DICTIONARY
OF THE
ENGLISH LANGUAGE:

IN WHICH

The WORDS are deduced from their ORIGINALS,
Explained in their DIFFERENT MEANINGS,

AND

Authorized by the NAMES of the WRITERS in whose Works they are found.

Abstracted from the FOLIO EDITION,

By SAMUEL JOHNSON, A. M.

To which is prefixed,

A GRAMMAR of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

P R E F A C E.

HAVING been long employed in the study and cultivation of the English language, I lately published a dictionary like those compiled by the academies of Italy and France, for the use of such as aspire to exactness of criticism or elegance of style.

But it has been since considered that works of that kind are by no means necessary to the greater number of readers, who, seldom intending to write or presuming to judge, turn over books only to amuse their leisure, and to gain degrees of knowledge suitable to lower characters, or necessary to the common business of life: these know not any other use of a dictionary than that of adjusting orthography, or explaining terms of science or words of infrequent occurrence, or remote derivation.

For these purposes many dictionaries have been written by different authors, and with different degrees of skill; but none of them have yet fallen into my hands by which even the lowest expectations could be satisfied. Some of their authors wanted industry, and others literature: some knew not their own defects, and others were too idle to supply them.

For this reason a small dictionary appeared yet to be wanting to common readers: and, as I may without arrogance claim to myself a longer acquaintance with the lexicography of our language than any other writer has had, I shall hope to be considered as having more experience at least than most of my predecessors, and as more likely to accommodate the nation with a vocabulary of daily use. I therefore offer to the publick an abstract or epitome of my former work.

In

The P R E F A C E.

In comparing this with other dictionaries of the same kind it will be found to have several advantages.

I. It contains many words not to be found in any other.

II. Many barbarous terms and phrases by which other dictionaries may vitiate the style are rejected from this.

III. The words are more correctly spelled, partly by attention to their etymology, and partly by observation of the practice of the best authors.

IV. The etymologies and derivations, whether from foreign languages or from native roots, are more diligently traced, and more distinctly noted.

V. The senses of each word are more copiously enumerated, and more clearly explained.

VI. Many words occurring in the elder authors, such as Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton, which had been hitherto omitted, are here carefully inserted; so that this book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers.

VII. To the words, and to the different senses of each word, are subjoined from the large dictionary the names of those writers by whom they have been used; so that the reader who knows the different periods of the language, and the time of its authors, may judge of the elegance or prevalence of any word, or meaning of a word; and without recurring to other books, may know what are antiquated, what are unusual, and what are recommended by the best authority.

The words of this dictionary, as opposed to others, are more diligently collected, more accurately spelled, more faithfully explained, and more authentically ascertained. Of an abstract it is not necessary to say more; and I hope, it will not be found that truth requires me to say less.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, wow, flowing, lowness.

The sounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiogist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow view I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their sound, and those who know it not.

OF VOWELS.

A.

A has three sounds, the slender, open, and broad.

A slender is found in most words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e misum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pais, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, gloss.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, vault; and we still say fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustick pronunciation; as maun for man, baund for band.

The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is sometimes found in Latin words not completely naturalised or assimilated, but is no English diphthong; and is more properly expressed by single e, as Cesar, Enas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scene; or short, as in cellar, separate, celebrate, mèn, thèn.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, relènt, mèdlr, reptile, serpènt, cellar, cessation, blèssing, fill, fèlling, dèbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bàn, bāne; cūn, cāne; pīn, pīne; tūn, tūne; rōb, rōbe; pōp, pōpe; fīr, fīre; cūr, cūre; tūb, tūbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; wildness, wildnessè; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the silent e.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glōve, live, give.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shopen, shotten, thistle, participle, metre, lucre.

E forms a diphthong with a; as near; with i, as dein, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is founded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is founded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound long, as fine; and short, as fin.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thin, thine.

I is often founded before r as a short u; as firt, first, skirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is founded as the double ee; except friend, which is founded as frënd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are founded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, obedient, corrēding; or short, as blōck, knock, oblique, lōil.

