Bears and Bulls; cant terms applied to persons engaged in the gambling transactions of the Stock Exchange. A bear, is one who contracts to deliver, at a specified future time, stocks which he does not own; a bull, is one who contracts to take them. Hence, in the intervening time, it is the interest of the former to depress stocks, as the bear pulls down with his strong paws, and of the latter to raise stocks, as the bull throws upward with his horns. The stock is, in fact, never delivered, and was never meant to be. When the time for delivery arrives, the losing party pays the difference between the price of the stock then and at the time when the contract was made.

BEAU'TI-LESS, (bu'ti-less,) a. Destitute of beauty. Hammond.

BEAU'TY, (bu'ty,) n. [Fr. beauté, from beau. See BEAU.]

1. An assemblage of graces, or an assemblage of properties in the form of the person or any other object which pleases the eye. In the person, due proportion or symmetry of parts constitutes the most essential property to which we annex the term beauty.

In the face, the regularity and symmetry of the features, the color of the skin, the expression of the eye, are among the principal properties which constitute beauty. But as it is hardly possible to define all the properties which constitute beauty, we may observe in general, that beauty consists in whatever pleases the eye of the beholder, whether in the human body, in a tree, in a landscape, or in any other object.

Beauty is intrinsic, and perceived by the eye at first view, or relative, to perceive which, the aid of the understanding and reflection is requisite. Thus the beauty of a machine is not perceived till we understand its uses, and adaptation to its purpose. This is called the beauty of utility. By an easy transition, the word beauty is used to express what is pleasing to the other senses, or to the understanding. Thus we say, the beauty of a thought, of a remark, of a sound, &c.

So beauty, armed with virtue, bows the soul With a commanding, but a sweet control. Perceval.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament; any particular thing which is beautiful and pleasing; as, the beauties of nature.

3. A particular excellence, or a part which surpasses in excellence that with which it is united; as, the beauties of an author.

4. A beautiful person. In Scripture, the chief dignity or ornament. 2 Sam. i.

5. In the arts, symmetry of parts; harmony; justness of composition. Encyc.

6. Joy and gladness. Is. lxi. Order; prosperity; peace; holiness. Ezek. xvi.

BEAU'TY, (bu'ty,) v. t. To adorn; to beautify or embellish. [Obs.] Shak.

BE-BLOT', v. t. [be and blot.] To blot; to stain. [Obs.] Chaucer.

BE-BLUB'BER-ED, a. [be and blubber.] Foul or swelled with weeping. Skelton.

BEC-A-FU'CO, n. [It. becafico, from the root of pica, peck, beak, and fica, a fig. See DEAR.] A fig-pecker; a bird like a nightingale, which feeds on figs and grapes. Johnson. Prior. Bailey.

The term becafico is applied by the Italians to different species of small birds of the genus Sylvia, when in a condition for the table. P. Cya.

BE-CALM', (be-calm'), v. t. [be and calm. See CALM.] 1. To still; to make quiet; to appease; to stop or repress motion in a body; used of the elements and of the passions; as, to becalm the ocean, or the mind. But calm is generally used.

2. To keep from motion by intercepting the current of wind; as, high lands becalm a ship.

BE-CALM'ED, (be-calm'ed), pp. or a. Quieted; appeased.

2. a. Hindered from motion or progress by a calm; as, a ship *becalm*ed.

BE-CALM'ING, (be-calm'ing), pp. Appeasing; keeping from motion or progress.

BE-CALM'ING, (be-calm'ing), n. A calm at sea. Herbert.

BE-CAME, pret. of BECOME. See BECOME.

BE-CAUSE, (a compound word.) [Sax. be; Eng. by and cause. See BY and CAUSE.] By cause, or by the cause; on this account; for the cause which is explained in the next proposition; for the reason next explained. Thus, I fled, because I was afraid, is to be thus resolved; I fled, because the cause, for the cause, which is mentioned in the next affirmation, viz., I was afraid. Hence, cause being a noun, because may be regularly followed by of.

The spirit's life, because of righteousness.—Rom. viii.

Because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.—Eph. v.

BEC-CA-BUN'GA, n. [G. bach, a brook, and bunga, a basket for catching fish.] Brooklime speedwell; Veronica beecebunga; a European plant, common in ditches and shallow streams.

BECI'A-MEL, n. A kind of fine, white broth, or sauce, thickened with cream. Cooley.

BE-CHANCE', v. i. [be, by, and chance.] To befall; to happen to. Shak.

BE-CHARM', v. t. [be and charm.] To charm; to captivate. Beaumont & FL.

BE'CHIC, n. [Gr. βηχικα, from βηξ, a cough.] A medicine for relieving coughs, synonymous with pectoral, which is now the term mostly used. Quincy.

BECK, n. A small brook. Gray. This word, Sax. beck, Ger. bach, D. beck, Dan. bæk, Sw. beck, Per. bakh, a brook or rivulet, is found in the Ir. Ar. Ch. Syr. Sam. Heb. and Eth., in the sense of flowing, as tears, weeping. Gen. xxxii. 22. It is obsolete in English, but is found in the names of towns situated near streams, as in Walbeck; but is more frequent in names on the Continent, as in Oriechneck, &c.

BECK, n. [Sax. beacan, a sign; beacnian, beacnian, to beckon. The Sw. peka, Dan. pege, signifies to point with the finger.]

A nod of the head; a significant nod; or a motion of the hand, intended to be understood by some person, especially as a sign of command.

BECK, v. i. To nod, or make a sign with the head or hand.

BECK, v. t. To call by a nod; to intimate a command to; to notify by a motion of the head or hand. Shak.

BECK'ED, (bek't), pp. Called or notified by a nod or a motion of the hand.

BECK'ET, n. A thing used in ships to confine loose ropes, tackles, or spars, as a large hook, a rope with an eye at one end, or a wooden bracket. Mar. Dict.

BECK'ING, pp. Nodding significantly; directing by a nod or motion of the hand.

BECK'ON, (bek'on), v. i. [See BECK.] To make a sign to another, by nodding, winking, or a motion of the hand or finger, &c., intended as a hint or intimation. Acts xix.

BECK'ON, (bek'on), v. t. To make a significant sign to. Dryden.

BECK'ON, n. A sign made without words. Holingsbrake.

BECK'ON-ED, pp. Having a sign made to.

BECK'ON-ING, pp. Making a significant sign as a hint.

BE-CLIP', v. t. [Sax. beclippan.] To embrace. [Not in use.] Wicliffe.

BE-CLOUD', v. t. [See CLOUD.] To cloud; to obscure; to dim. Sidney.

BE-CLOUDED, pp. Clouded; darkened.

BE-CLOUD'ING, pp. Overspreading with clouds; obscuring.

BE-COME', (be-kum'), v. i.; pret. BECAME; pp. BECOME. [Sax. becuman, to fall out or happen; D. bekommen; G. bekommen, to get or obtain; Sw. bekomma; Dan. bekomme, to obtain; be and come. The Sax. be is the Eng. by. These significations differ from the sense in English. But the sense is, to come to, to arrive, to reach, to fall or pass to. [See COME.] Hence the sense of suiting, agreeing with. In Sax. cuman, Goth. keimna, is to come; and Sax. cuman is to please, that is, to suit or be agreeable.]

1. To pass from one state to another; to enter into some state or condition, by a change from another state or condition, or by assuming or receiving new properties or qualities, additional matter, or a new character; as, a cion becomes a tree.

The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.—Gen. ii.

To the Jews I became as a Jew.—1 Cor. ix.

2. To become of, usually with what preceding; to be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the final or subsequent condition; as, what will become of our commerce? what will become of us?

In the present tense, it applies to place as well as condition. What has become of my friend? that is, where is he; as well as, what is his condition; Where is he become? used by Shakespeare and Spenser, is obsolete; but this is the sense in Saxon, where has he fallen?

BE-COME', v. t. In general, to suit or be suitable; to be congruous; to befit; to accord with, in character or circumstances; to be worthy of, decent, or proper. It is used in the same sense applied to persons or things.

If I become not a cart as well as another man. Shak.

This use of the word, however, is less frequent, the verb usually expressing the suitability of things to persons or to other things; as, a robe becomes a prince.

It becomes me so to speak of an excellent poet. Dryden.

BE-COM'ING, pp. or a., but used rarely or never except as an adjective. Fit; suitable; congruous; proper; graceful; belonging to the character, or adapted to circumstances; as, he speaks with becoming boldness; a dress is very becoming.

Sonia writers formerly used after this word.

Such discourses as are becoming of them. Dryden.

But this use is inelegant or improper.

BEE, n. [Sax. beo; D. byes; G. biens; Sw. bij; Dan. bie; Ir. beoch; Il. pechia; Sp. abeja. Class. lig.]
 1. An insect of the genus Apis. [See Aets.] The species are numerous, of which the honey-bee is the most interesting to man. It has been cultivated from the earliest periods, for its wax and honey. It lives in swarms, or societies, of from 10,000 to 50,000 individuals. These swarms contain three classes of bees; the females or queen bees, of which there is only one in each swarm, the males or drones, and the neuters or working bees. Of the former, there is only one in each hive or swarm, whose sole office is to propagate the species. It is much larger than the other bees. The drones serve merely for impregnating the queen, after which they are destroyed by the neuters. These last are the laborers of the hive. They collect the honey, form the cells, and feed the other bees and the young. They are furnished with a proboscis, or tongue, by which they collect the honey from flowers, and a mouth, by which they swallow it, and then convey it to the hive in their stomachs, where they discharge it into the cells. The pollen of flowers settles on the hairs with which their body is covered, whence it is collected into pellets by a brush on their second pair of legs, and deposited in a hollow in the third pair. It is called bee-bread, and is the food of the larvae or young. The adult bees feed on this. The wax was supposed to be formed from pollen by a digestive process, but it is now ascertained that it is formed from the honey by a similar process. The females and neuters have a barbed sting, attached to a bag of poison, which flows into the wound inflicted by the sting. When a hive is overstocked, a new colony is sent out under the direction of a queen bee. This is called swarming. Cyc. Ed. Encyc.
 2. In America, joint, voluntary, and gratuitous aid afforded by neighbors to their neighbor, or to any person in need. Also, an assembly of ladies to sew for the poor.

BEG, } n. [The Turks write this word begh, or bek, BEY, } but pronounce it bay.]

In the Turkish dominions, a governor of a town or country; more particularly, the lord of a sancjak or banner. Every province is divided into seven sancjaks or banners each of which qualifies a bey; and these are commanded by the governor of the province, called beglerbeg, or lord of all the beys. Each beg has the command of a certain number of spahis, or horse, denominated timariots.

In Tania, the beg, or bey, is the prince or king, answering to the day of Algeria.

In Egypt, the begs are twelve generals, who command the militia, or standing forces of the kingdom. Encyc.

BEG, v. t. [Probably contracted from Sw. begära, to ask, desire, crave; Dan. begiare; Ger. begieren; D. begeren, which is a compound word; be and geren, to crave; Sax. geornian, gyrnian, to yearn. In Italian, vicario is a beggar.]

1. To ask earnestly; to beseech; to entreat or supplicate with humility. It implies more urgency than ask or petition.

Joseph begged the body of Jesus. — Matt. xxviii.

2. To ask or supplicate in charity; as, we may yet be reduced to beg our bread.

3. To take for granted; to assume without proof; as, to beg the question in debate.

BEG, v. i. To ask alms or charity; to practice begging; to live by asking alms.

I can not dig; to beg I am ashamed. — Luke xvi.

BE-GET, v. t.; pret. BEGET, BEGET; pp. BEGETT, BEGETTEN. [Sax. begetan, of be and getan, to get. See GET.]

1. To procreate, as a father or sire; to generate; as, to beget a son.

2. To produce, as an effect; to cause to exist; to generate; as, luxury begets vice.

BE-GETTER, n. One who begets or procreates; a father.

BEG-GA-BLE, n. That may be begged. Butler.

BEG-GAR, n. [See BEG.] One that lives by asking alms, or makes it his business to beg for charity.

— One who supplicates with humility; a petitioner; but in this sense rarely used, as the word has become a term of contempt. Johnson.

3. One who assumes in argument what he does not prove. Tillotson.

BEG-GAR, v. t. To reduce to beggary; to impoverish.

2. To deprive, or make destitute; to exhaust; as, to beggar description.

BE-GHARDS', } n. A German word denoting one BE-GUARDS', } who begs with impotunity; applied formerly to some of the Franciscans and other mendicant orders of Rome. The term was also applied to a class of persons distinguished for the favor and frequency of their prayers. B. Jonson.

BE-GIDT, } a. Gilded. Brande.

BE-GIN, v. i.; pret. BEGAN; pp. BEGON. [Sax. gynnian, a gynnian, beginnan, and ongynnian, to begin, ogyn, a beginning; Goth. duginnan; Sw. begynna; Dan. begyndre; D. and Ger. beginnen, to begin; D. and Ger. begin, a beginning, origin; W. gwynnu, to begin, gin, a prefix, and cwy, a head. The radical word is cy or gyn, to which are prefixed be, ra, and du, which is to. This appears to be the root of the Gr. γινωσκει, γινωσκω, L. gencro, gigno, coinciding with Syr. קון, to begin to be; In Aph. to plant, to confirm, to create; Eth. ከወጣ ከወጣ, to be, to become, or be made; Ar. كُنَا, to be, or become, to make, to create, to generate; Heb. Ch. and Sam. יָצַע, to make ready, to adapt, prepare, establish; Sam. to create. The primary sense is, to throw, thrust, stretch forward; hence, to set, or to produce, according to its connection or application.]

1. To have an original or first existence; to take rise; to commence.

As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began. — Luke i.

Judgment must begin at the house of God. — 1 Pet. iv.

Crisp. Nimrod first the savage race began. Pope.

And tears began to flow. Dryden.

2. To do the first act; to enter upon something new; to take the first step; as, begin, my muse.

Begin every day to repent. Taylor.

When I begin, I will also make an end. — 1 Sam. iii.

BE-GIN, v. t. To do the first act of any thing; to enter on; to commence.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope.

And this they begin to do. — Gen. xi.

2. To trace from any thing, as the first ground; to lay the foundation.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

To begin with, to enter upon first; to use or employ first; as, to begin with the Latin grammar; to begin business with a small capital.

BE-GIN'NER, n. The person who begins; he that gives an original; the agent who is the cause; an author.

2. One who first enters upon any art, science, or business; one who is in his rudiments; a young practitioner; often implying want of experience.

BE-GIN'NING, ppr. First entering upon; commencing; giving rise, or original; taking rise, or origin.

BE-GIN'NING, n. The first cause; origin.

I am the beginning and the ending. — Rev. i.

2. That which is first; the first state; commencement; entrance into being.

In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth. — Gen. i.

3. The rudiments, first ground, or materials.

Mighty things from small beginnings grow. Dryden.

BE-GIN'NING-LESS, a. That hath no beginning. [A bad word, and not used.] Barrct.

BE-GIRD, (be-gurd') v. t.; pret. BEGIRT, BEGIRTS; pp. BEGIRT. [be and gird; Sax. begyrdan.]

1. To bind with a hand or girdle.

2. To surround; to inclose; to encompass.

Begird the Almighty throne. Milton.

3. To besiege. Clarendon.

To begirt, used by B. Jonson, is a corrupt orthography.

BE-GIRD'ED, } pp. Bound with a girdle; surrounded; BE-GIRT', } inclosed; besieged.

BE-GIRD'ING, ppr. Binding with a girdle; surrounding; besieging.

BEG-GLER-BEG, n. [See BEG.] The governor of a province in the Turkish empire, next in dignity to the grand vizier. Each has three ensigns or staffs, trimmed with a horse tail, to distinguish him from a pashaw, who has two, and a beg, who has one. His province is called beglerbeglic. Encyc.

BE-GRUDG'ING, ppr. Envyng the possession of.
BE-GUILF', (be-'guil') v. t. [be and guile.] To delude; to deceive; to impose on by artifice or craft.
 The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. — Gen. iii.
 2. To elude by craft.
 When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage. Shak.
 3. To elude any thing disagreeable by amusement, or other means; to pass pleasantly; to amuse; as, to beguile the tedious day with sleep. Shak.
BE-GUIL'ED, pp. Deluded; imposed on; misled by craft; eluded by stratagem; passed pleasantly.
BE-GUILEMENT, n. Act of beguiling or deceiving.
BE-GUILER, n. He or that which beguiles or deceives.
BE-GUIL'ING, ppr. or a. Deluding; deceiving by craft; eluding by artifice; amusing.
BE-GUIL'ING-LY, adv. In a manner to deceive.
BE-GUILTY, v. t. To render guilty. [A barbarous word.] Sanderson.
BE-GULVE', (ba-'geen') n. One of an order of females in Flanders, who, without having taken the monastic vows, are united for the purposes of devotion and charity, and live together in houses called beguinages. There were also similar societies of males called beghards, and sometimes beguins. See BEHABO.
BE'GUM, {n. In the East Indies, a princess or lady BE'GUM, {n. of high rank. Malcom.
BE-GUN', pp. of BEGIN. Commenced; originated.
BE-HALF', (be-'half') n. [This word is probably a corruption. If composed of be and half, it is a word of modern origin; but I take it to be the Sax. behalfe, profit, need, or convenience; G. behuf; D. behoef, necessity, need, necessity; behoefen, behalf; Sw. behaf; Dan. behof, need, necessity; behoef, sufficiency, or what is required, sustenance, or support; from the verb behoefen, behofien, to need. The spelling is therefore corrupt; it should be behof or behoef. See BEHOEF.]
 1. Favor; advantage; convenience; profit; support; defense; vindication; as, the advocate pleads in behalf of his prisoner; the patriot suffers in behalf of his country.
 2. Part; side; noting substitution, or the act of taking the part of another; as, the agent appeared in behalf of his constituents, and entered a claim.
BE-HAPPEN, v. i. [be and happen.] To happen to. Spenser.
BE-HAVE', v. t. [G. gehalten; Sax. gehabban, and behabban; be and have.]
 1. To restrain; to govern; to subdue. [The Saxon sense of the word.] Shak.
 He did behave his angry ere 'twas spent.
 This sense is obsolete. Yet it often seems to be implied; for to behave one's self, is really to govern one's self; to have in command.
 2. To carry; to conduct; used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he behaves himself manfully. But the tendency of modern usage is to omit the pronoun; as, he behaves well.
BE-HAVE', v. i. To act; to conduct; generally applied to manners, or to conduct in any particular business; and in a good or bad sense. He behaves well or ill.
BE-HAV'ED, pp. Conducted.
BE-HAV'ING, ppr. Carrying; conducting.
BE-HAVIOR, (be-'hav'yer), n. [See BEHAVE.] Manner of behaving, whether good or bad; conduct; manners; carriage of one's self, with respect to propriety or morals; deportment. It expresses external appearance or action; sometimes in a particular character; more generally in the common duties of life; as, our future destiny depends on our behavior in this life. It may express correct or good manners, but I doubt whether it ever expresses the idea of elegance of manners, without another word to qualify it.
 To be upon one's behavior, is to be in a state of trial, in which something important depends on propriety of conduct. The modern phrase is, to be, or to be put, upon one's good behavior. Judges hold their office during good behavior; that is, during the integrity and fidelity of their official conduct.
BE-HEAD', (be-'hed') v. t. [be and head.] To cut off the head; to sever the head from the body, with a cutting instrument; appropriately used of the execution of men for crimes.
BE-HEAD'ED, (be-'hed'ed), pp. Having the head cut off.
BE-HEAD'ING, (be-'hed'ing), ppr. Severing the head from the body.

BE-HEAD'ING, (be-'hed'ing), n. The act of separating the head from the body by a cutting instrument; decollation.
BE-HELD', pret. and pp. of BEHOLD, which see.
BE-HE-MOTH', n. [Heb. בהמה, plural of בהמה, a beast or brute; from an Arabic verb, which signifies, to sput, to lie hid, to be dumb. In Eth. dumb.]
 Authors are divided in opinion as to the animal intended in Scripture by this name; some supposing it to be an ox, others, an elephant; and Bochart labors to prove it the hippopotamus, or river horse. It seems to unite some of the peculiar characteristics of all; and hence some consider it as a kind of type or representation of the largest land animals, under the general name of behemoth, which is a plural, denoting, literally, beasts. Killo. The original word in Arabic signifies a brute or beast in general, especially a quadruped.
BE-IEN, {n. A plant. The white behen is a species
BEN, {of Cucubalus, called Swedish Lychnis, BE'KEN, {or gum peparag, also spreading poppy and bladder campion. (Cucubalus behen, Linn.; Silene inflata, Decand.) The emplement of its flower resembles net-work, and its leaves have somewhat of the flavor of peas. Family of Plants. Encey.
 The white behen of the shops is the root of the Crotalaria Behea, a native of the Levant; the red behen is the root of the Stictis Limonium, or sea lavender. Parr.
BE-HEST', n. [be and Sax. haese, a command; Ger. geheiss, command, from heissen, to call, tell, or command. See HEAT.] Command; precept; mandate.
BE-HIGHT', (be-'hite), v. t.; pret. BEHOT. [Sax. behetan, to promise.]
 To promise; to intrust; to call or name; to command; to adjudge, in address; to inform; to mean; to reckon. The orthography is corrupt; it should be behite. [Obs.] Spenser. Chaucer.
BE-HIND', prep. [Sax. behindan, of be and kindan, behind; Goth. hindar, beyond, behind; hindar-leithan, to pass, praterire; Ger. hinter.]
 1. At the back of another; as, to ride behind a horseman.
 2. On the back-part, at any distance; in the rear; as, to walk behind another.
 3. Remaining; left after the departure of another, whether by removing to a distance, or by death; as, a man leaves his servant behind him, or his estate at his decease.
 4. Left at a distance, in progress or improvement; as, one student is behind another in mathematics.
 5. Inferior to another in dignity and excellence.
 For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles. — 2 Cor. xii.
 6. On the side opposite the front or nearest part, or opposite to that which fronts a person; on the other side; as, behind a bed; behind a hill; behind a house, tree, or rock.
 Behind the back, in Scripture, signifies, out of notice or regard; overlooked; disregarded.
 They cast thy laws behind their backs. — Neh. xix. la. xxxviii.
BE-HIND', adv. [be and hind.] Out of sight; not produced or exhibited to view; remaining; as, we know not what evidence is behind.
 2. Backward; on the back part; as, to look behind.
 3. Past, in the progress of time.
 Forgetting those things which are behind. — Phil. iii.
 4. Future, or remaining to be endured.
 And fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh. — Col. i.
 5. Remaining after a payment; unpaid; as, there is a large sum behind.
 6. Remaining after the departure of; as, he departed and left us behind.
BE-HIND'HAND, a. [behind and hand.] In arrear; in an exhausted state, in a state in which rent or profit has been anticipated, and expenditures precede the receipt of funds to supply them. In popular use, a state of poverty, in which the means of living are not adequate to the end. Also, in a state of backwardness, in which a particular business has been delayed beyond the proper season for performing it; as, he is behindhand in his business.
 Behindhand with, is behind in progress; not upon equal terms in forwardness; as, to be behindhand with the fashionable world.
 This word is really an adjective, as it is applied to the person rather than to the verb; but like adrift, aloft, ashamed, and several other words, never precede the noun. Shakspeare's "behindhand slackness," therefore, according to present usage, is not a legitimate phrase.
BE-HOLD', v. t.; pret. and pp. BEHELD. [Sax. behaldan, beholdian, gehaldian, gehaldan, from haldan, to hold. The sense is, to hold, to have in sight, from restraining, restraining. In Saxon, the verb signifies not only to look or see, but to guard; so in Latin, observo, from servo, to keep. This explication leads us to an understanding of the participle beholden, which retains the primitive sense of the verb, bound, obliged. The Germans retain the original sense in behalten, to hold or keep; as the Dutch do in gekoude, held, bound; and the Danes in beholde, to keep, retain; behold, a retreat, refuge, reservation. See OBSERVE and REGARD.]

 L To fix the eyes upon; to see with attention; to observe with care.
 Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. — John i.
 2. In a less intensive sense, to look upon; to see. When he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived. — Num. xxi.
BE-HOLD', v. i. To look; to direct the eyes to an object.
 And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne, a lamb, as it had been slain. — Rev. v.
 2. To fix the attention upon an object; to attend; to direct or fix the mind.
 Behold, I stand at the door and knock. — Rev. iii.
 This word is much used in this manner, for exciting attention or admiration. It is in the imperative mode, expressing command or exhortation, and by no means a mere exclamation.
BE-HOLD'EN, (be-'hold'en), pp. or a. [The participle of BEHOLD, to keep, guard, or bind. See BEHOLD.] Obligated; bound in gratitude; indebted.
 Little are we beholden to your love. Shak.

 To be necessary for; to be fit for; to be meet for, with respect to necessity, duty, or convenience.
 And thus it behooved Christ to suffer. — Luke xvii.
 It may, perhaps, be used intransitively; as, let him behave as if he behooveth; but I believe such use is rare.
BE-HOOVE'FUL, (be-'hoov'ful), a. Needful; useful; profitable; advantageous.
BE-HOOVE'FUL-LY, (be-'hoov'ful-ly), adv. Usefully; profitably. [Obs., or nearly so.]

BEL'GIC, a. [L. belgicus, from Belgæ, the inhabitants of the Netherlands and the country bordering on the Rhine, from that river to the Seine and the ocean. The name may have been given to them from their bulk or large stature; W. balc, prominent, proud, from bal, a shooting out; Eng. bulge; Russ. velik, great. See Pomp. Mela, lib. 3. 3, and 3. 5; Tac. Agric.; Joseph de Bell. Jud. 2. 16; Herod. lib. 6; Strabo, lib. 4. Owen supposes the Welsh name Belgid to have been given them from their bursting forth and ravaging Britain and Ireland. But they had the name on the continent before their irruption into Britain.

 Pertaining to the Belgæ, who, in Cesar's time, possessed the country between the Rhine, the Seine, and the ocean. They were of Teutonic origin, and anterior to Cesar's invasion of Gaul and Britain, colonies of them had established themselves in the southern part of Britain. The country was called Belgica, from its inhabitants, who dwelt in the district around the town of Belgium, now called Beauvais. See Cluv. Germ. Ant. 2. 2.
Belgic is now applied to the Netherlands, called, also, Flanders, or that part of the Low Countries which formerly belonged to the house of Austria.

BE-LIE', v. t. [be and lie. Sax. beliegan, of be and leagan, to lia, lig, or lyg, a lia; D. beliegen; G. beligen, to belie. See Lie.]
 1. To give the lie to; to show to be false; to charge with falsehood; as, the heart belies the tongue. It is rarely used of declarations; but of appearances and facts which show that declarations, or certain appearances and pretences, are false and hypocritical. Hence,
 2. To counterfeit; to mimic; to feign resemblance.
 With dust, with horse's hoofs, that beat the ground, And martial brass, belie the thunder's sound. Dryden.
 3. To give a false representation.
 Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts. Shak.
 4. To tell lies concerning; to calumniate by false reports.
 Thou dost belie him, Percy. Shak.
 5. To fill with lies.
 Slander doth belie all corners of the world. Shak.
BE-LIE'D, pp. Falsely represented, either by word or obvious evidence and indication; counterfeited; mimicked.
BE-LIEF', n. [Sax. geloaf, leave, license, permission, consent, assent, belief, faith, or trust; gelcean, gefeufan, gelifan, gefufan, to believe, to leave and to live. From these words, it appears that belief is from the root of leave, permission, assent; Sax. leaf, leave and belief; L. fides; leafa, permission, license; written, also, lif and lufa; lufan, to permit; D. geloof, G. glaube, belief, credit, faith; gelooen, glauben, to believe; Dan. believe, to promise; D. oorlof, verlof, leave, permission; G. urlaub, leave, furlough. The primary sense of believe, is to throw or put to, or to assent to; to leave with or to rest on; to rely. See LEAVE and LIVE.]
 1. A persuasion of the truth, or an assent of mind to the truth of a declaration, proposition, or alleged fact, on the ground of evidence, distinct from personal knowledge; as, the belief of the gospel; belief of a witness. Belief may also be founded on internal impressions, or arguments and reasons furnished by our own minds; as, the belief of our senses; a train of reasoning may result in belief. Belief is opposed to knowledge and science.
 2. In theology, faith, or a firm persuasion of the truths of religion.
 No man can attain [to] belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth. Hooker.
 3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of the faith.
 In the heat of persecution, to which Christian belief was subject upon its first promulgation. Hooker.
 4. In some cases, the word is used for persuasion or opinion, when the evidence is not so clear as to leave no doubt; but the shades of strength in opinion can hardly be defined, or exemplified. Hence the use of qualifying words; as, a firm, full, or strong belief.
 5. The thing believed; the object of belief.
 Superstitious prophecies are the belief of fools. Bacon.
 6. A creed; a form or summary of articles of faith. In this sense, ve generally use creed.
BE-LIEV'A-BLE, a. That may be believed; credible. Sherwood.
BE-LIEVE', v. t. To credit upon the authority or testimony of another; to be persuaded of the truth of something upon the declaration of another, or upon evidence furnished by reasons, arguments, and deductions of the mind, or by other circumstances than personal knowledge. When we believe upon the authority of another, we always put confidence in his veracity. When we believe upon the authority of reasoning, arguments, or a concurrence of facts and circumstances, we rest our conclusions upon their strength or probability, their agreement with our own experience, &c.

 2. To expect or hope with confidence; to trust.
 I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living.—Pa. xviii.
BE-LIEVE', v. i. To have a firm persuasion of any thing. In some cases, to have a full persuasion, approaching to certainty; in others, more doubt is implied. It is often followed by in or on, especially in the Scriptures. To believe in, is to hold as the object of faith. Ye believe in God, believe also in me. John xiv. To believe on, is to trust, to place full confidence in, to rest upon with faith. "To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John i. Johnson. But there is no ground for such distinction.
 In theology, to believe sometimes expresses a mere assent of the understanding to the truths of the gospel, as in the case of Simon. Acts viii. to others, the word implies, with this assent of the mind, a yielding of the will and affections, accompanied with a humble reliance on Christ for salvation. John i. 12. iii. 15.
 In popular use and familiar discourse, to believe often expresses an opinion in a vague manner, without a very exact estimate of evidence, noting a mere preponderance of opinion, and is nearly equivalent to think or suppose.
BE-LIEV'ED, pp. Credited; assented to, as true.
BE-LIEV'ER, n. One who believes; one who gives credit to one to whose evidence than that of personal knowledge.
 2. In theology, one who gives credit to the truth of the Scriptures, as a revelation from God. In a more restricted sense, a professor of Christianity; one who receives the gospel, as unfolding the true way of salvation, and Christ as his Savior.
 In the primitive church, those who had been instructed in the truths of the gospel and baptized, were called believers; in distinction from the catechumens, who were under instruction, as preparatory to baptism and admission to church privileges. Encyc.

BELL, n. [Sax. bell, bella, belle, so named from its sound; Sax. bellan, to bawl or bellon; W. ballaw; G. bellen; D. id.; coinciding with βαλλω and pello. See PEAL.]
 1. A vessel or hollow body used for making sounds. Its constituent parts are a barrel or hollow body, enlarged or expanded at one end, an ear or cannon by which it is hung to a beam, and a clapper on the inside. It is formed of a composition of metals. Bells are of high antiquity. The blue tunic of the Jewish high priest was adorned with golden bells; and the kings of Persia are said to have the hem of their robe adorned with them in like manner. Among the Greeks, those who went the nightly rounds in camps or garrisons, used to ring a bell, at each sentinel-box, to see that the soldier on duty was awake. Bells were also put on the necks of criminals, to warn persons to move out of the way of so ill an omen as the sight of a criminal or his executioner; also, on the necks of beasts and birds, and in houses. In churches and other public buildings, bells are now used to notify the time of meeting of any congregation or other assembly. Encyc.
 In private houses, bells are used to call servants, either hung and moved by a wire, or as hand-bells. Small bells are also used in electrical experiments.
 2. A hollow body of metal, perforated, and containing a solid ball, to give sounds when shaken; used on animals, as on horses or hawks.
 3. Any thing in form of a bell, as the cup or calyx of a flower.
To bear the bell, is to be the first or leader, in allusion to the bell-wether of a flock, or the leading horse of a team or drove, that wears bells on his collar.

BETRAY', v. t. [Chaucer wrote betras, betrais, and the Fr. trahire is a contraction of trahire; Arm. traygo, to betray; Norm. trahir, to draw in, to betray; treire, a traitor; Fr. trahir, which seems to be the L. traho. From trahir is formed trahiscent, and trahison, treason. If traho is the root, the sense is, to draw aside, to withdraw, or lead away; which would agree with the D. betriegen, G. betriegen, Sw. beträga, Dan. bedrage, to deceive; and treachery, Fr. tricherie, is from the root of trick. I do not find betragon in the Saxon, but bedrog is rendered sfidelt, and this is from dragan, to draw. Betray, then, seems to be a compound of be and dragan, to draw; and betrays supra, may be from a different root. In strictness, to fail in duty; to be guilty of breach of trust; to violate the confidence reposed. The word does not in itself import to deliver up; but by usage, either with or without the word enemies, it signifies to deliver up, in breach of trust.]
 1. To deliver into the hands of an enemy by treachery or fraud, in violation of trust; as, an officer betrayed the city.
 The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men. — Matt. xvii.

2. To violate by fraud, or unfaithfulness; as, to betray a trust.

If the people of America ever betray their trust, their guilt will merit even greater punishment than other nations have suffered, and the indignation of Heaven. J. Adams.

3. To violate confidence by disclosing a secret, or that which was intrusted; to expose, followed by the person or the thing; as, my friend betrayed me, or betrayed the secret.

4. To disclose, or permit to appear, what is intended to be kept secret, or what prudence would conceal.

Be swift to hear, but cautious of your tongue, lest you betray your ignorance. Wallis.

Hence,

5. To mislead or expose to inconvenience not foreseen; as, great confidence betrays a man into errors.

6. To shew; to disclose; to indicate what is not obvious at first view, or would otherwise be concealed.

Nor, after length of years, a stone betray the place where once the very ruins lay. Adison.
This river betrays its original in its name. Holwell.
All the names in the country betray great antiquity. Bryant.

7. To fail, or deceive.
But when I rise, I shall find my legs betraying me. Johnson, Boswell.

7. To have the better, is to have the advantage or superiority, followed by of before him or that over which the advantage is enjoyed; as, the English had the better of the Spaniards.

8. To get or gain the better, is to obtain the advantage, superiority, or victory; as, to get the better of an enemy.

9. For the better, is for the advantage or improvement.

BET'TER, adv. In a more excellent manner; with more skill and wisdom, virtue, advantage, or success; as, to perform work better; to plan a scheme better; land better cultivated; laws better executed; government better administered.

2. More correctly, or fully; as, to understand a subject better than another.

3. With superior excellence; as, to write or speak better than another.

4. With more affection; in a higher degree; as, to love one better than another.

It is not easy to specify and exemplify the various applications of better. In general, it implies what is more excellent, advantageous, useful, or virtuous, than something else.

BET'TER, v. t. [Sax. beterian, betrian. See BETTER.]

1. To improve; to meliorate; to increase the good qualities of; as, manure betters land; discipline may better the morals.

2. To surpass; to exceed.
The works of nature do always aim at that which can not be bettered. Hooker.

Qu. is not the sense, made better?

3. To advance; to support; to give advantage to; as, to better a party; to better a cause.

BET'TER, n. A superior; one who has a claim to precedence on account of his rank, age, or office; as, give place to your betters. It is generally or always used in the plural.

BET'TER-ED, pp. Improved; meliorated; made better.

BETTING, n. The laying of a wager. Sharnwood.

BETTOR, n. [from bet.] One who bets or lays a wager. Adison.

BETTY, n. [Supposed to be a cant word from the name of a maid; but qu. is it not from the root of beat or L. peto?] A small instrument to break open doors. Arbutnot.

BE-TUM'BL'ED, a. [be and tumble.] Rolled about; tumbled; disordered. Shak.

BE-TU'TOR-ED, a. Tutored; instructed. Coleridge.

BE-TWEN', prep. [Sax. betweonan, betwyan; of be and twain, two, Sax. twæg, twegen. The Saxons used, in the same sense, betuh, and betweoh, betwo. See TWAIN, TWIX.]

1. In the intermediate space, without regard to distance; as, New York is between Boston and Philadelphia; the Delaware River runs between Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

2. From one to another; passing from one to another, noting exchange of actions or intercourse; as, things go well between the parties.

3. Belonging to two or more, in common, or partnership; as, two friends have but one soul between them; twenty proprietors own a tract of land between them. We observe that between is not restricted to two.

4. Having mutual relation to two or more; as, discords exist between the families.

5. Noting difference or discrimination of one from another; as, to distinguish between right and wrong.

BE-TWIXT', prep. [Sax. betwixt, betwyt, betweoz, betweoh; be and twæg, two.]

1. Between; in the space that separates two persons or things; as, betwixt two oaks.

2. Passing between; from one to another, noting intercourse. See BETWEEN.

BEVEL', n. [Fr. beveau. Qu. It. bicca livella, oblique level.]

1. Among masons, carpenters, joiners, &c., an instrument, or kind of square, one leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is movable on a point or center, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not a right angle is called a bevel angle, whether obtuse or acute. Bailey, Johnson, Encyc. Encyc.

BEVEL, a. Slant; having the form of a bevel.

BEVEL, v. t. To cut to a bevel angle. Mozon.

BEVEL, v. i. To slant or incline off to a bevel angle, or from a direct line.

BEVEL-ED, pp. or a. Fanned to a bevel angle.

In mineralogy, replaced by two planes inclining equally upon the adjacent planes, as an edge; having its edges replaced as above, as a cube or other solid.

2. The slant or bevel of timber. Encyc.

BEVEL-MENT, n. In mineralogy, the replacement of an edge by two similar planes, equally inclined to the including faces or adjacent planes.

BE'VER, n. [It. bevve, to drink.] A collation or small repast between meals. [Not used.] Morison.

BE'VER, v. i. To take a small repast between meals. Wallis.

BEVEL-AGE, n. [It. bevve, or bere, to drink; beveraggio, drink; Sp. beber, from L. bibo; Fr. beuver, a tippler; banette, a tavern; banotter, to sip, to tipple; Arn. beurrauh, beverage.]

1. Drink; liquor for drinking. It is generally used of a pleasant or mixed liquor. Nectar is called the beverage of the gods.

In the middle ages, beverage, beveragium, or biberagium, was money for drink given to an artificer or other person over and above his hire or wages. The practice has existed, to a certain extent, in America, within my memory, and I know not but it still exists in some parts of this country. A person who had a new garment, was called on to pay beverage, that is, to treat with liquor. Hence,

2. A treat on wearing a new suit of clothes, or on receiving a suit from the tailor; also, a treat on first coming into prison; a garnish.

3. In England, water-cider, a mixture of elder and water, made by putting water into pomace before it is pressed. Mortimer, Johnson.

BEV'ILE, n. [See BEVEL.] In heraldry, a thing broken or opening like a carpenter's bevel. Encyc.

BEV'Y, n. [I know not the origin or affinities of this word. The etymologies I have seen are not worth notice.]

A flock of birds; (sportsmen now confine the term to quails. Rich. Dict.) hence, a company; an assembly or collection of persons; usually applied to females.

BE-WAIL', v. t. [be and wail.] To bemoan; to lament; to express sorrow for. It expresses deep sorrow; as, to bewail the loss of a child.

The true penitent bewails his ingratitude to God. Anon.

BE-WAIL', v. i. To express grief. Shak.

BE-WAIL'A-BLE, a. That may be lamented.

BE-WAIL'ED, pp. Lamented; bemoaned.

BE-WAIL'ER, n. One who laments.

BE-WAIL'ING, n. Lamentation. Raleigh.

BE-WAIL'ING-LY, adv. In a mournful manner.

BE-WAIL'MENT, n. The act of hawailing.

BE-WAKE', v. t. [be and wake.] To keep awake. [Not used.] Goscer.

BE-WARE', v. i. [Sax. beterian, beterian, gevarian, to guard, defend, restrain, prohibit, fortify, be cautious; Sw. bevara; D. bewaren; Ger. gewahr, be-wahren; Dan. beware, to keep guard, preserve. See WARE, WARY.]

1. Literally, to restrain or guard one's self from hence, to regard with caution; to restrain one's self from any thing that may be dangerous, injurious, or improper; to avoid, to take care; followed by of before the thing that is to be avoided.

Beware of all, but most beware of man. Pope.

Beware of false prophets; beware of the leaven of the Pharisees; beware of the concision. Scriptures.

2. To have a special regard to.
Behold, I send an angel before thee — beware of him, and obey his voice. — Ex. xxxiii.

[This is unusual, and hardly legitimate.]

This word is rarely used as a verb in fact; or if a verb, it is now never used except in the imperative mode. It is a compound of be and the Old Eng. were, now wary. Bewary of danger. Hence, it can not be used with did, like a regular verb, nor with be, in any of its inflections, — he is beware; for this would be to use the substantive verb twice before were and wary, is and be. Ben Jonson, however, has used the word in the third person. He bewares to act. But it has no past tense or participle, and therefore, if admitted as a verb, it is defective, and used only in the imperative mode, or after an auxiliary.

BE-WEEP', v. t. [be and weep.] To weep over; to bedew with tears. [Little used.] Shak.

BE-WEEP', v. i. To make lamentation. [Little used.] Shak.

BE-WITCH', v. l. [be and witch.] To fascinate; to gain an ascendancy over by charms or incantation; an operation which was formerly supposed to injure the person bewitched, so that he lost his flesh, or behaved in a strange, unaccountable manner, — ignorant people being inclined to ascribe to evil spirits what they could not account for.

Look, how I am bewitched; behold, mine arm is like a blasted asping withered op. Shak.

2. To charm; to fascinate; to please to such a degree as to take away the power of resistance.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch. Dryden.

3. To deceive and mislead by juggling tricks or imposture. Acts viii. 9.

BE-WITCH'ED, (be-wicht'), pp. Fascinated; charmed.

BE-WITCH'ED-NESS, n. State of being bewitched.

BE-WRECK', (be-reck') v. l. [be and wreck.] To ruin; to destroy. [Not used.]

BE-WROUGHT', (be-rawt') a. [be and work.] Worked. [Not used.]

BĒY, (bä') n. In the Turkish dominions, a governor of a town or particular district of country; also, in some places, a prince; the same as Bey. [See Bey.] Etym.

BE-YOND', adv. [Sax. beocond, beocondas, of be and gand, yond, yonder. This is the participle of the verb gan, to go, to pass. It coincides with the D. gaende, the participle of the present tense of the same verb, gan, to go; Dan. gaende. Literally, then, it signifies by-passing, or by-pass; or, as we now say, past by, gone by.]

1. On the further side of; on the side most distant, at any indefinite distance from that side; as, beyond a river, or the sea; either a mile beyond, or a hundred miles beyond the river.

2. Before; at a place not yet reached

A thing beyond us, even before our death. Pope.

3. Past; out of reach of; further than any given limit; further than the extent of any thing else; as, beyond our power; beyond comprehension; beyond dispute; beyond our care.

4. Above; in a degree exceeding or surpassing; proceeding to a greater degree, as in dignity, excellence, or quality of any kind; as, one man is great or good beyond another.

To go beyond, is a phrase which expresses an excess in some action or scheme; to exceed in ingenuity, in research, or in any thing else; hence, in a bad sense, to deceive or circumvent.

Let no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter. St. Paul.

BE-YOND', adv. At a distance; yonder. Spenser.

BEZÖAR, n. [Pers. باد زهر badzahr, which Castell interprets "ventus, i. e. dissipator veneni, alexipharmicum omne, quod venenum pellit, et apiritum facultates retinet," from باد bad, wind, breath, spirit, and زهر zahr, poison. Others make it paszahr, against poison, an antidote for poison. Others derive the word from paseng, or pasahr, the name of the goat in Persia.]

1. An antidote; a general name for certain animal substances supposed to be efficacious in preventing the fatal effects of poison. Bezoar is a calculus concretion found in the stomach of certain ruminant animals, composed of concentric coats surrounding each other, with a little cavity in the middle, containing a bit of wood, straw, hair, or the like substance. There are two sorts, the oriental, from Persia and the East Indies, of a shining dark green or olive color, with a smooth surface; and the occidental, from the Spanish West Indies, which has a rough surface, is less green, much heavier, more brittle, and of a looser texture. The oriental is generally less than a walnut; the occidental is larger, and sometimes as large as a goose egg.

The oriental bezoars are many of them of a resinous composition and combustible. Thomson.

2. In a more general sense, any substance formed, stratum upon stratum, in the stomach or intestines of animals.

This name is also given to the biliary calculi of certain animals. Cye.

Fossil bezoar is a figured stone, formed, like the animal bezoar, with several coats round some extraneous body, which serves as a nucleus; found chiefly in Sicily, in sand and clay pits. It is of a purple color, and of the size of a walnut. It seems to be of the nature of Armenian bole, and is called Sicilian earth.

padi, petir, doti, a commander; Ch. bid to pray or beseech; Eth. $\text{ⲁ} \text{ⲧ} \text{Ⲑ}$ fata, or fatho, to desire.
The primary sense is, to press forward, to drive, to urge; hence L. impetus. Applied to the voice, it denotes utterance, a driving of sounds, which is applied to asking, prayer, and command. Class Bd.]
1. To ask; to request; to invite.
Go ye into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage. — Matt. xxii.
This sense is antiquated, but we have the same word from the Latin, in invite, [in and bid.]

BIG, a. [In W. baic is a load; baiciau, to load or lay on; baiciau, pregnant; and dog is a swelling; bucian, to bellow; Dan. big, the belly. These words seem to be allied to big, but I have not found this word in any other language.]

1. Bulky; protuberant; pregnant, applied to females.
Big, in the sense of pregnant, is followed by with;
as, big with child. The use of of, big of child, is not good English.
2. Great; large; in a more general sense; applied to any body or object.
3. Full; fraught, and about to have vent, or be brought forth.
The important day, big with the fate of Rome. Addison.

tering manner; haughtily.
BIG'-NAM-ED, a. Having a great and famous name.
Crossland.
BIG'NESS, n. Bulk; size; largeness; dimensions.
It is used of any object, animate or inanimate, and with or without comparison. Thus we speak of the bigness of a tree, of a rock, of a house, without instituting a comparison with other objects of the kind.
Yet in this case there is always some reference in the mind to known measure. We also say, one thing is as big as another; in which case we give the idea of unknown size by a known object. Big and bigness always imply expansion, more or less, in breadth, and are thus distinguished from tall and thickness.
BIG'OT, n. [Fr. bigot, and caquet, a bigot or hypocrite;
Ann. bigod. In Italian, bicchettone is a hypocrite.
In Spanish, bigote is a whisker; hombre de bigote, a man of spirit; teuer bigotes, to be firm or undaunted.
If the French caquet is connected with bigot, the first syllable in both is a prefix. But I am not able to ascertain the real origin and primary sense of the word. The etymologies I have seen are not satisfactory.]
1. A person who is obstinately and unreasonably wedded to a particular religious creed, opinion, practice, or ritual. The word is sometimes used in an enlarged sense, for a person who is liberally attached to any opinion, or system of belief; as, a bigot to the Mohammedan religion; a bigot to a form of government.
2. A Venetian liquid measure containing the fourth part of the amphor, or half the boot. Encyc.
BIG'OT-ED, } a. Obstinately and blindly attached to BIG'OT-ED, } some creed, opinion, practice, or ritual; unreasonably devoted to a system or party, and illiberal toward the opinions of others.

7. A bill of exchange, is an order drawn on a person in a distant place, requesting or directing him to pay money to some person assigned by the drawer, or to his order, in consideration of the same sum received by the drawer. Bills of exchange are either foreign or inland; foreign, when drawn by a person in one country upon one residing in another; inland, when both the drawer and drawee reside in the same country. The person who draws the bill, is called the drawer; the person on whom the request or demand is made, is called the drawee; and the person to whom the money is directed to be paid, is called the payee.

8. A bill of entry, is a written account of goods entered at the custom-house, whether imported or intended for exportation.

9. A bill of right, is a form of entry at the custom-house, by which goods, respecting which the importer is not possessed of full information, may be provisionally landed for examination.

10. A bill of lading, is a written account of goods shipped by any person on board of a vessel, signed by the master of the vessel, who acknowledges the receipt of the goods, and promises to deliver them safe at the place directed, dangers of the sea excepted. It is usual for the master to sign two, three, or four copies of the bill; one of which he keeps in possession, one is kept by the shipper, and one is sent to the consignee of the goods.

11. A bill of parcels, is an account given by the seller to the buyer, of the several articles purchased, with the price of each.

12. A bill of sale, is a writing given by the seller of personal property to the purchaser, answering to a deed of real estate. In England it must be a sealed paper; in the United States it may be without seal.

BIRD, (bird) n. [Sax. bird, or bridd, a chicken; from the root of bear, or W. bridan, to break forth].

1. Properly, a chicken; the young of fowls; and hence a small fowl.

2. In modern use, any fowl or flying animal. Technically, any individual belonging to a class of warm-blooded vertebrate animals, (Aves), characterized by oviparous generation, a covering of feathers, a beak, the posterior extremities organized as feet, and the anterior extremities as wings, generally formed for flight.

It is remarkable that a nation should lay aside the use of the proper generic name of flying animals, foel, Sax. fugel, D. vogel, the flyer, and substitute the name of the young of those animals, as the generic term. The fact is precisely what it would be to make lamb the generic name of sheep, or colt that of the equine genus.

BIRD, v. t. To catch birds. Shak.

BIRD-OP-PA/R-DIS/P, n. A name common to a genus of birds (Puffinac) found in the Oriental Isles, and in New Guinea, some of them remarkably beautiful. The hawk is covered with a belt or collar of downy feathers at the base, and the feathers on the sides are very long. The largest species is two feet four inches in length. The head and back part of the neck of this species are lemon-colored; the neck of the brightest emerald green, soft like velvet; the breast is black; the wings of a chestnut color. The back part of the body is covered with long, straight, narrow feathers, of a pale brown color, similar to the plumes of the ostrich. These are spread when the bird flies, for which reason it can keep very long on the wing. From the rump proceed two long, stiff shafts, feathered at the extremities. Encyc.

BIRD-BOLT, n. [bird and bolt.] An arrow, broad at the end, for shooting birds. Shak.

BIRD-CAGE, n. [bird and cage.] A box or case with wires, small sticks, or wicker, forming open work, for keeping birds.

BIRDS'-MOUTH, n. In architecture, an interior angle or notch cut across a piece of timber, for its reception on the edge of another, as that on a rafter to be laid on a plate.

BIRDS'-NEST, n. [bird and nest.] The nest in which a bird lays eggs and hatches her young.

2. A plant, a species of Ophrys or twyblade; also, a species of Orchis. Encyc.

3. In cookery, the nest of a small swallow, of China and the neighboring countries, delicately tasted, and mixed with soups. This nest is found in the rocks; it is of a hemispherical figure, of the size of a goose egg, and its substance resembles isinglass. In the East, these nests are esteemed a great luxury, and sell at a very high price. Encyc.

BIRDS'TEARS and BIRDS'TONGUE; names of plants.

BIRD-VITTED, a. Flighty; passing rapidly from one subject to another; not having the faculty of attention. Bacon.

BIREME, n. [L. biresis, bis and remus, an oar.] A vessel with two banks or tiers of oars. M'ford.

BIRGAN-DER, n. The name of a wild goose. Qu. Bergander.

BIRHOM-BOID'AL, a. [bis and rhomboid.] Having a surface composed of twelve rhombic faces, which, being taken six and six, and prolonged in idea till they intercept each other, would form two different rhombs. Cleveland.

BIRKEN, v. t. [from birch; Sax. birce, byrc.] To beat with a birch or rod. [Obs.] Ch. Relig. Appal.

BIROSTRATE, a. [L. bis, twice, and rostrum.]

BIROSTRATED, a. beak.] Having a double beak, or process resembling a beak. The capsule is bilocular and birostred. Encyc.

BIRT, (bur), n. A fish, called also turbot.

BIRTH, (birth), n. [Sax. byrd, beorth; D. geboorte; Ger. geburt; Fr. beirte, from bear; perhaps L. partus, from pario.]

1. The act of coming into life, or of being born. Except in poetry, it is generally applied to human beings; as, the birth of a son.

2. Lineage; extraction; and descent; as, Grecian birth. Denham.

بِسْوَة

In Ar. and Pers. بِسْوَة oskof. This title the Athenians gave to those whom they sent into the provinces subject to them, to inspect the state of affairs; and the Romans gave the title to those who were inspectors of provisions.]

1. An overseer; a spiritual superintendent, ruler, or director; applied to Christ.

Ye were an sheep, going astray, but are now returned to the shepherd and bishop of your souls. — 1 Pet. ii.

2. In the primitive church, a spiritual overseer; an elder or presbyter; one who had the pastoral care of a church.

The same persons are in this chapter called elders or presbyters, and overseers or bishops. Scott, Com. Acts xx. Till the churches were multiplied, the bishops and presbyters were the same. Id. Phil. i. 1. 1 Tim. ii. 1. Tit. i. 7. Both the Greek and Latin fathers do, with one consent, declare that bishops were called presbyters, and presbyters bishops, in apostolic times, the name being then common. Whitby.

3. In the Greek, Latin, and some Protestant churches, a prelate, or person consecrated for the spiritual government and direction of a diocese. In Great Britain, bishops are nominated by the king, who, upon request of the dean and chapter for leave to elect a bishop, sends a compte d'élire, or license to elect, with a letter missive, nominating the person whom he would have chosen. The election, by the chapter, must be made within twelve days, or the king has a right to appoint who he pleases. Bishops are consecrated by an archbishop, with two assistant bishops. A bishop must be thirty years of age; and all bishops, except the bishop of Man, are peers of the realm. Blackstone.

By the canons of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States, no diocese or state shall proceed to the election of a bishop, unless there are at least six officiating presbyters residing therein, who shall be qualified, according to the canons, to vote for a bishop; a majority of whom, at least, must concur in the election. But the conventions of two or more dioceses, or states, having together nine or more such presbyters, may join in the election of a bishop. A convention is composed of the clergy, and a lay delegation, consisting of one or more members from each parish. In every state, the bishop is to be chosen according to such rules as the convention of that state shall ordain. The mode of election in most or all of the states, is by a concurrent vote of the clergy and laity, in convention, each body voting separately. Before a bishop can be consecrated, he must receive a testimonial of approbation from the general convention of the church; or, if that is not in session, from a majority of the standing committee to the several dioceses. The mode of consecrating bishops and ordaining priests and deacons, differs not essentially from the practice in England.

BISHOP, n. A cant word for a mixture of vice, oranges, and sugar. Swift.

2. A part of a lady's dress.

BISMUTH-CARBONIC, n. sometimes containing a small portion of carbonic acid.

BISON, n. [L.] A quadruped of the bovine genus, usually but improperly called the buffalo. The proper buffalo is a distinct species, peculiar to the warmer climates of the eastern continent. The bison is a wild animal, with short, black, rounded horns, with a great interval between their bases. On the shoulders is a large hunch, consisting of a fleshy substance. The head and hunch are covered with a long, undulated fleece, of a rust color, divided into locks. In winter, the whole body is covered in this manner; but in summer, the hind part of the body is naked and wrinkled. The tail is about a foot long, naked, except a tuft of hairs at the end. The fore parts of the body are very thick and strong; the hind parts are slender and weak. These animals inhabit the interior parts of North America, and some of the mountainous parts of Europe and Asia.

Pennant alleges that the bison of America is the same species of animal as the bison and aurochs of Europe, the bonasus of Aristotle, the urus of Cæsar, the bos ferus or wild ox of Strabo, the bison of Miny, and the biston of Opplan.

BIS-SEX-TILE, n. [L. bissextilis, leap year, from bis-sextus, (bis and sextus), the sixth of the calends of March, or twenty-fourth day of February, which was reckoned twice every fourth year, by the intercalation of a day. Worth.]

Leap year; every fourth year, in which a day is added to the month of February, on account of the excess of 6 hours, which the civil year contains, above 365 days. This excess is 11 minutes 3 seconds too much; that is, it exceeds the real year, or annual revolution of the earth. Hence, at the end of every century, divisible by 4, it is necessary to retain the bissextile day, and to suppress it at the end of those centuries which are not divisible by 4.

Encyc.

BLAMA-BLY, adv. Culpably; in a manner deserving of censure.

BLAME, v. t. [Fr. blâmer, Gr. blasmar; It. biasmare; to blame; biama, for blasma, blame. The Greeks have the root of this word in βλασφημειν, to blaspheme, and it seems to be of the same family as Fr. blasmer, to injure, that is, to strike. See BLEMISH. But it is not clear that the noun ought not to be arranged before the verb.]

