Hȳ·blae'ăn, a. pertaining to the ancient city of Hybla, in Sicily, famous for the honey produced in the neighboring locality.

hyb'ō·dont, a. [Gr. hybos, humpbacked, and odous, odontos, tooth.] pertaining to or resembling a genus, Hybodus, of fossil fishes allied to the sharks.

hyb'ō·dont, n. a fish of the genus Hybodus.

Hyb'ō·dus, n. a genus of fossil fishes that prevailed throughout the Triassic and Cretaceous periods. They are allied to the sharks.

hȳ'brid, n. [L. hybrida, hibrida, offspring of tame sow and wild boar.]
1. the offspring of two animals or plants of different races, varieties, species, etc.
2. anything of mixed origin.
3. in linguistics, a word made up of elements from different languages (e.g., hydroplane, sociology).

hȳ'brid, a. of, or having the nature of, a hybrid.

hȳ'brid·iṣm, n. 1. the production of hybrids; crossbreeding; interbreeding.
2. the quality, condition, or fact of being hybrid.

hȳ'brid·ist, n. one who hybridizes.

hȳ·brid'i·ty, n. the quality or condition of being hybrid.

hȳ'brid·ī·zą·ble, a. capable of producing a hybrid by crossing with some other species, race, etc.

hȳ''brid·ī·zā'tion, n. the act of hybridizing or the state of being hybridized.

hȳ'brid·īze, v.t.; and v.i.; hybridized, pt., pp.; hybridizing, ppr. to produce or cause to produce hybrids; to interbreed; to cross.

hȳ'brid·ī·zēr, n. one who hybridizes.

hȳd'ąġe, n. hidage. [Obs.]

hȳ·dan·tō'iç, a. relating to hydantoin.

hȳ·dan'tō·in, n. [Gr. hydōr, water, and allantoin.] in chemistry, a sweetish crystalline compound, $C_3H_4N_2O_2$, found in beet juice.

hȳ'dą·tid, n. [Gr. hydatis (-idos), a drop of water, a water vesicle, from hydōr, hydatos, water.] a cyst containing watery fluid and the larvae of a tapeworm, sometimes found in the body of both animals and man.

HYDATID
(Echinococcus granulosus) hydatid of Morgagni; in anatomy, one of the small pedunculated growths found beside the head of the epididymis and formed mainly of connective tissue and blood vessels.

hȳ·dat'i·fọrm, a. [Gr. hydatis (-idos), a water vesicle, and L. forma, form.] having the form of a hydatid.

hȳ·dą·tiġ'e·nous, a. [Gr. hydatis (-idos), a hydatid, and -genēs, producing.] producing or bearing hydatids.

hȳ'dą·toid, a. and n. [Gr. hydōr, hydatos, water, and eidos, form.] like water; aqueous.

hȳ'dą·toid, n. the aqueous humor of the eye. [Obs.]

hyd·nō·çär'pāte, a. a salt or ester of hydnocarpic acid.

hyd·nō·çär'piç, a. [from Mod. L. Hydnocarpus, name of a genus of trees (from Gr. hydnon, edible fungus, and karpos, fruit); and -ic.] designating or of an acid, $C_{15}H_{27}COOH$, found in the oil of a tree that grows in India and Malaysia, used in treating leprosy.

hydr-, see hydro-.

Hȳ'drą, n.; pl., for 2, 4, 6, and 7, hȳ'drąș, hȳ'drae, [ME. and OFr. ydre; also ME. ydra; both from L.; Gr. hydra, water serpent.]
1. in Greek mythology, the nine-headed serpent slain by Hercules: when any one of its heads was cut off, it was replaced by two others.
2. [h–] any persistent or ever-increasing evil with many sources and causes.
3. a southern constellation outlining a serpent.
4. [h–] any of a group of very small freshwater animals, with a tubelike body and a mouth surrounded by tentacles.
5. the genus to which these fresh-water animals belong.
6. [h–] the sexual bud or medusa of a hydroid.
7. [h–] a spirit thermometer having an extended bulb which makes it register quickly.

HYDRA

hȳ·drąch'nid, n. [hydr-, and Gr. achnē, foam.] in zoology, a water mite parasitic upon mollusks, fishes, and water insects.

hȳ·drac'id, n. [hydr-, and L. acidus, sour, sharp.] in chemistry, an acid containing no oxygen, as HCl, H_2S, HCN, etc.

hȳ·drą·çryl'iç, a. [hydr-, and acrylic.] designating or of a colorless, crystalline acid, $C_3H_4O_2$, which, when heated, separates into water and acrylic acid.

hȳ·draç·tin'i·ăn, n. [hydr-, and Gr. aktis (-inos), a ray.] in zoology, any marine hydroid of the genus Hydractinia or kindred genera, usually found growing upon the shells of mollusks and forming a mosslike coating.

hȳ·drae'mi·ą, n. same as hydremia.

hȳ'drą·gogue (-gog), a. [LL. hydragogus; Gr. hydragōgos, conducting water, a water carrier; hydōr, water, and agōgos, leading, from agein, to lead.] causing a discharge of water, especially from the intestine.

hȳ'drȧ·gogue, n. any cathartic or other substance causing a discharge of water from the intestine.

Hȳ'drȧ·head·ed (-hed-), a. having many heads, like the Hydra of Greek mythology; hard to suppress; ever growing in monstrosity: said of evils of all kinds.

hȳ·dram'ide (or -id), n. [hydr-, and amide.] in chemistry, a crystalline substance produced by the action of ammonia on certain aldehydes.

hȳ·dram'ine, n. in chemistry, one of a series of organic bases of a viscous nature, produced by the action of ammonia on ethylene oxide.

Hȳ·drān'ġē·ȧ, n. [hydr-, and Gr. angeion, a vessel.]
1. a genus of shrubs or herbs of the family Saxifragaceæ, with opposite leaves and large, showy clusters of white, blue, or pink flowers. The common species, Hydrangea hortensis, is a native of China.
2. [h-] a plant of this genus.

hȳ'drănt, n. [Gr. hydrainein, to irrigate, from hydōr, water.]
1. a device with suitable valves and a spout by which water is raised and discharged from a water main; a fire plug.
2. a water faucet. [Dial.]

hȳ'dranth, n. [hydr-, and Gr. anthos, a flower.] in zoology, any of the feeding branches (zooids) of a hydroid colony.

hȳ·drär'ġil·līte, n. [hydr-, and Gr. argillos, white clay.] a variety of gibbsite.

hȳ·drär'ġy·rāte, a. hydrargyric. [Rare.]

hȳ·drär·ġy·rī'ȧ·sis, n. same as hydrargyrism.

hȳ·drär·ġyr'iç, a. [from L. hydrargyrus (see hydrargyrum); and -ic.] of or containing mercury; mercuric.

hȳ·drär'ġy·rism, n. [from hydrargyrum, and -ism.] poisoning with mercury; mercurialism.

hȳ·drär'ġy·rum, n. [L. hydrargyrus; Gr. hydrargyros, quicksilver; hydōr, water, and argyros, silver.] in chemistry, mercury: symbol, Hg (no period).

hȳ·drär·thrō'sis, n. [hydr-, and Gr. arthrōsis, articulation, from arthron, joint.] in pathology, the accumulation of a watery deposit in the cavity of a joint.

hȳ·dras'tin, n. same as hydrastine.

hȳ·dras'tine (or -tin), n. [from Mod. L. Hydrastis, name of the genus of herbs (from Gr. hydōr, water); and -ine.] a bitter, crystalline alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{21}O_6N$, extracted from the rootstalk of the goldenseal and used in treating dyspepsia, constipation, etc.

hȳ'drāte, n. [hydr-, and -ate.] a compound formed by the chemical combination of water and some other substance; as, plaster of Paris, $2CaSO_4 \cdot H_2O$, is a hydrate.

hȳ'drāte, v.t. and v.i.; hydrated, pt., pp.; hydrating ppr. 1. to become or cause to become a hydrate.
2. to combine with water.

hȳ'drā·ted, a. formed by chemical combination with water.

hȳ·drā'tion, n. a hydrating; chemical combination with water to form a hydrate.

hȳ·drau'liç, a. [Fr. hydraulique; L. hydraulicus; Gr. hydraulikos, pertaining to a water organ, from hydraulis, hydraulos, a water organ, a water pipe; hydōr, water, and aulos, a tube, pipe.]
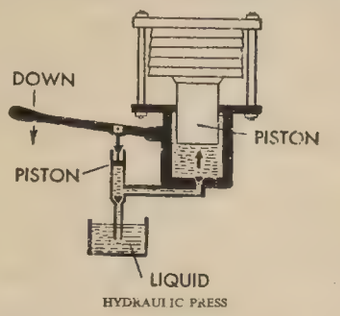
1. of hydraulics.
2. operated by the movement and force of liquid; as, a hydraulic brake or press.
3. setting or hardening under water; as, hydraulic mortar.

hydraulic brake; a brake in which the brake bands are actuated by liquid under pressure.

HYDRAULIC BRAKE

hydraulic cement; a cement having the property of becoming hard under water; a cement made of hydraulic lime.



hydraulic elevator; an elevator operated by the pressure or weight of water.

hydraulic lime; a species of lime that hardens in water, used for cementing under water.

hydraulic main; in gasworks, a pipe containing water through which the gas is passed in the process of purification.

hydraulic mining; a method of mining by washing the ore out of the bank with a powerful jet of water, as from a hose.

hydraulic press; a machine in which practical application is made of the well-known principle in hydrostatics that a pressure exerted on any part of the surface of a liquid is transmitted undiminished to every part of the liquid and in all directions. By this apparatus great power is obtained for compressing objects or drawing or lifting great weights.

HYDRAULIC PRESS

hydraulic ram; a machine by which the momentum or weight of falling water can be made available for raising a portion of the water to a considerable height.

hydraulic valve; an inverted cup which is lowered over the upturned open end of a pipe, the edge of the cup being submerged in water, forming a water seal and closing the pipe against the passage of air or gases.

hȳ·drau'liç·ăl, a. same as hydraulic.

hȳ·drau'liç·ăl·ly, adv. by hydraulic power.

hȳ·drau·lic'i·ty, n. the property possessed by certain cements, of solidifying under water.

hȳ·drau'li·çŏn, n. [Gr. hydraulikon (supply organon, organ), a hydraulic organ.] in music, an old form of organ in which water was used to regulate the pressure of the air: also called hydraulic organ.

hȳ·drau'lics, n. pl. [construed as sing.], [from hydraulic.] the branch of physics having to do with the mechanical properties of water and other liquids and with the application of these properties in engineering.

hȳ'drȧ·zin, n. same as hydrazine.

hȳ'drȧ·zine (or -zin), n. [hydr-, and az-, and -ine.] a colorless liquid base, NH_2NH_2, which forms a monohydrate ($NH_2NH_2 \cdot H_2O$) and a series of salts.

hȳ·draz'ō-, [hydr-, and azo-.] a combining form meaning containing the group -HNNH- combined with two hydrocarbon radicals.

hȳ·drȧ·zō'āte, n. any salt of hydrazoic acid.

hȳ·drȧ·zō'iç, a. [hydr-, and azo-, and -ic.] designating or of a colorless, volatile acid, HN_3, from which the hydrazoates are derived.

hȳ·drē'mi·ȧ, n. an excess of water in the blood.

hȳ·dren·ceph'ȧ·loid, a. same as hydrocephaloid.

hȳ·dren'tĕr·ō·cēle, n. [hydr-, and Gr. enteron, intestine, and kēlē, a tumor.] a hernial tumor, whose contents are intestinal, with the addition of water.

hȳ'dri·ȧ, n.; pl. hȳ'dri·ae, [L., from Gr. hydria, a waterpot, from hydōr, water.] a large Greek vase, with three handles and a capacious body.

hȳ'dri·ad, n. [Gr. hydrias (-ados), of or from the water, from hydōr, water.] in mythology, a water nymph.

hȳ'driç, a. relating to or containing hydrogen.

-hȳ'driç, [see hydric.] a combining form used to indicate the presence of (a specified number of) hydroxyl radicals or replaceable hydrogen atoms in the molecule, as in monohydric.

hȳ'drid, n. same as hydride.

hȳ'drīde, (or -drid), n. [hydr-, and -ide.] a compound of hydrogen with either another element or a radical.

hȳ'dri·form, a. [L. hydra, a hydra, and forma, form.] formed like a hydra.

hȳ·drī'ō·dāte, n. a salt of hydriodic acid.

hȳ·dri·od'iç, a. [hydr-, and iodic.] designating or of an acid, HI, produced by the direct combination of hydrogen and iodine or by the hydrolysis of phosphorus tri-iodide: it is a colorless gas, readily soluble in water, and forms salts called iodides.

hȳ'drō-, [from Gr. hydōr, water.] a combining form meaning (a) water, as in hydrostatic, hydrometer; (b) in chemistry, the presence of hydrogen, as in hydrocyanic. Also, before a vowel, hydr-.

hȳ·drō'ȧ, n. [hydr-, and Gr. ōon, an egg.] a chronic inflammatory disease of the skin characterized by pustules, vesicles, etc., and intense itching.

hȳ"drō·bȧ·rom'e·tẽr, n. [hydro-, and Gr. baros, weight, pressure, and metron, a measure.] a device for measuring the depth of sea water by its pressure.