Women is pronounced wimēn.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as economy; but oe being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are founded, with only e, economy.

With i, as cil, foil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, boat, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowl, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head; sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed: bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of or nor ur; but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, faveur.

U.

U is long in use, confusion; or short, as us, confession.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations

A GRAMMAR OF THE

the force of the w consonant, as quaff, quest, quit, quite, languish; sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guest, guise, buy.

U is followed by c in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, synagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, destroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayed; pray, prayer; say, sayer; day, days

Y being the Saxon vowel y, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as flag, frog.

OF CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of f; as sincerely, centrick, century, cir- cular, cistern, city, scicity: before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, conavity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by f, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captiv from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is founded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, cholera. Arch is commonly founded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like sh, as machine, chaise.

C, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write sick, block, which were originally sticke, blocke, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, craft.

D

D is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, dress; and o, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the femivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously founded before a liquid, as flask, fy, freckle. It has an unvariable sound, except that of is sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, snug, song, frog.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geeze, get, gearaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnash, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, gipsy.

Gb in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, sought, spoken tho', rite, soute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, fough, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gb had the force of a consonant, deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before b, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, as hat, horse.

It seldom, perhaps never, begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hostler, honour, bumble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, skeptick, for so it should be written, not sceptick.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound.

K is never doubled; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as cockle, pickle.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kill, will, full. These words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e first grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlæf, a loaf, or bread; hlæford, a lord; but this pronunciation is now disused.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, scuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as damm, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans sound with B.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, like f, if it follows a consonant, as and between m and t, as tempt. conversion.

Pb is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, Philip. It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as rosy; and in those words, bosom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, présent, présent, damsel, casement.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cw, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer. It is the peculiar quality of f, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which f is comprised, x being only ks, and z a hard or gross f. This f is therefore termed by grammarians suæ potestatis littera; the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages:

R

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues. R is mute in isle, island, demesne, viscount.

The Saxons used often to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rb is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhus, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, sepulchre.

S has a hissing sound, as sibilation, sister.

A single s seldom ends any word, except the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, distresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus; the close being always either in se, as house, horse, or in ss, as grass, drss, bliss, less, anciently grasse, dressé.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of si, as salvation, except an f goes before, as question, excepting likewise derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, these, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be resolved into ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frosty winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hw, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and sometimes in wholesome, wh is founded like a simple b.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a consonant, as ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rosy youth.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound, as its name izzard or shard expresses, of an s uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have supposed orthoepy, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute,

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The cursory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskilfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider these as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terror to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

At lengð Erasmus, ðat grêt iŋgurd nâm,
Δe glori of ðe præsthûd, and ðe zâm,
Stemmd ðe wild torrent of a barb'rous âg,
And drôv ðôs hõli Vandals ôff ðe stâg.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?

Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villanous despight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally,
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.

Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.

But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.

What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service
swerve.

Vnþankful wræt, said hÿ, iz ðis ðe mjð,
Wiþ wið her soberain mæri ðou dust qujt?

Ðj lÿ rÿ sæbed bj her græsius dÿd;
But ðou dust wen wiþ vilænus dispÿt,
Tu blot her honor, and her hevnly list.
Dÿ, ræðer dÿ, ðæn so disloialj,
Dÿm of her hið dezert, or sÿm so list.
Fæir deþ it iz tu pun mæw ræm; ðæn dÿ.
Dÿ, ræðer dÿ, ðæn æber luv disloialj.

But if tu luv disloialtj it bj,
Sal I ðæn hæit her ðat from deðez dær
Mÿ brougt? ah! far bj suð reproç from mj.
Wæt kan I læs du ðæn he luv ðerfær,
Sib I her du ræward kanot restær?
Dÿ ræðer dÿ, and dÿjz du her sêrb,
Dÿjz her sêrb, and luvig her adær.
Dÿ lÿ rÿ gæit, ðj lÿ rÿ dub dezert;
Dÿ, ræðer dÿ, ðæn æber from her sêrbis swærb.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme, which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whensoever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a pursehood, made of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set another piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day.