1. To censure; to express disapprobation of; to find fault with; opposed to praise or commend, and applicable most properly to persons, but applied also to things.

I withheld blame, because he wets to be blamed. — Gal. ii. I must blame your conduct; or I must blame you for neglecting business. Legitimately, it can not be followed by of.

2. To bring reproach upon; to blemish; to injure. [See BLEMISH.]

She had blamed her noble blood. [Obs.] Spenser.

BLAME, n. Censure; reprehension; imputation of a fault; disapprobation; an expression of disapprobation for something deemed to be wrong.

Let me bear the blame forever. — Gen. xlii. 2. Fault; crime; sin; that which is deserving of censure or disapprobation.

That we should be holy and without blame before him in love. — Eph. i.

3. Hurt; injury.

And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Spenser.

The sense of this word, as used by Spenser, proves that it is a derivative from the root of blemish.

To blame, in the phrase, He is to blame, signifies blamable, to be blamed. This is a pure Saxon phrase. A like use of to is seen in to-day, to-night, and in together, a compound.

Blame is not strictly a charge or accusation of a fault; but it implies an opinion in the censuring party, that the person censured is faulty. Blame is the act or expression of disapprobation for what is supposed to be wrong.

BLAMED, (blâm), pp. Censured; disapproved.

BLAMEFUL, a. Faulty; meriting blame; reprehensible.

BLEA, n. The part of a tree which lies immediately under the bark. [I believe not used.]

BLEA'BER-RY, n. A British plant and its fruit, a species of Vaccinium, having small leaves like those of box-wood, and little purple berries. Partington.

BLEACH, v. t. [Sax. bleacan; D. bleeken; G. bleicken; Sw. bleka; Dan. blege, to whiten or bleach; D. blyken, to appear, to show; Dan. blik, a white plate of iron, or tin plate; bleeg, pale, wan, Eng. bleak; Sw. blek, id.; bleka, to shine; Ar. بليت balaka, to open or be opened, to shine; بلج baleja, id. It is not improbable that blank and blanch are the same word, with a nasal sound casually uttered and afterward written before the final consonant.]

To whiten; to make white or whiter, by removing the original color; applied to many things, but particularly to cloth and thread. Bleaching is variously performed, but in general, by steeping the cloth in lye, or a solution of pot or pearl ashes, and then exposing it to the solar rays.

Bleaching is now generally performed on the large scale, by means of chlorine or the oxy muriatic acid, which has the property of whitening vegetable substances.

For this purpose, a solution of chlorid of lime is generally employed.

BLEACH, v. l. To grow white in any manner. Shak.

BLEACH'ED, (bleecht), pp. or a. Whiten; made white.

BLEACH-ER, n. One who whitens, or whose occupation is to whiten cloth.

BLEACH-ERY, n. A place for bleaching; as, a wax bleachery.

BLEACH-FIELD, n. A field where cloth or yarn is bleached.

BLEACH'ING, ppr. Whitening; making white; becoming white.

BLEACH'ING, n. The act or art of whitening, especially cloth.

BLEACH'ING-POW-DER, n. A powder for bleaching, consisting of chlorid of lime.

BLEAK, a. [Sax. blac, black, black and pale, or wan; niger, pallidus, fuscus, pallidus. It appears that originally this word did not denote perfect whiteness, but a wan or brown color. This is from the same root as black and bleach. See BLANCH.]

1. Pale. [But not often used in this sense in America, as far as my observations extend.]

2. Open; vacant; exposed to a free current of air; as, a bleak hill or shore. This is the true sense of the word; hence, cold and cheerless. A bleak wind is not so named merely from its coldness, but from its blowing, without interruption, on a wide waste; at least this is the sense in America. So in Addison:

"Her desolation presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects."

BLEAK, n. A small river fish, five or six inches long, so named from its whiteness. It belongs to the genus Cyprinus, and is called, also, by contraction, bays.

BLEAK'LY, adv. Coddly. May.

BLEAK'NESS, n. Openness of situation; exposure to the wind; hence coldness.

BLEAK'S, a. Bleak; open; unsheltered; cold; chill. Dryden.

BLEAR, a. [D. blaar; Dan. blære, a blister, a bladder or bubble.]

Sore with a watery rheum, applied only to the eyes.

BLEAR, v. t. To make sore; to affect with soreness of eyes, or a watery humor; to make dim, or partially obscure the sight.

BLEAR'ED, ppr. Dimmed by a watery humor.

BLEAR'ED-NESS, n. The state of being bleared, or dimmed with rheum.

BLEAR'ING, ppr. Dimming with a humor.

BLEAR'ED-ED, (-ide), a. Having sore eyes; having the eyes dim with rheum; dim-sighted. Butler.

BLEAT, v. i. [Sax. blætan; L. blatero; D. blæten; Sw. bladra, pluddra; Dan. pludre. It coincides in elements with L. plaudo.]

To make the noise of a sheep; to cry as a sheep.

BLEAT, n. The cry of a sheep.

BLEAT'ING, ppr. or a. Crying as a sheep.

BLEAT'ING, n. The cry of a sheep.

BLEB, n. [This word belongs to the root of blab, blubber.]

A little tumor, vesicle, or blister.

Arsenic abounds with air blebs. Klrcwan.

BLEB'BY, a. Full of blebs. Phillips.

BLEED, pret. and pp. of BLEED.

BLEED, v. i.; pret. and pp. BLEED. [Sax. blædan; D. bloeden; G. bluten; to bleed; allied, perhaps, to Gr. βλυζω.]

1. To lose blood; to run with blood, by whatever means; as, the arm bleeds.

2. To die a violent death, or by slaughter.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day. Pope.

3. To issue forth, or drop as blood, from an incision; to lose sap, gum, or juice; as, a tree or a vine bleeds.

For me the balm shall bleed. Pope.

The heart bleeds, is a phrase used to denote extreme pain from sympathy or pity.

BLEED, v. t. To let blood; to take blood from by opening a vein.

BLEED'ING, ppr. Losing blood; letting blood; losing sap or juice.

BLEED'ING, n. A running or issuing of blood, as from the nose; a hemorrhage; the operation of letting blood, as in surgery; the drawing of sap from a

BLÄTE, a. [Ger. blöde; D. bloede.] [tree or plant.]

Rashful; used in Scotland and the northern counties of England. Johnson.

BLEMISH, v. t. [in Fr. blemir is to grow pale, and blème, from the ancient blesme, is pale, wan; Arm. blém; Norm. blame, blamed; blemish, and blesmy, broken; blemishment, blemishment, infringement, prejudice; blesme, pale, wan; from blesser, to injure, or its root, from which was formed the noun blesme, pale, wan, or black and blue, as we should now say; and the s being dropped, Mamer and blemir were formed. See BLAME.]

1. To mark with any deformity; to injure or impair any thing which is well formed, or excellent; to mar, or make defective, either the body or mind.

2. To tarnish, as reputation or character; to deface.

BLEMISH, n. Any mark of deformity; any scar or defect that diminishes beauty, or renders imperfect that which is well formed.

2. Reproach; disgrace; that which impairs reputation; taint; turpitude; deformity.

BLEMISH-ED, (blem'isht), pp. Injured or marked by any mark of deformity; tarnished; soiled.

BLEMISH-ING, pp. Marking with deformity; tarnishing.

BLEMISH-LESS, a. Without blemish; spotless.

BLEMISH-MENT, n. Disgrace. [Little used.] Morton.

BLEND, v. t. [This evidently is the blanch of Bacon, (see BLANCH), and perhaps the modern flinch.]

To shrink; to start back; to give way.

BLEND, v. t. To hinder or obstruct, says Johnson. But the etymology explains the passage, he cites in a different manner. "The rebels carried great trusses of hay before them to blend the defendants' fight."

BLEND, v. t. To render the combat blank; to render it ineffectual; to break the force of the attack; to deaden the shot.

BLEND, n. A start or shrinking back.

BLEND-ED, (blencht), pp. Rendered ineffectual; shrunk.

BLENDER, n. That which frustrates.

BLEND-HOLD-ING, n. A tenure of lands upon the payment of a small sum in silver, blanch, that is, white money.

BLENDING, pp. Shrinking.

BLENDING, n. A shrinking back; a giving way.

BLEND, v. t. [Sax. blendian, to blend and to blind, geblendan, to mix, to stain or dye; blidan, to blind; D. blenden; Ger. blenden, to blind; Dan. blende, to blind or mix; blinde, to blind.]

1. To mix or mingle together; hence, to confound, so that the separate things mixed can not be distinguished.

2. To pollute by mixture; to spoil or corrupt.

3. To blind. [Obs.]

BLEND, v. i. To be mixed; to be united.

There is a tone of solemn and sacred feeling that blends with our conviviality.

BLÉNDE, n. [Ger. blenden, to blind; blende, a blind or screen.]

As ore of zinc, called, also, mock-lead, falsæ galenæ, and black-jack. Its color is mostly yellow, brown, and black. There are several varieties, but in general, this ore contains more than half its weight of zinc, about one fourth sulphur, and usually a small portion of iron. In chemical language, it is a sulphuret of zinc.

BLÉNDE, pp. Mixed; confounded by mixture.

BLÉNDE, n. One that mingles or confounds.

BLÉNDRING, pp. Mingling together; confounding by mixture.

BLÉNDRING, n. Pertaining to blende.

BLÉNDRING-WATER, n. A distemper incident to cattle, called, also, more-hough.

BLÉNDRING-WATER, n. [Gr. βλεννα, mucus, and βένω, to flow.]

An inordinate discharge or secretion of mucus.

BLÉNRY, n. [Sax. blinnan, to cease.]

A name common to different species of fishes, usually of small size, of the genus Blenius, and of the order Jugularæ, (Linn.)

BLENT, the obsolete participle of BLEND.

BLESS, v. t. [pret. and pp. blesso or blest.] [Sax. bletsian, bletsian, bletsian, and blesian; whence, bletsung, bledung, a blessing or benediction. W. blid, a gift, a favor, a blessing.]

1. To pronounce a wish of happiness to one; to express a wish or desire of happiness.

And Isaac called Jacob and blessed him. — Gen. xxviii.

2. To make happy; to make successful; to prosper in temporal concerns; as, we are blest with peace and plenty.

The Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thou doest. — Deut. xv.

3. To make happy in a future life.

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. — Rev. xiv.

4. To set apart or consecrate to holy purposes; to make and pronounce holy.

And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it. — Gen. ii.

5. To consecrate by prayer; to invoke a blessing upon.

And Jesus took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven he blessed them. — Luke ix.

6. To praise; to glorify, for benefits received.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me. — Ps. ciii.

7. To praise; to magnify; to extol, for excellences. Ps. civ.

8. To esteem or account happy; with the reciprocal pronoun.

The nations shall bless themselves in him. — Jer. iv.

9. To pronounce a solemn, prophetic benediction upon. Gen. xxvii. Deut. xxviii.

10. In this line of Spenser, it may signify to throw, for this is nearly the primary sense.

His sparkling blade about his head he blest.

Johnson supposes the word to signify to wave or brandish, and to have received this sense from the old rite of blessing a field, by directing the hands to all parts of it.

Bless, in Spenser, for bliss, may be so written, not for rhyme merely, but because bless and bliss are from the same root.

BLESS-ED, (blest), pp. Made happy or prosperous; extolled; pronounced happy.

BLESS-ED, a. Happy; prosperous in worldly affairs; enjoying or pertaining to spiritual happiness and the favor of God; enjoying or pertaining to heavenly felicity.

BLESS-ED THIS-TLE, n. A plant of the genus Centaurea, sometimes used in decoctions, for a bitter.

BLESS-ED-LV, adv. Happily; in a fortunate manner.

BLESS-ED-NESS, n. Happiness; felicity; heavenly joys; the favor of God.

1. The flower of a plant, or the essential organs of reproduction with their appendages. The term has been applied by some botanists, and is also applied in common usage to the corol; a general term, more commonly used than flower or bloom, when we have reference to the fruit which is to succeed. Thus we use flowers, when we speak of shrubs cultivated for ornament; and bloom, in a more general sense, as flowers in general, or in reference to the beauty of flowers.

2. This word is used to denote the color of a horse, that has white hairs intermixed with sorrel and bay hairs; otherwise peach-colored. Encyc.

BLOSSOM, v. i. To put forth blossoms or flowers; to bloom; to blow; to flower.

BLOW-ING-LY, adv. By blotting.

BLOWSE, (blowz,) n. A light, loose garment resembling a frock coat.

BLOW, n. [This, probably, is a contracted word, and the primary sense must be, to strike, thrust, push, or throw, that is, to drive. I have not found it in the cognate dialects. If g or other palatal letter is lost, it corresponds in elements with the L. plaga, Gr. πλῆγη, L. plaga, Eng. flou. But blow, a stroke, is written like the verb to blow, the Latin fluo, and blow to blossom. The letter lost is probably a dental, and the original was blod, or blöth, in which case the word has the elements of loud, laudo, claudo, lad, &c.]

1. The act of striking; more generally, the stroke; a violent application of the hand, fist, or an instrument, to an object.

2. The fatal stroke; a stroke that kills; hence, death.

3. An act of hostility; as, the nation which strikes the first blow. Hence, to come to blows, is to engage in combat, whether by individuals, armies, fleets, or nations; and when by nations, it is war.

4. A sudden calamity; a sudden or severe evil. In like manner, plaga, in Latin, gives rise to the Eng. plague.

5. A single act; a sudden event; as, to gain or lose a province at a blow, or by one blow. At a stroke is used in like manner.

6. An ovum or egg deposited by a fly on flesh or other substance, called a fly-blow.

BLOW, v. i.; ppr. Blowz; pp. Blown. [Sax. blawen, blowan, to blow as wind; blowan, to blossom or blow, as a flower; D. blowen, to blossom; G. blähen, to swell or inflate; L. fluo, to blow. This word, probably, is from the same root as bloom, blossom, blow, a flower; W. bloden. See BLOSSOM.]

Blown upon: made common or stale; as, a passage in an author not yet blown upon. Addison.

BLOW-PIPE, n. [blow and pipe.] An instrument by which a blast or current of air is driven through the flame of a lamp or candle, and that flame directed upon a mineral substance, to fuse or vitrify it.

Blow-pipe of the artist: a conical tube of brass, glass, or other substance, usually a quarter of an inch in diameter at one end, and capillary, or nearly so, at the other, where it is bent nearly to a right angle. This is used to propel a jet of air from the lungs, through the flame of a lamp or candle, upon the substance to be fused.

Blow-pipe of the mineralogist: the same instrument, substantially, as the foregoing, but usually fitted with an ivory or silver mouth-piece, and with several movable jets, to produce flames of different sizes. Its office is to produce instantly a furnace heat, on minute fragments of mineral substances, supported on charcoal, by platina forceps, &c.

Compound blow-pipe of Dr. Hare, invented in 1801; an instrument in which oxygen and hydrogen, propelled by hydrostatic or other pressure, coming from separate reservoirs, in the proportions requisite to form water, are made to unite in a capillary orifice, at the moment when they are kindled. The heat produced, when the focus is formed on charcoal or any non-conducting substance, is such as to melt every thing but the diamond, to burn the metals, and to dissipate in vapor, or in gaseous forms, most known substances.

The blow-pipe of Newman, Clarke, &c., is the compound blow-pipe of Dr. Hare, with some unimportant modifications. Silliman.

BONE, n. [Sax. ban; Sw. ben; D. been, bone or leg; Ger. bein, a leg; Dan. been, leg or bone. The sense probably is, that which is set or fixed.]

1. A firm, hard substance, of a dull white color, composing the skeleton or firmer part of the body, in the higher orders of animals. The bones of an animal support all the softer parts, as the flesh and vessels. They vary in texture in different bones, and in different parts of the same bone. The long bones are compact in their middle portion, with a central cavity occupied by a network of plates and fibers, and cellular or spongy at the extremities. The flat bones are compact externally, and cellular internally. The bones in a fetus are soft and cartilaginous, but they gradually harden with age. The ends of the long bones are larger than the middle part, which renders the articulations more firm, and in the fetus they are distinct portions, called epiphyses. Bones are supplied with blood-vessels, and in the fetus, or in a diseased state, are very vascular. They are also furnished with nerves and absorbents, though less easily detected in a sound state. They are covered with a thin, strong membrane, called the periosteum, which, together with the bones, has very little sensibility in a sound state, but when inflamed is extremely sensible. Their cells and cavities are occupied by a fatty substance, called the medulla or marrow. They consist of earthy matter rather more than half, fatty matter one tenth, and cartilage about one third of the whole. The earthy matter gives them their solidity, and consists of phosphate of lime, with a small portion of carbonate of lime and phosphate of magnesia. Cyc. Wistar. Thomson.

2. A piece of bone, with fragments of meat adhering to it.

To be upon the bones, is to attack. [Little used, and vulgar.]

BOODI, n. In Eastern Asia, a general name for the divinity. Malcom.

BOODI-ISM, n. A system of religion in Eastern Asia, embraced by more than one third of the human race. It teaches that, at distant intervals, a Boodh, or deity, appears, to restore the world from a state of ignorance and decay, and then sinks into a state of entire non-existence, or rather, perhaps, of bare existence without attributes, action, or consciousness. This state, called Nirvana, or Nibban, is regarded as the ultimate supreme good, and the highest reward of virtue among men. Four Boodhs have thus appeared in the world, and passed into Nirvana, the last of whom, Gaudama, became incarnate about 500 years before Christ. From his death, in 543 B. C., many thousand years will elapse before the appearance of another; so that the system, in the mean time, is practically one of pure atheism. The objects of worship, until another Boodh appears, are the relics and images of Gaudama. E. F. Salisbury. Malcom.

BOODI-IST, n. One who maintains the doctrines of Boodhism.

BOR'OUGH, (bur'ro), n. [Goth. baigris; Sax. burg, burh, beorh, beorg, byrig; It. brog; Fr. bourg; It. borgo; Sp. burgo; D. burg and berg; Dan. borg; Arm. bourg; G. burg and berg; Gr. πυργος; Ar. برج borachon; Sans. bura. This word, in Saxon, is interpreted a hill, heap, mountain, fortification, castle, tower, city, house, and tomb. Hence Perga in Pamphylia, Bergen in Norway, Burgos in Spain, and probably Prague in Bohemia. In W. bur, biere, signifies a wall, rampart, or work for defense, and bur-dale is a burgess. But the original sense probably is found in the verb Sax. beorgan, D. and G. bergen, Russ. beragu, to keep, or save, that is, to make close or secure. Hence it coincides with park, and L. parca, saving. (See the next word.) If the noun is the primary word, denoting hill, this is from throwing together, collecting; a sense allied to that of making fast or close.]

Originally, a fortified city or town; hence, a hill, for hills were selected for places of defense. But in later times, the term city was substituted to denote an episcopal town, in which was the see of a bishop, and that of borough was retained for the rest. At present, the name is given appropriately to such towns and villages as send representatives or burgesses to parliament. Some boroughs are incorporated, others are not. Blackstone. Encyc.

In Connecticut, this word, borough, is used for a town, or a part of a town, or a village, incorporated with certain privileges, distinct from those of other towns and of cities.

In Scotland, a borough is a body corporate, consisting of the inhabitants of a certain district, erected by the sovereign, with a certain jurisdiction. Boroughs are erected to be held of the sovereign, as is generally the case of royal boroughs; or of the superior of the lands included, as in the case of boroughs of regality and barony. Royal boroughs are generally erected for the advantage of trade. Encyc.

BOR'OUGH, (bur'ro), n. [Sax. borhor, a surety; bor-gian, to borrow; borg, interest; borga, a debtor, a surety; borgued, a promise or bond for appearance, a pledge; borg-bryce, burg-break, violation of pledge; borgkand, borgkand, a surety or bail; borrgan, to keep, guard, or preserve; G. and D. borgen, to borrow. See the preceding word.]

In Saxon times, a main pledge, or association of men, who were sureties or free pledges to the king for the good behavior of each other, and if any offense was committed in their district, they were bound to have the offender forthcoming. The association of ten men was called a tithing or decennaria; the presiding man was called the tithing-man or head-borough; or, in some places, borsholder, borough's elder. This society was called, also, fruburg, free-burg, frank-pledge. Ten tithings formed a hundred, consisting of that number of sureties, and this denomination is still given to the districts comprehended in the association. The term seems to have been used both for the society and for each surety. The word main, hand, which is attached to this society, or their mutual assurance, indicates that the agreement was ratified by shaking hands. Spelman. Blackstone. Cowel.

Some writers have suggested that the application of this word to towns sprung from those associations, and of course was posterior to them in time. [See Encyc., art. Borough.] But the word was used for a town or castle in other nations, and in Asia, doubtless long before the origin of the frank-pledge.

BOR'OUGH EN'GLISH, a customary descent of lands and tenements to the youngest son, instead of the eldest; or, if the owner leaves no son, to the youngest brother. Blackstone. Cowel.

BOR'OUGH HEAD; the same as HEAD-BOROUGH, the chief of a borough. Ash.

In C. deut. a bag, a purse, seems to be the Sp. botilla. In Fr. botte is a boot, a bunch, or bundle, botte de foin, a bottle of hay. It would seem that botte is primarily a bag, and from the sense of swelling, bulging, or collecting into a bunch; if so, the word was originally applied to the bags of skins used as bottles in Asia. Yet the primary sense is not easily ascertained. The Arabic bas ω.

Bŷ batta, a duck, Sp. pato, and "urceus coriaceus in quo liquidiora circumferunt vitæora." Cast.

1. A hollow vessel of glass, wood, leather, or other material, with a narrow mouth, for holding and carrying liquors. The Oriental nations use skins or leather for the conveyance of liquors; and of this kind are the bottles mentioned in Scripture: "Put new wine into new bottles." In Europe and America, glass is used for bottles of all kinds; and farrin- ers use small kegs or hollow vessels of wood, which are called bottles. The small kinds of glass bottles are called vials or phials.

BOTTOM-RY, n. [from bottom.] The act of borrowing money, and pledging the keel or bottom of the ship, that is, the ship itself, as security for the repayment of the money. The contract of bottomry is in the nature of a mortgage; the owner of a ship borrowing money to enable him to carry on a voyage, and pledging the ship as security for the money. If the ship is lost, the lender loses the money; but if the ship arrives safe, he is to receive the money lent, with the interest or premium stipulated, although it may exceed the legal rate of interest. The tackle of the ship, also, is answerable for the debt, as well as the person of the borrower. When a loan is made upon the goods shipped, the borrower is said to take up money at responsantia, as he is bound personally to answer the contract.

BOTTOM-Y, n. [from the same root as but, buton.] In heraldry, a cross bottomy terminates at each end in three buds, knots, or buttons, resembling, in some measure, the three-leaved grass.

1. A limit; the line which comprehends the whole of any given object or space. It differs from boundary. See the latter.

Bound is applied to kingdoms, states, cities, towns, tracts of land, and to territorial jurisdiction.

2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained; the limit of indulgence or desire; as, the love of money knows no bounds.

3. A leap; a spring; a jump; a rebound. [Fr. bondir, to spring.]

4. In dancing, a spring from one foot to the other.

BOUND, v. t. To limit; to terminate; to fix the furthest point of extension, whether of natural or moral objects, as of land, or empire, or of passion, desire, indulgence. Hence, to restrain or confine; as, to bound our wishes. To bound in, is hardly legitimate.

2. To mention the boundaries of a country; as, to bound France.

3. To make to bound.

BOUND, v. i. [Fr. bondir; Arm. boundgiza.]

1. To leap; to jump; to spring; to move forward by leaps.

2. To rebound; but the sense is the same.

BOUND, pret. and pp. of Bind. As a participle, made fast by a band, or by chains or fetters; obliged by moral ties; a bound; or restrained.

2. As a participle, or perhaps more properly an adjective, destined; tending; going; or intending to go, with to or for; as, a ship is bound to Cadiz, or for Cadiz.

The application of this word, in this use, is taken from the orders given for the government of the voyage, implying obligation, or from tending, stretching. So destined implies being bound.

Bound is used in composition, as in ice-bound, wind-bound, when a ship is confined or prevented from sailing by ice or by contrary winds.

BOUND'ARY, n. A limit; a bound.

This word is thus used as synonymous with bound. But the real sense is, a visible mark designating a limit. Bound is the limit itself, or furthest point of extension, and may be an imaginary line; but boundary is the thing which ascertains the limit; terminus, not finis. Thus, by a statute of Connecticut, it is enacted, That the inhabitants of every town shall procure its bounds to be set out by such marks and boundaries as may be a plain direction for the future; which marks and boundaries shall be a great heap of stones or a ditch of six feet long, &c. This distinction is observed also in the statute of Massachusetts. But the two words are, in ordinary use, confounded.

BOUND-BAILIFF, n. An officer appointed by a sheriff to execute process; so denominated from the bond given for the faithful discharge of his trust.

BOUND'ED, pp. Limited; confined; restrained.

BOUND'EN, [from bind.] It was originally a participle, but is now used only as an adjective; as, it is our bounden duty.

BOUND'EN-LY, adv. In a dutiful manner.

BOUND'ER, n. One that limits; a boundary.

BOUND'ING, pp. Limiting; confining; restraining; leaping; springing; rebounding; advancing with leaps.

BOUND'ING-STONE, n. A stone to play with.

BOUND'-STONE, n.

BOUND'LESS, a. Unlimited; unconfined; innumerable; illimitable; as, boundless space; boundless power.

BOUND'LESS-LY, adv. Without bound or limit.

BOUND'LESS-NESS, n. The quality of being without limits.

BOUND'TE-OUS, a. [See Bountiful.] Liberal in charity; disposed to give freely; generous; munificent; beneficent; free in bestowing gifts; as, bounteous nature. It is used chiefly in poetry for bountiful.

BOUND'TE-OUS-LY, adv. Liberally; generously; largely; freely.

BOUND'TE-OUS-NESS, n. Liberality in bestowing gifts or favors; munificence; kindness.

BOUND'TI-FUL, a. [from bounty and full.] Free to give; liberal in bestowing gifts and favors; munificent; generous.

God, the bountiful Author of our being.

It is followed by of before the thing given, and to before the person receiving.

BOUND'TI-FULLY, adv. Liberally; largely; in a bountiful manner.

BOUND'TI-FULNESS, n. The quality of being bountiful; liberality in the bestowment of gifts and favors.

BOUND'TI-HEAD, (-hed), n. Goodness. [Obs.]

BOUND'TI-HOOD, n.

BOUND'TY, n. [Fr. bonté, goodness, excellence; favor; It. bontà; L. bonitas, from bonus, good.]

1. Liberality in bestowing gifts and favors; generosity; munificence. The word includes the gift or favor, and the kindness of disposition with which it is bestowed; or a favor bestowed with a benevolent disposition. This distinguishes it from a mere gift. It is also observed by Johnson, that it differs from charity, as a present from an alma, in not being bestowed upon persons absolutely necessitous. This is often the case; but bounty includes charity, as the genus comprehends the species; charity, however, does not necessarily include bounty, for charity, or an alma, may be given with reluctance.

The word may be used also for a free gift; 2 Cor. ix. 5; or a disposition to give, without the gift; goodness in general. Spenser.

2. A premium offered or given to induce men to enlist into the public service; or to encourage any branch of industry, as husbandry, manufactures, or commerce.

Queen Anne's bounty; a provision made in her reign for augmenting poor clerical livings.

BOY, n. [Pers. bach, a boy; W. baggen, from bag, little; Arm. baguel, a child; bugale, boyish; Sw. pojke, a young boy; Dan. poj; Fr. page. (See Boys and Puo.) Boy is a contracted word, and probably the L. puer; for puer, for we see by puella that r is not radical. So the Gr. παῖς probably is contracted, for the derivative verb, παῖς, forms παῖς, παῖς. The radical letters probably are lg or lg.]

A male child, from birth to the age of puberty; but in general, applied to males under ten or twelve years of age; a lad. Sometimes it is used in contempt for a young man, indicating immaturity, want of vigor or judgment.

BOY, v. t. To treat as a boy.

Johnson.

Rather, to treat as a boy; to imitate a boy in action. The passage in Shakespeare, in which this word is found, is supposed to allude to the practice of boys acting women's parts on the stage.

BRACE, n. [Fr. bras; Sp. braso; Port. braco; Arm. brach, or brch; Ir. brac, and raig; W. brac; Corn. brack, or brch; L. brachium; Gr. βραχίον, the arm. This word furnishes a clear and decisive evidence of the change of n palatal letter into a sibilant. The change comes through the Spanish or other Celtic dialect, brach, braco, the Sp. r being originally a palatal or guttural; thence to the Fr. bras, and Eng. brace. In like manner, Durazzo is formed from Dyr-rachium. The Greek verbs furnish a multitude of similar changes. This word furnishes also a proof that b is a prefix; for in Irish, brac is written also raig. The sense of arm is, that which breaks forth, a shoot. From bras, the French have embrasser, to embrace, and in Sp. branzas is braces, and bracear is to brace, and to swing the arms. Brace, in naval affairs, is in D. bras; Dan. bras, and brase, to brace. Qu. Is this the same word as the Fr. bras, an arm?]

1. In architecture, a piece of timber framed in with bevel joints, to keep the building from swerving either way. It extends like an arm from the post or main timber.

2. That which holds any thing tight; a cinchure or bandage. The braces of a drum are not bands.

3. A pair; a couple; as, a brace of ducks. It is used of persons only in contempt, or in a style of drollery.

BREZZE, n. [Sax. brisa, from its sound resembling FLY,] resembling a breeze.

A name given to various species of two-winged insects, of the family Tabanidae, noted for buzzing about animals and tormenting them by sucking their blood. The bot-fly has also sometimes been called the breeze-fly.

The name breeze is also given to different species of the genus Cestrus. Cyc. Encyc.

BREEZE, n. [It. brezza, a cold, windy mist; Sp. brisa, a breeze; Sw. brisa, to be fervid, to boil, to murmur; Dan. bræse, to rush, roar, or foam, to rise in waves; brusen, the rustling of the wind, a humming or buzzing, fermentation. In French sea language, brise, a breeze; Fr. bruiser and bruiser, to boil; Fr. brasser, to brew; W. bryis, hasty, from rhyis, a rushing. These words seem all to have a common root. See RUSH.]

1. A light wind; a gentle gale.

From land a gentle breeze arose at night. Dryden.

2. A shifting wind, that blows from the sea or from the land, for a certain time, by night or by day. Such breezes are common in the tropical regions, and in a good degree regular. The wind from the sea is called a sea breeze, and that from the land, a land breeze. In general, the sea breeze blows in the day-time, and the land breeze at night. The like breezes are common, in the summer months, in the temperate latitudes.

1. Shortness, applied to time; as, the brevity of human life.

2. Shortness; conciseness; contraction into few words; applied to discourses or writings. Dryden.

BREW, v. t. [Sax. bruan, to brew; bric, broth; D. browen, to brew, to contrive, to mix; G. brauen. These seem to be contractions of the Gothic; Sw. brugga; Dan. brygge, to brew. The Russ. has brucha. The Welsh has bruce, a boiling, stir, tumult, from bruc, something rough; and it has also brun, to boil or bubble, whence bruneseu, to brew, from br, fury, impulse. Our word brew seems to be directly from the Saxon. The sense is, to stir, boil, or agitate with violence.]

1. In a general sense, to boil, and mix; hence in Saxon, as a noun, it signifies broth or pottage; Old Eng. brewis.

2. In a more restricted sense, to make beer, ale, or other similar liquor, from malt; or to prepare a liquor from malt and hops, and, in private families, from other materials, by steeping, boiling, and fermenta-

BRIBE, n. [Fr. brabe. In Pers. پارہ parah, is a bribe, a half, piece, bit, segment, a morsel. Fr. bride, a piece of bread.]

1. A price, reward, gift, or favor bestowed or promised with a view to pervert the judgment or corrupt the conduct of a judge, witness, or other person. A bribe is a consideration given or promised to a person, to induce him to decide a cause, give testimony, or perform some act contrary to what he knows to be truth, justice, or rectitude. It is not used in a good sense unless in familiar language.

2. That which seduces.

Not the bribes of sordid wealth can seduce to leave these ever blooming sweets. Acensid.

BRIRE, v. t. To give or promise a reward or consideration, with a view to pervert the judgment or corrupt the conduct. To hire for bad purposes; to purchase the decision of a judge, the testimony of a witness, or the performance of some act contrary to known truth, justice, or rectitude.

2. To gain by a bribe.

In familiar language, it is sometimes used in a good sense; as, to bribe a child to take a medicine. Dryden has used the word in a good sense, in solemn language; but such use is rare, and hardly legitimate.

BRIBE-DE-VOUR'ING, a. Greedy of bribes or presents; as, bribe-devouring kings. Mifford.

BRIBE-PAN'DER, n. [bribe and pander.] One who procures bribes. Burke.

BRIBERY, n. The act or practice of giving or taking rewards for corrupt practices; the act of paying or receiving a reward for a false judgment or testimony, or for the performance of that which is known to be illegal or unjust. It is applied both to him who gives, and to him who receives the compensation, but appropriately to the giver.

BRICK, n. [Fr. brigue, a brick, and a little loaf; lc. brice, or brice; Arm. brigen; supposed to be a contraction of L. imbrex, a gutter-tile, from imber, a shower, which is probably a compound, of which the last syllable is from Gr. βαρυω, whence lc. imbricari, to get drunk. See Esauvrv.]

1. A mass of earth, chiefly clay, first moistened and made fine by grinding or treading, then formed into a long square in a mold, dried and baked or burnt in a kiln; used in buildings and walls.

2. A loaf shaped like a brick.

BRICK, v. t. To lay or pave with bricks. Swift.

2. To imitate or counterfeit a brick wall on plaster, by smearing it with red ochre, and making the joints with an edge-tool, filling them with fine plaster.

BRID/AL, n. The nuptial festival. Dryden.

BRID/AL-TY, n. Celebration of the nuptial feast. [Not used.]

BRIDE, n. [Sax. bryd; Sw. brud; D. bruid; G. brant; Dan. brud; Arm. pryed, prid; W. prid-verch, prid-as-verch, a bride; lc. brideg; W. pridi o verch, to be married; Ar. pridat, to marry; Corn. brnen-prid, a bride; W. prid-eab, a bride-mab, bridegroom; Arm. pridid, wedlock. It seems, by the Celtic dialects, that bride is primarily an adjective used with the name of maid or woman, as, bridegroom is the same word with the name of a man. In W. prid-awd, the root of *prid*as, signifies appropriate, proper, fit; pridi, to render appropriate, to espouse, to marry.]

1. A woman newly married. Johnson.

But the name is applied to a woman at the marriage festival, before she is married, as well as after the ceremony.

2. A woman espoused, or contracted to be married. See the case of Lewellyn, prince of Wales. Henry's Hist. of Britain, b. iv. ch. i. sect. 2. [This is the true original sense of the word.] BRIDE/BED, n. [Fr. bride and bed.] The marriage bed. Prior.

BRIDE/CAKE, n. [Fr. bride and cake.] The cake which is made for the guests at a wedding; called, in the United States, wedding-cake.

BRIDE/CHAM-BER, n. The nuptial apartment.

BRIDE/GROOM, n. [Originally and properly bridegroom, from Sax. brydgama; Sw. brudgumme; D. brudgom; Ger. bräutigam; Dan. brudgom; a compound of bride and gam, gama, a man, which, by our ancestors, was pronounced groom. This word, by a mispronouncing of the last syllable, has been corrupted into bridegroom, which signifies a bride's hostler; groom being a Persian word, signifying a man who has the care of horses.]

A man newly married; or a man about to be married. The passage of Shakspeare, cited by Johnson, proves that the last definition is just.

*As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage.*

BRIDE/MAID, n. [Fr. bride and maid.] A woman who attends on a bride at her wedding.

BRIDE/MAW, n. [Fr. bride and maw.] A man who attends upon a bridegroom and bride at their marriage. I have generally heard these words pronounced bride's man and bride's maid.

BRIDE/STAKE, n. A stake or post set in the ground to dance round. B. Jonson.

BRID/ED, a. Made a bride.

BRIDE/WELL, n. A house of correction for the confinement of disorderly persons; so called from the palace built near St. Bride's or Bridget's well, in London, which was turned into a workhouse. Johnson.

BRIDGE, n. [Sax. bric, bricg, brigg, or bryc; lc. Dan. broc; Sw. bryggia, bro; D. brug; Ger. brücke; Prus. brigger.]

1. Any structure of wood, stone, brick, or iron, raised over a river, pond, or lake, for the passage of men and other animals. Among rude nations, bridges are sometimes formed of other materials; and sometimes they are formed of boats, or logs of wood lying on the water, fastened together, covered with planks, and called floating bridges. A bridge over a marsh, is made of logs, or other materials, laid upon the surface of the earth.

Pendent or hanging bridges are not supported by posts, but by the peculiar structure of the frame, resting only on the abutments.

A draw bridge, is one which is made with hinges, and may be raised or opened. Such bridges are constructed in fortifications, to hinder the passage of a ditch or moat; and over rivers, that the passage of vessels may not be interrupted.

A flying bridge, is made of pontoons, light boats, hollow beams, empty casks, or the like. They are made, as occasion requires, for the passage of armies.

A flying bridge, is also constructed in such a manner as to move from one side of a river to the other, being made fast in the middle of the river by a cable and an anchor. Encyc.

2. The upper, bony part of the nose is called the bridge of the nose.

3. The part of a stringed instrument of music, over which the strings are stretched, and by which they are raised.

4. In gunnery, the two pieces of timber which go between the two trunnions of a gun-carriage. Encyc.

BRIDGE, v. t. To build a bridge or bridges over; as, to bridge a river.

2. To erect bridges on; to make a passage by a bridge or bridges. Milton.

BRIDGE/HEAD, (-hed), n. A fortification covering the extremity of a bridge nearest the enemy. [Fr. tête de pont.] P. Cyc.

BRIDGE/PP, pp. Covered or furnished with a bridge.

BRIDGE/LESS, a. Having no bridge.

BRIDGE/ING, ppr. Erecting a bridge; building a bridge over.

BRIDGE/Y, a. Full of bridges. [Not used.] Sherwood.

BRID/LE, n. [Sax. bril, or bridel; Fr. bride; Arm. brid; D. brüel, a bridle; Sp. brida, the reins of a bridle; Port. brida.]

1. The instrument with which a horse is governed and restrained by a rider; consisting of a head-stall, a bit, and reins, with other appendages, according to its particular form and use.

2. A restraint; a curb; a check. Watts.

3. A short piece of cable, well served, attached to a swivel on a chain, laid in a harbor, and the upper end drawn into a ship and secured to the bits. The use is to enable a ship, when moored, to veer with the wind and tide. Mar. Dict.

Bowline bridles, are short legs or pieces of rope, running through iron thimbles, by which the bowline attaches to different places on the leech or edge of a large sail. Mar. Dict.

BRID/LE, v. t. To put on a bridle; as, to bridle a horse.

2. To restrain, guide, or govern; to check, curb, or control; as, to bridle the passions; "to bridle a muse." Pope.

Bridle the excursions of youth. Dwight.

BRID/LE, v. i. To hold up the head, and draw in the chin.

BRID/LED, pp. Having a bridle on; restrained.

BRID/LE/HAND, n. [Fr. brille and hand.] The hand which holds the bridle in riding. Sidney.

BRID/LE-WAY, n. A path for travelers on horseback. Bancroft.

BRID/LER, n. One that bridles; one that restrains and governs. Milton.

BRID/LING, ppr. Putting on a bridle; restraining; curbing.

2. Holding up the head, and drawing in the chin. The bridling frown of wrinkled brows. Trumbull.

BRID/OON, n. A light snaffle, or bit of a bridle, in addition to the principal bit, and having a distinct rein.

BRID/F, a. [Fr. bréf; It. Sp. and Port. brevé; L. brevis, whence brevia, to shorten, abbreviate. Brevia, in Latin, is doubtless contracted from the Gr. βραχυς, whence to abridge. The Greek word coincides in elements with break.]

Short; concise. It is used chiefly of language, discourses, writings, and time; as, a brief space, a brief review of a book. Shakspeare applies it to words, to nature, &c. A little brief authority, is authoritatively very limited.

BRIEF, n. [In this sense the word has been received into most of the languages of Europe.]

1. An epitome; a short or concise writing. This is the general sense of the word, as explained by Zonaras on the council of Carthage. It was thus used as early as the third century after Christ. Spelman.

In modern times, an apostolical brief is a letter which the pope dispatches to a prince or other magistrate, relating to public affairs. A brief is distinguished from a bull, in being more concise, written on paper, sealed with red wax, and impressed with the seal of the fisherman, or Peter, in a boat. A bull is more ample, written on parchment, and sealed with lead or green wax. Encyc.

2. In law, an abridgment of a client's case, made out for the instruction of counsel on a trial at law. Encyc. Johnson.

Also, a writ summoning a man to answer to any action; or any precept of the king in writing, issuing from any court, whereby he commands a thing to be done. Covent.

In Scots law, a writ issuing from the chancery, directed to any judge ordinary, commanding and authorizing that judge to call a jury to inquire into the case, and upon their verdict to pronounce sentence. Encyc.

3. A letter patent, from proper authority, authorizing a collection or charitable contribution of money in churches, for any public or private purpose. Brande.

4. A summation or brief statement in writing. Shak. In music, the word, if I mistake not, is now written breec.

BRIEF/LESS, a. Having no brief.

BRIEF/LY, adv. Concisely; in few words. Bacon.

BRIEF/NESS, n. Shortness; conciseness in discourse or writing. Camden.

BRIEF, n. [Sax. brær; lc. Ir. briar, a prickle; Fr. bruyere, heath; Arm. brug. The latter shows this word to be from the root of rough.]

1. In a general sense, a prickly plant or shrub. Is. v. 6. Judges vii. 7.

2. In a limited sense, the sweet-brier and the wild-rub, species of the rose.

BRIEF/ED, (brif'ed), a. Set with briars.

BRIEF/Y, a. Full of briars; rough; thorny. Johnson.

BRIEF/Y, n. A place where briars grow.

BRIG, the termination of names, signifies a bridge, or, perhaps, in some cases, a town, or burg.

BRIG, n. [from brigantine.] A vessel with two masts, square rigged, or rigged nearly like a ship's mainmast and foremast. The term, however, is variously applied by the mariners of different nations. Mar. Dict.

BRIG-ADIER, n. [Fr. brigade; It. brigata; Sp. and S. Port. brigada; perhaps from Ar. فريق farikon, ag-men, turba hominum major; that is, a division, from فريق farika, to break. This word comes to us from the south of Europe, and may have been introduced into Spain by the Moors. If this conjecture is not well founded, I know not the origin of the word. See Cast. Hept. Col. 3084.]

A party or division of troops, or soldiers, whether cavalry or infantry, regular or militia, commanded by a brigadier. It consists of an indeterminate number of regiments, squadrons, or battalions. A brigade of horse is a body of eight or ten squadrons; of infantry, four, five, or six battalions or regiments. A brigade of artillery consists of six pieces, with usually 140 men. A brigade of sappers consists of only eight men.

BRIG-ADIER, v. t. To form into a brigade, or into brigades.

BRIG-AD/ED, pp. Formed into a brigade.

BRIG-AD/ING, ppr. Forming into a brigade.

BRIG-AD/ER, n. [See MAJOR.] An officer appointed by the brigadier, to assist him in the management and ordering of his brigade.

BRIG-AD/IER or BRIG-AD/IER-GENERAL, n. [Fr., from brigade.]

The general officer who commands a brigade, whether of horse or foot, and in rank next below a major general.

BRIG/AND, n. [Fr. brigand; W. brigant, a mountaineer, a plunderer, from W. brig, a top or summit.] A robber; a freebooter; a lawless fellow who lives by plunder, or who belongs to a band of robbers. Warburton.

BRIG-AND-AGE, n. Theft; robbery; plunder. Warburton.

BRIG-AND/DINE, n. [Qu. the origin of this word. In Pers. praghe is a helmet.]

Anciently, a coat of mail. The name has ceased to be used, with the disuse of the thing. It consisted of thin, jointed scales of plate, pliant and easy to the body. Encyc.

BRI-GAN-TINE, n. [Fr. brigantine; Arm. brigantine; It. brigantino; Sp. bergantin; Port. bergantim; D. berkanim. Qu. from L. aphractum, Gr. ἀφρακτος, a vessel without a deck, uncovered. It is usually derived from brigand.] [See BRIG.]

BRIGHT, (brī't), a. [Sax. beorht, bryht, byrht, or bryht, clear, shining, whence beorhtnes, brightness, beorhtian, Goth. bairiga, to shine or be clear, or to manifest; Ar. Ch. Heb. Syr. and Eth. ברק, to shine, or more probably, Eth. ባርባ bareah, to shine, as the Eth.

participle ברקת berht or bercht, corresponds exactly with the Saxon. I have not found this word in any other Teutonic or Gothic language, and the original verb is lost in the Saxon. In Saxon, beorht-theile or brihttheile signifies a moment, the twinkling of an eye. This directs us to the primary sense of the verb, to shine, which is, to shoot, to dart, to glance. That this is the primary sense, we have evidence from the Sax. bryhtan, which is a derivative from bryht, and which signifies a moment, that is, the time of a shoot, or darting, like glance.]

1. Shining; lucid; luminous; splendid; as, a bright sun or star; a bright metal. Thomson.
2. Clear; transparent; as liquors.
3. Evident; clear; manifest to the mind, as light is to the eyes.

BRING, v. l. pret. and pp. BROUGHT. [Sax. bringan; Sw. bringa; Dan. bringe; D. brengen; G. bringen; Goth. bringan. We see by brought, D. bragt, and the Gothic bringan, that n is not radical.]

1. To fetch; to hear, convey, or lead from a distant to a nearer place, or to a person; as, bring me a book from the shelf; bring me a morsel of bread. In this sense, it is opposed to carry; and it is applied to the person bearing or leading, in opposition to sending or transmitting by another.

2. To produce; to procure as a cause; to draw to. Nothing brings a man more honor than to be invariably just.

3. To attract or draw along. In distillation the water brings over with it another substance.

4. To cause to come; to cause to proceed from a distant place, in company, or at the same time; as, to bring a boat over a river; to bring a horse or carriage; to bring a cargo of dry goods.

5. To cause to come to a point, by moral influence; used of the mind, and implying previous remoteness, aversion, alienation, or disagreement; as, to bring the mind to assent to a proposition; or to bring a man to terms by persuasion or argument. In this sense, it is nearly equivalent to persuade, prevail upon, or induce. The same process is effected by custom, and other causes. Habit brings us to relish things at first disagreeable; reflection brings a man to his senses; and whether the process is slow or rapid, the sense of the verb is the same. To bring to the mind any thing before known and forgotten, is to recall; but the sense of bring and recall is the same.

The primary sense is to lead, draw, or cause to come; the sense of conveying or bearing is secondary.

The use of this verb is so extensive, and incorporated into so many peculiar phrases, that it is not easy to reduce its significations within any precise limits. In general, the verb bring implies motion from a place remote, either in a literal or figurative sense. It is used with various modifying words.

To bring back, is to recall, implying previous departure, either in a literal or figurative sense.

To bring about; to bring to pass; to effect; to accomplish; to bring to the desired issue.

To bring forth, is to produce, as young or fruit; also, to bring to light; that is, to make manifest, to disclose.

To bring forward; to cause to advance; to produce to view.

To bring in; to import; to introduce; to bear from a remote place within a certain precinct; to place in a particular condition; to collect things dispersed; to reduce within the limits of law and government; to produce, as income, rent, or revenue; to induce to join, &c.

To bring off; to bear or convey from a distant place; as, to bring off men from an isle; also, to procure to be acquitted; to clear from condemnation; to cause to escape.

To bring on; to cause to begin; as, to bring on an action. Also, to originate or cause to exist; as, to bring on a disease. Also, to bear or convey from a distance; as, to bring on a quantity of goods. Also, to attend, or to aid in advancing; as, to bring one on his way.

To bring over; to bear across; as, to bring over dispatches; to bring over passengers in a boat. Also, to convert by persuasion or other means; to draw to a new party; to cause to change sides, or an opinion.

To bring out; to expose; to detect; to bring to light from concealment; as, to bring out an accomplice or his crimes.

To bring under; to subdue; to repress; to restrain; to reduce to obedience; also, to bring beneath any thing.

To bring up; to nurse; to educate; to instruct; to feed and clothe; to form the manners, and furnish the mind with knowledge. The phrase may comprehend all these particulars. Also, to introduce to practice; as, to bring up a fashion or ceremony. Also, to cause to advance near; as, to bring up forces, or the body of reserve. Also, to bear or convey upward. In navigation, to cast anchor.

To bring down; to cause to come down. Also, to humble or abase; as, to bring down high looks.

To bring to, in navigation, to check the course of a ship, by arranging the sails in such a manner that they shall counteract each other, and keep her nearly stationary. She is then said to be to.

The phrase is used also in applying a rope to the capstan.

To bring by the lee; to incline so rapidly to leeward of the course, when a ship sails large, as to bring the lee-side suddenly to the windward, and, by laying the sails aback, expose her to the danger of over-setting. Mar. Dict.

BURT, n. A flat fish of the turbot kind. Johnson.

BURTHEN. See BURDEN.

BURTON, n. A small tackle formed by two blocks or pulleys, used to set up or lighten the topmost shrouds, and for various other purposes; called also top-burton-tackle. Mar. Dict.

BURY, (ber'y) n. This word is a different orthography of burg, burk, borough. It signifies a house, habitation, or castle, and is retained in many names of places, as in Shrewsbury, Danbury, Aldermanbury. The word is used by Grew for barrow.

BURY, (ber'y) v. t. [Sax. byrian, burgan, to bury; byrgan, a tomb or sepulcher; allied to beorgan, to save.]

1. To deposit a deceased person in the grave; to inter a corpse; to entomb.

2. To cover with earth, as seed sown.

3. To hide; to conceal; to overwhelm; to cover with any thing; as, to bury any one in the ruins of a city.

4. To withdraw or conceal in retirement; as, to bury one's self in a monastery, or in solitude.

5. To commit to the water; to deposit in the ocean; as, dead bodies buried in the deep.

6. To place one thing within another.

They came so buried in her. Shak.

7. To forget and forgive; to hide in oblivion; as, to bury an injury.

To bury the hatchet, in the striking metaphorical language of American Indians, is to lay aside the instruments of war, forget injuries, and make peace.

BURY-ING, (ber'-ing) pp. Interring; hiding; covering with earth; overwhelming.

BURY-ING, (ber'-ing) n. The act of interring the dead; sepulture. John xii. 7.

BURY-ING-GROUND, n. A grave-yard; a place BURY-ING-PLACE, appropriated to the sepulture of the dead; a church-yard.

BUSH, n. [D. bosch; G. busch; Dan. busk; Sw. buske; It. bosco; Sp. bosque; Port. bosque; whence Sp. boscaque, Fr. boisage, It. boscata, a grove or cluster of trees. Qu. Gr. boscos, L. paeco, originally, to feed on sprouts.]

1. A shrub; particularly a shrub with branches rising from or near the root; a thick shrub; also, a cluster of shrubs. With hunters, a fox tail.

2. A thicket or place abounding in trees or bushes. [This was the original sense of the word, as in the Dutch bosch, a wood, and was so used by Chaucer. So this sense it is extensively used in the British colonies, especially at the Cape of Good Hope, where it may have been borrowed from the Dutch.]

3. A branch of a tree fixed or hung out as a tavern sign. Hence, since the branch has been discontinued, a coronated frame of wood, hung out as a tavern sign, is so called. Hence the English proverb, "Good wine needs no bush."

4. A circle of metal let into the sheaves of such blocks as have iron pins, to prevent their wearing.

5. The word is still used in America. [See BUS.] Fairfax uses it in the sense of prepare,

The word is applicable to a like circle in other round holes, as to the key-hole of a watch, the vent of a gun, &c.

This word when applied to sheaves is called bush, but when applied to the circular iron of a cart wheel is, in America, called a box. Qu. It. bosco, the box-tree; boscolo, a little box. Johnson writes it bushel.

BUSH, e. t. To grow thick or bushy. Milton.

BUSH, e. t. To furnish a block with a bush, or to line any orifice with metal to prevent wearing.

BUSHEL, n. [Fr. boisseau; Arm. boscel; Norm. bussel; probably from boiste, bolte, a box; It. boscolo, that is, a little box.]

1. A dry measure, containing eight gallons, or four pecks. The Winchester bushel, used in England from the time of Henry VII. to the year 1826, contains eight gallons of wheat; each gallon, eight pounds of wheat, troy weight; the pound, twelve ounces troy; the ounce, twenty sterling, and the sterling, thirty-two grains of wheat growing in the middle of the ear. The contents are 2150.43 solid inches, equivalent to 113.16 ounces and 14 pennyweights troy. In 1836, the imperial bushel was introduced into England, containing 2218.192 cubic inches; so that 33 of the old or Winchester bushels are very nearly equal to 32 imperial bushels. Brande. The Winchester bushel is used still in the United States.

Bushel signifies both the quantity or capacity, and the vessel which will contain the quantity. But a vessel of this kind is not in use. The half bushel measure is used.

2. In popular language, a large quantity, indefinitely. Johnson.

3. The circle of iron in the nave of a wheel; in America, called a box. [See BUSH.]

BUSHEL-AGE, n. A duty payable on commodities by the bushel. [Not used in the United States.]

BUSHET, n. A wood.

BUSINESS, n. [from bush, bushy.] The quality of being bushy, thick, or intermixed, like the branches of a bush.

BUSH-MAN, n. [D. bosch-man, boschjes-man.] A woodsman; a name which the Dutch give to a tribe of wild and ferocious inhabitants of Africa, near the Cape of Good Hope.

BUSHPMENT, n. [from bush.] A thicket; a cluster of bushes. [Not used.]

BUSHY, a. [from bush.] Full of branches; thick and spreading, like a bush; as, a bushy beard or brier.

2. Full of bushes; overgrown with shrubs. Dryden.

BUSHEL-ED, (hiz'zid) pp. of BUSY.

BUSINESS, (hiz'z-less) a. [See BUSY.] Without business; at leisure; unemployed. Shak.

BUSINESS-LY, (hiz'z-ly) adv. With constant occupation; actively; earnestly; as, to be busy employed.

2. With an air of hurry or importance; with too much curiosity; impudently; officiously. Dryden.

BUSINESS, (hiz'z-ness) n. [See BUSY.] Employment; that which occupies the time, attention, and labor of men, for the purpose of profit or improvement; a word of extensive use and indefinite signification. Business is a particular occupation, as agriculture, trade, mechanic art, or profession, and when used of a particular employment, the word admits of the plural number, businesses. Business is also any temporary employment.

2. Affairs; concerns; as, a man leaves his business in an unsettled state.

3. The subject of employment; that which engages the care and attention.

You are so much the business of our souls. Dryden.

4. Serious engagement; important occupation, in distinction from trivial affairs.

It should be the main business of life to serve God, and obey his commands.

5. Concern; right of action or interposing; as, what business has a man with the disputes of others?

6. A point; a matter of question; something to be examined or considered.

Finess to govern is a perplexed business. Bacon.

7. Something to be done; employment of importance to one's interest, opposed to amusement; as, we have no business in town.

They were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any one. — Judges.

8. Duty, or employment that duty enjoins. A lawyer's business is to do justice to his clients.

To do the business for a man, is to kill, destroy, or ruin him.

BUSINESS-LIKE, a. Being in the true manner of BUSK, n. [Fr. busque.] [business.]

A piece of steel, whalebone, or wood, worn by women on the breast, to form the shape; a sword dependent on fashion. Downe.

BUSK, n. A bush. [Not used.]

BUSK, v. t. To be active or busy. This is probably the Sax. word byrgan, to busy, or the Sp. buscar, to search. Busk is still used in America. [See BUSY.] Fairfax uses it in the sense of prepare, transitively, "to busk them to battle." In the Scotch dialect, it signifies to dress or attire.

BUSKED, (busk't) a. Wearing a busk. Pollok.

BUSKET, n. A small bush, or a compartment of shrubs in a garden. Spenser.

BUSKIN, n. A kind of half boot, or high shoe, covering the foot and leg to the middle, and tied underneath the knee, worn by actors in tragedy on the stage. The buskins of the ancients had very thick soles, to raise the actors and actresses to the stature of the persons they represented. Encyc.

2. In classic authors, the word is used for tragedy. BUSKIN-ED, (busk'ind) a. Dressed in buskins. Milton.

BUSKY, a. Bushy; wooded; shaded or overgrown with trees or shrubs; generally written bosky. [See BUSH.] Shak.

