PUR-POSE, n. [Fr. propos; Sp. and It. proposito; L. propositum, propro; pro, before, and pono, to set or place.]
1. That which a person sets before himself as an object to be reached or accomplished; the end or aim to which the view is directed in any plan, measure, or exertion. We believe the Supreme Being created intelligent beings for some benevolent and glorious purpose; and if so, how glorious and beneficent must be his purpose in the plan of redemption! The ambition of men is generally directed to one of two purposes, or to both—the acquisition of wealth or of power. We build houses for the purpose of shelter; we labor for the purpose of subsistence.
2. Intention; design. This sense, however, is hardly to be distinguished from the former, as purpose always includes the end in view.
Every purpose is established by counsel. — Prov. xx.
Being predestinated according to the purpose of His who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. — Eph. i.

3. End; effect; consequence, good or bad. What good purpose will this answer? We sometimes labor to no purpose. Men often employ their time, talents, and money for very evil purposes.
To what purpose is this waste! — Matt. xxvi.
4. Instance; example. [Not in use.]
5. Conversation. [Not in use.] Spenser.
Of purpose, on purpose; with previous design; with the mind directed to that object. On purpose is more generally used, but the true phrase is of purpose.

PY-RO-ME'TER, } measure.]
 1. An instrument for measuring the expansion of bodies by heat.
 2. An instrument for measuring degrees of heat above those indicated by the mercurial thermometer; as, the pyrometer of Wadgwood.
PY-RO-MET'RIC, } a. Pertaining to the pyrom-
PY-RO-MET'RIC-AL, } etry or to its use. P. Cyc. Ed. Encyc.
PY-RO-MORPH'ITE, } n. [Gr. πυρ and μορφη.]
PY-RO-MORPH'ITE, } The mineral phosphate of lead, occurring in bright
PY-RO-MORPH'ITE, } green and brown hexagonal crystals and masses. The name alludes to the crystalline form which the PY-RO-MORPH'ITE, } globe assumes in cooling. Dana.
PY-RO-MORPH'OUS, } a. [Gr. πυρ, fire, and μορφη,
PY-RO-MORPH'OUS, } form.]
 In mineralogy, having the property of crystallization by fire. Schepard.
PY-RO-MO'CEATE, } n. A combination of pyromanic
PY-RO-MO'CEATE, } acid with a base.
PY-RO-MO'CEIC, } a. [Gr. πυρ, fire, and L. mucus.]
PY-RO-MO'CEIC, } The pyromanic acid is obtained by the action of PY-RO-MO'CEIC, } heat upon the mucic or saccholaric acid. It is a PY-RO-MO'CEIC, } white, volatile substance.
PYR'OPE, } n. [Gr. πυροπος; πυρ, fire, and ωψ,
PYR'OPE, } face.]
 A mineral regarded as a variety of garnet, occurring in small masses or grains, never in crystals. Its color is a poppy or blood red, frequently with a tinge of orange. Brochaet. Cleaveland.
PYR'O-PHANE, } n. [Gr. πυρ, fire, and φανος, clear.]
PYR'O-PHANE, } A mineral which in its natural state is opaque, but PYR'O-PHANE, } is said to change its color and become transparent
PYR'O-PHANE, } by heat. Kirwan. Luvier.
PY-ROPH'A-NOUS, } a. Rendered transparent by PY-ROPH'A-NOUS, } heat.
PY-ROPH'ROUS, } (pi-rof'o-rus) a. Pertaining to PY-ROPH'ROUS, } or resembling pyrophorites.
PY-ROPH'ROUS, } (pi-rof'o-rus) n. [Gr. πυρ, fire,
PY-ROPH'ROUS, } and φανος, bearing.]
 A substance which takes fire on exposure to air, or which maintains or retains light. It is best made by heating together alum, pearl-ashes, and lamp-black. Silliman.

QUALI-TATIVE, a. Relating to quality. Qualitative analysis, in chemistry, is that in which, by finding certain qualities in a compound, we determine the elements of which it is made up.

QUALI-TY, n. [L. qualitas, from qualis, such; Fr. qualité; Sp. calidad; It. qualità; Ir. cail.]

1. Property; that which belongs to a body or substance, or can be predicated of it. Qualities are natural or accidental. Thus whiteness is a natural quality of snow; softness is a natural quality of wool and fur; hardness is a natural quality of metals and wood; figure and dimension are the natural qualities of solids; but a particular figure, as a cube, a square, or a sphere, is an accidental or adventitious quality. The fluidity of metals is an accidental quality. Essential qualities are such as are necessary to constitute a thing what it is. Sensible qualities are such as are perceptible to the senses, as the light of the sun, the color of cloth, the taste of salt or sugar, &c.

2. Nature, relatively considered; as, the quality of an action in regard to right and wrong.

Other orators have no judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them. Hooker.

3. Virtue or particular power of producing certain effects; as, the qualities of plants or medicines.

4. Disposition; temper.

To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Shak.

5. Virtue or vice; as, good qualities, or bad qualities. Dryden.

6. Acquisition; accomplishment; as, the qualities of horsemanship, dancing, and fencing. Clarendon.

7. Character.

The attorney partakes of both qualities, that of a judge of the court, and that of attorney-general. Bacon.

8. Comparative rank; condition in relation to others; as, people of every quality.

We obtained acquaintance with many citizens, not of the meanest quality. Bacon.

9. Superior rank; superiority of birth or station; as, persons of quality; ladies of quality.

10. Persons of high rank, collectively.

I shall appear in the masquerade dressed up in my feathers, that the quality may see how pretty they will look in their traveling habits. Addison.

QUALM, (kwám,) n. [D. kwaal, disease; *kwaa*lyk, sick; G. qualm, to pain or vex. In G. qualm is steam, vapor, exhalation; D. kwalm, id. The Danish qualm signifies vapor, steam, fume, exhalation; qualmer, to ramble; det giver qualme, it rises in the stomach. The latter is the English word.]

1. A rising in the stomach, as it is commonly called; a fit of nausea, or a disposition or effort of the stomach to eject its contents.

2. A sudden fit or seizure of sickness at the stomach; as, a sensation of nausea; as, qualms of heart-sick agony. Milton.

For who, without a qualm, hath ever looked On holy garbage, though by Homer cooked? Roccomon.

3. A scruple of conscience, or unassuance of conscience.

QUALMISH, (kwám'ish,) a. [Supra.] Sick at the stomach; inclined to vomit; affected with nausea or sickly languor. Dryden.

QUALMISH-LY, adv. In a qualmish manner.

QUALMISH-NESS, n. Nausea.

QUAN-DI-U SE BÉNE GESSERIT, [L.] During good behavior.

QUAN-O-CLIT, n. A genus of climbing ornamental plants, allied to the convolvulus, found in the hot parts of America, also in India and China. P. Cyc.

QUAN-DAR-Y, n. Doubt; uncertainty; a state of difficulty or perplexity.

QUAN-DAR-Y, v. t. To bring into a state of uncertainty or difficulty. [Not used.] Otway.

QUANT, (kwant,) n. A round cap at the bottom of a pole, as of a jumping pole, to prevent its sinking into the ground. H. Howell.

QUANTI-TATIVE, a. [See QUANTITY.] Relating to quantity. Taylor.

Quantitative analysis, in chemistry, is that which determines the proportional quantity of each of the elements which make up a compound.

QUANTI-TIVE, a. [See QUANTITY.] Estimable according to quantity. Digby.

QUANTI-TIVE-LY, adv. So as to be measurable by quantity.

QUANTI-TY, n. [Fr. quantité; It. quantità; Sp. cantidad; from L. quantas; from quantus, how much, or as much as; Pers. چاند chand, how much; چندی chandi, quantity.]

1. That property of any thing which may be increased or diminished. Cheyne. Johnson.

This definition is defective, and as applicable to many other properties as to quantity. A definition strictly philosophical can not be given. In common usage, quantity is a mass or collection of matter, of indeterminate dimensions, but consisting of particles which can not be distinguished, or which are not customarily distinguished, or which are considered in the aggregate. Thus we say, a quantity of earth, a quantity of water, a quantity of air, of light, of heat, of iron, of wood, of timber, of corn, of paper. But we do not say, a quantity of men, or of horses, or of houses; for, as these are considered as separate individuals or beings, we call an assemblage of them a number or multitude.

2. An indefinite extent of space

3. A portion or part.

If I were swayed into quantities. [Not in use.] Shak.

4. A large portion; as, a medicine taken in quantities, that is, in large quantities. Arbutnot.

5. In mathematics, any thing which can be multiplied, divided, or measured. Day.

Thus mathematics is called the science of quantity. In algebra, quantities are known and unknown. Known quantities are usually represented by the first letters of the alphabet, as a, b, c; and unknown quantities are expressed by the last letters, x, y, z, &c. Letters thus used to represent quantities are themselves called quantities. A simple quantity is expressed by one term, as +a, or -abc; a compound is expressed by more terms than one, connected by the signs + plus, or - minus, as a+b, or a-b+c. Quantities which have the sign + prefixed, are called positive or affirmative; those which have the sign - prefixed, are called negative. Day's Algebra.

6. In grammar, the measure of a syllable; that which determines the time in which it is pronounced. Holder. Encyc.

7. In logic, a category, universal, or predicament; a general conception. Bailey. Encyc.

8. In music, the relative duration of a note or syllable. Busby.

Quantity of matter, in a body, is the measure arising from the joint consideration of its magnitude and density, being expressed by, or proportional to, the product of the two. Hutton.

Quantity of motion, in a body, is the measure arising from the joint consideration of its quantity of matter and its velocity; the same as MOMENTUM. Hutton.

QUANTUM, n. [L.] The quantity; the amount.

QUANTUM MERUIT, [L.] In law, an action grounded on a promise that the defendant would pay to the plaintiff for his service as much as he should deserve.

QUANTUM SUFFICIENT, [L.] Sufficient; as much as is needed.

QUANTUM VALEBAT, [L.] An action to recover of the defendant, for goods sold, as much as they were worth. Blackstone.

QUA-QUA-VEIS'AL, a. [L. quæqua, in all directions, and versus, from verbo, to turn.]

In geology, a term applied to the dip of beds to all parts of the compass round a center, as of beds of lava round a center. Iyell.

QUARANTINE, (kwor'an-teen,) n. [It. quarantina, forty; Sp. cuarentena; Fr. quarantaine; from the root of L. quartus, fourth, Fr. carreau, a square, carre, to square, Arm. carrea, to square, W. ceor, square, Eng. quart. See QUART and SQUARE.]

1. Properly, the space of forty days; appropriately, the term of forty days, during which a ship, arriving in port, and suspected of being infected with a malignant, contagious disease, is obliged to forbear all intercourse with the city or place. This time was chosen because it was supposed that any infectious disease would break out, if at all, within that period. Hence,

2. Restraint of intercourse to which a ship is subjected, on the presumption that she may be infected, either for forty days or for any other limited term. It is customary for the proper officers to determine the period of restraint at their discretion, according to circumstances. Hence we hear of a quarantine of five days, of ten, of thirty, &c., as well as of forty.

We say, a ship performs quarantine, or rides at quarantine. We also apply the word to persons. The passengers and crew perform quarantine.

3. In law, the period of forty days, during which the widow of a man dying seized of land, has the privilege of remaining in the mansion-house.

QUARANTINE, (kwor'an-teen,) v. t. To prohibit from intercourse with a city or its inhabitants; to compel to remain at a distance from shore for some limited period, on account of real or supposed infection; applied to ships, or to persons and goods.

QUARANTINE-ED, (kwor'an-teen-ed,) ppr. Restrained from communication with the shore for a limited period; as a ship or its crew and passengers.

QUARANTINING, ppr. Prohibiting from intercourse with the port; as a ship or its crew and passengers.

QUARREL, for QUARER, is not in use.

QUARREL, n. [W. caerel; Fr. querelle; L. and It. querela; Sp. querrela or queja; Arm. qarell; L. querer, to complain, that is, to cry out with a loud voice. Hence we see the primary sense is the same as brawl. The L. querer coincides in elements with the Ir. gairim, to call, to hawl, to shout, and gerara, a complaint; Sax. ceorran, to complain or murmur; G. gieren and kieren; D. kirren and korren; Dan. kerrer. The latter signifies to complain, to expostulate, and kerrer sig efter, to care, or take heed of, a sense which would unite the word with the L. curro, curo; and in Sax. ceorig signifies complaining, and careful, solicitous; Heb. Ch. Syr. and Ar. marp. Class Gr. No. 49, and see No. 1, 2, 14, 15, 19, 23.]

QUARRY, n. [Fr. carrière, formerly Norm. quarrier. I know not whether the original sense of this word was a pit or mine, from digging, or whether the sense was a place for squaring stone. The Fr. carrière signifies not only a quarry, but a career, course, race, from the L. curra, which can not be from squaring. If the sense was a pit, it may be referred to the Heb.

Ch. and Ehb. קָרָה, to dig; Ar. كَرَى kara or kwara, to dig, to run violently, to leap. If the sense is from squaring, see SQUAAR. See Class Gr, No. 35, 36, 52, 57, 63.]

1. A place, cavern, or pit, where stones are dug from the earth, or separated from a large mass of rocks. We generally apply the word mine to the pit from which are taken metals and coals; from quarries are taken stones for building, as marble, freestone, slate, &c.

QUIT, (kwit.) v. t. & p. pret. and pp. QUIT or QUITTED. [Fr. quitter; It. quitar and chitare; Port. and Sp. quitar; D. quytten; G. quittieren; Dan. quittere; Sw. quitta; W. gadu and gadano, to quit; It. ceda, leave; cuti-gin, to requite. This is the L. cedo. The sense of quit is to leave, to withdraw from; but the primary sense of the root must have been to move or to send; for to requite is to send back. See Class Cd and Cs.]

1. To leave; to depart from, either temporarily or forever. It does not necessarily include the idea of abandoning, without a qualifying word. A man quits his house for an hour, or for a month; he quits his native country on a voyage, or he quits it forever; he quits an employment with the intention of resuming it.

2. To free; to clear; to liberate; to discharge from.

To quit you of this fear, you have already looked death in the face. [Nearly obsolete.] Waks.

3. To carry through; to do or perform something to the end, so that nothing remains; to discharge or perform completely.

Never a worthy price a day did quit
With greater hazard and with more renown. Daniel.

4. To quit one's self; reciprocally, to clear one's self of incumbent duties by full performance.

Samson hath quit himself Like Samson. Milton.

In this sense, ACQUIT is generally used.

5. To repay; to requite. Spenser.

Enkide all the sports of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shak.

In this sense, QUIT is now rarely used. We use REQUIT.

6. To vacate obligation; to release; to free from.

Dangers of law,
Against us quitted. B. Jonson.

7. To pay; to discharge; hence, to free from; as, to quit the debt of gratitude. Milton.

8. To set free; to release; to absolve; to acquit.

Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Fairfax.

In this sense, ACQUIT is now used.

9. To leave; to give up; to resign; to relinquish; as, to quit an office.

10. To pay.

R.

R is the eighteenth letter of the English alphabet, and an articulation sui generis, having little or no resemblance in pronunciation to any other letter. But from the position of the tongue in uttering it, it is commutable with l, into which letter it is changed in many words by the Spaniards and Portuguese, and some other nations; as f is also changed into r. It is numbered among the liquids and semi-vowels, and is sometimes called the canine letter. It is uttered with a nasal extrusion of the breath, and in some words, particularly at the end or after a labial and a dental letter, with a sort of quivering motion or slight jar of the tongue. Its English uses, which are uniform, may be understood by the customary pronunciation of rod, room, rose, bar, barren, disturb, catarrk, free, bread, pride, drip, drag, drown.

In words which we have received from the Greek language, we follow the Latins, who wrote h after r, as the representative of the aspirated sound with which this letter was pronounced by the Greeks. It is the same in the Welsh language. But as the letter is not aspirated in English, h is entirely superfluous; rhapsody, rhetoric, being pronounced rapidly, reum, rhetoric, being pronounced as an abbreviation, R. stands for rez, king, as George R., or regina, queen, as Victoria R.

In the notes of the ancients, R. or RO. stands for Roma; R. C. for Romana civitas; R. G. C. for rei gerenda causa; R. F. E. D. for recte factum et dictum; R. G. F. for regis filius; R. P. respublica, or Romani principes.

As a numeral, R, in Roman authors, stands for 80, and with a dash over it, \overline{R} , for 80,000. But in Greek, ρ , with a small mark over it, thus, ρ , signifies 100, and with the same mark under it, it denoted 1000 \times 100, or 100,000. In Hebrew, ρ denoted 200, and with two horizontal points over it, $\overline{\rho}$ 1000 \times 200, or 200,000.

Among physicians, R. stands for recipe, take.

RA, as an inseparable prefix or preposition, is the Latin re, coming to us through the Italian and French, and primarily signifying again, repetition. [See Rz.]

RA-BATE', n. t. [Fr. rabattre; It. rabattiere; ra and battere, battere, to beat. See BZAT and ABATE.]

RAD, RED, ROD, an initial or terminating syllable in names, is the D. raad, G. rath, counsel, as in Conrad, powerful in counsel; Ethelred, noble counsel.
RAD'DLE, (rad'dl), c. l. [Probably from Sax. wæd, wæd, or wæth, a band or wreath, or from the same root.] To interweave; to twist; to wind together. Defoe.
RAD'DLE, n. [Supra.] A long stick used in hedging; also, a hedge formed by interweaving the shoots and branches of trees or shrubs. Todd.
RAD'DLE, n. [From red, ruddy, which see.] A RUD'DOCK, bird, the redbreast of Europe. Shak.
RA'DI-AL, a. [from L. radius, a ray, a rod, a spoke. See RADIUS and RAY.] Pertaining to the radius, one of the bones of the fore-arm of the human body; as, the radial artery or nerve. Rush.
 The radial muscles are two muscles of the forearm, one of which bends the wrist, the other extends it. Encyc. Parr.

Radial curves; in geometry, curves of the spiral kind, whose ordinates all terminate in the center of the including circle, and appear like so many semi-diameters. [Little used.] Bailey.
RA'DI-ANCE, n. [L. radius, radio, to beam; or RA'DI-AN-CY,] shoot rays. See RADIUS and RAY.
Properly, brightness shooting in rays or beams; hence, in general, brilliant or sparkling luster; vivid brightness; as, the radiance of the sun. The Son, Of majesty divine. Milton.
RA'DI-ANT, a. Emitting or darting rays of light or heat; lusting in rays; beaming with brightness; emitting a vivid light or splendor; as, the radiant sun.
Mark what radiant state she spreads. Milton.
Radiant to glittering arms and beamy pride. Milton.
RA'DI-ANT, n. In optics, the luminous point or object from which light emanates.
 2. In geometry, a straight line proceeding from a given point, or fixed pole, about which it is conceived to revolve. Brande.
RA'DI-ANT-LY, adv. With beaming brightness; with glittering splendor.
RA-DI-A-TA, n. pl. The fourth great division of the animal kingdom, including those animals whose parts are arranged round an axis, and on one or several radii, or on one or several lines extending from one pole to the other. This division comprehends the echinodermata, the entozoa, the acleleph, the polypi or poly-pods, and the Infusoria. Cuvier.
RA'DI-ATE, v. l. [L. radio. See RAY.]
 1. To issue in rays, as light; to dart, as beams of brightness; to shine.
Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes. Locke.
 2. To issue and proceed in direct lines from a point or surface, as heat.
RA'DI-ATE, v. l. To enlighten; to illuminate; to shed light or brightness on. [Usually IRADIATE.] Howyt.
 2. To emit or send out in direct lines from a point or surface, as heat.
RA'DI-ATE, a. In botany, a rayed or radiate flower is a compound flower consisting of a disk, in which the corollets or florets are tubular, and of a ray, in which the florets are ligulate or strap-shaped. Martyn.
 Or a flower with several semiflorescous florets set round a disk in form of a radiant star. Encyc.
RA'DI-A-TED, ppr. Emitted, as rays of light or heat; adorned with rays of light. Addison.
 2. a. In mineralogy, having crystals diverging from a center.
 3. In zoology, belonging to the division Radiata.
RA'DI-ATING, ppr. or a. Emitting or darting rays of light or heat; enlightening; as, the radiating sun.
RA-DI-ATION, n. [L. radiatio.] [point in optics.]
 1. The emission and diffusion of rays of light; beamy brightness. Bacon.
 2. The divergence or shooting forth of any thing from a point or surface, like the diverging rays of light; as, the radiation of heat.
RA'DI-A-TOR, n. A body from which rays emanate. Francis.
RA'DI-CAL, a. [Fr. from L. radicalis, from radix, root. See RAC and RAY.]
 1. Pertaining to the root or origin; original; fundamental; as, a radical truth or error; a radical evil; a radical difference of opinions or systems.
 2. Implanted by nature; native; constitutional; as, the radical moisture of a body. Bacon.
 3. Primitive; original; underived; uncompounded; as, a radical word.
 4. Serving to origination.
 5. In botany, proceeding immediately from the root; as, a radical leaf or peduncle. Martyn.
Radical quantity; in algebra, a quantity to which the radical sign is prefixed. Brande.
Radical sign; the sign $\sqrt{\quad}$ placed before any quantity, denoting that its root is to be extracted; thus, \sqrt{a} or $\sqrt{a+b}$. Encyc. Bailey.
RA'DI-CAL, n. In philology, a primitive word; a radix, root, or simple, underived, uncompounded word.
 2. A primitive letter; a letter that belongs to the radix.
 3. In modern politics, a person who advocates a radical reform, or extreme measures in reformation.
 4. In chemistry, an element, or a simple constituent part of a substance, which is incapable of decomposition. Parks.
 That which constitutes the distinguishing part of an acid or a base, by its union with oxygen, or other acidifying and basifying principles. Ure.
Compound radical, is a base composed of two or more substances. Thus a vegetable acid having a radical composed of hydrogen and carbon, is said to be an acid with a compound radical. The term compound radical is also applied to supposed sulfidic bases, of which cyanogen is the type. Silliman.

RAD'I-CAL-ISM, n. The doctrine or principle of making radical reform in government, by overturning and changing the present state of things.
RAD'I-CAL'I-TY, n. Origination. Brown.
 2. A being radical; a quantity which has relation to a root.
RAD'I-CAL-LV, adv. Originally; at the origin or root; fundamentally; as, a scheme or system radically wrong or defective.
 2. Primarily; essentially; originally; without derivation.

These great ores thus radically bright. Prior.
RAD'I-CAL-NESS, n. The state of being radical or RAD'I-CANT, n. [L. radicans.] [fundamental.]
 In botany, rooting; as, a radicant stem or leaf. Lea. Martyn.

RAD'I-CATE, v. t. [L. radicatus, radior, from radix, root.]
 To root; to plant deeply and firmly; as, radicated opinions; radicated knowledge. Glauville.
 Meditation will radicate these seeds. Hammond.

RAD'I-CATE, a. Radicated. South.
RAD'I-CATED, pp. or a. Rooted; deeply planted.
 Prejudices of a whole race of people radicated by a succession of ages. Burke.

RAD'I-CATING, pp. or a. } In botany, taking root from RAD'I-CANT, a. } some part above ground, as the joint of a stem, the extremity of a leaf, &c.
RAD-I-CATION, n. [from radicate.] The process of taking root deeply; as, the radication of habits.
 2. In botany, the disposition of the root of a plant with respect to the ascending and descending caudex. Lea.

RAD'I-CLE, (rad'e-kl.) n. [L. radicula, from radix.]
 1. That part of the seed of a plant which upon vegetating becomes the root. Encyc.
 2. A name given to the fibrous parts of a root, which are renewed every year, and which are the parts that absorb the nutriment from the earth.

RADI-O-LITES, n. pl. A genus of fossil shells having the interior valve in the shape of a reversed cone, the superior valve convex. Brande.
RADI-OMETER, n. [L. radius, rod, and Gr. μετρον, measure.]

The forestaff, an instrument formerly used for taking the altitudes of celestial bodies. Barlow.
RADI'ISH, n. [Sax. radic; D. radys; G. radies; Corn. radhik; Ir. radis; W. rhazygy, from rhzyg, red. See RUCOOR.]

A cultivated plant of the genus Raphanus, the root of which is eaten raw as a salad.
RADI'US, n. pl. RADII. [L. radius, a ray, a rod, a beam, a spoke, that is, a shoot; radius, to shine, that is, to dart beams. See RAX.]

1. In geometry, a right line drawn or extending from the center of a circle to the periphery; the semidiameter of the circle. In trigonometry, the radius is equal to the sine of 90°.

2. In anatomy, the exterior bone of the fore-arm, descending along with the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

3. In botany, a ray; the outer part or circumference of a compound radiate flower, or radiated discous flower. Martyn.

RADI-US VECTOR, n. [L.] In astronomy, the straight line drawn from the center of force to the point of the orbit, where the body is supposed to be. Thus, the radius vector of a planetary orbit, is a line drawn from the center of the sun to the centre of the planet in any part of that orbit. Brande. Olmsted.

RAD'IX, n. [L., a root.] In etymology, a primitive word, from which spring other words.
 2. In logarithms, the base of any system of logarithms, or that number whose logarithm is unity. Thus in Briggs's, or the common system of logarithms, the radix is 10; in Napier's it is 2.7182818284. All other numbers are considered as some powers, or roots of the radix, the exponents of which powers, or roots, constitute the logarithms of those numbers respectively.

3. In algebra, radix, or root, sometimes denotes a finite expression, from which a series is derived. Hutton.

RAFF, v. t. [G. raffen, to sweep, to seize or snatch.] It seems to be from the root of Sax. raffian, L. rapio;

Ch. Syr. and Heb. רָפַף, Ar. رَافَفَ rafafa, to sweep away; Pers. رَافَن, raftan, id.]

2. To range in a line. Bacon.
RAIL, v. i. [D. rallen, to judder; Sp. ralla, to grate, to molest; Port. rahar, to swagger, to hector, to buff, to scold. This corresponds nearly with the G. rahen, which may be the same word with a prefix, Eng. to brail, Fr. brailler; Sw. ralla, to grate; Fr.

railler, to rally. In Dan. driller signifies to drill and to banter.]

To utter reproaches; to scoff; to use insolent and reproachful language; to reproach or censure in opprobrious terms; followed by at or against, formerly by on.

And fell on arts he did not understand. Dryden.
Lesbia reviled at the rails. Swift.

RAIL-FENCE, n. A fence made of wooden rails.
RAIL-ROAD, n. [Rail and road, or way.] A road
RAIL-WAY, n. or way on which iron rails are laid for wheels to run on, for the conveyance of heavy loads in vehicles.

[It may be well to confine rail-road to the highways, in which a railway is laid, and to use rail-way only for the rails when laid. This would be a useful distinction.]

RAILER, n. One who scoffs, insults, censures, or reproaches with opprobrious language.

South. Thomson.

RAILING, ppr. Clamouring with insulting language; uttering reproachful words.

2. a. Expressing reproach; insulting; as, a railing accusation. 2 Pet. ii.

RAIMENT, n. [For ARMYMENT; Norm. arayer, to array; arais, array, apparel. See ARAY and HAV.]

1. Clothing in general; vestments; vesture; garments. Gen. xiv. Deut. viii.

Living, both food and raiment also supplies. Dryden.

2. A single garment.

[In this sense it is rarely used, and indeed is improper.]

RAIN, v. l. [Sax. regnan, regnan, renian, rinan, to rain; Goth. riqn, rain; Sax. raen, Cimbric raskia, rain; D. and G. regen, rain; D. regenen, to rain; Sw. regna, rain; regna, to rain; Dan. regna, rain; regner, to rain; G. beregen, to rain on. It seems that rain is contracted from regen. It is the Gr. βροχας, to rain, to water, which we retain in brook, and the Latins, by dropping the prefix, in riga, irriga, to irrigate. The primary sense is, to pour out, to drive forth, Ar. بارك baraks, coinciding with Heb. Ch.

and Syr. ברך. Class. Brg. No. 3.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds, as water; to fall mostly with it for a nominative; as, it rains; it will rain; it rained, or it has rained.

2. To fall or drop like rain; as, tears rained at their eyes. Milton.

RAIN, v. l. To pour or shower down from the upper regions, like rain from the clouds.

RAIN, n. [Sax. regn, regn, ren.]

Water falling in drops from the atmosphere; or the descent of water in drops from the atmosphere. Rain is distinguished from mist by the size of the drops, which are distinctly visible. When water falls in very small drops or particles, we call it mist; and fog is composed of particles so fine as to be not only indistinguishable, but to float or be suspended in the air.

RAIN-BEAT, a. Beaten or injured by the rain. [Not used.] Hall.

RAIN-BOW, n. A bow, or an arch of a circle, consisting of all the colors formed by the refraction and reflection of rays of light from drops of rain or vapor, appearing in the part of the hemisphere opposite to the sun. When the sun is at the horizon, the rainbow is a semicircle. The rainbow is called also lark.

The moon sometimes forms a bow or arch of light, more faint than that formed by the sun, and called lunar rainbow. Similar bows, at sea, are called marine rainbows, or sea-bows. Encyc.

RAIP, n. A rod to measure ground.

RAISE, (raize), v. t. [Goth. raisjan, ur-raisan, to raise, to raise, to excite; ur-raisan, to rise. This word occurs often in the Gothic version of the Gospels, Luke iii. 8, John vi. 40, 44. In Sw. resa signifies to go, walk, or travel, and to raise; Dan. rejser, the same. These verbs appear to be the L. gradior, gressus, without the prefix; and gradior is the Semitic ררר, which has a variety of significations, but, in Syriac, to go, to walk, to pass, as in Latin. Whether the Swedish and Danish verbs are from different roots, blended by usage or accident, or whether the different senses have proceeded from one common signification, to move, to open, to stretch, let the reader judge.]

1. To lift; to take up; to leave; to lift from a low or reclining posture; as, to raise a stone or weight; to raise the body in bed.

The angel smote Peter on the side and raised him up. — Acts xii.

27. To give rise to. Milton.

28. To cause to grow; to procure to be produced, bred, or propagated; as, to raise wheat, barley, hops, &c.; to raise horses, oxen, or sheep. New England. [The English now use grow in regard to crops; as, to grow wheat. This verb intransitive has never been used in New England in a transitive sense, until recently some persons have adopted it from the English books. We always use raise; but in New England it is never applied to the breeding of the human race, as it is in the Southern States. In the north, we say, to raise wheat, and to raise horses or cattle, but not to raise men; though we say, to raise a sickly child.]

29. To cause to swell, heave, and become light; as, to raise dough or paste by yeast or leaven. Miss Lobb can dance a jig and raise paste. Spectator.

30. To excite; to animate with fresh vigor; as, to raise the spirits or courage.

31. To ordain; to appoint; or to call to and prepare; to furnish with gifts and qualifications suited to a purpose; a scriptural sense.

