5. in anatomy, formerly, the layer of true bone, crusta petrosa, which covers the root of a tooth, as the enamel covers the exposed crown.

Çrus·tā′ce·ȧ (-shi-ȧ), n.pl. [L., from crusta, the hard shell of a body, rind, and -acea.] in zoology, a class of invertebrates, characterized by a hard outer shell and jointed appendages and bodies, that usually live in the water and breathe through gills. The higher forms of this class include lobsters, shrimps, crawfish, etc.; the lower animals are of varied forms, as barnacles, wood lice, fish lice, etc.

çrus·tā′ceăn (-shăn), a. belonging to or characteristic of the Crustacea; crustaceous.

çrus·tā′ceăn, n. an individual of the Crustacea.

çrus·tā″cē·ō·loġ′iç·ăl, a. pertaining to crustaceology.

çrus·tā·cē·ol′ō·ġist, n. one versed in crustaceology.

çrus·tā·cē·ol′ō·ġy, n. [L. crusta, crust, rind, and -acea, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] that division of zoology which has to do with crustaceans.

çrus·tā′ceous, a. [L. crustaceus, from crusta, crust, rind.]
1. pertaining to or of the nature of a crust.
2. having a hard crust or shell.
3. in zoology, belonging to the Crustacea.
4. in botany, (a) brittle; (b) having a brittle thallus, as certain lichens.

çrus·tā′ceous·ness, n. the quality of being crustaceous.

çrus′tae, n., pl. of crusta.

çrust′ăl, a. of the nature of a crust, especially the earth's crust; relating to a crust; crustaceous.

çrus·tă·loġ′iç·ăl, a. same as crustaceological.

çrus·tal′ō·ġist, n. same as crustaceologist.

çrus·tal′ō·ġy, n. same as crustaceology.

çrus′tāte, çrus′tā·ted, a. [L. crustatus.] covered with a crust; as, crustate basalt.

çrus·tā′tion, n. an incrustation.

çrust′ed, a. 1. having a crust.
2. designating wine that has deposited a crust.
3. antiquated.

çrus·tif′iç, a. forming or depositing a crust. [Rare.]

çrust′i·ly, adv. in a crusty manner; harshly; morosely.

çrust′i·ness, n. 1. incrustation; hardness.
2. peevishness; moroseness; surliness.

çrust′y, a. 1. having a crust.
2. like crust; of the nature of crust; hard.
3. irritable or cross in manner or speech; peevish; testy; petulant; surly.

Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news? —Shak.

çrut, n. [Fr. croûte; L. crusta, crust.] the rough, shaggy part of oak bark.

çrutch, n. [ME. crutche, crucche; AS. crycc; D. kruk; Dan. krykke; Sw. krycka, a crutch.]
1. any of various devices held in the hand to support the lame in walking; especially, a staff with a curving crosspiece at the top to be placed under the arm or shoulder.
2. a forked leg rest on a sidesaddle.
3. in nautical usage, (a) a piece of knee timber placed inside of a ship, for the security of the heels of the cant timbers abaft; (b) a forked stanchion of wood or iron; any fixture or adjustment with a head or top like that of a crutch.
4. figuratively, any prop or support.
5. the crotch of the human body.

çrutch, v.t.; crutched (krutcht), pt., pp.; crutching, ppr. to support on crutches; to prop or sustain, as that which is feeble, with or as with a crutch.

Fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse. —Dryden.

çrutched, a. 1. supported with crutches.
2. bearing the sign of the cross.

crutched Friars; an early order of English friars, who wore crosses on their robes.

çrux, n.; pl. çrux′eṣ or çrū′cēṣ, [L. crux, a cross.]
1. anything that puzzles, vexes, or tries, in the highest degree.
2. a crucial point; critical moment.

in full cry; in eager pursuit: originally a term in hunting signifying that all the hounds have caught the scent and bark in chorus.

Syn.—call, shout, sound, utterance, outcry, tumult, clamor, proclamation, demand, requisition, vociferation, watchword.

çrȳ′ăl, n. [W. cregyr, a heron, a screamer.] the heron. [Obs.]

çrȳ·al·ġē′si·ȧ, n. pain due to cold.

çrȳ′bā·by, n. 1. a person, especially a child, who cries often or with little cause.

2. a person who complains constantly or accepts defeat unwillingly.

ç͟r͟ȳ′ẽr, n. 1. a falcon-gentle.
2. same as crier.

ç͟r͟ȳ·es·thē′si·à, n. sensitiveness to cold.

ç͟r͟ȳ′ing, a. 1. calling for immediate notice or remedy; notorious; great.

Heinous offences are called crying sins.
—Lowth.

2. that cries.

ç͟r͟ȳ″mō·ther′à·py, n. same as cryotherapy.

ç͟r͟ȳ′ō-, [from Gr. kryos, cold, frost.] a combining form meaning cold, freezing, as in cryogen.

ç͟r͟ȳ″ō·bī·ol′ō·ġy, n. [cryo-, and biology.] the science that deals with the study of organisms, especially warm-blooded animals, at low temperatures.

ç͟r͟ȳ′ō·ġen, n. [Gr. kryos, cold, frost, and -genēs, producing.] a refrigerant.

ç͟r͟ȳ″ō·ġen′ĭçs, n. [cryogen, and -ics.] the science that deals with the production of very low temperatures and their effect on the properties of matter.

ç͟r͟ȳ·ō·hȳ′drāte, n. [Gr. kryos, cold, frost, and hydōr, water.] a crystalline solid formed by the combination of some substance, as salt, with ice at a temperature below the normal freezing point of water.

ç͟r͟ȳ′ō·līte, n. [Gr. kryos, cold, frost, and lithos, stone.] a fluoride of sodium and aluminum found in Greenland. It occurs in masses of a foliated structure, and has a glistening, vitreous luster. It is used in the manufacture of aluminum, soda, and certain grades of glass.

ç͟r͟ȳ·om′e·tẽr, n. [cryo- and -meter.] a thermometer, usually filled with alcohol, for measuring lower temperatures than a mercury thermometer will register.

ç͟r͟ȳ·oph′ō·rus, n. [L., from Gr. kryos, cold, frost, and -phoros, from phērein, to bear.] an instrument for showing the lowering of the temperature of water by evaporation.

ç͟r͟ȳ·os′ç͟ō·py, n. [cryo-, and -scopy.] the science dealing with the determination of the freezing points of liquids.

ç͟r͟ȳ′ō·stat, n. [cryo- and -stat.] a regulator for maintaining a constant, low temperature.

ç͟r͟ȳ″ō·sūr′ġẽr·y, n. [cryo-, and surgery.] surgery involving the selective destruction of tissues by freezing them, as with liquid nitrogen; also cryogenic surgery.

ç͟r͟ȳ″ō·ther′à·py, n. the use of low temperatures in the treatment of disease, as by the application of ice packs.

ç͟r͟ypt, n. [L. crypta; Gr. kryptē, a vault, crypt; from kryptein, to hide.]
1. a subterranean cell or cave, especially one constructed for the interment of bodies.
2. that part of a basilica or cathedral below the floor, set apart for burial purposes.
3. in anatomy, a recess, glandular cavity, or follicle, in the body.

ç͟r͟ypt′ăl, a. of or connected with a crypt.

ç͟r͟ypt″à·nal′y·sis, n. [*crypt*ogram, and analysis.] the art or science of deciphering a code or coded message without a prior knowledge of the key.

ç͟r͟yp′tiç, ç͟r͟yp′tiç·ăl, a. [LL. crypticus; Gr. kryptikos, from kryptein, to hide.]
1. hidden; secret; occult.
2. having a hidden or ambiguous meaning.
3. in zoology, serving to conceal, as the form or coloring of certain animals.

ç͟r͟yp′tiç·ăl·ly, adv. covertly; in secret; occultly.

ç͟r͟yp′ti·dine, n. [Gr. kryptos, hidden.] a derivative of coal tar, $C_{11}H_{11}N$, one of the quinoline bases.

ç͟r͟yp′tō-, ç͟r͟ypt-, [from Gr. kryptos, hidden, secret.] a combining form meaning hidden, covered, secret, as in *crypt*ogram, *crypt*odont.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·brañçh, a. [crypto-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] same as cryptobranchiate.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·brañçh, n. an animal having concealed or internal branchiae.

Ç͟r͟yp·tō·brañ·çhi·ā′tà, n.pl. a division of animals comprising those with concealed gills.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·brañ′çhi·āte, a. in zoology, having concealed gills.

ç͟r͟yp″tō-Çal′vin·işm, n. [crypto-, and Calvinism.] the doctrine held by the adherents of Melanchthon, following Luther's death, who accepted Calvin's doctrine of the real presence rather than Luther's: an opprobrious term used by Lutherans.

ç͟r͟yp″tō-Çal′vin·ist, n. one who accepted the doctrine of crypto-Calvinism.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·ceph′à·lous, a. [crypto-, and Gr. kephalē, head.] having the head deeply inserted in the thorax.

ç͟r͟yp·toc′ẽr·ous, a. [crypto-, and Gr. keras, a horn.] having the antennae hidden underneath the head.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·çlas′tiç, a. [crypto- and -clastic.] in mineralogy, consisting of fragmental grains too small to be seen with the unaided eye.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·ç͟r͟ys′tăl·line, a. [crypto-, and Gr. krystallinos, from krystallos, crystal, ice; kryos, cold, frost.] made up of crystalline particles too small to be distinguished even under the microscope: applied to minerals.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·dī′rous, a. [crypto-, and Gr. deirē, neck, throat.] having a retractile neck which, with the head, may be entirely withdrawn beneath the exoskeleton, as in turtles.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·dont, a. [crypto-, and Gr. odous, odontos, tooth.] having rudimentary tooth-like processes, as certain bivalve mollusks.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·gam, n. a plant of Cryptogamia.

Ç͟r͟yp·tō·gā′mi·à, n.pl. [L., from Gr. kryptos, hidden, and gamos, marriage.] the large division of plants, such as the algae, mosses, and ferns, which do not bear true flowers, but grow from spores.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·gā′mi·ăn, ç͟r͟yp·tō·gam′iç, ç͟r͟yp·tog′à·mous, a. pertaining to plants of the division Cryptogamia.

ç͟r͟yp·tog′à·mist, n. one who is skilled in cryptogamic botany.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·ġen′iç, a. [crypto-, and -genic.] of unknown or obscure origin: said of a disease.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·gram, n. [crypto-, and Gr. gramma, a writing, from graphein, to write.] a writing in cipher or code; a cryptograph.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·gram′miç, a. of or like a cryptogram.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·gràph, n. [crypto-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] something written in code or cipher, as a message.

ç͟r͟yp·tog′rà·phăl, a. same as cryptographic.

ç͟r͟yp·tog′rà·phẽr, ç͟r͟yp·tog′rà·phist, n. one who writes in or deciphers code.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·graph′iç, ç͟r͟yp·tō·graph′iç·ăl, a. having to do with cryptography; written in secret characters or in cipher.

ç͟r͟yp·tog′rà·phy, n. 1. the act or art of writing in or deciphering secret characters.
2. secret characters or cipher, or a system of writing with them.

ç͟r͟yp·tol′ō·ġy, n. 1. secret or enigmatical language.
2. cryptography.

Ç͟r͟yp·tō·mẽ′ri·à, n. a genus of cypresslike conifers native to China but now grown as ornamental trees in the United States. Cryptomeria japonica, the Japanese cedar, is the only species.

ç͟r͟yp·tō·neū′rous, a. [crypto-, and Gr. neuron, a nerve.] without nerves or a nervous system.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·nym, n. [crypto-, and Gr. onyma, name.] a secret name, as of an initiate.

ç͟r͟yp·ton′y·mous, a. [cryptonym and -ous.] having a secret or concealed name.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·phȳte, n. a cryptogram.

ç͟r͟yp′tō·pïne, n. [crypto-, and Gr. opion, poppy juice.] a colorless opium alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{23}NO_5$.

ç͟r͟yp·tọr′çhis, ç͟r͟yp·tọr′çhid, n. one whose testicles have failed to descend into the scrotum.

Ç͟r͟yp·tō·zō′iç, a. [crypto-, and -zoic.] Proterozoic.

Ç͟r͟yp·tū′rī, n.pl. [L., from Gr. kryptos, hidden, and oura, a tail.] an order of birds, represented by the tinamous of South America.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl, n. [L. crystallum; Gr. krystallos, ice, crystal, from kryos, cold, frost.]
1. a clear, transparent quartz; rock crystal.
2. a piece of this cut in the form of an ornament.

TYPES OF CRYSTAL

3. a kind of heavy, clear glass; hence, an article or articles, as decanters, cruets, etc., made of this material.
4. the thin, transparent, protective shield which covers the dial of a watch.
5. anything resembling crystal in its qualities, as in clearness, transparency, or purity.

Down the liquid crystal dropt.
—Tennyson.

6. a solidified form of a substance in which the atoms or molecules are arranged in a definite repeating pattern so that the external shape of a particle or mass of the substance is made up of plane faces in a symmetrical arrangement.
7. in radio, a crystal detector.

compound crystal; a crystal composed of two united crystals.

Iceland crystal; Iceland spar.

ç͟r͟y′stăl, a. 1. like crystal; clear; transparent.

