friç'kle, n. a bushel basket. [Obs.]
friç'tion, n. [Fr. friction; L. frictio, from fricare, to rub.]
1. the rubbing of one body against another.
2. disagreement or conflict because of differences of opinion, temperament, etc.
3. in mechanics, the resistance to motion of two moving objects or surfaces that touch.
4. in medicine, the rubbing of the body so as to stimulate the circulation.
angle of friction; the maximum angle of an inclined plane on which a body will rest without sliding down.
coefficient of friction; the ratio between the force necessary to move one of any two surfaces horizontally over the other, and the pressure between the two surfaces: the coefficient of friction for oak and cast-iron is 38:100, or .38.
Syn.—rubbing, grating, attrition, abrasion, contact.
friç'tion·ăl, a. of or produced by friction; as, frictional electricity.
frictional gearing; wheels which produce motion not by teeth but by friction.
friç'tion·ăl·ly, adv. by or with friction.
friç'tion bȧlls, balls placed in a hub or journal to reduce the friction of a revolving axle.
friç'tion brāke, a form of dynamometer; also, a brake operating by friction.
friç'tion chocks, small inclined planes of wood or iron, placed directly behind the wheels of a gun carriage to overcome the force of the recoil.
friç'tion çlutch, in machinery, a clutch, operated by friction, used for connecting machines which need to be frequently engaged and disengaged or which are subject to sudden variations of resistance.
friç'tion çom'pound, same as friction powder.
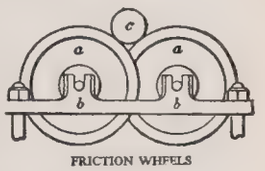
friç'tion çōnes, in machinery, a slip coupling, consisting of two cones a b, of which the one a is formed on the back of the driving wheel, loose on the driving shaft, and the other b forms part of a sliding block (attached to the shaft by a sunk feather) and fits accurately into the interior of that formed on the back of the wheel. The sliding block can be thrown in and out of gear in the ordinary way, by means of a fork c, and the transmission of motion depends on the friction of the two conical surfaces. If the load on the machine, which is driven by the second shaft, is suddenly changed, the adhesion between the surfaces of the cones allows them to slip, and thus breakage is avoided.



FRICTION CONES

friç'tion ġēar, see frictional gearing under frictional.
friç'tion ham'mĕr, a hammer lifted by the friction of revolving rollers.
friç'tion·less, a. having or producing no friction.
friç'tion mȧ·çhīne', a machine which generates frictional electricity.
friç'tion match, a match that lights by friction.
friç'tion mē'tĕr, a device for estimating friction in machinery, as affected by different lubricants.
friç'tion pow'dĕr, a compound, as of antimony and chlorate of potash, that is easily ignited by friction.
friç'tion prīm'ĕr, a device for firing cannon by the friction of a rough wire and friction powder in a tube: called also friction tube.
friç'tion tāpe, an adhesive tape for insulating exposed electrical wires: also, electric tape or insulating tape.
friç'tion tūbe, a friction primer.
friç'tion wheel (hwēl), in machinery, (a) a slip coupling applied in cases where the variations of load are sudden and great, as in dredging machinery, etc. It consists of a strong plain pulley B, keyed on the driving shaft; on the circumference of this a wheel A is fitted, with a series of friction plates a a a interposed, and retained in recesses formed in the eye of the wheel. Behind each of these plates a setscrew b is inserted, which bears against the back of the plate and can be tightened to regulate the degree of friction required for the ordinary work; should the pressure on the circumference of the wheel A exceed this, the plates slide upon the circumference of the pulley B, which continues to revolve with the shaft, and the wheel itself remains stationary; (b) one of two simple wheels or cylinders intended to assist in diminishing the friction of a horizontal axis. The wheels are simple cylinders a a, carried on parallel and independent axes b b. They are arranged so as to overlap pair and pair at each end of the main axis c, which rests in the angles thus formed by the circumferences. The axis, instead of sliding on a fixed surface, as in ordinary cases, carries round the circumferences of the wheels on which it is supported with the same velocity as it possesses itself, and in consequence the friction of the system is proportionally lessened.

FRICTION WHEEL

FRICTION WHEELS

Frī'dāy, n. [ME. fridai; AS. frigedæg, lit., day of the goddess Frig, wife of Wodan, transl. L. Veneris dies, Venus' day.]

4. property; goods; belongings. [Scot.]
5. business matters; affairs. [Obs.]
6. any worthless thing; junk; rubbish. [Obs.]

high gear; (a) in a multiple gear system, the arrangement of gears providing the greatest speed but little power; (b) [Colloq.] high speed.

in gear; (a) connected to the motor; in adjustment for use; (b) in order.

low gear; (a) in a multiple gear system, the arrangement of gears providing little speed but great power; (b) [Colloq.] low speed.

out of gear; (a) not connected to the motor; not in adjustment for use; (b) out of order.

reverse gear; in a multiple gear system, the arrangement of gears providing reverse, or backward, motion.

to shift gears; in a multiple gear system, to change from one gear arrangement to another.

to throw into gear; to set ready to start; to put into motion, as machinery.

to throw out of gear; to put out of motion, as by turning a lever to disconnect gears.

gēar, v.t.; geared, pt., pp.; gearing, ppr. 1. to harness; to dress; to prepare for operation; to furnish with gear.
2. in mechanics, (a) to connect by gears; (b) to furnish with gears; (c) to put into gear.

gēar, v.i. in machinery, to be in, or come into, gear or operating order; to engage with the connecting parts.

gēar′box, n. 1. the unit consisting of the transmission gears in a power-transmission system.
2. a case enclosing gears to protect them from dirt.

gēar cut′tēr, a machine for cutting gear teeth.

gēar′ing, n. 1. harness; dress; gear. [Dial.]
2. in machinery, a system of gears or other parts by which motion communicated to one portion of a machine is transmitted to another; a train of toothed wheels for transmitting motion.
3. (a) the fitting of a machine with gears; (b) the manner in which the gears are fitted: there are two main types of gearing, spur gearing and beveled gearing. In the former the teeth are arranged around either the concave or convex surface of a cylindrical wheel in the direction of radii from the center of the wheel, and are of equal depth throughout. In beveled gearing the teeth are placed upon the exterior periphery of a conical wheel in a direction converging to the apex of the cone, and the depth of the tooth gradually diminishes from the base.

SPUR GEARING

gēar′ing chāin, an endless chain transmitting motion from one toothed wheel to another.

gēar′shift, n. a device for connecting any of a number of sets of transmission gears to a motor, etc., or for disconnecting them.

gēar′shift lev′ēr, in machinery, the bar or arm by means of which the various gears are engaged or disengaged.

3. in biology, a classification of plants or animals with common distinguishing characteristics: a genus is the main subdivision of a family and includes one or more species; the genus name is capitalized and precedes the species name, which is not capitalized (e.g., Homo sapiens, the scientific name for man).

subaltern genus; in logic, a genus which may become a species of some higher division or classification.

summum genus; in logic, a genus which is the highest; that is, which cannot become a species in a higher genus.

-ġen·y, [Gr. -geneia.] a suffix meaning origin, production, or development, as in phylo*geny*.

ġē'ŏ-, [Gr. -geō, from gaia, gē, the earth.] a combining form meaning earth, of the earth, as in *geo*centric, *geo*phyte.

ġē·ō·bot'ȧ·ny, n. geographical botany.

ġē·ō·cen'triç, ġē·ō·cen'triç·ăl, a. [geo-, and Gr. kentron, center.]

1. measured or viewed as from the center of the earth.

2. having or regarding the earth as a center.

ġē·ō·çhem'is·try, n. the science dealing with the chemical composition of the earth's crust.

ġē·ō·çō·rō'nȧ, n. a gaseous belt of ionized hydrogen resembling the sun's corona, surrounding the earth at the limit of the atmosphere.

ġē·oç'rō·nīte, n. [geo-, and Gr. Kronos, Saturn, the alchemistic name of lead.] a crystalline mineral containing lead, antimony, sulfur, and arsenic.

ġē·ō·cyç'liç, a. [geo-, and Gr. kyklos, a circle.]

1. of or relating to the movements of the earth; as, a geocyclic diagram.

2. moving round the earth in regular periods.

ġē'ōde, n. [Gr. gaiōdēs, geōdēs, earthlike; gē, earth, and eidos, form.]

1. a hollow, rounded nodule of rock, the cavity of which is lined with crystals.

2. the cavity of a hollow rock nodule or a similar cavity in bedded rock.

ġē·ō·des'iç, a. 1. same as geodetic (sense 1): also ġē·ō·des'i·çăl.

2. (a) designating the shortest line between two points on a surface, especially a curved surface; (b) of or pertaining to the geometry of such lines.

3. in architecture, having a structurally strong surface made up of short, straight, lightweight bars that form a grid of polygons; as, a geodesic dome.

ġē·ō·des'iç, n. a geodesic line.

ġē·od'e·sist, n. a person skilled in geodesy.

ġē·od'e·sy, n. [Gr. geōdaisia, the art of mensuration; gē, the earth, and daiein, to divide.] that part of applied mathematics which has for its object the determination of the magnitude and figure either of the whole earth or of a large portion of its surface, or the locating exactly of points on its surface.

ġē·ō·det'iç, ġē·ō·det'i·çăl, a. 1. of or determined by geodesy.

2. same as geodesic (sense 2).

ġē·ō·det'i·çăl·ly, adv. by or according to geodesy.

ġē·ō·det'içs, n. pl. [construed as sing.] geodesy.

ġē·od'iç, a. of or like a geode.

ġē·ō·dif'e·rous, a. bearing or having geodes; as, a geodiferous stratum.

ġē'ō·duck, n. [Am. Ind.] a very large, burrowing, edible clam, Panope generosa, of intertidal beaches of western North America.

ġē·ō·ġen'iç, a. of or pertaining to geogeny.

ġē·oġ'e·nous, a. [geo-, and Gr. -genēs, produced.] living in or on the soil, as certain fungi.

ġē·oġ'e·ny, n. the study of the origin or genesis of the earth and its formation.

ġē·og·nō'sis, n. geognosy. [Rare.]

ġē'og·nost, n. [geo-, and Gr. gnōstes, one who knows.] a person proficient in geognosy.

ġē·og·nos'tiç, ġē·og·nos'tiç·ăl, a. relating to geognosy.

ġē·og'nō·sy, n. [geo-, and Gr. gnōsis, knowledge, from gignōskein, to know.] the systematic study of the composition of the earth and of the distribution of its various strata and mineral deposits.

ġē·og'rȧ·phĕr, n. one who studies or is versed in geography, or one who compiles a treatise on the subject.

ġē·ō·graph'iç·ăl, ġē·ō·graph'iç, a. [LL. geographicus; Gr. geographikos, of or for geography, from geōgraphia, geography.] of or according to geography.

geographical distribution; see under distribution.

geographical linguistics; the branch of linguistics which describes the differentiations of languages and dialects within a speech area.

geographical mile; see under mile.

geographical variation; a variation of species or variety coincident with or due to variation in geographical location.

ġē·ō·graph'iç·ăl·ly, adv. by or according to geography.

ġē·og'rȧ·phy, n.; pl. ġē·og'rȧ·phieṣ, [L. geographia; Gr. geōgraphia, geography; gē, the earth, and graphein, to write.]

1. the descriptive science dealing with the surface of the earth, its division into continents and countries, and the climate, plants, animals, natural resources, inhabitants, and industries of the various divisions.

2. the physical features, especially the surface features, of a region, area, or place.

3. a book about geography.

ġē'oid, n. [Gr. geoidēs, geōdēs, earthlike; gē, the earth, and eidos, form, resemblance.] a hypothetical, spheroidal figure of the earth with the entire surface represented as at the mean sea level; the earth as it would be if all parts above mean sea level were removed and all parts below it were filled.

