1. Pertaining to the sun; as, the solar system; or proceeding from it; as, solar light; solar rays; solar influence.

2. In astrology, born under the predominant influence of the sun; as, a solar people. [Obs.] Dryden.

3. Measured by the progress of the sun, or by its revolution; as, the solar year.

Solar cycle. See CYCLE, No. 3.
Solar flowers, are those which open and shut daily, at certain determinate hours. Linnaeus.
Solar microscope; a microscope in which the object is illuminated by the light of the sun concentrated upon it. It consists of two parts; first, of a magnifier, by which the object placed behind it is made to form a highly-magnified image on a wall or screen in a dark room; and, secondly, of an illuminating apparatus, composed of a mirror thrust through an opening in the window shutter to reflect the light of the sun into the tube which carries the magnifier, and of several lenses called condensers, which receive the light from the mirror and concentrate it upon the object in the focus, the enlarged image of which is thus rendered luminous and distinct. Olmsted.
Solar spots; dark spots that appear on the sun's disk, usually visible only by the telescope, but sometimes so large as to be seen by the naked eye. They adhere to the body of the sun; indicate its revolutions on its axis; are very changeable in their figure and dimensions; and vary in size from mere points to spaces of 50,000 miles in diameter.
Solar system; the group of celestial bodies comprehending the sun, planets, and comets.
SÖLAR, n. A solar; a loft or upper chamber.

SÖL/EMN, (söl'em), a. [Fr. solennel; It. solenne; Sp. solenne; L. solennis, from solco, to be accustomed, to use, that is, to hold on or continue, as we have wont, from G. wakenen, to dwell.]
 1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.
The worship of this image was advanced, and the solemn supplication observed every year. Balingfleet.
[I doubt the correctness of this definition of Johnson; or whether solemn, in our language, ever includes the sense of anniversary. In the passage cited, the sense of anniversary is expressed by every year, and if it is included in solemn also, the sentence is tautologous. I should say then, that solemn, in this passage of Balingfleet, has the sense given in the second definition below.]
 2. Religiously grave; marked with pomp and sanctity; attended with religious rites.
His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned. Milton.
 3. Religiously serious; piously grave; devout; marked by reverence to God; as, solemn prayer; the solemn duties of the sanctuary.
 4. Affecting with seriousness; impressing or adapted to impress seriousness, gravity, or reverence; sober; serious.
There reigned a solemn silence over all. Spenser.
To average with solemn touches troubled thoughts. Milton.
 5. Grave; serious; or affectedly grave; as, a solemn face.
 6. Sacred; enjoined by religion; or attended with a serious appeal to God; as, a solemn oath.

SÖL/EMN-BREATH-ING, a. Diffusing or inspiring solemnity. Gray.
SÖL/EM-NESS, n. The state or quality of being solemn; reverential manner; gravity; as, the solemnness of public worship.
 2. Solemnity; gravity of manner. Wotton.
SÖ-LEM/N'ITY, n. [Fr. solennité.]
 1. A rite or ceremony annually performed with religious reverence.
*Great was the cause; our old solemnities
 From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise,
 But avord from death, our Argives yearly pay
 These grateful honors to the god of day. Pope.*
[Solemnities seems here to include the sense of anniversary. See the fourth line. But in modern usage, that sense is rarely or never attached to the word.]
 2. A religious ceremony; a ritual performance attended with religious reverence; as, the solemnity of a funeral or of a sacrament.
 3. A ceremony adapted to impress awe; as, the solemnities of the last day.
 4. Manner of acting awfully serious.
With horrible solemnity he caused every thing to be prepared for his triumph of victory. Sidney.
 5. Gravity; steady seriousness; as, the solemnity of the Spanish language. Spectator.
 6. Affected gravity.
Solemnity is a cover for a sol. Young.
SÖL/EM-NI-ZA'TION, n. The act of solemnizing; celebration; as, the solemnization of a marriage. *Bacon.

SÖL/EM-NIZE, v. t. [Fr. solenniser; It. solennizzare.]
 1. To dignify or honor by ceremonies; to celebrate; as, to solemnize the birth of Christ. Boyle
Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton

SÖL-FÄ-TÄ'RA, n. [from the Italian volcano near Naples.] A volcanic vent or area, from which sulphur, sulphureous, watery, and acid vapors and gases are emitted. Lyell.
SÖL-FEG'GIO, n. [It.] In music, the system of arranging the scale by the names do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, by which singing is taught.
SÖ/LY, in music, pl. of SOLO.
SÖ-LIC/IT, (so-lic'it), v. t. [L. sollicito; Fr. solliciter; It. sollecitare.] I know not whether this word is simple or compound; probably the latter. Qu. L. lazio.
 1. To ask with some degree of earnestness; to make petition to; to apply for obtaining something. This word implies earnestness in seeking, but I think less earnestness than beg, implore, entreat, and importune, and more than ask or request; as when we say, a man solicits the minister for an office; he solicits his father for a favor. *Did I solicit thee
 From darkness to promote me? Milton.*
 2. To ask for with some degree of earnestness; to seek by petition; as, to solicit an office; to solicit a favor.
 3. To awake or excite to action; to summon; to invite.
*That fruit solicited her longing eye.
 Sounds and some tragick quilldars solicit their proper scenes,
 And force an entrance to the mind. Locke.*
 4. To attempt; to try to obtain.
*I view my crime, but blinde at the view,
 Repeat old pleasures and solicit new. Pope.*
 5. To disturb; to disquiet; a Latinism rarely used.
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryden.
SÖ-LIC/IT-ANT, n. One who solicits.
SÖ-LIC/IT-A'TION, n. Earnest request; a seeking to obtain something from another with some degree of zeal and earnestness; sometimes, perhaps, importunity. He obtained a grant by repeated solicitations.
 2. Excitement; invitation; as, the solicitation of the senses. Locke.
SÖ-LIC/IT-ED, pp. Earnestly requested.
SÖ-LIC/IT-ING, ppr. Requesting with earnestness; asking for; attempting to obtain.
This way and that soliciting the dart. Dryden.
SÖ-LIC/IT-OR, n. [Fr. solliciteur.]
 1. One who asks with earnestness; one that asks for another. Shak.
 2. An attorney, advocate, or counselor at law, who is authorized to practice in the English court of chancery. In America, an advocate or counselor at law, who, like the attorney-general or State's attorney, prosecutes actions for the State.
SÖ-LIC/IT-OR-GEN'ER-AL, n. In Great Britain, an officer of the crown, who is associated with the attorney-general in managing the legal business of the crown and public offices. Brande.

SO-LIC'IT-IOUS, (-lis'it-us,) a. [L. sollicitus.]

1. Careful; anxious; very desirous, as to obtain something. Men are often more solicitous to obtain the favor of their king, or of the people, than of their Maker.

2. Careful; anxious; concerned; as respecting an unknown but interesting event; followed usually by about or for. We say, a man is solicitous about the fate of his petition, or about the result of the negotiation. He is solicitous for the safety of his ship.

3. Anxious; concerned; followed by for, as when something is to be obtained. Be not solicitous for the future.

SO-LIC'IT-IOUS-LY, adv. Anxiously; with care and concern. Errors in religion, or in science, are to be solicitously avoided. A wise prince solicitously promotes the prosperity of his subjects.

SO-LIC'IT-IOUS-NESS, n. Solitude.

SO-LIC'IT-RESS, n. A female who solicits or petitions.

SO-LIC'IT-UDE, n. [L. sollicitudo.]

Carefulness; concern; anxiety; uneasiness of mind occasioned by the fear of evil or the desire of good. A man feels solicitude when his friend is sick. We feel solicitude for the success of an enterprise. With what solicitude should men seek to secure future happiness!

SOL'ID, a. [*L. solidus; Fr. solide; It. and Sp. solido; from the sense of setting or pressure, and hence allied to *L. solum, Eng. sill.]

1. Hard; firm; compact; having its constituent particles so close or dense as to resist the impression or penetration of other bodies. Hence, solid bodies are not penetrable, nor are the parts movable and easily displaced, like those of fluids. Solid is opposed to fluid and liquid.

2. Not hollow; full of matter; as, a solid globe or cone, as distinguished from a hollow one.

3. Having all the geometrical dimensions; cubic; as, a solid foot contains 1728 solid inches. Archit.

[In this sense, Cubic is now generally used.]

4. Firm; compact; strong; as, a solid pier; a solid pile; a solid wall.

5. Sound; not weakly; as, a solid constitution of body. [Sound is more generally used.] Hatter.

6. Real; sound; valid; true; just; not empty or fallacious. Wise men seek solid reasons for their opinions.

7. Grave; profound; not light, trifling, or superficial.

These, wanting wit, affect gravity, and go by the name of solid men. Dryden.

8. To botany, of a fleshy, uniform, undivided substance, as a bulb or root; not spongy or hollow within, as a stem. Martyn.

A solid foot contains 1728 solid inches, weighing 1000 ounces of rain water.

Solid angle; an angle formed by three or more plane angles, which are not in the same plane, meeting in a point.

Solid problem: one which can be construed geometrically only by the intersection of a circle and a conic section, or of two conic sections. Hutton.

Solid square, in military language, is a square body of troops; a body in which the ranks and files are equal.

SOL'ID, n. A firm, compact body. In anatomy and medical science, the bones, flesh, and vessels of animal bodies are called solids, in distinction from the blood, chyle, and other fluids.

In geometry, a solid is a magnitude which has length, breadth, and thickness.

SOL'ID-DATE, v. t. [L. solido.]

To make solid or firm. [Little used.] Cowley.

SO-LID-I-FI-CATION, n. The act of making solid.

SO-LID'I-FI-ED, pp. Made solid.

SO-LID'I-FY, v. t. [L. solidus, solid, and facio, to make.]

To make solid or compact. Kirwan.

SO-LID'I-FY-ING, pp. Making solid.

SO-LID'I-TY, n. [Fr. solidité; L. soliditas.]

1. Firmness; hardness; density; compactness; that quality of bodies which resists impression and penetration; opposed to fluidity.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies moving one toward another, I call solidity. Locke.

2. Fullness of matter; opposed to hollowness.

3. Moral firmness; soundness; strength; validity; truth; certainty; as opposed to weakness or fallaciousness; as, the solidity of arguments or reasoning; the solidity of principles, truths, or opinions.

Adison. Prior.

In geometry, the solid contents of a body.

SOL'ID-LY, adv. Firmly; densely; compactly; as, the parts of a pier solidly united.

2. Firmly; truly; on firm grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end of his being in the world. Digby.

SOL'ID-NESS, n. The quality of being firm, dense, or compact; firmness; compactness; solidity; as of material bodies.

One of a tribe of mammals having a single or solid hoof on each foot; a soliped.

SOL-ID-UN'GU-LOUS, a. [L. solidus, solid, and unguis, hoof.]

Having hoofs that are whole or not cloven. A horse is an solidungulous animal. Bacon. Barrow.

SOL-I-FID'I-AN, n. [L. solus, alone, and fides, faith.]

One who maintains that faith alone, without works, is necessary to justification. Hammond.

SOL-I-FID'I-AN, a. Holding the tenets of Solifidians. Feltman.

SOL-I-FID'I-AN-ISM, n. The tenets of Solifidians.

SO-LIL'O-QUITZE, v. t. To utter a soliloquy.

SO-LIL'O-QUITZ-ING, pp. Uttering a soliloquy.

SO-LIL'O-QUY, n. [Fr. soliloque; It. and Sp. soliloquio; L. solus, alone, and loquor, to speak.]

1. A talking to one's self; a talking or discourse of a person alone, or not addressed to another person, even when others are present.

Lovri are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy. Spectator.

2. A written composition, reciting what it is supposed a person speaks to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy. Prior.

SOL'I-PED, n. [L. solus, alone, or solidus, and pes, foot. But the word is ill formed.]

An animal whose hoof is not cloven. Brown.

The solipeds constitute a group of quadrupeds with undivided hoofs, as, for example, the Linnæan genus Equus. Ed. Encyc.

SO-LIP'ED-IOUS, a. Having hoofs which are not cloven.

SOL-I-TAIRE, n. [Fr. solitaire, from L. solitarius. See SOLITARY.]

1. A person who lives in solitude; a recluse; a hermit.

2. An ornament for the neck. Shenstone.

3. A game which one person can play alone. Tricladen.

SOL-I-TA'R-I-AN, a. A hermit.

SOL-I-TA'R-I-LY, adv. [from solitarius.] In solitude; alone; without company.

Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thy heritage, that dwell solitarily in the wood. — Micah avi.

SOL-I-TA-RI-NESS, n. The state of being alone; forbearance of company; retirement, or habitual retirement.

At home, in wholesome solitariness. Donne.

2. Solitude; loneliness; destitution of company or of animated beings; applied to place; as, the solitariness of the country, or of a wood.

SOL-I-TA-RY, a. [Fr. solitaire; L. solitarius, from solus, alone.]

1. Living alone; not having company. Some of the more ferocious animals are solitary, seldom or never being found in flocks or herds. Thus the lion is called a solitary animal.

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks. Milton.

2. Retired; remote from society; not having company, or not much frequented; as, a solitary residence or place.

3. Lonely; destitute of company; as, a solitary life.

4. Gloomy; still; dismal.

Let that night be solitary; let no joyful voice come therein. — Job iii.

5. Single; as, a solitary instance of vengeance; a solitary example.

6. In botany, separate; one only in a place; as, a solitary stipule.

A solitary flower is when there is only one to each peduncle; a solitary seed, when there is only one in a pericarp. Martyn.

SOL-I-TA-RY, n. One that lives alone or in solitude; a hermit; a recluse. Pope.

SOL'I-TUDE, n. [Fr., from L. solitudo; from solus, alone.]

1. Loneliness; a state of being alone; a lonely life.

Whoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

2. Loneliness; remoteness from society; destitution of company; applied to place; as, the solitude of a wood or a valley; the solitude of the country.

The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him. Law.

3. A lonely place; a desert.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells, Where heavenly, pensive Contemplation dwells. Pope.

SO-LIV'A-GANT, a. [L. solivagus; solus, alone, and egor, to wander.]

Wandering alone. Granger.

SOLLAR, n. [Low L. solarium.]

A garret or upper room. [Not in use.] Tusser.

SOL-MI-ZA'TION, n. [from sol, mi, musical notes.]

A sol-fing; a repetition or recital of the notes of the gamut. Barnes.

SOL'O, n. [It., from L. solus, alone.]

A tune, air, or strain, to be played by a single instrument, or sung by a single voice.

SOL'O-MON'S-LEAF, n. A plant.

SOL'O-MON'S-SEAL, n. The popular name of several plants belonging to the genera Polygonatum, Smilacina, Streptopus, &c.

SOL'STICE, n. [Fr., from L. solstitium; sol, the sun, and sto, to stand; It. solstizio; Sp. solsticio.]

In astronomy, the time when the sun, in its annual revolution, arrives at that point in the ecliptic furthest north or south of the equator, or reaches its greatest northern or southern declination. When near these points, which are called the solstitial points, the sun scarcely changes its declination for several days, and hence is said to stand still, whence the name solstice. The summer solstice occurs about the 22d of June; the winter solstice about the 22d of December.

Olmsted.

SOL-STI'TIAL, (sol-stish'el,) a. Pertaining to a solstice; as, a solstitial point. Brown.

2. Happening at a solstice; usually, with us, at the summer solstice, or midsummer; as, solstitial heat. Milton.

SOL-U-BIL'I-TY, n. [from solubilis.] The quality of a body which renders it susceptible of solution; susceptibility of being dissolved in a fluid. The solubility of resins is chiefly confined to spirits or alcohol.

SOL'U-BLE, a. [L. solubilis, from solvo, to melt.]

Susceptible of being dissolved in a fluid; capable of solution. Sugar is soluble in water; salt is soluble only to a certain extent, that is, till the water is saturated.

SOL'U-BLE-NESS, n. Solubility.

SOL'US, a. [L.] Alone.

SO-LUTE, a. [L. solutus, solvo.]

2. In a general sense, loose; free; as, a solute interpretation. [Not in use.] Bacon.

3. In botany, loose; not adhering; opposed to Ad-nate; as, a solute stipule. Martyn.

SO-LUTE, v. t. To dissolve. [Not in use.] Bacon.

SO-LUTION, n. [Fr.; It. soluzione; Sp. solution; from L. solutio, from solvo, to loosen, melt, dissolve. See SOLVE.]

1. The act of separating the parts of any body; disruption; breach.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union and evulsion of solution of continuity. Bacon.

2. A feeble combination, in which, with a mere mechanical change of properties, and without regard to definite proportions, one or more solids are equally diffused through some liquid. This mode of combination is so weak, that the liquid may be evaporated from the solid or solids, leaving them unchanged except in texture or aggregation. There is usually, and probably always, a limit to the quantity of the solid or solids which can be dissolved by a given liquid, and this is called saturation. The liquid in which the solution is effected is called the solvent or menstruum.

Note.—This word is not used, in chemistry or mineralogy, for the melting of bodies by the heat of fire.

The term solution is applied to a very extensive class of phenomena. When a solid disappears in a liquid, if the compound exhibits perfect transparency, we have an example of solution. The word is applied both to the act of combination and to the result of the process. Thus common salt disappears in water, that is, its solution takes place, and the liquid obtained is called a solution of salt in water. Solution is the result of attraction, or affinity, between the fluid and the solid. This affinity continues to operate to a certain point, where it is overbalanced by the cohesion of the solid; it then ceases, the fluid is said to be saturated, the point where the operation ceases is called saturation, and the fluid is called a saturated solution.

Solution is a true chemical union. Mixture is a mere mechanical union of bodies.

3. Resolution; explanation; the act of explaining or removing difficulty or doubt; as, the solution of a difficult question in morality; the solution of a doubt in casuistry.

4. Release; deliverance; discharge. Barrow.

5. In algebra and geometry, the answering of a question, or the resolving of a problem proposed.

Solution of continuity: the separation of connection, or connected substances or parts; applied, in surgery, to a fracture, laceration, &c.

SOL'U-TIVE, a. Tending to dissolve; loosening; laxative. Encyc.

SOLVA-BIL'I-TY, n. Ability to pay all just debts. Encyc.

SOLVA-BLE, a. That may be solved, resolved, or explained.

2. That can be paid. Tooke.

SOLVA-BLE-NESS, n. Solvability.

SOLVE, v. t. [L. solvo; Fr. soudre; It. solvere. Class SI. Several roots give the sense.]

1. Properly, to loosen or separate the parts of any thing; hence, to explain; to resolve; to elucidate; to unfold; to clear up, as what is obscure, or difficult to be understood; as, to solve questions; to solve difficulties or a problem.

When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate. Tickel.

2. To remove; to dissipate; as, to solve doubts.

SOLV'ED, pp. Explained; resolved.

SOLV'EN-CV, n. [L. solvens.]
Ability to pay all debts or just claims; as, the solvency of a merchant is undoubted. The credit of a nation's notes depends on a favorable opinion of its solvency.

SOLV'END, n. A substance to be dissolved. Kirwan.

SOLV'ENT, a. Having the power of dissolving; as, a solvent body. Boyle.
2. Able to pay all just debts. The merchant is solvent.
3. Sufficient to pay all just debts. The estate is solvent.

SOLV'ENT, n. A fluid that dissolves any substance is called the solvent, or menstruum.

SOLV'ER, n. One who solves or explains.

SOLV'IBLE, a. Solvable, which see.

SO-MAT'IC, a. [Gr. σωματικός, from σωμα, SO-MAT'IC-AL, a. body.]
Corporeal; pertaining to a body. [Not in use.]

SŌ'MA-TIST, n. [Supra.] One who admits the existence of corporeal or material beings only; one who denies the existence of spiritual substances. Glanville.

SO-MA-TOL'O-GY, n. [Gr. σωμα, body, and λογος, discourse.]
The doctrine of bodies or material substances.

SOM'BER, a. [Fr. sombre, from Sp. sombra, a SOM'BRE, a shade.]
Dull; dusky; cloudy; gloomy.

SOM'BER-NESS, n. Darkness; gloominess.

SOM'BRE-NESS, n. Darkness; gloominess. Stephens.

SOM'BROUS, a. Gloomy.

SOM'BROUS-LY, adv. Gloomily.

SOM'BROUS-NESS, n. State of being sombrous.

SOME, (sum), a. [Sax. sum, same; D. sommige; Sw. somliga; Sv. and Dan. som, who.]
1. Noting a certain quantity of a thing, but indeterminate; a portion greater or less. Give me some bread; drink some wine; bring some water.
2. Noting a number of persons or things, greater or less, but indeterminate.
Some theoretical writers allege that there was a time when there was no such thing as society. Blackstone.
3. Noting a person or thing, but not known, or not specific and definite. Some person, I know not who, gave me the information. Enter the city, and some men will direct you to the house.
Most gentlemen of property, at some period or other of their lives, are ambitious of representing their county in parliament. Blackstone.
4. Noting indeterminately that a thing is not very great; moderate; as, the censure was to some extent just.
5. It sometimes precedes a word of number or quantity, with the sense of about or near, noting want of certainty as to the specific number or amount, but something near it; as, a village of some eighty houses; some two or three persons; some seventy miles distant; an object at some good distance. Bacon.
6. Some is often opposed to others. Some men believe one thing, and others another.
7. Some is often used without a noun, and then, like other adjectives, is a substitute for a noun. We consumed some of our provisions, and the rest was given to the poor.
Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods. Daniel.
Your edicts some reclaim from sin,
But most your life and best example win. Dryden.
8. Some is used as a termination of certain adjectives, as in humble, modest, dithesome, fulsome, lonesome, gladsome, gonesome. In these words, some has primarily the sense of little, or a certain degree; a little dithe or glad. But in usage, it rather indicates a considerable degree of the thing or quantity; as, unflesome, full of mettle of spirit; gladsome, very glad or joyous.

SOME'BODY, (sum'-), n. [some and body.] A person unknown or uncertain; a person indeterminate.
Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me. — Luke vii.
We must draw in somebody that may stand
'Twixt us and danger. Denham.

SOM'ER-SALT, (sum'er-), n. [Sp. sobre-salir, to leap over; sobre-saltar, to surprise; It. soprassalire, to attack unexpectedly; soprassalto, an overleap; L. super and salio, to leap.]
A leap in which a person turns with his heels over his head, and lights upon his feet. Donne.

SOM'ER-VILL'ITE, n. A Venetian mineral, occurring in pale, dull, yellow crystals, and related to Gehlenite. Dana.

SOMETHING, (sum'-), n. [some and thing.] An indeterminate or unknown event. Something must have happened to prevent the arrival of our friends at the time fixed. I shall call at two o'clock, unless something should prevent. [See THING.]

2. A substance or material thing, unknown, indeterminate, or not specified. A machine stops because something obstructs its motion; there must be something to support a wall or an arch.
3. A part; a portion more or less.
Something yet of doubt remains. Milton.
Still from his little he could something spare,
'To feed the hungry and to clothe the bare. Hart.
Something it arises from our infant state. Watts.

4. A little; an indefinite quantity or degree. The man asked me for a dollar, but I gave him something.
5. Distance not great.
It must be done to-night, and something from the palace. Shak.

6. Something has been used adverbially in some degree; as, he was something discouraged; but the use is not elegant. Temple.

SOME'TIME, (sum'-), adv. Once; formerly.
That fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did some time march. Shak.

2. At one time or other hereafter.
[Some time is really a compound noun, and at is understood before it; at some time.]

SOME'TIMES, adv. At times; at intervals; not always; now and then. We are sometimes indisposed, sometimes occupied, sometimes at leisure; that is, at some times.
It is good that we be sometimes contradicted. Taylor.

 These men have obscured and confounded the nature of things by their false principles and wretched sophistry. South.
SOPH'O-MORE, n. One belonging to the second of the four classes in an American college.

[This word has generally been considered as an "American barbarism," but was probably introduced into our country, at a very early period, from the university of Cambridge, England. Among the cant terms at that university, as given in the Gradus ad Cantabrigiam, we find Soph-Mor as "the next distinctive appellation to Freshman." It is added, that "a writer in the Gentleman's Magazine thinks mor an abbreviation of the Greek μορφην, introduced at a time when the Encomium Moria, the Praise of Folly, by Erasmus, was so generally used." The ordinary derivation of the word, from σοφός and μορδος, would seem, therefore, to be incorrect. The younger Sophists at Cambridge appear, formerly, to have received the adjunct mor (μορδος) to their names, either as one which they counted for the reason mentioned above, or as one given them in sport, for the supposed exhibition of inflated feeling in entering on their new honors. The term, thus applied, seems to have passed, at a very early period, from Cambridge in England to Cambridge in America, as "the next distinctive appellation to Freshman," and thus to have been attached to the second of the four classes in our American colleges; while it has now almost ceased to be known, even as a cant word, at the parent institution in England, from whence it came. This derivation of the word is rendered more probable by the fact, that the early spelling was, to a great extent at least, Sophimore, as appears from the manuscripts of President Stiles, of Yale College, and the records of Harvard College down to the period of the American revolution. This would be perfectly natural, if Soph or Sophister was considered as the basis of the word, but can hardly be explained if the ordinary derivation had then been regarded as the true one. — Ed.]

