prō·tō·pep′si·à, n. [proto-, and Gr. pepsis, digestion.] primary digestion.

prō·tō·phlō′em, n. [proto- and phloem.] in botany, the primary phloem of a vascular bundle.

Prō·toph′y·tà, n.pl. in botany, a primary division of unicellular plants of the lowest and simplest organization.

prō′tō·phȳte, n. [proto- and -phyte.] a unicellular plant organism; one of the Protophyta.

prō·tō·phyt′iç, a. pertaining to the Protophyta.

prō·tō·phȳt′ŏn, n. same as protophyte.

prō′tō·pīne, n. [proto-, and opium, and -ine.] in chemistry, an alkaloid, $C_{20}H_{19}NO_5$, derived from opium. It possesses anodyne and hypnotic properties.

prō′tō·plaşm, n. [G. protoplasma, from Gr. prōtos, first, and plasma, anything formed or molded, from plassein, to mold.]

1. a semifluid, viscous, translucent colloid, the essential matter of all animal and plant cells: it consists largely of water, proteins, lipoids, carbohydrates, and inorganic salts.

2. formerly, cytoplasm.

prō·tō·plaș′mà, n. protoplasm.

prō·tō·plaș′măl, a. protoplasmic.

prō″tō·plaș·mat′iç, a. protoplasmic.

prō·tō·plaș′miç, a. 1. in biology, pertaining to, resembling, or consisting of protoplasm.

2. pertaining to the primitive formation of organized beings.

prō′tō·plast, n. [Fr. protoplaste; LL. protoplastus; Gr. protoplastos, formed first, from prōtos, first, and plastos, formed, from plassein, to form].

1. a thing or being that is the first of its kind.

2. in biology, a unit of protoplasm, such as makes up a single cell; a plastid.

Prō·tō·plas′tà, n.pl. [LL.] a division of rhizopods found in fresh water.

prō·tō·plas′tiç, a. 1. first-formed.

2. protoplasmic; pertaining to a protoplast.

3. pertaining to the Protoplasta.

prō·top′ō·dīte, n. [proto-, and Gr. pous, podos, a foot, and -ite.] in zoology, the basal segment of the typical limb of a crustacean.

prō′tō·pōpe, n. [Russ. protopop'; L.Gr. prōtopapas, chief priest.] a protopapas.

prō·tō·preș′by·tēr, n. a protopope. [Obs.]

prō′tō·prişm, n. in crystallography, a prism of the first order in the tetragonal system.

prō·tō·prō′tē·ōse, n. [proto- and proteose.] in biochemistry, one of the primary products of the gastric digestion of proteins.

prō·top′te·rus, n. [proto-, and Gr. pteron, wing.] an African food fish, the lepidosiren; a mudfish.

prō′tō·sąlt, n. in chemistry, that one of a series of salts of the same base which contains the smallest amount of the substance combining with the base.

prō·tō·sō′mīte, n. [proto- and somite.] a primitive segment of an animal's body.

prō′tō·spaşm, n. in pathology, a spasm which begins in a limited area and extends to other parts.

pȳ'in, n. [Gr. pyon, pus.] a mixture of proteins found in pus.

py·jä'mȧs, n.pl. pajamas: British spelling.

pyk'ăr, n. a kind of fishing boat. [Obs.]

pyk'niç, a. [from Gr. pyknos, compact, solid; and -ic.] in psychology, designating or having a body type characterized by roundness of contour, squatness, fleshiness, etc.

pyk'niç, n. a person of the pyknic type.

pyk·nom'e·tēr, n. same as pycnometer.

pȳ'lȧ, n.; pl. pȳ'lae or pȳ'lȧs, [Gr. pylē, a gate.] the duct between the iter and the third ventricle of the brain.

pyl'ȧ·gōre, n. [Gr. Pylagoras, from pylē, a gate, and ageirein, to collect.] in ancient Greece, a delegate or representative of a city, sent to the Amphictyonic council.

pȳ·lan'ĝi·ăl, a. of or pertaining to the pylangium.

pȳ·lan'ĝi·um, n. [Gr. pylē, gate, and angeion, a vessel.] the first and unsegmented part of the arterial trunk in the lower vertebrates.

pȳ"leph·lē·bī'tis, n. [Gr. pylē, gate, and phleps, phlebos, vein, and -itis.] inflammation of the portal vein.

pȳ'lon, n. [Gr. pylōn, a gateway.]
1. a gateway.
2. a truncated pyramid, or two of these, serving as a gateway to an Egyptian temple.
3. any slender, towering structure flanking an entranceway, supporting telegraph wires, marking a course in an air race, etc.

pȳ·lō·reç'tō·my, n. [Gr. pylōros, gatekeeper, and ektomē, a cutting out.] the surgical removal of the pyloric end of the stomach.

pȳ·lor'iç, a. pertaining to or situated near the pylorus; as, the pyloric artery.

pȳ·lō'rus, n.; pl. pȳ·lō'rī, [Gr. pylōros, a gatekeeper.]
1. the opening from the stomach into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine.
2. a structure separating the gastric and somatic cavities in siphonophores.

pȳ'ō-, [from Gr. pyon, pus.] a combining form meaning: (a) pus, as in *pyo*genic; (b) suppurative, as in *pyo*sis. Also py-, as in *py*emia.

pȳ'ō·cēle, n. [pyo-, and Gr. kēlē, hernia.] a hernia which contains pus.

pȳ·ō·cȳ'ȧ·nin, n. a blue or violet ptomaine found in pus and caused by the growth of Bacillus pyocyaneus.

pȳ'ō·cyst, n. a cyst containing pus.

pȳ'ō·cȳte, n. [pyo-, and Gr. kytos, a hollow, cell.] a pus corpuscle.

pȳ"ō·dēr·mȧ·tī'tis, n. [pyo-, Gr. derma, skin, and -itis.] any purulent skin disease.

pȳ·ō·ĝen'e·sis, n. [pyo-, and Gr. genesis, origin, beginning.] in medicine, the formation of pus; pyosis.

pȳ"ō·ĝe·net'ic, a. pertaining to pyogenesis; producing or secreting pus.

pȳ·ō·ĝen'iç, a. same as pyogenetic.

pȳ'oid, a. [pyo-, and Gr. eidos, form.] of or resembling pus.

pȳ"ō·nē·phrī'tis, n. [pyo- and nephritis.] purulent nephritis.

pȳ"ō·pneū·mō·thō'rax (-nū-), n. [pyo-, and Gr. pneumōn, lung, and E. thorax.] a collection of pus and air or gas in the pleural cavity.

pȳ"ō·poi·ē'sis, n. [pyo-, and Gr. poiein, to make.] pyogenesis.

pȳ·ŏr·rhē'ȧ, pȳ·ŏr·rhoe'ȧ (-rē'), n. [pyo-, and Gr. rhein, to flow.] a discharge of pus; especially, pyorrhea alveolaris.

pȳ·ŏr·rhē'ȧ al·vē"ō·lā'ris, an infection of the gums and tooth sockets, characterized by the formation of pus and, usually, by loosening of the teeth.

pȳ·ŏr·rhē'ăl, pȳ·ŏr·rhoe'ăl, a. of, having the nature of, or characterized by pyorrhea.

pȳ"ō·sap·rē'mi·ȧ, n. [pyo-, Gr. sapros, rotten, and haima, blood.] purulent infection of the blood.

pȳ·ō'sis, n. [Gr.] the formation or discharge of pus; suppuration.

pȳ'ŏt, n. same as piet.

pȳ·ō·thō'rax, n. an accumulation of pus in the pleural cavity; empyema.

pȳ·ō·xan'thōse (-zan'), n. [pyo-, and Gr. xanthos, yellow.] a brownish-red to yellow pigment found in pus.

pȳr-, pyro-.

pȳ'rȧ·çanth, n. [Gr. pyr, fire, and akanthos, thorn.] an evergreen species of thorn, Cratægus pyracantha, with flame-colored berries, found in the south of Europe.

pȳ'răl, a. pertaining to a pyre. [Rare.]

pyr'ȧ·lid, n. [LL. pyralis, from Gr. pyr, fire.] any moth of the family Pyralidæ.

Pȳ·ral'i·dae, n.pl. a family of moths of which there are many species, mostly small and injurious, as the bee moth, meal moth, etc.: they have narrow, triangular forewings, broader hind wings, and long legs.

pȳ·ral'i·dăn, a. and n. same as pyralidid.

pȳ·ral'i·did, a. of the Pyralidae family.

pȳ·ral'i·did, n. a moth of the family Pyralidae.

pyr'ȧ·loid, a. of or resembling the pyralids.

pyr'ȧ·mid, n. [Fr. pyramide; L. pyramis; Gr. pyramis, pyramidos, a pyramid; ME. had piramis, from L.]
1. a huge structure with a square base and four triangular sides meeting at a point, built by the ancient Egyptians as a royal tomb.
2. an object or formation shaped like a pyramid.
3. in crystallography, a form in which the faces intersect the vertical and lateral axes.
4. in geometry, a solid figure having a polygonal base, the sides of which form the bases of triangular surfaces meeting at a common vertex.
5. a tree grown or trained in pyramidal form.
6. in anatomy, a conical bony projection on the posterior wall of the tympanum, immediately behind the oval aperture (fenestra ovalis) of the ear.
7. [pl.] a game, pyramid pool.
pyramid pool; a form of pool in which the balls are racked in a triangular form instead of being spotted at the diamonds of the table.
the (Great) Pyramids; the three large pyramids at El Gîza, Egypt: the largest is the Pyramid of Cheops.

pyr'ȧ·mid, v.t. and v.i. 1. to build up in the form of a pyramid; to collect in a mass or heap.
2. to engage in (a series of buying or selling operations) during an upward or downward trend in the stock market, working on margin with the profits made in the transactions.

py·ram'i·dăl, a. [Fr. pyramidal; It. piramidale.]
1. of, pertaining to, or of the form of a pyramid.
2. in biology, conical; pointed, as the prickles of some roses.
3. in crystallography, same as tetragonal.
pyramidal numbers; the third order of figurate numbers.

py·ram'i·dăle, n. in anatomy, the cuneiform bone of the carpus.

py·ram'i·dăl·ly, adv. 1. in the form of a pyramid.
2. extremely; exceedingly; supremely. [Obs.]

py·ram'i·dāte, a. pyramidal. [Rare.]

pyr·ȧ·mid'iç, pyr·ȧ·mid'iç·ăl, a. pyramidal.

pyr·ȧ·mid'iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a pyramidal manner.

pyr·ȧ·mid'iç·ăl·ness, n. the state of being pyramidical.

pyr·ȧ·mid'i·on, n.; pl. pyr·ȧ·mid'i·ȧ, the apex of an obelisk, resembling a pyramid.

py·ram'i·doid, n. [Gr. pyramis, a pyramid, and eidos, form.] a solid resembling a pyramid.

pyr'ȧ·mis, n.; pl., py·ram'i·dēs, a pyramid. [Obs.]

pyr'ȧ·moid, n. pyramidoid. [Rare.]

Pyr'ȧ·mus and This'bē, [L.; Gr. Pyramos and L.; Gr. Thisbē.] Babylonian lovers whose story is told in Ovid's Metamorphoses: Pyramus, believing Thisbe killed by a lion when he finds her blood-stained veil at their trysting place, kills himself; and Thisbe, when she finds him dying, kills herself.

pȳ'ran, n. [from pyrone.] any of a group of closed-chain compounds, C_5H_6O, the ring of which contains one oxygen atom and five carbon atoms.

pȳ·răr'ĝy·rīte, n. [Gr. pyr, fire, and argyros, silver.] a lustrous, dark-red or black sulfide of silver and antimony, $3Ag_2S{\cdot}Sb_2S_3$, with hexagonal crystallization.

pȳre, n. [Gr. pyr, fire.] a heap of combustible materials arranged for the burning of a corpse or corpses; a funeral pile.

pȳ·rē'nȧ, n.; pl. pȳ·rē'nae, same as pyrene (seed).

pȳ·rē·năr'i·um, n.; pl. pȳ·rē·năr'i·ȧ, in botany, a pome, particularly one having pyrenes. [Rare.]

pȳ'rēne, n. [Gr. pyrēn, stone of a fruit.] the stone or seed of apples, pears, etc.

pȳ'rēne, n. [Gr. pyr, fire, and -ene.] one of the hydrocarbons, $C_{16}H_{10}$, obtained in the dry distillation of fats, resins, and coal.

