bī'nà-ry, n.; pl. bī'nà-ries, 1. that which is made up of two figures or parts; a couple; a pair.
2. a binary star.

bī'nāte, a. [L. binatus, from bini, two by two; bis, double.] in botany, composed of or almost divided into two parts: said of a leaf.

BINATE LEAVES

bin-au'răl, a. [bin-, and L. auris, ear.]
1. having two ears.
2. of or involving the use of both ears.

bin-bash'i, n. [Turk. chief of a thousand; bin, a thousand, and bash, a head.] an officer in the Turkish army having the rank of major.

bīnd, v.t.; bound, pt., pp.; binding, ppr. [ME. binden; AS. bindan; akin to ON. binda.]
1. to tie; to secure; to fasten, as with a band or rope.
2. to hold; to make prisoner; to restrain.
3. to gird or encircle with (a belt, girdle, etc.); to wrap around.
4. to wrap; to cover, as with a bandage: frequently followed by up; as, to bind up a wound.
5. to make stick together; to make coalesce into a mass.

6. to make costive or constipated; as, certain kinds of food bind the bowels.
7. to strengthen, secure, or ornament along the edges with stitching; to protect with a band on the edges; as, to bind a skirt.
8. to sew together and cover; to cover with anything firm; as, to bind the pages of a book.
9. to secure by moral force, as a promise, duty, or authority.
10. to hold or attract, as by affection or personal qualities.
11. to put under oath, legal restraint, or contract.

bound up in; engrossed in; absorbed in.
to bind over; to oblige by bond to appear at a court.
to bind to; to contract; as, to bind oneself to a wife.

Syn.—tie, fasten, secure, fetter, oblige, restrain, restrict.

bīnd, v.i. 1. to contract; to grow hard or stiff; as, clay binds by heat.
2. to stick, owing to friction or pressure; as, the wheel binds.
3. to be obligatory.
4. to do the act of binding.

bīnd, n. 1. a twining stem.
2. any quantity forming a specific count; as, a bind of eels. [Eng.]
3. anything that binds.
4. in music, a line to indicate that the sound of certain notes is to be sustained; a slur.

bīnd'ĕr, n. [ME. byndere, from AS. bindere, binder, from bindan, to bind.]
1. a person who binds.
2. one whose occupation is to bind books.
3. anything that binds.
4. a fillet, cord, rope, or band.
5. a binding substance, as tar.
6. a detachable cover, used for magazines, etc.
7. in agriculture, (a) a device attached to a reaper, for tying grain in bundles; (b) a machine that both reaps and binds grain.
8. in law, a temporary contract, in effect pending execution of the final contract.

bīnd'ĕr·y, n.; pl. bīnd'ĕr·ieṣ, a place where books are bound.

bīnd'ing, a. causing to be bound; obligatory, from a legal or moral standpoint; as, the binding force of a moral duty or of a command.

bīnd'ing, n. 1. the action of a person or thing that binds.
2. the state of being bound.
3. anything that binds; a bandage.
4. the covers and backing of a book.
5. a band of masonry, brick, etc.
6. a braid or strip of cloth sewed over an edge, seam, etc. for strengthening or protecting it; as, the binding of a dress skirt.
7. a cohesive substance for holding a mixture together.
8. [pl.] the principal timbers used in building and giving stability to a ship.

bīnd'ing joists, in architecture, the joists of a floor into which the trimmers of staircases and chimney ways are framed.

bīnd'ing·ly, adv. so as to bind.

bīnd'ing·ness, n. the state of having force to bind.

bīnd'ing pōst, a metallic post connected with electrical apparatus to serve as a convenience in making connections with wires, etc.

bin'dle, n. [prob. from bundle.] a bundle of bedding carried by a hobo. [Slang.]

bin'dle stiff, a hobo. [Slang.]

bīnd'weed, any of a number of related plants belonging to the genus Convolvulus, usually twining, with funnel-shaped flowers.

bīne, n. [a dialectic form of bind.] the winding stem of a climbing plant, as of the hop, woodbine, etc.

bī·nĕrv'āte, a. [bi-, and L. nerva, nerve.] having two nerves: said of some leaves or the wings of some insects.

Bi·nęt'-Sī'mŏn test (bi-nę′ sī′mŏn; Fr. bē″-ne′sē″mōn′), [after the French psychologists who devised it, Alfred Binet (1857–1911) and Theodore Simon (1873–1961).] a Binet test.

Bi·nęt' (-nę′) test, an intelligence test consisting of questions, problems, and things to do, graded in terms of mental age (Binet age).

bing, n. [ME. bing, binge, from Ice. bingr, a heap.] a heap; specifically, a heap of grain.

binge, n. [perhaps from dial. binge, to soak.] a drunken celebration or spree. [Slang.]

biñ'gle (-gl), n. in baseball, a base hit.

biñ'gō, n. [origin uncertain.] a gambling game, resembling lotto, usually with many players.

bin·ī'ō·dīde, n. a salt with two iodine atoms.

bink, n. a bench. [Scot.]

bin'na·çle, n. [formerly bittacle, from Port. bitacola, binnacle; L. habitaculum, a dwelling place; habitare, to inhabit.] the case in which the compass and a light are kept on board ship for use by the steersman.

BINNACLE

bin'na·çle list, in United States Navy, a sick-list posted daily near the binnacle.

bin'ny, n.; pl. bin'nies, [native name.] a species of edible barbel (Barbus bynni), found in the Nile.

bin'ō·çle, n. [L. bini, double, and oculus, an eye.] a binocular telescope, opera glass, or field glass.

bin·oç'ū·lăr, a. 1. of or pertaining to both eyes at once.
2. having two apertures or tubes so joined that one may use both eyes at once in viewing a distant object; as, a binocular telescope.

bin·oç'ū·lăr, n. [L. bini, double, and oculus, eye.] a binocular instrument.

bin·oç'ū·lăr·ly, adv. in a binocular manner.

bin·oç'ū·lărs, n.pl. 1. field glasses.
2. opera glasses.

bī·nōd'ăl, a. having two joints or nodes.

bī·nō'mi·ăl, n. [bi-, and L. nomen, name.]
1. a mathematical equation or expression consisting of two terms connected by a plus or minus sign.
2. the scientific name of a plant or animal, consisting of the genus name followed by that of the species.

bī·nō'mi·ăl, a. 1. pertaining to binomials.
2. having two names.
3. composed of two terms.

binomial nomenclature (or system); the scientific system of giving a double name to each plant and animal, consisting of the name of the genus followed by that of the species: e.g., Ananas comosus (pineapple).

binomial theorem; in algebra, the theorem, first demonstrated by Sir Isaac Newton, for raising a binomial to any power. Example: $(a+b)^2=a^2+2ab+b^2$.

bī·nor'măl, n. [bi-, and L. norma, a square.] in geometry, a normal perpendicular to the osculating plane.

bin·ox'īde, n. same as dioxide.

bin'tū·rong, n. [native name.] a small carnivorous animal of southern Asia and the East Indies, Arctictis binturong.

bī·nū'çlē·ātе, bī·nū'çlē·ăr, a. of or having two nuclei or centers.

bī·nū'çlē·ō·lātе, a. [bi-, and L. nucleus, a nut.] having two nucleoli: applied to cells.

bī'ō-, [Gr. bios, life.] a combining form meaning life, of living things, biological, as in *bio*graphy, *bio*chemistry: also bi-.

bī″ō·as″trō·nąu'tiçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], the science that deals with the physical responses of living things to the environment of space and space travel.

bī'ō·çat'ą·lyst, n. [bio-, and catalyst.] a substance, as an enzyme or hormone, that activates or speeds up a biochemical reaction.

bī·oc'el·lātе, a. [bi-, and L. ocellus, dim. of oculus, eye.] in zoology, having two simple eyes or eyelike markings.

bī·ō·çhem'i·çăl, bī·ō·çhem'iç, a. pertaining to biochemistry.

bī·ō·çhem'ist, n. a student of or specialist in biochemistry.

bī·ō·çhem'is·try, n. [bio-, and Fr. chemique, chemistry.] the branch of chemistry that deals with plants and animals and their life processes; biological chemistry.

bī'ō·cīde″, n. [bio-, and -cide.] a poisonous chemical substance that can kill living organisms.

bī″ō·dē·grād'a·ble, a. [bio-, and degrade, and -able.] capable of being readily decomposed by biological means, especially by bacterial action: said of some detergents with reference to disposal in sewage.

bī″ō·dȳ·nam'iç, bī″ō·dȳ·nam'iç·ăl, a. relating to biodynamics.

bī″ō·dȳ·nam'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], [bio-, and dynamics.] the branch of physiology that deals with the life processes of plants and animals: opposed to biostatics.

bī″ō·eth'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], the study of the ethical problems arising from scientific advances, especially in biology and medicine.

bī″ō·feed'back, n. a technique of seeking to control certain emotional states, such as anxiety or depression, by training oneself, with the aid of electronic devices, to modify involuntary body functions, such as blood pressure or heartbeat.

bī″ō·flā'vō·noid n. [bio-, and flavone, and -oid.] a derivative of a flavone compound, as vitamin P.

bī'ō·ġen, n. [bio-, and gen.] the hypothetical smallest unit of protoplasm.

bī·ō·ġen'e·sis, bī·oġ'e·ny, n. [bio-, and Gr. genesis, origin, from gignesthai, to become.]
1. the development of living organisms from other living organisms.
2. the principle that living organisms come only from other living organisms.

bī″ō·ġē·net'iç, bī″ō·ġē·net'i·çăl, a. pertaining to or connected with biogenesis.

bī·ō·ġē·og'rą·phy, n. the branch of biology that deals with the geographical distribution of plants and animals.

bī·og·nō'sis, n. [bio-, and Gr. gnōsis, inquiry, from gnōnai, to know.] the inquiry into or study of life; that branch of science which treats of living organisms.

bī·og'rą·phēr, n. one who writes a biography or biographies.