But þenscöever you hav' occasion to trubble ðeir patienc', or to coom among ðem beeing trubled, it is better to stand upon your gard, ðan to trust to ðeir gentlenes. For ðe saf-gard of your fac', þis ðey hav' most mind' unto, provid' a pursehood, mad' of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, þis for mor' saf'ty is to be lined against ð' eminent parts wit woollen cloæ. First cut a pecc' about an inç and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer; þis beeing sowed in his plac', join unto it two port peeces of the sam breadæ under ðe eys, for the bals of ðe cheeks, and then set an oðer pecc' about ðe breadz of a shilling against the top of ðe nose. At oðer tim's, þen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may serve ðowg it be in ðe heat of ðe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus :

— — — All the erth
Shall then be paradys, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography ; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus :

Yer Fádher heitsh art in héven, halloed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdým cým, dhyi will bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers ; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for beneur and labour, red for read in the preter-tense, fais for says, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm ; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified ; as horse, horses ; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more ; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article ; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un ; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before b ; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent b, as, an herb, an honest man : but otherwise a ; as,

A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse. Shakespeare.

THE has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man ; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

The is used in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryden.

Many words are used without articles ; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindness.

OF NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom.	Magister,	a Master, the Master.
Gen.	Magistri,	of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.
Dat.	Magistro,	to a Master, to the Master.
Acc.	Magistrum,	a Master, the Master.
Voc.	Magister,	Master, O Master.
Abl.	Magistro,	from a Master, from the Master.

[er.

Plural.

Nom.	Magistri,	Masters, the Masters.
Gen.	Magistorum,	of Masters, of the Masters.
Dat.	Magistris,	to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc.	Magistros,	Masters, the Masters.
Voc.	Magistri,	Masters, O Masters.
Abl.	Magistris,	from Masters, from the Masters.

[ers.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus :

Master,	Gen. Masters.	Plur. Masters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's passions; the rabble's insolence; the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise, the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuter in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned, the sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ oris, or any other Latin genitive.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined smith, a smith; Gen. smithes, of a smith; Plur. smithes, or smithas, smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a syllable than the original word; knights, for knighi's, in Chaucer; leaves, for leaves, in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the same with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; sister, sisters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwise be founded, as after ch, s, sh, x, z; after c founded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, swine, and more anciently eyen and shoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonic dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, mischief, puff, cuff, dwarf, bandkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louse, mice from mouse, geese from goose, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have no genitives; but we say, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits against the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' house may be said for the house of Lords; but such phrases are not now in use; and surely an English ear rebels against them.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

Of ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as, fair, fairer, fairest; lovely, lovelier, loveliest; sweet, sweeter, sweetest; low, lower, lowest; high, higher, highest.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; near, nearer, next; much, more, most; many (or moe), more (for moer), most (for moest); late, later, latest or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding most, as nether, nethermost; outer, outmost; under, undermost; up, upper, uppermost; fore, former, foremost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as topmost, southmost.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by terminations, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftener used than the superlative most, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Poly-syllables, or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Disyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as fulsome, toilsome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as missive; in d, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in ny, as skinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language subjected so little and so lately to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So shady is compared by Milton.

She in shadiest covert hid,

Tun'd her nocturnal note. Parad. Lost.

And virtuous.

What she wills to say or do,

Seems wisest, virtuouslest, discreetest, best.

Parad. Lost.

So trifling by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the fameusest

Of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Inventive, by Ascham.

Those have the inventivest heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Wretched, by Johnson.

The wretched are the contemners of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. B Johnson.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great king hath pow'rfullest to fend

Against us from about his throne.

Parad. Lost.

The termination in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish, or having a little taste of salt: they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

Nom. It They } Applied to Oblique. Its Them } neuters or things.

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from he, his, from she, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes.

Our, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as These are our books. These books are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry: they are used as ours and yours, when they are referred to a substantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the possessives likewise of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever.