 1. A name applied to sterna, the growth of India, and the produce of various species of the genus Calamus, most or all of which are perennial, simple or unbranched, cylindrical, jointed, very tough and strong, from the size of a goose-quill to the size of the human wrist, and from fifty to a hundred feet in length. They are used for wicker-work, seats of chairs, walking-sticks, withes and thongs, ropes, cables, &c.
 2. A walking-stick made of ratan.
 RAT-ANY, n. [n.] A half shrubby Peruvian plant, RAT-AN-JIY, [n.] Krameria triandra, the root of which is very astringent. P. Cyc.
 RAT-CATCHER, n. One who makes it his business to catch rats.
 RATCH, n. A bar containing angular teeth, into which a pall or catch drops, to prevent machines from running back. Herbert.
 RATCHET, n. In a watch, a small tooth at the bottom of the fusee or barrel, which stops it in winding up. Hutton.
 RATCHET-WHEEL, n. A circular wheel, having angular teeth, into which a pall or catch drops, to prevent machines from running back. Herbert.

RATCHUL, n. Among miners, fragments of stone.
 RATE, n. [Norm. rate; L. ratus, reor, contracted from retor, redor, or resor. See RATIO and REASON.]
 1. The proportion or standard by which quantity or value is adjusted; as, silver valued at the rate of six shillings and eight pence the ounce.
 The rate and standard of wit was different then from what it is in these days. South.
 2. Price or amount stated or fixed on any thing. A king may purchase territory at too dear a rate. The rate of interest is prescribed by law.
 3. Settled allowance; as, a daily rate of provisions. 2 Kings xxv.
 4. Degree; comparative light or value.
 I am a spirit of no common rate. Shak.
 In this did his business and goodness appear above the rate and pitch of other men's, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy.
 5. Degree in which any thing is done. The ship sails at the rate of seven knots an hour.
 Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough. Clarendon.
 6. Degree of value; price. Wheat in England is often sold at the rate of fifty shillings the quarter. Wit may be purchased at too dear a rate.
 7. A tax or sum assessed by authority on property for public use, according to its income or value; as, parish rates; town rates; highway rates.
 8. In the navy, the order or class of a ship, which is called first, second, third, &c., rate, according to its magnitude or force.
 RATE, v. t. To set a certain value on; to value at a certain price or degree of excellence.
 You seem set high enough your joys to rate. Dryden.
 Instead of rating the man by his performance, we too frequently rate the performance by the man. Kambler.
 2. To fix the magnitude, force, or order, as of ships. A ship is rated in the first class, or as a ship of the line.
 3. To take the rate of; as, to rate a chronometer, that is, to ascertain the exact rate of its gain or loss as compared with true time, for the sake of making a due allowance or computation dependent thereon. Prof. Loomis.
 RATE, v. i. To be set or considered in a class, as a ship. The ship rates as a ship of the line.
 2. To make an estimate.
 RATE, v. t. [Sw. ratit, to refuse, to find fault; ryta, to roar, to huff; Ice. reita, or G. bereden, from reden, to speak, Sax. radan. (See READ.)] It is probably allied to rattle, and perhaps to L. rado. See Class Rd. No. 71, 76, Ar.]
 To chide with vehemence; to reprove; to scold; to censure violently.
 Go, rate thy millions, proud, haughty boy. Shak.
 An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir. Shak.
 RATED, pp. Set at a certain value; estimated; set in a certain order or rank.
 2. Chid; reproved.
 RATER, n. One who sets a value on or makes an estimate.
 RATH, n. [Ir. rath, a hill, mound, or fortress.]
 1. A hill. [Obs.] Spenser.
 RATH, a. [Sax. rath, rath, krath, khathe, hrad, or hrad, quick, hasty; It. ratham, to grow or be prosperous; from the same root as ready and rash, from the sense of shooting forward. See READY.]
 Early; coming before others, or before the usual time.
 Bring the rath primrose, that forsakes dies. Milton.
 RATHER, adv. [Sax. rathor, hrathor; comp. of rath, quick, prompt, hasty, ready. So we use sooner in an equivalent sense. I would rather go, or sooner go. The use is taken from pushing or moving forward. So the Italians use anzi, (La ante, before.) "Ma egli disse, anzi, beati coloro ch'odono la parola di Dio, e l'osservano." But he said yea rather, happy are they that hear the word of God and keep it. Luke xi.]
 1. More readily or willingly, with better liking; with preference or choice.
 My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life.—Job vii.
 Light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.—John iii. Pa. lxxix.
 2. In preference; preferably; with better reason. Good is rather to be chosen than evil. See ACTS v.
 3. In a greater degree than otherwise.
 He sought throughout the world, but sought in vain, And o'er where finding, rather feared he slain. Dryden.
 4. More properly; more correctly speaking.
 This is an art
 Which does mend nature, change it rather; but
 The art itself is nature. Shak.
 5. Noting some degree of contrariety in fact.
 She was nothing better, but rather grew worse.—Mark v. Matt. xxvii.
 The rather; especially; for better reason; for particular cause.
 You are come to me in a happy time,
 The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shak.

Had rather, is supposed to be a corruption of would rather.

I had rather speak five words with my understanding. — 1 Cor. xiv.

This phrase may have been originally, "I'd rather," for I would rather, and the contraction afterward mistaken for had. Correct speakers and writers generally use would in all such phrases; I would rather, I prefer; I desire in preference.

RATH'OF-FITE, n. A mineral brought from Sweden, of the garnet kind. Its color is a dingy, brownish-black. Philips.

RAT-I-FI-CATION, n. [Fr.; from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.

2. The act of giving sanction and validity to something done by another; as, the ratification of a treaty by the senate of the United States.

RAT-I-FI-ED, pp. Confirmed; sanctioned; made valid.

RAT-I-FI-ER, n. He or that which ratifies or sanctions.

RAT-I-FY, v. t. [Fr. ratifier; L. ratum facio, to make firm.]

1. To confirm; to establish; to settle.

We have ratified to them the borders of Judea. — 1 Mac. xiv.

2. To approve and sanction; to make valid; as, to ratify an agreement or treaty.

2. Chiding; reproving.

RAT'IO, (ra'sho), n. [L. from ratius, reor, to think or suppose, to set, confirm, or establish. Rear is contracted from reor or retor, and primarily signifies to throw, to thrust, hence to speak, to set in the mind, to think, like L. suppono; and setting gives the sense of a fixed rate or rule. See REASON.]

1. In popular language, proportion; rate; degree; as, the ratio of representation in congress.

2. In mathematics, the relation which one quantity has to another of the same kind, as expressed by the quotient of the one divided by the other. Thus the ratio of 4 to 2 is 4:2, or 2; and the ratio of 5 to 6 is 5:6. This is geometrical ratio, which is that signified when the term is used without distinction; but arithmetical ratio is the difference between two quantities. Thus the arithmetical ratio of 2 to 6 is 4.

Ratio respects magnitudes of the same kind only. One line may be compared with another line, but a line can not be compared with a superficies, and hence between a line and a superficies there can be no ratio.

RAT'IOCI-NATE, (ra-shos'e-nate), v. i. [L. ratio-ci-nor, from ratio, reason.]

To reason; to argue. [Little used.]

RAT'IOCI-NATION, (ra-shos'e-nashun), n. [L. ratio-cinatio.]

REACH, v. t. RAUGHT, the ancient preterit, is obsolete. The verb is now regular; pp. REACHED. [It. razan, razan, razan; or Aracan; Goth. rakan; Ir. rig-kān, roichin; Dan. rekter; D. reiken, rekken; G. reichen, recken; Sw. racha; Gr. rapzo; H. recere, to reach, reach, or vomit; L. regio, to rule or govern, to make right or straight; thus is, to strain or stretch, the radical sense. The English sense of reach appears in L. porrigo and porricio. We find in the Shenitic languages, Ch. ʔ, to desire, to long for, Syr. راج; ragi, and راج; aragi, to desire. This is the Greek ααγος, to reach, to stretch, the radical sense of desiring. The latter Syriac word is the Hebrew רמ, to weave; but the primary sense is, to stretch or strain.

This verb in Arabic, راج arika, signifies to send forth a grateful smell, to breathe fragrance, the root of the L. fragro. But the primary sense is the same, to reach, to extend, to shoot forth. The same word in Eth. ṛaga, San. ricā, signifies to congeal or condense, to make stiff or rigid. This is the L. rigeo, Gr. ῥιγναι, and hence L. frigid, whence frigid. This sense also is from stretching or drawing, making tense or rigid. The radical sense of REACH is the same, whence region, and the Heb. רָגַח, the expanse of heaven or the firmament. The L. raga has the same radical sense, to reach, to urge. See Class RE, No. 1, 8, 15, 18, 21.]

1. To extend; to stretch; in a general sense; sometimes followed by out and forth; as, to reach out the arm. Hence,

[Sax. rad, rad, red, speech, discourse, counsel, advice, knowledge, benefit, reason; redan, redan, to read, to decree, to appoint, to command, to rule or govern, to conjecture, to give or take counsel; aradax, to read, to tell, to narrate; geradax, to read, to consult; gerad, mode, condition, or state, reason, ratio, or account, knowledge, instruction, or learning, and, as an adjective or participle, knowing, instructed, ready, suited; gerad beon, to be ready, to accord, or agree; geradod, excited, quick. These significations unite this word with ready, which see. G. rede, speech, talk, account; reden, to speak; D. rede, speech; reden, reason; Dan. rede, account, and ready; G. bereden, to berate; rath, advice, counsel, a counsel or senate; rathen, to advise, to conjecture, or guess, to solve a riddle; D. raad, counsel, advice; raaden, to counsel; Sw. rad, Dan. raad, counsel; reda, raader, to counsel, to instruct; W. rhaith, straight, right, that is, set right, decision, verdict; whetheth, rhetoric, or rhaith; Dan. ret, law, justice, right, reason; Sw. ratt, ratta, id.; Ir. radh, a saying; radham, to say, tell, relate; W. adrawz, to tell or rehearse; Gr. pevo, for pevo, to say or tell, to flow; ρητρος, a speaker, a rhetorician; Goth. radgan, to speak. The primary sense of read is, to speak, to utter, that is, to push, drive, or advance. This is also the primary sense of ready, that is, prompt, or advancing quick. The Sax. gerad, ready, accords also in elements with the W. rhid, L. gratia, the primary sense of which is, prompt to favor, advancing towards, free. The elements of these words are the same as those of ride and L. gradior, &c. The sense of reason is secondary, that which is uttered, said, or set forth; hence, counsel, also. The Sw. ratta, Dan. ret, if not contracted words, are from the same root. (See REAOV.) Class Rd, No. 1, 3, 5, 9, 26.]

RECK, v. t. [Sax. reccan, reccan, to say, to tell, to narrate, to reckon, to care, to rule or govern, L. reco. The primary sense is to strain. Care is a straining of the mind. See RECK and RECKON.] To care; to mind; to rate at much; as we say, to reckon much of; followed by of. [Obs.] Thou'st but a lazy loole, And reck'st much of thy swinke. Spenser. I reck as little what boddeth me, As much I wish all good befornen you. Shak. Of night or loneliness it recks me not. Milton.

RECK, v. t. To heed; to regard; to care for. This son of mine oot recking danger. Sidney. [This verb is obsolete, unless in poetry. We observe the primary sense and application in the phrase "It recks me not," that is, it does not strain or distress me; it does not rack my mind. To rack danger is a derivative form of expression, and a deviation from the proper sense of the verb.]

RECK/LESS, a. Careless; heedless; mindless. I made the king as reckless, as them diligent. Sidney.

RECK/LESS-LY, adv. Heedlessly; carelessly.

RECK/LESS-NESS, n. Heedlessness; carelessness; negligence. Sidney. [These words, formerly disused, have been recently revived.]

RECK/ON, (rek'n), v. t. [Sax. reccan, reccan, to tell, to relate, to reck or care, to rule, to reckon; D. rekenen, to count or compute; G. rechnen, to count, to reckon, to esteem, and recken, to stretch, to strain, to rack; Sw. rakna, to count, to tell; Dan. regner, to reckon, to count, to rain. The Saxon word signifies not only to tell or count, but to reck or care, and to rule or govern; and the latter signification proves it to be the L. reco, rectus, whence regnum, regno, Eng. to reign, and hence Sax. reht, riht, Eng. right, G. recht, &c. The primary sense of the root is to strain, and right is strained, stretched to a straight line; hence we see that these words all coincide with reach, stretch, and rack, and we say, we are racked with care. It is probable that reck and wretched are from the same root. Class Rg, No. 18, 21.] 1. To count; to number; that is, to tell over by particulars. The priest shall reckon to him the money, according to the years that remain, even to the year of jubilee, and it shall be abated. — Lev. xxvii. 1 reckoned above two hundred and fifty on the outside of the church. Addison. 2. To esteem; to account; to repute. Rom. viii. For him I reckon not to high estate. Milton. 3. To repute; to set in the number or rank of. He was reckoned among the transgressors. — Luke xxiii. 4. To make account or reckoning of. Rom. iv.

RECK/ON, v. i. To reason with one's self and conclude from arguments. 1 reckoned till morning, that as a lioe, so will he break all my bouce. — Is. xxxviii. 2. To charge to account; with on. I call posterity Into the debt, and reckon on her head. B. Jonson. 3. To pay a penalty; to be answerable; with for. If they fall in their bounden duty, they shall reckon for it one day. Shakespeare. 4. To think; to suppose; as, I reckon he has arrived. [In this last sense, the word is provincial in England, and is used to an excess in the middle and southern parts of the United States, corresponding to that of guesst in the northern. — Ed.] To reckon with; to state an account with another, compare it with his account, ascertain the amount of each, and the balance which one owes to the other. In this manner the country people of New England, who have mutual dealings, reckon with each other at the end of each year, or as often as they think fit. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. — Matt. xxv. 2. To call to punishment. God suffers the most grievous sins of particular persons to go unpunished in this world, because his justice will have another opportunity to meet and reckon with them. Tillotson.

assigned, as to a class, order, or cause; assigned by a court to persons appointed to decide.

RE-FER'R-I-BLE, a. That may be referred; refer-able. Bronen.

RE-FER'RING, ppr. Dismissing or directing to another for information; alluding; assigning, as to a class, order, cause, &c.; or assigning to private persons for decision.

RE-FIND', v. t. [rs and find.] To find again; to experience anew. Sandys.

RE-FINE', v. t. [Fr. raffiner; It. raffinare; Sp. and Port. refinar; rs and finer.]
1. To purify; in a general sense; applied to liquors, to dehydrate; to defecate; to clarify; to separate, as liquor, from all extraneous matter. In this sense, the verb is used with propriety, but it is customary to use FINE.

2. Applied to metals, to separate the metallic substance from all other matter, whether another metal or alloy, or any earthy substance; in short, to detach the pure metal from all extraneous matter.
I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined.—Zech. xiii.

3. To purify, as manners, from what is gross, clownish, or vulgar; to polish; to make elegant.
We expect to see refined manners in courts.

4. To purify, as language, by removing vulgar words and barbarisms.

5. To purify, as taste; to give a nice and delicate perception of beauty and propriety in literature and the arts.

6. To purify, as the mind or moral principles; to give or implant in the mind a nice perception of truth, justice, and propriety, in commerce and social intercourse. This nice perception of what is right constitutes rectitude of principle, or moral refinement of mind; and a correspondent practice of social duties constitutes rectitude of conduct or purity of morals. Hence we speak of a refined mind, refined manners, refined principles.

To refine the heart or soul; to cleanse it from all carnal or evil affections and desires, and implant in it holy or heavenly affections

RE-FINE, v. i. To improve in accuracy, delicacy, or in any thing that constitutes excellence.

RE-GAIN'ING, pp. Gaining anew; recovering.

REG'AL, a. [Fr., from L. regalis, from rex, Saxon, raja, connected with rego, to govern; Sax. reccan or reccan, to say, to reck, to reckon, to rule, to direct; the root of right, L. rectus, Sax. reht. See RECK and RECKON.]

Pertaining to a king; kingly; royal; as, a regal title; regal authority; regal state, pomp, or splendor; regal power or sway. But we say, a regal or kingly government, not a regal one. We never say, a regal territory, regal dominions, regal army, or regal navy. Regal expresses what is more personal.

RE-GALE', n. [See the verb, below.] A magnificent entertainment or treat given to ambassadors and other persons of distinction. Encyc.

RE-GALE, v. t. [Fr. regaler; Sp. regalar, to regale, to refresh, entertain, caress, cajole, delight, cherish; regalarse, to entertain one's self, to take pleasure, also to melt, to be dissolved; Port. regalar, to regale, to treat daintily, to delight; It. regalare, to present with gifts, to regale, to season. This word is probably a compound of re and the root It. gallaria, a transport of joy, gallare, to exult, gala, ornament, Port. galhofa, mirth, good cheer, Sp. gallardo, gay, Fr. gallard, &c. In Russ. jaluyi signifies to regale, to gratify with presents, to visit, &c. The primary sense is, to excite, to rouse and be brisk, or to shoot, leap, dart, or rush. We probably see the same root in the Eng. gale, gallant, Gr. γαλλιαυω, Fr. joli, Eng. jolly, and in many other words.]

To refresh; to entertain with something that delights; to gratify, as the senses; as, to regals the taste, the eye, or the ear. The birds of the forest regale us with their songs.

7. To open; to loose. Milton.

8. To make languid.

RE-LAX, v. i. To abate in severity; to become more mild or less rigorous.

In others she relaxed again,
And governed with a looser rein. Prior.

2. To remit in close attention. It is useful for the student to relax often, and give himself to exercise and amusements.

RE-LAX, n. Relaxation. [Not used.] Fellham.

RE-LAX'ABLE, a. That may be relaxed.

RE-LAX'ANT, a. A medicine that relaxes or opens.

RE-LAX'ATION, n. [Fr. from L. relaxatio.]

1. The act of slackening or remitting tension; as, a relaxation of the muscles, fibers, or nerves; a relaxation of the whole system. Bacon. Encyc.

2. Cessation of restraint. Burket.

3. Remission or abatement of rigor; as, a relaxation of the law. Swift.

4. Remission of attention or application; as, a relaxation of mind, study, or business.

5. An opening or loosening.

REL'A-TIVE, a. Having the quality of relaxing. [See Laxative.]

RE-LAX'ING, ppr. Slackening; loosening; remitting; or abating in rigor, severity, or attention; rendering languid.

RE-LAX'ING, a. Tending to relax; adapted to weaken the solids; as, a relaxing medicine.

RE-LAY, n. [Fr. relais.]

1. A supply of horses placed on the road to be in readiness to relieve others, that a traveler may proceed without delay.

2. A supply of hunting dogs kept in readiness at certain places to pursue the game, when the dogs that have been in pursuit are weary.

3. Any thing laid up or kept in store; as, relays of joy. [Rare.]
 RE-LAY', v. t. [re and lay.] To lay again; to lay a second time; as, to relay a pavement. Smollett.

RE-LAY'ING, ppr. Laying a second time.
 RE-LEASE'-ABLE, a. That may be released.

RE-LEASE', (re-lease'), v. t. [This is usually derived from Fr. relâcher, to slacken, to relax, it. rilassare and rilasciare, and these words have the sense of relax; but the English word has not the sense of relax, but of re and lease, from Fr. laisser, Eng. let, a word that has no connection with relax. So in G. Freilassen, D. erhalten; free and let. If it is from relâcher, it has undergone a strange alteration.]

1. To set free from restraint of any kind, either physical or moral; to liberate from prison, confinement, or servitude. Matt. xv. Mark xv.
 2. To free from pain, care, trouble, grief, &c.
 3. To free from obligation or penalty; as, to release one from debt, from a promise, or covenant.
 4. To quit; to let go, as a legal claim; as, to release a debt or forfeiture. Deut. xv.
 5. To discharge or relinquish a right to lands or tenements, by conveying it to another that has some right or estate in possession, as when the person in remainder releases his right to the tenant in possession; when one coparcener releases his right to the other; or the mortgagee releases his claim to the mortgagor.

6. To relax. [Not in use.] Hooker.
 RE-LEASE', n. Liberation or discharge from restraint of any kind, as from confinement or bondage.
 2. Liberation from care, pain, or any burden.
 3. Discharge from obligation or responsibility, as from debt, penalty, or claim of any kind; acquittance.

In law, a release, or deed of release, is a conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another who has some estate in possession; a quitclaim. The efficient words in such an instrument are, "remised, released, and forever quitclaimed."

RE-LEASE'ED, (re-lease'), pp. Set free from confinement; freed from obligation or liability; freed from pain; quitclaimed.

RE-LEASE'EE', n. A person to whom a release is given.

RE-LEASE'MENT, n. The act of releasing from confinement or obligation. Milton.

RE-LEASE'ER, n. One who releases.

RE-LEASE'ING, ppr. Liberating from confinement or restraint; freeing from obligation or responsibility, or from pain or other evil; quitclaiming.

RE-LE-GATE, v. t. [L. relego; re and lego to send.] To banish; to send into exile.

RE-LE-GATE'D, pp. Sent into exile.

RE-LE-GATION, ppr. Banishing.

RE-LE-GATION, n. [L. relegatio.] The act of banishment; exile. Aylife.

RE-LENT', n. s. [Fr. relentir; Sp. relentir; It. relentare; Sp. ablandar; Port. abrandar; the two latter from blando, L. blandus, which unites the L. blandus with lentus. The English is from re and L. lentus, gentle, pliant, slow, the primary sense of which is soft or yielding. The L. lentus is probably of the same family. See BLAND.]

1. To soften; to become less rigid or hard; to give. In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bocon.

When opening buds salute the welcome day,
 And earth, relenting, feels the genial ray. Pope.

[This sense of the word is admissible in poetry, but is not in common use.]

2. To grow moist; to deliquesce; applied to salts; as, the relenting of the air. Bocon.

Sak of tartar—placed in a cellar, will begin to relent. Boyle.

[This sense is not in use.]

3. To become less intense. [Little used.] Sidney.

4. To soften in temper; to become more mild and tender; to feel compassion. [This is the usual sense of the word.]

Can you behold
 My tears, and not once relent? Shak.

RE-LENT', v. t. To slacken. And oftentimes he would relent his pace. [Obs.] Spenser.

2. To soften; to mollify. [Obs.] Spenser.

RE-LENT', pp. Dissolved. [Obs.] Spenser.

RE-LENT', n. Remission; stay. [Obs.] Spenser.

RE-LENT'ED, pp. Softened in temper.

RE-LENT'ING, ppr. Softening in temper; becoming more mild or compassionate.

RE-LENT'ING, n. The act of becoming more mild or compassionate.

RE-LENT'LESS, a. Unmoved by pity; un pitying; insensible to the distresses of others; destitute of tenderness; as, a prey to relentless despotism.

For this th' ever king power employs his darts,
 Thus th' persistent, relentless in his ire. Dryden.

Relentless thoughts, in Milton, may signify unremitted, intently fixed on disquieting objects. Johnson.

[This sense of the word is unusual, and not to be countenanced.]

RE-LENT'LESS-LY, adv. Without pity. Ed. Rec.

RE-LENT'LESS-NESS, n. The quality of being unmoved by pity. Milman.

RE-LES-SEE', n. [See RELEASE.] The person to whom a release is executed.

RE-LES-SOR', n. The person who executes a release.

There must be a privity of estate between the releasor and releasee. Blackstone.

RE-LET', v. t. To let anew, as a house.

RE-LE-VANCE, } n. [See RELEVANT.] The state
 RE-LE-VAN-CY, } of being relevant, or of affording relief or aid.

2. Pertinence; applicableness.

3. In Scots law, sufficiency to infer the conclusion.

RE-LE-VANT', a. [Fr. from L. relevor, to relieve, to advance, to raise; re and levo, to raise.]

1. Relieving; lending aid or support. Pownall.

2. Pertinent; applicable. The testimony is not relevant to the case; the argument is not relevant to the question.

[This is the sense in which the word is now generally used.]

3. Sufficient to support the cause. Scots Law.

RE-LE-VATION, n. A raising or lifting up. [Not in use.]

RE-LI'-ABLE, a. That may be relied on or trusted.

RE-LI'-ABLE-NESS, } n. The state of being reli-
 RE-LI'-A-BIL-I-TY, } able.

RE-LI'-ANCE, n. [from rely.] Rest or repose of mind, resulting from a full belief of the veracity or integrity of a person, or of the certainty of a fact; trust; confidence; dependence. We may have perfect reliance on the promises of God; we have reliance on the testimony of witnesses; we place reliance on men of known integrity, or on the strength and stability of government.

RE-LI'-C, n. [Fr. relique; L. reliquia, from relinquo, to leave; re and linquo.]

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest; as, the relics of a town; the relics of magnificence; the relics of antiquity. The relics of saints are held in great veneration by the Roman Catholics.

2. The body of a deceased person; a corpse. [Usually in the plural.] Dryden. Pope.

RE-LI'-C-LY, adv. In the manner of relics. [Little used.]

RE-LI'-CT, n. [L. relictus, relicta, from relinquo, to leave.]

A widow; a woman whose husband is dead. Sprat. Garth.

RE-LI'-CTED, n. In law, left uncovered, as land by the retrocession of the sea or other water. Bouvier.

RE-LI'-CTION, n. In law, land left uncovered by the retrocession of the sea or other water. Bouvier.

RE-LI'-ED, (re-lid'), pp. Reposed on something, as the mind; confided in; depended.

RE-LI'-EF, (re-leaf'), n. [Fr. relief; It. rilievo, rilievato, from relevare, to raise, to lift, to remove; Sp. relieve, relievar; re and levar, to raise.]

1. The removal, in whole or in part, of any evil that afflicts the body or mind; the removal or alleviation of pain, grief, want, care, anxiety, toil, or distress, or of any thing oppressive or burdensome, by which some ease is obtained. Rest gives relief to the body when weary; an anodyne gives relief from pain; the sympathy of friends affords some relief to the distressed; a loan of money to a man embarrassed may afford him a temporary relief; medicines which will not cure a disease sometimes give a partial relief. A complete relief from the troubles of life is never to be expected.

2. That which mitigates or removes pain, grief, or other evil. Dryden.

3. The release, as of sentinels, from some post or duty, and the substitution of others; also, the person or persons thus substituted.

4. In sculpture, &c., the projection or prominence of a figure above or beyond the ground or plane on which it is formed. Relief is of three kinds; high relief, (alto relievo), low relief, (basso relievo), and demi relief, (demi relievo). The difference is in the degree of projection. High relief is formed from nature, as when a figure stands completely out from the ground, being attached to it in only a few places. Low relief is when the figure projects but little, as in medals, festoons, foliages, and other ornaments. Demi relief is when one half of the figure rises from the plane. Brandt.

5. In pointing, the appearance of projection, or the degree of boldness which a figure exhibits to the eye at a distance.

6. In feudal law, a fine or composition which the heir of a tenant, holding by knight's service or other tenure, paid to the lord, at the death of the ancestor, for the privilege of taking up the estate which, on strict feudal principles, had lapsed or fallen to the lord on the death of the tenant. This relief consisted of horses, arms, money, and the like, the amount of which was originally arbitrary, but afterward fixed at a certain rate by law. It is not payable, unless the heir, at the death of his ancestor, had attained to the age of twenty-one years. Blackstone. Encyc.

7. A remedy, partial or total, for any wrong suffered; redress; indemnification. He applied to chancery, but could get no relief; he petitioned the legislature, and obtained relief.

8. The exposure of any thing by the proximity of something else. Johnson.

RE-LI'-ER, n. [from rely.] One who relies, or places full confidence in.

RE-LI-EV'-ABLE, a. Capable of being relieved; that may receive relief. Itala.

RE-LI-EV'-E, v. t. [Fr. reliever; L. relievo. See RE-LIEVE.]

1. To free, wholly or partially, from pain, grief, want, anxiety, care, toil, trouble, burden, oppression, or any thing that is considered to be an evil; to ease of any thing that pains the body or distresses the mind. Repose relieves the wearied body; a supply of provisions relieves a family in want; medicines may relieve the sick man, even when they do not cure him; we all desire to be relieved from anxiety and from heavy taxes; law or duty, or both, require that we should relieve the poor and destitute.

2. To alleviate or remove; as when we say, to relieve pain or distress; to relieve the wants of the poor.

3. To release from a post or station, as sentinels, a guard, or ships, and station others in their place. Sentinels are generally relieved every two hours; a guard is usually relieved once in twenty-four hours.

4. To right; to ease of any burden, wrong, or oppression by judicial or legislative interposition, by the removal of a grievance, by indemnification for losses and the like.

5. To abate the inconvenience of any thing by change, or by the interposition of something dissimilar. The moon relieves the luster of the sun with a milder light.

The poet must not enumerate his poem with too much histories, but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison.

6. To assist; to support. Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass saunter, yet they are plausible together. Brown.

7. Set off by contrast. [Used in respect to painting and picturesque effect.] Walter Scott.

RE-LI-EV'-ED, pp. Freed from pain or other evil; eased or cured; aided; succeeded; dismissed from watching.

2. Alleviated or removed, as pain or distress.

3. Set off by contrast.

RE-LI-EV'-ER, n. One that relieves; he or that which gives ease.

RE-LI-EV'-ING, ppr. or a. Removing pain or distress, or abating the violence of it; easing; curing; assisting; dismissing from a post, as a sentinel; supporting. Relieving arch. See DISCHARGING ARCH.

RE-LI-EV'O, (re-lee'vo), n. [It.] Relief; prominence of figures in statuary, architecture, &c.; apparent prominence of figures in painting.

RE-LI-GI'-F', (re-lit'e') v. t. [re and light.] To light anew; to illuminate again.

2. To rekindle; to set on fire again.

RE-LI-GI'-TED, pp. Lighted anew; rekindled.

RE-LI-GI'-TING, ppr. Lighting again; rekindling.

RE-LI-GI'-ON, (re-ligh'nn), n. [Fr. and Sp. religion; It. religione; L. religio, from religio, to bind anew; re and ligo, to bind. This word seems originally to have signified an oath or vow to the gods, or the obligation of such an oath or vow, which was held very sacred by the Romans.]

1. Religion, in a comprehensive sense, includes a belief in the being and perfections of God, in the revelation of his will to man, in man's obligation to obey his commands, in a state of reward and punishment, and in man's accountability to God; and also true godliness or piety of life, with the practice of all moral duties. It therefore comprehends theology as a system of doctrines or principles, as well as practical piety; for the practice of moral duties without a belief in a divine lawgiver, and without reference to his will or commands, is not religion.

2. Religion, as distinct from theology, is godliness or real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow-men, in obedience to divine command, or from love to God and his law. James 1.

Religion will attend you—as a pleasant and useful companion, in every proper place and every temperate occupation of life. Buckminster.

3. Religion, as distinct from virtus or morality, consists in the performance of the duties we owe directly to God, from a principle of obedience to his will. Hence we often speak of religion and virtus as different branches of one system, or the duties of the first and second tables of the law.

Let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Washington.

4. Any system of faith and worship. In this sense, religion comprehends the belief and worship of pagans and Muhammedans, as well as of Christians; any religion consisting in the belief of a superior power or powers governing the world, and in the worship of such power or powers. Thus we speak of the religion of the Turks, of the Hindoos, of the Indians, &c., as well as of the Christian religion. We speak of false religion, as well as of true religion.