Hȳ·drō·braṅ·çhi·ā'tȧ, n.pl. [hydro-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] a division of gastropods, containing species which breathe only water.

hȳ·drō·braṅ'çhi·āte, a. pertaining to the Hydrobranchiata; breathing water only; breathing through gills.

hȳ·drō·brō'māte, n. [hydrobromic and -ate.] a salt of hydrobromic acid.

hȳ·drō·brō'miç, a. [hydro-, and bromic.] designating or of an acid, HBr, produced by the direct combination of hydrogen and bromine or by the hydrolysis of phosphorus tribromide: it is a colorless gas, readily soluble in water, and forms salts called bromides.

hȳ·drō·çär'bŏn, n. any compound containing only hydrogen and carbon: benzene and methane are hydrocarbons.

hȳ·drō·çär·bō·nā'ceous, a. consisting of or characteristic of a hydrocarbon.

hȳ·drō·cạu'lus, n.; pl. hȳ·drō·cạu'lī, [hydro-, and Gr. kaulos, stem.] the main stem of the coenosarc of a hydrozoan.

hȳ'drō·cēle, n. [Gr. hydrōkēlē, hydrocele; hydōr, water, and kēlē, a tumor.] a collection of watery fluid in a cavity of the body, especially in the scrotum or along the spermatic cord.

hȳ·drō·cel'lū·lōse, n. a substance derived from cellulose by the action of hydrochloric acid, and produced in the form of a fine powder.

hȳ"drō·cē·phal'iç, a. pertaining to hydrocephalus.

hȳ·drō·ceph'ȧ·loid, a. characteristic of or resembling hydrocephalus.
hydrocephaloid disease; a condition of coma sometimes developed in children when in a state of exhaustion following diarrhea.

hȳ·drō·ceph'ȧ·ious, a. same as hydrocephaloid.

hȳ·drō·ceph'ȧ·lus, n. [Mod. L.; Gr. hydrokephalon, water in the head; hydōr, water, and kephalē, head.] a condition characterized by an abnormal increase in the amount of fluid in the cranium, causing enlargement of the head, wasting away of the brain, and loss of mental powers.

hȳ·drō·ceph'ȧ·ly, n. same as hydrocephalus.

hȳ"drō·cē·ram'iç, a. [hydro-, and Gr. keramikos, from keramos, earthenware.] allowing liquids to escape through pores: said of certain kinds of pottery which, by evaporation from their surface, cool the liquids they contain.

Hȳ"drō·çhȧ·rid'ē·ae, n.pl. a family of monocotyledonous floating and creeping plants, inhabiting ditches, rivers, and lakes in various parts of the world: written also Hydrocharidaceæ.

Hȳ·droçh'ȧ·ris, n. [Gr. hydrocharēs, delighting in water, hydōr, water, and chairein, to rejoice.] the typical genus of the Hydrocharideæ; the frogbit.

hȳ·drō·çhī'non, n. same as hydroquinone.

hȳ·drō·çhlō'rāte, n. any salt of hydrochloric acid.

hȳ·drō·çhlō'riç, a. [hydro-, and chloric.] designating or of an acid, HCl, produced by the combination of hydrogen and chlorine or by the reaction of salt and sulfuric acid, and existing as a colorless gas or as a colorless solution of this gas in water: it forms salts called chlorides. The aqueous solution of hydrochloric acid is also called muriatic acid.

hȳ·drō·çhlō'rīde, hȳ·drō·çhlō'rīd (or -rid), n. a compound of hydrochloric acid and an organic base.

Hȳ·drō·çor·ăl·lī'nae, n.pl. [hydro-, and Gr. korallion, coral.] a suborder of the Hydroidea, similar to the corals.

hȳ"drō·çō·tär'nīne (or -nin), n. an alkaloid derived from opium.

Hȳ·drō·çot'y·lē, n. [hydro-, and Gr. kotylē, a cavity, cup.] a genus of plants of the order Umbelliferæ, the water pennyworts.

hȳ·drō·cȳ'ȧ·nāte, n. cyanide. [Obs.]

hȳ"drō·cȳ an'iç, a. [hydro-, and cyanic.] designating or of a weak, highly poisonous acid, HCN, produced by the combination of hydrogen and cyanogen, and existing as a colorless liquid with the smell of peach blossoms or bitter almonds: also called prussic acid.

hȳ·drō·cȳ′ȧ·nīde (or -nid), n. a compound of hydrocyanic acid.

hȳ′drō·cyst, n. [hydro-, and Gr. kystis, a bladder.] in zoology, a process, a sort of feeler attached to the coenosarc of the Physophoridæ, a family of oceanic Hydrozoa.

Hȳ·drō·dic′ty·on, n. [hydro-, and Gr. diktyon, a net.] a genus of green-spored algae, so called because, when full-grown, they resemble a purse composed of a network of threads.

hȳ″drō·dȳ·nam′iç, a. [hydro-, and Gr. dynamis, power, and -ic.]
1. having to do with hydrodynamics.
2. of, derived from, or operated by, the action of water, etc. in motion.

hȳ″drō·dȳ·nam′iç·ăl, a. same as hydrodynamic.

hȳ″drō·dȳ·nam′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the branch of physics having to do with the motion and action of water and other liquids; dynamics of liquids.

hȳ″drō·dȳ·nȧ·mom′ē·tẽr, n. [hydro-, and Gr. dynamis, power, and metron, a measure.] a device to measure the speed of a moving fluid by determining the pressure it exerts.

hȳ″drō·ē·leç′triç, a. [hydro-, and Gr. ēlektron, amber.] producing, or having to do with the production of, electricity by water power or by the friction of water or steam.

hȳ″drō·ē·leç·tric′i·ty, n. electricity produced by water power or by the friction of water or steam.

hȳ″drō·ex·traçt′ŏr, n. [hydro-, and L. extractus, pp. of extrahere, to draw out.] a centrifugal machine to remove moisture.

hȳ″drō·fer″ri·cȳ·an′iç, a. same as ferricyanic.

hȳ″drō·fer″rō·cȳ·an′iç, a. same as ferrocyanic.

hȳ″drō·flū·or′iç, a. [hydro-, and fluoric.] designating or of an acid, H_6F_6, H_4F_4, H_2F_2, or HF (depending on the temperature), produced by the reaction of concentrated sulfuric acid with solid fluorides, and existing as a colorless, fuming, corrosive liquid with a boiling point of 19°C.: it reacts with silicates and is therefore used in etching glass.

hȳ·drō·flū·ō·sil′i·çāte, n. same as fluosilicate.

hȳ″drō·flū″ō·si·lic′iç, a. same as fluosilicic.

hȳ′drō·foil, n. 1. a winglike surface which, when moved through a liquid, develops forces the direction and magnitude of which depend upon the speed of motion and the position of the foil with respect to the line of movement.
2. any of the winglike structures attached to the hull of some watercraft: at a certain speed the hull is lifted above the water and the craft skims along on the hydrofoils at great speeds.
3. a craft with such hydrofoils.

hȳ′drō·fūġe, a. [hydro-, and L. fugare, to put to flight, from fugere, to flee.] shedding water.

hȳ″drō·gal·van′iç, a. of, caused by, or belonging to electricity generated by the action of liquids; as, a hydrogalvanic current. [Rare.]

hȳ′drō·ġen, n. [Fr. hydrogène; see hydro- and -gen: coined in 1787 by the Fr. chemist G. de Morveau, in reference to the generation of water from the combustion of hydrogen.] an inflammable, colorless, odorless, gaseous chemical element, the lightest of all known substances: symbol, H; atomic weight, 1.0080; atomic number, 1.
heavy hydrogen; same as deuterium.
hydrogen bomb; an extremely destructive kind of atom bomb operating on the principle of atomic fusion, in which the atoms of a heavy isotope of hydrogen are fused into helium under the extraordinarily intense heat and pressure created by explosion of a nuclear-fission unit in the bomb: also H-bomb.
hydrogen bond; a bond formed through a hydrogen atom between an electronegative atom or group and a similar atom or group attached to a different molecule.
hydrogen dioxide; same as hydrogen peroxide.
hydrogen ion; the positively charged ion in all acids: symbol, H^+. hydrogen oxide; water, H_2O.
hydrogen peroxide; an unstable compound, H_2O_2, existing as a slightly blue, sirupy liquid, often used in dilute solution as a bleaching or disinfecting agent.
hydrogen sulfide; an inflammable, poisonous gas, H_2S, with the characteristic odor of rotten eggs.

hȳ′drō·ġen·āte″, v.t.; hydrogenated, pt., pp.; hydrogenating, ppr. to combine with, treat with, or expose to the action of, hydrogen; as, oil is hydrogenated to produce a solid fat.

hȳ″drō·ġen·ā′tion, n. the process of hydrogenating or the state of being hydrogenated.

hȳ′drō·ġen·īde, hȳ′drō·ġen·īd (or -id), n. a hydride.

hȳ·drō·ġē′ni·um, n. [from hydrogen.] hydrogen. [Obs.]

hȳ′drō·ġen·īze, v.t.; hydrogenized, pt., pp.; hydrogenizing, ppr. to hydrogenate.

hȳ·drog′e·nous, a. of or containing hydrogen.

hȳ·drog′nō·sy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. gnōsis, knowledge.] a description of or treatise upon the world's waters.

hȳ·drog′rȧ·phẽr, n. [hydro-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] an expert or specialist in hydrography.

hȳ·drō·graph′iç, hȳ·drō·graph′iç·ăl, a. of or relating to hydrography.

hȳ·drog′rȧ·phy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. graphein, to write.]
1. that branch of science which has for its object the study, mapping, and description of seas, lakes, rivers, and other waters, especially with reference to their usefulness for the purposes of navigation and commerce.
2. the parts of a map that represent surface waters.

hȳ·drog′ū·ret, n. [*hydro*gen and -uret.] a hydride. [Obs.]

hȳ′droid, a. [hydra and -oid.]
1. like a hydra or polyp.
2. of, relating to, or resembling the Hydroidea or Hydrozoa.

hȳ′droid, n. one of the Hydroidea or Hydrozoa; especially, any of the polyps, which reproduce by budding.

Hȳ·droi′dē·ȧ, n.pl. [Gr. hydroeidēs, like water; hydōr, water, and eidos, form.] the typical subclass of Hydrozoa. They have an alimentary region provided with an adherent disk and prehensile tentacles.

hȳ″drō·ki·net′iç, a. [hydro- and kinetic.] of the motions of fluids or the forces producing or influencing such motions.

hȳ″drō·ki·net′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], [hydro-, and kinetics.] the branch of physics having to do with the motions of fluids.

hȳ·drō·loġ′iç, hȳ·drō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. pertaining to hydrology.

hȳ·drol′ō·ġist, n. an expert in hydrology.

hȳ·drol′ō·ġy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] the science of water, its properties, distribution phenomena, and laws; especially, the study of underground sources of water.

hȳ·drol′y·sis, n.; pl. hȳ·drol′y·sēs [hydro-, and -lysis.] a chemical reaction in which a compound reacts with the ions of water (H^+ and OH^-) to produce a weak acid, a weak base, or both.

hȳ′drō·lyte, n. any substance undergoing hydrolysis.

hȳ·drō·lyt′iç, a. of or causing hydrolysis.

hȳ′drō·lyze, v.t. and v.i.; hydrolyzed, pt., pp.; hydrolyzing, ppr. to undergo or cause to undergo hydrolysis.

hȳ·drō·mag′nē·sīte, n. [hydro-, magnesium, and -ite.] a white, chalklike variety of magnesium carbonate.

hȳ′drō·man·cy, n. [ME. idromancie; L. hydromantia; Gr. hydromanteia, from hydōr, water, and manteia, divination.] divination by the observation of water.

hȳ·drō·mā′ni·ȧ, n. [hydro-, and Gr. mania, madness.] in pathology, an abnormal craving for water.

hȳ·drō·man′tiç, a. pertaining to hydromancy.

hȳ″drō·mē·çhan′i·çăl, a. of hydromechanics.

hȳ″drō·mē·çhan′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [hydro-, and Gr. mēchanikos, mechanic, from mēchanē, a machine.] the branch of physics having to do with the laws governing the motion and equilibrium of fluids.

hȳ″drō·mē·dū′sȧ, n.; pl. hȳ″drō·mē·dū′sae, a jellyfish (medusa) formed from a budding growth on a hydroid.

Hȳ″drō·mē·dū′sae, n.pl. [hydro-, and Gr. Medousa, the Gorgon of classic mythology.] a subclass of hydrozoans comprehending those related to the Hydra by reason of reproduction by lateral gemmation.

hȳ′drō·mel, n. [L. hydromel or hydromeli; Gr. hydromeli, a kind of mead made of water and honey; hydōr, water, and meli, honey.] a liquor consisting of honey diluted with water. Before fermentation, it is called simple hydromel; after fermentation, it is called vinous hydromel, or mead.

hȳ·drō·met·ăl·lūr′ġiç·ăl, a. of or pertaining to hydrometallurgy.

hȳ·drō·met·ăl·lūr′ġiç·ăl·ly, adv. in a hydrometallurgical manner.

hȳ·drō·met′ăl·lūr·ġy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. metallourgos, working in metals, a miner, metallon, a mine, metal, and ergon, work.] the act of assaying or reducing ores by washing out the insoluble matter with various liquid reagents; also, any process for this purpose.

hȳ·drō·met·ȧ·mor′phiṣm, n. [hydro-, and Gr. metamorphōsis, a metamorphosis.] metamorphism of rocks by addition and depletion of material in solution in water.

hȳ·drō·mē′tē·ŏr, n. [hydro-, and Gr. meteōron, a meteor.] any atmospheric phenomenon dependent for its production upon the vapor of water, as rain, hail, snow, etc.

hȳ·drō·mē″tē·ọr·ō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. of or pertaining to hydrometeorology.

hȳ·drō·mē″tē·ọr·ol′ō·ġy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. meteōrologia, meteorology.] the branch of meteorology which concerns itself with water in the atmosphere in the form of rain, clouds, snow, hail, etc.

hȳ·drom′e·tẽr, n. [hydro-, and Gr. metron, a measure.]
1. in physics, an instrument for determining the specific gravities of liquids. Hydrometers are variously constructed. A very common type consists of a graduated stem of uniform diameter and cross section, a bulb to cause it to float in the fluid, and a weight or counterpoise to cause the stem to stand upright as it floats. On being placed in a liquid it sinks until a certain point on the scale is on a level with the surface of the liquid, and from the reading of the scale at that point the specific gravity of the liquid is ascertained either directly or by a simple calculation.

