to lock up a form; in printing, to fix the types or pages in a mental frame so as to prepare them for the press.

lock, v.i. 1. to become locked.
2. to be capable of being locked.
3. to intertwine or interlock; to link together.
4. to close tightly and firmly; as, his jaws locked.
5. to jam, as gears.
6. in fencing, to engage.

lock'ăġe, n. 1. materials for locks in a canal; works which form a lock on a canal.
2. the act of moving a ship from one water level to another by means of a lock.
3. the construction or operation of locks in a canal, etc.
4. toll paid for passing the locks of a canal.
5. elevation or amount of elevation and descent made by the locks of a canal.

lock bāy, the water held by a lock.

lock chām'bēr, the space surrounded by the walls and gates of a canal lock.

lock'ēr, n. 1. one who or that which locks.
2. a chest, closet, compartment, drawer, etc., usually of metal, which can be fastened with a lock, especially such a container for individual use.
3. a chest or compartment in a ship's cabin to store things in.

4. in ecclesiastical usage, a recess or niche near the altar intended as a depository for water, oil, etc.

chain locker; the locker that holds the chain cables of a ship.

Davy Jones's locker; see under Davy Jones.

not a shot in the locker; not a cent in the pocket.

lock'ēr room, a room equipped with lockers, especially one used as a place for changing and storing one's clothes, as in a gymnasium, club, etc.

lock'et, n. [ME. loket; OFr. locquet, loquet, dim. of loc, a latch, lock.]

1. a small, hinged case of gold, silver, or other metal, for holding a picture, lock of hair, etc.: it is usually worn suspended from a necklace.

2. a small lock; a catch or spring to fasten a necklace or other ornament. [Obs.]

3. that part of a sword scabbard where the hook is attached.

lock'hōle, n. 1. a keyhole. [Obs.]

2. the recess into which the lock of a gunstock fits.

lock hos'pi·tăl, a hospital for the treatment of venereal diseases. [Brit.]

Lock'i·ăn, a. of or pertaining to John Locke (1632–1704), an English philosopher.

Lock'i·ăn, n. a follower of John Locke.

lock'ing pal'let, a detent tooth in the escapement of chronometers and watches which engages the scape-wheel teeth in succession.

lock'ing plāte, 1. a rub iron.

2. a nut lock.

3. in a clock, the notched wheel that regulates the number of strokes.

lock'jaw, n. [short for earlier locked jaw.] a form of the disease tetanus, in which the jaws become firmly closed because of spasmodic muscular contraction.

lock'less, a. without a lock.

lock'măn, n. 1. in Scotland, a public executioner. [Obs.]

2. in the Isle of Man, a coroner's summoner.

lock'nut, n. a lock nut.

lock nut, 1. a thin nut screwed down hard on an ordinary nut to prevent the latter from working loose.

2. a specially designed nut that locks itself when screwed down tight.

lock'out, n. the refusal by an employer to allow his employees to come in to work unless they agree to his terms.

lock plāte, the plate to which the lock of a gun is fastened.

lock rāil, the rail of a door to which the lock is fastened.

lock'răm, n. [Fr. locrenan, a kind of unbleached linen, from Locrenan, in Brittany, the place where it was made.]

1. a sort of coarse linen.

2. nonsense; gibberish. [Brit. Dial.]

lock'smith, n. one whose work is making or repairing locks and keys.

lock step, a method of marching in such close file that the corresponding legs of the marchers must keep step precisely.

lock stitch, a stitch, as by a sewing machine, in which two threads are interlocked at short intervals.

lock'up, n. 1. a locking up.

2. a being locked up, as in a jail.

3. a jail.

lock'y, a. having locks or tufts.

lō'çō, n. [Sp. loco, mad, insane.]

1. same as locoweed.

2. loco disease.

lō'çō, v.t.; locoed, pt., pp.; locoing, ppr. 1. to poison with locoweed; to affect with the loco disease.

2. to craze. [Slang.]

lō'cō, a. crazy; demented. [Slang.]

lō'cō-, [from L. locus, a place.] a combining form, meaning: (a) from place to place, as in locomotive; (b) a particular place, as in locodescriptive.

lō'çō cī·tā'tō, [L.] in the place cited or quoted: used in footnotes to refer to a previously cited passage.

lō"cō·dē·sçrip'tive, a. [loco-, and descriptive.] describing a particular place or places.

lō'çō diş·ēaşe', n. a chronic nervous disease of horses, cattle, and sheep, caused by locoweed poisoning.

lō·çō·fō'çō, n.; pl. lō·çō·fō'çōş, [a term coined in 1834 on the model of locomotive (which was interpreted to mean self-moving), and applied to a cigar with a self-lighting composition at the end of it; from L. locus, place, and It. fuoco, fire; LL. focus, fire, from L. focus, hearth.]

1. a friction match; also, a kind of self-lighting cigar. [Obs.]

2. (a) [L–] a faction of the Democratic party (c. 1835), called the Equal Rights party; (b) a member of this faction.

3. formerly, any Democrat.

lō"çō·mō'bile, a. moving by its own power; self-propelling. [Rare.]

lō·çō·mō'tion, n. [loco-, and motion.]

1. the act of moving from place to place.

2. the power of moving from place to place; as, most animals possess locomotion; plants have life, but not locomotion.

lō·çō·mō'tive, a. [loco-, and LL. motivus, moving.]

1. of locomotion.

2. moving or capable of moving from one place to another; not stationary.

3. of engines that move under their own power; as, locomotive design.

lō·çō·mō'tive, n. an engine that can move about by its own power; especially, an electric, steam, or diesel engine on wheels, designed to push or pull a railroad train.

compound locomotive; a locomotive constructed on the principle of the compound steam engine.

consolidation locomotive; a locomotive used in freight traffic, having four pairs of driving wheels.

mogul locomotive; a freight engine having three pairs of connected driving wheels and a swinging two-wheeled truck in front.

lō"çō·mō'tive en'ġine, same as locomotive.

lō·çō·mō'tive·ness, lō"çō·mō·tiv'i·ty, n. the quality of being locomotive.

lō·çō·mō'tŏr, n. [loco-, and L. motor, a mover, from movere, to move.] one who or that which has power of locomotion.

lō·çō·mō'tŏr, a. of locomotion.

locomotor ataxia; a chronic disease of the nervous system, usually caused by syphilis; it is characterized at first by intense pain, and later by disturbances of sensation, loss of reflexes and of muscular co-ordination, functional disorders of organs, etc.

lō'çō·plant, n. same as locoweed.

lō'çō·weed, n. any of a number of plants of the pea family, with dense clusters of small flowers resembling sweet peas: it grows on western prairies and causes loco disease in sheep, horses, or cattle that have eaten it.

loç'ū·lā·ment, n. in botany, same as loculus.

loç'ū·lăr, a. [LL. locularis, contained in boxes or cells, from L. loculus, a cell, box.] in botany and zoology, of, having the nature of, or consisting of cells, or loculi: used most frequently in combination, as in trilocular.

loç'ū·lāte, loç'ū·lāt·ed, a. same as locular.

loç'ūle, n. a loculus, or cell.

loç"ū·lī·cī'dăl, a. [L. loculus, a compartment, and cædere, to cut.] in botany, cutting into or through the loculus.

LOCULICIDAL DEHISCENCE
v, valves; d, dissepiments; c, axis loç'ū·lōse, loç'ū·lous, a. [L. loculosus, full of small compartments, from loculus, a small compartment, dim. of locus, a place.] divided internally into loculi, or cells. [Rare.]

loç'ū·lus, n.; pl. loç'ū·lī, [L., a small compartment, box, dim. of locus, a place.]

1. a small space or place; a little chamber or cell; specifically, any small cavity, cell, or chamber in plant or animal tissue.

2. in ancient tombs, a recess or small chamber for the reception of an urn or body.

lō'çum tē'nenş, [L., holding the place; locum, accus. of locus, place, and tenens, ppr. of tenere, to hold.] one who assumes the place of another temporarily; a temporary substitute, as for a doctor or clergyman. [Chiefly Brit.]

lō'çus, n.; pl. lō'cī, [L. locus, place.]

1. a place; a locality.

2. in mathematics, (a) any system of points, lines, etc. which satisfies one or more given conditions; (b) a line, plane, etc. every point of which satisfies a given condition and which contains no point that does not satisfy this condition.

lō'çus çlas'si·çus, pl. lō'cī çlas'si·cī, [L.] a passage generally recognized as authoritative or illustrative of its subject and hence often cited.

lō'çus in quŏ, [L.] the place in which.

lō'çust, n. [ME. and OFr. locuste; L. locusta, a locust.]

LOCUST (Pachytylus migratorius)

1. any of various large winged insects, related to the grasshoppers and crickets: certain locusts travel in large swarms destroying nearly all vegetation in their path.

2. a cicada or harvest fly.

3. a tree, Robinia pseudacacia, common throughout the eastern United States, belonging to the pulse family and having delicate pinnate leaves, thorny branches, and dense clusters of white, heavily-scented flowers: also called black locust. Its wood is very serviceable for posts, turnery, etc.

4. the yellowish, exceedingly hard and durable wood of this tree.

5. any tree the pods of which resemble those of the Robinia pseudacacia, especially the carob tree.

6. the honey locust.

bristly locust; the Robinia hispida of the southern United States, cultivated for its rose-pink blossoms: also called rose acacia.

clammy locust; a leguminous shrub, Robinia viscosa, resembling the bristly locust and found in the same region.

lō·çus'tā, n. a small spike or elongated cluster of flowers in grasses.

lō'çust bēan, the fruit of the carob tree.

lō'çust bee'tle, a beetle, Cyllene robiniæ, the larvae of which bore into the locust tree.

lō'çust bīrd, the rose-colored starling, Pastor roseus, of Asia. It feeds upon locusts.

lō"çus·tel'lē, n. [from L. locusta, a locust; so called because its note resembles that of the locust.] the European grasshopper warbler.

lō·çus'tid, n. a green grasshopper or katydid, of the locust family.

Lō·çus'ti·dae, n.pl. a family of orthopterous insects, having much-compressed bodies, long threadlike antennae, and four jointed tarsi: the best-known species are the green grasshoppers, katydids, and crickets.

lō'çust·ing, a. swarming and devastating after the manner of locusts. [Rare.]

lō'çust shrimp, same as squilla.

lō·cū'tion, n. [L. locutio (-onis), a speaking, from loqui, to speak.]

1. a word, phrase, or expression.

2. a particular style of speech.

loc'ū·tō·ry, n. [ML. locutorium, a room for conversation, from locutor, a speaker, from loqui, to speak.] a place where conversation is permitted; specifically, an apartment in a monastery or convent where the inmates may meet friends.

lōde, n. [ME. lode, lod; AS. lad, a way, path, a carrying, from lithan, to go, to travel.]

1. a path; a course. [Brit. Dial.]

2. a reach of water; a watercourse; a ditch. [Brit. Dial.]

3. in mining, (a) a vein containing metallic ore and filling a well-defined fissure in the rock; (b) any deposit of ore separated from the adjoining rock.

lōde'măn·ăġe, n. pilotage; skill of a pilot. [Obs.]

lōdeş'măn, n. a pilot. [Obs.]

lōde'stär, lōad'stär, n. [ME. lodesterre; lode, from AS. lad, a way, course, and sterre, from AS. steorra, a star.]

1. a star by which one directs his course; especially, the North Star.

2. a guiding ideal; a model for imitation.

lōde'stōne, n. same as loadstone.

lodġe, n. [ME. logge, loge, hut, mason's workshop; OFr. loge, a lodge, hut; LL. lobia, laubia, a gallery, covered way; O.H.G. lauba, loupa, an arbor, from loub, a leaf.]

1. (a) the hut or tent of an American Indian; (b) those who live in it.

2. a temporary habitation; a cabin erected for temporary occupancy. [Now Dial.]

3. a small house, especially one for a servant, or one for use during a special season; as, a caretaker's lodge, a hunting lodge.

4. the den of a wild animal, especially of a beaver.

5. (a) the place where members of a local chapter of an association, especially of a secret fraternal organization, hold their meetings; (b) the local chapter itself; (c) a meeting of such a chapter.

6. in mining, the place at the shaft where the ore is dumped before hoisting; also, a sump.
7. a group of objects contiguously placed. [Obs.]

lodge, v.t.; lodged, pt., pp.; lodging, ppr. [ME. loggen, logen; OFr. loger, from loge, a lodge, hut.]
1. to furnish with a temporary habitation; to house.
2. to rent rooms to; to take as a paying guest.
3. to set, lay, or deposit for keeping or preservation, for a longer or shorter time; as, the men lodged their arms in the arsenal.
4. to fix; to settle in the heart, mind, or memory; to contain for keeping.
I can give no reason
More than a lodged hate. —Shak.
5. to put or send into a place or position by shooting, thrusting, etc.; to place; to plant; to infix.
He lodged an arrow in a tender breast.
—Addison.
6. in hunting, to harbor; to cover; to drive to shelter; as, to lodge a deer.
7. to beat down (growing crops), as rain.
8. to bring (an accusation, complaint, etc.) before legal authorities.
9. to confer (powers) upon (with in).
Syn.—entertain, harbor, shelter.

lodge, v.i. 1. to reside; to dwell; to rest in a place.
And lodge such daring souls in little men?
—Pope.
2. to rest or dwell for a time, as for a night, a week, or a month.
3. to live (with another or in his home) as a paying guest.
4. to fall down and become entangled, as grain.
5. to come to rest or be placed and remain firmly fixed (with in); as, the bullet lodged in the tree trunk.

lodged, a. in heraldry, at rest and lying on the ground, as a buck, hart, hind, etc.

lodg'er, n. one who or that which lodges; especially, one who lives in a rented room or rooms in the house of another.

A BUCK LODGED

lodg'ing, n. 1. a place of rest for a night, or of residence for a time; quarters.
2. [pl.] a room or rooms rented in the house of another.
3. place of residence; harbor; cover.
The lodging of delight. —Spenser.

lodg'ing house, a house in which lodgings are let; a rooming house.

lodg'ment, lodge'ment, n. 1. the act of lodging, or the state of being lodged.
2. an accumulation or collection of something deposited or remaining at rest, often in the nature of an obstruction; a deposit; as, the lodgment of mud in a tank.
3. a lodging place.
4. in military science, the occupation of a position, as in a siege, by the besieging party, and the formation of an intrenchment thereon to maintain it against recapture.

lod'i·cūle, n. [L. lodicula, dim. of lodix (-icis), a coverlet.] in botany, one of the scales which occur at the base of the fruit of grasses.

Lod"ō·ic'ē·à, n. [named after Laodice, daughter of Priam, king of Troy.] in botany, a genus of fan palms found in the Seychelles Islands. Lodoicea sechellarum, the double cocoanut, is the only species.

loēl'ling·īte, n. [so called from Lölling, in Austria, and -ite.] in mineralogy, a light-colored arsenide of iron, $FeAs_2$, which crystallizes in the orthorhombic system.

loe·mog'rà·phy, n. same as loimography.

lō'ess (lō'is), n. [G. löss, loess.] a fine-grained, yellowish-brown, extremely fertile loam deposited by the wind.

loffe, v.i. to laugh. [Obs.]

loft, n. [ME. lofte; Late AS. loft, from ON. loft, air, heaven, upper room.]
1. (a) an attic or atticlike space, usually not partitioned off into rooms, immediately below the roof of a house, barn, etc.; (b) any of the upper stories of a warehouse or factory.
2. a gallery or raised apartment within a larger apartment, as in a church, hall, etc.; as, an organ loft; a hay loft.
3. in golf, (a) the slope given to the face of a club to aid in knocking the ball in a high curve; (b) a stroke that knocks the ball in a high curve.

loft, v.t.; lofted, pt., pp.; lofting, ppr. 1. to store in a loft.
2. to provide with a loft.
3. in golf, (a) to strike (a ball) in such a way as to knock it in a high curve; (b) to hold (a club) so that the face slants back.

loft, v.i. in golf, to knock a ball in a high curve.

loft, a. proud; lofty. [Obs.]

loft'ēr, n. a golf club with a sloping face to aid in lofting the ball: also called lofting iron.

loft'i·ly, adv. in a lofty manner.

loft'i·ness, n. the state or quality of being lofty.

loft'ing i'ron (-ūrn), same as lofter.

lofts'măn, n.; pl. lofts'men, in shipbuilding, one who lays out the figure of a ship to full scale on the floor of a mold loft.

loft'y, a.; comp. loftier; superl. loftiest, 1. elevated; very high; towering.
2. elevated in character, quality, or condition; sublime; exalted; eminent; dignified.
3. proud; haughty; arrogant.
Syn.—high, exalted, stately, sublime, proud, arrogant.

log, n. [ME. logge; prob. from M. Scand. dial.]
1. a section of the trunk of a felled tree, either in its natural state or cut up for use in building, as firewood, etc.
2. [so called because originally it was a quadrant of wood.] a device for measuring the speed of a ship: an old form is a piece of board forming the quadrant of a circle of about six inches radius, balanced by a small plate of lead nailed on the circular part, so as to lie perpendicularly in the water, with about two-thirds immersed under the surface. One end of a line, called the log line, is fastened to the log, while the other is wound round a reel at the stern of the ship. When the log is thrown out, it unwinds the line from the reel as the ship moves forward, and the length of line unwound in a given time gives the rate of the ship's sailing. This is calculated by knots made on the line at certain distances, while the time is measured by a sandglass of a certain number of seconds. The length between the knots is so proportioned to the time of the glass that the number of knots unwound while the glass runs down shows the number of miles the ship is sailing per hour. An improved form of the log is a piece of mechanism towed astern of the ship, the distance traversed being indicated on a dial.

LOG OF A SHIP

3. a daily record of a ship's speed and progress; a logbook: in it are usually entered the ship's position and any notable incidents of the voyage.
4. (a) a record of the operating history of an aircraft or of its engines; (b) a record of a pilot's flying time, experience, etc.
5. any record of progress, as on a journey, in an experiment, etc.

log, a. made of a log or logs.

log, v.t.; logged, pt., pp.; logging, ppr. 1. to saw (trees) into logs.
2. to cut down the trees of (a region).
3. to enter in a ship's log.
4. to sail (a specified distance) as indicated by a log.

log, v.i. to cut down trees and transport the logs to a sawmill.

log, v.t. and v.i. to move to and fro; to rock. [Brit. Dial.]

log-, same as logo-.

log, n. [Heb. lōgh.] a Hebrew measure of liquids equivalent to about a pint.

log'ăn, n. same as loggan.

lō'găn·ber·ry, n.; pl. lō'găn"ber"ries, [after Judge J. H. Logan, of California, who developed it in 1881.]
1. a hybrid bramble developed from the blackberry and the red raspberry and extensively grown for its fruit.
2. the highly acid, purplish-red fruit of this shrub.

Lō·gā'ni·à, n. [named after James Logan, an Irish botanist.] in botany, the typical genus of the Loganiaceæ.

Lō·gan·i·ā'cē·ae (or -gā-ni-), n.pl. [Logania and -aceæ.] a family of tropical exogens, consisting of trees, shrubs, and herbaceous plants.

lō·gan·i·ā'ceous, a. of or pertaining to the Loganiaceæ.

log·à·oed'iç, a. [LL. logaœdicus; L.Gr. logaoidikos, from Gr. logos, speech, prose, and aoidē, song.] having a meter of combined dactyls and trochees or anapests and iambics.

log·à·oed'iç, n. a logaoedic verse.

log'à·rithm, n. [Gr. logos, word, proportion, ratio, and arithmos, number.] the exponent of the power to which it is necessary to raise a fixed number (the base) to produce the given number (the antilogarithm). The logarithm of N to the base a is thus expressed, $\log_a N$. By taking different values of N in each system, different values of x will be found in each system, and such numbers being registered will form tables of logarithms. In the common system of logarithms, the logarithm of 100 is 2, because 10 raised to the second power = 100; similarly, the logarithm of 1,000 = 3, of 10,000 = 4, and so on. When the logarithms form a series in arithmetical progression, the corresponding natural numbers form a series in geometrical progression, thus—

Logarithms..	0	1	2	3	4	5
Natural numbers....	1	10	100	1,000	10,000	100,000

The logarithms of numbers between 1 and 10 consist of decimals; of numbers between 10 and 100, they consist of the integer 1 and a decimal; of numbers between 100 and 1000, of the integer 2 and a decimal, and so on. The integral part of a logarithm is called the index or characteristic, and it is always less by 1 than the number of integer places in the corresponding natural number: thus the index of the logarithm of 3 is 0, of 30 is 1, of 300 is 2, and so on. The decimal part of a logarithm is called the mantissa. Logarithms are of great service in shortening and facilitating the arithmetical operations of multiplication and division. They were invented by Lord Napier of Scotland in 1614, and improved by Henry Briggs, professor of geometry at Oxford, in 1624. arithmetical complement of a logarithm; the difference between the given logarithm and 10.
binary logarithms; see under binary.
Briggsian or common logarithms; logarithms having 10 for a base: named after Henry Briggs, who invented them.
decimal logarithms; Briggsian logarithms.
Gaussian logarithms; tables of logarithms compiled by Karl F. Gauss to simplify the process of finding the logarithm of the sum or difference of two numbers from the logarithms of the numbers.
hyperbolic logarithms; see under hyperbolic.

log"à·rith·met'iç, a. logarithmic. [Rare.]

log"à·rith·met'i·çăl, a. logarithmic. [Rare.]

log"à·rith·met'i·çăl·ly, adv. logarithmically.

log"à·rith'miç, a. of a logarithm or logarithms.
logarithmic curve; same as logistic curve under logistic. logarithmic spiral; a curve line somewhat analogous to the common logarithmic curve. It intersects all its radiants at the same angle, and the tangent of this angle is the modulus of the system of logarithms which the particular spiral represents.

log"à·rith'mi·çăl, a. same as logarithmic.

log"à·rith'mi·çăl·ly, adv. by the use or aid of logarithms.

log"à·rith'mō·teçh"ny, n. [E. logarithm, and Gr. technē, art.] the art of calculating logarithms.

log'book, n. a log (senses 3 and 4).

log chip, a flat piece of wood attached to a line and reel and thrown into the water to measure a ship's rate of speed.

log'çock, n. the North American pileated woodpecker.

lōge (lōzh), n. [Fr.] 1. a lodge. [Obs.]
2. a box at a theater, opera house, etc.

log'fish, n. the barrel fish or rudder fish.

log frāme, a gang saw for sawing timber into planks.

log'găn, n. a rocking stone; a large stone so balanced as to be easily made to rock to and fro.

log'găt, n. logget. [Obs.]

logged (logd), a. water-logged; rendered or heavy, as by being saturated with water.

log'gēr, n. 1. a person whose work is logging; lumberjack.
2. a machine for loading logs on flatcars.

2. formerly, in Hungary and Poland, a member of the upper branch of the Diet.

mag″nē·çrys·tal′liç, a. [magnet and crystallic.] relating to the action of a magnet upon a crystallized object.

mag′nēs, n. a magnet. [Obs.]

mag·nē′siȧ (-shȧ or -zhȧ), n. [LL. magnesia, a mineral said to be brought from Magnesia (district in Thessaly), from Magnesius, pertaining to Magnesia.]

1. magnesium oxide, MgO, a white, tasteless powder, used as a mild laxative and antacid, and as an insulating substance, in firebrick, etc.
2. hydrated magnesium carbonate, also used as a laxative: also called magnesia alba.

mag·nē′şiăn, a. pertaining to magnesia or partaking of its qualities; containing magnesia; resembling magnesia.

magnesian limestone; same as dolomite.

mag·nē′sic, a. [*magnes*ium and -ic.] pertaining to or containing magnesium.

mag·nē″si·ō·fer′rīte, n. [*magnes*ium and L. ferrum, iron, and -ite.] a ferromagnesic oxide of the spinel group: also called magnoferrite.

mag′nē·site, n. [*magnes*ium and -ite.] magnesium carbonate found uncombined, crystalline, granular, or compact in form.

mag·nē′si·um (-shi- or -zhi-), n. [Mod. L., from magnesia.] a light, silver-white metallic chemical element, malleable and ductile: used in making several alloys and, because it burns with a hot, white light, in photographic flash bulbs, incendiary bombs, etc.: symbol, Mg; atomic weight, 24.32; atomic number, 12.

magnesium sulfate; in chemistry, a hydrated sulfate, $MgSO_4{\cdot}7H_2O$: also called Epsom salts.

mag′net, n. [ME. magnete; OFr. magnete; L. magnes (-etis), from Gr. Magnēs, Magnētis lithos, magnet, lit., stone of Magnesia, from Magnesia (district in Thessaly).]

1. any piece of iron, steel, or, originally, magnetite (loadstone) that has the property of attracting iron or steel, etc.: this property may be naturally present or artificially induced, as by passing an electric current through a coil of wire wrapped around the metal.

2. a person or thing that attracts.

compound magnet; a magnet consisting of a number of single magnets united, with similar poles arranged adjacently.

deflecting magnet; a magnet useful for deflecting the needle of a galvanometer.

permanent magnet; a steel magnet which retains indefinitely the magnetism imparted to it: distinguished from a temporary magnet.

temporary magnet; a magnet of soft iron, which loses its magnetism when the magnetizing cause ceases to act, as in an electromagnet.

mag·net′iç, n. 1. any metal which may receive the properties of the loadstone.

2. a magnet. [Obs.]

mag·net′iç, a. [magnet and -ic.]

1. having the properties of a magnet; as, magnetic iron.

2. of, producing, caused by, or operated by magnetism.

3. of the earth's magnetism; as, the magnetic meridian.

4. that can be magnetized.

5. powerfully attractive: said of a person, personality, etc.

6. mesmeric.

magnetic amplitude; see under amplitude.

magnetic axis; the straight line joining the two poles of a magnet: if the magnet is freely suspended, the magnetic axis will parallel the lines of magnetic force.

magnetic battery; same as compound magnet under magnet.

magnetic circuit; the entire course of a magnetic line of force.

magnetic compass; an instrument for indicating geographical directions by the action of the earth's magnetic field on a bar magnet (magnetic needle) suspended so as to swing freely on a pivot.

magnetic compensator; a device for neutralizing or eliminating the effect of the iron in a ship upon the needle of its compass: also called compensating magnet.

magnetic course; an airplane's course reckoned from the magnetic north.

magnetic creeping; the slow process of magnetization under a magnetizing influence, due to the resistance of a previous condition.

magnetic curves; curves representing magnetic lines of force as seen when iron filings are placed upon a sheet of paper in proximity to a magnet.