Pyr·ē·nē'ăn, a. [Fr. Pyrénées, the Pyrenees.] of or pertaining to the Pyrenees, a range of mountains separating France from Spain.

pyr·ē·nem'ȧ·tous, a. [Gr. pyrēn, stone of a fruit, and haima, blood.] having nucleated red blood corpuscles.

pȳ·rē'nin, n. a substance found in the nucleoli of cells.

pȳ·rē'noid, n. [Gr. pyrēn, stone of a fruit, and eidos, form.] a rounded granule found in the chromatophores of Protozoa and Protophyta, and specially active in the formation of starch.

pȳ·rē'noid, a. resembling a wart in form.

Pȳ·rē"nō·mȳ·cē'tēs, n.pl. [Gr. pyrēn, stone of a fruit, and mykēles, mushrooms.] a group of ascomycetous fungi, chiefly parasitic and very injurious to plants, the ergot, Claviceps purpurea, being an example.

pȳ·reth'rin, n. [L., from Gr. pyrethron, feverfew.] a soft resin extracted from Radix pyrethri by alcohol and ether. Later researches have shown it to be a mixture of two oils and a resin.

pȳ·reth'rine, n. an alkaloid found in the root of Anacyclus pyrethrum, the pellitory of Spain.

Pȳ·reth'rum, n. [L., from Gr. pyrethron, feverfew.]
1. a section of the genus Chrysanthemum, including various garden plants.
2. [p–] any plant of this genus; also, insect powder made from certain of these flowers.

pȳ·ret'iç, a. [Gr., from pyr, fire.]
1. of or causing fever.
2. feverish.

pȳ·ret'ic, n. a medicine for fever; a febrifuge. [Rare.]

pyr'ē·tō-, [from Gr. pyretos, burning heat, fever.] a combining form meaning fever, as in *pyret*ology: also, before a vowel, pyret-.

pyr"ē·tō·ĝen'e·sis, n. the origin of fever.

pyr"ē·tō·ĝen'iç, a. of or pertaining to the origin of fevers.

pyr·ē·tol'ō·ĝy, n. the branch of medicine which deals with fevers.

pȳ'rex, n. [from pie, and L. rex, king; spelled as if from Gr. pyr, a fire, pyra, hearth.] a heat-resistant glassware for cooking, etc.: a trademark (Pyrex).

pȳ·rex'i·ȧ, n. [Mod. L., from Gr. pyrexis, feverishness.] fever.

pȳ·rex'i·ăl, a. of or having a fever; feverish.

pȳ·rex'iç, pȳ·rex'iç·ăl, a. pyrexial.

pyr'gom (pīr'), n. same as fassaite.

pȳr·hē·li·om'ē·tēr (pīr-), n. [Gr. pyr, fire, and hēlios, sun, and metron, measure.] an instrument to measure the amount of energy given off by the sun.

pȳ·rid′iç, a. derived from or related to pyridine.

pyr′i·dïne, pyr′i·din, n. a colorless or pale-yellow liquid, C_5H_5N, obtained from coal tar and bone oil by destructive distillation and having a sharp, pungent odor. It is used as a solvent, alcohol denaturant, antiseptic, etc.

pyr·i·dox′ine, n. a complex pyridine compound, one of the B complex vitamins, found in various foods and prepared synthetically, usually as the hydrochloride: known to prevent nutritional dermatitis in rats: also called vitamin B_6.

pyr′i·dyl, n. the monovalent radical, C_5H_4N.

pyr′i·form, a. [L. pyrum or pirum, a pear.] shaped like a pear.

py·rim′i·dïne, n. a colorless, crystalline organic compound, $C_4H_4N_2$, the fundamental form of a group of bases, some of which are constituents of nucleic acid.

pyr·i·tā′ceous (-shus), a. pertaining to pyrites. [Rare.]

pȳ′rīte, n.; pl. pȳ′rī′tēs (or pī′rīts), [L. pyrites, from Gr. pyritēs, flint or millstone.] iron sulfide, FeS_2, a lustrous, yellow mineral occurring abundantly as a native ore and serving principally as a source of sulfur in the manufacture of sulfuric acid: also called iron pyrites, fool's gold.

pȳ·rī′tēs (or pī′rīts), n. any native metallic sulfide. The name was originally given to iron pyrites, the mineral pyrite, alluding to its property of giving sparks when struck with steel.

arsenical pyrites; arsenopyrite.
copper pyrites; chalcopyrite.
hair pyrites; millerite.
magnetic pyrites; pyrrhotite.
tin pyrites; stannite.
white iron pyrites; marcasite.

pȳ·rit′iç, pȳ·rit′iç·ăl, a. of, containing, or resembling pyrites.

pyr·i·tif′ēr·ous, a. bearing or producing pyrites.

pyr′i·tīze, v.t.; pyritized, pt., pp.; pyritizing, ppr. to change or convert into pyrites.

pyr·i·tō·hē′drŏn, n. [Gr. pyritēs, and hedra, base.] the pentagonal dodecahedron, a crystalline form often assumed by pyrite.

pyr·i·tol′ō·ġy, n. [from Gr. pyritēs, of fire (from pyr, a fire); and -logy.] the science of analyzing compounds by means of the blowpipe.

pyr′i·tous, a. consisting of pyrites; pyritic.

pȳ′rō-, pȳr-, [from Gr. pyr, pyros, a fire.] a combining form meaning: (a) fire, heat, as in *pyro*mania, *pyro*meter; (b) in chemistry, a substance derived (from the specified substance) by or as if by the action of heat, as in *pyro*gallol; (c) in geology, a formation due to the action of heat, as in *pyro*xenite.

pȳ′rō, n. in photography, pyrogallic acid. [Colloq.]

pȳ·rō·ă·cē′tiç, a. of or relating to an acetone derived from acetates by distillation, or to pyroacetic ether.

pȳ·rō·ac′id, n. an acid derived from another acid by the action of heat.

pȳ·rō·an·ti·mō′nāte, n. a salt of pyroantimonic acid.

pȳ·rō·an·ti·mon′iç, a. designating or of an acid of antimony similar to pyrophosphoric acid.

pȳ·rō·är′sē·nāte, n. a salt of pyroarsenic acid.

pȳ·rō·är·sen′iç, a. designating or of an acid derived from arsenic acid by heat.

pȳ·rō·bō′rāte, n. any salt of pyroboric acid.

pȳ·rō·bō′riç, a. designating or of an acid obtained from boric acid by heat.

pȳ·rō·ċat′ē·chin, n. pyrocatechol.

pȳ·rō·ċat′ē·ċhōl, n. [pyro-, and catechu, and -ol.] a white, crystalline substance, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$, occurring naturally in plants or produced by dry distillation of catechu, etc.

pȳ·rō·ċhem′i·ċăl, a. of chemistry at high temperatures.

pȳ′rō·ċhlōre, n. [pyro-, and Gr. chlōros, green.] a brownish or yellowish mineral with resinous luster, usually occurring in octahedrons.

pȳ·rō·cit′riç, a. obtained from citric acid by distillation: said of citraconic acid.

pȳ·rō·ċlas′tiç, a. [pyr-, and Gr. klastos, broken.] made up of rock material broken into fragments through volcanic or igneous action.

pȳ·rō·ċon·duċ·tiv′i·ty, n. conductivity effected in certain electric insulators when they are subjected to high temperatures.

pȳ·rō·ċrys′tăl·line, a. crystallized from molten rock material.

pȳ′rō·din, pȳ′rō·dïne, n. $C_6H_5·NH·NH·CO·CH_3$, a crystalline compound: it is used like chrysarobin in skin diseases and also as an antipyretic.

pȳ″rō·ē·leċ′triç, a. of, pertaining to, or exhibiting pyroelectricity.

pȳ·rō·ē·leċ′triç, n. a pyroelectric substance.

pȳ·rō·ē·leċ·tric′i·ty, n. the development of electric polarity in certain crystals by a change of temperature.

pȳ·rō·ġal′lāte, n. a salt or ester of pyrogallol.

pȳ·rō·ġal′liċ ac′id, pyrogallol.

pȳ·rō·ġal′lōl (or -lol), n. a white, crystalline phenol, $C_6H_3(OH)_3$, a product of the dry distillation of gallic acid, used in medicine, as a developer in photography, etc.

pȳ′rō·ġen, n. [pyro-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.]
1. a product of the action of heat on an organic substance; a pyroacid. [Obs.]
2. any cause of fever, as a ptomaine from decomposing meat. [Obs.]
3. electricity. [Obs.]

pȳ·rō·ġen′e·sis, n. the process of developing heat.

pȳ·rō·ġē·net′iç, a. evolving or developing heat; heat-producing.

pȳ·rō·ġen′iç, a. 1. producing, or produced by, heat or fever.
2. in geology, igneous.

pȳ·roġ′ē·nous, a. pyrogenic.

pȳ·roġ·nos′tiç, a. [pyro-, and Gr. gnōstikos, knowing.] of or produced by the use of heat.

pȳ·roġ·nos′tiċs, n. pl.; the properties of a mineral made known when heat is applied to it, such as flame coloration, fusibility, etc.

pȳ·roġ′rà·phēr, n. one skilled in pyrography.

pȳ·rō·ġraph′iç, a. of or relating to pyrography.

pȳ·roġ′rà·phy, n. [pyro- and -graphy.]
1. the art or process of burning designs on wood or leather by the use of heated tools.
2. a design so made.

pȳ″rō·ġrà·vūre′, n. the art of engraving or making a design, as on wood, by means of a hot point; also, the engraving or design thus made; pyrography.

Pyr·ō′là, n. a genus of ericaceous plants of the subfamily Pyroleæ, including the wintergreen and shinleaf.

Pyr·ō·lā′cē·ae, n.pl. same as Pyroleæ.

pȳ·rol′à·tēr, pȳ·rol′à·tŏr, n. a fire worshiper.

pȳ·rol′à·try, n. fire worship.

Pȳ·rō′lē·ae, n.pl. a subfamily of ericaceous plants including the genera Pyrola, or shinleaf, Moneses, or one-flowered wintergreen, and Chimaphila, or pipsissewa.

pȳ·rol′ē·tēr, n. [pyro-, and Gr. oletēr, destroyer.] an apparatus for extinguishing fire by the use of carbon dioxide generated by the union of sodium bicarbonate and hydrochloric acid.

pȳ·rō·lig′nē·ous, pyr·ō·lig′niç, a. [pyro-, and L. lignum, wood.]
1. produced by the destructive distillation of wood.
2. designating or of a reddish-brown liquid (pyroligneous acid), chiefly acetic acid and methyl alcohol, obtained by the destructive distillation of wood.
3. designating or of methyl alcohol, especially when obtained from wood.

pȳ·rō·lig′nīte, n. a salt of pyroligneous acid.

pȳ·rō·lig′nous, a. pyroligneous.

pȳ·rō·lith′iç, a. cyanuric. [Obs.]

pȳ·rol′ō·ġist, n. one versed in or a student of pyrology.

pȳ·rol′ō·ġy, n. pyritology.

pȳ·rō·lū′site, n. [pyro- and Gr. louein, to wash.] MnO_2, a native manganese dioxide having a metallic luster and a dark, steel-gray color: used in glassmaking and as an oxidizing agent in varnish.

pȳ·rol′y·sis, n. [Mod. L.; pyro- and -lysis.] chemical decomposition by heat.

pȳ·rō·lyt′iç, a. of pyrolysis.

pȳ″rō·mag·net′iç, a. of or produced by the combined action of heat and magnetism.
pyromagnetic generator; an induction machine in which the strength of current is made to vary by alternately heating and cooling its field magnets.

pȳ′rō·man·cy, n. [pyro-, and Gr. manteia, a divination.] divination by means of flame or fire.

pȳ·rō·mā′ni·à, n. [pyro-, and Gr. mania, madness.] a persistent compulsion to start destructive fires.

pȳ·rō·mā′ni·aç, n. a person having pyromania.