By crystal streams that murmur through the meads.
—Dryden.

2. of or composed of crystal.
3. in radio, of or using a crystal.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl bạll, a large ball of rock crystal or, more commonly, of glass, used in crystal gazing.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl dē·teçt′ŏr, in radio, a rectifier consisting of a semiconductor (e.g., silica) in contact with the sharp edge of a conductor (e.g., tungsten).

ç͟r͟ys′tăl gāz′ing, the practice of gazing into a crystal ball and pretending to see certain images, especially of future events.

ç͟r͟ys′tăll-, crystallo-.

ç͟r͟ys·tăl·lif′ẽr·ous, a. producing or composed of crystals.

ç͟r͟ys·tăl·lig′ẽr·ous, a. [L. crystallum, a crystal, ice, and L. gerere, to bear.] bearing or producing crystals; crystalliferous.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·lin, ç͟r͟ys′tăl·line, n. a globulin found in the crystalline lens.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·line (or -līn), a. 1. consisting or made of crystal; as, a crystalline palace.
2. relating or pertaining to crystals or crystallography.
3. formed by crystallization; having the character or structure of a crystal.
4. resembling crystal; pure; clear; transparent; pellucid; as, a crystalline sky.
5. consisting of crystals.

crystalline heavens; in ancient astronomy, two spheres imagined between the primum mobile and the firmament, in the Ptolemaic system, which supposed the heavens to be solid and susceptible of only a single motion.

crystalline lens; the double convex, transparent part of the eye lying behind the iris and in front of the vitreous body of the eye. It serves to refract the various rays of light so as to form an image on the retina.

crystalline style; a semitransparent caecal organ of certain bivalves.

crystalline system; any of the six groups (isometric, hexagonal, tetragonal, orthorhombic, monoclinic, and triclinic) into which crystalline species are classified on the basis of the relationships of their crystallographic axes (imaginary lines drawn from each face or edge through the center of the crystal).

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·line, n. a crystallized rock, or one only partially crystallized, as granite.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·līte, n. [Gr. krystallos, crystal, ice, and -ite.] a hairlike formation found in igneous and volcanic rocks that are beginning to crystallize.

ç͟r͟ys·tăl·lit′iç, a. 1. of or containing crystallite.
2. of the nature of crystallite.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·lī·zà·ble, a. that may be crystallized; that may form or be formed into crystals.

ç͟r͟ys″tăl·li·zā′tion, n. 1. the act or process of crystallizing or being crystallized.
2. the mass or body formed by the process of crystallizing.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·līze, v.t.; crystallized, pt., pp.; crystallizing, ppr. 1. to cause to form crystals or take on a crystalline structure.
2. to give a definite form to; as, to crystallize public opinion.
3. to coat with sugar.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·līze, v.i. 1. to become a crystal or crystalline in form.
2. to take on a definite form; as, our unfavorable impressions crystallized into a strong dislike.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·lō-, [Gr. krystallos.] a combining form meaning crystal.

ç͟r͟ys′tăl·lod, n. [Gr. krystallos, crystal, and Gr. od, from hodos, way.] the imagined odic force of crystallization.

ç͟r͟ys″tăl·lō·ġen′iç, ç͟r͟ys″tăl·lō·ġen′iç·ăl, a. relating to crystallogeny; pertaining to crystal formation.

ç͟r͟ys·tăl·log′e·ny, n. [crystallo-, and Gr. -geneia, from genēs, producing.] the science which has to do with the formation of crystals.

ç͟r͟ys·tăl·log′rà·phẽr, n. one who has made a study of crystallography.

ç͟r͟ys″tăl·lō·graph′iç, ç͟r͟ys″tăl·lō·graph′iç·ăl,

a. relating to crystallography; as, a crystallographic axis.

çrys″tăl·lō·graph′iç·ăl·ly, adv. according to the manner of crystallography; by crystallization.

çrys·tăl·log′rà·phy, n. [crystallo-, and Gr. -graphia, from graphein, to write.]
1. the science of the form, structure, properties, and classification of crystals.
2. a discourse or treatise on crystallization.

çrys′tăl·loid, a. [Gr. krystallos, crystal, and eidos, form.]
1. like a crystal.
2. having the nature of a crystalloid.

çrys′tăl·loid, n. 1. a substance, usually crystallizable, which, when in solution, readily passes through vegetable and animal membranes: opposed to colloid.
2. a protein crystal present in some vegetable cells.

çrys·tăl·loi′dăl, a. of a crystalloid.

çrys·tăl·lol′ō·ġy, n. [crystallo-, and Gr. -logia, from legein, to speak.] same as crystallography.

çrys′tăl·lō·man·cy, n. [crystallo-, and Gr. manteia, divination.] crystal gazing.

çrys·tăl·lom′e·try, n. [crystallo-, and Gr. -metria, from metron, a measure.] the art or process of measuring crystals.

çrys′tăl·lōse, a. [crystall- and -ose.] the sodium salt of saccharin, used for the same purposes as saccharin: also called soluble saccharin.

çrys′tăl·lūr·ġy, n. [crystallo-, and Gr. ergon, work.] formation of crystals; the process of producing crystals. [Obs.]

çrys′tăl pick′up, a pickup with a quartz crystal, often used on electric phonographs: distinguished from magnetic pickup.

çrys′tăl set, a simple type of radio receiver with a crystal detector instead of an electron tube detector.

çrys′tăl vī′ō·let, a rosaniline dye used in medicine as an antiseptic, an indicator, and a Gram stain for bacteria.

çrys′tăl vi′şion (-zhun), 1. the alleged faculty of divination by crystal gazing.
2. the images supposed to be seen in crystal gazing.

çrys′tăl·wŏrt, n. a plant of the Hepaticæ or liverwort family.

cte·nid′i·um (te-), n.; pl. cte·nid′i·a, [L., from Gr. ktenidion, dim. of kteis, a comb.] the filamentous respiratory organ of a mollusk; a branchia.

cten′ō- (ten′ō-), [Gr. kteis, ktenos.] a combining form meaning a comb.

cten′ō·brañch, cten·ō·brañ′chi·āte (ten-), a. having comblike gills, as the Ctenobranchiata.

cten′ō·brañch, cten·ō·brañ′chi·āte, n. one of the Ctenobranchiata.

Cten·ō·brañ·chi·ā′tà, Cten·ō·brañ′chi·à, n. pl. a family of mollusks, the Pectinibranchiata.

ctē′nō·cyst (tē′), n. [cteno-, and Gr. kystis, a bladder.] a sensory organ found in the Ctenophora.

cten′ō·dont, a. [cteno-, and Gr. odous, odontos, a tooth.] having the teeth ctenoid.

ctē′noid (tē′), a. [cteno-, and Gr. eidos, form.]
1. relating to fish of the Ctenoidei.
2. having an edge with projections like the teeth of a comb, as the scales and teeth of certain fishes.

ctē′noid, n. a ctenoidean. [Obs.]

ctē·noid′ē·ăn, ctē·noid′i·ăn, a. of or relating to the Ctenoidei.

ctē·noid′ē·ăn, ctē·noid′i·ăn, n. a ctenoid fish.

Ctē·noid′ē·ī, n.pl. [L., from Gr. kteis, ktenos, a comb, and eidos, form.] a group of fishes having scales jagged or pectinate like the teeth of a comb.

Cte·noph′ō·rà, n.pl. [L., from Gr. kteis, ktenos, a comb, and -phoros, from pherein, to bear.] a large group of sea animals with an oval, transparent, gelatinous body. Eight rows of comblike plates covered with cilia run from pole to pole, and are used in swimming.

cte·noph′ō·răn, a. of a ctenophore.

cte·noph′ō·răn, n. a member of the Ctenophora.

cten′ō·phōre, n. 1. an individual of the Ctenophora.
2. one of the comblike plates of the Ctenophora.

cte·noph′ō·rous, cten·ō·phor′iç, a. pertaining to or resembling the Ctenophora.

Cten·ō·stom′à·tà, n.pl. [cteno-, and Gr. stoma, stomatos, a mouth.] a suborder of marine Polyzoa, having the terminal mouths closed by means of a fringe of hair.

çuär·tīl′là (kwär-tēl′yä), n. [Sp., dim. of cuarta, fourth.] a Spanish measure; (a) eight liquid pints or one-fourth of an arroba; (b) one-fourth of a fanega.

çub, n. [Ir. cuib, a young dog, whelp; cu, a dog.]
1. the young of certain mammals, as of the bear and the fox; a whelp.
2. an inexperienced youth; an awkward young person.
3. a novice or beginner, especially in newspaper reporting.

cy·ath′i·form, a. [L. cyathus; Gr. kyathos, a cup, and forma, shape.] in the form of a cup.

cy′ath·oid, a. same as cyathiform.

cy·ath′ō·lith, n. [Gr. kyathos, cup, and lithos, stone.] a coccolith shaped like a cup.

CYATHIFORM FLOWER

Cy″a·thō·phyl′li·dae, n.pl. [Gr. kyathos, a cup, phyllon, a leaf, and eidos, form.] a family of fossil stone corals of the group Rugosa, the species of which are called cup corals.

cy″a·thō·phyl′loid, a. pertaining to the family Cyathophyllidæ.

cy″a·thō·zō′oid, n. [Gr. kyathos, a cup, zōōs, alive, and eidos, form.] an imperfect rudimentary zooid of certain ascidians, as of those belonging to the genus Pyrosoma.

cy′a·thus, n.; pl. cy′a·thī, [L. cyathus; Gr. kyathos, a cup.]

1. in ancient Greece, a small, long-handled ladle or cup used especially for filling wine glasses.
2. an Attic liquid measure, equivalent to about 1/24 of a quart.
3. in botany, a small, conical organ or cavity in some cryptogams.
4. [C–] a genus of nidulariaceous fungi.

Cyb′e·lē, n. [L. Cybele; Gr. Kybelē, the goddess Cybele.] in ancient Phyrgian mythology, the goddess of nature: identified with the Greek goddess Rhea.

cy·bēr·net′iç, a. of cybernetics.

cy·bēr·net′içs, n. pl. [construed as sing.] [from Gr. kybernetes, helmsman, and -ics.] the comparative study of the human nervous system and of complex electronic calculating machines, aimed at increasing the understanding of how the human brain functions.

cy′borg, n. [*cyb*ernetic *org*anism.] a hypothetical human being modified for life in a nonearth environment by the substitution of artificial organs and other body parts.

cy′çad, n. any plant of the family Cycadaceæ.

Cyç·a·dā′cē·ae, n.pl. [Gr. kykas, the African cocoa palm.] a family of primitive tropical plants, resembling palms in appearance and having fernlike leaves growing in a top cluster.

cyç·a·dā′ceous, a. in botany, belonging to or characteristic of the order Cycadaceæ.

cy·çā′dē·ăn, a. cycadaceous.

Cy′ças, n. [Gr. kykas, the African cocoa palm.] a genus of cycadaceous trees resembling the palms. They are native to Asia, Australia, and Polynesia. From the pith of the trunk of certain species a coarse sago is obtained: the tree is sometimes called sago palm.

Cyç′lá·men, n. [Gr. kyklaminos, the cyclamen; kyklos, a circle.]

1. a genus of bulbous plants of the family Primulaceæ, having heart-shaped leaves spotted with white along the veins, and white, pink, or red flowers with reflexed petals.

2. [c–] pl. cyç′lá·menṣ, a plant of this genus.

cyç′lá·min, n. the bitter principle of the root of Cyclamen europæum.

Cyç·lan·thā′cē·ae, n.pl. [Gr. kyklos, circle, and anthos, a flower.] a small family of tropical plants intermediate between the palms and the screw pines. The typical genus is Cyclanthus, and its species are found in tropical America.

cyç·lan·thā′ceous, a. belonging to or characteristic of the family Cyclanthaceæ.

cy′çlas, n. 1. in ancient Rome, an upper garment worn by both men and women, usually made of silk: it was somewhat similar to the surcoat and embroidered with gold.
2. an outer gown of the fourteenth century, worn by women and also by knights over their armor.

cy·çlā·zō′çine, n. [from cyclo-, and azo-, and -ocin, suffix for an 8-membered ring, and -e.] a pain-killing, nonaddictive, synthetic drug that blocks the effects of heroin or morphine.

cy′çle, n. [Fr. cycle; LL. cyclus; Gr. kyklos, a circle.]

1. a recurring period of a definite number of years, used as a measure of time.
2. a period of time within which a round of regularly recurring events or phenomena is completed; as, the business cycle.
3. a complete set of events or phenomena recurring in the same sequence.
4. any long period; an age.

Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay. —Tennyson.

5. in literature, the aggregate of legendary or traditional matter accumulated round some mythical or heroic event or character embodied in poetry, songs, etc.; as, the ballads of the Arthurian cycle.
6. a series of poems or songs on the same theme.
7. a bicycle, tricycle, or motorcycle.
8. a set of equal septa in corals.
9. in astronomy, the orbit of a heavenly body.
10. in biology, a recurring series of functional changes or events.
11. in botany, (a) in the theory of spiral leaf arrangement, a complete turn of the spire; (b) an entire circle of leaves.
12. in electricity, (a) a complete alternation of a current that changes from positive to negative and back again; (b) the time necessary for such an alternation.