bī·ō·graph'iç·ăl, bī·ō·graph'iç, a. 1. connected with or pertaining to biography.
2. about a person's life.

bī·ō·graph'iç·ăl·ly, adv. in the manner of a biography.

bī·og'rą·phy, n.; pl. bī·og'rą·phieṣ, [Fr. biographie, biography, from Gr. bios, life, and graphein, to write.]
1. the histories of individual lives, considered as a branch of literature.
2. an account of a person's life, written or told by another; life story.

bī″ō·in·strū·men·tā'tion, n. the use of instruments, as sensors, to detect and measure certain body functions, as of persons in spaceflight, and transmit the data to a point where it is evaluated.

bī·ō·loġ'iç·ăl, bī·ō·loġ'iç, a. 1. of or connected with biology; of plants and animals.
2. of the nature of living matter.
3. used in or produced by practical biology.

bī·ō·loġ'iç·ăl, n. a biological product.

bī·ō·loġ'iç·ăl çlock, any of various rhythm patterns in organisms, associated with recurrent natural cycles, as of tides, days and nights, seasons, etc.

bī·ō·loġ'iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. in a biological way.
2. by means of biology.

bī·ō·loġ'iç·ăl wąr'fāre, the use of disease-spreading microorganisms, toxins, etc. against enemy armed forces or civilians.

bī·ol'ō·ġist, n. one having a thorough knowledge of biology; also, a student of biology.

bī·ol'ō·ġy, n. [Fr. biologie, biology, from Gr. bios, life, and logos, description.]
1. the science of life; the branch of science which treats of the phenomena of animals and plants with regard to their morphology, physiology, origin, development, distribution, habits, etc.: it includes botany, zoology, and their subdivisions.
2. animal and plant life, as of a given area.
3. biological history, principles, etc.

bī″ō·lū·mi·nes'cence, n. [bio-, and luminescence.] a giving off of light from living matter, caused by internal oxidation.

bī·ol'y·sis, n. [bio-, and Gr. ollynai, to destroy.] the destruction of life, as by bacteria or other microorganisms.

bī·ō·lyt'iç, a. of or produced by biolysis.

bī″ō·mag·net'iç, a. of biomagnetism.

bī'ō·mass, n. the total mass or amount of living organisms in a particular area or volume.

bī″ō·math·ē·mat'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], the science that deals with the application of mathematical methods to the structure and functions of living organisms.

bī″ō·med'i·cine, n. a branch of medicine that is combined with research in biology.

bī·ō·met'riçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], [from bio-, and metric.] that branch of biology which deals with its data statistically and by quantitative analysis.

bī·om'e·try, n. [bio-, and Gr. metron, a measure.]
1. measurement of the probable duration of the life of human beings.
2. biometrics.

bī'on, n. [Gr. biōn, living, ppr. of bioun, to live.] in biology, the physiological person, characterized by self-reliant function and definiteness: opposed to morphon.

bī·ō·nom'ĭçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], [from bionomy, and -ics.] the branch of biology that deals with the adaptation of living things to their environment; ecology.

bī·on'ō·my, n. [bio-, and Gr. nomos, law.]
1. the science that deals with the natural laws controlling life processes.
2. bionomics.

bī·oph'à·gous, a. [bio-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] subsisting upon living organisms, as insectivorous plants such as Venus's flytrap.

bī'ō·phōr, bī'ō·phōre, n. [bio-, and Gr. phoros, something brought, from pherein, to bear.] in biology, one of the hypothetical fundamental units of germ plasm.

bī·ō·phys'i·çal, a. of biophysics.

bī·ō·phys'ĭçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the branch of physics that deals with living matter.

bī'ō·plaşm, n. [bio-, and Gr. plasma, something molded, as an image, from plassein, to mold.] living matter; protoplasm.

bī·ō·plaş'mĭç, a. of or composed of bioplasm.

bī·ō·plas'tĭç, a. bioplasmic.

bī·op'sĭç, a. pertaining to biopsy.

bī'op·sy, n. in medicine, the microscopic examination of a piece of excised tissue from a live body for purposes of diagnosis.

bī″ō·psȳ'çhĭç, a. pertaining to biopsychology.

bī″ō·psȳ·çhol'ō·gy, n. psychology in its relation to biology.

bī·ọr'găn, n. [bi-, and L. organum, an organ or instrument.] a physiological organ possessing a function: opposed to idorgan.

bī'ō·sçōpe, n. [bio-, and Gr. skopein, to view.] a motion-picture projector.

bī·os'çō·py, n. [bio-, and -scopy.] in medicine, examination to find out whether life is present.

-bī·ō'sis [from Gr. biōsis, way of life, from bios, life.] a combining form meaning a (specified) way of living, as in sym*biosis*.

bī·ō·sō'cial (-shul), a. of the communal or family relationships of animals, as bees, apes, etc.

bī·ō·stat'i·çal, a. of biostatics.

bī·ō·stat'ĭçs, n.pl. [construed as sing.], [bio-, and Gr. statikē (supply technē) statics, the science that treats of bodies at rest.] the branch of physiology that deals with the relation of structure to function in plants and animals: opposed to biodynamics.

bī″ō·stà·tis'tiçs, n. statistics relating to life.

bī·os'tĕr·ōl, n. an unsaturated alcohol, allegedly the same as vitamin A.

bī·ō'tà, n. [from Gr. bios, life.] the plant and animal life of a region.

bī'ō·tax·y, n. [bio-, and Gr. taxis, arrangement.] the arrangement or co-ordination of living forms of matter according to their structural nature; taxonomy.

bī·ō·ther'à·py, n. [bio-, and therapy.] the treatment of disease by means of substances secreted by or derived from living organisms, as serums, vaccines, bile, penicillin, etc.

bī·ot'ĭç, bī·ot'ĭç·ăl, a. of life; of living things.

bī·ot'ĭçs, n. [Gr. biōtikos, pertaining to life.] that branch of science treating of the functions and phenomena of living organisms.

bī'ō·tin, n. [*biot*ic, and -in.] a bacterial growth factor found in liver, egg yolk, and yeast; vitamin H: the lack of it may cause dermatitis.

bī'ō·tīte, n. [after J. B. Biot (1774–1862), French naturalist.] a dark-brown or black mineral of the mica family, occurring in igneous and metamorphic rocks.

bī'ō·tōme, n. [bio-, and Gr. tomē, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.] any specific metamorphic stage in the life of certain animals, as the Entozoa, that undergo transformation. [Rare.]

bī'ō·tȳpe, n. [bio-, and -type.] a group of plants or animals with similar hereditary characteristics.

bī·ō'vū·lāte, a. [bi-, and Fr. ovule, an ovule; L. ovum, an egg.] generating two ovules.

bī·pal'māte, a. [bi-, and L. palma, the palm of the hand.] in botany, having a palmate arrangement on secondary petioles which are palmately arranged on the primary petiole.

bī·par·à·sit'ĭç, a. [bi-, and L. parasitus, from Gr. parasitos, one who eats off another, a diner-out, from para, beside, and sitos, food.] in botany, parasitic upon or deriving subsistence from another parasite.

bī·pà·ren'tăl, a. derived from both parents.

bī·pà·rī'e·tăl, a. of or connected with the prominent rounded part of the two parietal bones.

bip'à·rous, a. [bi-, and L. parere, to bring forth, to bear.]
1. bringing forth two offspring at a birth.
2. in botany, dividing into two branches.

bī·pärt'i·ble, a. [bi-, and L. partire, to divide.] divisible into two parts.

bī·pär'tient (-shent), a. [bi-, and L. partire, to divide.] dividing into two parts.

bī·pär'tient, n. a number which divides another number into two exactly equal parts.

bī·pär'tile, a. same as bipartible.

bī·pär'ti·şăn, a. of, having members from, or representing two parties.

bī·pär'tīte, a. [bi-, and L. partitus, divided.]
1. having two parts.
2. having two corresponding parts, as a legal contract or writing, one for each party.
3. in botany, divided into two parts nearly to the base, as a leaf.

bī·pär·ti'tion, n. partition, or division, into two parts.

bī·peç'ti·nāte, bī·peç'ti·nā·ted, a. [bi-, and L. pecten, a comb.] having two margins toothed like a comb.

bī'ped, n. [bi-, and L. pes (pedis), a foot.] an animal having only two feet, as man.

bī'ped, a. two-footed; bipedal.

bī'pe·dăl (or bip'ē-dăl), a. 1. of bipeds.
2. having two feet.

bī·pen'nāte, bī·pen'nā·ted, a. [bi-, and L. pennæ, wings.] having two wings.

bī·pen'ni·form, a. in biology, having a median line with parts on both sides symmetrically disposed with reference to it.

bī·pen'nis, n. [L. bipennis, having two edges, a two-edged ax.] an ax with two blades or heads, one on each side of the handle.

bī·pet'ăl·ous, a. [bi-, and Gr. petalon, a leaf.] in botany, having two petals.

bī·phen'yl, n. [bi-, and -phenyl.] a white, crystalline hydrocarbon whose molecule consists of a double phenyl group, $C_6H_5{\cdot}C_6H_5$.

Bī·pin·nā'rĭ·à, n. [bi-, and pinna, wing.] in zoology, the larvae of certain echinoderms, as a starfish, developed to the stage of free-swimming: a generic name for such forms.

bī·pin'nāte, bī·pin'nā·ted, a. [bi-, and L. pinnatus, feathered, from pinna, a feather.] in botany, having pinnate leaflets on stems that grow opposite each other on a main stem.

BIPINNATE LEAF

bī·pin·nat'i·fid, a. [bi-, and L. pinnatus, feathered, and findere, to split.] in botany, having both pinnae and pinnulae pinnatifid.

bī'plāne, n. an airplane with two main planes, typically one above the other.

bī'pod, n. [bi-, and tri*pod*.] a two-legged stand for instruments, weapons, etc.

bī·pō'lăr, a. [bi-, and L. polus; Gr. polos, the end of an axis.]
1. of or having two poles.
2. of or involving both of the earth's poles or polar regions.

bī·pō·lar'i·ty, n. the state of being bipolar.