HYDROMETER

2. an instrument for measuring the flow of water in rivers, conduits, etc.

hȳ·drō·met′riç, hȳ·drō·met′riç·ăl, a. 1. pertaining to a hydrometer or to the determination of the specific gravity of fluids.
2. made by a hydrometer; as, hydrometric observations.
hydrometric pendulum; an instrument consisting of a hollow ball suspended from the center of a graduated quadrant, and held in a stream to mark by its deflection the velocity of the current.

hȳ·drō·met′rō·ġraph, n. [hydro-, and Gr. metron, a measure, and graphein, to write.] an instrument to determine and record the amount of water discharged in a specific time.

hȳ·drom′e·try, n. [hydro-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] measurement of the specific gravity of liquids by the use of a hydrometer.

hȳ·drō·mī′çȧ, n. [hydro-, and L. mica, a crumb, grain.] a substance resembling muscovite in composition, but containing more water. It is a variety of potash mica.

hȳ″drō·mon′ō·plāne, n. [hydro- and monoplane.] an airplane with one main wing, capable of landing on and taking off from water.

hȳ″drō·mō′tŏr, n. [hydro-, and L. motor, from movere, to move.] a motor impelled by the reaction of a jet of water.

hȳ′drō·nȧut, n. [hydro-, and astro*naut*.] in the United States Navy, a person trained to operate deep submergence vehicles.

hȳ″drō·neg′ȧ·tive, a. [hydro-, and negative.] in biology, characterized by negative hydrotropism.

hȳ″drō·nē·phrō′sis, n. [hydro-, and Gr. nephros, a kidney, and -osis.] a distention of the ureter and the renal pelvis caused by obstruction of the outflow of the urine.

hȳ″drō·nē·phrot′iç, a. of or pertaining to hydronephrosis; affected with hydronephrosis.

hȳ′drō·nette, n. [Fr.] a small pump or sprinkler designed for use in a garden.

hȳ·dron′iç, a. of or having to do with hydronics.

hȳ·dron′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [hydr-, and electr*onics*.] the science dealing with electrically controlled systems for heating, cooling, etc. by the forced circulation of liquids or vapors.

hȳ″drō·nī′triç, a. [hydro- and nitric.] pertaining to nitric or hydronitric acids.

Hȳ″drō·pā·ras′tā·tae, n.pl. a religious sect of the early church, the Aquarians.

hȳ′drō·path, n. one who practices or believes in hydropathy; a hydropathist.

hȳ·drō·path′iç, hȳ·drō·path′iç·ăl, a. of, by, or using hydropathy.

hȳ·drop′ȧ·thist, n. one who advocates or practices hydropathy.

hȳ·drop′ȧ·thy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. pathos, suffering, disease.] the treatment of disease by the use of water; specifically, a method of treatment that attempts to cure all diseases by the external or internal use of much water.

hȳ·drō·per·i·çär′di·um, n. [hydro-, and Gr. perikardion, the pericardium.] in pathology, cardiac dropsy.

hȳ″drō·per″i·pneū·mō′ni·ȧ (-nū-), n. [hydro-, and Gr. peripneumonia; peri, around, about, and pneumōn, the lung.] inflammation of the lungs complicated with dropsy.

hȳ·drō·per″i·tō·nē′um, n. [hydro-, and Gr. peritonaion, peritoneum.] in pathology, dropsy of the peritoneal cavity; ascites.

hȳ′drō·phāne, n. [hydro-, and Gr. phanos, clear.] in mineralogy, an opaque variety of opal that becomes translucent or transparent by immersion in water.

hȳ·droph′ȧ·nous, a. [hydrophane and -ous.] translucent or transparent when wet.

hȳ′drō·phid, n. [hydr-, and Gr. ophis, a snake.] a venomous sea snake of the family Hydrophidæ.

hȳ·drō·phō′bi·ȧ, n. [LL., from Gr. hydrophobia, hydrophobia; hydōr, water, and phobos, fear.]
1. an abnormal fear of water.
2. [from the symptomatic aversion to, and inability to swallow, water and other liquids.] rabies (especially in man).

hȳ·drō·phō′biç, a. [Gr. hydrophobikos, from hydrophobia, hydrophobia.] of or having hydrophobia.

hȳ′drō·phoid, a. pertaining to Hydrophidæ, a family of sea snakes.

hȳ′drō·phōne, n. [hydro-, and -phone.]
1. an instrument for detecting, and registering the distance and direction of, sound transmitted through water.
2. an instrument for detecting the flow of water in a pipe.

Hȳ·droph′ō·rȧ, n.pl. [Gr. hydrophoros, water-bearing; hydōr, water, and pherein, to bear, carry.] one of the three divisions into which Huxley and other authors divide the Hydrozoa, the other two being the Discophora and the Siphonophora. The members are, in all cases except that of Hydra, fixed ramified hydrosomes, on which many hydranths and gonophores are developed.

hȳ′drō·phōre, n. [Gr. hydrophoros, water-carrying; hydōr, water, and pherein, to bear.] an instrument for obtaining for examination small quantities of the water of a river, a lake, or an ocean from any specific depth.

Hȳ″drō·phyl·lā′cē·ae, n. [hydro-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and -aceæ.] an order of plants known as waterleaves, including nearly 20 genera and 125 species, the majority of which are American.

hȳ″drō·phyl·lā′ceous, a. of or relating to the Hydrophyllaceæ.

hȳ·drō·phyl′li·um, n.; pl. hȳ·drō·phyl′li·ȧ or hȳ·drō·phyl′li·ums, [hydro-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] in zoology, an overlapping transparent appendage or leaflike plate which protects the polypites in some oceanic hydrozoans, as the Siphonophora: called also bract.

Hȳ·drō·phyl′lum, n. [hydro-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] a genus of American perennial marsh herbs with blue or white flowers, the type of the Hydrophyllaceæ, or waterleaf family.

hȳ′drō·phȳte, n. [hydro-, and Gr. phyton, a plant.] an aquatic plant; a plant which lives and grows in water or very wet earth.

hȳ·droph·y·tol′ō·ġy, n. [hydro-, and Gr. phyton, a plant, and -logia, from legein, to speak.] that branch of botany which relates to water plants.

hȳ·droph′y·tŏn, n.; pl. hȳ·droph′y·tȧ, [hydro-, and Gr. phyton, a plant.] the connective element in a hydroid colony of zooids.

hȳ·droph′y·tous, a. characteristic of a hydrophyton.

hȳ·drop′iç, a. [L. hydropicus; Gr. hydrōpikos, dropsical, from hydrops, dropsy, from hydōr, water.] of or having dropsy; dropsical.

hȳ·drop′iç·ăl, a. hydropic.

hȳ·drop′iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a hydropical manner.

hȳ′drō·pī·pĕr, n. [hydro-, and L. piper, a pepper.] in botany, Polygonum hydropiper, a species of knotweed water pepper; smartweed.

hȳ′drō·plāne, n. [hydro-, and plane.]
1. a small, light motorboat with a flat bottom rising in steps to the stern so that it can skim along the water's surface at high speeds.
2. a seaplane.
3. an attachment for an airplane that enables it to glide along on the water.
4. a horizontal rudder used to submerge or raise a submarine.

hȳ′drō·plāne, v.i. 1. to drive or ride in a hydroplane.
2. to skim along like a hydroplane.

HYDROPLANE

hȳ″drō·plan′ū·lȧ, n. [hydro-, and L. planus, flat.] in zoology, an intermediate larval stage of a coelenterate, occurring between the planula and actinula stages.

hȳ·drō·pneū·mat′iç, a. [hydro-, and Gr. pneumatikos, of or caused by wind or air, from pneuma, wind, air.] of, pertaining to, or produced by the action of water and air; involving the combined action of water and air or gas.

hȳ·drō·pon′iç, a. of or grown by hydroponics.

hȳ″drō·pon′içs, n. [hydro-, and Gr. ponos, labor.] the science of growing plants in solutions containing the necessary minerals, instead of in soil.

hȳ″drō·poṣ′i·tive, a. in biology, pertaining to or characterized by positive hydrotropism.

hȳ′drō·pot, n. [Gr. hydropotēs, from hydōr, water, and pinein, to drink.] one who drinks water; a water drinker.

Hȳ·drop′ō·tēṣ, n. [Gr. hydropotēs, water drinker.] in zoology, a genus of small, Chinese deer.

hȳ·drō·prō·pul′sion, n. [hydro-, and E. propulsion.] propulsion by means of a hydromotor.

hȳ′drop·sy, n. same as dropsy.

Hȳ″drop·tē·rid′ē·ae, n.pl. [hydro-, and Gr. pteris (-idos), a fern.] a class or group of cryptogams including the families Marsiliaceæ and Salviniaceæ; the water ferns: called also Rhizocarpeæ.

hȳ′drō·pult, n. [hydro-, and L. catapulta, a catapult.] a force-pump worked by hand power; a garden pump: written also hydrapult.

hȳ·drō·quīn′ōl, n. hydroquinone.

hȳ″drō·qui·nōne′, n. [hydro- and quinone.] a white, crystalline substance, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$, used in medicine and photography.

hȳ·dror′ȧ·çhis, hȳ·dror′rhȧ·çhis, n. [hydro-, and Gr. rhachis, spine.] in pathology, an abnormal collection of fluid within the spinal column; spinal dropsy.

hȳ·drō·rhī′zȧ, n.; pl. hȳ·drō·rhī′zae or hȳ·drō·rhī′zȧs, [hydro-, and Gr. rhiza, a root.] in zoology, the adherent base or proximal extremity of a hydrozoan.

hȳ·drō·rhī′zăl, a. pertaining to or characteristic of a hydrorhiza.

hȳ·dror·rhē′ȧ, hȳ·dror·rhoe′ȧ, n. [Gr. hydrorroia, a flowing of water; hydōr, water, and rhoia, from rhein, to flow.] in pathology, a discharge of watery fluid.

hȳ′drō·sąlt, n. [hydro-, and salt.] a salt of a hydracid; also, an acid salt.

hȳ′drō·sçōpe, n. [Gr. hydroskopion, a water clock; hydōr, water, and skopein, to view.]
1. an ancient water clock consisting of a cylindrical graduated tube, from which water slowly escaped through an opening at the bottom, measuring the lapse of time.
2. an instrument for indicating the humidity of the air; a hygroscope. [Obs.]
3. an instrument which makes it possible to examine objects far below the surface of a body of water, consisting of a long tube fitted with various optical instruments at the end.

hȳ′drō·sol, n. [hydro- and solution.] a colloidal dispersion in which water is the dispersing medium.

hȳ′drō·sōle, n. a hydrosol.

hȳ·drō·sō′mȧ, n.; pl. hȳ·drō·sō′mȧ·tȧ, [hydro-, and Gr. soma (-atos), body.] in zoology, the entire colony of a hydrozoan: written also hydrosome.

hȳ·drō·sō′măl, a. of or relating to a hydrosoma.

hȳ·drō·som′ȧ·tous, a. of or relating to a hydrosoma.

hȳ′drō·sōme, n. same as hydrosoma.

hȳ′drō·sphēre, n. [hydro- and -sphere.]
1. all the water on the surface of the earth.
2. the moisture in the atmosphere surrounding the earth.

hȳ′drō·stat, n. [Gr. hydrostatēs, a hydrostatic balance.]
1. an apparatus for preventing the explosion of a steam boiler.
2. an electrical device for showing or regulating the level of water in a reservoir, etc.

hȳ·drō·stat′iç, hȳ·dro·stat′iç·ăl, a. [Gr. hydrostatēs, a hydrostatic balance; hydōr, water, and statos, standing.] relating to hydrostatics; pertaining to or in accordance with the principles of the equilibrium of fluids.
hydrostatic balance; see under balance.
hydrostatic paradox; the principle that any quantity of water however small can be made to balance any weight however great.
hydrostatic press; same as hydraulic press: see under hydraulic.

hȳ·drō·stat′iç·ăl·ly, adv. according to hydrostatics or hydrostatic principles.

hȳ″drō·stą·ti′ciăn, n. one versed in hydrostatics. [Rare.]

hȳ·drō·stat′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] that branch of physics which has to do with the pressure and equilibrium of water and other liquids; statics of liquids.

hȳ·drō·sul′fīde, n. [*hydro*gen, and sulfide.] a compound containing the HS radical and some other radical or element, produced by the partial replacement of the hydrogen in hydrogen sulfide: also called bisulfide.

hȳ·drō·sul′fīte, n. 1. any salt of hydrosulfurous acid; hyposulfite.
2. loosely, sodium hyposulfite, a bleaching agent.

hȳ·drō·sul′fū·ret, n. a hydrosulfide. [Obs.]

hȳ·drō·sul′fū·ret·ted, a. combined with sulfuretted hydrogen.

hȳ·drō·sul′fūr·ous, a. [*hydro*gen, and sulfurous.] hyposulfurous.

hȳ·drō·tel′lū·rāte, n. [*hydro*gen, *tellur*ium, and -ate.] a salt formed by the combination of an acid composed of hydrogen and tellurium with a salifiable base.

hȳ·drō·tel·lū′riç, a. of or pertaining to, or obtained from, hydrogen and tellurium.

hȳ·drō·thē′çą, n. [Gr. hydrothēkē, a reservoir for water; hydōr, water, and thēkē, a case, box.] a small chitinous cup, in which each polypite of the Sertularida and Campanularida is protected.

hȳ·drō·ther·ą·peū′tiç, a. of hydrotherapeutics, or hydrotherapy.

hȳ·drō·ther·ą·peū′tiçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [hydro-, and Gr. therapeutikos, from therapeuein, to attend, serve.] same as hydrotherapy.

hȳ·drō·ther′ą·py, n. the treatment of disease by the internal or external use of water.

hȳ·drō·thēr′măl, a. [hydro-, and Gr. thermos, hot.] of or relating to hot water; especially, having to do with the action of hot water in producing geological changes by dissolving mineral substances and redepositing them when cooled.

hȳ·drō·thō′rax, n. [hydro-, and Gr. thōrax, the chest.] dropsy in the chest; a condition characterized by an abnormal amount of watery fluid in the pleural cavity.

hȳ·drot′iç, a. [Gr. hydrotēs, moisture, from hydōr, water.] causing a discharge of water.

hȳ·drot′iç, n. a medicine that removes water or phlegm.

hȳ·drot′iç·ăl, a. hydrotic.

hȳ·drō·trop′iç, a. of or showing hydrotropism.

hȳ·drot′rō·pişm, n. the tendency of a plant to grow in the direction of moisture.

hȳ′drous, a. [Gr. hydōr, water, and -ous.]
1. watery.
2. containing water, especially water of crystallization, in chemical combination.

hȳ·drox′īde, n. [hydro and oxide.] a compound consisting of an element or radical combined with the hydroxyl radical (OH).

hȳ·drox′y, a. hydroxyl.

hȳ·drox′y-, a combining form meaning hydroxyl: preferred to oxy-.

hȳ·drox·y·kē′tōne, n. a ketone containing the hydroxyl radical.

hȳ·drox′yl, n. [*hydro*gen, *oxy*gen, and -yl.] the monovalent radical OH, present in all hydroxides.

hȳ″drox·yl·am′ine, n. [hydroxyl and amine.] a colorless, odorless base, NH_2OH, used as a reducing agent.