Callippic cycle; a period of seventy-six years, or four Metonic cycles.

cycle of eclipses; a period required for the revolution of the moon's node, about eighteen years eleven days, after which eclipses usually return in a similar order.

cycle of indiction; a period of fifteen years in Roman chronology.

cycle of the sun, or solar cycle; a period of twenty-eight years, which having elapsed, the days of the month again fall upon the same days of the week.

Metonic cycle; a period of nineteen years at the end of which the new moon reappears on the same day as at the beginning of the cycle.

cy′çle, v.i.; cycled, pt., pp.; cycling, ppr. 1. to recur in cycles; to pass through a cycle.
2. to ride a bicycle, tricycle, or motorcycle.

cy′çlĕr, n. a cyclist.

cy̆ç′liç (or sik′), a. 1. pertaining to or moving in a cycle.

All the cyclic heavens around me spun. —E. B. Browning.

2. connected with a cycle of legends, etc.
3. in ancient prosody, having a certain shortened measure in which the time of three syllables is occupied instead of four; designating certain dactyls and anapests.
4. in botany, having the parts arranged in the form of a whorl.
5. in chemistry, arranged in a ring or closed-chain structure: said of atoms.

cyclic chorus; in ancient Greece, the chorus which performed the songs and dances of the dithyrambic odes at Athens, dancing round the altar of Dionysus in a circle.

cyclic poets; the epic poets who followed Homer, and wrote on the Trojan war.

cy̆ç′liç (or sik′), n. a poem in cyclic meter.

cy̆ç′liç·ăl, a. cyclic.

cy′çling, n. the act or sport of riding a cycle, especially a bicycle.

cy′çlist, n. 1. one who rides a cycle, especially a bicycle.
2. one who believes in the cyclic recurrence of events or phenomena.

cyç·lī′tis, n. inflammation of the ciliary body.

cy′çlō-, [Gr. kyklos, circle, wheel.] a combining form meaning of a wheel or circle, circular, as in *cyclo*graph: also, before a vowel, cycl-.

cy·çlō·brañ′chi·āte, a. [cyclo-, and Gr. branchia, gills.] in zoology, having the gills arranged in a circle about the body, as a limpet.

cy·çlō·coe′liç (-sē′lik), a. [cyclo-, and Gr. koilia, the belly, intestines.] arranged in coils, as the intestines of certain birds.

cy′çlō·gen, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. genos, kind.] an exogen.

cy′çlō·graph, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. graphein, to describe.]

1. an instrument for describing the arcs of circles; an arcograph.
2. a camera that can take a panoramic view of half the surface of a spherical object.
3. an electronic tool for determining the hardness of metals.

cy′çloid, n. [Gr. kyklos, a circle, and eidos, form.]

1. in geometry, a curve traced by a point on the circumference, or on a radius, of a circle that makes one complete revolution along a straight line and kept always in the same plane. The common cycloid is described by a point on the circumference; the curtate cycloid is the cycloid described when the generating point lies outside the circumference of the circle; the prolate or inflected cycloid is the cycloid described when the point lies within the circumference.

2. any of the Cycloidei.

cy′çloid, a. 1. circular.
2. designating or of a person who has cyclothymia.
3. relating to the Cycloidei.

cy·çloid′ăl, a. pertaining to, or having the shape of, a cycloid.

cy·çloi′dē·ăn, a. pertaining to the Cycloidei.

cy·çloi′dē·ăn, n. any of the Cycloidei.

Cy·çloi′dē·ī, n.pl. [L., from Gr. kyklos, circle, and eidos, form.] in former classifications, a group of fishes having cycloid scales.

cy·çlom′e·tēr, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] 1. an instrument for recording a wheel's revolutions or the number of miles traveled by a wheeled vehicle: used with automobiles, bicycles, etc.
2. an instrument for measuring the arcs of circles.

cy·çlom′e·try, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. metron, a measure.] in geometry, the measuring of circles.

cy′çlōne, n. [Gr. kyklōn, ppr. of kykloun, to whirl around, twist.]

1. in meteorology, a violent, circular storm with heavy rainfall and winds rotating about a calm center of low atmospheric pressure, that moves forward at a rate of from 2 to 40 miles per hour.
2. any violent windstorm having a rotary motion; a tornado or hurricane.

cy′çlōne cel′lăr, a deep cellar beneath a building, for shelter during heavy windstorms.

cy·çlon′iç, a. pertaining to or resembling a cyclone.

cy·çlon′i·çăl, a. same as cyclonic.

cy·çlō′nō·sçōpe, n. [from cyclone, and -scope.] in meteorology, a device for locating the center of a cyclone.

cy·çlō·pē′ăn, a. [L. Cyclopeus; Gr. Kyklōpeios, Cyclopean, from Kyklōps, Cyclops.]

1. [C–] pertaining to the Cyclopes.
2. gigantic; enormous; massive; vast; as, a cyclopean work.
3. in zoology, having a single eye in the center of the forehead.

cy·çlō·pē′di·a, cy·çlō·pae′di·a, n. [Gr. kyklos, a circle, and paideia, education.]

1. a book dealing comprehensively with one branch of learning; as, a cyclopedia of electricity.
2. a book with subjects alphabetically arranged, containing an extensive account of many branches of knowledge; an encyclopedia.

cy·çlō·pē′diç, cy·çlō·pae′diç, a. 1. pertaining to a cyclopedia.
2. of the nature of a cyclopedia; exhaustive; thorough.

cy·çlō·pē′dist, cy·çlō·pae′dist, n. one who compiles or writes for a cyclopedia.

cy·çlō·pen′tāne, n. [cyclo-, and pentane.] a saturated, colorless liquid hydrocarbon, C_5H_{10}, derived from certain petroleums.

cy·çlop′iç, a. pertaining to, or resembling, the Cyclopes; cyclopean.

cy′çlō·pid, n. in zoology, one of the Cyclopidæ.

Cȳ·ȼlop′i·dae, n.pl. [Gr. Kyklōps, Cyclops, and eidos, form, shape.] a family of minute crustaceans having but one eye.

cȳ·ȼlō·plē′ġi·ȧ, n. paralysis of those muscles of the eye responsible for visual accommodation.

cȳ′ȼlō·poid, a. pertaining to the Cyclopidæ.

cȳ·ȼlō·prō′pāne, n. [cyclo-, and -propane.] a colorless, inflammable gas, C_3H_6, used as a general anesthetic.

Cȳ′ȼlops, n.; pl. Cȳ′ȼlō·pēș, [L. Cyclops, pl. Cyclopes; Gr. Kyklōps, pl. Kyklōpes, Cyclops; kyklos, a circle, and ōps, eye.]
1. in Greek mythology, one of a race of giants supposedly living in Sicily, having but one circular eye in the middle of the forehead.
2. a typical genus of the Cyclopidæ.

cȳ·ȼlō·rä′mȧ, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. horama, a view.]
1. a pictorial representation, usually of a battle or landscape, displayed on a circular wall in imitation of natural perspective, and viewed from a central point; a circular panorama.
2. a large, curved curtain or screen used as a background for stage settings.

cȳ·ȼlō·ram′iȼ, a. pertaining to or resembling a cyclorama.

cȳ′ȼlō·ȿȼōpe, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. skopein, to look at, view.] an automatic apparatus for measuring velocity of revolution.

cȳ·ȼlō′sis, n. [Gr. kyklōsis, a surrounding, from kykloun, to enclose.] in biology, circulation of the life-giving fluids.

Cȳ·ȼlos′tō·mȧ, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. stoma, mouth.] a genus of gastropods whose shells have circular apertures; type of the family Cyclostomidæ.

Cȳ·ȼlō·stō′mȧ·tȧ, n.pl. [cyclo-, and Gr. stoma, mouth.] in zoology, (a) a genus of gymnolaematous polyzoans having circular apertures; (b) the order Marsipobranchii.

cȳ·ȼlos′tō·māte, a. 1. having a round mouth.
2. of a cyclostome or the cyclostomes.

cȳ·ȼlō·stom′ȧ·tous, a. same as cyclostomate.

cȳ′ȼlō·stōme, n. any of a group of primitive fishes, including the lamprey and hagfish, which are vertebrates with an eellike body and a circular, sucking mouth; any of the Cyclostomi.

cȳ′ȼlō·stōme, a. same as cyclostomous.

Cȳ·ȼlos′tō·mī, n.pl. an order of eellike fishes with sucking mouths; the Marsipobranchii.

cȳ·ȼlos′tō·mous, a. 1. having a circular mouth.
2. of or relating to the Cyclostomi.

cȳ·ȼlō·stȳ′lăr, a. 1. made by, or pertaining to, a cyclostyle.
2. in architecture, resembling or pertaining to a cyclostyle.

cȳ′ȼlō·stȳle, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. stylos, a pillar.]
1. in architecture, a circular arrangement of columns supporting a roof, without a core or building within.
2. an apparatus for producing a number of copies of a writing or drawing by means of a stencil in which very small holes are cut with a small, toothed wheel on a stylus.

cȳ·ȼlō·thȳ′mi·ȧ, n. [Mod. L., from cyclo-, and Gr. thymos, spirit.] an abnormal condition characterized by alternate periods of elation and depression; manic-depressive psychosis.

cȳ·ȼlō·thȳ′miȼ, a. of, characteristic of, or having cyclothymia.

cȳ·ȼlō·thȳ′miȼ, n. a cyclothymic person.

cȳ·ȼlō·tom′iȼ, a. pertaining to cyclotomy.

cȳ·ȼlot′ō·my, n. [cyclo-, and Gr. tomē, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.]
1. in geometry, the theory of the division of a circle into equal parts.
2. in surgery, an operation consisting of an incision into the ciliary body.

cȳ′ȼlō·tron, n. [cyclo-, and elec*tron*.] an apparatus for giving high energy to particles, usually protons and deuterons: through the combined action of a homogeneous magnetic field and an oscillating electrostatic field it causes a particle to move in a spiral path with increasing kinetic energy until the particle attains a velocity sufficiently high for the purpose intended, usually to initiate nuclear transformations upon collision with a suitable target. By modulating the oscillations of the electric field it is also possible to accelerate electrons in a cyclotron.

cȳ′dēr, n. same as cider.

cȳ·dō′nin, n. [L. cydonia, a quince, a Cydonian apple, from Cydonia, a town in Crete.] in chemistry, an amyloid extract of quince seeds resembling mucilage.

cȳ·dō′ni·um, n. in pharmacy, quince seed.

cȳ·ē·si·ol′ō·ġy, n. [Gr. kyēsis, pregnancy, and legein, to describe.] that branch of physiology that deals with pregnancy.

cȳ·ē′sis, n. [Gr. kyēsis, pregnancy.] pregnancy.

cyg′nē·ous, a. [L. cygneus, pertaining to a swan, from cygnus, a swan.] in botany, curved to resemble a swan's neck.

cyg′net, n. [Fr., dim. of cygne, a swan; L. cygnus; Gr. kyknos, a swan.] a young swan.

Cyg′nus, n. [L. Cygnus; Gr. kyknos, a swan.]
1. in astronomy, a northern constellation, the Swan, in the Milky Way.
2. a genus of birds typical of Cygninæ, the swans.

cyl′in·dēr, n. [Fr. cylindre; L. cylindrus; Gr. kylindros, a cylinder, roller, from kylindein, to roll.]
1. in geometry, a solid body described by the rotation of a parallelogram round one of its sides: the ends of a cylinder are equal and parallel circles. When the axis is at right angles to the planes, it is called a right cylinder; otherwise, it is an oblique cylinder.

RIGHT CYLINDER

2. anything having the shape of a cylinder, whether hollow or solid; specifically, (a) the turning part of a revolver, containing chambers for cartridges; (b) a chamber in which force is exerted on the piston of a reciprocating engine; (c) the barrel of a pump; (d) on a printing press, a roller carrying the printing plates or the part receiving the impression; (e) a roller-shaped stone with cuneiform inscriptions.

cyl′in·dēr bōre, a gun having a bore of uniform diameter throughout.

cyl′in·dēr ȼock, a cock at the end of a steam cylinder through which water may be blown out or steam blown in.

cyl′in·dēr head (hed), the closed end, usually detachable, of a cylinder in an internal-combustion engine, often containing the seatings for the valves and the inlet and exhaust passages.

cyl′in·dēr wrench, a pipe wrench.

cyl·in·drā′ceous, a. approximately cylindrical.

cyl·in·dreñ′ȼhy·mȧ, n. [Gr. kylindros, a cylinder, and enchyma, an infusion; en, in, and chein, to pour.] in botany, plant tissue composed of cylindrical cells, as in the genus Conferva.

cy·lin′driȼ·ăl, cy·lin′driȼ, a. having the shape of a cylinder; like a cylinder; also, of a cylinder.
cylindrical lens; a lens having cylindrical surfaces, as in spectacles.
cylindrical surface; in geometry, a surface described by a straight line moving parallel to a fixed straight line.

cy·lin·dri·cal′i·ty, n. the quality or state of being cylindrical.

cyl·in·dric′i·ty, n. same as cylindricality.

cy·lin′dri·ȼūle, n. a small cylinder.

cy·lin′dri·form, a. [L. cylindrus, a cylinder, and forma, shape.] having the form of a cylinder.

cyl′in·droid, a. [Gr. kylindros, a cylinder, and eidos, form.] of cylindrical form.

cyl′in·droid, n. a solid body resembling a cylinder but having the bases or ends elliptical.

cy·lin·drō·met′riȼ, a. [Gr. kylindros, a cylinder, and metron, a measure.] belonging to a scale used in measuring cylinders.

cȳ′lix, n.; pl. cyl′i·cēș, [Gr. kylix.] a two-handled drinking cup with a stem and a wide, shallow bowl, used in ancient Greece: also kylix.