Bī'pont, Bī·pont'ine, a. relating to certain editions of classic authors, famous as products of the bookprinter's art, made at Zweibrücken (Latin Bipontium), Bavaria, in the latter part of the eighteenth century.

bī·punç'tāte, a. having two holes or punctures.

bī·punç'tū·ăl, a. having two points.

bī·pū'pil·lāte, a. in entomology, having an eyelike spot on the wing, with two pupillike dots within it of a different color, as in some butterflies.

bī·py·ram'i·dăl, a. having two pyramids placed with their bases facing each other, as in the crystal of quartz.

BIPINNATIFID LEAF

bī·quăd'rāte, n. [bi-, and L. quadratus, pp. of quadrare, to square.] in mathematics, the fourth power of a number or quantity, or its square squared: also called quartic.

bī·quăd·rat'ĭç, n. 1. a biquadrate.
2. an algebraic equation of the fourth power.

bī·quăd·rat'ĭç, a. pertaining to the fourth power; quartic.

biquadratic equation; in algebra, an equation of the fourth degree, or one which involves the fourth power of the unknown quantity or quantities.

biquadratic root of a number; the square root of the square root of that number. Thus the square root of 81 is 9, and the square root of 9 is 3, which is the biquadratic root of 81.

bī·quar'tĕr·ly, a. happening or appearing twice in every three-month period.

bī'quartz, n. two wedge-shaped pieces of quartz placed together, forming a plate, one half of which will tend to rotate the plane of polarization to the right and the other half to the left, so that by adjustment of the wedges the deviation of the plane of polarization may be overcome. It is used with a polariscope.

bī″quā·tĕr'nĭ·ŏn, n. [bi-, and L. quaterni, four each, by fours.] in mathematics, a quaternion with imaginary coefficients.

bī·quin'tile, n. [bi-, and L. quintus, fifth.] an aspect of the planets, when they are distant from each other by twice the fifth part of a great circle, that is, 144 degrees, or twice 72 degrees.

bī·rā'di·ăl, a. in biology, having both bilateral and radial symmetry.

bī·rā'di·ăl·ly, adv. in a biradial manner.

bī·rā'di·āte, bī·rā'di·ā·ted, a. having two rays; as, a biradiate fin.

bī·rā'mous, a. [bi-, and L. ramus, a branch.] in biology, having two branches: said of any organ or appendage.

bĭrch, n. [ME. birche, birke; AS. beorc, birch.]
1. any tree of the genus Betula; as, the white birch, the dwarf birch, the Canada birch, of which there are several varieties, and the black birch. Birches generally have slender branches, hard, close-grained wood, and smooth bark easily stripped off in layers.
2. the wood of a birch tree, valuable in furniture-making, etc.
3. a bundle of birch twigs or a birch rod, used for chastisement.
4. a very light canoe made of birch bark.
5. any of several birchlike trees of New Zealand.

birch of Jamaica; a tree, Bursera gummifera, which yields a kind of turpentine; the turpentine tree.

birch wine; a beverage made from the juice or sap of the birch.

oil of birch; see birch oil.

bĭrch, v.t.; birched, pt., pp.; birching, ppr. to beat with a rod of birch; to flog.

bĭrch, bĭrch'en, a. made of birch; consisting of birch.

bĭrch çam'phŏr, same as betulin.

bĭrch oil, 1. an oil obtained from either Betula alba, the white birch, or Betula lenta, the black birch. The former is used in the manufacture of Russia leather, to which it gives its distinguishing odor, and the latter as a substitute for oil of wintergreen.

bĭrch pärt'ridġe (-rij), the ruffed grouse.

bĭrd, n. [ME. bird, berd, byrde; AS. brid, pl. briddas, a bird, especially a young bird.]
1. originally, the young of fowls or other feathered vertebrates; a nestling. [Rare.]
2. any animal belonging to a class of warm-blooded vertebrates (Aves) with wings and feathers.
3. a small game bird, as a partridge or quail.
4. a maiden; a girl.
5. a clay pigeon.
6. a person; as, he's a queer bird. [Slang.]
7. a sound of disapproval made by the lips fluttering. [Slang.]
8. in badminton, the round, feather-tipped cork struck with the racket; a shuttlecock.

BIRD

A, bill; B, chin; C, throat; D, breast; E, abdomen; F, heel; G, tarsus; H, tibia; I, tail coverts; J, tail feathers; K, flanks; L, secondaries; M, primaries; N, wing coverts; O, nape; P, crown; Q, auriculars Arabian bird; the phoenix: a symbol of immortality.

bird of freedom; the bald eagle: an emblem of freedom in the coat of arms of the United States.

bird of ill omen; (a) a bearer of bad news; (b) an unlucky person.

bird of Jove; the eagle.

Capuchin nun; one of the Franciscan nuns, whose order, established by Maria Longa, adopted the Capuchin rule in 1538.

çap′ū·cine, n. a monkey, the capuchin.

Çap′ū·let, the family name of Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

çap′ū·let, n. same as capellet.

çā′put, n.; pl. çap′i·tà, [L., the head.]
1. in anatomy, the head or any headlike protuberance.
2. the council of Cambridge University, England, previous to 1856.
caput mortuum; in old chemistry, the residue after distillation or sublimation; therefore, any worthless residue.

çap·y·bā′rà, n. [Sp. capibara, from the Braz. native name.] a tailless, partially web-footed animal that lives in and around lakes and streams in South America: it is the largest extant rodent, over 48 inches in length and 24 inches in height: also spelled capibara.

çär, n. [OFr. car; LL. carrus, a two-wheeled vehicle; L. carrus, currus, from currere, to run.]
1. an automobile.
2. a vehicle for running on rails or tracks, as a streetcar.
3. any vehicle on wheels.
4. in poetical language, any vehicle of dignity or splendor; a chariot.
5. the cage of an elevator.
6. the basket of a balloon, for carrying crew and equipment.
7. a perforated box floating in water for keeping live fish.
8. [C–] the constellation called Charles's Wain, the Great Bear, or the Big Dipper.

çä″rà·bä′ō, n.; pl. çä″rà·bä′ōs, çä″rà·bä′ō, [Sp., from Malay karbau.] in the Philippines, a water buffalo.

Çar·ab′i·dae, n.pl. [L., from Gr. karabos, a horned beetle.] a family of beetles of which there are more than 6,000 known species. The bombardier beetle, Brachinus crepitans, belongs to this family.

çar′à·bin, çar′à·bīne, n. same as carbine.

çar″à·bi·neer′, çar″à·bi·nïer′, n. [Fr. carabinier.] a cavalryman armed with a carbine: also carbineer.

çä″rà·bï·nie′rï (-nye′), n.pl.; sing. çä″rà·bï·nie′re, [It., from Fr. carabinier, carabineer.] the Italian police.

çar′à·boid, a. pertaining to or resembling the genus Carabus.

Çar′à·bus, n. [L., from Gr. karabos, a horned beetle.]
1. the type genus of the family Carabidæ.
2. [c–] a beetle belonging to this genus.

çar′ăç, n. a carrack. [Obs.]

çar′à·çal, n. [Fr. caracal; Turk. qara qulaq; qara, black, and qulaq, ear.]
1. a lynx, the Lynx caracal, a native of northern Africa and southwestern Asia. Its color is a uniform reddish-brown; its ears black externally, and tipped with long, black hairs.
2. the fur of the caracal.

çä·rà·çà′rà, n. [named in imitation of their cry.] any one of the birds of the subfamily Polyborinæ. They resemble the vultures in appearance, are habitants of tropical America, and subsist on carrion.

çär′ăck, n. same as carrack.

çar′à·çōle, n. [Fr. caracole, a snail, winding staircase, a caracole.]
1. in horsemanship, a half turn, to the right or left.
2. in architecture, a staircase in a spiral form.

çar′à·çōle, v.i.; caracoled, pt., pp.; caracoling, ppr. to move in a caracole; to make a caracole.

çar′à·çol·i, çar′à·çol·y, n. [origin unknown.] an alloy of gold, silver, and copper, of which jewelry and ornaments are made.

çar·à·çŏ′rà, n. [Malay karakura, a kind of boat.] a long, narrow, sailing boat or canoe, used by the inhabitants of Borneo and by the East Indian Dutch.

çar′à·çul, n. 1. a sheep of central Asia.
2. the loosely curled fur made from the hide of its newborn lambs.
Also spelled karakul.

çà·ràfe′, çà·ràffe′, n. [Fr. carafe; It. caraffa, a vessel for liquids; Ar. ghirāf, a vessel.] a glass bottle or decanter used for water.

Çar·à·gā′nà, n. [L., from caragan, the Mogul name.] a genus of leguminous Asiatic trees, several species of which are cultivated for ornament: commonly called pea trees.

çar′à·geen, çar′à·gheen, n. same as carrageen.

çä·rà·ï′pï, n. [S. Am.] the pottery tree, Moquilea utilis, of South America. Its pulverized bark is valuable as an ingredient in clay mixtures in the manufacture of pottery.

Çā′rà·īte, n. same as Karaite.

çà·ram′bō·là, n. [E. Ind.] an East Indian tree, Averrhoa carambola, of the geranium family; also, the acid fruit of this tree, eaten by the natives.

çar′à·mel (or kär′mel), n. [Fr. caramel, burnt sugar.]
1. burnt sugar used to color or flavor food, spirits, etc.
2. a kind of sweet, chewy candy, usually made in small cubes; also, a piece of this.

çar′à·mel·īze (or kär′mel-īz), v.t. and v.i.; caramelized, pt., pp.; caramelizing, ppr. to turn into caramel.

çà·rañ′goid, a. of or pertaining to the Carangidæ, a family of spiny-finned fishes represented by the genus Caranx, related to the mackerels, and embracing numerous species of tropical fishes, as the cavallies, pompanos, and pilot fish.