Hȳ·drō·zō′ȧ, n.pl. either of the two divisions of Cœlenterata, small aquatic and chiefly marine animals having a sacklike body consisting of two layers of cells, and a mouth that opens directly into the body cavity.

hȳ·drō·zō′ăn, hȳ·drō·zō′ăl, a. pertaining to the hydrozoa.

hȳ·drō·zō′ăn, n. an animal of the Hydrozoa: hydras, certain jellyfishes, polyps, etc. are hydrozoans.

hȳ·drō·zō′on, n.; pl. hȳ·drō·zō′ȧ, [hydro-, and Gr. zoon, an animal.] in zoology, any of a class of radiated animals forming with the Actinozoa the subkingdom Cœlenterata: the Hydrozoa are divided into four subclasses—Hydroidea, Siphonophora, Discophora, and Lucernarida.

Hȳ′drus, n. [Gr. hydros, a water snake.]

1. a genus of water snakes, now generally called Hydrophis, the type of the family Hydridæ.

2. a constellation of the southern hemisphere.

hȳ·ē′măl, a. same as hiemal.

hȳ′e·māte, v.i. same as hiemate.

hȳ·e·mā′tion, n. same as hiemation.

hȳ·ē′nȧ, n. [L. hyæna; Gr. hyaina, a hyena, an animal which has a bristly mane like the hog's from hys, a hog.] any of a group of wolflike, flesh-eating animals of Africa and Asia, with a bristly mane, short hind legs, and a characteristic shrill cry: hyenas feed on carrion and are considered cowardly: also spelled hyaena.

SPOTTED HYENA

hȳ·ē′nȧ dog, 1. an African animal, Lycaon pictus, somewhat resembling a hyena: called also hunting dog, painted hyena.

2. an aardwolf. [Obs.]

hȳ·en′i·form, a. having the form or characteristics of the hyena or of its family, the Hyenidæ.

hȳ·ē′noid, a. like a hyena; hyeniform.

hȳ″ē·tăl, a. [Gr. hyetos, rain, from hyein, to rain.] of or relating to rain or its distribution with reference to different regions.

hȳ′ē·tō-, [from Gr. hyetos, rain, from hyein, to rain.] a combining form meaning rain, rainfall, as in hyetograph, hyetology: also, before a vowel, hyet-.

hȳ″ē·tō·grȧph, n. [hyeto-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] a chart showing the average annual rainfall.

hȳ″ē·tō·graph′iç, hȳ″ē·tō·graph′iç·ăl, a. relating to hyetography.

hȳ·ē·tog′rȧ·phy, n. [hyeto-, and Gr. -graphia, from graphein, to write.] the branch of meteorology having to do with the geographical distribution of rainfall.

hȳ·ē·tō·loj′iç·ăl, a. of hyetology.

hȳ·ē·tol′ō·gy, n. [hyeto-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] the branch of meteorology which treats of rain, snow, etc.

hȳ·ē·tom′ē·tēr, n. [hyeto-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] a rain gauge; a device that measures the rainfall at a given place.

hȳ″ē·tō·met′rō·grȧph, n. [hyeto-, and Gr. metron, a measure, and graphein, to write.] a hyetometer with an attachment for registering the amount of rainfall for each unit of time.

Hȳ·ġē′ȧ (hī-jē′ȧ), n. [Gr. hygieia, goddess of health, from hygieia, health, soundness of body, from hygiēs, healthy, sound.]

1. in Greek mythology, the goddess of health, daughter of Aesculapius.

2. one of the small planets or asteroids between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, discovered in 1849.

Hȳ·ġē′ăn, a. 1. relating to Hygeia, the goddess of health.

2. [h–] relating to health and its preservation.

hȳ′ġē·ist, hȳ′ġiē·ist, n. a hygienist.

hȳ′ġiēne (or -ji-ēn), n. [Fr. hygiène, from Gr. hygiainein, to be sound, healthy, from hygiēs, sound, healthy.] the science of health and its maintenance; system of principles for the preservation of health and prevention of disease.

hȳ·ġi·en′iç, hȳ·ġi·en′iç·ăl, a. 1. of hygiene or health.

2. promoting health; healthful; sanitary.

hȳ·ġi·en′iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a hygienic manner; so as to preserve health.

hȳ·ġi·en′içs, n.pl. [consirued as sing.] the science of health; hygiene; sanitary science.

hȳ′ġi·en·ist, n. an expert in hygiene, or the science of health.

hȳ·ġi·ol′ō·ġy, n. [Gr. hygieia, health, and -logia, from legein, to speak.] the science of or a treatise on the preservation of health.

hȳ′grine, n. [Gr. hygros, wet, moist, and -ine.] in chemistry, a pungent oil extracted from coca leaves.

hȳ′grō-, [from Gr. hygros, wet, moist.] a combining form meaning wet, moisture, as in hygrometer, hygroscope: also, before a vowel, hygr-.

hȳ′grō·dēik, n. [hygro-, and Gr. deiknynai, to show, point out.] in physics, a hygrometer fitted with wet and dry bulb thermometers and a gauge which automatically records the relative humidity.

hȳ′grō·grȧph, n. [hygro-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] an instrument which registers automatically the variations of atmospheric moisture.

hȳ·grō′mȧ, n.; pl. hȳ·grō′mȧ·tȧ, hȳ·grō′mȧṣ, [hygro-, and Gr. -ōma, a suffix meaning a tumor.] in medicine, a swelling resulting from a distended cyst or sac filled with serum.

hȳ·grom′ȧ·tous, a. like or affected by a hygroma.

hȳ·grom′ē·tēr, n. [hygro-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] an instrument for measuring humidity.

hȳ·grō·met′riç, hȳ·grō·met′riç·ăl, a. 1. pertaining to hygrometry.

2. readily absorbing or attracting moisture from the air, as potash.

hȳ·grom′ē·try, n. the branch of physics having to do with measuring the amount of moisture in the air.

hȳ·groph′ȧ·nous, a. [hygro-, and Gr. -phanēs, from phainein, to show.] in botany, transparent or watery when moist, and opaque when dry.

hȳ·groph′i·lous, a. [hygro-, and Gr. philos, loving.] flourishing in damp places, as a snail or a water lily.

hȳ′grō·plaṣm, n. [hygro-, and Gr. plasma, anything formed, molded.] in biology, the fluid element of cell protoplasm, as distinguished from stereoplasm.

hȳ′grō·ṣcōpe, n. [hygro-, and Gr. skopein, to view.] an instrument for recording changes in atmospheric humidity.

hȳ·grō·ṣcop′iç, hȳ·grō·ṣcop′iç·ăl, a. 1. of, measurable by, or according to a hygroscope.

2. having the property of absorbing or attracting moisture from the air; hygrometric.

hȳ″grō·ṣcō·pic′i·ty, n. the quality of being hygroscopic (sense 2).

hȳ·grō·stat′içs, n. [hygro-, and Gr. statikos, causing to stand, from histanai, to cause to stand.] the science of measuring or comparing degrees of moisture.

hȳ′ing, v. alternative present participle of hie.

hȳke, n. a haik. [Obs.]

Hyk′sōs, n. pl. [Gr. Hyksōs, from Egypt. Hiq shasu, chief of the nomadic tribes.] foreign kings of Egypt who formed the XVth and XVIth dynasties (1750?–1580? B.C.): also called Shepherd Kings.

hȳl-, see hylo-.

hȳ′lȧ, n. [Mod. L., from Gr. hylē, wood.] a tree frog: loosely called tree toad.

hȳ′lae·ō·ṣaur, n. a fossil lizard of the genus Hylæosaurus.

Hȳ·lae·ō·ṣau′rus, n. [Gr. hylaios, of the wood or forest, and sauros, a lizard.] a genus of gigantic fossil lizards discovered in the Wealden formation of Tilgate Forest in England and characterized by a series of enormous spines, or bony dermal scutes, along the ridge of the back.

hȳ·lär′chi·căl, a. [Gr. hylē, wood, matter, and archikos, ruling, from archein, to rule.] presiding over matter. [Rare.]

hȳ′lē, n. [Gr. hylē, wood, matter.] matter: a term used in philosophy.

hȳ′leġ, n. [Ar.] in astrology, the planet which rules at the time of one's nativity.

hȳ′li·çiṣm, n. see hylism.

hȳ′li·cist, n. [Gr. hylē, wood, matter.] a materialist; a believer in the theory of hylism.

Hȳ′li·dae, n.pl. [Gr. hylē, wood, forest, matter, and -idæ.] a family of amphibian vertebrates, distinguished from the true frogs by having dilated disks, or suckers, covered with viscid matter at the tips of their toes, which enable them to climb trees; the tree toads or tree frogs.

hȳ′liṣm, n [Gr. hylē, wood, matter.] in metaphysics, a theory which regards matter as the principle of evil: also called hylicism.

hȳ′lō-, [from Gr. hylē, wood, matter.] a combining form meaning: (a) wood, as in hylophagous; (b) matter, substance, as in hylozoism. Also, before a vowel, hyl-.

hȳ′lō·bāte, n. [Gr. hylobatēs, one who inhabits or haunts the woods; hylē, wood, forest, and batēs, one who mounts, from bainein, to go.] in zoology, an ape of the genus Hylobates; the long-armed ape or gibbon.

Hȳ·lob′ȧ·tēṣ, n. a genus of apes including the gibbons.

hȳ·pēr·phā′şi·à (-zhi-). n. [hyper-, and Gr. phasis, a speaking, from phanai, to speak.] in medicine, loss of control of the organs of articulation; deranged utterance.

hȳ·pēr·phys′iç·ăl, a. [hyper-, and Gr. physikos, natural, pertaining to nature, from physis, nature.] supernatural; beyond physical laws.

hȳ″pēr·pi·tū′i·tà·rişm, n. 1. excessive activity of the pituitary gland or its anterior lobe.
2. the condition of excessive skeletal growth caused by this.

hȳ·pēr·plā′şi·à, n. [hyper-, and Gr. plasis, a forming, from plassein, to form, mold.] in pathology, excessive formation of tissue; an increase in the size of a tissue or organ owing to an increase in the number of cells.

hȳ·pēr·plas′iç, a. hyperplastic.

hȳ·pēr·plas′tiç, a. pertaining to or characterized by hyperplasia.

hȳ·pērp·nē′à, n. [hyper-, and Gr. pnoē, pnoiē, breath.] panting or abnormally rapid respiration.

hȳ″pēr·pȳ·ret′iç, a. of or having hyperpyrexia.

hȳ″pēr·pȳ·rex′i·à, n. [hyper-, and Gr. pyressein, to be feverish, from pyretos, fever.] in pathology, an abnormally high fever.

hȳ·pēr·sen′si·tive, a. abnormally or excessively sensitive.

hȳ′pēr·spāce, n. [hyper-, and L. spatium, space.] an imaginary space regarded as having more than three dimensions.

hȳ′pēr·sthēne, n. [hyper-, and Gr. sthenos, strength: so called from its difficult frangibility.] an orthorhombic, dark-colored, foliated brittle mineral of pearly luster: it is a silicate of iron and magnesium: also called Labrador hornblende.

hȳ·pēr·sthē′ni·à, n. [hyper-, and Gr. sthenos, strength.] in pathology, a condition of abnormal excitement of the vital phenomena.

hȳ·pēr·sthen′iç, a. relating to hypersthenia; overstimulated.

hȳ·pēr·sthen′iç, a. composed of or containing hypersthene.

hȳ·pēr·sthē′nīte, n. a dark-colored granitelike rock composed of hypersthene and labradorite.

hȳ·pēr·ten′sion, n. 1. any abnormally high tension.
2. abnormally high blood pressure, especially in the arteries, or a diseased condition of which this is the chief symptom.

hȳ·pēr·ten′sive, a. of or having high blood pressure.

hȳ·pēr·ten′sive, n. a hypertensive person.

hȳ·pēr′thē·sis, n. [Gr. hyperthesis, a passing over, transposition, from hypertithenai; hyper, over, and tithenai, to set, put.] in philology, the removal of a letter from the syllable to which it originally belonged to another syllable immediately preceding or following it; transposition or metathesis; thus, in Greek, melaina is used for melania.

hȳ·pēr·thet′iç·ăl, a. [Gr. hyperthetikos, superlative; hyper, over, and tithenai, to place.] hyperbolical, superlative. [Obs.]

hȳ·pēr·thyr′i·ŏn, n. [Gr. hyperthyrion; hyper, over, and thyra, door.] in architecture, a cornice over a door or window.

hȳ·pēr·thȳ′roid, a. of, characterized by, or having hyperthyroidism.

hȳ·pēr·thȳ′roid, n. a person having hyperthyroidism.

hȳ·pēr·thȳ′roid·işm, n. 1. excessive activity of the thyroid gland.
2. the condition caused by this or by taking too much thyroid extract, characterized by a rapid pulse, sleeplessness, etc.

hȳ·pēr·ton′iç, a. 1. having abnormally high tension or tone, especially of the muscles.
2. having an osmotic pressure higher than that of an isotonic solution.

hȳ″pēr·tri·çhō′sis, n. [hyper-, and Gr. thrix, trichos, hair, and -osis.] excessive growth of hair of a part or the whole of the body.

hy·pẽr·trī·di·men'sion·ăl, a. having more than three dimensions.

hy·pẽr·troph'iç, a. producing or tending to produce hypertrophy; of or pertaining to hypertrophy.

hy·pẽr·troph'iç·ăl, a. hypertrophic.

hy·pẽr'trō·phous, a. exhibiting hypertrophy.

hy·pẽr'trō·phy, v.t. and v.i.; hypertrophied, pt., pp.; hypertrophying, ppr. to increase abnormally in size.

hy·pẽr'trō·phy, n. [hyper-, and Gr. trophē, nutrition, from trephein, to nourish.]
1. an increase in the size of a tissue or organ independent of the general growth of the body: opposed to atrophy.
2. in botany, the excessive development of one part of a plant to the detriment of another.

hy·pẽr·typ'iç, a. surpassing the type; showing abnormal development of characteristics.

hy·pẽr·typ'iç·ăl, a. hypertypic.

hyp·es·thē'si·a, n. [Mod. L.; hyp-, and esthesia.] impaired power of sensation; especially, diminished sensitivity to touch.

hy·pē'thrăl, a. same as hypaethral.

hy'phà, n.; pl. hy'phae, [Gr. hyphē, a weaving, a web, from hyphainein, to weave.] any of the threadlike parts making up the mycelium of a fungus.

hy'phăl, a. in botany, relating to or of the nature of a hypha.

hy·phē'mi·à, hy·phae'mi·à, n. [Gr. hyphaimos, suffused with blood, bloodshot; hypo, under, and haima, blood.]
1. deficiency of blood.
2. extravasation of blood.

hy'phen, n. [LL., from Gr. hyphen, a hyphen, lit., under one; hypo, under, and hen, neut. acc. of heis, one.] a mark (-) used between the parts of a compound word or the syllables of a divided word, as at the end of a line.

hy'phen, v.t.; hyphened, pt., pp.; hyphening, ppr. to hyphenate.

hy'phen·āte, n. an American of foreign birth or origin, as a German-American: sometimes an opprobrious term.

hy'phen·āte, v.t.; hyphenated, pt., pp.; hyphenating, ppr. 1. to join or separate by a hyphen.
2. to write or print with a hyphen.

hy'phen·āte, a. hyphenated.

hy·phen·ā'tion, n. 1. a hyphenating or being hyphenated.
2. a hyphen.

hy·phen'iç, a. of or pertaining to the hyphen.

hy·phen·i·zā'tion, n. hyphenation.

hy'phen·īze, v.t.; hyphenized, pt., pp., hyphenizing, ppr. to hyphenate.

hy·pher'e·sis, hy·phaer'e·sis, n. [Gr. hyphairesis, a taking away, from hyphairein, to take away from under; hypo, under, and hairein, to take.] in philology, the act of removing a letter or syllable from a word.

hy'phō·drōme, a. [Gr. hyphē, a web, and dromos, a running.] in botany, having the veins partially or wholly concealed in the mesophyl: said of leaves.