5. The rites of religion; in the plural. Milton.
RE-LIG'ION-ARY, a. Relating to religion; pious. [Not used.] Bp. Barlow.

RE-LIG'ION-ISM, n. The practice of religion; adherence to religion. Stewart.

RE-LIG'ION-IST, n. A bigot to any religious persuasion. Swift.

RE-LIG'IOUS, (re-lj'us,) a. [Fr. religieux; L. religiosus.]

1. Pertaining or relating to religion; as, a religious society; a religious sect; a religious place; religious subjects.

2. Pious; godly; loving and reverencing the Supreme Being and obeying his precepts; as, a religious man.

3. Devoted to the practice of religion; as, a religious life.

4. Teaching religion; containing religious subjects or the doctrines and precepts of religion, or the discussion of topics of religion; as, a religious book.

5. Exact; strict; such as religion requires; as, a religious observance of vows or promises.

6. Engaged by vows to a monastic life; as, a religious order or fraternity.

7. Appropriated to the performance of sacred or religious duties; as, a religious house. Law.

RE-LIG'IOUS, n. A person bound by monastic vows, or sequestered from secular concerns and devoted to a life of piety and devotion; a monk or friar; a nun. [Little used.]

RE-LIG'IOUS-LY, adv. Piously; with love and reverence to the Supreme Being; in obedience to the divine commands. Dryden.

2. According to the rites of religion. Shak.

3. Reverently; with veneration. Duppa.

4. Exactly; strictly; conscientiously; as, a vow or promise religiously observed.

RE-LIG'IOUS-NESS, n. The quality or state of being religious.

RE-LIN'QUENT, a. Relinquishing. As a noun, one who relinquishes.

RE-LIN'QUISH, (re-link'wish,) v. t. [L. relinquo; re and linquo, to leave, to fail or faint; from the same root as liquo, ligo, to melt or dissolve, deliquium, a fainting, fr. legham, to loact. Hence the sense is to withdraw or give way; to relinquish is to recede from. It is probably allied to flag and slack; W. lac, lacio, to slacken; ligu, to flag. Class I.g.]

1. To withdraw from; to leave; to quit. It may be to forsake or abandon, but it does not necessarily express the sense of the latter. A man may relinquish an enterprise for a time, or with a design never to resume it. In general, to relinquish is to leave without the intention of resuming, and equivalent to forsake, but is less emphatical than abandon and desert.

They placed Irish tenants on the lands relinquished by the English. Daniel.

2. To forbear; to withdraw from; as, to relinquish the practice of intemperance; to relinquish the rites of a church. Hooker.

3. To give up; to renounce a claim to; as, to relinquish a debt.

To relinquish book, or to give up; to release; to surrender; as, to relinquish a claim to another.

RE-LY', v. t. [re and lie, or from the root of lis, lay.]

To rest on something, as the mind when satisfied of the veracity, integrity, or ability of persons, or of the certainty of facts or of evidence; to have confidence in; to trust in; to depend; with on. We rely on the promise of a man who is known to be upright; a prince relies on the affections of his subjects for support, and on the strength of his army for success in war; above all things, we rely on the mercy and promises of God. That which is the ground of confidence, is a certainty or full conviction that satisfies the mind and leaves it at rest, or undisturbed by doubt.

Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the Lord thy God. — 2 Chron. xvi.

RE-LY'ING, pp. Resting on something, as the mind; confiding in; trusting in; depending.

RE-MADE', pret. and pp. of REMAKE.

RE-MAIN', v. i. [L. remanere; re and maneo, Gr. μένω, μένω; Pers. ماندن mandan, and مانیدن manidan, to remain, to be left, to delay, to be like, to disjoin, to leave. The sense seems to be, to draw out in time, or to be fixed, or to continue. (See analogies in LEAVE.) The sense of likeness may be a drawing.]

1. To continue; to rest or abide in a place for a time indefinite. They remained a month in Rome. We remain at an inn for a night, for a week, or a longer time.

Remain a widow at thy father's house, till Shebah my son be grown. — Gen. xxxvii.

2. To be left after others have withdrawn; to rest or abide in the same place when others remove, or are lost, destroyed, or taken away.

Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. — Gen. vii.

3. To be left after a part or others have passed. Let our remaining time or years be employed in active duties.

4. To continue unchanged, or in a particular state. He remains stupid; he remains in a low state of health.

5. Not to be lost; not to escape; not to be forgotten. All my wisdom remained with me. Ecclesi.

1. Notice or observation; as, to elude conjecture and remark. Cowper.
2. Particularly, notice or observation expressed in words or writing; as, the remarks of an advocate; the remarks made in conversation; the judicious or the uncandid remarks of a critic. A remark is not always expressed, for we say, a man makes his remarks on a preacher's sermon while he is listening to it. In this case the notice is silent, a mere act of the mind.

RE-MARK', v. t. [Fr. remarquer.]

1. To observe; to note in the mind; to take notice of without expression. I remarked the manner of the speaker; I remarked his elegant expressions.
2. To express in words or writing what one thinks or sees; to express observations; as, it is necessary to repeat what has been before remarked.
3. To mark; to point out; to distinguish. [Not in use.]

His manacles remark him. Milton.

RE-MARK'ABLE, a. [Fr. remarquable.]

1. Observable; worthy of notice. The remarkable that they talk most who have the least to say. Prior.
2. Extraordinary; unusual; that deserves particular notice, or that may excite admiration or wonder; as, the remarkable preservation of lives in shipwreck. The dark day, in May, 1780, was a remarkable phenomenon.

RE-MARK'ABLE-NESS, n. Observableness; worthiness of remark; the quality of deserving particular notice. Hammond.

RE-MARK'ABLY, adv. In a manner or degree worthy of notice; as, the winters of 1825, 1826, and 1828, were remarkably free from snow. The winter of 1827 was remarkable for a great quantity of snow. 2. In an extraordinary manner.

RE-MARK'ED, (re-mark') pp. Noticed; observed; expressed in words or writing.

RE-MARK'ER, n. An observer; one who makes remarks. Watts.

RE-MARK'ING, pp. Observing; taking notice of; expressing in words or writing.

1. That which cures a disease; any medicine or application which puts an end to disease and restores health; with for; as, a remedy for the gout.
2. That which counteracts an evil of any kind; with for, to, or against; usually with for. Civil government is the remedy for the evils of natural liberty. What remedy can be provided for extravagance in dress? The man who shall invent an effectual remedy for intemperance will deserve every thing from his fellow-men.
3. That which cures unenslaving. Our griefs how evil, our remedies how slow! Prior.
4. That which repairs loss or disaster; reparation. In the death of a man there is no remedy. Wisdom.

RE-ME'D-Y, v. t. [Fr. remedier.]

1. To cure; to heal; as, to remedy a disease.
2. To cure; to remove, as an evil; as, to remedy grief; to remedy the evils of a war.
3. To repair; to remove mischief; in a very general sense.

RE-ME'D-Y-ING, pp. Curing; healing; removing; restoring from a bad to a good state.

RE-MELT', v. t. [re and melt.] To melt a second time.

RE-MELT'ED, pp. Melted again.

RE-MELT'ING, pp. Melting again.

RE-MEM'BER, v. t. [Norm. Remembre; Low L. rememoror; re and memor. See MEMOARY.]

1. To have in the mind an idea which had been in the mind before, and which recurs to the mind without effort. We are said to remember any thing, when the idea of it arises in the mind with the consciousness that we have had this idea before. Watts.
2. When we use effort to recall an idea, we are said to recollect. This distinction is not always observed. Hence, REMEMBRANCE is often used as synonymous with RECOLLECT, that is, to call to mind. We say, we can not remember a fact, when we mean we can not recollect it. Remember the days of old. — Deut. xxxii.
3. To bear or keep in mind; to attend to. Remember what I warn thee; shun to taste. Milton.
4. To preserve the memory of; to preserve from being forgotten. Let them have their wages duly paid, And something over to remember use. Shak.

9. To bear in mind with praise or admiration; to celebrate. 1 Chron. xvi.
10. To bear in mind with favor, care, and regard for the safety or deliverance of any one. Ps. lxxiv. Gen. viii. Gen. xix.
11. To bear in mind with intent to reward or punish. 3 John x. Jer. xxxi.
12. To bear in mind with confidence; to trust in. Ps. xx.
13. To bear in mind with the purpose of assisting or relieving. Gal. ii.
14. To bear in mind with reverence; to obey. Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth. — Eccles. xii.
15. To hear in mind with regard; to keep as sacred; to observe. Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy. — Ex. xx. To remember mercy, is to exercise it. Hab. iii.

RE-MEM'BER-ED, pp. Kept in mind; recollected.

RE-MEM'BER-ER, n. One that remembers. Wotton.

RE-MEM'BER-ING, pp. Having in mind.

RE-MEM'BRANCE, n. [Fr.] The retaining or having in mind an idea which had been present before, or an idea which had been previously received from an object when present, and which recurs to the mind afterward without the presence of its object. Technically, REMEMBRANCE differs from REMINISCENCE and RECOLLECTION, as the former implies that an idea occurs to the mind spontaneously, or without much mental exertion. The latter imply the power or the act of recalling ideas which do not spontaneously recur to the mind. The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance. — Ps. cxlii. Remembrance is when the same idea recurs, without the operation of the like object on the external sensory. Locke.

2. Transmission of a fact from one to another. Among the heavens the immortal fact displayed, Lest the remembrance of his grief should fall. Addison.

3. Account preserved; something to assist the memory. Those proceedings and remembrances are in the Tower. Hale.

RE-MOVE', v. i. To change place in any manner.

2. To go from one place to another. Prior.

3. To change the place of residence; as, to remove from New York to Philadelphia. Note.—The verb remove, in most of its applications, is synonymous with move, but not in all. Thus we do not apply remove to a mere change of posture, without a change of place or the seat of a thing. A man moves his head when he turns it, or his finger when he bends it, but he does not remove it. Remove usually or always denotes a change of place in a body, but we never apply it to a regular continued course or motion. We never say, the wind or water, or a ship, removes at a certain rate by the hour; but we say, a ship was removed from one place in a harbor to another. Move is a generic term, including the sense of remove, which is more generally applied to a change from one station or permanent position, stand, or seat, to another station. Chapman.

RE-MOVE', n. Change of place. Chapman.

[This form of expression is now obsolete.]

REP'ENTANCE, n. [Fr.] Sorrow for any thing done or said; the pain or grief which a person experiences in consequence of the injury or inconvenience produced by his own conduct.

“Repentance is the relinquishment of any practice, from the conviction that it has offended God. Sorrow, fear, and anxiety, are properly not parts, but adjuncts of repentance; yet they are too closely connected with it to be easily separated.”

2. In theology, repentance is distinguished into evangelical and legal. The former, usually called repentance, simply, is real penitence, sorrow, or deep contrition for sin, as an offense and dishonor to God, a violation of his holy law, and the basest ingratitude toward a Being of infinite benevolence. Evangelical repentance is accompanied and followed by amendment of life. The sorrow proceeding merely from the fear of punishment, is called legal repentance, as being excited by the terrors of legal penalties, and it may exist without an amendment of life.

Repentance is a change of mind, or a conversion from sin to God. Hammond.

Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation. — 2 Cor. vii. Matt. iii.

Govier.
RE-SEMBLANCE, (re-zem'bl), n. [Fr. ressemblance. See RESEMBLE.]
1. Likeness; similitude, either of external form or of qualities. We observe a resemblance between persons, a resemblance in shape, a resemblance in manners, a resemblance in dispositions. Painting and poetry bear a great resemblance to each other, as one object of both is to please. Dryden.
2. Something similar; similitude; representation.
These sensible things which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual. Hooker.
Fairer resemblance of thy Maker fair. Milton.
RE-SEMBLE, (re-zem'bl), v. t. [Fr. ressembler; It. rassembrare; Sp. asemejar; Port. assemelhar. See SIMILAR.]
1. To have the likeness of; to bear the similitude of something, either in form, figure, or qualities. One man may resemble another in features; he may resemble a third person in temper or deportment.
Each one resembled the children of a king. — Judges viii.
2. To liken; to compare; to represent as like something else.
The torrid parts of Africa are resembled to a lizard's skin, the distance of whose spots represents the dispersed situation of the habitations. Brewster.
RE-SEMBLED, pp. Likened; compared.
RE-SEMBLING, pp. Having the likeness of; likening; comparing.
RE-SEND, v. t.; pret. and pp. Resent. [re and send.]
To send again; to send back. [Not in use.]
Shak.
RE-SENT, (re-zen't), v. t. [Fr. ressentir, to perceive again, to have a deep sense of; re and sentir, to perceive. L. sentio; It. sentire, to resent, to hear again, to resound; Sp. resentirse, to resent, also, to begin to give way or to fail; resentimiento, resentment, a flaw or crack.]
Literally, to have a corresponding sentiment or feeling. Hence,
1. To take well; to receive with satisfaction. [Obs.]
Bacon.
2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront; to be in some degree angry or provoked at.
And anger wouldst resent the offered wrong. Milton.
RE-SENTED, pp. Taken ill; being in some measure angry at.
RE-SENTER, n. One who resents; one that feels an injury deeply.
2. In the sense of one that takes a thing well. [Obs.]
Barron.
RE-SENTFUL, a. Easily provoked to anger; of an irritable temper.
RE-SENTFUL-LY, adv. With resentment.
RE-SENTING, pp. Taking ill; feeling angry at.
RE-SENTING-LY, adv. With a sense of wrong or affront; with a degree of anger.
2. With deep sense or strong perception. [Obs.]
More.
RE-SENTIVE, a. Easily provoked or irritated; quick to feel an injury or affront. Thomson.
RE-SENTMENT, n. [Fr. ressentiment; It. risentimento; Sp. resentimiento.]
1. The excitement of passion which proceeds from a sense of wrong offered to ourselves or to those who are connected with us; anger. This word usually expresses less excitement than ANGER, though it is often synonymous with it. It expresses much less than WRATH, EXASPERATION, and IGNORATION. In this use, resentment is not the sense or perception of injury, but the excitement which is the effect of it.

Can heavenly minds such high resentment above? Dryden.
2. Strong perception of good. [Not in use.]
More.
RESERVATION, n. [Fr., from L. reservo.]
1. The act of reserving or keeping back or in the mind; reserve; concealment or withholding from disclosure; as, mental reservation.
2. Something withheld, either not expressed or disclosed, or not given up or brought forward.
With reservation of a hundred knights. Shak.
In the United States, a tract of the public land reserved for some special use, as for schools, the use of Indians, &c.
3. Custody; state of being treasured up or kept in store. Shak.
4. In law, a clause or part of an instrument by which something is reserved, not conceded or granted; also, a proviso.
Mental reservation, is the withholding or failing to disclose something that affects a statement, promise, &c., and which, if disclosed, would materially vary its import.
Mental reservation is the refuge of hypocrites. Encyc.
RESERVATIVE, a. Keeping; reserving.
RESERVATORY, n. [from reservo.] A place in which things are reserved or kept. Woodward.
RESERVE, (rez-zerv'), v. t. [Fr. reserver; L. reservo; re and servo, to keep.]
1. To keep in store for future or other use; to withhold from present use for another purpose. The farmer sells his corn, reserving only what is necessary for his family.
Hast thou seen the treasures of hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? — Job xxxviii.
2. To keep; to hold; to retain.
Will he reserve his anger forever? — Jer. iii.
3. To lay up and keep for a future time. 2 Pet. ii.
Reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.
RESERVE, (rez-zerv'), n. That which is kept for other or future use; that which is retained from present use or disposal.
The virgins, beside the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillotson.
2. Something in the mind withheld from disclosure.
However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations. Addison.
3. Exception; a withholding.
In knowledge so despaired?
Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.
4. Exception in favor.
Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve. Rogers.
5. Restraint of freedom in words or actions; backwardness; caution in personal behavior. Reserve may proceed from modesty, bashfulness, prudence, prudery, or silliness.
My soul, surprised, and from her sex disjoined,
Lest all reserves, and all the sex behind. Prior.
6. In law, reservation.
In reserve; in store; in keeping for other or future use. He has large quantities of wheat in reserve. He has evidence or arguments in reserve.
Body of reserves; in military affairs, a select body of troops in the rear of an army drawn up for battle, reserved to sustain the other lines as occasion may require; a body of troops kept for an exigency.
RESERVED, pp. Kept for another or future use; retained.
2. a. Restrained from freedom in words or actions; backward in conversation; not free or frank.
To all obliging, yet reserved to all.
Nothing reserved or sullen was to see. Dryden.

RE-SH/ANCE, n. [See RES/IENT.] Residence; abode. [Obs.] Bacon.

RE-S/ANT, a. [Norm. resiant, resceant, from the L. vesideo. See RES/IORE.] Resident; dwelling; present in a place. [Obs.] Kaolles.

RE-S/IDE, (-re-zide') v. i. [Fr. resider; L. vesideo, resido; re and sedeo, to sit, to settle.]

1. To dwell permanently or for a length of time; to have a settled abode for a time. The peculiar uses of this word are to be noticed. When the word is applied to the natives of a state, or others who dwell in it as permanent citizens, we use it only with reference to the part of a city or country in which a man dwells. We do not say generally, that Englishmen reside in England, but a particular citizen resides in London or York, or at such a house, in such a street, in the Strand, &c.

When the word is applied to strangers or travelers, we do not say a man resides in an inn for a night, but he resided in London or Oxford a month or a year; or he may reside in a foreign country a great part of his life. A man lodges, stays, remains, abides, for a day or very short time; but reside implies a longer time, though not definite.

2. To sink to the bottom of liquors; to settle. [Obs.] Boyle.

[In this sense, SUBSIDIO is now used.]

RES/IDENCE, n. [Fr.] The act of abiding or

RES/IDEN-CY, } dwelling in a place for some continuance of time; as, the residence of an American in France or Italy for a year.

The confessor had often made considerable residences in Normandy. Hale.

2. The place of abode; a dwelling; a habitation. Caprea had been — the residence of Tiberius for several years. Anon.

3. That which falls to the bottom of liquors. [Obs.] Bacon.

4. In the canon and common law, the abode of a person or incumbent on his benefice; opposed to Non-Residence. Blackstone.

RES/IDENT, a. [L. residens; Fr. resident.] Dwelling or having an abode in a place for a continuance of time, but not definite; as, a minister resident at the court of St. James. A B is now resident in South America.

Residuary legatee; in law, the legatee to whom is bequeathed the part of goods and estate which remains after deducting all the debts and specific legacies. Blackstone.

RES/IDUE, (-rez-ide') n. [Fr. residu; L. residuus.] 1. That which remains after a part is taken, separated, removed, or designated.

The locusts shall eat the residue of that which has escaped. — Ex. x.

The residue of them will I deliver to the sword. — Jer. xv.

2. The balance or remainder of a debt or account, or of the estate of a testator after the payment of debts and legacies.

RES/ID/U-UM, n. [L.] Residue; that which is left after any process of separation or purification.

2. In law, the part of an estate or of goods and chattels remaining after the payment of debts and legacies. Blackstone.

RE-SIEGE, v. t. [re and siege.] To seat again; to reinstate. [Obs.] Spenser.

RE-SIGN, (-re-zine') v. t. [Fr. resigner; L. resignuo; re and signo, to sign. The radical sense of sign is, to send, to drive, hence, to act. To resign is to send back or send away.]

1. To give up; to give back, as an office or commission, to the person or authority that conferred it; hence, to surrender an office or charge in a formal manner; as, a military officer resigns his commission; a prince resigns his crown.

Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jovo
His thunder to the god of love. Denham.

2. To withdraw, as a claim. He resigns all pretensions to skill.

3. To yield; as, to resign the judgment to the direction of others. Locke.

2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence; as, a blind resignation to the authority of other men's opinions. Locke.

3. Quiet submission to the will of Providence; submission without dissent, and with entire acquiescence in the divine dispensations. This is Christian resignation.

RE-SIGN/ED, (-re-zind') pp. Given up; surrendered; yielded.

2. a. Submissive to the will of God.

RE-SIGN/ED-LY, adv. With submission.

RE-SIGN/ER, n. One that resigns.

RE-SIGN/ING, pp. Giving up; surrendering; submitting.

RES-IGNMENT, n. The act of resigning. [Obs.]

RE-S/ILE, v. i. [L. resilio.] To start back; to recede from a purpose. [Little used.] Ellis.

RE-S/IL/I-ENCE, } n. [L. resiliens, resilio; re and RES/IL/I-EN-CY, } salio, to spring.]

The act of leaping or springing back, or the act of rebounding; as, the resilience of a ball or of sound. Bacon.

RE-S/IL/I-ENT, (-re-zil'-e-ent), a. [L. resiliens.] Leaping or starting back; rebounding.

RES-IL-I/UTION, (-rez-lish'un), n. [L. resilio.] The act of springing back; resilience.

RES/IN, n. [Fr. resine; L. It. and Sp. resina; It. voisin; Gr. ρῆρην, probably from ρῆο, to flow.] Resins are solid, inflammable substances, which are insoluble in water, but soluble in alcohol and in essential oils. When cold, they are more or less brittle and translucent, and of a color inclining to yellow. When pure, they are nearly insipid and inodorous. They are non-conductors of electricity, and when excited by friction, their electricity is negative. They are heavier than water, and they melt by heat. They combine with the alkalies, performing the function of weak acids, and forming soaps. They are soluble in many of the acids, and convertible by some into other peculiar acids. They frequently exude from trees in combination with essential oils, and in a liquid or semi-liquid state. They are composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, and are supposed to be formed by the oxygenation of the essential oils. There is a great number and variety of the resins.

RES/IN-EX-TRACT/IVE, a. Designating extractive matter in which resin predominates.

RES-IN-IF-ER-OUS, a. [L. resina and fero, to produce.] Yielding resin; as, a resiniferous tree or vessel. Gregory.

RES/IN-I-FORM, a. Having the form of resin. Cyc.

RES-IN-O-E-LEC/TRIC, a. Containing or exhibiting negative electricity, or that kind which is produced by the friction of resinous substances. Ure.

RES/IN-OUS, a. Partaking of the qualities of resin; like resin. Resinous substances are combustible.

Resinous electricity, is that electricity which is excited by rubbing bodies of the resinous kind. It is also called negative electricity, and is opposed to vitreous or positive electricity. Olmed.

RES/IN-OUS-LY, adv. By means of resin; as, resinously electrified. Gregory.

RES/IN-OUS-NESS, n. The quality of being resinous.

RES/IN-Y, a. Like resin, or partaking of its qualities.

RES-IP-ISC/ENCE, n. [Fr. from L. resipisco, from resipio; re and scipio, to derive.] Properly, wisdom obtained from severe experience; hence, repentance. [Little used.]

RE-SIST, (-re-zist') v. t. [L. resisto; re and sisto, to stand; Fr. resister; Sp. resistir; It. resistere.]

1. Literally, to stand against; to withstand; hence, to act in opposition, or to oppose. A dam or mound resists a current of water passively, by standing unmoved and interrupting its progress. An army resists the progress of an enemy actively, by encountering and defeating it. We resist measures by argument or remonstrance.

Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? — Rom. ix.

2. To strive against; to endeavor to counteract, defeat, or frustrate.

Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost. — Acts vii.

3. To haffle; to disappoint.

God resisted the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. — James iv.

RE-SIST, v. i. To make opposition. Shak.

RE-SIST/ANCE, n. The act of resisting; opposition. Resistance is passive, as that of a fixed body which interrupts the passage of a moving body; or active, as in the exertion of force to stop, repel, or defeat progress or designs.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression; that power of a body which acts in opposition to the impulse or pressure of another, or which prevents the effect of another power; as, the resistance of a ball which receives the force of another; the resistance of wood to a cutting instrument; the resistance of air to the motion of a cannon-ball, or of water to the motion of a ship.

RE-SIST/ANT, n. He or that which resists. Pearson.

RE-SIST/ED, pp. Opposed; counteracted; withstood.

RE-SIST/ER, n. One that opposes or withstands.

RE-SIST-I-BIL/I-TY, } n. The quality of resist-

RE-SIST-I-BLE-NESS, } ing.

The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility together in the same subject. Locke.

6. Fixed purpose or determination of mind; as, a resolution to reform our lives; a resolution to undertake an expedition. Locke.

7. The effect of fixed purpose; firmness, steadiness or constancy in execution, implying courage. They who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things. Clarendon.

8. Determination of a cause in a court of justice; as, a judicial resolution. Hale.

[But this word is now seldom used to express the decision of a judicial tribunal. We use JUDGMENT, DECISION, or DETERMINATION.]

9. The determination or decision of a legislative body, or a formal proposition offered for legislative determination. We call that a resolution, which is reduced to form and offered to a legislative house for consideration, and we call it a resolution when adopted. We say, a member moved certain resolutions; the house proceeded to consider the resolutions offered; they adopted or rejected the resolutions.

10. The formal determination of any corporate body, or of any association of individuals; as, the resolutions of a town or other meeting.

11. In mathematics, solution; an orderly enumeration of several things to be done, to obtain what is required in a problem. Hutton.

12. In algebra, the resolution of an equation, is the same as reduction; the bringing of the unknown quantity by itself on one side, and all the known quantities on the other, without destroying the equation, by which is found the value of the unknown quantity. Day's Algebra.

13. Relaxation; a weakening. [Obs.] Brown. Resolution of a force, or of a motion; in mechanics, the separation of a single force or motion into two or more, which act in different directions. Olmsted.

RES-O-LUTION-ER, n. One who joins in the declaration of others. [Not in use.] Burnet.

RES-O-LU-TIVE, n. Having the power to dissolve or relax. [Not much used.] Johnson.

RE-SOLVA-BLE, n. That may be resolved or reduced to first principles.

RE-SOLVA-BLE-NESS, n. State of being resolvable.

RE-SOLVE', (re-zolv') v. t. [L. resolvere; re and solvo, to loose; Fr. resoudre; It. risolvere; Sp. resolver.]

1. To separate the component parts of a compound substance; to reduce to first principles; as, to resolve a body into its component or constituent parts; to resolve a body into its elements.

RE-VENGE', (re-venj'), v. t. [Fr. revenger, venger; Sp. vengar; Port. vingar; L. vindex, vindico; It. vendicare. See VINDICATE.]
 1. To inflict pain or injury in return for an injury received.
 Note.—This word and avenge were formerly used as synonymous, and it is so used in the common version of the Scripture, and applied to the Supreme Being. "O Lord, revenge me of my persecutors." Jer. xv. In consequence of a distinction between avenge and revenge, which modern usage has introduced, the application of this word to the Supreme Being appears extremely harsh, irreverent, and offensive. Revenge is now used in an ill sense, for the infliction of pain maliciously or illegally; avenge for inflicting just punishment.
 2. According to modern usage, to inflict pain deliberately and maliciously, contrary to the laws of justice and humanity, in return for injury, pain, or evil received; to wreak vengeance spitefully on one who injures or offends. We say, to revenge an injury or insult, or, with the reciprocal pronoun, to revenge ourselves on an enemy or for an injury, that is, to take vengeance or satisfaction.
 3. To vindicate by punishment of an enemy.
 The gods are just, and will revenge our cause. Dryden.
 [According to modern usage, avenge should here be substituted for revenge.]

RE-VENGE', (re-venj'), n. [Fr. revanche; Arm. revanch.]
 1. Return of an injury; infliction of punishment. [Obs.]
 The beginning of revenges upon the enemy. — Deut. xxxii. 42.
 2. According to modern usage, a malicious or spiteful infliction of pain or injury, contrary to the laws of justice and Christianity, in return for an injury or offense. Revenge is dictated by passion; vengeance by justice.
 3. The passion which is excited by an injury done or an affront given; the desire of inflicting pain on one who has done an injury; as, to glut revenge.
Revenge, as the word is now understood, is always contrary to the precepts of Christ.
 The indulgence of revenge tends to make men more savage and cruel. Kames.

RE-VENGE'ED, pp. Punished in return for an injury; spitefully punished. The injury is revenged.

RE-VENGE'FUL, (re-venj'ful), a. Full of revenge or a desire to inflict pain or evil for injury received; spiteful; malicious; wreaking revenge.
 If thy vengeanceful heart can not forgive. Shak.

2. Vindictive; inflicting punishment.

RE-VENO'L, n. [Fr. revenir, from revenir, to return, L. revenio; re and venio, to come.]
 1. In a general sense, the annual rents, profits, interest, or issues, of any species of property, real or personal, belonging to an individual or to the public.

When used of individuals, it is equivalent to income. In modern usage, income is applied more generally to the rents and profits of individuals, and revenue to those of the state. In the latter case, revenue is, 2. The annual produce of taxes, excise, customs, duties, rents, &c., which a nation or state collects and receives into the treasury for public use.
 3. Return; reward; as, a rich revenue of praise.

RE-VERB', v. t. To reverberate. [Not in use.]

RE-VERB'ER-ATION, n. [Fr.; from reverberate.]
 The act of driving or sending back; particularly, the act of reflecting light and heat or repelling sound. Thus we speak of the reverberation of the rays of light from an object, the reverberation of sound in echoes, or the reverberation of heat or flame in a furnace.

RE-VERB'ER-A-TORY, a. Returning or driving back; as, a reverberatory furnace or kiln. Mason.

RE-VERB'ER-A-TORY, n. A furnace with a kind of dome that reflects the flame upon a vessel placed within it, so as to surround it. Nicholson.

RE-VERE', v. t. [Fr. reverer; It. reverere; L. revereor; re and vereor, to fear.]
 To regard with fear mingled with respect and affection; to venerate; to reverence; to honor in estimation.
 Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Adrian.

RE-VERE'D, pp. or a. Regarded with fear mingled with respect and affection.

RE-VER-ENCE, n. [Fr., from L. reverentia.]
 1. Fear mingled with respect and esteem; veneration.
 When quarrels and factions are carried openly, it is a sign that the reverence of government is lost. Escon.
 The fear acceptable to God, is a filial fear, an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.
Reverence is nearly equivalent to veneration, but expresses something less of the same emotion. It differs from awe, which is an emotion compounded of fear, dread, or terror, with admiration of something great, but not necessarily implying love or affection. We feel reverence for a parent, and for an upright magistrate, but we stand in awe of a tyrant. This distinction may not always be observed.
 2. An act of respect or obedience; a bow or courtesy. 2 Sam. ix. Dryden. Fairfax.
 3. A title of the clergy. Shak.
 4. A poetical title of a father.

RE-VER-ENCE, v. t. To regard with reverence; to regard with fear mingled with respect and affection. We reverence superiors for their age, their authority, and their virtues. We ought to reverence parents and upright judges and magistrates. We ought to reverence the Supreme Being, his word, and his ordinances.
 Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wise. Shak.
 They will reverence my son. — Matt. xxi.
 Let the wise see that she reverence her husband. — Eph. v.

REV-O-LUTION, n. [Fr., from L. revolutus, revolveo.]

1. In physics, rotation; the circular motion of a body on its axis; a course or motion which brings every point of the surface or periphery of a body back to the place at which it began to move; as, the revolution of a wheel; the diurnal revolution of the earth.