SÖUND, n. [Sax. sund, a narrow sea or strait, a swimming; Sw. and Dan. sund; Pers. شَنَّا shana, a swimming, L. natalis. Qu. can this name be given to a narrow sea, because wild beasts were accustomed to pass it by swimming, like Bosporus; or is the word from the root of sound, whole, denoting a stretch, or narrowness, from stretching, like straight; or from its sounding?]
 A narrow passage of water, or a strait between the main land and an isle; or a strait connecting two seas, or connecting a sea or lake with the ocean; as, the sound which connects the Baltic with the ocean, between Denmark and Sweden; the sound that separates Long Island from the main land of New York and Connecticut.
SÖUND, n. [Fr. sonde; Sp. sonda. See the following verb.]
 An instrument which surgeons introduce into the bladder, in order to discover whether there is a stone in that viscous or not. — Cooper. Sharp.
SÖUND, v. t. [Sp. sondar or sondear; Fr. sonder. This word is probably connected with the L. sonus, Eng. sound, the primary sense of which is, to stretch, or reach.]
1. To try, as the depth of water and the quality of the ground, by sinking a plummet or lead attached to a line on which are marked the number of fathoms, to ascertain the depth of water. The lower end of the lead is covered with tallow; by means of which some portion of the earth, sand, gravel, shells, &c., of the bottom, adhere to it, and are drawn up. By these means, and the depth of water, and the nature of the bottom, which are carefully marked on good charts, seamen may know how far a ship is from land in the night, or in thick weather, and in many cases when the land is too remote to be visible.

2. To introduce a sound into the bladder of a patient, in order to ascertain whether a stone is there or not.
 When a patient is to be sounded. Cooper.
3. To try; to examine; to discover, or endeavor to discover, that which lies concealed in another's breast; to search out the intention, opinion, will, or desires.

1. Noise; report; the object of hearing; that which strikes the ear; or, more philosophically, an impression, or the effect of an impression, made on the organs of hearing by an impulse or vibration of the air caused by a collision of bodies, or by other means; as, the sound of a trumpet or drum; the sound of the human voice; a horrid sound; a charming sound; a sharp sound; a high sound.
2. A vibration of air caused by a collision of bodies, or other means, sufficient to affect the auditory nerves when perfect. Some persons are so entirely deaf that they can not hear the loudest sounds. Audible sounds are such as are perceptible by the organs of hearing. Sounds, not audible to men, may be audible to animals of more sensible organs.
3. Noise without signification; empty noise; noise and nothing else.
 It is the sense, and not the sound, that must be the principle. Locke.
SÖUND, v. i. To make a noise; to utter a voice; to make an impulse of the air that shall strike the organs of hearing with a particular effect. We say, an instrument sounds well or ill; it sounds shrill; the voice sounds harsh.
 And first taught speaking trumpets how to sound. Dryden.
2. To exhibit by sound, or likeness of sound. This relation sounds rather like a fiction than a truth.
3. To be conveyed in sound; to be spread or published.
 From you sounded out the word of the Lord. — 1 Thes. i.
To sound in damages, in law, is when there is no specific value of property in demand to serve as a rule of damages, as in actions of tort or trespass, as distinguished from actions of debt, &c. Ellsworth.

SPE'CIÉS, (speesh'éz), n. [L., from specio, to see. See SPECIAL.]

1. In scientific classification, a group of such individuals as have an essential identity in all qualities proceeding from their ultimate constitution or nature.

In zoology and botany, all individuals that are precisely alike in every character not capable of change by any accidental circumstances, and capable of uniform, invariable, and permanent continuance by natural propagation.

All changes produced by accidental causes, in individuals of a species, and which are not capable of uniform, invariable, and permanent continuance by natural propagation, indicate and mark what are called VARIETIES.

There are as many species as there are different invariable forms or structures of vegetables.
Mortyn.

2. In logic, a special idea, corresponding to the specific distinctions of things in nature.
Watts.

3. Sort; kind; in a loose sense; as, a species of low cunning in the world; a species of generosity; a species of cloth.

4. Appearance to the senses; visible or sensible representation.

As apparent diversity between the species visible and audible, is that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth.
Bacon.

The species of letters illuminated with indigo and violet. [Little used.]
Newton.

5. Representation to the mind.

Wisdom—the faculty of imagination in the water, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. [Little used.]
Dryden.

6 Show; and species exhibition.

Shows and species serve best with the common people. [Not in Bacon.]

7. Coin, or coined silver and gold, used as a circulating medium; as, the current species of Europe. Arbuthnot.

In modern practice, this word is contracted into SPECIE. What quantity of specie has the bank in its vault? What is the amount of all the current specie in the country? What is the value in specie of a bill of exchange? We receive payment for goods in specie, not in bank notes.

8. In pharmacy, a simple; a component part of a compound medicine. Johnson. Quincy.

9. The old pharmaceutical term for powders. Parr. SPE-CIF'IC, } a. [Fr. specifique; It. specifico.]

1. That makes a thing of the species of which it is; designating the peculiar property or properties of a thing, which constitute its species, and distinguish it from other things. Thus we say, the specific form of an animal or a plant; the specific form of a cube or square; the specific qualities of a plant or a drug; the specific difference between an acid and an alkali; the specific distinction between virtue and vice.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another. Watts.

2. That specifies or particularizes; as, a specific statement.

3. In medicine, curing disease upon some principle peculiar to the supposed specific, a principle not common to two or more remedies; or infallibly curing all cases of certain diseases, to which the specific is deemed appropriate.

Specific character; in botany, a circumstance or circumstances distinguishing one species from every other species of the same genus. Martyn.

Specific gravity; in philosophy, the weight that belongs to an equal bulk of each body. [See GAU-17V.]

Specific name, in botany, is the triviale name, as distinguished from the generic name. Martyn.

Specific name is now used for the name which, appended to the name of the genus, constitutes the distinctive name of the species; but it was originally applied by Linnaeus to the essential character of the species, or the essential difference. The present specific name be at first called the triviale name. Smith.

SPE-CIF'IC, n. In medicine, a remedy that cures diseases upon some principle peculiar to itself, and not common to any two or more remedies.

2. A remedy which infallibly cures all cases of certain diseases, to which it is deemed appropriate. No such thing as a specific, in either of these senses, exists.

SPE-CIF'IC-AL-LY, adv. In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species. A body is specifically lighter than another, when it has less weight in the same bulk than the other.

Human reason—differs specifically from the fantastic reason of brutes. Gray.

Those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of duty. South.

2. Definitely; particularly.

SPECTRE, } specto, to behold.]

1. An apparition; the appearance of a person who is dead; a ghost.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend, With bold fanatic specters to rejoice. Dryden.

2. Something made preternaturally visible.

SPECTER-PEO-LED, } a. Peopled with

SPECTRE-PEO-LED, } (-pé'pld,) } ghosts. Bowring.

SPECTRAL, a. Pertaining to a spectre; ghostly.

SPECTRUM, n. [L.] A visible form; an image of something seen, continuing after the eyes are closed, covered, or turned away. This is called an OCULAR SPECTRUM. Darwin.

2. The elongated figure, formed in a dark chamber, of the seven prismatic colors, into which a beam of the sun's light is decomposed, by admitting it through an opening in the window-shutter, and letting it fall on a prism. Olmsted.

SPEC'U-LAR, a. [L. specularis, from speculum, a mirror, from specio, to see.]

1. Having the qualities of a speculum or mirror; having a smooth, reflecting surface; as, a specular metal; a specular surface. Arcton.

2. Assisting sight. [Improper, and not used.] Phillips.

3. Affording view. Specular iron; an ore of iron occurring frequently in crystals of a brilliant metallic luster; the protoxyd of iron; also called oligist iron or rhombohedral iron ore. Dana.

SPEC'U-LATE, v. i. [L. speculari, to view, to contemplate, from specio, to see; Fr. speculer; It. speculare.]

1. To meditate; to contemplate; to consider a subject by turning it in the mind and viewing it in its different aspects and relations; as, to speculate on political events; to speculate on the probable results of a discovery. Addison.

2. In commerce, to purchase land, goods, stock, or other things, with the expectation of an advance in price, and of selling the articles with a profit by means of such advance; as, to speculate in coffee, or in sugar, or in six per cent. stock, or in bank stock.

SPEC'U-LATE, v. t. To consider attentively; as, to speculate the nature of a thing. [Not in use.] Brown.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep I turned my thoughts. Milton.

3. Train of thoughts formed by meditation. From him Socrates derived the principles of morality and most part of his natural speculations. Temple.

4. Mental scheme; theory; views of a subject not verified by fact or practice. This globe, which was formerly round only in speculation, has been circumnavigated. The application of steam to navigation is no longer a matter of mere speculation. Speculations which originate la guilt, must end in ruin. R. Hall.

5. Power of sight. Thou hast no speculation in those eyes. [Not in use.] Shak.

In commerce, the act or practice of buying land or goods, &c., in expectation of a rise of price and of selling them at an advance, as distinguished from a regular trade, in which the profit expected is the difference between the retail and wholesale prices, or the difference of price in the place where the goods are purchased and the place to which they are to be carried for market. In England, France, and America, public stock is the subject of continual speculation. In the United States, a few men have been enriched, but many have been ruined, by speculation.

SPEC'U-LA-TIST, n. One who speculates or forms theories; a speculator. Milner.

SPEC'U-LA-TIVE, a. [Fr. speculatif; It. speculativo.]

1. Given to speculation; contemplative; applied to persons. The mind of man being by nature speculative. Hooker.

2. Formed by speculation; theoretical; ideal; not verified by fact, experiment, or practice; as, a scheme merely speculative.

3. Pertaining to view; also, prying. Bacon.

4. Pertaining to speculation in land, goods, &c.

SPEC'U-LA-TIVE-LY, adv. In contemplation; with meditation.

2. Ideally; theoretically; in theory only, not in practice. Propositions seem often to be speculatively true, which experience does not verify.

3. In the way of speculation in lands, goods, &c.

2. Intended or adapted for viewing or spying. Warton

SPEC'U-LUM, n. [L; G. and D. spiegel; Sw. spegel; Dnn. spejl.]

1. A mirror or looking-glass.

2. A mirror employed in optical instruments, in which the reflecting surface is formed of a metallic alloy, instead of glass coated with quicksilver.

3. In surgery, an instrument for dilating and keeping open certain parts of the body SPELT, pret. and pp. of SPEER.

SPEECH, n. [Sax. spec. See SPEAK.] 1. The faculty of uttering articulate sounds or words, as in human beings; the faculty of expressing thoughts by words or articulate sounds. Speech was given to man by his Creator for the noblest purposes.

2. Language; words as expressing ideas. The acts of God to human ears Can not without process of speech be told. Milton.

3. A particular language, as distinct from others. Ps. xix.

4. That which is spoken; words uttered in connection and expressing thoughts. You smile at my 5. Talk; mention; or common saying. [speech.]

6. Formal discourse in public; oration; harangue. The member has made his first speech in the legislature.

7. Any declaration of thoughts. I, with leave of speech implored, replied. Milton.

SPEECH, v. i. To make a speech; to harangue. [Little used.]

SPEECH'Y, a. [Sax. spec. See SPEAK.] Harangued. SPEECH'Y-ER, v. i. To make a speech; to harangue. The noun speechification is sometimes used, but like speechify, rather as a term of sport or derision.

SPEECH'Y-ING, ppr. Haranguing. SPEECH'ING, n. The act of making a speech.

SPEECH'LESS, a. Destitute or deprived of this faculty of speech. More generally, 2. Mute; silent; not speaking for a time. Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear. Addison.

SPEECH'LESS-NESS, n. The state of being speechless; muteness. Bacon.

SPEECH-MAK-ER, n. One who makes speeches; one who speaks much in a public assembly.

SPEED, v. t.; pret. and pp. SPOO, SPOOED. [Sax. spedan, spedan; D. spooden; G. spodiren, to send; Gr. σπεύω. The L. spediō may be from the same root, which signifies to drive, to hurry, of the family of L. peto. Class Bd.]

1. To make haste; to move with celerity. Shak. 2. To have success; to prosper; to succeed; that is, to advance in one's enterprise.

He that's once denied will hardly speed. Shak. Those that profaned and abused the second temple, sped no better. South.

3. To have any condition, good or ill; to fare. Ships hitherfore in seas like fishes sped; The mightiest still upon the smallest feel. Waller.

SPEED, v. t. To dispatch; to send away in haste. He sped him thence home to his habitation. Fairfax.

5. To prosper; to chance to succeed. May Heaven speed this undertaking.

6. To furnish in haste.

7. To dispatch; to kill; to ruin; to destroy. With a speeding thrust his heart he found. Dryden. A three dilemma; either way I'm sped! If foes, they write, it friends, they read me dead. Pope.

Note.—In the phrase "God speed," there is probably a gross mistake in considering it as equivalent to "may God give you success." The true phrase is probably "good speed;" good, in Saxon, being written god. I hid you or wish you good speed, that is, good success.

SPEED, n. Swiftness; quickness; celerity; applied to animals. We say, a man or a horse runs or travels with speed; a fowl flies with speed. We speak of the speed of a fish in the water, but we do not speak of the speed of a river, or of wind, or of a falling body. I think, however, I have seen the word applied to the lapse of time and the motion of lightning, but in poetry only.

2. Haste; dispatch; as, to perform a journey with speed; to execute an order with speed.

3. Rapid pace; as, a horse of speed. We say, also, high speed, full speed.

4. Success; prosperity in an undertaking; favorable issue; that is, advance to the desired end.

O Lord God of my masters Abraham, I pray thee, send me good speed this day.—Gen. xxi.

This use is retained in the proverb, "to make more haste than good speed," and in the scriptural phrase, "to bid one good speed," [not God speed, as erroneously written.]

SPEED'FUL, a. Full of speed; hasty. SPEED'Y-LY, adv. Quickly; with haste; in a short time.

SPEED'Y-NESS, n. The quality of being speedy; quickness; celerity; haste; dispatch.

SPEED'WELL, n. A plant of the genus Veronica, one species of which has been much recommended in Sweden and Germany as a substitute for tea.

SPEED'Y, a. Quick; swift; nimble; hasty; rapid in motion; as, a speedy flight; on speedy foot. Shak.

2. Quick in performance; not dilatory or slow; as, a speedy dispatch of business.

SPEER, v. t. See SPEER. SPEET, v. t. [G. speten, from the root of spit.] To stab. [Not in use.]

SPEIGHT, (spät), n. A woodpecker. [Not in use, or local.]

SPEISS, (spise), n. The mineral copper nickel, consisting of nickel and arsenic. Ure.

SPELK, n. [Sax. spelc.] A splinter; a small stick or rod used in thatching. [Local.]

SPELL, n. [Sax. spel or spell, a story, narration, fable, speech, saying, fame, report, sudden rumor, or magic charm or song. Hence gospel, Sax. god-spell. In G. spiel is play, sport; spielen, to play. D. speelen, Sw. spela, Dan. spillen. But this is a different application of the same action. The verb primarily signifies to throw or drive, and is probably formed on the root of L. pello, Gr. βάλλω. (See PEAL and ASSEAL, and Class B, No. 1, Eth.) In some of the applications of spell, we observe the sense of turn. We observe the same in throvo, warp, cant, &c.]

1. A story; a tale [Obs.] Chaucer. 2. A charm consisting of some words of occult power.

Start not; her actions shall be holy; You hear my spell is lawful. Shak. Begin, begin, the mystic spell prepare. Milton.

3. Among seamen, a turn of work; relief; turn of duty; as, take a spell at the pump.

4. In New England, a short time; a little time; the continuance of any kind of weather. [Used among seamen; not elegant.] New England.

Their toil is so extreme, that they can not endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells. Carew.

Cockram.

STAC-CATO, [It.] In music, denoting a short, distinct, articulate style; the opposite to LEATO.

STACK, n. [W. ystac, a stack; ystaca, a standard, from täg, a state of being stuffed; Dan. stok, a pile of hay; Sw. stack; Ir. stacadh. It signifies that which is set, and coincides with Sax. etac, D. staak, a stake. Stack, staz, staze, are of the same family, or at least have the same radical sense.]

1. A large, conical pile of hay, grain, or straw, sometimes covered with thatch. In America, this stack differs from the cock only in size, both being conical. A long pile of hay or grain is called a rick. In England, this distinction is not always observed. This word, in Great Britain, is sometimes applied to a pile of wood containing 438 cubic feet, and also to a pile of poles; but I believe never in America.

Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height.
Bacon.

2. A number of funnels or chimneys standing together. We say, a stack of chimneys; which is correct, as a chimney is a passage. But we also call the whole stack a chimney. Thus we say, the chimney rises ten feet above the roof.

A stack of arms, is a number of muskets set up together, with the bayonets crossing one another, forming a sort of conical pile.

STACK, v. l. To lay in a conical or other pile; to make into a large pile; as, to stack hay or grain.

2. In England, to pile wood, poles, &c.
To stack arms; to set up muskets together, with the bayonets crossing one another, and forming a sort of conical pile.

STALK, (stawk), v. t. [*Sw. stielk; D. steel; G. stiel, a handle, and a stalk or stem; Sax. stalc, a column; Gr. στέλακος; from the root of stall and G. stellen, to set.]*

1. The stem or main axis of a plant. Thus we speak of a stalk of wheat, rye, or oats, the stalks of maize or hemp. The stalk denotes that which is set, the fixed part of a plant, its support; or it is a shoot.

2. The pedicle of a flower, or the peduncle that supports the fructification of a plant. Grew.

3. The stem of a quill.

STALK, (stawk), v. i. [*Sax. stalcian.*]

1. To walk with high and proud steps; usually implying the affectation of dignity, and hence the word usually expresses dislike. The poets, however, use the word to express dignity of step.

With many men he stalked along the ground. Dryden.

2. It is used with some insinuation of contempt or abhorrence.

He forls the ocean. Abiloon.

3. To walk behind a stalking horse or behind a cover.

The king crept under the shoulder of his led horse, and said, I must stalk. Bacon.

STALK, n. A high, proud, stately step, or walk.

Stalks close behind her, like a witch's fiend, Pressing to be employed. Dryden.

2. To walk behind a stalking horse or behind a cover.

STALK/LESS, a. Having no stalk.

STALK/Y, (stawk'ye), a. Hard as a stalk; resembling a stalk. Mortimer.

STALL, (stawl), n. [*Sax. stal, stal, stall, a place, a seat, or station, a stable, stute, condition; D. stal; G. stall, a stable, a eye; Dan. stald; Sw. stall; Fr. stalle and etal; It. stalla; W. ystal; from the root of G. stellen, to set, that is, to throw down, to thrust down; Sans. stala, a place. See STALL.]*

1. Primarily, a stand; a station; a fixed spot; hence, the stand or place where a horse or an ox is kept and fed; the division of a stable, or the apartment for one horse or ox. The stable contains eight or ten stalls.

2. A stable; a place for cattle. Dryden.

At last he found a stall where oxen stood. Dryden.

3. In 1 Kings iv. 26, stall is used for horse. "Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots." In 2 Chron. ix. 25, stall means stable. "Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots." These passages are reconciled by the definition given above; Solomon had four thousand stables, each containing ten stalls; forty thousand stalls.

4. A bench, form, or frame of shelves in the open air, where any thing is exposed to sale. It is curious to observe the stalls of books in the boulevards and other public places in Paris.

5. A small house or shed in which an occupation is carried on; as, a butcher's stall. Spenser.

STANCH'LESS, a. That can not be stanch'd or stopped. Shak.

STANCH'NESS, n. Soundness; firmness in principle; closeness of adherence.

STAND, v. i.; pret. and pp. STOOD. [Sax. standan; Goth. standan. This verb, if from the root of G. stehen, D. staen, Dan. støer, Sw. stå, Sna. sta, L. sto, is a derivative from the noun, which is formed from the participle of the original verb. In this case, the noun should properly precede the verb. It may be here remarked, that if stan is the radical word, stand and sto can not be from the same stock. But stand in the pret. is stood, and sto forms steti. This induces a suspicion that stare is not the root of stand, but that n is casual. I am inclined, however, to believe these words to be from different roots. The Russ. stoyti, to stand, is the L. sto, but it signifies also to be, to exist, being the substantive verb. So in It. stare, Sp. and Port. estar.]

1. To be upon the feet, as an animal; not to sit, kneel, or lie.

The absolution to be pronounced by the priest alone, standing. Com. Prayer.

STAN'ZA, n. [It. stanza, an abode or lodging, a stanza, that is, a stop; Sp. and Port. estanca, from estancar, to stop; Fr. stance. See STANCH.] 1. In poetry, a number of lines or verses connected with each other, and ending in a full point or pause; a part of a poem, ordinarily containing every variation of measure in that poem. A stanza may contain verses of a different length or number of syllables, and a different number of verses; or it may consist of verses of equal length. Stanzas are said to have been first introduced from the Italian into French poetry about the year 1530, and thence they were introduced into England. The versions of the Psalms present examples of various kinds of stanzas.

Horace confines himself to one sort of verse or stanza in every ode. Dryden.

2. In architecture, an apartment or division in a building.

STAN'ZÁ'IC, a. Consisting in stanzas.

STAPH'Y-LINE, (staf'-) a. [Gr. σταφυλη, a bunch of grapes.] In mineralogy, having the form of a bunch of grapes; botryoidal. Shepard.

STAPH'Y-LÓ'MA, n. [Gr. σταφυλη, a grape, and ωμα, a termination in nosology denoting external protuberance.]

The name of a disease of the eye, characterized by enlargement of the eyeball, protuberance of the cornea, and dimness or entire abolition of sight. Nosologists reckon three varieties of this disease: 1, with a preternatural quantity of some one or more of the humors, the pupil being transparent, sometimes called HYDROPHTHALMIA; 2, with an effusion of pus, the pupil being cloudy, sometimes called ONCH; and 3, with a rupture of the iris, and its protrusion against the cornea, constituting a grape-like tumor, the sight being destroyed, sometimes called HYDROPIUM. J. M. Good.

STAPH'Y-LOR'A-PHY, (staf-e-lor'a-fe) n. [Gr. σταφυλη and ρσφη, a suture, from ρσφω.] A surgical suture of the palate, for the purpose of uniting the edges of a fissure.

STÁ'PLE, (stá'pl) n. [Sax. stapel, stapul, a stake; D. stapel, a pile, stocks, staple; stapelen, to pile; G. stapel, a stake, a pile or heap, a staple, stocks, a mart; Sw. stapel; Dan. stapel, a staple; stapler, to pile; staple, a block or log; stab, a staff. We see this word in from the root of staff. The primary sense of the root is, to set, to fix. Staple is that which is fixed, or a fixed place, or it is a pile or store.]

1. A settled mart or market; an emporium. In England, formerly, the king's staple was established in certain ports or towns, and certain goods could not be exported, without being first brought to these ports, to be rated and charged with the duty payable to the king or public. The principal commodities on which customs were levied, were wool, skins, and leather, and these were originally the staple commodities. Hence, the words staple commodities came in time to signify the principal commodities produced by a country for exportation or use. Thus, cotton is the staple commodity of South Carolina, Georgia, and other Southern States of America. Wheat is the staple of Pennsylvania and New York.

2. A city or town where merchants agree to carry certain commodities.

3. A principal commodity or production of a country or district.

4. The thread or pile of wool, cotton, or flax. Thus we say, this is wool of a coarse staple, or fine staple. In America, cotton is of a short staple, long staple, fine staple, &c. The cotton of short staple is raised on the upland; the sea-island cotton is of a fine, long staple.

5. Figuratively, the material or substance of a thing; as, the staple of a literary production.

6. [W. ystapfel.] A loop of iron, or a bar or wire bent and formed with two points, to be driven into wood, to hold a hook, pin, &c. Pope.

Staple of land; the particular nature and quality of land.

STÁ'PLE, a. Settled; established in commerce; as, a staple trade.

2. According to the laws of commerce; marketable; fit to be sold. [Not much used.] Swift.

3. Chief; principal; regularly produced or made for market; as, staple commodities.

[This is now the most general acceptance of the word.]

STÁ'PLER, n. A dealer; as, a wool stapler.

STAR, n. [Sax. steorra; Dan. and Sw. sterna; G. stera; D. star; Arin. and Corn. steren; Bnsque, zara; Gr. στερη; Sans. tara; Bengal, stara; Pehlavi, setaram; Pers. setareh or stara; W. seren.] 1. An apparently small, luminous body in the heavens, that shines in the night, or when its light is not obscured by clouds, or lost in the brighter effluence of the sun. Stars are fixed or planetary. The fixed stars are known by their perpetual twinkling, and by their being always in the same position in relation to each other. The planets, or wandering stars, do not twinkle, and they revolve about the sun. The fixed stars are considered by astronomers to be suns, and their immense numbers exhibit the astonishing extent of creation and of divine power.

2. The pole-star. A bright star in the tail of Ursa Minor, so called from its being very near the north pole. [A particular application, not in use.] Shak.

3. In astrology, a configuration of the planets, supposed to influence fortune. Hence the expression, "You may thank your stars for such and such an event."

A pair of star-crossed lovers. Shak.

4. The figure of a star; a radiated mark in writing or printing; an asterisk; thus *; used as a reference to a note in the margin, or to fill a blank, in writing or printing, where letters are omitted.