ġē·ō·ī'sō·thĕrm, n. [geo-, and Gr. isos, equal, and thermē, heat.] an isogeotherm.

ġē·ol'ȧ·try, n. [geo-, and Gr. latreia, worship.] worship of things terrestrial or of the earth itself. [Rare.]

ġē·ol'ō·ġĕr, ġē·ō·lō'ġi·ăn, n. a geologist. [Rare.]

ġē·ō·loġ'iç·ăl, ġē·ō·loġ'iç, a. of or according to geology.

ġē·ō·loġ'iç·ăl·ly, adv. from a geological viewpoint; by or according to geology.

ġē·ol'ō·ġist, n. a student of or specialist in the science of geology.

ġē·ol'ō·ġīze, v.i.; geologized, pt., pp.; geologizing, ppr. to study geology; to make geological investigations or studies of an area, etc.

ġē·ol'ō·ġīze, v.t. to study geologically. [Rare.]

ġē·ol'ō·ġy, n.; pl. ġē·ol'ō·ġieṣ, [geo-, and Gr. logos, a description, from legein, to speak.]

1. the science dealing with the structure of the earth's crust and the formation and development of its various layers: it includes the study of individual rock types and early forms of life found as fossils in rocks.

2. the structure of the earth's crust in a given region, area, or place.

3. a book about geology.

ġē·ō·mag·net'iç, a. of or pertaining to the magnetic properties of the earth.

ġē·om'ȧ·lism, n. [geo-, and Gr. homalos, even, level.] in biology, a tendency toward equal lateral development because of gravitation.

ġē'ō·man·cĕr, n. one who foretells or divines by geomancy.

ġē'ō·man·cy, n. [ME. geomancie; OFr. geomancie; LL. geomantia; Gr. gē, the earth, and manteia, divination.] a kind of divination by figures or lines formed by a handful of earth cast on the ground, or by dots or points drawn at random.

ġē·ō·man'tiç, ġē·ō·man'tiç·ăl, a. pertaining to geomancy.

ġē·om'e·tĕr, n. [L. geometres; Gr. geōmetrēs, a mathematician, geometer; gē, the earth, and metron, a measure.]

1. one skilled in geometry.

2. in zoology, any moth of the Geometridæ.

ġē·om'e·trăl, a. pertaining to geometry. [Obs.]

ġē·ō·met'riç, ġē·ō·met'riç·ăl, a. [L. geometricus; Gr. geōmetrikos, belonging to geometry, from geōmetria, geometry.]

1. pertaining to geometry; according to the rules or principles of geometry.

2. characterized by or made up of straight lines, triangles, circles, or similar regular forms; as, a geometric style; geometrical markings of a butterfly's wing.

geometrical construction; in mathematics, construction using only straight lines and circles.

geometrical lathe; see cycloidal engine under engine.

geometrical pace; five feet in measure.

geometrical plane; the horizontal projective plane in perspective drawing.

geometrical progression; see under progression.

geometrical proportion; see under proportion.

geometrical radius; the distance from the center of a cogwheel to the pitch line.

geometrical spider; a spider spinning a web more or less circular and intersected by radial lines, as the ordinary garden spider.

geometric stairs; a circular staircase in which the steps are supported at one end by being built into the wall.

geometric decorated style; in architecture, the style of the earlier period of decorated Gothic, in which the tracery and other ornamentation consist entirely of distinct geometrical forms, the principle of verticality and unity by a subordination of parts being fully developed.

GEOMETRIC DECORATED STYLE

ġē·ō·met'riç·ăl·ly, adv. in a geometrical way; by or according to geometry.

ġē″om·e·tri'cian (-trish'ăn), n. one skilled or specializing in geometry; a geometer.

ġē·om'e·trid, n. any moth of the family Geometridæ.

ġē·om'e·trid, a. of or relating to the Geometridæ.

Ġē·ō·met'ri·dae, n.pl. [L., from Gr. geōmetrēs, earth-measurer, and eidos, resemblance.] a family comprising the small moths whose larval forms move by looping their bodies and are known as measuring worms or looping caterpillars.

ġē·om'e·trize, v.i.; geometrized, pt., pp.; geometrizing, ppr. 1. to work according to the laws of geometry; to perform geometrically. 2. to study geometry.

ġē·om'e·trize, v.t. to work out geometrically. [Rare.]

ġē·om'e·try, n.; pl. ġē·om'e·tries, [ME. geometrie, gemetrie; OFr. geometrie; L. geometria; Gr. geōmetria, the measurement of land, geometry; gē, the earth, land, and metria, measurement, from metrein, to measure.]

1. the branch of mathematics that deals with points, lines, planes, and solids, and examines their properties, measurement, and mutual relations in space.

2. a book about geometry.

descriptive geometry; see under descriptive.

elementary geometry; that branch of the science based upon the methods and axioms of Euclid, the Alexandrian geometer, and dealing only with the properties of the cone and conic sections, the sphere, the cylinder, solids having plane faces, planes, and straight lines.

higher or non-Euclidean geometry; that branch of the science which uses methods other than those of Euclid and assumes his axiom concerning parallel lines not to be true, holding that such lines diverge toward infinity (hyperbolic geometry), or converge toward infinity (elliptic geometry).

ġē·ō·mor'phiç, a. of or pertaining to the shape of the earth or its topographic features.

ġē'ō·mor·phy, n. the geographical study of the form of the earth.

ġē·on'ō·my, n. [geo-, and Gr. nomos, law.] the science of the physical laws dealing with the development of the earth.

ġē·ō·phā'ġi·ȧ, ġē·oph'ȧ·ġişm, n. same as geophagy.

ġē·oph'ȧ·ġist, n. an earth-eater.

ġē·oph'ȧ·ġous, a. earth-eating.

ġē·oph'ȧ·ġy, n. [geo- and -phagy.] the eating of earth, either as a psychotic symptom or to make up for lack of food, as in famine areas.

Ġē·oph'i·lȧ, n.pl. [L., from Gr. gē, earth, and philos, loving, from philein, to love.] a division of gastropods to which slugs and land snails are assigned in some classifications.

ġē·ō·phyṣ'i·çăl, a. having to do with geophysics.

ġē·ō·phyṣ'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the physics of the earth; the science that deals with weather, winds, tides, etc. and their effect on the earth.

ġē'ō·phyte, n. [geo-, and -phyte.] a plant that grows in earth, especially one with underground buds.

ġē·ō·pol'i·tiçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [from G. geopolitik.] the study of the relation of politics to geography; specifically, the Nazi doctrine of aggressive geographical and political expansion to acquire more living space and promote German domination of the world.

ġē·ō·pon'iç, ġē·ō·pon'iç·ăl, a. [Gr. geōponikos, of agriculture, from geōponia, agriculture, from geoponos, a tiller of the earth; gē, earth, and ponos, work, from penesthai, to work, toil.]

1. of tillage of the earth, or agriculture. [Rare.]

2. rural; bucolic: humorous usage. [Rare.]

ġē·ō·pon'içs, n. agriculture. [Rare.]

ġē·ō·rä'mȧ, n. [geo-, and Gr. horama, a view, from horan, to see.] a large, hollow globe or spherical chamber, lined with cloth on which is depicted a general view of the geography of the earth's surface, to be viewed by a spectator from the interior.

glyc'ĕr·ōl, glyc'ĕr·ōle, n. 1. in chemistry, same as glycerin.
2. same as glycerite.

glyc'ĕr·yl, n. [*glycer*in and -yl.] the trivalent radical of glycerin, C_3H_5.

glyc'ĕr·yl trī·nī'trāte, nitroglycerin.

glyc'id, glyc'ide, n. a compound obtained from certain derivatives of glycerin.

gly·cid'ic, a. pertaining to glycid.

glī'cin, n. same as glycine.

glī'cĭne, n. [from G. glykys, sweet, and -ine.] a sweet, crystalline substance, $NH_2CH_2CO_2H$, obtained by hydrolysis from proteins and having the properties of an amino acid.

glī'co-, [Gr. glyko-, from glykys, sweet.] a combining form meaning glycerin, glycerol, glycogen, as in *glyco*genesis.

glī·cō·chō'lāte, n. [*glycocol*ic and -ate.] a salt or ester of glycocholic acid.

glī·cō·chol'ic, a. [Gr. glykys, sweet, and cholē, gall.] derived from gall; as, glycocholic acid.
glycocholic acid; a colorless crystalline acid, $C_{26}H_{43}O_6N$, found in bile.

glī'cō·cin, n. same as glycine.

glī'cō·coll, n. [Gr. glykys, sweet, and kolla, glue.] same as glycine.

glī'cō·gen, n. [Gr. glykys, sweet, and -genēs, producing.] an insoluble, starchlike substance, $(C_6H_{10}O_5)_x$, produced in animal tissues, especially in the liver and muscles, and changed into a simple sugar as the body needs it: also called animal starch.

glī·cō·gen'e·sis, n. the formation of glycogen.

glī·cō·gen'ic, a. relating to glycogen or glycogenesis.

glī·cog'e·ny, n. glycogenesis.

glī·cō·hē'mi·a, glī·cō·hae'mi·a, n. same as glucemia.

glī'col, n. [*glycer*in and alcoh*ol*.]
1. a colorless, sirupy liquid, $C_2H_4(OH)_2$, prepared by heating any of certain ethylene compounds with an alkali carbonate and used as an antifreeze: more accurately, ethylene glycol.

Grimm's ląw, [after Jakob Grimm's formulation (1822) of parallels noticed by R. K. Rask (1818) and himself.] a systematic statement of consonantal correspondences between Germanic words derived from Indo-European bases containing stop consonants and the cognate words of Indo-European languages other than Germanic: Grimm's original formulation has been amplified by the further discoveries of H. Grassmann (1862) and K. Verner (1876). The part of Grimm's statement immediately affecting English may be summarized thus: (1) Indo-Eur. voiceless stops (p, t, k) = Gmc. voiceless fricatives (f, th, h); hence, L. *p*isc-is (cf. piscatorial) = *f*ish, L. *t*en-uis (cf. tenuous) = *th*in, Gr. *k*ardia (cf. cardiac) = *h*eart. (2) Indo-Eur. voiced aspirated stops (bh, dh, gh) = Gmc. voiced stops (b, d, g) or equivalent fricatives; hence, Sans. *bh*arā-mi, I bear (Gr. pherō, L. fero; cf. feretory) = *b*ear, Sans. mādhu, honey (Gr. mēthu, wine; cf. methyl) = mead, L. *h*ost-is (IE. hyp. ghost-is; cf. hostile) = guest. (3) Indo-Eur. voiced stops (b, d, g) = Gmc. voiceless stops (p, t, k); hence, Gr. *b*urse (cf. bursar) = *p*urse, L. ed-ere (cf. edible) = *e*at, L. ager (cf. agriculture) = acre.

