EX-CEED, (éks-éed'), v. t. [L. excedo; ex and cedo, to pass.] 1. To pass or go beyond; to proceed beyond any given or supposed limit, measure, or quantity, or beyond any thing else; used equally in a physical or moral sense. One piece of cloth exceeds the customary length or breadth; one man exceeds another in bulk, stature, or weight; one offender exceeds another in villainy. 2. To surpass; to excel. Homer exceeded all men in epic poetry. Demosthenes and Cicero exceeded their cotemporaries in oratory. King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom. — 1 Kings x. EX-CEED, v. i. To go too far; to pass the proper bounds; to go over any given limit, number, or measure. Forty stripes may be give him, and not exceed. — Deut. xxv. 2. To bear the greater proportion; to be more or larger. Dryden. [This verb is intransitive only by ellipsis.]

EX-CEED'ABLE, a. That may surmount or exceed. [Ill.] Sherwood.

EX-CEED'ED, pp. Excelled; surpassed; outdone.

EX-CEED'ER, n. One who exceeds or passes the bounds of fitness. Mountagu.

EX-CEED'ING, ppr. Going beyond; surpassing; excelling; outdoing. 2. a. Great in extent, quantity, or duration; very extensive. Clites were built an exceeding space of time before the flood. [This sense is unusual.] Raleigh. 3. adv. In a very great degree; unusually; as, exceeding rich. The Genesee were exceeding powerful by sea. Raleigh. I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. — Gen. xv. EX-CEED'ING, n. Excess; superfluity. Smollett.

EX-CEED'ING-LY, adv. To a very great degree; in a degree beyond what is usual; greatly; very much. Isaac trembled exceedingly. — Gen. xlvii. EX-CEED'ING-NESS, n. Greatness in quantity, extent, or duration. [Not used.]

EX-CEL', (éks-éel'), v. t. [L. excollo, the root of which, cello, is not to use. In Ar. قال kaila, signifies to lift, raise, excel; also, to speak, to strike, to beat. So we use beat in the sense of surpass. See Class G1, No. 31 and 49.] 1. To go beyond; to exceed; to surpass in good qualities or laudable deeds; to outdo. Excelling others, these were great; Thou greater still, must these excel. Prior. Many daught'r have done viruously, but thou excellest them all. — Prov. xxiii. 2. To exceed or go beyond in bad qualities or deeds; as, to excel envy itself in mischief. Spenser. 3. To exceed; to surpass. EX-CEL', v. i. To have good qualities, or to perform meritorious actions, in an unusual degree; to be eminent, illustrious, or distinguished. Bism the Lord, ye his angels, that excel in strength. — Ps. ciii. We say, to excel in mathematics; to excel in painting; to excel in heroic achievements. EX-CEL'LED, (éks-éel') pp. Surpassed; outdone; exceeded in good qualities or laudable achievements. EX-CEL'LENCE, n. [Fr., from L. excellentia.] EX-CEL'LEN-CY, n. [Fr., from L. excellentia.] 1. The state of possessing good qualities in an unusual or eminent degree; the state of excelling in any thing. 2. Any valuable quality; any thing highly laudable, meritorious, or virtuous, in persons, or valuable and esteemed, in things. Purity of heart, uprightness of mind, sincerity, virtue, piety, are excellencies of character; symmetry of parts, strength, and beauty of an art is an excellence in the artisan; soundness and durability are excellencies in timber; fertility in land; elegance, in writing. In short, whatever contributes to exalt man, or to render him esteemed and happy, or to bless society, is in him an excellence. 3. Dignity; high rank in the scale of beings. Angels are beings of more excellence than men; men are beings of more excellence than brutes. 4. A title of honor formerly given to kings and emperors, now given to ambassadors, governors, and other persons, below the rank of kings, but elevated above the common classes of men. EX-CEL'LENT, (éks-éel-ent), a. Being of great virtue or worth; eminent or distinguished for what is amiable, valuable, or laudable; as, an excellent man or citizen; an excellent judge or magistrate. 2. Being of great value or use, applied to things; remarkable for good properties; as, excellent timber; an excellent farm; an excellent horse; excellent fruit. 3. Distinguished for superior attainments; as, an excellent artist. 4. Consummate; complete; in an ill sense. Elizabeth was an excellent hypocrite. Home. EX-CEL'LENT-LY, adv. In an excellent manner; well in a high degree; in an eminent degree; in a manner to please or command esteem, or to be useful. EX-CEL'LING, ppr. Surpassing; outdoing; going beyond. EX-CEL'SI-OR, a. [L.] More lofty; more elevated; higher; the motto of the State of New York. Langfellow. EX-CEN'TRIC. See EC-CENTRIC. EX-CEPT, (éks-éépt'), v. t. [Fr. excepter; It. eccitare; from L. excipio; ex and capio, to take. See CAPTION, CAPTURE.] 1. To take or leave out of any number specified; to exclude; as, of the thirty persons present and concerned in a riot, we must except two. 2. To take or leave out any particular or particulars from a general description. When he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted who did put all things under him. — 1 Cor. xv. EX-CEPT', v. i. To object; to make an objection or objections; usually followed by to; sometimes by against. I except to a witness, or to his testimony, on account of his interest or partiality. EX-CEPT', pp. [Contracted from excepted.] Taken out; not included. All were involved in this affair, except one; that is, one excepted, the case absolute or independent clause. Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish; that is, except this fact, that ye repent, or this fact being excepted, removed, taken away, ye shall all likewise perish. Or except may be considered as the imperative mode. Except thou, or ye, this fact, ye shall all likewise perish. Hence, except is equivalent to without, unless, and denotes EX-CEPT'ED, pp. See EXCEPT. [Exclusion.]

EX-CEPT'ING, ppr. Taking or leaving out; excluding. 2. This word is also used in the sense of except, as above explained. The prisoners were all condemned, excepting three. This is an anomalous use of the word, unless, in some cases, it may be referred to a pronoun. Excepted would be better; three excepted; three being excepted. EX-CEPTION, (éks-ééptshun), n. The act of excepting, or excluding from a number designated, or from a description; exclusion. All the representatives voted for the bill, with the exception of five; all the land is in tillage, with an exception of two acres. 2. Exclusion from what is comprehended in a general rule or proposition. 3. That which is excepted, excluded, or separated, from others in a general description; the person or thing specified as distinct or not included. Almost every general rule has its exceptions. 4. An objection; that which is or may be offered in opposition to a rule, proposition, statement, or allegation; with to; sometimes with against. He made some exceptions to the argument. 5. Objection, with dislike; in sense; slight anger or resentment; with at, to, or against, and commonly used with take; as, to take exception at a severe remark; to take exception to what was said. Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception. Shak. But it is more generally followed by at. 6. In law, the denial of what is alleged and considered as valid by the other party, either in point of law or in pleading; or an allegation against the sufficiency of an answer. In law, it is a stop or stay to an action, and it is either dilatory or preemptory. Blackstone.

7. A saving clause in a writing.
Bill of exceptions, in law, is a statement of exceptions to evidence, filed by the party, and which the judge must sign or seal.

EX-CES'S, (ek-ses'), n. [L. excessus, from excedo. See EXCEED.]
 1. Literally, that which exceeds any measure or limit, or which exceeds something else, or a going beyond a just line or point. Hence, superfluity; that which is beyond necessity or wants; as, an excess of provisions; excess of light.
 2. That which is beyond the common measure, proportion, or due quantity; as, the excess of a limb; the excess of bile in the system.
 3. Superabundance of any thing. Newton.
 4. Any transgression of due limits. Atterbury.
 5. In morals, any indulgence of appetite, passion, or exertion, beyond the rules of God's word, or beyond any rule of propriety; intemperance in gratifications; as, excess in eating or drinking; excess of joy; excess of grief; excess of love, or of anger; excess of labor.
 6. In arithmetic and geometry, that by which one number or quantity exceeds another; that which remains when the lesser number or quantity is taken from the greater.

EX-CES'SIVE, a. Beyond any given degree, measure, or limit, or beyond the common measure or proportion; as, the excessive bulk of a man; excessive labor; excessive wages.
 2. Beyond the established laws of morality and religion, or beyond the bounds of justice, fitness, propriety, expedience, or utility; as, excessive indulgence of any kind.
Excessive bail shall not be required. Bill of Rights.

3. Extravagant; unreasonable. His expenditures of money were excessive.
 4. Vehement; violent; as, excessive passion.

EX-CES'SIVE-LY, adv. In an extreme degree; beyond measure; exceedingly; as, excessively impatient; excessively grieved.

2. Vehemently; violently; as, the wind blew excessively.

EX-CES'SIVE-NESS, n. The state or quality of being excessive; excess.

EX-CHAN'CEL-LOR, n. One who has been chancellor, but has left the office.

EX-CHANGE, (eks-chang'), v. t. [Fr. echanger; Arm. ecchin; from changer, cehin, to change.]
 1. In commerce, to give one thing or commodity for another; to alienate or transfer the property of a thing, and receive, in compensation for it, something of supposed equal value; to barter; and, in vulgar language, to swap; to truck. It differs from sell only in the kind of compensation. To sell is to alienate for money; to exchange is to alienate one commodity for another; as, to exchange horses; to exchange oxen for corn.
 2. To lay aside, quit, or resign, one thing, state, or condition, and take another in the place of it; as, to exchange a crown for a cowl; to exchange a throne for a cell or a hermitage; to exchange a life of ease for a life of toil.

 3. To give and receive reciprocally; to give and receive in compensation the same thing.
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet. Shak.

4. To give and receive the like thing; as, to exchange thoughts; to exchange work; to exchange blows; to exchange prisoners.
 It has well before the person receiving the thing given, and for before the equivalent. Will you exchange horses with me? Will you exchange your horse for mine?

EX-CHANGE, n. In commerce, the act of giving one thing or commodity for another; barter; traffic by permutation, in which the thing received is supposed to be equivalent to the thing given.
Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses. — Gen. xiv.
 2. The act of giving up or resigning one thing or state for another, without contract.
 3. The act of giving and receiving reciprocally; as, an exchange of thoughts; an exchange of civilities.
 4. The contract by which one commodity is transferred to another for an equivalent commodity.
 5. The thing given in return for something received; or the thing received in return for what is given.
There's my exchange. Shak.

In ordinary business, this is called CHANGE.
 6. The form of exchanging one debt or credit for another; or the receiving or paying of money in one place, for an equal sum in another, by order, draft, or bill of exchange. A in London is creditor to B in New York, and C in London owes D in New York a like sum. A in London draws a bill of exchange on B in New York; C in London purchases the bill, by which A receives his debt due from B in New York. C transmits the bill to D in New York, who receives the amount from B.
Bills of exchange, drawn on persons in a foreign country, are called foreign bills of exchange; the like bills, drawn on persons in different parts or cities of the same country, are called inland bills of exchange.
 A bill of exchange is a mercantile contract, in which four persons are primarily concerned.
 7. In mercantile language, a bill drawn for money is called exchange, instead of a bill of exchange.
 8. The course of exchange, is the current price between two places, which is above or below par, or at par. Exchange is at par, when a bill in New York, for the payment of one hundred pounds sterling in London, can be purchased for one hundred pounds. If it can be purchased for less, exchange is under par. If the purchaser is obliged to give more, exchange is above par.
 9. In law, a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other. Estates exchanged must be equal in quantity, as fee-simple for fee-simple. Blackstone.
 10. The place where the merchants, brokers, and bankers of a city meet to transact business, at certain hours; often contracted into CHANGE.

EX-CHANGE-A-BIL'I-TY, n. The quality or state of being exchangeable.
 Though the law ought not to be contravened by an express article admitting the exchangeability of such persons. Washington.

EX-CHANGE-A-BLE, a. That may be exchanged; capable of being exchanged; fit or proper to be exchanged.

EX-O-R-ATE, v. t. To obtain by request.

EX-O-R-I-TANCE, (egz-or-be-tans), n. [L. exoriturus, from ex and orbita, the track of a wheel, orbita, an orb.] Literally, a going beyond or without the track or usual limit. Hence, enormity; extravagance; a deviation from rule or the ordinary limits of right or propriety; as, the exorbitancies of the tongue, or of deportment.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies. Dryden.

EX-OR-BI-TANT, a. [L. exorbitans.]

- Literally, departing from an orbit or usual track. Hence, deviating from the usual course; going beyond the appointed rules or established limits of right or propriety; hence, excessive; extravagant; enormous. We speak of exorbitant appetites and passions; exorbitant demands or claims; exorbitant taxes.
- Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews were incited with causes exorbitant. Hooker.

EX-OR-BI-TANT-LY, adv. Enormously; excessively.

EX-OR-BI-TATE, v. t. To go beyond the usual track or orbit; to deviate from the usual limit. Bentley.

EX-OR-CISE, (eks-or-size), v. t. [Gr. ἐξορκίζω, to adjure, from ὄρκιζω, to bind by oath, from ὄρκος, an oath.]

- To adjure by some holy name; but chiefly, to expel evil spirits by conjurations, prayers, and ceremonies. To exorcise a person, is to expel from him the evil spirit supposed to possess him. To exorcise a demon or evil spirit, is to cast him out or drive him from a person by prayers or other ceremonies. Encyc.
- To purify from unclean spirits by adjurations and ceremonies; to deliver from the influence of malignant spirits or demons; as, to exorcise a bed or a house.

EX-OR-CIS-ED, pp. Expelled from a person or place by conjurations and prayers; freed from demons in like manner.

EX-OR-CIS-ER, n. One who pretends to cast out evil spirits by adjurations and conjuration.

EX-OR-CIS-ING, pp. Expelling evil spirits by prayers and ceremonies.

EX-OR-CISM, n. [L. exorcismus; Gr. ἐξορκισμός.] The expulsion of evil spirits from persons or places by certain adjurations and ceremonies. Exorcism was common among the Jews, and still makes a part of the superstitions of some churches. Encyc.

EX-OR-CIST, n. One who pretends to expel evil spirits by conjuration, prayers, and ceremonies. Acts xix.

EX-OR-DI-AL, (egz-), a. [Infra.] Pertaining to the exordium of a discourse; introductory. Brown.

EX-OR-DI-UM, n.; pl. EX-ORDIUMS. [L., from exordi- or ex and ordior, to begin. See ORDO.]

In oratory, the beginning; the introductory part of a discourse, which prepares the audience for the main subject; the preface or preambular part of a composition. The exordium may be formal and deliberate, or abrupt and vehement, according to the nature of the subject and occasion.

EX-OR-RH'ZE, n. pl. [Gr. ἐξ and ῥιζα.] In botany, plants whose radicle elongates downward, directly from the base of the embryo. Lindley.

EX-OR-RH'ZOUS, a. Pertaining to the exorhizis.

EX-OR-N-ATION, n. [L. exornatio, from exorno; ex and orno, to adorn.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment. Hale. Hooker.

EX-OS-SA-TED, a. [Infra.] Deprived of bones.

EX-OS-SE-OUS, a. [L. ex and ossa, bones.] Without bones; destitute of bones; as, exosseous animals. Brown.

EX-OS-TOME, n. [Gr. ἐξω and στομα.] The small aperture or foramen of the ovule of a plant. Beck.

EX-OS-TO'SIS, n. [Gr. ἐξ and στέωσις, a bone.] Any protuberance of a bone which is not natural; an excrescence, or morbid enlargement of a bone. Cole.

Also, in botany, a disease in which knots are formed upon or in the wood.

EX-O-TER-IC, a. [Gr. ἐξωτερικός, exterior.]

EX-O-TER-IC-AL, a. [Gr. ἐξωτερικός, exterior.] External; public; opposed to esoteric or secret. The esoteric doctrines of the ancient philosophers were those which were openly professed and taught. The esoteric were secret, or taught only to a few chosen disciples. Enfield. Encyc.

EX-O-TER-Y, n. What is obvious or common. Search.

EX-OT'IC, (egz-ot'ik), a. [Gr. ἔξωτος, from ἐξω, without.] Foreign; introduced from a foreign country; not native; extraneous; as, an exotic plant; an exotic term or word.

EX-OT'IC, n. A plant, shrub, or tree, not native; a plant introduced from a foreign country. Addison.

2. A word of foreign origin introduced into a language.

EX-OT'IC-ISM, n. The state of being exotic.

EX-PAND', v. l. [L. expando; ex and pando, to open, or spread; it. spandere, to pour out; coinciding with Eng. span, D. span, spannen, Sw. spänna, Dan. spænder. See Ar. بأن baina, Class Bn, No. 3. The primary sense is, to strain or stretch; and this seems to be the sense of bend, L. pandus.]

1. To open; to spread; as, a flower expands its leaves.

2. To spread; to enlarge a surface; to diffuse; as, a stream expands its waters over a plain.

3. To dilate; to enlarge in bulk; to expand; as, to expand the chest by inspiration; heat expands all bodies; air is expanded by rarefaction.

4. To enlarge; to extend; as, to expand the sphere of benevolence; to expand the heart or affections.

EX-PAND', v. i. To open; to spread. Flowers expand in spring.

2. To dilate; to extend in bulk or surface. Metals expand by heat; a lake expands, when swelled by rains.

3. To enlarge; as, the heart expands with joy.

EX-PAND'ED, pp. or a. Opened; spread; extended; dilated; enlarged; diffused.

EX-PAND'ING, pp. or a. Opening; spreading; extending; dilating; diffusing.

EX-PANSE', (eks-pans'), n. [L. expansum.] A spreading; extent; a wide extent of space or body; as, the expansive of heaven.

The smooth expansive of crystal lakes. Pope.

EX-PANS-I-BIL-I-TY, n. [from expansibile.] The capacity of being expanded; capacity of extension in surface or bulk; as, the expansibility of air.

EX-PANS'I-BLE, a. [Fr. from expandre.] Capable of being expanded or spread; capable of being extended, dilated, or diffused.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight. Oreus.

EX-PANS'I-BLE-NESS, a. Expansibility.

EX-PANS'I-BLY, adv. In an expansive manner.

EX-PANS'ILE, a. Capable of expanding, or of being dilated.

EX-PAN'SION, (eks-pan'shon), n. [L. expansio.]

1. The act of expanding or spreading out.

2. The state of being expanded; the enlargement of surface or bulk; dilatation. We apply expansion to surface, as the expansion of a sheet or of a lake, and to bulk, as the expansion of fluids or metals by heat; but not to a line or length without breadth.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is enlarged; also, pure space or distance between remote bodies.

4. Enlargement; as, the expansion of the heart or affections.

5. In commerce, an increase of issues of bank notes.

EX-PAN'SION-CURB, n. A contrivance to counteract expansion and contraction by heat, as in chronometers.

EX-PAN'SIVE, a. [Fr.] Having the power to expand, to spread, or to dilate; as, the expansive force of heat or fire. Gregory.

2. Having the capacity of being expanded; as, the expansive quality of air; the expansive atmosphere. Thomson.

3. Widely extended; as, expansive benevolence.

EX-PAN'SIVE-NESS, n. The quality of being expansive.

EX-PARTE, [L.] On one part; as, ex parte evidence, that which is brought forward by one side only; an ex parte council, one which assembles at the request of only one of the parties in dispute.

EX-PAT'RI-ATE, (eks-pat'ri-ate), v. l. [L. expatriare; ex and patriare, to wander, to enlarge in discourse, patrium, space, probably allied to pater, to open. Class Bd.]

1. To move at large; to rove without prescribed limits; to wander in space without restraint.

He bids his soul expatriate in the skies. Pope.

Expatriate thee o'er all this scene of man. Pope.

2. To enlarge in discourse or writing; to be eloquent in argument or discussion. On important topics, the orator thinks himself at liberty to expatriate.

EX-PAT'RI-ATING, pp. Roving at large; moving in and out without certain limits or restraint; enlarging in discourse or writing.

EX-PAT'RI-ATION, n. Act of expatriating.

EX-PAT'RIATOR, n. One who enlarges or amplifies in language.

EX-PAT'RI-ATOR-Y, a. Expatriating.

EX-PAT'RI-ATE or EX-PAT'RI-ATE, v. t. [Fr. expatrier; it. spatriare; from L. ex and patrio, country.] In a general sense, to banish.

To expatriate one's self, is to quit one's country, renouncing citizenship and allegiance in that country, to take residence and become a citizen in another country. The right to expatriate one's self, is denied in feudal countries, and much controverted in the United States.

EX-PAT'RI-ATED or EX-PAT'RI-ATED, pp. Banished; removed from one's native country, with renunciation of citizenship and allegiance.

EX-PAT'RI-ATING or EX-PAT'RI-ATING, pp. Banishing; abandoning one's country, with renunciation of allegiance.

EX-PAT'RI-ATION or EX-PAT'RI-ATION, n. Banishment. Mors generally, the forsaking one's own country, with a renunciation of allegiance, and with the view of becoming a permanent resident and citizen in another country.

EX-PECT', v. l. [L. expecto; ex and specto, to look, that is, to reach forward, or to fix the eyes.]

1. To wait for.

The gnat,
By me encamped on yonder hill, expect
Their moucho. Milton.

[This sense, though often used by Gibbon, seems to be obsolete.]

2. To look for; to have a previous apprehension of something future, whether good or evil; to entertain at least a slight belief that an event will happen. We expect a visit that has been promised; we expect money will be paid at the time it is due, though we are often disappointed.

Expect, in its legitimate sense, always refers to a future event. [The common phrase, I expect it was, is as vulgar as it is improper.]

3. To require or demand; as, payment will be expected when the note falls due. Whately.

EX-PECT', v. i. To wait; to stay. Sandys.

EX-PECT'A-BLE, a. To be expected; that may be expected.

EX-PECT'ANCE, n. The act or state of expecting; expectation. Milton. Shak.

2. Something expected. Shak.

3. Hope; a looking for with pleasure. Shak.

EX-PECT'AN-CY, n. In law, a state of waiting or suspension. An estate in expectancy, is one which is to take effect or commence after the determination of another estate. Estates of this kind are remainders and reversions. A remainder, or estate in remainder, is one which is limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. Thus, when a grant of land is made to A for twenty years, and, after the determination of that term, to B and his heirs forever, A is tenant for years, remainder to B in fee. In this case, the estate of B is in expectancy, that is, waiting for the determination of the estate for years. A reversion is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of a particular estate granted out by him. As, when A leases an estate to B for twenty years, after the determination of that period, the estate reverts to the lessor or in expectancy. Blackstone.

EX-PECT'ANT, a. Waiting; looking for. Swift.

2. Expectant estate, one which is suspended till the determination of a particular estate. Blackstone.

EX-PECT'ANT, n. One who expects; one who waits in expectation; one held in dependence by his belief or hope of receiving some good. Those who have the gift of offices are usually surrounded by expectants.

EX-PECT'ATION, n. [L. expectatio.]

1. The act of expecting or looking forward to a future event with at least some reason to believe the event will happen. Expectation differs from hope. Hope originates in desire, and may exist with little or no ground of belief that the desired event will arrive. Expectation is founded on some reasons which render the event probable. Hope is directed to some good; expectation is directed to good or evil.

The same weakness of mind which indulges absurd expectations, produces painless disappointment. Irving.

2. The state of expecting, either with hope or fear.

3. Prospect of good to come.

My soul, wait thou only on God, for my expectation is from him. — Ps. lxxi.

4. The object of expectation; the expected Messiah. Milton.

5. A state or qualities in a person which excite expectations in others of some future excellence; as, a youth of expectation. Sidney. Otway.

We now more generally say, a youth of promise.

6. In chances, the value of any prospect of prize or property depending upon the happening of some uncertain event. A sum of money, to be paid when an event happens, has a determinate value before that event happens. If the chances of receiving or not receiving a hundred dollars, when an event arrive, are equal, then, before the arrival of the event the expectation is worth half the money.

Barlow. Encyc.

Expectation of life; in annuities, a term applied to the mean or average duration of the life of individuals, after any specified age. P. Cyc.

EX-PECT'A-TIVE, n. That which is expected. [Not used.]

EX-PECT'ER, n. One who expects; one who waits for something, or for another person. Swift. Shak.

EX-PECT'ING, pp. Waiting or looking for the arrival of.

EX-PECT'ING-LY, adv. In a state of expectation.

EX-PECT'O-RANT, a. [See EXPECTORATE.] Having the quality of promoting discharges from the lungs.

EX-PECT'O-RANT, n. A medicine which promotes discharges from the lungs.

EX-PECT'O-RATE, v. t. [L. expectoro; Sp. expectoro; Fr. expectorer; from L. ex and pectus, the breast.] To eject from the trachea or lungs; to discharge phlegm or other matter, by coughing, hawking, a id spitting. Coze.

EX-PECT'O-RATE-D, pp. or a. Discharged from the lungs.

EX-PECT'O-RAT'ING, pp. Throwing from the lungs by hawking and spitting.

EX-PECT'O-RAT'ION, n. The act of discharging phlegm or mucus from the lungs, by coughing, hawking, and spitting; also, the matter thus discharged. Encyc.

EX-PECT'O-RATIVE, a. Having the quality of promoting expectation.

EX-PE'DI', HERCULEM, [L.] From the remaining foot of Hercules' statue, learn the size of his entire person; from a partial exhibition, learn the full extent of a man's powers or characteristic excellence.

EX-PE'DI-ATE, v. l. To expedite. [Not in use.]

EX-PE'DI-ANCE; n. [See EXPEDIENT, and EX-PE'DI-ENCY.] EXPEDITE.

1. Fitness or suitability to effect some good end or the purpose intended; propriety under the particular circumstances of the case. The practicability of a measure is often obvious, when the expediency of it is questionable.

2. Expedition; adventure. [Not now used.] Shak.

3. Expedition; haste; dispatch. [Not now used.] Shak.

EX-PE'DI-ENT, (eks-pe'di-ent), a. [L. expediens; expedio, to hasten; Eng. speed; Gr. ἔπιωδιον.]

1. Literally, hastening; urging forward. Hence, tending to promote the object proposed; fit or suitable for the purpose; proper under the circumstances. Many things may be lawful, which are not expedient.