çà·rañ′goid, n. a fish of the carangoid family.

çà·ran′nà, n. same as carauna.

Çar′añx, n. [Sp. carangue, caranga, a W. Ind. flatfish.]

1. a genus of fishes of the family Carangidæ, found along the Atlantic coast and including the yellow or golden mackerel and the horse mackerel.
2. [c–] a fish of this genus.

Çar′à·pà, n. [Fr. caraipi, a native Guiana name.] a small genus of tropical trees of the bead tree family, species of which are found in Africa and South America. The wood of these trees is valuable and their nuts yield a bitter oil having medicinal properties, which sometimes is also used for illuminating purposes.

çar′à·pāce, n. [Fr. carapace; Sp. carapacho, a gourd.] the upper shell or bonelike covering of the turtle, armadillo, crab, etc.

çà·rà·pä′tō, n. [from carrapato, the Port. name.] a tick of the genus Amblyomma, common to South America.

çar′à·pax, n. same as carapace.

çar′ăt, n. [Fr. carat; Ar. qirat, a pod, husk, the weight of four grains; Gr. keration, the fruit of the locust tree, a weight; dim. of keras, a horn.]
1. the unit of weight used by jewelers, etc. in weighing precious stones and pearls: it is equal to about 3.17 grains troy or .2 of a gram.
2. one 24th part (of pure gold): 20-carat gold is 20 parts pure gold and 4 parts alloy.

çà·rạu′nà, n. [from native name.] a resinous gum having an aromatic flavor, the product of various South American trees, used sometimes as a medicine.

çar′à·van, n. [Fr. caravane; Sp. caravana; Ar. kairawan; Per. kārwān, a caravan.]
1. a company of travelers, pilgrims, or merchants, traveling in a body for safety, as over deserts.
2. a number of vehicles traveling together.
3. a large closed vehicle for conveying passengers, circus animals, gypsies, etc.; a van.

çar″à·van·eer′, n. [Fr. caravanier, from caravane, a caravan.] the leader or driver of a caravan.

çar·à·van′sà·ry, n. [Fr. caravanserai; Turk. kerwānseray; Per. kārwānserāī; from kārwān, a caravan, and serāī, a place, an inn.] a place for loading caravans; a kind of Oriental inn, with a large central court, where caravans stop for the night.

CARAVANSARY

çar·à·van′se·raī, çar·à·van′se·rà, n. a caravansary.

çar′à·vel, çar′à·velle, n. [Sp. caravela, carabela, dim. of caraba, a small vessel; LL. carabus, from Gr. karabos, a kind of light ship, a beetle, crawfish.]
1. a fifteenth-century sailing ship, having its origin in Spain and Portugal. It had broad bows, a high poop, and lateen sails.

CARAVEL

2. a later sailing ship of the same type.
3. a frigate or man-of-war belonging to the Turkish navy.
4. a small French boat used in the fisheries.

çar'ȧ·wāy, n. [from Sp. alcarahueyā, caraway; al, the, and karwiya, from Gr. karon, caraway.]
1. a biennial plant, Carum carui, a native of Europe, having a tapered root like a parsnip and spicy, strong-smelling seeds.
2. the seeds of the plant, having an aromatic smell and semipungent taste. They are used in cookery and confectionery, and as a carminative.
3. a pastry in which caraway is an ingredient.

çärb-, carbo-.

çär·bam'iç, a. [carb- and *am*ide and -ic.] designating or of the simple amino acid, NH_2COOH.

çär·bam'ide (or -īd), n. [carb- and amide.] in chemistry, urea.

çär·bam'ine, n. a liquid compound of cyanogen with a hydrocarbon radical.

çär'bȧ·zōle, çär'bȧ·zōl, n. [carb- and azote and -ole.] a white, crystalline substance, $C_{12}H_9N$, occurring in crude anthracene: certain dyes are made from it.

çär·baz'ō·tāte, n. picrate, a salt derived from picric acid.

çär·bȧ·zot'iç, a. [carb- and azote and -ic.] relating or allied to carbon and nitrogen. [Obs.]
carbazotic acid; picric acid. [Obs.]

çär'bide (or -bīd), n. [carb- and -ide.] a compound of an element, usually a metal, with carbon; especially, calcium carbide.

çär'bi·mide (or -mīd), n. [carb- and -imide.] in chemistry, isocyanic acid or any of the salts formed from it.

çär'bīne (in military usage, now often kär'bēn), n. [Fr. carabine, from carabin, mounted rifleman, from escarrabin, corpse bearer, from scarabée, a beetle.]
1. a rifle with a short barrel, chiefly for use by cavalry: also spelled carabin, carabine.
2. in the United States Army, a light semiautomatic, 30-caliber rifle of relatively great fire power and limited range.

çär·bi·neer', n. same as carabineer.

çär'bi·nōl, n. [carbin (name used by Kolbe for the methyl radical), and -ol.] methanol (wood alcohol), or any alcohol derived from it, as diethyl carbinol, $(CH_3{\cdot}CH_2)_2CHOH$.

çär'bo-, a combining form meaning carbon, as in *carbo*hydrate: also, before a vowel, carb-.

çär·bō·hȳ'drāse, n. in chemistry, an enzyme acting on carbohydrates.

çär·bō·hȳ'drāte, n. [carbo- and hydrate.] any of certain organic compounds composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, including the sugars, starches, and celluloses.

çär·bō·hȳ'drīde (or -drid), n. same as hydrocarbon.

çär'bō·lāt·ed, a. containing or treated with carbolic acid.

çär·bol'iç, a. [L. carbo, coal, and oleum, oil, and -ic.] designating or of a poisonous acid, C_6H_6O, obtained from coal or coal tar by distillation, and used, in various solutions, as an antiseptic, disinfectant, etc.: also called phenol.

çär'bō·līze, v.t.; carbolized, pt., pp.; carbolizing, ppr. 1. to use carbolic acid in the treatment of; to apply carbolic acid to as a wash or disinfectant.
2. to add carbolic acid to.

çär'bō·loy, n. [*carb*ide, and o, and alloy.] tungsten carbide, an extremely hard alloy used in the machine-tool industry for its high abrasive quality: a trade-mark (Carboloy).

çär'bŏn, n. [Fr. carbone, from L. carbo, coal.]
1. a nonmetallic chemical element found in many inorganic compounds and all organic compounds: diamond and graphite are pure carbon; carbon is also present, with other substances, in coal, coke, charcoal, soot, etc.: symbol, C; atomic weight, 12.01; atomic number, 6.
2. a sheet of carbon paper.
3. a carbon copy.
4. in electricity, (a) a stick of carbon used in an arc lamp; (b) a carbon plate or rod used in a battery.

çär'bŏn, a. 1. of, containing, or treated with carbon.
2. like carbon.

çär·bō·nā'ceous, a. 1. pertaining to, containing, or composed of carbon; as, carbonaceous matter.
2. containing or like coal.

çär'bō·nāde, n. same as carbonado (a piece of meat).

çär·bō·nāde', v.t. same as carbonado.

çär·bō·nā'dō, n.; pl. çär·bō·nā'dō·es or çär·bō·nā'dōs, [Sp. carbonada, from L. carbo, coal.]
1. a piece of meat, often fish or fowl, scored and broiled.
2. a massive form of diamond characterized by opacity and dark color, used for drills: also called black diamond.

çär·bō·nā'dō, v.t.; carbonadoed, pt., pp.; carbonadoing, ppr. 1. to score and then broil (meat).
2. to cut gashes in; slash; hack.

Çär·bō·nä'rï, n.pl.; sing. Çär·bō·nä'rō, [It., charcoal burners.] an Italian revolutionary group organized about 1811 to establish a united republican Italy.

Çär·bō·nä'rism, n. anything pertaining or relating to the Carbonari.

çär"bŏn·ȧ·tā'tion, n. carbonation (sense 1): the preferred form in chemistry.

çär'bŏn·āte, n. a salt or ester of carbonic acid.

çär'bŏn·āte, v.t.; carbonated, pt., pp.; carbonating, ppr. 1. to burn to carbon; to carbonize.
2. to charge with carbon dioxide.
3. in chemistry, to change into a carbonate.

çär'bŏn·ā·ted, a. combined with carbonic acid.
carbonated water; water impregnated with carbon dioxide çär·bŏn·ā'tion, n. 1. the saturation of water with carbon dioxide, as in the manufacture of soda water: cf. carbonatation.

2. a purifying process in sugar-making in which the lime salts are precipitated from the juice by means of carbon dioxide.
3. carbonization.

çär'bŏn bī·sul'fīde, carbon disulfide.

çär'bŏn çop'y, 1. a copy, as of a letter, made with carbon paper.
2. any person or thing very much like another. [Colloq.]

çär'bŏn dī·ox'īde, a colorless, odorless gas, CO_2, somewhat heavier than air: it passes out of the lungs in respiration and is absorbed by plants, which convert the carbon into certain carbohydrates and release the oxygen into the air.

çär'bŏn dī·ox'īde snōw, carbon dioxide made solid by great pressure and used as a refrigerant; dry ice.

çär'bŏn dī·sul'fīde, a heavy, volatile, colorless liquid, CS_2, highly inflammable and poisonous, used as a solvent, preservative, insecticide, etc.

çär'bōne, v.t. to cook over coals. [Obs.]

çär·bō·ne'rō, n. [Sp., a charcoal burner.] a fish of the family Carangidæ, having markings of a dark color, common to West Indian waters.

çär·bon'iç, a. 1. of or containing carbon.
2. obtained from carbon.

çär·bon'iç ac'id, a weak, colorless acid, H_2CO_3, formed by the solution of carbon dioxide in water and existing only in solution.

çär·bon'iç-ac'id gas, carbon dioxide.

çär·bon'iç ox'īde, carbon monoxide.

çär'bŏn·īde, n. a carbide. [Rare.]