hem"ȧ·tō·ġen'iç, haem"ȧ·tō·ġen'iç, a. causing or relating to blood formation.
hem·ȧ·toġ'e·nous, haem·ȧ·toġ'e·nous, a. [hemato-, and Gr. -genes, producing.] hematogenic.
hem"ȧ·tō·glob'ū·lin, haem"ȧ·tō·glob'ū·lin, n. [hemato-, and L. globulus, a globe, and -in.] hemoglobin.
hē'mȧ·toid, hae'mȧ·toid, a. [Gr. haimatoeidēs, haimatōdēs, bloodlike; haima (-atos), blood, and eidos, form.] bloodlike; bloody.
hē"mȧ·toid'in, hae"mȧ·toid'in, n. a crystalline compound often found in extravasated blood. It contains no iron and probably is the same as bilirubin.
hem·ȧ·tol'ō·ġy, haem·ȧ·tol'ō·ġy, n. [hemato-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] the study of the blood and its diseases.
hē"mȧ·tō'mȧ, n.; pl. hē"mȧ·tō'mȧ·tȧ, hē"mȧ·tō'mȧṣ, [Gr. haima (-atos), blood, and -oma.] a subcutaneous swelling filled with effused blood.
hem"ȧ·tō·per·i·çăr'di·um, haem"ȧ·tō·per·i·çăr'di·um, n. [hemato-, and Gr. perikardion, the pericardium.] an effusion of blood into the pericardium.
hem"ȧ·tō·phō'bi·ȧ, haem"ȧ·tō·phō'bi·ȧ, n. [hemato-, and Gr. -phobia, from phobos, fear.] an abnormal fear upon seeing blood.
hem"ȧ·tō·plas'tiç, haem"ȧ·tō·plas'tiç, a. [hemato-, and Gr. plastikos, plastic, from plassein, to mold.] forming blood; productive of blood.
hem"ȧ·tō·poi·ē'sis, haem"ȧ·tō·poi·ē'sis, n. [hemato-, and Gr. poiesis, a making, from poiein, to make.] the making of blood; blood formation.
hem"ȧ·tō·pọr'phy·rin, haem"ȧ·tō·pọr'phy·rin, n. [hemato-, and Gr. porphyra, purple, and -in.] a derivative of hematin and corresponding substances in invertebrates, produced by decomposition. It contains no iron.
hem'ȧ·tōse, haem'ȧ·tōse, a. filled or covered with blood.
hē"mȧ·tō'sin, hae"mȧ·tō'sin, n. hematin. [Rare.]
hē"mȧ·tō'sis, hae"mȧ·tō'sis, n. [Gr. haimatōsis, from haimatoun, to make bloody.] blood formation; also, the transformation in the lungs of venous blood into arterial blood.
hem"ȧ·tō·thẽr'măl, haem"ȧ·tō·thẽr'măl, a. [hemato-, and Gr. thermos, warm, from thermē, heat.] in zoology, warm-blooded.
hem"ȧ·tō·thō'rax, n. [hemato-, and Gr. thōrax, a breastplate.] hemorrhage into the pleural cavity.
hē"mȧ·tox'y·lin, hae"mȧ·tox'y·lin, n. [hemato-, and Gr. xylon, wood, and -in.] a crystalline compound, $C_{16}H_{14}O_6 \cdot 3H_2O$, extracted from logwood and used as an indicator and a stain in microscopy: when oxidized it yields hematein dye.
hem"ȧ·tō·zō'ăn, n. same as hematozoon.
hem·ȧ·tō·zō'ŏn, n.; pl. hem"ȧ·tō·zō'ȧ, any parasitic animal organism in the blood.
hem·ȧ·tū'ri·ȧ, n. [Gr. haima (-atos), blood, and ouron, urine.] a discharge of bloody urine: called also hematuresis. hem'ble, n. a shed for cattle; a stable; a hovel. [Brit. Dial.]
hēme, n. [shortened from hematin.] the nonprotein part of the hemoglobin molecule, containing the pigment: formerly called hematin.
hem·el'y·tron, hem·el'y·trum, n.; pl. hem·el'y·trȧ, either of the thickened forewings of certain insects, as the hemipterous insects: also hemelytrum, hemielytron, hemielytrum.

hem″ē·rą·lō′pi·ą, n. [Gr. hēmera, day, alaos, blind, and ōps, ōpos, the eye.] the condition of the eyes in which one can see clearly only at night; day blindness: often confused with nyctalopia.

hem·ēr·ō′bi·ăn, n. a planipennate insect of the genus Hemerobius or related genera.

hē·mer′ō·bid, a. of or pertaining to insects of the genus Hemerobius and allied genera.

Hem·ēr·ō′bi·us, n. [Gr. hēmerobios, living for a day; hēmera, a day, and bios, life.] a genus of neuropterous insects, the type of the family Hemerobiidæ. They are lace-winged flies.

Hem″ē·rō·çal′lis, n. [Gr. hēmerokallis, a yellow lily that blooms but for a day; hēmera, day, and kalos, beautiful.] a genus of plants of the lily family, natives of Asia and Europe. Hemerocallis fulva, the day lily, is grown in gardens for its showy flowers.

hem′i-, [L. hemi-, Gr. hēmi-, a half.] a prefix used in many words of Latin and Greek derivation to signify a half, as in *hemi*cerebrum, *hemi*cardia.

-hē′mi·ą, -emia: words ending with -hemia may also be spelled -haemia.

hem″i·al·bū′min, n. see hemialbumose.

hem·i·al′bū·mōse, n. the most characteristic and most frequently obtained by-product of proteid digestion. It is the forerunner of hemipeptone: called also hemialbumin.

hem·i·al′gi·ą, n. neuralgic pain in only one side or part of the body, especially of the head.

hem·i·an·aes·thē′si·ą, n. [hemi-, and Gr. anaisthēsia, want of perception; an- priv., and aisthanesthai, to perceive.] in pathology, anesthesia of one lateral half of the body.

hem·i·an·es·thē′siç, hem·i·an·aes·thē′siç, a. pertaining to or afflicted with hemianaesthesia.

hem″i·ą·nō′pi·ą, n. hemianopsia.

hem″i·ą·nop′si·ą, n. in pathology, blindness in one half of the visual field. It may affect one eye or both eyes.

hem″i·ą·nop′tiç, a. pertaining to or afflicted with hemianopsia.

hem·i·at′rō·phy, n. in pathology, atrophy confined to one side of the body.

hem′i·brañçh, a. hemibranchiate.

hem′i·brañçh, n. a fish of the order Hemibranchii.

hem·i·brañ′çhi·āte, a. pertaining to the Hemibranchii; having the branchial apparatus deficient; half-gilled.

Hem·i·brañ′çhi·ī, n.pl. [hemi-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] an order of fishes having the branchial apparatus incomplete. It includes the sticklebacks and snipefishes.

hē′miç, hae′miç, a. of the blood.

hem·i·çär′di·ą, n. [hemi-, and Gr. kardia, the heart.] either half, the right or left, of a four-chambered heart.

hem·i·çär′di·aç, a. of or pertaining to the hemicardia.

hem′i·çärp, n. [hemi-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] in botany, one of the halves of a fruit which spontaneously divides into two, as a pea.

hem·i·cer′ē·brăl, a. pertaining to a hemicerebrum.

hem·i·cer′ē·brum, n.; pl. hem·i·cer′ē·brą, [hemi-, and L. cerebrum, the brain.] in anatomy, the right or left half of the cerebrum.

hem″i·çhō·rē′ą, n. in pathology, a form of chorea in which the convulsive movements are confined to one side of the body.

hem·i·çol′lin, n. [hemi-, and Gr. kolla, glue, and -in.] a peptonelike substance obtained in the formation of semiglutin from gelatin: analogous to semiglutin, but partially soluble in alcohol.

hem·i·çrā′ni·ą, n. [L. hemicrania; Gr. hēmikrania, a pain on one side of the head or face; hēmi-, half, and kranion, the skull.] pain in only one side of the head.

hem′i·cȳ·çle, n. [Fr. hémicycle; L. hemicyclus; Gr. hēmikyklon or hēmikyklion, a semicircle, a semicircular row of seats, from hēmikyklos or hēmikyklios, semicircular; hēmi-, half, and kyklos, a circle.]

1. a half-circle; a semicircle.
2. a semicircular arena; a semicircular room or division of a room.

hem·i·cyç′liç, a. in botany, designating or of flowers which have the separate portions of the inflorescence arranged in spirals.

hem·i·daç′tyl, hem·i·daç′tyle, n. [hemi-, and Gr. daktylos, a finger.] a flat-toed lizard or gecko of the genus Hemidactylus.

Hem·i·daç′tyl·us, n. a genus of lizards belonging to the gecko family or flat-toed lizards, which have an oval disk at the base of the toes.

hem″i·dem·i·sem′i·quā·vēr, n. [hemi-, and demi-, half, and semi-, half, and quaver.] in music, a sixty-fourth note.

hem·i·dī′tōne, n. [hemi-, and Gr. ditonos, of two tones; dis, twice, and tonos, a tone.] in Greek music, a minor third.

hem·i·dō·mat′iç, a. of or resembling a hemidome.

hem′i·dōme, n. in crystallography, a dome parallel to the orthodiagonal: distinguished from clinodome.

hem·i·el′y·trum, hem·i·el′y·tron, n. same as hemelytron.

hem″i·en·ce·phal′iç, a. of or pertaining to the hemiencephalon.

hem″i·en·ceph′ą·lon, n.; pl. hem″i·en·ceph′ą·lą, [hemi-, and Gr. enkephalos, the brain.] in anatomy, a lateral half of the brain.

hē·mig′ą·mous, a. [hemi-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.] in botany, having one of the two florets in the same spikelet neuter, and the other unisexual, whether male or female: said of grasses.

hem′i·glyph, n. [hemi-, and Gr. glyphē, a carving.] in architecture, a half channel at the edge of the triglyph tablet in the Doric entablature.

hē·mig′ną·thous, a. [hemi-, and Gr. gnathos, jaw.] in ornithology, having one mandible of the beak considerably shorter than the other.

hem·i·hē′drăl, a. in crystallography, having only half the number of planes belonging to any particular modification which the law of symmetry requires: said of a crystal.

hem·i·hē′drăl·ly, adv. in a hemihedral manner.

hem·i·hē′driç, a. hemihedral. [Rare.]

hem·i·hē′drişm, n. in crystallography, the property or quality of crystallizing in hemihedral forms.

hem·i·hē′dron, n. [hemi-, and Gr. hedra, a seat, base.] in crystallography, a crystal or other solid with but half the proper number of planes, as the tetrahedron.

hem·i·hol·ō·hē′drăl, a. [hemi-, and Gr. holos, whole, and hedra, a seat, base.] in crystallography, having half the full number of planes in all the octants.

hem·i·hȳ′drāte, n. a hydrate containing half as many molecules of water as of the substance combined with the water.

hem″i·mel·lit′iç, a. [hemi-, and Gr. meli, honey, and lithos, stone.] in chemistry, having half the number of carboxyl radicals contained in mellitic acid.

Hem″i·mē·tab′ō·lą, n.pl. [hemi-, and Gr. metabolē, a change.] in zoology, those insects which undergo an incomplete metamorphosis.

hem″i·met·ą·bol′iç, a. in zoology, of or belonging to insects undergoing only an incomplete metamorphosis.

hem·i·mor′phiç, a. [hemi-, and Gr. morphē, form.] in crystallography, designating a crystal with unlike planes at the ends of the same axis.

hem·i·mor′phişm, n. the property of being hemimorphic.

hem·i·mor′phīte, n. calamine: so called because the crystals exhibit hemimorphic characteristics.

hē′min, n. [from Gr. haima, blood; and -in.] a brown, crystalline chloride of heme obtained when blood is treated with hydrochloric acid or glacial acetic acid and sodium chloride: its production by this reaction is evidence of the presence of blood in fluids, stains, etc.

hē·mī′ną, n.; pl. hē·mī′nae, [L., from Gr. hēmina, a Sicilian measure, from hēmi-, hēmisys, half.]