pȳ·rō·mā′ni·aç, a. of or affected with pyromania.

pȳ″rō·mā·nī′à·ċăl, a. pyromaniac.

pȳ·rō·man′tiç, a. of or pertaining to pyromancy.

pȳ·rō·man′tiç, n. one who divines or pretends to divine by fire.

pȳ″rō·mel·lit′iç, a. derived from mellitic acid by heat.

pȳ·rō·met·à·mor′phiṣm, n. metamorphism produced or chiefly produced by the action of heat.

pȳ·rom′ē·tēr, n. [pyro- and -meter.]
1. formerly, an instrument for measuring the expansion of bodies by heat. [Obs.]
2. an instrument for measuring degrees of heat above those indicated by ordinary thermometers, as by the change of electric current.

pȳ·rō·met′riç, pȳ·rō·met′riċ·ăl, a. of or registered on a pyrometer.

pȳ·rom′ē·try, n. the act or the process of using a pyrometer; the branch of physics which treats of the measurement of temperatures over 1500°C.

pȳ·rō·mor′phīte, n. [pyro-, and Gr. morphē, form.] a lead salt occurring mostly in veins with other ores of lead; a chlorophosphate of lead, $3Pb_3(PO_4)_2·PbCl_2$, occurring naturally in any of various colors.

pȳ·rō·mor′phous, a. capable of being made crystallizable by heat.

pȳ·rō·mū′ċāte, n. a salt of pyromucic acid.

pȳ·rō·mū′ciç, a. designating an acid derived by distillation from mucic acid.

pȳ·rō·naph′thà, n. an illuminant distilled from petroleum in Russia.

pȳ′rōne, n. in chemistry, $CO(CH)_4O$, an unsaturated, closed-chain compound from which several yellow dyes are derived.

pȳ·rō·nom′iċs, n. [pyro-, and Gr. nomos, law.] the science pertaining to heat and its laws. [Rare.]

pȳ′rōpe, n. [Gr. pyr, fire, and ōps, eye.] a variety of garnet, deep red to black in color, containing aluminum and used as a gem.

pyr′ō·phāne, n. an opaque opal which becomes temporarily transparent when immersed in a hot bath of wax, but loses its transparency as it cools. [Obs.]

pȳ·roph′à·nous, a. [pyro-, and Gr. phanein, to show.] becoming transparent by heat.

pȳ·rō·phō′bï·à, n. [pyro-, and Gr. phobos, to fear.] an irrational fear of fire.

pȳ′rō·phōne, n. [pyro-, and Gr. phōnē, sound.] a musical apparatus consisting of a series of glass tubes graduated in length, each containing a jet of burning hydrogen by which its tones are produced: also called chemical harmonicon.

pȳ·rō·phor′iç, a. capable of igniting spontaneously when exposed to air.

pȳ·roph′ō·rus, n. any compound which takes fire spontaneously.

Pȳ·roph′ō·rus, n. [Gr. pyrophoros, fire-bearing, from pyr, fire, and pherein, to bear.] a genus of beetles, the elaters, of the family Elateridæ, native to tropical America and including the Pyrophorus noctilucus of South America and the West Indies.

pȳ·rō·phos′phāte, n. a salt of pyrophosphoric acid.

pȳ″rō·phos·phor′iç, a. derived from phosphoric acid by heat.
pyrophosphoric acid; a viscous liquid acid, $H_4P_2O_7$, which crystallizes when left standing at ordinary temperatures and is easily converted to orthophosphoric acid upon dilution with water.

pȳ·rō·phō·tom′ē·tēr, n. [pyro- and photometer.] an optical instrument for the measurement of extremely high temperatures.

pȳ·rō·phyl′līte, n. [pyro- and phyll- and -ite.] a hydrous aluminum silicate, $Al_2O_3·4SiO_2·H_2O$, resembling talc in structure and color, used for polishing rice, as a filler for slate pencils, etc.

pȳ·rō·puñċ′tūre, n. puncture by the use of hot needles.

pȳ″rō·rà·cē′miç, a. derived from racemic acid by heat: applied to acetoformic acid, $C_3H_4O_3$.

pȳ′rō·sċōpe, n. [pyro- and -scope.] an instrument to measure the intensity of heat radiating from a body. It resembles a differential thermometer, having two bulbs, one covered with thick silver leaf.

pȳ·rō′sis, n. [Gr., a burning.] a condition characterized by a burning sensation in the stomach and esophagus and the belching of an acid fluid; heartburn.

pȳ·ros′mà·līte, n. [pyro-, and Gr. osmē, a smell.] a mineral found in some iron mines in Wermland, Sweden. It is of various shades from pale liver-brown to blackish-green, and consists of a hydrated silicate of iron and manganese with chloride of iron. When heated, it gives the odor of chlorine.

pȳ′rō·sōme, n. any sea animal of the Pyrosomidæ.

Pȳ·rō·sōm′i·dae, n.pl. [pyro-, and Gr. sōma, body.] a family of the compound ascidians having but one genus, Pyrosoma, with three species. They unite in great numbers, forming a large hollow cylinder, from two to fourteen inches in length, and from half an inch to three inches in circumference, open at one end and closed at the other, swimming in the ocean by the alternate contraction and dilatation of its component individual animals. They are brilliantly phosphorescent.

pȳ·rō·sō′moid, a. resembling a pyrosome.

pȳ′rō·stat, n. [pyro-, and Gr. statos, from histanai, to stand.]
1. a device that automatically puts into action a mechanism sounding an alarm when a fire breaks out near by.
2. a high-temperature thermostat.

quăd'răt, n. [Fr., from L. quadratus, squared.] 1. in printing, a block of type metal lower than the face of the type, and used for filling out lines, spacing between words, etc. There are four sizes: en (▮), em (■), two-em (■), and three-em (■) quadrats. Commonly shortened to quad. 2. a mathematical instrument, chiefly used in finding heights or depths: also called geometrical square. [Obs.]

quăd'răte, a. [L. quadratus, squared, pp. of quadrare, to make square; quadrus, a square, from quattuor, four.] 1. square or nearly square; rectangular. 2. in zoology, designating a bone or cartilage of the skull in birds, fishes, and reptiles, to which the lower jaw is joined. 3. in astrology, designating an aspect of heavenly bodies in which they are 90° distant from each other. 4. square; equal; exact. [Obs.] 5. suited; fitted; applicable; correspondent. [Obs.]

quăd'răte, n. [Late ME.; L. quadratum, from quadratus.] 1. a square or rectangle. 2. a square or rectangular space, thing, etc. 3. in zoology, the quadrate bone. 4. in astrology, an aspect of the heavenly bodies, in which they are 90° distant from each other.

quăd'răte, v.i.; quadrated, pt., pp.; quadrating, ppr. to square; to suit; to correspond; to agree: followed by with.

quăd'răte, v.t. 1. to trim, as a ship's gun on its carriage and its trucks; to adjust, as a gun for firing on a level range. [Obs.] 2. to make square; to make (something) conform (to).

quăd·rat'iç, a. [from quadrate and -ic.] 1. square. 2. in algebra, pertaining to or involving the square or second power of an unknown quantity, but no higher power. 3. in crystallography, dimetric: applied to the system that includes the square prism and related forms.

quăd·rat′iç, n. a quadratic term, expression, or equation.

quăd·rat′i·çăl·ly, adv. by means of quadratics; to the second degree.

quăd·rat′iç ē·quā′tion, in algebra, an equation in which the second power, or square, is the highest to which the unknown quantity is raised.

quăd·rat′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] that branch of algebra dealing with quadratic equations.

quăd·rā·tō·jū′găl, a. of, connected with, or common to the quadrate and jugal bone.

quăd·rā·tō·jū′găl, n. a bone, generally long and slender, lying between the quadrate bone and jugal bone of birds.

quăd·rā′trix, n.; pl. quăd·rā′tri·cēs, [LL. trans. from Gr. tetragōnizousa, a mechanical line.] in geometry, a mechanical line by means of which we can find right lines equal to the circumference of circles or other curves and their several parts.

quăd·rā′tum, n.; pl. quăd·rā′tà, 1. in zoology, the quadrate bone.
2. in old music, a breve.

quăd′rà·tūre, n. [LL. quadratura.]
1. the act of squaring.
2. the determining of the dimensions of a square equal in area to a given surface.
3. a quadrate; a square. [Obs.]
4. in astronomy, the position of one heavenly body in respect to another, when 90° distant from it, as the moon, when at an equal distance from the points of conjunction and opposition.
5. in physics, a phase difference of ninety degrees.
quadrature of the circle; the famous problem of the squaring of the circle; that is, finding a square equal in area to a given circle, now known to be insoluble.

quăd′rel, n. [LL. quadrellus, dim. of L. quadrus, a square.]
1. a square stone, brick, or tile. [Obs.]
2. a kind of artificial stone made of chalky earth dried in the sun: so called from the square shape. [Obs.]

quăd·relle′ (-rel′), n. [Fr.] an iron mace with a head of four projections, carried at the saddle bow in the fifteenth century.

QUADRELLE

quăd·ren′ni·ăl, a. [L. quadriennium, from quattuor, four, and annus, year.]
1. lasting or comprising four years; as, a quadrennial period.
2. occurring once in four years; as, quadrennial games.

quăd·ren′ni·ăl, n. a quadrennial event.

quăd·ren′ni·ăl·ly, adv. once in four years.

quăd·ren′ni·um, n.; pl. quăd·ren′ni·à, [L.] a space or period of four years.

quăd′ri-, [from L. quadri-, quadru-, and quatri-, from quattuor, four.] a combining form meaning four times, fourfold; also, before a vowel, quadr-.

quăd·ri·bā′siç, a. in chemistry, designating an acid having four hydrogen atoms which may be replaced by basic atoms or radicals.

quăd′ri·ble, a. quadrable. [Obs.]

quăd′riç, a. in mathematics, of the second degree: used of a function with more than two variables.

quăd′riç, n. [LL. quadrus, a square, from L. quattuor, four.] in mathematics, a quantic of the second degree.

quăd·ri·çap′sū·lăr, a. [quadri-, and L. capsula, a capsule.] in botany, having four capsules.

quăd″ri·cen·ten′ni·ăl, n. [quadri- and centennial.] a 400th anniversary or its celebration.

quăd″ri·cen·ten′ni·ăl, a. of a quadricentennial.

quăd′ri·ceps, n. [quadri-, and L. -ceps, from caput, head.] in anatomy, the great extensor muscle of the thigh, which functions to extend the leg when contracted.

quăd·ri·cip′i·tăl, a. of or pertaining to the quadriceps.

quăd′ri·çorn, n. [quadri-, and L. cornu, horn.] any animal having four horns or antennae.

quăd·ri·çor′nous, a. having four horns or antennae.

quăd·ri·ços′tāte, a. [quadri-, and L. costa, rib.] having four ribs.

quăd′ri·cȳ·çle, n. a four-wheeled cycle, or velocipede.

quăd·ri·den′tāte, a. [quadri-, and L. dens, dentis, a tooth.] having four teeth or parts resembling teeth.

quăd·ri·en′ni·ăl, a. same as quadrennial.

quăd·ri·făr′i·ous, a. [quadri-, and L. -farius, from fari, to speak.] arranged in four rows or ranks.

quăd′ri·fid, a. [L. quadrifidus; quadri-, four, and findere, to divide.] in botany, divided into four parts, as a leaf or petal.

quăd·ri·fō′li·ā·tē, a. [quadri-, and L. folium, a leaf.] having four leaves attached laterally to a common stalk.

quăd·ri·fō′li·ō·lāte, a. [quadri-, and L. foliolus, a leaflet.] of or designating a compound leaf having four leaflets.

quăd·ri·fūr′çāte, quăd·ri·fūr′çā·ted, a. doubly dichotomous.