5. In Scripture, Christ is called the bright and morning star, the star that ushers in the light of an eternal day to his people. Rev. xxii.

Ministers are also called stars in Christ's right hand, as, being supported and directed by Christ, they convey light and knowledge to the followers of Christ. Rev. i.

The twelve stars which form the crown of the church, are the twelve apostles. Rev. xii.

6. A person of brilliant and attractive qualities on some public occasion; a theatrical performer, &c.

7. The figure of a star; a badge of rank; as, stars and garters.

STARCH, n. [Sax. starc, rigid, stiff; G. stark, strength, starch, stark, strong; D. stark, Dan. stark, Sw. stark, strong. See STARK and STERR.]

A substance used to stiffen linen and other cloth. It is the farina or fecula of various vegetables, a substance which is a white solid with no smell, and with very little taste, and which, when squeezed between the fingers, gives a very peculiar sound. It is insoluble in cold water, but with boiling water it forms a jelly very nearly transparent. Iodine forms, with starch, a blue compound, and hence is the best test of its presence. Starch forms the greatest portion of all farinaceous substances, particularly of wheat flour, and it is the chief ingredient of bread.

STARCH, a. Stiff; precise; rigid. Killingbeck.

STAT PRO RĀ-TI-Ō-NE VO-LUNTAS, (rā-she-ō-ne.) [L.] The will stands for reason.

STATATA-RY, a. [from state.] Fixed; settled. [Not in use.]

STATE, n. [L. status, from sto, to stand, to be fixed; It. stato; Sp. estado; Fr. état. Hence G. stat, fixed; stätt, place, abode, stead; staat, state; stadt, a town or city; D. staat, condition, state; stad, a city, Dan. and Sw. stad; Sans. stādāka, to stand; Pers. istāden, id. State is fixedness or standing.]

1. Condition; the circumstances of a being or thing at any given time. These circumstances may be internal, constitutional, or peculiar to the being, or they may have relation to other beings. We say, the body is in a sound state, or it is in a weak state; or it has just recovered from a feeble state. The state of his health is good. The state of his mind is favorable for study. So we say, the state of public affairs calls for the exercise of talents and wisdom. In regard to foreign nations, our affairs are in a good state. So we say, single state, and married state.

Declare the past and present state of things. Dryden.

2. Modification of any thing.

4. Estate; possession. [Obs.] [See ESTATE.]

5. A political body, or body politic; the whole body of people united under one government, whatever may be the form of the government.

Municipal law is a rule of conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. Blackstone.

More usually the word signifies a political body governed by representatives; a commonwealth; as, the states of Greece; the States of America.

In this sense, state has sometimes more immediate reference to the government, sometimes to the people or community. Thus, when we say, the state has made provision for the paupers, the word has reference to the government or legislature; but when we say, the state is taxed to support paupers, the word refers to the whole people or community.

6. Any body of men united by profession, or constituting a community of a particular character; as, the civil and ecclesiastical states in Great Britain. But these are sometimes distinguished by the terms church and state. In this case, state signifies the civil community or government only.

7. Rank; condition; quality; as, the state of honor. Shak.

8. Pomp; appearance of greatness.

In state the monarchs marched. Dryden.

Where least of state, there most of love is shown. Dryden.

STAY, v. i. To be fixed or set. [Not in use, or local.]

STAY, v. i. & pret. STAYD, for STAYED. [Fr. stadam; Sp. estay, a stay of a ship; estada, stay, a remaining; estiar, to stop; Port. estada, abode; estates, stays of a ship; estear, to stay, to prop; W. ystad, state; ystath, to stay or remain; Fr. etai, clavier; D. stat, staten. This word seems to be connected with state, and if so, is a derivative from the root of L. sta, to stand. But from the orthography of this word in the Irish, Spanish, and Portuguese, and of steli, the preterit of sta, in Latin, I am led to believe, the elementary word was stad or stat. The sense is, to act, stop, or hold. It is to be observed further, that stay may be easily deduced from the G. and D. etag, a stay, stay-wegel, stay-sail; W. taga, to stop.]

1. To remain; to continue in a place; to abide for any indefinite time. Do you stay here, while I go to the next house; stay here a week; we staid at the Hotel Montmorenci, in Paris.

Stay, I command you; stay and bear me first. Dryden.

2. To continue in a state.

The flames augment, and stay At their full light, then languish to decay. Dryden.

STEAD, n. [Goth. stads; Sax. and Dan. sted; G. stead; D. stede. See STAD.]

1. Place, in general.

Fly this fearful stead. Spenser.

[In this sense not used.]

2. Place or room which another had or might have, noting substitution, replacing, or filling the place of another; as, David died, and Solomon reigned in his stead.

God hath appointed me another seed in stead of Abel, whom Cain slew. — Gen. iv.

3. The frame on which a bed is laid.

Swallow the feet, the borders, and the stead. Dryden.

[But we never use this word by itself in this sense. We always use BEDSTEAD.]

To stand in stead; to be of use or great advantage. The smallest act of charity shall stand us in great stead. Aterbury.

STEAD, STED, in names of places distant from a river or the sea, signifies place, as above; but in names of places situated on a river or harbor, it is from Sax. stæth, border, bank, shore. Both words, perhaps, are from one root.

STEAD, (sted), v. t. To help; to support; to assist; as, it nothing steads us. [Obs.] Shak.

2. To fill the place of another. [Obs.] Shak.

STEADFAST, a. [stead and fast.] Fast fixed; firm; firmly fixed or established; as, the steadfast globe of earth.

STEAM, (steem), n. [Sax. steam, stem; D. stoom.]

1. The vapor of water; or the elastic, æriform fluid generated by heating water to the boiling point.

When produced under the common atmospheric pressure, its elasticity is equivalent to the pressure of the atmosphere, and it is called Low Steam; but when heated in a confined state, its elastic force is rapidly augmented, and it is then called High Steam.

On the application of cold, steam instantly returns to the state of water, and thus forms a sudden vacuum.

From this property, and from the facility with which an elastic force is generated by means of steam, this constitutes a mechanical agent at once the most powerful and the most manageable, as is seen in the vast and multiplied uses of the steam engine.

Steam is invisible, and is to be distinguished from the cloud or mist which it furors the air, that being water in a minute state of division, resulting from the condensation of steam. Olmsted.

2. In popular use, the mist formed by condensed vapor.

STEAM, v. t. To rise or pass off in vapor by means of heat; to fume.

Let the crude humors dance

In heated brass, steaming with fire intense. Phillips.

2. To send off visible vapor.

STEAM-SHIP, n. A ship propelled by steam.

STEAM-TUG, n. A steam-vessel used in towing ships. England.

STEAM-WHEEL, (-hwis'l), n. A pipe attached to a steam-engine or locomotive, through which steam is rapidly discharged, producing a loud, shrill whistle, which serves as a warning or caution.

STEAN, for STONE. [Not in use.] [Buchanan.]

STEARIC, a. Pertaining to stearin. The stearic acid is produced by the action of alkalis on stearin.

STEARIN, n. [Gr. στεαρ, suet.]

One of the proximate principles of animal fat, as lard, tallow, &c. The various kinds of animal fat commonly consist of two substances principally, viz., stearin and olein; of which the former is solid and the latter liquid. In particular instances, several other different and distinct proximate principles are found in animal fats. Olmsted.

STEATITE, n. [Gr. στέαρ, stearos, fat.]

A compact rock of a granular texture and very soapy feel, presenting grayish-green and brown shades. It is a variety of talc, and consists of silica and magnesia. It forms extensive beds, and is quarried for fireplaces and for coarse utensils. Portstone, Larostone, Soapstone, are other names of the species.

Another allied mineral called by this name, and also SAPONITE, has a white or grayish color, impalpable texture, and the consistency of butter. It contains 12 to 18 per cent. of water. It occurs at Lizard Point, Cornwall, and elsewhere. Dana.

STEATITIC, a. Pertaining to soapstone; of the nature of steatite, or resembling it.

STEATO-CELE, n. [Gr. στέαρ, fat, and κηλη, a tumor.]

A tumor of the scrotum, containing fat. Cyc.

STEATOMA, n. [Gr.] A lupia or wen, i. e., an encysted tumor, containing matter like suet. Coze.

Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds. Waller.

STEEL'AN, n. In Holland, a wine measure of about five gallons. Wilcocks's Dict.

STEEL, n. [Sax. stale; D. staal; G. stahl; Dan. staal; Sw. stal; probably from setting, fixing, hardness; G. stella.]

1. Iron combined with a small but definite portion of carbon. It is called in chemistry Cast-iron or Iron. It is used in making instruments, and particularly useful as the material of edged tools. Dr. Thomas Thomson considers that steel is most probably composed of 20 equivalents of iron and 1 equivalent of carbon.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids. Arbuthnot.

2. Figuratively, weapons; particularly, offensive weapons, swords, spears, and the like.

Received the steel bathed in his brother's blood. Dryden.

STEEL'ED, pp. Pointed or edged with steel; hardened; made insensible.

STEEL-GIRT, a. Girded with steel. Hemans.

STEEL-HEART-ED, a. Having the heart hard as steel.

STEEL-NESS, n. [from steely.] Great hardness.

STEELING, ppr. Pointing or edging with steel; hardening; making insensible or unfeeling. Ch. Relig. Appeal.

STEEL-PLATED, a. Plated with steel.

STEEL'Y, a. Made of steel; consisting of steel.

Brosched with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shak.

Around his shop the steely sparkles flew. Gay.

2. Hard; firm.

That she would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love. Sidney.

STEEL-YARD, n. [steel and yard.] The Roman balance; an instrument for weighing bodies, usually consisting of a rod or bar marked with notches, designating the number of pounds and ounces, and a weight which is movable along this bar, and which is made to balance the weight of the body by being removed at a proper distance from the fulcrum.

The principle of the steelyard is that of the lever; where an equilibrium is produced, when the products of the weights on opposite sides into their respective distances from the fulcrum, are equal to one another. Hence a less weight is made to indicate a greater, by being removed to a greater distance from the fulcrum. Sometimes the purpose is effected by means of a coiled spiral spring.

STEEN, } n. A vessel of clay or stone. [Not in

STEAN, } use.]

STEENING, } n. In architecture, the brick or stone

STEENING, } wall, or lining of a wall. Brande.

STEENKIRK, (-kurk), n. A cant term for a neck-cloth. [Not now in use.]

STEEP, a. [Sax. steap; allied to stoop and dip.]

Making a large angle with the plane of the horizon; ascending or descending with great inclination; precipitous; as, a steep hill or mountain; a steep roof; a steep ascent; a steep declivity.

STEEP, n. A precipitous place, hill, mountain, rock, or ascent; any elevated object which slopes with a large angle to the plane of the horizon; a precipice.

We had on each side rocks and mountains broken into a thousand irregular steepes and precipices. Addison.

STEEP, v. t. [Probably formed on the root of dip.]

To soak in a liquid; to macerate; to imbue; to keep any thing in a liquid till it has thoroughly imbibed it, or till the liquor has extracted the essential qualities of the substance. Thus cloth is steeped in lye or other liquid in bleaching or dyeing. But plants and drugs are steeped in water, wine, and the like, for the purpose of maturing the liquid with their qualities.

STEEP, n. Something that is steeped or used in steeping; a fertilizing liquid for hastening the germination of seeds. [Local.] [tion of seeds.]

STEEP'ED, (steep't), pp. Soaked; macerated; imbued.

STEEP'ER, n. A vessel, vat, or cistern in which things are steeped. Edwards, W. Indies.

STEEP'INESS, n. The state or quality of being steep. Howell.

STEERING, ppr. Soaking; macerating.

STEEPLE, (steep'pl), n. [Sax. steapel, stipel.]

A turret of a church, ending in a point; a spire. It differs from a tower, which usually ends in a square form, though the name is sometimes given to a tower. The bell of a church is usually hung in the steeple.

They, far from steeples and their sacred sound. Dryden.

STEEPLE-CHASE, n. A race between a number of horsemen, to see which can first reach some distant object (as a church steeple) in a straight course, or one marked out within narrow limits.

STEEPLE-ID, (steep'id), a. Furnished with a steeple; adorned with steeples or towers. Fairfax.

STEEP'Y, a. Having a steep or precipitous declivity; as, steepy crags; a steepy word. Dryden.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb

The steepy cliffs. Dryden.

STEER, n. [Sax. steor, styre; D. stier.]

A young male of the ox kind or common ox. It is rendered in Dutch, a bull; but in the United States, this name is generally given to a castrated taurine male from two to four years old.

With solemn pomp then sacrificed a steer. Dryden.

STEER, v. t. [Sax. steoran, to steer, to correct or chide, to discipline; G. steuern, to hinder, restrain, repress, to curb, to steer, to pilot, to aid, help, support. The verb is connected with, or derived from, steuer, a rudder, a helm, aid, help, subsidy, impost, tax, contribution. D. stieren, to steer, to send, and stuur, a helm; sturen, to steer, to send; Dna. styre, to govern, direct, manage, steer, restrain, moderate, curb, stem, hinder; styre, a helm, rudder, or tiller; styre, moderation, a tax or assessment; Sw. styre, to steer, to restrain; styre, a rudder or helm; Arn. stir, id.; I. stiarum. We see the radical sense is, to strain, variously applied, and this coincides with the root of starch and stark; stiffness being from stretching.]

1. To direct; to govern; particularly, to direct and govern the course of a ship by the movements of the helm. Hence,

2. To direct; to guide; to show the way or course to.

That with a staff his feeble steps did steer. Spenser.

STEER, v. t. To direct and govern a ship or other vessel in its course. Formerly seamen steered by the stars; they now steer by the compass.

A ship—where the wind
Veers off, as off to steers and shifts her sail. Milton.

2. To be directed and governed; as, a ship steers with ease.

3. To conduct one's self; to take or pursue a course or way.

STEER, n. A rudder or helm. [Not in use.]
STEERAGE, n. The act or practice of directing and governing a course; as, the steerage of a ship.

Addison.
[In this sense, I believe the word is now little used.]
2. In seamen's language, the effort of a helm, or its effect on the ship; or the peculiar manner in which an individual ship is affected by the helm.

3. In a ship, an apartment forward of the great cabin, from which it is separated by a bulk-head or partition, or an apartment in the fore part of a ship for an inferior class of passengers. In ships of war it serves as a hall or antechamber to the great cabin.

Mar. Dict.

STE-LOG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. στελογραφια; στελος, a pillar, and γραφω, to write.]

The art of writing or inscribing characters on pillars.

STEM, n. [Sax. stenn; G. stamm, stock, stem, race; D. and Sw. stam; Dan. stamme; Sans. stamma.]

The Latin has stemma, in the sense of the stock of a family or race. The primary sense is, to set, to fix.]

1. The principal body of a tree, shrub, or plant, of any kind; the main stock; the firm part which supports the branches.

After they are shot up thirty feet in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough or twig on the stem. Raleigh.

The lowering spring, with various rain,
Beats down the denser stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

2. The peduncle of the fructification, or the pedicle of a flower; that which supports the flower or the fruit of a plant; the petiole, or leaf-stem.

3. The stock of a family; a race or generation of progenitors; as, a noble stem.

Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Tillot.

4. Progeny; branch of a family.

This is a stem
Of that victorious stock. Shak.

5. In a ship, a circular piece of timber to which the two sides of a ship are united at the fore end. The lower end of it is scarfed to the keel, and the bowsprit rests upon its upper end. [D. steven.]

6. In music, the short, perpendicular line added to the body of a note.

From stem to stern, is from one end of the ship to the other, or through the whole length.

STEM, v. t. To oppose; or resist, as a current; or to make progress against a current. We say, the ship was not able with all her sails to stem the tide.

They stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denham.

2. To stop; to check; as a stream or moving force.

At length Erasmus, that great injured oame,
Sterned the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

12. Steps, in the plural; walk; passage.

Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree
In this deep forest. Dryden.

13. The bottom support on which the lower end of a mast, or of an upright abut or wheel, rests.

STEP [Sax. steap, from stepan, to deprive] is prefixed to certain words to express a relation by marriage.

Home Tooke supposes step, in step-father, to be a corrupt spelling for sted-father, a father instead of the true father. Certain it is that, in Danish, sted is the word used instead of step.

STEP'-BROTHER, (-bruth-er), n. A brother-in-law, or by marriage.

STEP'-CHILD, n. [step and child.] A son-in-law or daughter-in-law, (a child deprived of its parent.)

STEP'-DAME, n. A mother by marriage, (the mother of an orphan or one deprived.)

STEP-DAUGHTER, (-dau-ter), n. A daughter by marriage; (an orphan daughter.)

STEP-FATHER, n. A father-in-law; a father by marriage only; (the father of an orphan.)

STEP-MOTHER, (-muth-er), n. A mother by marriage only; a mother-in-law; (the mother of an orphan.)

STEP-SISTER, n. A sister-in-law, or by marriage, (an orphan sister.)

STEP-SON, (-sun), n. A son-in-law; an orphan son.

[In the foregoing explanation of step, I have followed Lye. The D. and G. write stief, and the Swedes stef, before the name; a word which does not appear to be connected with any verb signifying to bereave, and the word is not without some difficulties. I have given the explanation which appears to be most probably correct. If the radical sense of step, a pace, is to part or open, the word coincides with Sax. stepan, to deprive, and in the compounds above, step may imply removal or distance.]

STEPPE, (step), n. The Russian name given to the vast plains of Asia, corresponding to the prairies in North America. Brande.

[This sense of the Russian word is naturally deducible from Sax. stepan, to deprive. See STER.]

STEPPED, (stept), pp. Set; placed; erected; fixed in its step, as a mast.

STEPPING, pp. Moving, or advancing by a movement of the foot or feet; placing; fixing or erecting, as a mast.

STEPPING, n. The act of walking or running by steps.

STEPPING-STONE, n. A stone to raise the feet above the dirt and mud in walking. Swift.

2. Hence, a means of progress or further advancement. Smart.

STEP-STONE, n. A stone laid before a door as a stair to rise on in entering the house.

STER, in composition, is from the Sax. stera, a director. (See STEREN.) It seems primarily to have signified chief, principal, or director, as in the Lin. minister, chief servant; but in other words, as in spinster, we do not recognize the sense of chief, but merely that of a person who carries on the business of spinning.

STER-CO-RACEOUS, (-shus), a. [L. stercoreus, stercorosus, from stercus, dung.]

- Pertaining to dung, or partaking of its nature. Arbuthnot.

STER-CO-RARIAN, } n. [L. stercus, dung.]

In Italian, stormo is a fight, combat, a band, or troop; stormire, to make a noise; stormeggiare, to throng together, to ring the alarm bell. The Italian seems to be from Latin turna. The primary sense of storm is, a rushing, raging or violent agitation.]

1. The violent action of one or more of the meteorological elements, wind, rain, snow, hail, or thunder and lightning. According to the etymology, the proper sense of the word is, rushing, violence. It has, primarily, no reference to a fall of rain or snow. But, as a violent wind has often attended with rain or snow, the word storm has come to be used for a fall of rain or snow without wind.

O, beat those storms, and roll the seas in vain. Pope.

2. A violent assault on a fortified place; a furious attempt of troops to enter and take a fortified place by scaling the walls, forcing the gates, and the like. Dryden.

STRENGTH, n. [Sax. strength, from strong, strong. See STRONG.]

1. That property or quality of an animal body by which it is enabled to move itself or other bodies. We say, a sick man has not strength to walk, or to raise his head or his arm. We say, a man has strength to lift a weight, or to draw it. This quality is called also POWER and FORCE. But force is also used to denote the effect of strength exerted, or the quantity of motion. Strength, in this sense, is positive, or the power of producing positive motion or action, and is opposed to WEAKNESS.

2. Firmness; solidity or toughness; the quality of bodies by which they sustain the application of force without breaking or yielding. Thus we speak of the strength of a bone, the strength of a beam, the strength of a wall, the strength of a rope. In this sense, strength is a passive quality, and is opposed to WEAKNESS or FRAGILITY.

3. Power or vigor of any kind.

7. Spirit; animation.

Metinks I feel new strength within me rise.

Milton.

8. Force of writing or poetry; nervous diction. The strength of words, of style, of expression, and the like, consists in the full and forcible exhibition of ideas, by which a sensibler or deep impression is made on the mind of a hearer or reader. It is distinguished from SOFTNESS or SWEETNESS. Strength of language enforces an argument, produces conviction, or excites wonder or other strong emotion; softness and sweetness give pleasure.

And praise the easy vigor of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join.

Pope.

9. Vividness; as, strength of colors or coloring.

10. Spirit; the quality of any liquor which has the power of affecting the taste, or of producing sensible effects on other bodies; as, the strength of wine or spirit; the strength of an acid.

11. The virtue or spirit of any vegetable, or of its juices or qualities.

STRIKE, v. l.; pret. STRUCK; pp. STRUCK and STRUCKEN; but struck is in the most common use. Struck is wholly obsolete. [Sax. astriken, to strike, D. strijken, to strike, and to stroke, to smooth, to anoint or rub over, to slide; G. streichen, to pass, move, or ramble, to depart, to touch, to stroke, to glide or glance over, to lower or strike, as sails, to curry, (L. strigo, strigil), to sweep together, to spread, as a plaster, to play on a violin, to card, as wool, to strike or whip, as with a rod; streich, strike, a stroke, stripe, or lash, Eng. streak; Dan. strek, a stroke; stryger, to rub, to stroke, to strike, to trim, to iron, or smooth, to strike, as nails, to whip, to play on a violin, to glide along, to plane; Sw. stryka, id. We see that strike, stroke, and streak, and the L. strigo, whence strain, strict, structure, &c., are all radically one word. Strong is of the same family. Hence we see the sense is, to rub, to scrape; but it includes often the sense of thrusting. It is to touch or graze with a sweeping or stroke. Hence our sense of striking a measure of grain, and strike, strike, and strokes of the pencil in painting. Hence the use of stricken, applied to age, worn with age, as in the L. stricken, the same word differently applied. Hence also we see the propriety of the use of stricture, applied to criticism. It seems to be formed on the root of rake and stretch.]

1. To touch or hit with some force, either with the hand or an instrument; to give a blow to, either with the open hand, the fist, a stick, club, or whip, or with a pointed instrument, or with a ball or an arrow discharged.  12. In chronology, a mode of reckoning time, with regard to the Julian and Gregorian calendar. Style is Old or New. The Old Style follows the Julian manner of computing the months and days, or the calendar as established by Julius Cesar, in which every fourth year consists of 366 days, and the other years of 365 days. This is something more than 11 minutes in a year too much. Pope Gregory XIII. reformed the calendar by retrenching 10 days in October, 1582, in order to bring back the vernal equinox to the same day as at the time of the council of Nice, A. D. 325; this reformation was adopted by act of parliament in Great Britain in 1751, by which act 11 days in September, 1752, were retrenched, and the third day was reckoned the fourteenth. This mode of reckoning is called New Style, according to which every year divisible by 4, unless it is divisible by 100, without being divisible by 400, has 366 days, and any other year 365 days.
P. Cyc. Ed. Encyc.

SUB-JECT'ING, ppr. Reducing to submission; enslaving; exposing; submitting; causing to undergo.

SUB-JECTION, n. The act of subduing; the act of vanquishing and bringing under the dominion of another.

The conquest of the kingdom and the subjection of the rebels. Hale.

2. The state of being under the power, control, and government of another. The safety of life, liberty, and property, depends on our subjection to the laws. The isles of the West Indies are held in subjection to the powers of Europe. Our appetites and passions should be in subjection to our reason, and our will should be in entire subjection to the laws of God.

SUB-JECT'IVE, a. An epithet applied to those internal states of thought or feeling of which the mind is the subject; opposed to OBJECTIVE, which is applied to things considered as separate from the mind, and as objects of its attention. Thus, subjective truth or reality is that which is verified by consciousness; objective truth or reality is that which results from the nature and relations of things. A subjective motive is an internal feeling or propensity; an objective motive is something external to the mind, which is suited to awaken desire. Subjective views are those which are produced or modified by internal feeling; objective views are those which are governed by external objects. That which is subjective in one relation may be objective in another. Thus, subjective states of mind, when recalled and dwelt on for the purpose of inspection or analysis, become objective. Encyc. Amer.

SUB-JECT'IVE LY, adv. In relation to the subject. Pearson.

SUB-JECT'IVE-NESS, n. State of being subjective.

SUB-JECT-IV'I-TY, n. The state of being subjective.

سكّر
L. saccharum; Gr. σάκχαρον; Pers. Ar. سكر
sukkar; Sans. sacharkara; Slavonic, sakar. It is also in the Syr. and Eth.]

1. A well-known substance manufactured chiefly from the sugar-cane, Saccharum officinarum; but in the United States, great quantities of this article are made from the sugar maple; and in France, from the beet. The saccharine liquor is concentrated by boiling, which expels the water; lime is added to neutralize the acid that is usually present; the grosser impurities rise to the surface, and are separated in the form of scum; and finally, as the liquor cools, the sugar separates from the molasses in grains. The sirup or molasses is drained off, leaving the sugar in the state known in commerce by the name of run or muscovado sugar. This was formerly purified by means of clay, or more extensively by bullocks' blood, which, forming a coagulum, enveloped the impurities. This process is now more usually performed by means of animal charcoal or bone black, and by steam. Thus clarified, it takes the names of lump, leaf, refined, &c., according to the different degrees of purification. Sugar is a proximate element of the vegetable kingdom, and is found in most ripe fruits, and many farinaceous roots. By fermentation, sugar is converted into alcohol, and hence forms the basis of those substances which are used for making intoxicating liquors, as molasses, grapes, apples, malt, &c.