2. The motion of a body round any fixed point or center; as, the annual revolution of the earth or other planet in its orbit round the center of the system.

3. In geometry, the motion of a magnitude (as a point, line, or surface) about a point or line as its center or axis. A. D. Stanley.

4. Motion of any thing which brings it back to the same point or state; as, the revolution of day and night, or of the seasons.

5. Continued course marked by the regular return of years; as, the revolution of ages.

6. Space measured by some regular return of a revolving body, or of a state of things; as, the revolution of a day. Dryden.

7. In politics, a material or entire change in the constitution of government. Thus the revolution in England, in 1688, was produced by the abdication of King James II., the establishment of the house of Orange upon the throne, and the restoration of the constitution to its primitive state. The revolution in the United States of America, which began in 1775, effected the separation of the colonies from Great Britain. The revolution in France is, distinctively, that which began in 1789, and which caused the dethronement and death of Louis XVI. The revolution of the three days, in France, in 1830, was that which placed the family of Orleans on the throne.

8. Motion backward. Milton.

This word is used adjectively, as in the phrase revolution principles. Addison. Smollett.

REV-O-LUTION-A-RY, a. Pertaining to a revolution in government; as, a revolutionary war; revolutionary crimes or disorders. Burke.

REW, (rū) n. A row. [Not in use.] Spenser.

RE-WARD', v. t. [Norm. regarder, to allow; regardes, fees, allowances, perquisites, rewards; regardez, awarded. In these words there appears to be an alliance with regard. But in the Fr. and Norm. gardon, a reward; gardonneur, to reward, this alliance does not appear. So the Italian guardonare, to reward, is evidently a compound of the L. dono with another word, and apparently with the Sax. withor, G. widar and wieder, D. weder, answering to L. re, denoting return. The Spanish and Portuguese have the Latin word with a different prefix; Sp. galardon, a reward; galardonar, to reward; Port. galardam, galardar. The Armoric has garredion, garredoner. Recard appears to be the Norman.]

To give in return, either good or evil.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. — 1 Sam. xxiv.

Hence, when good is returned for good, reward signifies to repay, to recompense, to compensate. When evil or suffering is returned for injury or wickedness, reward signifies to punish with just retribution, to take vengeance on, according to the nature of the case.

I will render vengeance to my enemies, and will reward them that hate me. — Deut. xxxii.

The Son of man will come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he will reward every man according to his works. — Matt. xvi.

In the latter passage, reward signifies to render both good and evil.

RE-WARD', n. Recompense, or equivalent return for good done, for kindness, for services, and the like.

Rewards may consist of money, goods, or any return of kindness or happiness.

The laborer is worthy of his reward.—1 Tim. v. Great is your reward in heaven.—Matt. v.

Rewards and punishments presuppose moral agency, and something voluntarily done, well or ill; without which respect, though we may receive good, it is only a benefit, and not a reward.

2. The fruit of men's labor or works.

The dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward.—Eccles. ix.

3. A bribe; a gift to pervert justice. Deut. xxvii. A sum of money offered for taking or detecting a criminal, or for recovery of any thing lost.

5. Punishment; a just return of evil or suffering for wickedness.

Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.—Ps. xci.

6. Return in human applause. Matt. vi.

7. Return in joy and comfort. Ps. xix.

The Welsh word is rendered also, that divides or separates, and the Sax. rim seems to be connected with room, from opening, spreading. The deduction of this word from the Greek ῥηω is a palpable error. The true orthography is rime or ryme; but as rime is boar-frost, and rhyms gives the true pronunciation, it may be convenient to continue the present orthography.]

1. In poetry, the correspondence of sounds in the terminating words or syllables of two verses, one of which succeeds the other immediately, or at no great distance. For rhyme with reason may dispense, And sound has right to govern sense. Prior.

To constitute this correspondence in single words, or in syllables, it is necessary that the vowel and the final articulations or consonants, should be the same, or have nearly the same sound. The initial consonants may be different, as in find and mind, new and dress, cause and less.

RICH, a. [Fr. riche; Sp. rico; It. ricco; Sax. ric, rice, ricco; D. ryk; G. reich; Sw. rik; Dan. rig, rig. This word in Saxon signifies great, noble, powerful, as well as rich. It is probable, therefore, it is connected with ric, dominion, L. rego, regnum, Eng. reach, regio, from extending.]

1. Wealthy; opulent; possessing a large portion of land, goods, or money, or a larger portion than is common to other men or to men of like rank. A farmer may be rich with property which would not make a nobleman rich. An annual income of £500 sterling would make a rich vicar, but not a rich bishop. Men more willingly acknowledge others to be richer than to be wiser than themselves.

Abram was rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. -Gen. xiii. 2. Splendid; costly; valuable; precious; sumptuous; as, a rich dress; a rich border; a rich sdc; rich furniture; a rich present.

3. Abundant in materials; yielding great quantities of any thing valuable; as, a rich mine; rich ore. 4. Abounding in valuable ingredients or qualities; as, a rich odor or flavor; rich spices. Waller. Baker. So we say, a rich description; a discourse rich in ideas.

5. Full of valuable achievements or works. Each minute shall be rich in some great action. Rowe.

6. Fertile; fruitful; capable of producing large crops or quantities; as, a rich soil; rich land; rich mold. Phillips.

7. Abundant; large; as, a rich crop. 8. Abundant; affording abundance; plentiful. The gorgeous East, with richest hand, Pours on her sons barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.

9. Full of beautiful scenery; as, a rich landscape; a rich prospect. 10. Abounding with elegant colors; as, a rich picture.

11. Plentifully stocked; as, pasture rich in flocks. 12. Strong; vivid; perfect; as, a rich color. 13. Having something precious; as, a grove of rich trees. Milton.

14. Abounding with nutritious qualities; as, a rich diet. 15. Highly-seasoned; as, rich paste; a rich dish of food.

16. Abounding with a variety of delicious food; as, a rich table or entertainment. 17. Containing abundance beyond wants; as, a rich treasury.

18. In music, full of sweet or harmonious sounds. 19. In Scripture, abounding; highly endowed with spiritual gifts; as, rich in faith. James ii. 20. Placing confidence in outward prosperity. Matt. xix.

21. Self-righteous; abounding, in one's own opinion, with spiritual graces. Rev. iii. Rich in mercy; spoken of God, full of mercy, and ready to bestow good things on sinful men. Eph. ii. Rom. x.

The rich, used as a noun, denotes a rich man or person, or more frequently, in the plural, rich men or persons. The rich hath many friends. - Prov. xiv.

RICH, v. t. To enrich. [Not used.] [See ENRICH.] Govern. RICH'ED, (richt), pp. Enriched. [Not used.] Shak.

RICH'ER, a. comp. More rich. RICH'ES, n. [Fr. richesse; It. ricchezza; Sp. riqueza. This is in the singular number in fact, but treated as the plural.]

1. Wealth; opulence; affluence; possessions of land, goods, or money in abundance. Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion, than our neighbors. Locke.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance. The riches of heaven's pavement, trodleo gold. Milton. In Scripture, an abundance of spiritual blessings. Luke xvi.

The riches of God; his fullness of wisdom, power, mercy, grace, and glory, Eph. i. iii; or the abundance supplied by his works. Ps. civ. The riches of Christ; his abundant fullness of spiritual and eternal blessings for men. Eph. iii.

The riches of a state or kingdom, consist less in a full treasury than in the productiveness of its soil and manufactures, and in the industry of its inhabitants.

RICH'EST, a. superl. Most rich. RICH'LY, adv. With riches; with opulence; with abundance of goods or estate; with ample funds; as, a hospital richly endowed. Shak.

In Belmont is a lady richly left. 2. Gayly; splendidly; magnificently; as, richly dressed; richly ornamented.

3. Penteously; abundantly; amply; as, to be richly paid for services. The reading of ancient authors will richly reward us for the perusal. 4. Truly; really; abundantly; fully; as, a chastisement richly deserved. Addison.

RICH'LY-WOOD-ED, a. Abounding with wood. Irving. RICH'NESS, n. Opulence; wealth. S Sidney. 2. Finery; splendor. Johnson. 3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulness; the qualities which render productive; as, the richness of a soil. Addison. 4. Fullness; abundance; as, the richness of a treasury. 5. Quality of abounding with something valuable; as, the richness of a mine or an ore; the richness of milk or of cane-juice. 6. Abundance of nutritious qualities; as, the richness of diet. 9. Abundance of high seasoning; as, the richness of cake. 10. Strength; vividness; or whatever constitutes perfection; as, the richness of color or coloring. 11. Abundance of imagery or of striking ideas; as, richness of description. RI-CIN'IC AC'ID, n. A substance obtained by distilling castor-oil at a high temperature; so called from Ricinus, the generic name of the castor-oil plant.

RICK, n. [Sax. breac or brig; Ir. cruch; W. crug, a rick, an apostem, a heap, a stack, a hillock; crugaw, to heap or pile, to swell, to grow into an apostem. It coincides with the G. rücken, D. rug, the back, Eng. ridge.]

A heap or pile of grain or hay in the field or open air, but sheltered with a covering of some kind. In America, we usually give this name to a long pile; the round and conical pile being called STACK. In the north of England, it is said, this name is given to small piles of corn in the field.

RICKETS, n. pl. [In technical language, rachia, Gr. ραχίς, from ραχίς, back or spine, Eng. rack, applied to the neck piece of meat; Sp. raquílis, the rickets. See RACA and RIODE.]

A disease which affects children, and which is characterized by a bulky head, a crooked spine, depressed ribs, enlarged and spongy articular epiphyses, timid abdomen, short stature, flabby and wrinkled flesh, together with clear and often premature mental faculties.

RICKET-V. a. Affected with rickets. Arbuthnot.

RIC-O-CHET, (rik'-o-shet or rik'-o-shé'), n. [Fr., a rebounding, as of a flat substance striking on the surface of water.]

In gunnery, the firing of guns, mortars, or howitzers, usually with small charges, and elevated a few degrees, so as to carry the balls or shells just over the parapet, and cause them to rebound or roll along the opposite rampart. This is called ricochet firing, and the batteries are called ricochet batteries.

[The verb RICOCHET having been naturalized as an English word, it is desirable that the noun should likewise have the English pronunciation.]

RIC-O-CHET', (rik'-o-shet'), v. t. To operate upon by ricochet firing. [See RICOCHET, n.]

RIC-O-CHET'TED, (-shet'-), pp. Operated upon by ricochet firing.

RIC-O-CHET'TING, (-shet'-), pp. or a. Operating upon by ricochet firing; as, ricochetting batteries.

RIC'TURE, n. A gaping. [See RICHT, v.]

RID, v. t. [prêt. Rio; pp. id. [Sax. ahreddan or hreddan; D. rieden; G. reiten or eretten; Dan. redder; allied, probably, to W. rhidian, to secrete, to drain, that is, to separate or drive off, whence riddle. See Class Rd., No. 63, 69.]

1. To free; to deliver; properly, to separate, and thus to deliver or save.

That he might rid him out of their hands. — Gen. xxviii.
I will rid you out of their bondage. — Ex. vi.

2. To separate; to drive away.

I will rid evil beasts out of the land. — Lev. xxvi.
[This use is not common.]

3. To free; to clear; to disencumber; as, in rid one of his care. It is not easy to rid the sea of pirates.

Resolved at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

RID'DLE, (rid'dl.), n. [Sax. briddel; W. rhydl, from rhidian, to secrete, to separate; Corn. ridar or krodar; Arm. riddell or croer; Ir. crathar, a riddle; eratham, to shake; G. rütteln, to shake, to riddle; W. crydu, to shake; allied to rid and to cradle, from driving. See CRADLE.]

An instrument for cleaning grain, being a large sieve with a perforated bottom, which permits the grain to pass through it, but retains the chaff.

Note. — The machines now used have nearly superseded the riddle.

RID'DLE, v. t. To separate, as grain from the chaff with a riddle; as, to riddle wheat.

2. To perforate with balls; to make little holes in; as, a house riddled with shot.

RID'DLE, n. [Sax. ræddel; D. raadtel; G. rätzel; from Sax. ræden, D. ræden, G. raten, to counsel or advise, also to guess. See READ.]

1. An enigma; something proposed for conjecture, or that is to be solved by conjecture; a puzzling question; an ambiguous proposition. Judges iv. Milton.

2. Any thing ambiguous or puzzling. Hudibras.

RID'DLE, v. t. To solve; to explain; but we generally use UNRAVEL, which is more proper.

Riddles me this, and guess him if you can. Dryden.

RID'DLE, v. i. To speak ambiguously, obscurely, or enigmatically. Shak.

RID'DLED, pp. Separated, as with a riddle; perforated.

RID'DLER, n. One who speaks ambiguously or obscurely. Horne.

RID'DLING, n. That which is deposited by riddling.

RID'DLING-LY, adv. In the manner of a riddle; secretly. Dosson.

RIDE, v. i.; prêt. RODE or RIO; pp. RIO, RIDDEN. [Sax. ridan; G. reiten; D. ryden; Sw. rida; Dan. rider; W. rheda, to run; L. rheda, a chariot or vehicle; Hindoo, ratka, id.; Sax. rida, a riding or a road; Ir. ratha, riadh, a running; reatham, to run; ridive, a knight; allied to ready, G. bereit; beraiten, to ride, and to get ready. (See READY.) Class Rd., No. 5, 9.]

1. To be carried on horseback, or on any beast, or in any vehicle. We ride on a horse, on a camel, in a coach, chariot, wagon, &c.

[In England, present usage confines the verb ride chiefly to motion on horseback, and when an excursion in a carriage or other vehicle is intended, the expression is ordinarily to take a drive. This distinction has sprung up within the last hundred years, and is not yet introduced into most English dictionaries. Nor is ride wholly confined to motion on a horse, since the English speak of riding in a stage-coach on a journey, &c. Still, in an English car, the word ride, without qualification, naturally suggests but one idea — that of being borne on a horse. Whenever an excursion is spoken of, the expression is uniformly to ride or to take a drive, according to the nature of the conveyance. In all other cases, as of traveling, &c., whenever motion in a vehicle is intended, the qualifying clause is added, so that ride, standing by itself, always means motion on horseback. This usage, though gaining ground, does not yet prevail, to any great extent, in America. — Ed.]

2. To be borne on or in a fluid. A ship rides at anchor; the ark rode on a flood; a balloon rides in the air.

He rode on a cherub and did fly; yea, he did fly on the wings of the wind. — Ps. xviii.

3. To be supported in motion.

Strong as the axle-tree
On which heaven rides. Shak.

4. To practice riding. He rides often for his health.

5. To manage a horse well.

He rode, he fenced, he moved with graceful ease. Dryden.

6. To be supported by something subservient; to sit.

On whom foolish honesty
My practices ride easy. Shak.

To ride easy, in seamen's language, is when a ship does not labor or feel a great strain on her cables.

To ride hard, is when a ship pitches violently, so as to strain her cables, masts, and hull.

To ride out, as a gale, signifies that a ship does not drive during a storm.

RIDE, v. t. To sit on, so as to be carried; as, to ride a horse.

They ride the air in whirlwind. Milton.

2. To manage insolently at will; as in pricat-riding.

The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden by bakers, cobblers, and levers. Swift.

3. To carry. [Local.]

RIDE, n. An excursion on horseback or in a vehicle. [In England, present usage confines a ride to motion on horseback, and applies the term drive to an excursion in a carriage or other vehicle. See the verb. — Ed.]

2. A saddle horse. [Local.]

3. A road cut in a wood or through a ground, for the amusement of riding; a riding.

RI-DEAU', (re-dô'), n. [Fr.] A small mound of earth.

RIDER, n. One who is borne on a horse or other beast, or in a vehicle. [See remarks on RIO.]

2. One who breaks or manages a horse. Shak.

3. The matrix of an ore. Gregory.

4. An addition to a manuscript or other document, inserted after its completion; or a separate piece of paper; an additional clause, as to a bill in parliament.

5. To ship-building, a sort of interior rib fixed occasionally in a ship's hold, opposite to some of the timbers, to which they are bolted, and reaching from the keelson to the beams of the lower deck, to strengthen her frame. Totten.

6. A name given to the second tier of casks in a vessel's hold. Totten.

RIDER-LESS, a. Having no rider.

RIDGE, (rij'), n. [Sax. rig, rieg, arie, brig, the back; Sw. rygg; D. rug; G. Rücken; Ice. kringur. The Welsh has rhig, a notch or groove, and chyg, a trench or furrow between ridges. The Dutch has reke, a ridge, chain, or series, and the Dan. rekke is a row, rank, range, a file, and a ridge, from the root of rekker, to reach. If connected with the latter word, the primary sense is, to draw or stretch, L. rugo.]

1. The back or top of the back. Hudibras.

2. A long or continued range of hills or mountains; or the upper part of such a range. We say, a long ridge of hills, or the highest ridge.

3. A steep elevation, eminence, or protuberance. Milton.

Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct. Milton.

4. A long, rising land, or a strip of ground thrown up by a plow or left between furrows. Pa. lrv.

RIDGE'Y, (rij'), a. Having a ridge or ridges; rising in a ridge. Dryden.

RID'D-CULE, n. [Fr., from L. ridiculum, from rideo, to laugh or laugh at; Fr. rider, to wrinkle, to bend the brow; Arm. redenna.]

1. Contemptuous laughter, or rather remarks designed to awaken laughter with some degree of contempt; derision. It expresses less than scorn. Ridicule is aimed at what is not only laughable, but improper, absurd, or despicable. Sacred subjects should never be treated with ridicule. [See LUICACTS.]

Ridicule is too rough an entertainment for the polished and refined. It is banished from France, and a losing ground in England. Kames.

2. That species of writing which excites contempt with laughter. It differs from burlesque, which may excite laughter without contempt, or it may provoke derision. Kames.

Ridicule and derision are not exactly the same, as derision is applied to persons only, and ridicule to persons or things. We deride the man, but ridiculis the man or his performances.

RID'D-CULE, v. t. To laugh at with expressions of contempt; to deride.

2. To treat with contemptuous merriment, to expose to contempt or derision by writing.

RID'D-CULE, a. Ridiculous. [Not in use.]

RID'D-CUL-ING, pp. Laughing at in contempt; exposing to contempt and derision.

RID'D-CU-LOUS, a. [L. ridiculosus; It. ridicoloso.]

That may justly excite laughter with contempt; as, a ridiculous dress; ridiculous behavior. A fop and a dandy are ridiculous in their dress.

RID'D-CU-LOUS-LY, adv. In a manner worthy of contemptuous merriment; as, a man ridiculously vain.

RID'D-CU-LOUS-NESS, n. The quality of being ridiculous; as, the ridiculousness of worshipping idols.

RID'DING, pp. [from ride.] Passing or traveling on a beast or in a vehicle; floating.

2. a. Employed to travel on any occasion.

No suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparatus. Aylife.

RID'DING, n. A road cut in a wood or through a ground, for the diversion of riding therein.

2. [Corrupted from triding, third.] One of the three intermediate jurisdictions between a three and a hundred, into which the county of York, in England, is divided, anciently under the government of a reeve. Blackstone.

RID'DING-CLERK, n. In England, one of the six clerks in chancery. Ash.

RID'DING-COAT, n. A coat for riding on a journey. Swift.

RID'DING-HAT, n. A gannet worn by females when they ride or travel. Guardian.

RID'DING-HOOD, n. A hood used by females when they ride; a kind of cloak with a hood.

RID'DING-SCHOOL, (-skool), n. A school or place where the art of riding is taught. It may, in some places, be called a RIOUO-SHOOS.

RI-DOT'TO, n. [It., from L. reductus.]

A favorite Italian public entertainment consisting of music and dancing; held generally on fast eves.

RIG-ATION, n. [L. rigatio, from riquo, G. βρέχω. See Rain.]

The act of watering; but IRIGATION is generally used.

RIGEL, n. A fixed star of the first magnitude in the left foot of Orion.

RIGGED, pp. Dressed; furnished with shrouds, stays, &c., as a ship.

RIGGER, n. One that rigs or dresses; one whose occupation is to fit the rigging of a ship.

2. A cylindrical pulley or drum in machinery. Hbert.

RIGGING, pp. Dressing; fitting with shrouds, braces, &c.

RIGGING, n. Dress; tackle; particularly, the ropes which support the masts, extend and contract the sails, &c., of a ship. This is of two kinds: standing rigging, as the shrouds and stays, and running rigging, comprehending all those ropes used in bracing the yards, making and shortening sail, &c., such as braces, sheets, halliards, clewlines, &c. Brande. Totten.

RIGGISH, a. Wanton; lowd. [Not in use.] Shak.

RIGGLE, v. t. To move one way and the other. [See WAGGLE.]

RIGHT, (rite), a. [Sax. riht, reit; D. recht; G. recht; Dan. rigtig; Sw. richtig; It. retto; Sp. recta; L. rectus, from the root of rego, properly to strain or stretch, whence straight; Sax. recca. See Class Rg, No. 18, 46, 47.]

Properly, strained; stretched to straightness; hence,

1. Straight. A right line, in geometry, is the shortest line that can be drawn or imagined between two points. A right line may be horizontal, perpendicular, or inclined to the plane of the horizon.

2. Direct or upright; opposed to OSLIQVÆ; es, right ascension; a right sphere.

3. In morals and religion, just; equitable; accordant to the standard of truth and justice, or the will of God. That alone is right in the sight of God, which is consonant to his will or law; this being the only perfect standard of truth and justice. In social and political affairs, that is right which is consonant to the laws and customs of a country, provided these laws and customs are not repugnant to the laws of God. A man's intentions may be right, though his actions may be wrong in consequence of a defect in judgment.

4. Fit; suitable; proper; becoming. In things indifferent, or which are regulated by no positive law, that is right which is best suited to the character, occasion, or purpose, or which is fitted to produce some good effect. It is right for a rich man to dress himself and his family in expensive clothing, which it would not be right for a poor man to purchase. It is right for every man to choose his own time for eating or exercise.

Right is a relative term; what may be right for one end, may be wrong for another.

5. Lawful; as the right heir of an estate.

6. True; not erroneous or wrong; according to fact.

If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is certainly right, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Locke.

7. Correct; passing a true judgment; not mistaken or wrong.

You are right, justice, and you weigh this well. Shak.

8. Not left, but its opposite; most convenient or dextrous; as, the right hand, which is generally most strong or most convenient in use.

9. Most favorable or convenient.

The lady has been disappointed on the right side. Spectator.

10. Properly placed, disposed, or adjusted; orderly; well-regulated.

11. Well-performed, as an art or act.

12. Most direct; as, the right way from London to Oxford.

13. Being on the same side as the right hand; as, the right side.

14. Being on the right hand of a person whose face is toward the mouth of a river; as, the right bank of the Hudson.

15. Denoting the side which was designed to go outward, as the right side of a piece of cloth.

RIGHT, adv. In a right or straight line; directly.

Let thine eyes look right on.—Prov. iv.

2. According to the law or will of God, or to the standard of truth and justice; as, to judge right.

3. According to any rule of art.

You wish strict discipline instructed right. Roscommon.

4. According to fact or truth; as, to tell a story right.

5. In a great degree; very; as, right humble; right noble; right valiant. [Obsolescent or inclegant.]

6. It is prefixed to titles, as in right honorable, right reverend.

On the right; on the side with the right hand.

RIGHT, (rite), n. Conformity to the will of God, or to his law, the perfect standard of truth and justice. In the literal sense, right is a straight line of conduct, and wrong a crooked one. Right, therefore, is rectitude or straightness, and perfect rectitude is found only in an infinite being and his will.

2. Conformity to human laws, or to other human standard of truth, propriety, or justice. When laws are definite, right and wrong are easily ascertained and understood. In arts, there are some principles and rules which determine what is right. In many things indifferent, or left without positive law, we are to judge what is right by fitness or propriety, by custom, civility, or other circumstances.

3. Justice; that which is due or proper; as, to do right to every man.

Long lose to her has borne the faithful knight, And well deserved, had fortune done him right. Dryden.

4. Freedom from error; conformity with truth or fact.

Seldom your opinions err, Your eyes are always in the right. Prior.

5. Just claim; legal title; ownership; the legal power of exclusive possession; enjoyment. In hereditary monarchies, a right to the throne vests in the heir on the decease of the king. A deed vests the right of possession in the purchaser of land. Right and possession are very different things. We often have occasion to demand and sue for rights not in possession.

6. Just claim by courtesy, customs, or the principles of civility and decorum. Every man has a right to civil treatment. The magistrate has a right to respect.

7. Just claim by sovereignty; prerogative. God, as the Author of all things, has a right to govern and dispose of them at his pleasure.

8. That which justly belongs to one.

9. Property; interest.

A subject in his prince may claim a right. Dryden.

10. Just claim; immunity; privilege. All men have a right to the secure enjoyment of life, personal safety, liberty, and property. We deem the right of trial by jury invaluable, particularly in the case of crimes. Rights are natural, civil, political, religious, personal, and public.

11. Authority; legal power. The sheriff has a right to arrest a disturber of the peace.

12. In the United States, a tract of land; or a share or proportion of property, as in a mine or manufactory.

13. The side opposite to the left; as, on the right. Look to the right.

14. The side which was designed to go outward; as, the right side of a piece of cloth.

To rights; in a direct line; straight. [Unusual.]

2. Directly; soon.

To set to rights; } to put into good order; to ad-
To put to rights; } just; to regulate what is out of order.

Bill of rights; a list of rights; a paper containing a declaration of rights, or the declaration itself.

Writ of right; a writ which lies to recover lands in fee-simple, unjustly withheld from the true owner. Blackstone.

2. In seamen's language, to right a vessel, is to restore her to an upright position after careening.

To right the helm; to place it in the middle of the ship.

RIGHT, v. t. To rise with the masts erect, as a ship.

RIGHT ANGLE, (rite'ang'gl) n. In geometry, an angle of ninety degrees, or one fourth of a circle.

RIGHT-ANGLE, (rite'ang'gl) a. Containing a right angle or right angles.

RIGHTED, pp. Relieved from injustice; set upright.

RIGHTEN, (rite'n) v. t. [Sax. gerihtan.]

To do justice to. [Obs.]

RIGHTEOUS, (rite'chus) a. [Sax. rihtise; right and wise, manner, as in otherwise, lengthwise.]

1. Just; accordant to the divine law. Applied to persons, it denotes one who is holy in heart, and observant of the divine commands in practice; as, a righteous man. Applied to things, it denotes consonant to the divine will or to justice; as, a righteous act. It is used chiefly in theology, and applied to God, to his testimonies, and to his saints.

The righteous, in Scripture, denote the servants of God, the saints.

2. Just; equitable; merited.

And thy righteous doom will bless. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUS-ED, (rite'chus-ed) a. Made righteous.

RIGHTEOUS-LY, (rite'chus-ly) adv. Justly; in accordance with the laws of justice; equitably; as, a criminal righteously condemned.

Thou shalt judge the people righteously.—Ps. lxxv.

RIGHTEOUS-NESS, (rite'chus-ness) n. Purity of heart and rectitude of life; conformity of heart and life to the divine law. Righteousness, as used in Scripture and theology, in which it is chiefly used, is nearly equivalent to holiness, comprehending holy principles and affections of heart, and conformity of life to the divine law. It includes all we call justice, honesty, and virtue, with holy affections; in short, it is true religion.

2. Applied to God, the perfection or holiness of his nature; exact rectitude; faithfulness.

3. The active and passive obedience of Christ, by which the law of God is fulfilled. Doct. ix.

4. The cause of our justification.

The Lord our righteousness.—Jer. xxiii.

RIGHTER, n. One who sets right; one who does justice or redresses wrong.

RIGHTFUL, a. Having the right or just claim according to established laws; as, the rightful heir to a throne or an estate.

2. Being by right, or by just claim; as, a rightful lord; rightful property; rightful judge.

3. Just; consonant to justice; as, a rightful cause; a rightful war. Prior.

RIGHTFULLY, adv. According to right, law, or justice; as, a title rightfully vested.

RIGHTFUL-NESS, n. Justice; accordance with the rules of right; as, the rightfulness of a claim to lands or tenements.

2. Moral rectitude.
But still, although we fall of perfect right/fulness. Sidney.
[Not usual.]

RIGHT-HAND, n. The hand opposite to the left, usually the most employed, the strongest, most convenient, or dextrous hand, and hence its name in other languages, as well as in ours.

RIGHT'ING, ppr. Doing justice to; setting upright.

RIGHT'LESS, a. Destitute of right.

RIGHT'LY, adv. According to justice; according to the divine will or moral rectitude; as, duty rightly performed.
2. Properly; fitly; suitably; as, a person rightly named.
3. According to truth or fact; not erroneously. He has rightly conjectured.
4. Honestly; uprightly. Shak.
5. Exactly.
Thou didst not rightly see. Dryden.

6. Straightly; directly. [Not in use.] Ascham.

RIGHT-MIND-ED, a. Having a right of honest mind.

RIGHT-MIND'ED-NESS, n. The state of having a right mind.
1. Correctness; conformity to truth or to the divine will, which is the standard of moral rectitude. It is important that a man should have such persuasion of the rightness of his conscience as to exclude rational doubt. South.
2. Straightness; as, the rightness of a line. Bacon.

RIGHT-RUN-NING, a. Straight running. Philips.

RIGHT WHALE, n. The common whale, from whose mouth whalebone is obtained, as distinguished from the spermiceti whale.

RIG'ID, a. [Fr. rigide; It. and Sp. rigido; L. rigidus, from riges; Gr. ῥυγος, to be stiff; ῥυγος, stiff, whence L. frigeo, frigidus; Eth. ῤῊ፬ raga, Heb. רָגַל, to be still, to be stiff or rigid. Class Rg, No. 3, 27. The primary sense is probably to strain or extend.]
1. Stiff; not pliant; not easily bent. It is applied to bodies or substances that are naturally soft or flexible, but not fluid. We never say a rigid stone or rigid iron, nor do we say rigid ice; but we say an animal body or limb, when cold, is rigid. Rigid is then opposed to FLEXIBLE, but expresses less than INFLEXIBLE.
2. Strict in opinion, practice, or discipline; severe in temper; opposed to LAX or INDOLENT; as, a rigid father or master; as, a rigid officer.
3. Strict; exact; as, a rigid law or rule; rigid discipline; rigid criticism.
4. Severely just; as, a rigid sentence or judgment.
5. Exactly according to the sentence or law; as, rigid execution.

RIGIDITY, n. [Fr. rigidité; L. rigiditas.]
1. Stiffness; want of pliability; the quality of resisting change of form; opposed to FLEXIBILITY, DUCTILITY, MALLEABILITY, and SOFTNESS. Hebert.
2. Stiffness of appearance or manner; want of ease or airy elegance. Wotton.

RIGIDLY, adv. Stiffly; unpliantly.
2. Severely; strictly; exactly; without laxity, indulgence, or abatement; as, to judge rigidly; to criticize rigidly; to execute a law rigidly.