3. piquant; pungent.
4. somewhat indecent; suggestive; risqué; as, a racy novel.
rā′dăr, n. [*ra*dio *d*etecting *a*nd *r*anging.] any of several systems or devices using transmitted and reflected radio waves for detecting a reflecting object, as an aircraft, and determining its direction, distance, height, or speed, or in storm detection, navigation, etc.
radar beacon; a beacon with its transmitter and other components that emits radar waves for reception and display, indicating its range or bearing, or both, from a receiving set.
rā′dăr·ṣcōpe, n. an oscilloscope that visually records the reflected radio beams picked up by a radar receiver.
rad′dle (-dl), n. [Anglo-Fr. reidele, cart rail; M.H.G. reidel, reitel, a cudgel.]
1. a long stick used in making hedges; also,

a hedge formed by interweaving such sticks. [Obs. or Dial.]
2. a wooden bar, with a row of upright pegs set in it, used by weavers to keep the warp of a proper width and to prevent it from becoming entangled when it is wound upon the beam of the loom. [Obs.]

rad'dle, v.t.; raddled, pt., pp.; raddling, ppr. to interweave.

rad'dle, n. reddle; red ocher; hence, any red pigment.

rad'dle, v.t.; raddled, pt., pp.; raddling, ppr. to color as with raddle.

rad'dŏck, n. the ruddock. [Brit. Dial.]

rāde, n. a road; also, a raid. [Scot. or Obs.]

rāde, v. past tense of ride. [Scot.]

ra·deau' (-dō'), n.; pl. ra·deaux' (-dōz'), [Fr., from L. ratis, raft.] a raft.

rā'di·ăl, a. [Fr., from L. radius, a ray, a rod, a spoke.]
1. (a) of or like a ray or rays; spreading or branching out in all directions from a common center; (b) having or characterized by parts that branch out in this way.
2. of or situated like a radius.
3. in anatomy, of or near the radius, or forearm.
radial artery; in anatomy, the lesser branch of the two parts into which the brachial artery divides after passing the elbow: it can be felt as the radial pulse at the wrist.
radial curves; in geometry, curves of the spiral kind, whose ordinates all terminate in the center of the including circle and appear like so many semidiameters.
radial engine; an internal-combustion engine with the cylinders arranged radially around the crankshaft instead of in tandem: used in some airplanes.

RADIAL ENGINE

radial motor; same as radial engine.
radial symmetry; see under symmetry.

rā'di·ăl, n. 1. in anatomy, same as radiale.
2. in zoology, (a) any one of a median circle of plates in the body of a crinoid; (b) a hypercoracoid.
3. a ray; a radiating part.

rā·di·ā'lē, n.; pl. rā·di·ā'li·ȧ, 1. in anatomy, an articulating element on the radial side of the carpus; the scaphoid bone in the human body.
2. a ray or radial of the cup of a crinoid.
3. a hypercoracoid.

rā'di·ăl·ly, adv. in a radial manner; so as to be radial.

rā'di·ăn, n. 1. an arc in any circle, equal in length to the radius of the same circle.
2. the angle at the center of a circle formed by two radii cutting off such an arc, equal to 57.295+ degrees.

rā'di·ănce, n. [L. radians, beaming.]
1. the quality or state of being radiant; brightness.
2. radiation. [Rare.]
Syn.—brilliance, luster, splendor, resplendence.

rā'di·ăn·cy, n. same as radiance.

rā'di·ănt, a. 1. sending out rays of light; shining brightly.
2. filled with light; bright; as, the radiant morning.
3. showing pleasure, joy, well-being, etc.; beaming; as, a radiant smile.
4. issuing (from a source) in or as in rays; radiated; as, radiant energy.
radiant energy; any form of energy radiating from a source, as electromagnetic waves, sound, heat, light, X rays, gamma rays, etc.
radiant heat; heat radiating from a heated body, as distinguished from that transmitted by intervening media.
radiant heating; a method of heating a building by means of electric coils, hot-water or steam pipes, etc. installed in the floors or walls.
radiant point; a point from which rays are emitted.

rā'di·ănt, n. 1. in optics, the point or object from which light proceeds.
2. in geometry, a straight line proceeding from a given point, or fixed pole, about which it is conceived to revolve.
3. in astronomy, the point in the heavens from which a shower of meteors seems to proceed.

rā'di·ănt·ly, adv. in a radiant manner.

Rā·di·ā'tȧ, n.pl. an obsolete division of the animal kingdom, including those animals having radial instead of bilateral symmetry, including the Echinodermata, Acalephæ, Entozoa, Polypi, and Infusoria.

RADIATA
1. the sea anemone; 2. jellyfish; 3. starfish rā'di·āte, n. an animal having radial symmetry.

rā'di·āte, v.i.; radiated, pt., pp.; radiating, ppr. [L. radiare.]
1. to send out rays of heat, light, etc.
2. to come forth or spread out in rays; as, heat radiates from the stove.
3. to branch out in lines from a center; as, highways radiate from the city.

rā'di·āte, v.t. 1. to send out (heat, light, etc.) in rays.
2. to give out or spread (happiness, love, etc.) as if from a center.

rā'di·āte, a. 1. having rays or lines proceeding from or as from a center; adorned with rays; radiated.
2. in botany, (a) diverging from a common center; (b) bearing ray flowers, as the sunflower.
3. in mineralogy, having crystals or fibers diverging as from a center.
4. in zoology, having the organs of circulation and sensation arranged in radial symmetry around a central axis.

rā'di·ā·ted, a. adorned with rays or radiations; rayed; radiate.

rā'di·āte·ly, adv. in a radiate manner.

rā'di·āte-veined (-vānd), a. in botany, having palmate nervation.

rā·di·at'i·form, a. in botany, radiate in appearance, as the heads of Centaurea cyanus.

rā·di·ā'tion, n. [L. radiatio.]
1. the act or process of radiating; specifically, the process in which energy in the form of rays of light, heat, etc. is sent out from atoms and molecules as they undergo internal change.
2. the rays sent out; radiant energy.
3. the treatment of disease by radium or other radioactive material.
4. radial arrangement of parts.
direct radiation; the radiation of heat from a bank of pipes carrying steam or hot water.
obscure radiation; radiation of energy by means of waves not recognizable by the eye, as those below the red and above the violet of the spectrum.
solar radiation; the radiation of the sun as estimated by the amount of energy that reaches the earth.
terrestrial radiation; the radiation of heat from the earth into the space surrounding it.

rā·di·ā'tion fog, fog formed over damp places in the evening by the condensation of vapor in the warm humid atmosphere.

rā'di·ā·tive, a. of, capable of, or characterized by radiation.

rā'di·ā·tŏr, n. anything that radiates; specifically, (a) a series of pipes or coils through which hot water or steam circulates so as to radiate heat into a room, etc.; (b) loosely, a hot-air register; (c) a water-filled apparatus, as in an automobile, for radiating superfluous heat and thus cooling the engine.

rad'i·çăl, a [Fr., from LL. radicalis, having roots, from L. radix, root.]
1. of or from the root or roots; going to the center, foundation, or source of something; fundamental; basic; as, a radical principle.
2. (a) favoring fundamental or extreme change; specifically, favoring such change of the social structure; very leftist; (b) [R–] designating or of any of various modern political parties, especially in Europe, ranging from mildly leftist to conservative in program.
3. in botany, of or coming from the root.
4. in mathematics, having to do with the root or roots of a number or quantity.
radical quantity; in algebra, a quantity to which the radical sign is prefixed.
radical sign; the sign ($\surd$ or $\sqrt{\ }$) placed before any quantity, signifying that its root is to be extracted, thus $\surd a$ or $\sqrt{a+b}$.
Syn.—entire, complete, primitive, original, essential, extreme, positive, fundamental.

rad'i·çăl, n. 1. (a) a basic or root part of something; (b) a fundamental.
2. (a) a person having radical views; (b) [R–] a member or adherent of a Radical political party.
3. in chemistry, a group of two or more atoms that acts as a single atom and goes through a reaction unchanged, or is replaced by a single atom: symbol, R.
4. in linguistics, a word, or part of a word, serving as a base, or root, on which other words have been or can be formed.
5. in mathematics, (a) any quantity from which the root is to be extracted; (b) the radical sign.
compound radical; same as radical, n. 3.

rad'i·çăl·işm, n. 1. the quality or state of being radical, especially in politics.
2. radical principles, ideals, methods, or practices.

rad·i·çal'i·ty, n. the quality of being radical.

rad'i·çăl·ly, adv. 1. (a) as regards root or origin; as, English is radically a Germanic language; (b) from the very origin or foundation; fundamentally; basically; completely; as, radically mistaken.
2. in a manner characterized by radicalism.

rad'i·çăl·ness, n. the state of being radical.

rad·i·çand', n. [L. radicandus, taking root.] the quantity under a radical sign.

rad'i·çănt, a. [Fr., from L. radicare, to take root.] in botany, rooting; as, a radicant stem.

rad'i·çāte, v.t.; radicated, pt., pp.; radicating, ppr. [L. radicatus, rooted.] to root; to plant deeply and firmly; as, radicated opinions. [Now Rare.]

rad'i·çāte, v.i. to take root; to become grounded permanently; to be established. [Now Rare.]

rad'i·çāte, a. 1. radicated.
2. in botany, rooted.

rad'i·çā·ted, a. rooted. [Now Rare.]

rad·i·çā'tion, n. the process of taking root deeply; as, the radication of habits. [Obs.]

rad'i·cel, n. [from L. radex, radicis, root.] in botany, a rootlet; a branchlike extension of a root.

rad'i·cēs, n. alternative plural of radix.

rad·i·ciç'ō·lous, a. in zoology, attacking or subsisting on roots.

ra·dic·i·flō'rous, a in botany, flowering from a rootstalk.

ra·dic'i·form, a. in shape and appearance like a root.

rad'i·çle, n. [L. radicula, dim. of radix, a root.]
1. in anatomy, the rootlike beginning of a nerve, vein, etc.
2. in botany, (a) the lower part of the axis of an embryo seedling; strictly, the root part; often, the hypocotyl, sometimes together with the root; (b) a radicel or rudimentary root.
3. in chemistry, a radical.

ra·diç'ō·lous, a. same as radicicolous.

ra·diç'ū·lăr, a. of or relating to roots.

rad'i·çūle, n. radicle. [Rare.]

ra·diç'ū·lōse, a. having many rootlets.

rā'di·ī, n. alternative plural of radius.

rā'di·ō-, [from L. radius, a rod, hence radius.] a combining form meaning: (a) ray, raylike, as in *radio*larian; (b) by radio, as in *radio*telegraphy; (c) in anatomy, the radius and; (d) in medicine, by means of radiant energy, as in *radio*therapy; (e) in physics and chemistry, radioactive, as in *radio*thorium.

rā'di·ō, n.; pl. rā'di·ōs, [contr. of radiotelegraphy, radiotelephony, etc.]
1. the practice or science of communicating over a distance by converting sounds or signals into electromagnetic waves and transmitting these directly through space, without connecting wires, to a receiving set, which changes them into sounds; wireless telephony or telegraphy.
2. such a receiving set, especially one adapted for receiving the waves of the assigned frequencies of certain transmitters or broadcasting stations.

3. (a) broadcasting by radio as a business, entertainment, art, etc.; (b) all the facilities and related activities of such broadcasting.

4. a message sent by radio; a radiogram.

rā'dī-ō, a. 1. of, using, used in, sent by, or operated by radio.