The ultimate elements of sugar are oxygen, carbon, and hydrogen. Of all vegetable principles, it is considered by Dr. Rush as the most wholesome and nutritious. P. Cye. Siddiman.

2. An old chemical term; as, the sugar of lead, (acetate of lead,) so called because it has a close resemblance to sugar in appearance, and tastes sweet. Tully.

SWAM, pret. of SWIM.
SWAMP, (swomp), n. [Sax. swam, a fungus or mushroom; Goth. swammis, a sponge; G. schwamm, D. zwam, Dan. swamp; Sw. id., a sponge, a fungus.]
 Spongy land; low ground filled with water; soft, wet ground. In New England, I believe this word is never applied to marsh, or the boggy land made by the overflowing of salt water, but always to low, soft ground in the interior country; wet and spongy land, but not usually covered with water. This is the true meaning of the word. Swamps are often moved. In England, the word is explained in books by boggy land, morass or marshy ground.
SWAMP, (swomp), v. t. To plunge, whelm, or sink in a swamp; hence, to overset or sink and be lost in water.
 2. To plunge into inextricable difficulties.
SWAMP'ED, (swompt), pp. Overwhelmed; plunged into difficulties.
SWAMP'ING, ppr. Overwhelming; plunging into inextricable difficulties. Quart. Rev.

SWAMP'ORE, n. In mineralogy, an ore of iron found in swamps and morasses; bog ore, or bog iron ore. Cyc.

SWAMP'Y, a. Consisting of swamp; like a swamp; low, wet, and spongy; as, swampy land.

SWAN, (swon), n. [Sax. swan; D. zwana; G. schwan; Dan. swano; Sw. swan. Qu. swan, white, with a prefix.]
 A large, aquatic fowl of the genus Cygnus, apparently intermediate between ducks and geese. Swans have the neck very long, plumage close, thick, soft, and light. They are remarkable for grace and elegance upon the water. The adults of the common species are white, but an Australian species is black. Nuttall. P. Cyc.

SWANG, n. A piece of low land or green sward, liable to be covered with water. [Local in England.]

SWAN'S-DOWN, n. A fine, soft, thick cloth of wool mixed with silk or cotton. Encyc. of Dom. Econ.

SWAN'SKIN, n. [swan and skin.] A species of flannel of a soft texture, thick and warm.

SWAP, (swop), adv. [Qu. swæp.] Hastily; at a snatch. [A low word, and local.]

SWAP, (swop), v. t. To exchange; to barter; to swap. [See SWOP.] [This word is not elegant, but common in colloquial language in America.]

SWAPE, n. A blow; a stroke. Beaumont & Fl.

SWAPE, n. [Qu. swæp.] A pole supported by a fulcrum, on which it turns, used for raising water from a well, for churning, &c. Ewerbank.

 [This Bailey spells Swire, and in New England it is pronounced swæp, as in well-swæp.]

SWAPP'ED, (swæpt), pp. Exchanged; bartered.
SWAPP'ING, ppr. Exchanging.

SWARD, n. [Sax. swærd; Dan. swærd; D. zwaard; G. schwerte, rind, skin; W. gwerd, an excretion, sword, moss.]
 1. The skin of bacon. [Local.]
 2. The grassy surface of land; turf; that part of the soil which is filled with the roots of grass, forming a kind of mat. When covered with green grass, it is called GREEN-SWARD.
SWARD, v. t. To produce sward; to cover with sward. Mortimer.

SWARD'-CUT-TER, n. An instrument for cutting sward across the ridges.

SWARD'ED, a. Covered with sward. Drake.

SWARD'Y, a. Covered with sward or grass; as, swardly land.

SWARE, old pret. of SWEAR. [We now use SWOAR.]
SWARE, } n. A copper coin and money of SCHWÄRE, } count in Bremen, value one fifth of a groat, and 72 groats make a thaler, (rix dollar.) It is therefore worth nearly $\frac{1}{4}$ farthing sterling, or $\frac{1}{4}$ cent.
McCulloch.

SWARM, n. [Sax. swarm; G. schwarm; D. zwarm; Dan. swærm; Sw. swärm. This seems to be formed on the root of swarm. The Sp. hervir, to boil, to swarm, is the L. ferreo, and boiling is very expressive of the motions of a swarm of bees. See the verb.]
 1. In a general sense, a large number or body of small animals or insects, particularly when in motion; but appropriately, a great number of honey bees which emigrate from a hive at once, and seek new lodgings under the direction of a queen; or a like body of bees united and settled permanently in a hive. The bees that leave a hive in spring, are the young bees produced in the year preceding.
Exod. viii. Judges xiv.
 2. A swarm or multitude; particularly, a multitude of people in motion. Swarms of northern nations overran the south of Europe in the fifth century.
Note. — The application of this word to inanimate things, as swarms of advantages, by Shakespeare, and swarms of themes, by Young, is not legitimate, for the essence of the word is motion.

SWARM, v. t. [Sax. swerminian; D. zwermen; G. schwärmen; Dan. swærme; Sw. swärma, to swarm, to rove, to wander, to swerve.]
 1. To collect and depart from a hive by flight in a body, as bees. Bees swarm in warm, clear days in summer.
 2. To appear or collect in a crowd; to run; to throng together; to congregate in a multitude.
to crowds around the swarming people join. Dryden.
 3. To be crowded; to be thronged with a multitude of animals in motion. The forests in America often swarm with wild pigeons. The northern seas in spring swarm with herrings.
Every place swarms with soldiers. Spenser.
 [Such phrases as "like swarms with flies," "those days swarmed with follies," are not legitimate, or wholly obsolete. Brown. Young.]
 4. To breed multitudes. Milton.
 5. To climb, as a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs, and scrambling.
At the top was placed a piece of money, as a prize for those who could swarm up and seize it. Cocle's News.
Note. — This, by the common people in New England, is pronounced swarm or swarm, and it is evidently formed on swarm, indicating that swarm and swarm, on which swarm and swarm are formed, are radically the same word. The primary sense is, to bend, wind, twist, as a worm or a swarm of bees. It may be formed on the root of veer, vary.]

SWARM, v. t. To crowd or throng. [Not in use.]

SWARN'ED, pp. of SWARM.
SWARN'ING, ppr. or a. from SWARM. [See the verb.]

1. A line of grass or grain cut and thrown together by the scythe in mowing or cradling.

2. The whole breadth or sweep of a scythe in mowing or cradling; as, a wide swath. Farmers.

3. A band or fillet. They wrapped me in a hundred yards of swath. Guardian.

SWATHE, v. t. To bind with a band, bandage, or rollers; as, to swathe a child.

2. To bind or wrap.
Their children are never swathed or bound about with any thing when first born. Abbot.

SWATHE, n. A bandage.

SWATH'ED, pp. Bound with a bandage or rollers.

SWATH'ING, pp. or a. Binding or wrapping.

SWAY, v. t. [D. zwaaien, to turn, to wield, to swing, to sway. This word is probably formed on the root of weigh, wage, Sax. wæg, weg, and swag, and probably swing is written for swig, and is of the same family; see swaigia Sw. swiga.]

1. To move or wave; to wield with the hand; as, to sway the scepter.

2. To bias; to cause to lean or incline to one side. Let not temporal advantages sway you from the line of duty. The king was swayed by his council from the course he intended to pursue.

As bowls run true by being made On purpose false, and to be swayed. Hudibras.

3. To rule; to govern; to influence or direct by power and authority, or by moral force.

This was the race To sway the world, and land and sea subdued. Dryden.

She could not sway her house.

Take heed lest passion sway Thy judgment to do aught which else free will Would not admit. Milton.

SWAY, v. i. To be drawn to one side by weight; to lean. A wall sways to the west.

The balance sways on our part. Bacon.

[This sense seems to indicate that this word and sway are radically one.]

2. To have weight or influence. The example of sundry churches — doth sway much. Hooker.

3. To bear rule; to govern. Hadst thou swayed as kings should do. Shak.

4. In seamen's language, to hoist, particularly applied to the lower yards and to the topmast yards, &c.

SWAY, n. The swing or sweep of a weapon. To strike with huge two-handed sway. Milton.

2. Any thing moving with bulk and power. Art not you moved when all the sway of earth shakes like a thing on firm? Shak.

3. Preponderation; turn or cast of balance. Expert

When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway of battle. Milton.

4. Power exerted in governing; rule; dominion; control. When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway, The post of honor is a private station. Addison.

5. Influence; weight or authority that inclines to one side; as, the sway of desires. All the world is subject to the sway of fashion.

SYC'A-MINE. See SYCAMORE.

SYC'A-MORE, n. [Gr. σικαμινος, σικαμορος, from σικκος, a fig, and μορος.]

A species of fig-tree. The name is also incorrectly given to the Acer pseudo-platanus, a species of maple. Cyc. Lec.

The sycamore, (falsely so called,) or plane-tree of North America, is the Platanus occidentalis of Linnaeus, commonly called BUTTON-WOOD, or COTTON-TREE.

SYC'A-MORE-MOTH, n. A large and beautiful moth, or night-butterfly, so called because its caterpillar feeds on the leaves of the sycamore. Cyc.

SY-CEE', n. In China, silver in the form SY-CEE'-SIL'VER,] of small half globes, bearing the stamp of the office that issues it, and used as a currency. Vicent. Branda.

SYCTTE, n. [Gr. σικκος, a fig.]

Fig-stone; a name which some authors give to nodules of flint or pebbles which resemble a fig. [Not used.] Cyc.

SY-CO'MA, n. [Gr. σικκος, a fig.]

A tumor shaped like a fig.

SYC'O-PIAN-CY, n. [Infr.] Originally, information of the clandestine exportation of figs; hence, mean tale-bearing; obsequious flattery; servility.

SYC'O-PHANT, n. [Gr. σικκοφαντη; σικκος, a fig, and φαινω, to discover.]

Originally, an informer against those who stole figs or exported them contrary to law, &c. Hence, in time it came to signify a tale-bearer or informer, in general; hence, a parasite; a mean flatterer; especially, a flatterer of princes and great men; hence, a deceiver; an impostor. Its most general use is in the sense of an obsequious flatterer or parasite. Encyc. Pott's Antiq.

SYC'O-PHANT, v. t. To play the sycophant; to flatter meanly and officiously; to inform or tell tales for gaining favor.

SYC'O-PHANT'IC, a. Tale-bearing; more generally, obsequiously flatterer; parasitic; courting favor by mean adulation.

SYD-NE'AN, a. Denoting a species of white earth SYD-NE'AN,] brought from Sidney Cove, in South Wales. Kirwan.

SY'EN-ITE, n. A compound granular rock composed of quartz, hornblende, and feldspar, of a grayish color; so called because there are many ancient monuments consisting of this rock, brought from Syene, in Upper Egypt. It differs from granite only in containing hornblende instead of mica. Lusier. Dana.

SYKE, n. A small brook or rill in low ground. [Local.]

SYL-LAB'IC, a. [from syllable.] Pertaining to SYL-LAB'IC-AL,] a syllable or syllables; as, a syllabic accent.

2. Consisting of a syllable or syllables; as, a syllabic argument.

SYL-LAB'IC-AL-LY, adv. In a syllabic manner.

SYL-LAB-I-CATION, n. The act of forming syllables; the act or method of dividing words into syllables. Ash.

SYL/LA-BLE, n. [L. syllaba; Gr. συλλαβη, from συν and λαμβάνω, to take.]

1. A letter, or a combination of letters, uttered together, or at a single effort or impulse of the voice.

A vowel may form a syllable by itself, as, a, the dative, or in amen; e in ees; e in erer, and the like. A syllable may also be formed of a vowel and one consonant, as in go, do, ia, at; or a syllable may be formed by a vowel with two articulations, one preceding, the other following it, as in cas, but, ua; or a syllable may consist of a combination of consonants, with one vowel or diphthong, as stroag, short, camp, voice.

A syllable sometimes forms a word, and is then significant, as in go, run, write, sus, moon. In other cases a syllable is merely a part of a word, and by itself is not significant. Thus ac, in acted, has no signification.

At least one vowel, or open sound, is essential to the formation of a syllable; hence in every word there must be as many syllables as there are single vowels, or single vowels and diphthongs. A word is called according to the number of syllables it contains, viz.:—

Monosyllable; a word of one syllable.
Disyllable; a word of two syllables.
Trisyllable; a word of three syllables.
Poly syllable; a word of many syllables.

2. A small part of a sentence or discourse; something very concise. This account contains not a syllable of truth.

Before a syllable of the law of God was written. Hooker.

SYL/LA-BLE, v. t. To utter; to articulate. [Not used.] Milton.

SYL/LA-BUB, n. A compound drink made of wine and milk; a different orthography of STILBAUS.

SYL/LA-BUS, n. [L., from the same source as syllable.]

An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse, &c.

SYL-LEP'SIS, n. [Gr. συλληψις. See SYLLABLE.]

1. In grammar, a figure by which we conceive the sense of words otherwise than the words import, and construe them according to the intention of the author; otherwise called SUBSTITUTION.

2. The agreement of a verb or adjective, not with the word next to it, but with some other word in the sentence, to which a preference is given; as, vez et regna beati. Andreas & Stoddard.

SYL/O-GISM, n. [L. sylogismus; Gr. συνλογισμος; συν, with, and λογω, to speak; λογίζομαι, to think.]

A form of reasoning, or argument, consisting of three propositions, of which the two first are called the premises, and the last the conclusion. In this argument, the conclusion necessarily follows from the premises; so that if the two first propositions are true, the conclusion must be true, and the argument amounts to demonstration. Thus:

A plant has not the power of locomotion;
An oak is a plant;
Therefore an oak has not the power of locomotion.

These propositions are denominated the major, the minor, and the conclusion.

SYL-LO-GIS'TIC, a. Pertaining to a syllogism; SYL-LO-GIS'TIC-AL,] consisting of a syllogism, or of the form of reasoning by syllogisms; as, syllogistic arguments or reasoning.

SYL-LO-GIS'TIC-AL-LY, adv. In the form of a syllogism; by means of syllogisms; as, to reason or prove syllogistically.

SYL-LO-GI-ZATION, n. A reasoning by syllogisms. Harris.

SYL/LO-GIZE, v. i. To reason by syllogisms.

Men have endeavored to teach boys to syllogize, or to frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYL/LO-GI-Z-ER, n. One who reasons by syllogisms.

SYL/LO-GI-Z-ING, ppr. Reasoning by syllogisms.

SYLPH, (silf), n. [Fr. syphide; Gr. σιλφη, a moth, a beetle.]

An imaginary being inhabiting the air.

A diminutive of SYLPH.

SYLPH-LIKE, a. Resembling a sylph.

SYL'VA, n. [L., a wood or forest.] In poetry, a poetical piece composed in a start, or kind of transport.

2. A collection of poetical pieces of various kinds. Cyc.

3. A work containing a botanical description of the forest trees of any region or country; as Michaux's Sylva Americana.

4. The forest trees themselves of any region or country.

SYL-VAN. See SILVAN.

SYL'VAN, n. A fabled deity of the wood; a satyr; a faun; sometimes, perhaps, a rustic.

Her private orchards, walled on every side,
To lawless syllvans all access denied. Pope.

SYL'VAN-ITE, n. Native tellurium, a metallic substance discovered in Transylvania. Dict. Ure.

SYL'VATE, n. A compound of silvian acid with a base.

SYL'VIC AC'ID, n. A crystallizable substance obtained from colophony, or common resin, by the action of alcohol. Coolley. Graham.

SYMBAL. See CYMBAL.

SYMBOL, n. [L. symbolum; Gr. συμβολον; συν, with, and βάλλω, to throw; συνβάλλω, to compare.]

1. The sign or representation of any moral thing by the images or properties of natural things. Thus the lion is the symbol of courage; the lamb is the symbol of meekness or patience. Symbols are of various kinds; as types, enigmas, parables, fables, allegories, emblems, hieroglyphics, &c. Encyc.

2. An emblem or representation of something else. Thus in the eucharist the bread and wine are called symbols of the body and blood of Christ.

3. A letter or character which is significant. The Chinese letters are most of them symbols. The symbols in algebra are arbitrary.

4. In medals, a certain mark or figure representing a being or thing; as a trident is the symbol of Neptune, the peacock of Juno, &c.

5. Among Christians, an abstract or compendium; the creed, or a summary of the articles of religion. Baker.

6. Lot; sentence of adjudication. [Not in use.] Taylor.

SYM-BOL'IC, } a. Representative; exhibiting or SYM-BOL'IC-AL, } expressing by resemblance or signs; us, the figure of an eye is symbolical of sight and knowledge. The ancients had their symbolical mysteries.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as are appointed. Taylor.

Symbolical philosophy is the philosophy expressed by hieroglyphics.

SYM-BOL'IC-AL-LY, adv. By representation or resemblance of properties; by signs; typically. Courage is symbolically represented by a lion.

SYM-BOL'ICS, n. The science of creeds.

SYMBOL-ISM, n. Among chemists, consent of parts. Encyc.

SYM-BOL-I-ZA'TION, n. [See SYMBOLIZE.] The act of symbolizing; resemblance in properties. Brown.

SYMBOLIZE, v. i. [Fr. symboliser.]

1. To have a resemblance of qualities or properties.

The pleasing of color symbolizeth with the pleasing of a single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon.
 They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Hoswell.

2. To agree; to hold the same faith or religious belief.

The believers in pretended miracles have always previously symbolized with the performance of them. G. S. Fisher.

SYMBOLIZE, v. l. To make to agree in properties. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colors. Brown.

SYM-BOL-IZ-ED, pp. Made to agree in properties.

SYM-BOL-IZ-ING, ppr. Re-presenting by some properties in common; making to agree or resemble in properties.

SYM-BOL'O-GY, n. [Gr. συμβολον and λογος.]

The art of expressing by symbols.

SYM-ME'TRI-AN, } n. [from symmetry.] One em-
SYM-ME'TRIST, } n. [from symmetry.] One studious of proportion or symmetry of parts. Sidney. Wotton.

SYM-MET'RIC-AL, a. [from symmetry.] Proportional in its parts; having its parts in due proportion as to dimensions; as, a symmetrical body or building.

2. In botany, flowers are symmetrical when the segments of the calyx, the petals, and the stamens, are regular, equal, and alike. Lindley.

Symmetrical solids is a name given by Legendre to solids which, though equal and similar, can not be brought to coincide with each other, or to occupy the same portion of space. A man's two hands afford an example of symmetrical solids. Brande.

SYM-MET'RIC-AL-LY, adv. With due proportion of parts.

SYM-MET'RIC-AL-NESS, n. State or quality of being symmetrical.

SYM-ME-TRIZE, v. l. To make proportional in its parts; to reduce to symmetry. Burke.

SYM-ME-TRIZ-ED, pp. Made proportional.

SYM-ME-TRIZ-ING, ppr. Reducing to symmetry.

SYM-ME'TRY, n. [Gr. συμμετρία; συν, with, together, and μετρον, measure; μετροω, to measure; Fr. symetrie; It. and Sp. simetria.]

A due proportion of the several parts of a body to each other; adaptation of the dimensions of the several parts of a thing to each other; or the union and conformity of the members of a work to the whole. Symmetry arises from the proportion, which the Greeks call αναλογη, which is the relation of conformity of all the parts to a certain measure; as, the symmetry of a building or an animal body. Cyc.

Uniform symmetry, in architecture, is where the same ordonnance reigns throughout the whole.

Respective symmetry is where only the opposite sides are equal to each other. Cyc.

SYM-PA-THE'T'IC, } o. [Fr. sympathique. See
SYM-PA-THE'T'IC-AL, } SYMPATHY.]

1. Pertaining to sympathy.

2. Having common feeling with another; susceptible of being affected by feelings like those of another, or of feelings in consequence of what another feels; as, a sympathetic heart.

3. In medicine, the term sympathetic is applied to symptoms and affections which occur in parts more or less remote from the primary seat of disease, and are occasioned by some nervous connection of the parts. A disease which is immediately preceded and occasioned by another disease is sometimes said to be sympathetic, in contradistinction from idiopathic, which is applied to a disease not preceded or occasioned by any other; but, in this case, the term symptomatic is not only more appropriate, but more commonly employed.

4. Among alchemists, an epithet applied to a kind of powder, possessed of the wonderful property that, if spread on a cloth dipped in the blood of a wound, the wound will be healed, though the patient is at a distance. This opinion is discarded as chimerical.

This epithet is given also to a species of ink or liquor, with which a person may write letters which are not visible till something else is applied. [See Ink.]

5. In anatomy, the term sympathetic is applied to that system of nerves which takes its origin from the semilunar ganglion in the centre of the epigastrium, and is sent to the whole nutritive system, and also to the organs of reproduction.

SYM-PA-THE'T'IC-AL-LY, adv. With sympathy or common feeling; in consequence of sympathy; by communication from something else.

SYM-PA-THIZE, v. i. [Fr. sympathiser. See SYMPATHY.]

1. To have a common feeling, as of bodily pleasure or pain.

The mind will sympathize so much with the anguish and debility of the body, that it will be too distracted to fix itself in meditation. Buckminster.

2. To feel in consequence of what another feels; to be affected by feelings similar to those of another, in consequence of knowing the person to be thus affected. We sympathize with our friends in distress; we feel some pain when we see them pained, or when we are informed of their distresses, even at a distance.

It is generally and properly used of suffering or pain, and not of pleasure or joy. It may be sometimes used with greater latitude.

3. To agree; to fit. [Not in use.] Dryden.

SYM-PA-THIZ-ING, ppr. or a. Feeling mutually, or in consequence of what another feels; tender; compassionate.

SYM-PA-THY, n. [Gr. συμπάθεια; αναπαθεω; συν, with, and παθος, passion.]

1. Fellow-feeling; the quality of being affected by the affliction of another, with feelings correspondent in kind, if not in degree. We feel sympathy for another when we see him in distress, or when we are informed of his distresses. This sympathy is a correspondent feeling of pain or regret.

Sympathy is produced through the medium of organic impression. Chapman.

I value myself upon sympathy; I hate and despise myself for envy. Kames.

2. An agreement of affections or inclinations, or a conformity of natural temperament, which makes two persons pleased with each other. Encyc.

To such associations may be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies of our nature. Anon.

3. In medicine, a correspondence of various parts of the body in similar sensations or affections; or an affection of the whole body, or some part of it, in consequence of an injury or disease of another part, or of a local affection. Thus a contusion on the head will produce nausea and vomiting. This is said to be by sympathy, or consent of parts. Cyc.

4. In natural history, a propension of inanimate things to unite, or to act on each other. Thus we say, there is a sympathy between the lodestone and iron. Cyc.

SYM-PHO'NI-IOUS, a. [from symphony.] Agreeing in sound; accordant; harmonious.

Symphonious of ten thousand harps. Milton.

SYM-PHO-NIST, n. A composer of symphonies or instrumental music.

SYM-PHO-NY, (sim'fo-ne), n. [L. symphonia; Fr. symphonie; Gr. συμφωνία; συν, with, and φωνη, voice.]

1. A consonance or harmony of sounds, agreeable to the ear, whether the sounds are vocal or instrumental, or both.

The trumpets sound, and wailike symphony is heard around. Dryden.

2. A musical instrument mentioned by French writers.

3. A musical composition for a full band of instruments; formerly synonymous with Overture.

4. Also, a term applied to the instrumental introductions, terminations, &c., of vocal compositions. P. Cyc.

SYM-PHY-SIS, n. [Gr. συμφύσις; συν, together, and φύω, to grow.]

1. In anatomy, the union of bones by cartilage; a connection of bones without a movable joint. Coze. Cyc.

2. In surgery, a coalescence of a natural passage; also, the first intention of cure in a wound. Coze.

SYM-PL-E-SOM'E-TER, n. [Gr. συμπίεζω, to compress, and μετροω.]

An instrument employed, like the barometer, for measuring the pressure of the atmosphere. A column of oil supplies the place of the mercurial column in the barometer, while hydrogen gas occupies the place of the Torricellian vacuum. The instrument, for certain purposes, is preferred to the barometer, being smaller and more portable, and not liable to derangement by the motions of a ship at sea. Olmsted.

SYM-PLO-CE, n. [Gr. συμπλοκη.]

In grammar, the repetition of a word at the beginning and another at the end of successive clauses.

SYM-PŌ'SI-AC, a. [Gr. συμπια, a drinking together; συν, together, and πινω, to drink.]

Pertaining to computations and merry-making; happening where company is drinking together; as, symposiac meetings. Erwin.

Symphosiac disputations. [Not much used.] Arbutnot.

SYM-PŌ'SI-AC, n. A conference or conversation of philosophers at a banquet. Platorck.

SYM-PŌ'SI-ARCHI, n. [Gr. συμπασιον and αρχω.]

In ancient Greece, the master of a feast.

SYM-PŌ'SI-UM, n. [Supra.] A drinking together; a merry feast. Watson.