Whether is only used in the nominative and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as Whether of these is left I know not. Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete,

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

In all cases,	}	Singular.	Plural.
		This	These
		That	Those
		Other	Others
		Whether

The plural others is not used but when it is referred to a substantive preceding, as I have sent other horses. I have not sent the same horses, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for, and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as, I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, is supposed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his self, it self, their selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say, He came himself; Himself shall do this; where himself cannot be an accusative.

Of the VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action, may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters; as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and simple preterite; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him.

The Imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as, Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die?

Do is thus used only in the simple tenses.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.

I was walked out, exieram; Je m'e-tois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, dolco. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as, We were walking, ἐπυγχανομεν περιπαλῶτες, I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, ara excluduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved.

Preterite. To have been loved.

Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do, thou dost, he doth;

Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did, thou didst, he did;

Plur. We did, ye did, they did.

Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.

Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou, let him do;

Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do, thou do, he do;

Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

The rest are as in the indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.

Participle present. Doing.

Participle preter. Done.

Do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love; simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,

at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of versification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers after if, though, ere, before, whether, except, unless, whatsoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

Of IRREGULAR VERBS.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Johnson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fish't wak't, dwell't, smel't, for plac'd, snatch'd, fish'd, wak'd, dwell'd, smel'd; or plac'd, snatched, fish'd, waked, dwell'd, smell'd.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as, crept, felt, dwelt; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as wext: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus, kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced; as, read, led, spread, sted, bred, bid, hid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to spread, to sted, to stread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, beat, sweat, sit, quit, smit, writ, bit, bit, met, shot; from the verbs, to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to beat, to sweat, to sit, to quit, to smite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to send, to vend, to gird.

The participle preterite or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed; as, been, taken, given, slain, known, from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, hidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, hid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, srown, hrown, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, srow'd, hrow'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to sow, to srow, to hrow, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite; as, write, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote, though wrote may be used in poetry.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strike, stick, sing, sting, ring, wring, spring, swing, drink, sink, shrink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle passive, give won, spun, begun, swum, struck, stuck, sung, stung, sung, rung, swung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunk, shrunk, hung, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, strucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make, fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as tached, cached, beseeched, caught, worked.

3. Take, shake, forsake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, swear, tear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smite, write, bide, abide, ride, choose, chuse, tread, get, beget, forget, seth, make in both preterite and participle took, forsook, woke, awoke, stood, broke, spoke, bore, shore, favore, tore, wore, wove, clove, srove, throve, drove, shone, rose, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, chose, rode, got, begot, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, share, sware, tare, ware, clawe, gat, begat, forgot, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive are many of them formed by en, as taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chosen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, sheared, weaved, leaved, abided, seth.

4. Give, bid, sit, make in the preterite, gave, bade, sate; in the participle passive, given, bidden, sitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, throw, blew, crew, flew, flew, saw, lay; their participles passive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, and the participle gone.

OF DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errors.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to strike, I strick or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frightening, fighting, striking.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs: in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened; as, a house, to house; brags, to braze; glass, to glaze; grass, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, heartly; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree; as, delight, delightfulsome; game, gamesome; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; hand, handsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as, worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wise, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English primitive is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indirect, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untrueb, untaught, unbandsome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unassisting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unfiging; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfertility, imperfection, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfect; unavoid, incivility; unactive, inactive.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdain; chance, hap, mischance, mishap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to mis-employ; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of like or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly, added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification; as, beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolfish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a billock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, pickrel; this is a French termination; a goose, a goslin; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thonkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, sup, sip, soop, sop, sippet, where, besides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; spit, spout; babe, baby, booby, būnuk; great pronounced long, especially if with a stronger sound, great; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as, white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skilful, skilfulness, unskilfulness; godhead, manhood, maid-enhead, widowhood, knighthood, priest-hood, likenood, salihood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as, long, length; strong, strength; broad, wide, breadth, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; slow, slowness; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, drought; young, youth; and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later moor, after moor; commonly spoken and written later math, after math; steal, stealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth from ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written flighth, frighth, only that custom prevails, lest h should be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, wreath, wrath, broth, froth, breath, sooth, worth, light, right, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from foy or foy, spry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship, imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

Thus worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as, kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bairywick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

There are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, batoo, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, butter, a kind of glutinous composition for food. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin targo, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twig, twiteb, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibill.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually implies the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nes and the English nose; and nesse, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants ns taken from nasus, and transposed that they may the better correspond, sn denotes nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze, snore, snort, sneer, snicker, snot, snivel, snite, snuff, snuffle, snaffle, snarle, snudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin sinuo, as snake, snak, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snateb, snib, snub.