RIGID-NESS, n. Stiffness of a body; the quality of not being easily bent; as, the rigidness of a limb, or of flesh.
2. Severity of temper; strictness in opinion or practice; but expressing less than INFLEXIBILITY.

RIG'LET, n. A flat, thin piece of wood, a reglet, which see.

RIG/MAR-ROLE, n. A succession of confused or nonsensical statements; often used as an adjective; as, a rigmarole story. Goldsmith.

RIG'OL, n. A circle; a diadem. Shak.

RIG'OLL, n. A musical instrument, consisting of several sticks bound together, but separated by beads. Encyc.

RIG'OR, n. [L., from riges, to be stiff; Fr. rigueur.]
1. Stiffness; rigidity; as, Gorgonian rigor. Milton.
2. In medicine, a sense of chilliness, with contraction of the skin; a convulsive shuddering or slight tremor, as in the cold fit of a fever. Coxe. Encyc. Porr.
3. Stiffness of opinion or temper; severity; sternness.
All his rigor is turned to grief and pity. Denham.
4. Severity of life; austerity; voluntary submission to pain, abstinence, or mortification. Fell.
5. Strictness; exactness without allowance, latitude, or indulgence; as, the rigor of criticism; to execute a law with rigor; to enforce moral duties with rigor.
6. Violence; fury. [Not in use.] Spenser.
7. Hardness; solidity. [Unusual.] Dryden.
8. Severity; asperity; as, the rigors of a cold winter.

RIN-FOR-ZAN'DO, (-fort-an'do), n. [It.] In music, a direction to the performer denoting that the sound is to be increased. Busby.

RING, n. [Sax. ring or kring; D. ring or kring; G. D. and Sw. ring, a circle; Sw. kring, about, around. This coincides with ring, to sound, and with wring, to twist; G. ringen, to ring or stretch, and to wrestle. The sense is, to strain or stretch, and n is probably not radical. The root, then, belongs to Class Rg.]
1. A circle, or a circular line, or anything in the form of a circular line or hoop. Thus we say of men, they formed themselves into a ring, to see a wrestling match; rings of gold were made for the ark. Ex. xxv. Rings of gold or other material are worn on the fingers, and sometimes in the ears, as ornaments.
2. A circular course.
Place me, O, place me to the dusty ring,
Where youthful charioteers contend for glory. Smith.

RING, n. [from the verb.] A sound; particularly, the sound of metals; as, the ring of a bell.
2. Any loud sound, or the sounds of numerous voices; or sound continued, repeated, or reverberated; as, the ring of acclamations. Bacon.
3. A chime, or set of bells harmonically tuned. Prior.

RINSE, (rioz), v. t. [Sw. rensa or rena, to cleanse or purify; Dan. rensér, to clean, to purge, to purify, to scour; Sax. reim, D. and G. rein, clean; Fr. rincer; Arm. rinse, rinsein. This word is probably from the same radix as the Gr. ῥίσις, and ῥινίζω, to sprinkle. Our common people pronounce this word rens, retaining their native pronunciation. This is one of many instances in which the purity of our verba-lar language has been corrupted by those who have understood French better than their mother tongue.]

1. To cleanse by the introduction of water; applied particularly to hollow vessels; as, to rinse a bottle.

2. To cleanse with a second or repeated application of water after washing. We distinguish washing from rinse. Washing is performed by rubbing, or with the use of soap; rinse is performed with clean water, without much rubbing or the use of soap. Clothes are *rinse*d by dipping and dashing; and vessels are *rinse*d by dashing water on them, or by slight rubbing; a close barrel may be *rinse*d, but can not well be washed.

RINSE'D, (rinst), pp. Cleansed with a second water; cleaned.

RINSE'R, n. One that rinses.

RINSE'ING, ppr. or n. Cleansing with a second water. RINSE'ING, n. [Norm. riotti; It. riotta; Fr. riote, a brawl or tumult. The W. broth, brocth, connotation, may be from the same root, with a prefix, which would connect this word with brydian, brydiaux, to heat, to boil. The Spanish has alboroto, and Port. alboroto, in a like sense. In Danish, ruller is to drink hard, to riot. The primary sense is probably noise or agitation.]

1. Riot, at common law, is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons, mutually aiding and assisting each other, whether the act which they originally intended to perform was in itself lawful or unlawful. Bouquier.

2. Uproar; tumult; wild and noisy festivity. Milton.

3. Excessive and expensive feasting. 2 Pet. II.

4. Luxury. Pope.

RISE, (rize), v. i.; pret. Rose, (röze); pp. Risen,

(rizn). [Sax. arisan; D. ryzen; Goth. reisan, in ur-reisan, to rise, and ur-raisan, to raise. See RAISE.]

1. To move or pass upward in any manner; to ascend; as, a fog rises from a river or from low ground; a fish rises in water; birds rise in the air; clouds rise from the horizon toward the meridian; a balloon rises above the clouds.

2. To get up; to leave the place of sleep or rest; as, to rise from bed.

3. To get up or move from any recumbent to an erect posture; as, to rise after a fall.

4. To get up from a seat; to leave a sitting posture; as, to rise from a sofa or chair.

5. To spring; to grow; as a plant; hence, to be high or tall. A tree rises to the height of sixty feet.

6. To swell in quantity or extent; to be more elevated; as, a river rises after a rain.

7. To break forth; to appear; as, a boil rises on the skin.

8. To appear above the horizon; to shine; as, the sun or a star rises.

He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good. — Matt. v.

9. To begin to exist; to originate; to come into being or notice. Great evils sometimes rise from small imprudences.

10. To be excited; to begin to move or act; as, the wind rose at 12 o'clock.

11. To increase in violence. The wind continued to rise till 3 o'clock.

12. To appear in view; as, to rise up to the reader's view. Addison.

13. To appear in sight; also, to appear more elevated; as, in sailing toward a shore, the land rises.

14. To change a station; to leave a place; as, to rise from a siege. Knolles.

15. To spring; to be excited or produced. A thought now rises in my mind.

16. To gain elevation in rank, fortune, or public estimation; to be promoted. Men may rise by industry, by merit, by favor, or by intrigue.

When the wicked rise, men hide themselves. — Prov. xxvii.

17. To break forth into public commotions; to make open opposition to government; or to assemble and oppose government; or to assemble in arms for attacking another nation. The Greeks have rised against their oppressors.

No more shall nation against nation rise. Pope.

18. To be excited or roused into action. Rise up to the battle. — Jer. xlix.

19. To make a hostile attack; as, when a man riseth against his neighbor. Deut. xxii.

20. To increase; to swell; to grow more or greater. A voice, feeble at first, rises to thunder. The price of goods rises. The heat rises to intensity.

21. To be improved; to recover from depression; as, a family may rise, after misfortune, to opulence and splendor.

22. To elevate the style or manner; as, to rise in force of expression; to rise in eloquence.

23. To be revived from death. The dead in Christ shall rise first. — 1 Thess. iv.

24. To come by chance. Spenser.

25. To ascend; to be elevated above the level or surface; as, the ground rises gradually one hundred yards. Some peaks of the Andes rise more than 20,000 feet above the level of the ocean; a mountain in Asia is said to rise still higher.

26. To proceed from. A scepter shall rise out of Israel. — Num. xxiv.

27. To have its sources in. Rivers rise in lakes, ponds, and springs.

28. To be moved, roused, excited, kindled, or inflamed, as passion. His wrath rose to rage.

29. To ascend in the diatonic scale; as, to rise a tone or semitone.

30. To amount. The public debt rises to a hundred millions.

31. To close a session. We say, congress will rise on the 4th of March; the legislature or the court will rise on a certain day.

This verb is written also ARISE, which see. In general, it is indifferent which orthography is used; but custom has, in some cases, established one to the exclusion of the other. Thus we never say, the price of goods arises, when we mean advances, but we always say, the price rises. We never say, the ground arises to a certain altitude, and rarely, a man arises into an office or station. It is hardly possible to class or define the cases in which usage has established a difference in the orthography of this verb. A knowledge of these cases must be acquired by observation.

RISE, (rise), n. The act of rising, either in a literal or figurative sense; ascent; as, the rise of vapor in the air; the rise of mercury in the barometer; the rise of water in a spring.

2. The act of springing or mounting from the ground; as, the rise of the feet in leaping.

3. Ascent; elevation, or degree of ascent; as, the rise of a hill or mountain.

 2. The curve or arch cut in the foot of some square sails. Brande.

As sound as a roach, is a phrase supposed to have been, originally, as sound as a rock. [Fr. roche.]

RÖAD, n. [Sax. rad, rade, a ride, a passing or traveling on horseback, a way, a road, corresponding with the G. reise, D. reis, Dan. rejs, Sw. resa; but in the sense of a place for anchoring ships, the Fr. has rade, Sp. rada, G. and D. reed, Sw. redd, Dan. rede, reed. In the sense of way, the Spanish has ranta, W. rhwad, all connected with ride, W. rheud, to run, and L. gradior, W. rhodiue, to walk or go. The Slavonic has brud, and the Bohemian brad, a way. See GRADE.]

1. An open way or public passage; ground appropriated for travel, forming a communication between one city, town, or place, and another. The word is generally applied to highways, and as a generic term it includes highway, street, and lane. The military roads of the Romans were paved with stone, or formed of gravel or pebbles, and some of them remain to this day entire.
 2. Any place where ships may ride at anchor at some distance from the shore; sometimes called ROADSTEAD, that is, a place for riding, meaning at anchor.
 3. A journey. Milton.
 [Not used; but we still use ride as a noun; as, a long ride; a short ride; the same word differently written.]
 4. An inroad; incursion of an enemy. [Not in use.] Shak.

On the road; passing; traveling.
 RÖAD-BED, n. The bed or foundation on which the superstructure of a railroad rests. Farnham.

RÖAD'STER, n. Among seamen, a vessel riding at anchor in a road or bay. Mar. Dict.
 2. A horse fitted for traveling. Bell.

RÖAD'STEAD, (-sted), n. A place where ships may ride at anchor, at some distance from the shore.

RÖAD'WAY, n. The part of a road traveled by carriages. Shak.

RÖAM, v. i. [If m is radical, this word seems to be connected with ramble, L. ramus. In W. rhamu is to rise over, to soar, to vault; whence rhamaunt, a rising boldly, romance; rhem, rhum, something projecting; rhim, rim, the exterior part of a thing; Ar.

to exceed, to depart. Class Rm, No. 5. See also No. 9 and 23.]

ROAST, v. t. [W. rostiau; I. roastam; Arm. rosta; Fr. roster; It. arrostire; D. roosten; G. rosten; Sw. rosta; Dan. ristar, to roast, and rist, a gridiron, G. rost. If the verb is from the noun, the sense is, to dress or cook on a gridiron, or grate, and rist, rust, coincide in elements with L. rustellum, a rake. If the verb is the root, the sense probably is, to contract or crisp, or to throw or agitate, hence to make rough. The Welsh has also cras, to roast, from crds. This coincides with crisp.]

1. To cook, dress, or prepare meat for the table, by exposing it to heat, as on a spit, in a bake-pan, in an oven, or the like. We now say, to roast meat on a spit, in a pan, or in a tin oven, &c.; to bake meat in an oven; to broil meat on a gridiron.

2. To prepare for food by exposure to heat; as, to roast apples or potatoes; to roast eggs.

3. To heat to excess; to heat violently.

Roasted in wrath and fire. Shak.

ROB'ED, (robd.) pp. Deprived feloniously and by violence; plundered; seized and carried away by violence.

ROB'ER, n. In law, one that takes goods or money from the person of another by force or menaces, and with a felonious intent. Blackstone.

2. In a looser sense, one who takes that to which he has no right; one who steals, plunders, or strips by violence and wrong.

ROB'ERY, n. In law, the forcible and felonious taking from the person of another any money or goods, putting him in fear, that is, by violence or by menaces of death or personal injury. Robbery differs from theft, as it is a violent, felonious taking from the person or presence of another; whereas theft is a felonious taking of goods privately from the person, dwelling, &c., of another. These words should not be confounded.

2. A plundering; a pillaging; a taking away by violence, wrong, or oppression.

ROB'ING, ppr. Feloniously taking from the person of another; putting him in fear; stripping; plundering; taking from another unlawfully or by wrong or oppression.

ROBE, n. [Fr. robs; Sp. ropa; Port. roupa; It. raba; It. roba, a robe, and goods or estate; far roba, to get money; robare, a long gown; robbicaia, trifle, idle stuff. The Spanish and Portuguese words signify clothing in general, cloth, staff, wearing apparel, also a loose garment worn over the rest; a gown; Sp. ropage is wearing apparel, drapery; roperia, the trade of dealers in clothes. In Sp. and Port., then, the word coincides with the Fr. drap, Eng. drapery and frillery. In Sax. reaf is clothing in general, and spoil, plunder, from reafian, to rob. From these facts let the reader judge whether this word had its origin in rabbing, like wearing apparel, or from stripping, the name being originally given to skins, the primitive clothing of rude nations.]

1. A kind of gown, or long, loose garment, worn over other dress, particularly by persons in elevated stations. The robe is properly a dress of state or dignity, as of princes, judges, priests, &c. See Exod. xxix. 55. 1 Sam. xxiv. 4. Math. xvii. 28.

RO-MANCE, (ro-mans'), n. [Fr. roman; It. romanzo; Sp. romance, the common vulgar language of Spain, and romance; Port. id., any vulgar tongue, and a species of poetry; W. rham, a rising over, rhamant, a rising over, a vaulting or springing, an omen, a figurative expression, romance, as an adjective, rising boldly, romantic; rhamanta, to rise over, to soar, to reach to a distance, to divine, to romance, to allegorize; rhamanta, to use figurative or high-flown language, &c. The Welsh retains the signification of the oriental word from which Rome is derived, and indeed the sense of romance is evidently from the primitive sense of the root, rather than from the use of the Roman language. The Welsh use of the word proves also the correctness of the foregoing derivation of Roma, and overthrows the fabulous account of the origin of the word from Romulus or Remus. It is probable that this word is allied to rhamble.]

1. A fabulous relation or story of adventures and incidents designed for the entertainment of readers; a tale of extraordinary adventures, fictitious and often extravagant, usually a tale of love or war, subjects interesting the sensibilities of the heart, or the passions of wonder and curiosity. Romance differs from the novel, as it treats of actions and adventures of an unusual and wonderful character; that is, according to the Welsh signification, it vaults or soars beyond the limits of fact and real life, and often of probability.

The first romances were a monstrous assemblage of histories, in which truth and fiction were blended without probability; a composition of numerous adventures and the extravagant ideas of chivalry. Encyc.

Gwilt.

RO'DE-RY, (rüd'be), n. An uncivil, turbulent fellow. [Not in use.]

Shak.

RO'DI-MENT, n. [Fr., from L. rudimentum. If connected with erudio, it denotes what is taught, and erudio may be connected with the Goth. rodiyan, to speak, Sax. radan, to read. But the real origin is not obvious. It may have been formed from some word in Rd, signifying to shoot or spring.]

1. A first principle or element; that which is to be first learnt; as, the rudiments of learning or science. Articulate sounds are the rudiments of language; letters or characters are the rudiments of written language; the primary rules of any art or science are its rudiments. Hence instruction in the rudiments of any art or science, constitutes the beginning of education in that art or science.

2. The original of any thing in its first form. Thus in botany, the germen, ovary, or seed bud, is the rudiment of the fruit yet in embryo; and the seed is the rudiment of a new plant.

Martyn.

Rudiment, in natural history, is also an imperfect organ, one which is never fully formed. Thus the flowers in the genus Pentstemon have four stamens and a rudiment of a fifth, (a simple filament without an anther.)

God beholds the first imperfect rudiments of virtue in the soul. Spectator.

S.

S THE nineteenth letter of the English alphabet, is s, a sibilant articulation, and numbered among the semi-vowels. It represents the hissing sound by driving the breath between the end of the tongue and the roof of the mouth, just above the upper teeth. It has two uses; one to express a mere hissing, as in Sabbath, sack, sin, this, thus; the other a vocal hissing, precisely like that of z, as in muse, wise, pronounced muz, wize. It generally has its hissing sound at the beginning of all proper English words, but in the middle and end of words, its sound is to be known only by usage. In a few words it is silent, as in isle and viscount.

In abbreviations, S. stands for societas, society, or socius, fellow; as, F. R. S., Fellow of the Royal Society. In medical prescriptions, S. A. signifies secundum artem, according to the rules of art. In the notes of the ancients, S. stands for Sextus; Sp. for Spurius; S. C. for senatus consultum; S. P. Q. R. for senatus populusque Romanus; S. S. S. for stratum super stratum, one layer above another alternately; S. F. B. E. E. Q. V. for si tales, bene est, ego quoque valeo.

As a numeral, S. denoted seven. In the Italian music, S. signifies solo. In books of navigation, and in common usage, S. stands for south; S. E. for south-east; S. W. for south-west; S. S. E. for south-south-east; S. S. W. for south-south-west, &c.

SAB'BA-ISM. See SABBATISM.

SAB'A-OTIL, n. [Heb. שבתות, armies, from נשׁב, to assemble, to fight. The primary sense is, to drive, to urge or crowd.]

Armies; a word used, Rom. ix. 29, James v. 4, "the Lord of Sabbath."

SAB-BATH-RI-AN, n. [from Sabbath.] One who regards the seventh day of the week as holy, agreeably to the letter of the fourth commandment in the decalogue. There were Christians in the early church, who held this opinion; and one sect of Baptists, commonly called Seventh-day Baptists, do so now.

SAB-BATH-RI-AN-ISM, n. The tenets of Sabbatarians. [Murdoch.]

SAB'BATH, n. [Heb. שבת, to cease, to rest; as a noun, cessation, rest, L. sabbatum; Ar. سبت sabbata.]

1. The day which God appointed to be observed as a day of rest from all secular labor or employments, and to be kept holy and consecrated to his service and worship. This was originally the seventh day of the week, the day on which God rested from the work of creation; and this day is still observed by the Jews and some Christians as the Sabbath. But the Christian church very early began, and still continue, to observe the first day of the week, in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ on that day, by which the work of redemption was completed. Hence it is often called the Lord's day. The heathen nations in the north of Europe, dedicated this day to the sun, and hence their Christian descendants continue to call the day Sunday. But in the United States, Christians have to a great extent discarded the heathen name, and adopted the Jewish name Sabbath. Sabbath is not strictly synonymous with Sunday. Sunday is the mere name of the day; Sabbath is the name of the institution. Sunday is the Sabbath of Christians; Saturday is the Sabbath of the Jews.

2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest. Peaceful sleep out the Sabbath of the tomb. Pope.

3. The sabbatical year among the Israelites. See XIV.

SAB'BATH-BREAK-ER, n. [Sabbath and break.] One who profanes the Sabbath by violating the law of God or man which enjoin the religious observance of that day.

SAB'BATH-BREAK-ING, n. A profanation of the Sabbath by violating the injunction of the fourth commandment, or the municipal laws of a state which require the observance of that day as holy time. All unnecessary secular labor, visiting, traveling, sports, amusements, and the like, are considered as Sabbath-breaking.

SAB'BATH-LESS, a. Without intermission of labor. Bacon.

SAB-BATHIC, } a. [Fr. sabbatique; L. sabbati-
SAB-BATHICAL, } cas.]

2. The name is now applied to a kind of sweet wine. P. Cyc.

SACK, n. [L. engum, whence Gr. αγοσ. But the word is Celtic or Teutonic; W. eagan, a covering, a cloak.]

Among our rude ancestors, a kind of cloak of a square form, worn over the shoulders and body, and fastened in front by a clasp or thorn. It was originally made of skin, afterward of wool. [See Vairo, Strabo, Clavcr, Buchart.] In modern times, this name has been given to a woman's garment, a gown with loose plaits on the back, and also to a loose outer garment worn by men.

SACK, v. t. To put in a sack or in bags.

SACK, v. t. [Arm sacca; It. saccham, to attack; Sp. and Port. saquear, to plunder or pillage; Sp. to ransack; Sp. and Port. sacar, to pull out, extort, dispossess; It. saccheggiare, to sack; Fr. saccager, to pillage; saccede, a jerk, a sudden pull. From comparing this word and sack, a bag, in several languages, it appears that they are both from one root, and that the primary sense is, to strain, pull, draw; hence sack, a bag, is a tie, that which is tied or drawn together; and sack, to pillage, is to pull, to strip, that is, to take away by violence. See Class Sg., No. 5, 15, 16, 18, 30, 74, 77, &c.]

To plunder or pillage, as a town or city. Rome was twice taken and sacked in the reign of one pope. This word is never, I believe, applied to the robbing of persons, or pillaging of single houses, but to the pillaging of towns and cities; and as towns are usually or often sacked, when taken by assault, the word may sometimes include the sense of taking by storm.

The Romans lay under the apprehension of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy. Addison.

SACK, n. The pillage or plunder of a town or city; or the storm and plunder of a town; as, the sack of Troy. Dryden.

SACK'AGE, n. The act of taking by storm and pillaging. Roscoe.

SACK'BUT, n. [Sp. sacabuche, the tube or pipe of a pump, and a sackbut; Port. sacabuzo or sacabuzo; Fr. sacabute. The Dutch call it sackbut, trumpet, the short-trumpet, the trumpet that may be drawn out or shortened. Sack, then, is of the same family as the preceding word, signifying, to pull or draw. The last syllable is the L. bucca.]

A wind instrument of music; a kind of trumpet, so contrived that it can be lengthened or shortened according to the tone required; said to be the same as the trombone. Brande.

SACK'CLOTH, n. [sack and cloth.] Cloth of which sacks are made; coarse cloth. This word is chiefly used in Scripture to denote a cloth or garment worn in mourning, distress, or mortification.

Quiet; peaceable; not quarrelsome; harmless; innocent. [Local.]

SACK'POSSET, n. [sack and posset.] A posset made of sack, milk, and some other ingredients. Swift.

SAC'RA-MENT, n. [Fr. sacrament; It. and Sp. sacramento; from L. sacramentum, an oath, from sacer, sacred.]

1. Among ancient Christian writers, a mystery. [Not in use.]

2. An oath; a ceremony producing an obligation; but not used in this general sense.

3. In present usage, an outward and visible sign of inward and spiritual grace; or more particularly, a solemn religious ordinance enjoined by Christ, the head of the Christian church, to be observed by his followers, by which their special relation to him is created, or their obligations to him renewed and ratified. The Roman Catholic and Greek churches have long held to seven sacraments, viz., baptism, confirmation, the eucharist, penance, extreme unction, holy orders, and matrimony. The Protestants maintain that there are only two sacraments, viz., baptism and the Lord's supper. Thus baptism is called a sacrament, for by it persons are separated from the world, brought into Christ's visible church, and laid under particular obligations to obey his precepts. The eucharist, or communion of the Lord's supper, is also a sacrament, for by commemorating the death and dying love of Christ, Christians avow their special relation to him, and renew their obligations to be faithful to their divine Master. When we use sacrament without any qualifying word, we mean by it,

4. The eucharist or Lord's supper. Addison.

SAC'RA-MENT, v. t. To bind by an oath. [Not used.] Laud.

SAC'RA-MENT'AL, a. Constituting a sacrament or pertaining to it; as, sacramental rites or elements.

SAC'RA-MEN-TA-RY, n. An ancient book of the Roman Catholic church, written by Pope Gelasius, and revised, corrected, and abridged by St. Gregory, in which were contained all the prayers and ceremonies practiced in the celebration of the sacraments. Encyc.

2. A sacramentarian; a term of reproach formerly applied by Roman Catholics to Protestants. Stapleton.

SAC'RA-MEN-TA-RY, }{ a. Pertaining to the SAC'RA-MEN-TA'R-I-AN, } sacrament of the Lord's supper, or to the sacramentarians. Murdock.

SAC'RA'R-I-UM, n. [L.] A sort of family chapel in the houses of the Romans, devoted to some particular divinity. Elmes.

SAC'RATE, v. t. [L. sacra.] To consecrate. [Obs.]

SAC'RE. See SACRA.

SAC'RED, a. [Fr. sacré; Sp. It. and Port. sacro; from L. sacer, sacred, holy, cursed, damnable; W. segryr, that keeps apart, from seg, that is, without access; segryr, to secrete, to separate. We here see the connection between SACRACIOUS and SACRECR. The sense is, removed or separated from that which is common, vulgar, polluted, or open, public; and accursed is, separated from society or the privileges of citizens, rejected, banished.]

1. Holy; pertaining to God or to his worship; appointed from common, secular uses, and consecrated to God and his service; as, a sacred place; a sacred day; a sacred feast; sacred aerie; sacred orders.

2. Proceeding from God and containing religious precepts; as, the sacred books of the Old and New Testament.

3. Narrating or writing facts respecting God and holy things; as, a sacred historian.

4. Relating to religion or the worship of God; used for religious purposes; as, sacred songs; sacred music; sacred history.

5. Consecrated; dedicated; devoted; with to. Dryden.

6. Entitled to reverence; venerated. Ford and saint to thee alone were given, The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

7. Inviolable, as if appropriated to a superior being; as, sacred honor or promise.

— Sacres of marriage still are sacred h'd. Dryden.

Sacred majesty. In this title, sacred has no definite meaning, or it is blasphemy.

Sacred place, in the civil law, is that where a deceased person is buried.

SAC'RED-LY, adv. Religiously; with due reverence, as of something holy or consecrated to God; as, to observe the Sabbath sacredly; the day is sacredly kept.

2. Inviolably; strictly; as, to observe one's word sacredly; a secret to be sacredly kept.

SAC'RED-NESS, n. The state of being sacred, or consecrated to God, to his worship, or to religious uses; holiness; sanctity; as, the sacredness of the sanctuary or its worship; as, the sacredness of the Sabbath; the sacredness of the clerical office.

2. Inviolableness; as, the sacredness of marriage vows or of a trust.

SAC'RIFIC, }{ a. [L. sacrificus. See SACRISAC'RIFIC'AL, } FICE.]

Employed in sacrifice. Johnson.

SAC'RIFIC'A-BLE, a. Capable of being offered in sacrifice. [Ill-formed, harsh, and not used.] Brown.

SAC'RIFIC'ANT, n. [L. sacrificans.]

One that offers a sacrifice. Hallywell.

SAC'RIFICE, (sak're-fize), v. t. [L. sacrifico; Fr. sacrifier; Sp. sacrificar; It. sacrificare; L. sacer, sacred, and facio, to make.]

1. To immolate or consume, partially or wholly, on the altar of God, either as an atonement for sin, or to procure favor, or to express thankfulness; as, to sacrifice an ox or a lamb. 2 Sam. vi.

2. To destroy, surrender, or suffer to be lost, for the sake of obtaining something; as, to sacrifice the peace of the church to a little vain curiosity. We should never sacrifice health to pleasure, nor integrity to fame.

3. To devote with loss. Condemned to sacrifice his childish years To babbling ignorance and to empty fears. Prior.

4. To destroy; to kill.

SAC'RIFICE, v. i. To make offerings to God of things consumed on the altar. Exod. iii.

SAC'RIFICE, (sak're-fize), n. [Fr., from L. sacrificium.]

1. An animal or any other thing presented to God and burned on the altar, as an acknowledgment of his power and providence, or to make atonement for sin, appease his wrath, or conciliate his favor, or to express thankfulness for his benefits. Animals offered in sacrifice are called victims; sacrifices in which no blood is shed, are called unbloody sacrifices. Sacrifices are expiatory, impetratory, and eucharistical; that is, atoning for sin, seeking favor, or expressing thanks. A sacrifice differs from an oblation, by being consumed partially or wholly on the altar; whereas, the oblation is only consecrated to God or to a religious use, as tithes, first fruits, or contributions for religious purposes. Sacrifices have been common to most nations, and have been offered to false gods, as well as by the Israelites to Jehovah.

Human sacrifices, the killing and offering of human beings to deities, have been practiced by some barbarous nations.

2. The thing offered to God, or immolated by an act of religion.

My life, if thou preserv'st my life, Thy sacrifice shall be. Addison.

3. Destruction, surrender, or loss made or incurred for gaining some object, or for obliging another; as, the sacrifice of interest to pleasure, or of pleasure to interest.

4. Any thing destroyed.

SAVAGE, a. [Fr. sauvage; Arm. savanica; Il. selvaggio; Sp. salvaje; from L. silva, a wood, or silva, an inhabitant of a wood, or salvaticus.]

1. Pertaining to the forest; wild; remote from human residence and improvements; uncultivated; as, a savage wilderness. Cornelis and Savage berries of the wood. Dryden.

2. Wild; untamed; as, savage beasts of prey.

3. Uncivilized; untaught; unpolished; rude; as, savage life; savage manners. Rulegh.

What nation, since the commencement of the Christian era, ever rose from savage to civilized without Christianity? Ed. D. Griffin.

4. Cruel; barbarous; fierce; ferocious; inhuman; brutal; as, a savage spirit.

SAVAGE, n. A human being in his native state of rudeness; one who is untaught, uncivilized, or without cultivation of mind or manners. The savages of America, when uncorrupted by the vices of civilized men, are remarkable for their hospitality to strangers, and for their truth, fidelity, and gratitude to their friends, but implacably cruel and revengeful toward their enemies. From this last trait of the savage character, the word came to signify,

2. A man of extreme, unfeeling, brutal cruelty; a barbarian.

3. The name of a genus of fierce, voracious flies. Dict. Nat. Hist.

SAVAGE, v. t. To make wild, barbarous, or cruel. [Not well authorized, and little used.] Thomson.

SAVAGE-LY, adv. In the manner of a savage; cruelly; inhumanly. Shak.

2. Cruelty; barbarity. Shak.

SAVAGE-ISM, n. The state of rude, uncivilized men; the state of men in their native wildness and rudeness. S. S. Smith. Walsh.

The greater part of modern philosophers have declared for the original savagism of men. Encyc.

SA-VAN'NA, n. [In Spanish, savana is a sheet for a bed, or a large plain covered with snow.]

An extensive open plain or meadow, or a plain destitute of trees, and covered with grass. Locke.

SA-VANT', (sá-váng'), n.; pl. SAVANS. [Fr.]

A man of learning; in the plural, literary men.

SAVE, v. t. [Fr. sauver, from L. salvo, It. salvare, Sp. salvar. As salvo is used in Latin for salutation or wishing health, as had is in English, I suspect this word to be from the root of heal or hail, the first letter being changed, as in Gr. ἄλῃ, W. halen, salt. See SALT.]

1. To preserve from injury, destruction, or evil of any kind; to rescue from danger; as, to save a house from the flames; to save a man from drowning; to save a family from ruin; to save a state from war.

SAVING, ppr. Preserving from evil or destruction; hindering from waste or loss; sparing; taking or using in time.

2. Excepting.

3. a. Frugal; not lavish; avoiding unnecessary expenses; economical; parsimonious. But it implies less rigorous economy than PARSIMONIOUS; as, a saving husbandman or housekeeper.

4. That saves in returns or receipts the principal or sum employed or expended; that incurs no loss, though not gainful; as, a saving bargain. The ship has made a saving voyage.