BUSS, n. [Per. بوسيدان bosidan; Ar. بأس bauca, to kiss; L. basio; Fr. baiser; Norm. bescer; Sp. bescar; Port. bejar; It. baciare; D. paesen, to kiss. The verb may be from the noun, and perhaps from the name of the lip; at any rate, from the same radical sense, to push; Per. paiz, the lip; W. and Ir. bua, the lip; D. paes, a kiss, a puss, a fur tippet, a girl; Sp. beso, a kiss; Port. beico, the lip; beijo, a kiss; It. bacio. This word, so venerable for its antiquity and general use, has fallen into disrepute.]

1. A kiss; a salute with the lips.

2. [D. buis; G. buisse; Russ. bussa.] A small vessel, from 50 to 70 tubs in burden, carrying two masts, and two beds, or cabins, one at each end; used in the herring fishery. Encyc. Mar. Dict.

BUSS, v. t. To kiss; to salute with the lips. Shak.

BUST, n. [It. and Sp. busto; Fr. buste; L. bustum.]

1. In sculpture, the figure of a person in relief, showing only the head, shoulders, and stoichi; ordinarily placed on a pedestal or console. In speaking of an antique, we say the head is marble, and the bust porphyry, or bronze; that is, the shoulders and stomach.

2. The chest or thorax; the trunk of the human body. Encyc.

BUSTARD, n. [bust and tarida; It. otarda; Fr. otardin. Ancient Celtic tarida. Pin. 10, 23.]

The Otis tarda, a species of bird of the Galline order, growing to the weight of 25 or 27 pounds, with a breadth of wing of six or seven feet. It inhabits England, and the temperate regions of Europe, and of parts of Asia and Africa, feeding on green corn and other vegetables, and on earth-worms. It runs fast and takes flight with difficulty. Encyc.

BUSTLE, (bust'l) n. [This word may be allied to bust, or to L. festina.]

To stir quick; to be very active; to be very quick in motion, often or usually with the sense of noise or agitation.

And leave the world for me to bustle in. Shak.

BUSTLE, (bust'l) n. Hurry; great stir; rapid motion with noise and agitation; tumult from stirring or agitation; combustion.

All would have been well without this bustle. Spectator.

BUSTLER, (bust'ler) n. An active, stirring person.

BUSTLING, (bust'ling) pp. or a. Stirring; moving actively, with noise or agitation.

BUSTY, n. A bust; sometimes, perhaps, used for a statue. Ashmole.

BUSY, (biz'zy) a. [Sax. bysi, bysig; whence bysig, business, bysgian, to busy; D. bezig, bussy; bezigen, to busy, to use. This word appears, from the Dutch, to be composed of be, the prefix, and zig, the root of see, contracted in inf. to zien, but retained in the pret. zig, and in the derivatives, zigt, slight, zigtbaar, visible. We find bezigen signifies to view. If this opinion is correct, the primary sense is seeing, or closely inspecting.]

1. Employed with constant attention; engaged about something that renders interruption inconvenient; as, a man is busy in posting his books.

My mistress is busy, and can not come. Shak.

2. Actively employed; occupied without cessation; constantly in motion; as, a busy bee. Shak.

3. Active in that which does not concern the person; meddling with or prying into the affairs of others; officious; impudent; hence, troublesome; vexatious. Waller.

4. Much occupied with employment; as, a busy day.

BUSY, (biz'zy) v. t. To employ with constant attention; to keep engaged; to make or keep busy; as, to busy one's self with books.

To be busy with genius and spirits. Locke.

BUSY-BODY, (biz'zy-body) n. [busy and body.] A meddling person; one who officiously concerns himself with the affairs of others. Taylor.

BUSY-ING, (biz'zy-ing) pp. Constantly employing.

BUSY-MINDED, a. Having an active mind.

BUT, part. from butan. [Sax. butan, buton, buta, bute, without, on the outside, abroad; hence, except, or excepting, besides; that is, separated, not included. The verb is not in the Saxon; but in Dutch we have the verb in its primary sense, buten, to rove or wander, to go frebooting; but, booty; buten, out, without, abroad, besides, except; buten board, overboard; buten deur, out of doors; buten huis, an out-house; buten man, an out-man, a stranger; G. beute, booty; Sw. byte, booty; byta, to exchange; Dan. bytte, booty, a parting, division, distribution; bytte, to part, divide, exchange, barter; Sp. botin; It. bottino; Fr. butin, booty. The primary sense of booty is to rove or wander, to part or separate from; applied to persons, it is to wander; applied to things, it may include stripping. But, then, is a contraction of butan, and primarily a participle.

1. Except; besides; unless.
Who can it be, but perjured Lyeon? Smith.
That is, removed, separated, excepted. Lyeon being separated, or excepted, who can it be?

And, but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seized
His waked slalady, he had himself! Shak.
The lands and waters measured. Shak.

That is, except, unless, separate this fact, that infirmity had seized his ability, he had measured the lands and waters.

In this use, but, butan, is a participle, equivalent to excepting, and may be referred to the person speaking, or, more naturally, it is equivalent to excepted, and with the following words, or clause, forming the case absolute.

Who can it be, Lyeon being excepted?
And, but my noble M-or is true of mind, it were enough to put him to all thinking. Shak.
It can not be but Nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her to all her ways. Hooker.
There is no question but the king of Spain will return most of the shaves. Addison.
It is not impossible but I may alter the complexion of my play. Dryden.

In the last three examples, that is omitted after but. It is not impossible but that I may alter the complexion of my play.

In these and all similar phrases, but denotes separation, exception.

2. Only; as, there is but one man present.
A formidable man but to his friends. Dryden.

This use of but is a modern innovation, but perhaps too firmly established to be corrected. In all such phrases, a negative, not, nothing, or other word, is omitted. He is not a formidable man, but to his enemies; that is, except. There is not but one man present; that is, there is not except or besides one present. So, also, "Our light affliction is but for a moment." 2 Cor. iv. Our affliction is not, except for a moment.
If they kill us, we shall but die.—2 Kings vii.

The common people in America retain the original and correct phrase, usually employing a negative. They do not say, I have but one. On the other hand, they say, I have not but one; that is, I have not except one; except one, and I have none. This word but, for butan, is not a conjunction, nor has it the least affinity to that part of speech.

BUT, conj. [Sax. bote, reparation, satisfaction, compensation; and adverbially, moreover, further, that is, something added to make good, to supply that which is wanted, from betan, to make better, or more, to amend, that is, to advance; D. boete; Sw. bôte; Dan. baade; W. baz, advantage. So, in Ger. aber, but, is the Eng. over. In some of these languages, it denotes a fine or penance, that which makes satisfaction. In Danish, profit; baade, to gain or profit; W. bazinn; Goth. botyma, id.; G. buaze, buisse. We use this word as a noun, in the phrase, He gives a guinea to boot, that is, to make good, to satisfy, or by way of addition; and as a verb, in the phrase, What boots it? what gain or profit is it? It is radically the same word as bet in better; and the radical sense is, to advance.]
More; further; noting an addition to supply what is wanting to elucidate or modify the sense of the preceding part of a sentence, or of a discourse, or to continue the discourse, or to exhibit a contrast.

Now able both, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.—1 Cor. xiii.
When pride cometh, then cometh shame; but with the lowly is wisdom.—Prov. xi.
Our wants are many and grievous, but quite of another kind. The house of representatives were well agreed in passing the bill; but the senate dissented.

This word is, in fact, a noun, equivalent to addition or supply; but, in grammatical construction, no inconvenience results from considering it to be a connective.

BUT, a. [Fr. bout, end, extremity, and but, end, aim, design; Arm. but or but. It is sometimes written butte, especially when applied to the end of a plank. It coincides, in sense and elements, with L. peto, Sp. bote, a thrust, botar, to cast, It. butta, botta, buttore, Fr. botte, bouter, Eng. pout, and many other words. See Burr.]
1. A end; a limit; a bound. It is used particularly for the larger end of a thing, as of a piece of timber, or of a fallen tree; that which grows nearest the earth. It is not often applied to the bound or limit of land; yet batted, for bounded, is often used.

2. The end of a plank, in a ship's side or bottom, which unites with another; generally written Burr.
3. A mark or object of ridicule.
4. The foot or end of a play.

BUT, v. i. To be wounded by; to lie contiguous to; a word used in America. [See Amur.]

BUT-END, n. [but and end.] The largest or blunt end of a thing; as, the but-end of a musket, or of a piece of timber. This word is tautological, but and end signifying the same thing; unless but is considered as equivalent to swelling, protuberant.

BUTCHER, n. [Fr. boucher; Arin. bogzer, a butcher; Fr. bocheris; It. bocheria, butchery, shambles. The primary sense probably is to stick or stab, as the Fr. boucher signifies to stop, that is, to set, to thrust.]
1. One who slaughters animals for market; or one whose occupation is to kill animals for the table. The word may, and often does, include the person who cuts up and sells meat.
2. One who kills men, or commands troops to kill them; one who sheds, or causes to be shed, human blood in abundance; applied to princes and conquerors who delight in war, or are remarkable for destroying human life. Locke.

BUTCHER, v. t. To kill or slaughter animals for food, or for market.
2. To murder; but emphatically applied to murder committed with unusual cruelty, at circumstances of uncommon barbarity.

BUTCHER-BIRD, n. The shrike; a name common to different species of birds, of the genus Lanius. One species of this genus is called king-bird, from its courage in attacking hawks and crows. Encyc.
The king-bird is now arranged under the genus Muscicapa, (M. tyrannus). Ed. Encyc.

BUTCHER-RÖW, n. A row of shambles. Whitlock.

BUTCHER-Y, n. The business of slaughtering cattle for the table or for market. Pope.

2. Murder, especially murder committed with unusual barbarity; great slaughter. Shak. Dryden.

3. The place where animals are killed for market; a shambles, or slaughter-house; also, a place where blood is shed. Shak.

BUTLER, n. [Fr. bouteiller, from bouteille, a bottle, that is, the bottler; Ir. butleir, a butler, from buidel, buide, it, bottle.]
A servant or officer in the houses of princes and great men, whose principal business is to take charge of the liquors, plate, &c. Formerly, an officer in the court of France, being the same as the grand echanson, or great cup-bearer, of later times. Encyc.

BUTLER-AGE, n. A duty of two shillings on every tun of wine imported into England by foreigners or merchant strangers. It was a composition for the privileges granted to them by King John and Edward I., and originally received by the crown; but it has been granted to certain noblemen. It was called butlerage, because originally paid to the king's butler for the king. Blackstone. Encyc.

BUTLER-SHIP, n. The office of a butler. Gen. xl. 21.

BUTMENT, n. [Old Fr. uboatment, from bout, but, end.]
1. A buttress of an arch; the supporter, or that part which joins it to the upright pier. Encyc.
2. The mass of stone or solid work at the end of a bridge, by which the extreme arches are sustained. The mass of stone at the end of a timber bridge, without arches, is called by the same name. It is written also ABUTMENT.

BUTS-SHAFT, n. [but and shaft.] An arrow to shoot at butts with. B. Janson.

BUTT, a. [See Burr.] Literally, end, furthest point. Hence, a mark to be shot at; the point where a mark is set or fixed to be shot at. Dryden.

2. The point to which a purpose or effort is directed. Shak.

3. The object of aim; the thing against which an attack is directed. Clarendon.

4. The person at whom ridicule, jests, or contempt are directed; as, the butt of ridicule. Spectator.

5. A push or thrust given by the head of an animal; as, the butt of a ram. Also, a thrust in fencing.

6. A cask whose contents are 126 gallons of wine, or two hogsheds; called also a pipe. A butt of beer is 105 gallons, and from 1500 to 2200 weight of eurlants is a butt. [Sax. butte or bytt; Sp. bota.] Johnson.

7. The end of a plank in a ship's side of bottom. Mar. Dict.

8. A particular kind of hinge for doors, &c.

9. Butts and bounds. See Burrs.

10. A butt's length; the ordinary distance from the place of shooting to the butt, or mark; as, not two butt's length from the town. Rich. Dict.

BUTT, v. i. [W. picturac, to butt, to thrust; It. buttare; Sp. botar; Port. botar, to thrust or throw; Fr. butte; a thrust; from the same root, probably, as but, bout; L. peto.]
To thrust the head forward; to strike by thrusting the head against, as an ox or a ram. Wotton. Dryden.

BUTTED, pp. Struck with the head.

2. A. Having obtusals; as, the land is butted and bounded as follows.

BUTTER, n. [Sax. buter, butera; D. boter; Ger. butter; D. butyrum; Gr. butyros.]
An oily substance obtained from cream or milk by churning. Agitation separates the fat or oily part of milk from the serous and curdy part, called butter-milk.

Butter; in the old chemistry, a name given to some of the chlorids, from their soft, butyrous consistence, when recently prepared; as,
Butter of antimony; now called the sesquichlorid of antimony, and obtained by distilling a mixture of corrosive sublimate and antimony.

Butter of arsenic; the sesquichlorid of arsenic, obtained by a like process.

Butter of bismuth; the chlorid of bismuth.

Butter of tin; sublimated muriate of tin.

Butter of zinc; the chlorid of zinc.

Butter; in vegetable chemistry, a name given to certain concrete fat oils, which remain solid, or of a butyrous consistence, at the ordinary temperature, as those of the cocoa-nut and the cacao.

2. Gay; lively; brisk. Milton. Dryden.

3. Wanton; jolly.

BUXOM-LY, adv. Obediently. [Obs.]

2. Wantonly; amorously. Johnson.

BUXOM-NESS, n. Meekness; obedience. [Obs.]

2. Briskness; amorousness. [Chaucer.]

BUY, (by), v. t.; pp. BOUGHT, (bawt). [Sax. bigan, or byrgan, bygan; Goth. byrgan, to buy.]

1. To acquire the property, right, or title, to any thing, by paying a consideration or an equivalent in money. It differs from barter only in this—that in barter, the consideration or equivalent is some species of commodity; in purchase, the consideration is money paid or promised. To purchase; to acquire by paying a price to the satisfaction of the seller; opposed to sell.

2. To procure by a consideration given, or by something that is deemed worth the thing bought; to procure at a price; as, to buy pleasure with praise; to buy favor with flattery. Denham.

3. To bribe; to corrupt or pervert the judgment, by paying a consideration.

To buy off; to influence to compliance; to cause to bend or yield by some consideration; as, to buy off conscience; to detach by a consideration given; as, to buy off one from a party.

To buy out; to buy off, or detach from. Shak.

2. To purchase the share or shares of a person in a stock, fund, or partnership, by which the seller is separated from the company, and the purchaser takes his place; as, A buys out B. To purchase stock in any fund or partnership, is to buy in.

To buy on credit, is to purchase a thing, on a promise in fact or in law, to make payment at a future day.

To buy the refusal, is to give money for the right of purchasing, at a fixed price, at a future time.

To buy the small-pox, in South Wales, is to receive it by inoculation. Encyc.

In popular language, to buy is to pay dear for, as in Chaucer.

BUY, v. i. To negotiate, or treat about a purchase. Shak.

BUYER, n. One who buys; a purchaser. Walton.

BUYING, (by'ing), pp. Purchasing.

BUZZ, v. i. [It. buzziare, to whisper; Pers. بيزيدن buzidan, to blow, as wind.]

1. To make a low, humming sound, as bees; to make the sound of z, with an expiration of breath between the tongue and the roof of the mouth or upper teeth.

2. To whisper; to speak with a low, humming voice; to make a low, humming sound. Shak. Haywood.

BUZZ, v. t. To whisper; to spread, as report, by whispers, or to spread secretly. Bentley.

BUZZ, n. The noise of bees; also, a whisper. South. Bacon.

BUZZARD, n. [D. buzaard; G. bussaar, bussard; It. bozzago; Fr. buze, buse, or busard; Pers. باز bauz, a hawk.]

1. A species of Falco, or hawk, the Falco buteo; a rapacious, but sluggish bird; the breast usually of a yellowish white; the upper parts of a deep brown. In some parts of America, according to Pennant, it is called the great hen-hawk, from its feeding on poultry. Pennant. Encyc.

The bird referred to by Pennant is the Falco butorides, or short-winged buzzard. Mass. Rep.

2. A blockhead; a dunce. Johnson.

BUZZARD, a. Senseless; stupid. Milton.

BUZZARD-ET, n. A species of Falco, or hawk, resembling the buzzard in most respects; but its legs are, in proportion, rather longer. Pennant.

BUZZER, n. A whisperer; one who is busy in telling tales secretly. Shak.

BUZZING, pp. or a. Making a low, humming sound; whispering; tattling in secret.

BUZZING-LY, adv. With a low, humming sound.

BY, prep. [Sax. be or big; Goth. bi; Sw. and Dan. be; D. by; G. bei; all contracted from big. This word, in composition, is often written be, as in because, besiege. In Sw. and Dan. it is used only in composition. The Sw. and Dan. pag, and Russ. po, may be from a different root, although they are nearly allied in signification, and may be the same word differently written. This preposition occurs as a prefix in all the Shemitic languages, contracted, indeed, into z. (See the Introduction.) The primary sense is, pressing, close, near, at; but in Goth. and Sax. it signifies, also, about, according to, on, with, against, after, &c. In some of these senses, it coincides with the Russ. po. The original verb to which this word belongs, most probably signifies to pass, to go, or come, to near, to press.]

1. Near; close; as, sit by me; that house stands by a river. So in It. presso, from l. pressus; Fr. près, auprès. Hence, by was formerly used for against; as, in our translation of the Bible, "though I know nothing by myself, (quod iniquo auidio.)" 1 Cor. iv. 4. This use of the word continued down to the time of Baxter.

2. Near, in motion; as, to move, go, or pass, by a church. But it seems in other phrases, or with a verb in the past time, to signify past, gone beyond; as, the procession is gone by; the hour is gone by; John went by. We now use past as an equivalent word; the procession is gone past. Gone by, is in strictness tautology, as now used; but I apprehend by signifies primarily near.

3. Through, or with, denoting the agent, means, instrument, or cause; as, a city is destroyed by fire; profit is made by commerce; to take by force. This use answers to that of the Latin per, through, denoting a passing, acting, agency, or instrumentality.

4. "Day by day;" "year by year;" "article by article." In these phrases, by denotes passing from one to another, or each particular separately taken.

5. "By the space of seven years." In this phrase, by denotes through, passing, or continuing, during

6. "By this time, the sun had risen." The word here seems to denote at, present, or come to.

7. According to; as, this appears by his own account; these are good rules to live by.

8. On; as, to pass by land or water; great battles by sea and land. In the latter phrase, at or on might be substituted for by.

9. It is placed before words denoting quantity, measure, or proportion; as, to sell by the pound; to work by the rod or perch; this line is longer by a tenth.

10. It is used to represent the means or instrument of swearing, or affirming; as, to swear by heaven, or by earth; to affirm by all that is sacred.

11. In the phrase, "He has a cask of wine by him," by denotes nearness or presence.

12. "To sit by one's self," is to sit alone, or without company.

13. "To be present by attorney." In this phrase, by denotes means or instrument; through or in the presence of a substitute.

14. In the phrase, "north by west," the sense seems to be, north passing to the west, inclining or going westward, or near west.

As an adverb, by denotes, also, nearness, or presence; as, there was no person by at the time. But some mean is understood. So, in the phrase "to pass or go by," there is a noun understood.

By and by, is a phrase denoting nearness in time; in a short time after; presently; soon.

When persecution ariseth, because of the word, by and by, he is offended. — Matt. xiii.

By the by, signifies, as we proceed or pass, [Fr. en passant], noting something interposed in the progress of a discourse which is distinct from the main subject. The old phrase, "on the by," on the passage, is now obsolete.

To stand by, is to stand near, or to support.

By, in lullaby, and in the nursery, a word used in lulling infants to sleep, is evidently allied to words found in many languages, signifying to rest, or be quiet, or to appease; that is, to press, to stop, as the Gr. navo, l. paco. It is used in Russia, as with us—boyu bai. This, probably, is the same word as the foregoing.

By, or bye, in by-lane, [Sax. bilage], is probably the Sw. by, Dan. bye, a village, town, borough, or city, from Sw. byggia, Dan. bygger, G. bauen, D. bouwen, to build, Sax. byan, to inhabit; that is, a town-law, a municipal law.

In the common phrase good-by, by signifies passing, going. The phrase signifies, a good going, a prosperous passage, and it is precisely equivalent to farewell, [Sax. faron, to go, go well], may you have a good going, equivalent to good speed in the phrase "to bid one good speed." [Not God speed, as is generally read and understood.]

By is used in many compound words, in most of which we observe the sense of nearness, closeness, or a withdrawing or seclusion.

 BYZANTIAN, } tiquity of Thracæ, situated on the Bosphorus. In the year 330, Constantine the Great took possession of Byzantium, enlarged and embellished it, and changed its name to Constantinople. D'Ancille. Encyc.

C.

C the third letter in the English alphabet, and the second articulation or consonant, is a palatal, nearly corresponding in sound with the Greek κ, kappa, and with the Hebrew כ, capli. It bears a middle place, in pronunciation, between the aspirate ç, and the palatal ç. It is a Roman character, borrowed from the Gr. κ, or from the Oriental ç, which was used in languages written from right to left, and when inverted, and the corners rounded, becomes C. In the old Etruscan, it was written ç, with the corners rounded, but not inverted; in Arcadian, C, as now written. That its sound in Latin was the same, or nearly the same, as that of kappa, may be known from the fact that the Greeks, while the Latin was a living language, wrote kappa for the Roman C. Perhaps the same character may be the basis of the

Arabic ç
 As an abbreviation, C. stands for Caius, Carolus, Cæsar, condemno, &c., and CC. for consulibus. As a numeral, C. stands for 100; CC. for 200; &c.

In music, C after the clef is the mark of common time, in which each measure is a semibreve, corresponding to $\frac{4}{4}$. C is also the name of a note in the scale; the key note major, and the third minor, of the natural scale.

Encyc.
 In English, C has two sounds, or rather it represents two very different articulations of the organs; one close, like K, which occurs before a, o, and u; the other a sibilant, precisely like s, which occurs before e, i, and y. The former is distinguished in this vocabulary by C, which may be called ce. In Russ., C is precisely the English s, as it was in the old Greek alphabet. C before k is mute; as in brick, sick.

CA-ABA, n. A square stone in the temple at Mecca, regarded with adoration by Mohammedans, as presented by an angel to Abraham. The entire temple is sometimes called by this name. Brande.

CAB, n. A covered carriage with two or four wheels, drawn by one horse.

CAB, n. [Heb. Ch. ç kab.] An Oriental dry measure, being the sixth part of a seah or natum, and the eighteenth of an ephah, containing two pints and five sixths English and American corn measure.

CA-BAL, n. [Fr. cabale, a club, society, or combination; It. cabala, knowledge of secret things; Sp. cabala, secret science; cabal, perfect, just, exact; Heb. ç kabal, to take, receive, accept; Ch. to cry out, to beal; also, to take or receive; also, to be dark; to obscure; Syr. to accuse, oppose, or censure, to caeli; Eth. to accept, to pour out; Sam. to accept, and to darken; Ar. to admit or accept, as agreeable; to come; to be surety; to give baul. (See Class B.)] This word seems to include the significations of several bilateral roots. Qu. W. cafael, to get or obtain; or gaœala, to hold. The primary sense of the root appears to be, to catch or seize by rushing on, or, in general, to press, to drive; hence the sense of collection, combination, and accusation.]
 1. A number of persons united in some close design; usually to promote their private views in church or state by intrigue. A Junto. It is sometimes synonymous with faction, but a cabal usually consists of fewer men than a party, and the word generally implies close union and secret intrigues. This name was given to the ministry of Charles II., Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale, the initials of whose names compose the word.
 2. Intrigue; secret artifices of a few men united in a close design. Dryden.

CAB/ALA, n. [See the preceding word. It is from the sense of reception.]

Tradition, or a mysterious kind of science among Jewish rabbins, pretended to have been delivered to the ancient Jews by revelation, and transmitted by oral tradition; serving for the interpretation of the hidden sense of Scripture. This science consists chiefly in understanding the combination of certain letters, words, and numbers, which are alleged to be significant. Every letter, word, number, and accent of the law is supposed to contain a mystery, and the cabalists pretend even to foretell future events by the study of this science. Encyc. Buck.

CA-BAL, v. i. To unite in a small party to promote private views by intrigue; to intrigue; to unite in secret artifices to effect some design. Dryden.

CAB/ALISM, n. The secret science of the cabalists.

CAB/ALIST, n. A Jewish doctor who professes the study of the cabala, or the mysteries of Jewish traditions.

CAB/ALISTIC, } a. Pertaining to the cabala, or CAB/ALISTIC/AL, } mysterious science of Jewish traditions; containing an occult meaning.

CA-BAL/LEB, n. One who unites with others in close designs to effect an object by intrigue; one who cabals.

CAB/AL-LINE, a. [L. caballinus, from caballus, a horse; Russ. kobila, kobiela, a mare; Fr. capall; Fr. cheval, a horse; cavale, a mare; It. cavallo; Sp. caballo.]

Pertaining to a horse; as, caballine aloes, so called from its being given to horses as a purge. Encyc.

CA-BAL/LIANG, ppr. Uniting in a cabal; intriguing in a small party.

CAB/AL-RET, n. [Fr.: allied, probably, to cabal.] A tavern; a house where liquors are retailed. Bromhall.

CAB/BAGE, n. [It. capuccio; Corn. kanvash; Ir. gabaisde, gabaisde. This word is probably from the root of caput, a head; It. capuccio, a head; Sp. ca-beza; Fr. cabocher, a head. Hence D. kabais-kool, head-sole, or headed-sole. In Fr. choux-cabus is cab-bage-headed, or cabbage-head. See CAF, COZZ.]

1. The popular name of a genus of plants, called in botany Brassica, of several species, some of which are cultivated for food. The leaves are large and fleshy, the pods long and slender, and the seeds globular. The kinds most cultivated are the common cabbage, called, with us, the drum-head, the Savoys, the broccoli, the cauliflower, the sugar-loaf, and the colowart.
Dop's cabbags; a name given to the Thelygonum cynomibe. Fam. of Plants.

CAB/BAG-ING, ppr. Purloining, as pieces of cloth.

CAB/BAGE-NET, n. A small net to boil cabbage in. Shenstone.

CAB/BAGE-TREE, n. The cabbage-palm, a species of Araca, the A. oleracea, a native of warm climates. This tree grows with a straight stem, to the height of 170 or 200 feet. Its branches grow in a circular manner, and the lowermost ones spread horizontally with great regularity. The fibers of the leaves are used for making cordage and nets. On the top grows a substance called cabbage, lying in thin, snow-white, brittle flakes, in taste resembling an almond, but sweeter. This is boiled and eaten with flesh, like other vegetables. When this is cut out, the tree is destroyed. Encyc.

CAB/BAGE-WORM, (-worm.) n. An insect. Johnson.

CAB/AL, n. An annual of South America resembling a hog, living on the margins of lakes and riv-ers, and feeding on fish. It is a species of Cavy, called, also, thick-used tapir. Encyc.

The cabai is now ranked in a distinct genus, of which it is the only species, (Hydrocherus Caphyroru.)

CAB/IN, n. [Fr. cabane, a cabin, a cottage; caban, a cloak; It. capanna, a cottage; Sp. and Port. cabana, a hut or cottage; Fr. cabani; W. caban, from cab, a hut, cot, or booth, made in the form of a cone, with rods set in the ground, and tied at the top; Gr. καταρα, from κατα, a stable or inclosed place.]

2. The members of a privy council; a select number of confidential counselors. Gay.

CAB/IN-ET, ED, pp. Inclosed in a private apartment, or in a cabinet.

CAB/IN-ET-MAK-ER, n. A man whose occupation is to make cabinets, tables, bureaus, bedsteads, and other similar furniture.

CAB/IN-ING, ppr. Inclosing in a cabin.

CABIN-MATE, n. One who occupies the same cabin with another.
CAB-I-RE/AN, n. [See the words below.] One of the Cabiri.

CA-BIRI'-AN, } [Oriental כַּבְרִי, to be strong or CA-BIRI'E, } powerful, to be great; whence it CA-B-I-RIT'IC, } signifies man, a lord, and, in some languages, a giant. It is common to all the Semicitic dialects. Perhaps I. vir, with a prefix.]

Pertaining to the Cabiri, certain deities greatly venerated by the ancient pagans in Greece and Phenicia. The accounts of these deities are confused and contradictory. Some authors limit their number to four; some to three; others to two; while Sanchoianthion makes them to be eight. They were worshiped with particular honors in the Isle of Samothrace; and their worship and mysteries are said to have been introduced into Greece by the Pelasgians. They were supposed to have a particular influence over the sea and maritime affairs.

In truth, the name, which signifies great, or the mighty ones, seems to have been applied to the supposed beings that presided over the most important operations of nature. Herod. ii. 51. Paus. ix. 25.

CABLE, (ka'bl), n. [Sp. and Fr. cable; D. Doan, and G. Kabel; Arm. chab; Ir. cable or gabla; Russ. kabal, a bond; Heb. Ch. Syr. and Ar. כַּבֵּל, a chain; as a verb, to tie or bind; or כַּבַּר, to tie or make fast, and a rope. If the first letter of the Oriental word is a prefix, this coincides with bale, a package, that is, a tie.]

A large, strong rope or chain, used to retain a vessel at anchor. It is made usually of hemp or iron, but may be made of other materials. Rope cables are of different sizes, according to the bulk of the vessel for which they are intended, from three to twenty inches in circumference. A cable is composed of three strands, each strand of three ropes, and each rope of three twists. A ship's cable is usually 120 fathoms, or 720 feet, in length. Hence the expression, a cable's length.

Stream cable, is a hawser or rope, smaller than the bower cables, to moor a ship in a place sheltered from wind and heavy seas.

To pay out, or to veer out the cable, is to slacken it, that it may run out of the ship.

To serve the cable, is to bind it round with ropes, canvas, &c., to prevent its being worn or galled in the hawse.

To slip the cable, is to let it run out end for end.

 or containing calcareous and argillaceous earth.
 CAL/CA'RE-O-BI-TO/MIN-IOUS, a. Consisting of or containing lime and bitumen. Lyell.
 CAL/CA'RE-O-SI-LI'CIUS, a. Consisting of or containing calcareous and silicious earth.
 CAL/CA'RE-O-SUL'PHUR-OUS, a. [See CALX and SULPHUR.]
 Having lime and sulphur in combination, or partaking of both. Kirwan.
 CAL/CA'RE-OTES, a. [L. calcarius. See CALX.]
 Partaking of the nature of lime; having the qualities of lime; containing lime; as, calcareous earth or stone. Encyc. Kirwan.
Calcareous earth: a term formerly applied to lime.
Calcareous spar: crystallized carbonate of lime.
 CAL/CA'RE-OUS-NESS, n. Quality of being calcareous.
 CAL/CA-VAL'LA, n. A kind of sweet wine from Portugal. Macon.
 CAL/CE-ATED, n. [L. calcatus, from calcans, a shoe.]
 Shod; fitted with or wearing shoes. Johnson.
 CAL/CE-DON, n. [See CHALCEDONY.] With jewellers, a foul vein, like chalcodony, in some precious stones.
 CAL/CE-DON'IC, a. [See CHALCEDONY.] [Ask.
 Pertaining to, or resembling chalcodony. Encyc.
 CAL/CE-DON'IAN, a. [See CHALCEDONY.]
 Pertaining to, or resembling chalcodony. Encyc.
 CAL/CE-DON'Y. See CHALCEDONY, the more correct orthography.
 CAL/CIP'ER-OUS, a. [of calx, lime, and ferro, to produce.]
 Containing lime.
 CAL/CI-FORM, n. [of calx, lime, and forma, form.]
 In the form of calx.
 CAL/CI-MO'RITE, n. [of calx, lime, and muria, salt water.]
 A species of earthy mineral, of the muriatic genus, of a blue or olive green color, of the consistence of clay. It consists of calcareous earth and magnesia tinged with iron. The term is now obsolete. Kirwan.
 CAL/CIN'A-BLE, a. [See CALCINE.] That may be calcined; capable of being reduced to a friable state by the action of fire. Encyc.
 CAL/CIN'ATE, v. l. To calcine. [See CALCINE.]
 CAL/CIN'ATION, n. [from calcine.] The operation of expelling from a substance, by heat, some volatile matter with which it is combined, and thus disintegrating it and reducing it to a friable state. Thus carbonate of lime is reduced to lime by calcination, or the expulsion of carbonic acid.
 2. The operation of reducing a metal to an oxyd, or metallic calx. This, in modern chemistry, is called calcination.
 CAL/CIN'A-TORY, n. A vessel used in calcination.
 CAL/CINE', or CAL/CINE, v. l. [Fr. calciner; it.
calcinar; Sp. calcinar; from calx. See CALX.]
 1. To reduce a substance to a powder, or to a friable state, by the action of heat; or to expel from a substance some volatile matter, combined with it, as the carbonic acid from limestone.
 2. To oxydize, as a metal; to reduce to a metallic calx.
 3. To dissolve; to destroy the principles which unite. Denham.
 CAL/CINE', or CAL/CINE, v. l. To be converted into a powder or friable substance, or into a calx, by the action of heat. Newton.
 CAL/CIN'ED, pp. Reduced to a friable state by heat.
 CAL/CIN'ING, ppr. Rendering friable by heat.
 CAL/CITR'ATE, v. l. [L. calcitro.] To kick.
 CAL/CITRATION, n. The act of kicking. Ross.
 CAL/CLUM, n. [from L. calx.] The metallic basis of lime. Davy.
 CAL/CIN'TER, n. Calcareous sinter; stalaclitic carbonate of lime.
 CAL/C-SPAR, n. Calcareous spar, or crystallized carbonate of lime.
 CAL/C-TUFF, n. Calcareous tuff. A loose, porous deposit of carbonate of lime, from waters holding it in solution.
 CAL/CU-LA-BLE, a. [See CALCULATE.] That may be calculated, or ascertained by calculation.
 CAL/CU-LA-RY, n. [L. calculus, a pebble.]
 A congeries of little stony knots dispersed through the parenchyma of the pear and other fruits. Encyc.
 CAL/CU-LA-RY, a. Relating to the disease of the stone in the bladder.
 CAL/CU-LATE, v. l. [Fr. calculer; it. calculari; Sp.
calcular; L. calculo; from calculus, a pebble; or Ar.
سولق
Syr. قلقي, kalkai, gravel.]

1. To compute; to reckon; to add, subtract, multiply, or divide any sums, for the purpose of finding the amount, difference, or other result. Thus, to calculate the expenses of erecting a house, is to estimate and add together the several sums which each part of the materials and the work will cost.
 2. To ascertain by the use of tables or numbers;
 as, to calculate an eclipse.
 3. To form tables upon mathematical principles, as logarithms, ephemerides, &c.
 4. To compute the situation of the planets at a certain time, for astrological purposes; as, to calculate the birth of a person. Shak.
 5. To adjust by computation; to fit or prepare by the adaptation of the means to the end; as, to calculate a system of laws for a free people. Tillotson.
Religion is calculated for our benefit.
 CAL/CU-LATE, v. i. To make a computation; as, we calculate better for ourselves than for others.
 In New England, this word is often equivalent to intend or purpose, that is, to make arrangements, and form a plan; as, a man calculates to go a journey.
 This use of the word springs from the practice of computing or estimating the various circumstances which concur to influence the mind in forming its determinations, but it is not sanctioned by English usage.
 CAL/CU-LA-TED, pp. Computed; reckoned; suited; adapted by design.
 CAL/CU-LA-TING, ppr. Computing; reckoning;
 adapting by design; adjusting.
 CAL/CU-LA-TION, n. The art, practice, or manner, of computing by numbers; the use of numbers, by addition, subtraction, multiplication, or division, for the purpose of arriving at a certain result. Thus computations in astronomy and geometry, for making tables of numbers, are called calculations. Encyc.
 2. The result of an arithmetical operation; computation; reckoning. Hooker.
 3. Estimate formed in the mind by comparing the various circumstances and facts which influence its determination.
 CAL/CU-LA-TIVE, a. Pertaining to calculation; tending to calculate. Burke.
 CAL/CU-LA-TOR, n. One who computes or reckons;
 one who estimates or considers the force and effect of causes, with a view to form a correct estimate of the effects. Johnson.
 CAL/CU-LA-TORY, a. Belonging to calculation. Johnson.
 CAL/CULE, n. Reckoning; computation. [Obs.]
 CAL/CU-LI, n. pl. of CALCULUS, which see.
 CAL/CU-LOUS, a. [Supra.] Stony; gritty; hard, like stone; as, a calculus concretion. Brown.
 2. Affected with the gravel or stone; as, a calculus person. Sharp.
 CAL/CU-LUS, n. [L. See CALCULAYE.] Any hard, solid concretion, formed in any part of the body, as the stone in the bladder or kidneys, called urinary calculus, or a gall-stone, called biliary calculus.
 2. In mathematics, the term calculus is applied to various branches of algebraical analysis. Thus the differential and integral calculus is a method of calculation in which quantities are supposed to undergo certain variations of value, to facilitate investigations respecting them. The integral is the inverse of the differential calculus. This object of the latter is to deduce, from given algebraic expressions, certain other expressions, called differentials; that of the former is, from given expressions, to find others, of which they are the differentials. The expressions sought in the latter case are called integrals. The terms integral and differential being correlative, the calculus of variations may be regarded as a department of the differential and integral calculus, in which the investigations are of a peculiarly general and recondit character. A. D. Stanley.
 CAL'DRON, (knaw'dron), n. [Old Fr. chaudron, now chaudron; Basque galdia, to heat; galdarea, a great kettle; it. caldaia, or caldaia, a caldron; caldo, heat and hot; Sp. calda, heat; caldara, to heat, to weld iron; caldera, a caldron; Port. caldeira, a caldron;
L. caldarium, id.; calda, hot water; calidus, hot, from calco, to be hot. This is from the root of Eng. scald.]
 A large kettle or boiler, of copper, or other metal, furnished with a movable handle or bail, with which to hang it on a chimney-hook. Addison.
 CAL/E'CHEP, (ka-lash') See CALASH.
 CAL/E-DON'IAN, a. Pertaining to Caledonia, an ancient name of Scotland. The termination ia signifies a country, and was added by the Romans.
Caledon signifies, probably, the hill or town of the Gaels, or Cels, the primitive inhabitants.
 CAL/E-DON'IAN, n. A native of Caledonia, now Scotland.
 CAL/E-DON-ITE, n. A mineral of a green color, consisting of the sulphate and carbonate of lead, and carbonate of copper.
 CAL/E-FA'CIANT, a. [See CALEFACTION, CALEFY.]
 Warming; heating.
 CAL/E-FA'CIANT, n. That which warms or heats.
 CAL/E-FAC'TION, n. [L. calefactio, from calefacio, to make warm. See CALEFY.]

1. The act or operation of warming or heating; the production of heat in a body by the action of fire,
 or by th. communication of heat from other bodies.
Encyc.
 2. This state of being heated. Johnson.
 CAL/E-FAC'TIVE, a. [See CALEFACTION.] That CAL/E-FAC'TORY, n. makes warm or hot; that communicates heat.
 CAL/E-FY, v. i. [L. calesco, to become warm or hot;
from calco and fio or facio.]
 To grow hot or warm; to be heated. Brown.
 CAL/E-FY, v. l. To make warm or hot. Johnson.
 CAL/EM-BU'RY, n. [Fr., from a German Count
Kahlenberg, noted for his blunders in the French language.] A pun. Brande.
 CAL/EN-DAR, n. [L. calendarium, an account-book.
 See CALENDARS.]
 1. A register of the year, in which the months, weeks, and days, are set down in order, with the feasts observed by the church, &c.; an almanac. It was so named from the Roman Calendar, the name given to the first day of the month, and written, in large letters, at the head of each month. [See CALENDARS.] Encyc.
 2. An orderly table or enumeration of persons or things. Encyc.
 3. In congress, a list of bills prepared for the action of that body.
 4. In English courts, a list of criminal causes which stand for trial. In some of the American States, the term is extended to embrace civil causes, as arranged for trial.
Calendar month; a solar month, as it stands in almanacs.
 CAL/EN-DAR, v. l. To enter or write in a calendar.
 CAL/EN-DER, v. l. [Fr. calender; Sp. calentar, to heat, to urge, or press forward; from calco, to be hot.]
 To press between rollers, for the purpose of making smooth, glossy, and wavy; as woolen and silk stuffs and linens.
 CAL/EN-DER, n. A machine or hot press, used in manufactories to press cloths, for the purpose of making them smooth, even, and glossy, laying the nap, watering them, and giving them a wavy appearance. It consists of two thick rollers or cylinders, placed between boards or planks, the lower one being fixed, the upper one movable, and loaded with a great weight. Encyc.
 CAL/EN-DER-ED, pp. Smoothed by calendering.
 CAL/EN-DER-ING, ppr. Making smooth and glossy, by being pressed between rollers.
 CAL/EN-DRER, n. The person who calenders cloth.
 CAL/EN-DRICAL, a. Pertaining to a calendar.
 CAL/ENDS, n. pl. [L. calendae, from calco, Gr. kalco,
Eng. to call. See CALL.]
 Among the Romans, the first day of each month.
 The origin of this name is differently related. Varro supposes it to have originated in the practice of noty-fying the time of the new moon, by a priest, who called out or proclaimed the fact to the people, and the number of the calends, or the day of the month.
 Others allege that, the people being convened, the pontifex proclaimed the several feasts or holidays in the month—a custom which was discontinued in the year of Rome 453, when the fasti or calendar was set up in public places, to give notice of the festivals.
Encyc. Adam's Rom. Antiq.
 CAL/EN-TURE, n. [Sp. calentura, heat, a fever with irregular pulse; calentar, to heat; from L. calco, to be hot. Russ. kalyu, to heat, to make red or red hot.]
 A violent fever, attended with great heat, incident to persons in hot climates, especially natives of cooler climates. It is attended with delirium, and one of the symptoms is, that the person affected imagines the sea to be a green field, and sometimes, attempting to walk in it, is lost. Encyc. Coxe.
 CAL/E'S-CENCE', n. [L. calesco.]
 Growing warm; growing heat.
 CAL/F, (kalf), n. pl. CAL/FES, (kawz). [Sax. calff; Sw.
kalf; Dan. kald; D. kalf; and the verb kalcan, to calve, to vomit; G. kalb; kalben. The primary sense is issue, from throwing out. Hence the word is applied to the protuberant part of the leg, a push, a swell.]
 1. The young of the cow, or of the bovine genus of quadrupeds.
 2. In contempt, a dolt; an ignorant, stupid person;
 a weak or cowardly man. Drayton.
 3. The thick, fleshy part of the leg behind, so called from its protuberance. Wiseman.
 4. The calves of the lips, in Moses, signify the pure offerings of prayer, praise, and thanksgiving. Brown.
 CAL/F-LIKE, a. Resembling a calf. Shak.
 CAL/F-SKIN, n. The hide or skin of a calf; or leather made of the skin.
 CAL/L-BER, n. [Fr. and Sp. calibra.]
 CAL/L-BRE, n. [Fr. and Sp. calibra.]
 1. The diameter of a body; as, the caliber of a column, or of a bullet. Encyc.
 2. The bore of a gun, or the extent of its bore.
 3. Figuratively, the capacity of a man's mind.
Burke.
Caliber-compasses, calibers, or calipers; a sort of compasses made with arched legs, to take the diameter of round bodies, as masts, shot, &c. The legs move on an arch of brass, on which are marked the inches and half inches, to show how far the points of the compasses are opened asunder. Encyc.

Caliber-rule; gunner's calipers, an instrument to which a right line is so divided, as that, the first part being equal to the diameter of an iron or leaden ball of one pound weight, the other parts are in the first as the diameters of balls of two, three, four, &c., pounds are to the diameter of a ball of one pound. It is used by engineers to determine, from a ball's weight, its diameter or caliber, and vice versa. Encyc.

CALICE, n. [L. calix; Fr. calice; Sax. calic, a cup; Gr. κάλιξ.] It is usually written chalice, but on etymological principles, incorrectly.]

A cup; appropriately, a communion-cup, or vessel used to administer the wine in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. It is used by the Roman Catholics in the mass.

CALICO, n. [Said to be from Calicut, in India.] A kind of cotton cloth. In England, white or unprinted cotton cloth is called calico. In the United States, calico is printed cotton cloth, having different colors. I have never heard this name given to the unprinted cloth. Calico was originally imported from India, but is now manufactured in Europe and the United States.

CALICO-PRINTER, n. One whose occupation is to print calicoes.

CALICO-PRINTING, n. The art or process of printing or impressing figured patterns on calico.

CALIDUS, a. [L. calidus, from calco, to be hot.] Hot; burning; ardent. Johnson.

CALIDITY, n. Heat. Brown.

CALIDUCT, n. [L. calco, to be hot, calor, heat, and ducta, to lead.] A pipe or canal used to convey heat to the apartments of a house, by the transmission of hot air or steam.

CALIF, b. Written also Caliph and Kalif. [from Ar. خليفة]

خليفة khalifa, to succeed. Hence a calif is a successor, a title given to the successors of Mohammed.] A successor or vicar; a representative of Mohammed, bearing the same relation to him as the pope claims to bear to St. Peter. Among the Saracens, or Mohammedans, a calif is one who is vested with supreme dignity and power in all matters relating to religion and civil policy. This title is borne by the grand seignor in Turkey, and by the sophi of Persia. Encyc.

CALIFATE, n. The office or dignity of a calif; or CALIPHATE, n. the government of a calif. Harris.

CALIGATION, n. [L. caligatio, dimness, from caligo, to be dark.] Darkness; dimness; cloudiness.

In medical authors, calivation, or caligo, is a dimness of sight, from any obstruction to the passage of light to the retina, whether from opacity of the cornea, or of the crystalline or other humors, or their capsules, or from an obstructed pupil.

CALIGNOUS, a. Dim; obscure; dark.

CALIGNOUSLY, adv. Obscurely.

CALIGNOUSNESS, n. Dimness; obscurity.

CALIGRAPHY, a. [Infra.] Pertaining to elegant penmanship. Warton.

CALIGRAPHER, n. An elegant penman.

CALIGRAPHY, n. [Gr. κάλις, fair, and γραφή, to write; καλλιγραφία.] Fair or elegant writing, or penmanship. Prideaux.

CALIN, a. A compound metal, of which the Chinese make tea-cannisters and the like. The ingredients seem to be lead and tin. Encyc.

CALIPASH, n. That part of a turtle which bears the upper shell is called calipash, and that part which belongs to the lower shell, calipe. Encyc. of Dom. Econ.

CALIPERS, n. pl. Compasses with curved legs, for measuring the caliber, or diameter, of round bodies. Brande.

CALISTHENIC, a. Pertaining to calisthenics.

CALISTHENICS, n. [Gr. κάλις, beautiful, and σθένος, strength.] The art, science, or practice, of healthful exercise of the body and limbs, to promote strength and graceful movement.

CALIVER, n. [from caliber.] A kind of hand-gun, musket, or arquebuse. Shak.

CALIX, n. [L. calix; Gr. κάλιξ.] A cup. It is sometimes erroneously used for calix, which see.

CALK, v. t. [Fr. calquer, to chalk.] To copy a drawing, by rubbing the back of it with red or black chalk, and then tracing the lines through on paper, &c., by means of a blunt style or needle.

CALK, v. t. [Qu. the connection of this word with the Sp. calafatear; It. calafutare; Port. calafutar; Arm. calafeti; Fr. calfefer, to smear with cement or mortar; Ar. كلفة kalafa, to stop the seams of ships with fine moss, &c., and pay them over with pitch; Sam. id. It may be corrupted from this word; if not, it may be from the Dan. kalk, calk, lime, or mortar; but this seems not probable. The Germans and Danes have borrowed the Spanish and French word to express the idea. Skinner deduces the word from Fr. calage, tow.]

1. To drive oakum, or old ropes untwisted, into the seams of a ship, or other vessel, to prevent their leaking or admitting water. After the seams are filled, they are covered with hot, melted pitch or resin, to keep the oakum from rotting.

2. In some parts of America, to set upon a horse or ox shoes armed with sharp points of iron, to prevent their slipping on ice; that is, to stop from slipping.

CALK, (kalk, n.) In New England, a sharp-pointed piece of iron on a shoe for a horse or an ox, called in Great Britain calkin; used to prevent the animal from slipping.

Also, an instrument with sharp points, which persons wear on their feet to prevent slipping on the ice. [U. S.]

CALK'ER, (kalk'er, n.) A man who calks; sometimes, perhaps, a calk or pointed iron on a horse-shoe.

CALK'ED, (kalk'ed, pp.) Having the seams stopped; furnished with shoes with iron points.

CALK'IN, n. A calk, or sharp point in a horse's shoe, to prevent slipping.

CALK'ING, (kalk'ing, ppr.) Stopping the seams of a ship; putting on shoes with iron points.

CALK'ING, (calk'ing, n.) In painting, the covering of the back side of a design with black lead, or red chalk, and tracing lines through on a waxed plate, or wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the color on the plate, paper, or wall. Chambers.

CALKING-IRON, (calk'ing-iron, n.) An instrument like a chisel, used in calking ships.

CALL, v. t. [L. calo; Gr. κέλεω; Sw. kalla; Dan. kalde; W. gale, to call; D. kallen, to talk; Ch. נָדַב in Aph. to call, to thunder; Heb., to hold or restrain, which is the Gr. κολδο, It. caula; Syr. Sam. and Eth., to hold or restrain; Ar., to keep; L. celo. The primary sense is to press, drive, or strain. We find the like elements and signification in Sax. giellan, or giellan, to yell; Dan. gale, to crow. Class Gr. The W. gale is connected in origin with galla, to be able, to have power, may, can, Eng. could, the root of gallant, &c. gallus, &c.]

In a general sense, to drive; to strain or force out sound. Hence,

1. To name; to denominate or give a name. And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. — Gen. i.

2. To convoke; to summon; in direct or order to meet; to assemble by order or public notice; often with together; as, the king called his council together; the president called together the congress.

3. To request to meet or come.

He sent his servants to call them that were bidden. — Matt. xxii.

4. To invite.

Because I have called, and ye refused. — Prov. i.

5. To invite or summon to come or be present; to invite, or collect; as, call all your senses to you.

6. To give notice to come by authority; to command to come; as, call a servant.

7. To proclaim; to name, or publish the name. Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

8. To appoint or designate, as for an office, duty, or employment.

See, I have called by name Bezaleel. — Ex. xxxi. Paul, called to be an apostle. — R. m. l.

9. To invite; to warn; to exhort. Is. xxii. 12. Cruden.

10. To invite or draw into union with Christ; to bring to know, believe, and obey the gospel. Rom. viii. 28.

11. To own and acknowledge. Heb. ii. xl.

12. To invoke or appeal to.

I call God for a witness. — 2 Cor. i.

13. To esteem or account. Is. livii. 5. Matt. lii. 15.

To call down; to invite, or to bring down.

To call back; to revoke or retract; to recall; to summon or bring back.

To call for; to demand, require, or claim; as, a crime calls for punishment; or to cause to grow. Ezek. xxxvi. Also, to speak for; to ask; to request; as, to call for a dinner.

To call in; to collect; as, to call in debts or money; or to draw from circulation; as, to call in clipped coin; or to summon together; to invite to come together; as, to call in neighbors or friends.

To call forth; to bring or summon to action; as, to call forth all the faculties of the mind.

To call off; to summon away; to divert; as, to call off the attention; to call off workmen from their employment.

To call up; to bring into view or recollection; as, to call up the image of a deceased friend; also, to bring into action, or discussion; as, to call up a bill before a legislative body.

To call over; to read a list, name by name; to recite separate particulars in order, as a roll of names.

To call out; to summon to fight; to challenge; also, to summon into service; as, to call out the militia.

To call to mind; to recollect; to revive in memory.

CALL, v. i. To utter a loud sound, or to address by notice; to utter the name; sometimes with to.

The angel of God called to Hagar. — Gen. xxi.

2. To stop, without intention of staying; to make a short stop; as, to call at the lun. This use Johnson supposes to have originated in the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call. It is common, in this phrase, to use at; as, to call at the inn; or on; as, to call on a friend. This application seems to be equivalent to speak, D. kalten. Let us speak at this place.

To call on; to make a short visit to; also, to solicit payment, or make a demand of a debt. In a theological sense, to pray to, or worship; as, to call on the name of the Lord. Gen. iv. To repeat solemnly. Dryden.

To call out; to utter a loud voice, to bawl; a popular use of the phrase.

CALL, n. A vocal address, of summons or invitation; as, he will not come at a call.

2. Demand; requisition; public claim; as, listen to the calls of justice or humanity.

3. Divine vocation, or summons; as, the call of Abraham.

4. Invitation; request of a public body or society; as, a clergyman has a call to settle in the ministry.

5. A summons from heaven; impulse.

St. Paul believed he had a call, when he persecuted the Christians. Locke.

6. Authority; command. Denham.

7. A short visit; as, to make a call; to give one a call; that is, a speaking to; D. kalten. To give one a call, is to stop a moment and speak or say a word; or to have a short conversation with.

8. Vocation; employment. In this sense, calling is generally used.

9. A naming; a nomination. Baron.

10. Among waters, a lesson blown on the horn, to comfort the bounds. Encyc.

11. Among seamen, a whistle or pipe, used by the boatswain and his mate, to summon the sailors to their duty. Encyc.

12. The English name of the mineral called by the Germans tungsten or wolfram. Encyc.

13. Among fowlers, a noise or cry in imitation of a bird, or a pipe to call birds by imitating their voice. Encyc. Bailey.

14. In legislative bodies, the call of the house, is a calling over the names of the members, to discover who is absent, or for other purpose; a calling of names with a view to obtain answers from the persons named.

CALLED, (kald, pp.) Invited; summoned; addressed; named; appointed; invoked; assembled by order; recited.

CALLER, n. One who calls.

CALL'ER, n. A trull, or a scold. [Not used.] Shak.

CALL'ER, v. i. To rail; to scold. [Not in use.]

CALL'ER, n. Cunning.

CALL'ER, n. [L. calliditas.] Skill; discernment; shrewdness.

CALL'ER, n. [Gr. κάλλις, fair, and γραφή, to write; καλλιγραφία.] Fair or elegant penmanship.

CALLING, ppr. Inviting; summoning; naming; addressing; invoking.

CALLING, n. A naming, or inviting; a reading over or reciting in order, or a call of names with a view to obtain an answer, as in legislative bodies.

2. Vocation; profession; trade; usual occupation, or employment. Pope. Swift. I Cor. vii. 20.

3. Class of persons engaged in any profession or employment. Hammond.

4. Divine summons, vocation, or invitation.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure. — 2 Pet. i.

CAL-LIPOPE, (kal-lyo-py, n.) In python mythology, the muse that presides over eloquence and heroic poetry.

CAL-LIPOPE, See CALIFERS.

CALQUE, n. l. See CALK.

CAL'TROP, n. [Sax. caltreppe, a species of thistle, rendered by Lye, Rhamnus, and Carduus stellatus. The French has chaussetrappe. The Italian calcatrepolo is from calcare, to tread, and tribolo, a thistle; L. tribulus.]

1. A kind of thistle, the Latin Tribulus, with a roundish, prickly pericarp, composed of five united capsules, each of which is, on one side, gibbous, often armed with three or four daggers; on the other side, angular, converging with transverse cells. It grows in France, Italy, and Spain, among corn, and is very troublesome, as the prickles run into the feet of cattle. Fam. of Plants. Miller.

2. In military affairs, an instrument with four iron points disposed in a triangular form, so that, three of them being on the ground, the other points upward. These are scattered on the ground, where an enemy's cavalry are to pass, to impede their progress by endangering the horses' feet. Encyc. Dr. Addison.

CA-LUM'BA, n. [from kalumb, its native name in Mozambique.]

A plant, the Cocculus palmatus, growing in Mozambique. The root of this plant, a bitter tonic, is much used in medicine.

CAL'U-MET, n. Among the aboriginals of America, a pipe, used for smoking tobacco, whose bowl is usually of soft red stone, like marble, and the tube a long reed, ornamented with feathers. The calumet is used as a symbol or instrument of peace and war. To accept the calumet, is to agree to the terms of peace, and to refuse it, is to reject them. The calumet of peace is used to seal or ratify contracts and alliances, to receive strangers kindly, and to travel with safety. The calumet of war, differently made, is used to proclaim war.

CAL-VILLE', n. [Fr.] A sort of apple.

CAL-VIN-ISM, n. The theological tenets or doctrines of Calvin, who was born in Picardy, in France, and in 1536 chosen professor of divinity, and minister of a church in Geneva. The distinguishing doctrines of this system are, original sin, particular election and reprobation, particular redemption, effectual grace in regeneration, or a change of heart by the spirit of God, justification by free grace, perseverance of the saints, and the Trinity.

CAL-VIN-IST, n. A follower of Calvin; one who embraces the theological doctrines of Calvin.

CAL-VIN-IST'IC, } a. Pertaining to Calvin, or to his opinions in theology.

CAL-VIN-IST'IC-AL, } a. Pertaining to Calvinism.