2. Useful; profitable.

3. Quick; expeditious. [Not used.] Shak.

EX-PE'DI-ENT, n. That which serves to promote or advance; any means which may be employed to accomplish an end. Let every expedient be employed to effect an important object, nor let exertions cease till all expedients fail of producing the effect.

2. Shift; means devised or employed in an exigency. Dryden.

EX-PE'DI-ENT-LY, adv. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.

2. Hastily; quickly. [Obs.] Shak.

EX-PE'DI-TATE, v. l. [L. ex and pes, foot.] In the forest laws of England, to cut out the balls or claws of a dog's fore feet, for the preservation of the king's game.

EX-PE-DI-TATION, n. The act of cutting out the balls or claws of a dog's fore feet. Encyc.

EX-PE-DITE, v. l. [L. expedito; Sp. expedir; Fr. expédier; it. spedire; Ar. أسفد asfuda, to hasten, or أسفد, asfuda, to send, to move hastily, to be suitable; Eng. speed. Expedito is compound. We see the same root in impedito, to hinder, to send against, to move in opposition.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate motion or progress. The general sent orders to expedite the march of the army. Artificial heat may expedite the growth of plants.

2. To dispatch; to send from.

Such characters are expedito of course. Bacon.

3. To hasten by rendering easy. See No. 1.

EX-PE-DITE, a. [L. expeditus.]

1. Quick; speedy; expeditious; as, expedite execution. [Little used.] Sandys.

2. Easy; clear of impediments; unencumbered; as, to make a way plain and expedite. [Urusual.]

3. Active; nimble; ready; prompt. [Hooker.]

The more expedite will be the soul in its operations. [Unusual.] Tillotson.

4. Light-armed. [Not used.] Bacon.

EX-PE-DITE-D, pp. Facilitated; freed from impediment.

EX-PE-DITE-LY, adv. Readily; hastily; speedily; promptly. Greco.

EX-PE-DIT'ING, pp. Facilitating; hastening.

EX-PEDITION, (eks-pe-dish'un), n. [L. expeditio.]

1. Haste; speed; quickness; dispatch. The mail is conveyed with expedition.
2. The march of an army, or the voyage of a fleet, to a distant place, for hostile purposes; as, the expedition of the French to Egypt; the expedition of Xerxes into Greece.

3. Any enterprise, undertaking, or attempt by a number of persons; or the collective body which undertakes. We say, our government sent an expedition to the Pacific; the expedition has arrived.

EX-PEDITION-ARY, a. Consisting in an expedition.

EX-PEDITIONOUS, (eks-pe-dish'un), a. Quick; hasty; speedy; as, an expeditionary march.

2. Nimble; active; swift; acting with celerity; as, an expeditionary messenger or runner.

EX-PEDITIONOUSLY, adv. Speedily; hastily; with celerity or dispatch.

EX-PEDITIVE, a. Performing with speed. Bacon.

EX-PELL, v. t. [L. expella: ex and pelle, to drive, Gr. βάλω; It. expellere; W. apellio; and from the L. participle, F. expulser. Class III.]

1. To drive or force out from any inclosed place; as, to expel wind from the stomach, or air from a bellows. [The word is applicable to any force, physical or moral.]

2. To drive out; to force to leave; as, to expel the inhabitants of a country; to expel wild beasts from a forest.

3. To eject; to throw out. Dryden.

4. To banish; to exile. Pope.

5. To reject; to refuse. [Little used.]

And would you not poor fellowship expel? Hub. Talc.

6. To exclude; to keep out or off. Shak.

7. In college government, to command to leave; to dissolve the connection of a student; to bid him from further connection.

EX-PELLABLE, a. That may be expelled or driven out.

Accid expellabile by heat. Kirwan.

EX-PELL'ED, (eks-pel'd'), pp. or a. Driven out or away; forced to leave; banished; exiled; excluded.

EX-PELL'ER, n. He or that which drives out or away.

EX-PELL'ING, ppr. Driving out; forcing away; compelling to quit or depart; banishing; excluding.

EX-PEND, v. t. [L. expendo: ex and pendo, to weigh; Sp. expender; F. dépenser, from L. pendenda; It. spendere; properly, to weigh off; hence, to lay out.]

1. To lay out; to disburse; to spend; to deliver or distribute, either in payment or in donations. We expend money for food, drink, and clothing. We expend a little in charity, and a great deal in idle amusements.

2. To lay out; to use; to employ; to consume; as, to expend time and labor. I hope the time, labor, and money expended on this book will not be wholly misemployed.

3. To use and consume; as, to expend hay in feeding cattle.

4. To consume; to dissipate; to waste; as, the oil of a lamp is expended in burning; water is expended in mechanical operations.

EX-PEND', v. i. To be laid out, used, or consumed.

EX-PEND'ED, pp. Laid out; spent; disbursed; used; consumed.

EX-PEND'ING, ppr. Spending; using; employing; wasting.

EX-PEND'ITURE, n. The act of expending; a laying out, as of money; disbursement. A corrupt administration is known by extravagant expenditures of public money.

National income and expenditures. Price.

2. Money expended; expense

The receipts and expenditures of this extensive country. Hamilton.

EX-PENSE, (eks-pens'), n. [L. expensum.]

1. A laying out or expending; the disbursing of money, or the employment and consumption, as of time or labor. Great enterprises are accomplished only by a great expense of money, time, and labor.

2. Money expended; cost; charge; that which is disbursed in payment or in charity. A prudent man limits his expenses by his income. The expenses of war are rarely or never reimbursed by the acquisition either of goods or territory.

3. That which is used, employed, laid out, or consumed; as, the expense of time or labor.

EX-PENSEFUL, a. Costly; expensive. [Little used.] Wotton.

EX-PENSEFULLY, adv. In a costly manner; with great expense. Wiccecr.

EX-PENSELESS, a. Without cost or expense. Milton.

EX-PENSIVE, a. Costly; requiring much expense; as, an expensive dress or equipage; an expensive family. Vices are usually more expensive than virtues.

2. Given to expense; free in the use of money; extravagant; lavish; applied to persons. Of men, some are frugal and industrious; others, idle and expensive. Temple.

3. Liberal; generous in the distribution of property.

This requires an active, expensive, indefatigable goodness. Spratt.

EX-PENSIVELY, adv. With great expense; at great cost or charge. Swift.

EX-PENSIVENESS, n. Costliness; the quality of incurring or requiring great expenditures of money. The expensiveness of war is not its greatest evil.

2. Addictedness to expense; extravagance; applied to persons.

EX-PERIENCE, n. [L. experientia, from experior, to try; ex and ant. perior; Gr. νεῖποι, to attempt, whence pirate: G. erfahren, from fuhren, to move, to go, to drive, to ferry; D. ervaaren, from raaren, to go, to move, to sail; Sw. sörfara, fara; Dan. forfarer, forer; Sax. faran; Goth. faran; Eng. to fare. The L. periculum, Eng. peril, are from the same root. We see the root of these words is, to go, to fare, to drive, urge, or press, to strain or stretch forward. See Class Br, No. 3, Ar. No. 4, 19, 23.]

1. Trial, or a series of trials or experiments; active effort or attempt to do or to prove something, or repeated efforts. A man attempts to raise wheat on moist or clayey ground; his attempt fails of success; experience proves that wheat will not flourish on such a soil. He repeats the trial, and his experience proves the same fact. A single trial is usually denominated an experiment; experience may be a series of trials, or the result of such trials.

2. Observation of a fact, or of the same facts or events happening under like circumstances.

3. Trial from suffering or enjoyment; suffering itself; the use of the senses; as, the experience we have of pain or sickness. We know the effect of light, of smell, or of taste, by experience. We learn the instability of human affairs by observation or by experience. We learn the value of integrity by experience. Hence,

4. Knowledge derived from trials, use, practice, or from a series of observations.

EX-PERIENCE, v. t. To try by use, by suffering, or by enjoyment. Thus we all experience pain, sorrow, and pleasure; we experience good and evil; we often experience a change of sentiments and views.

2. To know by practice or trial; to gain knowledge or skill by practice, or by a series of observations.

EX-PERIENCE-ED, (eks-pe-ri-ens'ted), pp. Tried; used; practiced.

2. a. Taught by practice or by repeated observations; skillful or wise by means of trials, use, or observation; as, an experienced artist; an experienced physician.

EX-PERIENCE-ER, n. One who makes trials or experiments.

EX-PERIENCE-ING, ppr. Making trial; suffering or enjoying.

EX-PERIMENT, n. [L. experimentum, from experior, as in Experience, which see.]

A trial; an act or operation designed to discover some unknown truth, principle, or effect, or to establish it when discovered. It differs from observation, which is merely the tentative consideration of things, as they exist in nature. Experiments in chemistry disclose the qualities of natural bodies. A series of experiments proves the uniformity of the laws of matter. It is not always safe to trust to a single experiment. It is not expedient to try many experiments in legislation.

A political experiment can not be made in a laboratory, nor determined in a few hours. J. Adams.

EX-PERIMENT, v. i. To make trial; to make an experiment; to operate on a body in such a manner as to discover some unknown fact, or to establish it when known. Philosophers experiment on natural bodies for the discovery of their qualities and combinations.

2. To try; to search by trial.

3. To experience. [Not used.] Locke.

EX-PERIMENT, v. t. To try; to know by trial. [Little used.] Herbert.

EX-PERIMENTAL, a. Pertaining to experiment.

2. Known by experiment or trial; derived from experiment.

Experimental knowledge is the most valuable, because it is most certain, and most safely to be trusted.

3. Built on experiments; founded on trial and observations, or on a series of results, the effects of operations; as, experimental philosophy.

4. Taught by experience; having personal experience.

Admit to the holy communion such only as profess and appear to be regenerated, and experimental Christians. H. Humphreys.

5. Known by experience; derived from experience; as, experimental religion.

EX-PERIMENTAL-IST, n. One who makes experiments. Burgess.

EX-PERIMENTAL-LY, adv. By experiment; by trial; by operation and observation of results.

2. By experience; by suffering or enjoyment. We are all experimentally acquainted with pain and pleasure.

EX-PET'ABLE, a. [L. expetibilis.]

That may be wished for; desirable. [Not used.]

EX-PET'ABLE, a. [L. expetibilis. See Expiate.]

That may be expiated; that may be atoned for and done away; as, an expiable offense; expiable guilt.

EX-PET'ATE, v. t. [L. expio; ex and pio, to worship, to atone; pius, pious, mild. The primary sense is probably to appease, to pacify, to allay resentment, which is the usual sense of atone in most languages which I have examined. Pio is probably contracted from pio, and from the root of paco, the radical sense of which is to lay, set, or fix; the primary sense of peace, paz. Hence the sense of mild in pius. But this opinion is offered only as probable.]

1. To atone for; to make satisfaction for; to extinguish the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety or worship, by which the obligation to punish the crime is canceled. To expiate guilt or a crime, is to perform some act which is supposed to purify the person guilty; or some act which is accepted by the offended party as satisfaction for the injury; that is, some act by which his wrath is appeased, and his forgiveness procured.

2. To make reparation for; as, to expiate an injury. Clarendon.

3. To avert the threats of prodigies. Johnson.

EX-PET'ATED, pp. Atoned for; done away by satisfaction offered and accepted.

EX-PET'ATING, ppr. Making atonement or satisfaction for; destroying or removing guilt, and canceling the obligation to punish.

EX-PET'ATION, n. [L. expiatio.]

1. The act of atoning for a crime; the act of making satisfaction for an offense, by which the guilt is done away, and the obligation of the offended person to punish the crime is canceled; atonement; satisfaction. Among pagans and Jews, expiation was made chiefly by sacrifices, or washings, and purification. Among Christians, expiation for the sins of men is usually considered as made only by the obedience and sufferings of Christ.

2. The means by which atonement for crimes is made; atonement; as sacrifices and purification among heathens, and the obedience and death of Christ among Christians.

3. Among ancient heathens, an act by which the threats of prodigies were averted. Haywood.

EX-PET'ATORY, n. Having the power to make atonement or expiation; as, an expiatory sacrifice.

EX-PILATION, n. [L. expilio, from expilo, to strip; ex and pilo, to peel.]

A stripping; the act of committing waste on land, to the injury of an heir; waste. [Little used.] Fuller.

EX-PIRABLE, a. [from expire.] That may expire; that may come to an end.

EX-PIRANT, n. One expiring.

EX-PIRATION, n. [L. expiratio, from expiro. See Expire.]

1. The act of breathing out, or forcing the air from the lungs. Respiration consists of expiration and inspiration.

2. The last emission of breath; death. Rambler.

3. The emission of volatile matter from any substance; evaporation; exhalation; as, the expiration of warm air from the earth.

4. Matter expired; exhalation; vapor; fume. Bacon.

5. Cessation; close; end; conclusion; termination.

tion of a limited time; as, the expiration of a month or year; the expiration of a term of years; the expiration of a lease; the expiration of a contract or agreement.

EX-PY-RATO-RY, a. Pertaining to the emission or expiration of breath from the lungs. Hall.

EX-PY-RÉ, v. l. [L. expiro, for expiro; ex and pyro, to breathe.]

1. To breathe out; to throw out the breath from the lungs; opposed to inspire. We expire air at every breath.

2. To exhale; to emit in minute particles, as a fluid or volatile matter. The earth expires a damp or warm vapor; the body expires fluid matter from the pores; plants expire odors.

3. To conclude. [Obs.]

EX-PY-RÉ, v. l. To emit the last breath, as an animal; to die; to breathe the last.

2. To perish; to end; to fail or be destroyed; to come to nothing; to be frustrated. With this loss of battle all his hopes of empire expired.

3. To fly out; to be thrown out with force. [Rare.]

The ponderous ball expired. Dryden.

4. To come to an end; to cease; to terminate; to close or conclude, as a given period. A lease will expire on the first of May. The year expires on Monday. The contract will expire at Michaelmas. The days had not expired.

When forty years had expired. — Acts vii.

EX-PY-RÉD, pret. and pp. of EX-PY-RÉ.

EX-PY-RING, pret. Breathing out air from the lungs; emitting fluid or volatile matter; exhaling; breathing the last breath; dying; ending; terminating.

EX-PO-LI-CATION, n. [L. expletio.]

A spoliing; a wasting. [See SPOILIATION.]

EX-PO'NENT, n. [L. exponens; expono, to expose or set forth; ex and pono, to place.]

1. In algebra, the exponent or index of a power is the number or letter which, placed above a quantity at the right hand, denotes how often that quantity is repeated as a factor, to produce the power. Thus a^2 denotes the second power of a ; a^4 denotes the fourth power of a ; a^z denotes the z th power of a , or a repeated as a factor z times. A fractional exponent or index is used to denote the root of a quantity. Thus $a^{\frac{1}{3}}$ denotes the third or cube root of a .

2. Exponent of a ratio; a term or phrase sometimes used to denote the quotient arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent. Thus six is the exponent of the ratio of thirty to five. But some mathematicians, as Kepler, Halley, &c., consider logarithms as the exponents of ratios. Barlow. Brander.

3. Figuratively, one that stands as an index or representative; as the leader of a party is the exponent of its principles.

EX-PO-NEN'TIAL, a. Pertaining to exponents.

Exponential quantity; in algebra, a quantity whose exponent is unknown or variable. Hutton.

Exponential equation; an equation which contains an exponential quantity. Hutton.

Exponential curve; a curve whose nature is defined by means of an exponential equation. Hutton.

EX-PO'PE, n. A pope deposed, or dismissed from office. McGavin.

EX-PO'RT', v. t. [L. exporto; ex and porto, to carry. Porto seems allied to fero, and Eng. bear. Class Br.]

To carry out; but appropriately, and perhaps exclusively, to convey or transport, in traffic, produce, and goods from one country to another, or from one state or jurisdiction to another, either by water or land. We export wares and merchandise from the United States to Europe. The Northern States export manufactures to South Carolina and Georgia.

Goods are exported from Persia to Syria and Egypt on camels.

EX'PORT, n. A commodity actually conveyed from one country or state to another in traffic, or a commodity which may be exported; used chiefly in the plural, exports. We apply the word to goods or produce actually carried abroad, or to such as are usually exported in commerce.

EX-PO'RT'ABLE, a. That may be exported.

EX-PO'RT'ATION, n. The act of exporting; the act of conveying goods and productions from one country or state to another in the course of commerce. A country is benefited or enriched by the exportation of its surplus productions.

2. The act of carrying out.

EX-PO'RT'ED, pp. or a. Carried out of a country or state in traffic.

EX-PO'RT'ER, n. The person who exports; the person who ships goods, wares, and merchandise of any kind to a foreign country, or who sends them to market in a distant country or state; opposed to importer.

F, the sixth letter of the English alphabet, is a labial articulation, formed by placing the upper teeth on the under lip, and accompanied with an emission of breath. F in English has one uniform sound, as in fathers, &c. Its kindred letter is v, which is chiefly distinguished from f by being more vocal, or accompanied with more sound, as may be perceived by pronouncing of, ev. This letter may be derived from the Oriental vau, or from pe or pha; most probably the former. The Latins received the letter from the Eolians in Greece, who wrote it in the form of a double gamma, F; whence it has been called a di-gamma. It corresponds in power to the Greek ϕ , phi, and its proper name is ef.

 As a Latin numeral, it signifies 40, and with a dash over the top, F, forty thousand.
 In the civil law, two of these letters together, ff, signify the pandects.
 In English criminal law, this letter is branded on felons, when admitted to the benefit of clergy; by stat. 4 ll. vii. c. 13.
 In medical prescriptions, F stands for fat, let it be made; F. S. A. fiat secundum artem.

F stands also for few; F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.
 F, or fa, in music, is the fourth note rising in this order in the gamut, do, [or ut], re, mi, fa. It denotes, also, one of the Greek keys in a music, destined for the base.

3. To decline; to decay; to sink; to become weaker; as, the patient fails every hour.

4. To be extinct; to cease; to be entirely wanting; to be no longer produced.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. — Ps. xii.

5. To be entirely exhausted; to be wanting; to cease from supply.

Money failed in the land of Egypt. — Gen. xlvii.

8. To cease; to perish; to be lost. Least the remembrance of his grief should fail. Addison.

7. To die. They shall all fail together. — Is. xxxi.

8. To decay; to decline; as, the eight fails in old age.

9. To become deficient or wanting; as, the heart or the courage fails.

10. To miss; not to produce the effect. The experiment was made with care, but failed, or failed to produce the effect, or failed of the effect.

11. To be deficient in duty; to omit or neglect. The debtor failed to fulfill his promise.

12. To miss; to miscarry; to be frustrated or disappointed. The enemy attacked the fort, but failed in his design, or failed of success.

13. To be neglected; to fall short; not to be executed. The promises of a man of probity seldom fail. The soul or the spirit fails, when a person is discouraged. The eyes fail, when the desires and expectations are long delayed, and the person is disappointed.

14. To become insolvent or bankrupt. When merchants and traders fail, they are said to become bankrupt. When other men fail, they are said to become insolvent.

FAIL, v. t. To desert; to disappoint; to cease or to neglect or omit to afford aid, supply, or strength. It is said, fortune never fails the brave. Our friends sometimes fail us, when we most need them. The aged attempt to walk, when their limbs fail them. In bold enterprises, courage should never fail the hero.

2. To omit; not to perform.
The inventive God, who never fails his part. Dryden.

3. To be wanting to.
There shall never fail thee a man on the throne. — 1 Kings ii.
[In the transitive use of this verb, there is really an allusion of from or to, or other word. In strictness, the verb is not transitive, and the passive participle is, I believe, never used.]

FAIL, n. Omission; non-performance.
He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. — Josh. iii.

2. Miscarriage; failure; deficiency; want; death. [In this sense little used.]

FAILURE, n. Fault; failure. [Obs.]

FAILED, pret. and pp. of FAIL. Becomes deficient; ceased.

FAILING, ppr. or a. Becoming deficient or insufficient; becoming weaker; decaying; declining; omitting; not executing or performing; miscarrying; neglecting; wanting; becoming bankrupt or insolvent.

FAILING, n. The act of failing; deficiency; imperfection; lapse; fault. Failings, in a moral sense, are minor faults, proceeding rather from weakness of intellect, or from carelessness, than from bad motives. But the word is often abusively applied to vices of the grosser kind.

2. The act of failing or becoming insolvent.

FAILING-LY, adv. By failing.

FAILURE, (fail'yr, n.) A failing; deficiency; cessation of supply, or total defect; as, the failure of springs or streams; failure of rain; failure of crops.

2. Omission; non-performance; as, the failure of a promise; a man's failure in the execution of a trust.

3. Decay, or defect from decay; as, the failure of memory or of sight.

4. A breaking, or becoming insolvent. At the close of a war, the prices of commodities fall, and innumerable failures succeed.

5. A failing; a slight fault. [Little used.]

FAIN, a. [Sax. fagen, fagan, glad; fagnian, Goth. fagnian, to rejoice; Sw. fagen. Class Bg, No. 3, 43, 77.]
Glad; pleased; rejoiced. But the appropriate sense of the word is glad, or pleased to do something under some kind of necessity; that is, glad to evade evil or secure good. Thus, says Locke, "The learned Castalio was fain to make trenches at Basil, to keep himself from starving." This appropriation of the word, which is modern, led Dr. Johnson into a mistake in defining the word. The proper signification is glad, joyful.

FAIN, adv. Gladly; with joy or pleasure.
He would fain see out of his hand. — Job xxvii.
He would fain have filled his belly with husks. — Luke xv.

FAIN, v. i. To wish or desire. [Not used.]

FAINING, ppr. or a. Washing; desiring fondly.
In his faining eye. Spenser.

FAINT, a. [Fr. faine, a weakening; fana, weak; fannata, weakness, inclination to faint; anbfwne, fainting; Fr. fainant, idle, sluggish. This word is perhaps allied to Fr. faine, to fade, wither, decay, to make hay, foin, L. fenum; and to vain, L. vanus, whence to vanish, Ar. فاني fani, to vanish, to fail, Eng. to wane, Sax. fynig, musty. Class Bn, No. 25.]
1. Weak; languid; inclined to swoon; as, to be rendered faint by excessive evacuations.
2. Weak; feeble; languid; exhausted; as, faint with fatigue, hunger, or thirst.
3. Weak, as color; not bright or vivid; not strong; as, a faint color; a faint red or blue; a faint light.
4. Feeble; weak, as sound; not loud; as, a faint sound; a faint voice.

2. Fairness; applied to things or persons. [Not in use.]

FAIR, n. [Fr. fairs; W. fair; Arm. fear, foer, fear, or for; L. forum, or feria. The It. fiera, and Sp. feria, a fair, are the L. feria, a holiday, a day exempt from labor; G. fiera, whence feiern, to rest from labor. If fair is from forum, it may coincide in origin with Gr. πορον, εμπορον, to trade, whence εμπορον, emporion, the primary sense of which is to pass. In Norman French we find fair and feire. If fair is from ferre, it is so called from being held in places where the wakes or feasts at the dedication of churches were held, or from the feasts themselves. It is a fact that Sundays were formerly market days.]
A stated market in a particular town or city; a stated meeting of buyers and sellers for trade. A fair is annual or more frequent. The privilege of holding fairs is granted by the king or supreme power. Among the most celebrated fairs in Europe are those of Francfort and Leipzig in Germany; of Novi in the Milanese; of Riga and Archangel in Russia; of Lyons and St. Germain in France. In Great Britain many towns enjoy this privilege. Encyc.

In the United States, there are no fairs similar to those in England; at least I know of none. The ladies sometimes hold fairs for the sale of their work for charitable purposes. These are called, in England, FANCY-FAIRS.

FAIR-HAIR'ED, a. Having fair hair.

FAIR-HAND, a. Having a fair appearance. Shak.

FAIR/HOOD, n. Fairness; beauty. For.

Arim, a fair-speaker man. Hooker.

FAIRY, n. [G. fæ; Fr. fée, whence fée, to enchant, ferio, a fairy land; It. fata. The origin of this word is not obvious, and the radical letters are uncertain. The conjectures of Baxter, Jamieson, and others, throw no satisfactory light on the subject.]

1. A fay; an imaginary being of spirit, supposed to assume a human form, dance in meadows, steal infants, and play a variety of pranks. [See Elf and Dæmons.]
 2. An enchantment.

Fairy of the mine; an imaginary being supposed to inhabit mines, wandering about in the drifts and chambers, always employed in cutting ore, turning the windlass, &c., yet effecting nothing. The Germans believe in two species; one fierce and malevolent, the other gentle. [See COBALT.] Encyc.

FAIRY, n. Belonging to fairies; as, fairy land. Shak.

2. Given by fairies; as, fairy money or favors.

Fairy ring or circle; a phenomenon observed in fields, vulgarly supposed to be caused by fairies in their dances. This circle is of two kinds; one about seven yards in diameter, containing a round, bare path, a foot broad, with green grass in the middle; the other of different size, encircled with grass greener than that in the middle. Encyc.

FAIRY-LAND, n. The imaginary land or abode of fairies.

FAIRY-LIKE, a. Imitating the manner of fairies.

FAIRY-STONE, n. A stone found in gravel pits.

The fossil echinite, abundant in chalk pits. Cyc.

FAITH, n. [W. fæy; Arm. fæi; L. fides; It. fede; Port. and Sp. fe; Fr. foi; Gr. πίστις; L. fido, to trust; Gr. πείθομαι, to persuade, to draw toward any thing, to conciliate; πείθομαι, to believe, to obey. In the Greek Lexicon of Hieric, it is said, the primitive signification of the verb is to bind and draw or lead, as πειρα signifies a rope or cable, as does πειραμα. But this remark is a little incorrect. The sense of the verb, from which that of rope and binding is derived, is to strain, to draw, and thus to bind or make fast. A rope or cable is that which makes fast. Qu. Heb. Ch. Syr. Sam. 222. Class Bd. No. 16.]

1. Belief; the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting on his authority and veracity, without other evidence; the judgment that what another states or testifies is the truth. I have strong faith, or no faith, in the testimony of a witness, or in what a historian narrates.