5. That secures everlasting salvation; as, saving grace.

SAVING, n. Something kept from being expended or lost.

By reducing the interest of the debt, the nation makes a saving. Anon.

2. Exception; reservation. Contend not with those that are too strong for us, but still with a saving to honesty. L'Estrange.

SAVING-LY, adv. With frugality or parsimony.

2. So as to be finally saved from eternal death; as, savingly converted.

SAVING-NESS, n. Frugality; parsimony; caution not to expend money without necessity or use.

2. Tendency to promote eternal salvation. Johnson.

2. Properly and appropriately, Jesus Christ, the Redeemer, who has opened the way to everlasting salvation by his obedience and death, and who is therefore called the Savior, by way of distinction, the Savior of men, the Savior of the world. General Washington may be called the saver, but not the savior, of his country.

SAV'OR, n. [Fr. savoir; L. sapor; W. sawyr; Arm. saour; from L. sapio, to taste.]

1. Taste or odor; something that perceptibly affects the organs of taste and smell; as, the savor of an orange or rose; an ill savor; a sweet savor.

I smell sweet savors. Shak.

In Scripture, it usually denotes smell, scent, odor. Lev. xxvi. Eccles. x.

2. The quality which renders a thing valuable; the quality which renders other bodies agreeable to the taste.

If the salt hath lost its savor. — Matt. v.

3. In Scripture, character; reputation. Exod. v.

4. Cause; occasion. 2 Cor. ii.

Sweet savor, in Scripture, denotes that which renders a thing acceptable to God, or his acceptance. Hence, to smell a sweet savor, is to accept the offering or service. Gen. viii.

SA'VOR, v. i. To have a particular smell or taste.

2. To partake of the quality or nature of; or to have the appearance of. This answers savor of a humble spirit; or they savor of pride. Watson. Milton.

SAY, v. t. i. pret. and pp. SAID, contracted from SAYED. [Sax. segan, sagan; G. sagen; D. zeggen; Sw. säga; Dan. siger; Ch. 𐌸𐌹𐌸 or 𐌸𐌹, to speak or say.]

The same verb in Arabic, سأى segaa, signifies to sink, Gotb. sigean. The sense of the root is, to throw or thrust. Class Sg. No. 23. Pers. saaxaa a word, speech.]

1. To speak; to utter in words; as, he said nothing; he said many things; he says not a word. Say a good word for me.

It is observable that, although this word is radically synonymous with Speak and Tell, yet the uses or applications of these words are different. Thus we say, to speak an oration, to tell a story; but in these phrases, say can not be used. Yet to say a lesson is good English, though not very elegant. We never use the phrases, to say a sermon or discourse, to say an argument, to say a speech, to say testimony.

A very general use of say is to introduce a relation, narration, or recital, either of the speaker himself, or of something said or done, or to be done, by another. Thus Adam said, This is bone of my bone; Noah said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem. If we say, We have no sin, we deceive ourselves. Say to the cities of Judah, Behold your God. I can not say what I should do in a similar case. Say thus precedes a sentence. But it is perhaps impracticable to reduce the peculiar and appropriate uses of say, speak, and tell to general rules. They can be learnt only by observation.

2. To declare. Gen. xxxvii.

3. To utter; to pronounce.

Say now Shibboleth. — Judges xii.

4. To utter, as a command.

God said, Let there be light. — Gen. i.

5. To utter, as a promise. Luke xxiii.

6. To utter, as a question or answer. Mark ix.

7. To affirm; to teach. Matt. xvii.

8. To confess. Luke xvi.

9. To testify. Acts xxiv.

10. To argue; to allege by way of argument.

After all that can be said against a thing. Tillotson.

11. To repeat; to rehearse; to recite; as, to say a lesson.

12. To pronounce; to recite without singing. Then shall be said or sung as follows.

13. To report; as in the phrases, It is said, they say.

14. To answer; to utter by way of reply; to tell.

Say, Stella, feel you no content, Reflecting on a lily well spent! Swift.

Note. — This verb is not properly intransitive. In the phrase, "as when we say, Plato is no fool," the last clause is the object after the verb; that is, "we say what follows." If this verb is properly intransitive in any case, it is in the phrase, "that is to say," but in such cases, the subsequent clause is the object of the verb, being that which is said, uttered, or related.

SAY, n. [Sax. saga, sagu.] A speech; something said. [In popular use, but not elegant.]

SAY, n. [For Assay.] A sample. [Obs.] Sidney.

SCA-LADE, n. [Fr. scalade; Sp. escalado; from L. SCA-LA'DO, scala, a ladder. See SCALE.]

A storm or assault on a fortified place, in which the soldiers enter the place by means of ladders. It is written also ESCALAOE.

SCA-LAR-I-FORM, n. [L. scolaris, a ladder, and forma, form.] Having transverse bars and spaces like a ladder. Dana.

SCA'LA-RY, a. Resembling a ladder; formed with steps. [Little used.] Brown.

SCALD, (skawid,) v. t. [It. scaldare; Sp. and Port. escaldar; Fr. echauder, for eschauder; Sw. skalla; Dan. skaalder; Fr. scaldin; from the root of L. calco, calda, calidus. I suppose the primary sense of calco is, to contract, to draw, to make hard.]

1. To burn or painfully affect and injure by immersion in, or contact with, a liquor of a boiling heat, or a heat approaching it; as, to scald the hand or foot. We scald the part, when the heat of the liquor applied is so violent as to injure the skin and flesh. Scald is sometimes used to express the effect of the heat of other substances than liquids.

Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall. Cowley.

2. To expose to a boiling or violent heat over a fire, or in water or other liquor; as, to scald meat or milk.

SCALD, n. [Supra.] A burn, or injury to the skin and flesh by hot liquor.

SCENE, n. [Fr. id.; L. scena; Gr. σκηνή; Heb. שָׁנָה, to dwell; Ch. to subside, to settle; Syr. to come or fall on; Ar. سَكَنَ sakana, to be firm, stable, quiet, to set or establish, to quiet, or cause to rest. Class. Gr. No. 43, 44. The Greek word signifies a tent, hut, or cottage. In L. it is an arbor or stage. The primary sense is, to set or throw down.]

1. A stage; the theater or place where dramatic pieces and other shows are exhibited. It does not appear that the ancients changed the scenes in different parts of the play. Indeed, the original scenes for acting was an open plat of ground, shaded or slightly covered. Encyc.

2. The whole series of actions and events connected and exhibited; or the whole assemblage of objects displayed at one view. Thus we say, the execution of a malefactor is a melancholy scene. The crucifixion of our Savior was the most solemn scene ever presented to the view of man. We say, also, a scene of sorrow or of rejoicing; a noble scene; a sylvan scene.

A charming scene of nature is displayed. Dryden.

3. A part of a play; a division of an act. A play is divided into acts, and acts are divided into scenes.

4. So much of an act of a play as represents what passes between the same persons in the same place. Dryden.

3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar; foundation for the support of a student. Ainsworth.

SCHOLASTIC, { a. [L. scholasticus].
SCHOLASTICAL, {

1. Pertaining to a scholar, to a school, or to schools; as, scholastic manners or pride; scholastic learning.

2. Scholar-like; becoming a scholar; suitable to schools; as, scholastic precision.

3. Pertaining to the schoolmen, or philosophers and divines, of the middle ages, who adopted the system of Aristotle, and spent much time on points of nice and abstract speculation; as, scholastic divinity or theology; scholastic philosophy.

Among the most distinguished of the schoolmen were Alexander of Hales, Thomas Aquinas, Duns Scotus, and William Occam. They took their name from being teachers in schools of divinity established chiefly by Charlemagne. Some of their fiercest contests related to the question of Realism and Nominalism. Encyc. Amer.

4. Pedantic; formal.

SCHOLASTIC, n. One who adheres to the method or subtleties of the schools. Milton.

SCHOLASTICAL-LY, adv. In the manner of schools; according to the niceties or method of the schools.

SCHOLY, v. i. To write comments. [Not in use.] Hooker.

SCHOOL, (skool), n. [L. schola; Gr. σχολή, leisure, vacation from business, lucubration at leisure, a place where leisure is enjoyed, a school. The adverb signifies at ease, leisurely, slowly, hardly, with labor or difficulty. In Sax. scol is a crowd, a multitude, a school, (school), as of fishes, and a school for instruction. So, also, scola, a school; but the latter sense, I think, must have been derived from the Latin. D. school, an academy and a crowd; schoolen, to flock together; G. schule, a school for instruction; D. skole; Sw. skola; W. ysgol; Arm. scol; Fr. ecole; It. scuola; Sp. escuela; Port. escola; Sans. schala. This word seems originally to have denoted leisure, freedom from business, a time given to sports, games, or exercises, and afterward, time given to literary studies. The sense of a crowd, collection, or school, seems to be derivative.]

1. A place or establishment in which persons are instructed in arts, science, languages, or any species of learning; or the pupils assembled for instruction. In American usage, school more generally denotes the collective body of pupils in any place of instruction, and under the direction and discipline of one or more teachers. Thus we say, a school consists of fifty pupils; the preceptor has a large school, or a small school; his discipline keeps the school well regulated and quiet.

2. The instruction or exercises of a collection of pupils or students, or the collective body of pupils while engaged in their studies. Thus we say, the school begins or opens at eight o'clock, that is, the pupils at that hour begin their studies. So we say, the teacher is now in school; the school hours are from nine to twelve, and from two to five.

3. The state of instruction.

Set him betwixt to school. Dryden.

4. A place of education, or collection of pupils, of any kind; as, the schools of the prophets. In modern usage, the word school comprehends every place of education, as university, college, academy, common or primary schools, dancing-schools, riding-schools, &c.; but ordinarily the word is applied to seminaries inferior to universities and colleges.

What is the great community of Christians, but one of the innumerable schools in the vast plan, which God has instituted for the education of various intelligences? Buckminster.

5. Separate denomination or sect; or a system of doctrine taught by particular teachers, or peculiar to any denomination of Christians or philosophers.

Let no man be less confident in his faith — by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians. Taylor.

Thus we say, the Socratic school, the Platonic school, the Peripatetic or Ionic school; by which we understand all those who adopted and adhered to a particular system of opinions.

6. The schools, pl. the seminaries for teaching logic, metaphysics, and theology, which were formed in the middle ages, and which were characterized by academical disputations and subtleties of reasoning; or the learned men who were engaged in discussing nice points in metaphysics or theology.

The supreme authority of Aristotle in the schools of theology as well as of philosophy. Henry.

7. Any place of improvement or learning. The world is an excellent school to wise men, but a school of vice to fools.

8. Formerly, a school or compact body; as, a school of fishes; spell, also, SCOLL. Hallivell.

In this sense, the word is still sometimes used in America.

Primary school; a school for instructing children in the first rudiments of language and literature; called, also, common school, because it is open to the children of all the inhabitants in a town or district.

SCHOOL, v. t. To instruct; to train; to educate.

His gentle, never schooled, yet learned. Shak.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor; to chide and admonish; to reprove.

School your child, And ask why God's Anointed be reviled. Dryden.

A peculiar and specific painful affection, principally seated in the sciatic nerve, which, if protracted, produces emaciation of the limb affected, with weakness, and a more or less permanent flexion. If it is not a true neuralgia, it is nearly allied to it.

SCI-AT'IC, { a. Pertaining to the hip; as, the SCI-AT'IC-AL, { sciatic artery or nerve.

2. Affecting the hip; as, sciatic pains.

SCIENCE, (si'ens), n. [Fr. from L. scientia, from scio, to know; Sp. ciencia; It. scienza. Scio is probably a contracted word.]

1. In a general sense, knowledge, or certain knowledge; the comprehension or understanding of truth or facts by the mind. The sciences of God must be perfect.

2. In philosophy, a collection of the general principles or leading truths relating to any subject, or arranged in systematic order. Pure science, as the mathematics, is built on self-evident truths; but the term science is also applied to other subjects, founded on generally acknowledged truths, as metaphysics; or on experiment and observation, as chemistry and natural philosophy; or even to an assemblage of the general principles of an art, as the science of agriculture, the science of navigation. Arts relate to practice, as painting and sculpture.

A principle in science is a rule in art. Playfair.

3. Art derived from precepts or built on principles. Science perfecta genus. Dryden.

4. Any art or species of knowledge.

No science doth make known the first principles on which it buildeth. Hooker.

5. One of the seven liberal branches of knowledge, viz., grammar, logic, rhetoric, arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and music. Johnson.

Note. — Authors have not always been careful to use the terms art and science with due discrimination and precision. Music is an art as well as a science. In general, an art is that which depends on practice or performance, and science that which depends on abstract or speculative principles. The theory of music is a science; the practice of it an art.

SCIENT', (si'ent), a. [L. sciens.]

Skilful. [Not used.] Cockeram.

SCIENT'ER, [L.] Knowingly. Bowdler.

SCUR'VILY, adv. [from scurvy.] Basely; meanly; with coarseness and vulgar incivility.
The clergy were never more learned, or so scurvily treated. Swift.

SCURVINESS, n. [from scurvy.] The state of being scurvy.

SCURVY, n. [from scurf; scurvy for scurfy; Low L. scorbustus.]
A disease characterized by livid spots of various sizes, sometimes minute and sometimes large, and occasioned by extravasation of blood under the cuticle, paleness, languor, lassitude, and depression of spirits, general exhaustion, pains in the limbs, occasionally with fetid breath, spongy and bleeding gums, and bleeding from almost all the mucous membranes. It is occasioned by confinement, innu-tritious food, and hard labor, in conjunction, but more especially by confinement, for a long period of time, to a limited range of food, which is incapable of supplying the elements necessary to repair the waste of the system. This disease has been called purpura by some nosologists, but by Good it is more appropriately styled porphyra.

from the same root, an ax. These verbs seem to be the same, with different prefixes, and from this evidently is derived scythe, which would be a better spelling than scythe.

1. An instrument for mowing grass, or cutting grain or other vegetables. It consists of a long curving blade, with a sharp edge, made fast to a handle, which, in New England, is called a smath, and which is bent into a convenient form for swinging the blade to advantage. The blade is hung to the snath at an acute angle.

In mythology, Saturn or Time is represented with a scythe, the emblem of destruction.

2. The curved, sharp blade used anciently in war chariots.

SCYTHIE, v. t. To mow. [Not in use.] Shak.

SEAL, (seal.) n. [Sax. seol, secl, sigle; Sw. sidl.] The common name for the aquatic carnivorous mammals of the family Phocidæ, corresponding to the genus Phoca of Linnaeus. Seals mostly inhabit sea-coasts and islands, particularly in the higher latitudes of both hemispheres. They pass much of their time in the water, but have warm blood, and breathe only air. Their hind feet are placed at the extremity of the body, in the same direction with it, and serve the purpose of a caudal fin; the fore feet are also adapted for swimming, and furnished each with five claws. Some seals have external ears, while others are destitute of them; and this difference is the ground of M. Peron's distribution of them into two divisions, viz., the earless seals or true seals, and the eared seals or otaries. There are numerous species, bearing the popular names of the sea-lion, the sea-bear or ursine-seal, the sea-elephant, elephant-seal or bottle-nose, the bearded or great seal, the monk seal, the crested seal, &c. The common seal, Calocephalus vitulinus of F. Cuvier, (Phoca vitulina, Linn.,) is found in the northern seas generally, on the British and French coasts, &c. It is covered with short, stiff, thickset hair, has no external ears, and is usually from three to five or six feet in length. Seals are much sought after for their skins and fur, and also for their oil, which in some species is very abundant. P. Cyc. Jardine's Nat. Lib.

SEAL, (seal.) n. [Sax. sigel, sigla; G. siegel; D. zegel; Dan. sigel, segl; Fr. sceau; Arm. sieyll; L. sigillum; It. sigillo; Sp. sigillo.] It is uncertain what was the original signification of seal, whether an image, or some ornament. In Saxon, the word signifies a necklace, or ornament for the neck, a stud or boss, a clasp, and a seal.

1. A piece of metal or other hard substance, usually round or elliptical, on which is engraved or stamped some image or device, and sometimes a legend or inscription. This is used by individuals, corporate bodies, and states, for making impressions on wax upon instruments of writing, as an evidence of their authenticity. The king of England has his great seal and his privy seal. Seals are sometimes worn in rings. [See also PAVY SEAL and GREAT SEAL.]

2. The wax set to an instrument, and impressed or stamped with a seal. Thus we give a deed under hand and seal. Wax is generally used in sealing instruments, but other substances may be used.

3. The wax or wafer that makes fast a letter or other paper.

4. Any act of confirmation. Milton.

5. That which confirms, ratifies, or makes stable; assurance. 2 Tim. ii.

6. That which effectually shuts, confines, or secures; that which makes fast. Rev. xi.

SEAL, (seal.) v. t. [Sw. besegla, försegla; Dan. besegle, forsegle; G. siegeln; D. zegelen.] The root signifies, probably, to seal, to fix, to impress, or to cut or engrave.

1. To fasten with a seal; to attach together with a wafer, or with wax; as, to seal a letter.

2. To set or affix a seal as a mark of authenticity; as, to seal a deed. Hence,

3. To confirm; to ratify; to establish.

And with my hand I seal our true hearts' love. Shak.

When, therefore, I have performed this, and have sealed to them this fruit, I will come by you into Spain. — Rom. xv.

4. To shut or keep close; sometimes with up. Seal your lips; seal up your lips. Shak.

Open your ears, and seal your bosom upon the secret concerns of a friend. Dwight.

5. To make fast.

So they went and made the sepulcher sure, sealing the stone and setting a watch. — Matt. xxvii.

6. To mark with a stamp, as an evidence of standard exactness, legal size, or merchantable quality. By our laws, weights and measures are to be sealed by an officer appointed and sworn for that purpose; and leather is to be sealed by a like officer, as evidence that it has been inspected and found to be of good quality. Laws of Conn.

7. To keep secret.

Shut up the words, and seal the book. — Dan. xii. Is. viii.

8. To mark, as one's property, and secure from danger. Cont. lv.

9. To close; to fulfill; to complete; with up. Dan. ix.

10. To imprint on the mind; as, to seal instruction. Job xxxiii.

11. To inclose; to hide; to conceal. Job xiv.

12. To confine; to restrain. Job xxxvii.

13. In architecture, to fix a piece of wood or iron in a wall with cement, plaster, or other binding for staples, hinges, &c. Gwilt.

SEAL, (seal.) v. i. To fix a seal.

I will seal onto this bond. [Unusual.] Shak.

SEAL'ED, (seald.) pp. or a. Furnished with a seal; fastened with a seal; confirmed; closed.

SEAL'ER, n. One who seals; an officer in chancery, who seals writs and instruments.

2. In New England, an officer appointed by the town or other proper authority, to examine and try weights and measures, and set a stamp on such as are according to the standards established by the State; also, an officer who inspects leather, and stamps such as is good. These are called scalers of weights and measures, and scalers of leather.

SEALING, ppr. Fixing a seal; fastening with a seal; confirming; closing; keeping secret; fixing a piece of wood or iron in a wall with cement.

SEALING, n. The act of affixing a seal.

2. In architecture the fixing of a piece of wood or iron on a wall with plaster, cement, or other binding, for staples, hinges, &c. Gréll.

3. [from seal, the animal.] The operation of making seals and curing their skins.

SEALING-VOY-AGE, n. A voyage for the purpose of killing seals and obtaining their skins.

SEALING-WAX, n. [seal and wax.] A compound of the resin lac, with some less brittle resin, and various coloring matters, used for fastening a folded letter, and thus concealing the writing, and for receiving impressions of seals set to instruments. Sealing-wax is hard or soft, and may be of any color.

SEAM, (seem), n. [Sax. seam; D. seam; G. saum; Dan. søm; Sw. søm, a seam, a suture; søm, to sew. The G. seam signifies a hem or border. The word probably signifies the sewing by sewing. In Danish, semmær signifies to hem, and to besæm, to be sewing, to become, to be suitable. We see then that seam and seem are from one root. The primary sense is, to meet, to come or put together. See SAME and ASSEMBLE. Class Sm, No. 33, 40.]

1. The suture or uniting of two edges of cloth by the needle. Dryden.

The coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout. — John xix.

SEA'SON, (se'zn), n. [Fr. saison; Arm. seazon, seazun; Port. sazon, sezam, seazon, proper time, state of being seasoned; sazonar, to season, ripen, temper, sweeten, bring to maturity; Sp. sazon, season, maturity, taste, relish; sazonar, to season. The primary sense, like that of time and opportunity, is to fall, to come, to arrive, and this word seems to be allied to seize and assess; to fall on, to set on.]

Season literally signifies that which comes or or-ives; and in this general sense, is synonymous with time. Hence,

1. A fit or suitable time; the convenient time; the usual or appointed time; as, the messenger arrived in season; in good season. This fruit is out of season.

2. Any time, as distinguished from others.

The season prime for sweetest accents and airs. Milton.

3. A time of some continuance, but not long.

Thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. — Acts xiii.

4. One of the four divisions of the year, spring, summer, autumn, winter. The season is mild; it is cold for the season.

We saw, in six days' traveling, the several seasons of the year in their beauty. Addison.

We distinguish the season by prefixing its appropriate name, as the spring-season, summer-season, &c.

To be in season; to be in good time, or sufficiently early for the purpose.

To be out of season; to be too late, beyond the proper time, or beyond the usual or appointed time.

From the sense of convenience is derived the following.

5. That which matures or prepares for the taste; that which gives a relish.

You lack the season of all nature, sleep. Shak.

But in this sense, we now use SEASONING.

SEA'SON, (se'zn), v. t. [Fr. assaisonner; Sp. and Port. sazonar.]

1. To render palatable, or to give a higher relish to, by the addition or mixture of another substance more pungent or pleasant; as, to season meat with salt; to season any thing with spices. Lev. ii.

2. To render more agreeable, pleasant, or delightful; to give a relish or zest to by something that excites, animates, or exhilarates.

You season still with sports your serious hours. Dryden.

The proper use of wit is to season conversation. Tillotson.

3. To render more agreeable, or less rigorous and severe; to temper; to moderate; to qualify by admixture.

When mercy seasons justice. Shak.

4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.

Season their younger years with prudent and pious principles. Taylor.

5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature; to prepare.

Who lo want a hollow friend doth try, Directly seasons him an enemy. Shak.

6. To prepare for use by drying or hardening; to take out or suffer to escape the natural juices; as, to season timber.

7. To prepare or mature for a climate; to accustom to and enable to endure; as, to season the body to a particular climate. Long residence in the West Indies, or a fever, may season strangers.

SEA'SON, (se'zn), v. i. To become mature; to grow fit for use; to become adapted to a climate, as the human body.

2. To become dry and hard, by the escape of the natural juices, or by being penetrated with other substance. Timber seasons well under cover in the air, and ship timber seasons in salt water.

3. To betoken; to favor. [Obs.] Beaum. & FL.

SEA'SON-ABLE, a. Opportune; that comes, happens, or is done in good time, in due season, or in proper time for the purpose; as, a seasonable supply of rain.

Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction. Eccius.

SEA'SON-ABLE-NESS, n. Opportuneness of time; the state of being in good time, or in time convenient for the purpose, or sufficiently early. Addison.

SEA'SON-ABLY, adv. In due time; in time convenient; sufficiently early; as, to sow or plant seasonably.

SEA'SON-AGE, n. Seasoning; sauce. [Not used.] South.

SEA'SON-AL, a. Pertaining to the seasons. Partington.

SEA'SON-ED, (se'znd), pp. or a. Mixed or sprinkled with something that gives a relish; tempered; moderated; qualified; matured; dried and hardened.

An officer whose business is to superintend and manage the affairs of a particular department of government; as, the secretary of state, who conducts the correspondence of a state with foreign courts; the secretary of the treasury, who manages the department of finance; the secretary of war, of the navy, &c.
SECRETIVE, v. l. To hide; to conceal; to remove from observation or the knowledge of others; as, to secrete stolen goods.
 2. To secrete one's self; to retire from notice into a private place; to abscond.
 3. In the animal economy, to secrete; to produce from the blood substances different from the blood itself, or from any of its constituents; as the glands. The liver secretes bile; the salivary glands secrete saliva. Ed. Encycy.
 4. In vegetable physiology, to separate substances from the sap.
SECRETED, pp. or a. Concealed; secreted.
SECRETING, pp. Hiding; secreting.
CRETION, n. The act of secreting; the act or process of producing from the blood substances different from the blood itself or from any of its constituents, as bile, saliva, mucus, urine, &c. This was considered by the older physiologists as merely a separation from the blood of certain substances previously contained in it; the literal meaning of secretion. But this opinion is now generally exploded. The organs of secretion are of very various form and structure, but the most general are those called glands. Ed. Encycy.
 2. In vegetables, the corresponding process of separating substances from the sap.
 3. The matter secreted; as mucus, perspirable matter, &c.

SECREP-IST, n. A dealer in secrets. [Not in use.] Boyle.

SECTARIST, n. A sectary. [Not much used.]
SECTARY, n. [Fr. sectaire.] [Warton.]
 1. A person who separates from an established church, or from the prevailing denomination of Christians; one that belongs to a sect; a dissenter.
 2. A follower; a pupil. [Not in use.] Spenser.
SECTATOR, n. [Fr. sectateur.]
 A follower; a disciple; an adherent to a sect. [Not now used.] Raleigh.
SECTILE, a. [L. sectilis, from seco, to cut.]
 Capable of being cut in slices with a knife. Dana.
 In mineralogy, applied to minerals when, being cut with a knife, the separated particles do not fly away, but remain on the mass. Humble.
SECTION, n. [Fr., from L. sectio; seco, to cut off.]
 1. The act of cutting, or of separating by cutting; as, the section of bodies. Wotton.
 2. A part separated from the rest; a division.
 3. In books and writings, a distinct part or portion; the subdivision of a chapter; the division of a law or other writing or instrument. In laws, a section is sometimes called a PARAGRAPH OR ARTICLE. Boyle. Locke.
 4. A distinct part of a city, town, country, or people; a part of territory separated by geographical lines, or of a people considered as distinct. Thus we say, the northern or eastern section of the United States, the middle section, the southern or western section.
 5. In geometry, the intersection of two superficies, or of a superficies and a solid. In the former case, it is a line; in the latter, a surface. A. D. Stanley.
 6. The representation of an object, as a building, machine, &c., cut asunder vertically, so as to show the interior or profile. Gloss. of Archit.
 7. In the public lands of the United States, a tract of 640 acres.
SECTIONAL, a. Pertaining to a section or distinct part of a larger body or territory. All sectional interests and party feelings, it is hoped, will hereafter yield to schemes of union. A. Story. Hancock, Mem. of Clinton.
SECTIONAL-LY, adv. In a sectional manner.
SECTOR, n. [Fr. secteur, from L. seco, to cut.]
 1. In geometry, a part of a circle comprehended between two radii and the included arc; or a mixed triangle, formed by two radii and the arc of a circle. Hutton.
 The sector of a sphere, is the solid generated by the revolution of the sector of a circle about one of its radii.
 2. A mathematical instrument so marked with lines of sines, tangents, secants, chords, &c., as to fit all radii and scales, and useful in finding the proportion between quantities of the same kind. The sector is founded on the fourth proposition of the sixth book of Euclid, where it is proved that similar triangles have their homologous sides proportional. Encycy.

 3. In astronomy, an instrument for measuring zenith distances. [See ZENITH SECTOR.] Brande.
Dip sector; an instrument used for measuring the dip of the horizon. Olmsted.
SECU-LAR, a. [Fr. seculaire; It. secolare; Sp. secular; L. seularis, from seculum, the world or an age.]
 1. Pertaining to this present world, or to things not spiritual or holy; relating to things not immediately or primarily respecting the soul, but the body; worldly. The secular concerns of life respect making provision for the support of life, the preservation of health, the temporal prosperity of men, of states, &c. Secular power is that which superintends and governs the temporal affairs of men, the civil or political power; and is contistinguished from spiritual or ecclesiastical power.

Secular inequality; a deviation from the mean motion or mean orbit of a celestial body, which proceeds so slowly as to become sensible only after the lapse of centuries. Brande.
 3. Coming or observed once in a century; as, a secular year.
Secular games, in Rome, were games celebrated once in an age or century, which lasted three days and nights, with sacrifices, theatrical shows, combats, sports, &c. Valerius Maximus.
Secular music; any music or songs not adapted to sacred uses.
Secular refrigeration; in geology, the periodical cooling, and consequent consolidation, of the crust of the globe. Brande.
Secular song, or poem; a song or poem composed for the secular games, or sung or rehearsed at those games.
SECULAR, n. A church officer or officiate, whose functions are confined to the vocal department of the choir. Busby.
SECULARITY, n. Worldliness; supreme attention to the things of the present life. Buchanan.
SECULARIZATION, n. [from seularize.] The act of converting a regular person, place, or benefice, into a secular one. Most cathedral churches were formerly regular, that is, the canons were of religious or monastic orders; but they have since been secularized. For the secularization of a regular church, there is wanted the authority of the pope, that of the prince, the bishop of the place, the patron, and even the consent of the people. Encycy.
 2. In politics, the appropriation of church property to secular or common uses; also, transferring the civil jurisdiction of a district or country from ecclesiastics to laymen. Murdock.
SECULARIZE, v. t. [Fr. seulariser; from secular.]
 To convert that which is regular or monastic into secular; as, the ancient regular cathedral churches were secularized. At the reformation, the abbey was secularized. Coxe, Swift.
 2. To convert from spiritual appropriation to secular or common use.
 3. To transfer the civil government of a bishopric or country from a prince bishop to a layman.
 4. To make worldly or unspiritual. [Murdock.]

 1. In botany, the second coat or integument of an ovule, reckoning the outer as the first. Lindley.
 2. Secundines, in the plural, as generally used, are the several coats or membranes in which the fetus is wrapped in the womb; and the afterbirth. Coxe. Brande.
SECUNDUM ARTEM, [L.] According to art or professional rule; skillfully.
SECURE, a. [L. securus; It. sicuro; Sp. seguro. It coincides in elements with the oriental سكّر and سكّر , to shut or inclose, to make fast; but it may be from se, or sine, and cura, care, free from anxiety.]
 1. Free from danger of being taken by an enemy; that may resist assault or attack. The place is well fortified and very secure. Gibraltar is a secure fortress. In this sense, securus is followed by against or from; as, securus against attack, or from an enemy.

2. Free from danger; safe; applied to persons; with from.

3. Free from fear or apprehension of danger; not alarmed; not disturbed by fear; confident of safety; hence, careless of the means of defense. Men are often most in danger when they feel most secure.

Confidence thou bore thee on, secure
To meet no danger. Milton.

4. Confident; not distrustful; with of.

But thou, secure of soul, amidst with woe.
It concerns the most secure of his strength to pray to to expose him to an enemy. Dryden.

5. Careless; wanting caution. [See No. 3.]

6. Certain; very confident. He is secure of a welcome reception.

SE-CURE', v. t. To guard effectually from danger; to make safe. Fortifications may secure a city; ships of war may secure a harbor.