1. in ancient Rome, a measure containing half a sextary, or about half a pint English wine measure.
2. in medicine, a former liquid measure.

hē·mī′ō·nus, n. same as dziggetai.

hem·i·op′si·ą, hem·i·op′sy, n. same as hemianopsia.

hem·i·or′thō·tȳpe, a. same as monoclinic.

hem·i·pep′tōne, n. [hemi-, and Gr. peptikos, pertaining to digestion, from peptein, to cook, digest.] an intermediate compound of peptone, formed before peptone is finally produced, by the gastric and pancreatic juices.

hem·i·plē′ği·ą, n. [Mod. L.; after Gr. hēmiplēx, hēmiplēgēs, stricken on one side; hēmi-, half, and plēssein, to strike.] paralysis of one side of the body.

hem·i·pleğ′iç, a. of or having hemiplegia.

hem·i·pleğ′iç, n. one who has hemiplegia.

hem′i·pod, a. [Gr. hēmipous (-podos), half-footed; hēmi-, half, and pous, podos, foot.] of or pertaining to any bird of the genus Turnix.

hem′i·pod, n. a hemipod bird.

hem′i·prişm, n. [hemi-, and Gr. prisma, a prism.] in crystallography, a prism in the triclinic system of crystallization including only two parallel planes.

hem·i·priş·mat′iç, a. pertaining to a hemiprism.

hem·i·prō′tē·in, n. [hemi-, and protein.] in chemistry, a substance supposed to be identical with antialbumid and dyspeptone. It is formed by the heating action of dilute sulfuric acid on albumin.

hē·mip′tēr, n. one of the Hemiptera.

Hē·mip′te·rą, n.pl. [hemi-, and Gr. pteron, a wing.] a large order of insects, including bedbugs, water bugs, lice, aphids, etc., with piercing and sucking mouth parts: they generally have two pairs of wings, the outer pair thickened toward the base.

hē·mip′tēr·ăl, a. hemipterous.

hē·mip′tēr·ăn, n. one of the Hemiptera.

hē·mip′tēr·ăn, a. relating to the Hemiptera.

hē·mip′tēr·ist, n. one who makes a collection of or studies the Hemiptera.

hē·mip′tēr·ŏn, n. a hemipteran.

hē·mip′tēr·ous, a. of or belonging to the Hemiptera.

hem·i·pyr′ą·mid, n. [hemi-, and Gr. pyramis (-idos), a pyramid.] in crystallography, a pyramid in the monoclinic system of crystallization, including only four parallel planes.

hem″i·py·ram′i·dăl, a. pertaining to a hemipyramid.

hem′i·seçt, v.t.; hemisected, pt., pp.; hemisecting, ppr. [hemi-, and L. sectus, pp. of sectare, to cut.] in anatomy, to bisect; to divide into equal right and left parts, or along the mesial plane.

hem·i·seç′tion, n. in anatomy, bisection; division into equal right and left parts, or along the mesial plane; also, one of such divisions.

hem′i·spaşm, n. [hemi-, and Gr. spasmos, a spasm.] a spasm affecting only one side of the body.

hem′i·sphēre, n. [L. hemisphærium; Gr. hēmisphairon, a hemisphere; hēmi-, half, and sphaira, a sphere.]

1. half of a sphere or globe; specifically, (a) any of the halves into which the celestial globe is divided by either the celestial equator or the ecliptic; (b) any of the halves of the earth: the earth is divided by the equator into the Northern and Southern Hemispheres and by a meridian into the Eastern Hemisphere (containing Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia) and the Western Hemisphere (containing the Americas and Oceania); (c) a model or map of any of these halves.
2. the countries and peoples of any of the earth's hemispheres.
3. a sphere of action, knowledge, etc.
4. either lateral half of the cerebrum or cerebellum.

Magdeburg hemispheres; a device consisting of two hemispherical metal cups fitting closely together so as to form a hollow sphere from which, by means of an air pump, the air is exhausted. The instrument was invented by Otto von Guericke at Magdeburg, for the purpose of illustrating by experiment the pressure of the air.

hem·i·spher′iç, a. hemispherical.

hem·i·spher′iç·ăl, a. pertaining to or formed like a hemisphere; as, a hemispherical body.

hem·i·sphē′roid, n. a half of a spheroid.

hem″i·sphē·roid′ăl, a. having the form of a hemispheroid.

hem·i·spher′ūle, n. a half-spherule.

hem′i·stiçh, n. [L. hemistichium; Gr. hēmistichion, a half line; hēmi-, half, and stichos, a row, line, verse.]

1. half a line of verse, especially the half preceding or following the chief caesura, or rhythmic pause in the middle of a line.
2. an incomplete line of poetry or one shorter than the metrical pattern calls for.

hē·mis′ti·çhăl, a. pertaining to or made up of hemistichs; as, a hemistichal division of a verse.

hem·i·sym′me·try, n. [hemi-, and Gr. symmetria, symmetry.] same as hemihedrism.

hem·i·sys′tō·lē, n. [hemi-, and Gr. systolē, a drawing together.] a peculiar kind of irregular action of the heart muscle, in which, with every two beats of the heart, only one beat of the pulse is felt.

hem·i·tēr′pēne, n. [hemi-, and terpene.] any of a group of isomeric hydrocarbons with the general formula C_5H_8.

hem′i·tōne, n. [L. hemitonium; Gr. hēmitonion, a half tone; hēmi-, half, and tonos, a tone.] in music, same as semitone.

hē·mit′rō·păl, a. same as hemitropous.

hem′i·trōpe, a. [hemi-, and Gr. tropē, a turning, from trepein, to turn.] half-turned; specifically, in mineralogy, designating a crystal formed of two other crystals joined so that corresponding faces are directly opposed.

hem′i·trōpe, n. 1. anything hemitropous in structure.
2. in crystallography, a hemitrope crystal.

hem·i·trop′iç, a. same as hemitrope.

hē·mit′rō·pous, a. [hemi-, and Gr. tropē, a turning, from trepein, to turn.]
1. turned half round; half-inverted.
2. in botany, designating an ovule in which the axis of the nucleus is more curved than in an anatropous ovule.

HEMITROPOUS OVULE

hē·mit′rō·py, n. the quality or state of being hemitrope.

hem′i·tȳpe, n. [hemi-, and Gr. typos, an impression.] that which is hemitypic, or only partly typical of a given group.

hem·i·typ′iç, a. in zoology, only partially typical of a given group, because partaking of the characteristics of some other group.

hem′līne, n. 1. the bottom edge, usually hemmed, of a dress, skirt, coat, etc.
2. the height of this edge above the ground.

hem′lock, n. [ME. hemlok; AS. hemlic, hymelic, hemlock.]
1. any of a group of poisonous weeds of the carrot family, with small, white flowers and finely divided leaves, especially Conium maculatum and species of Cicuta. Conium, a powerful sedative, is extracted from hemlock.
2. a poison made from such a weed.
3. any of a group of North American and Asiatic evergreen trees of the pine family, with drooping branches and short, flattened needles: the bark is used in tanning.
4. the wood of the hemlock tree.

HEMLOCK (Conium maculatum) hem′lock pärs′ley, a plant belonging to the genus Conioselinum. It resembles hemlock, but is not poisonous.

hem′lock sprûce, same as hemlock, sense 3.

hem′mel, n. same as hemble.

hem′mēr, n. one who or that which hems; specifically, an attachment to a sewing machine for making a hem.

hem′ming, n. 1. the act or process of making a hem.
2. the stitching that secures a hem; also, a hem or hems collectively.

hē′mō-, hae′mō- (or hem′ō), [from Gr. haima, blood.] a combining form meaning blood, as in *hemo*globin: also hem-, hema-.

hē·mō·çhrō′mō·ġen, hae·mō·çhrō′mō·ġen, n. [hemo-, and Gr. chrōma, color, and -gen.] any compound of heme with various proteins and other substances.

hē″mō·çhrō·mom′e·tēr, hae″mō·çhrō·mom′e·tēr, n. [hemo-, and Gr. chrōma, color, and metron, a measure.] an apparatus used in determining the quantity of hemoglobin in fluids.

hē·mō·cȳ′ȧ·nin, hae·mō·cȳ′ȧ·nin, n. [hemo-, and Gr. kyanos, blue, and -in.] a coloring matter containing copper, found in the blood of certain invertebrates.

hē″mō·cȳ·tol′y·sis, hae″mō·cȳ·tol′y·sis, n. [hemo-, and Gr. kytos, a hollow vessel, and lyein, to loose.] in pathology, dissolution of the blood corpuscles.

hē″mō·cȳ·tō·tryp′sis, hae″mō·cȳ·tō·tryp′sis, n. [hemo-, and Gr. kytos, a hollow vessel, and tribein, to rub.] in pathology, a breaking up of the corpuscles of the blood due to pressure.

hē·mō·drom′e·tēr, hae·mō·drom′e·tēr, n. [hemo-, and Gr. dromos, a running, course, and metron, a measure.] an instrument to measure the velocity of the arterial flow of blood.

hē·mō·drom′ō·gràph, hae·mō·drom′ō·gràph, n. [hemo-, and Gr. dromos, a running, a course, and graphein, to write.] an instrument that registers automatically the velocity of the blood.

hē·mō·drō·mom′e·tēr, hae·mō·drō·mom′e·tēr, n. same as hemodrometer.

hē·mō·flaġ′el·lāte, hae·mō·flaġ′el·lāte, n. any flagellate protozoan parasite in the blood stream.

hē·mō·gas′triç, hae·mō·gas′triç, a. [hemo-, and Gr. gastēr, belly.] relating to the blood and the stomach.

hē·mō·glō′bin, hae·mō·glō′bin (or hē′mō·glō-), n. [shortened (after hemo-) from earlier haematoglobulin.] the red coloring matter of the red blood corpuscles, a protein yielding heme and globin on hydrolysis: it carries oxygen from the lungs to the tissues, and carbon dioxide from the tissues to the lungs.

hē·mō·glō·bi·nē′mi·ȧ, hae·mō·glō·bi·nē′mi·ȧ, n. [hemo-, and L. globus, a ball, and Gr. haima, blood.] in pathology, a condition in which the hemoglobin is dissolved out of the blood corpuscles and is held in solution in the serum.

hē·mō·glō·bi·nif′ēr·ous, hae·mō·glō·bi·nif′ēr·ous, a. containing hemoglobin.

hē·mō·glō·bi·nom′e·tēr, hae·mō·glō·bi·nom′e·tēr, n. [hemo-, and L. globus, a ball, and metrum, a measure.] an instrument for measuring the amount of hemoglobin in the blood; a hemochromometer.

hē·mō·glō·bi·nū′ri·ȧ, hae·mō·glō·bi·nū′ri·ȧ, n. [hemo-, and L. globus, a ball, and Gr. ouron, urine.] in pathology, the presence of hemoglobin in the urine, due either to its solution out of the red corpuscles or to disintegration of the red corpuscles.

hē·mō·glob′ū·lin, hae·mō·glob′ū·lin, n. same as hemoglobin.

hē′moid, hae′moid, a. [hem-, and -oid.] like blood.

hē·mō·leū′çō·cȳte, hae·mō·leū′çō·cȳte, n. [hemo-, and leucocyte.] a white blood corpuscle.

hē·mō·leū′kō·cȳte, hae·mō·leū′kō·cȳte, n. same as hemoleucocyte.

hē′mō·lymph, hae′mō·lymph, n. [hemo-, and L. lympha, a spring, pure water.] the nutritive fluid, similar to blood or lymph, of some invertebrates.

hē″mō·lym·phat′iç, hae″mō·lym·phat′iç, a. pertaining to hemolymph.

hē·mō·lȳ′sin, hae·mō·lȳ′sin, n. [from hemo-, and Gr. lysis, a dissolving; and -in.] a substance in the blood serum that causes the destruction of red corpuscles with liberation of hemoglobin into the surrounding fluid: it is sometimes produced by injecting red corpuscles from another individual of the wrong blood group.

hē·mol′y·sis, n. [hemo-, and -lysis.] the destruction of the red corpuscles with liberation of hemoglobin into the surrounding fluid, caused by the presence of hemolysins.

hē·mō·lyt′iç, hae·mō·lyt′iç, a. [hemo-, and Gr. lytikos, destructive, from lyein, to loosen.] of, causing, or characterized by hemolysis.

hē′mō·phīle, hae′mō·phīle, n. 1. a hemophiliac.
2. a bacterium that grows well in any medium containing hemoglobin.