CAL-VIN-IZE, v. l. To convert to Calvinism.

CALV'ISH, a. [from calf.] Like a calf. [More properly, CALFISH.] Sheldon.

CAL-VI-TY, n. Baldness.

CALX, n.; pl. CALXES or CALCES. [L. calx; Sax. cale, a stone, calculus, and chalk; D. kalk; G. kalk; Sw. kalk; Dan. kalk; Fr. chaux. The same word signifies chalk, lime, mortar, and the heel, and from that is formed calculus, a little stone. The word then signifies, primarily, a lump, or clod, or hard mass, and is allied to callus. If calx is from χαλξ, the usual orthography was not observed by the Latins. See CALCULATE.]

Properly, lime or chalk; but more appropriately, the substance of a metal or mineral which remains after being subjected to calcination by heat, solution by acids, or detumescence by niter, and which is or may be reduced to a fine powder. Metallic calxes are now called oxides. They weigh more than the metal from which they are produced, being combined with oxygen.

Calx nativa; native calx, a kind of marly earth, of a dead whitish color, which, in water, bubbles or hisses, and without burning will make a cement, like lime or gypsum.

Calx viva, quick lime, is lime not slaked. Encyc.

CA-LY'IN-AL, } a. Pertaining to a calyx; situated

CALY-CINE, } on a calyx. Martyn.

CALY-CLE, n. [L. calyculus. See CALYX.]

In botany, a row of small leaflets, at the base of the calyx, on the outside. The calycle of the seed is the outer proper covering or crown of the seed adhering to it, to facilitate its dispersion. Martyn.

2. In zoology, a term applied to the small cup-like prominences, containing each a poly-cell, covering the surface of many corals.

CA-LY'CU-LATE, } a. Having a calycle at the base

CALY-CLED, } on the outside; used of the calyx.

CA-LYP'TRA, n. [Gr. κλυπτήρα, a cover.]

The calyx of mosses, according to Linnaeus; but not properly a calyx. It is a kind of veil, or cowl, which covers or is placed over the top of the anther, like an extinguisher. Martyn. Milne.

The calyptra of mosses is an appendage of the capsule. It at first closely invests the capsule, and its summit is the stigma. As the capsule approaches maturity, the calyptra is detached below, and appended to the stigma like a hood. Cyr. Smith.

The calyptra of mosses is that part of the membranous covering, inclosing the sporangium or theca, (capsule,) which, when the membrane bursts around as the theca approaches maturity, is carried up and sustained on the summit of the latter. Lindley.

The theca was considered as an anther by Linnaeus; afterwards as a capsule, or proper seed-vessel, surmounted by a stigma. It is now regarded as a sporangium, or vessel inclosing the spores, which correspond to the seeds in the higher orders of plants.

CA-LYP'TRI-FORM, a. Having the form of a calyptra.

CAL'YX, n.; pl. CALYCES. [L. calyx; Gr. κάλυξ, a flower not opened, a husk or shell. It has been confounded with κάλις, calix, a cup.]

1. The outer covering of a flower, being the termination of the cortical epidermis or outer bark of the plant, which, in most plants, incloses and supports the bottom of the corol. In Linnaeus's system, it comprehends the perianth, the involucrem, the anent, the spathe, the glume, the calyptra, and the volva. Milne. Martyn. Encyc.

The opinion of Linnaeus that the calyx is the continuation of the epidermis is now considered erroneous. Ed. Encyc. Smith.

The calyx is the most exterior integument of a flower, consisting of several verticillate leaves, (sepals,) united by their margins or distinct, usually of a green color, and of a less delicate texture than the corol. Lindley.

The calyx, as thus defined, corresponds to the perianth of Linnæus.

2. A membranous sac, inclosing each papilla of the kidney, opening at its apex into the pelvis of the kidney; called also infundibulum.

CAL-ZOONS, n. pl. [Sp. calzones.]

Drawers. [Not English.] Herbert.

CAM, n. A projection on a wheel, which, by its revolution, produces an alternating motion in machinery. CAM-MA'LEO, n. A painting in which there is only one color, and where the lights and shades are of gold wrought on a golden or azure ground. When the ground is yellow, the French call it cirage; when gray, grisaille. This work is chiefly used to represent basso-relievos. These pieces answer to the ποικιλογραμμα, or monochromes, of the Greeks.

CAM'BER, n. [Fr. cambrer, to arch, to vault, to bend, from L. camera, a vault, a chamber.]

Among builders, cambert, or cambert-beam, is a piece of timber cut archwise, or with an obtuse angle in the middle, used to platform, where long and strong beams are required. As a verb, this word signifies to bend, but I know not that it is used.

A camberted deck, is one which is higher in the middle, or arched, but drooping or declining toward the stem and stern; also when it is irregular.

CAM'BER-ING, pp. or a. Bending; arched; as, a deck lies cambering.

CAM'EL, n. [L. camelus; Gr. κάμηλος; D. and Dan. kamel; and Heb. Syr. and Eth. kamal; Gk. κάμηλος; Ar. جمل.]

The Arabic verb, to which this word belongs, signifies to be beautiful, or elegant, to please, or to behave with kindness and humanity.

In Sax. gamol, or gamol, is a camel, and an old man; gamolfors, one that has long hair; gamolfors, a man of great mind. In W. the word is camare, a crooked horse.

A large quadruped used in Asia and Africa for carrying burdens, and for riders. As a genus, the camel belongs to the order of Pecora. The characteristics are: it has no horns; it has six fore teeth in the upper jaw; the canine teeth are wide set, three in the upper and two in the lower jaw; and there is a fissure in the upper lip. The dromedary, or Arabian camel, has one hump on the back, four callous protuberances on the fore legs, and two on the hind legs. The Indian camel has two humps on the back. The llama of South America is a smaller animal, with a smooth back, small head, fine black eyes, and very long neck. The pacos, or sheep, of Chili, has no hump. Camels constitute the riches of an Arabian, without which he could neither subsist, carry on trade, nor travel over sandy deserts. Their milk is his common food. By the camel's power of sustaining abstinence from drink for many days, and of subsisting on a few coarse shrubs, he is peculiarly fitted for the parched and barren lands of Asia and Africa.

2. In Holland, camel (or kameel, as Coxe writes it) is a machine for lifting ships, and bearing them over the Pampus, at the mouth of the River Y, or over other bars. It is also used in other places, and particularly at the dock in Petersburg, to bear vessels over a bar to Cronstadt. Coxe. Encyc.

CAM'EL-BACK-ED, (-bakt), a. Having a back like a camel; hump-backed.

CAM'EL-ON MIN'ER-AL, n. [See CHAMBERLAIN.]

A compound formed by fusing together pure potash and black oxyd of manganese, whose solution in water, at first green, passes spontaneously through the whole series of colored rays to the red; and by the addition of potash, it returns to its original green. Ure.

This is called manganate or manganate of potash; the black oxyd of manganese here performing the functions of an acid.

CAM-EL-O-PARD or CAM'EL-O-PARD, n. [camelus and pardalis.]

The giraffe, a species constituting the genus camelopardalis. This animal has two straight horns, without branches, six inches long, covered with hair, truncated at the end, and tufted. On the forehead is a tubercle, two inches high, resembling another horn. The fore legs are not much longer than the hind ones, but the shoulders are of such a vast length, as to render the fore part of the animal much higher than the hind part. The head is like that of a stag; the neck is slender and elegant, furnished with a short mane. The color of the whole animal is a dirty white, marked with large, broad, rusty spots. This animal is found in the central and eastern parts of Africa. It is timid, and not fierce.

CAM'EL-O, n. [It. cammea.] A precious stone carved in relief; opposed to an intaglio, which is cut into the stone. Originally the onyx, and afterward the agate, were used for this purpose. In the true cameo, a stone is used having two layers, (and sometimes more,) of different colors; and the art consists in so cutting, as to appropriate these different colors to different parts, or elevations of the work. Shells are also used for cheaper work of the same kind. Elmes.

CAM'EL-RA LO'CI-DA, n. An optical instrument, which, by means of a style, lenses, &c., gives the outlines of external objects on paper, or canvas, so that an artist can sketch the subject. Elmes.

CAM'EL-RA OB-SC'URA, or dark chamber; in optics, an apparatus representing an artificial eye, in which the images of external objects, received through a double convex glass, are exhibited distinctly, and in their native colors, on a white surface placed on the focus of the glass within a darkened chamber.

CAM'EL-RADE, n. [L. camera, a chamber.] One who lodges or resides in the same apartment; now COMRADE, which see.

CAM'EL-RA-LIST'IC, a. [Infra.] Pertaining to finance and public revenue.

CAM'EL-RA-LIST'IES, n. pl. [G. camelista, a financier. In Sp. camarista is a minister of state; camarilla, a small room. The word seems to be from L. camera, a chamber.]

The science of finance, or public revenue, comprehending the means of raising and disposing of it. Grimke.

CAM'EL-RATE, v. t. [L. camero, from camera, a chamber, properly, an arched roof.]

To vault; to ceil. [Little used.]

CAM'EL-RATE, pp. or a. [L. cameratus, from camera.]

1. Arched; vaulted.

2. a. In chology, a term applied to shells which are divided by transverse partitions into a series of chambers, traversed by a siphon; called also chambered shells.

CAM'EL-RATE, n. A name given to the followers of Richard Cameron, in Scotland, who refused to accept the indulgence granted to the Presbyterian clergy in the persecuting times of Charles II., lest, by so doing, they should be understood to recognize his ecclesiastical authority.

CAM'EL, n. [It. camice.] A thin dress. [Not English.]

CAM'EL-ADE, n. [Fr. from chemise, a shirt; It. camicia; Sp. camisa.]

An attack by surprise, at night, or at break of day, when the enemy is supposed to be in bed. This word is said to have taken its rise from an attack of this kind, in which the soldiers, as a badge to distinguish each other, wore a shirt over their arms.

CAM'EL-A-TED, a. Dressed with a shirt outward.

CAM'LET, n. [from camel; sometimes written CAM'LET.] A stuff originally made of camel's hair. It is now made, sometimes of wool, sometimes of silk, sometimes of hair, especially that of goats, with wool or silk. In some, the warp is silk and wool twisted together, and the woof is hair. The pure Oriental camel is made solely from the hair of a sort of goat, about Angora. Camlets are now made in Europe.

CAM'LET-ED, a. Colored, or velvied.

CAM'MOCK, n. [Sax. cammic or camme.] A plant, petty whin, or rest-harrow, Ononis.

CAM'MOUS, { a. [Fr. camus; W. cam. crooked.]

Flat; depressed. [Applied only to the nose, and little used.]

CAM'MOUS-ED, (kâ'must), a. Depressed; crooked.

CAM'MOUS-LY, adv. Awry.

CAMP, n. [L. campus; Fr. camp and champ; Arm. camp; It. Sp. and Port. campo; Sax. camp. The sense is, an open, level field, or plain. See CHAMPION and GAME.]

1. The ground on which an army pitch their tents, whether for a night or a longer time.

2. The order or arrangement of tents, or disposition of an army, for rest; as, to pitch a camp.

3. An army, or body of troops, encamped on the same field. Hume.

CAMP, v. l. ori. To rest, or lodge, as an army, or travelers in a wilderness; to pitch a camp; to fix tents. [See ENCAMP.]

CAMP'PHENE, n. [A contraction of camphagen.]

A name recently proposed for pure oil of turpentine, (commonly called spirit of turpentine,) and lately much used, in order to disguise the nature and character of the substance, when it is to be sold for burning in lamps.

CAMP'PHO-GEN, n. [Gr. κάμφορον, or κάμφορος, camphor, and γεννα, to produce, because, by combination with a certain definite proportion of oxygen, camphagen becomes camphor.]

A hydrocarbon, composed of eight equivalents of hydrogen, and ten of carbon; the basyle of camphor.

CAMP'PHOR, n. [Low L. camphora; Fr. camphre; It. canfora; Sp. alcanfor; Port. canfora; D. and G. kamfer; Ar. كافور kafur, kaforon, from كفر kafara, Heb. Ch. and Syr. כפר kafar, to drive off, remove, separate, wipe away; hence, to cleanse, to make atonement. It seems to be named from its purifying effects, or from exudation. It will be seen that the letter m in this word is casual.]

A solid concrete substance, from the Lauris Camphora, Linn., or Indian laurel-tree, a large tree growing wild in Borneo, Sumatra, &c. It is a whitish translucent substance, of a granular or foliated fracture, and somewhat unctuous to the feel. It has a bitterish aromatic taste, and a very fragrant smell, and is a powerful diaphoretic.

CAMP'PHOR, v. t. To impregnate or wash with camphor. [Little used.]

CAMP'PHOR-A-CROUS, a. Of the nature of camphor; partaking of camphor.

CAMP'PHOR-ATE, v. t. To impregnate with camphor.

CAMP'PHOR-ATE, n. In chemistry, a salt formed by the combination of camphoric acid with a base.

CAMP'PHOR-ATE, a. Pertaining to camphor, or impregnated with it.

CAMPHOR-ATED, a. Impregnated with camphor.
CAMP-PHORIC, a. Pertaining to camphor, or partaking of its qualities.

CAMPORIC ACID, a. A crystallized acid, produced by long digestion or repeated distillation of camphor with nitric acid.

CAMPOR-OIL, n. A fragrant, limpid oil, obtained from the Dryobalanops aromatica; considered as camphor, not yet concreted.

CAMPOR-TREE, n. The tree from which camphor is obtained. According to Miller, there are two sorts of trees that produce camphor; one, a native of Borneo, which produces the best kind; the other, a native of Japan, which resembles the bay-tree, bearing black or purple berries. But the tree grows also in Sumatra. The stem is thick, the bark of a brownish color, and the ramification strong, close, and extended. The wood is soft, easily worked, and useful for domestic purposes. To obtain camphor, the tree is cut down, and divided into pieces, and the camphor taken out; it being fused in small, whitish flakes, situated perpendicularly, in irregular veins, in and near the center of the tree. It is then repeatedly soaked and washed in soapy water, to separate from it all extraneous matter. It is then passed through three sieves of different texture, to divide it into three sorts, head, belly, and foot camphor. Camphor-oil is camphor, before the operations of nature have reduced it to a concrete form; and concrete camphor may be reduced to oil by nitric acid. Sialat, Res. v. l. i.

Camphor forms, with nitric acid, a liquid compound, (nitrate of camphor.) Graham.

Camphor is obtained from the Camphora officinarum, (Laurus Camphora, Linn.), a native of China and Japan, and from the Dryobalanops aromatica, a native of Borneo and Sumatra. The camphor from the latter is harder, more brittle, and more highly valued, particularly in the East.

CAMPING, ppr. Encamping. Bryant.

CAMPING, n. A playing at football.

CAMPION, n. A plant; the popular name of the Lychnis.

CAN, n. [D. kan; Sax. canne; G. kanne; Dan. kande; Sw. kanna; Corn. hanath; Sans. kundha; probably from holding, containing; W. canne or gan, to contain, gan, capacity, a mortise; Eng. gain, in carpentry. Hence W. can, a circle, a hoop, a fence round a yard, a hundred; L. centum; Teut. kan, in hundred. See CANT, and HUNDRED, and CAN, infra.] A cup or vessel for liquors, in modern times made of metal; as, a can of ale.

CAN, v. i. pret. COULD, which is from another root. [See COULD.] [Can is from the Sax. canon, to know, to bear, or produce; Goth. kanana; Sax. canian, to know, to be able; canian, to try, to attempt, to prove; cin, cin, gocind, kind; L. canis; D. kanen, to know, to understand, to hold, to contain, to be able, like the Fr. savoir; Dan. kanne, (kan, indic. pres. sing.), to be able; kiende, to know; Sw. kanna, to know; kanna, to be able; G. kennen, to know; kennen, to be able. Hence canning, that is, knowing, skillful, experienced; G. kanne, a being able, ability, knowledge; kan, public; kan, knowledge, acquaintance. The Teutonic and Gothic words unite with the Greek γινωσκω, to beget, as a male, and to bear, as a female, which is connected with γενωσκω, to be born or produced. Can, canina, and γινωσκω, are probably the same word; and the Sax. ginnan, in the compounds aginnan, beginnan, originnan, to begin, is from the same root. The primary sense is, to strain, to stretch, to urge or thrust with force, which gives the sense of producing, and of holding, containing, which is the primary sense of knowing, comprehending; and straining gives the sense of power. The Sax. canian, to try, is to strain. (See

KAN, Ar. كان kanana, to be, the substantive verb; also, to become, to be made, to endure; also, to create, to generate, to form; كان kanina, to know; Heb. and Ch. כָּן, to fit or prepare, to form or fashion; whence right, fit; as we have right; Sax. reht; L. rectus, from rego, to rule, that is, to strain, stretch, make straight; Syr. كُن kan, to begin to be, and its derivatives, to plant or establish, to create, to be prepared; Eth. ከን kan, to be, to become, to be made; Ch. and Sam. as the Hebrew. See Class G, No. 29, 38, and 58, 42, 45, &c. Can, in English, is treated as an auxiliary verb, the sign of the infinitive being omitted, as in the phrases I can go, instead of I can to go; thou canst go; he can go. L. To be able; to have sufficient strength or physical power. One man can lift a weight which another can not. A horse can run a certain distance in a given time.

CAN-VAL, n. [L. canalis, a channel or kennel; these being the same word differently written; Fr. canal; Arm. can, or canal; Sp. and Port. canal; It. canale. (See CAN.) It denotes a passage, from shooting, or passing.

1. A passage for water; a water-course; properly, a long trench or excavation in the earth, for conducting water, and confining it to narrow limits; but the term may be applied to other water-courses. It is chiefly applied to artificial cuts or passages for water, used for transportation; whereas channel is applicable to a natural water-course.

The canal from the Hudson to Lake Erie, is one of the noblest works of art.

2. In anatomy, a duct or passage in the body of an animal, through which any of the juices flow, or other substances pass; or, more generally, any cylindrical or tubular cavity in the body, whether occupied by a solid, fluid, or æthereal substance; as, the canal of the spine, the semicircular canals of the internal ear, the alimentary canal, &c.

CAN-VAL, n. [L. caner; Sax. caner; Fr. caner; D. kaner; Sp. canjero, canero; It. canero, canhero; Gr. κωκρη. This seems to be the same word, though applied to the shell; κωκρη, a cancer, is a different word. From the Greek, the Latins have cancho, Eng. conch. But n is not radical; for this is undoubtedly the W. cocan, Eng. cocke; Fr. coquille, coque, It. coccia. These words are probably from the same root as Sp. cacar, to wrinkle, twist, or make wry faces; Ir. cuachaim, to fold; Eng. cockle, to slink or pucker; verbs which give the primary sense. It is to be noted that caner and caner are the same word; caner being the original pronunciation.]

1. The crab or crab-fish. The term caner was applied, as a generic name, by Linnæus, to a very extensive genus of animals, marked by him in his class Insecta, order Apera, corresponding to the first three orders of Cuvier's class Crustacea, and including the crab, lobster, shrimp, crayfish, &c. The term is now confined to a genus of Crustacea, including only the common European crab and a few allied species.

2. In astronomy, one of the twelve signs of the zodiac, represented by the form of a crab, and limiting the sun's course northward in summer; hence, the sign of the summer solstice.

3. In medicine, a roundish, hard, unequal, scirrhous tumor, which usually ulcerates, is very painful, and generally fatal. In the most limited sense, a morbid affection of the mamma, commencing with an uneven livid induration, marked by canceriform dilated vessels, and usually terminating in a malignant phagedenic ulcer; the carcinus of Good. In a more general sense, any local affection commencing with an induration, and terminating in a phagedenic ulcer, or any malignant phagedenic ulcer, whether commencing with an induration or not.

CAN'DLE-LIGHT, (-lite,) n. [candle and light.] The light of a candle; or the necessary candles for use.

CAN'DLE-MAS, n. [candle and mass, Sax. massa; candle-fast.]

The feast of the church, celebrated on the second day of February, in honor of the purification of the Virgin Mary, so called from the great number of lights used on that occasion. This feast is supposed to have originated in the declaration of Simon, that our Savior was "to be a light to lighten the Gentiles." On this day, the Roman Catholics consecrate all the candles and tapers which are to be used in their churches during the whole year. In Rome, the pope performs the ceremony himself, and distributes wax candles to the cardinals and others, who carry them in procession through the great hall of the pope's palace. The ceremony was prohibited in England by an order of council in 1548. But Candlemas is one of the four terms for paying and receiving rents and interest; and it gives name to a law term, beginning Jan. 15, and ending Feb. 3.

CAN'DLE-STICK, n. [candle and stick; Sax. candel-sticca.]

An instrument or utensil to hold a candle, made in different forms and of different materials; originally, a stick or piece of wood.

CAN'NY, n. [Scottish.] Burns.

CA'NOE, (ka-noe,) n. [Fr. canot; Sp. canoja; It. cano, or canon. This is said to be of Indian origin; as all the Spanish historians of America, when they first mention the word, give an explanation of it; "Ila in terram suis lintribus, quos canoas vocant, educerunt." P. Martyr.]

1. A boat used by rude nations, formed of the body or trunk of a tree, excavated, by cutting or burning.

into a suitable shape. Similar boats are now used, by civilized men, for fishing and other purposes. It is impelled by a paddle, instead of an oar.

2. A boat made of bark or skins, used by savages.
CAN'ON, n. [Sax. canon: Fr. S. pa. and Port. canon: It. canone: L. canon: Gr. κανών.] Dr. Owen deduces the word from the Heb. קָנָן, a cane, reed, or measuring-rod. In Eth. קָנָן signifies to set, to establish, to form a rule; whence canon, a rule. But this verb is probably from the noun. The word is from one of the roots in Class G, which signifies to set, or to strain. The Welsh unites it with the root of can, L. cano, to sing, W. canon, a song, a rule, a canon, from canis, to sing, L. cano. The sense of canon is, that which is set or established.

1. In ecclesiastical affairs, a law, or rule of doctrine or discipline, enacted by a council and confirmed by the sovereign; a decision of matters in religion, or a regulation of policy or discipline, by a general or provincial council.

2. A law or rule in general.

3. The genuine books of the Holy Scriptures, called the sacred canon, or general rule of moral and religious duty, given by inspiration.

4. A dignitary of the church; a person who possesses a prebend or revenue allotted for the performance of divine service in a cathedral or collegiate church.

A cardinal canon, is one attached to a church, incardinatus, as a priest to a parish.

Domiciliary canons, are young canons, not in orders, having no right in any particular chapters.

Expectative canons: having no revenue or prebend, but having the title and dignities of canons, a voice in the chapter, and a place in the choir, till a prebend should fall.

Foreign canons; such as did not officiate in their canopies; opposed to manicatory or residuary canons.

Lay, secular, or honorary canons; laymen admitted, out of honor or respect, into some chapter of canons.

Regular canons; who live an ascetic life, in monasteries or in community, and who, to the practice of their rules, have added the profession of vows.

Tertiary canons; who have only the third part of the revenue of the canonicate.

5. In monasteries, a book containing the rules of the order.

6. A catalogue of saints acknowledged and canonized in the Roman Catholic church.

7. Canon of the mass; the entire office of the mass, but particularly the secret words of the mass from the preface to the pastor, in the middle of which the priest consecrates the host. The people are to rehearse this part of the service on their knees, and in a voice lower than can be heard.

Roman Catholic Church.

8. In ancient music, a rule or method for determining the intervals of notes, invented by Ptolemy.

9. In modern music, a kind of perpetual fugue, in which the different parts, beginning one after another, repeat incessantly the same air.

CANT, v. t. [L. canto, to sing; Sp. cantar; Port. id., to sing, to chant, to recite, to creak, to chirp, to whistle; It. cantare, to sing, to praise, to crows; Fr. chanter; Arm. cana; from L. cano, to sing. The primary sense is, to throw, thrust, or drive, as in can; a sense retained in the phrase to cant over any thing. In singing, it implies a modulation or inflection of voice. In Welsh, can, with a different sound of the vowel, signifies a song, and white, L. cano, canus, and canes. These are from the same root, and have the same radical sense, to throw or shoot, as rays of light, to shine, probably applied to the sun's morning rays. W. canu, to sing; Sanscrit, gana; Persic, kandam.]

1. In popular usage, to give a sudden thrust or impulse; as, to cant round a stick of timber, to cant a foot-ball.

2. To incline or pitch forward, as a cask, to make it run more freely.

3. To speak with a whining voice, or an affected, singing tone.

[In this sense, it is usually intransitive.]

4. To sell by auction, or to bid a price at auction.

CANT, n. A thrust, push, or other impulse, with a sudden jerk; as, to give a ball a cant.

[This is the literal sense.]

2. An inclination from a horizontal line; as, to be on the cant.

3. A whining, singing manner of speech; a quaint, affected mode of uttering words, either in conversation or preaching.

4. The whining speech of beggars, as in asking alms and making complaints of their distresses.

5. The peculiar words and phrases of professional men; phrases often repeated, or not well authorized.

6. Any barbarous jargon in speech.

7. Whining pretension to goodness. Johnson.

8. Outcry at a public sale of goods; a call for bidders at an auction. Swift.

This use of the word is precisely equivalent to auction, outcry, a hawking, a crying out, or, in the vulgar dialect, a singing out; but I believe not in use in the United States.

CAP-I-AS, n. [L. capio, to take.]

In law, a writ of two sorts; one before judgment, called a capias ad respondendum, where an original is issued, to take the defendant, and make him answer to the plaintiff; the other, which issues after judgment, is of divers kinds; as, a capias ad satisfaciendum, or writ of execution; a capias pro fine; a capias ad levatum; a capias in writemam. Blackstone.

CA-PIB'A-RA, n. An animal partaking of the form of a hog and of a rabbit, the enlia.

CAP-IL-LA'CI-OU-S, a. [L. capillaceus, hairy.]

Having long filaments; resembling a hair. [See CAPILLARY.]

CAP-IL-LAIRE', n. [Fr.] Originally, a kind of hair, extracted from Maiden-hair. Now, any simple sirup flavored with orange-flower water. Brande.

CA-PIL-LA-MENT, n. [L. capillamentum, from capillus, hair, probably a little shoot.]

1. In botany, a filament; a small, fine thread, like a hair, that grows in the middle of a flower, with a little knob at the top; a chive.

2. One of the fine fibers or filaments of which the nerves are composed.

CAP-IL-LAR-I-TY, n. The state or condition of being capillary.

CAP-IL-LAR-Y or CAP-IL-LAR-Y, a. [L. capillaris, from capillus, hair.]

1. Resembling a hair; fine, minute, small in diameter, though long; as, a capillary tube or pipe; in a capillary vessel in animal bodies, such as the minute ramifications of the blood-vessels.

2. In botany, capillary plants (herba capillaris) was a term applied by Morison, Ray, and Boerhaave, to a class of plants consisting of the ferns. This class corresponds to the order Filices, in the Sexual method, which bear their dower and fruit on the back of the leaf or frond.

This term is applied also to leaves which are longer than the setaceous or bristle-shaped leaf, to glands resembling hairs, to the filaments, to the style, and to the pappus or down affixed to some seeds. Martyn.

3. Pertaining to capillary tubes, or to the capillary vessels, or capillaries, in animals; as, capillary action.

Capillary attraction and repulsion; terms denoting the cause which determines the ascent or descent of a fluid in a capillary tube above or below the level of the surrounding fluid, when the tube is dipped in that fluid. P. Cye.

CAP-IL-LAR-Y, n. A fine vessel or canal.

The capillaries are the minute vessels of the sanguiferous system, interposed between the arteries and veins.

CAP-IL-LA-TION, n. A blood-vessel like a hair. [Not in use.]

CAP-IL-LI-FORM, a. [L. capillus, a hair, and forma, form.]

In the shape or form of a hair, or of hairs. Kircean.

CAP-IT-AL, a. [L. capitulis, from caput, the head. See CAP.]

1. Literally, pertaining to the head; as, a capital bruise, in Milton, a bruise on the head. [This use is not common.]

2. Figuratively, as the head is the highest part of a man, chief; principal; first in importance; as, a capital city or town; the capital articles of religion.

3. Punishable by loss of the head or of life; incurring the forfeiture of life; punishable with death; as, treason and murder are capital offenses or crimes.

4. Taking away life; as, a capital punishment; or affecting life; as, a capital trial.

5. Great, important, though perhaps not chief; as, a town possesses capital advantages for trade.

6. Large; of great size; as, capital letters, which are of different form, and larger than common letters.

Capital stock, is the sum of money or stock which a merchant, banker, or manufacturer employs in his business; either the original stock, or that stock augmented. Also, the sum of money or stock which each partner contributes to the joint fund or stock of the partnership; also, the common fund or stock of the company, whether incorporated or not.

A capital city or toica, is the metropolis or chief city of an empire, kingdom, state, or province. The application of the epithet indicates the city to be the largest, or to be the seat of government, or both. In many instances, the capital, that is, the largest city, is not the seat of government.

CAP-IT-AL, n. [L. capitulum.]

The uppermost part of a column, pillar, or pilaster, serving as the head or crowning, and placed immediately over the shaft, and under the entablature.

Encyc.

By the customary omission of the noun, to which the adjective capital refers, it stands for,

1. The chief city or town in a kingdom or state; a metropolis.

2. A large letter or type, in printing.

3. A stock in trade, in manufactures, or in any business requiring the expenditure of money with a view to profit.

CAP-IT-AL-IST, n. A man who has a capital or stock in trade, usually denoting a man of large property, which is or may be employed in business.

Burke. Stephens.

CAP-IT-AL-LY, adv. In a capital or excellent manner; nobly; finely.

2. In a way involving the loss of life; as, to punish capitally.

CAP-IT-AL-NESS, n. A capital offense. [Little used.]

CAP-IT-ATE, a. [L. capitatus, from caput, a head.]

In botany, growing in a head, applied to a flower, or stigma. Martyn. Lec.

CAP-IT-ATION, n. [L. capitatio, from caput, the head.]

1. Numeration by the head; a numbering of persons.

2. A tax, or imposition, upon each head or person; a poll-tax. Sometimes written capitation-tax. Encyc.

CAP-IT-ATE, n. [L. caput, the head, abl.]

In English law, a tenant in capite, or in chief, is one who holds lands immediately of the king, caput, the head or lord paramount of all lands in the kingdom, by knight's service or by socage. This tenure is called tenure in capite; but it was abolished in England by 12 Charles II. 24.

CAP-IT-TOL, n. [L. capitulum, from caput, the head.]

1. The temple of Jupiter, in Rome, and a fort or castle, on the Mons Capitolinus. In this the senate of Rome anciently assembled; and on the same place is still the city hall or town house, where the conservators of the Romans hold their meetings. The same name was given to the principal temples of the Romans in their colonies. Encyc.

2. The edifice occupied by the congress of the United States in their deliberations. In some states, the state house, or house in which the legislature holds its sessions; a government house.

CAP-IT-TO-LI-AN, a. Pertaining to the capitol in Rome.

D'Anville.

CAP-IT-TOL-INE, a. Pertaining to the capitol in Rome.

The Capitoline games were annual games instituted by Camillus in honor of Jupiter Capitolinus, and in commemoration of the preservation of the capitol from the Gauls, and other games instituted by Domitian, and celebrated every five years. Encyc.

CAP-IT-U-LAR, n. [L. capitulum, a head or chap-
CAP-IT-U-LAR-Y, ter.]

1. An act passed in a chapter, either of knights, canons, or religious.

2. The body of laws or statutes of a chapter, or of an ecclesiastical council. This name is also given to the laws, civil and ecclesiastical, made by Charles-magne and other princes, in general councils and assemblies of the people. Some, indeed, have alleged that these are supplements to laws. They are so called because they are divided into chapters or sections. Encyc.

3. The member of a chapter.

CAP-IT-U-LAR-LY, adv. In the form of an ecclesiastical chapter.

CAP-IT-U-LAR-Y, a. Relating to the chapter of a cathedral. Warton.

CAP-IT-U-LATE, e. i. [from capitulum, supra.]

1. To draw up a writing in chapters, heads, or articles. Shak.

[But this sense is not usual.]

2. To surrender, as an army or garrison, to an enemy, by treaty, in which the terms of surrender are specified and agreed to by the parties. The term is applicable to a garrison, or to the inhabitants of a besieged place, or to an army or troops in any situation in which they are subdued or compelled to submit to a victorious enemy.

CAP-IT-U-LATION, n. The act of capitulating or surrendering to an enemy, upon stipulated terms or conditions.

2. The treaty or instrument containing the conditions of surrender.

3. A reducing to heads; a formal agreement. [Not much used.]

4. In German polity, a contract made by the emperor with the electors, in the names of the princes and states of the empire, before he is raised to the imperial dignity.

CAP-IT-U-LA-TOR, n. One who capitulates.

Sherwood.

CAP-IT-TULE, n. A summary. [Not in use.] Wickliff.

CAP-IT-U-LUM, n. [L.] In botany, a species or mode of inflorescence, in which the flowers are sessile, on the same horizontal plane of the peduncle. It differs from the umbel in the circumstance that the flowers of the umbel have pedicels.

CAP-IT-VI, (-pé've), n. A balsam of the Spanish West Indies. [See COPAITSA.]

CAP-NO-MAN-OY, n. [Gr. kanvos, smoke, and μωρον, divination.]

Divination by the ascent or motion of smoke.

CAP-NO-MOR, n. [Gr. kanvos, smoke, and μορα, a part.]

A transparent, colorless, oil-like fluid, obtained from the smoke of organic bodies.

CAP-POCH, (ka-pooch'), n. [Sp. capucho, a hood; Fr. capuce.]

A monk's hood; also, the hood of a cloak.

CAP-POCH, v. t. To cover with a hood; and hence, to hoodwink or blind.

Capouched your rabbins of the synod,
And snapped their canons with a why-not. Hudibras.

This is the sense given in Pickering's Aldine edition, and is much more probable than Johnson's conjecture, "to take off the hood."

CAP-PON, n. [Sp. capon; Port. capam; It. cappone; Fr. chapou; L. capo; Ir. cabua; D. kappen; G. kapaun; Arm. cabon; Sw. and Dan. kapun; Gr. καπων. Qu. the root of Fr. cooper.]

A castrated cock; a cock chicken gelded as soon as he quits his dam, or as soon as he begins to crow, for the purpose of improving his flesh for the table.

CAP-PON, v. t. To castrate, as a cock. Birch.

CAP-ON-IERE, n. [Fr. Sp. caponera; It. capponiera, a little cut or trench, and it seems to be allied to capon, Sp. caponar, to cut or curtail.]

In fortification, a covered lodgment, sunk four or five feet into the ground, encompassed with a parapet, about two feet high, serving to support several planks, laden with earth. It is large enough to contain 15 or 20 soldiers, and is placed in the glacis, at the extremity of the counterscarp, and in dry moats, with embrasures or loop-holes, through which the soldiers may fire. Harris. Encyc.

A passage from one part of a work to another, protected on each side by a wall or parapet, and sometimes covered overhead. When there is a parapet on one side only, it is called a demi-caponiere.

CAP-PON-IZE, v. t. To castrate a fowl. Barrington.

CAP-POT', [Fr., probably from L. capio, to seize.]

A winning of all the tricks of cards at the game of piquet. Johnson.

CAP-POT', v. t. To win all the tricks of cards at piquet.

CAP-POTE, n. [Fr.] A long cloak for females, covering from head to feet.

CAP-RE-O-LATE, a. [L. capreolus, a tendril, properly a shoot, from the root of capra, a goat.]

In botany, having tendrils, or filiform spiral clasps, by which plants fasten themselves to other bodies, as in vines, peas, &c. Harris. Martyn.

CAP-RIC ACID, n. An acid obtained from butter, which crystallizes in needles at 52°, and becomes entirely liquid at 64°. It has the peculiar odor of the goat.

CAP-PRIC-CIO, (ka-pré'cho), [It., freak, whim.] A loose, irregular kind of music.

CAP-PRIC-CI-O-SO, (ka-pré-che-s'so), [It.] A term denoting a free, fantastical style of music.

CAP-PRICE', (ka-pré's'), n. [Fr. caprice; Sp. and Port. capricho; It. capriccio, a shaking in fever, rigors; also, whim, freak, fancy. I suspect this word to be formed, with a prefix ca, on the root of freak, break; denoting, primarily, a sudden bursting, breaking, or starting. So we see, in Italian, maglio, and camaglio, a mail. In early English writers, it is written, according to the Spanish, capricho. If formed from the root of capio, caper, the primary sense is the same.]

A sudden start of the mind; a sudden change of opinion or humor; a whim, freak, or particular fancy.

CAP-PRICH-IO, n. Freak; fancy. [Obs.] Shak.

CAP-PRICH-IOUS, (ka-prish'us), a. Frenkish; whimsical; apt to change opinions suddenly, or to start from one's purpose; unsteady; changeable; fickle; fanciful; subject to change, or irregularity; as, a man of a capricious temper.

CAP-PRICH-IOUS-LY, adv. In a capricious manner; whimsically.

CAP-PRICH-IOUS-NESS, n. The quality of being led by caprice; whimsicalness; unsteadiness of purpose or opinion.

2. Unsteadiness; liability to sudden changes; as, the capriciousness of fortune.]

CAP-RI-CORN, n. [L. capricornus, capra, a goat, and cornu, a horn.]

One of the twelve signs of the zodiac, the winter solstice; represented on ancient monuments by the figure of a goat, or a figure having the fore part like a goat, and the hind part like a fish. Encyc.

CAP-RID, a. [L. capra, a goat.]

Relating to that tribe of ruminant mammals, of which the genus Capra is the type. It comprehends the genera Antelope, Capra, Ovis, and Danalis.

CAP-RI-FI-CATION, n. [L. caprificatio.]

The supposed impregnation of the ovules of the fruit of the fig by an insect, which penetrates it and carries in the pollen adhering to his body.

This is a process for accelerating the ripening of the fig, in the Levant, by suspending on the cultivated fig branches of the wild fig, that bring with them a small insect, (a species of Cynips, Linn.) which, by puncturing the fruit for the purpose of laying its eggs, simply hastens ripening. This effect may also be produced merely by puncturing the fruit with a needle dipped in oil. P. Cye.

CAP-RI-FOLE, n. [L. caprifolium.]

Honeysuckle; woodbine. Spenser.

CAP-RI-FORM, a. [L. caper, a goat, and forma, form.] Having the form of a goat. Electric Review.

CAP-PRIG'E-NOUS, a. Produced by a goat.

CAP-PRINE, n. A substance found in butter, which, with butyric and capronic, gives it its peculiar agreeable taste and odor. It is a compound of capric acid and glycerin, (glycerin), or a caprate of glycerin.

CAP-RI-OLE, n. [Fr., now cabriole; Sp. and Port. cabriola; It. capriola, a caper.]

In the manège, caprioles are leaps that a horse makes in the same place without advancing, in such a manner, that when he is at the height of the leap, he jerks out with his hind legs, even and near. It differs from the croupade in this, that, in a croupade, a horse does not show his shoes; and from a balotade, in which he does not jerk out. Farrier's Dict.

CAPRI-RED, a. [L. caper, a goat, and pes, foot.] Having feet like those of a goat.

CAPRO-ATE, n. A salt formed by the union of caproic acid with a base.

CAPRO-IC ACID, n. An acid obtained from butter, in the form of an oily, limpid fluid, having the odor of sweat, and a nauseous, sweetish taste.

CARAMEL, n. [Fr.] Anhydrous or burnt sugar; a black, porous, shining substance, obtained by heating sugar to a high temperature. It is soluble in water, which it colors a dark brown, and is used for coloring spirits, &c. It gives, when heated, a peculiar odor, called the odor of caracal.

CARAT, n. [It. carato; Fr. carat; D. karat; G. karat; Gr. karaturus, a little horn, a pod, and the berry of a pod, used for a weight of four grains. From the Greeks it is said the Arabians borrowed their قرط karat, a weight used in Mecca, equal to the twenty-fourth of a denarius, or denier. See Castell, Col. 3443, and Ludolf, 199.]

1. The weight of four grains, used by goldsmiths and jewelers in weighing precious stones and pearls. Encyc.

2. The weight that expresses the fineness of gold. The whole mass of gold is divided into 24 equal parts, and as many 24th parts as it contains of pure gold, it is called gold of so many carats. Thus gold of twenty-two parts of pure metal, is gold of twenty-two carats. The carat in Great Britain is divided into four grains; among the Germans, into twelve parts; and among the French, into thirty-two. Encyc.

3. The value of any thing. [Obs.] B. Jonson.

CARAVAN, n. [Ar. قیروان kairawan, from قرا karu, to stretch along, to follow, to proceed from place to place. Sp. caravana; Fr. caravane. Pers. as Ar.]

1. A company of travelers, pilgrims, or merchants, marching or proceeding in a body over the deserts of Arabia, or other regions infested with robbers.

2. A large, close carriage on springs, for conveying wild beasts when carried round as a show. Encyc.

CAR-A-VAN'SA-RY, } n. A place appointed for re-CAR-A-VAN'SE-RA, } ceiving and loading caravans;
 a kind of inn, where the caravans rest at night, being a large, square building, with a spacious court in the middle. Encyc.

CAR-A-VELL, } n. [Sp. caracela; It. caravello; Fr. caravelle, }
CAR-VELL, } rovelle.]

1. A small vessel on the coast of France, used in the herring fishery. These vessels are usually from 25 to 30 tons' burden.

2. A light, round, old-fashioned ship. Johnson.

CAR-A-WAY, n. [Gr. καρως, κάρω; L. caros, carum; Fr. caroi; Sp. alcaravea or alcaraveya; D. kerwe; Ar. كارويا.]

A biennial plant, the carum carvi of Linnaeus, with a taper root like a parsnip, which, when young, is good eating. The seeds have an aromatic smell and a warm, pungent taste. They are used in confectionery, and also in medicine as a carminative. Encyc.

2. A kind of apple. Mason.
CAR-BA-ZO'TIC AC'ID, n. [carbon and azote.] A yellow, bitter, crystallizable substance, obtained by the action of nitric acid on indigo and some other azotized organic substances. It is also called picric acid, and the bitter principle of Welter.

CAR'BINE. See CAZARINE.
CAR'BO'N, n. [L. carbo, a coal; Sp. carbon; It. carbone; Fr. charbon. Qu. Gr. απρω, to dry, or the root of char, Russ. charny, to burn.]

An elementary, combustible substance, existing pure and crystallized in the diamond, and sometimes in graphite, and forming the basis of animal and vegetable charcoal, and of coke. By means of a galvanic apparatus, it is found to be capable of fusion.

CAR-RO'N-A'CEOUS, a. Pertaining or relating to, or containing, or composed of, carbon; as, carbonaceous matter.

CAR'BO-NA'DE, n. [from carbo, supra.] In cookery, flesh, fowl, or the like, cut across, seasoned, and broiled on coals. Shak.

CAR'RO-NA'DE, v. t. To cut or hack. Shak.

CAR'RO NAD-ED, pp. Cut for broiling or frying.

CAR'RO NAD-ING, ppr. Cutting for broiling or frying.

CAR'BO'N-ATE, n. In chemistry, a salt formed by the union of carbonic acid with a base; as, the carbonate of lime, carbonate of copper.

CAR'RO'N-A'TED, a. Combined with carbonic acid. Carbonated waters; such mineral waters as are impregnated with carbonic acid.

CAR'BO'N'IC ACID, n. An acid composed of one equivalent of carbon, and two equivalents of oxygen, or in which oxygen combines in the greatest proportion with carbon. It exists, under ordinary circumstances, when uncombined, in the state of a gas, but has been liquefied by very powerful pressure. It was formerly called fixed air, aerial acid, sulphuric gas, and cretaceous acid, or acid of chalk. It is found, in some places, in a state of gas; it exists in the atmosphere, and is disengaged from fermenting liquors, and from decomposing vegetable and animal substances, and is given off in respiration. It is heavier than common air, and subsides into low places, vaults and wells.

CAR'BO'N'IC OX'YD, n. A gaseous compound of one equivalent of carbon, and one equivalent of oxygen. It is fatal to animal life, extinguishes combustion, and burns with a pale blue flame, forming carbonic acid. It apparently possesses combining acid properties, and may be called carbonous acid.

CAR-RO'N-IF'ER-OUS, a. [carbo and ferro, to bear.] Producing or containing carbon or coal. Kirwan, Geol.

This term is properly applied to strata or formations containing coal.

CAR-BON-I-ZA'TION, n. The act or process of carbonizing.

CAR'BO'N-IZE, v. t. To convert into carbon by combustion or the action of fire, or by other means, as by the action of concentrated acids on animal and vegetable substances.

CAR'BO'N-IZ-ED, pp. Converted into carbon or charcoal.

CAR'RO'N-IZ-ING, ppr. Converting into carbon.

CAR'BO'N-O-HY'DROUS, a. [carbon, and Gr. υδωρ, water.] Composed of carbon and hydrogen.

CAR'BO-SUL'PHU-RET, n. A term formerly applied to the compounds formed by the action of the disulphuret of carbon, on the metallic and alkaline metallic sulphurets.

CAR'BOY, n. A large, globular bottle of green glass, inclosed in basket-work for protection; used especially for carrying corrosive liquors, as sulphuric acid, &c.

CAR'BUN-CLE, (kär'bunk-l.) n. [L. carbunculus, a little coal, from carbo.]

1. An anthrax, or an inflammatory tumor, or painful gangrenous boil or ulcer. Coez. Hooper.

2. A beautiful gem, of a deep red color, with a mixture of scarlet, called by the Greeks anthrax; and found in the East Indies. It is usually found pure, of an angular figure, and adhering to a heavy, ferruginous stone, of the emery kind. Its usual size is nearly a quarter of an inch in length, and two thirds of that in diameter. When held up to the sun, it loses its deep tinge, and becomes exactly of the color of a burning coal. Encyc.

The mineral here described, is probably the Oriental ruby, or, at least, some crystallized variety of corundum.

The carbuncle of the ancients is supposed to have been a garnet. Cleaveland.

3. In heraldry, a charge or bearing consisting of eight radii, four of which make a common cross, and the other four, a saltier. Encyc.

CAR'RUN-CLED, (kär'bunk-l.) a. Set with carbuncles; spotted.

CAR-BUN'E-U-LAR, a. Belonging to a carbuncle; resembling a carbuncle; red; inflamed.

CAR-BUN'E-U-LA'TION, n. [L. carbunculus, from carbunculo, to burn to a coal, to blast. See CASSON.]

The blasting of the young buds of trees or plants, by excessive heat or cold. Harris.

CAR'BU-RET, n. A combination of carbon with some other substance, the resulting compound not being an acid or base. More exactly, a compound of carbon with a basifiable or acidifiable substance, in which the carbon is the electro-negative ingredient.

CAR'BU-RET-ED, a. Combined with carbon in the manner of a carburet; as, carbureted hydrogen gas. Carbureted hydrogen gas, is a term applied to various gaseous compounds of carbon, particularly to two definite compounds, the proto-carburet of hydrogen, or heavy carbureted hydrogen, composed of one equivalent each of carbon and hydrogen, and the bis-carburet of hydrogen, or light carbureted hydrogen, composed of one equivalent of carbon, and two equivalents of hydrogen.

Carbureted is applied to certain gaseous compounds. Thus we say, carbureted hydrogen. Silliman.

CAR'CA-JOU, n. The glutton, a voracious, carnivorous quadruped.

CAR'CA-NET, n. [Fr. carcan, a chain; It. carcame.] A chain or collar of jewels. Shak. Hakewell.

CAR'CASS, n. [Fr. carcasse; It. carcame; Norm. carcoys, a mast, and a carcass. Qu. Gr. καρχηονις.]

1. The body of an animal; usually, the body when dead. It is not applied to the living body of the human species, except in low or ludicrous language.

2. The decaying remains of a bulky thing, as of a boat or ship.

3. The frame or main parts of a thing, unfinished or without ornament. This seems to be the primary sense of the word. [See the next word.] Hale.

CAR'CASS, n. [It. carcassa; Sp. carcaz; Fr. carcasse; D. karkas.]

An iron case or hollow vessel, about the size of a bomb, of an oval figure, filled with combustible and other substances, as meal-powder, saltpeter, sulphur, broken glass, turpentine, &c., to be thrown from a mortar into a town, to set fire to buildings. It has two or three apertures, from which the fire blazes, and the light sometimes serves as a direction in throwing shells. It is equipped with pistol-barrels, loaded with powder to the muzzle, which explode as the composition burns down to them. This instrument is probably named from the ribs of iron that form it, which resemble the ribs of a human carcass. Encyc. Mar. Dict.

CAR'CEL LAMP, n. A lamp of French invention, in which the oil is raised through tubes by clock-work, so as continually to overflow at the bottom of the burning wick, thus producing a very beautiful and brilliant light. Encyc. Dom. Econ.

CAR'CEL-AGE, n. [L. carcer.] Prison fees. [Not in use.]

CAR'CE'ER, n. [L.] A starting-post.

CAR'CE'ER-AL, a. Belonging to a prison.

CAR-CI-NO'MA, n. [Gr. καρκινωμα, from καρκινωσις, καρκινος, a cancer.]

A cancer; also, a turgescence of the veins of the eye. Coez.

CAR-CI-NO'MA-TOUS, a. Cancerous; like a cancer, or tending to it.

CARD, n. [Fr. carte; Sp. Post. and It. carta; L. charta; Gr. χαρτις; D. kaart; G. karte; Dan. kort; Ir. cart; perhaps from burk, L. cortex, Ir. coirt or cairt, or the same root.]

1. A paper or pasteboard of an oblong figure, on which are painted figures or points; used in games.

CAR'PEN-TER, n. [Fr. charpentier; Sp. carpintero; Port. carpenteiro; It. carpentiere, a cartwright, or coach-maker; L. carpentarius, from carpentum, a chariot.]

An artificer who works in timber; a framer and builder of houses and of ships. Those who build houses are called house-carpenters; and those who build ships are called ship-carpenters.

In New England, a distinction is often made between the man who frames and the man who executes the interior wood work of a house. The framer is the carpenter, and the finisher is called a joiner. This distinction is noticed by Johnson, and seems to be a genuine English distinction. But, in some other parts of America, as in New York, the term carpenter includes both the framer and the joiner; and, in truth, both branches of business are often performed by the same person. The word is never applied, as in Italy and Spain, to a coach-maker.

CAR/PEN-TRY, n. The art of cutting, framing, and joining timber, in the construction of buildings; divided into house-carpentry and ship-carpentry.

2. The work of a carpenter.

CAR'PER, n. One who carps; a caviler.

1. The act of carrying, bearing, transporting, or conveying; as, the carriage of sounds. Bacon.

2. The act of taking by an enemy; conquest; acquisition. [Obs.] Knolles.

3. That which carries, especially on wheels; a vehicle. This is a general term for a coach, chariot, chaise, gig, sulky, or other vehicle on wheels, as a common-carriage on trucks, a block-carriage for mortars, and a truck-carriage. Appropriately, the word is applied to a coach; and carts and wagons are rarely, or never, called carriages.

4. The price, or expense, of carrying.

5. That which is carried; burden; as baggage, vessels, furniture, &c.

This verb signifies, primarily, to carry on a cart, or car, and are evidently from the noun. But the English carry coincides also with the Latin gero, our vulgar kerry; for the sense of behavior can hardly proceed from the moving of a wheel carriage, nor indeed can some other senses of this word. But the primary sense, in both cases, is to move.]
 1. To bear, convey, or transport, by sustaining and moving the thing carried, either by bodily strength, upon a beast, in a vehicle, or in any kind of watercraft. In general, it implies a moving from the speaker or the place, present or near, to a place more distant, and so is opposed to bring and fetch, and it is often followed by from, away, off, out.

ḳ kitta or haita, is a male cat. Class. Gd., No. 56.]

1. A name applied to certain species of carnivorous quadrupeds, of the genus Felis. The domestic cat needs no description. It is a deceitful animal, and when enraged, extremely spiteful. It is kept in houses, chiefly for the purpose of catching rats and mice. The wild cat is much larger than the domestic cat. It is a strong, ferocious animal, living in the forest, and very destructive to poultry and lambs.

The wild cat of Europe is of the same species with the domestic cat; the catamount of North America is much larger, and a distinct species. Ed. Encyc.

2. A ship formed on the Norwegian model, having a narrow stern, projecting quarters, and a deep waist. It is strong built, from four to six hundred tons burden, and employed in the coal trade.

3. A strong tackle or combination of pulleys, to hook and draw an anchor perpendicularly up to the cat-head of a ship.

4. A double tripod, having six feet.

Cat of nine tails: an instrument of punishment, consisting of nine pieces of line or cord fastened to a piece of thick rope, and having three knots at intervals, used to flog offenders on board of ships.

Cat in pan. The proverbial expression, "to turn a cat in a pan," denotes a sudden change of one's party in politics or religion, for the sake of being in the ascendant; as a cat always comes down on her legs, however turned or thrown. Toone.

CAT-BIRD, (-bird), n. An American bird, whose cry resembles that of a cat; and the Turdus felineus.

CAT-Y-BLOCK, n. A two or three fold block with an iron stop and large hook, used to draw up an anchor to the cat-head. Mar. Dict.

CAT'S-EYE, n. A variety of quartz, or chalcidony, exhibiting yellowish, opalescent reflections from within, especially apparent when cut with a convex surface. These reflections, which resemble much

In geology, this term has been used to denote various inundations, or deluges, supposed to have occurred at different periods, and to have deposited different formations of diluvian, or drift.

CAT-A-COMB, (-kōme), n. [probably from Gr. kara, and κρηβη, a hollow, or recess.] A cave, grotto, or subterraneous place for the burial of the dead. It is said to have been originally applied to the chapel of St. Sebastian, in Rome, where, the ancient Roman calendars say, the body of St. Peter was deposited. It is now applied to a vast number of subterraneous sepulchres, about three miles from Rome, to the Appian Way; supposed to be the cells and caves in which the primitive Christians concealed themselves, and in which were deposited the bodies of the primitive martyrs. These are visited by devout people, and relics are taken from them, baptized by the pope, and dispersed through Roman Catholic countries. Each catacomb is three feet broad, and eight or ten high; along the side walls are sepulchral niches, closed with thick tiles, or pieces of marble. Catacombs are found also at Naples, and in other places. Encyc.

CAT-A-COUS-TICS, n. [Gr. κατακουσις, to hear.] That part of acoustics, or the doctrine of sounds, which treats of reflected sounds. But the distinction is deemed of little use. Encyc.

Originally, a chief notary or scribe, under the Roman emperors; but in England, in later times, an officer invested with judicial powers, and particularly with the superintendence of all charters, letters, and other official writings of the crown, that required to be solemnly authenticated. Hence this officer became the keeper of the great seal. From the Roman empire, this office passed to the church, and hence every bishop has his chancellor.

The lord high chancellor of Great Britain, or keeper of the great seal, is the highest officer of the crown. He is a privy counselor by his office, and prolocutor of the house of lords by prescription. To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace; he is keeper of the king's conscience, visitor of all hospitals and colleges founded by the king, guardian of all charitable uses, and judge of the high Court of Chancery.

Chancellor of an ecclesiastical court, is the bishop's lawyer, versed in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishop in causes of the church, civil and criminal.

Chancellor of a cathedral, is an officer who hears lessons and lectures in the church, by himself or his vicar, inspects schools, hears causes, applies the seal, writes and dispatches letters of the chapter, keeps the books, &c.

Chancellor of the exchequer, is an officer who presides in that court, and takes care of the interest of the crown. He has power, with the lord treasurer, to lease the crown lands, and with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes. He is the highest finance minister of the British government.

Chancellor of a university, is an officer who seals the diplomas, or letters of degree, &c. The chancellor of Oxford is usually one of the prime nobility, elected by the students in convocation; and he holds the office for life. He is the chief magistrate in the government of the university. The chancellor of Cambridge is also elected from among the prime nobility; he does not hold his office for life, but may be elected every three years.

Chancellor of the order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their proceedings, and delivers their acts under the seal of their order. Johnson. Encyc.

In France, a secretary is, in some cases, called a chancellor. In the United States, a chancellor is the judge of a court of chancery or equity, established by statute.

In Scripture, a master of the decrees, or president of the council. Ezra iv.

CHAN'CEL-LOR-SHIP, n. The office of a chancellor; the time during which one is chancellor.

CHAN'CE-RY, n. [Fr. chancellerie; Arn. cancellery; Sp. chancilleria; It. cancellaria; L. cancellaria, from cancelli, lattices, or from the judge, who presided in the court.]

1. In Great Britain, the highest court of justice, next to the parliament, consisting of two distinct tribunals; one ordinary, being a court of common law; the other extraordinary, or a court of equity. The ordinary legal court holds pleas of recognizances acknowledged in the chancery, writs of scire facias for repeal of letters patent, writs of partition, and all personal actions by or against any officer of the court. But if the parties come to issue in fact, this court can not try it by a jury; but the record must be delivered to the King's Bench. From this court issue all original writs that pass under the great seal, commissions of charitable uses, bankruptcy, idiocy, lunacy, &c.