Hy"phō·mȳ·cē'tēș, n.pl. [Gr. hyphē, a web, and mykēs, mykētos, a mushroom.] in botany, a division of fungi with naked spores, often septate, and a floccose thallus. It is composed of microscopic plants growing as molds over dead or living organic substances.

hy·phō·mȳ·cē'tous, a. pertaining to, relating to, or characteristic of the Hyphomycetes, or microscopic vegetable molds; as, hyphomycetous fungi.

hy'pi-, same as hypo-.

hy·pid"i·ō·mor'phiç, a. [hypi-, and Gr. idiomorphos, of particular form; idios, particular, and morphē, form.] in crystallography, idiomorphic in part.

hy·pid"i·ō·mor'phiç·ăl·ly, adv. in a hypidiomorphic manner.

hyp·i·nō'sis, n. [hypi-, and Gr. is, inos, strength, fiber.] in pathology, a diminished amount of fibrin in the blood: opposed to hyperinosis.

hyp·i·not'iç, a. lacking fibrin; characterized by hypinosis.

hypn-, see hypno-.

hyp·nà·gog'iç, a. [hypn-, and Gr. agōgē, a leading, from agein, to lead.] leading to sleep; hypnotic.

hyp'nō-, hypn-, [from Gr. hypnos, sleep.] a combining form used to signify sleep or hypnotism, as in *hypno*phobia, *hypno*genesis.

hyp'nō·bāte, n. [hypno-, and Gr. bainein, to go.] a somnambulist; a sleepwalker.

hyp·nō·bā'ti·à, n. somnambulism.

hyp'nō·cyst, n. [hypno-, and Gr. kystis, a bladder.] in biology, a dormant encysted protozoan which does not form spores.

hyp·nō·ġen'e·sis, n. [hypno-, and Gr. genesis, generation, production.] the production of a hypnotic condition.

hyp·nō·ġē net'iç, a. pertaining to or producing the hypnotic trance.

hyp·nō·ġē·net'iç·ăl, a. hypnogenetic.

hyp·nō·ġen'iç, a. hypnogenetic.

hyp·nog'e·ny, n. hypnogenesis.

hyp'noid, a. resembling hypnosis.

hyp·noid'ăl, a. hypnoid.

hyp·nō·log'iç·ăl, a. relating to hypnology.

hyp·nol'ō·ġist, n. one versed in hypnology.

hyp·nol'ō·ġy, n. [hypno-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] the science dealing with sleep and hypnosis.

hyp'nōne, n. [Gr. hypnos, sleep, and -one.], acetophenone, a compound possessing hypnotic properties.

hyp·nō·phō'bi·à, n. [hypno-, and Gr. phobos, fear.] morbid fear of sleep.

Hyp'nos, n. in Greek mythology, the god of sleep: identified by the Romans with Somnus.

hyp·nō'sis, n.; pl. hyp·nō'sēș, [Gr. hypnos, sleep, and -osis.] a sleeplike condition psychically induced, usually by another person, in which the subject loses consciousness but responds, with certain limitations, to the suggestions of the hypnotist.

hyp·nō·spō·rangе', n. same as hypnosporangium.

hyp"nō·spō·ran'ġi·um, n.; pl. hyp"nō·spō·ran'ġi·à, [hypno-, and Gr. spora, a spore, and angeion, a cup.] in botany, a sporangium containing or producing hypnospores.

hyp'nō·spōre, n. [hypno-, and Gr. spora, a spore, generation.] in botany, a resting spore; a spore that requires a period of repose, or quiescence, before germinating.

hyp·nō·ther'à·py, n. [hypno-, and therapy.] the treatment of disease by hypnotism.

hyp·not'iç, a. [Fr. or L.; Fr. hypnotique; L. hypnoticus; Gr. hypnōtikos, tending to sleep, from hypnos, sleep.]
1. causing sleep; soporific.
2. of, having the nature of, or inducing hypnosis.
3. easily hypnotized.
4. under the influence of hypnosis.

hyp·not'iç, n. 1. any drug causing sleep; a soporific.
2. a hypnotized person or one easily hypnotized.

hyp·not'iç·ăl·ly, adv 1. in a hypnotic manner.
2. by hypnotism.

hyp'nō·tiș̇m, n. [Gr. hypnos, sleep.]
1. the act or practice of inducing hypnosis.
2. the science of hypnosis.

hyp'nō·tist, n. one who hypnotizes.

hyp·nō·tis'tiç, a. pertaining to or inducing hypnotism.

hyp·nō·tī'zà·ble, a. that can be hypnotized.

hyp"nō·ti·zā'tion, n. the act of hypnotizing or the condition of being hypnotized.

hyp'nō·tīze, v.t.; hypnotized, pt., pp.; hypnotizing, ppr. 1. to put into a hypnotic state; to make hypnotic.
2. to entrance, as by eloquent speech. [Colloq.]

hyp'nō·tī·zĕr, n. one who induces hypnotism.

hyp'nō·toid, a. [hypno-, and Gr. eidos, form.] similar to hypnotism in cause or in effect.

Hyp'num, n. [Gr. hypnon, moss.] in botany, a very large genus of mosses distributed through all parts of the world.

Hyp'nus, n. Hypnos.

hy'pō-, [Gr. hypo-, from hypo, under, less than.] a prefix meaning: (a) under, beneath, below, as in *hypo*dermic, *hypo*cycloid; (b) less than, subordinated to, as in *hypo*taxis; (c) in chemistry, having a lower state of oxidation, as in *hypo*phosphorous. Also, before a vowel, hyp-. Opposed to hyper-.

hy'pō, n. 1. a hypodermic. [Colloq.]
2. a hypochondriac. [Slang.]

hy'pō, n.; pl. hy'pōș, in photography, sodium thiosulfate, $Na_2S_2O_3 \cdot 5H_2O$, a colorless, crystalline salt used in solution as a fixing agent.

hy·pō·ā'ri·ăn, a. in anatomy, relating to a hypoarion.

hy·pō·ā'ri·ŏn, n.; pl. hy·pō·ā·ri·à, [hypo-, and Gr. ōarion, dim. of ōon, an egg.] one of a pair of oval-shaped ganglia lying beneath the optic lobes of typical fishes.

hy'pō·blast, n. [hypo-, and Gr. blastos, a germ, shoot.] in biology, the innermost layer of the blastoderm: called also endoblast, entoderm, endoderm, and hypoderm.

hy·pō·blas'tiç, a. pertaining to a hypoblast; endodermal.

hy·pob'ō·lē, n. [Gr. hypobolē, a throwing under, suggesting, from hypoballein, to throw under; hypo, under, and ballein, to throw.] in rhetoric, a mentioning and refuting of arguments in anticipation of them.

hy·pō·brañ'chi·ăl, a. [hypo-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] situated under the gills.

hy·pō·brañ'chi·ăl, n. a bone or cartilage under the gills of fishes.

hy·pō·brō'mīte, n. [hypo-, and bromous, and -ite.] in chemistry, a compound containing hypobromous acid.

hy·pō·brō'mous, a. [hypo-, and Gr. brōmos, bad-smelling.] in chemistry, designating an unstable acid the salts of which are called hypobromites.

hy·pō·bū'li·à, n. [hypo-, and Gr. boulē, will.] deficiency of will power.

hy'pō·çärp, hy·pō·çär'pi·um, n. [hypo-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] in botany, the enlargement of the stem or receptacle beneath the fruit.

hy·pō·çär·pō·ġē'ăn, a. same as hypogeal.

hyp'ō·çaust, n. [L. hypocaustum; Gr. hypokauston, a room heated by a furnace below; hypo, under, and kaiein, to burn.] among the ancient Greeks and Romans, a space below the floor into which hot air was piped from a furnace to warm the rooms.

hy"pō·çhlōr·hy'dri·à, [hypo-, and Gr. chlōros, green, and hydōr, water.] in medicine, a condition resulting from a deficiency of hydrochloric acid in the gastric juice.

hy·pō·çhlō'rīte, n. [hypochlorous and -ite.] in chemistry, a salt of hypochlorous acid: calcium hypochlorite is the chief constituent of bleaching powder.

hy"pō·çhlō'rous, a. [hypo-, and Gr. chlōros.] in chemistry, of or pertaining to an unstable acid, HClO, known only in solution and used as a bleaching and oxidizing agent.

hy"pō·çhlōr·ū'ri·à, n. in medicine, an abnormal condition marked by low chloride content in the urine.

hyp·ō·çhon'dri·à, n. [LL., from Gr. hypochondria, pl. of hypochondrion, the soft part of the body below the cartilage and above the navel; hypo, under, and chonaros, cartilage: so called because the condition was supposed to have its seat in this region.] in medicine, a state of depression and anxiety regarding one's own state of health, often with imaginary illnesses.

hyp·ō·çhon'dri·aç, hyp"ō·çhon·drī'à·çăl, a. 1. pertaining to or in the region of the hypochondrium.
2. affected, characterized, or produced by hypochondria.
The hypochondriac, melancholy complexion of us islanders. —Berkeley.
3. producing melancholy or low spirits.

hyp·ō·çhon'dri·aç, n. one affected with hypochondria.

hyp"ō·chon·drī'à·çăl, a. same as hypochondriac.

hyp"ō·çhon·drī'à·çăl·ly, adv. in a hypochondriac manner.

hyp"ō·chon·drī'à·ciș̇m, n. same as hypochondria.

hyp"ō·chon·drī'à·sis, n. same as hypochondria.

hyp·ō çhon'dri·um, n.; pl. hyp·ō·çhon'dri·à, [L. hypochondrium; Gr. hypochondrion; hypo, under, and chondros, cartilage.] in anatomy, either of the two lateral and superior regions of the abdomen under the cartilages of the false ribs, and to the right and left of the epigastrium.

hyp·ō·çhon'dry, n. same as hypochondrium.

hyp'ō·cist, n. [Gr. hypokistis, a plant growing on the roots of the cistus; hypo, under, and kistos, the cistus.] an inspissated juice obtained from a plant, Cytinus hypocistis: it is used as an astringent.

hyp·ō·çlī'di·um, n.; pl. hyp·ō·çlī'di·à, [hypo-, and Gr. kleidion, a little key, dim. of kleis, a key.] the median process at the junction of the clavicles of a bird, as shown in the wishbone of a chicken: also written hypocleidium.

hyp"ō·çō·ris'tiç, a. [Gr. hypokoristikos; hypo, under, and korizesthai, to caress.] of, or having the nature of, a pet name, as a diminutive or term of endearment.

hy·pō·çot'yl, n. [abbrev. of hypocotyledonous.] the part of the axis, or stem, below the cotyledons in the embryo of a plant.

hȳ·pō·crā·ter'i·form, a. [Gr. hypokratērion, the stand of a mixing bowl, and L. forma, form.] tubular below, but suddenly expanding into a flat border at the top; salver-shaped.

HYPOCRATERIFORM COROLLA

hȳ″pō·crā·ter·i·mor'phous, a. [Gr. hypokratērion, the stand of a mixing bowl, and morphē, form.] same as hypocrateriform.

hy·poc'ri·sy, n. [LL. hypocrisis; Gr. hypokrisis, a reply, acting a part, feigning, from hypokrinesthai, to play a part, pretend; hypo, under, and krinesthai, to contend, dispute.] a feigning to be what one is not; the acting of a false part; a deception as to real character and feeling, especially in regard to morals and religion.

hyp'ō·crite, n. [Gr. hypokritēs, one who answers, plays a part, a pretender, from hypokrinesthai, to answer, play a part, hypo, under and krinesthai, to dispute, contend.] one who feigns to be what he is not; especially, one who pretends to be pious, virtuous, etc. without really being so.