Cyl·lē′ni·ăn, a. 1. of Mount Cyllene, in Greece.
2. of Hermes, who was regarded as having been born there, or of the arts and practices of which he was the patron god.

cȳ′mȧ, n.; pl. cȳ′mae, [Mod. L. cyma; Gr. kyma, wave, from kyein, to swell.]
1. in architecture, a molding of a cornice, the profile of which is partly concave and partly convex. Cyma recta is concave at the top and convex at the bottom, and cyma reversa, convex at the top and concave at the bottom.
2. in botany, a cyme.

CYMA
1. cyma recta; 2. cyma reversa cȳ′mȧ·grȧph, n. same as cymograph.

cy·mär′, n. [Fr. simarre.] a chemise or other loose, lightweight garment for women.

cȳ·mā′ti·um (-shi-um), n. [L. cymatium, a waved molding, from Gr. kyma, a wave.] in architecture, a molding topping an entablature; also, a cyma.

cym′băl, n. [ME. cimbale, cymbale; OFr. cimbale; L. cymbalum; Gr. kymbalon, a cymbal, from kymbē, a hollow vessel.]
1. either of a pair of circular, concave brass or bronze plates which have handles at the back and make a ringing sound when clashed together: used as percussion instruments in orchestras or bands.
2. a single brass plate, struck with a drumstick.
3. a musical instrument consisting of a triangular wire strung with movable rings.

CYMBALS

4. a stop of high pitch in an organ.

cym′băl·ist, n. [L. cymba; Gr. kymbē, a boat, skiff.] one who plays the cymbals.

cym′bāte, a. shaped like a boat; cymbiform.

cym′bi·form, a. [L. cymba, a boat, and forma, shape.] having the form of a boat.

cym·bō·ceph′ȧ·ly, n. [Gr. kymbē, a boat, and kephalē, head.] in craniology, a bilobate skull.

cȳme, n. [L., from Gr. kyma, a wave, from kyein, to swell.]
1. a cluster of flowers in which each main and secondary stem bears a single flower, the bud on the main stem blooming first, as in phlox and sweet William.
2. in architecture, the cyma.

cȳme′let, n. same as cymule.

cȳ′mēne, n. [L. cuminum; Gr. kyminon, cumin.] a hydrocarbon, $C_{10}H_{14}$, occurring in three isomeric forms (orthocymene, metacymene, and paracymene), derived from benzene: the most common form, paracymene, is found in the oil of certain plants, as cumin and wild thyme.

cȳ·mif′ēr·ous, a. [L. cyma, cyme, and ferre, to bear.] in botany, bearing cymes.

cȳ′mō-, [Gr. kymo-, from kyma, cyme.] a combining form meaning wave, as in cymoscope.

cȳ′mō·ġēne, n. [L. cuminum; Gr. kyminon, cumin, and -genēs, producing.] in chemistry, a volatile liquid mixture of hydrocarbons obtained from petroleum which, when condensed, is used as a refrigerant.

cȳ′mō·grȧph, n. [cymo-, and -graph.] an instrument for making tracings, as of profiles, contours, etc.; kymograph.

cȳ′moid, a. having the form of a cyme or cyma.

cȳ′mōl, n. same as cymene.

cȳ·mom′e·tēr, n. [cymo-, and -meter.] an instrument for measuring the frequency of electrical oscillations or radio waves.

cȳ′mō·phāne, n. [cymo-, and -phane.] an opalescent variety of chrysoberyl.

cȳ·moph′ȧ·nous, a. [Gr. kyma, a wave, and phanein, to appear.] having a wavy, floating light; opalescent; chatoyant.

cȳ′mō·ȿȼōpe, n. [cymo-, and -scope.] an instrument for detecting the presence of electric waves.

cȳ′mōse, cȳ′mous, a. 1. bearing a cyme or cymes.
2. in the form of a cyme.

Ċym′riȼ, a. 1. of the Celtic people of Wales.
2. of their language.

Ċym′riȼ, n. the group of Brythonic Celtic languages that includes Welsh, Breton, and extinct Cornish.

Ċym′ry, n.pl. [W. Cymro, a Welshman, pl. Cymry, the Welsh.] the Welsh; also, the division of the Celtic race including the Cornishmen and Bretons: also Kymry.

cȳ′mūle, n. in botany, a simple or small cyme; a cymelet.

cȳ·nañ′ȼhē, n. [L., from Gr. kynanche, a dog collar, a bad kind of sore throat; kyōn, a dog, and anchein, to press, choke.] in medicine, any disease of the throat or windpipe attended with inflammation, swelling, and difficulty in breathing and swallowing.

cȳ·nan′thrō·py, n. [Gr. kyōn, a dog, and anthrōpos, man.] a kind of insanity in which the patient believes himself to be a dog, and behaves like a dog.

Cyn′ȧ·rȧ, n. [L., from Gr. kynara, a plant, either the dog thorn or artichoke.] in botany, a genus of composite herbs allied to the thistle, found in the Mediterranean regions, and including the cultivated artichoke and cardoon.

cyn·ā·rā′ceous, a. pertaining to or resembling the genus Cynara; cynareous.

cyn·ärç·tom′ȧ·çhy, n. [Gr. kyōn, a dog, arktos, a bear, and machē, a fight.] bearbaiting with a dog.

cy·nā′rē·ous, a. cynaraceous.

cyn·ā·roid′, a. cynaraceous.

cyn·ar·rhō′di·um, n.; pl. cyn·ar·rhō′di·ȧ, [L., from Gr. kynorodon, the dogrose; kyōn, dog, and rhodon, rose.] in botany, a fruit in which the receptacle is deeply concave or urn-shaped, enclosed by the calyx, and bearing numerous bony achenia on its inner surface, as in the rose.

cyn·ar′rhō·don, n. same as cynarrhodium.

cyn·ē·ġet′ics, n. [Gr. kynēgetēs, a hunter; kyōn, a dog, and ēgeisthai, to lead.] hunting with dogs.

cyn′ic, n. [L. cynicus, cynical; Gr. kynikos, doglike, from kyōn, a dog.]
1. [C–] a member of a sect of ancient Greek philosophers who held virtue to be the only good, and stressed independence from worldly needs and pleasures: they became critical of the rest of society and its material interests.
2. a cynical person.
3. a person who believes that people are motivated in all their actions entirely by selfishness.

cyn′ic, a. 1. [C–] of or like the Cynics or their doctrines.
2. cynical.
3. pertaining to the Dog Star.
4. doglike.
cynic spasm; in medicine, a contraction of the muscles on one side of the face, suggesting the movements of a dog's upper lip.

cyn′ic·ăl, a. [from L. cynicus, of the Cynics; Gr. kynikos, lit., canine, like a dog, from kyōn, kynos, dog.]
1. inclined to question the sincerity and goodness of people's motives and actions, or the value of living.
2. morose, sarcastic, sneering, etc.

cyn′ic·ăl·ly, adv. in a cynical manner.

cyn′ic·ăl·ness, n. the state or quality of being cynical.

cyn′i·cişm, n. [LL. cynismus; Gr. kynismos, cynicism, from kynizein, to be a cynic.]
1. [C–] the philosophy of the Cynics.
2. the attitude or beliefs of a cynic.
3. a cynical expression or view.

cyn′i·pid, a. pertaining to the Cynipidæ.

cyn′i·pid, n. an insect of the family Cynipidæ.

Cy·nip′i·dae, n.pl. [LL. cyniphes, a kind of gallfly; Gr. knips, a kind of emmet, from knizein, to tease.] a family of hymenopterous insects, the gallflies.

cyn·i·pid′ē·ous, a. cynipidous.

cy·nip′i·dous, a. characteristic of or pertaining to the gallflies, or Cynipidæ.

cyn′i·poid, a. pertaining to or resembling the Cynipidæ; cynipid.

Cȳ′nips, n. 1. a genus of gallflies, type of the family Cynipidæ.
2. [c–] an insect of this genus; a gallfly.

cyn·ō·cē·phal′iç, a. pertaining to a cynocephalus; dog-headed.

cyn·ō·ceph′ȧ·lous, a. cynocephalic.

Cyn·ō·ceph′ȧ·lus, n. [L. cynocephalus; Gr. kynokephalos, the African dog-headed ape; kyōn, a dog, and kephalē, head.]

cys'ti·çle, n. [dim. from L. cystis; Gr. kystis, a bladder.] a small cyst.
cys'tid, n. [Gr. kystis, a sac, bladder.] any of the Cystidea.
Cys·tid'ē·à, n.pl. same as Cystoidea. cys·tid'ē·ăn, a. pertaining to the Cystidea.
cys·tid'ē·ăn, n. same as cystid.
cys·ti·diç'ō·lous, a. [L. cystis; Gr. kystis, a bladder, and L. colere, to inhabit.] in zoology, living in a cyst.
cys·tid'i·um, n.; pl. cys·tid'i·à, [L., dim. of Gr. kystis, bladder.] in hymenomycetous fungi, a spherical cell, supposedly sterile, emerging from the basidia and paraphyses, and projecting beyond them.
cys'tin, n. same as cystine.
cys'tine, n. [from Gr. kystis, sac, bladder, and -ine: so named from having been found first in urinary calculi.] a crystalline amino acid, $C_6H_8(NH_2)_2S_2(COOH)_2$, produced in the digestion of proteins.
cys'tis, n.; pl. cys'ti·dēş, same as cyst.
cys·tī'tis, n. in medicine, inflammation of the urinary bladder.
cys'tō-, [from L. cystis; Gr. kystis, bladder, sac.] a combining form meaning of or like a bladder or sac, as in cystocele: also cyst-, cysti-.
cys'tō·çärp, n. [cysto-, and Gr. karpos, fruit.] in botany, a small sac or pericarp containing the spores of reproduction of red algae: called also sporocarp.
cys'tō·cēle, n. [cysto-, and Gr. kēlē, a rupture.] in medicine, a hernia or rupture of the urinary bladder.
cys'toid, a. resembling a cyst or bladder; cystiform.
cys'toid, n. a cystlike formation.
Cys·toi'dē·à, n.pl. [Gr. kystis, bladder, and eidos, form.] a class of crinoid Paleozoic fossils, having a roundish body enclosed in sutured plates and a lateral orifice closed by jointed plates: called also Cystidea.
cys·toi'dē·ăn, a. pertaining to the Cystoidea.
cys·toi'dē·ăn, n. any of the Cystoidea.
cys'tō·lith, n. [cysto-, and Gr. lithos, stone.]
1. in botany, a crystalline concretion of calcium carbonate found in the cell of a plant.
2. in medicine, a urinary calculus.
cys·tō·lith'iç, a. pertaining to a cystolith.
cys'tō·plàst, n. [cysto-, and Gr. plastos, anything formed or molded, from plassein, to form,] in anatomy, a cell consisting of an enveloped nucleus.
cys''tō·plē'ġi·à, n. paralysis of the bladder.
Cys'to·pus, n. [cysto-, and Gr. ōps, face, appearance.] in botany, a genus of parasitic fungi affecting flowering plants.
cys'tō·sçōpe, n. [cysto-, and -scope.] an instrument for examining the interior of the urinary bladder.
cys'tō·sçōpe, v.t.; cystoscoped, pt., pp.; cystoscoping, ppr. to examine with a cystoscope.
cys·tos'cō·py, n. examination of the urinary bladder with the aid of a cystoscope.
cys'tōse, a. containing cysts.
cys'tō·tōme, n. [cysto-, and Gr. tomos, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.] in surgery, an instrument for making incisions in the bladder.
cys·tot'ō·my, n. in surgery, cutting into the urinary bladder, as for removing calcium formations.
cȳt-, same as cyto-.
cy·tas'tĕr, n. [Gr. kytos, a cavity, and astēr, star.] in biology, a radiate shape occurring in a cell undergoing mitosis.
-cȳte, [from Gr. kytos, a hollow.] a terminal combining form meaning a cell, as in lymphocyte.