The extraordinary court, or Court of Equity, proceeds upon rules of equity and conscience, moderates the rigor of the common law, and gives relief in cases where there is no remedy in the common law. 2. In the United States, a court of equity. [courts.]

 [Char-man and Char-woman are, I believe, not used in America.]

CHĀR, v. t. [Russ. jaryu or charyu, to roast or burn; or goryu, to burn, or be burnt; and with a prefix, sgaryu or sgorayu, to burn; Fr. charrée, ashes. Qu. Heb. Ch. Eth. חָרַר. Class Gr, No. 22, 23. This seems to be the root of L. carbo. See CHARR.]
 1. To burn or reduce to coal or carbon; to reduce to charcoal, by expelling all volatile matter from wood. This is done by burning wood slowly, under a covering of turf and earth.
 2. To expel all volatile matter from stone or earth by heat.

The stone or earth charred from all foreign visible ingredients. Kerwan.

CHĀR'ACT, n. [See CHARACTER.] An inscription.

CHĀR'ACT, n. [Not in use.] Skelton.

CHĀR'AC-TER, n. [L. character; Fr. caractère; Sp. caracter; It. carattere; Gr. χαρακτήρ, from the verb χαραττω, χαρττω, χαρτω, to scrape, cut, engrave.]
 1. A mark made by cutting or engraving, as on stone, metal, or other hard material; hence, a mark or figure made with a pen or style, on paper, or other material used to contain writing; a letter or figure used to form words and communicate ideas. Characters are literal, as the letters of an alphabet; numerical, as the arithmetical figures; emblematical or symbolical, which express things or ideas; and abbreviations; as, C. for centum, a hundred; lb. for libra, a pound; A. D., Anno Domini; &c.
 2. A mark or figure made by stamping or impressing, as on coins.
 3. The manner of writing; the peculiar form of letters used by a particular person.
 You know the character to be your brother's. Shak.

4. The peculiar qualities impressed, by nature or habit, on a person, which distinguish him from others; these constitute real character, and the qualities which he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character, or reputation. Hence we say, a character is not formed, when the person has not acquired stable and distinctive qualities.

5. An account, description, or representation of any thing, exhibiting its qualities and the circumstances attending it; as, to give a bad character to a town, or to a road.

6. A person; as, the assembly consisted of various characters, eminent characters, and low characters; all the characters in the play appeared to advantage.

The friendship of distinguished characters. Roscoe.

7. By way of eminence, distinguished or good qualities; those which are esteemed and respected; and those which are ascribed to a person in common estimation. We inquire whether a stranger is a man of character.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by office or station; the qualities that, in public estimation, belong to a person in a particular station, as when we ask how a magistrate or commander supports his character.

9. The peculiar qualities or properties by which one thing is distinguished from another, as animals, plants, and minerals.

These properties, when employed for the purpose of discriminating minerals, are called characters. Ciccolani.

10. Distinctive quality of any kind strongly marked, particularly energy or force; as, a man is said to have no character, or a great deal of character.

CHĀR'AC-TER, v. t. To engrave; to inscribe. Milton. Shak.

2. To describe; to distinguish by particular marks or traits. Miford.

CHĀR'AC-TER-ĒD, pp. Engraved; inscribed; distinguished by a particular character. Miford.

CHĀR'AC-TER-ĒSM, n. The distinction of character. By. Hall.

2. A particular aspect or configuration of the heavens. Encyc.

CHĀR'AC-TER-ĒS'TĒC, n. [Gr. χαρακτηριστικός, from χαραττω.]
 That constitutes the character; that marks the peculiar distinctive qualities of a person or thing; as, generosity is often a characteristic virtue of a brave man.

It is followed by of; as, generosity is characteristic of true bravery.

CHĀR'AC-TER-ĒS'TĒC, n. That which constitutes a character; that which characterizes; that which distinguishes a person or thing from another. Johnson.

Invention is the characteristic of Homer. Pope.

2. In grammar, the principal letter of a word, which is preserved in most of its tenses, in its derivatives and compounds.

The characteristic of a logarithm, is its index or exponent.

The characteristic triangle of a curve, in geometry, is a right-angled triangle, whose hypotenuse makes a part of the curve, not sensibly different from a right line.

CHAR-AC-TER-IS-TIC-AL-LY, adv. In a manner that distinguishes character.

CHAR-AC-TER-IS-TIC-AL-NESS, n. The state or qualities of being characteristic.

CHAR-AC-TER-I-ZATION, n. Act of characterizing.

CHAR-AC-TER-IZE, v. t. [Gr. χαρακτίζω.]
1. To give a character, or an account of the personal qualities of a man; to describe by peculiar qualities.
2. To distinguish; to mark, or express the character; to exhibit the peculiar qualities of a person or thing; as, humility characterizes the true Christian; and the hero is characterized by bravery and magnanimity.

The system of medicine has characterized the entire scheme of divine dispensation.

3. To engrave or imprint. [Little used.] Hale.

4. To mark with a peculiar stamp or figure.

European, Asiatic, and African Societies are all characterized.

CHAR-AC-TER-IZ-ED, (kar'ak-ter-izd), pp. Described or distinguished by peculiar qualities.

CHAR-AC-TER-IZ-ING, pp. Describing or distinguishing by peculiar qualities.

CHAR-AC-TER-LESS, a. Destitute of any peculiar character.

CHAR-AC-TER-Y, n. Impression; mark; distinction. [Not used.] Shak.

CHA-RADEP, (sha-rá-dep') n. [Said to be from the name of the inventor.]

A composition, in which the subject must be a word of two or more syllables, each forming a distinct word; and these syllables are to be concealed in an enigmatical description, first separately and then together. Example:

My first, when a Frenchman is learning English, serves him to swear by. My second is either hay or corn. My whole is the delight of the age. Garriick.

CHAR-AC-AL, n. (char and coal. See CHAR.) Coal made by charring wood; the remains of wood burnt under turf, or in other circumstances to exclude air, and from which all watery and other volatile matter has been expelled by heat. It makes a strong heat, and is used in furnaces, forges, private families, &c. It is black, brittle, light, and inodorous, and, not being decomposable by water or air, will endure for ages without alteration.

CHARD, n. [Fr. chard; l. carduus.]

The leaves of artichokes tied and wrapped all over, except the top, in straw, during autumn and winter. This makes them grow white and lose some of their bitterness.

CHARDS OF BEET, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large, white, thick, downy, cotton-like main shoot, which is the true chard.

CHAR-FRONT, n. A defense for a horse's head, made of plates of steel or pieces of leather.

CHARGE, (chárj), v. t. [Fr. charger; Arm. cargas; Sp. cargar; It. caricare; or carcare; Port. carrigar.]

It would seem from the Welsh, that this word is from car, a cart or other vehicle, and that the noun charge or carga was first formed, and therefore ought in arrangement to precede the verb. If the verb was first formed, the primary sense would be, to load, to throw or put on or in. I think the fact to be otherwise. See CARRO.]

1. To rush on; to fall on; to attack, especially with fixed bayonets; as, an army charges the enemy.

2. To load, as a musket or cannon; to thrust in powder, or powder and ball or shot.

3. To load or burden; to throw on or impose that which oppresses; as, to charge the stomach with indigestible food; or to lay on, or to fill, without oppressing; as, to charge the memory with rules and precepts; to charge the mind with facts.

4. To set or lay on; to impose, as a tax; as, the land is charged with a quitrent; a rent is charged on the land.

5. To lay on or impose, as a task.

The gospel charge us with piety toward God.

6. To put or lay on; as, to charge a building with ornaments, often implying superfluity.

7. To lay on, as a duty; followed by with.

The commander charged his officer with the execution of the project. — See GEN. xi. 4.

8. To intrust to; as, an officer is charged with dispatches.

9. To set to, as a debt; to place on the debit side of an account; as, to charge a man with the price of goods sold to him.

10. To load or lay on, in words, something wrong, reproachful, or criminal; to impute to; as, to charge a man with theft.

11. To lay on in words; to impute to; followed by on before the person; as, to charge a crime on the offender; to charge evil consequences on the doctrines of the Stoics.

12. To censure; to accuse.

In all this Job sinned out, nor charged God foolishly. — Job i.

13. To lay on, give, or communicate, as an order, command, or earnest request; to enjoin; to exhort.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. — 1 Tim. vi.

In this sense, when the command is given in the name of God, or with an oath, the phrase amounts to an adjuration.

To adjure; to bind by an oath. 1 Sam. xiv. 28.

14. To give directions to; to instruct authoritatively; as, the judge charged the grand jury to inquire respecting branches of the peace.

15. To communicate electrical matter to, as to a coated vial, or an electrical battery.

CHARGE, v. i. To make an onset. Thus Glanville says, "Like your heroes of antiquity, he charges in iron;" and we say, to charge with fixed bayonets. But in this application, the object is understood; to charge the enemy.

CHARGE, n. [Fr. charge; Arm. and W. carg; Sp. carga, cargo; Port. cargo, carrega; It. carica, carco; Eng. cargo.]

1. That which is laid on or in; in a general sense, any load or burden. It is the same word radically as cargo.

2. The quantity of powder, or of powder and ball or shot, used, or proper to be used, in loading a musket, cannon, or other like instrument.

3. An onset; a rushing on an enemy; attack; especially by moving troops with fixed bayonets. But it is used for an onset of cavalry, as well as of infantry.

4. An order, injunction, mandate, command.

Moses gave Joshua a charge. — Num. xxvii.
The king gave charge concerning Adalom. — 2 Sam. xviii.

Hence,

5. That which is enjoined, committed, intrusted, or delivered to another, implying care, custody, oversight, or duty to be performed by the person intrusted.

I gave Hannal charge over Jerusalem. — Neh. vii.

Hence the word includes any trust or commitment; an office, duty, employment. It is followed by of or over; more generally by of. Hence,

6. The person or thing committed to another's custody, care, or management; a trust. Thus the people of a parish are called the minister's charge.

The stary guardio drove his charge away
To some fresh pasture. Dryden.

7. Instructions given by a judge to a jury, by a bishop to his clergy, or, among Presbyterians, &c., by a member of an ordaining council to one who is set as pastor over a congregation, or to the congregation themselves. The word may be used as synonymous with command, direction, exhortation, or injunction, but always implies solemnity.

8. Imputation in a bad sense; accusation.

Lay not this sin to their charge. — Acts vii.

9. That which constitutes debt, in commercial transactions; an entry of money, or the price of goods, on the debit side of an account.

10. Cost; expense; as, the charges of the war are to be borne by the nation.

11. Imposition on land or estate; rent, tax, or whatever constitutes a burden or duty.

12. In military affairs, a signal to attack; as, to sound the charge.

13. The posture of a weapon fitted for an attack or combat.

Their armed slaves in charge. Shak.

14. Among farriers, a preparation of the consistence of a thick decoction, or between an ointment and a plaster, used as a remedy for sprains and inflammations.

15. In heraldry, that which is borne upon the color; or the figures represented on the escutcheon, by which the bearers are distinguished from one another.

16. In electrical experiments, a quantity of electrical fluid, communicated to a coated jar, vial, or pane of glass.

17. In painting, charge, or overcharge, is an exaggeration of character in form, color, or expression.

Klmes.

A charge of lead, is thirty-six pligs, each containing six stone, wanting two pounds.

CHARGE'A-BLE, a. That may be charged; that may be set, laid, imposed; as, a duty of forty per cent. is chargeable on wine.

2. Subject to be charged; as, wine is chargeable with a duty of forty per cent.

3. Expensive; costly; as, a chargeable family.

4. Laying or bringing expense.

Because we would not be chargeable to any of you. — 1 Thes. ii.

5. Imputable; that may be laid or attributed as a crime, fault, or debt; as, a fault chargeable on a man.

6. Subject to be charged or accused; as, a man chargeable with a fault or neglect.

CHAR'I-TY, n. [Fr. charité; L. caritas, or caritas; W. cariad; Sp. caridad; Port. caridade; It. carità, caritate. Qui. Gr. χάρις.] This Latin caritas is from carus, dear, costly, whence beloved; and the word was sometimes written charitas, as if from the Gr. χαρις. The Latin carus would seem to be from the verb carere, to want, as dearness arises from scarcity. Of this we have an example in the English dear, whence dearth, which shows the primary sense of dear to be scarce. But qui, the Oriental קָרָה. Class Gr. No. 56.]

1. In a general sense, love, benevolence, good-will; that disposition of heart which inclines men to think favorably of their fellow-men, and to do them good. In a theological sense, it includes supreme love to God, and universal good-will to men. 1 Cor. xiii. Col. iii. 1 Tim. i.

2. In a more particular sense, love, kindness, affection, tenderness, springing from natural relations; as, the charities of father, son, and brother. Milton.

CHEM'IS-TRY, (kim'is-try or kem'is-try,) n. [Fr. chimie; Sp. química; It. and Port. química. The orthography of this word, from its derivation and the analogy of other European languages, would properly be chemistry. It is the Arabic كيميا kamia, the occult art or science, from كمي kamai, to conceal. This was originally the art or science now called alchemy; the art of converting baser metals into gold. The order of Diocletian, directing search to be made for books treating of the wonderful art of making gold and silver, and all that should be found to be committed to the flames, proves the origin of this art to be as remote as the close of the third century; and it was probably somewhat earlier.

Gibbon, ch. 13. It is not improbable that this art was used in counterfeiting coins. The common orthography is from χεω, to melt or fuse; the old orthography was from χυω, the same word, differently written; both having no foundation but a random guess. If lexicographers and writers had been contented to take the orthography of the nations in the south of Europe, where the origin of the word was doubtless understood, and through whom the word was introduced into England, the orthography would have been settled, uniform, and corresponding exactly with the pronunciation.]

Chemistry is a science, the object of which is to discover the nature and properties of all bodies by analysis and synthesis.

Chemistry is that science which explains the intimate mutual action of all natural bodies.
Fourcroy.

Analysis or decomposition, and synthesis or combination, are the two methods which chemistry uses to accomplish its purposes.
Fourcroy.

Chemistry may be defined, the science which investigates the composition of material substances, and the permanent changes of constitution which their mutual actions produce.
Ure.

Chemistry may be defined, that science, the object of which is to discover and explain the changes of composition that occur among the integrant and constituent parts of different bodies.

Chemistry is the science which treats of those events and changes in natural bodies which are not accompanied by sensible motions. Thomson.

Chemistry is justly considered as a science, but the practical operations may be denominated an art.

Chemistry relates to those operations by which the minute nature of bodies is changed, or by which they acquire new properties. Dary.

In Ch. and Syr. the corresponding verb signifies to plow; and the word is said to signify, properly, any image or figure; if so, it may have been named from engraving. But this is uncertain, and the learned are not agreed on the signification.]

A figure composed of various creatures, as a man, an ox, an eagle, or a lion. The first mention of cherubs is in Gen. iii. 24, where the figure is not described; but their office was, with a flaming sword, to keep or guard the way of the tree of life. The two cherubs which Moses was commanded to make at the ends of the mercy-seat, were to be of beaten work of gold; and their wings were to extend over the mercy-seat, their faces toward each other, and between them was the residence of the Deity. Ez. xxv. The cherubs, in Ezekiel's vision, had each four heads, or faces, the hands of a man, and wings. The four faces were, the face of a bull, that of a man, that of a lion, and that of an eagle. They had the likeness of a man. Ezek. iv. and x. In 2 Sam. xxii. 11, and Psalm xviii. Jehovah is represented as riding on a cherub, and flying on the wings of the wind. In the celestial hierarchy, cherubs are represented as spirits next in order to seraphs. The success of the game depends almost entirely on skill. Each gamester has eight dignified pieces, called a king, a queen, two bishops, two knights, and two rooks, or castles; also eight pawns. The pieces of the parties are of different colors. Encyc.

CHEURVIL. [I do not find this word in any English dictionary; nor do I know its origin or affinities. In Persian, خس khax, or gas, signifies evil, depraved, and a useless weed.]

In New England, the Bromus Secalinus, a grass which grows among wheat, and is supposed to be wheat degenerated or changed, as it abounds most in fields where the wheat is winter-killed. It bears some resemblance to oats. This fact is mentioned by Pliny, Nat. Hist. lib. 18, c. 17. "Primum omnium frumentum vitium avena est; et hordeum in eam degenerat." This change of wheat and barley into oats he ascribes to a moist soil, wet weather, bad seed, &c. This opinion coincides with observations in America, as wheat is most liable to perish in moist land, and often in such places, almost all the wheat is killed, and instead of it chess often appears. But this change of wheat into chess is now denied, and the common opinion is affirmed, by the ablest botanists, to be erroneous.

CHEURVIL-AP-PL. n. A species of wild service.

CHROME, n. [Gr. χρῶμα, color.]

A metal consisting of a porous mass of agglutinated grains, very hard, brittle, and of a grayish-white color. Its texture is radiated. In its highest degree of oxidation, it passes into the state of an acid, of a ruby-red color. It takes its name from the various and beautiful colors which its oxyd and acid communicate to substances into whose composition they enter. Chrome is employed to give a fine deep green to the enamel of porcelain, to glass, &c.

The oxyd of chrome is of a bright grass green or pale yellow color.

CHRO-MIC, a. Pertaining to chrome, or obtained from it; as, chromic acid.

Chromic yellow; the artificial chromate of lead, a beautiful pigment.

CHRON'IC, a. [Fr. chronique; It. Sp. cronico;

CHRON'IC-AL, n. [Gr. χρονικός, from χρονος, time, duration. See Ar. قارانا. Class Rn, No. 15.]

Continuing a long time, as a disease. A chronic disease is one which is inveterate or of long continuance, in distinction from an acute disease, which speedily terminates.

CHRON'IC-LE, n. [See CHRON'IC.] An historical register or account of facts or events disposed in the order of time. It is nearly synonymous with annals. In general, this species of writing is more strictly confined to chronological order, and is less diffuse than the form of writing called history.

2. In a more general sense, a history.

3. That which contains history.

Europe—her very ruins tell the history of times gone by, and every molting stone is a chronicle.

4. Chronicles, pl.; two canonical books of the Old Testament.

2. One who studies chronology, or is versed in the science.

CHRO-NO-LOG'IC, a. Relating to chronology;

CHRO-NO-LOG'IC-AL, a. containing an account of events in the order of time; according to the order of time.

CHRO-NO-LOG'IC-AL-LY, adv. In a chronological manner; in a manner according with the order of time, the series of events, or rules of chronology.

CHRO-NOL-O-GY, n. [Gr. χρονολογία; χρονος, time, and λογος, discourse or doctrine.]

The science of time; or the method of measuring or computing time by regular divisions or periods, according to the revolutions of the sun or moon; of ascertaining the true periods or years when past events or transactions took place, and arranging them in their proper order according to their dates.

If history without chronology is dark and confused, chronology without history is dry and uninteresting.

CHRO-NOME-TER, n. [Gr. χρονος, time, and μετρον, measure.]

Any instrument that measures time, or that divides time into equal portions, or that is used for that purpose, as a clock, watch, or dial; particularly, an instrument that measures time with great exactness. Chronoscope is now rarely used.

To rate a chronometer, is to ascertain the exact rate of its gain or loss as compared with true time, for the sake of making the proper allowance in computations dependent thereon.

CHRO-NO-MET'RIC, a. Pertaining to a CHRO-NO-MET'RIC-AL, a. nometer; measured by a chronometer.

CHRO-NOME-TRY, n. The art of measuring time; the measuring of time by periods or divisions.

CHRYSA-LID, n. See CHRYSA-LIS.

CHRYSA-LIS, (kris'a-lis), n.; pl. CHRY-SAL'ID-ES. [L. chrysalis, Gr. χρυσάλλης, a grub, from its golden color, χρυσος, gold.]

The particular form which butterflies, moths, and some other insects assume, before they arrive at their winged or perfect state. It is called also aurelia, from aurum, gold. In this form, the animal is generally in a state of rest or insensibility, without taking nourishment. The external covering is usually smooth and glossy; sometimes hairy. The name is taken from the yellow color of certain species; but they are of different colors, as green, black, &c.

CHRYSO-BERYL, n. [Gr. χρυσος, gold, and βηρυλλιον, beryl.]

A yellowish-green gem, next to sapphire in hardness, consisting of alumina and the earth glucina. On account of a peculiar opalescence presented by the crystals, the mineral has been called cympophane, from κυμα, wave, and φανος, to appear. Alexandrite is the name of an emerald variety from the Ural Mountains.

CHRYSO-CHLORE, n. [Gr. χρυσος, gold, and χλωρος, green.]

A species of mols at the Cape of Good Hope, the fur of which reflects most brilliant metallic hues of green and gold.

CHRYSO-COL-LA, n. [Gr. χρυσος, gold, and κόλλα, glue of gold, χρυσος and κόλλα.] A name given by the Greeks to borax, and also to the green or blue carbonate of copper.

A writing in letters of gold.

CHRYSO-LITE, n. [Gr. χρυσος, gold, and λίθος, stone.]

A mineral, called by Hally and Brogniart, peridot, and by Janesson, prismatic chrysolite. Its prevailing color is some shade of green. It is harder than glass, but less hard than quartz; often transparent, sometimes only translucent. It occurs sometimes in crystals, sometimes in small amorphous masses or grains, and sometimes in rolled pieces. Olivine is a variety of this species, of a bottle-green color; it is disseminated frequently through basalt.

CHRYSO-OL-O-GY, n. [Gr. χρυσος, gold, and λογος.]

That branch of political economy which relates to the production of wealth.

CHRYSO-PRAISE, n. [Gr. χρυσοπρασιος; χρυσος, gold, and πρασιος, a leaf.]

A mineral, a variety of quartz. Its color is commonly apple green, and often extremely beautiful. It is translucent, or sometimes semi-transparent; its fracture even and dull, sometimes a little splintery, sometimes smooth and slightly conchoidal; its hardness little inferior to that of flint.

CHUB, n. [This word seems to signify thick head, or a mass or lump. In Pers. chub or chob is a club. See Class Gb, Nos. 1 and 2.]

A river fish, called also Chévenx, of the genus Cyprinus. The body is oblong, nearly round; the head and back green; the sides silvery, and the belly white. It frequents deep holes in rivers shaded by trees; hot in warm weather floats near the surface, and furnishes sport for anglers.

CHUB-BED, a. Like a chub; short and thick.

CHUB-BY, a. Having a plump, round face.

A clown; a coarse, heavy, dull, or surly fellow.

CHUFF-LY, adv. In a rough, surly manner; clownish.

CHUFFY, a. Originally, fat or swelled out, especially in the cheeks; as, a chuffy lad. Rich. Dict. Hence,

2. Figuratively, surly; angry; stomachful. In New England, this word expresses that displeasure which causes a swelling or surly look and grumbling, rather than heat and violent expressions of anger. [Used in Sussex and Kent, Eng.]

CHUK, n. A word used in calling swine. It is the original name of that animal, which our ancestors brought with them from Persia, where it is still in use. Pers. chuk, Zend. chuk, a hog; Sans. suvara. Our ancestors, while in England, adopted the Welsh huc, hog; but chuck is retained in our popular name of woodchuck, that is, wood hog. This is a remarkable proof of the original seat of the Teutonic nations. I have taken chuk from Adelung. The French cochon may be the same word.

CHUM, v. [Ann. chamin, or chaminin, or ham, to dwell, stay, or lodge; Fr. chômer, to rest. Qu. Sax. ham, home.]

A chamber-fellow; one who lodges or resides in the same room; a word used in colleges.

CHUM, v. i. [from the noun.] To occupy a chamber with another. [Used in American colleges.]

CHUMP, n. A short, thick, heavy piece of wood, less than a block. [Johnson.]

CHUNK, n. A short, thick piece of wood, metal, &c. [Local in England, colloquial in America.]

CHU-NAM', n. The name in India for time; and hence, stucco, &c. [Malcom.]

CHURCH, n. [Sax. circe, cire, or eyric; Scots, kirch, which retains the Saxon pronunciation; D. kerk; G. kirche; Sw. kyrkiye; Dan. kirke; Gr. κυριακον, a temple of God, from κυριος, pertaining to a lord, or to our Lord Jesus Christ, from κυριος, a lord; Russ. tszerkon.]

1. A house consecrated to the worship of God, among Christians; the Lord's house. This seems to be the original meaning of the word. The Greek εκλησια, from εκκλησιω, to call out or call together, denotes an assembly or collection. But κυριακος, κυριακον, are from κυριος, lord, a term applied by the early Christians to Jesus Christ; and the house in which they worshiped was named from that title. Νο κυριακα signifies church goods, bona ecclesiastica; κυριακη, sc. ημερα, the Lord's day, dies dominica.

2. The collective body of Christians, or of those who profess to believe in Christ, and acknowledge him to be the Savior of mankind. In this sense, the church is sometimes called the catholic or universal church. [Johnson, Encyc.]

3. The collective body of saints in heaven and on earth, called the invisible church.

4. A particular number of Christians, united under one form of ecclesiastical government, in one creed, and using the same ritual and ceremonies; as, the English church; the Gallican church; the Presbyterian church; the Roman Catholic church; the Greek church.

5. The followers of Christ in a particular city or province; as, the church of Ephesus, or of Antioch.

6. The disciples of Christ assembled for worship in a particular place, as in a private house. Col. iv. [See No. 9.]

7. The worshippers of Jehovah, or the true God, before the advent of Christ; as, the Jewish church.

8. The body of clergy, or ecclesiastics, in distinction from the laity. Hence, ecclesiastical authority.

ciffer; Sw. zifra; Russ. isphir; Ar. صفر siforon, empty, and a cipher.]

1. In arithmetic, an Arabian or Oriental character, (of this form, 0) which, standing by itself, expresses nothing, but increases or diminishes the value of other figures, according to its position. In whole numbers, when placed at the right hand of a figure, it increases its value tenfold; but in decimal fractions, placed at the left hand of a figure, it diminishes the value of that figure tenfold.

2. A character in general. Raleigh.

3. An intertexture of letters, as the initials of a name, engraved on a seal, box, plate, coach, or tooib; a device; an enigmatical character. Anciently, merchants and tradesmen, not being permitted to bear family arms, bore, in lieu of them, their ciphers, or initials of their names, artfully interwoven about a cross. Encyc.

4. A secret or disguised manner of writing; certain characters arbitrarily invented and agreed on by two or more persons, to stand for letters or words, and understood only by the persons who invent or agree to use them. This is a mode of communicating information by letters, in time of war, with a view to conceal facts from an enemy, in case the letters should be intercepted. This art has given rise to another art, that of deciphering; and hence cipher is used for a key to unravel the characters. To have, or to learn a cipher, is to be able to interpret it.

CIN-PHER, n. s. In popular language, to use figures, or to practice arithmetic. Hayward.

CIN-PHER, v. t. To write in occult characters. Shak.

CIR-CI-NATE, v. t. [L. circino, to go round.] To make a circle; to compass.

CIR-CI-NATION, n. An orbicular motion. [Not used.] Booley.

CIR-CLE, (sur'kl), n. [Fr. corcle; It. circolo; L. circulus, from circus; Gr. κίρκος; Sp. cerco; It. cerchio; from the Celtic, W. cyrc, from cir, a circle, l'arithm;

Ar. ك kara, to go round. Class Gr, No. 32, 34.]

1. In geometry, a plane figure, comprehended by a single curve line, called its circumference, every part of which is equally distant from a point called the center. Of course all lines drawn from the center to the circumference, or periphery, are equal to each other.

2. In popular use, the line that comprehends the figure, the plane or surface comprehended, and the whole body or solid matter of a round substance, are denominated a circle; a ring; an orb; the earth.

It is that sixth on the circle of the earth.—Is. xl.

3. Compass; circuit; as, the circle of the forest. Shak.

4. An assembly surrounding the principal person. Hence, any company, or assembly; as, a circle of friends, or of beauties. Hence the word came to signify indefinitely a number of persons of a particular character, whether associated or not; as, a political circle; the circle of one's acquaintance; having, however, reference to a primary association.

5. A series ending where it begins, and perpetually repeated; a going round.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's plow. Dryden.

6. Circumlocution; indirect form of words. Fletcher.

7. In logic, an inconclusive form of argument, when the same terms are proved in orbem by the same terms, and the parts of the syllogism alternately by each other, directly and indirectly; or when the foregoing proposition is proved by the following; and the following is inferred from the foregoing; as, "that heavy bodies descend by gravity, and that gravity is a quality by which a heavy body descends." Encyc. Glanville. Watts.

8. Circles of the sphere, are either great circles, which divide the sphere into equal parts, as the equator, &c., or small circles, which divide it into unequal parts, as the polar circles.

9. Circles of altitude, or almucantaras, are circles parallel to the horizon, having their common pole in the zenith, and diminishing as they approach the zenith.

10. Circles of latitude, in astronomy, are great circles perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic, passing through its poles and through every star and planet.

11. Circles of longitude, in astronomy, are lesser circles parallel to the ecliptic, diminishing as they recede from it.

12. Circle of perpetual apparition, at any given place, is the boundary of that space around the elevated pole, within which the stars never set. Its distance from the pole is equal to the latitude of the place. D. Olmsted.

13. Circle of perpetual occultation, at any given place, is the boundary of that space around the depressed pole, within which the stars never rise. D. Olmsted.

14. Diurnal circles, are immovable circles supposed to be described by the several stars and other points in the heavens, in their diurnal rotation round the earth, or rather in the rotation of the earth round its axis.

15. Horary circles, in dialing, are the lines which show the hours on dials.

16. Circles of the empire; the provinces or principalities of the former German empire, which had a right to be present at the diets. Maximilian I. divided the empire into six circles at first, and afterwards into ten; Austria, Burgundy, Lower Rhine, Bavaria, Upper Saxony, Franconia, Swabia, Upper Rhine, Westphalia, and Lower Saxony.

17. Druidical circles, in British topography, are certain ancient inclosures formed by rude stones circularly arranged: as Stonehenge, near Salisbury.

CLER/IG-AL, a. Pertaining to the clergy. [Not used.] [See CLEAICAL.] Milton.

CLER/GY, n. [Fr. clergé; Norm. clerkus, clerez, clergy, or clerks, and clergie, literature; Arn. cler, the plural of clouarec, a clerk; Corn. clouere; Ir. cler, clergy, and clerrioch, a clerk or clergyman; L. clerus, clericus, which would seem to be from the Gr. κληρος, lot or portion, inheritance, estate, and the body of those who perform sacred duties; whence κληραία, to choose by lot, to make a clerk, clerium facere. In 1 Peter v. 3, the word in the plural seems to signify the church or body of believers; it is rendered God's heritage. In W. cler signifies teachers or learned men of the Druidical order; clergie, belonging to the cler, clerical. It. Sp. clero, from the Latin. The application of this word to ministers or ecclesiastical teachers seems to have originated in their possessions, or separate allotments of land; or from the Old Testament denomination of the priests, for the tribe of Levi is there called the lot, heritage, or inheritance of the Lord.]

1. The body of men set apart, and consecrated, by due ordination, to the service of God, in the Christian church; the body of ecclesiastics, in distinction from the laity. In England the term is confined to ministers of the established church. Hooker. Eucyde.

2. The privilege or benefit of clergy. If convicted of a clergyable felony, he is entitled equally to his clergy after as before conviction. Blackstone.

Benefit of clergy; in English law, originally, the exemption of the persons of clergymen from criminal process before a secular judge; a privilege which was extended to all who could read, such persons being, in the eye of the law, clerici, or clerks. But this privilege has been abridged and modified by various statutes. See Blackstone, h. 4, ch. 28. In the United States, no benefit of clergy exists.

CLER/GY-A-BLE, a. Entitled to or admitting the benefit of clergy; as, a clergyable felony. Blackstone.

CLER/GY-MAN, n. A man in holy orders; a man regularly authorized to preach the gospel, and administer its ordinances, according to the forms and rules of any particular denomination of Christians. In England, none but ministers of the Established Church bear the name of clergymen.

CLER/IG, a. A clerk or clergyman. Horaley.

CLER/IG-AL, a. [L. clericus; Gr. κληρικός. See CLEA and CLEA.] Relating or pertaining to the clergy.

CLER/IG-SY, n. The literat, or well-educated. Clerk, a. [Sax. cleric, clere, clere; L. clericus; Gr. κληρικός. See CLEA and CLEA.]

1. A clergyman, or ecclesiastic; a man in holy orders. Clerk is still, in England, the legal appellation of a clergyman. Ashmole.

2. A man that can read. Every one that could read — being accounted a clerk. Blackstone.

3. A man of letters; a scholar. Sidney. South. The foregoing significations are found in the English laws, and histories of the church; as, in the ages of the church, learning was chiefly confined to the clergy. In modern usage,

4. A writer; one who is employed in the use of the pen, in an office, public or private, for keeping records and accounts; as, the clerk of a court. In some cases, clerk is synonymous with secretary; but not always. A clerk is always an officer subordinate to a higher officer, board, corporation, or person; whereas, a secretary may be either a subordinate officer, or the head of an office or department.

5. An assistant in a shop or store, who sells goods, keeps accounts, &c.

6. A layman who is the reader of responses in church service. Johnson.

CLER/STO-RY. See CLEAR-STORY.

CLIFF, n. In the composition of names, denote a CLIFF, in place situated on or near a cliff, on the CLIVE, side of a hill, rock, or precipice; as, Cleaveland, Clifton.

CLEVER, a. [I know not the radical letters of this word. If the elements are cl, or lv, the affinities forclingen, pp. forclungen. The radical sense, then, appears to be, to contract or draw together; and drying, withering, is expressed by shrinking.

{ The latter use of the word is obsolete. }

CLINGING, pp. Adhering closely; sticking to; winding round and holding to.

CLINGSTONE, n. [cling and stone.] A variety of peach, whose pulp adheres closely to the stone.

CLINGY, a. Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLINIC, a. [Gr. κλινικός, from κλινω, a bed, CLINIC-AL, } from κλινω, to recline. See LEAN.]

In a general sense, pertaining to a bed. A clinical lecture is a discourse delivered at the bedside of the sick, or from notes taken at the bedside, by a physician, with a view to practical instruction in the healing art. Clinical medicine is the practice of medicine on patients in bed, or in hospitals. A clinical convert is a convert on his death-bed. Anciently, persons receiving baptism on their death-beds were called clinical.

CLINIC, n. One confined to the bed by sickness.

CLINIC-ALLY, adv. In a clinical manner; by the bedside.

CLINK, v. t. [Sw. klingen; Dan. klinker, klinker; D. klinken; G. klingen.] This seems to be a dialectical orthography of clang, clank, L. clang; and, if n is not radical, they coincide with clack, click, with the radical sense, to strike.

To ring or jingle; to utter or make a small, sharp sound, or a succession of such sounds, as by striking small metallic or other sonorous bodies together.

CLINK, n. A sharp sound, made by the collision of small sonorous bodies. Spenser, according to Johnson, uses the word for a knocker.

CLINKER, n. Vitreous matter which collects in furnaces where stone coal is used.

2. A very hard kind of brick.

CLINKING, pp. Making a small, sharp sound, or succession of sounds.

CLINKSTONE, n. [clink and stone, from its sonorousness. See PHONOLOGY.]

A mineral which has a slaty structure, and is generally divisible into tabular masses, usually thick, sometimes thin like those of argillite. The cross fracture is commonly splintery. Its colors are dark greenish-gray, yellowish, bluish, or ash-gray; and it is usually translucent at the edges, sometimes opaque. It occurs in extensive masses, often composed of columnar or tabular distinct concretions, more or less regular. It is usually found among secondary rocks; sometimes resting on basalt, and covered by greenstone.

CLINOMETER, n. [Gr. κλινω, to lean, and μετρον, measure.]

An instrument for measuring the dip of mineral strata.

CLINKQUANT, (clink'ant), n. [Fr.] Tinsel; false glitter.

CLINKQUANT, (clink'ant), a. [Fr.] Glittering; dressed in tinsel finery. [Not English.] Shak.

CLIP, v. t. [Gr. κλῑπω.] In mythology, the muse who presided over history.

CLIP, v. t. [Sax. clippan; Dan. klipper; Sw. klippa.] The sense seems to be, to strike, to cut off by a sudden stroke. The Danish word signifies not only to cut off with scissors, but to wink or twinkle with the eyes. In our popular dialect, a clip is a blow or stroke; as, to hit one a clip. Cut is used in a like sense. The radical sense, then, is, to strike or drive with a sudden effort, thrust, or spring.

1. To cut off with shears or scissors; to separate by a sudden stroke; especially, to cut off the ends or sides of a thing, to make it shorter or narrower, in distinction from shaving and paring, which are performed by rubbing the instrument close to the thing shaved; as, to clip the hair; to clip wings.

But love had clipped his wings, and cut him short. Dryden.

2. To diminish coin by paring the edge. Locke.

3. To curtail; to cut short; as, to clip the king's English. Addison.

4. To confine; to hug; to embrace. [Little used.] Shak.

To clip it, is a vulgar phrase, in New England, for to run with speed, and was so used in falconry. So cut is used; cut on, run fast. This seems to be the meaning of Dryden:—

Some flicon stoops at what her eye designed,
And, with her eye, pursues the quarry clipped.
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

This sense would seem to be allied to that of leap.

CLIP, n. A blow or stroke with the hand; as, he hit him a clip. [New England.]

2. An embrace; that is, a throwing the arms round.

3. A sheep-shearing.

4. The product of sheep-shearing; as, there will be a large clip this year. Fordy. This is retained in New England.

CLIPPED, pp. or a. Cut off; cut short; curtailed; CLIPPT, diminished by paring.

CLIPPER, n. One who clips; especially one who cuts off the edges of coin. Addison.

2. A vessel built for fast sailing.

CLIPPING, pp. Cutting off or shortening with shears or scissors; diminishing coin by paring off the edges; curtailing.

CLIPPING, n. The act of cutting off, curtailing, or diminishing.

2. That which is clipped off; a piece separated by clipping. Locke.

CLIQUE, (kleek), n. [Fr.] A narrow circle of persons; a party; used commonly in a bad sense.

CLIVERS, n. A plant, the Galium aparine; called also goose-grass, or hair-griff. It has a square, rough, jointed stem; the joints hairy at the base, with eight or ten narrow leaves at each joint. Encyc.

CLIVILITY, n. Inclination; ascent or descent.

CLOAK, n. [Sax. lach; D. laken. In Chancer, lake CLOKE, } is cloth.]

1. A loose outer garment worn over other clothes, both by men and women.

2. A cover; that which conceals; a disguise or pretext; an excuse; a fair pretence.

CLOAK, v. t. To cover with a cloak.

CLOKE, v. t. To hide; to conceal; to use a false covering. Spenser.

CLOAK'ED-LY, adv. In a concealed manner.

CLOAK'ING, pp. Covering with a cloak; hiding under an external covering.

CLO'CHARD, n. [from clack, Fr. cloche.]

A bell. [Not used.] Werner.

CLOCK, n. [Sax. clagga, clæga; D. klok; G. klokke; Dan. klokke; Sw. klocka; Fr. cloche; Arm. cloch, or clach; Ir. clod; W. clod; properly, a bell, and named from its sound, from striking. It coincides in origin with clack and cluck, L. glorio; Ch. 22. Class Lg, No. 27. See CLUCK.]

1. A machine consisting of wheels moved by weights, so constructed, that by a uniform vibration of a pendulum, it measures time, and its divisions, hours, minutes, and seconds, with great exactness. It indicates the hour by the stroke of a small hammer on a bell.

The phrases, what o'clock is it? it is nine o'clock, seem to be contracted from what of the clock? it is nine of the clock.

2. A figure or figured work in the ankle or side of a stocking. Swift.

CLOCK, v. t. To call. [See CLUCK.]

CLOCK-MAKER, n. An artificer whose occupation is to make clocks.

CLOCK-SET-TER, n. One who regulates the clock. [Not used.] Shak.

CLOCK-WORK, n. The machinery and movements of a clock; or that part of the movement which strikes the hours on a bell, in distinction from that part which measures and exhibits the time on the face or dial-plate, which is called watch-work. Encyc.

2. Well-adjusted work, with regular movement.

CLOD, n. [D. kluit, a clod; G. klats; Dan. klods; Sw. klot, a log, stock, or stump; Dan. klode; D. klot, a ball; G. lota, a ball; D. lood, lead, a ball; Sw. and Dan. lod, ld.; W. cluder, a heap. Clud and clot seem to be radically one word, signifying a mass or lump, from collecting or bringing together, or from condensing, setting, fixing. In Sax. clud, a rock or hill, may be from the same root. See Class Ld, No. 8, 9, 10, 16, 26, 35, 36, 40. Qu. Gr. κλωβω, to form a ball.]

1. A hard lump of earth of any kind; a mass of earth cohering.

2. A lump or mass of metal. [Little used.] Milton.

3. Turf; the ground.

4. That which is earthy, base, and vile, as the body of man compared to his soul. Milton. Burnet.

5. A dull, gross, stupid fellow; a dolt. Dryden.

6. Any thing concentered. Carew.

CLOD, v. t. To collect into concretions, or a thick mass; to congregate; as, clodded gore. Milton.

[See CLOT, which is more generally used.]

CLOD, v. t. To pelt with clods.

CLOD'DY, a. Consisting of clods; abounding with clods.

2. Earthy; mean; gross. Shak.

CLOD'HOPPER, n. A clown; a dolt.

CLOG, v. t. [W. deg, a lump; clug, a swelling, roundness; clog, a large stone; lloc, a mound, a dam; llog, an augment; llogi, to make compact, to hire, L. loco; Ir. loc, a stop; locaim, to hinder. These coincide with Eng. lock, in primary sense, or may be from the same root. But clog, though of the same family, seems not to be directly derived from either of these words.]

1. To load or fill with something that retards or hinders motion; as, to clog the channel of a river; to clog a passage.

2. To put on any thing that encumbers, with a view to hinder or restrain leaping; to shackle; as, to clog a beast.

3. To load with any thing that encumbers; to burden; to embarrass; as, to clog commerce with impositions or restrictions. Addison.

4. To obstruct natural motion, or render it difficult; to hinder; to impede.

CLOG, v. i. To coalesce; to unite and adhere in a cluster or mass.

More it sometimes with a broom, that the seeds clog not together. Boelya.

2. To form an accretion; to be loaded or encumbered with extraneous matter.

The teeth of the saw will begin to clog. Sharp.

CLOG, n. Any thing put upon an animal to hinder motion, or leaping, as a piece of wood fastened to his leg.

2. An encumbrance; that which hinders motion, or renders it difficult; hindrance; impediment.

Slavery is the greatest clog to agriculture. Swift.

3. [Qu. Fr. claque; Sp. and Port. galocha; Arm. galaig.] A term applied to overshoes with thick soles of leather or wood for wet weather.

4. A wooden shoe. [Provincial in England.]

CLOG'GED, (klōgd), pp. or a. Wearing a clog; shackled; obstructed; loaded with encumbrance.

1. Literally, a close; a close or inclosed place. A monastery or nunnery; a house inhabited by monks or nuns.

2. In architecture, an arcade or colonnade around an open court.

3. In a more limited sense, the principal part of a regular monastery, consisting of a square, erected between the church, the chapter-house, and the refectory, and over which is the dormitory. The proper use of the cloister is for the monks to meet in for conversation. The cloister is square, and has its name from being inclosed on its four sides with buildings. Hence, in architecture, a building is said to be in the form of a cloister, when there are buildings on each of the four sides of the court. Encyc.

CLOISTER, v. t. To confine in a cloister or monastery.

2. To shut up; to confine closely within walls; to inclose; to shut up in retirement from the world.

CLOTT'Y, a. [from clot]. Full of clots, or small, hard masses; full of concretions, or clots.

CLOUD, n. [I have not found this word in any other language. The sense is obvious — a collection. Its elements are those of clod, and lat. clauda.]

1. A collection of visible vapor, or watery particles, suspended in the atmosphere, at some altitude. A like collection of vapors near the earth is usually called fog. Locke.

I do set my bow in the cloud. — Gen. ix.
Behold a white cloud. — Rev. xiv.

The clouds are distributed into four fundamental classes, depending on their prevailing forms, viz., cumulus, stratus, cirrus, and nimbus; and three subordinate varieties, composed of mixtures of the others, viz., cirro-cumulus, cirro-stratus, and cumulo-stratus. [See these words.] D. Olmsted.

2. A collection of smoke, or a dense collection of dust, rising or floating in the air; as, a cloud of dust.

A cloud of incense. — Ezek. vii.

CLOUGH, (kluf), n. [Sax. clough, a cleft.]
A cleft in a hill.

CLOUGH, (kluf), n. [from clough, a cleft.]
In commerce, an allowance of two pounds in every hundred weight, after tare and tret have been deducted, for the turn of the scale, that the commodity may hold out in retailing; often written clouff. It is little used.

CLOUT, n. [Sax. cluta, a patch, a plaster, a plate, a seam or joint; Sw. klut; W. clut, a patch, a clout; Latian, to patch; Sax. gclouted, sewed together, clouted, patched; Ger. mald gcloutedum seam, shod with clouted shoes. This undoubtedly signifies patched shoes, for, in Saxon, does not signify a nail. The word clout, a nail, may be from the French clou, clouter, from L. clavus, from the root of L. clauda, cludo. Whether clouted brogues, in Shakspeare, signify patched shoes or shoes studded with nails, let the critic determine. Such shoes are common in England, and were formerly worn in America. The primary sense is, to thrust or put on; hence the sense of blow.]

1. A patch; a piece of cloth or leather, &c., to close a breach.

2. A piece of cloth for mean purposes. Spenser.

3. A piece of white cloth, for archers to shoot at. [Not now used]. Shak.

4. An iron plate on an axle-tree, to keep it from [wearing]. [Fr. clou, clouter]. A small nail. [New England].

5. In vulgar language, a blow with the hand. [New England]. Chalmers.

CLOUT, v. t. To patch; to mend by sewing on a piece or patch; as, clouted shoes, in Milton. This is the sense as understood by Johnson. Mason understands the word clouted to signify nailed, studded with small nails, from the French clouter, and the following words in Shakspeare, "whose rudeness answered my steps too loud," give some countenance to Mason's interpretation. In this case, the verb clout must signify, to nail, or fasten with nails; to stud.

2. To cover with a piece of cloth. Spenser.

3. To join clumsily; as, clouted sentences. Ascham.

4. To cover or arm with an iron plate. Beaumont.

5. To strike; to give a blow. Beaumont.

CLOUT'ED, pp. or a. Patched; mended clumsily; covered with a clout.

Clouted cream, in Gay, is evidently used for clotted cream, i. e., cream obtained by warming new milk. Brande.

CLOUT'ING, pp. Patching; covering with a clout.

CLOV'ATE, pp. [from conology, an epithet applied to a shell which is thicker toward the top and elongated toward the base. Gilbert].

CLOVE, pret. of CLEAVE. [Obs.]

CLOVE, n. [D. kloof. See CLEAVE].
A cleft; a fissure; a gap; a ravine. This word, though properly an appellative, is not often used as such in English; but it is appropriated to particular places, that are real clefts, or which appear as such; as, the Clove of Kaaterskills, in the State of New York, and the Stony Clove. It is properly a Dutch word. Journ. of Science.

CLOVE, n. [Sax. clufe; Fr. clou; Sp. clavo; Port. crava; from L. clavus, a nail; so called from its resemblance to a nail. So in D. kruidnagel, herb-nail or spice-nail.]

1. A very pungent aromatic spice, the unexpanded flower-bud of the clove-tree, Caryophyllus, a native of the Molucca Isles. The tree grows to the size of the laurel, and its bark resembles that of the olive. No verdure is seen under it. At the extremities of its branches are produced vast numbers of flower-buds, which are at first white, then green, and at last red and hard. These are called cloves. Encyc.

2. [from clave]. The parts into which garlic separates, when the outer skin is removed. Tate.

3. A certain weight; seven pounds of wool; eight pounds of cheese or butter. [Not used in America].

CLOVE-GIL'LY-FLOWER, n. A species of Dianthus, bearing a beautiful flower, cultivated in gardens; called, also, carnation pink.

Note. — Some writers suppose that gilly-flower should be written July-flower. But qu, is it not a corruption of the French girofle, clou de girofle, cloves; giroflée, a gilly-flower; girofler, a stock gilly-flower; L. Caryophyllus. Chaucer wrote clous gilyfre. Cant. Tales, 13,692. The Italians write girofano, probably for garofalo; Arin. genestes, genestica. Johnson supposes the plant so called from the smell of the flower resembling that of cloves; but it is probably from its shape, the nail-flower, as in Dutch. [See CLOVE].

CLOV'EN, (klövn), pp. or a. [from cleave]. Divided; parted.

CLOV'EN-FOOT-ED, { a. Having the foot or hoof
CLOV'EN-HOOF-ED, } divided into two parts, as the ox; bisulcated.

CLOVE'-PINK, n. The clove gilly-flower or carnation pink.

CLOV'ER, { n. [Sax. clefer-wyrt, clover-CLOV'ER-GRASS, } wort; G. klee; D. klaver; Dan. klee or klee. The Saxon word is rendered also marigold and violet. The Dutch word signifies a club. The name, then, signifies club-grass, club-wort, L. clara, from its flower. Dan. kleeber, to cleave, to cling.]

A genus of plants, called Trifolium, trifolium, or three-leaved, Fr. trèfle. The species are numerous. The red clover is generally cultivated for fodder and for enriching land. The white clover is also excellent food for cattle, either green or dry, and from its flowers the bee collects no small portion of its stores of honey.

To live in clover, is to live luxuriously, or in abundance; a phrase borrowed from the luxuriant growth of clover, and the feeding of cattle in clover.

CLOV'ER-ED, a. Covered with clover. Thomson.

CLOWN, n. [L. colonus, a husbandman.]

1. A countryman; a rustic; hence,

2. One who has the manners of a rustic; a churl; a man of coarse manners; an ill-bred man. Sidney. Dryden. Swift.

3. The fool or buffoon in a play, circus, &c.

CLUB, n. [W. clopa, clopa, coinciding with clap, a lump, and clob, clobyn; G. klöppel; D. klaver; Sw. klubb; Dan. klubbe; L. clara. The sense is probably a knob or lump, W. lubb, llob, whence lubber. It is evidently connected with cleave, to stick or cling, Dan. kleeber.]

1. Properly, a stick or piece of wood, with one end thicker and heavier than the other, and no larger than can be wielded with the hand.

2. The name of one of the suits of cards; so named from its figure.

3. An association of persons who meet under certain self-imposed regulations, for the promotion of some common object, as literature, science, hilarity, politics, &c.

4. An association for the support of a club-house, which see.

5. The dividend of expense at a club or some meeting; as, to pay one's club. Hudibras.
Club of Hercules. The story of Hercules with his club originated in the use of clubs, as weapons of war and other achievements, among rude nations, before the invention of other instruments and the use of iron. Hence striking, beating, was the first mode of killing; and hence smite and slay, properly signifying to strike, came to signify to kill. Hercules was the leader of a savage band, who wielded the heaviest club; and hence the club was the origin of the scepter, which is in the shape of a club, coinciding with Latin sepio. Any bold warrior at the head of a predatory band was a Hercules.
CLUB, v. t. [W. clapaw, to form into a lump.]
 1. To join, as a number of individuals, to the same end; to contribute separate powers to one end, purpose, or effect.

COAT, n. [Fr. cote; It. colta; Ir. cota; Corn. keta; Pol. kotz.] It may be from the root of the Russ. kutayu, to cover, and be allied to hut. The primary sense may be, that which is spread over or put on. But such words are sometimes from verbs which signify to strip, or to repel. The Gr. κειβω has the like elements, but the sense seems to be, to withdraw. I question whether coat has any connection with the Semitic כֹּת, Gr. χιτων, a tunic. This word in Ch. Syr. and Ar. signifies flux.]

1. An upper garment, of whatever material it may be made. The word is, in modern times, generally applied to the garment worn by men next over the vest.

God made coats of skin and clothed them.—Gen. iii.

COBALT, n. [D. cobalt. This is said to be the G. kobold, a goblin, the demon of the mines; so called by miners, because cobalt was troublesome to miners, and at first its value was not known.]

A metal of a reddish-gray or grayish-white color, very brittle, of a fine, close grain, compact, but easily reducible to powder. It crystallizes in bundles of needles, arranged one over another. It is never found in a pure state; but usually as an oxyd, or combined with arsenic or its acid, with sulphur, iron, &c. Its ores are arranged under the following species, viz., arsenical cobalt, of a white color, passing to steel gray; its texture is granular, and when heated, it exhales the odor of garlic; gray cobalt, a compound of cobalt, arsenic, iron, and sulphur, of a white color, with a tinge of red; its structure is foliated, and its crystals have a cube for their primitive form; sulphuret of cobalt, compact and massive in its structure; oxyd of cobalt, brown, or brownish-black, generally friable and earthy; sulphate and arseniate of cobalt, both of a red or peach-blossom color, the former soluble in water. The impure oxyd of cobalt is called luffe; but when fused with three parts of silicious sand and an alkaline flux, it is converted into a blue glass, call'd small. The great use of cobalt is to give a permanent blue color to glass and enamel upon metals, porcelain, and earthen wares. Foerstry. Encyc. Cluvandault.

Partington. Loudon.

COL'CO-THAR, n. The brown red oxyd of iron which remains after the distillation of the acid from sulphate of iron; used for polishing glass and other substances. It is called by artists crocus, or crocus martis.
Encyc. Ure.

The sulphate of iron is called colcothar or chalcite, when the calcination has been carried so far as to drive off a considerable part of the acid. Fuercroy.
[See CHALCITE.]

COLD, a. [Sax. cald; G. kalt; D. kold, contracted; Goth. calds; Basque, galdia; Sw. kald; Dan. kald; and the noun kalde. The latter seems to be connected with kul, a coal, and kaler, to blow strong. But the connection may be casual. In Swedish, kyla signifies to cool, and to barn; thus connecting cold, with the L. calco, to be hot. Both cold and heat may be from rushing, raging, and this word may be from the same root as cale. If not, cold would seem to be allied to L. gelo.]

1. Not warm or hot; g-lid; frigid; a relative term. A substance is cold to the touch when it is less warm than the body, and when, in contact, the heat of the body passes from the body to the substance; as, cold air; a cold stone; cold water. It denotes a greater degree of the quality than cool. [See the noun.]

2. Having the sensation of cold; chill; shivering, or inclined to shiver; as, I am cold.

3. Having cold qualities; as, a cold plant. Bacon.

4. Frigid; wanting passion, zeal, or ardor; indifferent; unconcerned; not animated, or easily excited into action; as, a cold spectator; a cold Christian; a cold lover, or friend; a cold temper.
Hauker. Addison.

Thou art neither cold nor hot. — Rev. II.

5. Not moving; unaffectionate; not animated; not able to excite feeling; spiritless; as, a cold discourse; a cold jest.
Addison.

6. Reserved; coy; not affectionate, cordial, or friendly; indicating indifference; as, a cold look; a cold return of civilities; a cold reception. Clarendon.

7. Not heated by sensual desire.
Shak.

8. Not hasty; not violent.
Johnson.

9. Not affecting the scent strongly.
Shak.

10. Not having the scent strongly affected.
Shak.

COLD, n. [Sax. celd, cyl, cyle; D. koelte, koude; G. kalte. See COOL.]

1. The sensation produced in animal bodies by the escape of heat, and the consequent contraction of the fine vessels. Also, the cause of that sensation. Heat expands the vessels, and cold contracts them; and the transition from an expanded to a contracted state is accompanied with a sensation to which, as well as to the cause of it, we give the denomination of cold. Hence cold is a privation of heat, or the cause of it.
Encyc. Bacon.

2. A shivering; the effect of the contraction of the fine vessels of the body; chilliness, or chillness.
Dryden.

3. A disease; indisposition occasioned by cold; catarrh.

COLLATE', v. t. [L. collatum, collatus; con and latum, latus; considered to be the supine and participle of fero, confero, but a word of distinct origin.]

Literally, to bring or lay together. Hence,

1. To lay together and compare, by examining the points in which two or more things of a similar kind agree or disagree; applied particularly to manuscripts and books; as, to collate copies of the Hebrew Scriptures.

2. To confer or bestow a benefice on a clergyman, by a bishop who has it in his own gift or patronage, or, more strictly, to present and institute a clergyman in a benefice, when the same person is both the ordinary and the patron; followed by to.

If the patron neglects to present, the bishop may collate his clerk to the church. Blackstone.

3. To bestow or confer. Taylor.

4. To gather and place in order, as the sheets of a book, for binding.

COLLATE', v. i. To place in a benefice, as by a bishop.

If the bishop neglects to collate within six months, the right to do it devolves on the archbishop. Encyc.

COLLATE'ED, pp. Laid together and compared; examined by comparing; presented and instituted, as a clergyman to a benefice.