Bl implies a blast; as, blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blast one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluster, blurt, blister, blab, bladder, bleb, blister, blabber-lip, blubber-cheek, bleed, blee- herrings, blast, blaze, to blow, that is, blow, blossom, bloom; and perhaps blood and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more frigidulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with str intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from $\sigma\tau\rho\nu\upsilon\mu\iota$, or strenuus; as, strong, strength, strew, strike, streak, stroke, stripe, strive, strife, struggle, strout, strut, strutch, strait, strict, streight, that is narrow, restrain, stress, disstress, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, stride, straddle.

St in like manner implies strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preserve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin stis: for example, stand, stay, that is, to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose; stop, to stuff, sist, to stay, that is to stop; a stay, that is, an obstacle; stick, stut, stutter, stammer, stagger, sickle, slick, flake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stom, sing, to sting, sink, sitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp; stow, to stow, to bestow, steward, or stoward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still adj. and still adv. stale, stout, sturdy, stead, stout, stallion, stiff, stark dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stone, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, standard, a stated measure, stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denotes something firm and fixed.

Thr implies a more violent degree of motion, as thrust, thrush, throng, throb, throng, threaten, thral, thruce.

Wr imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as wry, to wreathe, wrest, wrestle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

Sw imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as, sway, swag, to sway, swagger, swerve, sweat, swamp, swail, swim, swing, swift, sweet, switch, swinge.

Nor is there much difference of sm in smoorbe, smug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word; small, smell, smack, smother, smart; a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke stroke as with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shewn by r.

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, elamber, clammy, clasp, to clasp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, close, to close, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluffer.

Sp implies a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo or separo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, spitter, spatter.

Sl denotes a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, sly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise ash, in crash, rash, gash, flash, clasp, lash, sash, plash, trash, indicates something acting more nimbly and sharply. But ush, in crush, rush, gush, flush, blush, brush, hush, push, implies something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Thus in sling, sting, ding, saving, cling, fmg, twing, fling, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, sink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtle by reason of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, zangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, stumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close u implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congeries of consonants nbl, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, scamble, scramble, wamble, amble; but in these there is something acute.

In nimble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, ar an acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, unless in may imply the subtlety of the dissipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the later with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, braul, wraul, yaul, spaul, screek, spruck, scrick, scarp, sprivel, wrinkle, crack, crash, elash, gnash, plash, crush, busb, biff, fiff, whiff, soft, jarr, burl, curl, whirl, buz, busie, spindle, dwindle, twine, twiss, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompositions, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as, grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed, spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatior; suppress, supprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallo, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, vespa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, do- mo,

μο, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεύγος; over, upper, super, ὑπερ; am, sum, εἰμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Æolic, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as παῖς, psad, ax, acbs, mit, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochtcr, mickle, mingle, moon, sear, gravo, graff, to grave, to scrape, whole, heal, from πάγος, ἀξίνη, μέλα, πορθμος, μεγάλος, μινύω, μήνη, ξηρός, γραφω, ἔλος, εἰλέω. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins.

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to screeuw; excorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish Bisp; epistola, pistle; hospitale, spittle; Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Elisabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p passing into b, as in bishop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle; but for the old bar or bare, we now say bear; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for stanc, stone; apugna, braun, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, patun; lege, law; ἀλοπήξ, sex, cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fill; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piscis, fish; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; mustum, stum; defensio, fence; dispensator, spencer; asculto, escouter, Fr. scout; excalpo, scrape, restoring l instead of r, and hence serap, scrabble, serawl; exculpo, scoop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stonn'd; stomachus, masu; offendo, fined; obstipo, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, beeware, swary, warn, warning; for the Latin v consonant formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcer, ulcer, fore, and hence sorry, sorrow, ferroavful; ingenium, engine, gin; scalenus, leaning, unless you would rather derive it from κλίω, whence incline; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a coverl.