And the hypocrite's hope shall perish.

hyp·ō·crit'ic·ăl·ly, adv. in a hypocritical manner.

hyp·ō·crys'tăl·line, a. [hypo-, and Gr. krystallinos, from krystallos, ice, crystal.] having crystals embedded in an amorphous groundmass.

hȳ·pō·cȳ'cloid, n. [hypo-, and Gr. kykloeidēs; kyklos, circle, and eidos, form.] the line traced by a point on the circumference of a circle rolling on the inner circumference of a stationary circle.

hȳp·ō·dac'ty·lum, n.; pl. hȳp·ō·dac'ty·lă, [hypo-, and Gr. dactylos, a finger, a toe.] the under side of the toe of a bird: opposed to acrodactylum, the upper side.

hȳp'ō·dērm, n. same as hypoblast.

hȳp·ō·dēr'mă, n. [hypo-, and Gr. derma (-atos), skin.]
1. in botany, a layer of strengthening tissue under the epidermis.
2. in zoology, the hypodermis.

hȳp·ō·dēr'măl, a. 1. of the hypoderma or hypodermis.
2. lying under the epidermis.

hȳp″ō·dēr·mat'iç, a. same as hypodermic.

hȳp″ō·dēr·mat'iç·ăl·ly, adv. same as hypodermically.

hȳp·ō·dēr'miç, a. [hypo-, and Gr. derma (-atos), skin.]
1. of the parts under the skin.
2. injected under the skin.
3. of the hypodermis.

hȳp·ō·dēr'miç, n. 1. a hypodermic syringe.
2. a hypodermic injection.

hȳp·ō dēr'miç·ăl·ly, adv. in a hypodermic manner.

hȳp·ō·dēr'miç in·jeç'tion, the injection of a medicine or drug under the skin.

hȳp·ō·dēr'miç syr·inġe', a glass syringe attached to a hollow needle (hypodermic needle), used for giving hypodermic injections.

hȳp·ō·dēr'mis, n. 1. in annelids, a thick, tough layer under the cuticle.
2. in entomology, the soft lining of the abdominal walls of an insect.
3. in embryology, the hypoblast.

hȳp·ō·eū·teç'tiç, a. containing less of the secondary component than is present in the eutectic mixture of the same components.

hȳp·ō·ġae'iç, a. [hypo-, and Gr. gē, the earth.] derived from or belonging to the peanut; as, hypogaeic acid.

hȳp·ō·ġae'ous, a. hypogeous.

hȳp·ō·gas'triç, a. of or relating to the hypogastrium; situated below the stomach.

hȳp·ō·gas'tri·um, n.; pl. hȳp·ō·gas'tri·ă, [Gr. hypogastrion, the lower belly, neut. of hypogastrios, abdominal; hypo, under, and gastēr, belly.] that part of the abdomen below the umbilical region, especially its central part.

hȳp·ō·ġē'ăl hȳp·ō·ġae'ăl, a. [LL. hypogeus, hypogæus; Gr. hypogaios, under the earth, underground; hypo, under, and gē, gaia, earth.] in botany, growing under the ground; pertaining to plants living and fructifying beneath the surface of the ground, as the truffle.

hȳp·ō·ġē'ăn, nȳp·ō·ġae'ăn, a. same as hypogeal.

hyp'ō·ġēne, a. [hypo-, and Gr. -genēs, from gignesthai, to be born.] in geology, formed beneath the surface of the earth: applied to rocks formed and crystallized at great depths beneath the surface: opposed to epigene.

hȳ·pog'ē·nous, a. [hypo-, and Gr. -genēs, from gignesthai, to be born.] in botany, growing beneath; attached by growth to the under side: opposed to epigenous.

hȳp·ō·ġē'ous, a. same as hypogeal.

hyp·ō·ġē'um, n. [L., from Gr. hypogeion, hypogaion, an underground chamber, properly neut. of hypogeios, or hypogaios, underground; hypo, under, and gē, or gaia, ground, earth.] in architecture, formerly, all the parts of a building which were underground, as the cellar, etc.; a subterranean apartment or passage, as the catacombs or the underground parts of an amphitheater.

hȳp·ō·glos'săl, a. [hypo-, and Gr. glōssa, tongue.] in anatomy, under the tongue; lying or arranged beneath the tongue; specifically, designating or of the motor nerves of the tongue.

hȳp·ō·glos'sis, n. [Gr. hypoglōssis; hypo, under, and glōssa, the tongue.]
1. in anatomy, the under part of the tongue; in entomology, a part of the second sclerite in coleopters.
2. in pathology, (a) a tumor under the tongue; (b) a pill, etc. to be dissolved beneath the tongue.

hȳp·ō·glot'tis, n. same as hypoglossis.

hȳp·ō·glȳ·cē'mi·ȧ, n. a deficiency of sugar in the blood.

hȳ·pog'nȧ·thous, a. [hypo-, and Gr. gnathos, jaw.] having the lower jaw or mandible longer than the upper.

hyp'ō·ġyn, n. a hypogynous plant.

hȳ·pog'y·nous, a. [hypo-, and Gr. gynē, a woman, female.] in botany, growing from below the base of the ovary; having all or any of the floral organs situated below the ovary.

hȳ·pōġ'y·ny, n the state of being hypogynous.

hȳ·pō·hȳ'ăl, a. [hypo-, and hyoid, and -al.] in zoology, relating to a part of the hyoidean arch in the skeleton of fishes; as, a hypohyal bone.

hȳ″pō·ki·net'iç, a. [hypo-, and Gr. kinētikos, from kinein, to move.] in physiology, having an insufficiency of muscular activity.

hȳ·pō·nas'tiç, a. showing the effect of hyponasty.

hȳ'pō·nas·ty, n. [hypo-, and Gr. nastos, close pressed, solid, from nassein, to press or squeeze close.] in botany, a condition characterized by more rapid growth on the lower than on the upper side of an organ, causing it to curve upward.

hȳ·pō·nī'trīte, n. [hyponitrous and -ite.] in chemistry, any salt produced by combination with a hyponitrous acid.

hȳ·pō·nī'trous, a. [hypo-, and nitrogen, and -ous.] in chemistry, designating chemical compounds containing nitrogen with a lower valence than in nitrous compounds.

hyponitrous acid; an acid, $H_2N_2O_2$, whose salts are produced by reduction from nitrates: it is an active reducing and oxidizing agent.

hyp'ō·nōme, n. [Gr. hyponomē, an underground passage, properly f. of hyponomos, underground; hypo, under, and nemein, to dwell.] in zoology, the pipe or passage in the structure of a cephalopod, used in swimming by the force of water ejected.

hȳ″pō·phar·yn'ġē·ăl, a. [hypo-, and Gr. pharynx, the throat.] in zoology, pertaining to the lower part of the pharynx, especially of insects.

hȳ·pō·phar'ynx, n. [hypo-, and Gr. pharynx, the throat.] in some insects, a part attached to the lower side of the pharynx, sometimes having a long tonguelike extension.

hȳ·pō·phloe'ō·dăl, a. same as hypophloeodic.

hȳ″pō·phloe·od'iç, a. [hypo-, and Gr. phloios, bark.] in lichenology, living under the bark of a plant; also, pertaining to tissues beneath the outer bark.

hȳ·pō·phloe'ous, a. same as hypophloeodic.

hȳ·pō·phos'phāte, n. [hypophosphorous and -ate.] in chemistry, a salt of hypophosphoric acid.

hȳ·pō·phos'phīte, n. [hypophosphorous and -ite.] in chemistry, a salt of hypophosphorous acid.

hȳ″pō·phos·phor'iç, a. [hypophosphorous and -ic.] in chemistry, containing phosphorus with a lower valence than in phosphoric compounds.

hypophosphoric acid; an acid, $H_4P_2O_6$, produced by the slow oxidation of phosphorus in contact with water which holds it in solution.

hȳ·pō·phos'phŏr·ous ac'id, [hypo-, and Gr. phōsphoros, lit., light bringer; phōs, light, and pherein, to bear.] an acid, H_3PO_2, obtained from phosphorus: it is a strong reducing agent.

in'dōor bāse'ball, 1. the game of baseball, adapted for playing in a gymnasium or on a small field: the ball is larger and softer and the base lines shorter than those in baseball proper: also called softball.
2. this ball.

in'dōorṣ, adv. into, inside, or within a building or house; as, come indoors; he is employed indoors.

in·dō·phē'nōl, n. [*indi*go, and phenol.] any of a series of synthetic blue dyes derived from quinonimines.

in·dorṣ'à·ble, a. same as endorsable.

in·dor·sā'tion, n. endorsement. [Scot.]

in·dorṣe', v.t.; indorsed (-dorst), pt., pp.; indorsing, ppr. to endorse.

in·dorsed' (-dorst'), a. same as endorsed.

in·dor·see', n. same as endorsee.

in·dorṣe'ment, n. same as endorsement.

in·dorṣ'ēr, n. same as endorser.

in·dow', v.t. to endow. [Obs.]

in·dow'ment, n. endowment. [Obs.]

in·dox'yl, n. [*indi*go and hydr*oxyl.*] a compound, C_8H_7NO, produced by the hydrolysis of indican and synthesized by several methods: it is important in the synthesis of indigo.

in·dox·yl'iç, a. related to indoxyl.

In'drà, n. [Sans.] a Hindu deity originally representing the sky or heavens, and worshiped in the Vedic period as the supreme god, though he afterward assumed a subordinate place in the Indian pantheon. He is represented in various ways in painting and sculpture, especially with four arms and hands, and riding on an elephant.

INDRA

in'drâft, in'drâught (-drâft), n. 1. a drawing in; inward pull or attraction.
2. an inward flow, current, or stream.
3. an opening from the sea into the land; an inlet. [Obs.]

in'drąwn', a. drawn in; introspective.

in·drench', v.t. to overwhelm with water; to drown; to drench. [Obs.]

in'dri, n. [Fr.; false use of Malagasy indry, behold, mistaken for the name of the animal.] a large animal of the lemur family, Indris laniger, native to Madagascar.

in·dū'bi·ous, a. not dubious or doubtful; certain.

in·dū'bi·tà·ble, a. [L. indubitabilis; in- priv., and dubitabilis, doubtful, from dubitare, to doubt.] that cannot be doubted; unquestionable; evident.
Syn.—unquestionable, indisputable, undeniable, incontrovertible, irrefragable.

in·dū'bi·tà·ble, n. an indubitable statement or proposition.

in·dū'bi·tà·ble·ness, n. the state of being indubitable.

in·dū'bi·tà·bly, adv. in an indubitable manner; surely; unquestionably; without doubt.

in·dū'bi·tāte, a. not questioned; evident; certain. [Obs.]

in·dū'bi·tāte, v.t. to call in question; to surround with doubt. [Obs.]

in·dūce', v.t.; induced (-dūst'), pt., pp.; inducing, ppr. [ME. enducen; L. inducere, to lead or bring in; in, in, and ducere, to lead.]
1. to lead on to some action, condition, belief, etc., as by persuasion or argument; to prevail on; to incite; to persuade.
2. to produce; to bring on; to cause; as, a fever induced by extreme fatigue.
3. to introduce; to bring into view. [Obs.]
4. to put or draw on; to place upon. [Obs.]
5. to reach (a general rule or conclusion) by inference from particular facts.

6. in physics, to bring about (an electric or magnetic effect) in a body by exposing it to the influence or variation of a field of force.

Syn.—actuate, cause, incite, influence, instigate, persuade.

in·dūced′, a. caused; brought on; caused by induction.

induced current; in electricity, a current produced in a conductor by a variation in the intensity of the magnetic field through which it passes.

in·dūce′ment, n. 1. motive; anything that leads the mind to will or to act; incentive.

If this inducement move her not to love,
Send her a letter of thy noble deeds.
—Shak.

2. in law, an explanatory introduction in a pleading.

3. the act of inducing.

Syn.—cause, incitement, motive, reason.

in·dū′cī·ble, a. that can be induced.

in·duct′, v.t.; inducted, pt., pp.; inducting, ppr. [L. inductus, pp. of inducere, to lead or bring in; in, in, and ducere, to lead.]

1. to bring in or introduce; to initiate.

2. to place in a benefice or official position with formality or ceremony; to install.

3. (a) to bring formally into a society or organization; to initiate; (b) to bring formally into the armed forces.

4. in physics, to induce.

in·duc′tănce, n. 1. the property of an electric circuit by which a varying current in it produces a varying magnetic field that induces voltages in the same circuit or in a near-by circuit: it is measured in henrys.

2. the capacity of an electric circuit for reacting to a current produced in this way.

3. a circuit, condenser, etc. having inductance.

in·duct″ee′, n. a person inducted or being inducted.

in·duc′tē·ous, a. in electricity, made to assume polarity or change of polarity by induction.

in·duc′tile, a. not ductile; specifically, (a) that cannot be stretched, drawn, or hammered thin without breaking; (b) not easily molded; not pliant; (c) not easily led; intractable.

in·duc·til′i·ty, n. the quality or condition of being inductile.

in·duc′tion, n. [OFr. induction; L. inductio (-onis), a leading or bringing into, an introducing.]

1. an inducting or being inducted; installation; introduction; entrance; initiation.

2. an introduction or preface; an introductory scene in a play; a preamble or prologue. [Archaic.]

3. a beginning; commencement. [Obs.]

4. in logic, the process of reasoning or drawing a conclusion from particular facts or individual cases; also, the conclusion reached by such reasoning.

5. an inducing, or bringing about.

6. in physics, the act or process by which an electric or magnetic effect is produced in an electrical conductor or magnetizable body when it is exposed to the influence or variation of a field of force.

electrodynamic induction; the generation of an electric current in a conductor by the influence of another current.

electromagnetic induction; the generation of an electromotive force by the cutting of the magnetic flux, as by a moving conductor in an electric generator.

electrostatic induction; the development of an electrical charge in a body by the influence of a static charge in another body brought close to it, the induced charge being of opposite character to the inducing charge.

magnetic induction; magnetization induced in a magnetizable substance when brought into a magnetic field.

mutual induction; induction which two adjacent circuits produce on each other, due either to variations in the strength of the current in the circuits, or to variations in the distance between the circuits.

Syn.—In induction we observe a sufficient number of individual facts, and, on the ground of analogy, extend what is true of them to others of the same class, thus arriving at general principles or laws. In deduction we begin with a general truth, and seek to connect it with some individual case by means of a middle term or class of objects known to be equally connected with both. Thus we deduce the specific from the general, attributing to the former the distinctive qualities of the latter.

in·duc′tion·ăl, a. pertaining to induction; inductive.

in·duc′tion bal′ănce, an electrical apparatus for the detection of the presence of a metallic substance by the aid of induced currents. It consists essentially of two primary coils of wire placed in the circuit of a battery and microphone. Two small secondary coils are placed near them in the circuit of a telephone, and when the currents induced in them exactly neutralize or balance each other, no sound is heard in the telephone. Should the balance be disturbed as by the introduction of a piece of metal, the telephone is made to emit a sound.

in·duc′tion bridġe, a form of induction balance for measuring the value of electric resistances.

in·duc′tion çoil, a coiled apparatus made up of two coupled circuits: interruptions in the direct current in one circuit produce an alternating current of high potential in the other.

INDUCTION COIL

It consists essentially of two coils wound on a hollow cylinder, within which is a core formed of a bar of soft iron or a bundle of soft iron wires. One of the coils, called the primary coil, is connected with the battery by means of an arrangement for establishing and breaking connection with it, so as to produce temporary currents; the other, the secondary coil, is wound round the first, but carefully insulated from it, and in it is generated a current by induction every time the current begins or stops in the primary coil. Called also Ruhmkorff coil and inductorium.

in·duc′tion pīpe, the pipe in a steam engine through which the live steam passes to the cylinder.

in·duc′tion pōrt, in a steam engine, the port which is open for the admission of steam into the cylinder.