2. The assent of the mind to the truth of a proposition advanced by another; belief, on probable evidence of any kind.

3. In theology, the assent of the mind or understanding to the truth of what God has revealed. Simple belief of the Scriptures, of the being and perfections of God, and of the existence, character, and doctrines of Christ, founded on the testimony of the sacred writers, is called historical or speculative faith; a faith little distinguished from the belief of the existence and achievements of Alexander or of Cæsar.

4. Evangelical, justifying, or saving faith, is the assent of the mind to the truth of divine revelation on the authority of God's testimony, accompanied with a cordial assent of the will or approbation of the heart; an entire confidence or trust in God's character and declarations, and in the character and doctrines of Christ, with an unreserved surrender of the will to his guidance, and dependence on his merits for salvation. In other words, that firm belief of God's testimony and of the truth of the gospel, which influences the will, and leads to an entire reliance on Christ for salvation.

Being justified by faith.—Rom. v.
 Without faith it is impossible to please God.—Heb. xi.
 For we walk by faith, and not by sight.—2 Cor. v.
 With the Assent man believeth to righteousness.—Rom. x.

The faith of the gospel is that emotion of the mind, which is called trust or confidence, exercised toward the moral character of God, and particularly of the Saviour. Zwingli.
Faith is an affectionate practical confidence in the testimony of God.

Faith is a firm, cordial belief in the veracity of God, in all the declarations of his word; or a full and affectionate confidence in the certainty of those things which God has declared, and because he has declared them. L. Woods.

5. The subject of belief; a doctrine or system of doctrines believed; a system of revealed truths received by Christians.

They heard only, that he who persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed.—Gal. i.

6. The promises of God, or his truth and faithfulness. Shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?—Rom. iii.

7. An open profession of gospel truth. Your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.—Rom. i.

8. A persuasion or belief of the lawfulness of things indifferent.

Hadst thou faith? Have it to thyself before God.—Rom. xiv.

Be thou faithful to death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—Rev. ii.

2. Firmly adhering to duty; of true fidelity; loyal; true to allegiance; as, a faithful subject.

3. Constant in the performance of duties or services; exact in attending to commands; as, a faithful servant.

4. Observant of compact, treaties, contracts, vows, or other engagements; true to one's word. A government should be faithful to its treaties; individuals, to their word.

5. True; exact; in conformity to the letter and spirit; as, a faithful execution of a will.

6. True to the marriage covenant; as, a faithful wife or husband.

7. Conformable to truth; as, a faithful narrative or representation.

8. Constant; not fickle; as, a faithful lover or friend.

9. True; worthy of belief. 2 Tim. ii.

FAITHFUL-LY, adv. In a faithful manner; with good faith.

2. With strict adherence to allegiance and duty; applied to subjects.

4. Not true to a master or employer; neglectful; as, a faithless servant.

5. Not true to the marriage covenant; false; as, a faithless husband or wife.

6. Not observant of promises

7. Deceptive.

Yonder faithless phantom. Goldsmith.

FAITH'LESSLY, adv. In a faithless manner.

FAITH'LESSNESS, n. Unbelief as to revealed religion

2. Perfidy; treachery; disloyalty, as in subjects.

3. Violation of promises or covenants; inconstancy, as of husband or wife.

FAITOUR, (fâ'toor,) n. [Norm., from L. factor.] An evil-doer; a scoundrel; a mean fellow. [Obs.] Spenser.

FAKE, n. [Scot. fak, to fold, o fold, a layer or stratum; perhaps Sw. vika, vickla, to fold or involve. The sense of fold may be to lay, to fall, or to set or throw together, and this word may belong to Sax. fegan, fegon, to unite, to suit, to fadge, that is, to set or lay together.]

One of the circles or windings of a cable or hawser, as it lies in a coil; a single turn or coil.

FA'KER, (fâ'ker,) n. [This word signifies, in Fx-QUIR, (fâ-keer,) Arabic, a poor man; in Ethiopic, an interpreter.]

A Mohammedan monk or hermit in India; the name is derisive in Turkey and Persia. The fakirs subject themselves to severe austerities and mortifications. Some of them condemn themselves to a standing posture all their lives, supported only by a stick or rope under their armpits. Some manle their bodies with scourges or knives. Others wander about in companies, telling fortunes; and these are said to be arrant villains. Encyc.

FALCADE, n. [L. falx, a sickle or scythe.]

A horse is said to make a falcaid, when he throws himself on his haunches two or three times, as in very quick curves; that is, a falcaid is a bending very low. Harris.

FAL'CATE, a. [L. falcatus, from falx, a sickle, FAL'CATE-D, { scythe, or reaping-hook.]

Hooked; bent like a sickle or scythe; an epithet applied to the new moon. Bailey.

FAL'CA'TION, n. Crookedness; a bending in the form of a sickle. Brown.

FAL'CATION, (fawl'chun,) n. [Fr. fauchon, from L. falx, a reaping-hook.]

A short, crooked sword; a cimeter. Dryden.

FAL'CIFORM, a. [L. falx, a reaping-hook, and form.] In the shape of a sickle; resembling a reaping-hook.

FAL'CON, (fawk'n or fal'kon,) n. [Fr. faucon; It. falcone; L. falco, a hawk; W. gwalch, a crested one, a heron, a hawk, that which flies or towers. The falcon is probably so named from its curving beak or talons.]

1. A hawk; but appropriately, a hawk trained to sport, as in falconry, which see. It is said that this name is, by sportsmen, given to the female alone; for the male is smaller, weaker, and less courageous, and is therefore called tercel, or tercel. Encyc.

This term, in ornithology, is applied to a division of the genus Falco, with a short, hooked beak, and very long wings, the strongest armed and most courageous species, and therefore used in falconry.

2. A sort of cannon, whose diameter at the bore is five inches and a quarter, and carrying shot of two pounds and a half. Harris.

FAL'CON-GEN'TIL, n. A falcon when full feathered and completely bred. Booth.

FAL'CON-ER, (fawk'n-er or fal'kon-er,) n. [Fr. fauconnier.] A person who breeds and trains hawks for taking wild fowls; one who follows the sport of fowling with hawks. Johnson.

FAL'CON-ET, n. [Fr. falconette.] A small cannon or piece of ordnance, whose diameter at the bore is four inches and a quarter, and carrying shot of one pound and a quarter. Harris.

FAL'CON-RY, (fawk'n-ry or fal'kon-ry,) n. [Fr. fauconnerie, from L. falco, a hawk.]

1. The art of training hawks to the exercise of hawking.

2. The practice of taking wild fowls by means of hawks.

FALD'AGE, (fawld'aj,) n. [W. fald, a fold; Goth. faldan; Sax. faldan, to fold; Law L. faldagium.] In England, a privilege which anciently several lords reserved to themselves of setting up folds for sheep, in any fields within their manors, the better to manure them. Harris.

FALD'FEE, n. A fee or composition paid anciently by tenants for the privilege of faldage. Diet.

FALD'ING, n. A kind of coarse cloth. [Obs.] Chaucer.

FALD'IS-DO-RY, n. [Sax. fald and stow. Ash.] The throne or seat of a bishop. [Not in use.]

FALD'STOOL, n. [fald, or fold, and stool.] A folding-stool, or portable seat, made to fold up in the manner of a camp-stool. Formerly, a fald-stool was placed in the choir for a bishop, when he officiated in any but his own cathedral church. Gloss. of Architect.

FAL'ER'NI-AN, a. Pertaining to Falernus, in Italy. As a new, the wine made in that territory.

FALL, v. i.; pret. FELL; pp. FALLEN. [Sax. fallan; G. fallen; D. vallen; Sw. falla; Dan. faldar; allied probably to L. fall, to fall, to deceive, Gr. σφαλλω; Sp. hallar, to find, to fall on; Fr. ofaler, to lower. See Class B, No. 18, 23, 43, 49, 52. Fall coincides exactly with the Shemitic פלל, Heb. Ch. Syr. and Sam. to fall. Fall agrees better with the Heb. פלל, and פלל; but these words may have had one primitive root, the sense of which was to move, to recede, to pass. As these words were unquestionably the same in the Shemitic and Inphetic languages, they afford decisive evidence that the פ, or first letter of the Shemitic words, is a prefix. The Chaldee sense of פלל is to desile, to make foul. (See FOWL.) The same verb in Ar. فبال nabala, signifies to shoot, to drive, or throw an arrow, Gr. βαλλω.]

FARM, n. [Sax. farma, farm, or ferm, food, provisions, board, a meal, a dinner or supper, hospitality, substance, goods, use, fruit. Hence, farmium, to supply provisions, to entertain; also, to purge, or purify, to expiate, to avail, to profit. Arm. ferm, or ferm; in ancient laws, firma; Fr. ferme, a farm, or letting in farm, whence afformer, to hire or lease. The sense of ferm seems to be corn or provisions, in which formerly rents were paid. The radical sense of ferm, provisions, is probably produce, issues, from one of the verbs in Br; produce and purification both implying separation, a throwing off or out.]
 1. A tract of land leased on rent reserved; ground let to a tenant on condition of his paying a certain sum annually, or otherwise, for the use of it. A farm is usually such a portion of land as is cultivated by one man, and includes the buildings and fences. Rents were formerly paid in provisions, or the produce of land; but now they are generally paid in money.

This is the signification of farm in Great Britain, where most of the land is leased to cultivators.
2. In the United States, a portion or tract of land, consisting usually of grass land, meadow, pasture, tillage, and woodland, cultivated by one man, and usually owned by him in fee. A like tract of land under lease is called a farm; but most cultivators are proprietors of the land, and called farmers.
A tract of new land, covered with forest, if intended to be cultivated by one man as owner, is also called a farm. A man goes into the new States, or into the unsettled country, to buy a farm, that is, land for a farm.

FEBRU-A-RY, n. [L. Februarius; Fr. Fevrier; It. Febbraio; Sp. Febrero; Arm. Febrer; Port. Febrero; Ir. Feabhra; Russ. Febral. The Latin word is said to be named from febru, to purify by sacrifice, and thus to signify the month of purification, as the people were, in this month, purified by sacrifices and oblations. The word febru is said to be a Sabine word, connected with ferreo, ferbo, to boil, as boiling was used in purifications. Varro. Ovid.]

This practice bears a resemblance to that of making atonement among the Jews; but the connection between fecro and February is doubtful. The W. General, February, Arm. heurer, Corn. heveral, is from W. geerer, violence; the severe month.

The name of the second month in the year, introduced into the Roman calendar by Numa. In common years, this month contains 29 days; in the bissextile or leap year, 29 days.

FEB-RU-A-TION, n. Purification. [See FEBRUARY.] Spenser.

FEE, n. [Sax. fee, feoh; D. oec; G. reich; Sw. fo; Dan. foe; Scot. fee, feg, or fe, cattle; L. pecus, pecus.] From the use of cattle in transferring property, or from barter and payments in cattle, the word came to signify money; it signified, also, goods, substance in general. The word belongs to Class Bg, but the primary sense is not obvious.

A reward or compensation for services; recompense, either gratuitous, or established by law, and claimed of right. It is applied particularly to the reward of professional services; as, the fees of lawyers and physicians; the fees of office; clerk's fees; sheriff's fees; marriage fees, &c. Many of these are fixed by law; but gratuities to professional men are also called fees.

FEE, n. [This word is usually deduced from Sax. feoh, cattle, property, and fee, a reward. This is a mistake. Fee, in kind, is a contraction of feud or feif, or from the same source; it fees, Sp. fe, faith, trust. Fee, a reward, from feoh, is a Teutonic word; but fee, feud, feif, are words wholly unknown to the Teutonic nations, who use, as synonymous with them, the word, which in English is loan. This word fee, in land or an estate in trust, was first used among the descendants of the northern conquerors of Italy, but it originated in the south of Europe. See FEO.]

Primarily, a loan of land, an estate in trust, granted by a prince or lord, to be held by the grantee on condition of personal service, or other condition; and, if the grantee or tenant failed to perform the conditions, the land reverted to the lord or donor, called the landlord, or lord, the lord of the loan. A fee, then, is any land or tenement held of a superior on certain conditions. It is synonymous with feif and feud. All the land in England, except the crown land, is of this kind. Fees are absolute or limited. An absolute fee, or fee-simple, is land which a man holds to himself and his heirs forever, who are called tenants in fee-simple. Hence, in modern times, the term fee or fee-simple denotes an estate of inheritance; and, in America, where lands are not generally held of a superior, a fee, or fee-simple, is an estate in which the owner has the whole property, without any condition annexed to the tenure. A limited fee, is an estate limited or clogged with certain conditions; as, qualified or base fee, which ceases with the existence of certain conditions; and a conditional fee, which is limited to particular heirs.

Blackstone. Encyc.
In the United States, an estate in fee, or fee-simple, is what is called in English law an allodial estate, an estate held by a person in his own right, and descendible to the heirs in general.

FEE-FARM, n. [See and farm.] A kind of tenure of estates without homage, fealty, or other service, except that mentioned in the feoffment, which is usually the full rent. The nature of this tenure is, that if the rent is in arrear or unpaid for two years, the feoffor and his heirs may have an action for the recovery of the lands. Encyc.

FEE-SIMPLE. See FEE.

FEE-TAIL, n. An estate entailed; a conditional fee.

FEE, v. t. To pay a fee to; to reward. Hence,

2. To engage in one's service by advancing a fee or sum of money to; as, to fee a lawyer.

3. To hire; to bribe. Shak.

4. To keep in hire. Shak.

FEL'LO DE SE, [L.] In law, one who commits felony by suicide, or deliberately destroys his own life.
FEL'ON, n. [Fr. felon; Low L. felo; Arn. fellon; L. fella, or felonie, a thief.] Accord with Spelman in deducing this word from the root of fall, the original signification being, a vassal who failed in his fidelity or allegiance to his lord, and committed an offense by which he forfeited his feud. Hence, in French, felon is traitorous, rebellious. So the word is explained and deduced in Gregoire's Armoric Dictionary. The derivation from fee and lon, in Spelman, copied by Blackstone, is unnatural.
 1. In law, a person who has committed felony. [See FELONY.]
 2. A whitlow; a painful swelling formed in the periosteum at the end of the finger. Wiseman.
FEL'ON, a. Malignant; fierce; inalienable; proceeding from a depraved heart.

FEL'ON-WORT, n. A plant of the genus Solanum. Fam. of Plants.
FEL'ON-Y, n. [See FELON.] In common law, any crime which incurs the forfeiture of lands or goods. Treason was formerly comprised under the name of felony, but is now distinguished from crimes thus denominated, although it is really a felony. All offenses punishable with death are felonies; and so are some crimes not thus punished, as suicide, homicide by chance-medley, or in self-defense, and petty larceny. Capital punishment, therefore, does not necessarily enter into the true idea or definition of felony; the true criterion of felony being forfeiture of lands or goods. But the idea of felony has been so generally connected with that of capital punishment, that law and usage now confirm that connection. Thus, if a statute makes any new offense a felony, it is understood to mean a crime punishable with death. Blackstone.

FERN-MENT'A-BLE, a. Capable of fermentation; thus, cider, beer of all kinds, wine, and other vegetable liquors, are fermentable.

FERN-MENT'AL, a. Having power to cause fermentation. Brown.

FERN-MENT'ATION, n. [L. fermentatio.]
The sensible internal motion of the constituent particles of animal and vegetable substances, occasioned by a certain degree of heat and moisture, and accompanied by an extrication of gas and heat. Fermentation is followed by a change of properties in the substances fermented, arising from new combinations of their principles. It may be defined, in its most general sense, any spontaneous change which takes place in animal or vegetable substances after life has ceased. It is of three principal kinds; vinous, acetous, and putrefactive. The term is also applied to other processes, as the panary fermentation, or the rising of bread; but it is limited by some authors to the vinous and acetous fermentations, which terminate in the production of alcohol or vinegar. Fermentation differs from effervescence. The former is confined to animal and vegetable substances; the latter is applicable to mineral substances. The former is spontaneous; the latter produced by the mixture of bodies.

Encyc. Parr. Thomson.

FEOB, (fu'ds), n. [Sax. feohh, or feogh, from feagan, feon, to hate. Hence also feh, a foe, and from the participle feond, a feud; D. eyand, G. feind, an enemy; G. feult, war, quarrel; Sw. fegd; Dan. fejde. In Irish, feath is hatred, abhorrence. Class Bg.
 1. Primarily, a deadly quarrel; hatred and contention that were to be terminated only by death. Among our rude ancestors, these quarrels, though originating in the murder of an individual, involved the whole tribe or family of the injured and of the aggressing parties. Hence, in modern usage,
 2. A contention or quarrel; particularly, an inveterate quarrel between families or parties in a state; the discord and animosities which prevail among the citizens of a state or city, sometimes accompanied with civil war. In the north of Great Britain, the word is still used in its original sense; denoting a combination of kindred to revenge the death of any of their blood, on the offender and all his race, or any other great enemy. We say, it is the policy of our enemies to raise and cherish intestine feuds.
 The word is not strictly applicable to wars between different nations, but to intestine wars, and to quarrels and animosities between families or small tribes.
FEOB, n. Usually supposed to be composed of the Teutonic fee, goods, reward, and ead or adh, W. etaw, possession, property. But if feuds had been given as rewards for services, that consideration would have vested the title to the land in the donee. Yet feud is not a Teutonic or Gothic word, being found among none of the northern nations of Europe. This word originated in the south of Europe, whether in France, Spain, or Italy, may perhaps be ascertained by writings of the middle ages, which I do not possess. It probably originated among the Franks, or in Lombardy or Italy, and certainly among men who studied the civil law. In Italian, a feoffee is called feudo-commessario, a trust-commissary; feudo-commessario is a feoffment, a trust-estate; Sp. feudo-commessario, a feoffment. These words are the feudi-commessarii, feudi-commessarii, of the Digest and Codex. In Spanish, feudo signifies security given for another, or bail; al feudo, no trust; feudo, one who trusts; feudo, a fee, fee, or feud; Port. id. In Norman, fid de chevaliers signifies knight's fees. Feud, then, with fee, which is a contraction of it, is a word formed from the L. fides, It. fede, Sp. fe, Norm. fai, faith, trust, with had, state, or ead or adh, estate; and a feud is an estate in trust, or on condition, which coincides nearly in sense with the northern word, G. lehen, D. leen; Sw. lén, Dan. lehn, Eng. loan. From the origin of this word, we see the peculiar propriety of calling the donee feudis, and his obligation to his lord feuditas, whence fealty.
 A feud; a fee; a right to lands or hereditaments held in trust, or on the terms of performing certain conditions; the right which a vassal or tenant has to the lands or other immovable thing of his lord, to use the same and take the profits thereof hereditarily, rendering to his superior such duties and services as are owing to military tenure, &c., the property of the soil always remaining in the lord or superior.
 From the foregoing explanation of the origin of the word, result very naturally the definition of the term, and the doctrine of forfeiture, upon non-performance of the conditions of the trust or loan.

Fine arts, or polite arts, are the arts which depend chiefly on the labors of the mind or imagination, and whose object is pleasure; as poetry, music, painting, and sculpture.

The uses of this word are so numerous and indefinite, as to preclude a particular definition of each. In general, fine, in popular language, expresses whatever is excellent, showy, or magnificent.

FINE, n. [This word is the basis of finesse, but I have not found it, in its simple form, in any modern language, except the English. Junius says that fin, in Cimbric, is a mulet, and finio, to fine. The word seems to be the L. finis, and the application of it to pecuniary compensation seems to have proceeded from its feudal use, in the transfer of lands, in which a fine agreement or concord was made between the lord and his vassal. See ND sanah. Class Bn, No. 23.]

1. In a feudal sense, a final agreement between persons concerning lands or rents, or between the lord and his vassal, prescribing the conditions on which the latter should hold his lands. Spelman.

2. A sum of money paid to the lord by his tenant, for permission to alienate or transfer his lands to another. This, in England, was exacted only from the king's tenants in capite. Blackstone.

3. A sum of money paid by way of penalty for an offense; a mulet; a pecuniary punishment. Fines are usually prescribed by statute, for the several violations of law; or the limit is prescribed, beyond which the judge cannot impose a fine for a particular offense.

 1. Heat and light emanating visibly, perceptibly, and simultaneously, from any body; caloric; the unknown cause of the sensation of heat, and of the retrocession of the homogeneous particles of bodies from one another, producing expansion, and thus enlarging all their dimensions; and one of the causes of magnetism, as evinced by Dr. Hare's calorimeter. Silliman.
 In the popular acceptation of the word, fire is the effect of combustion. The combustible body ignited, or heated to redness, we call fire; and when ascending in a stream or body, we call it flame. A piece of charcoal, in combustion, is of a red color, and very hot. In this state it is said to be on fire, or to contain fire. When combustion ceases, it loses its redness and extreme heat, and we say, the fire is extinct.

1. An animal that lives in water. Fish is a general name for a class of animals subsisting in water, which were distributed by Linnaeus into six orders. They breathe by means of gills, swim by the aid of their tail and caudal fins, and are oviparous. Some of them have the skeleton bony, and others cartilaginous. Most of the former have the opening of the gills closed by a peculiar covering, called the gill-lid; many of the latter have no gill-lid, and are hence said to breathe through apertures. Cetaceous animals, as the whale and dolphin, are, in popular language, called fishes, and have been so classed by some naturalists; but they breathe by lungs, and are viviparous, like quadrupeds. The term fish has been also extended to other aquatic animals, such as shell-fish, lobsters, &c. We use fish, in the singular, for fishes in general, or the whole race.

2. The flesh of fish, used as food. But we usually apply fish to land animals.

FLAT'TER, n. The person or thing by which any thing is flattened.

FLAT'TER, v. t. [Fr. flatter; D. vleijen; Teut. fläzen; Ice. fládra; Dan. flatterer. In Ir. bladaire, is a flatterer; bleid, a wheedling; blait is plain, smooth; and blait is praise. Flatter may be from the root of flat, that is, to make smooth, to appease, to soothe; but the Ir. blait would seem to be connected with L. placido. Perhaps flat and placido are from one root, the radical sense of which must be, to extend, strain, stretch.]

1. To soothe by praise; to gratify self-love by praise or obsequiousness; to please a person by applause or favorable notice, by respectful attention, or by any thing that exalts him in his own estimation, or confirms his good opinion of himself. We flatter a woman when we praise her children.

FLOUT'ING-LY, adv. With flouting; insultingly.

FLOW, (flö), v. i. [Sax. flowan; D. vloeyen. If the last radical was originally a dental, this word coincides with the D. vlieten, G. fliesen, Sw. flyta, Dan. flyder, to flow. If g was the last radical, flow coincides with the L. flo, contracted from fluo, for it forms flui, fluctum. In one case, the word would agree with the root of blow, L. flo; in the other, with the root of flur.]

1. To move along an inclined plane, or on descending ground, by the operation of gravity, and with a continual change of place among the particles or parts, as a fluid. A solid body descends or moves in mass, as a ball or a wheel; but in the flowing of liquid substances, and others consisting of very fine particles, there is a constant change of the relative position of some parts of the substance, as is the case with a stream of water, of quicksilver, and of sand. Particles at the bottom and sides of the stream, being somewhat checked by friction, move slower than those in the middle and near the surface of the current. Rivers flow from springs and lakes; tears flow from the eyes.

2. To melt; to become liquid.

That the mountains might flow down at thy presence. — Is. lxiv.

3. To proceed; to issue. Evils flow from different sources. Wealth flows from industry and economy. All our blessings flow from divine bounty.

lora: W. flur, bloom; fluro, to bloom, to be bright; L. flus, floris, a flower; floro, to blossom. See FLOWRISH.]

1. In botany, that part of a plant which contains the organs of fructification, with their coverings. A flower, when complete, consists of a calyx, corol, stamen, and pistil; but the essential parts are the stamen and pistil, which are sufficient to constitute a flower, either together in hermaphrodite flowers, or separate in male and female flowers.

Martyn. Milac.

2. In popular language, a blossom or flower is the flower-bud of a plant, when the petals are expanded; open petals being considered as the principal thing in constituting a flower. But in botany, the petals are now considered as a finer sort of covering, and not at all necessary to constitute a flower.

Milac.

3. The early part of life, or rather of manhood; the prime; youthful vigor; youth; as, the flower of age or of life.

FOR, prep. [Sax. for or fore; D. voor, for, and before; G. für and vor; Sw. för; Dan. for, för; Fr. for; Fr. pour; Sp. and Port. por, para; It. per, which unites for and Le. per, and, if this is the same word, so is the Fr. par. Indeed, par seems to be radically the same word; for the Germans and Dutch use vor, far, in composition, in the same manner, and in the same words, as the English, Danes, and Swedes, use for. Thus Ger. verboten, D. verbieden, Dan. forbyder, Sw. förbuds, are all the same word, Eng. to forbid. The French use par as we use for, in pardonner, to pardon, to forgive, It. perdonare. Arm. par and pour, in composition; Hindoo, para; Pers. بار bar or ber, and بهر behr. Kur corresponds in sense with the

L. pro, as fore does with pra; but pro and pra are probably contracted from prod, pred. The L. por, in composition, as in porrigo, is probably contracted from porro, Gr. porro, which is the Eng. far. The Gr. uon, and probably neon, neon, are from the same root. The radical sense of for is, to go, to pass, to advance, to reach or stretch; and it is probably allied to the Sax. faran, to fare, W. for, a pass, foriaw, to travel, Class Br. No. 23, 37, 41. To go toward, to meet, or turn to, is the primary sense of for, in two of its most common uses; one implying opposition, against; the other, a favor or benefit; or for may be from fore, hence opposite. To sell or exchange a hat for a guinea, is to set or pass one against the other; this is the primary sense of all prepositions which are placed before equivalents in sale and barter. Benefit or favor is expressed by moving toward a person, or by advancing him. This present is for my friend; this advice is for his instruction. And in the Old Testament, the face or front is taken for favor. For, in some phrases, signifies during, that is, passing, continuing in time. I will lend a book for a day or a month. In composition, for is used to give a negative sense, as in forbid, which is forbid, to con-mand before, that is, against; and in forgive, to give back or away, to remit, to send back or to send away.]