çär·bŏn·if'ër·ous, a. [L. carbo (-onis), coal, and ferre, to bear.]
1. producing or containing carbon or coal.
2. [C–] designating or of a great coal-making period of the Paleozoic Era: the warm, damp climate produced great forests, which later formed rich coal seams.
the Carboniferous; (a) the Carboniferous Period; (b) the rock and coal strata during this period.
Carboniferous formation; the collective formation of rocks embracing the strata of the Carboniferous Period.

çär"bŏn·i·zā'tion, n. the act or process of carbonizing.

çär'bŏn·īze, v.t.; carbonized, pt., pp.; carbonizing, ppr. 1. to convert into carbon, as by partial burning.
2. to treat, cover, or combine with carbon.
3. to prepare with carbon; as, to carbonize a battery by adding carbon plates.

çär'bŏn mon·ox'īde, a colorless, odorless, highly poisonous gas, CO, produced by the incomplete combustion of any carbonaceous material: it burns with a pale-blue flame.

çär"bŏn·ō·hȳ'drous, a. composed of carbon and hydrogen.

çär'bŏn·om'e·tër, n. [L. carbo (-onis), coal, and metrum, Gr. metron, a measure.] an instrument for determining the presence of carbon or carbon dioxide, and measuring the amount.

çär'bŏn pā'për, 1. very thin paper coated on one side with a carbon preparation or similar dark-colored substance: it is placed between two sheets of paper so that the pressure of writing, drawing, etc. on the upper sheet makes a copy on the lower.
2. paper used in the carbon process.

çär'bŏn point, a pencil of carbon used in the arc light.

çär'bŏn proc'ess, a method of printing light-resisting photographs on paper coated with gelatin and pigment.

çär'bŏn tet·rȧ·chlō'rīde, a noninflammable, colorless liquid, CCl_4, used in fire extinguishers, as a solvent for fats (in cleaning mixtures), etc.

çär'bŏn tis'sūe (tish'ū), a gelatin-coated paper having suitable coloring material, for use in the carbon process.

çär'bŏn·yl, n. [carbon, and -yl.] in chemistry, (a) the bivalent radical CO; (b) any of a series of metal compounds containing this radical.

çär'bŏn·yl chlō'rīde, a colorless, volatile, highly poisonous gas, $COCl_2$, prepared by the reaction of carbon monoxide and chlorine in the presence of activated carbon: also called phosgene.

çär·bŏn·yl'iç, a. of or containing carbonyl.

çär·bō·run'dum, n. a very hard abrasive substance, a compound of carbon and silicon, SiC, made into grindstones, etc.: a trade-mark (Carborundum).

çär·box'īde (or -id), n. carbon and oxygen in combination with some radical; as, potassium carboxide.

çär·box'yl, n. [*carb*on and *ox*ygen, and -yl.] the univalent radical CO_2H, occurring in the fatty acids and most other organic acids.

çär·box·yl'iç, a. of or containing carboxyl.

çär'boy, n. [Per. qarāba, a large bottle.] a large bottle of green glass, enclosed in basketwork or securely boxed for protection: used especially for carrying corrosive liquids, as sulfuric acid.

CARBOY

çär'buñ·cle (-buñk-l), n. [L. carbunculus, a little coal, a gem, from carbo, coal.]
1. any of certain deep-red gems, especially a garnet with a smooth, convex surface.
2. a painful, localized, pus-bearing inflammation of the tissue beneath the skin, more severe than a boil and having several openings.
3. any pimple.
4. in heraldry, a charge or bearing consisting of eight radii, four of which make a common cross, and the other four, a saltier.

çär'buñ·cled (-buñk-ld), a. set with or having carbuncles.

çär·buñ'cū·lär, a. belonging to a carbuncle; resembling a carbuncle; red; inflamed.

çär·buñ·cū·lā'tion, n. the blasting of the young buds of trees or plants, by excessive heat or cold.

çär'bū·ret, n. a carbide.

çär'bū·rẹt (or -ret), v.t.; carbureted or carburetted, pt., pp.; carbureting or carburetting, ppr. 1. to combine chemically with carbon.
2. to mix or charge (gas or air) with volatile compounds of carbon in order to increase the potential heat energy.

çär'bū·rẹ·tănt (or -ret-ănt), n. a substance, as gasoline or benzene, added to air or gas to carburet it.

çär'bū·rẹ·ted, çär'bū·rẹt·ted (or -ret-ed), a. combined with carbon in the manner of a carburet; as, carbureted hydrogen gas.
carbureted hydrogen gas; any of various gaseous compounds of carbon and hydrogen.
heavy carbureted hydrogen; a colorless inflammable gas, C_2H_4, one of the constituents of coal gas; ethylene.
light carbureted hydrogen; a compound of carbon and hydrogen, CH_4, formed in stagnant pools and mines; marsh gas; methane.

çär·bū·rẹ'tion (or -resh'ŏn), n. a carbureting or being carbureted.

çär'bū·rẹ·tŏr, çär'bū·rẹt·tŏr (or -ret-), n. an apparatus for carbureting air or gas; especially, a device in which air is mixed with gasoline spray to make an explosive mixture in an internal-combustion engine.

çär"bū·ri·zā'tion, n. a carburizing or being carburized.

çär'bū·rīze, v.t.; carburized, pt., pp.; carburizing, ppr. [from Fr. carbure, carbide, hydrocarbon; and -ize.] to treat or combine with carbon; especially, to treat (iron) by heating in contact with carbon in making case-hardened steel.

çär"byl·ȧ·mïne' (or -am'in), [from carbyl.] any of a group of organic cyanides, containing the radical NC.

çär′çȧ·jöu, n. [Fr., from native Ind. name.] 1. the wolverine. 2. loosely, the cougar, the Canadian lynx, or the American badger.

çär′çȧ·net, n. [a dim. from Fr. carcan, the collar of a criminal, a carcanet; LL. carcannum, the throat.] an ornamental collar, band, or necklace, usually of gold and often jeweled.

çär′çăss, çär′çăse, n. [Fr. carcasse; It. carcassa, a bomb, shell; OFr. carquais.] 1. the dead body of an animal. The word is applied to the living or dead body of the human species in scornful or humorous usage. 2. the worthless remains of something, especially its outer shell or semblance. 3. the framework, skeleton, or base structure, as of a ship, building, tire, etc. 4. in military usage, formerly, an iron case or hollow vessel, about the size of a bomb, of an oval figure, filled with combustibles and other substances, as saltpeter, gunpowder, sulfur, broken glass, turpentine, etc., to be thrown from a mortar.

çär·çȧ·vel′hōs (-yōs), n. [Port., from Carcavelhos, a village in Portugal.] a sweet wine produced in Portugal.

çär′cel, n. [named after Carcel, a French inventor.] a standard of luminous intensity used in France, equal to nine and one-half candle power, or the light of a Carcel lamp.

Carcel lamp; a lamp in which the oil is raised through tubes by clockwork, producing a very brilliant light.

çär′cel·āġe, n. [L. carcer, a prison.] prison fees. [Obs.]

çär′cēr, n. [L.] in ancient Rome, (a) a starting post; (b) a prison.

çär′cēr·ăl, a. belonging to a prison.

Çär·çhar′ō·don, n. [L., from Gr. karcharodōn, with sharp, jagged teeth; karcharos, sharp, and odous, odontos, tooth.] a genus of nearly extinct man-eating sharks of great size; the only living species is Carcharodon rondeleti.

çär·çhar′ō·dont, a. 1. pertaining to the genus Carcharodon. 2. having pointed teeth, as a serpent.

çär·cin′ō·ġen, n. [*carcino*ma, and -gen.] any substance that produces cancer.

çär′ci·noid, a. [Gr. karkinos, crab, and eidos, form.] resembling a carcinoma: usually applied to certain benign tumors.

çär″ci·nō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. pertaining to carcinology.

çär·ci·nol′ō·ġy, n. [Gr. karkinos, a crab, and -logia, from legein, to speak.] the branch of zoology relating to lobsters and crabs, or the crustaceans: called also crustaceology.

çär·ci·nō′mȧ, çär·ci·nō′mȧs or çär·ci·nō′mȧ·tȧ, [Gr. karkinōma, a cancer, from karkinoun, to affect with a cancer, from karkinos, a crab, cancer.] any of several kinds of epithelial cancer.

çär″ci·nō″mȧ·tō′sis, n. a condition in which cancers are spread extensively throughout the body.

çär·ci·nom′ȧ·tous, a. of, having the nature of, or affected by cancer.

Çar″ci·nō·mor′phȧ, n.pl. [Gr. karkinos, a crab, and morphē, form.] a group of crustaceans including the common crab: called also Brachyura.

Cē·ras′ti·um, n. [from Gr. keras, a horn, so called from the horn-shaped capsules of many of the species.] mouse-ear chickweed, a genus of plants, natural order Caryophyllaceæ, consisting of many pubescent herbs with small leaves and white flowers. The plants are common weeds in all temperate and cold regions.

WATER MOUSE-EAR CHICKWEED (Cerastium aquaticum) cer′at-, cerato-.

cer′ă·tà, n.pl.; sing. cer′as, [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn.] in zoology, the notal projections or papillae of the Ceratobranchia.

cē′rāte, n. [L. ceratus, pp. of cerare, to wax; cera, wax.] a thick kind of ointment composed of a fat, as oil, lard, etc., mixed with wax, resin, and other ingredients, applied externally in various diseases.

cē′rāte, a. in zoology, possessing a cere.

cē′rā·ted, a. [L. ceratus, pp. of cerare, to cover with wax; cera, wax.]
1. covered with wax.
2. having a cere.

cer′ă·tin, n. keratin.

cer·ă·tī′tis, n. keratitis.

cē·rā′ti·um (-shi-um), n.; pl. cē·rā′ti·ă, [Gr. keration, dim. of keras, keratos, a horn.] in botany, a pod or capsule resembling a silique, but having no dividing wall.

cer′ă·tō-, [from Gr. keras, keratos, a horn.] a combining form meaning horn, hornlike: also, before a vowel, cerat-, as in *Cerat*odus.