COLLATE'ER-AL, a. [L. collateralis; con and lateralis, from latus, a side.]

1. Being by the side, side by side, on the side, or side to side.

In his bright radiance and collateral light Must I be confided, not in his sphere. Shak.

Collateral pressure, is pressure on the side. So we say, collateral circumstances; circumstances which accompany a principal event.

2. In genealogy, descending from the same stock or ancestor, but not one from the other; as distinguished from lineal. Lineal descendants proceed one from another in a direct line; collateral relations spring from a common ancestor, but from different branches of that common stirps or stock. Thus the children of brothers are collateral relations, having different fathers, but a common grandfather. Blackstone.

To melt; to dissolve; to change from solid to fluid; to become liquid. Brown.

COL-LI-QUATE, v. l. To melt or dissolve.

COL-LI-QUA-TED, pp. Melted; dissolved; turned from a solid to a fluid substance. Boyle. Harvey.

COL-LI-QUA-TING, pp. Melting; dissolving.

COL-LI-QUA-TION, n. The act of melting. Boyle.

2. A dissolving, flowing, or wasting; applied to the blood, when it does not readily coagulate, and to the solid parts, when they waste away by excessive secretion, occasioning fluxes and profuse clammy sweats. Cuze. Encycy. Quincy.

COL-LIQUA-TIVE, (kol-lik'wa-tiv',) a. Melting; dissolving; applied to excessive evacuations, which melt down, as it were, the strength and substance of the body. Johnson.

COL-LIQU-E-FAC-TION, (kol-lik-we-fak'shun,) n. [L. colliquefacio.]

A melting together; the reduction of different bodies into one mass, by fusion. Bacon.

COL-LI'SION, (kol-lish'un,) n. [L. collisio, from collido, collisio; con and lido, to strike or hurt.]

1. The act of striking together; a striking together of two hard bodies. Milton.

2. The state of being struck together; a clashing. Hence,

3. Figuratively, a state of opposition; interference; as, a collision of interests, or of parties.

4. A running against each other, as ships at sea. Marshall on Insurance. Walsh.

COL-LIT'I-GANT, n. One who litigates or wrangles with another.

COL-LO-CATE, v. l. [L. colloco; con and loco, to set or place.] To set or place; to set; to station. Bacon.

COL-LO-CATE, a. Set; placed.

COL-LO-CA-TED, pp. Placed.

COL-LO-CA-TING, pp. Setting; placing.

COL-LO-CA-TION, n. [L. collocatio.]

1. A setting; the act of placing; disposition in place.

2. The state of being placed, or placed with something else. Bacon.

COL-LO-CU-TION, n. [L. collocutio; con and locutio, from loquor, to speak.]

A speaking or conversing together; conference; mutual discourse. Bailey, Johnson.

COL-LO-CU'TOR, n. One of the speakers in a dialogue.

COL-LOGUE, v. t. To wheedle. [Not in use.]

COL-LOGUE, n. A small slice of meat; a piece of flesh. Dryden.

2. In burlesque, a child. Shak.

3. In Job xv. 27, it seems to have the sense of a thick piece or fleshy lump. "He maketh collops of fat on his flanks." This is the sense of the word in New England.

COL-LO-QUI-AL, a. [See COLLOQUIV.] Pertaining to common conversation, or to mutual discourse; as, colloquial language; a colloquial phrase.

COL-LO-QUI-AL-ISM, n. A colloquial form of expression.

COL-LO-QUI-AL-LY, adv. By mutual conversation.

COL-LO-QUIST, n. A speaker in a dialogue. Malone.

COL-LO-QUY, n. [L. colloquium; con and loquor, to speak.] Conversation; mutual discourse of two or more; conference; dialogue. Alton Taylor.

COL-LOVY. See COLLY.

COL-LUC-TAN-CY, n. [L. collector; con and luctor, to struggle.] A struggling to resist; a striving against; resistance; opposition of nature.

COL-LUC-TATION, n. A struggling to resist; contest; resistance; opposition; contrariety. Woodward.

COL-LUDE, v. t. [L. colludo; con and ludo, to play, to banter, to mock.] To play into the hand of each other; to conspire in a fraud; to act in concert. Johnson.

COL-LUDER, n. One who conspires in a fraud.

COL-LUDING, ppr. Conspiring with another in a fraud.

COL-LUDING, n. A trick; collusion. [See COLLUSIVE.]

COL-LUSION, (-zhun), n. [L. collusio. See COLLUDE.]

1. In law, a deceitful agreement or compact between two or more persons, for the one party to bring an action against the other, for some evil purpose, as to defraud a third person of his right. Cowell.

A secret understanding between two parties, who plead or proceed fraudulently against each other, to the prejudice of a third person. Encyc.

2. In general, a secret agreement and co-operation for a fraudulent purpose.

COL-LUSIVE, a. Fraudulently concerted between two or more; as, a collusive agreement.

COL-LUSIVE-LY, adv. By collusion; by secret agreement to defraud.

COL-LUSIVE-NESS, n. The quality of being collusive.

COL-LO-SO-RY, a. Carrying on a fraud by a secret concert; containing collusion.

COL-LU-ES, n. [L.] Filth; a sink; a mixed mass of refuse matter.

COLLY, n. [Supposed to be from coal.]

COLLOW, n. The black grime or soot of coal or burnt wood. Woodward, Burton.

COLLY, v. t. To make foul; to grime with the soot of coal. Shak.

COLLY-RITE, n. [Gr. κολύριον, infra.] A variety of clay, of a white color, with shades of gray, red, or yellow. Cleaveland.

COL-LYR-I-UM, n. [L.; Gr. κολύριον. Qu. from κωλυω, to check, and μασ, deflexion.] A lotion intended to prevent excessive discharges, now applied only to eye-water. Brande.

COL-MAR, n. [Fr.] A sort of pear.

COL-O-CYNTH, n. [Gr. κολοκυνθίς.] The colocynthis, or bitter apple of the shops, a kind of cucumber, from Aleppo and from Crete. It contains a bitter pulp, which is a drastic purge. Encyc.

COL-O-CYNTHIN, n. The supposed active medicinal principle of the colocynthis. P. Cyc.

CO-LOGNE-EARTH, (ko-lōnē'arth), n. A kind of light bastard ocher, of a deep brown color, not a pure active fossil, but containing more vegetable than mineral matter; supposed to be the remains of wood long buried in the earth. Hill.

It is an earthy variety of lignite or brown coal. Cleaveland.

CO-LOGNE-WA-TER, (ko-lōnē-wā'ter), n. A liquor composed of spirits of wine, oil of lavender, oil of rosemary, essence of lemon, and oil of cinnamon.

COL-O-LITE, n. [Gr. κολος, the colon, and λιθος, stone.] A name given to the fossil intestines of fishes.

COLON, n. [Gr. κολος, the colon, a member or limb.]

1. In anatomy, the largest of the intestines, or rather the largest division of the intestinal canal; beginning at the cecum, and ascending by the right kidney, it passes under the hollow part of the liver, and the bottom of the stomach, to the spleen; thence descending by the left kidney, it passes, in the form of an S, to the upper part of the os sacrum, whence, from its straight course, the canal takes the name of rectum. Encyc. Quincy.

2. In grammar, a point or character formed thus [;], used to mark a pause greater than that of a semi-colon, but less than that of a period; or rather, it is used when the sense of the division of a period is complete, so as to admit a full point; but something is added by way of illustration, or the description is continued by an additional remark, without a necessary dependence on the foregoing members of the sentence. Thus,

A brute arrives at a point of perfection he can never pass: In a few years he has all the endowments he is capable of. Spect. No. iii.

The colon is often used before an address, quotation, or example. "Mr. Grey was followed by Mr. Erskine, who spoke thus: 'I rise to second the motion of my honorable friend.'" But the propriety of this depends on the pause, and this depends on the form of introducing the quotation; for after say, said, or a like word, the colon is not used, and seems to be improper. Thus, in our version of the Scriptures, such members are almost invariably followed by a comma: "But Jesus said to them, 'Ye know not what ye ask.'"

The use of the colon is not uniform; nor is it easily defined and reduced to rules. Indeed, the use of it might be dispensed with without much inconvenience.

COL-O-NEL, (kur'nēl), n. [Fr. colonel; It. colonello; Arm. coronel; Sp. coronel; Port. coronel; from It. colonna, Fr. colonne, a column, It. colonello, the column of a book.]

The chief commander of a regiment of troops, whether infantry or cavalry. He ranks next below a brigadier-general. In England, colonel-lieutenant is the commander of a regiment of guards, of which the king, prince, or other person of eminence, is colonel. Lieutenant-colonel is the second officer in a regiment, and commands it in the absence of the colonel.

COL-O-NEL-CY, (kur'nēl-sy), n. The office, COL-O-NEL-SHIP, (kur'nēl-ship), rank, or commission of a colonel. Swift, Washington.

CO-LŌ-NI-AL, a. [See COLONY.] Pertaining to a colony; as, colonial government; colonial rights. [COLONIAL is not in use.]

COL-O-NIST, a. [See COLONY.] An inhabitant of a colony. Blackstone, Marshall, Life of Washington.

CO-LŌ-NI-ZATION, n. The act of colonizing, or state of being colonized.

Colonization society; a society in the United States designed to aid free blacks in emigrating to Africa.

CO-LŌ-NI-ZATION-IST, n. A friend to colonization, particularly to the colonization of Africa by emigrants from the colored population of the United States.

COL-O-NIZE, v. t. [See COLONY.] To plant or establish a colony in; to plant or settle a number of the subjects of a kingdom or state in a remote country for the purpose of cultivation, commerce, or defense, and for permanent residence. Bacon.

The Greeks colonized the south of Italy and of France.

2. To migrate and settle in, as inhabitants.

English Puritans colonized New England.

COL-O-NIZE, v. t. To remove and settle in a distant country; as, to colonize in India. Buchanan.

COL-O-NIZ-ED, ppr. Settled or planted with a colony.

COL-O-NIZ-ING, ppr. or a. Planting with a colony.

COL-O-NIZ-ING, n. The act of establishing a colony.

This state paper has been adopted as the basis of all her inter-colonizing. Truce, l. 622.

COL-ON-NADE, n. [It. colonnata, from colonna, a column; Sp. columna; Fr. colonnade. See COLUMN.]

1. In architecture, a series or range of columns, placed at regular intervals. Builder's Dict. Addison.

2. Any series or range of columns. When disposed in a circle, or when surrounding a building of any shape, they are called a peristyle; when the rows of columns are double or more, they form a polystyle. Pope.

COL-O-NY, n. [L. colonia, from colo, to cultivate.]

1. A company or body of people transplanted from their mother country to a remote province or country, to cultivate and inhabit it, and remaining subject to the jurisdiction of the parent state; as, the British colonies in America, or the Indies; the Spanish colonies in South America. "When such settlements, in later times, cease to be subject to the parent state, they are no longer denominated colonies."

The first settlers of New England were the best of Englishmen, well-educated, devout Christians, and zealous lovers of liberty. There was never a colony formed of better materials. Ames.

2. The country planted or colonized; a plantation; also, the body of inhabitants in a territory colonized, including the descendants of the first planters. The people, though born in the territory, retain the name of colonists, till they cease to be subjects of the parent state.

3. A collection of animals; as, colonies of shell-fish. Encyc.

COL-O-PIA-NY. See COLEOPHONY.

COL-O-PHON, n. An inscription on the last page of a book, before title-pages were used, containing the place or year, or both, of its publication, the printer's name, &c. The word is derived from a Greek verb respecting the people of Colophon, in Ionia, that they always came hindmost.

Brande, Walton.

COL-O-PHON-ITE, n. [Supra, from the city, or its resin color.]

A variety of garnet, of a resinous fracture, and a reddish yellow or brown color, occurring in small, amorphous, granular masses. Dict. Nat. Hist.

COL-O-PHO-NY, n. Black resin; the dark-colored resin obtained by the distillation of turpentine. Brande.

It is so named from Colophon, in Ionia, whence the best was formerly brought. The spelling COLOPHANY, given by Ure, seems, therefore, to be erroneous.

COL-O-QUINT-I-DA, n. [Gr. κολοκυνθίς; L. colocynthis.]

The colocynth, or bitter apple, the fruit of a plant of the genus Cucumis, a native of Syria and of Crete. It is of the size of a small orange, containing a pulp which is violently purgative, but sometimes useful as a medicine. Chambers.

COL-OR, (kul'ur), n. [L. color; It. colore; Sp. Port. color; Fr. couleurs.]

1. In physics, a property inherent in light, which, by a difference in the rays and the laws of refraction, or some other cause, gives to bodies particular appearances to the eye. The principal colors are red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. White is not properly a color; as a white body reflects the rays of light without separating them. Black bodies, on the contrary, absorb all the rays, or nearly all, and therefore black is no distinct color. But in common discourse, white and black are denominated colors; and all the colors admit of many shades of difference.

2. Appearance of a body to the eye, or a quality of sensation, caused by the rays of light; hue; dye; as the color of gold, or of indigo.

3. A red color; the freshness or appearance of blood in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their color boast. Dryden.

4. Appearance to the mind; as, prejudice puts a false color upon objects.

5. Superficial color; palliation; that which serves to give an appearance of right; as, their sin admitted no color or excuse. King Charles.

6. External appearance; false show; pretense; guise.

Under the color of commending him, I have access to my own love to prefer. Shak.

[See ACTS xxvii. 30.]

7. Kind; species; character; complexion.

Boys and women are, for the most part, sattle of this color. Shak.

8. That which is used for coloring; paint; as red lead, ochre, orpiment, cinabar, or vermilion, &c.

9. Colors, with a plural termination, in the military art, a flag, ensign, or standard, borne in an army or fleet. [See FLAG.]

10. In law, color, in pleading, is when the defendant, in assize or trespass, gives to the plaintiff a color of appearance of title, by stating his title specially; thus removing the cause from the jury to the court. Blackstone.

Water colors, are such as are used in painting without being mixed with oil. Encyc.

COL-OR, (kul'ur), v. t. To change or alter the external appearance of a body or substance; to dye; to tinge; to paint; to stain; as, to color cloth. Generally, to color is to change from white to some other color.

2. To give a specious appearance; to set in a fair light; to palliate; to excuse.

He colors the falsehood of Æneas by an express command of Jupiter to forsake the quæra. Dryden.

3. To make plausible; to exaggerate in representation. Addison.

To color a stranger's goods, is when a freeman allows a foreigner to enter goods at the custom-house in his name, to avoid the alien's duty.

COL-OR, v. t. To turn red; to have color come into the cheeks from embarrassment, anger, &c.

COL-OR-A-BLE, a. Designed to cover or conceal; specious; plausible; giving an appearance of right or justice; as, a colorable pretense; a colorable excuse. Spenser, Hooker.

COL-OR-A-BLE-NESS, n. Speciousness; plausible-ness.

COL-OR-A-BLY, adv. Speciously; plausibly; with a fair external appearance. Bacon.

COL-OR-ATE, a. [L. coloratus, from color, to color.] Colored; dyed, or tinged with some color. [Little used.]

COL-OR-A-TION, (kul-ur-ā'shun), n. [L. color.]

The art or practice of coloring, or the state of being colored. Bacon.

COL-OR-A-TURE, n. In music, all manner of variations, trills, &c., intended to make a song agreeable. Encyc.

COL-OR-ED, (kul'urd), pp. or a. Having the external appearance changed; dyed; tinged; painted or stained.

COMBER, (kôm'ber), n. One who combs; one whose occupation is to comb wool, &c.
COMBER, (kum'ber), n. Eucumbrance. [Not used.]
COMBER, n. A long, slender fish, with a red back, found in Cornwall, England.
COM-BIN'ABLE, a. Capable of combining.

COM-BIN'ABLE-NESS, n. State of being combinable.

COM-BI-NATE, a. [See COMBINA.] Espoused; betrothed. [Not used.]
COM-BI-NATION, n. [Fr. combinaison. See COMBINE.] In general, close union or connection. Hence,

1. Intimate union, or association of two or more persons or things, by set purpose or agreement, for effecting some object, by joint operation; in a good sense, when the object is laudable; in an ill sense, when it is illegal or iniquitous. When the word stands by itself, it is commonly taken in a bad sense; as, combinations have been formed among the people. It is sometimes equivalent to league, or to conspiracy. We say, a combination of men to overthrow government, or a combination to resist oppression.

2. An assemblage; union of particulars; as, a combination of circumstances.

3. Commixture; union of bodies or qualities in a mass or compound; as, to make new compounds by new combinations.

4. Chemical union; union by affinity.

Mix dry acid of tartar with dry carbonate of potash; so combination will ensue, till water is added.

5. In mathematics, the term combinations denotes the different collections that may be formed out of a given number of things, taken a certain number at a time, without regard to the order in which they are arranged; and are thus distinguished from permutations, or changes, which have reference to the order in which the several quantities may be arranged.

6. Combination room; in the University of Cambridge, Eng., a room into which the fellows withdraw after dinner, for wine, dessert, and conversation.

COM-BINE, v. t. [Fr. combinaer; It. combinare; Sp. combinar; from the Low Latin combine, of com and binus, two and two, or double.]

1. To unite or join two or more things; to link closely together.

Friendship combines the hearts of men.

2. To agree; to accord; to settle by compact.

[Not used.]

3. To join words or ideas together; opposed to analyze.

4. To cause to unite; to bring into union or confederacy.

The violence of revolutionary France combined the powers of Europe in opposition.

COM-BINE, v. i. To unite, agree, or coalesce; as, honor and policy combine to justify the measure.

2. To unite in friendship or design; to league together.

You with your foes combine.

3. To unite by affinity, or natural attraction.

Two substances which will not combine of themselves, may be made to combine by the intervention of a third.

4. To confederate; to unite as nations; as, the powers of Europe combined against France.

COM-BIN'ED, (kom-bind') pp. or a. United closely; associated; leagued; confederated; chemically united.

COM-BIN'ER, n. He or that which combines.

COM-BIN'ING, (kôm'ing), ppr. Separating and adjusting hair, wool, &c. by means of a comb.

COM-BIN'ING, n. Borrowed hair combed over a bald part of the head.

COM-BIN'ING, ppr. or a. Uniting closely; joining in purpose; confederating; uniting by chemical affinity.

COM-BLESS, a. Without a comb or crest; as, a combless cock.

COM-BUST', a. [L. combustus, comburo.]

When a planet is in conjunction with the sun, or apparently very near it, it is said to be combust, or in combustion; an old mathematical term now disused.

COM-BUST'IBLE, a. [Fr. combustible; Sp. id.; from L. comburo, combustum.]

That will take fire and burn; capable of catching fire; thus, wood and coal are combustible bodies.

COM-BUST'IBLE, n. A substance that will take fire and burn; a body which, in its rapid union with others, disengages heat and light.

COM-BUST'IBLE-NESS, n. The quality of taking fire and burning; the quality of a substance which admits the action of fire upon it; capacity of being burnt.

2. The quality of throwing out heat and light, in the rapid combination of its substance with another body.

COM-BUSTION, (kom-bust'yun), n. [Low L. combustio. See COMBUST.]

1. The operation of fire on inflammable substances; or, according to modern chemistry, the union of an inflammable substance with oxygen, attended with light, and in most instances with heat. In the combustion of a substance, heat or caloric is disengaged, and oxygen is absorbed.

This theory of Lavoisier being found somewhat defective, the following definition is given. Combustion is the disengagement of heat and light which accompanies chemical combination.

Combustion can not be regarded as dependent on any peculiar principle or form of matter, but must be considered as a general result of intense chemical action.

2. In popular language, a burning; the process or action of fire in consuming a body, attended with heat, or heat and flame; as, the combustion of wood or coal.

3. Conflagration; a great fire. Hence, from the violent agitation of fire or flame,

4. Tumult; violent agitation with hurry and noise; confusion; uproar.

Hooker. Milton. Dryden.

COM-BUST'IVE, a. Disposed to take fire.

COMÈ, (kum,) v. i.; prêt. COMÈ; part. COMÈ. [Sax. comian, or comian; Goth. comiana, prêt. com; D. koemen, prêt. kwam; G. kommen; Sw. komma; Dan. kommer, to come. Qu. W. cam, Ir. ceim, a step.

And qu. the Ar. قام kauma; Heb. Ch. קם to rise, or stand erect; to set or establish; to subsist, consist, remain; to rectify, or set in order; and in Arabic, to be thick, stiff, or congealed. The senses of the words appear to be very different; but we use come in the sense of rising or springing, applied to corn; the corn comes or comes up, G. keimen. So the butter comes, when it separates from the whey and becomes thick or stiff. And is not our common use of come, when we invite another to begin some act, or to move, equivalent to rise, being originally directed to persons sitting or reclining, in the Oriental manner? Coming implies moving, driving, shooting along, and so we use set; and we say, to set forward; the tide sets northerly.]

1. To move toward; to advance nearer, in any manner, and from any distance. We say, the men come this way, whether riding or on foot; the wind comes from the west; the ship comes with a fine breeze; light comes from the sun. It is applicable, perhaps, to every thing susceptible of motion, and is opposed to go.

2. To draw nigh; to approach; to arrive; to be present; as, the time has come.

Come thou and all thy houses into the ark. — Gen. vii. All my time will I wait, till my change come. — Job xiv. When shall I come and appear before God? — Ps. xlii. Then shall the end come. — Matt. xxiv. Thy kingdom come; thy will be done. — Matt. vi.

3. To advance and arrive at some state or condition; as, the ships come to action; the players come to blows; is it come to this?

His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not. — Job xiv.

I wonder how he came to know what had been done; how did he come by his knowledge? the heir comes into possession of his estate; the man will come, in time, to abhor the vices of his youth; or he will come to be poor and despicable, or to poverty.

In these and similar phrases, we observe the process or advance is applied to the body or to the mind, indifferently; and to persons or events.

4. To happen or fall out; as, how comes that? let come what will. Hence, when followed by an object or person, with to or on, to befall; to light on.

After all that has come on us for our evil deeds. — Ezra ix. All things come alike to all. — Eccles. ix.

5. To advance or move into view; to appear; as, blood or color comes and goes in the face.

6. To sprout, as plants; to spring. The corn comes or comes up. "In the coming or sprouting of malt, as it must not come too little, so it must not come too much." Mortimer. So Bacon uses the word; and this use of it coincides nearly with the sense of erip, quom, 2 Kings xix. 26, and in the same chapter inserted in Isaiah xxxvii. 27. It is the G. keimen, Icelandic keima, to bud or germinate.

7. To become.

So come I a widow.

8. To appear or be formed, as butter; to advance or change from cream to butter; a common use of the word; as, the butter comes.

9. Come, in the imperative, is used to excite attention, or to invite to motion or joint action; come, let us go.

This is the heir; come, let us kill him. — Matt. xxii.

When repeated, it sometimes expresses haste; come, come. Sometimes it expresses or introduces rebuke.

As the sense of comes is to move, in almost any manner, in its various applications, that sense is modified indefinitely by other words used in connection with it. Thus, with words expressing opproach, it denotes advancing nearer; with words expressing departure, as from, of, out of, &c., it denotes motion from, &c.

To come about; to happen; to fall out; to come to pass; to arrive. How did these things come about? So the French venir d'about, to come to the end, that is, to arrive.

To come about; to turn; to change; to come round. The wind will come about from west to east. The ship comes about. It is applied to a change of sentiments.

On better thoughts, and my urged reasons, They are come about, and won to the true side. B. Jonson.

To come again; to return. Gen. xxvii. Lev. xiv.

To come after; to follow. Matt. xvi. Also, to come to obtain; as, to come after a book.

To come at; to reach; to arrive within reach of; to gain; to come so near as to be able to take or possess. We prize those most who are hardest to come at.

To come at a true knowledge of ourselves.

Also, to come toward, as in attacking. [Addison.

To come away; to depart from; to leave; to issue

To come back; to return.

To come by; to pass near; a popular phrase. Also, to obtain, gain, acquire; that is, to come near at, or close.

Examine how you came by all your state. Dryden.

This is not an irregular or improper use of this word. It is precisely equivalent to possess, to sit by. [See POSSESS.] So in Ger. bekommen, D. bekoomen, to get or obtain; by or be prefixed.

To come down; to descend.

The Lord will come down on Mount Sinai. — Ex. ix.

Also, to be humbled or abased.

Your principalities shall come down. — Jer. xlii.

Come down from thy glory. — Jer. xlviii.

To come for; to come to get or obtain; to come after.

To come forth; to issue or proceed from. Gen. xv

Is. xi. Micah v.

Also, to depart from; to leave. Mark ix.

Also, to come abroad. Jer. iv.

To come from; to depart from; to leave. In popular language, this phrase is equivalent to, where is his native place, or former place of residence; where did this man, this animal, or this plant, originate.

To come home; that is, to come to home, or the house; to arrive at the dwelling. Hence, to come close; to press closely; to touch the feelings, interest, or reason. [See HOME.]

To come in; to enter, as into an inclosure.

Also, to comply; to yield; as, come in and submit.

Also, to arrive at a port, or place of rendezvous; as, the fleet has come in.

Also, to become fashionable; to be brought into use.

Silken garments did not come in till late. Arbuthnot.

Also, to enter as an ingredient or part of a composition.

A nice sense of propriety comes in to lighten the character.

Also, to grow and produce; to come to maturity and yield. If the corn comes in well, we shall have a supply without importation. Crops come in light.

Also, to lie carnally with. Gen. xxxviii.

To come in for; to arrive in time to take a share. Johnson says this phrase is taken from hunting, where the slow dogs take nothing. Qu. But the sense in which we now use the phrase has no reference to time or slow movement. It is, to unite with others in taking a part.

The rest come in for subsidies. Swift.

To come into; to join with; to bring help.

Also, and more generally, to agree to; to comply with; to unite with others in adopting; as, to come into a measure or scheme.

To come near; to approach in place. Hence, metaphorically, to approach in quality; to arrive at nearly the same degree in a quality, or accomplishment; to resemble. Temple.

To come nigh, is popularly used in like senses.

To come no near, in seamanship, is an order to the helmsman not to steer so close to the wind.

To come of; to issue from; to proceed from, as a descendant.

Of Priam's royal race my mother came. Dryden.

Also, to proceed from, as an effect from a cause.

This comes of judging by the eye. L'Estrange.

Whence come wars? Come they out of your lusts? — James iv.

To come off; to depart from; to move from on.

Also, to depart or deviate from a line or point; to become wider; to dilate.

Also, to escape; to get free.

If they come off safe, call their deliverance a miracle. Addison.

Hence, to end; to arrive at the final issue; as, to come off with honor or disgrace.

To come off from; to leave; to quit.

To come off, is also used for take place; as, the meeting came off at such a time.

To come on; to advance; to proceed; as, come on, brave boys; night is coming on. So we say, the young man comes on well in his studies; and the phrase often denotes a prosperous advance, successful improvement. So we say of plants, they come on well, they grow or thrive; that is, they proceed.

Also, to fall on; to happen to.

Let that come on you which is spoken of in the prophets.—Acts xii.

Also, to invade; to rush on.

To come over; to pass above or across, or from one side to another. In distillation, to rise and pass over, as vapor.

Also, to pass from one party, side, or army, to another; to change sides.

To come out; to depart or proceed from.

They shall come out with great substance.—Gen. xv.

Also, to become public; to escape from concealment or privacy; to be discovered; as, the truth is come out at last.

Also, to be published, as a book. The work comes out in quarto.

Also, to end or come to an issue; as, how will this affair come out? he has come out well at last.

Also, to appear after being clouded, and to shine; as, the sun has come out.

To come out of; to issue forth, as from confinement, or a close place; to proceed or depart from.

Also, to issue from, as descendants.

Kings shall come out of thee.—Gen. xvii.

To come out with; to give publicity to; to disclose. To come short; to fail; not to accomplish. [Boyle.]

All have sinned and come short of the glory of God.—Rom. iii.

To come to; to consent or yield. Also, to amount to; as, the taxes come to a large sum.

Also, to recover, as from a swoon. To come together; to meet or assemble.

To come to pass; to be; to happen; to fall out; to be effected. The phrase is much used in the common version of the Scriptures, but is seldom found in modern English writings.

To come up; to ascend; to rise. Also, to spring; to shoot or rise above the earth, as a plant.

Also, to come into use, as a fashion. To come up the copstern, in seamanship, is to turn it the contrary way, so as to slacken the rope about it.

To come up the tackle fall, is to slacken it gently. To come up to; to approach near.

Also, to amount to. Also, to advance to; to rise to. To come up with; to overtake, in following or pursuit.

To come upon; to fall on; to attack or invade. To come in; in futurity; to happen hereafter. In times to come. Success is yet to come.

Take a lease for years to come. Come is an intransitive verb, but the participle come is much used with the substantive verb, in the passive form. "The end of all flesh is come." I am come, thou art come, he is come, we are come, &c. This use of the substantive verb, for here, is perhaps too well established to be rejected; but here or has should be used in such phrases. In the phrase, "come Friday, come Candlemas," there is an ellipsis of certain words; as, when Friday shall come.

Come, come, the repetition of come, expresses haste, or exhortation to hasten. Sometimes it introduces a threat.

COME, (kum,) n. A sprout. [Not used.] Mortimer. COME-OFF, n. Means of escape; evasion; excuse.

COM-MIS-SÄ'R-I-AT, n. [Sp. comisariato. See COMMISSARY.]

The office or employment of a commissary; or the whole body of officers in the commissary's department. Tooke, Russ. l. 575.

COM-MIS-SÄ-RY, n. [Fr. commissaire; It. and Port. commissario; Sp. comisario; Low L. commissarius; from commissus, committo; com and mitto, to send.]

1. In a general sense, a commissioner; one to whom is committed some charge, duty, or office, by a superior power; one who is sent or delegated to execute some office or duty, in the place, or as the representative, of his superior.

2. In ecclesiastical law, an officer of the bishop, who exercises spiritual jurisdiction in places of the diocese so far distant from the episcopal see, that the chancellor can not call the people to the bishop's principal consistory court, without putting them to inconvenience. Ayliffe. Encyc.

3. In a military sense, an officer who has the charge of furnishing provisions, clothing, &c., for an army. Commissaries are distinguished by different names, according to their duties; as, commissary-general, who is at the head of the department of supplies, and has under him deputy commissaries and issuing commissaries; the latter to issue or distribute the supplies.

4. An officer who musters the army, receives and inspects the muster-rolls, and keeps an account of the strength of the army. He is called the commissary-general of musters. The commissary of horses has the inspection of the artillery horses; and the commissary of stores has charge of all the stores of the artillery. Encyc.

COM-MIS-SÄ-RY-GEN'ER-AL, n. The head of the commissary department.

COM-MIS-SÄ-RY-SHIP, n. The office of a commissary. Ayliffe.

COM-MIS'SION, (-nish'un), n. [Fr. comission; It. comissione; Sp. comision; L. commissio, with a different application, from committo; com and mitto, to send.]

1. The act of committing, doing, performing, or perpetrating; as, the commission of a crime.

2. The act of committing or sending to; the act of intrusting, as a charge or duty.

3. A writing from proper authority, given to a person as his warrant for exercising certain powers, or the performance of any duty, whether civil, ecclesiastical, or military. Hence,

4. The thing committed, or power and authority given.

5. By a metonymy, a number of persons joined in an office or trust.

6. In commerce, the state of acting under authority in the purchase and sale of goods for another. To trade or do business on commission, is to buy or sell for another by his authority. Hence,

7. The allowance made to a factor or commission merchant for transacting business, which is a certain rate per cent. of the value of the goods bought or sold.

8. To put a ship into commission, is to send it forth on public service after it has been laid up.

9. To put the great seal into commission, is to place it in the hands of commissioners during the period that intervenes between the going out of one lord keeper and the accession of another.

Commission of bankruptcy, is a commission issuing from the chancellor in Great Britain, and in other countries from some proper authority, appointing and empowering certain persons to examine into the facts relative to an alleged bankruptcy, and to secure the bankrupt's lands and effects for the creditors.

Commission of lunacy, is a commission issuing from the Court of Chancery, to authorize an inquiry whether a person is a lunatic or not.

Commission officer, in the army or navy, is an officer who has a commission, in distinction from subaltern officers.

COM-MIS'SION, (kom-nish'un), v. t. To give a commission to; to empower or authorize by commission. The president and senate appoint, but the president commissions. United States.

2. To send with a mandate or authority.

He first commissions to the Laitian land. Dryden.

3. To authorize or empower.

Note.—COMMISSIONATE, in a like sense, has been used, but rarely.

COM-MIS'SION-AL, (a) a. Appointed by warrant.

COM-MIS'SION-Ä-RY, (Little used), a. Furnished with a commission; empowered; authorized.

COM-MIS'SION-ER, n. A person who has a commission or warrant from proper authority, to perform some office, or execute some business, for the person or government which employs him, and gives him authority, as, commissioners for settling the bounds of a state, or for adjusting claims.

COM-MIS'SION-ING, ppr. Giving a commission to; furnishing with a warrant; empowering by letters patent or other writing; authorizing.

COM-MIS'SION-MER-CHANT, n. A merchant who transacts business as the agent of other men, in buying and selling, and receives a rate per cent. as his commission, or reward.

COM-MIS-SURE, n. [L. commissura, from committo, commissus; literally, a sending or thrusting together.]

1. A joint, seam, or closure; the place where two bodies, or parts of a body, meet and unite; an interstice or cleft between particles or parts, as between plates or lunelles.

2. In architecture, the joint between two stones, or application of the surface of one to that of another.

3. In anatomy, a suture of the cranium or skull; articulation; the corners of the lips. Also, certain parts in the ventricles of the brain, uniting the two hemispheres. Coze.

COM-MIT', v. t. [L. committo, to send to, or thrust together; com and mitto, to send; Fr. mettre, to put, set, or lay; commettre, to commit; It. mettere, commettere; Sp. meter, comeler; Port. meter, comeler.]

Literally, to send to or upon; to throw, put, or lay upon. Hence,

1. To give in trust; to put into the hands or power of another; and to intrust; with to.

Commit thy way to the Lord.—Ps. xxxvii.

The things thou hast heard of me, commit to faithful men.—2 Tim. ii.

2. To put into any place for preservation; to deposit; as, to commit a passage to a book to memory; to commit the body to the grave.

3. To put or send to, for confinement; as, to commit an offender to prison. Hence, for the sake of brevity, commit is used for imprison. The sheriff has committed the offender.

These two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty. Clarendon.

4. To do; to effect or perpetrate; as, to commit murder, treason, felony, or trespass.

Thou shalt not commit adultery.—Ex. xx.

5. To join or put together, for a contest; to match; followed by with; a Latinism.

How does Philopolis commit the opponent with the respondent. [Little used.] Mora.

6. To place in a state of hostility or incongruity. "Committing short and long words." But this seems to be the same signification as the foregoing.

7. To expose or endanger by a preliminary step or decision which can not be recalled; as, to commit the peace of a country by espousing the cause of a belligerent.

You might have satisfied every duty of political friendship with-out committing the honor of your sovereign. Junius.

8. To engage; to pledge; or to pledge by implication.

The general address letters to Gen. Gates and to Gen. Heath, cautioning them against any sudden assent to the proposal, which might possibly be considered as committing the faith of the United States. Marshall.

And with the reciprocal pronoun, to commit one's self, is to do some act, or make some declaration, which may bind the person in honor, good faith, or consistency, to pursue a certain course of conduct, or to adhere to the tenure of that declaration.

9. To refer or intrust to a committee, or select number of persons, for their consideration and report; a term of legislation; as, the petition or the bill is committed. Is it the pleasure of the house to commit the bill?

10. To commit fully, is to commit to prison for trial, in distinction from a temporary commitment while under examination. Bowdler.

COM-MIT-MENT, n. The act of committing; a sending to prison; a putting into prison; imprisonment. It is equivalent to sending or putting in simply; as, a commitment to the Tower, or to Newgate; or, for the sake of brevity, omitting the name of the place, it is equivalent to putting into prison; as, the offender is secured by commitment.

2. An order for confining in prison. But more generally we use mittimus.

3. The act of referring or intrusting to a committee for consideration; a term in legislation; as, the commitment of a petition or a bill to a select number of persons for consideration and report.

4. The act of delivering in charge, or intrusting.

5. A doing, or perpetration, as of sin or a crime; commission. Clarendon.

6. The act of pledging or engaging; or the act of exposing or endangering. [See the verb, Nos. 7 and 8.] Hamilton.

COM-MIT-TAL, n. A pledge, actual or implied.

COM-MIT-TED, pp. Delivered in trust; given in charge; deposited; imprisoned; done; perpetrated; engaged; exposed; referred to a committee.

Fully committed; committed to prison for trial. [See COMMIT.]

COM-MIT-TEE, n. One or more persons elected or appointed, to whom any matter or business is referred, either by a legislative body or either branch of it, or by a court, or by any corporation, or by any society, or collective body of men acting together. In legislative bodies, a house or branch of that body may resolve or form itself into a committee, called a committee of the whole house, when the speaker leaves the chair, and one of the members acts as chairman. Standing committees are such as continue during the existence of the legislature, and to these are committed all matters that fall within the purposes of their appointment; as, the committee of elections, or of privileges, &c. Special committees are appointed to consider and report on particular subjects.

COM-MIT-TEE-SHIP, n. The office and profit of committees. Milton.

COM-MIT-TER, n. One who commits; one who does or perpetrates. South.

COM-MIT-TIBLE, a. That may be committed. [Little used.] Brown.

COM-MIT-TING, pp. Giving in trust; depositing; imprisoning; perpetrating; engaging; referring to a committee; exposing.

COM-MIX', v. t. [L. commisco, commixtus; com and misco, to mix. [See MIX.]

To mix or mingle; to blend; to mix, as different substances. Bacon. Newton.

COM-MIX', v. i. To mix; to mingle. Shak.

COM-MIX'ED, (kom-mix't), pp. Mixed; blended.

COM-MIX'ING, pp. Mixing; blending.

COM-MIX-TION, (kom-mix'chun), n. Mixture; a blending of different ingredients in one mass or compound. Brown.

COM-MIX-TION is used by Shakespeare, but is hardly legitimate.

COM-MIX-TURE, (kom-mix'tjur), n. The act of mixing; the state of being mingled; the blending of ingredients in one mass or compound. Bacon.

2. The mass formed by mingling different things; composition; compound. Bacon. Shak. Walton.

3. In Scots law, a method of acquiring property, by blending different substances belonging to different proprietors. Eneyc.

COM-MODE', n. [Fr. from L. commodus, convenient; com, or com, and modus, manner. See MOOD.]

1. A kind of head-dress formerly worn by ladies. Addison.

2. A chest of drawers often with shelves added, and other conveniences.

COM-MO-DI-OUS, a. [Fr. commode; It. comodo; Sp. id.; L. commodus. See MOOD.]

Convenient; suitable; fit; proper; adapted to its use or purpose, or to wants and necessities; as, a commodious house or room.

The haven was not commodious to winter in. — Acts xviii. 12.

It is followed by for before a noun; as, a place commodious for a camp.

COM-MO-DI-OUS-LY, adv. Conveniently; in a commodious manner; suitably; in a manner to afford ease, or to prevent uneasiness; as, a house commodiously situated; we may pass life commodiously without the restraints of ceremony.

COM-MO-DI-OUS-NESS, n. Convenience; fitness; suitability for its purpose; as, the commodiousness of a house or an apartment; the commodiousness of a situation for trade.

COM-MOD-I-TY, n. [L. commoditas; It. comodità; Fr. commodité; Sp. comodidad; Port. commodidade. See COMMODE.]

1. Primarily, convenience; profit; advantage; interest. "Men seek their own commodity." In this sense it was used by Hooker, Sidney, &c.; but this is nearly or wholly obsolete.

2. That which affords ease, convenience, or advantage; any thing that is useful, but particularly in commerce, including every thing movable that is bought and sold, goods, wares, merchandise, produce of land and manufactures. Unless, perhaps, animals may be excepted, the word includes all the movables which are objects of commerce.

Commodities are movables, valuable by money, the common measure. Locke.

The principal use of money is to save the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbuthnot.

Staple commodities, are those which are the produce or manufacture of a country, and constitute the principal articles of exportation. Thus flour is the staple commodity of New York and Pennsylvania; flour and tobacco, of Maryland and Virginia; cotton and rice, of South Carolina and Georgia; cotton and sugar, of Louisiana.

COM-MO-DORE, n. [This word is probably a corruption of the Italian comandatore, a commander; or the Spanish comendador, a superior of a monastery, or a knight who holds a commandry.]

1. The officer who commands a squadron or detachment of ships, destined on a particular enterprise. In the British navy, a naval officer having the temporary rank of rear-admiral. Brande.

2. A title given by courtesy to the senior captain, when two or more ships of war are cruising in company. Totten.

3. The convey or leading ship in a fleet of merchantmen, which carries a light in her top to conduct the other ships.

COM-MO-DU-LATION, n. [L. com and modulatio.] Measure; agreement. [Little used.] Hakevill.

COM-MOIGNE, (-moin), n. [Fr.] A munk of the same convent. [Not in use.] Selden.

COMMON, a. [L. communis; Fr. commun; Arn. comun; It. comune; Sp. comun; Port. commum; Goth. gamains; Sax. gemen; G. gemein; D. gemeen; Sw. gemen; Dan. gemeen; Ir. cumain; Goth. gamana, a fellow, fellowship. This word may be composed of com and man, men, the plural men being equivalent to people and vulgaris. The last syllable is clearly from the root of many, which seems to belong to the root of man, and man is of the same family. Hence we see the connection between common and man, as vulgar, from vulgas, Eng. folks.]

1. Belonging equally to more than one, or to many indefinitely; as, life and sense are common to man and beast; the common privileges of citizens; the common wants of men.

2. Belonging to the public; having no separate owner. The right to a highway is common.

3. General; serving for the use of all; as, the common prayer.

4. Universal; belonging to all; as, the earth is said to be the common mother of mankind.

5. Public; general; frequent; as, common report.

6. Usual; ordinary; as, the common operations of nature; the common forms of conveyance; the common rules of civility.

7. Of no rank or superior excellence; ordinary. Applied to men, it signifies, not noble, not distinguished by noble descent, or not distinguished by office, character, or talents; as, a common man; a common soldier. Applied to things, it signifies, not distinguished by excellence or superiority; as, a common essay; a common exertion. It, however, is not generally equivalent to mean, which expresses something lower in rank or estimation.

8. Prostitute; lewd; as, a common woman.

9. In grammar, such verbs as signify both action and passion are called common; as, aspiceris, I despise or am despised; also, such nouns as are both masculine and feminine; as, parens.

10. A common bud, in botany, is one that contains both leaves and flowers; a common peduncle, one that bears several flowers, a common perianth, one that incloses several distinct fructifications; a common receptacle, one that connects several distinct fructifications. Murray.

Common divisor, or measure, in mathematics, is a number or quantity that divides two or more numbers or quantities without a remainder.

Common law; in Great Britain and the United States, the unwritten law, the law that receives its binding force from immemorial usage and universal reception, in distinction from the written or statute law. That body of rules, principles, and customs, which have been received from our ancestors, and by which courts have been governed in their judicial decisions. The evidence of this law is to be found in the reports of those decisions, and the records of the courts. Some of these rules may have originated in edicts or statutes which are now lost, or in the terms and conditions of particular grants or charters; but it is most probable that many of them originated in judicial decisions founded on natural justice and equity, or on local customs.

Common pleas; in Great Britain, one of the king's courts, now held in Westminster Hall. It consists of a chief justice and three other justices, and has cognizance of all civil causes, real, personal, or mixed, as well by original writ as by removal from the inferior courts. A writ of error, in the nature of an appeal, lies from this court to the Court of King's Bench. Blackstone.

In some of the American States, a court of common pleas is an inferior court, whose jurisdiction is limited to a county, and it is sometimes called a county court. This court is variously constituted in different States, and its powers are defined by statutes. It has jurisdiction of civil causes, and of minor offenses; but its final jurisdiction is very limited; all causes of magnitude being removable to a higher court by appeal, or by writ of error.

Common prayer; the liturgy of the Church of England, which all the clergy of the church are enjoined to use, under a penalty. Eneyc.

Common recovery; a legal process for barring entails, remainders, &c. [See RECOVERY.]

Common time; in music, the name given to those varieties of time, in which the measure consists of two or of four equal portions. Edin. Eneyc.

In common; equally with another, or with others; to be equally used or participated by two or more; as, tenants in common; to provide for children in common; to assign lands to two persons in common, or to twenty in common; we enjoy the bounties of Providence in common.

COMMON, n. A tract of ground, the use of which is not appropriated to an individual, but belongs to the public, or to a number. Thus we apply the word to an open ground or space in a highway, reserved for public use.

2. In law, an open ground, or that soil the use of which belongs equally to the inhabitants of a town or of a lordship, or to a certain number of proprietors, or to the profit which a man has in the land of another; or a right which a man has to pasture his cattle on land of another, or to dig turf, or catch fish, or cut wood, or the like; called common of pasture, of turbary, of piscary, and of estovers.

Common, or right of common, is appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross.

Common appendant, is a right belonging to the owners or occupiers of arable land to put commonable beasts upon the lord's waste, and upon the lands of other persons within the same manor. This is a matter of most universal right.

Common appurtenant, may be annexed to lands in other lordships, or extend to other boasts, besides those which are generally commonable; this is not of common right, but can be claimed only by immemorial usage and prescription.

Common because of vicinage, or neighborhood, is where the inhabitants of two townships, lying contiguous to each other, have usually intercommoned with one another, the beasts of the one straying into the other's fields; this is a permissive right.

Common in gross, or at large, is annexed to a man's person, being granted to him and his heirs by deed; or it may be claimed by prescriptive right, as by a parson of a church or other corporation sole. Blackstone.

COMMON, v. i. To have a joint right with others in common ground. Johnson.

2. To board together; to eat at a table in common. Eneyc.

COMMON, adv. Commonly. Shak.

COMMON-CARRI-ER, n. One who undertakes, for hire, to transport goods from one place to another. Such a carrier is liable for all losses and injuries to the goods, except those which have happened in consequence of the act of God, or of the enemies of the country, or of the owner of the property himself. Bowdler.

COMMON-COUN-CIL, n. The council of a city or corporate town, empowered to make by-laws for the government of the citizens. The common-council of London consists of two houses; the upper house, composed of the lord mayor and aldermen; and the lower house, of the common-council-men, elected by the several wards. In most of the American cities, the mayor, aldermen, and common-council-men constitute one body, called a Court of Common-Council.

[The common-councils sometimes consist of two houses, chambers, or courts, (as at Norwich,) and sometimes form only one. The city of London is divided into twenty-four wards; the supreme magistrate of each ward has the title of alderman; the twenty-four aldermen, with the lord mayor, form the Court of Aldermen; each ward annually chooses a certain number of the inhabitants, who are sworn to assist the aldermen with their advice in all public affairs, and they form the Court of Common-Council. — E. H. B.]

COMMON-COUNCIL-MAN, n. A member of a common-council.

COMMON-CRIER, n. A crier whose occupation is to give notice of lost things.

COMMON-HALL, n. A hall or house in which citizens meet for business.

COMMON-LOOK'ING, a. Having a common appearance.

COMMON-PLEAS, n. pl. A court for trial of civil causes. [See COMMON.]

COMMON-SENSE, n. Sound practical judgment; the instantaneous decision of unperverted reason.

COMMON-A-BLE, a. Held in common. Bacon.

2. That may be pastured on common land. Spelman.

COMMON-AGE, n. The right of pasturing on a common; the joint right of using any thing in common with others. Johnson.

COMMON-AL-TY, n. The common people. In Great Britain, all classes and conditions of people who are below the rank of nobility.

The commonly, like the nobility, are divided into several degrees. Blackstone.

In the United States, commonality has no very definite signification. It is, however, used to denote that part of the people who live by labor, and are not liberally educated, nor elevated by office or professional pursuits.

2. The bulk of mankind. Hooker.

COMMON-ER, n. One of the lower rank, or common people; one under the degree of nobility. Addison.

2. A member of the house of commons. Swift.

3. One who has a joint right in common ground. Bacon.

4. A student of the second rank in the University of Oxford, Eng. (corresponding to a passioner at Cambridge,) who is not dependent on the foundation for support, but pays for his board or commons, together with all other charges. Hibber.

5. A prostitute. Shak.

6. A partaker. Fuller.

COMMON-UT'ION, (nish'un), n. [L. communitio. See MOVATION.]

2. Equal participation by two or more. [Little used.]

COMMON-PLACE, a. Common, trite, not new or extraordinary.

COMMON-PLACE, n. A memorandum; a common topic.

COMMON-PLACE, v. t. To enter in a common-place-book, or to reduce to general heads. Felton.

COMMON-PLACE-BOOK, n. A book in which things to be remembered are recorded.

COMMON-PLAC-ED, (plást), a. Entered in a common-place-book.

COMMONS, n. pl. The common people, who inherit or possess no honors or titles; the vulgar. Chaucer. Shak. Dryden.

2. In England, the lower house of parliament, consisting of the representatives of cities, boroughs, and counties, chosen by men possessed of the property or qualifications required by law. This body is called the house of commons. The house of representatives, in North Carolina, bears the same name.

3. Common grounds; land possessed or used by two or more persons in common. [See COMMON.]

4. Food provided at a common table, as in colleges, where many persons eat at the same table, or in the same hall.

Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant. Dryden.

Doctors Commons, in London; a college founded by Dr. Harvey, for the professors of the civil law, where the civilians common together. The house was consumed in the great fire in 1666, but rebuilt in 1672. To this college belong thirty-four proctors. Encyc.

COMMON-TY, n. In Scots law, land belonging to two or more common proprietors; or a heath or muir, of which there has been a prismatic possession by pasturage. Encyc.

COMMON-WEAL, } n. [See WEAL and COMMON-WEALTH, } WEALTH.]

1. An established form of government, or civil polity; or, more generally, a state; a body politic, consisting of a certain portion of men, united, by compact or tacit agreement, under one form of government and system of laws. This term is applied to the government of Great Britain, which is of a mixed character, and to other governments, which are considered as free or popular, but rarely, or improperly, to an absolute government. A commonwealth is properly a free state; a popular or representative government; a republic; as, the commonwealth of Massachusetts. The word signifies, strictly, the common good or happiness; and hence, the form of government supposed best to secure the public good.

2. The whole body of people in a state; the public. Shak.

3. The territory of a state; as, all the land within the limits of the commonwealth. Massachusetts.

4. The Commonwealth; in English history, the form of government established on the death of Charles I., and which existed under Oliver Cromwell and his son.

COMMON-WEALTH'S-MAN, n. One who favored the English commonwealth. [See COMMONWEALTH, N. 4.]

municated; capable of being imparted from one to another; as, knowledge is communicable by words.

Lost bliss, to thee no more communicable. Milton.

Eternal life is communicable to all. Hooker.

2. That may be recounted. Milton.

3. Communicative; ready to impart. [Not used.] B. Johnson.

COMMUNICABLE-NESS, n. The state of being communicable.

COMMUNICABLE, adv. With communication.

COMMUNICANT, n. One who communes at the Lord's table; one who is entitled to partake of the sacrament, at the celebration of the Lord's supper. Hooker. Atterbury.

COMMUNICATE, v. t. [L. communico; from communis, common; It. comunicare; Sp. comunicar; Fr. communiquer.]

1. To impart; to give to another, as a partaker; to confer for joint possession; to bestow, as that which the receiver is to hold, retain, use, or enjoy; with to.

Where God is worshiped, there he communicates his blessings and holy influences. Taylor.

Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth in all good things. — Gal. vi.

2. To impart reciprocally, or mutually; to have or enjoy a share of; followed by with.

Common benefits are to be communicated with all, but peculiar benefits with choice. Bacon.

But Diomedes desires my company, / And will communicate his praise with me. Dryden.

3. To impart, as knowledge; to reveal; to give, as information, either by words, signs, or signals; as, to communicate intelligence, news, opinions, or facts.

Formerly, this verb had with before the person receiving; as, "He communicated those thoughts only with the Lord Digby." Clarendon. But now it has to only.

4. To deliver; as, to communicate a message; — to give; as, to communicate motion.

COMMUNICATE, v. i. To partake of the Lord's supper. Taylor.

Instead of this, in America, at least in New England, commune is generally or always used.

2. To have a communication or passage from one to another; to have the memos of passing from one to another; as, two houses communicate with each other; a fortress communicates with the country; the canals of the body communicate with each other. Arbuthnot.

3. To have intercourse; applied to persons.

4. To have, enjoy, or suffer, reciprocally; to have a share with another.

Ye have done well that ye did communicate with my affliction. — Phil. iv.

COMMUNICATE-TED, ppr. Imparted from one to another; bestowed; delivered.

COMMUNICATING, ppr. Imparting; giving or bestowing; delivering.

2. Partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

3. Leading or conducting from place to place, as a passage; connected by a passage or channel; as, two lakes communicating with each other.

4. Having intercourse by words, letters, or messages; corresponding.

COMMUNICATING, n. The act of imparting, conferring, or delivering, from one to another; as, the communication of knowledge, opinions, or facts.

2. Intercourse by words, letters, or messages; interchange of thoughts or opinions; by conference or other means.

Aberd had communication with the elders of Israel, saying, / Ye sought for David in times past to be king over you. — 2 Sam. iii.

Let your communication be, yea, yea; nay, nay. — Matt. v.

In 1 Cor. xv. 33, "Evil communications corrupt good manners;" the word may signify conversation, colloquial discourses, or customary association and familiarity.

3. Intercourse; interchange of knowledge; correspondence; good understanding between men.

Secrets may be carried so far as to stop the communication necessary among all who have the management of affairs. Swift.

4. Connecting passage; means of passing from place to place; as a strait or channel between seas or lakes, a road between cities or countries, a gallery between apartments in a house, an avenue between streets, &c. Keep open a communication with the besieged place.

5. That which is communicated or imparted. The house received a communication from the governor respecting the hospital.

6. In rhetoric, a trope, by which a speaker or writer takes his hearer or reader as a partner in his sentiments, and says we, instead of I or you. Beattie.

COMMUNICATIVE, a. Inclined to communicate; ready to impart to others. In the sense of liberal of benefits, though legitimate, it is little used.

2. Disposed to impart or disclose, as knowledge, opinions, or facts; free to communicate; not reserved.

We have paid for our want of prudence, and determine for the future to be less communicative. Swift.

COM-MO/NI-CA-TIVE-NESS, n. The quality of being communicative; readiness to impart to others; freedom from reserve. Norris.

COM-MON/ING, n. Familiar converse; private intercourse. E. T. Fitch.

COM-MON/ION, (kom-mun'yun), n. [L. communio; Fr. communio; It. comunione; Sp. comunion; Port. comunham. See COMMON.]

1. Fellowship; intercourse with two persons or more; interchange of transactions or offices; a state of giving and receiving; agreement; concord. We are naturally led to seek communion and fellowship with others. Hooker.
What communion hath light with darkness?—2 Cor. vi.
The communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all.—2 Cor. xii.

2. Mutual intercourse or union in religious worship, or in doctrine and discipline. The Protestant churches have no communion with the Roman Catholic church.

3. The body of Christians who have one common faith and discipline. The three great communions into which the Christian church is divided, are those of the Greek, the Roman Catholic, and the Protestant churches.

4. The act of communicating the sacrament of the eucharist; the celebration of the Lord's supper; the participation of the blessed sacrament. The fourth council of Lateran decrees that every believer shall receive the communion at least at Easter. Encyc.

5. Union of professing Christians in a particular church; as, members in full communion. Communion-service, in the liturgy of the Episcopal church, is the office for the administration of the body sacrament.

COM-MON/ION-IST, n. One of the same communion. Dary.

COM-MU-NISM, n. [Fr. commune, common.] Community of property among all the citizens of a state; a state of things in which there are no individual or separate rights in property; a new French word, nearly synonymous with agrarianism, socialism, and radicalism.

COM-MU-NIST, n. An advocate for a community of property among citizens. Some persons of this sect contend also for a community of females, or a promiscuous intercourse of the sexes.

COM-MU-NI-TY, n. [L. communitas; It. comunità; Sp. comunidad; Fr. communauté. See COMMON.]

1. Properly, common possession or enjoyment; as, a community of goods. It is a confirmation of the original community of all things. Locke.

2. A society of people having common rights and privileges, or common interests, civil, political, or ecclesiastical; or living under the same laws and regulations; as, a community of monks.

3. Society at large; a commonwealth or state; a body politic; the public, or people in general. [In this sense, the term should not be used absolutely, like the word society; as, the interests of community require this; but, the interests of the community, &c.]

4. Community; frequency. [Obs.] Shak.

COM-MO-TA-BIL-I-TY, n. [See COMMUTE.] The quality of being capable of being exchanged or put, one in the place of the other.