hē·mō·phil′i·ȧ, hae·mō·phil′i·ȧ, n. [hemo-, and Gr. philos, loving.] a hereditary condition in which the blood fails to clot quickly enough, causing prolonged, uncontrollable bleeding from even the smallest cut: it occurs in males and is transmitted by females.

hē·mō·phil′i·aç, hae·mō·phil′i·aç, n. one who has hemophilia.

hē·mō·phil′iç, hae·mō·phil′iç, a. 1. of or having hemophilia.
2. growing well in a medium containing hemoglobin: said of certain bacteria.

hē·mop′ty·sis, hae·mop′ty·sis, n. [hemo-, and Gr. ptysis, a spitting, from ptyein, to spit.] the spitting of blood from the larynx, trachea, bronchi, or lungs.

hem′or·rhaġe, haem′or·rhaġe, n. [L. hæmorrhagia; Gr. haimorrhagia, a violent bleeding, from haimorrhagēs, bleeding violently; haima, blood, and rhēgynai, to break, burst.] the escape of blood from its vessels; bleeding; especially, heavy bleeding.

hem·or·rhaġ′iç, a. of or characterized by hemorrhage.

hem′or·rhoid, haem′or·rhoid (-roid), n. [Fr. pl. hemorrhoides; L. haemorrhoidae; Gr. haimorrhoides (phlebes), (veins) discharging blood, from haimorrhoos, flowing with blood, from haima, blood, and rhein, to flow.] [usually in pl.] a painful swelling or tumor of a vein in the region of the anus, often with bleeding: also called, in the plural, piles.

het"ĕr·ō·ċär'pi·ăn, a. heterocarpous.

het"ĕr·ō·ċär'piṣm, n. [hetero-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] in botany, the property of bearing fruit of two sorts or shapes, as in Amphicarpaea.

het"ĕr·ō·ċär'pous, a. [Gr. heterokarpos, bearing different fruit; heteros, other, different, and karpos, fruit.] in botany, bearing fruit of two different kinds.

het"ĕr·ō·cel'lū·lăr, a. consisting of dissimilar cells.

het"ĕr·ō·ceph'ȧ·lous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. kephalē, head.] having some heads of male, or staminate, and some of female, or pistillate, flowers, as certain plants of the aster family.

Het·ĕr·oc'e·rȧ, n. [hetero-, and Gr. keras, horn.] a division of Lepidoptera including many families; the moths.

het"ĕr·ō·cĕr'ċăl, a. [hetero-, and Gr. kerkos, tail.] designating, of, or having a tail fin in which the upper lobe is larger than the lower and contains the upturned end of the spinal column, as in certain fishes.

het'ĕr·ō·cĕr"cy, n. the condition of being heterocercal.

het"ĕr·ō·ċhrō·mat'iċ, a. [hetero- and -chromatic.] of, having, or consisting of different or contrasting colors; many-colored: opposed to homochromatic.

het'ĕr·ō·ċhrōme, a. heterochromatic.

het"ĕr·ō·ċhrō'mō·sōme, n. an accessory chromosome, present in some germ cells, which passes over intact to only one of the daughter cells instead of being divided between the two; sex chromosome: it is thought to be the factor that determines the organism's sex.

het·ĕr·oċh'rō·niṣm, n. same as heterochrony.

het"ĕr·ō·ċhrō·nis'tiċ, a. same as heterochronous.

het·ĕr·oċh'rō·nous, a. pertaining to heterochrony.

het·ĕr·oċh'rō·ny, n. [Gr. heterochronos, of different times; heteros, other, different, and chronos, time.] in biology, a deviation from the true ontogenetic sequence, with reference to the time of formation of organs or parts.

het'ĕr·ō·ċlīne, a. [hetero-, and Gr. klinē, a bed.] same as heterocephalous.

het·ĕr·oċ'lī·tăl, a. see heteroclite.

het'ĕr·ō·ċlīte, a. [LL. heteroclitus; Gr. heteroklitos, irregularly inflected; heteros, other, different, and klinein, to bend, incline.] irregular; anomalous; deviating from the standard or norm.

het'ĕr·ō·ċlīte, n. 1. in grammar, a word which is irregular or anomalous either in declension or conjugation, or which deviates from ordinary forms of inflection in words of a like kind: it is applied especially to nouns irregular in declension.
2. an anomaly. [Rare.]

het"ĕr·ō·ċlit'iċ, a. heteroclite.

het"ĕr·ō·ċlit'iċ·ăl, a. heteroclitic.

het·ĕr·oċ'li·tous, a. heteroclitic. [Obs.]

het"ĕr·ō·cȳ'ċliċ, a. [hetero-, and cyclic.] designating or of a cyclic molecular arrangement of atoms of carbon and other elements.

het'ĕr·ō·cyst, n. [hetero-, and Gr. kystis, a bag, pouch.] a very large cell found in certain algae.

het"ĕr·ō·daċ'tyl, het"ĕr·ō·daċ'tyle, a. [hetero-, and Gr. daktylos, a finger or toe.] in zoology, having the toes irregular, either in regard to number, position, or formation, as in the trogons.

het"ĕr·ō·daċ'tyl, het"ĕr·ō·daċ'tyle, n. a member of the Heterodactylæ.

Het"e·rō·daċ'ty·lae, n.pl. a group of picarian birds having the second toe turned backward, instead of the fourth; the trogons.

het"ĕr·ō·daċ'tyl·ous, a. 1. same as heterodactyl.
2. pertaining to the Heterodactylæ.

het'ĕr·ō·dont, a. [hetero-, and Gr. odous, odontos, a tooth.] having teeth of different kinds, as canines, incisors, and molars: distinguished from homodont.

het'ĕr·ō·dont, n. any animal with different kinds of teeth; a heterodont animal.

het'ĕr·ō·dox, a. [Gr. heterodoxos, of another or different opinion; heteros, other, and doxa, opinion.] departing from or opposed to the usual beliefs as established doctrines, especially in religion; inclining toward heresy; unorthodox: opposed to orthodox.

het'ĕr·ō·dox, n. an opinion contrary to that which is established or generally received. [Obs.]

het'ĕr·ō·dox·ness, n. the state of being heterodox.

het'ĕr·ō·dox·y, n. 1. the quality or fact of being heterodox.
2. a heterodox opinion, belief, or doctrine.

het·ĕr·od'rō·mous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. dromos, a running, from dramein, to run.] in botany, running in different directions, as leaves on the stem and branches.

het·ĕr·od'rō·my, n. in botany, a change in direction of the spiral sequence of leaves on a stem.

het'ĕr·ō·dȳne, a. [hetero- and dyne.] having to do with the combination of radio oscillations of somewhat different frequencies coupled in such a way as to produce beats whose frequency is the difference or sum of the frequencies of the combined oscillations.

het'ĕr·ō·dȳne, v.t.; heterodyned, pt., pp., heterodyning, ppr. to combine (a series of waves) with a series of a somewhat different frequency, producing beats.

het'ĕr·ō·dȳne, n. an accessory generator of radio-frequency voltage.

het·ĕr·oe'cious, a. [heter-, and Gr. oikia, a house.] in biology, living as a parasite on first one host and then another.

het·ĕr·oe'ciṣm, n. the parasitism of heteroecious organisms.

het"e·roe·ciṣ'măl, a. heteroecious.

het"ĕr·ō·ga·mēte', n. a gamete differentiated sexually or otherwise from another that it unites with, as most male and female gametes: opposed to isogamete.

het·ĕr·og'ȧ·mous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.]
1. characterized by the uniting of heterogametes.
2. characterized by reproduction in which sexual and asexual generations alternate.
3. characterized by indirect pollination.
4. having flowers in which the stamens and pistils are irregularly arranged.

het·ĕr·og'ȧ·my, n. 1. the quality or state of being heterogamous.
2. reproduction in which sexual and asexual generations alternate.
3. indirect pollination.

het·ĕr·o·gañ'gli·āte, a. [hetero-, and Gr. ganglion, ganglion.] possessing a nervous system in which the ganglia are scattered and unsymmetrical, as in the Mollusca.

het″ĕr·ō·ġēne, a. heterogenous.

het″ĕr·ō·ġē′nē·ăl, a. heterogeneous.

het″ĕr·ō·ġē·nē′i·ty, n.; pl. het″ĕr·ō·ġē·nē′i·ties [Fr. hétérogénéité; ML. heterogeneitas.]
1. the quality or condition of being heterogeneous; dissimilarity.
2. a heterogeneous element.

het″ĕr·ō·ġē′nē·ous, a. [LL. heterogeneus; Gr. heterogenēs, of different kinds, of different genders; heteros, other, different, and genos, kind, race, gender.]
1. differing or opposite in structure, quality, etc.; dissimilar; incongruous; foreign.
2. composed of unrelated or unlike elements or parts; varied; miscellaneous.
Opposed to homogeneous.
heterogeneous nouns; in grammar, nouns of different genders in the singular and plural numbers; as, hic locus, of the masculine gender in the singular, and hi loci and hæc loca, both masculine and neuter in the plural; hoc cælum, neuter in the singular, and hi cæli, masculine in the plural.
heterogeneous quantities; in mathematics, quantities incapable of being compared in respect to magnitude.
heterogeneous surds; in mathematics, surds which have different radical signs.

het″ĕr·ō·ġē′nē·ous·ly, adv. in a heterogeneous manner.

het″ĕr·ō·ġē′nē·ous·ness, n. heterogeneity.

het″ĕr·ō·ġen′e·sis, n. [hetero-, and Gr. genesis, origin, birth.]
1. reproduction in which sexual and asexual generations alternate.
2. reproduction in which the parent bears offspring differing from itself: opposed to homogenesis.
3. spontaneous generation.

het″ĕr·ō·ġē·net′iç, a. pertaining to heterogenesis.

het″ĕr·ō·ġen′ic, a. [hetero-, and -genic.] of different origin; not from the same source, individual, or species.

het·ĕr·oġ′e·nist, n. one who believes in the theory of spontaneous generation.

het·ĕr·oġ′e·nous, a. heterogenic.

het·ĕr·oġ′e·ny, n. heterogenesis.

het·ĕr·oġ′ō·nism, n. the quality or state of being heterogonous.

het·ĕr·og′ō·nous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. gonos, offspring, generation.]
1. in botany, having two or more kinds of perfect flowers, differing in the length of their stamens and pistils, on the same plant; heterostyled.
2. characterized by reproduction in which sexual and asexual generations alternate.

het·ĕr·og′ō·nous·ly, adv. in a heterogonous manner.

het·ĕr·og′ō·ny, n. the state of being heterogonous.

het′ĕr·ō·gr̆aft, n. a graft of skin, bone, etc. taken from another individual.

het″ĕr·ō·graph′iç, a. pertaining to or characterized by heterography.

het·ĕr·og′rà·phy, n. [hetero-, and Gr. graphein, to write.]
1. spelling that differs from current standard usage.
2. spelling, as in modern English, in which the same letter does not always represent the same sound.

het·ĕr·oġ′y·năl, a. heterogynous.

het·ĕr·oġ′y·nous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. gynē, a woman, a female.] in zoology, having females of two different kinds, one fertile, the other infertile or neuter, as the ants.

het·ĕr·ol′ō·gous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. logos, relation, proportion.]
1. consisting of different elements, or of the same elements in different proportions: opposed to homologous.
2. in medicine, differing in structure or form from the normal; as, a heterologous tumor is a tumor constituted of a different tissue from that of the part in or on which it is situated.

het·ĕr·ol′ō·ġy, n. [hetero-, and Gr. logos, relation, proportion.] lack or absence of relation or analogy between parts, resulting from their consisting of different elements or deriving from different sources.

het·ĕr·ol′y·sis, n. [Mod. L.; see hetero- and -lysis.] the destruction of cells of one species by lysins or enzymes derived from cells of a different species.

het·ĕr·om′ăl·lous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. mallos, a lock of wool.] in botany, having the leaves or stems turning in different directions, as certain mosses.