MAGNETIC CURVES

magnetic density; the intensity or strength of magnetism indicated by the number of magnetic lines of force in a given cross-sectional area at right angles to the lines of force.

magnetic elements of a place; (a) the intensity of terrestrial magnetic attraction; (b) the degree of the needle's inclination; (c) the degree of the needle's declination.

magnetic equator; see under equator.

magnetic field; the space around a magnet in which its magnetic force is appreciable.

magnetic fluid; a hypothetical fluid formerly assumed to exist for the purpose of treating and explaining the phenomena of magnetism.

magnetic flux; the total flow of magnetism or magnetic lines of force through a magnetic circuit.

magnetic force; the force with which a magnet attracts (or repels) a piece of iron or steel.

magnetic induction; the power of a magnet to induce magnetism in a piece of iron, steel, etc. brought into its magnetic field.

magnetic intensity; same as magnetic force.

magnetic meridian; that circle of the celestial sphere which passes through the zenith and the Magnetic Poles.

magnetic mine; a naval mine designed to explode when the metal hull of a ship passing near it deflects a magnetic needle, closing an electric circuit and thus detonating the charge.

magnetic moment; the force exerted by one pole of a magnet, multiplied by the distance between the poles.

magnetic needle; a slender strip of magnetized steel which, when mounted so as to swing freely on a pivot, will point along the line of the magnetic meridian toward the Magnetic Poles, approximately north and south: it is the essential part of a magnetic compass.

magnetic north; the direction toward which a magnetic needle points: in most places it is not true north.

magnetic pickup; a pickup, often used in electric phonographs, in which the varying movements of the needle produce corresponding variations in electrical output to the amplifier through an arrangement of a magnet and coils: distinguished from crystal pickup.

magnetic pole; (a) either pole of a magnet, where the magnetic lines of force seem to be concentrated; (b) [M– P–] either point on the earth's surface toward which the needle of a magnetic compass points: the North and South Magnetic Poles do not precisely coincide with the geographical poles.

magnetic pyrites; a magnetic iron sulfide: also called pyrrhotine.

magnetic recording; the recording of electrical signals by means of changes in areas of magnetization on a tape, wire, or disk: used for recording sound, video material, digital computer data, etc.

magnetic storm; sudden and violent disturbances or changes in the magnetic force of the earth, probably resulting from solar activity.

magnetic tape; a thin plastic ribbon coated with a suspension of ferromagnetic iron oxide particles, used as a storage medium for magnetic recording.

magnetic telegraph; a telegraph which is operated by a magnet; the electromagnetic telegraph.

mag·net′iç·ăl, a. magnetic.

mag·net′iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a magnetic manner.

mag·net′iç·ăl·ness, n. the quality of being magnetic. [Obs.]

mag·nē·ti′ciăn, n. a magnetist.

mag·net′içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the branch of physics dealing with magnets and magnetic phenomena.

mag·net·if′ĕr·ous, a. [L. magnes (-etis), a magnet, and ferre, to bear.] producing or conducting magnetism.

mag′net·işm, n. 1. the property, quality, or condition of being magnetic; as, a loadstone has magnetism.

2. the force to which this is due.

3. the branch of physics dealing with magnets and magnetic phenomena; magnetics.

4. power to attract; personal charm or allure.

5. mesmerism.

animal magnetism; mesmerism.

terrestrial magnetism; the magnetism or magnetic properties of the earth, the effect of which is seen in the behavior of magnetized needles, telegraphic instruments, etc.

mag′net·ist, n. one proficient in magnetism; a magnetician.

mag′net·ite, n. an important iron ore, a black iron oxide, Fe_3O_4, occurring either in massive form or in isometric crystals: called also loadstone, magnetic iron ore, when magnetic.

mag·net·it′iç, a. pertaining to, characteristic of, or containing magnetite.

mag′net·ī·zà·ble, a. susceptible to magnetic influence; that can be magnetized; magnetic.

mag″net·i·zā′tion, n. the act of magnetizing; the condition of being magnetized.

mag′net·īze, v.t.; magnetized, pl., pp.; magnetizing, ppr. [magnet and -ize.]

1. to give magnetic properties to (steel, iron, etc.); to make into a magnet; as, to magnetize a needle.

2. to attract or influence, as if by a magnet; to captivate.

3. to mesmerize. [Rare.]

mag′net·īze, v.i. to acquire magnetic properties; to become magnetic.

mag′net·īz·ĕr, n. one who or that which magnetizes or induces magnetism.

mag·nē′tō, n.; pl. mag·nē′tōs, a dynamo in which one or more permanent magnets produce the magnetic field; especially, a small machine of this sort connected with and run by an internal-combustion engine, used to generate the electric current providing a spark for the ignition: in full, magnetoelectric machine: also magnetogenerator.

mag·nē′tō-, [from L. magnes (-etis), a magnet.] a combining form meaning: (a) magnetism, magnetic force, as in *magneto*electric; (b) magnetoelectric.

mag·nē″tō·çhem′is·try, n. [magneto- and chemistry.] that branch of chemistry dealing with the relationship between chemical phenomena and magnetic force.

mag·nē″tō·dȳ′nà·mō, n. a dynamo with permanent field magnets.

mag·nē″tō·ē·leç′triç, mag·nē″tō·ē·leç′triç·ăl, a. of or characterized by electricity produced by magnets.

magnetoelectric machine; a machine in which electromagnets are replaced by permanent magnets.

mag·nē″tō·ē·leç·tric′i·ty, n. 1. electricity produced by the relative movement of electric conductors and magnets.

2. the science dealing with this.

mag·nē″tō·ġen′ĕr·ā·tŏr, n. a magneto.

mag·nē′tō·gram, n. [magneto-, and Gr. gramma, a writing.] a record showing variations in the earth's magnetic field as recorded by a magnetograph or other indicator.

mag·nē′tō·ġràph, n. [magneto-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] an automatic instrument for recording magnetic variations of the earth or of a magnetic field.

mag·nē·tom′e·tĕr, n. [magneto-, and Gr. metron, a measure.]

1. an instrument to measure the force and the variations in the force of magnetism.

2. an instrument for magnetically detecting concealed metallic weapons on the person or in the luggage of airline passengers.

mag·nē″tō·met′riç, a. of or pertaining to magnetometry.

mag·nē·tom′e·try, n. [magneto-, and Gr. -metria, from metron, a measure.] the science of measuring the intensity of a magnetic force and of observing the phenomena of a magnetic field.

mag·nē″tō·mō′tive, a. designating or of a force that gives rise to magnetic flux.

mag·nē″tō·mō′tŏr, n. [magneto-, and LL. motor, from L. movere, to move.] a voltaic series of two or more large plates producing electricity of low tension. [Rare.]

mag′nē·tŏn, n. in physics, the unit by which magnetic moment is measured.

mag·nē″tō·op′tiç, a. of or pertaining to magnetooptics.

mag·nē″tō·op′tiçs, n. the branch of physics dealing with the modifications that light undergoes in passing through a magnetic field.

mag·nē′tō·phōne, n. [magneto-, and Gr. phōnē, voice, sound.] a device which transmits, by musical pitch, the velocity of an iron siren rotating between a magnet and a coil connected with a telephone.

mag′nē·tron, n. [magnet and elec*tron*.] a vacuum tube in which the flow of ions from the heated cathode to the anode is controlled by a magnetic field externally applied and perpendicular to the electric field by which they are propelled: used to produce very short radio waves.

mag′ni- [from L. magnus, great.] a combining form meaning great, big, large, as in *magni*ficent, *magni*loquence; also, in zoology, long.

mag′ni·fī·à·ble, a. that can be magnified.

mag·nif′iç, mag·nif′i·çăl, a. 1. magnificent.

2. imposing in size, dignity, etc.

3. (a) pompous; (b) grandiloquent.
4. eulogistic.
[Archaic in all senses.]

mag·nif'i·çăl·ly, adv. in a magnific manner. [Archaic.]

Mag·nif'i·çat, n. [L.] 1. (a) the hymn of the Virgin Mary in Luke i. 46–55, beginning Magnificat anima mea Dominum, "My soul doth magnify the Lord"; (b) any musical setting for this.
2. [m–] any song, poem, or hymn of praise.

mag·nif'i·çāte, v.t. to magnify. [Obs.]

mag"ni·fi·çā'tion, n. 1. a magnifying or being magnified.
2. the power of magnifying.
3. a magnified image, model, or representation.

mag·nif'i·cence, n. the condition or quality of being magnificent; grandeur; richness and splendor, as of furnishings, color, dress, etc.

mag·nif'i·cent, a. [LL. magnificens (-entis), doing great things; L. magnus, great, and faciens (-entis), ppr. of facere, to do.]
1. splendid; stately; imposingly beautiful; grand; rich or sumptuous, as in construction, decoration, etc.
2. exalted: said of ideas, etc., and also of some former rulers, as, Lorenzo the Magnificent.
Syn.—glorious, splendid, grand, gorgeous, superb, princely, stately.

mag·nif'i·cent·ly, adv. in a magnificent manner.

mag·nif'i·cō, n. [It., from L. magnificus, noble, great.]
1. a grandee of ancient Venice.
2. a person who is lordly or who affects lordliness.

mag'ni·fī·ĕr, n. 1. one who or that which magnifies.
2. a lens or a combination of lenses for magnifying.

mag'ni·fy, v.t.; magnified, pt., pp.; magnifying, ppr. [ME. magnifien; OFr. magnifier; L. magnificare; magnus, great, and facere, to make.]
1. to make greater in size, status, or importance; to enlarge. [Rare.]
2. to cause (a person or thing) to seem greater, more important, etc. than is really so; to exaggerate; as, she magnified her sufferings in telling about them.
3. to cause to seem larger than is really so; to increase the apparent size of (an object), especially by means of a lens or lenses.
4. to glorify; to praise; to extol. [Archaic.]

mag'ni·fy, v.i. to have the power of increasing the apparent size of any object; as, telescopes and microscopes magnify.

mag'ni·fy·ing glăss, a lens or combination of lenses that increases the apparent size of an object seen through it.

mag·nil'ō·quence, n. a lofty manner of speaking; tumid, pompous words or style; magniloquent quality.

mag·nil'ō·quent, a. [L. magnus, great, and loquens (-entis), ppr. of loqui, to speak.]
1. lofty, pompous, or grandiose in speech or style of expression.
2. boastful; bombastic; talking big.

mag·nil'ō·quent·ly, adv. in a magniloquent manner.

mag'ni·tūde, n. [L. magnitudo, greatness, bulk, size, from magnus, great.]
1. (a) greatness, specifically of size, of extent, or of importance or influence; (b) [Obs.] greatness of character.
2. (a) size or measurable quantity; as, the magnitude of a velocity; (b) importance or influence.
3. in astronomy, (a) any of the classes into which fixed stars are arranged according to degree of brightness with reference to the polestar as the standard: the brightest stars are of the first magnitude; stars just visible to the unaided eye are of the sixth magnitude; (b) a number expressing brightness.
4. in mathematics, a number given to a quantity for purposes of comparison with other quantities of the same class. apparent magnitude; magnitude as conceived by the visual angle, varying inversely with the distance from the eye.
of the first magnitude; of the greatest importance.
Syn.—size, extension, bulk, volume, greatness, bigness, extent, measure, largeness.

Mag·nō'li·ȧ, n. [after Pierre Magnol (1638–1715), French botanist.]
1. a genus of subtropical trees and shrubs of the family Magnoliaceæ, with large, fragrant flowers of white, pink, or purple.
2. [m–] any plant or flower of this genus.

Mag·nō·li·ā'cē·ae, n.pl. a large family of trees and shrubs, of which the genus Magnolia is typical.

mag·nō·li·ā'ceous, a. related to or resembling the Magnoliaceæ.

mag'num, n. [L. magnum, neut. of magnus, great.]
1. a bottle holding two quarts, or the amount such a bottle holds.
2. in anatomy, a bone of the distal row, the largest of the human carpus.

mag'num ō'pus, [L.] 1. a great work, especially of art or literature; a masterpiece.
2. a person's greatest work or undertaking.

Mag'nus ef·fęct', [after H. G. Magnus (1802–1870), G. scientist.] the sideways thrust on a rotating cylinder with its axis perpendicular to an air current, used to propel rotor ships, etc.

mag'nus hitch, [L. magnus, large.] a kind of knot: see knot, illus.

mag'ŏt, n. [Fr. magot, the Barbary ape.]
1. a small, grotesque figure, as of ivory.
2. in zoology, the Barbary ape.

mag'pīe, n. [ME. magot pie; magot, from Fr. margot, a magpie, a familiar form of Marguerite, and pie, from Fr. pie, L. pica, a woodpecker.]
1. any of a number of birds of the crow family, related to the jays and characterized by black-and-white coloring, a long, tapering tail, and a habit of noisy chattering.
2. a person who chatters.
3. a person who collects odds and ends.

mag'pīe mŏth, a black-and-white moth belonging to the family Geometridæ.

mag'pīe shrīke, 1. a South American bird, Cissopis leverianus.
2. any of several Australian shrikes.

mȧ·guā'ri (-gwä'), n. [S. Am.] a stork of South America, Euxenura galeata.

mag'uey (-wā), n. [Sp.] any of a number of related fleshy-leaved or fiber-yielding plants of the southwestern United States, Mexico, and Central America; an agave or related plant; especially, the century plant; American aloe.

Mā'gus, n.; pl. Mā'ġī, [L., from Gr. magos, one of a Medean tribe, an enchanter.]
1. one of the Magi (in either sense).
2. [m–] a magician, sorcerer, or ancient astrologer; especially, Simon Magus (Acts viii. 9–24).

Mag'yär, n. [Hung.] 1. a member of the people constituting the main ethnic group in Hungary.
2. their Ugrian language; Hungarian.

Mag'yär, a. of the Magyars, their language, or culture.

Mȧ·hä·bhä'rȧ·tȧ, n. [Sans. mahābhārata, lit., the great story.] one of the two great epics of India, written in Sanskrit about 200 B.C.: it combines stories and poems with history and mythology: also Mahabharatam.

mä'hȧ·leb, n. [mahleb, Ar. name.] a European species of cherry, Prunus mahaleb: its fruit is used for making a violet dye and a fermented liqueur like kirschwasser.

mȧ·hä'rä'jȧ, mȧ·hä'rä'jah (or Eng. mä-hä-rä'jȧ), n. [Sans., mahārāja; maha, great, and rājā, a king.] in India, a sovereign prince, especially the prince of any of the chief native states: a title higher than rajah.

mȧ·hä·rä'ni, mȧ·hä·rä'nee, n. [Hind. mahārānī; maha, great, and rānī, queen.]
1. the wife of a maharajah.
2. a sovereign queen or princess of this rank in her own right.

mȧ·hä·ri'shi, n. [Hindi mahārishi, from mahā, great, and ṛshi, sage.] a Hindu teacher of mysticism and transcendental meditation.

mȧ·hät'mȧ, n. [Sans. mahātman, from maha, great, and ātman, soul.] in theosophy and esoteric Buddhism, one of a class of wise and holy persons, supposed to have unusual powers: Mohandas Gandhi was often called the Mahatma.

Mäh'di, n. [Ar. mahdīy, a guide, leader, spiritual director.] a leader and prophet expected by Moslems to appear on earth before the world ends; Moslem Messiah: the title has been assumed by various leaders, especially Mohammed Ahmed, who led a revolt in the Egyptian Sudan in 1883.

Mäh'di·ăn, n. one who believes in Mahdi.

Mäh'dişm, Mäh'di·işm, n. the belief and advocacy of the doctrine that Mahdi will yet appear as a leader of the faithful.

Mäh'dist, n. 1. a believer in Mahdism.
2. a follower of a person calling himself the Mahdi.

Mȧ·hĕr'ni·ȧ, n. [a transposition of Hermannia, from Paul Hermann, a Dutch botanist.] a genus of herbaceous or shrubby plants of South Africa, belonging to the family Sterculiaceæ, including Mahernia verticillata, which has fragrant, yellow, bell-like flowers.

Mȧ·hĭ'găn, n. [Am. Ind. (Algonquian), lit., a wolf.
1. a confederacy or tribe of Algonquian Indians that lived chiefly in the upper Hudson Valley.
2. an Indian belonging to this confederacy.
3. Mohegan.
Also Mohican.

Mȧ·hĭ'găn, a. of the Mahican tribe or confederacy: also Mohican.

mäh'-jŏngg', mäh'jŏng', n. a Chinese game, played, usually by four persons, with 136 or 144 pieces resembling dominoes, marked in suits and called tiles: the object is to build combinations or sets by drawing, discarding, and exchanging these.

mähl'stick, n. same as maulstick.

mȧ·hōe', n. [native name.]
1. any of several tropical trees having a strong, fibrous, inner bark; specifically, Hibiscus tiliaceus, having an inner bark used for making twine and cordage.
2. the inner bark of the mahoe.

mȧ·hog'ȧ·ny, n. [from mahogoni, S. Am. name.]
1. (a) the hard wood of a tropical American tree, much used for furniture: it varies in color from reddish brown to yellow; (b) the tree.
2. (a) any of various woods of similar properties and color; as, Philippine mahogany; (b) a tree from which such wood is obtained.
3. reddish brown.
bastard mahogany; any of several trees whose wood resembles mahogany, especially the Jamaican tree, Malayba apetala, of the family Sapindaceæ, and several species of eucalyptus in Australia.

MAHOGANY
(Swietenia mahogani)

mȧ·hog'ȧ·ny, a. 1. made of mahogany.
2. reddish-brown.

mȧ·hō'li, n. [native name.] a lemur of Africa, Galago maholi.

Mȧ·hom'et·ăn, a. and n. same as Mohammedan.

Mȧ·hom'et·ȧn·işm, n. same as Mohammedanism.

Mȧ·hom'et·ist, n. Mohammedan. [Obs.]

Mȧ·hom'et·ry, n. Mohammedanism. [Obs.]

Mȧ·hō'ni·ȧ, n. [named after Bernard McMahon.] a grape, Mahonia aquifolium, that grows in Oregon: also called holly berberis.

Mā'hō·rī, n. same as Maori.

Mā'hound, Mā'houn, n. [OFr. Mahon, Mahum; Ar. Muhammad, Mohammed.]
1. Mohammed. [Archaic.]
2. Satan: from a confused association of Mahomet as a false prophet. [Scot.]

mȧ·hout', n. [E. Ind.] in India and the East Indies, one who cares for and drives an elephant.

Mȧh·rät'tȧ, n. same as Maratha.

Mȧh·rät'ti, Mȧh·rät'i, n. same as Marathi.

mäh'wȧ, n. [E. Ind.] an East Indian tree, Bassia latifolia, valued for its timber and for its oil, which is used for making soap and as a food.

mäh'zŏr (mäkh'zĕr), n.; pl. mäh'zŏrş or Heb. mäh·zō'rim, [Heb., cycle.] the Jewish prayer book that contains the liturgy for festivals and holy days: distinguished from siddur.

Mā'i·ȧ, n. [Gr. maia, a large kind of crab.]
1. a genus of spider crabs typical of the family Maiidæ.
2. a silkworm moth, Bombyx mori.

Mā'i·ȧ, n. [L.; Gr. Maia.]
1. in Greek mythology, the eldest and loveliest of the Pleiades, mother of Hermes by Zeus.
2. in Roman mythology, an earth goddess, sometimes identified with the Greek Maia: the month of May was named in her honor.

mā'iăn (-yăn), a. and n. same as maioid.

māid, n. [shortened from maiden; compare AS. mægeth, mægth, a maid.]
1. (a) a young unmarried woman or girl; (b) a virgin.
2. a girl or woman servant: often in compounds, as bar*maid*, house*maid*, etc.
3. a man who has never had sexual intercourse. [Obs.]
4. any of various fishes; specifically, (a) a female skate; (b) the thornback ray; (c) the twait shad.
5. an unmarried woman; a spinster: now old maid.
maid of honor; (a) an unmarried woman acting as chief attendant to the bride at a wedding; (b) an unmarried woman, usually of noble birth, attending a queen or princess.

maī·dan′, n. [Per.] an open grassy area in or near a town, used for military parades, racing, etc.: also spelled meidan.

māid′en, n. [ME. maiden, mayden; AS. mægden, mæden, a maiden, from mægeth, a maid, from magu, a son, servant.]
1. (a) a girl or young unmarried woman; (b) a virgin.
2. [M–] an instrument resembling the guillotine, formerly used in Scotland for beheading criminals.
3. a race horse that has never won a race.
4. in cricket, an over in which no runs are scored: in full, maiden over.

māid′en, a. 1. of, characteristic of, or suitable for a maiden.
2. (a) unmarried; (b) virgin.
3. inexperienced; untried; unused; new; fresh.
4. first or earliest; as, a maiden speech, a maiden voyage.
5. (a) never having won a race; as, a maiden horse; (b) for such horses; as, a maiden race.
maiden name; the surname of a woman before her marriage.
maiden over; a maiden (sense 4). maiden stakes; in horse racing, stakes to be contended for by horses which have never won a race.

māid′en, v.i. to speak and act demurely or modestly. [Obs.]

māid′en·hāir, n. a species of fern of the genus Adiantum, having dark-colored slender stems and delicate fronds.

māid′en·hair tree, same as ginko.

māid′en·head, n. [ME. maydenhede, meidenhed, var. of maidenhood.]
1. maidenhood; virginity. [Archaic.]
2. newness; freshness. [Obs.]
3. the hymen.

māid′en·hood, n. the state or time of being a maiden.

māid′en·līke, a. like a maid; modest.

māid′en·li·ness, n. the quality of being maidenly.

māid′en·ly, a. 1. of a maiden or maidenhood.
2. like, characteristic of, or suitable for a maiden; modest, gentle, etc.

māid′en·ly, adv. in a maidenly manner.

māid′en·ship, n. maidenhood. [Obs.]

māid′hood, n. maidenhood.

māid in wāit′ing, pl. māids in wāit′ing, an unmarried woman, usually of noble birth, attending a queen or princess.

Māid Mar′i ăn, 1. a character in old May Day games and morris dances, variously a May queen, a boy dressed as a girl, or a buffoon.
2. Robin Hood's sweetheart.

māid of the mead′ōw, a European plant, Spiræa ulmaria, of the rose family: called also English meadowsweet.

māid′sērv″ănt, n. a girl or woman servant.

Men'del·işm, n. the theory of heredity formulated by Gregor Mendel.

Men'del·īze, v.i.; Mendelized, pt., ppr.; Mendelizing, ppr. to follow the Mendelian law.

Men'del's laws, the three principles of hereditary phenomena discovered and formulated by Gregor Mendel: (1) the law of independent unit characters, which states that characters, or characteristics, as height, color, etc., are inherited separately as units; (2) the law of segregation, which states that body cells and primordial germ cells contain pairs of such unit characters and that when gametes are produced, each gamete receives only one member of each such pair; (3) the law of dominance, which states that in every individual there is a pair of determining factors (see genes) for each unit character, one from each parent; if these factors are different (heterozygous), one character (the dominant) appears in the organism, the other (the recessive) being latent; the recessive character can appear in the organism only when the dominant is absent. Hence in all cross-bred generations unit characters are shown in varying combinations, each appearing in a definite proportion of the total number of offspring.

2. the work or function of a messiah.

Mes·si·an′iç, a. 1. of or relating to the Messiah or to his office.
2. [m–] of, like, or characteristic of a messiah.

Mes·sï·dor′, n. [Fr., from L. messis, harvest, and Gr. dōron, a gift.] in the French Revolutionary Calendar, the tenth month, beginning June 19 and ending July 18, adopted by the First Republic in 1793.

mes′siēurṣ (mes′ērz, mes′yērz, or Fr. mā-syœ′), n.pl. [Fr., pl. of monsieur, sir.] plural of monsieur.

mess′i·ly, adv. in a messy manner.

mess′i·ness, n. a messy quality or state.

mess′māte, n. 1. a person with whom one regularly has meals, as in the army or navy.
2. an animal that feeds with others not of its kind; a commensal.
3. a stringy-bark eucalyptus tree of Australia: also called messmate tree.

Messrs. (mes′ẽrz), Messieurs: now used chiefly as the plural of Mr.

mes′suaġe (-wij), n. [OFr. mesuage, mesnage; LL. mansionaticum, a dwelling house, from L. mansio (-onis), a staying, dwelling, from manere, to remain.] in law, a dwelling house and adjoining land including the adjacent buildings.

mess′y, a.; comp. messier; superl. messiest; in, like, or characterized by a mess; untidy, disordered, dirty, etc.

mest, a. most. [Obs.]

mes·tee′, n. [altered from mestizo.] a mustee.

mes·tï′zȧ, n. a woman or girl mestizo.

mes·tï′zō, n.; pl. mes·tï′zōṣ, mes·tï′zōes, [Sp., from L. mixtus, pp. of miscere, to mix.] a person of mixed parentage; specifically, in the western United States and in Latin American countries, the offspring of a Spaniard or Portuguese and an American Indian.
mestizo wool; a kind of wool clipped from sheep of mixed breeds in South America.

mes′tōme, n. [Gr. mestōma, fullness, from mestos, full.] in botany, the conductive opening in a fibrovascular structure.

Mes′ū·ȧ, n. [named after Musuah, an Arabian physician.] a genus of resinous trees and shrubs of tropical Asia of the family Guttiferæ, valued for the dyes and perfumes obtained from the flowers, and for its hard wood, which is used for various purposes.

met, v. past tense and past participle of meet.

met, v. obsolete past tense of mete, to measure.

met′ȧ-, [L. meta-; Gr. meta-, from prep. meta, in the midst of, among, between, after, according to.]
1. changed in position or form, altered, transposed, as in *meta*morphosis, *meta*thesis; equivalent to trans-.
2. after, as in *meta*physics: sometimes, as in medical terms, equivalent to post-.
3. behind, hinder, at the back, as in *meta*thorax: in anatomical terms, equivalent to dorso-.
4. [from supposed analogy to metaphysics.] beyond, higher, transcending, as in *meta*psychosis.
5. in chemistry, (a) a polymer of, as in *meta*ldehyde; (b) a derivative of, as in *meta*protein; (c) an acid containing less water combined with the anhydride than other acids of the same nonmetallic element, as in *meta*phosphoric; (d) characterized by substitutions in the 1, 3 position in the benzene ring.
Also, before a vowel, met-.

mē′tȧ, n.; pl. mē′tae, [L.] a triple and conical turning post placed at each end of the track in a Roman circus.

mē·tab′ȧ·sis, n. [Gr. metabasis, a passing over, change, from metabainein; meta, beyond, and bainein, to go.]
1. in rhetoric, transition; a passing from one thing to another.
2. in medicine, a change of the nature or treatment of a disease.

met·ȧ·bat′iç, a. [Gr. metabatikos, from metabasis, a passing over, change.] relating to a transfer or transition of energy; in physics, noting the passage of heat, as from one body to another.

me·tab′ō·lȧ, n. same as metabasis: also written metabole.

Me·tab′ō·lȧ, n.pl. [Gr. metabolos, changeable, metabolē, change; meta, beyond, and ballein, to throw.] a group of insects that undergo complete metamorphosis; that is, those which have distinct forms as larva, pupa, and imago.

met·ȧ·bō′li·ăn, n. an insect that undergoes complete metamorphosis.

met·ȧ·bol′iç, a. [Gr. metabolos, changeable; metabolē, change.]
1. in biology, relating to metamorphosis.
2. in physiology, relating to metabolism.

me·tab′ō·lişm, n. 1. the chemical and physical processes continuously going on in living organisms and cells, comprising those by which assimilated food is built up (anabolism) into protoplasm and those by which proto-plasm is used and broken down (catabolism) into simpler substances or waste matter, with the release of energy for all vital processes.