2. having to do with electric frequencies of more than 15,000 cycles per second.

rā'dī-ō, v.t. and v.i.; radioed, pt., pp.; radioing, ppr. to send (a message, etc.) or communicate with (a person, etc.) by radio.

rā"dī-ō-aç'tīve, rā"dī-ō-aç'tive, a. [radio- and active.] giving off, or capable of giving off, radiant energy in the form of particles or rays, as alpha, beta, and gamma rays, by the disintegration of atomic nuclei: said of certain elements, as radium, thorium, and uranium, and their products.

radioactive dating; the determination of the age of an object or material based on the known rates of decay of radioactive isotopes of various elements.

radioactive series; the series of isotopes of various elements successively formed by a radioactive substance before it comes to a stable state.

rā"dī-ō-aç-tiv'i-ty, n. the property or process of being radioactive.

rā'dī-ō as-tron'ō-my, that branch of astronomy which deals with radio waves in space in order to obtain data and information about particular regions in the universe.

rā'dī-ō-au'tō-gràph, n. [radio- and autograph.] a picture produced on photographic film, etc. by the rays from a radioactive substance in the thing being photographed.

rā'dī-ō bēa'çŏn, a radio transmitter that gives off special signals to help ships or aircraft determine their positions or come in safely, as at night or in a fog.

rā'dī-ō bēam, a constant stream of radio signals sent in a given direction from a radio beacon to serve as a course for incoming airplanes, etc.: also beam.

rā"dī-ō-broad'çàst, v.t. to broadcast by radio.

rā"dī-ō-broad'çàst, n. a broadcast by radio.

rā"dī-ō-çhem'is-try, n. the branch of chemistry dealing with radioactive phenomena.

rā'dī-ō çŏm'păss, a device for determining the direction of incoming radio waves: used in navigation, etc.

rā'dī-ō çŏn-trōl', the directional control of pilotless aircraft, missiles, etc. by means of radio waves.

rā"dī-ō-dēr-mà-tī'tis, n. [radio- and dermatitis.] in pathology, inflammation of the skin due to prolonged exposure to X rays or other forms of radiation.

rā"dī-ō-dē-teçt'ŏr, n. an apparatus (usually a vacuum tube or a crystal) which rectifies high-frequency electric currents.

rā"dī-ō-el'e-mēnt, n. a radioactive element.

rā"dī-ō-frē'quen-cy, a. of or using a radio frequency.

rā'dī-ō frē'quen-cy, in electricity, a frequency of more than 15,000 vibrations per second.

rā"dī-ō-ġen'iç, a. [radio- and -genic.] produced by radioactivity.

rā'dī-ō-gram, n. 1. a message sent by radio: also radiotelegram.

2. a radiograph.

rā'dī-ō-gràph, n. [radio- and -graph.] a picture produced on a sensitized film or plate by rays other than light rays, especially by X rays.

rā'dī-ō-gràph, v.t. to make a radiograph of.

rā'dī-ō-gràph, v.i. 1. to make a radiograph.

2. to send a radiogram.

rā-dī-og'rà-phēr, n. a person who makes, or is an expert in, radiographs.

rā"dī-ō-graph'iç, a. of radiography.

rā"dī-ō-graph'i-çăl-ly, adv. by means of radiographs or radiography.

rā-dī-og'rà-phy, n. the art, process, or act of producing radiographs.

rā'dī-ō-im"mū-nō-as'sāy, n. the technique of immunoassay in which radioactive tracers are introduced into the substance to be analyzed.

rā"dī-ō-ī'sō-tōpe, n. an artificially created radioactive isotope of a chemical element that is normally nonradioactive, used in biological research, in the treatment of various diseases, etc.

Rā"dī-ō-lā'ri-à, n.pl. [Mod. L., from radiolus, dim. of L. radius, rod.] an order of one-celled sea animals with long, slender pseudopodia and a perforated outer skeleton of silica.

rā'dī-ō-līte, n. [L. radius, a ray, and -lite.] any of a genus of fossil lamellibranchiate mollusks, the Radiolites. They are striated externally. The inferior valve is in the form of a reversed cone, and the superior, is convex.

rā"dī-ō-lō-çā'tion, n. the use of radar or radiolocators in finding the location and direction of enemy aircraft, etc.

rā"dī-ō-lō'çā-tŏr, n. a British device similar to the American radar.

rā-dī-ol'ō-ġist, n. a person skilled in the use of X rays; particularly, a physician so skilled rā-dī-ol'ō-ġy, n. [radio- and -ology.] the branch of science dealing with radiant energy and its uses, as in the treatment of disease by X rays.

rā"dī-ō-met-ăl-log'rà-phy, n. the study of the structure of metals and alloys by X rays.

rā"dī-ō-mē'tē-ŏr-ō-gràph, n. a radiosonde.

rā-dī-om'ē-tēr, n. [radio- and -meter.] an instrument for detecting, and measuring the intensity of, radiant energy, as by exposing to sunlight a set of vanes blackened on one side and suspended on an axis in a vacuum, and measuring their speed of rotation (i.e., the mechanical energy into which the radiant energy has been converted).

RADIOMETER

rā"dī-ō-met'riç, a. of or pertaining to the radiometer; denoting experiments performed by the radiometer.

rā"dī-om'e-try, n. the art or act of using a radiometer.

rā"dī-ō-mī-çrom'ē-tēr, n. a sensitive instrument, modified from the thermopile, for indicating minute fluctuations in radiant heat.

rā"dī-ō-pāque', a. [radio-, and opaque.] not allowing the passage of X rays, gamma rays, or other forms of radiant energy.

rā'dī-ō-phāre, n. a radio station formerly used for determining the location of ships.

rā'dī-ō-phōne, n. 1. a wireless telephone; telephone operated by radio: also radiotelephone.

2. in physics, any instrument for transforming radiant energy into sound.

rā'dī-ō-phōne, v.t. and v.i.; radiophoned, pt., pp.; radiophoning, ppr. to send (a message) by radiophone (sense 1): also radiotelephone.

rā"dī-ō-phon'iç, a. pertaining to a radiophone.

rā-dī-oph'ō-ny, n. 1. in physics, the transformation of radiant heat energy into sound.

2. in communications, the science or practice of radiotelephony.

rā"dī-ō-phō'tō-gràph, n. a photograph transmitted by radio equipment; a photoradiogram.

rā"dī-ō-phō'tō-gràph, v.t. to make a radiophotograph of (a person or thing).

rā"dī-ō-phō'tō-gràph, v.i. to transmit photographs by radio equipment.

rā"dī-ō-phō-tog'rà-phy, n. the art or science dealing with the transmission and reception of photographs by means of radio.

rā"dī-os'çō-py, n. [radio- and -scopy.] the direct examination of the inside structure of opaque objects by means of X rays or rays from radioactive substances.

rā"dī-ō-sen-si-bil'i-ty, n. in medicine, sensitivity to radioactive influence.

rā"dī-ō-sen'si-tive, a. in medicine, sensitive to radiant energy; relating to that which may be destroyed by radioactive substances.

rā"dī-ō-sen-si-tiv'i-ty, n. same as radiosensibility.

rā'dī-ō set, the apparatus by means of which radio broadcasts are transmitted or received; usually, a receiving set.

rā'dī-ō-sonde, n. [Fr., from radio, and sonde, a sounding lead, from sonder, to sound.] a compact package of meteorological instruments and a radio transmitter, carried aloft by a small balloon to measure and transmit to ground observers temperature, pressure, and humidity data from the upper atmosphere by means of special radio signals.

rā'dī-ō speç'trum, the complete range of frequencies or wave lengths of electromagnetic waves, specifically those used in radio and television.

rā'dī-ō stā'tion, a broadcasting station.

rā"dī-ō-teçh-nol'ō-ġy, n. 1. the science or study of radio engineering.

2. the application of X rays and other forms of radiation to industrial purposes.

rā"dī-ō-tel'ē-grăm n. same as radiogram, sense 1.

rā"dī-ō-tel'ē-gràph, n. an apparatus by means of which radiotelegrams may be transmitted.

rā"dī-ō-tel'ē-gràph, v.t. and v.i. to send (a message) by radiotelegraphy.

rā"dī-ō-tel"ē-gràph'iç, a. of or by a radiotelegraph or radiotelegraphy.

rā"dī-ō-tē-leg'rà-phy, n. the sending and receiving of messages by a radiotelegraph.

rā"dī-ō-tel'ē-phōne, n. same as radiophone, n. 1.

rā"dī-ō-tel'ē-phōne, v.t. and v.i. to radiophone.

rā"dī-ō-tel"ē-phon'iç, a. of or by a radiotelephone or radiotelephony.

rā"dī-ō-tē-leph'ō-ny, n. telephony by radio, without connecting wires.

rā"dī-ō-tel-lū'ri-um, n. an isotope of tellurium which has radioactive properties.

rā"dī-ō-thal'li-um, n. an isotope of thallium which has radioactive properties.

rā"dī-ō-ther"à-peū'tiç, a. of or pertaining to radiotherapeutics.

rā"dī-ō-ther"à-peū'tiçs, n. therapeutics as concerned with or making use of radium or radioactive energy in the treatment of disease.

rā"dī-ō-ther'à-py, n. the treatment of disease by the use of X rays or rays from a radioactive substance, as radium.

rā"dī-ō-thēr'miçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [from radio-, and Gr. thermē, heat; and -ics.] the science of heat generation by radio-frequency currents.

rā'dī-ō-thēr"my, n. the treatment of disease or alleviation of pain by using the heat given off by radioactive substances; short-wave diathermy.

rā"dī-ō-thō'ri-um, n. [Mod. L.] a radioactive isotope of thorium, formed from mesothorium 2.

rā'dī-ō tūbe, a type of vacuum tube used in radio, etc.

rā'dī-ous, a. made up of rays; radiant. [Obs.]

rā'dī-ō wāve, an electrical impulse sent through the atmosphere at radio frequency.

rad'ish, n. [Fr. radis, a radish, from L. radix, a root.]

1. a plant of the genus Raphanus, particularly Raphanus sativus, a common garden plant with an edible red or white root.

2. the pungent root, eaten raw as a relish or in a salad.

rā'dī-um, n. [Mod. L., from L. radius, ray.] a radioactive metallic chemical element, found in very small amounts in pitchblende and certain other uranium minerals, which undergoes spontaneous atomic disintegration through several stages, finally forming an isotope of lead: it was discovered by Pierre and Marie Curie in 1898 and is used in the treatment of cancer and some skin diseases: symbol, Ra, formerly Rd; atomic weight, 226.05; atomic number, 88.

rā'dī-um A, a substance formed from radon by atomic disintegration: by further disintegration it gives rise to radium B (an isotope of lead), which in turn gives rise to radium C (an isotope of bismuth), followed successively by the forms C', D, E, F (polonium), and G (an isotope of lead).

rā'dī-um bàth, in medicine, water treated with some radioactive matter, to be used for therapeutic bathing.

rā'dī-um em-à-nā'tion, radon.

rā'dī-um pāint, a kind of paint that glows in the dark due to the addition of mesothorium to the paint mixture.

rā"dī-um-ther'à-py, n. in medicine, the care, management, and treatment of disease with radium and other radioactive substances: used chiefly in treating malignant cancer, etc.: also radium therapy.

rā'dī-us, n.; pl. rā'dī-ī, rā'dī-us-eș, [L., a ray, a rod, a beam, a spoke.]

1. a ray or raylike part; specifically, (a) any of the rays of a composite flower; (b) the pivoted arm of a quadrant, sextant, etc.; (c) a spoke of a wheel.

CA, CD, CB, CE, RADII

2. any straight line extending from the center to the periphery of a circle or sphere: symbol, R.

3. the circular area or distance limited by the sweep of such a line; as, there was no house within a radius of five miles.

4. any limited extent, scope, range, etc.; as, within the radius of my experience.

5. (a) the shorter and thicker of the two bones of the forearm on the same side as the thumb; (b) a corresponding bone of the forelimb of a four-legged animal.

radius of curvature of a curve at any point; the radius of the circle which has the same curvature as the curve at that point.

radius of gyration; the distance from a fixed axis to the center of mass of a given body.

radius vector; pl. radii vectores, radius vectors, (a) the distance, or a straight line representing this distance, from a fixed point to a variable point on a curve or curved surface; (b) in astronomy, the line joining the center of an attracting body, as the sun, with the center of each of the bodies revolving around it.

rā'di·us bär, one of the guiding rods in a parallel motion, jointed to the connecting links, to counteract the vibratory motion communicated by the beam, by guiding the links so that the head of the piston rod may reciprocate in a line sensibly straight.

rā'dix, n.; pl. rad'i·cēs, rā'dix·es, [L., a root.]
1. in linguistics, a root, base, or etymon.
2. in mathematics, a number made the base of a system of numbering.
3. in algebra, a finite expression, from which a series is derived. [Rare.]
4. in anatomy, the root or portion of anything inserted into another, as the root of a tooth; the insertion of a nerve or its branches.
5. the root of any plant.

rā'don, n. [*rad*ium and -on as in neon.] a radioactive gaseous chemical element formed, together with alpha rays, as a first product in the atomic disintegration of radium, and used in the treatment of cancer: also called radium emanation: symbol, Rn; atomic weight, 222; atomic number, 86.

radon seed; in medicine, a sealed tube of glass or gold containing a small amount of radon: it is used for treatment of cancer and is inserted into the diseased tissue.

rad'ū·lă, n.; pl. rad'ū·lae, [L., a scraper, from radere, to scrape.] in zoology, the file or rasplike organ in the mouth of the gastropodous mollusks used to tear up food and take it into the mouth: sometimes applied to the odontophore itself, but properly confined to that portion which is armed with toothlike processes.

rad'ū·lăr, a. pertaining to a radula.

rad'ū·lāte, a. having a radula.

rad·ū·lif'ēr·ous, a. radulate.