Cer″ă·tō·brañ′çhi·ă, n.pl. [cerato-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] a group of mollusks, having gills situated on the back or sides and without protecting shell or covering.

cer″ă·tō·brañ′çhi·ăl, a. pertaining to the lower of the two bony pieces which form the branchial arches in fishes.

Cer·ă·tō′dà, n.pl. same as Ceratospongiæ.

cer′ă·tōde, n. keratode.

cē·rat′ō·dont, a. pertaining to Ceratodus.

Cē·rat′ō·dus, n. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn, and odous, odontos, a tooth.]
1. a genus of dipnoan fishes (with gills and lungs) of which the Australian salmon or barramunda is typical.
2. [c–] a fish of this genus.

cer·ă·toġ′e·nous, a. keratogenous.

cer″ă·tō·hў′ăl, a. [cerato-, and Gr. hyoeidēs, from the letter Υ, and eidos, form.] in anatomy, pertaining to the smaller and anterior cornu of the hyoid arch.

cer″ă·tō·hў′ăl, n. the lesser cornu of the hyoid arch.

cer′ă·toid, a. [Gr. keratoeidēs, hornlike; keras, a horn, and eidos, form.] horny.

Cer·ă·toi′dē·à, n.pl. same as Ceratospongiæ.

cer′ă·tōme, n. same as keratome.

Cer″ă·tō·phyl·lā′cē·ae, n.pl. [cerato-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] a family of plants, containing a single genus with only one species, Ceratophyllum demersum (hornwort). It is common in pools and streams.

cer·ă·toph′yl·lous, a. having linear leaves resembling horns; pertaining to the Ceratophyllum.

Cer″ă·tō·phyl′lum, n. [cerato-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] a genus of aquatic plants belonging to the family Ceratophyllaceæ.

cer′ă·tō·phўte, n. [cerato-, and Gr. phyton, a plant.] in zoology, a coral having an interior axis of horny fibers.

Cer·ă·tō′sà, n.pl. same as Ceratospongiæ.

cer″ă·tō·sau′rus, n. [cerato-, and Gr. sauros, a lizard.] an American species of dinosaur whose skull exhibits a bony horn core.

cer′ă·tōse, a. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn.]
1. horny.

ç̣hlam'y·dāte, a. [L. chlamydatus, dressed in a cloak, from chlamys, Gr. chlamys, a cloak.] in zoology, having a mantle: said of certain mollusks.
ç̣hlà·myd'ē·ous, a. [Gr. chlamys, cloak.] in botany, pertaining to the floral envelope of a plant.
ç̣hlam'y·dēş, n. alternative plural of chlamys.
Ç̣hlam·y·doph'ō·rus, n. [Gr. chlamys, a cloak, and phoros, bearing, from pherein, to bear.] a genus of small South American armadillos, covered with a shell or coat of leathery plates.
ç̣hlam'y·dō·spōre, n. [Gr. chlamys, cloak, and sporos, a sowing.]
1. in biology, a spore furnished with protective envelopes.
2. one of certain protected spores generated in certain fungi.
ç̣hlā'mys, n.; pl. ç̣hlā'mys·ēş, ç̣hlam'y·dēş, [L., from Gr. chlamys, a military cloak.] a short mantle clasped at the shoulder, worn by men in ancient Greece.

CHLAMYS

ç̣hlō·aş'mà, n. [Gr. chloazein, to be or become green.] in medicine, a disease of the skin characterized by yellow patches.
ç̣hlōr-, chloro-.
ç̣hlōr·à·cē'tiç (or -cet'ic), a. [chlor-, and L. acetum, vinegar.] in chemistry, pertaining to or obtained from chlorine and acetic acid.
chloracetic acid; an acid formed by the action of chlorine on acetic acid.
ç̣hlō'răl, n. [chlor- and *al*cohol.]
1. a thin, oily, colorless liquid, CCl_3CHO, obtained by the action of chlorine on alcohol. It has a pungent odor and a dry, bitter taste.
2. chloral hydrate.
ç̣hlō'răl hȳ'drāte, a colorless, crystalline compound, $CCl_3{\cdot}CH(OH)_2$, produced by the reaction of water and chloral: used chiefly as a sedative.
ç̣hlō'răl·işm, n. an unhealthy condition of the system produced by excessive use of chloral.
ç̣hlōr·al'um, n. a disinfectant and antiseptic containing chloride of aluminum, of which it is an aqueous solution.
ç̣hlō·rà·mīne' (or klōr-ăm'in), n. [chlor-, and amine.] a colorless, pungent liquid, NH_2Cl, obtained by the action of ammonia on some hypochlorite.
ç̣hlōr"am·phen'i·çol, n. [chlor-, and *am*id, and phen-, and *nit*r-, and gly*col.*] an antibiotic drug, $C_{11}H_{12}Cl_2N_2O_5$, prepared synthetically or isolated from a bacillus (Streptomyces venezuelae): used against many bacterial and rickettsial diseases and some viruses.
ç̣hlōr·an'il, n. [chlor- and aniline, from Ar. an-nil, the indigo plant.] a yellow crystalline compound, obtained by the action of chlorine on phenol and other benzene derivatives, as aniline.
Ç̣hlō·ran·thā'cē·ae, n.pl. a family of tropical aromatic plants and small trees, of which Chloranthus is typical.
Ç̣hlō·ran'thus, n. [chlor-, and Gr. anthos, flower.] a small genus of perennial plants of the family Chloranthaceæ, natives of Asia, and having spicy and tonic qualities.
ç̣hlō·ran'thy, n. see chlorosis.
ç̣hlō'rāte, n. a salt of chloric acid.
ç̣hlōr·cȳ'çli·zine, n. [chlor-, and cyclo-, and -i-, and piper*azine.*] an antihistamine, $C_{18}H_{21}ClN_2$, for treating allergies and insect bites.
ç̣hlōr'dāne, n. [chlor-, and in*dane*, a derivative of indene.] a chlorinated, highly poisonous, volatile oil, $C_{10}H_6Cl_8$, used as an insecticide, especially against soil grubs. Also ç̣hlōr'dan.
ç̣hlōr·hȳ'driç, a. same as hydrochloric.
ç̣hlōr·hȳ'drin, n. [chlor-, and Gr. hydōr, water.] any one of a class of compounds formed by the substitution of chlorine for one to three hydroxyl groups in glycerin, etc.
ç̣hlō'riç, a. [chlor-, and -ic.]
1. of, obtained from, or containing chlorine with a higher valence than that in corresponding chlorous compounds.
2. designating or of a colorless acid, $HClO_3$, whose salts are chlorates.
chloric ether; a compound made by subjecting alcohol to the action of hydrochloric acid; ethyl chloride. The name is also given to spirits of chloroform.
ç̣hlō'ri·dāte, v.t. same as chloridize.
ç̣hlō'rīde, ç̣hlō'rid, n. [chlor-, and -ide.] a compound in which chlorine is combined with another element or radical (e.g., a salt of hydrochloric acid).
ç̣hlō'rīde of līme, calcium chloride, $CaOCl_2$, a white powder obtained by treating slaked lime with chlorine, used for disinfecting and bleaching.
ç̣hlō'rid·īze, v.t.; chloridized, pt., pp.; chloridizing, ppr. to subject to or sensitize with a chloride; as, in photography, to chloridize a plate with chloride of silver.
ç̣hlō·rim'e·try, n. see chlorometry.
ç̣hlō'rin·āte, v.t.; chlorinated, pt., pp.; chlorinating, ppr. to treat or combine (a substance) with chlorine; especially, to pass chlorine into (water or sewage) for purification.

chlō·ri·nā′tion, n. the act or process of chlorinating, or subjecting anything to the action of chlorine. In mining, chlorination is used for the extraction of gold and silver from certain ores.

ch̨lō′rïne, ch̨lō′rin, n. [chlor-, and -ine.] a greenish-yellow, poisonous, gaseous chemical element with a disagreeable odor, used in the preparation of bleaching agents, in water purification, in various industrial processes, as a lung irritant in chemical warfare, etc.: symbol, Cl; atomic weight, 35.457; atomic number, 17.

ch̨lōr·i·od′ic, a. compounded of or containing chlorine and iodine.

ch̨lō′rīte, n. [L. chloritis; Gr. chlōritis, a light green stone, from chlōros, light green.] a bright-green, complex silicate mineral, similar in structure to the micas.

ch̨lō′rīte, n. [chlor-, and -ite.] a salt of chlorous acid.

ch̨lō·rit′iç, a. pertaining to or containing chlorite; as, chloritic sand.

ch̨lō′ri·toid, n. a chloritic mineral, shading from dark gray to greenish black in color and found in scales easily broken or split. It is a hydrous silicate of alumina, iron, and magnesia: also called brittle mica.

ch̨lō′rō-, [from Gr. chlōros, pale green.] a combining form meaning (a) green, as in chlorophyll, chlorosis; (b) chlorine, having chlorine as an ingredient, as in chloroform. Also, before a vowel, chlor-.

ch̨lō·rō·cru′ō·rin, n. [chloro-, and L. cruor, blood.] a green coloring matter supposed to produce the green tinge of the blood in certain marine worms.

ch̨lō′rō·dȳne, n. a powerful anodyne remedy formerly much used, containing opium, chloroform, Indian hemp, etc.

ch̨lō′rō·form, n. [chloro-, and formyl, from L. formica, an ant.] trichloromethane, or formyl trichloride, $CHCl_3$; a colorless, volatile liquid of a sweetish taste. It is used as an anesthetic in surgical operations, and as a solvent.

ch̨lō′rō·form, v.t.; chloroformed, pt., pp.; chloroforming, ppr. 1. to anesthetize with chloroform.
2. to kill with chloroform.