cȳ'tō·blàst, n. [cyto-, and Gr. blastos, a bud, shoot.] the nucleus of a cell.
cȳ''tō·çhem'is·try, n. the study of the chemical constituents of tissues and cells, as with a microscope.
cȳ'tō·çhrōme, n. [cyto-, and -chrome.] any of several iron-containing enzymes found in almost all animal and plant cells, very important in cell respiration.
cȳ''tō·çhȳ·lē'mà, n. same as cytolymph.
cȳ'tōde, n. [Gr. kytos, a hollow, and eidos, form.] in biology, a cell without a nucleus.
cȳ'tō·dērm, n. [cyto-, and Gr. derma, skin.] in biology, the wall of a cell.
cȳ·tō·ġen'e·sis, n. [cyto-, and Gr. genesis, birth, origin.] in biology, the formation or development of cells.
cȳ''tō·ġe·net'iç, a. 1. pertaining to cytogenesis.
2. of or having to do with cytogenetics.
cȳ''tō·ġe·net'içs, n.pl. [construed as sing.] the science correlating cytology and genetics as they relate to the behavior of chromosomes and genes in cells with regard to heredity and variation.
cȳ·toġ'e·nous, a. [cyto-, and Gr. -genēs, producing.] in anatomy, producing cells; cytogenetic.
cȳ·toġ'e·ny, n. same as cytogenesis. cȳ'toid, a. [Gr. kytos, a hollow, and eidos, form.] cell-like.
cȳ·tō·ki·nē'sis, n. [Mod. L.; cyto-, and kinesis.] the changes that take place in the cytoplasm of a cell during the stages of its development. cȳ·tō·ki'nin, n. [from cyto-, and kinetic, and -in.] any of a group of organic compounds which behave like hormones in plants, promoting cell division and cell differentiation into roots and shoots, inhibiting aging, etc.
cȳ·tol'ō·ġy, n. [cyto-, and Gr. logos, description, from legein, to speak.] the branch of biology dealing with the structure, function, pathology, and life history of cells.
cȳ'tō·lymph, n. [cyto-, and L. lympha, water.] in biology, the more fluid portion of cytoplasm; cytochylema. cȳ·tol'y·sin, n. a substance or antibody that produces cytolysis.
cȳ·tol'y·sis, n. [cyto-, and -lysis.] in biology, the degeneration of cells.
cȳ'tō·plaşm, n. [cyto-, and Gr. plasma, anything formed, image; from plassein, to form.] in biology, the protoplasm of a cell, exclusive of the nucleus.
cȳ·tō·plaş'miç, a. pertaining to or contained in cytoplasm.
cȳ'tō·plàst, n. same as cytoplasm.
cȳ'tō·pȳġe, n. the excretory aperture of a unicellular animal.
cȳ'tō·sīne, n. [G. zytosin, from zyt-, cyto-, and -os, -ose, and -in, -ine.] a nitrogenous base, $C_4H_5N_3O$, a constituent of various nucleic acids, and one of the substances constituting the genetic code in DNA molecules.
cȳ'tō·stōme, n. [cyto-, and Gr. stoma, mouth.] in biology, the mouth of a unicellular organism.
cȳ''tō·tax·on'ō·my, n. the branch of taxonomy that uses cytological structures, especially the chromosomes, as an aid in classifying organisms.
cyt'ū·là, n. [L., from Gr. kytos, a hollow.] in biology, the fertilized ovum or parent cell from which any organism is developed.
czär (zär), n. [Russ. tsare; O.H.G. keisar; L. Cæsar, emperor, from the cognomen of Caius Julius Cæsar.]

dī·ap·nō′iç, a. [Gr. diapnoē, an outlet, from dia, through, and pnein, to blow.] diaphoretic in a mild degree.

dī·ap·nō′iç, n. a mild diaphoretic.

dī″ap·ō·phys′i·ăl, a. of or relating to a diapophysis.

dī·ȧ·poph′y·sis, n.; pl. dī·ȧ·poph′y·sēs, [L., from Gr. dia, through, and apophysis, outgrowth.] in anatomy, the transverse process of a vertebra.

dī″ärch·y, n.; pl. dī″ärch·ieș, [di-, and Gr. archos, a ruler, from archein, to rule.] government shared by two rulers, powers, etc.: sometimes written dyarchy.

dī·ā′ri·ăn, dī·ā′ri·ăl, a. of, pertaining to, or resembling a diary.

dī′ȧ·rist, n. one who keeps a diary.

dī·ăr·rhē′ȧ, dī·ăr·rhoe′ȧ (-rē′ȧ), n. [LL. diarrhœa; Gr. diarrhoia, a flowing through, diarrhea, from dia-, through, and rheein, to flow.] a profuse, frequent, and loose discharge from the bowels.

dī·ăr·rhē′ăl, dī·ăr·rhoe′ăl, a. pertaining to or having the characteristics of diarrhea.

dī·ăr·rhē′iç, dī·ăr·rhoe′iç, a. same as diarrheal.

dī·är·thrō′di·ăl, a. of or pertaining to diarthrosis.

dī·är·thrō′sis, n. [Gr. diarthrōsis, a division by joints, from diarthroun, to divide by joints.] in anatomy, a joint, as the hip, so articulated as to move freely in any direction; also, the motion of such a joint.

dī′ȧ·ry, n.; pl. dī′ȧ·rieș, [L. diarium, a daily allowance (of food or pay), from dies, day.]
1. a daily written record, especially of the writer's own experiences, thoughts, etc.
2. a book in which such a record is kept.
3. a daily calendar or memorandum pad.

dī′ȧ·ry, a. lasting but one day; as, a diary fever. [Obs.]

dī·ȧ·skeū′ȧ·sis, n. [L., from Gr. diaskeuazein, to put in order; dia, through, and skeuazein, to prepare, make ready, from skeuos, an implement.] revision; editing.

dī·ȧ·skeū′ast, n. one who revises; an editor.

Dī·ȧs′pō·rȧ, n. [Gr. diaspora, a dispersion, from dia-, through, and speirein, to scatter or sow.]
1. the dispersion of the Jews after the Babylonian exile.
2. the Jews thus dispersed.
3. in the time of the apostles, Jewish Christians who lived outside of Palestine.

dī′ȧ·spōre, n. [Gr. diaspora, a dispersion; dia-, through, and speirein, to scatter.] a variously colored native hydrate of aluminum, $HAlO_2$, occurring in lamellar masses and orthorhombic crystals. It is infusible, and receives its name from the fact that when exposed to heat it crackles and disperses.

dī·ȧ·stal′tiç, a. [Gr. diastaltikos, able to distinguish, dilating, from diastellein, to separate, to distinguish; dia-, apart, and stellein, to send.] dilated; extended: in Greek music, applied to certain intervals.

dī′ȧ·stāse, n. [Gr. diastasis, a standing apart, separation, from dia-, apart, and histanai, to stand.] an enzyme that changes starches into maltose and later into dextrose; amylase.

dī·ȧ·stā′siç, a. pertaining to or having the quality of diastase.

dī·as′tȧ·sis, n. in surgery, a dislocation; a separation of the bones without breaking.

dī·ȧ·stat′iç, a. of, pertaining to, or having the properties of diastase; changing starch into sugar.

dī′ȧ·stem, n. in Greek music, an interval.

dī·ȧ·stē′mȧ, n.; pl. dī·ȧ·stē′mȧ·tȧ, [Gr. diastēma, an interval, difference, from dihistanai, aor. diastēnai, to stand apart, divide; dia, apart, and histanai, to stand.]
1. in anatomy and zoology, a space between any two adjacent teeth or kinds of teeth.
2. a diastem.

dī·as′tēr, n. [di-, two, and Gr. astēr, a star.] the stage of mitosis in which there is a set of chromosomes near each pole of the spindle.

dī·as′tō·lē, n. [Gr. diastolē, distinction, difference, from diastellein, to separate, dilate; dia, apart, and stellein, to put, arrange.]
1. the usual rhythmic dilatation of the heart, especially of the ventricles, following each contraction (systole), during which the heart muscle relaxes and the chambers fill with blood.
2. in Greek and Latin prosody, the lengthening of a short syllable.

dī·as·tol′iç, a. of, pertaining to, or caused by diastole.

dī·as′trăl, a. in biology, of or in the stage of diaster.

dī·as·troph′iç, a. of or pertaining to diastrophism.

dī·as′trō·phiṣm, n. [Gr. diastrophē, distortion, from diastrephein, to turn aside, distort; dia-, aside, and strephein, to turn.]
1. the process by which the internal structure and external configuration of the earth's crust are reshaped by internal forces, producing continents, ocean beds, mountains, strata, etc.
2. formation so made.

dī′ȧ·stȳle, n. [L. diastylos; Gr. diastylos, with columns wide apart; dia, apart, and stylos, column.] see intercolumniation.

dī·ȧ·tes′sȧ·ron, n. [L., from Gr. dia tessarōn, lit., through four, the interval of a fourth; dia, through, and tessarōn, genit. pl. of tessares, four.]
1. formerly, in music, the interval of a fourth.
2. formerly, in pharmacy, a mixture of four medicines in sirup or honey.
3. in theology, a continuous narrative of the four Gospels, to prove their agreement or harmony; Gospel harmony.

dī·ȧ·thēr′măl, a. same as diathermic.

dī·ȧ·thēr′măn·cy, dī·ȧ·thēr′mănce, n. [Fr. diathermansie, from Gr. dia-, through, and thermansis, a heating.] the property of transmitting infrared or heat rays.

dī·ȧ·thēr·mȧ·nē′i·ty, n. diathermancy. [Rare.]

dī·ȧ·thēr′mȧ·niṣm, n. same as diathermancy.

dī·ȧ·thēr′mȧ·nous, a. same as diathermic.

dī·ȧ·thēr′mi·ȧ, n. [Mod. L.] diathermy.

dī·ȧ·thēr′miç, a. 1. relating to diathermy.
2. letting heat rays pass through freely.

dī″ȧ·thēr′mīze, v.t.; diathermized, pt., pp.; diathermizing, ppr. to treat by diathermy.

dī″ȧ·thēr·mom′e·tēr, n. [dia-, and Gr. thermos, heat, and metron, a measure.] an instrument to measure the comparative power of heat transmission of various substances.

dī′ȧ·thēr″my, n. [Gr. dia-, through, and thermē, heat.]
1. medical treatment in which heat is produced in the tissues beneath the skin by a high-frequency electric current.
2. the apparatus used in diathermy; also, the current so used.

dī·ath′e·sis, n. [Gr. diathesis, an arrangement, from diatithenai, to arrange; dia-, apart, and tithenai, to place, put.] in medicine, a congenital susceptibility or liability to certain diseases.

dī·à·thet′iç, a. of the nature of or dependent on diathesis.

dī′à·tom, n. any plant of the Diatomaceæ.

Dī·at′ō·mà, n. [L., from Gr. dia, through, and tomē, a cutting, from temnein, to cut.] in botany, a genus of Diatomaceæ.

Dī″à·tō·mā′cē·ae, n.pl. in botany, a family of algae, consisting of microscopic plants found in fresh and salt water. The frond secretes a very large quantity of silica, which is formed in each cell into two generally symmetrical valves. The species consist of single free cells, cells in colonies, or in some cases the cells or frustules are enclosed in a transparent gelatinous sheath or frond.

dī″à·tō·mā′cē·ăn, n. a diatom.

dī″à·tō·mā′ceous, a. of, containing, or consisting of diatoms or their fossils.

dī·à·tom′iç, a. [di-, two, and Gr. atomos, an atom.]
1. consisting of two atoms in the molecule.
2. having two replaceable atoms or radicals in the molecule; bivalent.

dī·à·tom·if′ēr·ous, a. [L. Diatoma, and ferre, to bear.] bearing or yielding diatoms.

dī·at′ō·min, dī·at′ō·mine, n. the buff or brownish pigment of some diatoms.

dī·at′ŏm·īte, n. diatomaceous earth, forming, when dry, a fine powder used as an abrasive, as a pottery glaze, etc.

dī·at′ō·mous, a. [dia-, and Gr. tomos, a cut, from temnein, to cut.] in mineralogy, having crystals with one distinct, diagonal cleavage.

dī·à·ton′iç, a. [LL. diatonicus; Gr. diatonikon, or diatonon (supply genos, kind), the diatonic scale, from diatonos, extending through; dia-, through, and teinein, to stretch, from tonos, a chord, tone.] in music, designating, of, or using any standard major or minor scale of eight tones without the chromatic intervals.
diatonic scale; a major or minor scale of diatonic notes.

dī·à·ton′iç·ăl·ly, adv. in a diatonic manner; with reference to a diatonic scale.

dī·at′ō·nous, a. [Gr. diatonos, extending through; dia, through, and teinein, to stretch.] showing on two surfaces: said of a stone extending through a wall.

dī′à·trībe, n. [Gr. diatribē, a wearing away, waste of time, pastime, from diatribein, to rub away, waste.] a discourse or dispute; specifically, one of bitter, malicious criticism and abuse.

dī′a·tri·bist, n. one who makes a diatribe.

dī·à·trop′iç, a. of or showing diatropism.

dī·at′rō·pism, n. in botany, the tendency of some plant parts to place themselves crosswise to the line of force of a stimulus.