2. in entomology, metamorphosis.
3. in theology, a doctrine of some of the early fathers which regarded the Eucharist as embodying both the real and the symbolical presence.

me·tab'ō·līte, n. any substance produced by metabolism, as urea or carbon dioxide.

me·tab'ō·līze, v.t. and v.i.; metabolized, pt., pp.; metabolizing, ppr. to change by metabolism.

met·ȧ·brañ'çhi·ăl, a. [meta-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] in a crustacean, behind the gills; relating particularly to a lobe covering the posterior gills.

met·ȧ·çär'păl, a. relating to the metacarpus.

met·ȧ·çär'păl, n. any of the bones of the metacarpus.

met·ȧ·çär'pus, n.; pl. met·ȧ·çär'pī, met·ȧ·çär'pus·eṣ, [meta-, and Gr. karpos, the wrist.] in anatomy, the part of the skeleton of a vertebrate between the carpus and the phalanges; in man, the bones between the wrist and the fingers and thumb.

met·ȧ·cen'tēr, met·ȧ·cen'tre, n. [Fr. métacentre; Gr. meta, beyond, and kentron, center.] that point in a floating body at which a vertical line drawn through its center of buoyancy when it is upright meets the vertical line drawn through its center of buoyancy when it is tipped; center of gravity of the unsubmerged part of a floating body: for stability the metacenter must be above the center of gravity.

C, center of gravity; A, center of buoyancy of a floating body; B, center of buoyancy when body is tipped; M, metacenter at point of intersection of verticals MA and MB met·ȧ·cen'triç, a. of or near the metacenter.

mē·tac'ē·tōne, n. [meta- and acetone.] in chemistry, a colorless liquid with the odor of peppermint, made by distilling sugar with lime.

met·ȧ·çhrō'mȧ·tiṣm, n. [from meta-, and Gr. chrōma, chrōmatos, color; and -ism.] a change of color, especially as a result of a change in temperature.

mē·taçh'rō·niṣm, n. [Gr. metachronos, after the time; meta, beyond, after, and chronos, time.] an error in chronology made by placing an event after its time.

met·ȧ·çhrō'sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. chrōsis, a coloring.] the changing of color; also, the power of changing color at will through nervous action, as in certain lizards and fishes.

met·ȧ·cin'nȧ·bär·īte, n. [meta-, and cinnabar and -ite.] native grayish-black sulfide of mercury found with red cinnabar in California.

met'ȧ·ciṣm, n. same as mytacism.

met·ȧ·çrē'sol, n. [meta- and cresol.] in chemistry, an isomeric form of cresol.

met·ȧ·çrō'mi·on, n.; pl. met·ȧ·çrō'mi·ȧ, [meta-, and Gr. akrōmion, akrōmia, the point of the shoulder blade.] in anatomy, a process projecting backward from the acromion in the scapula of certain animals, as rabbits and shrews.

met·ȧ·cy'çliç, a. [meta-, and Gr. kyklos, circle.] relating to or designating a permutation of the elements in a cycle.

met"ȧ·cȳ·ē'sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. kyēsis, conception.] in medicine, a form of extrauterine pregnancy.

met·ȧ·cȳ'mēne, n. one of three isomeric forms of cymene, a hydrocarbon derivative of benzene.

met·ȧ·dēr·mȧ·tō'sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. derma (-atos), skin, and -osis.] in pathology, a cutaneous development caused by a diseased condition.

met"ȧ·dī·chlor"ō·ben'zēne, n. [meta-, di, two, Gr. chlōrōs, green, and benzene.] in chemistry, an organic compound, $C_6H_4Cl_2$, in which the two chlorine atoms are separated by one of the carbon atoms of the benzene ring.

met"ȧ·dis·çoi'dăl, a. [meta- and discoidal.] in anatomy, developed beyond the discoidal form, yet resembling it: said of the placenta of man and anthropoid mammals.

met"ȧ·gȧ·laç'tiç, a. of the metagalaxy.

met·ȧ·gal'ăx·y, n. in astronomy, the entire material universe; the system comprising the galaxies, nebulae, etc.

met·ȧ·gas'tēr, n. the developed and differentiated primitive intestinal cavity of a vertebrate animal; the intestinal canal of all vertebrates except the Amphioxus.

met·ȧ·gas'trū·lȧ, n. [meta- and gastrula.] in biology, any gastrula which is modified or unusual.

mēt'ăġe, n. [AS. metan, to measure.] official measurement of contents or weight, as of coal; also, the price charged for its measurement.

met·ȧ·ġel'ȧ·tin, met·ȧ·ġel'ȧ·tine, n. [meta- and gelatin.] a preparation made from gelatin which remains liquid, formerly used in photography.

met·ȧ·ġen'e·sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. genesis, generation.] in biology, reproduction in which there is alternation of generations.

met"ȧ·ġē·net'iç, a. relating to metagenesis.

met·ȧ·ġen'iç, a. metagenetic.

mē·tag'nȧ·thous, a. [meta-, and Gr. gnathos, jaw.] having the mandibles curved so as to cross each other when the jaws are closed: said of birds, as the crossbill.

met·ag·nos'tiç, n. [meta-, and Gr. gnōstikos, knowing.] one who believes in and advocates metagnosticism.

met·ag·nos'ti·ciṣm, n. in philosophy, the doctrine that a positive knowledge of the Absolute is within the reach of human attainment, not through logical processes but through the higher religious consciousness: the opposite of agnosticism.

met·ȧ·gram'mȧ·tiṣm, n. same as anagrammatism.

met·ȧ·graph'iç, a. relating to metagraphy.

mē·tag'rȧ·phy, n. [Gr. metagraphein, to write differently, transpose; meta, over, and graphein, to write.] the act of transcribing or rewriting; specifically, translating or changing the letters of a language into corresponding letters of another language.

mē·tāi'riē, n. [Fr.] a piece of land cultivated by a tenant for a share of the proceeds.

met"ȧ·ki·nē'sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. kinēsis, movement.] in biology, the stage in cell division in which the filaments of the nuclei separate and pass toward the poles of a cell.

met'ăl (or -l), n. [OFr. metal; L. metallum; Gr. metallon, a mine, pit, cave, a mineral, ore.]
1. (a) any of a class of chemical elements, as iron, gold, aluminum, etc., generally characterized by ductility, malleability, luster, and conductivity of heat and electricity: these elements form bases with the hydroxyl radical and can replace the hydrogen of an acid to form a salt; (b) an alloy of such elements, as brass, bronze, etc.
2. any substance consisting of metal.
3. material; substance; stuff; hence, spirit; mettle.
4. molten cast iron.
5. molten material for making glassware or pottery.
6. broken stone, cinders, etc. used in making roads, ballasting roadbeds, etc. [Brit.]
7. in heraldry, either of the tinctures gold (or) and silver (argent).
8. in the navy, the weight of shells that the guns of a warship can shoot at one time.
9. in printing, (a) type metal; (b) composed type.
10. a mine of metallic ore. [Obs.]
heavy metal; such metals as gold, platinum, etc., having a density of more than five times that of water.

met'ăl, a. made of metal.

met'ăl, v.t.; metaled or metalled, pt., pp.; metaling or metalling, ppr. to cover or supply with metal, as the bottom of a ship with copper, or the surface of a road with broken stone.

met"ăl·am·mō'ni·um, n. [metal and ammonium.] in chemistry, a hypothetical radical in which a metal takes the place of hydrogen in ammonium. [Obs.]

mēt·al'dē·hȳde, n. [met- and aldehyde.] in chemistry, a white crystalline solid isomeric with ethyl aldehyde.

met·ȧ·lep'sis, n. [L., from Gr. metalēpsis, participation, alternation, from metalambanein; meta, among, and lambanein, to take.] in rhetoric, the continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of meanings, or the union of two or more tropes of a different kind in one word; e.g., in one Caesar there are many Mariuses.

met·ȧ·lep'tiç, a. 1. pertaining to a metalepsis.
2. acting with: said of a muscle.

met·ȧ·lep'tiç·ăl, a. metaleptic.

met·ȧ·lep'ti·çăl·ly, adv. by transposition or substitution.

met'ăl·ine, n. [metal and -ine.] a lubricating mixture made of metallic oxides, grease, and other substances.

met'ăl·ist, met'ăl·list, n. 1. a worker in metals.
2. an advocate of the use of metallic instead of paper money.

met'ăl·īze, met'ăl·līze, v.t.; metalized or metallized, pt., pp.; metalizing or metallizing, ppr.
1. to treat, cover, or impregnate with metal or a compound of metal.
2. to change into metal.

mē·tal'liç, a. [L. metallicus; Gr. metallikos, pertaining to mines or metal, from metallon, metal.]
1. of, or having the nature of, metal.
2. containing, yielding, or producing metal.
3. like, characteristic of, or suggestive of metal; as, a metallic sound.
metallic paper; a kind of paper prepared by a washing of lime, whiting, and size, upon which lines written with a pewter pencil are almost indelible.
metallic soap; a soaplike substance made by combining the salts of lead, aluminum, and some other metals with fatty acids: it is used in making paint, cloth, etc.

mē·tal'li·çăl, a. metallic. [Obs.]

mē·tal'li·çăl·ly, adv. 1. with or by means of metal; as a metal or as affected by the properties of a metal.
2. with reference to the constituent metal; as, metallically pure.

met·ăl·lif'ēr·ous, a. [L. metallifer; metallum, metal, and ferre, to bear.] containing, yielding, or producing metal or ore.

mē·tal'li·form, a. having the form of metals; like metal in structure or qualities.

met'ăl·line, a. 1. metallic.
2. containing metal or metallic salts.

met'ăl·line, n. same as metaline.

met'ăl·lish, a. metallic. [Obs.]

met'ăl·list, n. same as metalist.

met·ăl·li·zā'tion, n. the act or process of forming into a metal.

met'ăl·līze, v.t. same as metalize.

mē·tal'lō-, [from Gr. metallon, a mine, mineral, ore, metal.] a combining form meaning metal, as in *metallo*chrome, *metall*urgy, etc.

mē·tal'lō·çhrōme, n. [metallo-, and Gr chrōma, color.] in electricity, a prismatic coloring given to the surface of a polished metal by the electrolysis of a salt of lead.

mē·tal'lō·gràph, n. a print or impression produced by metallography.

met·ăl·log'rȧ·phy, n. [Gr. metallon, metal, and -graphia, from graphein, to write.]
1. the study of the structure and physical properties of metals and metallic substances, especially by the use of the microscope and X rays.
2. a method of printing resembling lithography but using metal plates instead of stones.

met'ăl·loid, n. [metallo-, and Gr. eidos, form.] in chemistry, (a) any nonmetal; (b) an element having some of, but not all, the properties of metals, as arsenic or silicon.

met'ăl·loid, a. 1. like a metal.
2. relating to a metalloid; nonmetallic.

met·ăl·loi'dăl, a. metalloid.

mē·tăl·lō·plas'tiç, a. [metallo-, and Gr. plassein, to form, mold.] pertaining to the art or process of making metal casts, as by the electrolytic process.

mē·tăl·lō·ther'ȧ·py, n. [metallo-, and Gr. therapeia, medical treatment.] treatment of disease by the use of metals, or especially of their salts.

met·ăl·lūr'ġiç, a. pertaining to metallurgy.

met·ăl·lūr'ġi·çăl, a. metallurgic.

met'ăl·lūr·ġist, n. an expert in metallurgy.

met'ăl·lūr·ġy, n. [Mod. L. metallurgia; Gr. metallourgos, working in metals or mines; metallon, a metal, mine, and ergon, work.] the art or science of separating metals from their ores and preparing them for use, by smelting, refining, etc.

met'ăl·măn, n.; pl. met'ăl·men, a worker in metals.

met·ȧ·loġ'iç, n. the metaphysics of logic.

met·ȧ·loġ'i·çăl, a. [meta- and logical.]
1. beyond the scope of logic; not determinable by logic.
2. relating to the metaphysics of logic.

met"ăl·or·ganʹiç, a. [metal and organic.] in chemistry, designating or relating to a compound formed by the union of a metallic element with an organic radical.

met'ăl·wŏrk, n. 1. things made out of metal. 2. the making of such things.

met'ăl·wŏrk·ing, n. the act or process of making things out of metal.

met'ăl·wŏrk·ing, a. of, for, or engaged in metalworking.

met'ā·mēr, n. [from meta-, and Gr. meros, a part.] any of two or more chemical compounds belonging to the same general class and having identical proportions of the same elements and the same molecular weight, but different chemical properties.

me·tam'ēr·ăl, a. in zoology, metameric.

met'ā·mēre, n. [meta-, and Gr. meros, part.] in zoology, any of a longitudinal series of similar segments making up the body of a worm, crayfish, etc.; a somite.

met·ā·mer'iç, a. 1. in chemistry, relating to a metamer or metamerism. 2. in zoology, relating or pertaining to a metamere or metamerism; being a metamere; segmental.

met·ā·mer'i·çăl·ly, adv. in a metameric manner; with, from, or by metamerism.

mē·tam'ēr·işm, n. 1. in zoology, the state of being made up of metameres. 2. in chemistry, the condition of being metameric.

met"ā·mēr·i·zā'tion, n. in zoology, arrangement into metameres.

me·tam'ēr·y, n. metamerism.

met·ā·morph'iç, a. [meta-, and Gr. morphē, form.] of, characterized by, causing, or formed by metamorphism or metamorphosis.

met·ā·mor'phişm, n. 1. metamorphosis; change of form. 2. in geology, change in the form and structure of rocks, as by the agencies of heat, pressure, and water, causing crystallization, condensation, lamination, obliteration of fossils, etc.; as, the metamorphism of limestone into marble.

met·ā·mor'phīze, v.t. same as metamorphose.

met"ā·mor·phop'si·ā, n. [Gr. metamorphōsis, transformation, and ōps, eye.] a defective condition of the vision which gives objects a distorted appearance.

met·ā·mor'phō·scōpe, n. [Gr. metamorphōsis, transformation, and skopein, to view.] an optical toy in which figures of various animals as well as human figures, painted in parts on flexible strips which move at different rates on rollers and have their edges close together, produce a series of fantastic figures as they pass across the opening of the instrument.

met·ā·mor'phōse, v.t. and v.i.; metamorphosed, pt., pp.; metamorphosing, ppr. to change from one form into another; to transform; to subject to or undergo metamorphosis.

met·ā·mor'phōse, n. metamorphosis. [Rare.]

met·ā·mor'phō·siç, a. of or causing metamorphosis.

met·ā·mor'phō·sis, n.; pl. met·ā·mor'phō·sēs, [Gr. metamorphōsis, a transformation, from metamorphousthai, to be transformed or transfigured; meta, over, and morphē, form, shape.] 1. (a) change of form, shape, structure, or substance; transformation, especially by magic or sorcery; (b) the form resulting from such change. 2. a marked or complete change of character, appearance, condition, etc. 3. in biology, a change in form, structure, or function as a result of development; specifically, (a) the physical transformation, more or less sudden, undergone by various animals during development after the embryonic state, as of the larva of an insect to the pupa and the pupa to the adult, or the tadpole to the frog; (b) the development of plant organs, originally similar in morphology, into different forms as a result of adaptation to different functions; (c) the change of form constantly going on in living cells and tissues. 4. in medicine, a morbid change of form of some tissues or parts. 5. chemical action by which a compound is caused, by the presence of a ferment or similar substance, to decompose into two or more compounds.

met'ā·mor·phy, n. metamorphosis. [Rare.]

met·ā·nau'pli·us, n. the larval stage succeeding the nauplius in the development of crustaceans; also, a crustacean in that stage.

met·ā·neph'riç, met"ā·nē·phrit'iç, a. of or belonging to the metanephron.

met·ā·neph'ron, n. same as metanephros.

met·ā·neph'ros, n. [Mod. L.; meta-, and Gr. nephros, kidney.] the excretory organ lying behind the mesonephros in an embryo, which in mammals develops into the permanent kidney.

met·ā·nō'tum, n.; pl. met·ā·nō'tà, [meta-, and Gr. notos, noton, the back.] the dorsal surface of the metathorax of an insect.

met"an·ti·mō'nāte, n. a salt of metantimonic acid.

met"an·ti·mon'iç, a. [met- and antimonic.] of, relating to, or derived from an oxide of antimony; as, metantimonic acid.

met·ā·peç'tin, n. a derivative of pectin.

met·ā·pep'tōne, n. a peptone formed by the action of pepsin on albumin in an acid medium.

met'ā·phāse, n. [meta- and phase.] in biology, the stage in mitosis, after the prophase and before the anaphase, during which the split chromosomes are arranged along the equatorial plane of the spindle.

met'ā·phŏr, n. [L. metaphora; Gr. metaphora, a transferring to one word the sense of another, from metapherein; meta, over, and pherein, to bear.] a figure of speech in which one thing is likened to another, different thing by being spoken of as if it were that other; implied comparison, in which a word or phrase ordinarily and primarily used of one thing is applied to another (e.g., screaming headlines, "all the world's a stage"): distinguished from simile.

to mix metaphors; to use two or more inconsistent metaphors in a single expression (e.g., the storm of protest was nipped in the bud).

met·ā·phor'iç·ăl, met·ā·phor'iç, a. [Gr. metaphorikos, from metaphora, a metaphor.] of or relating to metaphor; comprising a metaphor or containing metaphors; figurative; not literal; as, a metaphorical use of words; a metaphoric expression.

met·ā·phor'i·çăl·ly, adv. in a metaphorical manner.

met·ā·phor'i·çăl·ness, n. the state or quality of being metaphoric.

met'ā·phŏr·ist, n. one who uses metaphors.

met·ā·phos'phāte, n. [*metaphosph*oric and -ate.] a salt of metaphosphoric acid.

met"ā·phos·phor'iç, a. [meta- and phosphoric.] of, relating to, or derived from phosphoric acid.

metaphosphoric acid; glacial phosphoric acid, HPO_3, obtained by heating orthophosphoric acid.

met'ā·phragm (-fram), met·ā·phrag'mà, n. [meta-, and Gr. phragma, a partition, fence.] a transverse internal septum between the abdomen and metathorax of insects.

met·ā·phrag'măl, a. pertaining to the metaphragm.

met'ā·phrāse, n. [Gr. metaphrasis, a translation or paraphrase, from metaphrazein; meta-, over, and phrazein, to speak.] 1. a translation; especially, a literal, word-for-word translation, as distinguished from a paraphrase. 2. a repartee.

met'ā·phrāse, v.t.; metaphrased, pt., pp.; metaphrasing, ppr. 1. to translate, especially literally. 2. to change the wording of.

met'ā·phrāsed, a. translated word for word.

mē·taph'rā·sis, n. same as metaphrase.

met'ā·phrast, n. a person who puts a piece of writing into another literary form, as prose into verse.

met·ā·phras'tiç, met·ā·phras'ti·çăl, a. close or literal in translation.

met·ā·phys'iç, a. metaphysical. [Rare.]

met·ā·phys'i·çăl, a. 1. of, or having the nature of, metaphysics; of the nature of being or essential reality. 2. very abstract, abstruse, or subtle: often used derogatorily of reasoning. 3. based on abstract reasoning. 4. beyond the physical or material; incorporeal, supernatural, or transcendental. 5. fond of or skilled in metaphysics. 6. designating or of the school of early seventeenth-century English poets, including especially John Donne, George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, and Abraham Cowley, whose verse is characterized by very subtle, highly intellectualized imagery, sometimes deliberately fantastic and far-fetched: term first so used by Samuel Johnson.

met"ā·phy·si'çiăn (-zish'ăn), n. one versed in metaphysics.

met·ā·phys'ics, n.pl. [construed as sing.] [ML. metaphysica, neut. pl.; Gr. meta ta physika, after those things relating to external nature, after physics; meta, after, and physika, physics.] 1. the branch of philosophy that deals with first principles and seeks to explain the nature of being or reality (ontology) and of the origin and structure of the world (cosmology): it is closely associated with a theory of knowledge (epistemology). 2. speculative philosophy in general. 3. the theory or principles (of some branch of knowledge). 4. popularly, any very subtle, perplexing, or difficult reasoning. 5. occult lore. [Archaic.]

mē·taph'y·sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. physis, nature.] transformation; change of nature or form.

met·ā·plā'si·ā, n. [Gr. metaplasis, transformation.] the change of one form of tissue into another, as the ossification of cartilage.

mē·tap'là·sis, n. [Gr. metaplasis, transformation; meta, over, and plasis, from plassein, to form, mold.] in biology, the stage in which organic development is complete.

met'ā·plaşm, n. [Gr. metaplasmos, a transformation; meta, over, beyond, and plassein, to form, mold.] 1. that part of the contents of a cell which consists of lifeless, nonprotoplasmic matter, as certain inclusions of fatty granules or carbohydrates. 2. a change in a word by adding, leaving out, or transposing letters or syllables.

met·ā·plaş'miç, a. of or characterized by metaplasm.

met'ā·plast, n. [meta-, and Gr. plastos, verbal adj. of plassein, to form, mold.] a word or stem exhibiting metaplasm.

met·ā·plas'tiç, a. of or due to metaplasm or to metaplasia.

met'ā·pleŭr, n. [meta-, and Gr. pleura, side.] the posterior part of the epipleural fold of Amphioxus.

met·ā·pleŭ'ron, n.; pl. met·ā·pleŭ'rà, [meta-, and Gr. pleuron, a rib.] the pleural surface of the metathorax of an insect.

met·ap·neŭs'tiç, a. [meta-, and Gr. pneustikos, of or for breathing, from pnein, to breathe.] having a single open pair of spiracles for breathing at the posterior end of the body, as some insect larvae.

met'ā·pōde, n. same as metapodium.

met·ā·pō'di·ăl, a. pertaining to a metapodium or to the metapodialia.

met·ā·pō'di·ăl, n. one of the metapodial bones.

met·ā·pō'di·um, n.; pl. met·ā·pō'di·ā, the posterior lobe of the foot in mollusks.

met·ā·poph'y·sis, n.; pl. met·ā·poph'y·sēş, [meta-, and Gr. apophysis, a process.] one of the processes situated near the articular processes of the lumbar and dorsal vertebrae, represented by small tubercles only in man, but very largely developed in the armadillo, assisting in the support of its carapace.

met·ā·prō'tē·in, n. any of a group of substances produced by the action of acids or alkalis on proteins.

met"ā·psȳ·çhol'ō·ġy (-sȳ-), n. speculation about the origin, structure, function, etc. of the mind and about the relation between the mental and the physical, regarded as supplemental to psychology.

met"ā·psȳ·çhō'sis, n. action or influence between minds that occurs without any known physical medium or agency.

mē·tap·tēr·yġ'i·ăl, a. pertaining to the metapterygium.

mē·tap·tēr·yġ'i·um, n.; pl. mē·tap·tēr·yġ'i·ā, [meta-, and Gr. plerygion, a fin.] the posterior basal cartilage in a fin.

met·ap·tō'sis, n. [Gr. metaptōsis, a change, from metapiptein; meta, over, and piptein, to fall.] in pathology, any change in a disease in regard to its nature or seat. [Obs.]

met·är'gon, n. an isotope of argon.

met"ā·sçū·tel'lum, n.; pl. met"ā·sçū·tel'là, [meta-, and LL. scutellum, dim. of L. scutum, a shield.] the scutellum of a metanotum.

met·ȧ·sçū'tum, n.; pl. met·ȧ·sçū'tȧ, [meta-, and L. scutum, a shield.] the scutum of a metanotum.

met·ȧ·sil'i·çāte, n. a bisilicate.

met"ȧ·si·lic'iç, a. [meta- and silicic.] derived from or containing silica.

metasilicic acid; an acid, H_2SiO_3, whose salts occur in many minerals.

met·ȧ·sō'mȧ, n. same as metasome.

met"ȧ·sō·mat'iç, a. of or due to metasomatosis.

met·ȧ·sō'mȧ·tişm, n. same as metasomatosis.

met·ȧ·sō·mȧ·tō'sis, n. [meta-, and Gr. sōma (-atos), a body.] a chemical change in a mineral or a rock mass producing new minerals or rocks from those previously existing.

met'ȧ·sōme, n. [meta-, and Gr. soma, body.] the posterior portion of the body of a cephalopod: also called metasoma.

met·ȧ·stan'nāte, n. a salt of metastannic acid.

met·ȧ·stan'niç, a. [meta- and stannic.] of, pertaining to, or derived from an isomer of stannic acid.

mē·tas'tȧ·sis, n.; pl. mē·tas'tȧ·sēş, [Gr. metastasis, a removal, departure, from methistanai, to place in another way; meta, over, and histanai, to place.]

1. change of form or matter; transformation. [Rare.]
2. in biology, metabolism.
3. in medicine, the shifting of disease from one part or organ of the body to another unrelated to it, as by the transfer of pathogenic organisms or of the cells of a malignant tumor.
4. in rhetoric, an abrupt transition from one subject to another.

mē·tas'tȧ·sīze, v.i.; metastasized, pt., pp.; metastasizing, ppr. in medicine, to spread to some other part or parts of the body by metastasis.

met·ȧ·stat'iç, a. of, having the nature of, or induced by metastasis; as, a metastatic change.

met·ȧ·stēr'năl, a. pertaining to the metasternum.

met·ȧ·stēr'num, n. [meta-, and Gr. sternon, the breast.]

1. the posterior segment of the sternum; in man, the xiphoid process.
2. the ventral plate or sclerite of an insect's metathorax.

met·ȧ·sthen'iç, a. [meta-, and Gr. sthenos, strength.] having strong hinder parts, as a kangaroo.

met·ȧ·stig'māte, a. having spiracles in the posterior portion, as some larvae.

mē·tas'tō·mȧ, n.; pl. met·ȧ·stō'mȧ·tȧ, [meta-, and Gr. stōma, mouth.] a posterior membranous lip or appendage of the mouth of crustaceans.

met'ȧ·stōme, n. same as metastoma met·ȧ·tär'săl, a. of the metatarsus.

met·ȧ·tär'săl, n. a metatarsal bone.

met'ȧ·tärse, n. the metatarsus. [Rare.]

met·ȧ·tar'sus, n.; pl. met·ȧ·tär'sī, [meta-, and Gr. tarsos, the flat of the foot.]

1. the part of the foot, especially the five bones, between the ankle and toes.
2. (a) the corresponding part of an animal's hind limb, between the tarsus and phalanges; (b) the bone between the tibia and the phalanges in a bird's leg.

met"ȧ·tär·tar'iç, a. [meta- and tartaric.] of or relating to an isomer of tartaric acid.

met·ȧ·tat'iç, met·ȧ·tat'iç·ăl, a. [meta-, and Gr. tatos, verbal adj. of teinein, to stretch.] in physics, of or having a coincidence in the directions of stress and strain.

mē·tath'ē·sis, n.; pl. mē·tath'ē·sēş, [LL., from Gr. metathesis, transposition, a going over, from metatithenai, to put over, transpose; meta, over, and tithenai, to place.] transposition or interchange; specifically, (a) the transposition of letters or sounds in a word, or the result of this; as, clasp developed from Middle English clapse by metathesis; (b) in chemistry, the interchange of elements or radicals between compounds, as when two compounds react with each other to form two new compounds.

met·ȧ·thet'iç, met·ȧ·thet'iç·ăl, a. of or by metathesis.

met"ȧ·thō·rac'iç, a. of or relating to the metathorax.

met·ȧ·thō'rax, n.; pl. met·ȧ·thō'rax·eş, met·ȧ·thō'rȧ·cēş, [meta-, and Gr. thōrax, the chest.] the hindmost thoracic segment in insects.

met"ȧ·tī·tan'iç, a. [meta- and titanic.] of, pertaining to, or derived from titanium.

met·ȧ·tung'stāte, n. a salt of metatungstic acid.

met·ȧ·tung'stiç, a. [meta- and tungstic.] of, pertaining to, or derived from tungsten.

met·ȧ·van'ȧ·dāte, n. a salt of metavanadic acid.

met"ȧ·vȧ·nad'iç, a. [meta- and vanadic.] of, relating to, or derived from vanadium.

met·ȧ·xȳ'lem (-zī'), n. [meta- and xylem.] the outer part, and last to be formed, of the primary xylem, or woody tissue of a plant, consisting of thick-walled cells.

met·ȧ·xȳ'lēne (-zi'), n. [meta- and xylene.] a form of xylene found in light coal naphtha.

mé·ta·yage' (mā-tā-yȧzh'), n. [Fr.] working land on shares; a system of land cultivation in which the owner furnishes land, tools, seed, etc. and receives a share of the produce.

mé·ta·yer' (mā-tā-yā'), n. [Fr., from L. medietarius, one who tills the soil for half the produce, from L. medietas, the mean, from medius, middle.] a tenant under the metayage system.