ch̨lō″rō·fȯr′miç, a. containing or pertaining to chloroform or its use.

ch̨lō′rō·form·ism, n. in medicine, the unhealthy condition resulting from the habitual use of chloroform.

ch̨lō′rō·form″ist, n. the person giving chloroform as an anesthetic.

ch̨lō″rō·ġen′iç, a. in chemistry, pertaining to or designating a crystalline, colorless, tanninlike acid obtained from coffee berries or a similar source.

ch̨lō″rō·hy″drō·çär′bŏn, n. in chemistry, any chlorine derivative of a hydrocarbon.

ch̨lō″rō·ī′ō·dīde, n. in chemistry, an iodochloride.

ch̨lō·rō′mȧ, n. [Gr. chlōros, yellowish green.] a fleshy tumor of a greenish color, occurring usually in the membranes of the skull.

ch̨lō·rom′e·tẽr, n. [chloro-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] an instrument for testing the bleaching powers of chloride of lime.

ch̨lō·rom′e·try, n. the process for testing the bleaching power of any combination of chlorine.

ch̨lō″rō·mȳ·cē′tin, n. [chloro-, and -mycete, and -in.] a synthesized antibiotic drug used in the treatment of rickettsial and virus diseases.

ch̨lō·rō′păl, n. [chloro-, and L. opalus, opal; Gr. opallios, a rock, stone, precious stone.] a greenish, earthy mineral, consisting of silica and oxide of iron, with eighteen to twenty per cent of water.

ch̨lō′rō·phāne, n. [chloro-, and Gr. -phanēs, evident; from phainein, to show.]
1. a variety of fluor spar, from Siberia. When placed on a heated iron it gives a beautiful emerald-green light.
2. the pigment in the inner portion of the cones of the retina, yellowish-green in color.

Ch̨lō·rō·phyc′ē·ae (-fis′ē-ē), n.pl. [chloro-, and Gr. phykos, seaweed.] a large group of green algae or seaweeds.

ch̨lō·rō·phy′ceous (-fish′us), a. pertaining to the Chlorophyceæ.

ch̨lō′rō·phyll, ch̨lō′rō·phyl, n. [Fr. chlorophylle; Gr. chlōros, green, and phyllon, leaf.] the green coloring matter contained in plants: in the presence of sunlight it converts carbon dioxide and water into carbohydrates. It is used as a dye and in medicine, and certain derivatives, commercially added to various products, are claimed to eliminate offensive odors.

CHLOROPHYLL
a, spiral bands of chlorophyll in Spirogyra b, irregular mass in Zygnema c, granules in cells of the leaf ch̨lō·rō·phyl′li·ăn, a. chlorophyllose.

ch̨lō″rō·phyl·lif′ẽr·ous, a. containing chlorophyll.

ch̨lō″rō·phyl·liġ′e·nous, a. [L., from Gr. chlōro-, green, and phyllon, a leaf, and -genēs, producing.] producing chlorophyll; produced by chlorophyll.

ch̨lō·rō·phyl′loid, a. [chloro-, and Gr. phyllon, leaf, and eidos, form.] resembling chlorophyll.

ch̨lō·rō·phyl′lōse, ch̨lō·rō·phyl′lous, a. 1. of or like chlorophyll.
2. having chlorophyll.

ch̨lō·rō·piç′rin, n. [from chloro-, and picric, and -in.] a colorless liquid, CCl_3NO_2, prepared by treating chloroform with concentrated nitric acid, and used in chemical warfare as a gas to cause vomiting: also called nitrochloroform.

ch̨lō′rō·plast, n. [chloro-, and -plast.] an oval, chlorophyll-bearing body found outside the nucleus in a cell.

ch̨lō·rō·plas′tid, n. same as chloroplast.

ch̨lō″rō·plȧ·tin′iç, a. designating an acid, composed of platinum chloride and hydrochloric acid, produced in the form of reddish-brown crystals, and largely used as a reagent.

ch̨lō′rō·prēne, n. [chloro-, and isoprene.] in chemistry, a colorless liquid obtained from acetylene and hydrochloric acid having the formula C_4H_5Cl: it can be polymerized to form a synthetic rubber.

ch̨lō·rō′sis, n. [Mod.L.; see chloro- and -osis.]
1. the green sickness, a kind of anemia sometimes affecting girls at puberty, characterized by a pale or greenish hue of the skin, weakness, palpitation, dyspepsia, etc.
2. in botany, (a) a disease of plants in which the green parts lose their color or turn yellow; (b) the transformation of the normally colored floral organs of a plant into green leaves; chloranthy.

ch̨lō·rot′iç, a. 1. pertaining to chlorosis.
2. affected by chlorosis.

ch̨lō′rous, a. [chlor-, and -ous.]
1. of, obtained from, or containing chlorine with a lower valence than that in corresponding chloric compounds.
2. designating or of an acid, $HClO_2$, whose salts are chlorites.

ch̨lōr·piç′rin, n. chloropicrin.

chōak, v. to choke. [Obs.]

ch̨ō′ȧ·nȧ, n.; pl. ch̨ō′ȧ·nae, [Gr. choanē, funnel.]
1. in anatomy, a funnellike opening; specifically, one of the funnellike nasal cavities.
2. the collarlike rim encircling the flagellum of some kinds of Infusoria.

ch̨ō′ȧ·nāte, a. relating to or formed like a choana.

ch̨ō′an·īte, n. a fossil zoophyte resembling a sponge.

ch̨ō′ȧ·noid, a. [Gr. choanē, a funnel, and eidos, form.] having the shape of a funnel: specifically applied to a hollow muscle attached to the ball of the eye in a number of reptiles and mammals.

ch̨ō′çärd, n. a kind of crow; the chough.

chock, v.t.; chocked (chokt), pt., pp.; chocking, ppr. 1. to make fast or to stop, with a block or wedge; as, to chock a wheel or a barrel.
2. to place (a vessel) on chocks.

chock, v.i. [from choke; ME. choken; AS. ceocian, to choke, fill up.]

1. bile; choler. [Obs.]
2. any of several intestinal diseases, (a) cholera morbus; (b) Asiatic cholera, an infectious disease, usually fatal, characterized by violent diarrhea and vomiting, muscular cramps, and collapse.

chicken cholera; an infectious, usually fatal, disease peculiar to fowls.

cholera bacillus; see comma bacillus.

cholera infantum; the "summer complaint" of infants and young children, an intestinal disease occurring in warm weather, and characterized by pain, vomiting, diarrhea, fever, and prostration.

cholera morbus; a noninfectious, rarely fatal cholera, with diarrhea and cramps: it is usually caused by contaminated foods: also called sporadic cholera, bilious cholera.

cholera nostras; same as cholera morbus.

hog cholera; a contagious disease affecting swine, characterized by a high fever, inflammation of the digestive and respiratory organs, diarrhea, cough, and the effusion of blood into the mucous membranes and skin: called also swine plague.

sporadic cholera; same as cholera morbus.

chol·ēr·ā'ic, a. pertaining to cholera; resulting from cholera.

choleric, a. [ME. colerik; OFr. colerique; L. cholericus, bilious, choleric; Gr. cholerikos, resembling the cholera, from cholera, cholera.]
1. bilious; causing biliousness. [Obs.]
2. easily irritated; irascible; inclined to anger; as, a choleric man.
3. angry; indicating anger; excited by anger; as, a choleric speech.

chol'ēr·ic·ly, adv. in a choleric manner; irascibly; angrily.

chol'ēr·ic·ness, n. irascibility; anger; peevishness.

chol'ēr·i·form, a. resembling cholera.

chol·ēr·ig'e·nous, a. producing or generating cholera.

chol'ēr·ine, n. 1. a mild form of Asiatic cholera; also, the initial diarrheal stage of epidemic cholera.
2. the precursory symptoms of cholera.

chol'ēr·oid, a. resembling cholera.

chō·les·ter'ic, a. pertaining to cholesterol, or obtained from it; as, cholesteric acid.

chō·les'tēr·in, chō·les'tēr·ine, n. same as cholesterol.

chrō'mà·sçōpe, n. [chroma-, and Gr. skopein, to view.] an instrument for showing the various optical effects of color and colored light.

chrō'mat-, same as chromato-.

chrō'māte, n. a salt formed by chromic acid, producing compounds used in dyeing and as pigments.

1. of or containing color or colors.
2. in biology, readily stained.
3. in music, (a) using or progressing by half tones; as, a chromatic scale; (b) producing all the tones of such a scale; as, a chromatic instrument.
chromatic aberration; a property of lenses that causes the various colors in a beam of light to be focused at different points, thus causing a spectrum to appear.
chromatic printing; any method of color printing; specifically, the use of several plates printing different colors so as to blend and produce varying tints.
chromatic scale; in music, the scale embracing thirteen successive half tones to the octave.
chromatic semitone; the difference in pitch between a note and its sharp or flat.
chromatic sign; in music, an accidental.

chrō·mat'iç, n. in music, a tone modified by an accidental.

chrō·mat'iç·ăl, a. same as chromatic.

chrō·mat'iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. in a chromatic manner.
2. in a chromatic scale.

chrō·mat'içs, n. [construed as sing.] the science of colors.

chrō'mà·tin, n. [Gr. chrōma, color, and -in.] in biology, the protoplasmic substance in the nucleus of a cell, which is most subject to the action of dyes: chromatin contains the genes.

chrō'mà·tişm, n. [Gr. chrōmatismos, coloring, from chrōmatizein, to color.]
1. chromatic aberration.
2. in botany, abnormal coloration in parts of a plant ordinarily green.

chrō'mà·tō-, [from Gr. chrōma, chrōmatos, a color.] a combining form meaning (a) color or pigmentation, as in *chromat*ology; (b) chromatin, as in *chromat*olysis. Also, before a vowel, chromat-.

chrō·mà·toġ'e·nous, a. [chromato-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.] yielding color.