Dī·à·trȳ′mà, n. [L., from Gr. dia, through, and trymē, a hole, from tryein, to wear out, bore, pierce.] a genus of large fossil birds of the earliest epoch of the Tertiary.

dī·ạu′los, n.; pl. dī·ạu′lī, [Gr. diaulos, a double race track, a double pipe or channel; di-, two, and aulos, a pipe, flute.]
1. in ancient Greece, a double track for foot racing.
2. in Greek music, two flutes controlled by a single mouthpiece.

dī·à·zeūç′tiç, a. [Gr. diazeutikos, disjunctive, from diazeugnynai, to unyoke, disjoin; dia, apart, and zeugnynai, to join, yoke.] disjoining.
diazeuctic tone; in ancient music, a tone between two tetrachords.

dī′à·zïne, dī′à·zin, n. any chemical compound with a molecular structure consisting of four atoms of carbon and two of nitrogen, arranged in a ring.

dī·az′ō, a. [di-, and azo.] having a group of two nitrogen atoms combined directly with one hydrocarbon radical.

dī·az′ō-, a combining form meaning diazo: also diaz-.

dī·a′zō·à·mï′nō, a. denoting or of a diazo compound in which the N_2 group is attached to the nitrogen atom of an amino radical, replacing one of the atoms normally present in that radical.

dī′à·zōle (or dī·az′ōl), n. 1. any chemical compound with a molecular structure consisting of three atoms of carbon and two of nitrogen, arranged in a ring.
2. a derivative of such a compound.

dī·à·zō′mà, n.; pl. dī·à·zō′mà·tà, [L., from Gr. diazōma, a girdle, partition, from diazōnnynai, to gird around; dia, through, and zōnnynai, to gird, from zōma, a girdle.] in the theaters of ancient Greece, a horizontal passageway through the auditorium about halfway up and crossing the staircases.

dī·à·zō′ni·um, a. [diaz-, and ammonium.] designating or containing the bivalent organic radical =N:N in which one nitrogen atom has a valence of three and the other a valence of five: it occurs in a series of aromatic compounds (diazonium compounds).

dī·az′ō rē·aç′tion, a chemical reaction in which a diazo compound is used.

dī·az′ō·tīze, v.t.; diazotized, pt., pp.; diazotizing, ppr. to convert chemically into a diazo compound.

dib, v.i. [ME. dibben; AS. dyppan, to dip, plunge.] to dip; especially, to dip bait into the water.

dī·bā′siç, a. [di-, and Gr. basis, base.]
1. denoting or of an acid with two hydrogen atoms either or both of which may be replaced by basic radicals or atoms to form a salt.
2. having two atoms of a univalent metal.

dib′bēr, n. a dibble.

dib′ble, n. [Eng. dial. var. of dabble.] a pointed instrument used to make holes for planting seeds, bulbs, or young plants.

DIBBLE

dib′ble, v.t.; dibbled, pt., pp.; dibbling, ppr. 1. to plant with a dibble.
2. to make holes in with a dibble.

dib′ble, v.i. 1. to use a dibble.
2. to dabble.
3. to dip bait gently into the water.

dib′blēr, n. one who or that which dibbles.

Dī·braṅ·chi·ā′tà, n.pl. [Mod. L., from Gr. di-, two, and branchia, gills.] an order of cephalopods having two gills, many armlike appendages, and a sac for ejecting an inky liquid.

dī·braṅ·chi·āte, a. having two gills; of or belonging to the Dibranchiata.

dī·braṅ′chi·āte, n. any of the Dibranchiata, as an octopus, squid, etc.

dibș, n. [Ar.] a Syrian sirup made from the concentrated juice of grapes, dates, or figs.

dib′stōne, n. a bone or stone used in the child's game of jackstones.

di·çā′cious, a. saucy; impudent. [Obs.]

di·çac′i·ty, n. [L. dicacitas, biting wit, from dicax (-cacis), witty, sharp in speech, from dicere, to speak.] pertness. [Rare.]

dī·çal′ciç, a. having two atoms of calcium to the molecule.

dī·çăr·bon′iç, a. having two carboxyl radicals $(CO·OH)_2$ as a constituent.

dī′çast, n. [Gr. dikastēs, from dikazein, to judge, from dikē, right, justice.] in ancient Athens, an officer in a high court of justice, who combined the duties of a present-day juror and judge, chosen annually from 6,000 citizens.

dī·ças′tēr·y, n. in ancient Athens, a court of justice; dicasts collectively.

dīce, n.pl.; sing. dīe, dīce, 1. small cubes of bone, plastic, etc. marked on each side with a different number of spots (from one to six) and used in games of chance.
2. [construed as sing.] a gambling game played with dice.
3. any small cubes.

dīce, v.i.; diced (dīst), pt., pp.; dicing, ppr. to play or gamble with dice, by throwing them to see what the spots on the upturned faces total.

dīce, v.t. 1. to lose by gambling with dice.
2. to cut (vegetables, etc.) into small cubes.
3. to mark with a pattern of cubes or squares; checker.

dīce′box, n. a box from which dice are thrown in games of chance.

dīce çōal, coal which breaks easily into dice-shaped pieces.

dī·cel′lāte, a. [Gr. dikella, a mattock or pickax with two teeth.] in zoology, having two prongs, as a spicule of a sponge.

Dī·cen′trà, n.pl. [Mod. L., from Gr. dikentros, with two stings or points.] a genus of herbaceous plants of the order Fumariaceæ, widely distributed. They are ornamental and have finely cut leaves and heart-shaped flowers. Well-known species are the bleeding heart, squirrel corn, and Dutchman's-breeches.

dī·ceph′à·lous, a. [Gr. dikephalos, two-headed.] two-headed, as certain fetal monsters.

dī′cēr, n. a player at dice.

dī·cer′i·on, n.; pl. dī·cer′i·à, [Gr. dikerōs, two-horned; di-, two, and keras, a horn.] a symbolic, two-branched candlestick used in ceremonials of the Orthodox Eastern Church.

dich-, same as dicho-.

dī·çhā′si·um, n.; pl. dī·çhā′si·à, [Mod. L., from Gr. dichasis, a division, from dichazein, to divide, from dicha, in two.] in botany, a cyme having two branches.

dī·çhas′tà·sis, n. [Gr. dichasis, a division.] spontaneous subdivision.

dī·çhas′tiç, a. capable of subdividing spontaneously.

dī·çhlà·myd′ē·ous, a. [di-, and Gr. chlamys (-ydos), a cloak, mantle.] in botany, having two coverings, a calyx and a corolla.

dī·çhlō′ride, dī·çhlō′rid, n. any chemical compound in which two atoms of chlorine are combined with an element or radical.

dī·çhlō″rō·phē·nox·y·à·cē′tiç ac′id, a chlorine derivative of phenol and acetic acid, $C_7H_5Cl_2·O·COOH$, used as a weed killer: also called 2,4–D.

dī·çhō-, [from Gr. dicha, in two, from dis, twice, from dyo, two.] a combining form signifying in two or into two, asunder, as in *dicho*tomy, *dicho*gamy.

dī·çhog′à·mous, a. characterized by dichogamy.

dī·çhog′à·my, n. [dicho-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.] in botany, a condition in hermaphrodite flowers to prevent self-fertilization, as the maturing of stamens and pistils within the same flower at different times.

dī·çhō′ree, n. same as dichoreus.

dī·çhō·rē′us, n.; pl. dī·çhō·rē′ī, [L., from Gr. dichoreios, a double choreus; di-, two, and choreios, choreus, from choros, dance.] in prosody, two trochees considered as a single foot: also called dichoree and ditrochee.

dī·çhot′ō·măl, a. pertaining to or situated in a dichotomy.

dī·çhot′ō·mist, n. one who classifies by division into pairs.

dī·çhot′ō·mīze, v.t.; dichotomized, pt., pp.; dichotomizing, ppr. [Gr. dichotomein, to cut in two.]
1. to cut into two parts; to divide into pairs.
2. in astronomy, to show (a planet) as if bisected.

dī·çhot′ō·mīze, v.i. to divide into two repeatedly, as a stem or root.

dī·çhot′ō·mous, a. [LL. dichotomos; Gr. dichotomos, a cutting in two, from dichotomein, to cut in two; dicha, in two parts, and temnein, to cut.]
1. having or consisting of a pair or pairs; paired.
2. of or characterized by dichotomy.

dī·çhot′ō·mous·ly, adv. in a dichotomous manner.

dī·çhot′ō·my, n. [Gr. dichotomia, a division into two parts; dicha, in two, and temnein, to cut.]
1. division of things by pairs.
2. a division.
3. in astronomy, that phase of the moon or of a planet in which only half of its apparently flat surface seems to be illuminated.
4. in biology, a dividing or forking into parts; bifurcation.
5. in botany, a system of branching by repeated divisions into two.
6. in logic, division of a class into two opposed subclasses, as real and unreal.

dī·çhrō′iç, a. of, pertaining to, or characterized by dichroism or dichromatism.

dī′çhrō·işm, n. [di-, and Gr. chroia, color.]
1. the property possessed by some crystals of reflecting two different colors when viewed in two different directions.
2. in physics, that property of a substance which results in its showing different colors of transmitted light, depending on the length of the light path in the substance: also called dichromatism.

dī′çhrō·īte, n. same as iolite.

dī·çhrō·it′iç, a. same as dichroic.

dī·çhrō′māte, n. any salt of dichromic acid: also called bichromate.

dī·çhrō·mat′iç, a. [di-, and Gr. chrōma, color.]
1. having two colors.
2. of or characterized by dichromatism.
3. in biology, having two different colors, not characteristics of sex or age, as certain species of insects, owls, parrots, etc.

dī·çhrō′mà·tişm, n. 1. the condition or quality of being dichromatic.
2. color blindness characterized by inability to see more than two of the three primary colors, with their variants.
3. dichroism.

dī·çhrō′miç, a. 1. able to distinguish only two of the three primary colors.
2. in chemistry, (a) having two atoms of chromium per molecule; (b) designating an acid, $H_2Cr_2O_7$, which forms dichromates.

dī′çhrō·ō·sçōpe, n. [Gr. dichroos, two-colored, and skopein, to view.] an instrument for studying dichroism, especially of crystals.

dī′çhrō·ous, a. same as dichroic.

dī′çhrō·scōpe, n. same as dichrooscope.

dī·chrō·scop'ic, a. relating to the dichrooscope or to observations made by its use.
dī'cing, n. 1. the act or pastime of gambling with dice.
2. decoration of leather with stamped squares or diamonds.
3. leather so decorated.
4. a cutting into small cubes.
dī'cing house, a gambling house. [Rare.]
dick, n. a detective. [Slang.]
dick·cis'sel, n. [echoic of its cry.] the black-throated American bunting.
dick'ens, n. and interj. devil; deuce: a mild substitute for devil, as in what the dickens! [Colloq.]
Dick·en'si·ăn, a. of or characteristic of Charles Dickens or his writings.
dick'ĕr, n. [ME. dycer, from L. decuria, a military division of ten, from decem, ten.] a number or quantity of ten, especially ten hides or skins: also applied to other things; as, a dicker of gloves, etc. [Obs.]
dick'ĕr, v.t. and v.i. [from dicker, ten, ten hides, from ME. dycer.] to trade by bargaining, especially on a small scale; to barter.
dick'ĕr, n. the act of dickering. dick'ey, n.; pl. dick'eys, [from the nickname Dick.]
1. a man's detachable shirt front.
2. a woman's detachable collar or blouse front.
3. a child's bib or pinafore.
4. a donkey.
5. a small bird.
6. the driver's seat in a carriage: also dickey box.
7. a back seat or rumble seat for servants in a carriage.
Also spelled dicky.
Dick·sō'ni·ȧ, n. [named after James Dickson, Scot. botanist.] a genus of tree ferns with large fronds, having spores enclosed in a coriaceous two-valved indusium.
Dick test, [after G. F. Dick, b. 1881, Am. physician who devised it.] a skin test for determining susceptibility or immunity to scarlet fever.
dick'y, n.; pl. dick'ies, same as dickey.
dick'y·bird, n. any small bird.
dī·clin'iç, diç'li·nāte, a. [di-, and Gr. klinein, to incline.] in crystallography, having two of the axes obliquely inclined, as in an oblique rectangular prism.
dī'cli·nism, n. the quality or state of being diclinous.
dī'cli·nous, a. [di-, and Gr. klinē, a bed, from klinein, to incline, lean.]
1. having the pistils in one flower and the stamens in another, as in the oak.
2. having only stamens or only pistils, as some flowers.
dī·çoç'çous, a. [di-, and L. coccum; Gr. kokkos, a berry.] consisting of two cocci.
dī·coe'lous (-sē'), a. [di-, and Gr. koilos, hollow.] in anatomy, having both ends concave; also, possessing two cavities.
dī·çō'là, n. plural of dicolon.
dī·çō'liç, a. [L., from Gr. di-, two, and kōlon, a member, a clause.] in prosody, having two cola.
dī·çō'lon, n.; pl. dī·çō'là, a verse having two cola.
dī·çon·dyl'i·ăn, a. [Gr. dikondylos, double-knuckled; di-, two, and kondylos, a knuckle.] having two cavities in the lower back part of the skull.
dī·çot·y·lē'dŏn, n. [di-, and Gr. kotylēdōn, a cavity.] a plant with two seed leaves (cotyledons); specifically, any plant belonging to that one of the two subclasses of seed plants which is characterized by embryos with two cotyledons, as most shrubs and deciduous trees.
dī·çot·y·lē'dŏn·ous, a. of or relating to a dicotyledon or dicotyledons.
Dī·çot'y·lēs, n. the type genus of the Dicotylidæ.
Dī·çō·tyl'i·dae, n.pl. [L., from Gr. dikotylos, with two hollows.] a family of pachydermatous mammalia, the peccaries, found in tropical America. They have a glandular organ on the back, which secretes a strongly scented fluid.
dī·çou'mȧ·rin, n. a chemical compound extracted from spoiled sweet clover or prepared synthetically, used to retard blood clotting.
dī·çrā'noid, a. of or resembling plants of the genus Dicranum.
dī·çran·tē'ri·ăn, a. same as diacranterian.
Dī·çrā'num, n. [L., from Gr. dikranos, two-headed; di-, two, and kranion, the skull.] a genus of apocarpous operculate mosses, having the teeth of the peristome deeply bifid.
dī·çrō'tăl, a. same as dicrotic.
dī·çrot'iç, a. [from Gr. dikrotos, double-beating (di-, two, and krotos, rattling noise, clapping), and -ic.] of or having a double pulse beat with each heart beat; as, a dicrotic artery.
dī'çrō·tism, n. the quality or state of being dicrotic.
dī'çrō·tous, a. same as dicrotic.
Dī·çrū'ri·dae, n.pl. [L., from Gr. dikros, forked, and oura, tail.] the drongo shrikes, a subfamily of dentirostral birds, order Passeres and family Ampelidæ. They resemble crows and are found in India, China, Madagascar, and South Africa.
dic'tȧ, n. alternative plural of dictum.

differential coupling; in machinery, a form of slip coupling applied in light machinery for the purpose of regulating the velocity of the connected shaft. In the figure, A is the power shaft having the wheel a a fixed to the shaft, and b and c c loose. The pinions d d have their bearings in c c and gear in a a and b. A communicates opposite motion to b, c c remaining at rest until the friction clutch e f is engaged, making the teeth of b fulcra to d d, carrying c c, which, gearing with the wheel h on the second shaft, communicates motion to it of any degree of velocity not greater than half that of the driving shaft.