1. Against; in the place of; as a substitute or equivalent, noting equal value, or a satisfactory compensation, either in barter and sale, in contract, or in punishment. "And Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for flocks, and for the cattle of the herds;" that is, according to the original, he gave them bread against horses, like the Gr. avti, and Fr. contre. Gen. xlvii. 17.

Buy us and our land for bread.—Gen. xlvii. 19.

And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.—Exod. xxi.

As the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matt. xx. See also Mark viii. 37. Mar. xvi. 26.

2. In the place of; instead of; noting substitution of persons, or agency of one in the place of another, with equivalent authority. An attorney is empowered to act for his principal. Will you take a letter, and deliver it for me at the post-office? that is, in my place, or for my benefit.

3. In exchange of; noting one thing taken or given in place of another; as, to quit the profession of law for that of a clergyman.

4. In the place of; instead of; as, to translate a poem line for line.

5. In the character of; noting resemblance; a sense derived from substitution, or standing in the place of, like avti in Greek.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

But let her go for an ungrateful woman. Philipp.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth. Shak.

He quivered with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

6. Toward; with the intention of going to.

We sailed from Peru for China and Japan. Bacon.

We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind. Addison.

So we say, a ship is bound for or to France.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of; on account of; that is, toward, noting use, benefit, or purpose.

An ant is a wise creature for itself. Bacon.

Shall I tell the world was made for one, And men are born for kings, as beasts for men, Not for protection, but to be devoured? Dryden.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to; in favor of.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate. Tillotson.

9. Leading or inducing to, as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Tillotson.

10. Noting arrival, meeting, coming, or possession. Wait patiently for an expected good. So in the phrases looking for, staying for.

11. Toward the obtaining of; in order to the arrival at or possession of. After all our exertions, we depend on divine aid for success.

12. Against; in opposition to; with a tendency to resist and destroy; as, a remedy for the headache or toothache. Alkalies are good for the heartburn. So we say, to provide clothes or stores for winter, or against winter.

13. Against or on account of; in prevention of.

She wrapped him close for catching cold. Richardson.

And, for the time shall not seem tedious. Shak.

This use is nearly obsolete. The sense, however, is derived from meeting, opposing, as in No. 12.

14. Because; on account of; by reason of. He cried out for anguish. I can not go for want of time. For this cause, I can not believe the report.

That which we, for our unworthiness, are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God, for the worthiness of his Son, would notwithstanding, vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.

Edward and Richard, With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath, Are at our backs. Shak.

How to choose dogs for scent or speed. Wallar.

For as much as it is a fundamental law. Bacon.

15. With respect or regard to; on the part of.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge. Burnet.

So we say, for me, for myself, or as for me, I have no anxiety, but for you I have apprehensions; all implying toward or on the side of.

16. Through a certain space; during a certain time; as, to travel for three days; to sail for seven weeks; he holds his office for life; he traveled on sand for ten miles together. These senses seem to imply possessing, the proper sense of for.

17. In quest of; in order to obtain; as, to search for arguments; to recur to antiquity for examples. See No. 11.

18. According to; as far as.

Chemists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.

19. Noting meeting, coming together, or reception. I am ready for you; that is, I am ready to meet or receive you.

20. Toward; of tendency to; as, an inclination for drink.

21. In favor of; on the part or side of; that is, toward or inclined to. One is for a free government; another is for a limited monarchy.

Aristotle is for poetical justice. Dennis.

22. With a view to obtain; in order to possess. He writes for money, for fame; that is, toward meeting, or to have in return, as a reward.

23. Toward; with tendency to, or in favor of. It is for his honor to retire from office. It is for our quiet to have few intimate connections.

24. Notwithstanding; against; in opposition to. The fact may be so, for any thing that has yet appeared. The task is great, but for all that, I shall not be deterred from undertaking it. This is a different application of the sense of No. 1, 2, 3, 4. [Hoc non obstante.]

The writer will do what she pleases for all me. Spect. No. 73.

25. For the use of; to be used in; that is, toward, noting advantage.

The oiler good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.

26. In recompense of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the public wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Caesar's health. Dryden.

[See No. 1.]

27. In proportion to; or rather, looking toward, regarding. He is tall for one of his years, or tall for 28. By means of. [his age.]

Moral consideration can no way more the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale.

29. By the want of.

The inhabitants suffered severely both for provisions and fuel. Marshall.

30. For my life or heart, though my life were to be given in exchange, or as the price of purchase. I can not, for my life, understand the man. [No. 1.]

31. For, to, denoting purpose. For was anciently placed before the infinitives of verbs, and the use is correct, but now obsolete, except in vulgar language. I came for to see you; pour vous voir.

FOR, con. The word by which a reason is introduced of something before advanced. "That ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good." In such sentences, for has the sense of because, by reason that, as in No. 14; with this difference, that in No. 14, the word precedes a single noun, and here it precedes a sentence or clause; but the phrase seems to be elliptical — for this cause or reason, which follows, he maketh his sun to rise, &c. In Romans xli. 6, we find the word in both its applications — "For, for this cause ye pay tribute also;" the first for referring to the sentence following; the latter to the noun cause.

2. Because; on this account that; properly, for that.

For as much, compounded, forasmuch, is equivalent to, in regard to that, in consideration of. Forasmuch as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged in a little drink.

For why, Fr., pour quoi, [per quod, pro quo,] because; for this reason.

FOR, as a prefix to verbs, has usually the force of a negative or primitive, denoting against, that is, before, or against, aside.

FOR'AGE, n. [Fr. fourrage; Arn. foarnick; It. foraggio; Sp. forrage; Port. forragem; D. vooeradic. If this word signifies primarily food or fodder, it is connected with V. pori, to feed, and L. vorare. But I take it to be from the root of Sax. faran, to go, and primarily to signify that which is collected in wandering, roving, excursion. In Port. forragido is a vagabond, and forrajeiro is to waste, to ravage.]

1. Food of any kind for horses and cattle, as grass, pasture, hay, corn, and oats.

2. The act of providing forage.

Cd. Marston completed his forage unobserved. Marshall.

If the forage is to be made at a distance from the camp. Enycy.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. — 2 Chron. xxxv.

FOR-BEAR'ANCE, n. The act of avoiding, shunning, or omitting; either the cessation or intermission of an act commenced, or a withholding from beginning an act. Liberty is the power of doing or forbearing an action, according as the doing or forbearing has a preference in the mind. The forbearance of sin is followed with satisfaction of mind.

2. Command of temper; restraint of passions.

Have a command forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slow. Shak.

3. The exercise of patience; long suffering; indulgence toward those who injure us; lenity; delay of resentment or punishment.

Or despicable than the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering! — Rom. ii.

FOR-BEAR'ER, n. One that intermits or intercepts. Tusser.

FOR-BEAR'ING, ppr. Ceasing; pausing; withholding from action; exercising patience and indulgence.

2. a. Patient; long-suffering.

FOR-BEAR'ING, n. A ceasing or restraining from action; patience; long-suffering.

FOR-BEAR'ING-LY, adv. In a forbearing, patient manner.

FOR-BID', v. l.; ppr. FORBIDE; pp. FORBID, FORBIDDEN. [Sax. forbēdan; D. verbieden; G. verbieten; Dan. forbyder; Sw. förbjuda; for and bid.]

Literally, to bid or command against. Hence,

1. To prohibit; to interdict; to command to forbear or not to do. The laws of God forbid us to swear. Good manners also forbid us to use profane language. All servile labor and idle amusements on the Sabbath are forbidden.

2. To command not to enter; as, I have forbid him my house or presence. This phrase seems to be elliptical; to forbid from entering or approaching.

3. To oppose; to hinder; to obstruct. An impassable river forbids the approach of the army.

A blaze of glory that forbids the sight. Dryden.

4. To accuse; to blast. [Obs.] Shak.

FOR-BID', v. i. To utter a prohibition; but in the intransitive form, there is always an ellipsis. I would go, but my state of health forbids, that is, forbids me to go, or my going.

FOR-BID', [pp. or a.] Prohibited; as, the forbid-

FOR-BID'DEN', den fruit.

2. Hindered; obstructed.

FOR-BID'DANCE, n. Prohibition; command or edict against an action. [Little used.] Shak.

FOR-BID'DEN-LY, adv. In an unlawful manner. Shak.

FOR-BID'DER, n. He or that which forbids or enacts a prohibition.

FOR-BID'DING, ppr. Prohibiting; hindering.

2. a. Repelling approach; repulsive; raising abhorrence, aversion, or dislike; disagreeable; as, a forbidding aspect; a forbidding formality; a forbidding air.

FOR-BIDDING, n. Hindrance; opposition. Shak.

FOR-BIDDING-LY, adv. In a forbidding manner.

FOR-BÖRE', ppr. of FORSEAR.

FOR-BÖRNE', pp. of FORSEAR.

Few ever repented of having forborne to speak. Rambler.

FÖRCE, n. [Fr. force; It. forza; Sp. fuerza; Port. força; from L. fortis. All words denoting force, power, strength, are from verbs which express straining, or driving, rushing, and this word has the elements of Sax. farna, and L. viro.]

1. Strength; active power; vigor; might; energy that may be exerted; that physical property in a body which may produce action or motion in another body, or may counteract such action. By the force of the muscles we raise our weight, or resist an assault.

2. Momentum; the quantity of power produced by motion or the action of one body on another; as, the force of a cannon ball.

3. That which causes an operation or moral effect; strength; energy; as, the force of the mind, will, or understanding.

4. Violence; power exerted against will or consent; compulsory power. Let conquerors consider that force alone can keep what force has obtained.

5. Strength; moral power to convince the mind. There is great force in an argument.

6. Virtue; efficacy. No presumption or hypothesis can be of force enough to overthrow constant experience.

7. Validity; power to bind or hold. If the conditions of a covenant are not fulfilled, the contract is of no force. A testament is of force after the testator is dead. Heb. ix. 17.

8. Strength or power for war; armament; troops; an army or navy; as, a military or naval force; sometimes in the plural; as, military forces.

9. Destiny; necessity; compulsion; any extraneous power to which men are subject; as, the force of fate or of divine decrees.

10. Internal power; as, the force of habit.

11. In law, any unlawful violence to person or property. This is simple, when no other crime attends it, as the entering into another's possession, without committing any other unlawful act. It is compound, when some other violence or unlawful act is committed. The law also implies force, as when a person enters a house or inclosure lawfully, but afterward does an unlawful act. In this case, the law supposes the first entrance to be for that purpose, and therefore by force.

Physical force, is the force of material bodies.

Moral force, is the power of acting on the reason in judging and determining.

Force, in mechanics, is any thing which moves or tends to move a body. The pressure of bodies at rest is called a force, because it tends to produce motion. There is also the force of gravity or attraction, centrifugal and centripetal forces, expansive force, &c. Olmsted.

FÖRCE, n. A water-fall, so called from its violence or power. [Cumberland.] Holloway.

FÖRCE, v. l. To compel; to constrain to do or to forbear, by the exertion of a power not resistible. Men are forced to submit to conquerors; masters force their slaves to labor.

2. To overpower by strength.

I should have forced thee soon with other arms. Milton.

3. To impel; to press; to drive; to draw or push by main strength; a sense of very extensive use. Hence, to force along a wagon or a ship; to force away a man's arms; water forces its way through a narrow channel; a man may be forced out of his possessions.

4. To enforce; to urge; to press.

Forcing my strength, and gathering to the shore. Dryden.

5. To compel by strength of evidence; as, to force conviction on the mind; to force one to acknowledge the truth of a proposition.

6. To obtain by force; to take by violence; to assault and take; to storm; as, to force a passage; to force a town or fort.

7. To ravish; to violate by force, as a female.

FORFEIT, (for'fit), v. t. [Fr. forfaire, forfait; Low L. forfeicere, from L. foris, out abroad, and facio, to make; Norm. forais, forfeit, and forfist, forfeited.]

To lose or render confiscable, by some fault, offense, or crime; to lose the right to some species of property, or that which belongs to one; to alienate the right to possess by some neglect or crime; as, to forfeit an estate by a breach of the condition of tenure, or by treason. By the ancient laws of England, a man forfeited his estate by neglecting or refusing to fulfill the conditions on which it was granted to him, or by a breach of fealty. A man now forfeits his estate by committing treason. A man forfeits his honor or reputation by a breach of promise, and by any criminal or disgraceful act. Statutes declare that by certain acts a man shall forfeit a certain sum of money. Under the feudal system, the right to the land forfeited vested in the lord or superior. In modern times, the right to things forfeited is generally regulated by statutes; it is vested in the state, in corporations, or in prosecutors or informers, or partly in the state or a corporation and partly in an individual. The duelist, to secure the reputation of bravery, forfeits the esteem of good men and the favor of Heaven.

FORFEIT, (for'fit), n. [Fr. forfait; W. forfed; Low L. forfeicatura. Originally, and still in French, a trespass, transgression, or crime. But with us, the effect of some transgression or offense.]

1. That which is forfeited or lost, or the right to which is alienated by a crime, offense, neglect of duty, or breach of contract; hence, a fine; a mulct; a penalty. He that murders pays the forfeit of his life. When a statute creates a penalty for a transgression, either in money or in corporal punishment, the offender, who, on conviction, pays the money or suffers the punishment, pays the forfeit.

2. Something deposited and redeemable by a jocular fine; whence the game of forfeits. Goldsmith. Smart.

3. One whose life is forfeited. [Not used.] Shak.

FORFEIT, part. a. [Used for FORFEITED.] Lost or alienated for an offense or crime; liable to penal seizure.

And his long tolls were forfeit for a look. Dryden.

FORFEIT-A-BLE, (for'fit-a-bl), a. Liable to be forfeited; subject to forfeiture.

For the future, we shall be subject to the statutes of mortmain, and forfeitable like the lands themselves. Blackstone.

FORFEIT-ED, pp. or a. Lost or alienated by an offense, crime, or breach of condition.

FORFEIT-ER, n. One who incurs punishment by forfeiting his bond. Shak.

FORFEIT-ING, pp. Alienating or losing, as a right, by an offense, crime, or breach of condition.

FORFEIT-URE, (for'fit-yure), n. The act of forfeiting; the losing of some right, privilege, estate, honor, office, or effects, by an offense, crime, breach of condition, or other act. In regard to property, forfeiture is a loss of the right to possess, but not generally the actual possession, which is to be transferred by some subsequent process. In the feudal system, a forfeiture of lands gave him in reversion or remainder a right to enter.

2. That which is forfeited; an estate forfeited; a fine or mulct. The prince enriched his treasury by fines and forfeitures.

FORFEX, n. [L.] A pair of scissors. Pope

FOR-GAVE, pred. of FORGIVE, which see.

FORGE, n. [Fr. forge; Sp. Port. forja; probably from L. ferrum, iron; It. ferriera, a forge; Port. ferragem, iron work.]

1. A furnace in which iron or other metal is heated and hammered into form. A larger forge is called with us iron-works. Smaller forges, consisting of a bellows so placed as to cast a stream of air upon ignited coals, are of various forms and uses. Artificers have traveling forges for repairing gun-carriages, &c.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped. Hooker.

3. The act of beating or working iron or steel; the manufacture of metalline bodies.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy. Bocon.

FORGE, v. t. To form by heating and hammering; to beat into any particular shape, as a metal.

2. To make by any means.

Names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of scholars. Locke.

3. To make falsely; to falsify; to counterfeit; to make in the likeness of something else; as, to forge coin; to forge a bill of exchange, or a receipt.

FORGED, (forjd), pp. or a. Hammered; beaten into shape; made; counterfeited.

FORGER, n. One that makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits; a falsifier.

FORGERY, n. The act of forging or working metal into shape. [In this sense, rarely or never now used.]

2. The act of falsifying; the crime of counterfeiting; as, the forgery of coin, or of bank notes, or of a bond. Forgery may consist in counterfeiting a writing, or in setting a false name to it, to the prejudice of another person.

3. That which is forged or counterfeited. Certain letters, purporting to be written by General Washington, during the revolution, were forgeries.

FORGET, (for'get), v. t. & p. [Fr. oublier, obs.;] pp. FORGOTT, FORGOTTEN. [Sw. forgetan, forgitan, forglutan; G. vergessen; D. vergeeten; Sw. förgåta; Dan. forgieltet; for and get.]

1. To lose the remembrance of; to let go from the memory.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. — Ps. ciii.

3. Causing to forget; inducing oblivion; oblivious; as, forgetful draughts. Dryden.

FORGETFUL-LY, adv. In a forgetful manner.

FORGETFUL-NESS, n. The quality of losing the remembrance or recollection of a thing; or rather, the quality of being apt to let any thing slip from the mind.

2. Loss of remembrance or recollection; a ceasing to remember; oblivion.

A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope.

3. Neglect; negligence; careless omission; inattention; as, forgetfulness of duty. Hooker.

FORGETTIVE, a. [from forge.] That may forge or produce; inventive. [Not used.] Shak.

FORGET-ME-NOT, n. A small herb, of the genus Myosotis, bearing a beautiful blue flower, and extensively considered the emblem of fidelity. Encyc. Am.

FORGETTER, n. One that forgets; a heedless person.

FORGETTING, pp. Losing the remembrance of.

FORGETTING, n. The act of forgetting; forgetfulness; inattention.

FORGETTING-LY, adv. By forgetting or forgetfulness. B. Johnson.

FORGING, pp. Hammering; beating into shape; counterfeiting.

FORGING, n. The act of beating into shape; the act of counterfeiting.

FOR-GIVA-BLE, a. [See FORGIVE.] That may be pardoned. Sherrwood.

FOR-GIVE, (for-giv'), v. t. & p. pred. FORGAVE; pp. FORGIVEN. [for and give; Sw. forgifvan; Goth. fragidan; G. vergeben; D. vergeeven; Dan. forgiere; Sw. tilgifva. The sense is, to give from, that is, away, as we see by the Gothic fra, from. The English for, and G. and D. ver, are the same word, or from the same root; ver is the Eng. far. The Swedish til signifies to, and in this compound it signifies toward or back; so in l. remitto. See GIVE.]

1. To pardon; to remit, as an offense or debt; to overlook an offense, and treat the offender as not guilty. The original and proper phrase is to forgive the offense, to send it away, to reject it, that is, not to impute it, [put it to,] the offender. But, by an easy transition, we also use the phrase, to forgive the person offending.

Forgive us our debts. Lord's Prayer.
If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you.—Matt. vi.
As a sinner never forget a favor, so they never forgive an injury.—N. Chipman.

It is to be noted that pardon, like forgive, may be followed by the name or person, and by the offense; but remitt can be followed by the offense only. We forgive or pardon the man, but we do not remitt him.

2. To remit, as a debt, fine, or penalty.

FOR-GIVEN, pp. Pardoned; remitted.

FOR-GIVE'NESS, (for-giv'ness), n. The act of forgiving; the pardon of an offender, by which he is considered and treated as not guilty. The forgiveness of enemies is a Christian duty.

2. The pardon or remission of an offense or crime; as, the forgiveness of sin or of injuries.

3. Disposition to pardon; willingness to forgive

And shall forgiveness intercede
To stop the coming blow.—Dryden.

4. Remission of a debt, fine, or penalty.

FOR-GIVER, n. One who pardons or remits.

FOR-GIVING, pp. Pardoning; remitting.

2. a. Disposed to forgive; inclined to overlook offenses; mild; merciful; compassionate; as, a forgiving temper.

FOR-LORN'LY, adv. In a forlorn manner. Pollok.

FOR-LORN'NESS, n. Destitution; misery; a forsaken or wretched condition. Boyle.

FOR-LY'E'. See FORLIE.

FORM, n. [L. forma; Fr. forme; Sp. forma, horma; It. forma; R. forma; D. vorm; G. form; Sw. and Dan. form.] The root of this word is not certainly known. The primary sense is probably to set, to fix, to fit. The D. vormen is rendered, to form, to shape, to mold, to confirma; and form may be allied to form.

1. The shape or external appearance of a body; the figure, as defined by lines and angles; that manner of being peculiar to each body, which exhibits it to the eye as distinct from every other body. Thus we speak of the form of a circle, the form of a square or triangle, a circular form, the form of the head, or of the human body, a handsome form, an ugly form, a frightful form.

Matter is the basis or substratum of bodies; form is the particular disposition of matter in each body, which distinguishes its appearance from that of every other body.

The form of his visage was changed.—Dan. iii.
After that he appeared in another form to two of them, as they walked.—Mark xvi.

2. Manner of arranging particulars; disposition of particular things; as, a form of words or expressions.

11. Manner; system; as, a form of government; a monarchical or republican form.

12. Manner of arrangement; disposition of component parts; as, the interior form or structure of the flesh or bones, or of other bodies.

13. A long seat; a bench without a back. Watts. [In this and the two following senses, the English pronunciation is form.]

14. In schools, a class; a rank of students.

15. The seat or bed of a hare. Dryden.
16. A mold; something to give shape, or on which things are fashioned. Prior.
Encyc.

17. In printing, an assemblage of types, composed and arranged in order, disposed into pages or columns, and enclosed and locked in a chase, to receive an impression. The outer form always contains the first and last pages, the inner form contains the second page.

18. Essential form, is that mode of existence which constitutes a thing what it is, and without which it could not exist. Thus water and light have each its particular form of existence, and the parts of water being decomposed, it ceases to be water. Accidental form is not necessary to the existence of a body.

Earth is earth still, whatever may be its color.

FORM, v. t. [L. forma.]

1. To make or cause to exist in a particular manner.

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground.—Gen. ii.

14. To enact; to make; to ordain; as, to form a law or an edict.

FORM, v. i. To take a form.

FORM'AL, a. According to form; agreeable to established mode; regular; methodical.

2. Strictly ceremonious; precise; exact to affection; as, a man formal in his dress, his gait, or deportment.

3. Done in due form, or with solemnity; express; according to regular method; not incidental, sudden, or irregular. He gave his formal consent to the treaty.

4. Regular; methodical; as, the formal stars. Waller.

5. Having the form or appearance without the substance or essence; external; as, formal duty; formal worship.

6. Depending on customary forms.

Still in constraint your suffering as a remnant, Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

7. Having the power of making a thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice; the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech. Holder.

8. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

To make of him a formal man again. Shak.

FORM'AL-ISM, n. A resting in mere external forms of religion.

FORM'AL-IST, n. One who observes forms, or practices external ceremonies. More generally

2. One who rests in external religious forms, or observes the forms of worship, without possessing the life and spirit of religion. A grave face and the regular practice of ceremonies have often gained to a formalist the reputation of piety.

FORM'AL-I-TY, n. The practice or observance of forms.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. K. Charles.

2. Ceremony; mere conformity to customary modes. Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Aberbury.

3. Established order; rule of proceeding; mode; method; as, the formalities of judicial process; formalities of law.

4. Order; decorum to be observed; customary mode of behavior. L'Esrange.

5. Customary mode of dress; habit; robe. Seiff.

[Sax. fugel, fugl; G. and D. vogel; Dan. fogt; Sw. fogel; from the root of the L. fugio, fugo, Gi. ovo, and signifying the flying animal.] A flying or winged animal; the generic name of certain animals that move through the air by the aid of wings. Fowls have two feet, are covered with feathers, and have wings for flight. Bird is, etymologically, a young fowl or chicken, and may well be applied to the smaller species of fowls. It has usurped the place of foel, and is now commonly used as the generic term, though this is not in accordance with its etymology.

Fowl is used as a collective noun. We dined on fish and fowl.

Let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air. — Gen. 1.

But this use in America is not frequent. We generally use the plural, fowls. The word is colloquially used for poultry, or rather, in a more limited sense, for barn-door fowls.

FRIEND'SHIP, (friend'ship,) n. An attachment to a person, proceeding from intimate acquaintance, and a reciprocation of kind offices, or from a favorable opinion of the amiable and respectable qualities of his mind. Friendship differs from benevolence, which is good-will to mankind in general, and from that love which springs from animal appetite. True friendship is a noble and virtuous attachment, springing from a pure source, a respect for worth or amiable qualities. False friendship may subsist between bad men, as between thieves and pirates. This is a temporary attachment, springing from interest, and may change in a moment to enmity and rancor.

frisa. Qu. Sp. rizar, to crisp or curl, to frizzle; G.
φριζω, to shiver or tremble with fear, whose elements are Fr. or Frk, as appears by φριξο, φριξος, φριξ. If frize, in architecture, is the same word, which seems to be the fact, we have evidence that the elements are Fr. for in Italian, frize is frigio.
 The primary sense is, probably, to draw or contract.]
 1. Properly, the nap on woolen cloth; hence, a kind of coarse woolen cloth or stuff, with a nap on one side.
 2. In architecture, that part of the entablature of a frichtan, to frighten; G. furcht, furchten; D. vrecchten, to fear; Fr. effrayer. Qu. Gr. φοβος, φοβος, to fear, that is, to shrink or shiver. But fright, or the Sax.

fricht, is precisely the Ethiopic participle ፈርቀተ ferkt, from ፈርቀ ferah, to fear, which seems to be allied to L. veper. Class Br. No. 33.]
 Sudden and violent fear; terror; a passion excited by the sudden appearance of danger. It expresses more than fear, and is distinguished from fear and dread by its sudden invasion and temporary existence; fright being usually of short duration, whereas fear and dread may be long continued.
FRIGHT, } v. t. To terrify; to scare; to alarm FRIGHT'EN, } suddenly with danger; to shock suddenly with the approach of evil; to daunt; to dismay.
Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit. Dryden.
FRIGHT'ED, } pp. or a. Terrified; suddenly
FRIGHT'EN-ED, } alarmed with danger.
FRIGHT'EN-ING, (frite'n-ing,) ppr. Terrifying, suddenly alarming with danger.