chrō'mà·tō·ġràph, n. [chromato-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] an instrument designed to show the synthetical production of color tones by the rotation of a circular disk bearing any combination of colors.

chrō·mà·toġ'rà·phy, n. [chromato-, and Gr. graphē, a representation, from graphein, to write.]
1. a treatise on colors.
2. chromatics.

chrō·mà·tol'ō·ġy, n. [chromato-, and Gr. logos, a description.] chromatography.

chrō·mà·tol'y·sis, n. [chromato-, and -lysis.] in medicine, the breakdown and dissolution of the chromatin in the cell nucleus.

chrō·mà·tom'e·tēr, n. [chromato-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] an arrangement of various colors which serve by comparison to classify other colors; a scale for colors.

chrō'mà·tō·phōre, n. [chromato-, and Gr. -phoros, bearing, from pherein, to bear.]
1. in zoology, a pigment cell capable of contraction and expansion with consequent change of color, as in the chameleon.
2. in botany, a cell having coloring matter in its composition.

chrō'mà·tō·sçōpe, n. [chromato-, and Gr. skopein, to view.]
1. in astronomy, a reflecting and revolving telescope by which the observer views a star as a ring of light instead of a point.
2. a chromatograph.

chrō·mà·tos'cō·py, n. the study of color or of star scintillation by means of the chromatoscope.

chrō'mà·trōpe, n. [chroma-, and Gr. tropē, a turn, from trepein, to turn.]
1. an instrument consisting of disks on which arcs of colors are so arranged that, when rotated rapidly, they present the appearance of streams of colors flowing to or from their center.
2. a kaleidoscopic attachment for a magic lantern.

chrō'mà·tȳpe, n. same as chromotype.

chrōme, v.t.; chromed, pt., pp.; chroming, ppr.
1. to treat with a compound of chromium, as potassium dichromate, used in dyeing and oxidizing.
2. to plate with chromium.

chrōme, n. [L. chromium, from Gr. chrōma, color.]
1. chromium.
2. chrome yellow.

-chrōme, [from Gr. chrōma, a color.] a suffix meaning: (a) color, coloring agent, as in uro*chrome*; (b) chromium, as in ferro*chrome.*

chrōme al'um, a crystallizable double salt formed from chromium and potassium.

chrōme green, a dark green pigment prepared from, usually, chromic oxide and cobaltic oxide.

chrōme i'ron, chromite (the mineral): also chrome iron ore.

chrōme leath'ẽr, leather tanned with chromium salts.

chrōme red, any of various red pigments prepared from basic chromate of lead.

chrōme steel, a very strong, hard alloy steel that contains chromium.

chrōme yel'lō, a neutral chromate of lead, used as a yellow pigment.

chrō'miç, a. relating to or derived from chromium; especially, designating compounds of chromium in which the valence of chromium is higher than in the corresponding chromous compounds.

chromic acid; an acid, H_2CrO_4, whose salts are chromates.

chromic anhydrid; a crimson-red substance, CrO_3, readily forming chromic acid.

chrō'mid, n. a fish of the family Chromides.

Chrom'i·dēs, Chrom'i·dae, n.pl. [Gr. chromis, a kind of sea fish, and eidos, resemblance.] a family of teleostean fishes, generally inhabiting tropical waters, allied to the Labridæ, or true wrasses.

chrō·mid'i·um, n.; pl. chrō·mid'i·à, [dim., from Gr. chrōma, color.] in algae, one of the asexually produced reproductive cells.

chrō·mi·drō'sis, n. [Gr. chrōma, color, and hidrōs, sweat.] a condition characterized by abnormally colored perspiration.

chrō'mism, n. same as chromatism.

chrō'mīte, n. 1. a black mineral, the chief source of chromium, $FeCr_2O_4$, with a metallic luster and an uneven fracture.

2. a salt of chromous acid.

chrō'mi·um, n. [L., from Gr. chrōma, color.] a white, crystalline, very hard, metallic chemical element with a high resistance to corrosion: used in chromium electroplating, in alloy steel, and in alloys containing nickel, copper, manganese, and other metals: symbol, Cr; atomic weight, 52.01; atomic number, 24.

chrō'mi·um-plāt'ed, a. plated with chromium.

chrō'mi·um steel, chrome steel.

chrō'mō, n.; pl. chrō'mōs, a chromolithograph.

chrō'mō-, [from Gr. chrōma, a color.] a combining form meaning color, colored, pigment, pigmentation, as in *chromo*some, *chromo*lithograph: also, before a vowel, chrom-.

chrō'mō·blast, n. [chromo-, and Gr. blastos, a bud, shoot.] a pigmented connective tissue cell, as in the skin of snakes.

chrō'mō·gen, n. [chromo-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.] any substance that can become a pigment or coloring matter, as a substance in organic fluids that forms colored compounds when oxidized, or a compound, not itself a dye, that can become a dye.

chrō·mō·gen'iç, a. 1. pertaining to chromogen or chromogens.

2. producing a color or pigment, as certain bacteria.

chrō'mō·gràph, n. [chromo-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] a hectograph.

chrō·mō·leū'cīte, n. [chromo-, and Gr. leukos, white.] a chromoplast.

chrō·mō·lip'oid, n. [chromo-, and Gr. lipoid.] same as lipochrome.

chrō·mō·lith'ō·gràph, n. a picture obtained by means of chromolithography.

chrō"mō·li·thog'rà·phēr, n. one who practices chromolithography.

chrō"mō·lith·ō·graph'iç, a. relating to chromolithography or chromolithographs.

chrō"mō·li·thog'rà·phy, n. [chromo-, and Gr. lithos, a stone, and graphein, to write.] a method of producing a colored lithographic picture, by using a series of stone or zinc plates having different portions of the picture drawn upon them with inks of various colors and so arranged as to blend into a complete picture.

chrō'mō·mēre, n. [chromo-, and Gr. meros, part.] in physiology and pathology, one of the small particles of chromatin of which a chromosome is formed.

chrō'mō·phāne, n. [chromo-, and Gr. phainein, to appear.] the coloring matter in the retinal cones of certain animals.

chrō·moph'i·lous, a. [chromo-, and Gr. philos, friendly.] readily stained or colored.

chrō'mō·phōre, n. any chemical group which, aside from its chemical action, imparts a color to a compound and unites with certain other groups to form dyes.

chrō·mō·phō'tō·gràph, n. [chromo- and photograph, from Gr. phos, light, and graphein, to write, to represent.] any photograph reproducing the original colors.

chrō"mō·phō·tog'rà·phy, n. the art or science of making chromophotographs.

chrō"mō·phō"tō·lith'ō·gràph, n. a photolithograph which is printed in colors.

chrō'mō·plaṣm, n. [chromo-, and -plasm.] chromatin.

chrō'mō·plast, n. [chromo-, and -plast.]

1. in biology, any pigmented body found in the cell outside the nucleus.

2. in botany, a granule containing a pigment other than green.

chrō·mō·plas'tid, n. same as chromoplast.

chrō·mop·tom'e·tēr, n. [chromo-, and Gr. optikos, of seeing, and metron, a measure.] a device for determining the keenness of the color sense.

chrō'mō·sō·măl, a. of a chromosome or chromosomes.

chrō'mō·sōme, n. [chromo-, and Gr. sōma, the body.] any of the microscopic rod-shaped bodies into which the chromatin separates during mitosis: they carry the genes that convey hereditary characteristics, and are constant in number for each species.

chrō'mō·sphēre, n. [chromo-, and Gr. sphaira, a sphere.] the reddish gaseous envelope surrounding the body of the sun, through which the light of the photosphere passes; also, a similar envelope surrounding a star.

chrō·mō·spher'iç, a. relating to or like a chromosphere.

chrō·mō·ther'à·py, n. the treatment of disease by colored lights.

chrō'mō·tȳpe, n. [chromo-, and Gr. typos, an impression.]

1. a print made by any color process.

2. a chromophotograph.

chrō'mous (-mus), a. relating to or denoting chromium, especially chromium compounds in which the valence of chromium is lower than in corresponding chromic compounds.

chrō·mō·xȳ'lō·gràph (-zī'), n. [chromo-, and Gr. xylon, wood, and graphein, to write, represent.] a color picture printed from a number of wooden blocks.

chrō'mūle, n. [Gr. chrōma, color, and hylē, matter.] any coloring substance in plants other than chlorophyll. [Obs.]

chrō'myl, n. [chrom-, and -yl.] in chemistry, the divalent radical CrO_2.

chron-, same as chrono-.

chrō·nax'i·à, n. [chron-, and Gr. axia, value.] the minimum time necessary to excite a tissue, such as muscle or nerve tissue, with an electric current of twice the minimum potential for stimulation: used as an index of tissue excitability.

chrō'nax·ie, chrō'nax·y, n. same as chronaxia.

chron'ic, a. [ME. cronike, cronyke; L. chronicus; Gr. chronikos, chronic, of or for the time, from chronos, time.]

1. perpetual; habitual; constant.

cis′soid, n. [Gr. kissoeidēs, like ivy; kissos, ivy, and eidos, form.] in geometry, a curve of the second order, invented by Diocles. In the diameter, A B, of a circle described about C, take B M = A N, and erect the ordinates M Q = N R, and join A Q; the locus of the point P, in which the line A Q cuts the ordinate N R, is the cissoid. To find its equation, let A N = x, P N = y, A C = a, then since $\frac{P\,N = y}{A\,N = x} = \frac{Q\,M = \sqrt{2ax-x^2}}{A\,M = 2a-x}$ the equation is $y^2(2a-x)=x^3$. The curve has an equal branch on the other side of A B; the two branches meet in a cusp at point A, and have the line H K as an asymptote. The area included between the curve and the asymptote is three times the area of the generating circle. In the cissoid of Diocles the generating curve is a circle, but this term has been applied in later times to all curves described in a similar manner, where the generating curve is not a circle.

cis′soid, a. designating the angle formed by the concave sides of two intersecting curves: opposed to sistroid.