SYMPTOM, n. [Fr. symptome; Gr. συμπτωμα, a falling, or accident, from συν, with, and πτωω, to fall.]

1. Properly, something that happens in concurrence with another thing, as an attendant. Hence, in medicine, any affection which accompanies disease; a perceptible change in the body or its functions which indicates disease. The causes of disease often lie beyond our sight, but we learn the nature of them by the symptoms. Particular symptoms which more uniformly accompany a morbid state of the body, and are characteristic of it, are called pathognomonic or diagnostic symptoms.

2. A sign or token; that which indicates the existence of something else; as, open humours of the people are a symptom of disaffection to law or government.

SYMPTO-MAT'IC, } a. Pertaining to symptoms;
SYMPTO-MAT'IC-AL, } happening in concurrence with something; indicating the existence of something else.

2. In medicine, a symptomatic disease is one which proceeds from some prior disorder in some part of the body. Thus a symptomatic fever may proceed from local injury or local inflammation. It is opposed to idiopathic. Encyc. Coze.

3. According to symptoms; as, a symptomatical classification of diseases.

SYMPTO-MAT'IC-AL-LY, adv. By means of symptoms; in the nature of symptoms. Wiseman.

SYMPTO-MA-TOL'O-GY, n. [Gr. συμπτωμα and λογος, discourse.]

The doctrine of symptoms; that part of the science of medicine which treats of the symptoms of diseases. Coze.

SYN-ER'E-SIS, (sin'er-er-sis), n. [Gr. συν and ερπειω.]

In grammar, a figure by which two vowels that are ordinarily separated are drawn together into one syllable; the opposite of Diæresis.

SYN-A-GŌG'IC-AL, a. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue. Dict.

SYN-A-GOGUE, (sin'n-gog), n. [Fr., from Gr. συναγωγη; συν, together, and γωω, to drive; properly, an assembly.]

1. A congregation or assembly of Jews met for the purpose of worship, or the performance of religious rites.

2. The house appropriated to the religious worship of the Jews.

3. The court of the seventy elders among the Jews, called the GREAT SYNAGOGUE, or SANHEDRIM. Cyc.

SYN-A-LE'PHIA, n. [Gr. συναλοιφή.]

In grammar, a contraction of syllables by suppressing some vowel or diphthong at the end of a word, before another vowel or diphthong; as, ill' ego, for ille ego.

SYN-AL-LAG-MAT'IC, a. [Gr. συν and αλλαγμα.]

An epithet applied, in the civil law, to a contract which imposes reciprocal obligations upon the parties. Bouvier.

SYN'AR-CHY, n. [Gr. συναρχία.]

Joint rule or sovereignty. Stackhouse.

SYN-XR-THO'R'SIS, n. [Gr. συν, with, and αθροω, to articulate.]

Union of bones without motion; close union; as in sutures, synphysis, and the like. Coze.

SY-NAX'IS, n. [Gr., from συναγω, to congregate; συν and αγω.]

A congregation; also, a term formerly used for the Lord's supper. Saxon Lexes.

SYN-CARP'OUS, a. [Gr. συν and καρπος, fruit.]

SYN-DO-CHE, n. [Gr. συνδοχή; συν and ελεγχω, to take.]

Expressed in different words.

SYN-CHRO-NIZE, v. i. [Supra.] To agree in time; to be simultaneous.

In rhetoric, a figure or trope by which the whole of a thing is put for a part, or a part for the whole; as the genus for the species, or the species for the genus, &c.

Expressing the same thing; conveying the same idea. We rarely find two words precisely synonymous. Wares and billows are sometimes synonymous, but not always.

SYN-CHRO-NOUS, a. Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYN-DO-CHE, n. [Gr. συνδοχή.]

When we speak of the large rolling swell of the sea, we may call it a wave or a billow; but when we speak of the small swell of a pond, we may call it a wave, but we may not call it a billow.

SYN-CHRO-NOUS-LY, adv. [Supra.] At the same time.

A disease of the eye, in which the iris adheres to the cornea or to the capsule of the crystalline lens.

SYN-ONY-MOUS-LY, adv. In a synonymous manner; in the same sense; with the same meaning.

SYN-CHY-SIS, n. [Gr. συν and χυσις.]

SYN-DO-CHE, n. [Gr. συνδοχή.]

SYN-TAC'TIC-AL-LY, adv. In conformity to syntax.

2. In music, an interruption of the regular measure; an inversion of the order of notes; a prolonging of a note begun on the unaccented part of a bar, to the accented part of the next bar; also, a term used when a note of one part at the beginning of a measure or half measure ends in the middle of a note of another part, and is followed by two or more longer notes before another short note occurs, of equal length with the first note, to make the number even.

SYN-DO-CHE, n. [Gr. συνδοχή.]

SYN-TAX, n. [L. syntaxis; Gr. συναρξίς; συν, together, and ταξις, to put.]

SYN-CO-PE, n. [Gr. συνκοπή, from συνκοπτός; συν and κοπτός, to cut off.]

SYN-DO-CHE, n. [Gr. συνδοχή.]

1. In grammar, the construction of sentences; the due arrangement of words in sentences, according to established usage. Syntax includes concord and regimen, or the agreement and government of words. Words, in every language, have certain connections and relations, as verbs and adjectives with nouns, which relations must be observed in the formation of sentences. A gross violation of the rules of syntax is a solecism.

1. In music, the same as SYNCOPATION; the division of a note introduced when two or more notes of one part answer to a single note of another.

SYN-DO-CHE, n. [Gr. συνδοχή.]

2. Connected system or order; union of things.

T.

T IS the twentieth letter of the English alphabet, and a close consonant. It represents a close joining of the end of the tongue to the root of the upper teeth, as may be perceived by the syllable at, et, at, ut, in attempting to pronounce which, the voice is completely intercepted. It is therefore numbered among the mutes, or close articulations, and it differs from d chiefly in its closeness; for in pronouncing ad, ed, we perceive the voice is not so suddenly and entirely intercepted, as in pronouncing at and et. T, by itself, has one sound only, as in taka, turn, bat, bolt, emitte, bitter. So we are accustomed to speak; but in reality, t can be hardly said to have any sound at all. Its use, like that of all mute articulations, is to modify the manner of uttering the vocal sound which precedes or follows it.
 When t is followed by h, as in think and that, the combination really forms a distinct sound, for which we have no single character. This combination has two sounds in English; a-spirated, as in think, and vocal, as in that.
 The letters ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of sh, as in nation, motion, partial, substantiate; as which are pronounced nashon, moshon, parshal, substanshate. In this case, t loses entirely its proper sound or use, and being blended with the subsequent letter, a new sound results from the combination, which is in fact a simple sound. In a few words, the combination ti has the sound of the English ch, as in Christian, mission, question.
T is convertible with d. Thus the Germans write tag, where we write day, and gut, for good. It is also convertible with s and z, for the Germans write wasser, for water, and tahm, for tame.
T, as an abbreviation, stands for theologia; as, S. T. D., sanctus theologiae doctor, doctor of divinity. In ancient monuments and writings, T. is an abbreviation, which stands for Titus, Titius, or Tullius.
 As a numeral, T, among the Latins, stood for 100, and with a dash over the top, T̄, for 100,000. Eneide.
 In music, T is the initial of tenor, vocal and instrumental; of tacet, for silence, as adagio tacet, when a person is to rest during the whole movement. In concertos and symphonies, it is the initial of tutti, the whole band, after a solo. It sometimes stands for tr. or trillo, a shake of a string or otherwise. [Local.]
 2. The end of a hoc; a tag.
 3. A cup. [Local.]

TAB'ARD, n. [W. tabar, from tāb, a spread or surface; It. tabarra.] A sort of tunic or mantle formerly worn, covering the body before and behind, and reaching below the loins, but open at the sides, from the shoulders downward; a herald's coat. Brande.

TAL'LOW-ISN, a. Having the properties or nature of tallow.

TAL'LOW-TREE, n. The Stillingia scifera, a tree of China and other parts. It takes this name from its producing a substance like tallow, and which is applied to the same purposes. The Vateria indica, a tree of Hindostan, affords a substance, in its general properties, intermediate between wax and tallow, and called PINEY TALLOW. P. Cyc.

TAL'LOW-Y, a. Greasy; having the qualities of tallow.

TAL'LY, n. [Fr. tailleur, Port. talhar, Sp. talhar, to cut. See TAIL.]

1. A piece of wood on which notches or scores are cut, as the marks of number. In purchasing and selling, it is customary for traders to have two sticks, or one stick left into two parts, and to mark with a score or notch, on each, the number or quantity of goods delivered; the seller keeping one stick, and the purchaser the other. Before the use of writing, this, or something like it, was the only method of keeping accounts, and tallies are received as evidence to courts of justice. In the English exchequer are tallies of loans, one part being kept in the exchequer, the other being given to the creditor in lieu of an obligation for money lent to government. Cyc.

TAST'ABLE, a. [from taste.] That may be tasted; savory; relishing.

TASTE, v. t. [Fr. taster, to feel; It. tastare; Norm. taster, to touch, to try; G. and D. tasten; Dan. tasser. The Dutch has toetsen, to touch, to try, to test; Dan. taster and, to attack or assault. This shows that the primary sense is to thrust or drive; allied perhaps to dash; hence, to strike, to touch, to bring one thing in contact with another.]
1. To perceive by means of the tongue; to have a certain sensation in consequence of something applied to the tongue, the organ of taste; as, to taste bread; to taste wine; to taste a sweet or an acid.
2. To try the relish of by the perception of the organs of taste.

TEL'E-SCOPE, n. [Fr., from Gr. τελος, end, or τηλε, at a distance, probably the latter, and σκοπεω, to see; It. and Sp. telescopio.]

An optical instrument employed in viewing distant objects, as the heavenly bodies. It assists the eye chiefly in two ways; first, by enlarging the visual angle under which a distant object is seen, and thus magnifying that object; and secondly, by collecting and conveying to the eye a larger beam of light than would enter the naked organ, and thus rendering objects distinct and visible which would otherwise be indistinct or invisible. Its essential parts are the object-glass, or concave mirror, which collects the beam of light, and forms an image of the object, and the eye-glass, which is a microscope, by which the image is magnified.

Reflecting telescope; a telescope in which the image is formed by a concave speculum, instead of an object-glass.

Refracting telescopes; a telescope in which the image is formed by an object-glass.

Galilean telescope; a refracting telescope in which the eye-glass is a concave instead of a convex lens. This was the construction originally adopted by Galileo, the inventor of the instrument.

11. To discover; to find; to discern. The colors are so blended that I can not tell where one ends and the other begins.

To tell off; to count; to divide. [W. Scott.]

Tell, though equivalent, in some respects, to speak and say, has not always the same application. We say, to tell this, that, or what, to tell a story, to tell a word, to tell truth or falsehood, to tell a number, to tell the reasons, to tell something or nothing; but we never say, to tell a speech, discourse, or oration, or to tell an argument or a lesson. It is much used in commands. Tell me the whole story; tell me all you know, or all that was said. Tell has frequently the sense of narrate, which speak and say have not.

TELL, s. e. To give an account; to make report.

That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.—Ps. xlvii.

2. To take effect; as, every shot tells.

3. To produce some effect; as, every expression tells.

To tell off; to inform. You must not disobey; I tell on you; } will tell of you if you do.

This is a common popular use of the word. To tell on, is quite vulgar, as well as improper.

TELL'ER, n. One that tells, relates, or communicates, the knowledge of something.

2. One who numbers.

3. In the exchequer of England, there are four officers called tellers, whose business is to receive all moneys due to the crown, and throw down a bill through a pipe into the tally-court, where it is received by the auditor's clerks, who write the words of the bill on a tally, and deliver it to be entered by the clerk of the tally. The tally is then split by the two deputy chamberlains, who have their seals, and while the senior deputy reads the one part, the junior examines the other with the other two clerks. [Cyc.]

[This word is supposed to be from tally, being in ancient records written TALLER.]

4. An officer of a bank, who receives and pays money on checks.

TELL'ER-SHIP, n. The office or employment of a teller.

TEMP-EST, n. [Fr. tempeste; L. tempestas; Sp. tempestad; It. tempesta; from L. tempus, time, season. The primary sense of tempest, time, is a falling, or that which falls, comes, or happens, from some verb which signifies to fall or come suddenly, or rather, to drive, to rush. Time is, properly, a coming, a season, that which presents itself, or is present. The sense of tempest is from the sense of rushing or driving. See TEMPERITY and TEMERARIOUS.]

1. An extensive current of wind, rushing with great velocity and violence, and commonly attended with rain, hail, or snow; a storm of extreme violence. We usually apply the word to a violent storm of considerable duration; but we say also of a tornado, it blew a tempest. The currents of wind are named, according to their respective degrees of force or rapidity, a breeze, a gale, a storm, a tempest, a hurricane; hot gale is also used as synonymous with storm, and storm with tempest. Gust is usually applied to a sudden blast of short duration.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be buried
Each on his rock transfixed. Milton.

2. A violent tumult or commotion; as, a popular or political tempest; the tempest of war.

THAN, adv. or conj. [Sax. thanne; Goth. than; D. dan.] This word signifies also then, both in English and Dutch. The Germans express the sense by als, as.]

This word is placed after some comparative adjective or adverb, to express comparison between what precedes and what follows. Thus Elijah said, I am not better than my fellows; wisdom is better than strength; Israel loved Joseph more than all his children; all nations are counted less than nothing; I who am less than the least of all saints; the last error shall be worse than the first; he that denies the faith is worse than an infidel.

After more, or an equivalent termination, the following word implies less, or worse; after less, or an equivalent termination, it implies more or better.

THANE, n. [Sax. thana, thana, a minister or servant; thegnian, thanian, to serve; D. and G. dienen, to serve; Sw. tiena, to serve; tienne, a servant; Dan. tiener, to serve; tiener, a servant.] If g is radical, this word belongs to Class Dg; if not, to Class Dn, No. 10.]

The thanes in England were formerly persons of some dignity; of these there were two orders, the king's thanes, who attended the Saxon and Danish kings in their courts, and held lands immediately of them, and the ordinary thanes, who were lords of manors, and who had a particular jurisdiction within their limits. After the Conquest, this title was discontinued, and baron took its place.

THANE'DOM, n. The property or jurisdiction of a thane.

THANE-LANDS, n. pl. Lands granted to thanes.

THANE'SHIP, n. The state or dignity of a thane; or his seigniority.

THANK, v. t. [Sax. thancian; G. and D. danken; Ice. thacka; Sw. tacka; Dan. takker.] We see by the Gothic dialects that n is not radical. To ascertain the primary sense, let us attend to its compounds; G. abdanken, (which in English would be aff-thank,) to dismiss, discharge, discard, send away, put off, to disband or break, as an officer; verdanken, to owe or be indebted; D. aflanken, to cashier or discharge. These senses imply a sending. Hence, thank is probably from the sense of giving, that is, a render or return.

1. To express gratitude for a favor; to make acknowledgments to one for kindness bestowed.

We are bound to thank God always for you. — 2 Thes. i. Joab bowed himself and thanked the king. — 2 Sam. xiv.

2. It is used ironically.

Weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
And thank yourself, if aught should fill amiss. Dryden.

THANK, n. [Generally in the plural. [Sax. thanc; THANKS, n. pl.] Gaelic, tainc.]

Expression of gratitude; an acknowledgment made to express a sense of favor or kindness received. Gratitude is the feeling or sentiment excited by kindness; thanks are the expression of that sentiment. Luke vi.

Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory. — 1 Cor. xv.

Thanks be to God for his unspesakable gift. — 2 Cor. ix.

He took bread and gave thanks to God. — Acts xxvii.

THANK'FUL, (thankt) pp. Having received expressions of gratitude.

THANK'FUL, a. [Sax. thansefull; Gaelic, taincal.] Grateful; impressed with a sense of kindness received, and ready to acknowledge it. The Lord's supper is to be celebrated with a thankful remembrance of his sufferings and death.

Be thankful unto him and bless his name. — Ps. c.

THANK'WORTHY, (-wur'the, i.) a. [thank and worthy.] Deserving thanks; meritorious. 1 Pet. ii.

THARM, n. [Sax. tharm; G. and D. darm.] Intestines twisted into a cord. [Local.]

THAT, an adjective, pronoun, or substitute. [Sax. that, that; Goth. thata; D. dat; G. das; Dan. det; Sw. det. Qu. G. ravras.] This word is called in Saxon and German an article, for it sometimes signifies the. It is called also in Saxon a pronoun, equivalent to id, istud, in Latin. In Swedish and Danish, it is called a pronoun of the neuter gender. But these distinctions are groundless and of no use. It is probably from the sense of setting.]

1. That is a word used as a definitive adjective, pointing to a certain person or thing before mentioned, or supposed to be understood. Here is that book we have been seeking this hour; here goes that man we were talking of.

It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city. — Matt. x.

2. That is used definitively, to designate a specific thing or person emphatically.

The woman was made whole from that hour. — Matt. ix.

In these cases, that is an adjective. In the two first examples, the may be substituted for it. Here is the book we have been seeking; here goes the man we were talking of. But in other cases, the can not supply its place, and that may be considered as more emphatically definitive than the.

3. That is used as the representative of a noun, either a person or a thing. In this use, it is often a pronoun and a relative. When it refers to persons, it is equivalent to who, and when it refers to a thing, it is equivalent to which. In this use, it represents either the singular number or the plural.

He that reproves a scooner gets into himself shame. — Prov. ix. They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of my head. — Ps. lxxiii. A judgment that is equal and impartial must incline to the greater probabilities. Wilkins. They shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend. — Matt. xiii.

4. That is also the representative of a sentence or part of a sentence, and often of a series of sentences. In this case, that is not strictly a pronoun, a word standing for a noun, but is, so to speak, a pro-sentence, the substitute for a sentence, to save the repetition of it.

And when Moses heard that, he was content. — Lev. x.

That here stands for the whole of what Aaron had said, or the whole of the preceding verse.

I will know your business, that I will. Shaks. Ye defraud, and that your brethren. — 1 Cor. vi.

That, sometimes, in this use, precedes the sentence or clause to which it refers.

That be far from thee, to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked. — Gen. xviii.

That here represents the clause in Italics.

5. That sometimes is the substitute for an adjective. You allege that the man is innocent; that he is not.

6. That, in the following use, has been called a conjunction. I heard that the Greeks had defented the Turks. But in this case, that has the same character as in No. 4. It is the representative of the part of the sentence which follows, as may be seen by inverting the order of the clauses. The Greeks had defented the Turks; I heard that. It is not that I love you less. That here refers to the latter clause of the sentence, as a kind of demonstrative.

7. That was formerly used for that which, like what.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen. — John iii.

[This use is no longer held legitimate.]

8. That is used in opposition to this, or by way of distinction.

If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that. — James iv.

9. When this and that refer to foregoing words, this, like the Latin hic and Fr. ceci, refers to the latter, and that to the former. It is the same with these and those.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire,
Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire;
But greedily that, its object would devour,
This taste the honey, and not wound the flower. Pope.

10. That sometimes introduces an explanation of something going before. "Religion consists in living up to those principles; that is, in acting in conformity to them." Here, that refers to the whole first clause of the sentence.

11. "Things are preached, not in that they are taught, but in that they are published." Here, that refers to the words which follow it.

So when that begins a sentence. "That we may fully understand the subject, let us consider the following propositions." That denotes purpose, or rather introduces the clause expressing purpose, as will appear by restoring the sentence to its natural order. "Let us consider the following propositions, that [for the purpose expressed in the following clause] we may fully understand the subject." "Attend that you may receive instruction." Here, also, that expresses purpose elliptically; "Attend for the purpose that you may receive instruction;" that referring to the last member.

This elliptical use of that is very frequent; the preposition for being understood. "A man travels that he may regain his health." He travels for that purpose, he may regain his health. The French often retains the preposition in such cases; pour que. "Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless." Phil. ii. 14. Do all things without murmurings, for that purpose, to that effect, ye may be blameless.

In that; a phrase denoting consequence, cause, or reason; that referring to the following sentence. Heb. v. 7.

THATCH, v. t. [Sax. thac, connected with theacan, theacan, to cover; L. tego, Eng. deck; G. dach, n. roof; D. dak; Sw. tak; Dan. tag, takke; Gaelic, tuighe, tuighe. The primary sense is, to put on, to spread over, or make close.]

1. To melt, dissolve, or become fluid, as ice or snow.
[It is remarkable that this word is used only of things that congeal by frost. We never say, to thaw metal of any kind.]
2. To become so warm as to melt ice and snow; ward of weather.

THAW, v. t. To melt; to dissolve; as ice, snow, hail, or frozen earth.

THAW, n. The melting of ice or snow; the resolution of ice into the state of a fluid; liquefaction by heat of any thing congealed by frost.

THAW/ED, (thawd), pp. Melted, as ice or snow.

THAW/ING, (thawd), pp. Dissolving; resolving into a fluid; liquefying; as any thing frozen.

THE, an adjective, or definitive adjective. [Sax. the; D. de. Qu. Ch. 87.]
1. This adjective is used as a definitive, that is, before nouns which are specific or understood; or it is used to limit their signification to a specific thing or things, or to describe them; as, the laws of the twelve tables. Ths independent tribunals of justice in our country are the security of private rights, and the best bulwark against arbitrary power. The sun is the source of light and heat.
This he calls the preaching of the cross. Stimson.

2. The is also used rhetorically before a noun in the singular number, to denote a species by way of distinction; a single thing representing the whole. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs; the almond-tree shall flourish; the grasshopper shall be a burden.

3. In poetry, the sometimes loses the final vowel before another vowel.
The adorning thee with so much art, is but a barbarous skill. Cowley.

4. The is used before adjectives in the comparative and superlative degree. The longer we continue in sin, the more difficult it is to reform. The most strenuous exertions will be used to annihilate Greece. The most we can do is to submit; the best we can do; the worst that can happen.

THE-AN'DRIC, a. [Gr. θεος, God, and ανδρ, a man.]

5. A place of action or exhibition; as, the theater of the world.

6. A building for the exhibition of scholastic exercises, as at Oxford, or for other exhibitions.

7. In medical institutions, a room with circular seats, and a table in the centre turning on a pivot, for anatomical demonstrations. Cyc.

THE'A-TINS, n. pl. An order of Italian monks, established in 1523, expressly to oppose the Reformation, and to raise the tone of piety among Roman Catholics. They hold no property, nor do they beg, but depend on what Providence sends. Their chief employment is preaching and giving religious instruction. At one time, they attempted missions to Tartary and Georgia, in Asia, but soon abandoned them. Their name, Theatins, is derived from Theate, or Chieti, a city of Naples, the archbishop of which was a principal founder of the order. But they bore various names; as Regular Clerks of the Community, Pauline Monks, Apostolic Clerks, and Regular Clerks of the Divine Providence. The order never flourished much out of Italy. Murdock.

THE'A-TRAL, a. Belonging to a theater. [Not in use.]

THE-AT-RIC, } a. Pertaining to a theater, or to THE-AT-RIC-AL, } scenic representations; resembling the manner of dramatic performers; as, theatrical dress; theatrical performances; theatrical gestures.

THE-AT-RIC-AL-LY, adv. In the manner of actors on the stage; in a manner suiting the stage.

THE-AT-RIC-ALS, n. pl. Dramatic performances.

THEAVE, } n. A ewe of the first year. [Local.]
THAVE, }

THE'BAN-YEAR, n. In ancient chronology, the Egyptian year of 365 days and 6 hours. Bryant.

THE'EA, n. [L. from Gr. θηκη.]
A sheath or case.

THE'CA-PHORE, n. [Gr. θηκη, a case or cover, and φορεω, to bear or carry.]
In botany, the pedicel or stipe of an ovary, when it has one, called also GYNOPHORE, BASICYMIUM, and PODOCYMIUM. Lindley.

THE'CO-DONTS, n. pl. [Gr. θηκη and odontes.]
A tribe of extinct saurians, having the teeth implanted in sockets. Owen.

THEE, pron. i. obj. case of Thou. [Contracted from Sax. thee; Goth. thig; Francic, thee; Goth. thuk. See THOU.]

THEE, v. i. [Goth. thihan; Sax. thean.]
To thrive; to prosper. [Obs.] Chaucer.

THEFT, n. [Sax. thyfta. See THEF.]
1. The act of stealing. In law, the private, unlawful, felonious taking of another person's goods or movables, with an intent to steal them. To constitute theft, the taking must be in private, or without the owner's knowledge; and it must be unlawful or felonious, that is, it must be with a design to deprive the owner of his property privately and against his will. Theft differs from robbery, as the latter is a violent taking from the person, and of course not private.
2. The thing stolen. Exod xxii

THEFT'-BÖTE, n. [Sax. thof and Sax. bote, compensation.]
In law, the receiving of a man's goods again from a thief; or a compensation for them, by way of composition, and to prevent the prosecution of the thief. This in England subjects a person to a heavy fine, as by this means the punishment of the criminal is prevented.

THE/I-FORM, a. Having the form of tea.

THE/IN, n. A principle obtained from tea. It is identical with CAFFEIN, which see.