Met·ȧ·zō'ȧ, n.pl. [meta-, and Gr. zōon, a living being.] the large zoological division made up of all animals whose bodies, originating from a single cell, are composed of many cells: distinguished from Protozoa.

met·ȧ·zō'an, a. of or characteristic of the Metazoa.

met·ȧ·zō'iç, a. of or like the Metazoa.

met·ȧ·zō'on, n. one of the Metazoa; any animal whose embryo passes through a gastrula stage.

mēte, v.t.; meted, pt., pp.; meting, ppr. [ME. meten; AS. metan, to measure.]

1. to allot; distribute; apportion (usually with out).
2. to measure. [Archaic or Poet.]

mēte, v.i. to measure. [Archaic.]

mēte, n. [AS. gemet, a measure, from metan, to measure.] measure. [Obs.]

mēte, n. [ME.; OFr.; L. meta, boundary, goal.]

1. a boundary; limit.
2. a boundary mark or line.

mēte, v.t. and v.i. to dream. [Obs.]

mēte, n. meat. [Obs.]

mēte, a. meet; fit. [Obs.]

mēte'çorn, n. a measure of corn given by a lord to tenants as a reward for service. [Obs.]

met·em·pir'iç, a. metempirical.

met·em·pir'iç, n. a follower of metempirical philosophy; also, metempirics.

met·em·pir'iç·ăl, a. 1. of metempirics.
2. lying beyond the limits of possible experience; transcendental.

met·em·pir'i·çişm, n. [Gr. meta, beyond, and empeiria, experience.] metempirics.

met·em·pir'i·cist, n. a metempiric.

met·em·pir'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the study or philosophy of things regarded as beyond the knowledge obtained from experience but having some relationship to this; sometimes, transcendental philosophy.

mē·temp'sy·çhōşe, v.t.; metempsychosed, pt., pp.; metempsychosing, ppr. to translate from one body to another, as the soul.

mē·temp·sy·çhō'sis, n.; pl. mē·temp·sy·çhō'sēş, [Gr. metempsychōsis, from metempsychoun; meta, over, and empsychoun, to put a soul into; en, in, and psychē, soul, life.] transmigration; the passing of a soul after death into some other body, either human or animal.

met·emp·tō'sis, n. [Gr. meta, beyond, after, and emptōsis, a falling upon or in, from empiptein; en, in, and piptein, to fall.] the suppression of the bissextile day once in 134 years, to prevent the new moon from being indicated in the calendar a day too early: compare proemptosis.

met"en·ce·phal'iç, a. of the metencephalon.

met·en·ceph'ȧ·lon, n.; pl. met·en·ceph'ȧ·lȧ, [Gr. meta, after, and enkephalos, the brain.]

1. that part of the brain of an embryo from which the pons and cerebellum are derived.
2. that part of the brain consisting of the pons and cerebellum.

met·en·sō·mȧ·tō'sis, n. [L.Gr. metensōmatōsis, a putting into another body; meta, over, en, in, and sōma (-atos), body.] the transference of the elements of one body into another body and their conversion into its substance, as by assimilation.

mē'tē·ō·gram, n. the record or diagram made by a meteorograph.

mē'tē·ō·gràph, n. a meteorograph.

mē'tē·ŏr, n. [ML. meteorum; Gr. meteōron, a meteor, pl. meteōra, things in the air, from meteōros, lifted up, in air; meta, beyond, and aeirein, to lift up.]

1. a meteoroid entering the atmosphere of the earth from outer space at very great speed and thus made white-hot and visible by friction with the air; a shooting star.
2. any meteoroid or meteorite.
3. in meteorology, any atmospheric phenomenon, as hail, a rainbow, etc.

mē·tē·or'iç, a. 1. pertaining to a meteor or meteors; having the nature of a meteor; consisting of meteors; as, meteoric showers.
2. atmospheric or meteorological; as, hail is a meteoric phenomenon.
3. transiently brilliant; flashing or swift like a meteor; as, a meteoric rise to fame.

meteoric showers; showers of shooting stars occurring periodically, especially in the months of August and November. The maximum brilliancy occurs every thirty-three years, and then sometimes for four years in succession there are showers of unusual magnitude.

mē·tē·or'iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. in a meteoric manner.
2. meteorologically.

mē'tē·ŏr·işm, n. abdominal distention due to gas in the intestines or in the peritoneal cavity; tympanites.

mē'tē·ŏr·īte, n. [meteor and -ite.] 1. a metallic or mineral mass that has fallen to the earth from outer space; a fallen meteor.
2. loosely, a meteor or meteoroid.

mē·tē·ŏr·it'iç, a. of a meteorite or meteorites.

mē'tē·ŏr·īze, v.i. to become vapor.

mē·tē·or'ō·gram, n. a record made by a meteorograph.

mē·tē·or'ō·gràph, n. [Gr. meteōron, a meteor, and graphein, to write.] an automatic device which records simultaneously changes of various meteorological elements, as moisture, temperature, etc.

mē"tē·or·ō·graph'iç, a. of or relating to meteorography.

mē"tē·ŏr·og'rȧ·phy, n. the process of recording meteorological phenomena.

mē'tē·ŏr·oid, n. [Gr. meteōron, a meteor, and eidos, form.] any of the many small, solid bodies traveling through outer space, which become meteors when they enter the earth's atmosphere.

mē"tē·ŏr·oid'ăl, a. pertaining to a meteoroid.

mē·tē·or'ō·līte, n. a meteorite.

mē"tē·ŏr·ō·loj'iç, a. same as meteorological.

mē"tē·ŏr·ō·loj'iç·ăl, a. pertaining to the atmosphere and its phenomena; of weather or climate; relating to the science of meteorology.

meteorological elements; the facts upon which the scientific study of weather and climate is based, as the velocity and direction of the wind and clouds, the pressure, temperature, and humidity of the air, the amount of precipitation, sunshine, evaporation, etc.

meteorological table; a record or table of meteorological data: also called meteorological register.

mē·tē·ŏr·ō·loj'iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. by or according to meteorology.
2. in meteorological respects.

mē"tē·ŏr·ol'ō·gist, n. one versed in meteorology.

mē"tē·ŏr·ol'ō·gy, n. [Gr. meteōron, a meteor, and -logia, from legein, to speak.] the science which treats of the atmosphere and atmospheric phenomena; the study of weather and climate.

mē·tē·or'ō·man·cy, n. [Gr. meteōron, a meteor, and manteia, divination.] divination by the observation of meteors.

mē"tē·ŏr·om'e·tēr, n. [Gr. meteōron, a meteor, and metron, a measure.] an automatic device by which meteorographic records are transmitted to a station at a distance.

mē·tē·or'ō·sçōpe, n. [Gr. meteōroskopion, from meteōroskopos, observing the heavenly bodies; meteōron, a meteor, pl. heavenly bodies, and skopein, to view.]

1. an instrument by which the apparent path of a meteor may be measured.
2. an instrument formerly used to take the apparent magnitude and angular distances of stars.

mē·tē'ō·rous, a. of or like a meteor.

-mē·tēr, [from L. metrum, Gr. metron, a measure.] a suffix meaning: (a) a device for measuring (a specified thing), as in thermo*meter*, baro*meter*; (b) (a specified number of) meters, as in kilo*meter*; also, (a specified fraction of) a meter, as in centi*meter*; (c) having (a specified number of) metrical feet, as in penta*meter*.

mē′tēr, n. [ME. meter, a measurer, from AS. metan, to measure.]
1. a person who measures; especially, an official who measures commodities.
2. an instrument or apparatus for measuring; especially, an apparatus for measuring and recording the quantity or rate of flow of gas, electricity, or water passing through it.
airspeed meter; an instrument to measure the speed of aircraft.
drift meter; an aircraft instrument to indicate the side slip of the plane through the air.
dry meter; a gas meter requiring no liquid.
wet meter; a gas meter containing a liquid and a drum which revolves, measuring the gas that passes it.

mē′tēr, v.t. to measure or record with a meter or meters.

mē′tēr, mē′tre (-tēr), n. [ME. and OFr. metre (Fr. mètre); L. metrum; Gr. metron, measure.]
1. (a) rhythm in verse; measured, patterned arrangement of syllables, primarily according to stress and length; (b) the specific rhythm as determined by the prevailing foot and the number of feet in the line; as, iambic meter; (c) the specific rhythmic pattern of a stanza as determined by the kind and number of lines.
2. rhythm in music; especially, the division into measures, or bars, having a uniform number of beats; pattern of strong and weak beats in a measure; as, 4/4 meter is also called common time.
3. [Fr. mètre.] the basic unit of length in the metric system, equal to 39.37 inches: it was meant to be, and virtually is, one ten-millionth part of the distance along a meridian from the equator to the pole.
common meter; a four-line stanza having alternately four and three iambic feet. long meter; a four-line stanza having four iambic feet to each line.
short meter; a four-line stanza having three iambic feet to the first, second, and fourth lines and four iambic feet in the third.

mē′tēr-āġe, n. measurement; also, a fee for measuring.

mēte′wand, n. a rod used as a measure. [Dial.]

mēte′yard, n. a yardstick. [Dial.]

meth, n. methedrine. [Slang.]

meth-aç′ry-lāte, n. a salt or ester of methacrylic acid.

meth-aç′ry-lāte reṣ′in, any of several plastic substances formed by polymerizing esters of methacrylic acid.

meth-ȧ-çryl′iç ac′id, [from *meth*yl and acrylic.] a crystalline acid, $C_4H_6O_2$, obtained from camomile or made synthetically.

meth′ȧ-dōne, n. [from 6 di*meth*yla*m*ino-4, 4-*di*phenyl-3-heptanone, and arbitrary -one.] a synthetic narcotic drug used in medicine as an analgesic more potent than morphine and less rapidly habit-forming.

meth-am-phet′ă-mīne, n. [metho-, and amphetamine.] a white crystalline derivative of amphetamine, $C_{10}H_{15}N$, used in the form of its hydrochloride as a drug with a stronger stimulating action than amphetamine.

meth′āne, n. [*meth*yl and -ane.] a gaseous hydrocarbon, CH_4, of the paraffin, or methane, series. It is colorless, odorless, and inflammable and is formed by the decomposition of vegetable matter or produced artificially. It is found native in petroleum wells, in marshes as marsh gas, and in mines as firedamp. Methane is used as a fuel and for illumination.

meth′āne sē′riēṣ, in chemistry, a group of open-chain, saturated hydrocarbons having the general formula C_nH_{2n+2}, with methane as the first of the chain.

meth′ȧ-nōl, n. [methane, and alco*hol*.] a colorless, volatile, inflammable, poisonous liquid, CH_3OH, obtained by the destructive distillation of wood and used in organic synthesis, as a fuel, and in the manufacture of formaldehyde, smokeless powders, paints, etc.

meth-aq′uȧ-lōne (-ak′wȧ-), n. [metho-, and -a-, and quinazolone.] a white crystalline powder, $C_{16}H_{19}N_2O$, used in the form of its hydrochloride salt as a sedative and hypnotic.

meth′e-drīne, n. [*meth*amphetamine, and eph*edrine*.] methamphetamine hydroxide, $C_{10}H_{15}N{\cdot}HCl$, used in medicine like amphetamine: a trade-mark (Methedrine).

mē-theg′lin, n. [W. meddyglyn; medd, mead, and llyn, liquor.] an alcoholic liquor made of fermented honey and water; mead.

met-hē″mō-glō′bin, n. [met- and hemoglobin.] a brownish, crystalline substance derived from hemoglobin by oxidation and sometimes found in the urine and blood.

me-thē′nȧ-min, n. methenamine.

me-thē′nȧ-mīne, n. [from methene (from methyl and -ene) and amine.] hexamethylenetetramine, $(CH_2)_6N_4$, a product of the reaction of ammonia with formaldehyde, used as a diuretic, an internal antiseptic, etc.

meth′ēne, n. same as methylene.

meth′ē-nyl, n. [methene and -yl.] the trivalent radical CH, existing in some hydrocarbons.

meth′īde, n. [*meth*yl and -ide.] a compound of an element and methyl.

mē-thiṅks′, v. impers.; methought, pt. it seems to me. [Archaic.]

me-thī′ō-nāte, n. a salt of methionic acid.

meth-ī-on′iç, a. [*meth*yl and Gr. theion, brimstone.] of or derived from sulfur and methyl.
methionic acid; a sulfonic compound derived from methyl compounds by the action of strong sulfuric acid.

me-thī′ō-nīne, n. [from *meth*yl and *thion*ic and -ine.] an amino acid, $C_5H_{11}NO_2S$, obtained from various proteins.

meth′ō-, a combining form meaning methyl: also, before a vowel, meth-.

meth′ŏd, n. [Gr. methodos, a going after, pursuit, system; meta, after, and hodos, way.]
1. a way of doing anything; mode; procedure; process; especially, a regular, orderly, definite procedure or way of teaching, investigating, etc.
2. regularity and orderliness in action, thought, or expression; system in doing things or handling ideas.
3. regular, orderly arrangement.
the Method; a realistic style of acting originated by Stanislavsky, in which the actor strives for close personal identification with his role.
Syn.—mode, manner, order, regularity, rule, system, way.

meth′ŏd, a. [often M–] using the Method.

mē-thod′iç, a. same as methodical.

mē-thod′iç-ăl, a. [LL. methodicus; Gr. methodikos, working by rule, systematic, from methodos, method.] characterized by method; systematic; as, a methodical investigator.

mē-thod′iç-ăl-ly, adv. in a methodical manner.

mē-thod′iç-ăl-ness, n. the state or quality of being methodical.

mē-thod′içs, n. the science of method; methodology.

Meth′ŏd-iṣm, n. 1. [m–] methodical action; excessive adherence to systematic procedure.
2. the church system, doctrines, and worship of Methodists.

Meth′ŏd-ist, n. 1. [m–] one characterized by strict adherence to method; specifically, one of a sect of ancient physicians who practiced by method or theory.
2. a member of any branch of a Protestant Christian denomination that developed from the evangelistic teachings and work of John and Charles Wesley, George Whitefield, and others in the first half of the eighteenth century: so called from the methodical study and worship practiced by the founders in their "Holy Club" at Oxford University, England (1729).

Meth′ŏd-ist, a. pertaining to or characteristic of Methodism or Methodists.

Meth-ŏd-is′tiç, a. Methodist.

Meth-ŏd-is′tiç-ăl, a. Methodist.

Meth-ŏd-is′tiç-ăl-ly, adv. in a Methodistic manner.

meth″ŏd-i-zā′tion, n. the act of methodizing.

meth′ŏd-īze, v.t.; methodized, pt., pp.; methodizing, ppr. to make methodical; to systematize; to arrange in a convenient manner.

meth′ŏd-īze, v.i. to act according to fixed methods.

meth′ŏd-ī-zēr, n. one who methodizes.

meth″ŏd-ō-loġ′iç-ăl, a. pertaining to methodology.

meth-ŏd-ol′ō-ġy, n. [Gr. methodos, method, and -logia, from legein, to speak.]
1. the science of method, or orderly arrangement; specifically, the branch of logic concerned with the application of the principles of reasoning to scientific and philosophical inquiry.
2. a system of methods, as in any particular science.

mē-thought′ (-thọt′), v. past tense of methinks. [Archaic.]

meth-ox′yl, n. [*meth*yl and hydr*oxyl*.] a radical, CH_3O, an analogue of hydroxyl.

meths, n. methylated spirits. [Brit. Colloq.]

Mē-thū′ṣe-lăh, n. [Heb. methūshelaḥ, lit., perh., man of the dart.]
1. in the Bible, one of the patriarchs, said to have lived 969 years: Gen. v. 27.
2. a very old man.

meth′yl, n. [Fr. méthyle (or G. methyl), back-formation, from méthylène (or G. methylen).] the monovalent hydrocarbon radical CH_3, found only in combination, as in methyl alcohol.

meth′yl ac′e-tāte, a colorless, volatile, inflammable liquid, $C_3H_6O_2$, that smells like apples: it is a methyl ester of acetic acid and is used as a solvent and in flavoring extracts.

meth-yl-al′, n. [Fr. méthylal, from méthyle, methyl and alcool, alcohol.] a colorless, volatile, inflammable liquid, $CH_2(OCH_3)_2$, that smells like chloroform: it is produced by the incomplete oxidation of methanol and used as a solvent, anesthetic, etc.

meth′yl al′cō-hol, methanol.

meth″yl-am-īne′, n. a colorless gas, CH_3NH_2, having a strong ammoniacal odor, resembling ammonia in many of its reactions: it is prepared synthetically or by the distillation of wood, bone, etc.

meth′yl-āte, n. a derivative of methyl alcohol in which the hydrogen of the hydroxyl group is replaced by a metal.

meth′yl-āte, v.t.; methylated, pt., pp.; methylating, ppr. 1. to mix with methyl alcohol, often in order to make the resulting mixture undrinkable.
2. to combine with methyl.

meth′yl-āt-ed spir′it (or spir′its), ethyl alcohol made unfit to drink by the addition of methanol, or methyl alcohol; denatured alcohol.

meth′yl ben′zēne, toluene.

meth′yl ch lō′rīde, a gas, CH_3Cl, which when compressed becomes a sweet, colorless liquid with an etherlike smell: it is used as a refrigerant and local anesthetic.

meth′yl-ēne, n. [methyl and -ene.]
1. a bivalent hydrocarbon radical, CH_2, existing only in combination.
2. methanol. [Rare.]

3. metrical.

metric hundredweight; 50 kilograms.

metric system; a decimal system of weights and measures in which the gram (.0022046 pound), the meter (39.37 inches), and the liter (61.025 cubic inches) are the basic units of weight, length, and capacity, respectively: most names for the various other units are formed by the addition of the following prefixes:

deca- or deka- (ten), as, 1 decameter = 10 meters hecto- (one hundred), as, 1 hectometer = 100 meters kilo- (one thousand), as, 1 kilometer = 1,000 meters deci- (one tenth), as, 1 decimeter = $^1/_{10}$ meter centi- (one hundredth), as, 1 centimeter = $^1/_{100}$ meter milli- (one thousandth), as, 1 millimeter = $^1/_{1000}$ meter

Other prefixes sometimes used are myria- (ten thousand), mega- (one million), and micro- (one millionth).

The metric system originated in France and is now the legal standard in a number of countries, and is used in scientific measurements by nearly all civilized nations.

The following are tables of metric measures and their equivalents:

Length

1 millimeter = .03937 inch, or about $^1/_{25}$ inch 1 centimeter = .3937 inch
1 decimeter = 3.937 inches
1 meter = 39.370 inches = 3.281 ft. = 1.0936 yd.
1 decameter = 10 meters = 10.94 yds.
1 hectometer = 100 meters = 109.4 yds.
1 kilometer = 1093.6 yds., or about $^5/_8$ mile

1 sq. millimeter = .00155 sq. inch
1 sq. centimeter = .155 sq. inch
1 sq. decimeter = 15.5 sq. inches
1 sq. meter = 1550 sq. inches = 10.764 sq. ft. = 1.196 sq. yd.
1 are = 100 sq. meters = 119.6 sq. yds.
1 hectare = 2.471 acres

Volume

1 cub. millimeter = .000061 cub. inch
1 cub. centimeter = .06102 cub. inch
1 cub. decimeter = 61.02 cub. inches
1 cub. meter = 61023 cub. inches = 35.31 cub. ft. = 1.308 cub. yd.

The liter (used for liquids) is the same as the cubic decimeter, and is equal to 1.0567 United States quart.

Weight

1 milligram = .01543 grain
1 gram = 15.432 grains
1 kilogram = 15432.3 grains = 2.2046 lbs. avoir.

Miscellaneous

1 gram per sq. centimeter = 2.0481 lbs. per sq. ft.
1 kilogram per sq. centim. = 14.223 lbs. per sq. in.
1 kilogram-meter = 7.233 foot-pounds

Length

1 inch = 2.54 centimeters
1 foot = 30.48 centimeters
1 yard = 91.44 centimeters
1 statute mile = 160933 centimeters

Area

1 sq. inch = 6.45 sq. cm.
1 sq. foot = 929 sq. cm.
1 sq. yard = 8361 sq. cm.
1 sq. mile = 2.59×10^{10} sq. cm.

Volume

1 cub. inch = 16.39 cub. cm.
1 cub. foot = 28317 cub. cm.
1 cub. yard = 764553 cub. cm.
1 imperial gallon = 4546 cub. cm.
1 United States gallon = 3785 cub. cm.

Weight

1 grain = .0648 gram
1 oz. avoir. = 28.35 grams
1 lb. avoir. = 453.6 grams 1 short ton = $.90718 \times 10^6$ grams
1 long ton = 1.016×10^6 grams
More accurately, 1 lb. avoir. = 453.592 gm.

Velocity

1 mile per hour = 44.704 cm. per sec.
1 kilometer per hour = 27.778 cm. per sec.

Density

1 lb. per cub. foot = .0160 gm. per cub. cm.
62.4 lbs. per cub. ft. = 1 gm. per cub. cm.

Force (assuming g = 981)

Weight of 1 grain = 63.57 dynes
" 1 oz. avoir. = 2.78×10^4 dynes
" 1 lb. avoir. = 4.45×10^5 dynes
" 1 short ton = 8.899×10^8 dynes
" 1 long ton = 9.97×10^8 dynes
" 1 gram = 981 dynes
" 1 kilogram = 9.81×10^5 dynes

Work (assuming g = 981)

1 foot-pound = 1.356×10^7 ergs
1 kilogram-meter = 9.81×10^7 ergs
Work in a second by one theoretical horsepower = 7.46×10^9 ergs

Metric thread; in machinery, a type of screw thread recognized by an international congress in 1898 as standard. It is on the metric system, but otherwise similar to the American standard.

metric ton; a millier or tonneau; 1000 kilograms, equal to 2,204.62 pounds (.984 long ton or 1.023 short tons).

mī'çà pow'dẽr, a kind of dynamite consisting of nitroglycerin and mica.

mī'çà schist (shist), a metamorphic rock containing a large proportion of mica, with quartz and various minor constituents, and having a slaty or schistose structure.

mīce, n. pl. of mouse.

mi·cel'la, n.; pl. mi·cel'lae, same as micelle.

mi·celle', mi·cell', n. [Mod. L. micella, dim., from L. mica, a grain, crumb, morsel.]
1. a hypothetical structural unit of an organized body.
2. the structural unit of gel-forming colloids, made up of complex molecules: it can change in size without changing chemically and may have crystalline properties.

Mī'çhael (-kl), n. in the Bible, the archangel who, with an army of loyal angels, victoriously warred with the rebel angel Lucifer: Rev. xii. 7–9.

Miçh'ael·măs (-el-), n. [Michael and mass, a feast.] the feast of St. Michael, the archangel, celebrated on the 29th of September: in England, a quarter day.

Miçh'ael·măs dāi'ṣy, any of various asters, wild or cultivated.

miche, v.i. [ME. michen, mouchen; OFr. muchier, to hide, skulk.]

1. to lie hid; to skulk; to retire or shrink from view, to sneak. [Obs. or Brit. Dial.]
2. to be guilty of anything done in secret, as to carry on an illicit amour, or to pilfer secretly. [Obs. or Brit. Dial.]
Written also meech and meach.

Mī-çhē'ăs, n. Micah: Douay Bible form.

Mī-çhē'li-ȧ, n. [named after Micheli, a Florentine botanist of the eighteenth century.] a genus of fine, lofty, Asiatic trees of the magnolia family. Several species yield useful timber as well as products used in medicine.

Mich-i-gan'dēr (mish-) n. a native or inhabitant of Michigan.

Mich'i-găn-īte (mish'), n. same as Michigander.

mick, n. [dim. of Michael, taken as a typical Irish name.] an Irishman: hostile or contemptuous term. [Slang.]

mick'ey finn, Mick'ey Finn, a drink of liquor to which a powerful narcotic or purgative has been added, given to an unsuspecting person: also mickey, Mickey. [Slang.]

mick'le, a., adv., and n. [ME. (Northern) mikel; AS. micel.] much: also muckle. [Archaic or Scot.]

Miç'maç, n.; pl. Miç'maç, Miç'maçs, [Amer. Ind., lit., allies.] a member of a tribe of Algonquian Indians in Newfoundland and the Maritime Provinces of Canada.

mī'çō, n. [S. Am.] a small South American monkey, Hapale argentatus, with hair shining and entirely white, the tail black, and the face and hands of a deep flesh color; a variety of marmoset.

Mī-çō'ni-ȧ, n. [named after D. Micon, a Spanish botanist.] a very extensive genus of trees and shrubs, native to South America.

mī'çrȧ, n. pl. of micron.

mī-çrȧ-çōus'tiç, a. [Fr. micracoustique.] serving to augment weak sounds.

mī-çrȧ-çōus'tiç, n. an instrument which augments weak sounds. [Obs.]

mī-çran'dēr, n. [Gr. mikros, small, and anēr, andros, man, male.] a dwarf male plant developed from the androspores of some algae.

mī-çren-ceph'ȧ-lous, a. having a small brain.

mī'çri-fȳ, v.t.; micrified, pt., pp.; micrifying, ppr. [from micro- and -fy.] to make small or unimportant.

mī'çrō-, [Gr. mikro-, from mikros, small.] a combining form meaning: (a) little, small, minute; (b) exceptionally little, abnormally small, as in *micro*cephalic; (c) enlarging what is small, as in *micro*scope, *micro*phone; (d) relation to microscopes, microscopic, as in *micro*chemistry; (e) in the metric system, etc., one millionth part of (a specified unit), as in *micro*gram, *micro*farad: also, before a vowel, micr-.

mī"çrō-am-pēre', n. [micro- and ampere.] in electricity, one millionth part of an ampere.

mī"çrō-ȧ-nal'y-sis, n. the chemical analysis and identification of very small quantities.

mī-çrō-au'di-phōne, n. [micro- and audiphone.] an instrument used for making very faint sounds audible.

mī-çrō-bar'ō-gr̀aph, n. a barograph for recording very small changes in atmospheric pressure.

mī'çrōbe, n. [Fr., from Gr. mikros, small, and bios, life.] a very minute living thing, whether plant or animal; microorganism; especially, any of the bacteria that cause disease; germ.

mī-çrō'bi-ăl, a. same as microbic.

mī-çrō'bi-ăn, a. same as microbic.

mī-çrō'biç, a. of or caused by a microbe or microbes.

mī-çrō'bi-çīde, n. [from microbe, and L. cædere, to kill.] anything that kills microbes.

mī"çrō-bī-ol'ō-ġy, n. [from micro-, and Gr. bios, life, and -logia, from legein, to speak.] the branch of biology that deals with microorganisms.

mī-çrō'bi-on, n. same as microbe.

mī-çrō-çär'di-ȧ, n. [from micro-, and Gr. kardia, heart.] abnormal smallness of the heart.

mī"çrō-cē-phā'li-ȧ, n. same as microcephaly.

mī"çrō-cē-phal'iç, a. same as microcephalous.

mī-çrō-ceph'ȧ-lişm, n. the condition of being microcephalic.

mī-çrō-ceph'ȧ-lous, a. of or having microcephaly.

mī-çrō-ceph'ȧ-ly, n. [from micro-, and Gr. kephalē, head.] unnatural smallness of the head; the condition in which the head or cranial capacity is abnormally small.

mī-çrō-çhem'i-çăl, a. of or pertaining to microchemistry.

mī-çrō-çhem'is-try, n. [micro- and chemistry.] the chemistry of microscopic quantities or objects.

mī"çrō-chrō-nom'ē-tēr, n. [from micro-, and Gr. chronos, time, and metron, a measure.] a chronoscope for registering very small periods of time, such as the time a projectile takes to pass over a short distance.

mī"çrō-clī"mȧ-tol'ō-ġy, n. the study of slight differences in climate, as between adjoining terrains, due to slight differences in soil, exposure, etc.

mī'çrō-clīne, n. [from micro-, and Gr. klinein, to incline.] a grayish, yellowish, greenish, or reddish mineral of the feldspar family, potassium aluminum silicate, $KAlSi_3O_8$, having a glassy luster and perfect cleavage: it occurs in igneous rocks.

mī-çrō-çoç'çăl, a. of, pertaining to, or caused by micrococci.