Het·e·rom′e·rà, n.pl. [Gr. heteromerēs, unequal; heteros, other, different, and meros, part.] a division of coleopterous insects comprising those that have five joints in the tarsus of the first and second pair of legs, and only four joints in the tarsus of the third pair.

het·e·rom′e·răn, n. one of the Heteromera.

het·ĕr·om′ĕr·ous, a. [Gr. heteromerēs, unequal; heteros, different, and meros, a part.]
1. in chemistry, composed of different elements, though exhibiting similar properties in certain other respects.
2. in botany, having the parts unequal in number: distinguished from isomerous.
3. in zoology, pertaining to the Heteromera.

het″ĕr·ō·mē·tab′ō·lous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. metabolos, changeable.] developing with incomplete metamorphosis, as certain insects.

het″ĕr·ō·mor′phiç, a. [Gr. heteromorphos, of another form; heteros, other, different, and morphē, form.]
1. differing from the standard type or form.
2. exhibiting different forms at various stages of development, as insects in the larval and pupal stages.

het″ĕr·ō·mor′phism, n. the quality or state of being heteromorphic; deviation from the standard or normal form.

het″ĕr·ō·mor′phīte, n. a variety of jamesonite; a lead antimony sulfide.

het″ĕr·ō·mor′phous, a. heteromorphic.

het″ĕr·ō·mor′phy, n. in botany, same as heteromorphism.

Het″e·rō·mȳ·ā′ri·à, n.pl. [hetero-, and Gr. mys, muscle.] a group of mollusks having unequal adductor muscles.

het″e·rō·mȳ·ā′ri·ăn, a. characteristic of the Heteromyaria.

het″e·rō·nē′rē·is, n. in zoology, a dimorphic sexual form of certain nereidians.

het″ĕr·ō·nom′iç, a. [hetero-, and Gr. nomos, law.] showing a different mode of operation or arrangement: opposed to isonomic.

het·ĕr·on′ō·mous, a. 1. pertaining or relating to heteronomy; subject to the rule of another: opposed to autonomous.
2. in biology, differing in some way from a common type; differentiated or specialized, as parts or organs.

het·ĕr·on′ō·my, n. [hetero-, and Gr. nomos, law.]
1. the state of being subject to the law or authority of another; subordination to authority from without: opposed to autonomy.
2. in Kantian philosophy, subjection to the laws or restrictions imposed on man by nature or by his appetites, passions, and desires, and not by reason.

het′ĕr·ō·nym, n. [Gr. heterōnymos, having a different name; heteros, other, different, and onyma, name.]
1. a word with the same spelling as another but with a different meaning and pronunciation (e.g., tear, a drop of water from the eye, tear, to pull apart, rip).
2. a name (of something) in one language that is an exact translation of the name in another language (e.g., German Fernsprecher, lit., far speaker, English telephone).

het″ĕr·ō·nym′iç, a. same as heteronymous.

het·ĕr·on′y·mous, a. 1. of, or having the nature of, a heteronym.
2. having different names, as a pair of correlatives; as, son and daughter are heteronymous.
3. in optics, designating or of the two crossed images of something seen when the eyes are focused at a point beyond it.

het·ĕr·on′y·mous·ly, adv. in a heteronymous manner.

het·ĕr·on′y·my, n. the use or relation of heteronyms.

Het″ĕr·ō·öu′si·ăn, a. [Gr. heteroousios, from hetero-, different and ousia, essence.] in theology and church history, designating, of, or holding the theory that God the Father and God the Son are different in substance: opposed to Homoousian, Homoiousian.

Het″ĕr·ō·öu′si·ăn, n. an adherent of the Heteroousian theory; Arian.

Het″ĕr·ō·öu′si·ast, n. a Heteroousian.

het″ĕr·ō·path′iç, a. [hetero-, and Gr. pathos, suffering.] see allopathic.

het·ĕr·op′à·thy, n. see allopathy.

het″ĕr·ō·pel′mous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. pelma, the sole of the foot.] in ornithology, having each of the two flexor tendons so divided that the flexor hallucis supplies the two posterior toes and the flexor perforans the two anterior toes.

Het·e·roph′à·ġī, n.pl. [hetero-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] in ornithology, the altrices.

het·e·roph′à·gous, a. same as altricial.

het″ĕr·ō·phā′si·à, n. [hetero-, and Gr. phasis, a saying, from phanai, to say, speak.] in pathology, a species of aphasia characterized by the misuse of words.

het·ĕr·ō·phē′mism (-fē′mizm or -of′ē-mizm), n. an example of heterophemy.

het·ĕr·ō·phē′mist (-fē′mist or -of′ē-mist), n. one who is subject to heterophemy.

het″ĕr·ō·phē·mis′tiç, a. pertaining to heterophemy.

het·ĕr·ō·phē′mize, v.i.; heterophemized, pt., pp.; heterophemizing, ppr. to use a heterophemism.

het′ĕr·ō·phē·my (-fē-mi or -of′ē-mi), n. [hetero-, and Gr. phēmē, a voice, speech, saying, from phanai, to say, speak.] the unconscious saying or writing of one word when another is intended.

het″ĕr·ō·phō′ri·à, n. [hetero-, and Gr. -phoria, from pherein, to bear.] in pathology, a relation of the visual lines of the two eyes other than that of parallelism.

het·ĕr·ō·phyl′lous (or of′i-lus), a. [hetero-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.]
1. in botany, having two different kinds of leaves on the same stem, as Potamogeton heterophyllus, which has broad, floating leaves, with narrow leaves submerged in the water.
2. in zoology, having different kinds of foliation or volution of the septal margins.

het″ĕr·ō·plā′si·à, n. [hetero-, and Gr. plasis, a forming, from plassein, to form.] in pathology, the presence, in a part of the body, of a tissue that does not belong there normally.

het′ĕr·ō·plaşm, n. same as heteroplasia.

het″ĕr·ō·plas′tiç, a. [hetero-, and Gr. plastikos, plastic, from plassein, to form.] of or pertaining to heteroplasty.

het′ĕr·ō·plas·ty, n. 1. heteroplasia.
2. plastic surgery in which tissue from one individual is grafted onto another.

het′ĕr·ō·pod, n. one of the Heteropoda.

het′ĕr·ō·pod, a. pertaining to or characteristic of the Heteropoda; heteropodous.

Het·e·rop′ō·dà, n.pl. [Gr. heteropous, with uneven feet; heteros, other, different, and pous, podos, a foot.] an order of marine mollusks, the most highly organized of the Gasteropoda. In this order the foot is compressed into a vertical muscular lamina, serving as a fin, and the gills, when present, are collected into a mass on the back.

het·ĕr·op′ō·dăn, n. a heteropod.

het·ĕr·op′ō·dous, a. same as heteropod.

het″ĕr·ō·pō′lăr, a. [hetero-, and Gr. polos, pole.]
1. having polar correspondence to something other than itself.
2. in biology, having unequal or dissimilar poles, as of the primary axis.

het·ĕr·op′tĕr, n. one of the Heteroptera.

Het·e·rop′te·rà, n.pl. [hetero-, and Gr. pteron, a wing.] a division of hemipterous insects comprising those in which the two pairs of wings are of different consistence, the anterior part being horny or leathery, but generally tipped with membrane.

het·e·rop′te·răn, n. a heteropter.

het·e·rop′te·rous, a. having wings differentiated; characteristic of the Heteroptera.

het·ĕr·op′tiçs, n. [hetero-, and Gr. optikos, optic, from opsesthai, to see.] false optics.

het′ĕr·ō·sçōpe, n. an apparatus to test heteroscopy.

het″ĕr·os′çō·py, n. a difference of vision in the two eyes.

het″ĕr·ō·sex′ū·ăl, a. 1. of or characterized by sexual desire for those of the opposite sex: opposed to homosexual.
2. in biology, belonging to different sexes, or relating to different sexes.

het″ĕr·ō·sex′ū·ăl, n. a heterosexual individual.

het″ĕr·ō·sex″ū·al′i·ty, n. 1. a sexual desire for those of the opposite sex.
2. sexual relations between individuals of opposite sex.
Opposed to homosexuality.

het·ĕr·ō′sis, n. abnormal development and size of animals or plants, produced by cross-breeding.

Het″e·rō·sō′mà·tà, n.pl. [hetero-, and Gr. sōma, sōmatos, body.] a suborder of teleostean fishes, having the body and head not bilaterally symmetrical; the flatfishes.

het″ĕr·ō·som′à·tous (or -sō′mà-), a. pertaining to the Heterosomata; having a body bilaterally asymmetrical.

het′ĕr·ō·sōme, n. one of the Heterosomata.

het″ĕr·ō·sō′mous, a. same as heterosomatous.

het″ĕr·ō·spōr′iç, a. heterosporous.
het″ĕr·ō·spōr′ous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. sporos, seed.] producing more than one kind of asexual spore; especially, producing microspores and megaspores: opposed to homosporous.
het″ĕr·ō·stat′iç, a. [hetero-, and Gr. statikos, causing to stand, from histanai, to cause to stand.] in electricity, pertaining to an electrometer or any instrument for measuring potential, in which there is electrification independent of that to be tested.
het·ĕr·os′trō·phē, n. same as heterostrophy.
het″ĕr·ō·stroph′iç, a. pertaining to heterostrophy.
het·ĕr·os′trō·phous, a. heterostrophic.
het·ĕr·os′trō·phy, n. [hetero-, and Gr. strophē, a turning, from strephein, to turn.] the state of being turned in a direction other than the usual one; an opposite turning, as in certain shells.
het′ĕr·ō·stўled, a. [hetero-, and Gr. stylos, a pillar.] in botany, heterogonous.
het′ĕr·ō·stў″ly, n. the condition in which flowers on different plants of the same species have styles of different lengths, thereby encouraging cross-pollination.
het″ĕr·ō·taç′tous, a. pertaining to or characterized by heterotaxia.
het″ĕr·ō·tax′i·à, n. [hetero-, and Gr. -taxia, from taxis, arrangement, from tassein, to order, arrange.] arrangement of parts or organs of the body different from that existing in a normal form or type; confused, abnormal, or heterogeneous arrangement or structure.
het″ĕr·ō·tax′iç, a. exhibiting heterotaxia.
het″ĕr·ō·tax′is, het′ĕr·ō·tax″y, n. same as heterotaxia.
het·ĕr·ot′ō·mous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. tomē, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.] in mineralogy, having a different cleavage: applied to a variety of feldspar in which the cleavage differs from common feldspar.
het″ĕr·ō·tō′pi·à, n. heterotopy.
het″ĕr·ō·top′iç, a. same as heterotopous.
het″ĕr·ot′ō·piṣm, n. heterotopy.
het·ĕr·ot′ō·pous, a. characterized by heterotopy; misplaced.
het·ĕr·ot′ō·py, n. [hetero-, and Gr. topos, place.]
1. in pathology, a misplacement of normal tissue, especially a congenital malformation of the brain in which masses of gray matter are found transplanted into the white.
2. in biology, a deviation from the true ontogenetic sequence with reference to the place of organs or parts.
Het·e·rot′ri·chà, n.pl. [hetero-, and Gr. thrix, trichos, hair.] in zoology, an order of ciliate infusorians, comprising some twenty genera, and containing the largest of the species.
het·e·rot′ri·çhous, a. pertaining to the Heterotricha.
het·ĕr·ot′rō·păl, a. heterotropous.
het·ĕr·ō·troph′iç, a. [from hetero- and Gr. trophikos, nursing, from trephein, to nourish.] obtaining food from organic material; unable to use inorganic matter to form proteins and carbohydrates.
het·ĕr·ot′rō·phy, n. [hetero-, and Gr. trophē, nourishment, from trephein, to feed, nourish.] in botany, an irregular method of deriving nutrition; an inability to use inorganic matter to form proteins and carbohydrates: applied especially to certain species of the oak family which have no root hairs and are dependent for nutrition upon a fungus, the hyphae of which surround the roots and perform the functions of root hairs.
het″ĕr·ō·trop′iç, a. anisotropic; aeolotropic.
het·ĕr·ot′rō·pous, a. [hetero-, and Gr. tropos, a turning, from trepein, to turn.] in botany, having the embryo or ovule oblique or transverse to the axis of the seed.
het″ĕr·ō·typ′iç, a. designating or of the first meiotic division of a germ cell.
het″ĕr·ō·typ′iç·ăl, a. heterotypic.
het″ĕr·ō·zў′gōte, n. [hetero-, and zygote.] in Mendel's theory of heredity, a plant or animal having one or more recessive characteristics and hence not breeding true to type; hybrid: opposed to homozygote.
hę′thing, n. contempt; mockery. [Obs.]
het′măn, n.; pl. het′măṇ, [Pol., from G. hauptmann, head or chief man; haupt, head, and mann, man.]
1. formerly, a Polish military commander.
2. a Cossack chief or leader.
het′măn·āte, n. the rule of a hetman.
het′măn·ship, n. the office or rank of a hetman.
het up, [het, dial. pt. and pp. of heat.] excited. [Slang.]
Heū′çhe·rà, n. [after J. H. Heucher, a German botanist.] a genus of North American perennial plants of the saxifrage family, having round heart-shaped root leaves and a prolonged narrow panicle in small clusters of greenish or purplish flowers.
heūgh (hūkh), n. 1. a crag; a precipice; a glen with steep, overhanging sides. [Scot.]
2. a coal mine; a pit. [Scot.]
heū′lănd·īte, n. [after H. Heuland, an English mineralogist.] a hydrated silicate of calcium and aluminum, $CaAl_2Si_6O_{16}·5H_2O$, occurring as crystals with pearly luster.
heū·ret′iç, n. [Gr. heuretikos, inventive, from heuriskein, to invent, discover.] a branch of logic treating of discovery or invention.
heū·ris′tiç, a. [Gr. heuriskein, to invent, discover.] helping to discover or learn; specifically, designating a method of education or of computer programming in which the pupil or machine proceeds along empirical lines, using rules of thumb, to find solutions or answers.
heū·ris′tiçs, n.pl. 1. heuristic methods.
2. [construed as sing.] the art or practice of using heuristic methods or procedures.
hew, v.t.; hewed, pt.; hewed or hewn, pp.; hewing, ppr.; [ME. hewen; AS. heáwan, to hew.]