DIFFERENTIAL COUPLING

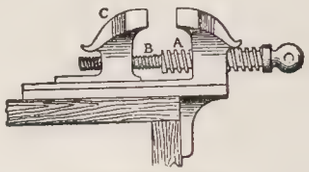
differential diagnosis; in medicine, the way and method of determining which of several related diseases or disorders is causing a particular illness, done by observing and comparing symptoms and test data.

differential duties; in political economy, duties which are not levied equally upon the products of different countries.



differential equation; in mathematics, an equation involving or containing differentials or differential coefficients.

differential gear; a certain arrangement of gears (epicyclic train) connecting two axles in the same line and dividing the driving force between them, but allowing one axle to turn faster than the other: it is used in automobile transmissions to permit a difference in axle speeds while turning curves.

differential pulley; (a) a portable differential windlass; (b) differential gearing applied to a pulley.

differential quotient; same as differential coefficient.

differential screw; a screw having two threads, one of which unwinds as the other winds; as, in the figure, the pitch of the threads at A and B being different, the jaw C moves a distance equal to the difference in the pitch of A and B at each revolution of A B.

DIFFERENTIAL SCREW

differential thermometer; a U-shaped tube, each end of which terminates in an air bulb, the bend being filled with a colored liquid. A graduated scale measures differing temperatures of the two bulbs.

DIFFERENTIAL THERMOMETER

differential winding; in electricity, the winding of two insulated parallel wires of an instrument so that there is no third current induced when equal currents are passed in opposite directions through them: used in duplex telegraphy, galvanometers, etc.

differential or Chinese windlass; a windlass with two drums of different diameters to increase the lifting power. The cylinders A and B having a common axis, in the forward motion of B, A unwinds, communicating a motion to C equal to half the difference of the surface velocities of the two cylinders.

DIFFERENTIAL WINDLASS

dif·fēr·en'tiăl, n. 1. a thing that is differential.

2. in electricity, one of two wire coils so arranged as to produce opposite polarities at some desired point of a circuit.

3. in mathematics, an infinitesimal difference between two consecutive values of a variable quantity.

4. in mechanics, a differential gear.

5. in railroading, a difference in rates, as between different routes.

partial differential; in mathematics, an increment, infinitesimally small, of a function of two or more variables resulting from a similar increment in only one of the variables.

total differential; in mathematics, the resultant of simultaneous infinitesimal increments of all of the variables.

dif·fēr·en'tiăl·ly (-shăl-), adv. 1. in a differential manner.

2. distinctively.

dif·fēr·en'ti·āte (-shi-), v.t.; differentiated, pt., pp.; differentiating, ppr. [ML. differentiare, from L. differentia, difference.]

1. to constitute a difference in or between.

2. to make unlike; to develop specialized differences in.

3. to perceive or express the difference in; to distinguish between.

4. in mathematics, to work out the differential or differential coefficient of.

dif·fēr·en'ti·āte (-shi-), v.i. 1. to become different or differentiated; to develop new, distinguishing characteristics.

2. to perceive or express a difference.

dif·fēr·en·ti·ā'tion (-shi-), n. 1. a differentiating or being differentiated.

2. in biology, the modification of tissues, organs, etc. in structure or function during the course of development.

3. in mathematics, the working out of the differential or differential coefficient.

dif·fĕr·en'ti·ā·tŏr (-shi-), n. one who or that which differentiates.

dif'fĕr·ent·ly, adv. in a different manner; variously.

dif'fĕr·ing·ly, adv. same as differently.

dif·fi·cīle', a. [Fr., from L. difficilis, difficult; now used purely as a French expression.] hard, or difficult; especially, hard to deal with, please, or satisfy: said of persons.

dif·fi·cīle'ness, n. the quality of being difficile. [Rare.]

dif'fi·cult, a. [from difficulty.]
1. hard to be made, done, or performed; not easy; attended with labor and pains; as, our task is difficult; it is difficult to ascend a steep hill or travel a bad road.
2. hard to be pleased or satisfied; not readily yielding; not compliant; unaccommodating; rigid; austere; not easily managed or persuaded; as, a difficult man; a person of a difficult temper.
3. hard to understand or expound; perplexing; as, a difficult problem.
Syn.—hard, arduous, laborious, toilsome, troublesome, unaccommodating.

dif'fi·cult, v.t. to make difficult; to hinder; to impede. [Obs.]

dif'fi·cult·āte, v.t. to make difficult. [Obs.]

dif'fi·cult·ly, adv. with difficulty. [Rare.]

dif'fi·cult·ness, n. difficulty. [Rare.]

dif'fi·cul·ty, n.; pl. dif'fi·cul·ties, [ME. difficultee; OFr. difficulte; L. difficultas, difficulty; dis- priv., and facilis, easy.]
1. the condition or fact of being difficult.
2. that which is hard to be performed or surmounted; as, we often mistake difficulties for impossibilities.
3. perplexity; trouble; whatever renders progress or execution of designs laborious.
4. objection; obstacle to belief; that which cannot be easily understood, explained, or believed; as, science often raises difficulties concerning miracles.
5. a disagreement; a quarrel; a contention.
Syn.—obstacle, obstruction, impediment, perplexity, trouble, embarrassment.
to be in difficulties; to have financial troubles.
to make a difficulty; (a) to cause a difficulty; (b) to offer objections; be reluctant; demur.

dif'fi·dence, n. [L. diffidentia, distrust, from diffidens (-entis), ppr. of diffidere, to distrust; dis- priv., and fidere, to trust.]
1. lack of self-confidence; want of confidence in one's own power, ability, correctness, or wisdom; hesitancy to assert oneself; shyness; as, fearing the critics he wrote with diffidence.
2. distrust; doubt of the power, ability, or disposition of others. [Archaic.]
Syn.—bashfulness, modesty, humility, reserve, shyness.

dif'fi·den·cy, n. diffidence. [Obs.]

dif'fi·dent, a. having or showing diffidence.
Syn.—modest, reserved, retiring, humble, bashful, shy.

dif'fi·dent·ly, adv. in a diffident manner.

dif·fin'i·tive, a. determinate; definitive. [Obs.]

dif·flā'tion, n. the act of scattering by a gust of wind. [Obs.]

dif'flu·ence, dif'flu·en·cy, n. [L. diffluo.] a flowing or falling away on all sides. [Obs.]

dif'flu·ent, a. flowing away on all sides; not fixed.

dif'form, a. [L. deformis, deformed; de-, dis- priv., and forma, form, shape.] not uniform; dissimilar.

dif·form'i·ty, n. irregularity of form; lack of uniformity.

dif·fract', v.t.; diffracted, pt., pp.; diffracting, ppr. [L. diffractus, pp. of diffringere, to break in pieces.]
1. to break or separate into parts.
2. to cause to undergo diffraction.

dif·fract', a. broken; having distinct areolae: applied to the thalli of lichens.

dif·frac'tion, n. [L. diffractus, pp. of diffringere, to break in pieces.]
1. the breaking up of a ray of light into dark and light bands or into the colors of the spectrum, caused by the interference of one part of a beam with another when the ray is deflected at the edge of an opaque object or passes through a narrow slit.
2. a similar breaking up of other kinds of wave motion, as of sound or electricity.
diffraction grating; in optics, a plate of glass or polished metal ruled with a series of very close, equidistant, parallel lines, used to produce a spectrum by the diffraction of reflected or transmitted light.
diffraction spectra; spectra produced by diffraction instead of other means, as by a prism.

dif·frac'tive, a. pertaining to or causing diffraction.

dif·fran'chīse, v.t. to disfranchise. [Obs.]

dif·fran'chīse·ment, n. disfranchisement. [Obs.]

dif·fran·gi·bil'i·ty, n. the state or quality of being diffrangible.

dif·fran'gi·ble, a. [L. diffringere, to break in pieces.] capable of diffraction or causing diffraction.

dif·fūṣ'āte, n. in dialysis, the diffusible resultant.

dif·fūse', a. [L. diffusus, pp. of diffundere, to pour in different directions; dis-, apart, and fundere, to pour.]
1. spread out; not concentrated.
2. using more words than are needed; long-winded; wordy.

dif·fūṣe', v.t. and v.i.; diffused, pt., pp.; diffusing, ppr. 1. to pour in every direction; spread out; spread widely; scatter.
2. in physics, to mix by diffusion, as gases, liquids, etc.

dif·fūsed', a. spread out; scattered; flowing.

dif·fūṣ'ed·ly, adv. in a diffused manner.

dif·fūṣ'ed·ness, n. the state or condition of being diffused.

dif·fūse'ly, adv. in a diffuse manner.

dif·fūse'ness, n. the state or quality of being diffuse; copiousness; prolixity.

dif·fūṣ'ĕr, n. one who or that which diffuses: also spelled diffusor.

dif·fū·ṣi·bil'i·ty, n. the quality of being diffusible; as, the diffusibility of clay in water.

dif·fū'ṣi·ble, a. that can be diffused.

dif·fū'ṣi·ble·ness, n. diffusibility.

dif·fū·ṣi·om'e·tĕr, dif·fū·sim'e·tĕr, n. [L. diffusio, diffusion, and metrum, a measure.] an apparatus used to measure the rate of diffusion of gases.

dif·fū'ṣion, n. [L. diffusio (-onis), diffusion. from diffusus, pp. of diffundere, to pour in different directions, to diffuse.]
1. a diffusing or being diffused; a spreading; dissemination; as, the diffusion of cultural patterns.
2. wordiness.
3. the intermingling of the molecules of two or more substances.
4. a reflection, as of light, from an irregular surface.

dif·fū'sive, a. [L. diffusus, pp. of diffundere, to diffuse.]
1. tending to diffuse.
2. characterized by diffusion.
3. diffuse.

dif·fū'sive·ly, adv. in a diffusive manner.

dif·fū'sive·ness, n. the quality or state of being diffuse.

dif·fūṣ'ŏr, n. same as diffuser.

dig, v.t.; dug or archaic and poetic digged, pt., pp.; digging, ppr. [ME. diggen, dyggen, to dig; AS. dician, to make a ditch, from dic, a ditch.]
1. to excavate; to open and break, or turn up (the earth), with a spade or other sharp instrument, or with the hand, claws, etc.
2. to make (a hole, cellar, one's way, etc.) by digging.
3. to obtain or draw forth from the earth, by digging; as, to dig gold or potatoes.
4. to break up the earth or force a passage through: usually with up; as, the mole dug up the garden.
5. to find out, as by careful study or investigation; to unearth (usually with up or out); as, we dug out the truth.
6. to thrust; to nudge; to prod; to poke.
7. to understand; to comprehend. [Slang.] to dig down; to undermine and cause to fall by digging; as, to dig down a wall.
to dig in; to mix in by covering with a layer of earth; as, to dig in fertilizers.
to dig into; (a) to penetrate by or as by digging; (b) [Colloq.] to work hard at.
to dig up; to obtain something from the earth by opening it, or uncovering the thing with a spade or other instrument, or by forcing out from the earth by a bar; as, to dig up a stone.

dig, v.i. 1. to dig the ground or any surface; to excavate.
2. to make a way by digging (through, into, under).
3. to work or study hard. [Colloq.]
to dig in; (a) to dig trenches or foxholes for cover; (b) to entrench oneself; (c) [Colloq.] to begin to work intensively.

dig, n. 1. the act of digging.
2. a nudge; a thrust; a prod; a poke. [Colloq.]
3. a sarcastic comment; a taunt; a jeer. [Colloq.]
4. in mining, same as gouge.

dī·gal'liç, a. [di- and gallic, from L. galla, the gallnut.] of or pertaining to an acid, digallic acid, the same as tannic acid.

dig'ă·mist, n. one who has married a second time.

dī·gam'mȧ, n. [Gr. digamma, digammos, the letter digamma, so called because it resembles two gammas in form; di-, two, and gamma, gamma.] the sixth letter of the early Greek alphabet, derived from the Semitic vav and having the sound of English w: it was replaced in the Latin alphabet by F.

dī·gam'mā·ted, dī·gam'māte, a. resembling or using a digamma or its representative sound.

dig'ă·mous, a. 1. married a second time.
2. pertaining to digamy.

dig'ă·my, n. [di-, and Gr. gamos, marriage.] a second legal marriage; marriage to a second husband or wife after the death or divorce of the first.

dī·gas'triç, a. [di-, and Gr. gastēr, belly.]
1. having two fleshy parts with a connecting tendon between them: the digastric muscle depresses the lower jaw and indirectly moves the tongue.
2. of or pertaining to a digastric muscle.