3. in early history, an officer charged with the duty of procuring and dispatching diplomas and decrees.
4. in the Orthodox Eastern Church, an intermediary between the civil authorities and the patriarch at Constantinople.

ref·ĕr·en'dum, n.; pl. ref·ĕr·en'dums, ref·ĕr·en'dà, [L., a carrying back, from referre; re- and ferre, to bear.]
1. the submission of a law, proposed or already in effect, to a direct vote of the people.
2. the right of the people to vote directly on such laws, superseding or overruling the legislature.
3. the vote itself.
4. a note sent by a diplomatic agent to his own government, asking for instructions about a particular matter.

ref'ĕr·ent, n. [L. referens, ppr.] what is referred to; especially, in semantics, the object referred to by a term.

ref·ĕr·en'tiăl (-shăl), a. [from reference (as if from hyp. L. referentia) and -al.]
1. having reference (to something).
2. containing a reference or references.
3. used for reference.

ref·ĕr·en'tiăl·ly, adv. in a referential manner.

rē·fĕr'ment, n. a referring or being referred. [Obs.]

rē·fĕr·ment', v.t. and v.i. to ferment again.

rē·fĕr'rà·ble, a. referable.

rē·fĕr'răl, n. a referring or being referred.

rē·fĕr'rĕr, n. one who refers.

rē·fĕr'ri·ble, a. referable.

rē·fig'ūre, v.t. 1. to figure again.
2. to correct or restore the figure of, as a parabolic mirror in a telescope.

rē·fill', v.t. to fill again.

rē'fill, n. a new filling or charge; especially, a unit made to replace the contents of a container that is not itself discarded after use; as, a refill for a ball-point pen.

rē·find', v.t. to find again; to experience anew.

rē·fīne', v.t.; refined, pt., pp.; refining, ppr. [Fr. raffiner; re- and affiner, to purify; af, L. ad, to, and finer, to fine.]
1. to bring or reduce to a pure state; to free from impurities, dross, alloy, sediment, etc.; to clarify; to purify; as, to refine liquor, sugar, or the like.
2. to remove in purifying; to take out (with out or away).
3. to free from what is imperfect, common, gross, coarse, debasing, low, vulgar, inelegant, rude, clownish, and the like; to make elegant; to raise or educate, as the taste; to give culture to; to polish; to improve, as, to refine the manners, taste, language, style, intellect, or moral feelings.

rē·fīne', v.i. 1. to become fine or pure; to become free from impurities, etc.
2. to become more polished or elegant.
3. to use niceties and fine distinctions; to be subtle, as in language.

to refine on (or upon); to improve, as by adding refinements.

rē·fīned', a. [pp. of refine.]
1. purified; separated from extraneous matter; freed from alloy, etc., as metals; clarified, as liquors.
2. characterized by cultivation or elegance; free from vulgarity or coarseness: said of manners, speech, character, etc.
3. characterized by more than ordinary subtlety, exactness, precision, etc.

rē·fīn'ed·ly, adv. with nicety or elegance, especially excessive nicety or elegance.

rē·fīn'ed·ness, n. the state of being refined; purity; refinement; also, affected purity.

rē·fīne'ment, n. 1. the act or process of refining or state of being refined; a purifying or clearing from extraneous matter; purification; clarification; specifically, the process of freeing metals, liquids, or other substances from impurities or crudities which impair their quality or unfit them for their appropriate uses.
2. the result of being refined or purified.
3. the state of being free from all that is gross, coarse, debasing, low, vulgar, rude, clownish, or the like; elegance or delicacy of taste, manners, language, etc.; high culture; polish.

> That sensibility of pain, with which > Refinement is endued. —Cowper.

4. a development; improvement; elaboration; as, his solicitude was a refinement of cruelty.

rē·fīn'ĕr, n. 1. one who refines metals, liquors, sugar, or other substances.
2. one who or that which refines, educates, or polishes the taste, manners, etc.; as, a refiner of language.
3. an inventor of superfluous subtleties; one who is overnice in discrimination, in argument, reasoning, philosophy, etc.

rē·fīn'ĕr·y, n.; pl. rē·fīn'ĕr·ieṣ, 1. a place, establishment, or plant where oil, sugar, metals, liquors, etc., are refined.
2. an apparatus for removing impurities or crudities from metals, spirits, oil, sugar, etc.

rē·fit', n. the repairing or renewing of what is damaged or worn out; specifically, the repair of a ship.

rē·fit', v.t.; refitted, pt., pp.; refitting, ppr. 1. to make fit for use again; to repair, where damaged or worn out.
2. to fit out or provide anew.

rē·fit', v.i. to repair damages, especially to a ship.

rē·fit'ment, n. the act of refitting; a second fitting out.

rē·fix', v.t. to fix a second time; to fix or establish anew.

rē·flāme', v.i. to burst again into flame.

rē·flāte', v.t. and v.i.; reflated, pt., pp.; reflating, ppr. to reinflate.

rē·flect', v.t.; reflected, pt., pp.; reflecting, ppr. [L. reflectere; re- and flectere, to bend.]
1. to bend or throw back, as light, heat, or sound.
2. to give back an image of; to mirror or reproduce.
3. to cast or bring back as a consequence (with on); as, his deeds reflect honor on the nation.
4. to fold or turn back. [Rare.]

rē·flect', v.i. 1. to be bent or thrown back; as, the light reflected from the water into his eyes.
2. to bend or throw back light, heat, sound, etc.
3. (a) to give back an image or likeness; (b) to be mirrored.
4. to think seriously; contemplate; ponder (with on or upon).
5. to cast blame or discredit (with on or upon).

rē·flect'ed, a. 1. thrown back; returned, as by reflection.
2. in anatomy, bending or turning away from the general line of direction of a part; also, turned or folded back.

rē·flect'ent, a. reflecting. [Obs.]

rē·flect'i·ble, a. capable of being reflected or thrown back.

rē·flect'ing, a. 1. throwing back light, heat etc., as a mirror or similar surface.
2. given to reflection; meditative; reflective; as, a reflecting mind.

reflecting circle; an instrument for measuring altitudes and angular distances, constructed on the principle of the sextant, the graduations, however, being continued completely round the limb of the circle.

REFLECTING CIRCLE

reflecting galvanometer; a galvanometer invented by Sir W. Thomson, in which a delicately poised and adjusted magnet is attached to a mirror reflecting a ray of light upon a scale in such a manner as to indicate the strength of an electric current.

reflecting goniometer; see under goniometer.

reflecting telescope; see under telescope.

rē·flect'ing·ly, adv. with reflection.

rē·flec'tion, n. 1. the act of reflecting, or the state of being reflected.
2. in physics, the change of direction which a ray of light, radiant heat, sound, or other form of radiant energy, experiences when it strikes upon a surface and is thrown back into the same medium from which it approached. When a perfectly elastic body strikes a hard and fixed plane obliquely it rebounds from it, making the angle of reflection equal to the angle of incidence.
3. anything reflected.
4. an image; likeness.
5. the fixing of the mind on some subject; serious thought; contemplation.
6. the result of such thought; an idea or conclusion, especially if expressed in words.
7. blame; discredit.
8. a remark or statement imputing discredit or blame.
9. an action bringing discredit.
10. in anatomy and zoology, a turning or bending back on itself.

Also spelled reflexion.

Syn.—meditation, contemplation, rumination, cogitation, consideration, musing, thinking, censure, reproach.

rē·flec'tion·ăl, a. of reflection.

rē·flect'ive, a. 1. throwing back rays or images; reflecting; as, a reflective mirror.
2. of or produced by reflection.
3. (a) taking cognizance of the operations of the mind; capable of exercising thought or judgment; as, reflective reason; (b) exercising thought or reflection; meditative; thoughtful.
4. in grammar, (a) reflexive; (b) reciprocal.

rē·flect'ive·ly, adv. by reflection.

rē·flect'ive·ness, n. the state or quality of being reflective.

rē·flec·tiv'i·ty, n. the quality or condition of being reflective.

rē·flec'tŏr, n. 1. a person or thing that reflects; especially, a surface, object, etc. that reflects light, sound, heat, or the like, as a

PARABOLIC REFLECTOR
R, parabolic reflecting surface; L, light source at focus; B, reflected parallel light rays piece of glass or metal, highly polished and usually concave, which reflects and directs rays or a beam of light.

2. in photography, an adjustable, movable screen used to reflect and control light.

3. a reflecting telescope, the speculum of which is an example of the converse application of the parabolic reflector, the parallel rays proceeding from a distant body being in this case concentrated into the focus of the reflector.

rē·flet' (-flē'), n. [Fr. reflet, reflection, from L. reflectere, to reflect.]

1. brightness or iridescence of surface, as a metallic glaze on pottery.

2. a tile or other piece of pottery having such a glaze.

rē'flex, a. [L. reflexus, reflected.]

1. turned, bent, or reflected back.

2. coming in reaction or reflection; as, a reflex effect; especially, in physiology, designating or of an involuntary action, as a sneeze, resulting when a stimulus is carried by an afferent nerve to a nerve center and the response is reflected along an efferent nerve to some muscle or gland.

REFLEX ANGLE

3. in geometry, designating an angle greater than a straight angle.

4. in radio, designating or of an apparatus in which some device functions in a double capacity, as a receiving set in which the same tube is both audio-frequency and radio-frequency amplifier.

5. in biology, bent back; reflexed.

reflex arc; in physiology, the entire nerve path involved in a reflex action.

rē'flex, n. 1. (a) reflection, as of light; (b) light or color resulting from reflection.

2. a reflected image, likeness, or reproduction.

3. in art, light reflected from a lighted to a shaded surface.

4. in physiology, a reflex action.

5. in radio, a reflex apparatus.

conditioned reflex; see under conditioned.

rē·flex', v.t.; reflexed (-flekst), pt., pp.; reflexing, ppr. 1. to reflect. [Obs.]

2. to bend back; to turn back; to fold back.

3. to cause to undergo a reflex process.

rē'flex ca·mē'ra, a camera in which the image formed by the lens is reflected by a mirror onto a ground-glass plate to help in focusing the lens.

rē·flexed', a. bent backward; turned abruptly backward, as a petal; turned or bent up; curving back.

rē·flex i·bil'i·ty, n. the quality of being reflexible.

rē·flex'i·ble, a. capable of being reflected or thrown back.

The light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible.
—Cheyne.

rē·flex'iŏn (-flek'shun), n. 1. reflection.

2. in anatomy, etc., a bending or folding back on itself, as of a part.

rē·flex'i·ty, n. the capacity of being reflected. [Rare.]

rē·flex'ive, a. 1. reflex.

2. reflective.

3. in grammar, (a) expressing an action turned back upon the subject; designating a verb whose subject and direct object are identical (e.g., wash in "I wash myself"); (b) designating a pronoun used as the direct object of such a verb, as myself in the above example.

rē·flex'ive, n. a reflexive verb or pronoun.

rē·flex'ive·ly, adv. 1. in a reflexive manner.