Mī-çrō-çoç'çus, n. [from micro-, and Gr. kokkos, a kernel, berry.]
1. a genus of spherical or egg-shaped bacteria that occur in irregular masses or plates and feed on dead or living matter.
2. [m–] pl. mī-çrō-çoç'cī, any member of this genus.

mī'çrō-çoşm, n. [LL. microcosmus; L.Gr. mikrokosmos; mikros, small, and kosmos, world.]
1. a little world: figuratively used for man, as an epitome of the universe, or great world.
2. a community, village, etc. regarded as a miniature or epitome of the world.

mī-çrō-çoş'miç, a. 1. of, being, or like a microcosm.
2. designating a white, crystalline salt, sodium ammonium hydrogen phosphate, $Na(NH_4)HPO_4{\cdot}4H_2O$, used as a reagent in blowpipe analysis, in testing for metallic oxides, etc.: it was originally obtained from human urine.

mī-çrō-çoş'mi-çăl, a. same as microcosmic.

mī"çrō-çoş-mog'rȧ-phy, n. [L.Gr. mikrokosmos, a little world, and -graphia, from graphein, to write.] the description of man as a microcosm.

mī"çrō-çōu-lomb' (-lom'), n. [micro- and coulomb.] in electricity, one millionth of a coulomb.

mī'çrō-çrith, n. [from micro-, and Gr. krithē, barley.] in chemistry, the weight of an atom of hydrogen used as a standard unit of molecular weights.

mī-çrō-çrys'tăl-line, a. [from micro-, and Gr. krystallinos, of crystal.] having crystalline structure that can be seen only with a microscope.

mī'çrō-cyst, n. [from micro-, and Gr. kystis, a bladder, bag.] a resting stage, entered into by the swarm spores of certain fungi, as in Myxomycetes, under conditions which do not favor development.

mī'çrō-cȳte, n. [from micro-, and Gr. kytos, a hollow, cavity.] an abnormally small red blood corpuscle, occurring especially in certain types of anemia.

mī"çrō-cȳ-thē'mi-ȧ, n. [from micro-, and Gr. kytos, a hollow, cavity, and haima, blood.] a diseased condition of the blood marked by the presence of microcytes.

mī"çrō-dē-teç'tŏr, n. [micro- and detector.] an instrument for detecting very small amounts of, or minute changes in, an electric current.

mī"çrō-dis-seç'tion, n. dissection of tissue, etc. under the microscope.

mī'çrō-dont, a. having very small teeth.

mī'çrō-dont, n. a microdont individual.

mī'çrō-dont-işm, n. exceptional smallness of the teeth.

mī-çrō-far'ad, n. [micro- and farad.] one millionth of a farad.

mī'çrō-film, n. 1. film on which documents, printed pages, etc. are photographed in a reduced size for convenience in storage and transportation: enlarged prints can be made from such film, or the film can be viewed directly with the help of a special optical apparatus.
2. a reproduction on microfilm.
3. loosely, a microphotograph (sense 3). mī'çrō-film, v.t. and v.i. to photograph on microfilm.

mī'çrō-fȯrm, n. [from micro-, and L. forma, form.] a microscopic organism or form of organism.

mī"çrō-gȧ-mēte', n. the smaller, usually the male, of a pair of conjugating gametes.

mī-çrō-gē-ō-log'iç-ăl, a. pertaining to microgeology.

mī"çrō-ġē-ol'ō-ġy, n. [micro- and geology.] that branch of geology which involves the use of the microscope.

mī-çrō-glos'si-ȧ, n. [from micro-, and Gr. glōssa, the tongue.] in biology, exceptional smallness of the tongue.

mī"çrō-gō-nid'i-um, n. [micro- and gonidium.]
1. in botany, a gonidium of the smaller of two distinct sizes.
2. in zoology, a small infusorian regarded as a male sexual cell.

mī'çrō-gram, mī'çrō-gramme, n. [micro- and gram.] one millionth of a gram.

mī'çrō-gram, n. a micrograph (sense 2).

mī'çrō-gr̀aph, n. [micro- and -graph.]
1. an apparatus for doing extremely small writing, drawing, or engraving.
2. a photograph or drawing of an object as seen through a microscope.
3. an apparatus by which, through the movements of a diaphragm, very slight movements can be recorded in magnified visual form and measured.

mī-çrō-graph'iç, a. pertaining to micrography.

mī-çrog'rȧ-phy, n. [micro- and -graphy.]
1. the study or description of objects too small to be discerned without the aid of a microscope.
2. the art or practice of writing in tiny characters.

mī'çrō-groo̤ve, n. 1. a very narrow needle groove, as in a long-playing phonograph record, allowing more matter to be recorded on a record than does the ordinary, wider groove.
2. a record having such narrow grooves.
A trade-mark (Microgroove).

mī-çrōhm', n. [micr- and ohm.] one millionth of an ohm.

mī-çrō-lep-i-dop'tēr, n. any of certain small moths.

Mī-çrō-lep-i-dop'tēr-a, n.pl. [micro- and Lepidoptera.] certain of the small moths, regarded as a group.

mī'çrō-līte, n. [from micro-, and Gr. lithos, stone.]
1. a mineral related to pyrochlore, characterized by a brownish color and resinous luster, and occurring in very small octahedral crystals.
2. see microlith.

mī-çrō-lī'tēr, n. [micro- and liter.] a measure of capacity of the millionth part of a liter.

mī'çrō-lith, n. [from micro-, and Gr. lithos, stone.] a minute isotropic needle-shaped crystal found mostly in volcanic rocks.

mī-çrō-lith'iç, a. [from micro-, and Gr. lithos, stone.] of, pertaining to, or consisting of small stones: opposed to megalithic.

mī-çrō-log'i-çăl, mī-çrō-log'iç, a. of or pertaining to micrology.

mī-çrō-log'i-çăl-ly, adv. in a micrological manner; in minute detail.

mī-çrol'ō-ġy, n. [Gr. mikrologia: see micro- and -logy.] the discussion or study of trivial matters or petty differences.

mī'çrō-mēre, n. [Gr. mikromerēs, of small parts; mikros, small, and meros, a part.] in biology, one of the smaller subdivisions of a telolecithal ovum.

Mī-crō-mē'ri-ȧ, n. [from micro-, and Gr. meros, part.] a genus of plants of the family Lamiaceæ, comprising about sixty species, mostly of the Old World: in the United States, one representative, Micromeria douglassii, is known in California as yerba buena.

mī"çrō-mē-rit'iç, a. in geology, composed of grains so small as to be invisible to the naked eye: applied to rocks.

mī-çrom'ē-tēr, n. [from micro-, and Gr. metron, measure.]
1. an instrument for measuring very small distances, angles, diameters, etc., used on a telescope or microscope.
2. micrometer calipers.
annular, circular, or ring micrometer; a micrometer for use in a telescope, consisting essentially of a thin, smooth, metal ring, adjusted with great precision in the focus of the instrument in such a way that it seems to hang in the atmosphere between the observer and the celestial dome.
double-image micrometer; a micrometer by means of which two images of an object are formed, as by a bisected lens whose halves are adjustable along the line of section.
filar micrometer; a micrometer having at the focus, as of a telescope, two parallel spider lines, one fixed and the other movable by means of a micrometer screw, by the turns of which the distance between the lines at any time is determined: used for determining the distance between two objects and the rate of their approach to or recedence from each other.

mī·crom′ē·tēr bal′ăn·ce, a balance for delicate weighing, as of coins, adjustable by a micrometer screw.

mī·crom′ē·tēr cal′i·pērs (or cal′i·pēr), calipers adjustable by a micrometer screw, used for measuring diameters of wires, thin leaves of metal, etc.

mī·crom′ē·tēr screw (skrū), a finely threaded screw of definite pitch, with a head graduated to show how much the screw has been moved in or out: used in micrometers, etc. to give fine measurements, sometimes to .0001 of an inch.

MICROMETER CALIPERS
A, used for measuring inside dimensions; B, used for measuring outside dimensions mī·crō·met′riç, mī·crō·met′riç·ăl, a. pertaining to or made by the micrometer.

mī·crō·met′riç·ăl·ly, adv. by means of a micrometer.

mī·crom′e·try, n. measurement by means of micrometers.

mī·crō·mil′li·mē·tēr, mī·crō·mil′li·mē·tre (-tēr), n. [micro- and millimeter.]
1. one millionth of a millimeter; one billionth of a meter.
2. a millimicron.
3. in biology and chemistry, a micron.

mī″crō·mō′tion, n. one of a series of very short motions which succeed each other so quickly that the eye confuses them.

mī′cron, n.; pl. mī′crons, mī′crà, [Mod. L., from Gr. mikron, neut. of mikros, small, minute.]
1. one millionth of a meter; one thousandth of a millimeter.
2. in physical chemistry, a particle having a diameter between .01 and .0001 millimeter.
Also spelled mikron.

Mī·crō·nē′siăn, a. [Gr. mikronēsos; mikros, small, and nēsos, island.] of or pertaining to Micronesia, its people, their language, or their culture.

Mī·crō·nē′siăn, n. 1. a native of Micronesia, which is inhabited by peoples of mixed Melanesian, Polynesian, and Malayan stock.
2. any of the Austronesian languages spoken in Micronesia.

mī·crō·nom′e·tēr, n. same as microchronometer.

mī·crō·nū′clē·us, n.; pl. mī·crō·nū′clē·ī, [micro- and nucleus.] in biology, a small nucleus, particularly the smaller of two nuclei, as found in some infusorians: distinguished from macronucleus.

mī·crō·or′găn·işm, n. any microscopic or ultramicroscopic animal or vegetable organism; especially, any of the bacteria, protozoa, viruses, etc.; also spelled microörganism, micro-organism.

mī·crō·pan′tō·gràph, n. [micro- and pantograph.] an instrument constructed on the general principle of the pantograph for executing extremely minute writing and engraving.

mī″crō·pà·thol′ō·ġy, n. [micro- and pathology.] that branch of pathology in which facts and conditions are revealed only by the use of the microscope, as the nature and effects of bacteria, etc.

mī·crō·peg′mà·tīte, n. [micro- and pegmatite.] a rock that shows the structure of pegmatite, or graphic granite, when examined under the microscope.

mī·crō·peg·mà·tit′iç, a. relating to or descriptive of graphic granite with microscopic markings.

mī′crō·phōne, n. [micro-, and Gr. phōnē, voice, sound.] a device used in radio, telephony, and sound recording, by means of which sound waves are changed to electrical impulses, permitting them to be recorded, amplified, reproduced or transmitted. The most widely used principle is the variation of electrical impedance (either resistance, capacitance, or inductance), effected by means of a diaphragm upon which sound waves are allowed to fall; the vibrations produced vary the impedance of an electrical circuit, giving the resulting oscillations the same frequency as the original sound wave with proportional amplitudes.

mī·crō·phon′iç, a. of, having the nature of, or like a microphone.

mī·crō·phon′içs, n. the science that deals with the augmenting of weak sounds.

mī·croph′ō·nous, a. microphonic. [Rare.]

mī·crō·phō′tō·gràph, n. [micro- and photograph.]
1. a very small photograph, usually requiring enlargement to bring out the details.
2. a photograph taken through a microscope: usually photomicrograph.
3. an enlarged photograph printed from a microfilm.

mī″crō·phō·tog′rà·phy, n. [micro- and photography.] a photographic process by which an object is reproduced in microscopic size; the photography of microscopic objects.

mī·croph·thal′mi·à, mī·croph·thal′my, n. [from micro-, and Gr. opthalmos, the eye.] abnormal smallness of the eye.

mī·crō·phyl′line, a. [from micro-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] in botany, composed of or bearing very small leaves or leaflets.

mī·crō·phyl′lous, a. [from micro-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] in botany, having small leaves.

mī·crō·phys′içs, n. [micro- and physics.] that branch of physics that deals with microscopic physical phenomena.

mī·crō·phȳ′tăl, a. same as microphytic.

mī′crō·phȳte, n. [micro- and -phyte.] any microscopically small plant, especially one parasitic in its habits.

mī·crō·phyt′iç, a. of, or having the nature of, a microphyte.

mī′crō·print, n. a microphotograph of printed or written matter so greatly reduced that it can be read only through a magnifying device.

mī·crop′si·à, mī′crop·sy, n. [from micro-, and Gr. ōpsis, view.] in pathology, a derangement of vision which causes objects to appear abnormally small.

mī·crop′tēr·ous, a. [from micro-, and Gr. pteron, a wing, feather.] short-winged or short-finned.

mī·crō·pȳ′lăr, a. of, or having the nature of, a micropyle.

mī′crō·pȳle, n. [Fr., from Gr. mikros, small, and pylē, gate, opening.]
1. in botany, (a) a very small opening in the outer coats of an ovule, through which the pollen tube penetrates; (b) the corresponding opening in the developed seed.
2. in zoology, a very small opening in the vitelline membrane of an ovum, through which spermatozoa can enter.

mī″crō·pȳ·rom′e·tēr, n. [micro- and pyrometer.] an optical instrument for determining temperature, etc. of minute bodies giving off light or heat.

mī′crō·sclēre, n. [from micro-, and Gr. sklēros, hard.] in zoology, a very small sponge spicule, usually supporting a single cell.

mī′crō·scōpe, n. [from micro-, and Gr. skopeın, to view.] an optical instrument consisting of a lens or combination of lenses, which magnifies very small objects so that their structure or texture may be examined.
compound microscope; a microscope which differs from the simple or single lens microscope in having an object lens and an eyepiece arranged to give greater magnification; the objective and eyepiece each consist of a lens or combination of lenses mounted at either end of a telescoping tube so that they can be focused by a gear.
binocular microscope; a form of compound microscope with two eyepieces permitting rays of light from an object to pass into both eyes of the observer.
oxyhydrogen microscope; a microscope in which an oxyhydrogen light is used to illuminate the object.
simple or single microscope; a microscope consisting of a single convex lens between the eye and the object.
solar microscope; a microscope having a reflector and a condenser connected with it, the former being employed to throw the sun's ray on the latter, by which it is condensed to illuminate the object placed in its focus.

COMPOUND MICROSCOPE
A, eyepiece; B, B, objectives; C, stage; D, mirror; E, E, adjustmen heads mī·crō·scō′pi·ăl, a. microscopic. [Rare.]

mī·crō·scop′iç, mī·crō·scop′iç·ăl, a. 1. of or pertaining to the microscope or to microscopy; for the use of a microscope; as, a microscopic mirror.
2. with or as with a microscope; made or as if made by a microscope; as, microscopic observations.
3. resembling or suggestive of a microscope; searching; minutely observing.
4. very small; visible only with the aid of a microscope; as, a microscopic insect.

mī·crō·scop′iç·ăl·ly, adv. 1. by using a microscope.
2. in careful detail, as if with a microscope; exactly, minutely, and searchingly.
3. so as to be microscopic; extremely; as, microscopically small.

mī·cros′cō·pist, n. one who uses, or is skilled in using, a microscope.

mī·cros′cō·py, n. the use of the microscope; investigation by means of a microscope.

mī·crō·seç′tion, n. [micro- and section.] a thin transparent slice or section, as of wood, prepared for examination by a microscope.

mī′crō·seīşm, n. [from micro-, and Gr. seismos, a shaking.] a very weak or slight vibration of the earth's crust.

mī·crō·seīs′miç, a. of a microseism.

mī·crō·seīş′mō·gràph, n. [from micro-, and Gr. seismos, a shaking, and graphein, to write.] a microseismometer.

mī″crō·seīş·mom′e·tēr, n. [from micro-, and Gr. seismos, a shaking, and metron, measure.] an instrument for indicating the duration, intensity, and direction of microseisms.

mī′crō·sēme, a. [from micro-, and Gr. sema, a mark, sign.] having a comparatively small orbital index, specifically, one below 83: said of a skull.

mī·crō·sep′tum, n.; pl. mī·crō·sep′tà, [micro- and septum.] a small, imperfect septum in an anthozoan.

mī·crō·sī′phon, n. [from micro-, and Gr. siphōn, a tube, pipe.] the rudimentary siphon found in various cephalopods.

mī″crō·sī·phon′ū·là, n. [from micro-, and Gr. siphōn, a tube, pipe.] the stage in the development of some cephalopods at which the microsiphon can first be seen.

mī·croş·mat′iç, a. [from micr-, and Gr. osmē, smell.] having the olfactory organs not well developed.

mī·crō·sō′mà, n. same as microsome.

mī′crō·sōme, n. [micro- and -some (body).] any of the minute granules in the protoplasm of an active cell.

mī·crō·spec′trō·scōpe, n. [micro- and spectroscope.] a spectroscope connected with a microscope for examining the spectrum of light in minute bodies.

mī″ċrō·spec·tros′ċō·py, n. the use of, or investigation by means of, a microspectroscope.
Mī·ċrō·spēr′mae, n.pl. [from micro-, and Gr. sperma, seed.] a group of monocotyledons, including the Hydrocharideæ and the Orchideæ, and named from its small seeds.
mī′ċrō·sphēre, n. [micro-, and sphere.] any of various minute globules, as an encapsulated isotope, a cell-like structure resembling a protein, etc.
mī″ċrō·spō·ran′ġi·um, n.; pl. mī″ċrō·spō·ran′ġi·a, [micro- and sporangium.] a sporangium which contains or produces microspores, as the pollen sac of the anther in seed plants.
mī′ċrō·spōre, n. a small, asexually produced spore from which a male gametophyte develops, as a pollen grain in a seed plant.
mī·ċrō·spōr′iċ, a. of microspores.
mī·ċrō·spō′rō·phyll, n. a sporophyll that produces microsporangia.
mī′ċrō·sthēne, n. [micro-, and Gr. sthenos, strength.] an ineducabilian.
mī·ċrō·sthen′iċ, a. ineducabilian.
mī·ċrō·stom′ā·tous, a. [micro-, and Gr. stōma (-atos), mouth.] having a small mouth.
mī·ċros′tō·mous, a. microstomatous.
Mī·ċrō·stȳ′lis, n. same as Malaxis. mī·ċrō·stȳ′lous, a. [micro-, and Gr. stylos, a pillar.] having short styles and long stamens.
mī′ċrō·tōme, n. [micro-, and Gr. -tomos, from temnein, to cut.] an instrument for cutting thin sections of tissue, etc. for study under the microscope.
mī·ċrō·tom′iċ, a. of microtomy or the microtome.
mī·ċrot′ō·mist, n. one versed in microtomy.
mī·ċrot′ō·my, n. the art of preparing sections for study under the microscope, as by the use of the microtome.
mī·ċrō·vōlt′, n. [micro- and volt.] the millionth of a volt.
mī′ċrō·wāve, n. an extremely short electromagnetic wave; a wave less than ten meters, or especially less than one meter, in length.
mī·ċrō·zō′ȧ, n.pl. [micro-, and Gr. zōon, an animal.] animals of microscopic smallness.

mō'ky, a. muggy; dark; murky. [Dial.]

mōl, n. [G., from molekül, molecule.] in chemistry, a gram molecule; molecular weight (of a substance) in grams: also mole.

Mō'lå, n. [L., millstone.] the typical genus of fishes of the family Molidæ.

mō'lăl, a. in chemistry, relating to the mol or gram-molecular weight; specifically, designating a solution with a concentration equal to one mol of the solute in 1,000 grams of the solvent.

mō'lăr, a. [L. molaris, a mill, from mola, millstone.]
1. used for or capable of grinding.
2. designating or of a tooth or teeth adapted for grinding.

mō'lăr, n. a molar tooth: in man there are twelve molars, three on each side of each jaw, behind the bicuspids.

mō'lăr, a. [from L. moles, mass; and -ar.]
1. in chemistry, molal; specifically, designating a solution containing one mol of solute per liter of solvent.
2. in physics, of a body (of matter) as a whole: opposed to molecular, atomic.

mō'lå·ry, a. fitted for grinding or crushing food; molar.

Mō·lâsse', n. [Fr., from mol, soft; L. mollis, soft.] a formation of soft Tertiary sandstone occurring in Switzerland.

mō·làs'seș, n.; pl. mō·làs'seș, [from Port. melaço, from LL. mellaceum, must, from L. mellaceus, resembling honey, from mel, mellis, honey.] any of various thick, dark-colored sirups, especially that produced during the refining of sugar.

mōld, mōuld, n. [ME. mold, moolde; OFr. molle, moule; from L. modulus, a measure.]
1. a pattern, hollow form, or matrix for giving a certain shape or form to something in a plastic or molten state.
2. a frame, shaped core, etc. on or around which something is modeled.
3. a pattern after which something is formed; a model.
4. something formed or shaped in or on, or as if in or on, a mold.
5. (a) the form or shape given by a mold; (b) form or shape in general.
6. distinctive character or nature.
7. in shipbuilding, a thin, flexible piece of timber, used as a pattern by which to form the curves of the timbers and compassing pieces.
8. among goldbeaters, a number of pieces of vellum, or a like substance, laid over one another, between which the leaves of gold and silver are laid for beating.
9. in architecture, (a) a molding; (b) a group of moldings.

mōld'bōard, mōuld'bōard, n. 1. the curved iron plate of a plow which receives the soil cut loose, and turns it over.
2. in founding, the board on which the pattern is laid for ramming: also called follow board.

mōld'ẽr, mōuld'ẽr, n. 1. one who or that which molds; specifically, in founding, one whose business it is to make molds for castings.
2. in printing, one of a set of eletrotyped plates used for making duplicate electrotypes.

mōld'ẽr, mōuld'ẽr, v.i.; moldered or mouldered, pt., pp.; moldering or mouldering, ppr. [from mold, fine earth.] to turn to dust by natural decay; to crumble; to waste away (often with away).

mōld'ẽr, mōuld'ẽr, v.t. to cause to turn to dust; to reduce to mold or soil; to cause to waste away.

Some felt the silent stroke of moldering age.
—Pope.

mōld'ẽr·y, mōuld'ẽr·y, a. having the characteristics of mold; resembling mold.

mōld fāc'ing, a layer of fine powder sprinkled over the surface of a mold to insure smoothness in the casting; a facing of pulverized charcoal, graphite, chalk, rottenstone, or the like.

mōld'i·ness, mōuld'i·ness, n. [from moldy.] the state or quality of being moldy.

mōld'ing, mōuld'ing, n. 1. the act or process of making molds or of shaping anything in or with a mold.
2. something molded.
3. (a) any of various ornamental contours given to cornices, jambs, etc.; (b) a cornice or other shaped member of wood, stone, etc., either sunk or projecting, used for ornament on a surface or angle of a structure.
4. a shaped strip of wood, etc., as around the upper part of the walls of a room, used for ornament or as a support from which to hang pictures.

MOLDINGS
A, cyma recta; B, ovolo; C, quarter round; D, cyma reversa; E, cavetto; F, congé mōld'ing bōard, a board on which dough is kneaded, rolled, cut, etc.

mōld'ing mà·chīne', 1. in woodworking, a machine for making moldings by means of a rapidly rotating cutter provided with a bit or bits of any desired pattern.
2. in founding, a machine for making molds.

mōld'ing plāne, a plane having a bit shaped for the purpose of making moldings: also called a match plane.

mōld loft, a loft or large room in which the various parts of a ship's hull are accurately constructed from the model.

mōld'warp, n. a mole; a small animal of the genus Talpa. [Brit. Dial.]

mōld'y, mōuld'y a.; comp. moldier; superl. moldiest. 1. overgrown with mold; covered with mold; as, moldy bread; moldy cheese.
2. musty or stale, as from age or decay.

mōle, n. [ME. and AS. mol.] 1. a spot, mark, or small permanent protuberance on the human body, sometimes of a dark color and hairy; especially, a pigmentary nevus.

Mō'leçh, n. same as moloch (senses 1 and 2).

mōle çrick'et, an insect of the genus Gryllotalpa, which burrows underground and damages plants by cutting the roots. Gryllotalpa vulgaris is the common species of Europe, and Gryllotalpa borealis that of America.

MOLE CRICKET
(Gryllotalpa vulgaris)

mō·leç·ū·lăr, a. belonging to, relating to, caused by, or consisting of molecules; as, molecular weight, molecular changes.
molecular film; a film or layer (of a substance) one molecule thick: also called monolayer.
molecular weight; the relative average weight of a molecule of a substance, expressed by a number in a scale on which the weight of the oxygen atom is represented by 16.

mō·leç·ū·lar'i·ty, n. the quality of being molecular; the state of consisting of molecules.

mō·leç'ū·lăr·ly, adv. with respect to molecules.

mol'ē·çūle, n. [Fr. molécule; Mod. L. molecula, dim. from L. moles, a mass.]
1. the smallest particle of an element or compound that can exist in the free state and still retain the characteristics of the element or compound: the molecules of elements consist of one atom or two or more similar atoms; those of compounds consist of two or more different atoms.
2. a gram molecule.
3. a small particle.

mōle'-eȳed (-īd), a. having very small eyes, as a mole; having defective sight.

mōle'hill, n. a little ridge or elevation of earth, formed by a burrowing mole; hence, proverbially, a very small hill or a trivial difficulty or impediment.

Having leaped over such mountains, lie down before a molehill. —South.

mōle rat, any species of old-world rodents belonging to the genera Spalax, Georychus, and others, having small or rudimentary eyes and forefeet with which to burrow.

mōle shrew (shrü), a short-tailed shrew of America, of which there are several species belonging to the genus Blarina.

mōle'skin, n. 1. the soft, dark-gray skin of the mole, used as fur.
2. a strong, twilled cotton fabric with a soft nap, used for work clothes, etc.
3. [pl.] trousers made of this fabric.

mō·lest', v.t.; molested, pt., pp.; molesting, ppr. [ME. molesten; OFr. molester, from L. molestare, to trouble, annoy, from molestus, troublesome, from moles, trouble, labor, distress.] to annoy, interfere with, or meddle with so as to trouble or harm, or with intent to trouble or harm.
Syn.—disturb, confuse, trouble, annoy, worry, bother.

mō·lest', n. trouble; molestation. [Obs.]

mō·les·tā'tion (or mol-es-), n. a molesting or being molested.

mō·lest'ẽr, n. one who molests.

mō·lest'fụl, a. troublesome; annoying. [Rare.]

mō·les·tï'e, n. trouble; molestation. [Obs.]

mōle'wàrp, n. same as moldwarp.