hex, v.t. to bewitch; to jinx. [Colloq.]
hex′à-, [from G. hex, six.] a combining form meaning six, as in *hexa*gram, *hexa*meter: also, before a vowel, hex-.
hex·à·bā′siç, a. [hexa-, and Gr. basis, a base.]
1. in chemistry, designating an acid having six replaceable atoms of hydrogen.
2. containing in each molecule six atoms of a univalent metal or the equivalent in combining capacity.
hex·à·çap′sū·lăr, a. [hexa-, and L. capsula, a box.] in botany, having six capsules.
hex′à·cē, n. [hexa-, and Gr. akē, a point.] a summit of a polyhedron formed by the combination of six faces.
hex·à·çhlō′rō·phēne, n. [from hexa-, and chloro-, and phenol.] a white, odorless powder, $C_{13}Cl_6H_6O_2$, used in medicine to destroy, or prevent the growth of, bacteria.
hex′à·çhord, n. [hexa-, and Gr. chordē, a string, chord.]
1. in Greek music, (a) a diatonic series of six tones; (b) the interval of a major sixth; (c) an instrument having six strings.
2. in music, an interval of four tones and one semitone; a series of six notes.
hex·aç′rō·nous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. chronos, time.] in prosody, having six morae.
hex·ac′id, a. in chemistry, designating a base having six atoms replaceable by acids.
hex·à·çol′iç, a. [hexa-, and Gr. kōlon, a member.] in ancient prosody, formed of six cola.
hex·à·çor′ăl·line, a. [hexa-, and Gr. korallion, coral.] having septa consisting of six parts, as corals.
hex·à·çor′ăl·line, n. a hexacoralline coral.
hex′açt, a. hexactinal.
hex·aç′ti·năl, a. [hex-, and Gr. aktis, aktinos, a ray.] in zoology, having six rays.
hex·aç·ti·nel′lid, a. [hex-, and Gr. aktis, aktinos, a ray.] in zoology, having siliceous six-rayed spicules: said of certain sponges.
hex·aç·ti·nel′line, a. hexactinellid.
Hex·aç·tin′i·à, n.pl. [hex-, and Gr. aktis, aktinos, a ray.] in zoology, the Anthozoa.
hex·aç·tin′i·ăn, a. in zoology, said of certain polyps which have septa in multiples of six.
hex′ad, a. [LL. hexas; Gr. hexas, hexados, the number six, from hex, six.] in chemistry, having a valence of six.
hex′ad, n. 1. in chemistry, an element the atoms of which have a valence of six.
2. a series or group of six.
hex·à·daç′tyl·iṣm, n. the condition or quality of being hexadactylous.
hex·à·daç′tyl·ous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. daktylos, a finger or toe.] having six fingers or toes.
hex·à·deç′ăne, n. [hexa-, and Gr. deka, ten; so called because each molecule contains 16 atoms of carbon.] a semisolid hydrocarbon, $C_{16}H_{34}$, derived from petroleum.
hex·ad′iç, a. of, or having the nature of, a hexad.
hex·à·em′ĕr·on, n. [LL. hexaemeron, the six days of the creation; L.Gr. hexaēmeros, as adj., of or in six days; hexa, six, and hēmera, day.]
1. in the Bible, (a) the six-day period of the Creation; (b) a history of this, as in Genesis.
2. a treatise dealing with the Creation.
Also hexahemeron, hexameron.
hex′à·foil, a. six-foiled or six-lobed.
hex′à·gon, n. [L. hexagonum; Gr. hexagōnon, a hexagon, properly neut. of hexagōnos, six-cornered; hex, six, and gōnia, a corner, an angle.] in geometry, a plane figure of six sides and six angles.
hex·ag′ō·năl, a. 1. of, or having the form of, a hexagon.
2. having a six-sided base or section: said of a solid figure.
3. in crystallography, designating or of a system having six-sided forms.
hex·ag′ō·năl·ly, adv. in the form of a hexagon.
hex′à·gram, n. [Gr. hexa, six, and gramma, a line, letter, writing, from graphein, to write.]

2. any figure of six lines.
3. one of the sixty-four figures made up of six parallel lines, which form the basis of the Chinese I Ching, or Book of Changes.
Hex·à·ġyn′i·à, n.pl. [hexa-, and Gr. gynē, a female.] in botany, an order of plants in the Linnaean system having six styles.
hex·à·ġyn′i·ăn, a. in botany, having six styles.
hex·aġ′y·nous, a. hexagynian.
hex·à·hē′drăl, a. having the form of a hexahedron; having six plane surfaces.
hex·à·hē′drŏn, n.; pl. hex·à·hē′drŏṇs, hex·à·hē′drà, [hexa-, and Gr. hedra, a seat, base.] a solid body with six plane surfaces.
hex″a·hem′ĕr·on, n. hexaemeron.
hex″a·hȳ′drāte, n. a hydrate containing six gram-molecular weights of water per gram-molecular weight of the substance combined with the water.
hex″a·hȳ′driç, a. containing six hydroxyl radicals; as, a hexahydric alcohol.
hex″à·kis·oç·tà·hē′drŏn, n. same as hexoctahedron.
hex″à·kis·tet·rà·hē′drŏn, n. same as hexatetrahedron.
hex·am′ĕr·on, n. hexaemeron.
hex·am′ĕr·ous, a. [Gr. hexamerēs, of six parts; hex, six, and meros, a part.] having six parts; specifically, (a) in botany, having the parts of the flower in sixes; (b) in zoology, having the radiating parts of organs arranged in sixes. Also written 6-merous.
hex·am′e·tĕr, n. [L. hexameter; Gr. hexametros, of six measures or feet, hexameter; hex, six, and metron, a measure.]
1. in prosody, a verse of six feet, the first four of which may be either dactyls or spondees, the fifth normally a dactyl, though sometimes a spondee, and the sixth a spondee or trochee.
2. verse consisting of hexameters.
hex·am′e·tĕr, a. in prosody, composed of six feet; as, a hexameter verse.
hex″à·meth′yl·ēne·tet″rà·mine′, a. [hexamethylene, and tetramine.] a crystalline compound, $C_6H_{12}N_4$, used to speed up the vulcanization of rubber and, in medicine, as a urinary antiseptic.
hex·am′e·trăl, a. hexametric.
hex·à·met′riç, a. 1. of hexameter.
2. arranged in hexameters.
hex·à·met′riç·ăl, a. hexametric.
hex·am′e·trist, n. one who writes hexameters.
Hex·an′dri·à, n.pl. [hex-, and Gr. anēr, andros, a male.] in the Linnaean system of botany, a class of plants having six stamens, which are all of equal or nearly equal length.
hex·an′dri·ăn, a. hexandrous.
hex·an′drous, a. having six stamens.
hex′ăne, n. [Gr. hex, six, and -ane.] in chemistry, any of the five colorless, volatile, liquid hydrocarbons, C_6H_{14}, of the paraffin series.

hex·añ′gū·lăr, a. [hex-, and L. angulus, an angle.] having six angles or corners.

hex·à·pär′tīte, a. [hexa-, and L. partitus, pp. of partire, to divide.] in architecture, divided by its arching into six parts: said of a vault.

hex·à·pet′ăl·ous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. petalon, a leaf.] in botany, having six petals or flower leaves.

hex·à·phyl′lous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] in botany, having six leaves.

hex′à·plà, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [Mod. L.; Gr. hexapla, neut. pl. of hexaploos, hexaplous, sixfold; hexa, six, and -ploos, -fold.]
1. an edition having six versions arranged in parallel columns.
2. [H–] Origen's edition of the Old Testament.

hex′à·plăr, a. containing six columns.

hex′à·pod, a. [hexa-, and Gr. pous, podos, a foot.] having six feet.

hex′à·pod, n. an invertebrate, six-footed animal; one of the Hexapoda.

Hex·ap′ō·dà, n.pl. [hexa-, and Gr. pous, podos, foot.] the true or six-legged insects.

hex·ap′ō·dăn, a. and n. same as hexapod.

hex·ap′ō·dous, a. six-footed; pertaining to the Hexapoda.

hex·ap′ō·dy, n.; pl. hex·ap′ō·dieṣ, [Gr. hexapous, having six feet; hex, six, and pous, podos, a foot.] in prosody, a line of verse composed of six feet; a hexameter.

hex·ap′tĕr·ous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. pteron, a wing.] in botany, having six parts resembling wings, as a plant.

hex′ärch·y, n.; pl. hex′arch·ieṣ, a group of six friendly or allied states or governments.

hex·à·sē′miç, a. [LL. hexasemus; Gr. hexasēmos, containing six morae; hex, six, and sēmeion, a sign, mark, mora.] in ancient prosody, composed of or containing six morae; hexachronous.

hex·à·stem′ō·nous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. stēmōn, warp, a stamen.] in botany, having six stamens.

hex′à·stiçh, n. [L. hexastichus; Gr. hexastichos, of six lines or rows; hex, six, and stichos, a row, line, verse.] a stanza or poem composed of six lines.

hex·as′ti·çhon, n. a hexastich.

hex·as′ti·çhous, a. [hexa-, and Gr. stichos, a row, line.] in botany, having parts arranged in six vertical rows.

hex′à·stȳ·lăr, a. in architecture, having six columns in front.

hex′à·stȳle, a. hexastylar.

hex′à·stȳle, n. [L. hexastylus; Gr. hexastylos, having six columns in front; hex, six, and stylos, a column.] in architecture, a portico or temple having six columns in front.