THE/IR, (thair), a. pron. [Sax. thiora; Ice. theirra.]
1. Theirs has the sense of a pronominal adjective, denoting of them, or the possession of two or more; as, their voices; their garments; their houses; their land; their country.
2. Theirs is used as a substitute for the adjective and the noun to which it refers, and in this case, it may be the nominative in a verb. "Our land is the most extensive, but theirs is the best cultivated." Here theirs stands as the representative of their land, and is the nominative to is.
Nothing but the name of real appears
Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

In this use, theirs is not in the possessive case, for then there would be a double possessive.

THE/ISM, n. [from Gr. θεος, God.]
The belief or acknowledgment of the existence of a God, as opposed to ATHEISM. Theism differs from deism, for although deism implies a belief in the existence of a God, yet it signifies, in modern usage, a denial of revelation, which theism does not.

THE/IST, n. One who believes in the existence of a God.

THE-IST/IC, } a. Pertaining to theism, or to a
THE-IST/IC-AL, } theist; according to the doctrine of theists.

THEM, pron., the objective case of THEY, and of both genders. [In our mother tongue, them is an adjective, answering to the, in the dative and ablative cases of both numbers. The common people continue to use it in the plural number as an adjective, for they say, bring them horses, or them horses are to be led to water.]
Go ye to them that will, and buy for yourselves. — Matt. xxv.
They shall the king say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father. — Matt. xxv.

THEME, n. [L. thema; Gr. θεμα, from τιθημι, to set or place.]
1. A subject or topic on which a person writes or speaks. The preacher takes a text for the theme of his discourse.
When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off. Shak.

2. A short dissertation composed by a student. Milton.

3. In grammar, a radical verb, or the verb in its primary absolute state, not modified by inflections; as, the infinitive mode in English. But a large portion of the words called themes in Greek, are not the radical words, but are themselves derivative forms of the verb. The fact is the same in other languages.

4. In music, a series of notes selected as the text or subject of a new composition.

THE/MIS, n. [Gr.] In the mythology of the Greeks, the goddess of law.

THEM-SELVES, a compound of them and selves, and added to they by way of emphasis or pointed distinction. Thus we say, they themselves have done the mischief; they can not blame others. In this case, themselves is in the nominative case, and may be considered as an emphatical pronoun.
In some cases, themselves is used without they, and stands as the only nominative to the following verb. Themselves have done the mischief.
This word is used also in the objective case after a verb or preposition. Things in themselves innocent, may, under certain circumstances, cease to be so.
They open to themselves all length the way. Milton.

THEN, adv. [Goth. thanne; Sax. thane; G. dann; D. dan. See THENCE.]
1. At that time, referring to a time specified, either past or future.
And the Canaanite was then in the land. — Gen. xii.
That is, when Abram migrated and came into Canaan.
Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known. I Cor. xiii.

2. Afterward; soon afterward or immediately.
First be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. — Matt. v.

3. In that case; in consequence. Gal. iii. Job liii.
If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.
Now, then, be all thy weighty cares away. Dryden.

5. At another time; as, now and then, at one time and another. Milton.

6. That time.
Till then who knew
The force of those dice arms? Milton.

Then is often used elliptically for the then existing; as, the then administration. Burke.

THENCE, (thens), adv. [Sax. thanan, thanon; G. dannen; from than, dann, then, supra. Then signifies, properly, place, or set time, from sitting, and thence is derived from it. So the Germans say, von dannen, from thence.]
1. From that place.
When you depart thence, shake off the dust of your feet. — Mark vi.
It is more usual, though not necessary, to use from before thence.
Thou wilt feed and fitch thee from thence. — Gen. xxvii.
2. From that time.
There shall be no more thence an infant of days. — Is. lix.
3. For that reason.
Not to sit like with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous about him. Milton.

THENCE/FORTH, (thens'forth), adv. [thence and forth.] From that time.
If the salt bath lost its savor, it is thenceforth good for nothing. — Matt. v.
This is also preceded by from, though not from any necessity.
And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him. — John xix.

THENCE-FOR/WARD, adv. [thence and forward.]
From that time onward. Kettelwell.

THENCE-FROM, adv. [thence and from.] From that place. [Not in use.] Smith.

THE-O-BRŌ'MA, n. [Gr. Θεός and βρώμα.]
 1. The name of a genus of plants producing the cacao or chocolate nut.
 2. A superior preparation of the cacao, or cocoa. London.

THE-O-CHRIST'IC, a. [Gr. Θεός and Χριστός.]
 Anointing by God.

THE-O-C'RAC'Y, n. [Fr. theocratie; It. teocrazia; Sp. teocracia; Gr. Θεός, God, and κράτος, power; κράτος, to hold.]
 Government of a state by the immediate direction of God; or the state thus governed. Of this species the Israelites furnish an illustrious example. The theocracy lasted till the time of Saul.

THE-O-CRA-SY, n. [Gr. Θεός and κράσις, mixture.]
 In ancient philosophy, an intimate union of the soul with God in contemplation.

THE-O-CRAT'IC, } a. Pertaining to a theocracy;
THE-O-CRAT'IC-AL, } administered by the immediate direction of God; as, the theoretical state of the Israelites. The government of the Israelites was theocratic.

THE-O-D'IC'Y, n. [Fr. theodicté, from Gr. Θεός, God, and δική, justice.]
 A vindication of the justice of God in regard to the natural and moral evil that exists under his government. Leibnitz.

THE-OD'O-LITE, n. [Qu. Gr. θεο, to run, and δολιχός, long.]
 A surveyor's compass furnished with a small telescope for the more accurate measurement of angles. Olmsted.

THE-OG'O-NIST, n. A writer on theogony.

THE-OG'O-NY, n. [Fr. theogonie; Gr. Θεογονία; Θεός, God, and γενν, or γενναι, to be born.]
 In mythology, the generation of the gods; or that branch of heathen theology which taught the genealogy of their deities. Hesiod composed a poem concerning that theogony, or the creation of the world and the descent of the gods.

THE-OL'O-GAS-TER, n. A kind of quack in divinity; as, a quack in medicine is called Μεδικαστέρα. Burton.

THE-O-LŌ'G'IAN, n. [See THEOLOGŌY.] A divine; a person well versed in theology, or a professor of divinity. Milton.

THE-O-LOG'IC, } a. [See THEOLOGŌY.] Pertain-
THE-O-LOG'IC-AL, } ing to divinity, or the science of God and of divine things; as, a theological treatise; theological criticism. Swift. Cyc.

THE-O-LOG'IC-AL-LY, adv. According to the principles of theology.

THE-OL'O-GIST, n. A divine; one studious in the science of divinity, or one well versed in that science.

THE-OL'O-GIZE, v. t. To render theological. Glasville.

THE-OL'O-GIZE, v. i. To frame a system of theology. [Little used.]

THE-OL'O-GIZ-ED, pp. Rendered theological.

THE-OL'O-GIZ-ER, n. A divine, or a professor of theology. [Unusual.] Boyle.

THE-OL'O-GIZ-ING, pp. Rendering theological.

THE-O-LOGUE, (-log) [Fr. theologie; It. and Sp. teología; Gr. Θεολογία; Θεός, God, and λογος, discourse.]
 Divinity; the science of God and divine things; or the science which teaches the existence, character, and attributes of God, his laws and government, the doctrines we are to believe, and the duties we are to practice. Theology consists of two branches, natural and revealed. Natural theology is the knowledge we have of God from his works, by the light of nature and reason. Revealed theology is that which is to be learned only from revelation.

Moral theology teaches us the divine laws relating to our manners and actions, that is, our moral duties. Speculative theology teaches or explains the doctrines of religion, as objects of faith.

Scholastic theology is that which proceeds by reasoning, or which derives the knowledge of several divine things from certain established principles of faith. Tillotson. Cyc.

THE-OM'A-CHIST, (-kist), n. [Gr. Θεός, God, and μαχ, combat.]
 One who fights against the gods. Bailey.

THE-OM'A-CHY, n. [Supra.] A fighting against the gods, as the battle of the giants with the gods.

2. Opposition to the divine will.

THE-O-MAN-CY, n. [Gr. Θεός and μαντεία.]
 A kind of divination drawn from the responses of oracles among heathen nations.

THE-O-PA-THE'T'IC, a. Pertaining to theopathy. Hartley.

THE-OP'A-THY, n. [Gr. Θεός, God, and πάθος, passion.]
 Sympathy with the divine nature; like feelings to those of God. Hartley.

THE-OP'H'A-NY, n. [Gr. Θεός and φαινομαι, to appear.]
 A manifestation of God to man by actual appearance.

THE-O-PHI-LAN'THRO-PIST, n. [Gr. Θεός and φιλάθρωπος.]

A title assumed by some persons in France during the revolution. Their object was to establish reason in the place of Christianity.

THE-OP-NECST'IC, a. [Gr. Θεός and πνευστικός.]
 Given by the inspiration of the Spirit of God.

THE-OP-NECST-Y, n. Divine inspiration; the mysterious power which the divine Spirit exercises in making men to know and communicate the truth. Goussen.

THE-OR'BO, n. [It. torba; Fr. torbe, or torbe.] but with two heads, to each of which some of the strings were attached. It was also called the Ανεχούρα, and was used chiefly, if not only, as an accompaniment to the voice. It has long fallen into disuse. P. Cyc.

THE-O-REM, n. [Fr. theoreme; Sp. and It. teorema; Gr. θεωρημα, from θεωρεω, to see.]

1. In mathematics, a theorem is a proposition to be proved by a chain of reasoning. A theorem is something to be proved; a problem is something to be done. Day.

2. In algebra or analysis, it is sometimes used to denote a rule, particularly when that rule is expressed by symbols. Cyc.

A universal theorem extends to any quantity without restriction.

A particular theorem extends only to a particular quantity.

A negative theorem expresses the impossibility of any assertion.

THE-O-RE-MAT'IC, } a. Pertaining to a theo-

THE-O-REM'IC, } rem; consisting of theorems; as, theoremic truth. Grew.

THE-O-RET'IC, } a. [Gr. θεωρητικός. See *THE-
 THE-O-RET'IC-AL, } ovv.]*

Pertaining to theory; depending on theory or speculation; speculative; terminating in theory or speculation; not practical; as, theoretical learning; theoretic sciences. The sciences are divided into theoretical, as theology, philosophy, and the like, and practical, as medicine and law.

THE-O-RET'IC-AL-LY, adv. In or by theory; in speculation; speculatively; not practically. Some things appear to be theoretically true which are found to be practically false. Shak.

THE-O-RIG, n. Speculation. Shak.

THE-OR'IC, a. Pertaining to the theorica. Smith's Dict.

2. Theoretic. [Obs.]

THE-OR'IC-A, n. pl. [Gr. θεωρητικός.]
 A term applied to the public moneys expended at Athens on festivals, sacrifices, and public entertainments, particularly theatrical performances, and in largesses among the people. Smith's Dict.

THE-OR'IC-AL-LY, adv. Speculatively. [Not used.]

THE-OR'IST, } n. One who forms theories; one
THE-O-RIZ-ER, } given to theory and speculation.

The greatest theorists have given the preference to such a government as that of this kingdom. Addison.

THE-O-RIZE, v. t. To form a theory or theories; to speculate; as, to theorize on the existence of phlogiston.

THE-O-RIZ-ER, n. A theorist.

THE-O-RIZ-ING, pp. Forming a theory.

THE-O-RY, n. [Fr. théorie; It. teoria; L. theoria; Gr. θεωρία, from θεωρεω, to see or contemplate.]

1. Speculation; a doctrine, or scheme of things, which terminates in speculation or contemplation, without a view to practice. It is here taken in an unfavorable sense, as implying something visionary.

2. An exposition of the general principles of any science; as, the theory of music.

3. The science distinguished from the art; as, the theory and practice of medicine.

4. The philosophical explanation of phenomena, either physical or moral; as, Lavoisier's theory of combustion; Smith's theory of moral sentiments.

Theory is distinguished from hypothesis thus: a theory is founded on inferences drawn from principles which have been established on independent evidence; a hypothesis is a proposition assumed to account for certain phenomena, and has no other evidence of its truth than that it affords a satisfactory explanation of those phenomena. Olmsted.

THE-O-SOPH'IC, } a. Pertaining to theosophy.
THE-O-SOPH'IC-AL, } Murdock.

THE-OS'O-PHISM, n. [Gr. Θεός, God, and σοφισμα, comment; σοφός, wise.]
 Theosophy, or a process of it. Murdock.

THE-OS'O-PHIST, n. One addicted to theosophy. Murdock.

THE-OS'O-PHIZE, v. i. To practice theosophy. Murdock.

THE-OS'O-PHY, n. [Gr. Θεός, God, and σοφία, wisdom.]
 Supposed intercourse with God and superior spirits, and consequent attainment of superhuman knowledge, by physical processes; as by the theurgic operations of some ancient Platonists, or by the chemical processes of the German fire philosophers. Murdock.

THER-A-PEUT'IC, a. [Gr. θεραπευτικός, from θεραπειω, to nurse, serve, or cure.]
 Curative; that pertains to the healing art; that is concerned in discovering and applying remedies for diseases.

Medicine is justly distributed into prophylactic, or the art of preserving health, and therapeutic, or the art of restoring it. Watts.

THER-A-PEUT'ICS, n. That part of medicine which respects the discovery and application of remedies for diseases. Therapeutics teaches the use of diet and of medicines. Cyc.

2. A religious sect described by Philo. They were devotees to their religious tenets.

THERE, (thäre;) adv. [Sax. ther; Goth. thor; D. daar; Sw. där; Dan. där.] This word was formerly used as a pronoun, as well as an adverb of place. • Thus, in Saxon, therto was to him, to her, or to it.

1. In that place.

The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed. — Gen. ii.

2. It is sometimes opposed to HERE; there denoting the place most distant. Milton.

Darkness there might well seem twilight here.

3. Here and there; in one place and another; as, here a little, and there a little.

4. It is sometimes used by way of exclamation, calling the attention to something distant; as, there, there! see there! look there!

5. There is used to begin sentences, or before a verb; sometimes pertinently, and sometimes without signification; but its use is so firmly established that it can not be dispensed with.

Wherever there is sense or perception, there some idea is actually produced. Locke.

There have been those that have delivered themselves from their ill by the good fortune or virtue. Suckling.

And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son. — Mark i.

6. In composition, there has the sense of a pronoun, as in Saxon; as therby, which signifies by that.

THERE-A-BOUT, } comp. [there and about. The
THERE-A-BOUTS, } latter is less proper, but most commonly used.]

1. Near that place. Shak.

2. Nearly; near that number, degree, or quantity; as, ten men, or thereabouts.

3. Concerning that. [Not much used.] Luke xxiv.

THERE-AFTER, comp. [there and after. Sax. ther-after, after that.]

1. According to that; and accordingly.

When you can draw the head indifferently well, proportion the body thereafter. Peachment.

2. After that. Spenser.

THERE-AT, comp. [there and at.] At that place.

Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. — Matt. vii.

2. At that; at that thing or event; on that account.

Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it is thereat. Hooker.

THERE-BY, } comp. [there and by.] By that; by that means; in consequence of that.

Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace; thereby good shall come unto thee. — Job xxii.

THERE-FOR, } comp. [there and for.] For that, or this, or it.

THERE-FORE, (there'fore or there'fore,) comp. [there and for.] For that; for that or for this reason, referring to something previously stated.

I have married a wife, and therefore I can not come. — Luke xiv.

2. Consequently. Spectator.

3. In return or recompense for this or that.

What shall we have, therefore? — Matt. xix.

THERE-FROM, } comp. [there and from.] From this or that.

Turn not aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left. — Josh. xxiii.

THERE-IN, } comp. [there and in.] In that or this place, time, or thing.

Bring forth abundantly to the earth and multiply therein. — Gen. ix.

Ye shall keep the Sabbath — whosoever doeth any work therein — that soul shall be cut off. — Ex. xxxi.

Therein our letters do not well agree. Shak.

THERE-INTO, } comp. [there and into.] Into that place.

THERE-OF, } comp. [there and of.] Of that or this
 In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die. — Gen. iii.

THERE-ON, } comp. [there and on.] On that or this
 Then the king said, Hang him thereon. — Esther vii.

THERE-OUT, } comp. [there and out.] Out of that or this. Lev. ii.

THERE-TO, } comp. [there and to, or unto.] To
THERE-UNTO, } that or this; i.

Add the fifth part thereto. — Lev. v.

THERE-UN'DER, } comp. [there and under.] Under that or this. Raleigh.

THERE-UP-ON, } comp. [there and upon.] Upon that or this.

The remnant of the house of Judah, they shall feed therewith. Zeph. ii.

2. In consequence of that.

He hopes to find you forward,
And thereupon he scolds you this good news. Shak.

3. Immediately.

THERE-WHILE, comp. [there and while.] At the same time. [Obs.] Wicliif.
THERE-WITH, comp. [there and with.] With that or thus.

I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. — Phil. iv.

THERE-WITH-AL, comp. [there and withal.] Over and above.

2. At the same time.

3. With that. [This word is obsolete.]

[The foregoing compounds of there with the prepositions are for the most part deemed inelegant and obsolete. Some of them, however, are in good use, and particularly in the law style.]

THERIAC-BREAD, (thief's bread), n. [Sax. therf, theorf, unfermented.]

Unleavened bread. [Not in use.] Wicliif.

THERIAC, n. [L. theriaca, Gr. θηριακον, treathe-ri-a-ca,] cl.

A name given by the ancients to various compositions esteemed efficacious against the effects of poison, but afterward restrained chiefly to what has been called THERIACA ANDROMACHI, or VENICE TWEALED, which is a compound of sixty-four drugs, prepared, pulverized, and reduced by means of honey to an electuary. Cyc.

THERIAC, a. Pertaining to theriac; medicinal. Bacon.

THERMAL, a. [L. therma, warm baths; Gr. θερμα, from θεω, to warm.]

Pertaining to heat; warm; a term applied chiefly to warm springs; as, thermal waters.

THERMIDOR, n. [Gr. θερμο, warm.] The name of the 11th month of the French republican year, commencing July 10, and ending August 17.

THERMO-GEN, n. [Gr. θερμη, heat, and γενος, γενεα, to generate.]

The elementary matter of heat; caloric; a term applied chiefly to warm springs. Good.

THERMO-LAMP, n. [Gr. θερμο, warm, from θεω, heat, and λαμπη, lamp.]

An instrument for furnishing light by means of inflammable gas. Med. Repos.

THERMOMETER, n. [Gr. θερμο, warm, from θεω, heat, and μετρον, measure.]

An instrument for measuring heat; founded on the property which heat possesses of expanding all bodies, the rate or quantity of expansion being supposed proportional to the degree of heat applied, and hence indicating that degree. The thermometer indicates only the sensible heat of bodies, and gives us no information respecting the quantity of latent heat, or of combined heat, which those bodies may contain. [See also DIFFERENTIAL THERMOMETER.] Olmsted.

THERMO-METRIC-AL, a. Pertaining to a thermometer; as, the thermometrical scale or tube.

2. Made by a thermometer; as, thermometrical observations.

THERMO-METRIC-AL-LY, adv. By means of a thermometer.

THERMO-SCOPE, n. [Gr. θερμο, heat, and σκοπεω, to see.]

An instrument contrived by Count Rumford for measuring minute differences of temperature. As modified by Professor Leslie, it was afterward called the DIFFERENTIAL THERMOMETER. Olmsted.

THERMO-SCOPI-C, a. Pertaining to the thermoscope.

THERMO-STAT, n. [Gr. θερμο, warm, and στατη, a self-acting physical apparatus for regulating temperature, by the unequal expansion of different metals by heat.] Ure.

THERMO-STAT-IC, a. Pertaining to the thermostat. Ure.

THERMO-TENSION, n. [Gr. θερμο, hot, and λησις, a stretching.]

Literally, a stretching by heat. This word is applied by Professor Johnson to a process of increasing the direct cohesion of wrought iron. It consists in heating the metal to a determinate temperature, generally from 500 to 600 degrees Fahrenheit, and in that state giving to it, by appropriate machinery, a mechanical strain or tension in the direction in which the strength is afterward to be exerted. The degree of tensile force applied is determined beforehand by trials on the same quality of metal at ordinary atmospheric temperature, to ascertain what force would, in that case, have been sufficient to break the piece which is to be submitted to theriotension. If this process should succeed, it may be of great use in giving strength to chain cables.

THESE, (theez), pron.; pl. of THIS; used as an adjective or substitute. These is opposed to those, as this is to that; and when two persons or things, or collections of things, are named, these refers to the things or persons which are nearest in place or order, or which are last mentioned.

Some place the bliss in action, some in ease; Those call it pleasure, and contentment these. Pope.

Here these is a substitute for these persons, and for the persons last mentioned, who place their bliss in ease.

THESIS, n. [L. thesis; Gr. θεσις, a position, from τιθημι, to set.]

1. A position or proposition which a person advances and offers to maintain, or which is actually maintained by argument; a theme; a subject; particularly, a subject or proposition for a school or university exercise, or the exercise itself.

2. In logic, every proposition may be divided into thesis and hypothesis. Thesis contains the thing affirmed or denied, and hypothesis the conditions of the affirmation or negation. Cyc.

3. In music, the unaccented or unperceived part of the measure, which the Greeks expressed by the downward beat.

THESMO-THETE, n. [Gr. θεσμοθετης.] A law-giver; a legislator; one of the six inferior archons

THESPIAN, a. [from Thespis.] [at Athens.] A term applied to tragic acting.

THETA, n. [Gr. θ.]

The unlucky letter of the Greek alphabet, so called from being used by the judges in passing condemnation on a prisoner, it being the first letter of the Greek βρωτος, death.

THETIC-AL, a. [from Gr. θετικος. See THESIS.] Laid down. Morc.

THEURGIC, a. [from θεουργη.] Pertaining to theurgic hymns; songs of incantation.

THEUR-GIST, n. One who pretends to or is addicted to theurgy. Hallywell.

THEUR-GY, n. [Gr. θεουργια; θεος, God, and εργον, work.]

Among the Egyptian Platonists, an imaginary science and art. As a science, it was supposed to have been revealed to men by the gods themselves in very ancient times, and to have been handed down traditionally by the priests. As an art, it was the ability, by means of certain acts, habits, words, and symbols, of moving the gods to impart to us secrets which surpass the powers of reason, to lay open to us the future, and to render themselves visible. See Jamblichus de Mysteriis Egypti, l. c. 28-29. Murdock.

THIN-OUT, v. i. In geology, strata are said to thin out when they gradually diminish in thickness until they disappear. Brande.
THIN-SKIN-NED, a. Having a thin skin; hence, unduly sensitive.
THINE, pronominal adj. [Goth. theina, theina; Sax. thia; G. dein; Fr. tien; probably contracted from thigen. See THOU.]
 Thy; belonging to thee; relating to thee; being the property of thee. It was formerly used for thy, before a vowel.
 Then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure. — Deut. xxi.
 But in common usage, thy is now used before a vowel in all cases.
 The principal use of thine now is when a verb is interposed between this word and the noun to which it refers. I will not take any thing that is thine. Thine is the kingdom, said the power, and the glory.
 In the following passage, thine is used as a substitute for thy righteousness.
 I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only. — Ps. lxxl.
 In some cases it is preceded by the sign of the possessive case, like nouns, and is then also to be considered as a substitute.
 If any of thine be driven out to the utmost parts of heaven. — Deut. xxx.
 It is to be observed that thine, like thou, is used only in the solemn style. In familiar and common language, your and years are always used in the singular number as well as the plural.
THING, n. [*Sax. thing, a thing, a cause; for his thing, for his cause or sake; also, thing, and ge-thing, a meeting, council, or convention; thingan, thingian, to hold a meeting, to plead, to supplicate; thingere, an intercessor; thingung, intercession; G. ding, a thing, a court; dingan, to go to law, to hire or haggle; Dingatag, Tuesday, (thing's day); bedding, condition, clause; deddingen, to agree, to bargain or contract, to chепен; D. ding, thing, business; dingan, to plead, to attempt, to chепен; dingbank, the bar; dingdang, session-day; dingere, dingster, a pleader; dingtaal, plea; Dingdag, Tuesday; bedding, condition, agreement; beddingen, to condition; Svt. ting, thing, cause, also a court, assizes; tingan, to hire, bargain, or agree; Dan. ting, a thing, affair, business, case, a court of justice; tingere, to strike up a bargain, to haggle; tingbog, records of a court, (thing-book) tingdag, the court day, the assizes; tinghold, jurisdiction; tingmænd, jurors, jury, (thing-men) tingesag, a cause or suit at law, (thing-sake).] The primary sense of thing, is that which comes, falls, or happens, like event, from L. evenio. The primary sense of the root, which is tig or thig, is to press, urge, drive, or strain, and hence its application to courts, or suits at law; a seeking of right. We observe that Dingdag, Dingdag, in some of the dialects, signifies Tuesday, and this from the circumstance that that day of the week was, as it still is in some states, the day of opening courts; that is, litigation day, or suitor's day, a day of striving for justice; or perhaps combat day, the day of trial by battle. This leads to the unfolding of another fact. Among our ancestors, Tig, or Tig, was the name of the deity of combat and war, the Teutonic Mars; that is, strife, combat deified. This word was contracted into tin or tu, and hence Tines-dag or Tines-dag, Tuesday, the day consecrated to Tig, the god of war. But it seems this is merely the day of commencing court and trial; litigation day. This Tig, the god of war, is strife, and this leads us to the root of thing, which is, to drive, urge, strive. So ere, in Latin, is connected with crus, accused. For words of like signification, see Sax and Catsx.]
 1. An event or action; that which happens or falls out, or that which is done, told, or proposed. This is the general signification of the word in the Scriptures; as, after these things, that is, events.
 And the thing was very grievous to Abraham's sight, because of his son. — Gen. xxi.
 Then Laban said Bethuel answered and said, The thing proceedeth from the Lord. — Gen. xxiv.
 And Jacob said, All these things are against me. — Gen. xli.