FROM, prep. [Sax. fram, from; Goth. fram. In Swedish, it signifies before or forward, but its sense is, past or gone, for fränling is a stranger, and frännga is, to go out, to depart. Dan. frem, whence fremmer, to forward, to promote, fremmed, strange, fremkommer, to come forth or out; G. fremd, strange, foreign; D. vrend, id. If m is radical, this word is probably from the root of roam, ramble, primarily to pass, to go].
 The sense of from may be expressed by the noun distance, or by the adjective distant, or by the participles, departing, removing, to a distance. Thus, it is one hundred miles from Boston to Hartford. He took his sword from his side. Light proceeds from the sun. Water issues from the earth in springs. Separate the coarse wood from the fine. Men have all sprung from Adam. Men often go from good to bad, and from bad to worse. The merit of an action depends on the principle from which it proceeds. Men judge of facts from personal knowledge, or from testimony. We should aim to judge from undeniable premises.
 The sense of from is literal or figurative; but it is uniformly the same.
 In certain phrases, generally or always elliptical, from is followed by certain adverbs, denoting place, region, or position, indefinitely, no precise point being expressed; as,
 From above; from the upper regions
 From afar; from a distance.
 From beneath; from a place or region below
 From below; from a lower place.
 From behind; from a place or position in the rear.
 From far; from a distant place.
 From high; from on high; from a high place, from an upper region, or from heaven.
 From hence; from this place. But from is superfluous before hence; the phrase, however, is common.
 From thence; from that place; from being superfluous.
 From whence; from which place; from being superfluous.
 From where; from which place.
 From within; from the interior or inside.
 From without; from the outside; from abroad.
 From precedes another preposition, followed by its proper object or case.
 From amidst; as, from amidst the waves.
 From among; as, from among the trees
 From beneath; as, from beneath my head.
 From beyond; as, from beyond the river.
 From forth; as, from forth his bridal bower.
 But this is an inverted order of the words; forth from his bower.
 From off; as, from off the mercy-seat, that is, from the top or surface.
 From out; as, from out a window, that is, through an opening, or from the inside.
 From out of, is an ill combination of words, and not to be used.
 From under; as, from under the bed, from under the ashes, that is, from beneath or the lower side.
 From within; as, from within the house, that is, from the inner part or interior.

FRO'GAL, a. [L. frugalis; Fr. and Sp. frugal; said to be from fruges, corn, grain of any kind. Most probably it is from the root of fruur, for frugor, to use, to take the profit of, which coincides in elements and sense with G. brauchen, Sax. brucan. See FRUIT.]

Economical in the use or appropriation of money, goods, or provisions, of any kind; saving unnecessary expense, either of money or of any thing else which is to be used or consumed; sparing; not profuse, prodigal, or lavish. We ought to be frugal, not only in the expenditure of money and of goods, but in the employment of time. It is followed by of before the thing saved; as, frugal of time. It is not synonymous with parsimonious, nor with thrifty, as now used.

FRU-GALI-TY, n. Prudent economy; good husbandry or housewifery; a sparing use or appropriation of money or commodities; a judicious use of any thing to be expended or employed; that careful management of money or goods which expends nothing unnecessarily, and applies what is used to a profitable purpose; that use in which nothing is wasted. It is not equivalent to parsimony, the latter being an excess of frugality, and a fault. Frugality is always a virtue. Nor is it synonymous with thrif, in its proper sense; for thrif is the effect of frugality.

Without frugality none can become rich, and with it few would be poor. Johnson.

2. A prudent and sparing use or appropriation of any thing; as, frugality of praise. Dryden.

FRU-GIVO-ROUS, a. [L. fruges, corn, and voro, to eat.] Feeding on fruits, seeds, or corn, as birds and other animals. Nat. Hist.

FRUIT, (fruite), n. [Fr. fruit; It. frutto; Sp. fruto; from L. fructus; Arm. froncaen, or foehen; D. vragt; G. frucht; Dan. frugt; Sw. frucht. The Latin word is the participle of fruo, contracted from frugor, or frucor, to use, to take the profit of; allied, perhaps, to Sax. brucan, brucean, G. brauchen, to use, to enjoy. Class Brz, No. 6, 7.]

1. In a general sense, whatever the earth produces for the nourishment of animals, or for clothing or profit. Among the fruits of the earth are included not only corn of all kinds, but grass, cotton, flax, grapes, and all cultivated plants. In this comprehensive sense, the word is generally used in the plural.

2. In a more limited sense, the produce of a tree, or other plant; the last production for the propagation or multiplication of its kind: the seed of plants, or the part that contains the seeds, as wheat, rye, oats, apples, quinces, pears, cherries, acorns, melons, &c.

3. In botany, the seed of a plant, or the seed with the pericarp.

FULSOME, a. [Sax. ful, foul, or full.]
 Rank; gross; disgusting; nauseous. Formerly, the word was applied to things which disgust the senses; as, a fulsome coffin, a fulsome smell, and hence to things lustful or obscene; as, fulsome omen, a fulsome epigram. In present usage, the term is usually confined to that which disgusts by excess or grossness; as, fulsome flattery, a fulsome compliment, a fulsome artifice. Cooper.

It seems, then, that full and foul are radically the same word, the primary sense of which is stuffed, crowded, from the sense of putting on, or in. In present usage, the compound fulsome takes its signification from full, in the sense of cloying or satiating; and in former usage, fulsome takes its predominant sense from fulness.

G.

G the seventh letter, and the fifth articulation, of the English alphabet, is derived to us, through the Latin and Greek, from the Assyrian languages; it being found in the Chaldee, Syriac, Hebrew, Samaritan, Phœnician, Ethiopic, and Arabic. In the latter language, it is called gim or jin; but in the others, gamel, gomal, or gama, that is, camel, from its shape, which resembles the neck of that animal, at least in the Chaldee and Hebrew. It is the third letter in the Chaldee, Syriac, Hebrew, Samaritan, and Greek; the fifth in the Arabic, and the twentieth in the Ethiopic. The Greek Γ, gamma, is the Chaldaic g inverted. The early Latins used C for the Greek gamma, and hence C came to hold the third place in the order of the alphabet; the place which gimel holds in the Oriental languages. The two letters are primarily palatals, and so nearly allied in sound that they are easily convertible; and they have been reciprocally used, the one for the other. But in the Assyrian languages, gimel had two sounds; one close, as we pronounce the letter in gare, good; the other compound, as the English j, or as ch in chase. In the Arabic, this letter has the sound of the English j or ch, and this sound it has in many English words, as in genius, gem, ginger. It retains its close sound in all cases before n, o, and u; but before e, i, and y, its sound is close or compound, as custom has dictated, and its different sounds are not reducible to rules. It is silent in some words before n, as in benign, emalign, malign, campagna; but it resumes its sound in benignity and malignity. G is mute before n in gnash, gnaw; it is silent also in many words when united with h, as in bright, might, night, nigh, high. The Saxon g has in many words been softened or liquefied into y or ow; as Sax. deg, gear, Eng. day, gear; Sax. bagan, Eng. to bow.

The Celtic nations had a peculiar manner of beginning the sound of a or o with the articulation g, or rather prefixing this articulation to that vowel. Thus, guard for word, gain for vain, guerre for war, gwel for well. Whether this g has been added by the Celtic races, or whether the Teutonic nations have lost it, is a question I have not examined with particular attention.

As a numeral, G was anciently used to denote 40, and with a dash over it, 40,000. As an abbreviation, it stands for Gaius, Gellius, &c. In music, it is the mark of the treble clef; and, from its being placed at the head, or marking the first sound in Guido's scale, the whole scale took the name Gamut, from the Greek name of the letter.

GA, in Gothic, is a prefix, answering to ge in Saxon and other Teutonic languages. It sometimes has the force of the Latin cum or con, as in gavithan, to conjoin. But in most words it appears to have no use, and in modern English it is entirely lost. Y-cleped, in which ge is changed into y, is the last word in which the English retained this prefix.

GAB, n. [Scot. gab, Dan. gab, the mouth, and a gap or gaping; Sw. gap; Russ. guba, a lip, a bay or gulf, the mouth of a river; It. gab, the mouth; connected probably with gabbe, gibberish, Sax. gabban,

GALBA-NUM, n. [Heb. גלבן, and in Ch. and Syr. GALBAN,] varied in orthography, from גבן, to milk.]
 The inspissated sap of Galbanum officinale, an umbelliferous plant. It comes in pale-colored, semi-transparent, soft, tenacious masses, of different shades, from white to brown. It has a strong, unpleasant smell, with a bitterish, warm taste. It is unctuous to the touch, and softens between the fingers. Who distilled with water or spirit, it yields an essential oil; and, by distillation in a retort without mixture, it yields an empyreumatic oil of a fine blue color; but this is changed, in the air, to a purple. Farr.

GALE, n. [In Dan., gal is furious, and kuler is to blow strong, kuling, a gentle gale, from the root of cool and uhl. In Ir., gal is a puff, a blast, and steam. The sense is obvious.]
 A current of air; a strong wind. The sense of this word is very indefinite. The poets use it in the sense of a moderate breeze or current of air; as, a gentle gale. A stronger wind is called a fresh gale.

In the language of seamen, the word gale, unaccompanied by an epithet, signifies a vehement wind, a storm, or tempest. They say, the ship carried away her topmast in a gale, or gale of wind; the ship rode out the gale. But the word is often qualified; as, a hard or strong gale, a violent gale. A current of wind, somewhat less violent, is denominated a stiff gale. A less vehement wind is called a fresh gale, which is a wind not too strong for a ship to carry single-reefed top-sails, when close-hauled. When the wind is not so violent but that a ship will carry her top-sails a-rip, or full spread, it is called a loom-gale. Mar. Dict. Encyc.

GEN'E-R-ABLE, a. That may be engendered, begetten, or produced. Bentley.

GEN'ER-AL, a. [Fr., from L. generalis, from genus, a kind.]
1. Properly, relating to a whole genus or kind; and hence, relating to a whole class or order. Thus we speak of a general law of the animal or vegetable economy. This word, though from genus, kind, is used to express whatever is common to an order, class, kind, sort, or species, or to any company or association of individuals.
2. Comprehending many species or individuals; not a species or particular; as, it is not logical to draw a general inference or conclusion from a particular fact.
3. Lax in signification; not restrained or limited to a particular import; not specific; as, a loose and general expression.
4. Public; common; relating to or comprehending the whole community; as, the general interest or safety of a nation.
To all general purposes, we have uniformly been one people. Federalist, Jey.

5. Common to many or the greatest number; as, a general opinion; a general custom.
6. Not directed to a single object.
If the same thing be peculiarly evil, that general aversion will be turned into a particular hatred against it. Sparr.

7. Having a relation to all; common to the whole. Adam, our general sire. Milton.

8. In law, to plead the general issue, is to deny at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it. Boucier.

9. Extensive, though not universal; common; usual.
This word is prefixed or annexed to words to express the extent of their application. Thus a general assembly is an assembly of a whole body, in fact or by representation. In Scotland, it is the whole church convened by its representatives. In America, a legislature is sometimes called a general assembly or general court.
In logic, a general term is a term which is the sign of a general idea.
An attorney-general, and a solicitor-general, is an officer who conducts suits and prosecutions for the king, or for a nation or state, and whose authority is general in the state or kingdom.
A vicer-general has authority as vicar or substitute over a whole territory or jurisdiction.
An adjutant-general assists the general of an army, distributes orders, receive returns, &c.
The word general, thus annexed to a name of office, denotes chief or superior; as, a commissary-general, quartermaster-general.
In the line, a general officer is one who commands an army, a division, or a brigade.

GEN'ER-AL, n. The whole; the total; that which comprehends all or the chief part; opposed to particular.
In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.
A history painter paints man in general. Reynolds.
2. In generals in the main; for the most part; not always or universally.
I have shown that he excels, in general, under each of these additions.
3. The chief commander of an army. But, to distinguish this officer from other generals, he is often called general-in-chief. The officer second in rank is called lieutenant-general.
4. The commander of a division of an army or militia, usually called a major-general.
5. The commander of a brigade, called a brigadier-general.
6. A particular beat of drum or march, being that which, in the morning, gives notice for the infantry to be in readiness to march. Encyc.

GEN'ER-AL-I-ZÁ'TION, n. The act of making general; the act of reducing particulars to generals or to their genera.

GEN'ER-AL-IZE, v. l. To extend from particulars or species to genera, or to whole kinds or classes; to make general, or common to a number; as, to generalize a remark.
2. To reduce particulars to generals, or to their genera. Reid.
Copernicus generalized the celestial motions, by merely referring them to the moon's motion. Newton generalized them still more, by referring this last to the motion of a stone through the air. Nicholson.

GEN'ER-AL-IZ-ED, pp. Extended to generals; reduced to a genus.

GEN'ER-AL-IZ-ING, pp. Extending to generals; reducing to genera.

GEN'ER-AL-LY, adv. In general; commonly; extensively, though not universally; most frequently, but not without exceptions. A hot summer generally follows a cold winter. Men are generally more disposed to censure than to praise, as they generally suppose it easier to depress excellence in others than to equal or surpass it by elevating themselves.
2. In the main; without detail; in the whole taken together.
Generally speaking, they live very quietly. Addison.

GEN'ER-AL-NESS, n. Wide extent, though short of universality; frequency; commonness. Sidney.

GEN'ER-AL-SHIP, n. The skill and conduct of a general officer; military skill in a commander, exhibited in the judicious arrangements of troops, or the operations of war.

GENER-AL-TY, n. The whole; the totality. Ilale.

1. The power that generates; the power or principle that produces.
2. In geometry, a line, surface, or solid, generated, or supposed to be generated, by the motion of a point, line, or surface. Barlow.

GENER-ATE, v. t. [L. genero. See GENER.]

1. To beget; to procreate; to propagate; to produce a being similar to the parent. Every animal generates his own species.
2. To produce; to cause to be; to bring into life; as, great whales which the waters generated. Milton.
3. To enuse; to produce; to form.

Sounds are generated where there is no air at all. Bacon.
Whatever generates a quantity of good chyle must likewise generate milk. Arbutnot.

In music, any given sound generates with itself its octave and two other sounds extremely sharp, viz., its twelfth above or the octave of its fifth, and the seventeenth above. Encyc.

GENER-A-TED, pp. Begotten, engendered; procreated; produced; or formed.

GENER-A-TING, pp. or a. Begetting; procreating; producing; forming.

GEN-ER-A-TION, n. The act of begetting; procreation; or of animals.

2. Production; formation; as, the generation of sounds, or of curves or equations.
3. A single succession in natural descent, as the children of the same parents; hence, an age. Thus we say, the third, the fourth, or the tenth generation. Gen. xv. 16.
4. The people of the same period, or living at the same time.

O faithless and perverse generation! — Luke ix.

5. Genealogy; a series of children or descendants from the same stock.

This is the book of the generations of Adam. — Gen. v.

6. A family; a race. Shak.
7. Progeny; offspring. Shak.

GENER-A-TIVE, a. Having the power of generating or propagating its own species. Raleigh.

2. Having the power of producing. Bentley.
3. Prolific. Bentley.

GEN-ER-A-TOR, n. Heor that which begets, causes, or produces.

2. In music, the principal sound or sounds by which others are produced. Thus the lowest C for the treble of the harpsichord, besides its octave, will strike an attentive ear with its twelfth above, or G in alt., and with its seventeenth above, or E in alt. Hence C is called their generator, the G and E its products or harmonics. Encyc.
3. A vessel in which steam is generated. Perkins.

GEN-ERIC, a. [L. and Sp. generico; Fr. général.] Pertaining to a genus or kind; comprehending the genus, as distinct from species, or from another genus. A generic description is a description of a genus; a generic difference is a difference in genus; a generic name is the denomination which comprehends all the species, as of animals, plants, or fossils, which have a certain essential and peculiar characters in common. Thus Canis is the generic name of animals of the dog kind; Felis, of the cat kind; Cercus, of the deer kind.

GEN-ERIC-AL-LY, adv. With regard to genus; as, an animal genericly by distinct from another, or two animals genericly allied. Woodward.

GEN-ER-IC-AL-NES, n. The quality of being generic.

GEN-ER-OS-I-TY, n. [Fr. générosité; L. generositas, from genus, race, kin, with reference to birth, blood, family.]

1. The quality of being generous; liberality in principle; a disposition to give liberally or to bestow favors; a quality of the heart or mind opposed to meanness or parsimony.
2. Liberality in act; bounty.
3. Nobleness of soul; magnanimity. [This is the primary sense, but is now little used.]

GEN-ER-OS, a. [L. generosus; Fr. généreux, from genus, birth, extraction, family. See GENEA.]

1. Primarily, being of honorable birth or origin; hence, noble; honorable; magnanimous; applied to persons; as, a generous foe; a generous critic.
2. Noble; honorable; applied to things; as, a generous virtue; generous boldness. It is used, also, to denote like qualities in irrational animals; as, a generous pack of hounds. Addison.
3. Liberal; bountiful; munificent; free to give; as, a generous friend; a generous father.
4. Strong; full of spirit; as, generous wine.
5. Full; overflowing; abundant; as, a generous cup; a generous table.
6. Spiritually; courageous; as, a generous steed.

GEN-ER-OS-LY, adv. Honorably; not meanly.

2. Nobly; magnanimously. Dryden.
3. Liberally; munificently.

GEN-I-TON, n. [Fr. janeton.] A species of apple that ripens very early.

GEN-I-TIVE, a. or n. [L. genitivus, from the root of gendo.]

In grammar, a term applied to a case in the declension of nouns, expressing primarily the thing from which something else proceeds; as, filius patris, the son of a father; aqua fontis, the water of a fountain. But, by custom, this case expresses other relations, particularly possession or ownership; as, animi magnitudo, greatness of mind, greatness possessed by or inherent in the mind. This case often expresses, also, that which proceeds from something else; as, pater septem filiorum, the father of seven sons.

GEN-I-TOR, n. One who procreates; a sire; a father. Sheldon.

GEN-I-TURE, n. Generation; procreation; birth. Burton.

GEN-IUS, n.; pl. GENIUSES. [L., from the root of gigno, Gr. γενναω, to beget.]

1. The peculiar structure of mind which is given by nature to an individual, or that disposition or bent of mind which is peculiar to every man, and which qualifies him for a particular employment; and which natural talent or aptitude of mind for a particular study or course of life; as, a genius for history, for poetry, or painting.
2. Strength of mind; uncommon powers of intellect; particularly, the power of invention. In this sense we say, Homer was a man of genius. Hence,
3. A man endowed with uncommon vigor of mind; a man of superior intellectual faculties. Shakespeare was a rare genius. Addison.
4. Mental powers or faculties. [See No. 2.]
5. Nature; disposition; peculiar character; as, the genius of the times.

GEN-I-US, n.; pl. GENII. [L.] Among the ancients, a good or evil spirit, or demon, supposed to preside over a man's destiny in life; that is, to direct his birth and actions, and be his guard and guide; a tutelary deity; the ruling and protecting power of men, places, or things. This seems to be merely a personification or deification of the particular structure or bent of mind which a man receives from nature, which is the primary signification of the word.

GEN-I-US LO-CI, [L.] The presiding divinity of a place; and hence, the pervading spirit of a place or institution, as of a college, &c.

GEN-O-ES-E, n. An inhabitant, or the people of Geneva, in Italy.

 See GEN-TLE.]
 1. In its most extensive sense, in Great Britain, every man above the rank of yeoman, comprehending noblemen. In a more limited sense, a man who, without a title, bears a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen. In this sense, gentlemen hold a middle rank between the nobility and yeomanry.
 2. In the United States, where titles and distinctions of rank do not exist, the term is applied to men of education and of good breeding, of every occupation. Indeed, this is also the popular practice in Great Britain. Hence,

GET, v. t.; pret. Got, [Gat, obs.]; pp. Got, GOTTEN. [Sax. getan, gylan, or geatan, to get; agytan, to know or understand; angitan, undgitan, to find, to understand. The Danish has forgettel, to forget, but gieter signifies to guess, or to suppose, to think; the Swedish also has förgäta, to forget, to give to oblivion, ex animo egerere. The simple verb gietter, gäta, coincides with the D. gieten, G. giessen, to cast, to pour out, to found, as vessels of metal, Sax. geatan. To get, then, is, primarily, to throw, and with respect to acquisition, it is to rush on and seize. The Italian has collare, to get; racattare, to regain, to acquire. Qu. Sp. rescatar, Port. resgatar, to redeem, to ransom. See RESCUE.]
 1. To procure; to obtain; to gain possession of, by almost any means. We get favor by kindness; we get wealth by industry and economy; we get land by purchase; we get praise by good conduct; and we get blame by doing injustice. The merchant should get a profit on his goods; the laborer should get a due reward for his labor; most men get what they can for their goods or for their services. Get differs from acquire, as it does not always express permanence of possession, which is the appropriate sense of acquire. We get a book or a loaf of bread by borrowing, we do not acquire it; but we get or 2. To have. [acquire an estate. Herbert.
 Thou hast got the face of a man.
 This is a most common man, but gross abuse of this word. We constantly hear it said, I have got no corn, I have got no money, she has got a fair complexion, when the person means only, I have no corn, I have no money, she has a fair complexion.
 3. To beget; to procreate; to generate. Locke.
 4. To learn; as, to get a lesson.
 5. To prevail on; to induce; to persuade.
 Though the king could not get him to engage in a life of business. Spencator.
 [This is not elegant.]
 6. To procure to be. We could not get the work done. [Not elegant.]
 To get off; to put off; to take or pull off; as, to get off a garment; also, to remove; as, to get off a ship from shoals.
 2. To sell; to dispose of; as, to get off goods.
 To get on; to put on; to draw or pull on; as, to get on a coat; to get on boots.
 To get in; to collect and shelter; to bring under cover; as, to get in corn.
 To get out; to draw forth; as, to get out a secret.
 2. To draw out; to disengage.
 To get the day; to win; to conquer; to gain the victory.
 To get together; to collect; to amass.
 To get over; to surmount; to conquer; to pass without being obstructed; as, to get over difficulties; also, to recover; as, to get over sickness.
 To get above; to surmount; to surpass.

To get up; to prepare for coming before the public; to bring forward.
 With a pronoun following, it signifies to botkate; to remove; to go; as, get you to bed; get thee out of the land. But this mode of expression can hardly be deemed elegant.

GET, v. i. To arrive at any place or state; followed by some modifying word, and sometimes implying difficulty or labor; as,

 To get before; to arrive in front, or more forward.
 To get behind; to fall in the rear; to lag.
 To get back; to arrive at the place from which one departed; to return.
 To get clear; to disengage one's self; to be released, as from confinement, obligation, or burden; also, to be freed from danger or embarrassment.
 To get down; to descend; to come from an elevation.
 To get home; to arrive at one's dwelling.
 To get in or into; to arrive within an inclosure, or a mixed body; to pass in; to insinuate one's self.
 To get loose or free; to disengage one's self; to be released from confinement.
 To get off; to escape; to depart; to get clear; also, to alight; to descend from.
 To get out; to depart from an inclosed place, or from confinement; to escape; to free one's self from embarrassment.
 To get along; to proceed; to advance.
 To get rid of; to disengage one's self from; also, to shift off; to remove.
 To get together; to meet; to assemble; to convene.
 To get up; to arise; to rise from a bed or a seat; also, to ascend; to climb.
 To get through; to pass through and reach a point beyond any thing; also, to finish; to accomplish.
 To get quit of; to get rid of; to shift off, or to disengage one's self from.
 To get forward; to proceed; to advance; also, to prosper; to advance in wealth.
 To get near; to approach within a small distance.
 To get ahead; to advance; to prosper.
 To get on; to proceed; to advance.
 To get a mile or other distance; to pass over it in traveling.
 To get at; to reach; to make way to.

GIRD, (gurd), n. [Sax. geard, or gyrd, or gyrda, a twig, branch, rod, pole, Eng. a yard; G. gurt, a girth, a girdle; Dan. gierde, a hedge, a rail. This word signifies, primarily, a twig, shoot, or branch; hence, a pole or stick used in measuring. In measuring land, among our Saxon ancestors, the gyrd seems to have been a certain measure like our rod, perch, or pole, all of which signify the same thing, a branch or shoot, a little pole. We now apply the word yard to a measure of three feet in length. In rude ages, gyrds, shoots of trees, were used for binding things together, whence the verb to gird. (See WITHE.) Gyrds were also used for driving, or for punishment, as we now use whips; and our common people use gird for a severe stroke of a stick or whip. See LVE, under Gyrd and WAL-STYLING.]

1. A twitch or pang; a sudden spasm which resembles the stroke of a rod, or the pressure of a band.

2. In popular language, a severe stroke of a stick or whip.

It is probable that garden, ir. gort, is from the same root; originally, an inclosed field, a piece of ground surrounded with poles, stakes, and branches of trees. If the noun is the primary word, the sense of the root is to shoot, as a branch; if the verb is the root, the sense is to surround, or rather, to bind or make fast. The former is the most probable.]

1. To bind by surrounding with any flexible substance, as with a twig, a cord, bandage, or cloth; as, to gird the loins with sackcloth.

2. To make fast by binding; to put on; usually with on; as, to gird on a harness; to gird on a sword.

"Arthritic inflammation of the internal tunics of the eye (an inflammation commencing in parts most essential to the function of vision, in the retina, in the vitreous humor, and probably involving the choroid coat) has sometimes been called acute glaucoma, this term being derived from the greenish appearance of the eye. It has been called glaucoma from another symptom, which takes place where, without any enlargement of the vessels, without any very severe pain or absolute extinction of vision in the first place, the pupil exhibits the same greenish discoloration, a discoloration which obviously does not depend on a change in the crystalline lens; for it is more deeply acated; it occupies the fundus of the eye, and you can only see it by looking at it when you are standing directly before the patient, not by looking at the eye sideways. This is called glaucoma simply; and it appears to me to be a chronic form of the same affection as that to which the term acute glaucoma is given. This chronic form of glaucoma is important to be observed; for it is liable to be confounded with cataract." Lawrence, Lectures on Surgery.

GLOB'RI-OUS-NESS, n. The state or quality of being glorious.