HEXASTYLE

hex″à·syl·lab′iç, a. consisting of six syllables.

hex·à·tet·rà·hē′drŏn, n.; pl. hex·à·tet·rà·hē′drà, [hexa-, and Gr. tetra, four, and hedra, a seat, base.] in crystallography, a hemihedron enclosed by twenty-four scalenes.

Hex′à·teūçh, n. [hexa-, and Gr. teuchos, a tool, implement, book.] the first six books of the Old Testament.

Hex′à·teūçh·ăl, a. pertaining to the Hexateuch.

hex·à·tom′iç, a. [hexa-, and Gr. atomos, an atom.] in chemistry, consisting of six atoms: also applied to atoms that are hexavalent, and to alcohols or other compounds having six replaceable hydrogen atoms.

hex·av′à·lent, a. [hexa-, and L. valens (-entis), ppr. of valere, to have power.]
1. having a valence of six.
2. having six valences: also sexivalent.

hex·ax′ŏn, a. [hex-, and Gr. axōn, an axle.] having six axes of growth, as a spicule of a sponge.

hex′en·bę·ṣen, n. [G., from hexe and besen.] an abnormal growth of shoots at the ends of branches, usually caused by certain fungi; witches'-broom.

hex′ēne, n. see hexylene.

hex·i·çol′ō·ġy, n. same as hexiology.

hex′ine, n. [Gr. hex, six, and -ine.] in chemistry, a volatile compound, C_6H_{10}, of the acetylene series, derived artificially.

hex″i·ō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. relating to hexiology.

hex·i·ol′ō·ġy, n. [Gr. hexis, a condition, state, habit, from echein, to have, hold, and -logia, from legein, to speak.] the science dealing with the relation of living beings to their environment.

hex·oç·tà·hē′drŏn, n. [hex-, and Gr. oktaëdron, an octahedron; oktō, eight, and hedra, a seat, base.] a solid contained under forty-eight equal triangular faces.

hex·ō′iç, a. in chemistry, relating to or obtained from hexane.

hex′ōne, n. [Gr. hex, six, and -one.] in chemistry, a colorless liquid, $C_6H_{12}O$, used as a solvent for gums, resin, etc.

hex′ōne, a. designating a group of organic bases containing six carbon atoms in each molecule, formed by the hydrolysis of proteins.

hex′ō·san, n. [from hexose, and -an.] any of a group of polysaccharides that form hexoses when hydrolyzed.

hex′ōse, n. [from hex-, and -ose.] any of a group of simple sugars containing six carbon atoms in each molecule, as dextrose or fructose.

hex′yl, n. [Gr. hex, six, and -yl.] the hypothetical radical C_6H_{13}, of the hexane series.

hex′yl·ēne, n. [hex-, and -yl, and ethyl*ene*.] in chemistry, one of the ethylene series of hydrocarbons, C_6H_{12}, obtained by distillation from certain coals, and also produced artificially: called also hexene.

hex·yl′iç, a. relating to or obtained from hexyl or hexane.

hex″yl·reṣ·or′cin·ōl, n. [hexyl, and resorcinol.] a nonpoisonous, pale-yellow, crystalline substance, $C_6H_{13}C_6H_3(OH)_2$, used as an antiseptic and germicide.

hęy, interj. [ME. hei, hey; compare D. hei; Sw. hej.] an exclamation used (a) to express surprise or joy; (b) to attract attention; (c) to incite, as dogs; (d) as an interrogative; as, hey? what did you say?

hō·mol'ō·gous, a. [Gr. homologos, agreeing, assenting; homos, the same, and legein, to speak.] having the same relative position, proportion, value, structure, character, etc.; specifically, (a) in geometry, corresponding in relative position and proportion; as, in similar polygons, the corresponding sides, angles, diagonals, etc. are homologous; (b) in algebra, having the same relative proportion or value, as the two antecedents or the two consequents of a proportion; (c) in chemistry, designating or of the same chemical type or series, differing by a multiple or arithmetical ratio in certain constituents, while the physical qualities are analogous, with small differences; also, having this relation with another or other compounds of such a series; as, methyl alcohol and ethyl alcohol are homologous compounds; (d) in biology, corresponding in type of structure and deriving from a common primitive origin; having like relations to a fundamental type; thus, the human arm, the foreleg of a horse, the wing of a bird, and the swimming paddle of a dolphin or whale, being all composed essentially of the same structural elements, are said to be homologous, though they are adapted for quite different functions; (e) in immunology and medicine, having the relationship of a serum and the bacterium from which it is made.

hom"ō·lō·gràph'i̇ç, a. [homo-, and Gr. holos, whole, and graphein, to write.] maintaining or exhibiting the proper relative proportions of parts; preserving true relations as to size and form.

homolographic projection; that method of laying down portions of the earth's surface on a map or chart so that the different portions of the surfaces delineated have their proper relative size and form.

hom'ō·logue (-log), n. [Fr. homologue, from Gr. homologos, agreeing, assenting.] that which is homologous; that which has the same relative position, proportion, value, or structure; thus, the corresponding sides of similar geometrical figures are homologues; an organ agreeing in the plan of its structure with a corresponding organ in a different animal, though differing in function, is a homologue of this corresponding organ.

hō·mol'ō·ġy, n.; pl. hō·mol'ō·ġies, [Gr. homologia, agreement, conformity, from homologos, agreeing.]

1. the quality or state of being homologous.

2. a homologous correspondence or relationship, as of animal organs, chemical compounds, etc.

general homology; in biology, the general relation or agreement between a part or parts and the basic type.

serial homology; in biology, homology in a series of parts which are repetitions of a typical form.

special homology; in biology, the agreement of a part of an animal with a correspondingly situated part of some other animal.

hō·mol'ō·sine prō·jeç'tion, [from Gr. homalos, even; and sine.] a map of the earth's surface with land areas shown in their proper relative size and form, with a minimum of distortion: it is made by combining two homolographic projections.

HOMOLOSINE PROJECTION

hō·mom'à·lous, a. [homo-, and Gr. homalos, even, level, equal.] in botany, originating all round a stem, as leaves, and all bending or curving round to one side.

hō·mō·mor'phiç, a. 1. similar in form and size, as certain chromosomes.

2. relating to or characterized by homomorphism; homomorphous.

hō·mō·mor'phiṣm, n. [homo-, and Gr. morphē, form.]

1. similarity in form.

2. homomorphy.

3. the possession of perfect flowers of a single type or kind.

4. similarity between an insect's larva and its matured form.

hō·mō·mor'phous, a. of or characterized by homomorphism.

hō'mō·mor·phy, n. [from homo-, and Gr. morphē, form.] in biology, external resemblance without actual relationship in structure or origin: said of organs or organisms.

hō·mon'ō·mous, a. relating to homonomy.

hō·mon'ō·my, n. [Gr. homonomos, under the same laws; homos, the same, and nomos, law.] homology; specifically, the homology of parts having a transverse axis.

hom'ō·nym, n. [L. homonymus; Gr. homōnymos, having the same name; homos, the same, and onyma, onoma, name.]

1. a word which agrees with another in pronunciation but differs from it in signification, origin, and, usually, spelling (e.g., bore and boar).

2. either of two people with the same name; a namesake.

hō·mō·nym'iç, a. homonymous.

hō·mon'y·mous, a. [L. homonymus.]

1. of, or having the nature of, a homonym.

2. having the same name.

hō·mon'y·mous·ly, adv. in a homonymous manner.

2. in music, (a) formerly, unison, or music written, sung, or played in unison; (b) music in which a single voice carries the melody, often with an accompaniment in chords; monody; monophony: opposed to polyphony.

hō·mō·phyl'iç, a. [Gr. homophylia, sameness of race; homos, the same, and phylē, race, family.] in biology, of or pertaining to homophyly.

hō·moph'y·ly, n. homology traceable to common ancestry.

hō'mō·plaṣ·my, n. [homo-, and Gr. plasma, anything formed, from plassein, to form, mold.] the condition or quality of being related in characteristics which are not derived from common descent but from similarity of environment.

hom'ō·plăst, n. [homo-, and Gr. plastos, formed, from plassein, to form, mold.]

1. in biology, a part agreeing in shape with some other part, but having a distinct nature.

2. anything having a structure like that of another, but of different origin.

hō·mō·plas'tiç, a. denoting those homologies which arise in consequence of tissues similar in character being subjected to similar influences. Such homologies may arise between groups whose common ancestry is too remote to be credited with the transmission of the characters.

hō'mō·plas·ty, n. in biology, the process of forming homologous tissues.

hō·mop'lă·sy, n. homology not traceable to common origin: opposed to homogeny.

hō·mō·pō'lăr, a. [homo-, and Gr. polos, a pole.] in promorphology, having equal poles: said of organic forms with a definite number of transverse axes.

hō·mō·pol'iç, a. homopolar.

hō·mop'tĕr, n. a member of the Homoptera.

Hō·mop'te·rà, n.pl. [Mod. L., from Gr., from homos, the same, and pteron, wing.] in zoology, an order of insects with sucking mouth parts and wings of uniform thickness throughout, including the Aphidæ, Coccidæ, Cicadidæ, Fulgoridæ, etc.

HOMOPTERA (Cicada diardi) hō·mop'tĕr·ăn, n. same as homopter.

hō·mop'tĕr·ous, a. of or pertaining to the Homoptera.

hō·mor'găn, n. in biology, a similarly organized part or system; a homoplastic part.

Hō'mō să'pi·enṣ, [L.] the one and only living species of the genus Homo; man.

hō"mō·sex'ū·ăl, a. [homo-, and L. sexualis, from sexus, sex.] of or pertaining to homosexuals or homosexuality; characterized by sexual inclination toward those of the same sex.

hō"mō·sex'ū·ăl, n. one whose sexual inclination is toward those of the individual's own sex rather than the opposite sex.

hō"mō·sex"ū·al'i·ty, n. 1. sexual desire for those of the same sex.

2. sexual relations between individuals of the same sex.

Opposed to heterosexuality.

hō·mō·spōr'ous, a. [homo-, and Gr. sporos, spore, seed.] in botany, having asexual spores of one kind only: opposed to heterosporous.

hō'mō·stŷled, a. [homo-, and Gr. stylos, pillar.] in botany, denoting species in which the individuals bear styles of the same length and character: opposed to heterostyled.

hō·mō·tax'e·ous, a. homotaxial.

hō·mō·tax'i·ăl, a. relating to homotaxis.

hō·mō·tax'iç, a. relating to homotaxis.

hō·mō·tax'is, n. [homo-, and Gr. taxis, arrangement.] the same arrangement; specifically, in geology, agreement in the arrangement of layers, or in the fossil content, in different localities of strata which occupy the same place or position in the stratified systems, but which may or may not be contemporaneous.

hō'mō·tax·y, n. homotaxis.

hō·mō·thĕr'mous, a. [homo-, and Gr. thermē, heat.] in zoology and physiology, having the same degree of bodily temperature at all times.

hō·mot'ō·nous, a. [L. homotonus; Gr. homotonos, of the same tone; homos, the same, and tonos, tone.] of the same tone; unvarying in tenor.

hō·mot'rō·păl, a. homotropous.

hō·mot'rō·pous, a. [Gr. homotropos, having the same turn; homos, the same, and trepein, to turn.] turned in the same direction: in botany, said of the radicle of a seed when turned toward the hilum.

hō'mō·tŷ·păl, a. homotypic.

hō'mō·tȳpe, n. [homo-, and Gr. typos, impression, form, type.] in biology, an organ or part having a structure agreeing with some fundamental form; as, the foot is a homotype of the hand.

hō·mō·typ'iç, a. relating to or of the nature of a homotype.

hō·mō·typ'iç·ăl, a. homotypic.