2. in grammar, after the manner of a reflexive verb.

rē·flex'ive·ness, n. the state or quality of being reflexive.

rē·flex·iv'i·ty, n. the condition or quality of being reflexive.

rē·flex'ly, adv. in a reflex manner.

rē'flōat, n. reflux; ebb. [Rare.]

rē·flō·res'cence, n. a blossoming anew.

rē·flŏur'ish, v.i. to flourish anew.

rē·flōw', v.i. to flow back; to ebb.

rē·flow'ēr, v.t. and v.i. to flower, or cause to flower, again.

rē·fluc·tū·ā'tion, n. a flowing back.

ref'lu·ence, ref'lu·en·cy, n. a flowing back.

ref'lu·ent, a. [L. refluens; re-, back, and fluere, to flow.] flowing back; ebbing; as, the refluent tide.

rē'flux, a. flowing back.

rē'flux, n. [Fr., the ebb of the sea, from L. re-, back, and fluere, to flow.] a flowing back; ebbing; as, the flux and reflux of the tides.

rē·foc'il·lāte, v.t. to refresh; to revive; to give new vigor to. [Obs.]

rē·foc·il·lā'tion, n. the act of refreshing or giving new vigor; restoration of strength by refreshment. [Obs.]

rē·for'est, v.t. and v.i. to plant new trees on (land once forested); to reafforest.

rē·for·es·tā'tion, n. the act of reforesting or the state of being reforested.

rē"for·es·ti·zā'tion, n. reforestation.

rē·for'est·ize, v.t. same as reforest.

rē·fōrġe', v.t. to forge again or anew; to form anew; to make over by forging.

rē·fōr'ġēr, n. one who reforges.

rē·form', v.t.; reformed, pt., pp.; reforming, ppr. [ME. reformer; OFr. reformer; L. reformare.]

1. to make better by removing faults and defects; to correct.

2. to make better by putting a stop to abuses or malpractices, or by introducing better procedures, etc.

3. to put a stop to (abuses, etc.).

4. to bring (a person) by force or persuasion to give up misconduct and behave better.

rē·form', v.i. to become or behave better; to abandon that which is evil or corrupt and return to a good state; to be amended or corrected; as, a man of settled habits of vice will seldom reform.

Syn.—amend, correct, better, mend, improve.

rē·form', n. 1. an improvement; correction of faults or evil, as in politics.

2. an improvement in character and conduct; reformation.

3. a movement aimed at removing corruption from politics.

4. in sociology, action by individuals or groups aimed at preventing crime or at eliminating or mitigating poverty by means of new laws.

Reform Act; any of various acts passed by the British Parliament largely increasing popular representation in the House of Commons: also called Reform Bill.

reform school; a reformatory for juveniles.

rē-form', v.t. and v.i. to form again or anew; as, to re-form a body of troops.

rē·form'á·ble, a. having capacity for reform; of a character such as to admit of reform.

ref·or·mā'dō, ref·or·māde', n. [Sp., from L. re-, again, and formare, to form.] an officer removed from command but still bearing his rank and, sometimes, drawing his pay. [Obs.]

ref·or·mā'tion, n. 1. the act of reforming or the state of being reformed; correction or amendment of life, manners, or of anything vicious or corrupt; as, the reformation of manners, reformation of abuses.

2. [R-] in church history, the movement started by Martin Luther in the sixteenth century that aimed at reforming the Roman Catholic Church and resulted in the establishment of Protestantism.

Syn.—reform.—Reformation is a more thorough and comprehensive change than reform. It is applied to subjects that are more important, and results in changes which are more lasting. A reformation usually involves and is followed by many particular reforms.

rē-for·mā'tion, n. the act of forming anew; a second forming in order; as, the re-formation of a column of troops into a hollow square.

ref·ŏr·mā'tion·ăl, a. of reformation.

rē·form'á·tive, a. reforming or tending to reform.

rē-form'á·tive, a. forming again; having the quality of renewing form.

rē·form'á·tō·ry, a. reforming or tending to produce reformation.

rē·form'á·tō·ry, n.; pl. rē·form'á·tō·ries, an institution where young offenders convicted of lesser crimes are confined for training and discipline intended to reform rather than punish them.

rē·formed', a. [pp. of reform.]

1. improved or corrected, as in behavior or morals, or made better by the removal of errors, abuses, etc.

2. [R-] designating or of a Protestant church or churches, especially Calvinist as distinguished from Lutheran.

3. [R-] designating a form of Judaism, introduced in the 19th century, which does not require strict observance of the traditional ritual of Orthodox Judaism.

4. in the English army, designating an officer who after his company has disbanded is retained on either half or full pay. [Obs.]

rē·form'ēr, n. 1. a person who reforms, or tries to reform, something, as morals, customs, institutions, etc.

2. any of the leaders of the Reformation, as Luther, Melanchthon, Zwingli, and Calvin.

rē·form'ist, n. 1. [often R-] one who is of the Reformed religion. [Obs.]

2. a person who practices, believes in, or advocates reform, as of some doctrine, ideology, etc.

rē·form'ist, a. of or characteristic of reformists.

rē·fos'sion (-fosh'un), n. the act of digging up anew. [Obs.]

rē·found', v.t. to found or cast anew; to recast; as, to refound a bell.

rē·found', v.t. to found again; to re-establish; to put on a new basis.

rē·found', v. past tense and past participle of refind.

rē·found'ēr, n. one who refounds.

rē·fract', v.t.; refracted, pt., pp.; refracting, ppr. [L. refractus, pp. of refringere, to turn aside, to bend aside, from re- and frangere, to break.]

1. to bend (a ray or wave of light, heat, or sound) as it passes from one medium into another: said of the medium, as, glass refracts light.

2. in optics, to measure the degree of refraction of (an eye or lens).

rē·fract'à·ble, a. capable of being refracted; refrangible.

rē·fract'ed, a. 1. turned from a direct course, as rays of light.

2. in botany and zoology, bent back at an acute angle; as, a refracted corolla.

rē·fract'ing, a. turning rays from a direct course; as, a refracting medium.

refracting telescope; see under telescope.

rē·frac'tion, n. 1. a refracting or being refracted; the bending of a ray or wave of light, heat, or sound, as it passes obliquely from one medium to another of different density, in which its speed is different, or through layers of different density in the same medium.

REFRACTION OF LIGHT RAY

RAY, light ray in straight line; RAP, refracted light ray

2. in astronomy, the bending of the rays of light from a star or planet, greatest when the star or planet is lowest in the sky, so that it seems higher than it really is.

3. in optics, (a) the ability of the eye to refract light entering it, so as to form an image on the retina; (b) the measuring of the degree of refraction of the eye.

angle of refraction; the angle made by the refracted part of a light ray with a line perpendicular to the surface of the refracting medium through the point of incidence of the refracted ray.

axis of refraction; see under axis.

conical refraction; the refraction of a single ray of light, under certain conditions, into an infinite number of rays in the form of a hollow, luminous cone, and consisting of two kinds, external conical refraction and internal conical refraction: the ray in the first case issues from the refracting crystal as a cone with its vertex at the point of emergence; in the second case, the ray is converted into a cone on entering the crystal, and issues as a hollow cylinder.

differential refraction; the refraction that causes apparent change of place of an object relative to some other object.

double refraction; in optics, the refraction of light in two directions and the consequent production of two distinct images. The power of double refraction is possessed by all crystals except those of the isometric system.

index of refraction; see under index.

plane of refraction; the plane passing through the refracted ray and the perpendicular to the refracting surface at the point of incidence.

refraction of altitude and declination, of ascension and descension, of latitude and longitude; the change in the altitude, declination, etc. of a heavenly body due to the effect of atmospheric refraction.

terrestrial refraction; that refraction which makes terrestrial objects appear to be farther from the horizon than they are in reality. This arises from the air being denser near the surface of the earth than it is at higher elevations, its refractive power increasing as the density increases.

rē·frac′tion ăl, a. of refraction.

rē·frac′tion cĭr′cle, a device for measuring the various degrees of refraction by means of a graduated circle.

rē·frac′tion·ist, n. one skilled in correcting errors in ocular refraction.

rē·fract′ive, a. 1. refracting or having power to refract.

2. of, caused by, or pertaining to refraction.

refractive index; same as index of refraction under index.

rē·fract′ive·ness, n. same as refractivity.

rē·frac·tiv′i·ty, n. 1. the power of refraction; the measure of capacity for refraction.

2. the condition or quality of being refractive.

rē·frac·tom′ē·tẽr, n. [refraction, and Gr. metron, a measure.] an instrument for measuring refraction, as of the eye.

rē·fract′ŏr, n. anything that refracts; specifically, a refracting telescope.

rē·frac′tō·ri·ly, adv. in a refractory manner; perversely; obstinately.

rē·frac′tō·ri·ness, n. [L. refractus, broken.] the quality or state of being refractory.

rē·frac′tō·ry, a. [Fr. réfractaire; L. refractarius, stubborn, obstinate.]

1. stubborn; obstinate; hard to manage: said of a person or animal.

2. resistant to heat; hard to melt or work: said of ores or metals.

3. not yielding to treatment, as a disease.

4. able to resist disease.

Syn.—contumacious, perverse, ungovernable, unruly, obstinate.

rē·frac′tō·ry, n. 1. one who or that which is refractory.

2. in ceramics, a substance fusing at a very high temperature, used with a flux in glazing.

rē·frac′tūre, n. in surgery, the act or process of rebreaking a bone which has been badly set.

ref′ra·ga·bil′i·ty, n. the quality that renders refragable. [Rare.]

ref′ra·ga·ble, a. [LL. refragabilis, from L. refragari, to oppose, to resist; re-, and frangere, to break.] that may be refuted; refutable. [Rare.]

ref′ra·ga·ble·ness, n. the quality of being refragable or refutable. [Rare.]

ref′ra·gāte, v.i. to oppose. [Obs.]

rē·frāin′, v.t.; refrained, pt., pp.; refraining, ppr. [Fr. refréner, to bridle in, to curb; from re-, and LL. frenare, to curb; frenum, a rein.]

1. to hold back; to restrain; to keep from action. [Archaic.]

Then Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by.
—Gen. xlv. 1.

2. to abstain from; to stop; to give up. [Obs.]

rē·frāin′, v.i. to hold back; to abstain; to keep oneself (from); to forbear (often with from).

Refrain from these men, and let them alone.
—Acts v. 38.

Syn.—withhold, cease.

rē·frāin′, n. [Fr. refrain, from OFr. refraindre; L. refringere; re-, and frangere, to break.]

1. a phrase or verse repeated at intervals in a song or poem.

2. music for this.

rē·frāin′ēr, n. one who refrains.

rē·frāin′ment, n. the act of refraining. [Rare.]

rē·frāme′, v.t. to frame again; to construct again; to remodel.

ref·ra·nā′tion, n. in astrology, the nonappearance of an expected planetary aspect. [Obs.]

rē·fran·ġi·bil′i·ty, n. the state or quality of being refrangible.

rē·fran′ġi·ble, a. [re-, and L. frangere, to break.] capable of being refracted or turned out of a direct course in passing from one medium to another, as rays of light.

rē·fran′gi·ble·ness, n. the state or quality of being refrangible.

ref·rē·nā′tion, n. refranation. [Obs.]

re·fres′cō, n. [Sp.] in Spanish America, a sweet, cool, refreshing, fruit-flavored drink.

rē·fresh′, v.t.; refreshed (-fresht), pt., pp.; refreshing, ppr. [Fr. refraîchir; re-, and fraîcher, from fraîsche, fresh.]

1. to make fresh by cooling, wetting, or airing, as a room, etc.

2. to make (a person) feel cooler, stronger, more energetic, etc. than before, as by food, drink, or sleep: also used reflexively.

3. to renew; to replenish, as by new supplies, etc.; to revive, as the memory.

4. to improve by new touches; to repair; to restore. [Obs.]

Syn.—cool, renew, revive, recruit, restore, invigorate, reinvigorate.

rē·fresh′, v.i. 1. to revive or become fresh again.

2. to take refreshment, as food or drink.

3. to put in a stock of fresh provisions; as, a ship refreshes for a voyage.

rē·fresh′ẽr, n. 1. one who or that which refreshes, revives, or invigorates.

2. in law, an extra fee paid to a lawyer for services that have been unusually protracted, as during an adjournment from one term of court to the next.

rē·fresh′ẽr cōurse, a course of study reviewing material previously studied.

rē·fresh′fụl, a. refreshing; having qualities that refresh.

rē·fresh′fụl·ly, adv. in a refreshful manner.

rē·fresh′ing, a. 1. that refreshes; cooling; invigorating; reviving; reanimating.

2. pleasingly new or different.

rē·fresh′ing·ly, adv. so as to be refreshing.

rē·fresh′ing·ness, n. the quality of being refreshing.

rē·fresh′ment, n. 1. the act of refreshing or the state of being refreshed; new strength or vigor received after fatigue.