COM-MO-TA-BLE, a. [L. commutabilis. See COMMUTE.] That may be exchanged, or mutually changed; that may be given for another. In philology, that may pass from one into another; as, the letter b is commutable with v; or, in Celtic, b and m are commutable.

COM-MU-TA-TION, n. [L. commutatio. See COMMUTE.]

1. Change; alteration; a passing from one state to another. South.

2. Exchange; the act of giving one thing for another; barter. The use of money is to save the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbutnot.

3. In law, the change of a penalty or punishment from a greater to a less; as banishment instead of death. Bails are allowable in the spiritual courts for money agreed to be given as a commutation for penance. Blackstone.

COM-MO-TA-TIVE, a. [Fr. commutatif; It. commutativo. See COMMUTE.] Relative to exchange; interchangeable; mutually passing from one to another; as, commutative justice, justice which is mutually done and received, between men in society. To cultivate an habitual regard to commutative justice. Burke.

COM-MO-TA-TIVE-LY, adv. By way of reciprocal exchange. Brown.

COM-MO-TÉ, v. t. [L. commuto; con and mutō, to change. See MUTABLE and MUTATION.]

1. To exchange; to put one thing in the place of another; to give or receive one thing for another; as, to commute our labors; to commute pain for pleasure.

2. In law, to exchange one penalty or punishment for another of less severity; as, to commute death for transportation.

COM-MO-TÉ, v. i. To atone; to compensate; to stand in the place of; as, one penalty commutes for another.

COM-MO-TÉD, pp. Exchanged.

COM-MO-TING, ppr. Exchanging.

COM-MO-TU-AL, a. [con and mutual.] Mutual; reciprocal; used in poetry. There, with commutual zeal, we both had stivue In acts of dear benevolence and love. Pope.

COM-MOSE, a. [L. comosus, hairy.] In botany, ending in a tuft or kind of brush. Branche.

COM-PACT, a. [L. compactus, compingo; con and pango, pacus, to thrust, drive, fix, make fast or close; antiq. pago, paco; Gr. πυγνός. See PACK.] Literally, driven, thrust, or pressed together. Hence, 1. Closely and firmly united, as the particles of solid bodies; firm; close; solid; dense. Stone, iron, and wood are compact bodies. A compact leaf, in botany, is one having the pulp of a close, firm texture. 2. Composing; consisting. A wandering fire, Compact of sanctuous vapor. Milton.

This sense is not common. [See the verb.] Compact seems to be used for compacted. So in the following example. 3. Joined; held together. [Little used.] A pile of seven reeds, compact with wax together. Peachment.

4. Brief; close; pithy; not diffuse; not verbose; as, a compact discourse.

COM-PACT, n. [L. compactum.] An agreement; a contract between parties; a word that may be applied, in a general sense, to any covenant or contract between individuals; but it is more generally applied to agreements between nations and states, as treaties and confederacies. So the constitution of the United States is a political contract between the States; a national compact. Or the word is applied to the agreement of the individuals of a community. The law of nations depends on mutual compacts, treaties, leagues, &c. Blackstone.

In the beginnings of speech there was an implicit compact, founded on common consent. South.

COM-PACT, v. t. To thrust, drive, or press closely together; to join firmly; to consolidate; to make close; as the parts which compose a body. Now the bright sun compacts the precious stone. Blackmore.

This verb is not much used. The participle is more frequent; as, the earth's compacted sphere. Roscommon.

The solids are more strict and compacted. Arbutnot.

2. To unite or connect firmly, as in a system. The whole body fully joined together and compacted. —Eph. iv.

3. To league with. Those pernicious woman, Compact with her that's goose. Shak.

4. To compose or make out of. If he, compact of jars, grow mustel. Shak.

In the two last examples, compact is used for compacted.

COM-PACT'ED, pp. or a. Pressed close; firmly united or connected.

COM-PACT'ED-LY, adv. In a compact manner.

COM-PACT'ED-NESS, n. A state of being compact; firmness; closeness of parts; density, whence results hardness. Digby.

COM-PACT'ER, n. One who makes a compact.

COM-PACT-I-BLE, a. That may be joined.

COM-PACT-ING, ppr. Unitng closely; consolidating.

COM-PACT-ION, n. The act of making compact; or the state of being compact. Bacon.

COM-PACT-LY, adv. Closely; densely; with close union of parts.

COM-PACT'NESS, n. Firmness; close union of parts; density. Boyle.

COM-PACT'URE, n. Close union or connection of parts; structure well connected; manner of joining. Spenser.

COM-PAG-IN-ATION, n. [L. compago. See COM-PACT.] Union of parts; structure; connection; contexture. [Little used.] Brown.

COM-PAN-A-BLE, a. Companionable. [Obs.] Shak.

COM-PAN-A-BLE-NESS, n. Sociality. [Obs.] Sidney.

COM-PAN-I-A-BLE, a. Social. [Obs.] Bacon.

COM-PAN-I-A-BLE-NESS, n. Sociableness. [Obs.] Bp. Hall.

COM-PAN-I-ED, pp. Associated with; attended.

COM-PAN/ION, (kom-pan'yun), n. [Fr. compagnon;

Ann. compaignun; It. compagno; Sp. compañero; Port. companheiro; Ir. companach. See COMPART.]

1. One who keeps company with another; one with whom a person frequently associates and converses. "It differs from friend," says Johnson, "as acquaintance from confidence." The word does not necessarily imply friendship; but a companion is often or generally a friend. A companion of fools shall be destroyed. —Prov. xii.

2. One who accompanies another; as two persons meeting casually and traveling together are called companions. So soldiers are called companions in arms. 3. A partner; an associate. Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labor, and fellow-soldier. —Phil. ii.

4. A fellow; a mate. Shak.

5. A term sometimes applied to a knight; in distinction from the knights commanders of the same order.

6. A sort of wooden porch, placed over the entrance or staircase of the cabin, in merchant ships. Hence the cabin stairs are called the companion-way, and the ladder by which officers ascend to and descend from the quarter deck is called the companion ladder. Mar. Dict.

COM-PAN/ION-A-BLE, a. Fit for good fellowship; qualified to be agreeable in company; sociable; agreeable as a companion. Clarendon.

COM-PAN/ION-A-BLY, adv. In a companionable manner.

COM-PAN/ION-LESS, a. Having no companion.

COM-PAN/ION-SHIP, n. Fellowship; association. 2. Company; train. Shak.

COM-PAN-Y, (kum'pa-ne), n. [It. compagnia; Sp. compañia; Port. companhia; Fr. compagnie; not from cum and panis, bread, a mess or number of men eating together, as is commonly supposed; but from cum and pannus, cloth, Teutonic fahna or oava, a flag. The word denotes a band or number of men under one flag or standard. What decides this question is, the Spanish mode of writing the word with a tilde, titled n, compañia, for this is the manner of writing pañe, cloth, whereas panis, bread, is written pan. The orthography of the word in the other languages is confirmatory of this opinion.]

1. In military affairs, the soldiers united under the command of a captain; a subdivision of a regiment, consisting usually of a number from sixty to one hundred men. But the number is indefinite. 2. An assemblage of persons; a collection of men, or other animals, in a very indefinite sense. It may be applied to a small number, or any multitude whatever; as in Scripture we read of a company of priests, a company of prophets, and an innumerable company of angels; also, a company of horses. 3. An assemblage of persons for entertainment or festivity; a party collected by invitation or otherwise. 4. Persons that associate with others for conversation or pleasure; society; as, let your children keep good company. 5. The state of being a companion; the act of accompanying; fellowship; society; as, we cannot enjoy the company of licentious men. I will keep thee company. Dryden.

6. A number of persons united for the same purpose, or in a joint concern; as, a company of merchants or mechanics; a company of players. The word is applicable to private partnerships or to incorporated bodies of men. Hence it may signify a firm, house, or partnership; or a corporation; as, the East India Company, a banking or insurance company. 7. The crew of a ship, including the officers; also, a fleet. To bear company to accompany; to attend; to go with; denoting a temporary association. His faithful dog shall bear him company. Pope.

To keep company to accompany; to attend; also, to associate with frequently or habitually; hence, to frequent public houses. Frob. xxix.

COM-PAN-Y, v. t. To accompany; to attend; to go with; to be companion to. [But ACCOMPANY is generally used.]

COM-PAN-Y, v. i. To associate with; to frequent the company of. I wrote you not to company with fornicators. —1 Cor. v. 2. To be a gay companion. [Obs.] Spenser.

3. To have commerce with the other sex. Bp. Hall.

COM-PAN-Y-ING, ppr. Associating with; accompanying; attending.

COM-PAR-A-BLE, a. [L. comparabilis. See COMPARE.] That may be compared; worthy of comparison; being of equal regard; that may be estimated as equal. There is no blessing of life comparable to the enjoyment of a discreet and virtuous friend. Addison.

The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold. —Lam. iv.

COM-PAR-A-BLY, adv. In a manner or degree worthy to be compared, or of equal regard. Watson.

COM-PAR-RATES, n. pl. In logic, the two things compared to one another.

COM-PA-RATION, n. Provision; a making provision.

COM-PAR-A-TIVE, a. [L. comparativus; It. comparativo; Fr. comparatif. See COMPAR.]
1. Estimated by comparison; not positive or absolute. The comparative weight of a body is that which is estimated by comparing it with the weight of another body. A body may be called heavy, when compared with a feather, which would be called light, when compared with iron. So of comparative good or evil.

2. Having the power of comparing different things; as, a comparative faculty. Qu. Glanville.

3. In grammar, expressing more or less. The comparative degree of an adjective expresses a greater or less degree of a quantity, or quality, than the positive; as, brighter, or more bright; smaller; fier; stronger; weaker.

Comparative anatomy; that branch of anatomy which treats of the anatomy of men and of other animals in one connected view, in order to compare them, and arrive at general conclusions. En. Ana.

COM-PAR-A-TIVE, n. One who is equal, or pretends to be an equal. [Not now used.] Shak.

COM-PAR-A-TIVE-LY, adv. In a state of comparison; by comparison; according to estimate made by comparison; not positively, absolutely, or in itself. A thing is comparatively heavy, when it is compared with something less heavy. Paper is comparatively light or heavy; light, when compared with lead; and heavy, when compared with air.

How few, comparatively, are the instances of a wise application of time and talents! Ston.

COM-PARÉ, v. t. [*L. comparo, to prepare, to provide or procure, to make equal, to compare; con and paro, to prepare; it. parare, to dress, trim, adorn; also, to parry; Sp. parar, to prepare, to halt, to stop, to prevent, to detain, to stake at cards; Port. parar, to stop or cease to go forward; to meet or confine upon; to touch or be bounded; to tend; to drive at some end; to aim at; to come to; to hinder; to parry, or ward off; to turn or change in inclination or morals; to lay or stake, as a wager; Sp. parada, a halt, stop, pause; a fold for cattle; a relay of horses or mules; a dam or bank; a lot, stake, or wager; a parade, or place of exercise for troops; Port. id.; Arn. para; W. parodi, to prepare. This seems to be the para of the Semitic languages. The primary sense is, to throw, drive, or strike; hence, to drive or force off, to separate, to pare; hence, to trim, or dress, which may be from separating, as in the French parer des cuirs, to dress or curry leather; or from setting off, as we express the idea, that is, by enlargement, or display; or from setting in order, as we say, to fix. The sense of compare is allied to the Portuguese application of the word, to come to, to meet; and the L. par, equal, belongs to the same root, and seems to be included in compare. One of the principal significations is, to stop; that is, to set; to fix. In fencing, it is to intercept by thrusting the weapon aside. In gaming, it is to lay or throw down. All the senses unite in that of extending, thrusting, or driving. W. par, that is, contiguous, paredness, a pair, a fellow, Eng. prer, L. par. The latter word seems to signify, extended, or reaching to, and to be closely allied to the Portuguese sense of contiguity.]*

1. To set or bring things together in fact or in contemplation, and to examine the relations they bear to each other, with a view to ascertain their agreement or disagreement; as, to compare two pieces of cloth, two tables, or coins; to compare reasons and arguments; to compare pleasure with pain.

In comparing movable things, it is customary to bring them together, for examination. In comparing things immovable or remote, and abstract ideas, we bring them together in the mind, as far as we are able, and consider them in connection. Comparison therefore is really collation, or it includes it.

2. To liken; to represent as similar, for the purpose of illustration.

Selon compared the people to the sea, and orators and counselors to the winds; for that the sea would be calm and quiet, if the winds did not trouble it. Bacon.

In this sense compare is followed by to.
3. To examine the relations of things to each other, with a view to discover their relative proportions, quantities, or qualities; as, to compare two kingdoms, or two mountains, with each other; to compare the number ten with fifteen; to compare ice with crystal; to compare a clown with a dancing-master or a dandy.

In this sense compare is followed by with.

4. In grammar, to form an adjective in the degrees of comparison; as, blackish, black, blacker, blackest.

5. To get; to procure; to obtain; as in Latin. [Obs.] Spenser.

COM-PARÉ, v. t. To hold comparison; to be like or equal.

2. To vie. [Obs.] Spenser.

COM-PARÉ, n. The state of being compared; comparative estimate; comparison; possibility of entering into comparison, or being considered as equal.

Their small gallies may not hold compare with our tall ships. Waller.

2. Simile; similitude; illustration by comparison. Johnson.

[This noun is in use, but can not be considered as elegant.]

COM-PARÉD, pp. Set together and examined with respect to likeness or unlikeness, agreement or disagreement; likened; represented as similar.

COM-PARÉER, n. One who compares or makes a comparison.

COM-PARÉING, ppr. Examining the relations of things to each other; likening.

COM-PARÉING, n. Act of comparing. Baister.

COM-PAR-ISON, n. [It. comparazione; Sp. comparacion; Fr. comparaison; Port. comparagam; L. comparatio. See COMPARÉ.]

1. The act of comparing; the act of considering the relation between persons or things, with a view to discover their agreement or resemblance, or their disagreement or difference.

We learn to form a correct estimate of men and their actions by comparison. Anon.

2. The state of being compared.

If we lightly estimate what we call good and evil, we shall find it to be much in comparison. Locke.

3. Comparative estimate; proportion.

Who is left among you that saw this house in its first glory? And how do you see it now? Is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?—Hag. ii.

4. In grammar, the formation of an adjective in its several degrees of signification; as, strong, stronger, strongest; greenish, green, greener, greenest; glorious, more glorious, most glorious. In English, there are strictly four degrees of comparison.

5. A simile; similitude, or illustration by similitude.

Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? Or with what comparison shall we compare it?—Mark iv.

6. In rhetoric, a figure by which two things are considered with regard to property or quality, which is common to them both; as, a hero is like a lion in courage. Here courage is common to hero and lion, and constitutes the point of resemblance. Encyc.

The distinction between similitude and comparison is, that the former has reference to the quality; the latter, to the quantity. Comparison is between more and less; similitude is between good and bad. Hannibal—hung like a leopard on the declivities of the Alps—in a likeness by similitude. The sublimity of the scriptural prophets exceeds that of Homer, as much as thunder is louder than a whisper—in a likeness by comparison. J. Q. Adams, lect. ix.

But comparison has reference to quality as well as quantity.

COM-PAR-T, v. t. [Fr. partager; It. compartire; Sp. compartir, con, or com, and partir; L. partio, to divide. See PART.]

To divide; to mark out a plan or design into its several parts or subdivisions. Wotton.

COM-PAR-TÉD, ppr. Divided into parts or apartments.

COM-PAR-TING, ppr. Dividing or disposing into parts.

COM-PAR-TITION, n. The act of dividing into parts. In architecture, the division or disposition of the whole groundplot of an edifice into its various apartments. Encyc.

2. Division; part divided; a separate part; as, amphitheatres need no partitions. Wotton.

COM-PART-MENT, n. [Fr. compartiment; It. compartimento.]

1. A division or separate part of a general design, as of a picture, or of a groundplot. Pope, Peacham.

2. A design composed of several different figures, disposed with symmetry, for ornament; as, a compartment of tiles or bricks, duly arranged, of various colors, and varnished, to decorate a building. In gardening, compartments are assemblages of beds, plots, borders, walks, &c. In heraldry, a compartment is called also a partition. Encyc.

COM-PART-NER, n. A sharer. Pearson.

COM-PASS, (kum'pas), n. [Fr. compas; Sp. compas; It. compassa; Port. compasso; con, or com, and Fr. pas, Sp. paso, It. passo, a pace or step, L. passus, which coincides with the participle of pando, to open or stretch. (See PACER and PASS.) A compass is a stepping together. So in Spanish and Portuguese, it signifies a beating of time in music.]

1. Stretch; reach; extent; the limit or boundary of a space, and the space included; applied to time, space, sound, &c. Our knowledge lies within a very narrow compass. The universe extends beyond the compass of our thoughts. So we say, the compass of a year, the compass of an empire, the compass of reason, the compass of the voice.

And in that compass all the world contains. Dryden.

2. A passing round; a circular course; a circuit.

Time is come round;

And where I did begin, there shall I end;

My life has run his compass. Shak.

They fetched a compass of seven days' journey.—2 Kings iii.

2 Sam. v. Acts xviii.

3. Moderate bounds; limits of truth; moderation; due limits.

In two hundred years, (I speak within compass,) no such commission had been executed. Davies.

This sense is the same as the first, and the peculiar force of the phrase lies in the word within.

4. The extent or limit of the voice, or of sound. [See No. 1.]

5. An instrument, often called the mariner's compass, used for directing or ascertaining the course of ships at sea. It consists of a circular box, containing a paper card marked with the thirty-two points of direction, and fixed on a magnetic needle, that always points to the north, the variation excepted. The needle, with the card attached to it, turns on a pin in the center of the box. The box is covered with glass, to prevent the motion of the card from being disturbed by the wind, and is so suspended as to remain always in an horizontal position, notwithstanding the motion of the ship. Encyc.

6. An instrument used in surveying land, constructed, in the main, like the mariner's compass; but with this difference, that the needle is not fitted into the card, moving with it, but plays alone; the card being drawn on the bottom of the box, and a circle divided into 360 degrees on the limb. This instrument is used in surveying land, and in directing travelers in a desert or forest, miners, &c. Encyc.

COM-PASS, (kum'pas), v. t. Literally, to measure with a compass. Hence,

1. To stretch round; to extend so as to embrace the whole; hence, to inclose, encircle, grasp, or seize; as, to compass with the arms.

2. To surround; to environ; to inclose on all sides; sometimes followed by around, round, or about.

Now, all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about. Shak.

With favor wilt thou compass him as with a shield.—Ps. v.

The willows of the brook compass him about.—Job xi.

3. To go or walk round.

Ye shall compass the city—and the seventh day ye shall compass the city seven times.—Josh. vi.

For ye compass sea and land.—Matt. xxiii.

4. To besiege; to beleaguer; to block up.

This is not a different sense, but a particular application.

Thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side.—Luke xix.

5. To obtain; to attain to; to procure; to bring within one's power; to accomplish.

If I can check my erring love, I will;

If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

How can you hope to compass your designs? Denham.

6. To purpose; to intend; to imagine; to plot; to contrive; as we say, to go about to perform, but in mind only; as, to compass the death of the king.

Compassing and imagining the death of the king are synonymous terms; compass signifying the purpose or design of the mind or will, and not, as in common speech, the carrying such design to effect. Blackstone.

COM-PASS-BOX, (kum'pas), n. A box for a compass.

COM-PASS-NEEDLE, n. The needle of the compass.

COM-PASS-SAW, n. A saw that cuts in a circular manner.

COM-PASS-ABLE, a. That may be compassed.

COM-PASS-ED, (kum'past), pp. Embraced; surrounded; included; obtained; imagined.

COM-PASS-ES, n. pl. [Or a pair of compasses, so named from its legs; but pair is superfluous or improper, and the singular or number, compass, is the preferable name.]

An instrument for describing circles, measuring figures, &c., consisting of two pointed legs or branches, made of iron, steel, or brass, joined at the top by a rivet, on which they move. There are also compasses of three legs, or triangular compasses, with four branches, and various other kinds. Encyc.

COM-PASS-ING, ppr. Embracing; going round; inclosing; obtaining; accomplishing; imagining; including; intending.

2. In ship-building, incurvated; arched. Mar. Dict.

COM-PASS-ION, (kum'pas-ion), n. [It. compassione; Sp. compasion; Fr. compassion; Low L. compassio, compatiar; con and pati, passus, to suffer. See PATIENCE.]

A suffering with another; painful sympathy; a sensation of sorrow excited by the distress or misfortunes of another; pity; commiseration. Compassion is a mixed passion, compounded of love and sorrow; at least some portion of love generally attends the pain or regret, or is excited by it. Extreme distress of an enemy even changes enmity into at least temporary affection.

He, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity.—Ps. lxxviii.

His father had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.—Luke xv.

COM-PASS-ION, v. t. To pity. [Not used.] Shak.

COM-PASS-ION-ABLE, a. Deserving of pity. [Lit. use used.] Barrow.

COM-PASS-ION-ATE, a. Having a temper or disposition to pity; inclined to show mercy; merciful; having a heart that is tender, and easily moved by the distresses, sufferings, wants, and infirmities of others.

There never was a heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate. South.

COM-PATRI-OT-ISM or COM-PATRI-OT-ISM, n. Fellow-patriotism.

COM-PEER', n. [L. compar; con and par, equal. See PEER.]

An equal; a companion; an associate; a mate. Philips.

COM-PEER', v. t. To equal; to match; to be equal with. Shak.

COM-PEER', v. i. [L. compareo.]

To appear. [Obs.]

COM-PELL', v. t. [L. compello, compellere; con and pello, to drive; Sp. compel; Port. compellir. See PELL and ACELL.]

1. To drive or urge with force, or irresistibly; to constrain; to oblige; to necessitate, either by physical or moral force; as, circumstances compel us to practice economy.

2. To force; to take by force or violence; to seize. The subjunctive of Comes through commissions, which compel from each a sixth part of his substance. Shak.

[This sense is harsh, and not very common.] Johnson.

3. To drive together; to gather; to unite in a crowd or company. A Latinism; compellere gregem. In one troop compellit. Dryden.

4. To seize; to overpower; to hold. And easy sleep their weary limbs compell'd. Dryden.

[Unusual.]

5. To call forth; L. compellere. [Obs.] Spenser.

COM-PELL-ABLE, a. That may be driven, forced, or constrained.

COM-PELL-ABLY, adv. By compulsion.

COM-PELL-ATION, n. [L. compellatio; compello, compellere, the same word as the preceding, applied to the voice; to mend or drive out the voice.]

A ceremonious appellation; the word of salutation.

The compellation of the kings of France is by airo. Temple.

COM-PELL-TO-RY, a. Compulsive.

COM-PELL-ED, pp. Forced; constrained; obliged.

COM-PEND-I-OUS-LY, adv. In a short or brief manner; summarily; in brief; in epitome.

The substance of Christian belief is compendiously expressed in a few articles. Anon.

COM-PEND-I-OUS-NESS, n. Shortness; brevity; comprehension in a narrow compass. Bentley.

COM-PENS-A-BLE, a. [See COMPENSATE.] That may be compensated. [Little used.]

COM-PENS-ATE or COM-PENS-ATE, v. t. [L. compenso; con and pendo, to prize or value, from pendo, to weigh, to value. See PENONET.]

1. To give equal value to; to recompense; to give an equivalent for services, or an amount lost or bestowed; to return or bestow that which makes good a loss, or is estimated a sufficient remuneration; as, to compensate a laborer for his work, or a merchant for his losses.

2. To be equivalent in value or effect to; to counterbalance; to make amends for.

The length of the night and the dew do compensate the heat of the day. Bacon.

The pleasure of sin never compensates the sinner for the miseries he suffers, even in this life. Anon.

COM-PENS-ATE or COM-PENS-ATE, v. i. To make amends; to supply an equivalent; followed by for; as, nothing can compensate for the loss of reputation.

This word is generally accented on the second syllable, most unfortunately, as any ear will determine by the feebleness of the last syllables in the participles compensated, compensating.

Each seeming want compensated of course. Pope.

With the primary accent on the first syllable, and the secondary accent on the third, this defect, and the difficulty of uttering distinctly the last syllables, are remedied.

COM-PEN-S-ATED or COM-PEN-S-ATED, pp. Recompensed; supplied with an equivalent in amount or effect; rewarded.

COM-PEN-S-ATING or COM-PEN-S-ATING, ppr. Giving an equivalent; recompensing; remunerating; making good a deficiency.

COM-PEN-S-ATION, n. That which is given or received as an equivalent for services, debt, want, loss, or suffering; amends; remuneration; recompense. All other debts may compensation find. Dryden.

The pleasures of life are no compensation for the loss of divine favor and protection.

2. That which supplies the place of something else, or makes good a deficiency. Paley.

3. In law, a set-off; the payment of debt by a credit of equal amount.

COM-PEN-S-A-TIVE, a. Making amends or compensation.

COM-PEN-S-A-TORY, a. Serving for compensation; making amends.

COM-PEN-DI-N-ATE, v. t. [L. compendino.] To COM-PEN-TE', v. i. [L. competo; con and peto.]

1. To seek, or strive for the same thing as another; to carry on competition or rivalry.

Our manufacturers compete with the English in making cotton cloths.

2. To strive or claim to be equal. The sages of antiquity will not dare to compete with the inspired authors. Milner.

COM-PETE-N-CY, n. [L. competens, competo, to be COM-PETE-N-CY.] meet or fit; con and peto, to seek; properly, to press, urge, or come to.]

Primarily, fitness; suitableness; convenience; hence,

1. Sufficiency; such a quantity as is sufficient; property or means of subsistence sufficient to furnish the necessaries and conveniences of life, without superfluity.

Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of sense, Lie in three words—health, peace, and competence. Pope.

2. Sufficiency, applied to other things than property; but this application is less common.

3. Legal capacity or qualifications; fitness; as, the competence of a witness, which consists in his having the qualifications required by law, as age, soundness of mind, impartiality, &c.

4. Right or authority; legal power or capacity to take cognizance of a cause; as, the competence of a judge or court to examine and decide. Kent.

5. Fitness; adequacy; suitableness; legal sufficiency; as, the competence of evidence. Sewall.

COM-PET-ENT, a. Suitable; fit; convenient; hence, sufficient, that is, fit for the purpose; adequate; fullowed by to; as, competent supplies of food and clothing; a competent force; an army competent to the preservation of the kingdom or state; a competent knowledge of the world. This word usually implies a moderate supply, a sufficiency without superfluity.

2. Qualified; fit; having legal capacity or power; as, a competent judge or court; a competent witness. In a judge or court, it implies right or authority to hear and determine; in a witness, it implies a legal right or capacity to testify.

3. Incident; belonging; having adequate power or right.

That is the privilege of the infinite Author of things, who never slumbers nor sleeps, but is not competent to any finite being. Locke.

It is not competent to the defendant to allege fraud in the plaintiff.

COM-PET-ENT-LY, adv. Sufficiently; adequately; suitably; reasonably; as, the fact has been competently proved; a church is competently endowed.

1. Pleasure; satisfaction; gratification. It is more than approbation, and less than delight or joy.

Others proclaim the infirmities of a great man with satisfaction and complacency, if they discover none of the like in themselves. Addison.

2. The cause of pleasure or joy. Milton.

3. Complaisance; civility; softness of manners; deportment and address that afford pleasure.

Complacency, and truth, and really sweetness, Dwell ever on his tongue, and smooth his thoughts. Addison.

In the latter sense, COMPLAISANCE, from the French, is now used. [See COMPLAISANCE.]

COM-PLA'CENT, a. Civil; complaisant.

They look up with a sort of complacent smile to know.

Barke.

COM-PLA-CEN'TIAL, a. Marked by complacence; accommodating.

Ch. Relig. Appeal.

COM-PLA-CEN'TIAL-LY, adv. In a complacential or accommodating manner.COM-PLA'CEN'T-LY, adv. Softly; in a complacent manner.COM-PLAIN', v. i. [Fr. complaindre; com, or com, and plaindre, plain, to lament, to bewail; Sp. plainir; It. compaignere, or compaignere; from the L. plango, to strike, to lament. If a is not radical, the original word was plago, coinciding with plaga, Gr. $\pi\lambda\eta\eta$. But this is doubtful. The primary sense is to drive, whence to strike and to lament, that is, to strike the hands or breasts, as in extreme grief, or to drive forth the voice, as in appello.]

1. To utter expressions of grief; to lament.

I will complain in the bitterness of my spirit. — Job vi.

I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. — Ps. lxxvii.

2. To utter expressions of censure or resentment; to murmur; to find fault.

And when the people complained, it displeased the Lord. — Num. xii.

3. To utter expressions of uneasiness or pain. He complains of thirst. He complains of a headache.

4. To charge; to accuse of an offense; to present an accusation against a person to a proper officer.

To A B, one of the justices of the peace for the county of S, complainant C D.

This verb is regularly followed by of, before the cause of grief or censure; as, to complain of thirst, of ignorance, of vice, of an offender.

5. To represent injuries, particularly in a writ of audita querela.

COM-PLAIN', v. t. To lament; to bewail.

They might the grievance lawfully complain. — Dan. Ch. War.

This use of complain is uncommon, and hardly legitimate. The phrase is properly elliptical.

COM-PLAIN'ABLE, a. That may be complained of.

[Not in use.] Fellham.

COM-PLAIN'ANT, n. [Fr. complainant.]

1. A prosecutor; one who prosecutes by complaint, or commences a legal process against an offender for the recovery of a right or penalty.

He shall forfeit one moiety to the use of the town, and the other moiety to the use of the complainant.

Sent. of Massachusetts.

1. Expression of grief, regret, pain, censure, or resentment; lamentation; murmuring; a finding fault.

Even to-day is my complaint bitter. — Job xxiii.

I mourn in my complaint, and make a noise. — Ps. lv.

The Jews laid many sad and grievous complaints against Paul. — Acts xvi.

2. The cause or subject of complaint, or murmuring.

The poverty of the clergy hath been the complaint of all who wish well to the church. Swift.

3. The cause of complaint, or of pain and uneasiness, in the body; a malady; a disease; usually applied to disorders not violent; as, a complaint in the bowels or breast.

4. Accusation; a charge against an offender, made by a private person or informer to a justice of the peace, or other proper officer, alleging that the offender has violated the law, and claiming the penalty due to the prosecutor. It differs from an information, which is the prosecution of an offender by the attorney or solicitor-general; and from a presentment and indictment, which are the accusation of a grand jury.

5. Representation of injuries, in a general sense; and appropriately, in a writ of audita querela.

COM-PLAI-SANCE, (kom'plai-zans,) n. [Fr. complaisance, from complaisant, the participle of complaire; com, or com, and plaire, to please, whence plaisant, pleasing, plaisir, pleasure, L. placeo, placere, the infinitive changed into plaire; It. compiacenza, from compiacere, piacere; Sp. compiacencia, complacer. This is the same word as complacence; the latter we have from the Latin orthography. This word affords an example of a change of a palatal letter, in the Latin, into a sibilant, in French; c into s.]

1. A pleasing deportment; courtesy; that manner of address and behavior, in social intercourse, which gives pleasure; civility; obliging condescension; kind and affable reception and treatment of guests; exterior acts of civility; as, the gentleman received us with complaisance.

COM-PLEMENTAL, a. Filling; supplying a deficiency; completing.

COM-PLEMENTARY, n. One skilled in complements. [Not in use.] B. Jonson.

COM-PLETE', a. [*L. completus, from compleo; com and pleo, inusit., to fill; It. compiere. The Greek has $\pi\lambda\omega$, to approach, to fill, contracted from $\pi\lambda\alpha\omega$, the primary sense of which is, to thrust or drive; and if the Latin pleo is from the Greek, which is probable, then the original orthography was peleo, completo; in which case $\pi\lambda\alpha\omega, \pi\lambda\alpha\omega, pleo$, is the same word as the English fill. The Greek $\pi\lambda\eta\theta\omega$ is said to be a derivative. Literally, filled; full.]*

1. Having no deficiency; perfect.

And ye are complete in him who is the head of all principally and power. — Col. ii.

2. Finished; ended; concluded; as, the edifice is complete.

This course of vanity almost complete. Prior.

In strict propriety, this word admits of no comparison; for that which is complete, can not be more or less so. But as the word, like many others, is used with some indistinctness of signification, it is customary to qualify it with more, most, less, and least. More complete, most complete, less complete, are common expressions.

3. In botany, a complete flower is one furnished with a calyx and corolla. Vaillant.

Or having all the parts of a flower. Martyn.

COM-PLETE', v. t. To finish; to end; to perfect; as, to complete a bridge or an edifice; to complete an education.

CON, [with or against.] A Latin inseparable preposition or prefix to other words. Ainsworth remarks that con and cum have the same signification, but that con is used separately, and con in composition. Con and cum may be radically distinct words. The Irish comh, or coimh, is equivalent to the Latin con; and the Welsh cym, convertible into cyr, appears to be the same word, denoting, says Owen, a mutual act, quality, or effect. It is precisely equivalent to the Latin com, in comparo, compono; and the Latin com, in composition, may be the Celtic comh or cym. But, generally, it seems to be con, changed into con. Ainsworth deduces con from the Greek κον; for originally it was written con. But this is probably a mistake.

Con coincides in radical letters and in signification, with the Teutonic gain, gen, gean, igen, igien, in the English again, against; Sax. gean, ongean; Sw. igen; Dan. igjen. Whatever may be its origin or affinities, the primary sense of the word is probably from some root that signifies to meet or oppose, or turn and meet; to approach to, or to be with. This is the radical sense of most prepositions of the like import. [See the English WITH, AGAIN.] Su in Irish, coinnis, a meeting; as coinnis, opposite.

Con, in compounds, is changed into I before I, as in colligo, to collect, and into m before a labial, as in comparo, to compare. Before a vowel or h, the n is dropped; as in coalesco, to coalesce, to co-operate; cohibeo, to restrain. It denotes union, as in conjoin; or opposition, as in conflict, contend. Qu. W. gan, with.

CON, [abbreviated from Latin contra, against.] In the phrase pro and con, for and against, con denotes the negative side of a question. As a noun, a person who is in the negative; as, the pro and con.

CON, v. t. [*Sax. connan, connan, cunnan, to know, to be able, to be skillful or wise; and cennan, to hear or bring forth, Gr. γυνωαι, and cunnian, to try, to attempt, to prove, L. conari; whence cunning, skillful, experienced, or skill, experience; the latter word, cunnian, coincides in sense with Sax. anginnan, anginnan, to begin, to try, to attempt, L. conari. D. kennen, to know, understand, or he acquainted, to be able, can, to know or understand, to hold or contain; the last signification coinciding with the W. gan, to contain. G. kennen, to know; and kunnan, to be able. Dan. kan, to be able, pret. kunde, whence kundskab, knowledge, skill, experience. Sw. kunna, to know; kunna, to be able, to be skilled, to know. The primary sense is, to strain or stretch, which gives the sense of strength, power, as in con, and of holding, containing, comprehending; as, contain, from contineo, teneo, Gr. τεινω, L. tendo. And this signification connects these words with gin, in its compounds, begin, Sax. beginnan, anginnan, &c., to strain, to try, to stretch forward and make an effort; also with the Gr. γυνωαι, L. gignere, to beget, or to bring forth. See Class. Gr. No. 29, 36, 40, 42, 43, 58. In the sense of know, con signifies to hold or to reach.]*

CON-CEPTI-BLE, a. [See CONCEIVABLE.] That may be conceived; conceivable; intelligible. [Not used.] Hale.

CON-CEPTION, n. [L. conceptio, from concepit. (See CONCEIVE.) It. concezione; Sp. concepcion; Fr. conception.]

1. The act of conceiving; the first formation of the embryo or fetus of an animal.
1. I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. — Gen. iii.
2. The state of being conceived.

Joy had the like conception in our eyes. Shak.

3. In pneumatology, apprehension of any thing by the mind; the act of conceiving in the mind; that mental act, or combination of acts, by which an idea or notion is formed of an absent object of perception, or of a sensation formerly felt. When we see an object with our eyes open, we have a perception of it; when the same object is presented to the mind with the eyes shut, in idea only, or in memory, we have a conception of it. Kames. Stewart. Encyc.
4. Conception may be sometimes used for the power of conceiving ideas, as when we say, a thing is not within our conception. Some writers have defined conception as a distinct faculty of the mind; but it is considered by others as memory, and perhaps with propriety.
5. Purpose conceived; conception with reference to the performance of an act; as, note his dangerous conception in this point. Shak.
6. View or opinion; apprehension; knowledge.

And as it bears conceived what reason were, And that conception should distinctly show. Davies.

CON-CRE-MENT, n. [Low L. concrementum, from concreo, to grow together. See CONCRETE.]

A growing together; the collection or mass formed by concretion, or natural union. Hale.

CON-CRE-S-CENCE, n. [L. concresecia, concresecio. See CONCRETE.]

Growth or increase; the act of growing or increasing by spontaneous union, or the coalescence of separate particles. Raleigh.

CON-CRE-S-CIBLE, a. Capable of concreting; that may congeal or be changed from a liquid to a solid state.

They formed a genuine, fixed, concrescible oil. Fourcroy.

CON-CRE-TE, d. [L. concretus, from concreo, to grow together; con and cresco, to grow. See GROW.]

1. Literally, united in growth. Hence, formed by coalescence of separate particles in one body; consistent in a mass; united in a solid form.

The first concrete state or consistent surface of the chain. Barnet.

2. In logic, existing in a subject; not abstract; as, the white snow. Here whiteness is considered as existing in the snow, and not as a separate thing.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also express, or imply, or refer to a subject to which they belong. Watts.

3. A concrete number expresses or denotes a particular subject; as, three men; but when we use a number without reference to a particular subject, as three or five, we use the term in the abstract. Barlow, Bailey.

4. In phonology, a concrete sound, or movement of the voice; is one which slides continuously up or down, as distinguished from a discrete movement, in which the voice leaps at once from one line of pitch to another. Rush.

CON-CRE-TE, n. A compound; a mass formed by concretion, spontaneous union, or coalescence of separate particles of matter in one body.

Guilt is a porous concrete. Bentley.

CON-CRE-TION, (kon-kre'shun, n. The act of concreting; the process by which soft or fluid bodies become thick, consistent, solid, or hard; the act of growing together, or of uniting, by other natural process, the small particles of matter into a mass.

2. The mass or solid matter formed by growing together, by congealation, condensation, coagulation, or induration; a clot; a lump; a solid substance formed in the soft parts or in the cavities of animal bodies.

CON-CRE-TION-AL, a. Pertaining to concretion.

CON-CRE-TION-ARY, a. Pertaining to or made up of concretions; producing concretions. Hitchcock.

CON-CRE-TIVE, a. Causing to concrete; having power to produce concretion; tending to form a solid mass from separate particles; as, concretive juices. Brown.

CON-CRE-TURE, n. A mass formed by concretion. [Not used.]

CON-CREW, (krü'), v. i. To grow together. [Not used.] Spenser.

CON-CRIM-INATION, n. A joint accusation.

CON-CUB-IN-AGE, n. [Fr. See CONCUBINE.] The act or practice of cohabiting, as man and woman, in sexual commerce, without the authority of law or a legal marriage. In a more general sense, this word is used to express any criminal or prohibited sexual commerce, including adultery, incest, and fornication.

In some countries, concubinage is marriage of an inferior kind, or performed with less solemnity than a true or formal marriage; or marriage with a woman of inferior condition, to whom the husband does not convey his rank or quality. This is said to be still in use in Germany. Encyc.

In law, concubinage is used as an exception against her that sueth for dower; in which it is alleged that she was not lawfully married to the man in whose lands she seeks to be endowed, but that she was his concubine. Concl.

CON-CUB-IN-AL, a. Pertaining to concubinage.

CON-CUB-IN-ARY, n. One who indulges in concubinage.

CON-CUB-IN-ARY, a. Relating to concubinage.

1. To meet in the same point; to agree. Temple.

2. To agree; to join or unite, as in one action or opinion; to meet, mind with mind; as, the two houses of parliament concur in the measure.

It has with before the person with whom one agrees; as, Mr. Burke concurrent with Lord Chatham in opinion.

It has to before the effect. Pope.

Extremes in man concur to general use.

3. To unite or be conjoined, with the consequential sense of aiding, or contributing power or influence to a common object; as, various causes may concur in the changes of temperature.

CON-CURREN-CE, n. A meeting or coming together; union; conjunction.

We have no other measure but of our own ideas, with the concurrency of other probable reasons, to persuade us. Locke.

2. A meeting of minds; agreement in opinion; union in design; implying joint approbation.

Targum the Fraud was expelled by the universal concurrency of scribes and people. Swift.

3. A meeting or conjunction, whether casual or intended; combination of agents, circumstances, or events.

Struck with these great concurrences of things. Cyaxar.

4. Agreement; consent; approbation. See No. 2.

5. Agreement or consent, implying joint aid or contribution of power or influence.

From these sublime images we collect the greatness of the work, and the necessity of the divine concurrency to it. Rogers.

6. A meeting, as of claims, or power; joint rights, implying equality in different persons or bodies; as, a concurrency of jurisdiction in two different courts.

CON-CUR-REN-CY, n. The same as CONCURREN-CE.

CON-CUR-RENT, a. Meeting; uniting; accompanying; acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event or effect operating with.

I join with these laws the personal presence of the king's son, as a concurrent cause of this reformation. Davies.

All combined, Your beauty, and my impotence of mind, And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire. Dryden.

2. Conjoined; associate; concomitant.

There is no difference between the concurrent echo and the re-echo, but the quickness or slowness of the return. Bacon.

3. Joint and equal; existing together and operating on the same objects. The courts of the United States, and those of the States, have, in some cases, concurrent jurisdiction.

CON-CUR-RENT, n. That which concurs; joint or contributory cause.

To all affairs of importance there are three necessary concurrents—time, industry, and facilities. Deacy of Pae.

CON-CUR-RENT-LY, adv. With concurrency; unitedly.

CON-CUR-RING, pp. or a. Meeting in the same point; agreeing; running or acting together; uniting in action; contributing to the same event or effect; consenting.

A concurring figure, in geometry, is one which, being laid on another, exactly meets every part of it, or one which corresponds with it in all its parts.

CON-CUS-SATION, n. [See CONCUSSIVE.] A violent shock or agitation.

CON-CUS-SED, (kon-kus't), n. Shaken.

CON-CUS-SION, (kon-kush'un, n. [L. concussio, from concutio, to shake, from con and cuto, quasso, to shake or shatter. From the sense of discutio and percutio, we may infer that the primary sense is to beat, to strike, or to beat in pieces, to bruise, to beat down, Fr. cossier, Eng. to quash, L. cado, cudo. See Class Gd, No. 33, 40, 76, and Class Gs, No. 17.]

1. The act of shaking, particularly and properly by the stroke or impulse of another body.

It is believed that great concussing of bells, in populous cities, hath dispersed pestilential air, which may be from the concussion of the air. Bacon.

2. The state of being shaken; a shock; as, the concussion of the brain by a stroke. It is used also for shaking or agitation in general; as, the concussion of the earth. Woodward.

CON-CUS-SIVE, a. Having the power or quality of shaking. Johnson.

COND, v. t. [Fr. conduire.] In seaman's language, to conduct a ship; to direct the man at the helm how to steer. Bailey, Encyc.

CON-DEMN, (kon-dem't) v. t. [L. condemnno; con and damno, to condemn, to disapprove, to doom, to devote; It. condannare, denotare; Port. condemnar; Sp. id.; Fr. condamner; Arm. candaani; D. dommen, verdoemen, furdömmen; Sw. döma, fördöma; Dan. dömmen, furdömmen; Sax. deman, ferdeman, to deem, to doom, to judge, to condemn. See DAMN, DEEM, DOOM.]

1. To pronounce to be utterly wrong; to utter a sentence of disapprobation against; to censure; to blame. But the word often expresses more than censure or blame, and seems to include the idea of utter rejection; as, to condemn heretical opinions; to condemn one's conduct.

We condemn mistakes with asperity, where we pass over sins with gentleness. Buckminster.

2. To determine or judge to be wrong, or guilty; to disallow; to disapprove.

Beloved, if our heart condemns us not, we have confidence toward God.—1 John iii.

3. To witness against; to show or prove to be wrong, or guilty, by a contrary practice.

The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it.—Matt. xii.

4. To pronounce to be guilty; to sentence to punishment; to utter sentence against judicially; to doom; opposed to acquit or absolve; with to before the penalty.

The son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death.—Matt. xx.

He that believeth on him is not condemned.—John iii.

5. To doom or sentence to pay a fine; to fine.

And the king of Egypt—condemned the land in a hundred talents of silver.—2 Chron. xxxvi.

6. To judge or pronounce to be unfit for use, or service; as, the ship was condemned as not seaworthy.

For the judgment was by one to condemnation. — Rom. v.

2. The state of being condemned.

Do not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? — Luke xxiii.

3. The cause or reason of a sentence of condemnation. John iii.

CON-DEM'NATION-TO-RY, a. Condemning; bearing condemnation or censure; as, a condemnatory sentence or decree.

CON-DEM'NED, (kon-dem'd') pp. or a. Censured; pronounced to be wrong, guilty, worthless, or forfeited; adjudged or sentenced to punishment.

CON-DEM'NER, n. One who condemns or censures.

CON-DEM'NING, ppr. or a. Censuring; disallowing; pronouncing to be wrong, guilty, worthless, or forfeited; sentencing to punishment.

CON-DENS'A-BLE, a. [See CONDENSE.] Capable of being condensed; that may be compressed into a smaller compass, and into a more close, compact state; as, vapor is condensable.

CON-DENS'ATE, v. t. [See CONDENSE.] To condense; to compress into a closer form; to cause to take a more compact state; to make more dense.

CON-DENS'ATE, v. i. To become more dense, close, or hard.

CON-DENS'ATE, a. Made dense; condensed; made more close or compact. Peacocks.

CON-DENS'ATE-D, pp. Condensed; made more compact.

CON-DENS'ATE-TING, ppr. Making more close or compact.

CON-DENS'ATION, n. [L. condensatio. See CONDENSE.]

The act of making more dense or compact; or the act of causing the parts that compose a body to approach or unite more closely, either by mechanical pressure or by a natural process; the state of being condensed. Dew and clouds are supposed to be formed by the condensation of vapor. It is opposed to rarefaction and expansion. Condensation is applicable to any compressible matter; and from condensation proceeds increased hardness, solidity, and weight.

CON-DENS'ATIVE, a. Having a power or tendency to condense.

CON-DENSE', (kon-dens') v. t. [L. condense; con and denso, to make thick or close; il. condensare; Sp. and Port. condensar; Fr. condenser. See DENSE.]

1. To make more close, thick, or compact; to cause the particles of a body to approach, or to unite more closely, either by their own attraction or affinity, or by mechanical force. Thus vapor is said to be condensed into water by the application of cold; and air is condensed in a tube by pressure. Hence the word is sometimes equivalent to compress.

2. To make thick; to inspissate; applied to soft, compressible substances.

3. To compress into a smaller compass, or into a close body; to crowd; applied to separate individuals. Thus we say, to condense ideas into a smaller compass. Dryden.

CON-DENSE', v. i. To become close or more compact, as the particles of a body; to approach or unite more closely; to grow thick.

Vapors condense and coalesce into small parcels. Newton.

CON-DENSE', a. Close to texture or composition; compact; firm; dense; condensed. [See DENSE, which is generally used.] Milton.

CON-DENS'ED, (kon-dens't') pp. or a. Made dense, or more close in parts; made or become compact; compressed into a narrower compass.

CON-DENS'ER, n. A pneumatic engine or syringe, in which air or other elastic fluids may be compressed. It consists of a cylinder, in which is a movable piston to force the air into a receiver, and a valve to prevent the air from escaping. Eneye.

2. A vessel, or part of machinery, in which aqueous or spirituous vapors are reduced to a liquid form. This may be done either by injecting a quantity of cold water into the condenser, as in that of a steam-engine, or by immersing the condenser in another vessel, through which cold water continually flows. Herbert.

CON-DENS'ING, ppr. or a. Making more close or compact.

CON-DENS'ITY, n. The state of being condensed; denseness; density. [The latter are generally used.]

COND'ER, n. [Fr. conduire; L. conduco. See CONDU.]

1. A person who stands upon a cliff, or elevated part of the sea-coast, in the time of the herring fishery, to point out to the fishermen, by signs, the course of the shoals of fish. Covel.

2. One who gives directions to a helmsman how to steer the ship. Eneye.

CON-DESCEND', v. t. [L. descendere; Sp. condescender; Fr. condescendre; con and L. descendo. See DESCEND.]

1. To descend from the privileges of superior rank or dignity, to do some act to an inferior, which strict justice or the ordinary rules of civility do not require. Hence, to submit or yield, as to an inferior, implying an occasional relinquishment of distinction.

Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. — Rom. xii.

2. To recede from one's rights in negotiation, or common intercourse, to do some act, which strict justice does not require.

Spain's mighty monarch, In gracious clemency, does condescend, On these conditions, to become your friend. Dryden.

3. To stoop or descend; to yield; to submit; implying a relinquishment of rank, or dignity of character, and sometimes a sinking into debasement.

Can they think me so broken, so debased, With corporal servitude, that my mind ever Will condescend to such absurd commands? Milton.

CON-DESCEND'ENCE, n. A voluntary yielding or submission to an inferior.

You will observe [in the Turks] an insulting condescendence, which breathes their contempt of you. Eton.

CON-DESCEND'ING, ppr. Descending from rank or distinction in the intercourse of life; receding from rights or claims; yielding.

2. a. Yielding to inferiors; courteous; obliging. CON-DESCEND'ING-LY, adv. By way of yielding to inferiors; with voluntary submission; by way of kind concession; courteously. Atterbury.

CON-DESCEN'SION, n. Voluntary descent from rank, dignity, or just claims; relinquishment of strict right; submission to inferiors in granting requests or performing acts which strict justice does not require. Hence, courtesy.

It forbids pride and commands humility, modesty, and condescension to others. Tillotson.

Raphael, amidst his tenderness, shows such a dignity and condescension in all his behavior, as are suitable to a superior nature. Adison.

CON-DESCENS'IVE, a. Condescending; courteous. Barrow.

CON-DESCENT', n. Condescension. [Not used.] Sp. Hall.

CON-DIGN', (kon-dne') a. [L. condignus; con and dignus, worthy. See DIGNITY.]

1. Deserved; merited; suitable; applied usually to punishment; as, the malefactor has suffered condign punishment.

2. Worthy; merited; as, condign praise. [In the latter sense, seldom used.] Spenser. Shak.

CON-DIGN'ITY, n. Merit; desert. In school divinity, the merit of human actions, which claims reward on the score of justice. Milner.

CON-DIGN'LY, (kon-dne'ly), adv. According to merit.

CON-DIGN'NESS, (kon-dne'ness), n. Agreeableness to deserts; suitability.

CON-DI-MENT, n. [L. condimentum, from condio, to season, pickle, or preserve.]

Seasoning; sauce; that which is used to give relish to meat or other food, and to gratify the taste.

As for radish and the like, they are for condiments, and not for nourishment. Bacon.

CON-DIS-CIPLE, n. [L. discipulus; con and discipulus, See DISCIPLE.]

A school-fellow; a learner in the same school, or under the same instructor.

CON-DITE', v. t. [L. condio, conditum.]

To prepare and preserve with sugar, salt, spices, or the like; to pickle; as, to condite pears, plums, quinces, mushrooms, &c. [Little used.] Greav. Taylor.

CON-DITE'MENT, n. A composition of conserves, powders, and spices, in the form of an electuary. [Little used.] Bailey.

CON-DIT'ING, ppr. Preserving. [Little used.] Greav.

CON-DIT'ION, (kon-dish'un), n. [L. conditio, from condio, to build or make; to ordain; properly, to set or fix, or to set together, or in order; con and do, to give; properly, to send.]

1. State; a particular mode of being; applied to external circumstances, to the body, to the mind, and to things. We speak of a good condition, or a bad condition, in reference to wealth and poverty; in reference to health and sickness; in reference to a cheerful or depressed disposition of mind; and with reference to a sound or broken, perishing state of things. The word signifies a setting or fixing, and has a very general and indefinite application, coinciding nearly with state, from sto, to stand, and denotes that particular frame, form, mode, or disposition, in which a thing exists, at any given time. A man is in a good condition, when he is thriving. A nation with an exhausted treasury, and barded with taxes, is not in a condition to make war. A poor man is in a humble condition. Religion affords consolation to man in every condition of life. Exhortations should be adapted to the condition of the mind.

Condition, circumstance, is not the thing; Bliss is the same in subject or in king. Pope.

2. Quality; property; attribute. It seemed to us a condition and property of divine powers and beings to be hidden and unseen to others. Bacon.

3. State of the mind; temper; temperament; complexion. [See No. 1.] Shak.

4. Moral quality; virtue or vice. Raleigh. South. [These senses, however, fall within the first definition.]

5. Rank, that is, state with respect to the orders or grades of society, or to property; as, persons of the best condition. Clarendon.

6. Terms of a contract or covenant; stipulation; that is, that which is set, fixed, established, or proposed. What are the conditions of the treaty?

Make our conditions with you captive king. Dryden. He sendeth and desireth conditions of peace. — Luke xiv.

7. A clause in a bond, or other contract, containing terms or a stipulation that it is to be performed, and, in case of failure, the penalty of the bond is to be incurred.

8. Terms given or provided, as the ground of something else; that which is established, or to be done, or to happen, as requisite to another act; as, I will pay a sum of money on condition you will engage to refund it.

9. That which must exist, as the ground or necessary adjunct of something else.

CON-DIT'ION, (kon-dish'un), v. t. To make terms; to stipulate; as, it is one thing to condition for a good office, and another to execute it.

CON-DIT'ION, v. t. To contract; to stipulate. It was conditioned between Saturn and Titan, that Saturn should put to death all his male children. Raleigh.

CON-DIT'ION-AL, a. Containing or depending on a condition or conditions; made with limitations; not absolute; made or granted on certain terms. A conditional promise is one which is to be performed when something else stipulated is done or has taken place.

A conditional fee, in law, is one which is granted upon condition that, if the donee shall die without such particular heirs as are specified, the estate shall revert to the donor. Hence it is a fee restrained to particular heirs, to the exclusion of others.

2. In grammar and logic, expressing a condition or supposition; as, a conditional word, mode, or tense; a conditional syllogism.

CON-DIT'ION-AL, n. A limitation. Bucon.

CON-DIT'ION-AL-ITY, n. The quality of being conditional, or limited; limitation by certain terms.

CON-DIT'ION-AL-LY, adv. With certain limitations; on particular terms or stipulations; not absolutely or positively.

We are large preferences tendered to him, but conditionally, upon his doing wicked offices. South.

CON-DIT'ION-AL-RY, (-dish'un-), a. Conditional; stipulated. [Not used.] Norris.

CON-DIT'ION-ATE, a. Conditional; established on certain terms. [Not used.] Hammond.

CON-DIT'ION-ATE, v. t. To qualify; to regulate [Not in use.] Brown.

CON-DIT'ION-ED, (kon-dish'un'd), pp. Stipulated; containing terms to be performed.

2. a. Having a certain state or qualities. This word is usually preceded by some qualifying term; as, good-conditioned, ill-conditioned, best-conditioned.

CON-DIT'ION-ING, ppr. Making terms or conditions in stipulations.

CON-DIT'ION-LY, adv. On certain terms. [Not used.] Sidney.

CON-DIT'IO-RY, n. [L. conditorum, from condio, to hide.]

A repository for holding things.

CON-DOL'IA-TO-RY, a. Expressing condolence.

CON-DOLE', v. t. [L. condoleo; con, with, and doleo, to ache, or to grieve.]

To feel pain, or to grieve, at the distress or misfortunes of another.

Your friends would have cause to rejoice, rather than condole with you.

It is followed by with before the person for whom we feel grief.

CON-DOLE', v. t. To lament or bewail with another, or on account of another's misfortune. [Unusual.]

Why should our poet petition Isis for her safe delivery, and afterward condole her miscarriage? Dryden. Milton.

CON-DOLE'MENT, n. Grief; pain of mind at another's loss or misfortune; sorrow; mourning. Shak.

CON-DOL'LENCE, n. Pain of mind, or grief excited by the distress or misfortune of another. Arbutnot.