Mol'i·dæ, n.pl. [LL. mola, and -idæ.] a family of gymnodont fishes; the sunfishes.

mō·lim'i·nous, a. very important; of considerable consequence. [Obs.]

mō'line, n. [LL. molinus, pertaining to a mill, from mola, a mill.] same as moline cross.

MOLINE CROSS

moline cross; in heraldry, a cross resembling a mill rynd in form. Each of its arms branches off at the extremity into two curved sections.

2. a prostitute. [Slang.]

mol'là, mol'lah, n. same as mullah.

mol'le·mōke, n. [Sw. mallemucke, the storm petrel.] same as mallemuck.

mŏl·les'cence, n. a softening or tending to soften.

mŏl·les'cent, a. [L. mollescens, ppr. of mollescere, to soften, from mollere, to be soft, from mollis, soft.] softening or tending to soften.

mol'li·ent, a. [L. molliens (-entis), ppr. of mollire, to soften, from mollis, soft.] softening; assuaging; lessening; emollient.

mol'li·ent·ly, adv. assuagingly.

mol'li·fī·à·ble, a. capable of being softened or assuaged.

mol"li·fi·cā'tion, n. a mollifying or being mollified.

mol'li·fī·ĕr, n. one who or that which mollifies.

mol'li·fȳ, v.t.; mollified, pt., pp.; mollifying, ppr. [Fr. mollifier; LL. mollificare, to soften; L. mollis, soft, and facere, to make.]

1. to soften; to make less intense, severe, or violent; to reduce in harshness or asperity.

2. to soothe; to appease; to pacify; to calm or quiet.

Syn.—assuage, mitigate, ameliorate, moderate, soften.

mol·li·pī'lōse, a. [L. mollis, soft, and pilus, a hair.] in zoology, having a soft or fluffy coat of hair or feathers; downy; fleecy.

mŏl·li'ti·ēs (-lish'i-), n. [L., softness, from mollis, soft.] in pathology, softening; unnatural softening, as of an organ, gland, or tissue; as, mollities ossium, softening of the bones.

mol'li·tūde, n. softness; weakness. [Rare.]

mol'lusc, n. see mollusk.

Mŏl·lus'cà, n.pl. [L. molluscus, soft, from mollis, soft.] a large phylum of invertebrates comprising the oysters, clams, mussels, snails, slugs, squids, octopi, whelks, etc., characterized by a soft, unsegmented body enclosed, in most instances, partly or wholly in a calcareous shell of one or more pieces, and having gills, a foot, and a mantle.

mŏl·lus'căn, n. a mollusk; one of the Mollusca.

mŏl·lus'căn, a. pertaining to the Mollusca.

mŏl·lus'çoid, a. [Mollusca, and Gr. eidos, form.]

1. of or pertaining to the Molluscoidea.

2. resembling a mollusk.

mŏl·lus'çoid, n. one of the Molluscoidea.

Mol·lus·çoi'dà, n.pl. same as Molluscoidea.

mol·lus·çoid'ăl, a. molluscoid.

mol·lus·çoid'ăn, a. molluscoid.

Mol·lus·çoi'dē·à, n.pl. [Mollusca, and Gr. eidos, form.] a division of animals comprising the Bryozoa and Brachiopoda, known as anthoid Mollusca.

mŏl·lus'çous, a. molluscan.

mŏl·lus'cum, n. [neut. of L. molluscus, soft.] in medicine, any of various skin diseases, as molluscum contagiosum, a disease marked by the formation of firm, rounded skin tubercles containing a semifluid caseous matter or solid masses made up of fat, epidermis, and peculiar capsulate bodies, usually appearing on the face.

mol'lusk, n. one of the Mollusca: also written mollusc.

mol'ly·cod"dle, n. [from Molly, dim. of Mary, and coddle.] a man or boy used to being coddled or pampered; a milksop.

mol'ly·çod"dle, v.t.; mollycoddled, pt., pp.; mollycoddling, ppr. to pamper; to coddle.

mō·los'sus, n. [L., from Gr. molossos.] in Greek and Latin verse, a foot of three long syllables: also written mollosse.

Mol'ŏ·tọv (-tọf) cock'tāil, [after V.M. Molotov (1890–), Soviet statesman.] a bottle filled with gasoline, etc. and wrapped in a saturated rag, ignited and hurled as an antitank grenade, as by Soviet forces in World War II.

mōlt, v. obsolete past tense of melt.

mōlt, mōult, v.i.; molted or moulted, pt., pp.; molting or moulting, ppr. [ME. mouten, from L. mutare, to change.] to shed or cast off the hair, feathers, skin, horns, etc. at certain intervals, prior to the replacement of the castoff parts by a new growth: said of certain animals, as reptiles, birds, etc.

mōlt, v.t. to shed and replace by molting.

mōlt, n. 1. the act or process of molting.

2. the parts so shed.

mōl'ten, a. [archaic pp. of melt.] 1. melted; rendered liquid by heat; as, molten iron.

2. made of melted metal cast in a mold; as, a molten image.

mōl'ten·ly, adv. after the manner of molten material; liquidly; as, moltenly ductile.

mōl'tō, adv. [It.] in music, much; very; as, molto allegro, very lively: a direction to the performer.

Mō·luç'çà bälm (bäm), see moluccella.

Mol·uç·cel'là, n. [from the Molucca Islands.] a small genus of labiate plants native in the Mediterranean region, one of its two species, Moluccella lævis, being known as Molucca balm, because formerly believed to be a native of the Molucca Islands.

mō'ly, n. [L., from Gr. mōly, a fabulous herb.]

1. a mythical herb of magic powers, having black roots and white flowers, mentioned by Homer in the Odyssey as the gift of Hermes to Ulysses to shield the latter from the wiles of Circe.

2. a plant, Allium moly, sometimes cultivated in gardens for its large yellow flowers: also called golden garlic.

dwarf moly; a species of garlic, Allium chamæmoly.

mō·lyb'dāte, n. [*molybd*ic and -ate.] a salt of molybdic acid.

mol·yb·dē'nà, n. molybdenum. [Obs.]

mō·lyb·dē·nif'ĕr·ous, a. [molybdenum, and L. ferre, to bear.] having molybdenum as a component.

mō·lyb'dē·nīte, n. native molybdenum sulfide, MoS_2, a scaly or foliated, lead-gray mineral, the chief ore of molybdenum.

mō·lyb'dē·nous, a. same as molybdous.

mō·lyb'dē·num, n. [L. molybdæna, from Gr. molybdaina, galena, from molybdos, lead.] a lustrous, brittle, silver-white metallic chemical element, used in alloys, windings for electrical resistance furnaces, points for spark plugs, etc.: symbol, Mo; atomic weight, 95.95; atomic number, 42.

mō·lyb'diç, a. [*molybd*enum and -ic.] designating or of chemical compounds in which molybdenum has a higher valence than in the corresponding molybdous compounds.

mō·lyb'dīte, mō·lyb'din, n. [*molybd*enum and -ite, -in.] a yellowish trioxide of molybdenum, MoO_3: also called molybdic ocher.

molybdo-, [from Gr. molybdos, lead.] a combining form meaning lead, as in *molybdo*colic, *molybdo*paresis.

mō·lyb·dō·çol'iç, n. [molybdo-, and Gr. kōlikē, colic.] in pathology, a form of colic arising from lead poisoning; painter's colic.

mol·yb·don'ō·sus, mol·yb·dō'sis, n. [molybdo-, and Gr. nosos, disease.] lead poisoning.

mō·lyb·dō·par'ē·sis, n. [molybdo-, and Gr. paresis, palsy.] lead palsy: also called painter's paralysis.

mō·lyb'dous, a. designating or of chemical compounds in which molybdenum has a lower valence than in the corresponding molybdic compounds.

mol'y·sīte, n. [Gr. molynsis, a staining, from molynein, to stain, and -ite.] in mineralogy, a red or yellow ferric chloride, found as a thin incrustation on hardened lava.

mom, n. mother. [Colloq.]

mōme, n. [OFr. mome, momme, a masque.] a stupid fellow; a fool. [Archaic.]

mōme, n. [from L. Momus.] a captious critic. [Obs.]

mō'ment, n. [L. momentum, movement, impulse, brief space of time, importance, contr. from movimentum, from movere, to move.]

1. an indefinitely brief period of time; an instant.

2. a definite point in time or in a series of events.

3. importance; consequence; as, business of great moment.

4. in mechanics, (a) the tendency to cause rotation about a point or axis; (b) a measure of this tendency; (c) the product of a (specified) force, mass, volume, etc. and its perpendicular distance from its axis, fulcrum, or plane.

5. in philosophy, any of the constituent elements of a complex entity; momentum.

magnetic moment; see under magnetic.

moment axis of a couple; a line which in length represents the moment and direction of a couple.

moment of a couple; the moment obtained by multiplying either one of the forces of a couple by the distance between them.

moment of a force; (a) with respect to a point, the product of the force into the distance of its point from its line of action; (b) with respect to a line, the product of the perpendicular to the line (found by resolving the force into two components, one parallel and the other perpendicular to the line) into its distance from the line.

moment of inertia; of a body with respect to an axis, the summation of the products of every particle in the body times the square of the particle's distance from the axis.

moment of stability; in a body supported at a given plane joint, the moment of a couple of forces, applied in a given vertical plane to that body with its own weight added, that will transfer the center of resistance of the plane joint to the limiting position consistent with stability.

moment of truth; (a) the point in a bullfight when the matador faces the bull for the kill; (b) a critical moment or time that tests or reveals one's true self or makes one face the truth.

statical moment; the moment of equilibrium between opposite forces, as in a lever or arm balance.

the moment; the present or the immediate future.

virtual moment of a force; the product of the intensity of the force multiplied by the virtual velocity of its point of application.

mō·men'tăl, a. 1. lasting but a moment.

2. in mechanics, pertaining to momentum.

mō·men'tăl·ly, adv. for a moment. [Obs.]

mō·men·tā'nē·ous, mō'men·tā·ny, a. momentary. [Obs.]

mō'men·tăr·i·ly, adv. 1. for a short time.

2. in an instant.

3. from moment to moment.

mō'men·tăr·i·ness, n. the quality of being momentary.

mō'men·tăr·y, a. [LL. momentarius, from L. momentum, moment.]

1. continuing only a moment; lasting a very short time; as, a momentary pang.

2. taking place every moment. [Now Rare.]

3. likely to occur at any moment.

mō'ment·ly, adv. 1. from instant to instant; every moment.

2. instantly.

3. for a single instant.

mō·men'tous, a. [LL. momentosus, of a moment, from L. momentum, moment.] very important; weighty; of great consequence.

mō·men'tous·ly, adv. weightily; importantly.

mō·men'tous·ness, n. the state of being of great importance.

mō·men'tum, n.; pl. mō·men'tums, mō·men'tà, [L., movement, motion, change, alteration, brief space.]
1. the impetus of a moving object.
2. in mechanics, the quantity of motion of a moving object, equal to the product of its mass and its velocity.
3. a moment (sense 5).

mōm'ish, a. foolish or stupid. [Obs.]

mom'my, n.; pl. mom'mies, mother: a child's term. [Colloq.]

Mō·mor'di·cà, n. [from L. mordere, to bite: so called from the seeds, which have the appearance of being bitten.] a genus of tropical climbing herbaceous plants of the family Cucurbitaceæ, embracing about twenty-five species, mostly of Africa, but also found in tropical Asia and in Australia.

mō'mot, n. same as motmot.

Mō·mot'i·dae, n.pl. [*momot*us and -idæ.] the motmots, a picarian family of tropical birds.

Mō·mō'tus, n. [from momot or motmot, so called from the bird's note.] the typical genus of the Momotidæ.

Mō'mus, n. [Gr. mōmos, blame, ridicule.]
1. in Greek mythology, the deity of ridicule and raillery.
2. a faultfinder.

mon, n. man. [Scot. and Brit. Dial.]

mon, n. [Japan.] in Japan, any of various family or personal crests or cognizances.

Mŏn, n. one of the Mon-Khmer languages.

mon'ō-, [Gr. mono-, from monos, single, alone.]

1. a prefix meaning one, alone, single, as in *mono*clinic.

2. a prefix meaning containing one atom or one group (of a specified element), as in *mono*chloride.

3. [from *mono*molecular.] a prefix meaning having a thickness of one molecule, as in *mono*layer.

Also, before a vowel, mon-.

mō'nō, n. [Sp., a monkey.] a monkey, Mycetes villosus, native to Central America; the black howler.

mon·ō·ac'id, a. monoacidic.

mon·ō·ac'id, n. an acid having only one replaceable hydrogen atom per molecule. [Rare.]

mon"ō·ā·cid'iç, a. 1. designating a base or alcohol one molecular weight of which can react with only one equivalent weight of an acid, or that has one hydroxyl group capable of replacing one acid hydrogen atom.

2. having only one acid hydrogen atom per molecule.

mon"ō·ā·tom'iç, a. consisting of one atom: said of a molecule.

mon·ō·bā'siç, a. 1. in chemistry, (a) designating an acid the molecule of which contains one hydrogen atom replaceable by a metal or positive radical or capable of reacting with the hydroxyl group; (b) designating a compound in which a metal or positive radical has replaced one acid hydrogen atom.

2. in biology, based on only one species; monotypic: said of a genus.

mon·ō·blep'si·ȧ, n. same as monoblepsis.

mon·ō·blep'sis, n. [mono-, and Gr. blepsis, sight.] a disorder in which vision is most distinct when one eye only is used.

mon'ō·çärp, n. [mono-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] a plant bearing fruit but once.

mon·ō·çär'pel·lăr·y, a. having a single carpel.

mon·ō·çär'piç, a. producing fruit but once, and then dying: said of annuals, biennials, and some trees.

mon·ō·çär'pous, a. [mono-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.]

1. having a gynoecium consisting of a single carpel and forming a single ovary.

2. monocarpic.

mon·ō·ceph'ȧ·lous, a. [mono-, and Gr. kephalē, head.] having one head only.

mon·ō·cēr'cous, a. [mono-, and Gr. kerkos, tail.] uniflagellate: said of infusorians.

mō·noc'ē·ros, n. [mono-, and Gr. keras, a horn.]
1. any real or fabulous one-horned animal; a unicorn. [Obs.]
2. [M-] the Unicorn, a constellation surrounded by Hydra, Canis Major, Orion, and Canis Minor. All the stars in it are small.

mon·ō·chron'iç, a. [mono-, and Gr. chronos, time.] contemporaneous; in geology, deposited at or about the same time.

mon·ō·cil'i·ā·ted, a. [mono- and cilium.] having a single cilium.

mon'ō·cle, n. [LL. monoculus, one-eyed; Gr. monos, single, and L. oculus, eye.] an eyeglass for one eye.

mon'ō·cled, a. wearing a monocle.

mon·ō·clī'năl, a. [mono-, and Gr. klinein, to slope.]
1. having a single dip; consisting of strata dipping in one direction only.
2. of strata dipping in the same direction.

mon·ō·clī'năl, n. same as monocline.

mon'ō·clīne, n. [from mono-, and Gr. klinein, to incline.] in geology, a monoclinal rock fold or structure.

mon·ō·clin'iç, a. designating or of crystallization characterized by three axes of unequal length, two of which intersect obliquely and are perpendicular to the third.

mon·ō·clī'nous, a. [mono-, and Gr. klinē, bed.]
1. in botany, hermaphrodite; having both stamens and pistils in the same flower.
2. having both stamens and pistils, as some flowers.
3. in geology, monoclinal.

mon·ō·coe'li·ăn, a. [mono-, and Gr. koilia, a cavity.] having a single brain cavity: said of animals of the genus Amphioxus.

Mon·ō·con'dy·là, n.pl. [mono-, and Gr. kondylos, a knuckle, joint.] a group of vertebrates in which the occipital condyle is single, as in reptiles and birds; the Sauropsida.

mon·ō·con'dy·lăr, a. monocondylian.

mon"ō·con·dyl'i·ăn, a. having only one occipital condyle.

mon·ō·cot'yl, n. [mono-, and Gr. kotylē, a small cup.] any plant with one cotyledon.

mon·ō·cot·y·lē'dŏn, n. in botany, a plant having a single cotyledon, or seed leaf; specifically, any plant belonging to the Monocotyledones.

Mon·ō·cot·y·lē'dŏn·ēs, n.pl. [mono-, and Gr. cotylēdōn, a cup-shaped cavity.] that one of the two subclasses of seed plants in which the embryo has a single cotyledon and the radicle issues from a sheath and is never developed into a taproot in germination. To this class belong palms, grasses, rushes, lilies, irises, and orchids. The leaves are generally parallel-veined, the flowers usually with three organs in each whorl, and the stems endogenous.

mon·ō·cot·y·lē'dŏn·ous, a. having a single cotyledon; belonging to the subclass of monocotyledons.

mō·noc'rà·cy, n.; pl. mō·noc'rà·cies, [L.Gr. monokratia; Gr. monos, single, alone, and kratein, rule.] government by one person; autocracy.

mon'ō·crat, n. 1. one who governs alone.
2. a person who believes in monocracy or monarchy: term applied by Thomas Jefferson c. 1790 to pro-English Federalists in the war between England and France.

mon·ō·dȳ'nà·miṣm, n. the theory that all forms of activity in nature are phenomena of a single force.

Mō·noe'ci·à, n.pl. [mono-, and Gr. oikos, house.] the twenty-first class of plants in the artificial system of Linnaeus. In this class, the stamens and pistils are in separate flowers on the same plant, as in the Araceæ.

mō·noe'ciăn, a. monoecious.

mō·noe'ciăn, n. any monoecious plant.

mō·noe'cious, a. [mono-, and Gr. oikos, house.]
1. in botany, having male and female flowers on the same individual plant.
2. in zoology, having both male and female reproductive organs in the same individual. Also spelled monecious.

mō·noe'cious·ly, adv. after the manner of a monoecian.

mō·noe'ciṣm, n. [monoecious and -ism.] the state, condition, or quality of being monoecious.

mon"ō·flà·ġel'lāte, a. [mono- and flagellate.] in zoology, having a single flagellum; as, a monoflagellate infusorian.

mon'ō·gam, n. in botany, a plant that has a solitary flower, or simple flowers with the anthers united.

Mon·ō·gā'mi·à, n.pl. [L.Gr. monogamos, married but once; Gr. monos, single, and gamos, marriage.] an order of plants in the Linnean system including all plants having solitary flowers with their anthers united.

mon·ō·gā'mi·ăn, a. monogamous; pertaining to the Monogamia.

mon·ō·gam'iç, a. 1. in botany, having flowers distinct from each other and not collected in a head.
2. same as monogamous.

mō·nog'à·mist, n. 1. one who upholds monogamy or the practice of marrying only once.
I valued myself upon being a strict monogamist. —Goldsmith.
2. one who has a single spouse, as opposed to bigamist or polygamist.

mō·nog'à·mous, a. 1. practicing or advocating monogamy: opposed to digamous.
2. marrying only one at a time: opposed to bigamous or polygamous; as, a monogamous tribe.
3. in zoology, having only one mate; living in pairs; as, a monogamous family of birds.
4. in botany, same as monogamic.

mō·nog'à·my, n. [LL. monogamia, married but once; from Gr. monos, single, and gamos, marriage.]
1. the practice of marrying only once, or the principle which upholds that practice; the principle that forbids a second marriage after the death of a first husband or wife: opposed to digamy, deuterogamy. [Rare.]
2. the practice of marrying only one person at a time: opposed to bigamy or polygamy.
3. in zoology, the habit of having only one mate; the practice of living in pairs.

mon·ō·gas'triç, a. [mono-, and Gr. gastēr, stomach.] having only one stomach.

mon·ō·ġen'e·sis, n. [mono-, and Gr. genesis, generation.]
1. the (hypothetical) descent of all living organisms from a single original organism: opposed to polygenesis.
2. monogenism.
3. asexual reproduction, as by budding or spore formation.
4. direct development of an ovum into an organism like the parent, without metamorphosis.

mon"ō·ġē·net'iç, a. 1. of, characterized by, or involving monogenesis.
2. having only one generation in the life-cycle, or no intervening asexual generation, as certain worms.
3. in geology, produced by one formative process, as a mountain range.

mon·ō·ġen'iç, a. 1. in zoology, reproducing in only one way.
2. developing in only one way; having a single origin.

mō·noġ'ē·niṣm, n. [monogeny and -ism.] the doctrine that all men belong to a single race, or that all men are descended from a single pair.

mō·noġ'ē·nist, a. pertaining to or connected with monogenism; as, the monogenist hypotheses.

mō·noġ′ē·nist, n. a supporter of monogenism. According to the monogenists all mankind have sprung from a single pair. —Huxley.

mon″ō·ġē·nis′tiç, a. same as monogenist.

mō·noġ′ē·nous, a. 1. in biology, originating by asexual reproduction, as by budding, fission, etc. 2. relating to monogenism. 3. in mathematics, having but one differential coefficient as a rule of generation: said of a function.

mō·noġ′ē·ny, n. same as monogenesis.

mon′ō·glot, a. [L.Gr. monoglōttos, speaking but one language; Gr. monos, single, and glōtta, Attic form of glōssa, tongue.] knowing, speaking, writing, or written in a single language.

Moorish architecture; a style of architecture which the Moors of Spain, North Africa, etc. employed in mosques and other public edifices. Called also Saracenic or Arabian architecture. Its distinguishing features are the prevailing use of the arch of a horseshoe shape, lofty, elongated cupolas, and a profusion of elaborate surface decoration. The horseshoe arch embraces more than a semicircle, and is therefore narrower at the springing than above, as shown in the doorway here illustrated. Similar arches, pointed at the top, are also common, as well as cuspate and other forms of arches. The columns from which the arches spring are slender, sometimes in pairs, and the superincumbent masses broad and heavy. The profuse decoration of interior surfaces with richly colored arabesques and geometrical designs is another distinctive feature of this style of architecture. Mosaics of glazed tiles, such as that shown in the accompanying cut, are frequently employed to decorate walls, the star being one of the simple forms often adopted for the basis of the design. Many interesting examples of this style of architecture remain at various places in Spain, the finest of all being the Alhambra at Granada.

MOORISH DOORWAY

mul·ti·form'ous, a. multiform. [Rare.]

mul·ti·gaṅ'gli·ō·nāte, a. [multi-, and LL. ganglion, a tumor.] having many ganglia.

mul·ti·ġen'ēr·ous, a. [L. multigenerus; multus, many, and genus, generis, kind.] having many kinds.

mul·ti·gran'ū·lāte, a. [multi-, and L. granulum, a grain.] consisting of or having many grains.

mul'ti·grȧph, n. [multi- and graphos, writing.] a type of rotary printing machine used for reproducing typewritten matter: a trademark (Multigraph).

mul'ti·grȧph, v.t. to reproduce with a Multigraph machine.

mul·ti·ġȳ'rāte, a. [multi- and gyrate.] having many gyri or convolutions.

mul·ti·jū'gāte, a. multijugous.

mul·ti·jū'gous, a. [L. multijugus; multus, many, and jugum, a yoke.] in botany, consisting of many pairs.

mul·ti·lam'i·nāte, a. [multi- and laminate.] having many laminae.

mul·ti·lat'ēr·ăl, a. [multi-, and L. latus, side.]
1. having many sides.
2. participated in by more than two nations; multipartite; as, a multilateral treaty.

mul·ti·lat'ēr·ăl·ly, adv. in a multilateral manner; specifically, by or with multilateral agreement or consent.

mul·ti·lin'ē·ăl, a. [multi-, and L. linea, a line.] having many lines.

mul·ti·lin'ē·ăr, a. multilineal.

mul·ti·lō'băr, a. [multi- and lobar.] multilobate.

mul·ti·lō'bāte, a. [multi- and lobate.] provided with many lobes.

mul'ti·lōbed, a. same as multilobate.

mul·ti·lob'ū·lăr, a. [multi-, and LL. lobulus, a lobule.] having many lobules.

mul·ti·loc'ū·lăr, a. [multi-, and L. loculus, a cell.] having many cells or compartments; as, a multilocular shell.

mul·ti·loc'ū·lāte, a. multilocular.

mul·til'ō·quence (-kwens), n. use of many words; talkativeness.

mul·til'ō·quent, a. [multi-, and L. loquens (-entis), ppr. of loqui, to speak.] speaking much; very talkative; loquacious.

mul·til'ō·quous, a. multiloquent.

mul·til'ō·quy (-kwy), n. multiloquence.

mul·ti·mil·liŏn·āire', n. a person whose wealth amounts to several millions of dollars, francs, pounds, etc.

mul·ti·nō'dăl, a. [multi- and nodal.] having many nodes or knots.

mul·ti·nō'dāte, a. multinodal.

mul·ti·nō'dous, a. multinodal.

mul·ti·nō'mi·ăl, a. and n. same as polynomial.

mul·ti·nom'i·năl, a. [LL. multinominis; L. multus, many, and nomen (-inis), a name.] multinominous.

mul·ti·nom'i·nous, a. having many names.

mul·ti·nū'çlē·ăr, n. multinucleate.

mul·ti·nū'çlē·āte, a. [multi-, and L. nucleus, a kernel.] having many nuclei.

mul·ti·nū'çlē·ā·ted, a. multinucleate.

mul·ti·nū'çlē·ō·lāte, a. [multi- and nucleolate.] having several nucleoli.

mul·ti·ō'vū·lāte, a. [multi- and ovule.] in botany, having or producing many ovules.

mul·tip'ȧ·rȧ, n.; pl. mul·tip'ȧ·rae, a woman who is bearing her second child or has borne two or more children.

mul·ti·par'i·ty, n. 1. the condition of being a multipara.
2. the production of two or more young at a birth.

mul·tip'ȧ·rous, a. [multi-, and L. parere, to bear.]
1. of or being a multipara.
2. in zoology, designating an animal that normally bears more than one offspring at a birth.

mul·ti·pär'tīte, a. [multi-, and L. partitus, divided.]
1. divided into many parts.
2. participated in by more than two nations; multilateral.

mul'ti·ped, mul'ti·pēde, n. an insect that has many feet. [Rare.]

mul'ti·ped, mul'ti·pēde, a. [L. multipes (-pedis); multus, many, and pes, pedis, a foot.] having many feet.

mul'ti·phāṣe, a. [multi- and phase.] having many phases; specifically, in electricity, polyphase. multiphase alternating currents; several separate alternating currents which vary in phase by an established amount.
multiphase alternator; an alternator having the capacity to produce multiphase currents.
multiphase apparatus; multiphase motors, alternators, or other receptive apparatus serviceable on multiphase circuits.
multiphase induction motor; an induction motor operated by rotating magnetic fields and serviceable in connection with multiphase currents.

mul·ti·pin'nāte, a. [multi- and pinnate.] in botany, pinnate many times.

mul'ti·plāne, n. an airplane with more than two sustaining surfaces, superposed or otherwise arranged.

mul'ti·ple, a. [LL. multiplus, manifold; L. multus, many, and -plus, fold.]
1. having or consisting of many parts, elements, etc.; more than one or once; manifold.
2. in electricity, designating or of a circuit having two or more conductors connected in parallel. law of multiple proportion; in chemistry, the law that chemical elements always combine in a definite ratio or in multiples of that ratio.
multiple algebra; that branch of algebra in which units of different denominations can be multiplied together.
multiple arc; a compound electric circuit in which the separate sources, or the separate electro-receptive devices or both, are connected by one set of terminals, such as the positive, to one lead or main positive conductor, and all the negative terminals are similarly connected to another lead or main negative conductor: also called parallel circuit.

multiple circuit; same as multiple arc.

multiple factors; in genetics, a series of two or more independent genes considered to act as a single unit with a cumulative effect in the transmission of certain characteristics, such as size, pigmentation, etc.

multiple fruit; see collective fruit under collective.

multiple neuritis; neuritis affecting several nerves.

multiple point or tangent; see under point.

multiple sclerosis; a chronic disease in which there is sclerosis in various parts of the nervous system: it is characterized by muscular weakness, tremor, etc.

multiple star; see under star.

multiple voting; the voting of a person at a single election in all districts in which he can meet the legal qualifications, as in Great Britain before the voting reforms of 1918.

multiple windings; in electricity, independent windings arranged in a symmetrical manner upon the same armature and insulated from each other, yet carried to different segments of the commutator.

mul'ti·ple, n. 1. in electricity, a group of terminals so arranged that connection with the circuit can be made at any of a number of points.