2. something that refreshes, as food, drink, rest, etc.

3. [pl.] food or drink or both, especially as a light meal.

Refreshment Sunday; the fourth Sunday in Lent. It is probably so called because the Gospel for that day relates the story of feeding the five thousand.

rē·frig′ẽr·ănt, a. [L. refrigerans, refrigerantis, ppr. of refrigerare, to make cool or cold.]

1. refrigerating; cooling or freezing something.

2. reducing heat or fever.

rē·frig′ẽr·ănt, n. 1. a medicine used to reduce fever.

2. a substance used in refrigeration, as ice or solid carbon dioxide.

3. any of various liquids that vaporize at a low temperature, used in mechanical refrigeration.

rē·frig′ẽr·āte, v.t.; refrigerated, pt., pp.; refrigerating, ppr. [L. refrigerare, to make cool or cold.]

1. to make or keep cool or cold; to chill.

2. to preserve (food, etc.) by keeping cold or freezing.

rhī′zō·morph, n. [rhizo- and -morph.] in botany, a form of mycelia attaching fungi to the roots of plants upon which they prey.

rhī·zō·mor′phous, a. [rhizo- and -morphous.] in botany, rootlike in form.

rhī·zoph′a·gous, a. [rhizo- and -phagous.] feeding or subsisting on roots.

Rhī·zoph′ō·rà, n. a genus of trees belonging to the family Rhizophoraceæ, of which the mangrove is the principal representative.

Rhī″zō·phō·rā′cē·ae, n.pl. a family of trees of which the genus Rhizophora is typical, known as the mangrove family, noted for their seeds germinating while attached to the branches, and also for the numerous rootlike projections which support the stem. The wood of several species is hard and durable and the bark astringent. They are native to the tropics, where they root in the mud, and form a dense thicket down to the seacoast.

rhī·zoph′ō·rous, a. [LL. rhizophorus; Gr. rhizophoros, from rhiza, root, and phoros, from pherein, to bear.] root-bearing.

rhī′zō·pod, n. 1. in zoology, a member of the Rhizopoda.

2. in botany, the mycelium of a fungus.

rhī′zō·pod, a. [rhizo- and -pod.] having the characteristics of a rhizopod; root-footed.

Rhī·zop′ō·dà, n.pl. [rhizo- and -poda.] a division of protozoans having rootlike pseudopods.

rhī·zop′ō·dăn, a. of, like, or characteristic of the rhizopods.

rhī·zop′ō·dăn, n. same as rhizopod.

rhī·zop′ō·dous, a. same as rhizopodan.

Rhī′zō·pus, n. [rhizo-, and Gr. pous, podos, a foot.] a genus of fungi, the sporophores being produced from rhizoids: the most common species, Rhizopus nigricans, or bread mold, causes the disease of soft rot in the sweet potato; also, [r-] any plant of this genus.

Rhī·zō·stōm′à·tà, n.pl. a division of jellyfishes having processes like rootlets around the mouth. They are covered with minute polyps interspersed with club-shaped tentacles suspended from the middle of the umbrella.

rhī′zō·stōme, n. any one of the Rhizostomata.

rhī·zō·tax′is, n. [LL., from Gr. rhiza, root, and taxis, order.] the arrangement or the order of arrangement of the roots of plants.

rhī′zō·tax·y, n. same as rhizotaxis.

rhī·zot′ō·my, n. [rhizo- and -tomy.] in surgery, a cutting of the spinal nerve roots, especially of the posterior nerves, for relieving pain or spastic paralysis.

Rh neg′à·tive, see Rh factor.

rhō, n. [Gr. rho.] the seventeenth letter of the Greek alphabet corresponding to English R, r.

rhob, n. same as rob (juice).

rhō′dà·mine, rhō′dà·min, n. a synthetic rose-colored dye obtained by condensing an amino derivative of phenol with phthalic anhydride.

rhō·dan′iç, a. same as sulfocyanic.

Rhōde Is′lănd·ēr (ī′), a native or inhabitant of Rhode Island.

Rhōde Is′lănd Red, any of a breed of American chickens with reddish-brown feathers, a black tail, and smooth legs.

rhō″dē·ō·rē′tin, n. [Gr. rhodeos, of roses, from rhodon, rose, and rhētinē, resin.] convolvulin.

Rhōdeş grâss, [after Cecil J. Rhodes.] a South African grass, cultivated as a forage crop in dry districts.

Rhō·dē′şiăn, a. of Rhodesia or its people.

Rhō·dē′şiăn, n. a native or inhabitant of Rhodesia.

Rhōdeş sçhol′ăr, one who holds, or has held, a Rhodes scholarship.

Rhōdeş sçhol′ăr·ship, one of a number of scholarships at Oxford University, England, under the will of Cecil J. Rhodes (1853–1902), English administrator in South Africa: these scholarships are tenable for three consecutive years and are open to selected students from certain British colonies and dominions and the United States.

Rhō′di·ăn, n. a native or an inhabitant of Rhodes.

rhō′diç, a. of or containing rhodium.

rhō′di·um, n. [Gr. rhodios, roselike, from rhodon, a rose.] a hard, gray-white metallic chemical element of the platinum group, used as an alloy with platinum and gold to make the nibs of writing pens and in unalloyed form to electroplate silverware and jewelry: symbol, Rh; atomic weight, 102.91; atomic number, 45.

rhō·di·zon′iç, a. [Gr. rhodizein, to be rosy.] in chemistry, designating either of two acids whose salts are red.

rhō′dō-, [from Gr. rhodon, a rose.] a combining form meaning rose, rose-red, as in *rhodo*lite: also, before a vowel, rhod-.

rhō·dō·çhrō′sīte, n. [G. rhodocrosit, from Gr. rhodochrōs, rose-colored, and G. -it, -ite.] a mineral, carbonate of manganese, $MnCO_3$, of the group of anhydrous carbonates, of vitreous luster, and usually rose-red in color.

rhō·doç′ri·nīte, n. [rhodo-, and Gr. krinon, a lily.] a rose encrinite.

Rhō·dō·den′drŏn, n. [Gr. rhododendron, the oleander, from rhodon, rose, and dendron, tree.] a genus of evergreen trees or shrubs of the heath family, Ericaceæ, with showy flowers of pink, white, or purple: represented in the United States by a few species of hardy shrubs growing in the mountains of the Appalachian chain; also, [r-] any plant of this genus.

RHODODENDRON

rhō′dō·līte, n. [rhodo- and -lite.] a pink or rose-red variety of garnet, often used as a gem.

rhod″ō·mon·tāde′, n. same as rodomontade.

rhō′dō·nīte, n. [Gr. rhodon, rose, and -ite.] a glassy, crystalline mineral consisting chiefly of manganese silicate, $MnSiO_3$, mixed with silicates of iron, calcium, etc. It is generally found in rose-red masses and frequently used as an ornamental stone. Also called manganese spar, red manganese.

rhō′dō·phāne, n. [rhodo-, and Gr. phanēs, appearing, from phainesthai, to appear.] a red pigment found in the retinal cones of birds and fishes.

rhō′dō·phyll, rhō′dō·phyl, n. [rhodo-, and Gr. phyllon, leaf.] a pigment found in red seaweed.

rhō·dop′sin, n. [rhodo-, and Gr. opsis, view, and -in.] visual purple.

Rhō·dō′rà, n. [LL., from Gr. rhodon, rose.]

1. a genus of shrubs of the heath family, related to the Rhododendron, and having pink or rose-red flowers that appear before or with the leaves.

2. [r-] a shrub of this genus, Rhodora canadensis.

Rhō·dō·spēr′mē·ae, n.pl. [rhodo-, and Gr. sperma, seed.] the red algae.

-rhoe′à, same as -rrhea.

rhoe′à·din, rhoe′à·dine, n. [LL., from Gr. rhoias, rhoiados, a kind of poppy.] an alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{21}NO_6$, obtained from opium.

rhomb (romb), n. same as rhombus.

rhom″ben·ceph′à·lon, n. the part of the brain consisting of the cerebellum, pons, and medulla oblongata; hindbrain.

rhom′biç, rhom′biç·ăl, a. 1. of, or having the form, of a rhombus.

2. having a rhombus as the base or cross section: said of solid figures.

3. bounded by rhombuses.

4. in crystallography, orthorhombic.

rhom·bō·gan′oid, n. a fish having rhombic scales.

Rhom″bō·gà·noi′dē·ī, n.pl. same as Ginglymodi.

rhom′bō·gen, n. a dicyemid worm producing infusoriform embryos.

rhom·bō·hē′drăl, a. relating to a rhombohedron; having the form of a rhombohedron.

rhombohedral system; in crystallography, a division of the hexagonal system comprising the rhombohedrons, scalenohedrons, etc.

rhom·bō·hē′drăl·ly, adv. as a rhombohedron.

rhom·bō·hē′driç, a. rhombohedral.

rhom·bō·hē′drŏn, n.; pl. rhom·bō·hē′dronş, rhom·bō·hē′drà, [Gr. rhombos, rhomb, and hedra, base.] in geometry and crystallography, a prism bounded by six rhombic planes.

rhom′boid, n. [L. rhomboides; Gr. rhomboeidēs, rhomboid - shaped; rhombos, rhomb, and eidos, form.]

1. in geometry, a parallelogram with oblique angles and only the opposite sides equal.

RHOMBOIDS

2. in crystallography, a solid having a rhomboidal form with three axes of unequal lengths, two of which are at right angles to each other, while the third is so inclined as to be perpendicular to one of the two axes, and oblique to the other.

rhom'boid, rhom·boi'dăl, a. 1. having the shape of a rhomboid.
2. shaped somewhat like a rhombus.

rhom·boi'dēs, n. a rhomboid. [Obs.]

rhom"boid-ō'vāte, a. between rhomboid and oval in shape; partly rhomboid, partly oval.

rhomb spär, a rhombohedral variety of dolomite.

rhom'bus, n.; pl. rhom'bus·eṣ, rhom'bī, [L.; Gr. rhombos, object that can be turned; akin to rhembein, to turn, whirl.]
1. an equilateral parallelogram with oblique angles.
2. a rhombohedron.

RHOMBUS

rhoñ'ç̣hăl, rhoñ'ç̣hi·ăl, a. pertaining to, or having the nature of, a rhonchus.
rhonchal fremitus; in medicine, a vibration produced by the passage of air through a large bronchial tube filled with mucus.

rhoñ·ç̣his'ō·nănt, a. [LL. rhonchisonus, snorting; L. rhonchus, a snorting, and sonare, to sound.] snorting. [Obs.]

rhoñ'ç̣hus, n.; pl. rhoñ'ç̣hī, [L., from Gr. rhonchos, a snore.] a rattling in the chest; also, a dry course râle in the bronchial tubes, due to a partial obstruction.

rhō·pal'iç, a. [LL. rhopalicus; Gr. rhopalikos, lit., like a club, from rhopalon, club.] in ancient prosody, having each succeeding word containing one more syllable than the preceding word: said of a hexameter.

rhō·pā'li·um, n.; pl. rhō·pā'li·ȧ, a sensory body of a jellyfish.

Rhō·pa·loc'e·rȧ, n.pl. [LL., from Gr. rhopalon, a club, and keras, a horn.] that section of insects which comprises the diurnal Lepidoptera, or butterflies, as distinguished from moths.

rhō'tȧ·cişm, n. [LL. rhotacismus, from Gr. rhotakizein, to rhotacize.]
1. excessive use of the letter r.
2. faulty pronunciation of the letter r.
3. substitution of the sound of r for another sound, as that of s.

rhō'tȧ·cīze, v.i. to use the letter r incorrectly or too frequently.

Rh poṣ'i·tive, see Rh factor.

rhu'bärb n. [OFr. rheubarbe; LL. rheubarbarum; Gr. rhēon barbaron, the foreign rha or rhubarb; rhēon, a plant from the Rha, a river now called the Volga, and barbaron, foreign, barbarous.]
1. any species of the genus Rheum; especially, Rheum rhaponticum, the common pieplant, whose acid leafstalks are used for food.

MEDICINAL RHUBARB (Rheum officinale)