There are syncopes somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homms, femme, nom, from homine, fæmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; πρόηξιον, pot; κυνελλα, cur; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, specular, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as, amita, aunt; spiritus, sprite; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquiesco, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabilum, stable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, rawl, warawl, braawl, rable, brable; quæstio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable, rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, sure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, suddain, soon; superare, to soar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as, magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, pain; prædarii, reach.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as xuzianó; tyrk, cburch; presbyter, priest; sacristanus, sexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φάγας, beech, f changed into b, and g into cb, which are letters near-a-kin; frigeſco, freeze; frigeſco, freſh, ſe into ſb, as above in biſhop, fiſh, ſo in ſcapla, ſkiſſ, ſkip, and refrigeſco, refreſh; but vireſco, freſh; phlebotamus, ſcam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; ſcutifer, ſquire; penitentia, penance; ſanctuarium, ſanctuary, ſentry; quæſitio, choſe; perquiſitio, purebaſe; anguilla, eel; inſula, iſle, ile, iſland, iland; inſuletta, iſlet, ilet; eyght and more contractedly ey, whence Oryſney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to ſcan; namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the uſual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not uſe x, writ ſamen, or ſcanen is contracted into ſcan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into ſeiam; for which we ſay ſavarme, by inserting r to denote the murmuring; theſaurus, ſtore; ſedile, ſtool; ædè, wet; ſudo, sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; ſuccus, juice; cattena, chain; caliga, calga; clauſe, clauſe, Fr. beſe; extinguo, ſtanch, ſquench, quench, ſint; foras, ſorb; ſpecies, ſpice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; ædov, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, ſcrape, ſcrabble, ſcrrawl; extravagus, ſtray, ſtraggel; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; ſevero, ſavear; ſtridulus, ſtrill; procurator, proxy; pulſo; to puſh; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vaneſco, vanui, wane; ſyllabare, to ſpell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may ſeem harſher, yet may not be rejected, for it at leaſt appears, that ſome of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whoſe etymology is acknowledged by every body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Elisabeth, Betty, Beſs; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Marwokin, Marcekes; Matthæus, Mattha, Mathevo; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Eill, Wikin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, floſ; geroſilo, Ital. girifice, giſofer, Fr. giſliſtwer, which the vulgar call julyſtwer, as if derived from the month July; petroſelinum, parſly; portulaca, purſlain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddey; peſticum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to car-twig, as if it took its name from the ear; annullus geminus, a gimnal, or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choſes, kickſhaws. Since the origin of theſe, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus diſfigured many, eſpecially as they ſo much affected monosyllables; and, to make them found the ſofter, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, tranſpoſing, and ſoftening them.

But while we derive theſe from the Latin, I do not mean to ſay, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Daniſh, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and ſome taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The ſame word according to its different ſignifications, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at leaſt if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fiſh, from perca; but perch, a meaſure, from pertica, and likewiſe to perch. To ſpell is from ſyllaba; but ſpell, an enchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are ſo fixed in lands that none can paſs them againſt the maſter's will, from expello; and ſpell, a meſſenger, from epiſtola; whence geſpel, good-ſpel, or god-ſpel. Thus freeſe, or freeze, from frigeſco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zephyrus; but freeſe, for clot, from Friſia, or perhaps from frigeſco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at leaſt ſerving inſtead of compounds, and comprising the ſignification of more words than one; as, from ſcrip and roll comes ſcroll; from proud and dance, prance; from ſt of the verb ſtay, or ſtand and ſtout, is made ſtout; from ſtout and bardey, ſturdy; from ſp of ſpit or ſpew, and out, comes ſpout; from the ſame ſp with the termination in, is ſpin; and adding out, ſpin out; and from the ſame ſp, with it, is ſpit, which only differs from ſpout in that it is ſmaller, and with leſs noiſe and force; but ſpatter is, becauſe of the obſcure u, ſomething between ſpit and ſpout; and by reaſon of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noiſe, but obſcurely conſuſed: whereas ſpatter, on account of the ſharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more diſtinct noiſe, in which it chiefly differs from ſpatter. From the ſame ſp, and the termination ark, comes ſpark, ſignifying a ſingle emission of fire with a noiſe; namely, ſp the emission, ar the more acute noiſe, and k, the mute conſonant, intimates its being ſuddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing, and lastly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exultation. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastick force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: sprout, of a grosser sound, imports a fatter or crosser bud; sprig, of a slenderer sound, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or thrust, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trout, and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonic; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted it; and Johnson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as, Thou sleepest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit the Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buonmattei; that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnson though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoepey, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification fication is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of disyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as childish, kingdom, ácted, toilsome, lover, scóffer, faírer, foremost, zéalous, fulness, gódly, méekly, ártist.

2. Disyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begét, to beséem, to bestów.

3. Of disyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to descánt, a descánt; to cement, a cément; to contráct, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfúme.

4. All disyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as willow, wallow, except allow; in le, as bátte, bible; in ish, as bánish; in ck, as cámbrick, cássock; in ter, as to bátter; in age, as cóurage; in en, as fásten; in et, as quíet, accent the former syllable.

5. Disyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Disyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as compríse, escápe; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appéase, revéal; or ending in two consonants, as atténd; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Disyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as appláuse; except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Trisyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lowelinefs, ténderness, contémner, wágonner, phýsical, befpáttér, commenting, comméding, assurance.

9. Trisyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion, accent the first.

10. Trisyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as cóuntenance, cóntinence, ármament, imminent, élegant, propágate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connivéence, acquáintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promúlgate.

11. Trisyllables ending in y, as éntity, spécify, liberty, víctory, subsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trisyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as légible, théatre, except discíples, and some words which have a position, as exámple, épístle.

13. Trisyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plénitude.

14. Trisyllables ending in ator or atour, as créatour, or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endéavour; or a vowel before two consonants, as doméstick, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trisyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiesce, repartée, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incontinently, commendable, communicableness.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as amicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combústible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, volúptuous.

20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as pusillánimity, actívity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alóft, créate; or trochaick, as hóly, léfty.

Our iambick measure comprises verses

Of four syllables,

Most good, most fair,

Or things as rare,

To call you's lost;

For all the cost

Words can bestow,

So poorly show

Upon your praise,

That all the ways

Sense hath, comes short. Drayton.

With ravish'd ears

The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of six,

This while we are abroad,

Shall we not touch our lyre?

Shall we not sing an ode?

Shall that holy fire,

In us that strongly glow'd,

In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost Peak

A while we do remain,

Amongst the mountains bleak,

Expos'd to sleet and rain,

No sport our hours shall break,

To exercise our vein.

Who though bright Phœbus' beams

Refresh the southern ground,

And though the princely Thames

With beauteous nymphs abound,

And by old Camber's streams

Be many wonders found;

Yet many rivers clear

Here glide in silver swathes,

And what of all most dear,

Buxton's delicious baths,

Strong ale and noble cheer,

T'assist widge breem winter's scathes.

In places far or near,

Or famous, or obscure,

Where wholesom is the air,

Or where the most impure,

All times, and every where,

The muse is still in ure. Drayt.

Of eight, which is the usual measure for short poems,

And may at last my weary age

Find out the peaceful hermitage,

The hairy gown, and mossy cell,

Where I may sit, and nightly spell

Of ev'ry star the sky does shew,

And ev'ry herb that sips the dew.

Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Full in the midst of this created space,

Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place

A GRAMMAR OF THE

Confining on all three; with triple bound;
 Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
 And thither bring their undulating sound.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed.

The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r,

Our trochaick measures are

Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r;

Of three syllables,

A thousand winding entries long and wide

Here we may Think and pray,
 Before death

Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.

Stops our breath:

A thousand crannies in the walls are made;

Other joys

Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.

Are but toys.