THINK, v. t. To conceive; to imagine.
 Chariy thinketh us evil. — 1 Cor. xiii.
 2. To believe; to consider; to esteem.
 Nor think superfluous others' aid. Milton.
 3. To seem or appear, as in the phrases, me thinketh or methinks, and methought. These are genuine Saxon phrases, equivalent to it seems to me, it seemed to me. In these expressions, me is actually in the dative case; almost the only instance remaining in the language. Sax. "genoth thukt," sabia visum est; it appeared enough or sufficient; "me thincth," miki videtur, it seems in me; I perceive.
 To think much; to grudge.
 He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton.
 To think much of; to hold in high esteem.
 To think scorn; to disdain. Eeth. iii.
THINKER, n. One who thinks; but chiefly, one who thinks in a particular manner; as, a close thinker; a deep thinker; a coherent thinker. Locke. Swift.

THIS, definite adjective, or substitute; pl. THESE. [Sax. this; Dan. pl. disse; Sw. dessa, desse; G. das, dessen; D. derze, dit.]

1. This is a definitive, or definite adjective, denoting something that is present or near in place or time, or something just mentioned. Is this your younger brother? What trespass is this which ye have committed?

Who did this, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? — John ix.

When they heard this, they were pricked to the heart. — Acts ii.

In the latter passage, this is a substitute for what had preceded, viz., the discourse of Peter just delivered. In like manner, this often represents a word, a sentence, or clause, or a series of sentences or events.

In some cases, it refers to what is future, or to be immediately related.

But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. — Matt. xxiv.

Here this refers to the whole subsequent member of the sentence.

2. By this, is used elliptically for by this time; as, by this the mail has arrived.

3. This is used with words denoting time past; as, I have taken no snuff for this month; and often with plural words. I have not wept this forty years.

In this case, this, in the singular, refers to the whole term of time or period; this period of forty

4. This is opposed to that. [years.]

This way and that the wavering sails they bend. Pope.

*A body of this or that denomination is produced.* Boyle.

This and that, in this use, denote difference indefinitely.

5. When this and that refer to different things before expressed, this refers to the thing last mentioned, and that to the thing first mentioned. [See THESE.]

Their judgment in this we may not, and in that we need not, follow. Hooker.

6. It is sometimes opposed to other.

Consider the arguments which the author had to write this, or to designe the other, before you arraign him. Dryden.

THISTLE, (this'tl), n. [Sax. thistel; G. and D. distel; Sw. tistel.]

The common name of numerous prickly plants of the class Syngenesia, and several genera; as the common corn thistle, or Canada thistle; the spear thistle; the milk thistle, of the genus Carduus; the blessed thistle, of the genus Centaura; the globe thistle, of the genus Echinops; the cotton thistle, of the genus Onopordion; and the sow thistle, of the genus Sonchus. The name is also given to other prickly plants not of the class Syngenesia; as the fuller's thistle or teal, of the genus Dipsacus, and the melon thistle, and thorn thistle, of the genus Melocactus. Lec. Bigelov.

One species of thistle (Carduus arvensis) grows in fields among grain, and is extremely troublesome to farmers. It is called in America the CANADA THISTLE, as it first appeared in Canada, where it was probably introduced from France, as it abounds in Normandy, and also in England. A larger species in America (Carduus lanceolatus) is indigenous, but it spreads slowly, and gives no trouble.

Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee. — Gen. iii.

The thistle is the national emblem of Scotland.

THIST'LY, (this'ly), a. Overgrown with thistles; as, thistly ground.

THÖRN, n. [Sax. thorn; G. dorn; D. doern; Dan. torre; Slav. tor; Goth. thournas; W. draen. Qu. is not the latter contracted from the Gaelic draegham?] 1. A tree or shrub armed with spines, or sharp, ligneous shoots; as, the black thorn, white thorn, hawthorn, buckthorn, &c. The word is sometimes incorrectly applied to a bush with prickles; as, a rose on a thorn.

2. A sharp, ligneous, or woody shoot from the stem of a tree or shrub; a sharp process from the woody part of a plant; a spine. Thorn differs from prickle; the latter being applied to the sharp points issuing from the bark of a plant, and not attached to the wood, as in the rose and bramble. But, in common usage, thorn is applied to the prickle of the rose, and, in fact, the two words are used promiscuously.

3. Any thing troublesome. St. Paul had a thorn in the flesh. 2 Cor. xii. Ann. xxiii.
 4. In Scripture, great difficulties and impediments. I will hedge up thy way with thorns. — Hos. ii.

THORP, Sax. thorpe; D. dorp; G. dorf; Sw. and Dan. torp; W. tres; Gaelic, Ir. traabh; L. tribus. The word in Welsh signifies, a dwelling-place, a homestead, a hamlet, a town. When applied to a single house, it answers to the Sax. han, a house, whence hamlet and home. In the Teutonic dialects, it denotes a village. The primary sense is, probably, a house, a habitation, from fixedness; hence, a hamlet, a village, a tribe; as in rude ages the dwelling of the head of a family was soon surrounded by the houses of his children and descendants. In our language, it occurs now only in names of places and persons.

THOSE, pron. pl. of THAT; as, those men; those temples. When those and these are used in reference to two things or collections of things, those refers to the first-mentioned, as these does to the last-mentioned. [See THAX, and the example there given.]

THOTH, n. Among the ancient Egyptians, the god of eloquence, and supposed to be the inventor of writing and philosophy. He corresponded to the Mercury of the Romans.

THOU, pron. in the obj. THEE. [Sax. thu; G. Sw. and Dan. du; L. Fr. It. Sp. Port. and Russ. tu; Sans. tuam.] The nominative case is probably contracted, for in the oblique cases it is in Sw. and Dan. dig, in Goth. thak, Sax. thec. So in Hindoo, tu in the nominative makes in the dative tuko; Gipsy, tu, tuke. In Russ. the verb is tukaye, to thou.
 The second personal pronoun, in the singular number; the pronoun which is used in addressing persons in the solemn style.

Art thou he that should come? — Mat. xi.
 I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. — Ps. xxiii.

Thou is used only in the solemn style, unless in very familiar language and by the Quakers.

THOU, v. l. To treat with familiarity.
 If thou dostest him some thrice, it shall not be omnia. Shak.

THOU, v. l. To use thou and thee in discourse.
THOUGH, (thō), v. i. [Sax. theah; Goth. thawh; G. doch; Sw. dock; D. and Dan. dog.] This is the imperative of a verb; Ir. daighim, to give, D. dokken.
 1. Grant; admit; allow. "If thy brother be waxen poor, thou shalt relieve him; yea, though he be a stranger," Grant or admit the fact that he is a stranger, yet thou shalt relieve him. Lev. xxv.
 2. That is, grant or admit, yet will I trust in him. — Job xiii.
 That is, grant or admit that he shall slay me, yet will I trust in him.

Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished. — Prov. xl.

That is, admit the fact that the wicked unite their strength, yet this will not save them from punishment.

Not that I so affirm, though so it seem. Milton.
 That is, grant that it seems so, yet I do not so affirm.

2. Used with as.
 In the vine were three branches, and it was as though it budded. Geo. xl.

So we use as if; it was as if it budded; and if is gi, give. The appearance was like the real fact, if admitted or true.

3. It is used in familiar language, at the end of a sentence.
 A good cause would do well though. Dryden.

This is generally or always elliptical, referring to some expression preceding or understood.

4. It is compounded with all in ALTHOUGH, which see.

THOUGHT, (thawt), pret. and pp. of THINK.
THOUGHT, (thawt), n. [Primarily the passive participle of think, supra; Sax. theact.]
 1. Properly, that which the mind thinks. Thought is either the act or operation of the mind, when attending to a particular subject or thing, or it is the idea consequent on that operation. We say a man's thoughts are employed on government, on religion, on trade or arts; or his thoughts are employed on his dress or his means of living. By this we mean that the mind is directed to that particular subject or object; that is, according to the literal import of the verb think, the mind, the intellectual part of man, is set upon such an object, it holds it in view or contemplation, or it extends to it, it stretches to it.

Thought can not be superadded to matter, so as in any sense to render it true that matter can become cogitative. Dwight.

2. Idea; conception. I wish to convey my thoughts to another person. I employ words that express my thoughts, so that he may have the same ideas; in this case, our thoughts will be alike.

3. Fancy; conceit; something framed by the imagination.
 Thoughts come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to choose or reject. Dryden.

4. Reflection; particular consideration.
 Why do you keep alone,
 Using those thoughts which should have died
 With them they think on? Shak.

5. Opinion; judgment.
 Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thoughts. Pope.

6. Meditation; serious consideration.
 Pride, of all others the most dangerous fault,
 Proceeds from want of sense or want of thought. Roccommon.

7. Design; purpose.
 All their thoughts are against me for evil. — Ps. lvi. xxxiii. Jer. xxxii.

8. Silent contemplation. Shak.
 Howls was put in trouble, and died with thought and anguish before his business came to an end. Bacon.

10. Inward reasoning; and the workings of conscience.
 They thought the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another. — Rom. ii.

11. A small degree or quantity; as, a thought longer; a thought better. [Not in use.] Hooker. Sidney.
 To take thought; to be solicitous or anxious. Mat. vi.

THOUGHTFUL, a. Full of thought; contemplative; employed in meditation; as, a man of thoughtful mind.

2. Attentive; careful; having the mind directed to an object; as, thoughtful of gain. Philips.

3. Promoting serious thought; favorable to musing or meditation.
 War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invade. Pope.

1. To the time or time of. I did not see the man till the last time he came; I waited for him till four o'clock; I will wait till next week.

Till now; to the present time. I never heard of the fact till now.

Till then; to that time. I never heard of the fact till then.

2. It is used before verbs and sentences in a like sense, denoting to the time specified in the sentence or clause following. I will wait till you arrive.

He said to them, Occupy till I come. — Luke xix.

Certain Jews — bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. — Acta xxiii.

Meditate so long till you make some act of piety for God. Zybor.

Note. — In this use, till is not a conjunction; it does not connect sentences like and, or like or. It neither denotes union nor separation, nor an alternative. It has always this same office, except that it precedes a single word or a single sentence; the time to which it refers being in one case expressed by a single word, as now, or then, or time, with this, or that, &c., and in the other by a verb with its adjuncts; as, occupy till Yeome, that is, to come. In the latter use, till is a preposition preceding a sentence, like against, in the phrase, against I came.

TILL, v. t. [Sax. tilian, tillgan, to work, to toil, to cultivate, to prepare; W. telo, to strain. In G. bestellen, from stellen, to set, to put in order, has the sense of tilling, cultivating. These words are doubtless of one family.]

1. To labor; to cultivate; to plow and prepare for seed, and to dress crops. This word includes not only plowing, but harrowing, and whatever is done to prepare ground for a crop, and to keep it free from weeds.

The Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. — Gen. iii.

2. In the most general sense, to till may include every species of husbandry, and this may be its sense in Scripture.

TILLABLE, a. Capable of being tilled; arable; fit for the plow. Carew.

TILLAGE, n. The operation, practice, or art of preparing land for seed, and keeping the ground free from weeds which might impede the growth of crops. Tillage includes manuring, plowing, harrowing, and rolling land, or whatever is done to bring it to a proper state to receive the seed, and the operations of plowing, harrowing, and hoeing the ground, to destroy weeds and loosen the soil after it is planted; culture; a principal branch of agriculture. Tillage of the earth is the principal, as it was the first, occupation of man, and no employment is more honorable.

TING, v. i. To sound or ring. [Not in use.]

TINGE, v. t. [L. tingo; Gr. τεγγω, Sax. deagan; Eng. to dye; G. tunken, to dip; Fr. teindre, to stain.]

See DYE. Ar. تبا taicha, to perish, to die, to tinge.

Class Dg, No. 40. See also No. 8, and 19. Tinging is from dipping. The primary sense of the verb is to plunge, or to throw down, to thrust, and intransitively to fall; hence we see the words to die, that is, to fall or perish, and to dye, or color, may be from one root.

To imbue or impregnate with something foreign; to communicate the qualities of one substance, in some degree, to another, either by mixture, or by adding them to the surface; as, to tinge a blue color with red; an infusion tinged with a yellow color by saffron; to tinge a decoction with a bitter taste. The jaundice tinges the eyes with yellow.

The virtues of Sir Roger, as well as his imperfections, are tinged with extravagance. Addison.

TINGE, n. Color; dye; taste; or rather a slight degree of some color, taste, or something foreign, infused into another substance or mixture, or added to it; tincture; as, a red color that has a tinge of blue; a dish of food that has a tinge of orange-peel in its taste.

10. Noting possession or appropriation. We have a good seat; let us keep it to ourselves.

11. Noting perception; as, a substance sweet to the taste; an event painful to the mind.

12. Noting the subject of an affirmation.
I have a king's oath to the contrary. Shak.

13. Noting the subject of remark; as, I shall speak to one point only. Lord Chatham.

14. In comparison of.

All that they did was piety to this. B. Jonson.

Few of the Equinox can count to ten. Quart. Medicus.

15. As far as.

16. Noting intention.
Marks and points out each man of us to slaughter. B. Jonson.

[In this sense, FOR is now used.]

17. After an adjective, noting the object; as, deaf to the cries of distress; alive to the sufferings of the poor. He was attentive to this company, or to the discourse.

18. Noting obligation; as, duty to God, and to our parents.

19. Noting enmity; as, a dislike to spirituous liquors.

20. Toward; as, she stretched her arms to heaven. Dryden.

21. Noting effect or end. The prince was flattered to his ruin. He engaged in a war to his cost. Violent factions exist to the prejudices of the state.

Numbers were crowded to death. Clarendon.

22. To, as a sign of the infinitive, precedes the radical verb. Sometimes it is used instead of the ancient form, FOR, to, noting purpose. David in his lifetime intended to build a temple. The legislature assembles annually to make and amend laws. The court will sit in February to try some important causes.

23. It precedes this radical verb after adjectives, noting the object; as, ready to go; prompt to obey; quick to hear, but slow to censure.

24. It precedes the radical verb, noting the object. The delay of our hopes teaches us to mortify our desires. Smalridge.

25. It precedes the radical verb, noting consequence.
I have done my utmost to lead my life so pleasantly as to forget my misfortunes. Pope.

26. It notes extent, degree, or end. He languishes to death, even to death. The water rises to the height of twenty feet. The line extends from one end to the other.

27. After the substantive verb, and with the radical verb, it denotes futurity. The construction, we are to meet at ten o'clock, every man at death is to receive the reward of his deeds, is a particular form of expressing future time.

28. After hac, it denotes duty or necessity. I have a debt to pay on Saturday.

29. To-day, to-night, to-morrow, are peculiar phrases derived from our ancestors. To, in the two first, has the sense or force of this; this day, this night. In the last, it is equivalent to in or on; in or on the morrow. The words may be considered as compounds, to-day, to-night, to-morrow, and usually as adverbs. But sometimes they are used as nouns; as, to-day is ours. Cowley.

To and fro; backward and forward. In this phrase, to is adverbial.

To the face; in presence of; not in the absence of. I withstood him face to face.—Gal. ii.

To-morrow, to-morrow, and to-morrow;
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day. Shak.

Note.—In the foregoing explanation of to, it is to be considered that the definition given is not always the sense of to by itself, but the sense rather of the word preceding it, or connected with it, or of to in connection with other words. In general, to is used in the sense of moving toward a place, or toward an object, or it expresses direction toward a place, end, object, or purpose.

To is often used adverbially to modify the sense of verbs; as, to come to, to heave to. The sense of such phrases is explained under the verbs respectively.

In popular phrases like the following, "I will not come; you shall to or toe," a genuine Saxon phrase, to denotes moreover, besides, L. insuper.

TOAD, n. [Sax. tade, tadige.] A piddoc, a batrachian reptile, of the genus Bufo, a small, clumsy animal, the body wriny and thick, perfectly harmless, and indeed it is said to be useful in gardens by feeding on noxious insects.

TO-BAC'CO, n. [Perhaps from Tabaco, a province of Yucatan, in Spanish America, where it was first found by the Spaniards. But this account of its origin is very doubtful. Las Casas says that in the first voyage of Columbus the Spaniards saw in Cuba many persons smoking dry herbs or leaves rolled up in tubes called tabacos. Charlevoix, in his history of St. Dominique, says that the instrument used to smoking was called tabaco.]

A plant, a native of America, of the genus Nicotiana, much used for smoking, and chewing, and in snuff. As a medicine, it is narcotic, emetic, and cathartic; and it possesses two additional powers at least, if not more. Tobacco has a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid taste. When first used, it sometimes occasions vomiting, &c.; but the practice of using it in any form soon conquers distaste, and forms a relish for it that is strong and almost unconquerable.

TO-BAC'CO-NING, a. Smoking tobacco. Bp. Hall.

TO-BAC'CO-NIST, n. A dealer in tobacco; also, a manufacturer of tobacco.

Who told thee that thou wast naked? — Gen. iii.
 Who had mocked me, and told me lies. — Judges xvi.
 Sheep and oxen that could not be told. — 1 Kings viii.

TOL'E, v. l. [I know not from what source we have this word; but it coincides with the Ar. دالا, dalla, to draw. The Ethiopic has ጥሎ taloo, taloo, to follow, and ለጥሎ ataloo, to cause to follow. It is a legitimate word, and in good use.]

To draw or cause to follow by presenting something pleasing or desirable to view; to allure by some bait. Thus our farmers tol sheep and make them follow, by holding to them a measure of corn or some portion of fodder. In New England, it is applied only to the alluring of beasts. Locke has applied it to men.

TOL'ED, pp. Drawn; allured; induced to follow.

TOL'EDO, n. A sword of the finest temper; so called from Toledo, in Spain, once famous for its swords. B. Jonson.

TOL'ER-A-BLE, a. [Fr. from L. tolerabilis. See TOLERATE.]

1. That may be borne or endured; supportable, either physically or mentally. The cold in Canada is severe, but tolerable. The insults and indignities of our enemies are not tolerable.

It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city. — Matt. x.

2. Moderately good or agreeable; not contemptible; not very excellent or pleasing, but such as can be borne or received without disgust, resentment, or opposition; as, a tolerable translation; a tolerable entertainment; a tolerable administration. Swift.

TOL'ER-A-BLE-NESS, n. The state of being tolerable.

TOL'ER-A-BLY, adv. Supportably; in a manner to be endured.

TOL'ER-A-TING, pp. Enduring; suffering to be or to be done; allowing; not restraining.

TOL'ER-A-TION, n. [L. toleratio.] The act of tolerating; the allowance of that which is not wholly approved; appropriately, the allowance of religious opinions and modes of worship in a state, when contrary to or different from those of the established church or belief. Toleration implies a right in the sovereign to control men in their opinions and worship, or it implies the actual exercise of power in such control. Where no power exists, or none is assumed, to establish a creed and a mode of worship, there can be no toleration, in the strict sense of the word, for one religious denomination has as good a right as another to the free enjoyment of its creed and worship.

TOL'ING, pp. Drawing away; inducing to follow.

TOLL, n. [Sax. toll; D. toll; Sw. tull; Dan. told; G. toll; W. toll, a fraction, a toll; toli and tolio, to curtail, to diminish, to take away, to spare or save, to deal out, from toel, a throw, a casting off, a separation, a cutting off; toll, from toll, to subtract, to take toll; Gr. τελος, toll, custom, and end, exit, from cutting off; Fr. tailleur, to cut off, (see TAIL.) Ir. deilinn, to separate; dail, a share, Eng. dale; diolam, to sell, to exchange, to pay toll. This is from the root of deal. See DEAL, Sax. bedelan. Class Df, No. 12.]

TON, (tuu), n. [Sax. tunna; Fr. tonne; Sp. tonel, a cask, a tun or butt.]

The weight of twenty hundred gross, or 2240 pounds. In some of the United States the ton is estimated at 2000 pounds. The orthography TUN would be preferable, as more accordant with the derivation. The word is from the Saxon tunna, a cask, and the sense of weight is taken from that of a cask or butt.

TONE, n. [Fr. ton; Sp. tono; It. tuono; Sw. and G. ton; D. toon; Dan. tone; L. tonus; Gr. tonos, sound; L. tono, Gr. tonos, to sound, from the root of τωω, to strain or stretch. The L. tonus is probably the same word in a different dialect.]

1. Sound, or a modification of sound; any impulse or vibration of the air which is perceptible by the ear; as, a low tone, high tone, or loud tone; a grave tone; an acute tone; a sweet tone; a harsh tone.

2. Accent; or rather, a particular inflection of the voice, adapted to express emotion or passion; a rhetorical sense of the word.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

3. A whining sound; a whine; a kind of mournful strain of voice; as, children often read with a tone.

4. An affected sound in speaking.

5. In music, an interval of sound; as, the difference between the fifth or diatone and fourth or diatessaron, is a tone. Of tones there are two kinds, major and minor. The tone major is in the ratio of 8 to 9, which results from the difference between the fourth and fifth. The tone minor is as 9 to 10, resulting from the difference between the minor third and the fourth.

6. The tone of an instrument, is its peculiar sound with regard to softness, evenness, and the like.

7. In medicine, that state of a body, in which the animal functions are healthy and performed with due vigor. Tone, in its primary signification, is tension, and tension is the primary signification of strength. Hence its application to the natural healthy state of animal organs. Tone, therefore, in medicine, is the strength and activity of the organs, from which proceed healthy functions. So we say, the body is in a sound state, the health is sound or firm.

8. In painting, the harmonious relation of the colors of a picture in light and shade. The term is often used to qualify, or as synonymous with, DEPTH, RICHNESS, and SPLENDOR, in pictures. It has also more recently been used to denote the characteristic expression of a picture, as distinguished by its color. In musical science the word Key performs a similar office.

TONE, v. t. To utter with an affected tone.

2. To tune. [See TUNE.]

TONE'ED, a. Having a tone; used in composition; as, high-toned; sweet-toned.

TONE'LESS, a. Having no tone; unmusical. Entick.

TONG, (tung), n. [See TONGS.] The catch of a buckle. [Not used.] [See TONGUE.]

TONGS, n. pl. [Sax. lang; Dan. and D. tang; G. zange; Sw. tang; Ice. taung; Gaelic, teangas. This seems by its orthography to be the same word as tonque, tonques, and to signify projections, shoots.]

An instrument of metal, consisting of two parts or long shafts joined at one end; used for handling things, particularly fire or heated metals. We say, a pair of tongs, a smith's tongs.

TONGUE, (tung), [Sax. tung, tunga; Goth. tuggo; Sw. tunga; Dan. tung; D. tong; G. zange; Ir. and Gaelic, teanga; Ant. L. lingua. We see by the Gothic, that it is not radical; the word belongs to Class Dg. It signifies a shoot or extension, like L. digitus and aug. TUNGO would be the preferable orthography, in accordance with the etymology.]

1. In man, one of the instruments of taste, and also one of the instruments of speech; and in other animals one of the instruments of taste. It is also an instrument of deglutition. In some animals, the tongue is used for drawing the food into the mouth, as in animals of the bovine genus, &c. Other animals lap their drink, as dogs.

The tongue is covered with membranes, and the outer one is full of papillae of a pyramidal figure, under which lies a thin, soft, reticular coat, perforated with innumerable holes, and always lined with a thick and white or yellowish mucus.

2. Speech; discourse; sometimes, fluency of speech.

Much tongue and much judgment seldom go together. L'Estreange.

TOWN, n. [Sax. tan; W. dan, dinas, a fortified hill, a fort; Gaelic, dan; Sax. dan, dane, a hill, whence down. The Sax. tan signifies an inclosure, a garden, a village, a town, and tynan is to shut, to make fast; G. zaun, a hedge; D. tuyn, a garden. If the original word signified a hill, the sense is a mass or collection. But probably the original word signified fortified, and the rude fortifications of uncivilized men were formed with hedges and stakes; hence also a garden. (See GARDEN and TUN.) Sax. leantune, a garden, that is, leek-town, an inclosure for leeks, that is, plants. This shows that the primary sense of town is an inclosure for defense.]

1. Originally, a walled or fortified place; a collection of houses inclosed with walls, hedges, or pickets for safety. Rahab's house was on the town wall. Josh. ii.

A town that hath gates and bars. — 1 Sam. xxiii.

2. Any collection of houses larger than a village. In this use the word is very indefinite, and a town may consist of twenty houses or of twenty thousand.

3. In England, any number of houses to which belongs a regular market, and which is not a city or the see of a bishop. Johnson.

A town, in modern times, is generally without walls, which is the circumstance that usually distinguishes it from a city. Cyc.

In the United States, the circumstance that distinguishes a town from a city, is generally, that a city is incorporated with special privileges, and a town is not. But a city is often called a town.

