the temperature of a gas.

thēr"mō·bā·rom'e·tēr, n. 1. a barometric instrument for measuring atmospheric pressure and, hence, altitudes, by the boiling point of water.
2. a siphon barometer that can be adapted for use as a thermometer.

thēr·mō·çau'tēr·y, n. cauterization by means of a heated wire or point.

thēr·mō·çhem'iç, a. thermochemical.

thēr·mō·çhem'iç·ăl, a. belonging or relating to thermochemistry.

thēr·mō·çhem'is·try, n. the branch of chemistry that deals with the relationship of heat to chemical change.

thēr'mō·çhrō·sy, n. [thermo-, and Gr. chrōsis, a coloring.] the property of being composed, like light, of rays of different refrangibilities, varying in rate or degree of transmission through diathermal substances: said of heat.

thēr'mō·çou·ple (-kup-l), n. a thermoelectric couple for measuring differences in temperature.
thermocouple instrument; an instrument consisting of a thermocouple and a highly sensitive direct-current meter, used in determining various electromotive forces.
thermocouple meter; a meter used to measure voltage or amperage, consisting of one or more thermocouples that are heated by the current to be measured, together with a suitable deflecting instrument which is actuated by the electromotive force of the thermocouple.

thēr'mō·çūr·rent, n. a current, as of electricity, caused by heating a compound circuit consisting of two or more different metals.

thēr'mō dē·vel'ŏp·ment, in photography, a method for developing negatives in which the time allowed for developing is related to the temperature of the developing solution.

thēr"mō·dif·fū'şion, n. diffusion by heat.

thēr'mō·din, n. a white crystalline powder derived from urethane; an antipyretic and analgesic.

thēr"mō·dy·nam'iç, a 1. having to do with thermodynamics.
2. operated by heat converted into motive power.

thēr"mō·dy·nam'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the science that deals with the relationship of heat and mechanical energy and the conversion of one into the other.

thēr"mō·ē·leç'triç, a. pertaining to thermoelectricity.
thermoelectric couple; a junction of any two bars, wires, etc. of dissimilar metals which will produce thermoelectric current when heated: it is used in temperature measurements, etc.: also thermoelectric pair.
thermoelectric multiplier; a thermopile.
thermoelectric pair; a thermoelectric couple.

thēr"mō·ē·leç'tri·çăl, a. thermoelectric.

thēr"mō·ē·leç·tric'i·ty, n. 1. electricity produced by heat, as by means of a thermoelectric couple.
2. the branch of electricity dealing with the properties and action of electricity developed by heat.

thēr"mō·ē·leç·trom'e·tēr, n. an instrument for measuring the power of an electric current by the amount of heat it produces, or for measuring the heating power of an electric current.

thēr"mō·ē·leç"trō·mō'tive, a. designating or of the electromotive force produced as by a thermoelectric couple.

thēr·mō·el'ē·ment, n. a thermoelectric couple.

thēr"mō·ex·cī'tō·ry, a. exciting or stimulating the production of heat in the body.

thēr'mō·ġen, n. [thermo-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.] caloric.

thēr·mō·ġen'e·sis, n. the production of heat; especially, the physiological process of generating heat within the animal body.

thēr"mō·ġē·net'ic, a. of thermogenesis.

thēr·mō·ġen'iç, a. relating to the production of heat; thermogenous.

thēr·moġ'e·nous, a. producing heat.

thēr·moġ'e·ny, n. thermogenesis.

thēr'mō·gram, n. a record made by a thermograph.

thēr'mō·gräph, n. a thermometer for automatically recording variations of temperature.

thēr"mō·in·hib'i·tō·ry, a. preventing abnormal production of heat: applied to certain nerves.

thēr"mō·kin·ē·mat'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the science that deals with the relationship of heat and motive power.

thēr·mō·lā'bile, a. designating or of substances, as some toxins, enzymes, etc., that are destroyed or lose their special properties when heated to 55°C. or above: opposed to thermostable.

thēr·mol'ō·ġy, n. the science of heat.

thēr·mol'y·sis, n. [thermo-, and Gr. lysis, a loosening.]
1. in chemistry, dissociation of a compound by heat.
2. in physiology, the dispersion or loss of heat from the body by any process.

thēr·mō·lyt'iç, a. pertaining to thermolysis.

thēr'mō·lyze, v.t. to dissociate by heat.

thēr·mō·mag'net·işm, n. magnetism as produced or affected by heat.

thēr·mom'e·tēr, n. [LL. thermometrum, from Gr. thermē, heat, and -meter.]

1. an instrument for measuring temperatures, consisting of a graduated glass tube with a sealed, capillary bore in which mercury, colored alcohol, etc. rises or falls as it expands or contracts from changes in temperature.

2. any similar instrument, as one operating by means of a thermocouple.

The three principal types of thermometers are: Fahrenheit, in which the freezing point of water is 32° and the boiling point 212°; centigrade, in which the freezing point is 0° and the boiling point 100°; and Reaumur, in which the freezing point is 0° and the boiling point 80°.

clinical thermometer; see under clinical.

maximum thermometer; a thermometer registering the maximum temperature since its last adjustment.

metallic thermometer; a thermometer indicating the temperature by the unequal expansion or contraction of two different metals.

minimum thermometer; see under minimum.

registering thermometer; a thermometer that registers the temperature it indicates, as in a continuous record, at given times, or at the maximum or minimum point.

upsetting thermometer; a thermometer that registers when inverted.

thĕr·mō·met'rĭc, a. of or measured by a thermometer.

thĕr·mō·met'rĭc·ăl, a. same as thermometric.

thĕr·mō·met'rĭc·ăl·ly, adv. by means of a thermometer.

thĕr·mō·met'rō·gràph, n. [thermo-, Gr. metron, measure, and graphein, to write.] a self-registering thermometer, especially one that registers the maximum and minimum degrees of temperature during long periods.

thĕr·mom'e·try, n. 1. measurement of temperature.

2. the science of making or using thermometers.

thĕr·mō·mō'tŏr, n. an engine operated by heat, especially by the expansion of heated air.

thĕr·mō·mul'ti·plī·ĕr, n. same as thermopile.

thĕr·mō·nū'clē·ar, a. designating, of, or employing the heat energy released in nuclear fission.

thĕr″mō·pen·ē·trā'tiŏn, n. in medicine, a method of heating the deeper, internal portions of the body by means of electric currents of low tension and high amperage.