GLOB'RY, n. [L. gloria; Fr. gloire; Sp. and It. gloria; Ir. glóir, glory, and glóir, clear; W. glúir, clear, bright; Arm. glóar, glory. It coincides with clear, and the primary sense seems to be, to open, to expand, to enlarge. So splendor is from the Celtic ysplan, open, clear, plain, L. planus; hence, bright, shining. Glory, then, is brightness, splendor. The L. flores, to blossom, to flower, to flourish, is probably of the same family.

1. Brightness; luster; splendor.

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky.
For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory.—2 Pet. i.

In this passage of Peter, the latter word glory refers to the visible splendor or bright cloud that overshadowed Christ at his transfiguration. The former word glory, though the same in the original, is to be understood in a figurative sense.

2. Splendor; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.—Matt. vi.

3. Praise ascribed in adoration; honor.

Glory to God in the highest.—Luke ii.

4. Honor; praise; fame; renown; celebrity. The new pants for glory in the field. It was the glory of Howard to relieve the wretched. 5. The felicity of heaven prepared for the children of God; celestial bliss.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory.—Ps. lxxvii.

6. In Scripture, the divine presence; or the ark, the manifestation of it.

The glory is departed from Israel.—1 Sam. iv.

7. The divine perfections or excellence.

The heavens declare the glory of God.—Ps. xix.

8. Honorable representation of God. 1 Cor. xi. 8. 9. Distinguished honor or ornament; that which honors or makes renowned; that of which one may boast.

Babylon, the glory of kingdoms.—Is. xiii.

10. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance; as, vain glory.

11. Generous pride.

12. In painting, a circle of rays, surrounding the heads of saints, &c., and especially of the Savior.

Your glorying is not good.—1 Cor. v.

GLÓRY-SMÍT'TEN, a. Smitten with glory.

GLOSS, GLÓSE, n. See GLOSS. [Coleridge.]

GLOSS, n. [G. glossa, a gloss or comment; glotzen, to gleam, to glimmer. In Sax. glesan signifies to explain, to flatter, to gloss. From the Gr. γλωσσα, the tongue, and a strap, the L. has glossa a tongue, and interpretation. In Heb. שָׁלַף signifies to shine, but from the sense of smoothness; Syr. ܥܠܫܐ galash, to peel, to shave, to make bald. Whether these words are all of one family, let the reader judge. The radical sense appears to be, to open, to make clear, and the sense of languis is probably to extend. If the first letter is a prefix, the other letters, ls, are the elements of l. leos, light, L. lustrō, Eng. luster; and it is remarkable that in Russ. lask is luster, polish, and laskaya is to flatter. The Gr. γλωσσα, and in the Attic dialect, is a tongue, and in Swedish and German, glatt, Dan. glad, D. glad, is smooth.]

1. Brightness or luster of a body proceeding from a smooth surface; as, the gloss of silk; cloth is calendered to give it a gloss.

2. A specious appearance or representation; external show that may mislead opinion.

It is no part of my sweet meaning to set on the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker.

3. An interpretation artfully specious. Sidney.

4. Interpretation; comment; explanation; remark intended to illustrate a subject.

All this, without a gloss or comment,

He would unskilful in a moment.

Expounding the text in short glosses.

Goth. goth or guth; Pers. گودا goda or chodu; Hindoo, khoda, codam. As this word and good are written exactly alike in Saxon, it has been inferred that God was named from his goodness. But the corresponding words in most of the other languages are not the same, and I believe no instance can be found of a name given to the Supreme Being from the attribute of goodness. It is probably an idea too remote from the rude conceptions of men in early ages. Except the word Jehovah, I have found the name of the Supreme Being to be usually taken from his supremacy or power, and to be equivalent to lord or ruler, from some root signifying to press or exert force. Now, in the present case, we have evidence that this is the sense of this word; for, in Persic, goda is rendered dominus, possessor, princeps, as is a derivative of the same word. See Cast Lex. col. 331.

1. The Supreme Being; Jehovah; the eternal and infinite Spirit, the Creator, and the Sovereign of the Universe.

God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. — John iv.

GRADE, n. [*Fr. grade; Sp. and It. grado; Port. grado; from L. gradus, a step; gradior, to step, to go; G. grad; D. grad; Dan. and Sw. grad, a step or degree; W. grâz, a step, degree, rank, from rhâz, a going forward or advance, Arm. radd. It may be from a common root with W. rhawd, way, course, route; rhodiare, to walk about; rhod, a wheel, l. rota. We observe by the Welsh that the first letter g is a prefix, and the root of the word then is Rd. We observe further, that the L. gradior forms grenus, by a common change of d to r, or as it is in Welsh r, [th]. Now, if g is a prefix, then grenus [ressus] coincides with the Sw. resa, Dan. rejser, G. reisen, D. reizen, to go, to travel, to journey; D. reis, a journey, or voyage. In Sw. and Dan. the verba signify not only to travel, but to raise. Whether the latter word, raise, is of the same family, may be doubtful; but the others appear to belong to one radix, coinciding with the Syr. }]; radah, to go, to walk; Ch. רָאָה, to*

1. Weight; heaviness.
2. In natural philosophy, the tendency of a mass of matter toward its central body; particularly, the tendency of a body toward the center of the earth; terrestrial gravitation. Weight is the measure of gravity. Olsted.

The force of gravity in a body is in direct proportion to its quantity of matter. Anon.

3. Specific gravity; the weight of a body compared with another of the same bulk, taken as a standard. Water is the standard for solids and liquids, common air for gases. Thus the exact weight of a cubic inch of gold, compared with that of a cubic inch of water, is called its specific gravity. Olsted.
4. Seriousness; sobriety of manners; solemnity of deportment or character. Dryden.

Great Cato there, for gravity renowned. Dryden.

5. Weight; enormity; atrociousness; as, the gravity of an injury. [Not used.] Hooker.

GRAY, a. [Sax. grig, græg; G. grau; D. grauw; Dan. græe; Sw. grå; It. grigio; It. gre. This is probably Γραικος, Græcos, Greek, Grai, the name given to the Greeks, on account of their fair complexion compared with the Asiatics and Africans. (See EUROPE.)

Φεραι δ' αε Κηρω Γραιος τεκε καλλιπαρνος, Εκ γενετης ποδιας τυς δε Γραιος κηλοισιν. Hesiod. Theog. 270.

"Keto bore to Phorus the Græia with fair cheeks, white from their birth, and hence they were called Græia." The Greek word γραια is rendered an old woman, and, in this passage of Hesiod, is supposed to mean certain deities. The probability is, that it is applied to an old woman, because she is gray. But the fable of Hesiod is easily explained by supposing the author to have had in his mind some imperfect account of the origin of the Greeks.]

1. White, with a mixture of black.

These gray and black colors may be also produced by mixing whites and dums. Newton.

2. White; hoary; as, gray hair. We apply the word to hair that is partially or wholly white.

In that soft season, when descending showers
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flowers. Pope.

GREEN, v. t. To make green. This is used by Thomson and by Barlow, but is not an elegant word, and indeed is hardly legitimate, in the sense in which these writers use it. "Spring greens the year." "God greens the groves." The only legitimate sense of this verb, if used, would be, to dye green, or to change to a green color. A plant growing in a dark room is yellow; let this plant be carried into the open air, and the rays of the sun will green it. This use would correspond with the use of whiten, blacken, redden.

GREEN/BROOM, } n. A plant of the genus Genista.

GREEN/WED, } n. A board or court of justice held in the counting-house of the British king's household, composed of the lord steward and the officers under him. GREGORIAN, n. Denoting what belongs to Gregory.

The Gregorian calendar is the regulation of the year according to the reformation introduced by

Pope Gregory XIII., in 1582. The Gregorian year is the year as now reckoned according to the Gregorian calendar. Thus, every year which is divisible by 4, except those divisible by 100 and not by 400, has 366 days; all other years have 365 days.

Gregorian chant, is choral music, according to the eight celebrated church modes, as arranged by Pope

Gregory I. Porter.

Gregorian telescope; a form of the reflecting telescope, so named from its inventor, Prof. James Gregory of the University of Edinburgh. In this telescope the light, proceeding from a heavenly body, is collected by a large concave mirror, and forms an image in the focus of a small reflector, which transmits the light back through an opening in the center of the large mirror, where it forms a second image, which is magnified by the eye-glass. Olstedt.

GROUND, n. [Sax. grund; G. Dan. and Sw. grund; D. grond; Russ. grund. This word may be the Ir. grían, ground, bottom of a river or lake, from green, W. græca, gravel. (See GRAIN.) It seems, primarily, to denote the gravelly bottom of a river or lake, or of the sea, which shows the appropriate sense of the verb to ground, as used by seamen.]

The surface of land or upper part of the earth, without reference to the materials which compose it. We apply ground to soil, sand, or gravel, indifferently, but never apply it to the whole mass of the earth or globe, n. r. to any portion of it when removed. We never say a shovelful or a load of ground. We say under ground, but not under earth; and we speak of the globe as divided into land and water, not into ground and water. Yet ground, earth, and land, are often used synonymously. We say, the produce or fruits of the ground, of the earth, or of land. The water overflows the low ground, or the low land.

There was not a man to till the ground. — Gen. ii.

To grow up; to arrive at manhood, or to advance to full stature or maturity.
To grow up; to close and adhere; to become — To grow together; united by growth, as flesh or the bark of a tree severed.
Grow signifies, properly, to shoot out, to enlarge; but it is often used to denote a passing from one state to another, and from greater to less.
Marriages grow less frequent. Paley.
[To grow less, is an abuse of this word; the phrase should be, to become less.]

GROW, v. L. To cause to grow; to produce; to raise; as, a farmer grows large quantities of wheat. [This is a modern, agricultural use of grow, but prevalent in Great Britain, and the British use begins to be imitated in America. Until within a few years, we never heard grow used as a transitive verb in New England, and the ear revolts at the practice.]

GROWER, n. One who grows; that which increases.
2. In English use, one who raises or produces.

GROWING, ppr. or a. Increasing; advancing in size or extent; becoming; accruing; swelling; thriving.

GUARD, (gárd), v. t. [Fr. garder; Sp. and Port. guardar; It. guardare, to keep, preserve, defend; also, to look, to behold; Basque, gardi; W. gwara, to fend or guard, to fence, to play. The primary sense is, to strike, strike back, repel, beat down, or to turn back or stop; hence, to keep or defend, as by repelling assault or danger. The sense of seeing, looking, is secondary, from the sense of guarding, and we retain a similar application of the root of this word in beware; or it is from the sense of reaching, or casting the eye, or from turning the head. This is the English to ward. In W. gwara is secure, mild, placid, that is, set, fixed, held. It seems to be allied to G. wach, true, L. verus; wahren, to keep, to last, to hold out; behalten, to keep or preserve; behalten, to verify, to confirm; D. waer, true; waeren, to keep, preserve, indemnify; waerden, a warden, and guarantee; waerion, a garrison; Dan. waer, wary, vigilant, watching; Eng. ware, secure; Dan. waerge, to guard, defend, maintain; ware, a guard, or watch, ward, merchandise; waer, to keep, last, endure; Sw. vara, to watch, and to be, to exist; Dan. waere, to be; Sax. waerian, to guard, to defend, to be wary. The sense of existing implies extension or continuance. See REGARD and REWARD.]

1. To secure against injury, loss, or attack; to protect; to defend; to keep in safety. We guard a city by walls and forts; a harbor is guarded by ships, booms, or batteries; innocence should be guarded by prudence and piety; let observation and experience guard us against temptations to vice.

2. To secure against objections or the attacks of malevolence.

If the word is from gildan, guldian, to pay, it denotes a debt contracted by an offense, a fine, and thence came the present signification.]

1. Criminality; that state of a moral agent which results from his actual commission of a crime or offense, knowing it to be a crime, or violation of law. To constitute guilt, there must be a moral agent enjoying freedom of will, and capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, and a willful or intentional violation of a known law or rule of duty. The guilt of a person exists as soon as the crime is committed; but to evince it to others, it must be proved by confession, or conviction in due course of law. Guilt renders a person a debtor to the law, as it binds him to pay a penalty in money or suffering. Guilt, therefore, implies both criminality and liability to punishment. Guilt may proceed either from a positive act, or breach of law, or from voluntary neglect of known duty.

2. Criminality, in a political or civil view; exposure to forfeiture or other penalty.

A ship incurs guilt by the violation of a blockade. Kent.

 1. The concrete mucilage of vegetables; a concrete juice which exudes through the bark of trees, and thickens on the surface. It is soluble in water, to which it gives a viscous and adhesive quality. It is insoluble in alcohol, and coagulates in weak acids. When dry, it is transparent and brittle, not easily pulverized, and of an insipid or slightly saccharine taste. Gum differs from resin in several particulars, but custom has inappropriately given the name of gum to several resins and gum-resins, as gum-copal, gum-sandarach, gum-ammouac, and others. The true gums are gum-arabic, gum-seneegal, gum-tragacanth, and the gums of the peach, pluin, and cherry trees, &c. Nicholson. Hooper.
 2. A tree of the genus Nyssa, called, also, black gum and sour gum.
Gum-elastic, or Elastic-Nyssa, [caoutchouc]. is a well known substance, obtained from a tree in America by incision. It is a white juice, which, when dry, becomes very tough and elastic, and is used for bottles, surgical instruments, for overshoes, &c. This substance is also much used for various other purposes, being perfectly impermeable to water. Nicholson. Encyc.
GUM, v. t. To smear with gum.
 2. To unite by a viscous substance.
GUM-AR-ABIC, n. A gum which flows from the Acacia, in Arabia, Egypt, &c.
GUM-BOIL, n. A boil on the gum.
GUM-RES/IN, n. [See RESIN.] A name given to certain inspissated saps. A juice of plants, consisting of resin and various other substances, which have been taken for a gummy substance. The gum-resins do not flow naturally from plants, but are mostly extracted by incision, in the form of white, yellow, or red emulsive fluids, which dry and consolidate. The most important species are olibanum, galbanum, scammony, gamboge, euphorbium, asafoetida, aloes, myrrh, and ammoniac. Fourcroy.
GUM-SEN'E-GAL, n. A gum resembling gum-arabic, brought from the country of the River Senegal, in Africa.

H.

H is the eighth letter of the English alphabet. It is properly the representative of the Chaldee, Syriac, and Hebrew η , which is the eighth letter in those alphabets. Its form is the same as the Greek η , etc. It is not strictly a vowel, nor an articulation, but the mark of a stronger breathing than that which precedes the utterance of any other letter. It is pronounced with an expiration of breath, which, preceding a vowel, is perceptible by the ear at a considerable distance. Thus harm and arm, hear and ear, heat and eat, are distinguished at almost any distance at which the voice can be heard. It is a letter sui generis, but as useful in forming and distinguishing words as any other.

In our mother tongue, the Anglo-Saxon, and other Teutonic dialects, A sometimes represents the H, and the Gr. η ; as in horn, L. cornu, Gr. κερας; hide, G. haut, Sw. hud, D. huid, Dan. hud, L. cutis; Sax. hlinion, L. clino, Gr. κλινω, to lean; L. celo, to conceal, Sax. helan, G. hehlen, Dan. hele. In Latin, h sometimes represents the Greek χ ; as in halo, Gr. χαλασθαι, hio, χιο. In the modern European languages, it represents other guttural letters.

In English, h is sometimes mute, as in honour, honest; also when united with g, as in right, fight, brought. In which, what, who, whom, and some other words in which it follows w, it is pronounced before it, which, dwelt, &c. As a numeral

In Latin, H denotes 200, and with a dash over it, \bar{H} , 200,000.

As an abbreviation, in Latin, H, stands for homo, heres, hora, &c.

H; an exclamation, denoting surprise, joy, or grief. With the first or long sound of a, it is used as a question, and is equivalent to "What do you say?"

When repeated, ha, ha, it is an expression of laughter, or sometimes it is equivalent to "Well! it is so."

HAL-LE-LO'IAH, } (hal-le-lū'yā,) n. [Heb. הללו יהוה, praise ye Jah or Jehovah, from הלל, to praise, that is, to throw, or raise the voice, to utter a loud sound. Ar. هلل halla or talla, to appear; to begin to shine, as the new moon; to exclaim; to exult; to sing; to rejoice; to praise or worship God. Gr. ελελε, a shout in battle. It coincides in elements with hall, L. alio.]

Praise ye Jehovah; give praise to God; a word used in songs of praise, or a term of rejoicing in solemn ascriptions of thanksgiving to God. It is used as a noun, or as an exclamation.

[This word is improperly written with j, in conformity with the German and other continental languages, in which j has the sound of y. But to pronounce the word with the English sound of j destroys its beauty. The like mistake of the sound of j in Jehovah, which was Yehochah, Yordan, Joseph. This perversion must now be submitted to, but in Halleluiah it ought not to be tolerated.]

HAN/A-PER, n. [Norm. hanap, a cup, a hamper; Sax. hnap, G. napf, D. nap, Fr. hanap, Arm. hanaf, It. nappe, a bowl or cup. These seem to be all the same word, yet I see not how a cup and a basket should have the same name, unless the vessel was originally made of bark, and so tight as to hold liquors.]

The hanaper was used in early days, by the kings of England, for holding and carrying with them their money, as they journeyed from place to place. It was a kind of basket, like the fuscus, and hence came to be considered as the king's treasury. Hence, the clerk or warden of the hanaper, is an officer who receive the fees due to the king for seals of charters, patents, commissions, and writs. There is also an officer who is controller of the hanaper. This word, therefore, answered to the modern exchequer. Spelman.

HAND-SOME, (hand'sum), a. [D. handzaam, soft, limber, tractable; hand and zaam, together. Zaam, or zaam, we see in assemble. The sense of docility is taken from hand, as in G. behandel, D. behandelten, to handle, to manage. The Dutch sense of soft, limber, is probably from the sense of easily managed or handled.]

1. Properly, dextrous; ready; conveniently.

For a thief it is so handsome, as it may seem it was first invented for him. Spenser.

This sense is either from the original meaning of hand, or from the use of the hand, or rather of the right hand. In this sense the word is still used. We say of a well-fought combat and victory, it is a handsome affair, an affair well performed, done with dexterity or skill. [See HANDY.]

2. Moderately beautiful, as the person or other thing; well made; having symmetry of parts; well formed. It expresses less than beautiful or elegant; as, a handsome woman or man; she has a handsome person or face. So we say, a handsome house; a handsome type.

HAN'SARD, n. A merchant of one of the Hanse Towns. McCulloch.

HAN-SE-AT'IC, a. Pertaining to the Hanse Towns, or to their confederacy.

HANSE TOWNS. Hanse signifies a society; Goth. hansa, a multitude. The Hanse Towns, in Germany, were certain commercial cities which associated for the protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century. To this confederacy acceded certain commercial cities in Holland, England, France, Spain, and Italy, until they amounted to seventy-two; and for centuries this confederacy commanded the respect and defied the power of kings. It has now ceased to exist, and its remnants, Lübeck, Hamburg, Bremen, and Frankfort, are called Free Cities. Encyc. Am.

HAN'T; a vulgar contraction of HAVE NOT or HAS NOT; as, I han't, he han't, we han't.

HAP, n. [V. hap, or hab, luck, chance, fortune, that is, that which falls, or a coming suddenly. This seems to be allied to Fr. happer, to snap or catch; D. happen; Norm. happer; to seize; W. hafiau, to snatch. In Sp. haber signifies to have, to happen or befall, to take. These verbs seem to unite in one radix, and all coincide with L. capio. The primary sense is, to fall or to rush; hence, to rush on and seize.]

1. That which comes suddenly or unexpectedly; chance; fortune; accident; casual event. [See CHANCE and CASUAL.]

Whether art it was or heedless chance, Curs'd be good haps, and curs'd be they that build Their hopes on haps. Spenser.

2. Misfortune. [But this word is obsolete, or obsolescent, except in compounds and derivatives.]

HAP'PI-LY, adv. [See HAPPY.] By good fortune; fortunately; luckily; with success. Preferred by conquest, happily o'erthrown. Waller.

2. In a happy state; in a state of felicity. He lived happily with his consort.

3. With address or dexterity; gracefully; in a manner to insure success. Formed by thy converse, happily to steer From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

4. By chance. [See HAPPY.]

HAP'PI-NESS, n. [From happy.] The agreeable sensations which spring from the enjoyment of good; that state of a being in which his desires are gratified by the enjoyment of pleasure without pain; felicity; but happiness usually expresses less than felicity, and felicity less than bliss. Happiness is comparative. To a person distressed with pain, relief from that pain affords happiness; in other cases, we give the name happiness to positive pleasure or an excitement of agreeable sensations. Happiness therefore admits of indefinite degrees of increase in enjoyment, or gratification of desires. Perfect happiness, or pleasure unalloyed with pain, is not attainable in this life.

2. Good luck; good fortune. Johnson.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace. For there's a happiness, as well as care. Pope.

HAP'PY, a. [from hap; W. hapus, properly lucky, fortunate, receiving good from something that falls or comes to one unexpectedly, or by an event that is not within control. See HODA.]

1. Lucky; fortunate; successful. Chemists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

2. So we say, a happy thought; a happy expedient.

3. Being in the enjoyment of agreeable sensations from the possession of good; enjoying pleasure from the gratification of appetites or desires. The pleasurable sensations derived from the gratification of sensual appetites render a person temporarily happy; but he only can be esteemed really and permanently happy, who enjoys peace of mind in the favor of God. To be in any degree happy, we must be free from pain both of body and of mind; to be very happy, we must be in the enjoyment of lively sensations of pleasure, either of body or mind.

Happy am I, for the daughters will call me blessed. — Gen. xxx. He found himself happy in communicating happiness to others. Wirt.

3. Prosperous; having secure possession of good. Happy is that people whose God is Jehovah. — Ps. cxlvii.

4. That supplies pleasure; that furnishes enjoyment; agreeable; applied to things; as, a happy condition.

5. Dextrous; ready; able. One gentleman is happy at a reply, another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HAR/BIN-GER-ED, a. Preceded by a harbinger.
HAR/BOR, n. [Sax. here-berga, the station of an army; D. herberg, an inn; Dan. Sw. and G. herberge; Fr. auberge; Sp. and Port. albergue; It. albergo. The first syllable, in the Teutonic dialects, signifies an army, or a troop, a crowd; the last syllable is berg, burg, a town, or castle, or from bergen, to save. But in the Celtic dialects, the first syllable, al, is probably different from that of the other dialects.]

1. A lodging; a place of entertainment and rest. For harbor at a thousand doors they knocked. Dryden.

2. A port or haven for ships; a bay or inlet of the sea, in which ships can moor, and be sheltered from the fury of winds and a heavy sea; any navigable water where ships can ride in safety.

3. An asylum; a shelter; a place of safety from storms or danger.
HAR/BOR, v. t. To shelter; to secure; to secrete; as, to harbor a thief.

2. To entertain; to permit to lodge, rest, or reside; as, to harbor malice or revenge. Harbor not a thought of revenge.

HAR/ROR, v. t. To lodge or abide for a time; to receive entertainment. This night let's harbor here in York. Shak.

2. To take shelter.
HAR/ROR-AGE, n. Shelter; entertainment. [Not used.] Shak.

HAR/VEST, n. [Sax. harfest, harfest, harvest, autumn; G. herbst; D. herfst. This word signifies autumn, and primarily had no reference to the collection of the fruits of the earth; but, in German, herbstzeit is harvest time. It seems to be formed from the G. herbe, harsh, keen, tart, acerb, L. acerbus, and primarily it refers to the cold, chilly weather in autumn, in the north of Europe. This being the time when crops are collected in northern climates, the word came to signify harvest.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering in corn or other crops. It especially refers to the time of collecting corn or grain, which is the chief food of men, as wheat and rye. In Egypt and Syria, the wheat harvest is in April and May; in the south of Europe and of the United States, in June; in the Northern States of America, in July; and in the north of Europe, in August and September. In the United States, the harvest of maize is mostly in October.

2. The ripe corn or grain collected and secured in barns or stacks. The harvest this year is abundant.

HAW'L, v. t. [Fr. haler; Arm. hala; Sp. halar; D.

haalen. It is sometimes written hale, but haul is preferable, as aa represents the broad sound of a.
 1. To pull or draw with force; to drag; as, to haul a heavy body along on the ground; to haul a boat on shore. Haul is equivalent to drag, and differs sometimes from pull and draw, in expressing more force and labor. It is much used by seamen; as, to haul down the sails; haul in the boom; haul aft, &c.
 2. To drag; to compel to go.

When applied to persons, haul implies compulsion or rudeness, or both.
To haul the wind, in seamanship, is to turn the head of the ship nearer to the point from which the wind blows, by arranging the sails more obliquely, bracing the yards more forward, hauling the sheets more aft, &c. Mar. Dict.

HAUL, n. A pulling with force; a violent pull. Thomson.

2. A draft of a net; as, to catch a hundred fish at a haul.

HAUL'ED, (haw'id.) pp. Pulled with force; dragged; compelled to move.

HAUT'BOY, (hö'boy.) n. [Fr. haut, high, and buis, wood, or a shoot.]

1. A wind instrument, somewhat resembling a flute, but widening toward the bottom, and sounded through a reed. The treble is two feet long. The tenor goes a fifth lower, when blown open. It has only eight holes; but the base, which is five feet long, has eleven. Encyc.

2. A sort of strawberry. [The name belongs to the strawberry.]

HAU-TEUR, (ho-tür', or ho-tür') n. [Fr.] Pride; haughtiness; haughty manner or spirit.

HAUT'ÇÖUT, (hö'çöot') n. [Fr.] High relish or taste.

2. High seasoning.

HAU'YNE, (how'in.) n. A mineral, named from the French mineralogist Haüy, occurring in grains or small masses, and also in groups of minute, shining crystals. Its color is blue, of various shades. It is found imbedded in volcanic rocks, basalt, clinkstone, &c. Cleveland.