TRADE, n. [Sp. and Port. trato; tratar, to handle, to trade; It. tratta, trattarsi; from L. tracto, to handle, uso, tract. The Fr. traite, traiter, are the same words.]

1. The act or business of exchanging commodities by barter; or the business of buying and selling for money; commerce; traffic; barter. Trade comprehends every species of exchange or dealing, either in the produce of land, in manufactures, in bills, or money. It is, however, chiefly used to denote the barter or purchase and sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, either by wholesale or retail. Trade is either foreign or domestic, or inland. Foreign trade consists in the exportation and importation of goods, or the exchange of the commodities of different countries. Domestic or home trade is the exchange or buying and selling of goods within a country. Trade is also by the wholesale, that is, by the package or in large quantities, or it is retail, or in small parcels. The carrying trade is that of transporting commodities from one country to another by water.
2. The business which a person has learned, and which he carries on, for procuring subsistence, or for profit; occupation; particularly, mechanical employment; distinguished from the liberal arts and learned professions, and from agriculture. Thus we speak of the trade of a smith, of a carpenter, or mason; but we never say, the trade of a farmer, or of a lawyer, or physician.
3. Business pursued; occupation; in contempt: as, piracy is their trade. Dryden.

Hunting their sport, and plundering was their trade. Dryden.

4. Instruments of any occupation. The shepherd bears His house and household goods, his trade of war. Dryden.

5. Employment not manual; habitual exercise. Bacon.

6. Custom; habit; standing practice. Thy slo'e is not accidental, but a trade. Shak.

7. Men engaged in the same occupation. Thus booksellers speak of the customs of the trade.

8. The trades; the trade-winds.

TRADE, v. t. To barter, or to buy and sell; to deal in the exchange, purchase, or sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, or any thing else; to traffic; to carry on commerce as a business. Thus, American merchants trade with the English at London and at Liverpool; they trade with the French at Havre and Bordeaux, and they trade with Canada. The country shopkeepers trade with London merchants. Our banks are permitted to trade in bills of exchange.

2. To buy and sell or exchange property, in a single instance. Thus we say, a man trades with another for his farm, but can not trade with him. A trader with B for a horse, or a number of sheep.
3. To act merely for money. How did you dare To trade each trade with Macbeth? Shak.

4. To have a trade-wind. They oo the trading flood ply toward the pole. [Unusual.] Milton.

TRADE, v. t. To sell or exchange in commerce. They traded the persons of meo. — Ezek. xxvii. [This, I apprehend, must be a mistake; at least, it is not to be vindicated as a legitimate use of the verb.]

TRAD'ED, a. Versed; practiced. [Not in use.]

TRADE/FUL, a. Commercial; busy in traffic.

TRADER, n. One engaged in trade or commerce; a dealer in buying and selling or barter; as, a trader to the East Indies; a trader to Canada; a country trader.

TRADE'S/FOLK, n. People employed in trade. [Not in use.]

TRADE'S/MAN, n. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman.

[In America, a shopkeeper is usually called a retailer.]

TRADE'S/WOMAN, n. A woman who trades or is skilled in trade.

TRADE-WIND, n. [trade and wind.] A name given to winds in the torrid zone, and often a little beyond it, which blow from the same quarter throughout the year, unless when affected by local causes. Their general direction is from N. E. to S. W. on the north side of the equator, and from S. E. to N. W. on the south side of the equator.

TRADING, ppr. Trafficking; exchanging commodities by barter, or buying and selling them.

2. a. Carrying on commerce; as, a trading company.

TRADING, n. The act or business of carrying on commerce.

TRA-DUCTION, (-dish'un,) n. [Fr. from L. traditio, from trao, to deliver.]

1. Delivery; the act of delivering into the hands of another.

A deed takes effect only from the tradition or delivery.

The sale of a movable is completed by simple tradition.

2. The delivery of opinions, doctrines, practices, rites, and customs, from father to son, or from ancestors to posterity; the transmission of any opinions or practice from forefathers to descendants by oral communication, without written memorials.

Thus, children derive their vernacular language chiefly from tradition. Most of our early notions are received by tradition from our parents.

3. That which is handed down from age to age by oral communication. The Jews pay great regard to tradition in matters of religion, as do the Roman Catholics. Protestants reject the authority of tradition in sacred things, and rely only on the written word. Traditions may be good or bad, true or false.

Stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle.—2 Thes. ii.

Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your traditions?—Mat. xv.

TRA-DUCTION-AL, (-dish'un,) a. Delivered

TRA-DUCTION-ARY, (-dish'un,) a. orally from father to son; communicated from ancestors to descendants by word only; transmitted from age to age without writing; as, traditional opinion; traditional evidence; the traditional expositions of the Scriptures.

The reverses of the Talmud, a collection of Jewish traditional interpolations, are originated in the regions of obscurity.

2. Observant of tradition. [Not used.]

TRA-DU'CE/TION, n. [L. traductio.]

1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

If by traduction came thy mind,
Our wonder is the less to find
A soul so clarifying from a stock so good.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another; as, traditional communication and traduction of truth. [Little used.]

3. Conveyance; transportation; act of transferring; as, the traduction of animals from Europe to America by shipping.

4. Transition.

TRA-DU'CE/TIVE, a. Derivable; that may be deduced.

TRAF'FIC, n. [Fr. trafic; It. traffico; Sp. trafago; a compound of L. trans, Celtic tra, and facio, or some other verb of the like elements.]

1. Trade; commerce, either by barter or by buying and selling. This word, like TRADE, comprehends every species of dealing in the exchange or passing of goods or merchandise from hand to hand for an equivalent, unless the business of retailing may be excepted. It signifies appropriately foreign trade, but is not limited to that.

My father,
A merchant of great traffic through the world.

2. Commodities for market.

TRAF'FICK-ING, ppr. Trading; bartering; buying and selling goods, wares, and commodities.

TRAF'FIC-LESS, a. Destitute of trade.

TRAG'A-CANTH, n. [L. tragacanthum; Gr. τραγακανθα τραγος, a goat, and καυθα, thorn.]

1. Goat's thorn; a plant of the genus Astragalus, of several species, growing in Syria, Candia, &c., almost all of which were included by Linnaeus in the tragacanth, and all of which produce the gum tragacanth.

2. A gum obtained from the goat's thorn. It comes in small, contorted pieces, resembling worms. It is of different colors; that which is white, clear, smooth, and vernicular, is the best. It is somewhat soft to the touch, but only imperfectly soluble. It is softening, and used in coughs and catarrhs.

TRA-GE'DI-AN, n. [L. tragædus. See TRAGEDY.]

1. A writer of tragedy.

2. More generally, an actor of tragedy.

TRAG'E-DY, n. [Fr. tragedie; It. and Sp. tragedia; Gr. τραγωδία; said to be composed of τραγος, a goat, and ωδη, a song, because originally it consisted in a hymn sung in honor of Bacchus by a chorus of music, with dances and the sacrifice of a goat.]

1. A dramatic poem representing some signal action performed by illustrious persons, and generally having a fatal issue. Æschylus is called the father of tragedy.

All our tragedies are of kings and princes.

2. A fatal and mournful event; any event in which human lives are lost by human violence, more particularly by unauthorized violence.

TRAG'IC, a. [L. tragicus; Fr. tragique; It. tragico.]

1. Pertaining to tragedy; of the nature or character of tragedy; as, a tragic poem; a tragic play or representation.

2. Fatal to life; mournful; sorrowful; calamitous; as, the tragic scenes of Iliad; the tragic horrors of Scio and Missolonghi; the tragical fate of the Greeks.

3. Mournful; expressive of tragedy, the loss of life, or of sorrow.

I now must change those notes to tragic.

TRAG'IC-AL-LY, adv. In a tragical manner; with fatal issue; mournfully; sorrowfully. The play ends tragically.

TRAG'IC-AL-NESS, n. Fatality; mournfulness; sadness.

We moralize the fable in the tragicness of the event.

TRAG-I-COM'E-DY, n. [Fr. tragi-comedie; tragedy and comedy.]

A kind of dramatic piece representing some action passed among eminent persons, the event of which is not unhappy, in which serious and comic scenes are blended; a species of composition not now used, or held in little estimation.

2. In the Kantian philosophy, pertaining to that which can be determined a priori in regard to the fundamental principles of all human knowledges. What is transcendental, therefore, transcends empiricism; but it does not transcend all human knowledge, or become transcendental. Murdoch.

Transcendental quantity; in algebra, a quantity which can not be represented by an algebraic expression of a finite number of terms.

Transcendental equation; an equation into which a transcendental quantity enters.

Transcendental curve; a curve defined by a transcendental equation. Brodrie.

TRANS-CEND'ENT'AL-ISM, n. In the Kantian philosophy, the transcending or going beyond empiricism, and ascertaining a priori the fundamentals principles of human knowledge. But, as Schelling and Hegel claimed to have discovered the absolute identity of the objective and subjective in human knowledge, or of things and human conceptions of them, the Kantian distinction between transcendental and transcendental ideas can have no place in their philosophy. And hence, with them, transcendentalism claims to have a true knowledge of all things, material and immaterial, human and divine, so far as the mind is capable of knowing them. And in this sense the word transcendentalism is now most used. Murdoch.

The word is also sometimes used for that which is vague and illusive in philosophy.

TRANS-CEND'ENT'AL-IST, n. One who believes in transcendentalism.

TREASON, (tré'zn,) n. [Fr. trahison; Norm. trahir, to draw in, to betray, to commit treason, Fr. trahir, L. traho. See DRAW and DRAG.]

Treason is the highest crime, of a civil nature, of which a man can be guilty. Its signification is different in different countries. In general, it is the offense of attempting to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance, or of betraying the state into the hands of a foreign power. In monarchies, the killing of the king, or an attempt to take his life, is treason. In England, or an attempt to compass the death of the king, or of the prince, or of the queen consort, or of the heir apparent of the crown, is high treason; as are many other offenses created by statute.

In the United States, treason is confined to the actual levying of war against the United States, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.

Treason, in Great Britain, is of two kinds, high treason and petit treason. High treason is a crime that immediately affects the king or state; such as the offenses just enumerated. Petit treason involves a breach of fidelity, but affects individuals. Thus, for a wife to kill her husband, a servant his master or lord, or an ecclesiastic his lord or ordinary, is petit treason. But in the United States this crime is unknown; the killing, in the latter cases, being murder only.

TREASON-ABLE, (tré'zn-a-bl,) a. Pertaining to treason; consisting of treason; involving the crime of treason, or partaking of its guilt.

Most men's heads had been intoxicated with imaginations of plots and treasonable practices. Clarendon.

TRIANG-LE, (trí'ang-gl'), n. [Fr. from L. triangulum; tres, tria, three, and angulus, a corner.]

1. In geometry, a figure bounded by three lines, and containing three angles. The three angles of a plane triangle are equal to two right angles, or 180°, the number of degrees in a semicircle.

If the three lines or sides of a triangle are all right, it is a plane or rectilinear triangle.

If all the three sides are equal, it is an equilateral triangle.

If two of the sides only are equal, it is an isosceles or equilateral triangle.

If all the three sides are unequal, it is a scalens or scalenous triangle.

If one of the angles is a right angle, the triangle is rectangular.

If one of the angles is obtuse, the triangle is called obtusangular or anhygonous.

If all the angles are acute, the triangle is acutangula or oxygonous.

If the three lines of a triangle are all curves, the triangle is said to be curvilinear.

If some of the sides are right and others curve, the triangle is said to be mixtilinear.

If the sides are all arcs of great circles of the sphere, the triangle is said to be spherical. Cyc.

2. An instrument of percussion in music, made of a rod of polished steel, bent into the form of a triangle.

3. In military punishments, three halberts stuck in the ground and united at the top, to which soldiers are bound when flogged.

TRIBE, n. [W. trés; Gael. tréabh; Sax. thorp, D. dorp, G. dorf; Sw. and Dan. torp, a hamlet or village; L. tribus. We have tribe from the last. In Welsh, the word signifies a dwelling-place, homestead, hamlet, or town, as does the Sax. thorp. The Sax. tréf is a tent; Russ. deréni, an estate, a hamlet. From the sense of house, the word came to signify a family, a race of descendants from one progenitor, who originally settled round him and formed a village.]

1. A family, race, or series of generations, descending from the same progenitor, and kept distinct, as in the case of the twelve tribes of Israel, descended from the twelve sons of Jacob.

2. A division, class, or distinct portion of people, from whatever cause that distinction may have originated. The city of Athens was divided into ten tribes. Rome was originally divided into three tribes; afterward the people were distributed into thirty tribes, and afterward into thirty-five. Roman Hist.

3. A number of things having certain characters or resemblances in common; as, a tribe of plants; a tribe of animals.

Linnaeus distributed the vegetable kingdom into three tribes, viz., Monocotyledonous, Dicotyledonous, and Acotyledonous plants, and these he subdivided into gentes or nations. Martyn.

By recent naturalists, tribe has been used for a division of animals or vegetables, intermediate between order and genus. Cuvier divides his orders into families, and his families into tribes, including under the latter ones or more genera. Leach, in his arrangement of Insects, makes his tribes, on the contrary, the primary subdivisions of his orders, and his families subordinate to them, and immediately including the genera. Cuvier. Ed. Encyc.

Tribes of plants, in gardening, are such as are related to each other by some natural affinity or resemblance; as by their duration, the annual, biennial, and perennial tribes; by their roots, as the bulbous, tuberosus, and fibrous-rooted tribes; by the loss or retention of their leaves, as the deciduous and evergreen tribes; by their fruits and seeds, as the leguminous, bacciferous, coniferous, nuciferous, and pomiferous tribes, &c. Cyc.

TWIT, v. t. [Sax. athwitan, edwitan, atwitan, to reproach, to upbraid; a compound of ad, ath, or eth, and witan. The latter verb signifies to know, Eng. to wit, and also to impute, to ascribe, to prescribe or appoint, also to reproach; and with ge, a different prefix, gewitan, to depart. The original verb then signifies to set, send, or throw. We have in this word decisive evidence that the first letter, t, is a prefix, the remains of eth or eth, a word that probably coincides with the L. ad, to; and hence we may fairly infer that other words, in which t precedes w, are also compound. That some of them are so, appears evident from other circumstances.]

To reproach; to upbraid; us for some previous act. He twitted his friend of falsehood.

With this thee scotters twitted the Christians. Tillotson.

1. Arbitrary or despotic exercise of power; the exercise of power over subjects and others with a rigor not authorized by law or justice, or not requisite for the purposes of government. Hence tyranny is often synonymous with CAULETY and ORRAXION.

2. Cruel government or discipline; as, the tyranny of a master.

3. Unrestrained and cruel power.

4. Absolute monarchy cruelly administered.

5. Severity; rigor; inclemency. Shak.

TY'RANT, n. [L. tyrannus; Gr. τυραννος. The Welsh has tyrfa, a king or sovereign, which Owen says is compounded of te (that spreads) and tyrfa, imperious, supreme, from tyr, a driving. The Gaelic has tiarna and tygherna, a lord, prince, or ruler, from tyr, a house; indicating that the word originally signified the master of a family merely, or the head of a clan. There is some uncertainty as to the real origin of the word. It originally signified merely a chief, king, or prince.]

1. A monarch or other ruler or master, who uses power to oppress his subjects; a person who exercises unlawful authority, or lawful authority in an unlawful manner; one who by taxation, injustice, or cruel punishment, or the demand of unreasonable services, imposes burdens and hardships on those under his control, which law and humanity do not authorize, or which the purposes of government do not require.

2. A despotic ruler; a cruel master; an oppressor.

Love, to a yielding heart, is a king, to a resisting heart, is a tyrant. Sidney.

TZAR, (zár), n. The emperor of Russia. [See CZAR.]

TZAR-YNA, (zár-b'ná), n. The empress of Russia. [See CZARINA.]

U.

U is the twenty-first letter and the fifth vowel in the English alphabet. Its true primary sound, in Anglo-Saxon, was the sound which it still retains in most of the languages of Europe; that of oo in cool, toot, answering to the French ou in tour. This sound was changed, probably under the Norman kings, by the attempt made to introduce the Norman French language into common use. However this fact may be, the first or long and proper sound of u, in English, is now not perfectly simple, and it can not be strictly called a vowel. The sound seems to be nearly that of eu, shortened and blended. This sound, however, is not precisely that of eu or yu, except in a few words, as in unite, union, uniform; the sound does not begin with the distinct sound of e, nor end in the distinct sound of oo, unless when prolonged. It can not be well expressed in letters. This sound is heard in the unaffected pronunciation of annuity, numerals, brute, mute, dispute, duke, true, truth, rule, prudence, opportunity, infusion.

Some modern writers make a distinction between the sound of u, when it follows r, as in rude, truth, and its sound when it follows other letters, as in mute, duke; making the former sound equivalent to oo; rood, trooth; and the latter a diphthong equivalent to eu or yu. This is a mischievous innovation, and not authorized by any general usage either in England or the United States. The difference, very nice indeed, between the sound of u in mute and in rude, is owing entirely to the articulation which precedes that letter. For example, when a labial, as m or p, precedes u, we enter on its sound with the lips closed, and in opening them to the position required for uttering u, there is almost necessarily a slight sound of e formed before we arrive at the proper sound of u. When r precedes u, the mouth is open before the sound of u is commenced. But in both cases, u is to be considered as having the same sound.

In some words, as in bull, full, pull, the sound of u is that of the Italian u, the French ou, but shortened. This is a vowel.

U has another short sound, as in tun, run, sun, turn, rub. This also is a vowel.

UN, a prefix or inseparable preposition, [Sax. un or on, usually un, G. un, D. on, Sans. an,] is the same word as the L. in. It is a particle of negation, giving to words to which it is prefixed a negative signification. We use un or in indifferently for this purpose; and the tendency of modern usage is to prefer the use of in, in some words, where un was formerly used. UN admits of no change of n into l, m, or r, as in does, in illuminate, immense, irresolute. It is prefixed generally to adjectives and participles, and almost to pleasure. In a few instances, it is prefixed to verbs, as in unbind, unbind, unharness. As the compounds formed with un are so common and so well known, the composition is not noticed under the several words. For the etymologies, see the simple words.

waves, which successively rise or swell and fall. We speak of the undulatory motion of water, of air, or other fluid, and this undulatory motion of air is supposed to be the cause of sounds. This is sometimes called vibratory; but undulatory seems to be most correct.

Undulatory theory: in optics, the theory that the phenomena of light are produced by the undulations of an independent medium, set in motion by the luminous body; opposed to the theory of emanations, according to which light is a material fluid of extreme subtlety. According to the former theory, the fluid is only the medium of light, as air is the medium of sound, and the impression is conveyed from the radiant to the eye by successive undulations of this medium; according to the latter, the motion is simply that of a chain of particles moving in right lines.

U-NI-SON, n. [L. unus, one, and sonus, sound.]

1. In music, an accordance or coincidence of sounds proceeding from an equality in the number of vibrations made in a given time by a sonorous body. If two chords of the same matter have equal length, thickness, and tension, they are said to be in unison, and their sounds will be in unison. Sounds of very different qualities and force may be in unison: as the sound of a bell may be in unison with a sound of a flute. Unison then consists in sameness of degree, or similarity in respect to gravity or acuteness, and is applicable to any sound, whether of instruments or of the human organs, &c.

2. A single, unvaried note. Pope.

In unison; in agreement; in harmony.

U-NI-SON, a. Sounding alone.

Sounds intermixed with voice, Choral or unison. Anon.

U-NIS'O-NANCE, n. Accordance of sounds.

What constitutes unisonance is the equality of the number of vibrations of sonorous bodies, in two equal times. Cyc.

U-NIS'O-NANT, a. Being in unison; having the same degree of gravity or acuteness.

U-NIS'O-NOUS, a. Being in unison. Busby.

U-NIT, (yū'nit) n. [L. unus, one; unitas, unity.]

1. One; a word which denotes a single thing or person; or the least whole number.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

2. In mathematics, any known determinate quantity, by the constant repetition of which, any other quantity of the same kind is measured. [See UNITV.]

U-NI-TA'R-I-AN, n. [L. unitas, unus.]

One who denies the doctrine of the trinity, and ascribes divinity to God the Father only. The Arian and Socinian are both comprehended in the term Unitarian.

U-NI-TA'R-I-AN, a. Pertaining to Unitarians.

U-NI-TA'R-I-AN-ISM, n. The doctrines of Unitarians, who deny the divinity of Christ.

U-NITE', v. t. [L. unio, unio; Fr. and Sp. unir; It. unire.]

1. To put together or join two or more things, which make one compound or mixture. Thus we unite the parts of a building to make one structure. The kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland united, form one empire. So we unite spirit and water and other liquors. We unite strands to make a rope. The States of North America, united, form one nation.

2. To join; to connect in a near relation or alliance; as, to unite families by marriage; to unite nations by treaty.

3. To make to agree or be uniform; as, to unite a kingdom in one form of worship; to unite men in opinions. Clarendon.

4. To cause to adhere; as, to unite bricks or stones by cement.

5. To join in interest or fellowship. Gen. xlix.

6. To tie; to splice; as, to unite two cords or ropes.

7. To join in affection; to make near; as, to unite hearts in love.

[Unite is followed by to or with. To unite to, is to join. Gen. xlix. vi. To unite with, is to associate; but the distinction is not always obvious or important.]

To unite the heart; to cause all its powers and affections to join with order and delight in the same objects. Ps. lxxxvi.

U-NITE', v. i. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert. All parties united in petitioning for a repeal of the law.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented or consolidated; to combine; as, bodies unite by attraction or affinity.

3. To grow together, as the parts of a wound.

The spur of a young cock, grafted into the comb, will unite and grow. Dubamel.

4. To coalesce, as sounds.

5. To be mixed. Oil and water will not unite.

U-NI-TY, (yū'ne-tē) n. [L. unitas.]

1. The state of being one; oneness. Unity may consist of a simple substance or existing being, as the soul; but usually it consists in a close junction of particles or parts, constituting a body detached from other bodies. Unity is a thing undivided itself, but separate from every other thing. School Philosophy.

2. Concord; conjunction; as, a unity of proofs. Shak.

3. Agreement; uniformity; as, unity of doctrine; unity of worship in a church. Hooker.

4. In Christian theology, oneness of sentiment, affection, or behavior.

How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! — Ps. cxxxiii.

5. In mathematics, the abstract expression for any unit whatsoever. The number 1 is unity when it is not applied to any particular object; but a unit, when it is so applied. Olmsted.

6. In poetry, the principle by which a uniform tenor of story and propriety of representation is preserved. In the Greek drama, the three unities required were those of action, of time, and of place; in other words, that there should be but one main plot; that the time supposed should not exceed twenty-four hours; and that the place of the action before the spectators should be one and the same throughout the piece.

7. In music, such a combination of parts as to constitute a whole, or a kind of symmetry of style and character. Rousseau.

8. In law, the properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold; unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession; in other words, joint-tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. Blackstone.

9. In law, unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles, as when a man has a lease of land upon a certain rent, and afterward buys the fee-simple. This is a unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished.

Unity of faith is an equal belief of the same truths of God, and possession of the grace of faith in like form and degree. Brown.

Unity of spirit is the oneness which subsists between Christ and his saints, by which the same spirit dwells in both, and both have the same disposition and aims; and it is the oneness of Christians among themselves, united under the same head, having the same spirit dwelling in them, and possessing the same graces, faith, love, hope, &c. Brown.

U-NI-VALVE, a. [L. unus, one, and valva.]

Having one valve only as a shell or pericarp.

U-NI-YALVE, n. A shell having one valve only; a mollusk whose shell is composed of a single piece. The unicarves form one of the three divisions into which shells are usually divided. Linnaeus.

U-NI-VALV'U-LAR, a. Having one valve only; as, a unicarval pericarp or shell. Martyn. Cyc.

U-NI-VERS'AL, a. [L. universalis; unus and versor.]

1. All; extending to or comprehending the whole number, quantity, or space; as, universal rule; universal good; universal benevolence.

The universal cause Acts not by partial, but by general laws. Pope.

4. In botany, a universal umbel is a primary or general umbel; the first or largest set of rays in a compound umbel; opposed to partial. A universal involucre is not unfrequently placed at the foot of a universal umbel. Martyn.

Universal dial is a dial by which the hour may be found by the sun in any part of the world, or under any elevation of the pole.

Universal joint; a contrivance employed to give motion obliquely to certain instruments, as the telescope. Two universal joints are so combined as to give motion separately, in directions at right angles to each other, e. g., one horizontally and the other vertically; but, when both act together, the motion is oblique between the two separate directions. It usually consists of two arms terminating in semicircles, connected by pins or shafts at right angles to each other. Olmsted.

Universal proposition; one in which the subject is taken in its widest extent, and the predicate applies to every thing which the subject can denote. Whately.

U-NI-VERS'AL, n. [See the adjective.] In logic, a universal is complex or incomplex. A complex universal is either a universal proposition, as "every whole is greater than its parts," or whatever raises a manifold conception in the mind, as the definition of a reasonable animal.

An incomplex universal is what produces one conception only in the mind, and is a simple thing respecting many; as human nature, which relates to every individual in which it is found. Cyc.

2. The whole; the general system of the universe. [Not in use.]