'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse

Of five,

In the days of old,
 Stories plainly told,
 Lovers felt annoy.

The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;

Of seven,

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth.

Where echo's in repeated echo's play:

A mart for ever full; and open night and day.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Dryden's Polyolbion.

Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore

Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore;

Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,

When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.

The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din

Of crouds, or issuing forth, or entering in:

A thorough-fare of news; where some devise

Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies;

The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,

Intent to hear, and eager to repeat.

Dryden.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,

And farth'ft survey their soils with an ambitious eye,

Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crouds,

The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring clouds,

Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,

That she of all the rest neglected was so long;

Alledging for herself, when through the Saxons pride,

The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side

Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve

These whom devouring war else every where did grieve.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)

Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.

And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things;

So only she is rich, in mountains, meres, and springs,

And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,

As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,

And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone

His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The verse of twelve syllables, called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroic lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyric measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to see.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away.

In this measure a syllable is often re-trenched from the first foot, as Diogenes furly and proud.

I think not of Iris, nor Iris of me.

These measures are varied by many combinations; and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroic measure.

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man.

So in that of eight syllables,
They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded.

In that of seven,
For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast achiev'd with six alone.

In that of six,
'Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.

In the anapestick,
When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But skilful industry steers right.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalapha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special &c or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.

A GENERAL
 DICTIONARY
 OF THE
 ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A B A

A B B

A, Has, in the English language, three different sounds. The broad sound, as, all, wall. A open, father, rather. A slender or close, is the peculiar a of the English language. Of this sound we have examples in place, face, waste.

2. A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox.

3. A is sometimes a noun; as great A.

4. A is placed before a participle, or participial noun.

A hunting. Prior.

A begging. Dryd.

5. A has a signification, denoting proportion. The landlord hath a hundred a year. Addison.

6. A is used in burlesque poetry, to lengthen out a syllable.

For cloves and nutmegs to the line-a. Dryd.

7. A is sometimes put for he.

8. A, in composition, seems the French a, and sometimes at, aside, aslope, aware.

a weary, a-trip. Shakespeare.

9. A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, awake. Dryd.

10. A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts.

A'BACUS. f. [Lat. abacus.]

1. A counting-table.

2. The uppermost member of a column.

ABA'FT. a. [of abaftran, Sax.] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern.

To ABA'NDON. v. a. [Fr. abandonner.]

1. To give up, resign, or quit. Dryd.

2. To desert. Sidney. Shakesf.

3. To forsake, Spenser,

ABANDONED. part. ad.

1. Given up. Shakesf.

2. Forfaken.

3. Corrupted in the highest degree.

ABA'NDONMENT. f. [abandonnement, Fr.] The act of abandoning.

ABARTICULA'TION. f. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] That species of articulation that has manifest motion.

To ABA'SE. v. a. [Fr. abaïsser.] To cast down, to depress, to bring low. Sidney.

ABA'SEMENT. f. The state of being brought low; depression. Ecclesiastical.

To ABA'SH. v. a. [See BASHFUL.] To make ashamed. Milton.

To ABA'TE. v. a. [from the French abbatre.]

1. To lessen, to diminish. Davies.

2. To deject, or depress. Dryd.

3. To let down the price in selling.

To ABATE. v. n. To grow less. Dryd.

To ABATE. [in common law.] To abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. Cowel.

ABA'TEMENT. f. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating. Locke.

2. The state of being abated. Arbutb.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating. Swift.

4. The cause of abating; extenuation. Atterbury.

ABA'TER. f. The agent or cause by which an abatement is procured. Arbutbncr.

ABB. f. The yarn on a weaver's warp; among clothiers. Chambers.

ABB*A.* f. [Heb. אבא] A Syriac word, which signifies father.

A'BBACY. f. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot.

A'B'BESS. f. [Lat. abbatissa, abbesse in Fr.] The superiour of a nunnery. Dryd.

A'B'BEY, or ABBY. f. [Lat. abbatia.] A monastery of religious persons, whether men or women. Shakefp.

 7. [From galla.] Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg; the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. Hill. Ray.