I spread a cloud before the victor's light,
Sustained the vanquished, and secured his flight. Dryden.

2. To make certain; to put beyond hazard. Liberty and fixed laws secure to every citizen due protection of person and property. The first duty and the highest interest of men is, to secure the favor of God by repentance and faith, and thus to secure to themselves future felicity.

3. To inclose or confine effectually; to guard effectually from escape; sometimes, to seize and confine; as, to secure a prisoner. The sheriff pursued the thief with a warrant, and secured him.

4. To make certain of payment; as, to secure a debt by mortgage.

5. To make certain of receiving a precarious debt by giving bond, bail, surety, or otherwise; as, to secure a creditor.

SE-CURED', pp. Effectually guarded or protected; made certain; put beyond hazard; effectually confined; made fast.

SE-CURE'LY, adv. Without danger; safely; as, to pass a river on ice securely. But SAFELY is generally used.

2. Without fear or apprehension; carelessly; in an unguarded state; in confidence of safety.

He daring for security him delect.
Devise not evil against thy neighbor, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee. — Prov. iii. Milton.

SE-CUREMENT, n. Security; protection. [Not used.] Brown.

SE-CURENESS, n. Confidence of safety; exemption from fear; hence, want of vigilance or caution. Bacon.

SE-CURER, n. He or that which secures or protects.

SE-CURIFORM, a. [L. securus, an ax or hatchet, and form.] In botany, having the form of an ax or hatchet. Lee.

SE-CURITY, n. [Fr. securité; L. securitas.] 1. Protection; effectual defense or safety from danger of any kind; as, a chain of forts erected for the security of the frontiers.

2. That which protects or guards from danger. A navy constitutes the security of Great Britain from invasion.

3. Freedom from fear or apprehension; confidence of safety; whence, negligence in providing means of defense. Security is dangerous, for it exposes men to attack when unprepared. Security in sin is the worst condition of the sinner.

4. Safety; certainty. We have no security for peace with the enemy, but the dread of our navy.

5. Any thing given or deposited, to secure the payment of a debt, or the performance of a contract; as a bond with surety, a mortgage, the indorsement of a responsible man, a pledge, &c. Blackstone.

6. Something given or done to secure peace or good behavior. Violent and dangerous men are obliged to give security for their good behavior, or for keeping the peace. This security consists in being bound with one or more sureties in a recognizance to the king or state. Blackstone.

SE-DOUCE', v. t. [L. seduco; se, from, and duco, to lead; Fr. seduire; It. sedurre; Sp. seducir.] 1. To draw aside or entice from the path of rectitude and duty in any manner, by flattery, promises, bribes, or otherwise; to tempt and lead to iniquity; to corrupt; to deprave. Shak.

Me the gold of France did not seduce.
In the latter times, some will depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. — 1 Tim. iv.

2. To entice to a surrender of chastity. He that can seduce a female is base enough to betray her.

SE-DOUCE'D, (se-dist'), pp. Drawn or enticed from virtue; corrupted; depraved.

SE-DOUCEMENT, n. The act of seducing; seduction.

2. The means employed to seduce; the arts of flattery, menage, and deception. Pope.

SE-DOUCE'R, n. One that seduces; one that by temptation or arts entices another to depart from the path of rectitude and duty; preëminently, one that by flattery, promises, or falsehood, persuades a female to surrender her chastity. The seducer of a female is little less criminal than the murderer.

2. That which leads astray; that which entices to evil.

He whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

SE-DOUCE'BLE, a. Capable of being drawn aside from the path of rectitude; corruptible. Brown.

SE-DOUCE'ING, pp. or a. Enticing from the path of virtue or chastity.

SE-DOUCE'ING-LY, adv. In a seducing manner.

SE-DOUCE'ION, n. [Fr., from L. seductio.] 1. The act of seducing, or of enticing from the path of duty; in a general sense. Hammond.

2. Appropriately, the act or crime of persuading a female, by flattery or deception, to surrender her chastity. A woman who is above flattery is least liable to seduction; but the best safeguard is principle, the love of purity and holiness, the fear of God, and reverence for his commands.

SE-DOUCE'IVE, a. Tending to lead astray; apt to mislead by flattering appearances. Stephens.

SE-DOUCE'IVE-LY, adv. In a seductive manner.

SE-DOUCE'IT-Y, n. [L. sedulitas; It. sedulità. See SEBULOUS.] Diligent and assiduous application to business; constant attention; unremitting industry in any pursuit. It denotes constancy and perseverance, rather than intenseness of application.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, — and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry in men's inquiries into it. South.

SE-DOU-LOUS, a. [L. sedulus, from the root of sedeo, to sit, as assiduous from assideo.] Literally, sitting close to an employment; hence, assiduous; diligent in application or pursuit; constant, steady, and persevering in business, or in endeavors to effect an object; steadily industrious; as, the sedulous bee. Prior.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may lead to such an end? L'Estrange.

SE-DOU-LOUS-LY, adv. Assiduously; industriously; diligently; with constant or continued application.

SE-DOU-LOUS-NESS, n. Assiduity; assiduousness; steady diligence; continued industry or effort.

SEE, v. l; pret. SAW; pp. SEEN. [Sax. seon, seogan, gescon; G. sehen; D. zien, prut, zag, saw; Dan. see; Sw. se. This verb is contracted, as we know by the Eng. sight, Dan. sigt, G. gesehen, D. sigt, gezeit, Ch. סע, סעה, or סע to see. Class Sg, No. 34. In G. besuchen is to visit, to see, and this is from suchen, which is the Eng. to seek, and to seek is to look for. In G. suchen is a suit, a seeking, demand, petition; and suchen is to try, Eng. essay. We have, then, decisive evidence that see, seek, L. sequor, and Eng. essay, are all from the same root. The primary sense of the root is, to strain, stretch, extend; and as applied to see, the sense is, to extend to, to reach, to strike with the eye or sight.] 1. To perceive by the eye; to have knowledge of the existence and apparent qualities of objects by the organs of sight; to behold.

I will now turn aside and see this great sight. — Ex. iii. We have seen the land, and behold, it is very good. — Judges xviii.

SEE'ING, pp. [from see.] Perceiving by the eye; knowing; understanding; observing; beholding.

Note. — This participle appears to be used indefinitely, or without direct reference to a person or persons. "Wherefore come ye to me, seeing ye hate me?" Gen. xvi. That is, since, or the fact being that or thus; because that. In this form of phraseology, that is understood or implied after seeing; why come ye to me, seeing that ye hate me? The resolution of the phrase or sentence is, ye hate me; that fact being seen or known by you, why come ye to me? or, why come ye to me, ye seeing (knowing) that fact which follows, viz., ye hate me. In this case, seeing retains its participial character, although its relation to the pronoun is somewhat obscure. Originally, seeing, in this use, had direct relation to the speaker or to some other person. "Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son." Gen. xxi. Here seeing refers to I, or, according to the language of syntax, agrees or accords with I. I know thou fearest God, for I see thou hast not withheld thine only son; I know thou fearest God by seeing, in consequence of seeing this fact, thou hast not withheld thine only son. But the use of seeing is extended to cases in which it can not be referred to a specific person or persons, in which cases it expresses the notoriety or admission of a fact in general, and is left, like the French on, in the phrases on dit, on voit, without application to any particular person.

SEE'ING, n. The act of perceiving objects by the organ of sight, or the sense which we have of external objects by means of the eye. Hutton.

SEEK, v. l.; pret. and pp. SOUGHT, (sawt.) [Sax. secan, secan, to seek, to come to; asecan, to require; gesecan, to seek, to come to; forsecan, forsecan, to forsake; G. suchen, to seek; abruchen, to pick off; besuchen, to visit, to see; gesuch, suit, petition; gesuche, a continued seeking; versuchen, to try, prove, tempt, essay, strive; versuch, trial, essay; D. zoeken, to seek, to look for, to try or endeavor; bezoeken, to visit, to try; gezoek, a seeking; oproeken, to seek; verzoeken, to request, desire, invite, try, tempt, to visit; Dan. sögger, to seek, to endeavor; besögger, to visit; forögger, to try, to essay, to experiment; to tempt; opsögger, to seek or search after; Sw. söka, to seek, to sue, to court; söka en lagligen, to sue one at law; besöka, to visit; för-söka, to try, to essay, to tempt. These words all accord with L. sequor, fr. sequia, to follow; for to seek is to go after, and the primary sense is to advance, to press, to drive forward, as in the L. peto. (See Essay, from the same root, through the Italian and French.) Now, in Sax. forsecan, forsecan, is to forsake; secan is to strive, contend, whence English sake, and secan, seca, is to seek. But in Swedish, för-söka, to forsake, to renounce, is from sak, thing, cause, suit, Sax. saca, English sake; in Danish, for-sögger, to renounce, is from siger, to say; sag, a thing, cause, matter, suit; sagd, a saying; G. versagen, to deny, to renounce, from sagen, to say, to tell; D. versaken, to deny, to forsake, to revoke, from zaak, thing, cause, and legen is to say or tell, which is the Sax. seggan, to say. These close affinities prove that seek, essay, sue, and L. sequor, are all from one radix, coinciding with Ch. pej, to seek, to strive. Class Sg. No. 46, and see No. 30, Ar. The English verb see seems to be from the same root.]

1. To go in search or quest of; to look for; to search for by going from place to place.

The man asked him, saying, What seekest thou? And he said, I seek my brethren. — Geo. xxvii.

2. To inquire for; to ask for; to solicit; to endeavor to find or gain by any means.

The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their rest from God. — Ps. civ.

He found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears. — Heb. xii.

Others, tempting him, sought of him a sign. — Luke xi.

3. Seek is followed sometimes by out or after. To seek out, properly implies to look for a specific thing among a number. But in general, the use of out and after with seek, is unnecessary and inelegant.

To seek God, his name, or his face; in Scripture, to ask for his favor, direction, and assistance. Ps. lxxiii. lxxxiii.

God seeks men, when he fires his love on them, and by his word and Spirit, and the righteousness of Christ, reclaims and recovers them from their miserable condition as sinners. Ezek. xxiv. Ps. cxix. Luke xv.

2. Silly; foolish; simple. [Obs.] [See SILLY.]

SEEM, v. l. [G. ziemen, to become, to be fit or suitable; ziemen, to become, to become, to be neat, decent, gezien. In D. zienen is to be like, to resemble, and taamen is to fit or suit, to become. In Dan. seem is a seem, and sömmen signifies to seem, and also to become, to become, to be suitable, decent, or seemly. This is certainly the G. ziemen; hence we see that seem and seem are radically the same word; it, seem, seem; seem, seem, like, similar, resembling; rassembler, to resemble; Sp. semejar, to be like; Fr. sembler, to seem, to appear. These words seem to be of one family, having for their radical sense, to extend to, to meet, to unite, to come together, or to press together. If so, the Dutch taamen leads us to the oriental roots, Heb. Ch. and Syr. ܐܕܡ , adam, to be like; Eth. አደም adam, to please, to suit; Ar. آدم adama, to add, to unite, to agree, to suit, to conciliate, to confirm concord. Class Dm, No 5 and 7. These verbs are radically one, and in these we find the primary sense of Adam; likeness, or form.]

1. To appear; to make or have a show or semblance.

Thou art not what thou seem'st. Shak.

All seemed well pleased; all seemed, but were not all. Milton.

2. To have the appearance of truth or fact; to be

SEL'F, a. or pron.; pl. SELVES; used chiefly in composition. [Sax. self, sylf; Goth. silba; Sw. self; Dan. selv; G. selbst; D. zelf. I know not the primary sense of this word; most probably it is set or unite, or to separate from others. See SELVEOGE.]

1. In old authors, this word sometimes signifies particular, very, or same. "And on tham sylf an gear;" in that same year, that very year. Sax. Chron. A. D. 1062, 1061.

Shout another arrow that self way. On these self hills. At that self moment enters Palamon.

Shak. Raleigh. Dryden.

In this sense, self is an adjective, and is now obsolete, except when followed by same; as, on the self-same day; the self-same hour; the self-same thing; which is tautology. Matt. viii.

2. In present usage, self is united to certain personal pronouns and pronominal adjectives, to express emphasis or distinction; also when the pronoun is used reciprocally. Thus, for emphasis, I myself will write; I will examine for myself. Thou thyself shalt go; thou shalt see for thyself. You yourself shall write; you shall see for yourself. He herself shall write; he shall examine for herself. She herself shall write; she shall examine for herself. The child itself shall be carried; it shall be present itself.

Reciprocally, I shorb myself; thou enrichest thyself; he loves himself; she admires herself; it pleases itself; we value ourselves; ye hurry yourselves; they see themselves. I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; he did not hurt me, I hurt myself.

Except when added to pronouns used reciprocally, self serves to give emphasis to the pronoun, or to render the distinction expressed by it more emphatical. "I myself will decide," not only expresses my determination to decide, but the determination that no other shall decide.

Himself, herself, themselves, are used in the nominative case, as well as in the objective.

Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.—John iv. See Matt. xxiii. 4.

3. Self is sometimes used as a noun, noting the individual subject to his own contemplation or action, or noting identity of person. Consciousness makes every one to be what he calls self.

A man's self may be the worst fellow to converse with in the world. Pope.

4. It also signifies personal interest, or love of private interest; selfishness.

The fondness we have for self—furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Wauz.

Self is much used in composition.

SELL, v. t. i. pret. and pp. Sold. [Sax. selan, sellan, sylan, or sylan, to give, grant, yield, assign, or sell; sylan to vote, to give in compensation, to give to boot; Sw. selia; Ice. selia; Dan. selger; Basque, soldu. The primary sense is, to deliver, send, or transfer, or to put off. The sense of sell, as we now understand the word, is wholly derivative; as we see by the Saxon phrases sylan to deign, to give for one's own; sylan to give, to bestow for a gift; to bestow or confer gratis.]

1. To transfer property or the exclusive right of possession to another, for an equivalent in money. It is correlative to BUY, as one party buys what the other sells. It is distinguished from EXCHANGE or BARTER, in which one commodity is given for another; whereas in selling the consideration is money, or its representative in current notes. To this distinction there may be exceptions. "Easan sold his birthright to Jacob for a mess of pottage." But this is unusual. "Let us sell Joseph to the Ishmaelites; and they sold him for twenty pieces of silver." Gen. xxxvii. Among the Hebrews, parents had power to sell their children.

2. To betray; to deliver or surrender for money or a reward; as, to sell one's country.

3. To yield or give for a consideration. The troops fought like lions, and sold their lives dearly; that is, they yielded their lives, but first destroyed many, which made it a dear purchase for their enemies.

4. In Scripture, to give up to be harassed and made slaves.

He sold them into the hands of their enemies.—Judges ii.

5. To part with; to renounce or forsake.

Buy the truth and sell it not.—Prov. xxi.

To sell one's self to do evil; to give up one's self to be the slave of sin, and to work wickedness without restraint. 1 Kings xxi. 2 Kings vii.

SEMP'STRESS, }
SEMP'STRESS-Y, } SEAMSTRESS.

SEN, adv. This word is used by some of our common people for SINCE. It seems to be a contraction of since, or it is the Sw. sen, Dan. sen, slow, late.

SEN'A-RY, a. [L. seni, senarius.] Of six; belonging to six; containing six.

SEN'ATE, n. [Fr. senat; It. senato; Sp. senado.] L. senatus, from senex, old, Ir. sean W. sen. Ar. سن senax, or šin sanax, to be advanced in years. Under the former verb is the Arabic word signifying a tooth, showing that this is only a dialectical variation of the Heb. [?]. The primary sense is, to extend, to advance, or to wear. A senate was originally a council of elders.

1. An assembly or council of senators. A body of the principal inhabitants of a city or state, invested with a share in the government. The senate of ancient Rome was one of the most illustrious bodies of men that ever bore this name. Some of the Swiss cantons have a senate, either legislative or executive.
2. In the United States, senate denotes the higher branch or house of a legislature. Such is the senate of the United States, or upper house of the congress; and in most of the States, the higher and least numerous branch of the legislature is called the senate. In the United States, the senate is an elective body.
3. In the University of Cambridge, England, the governing body of the university. It is divided into two houses, denominated regents, (regentes), and non-regents, (non-regentes). The former consists of masters of arts of less than five years' standing, and doctors of less than two, and is called the upper house, or whitehood house, from its members wearing hoods lined with white silk. All other masters and doctors who keep their names on the college books are non-regents, and compose the lower house, or black-hood house, its members wearing black milk hoods. Cam. Cat.

4. In a looser sense, any legislative or deliberative body of men; as, the eloquence of the senate.

SEN'ATE-HOUSE, n. A house in which a senate meets, or a place of public council. Shak.

SEN'A-TOR, n. A member of a senate. In Scotland, the lords of session are called senators of the college of Justice.

2. A counselor; a judge or magistrate. Ps. cv.

SEND, v. t. [pret. and pp. SENT.] [Sax. sendan; Goth. sandyan; D. zenden; G. senden; Sw. sända; Dan. sender.]

1. In a general sense, to throw, cast, or thrust; to impel or drive by force to a distance, either with the hand or with an instrument, or by other means. We send a ball with the hand or with a bat; a bow sends an arrow; a cannon sends a shot; a trumpet sends the voice much further than the unassisted organs of speech.
2. To cause to be conveyed or transmitted; as, to send letters or dispatches from one country to another.
3. To cause to go or pass from place to place; as, to send a messenger from London to Madrid.
4. To commission, authorize, or direct to go and act. I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. — Jer. xxiii. D. zenden; G. senden; Sw. sända; Dan. sender.
5. To cause to come or fall; to bestow. He sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. — Matt. v.
6. To cause to come or fall; to inflict. The Lord shall send upon these cursing, vexation, and rebuke. — Deut. xxviii. If I send pestilence among my people. — 2 Chron. vii.
7. To propagate; to diffuse. Cherubic songs by night from neighboring hills Aerial music send. Milton.

To send away; to dismiss; to cause to depart. To send forth or out; to produce; to put or bring forth; as, a tree sends forth branches.

2. To emit; as, flowers send forth their fragrance. James iii.

SEND, v. i. To dispatch an agent or messenger for some purpose. See yo how this king of a murderer hath sent to take away my head? — 2 Kings vi.

So we say, we sent to invite guests; we sent to inquire into the facts.

2. Among seamen, to pitch; as, the ship sends forward so violently as to endanger her masts. Totten.

To send for; to request or require by message to come or be brought, as, to send for a physician; to send for a coach. But these expressions are elliptical.

SEN'ES-CHAL, (sen'e-shal), n. [Fr. senéchal; It. siniscalco; Sp. senescal; G. seneschall.] The origin and signification of the first part of the word are not ascertained. The latter part is the Teutonic schalk or scalc, a servant, as in marshal.

A steward; an officer in the houses of princes and dignitaries, who has the superintendence of feasts and domestic ceremonies. In some instances, the seneschal is an officer who has the dispensing of justice; as, the high seneschal of England. Encyc.

SEN'GREEN, n. A plant, the houseleek, of the genus Sempervivum. Fam. of Plants.

SE'NILE, n. [L. senilis.] Pertaining to old age; proceeding from age. Boyle.

SE-NIL'I-TY, n. Old age. [Not much used.] Bozwell.

SEN'IOR, (sen'yur), a. [L. senior, comp. of senex, old. See SENATE.]

1. Elder or older; but as an adjective, it usually signifies older in office; as, the senior pastor of a church, where there are colleagues; a senior counselor. In such use, senior has no reference to age, for a senior counselor may be, and often is, the younger man.

2. Noting the fourth year of the collegiate course in the American colleges, or the third year in theological seminaries.

SEN'IOR, (sen'yur), n. A person who is older than another; or one more advanced in life.

2. One that is older in office, or one whose first entrance upon an office was anterior to that of another. Thus a senator or counselor of sixty years of age often has a senior who is not fifty years of age.
3. An aged person; one of the oldest inhabitants. A senior of the place replies. Dryden.

4. One in the fourth year of his collegiate course at an American college; originally called senior sophister. [See SOPHISTER.] Also, one in the third year of his course at a theological seminary.

SEN'NIGHT, (sen'nit), n. [Contracted from seven-nights, as fortnight from fourteen-night.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. The court will be held this day sennight, that is, a week from this day; or the court will be held next Tuesday sennight, a week from next Tuesday.

SEN'NIT, n. A flat, braided cord, formed by plaiting rope-yarns together. Totten.

SE-NO'C'ULAR, a. [L. seni, six, and oculus, the eye.] Having six eyes. Most animals are bisocular, spiders octocular, and some senocular. Derham.

SEN'S'ATE, } a. [See SENSE.] Perceived by the SEN'S'ATED, } senses. Hooker.

SEN'S'ATION, n. [Fr.; It. sensazione; Sp. sensacion; from L. sensus, sentio, to perceive. See SENSE.]

1. In mental philosophy, an impression made upon the mind through the medium of the senses. It differs from perception, which is the knowledge of external objects consequent on sensation.
2. Feeling awakened by external objects, or by some change in the internal state of the body; as, a sensation of heaviness in the neck.
3. Feeling awakened by immaterial objects; as, sensations of awe in the divine presence.
4. A state of excite. interest or feeling; as, "the sensation caused by the appearance of that work is still remembered by many." Brougham.

SENSE, (sens), n. [Fr. sens; It. senso; Sp. sentido; from L. sensus, from sent, to feel or perceive; W. syndat, id., syn, sense, feeling, perception; G. sinn, sense, mind, intention; L. zin; Sw. sinne; Dan. sind, sands.]

1. The faculty by which animals perceive external objects by means of impressions made on certain organs of the body. Encyc.
- Sense is a branch of perception. The five senses of animals are, 1, special, as smell, sight, hearing, tasting; 2, common, as feeling.
2. Sensation; perception by the senses. Bacon.
3. Perception by the intellect; apprehension; discernment. This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover. Silvey.
4. Sensibility; quickness or acuteness of perception. Shak.
5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason. Oppressed nature sleeps; This rest might yet have harmed thy broken senses. Shak.
6. Reason; reasonable or rational meaning. He raves; his words are loose As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense. Dryden.
7. Opinion; notion; judgment. I speak my private but impartial sense With freedom. Roscommon.
8. Consciousness; conviction; as, a due sense of our weakness or sinfulness.
9. Moral perception. Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.
10. Meaning; import; signification; as, the true sense of words or phrases. In interpretation, we are to examine whether words are to be understood in a literal or figurative sense. So we speak of a legal sense, a grammatical sense, an historical sense, &c. Common sense; that power of the mind which, by a kind of instinct, or a short process of reasoning, perceives truth, the relation of things, cause and effect, &c., and hence enables the possessor to discern what is right, useful, expedient, or proper, and adopt the best means to accomplish his purpose. This power seems to be the gift of nature, improved by experience and observation.

Moral sense; a determination of the mind to be pleased with the contemplation of those affections, actions, or characters of rational agents, which are called good or virtuous. Encyc.

SENSE/ED, (sens'), pp. Perceived by the senses. [Not in use.] Glazville.

SENSE/FUL, a. Reasonable; judicious. [Not in use.] Verrie.

SENSE/LESS, a. Wanting the faculty of perception. The body, when dead, is senseless; but a limb or other part of the body may be senseless, when the rest of the body enjoys its usual sensibility.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy. The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows. Rowe.

3. Unreasonable; foolish; stupid. They would repeat this their senseless pervenances, when it would be too late. Clarendon.

4. Unreasonable; stupid; acting without sense or judgment. They were a senseless, stupid race. Swift.

5. Contrary to reason or sound judgment; as, to destroy by a senseless fondness the happiness of children.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious; with of; as, libertines senseless of any charm in love. Southern.

7. Wanting sensibility or quick perception. Peacham.

SENSE/LESS-LY, adv. In a senseless manner; stupidly; unreasonably; as, a man senselessly arrogant. Locke.

SENSE/LESS-NESS, n. Unreasonableness; folly; stupidity; absurdity. Green.

SENS-I-BIL-I-TY, n. [Fr. sensibilité; from sensible.] 1. Susceptibility of impressions upon the organs of sense; the capacity of feeling or perceiving the impressions of external objects; applied to animal bodies; as when we say a frozen limb has lost its sensibility.

2. Acuteness of sensation; applied to the body.

3. Capacity or acuteness of perception; that quality which renders us susceptible of impressions; delicacy of feeling; as, sensibility to pleasure or pain; sensibility to shame or praise; exquisite sensibility.

4. Actual feeling. This adds greatly to my sensibility. Burke.

[This word is often used in this manner for SENSATION.]

5. It is sometimes used in the plural. His sensibilities seem rather to have been those of patriotism, than of wounded pride. Marshall.

6. Nice perception, so to speak, of a balance; that quality of a balance which renders it movable with the smallest weight, or the quality or state of any instrument that renders it easily affected; as, the sensibility of a balance or of a thermometer. Lavoisier.

SENS-I-BLE, a. [Fr. and Sp. id.; It. sensibile.] 1. Having the capacity of receiving impressions from external objects; capable of perceiving by the instrumentality of the proper organs. We say, the body or the flesh is sensible, when it feels the impulse of an external body. It may be more or less sensible. Darwin.

2. Perceptible by the senses. The light of the moon furnishes no sensible heat. Air is sensible to the touch by its motion. Arbuthnot.

3. Perceptible or perceived by the mind. The disgrace was more sensible than the pain. Temple.

4. Perceiving or having perception, either by the mind or the senses. A man cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

5. Having moral perception; capable of being affected by moral good or evil. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so great a show of zeal. Shak.

6. Having acute intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected; as, to be sensible of wrong. Dryden.

SEPT-U-A-GINT, n. [L. septuaginta, seventy; septem, seven, and some word signifying ten.]

A Greek version of the Old Testament, so called because it was said to be the work of seventy, or rather of seventy-two, interpreters. This translation from the Hebrew is reported to have been made in the reign and by the order of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, about two hundred and seventy or two hundred and eighty years before the birth of Christ. But this is very doubtful. From internal evidence it is clear that it was not all the work of one man, nor of one company of men; for the translators of different books were of very different degrees of competency, and were governed by very different rules of interpretation. It was probably not all the work of one age. Murdock.

SEPT-U-A-GINT, a. Pertaining to the Septuagint; contained in the Greek copy of the Old Testament.

The Septuagint chronology makes fifteen hundred years more from the creation to Abraham, than the present Hebrew copies of the Bible. Encyc.

 SE'QUIN, n. A gold coin of Italy and Turkey. The average value at Venice, and in other parts of Italy, is 9s. 5d. sterling, or about $2.30. In Turkey, the sequin fondach is valued at 7s. 7d. sterling, or about $4.75. It is sometimes written SEKQIN and SEKHIN. [See LEONARD.]
 SE-RAG-LIO, (se-rallyo), n. [Fr. serail; Sp. seraglio; It. seraglio, from servare, to shut or make fast, Fr. serret; perhaps from سر or سرا. Castell deduces the word from the Persian سرای serai, serai, a great house, a palace. The Portuguese use the word cerralho, and Fr. serret, to lock, they write cerret, as do the Spaniards.]
 The palace of the grand seignor, or Turkish sultan, or the palace of a prince. The seraglio of the sultan is a long range of buildings inhabited by the grand seignor and all the officers and dependents of his court; and in it is transacted all the business of government. In this also are confined the females of the harem. Eton.
 Hence, seraglio has been often, though improperly, confounded with harem, and is sometimes used to signify a house of women kept for debauchery. Smart.
 SE-RAI', n. In India and Tartary, a place for the accommodation of travelers; a Mohammedan name of the choltry, or rest-house. Malcom.
 SE-RAPH, (ser'af), n.; pl. SERAPHIM; but sometimes the Hebrew plural, SERAPHIM, is used, [from Heb. שרף, to burn.]

 SER'GEANT, (sar'jent), n. [Fr. sergent; It. sergente; Sp. and Port. sargento; from L. servans, serving, for so was this word written in Latin. But Castell deduces the word from the Persian سرجنك serchank, or serjank, a prefect, a subalter military officer. (See Cust. Col. 336.) If this is correct, two different words are blended.]
 1. Formerly, an officer in England, nearly answering to the more modern bailiff of the hundred; also, an officer whose duty was to attend on the king, and on the lord high steward in court, to arrest traitors and other offenders. This officer is now called SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, or MACE. There are, at present, other officers of an inferior kind, who attend mayors and magistrates to execute their orders.
 2. In military affairs, a non-commissioned officer in a company of infantry or troop of cavalry, whose duty is to instruct recruits in discipline, to form the ranks, &c.
 3. In England, a lawyer of the highest rank, and answering to the doctor of the civil law. Blackstone.

SER/VANT, n. [Fr., from L. servans, from sero, to keep or hold; properly, one that waits, that is, stops, holds, attends, or one that is bound.]
1. A person, male or female, that attends another, for the purpose of performing menial offices for him, or who is employed by another for such offices or for other labor, and is subject to his command. The word is correlative to master. Servant differs from slave, as the servant's subjection to a master is voluntary, the slave's is not. Every slave is a servant, but every servant is not a slave.
Servants are of various kinds; as, household or domestic servants, menial servants; laborers, who are hired by the day, week, or other term, and do not reside with their employers, or, if they board in the same house, are employed abroad, and not in domestic services; apprentices, who are bound for a term of years to serve a master, for the purpose of learning his trade or occupation.
In a legal sense, stewards, factors, bailiffs, and other agents, are servants for the time they are employed in such character, as they act in subordination to others.
2. One in a state of subjection.
3. In Scripture, a slave; a bondman; one purchased for money, and who was compelled to serve till the year of jubilee; also, one purchased for a term of years. Exod. xxi.
4. The subject of a king; as, the servants of David or of Saul.
The Syrians became servants to David. — 2 Sam. viii.
5. A person who voluntarily serves another, or acts as his minister; as, Joshua was the servant of Moses, and the apostles the servants of Christ. So Christ himself is called a servant. Is. xlii. Moses is called the servant of the Lord. Deut. xxviii.
6. A person employed or used as an instrument in accomplishing God's purposes of mercy or wrath. So Nebuchadnezzar is called the servant of God. Jer. xxv.
7. One who yields obedience to another. The saints are called the servants of God or of righteousness; and the wicked are called the servants of sin. Rom. vi.
8. That which yields obedience, or acts in subordination as an instrument. Ps. cxix.
9. One that makes painful sacrifices, in compliance with the weakness or wants of others. 1 Cor. ix.
10. A person of base condition or ignoble spirit. Eccles. x.
11. A word of civility. I am, sir, your humble or obedient servant.
Our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves. Suff.
Servant of servants; one debased to the lowest condition of servitude. Gen. ix.

SER/VANT, v. t. To subject. [Not in use.] Shak.

SERVE, (serv), v. t. [Fr. servir; It. servire; Sp. servir; from L. servio. This verb is supposed to be from the noun servus, a servant or slave, and this from sero, to keep. If servus originally was a slave, he was probably so named from being preserved and taken prisoner in war, or more probably from being bound, and perhaps from the Semicitic שׂר, שׂר , to bind. But the sense of servant is generally a waiter, one who attends or waits, and from the sense of stopping, holding, remaining.]
1. To work for; to bestow the labor of body and mind in the employment of another.
Jacob loved Rachel, and said, I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter. — Gen. xxix.
No man can serve two masters. — Mat. vi.