Dī·ġē'nē·ȧ, n.pl. [L., from Gr. digenēs, of two kinds or sexes; di-, two, and genos, kind.] a division of worms or flukes, parasitic in nature, having alternate characteristics in successive generations.

dī·ġen'e·sis, n. [L., from Gr. di-, two, and genesis, origin, generation.] in biology, successive reproduction by two processes, sexual in one generation and asexual in the next.

dī·ġē·net'iç, a. in biology, of or characterized by digenesis.

dig'e·nous, a. [L., from Gr. di-, two, and genos, kind.] bisexual.

dig'ĕr·ent, a. digesting. [Obs.]

dī'ġest, n. [ME. digest; LL. digestum, a collection of writings arranged under different heads, a code of laws, as that of Justinian, from L. digestus, pp. of digerere, to distribute, arrange.]
1. [D–] [often pl.] a collection or body of Roman laws, digested or arranged under proper titles by order of the emperor Justinian; the Pandects.
2. any collection, compilation, abridgment, or summary of laws, arranged under proper heads or titles; as, the digest of Comyn.
3. any compilation, abridgment, or summary of literary, historical, or other writings, arranged systematically.
Syn.—code, abridgment, abstract, compendium, epitome, summary, synopsis, system.

di·ġest', v.t.; digested, pt., pp.; digesting, ppr. [L. digestus, pp. of digerere, to carry apart, distribute, set in order, arrange; dis-, apart, and gerere, to carry.]
1. to distribute into suitable classes, or under proper heads or titles; to arrange systematically, usually in condensed form; to summarize; as, to digest the Roman laws or the common law.
2. [after L. digerere cibum, to cut up (dissolve) food.] to change (food) in the mouth, stomach, and intestines by the action of gastric and intestinal juices, enzymes, and bacteria so that it can be absorbed by the body.
3. to aid the digestion of (food).
4. to think over; to absorb mentally.
5 to tolerate or accept.
6. in chemistry, to soften or make soluble with heat and moisture.
7. to cause (an ulcer or wound) to suppurate. [Obs.]

di·ġest', v.i. 1. to be digested.
2. to digest food.

di·ġest'ănt, a. and n. same as digestive.

di·ġest'ed·ly, adv. in a well-arranged manner.

di·ġest'ĕr, di·ġest'ŏr, n. 1. one who digests or makes a digest.
2. one who digests his food.
3. a medicine or article of food that aids digestion.
4. a heavy metal container in which substances are heated or cooked to soften them or extract soluble elements from them.

di·ġest·i·bil'i·ty, n. the quality of being digestible.

di·ġest'i·ble, a. capable of being digested.

di·ġes'tion, n. [ME. digestioun; OFr. digestion; L. digestio, digestion, an orderly distribution.]

1. a digesting or being digested: said of food.
2. the ability to digest food.
3. the absorption of ideas; understanding.

di·ġest′ive, a. [LL. digestivus, from L. digestus, pp. of digerere, to digest.] of, for, or aiding digestion.

di·ġest′ive, n. any substance, etc. that aids digestion.

di·ġest′ŏr, n. see digester.

di·ġes′tūre, n. concoction; digestion. [Obs.]

dig′ġa·ble, a. capable of being dug.

digged (digd), original past tense and past participle of dig, now archaic or poetic.

dig′ġēr, n. 1. one who or that which digs.
2. a tool or machine for digging.
3. the digging part of such a machine.
4. [D–] a member of any of several tribes of Indians in the western United States who dug up roots for food.
5. a digger wasp.

dig′ġēr wăsp, any of various wasps that dig a nest in the ground or in wood.

dig′ġings, n.pl. 1. materials dug out.
2. [often construed as sing.] a place where digging or mining, especially gold mining, is carried on.
3. originally, a gold miner's camp; hence, the place where one lives; quarters. [Slang.]

dight (dīt), v.t.; dight or dighted, pt., pp.; dighting, ppr. [ME. dighten; AS. dihtan, to set in order, arrange, from L. dictare, to say.]
1. to prepare; to put in order; hence, to dress or put on; to array; to adorn.
2. to equip.
3. to have sexual intercourse with. [Obs.]
[Archaic and Poet. in senses 1, 2.]

dig′it, n. [L. digitus, a finger.]
1. a finger or toe.
2. any one of the ten Arabic numerals or symbols, 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, by combinations of which all numbers are expressed: so called from counting on the fingers.
3. the measure of a finger's breadth, or three-fourths of an inch.
4. in astronomy, the twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon: a term used to express the quantity of an eclipse; as, an eclipse of six digits is one which hides one-half of the disk.

dig′it, v.t. to point at with the finger. [Obs.]

dig′i·tăl, a. 1. of, pertaining to, or resembling a digit or digits.
2. digitate.
3. performed with the finger.
4. using numbers that are digits to represent all the variables involved in calculation.

dig′i·tăl, n. 1. a finger.
2. a key played with a finger, as on a piano or similar musical instrument.
3. the final articulation of a spider's pedipalpus.

dig′i·tăl cŏm·pūt′ēr, a computer that uses numbers to perform logical and numerical calculations, usually in a binary system.

dig·i·tal′i·form, a. in botany, like the corolla of Digitalis.

dig·i·tal′in, n. [from digitalis, and -in.] a poisonous crystalline glucoside, $C_{35}H_{56}O_{14}$, obtained from the seed of the digitalis.

dig·i·tal′is (or -tā′lis), n. [ML. digitalis, foxglove: so named by Fuchs (1542) from its thimblelike flowers, after the G. name fingerhut, lit., finger hat, i.e., thimble.]
1. [D-] a genus of plants of the figwort family, with long spikes of thimblelike flowers; foxglove.
2. the dried leaves of the purple foxglove.
3. a medicine made from these leaves, used as a heart stimulant.

dig′i·tăl·ism, n. a condition of the body caused by excessive use of digitalis.

dig′it·ăl·ly, adv. with the finger or fingers.

dig′i·tāte, v.t. to point out, as with the finger. [Rare.]

dig′i·tāte, a. 1. having separate fingers or toes.
2. like a digit; fingerlike.
3. in botany, having fingerlike divisions, as some leaves.

dig′i·tā·ted, a. same as digitate.

dig′i·tāte·ly, adv. in a digitate manner.

dig·i·tā′tion, n. in botany, (a) a digitate condition; (b) a fingerlike part.

dig·i·ti-, [from Latin digitus, finger.] a combining form meaning finger or toe.

dig′i·ti·form, a. [digiti-, and L. forma, form.] in the shape of a finger or arranged like fingers; digitate.

Dig·i·tig′rā·dă, n.pl. [digiti-, and L. gradi, to walk.] the second tribe, in Cuvier's arrangement, of Carnivora, including those animals which walk on the toes only, as the lion, tiger, cat, weasel, civet, hyena, etc.: distinguished from the Plantigrada, which walk on the broad sole of the foot.

dig′i·ti·grāde, a. 1. walking on the toes with the heels not touching the ground, as cats, dogs, horses, etc.
2. of, or relating to the Digitigrada.

dig′i·ti·grāde, n. any animal that is digitigrade.

dig′i·ti·nērved, a. [digiti-, and L. nervus, nerve.] in botany, having radiate nervation from the apex of the leaf.

dig″i·ti·pär′tīte, a. in botany, parted like the extended fingers.

dig′i·tīze, v.t. to finger; to handle. [Rare.]

dig·i·tox′in, n. [*digi*talis, and toxin.] a glucoside, $C_{41}H_{64}O_{13}$, extracted from digitalis leaves, like digitalis in physiological action, but more potent.

dig′i·tūle, n. [L. digitulus, dim. of digitus, a finger.] in zoology, a small finger or toe.

dig′i·tus, n.; pl. dig′i·tī, [L.] in entomology, the final articulation of the tarsus.

dī·glad′i·āte, v.t. [L. digladiari, to fight for life or death.] to fence; to quarrel. [Rare.]

dī·glad′i·ā′tion, n. a combat with swords; a quarrel. [Obs.]

dī′glot, a. [Gr. diglōssos, speaking two languages; di-, two, and glōssa, tongue.] in or using two languages; bilingual.

dī′glot, n. a diglot edition of a book.

dī·glot′tism, n. the use of two languages; bilingualism. [Rare.]

dī′glyph, n. [Gr. diglyphos, doubly indented; di-, two, and glyphein, to hollow out, carve, cut.] in architecture, an imperfect triglyph having two channels instead of three.

dig·nā′tion, n. the act of believing worthy or of conferring honor. [Obs.]

dīgne (dīn or dēn), a. worthy; proud. [Obs.]

dig″ni·fi·çā′tion, n. the act of dignifying; exaltation; promotion.

dig′ni·fīed, a. having or showing dignity; as, a dignified bearing.

dig′ni·fy, v.t.; dignified, pt., pp.; dignifying, ppr. [OFr. dignifier, to dignify, from L. dignus, worthy, and facere, to make.]
1. to invest with honor or dignity; to exalt in rank; to promote; to make worthy.
2. to give a high-sounding name to; as, he dignified cowardice with the name of prudence.
Syn.—exalt, elevate, prefer, advance, honor, adorn, ennoble.

dig′ni·tā·ry, n.; pl. dig′ni·tā·ries, [L. dignitas, dignity.] a person holding a high, dignified position or office, as in a church.

dig′ni·ty, n.; pl. dig′ni·ties, [ME. dignitee; OFr. dignite; L. dignitas, worth, merit, from dignus, worthy.]
1. worthiness; nobility.
2. high repute; honor.
3. the degree of worth, repute, or honor.
4. a high position, rank, or title.
5. a dignitary. [Rare.]
6. loftiness of appearance or manner; stateliness.
7. calm self-possession and self-respect.
8. a general maxim or principle. [Obs.]
9. in astrology, an advantage which a planet has on account of its being in some particular place of the zodiac, or in a particular station in respect to other planets.
to stand upon one's dignity; to have or assume an exalted idea of one's own importance, especially if offended.

dig·nō′tion, n. distinguishing mark; distinction. [Obs.]

dī·gŏ·neū′tiç, a. having broods twice a year: said of insects.

dig′ō·nous, a. [di-, and Gr. gōnia, an angle.] in botany, having two angles, as a stem.

dī′gram, n. a digraph.

dī′grąph, n. [di-, and Gr. graphein, to write.] a combination of two letters to represent one simple sound, as read, show, gra*ph*ic, etc.

dī·graph′iç, a. of or pertaining to a digraph.

di·gress′, v.i.; digressed (-grest), pt., pp.; digressing, ppr. [L. digressus, pp. of digredi, to go apart, separate; dis-, apart, and gradi, to go, step.]
1. literally, to step or go from the way or road; hence, to depart temporarily from the main subject in talking or writing; to ramble.
2. to stray from the right way or common track; to deviate. [Obs.]

di·gress′, n. a digression. [Obs.]

di·gres′sion (-gresh′un), n. [ME. digression; L. digressio, a parting, separating, from digressus, pp. of digredi, to go apart, separate.]
1. a digressing; a temporary departure from the main subject in talking or writing.
2. deviation from a regular course; as, the digression of a ship.
3. departure from virtue; transgression. [Rare.]
4. in astronony, the apparent distance of the inferior planets, Mercury and Venus, from the sun; elongation.

di·gres′sion·ăl, a. same as digressive.

di·gress′ive, a. departing from the main subject; given to digression; digressing.

di·gress′ive·ly, adv. by way of digression.

dīgue (dig), n. a dike.

Dī·ġyn′i·à, n.pl. [L., from Gr. di-, two, and gynē, a woman, a female.] in the Linnaean system, an order of plants having two pistils.

dī·ġyn′i·ăn, dig′yn·ous, a. in botany, having two pistils.

dī·hē′drăl, a. [from di-, and Gr. hedra, a seat, base.]
1. having two plane faces or sides; as, a dihedral angle.
2. having wings that form a dihedral angle with each other, as some airplanes.
3. in solid geometry, formed by two intersecting planes.

dī·hē′drăl, n. 1. a dihedral angle.
2. the angle between either wing of an airplane and the horizontal plane of its transverse axis.

DIHEDRAL ANGLE
angle formed by planes MWON and MWXY dī·hex·ag′ō·năl, a. [di-, and Gr. hexagōnos, six-cornered; hex, six, and gōnia, corner.] twelve-sided; doubly hexagonal.