CON-GLA-CI-ATION, n. The act of changing into ice, or the state of being converted to ice; a freezing; congelation. Brown.
CON-GLOB'ATE, a. [L. conglobatus, from conglobo; con and globo, to collect, or to make round; globus, a ball. See GLOBE.]
 Formed or gathered into a ball. A conglobate gland is a single or lymphatic gland, a small, smooth body, covered in a fine skin, admitting only an artery and a lymphatic vessel to pass in, and a vein and a lymphatic vessel to pass out. Parr. Coxe.
CON-GLOB'ATE, v. t. To collect or form into a ball, or hard, round substance. Green.
CON-GLOB'ATE-D, pp. Collected or formed into a ball.
CON-GLOB'ATE-LY, adv. In a round or roundish form.
CON-GLO-BATION, n. The act of forming into a ball; a round body.
CON-GLOB'E, v. t. [L. conglobo; con and globo, to collect, or to make round; globus, a ball.]
 To gather into a ball; to collect into a round mass. Milton.
CON-GLOB'E, v. i. To collect, unite, or coalesce in a round mass. Milton.
CON-GLOB'ED, pp. Collected into a ball.
CON-GLOB'ING, ppr. Gathering into a round mass or ball.
CON-GLOB'U-LATE, v. i. To gather into a little round mass, or globe. Johnson.
CON-GLOM'ER-ATE, a. [L. conglomerare; con and glomero, to wind into a ball, from glomus, a ball, a clow. See GLOMERATE.]
 1. Gathered into a ball or round body. A conglomerate gland is composed of many smaller glands, whose excretory ducts unite in a common one, as the liver, kidneys, pancreas, parotids, &c. Each little granulated portion furnishes a small tube, which unites with other similar ducts, to form the common excretory duct of the gland. Coxe. Encyc.
 2. In botany, conglomerate flowers grow on a branching peduncle or footstalk, on short pedicels, closely compacted together without order; opposed to diffused. Martyn.
 3. Conglomerate rocks. See POOLING-STONE.
CON-GLOM'ER-ATE, v. t. To gather into a ball or round body; to collect into a round mass. Green.
CON-GLOM'ER-ATE, n. In geology, a sort of pudding-stone, or rock, composed of pebbles cemented together by another mineral substance, either calcareous, silicious, or argillaceous. Brande.

CON-GLO'TI-NATE-ING, ppr. Gluing together; uniting or closing by a tenacious substance.
CON-GLO'TI-NATION, n. The act of gluing together; a joining by means of some tenacious substance; a healing by uniting the parts of a wound; union. Arbuthnot.
CON-GLO'TI-NATIVE, a. Having the power of uniting by glue or other substance of like nature.
CON-GLO'TI-NATOR, n. That which has the power of uniting wounds. Woodward.

CON'GO, (kong'go), n. A species of black tea.
CON-GRAT'U-LANT, a. Rejoicing in participation. Milton.
CON-GRAT'U-LATE, (kon-grat'yū-lāte), v. t. [L. congratulor; con and gratulor, from gratus, grateful, pleasing. See GRACE.]
 To profess one's pleasure or joy to another on account of an event deemed happy or fortunate, as on the birth of a child, success in an enterprise, victory, escape from danger, &c.; to wish joy to another. We congratulate the nation on the restoration of peace.
 Formerly this verb was followed by to. "The subjects of England may congratulate to themselves." Dryden. But this use of to is entirely obsolete. The use of with after this verb, "I congratulate with my country," is, perhaps, less objectionable, but is rarely used. The intransitive sense of the verb may therefore be considered as antiquated, and no longer legitimate.
CON-GRAT'U-LATE-D, pp. Complimented with expressions of joy at a happy event.
CON-GRAT'U-LATE-ING, ppr. Professing one's joy or satisfaction on account of some happy event, prosperity, or success.
CON-GRAT'U-LATION, n. The act of professing one's joy or good wishes at the success or happiness of another, or on account of an event deemed fortunate to both parties or to the community.
CON-GRAT'U-LATOR, n. One who offers congratulations. Milton.
CON-GRAT'U-LATOR-Y, a. Expressing joy for the good fortune of another, or for an event fortunate for both parties, or for the community.
CON-GREE', v. t. To agree. [Not in use.]
CON-GREE', v. i. To salute mutually. [Not in use.]
CON'GRE-GATE, (kong'gre-gāte), v. t. [L. congregeo; con and grego, a herd, W. greg. See GREGARIOUS.]
 To collect separate persons or things into an assemblage; to assemble; to bring into one place, or into a crowd or united body; as, to congregate men or animals; to congregate waters or sands. Hooker. Milton. Shak.
CON'GRE-GATE, v. i. To come together; to assemble; to meet. Denham.
 Equals with equals often congregate. Denham.
CON'GRE-GATE, a. Collected; compact; close. [Little used.]
CON'GRE-GATE-D, pp or a. Collected; assembled in one place.
CON'GRE-GATE-ING, ppr. Collecting; assembling; coming together.
CON'GRE-GATION, (kong'gre-gā'shun), n. The act of bringing together, or assembling.
 2. A collection or assemblage of separate things; as, a congregation of vapors. Shak.
 3. More generally, an assembly of persons; and appropriately, an assembly of persons met for the worship of God, and for religious instruction. Hooker.
 4. An assembly of rulers. Nym. xxv.
 5. An assembly of ecclesiastics or cardinals appointed by the pope; as, the congregation of the holy office, &c. Also, a company or society forming a subdivision of a monastic order. Encyc.
 6. At Oxford and Cambridge, the assembly of masters and doctors for transacting the ordinary business of conferring degrees. Brande.
CON'GRE-GATION-AL, a. Pertaining to a congregation.
 2. Belonging to the system of Congregationalism; appropriately used of such Christians as maintain that each congregation is independent of others, and has the right to choose its own pastor and govern itself; as, a Congregational church or mode of worship. J. Murdock.
CON'GRE-GATION-AL-ISM, n. That system of church government which vests all ecclesiastical power in the assembled brotherhood of each local church, as an independent body. J. Murdock.
CON'GRE-GATION-AL-IST, n. One who belongs to a Congregational church or society; one who holds to the independence of each congregation or church of Christians, and the right of the assembled brethren to elect their pastor, and to determine all ecclesiastical matters. J. Murdock.
CON'GRESS, (kong'gress), n. [L. congressus, from congreder, to come together; con and gradior, to go or step; gradus, a step. See GRADE and DEGREE.]
 1. A meeting of individuals; an assembly of envoys, commissioners, deputies, &c.; particularly, a meeting of the representatives of several courts, to concert measures for their common good, or to adjust their mutual concerns. Europe.
 2. The assembly of delegates of the several British colonies in America, which united to resist the claims of Great Britain in 1774, and which, in 1776, declared the colonies independent.
 3. The assembly of the delegates of the several United States, after the declaration of independence, and until the adoption of the present constitution, and the organization of the government in 1789.

During these periods, the congress consisted of one house only.
 4. The assembly of senators and representatives of the United States of America, according to the present constitution, or political compact, by which they are united in a federal republic; the legislature of the United States consisting of two houses, a senate and a house of representatives. Members of the senate are elected for six years, but the members of the house of representatives are chosen for two years only. Hence, the united body of senators and representatives for the two years, during which the representatives hold their seats, is called one congress. Thus we say the first or second session of the sixteenth congress.
 5. A meeting of two or more persons in a contest; an encounter; a conflict. Dryden.
CON-GRES'SION, n. A company. [Not in use.]
CON-GRES'SION-AL, (kon-gresh'un-al), a. Pertaining to a congress, or to the congress of the United States; as, congressional debates. Barlow.

CON-GRES'SIVE, a. Meeting, as the sexes. Brown.
 2. Encountering.
CON'GREVE ROCK'ET, n. A very destructive engine of war, invented by Sir William Congreve. It is filled with highly inflammable materials, and impelled forward, like the common sky-rocket, with a continual acceleration. Brande.
CON'GRUE, v. t. To agree. [Not used.]
CON'GRUE-ENCE, n. [L. congruentia, from congruo, CONGRUEN-CY, to agree, or suit.]
 Suitableness of one thing to another; agreement; consistency. More.
CON'GRU-ENT, a. Suitable; agreeing; corresponding. Dennis.
CON'GRU-ITY, n. Suitableness; the relation of agreement between things.
 There is no congruity between a mean subject and a lofty style; but an obvious congruity between an elevated station and dignified department.
 2. Fitness; pertinence.
 A whole sentence may fall of its congruity by wanting a particle. Sidney.
 3. Reason; consistency; propriety. Hooker.
 4. In school divinity, the good actions which are supposed to render it meet and equitable that God should confer grace on those who perform them. The merit of congruity is a sort of imperfect qualification for the gift and reception of God's grace. Milner.
 5. In geometry, figures or lines, which, when laid over one another, exactly coincide, are in congruity. Johnson.
CON'GRU-OUS, a. [L. congruus.]
 1. Accordant; suitable; consistent; agreeable to. Light, airy music, and a solemn or mournful occasion, are not congruous. Obedience to God is congruous to the light of reason. Locke.
 2. Rational; fit.
 It is not congruous that God should be always lightning men into an acknowledgment of the truth. Atterbury.
CON'GRU-OUS-LY, adv. Suitably; pertinently; agreeably; consistently. Boyle.

One who guesses or conjectures. [See CONJECTURE.] Sicist.

CONJECTURABLE, a. That may be guessed or conjectured.

CONJECTURAL, a. Depending on conjecture; done or said by guess; as, a conjectural opinion.

CONJECTURALLY, adv. Without proof or evidence; by conjecture; by guess; as, this opinion was given conjecturally.

CONJECTURE, (kon-jekt'yur), n. [L. conjectura; Fr. conjecture; It. congettura, or congettura; Sp. conjetura; Port. conjetura, or conjetura. See CONJECTOR.]

1. Literally, a casting or throwing together of possible or probable events; or a casting of the mind to something future, or something past but unknown; a guess formed on a supposed possibility or probability of a fact, or on slight evidence; preponderance of opinion without proof; surmise. We speak of future or unknown things by conjecture, and of probable or unfounded conjectures.

2. Idea; notion. Shak.

CONJECTURE, (kon-jekt'yur), v. t. To guess; to judge by guess, or by the probability or the possibility of a fact, or by very slight evidence; to form an opinion at random. What will be the issue of a war, we may conjecture, but can not know. He conjectured that some misfortune had happened.

CONJECTURER, pp. Guessed; surmised.

CONJECTURER, n. One who guesses; a guesser; one who forms or utters an opinion without proof. Addison.

1. Belonging to marriage; matrimonial; conjugal; as, conjugal relation; conjugal ties.

2. Suitable to the married state; becoming a husband in relation to his consort, or a consort in relation to her husband; as, conjugal affection.

CONJUGALLY, adv. Matrimonially; conjugal.

CONJUGATE, v. t. [L. conjugo, conjugatus, to couple; con and jago, to yoke, to marry. See JOIN and Yoke.]

1. To join; to unite in marriage. [Not now used.]

2. In grammar, to distribute the parts or inflections of a verb into the several voices, modes, tenses, numbers, and persons, so as to show their connections, distinctions, and modes of formation.

Laterally, to connect all the inflections of a verb, according to their derivation, or all the variations of one verb. In English, as the verb undergoes few variations, conjugation consists chiefly in combining the words which unitedly form the several tenses in the several persons.

CONJUGATE, n. A word agreeing in derivation with another word, and therefore generally resembling it in signification.

We have learned, in logic, that conjugates are sometimes in name only, and not in deed. Bramhall.

CONJUGATE, a. In botany, a conjugate leaf is a pinnate leaf which has only one pair of leaflets; a conjugate meeme has two racemes only, united by a common peduncle. Martyn.

Conjugate diameter; in geometry, a diameter parallel to a tangent at the vertex of the primitive diameter. A. D. Stanley.

2. The act of uniting or compiling; union; assemblage. Beattie. Taylor.

3. In grammar, the distribution of the several inflections or variations of a verb, in their different voices, modes, tenses, numbers, and persons; a connected scheme of all the derivative forms of a verb.

CONJUNCT, a. [L. conjunctus, from conjungo. See CONJOIN.]

Conjoined; united; concurrent. Shak.

CONJUNCTION, n. [L. conjunctio. See CONJOIN.]

1. Union; connection; association by treaty or otherwise. Bacon. South.

2. In astronomy, the meeting of two or more stars or planets in the same degree of the zodiac; as, the conjunction of the moon with the sun, or of Jupiter and Saturn.

Heavenly bodies are said to be in conjunction when they are seen in the same part of the heavens, or have the same longitude. The inferior conjunction of a planet is its position when in conjunction on the same side of the sun with the earth; the superior conjunction is its position when on the side of the sun most distant from the earth. D. Olmsted.

3. In grammar, a connective or connecting word; an indeclinable word which serves to unite sentences or the clauses of a sentence and words, joining two or more simple sentences into one compound one, and continuing it at the pleasure of the writer or speaker. This book cost one dollar and ten cents. Virtue and vice are not compatible.

God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. — Gen. I.

The hope of the righteous shall be gladness, but the expectation of the wicked shall perish. — Prov. x.

4. The copulation of the sexes. Smith's Tour.

CONJUNCTIVE, a. Closely united. Shak.

2. Uniting; serving to unite.

3. In grammar, the conjunctives mode is that which follows a conjunction, or expresses some condition or contingency. It is more generally called sub-junctive.

CONJUNCTIVELY, adv. In union; jointly; together.

CONJUNCTURE, (kon-junkt'yur), n. [Fr. conjuncture. See CONJOIN.]

1. A joining; a combination or union, as of causes, events, or circumstances; as, an unhappy conjunction of affairs.

2. An occasion; a critical time, proceeding from a union of circumstances; as, at that conjunction, peace was very desirable. Juxta is used in a like sense.

3. Union; connection; mode of union; as, the conjunctions of letters in words. Hulder.

4. Connection; union; consistency.

I was willing to grant to Presbytery what with reason I can pretend to in a conjunction with Episcopacy. King Charles.

CONJURATION, (kon-jur-ay-shun), n. [See CONJURE.] The act of using certain words or ceremonies to obtain the aid of a superior being; the act of summoning in a sacred name; the practice of arts to expel evil spirits, allay storms, or perform supernatural or extraordinary acts.

CONJURE, v. t. [L. conjuro, to swear together, to conspire; con and juro, to swear; It. congiurare; Sp. conjurar; Fr. conjurer.]

1. To call on or summon by a sacred name, or in a solemn manner; to implore with solemnity. It seems originally to have signified, to bind by an oath.

I conjure you! let him know, What'er was done against him, Cato did it. Addison.

2. To bind two or more by an oath; to unite in a common design. Hence, intransitively, to conspire. [Not usual.] Milton.

CONJURE, (kon'jur), v. t. To affect, in some manner, by magic arts, as by invoking the Supreme Being, or by the use of certain words, characters, or ceremonies, to engage supernatural influence; as, to conjure up evil spirits, or to conjure down a tempest; to conjure the stars.

Note. — It is not easy to define this word, nor any word of like import; as the practices of conjurers are little known, or various and indefinite. The use of this word indicates that an oath or solemn invocation originally formed a part of the ceremonies.

2. To conjure up; to raise up or bring into existence without reason, or by unnatural means; as, to conjure up a phantom, to conjure up a story.

CONJURE, (kon'jur), v. t. To practice the arts of a conjurer; to use arts to engage the aid of spirits in performing some extraordinary act. Shak.

2. In a vulgar sense, to behave very strangely; to act like a witch; to play tricks.

CONJURED, pp. Bound by an oath.

CONJUREMENT, n. Serious injunction; solemn demand. Milton.

CONJURER, (kon'jur-er), n. One who practices conjuration; one who pretends to the secret art of performing things supernatural or extraordinary, by the aid of superior powers; an impostor who pretends, by unknown means, to discover stolen goods, &c. Hence, ironically, a man of shrewd conjuncture; a man of sagacity. Addison. Prior.

CONNATION, n. Connection by birth; natural union.

CONNATURAL, a. [con and natural.]

1. Connected by nature; united in nature; born with another.

These affections are connatural to us, and as we grow up, so do they. L'Estrange.

2. Participating of the same nature.

And mix with our connatural dust. Milton.

CONNATURALITY, n. Participation of the same nature; natural union. Johnson. Hale.

CONNATURALIZE, v. t. To connect by nature.

CONNATURALIZED, pp. Connected by nature.

CONNATURALIZING, pp. Connecting by nature.

CONNATURALLY, adv. By the act of nature; originally. Hale.

CONNATURALNESS, n. Participation of the same nature; natural union. Johnson. Pearson.

CONNECT, v. t. [L. connecto; con andnecto; It. connettere. See Class Ng, No. 32, 33, 40, 41.]

1. To knit or link together; to tie or fasten together, as by something intervening, or by weaving, winding, or twining. Hence,

2. To join or unite; to conjoin, in almost any manner, either by junction, by any intervening means, or by order and relation. We connect letters and words in a sentence; we connect ideas in the mind; we connect arguments in a discourse. The Strait of Gibraltar connects the Mediterranean with the Atlantic. A treaty connects two nations. The interests of agriculture are connected with those of commerce. Families are connected by marriage or by friendship.

CON-SCIENCE, (kon'shens), n. [Fr., from L. conscientia, from conscio, to know, to be privy to; con and scio, to know; It. coscienza, or coscienza; Sp. conciencia.]

1. Internal or self-knowledge, or judgment of right and wrong; or the faculty, power, or principle within us, which decides on the lawfulness or unlawfulness of our own actions and affections, and instantly approves or condemns them.

Conscience is called, by some writers, the moral sense, and considered as an original faculty of our nature. Others question the propriety of considering conscience as a distinct faculty or principle. They consider it rather as the general principle of moral approbation or disapprobation, applied to one's own conduct and affections; alleging that our notions of right and wrong are not to be deduced from a single principle or faculty, but from various powers of the understanding and will.

Encyc. Hutcheson. Reid. Edin. Encyc.

Being convicted by their own conscience, they went out one by one. — John viii.

The conscience manifests itself in the feeling of obligation we experience, which proceeds, attends, and follows our actions. E. P. Fitch.

Conscience is first occupied in ascertaining our duty, before we proceed to action; then in judging of our actions when performed. J. M. Mason.

2. The estimate or determination of conscience; justice; honesty.

What you require can not, in conscience, be deferred. Milton.

3. Real sentiment; private thoughts; truth; as, do you in conscience believe the story?

4. Conscientiousness; knowledge of our own actions or thoughts.

The sweetest cordial we receive, at last, is conscience of our virtuous actions past. Denham.

[This primary sense of the word is nearly, perhaps wholly, obsolete.]

5. Knowledge of the actions of others. B. Jonson.

6. In ludicrous language, reason or reasonableness.

Half-a-dozen fools are, in all conscience, as many as you should require. Swift.

To make conscience, or a matter of conscience, is to act according to the dictates of conscience, or to scruple to act contrary to its dictates. Locke.

Court of conscience; in England, a court established for the recovery of small debts, in London and other trading cities and districts. Blackstone.

CON-SCIENCE-LESS, a. Having no conscience. Hooker.

CON-SCIÖUS, (kon'sh'us), a. [L. conscius.]

1. Possessing the faculty or power of knowing one's own thoughts or mental operations. Thus, man is a conscientious being.

2. Knowing from memory, or without extraneous information; as, I am not conscientious of the fact.

The dæmnel then to Tancred sent, Who, conscious of the occasion, feared the event. Dryden.

3. Knowing by consciousness, or internal perception or persuasion; as, I am not conscientious of having given any offense. Sometimes followed by to; as, I am not conscientious to myself.

Envers only, conscious to the sign, Praised the event. Dryden.

So we say, conscientious of innocence, or of ignorance, or of a crime.

CON-SCIÖUS-LY, adv. With knowledge of one's own mental operations or actions.

If these perceptions, with their consciousness, always remained in the mind, the same thinking thing would be always consciously present. Locke.

CON-SCIÖUS-NESS, n. The knowledge of sensations and mental operations, or of what passes in one's own mind; the act of the mind which makes known an internal object. Locke. Reid. Encyc.

Consciousness of our sensations, and consciousness of our existence, seem to be simultaneous. Edin. Encyc. Consciousness must be an essential attribute of spirit. Watts.

2. Internal sense or knowledge of guilt or innocence. A man may betray his consciousness of guilt by his countenance.

3. Certain knowledge from observation or experience. Gibbon.

CON-SCRIPT, a. [L. conscriptus, from conscibo, to enroll; con and scribo, to write.]

Written; enrolled; as, conscript fathers, the senators of Rome, so called because their names were written in the register of the senate.

CON-SCRIPT', n. One taken by lot from the conscription list, and compelled to serve as a soldier or sailor. [A word used in France.]

CON-SCRIPT'ION, n. [L. conscriptio.]

1. An enrolling or registering.

2. A compulsory enrollment of individuals of a certain age, held liable to be drafted for military or naval service; a system which existed among the Romans, and was first introduced into France at the time of the revolution. Brande.

CONSECRATE, v. t. [L. consecro; con and sacro, to consecrate, from sacer, sacred. See SACRED.]

1. To make or declare to be sacred, by certain ceremonies or rites; to appropriate to sacred uses; to set apart, dedicate, or devote, to the service and worship of God; as, to consecrate a church.

Those shall consecrate Aaron and his sons. — Exod. xix.

All the altar, and gold, and vessels of brass and iron, are consecrated to the Lord. — Job. vi.

2. To canonize; to exalt to the rank of a saint; to enroll among the gods, as a Roman emperor.

3. To set apart and bless the elements in the eucharist.

4. To render venerable; to make respected; as, rules or principles consecrated by time.

CONSECRATE, a. Sacred; consecrated; devoted; dedicated.

They were assembled in that consecrated place. Bacon.

[This word is now seldom used, unless in poetry.]

CONSECRATED, pp. of a. Made sacred by ceremonies or solemn rites; separated from a common to a sacred use; devoted or dedicated to the service and worship of God; made venerable.

CONSECRATEDNESS, n. State of being consecrated.

CONSECRATING, pp. or a. Making sacred; appropriating to a sacred use; dedicating to the service of God; devoting; rendering venerable.

CONSECRATION, n. The act or ceremony of separating from a common to a sacred use, or of devoting and dedicating a person or thing to the service and worship of God, by certain rites or solemnities. Consecration does not make a person or thing really holy, but declares it to be sacred, that is, devoted to God, or to divine service; as, the consecration of the priests among the Israelites; the consecration of the vessels used in the temple; the consecration of a bishop.

2. Canonization; the act of publicly enrolling or numbering among the acknowledged saints or gods; the ceremony of the apotheosis of an emperor. Hale.

3. The benediction of the elements in the eucharist; the act of setting apart and blessing the elements in the communion. Encyc.

CONSECRATOR, n. One who consecrates; one who performs the rites by which a person or thing is devoted or dedicated to sacred purposes. Alterbury.

CONSECRATORY, a. Making sacred.

CONSECRATORY, a. Following of course. Bp. Morton.

Following; and consequent; consequential; deducible. Brown.

CONSECRATORY, n. That which follows; consequence; deduction from premises; corollary. Woodward.

CONSECRATION, n. [L. consecratio, from consecrator, to follow; con and sequor, to follow. See SECR.]

1. A following or sequel; train of consequences from premises; series of deductions. Hale.

2. Succession; series of things that follow each other; as, a consecration of colors. Newton.

CONSECUTIVE, a. [It. consecutivo; Fr. consecutif. See CONSECUTION.]

1. Following in a train; succeeding one another in a regular order; successive; uninterrupted in course or succession; as, fifty consecutive years. Arbutnot.

2. Following; consequential; succeeding; as, the actions of men consecutive to volition. Locke.

3. Consecutive chords, in music, imply a succession or repetition of the same consonance to similar motion. Encyc.

CONSECUTIVELY, adv. By way of consequence or succession, in opposition to artificially or casually. Dict.

CONSECUTIVENESS, n. State of being consecutive. Ray.

CONSENSION, n. [L. consensus. See CONSENT.]

Agreement; accord. [Little used.] Bentley.

CONSENT, n. [L. consensus; It. consenso; Fr. consentement; Sp. consentimiento; from L. sentio, to be of one mind, to agree; con and sentio, to think, feel, or perceive; Sp. consentir; Port. Fr. id.; It. consentire. See SENSE and ASSENT.]

1. Agreement of the mind to what is proposed or stated by another; accord; hence, a yielding of the mind or will to that which is proposed; as, a parent gives his consent to the marriage of his daughter.

We generally use this word in cases where power, rights, and claims, are concerned. We give consent, when we yield that which we have a right to withhold; but we do not give consent to a mere opinion or abstract proposition. In this case, we give our assent. But assent is also used in conceding what we may withhold. We give our assent to the marriage of a daughter. Consequently, assent has a more extensive application than consent. But the distinction is not always observed. Consent often amounts to permission.

Defraud ye not one another, except with consent for a time. — 1 Cor. vi.

2. Accord of minds; agreement; unity of opinion. All with one consent began to make excuse. — Luke xlv.

The company of private inquirer by consent. — Hos. vi.

3. Agreement; coherence; correspondence in parts, qualities, or operation.

Such is the world's great harmony, that springs from union, order, full consent of things. Pope.

4. In the animal economy, an agreement, or sympathy, by which one affected part of the system affects some distant part. This consent is supposed to exist in, or be produced by, the nerves, and the affections to be communicated from one part to another by means of their ramifications and distributions through the body. Thus the stone in the bladder, by irritating the fibers, will produce spasms and colic in the bowels; a shameful thing seen or heard will produce blushing in the cheeks. Quincy. Encyc.

But many facts indicate that other causes than nervous communication produce sympathy.

CONSENT, v. i. [L. consensio. See the noun.]

1. Literally, to think with another. Hence, to agree or accord. More generally, to agree in mind and will; to yield to what one has the power, the right, or the disposition to withhold, or refuse to grant.

If sinners endure thee, consent thou not. — Prov. i. And Saul was consenting to Stephen's death. — Acts vii.

Only let us consent to them, and they will dwell with us. — Gen. xxxiv.

2. To agree.

When thou swarest a thif, thou consentest with him. — Pa. i.

3. To assent.

I consent to the law, that it is good. — Rom. vi. 1 Tim. vi.

CONSENTANEOUSLY, adv. Mutual agreement.

CONSENTANEOUS, a. [L. consentaneus. See CONSENT.]

Agreeable; accordant; consistent with; suitable. The practice of virtue is not consentaneous to the unrenewed heart. Amos.

CONSENTANEOUSLY, adv. Agreeably; consistently; mutually.

CONSENTANEOUSNESS, n. Agreement; concordance; consistency. Dict.

CONSENTER, n. One who consents.

CONSENTIENT, (kon-sen'shent), a. [L. consentiens, consentia.]

Agreeing in mind; accordant in opinion. The authority due to the consentient judgment of the church. Pearson.

CONSEQUENCE, n. [L. consequentia, from consequor; con and sequor, to follow. See SECR.]

1. That which follows from any act, cause, principle, or series of actions. Hence, an event or effect produced by some preceding act or cause

Shun the bitter consequence; for know, The day thou exact thereof, thou shalt die. Milton.

The consequences of intemperance are disgrace, poverty, disease, and premature death.

2. In logic, a proposition collected from the agreement of other previous propositions; the conclusion which results from reason or argument; inference; deduction.

Every rational being is accountable to his Maker; man is a rational being; the consequence then must be, that man is accountable to his Maker.

From this train of argument, the consequence is obvious.

3. Connection of cause and effect; consecution. I felt

That I must after thee, with this my son; Such fatal consequence unites us three. Milton.

4. Influence; tendency, as to effects. The sense of consequence, in this use, is modified by the words connected with it; as, "it is of little consequence," that is, of little importance, small effects will follow; "it is of no consequence," of no moment, no effect of importance will follow; "it is of great consequence," of great importance, great effects will follow.

5. Importance; extensive influence; distinction; as, a man of great consequence in society.

In consequence; by means of; as the effect of.

CONSEQUENT, a. [L. consequens.]

1. Following as the natural effect; with to or on. The right was consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal. Locke.

His poverty was consequent on his vices.

2. Following by necessary inference or rational deduction; as, a proposition consequent to other propositions.

CONSEQUENT, n. Effect; that which follows a cause.

They were ill governed, which is always a consequent of ill payment. Davies.

2. That which follows from propositions by rational deduction; that which is deduced from reasoning or argumentation; a conclusion or inference.

CONSEQUENTIAL, a. Following as the effect; produced by the connection of effects with causes; as, a consequential evil.

2. Having the consequence justly connected with the premises; conclusive.

These arguments are highly consequential and conclusive to my purpose. Hale.

3. Important.

4. Assuming the air of a person of consequence; pompous; applied to persons.

CONSEQUENTIAL-LY, adv. With just deduction of consequences; with right connection of ideas. Addison.

2. By consequence; not immediately; eventually. South.

3. In a regular series; in the order of cause and effect. Addison.

4. With assumed importance; with conceit. Campbell.

CONSEQUENTIALNESS, n. Regular consecution in discourse. Diels.

CONSEQUENT-LY, adv. By consequence; by necessary connection of effects with their causes; in consequence of something.

CONSEQUENTNESS, n. Regular connection of propositions following each other; consecution of discourse. [Little used.] Digby.

CONSERATION, n. [L. conservo, conservatum.]

1. Junction; adaptation. Young.

CONSERVABLE, a. [See CONSERVE.] That may be kept or preserved from decay or injury.

CONSERVANCY, n. [L. conservans. See CONSERVE.]

A court of conservancy is held by the lord mayor of London, for the preservation of the fishery on the Thames. Johnson.

CONSERVANT, a. Preserving; having the power or quality of preserving from decay or destruction.

CONSERVATION, n. [L. conservatio. See CONSERVE.]

The act of preserving, guarding, or protecting; preservation from loss, decay, injury, or violation; the keeping of a thing in a safe or entire state; as, the conservation of bodies from perishing; the conservation of the peace of society; the conservation of privileges.

CONSERVATISM, n. The desire and effort of preserving what is established.

CONSERVATIVE, a. Preservative; having power to preserve in a safe or entire state, or from loss, waste, or injury. Peachment.

CONSERVATIVE, n. One who aims to preserve from ruin, innovation, injury, or radical change; one who wishes to maintain an institution, or form of government, in its present state. [Modern usage.]

CONSERVATOR, n. A preserver; one who preserves from injury or violation. Appropriately, an officer who has the charge of preserving the public peace, as judges and sheriffs; also, an officer who has the charge of preserving the rights and privileges of a city, corporation, or community, as in Roman Catholic universities. It is a word of extensive application.

2. In Connecticut, a person appointed to superintend idiots, lunatics, &c., manage their property, and preserve it from waste.

CONSERVATORY, a. Having the quality of preserving from loss, decay, or injury.

CONSERVATORY, n. A place for preserving any thing in a state desired, as from loss, decay, waste, or injury. Thus, a fish-pond for keeping fish, a granary for corn, an ice-house for ice and other things, a receptacle for water, &c., are called conservatories.

2. A greenhouse for exotics, often attached to a dwelling-house as an ornament. In large conservatories, properly so called, the plants are reared on the free soil, and not in pots. Brande.

3. A society for promoting, or for preserving, music in good taste.

CONSERVE, (kon-serv'), v. t. [L. conservo; con and servo, to hold, keep, or guard; Fr. conserver; It. conservare; Sp. conservar. See CLASS SR, No. 34, 33, 39, 40, 45, and CLASS DR, No. 32.]

To keep in a safe or sound state; to save; to preserve from loss, decay, waste, or injury; to defend from violation; as, to conserve bodies from perishing; to conserve the peace of society; to conserve fruits, roots, and herbs, with sugar, &c.

CONSERVE, n. A sweetmeat made of fresh fruits, &c., heat into one uniform mass, with fine sugar, and without boiling. Encyc. of Dom. Econ.

2. In pharmacy, a similar preparation, designed to preserve the flowers, herbs, roots, or fruits of simples, as nearly as possible, in their natural fresh state. Fresh vegetables and sugar of the consistence of honey. Encyc. Cox.

3. A conservatory. [Not usual.] Encyc.

CONSERVED, pp. Preserved in a safe and sound state; guarded; kept; maintained; protected; prepared with sugar.

CONSERVER, n. One who conserves; one who keeps from loss or injury; one who lays up for preservation; a preparer of conserves. Hayward. Temple.

CON-SERV'ING, ppr. Keeping in safety; defending; maintaining; preparing with sugar.
 CON-SESS'ION, n. [L. confessio. See SESS'ION.]
 A sitting together. [Little used.]
 CON-SESS'OR, n. One that sits with others. [Little used.]
 CON-SID'ER, v. t. [L. considero, to consider, to view attentively, from consido or considero, to sit by; con and sedo, to sit. (See SIT.) The literal sense is, to sit by or close, or to set the mind or the eyes to; hence, to view or examine with attention.]
 1. To fix the mind on, with a view to a careful examination; to think on with care; to ponder; to study; to meditate on.
 Know, therefore, this day, and consider it in thy heart.—Deut. iv.
 Hast thou considered my servant Job?—Job i.
 Consider the lilies of the field how they grow.—Matt. vi.
 2. To view attentively; to observe and examine.
 The priest shall consider the leprosy.—Lev. xiii.
 3. To attend to; to relieve.
 Blessed is he that considereth the poor.—Ps. xli.
 4. To have regard to; to respect.
 Let us consider one another to provoke to love and to good works.—Heb. x.
 5. To take into view in examination, or into account in estimates; as, in adjusting accounts, services, time, and expense, ought to be considered.
 6. In the imperative, consider is equivalent to, think with care, attend, examine the subject with a view to truth or the consequences of a measure. So we use see, observe, think, attend.
 7. To require; to reward; particularly for gratuitous services.
 CON-SID'ER, v. i. To think seriously, maturely, or reflectively; to reflect.
 None considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge or understanding.—Is. xlv.
 To the day of adversity consider.—Eccles. vii.
 2. To deliberate; to turn in the mind, as in the case of a single person; to deliberate or consult, as numbers; sometimes followed by of; as, I will consider your case, or of your case.
 The apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter.—Acta xv.
 3. To doubt; to hesitate. Dryden.
 CON-SID'ER-A-BLE, a. [Fr. and Sp. See CONSIDER.] That may be considered; that is to be observed, remarked, or attended to.
 It is considerable, that some urns have had inscriptions on them, expressing that the lamps were burning. Wilkins.
 [This primary use of the word is obsolescent, or very rarely used.]
 2. Worthy of consideration; worthy of regard or attention.
 Eternity is infinitely the most considerable duration. Tillotson.
 As that which is worthy of regard is in same measure important, hence,
 3. Respectable; deserving of notice; of some distinction; applied to persons.
 Men considerable in all worthy professions, eminent in many ways of life. Spratt.
 4. Important; valuable; or moderately large, according to the subject. Considerable aid was expected from the allies. A man has a considerable estate in Norfolk. A considerable sum of money was collected. Formerly it was sometimes followed by to. He thought his aid considerable to him.
 CON-SID'ER-A-BLE-NESS, n. Some degree of importance, moment, or dignity; a degree of value or importance that deserves notice.
 The considerableness of things is to be estimated by their usefulness, or by their effect on society.
 CON-SID'ER-A-BLY, adv. In a degree deserving notice; in a degree not triding or unimportant.
 And Europe still considerably gains, Both by their good examples and their pains. Roscommon.
 CON-SID'ER-ANCE, n. Consideration; reflection; sober thought. [Not used.] [See CONSIDERATION.] Shak.
 CON-SID'ER-ATE, a. [L. consideratus. See CONSIDER.]
 1. Given to consideration or to sober reflecting; thoughtful; hence, serious; circumspect; careful; discreet; prudent; not hasty or rash; not negligent. Aness is patient, considerate, and careful of his people. Dryden.
 2. Having respect to; regardful; as, considerate of praise. [Little used.]
 3. Moderate; not rigorous. Johnson.
 CON-SID'ER-ATE-LY, adv. With deliberation; with due consideration; calmly; prudently. Bacon.
 CON-SID'ER-ATE-NESS, n. Prudence; calm deliberation.
 CON-SID'ER-A'TION, n. [L. consideratio. See CONSIDER.]
 1. The act of considering; mental view; regard; notice; as, let us take into consideration the consequences of a hasty decision.
 2. Mature thought; serious deliberation.
 Let us think with consideration. Sidney.

3. Contemplation; meditation.
 The love you bear to Moxa hath brought you to the consideration of his virtues. Sidney.
 4. Some degree of importance; claim to notice, or regard; a moderate degree of respectability.
 Lucan is an author of consideration among the Latin poets. Addison.
 5. That which is considered; motive of action; influence; ground of conduct.
 He was obliged, antecedent to all other considerations, to search an asylum. Dryden.
 6. Reason; that which induces to a determination; as, he was moved by the considerations set before him.
 7. In law, the reason which moves a contracting party to enter into an agreement; the material cause of a contract; the price or motive of a stipulation. In all contracts, each party gives something in exchange for what he receives.
 A contract is an agreement, upon sufficient consideration. This consideration is express or implied; express, when the thing to be given or done is specified; implied, when no specific consideration is agreed upon, but justice requires it and the law implies it; as, when a man labors for another, without stipulating for wages, the law infers that he shall receive a reasonable consideration. A good consideration is that of blood, or natural love; a valuable consideration is such as money, marriage, &c. Hence, a consideration is an equivalent or recompense; that which is given as of equal estimated value with that which is received.
 CON-SID'ER-A-TIVE, a. Taking into consideration. [Little used.]
 CON-SID'ER-ED, pp. Thought of with care; pondered; viewed attentively; deliberated on; examined.
 CON-SID'ER-ER, n. A thinker; one who considers; a man of reflection. {CONSIDERATOR is not in use.}
 CON-SID'ER-ING, ppr. Fixing the mind on; meditating on; pondering; viewing with care and attention; deliberating on.
 Note.—We have a peculiar use of this word, which may be a corruption for considered, or which may be a deviation from analogy by an insensible change in the structure of the phrase. "It is not possible for us to act otherwise, considering the weakness of our nature." As a participle, this word must here refer to us, or the sentence can not be resolved by any rule of English syntax. It would be correct to say, "It is not possible for us to act otherwise, the weakness of our nature being considered;" or, "We, considering the weakness of our nature, can not act otherwise." But the latter phrase is better grammar than it is sense. We use other participles in like manner; as, "Allowing for tare, the weight could not be more than a hundred pounds." These and similar phrases are anomalous. But considering is no more a kind of conjunction, in such a phrase, than it is a noun.
 CON-SID'ER-ING, n. The act of deliberating, or carefully attending to; hesitation; as, many mixed considerations. Shak.
 CON-SID'ER-ING-LY, adv. With consideration or deliberation. Whole Duty of Man.

Tending to give comfort; refreshing to the mind; assuaging grief. Howell.

CON-SOL/A-TORY, n. A speech or writing containing topics of comfort. Milton.

CON-SOL/A-TIVE, v. t. [L. consolator; it. consolare; Sp. consolar; Fr. consoler. The primary sense is either to set or allay, to give rest or quiet, Ar. Now sala, Heb.

רָפָא; or the sense is to strengthen, in which case it coincides with the root of solid. The latter is most probable.]

To comfort; to cheer the mind in distress or depression; to alleviate grief, and give refreshment to the mind or spirits; to give contentment or moderate happiness, by relieving from distress. The promises of the gospel may well console the Christian in all the afflictions of life; it is a consoling reflection that the evils of life are temporary.

I am much consoled by the reflection that the religion of Christ has been attacked in vain by all the wise and philosophers, and its triumph has been complete. P. Henry.

CON-SOLE, v. [Fr. In architecture, a bracket, or shoulder-piece; or an ornament cut upon the key of an arch, which has a projecture, and, on occasion, serves to support little cornices, figures, busts, and vases. Encyc.

CON-SO-NANCE, n. [Fr. from L. consonantia, consonans, from consono, to sound together; con and sono, to sound. See SON/O and TON/E.]

1. Accord or agreement of sounds. In music, consonance is an accord of sounds, simultaneously produced, which creates an agreeable sensation in the ear as the third, fifth, and eighth. It derives, also, the according intervals. When the interval of a consonance is invariable, it is called perfect; but when it may be either major or minor, it is termed imperfect. Buxy.

2. Agreement; accord; congruity; consistency; agreeableness; suitability; as, the consonance of opinions among judges; the consonance of a ritual to the Scriptures.

CON-SO-NANT, a. Agreeing; according; congruous; consistent; followed generally by to; sometimes by with; as, this rule is consonant to Scripture and reason.

2. In music, composed of consonances; as, consonant intervals.

CON-SO-NANT, n. A letter, or element of speech, having either no vocalism, as p and the other mutes, or only an imperfect vocalism, as b, d, &c. For this reason, consonants are ordinarily sounded only in connection with a vowel, and hence the name. The consonants are better called articulations, as they are the names given to the several closings or junctions of the organs of speech, which precede and follow the openings of the organs with which the vowels are uttered. These closings are perfect, and wholly intercept the voice, as in the syllables ek, ep, et, or imperfect, and admitting some slight sound, as in sm, ca. Hence, some articulations are called mutes, and others semi-consonants. The consonants begin or end syllables, and their use is to determine the manner of beginning or ending the vocal sounds. These closings or configurations of the organs, being various, serve to diversify the syllables, as in uttering ba, da, pa, or ob, ad, ap; and, although b and p may be considered as representing no sounds at all, yet they so modify the utterance of ab, ap, or ba, pa, that the slight difference between these articulations may be perceived as far as the human voice can be distinctly heard.

CON-SO-NANT-LY, adv. Consistently; in agreement.

CON-SO-NANT-NESS, n. Agreeableness; consistency.

CON-SO-NOUS, a. [L. consonus.]

Agreeing in sound; symphonious.

CON-SPI-RATION, n. Conspiracy; agreement or concurrence of things to one end.

CON-SPI-RATOR, n. One who conspires; one who engages in a plot to commit a crime, particularly treason.

2. In law, one who agrees with another falsely and maliciously to indict an innocent person of felony. By the British statute, a conspirator is defined to be one who binds himself by oath, covenant, or other alliance, to assist another falsely and maliciously to indict a person, or falsely to maintain pleas. Encyc.

CON-SPIRE, v. i. [L. conspiro, to plot; con and spiro, to breathe. But the primary sense is, to throw, to wind; hence spira, a fold, circle, wreath, or band; and the sense of the verb is, to breathe together, or, more probably, to wind or hand together.]

1. To agree, by oath, covenant, or otherwise, to commit a crime; to plot; to hatch treason.

The servants of Ammon conspired against him, and slew the king in his own house. — 2 Kings xxi.

They conspired against Joseph to slay him. — Gen. xxxvii.

2. In law, to agree falsely and maliciously to indict an innocent person of felony.

3. To agree; to concur to one end; as, all things conspire to make us prosperous.

The press, the pulpit, and the stage, Conspire to censure and expose our age. Roscommon.

CON-SPIR/ER, n. One who conspires or plots; a conspirator. Shak.

CON-SPIR/ING, pp. or a. Agreeing to commit a crime; plotting; uniting or concurring to one end.

2. In mechanics, conspiring forces are forces acting obliquely to each other, but which may be severally resolved into two parts, one of which, in each case, acts in the same direction with the other; co-operating powers. D. Olmsted.

CON-SPIR/ING-LY, adv. In the manner of a conspiracy; by conspiracy. Milton.

CON-SPIS-SATION, n. [L. conspissatus.]

CON-STABLE, (kun'sta-ble) n. [Sp. condestable; Port. id.; It. conestabile; Fr. conestable; Sp. conde, It. conte, a count, and L. stabulum, a stable; L. comes stabuli, count of the stable.]

1. A high officer in the monarchical establishments of the middle ages. Braade.

The lord high constable of England was the seventh officer of the crown. He had the care of the common peace, in deeds of arms and matters of war, being a judge of the court of chivalry, now called the court of honor. To this officer, and to the earl marshal, belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazoury within the realm. The power of this officer was so great, and so improperly used, that it was abridged by the 13th Richard I., and was afterward forfeited in the person of Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, in 1521. It has never been granted to any person since that time, except pro hac vice, or on a particular occasion. Encyc.

2. An officer of the peace. In England, there are high constables, petty constables, and constables of London. The high constables are chosen at the court leets of the franchise or hundred over which they preside, or, in default of that, by the justices of the quarter sessions, and are removable by the same authority that appoints them. The petty constables are chosen by the jury of the court leet, or, if no court is held, they are appointed by two justices of the peace. In London, a constable is nominated in each precinct by the inhabitants, and confirmed at the court of wardmote. The duty of constables is to keep the peace; and for this purpose they are invested with the power of arresting and imprisoning, and of breaking open houses.

In the United States, constables are town or city officers of the peace, with powers similar to those possessed by the constables in Great Britain. They are invested also with powers to execute civil as well as criminal process, and to levy executions. In New England, they are elected by the inhabitants of towns in legal meeting.

To overrun the constable; to spend more than a man is worth or can pay; a vulgar phrase.

CONSTA-BLER-Y, (kun'sta-ber-y.) n. The body or jurisdiction of constables.

CONSTA-BLE-SHIP, n. The office of a constable.

Ayliffe.

CON-TRARIES, (kon'tra-ri-z), n. pl. [See CONTRARI.] In logic, propositions which destroy each other, but of which the falsehood of one does not establish the truth of the other.

If two universals differ in quality, they are contraries; as, every sine is a tree; no sine is a tree. These can never be both true together; but they may be both false. Watts.

CON-TRARI-E-TY, n. [L. contrarietas. See CONTRARI.]

1. Opposition in fact, essence, quality, or principle; repugnance. The expedition failed by means of a contrariety of winds. There is a contrariety in the nature of virtue and vice; of love and hatred; of truth and falsehood. Among men of the same profession, we find a contrariety of opinions.

2. Inconsistency; quality or position destructive of its opposite.

How can these contraries agree? Shak.

CON-TRARI-LY, adv. In an opposite manner; in opposition; on the other side; in opposite ways.

CON-TRARI-NESS, n. Contrariety; opposition.

CON-TRARI-OUS, a. Contrary; opposite; repugnant. Milton.

CON-TRARI-OUS-LY, adv. Contrarily; oppositely. Shak.

CON-TRARI-WISE, adv. [contrary and wise, manner.] On the contrary; oppositely; on the other hand.

Not rendering evil for evil, nor railing for railing; but contrariwise, blessing. — 1 Pet. iii.

CON-TRARI-Y, n. [L. contrarius, from contra, against; Fr. contraire; Sp. and It. contrario.]

1. Opposite; adverse; moving against, or in an opposite direction; as, contrary winds.

2. Opposite; contradictory; not merely different, but inconsistent or repugnant.

The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary, the one to the other. — Gal. v.

This adjective, in many phrases, is to be treated grammatically as an adverb, or as an adjective referring to a sentence or affirmation; as, this happened contrary to my expectations. The word here really belongs to the affirmation or fact declared — this happened; for contrary does not, like an adverb, express the manner of happening, but that the fact itself was contrary to my expectation. According, agreeable, pursuant, antecedent, prior, anterior, &c., are often used in the like manner.

CON-TRARI-Y, n. A thing that is contrary or of opposite qualities.

No contraries hold more antipathy than I and such a knave. Shak.

2. A proposition contrary to another, or a fact contrary to what is alleged; as, this is stated to be a fact, but I will endeavor to show the contrary.

On the contrary; in opposition; on the other side. Swift.

To the contrary; to an opposite purpose or fact; as, he said it was just, but I told him to the contrary.

They did it, not for want of instruction to the contrary. Sellingfleet.

CON-TRARI-Y, v. t. [Fr. contrarier.]

To contradict or oppose. [Obs.]

CON-TRARI-Y-MIND'ED, a. Of a different mind or opinion. Hall.

CON-TRAST', v. t. [Fr. contraster, Norm. id., to contrast; It. contrastare, Sp. and Port. contrastar, to re- ist, withstand, strive, debate, quarrel. The primary sense is, to set against, or to strain, to strive.]

1. To set in opposition different things or qualities, to show the superior excellence of one to advantage.

To contrast the goodness of God with our rebellion, will tend to make us humble and thankful. Clark, Sermon, July 4, 1814.

2. In painting and sculpture, to place figures in such opposition or dissimilitude, that the one shall give greater visibility and effect to the other.

The figures of the groups must contrast each other. Dryden.

CON-TRAST', v. i. To stand in contrast or opposition to.

The joints which divide the sandstone contrast finely with the divisional planes which separate the basalt into pillars. Lyell.

CON-TRAST, n. Opposition of things or qualities; or the placing of opposite things in view, to exhibit the superior excellence of one to more advantage. What a contrast between modesty and impudence, or between a well-bred man and a clown!

2. In painting and sculpture, opposition or dissimilitude of figures, &c., by which one contributes to the visibility or effect of the other. Johnson.

Contrast, in this sense, is applicable to things of a similar kind. We never speak of a contrast between a man and a mountain, or between a dog and a tree; but we observe the contrast between an oak and a shrub, and between a palace and a cottage.

CON-TRAST'ED, pp. or a. Set in opposition; examined in opposition.

CON-TRAST'ING, pp. Placing in opposition, with a view to discover the difference of figures or other things, and exhibit the advantage or excellence of one beyond that of the other.

CON-TRATE-NOR, n. In music, a middle part between the tenor and treble; contralto; counter.

CONTRATE-WHEEL, n. A wheel, the teeth of which lie contrary to those of the other wheels; i. e., parallel to the axis; used chiefly for clock-work.

CON-TRAVÁ-LA-TION, n. [L. contra and vallo, to fortify; Fr. contravallation.]

In fortification, a trench guarded with a parapet, formed by the besiegers between their camp and the place besieged, to secure themselves and check allies of the garrison. Brande.

CON-TRAVENE', v. t. [L. contravenio; contra and venio, to come.]

Literally, to come against; to meet. Hence, to oppose, but used in a figurative or moral sense; to oppose in principle or effect; to contradict; to obstruct in operation; to defeat; as, a law may contravene the provisions of the constitution.

CON-TRAVEN'ED, pp. Opposed; obstructed.

CON-TRAVEN'ER, n. One who opposes.

CON-TRAVEN'ING, pp. Opposing in principle or effect.

CON-TRAVEN'TION, n. Opposition; obstruction; a defeating of the operation or effect; as, the proceedings of the allies were in direct contravention of the treaty.

CON-TRAVERS'ION, n. [L. contra and versio, a turning.]

A turning to the opposite side; antistrophe. Congrève.

CON-TRAYER'VA, n. [Sp. contrayerba; Port. contraherba; contra and yerba, herba, an herb, L. herba; a counter herb, an antidote for poison, or, in general, an antidote.]

The popular name of various plants, as of some species of Dorstenia, Passiflora, &c.

CON-TRACT'ATION, n. [L. contractatio, tracta.]

A touching or handling. Ferrand.

CON-TRIB'U-TABLE, a. That can be contributed.

CON-TRIB'U-TA-RY, a. [See CONTRIBUTE.] Paying tribute to the same sovereign; contributing aid to the same chief or principal.

It was situated on the Ganges, at the place where this river received a contributory stream. D'Anville, An. Geog.

CON-TRIB'UTE, v. t. [L. contribuo; con and tribuo, to grant, assign, or impart; It. contribuire; Sp. contribuir; Fr. contribuer. See TRIBUTE.]

1. To give or grant in common with others; to give to a common stock or for a common purpose; to pay a share. It is the duty of Christians to contribute a portion of their substance for the propagation of the gospel.

England contributes much more than any other of the allies. Addison.

2. To impart a portion or share to a common purpose; as, let each man contribute his influence to correct public morals.

CON-TRIB'UTE, v. i. To give a part; to lend a portion of power, aid, or influence; to have a share in any act or effect.

There is not a single beauty in the piece, to which the invention must not contribute. Pope.

CON-TRIB'U-TED, pp. Given or advanced to a common fund, stock, or purpose; paid as a share.

CON-TRIBU-TING, ppr. Giving in common with others to some stock or purpose; imparting a share.

CON-TRIBU-TION, n. The act of giving to a common stock, or in common with others; the act of lending a portion of power or influence to a common purpose; the payment of each man's share of some common expense.

2. That which is given to a common stock or purpose, either by an individual or by many. We speak of the contribution of one person, or the contribution of a society. Contributions are involuntary, as taxes and imposts; or voluntary, as for some undertaking.

3. In a military sense, impositions paid by a frontier country, to secure themselves from being plundered by the enemy's army; or impositions upon a country in the power of an enemy, which are levied under various pretenses, and for various purposes, usually for the support of the army.

CON-TRIBU-TIVE, a. Tending to contribute; contributing; having the power or quality of giving a portion of aid or influence; lending aid to promote, in concurrence with others.

This measure is contributive to the same end. Taylor.

CON-TRIBU-TOR, n. One who contributes; one who gives or pays money to a common stock or fund; one who gives aid to a common purpose, in conjunction with others.

CON-TRIBU-TORY, a. Contributing to the same stock or purpose; promoting the same end; bringing assistance to some joint design, or increase to some common stock.

CON-TRIS-TATE, v. l. [L. contristat.] To make sorrowful. [Not used.] Bocon.

CON-TRIS-TATION, n. The act of making sad. [Not used.] Bacon.

CON-TRITE, a. [L. contritus, from conterere, to break or bruise; con and tero, to bruise, rub, or wear. See TATE.] Literally, worn, or bruised. Hence, broken-hearted for sin; deeply affected with grief and sorrow for having offended God; humble; penitent; as, a contrite sinner.

A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. — Ps. ii.

CON-TRITE-LY, adv. In a contrite manner; with penitence. [for sin.]

CON-TRITE-NESS, n. Deep sorrow and penitence

CON-TRIT-TION, (-trish/un), n. [L. contritio.] 1. The act of grinding or rubbing to powder.

2. Penitence; deep sorrow for sin; grief of heart for having done wrong, especially towards an infinitely holy and benevolent God. The word is usually understood to mean genuine penitence, accompanied with a deep sense of ingratitude in the sinner, and sincere resolution to live in obedience to the divine law.

Fruits of more pleasing savor, from thy seed Sown with contrition in his heart. Milton.

Imperfect repentance is by some divines called attrition.

CON-TRIV-A-BLE, a. [See CONTRIVE.] That may be contrived; capable of being planned, invented, or devised.

Perpetual motion may seem easily contrivable. Wilkins.

CON-TRIVANCE, n. [See CONTRIVE.] The act of inventing, devising, or planning.

There is no work impossible to these contrivances. Wilkins.

2. The thing invented or planned; a scheme; plan; disposition of parts or causes by design.

Our bodies are made according to the most orderly contrivance. Glanville.

3. Artifice; plot; scheme; as, he has managed his contrivance well.

CON-TRIVE, v. l. [Fr. controuer / con and trouver, to find; tr, controuare.]

1. To invent; to devise; to plan.

Our poet has always some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

2. To wear out; as, three ages such as mortal men contrive. Spenser. [Obs.]

[This must be from the L. contero, contrivi, and if the Fr. controuer, and Italian controvare, are the same word differently applied, the primary sense is, to invent by rubbing, that is, by ruminating; or to strike out, as in forger. But the word is probably from trouver, to find.]

CON-TRIVE, v. i. To form or design; to plan; to scheme; as, how shall we contrive to hide our shame?

[This verb is really transitive, but followed by a verb, in the place of an object or name.]

CON-TRIVED, pp. or a. Invented; planned; devised.

CON-TRIVEMENT, n. Contrivance; invention.

CON-TRIVER, n. An inventor; one who plans or devises; a schemer. Swift.

CON-TROL, n. [Fr. controle, a counter register; contre and rolle, a roll, list, or catalogue; Arm. counter roll.]

1. Primarily, a book, register, or account, kept to correct or check another account or register; a counter register. Hence, check; restraint; as, to speak or to act without control. The wind raged without control. Our passions should be under the control of reason.

2. Power; authority; government; command. Children should be under the control of their parents. The events of life are not always under our control.

3. He or that which restrains. Burke.

CON-TROL, v. l. To keep under check by a counter register or double account. The proper officer controls the accounts of the treasury.

2. To check; to restrain; to govern.

I feel my virtue struggling in my soul;
But stronger passion does its power control. Dryden.

3. To overpower; to subject to authority; to counteract; to have under command. The course of events can not be controlled by human wisdom or power.

4. To direct or govern in opposition; to have superior force, or authority over.

A recital can not control the plain words in the granting part of a deed. Johnson's Reports.

CON-TROL-LA-BLE, a. That may be controlled, checked, or restrained; subject to command.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and not always controllable by reason. South.

CON-TROL-LED, (kon-trôld'), pp. Checked; restrained; governed.

CON-TROL-LER, n. [Norm. contre-rouler.] 1. One who controls or restrains; one that has the power or authority to govern or control.

The great Controller of our fate
Deigned to be man, and lived in low estate. Dryden.

2. An officer appointed to keep a counter register of accounts, or to oversee, control, or verify the accounts of other officers; as, in Great Britain, the controller of the banaper, of the household, of the pipe, end of the pells. In the United States, the duty of the controller of the treasury is to superintend the adjustment and preservation of the public accounts; to examine all accounts settled by the auditor, and certify to the register the balances due thereon; to countersign all warrants drawn by the secretary of the treasury which shall be warranted by law; to report to the secretary the official forms of all papers to be issued in the different offices for collecting the public revenue, and the manner and form of keeping and stating the accounts of the persons employed in them, &c.

Stat. of the United States.