INSECT (Chinese wasp)

1. a member of a class of small invertebrate animals of the division Arthropoda, distinguished from the other classes of the division by the fact that the three divisions of the body—the head, thorax, and abdomen—are always distinct from one another. There are always three pairs of legs in the adult, and these are all borne upon the thorax; respiration is effected by means of air tubes or tracheae, and in most insects two pairs of membranous wings are developed from the back of the second and third segments of the thorax. The integument is more or less hardened by the deposition of chitin in it. The head is composed of several segments amalgamated together, and carries a pair of jointed feelers or antennae, a pair of eyes, usually compound, and the appendages of the mouth. The thorax is composed of three segments, also amalgamated. Beetles, bees, flies, wasps, mosquitoes, etc. are insects.

ī'sō·bär·ĭşm, n. equality or similarity of weight or pressure.

ī·sō·bar·ō·met'rĭç, a. [iso-, and Gr. baros, weight, and metron, a measure.] same as isobaric.

ī·sō·bath'y·thĕrm, n. [iso-, and Gr. bathys, deep, and thermē, heat.] in physical geography, a line on a map connecting points on the surface of the earth beneath which the temperature is constant at a given depth.

ī·sō·bath·y·thĕr'mĭç, a. pertaining to an isobathytherm.

ī'sō·bront, n. [iso-, and Gr. brontē, thunder.] a line on a map passing through those points on the surface of the earth at which the first peal of thunder of a thunderstorm is heard at the same time.

ī·sō·ceph'ă·lĭşm, n. [iso-, and Gr. kephalē, head.] the designing of bas-reliefs in such a manner as to keep the heads of human figures at the same distance from the ground, regardless of size or position.

ī·sō·cĕr'çăl, a. [iso-, and Gr. kerkos, tail.] in ichthyology, having the caudal vertebrae extended in a stright line, not bent upward, and the caudal fin equally developed above and below.

ī'sō·cĕr·cy, n. the state of having the caudal vertebrae isocercal.

ī'sō·çhaşm, n. [iso-, and Gr. chasma, a gap, gulf.] in physical geography, a line on a map passing through those points on the earth's surface at which the frequency of the occurrence of auroral displays is the same.

ī·sō·çhaş'mĭç, a. designating or of an isochasm.

ī'sō·çheīm, n. [from iso-, and Gr. cheima, winter.] a line on a map connecting points on the earth's surface that have the same mean winter temperature: also written isochime.

ī·sō·çheī'măl, a. 1. of or having isocheims.
2. having or showing the same mean winter temperature.
Also written isochimal.

ī·sō·cheī'mē·năl, a. isocheimal.

ī·sō·cheī'mē·năl, n. an isocheim.

ī'sō·çhor, ī'sō·çhore, n. [iso-, and Gr. chōra, space, room, country.] a line on a thermodynamic graph representing the parallel variations in pressure and temperature of a constant volume of gas.

ī·sō·çhor'ĭç, a. pertaining to an isochor.

ī·sō·çhrō·mat'ĭç, a. [iso-, and Gr. chrōma (-atos), color.]
1. in optics, having the same color: said of lines or curves in figures formed by interfering light waves from biaxial crystals.
2. in photography, same as orthochromatic.

ī·soçh'rō·năl, ī·sō·çhron'ĭç, a. [iso-, and Gr. chronos, time.]
1. equal in length of time.
2. occurring at equal intervals of time.

ī·soçh'rō·nĭşm, n. the quality, condition, or fact of being isochronal.

ī·soçh'rō·nīze, v.t.; isochronized, pt., pp.; isochronizing, ppr. to make isochronal.

ī·soçh'rō·non, n. [Gr. isochronon, properly neut. of isochronos, equal in time; isos, equal, and chronos, time.] a clock designed to keep perfectly accurate time.

ī·soçh'rō·nous, a. same as isochronal.

ī·soçh'rō·ous, a. [Gr. isochroos, like-colored; isos, equal, and chroa, color.] in botany, being of equal color throughout.

ī·sō·çlī'năl, a. 1. of equal inclination or dip.
2. connecting or showing points on the earth's surface having equal magnetic inclination or dip; as, isoclinal lines on a map.
3. in geology, dipping in the same direction: said of strata.

ī·sō·çlī'năl, n. an isoclinal line.

ī'sō·çlīne, n. [iso-, and Gr. klinein, to slope, incline.] in geology, any fold of stratified rocks in which the two parts are parallel or have the same angle of dip, as in certain mountain rocks.

ī·sō·çlĭn'ĭç, a. same as isoclinal.

ī·soç'rà·cy, n. [Gr. isokratia.] a system of government in which everybody has equal political power.

ī·sō·çrī'măl, a. pertaining to or having the nature of an isocryme.

ī'sō·crȳme, n. [iso-, and Gr. krymos, cold.] in physical geography, a line on a map connecting points having the same mean temperature during the coldest months of the year.

ī·sō·çrȳm'ĭç, a. same as isocrymal.

ī·sō·cȳ·an'ĭç, a. [iso- and cyanic.] pertaining to isocyanic acid.
isocyanic acid; a volatile, colorless, unisolated liquid compound isomeric with cyanic acid.

ī·sō·cȳ'ă·nide, n. same as carbamine.

ī·sō·cȳ'ă·nin, n. isocyanine.

ī·sō·cȳ'ă·nĭne, n. [iso- and cyanine.] any of a group of quinoline dyes used in sensitizing photographic plates and films.

ī·sō·cȳ·ă·nū'rĭç, a. fulminuric.

ī·sō·dac'tyl·ous, a. [iso-, and Gr. daktylos, a digit.] in zoology, having all the toes alike, especially in length.

ī·sō·dī·ă·bat'ĭç, a. [iso-, and Gr. diabatikos, able to pass through, from diabainein, to pass through.] in physics, designating isothermal curves representing variations in the pressure and density of a body, the quantity of heat received or given out being constant.

ī·sō·dī·ă·met'rĭç, a. [iso-, and Gr. diametros, diameter.]
1. in crystallography, having equal development in the directions of the lateral axes.
2. in botany, uniform in diameter: said of cells or organs.

ī·sod'ĭ·çŏn, n.; pl. ī·sod'ĭ·çà, [L. Gr. eisodikon, neut. of eisodikos, pertaining to the entrance, from Gr. eisodos, entrance; eis, into, and hodos, way.] in the Greek church, a brief anthem sung during the entrance and passage of an officiating priest through the church to the chancel.

ī″sō·dī·mor′phic, a. see isodimorphous.

ī″sō·dī·mor′phism, n. [iso-, and Gr. dimorphos, two-formed; dis, twice, and morphē, form.] a similarity of crystalline form between the two forms of two dimorphous substances.

ī″sō·dī·mor′phous, a. of or possessing the characteristics of isodimorphism.

ī·sod′ō·mon, ī·sod′ō·mum, n. [Gr. isodomon, properly neut. of isodomos, built alike; isos, equal, and demein, to build.] in Grecian architecture, a construction in which the blocks are of equal thickness and length.

ISODOMON

ī′sō·dont, a. [is-, and Gr. odous, odontos, a tooth.] in zoology, having all the teeth alike or of the same class.

ī·sō·dul′cīte, n. [iso- and dulcite.] a crystalline compound resembling sugar.

ī″sō·dȳ·nam′ic, a. [iso-, and Gr. dynamis, power, force.]

1. of or having equal force.
2. connecting or showing points on the earth's surface having equal magnetic intensity; as, isodynamic lines on a map.

ī″sō·dȳ·nam′ic, n. an isodynamic line.

ī″sō·dȳ·nam′i·çăl, a. isodynamic.

ī·sō·dȳ′nȧ·mous, a. [Gr. isodynamos; isos, equal, and dynamis, power.] having equal force; of equal size.

ī″sō·ē·leç′tric, a. having equal electric potential.

Ī·sō·ē·tā′cē·ae, n.pl. [L. isoetes, a houseleek, from Gr. isoetēs, an evergreen plant, lit. equal in years; isos, equal, and etos, a year, and -aceæ]. a family of vascular cryptogamous aquatic plants, comprising a single genus, Isoetes, the quillwort.

ī·sō·ē·tā′ceous, a. belonging or pertaining to the family Isoetaceæ.

Ī·sō·ē′tē·ae, n.pl. same as Isoetaceæ.

Ī·sō′ē·tēs, n. the only known genus of Isoetaceæ.

ī″sō·gȧ·mē′te′, n. a gamete not differentiated sexually or otherwise from another that it unites with: opposed to heterogamete.

ī·sog′ȧ·mous, a. characterized by isogamy.

ī·sog′ȧ·my, n. [iso-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.] in botany, reproduction by the union of two isogametes.

ī·soġ′e·nous, a. [iso- and -genous.] in biology, of the same origin.

ī·soġ′e·ny, n. [iso- and -geny.] in biology, the condition of being isogenous; identity of origin.

ī·sō·ġē″ō·thēr′m, n. [iso-, and Gr. gē, earth, and thermē, heat.] in physical geography, an imaginary line or surface under the earth's surface passing through points having the same mean temperature.

ī·sō·ġē·ō·thēr′măl, a. relating to or having the characteristics of an isogeotherm.

ī·sō·ġē·ō·thēr′miç, a. isogeothermal.

ī′sō·gloss, n. [iso-, and Gr. glossa, tongue, speech.] in linguistics, an imaginary line of demarcation between regions differing in some feature of pronunciation, syntax, etc.

ī·sog′nȧ·thous, a. [iso-, and Gr. gnathos, jaw.] in odontology, having the teeth in both the upper and the lower jaw alike.

ī′sō·gon, n. [iso- and -gon.] a polygon with all angles equal.

ī·sog′ō·năl, a. equiangular.

ī·sō·gon′iç, a. [Gr. isogōnios, having equal angles; isos, equal, and gōnia, an angle.]

1. of or having equal angles.
2. connecting or showing points on the earth's surface having the same magnetic declination; as, isogonic lines on a map.

ī·sō·gon′iç, n. an isogonic line.

Ī·sō·gon′iç, a. in biology, pertaining to isogonism.

ī·sō·gō′ni·ō·stat, n. [Gr. isogōnios, having equal angles, and statos, verbal adj. of histanai, to stand.] a device for regulating the motion of prisms, as in a spectroscope.

ī·sog′ō·nism, n. [iso-, and Gr. gonos, an offspring.] in biology, the production of like reproductive parts from dissimilar stocks, as in certain hydroids.

ī′sō·grȧph, n. a drawing instrument which serves as a protractor and square: it consists of two short, straight edges of metal, joined at the top by a circular plate marked with angular degrees.

ī·sō·graph′iç, a. pertaining to isography.

ī·sog′rȧ·phy, n. [iso-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] the imitation of another's handwriting. [Rare.]

ī·soġ′y·nous, a. [iso-, and Gr. gynē, a female.] in botany, having the pistils or the parts of a compound ovary agreeing in number with the sepals.

ī·sō·hal′sīne, n. [iso-, and Gr. hals, salt, and -ine.] in physical geography, an imaginary line passing through those points in the ocean at which the salinity of the water is equal.

ī·sō·hȳ′e·tăl, ī·sō·hȳ′e·tōse, a. [iso-, and Gr. hyetos, rain.] designating or of a line on a map connecting those places on the surface of the globe where the quantity of rain which falls annually is the same.

ī·sō·hȳ′e·tăl, ī·sō·hȳ′e·tōse, n. an isohyetal line.

ī′sō·lȧ·ble (or is′ō-), a. [isolate and -able.] that can be isolated; specifically, in chemistry, capable of being obtained pure, or uncombined with any other substance.

ī′sō·lāte (or is′ō-), v.t.; isolated, pt., pp.; isolating, ppr. [It. isolato, pp. of isolare, to isolate, from isola, L. insula, an island.]

1. to set apart from others; to place alone.
2. in bacteriology, to grow a pure culture of (a specific bacterium).
3. in chemistry, to separate (an element or compound) in pure form from substances with which it is combined or mixed.
4. in medicine, to place (a patient with a contagious disease) apart from others to prevent the spread of infection.

ī′sō·lā·ted, a. 1. standing detached from others of a like kind; placed by itself.
2. in chemistry, pure; not combined.

ī·sō·lā′tion, n. an isolating or being isolated.

ī·sō·lā′tion·iṣm, n. the policy advocated by isolationists.

ī·sō·lā′tion·ist, n. a person who believes in or advocates isolation; a person who wants his country to take no part in international alliances, leagues, etc.

ī·sō·lā′tion·ist, a. of isolationists or isolationism.

ī′sō·lā·tŏr, n. a person or thing that isolates.

Ī·sōlde′, n. [G.; OFr. Isolt, Iseul; OHG. Isold; prob. from is, ice and waltan, to rule.] in medieval legend, (a) the Irish princess married to King Mark of Cornwall and beloved by Tristram; (b) the daughter of the king of Brittany, married to Tristram. Also Iseult.

ī·sol′ō·gous, a. [iso-, and Gr. logos, proportion, and -ous.]

1. designating or of any of two or more chemical compounds of similar structure but consisting of different atoms of the same valence and usually of the same periodic group.
2. designating or of a series formed by such compounds.

ī′sō·logue (-log), n. an isologous compound.

ī″sō·mag·net′iç, a. 1. of equality of magnetic force.
2. connecting or showing points on the earth's surface having the same magnetic intensity; as, isomagnetic lines on a map.

ī″sō·mag·net′iç, n. an isomagnetic line.

ī·sō·mas′ti·gāte, a. [iso-, and Gr. mastix (-igos), a whip.] in biology, having the flagella alike, especially as to size and form.

ī′sō·mēr, n. [Gr. isomerēs, having equal parts; isos, equal, and meros, part.] any of two or more chemical compounds having the same constituent elements in the same proportion by weight but differing in physical or chemical properties because of differences in the structure of their molecules.

ī′sō·mēre, n. [Gr. isomerēs, having equal parts.] in zoology, some part, as a limb or the segment of a limb, having a homologous part in some other animal.

ī·sō·mer′iç, ī·sō·mer′iç·ăl, a. [*isomer*ous and -ic.]

1. in chemistry, having the same percentage composition, but showing different properties.
2. in zoology, relating to an isomere.

ī·sō·mer′iç·ăl·ly, adv. in an isomeric manner.