2. in mathematics, a number which is a product of some specified number and another number; as, 10 is a multiple of 5 and 2.

common multiple; a multiple of each of two or more numbers; thus, 24 is a common multiple of 3 and 4.

least common multiple; the lowest number divisible by each of two or more numbers without a remainder; thus, 12 is the least common multiple of 3 and 4.

mul'ti·ple-choice' test, in education, an examination in which the person tested must select the correct one of a number of proposed answers for each question.

1. multiple; manifold.

mul'ti·plex, v.t. to send (messages) by multiplex telegraphy or telephony.

mul'ti·plī·à·ble, a. that can be multiplied.

mul'ti·plī·à·ble·ness, n. the quality of being multipliable.

mul'ti·pli·çà·ble, a. multipliable.

mul"ti·pli·çand', n. [L. multiplicandus, to be multiplied, gerundive of multiplicare, to multiply.] in mathematics, the number to be multiplied by another called the multiplier.

mul'ti·pli·çāte, a. [L. multiplicatus, pp. of multiplicare, to multiply.] multiple.

mul"ti·pli·çā'tion, n. [L. multiplicatio (-onis), from multiplicare, to multiply.]

1. a multiplying or being multiplied; specifically, in mathematics, the process of finding the number or quantity (product) obtained by repeating a specified number or quantity (multiplicand) a specified number of times (multiplier), indicated in arithmetic by the symbol ×: opposed to division.

2. in botany, an abnormal increase in parts: also called augmentation.

3. the supposed magic art of increasing gold and silver. [Obs.]

mul"ti·pli·çā'tion tā'ble, a table for memorization showing the results of multiplying each number of a series, usually 1 to 12, by each of the numbers in succession.

mul'ti·pli·çā"tive, n. a numeral adjective which serves to indicate how many times a thing is repeated or the number of parts of which it consists, as single, double, triple, fourfold, fivefold.

mul'ti·pli·çā"tive, a. tending to multiply; having the power to multiply or increase numbers.

mul'ti·pli·çā"tive·ly, adv. in such a manner as to multiply.

mul'ti·pli·çā"tŏr, n. [LL., a multiplier.] the number by which another number is multiplied; a multiplier. [Now Rare.]

mul·ti·pli'cious, a. manifold. [Obs.]

mul·ti·plic'i·ty, n. [LL. multiplicitas, from L. multiplex, manifold.]

1. the state of being multiplex or various; the state of being numerous.

2. many of the same kind; a great number.

mul'ti·plī·ẽr, n. 1. a person or thing that multiplies or increases.

2. in mathematics, the number by which another number (the multiplicand) is, or is to be, multiplied.

3. in physics, any device for multiplying, or intensifying, some effect.

mul'ti·plỹ, v.t.; multiplied, pt., pp.; multiplying, ppr. [OFr. multiplier, from L. multiplicare, to multiply, increase greatly, from multiplex, manifold.]

1. to cause to increase in number; to make more in number by generation, reproduction, accumulation, or addition; to add to.

Impunity will multiply motives to disobedience. —Ames.

2. in mathematics, to add to itself (any given number) as many times as there are units in another given number; to find the product of by multiplication; thus, 7 multiplied by 8 produces the number 56.

3. to increase (gold or silver) by alchemy. [Obs.]

mul'ti·plỹ, v.i. 1. to grow or increase in number; to increase in extent; to spread.

The word of God grew and multiplied. —Acts xii. 24.

-mȳ·cē′tēṣ, [Mod. L., from Gr. mykētes, pl. of mykēs, a mushroom.] a combining form used in forming the names of large groups of fungi.

Mȳ·cē′tēṣ, n. [Gr. mykētēs, a bellower, from mykāsthai, to bellow.] a genus typical of the Mycetinæ, a subfamily of monkeys including the howlers.

mȳ·cē′tō-, mȳ·cēt′-, [Gr. mykēs, mykētos, fungus.] a combining form meaning fungus, as in *mycet*ophagus, *mycet*oma.

mȳ·cē″tō·ġē·net′iç, a. [myceto-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.] in botany, produced by fungi.

mȳ·cē·toġ′ē·nous, a. mycetogenetic.

myc′ē·toid (or mī′cē), a. [mycet-, and Gr. eidos, form.] resembling a fungus.

mȳ·cē·tol′ō·ġy, n. same as mycology, sense 1.

mȳ·cē·tō′ma, n. [mycet- and -oma.] in pathology, a tumor caused by a fungus; especially, fungus foot or Madura foot, a disease endemic in India, and marked by increasing swelling of the foot, in which nodules and vesicles develop.

mȳ·cē·toph′à·gous, a. [myceto-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] fungivorous; eating fungi.

Mȳ·cē·tō·zō′à, n.pl. [myceto-, and Gr. zōon, an animal.] a group of saprophytic protozoans the greater number of which are included in the Myxomycetes, or slime molds. They feed on decaying vegetable matter and have no mycelium.

mȳ·cē·tō·zō′ăn, a. of or pertaining to the Mycetozoa.

mȳ·cē·tō·zō′on, n. one of the Mycetozoa.

mȳ′çō-, [from Gr. mykēs, fungus.] a combining form meaning fungus, as in *myc*ology: also, before a vowel, myc-.

mȳ″çō·baç·tē′ri·um, n.; pl. mȳ″çō·baç·tē′ri·à, [Mod. L.] any of a group of rod-shaped, Gram-positive bacteria, including the causative agents of tuberculosis and leprosy.

mȳ′çō·dĕrm, n. one of the Mycoderma.

Mȳ·çō·dĕr′mà, n. [myco-, and Gr. derma, skin.]
1. a genus of protozoans remarkable for their power of converting sugar into alcohol, as an indirect effect of their metabolism. Mycoderma vini converts must into wine, and Mycoderma aceti, alcoholic fluids into vinegar.
2. [m–] an aggregation of protozoans, especially bacteria, at the surface of the liquid they inhabit, during the resting stage.
3. [m–] a fungous growth on the epiderm, forming the crust in cutaneous diseases, such as tetter.

mȳ·çō·dĕr′miç, a. pertaining to the Mycoderma.

mȳ″çō·dĕr·mī′tis, n. [myco-, Gr. derma, skin, and -itis.] in pathology, inflammation of a mucous membrane.

mȳ·çō·loġ′iç, a. mycological.

mȳ·çō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. of or pertaining to mycology.

mȳ·çō·loġ′iç·ăl·ly, adv. by or according to mycology.

mȳ·çol′ō·ġist, n. one versed in mycology.

mȳ·çol′ō·ġy, n. [myco-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.]
1. the branch of botany dealing with fungi.
2. all the fungi native to a specific region.

mȳ·çō·mel′iç, a. [myco-, and Gr. meli, honey.] of or relating to a complex nitrogenous compound, a member of the alloxan group.

Mȳ″çō·mȳ·cē′tēṣ, n.pl. [myco-, and Gr. mykēs, pl. mykētes, fungus.] one of three classes of fungi characterized by a multicellular mycelium and asexual reproduction.

mȳ″çō·mȳ·cē′tous, a. of or relating to the Mycomycetes.

mȳ·çoph′à·ġist, n. an eater of fungi.

mȳ·çoph′à·ġy, n. [myco-, and Gr. phagein, to eat.] the eating of or habit of eating fungi.

mȳ·çō·prō′tē·in, n. [myco- and protein.] the albuminous matter of bacteria.

mȳ·çor·rhī′zà, n. [myco-, and Gr. rhiza, a root.] a mycelium found in the root tubercles of certain angiosperms, especially in those of the Leguminosæ, supposed to assist in the nutrition of the plant and to sustain a symbiotic relation to it.

mȳ′çōse, n. [Gr. mykēs, fungus, and -ose.] ergot sugar or trehalose.

mȳ·çō′sis, n.; pl. mȳ·çō′sēṣ, [Gr. mykēs, fungus, and -osis.]
1. the growth of parasitic fungi in any part of the body.
2. a disease caused by such fungi.

mȳ′çō·thrix, n. [myco-, and Gr. thrix, hair.] the filament resulting from cell division in micrococcus, a bacterium in which the daughter cells remain in contact with the mother cell for a time.

mȳ·çot′iç, a. pertaining to or caused by mycosis.

mȳ·dā′lē·ine (or -ēn), n. [Gr. mydaleos, wet, dripping, from mydān, to be wet.] a poisonous ptomaine found in putrefied viscera.

mȳ′dan, n. maidan. [Obs.]

myd·à·tox′ïne (or -in), n. [Gr. mydān, clammy, and toxic.] a poisonous ptomaine from decaying flesh.

myd′ā·us, n. [Gr. mydān, to be clammy or damp.] a genus of animals of which the teledu is a species.

mȳ′dïne (or -din), n. [Gr. mydos, dampness.] a nonpoisonous ptomaine from the viscera of dead bodies, and found also in cultures of the typhoid bacillus.

mȳ·drī′à·sis, n. [Gr.] prolonged or excessive dilatation of the pupil of the eye, as the result of disease or the administration of a drug.

myd·ri·at′iç, n. any drug that causes mydriasis.

myd·ri·at′iç, a. of, pertaining to, or producing mydriasis.

mȳ′el-, same as myelo-.

mȳ·el·al′ġi·à, n. [myel- and -algia.] in pathology, pain in the spinal cord.

mȳ·el·ap′ō·plex·y, n. [myel- and apoplexy.] in pathology, hemorrhage within the spinal cord.

mȳ″el·as·thē′ni·à, n. [myel-, and Gr. astheneia, weakness.] in pathology, neurasthenia due to some cause which affects the spinal cord.

mȳ″e·len″cē·phal′iç, a. pertaining to the myelencephalon; also, myelencephalous.

mȳ″e·len·ceph′à·lon, n. [myel-, and encephalon.] the afterbrain, or metencephalon; the posterior part of the hindbrain.

mȳ″e·len·ceph′à·lous, a. having a brain and spinal cord.

mȳ′e·lin, mȳ′e·lïne, n. [G., from Gr. myelos, marrow.] the white fatty substance forming a sheath about certain nerve fibers.

mȳ·e·lin′iç, a. pertaining to or of the nature of myelin.

mȳ·e·lit′iç, a. of, pertaining to, or suffering from myelitis.

mȳ·e·lī′tis, n. [myel- and -itis.] inflammation of the spinal cord or the bone marrow.

mȳ′el·ō-, [from Gr. myelos, marrow.] a combining form meaning the marrow or the spinal cord: also, before a vowel, myel-.

mȳ′e·lō·cēle, n. [myelo-, and Gr. kēlē, tumor.] spina bifida with protrusion of the spinal cord.

mȳ″e·lō·cer·ē·bel′lăr, a. pertaining to the spinal cord and the cerebellum.

mȳ′e·lō·coele, n. [myelo-, and Gr. koilos, a hollow.] the cavity of the spinal cord.

mȳ″e·lō·ġen′iç, a. [myelo-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.] produced in the bone marrow.

mȳ′e·loid, a. [myelo-, and Gr. eidos, form.]
1. of the spinal cord.
2. of, like, or derived from bone marrow.

mȳ·e·lō′mà, n. [myel- and -oma.]
1. any medullary tumor.
2. giant-cell sarcoma.
3. a slow-growing tumor of a tendinous sheath containing myeloplaxes.

mȳ′e·lon, n. [Gr. myelon, neut. of myelos, marrow.] the spinal cord.

mȳ·e·lon′iç, a. myelonal.

mȳ·el′ō·plax, n. [myelo-, and Gr. plax, anything flat or broad.] any multinuclear giant cell of the bone marrow; an osteoclast.

myġ′à·lē, n. [L. mygale; Gr. mygalē, a field mouse.] formerly, a genus of spiders, typical of the family Mygalidæ. The species, which are large, with a rough hairy coat and stout hairy legs, chiefly inhabit tropical America. They reside in fissures in trees, in the crevices between stones, etc., spinning a tubular, silken dwelling. The best-known species is Mygale avicularia.

mȳ′ià·sis (-yà-), n. [LL., from Gr. myia, a fly.] any disease caused by maggots or flies.

Mȳ′i·dae, n. pl. a family of bivalves including the soft clams: also called Myacea and Myaria.

mȳ·ī′ō·sis (-yō′), n. same as myiasis.

Mȳ′lō·don, n. [Gr. mylodous (-ontos), a molar tooth, a grinder; mylē, a mill, and odous, odontos, a tooth.]
1. an extinct genus of edentate mammals, the best-known species being Mylodon robustus.

SKELETON OF MYLODON

2. [m–] an edentate of this genus.

mȳ′lō·dont, a. of or pertaining to the mylodons.

mȳ′lō·dont, n. a mylodon.

mȳ·lō·hȳ′oid, a. [Gr. mylē, mill, and hyoid.] pertaining to the molar teeth and the hyoid or U-shaped bone at the base of the tongue.

mȳ·lō·hȳ′oid, n. the muscle forming the floor of the mouth.

mȳ″lō·hȳ·oi′dē·ăn, a. mylohyoid.

mȳ′nà, mȳ′năh, n. [Hind. mainā.] any of a group of tropical birds of southeastern Asia related to the starling; especially, such a bird of India that has the ability to mimic human speech and is often kept as a pet: also spelled mina.

Mȳn·heer′ (-hār′ or -hēr′), n. [D. mijn heer, lit., my lord.]
1. the ordinary form of address among the Dutch, equivalent to English Mr. or sir.
2. [m–] a Dutchman. [Colloq.]

mȳ·ō·al′bū·mōse, n. a proteide from muscle juice.

mȳ·ō·at′rō·phy, n. [myo-, and Gr. atrophia, a wasting away.] atrophy of muscles.

mȳ′ō·blast, n. [myo-, and Gr. blastos, a germ.] an embryonic cell which becomes a cell of the muscle fiber.

mȳ·ō·cär′di·ō·ġràph″, n. [myo- and cardiograph.] an instrument for recording the movements of the heart muscle.

mȳ″ō·çär·dī′tis, n. [myocardium and -itis.] inflammation of the myocardium; inflammation of the muscular walls of the heart.

mȳ·ō·çär′di·um, n. [myo-, and Gr. kardia, heart.] the muscular substance of the heart; the heart muscle.

mȳ′ō·cēle, n. [myo-, and Gr. kēlē, a tumor.] hernia of muscle; the protrusion of a muscle through its ruptured sheath.

mȳ·oç′lō·nus, n. [myo- and clonus.] clonic spasm of a muscle or of various muscles.

mȳ′ō·coele, n. [myo-, and Gr. koilos, a cavity.] the cavity enclosed by a myotome; the cavity of a myotome: also written myocoelom.

mȳ·ō·çom′mà, n.; pl. mȳ·ō·çom′mà·tà, [myo-, and Gr. komma, that which is cut off.] a sclerotome; the septum between any two myotomes.

mȳ′ō·cȳte, n. [myo-, and Gr. kytos, a hollow cell.] a cell of the muscular tissue.

mȳ″ō·dȳ·nam′i·à, n. [myo-, and Gr. dynamis, power.] the energy developed in muscular contraction; muscular strength.

mȳ″ō·dȳ·nà·mom′e·tēr, n. [myo- and dynamometer.] a device for testing the power of the muscles; a dynamometer.

mȳ·ō·dyn′ì·à, n. same as myalgia.

mȳ″ō·ep·i·thē′li·ăl, a. [myo- and epithelial.] pertaining to or composed of muscle and epithelium.

mȳ″ō·fī·brō′mà, n. myoma and fibroma.

Mȳ·og′à·lē, n. a genus of rodents typical of the family Myogalinæ.

mȳ·og′à·line, n. [Gr. myogalē, a shrewmouse.] one of the Myogalinæ, a subfamily of insectivorous mammals, including the desmans, musk shrews, and musk moles.

mȳ′ō·ġen, n. same as myosinogen. mȳ″ō·ġē·net′iç, a. [myo- and genetic.] originating in or produced by a muscle or muscle tissue.

mȳ·ō·ġen′iç, a. [myo-, and Gr. genos, origin.] originating in the muscular tissue.

mȳ·ō·glob′ū·lin, n. [myo- and globulin.] a globulin found in the serum of muscles.

mȳ′ō·gram, n. [myo-, and Gr. gramma, a writing.] the record or tracing made by a myograph.

mȳ′ō·ġraph, n. [myo-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] an apparatus for recording the effects of a muscular contraction.

mȳ·ō·graph′iç, a. pertaining to a myograph or to myography.

mȳ·ō·graph′i·çăl·ly, adv. by employing a myograph.

mȳ·ō·graph′i·ŏn, n. a myograph.

mȳ·og′rȧ·phist, n. a myographer.

mȳ·og′rȧ·phy, n. 1. a description of the muscles.
2. the use of the myograph.

mȳ·ō·hē′mȧ·tin, n. [myo- and hematin.] a pigment supposedly occurring in muscles.

mȳ′oid, a. [myo-, and Gr. eidos, form.] resembling a muscle or muscular tissue.

mȳ·oi·dē′mȧ, n. [myo-, and Gr. oidēma, a swelling.] edema of a muscle.

mȳ·ō·lem′mȧ, n. same as sarcolemma.

mȳ′ō·lin, n. [Gr. mys, muscle.] the supposed material of the muscular fibrils.

mȳ·ō·loġ′iç, a. myological.

mȳ·ō·loġ′i·çăl, a. of or pertaining to myology.

mȳ·ol′ō·ġist, n. a person skilled or versed in myology.

mȳ·ol′ō·ġy, n. [myo-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] the branch of anatomy dealing with the muscles.

mȳ·ō′mȧ, n.; pl. mȳ·ō′mȧ·tȧ, mȳ·ō′mȧs, [myo- and -oma.] a tumor which consists of muscular tissue.

mȳ′ō·man·cy, n. [Gr. mys, mouse, and manteia, divination.] the foretelling of future events by movements of mice.

mȳ·om′ȧ·tous, a. of, or having the nature of, a myoma.

mȳ·ō·meç′tō·my, n. [myoma, and Gr. ektomē, a cutting out.] surgical removal of a myoma.

mȳ′ō·mēre, n. [myo-, and Gr. meros, part.] a muscular segment.

mȳ′ō·morph, n. a member of the Myomorpha.

Mȳ·ō·mor′phȧ, n. pl. [Gr. mys, myos, a mouse, and morphē, form.] a suborder of rodents, including dormice, common mice and rats, jerboas, etc.

mȳ·ō·mot′ō·my, n. same as myomectomy.

mȳ·ō·path′iç, a. of or relating to myopathy.

mȳ·op′ȧ·thy, mȳ″ō·pȧ·thī′ȧ, n. [myo-, and Gr. pathos, suffering, disease.] any disease of a muscle.

mȳ′ōpe, n. [Gr. myōps, shortsighted, blinking; myein, to close, and ōps, eye.] a person afflicted with myopia; a nearsighted person.

mȳ′ō·phan, n. [myo-, and Gr. -phanēs, from phainesthai, to appear.] a layer of fibrillae found in the cytoplasm of certain protozoans.

mȳ′ō·phōre, n. [myo-, and Gr. -phoros, from pherein, to bear.] any process differentiated from a shell to serve for the attachment of muscles.

mȳ·ō·phyṣ′içs, n. [myo-, and Gr. physika, physics.] the physics of muscular phenomena.

mȳ·ō′pi·ȧ, mȳ′ō·py, n. [Gr. myōps (-ōpos), shortsighted.] an abnormal eye condition in which light rays from distant objects are focused in front of the retina instead of on it, so that the objects are not seen distinctly; nearsightedness.

mȳ·ō·pō′lăr, a. [myo-, and Gr. polos, a pole.] relating to muscular polarity.

Mȳ·op·ō·rā′cē·ae, n.pl. [Gr. myein, to close, and poros, a pore.] a family of plants, distinguished from Verbenaceæ by the pendulous ovules and the more abundant albumen: also called Myoporineæ.

mȳ′ops, n. a myope.

mȳ·op′sis, n. [Gr. myia, a fly, and opsis, appearance.] a disease of the eyes in which black spots are seen passing like flies before them.

mȳ′ō·py, n. myopia.

mȳ′ō·sçōpe, n. [myo-, and Gr. skopein, to view.] an apparatus for the study of muscular contraction.

mȳ′ō·sin, n. [Gr. mys, muscle, and -ose, and -in.] a soluble protein resembling globulin, present in the tissue of the contractile muscles: its coagulation into an insoluble fibrin is believed to be the cause of rigor mortis.

mȳ·ō·sin′ō·ġen, n. the proteide in living muscle from which myosin is formed.

mȳ·ō′sis, n. [Gr. myein, to close, and -osis.] prolonged or excessive contraction of the pupil of the eye, resulting from disease or the use of a drug.

mȳ·ō·sī′tis, n. inflammation of the muscles; muscular rheumatism.

mȳ′ō·sōte, n. a myosotis.

Mȳ·ō·sō′tis, n. [Gr. myosōtis, myos ōtis, the mouse ear, forget-me-not; mys, myos, mouse, and ous, ōtos, ear.]
1. a genus of plants including the forget-me-not, Myosotis palustris.
2. [m–] any plant of this genus, having light-green leaves and white, blue, or pink flowers.

mȳ·ō·tat′iç, a. [myo-, and Gr. tasis, tension.] performed or induced by stretching or extending a muscle.

mȳ·ot′iç, a. pertaining to, having, or causing myosis.

mȳ·ot′iç, n. any drug causing myosis.

mȳ′ō·tōme, n. [myo-, and Gr. tomē, a cutting.]
1. an instrument for performing myotomy.
2. a muscular segment, or myomere.
3. a myocomma.

mȳ·ō·tom′iç, a. pertaining to a myotome.

mȳ·ot′ō·my, n. the cutting or dissection of muscular tissue or of a muscle.

mȳ·ō·tō′ni·ȧ, n. myotony.

mȳ·ō·ton′iç, a. pertaining to myotony.

mȳ·ot′ō·ny, n. 1. tonic spasm of a muscle.
2. muscular tension.
3. a stretching of a muscle.

myr′i·ȧ, [from Gr. myrias, the number ten thousand.] a combining form meaning: (a) many, numerous, as in *myria*pod; (b) in the metric system, ten thousand, as in *myria*meter.

myr″i·ȧ·çan′thous, a. [myri-, and Gr. akantha, thorn, spine.] having numerous spines, as the rays of the genus Myriacanthus, and similar fishes.

myr′iȧ·chit (-yȧ-), n. same as miryachit.

myr′i·ăd, n. [Gr. myrias (-ados), the number ten thousand, from myrios, countless.]
1. ten thousand.
2. any indefinitely large number; as, myriads of suns.
3. a large number of persons or things.
The race was on; the souls of the racers were in it; over them bent the myriads.
—Lew Wallace.

myr′i·ȧ·gram, n. [Fr. myriagramme; Gr. myrioi, ten thousand, and L.Gr. gramma, a small weight.] in the metric system, a measure of weight consisting of 10,000 grams, or 10 kilograms, and equal to 22.046 pounds avoirdupois.

myr′i·ȧ·lī″tēr, n. [Fr. myrialitre; Gr. myrioi, ten thousand, and litra, a pound.] in the metric system, a measure of capacity, of 10,000 liters, equal to 2,642 United States gallons.

myr′i·ȧ·mē″tēr, n. [Fr. myriamètre; Gr. myrioi, ten thousand, and metron, a measure.] in the metric system, a measure of length, consisting of 10,000 meters, equal to 6.2137 miles.

myr′i·ȧ·nīde, n. a marine worm, Myrianida pinnigera.

myr′i·ȧ·pod, n. one of the Myriapoda; a centipede or millepede.

myr′i·ȧ·pod, a. having many legs; specifically, of or belonging to a large group of arthropods having long bodies consisting of many segments, each of which bears one or more pairs of jointed legs, as the millipedes and centipedes.

MYRIAPODS

myr′i·ārçh, n. [Gr. myriarchēs, myriarchos; myrioi, ten thousand, and archos, a ruler.] in ancient Greece, a commander or leader of 10,000 men.

myr′i·āre, n. [myri-, and Fr. are, are.] in the metric system, a measure of surface, containing 10,000 ares, or 1,000,000 square meters, and equal to about 247.1 acres.

My·rī′çȧ, n. a genus of shrubs, of the order Myricaceæ. The berries of Myrica cerifera, of the Atlantic States, yield bayberry tallow.

Myr·i·çā′cē·ae, n.pl. an order of shrubs, the sweet-gale family, or galeworts, typifying the genus Myrica.

myr·i·çā′ceous, a. pertaining to the Myricaceæ.

myr′i·cin, n. [Gr. myrikē, tamarisk, and -in.] that portion of common beeswax which is insoluble in boiling alcohol.

myr′i·cyl, n. same as melissyl.

mȳ·rin′ġā, n. [LL. miringa, a kind of membrane.] the tympanic membrane, or drum of the ear.

myr·in·ġī′tis, n. [myringa and -itis.] inflammation of the tympanic membrane.

myr′i·ō-, [from Gr. myrios, numberless, countless.] a combining form meaning countless, numerous: used in botany; as, *myrio*phyllous.

myr″i·ō·loġ′iç·ăl, myr″i·ō·loġ′iç, a. of or pertaining to a myriologue.

myr·i·ol′ō·ġist, n. one who sings or composes a myriologue.

myr′i·ō·logue (-log), n. [Fr., from modern Gr. myriologi.] an extempore funeral song composed and sung by women in modern Greece on the death of some person.

myr·i·oph′yl·lous, a. [myrio-, and Gr. phyllon, a leaf.] having very numerous leaves.