HAVE, (hav.) v. t. [pret. and pp. HAD.] Indic. present, I have, thou hast, he has; we, ye, they have. [Sax. habban; Goth. haban; G. haben; D. hebben; Sw. hafva; Dan. have; L. habeo; Sp. haber; Port. haver; It. avere; Fr. avoir; W. hafva, to snatch or seize hastily, and happio, to happen. The Spanish haber unites have with happen a haber, to have or possess, to take, to happen or befall. The primary sense, then, is, to fall on, or to rush on and seize. See HAPPEN Class Gb, No. 74, 79.]

1. To possess; to hold in possession or power.

How many leaves have ye? Matt. xv.
 He that gathered much had nothing over.—Ex. xv.
 I have a Levite to my priest.—Judges xvii.

To have and to hold; terms in a deed of conveyance.

2. To possess, as something that is connected with, or belongs to, one.

Have ye a father? Have ye another brother?—Gen. xiii.
 Sheep that have no shepherd.—1 Kings xxii.

3. To marry; to take for a wife or husband.

In the resurrection, whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.—Matt. xxii.

4. To hold; to regard. Thus, to have in honor, is, to hold in esteem; to esteem; to honor.

To have in derision or contempt; to hold in derision or contempt; to deride; to despise.

5. To maintain; to hold in opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be the natural heat; sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts. Bacon.

6. To be urged by necessity or obligation; to be under necessity, or impelled by duty. I have to visit twenty patients every day. We have to strive against temptations. We have to encounter strong prejudices. The nation has to pay the interest of an immense debt.

7. To seize and hold; to catch. The hound has him. [The original, but now a vulgar use of the word.]

8. To contain. The work has many beauties and many faults.

9. To gain; to procure; to receive; to obtain; to purchase. I had this cloth very cheap. He has a guinea a month. He has high wages for his services.

10. To bring forth, to produce, as a child.

Had rather, denotes wish or preference.

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness.—Ps. lxxix.

Is not this phrase a corruption of would rather?

To have after; to pursue. [Not much used, nor elegant.] Shak.

To have away; to remove; to take away. Have at; to encounter; to assail; as, to have at him; to have at you. [Legitimate, but vulgar.]

To enter into competition with; to make trial with. Shak.

Have with you, is, have one with you; let us go together. Shak.

To have in; to contain.

To have on; to wear; to carry, as raiment or weapons.

He saw a man who had out on a wedding garment.—Matt. xxii.

To have out; to cause to depart. 2 Sam. xiii.

To have a care; to take care; to be on the guard, or to guard.

To have pleasure; to enjoy.

To have pain; to suffer.

To have sorrow; to be grieved or afflicted.

With would and should.

He would have; he desires to have, or he requires. He should have; he ought to have.

But the various uses of have in such phrases, and its uses as an auxiliary verb, are fully explained in grammars. As an auxiliary, it assists in forming the perfect tense; as, I have formed, thou hast formed, he hath or has formed, we have formed; and the prior-past tense; as, I had seen, thou hadst seen, he had seen.

[To have and to be. The distinction is marked in a beautiful sentiment of a German poet—Hast thou any thing? Share it with me, and I will pay thee the worth of it. Art thou any thing? O, then, let us exchange souls.]

HE, pronoun of the third person; nom. he; poss. his; obj. him. [Sax. mas, he; fen, heo; neut. hit, now contracted to it, Li, id, for him. It seems to be a contracted word, for the Li is hic, and the Saxon accusative is sometimes hig. In English it has no plural, but it has in Saxon hi, they.]

1. A pronoun, a substitute for the third person, masculine gender, representing the man or male person named before.

They desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. — Gen. iii.

Thou shalt fear Jehovah thy God; him shalt thou serve. — Deut. x.

2. It often has reference to a person that is named in the subsequent part of the sentence. He is the noun.

3. He is often used without reference to any particular person, and may be referred to any person indefinitely that answers the description. It is then synonymous with any man.

He that walketh with wise men shall be wise. — Prov. xiii.

4. He, when a substitute for man, in its general sense, expressing mankind, is of common gender, representing, like its antecedent, the whole human race.

My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh. — Gen. vi.

HEAT, n. [Sax. heat, het; D. hitte; G. hitze; Sw. hetta; R. hede; L. causis, for hæstus, or causis. See the verb.]

1. Heat, as a cause of sensation, is considered by some to be the result of the vibration of elastic media, by others as a subtle fluid, contained in a greater or less degree in all bodies. In modern chemistry, it is called caloric. It expands all bodies in different proportions, and is the cause of fluidity and evaporation. A certain degree of it is also essential to animal and vegetable life. Heat is latent, when so combined with other matter as not to be perceptible. It is sensible, when it is evolved and perceptible. Lavoisier. Encyc.

2. Heat, as a sensation, is the effect produced on the sentient organs of animals, by the passage of caloric, disengaged from surrounding bodies, to the organ. When we touch or approach a hot body, the caloric or heat passes from that body to our organs of feeling, and gives the sensation of heat. On the contrary, when we touch a cold body, the caloric passes from the hand to that body, and causes a sensation of cold. Lavoisier.

Note.—This theory of heat seems not to be fully settled.

3. Hot air; hot weather; as, the heat of the tropical climates.

4. Any accumulation or concentration of the matter of heat or caloric; as, the heat of the body; the heat of a furnace; a red heat; a white heat; a welding heat.

5. The greatest accumulation of heat, or the time of such accumulation; as, in the heat of the day.

6. The state of being once heated or hot. Give the iron another heat.

7. A violent action uninterrupted; a single effort. Many causes are required for refreshment between the heats. Dryden.

8. A single effort in running; a course at a race. Hector won at the first heat.

9. Redness of the face; flush. Addison.

10. Animal excitement; violent action or agitation of the system. The body is all in a heat.

11. Utmost violence; rage; vehemence; as, the heat of battle.

12. Violence; ardor; as, the heat of party.

13. Agitation of mind; inflammation or excitement; exasperation; as, the heat of passion.

14. Ardor; fervency; animation in thought or discourse.

With all the strength and heat of eloquence. Addison.

HEAT, v. t. [Sax. hætan, to call, to order, command, or promise; gæhtan, to call, to promise, to grow warm; hætan, to heat, to command, to call; gæhtan, to promise; hætan, order, command; hætan, a vow; hætan, to vow; onhætan, to heat, to inflame; hætan, to heat, to be hot, to boil, to hate; hætan, heat, heat, hat, hot; hætan, hatred, hate; L. causis, causis, for hæstus; Goth. hætan, to hate; hætan, gæhtan, to call, to command, to vow or promise; G. heiss, hot; heissen, to call; heizen, to heat; hitze, heat, ardor, vehemence; heissen, command; verheissen, to promise; hætan, hætan, to hate; D. heet, hot, anger, hasty; hitte, heat, hætan, to heat, to name or call, to be called, to command; hætan, hætan, to hate; verhitten, to inflame; Sw. het, hot; hetta, heat, passion; hetta, to be hot, to glow; hetta, to be called or named; het, hate, hatred; hætan, to hate; Dan. hæd, hot; hæde, heat, ardor; hæder, to heat, to be called or named; hæd, hate; hæder, to hate. With these words coincides the L. causis, for hæstus, heat, tide, Gr. causis, to burn, and the English hæstus and hoist are probably of the same family. The primary and literal sense of all these words is, to stir, to rouse, to raise, to agitate, from the action of driving, urging, stimulating, whence Sw. hæsta, Dan. hæster, to excite, to set on dogs. See Class Gd, No. 39, and others. It may be further added, that in W. causis is hatred, a causis, from the sense of separating; causis, to hate; and if this is of the same family, it unites causis with the foregoing words. In these words we see the sense of repulsion.]

1. To make hot; to communicate heat to, or cause to be hot; as, to heat an oven or a furnace; to heat iron.

2. To make feverish; as, to heat the blood.

1. A pagan; a Gentile; one who worships idols, or is unacquainted with the true God. In the Scriptures, the word seems to comprehend all nations except the Jews or Israelites, as they were all strangers to the true religion, and all addicted to idolatry. The word may now be applied, perhaps, to all nations, except to Christians and Mohammedans.

Heathen, without the plural termination, is used plurally or collectively, for Gentiles or heathen nations.

Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance. — Ps. li.

Heathen, however, has a plural, expressing two or more individuals.

If men have reason to be heathens in Japan. Locke.

2. To pant; to breathe with labor or pain; as, he heaves for breath. Dryden.

3. To keck; to make an effort to vomit.

4. To rise in billows, as the sea; to swell.

5. To rise; to be lifted; as, a ship heaves.

6. To rise or swell, as the earth at the breaking up of frost.

To heave in sight; to appear; to make its first appearance; as, a ship at sea, or as a distant object approaching or being approached.

We observe that this verb has often the sense of raising or rising in an arch or circular form, as in throwing aid in distention, and from this sense is derived its application to the apparent arch over our heads, heaven.

HEAVY, (heev), n. A rising or swell; an exertion or effort upward.

None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle or swallow them. Dryden.

2. A rising swell, or distention, as of the breast. These profound heaves. Shak.

HEIR, (āre,) n. [Norm. hier, here, Arm heir, haer; Sw. heredero; Port. herdeiro; Fr. heritier; It. erede;

L. haeres, haerēdis, from the verb, Eth. ወላኃ waras,

Heb. יורש, Ar. وراثت warata, to become an heir, to inherit. The primary sense is, to seize, or to rush on and take, or to expel and dispossess others, and take their property, according to the practice of ruda nations. We observe, in the Hebrew and Ethiopic, the last consonant is a sibilant, as in the Latin nominative; but the oblique cases in the Latin correspond with the Arabic word, whose final consonant is a dental. This word may be connected with the Gr. αἵρω, to take. See Class Rd, No. 51, 52, 68.]

1. The man who succeeds, or is to succeed, another in the possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, by descent; the man on whom the law casts an estate of inheritance by the death of the ancestor or former possessor; or the man in whom the title to an estate of inheritance is vested by the operation of law, on the death of a former owner.

We give the title to a person who is to inherit after the death of an ancestor, and during his life, as well as to the person who has actually come into possession. A man's children are his heirs. In most monarchies, the king's eldest son is heir to the throne; and a nobleman's eldest son is heir to his title.

Lo, one born in my house is my heir. — Gen. xv.

2. One who inherits or takes from an ancestor. The son is often heir to the disease or to the miseries of the father.

3. One who succeeds to the estate of a former possessor. Jer. xlix. Mic. l.

4. One who is entitled to possess. In Scripture, saints are called heirs of the promise, heirs of righteousness, heirs of salvation, &c., by virtue of the death of Christ, or of God's gracious promises. Rom. viii.

HERE'A-BOUT, [comp. here and about.] About

HERE'A-BOUTS, [this place.] Addison.

HEREAFT'ER, [comp. here and after.] In time to come; in some future time.

2. In a future state.

HEREAFT'ER, n. A future state.

'Tis Heaven itself that points out a hereafter. Addison.

HERE-AT', [comp. here and at.] At this. He was offended hereat, that is, at this saying, this fact, &c.

HERE-BY', [comp. here and by.] By this.

Hereby we became acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE-IN', [comp. here and in.] In this.

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit. — John xv.

HERE-IN'TO, [comp. here and into.] Into this.

HERE-OF', (heer-off'), [comp. here and of.] Of this; from this.

Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant. Shak.

HERE-ON', [comp. here and on.] On this. Eneye.

HERE-OUT', [comp. here and out.] Out of this place.

HERE-TO', [comp. here and unto or to.] To this.

HERE-UN-TO', [comp. here and unto or to.] To this.

HERE-TO-FORE', [comp. here and tofore.] In times before the present; formerly.

HERE-UP-ON', [comp. here and upon.] On this.

HERE-WITH', [comp. here and with.] With this.

Most of the compounds, of here and a preposition, are obsolete or obsolescent, or at least are deemed inelegant. But hereafter and heretofore are in elegant use. Herein and hereby are frequently used in the present version of the Scriptures, and ought not, perhaps, to be discarded. Indeed, some of these words seem to be almost indispensable in technical law language.

HERED'IT-A-BLE, a. [from the root of heir; L. hereditas.] That may be inherited. [Not much used.] [See INHERITABLE.] Locke.

HERED'IT-A-BLY, adv. By inheritance; by right of descent.

HER-ES-I-OG/RA-PHY, n. A treatise on heresy.

HER-ES-Y, n. [Gr. aisios, from aipeo, to take, to hold; L. heresis; Fr. heresie.]

1. A fundamental error in religion, or an error of opinion respecting some fundamental doctrine of religion. But in countries where there is an established church, an opinion is deemed heresy when it differs from that of the church. The Scriptures being the standard of faith, any opinion that is repugnant to its doctrines is heresy; but as men differ in the interpretation of Scripture, an opinion deemed heretical by one body of Christians may be deemed orthodox by another. In Scripture and primitive usage, heresy meant merely sect, party, or the doctrines of a sect, as we now use denomination or persuasion, implying no reproach.

2. Heresy, in law, is an offense against Christianity, consisting in a denial of some of its essential doctrines, publicly avowed, and obstinately maintained. Blackstone.

3. An untenable or unsound opinion or doctrine in politics. Swift.

HER-ET-IC, n. [Gr. aisiarios; It. eretico; Fr. heretique.]

1. A person under any religion, but particularly the Christian, who holds and teaches opinions repugnant to the established faith, or that which is made the standard of orthodoxy. In strictness, among Christians, a person who holds and avows religious opinions contrary to the doctrines of Scripture, the only rule of faith and practice.

2. Any one who maintains erroneous opinions. Shak.

Among our Saxon ancestors, the leader or commander of an army, or the commander of the militia in a county or district. This officer was elected by the people in folk-mote.

HER-I-OT, n. [Sax. heretig; here, army, and geat, tribute, supply, from geatas, to flow, to render.]

In English law, a tribute or fine payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner, landholder, or vassal. Originally, this tribute consisted of military furniture, or of horses and arms, as appears by the laws of Canute, c. 69. But as defined by modern writers, a heriot is a customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land, or a render of the best beast, or other movables, to the lord, on the death of the tenant. Heriots were of two sorts; heriot service, which was due by reservation in a grant or lease of lands; and heriot custom, which depended solely on immemorial usage. Wilkins, Spelman, Blackstone.

HER-I-OT-A-BLE, a. Subject to the payment of a heriot. Burn.

HER-I-S-ON, n. [Fr., a hedgehog, from herisson, to bristle, to stand out as hair.]

HIS, (hiz.) pron. possessive of Hr. [Sax. gen. hys, and hysc, male.]

1. Of him. Thus in Alfred's Orosius, "Suns for his ege ne dorstan." Some for fear of him durst not; literally, for his eye, for awe of him. Lib. 3, 8. In this instance, his does not express what belongs to the antecedent of his, (Philip), but the fear which others entertained of him.

2. The present use of his is as a pronominal adjective, in any case indifferently, corresponding to the L. suus. Thus, tell John his papers are ready. I will deliver his papers to his messenger. He may take his son's books. When the noun is omitted, his stands as its substitute, either in the nominative or objective case. Tell John this book is his. He may take mine, and I will take his.

3. His was formerly used for its, but improperly, and the use has ceased.

4. It was formerly used as a sign of the possessive. The man his ground, for the man's ground. This use has also ceased.

Sp. and Port. historia; It. storia; Fr. histoire; Ir. sdair, stair; Sax. stair, ster, probably from the Latin; W. ystori, history, matter of record, what is of concern or in mind, from ystori, an object of care or concern, from dau, to care, to be concerned, to regard.]

The Greek Ιστοριω signifies knowing, learned, and Ιστοριω is rendered to inquire, to explore, to learn by inspection or inquiry. This would seem to be connected with W. ystyriaw, to consider, to regard or take notice. HISTOR and STOR are the same word differently written.]

1. An account of facts, particularly of facts respecting nations or states; a narration of events in the order in which they happened, with their causes and effects. History differs from annals. Annals relate simply the facts and events of each year, in strict chronological order, without any observations of the annalist. History regards less strictly the arrangement of events under each year, and admits the observations of the writer. This distinction, however, is not always regarded with strictness.

History is of different kinds, or treats of different subjects; as, a history of government, or political history; history of the Christian church, or ecclesiastical history; history of war and conquests, or military history; history of law; history of commerce; history of the crusades, &c. In these and similar examples, history is written narrative or relation. What is the history of nations, but a narrative of the follies, crimes, and miseries of man?

2. Narration; verbal relation of facts or events; story. We listen with pleasure to the soldier or the seaman, giving a history of his adventures.

What histories of toil could I declare? Pope.

HUMMUS, n. pl. [Persian.] Baths or pieces for sweating.

HUMOR, n. [L. from humeco, to be moist; Sans. ama, moist. The pronunciation yumor is odiously vulgar.]
1. Moisture; but the word is chiefly used to express the moisture or fluids of animal bodies; as, the humors of the eye. But more generally by the word is used to express a fluid in its morbid or vitiated state. Hence, in popular speech, we often hear it said, the blood is full of humors. But the expression is not technical, nor correct.
Aqueous humor of the eye: a transparent fluid, occupying the space between the crystalline lens and the cornea, both before and behind the pupil.
Crystalline humor or lens: a small, transparent, solid body, of a softish consistence, occupying a middle position in the eye, between the aqueous and vitreous humors, and directly behind the pupil. It is of a lenticular form, or with double convex surfaces, and is the principal instrument in refracting the rays of light, so as to form an image on the retina.
Vitreous humor of the eye: a fluid contained in the minute cells of a transparent membrane, occupying the greater part of the cavity of the eye, and all the space between the crystalline and the retina. Fistler.

2. A disease of the skin; cutaneous eruptions. Fiddler.
3. Turn of mind; temper; disposition, or rather a peculiarity of disposition often temporary, so called because the temper of mind has been supposed to depend on the fluids of the body. Hence we say, good humor; melancholy humor; peevish humor. Such humors, when temporary, we call frisks, whims, caprice. Thus a person characterized by good nature may have a fit of ill humor; and an ill-natured person may have a fit of good humor. So we say, it was the humor of the man at the time; it was the humor of the multitude.
4. That quality of the imagination which gives to ideas a wild or fantastic turn, and tends to excite laughter or mirth by ludicrous images or representations. Humor is less poignant and brilliant than wit; hence it is always agreeable. Wit, directed against folly, often offends by its severity; humor makes a man ashamed of his follies, without exciting his resentment. Humor may be employed solely to raise mirth and render conversation pleasant, or it may contain a delicate kind of satire.
5. Petulance; peevishness; better expressed by ill humor.
Is my friend all perfection? has he not humors to be endured? South.

6. A trick; a practice or habit.
I like not the humor of lying. Shak.

HUMOR, v. t. To gratify by yielding to particular inclination, humor, wish, or desire; to indulge by compliance. We sometimes humor children to their injury or ruin. The sick, the infirm, and the aged often require to be humored.
2. To suit; to indulge; to favor by imposing no restraint, and rather contributing to promote by occasional aids. We say, an actor humors his part, or the piece.
It is my part to invent, and that of the musicians to humor that invention. Dryden.

HUMORAL, a. Pertaining to, or proceeding from, the humors; as, a humoral fever. Harvey.
Humoral pathology: that pathology, or doctrine of the nature of diseases, which attributes all morbid phenomena to the disordered condition of the fluids or humors. Cyc.

HUMORALISM, n. State of being humoral. Caldwell.

2. The doctrine that diseases have their seat in the humors.

HUMORALIST, n. One who favors the humoral pathology.

HUMORED, pp. Indulged; favored.

HUMORING, ppr. Indulging a particular wish or propensity; favoring; contributing to aid by falling into a design or course.

HUMORISM, n. The state of the humors.

HUMORIST, n. One who conducts himself by his own inclination, or bent of mind; one who gratifies his own humor.
The humorist is one that is greatly pleased or greatly displeased with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.
2. One that indulges humor in speaking or writing; one who has a playful fancy or genius. [See Humor, No. 4.]
3. One who has odd conceits; also, a wag; a droll. Hull, Bodley.

HUMOR-LESS, a. Destitute of humor.
HUMOR-OUS, a. Containing humor; full of wild or fanciful images; adapted to excite laughter; jocular; as, a humorous essay; a humorous story.
 2. Having the power to speak or write in the style of humor; fanciful; playful; exciting laughter; as, a humorous man or author.
 3. Subject to be governed by humor or caprice; irregular; capricious; whimsical.

I am known to be a humorous politician. Shak.
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

4. Moist; humid. [Not in use.] Dryden.
HUMOR-OUS-LV, adv. With a wild or grotesque combination of ideas; in a manner to excite laughter or mirth; pleasantly; jocosely. Addison describes humorously the manual exercise of ladies' fans.

2. Capriciously; whimsically; in conformity with one's humor.
We resolve by halves, rashly and humorously. Calamy.

HUMOR-OUS-NESS, n. The state or quality of being humorous; oddness of conceit; jocularly.
 2. Fickleness; capriciousness.

3. Peevishness; petulance. Goodman.
HUMOR-SOME, (-sum), a. Peevish; petulant; influenced by the humor of the moment.

HUNCH/ED, (huncht), pp. Pushed or thrust with the fist or elbow.
HUNCH/ING, pp. Pushing with the fist or elbow.

HUNDRED, a. [Sax. hund or hundred; Goth. hund; D. honderd; G. hundert; Sw. hundra; Dan. hundre, hundred; L. centum; W. cant, a circle, the hoop of a wheel, the rim of any thing, a complete circle or series, a hundred; Corn. casz; Arm. cant; Ir. ceantar. Lye, in his Saxon and Gothic Dictionary, suggests that this word hund is a mere termination of the Gothic word for ten; tainus-taihund, ten times ten. But this can not be true, for the word is found in the Celtic as well as Gothic dialects, and in the Arabic 500 hand, Class Gn, No. 63; at least, this is probably the same word. The Welsh language exhibits the true sense of the word, which is a circle, a complete series. Hence W. cantref, a division of a county, or circuit, a canton, a hundred. (See Cantref.) The word signifies a circuit, and the sense of hundred is secondary. The centuria of the Romans, and the hundred, a division of a county in England, might have been merely a division, and not an exact hundred in number.]

Denoting the product of ten multiplied by ten, or the number of ten times ten; as, a hundred men.

HUNDRED, n. A collection, body, or sum, consisting of ten times ten individuals or units; the number 100.

2. A division or part of a county in England, supposed to have originally contained a hundred families, or a hundred warriors, or a hundred manors.

[But as the word denotes primarily a circuit or division, it is not certain that Alfred's divisions had any reference to that number.]

HUNDRED-COURT, n. In England, a court held for all the inhabitants of a hundred. Blackstone.

HUNDRED-ER, n. In England, a man who may be of a jury in any controversy respecting land within the hundred to which he belongs.

2. One having the jurisdiction of a hundred.
HUNDRETH, a. The ordinal of a hundred.

HUNG, pret. and pp. of HANG.
HUNG-BEEF, a. The fleshy part of beef slightly salted and hung up to dry; dried beef.

HUNGARY-WATER, a. A distilled water prepared from the tops of flowers of rosemary, so called from a queen of Hungary, for whose use it was first made. Encyc.

HUNGER, n. [Sax. hunger, G. Dan. and Sw. hunger, D. hongere, Goth. kuhruv, hunger; Sax. hungrian, hingrian, Goth. huggryan, to hunger. It appears from the Gothic that n is not radical; the root, then, is Hg.]

1. An uneasy sensation occasioned by the want of food; a craving of food by the stomach; craving appetite. Hunger is not merely want of food, for persons when sick may abstain long from eating without hunger or an appetite for food. Hunger, therefore, is the pain or uneasiness of the stomach of a healthy person, when too long destitute of food.

2. Any strong or eager desire.

For hunger of thy gold I die. Dryden.

HUNGER, v. i. To feel the pain or uneasiness which is occasioned by long abstinence from food; to crave food.

1. A chest or box; a corn chest or bin; a case for rabbits. Mortimer.

2. A rat-trap.

HUTCH, v. t. To hoard, as in a chest. Milton.

HUTCH-ED, (hutcht), pp. Deposited in a chest.

HUTCH-ING, ppr. Depositing in a hutch.

HUTCH-IN-SO-NI-AN, n. A follower of the opinions of John Hutchinson, of Yorkshire, England.

HUT-TED, pp. Lodged in huts. Mitford.

HUT-TING, ppr. Placing in huts; taking lodgings in huts.

HUX, v. t. To fish for pike with hooks and lines fastened to floating bladders. Eneyd.

HUZZ, v. i. To huzz. [Not in use.] Barrett.

HUZZ-ZÁ, v. i. A shout of joy. The word chiefly used is our native word, Hууаааа, which see.

HUZZ-ZÁ, v. i. To utter a loud shout of joy, or an acclamation in joy or praise.

HYD-ZA', v. t. To receive or attend with shouts of joy. Addison HYD-ZA'ED, (hyd-zad') pp Uttered in shouts of joy.

HYD-ZA'ING, ppr Shouting with joy; receiving with shouts of joy.

HYD-ZA'ING, n. A shouting with joy; and a receiving with shouts of joy.

HYD-A-CINTH, n. [Hyacinthus; Gr. ιακινθος].

- In botany, the popular name of some species of a genus of plants. The Oriental hyacinth has a large, purplish, bulbous root, from which spring several narrow, erect leaves; the flower stalk is upright and succulent, and adorned with many bell-shaped flowers, united in a large pyramidal spike, of different colors in the varieties. Encyc.
- In mineralogy, a red variety of zircon, sometimes used as a gem. [See Zircon]. Dana

HYD-A-CINTHINE, a. Made of hyacinth; consisting of hyacinth; resembling hyacinth. Milton

HYD-A-DES, n. pl. [Gr. υαδες, from υα, to rain; υερος, HYDRA'S, } rain.]

In astronomy, a cluster of five stars in the Bull's face, supposed by the ancients to bring rain. Brande

HYD'A-LINE, a. [Gr. υαλινος, from υαλος, glass.] Glassy; resembling glass; consisting of glass.

HYD'A-LITE, n. [Gr. υαλος.] Milton

A pellucid variety of opal, looking like colorless gum or resin. It is also called Muller's glass. Dana

HYD'A-LOID, a. [Gr. υαλος and ειδος.]