ī·som′ēr·ide, n. same as isomer.

ī·som′ēr·ism, n. [*isomer*ous and -ism.] in chemistry, the state or relation of isomers.

ī·sō·mer·ō·mor′phism, n. [iso-, and Gr. meros, part, and morphē, form.] in crystallography, isomorphism between isomeric substances.

ī·som′ēr·ous, a. [Gr. isomerēs, having equal parts; isos, equal, and meros, part.]

1. having the same number of parts, markings, etc.
2. in botany, having the same number of parts in each whorl: opposed to heteromerous.
3. isomeric.

ī·sō·met′riç, ī·sō·met′riç·ăl, a. [Gr. isometros, of equal measure; isos, equal, and metron, measure.]

1. of, indicating, or having equality of measure.
2. designating a crystalline form that has three equal axes at right angles to one another.
3. designating or of exercises in isometrics.

ī·sō·met′riç, n. 1. pl. a method of physical exercise in which one set of muscles is briefly tensed in opposition to another set of muscles or in opposition to a solid surface.
2. in thermodynamics, a line indicating changes of pressure or temperature at constant volume.

ī·sō·met′riç prō·jeç′tion, a method of drawing figures and maps so that three dimensions are shown not in perspective but in their actual measurements.

ī·sō·met′rō·grȧph, n. [iso-, and Gr. metron, a measure, and graphein, to write.] a contrivance for drawing equidistant parallel lines.

ī″sō·mē·trō′pi·ȧ, n. [Mod. L., from iso-, and Gr. metron, measure, and -opia.] the condition of being equal in refraction: said of the two eyes.

ī·som′e·try, n. [iso- and -metry.]

1. equality of measure.
2. in geography, equality of height above sea level.

ī′sō·morph, n. [iso-, and Gr. morphē, form.] a substance or organism isomorphic with another or others.

ī·sō·mor′phiç, a. 1. showing isomorphism; isomorphous.
2. having the same or a similar appearance or form.

ī·sō·mor′phism, n. 1. an identity or close similarity of crystalline form, as (a) between substances of similar composition or atomic proportions, as arsenic acid and phosphorous acid, each containing five equivalents of oxygen; (b) sometimes, between compounds of unlike composition or atomic proportions, as the metal arsenic and oxide of iron, the rhombohedral angle of the former being 85°41′, of the latter 86°4′.
2. in biology, a similarity in the appearance or structure of organisms of different species or races.

ī·sō·mor′phous, a. [iso-, and Gr. morphē, form.] having isomorphism; isomorphic.

ī″sō·mȳ·ā′ri·ăn, a. [iso-, and Gr. mys, myos, muscle, and -arian.] in conchology, having the two adductor muscles alike, or nearly alike, in size and form.

-i·sŏn, [OFr. -ison, -eson, -eision, -aison; L. -atio, -ationis.] a formative suffix seen in nouns derived from Old French, corresponding to -ation, as in compar*ison.*

Ī·sō·nan′drȧ, n. [iso-, and Gr. anēr, andros, a man, male.] a genus of East Indian trees including a species from which gutta-percha is obtained.

ī″sō·nē·phel′iç, a. [iso-, and Gr. nephelē, a cloud.] in physical geography, designating a line on a map connecting points having the same percentage of cloudiness during a stated period.

ī·sō·niç′ō·tine, n. a crystalline compound isomeric with nicotine.

ī·sō·niç·ō·tin′iç, a. pertaining to isonicotine.

ī·sō·nom′iç, a. equal in law, right, or privilege.

ī·son′ō·my, n. [Gr. isonomia, equality of rights; isos, equal, and nomos, distribution, custom, law.] equality of laws, rights, or privileges.

ī·sop′ȧ·thy, n. [iso-, and Gr. pathos, suffering, disease.] (a) the theory that diseases are cured by the products of the diseases themselves, as smallpox by homeopathic doses of variolus matter; (b) the notion that a diseased organ is cured by eating the same organ of a healthy animal.

ī·sō·per·i·met′riç·ăl, a. [iso-, and Gr. peri, around, and metron, a measure.] in geometry, having equal boundaries; as, isoperimetrical figures.

ī″sō·per·im′e·try, n. in geometry, the science dealing with isoperimetrical figures.

ī·sō·pet′ȧ·lous, a. [iso-, and Gr. petalon, a leaf, petal.] in botany, having all the petals alike.

ī″sō·pī·es′tiç, a. [iso-, and Gr. piezein, to press, and -ic.] indicating equal pressure.

ī″sō·pī·es′tiç, n. an isobar.

ī′sō·pleth, n. [from Gr. isoplēthēs, equal in number or quantity, from isos, equal and plethos, number, quantity.]
1. a graph plotting the occurrence or frequency of a phenomenon in meteorology, etc. as a function of two variables, time and space.
2. the line connecting points on a graph that have equal or corresponding values with regard to certain variables.

Ī·sō·pleu′rà, n.pl. [Gr. isopleuros, having equal sides; isos, equal, and pleura, side.] a subdivision of gastropods comprising those which are bilaterally symmetrical.

ī′sō·pod, a. pertaining to the Isopoda.

Ī′sō·pod, n. a crustacean of the order Isopoda.

Ī·sop′ō·dà, n.pl. [iso-, and Gr. pous, podos, a foot.] an order of crustaceans with a flat, oval body and seven pairs of legs of similar size and form, each pair attached to a segment of the thorax.

ISOPODS
1. Bopyrus squillarum, sedentary section
2. Cymodocealamarcki, natatory section
3. Oniscus asellus, cursorial section, a, head; b, thorax; c, abdomen ī·sop′ō·dăn, a. and n. isopod.

ī·sō·pod′i·form, a. formed like an isopod.

ī·sop′ō·dous, a. same as isopod.

ī·sō·pog′ō·nous, a. [iso-, and Gr. pōgōn, beard.] in zoology, having equal webs: said of feathers.

ī·sō·pol′i·ty, n. [Gr. isopoliteia, from isopolites, a citizen with equal civil rights; isos, equal, and polites, a citizen.] equality or reciprocity of civil and political rights as secured to the citizens of different states.

ī′sō·prēne, n. [apparently arbitrarily coined by C. G. Williams.] a colorless, volatile liquid, C_5H_8, prepared by the dry distillation of raw rubber or synthetically: when heated with sodium it polymerizes to form a substance closely resembling natural rubber.

ī·sō·prō′pyl, n. the univalent propyl radical $(CH_3)_2CH$, an isomer of the univalent propyl radical, C_3H_7.

ī·sō·pyc′niç, a. [iso-, and Gr. pyknos, dense, solid.] in physics, relating to or exhibiting equality of density, as in a body at different points; as, an isopycnic line.

ī·sō·pyç′niç, n. an isopycnic surface or line.

ī′sō·pȳre, n. [iso-, and Gr. pyr, fire.] a kind of opal containing iron or other impurities.

ī·sọr′cin, n. [iso- and orcin.] in chemistry, a crystalline compound produced by artificial means, metameric with orcin: also called cresorcinol, cresorcin.

ī·sor·rop′iç, a. [iso-, and Gr. rhopē, downward inclination.] in mathematics, designating a line connecting points in a plane for which the value of a function remains constant.

ī·sos′ce·lēṣ, a. [L. isosceles; Gr. isoskelēs, with equal legs; isos, equal, and skelos, a leg.] having two equal legs or sides; as, an isoceles triangle.

ISOSCELES TRIANGLE

ī·sō·seiṣ′măl, a. [iso-, and Gr. seismos, a shaking, an earthquake.]
1. of equal intensity of earthquake shock.
2. connecting or showing points of such intensity on the earth's surface; as, isoseismal lines on a map.

ī·sō·seiṣ′măl, n. an isoseismal line.

ī·sō·seiṣ′miç, a. same as isoseismal.

Ī·sō·spon′dy·lī, n.pl. [iso-, and Gr. spondylos, vertebra.] a large order of fishes including those having all the vertebrae essentially similar, embracing most malacopterygian fishes, such as the salmon, the herring, etc.

ī·sō·spon′dy·lous, a. of or pertaining to the Isospondyli.

ī′sō·spōre, n. [iso-, and Gr. sporos, seed.]
1. a zygospore.
2. a plant which produces only one kind of spore.

ī·sō·spōr′iç, a. same as homosporous.

ī·sos′tà·sy, n. [iso-, and Gr. stasis, a standing still.]
1. the state or quality of being isostatic.
2. in geology, universal equilibrium in the earth's crust, the maintenance of which is supposedly due to gravitational yielding of rocks beneath the earth's surface.

ī·sō·stat′iç, a. [iso- and static.]
1. denoting a condition in which there is equal pressure on every side.
2. in hydrostatic equilibrium.

ī·sō·stem′ō·nous, a. [iso-, and Gr. stēmōn, thread.] in botany, having as many stamens as divisions of the perianth.

ī·sō·stem′ō·ny, n. the condition of being isostemonous.

ī″sō·sul·fō·cȳ′à·nāte, n. in chemistry, a salt resulting from the action of isosulfocyanic acid on certain bases.

ī″sō·sul·fō·cȳ·an′iç, a. designating a colorless acid isomeric with the sulfacid HSCN.

ī·sot′e·ly, n. [Gr. isoteleia, equality of taxation, from isotelēs, paying alike; isos, equal, and telos, tax.] civil equality granted certain aliens of ancient Athens, who were given some of the privileges and immunities of citizens.

ī·soth′ēr·ăl, a. [iso-, and Gr. theros, summer.]
1. having or showing the same mean summer temperature
2. of or having isotheres.

ī·soth′ēr·ăl, n. an isothere.

ī′sō·thēre, n. a line passing through places having the same mean summer temperature.

ī′sō·thērm, n. [iso-, and Gr. thermē, heat.]
1. a line on a map connecting points on the earth's surface having the same mean temperature or the same temperature at a given time.
2. a line representing changes of volume or pressure at constant temperature.

ī·sō·thēr′măl, n. an isotherm.

ī·sō·thēr′măl, a. [iso- and thermal.]
1. of or indicating equality of temperature.
2. of or indicating changes of volume or pressure at constant temperature; as, an isothermal line.
3. of an isotherm or isotherms.
isothermal region; see stratosphere.
isothermal zones; spaces on opposite sides of the equator having the same mean temperature or bounded by corresponding isothermal lines.

ī·sō·thēr′mō·bath, n. [iso-, and Gr. thermē, heat, and bathos, depth.] in physical geography, an imaginary line connecting such points of equal temperature as are included within a fixed vertical section of the ocean.

ī·sō·thēr·mō·bath′iç, a. pertaining to an isothermobath.

ī″sō·thēr·ōm′brōse, a. [iso-, and Gr. theros, summer, and ombros, rain.] designating a line on a map connecting places on the surface of the earth where the same quantity of rain falls during the summer.

ī·sō·ton′iç, a. [Gr. isotonos, having equal accent or tone; isos, equal, and tonos, accent, tone.]
1. in music, having equal tones.
2. having equal tension.
3. having the same osmotic pressure; especially, designating or of a salt solution having the same osmotic pressure as blood, so that it will not destroy the red blood corpuscles when injected into the blood stream.

ī″sō·tō·nic′i·ty, n. the property of being isotonic.

ī′sō·tōpe, n. [iso-, and Gr. topos, place.] any of two or more forms of an element having the same or very closely related properties and the same atomic number but different atomic weights (or mass numbers); as, U 235, U 238, and U 239, are three isotopes of uranium: distinguished from isobar.

ī·sō·top′iç, a. of or relating to isotopes.

ī·sot′ō·py, n. the state or relation of isotopes.

kin·ē·mat'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [Gr. kinēma (-atos), movement, from kinein, to move.] that branch of mechanics which treats of motion in the abstract, without reference to the force or mass.

kin·ē·mat'ō·grȧph, n. same as cinematograph.

kīne'pox, n. same as cowpox.

kin'ē·sçōpe, n. [*kine*to- and -scope.] a form of cathode-ray receiving tube used in television: it has a luminescent screen at one end, on which the images are reproduced: a trademark (Kinescope).

kin·ē·si·at'riçs, n. [Gr. kinesis, motion, and iatrikos, pertaining to medicine, from iatros, a physician.] in medicine, muscular exercise as a remedy for disease: also called kinesipathy.

kin·ē·si·ol′ō·ġy, n. [Gr. kinēsis, motion, from kinein, to move, and -logy.] the science or study of human muscular movements, especially as applied in physical education.

kin·ē·sod′iç, a. [Gr. kinēsis, movement, and hodos, way.] conveying impulses of motion: particularly relating to the nerves of the spinal cord.

kin″es·thē′si·ȧ, n. [Gr. kinein, to move, and aisthēsis, perception.] the sensation of position, movement, tension, etc. of parts of the body, perceived through nerve end organs in muscles, tendons, and joints: also spelled kinaesthesia.

kin′es·thē′sis, n. same as kinesthesia.

kin″es·thet′iç, a. relating to kinesthesia.

-ki·net′iç, a combining form indicating motion.

ki·net′iç, a. [Gr. kinētikos, putting in motion, from kinētos, verbal adj. of kinein, to move.] in physics, having to do with motion; producing motion or arising from motion.

ki·net′iç en′ẽr·ġy, that energy of a body which results from its motion: it is equal to $\frac{1}{2}mv^2$, where m is mass and v is velocity: opposed to potential energy.

ki·net′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the science that deals with the motion of masses in relation to the forces acting on them.

ki·net′ō-, [from Gr. kinētos, movable, from kinein, to move.] a combining form meaning moving, motion, as in kinetograph.

ki·nē·tō·ġen′e·sis, n. [Gr. kinētos, verbal adj. of kinein, to move, and genesis, birth.] in biology, the genesis of organic structures by kinetic operations; the doctrine that animal structures are produced by movements of the animal.

ki·nē′tō·ġraph, n. [Gr. kinētos, verbal adj. of kinein, to move, and graphein, to write.] a motion-picture camera.

ki·nē′tō·phōne, n. [Gr. kinētos, verbal adj. of kinein, to move, and phōnē, sound.] an invention of Edison, consisting of synchronizing apparatus combined with the phonograph and projecting kinetoscope, so arranged and operated as to reproduce simultaneously sound and motion previously recorded and photographed.

ki·nē′tō·sc̣ōpe, n. [Gr. kinētos, verbal adj. of kinein, to move, and skopein, to view.]
1. an instrument for illustrating various combinations of kinematic curves.
2. a machine for producing a picture with moving figures.