Myr″i·ō·phyl′lum, n. [L.Gr. myriaphyllon, spiked water milfoil, neut. of myriaphyllos; myrios, numberless, and phyllon, a leaf.] a genus of perennial aquatic herbs; the water milfoil family.

myr″i·ō·rā′mȧ, n. [myrio-, and Gr. horama, a view.] a landscape picture made of a number of separate sections that can be put together in various ways so as to form distinct scenes.

myr′i·ō·scōpe″, n. [myrio-, and Gr. skopein, to view.] a variety of kaleidoscope; specifically, one used in exhibiting carpets.

myr′i·ō·thē·işm, n. [myrio- and theism.] the creed of believing in numberless gods. [Rare.]

Myr″i·ō·triçh′i·ȧ, n. [Mod.L., from myrio-, and Gr. thrix, trichos, hair.] a genus of marine algae of the order Ectocarpales, occurring as small, brown growths forming tufts or cushions.

myr″i·ō·triçh″i·ā′ceous, a. pertaining or belonging to the Myriotrichia.

my·ris′tāte, n. a salt or ester of myristic acid.

my·ris′tiç, a. 1. relating to or derived from the nutmeg.
2. designating an acid existing in nutmeg oil and otoba fat.

My·ris·ti·çā′cē·ae, n.pl. [Gr. myristikos, sweet-smelling, from myron, any sweet distillation from a plant used for perfume.] an order of fragrant tropical trees, including the genus Myristica. Myristica fragrans, native to the Malay Archipelago, is the nutmeg tree.

my·ris′tin, n. myristate of glyceryl, found in nutmeg butter and other fats.

nip′ple, n. [earlier neble; prob. dim. of neb.] 1. the small protuberance on a breast or udder, through which the milk passes in suckling the young; teat; pap: it is rudimentary in the male. 2. a rubber cap with a teatlike part, for a baby's feeding bottle. 3. any projection, part, or thing resembling a nipple in shape or function; specifically, (a) a threaded piece of pipe at the end of a water line, to which is fastened a nozzle, faucet, etc.; (b) a short piece of pipe with both ends threaded; (c) a small projection on glass or metal.

nipple cactus; any cactus of the genus Mamillaria, bearing nipple-shaped tubercles upon its joints.

nip′ple·wŏrt, n. an herb, Lapsana communis, formerly used as an external application to the breasts of women.

Nip·pŏn·ese′, a. and n.; pl. Nip·pŏn·ese′, [from Nippon, Japanese name for Japan.] Japanese.

nip′py, a.; comp. nippier; superl. nippiest. 1. nipping or tending to nip, or pinch; sharp; biting. 2. quick; active; nimble. [Brit. Colloq.]

nip′tĕr, n. [Gr. niptēr, a basin, a washing vessel, from niptein, to wash.] in the Orthodox Eastern Church, the ceremony of washing the feet of the poor on the day before Good Friday.

nir·vä′nà, n. [Sans. nirvāṇa, from nirwā, to blow.] 1. in Hinduism, a blowing out, or extinction, of the flame of life; reunion with Brahma. 2. in Buddhism, the state of perfect blessedness achieved by the extinction of individual existence and by the absorption of the soul into the supreme spirit, or by the extinction of all desires and passions. nis, [contr. of ne is.] is not. [Obs.]

Nī′san, n. [Heb. nisān.] the seventh month of the Jewish year: early Hebrew name, Abib.

nī′sei′ (-sā′), n.; pl. nī′sei′, nī′seis′, [Japan., lit., second generation.] [also N–] a native American citizen born of immigrant Japanese parents and educated in the United States: distinguished from issei, kibei.

nī′sī, conj. [L. nisi; ni, not, and si, if.] if not; unless: used in law after decree, order, etc. to indicate that it shall take permanent effect at a specified time unless cause is shown why it should not, or unless it is changed by further proceedings.

nisi prius; [a legal phrase used originally in a writ directing a sheriff to summon a jury to Westminster on a certain date "unless before" that date the trial had been held in his own county.] in law, a civil action tried in a court of record before a judge and jury.

Nis′sen hut, [after P. N. Nissen (1871–), engineer in the Canadian Army.] a prefabricated shelter of corrugated metal shaped like a cylinder cut vertically in two and resting on its flat surface: it was first used by the British Army in World War II.

nis′try, n. [E. Ind.] a silkworm, Bombyx mori, of Bengal.

nī′sus, n.; pl. nī′sus, [L. nisus, effort, a striving, from niti, to strive.] a striving; an effort; an impulse; endeavor.

nit, n. [AS. hnitu; compare Ice. gnit, nitr, Sw. gnet, a nit.] 1. the egg of a louse or other small insect. 2. the young insect.

nī′ten·cy, n. [L. nitere, to shine.] brightness; luster. [Rare.]

nī′ten·cy, n. [L. niti, to strive.] endeavor; effort. [Rare.]

nī′tĕr, nī′tre (-tĕr), n. [Fr. nitre; L. nitrum; Gr. nitron, native soda, natron; compare Ar. nitrūn, natrūn, natron.] 1. potassium nitrate, a crystalline salt found in nature and used as a preservative, in making gunpowder, etc.; saltpeter. 2. sodium nitrate, a crystalline salt, used as a fertilizer, etc.; Chile saltpeter: also called cubic niter.

nī′tĕr bush, a thorny shrub of the genus Nitraria, found in North Africa, western Asia, and Australia.

nit grăss, an annual grass of the genus Gastridium, whose spikelets resemble nits.

nith′ing, n. [AS. nithing, a wicked man.] a coward, a dastard; a poltroon. [Archaic.]

nit′id, a. [L. nitidus, bright, shining.] 1. bright; lustrous; shining. 2. gay; spruce; fine: applied to persons. [Rare.]

nit′id·ous, a. [L. nitidus, bright, shining.] nitid; bright; shining; lustrous.

nī′ton, n. [Mod. L., from L. nitere, to shine; and -on as in argon.] radon, a radioactive chemical element: symbol, Nt: former name.

nitr-, see nitro-.

nī·trā·nil′iç, a. [nitr- and chlor*anil* and -ic.] of, pertaining to, or derived from an aniline compound acted upon by nitric acid.

nī·tran′i·line, n. [nitr- and aniline.] in chemistry, any of several substances formed by the action of nitric acid on aniline compounds.

nī′trāte, n. [*nitr*ic and -ate.] 1. a salt or ester of nitric acid. 2. potassium nitrate or sodium nitrate, used as a fertilizer.

nitrate of silver; silver nitrate; a colorless crystalline salt prepared by dissolving silver in dilute nitric acid, and largely used in surgery, photography, etc.

nī′trāte, v.t.; nitrated, pt., pp.; nitrating, ppr. to treat or combine with nitric acid or a nitrate; to make into a nitrate.

nī′trā·ted, a. combined with nitric acid.

nī·trā′tion, n. the process of nitrating; especially, the introduction of the NO_2 group into an organic compound.

nī′tre (-tĕr), n. same as niter.

nī′tri·ăr·y, n. [from niter.] an artificial bed of animal matter for the formation of niter; a place where niter is refined.

nī′triç, a. [L. nitrum, native soda.] 1. of, containing, or related to nitrogen. 2. designating or of compounds in which nitrogen has a higher valence than in the corresponding nitrous compounds.

nitric acid; a colorless, fuming acid, HNO_3, that is highly corrosive: it is prepared by heating equal parts of nitrate of potash and sulfuric acid.

nitric bacteria; see nitrobacteria.

nitric oxide; a colorless gas, NO: it is obtained from the action of nitric acid on copper, etc.

nī′trid, n. a nitride.

nī′trīde, n. [*nitr*ogen and -ide.] in chemistry, a combination of nitrogen with phosphorus, boron, silicon, etc.

nī·trif′ĕr·ous, a. [niter and -ferous.] containing or producing niter.

nī″tri·fi·cā′tion, n. a nitrifying.

nī′tri·fī·ĕr, n. any nitrifying agent.

nī′tri·fȳ, v.t.; nitrified, pt., pp.; nitrifying, ppr. [Fr. nitrifier.] 1. to combine with nitrogen or nitrogen compounds. 2. to impregnate (soil, etc.) with nitrates. 3. to cause the oxidation of (ammonium salts, etc.) to nitrites and nitrates, as by the action of soil bacteria, etc.

nī′tri·fȳ, v.i. to be changed into niter.

nī′tril, n. a nitrile.

nī′trile, n. [from niter.] an organic cyanide of an alkyl group, yielding the corresponding acid and ammonia on hydrolysis.

nī′trīte, n. [nitr- and -ite.] in chemistry, a salt or ester of nitrous acid: called also azotite.

nī′trō, a. 1. designating certain compounds containing nitrogen and produced by the action of nitric or nitrous acid. 2. designating the NO_2 radical or compounds in which one or more NO_2 radicals have replaced atoms of hydrogen.

nī′trō-, [from L. nitrum; Gr. nitron, native soda.] a combining form used to indicate: (a) the presence of nitrogen compounds made by the action of nitric or nitrous acid and other substances, as in *nitro*cellulose; (b) the presence of the NO_2 radical, as in *nitro*benzene; (c) niter, as in *nitro*bacteria. Also, before a vowel, nitr-.

nī″trō·baç·tē′ri·à, n.pl. [Mod.L.; nitro- and bacteria.] soil bacteria or other microorganisms which oxidize ammonia compounds into nitrites (nitrous bacteria), or nitrites into nitrates (nitric bacteria).

nī·trō·ben′zōl, nī·trō·ben′zōle, n. [nitro- and benzol.] same as nitrobenzene.

nī·trō·çăr′bōl, n. same as nitromethane.

nī·trō·cel′lū·lōse, nī·trō·cel′lū·lōse, n. [nitro- and cellulose.] in chemistry, an amorphous yellow substance obtained by nitrating cellulose materials such as wood pulp, cotton waste, cotton wool, lint, and tissue paper, used in making explosives, photographic films, lacquers, etc.; cellulose nitrate.

nī·trō·chlō′rō·form, n. same as chloropicrin.

nī′trō çom′pound, a compound in which one or more atoms of hydrogen are replaced by an equivalent quantity of nitryl.

nī″trō·çot′tŏn, n. [nitro- and cotton.] nitrocellulose or cellulose nitrate made from cotton fibers; guncotton.

nī′trō·form, n. [nitro- and formyl.] a colorless, explosive, crystalline or oleaginous acid compound, derived from methane and allied to chloroform.

nī·trō·ġel′à·tin, n. [nitro- and gelatin.] an explosive solution of camphor and guncotton in nitroglycerin.

nī′trō·ġen, n. [nitro- and Gr. -genēs, producing.] an odorless, colorless, tasteless gaseous chemical element forming four fifths of the atmosphere. It combines with oxygen, though indirectly, forming well-known compounds: symbol, N; atomic weight, 14.008; atomic number, 7.

nitrogen cycle; the cycle of processes by which atmospheric nitrogen is converted by natural agencies into compounds used by plants and animals in the formation of proteins, and is eventually returned to its original state.

nitrogen dioxide; same as nitrogen peroxide.

nitrogen fixation; (a) the conversion of atmospheric nitrogen into nitrates by soil bacteria (nitrogen fixers) found in the nodules of certain legumes; (b) the conversion of free nitrogen into nitrogenous compounds of commercial value by any of various processes.

nitrogen fixers; in chemistry, soil organisms which have the ability to assimilate free nitrogen from the air.

nitrogen pentoxide; in chemistry, an oxide of nitrogen, N_2O_5, which exists as a white solid.

nitrogen peroxide; in chemistry, a poisonous reddish-brown gas with the formula NO_2; nitrogen dioxide: when cooled, the gas changes to a light yellow liquid, nitrogen tetroxide (N_2O_4), and becomes a crystalline solid without color at −15.3° F.

nitrogen tetroxide; same as nitrogen peroxide.

nitrogen trioxide; in chemistry, an oxide of nitrogen, N_2O_3, obtainable at low temperatures as an unstable liquid having a deep-blue color: it rapidly decomposes into nitrogen peroxide and nitric oxide.

nī′trō·ġen-fix′ing, a. capable of nitrogen fixation: said of nitrobacteria, etc.

nī·trō·ġen′iç, a. same as nitrogenous.

nī·troġ′e·nīze (or nī′trō·jen·īz″), v.t.; nitrogenized, pt., pp.; nitrogenizing, ppr. to combine or impregnate with nitrogen or its compounds.

nī·trō·glyc′ĕr·in, nī·trō·glyc′ĕr·ine, n. a heavy, pale-yellow, explosive oil, $C_3H_5(NO_3)_3$, obtained by dissolving glycerin in a mixture of fuming nitric and sulfuric acids, and precipitating with a large volume of water: it is used in medicine and as an ingredient of dynamite.

nī·trō·glyc′ĕr·ōl, n. nitroglycerin.

nī·trō·hȳ·drō·ȼhlō′rič, a. pertaining to or containing nitric acid and hydrochloric acid.

nitrohydrochloric acid; a mixture of one part of concentrated nitric acid with three parts of concentrated hydrochloric acid, used as a solvent for gold and platinum: also called aqua regia.

nīt′rōl, n. in chemistry, one of numerous hydrocarbons, in the carbon atoms of which the nitro group and the nitroso or isonitroso group are united.

nī·trō′lē·um, n. nitroglycerin.

nī·trō·lev′ū·lōse, n. levulose nitrate: used like nitroglycerin.

nī·trol′iç, a. designating or of any of a series of acids formed by the action of nitrous acid on nitroparaffin and containing the $CH_2{=}NO_2$ group.

nī·trō·mag′nē·sīte, n. [nitro- and magnesium and -ite.] nitrate of magnesium, a saline efflorescence, in appearance suggesting nitrate of calcium.

nī′trō·māne, n. in chemistry, a ferment that produces nitrification.

nī·trō·man′ni·tol, n. mannitol nitrate: used like nitroglycerin.

nī·trom′e·tēr, n. [nitro-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] an instrument for measuring the quantity of nitrogen, or certain of its compounds, in a substance: called also azotometer.

nī·trō·meth′āne, n. in chemistry, nitrocarbol, a heavy, oily liquid derived from methane.

nī·trō·mū·ri·at′iç, a. in chemistry, pertaining to or containing nitric and muriatic (or hydrochloric) acids.

nī·trō·par′ăf·fin, n. a nitrogen compound derived from any member of the methane, or paraffin, series of hydrocarbons and containing an NO_2 group in place of one of the hydrogen atoms normally present in the hydrocarbon.

nī·trō·phē′nōl, n. in chemistry, any nitro derivative of phenol.

nī·trō·prus′sīde, n. [nitroprussic and -ide.] in chemistry, nitroferricyanide, a salt of nitroprussic acid.

nī·trō·quī′nōl, n. [nitro- and quinine and -ol.] in chemistry, a compound obtained by treating methyl ether with nitric acid.

nī·trō·saç′ȼhà·rōse, n. a resinous explosive used like nitroglycerin.

nī·trō·sal·i·cyl′iç, a. pertaining to or derived from salicylic acid and nitric acid.

nī·trōs·am′in, n. a nitrosamine.

nī″trōs·à·mīne′, n. [from nitroso- and amine.] any of a series of organic compounds derived from amines and containing the divalent $=N{\cdot}NO$ radical.

nī′trōse, a. nitrous. [Obs.]

nī·trō′sō, a. designating or containing the NO radical, or group.

nī·trō′sō-, [from L. nitrosus, full of natron, from nitrum, native soda.] a combining form used to indicate the presence of the NO radical.

nī″trō·sul·fū′ric, a. pertaining to or consisting of sulfuric acid and an oxide of nitrogen.

nī′trō·syl, n. [nitroso- and -yl.] in chemistry, the radical NO, known also as the nitroso group.

nī·trō·syl′iç, a. in chemistry, of, pertaining to, or containing nitrosyl.

nī′trous, a. 1. pertaining to, resembling, or containing niter.

2. designating or of compounds in which nitrogen has a lower valence than in the corresponding nitric compounds.

nitrous acid; an acid, HNO_2, known only in solution.

nitrous bacteria; see nitro bacteria.

nitrous oxide; in chemistry, N_2O, a sweet-tasting, colorless gas, obtained by heating a combination of ammonium sulfate and sodium nitrate: the resulting gas is collected over hot water or mercury and is used as an anesthetic: also called laughing gas.

nī·trox′yl, n. [nitro- and oxygen and -yl.] in chemistry, nitric peroxide in combination; nitryl, NO_2.

nī′try, a. nitrous; pertaining to niter; producing niter. [Obs.]

nī′tryl, n. nitroxyl, NO_2.

nit′tà tree, [African nitta, and E. tree.] an old-world leguminous tree, Parkia africana, both the seeds and the pulp of its pods furnishing food for the natives in Africa.

nit′tēr, n. an insect that deposits nits on horses; the botfly.

nit′ty, a. full of nits.

nit′ty-grit′ty, n. [rhyming extension of gritty.] the actual, basic facts, elements, issues, etc. [Slang.]

nit′wit, n. [nit (from G. Dial. for G. nicht, not) or nit (louse), and wit.] a stupid person.

niv′ē·ous, a. [L. niveus, snowy, from nix, nivis, snow.] snowy; resembling snow; partaking of the qualities of snow.

Ni·vôse (nē-vōz′), n. [Fr., from L. nivosus, abounding in snow.] the fourth month in the French Revolutionary Calendar, beginning December 21 and ending January 19.

nix, n. [G., a water sprite.] in Teutonic mythology, a frolicsome water spirit: also written nis.

nix, adv. [G. nichts.] 1. nothing. [Slang.]

2. no. [Slang.]

3. not at all. [Slang.]

nix, interj. an exclamation meaning (a) stop! (b) I forbid, refuse, disagree, etc.

nix′ie, nix′y, n. a female nix.

Ni·zăm′, n. [Hind. and Ar., from Ar. nazama, to arrange, to govern.]

1. the title of the native ruler in Hyderabad, India.

2. [n-] pl. ni·zăm, a Turkish soldier.

Njord (nyȯrd), n. Njorth.

Njorth (nyȯrth), n. [ON. Njörthr.] in Norse mythology, a Vanir, the father of Frey and Freya.

Njör′thr (nyȯr′thr), n. Njorth.

nō, a. [from ME. non, from AS. nan, no, none, by loss of n, as in a for an.] not any; not a; not one; as, let there be no strife; no man can number the leaves of the forest.

nō, n.; pl. nōes, 1. an utterance of no; refusal or denial.

2. a negative vote or a person voting in the negative.

nō, adv. [AS. na; ne, not, and a, ever.]

1. not; as, whether or no. [Scot. or Rare.]

2. not in any degree; not at all; as, he is no worse.

3. nay; not so: the opposite of yes, used to deny, refuse, or disagree.

nō, n.; pl. nō [Japan. nō.] a type of Japanese play with a highly stylized plot, almost no stage accessories, elaborate costuming, and much singing and dancing: also no-gaku, noh.

Nō·ā′ȼhi·ăn, a. [Gr. Nōe, from Heb. Nōach, lit., rest.]

1. relating to Noah or to the time in which he lived; as, the Noachian flood.

2. ancient; antique.

Nō·aȼh′iç, a. Noachian.

Nō′ăh, n. [Gr. Nōe.] the tenth male in descent from Adam, in the line of Seth; he was the son of Lamech, and the grandson of Methuselah. He received the divine command to build an ark, in which he and his family escaped the Deluge.

Noah's ark; (a) a child's toy in shape like the conventional ark of Noah and containing wooden figures of animals and men; (b) in zoology, a marine bivalve, Arca noæ, somewhat resembling a boat; (c) in botany, the large yellow flower of Cypripedium pubescens; (d) in meteorology, converging cirrus or cirrostratus clouds produced probably by magnetic disturbances in the upper atmosphere.

nob, v.t. in boxing, to beat or strike on the head. [Slang.]

nob, n. [later form of knob.]

1. a knob.

2. the head. [Slang.]

3. in cribbage, the jack of the same suit as the card turned over by the dealer: it counts one point for the player holding it in his hand or playing it from the crib.

nob, n. [perh. contr. from nabob.] a person of wealth and high social status. [Slang.]

nō′-ball, n. in cricket, a ball that has not been bowled in the manner specified by the rules.

nob′bi·ly, adv. after the manner of a nob; stylishly. [Slang.]

nob′ble, v.t.; nobbled, pt., pp.; nobbling, ppr. [freq. of nab.]

1. to disable or harm (a horse) to keep it from winning a race, as by drugging, etc. [Brit. Slang.]

2. (a) to win (a race or other contest) by bribery or other underhand methods; (b) to win over by bribery. [Brit. Slang.]

3. to cheat; steal; bribe. [Brit. Slang.]

nob′blēr, n. 1. a blow on the head; a finishing stroke. [Slang.]

2. a dram of spirits. [Australian.]

nob′blēr, n. a thimblerigger's confederate. [Slang.]

nob′by, a.; comp. nobbier; superl. nobbiest 1. of or for nobs; stylish; fashionable. [Slang.]

2. excellent; first-rate. [Slang.]

Nō·bel′ist, Nō·bel′list, n. a person who has been awarded a Nobel prize.

nō·bel′i·um, n. [after Nobel Institute in Stockholm, where discovered.] a radioactive chemical element produced by the nuclear bombardment of curium: symbol, No; atomic weight, 255(?); atomic number, 102.

Nō·bel′ prī′zes, the five annual prizes amounting to nearly $40,000 each, given by the Nobel Foundation for distinction in physics, chemistry, medicine, and literature, and for the promotion of peace.

nō·bil′iȧ·ry, a. of or pertaining to nobles or the nobility; as, a nobiliary roll.

Nō′bĭ·lĭ's rings, [named after Leopold Nobili, an Italian physicist.] in electrolysis, a series of copper rings alternately dark and light, which may be produced by placing a drop of acetate of copper in solution on a silver plate and touching the middle of the drop with a piece of zinc.

nō·bil′i·tāte, v.t. to make noble; to ennoble; to dignify; to exalt. [Obs.]

nō·bil·i·tā′tion, n. the act of nobilitating or of making noble. [Obs.]

nō·bil′i·ty, n.; pl. nō·bil′i·tieș, [L. nobilitas, from nobilis, noble.]

1. the quality or state of being noble.

Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge.
—Shak.

2. high station or rank; especially, that distinction of rank in civil society which one derives from noble ancestors or from a title conferred.

3. those persons collectively who are of noble rank; the collective body of noble or titled persons in a state; in Great Britain, the peerage (usually with the).

Syn.—distinction, dignity, rank, peerage, lordship, loftiness, generosity, aristocracy.

nō′ble, a.; comp. nobler; superl. noblest, [ME.; OFr.; L. nobilis, well-known, famous, high-born, noble, from noscere, gnoscere, to know.]

1. famous, illustrious, or renowned; having eminence, dignity, fame, etc.

2. having or showing high moral qualities or ideals; lofty.

3. having excellent qualities.

4. grand; stately; splendid; magnificent; as, a noble view.

5. of high rank, title, or birth; of ancient lineage; aristocratic.

6. not corroding or deteriorating rapidly; precious; pure: said of metals, expecially gold, silver, etc.: distinguished from base.

Syn.—exalted, stately, majestic, grand, high, illustrious, imperial, august, generous, magnanimous.

nō′ble, n. 1. a person having hereditary rank or title; a nobleman; in England, a peer; a duke, marquis, earl, viscount, or baron.

2. formerly, an English gold coin equal (until 1461) to 6s. 8d. sterling.

NOBLE OF EDWARD III
A, actual diameter of the coin

3. a European fish, the lyrie or pogge, Agonus cataphractus.

4. a leader of men hired to break a strike. [Slang.]

nō′ble·măn, n.; pl. nō′ble·men, a noble; a peer; a titled person; one of the nobility.

nō′ble-mīnd″ed, a. possessing a noble mind; honorable; magnanimous.

nō′ble·ness, n. 1. the state of being noble; excellence; grandeur; dignity; magnanimity; elevation of mind or of condition.

His purposes are full of honesty, nobleness, and integrity. —Taylor.

2. distinction by birth; honor derived from a noble ancestry; nobility. [Obs.]

nō·blesse′, n. [Fr. noblesse, from LL. nobilitia, from L. nobilis, noble.]

1. the nobility; persons of noble rank collectively.

2. noble birth or condition.

noblesse oblige; literally, nobility obliges; people of high rank or birth should behave nobly toward others: said sometimes of the rich in regard to charity.

nō′ble·wom″ăn (-woom″), n.; pl. nō′ble·wom″en (-wim″), a woman of noble rank; a peeress.

nō·bley′, n. [ME. nobley, nobleie; OFr. noblee, nobleness.]

1. the entire number of people composing the nobility. [Obs.]

nō′bly, adv. 1. with noble courage or spirit; gallantly.

2. (a) idealistically; loftily; (b) excellently; splendidly.

3. of titled birth; of the peerage.

nō′bod·y, pron. no person; no one.

nō′bod·y, n.; pl. nō′bod·ies, a person of no consequence, influence, authority, or importance; as, a mere nobody.

nō′çāke, n. [Am. Ind. nookik, meal.] a food formerly used by the North American Indians made of parched maize pounded into meal.

nō′cent, a. 1. hurtful; mischievous; injurious; causing harm or injury; as, nocent qualities. [Obs. or Rare.]

2. criminal; guilty. [Obs. or Rare.]

nō′cent, n. one guilty of crime. [Obs.]

nō′cent·ly, adv. hurtfully; injuriously. [Obs.]

nō″ci·as·sō″ci·ā′tion, n. in medicine and surgery, unconscious discharge of nervous energy, as in surgical shock or under the influence of receiving wounds or other injuries.

nō′cive, a. hurtful; injurious. [Obs.]

nock, n. [ME. nocke; prob. from ON.]

1. a notch for holding the string at either end of a bow.

2. a similar notch in the end of an arrow, for the insertion of the bowstring.

3. in sailmaking, the foremost upper corner of boom sails, and of staysails cut with a square tack.

1. to set (an arrow) into the bowstring.

2. to notch; to make a notch in (a bow or arrow).

noç·tam·bū·lā′tion, n. [L. nox, noctis, night, and ambulare, to walk.] same as noctambulism.

noç·tam′bū·lism, n. walking in one's sleep; somnambulism.

noç·tam′bū·list, n. one who walks in his sleep; a somnambulist; a sleepwalker.

noç·tam′bū·lō, n. a noctambulist. [Obs.]

noç′ti-, [from L. nox, noctis, night.] a combining form meaning night: also, before a vowel, noct-.

noç·tid′i·ăl, a. [L. nox, noctis, night, and dies, day.] comprising a night and a day. [Rare.]

noç·tif′ẽr·ous, a. [L. nox, noctis, night, and ferre, to bring.] bringing night. [Obs.]

1. in botany, any tree or shrub of the genus Quercus, bearing nuts called acorns. The species are very numerous, generally native to the more temperate parts of the Northern Hemisphere. They have alternate simple leaves, which are entire in some, but in the greater number variously lobed and sinuated or cut; evergreen in some, but more generally deciduous. The common oak attains a height of from 50 to 100 or even 150 feet, with a diameter of trunk of from four to eight feet. The wood is hard, tough, tolerably flexible, strong without being too heavy, not readily penetrated by water, and bears alternations of wetness and dryness better than other woods. The American white oak, Quercus alba, and the British oak, Quercus robur, have long been exceedingly valuable in shipbuilding. The bark of the oak tree is very useful, and is preferred to all other substances for the purpose of tanning. Gallic acid exists abundantly in the oak, and its leaves, etc. are useful in medicine. Cork is the bark of Quercus suber, or cork-oak. Galls are the produce of Quercus infectoria.