A term applied to transparent membranes, especially that which invests the vitreous humor of the eye.

HYD-BERNA-CLE, } See HIBERNACLE, HIBERNATE, HYD-BER-NATE, }
HYD-BER-NATION, } HIBERNATION.

HYD-BRID, or HYB'RID, n. [Gr. υβρις, injury, force, rape; L. hybrida.]

A mongrel; an animal or plant produced from the mixture of two species. Lee. Martyn

HYB'RID, a. Mongrel; produced from the HYB'RID-OUS, } mixture of two species.

HYB'RID-ISM, } n. State of being the offspring of HYB'RID-ITY, } two species.

HYD'DAGE, n. In law, a tax on lands, at a certain rate by the hide. Blackstone

HYD'A-TID, n. An intestinal worm of the genus Hydatid, which see.

HYD'A-TIS, n. [Gr. υδατις, from υδωρ, water.]

In natural history, the name of a genus of Entozoa, or intestinal worms, found in various textures and cavities of the human body; indeed in all, (as is said,) except the cavity of the alimentary canal.

HYD'RA, n. [L. hydra; Gr. υδρα, from υδωρ, water.]

- A water serpent. In fabulous history, a serpent or monster in the lake or marsh of Lerna, in Peloponnesus, represented as having many heads, one of which, being cut off, was immediately succeeded by another, unless the wound was cauterized. Hercules killed this monster by applying firebrands to the wounds, as he cut off the heads. Hence we give the name to a multitude of evils, or to a cause of multifarious evils.
- The name of a genus of minute fresh-water polyps. Dana
- A southern constellation of great length. P. Cyc.

HYD-DRAC'ID, (-dras'id), n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and ακιδ.]

An acid whose base is hydrogen.

HYD'RA-GOGUE, (hyd'ra-gog), n. [υδραγωγος; υδωρ, water, and αγωγη, a leading or drawing, from αγω, to lead or drive.]

A medicine that occasions a discharge of watery humors.

In general, the stronger cathartics are hydragogues. Quincy. Encyc.

HYD-RAN'GE-A, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and αγγειον, a vessel.]

- A plant which grows in the water, and bears a beautiful flower. Its capsule has been compared to a cup. De Theis. Gloss. Botan.
- The name of a genus of plants.

HYD'DRANT, n. [Gr. υδραινω, to irrigate, from υδωρ, water.]

A pipe or machine with suitable valves and a spout by which water is raised and discharged from the main conduit of an aqueduct.

HYD-DRA'GIL-LITE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and αργιλλος, clay.]

A mineral, called also Wavellite.

HYD-DRA'GO-CHLO'RID, n. A compound bicloride of mercury (corrosive sublimate) with another chlorid. Brande

HYD-DRA'GY-RUM, n. [Gr. υδωρ and αργυριον.] Quicksilver.

HYD'DRATE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water.]

In chemistry, a compound, in definite proportions, of a metallic oxyd with water. Ure

A hydrate is a substance which has formed so intimate a union with water as to solidify it, and render it a component part. Slaked lime is a hydrate of lime. Parke

HYD'DRA-TED, a. Formed into a hydrate.

HYD-DRAUL'IC, a. [Fr. hydraulique; L. hydraul-

HYD-DRAUL'IC-AL, } icinus; Gr. υδραυλις, an instrument of music played by water; υδωρ, water, and αυλος, a pipe.]

Pertaining to hydraulics, or to fluids in motion.

Hydraulic lime; a species of lime which, when formed into mortar, hardens in water; used for cementing under water. Journal of Science

HYD-DRAUL'IC PRESS. See HYDROSTATIC PRESS.

HYD-DRAUL'IC RAM. See RAM.

HYD-DRAUL'IC-ON, n. An ancient musical instrument acted upon by water; a water organ.

HYD-DRAUL'ICS, n. That branch of the science of hydrodynamics which treats of fluids considered as in motion. Ed. Encyc.

HYD-DREN-TER'O-CELE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, εντερον, intestine, and κηλη, a tumor.]

A hernial tumor, whose contents are intestine, with the addition of water.

HYD'RIO-AD, n. In mythology, the name of a kind of water nymphs.

HYD'RIO-O-DATE, n. A supposed salt formed by the hydrolic acid with a base. More correctly, HYDROB-DRATE. De Claubry

HYD-RI-OD'IC, a. [Hydrogen and iodine.] A term denoting a peculiar acid, produced by the combination of hydrogen and iodine. Better, HYDROIODIC.

HYD-RO-BR'OMIC, a. Composed of hydrogen and bromine. More correctly, HYDROBROMIC.

HYD-RO-CAR'BOXY, n. A term applied by chemists to compounds of hydrogen and carbon. Brande

HYD-RO-CAR'BO-NATE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, or rather hydrogen, and L. carbo, a coal.]

Carbureted hydrogen gas, or heavy inflammable air. Aikin

HYD-RO-CAR'BU-RET, n. Carbureted hydrogen. Henry

HYD'RO-CELE, n. [Gr. υδροκηλη; υδωρ, water, and κηλη, a tumor.]

A dropsy of the vaginal tunica of the spermatie cord.

HYD-RO-CEPH'A-LUS, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and κεφαλη, the head.]

Dropsy of the head.

HYD-RO-CHLO'RATE, n. A supposed compound of hydrochloric acid and a base; formerly called a muriate. More correctly, CHLOROHYDRATE. The hydrochlorates are really chlorids. Journal of Science

HYD-RO-CHLO'RIC, a. [Hydrogen and chloric.]

Hydrochloric acid is muriatic acid, a compound of chlorine and hydrogen gas. More correctly, CHLORO-HYDRIC. Brande

HYD-RO-CY'A-NATE, n. A supposed compound of hydrocyanic acid with a base. More correctly, CYANO-HYDRATE.

A term applied to an acid whose base is hydrogen, and its acidifying principle cyanogen; more correctly, CYANOHYDRIC. This acid is one of four or five different compounds that have been called prussic acid.

HYD-RO-DY-NAM'IC, a. [υδωρ, water, and δυναμις, power, force.]

Pertaining to the force or pressure of water.

HYD-RO-DY-NAM'ICS, n. That branch of natural philosophy which treats of the properties and relations of water and other fluids, whether in motion or at rest. It comprehends both hydrostatics and hydraulics. Ed. Encyc.

HYD-RO-FLO'ATE, n. A supposed compound of hydrofluoric acid and a base. Better, FLUOHYDRATE.

HYD-RO-FLU'OR'IC, a. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and φωσφ.]

Consisting of fluorin and hydrogen. The hydrofluoric acid is obtained by distilling a mixture of one part of the purest fluor spar in fine powder, with two of sulphuric acid. More correctly, FLUOHYDRIC. Brande

HYD'RO-GEN, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and γενναω, to generate; so called as being considered the generator of water.]

In chemistry, a gas which constitutes one of the elements of water, of which it constitutes one ninth part, and oxygen eight ninths. Hydrogen gas is an aeriform fluid, the lightest hitherto known, and, though extremely inflammable itself, it extinguishes burning bodies, and is fatal to animal life. Its specific gravity is 0.0694, that of air being 1.00. In consequence of its extreme lightness, it is employed for filling balloons. Lavoisier. Brande

HYD'RO-GEN-ATE, v. t. To combine hydrogen with any thing.

HYD'RO-GEN-A-TED, pp. or a. In combination with hydrogen.

HYD'RO-GEN-IZE, v. t. To combine with hydrogen.

HYD'RO-GEN-IZ-ED, pp. Combined with hydrogen.

HYD'RO-GEN-IZ'ING, ppr. Combining with hydrogen.

HYDROG'E-NOUS, a. Pertaining to hydrogen.

HYD-ROG'RA-PHER, n. [See HYDROGRAPHY.] One who draws maps of the sea, lakes, or other waters, with the adjacent shores; one who describes the sea or other waters. Boyle

HYD-RO-GRAPH'IC, } a. Relating to or contain-HYD-RO-GRAPH'IC-AL, } ing a description of the sea, sea-coast, isles, shoals, depth of water, &c., or of a lake.

HYD-ROG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and γραφω, to describe; γραφω, description.]

The art of measuring and describing the sea, lakes, rivers, and other waters; or the art of forming charts, exhibiting a representation of the sea-coast, gulfs, bays, isles, promontories, channels, soundings, &c.

HYD-ROG'U-RET, n. A compound of hydrogen with a base; a hydruret. [Little used.]

HYD'RO-LITE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and λιθος, a stone.]

A mineral whose crystals are described as six-sided prisms, terminated by low, six-sided pyramids, with truncated summits. Cleaveland

HYD-RO-LOG'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to hydrology.

HYD-RO-L'O-GY, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and λογος, discourse.]

The science of water, its properties, phenomena, and laws.

HYD'RO-MAN-CY, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and μαντια, divination.]

A method of divination or prediction of events by water, invented, according to Varro, by the Persians, and practiced by the Romans. Encyc.

HYD-RO-MANT'IC, a. Pertaining to divination by water.

HYD'RO-MEL, n. [Fr., from Gr. υδωρ, water, and μελι, honey.]

A liquor consisting of honey diluted in water. Before fermentation, it is called simple hydromel; after fermentation, it is called vinous hydromel, or mead.

HYD-RO-M'E-TER, n. [See HYDROMETER.] An instrument for determining the specific gravities of liquids, and thence the strength of spirituous liquors, these being inversely as their specific gravities. Brande

HYD-RO-MET'RIC, } a. Pertaining to a hydrom-HYD-RO-MET'RIC-AL, } eter, or to the determina-of the specific gravity of fluids.

- Made by a hydrometer.

HYD-RO-M'E-TRY, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and μετρον, measure.]

The art of determining the specific gravity of liquids, and thence the strength of spirituous liquors.

HYD-RO-PATH'IC, a. Pertaining to hydrotherapy.

HYD-RO-P'ATHIST, n. One who practices hydrotherapy.

HYD'RO-P'ATHY, n. [Gr. υδωρ and παθος.]

The water-cure, a mode of treating diseases, by the copious and frequent use of pure water, both internally and externally.

HYD'RO-PHANE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and φανω, to show.]

In mineralogy, a variety of opal made transparent by immersion in water. Kirwan

HYD-ROPI'A-NOUS, a. Made transparent by immersion in water. Kirwan

HYD-DROPIE-DES, n. pl. [Gr. υδωρ and οφτις.]

A term applied to that section of the Ophidians which includes the water-snake. Kirwan

HYD-RO-PHO'BI-A, } n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and φο- HYD'RO-PHO-BY, } βειουμι, to fear.]

A preternatural dread of water; a symptom of insane madness, or the disease itself, which is thus denominated. This dread of water sometimes takes place in violent inflammations of the stomach, and in hysterical fits. Encyc.

HYD-RO-PHOB'IC, a. Pertaining to a dread of water, or insane madness. Med. Repos.

HYD'RO-PH'ETE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and φρονω, a plant.]

An aquatic plant. Bell

HYD-ROPH'IC, } a. [L. hydroph; Gr. υδρωφ, drop-HYD'ROPH'IC-AL, } sy, υδωρ, water.]

- Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water.
- Containing water; caused by extravasated water; as, a hydroptic swelling.
- Resembling dropsy.

Every lust is a kind of hydroptic distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson

HYD-RO-PNEU-MAT'IC, (-nu-mat'ik), a. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and πνευματικός, inflated, from πνευμα, breath, spirit.]

An epithet given to a vessel of water used to collect gases in chemical experiments. Silliman

HYD'ROPSY. See DROPSY.

HYD'RO-SALT, n. A salt supposed to be formed by a hydracid and a base.

HYD'RO-SCOPE, n. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and σκοπεω, to view.]

A kind of water-clock, or instrument used anciently for measuring time, consisting of a cylindrical tube, conical at the bottom, perforated at the vertex, and the whole tube graduated. Encyc.

HYD-RO-STAT'IC, } a. [Gr. υδωρ, water, and HYD-RO-STAT'IC-AL, } στατικός, static, standing, or setting.]

Relating to the science of weighing fluids, or hydrostatics

HY-OR-THO-DOX-Y, n. Orthodoxy indulged to excess. Dick.

HY-OR-XYD, n. [Gr. ὑπερ and oxyd.] That which has an excess of oxygen; a super-oxyd.

HY-OR-XY-GEN-A-TED, a. [Gr. ὑπερ, beyond, HY-OR-XY-GEN-I-Z-ED, } and oxygenated, or oxygenized.]

Super-saturated with oxygen. [Obs.]

HY-OR-XY-MO-RI-ATE, n. The same as CHLORATE. [Obs.]

HY-OR-XY-MU-RI-ATIC, a. The hyperoxymuriatic acid is the chloric acid. [Obs.]

HY-OR-XY-IC-AL, a. Supernatural.

HY-OR-SAR-CO-SIS, n. [Gr. ὑπερ, beyond, and σαξ, flesh.] Proud or luscious flesh.

HY-OR-STENE, n. [So named from its difficult transference.] Fragibility. Gr. ὑπερ and σθενος.

A mineral, Labrador hornblende, or schillerspar. Its color is between grayish and greenish-black, but nearly copper-red on the cleavage. Krievan. Phillips.

It is a foliated variety of either augite or hornblende. Dana.

HY-OR-STHEN-IC, a. Composed of or containing hypersthene.

HY-OR-THYR-I-ON, n. [Gr. ὑπερ and θυριον, a door.]

That part of the architrave, in building, which is over a door or window.

HY-OR-TROPH-IC, a. Producing or tending to produce hypertrophy.

HY-OR-TROPH-IC-AL, a. Producing hypertrophy.

HY-OR-TRO-PHY, n. [Gr. ὑπερ and τροφη.]

In medicine, the enlargement of a part of the body from excess of nourishment. P. Cyc.

HY-PHEN, n. [Gr. ὑπερ, under one, or to one.]

A mark or short line made between two words to show that they form a compound word, or are to be connected; as in pre-occupied; five-leaved; ink-stand. In writing and printing, the hyphen is used to connect the syllables of a divided word, and is placed after the syllable that closes a line, denoting the connection of that syllable, or part of a word, with the first syllable of the next line.

HY-PO-TIC, a. [Gr. ὑπνος, sleep.]

Having the quality of producing sleep; tending to produce sleep; soporific. Brown.

HY-PO-TIC-AL, a. A medicine that produces or tends to produce sleep; an opiate; a soporific.

HY-PO-TIC-AL-AL, a. A Greek preposition, ὑπο, under, beneath; used in composition. Thus, hyposulphuric acid is an acid containing less oxygen than sulphuric acid.

HY-PO-TIC-AL-AL, a. [Gr. ὑπο, under, and βαλλω, to cast.]

In rhetoric, a figure in which several things are mentioned that seem to make against the argument, or in favor of the opposite side, and each of them is refuted in order. Encyc.

HY-PO-TIC-AL-AL, n. [Gr. ὑποκαυστιν; ὑπο and καιω, to burn.]

1. Among the Greeks and Romans, a subterranean place where was a furnace to heat baths.

2. Among the moderns, the place where a fire is kept to warm a stove or a hearth. Encyc.

HY-PO-TIC-AL-AL, n. pl. See HYPOCHONDRIAS.

HY-PO-TIC-AL-AL, n. [Gr., from ὑπο and χωνδρις, a cartilage.]

1. In anatomy, the sides of the belly under the cartilages of the spinous ribs; the spaces on each side of the epigastric region. Coxe. Encyc.

2. Hypochondriac complaints, being a combination of melancholia and dyspepsia, consisting in gloomy ideas of life, dejected spirits, and indisposition to activity. The true name of this disease is HYPOCHONDRIASIS. Tatler.

HY-PO-TIC-AL-AL, a. Pertaining to the hypochondria, or the parts of the body so called; as, this hypochondriac region.

HY-PO-SUL-PHIC, a. Hyposulphuric acid is an acid combination of sulphur and oxygen, intermediate between sulphurous and sulphuric acid. Ure.

HY-PO-SUL-PHUR-OUS, a. Hyposulphurous acid is an acid containing less oxygen than sulphurous acid. This acid is known only in combination with salifiable bases. Ure. Henry.

HY-PO-TET-E-NOSE, a. [Gr. ὑποτεταυνοσα, part. of ὑποτετω, to subvert.]

In geometry, the subtense or longest side of a right-angled triangle, or the line that subtends the right angle. Encyc.

HY-PO-THE-CATE, v. l. [L. hypotheca, a pledge, Gr. ὑποθηκη, from ὑποτιθημι, to put under, to suppose.]

1. To pledge, and, properly, to pledge the keel of a ship, that is, the ship itself, as security for the repayment of money borrowed to carry on a voyage. In this case, the lender hazards the loss of his money by the loss of the ship; but if the ship returns safe, he receives his principal, with the premium or interest agreed on, though it may exceed the legal rate of interest. Blackstone. Park.

2. To pledge, in general, for the security of a creditor, as goods, stocks, &c. Park.

HY-PO-THE-CATE-TED, pp. Pledged as security for money borrowed.

HY-PO-THE-CATE-TING, ppr. Pledging as security.

HY-PO-THE-CATE-TION, n. The act of pledging, as a security for debt, without parting with the immediate possession, differing in this last particular from the simple pledge. Brande.

HYSSON, n. A species of green tea from China.

HYSSOP, (hi'zip or his'sup), n. [L. hyssopus; Gr. ὑσσοπος. It would be well to write this word HYSSOP.]

A plant, Hyssopus officinalis. The leaves have an aromatic smell, and a warm, pungent taste. Something called hyssop was much used by the Jews in purifications. Encyc.

HYST-ERIC, a. [Fr. hysterique; Gr. ὑστερικος, from ὑστερα, the womb.]

Disordered in the region of the womb; troubled with fits or nervous affections.

HYST-ERIC-S, n. A disease characterized by convulsive struggling, alternately remitting and exacerbating; rumbling in the bowels; sense of suffocation; drowsiness; urine copious and limpid; temper fickile. Good.

A species of hernia containing the womb. Coxe.

HYST-ERIC-OL-O-GY, n. [Gr. ὑστερος and λογος.]

In rhetoric, a figure by which the ordinary course of thought is inverted in expression, and the last put first; called also hysteron-proteron.

HYST-ERIC-ON-PRO-TIET-IC-ON, n. [Gr. ὑστερον, last, and προτερον, first.]

In grammar, a figure in which the word that should follow comes first; as, calet atque vivit, "he is well and lives." Hence the word is sometimes used to denote an anachronism, or the putting of a later historical event before an earlier one. Encyc. Am.

HYST-ERIC-OT-O-MY, n. [Gr. ὑστερα, the uterus, and τομη, a cutting.]

In surgery, the Cesarean section; the operation of cutting into the uterus, for taking out a fetus which can not be excluded by the usual means.

HYT, n. A port. [See HYTH.]

I.

I is the ninth letter, and the third vowel, of the English alphabet. We receive it, through the Latin and Greek, from the Schematic jod, je, or ye, in Greek iota, whence our English word jot. This vowel in French, and in most European languages, has the long, fine sound, which we express by e in me, or eo in seen, meek. This sound we retain in some foreign words which are naturalized in our language, as in machins, intrigue. But in most English words this long sound is shortened, as in hobbies, pity, gift; in which words the sound of i coincides with that of y in hypocrite, and at the end of words in unaccented syllables, as in holy, glory. It is this short sound of the French and Italian i which we hear in the pronunciation of been, which we pronounce bia. After i, this letter has sometimes the liquid sound of y, as in million, pronounced mil'yon. This sound corresponds with that of the Hebrews, as in Joseph, which in Syria is pronounced Yoseph, and with the sound of the German j, as in ja, jah, that is, ya, yahr.

The sound of i long, as in fine, kind, arise, is diphthongal; it begins with a sound approaching to that of broad a, but it is not exactly the same, and the organs are not opened to the same extent, and therefore the sound begins a little above that of ao. The sound, if continued, closes with one that nearly approaches to that of o long. This sound can be learned only by the ear.

This letter enters into several digraphs, as in fail, field, seize, feign, vain, friand; and with s in sail, join, coin, it helps to form a proper diphthong.

No English word ends with i; but when the sound of the letter occurs at the end of a word, it is expressed by y: alkali, banditti, and a few other words of foreign origin, are the only exceptions.

As a numeral, I signifies one, and stands for as many units as it is repeated in times, as II, two, III, three, &c. When it stands before V or X, it subtracts itself, and the numerals denote one less than the V or the X. Thus IV expresses four, one less than V; IX stands for nine, one less than X, &c. But when it is placed after V or X, it denotes the addition of a unit, or as many units as the letter is repeated in times. Thus VI is five and one, or six; and XI is ten and one, or eleven; XIII stands for five and three, or eight, &c.

Among the ancient Romans, IO stood for 500; CIO, for 1000; ICD, for 5000; CCICD, for 10,000; ICDD, for 50,000; and CCICDD, for 100,000.

I, formerly prefixed to some English words, as in duilt, is a contraction of the Saxon prefix ge; and more generally this was written y.

I, pron. [Sax. ic; Goth. and D. ik; G. ich; Sw. jag; Dan. jeg; Fr. ego; L. ego; Port. eu; Sp. yo; It. io; Fr. je; Sans. agam. In Armeric me is the nominative; so W. mi, Fr. moi, Hindoo, me. Either ego is contracted from mega, or I and me are from different roots. It is certain that me is contracted from meg or mig. See Me.]

The pronoun of the first person; the word which expresses one's self, or that by which a speaker or writer denotes himself. It is only the nominative case of the pronoun; in the objective case we use me. I am attached to study; study delights me.

We often bear, in popular language, the phrase it is me, which is now considered to be ungrammatical, for it is I. But the phrase may have come down to us from the use of the Welsh mi, or from the French use of the phrase c'est moi.

In the plural, we use us and us, which appear to be words radically distinct from I.

Johnson observes that Shakespeare uses I for ay or yes. In this he is not followed, and the use is incorrect.

I-AMBIC, n. [Fr. iambique; L. iambicus; Gr. ιαμβικος.]

Pertaining to the iambus, a poetic foot consisting of two syllables, a short one followed by a long one.

IDEA, n. [L. idea; Fr. idée; Gr. ειδα, from ειδω, to see, L. video.]
1. Literally, that which is seen; hence, form, image, model of any thing in the mind; that which is held or comprehended by the understanding or intellectual faculties. Locke.
I have used the word idea, to express whatever is meant by phantasm, notion, species, or whatever it is which the mind can be employed about in thinking.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or in the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call an idea. Locke.
The attention of the understanding to the objects acting on it, by which it becomes sensible of the impressions they make, is called by logicians perception; and the notions themselves, as they exist in the mind, as the materials of thinking and knowledge, are distinguished by the name of ideas. Encyc. art. Logic.

An idea is the reflex perception of objects, after the original perception or impression has been felt by the mind. Encyc.

In popular language, idea signifies the same thing as conception, apprehension, notion. To have an idea of any thing is to conceive it. In philosophical use, it does not signify that act of the mind which we call thought or conception, but some object of thought. Rid.

According to modern writers on mental philosophy, an idea is the object of thought, or the notice which the mind takes of its perceptions.

Darwin uses idea for a notion of external things which our organs bring us acquainted with originally; and he defines it, a contraction, motion, or configuration of the fibers which constitute the immediate organ of sense; synonymous with which he sometimes uses sensual motion, in contradistinction to muscular motion. Zoon.

2. In popular use, idea signifies notion, conception, thought, opinion, and even purpose or intention. Burke.

3. Image in the mind.
Her sweet idea wandered through his thoughts. Fairfax.
[A bad use of the word.]

4. An opinion; a proposition. These decisions are incompatible with the idea, that the principles are derived from the civil law.

IDEAL, a. Existing in idea; intellectual; mental; as, ideal knowledge.
There will always be a wide interval between practical and ideal excellence. Rambler.

2. Visionary; existing in fancy or imagination only; as, ideal good.

3. That considers ideas as images, phantasms, or forms in the mind; as, the ideal theory or philosophy.

IDEAL-LESS, a. [idea and less.] Destitute of ideas. Allan.

IDEALISM, n. The system or theory that makes every thing to consist in ideas, and denies the existence of material bodies. Wolsh.

IDEALIST, n. One who holds the doctrine of idealism.

1. To ascertain or prove to be the same. The owner of the goods found them in the possession of the thief, and identified them.
2. To make to be the same; to unite or combine in such a manner as to make one interest, purpose, or intention; to treat as having the same use; to consider as the same in effect.

Paul has identified the two ordinances, circumcision and baptism, and thus, by demonstrating that they have one and the same use and meaning, he has exhibited to our view the very same seal of God's covenant. J. M. Mason.
That treaty in fact identified Spain with the republican government of France, by a virtual acknowledgment of unconditional assent, and by specific stipulations of unconditional defence. British Declaration, Jan. 1805.
Every precaution is taken to identify the interests of the people, and of the rulers. Hamany.

IDENTIFY, v. i. To become the same; to coalesce in interest, purpose, use, effect, &c.

An enlightened self-interest, which, when well understood, they tell us will identify with an interest more enlarged and public. Burke.

IDENTIFYING, ppr. Ascertaining or proving to be the same.

2. Making the same in interest, purpose, use, efficacy, &c.

IDENTITY, n. [Fr. identité.]

2. A large mass of floating ice.

IF, v. t. Imperative, contracted from Sax. gif, from gifan, Goth. giban, to give. It introduces a conditional sentence. It is a verb, without a specified nominative. In like manner we use grant, admit, suppose. Regularly, if should be followed, as it was formerly, by the substitute or pronoun that, referring to the succeeding sentence or proposition. If that John shall arrive in season, I will send him with a message. But that is now omitted, and the subsequent sentence, proposition, or affirmation, may be considered as the object of the verb. Give John shall arrive; grant, suppose, admit that he shall arrive, I will send him with a message. The sense of if, or give, in this use, is grant, admit, cause to be, let the fact be, let the thing take place. If, then, is equivalent to grant, allow, admit. "If thou wilt, thou canst make me whole," that is, thou canst make me whole, give the fact, that thou wilt.

If thou art the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. — Matt. xiv.