And is at once their vinegar and wine.
Pope.

13. To be in the place of any thing to one. A sofa serv'd the Turks for a seat and a couch.

14. To treat; to requite; as, he serv'd me ungratefully; he serv'd me very ill. We say also, he serv'd me a trick, that is, he deceived me, or practiced an artifice upon me.

15. In Scripture and theology, to obey and worship; to act in conformity to the law of a superior, and treat him with due reverence.

Fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and truth. As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.—Josh. xxiv.

16. In a bad sense, to obey; to yield compliance, or act according to.

Serving divers lusts and pleasures.—Tit. iii.

17. To worship; to render homage to; as, to serve idols or false gods. Ezek. xx.

18. To be a slave to; to be in bondage to. Gen. xv.

19. To serve one's self of; to use; to make use of; a Gallicism, [se servir de.]

I will serve myself of this concession. Chillingworth.

20. To use; to manage; to apply. The guns were well serv'd.

21. To place on the table in dishes, (for serve up;) as, to serve dinner.

22. In seamen's language, to serve a rope is to wind something, as spun yarn, &c., tight round it, to prevent friction.

To serve up: to prepare and present in a dish: as, to serve up a sirloin of beef in plate; figuratively, to prepare.

To serve in, as used by Shakespeare, for to bring in, as meant by an attendant, I have never known to be used in America.

To serve out: to distribute in portions; as, to serve out provisions to soldiers.

To serve a writ: to read it to the defendant; or to leave an attested copy at his usual place of abode.

To serve an attachment, or writ of attachment; to levy it on the person or goods by seizure; or to seize.

To serve an execution: to levy it on lands, goods, or person, by seizure or taking possession.

To serve a warrant: to read it, and to seize the person against whom it is issued.

In general, to serve a process, is to read it, so as to give due notice to the party concerned, or to leave an attested copy with him or his attorney, or at his usual place of abode.

To serve an office; to discharge a public duty. [This phrase, I believe, is not used in America. We say, a man serves in an office, that is, serves the public in an office.]

SERVE, (serv), v. i. To be a servant or slave.

The Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve.—Is. xiv.

SEVEN (sev'n), a. [Sax. seofa, seofan; Goth. sibun; D. seven; G. sieben; Sw. sju; Dan. sju; L. septem, whence Fr. sept, It. sette, Sp. siete, (or the two latter are the V. saith, Arm. saith or seix); Sans. sapta;

Pers. هفت haft; Zend. hapte, Pehlavi, haft; Gr. επτα; Ar. سبع sabaa; Heb. Ch. Syr. and Eth.

שבע. In Ch. and Syr. שבע signifies to fill, to satisfy; in Ar. seven, and to make the number seven. In

Heb. and Ch. שבע is seven; Ar. سبع shabia, to fill. With this orthography coincide the spelling of the Teutonic and Gothic words, whose elements are sb, or their cognates. But the Latin and Sanscrit have a third radical letter, as has the Persian, viz., t, and these coincide with the Ar. سبت sabata, to observe the Sabbath, to rest, Heb. Ch. and Syr. שבת.

It is obvious, then, that seven had its origin in these verbs, and if the Persian and Greek words are from the same source, which is very probable, we have satisfactory evidence that the sibilant letter s has been changed into an aspirate. And this confirms my opinion that a similar change has taken place in the Gr. δύς, salt, V. kalen, and in many other words.

Four and three; one more than six or less than eight. Seven days constitute a week. We read in Scripture of seven years of plenty, and seven years of famine, seven trumpets, seven seals, seven vials, &c.

Seven stars; a common name for the cluster of stars in the neck of Taurus, called Pleiades.

Hutton.

SEVEN-FOLD, adv. Seven times as much or often. w discover anyiveth Calm, vengeance shall be taken on him seven-fold. — Gen. v.

SEVEN-HILLED, a. Having seven hills. More.

SEVEN-NIGHT (sev'nit), a. [seven and night.] A week; the period of seven days and nights; or the time from one day of the week to the next day of the same denomination preceding or following. Our ancestors numbered the diurnal revolutions of the earth by nights, as they reckoned the annual revolutions by winters. SEVEN-NIGHT is now contracted into SEVENIGHT, which see.

SEVEN-SCORE, n. [seven and score, twenty notches or marks.] Seven times twenty, that is, a hundred and forty.

The old Countess of Desmond, who lived sevenscore years, died twice or thrice. Bacon.

SEVEN-TEEN, a. [Sax. seofentyne; seven-ten.] Seven and ten.

SEVEN-TEENTH, a. [from seventeen. The Saxon seofon-teotha or seofon-teogetha is differently formed.] The ordinal of seventeen; the seventh after the tenth.

On the seventeenth day of the second month—all the fountains of the great deep were broken up. — Gen. vii.

SEVENTH, a. [Sax. seofetha.]

1. The ordinal of seven; the first after the sixth. On the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. — Gen. ii.

2. Containing or being one part in seven; as, the seventh part.

SEVENTH, n. The seventh part; one part in seven.

2. In music, a dissonant interval or heptachord. An interval consisting of four tones and two major semitones, is called a seventh minor. An interval composed of five tones and a major semitone, is called a seventh major, being a major semitone less than an octave. Busby. Brande.

SEVENTH-LY, adv. In the seventh place. Bacon.

SEVENTH-ETH, a. [from seventy.] The ordinal of seventy; as, a man in the seventieth year of his age.

SEVENTY (sev'n-ty), a. [D. zeventig; Sax. seofa, seven, and tig, ten; Goth. tig, Gr. deka, ten, but the Saxon writers prefixed hund, as hund-seofontig. See Lye, ad voc., and Sax. Chron. A. D. 1083.]

Seven times ten.

That he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem. — Dan. ix.

SEVENTY, n. The Septuagint or seventy translators of the Old Testament into the Greek language.

SEVER, v. L. [Fr. severer; It. severare. There may be a doubt whether sever is derived from the Latin separo. The French has severer, as well as separer; and the Italian severare, severare and separare, as well as separare. The It. severare coincides well in orthography with Eng. severer, and this with Heb. שבר, Ch. Syr. and Ar. שבר, to break. The latter are the same word with different prefixes. See Class Br. No. 26, 27.]

1. To part or divide by violence; to separate by cutting or rending; as, to sever the body or the arm at a single stroke.

2. To part from the rest by violence; as, to sever the head from the body.

3. To separate; to disjoin, as distinct things, but united; as, the dearest friends severed by cruel necessity.

4. To separate and put in different orders or places.

The angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just. — Matt. xiii.

5. To disjoin; to disunite; in a general sense; but usually implying violence.

6. To keep distinct or apart. Erod. viii.

7. In law, to disunite; to disconnect; to part possession; as, to sever an estate in joint-tenancy.

Blackstone.

SEVER, v. i. To make a separation or distinction; to distinguish.

The Lord will sever between the cattle of Israel and the cattle of Egypt. — Ex. ix.

2. To suffer disjunction; to be parted or rent asunder. Shak.

SEVERAL, a. [from severer.] Separate; distinct; not common to two or more; as, a several fishery; a several estate. A several fishery is one held by the owner of the soil, or by title derived from the owner. A several estate is one held by a tenant in his own right, or a distinct estate unconnected with any other person.

Blackstone.

2. Separate; different; distinct. Divers sorts of beasts came from several parts to drink. Bacon. Four several armies to the field are led. Dryden.

3. Divers; consisting of a number; more than two, but not very many. Several persons were present when the event took place.

4. Separate; single; particular. Each several ship a victory did gale. Dryden.

5. Distinct; appropriate. Each might his several province well command, Would all but stoop to what they understand. Pope.

A joint and several note or bond, is one executed by two or more persons, each of whom is bound to pay the whole, in case the others prove to be insolvent.

SEVERAL, n. Each particular, or a small number, singly taken. Several of them neither rose from any conspicuous family, nor left any behind them. Addison.

There was not time enough to bear The severals. Shak.

[This latter use, in the plural, is now infrequent or obsolete.]

2. An inclosed or separate place; inclosed ground; as, they had their several for the heathen, their several for their own people; put a henst into a several. Hooker. Bacon.

[These applications are nearly or wholly obsolete.] In several; in a state of sequestration. Where pastures in several be. [Little used.] Tisner.

SEVERAL-I/TY, n. Each particular singly taken; distinction. [Not in use.] Bp. Hall.

SEVERALIZE, v. L. To distinguish. [Not in use.] Bp. Hall.

SEVERAL-LY, adv. Separately; distinctly; apart from others. Call the men severally by name. I could not keep my eye steady on them severally so as to number them. Newton.

To be jointly and severally bound in a contract, is for each obligor to be liable to pay the whole demand, in case the other or others are not able.

SEVERAL-TY, n. A state of separation from the rest, or from all others. An estate in severalty, is that which the tenant holds in his own right, without being joined in interest with any other person. It is distinguished from joint-tenancy, coparcenary, and common. Blackstone.

SEVERANCE, n. Separation; the act of dividing or disuniting. The severance of a jointure is made by destroying the unity of interest. Thus, when there are two joint-tenants for life, and the inheritance is purchased by or descends upon either, it is a severance.

So also when two persons are joined in a writ, and one is nonsuited; in this case severance is permitted, and the other plaintiff may proceed in the suit. So also in assize, when two or more disseizes appear upon the writ, and not the other, severance is permitted.

Blackstone. Encyc.

2. In music, denoting a mixed sort of triple, beaten in double time, or a measure of two times composed of six equal notes, three for each time.

Busby. Encyc.

SEX'U-AL, a. [from sex.] Pertaining to sex or the sexes; distinguishing the sex; denoting what is peculiar to the distinction and office of male and female; as, sexual characteristics; sexual intercourse, connection, or commerce.

2. Sexual method; in botany, the method which is founded on the distinction of sexes in plants, as male and female, each sex being furnished with appropriate organs or parts; the male producing a pollen or dust, which fecundates the stigma of the pistil or female organ, and is necessary to render it prolific. It is found that most plants are hermaphrodite, the male and female organs being contained in the same flower. This doctrine was taught to a certain extent by Theophrastus, Dioscorides, and Pliny among the ancients, but has been more fully illustrated by Cæsalpinus, Grew, Cnæmerius, Linnæus, and many others among the moderns. Milne. Encyc.

SEX'U-AL-IST, n. One who believes and maintains the doctrine of sexes in plants; or one who classifies plants by the differences of the sexes and parts of fructification. Milne. Encyc.

SEX'U-AL-I-TY, n. The state of being distinguished by sex.

SEX'U-AL-LY, adv. In a sexual manner.

SFOR-ZÀ'TO, a. [It.] In music, a direction placed over a note, to signify to the performer that it must be struck with peculiar force. Brande.

SIAB, v. i. To play mean tricks. In some parts of New England, it signifies to reject or dismiss; as, a woman siabs her suitor. It is, however, very vulgar and nearly obsolete.

SIAB'BED, a. Mean; shabby. A. Wood.

SIAB'RI-LY, adv. [from shabby.] Raggedly; with rent or ragged clothes; as, to be clothed shabbily.

2. Meanly; in a despicable manner.

SIAB'RACK, n. [Hungarian.] The cloth furniture or housing of a troop horse or charger. Smart.

SHACK, n. In ancient customs of England, a liberty of winter pasturage. In Norfolk and Suffolk, the lord of a manor has shack, that is, liberty of feeding his sheep at pleasure on his tenant's lands during the six winter months. In Norfolk, shack extends to the common for hogs, in all men's grounds, from harvest to seed-time; whence to go a-shack is to feed at large. Covel. Encyc.

In New England, shack is used in a somewhat similar sense for inns or the food of swine, and for feeding at large or in the forest, [for we have no manors.]

2. A shiftless fellow; a low, itinerant beggar; a vagabond. Forby.

SHACK, v. i. To shed, as corn at harvest. [Local].
Gros.

2. To feed in stubble, or upon the waste corn of the field. [Local].

SHACK'LE, (shak'le), n. Stubble.
[In Scottish, shag is the refuse of barley, or that which is not well filled, and is given to horses. The word shack, then, is probably from a root which signifies to break, to reject, or to waste, or it may be allied to shag and shake.]

SHACK'LE, c. l. [Sax. sceacul; D. schakel, a link or mesh; Sax. sceac-line, a rope to fasten the foot of a sail. Qu. the root שָׁכַל, Class Sg, No. 74. But we find the word, perhaps, in the Ar. شَكَّال, from شَكَّال shakala, to tie the feet of a beast or bird.]

1. To chain; to fetter; to tie or confine the limbs so as to prevent free motion.
So the stretched cord the shack'ed dancer tries,
As prone to fall as impost to rise. Smith.
2. To bind or confine so as to obstruct or embarrass action.
You must not shack's him with rules about indifferent matters. Locke.

SHACK'LE, n. } [Generally used in SHACK'LES, (shak'lez), n. pl. } Fetters, gages, handcuffs, cords, or something else that confines the limbs so as to restrain the use of them, or prevent free motion. Dryden.

2. That which obstructs or embarrasses free action.
His very will seems to be in beads and shackles. South.

SHACK'LED, pp. Tied; confined; embarrassed.

SHACK'LING, ppr. Fettering; binding; confining.

SHAD, n. It has no plural termination. Shad is singular or plural. [G. schade. In W. ysgadan, Ir. sgadan is a herring.]

A fish of the genus Alosa, (Clupea, Linn.) highly prized for food. Shad enter the rivers in England and America in the spring in immense numbers.

SHAD'DOCK, n. [The name of the man who first carried this fruit from the East to the West Indies.] A large species of orange, Citrus decumana. Ed. Eucyc.

SHADE, n. [Sax. scad, scacad, scad, shade; scadana, to separate, divide, or shade; G. Schatten, shadow, and to shade; D. schaduw, schaduwen; Dan. skatterer, to shade a picture; W. ysgadu, a shade; ysgod, to shade or shelter; ysgodol, id. Corn, shad or shes; Ir. sgada and sgatham, to cut off, to shade. The Gr. eia is probably the same word contracted, and perhaps σκοτος, darkness. In the sense of cutting off or separating, this word coincides exactly, as it does in elements, with the G. scindens, L. scindo, for scido, which is formed on cardo, to strike off. Hence Sax. gesecead, distinction, L. scutum, a shield, Sp. escudo, that which cuts off or intercepts. Owca deduces the Welsh word from card, something that incloses; but probably the sense is, that which cuts off or defends.]

1. Literally, the interception, cutting off, or interruption of the rays of light; hence, the obscurity which is caused by such interception. Shads differs from shadow, as it implies no particular form or definite limit; whereas a shadow represents in form the object which intercepts the light. Hence, when we say, let us resort to the shade of a tree, we have no reference to its form; but when we speak of measuring a pyramid or other object by its shadow, we have reference to its extent.
2. Darkness; obscurity; as, the shades of night. The shade of the earth constitutes the darkness of night.
3. An obscure place, properly in a grove or close wood, which precludes the sun's rays; and hence, a secluded retreat.
Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shak.
4. A screen; something that intercepts light or heat.
5. Protection; shelter. [See SHADOW.]
6. In painting, the dark part of a picture. Dryden.
7. Degree or gradation of light.
White, red, yellow, blue, with their several degrees, or shades and mixtures, as green, come only in by the eyes. Locke.
8. A very minute difference; as, coffee is a shade higher. Mercantile.
9. A shadow. [See SHADOW.]
Eary will merit, as its shade, pursue. Pope.

[This is allowable in poetry.]

10. The soul, after its separation from the body; so called because the ancients supposed it to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch; a spirit; a ghost; as, the shades of departed heroes.
Swift as thought the flitting shade. Dryden.

SHADE, n. l. [Sax. scadan, geseceadan, to separate, to divide, to shade.]

1. To shelter or screen from light by intercepting its rays; and when applied to the rays of the sun, it signifies to shelter from light and heat; as, a large tree shades the plants under its branches; shaded vegetables rarely come to perfection.

1. I went to crop the sylvan scenes,
And shade our altars with their leafy greens. Dryden.
2. To overspread with darkness or obscurity; to obscure.
Thou shad'st
The full blaze of thy beams. Milton.
3. To shelter; to hide.
Ere in our own house I do shade my head. Shak.
4. To cover from injury; to protect; to screen. Milton.
5. To paint in obscure colors; to darken.
6. To mark with gradations of color; as, the shading pencil. Milton.
7. To darken; to obscure.

SHAD'ED, pp. or a. Defended from the rays of the sun; darkened.

SHAD'ER, n. He or that which shades.

SHADES, n. pl. The lower region or place of the dead. Hence,
2. Deep obscurity; total darkness.

SHAD'FULLY, adv. Unhappily.

SHAD'Y-NESS, n. [from shady]. The state of being shady; umbragousness; as, the shadiness of the forest.

SHAD'ING, ppr. Sheltering from the sun's rays.

SHAD'ING, n. The act or process of making a shade. Scott.

SHAD'OW, n. [Sax. scadu, scadu. See SHADE.]

1. Shade within defined limits; obscurity or deprivation of light, apparent on a plane, and representing the form of the body which intercepts the rays of light; as, the shadow of a man, of a tree, or a tower. The shadow of the earth in an eclipse of the moon is proof of its sphericity.
2. Darkness; shade; obscurity.
Night's sable shadows from the ocean rise. Denham.
3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.
In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid. Spenser.
4. Obscure place; secluded retreat.
To secret shadows I retire. [Obs.] Dryden.
5. Dark part of a picture. [Obs.] Peacham.
6. A spirit; a ghost. [Obs.]
7. In this sense, SHADE is now used.
8. In painting, the representation of a real shadow.
9. An imperfect and faint representation; opposed to SUBSTANCE.
The law having a shadow of good things to come.—Heb. x.
10. Inseparable companion.
Sio and her shadow, Death. Milton.
11. Type; mystical representation.
Types and shadows of that destined seed. Milton.
12. Protection; shelter; favor. Lam. iv. Ps. xcl.
13. Light or faint appearance. James i.
14. Shadow of death; terrible darkness, trouble, or death. Job iii.

SHAD'OW, v. l. To overspread with obscurity.
The warlike elf much wond'ered at this tree,
So fair and great, that shadowed all the ground. Spenser.

[SHADE is more generally used.]

2. To cloud; to darken.
The shadowed livery of the burning sun. Shak.
3. To make cool; to refresh by shade; or to shade. Flowery fields and shadowed waters. Sidney.

SHALL, v. i. verb auxiliary. pret. SHOULD. [Sax. scallan, scylan, to be obliged. It coincides in signification nearly with ought, it is a duty, it is necessary; D. zal, zul; G. soll; Sw. skola, pret. skulle; Dan. skal, skulle, skulde. The German and Dutch have lost the palatal letter of the verb; but it appears in the derivative G. schuld, guilt, fault, culpability, debt; D. schuld, id.; Sw. skuld, Dan. skyld, debt, fault, guilt, skylder, to owe; Sax. scylde, debt, offense, scellus. The literal sense is, to hold or be held, hence to owe, and hence the sense of guilt, a being held, b. und, or liable to justice and punishment. In the Teutonic dialects, schulden, skyld, are used in the Lord's Prayer, as "forgive us our debts," but neither debt nor trespass expresses the exact idea, which includes sin or crime, and liability to punishment. The word seems to be allied in origin to skill, scilicet, to be able, to know. (See SALL.) Shall is defective, having no infinitive, imperative, or participle. It ought to be written shad, as the original has one l only, and it has one only in shall and should.]

1. Shall is primarily in the present tense, and in our mother tongue was followed by a verb in the infinitive, like other verbs. "If scel from the beon gefullod," I have said to be baptized of these. Matt. iii. "If sc scel scing sarewidias," I must now sing mournful songs. Boethius.

We still use shall and should before another verb in the infinitive, without the sign to; but the signification of shall is considerably deflected from its primitive sense. It is now treated as a mere auxiliary to other verbs, serving to form some of the tenses. In the present tense, shall, before a verb in the infinitive, forms the future tense; but its force and effect are different with the different persons or personal pronouns. Thus, in the first person, shall simply foretells or declares what will take place; as, I or we shall ride to town on Monday. This declaration simply informs another of a fact that is to take place. The sense of shall here is changed from an expression of need or duty, to that of previous statement or information, grounded on intention or resolution. When uttered with emphasis, "I shall go," it expresses firm determination, but not a promise.

2. In the second and third persons, shall implies a promise, command, or determination. "You shall receive your wages," "he shall receive his wages," imply that you or he ought to receive them; but usage gives to these phrases the force of a promise in the person uttering them.

When shall is uttered with emphasis in such phrases, it expresses determination in the speaker, and implies an authority to enforce the act. "Do you refuse to go? Does he refuse to go? But you or he shall go."

3. Shall I go, shall he go, interrogatively, asks for permission or direction. But shall you go, asks for information of another's intention.

4. But after another verb, shall, in the third person, simply foretells. He says that he shall leave town to-morrow. So also in the second person; you say that you shall ride to-morrow.

5. After if, and some verbs which express condition or supposition, shall, in all the persons, simply foretells; as,

If I shall say, or we shall say,
If Thou shalt say, ye or you shall say,
If he shall say, they shall say.

6. Should, in the first person, implies a conditional event. "I should have written a letter yesterday, had I not been interrupted." Or it expresses obligation, and that in all the persons.

I should, } have paid the bill on demand; it
Thou shouldst, } was my duty, your duty, his duty
He should, } to pay the bill on demand, but it
You should, } was not paid.

7. Should, though properly the past tense of shall, is often used to express a contingent future event; as, if it should rain to-morrow; if you should go to London next week; if he should arrive within a month. In like manner often though, grant, admit, allow.

This Lewis is a cunning shaver. Swift.

3. One that fleeces; a pillager; a plunderer. By these shavers the Turks were stripped of all they had. Knolles. SHAV'ER, n. [Gipsy, tschabs, or tschawo, a boy; Knolles. schawo or tschawo, a son; Ar. شاب shāb, a youth, from شب shabba, to grow up, to excite.] A boy or young man. Halliwell. [This word is still in common use in New England.] SHAV'ING, pp. Paring the surface with a razor or other sharp instrument; making smooth by paring; fleecing. SHAV'ING, n. The act of paring the surface. 2. A thin slice pared off with a shave, a knife, a plane, or other cutting instrument. Mortimer. SHAW, n. [Sax. scwa, scæwa; Sw. skugga; Dan. skove, a thicket, and skygge, a shade.] A thicket; a small wood or grove. Halliwell. [Local in England. In America not used.] SHAW'-POWL, n. [shaw and fowl.] The representation or image of a fowl made by fowlers to shoot at. Johnson. SHAWL, n. A cloth of wool, cotton, silk, or hair, used by females as a loose covering for the neck and shoulders. Shawls are of various sizes, from that of a handkerchief to that of a counterpane. Shawls were originally manufactured in the heart of India from the soft, woolly, inner hair of a variety of the common goat reared in Thibet, and the best shawls now come from Cashmere; but they are also manufactured in Europe. The largest kinds are used in train dresses and for long scarfs. Encyc. McCulloch. SHAWM, n. [G. schalmeyre, from schallen, to sound.] A wind instrument of music, having much the form of the clarinet; now superseded by the hautboy and bassoon; written also SHALM. Com. Proyer. Fosbrooke. SHE, pronoun personal, of the feminine gender. [Sax. seo; Goth. si; D. zy; G. sie. The Danes and Swedes use for he and she, the word from which the English has hen; Dan. han, he, the male; hun, she, the female; hane, a cock; Sw. han, he; hanna, a cock;

hon, hennae, heneae, she. This is the root of Henry. She is perhaps the Heb. שֵׁנָה, a woman or wife. In the Saxon, seo is used as an adjective, and may be rendered the a or e. It is also used as a relative, answering to who, L. quae. It is also used for As and that. In English, she has no variation, and is used only in the nominative case. In the oblique cases, we use hers and her, a distinct word.]

1. A pronoun which is the substitute for the name of a female, and of the feminine gender; the word which refers to a female mentioned in the preceding or following part of a sentence or discourse.

Then Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid.
— Gen. xviii.

2. She is sometimes used as a noun for woman or female, and in the plural; but in contempt or in ludicrous language.

Lady, you are the cruellest she alive. Shak.
The shees of Italy shall not betray
My interest. Shak.

3. She is used also in composition for female, representing sex; as, a she-bear; a she-cat.

SHEARDING, n. [G. scheiden, Sax. scedan, to divide.]

In the Ile of Man, riding, a tithing, or division, in which there is a corner, or chief constable. The Ile is divided into six sheardings. Encyc.

SHEAF, (sheep), n.; pl. SHEAVES. [Sax. sceaf; D. schoef. It appears to be connected with the D. schainen, schoof, to shoot, Sax. sefan. The sense then is, a mass or collection driven or pressed together. But the Welsh has ysgab, a sheaf and a besom, whence ysgabaw, to sweep, L. scopa, scopa, and said to be from cab, what is put together, a cab. If these are of one family, as I suspect, the root is in Class Gb, and the sense, to collect or press together.]

1. A quantity of the stalks of wheat, rye, oats, or barley bound together; a bundle of stalks or straw.

The reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden.

2. Any bundle or collection; as, a sheaf of arrows. Dryden.

SHEAL. See SHEALING. [Gay.]

SHEAL, v. t. To shell, is not used. Shak.

SHEAR, v. t.; pret. SHEARED; pp. SHEARED or SHORN. The old pret. SHOR is entirely obsolete. [Sax. sceara, sceara, sciran, to shear, to divide, whence share and shere; G. scherren, to shear, or shave, and to vex, to rail, to jeer; schier dich weg, get you gone; schier dich aus dem weg, move out of the way; D. scheeren, to shave, shear, batter, stretch, warp; de gek scheeren, to play the fool; zig weg scheeren, to shear off; Dan. skiere, to cut, carve, saw, hew; skierte, a jest, jeer, banter; skierters, to sport, mock, jeer; Sw. skiera, to reap, to mow, to cut off, to cleanse, to rinse; Sans. schaura or chaura, to shave; W. ysger, a part, a share; ysgeria, to separate.

The Greek has shepo, to shave, and shepo, to shave, shear, cut off, or lay waste. The primary sense is, to separate or force off in general; but a prominent signification is, to separate by rubbing, as in scouring, or as in sheaping, cutting close to the surface. Hence the sense of jeering, as we say, to give one the rub. See SCOUR, and Class Gr, No. 5, 8.]

1. To cut or clip something from the surface with an instrument of two blades; to separate any thing from the surface by shears, scissors, or a like instrument; as, to shear sheep; to shear cloth. It is appropriately used for the cutting of wool from sheep or their skins, and for clipping the nap from cloth, but may be applied to other things; as, a horse shears the ground in feeding much closer than an ox.

2. To separate by shears; as, to shear a fleece.

3. To reap. [Not in use.] [Scottish.] Gower.

An English silver coin, and money of account, equal to twelve pence, or the twentieth part of a pound. The English shilling, or shilling sterling, is equivalent nearly to twenty-three cents, money of the United States. Our ancestors introduced the name with the coin into this country; but by depreciation the value of the shilling sunk in New England and Virginia one fourth, or to sixteen cents and two thirds, and in New York and North Carolina to twelve and a half cents.

This denomination of money still subsists in the United States, although there is no coin of that value current, except the Spanish coin of twelve and a half cents, which is a shilling in the money of the State of New York. Since the adoption of the present coins of the United States, eagles, dollars, dimes, cents, &c., the use of shilling is continued only by habit.

SHIN, n. [Sax. scina, scyne, shin, and scin-ban, shin-bone; G. schiene, schiene-bain; D. scheen, scheen-been; Sw. skenben.] The fore part of the leg, particularly of the human leg; the fore part of the crural bone called tibia. This bone, being covered only with skin, may be named from that circumstance—skin-bone; or it may be formed from the root of chine, edge.

SHINE, c. l. pret. SHINEO or SHONE; pp. SHINED or SHONE. [Sax. scinan; D. schaynen; G. scheinen; Sw. skina. If s is a prefix, this word accords with the root of L. canus, caneo; W. cda, white, bright. See CANV.]

1. To emit rays of light; to give light; to beam with steady radiance; to exhibit brightness or splendor; as, the sun shines by day; the moon shines by night. SHINING differs from sparkling, glistening, glittering, as it usually implies steady radiation or emission of light, whereas the latter words usually imply irregular or interrupted radiation. This distinction is not always observed; and we may say, the fixed stars shine, as well as that they sparkle. But we never say, the sun or the moon sparkle.

2. To be bright; to be lively and animated; to be brilliant. Let thine eyes shine forth in their full stature. Denham.

SHIRE or SHIRE, n. [Sax. scir, scire, scyre, a division, from sciran, to divide. (See Share and Share.) It is pronounced, in compound words, shair, as in Hampshire, Berkshire.]

In England, a division of territory, otherwise called a county. The shire was originally a division of the kingdom under the jurisdiction of an earl or count, whose authority was intrusted to the sheriff, (shre-reeve.) On this officer the government ultimately devolved. In the United States, the corresponding division of a State is called a county, but we retain shire in the compound half-shire; as when the county court is held in two towns in the same county alternately, we call one of the divisions a half-shire.

In some States, shire is used as the constituent part of the name of a county, as Berkshire, Hampshire, in Massachusetts. These being the names established by law, we say, the county of Berkshire, and we can not with propriety say, the county of Berke, for there is no county in Massachusetts thus named.

SHOULD, (shood), The preterit of SHALL, but now used as an auxiliary verb, either in the past time or conditional present. "He should have paid the debt at the time the note became due." Should here denotes past time. "I should like to town this day if the weather would permit." He should express present or future time conditionally. In the second and third persons, it denotes obligation or duty, as in the first example above.

1. I should go. When should in this person is uttered without emphasis, it declines simply that an event would take place, on some condition or under other circumstances.

But when expressed with emphasis, should in this person denotes obligation, duty, or determination.

2. Thou shouldst go. Without emphasis, should, You should } go. In the second person, is nearly equivalent to ought; you ought to go, it is your duty, you are bound to go. [See SHALL.]

With emphasis, should expresses determination in the speaker conditionally to compel the person to act. "If I had the care of you, you should go, whether willing or not."

3. He should go. Should, in the third person, has the same force as in the second.

4. If I should, if you should, if he should, &c., denote a future contingent event.

5. After should, the principal verb is sometimes omitted, without obscuring the sense.

So subjects love just kings, or so they should. Dryden.

That is, so they should love them.

6. Should be; ought to be; a proverbial phrase, conveying some censure, contempt, or irony. Things are not as they should be.

The boys think their mother no better than she should be. Addison.

7. "We think it strange that stones should fall from the aerial regions." In this use, should implies that stones do fall. In all similar phrases, should implies the actual existence of the fact, without a condition or supposition.

SIGN, (si), n. [Fr. signe; It. segno; Sp. seña; L. signum; Sax. segan; Arm. sign, syn; Ir. sechin; G. zeichen; Sans. zaga. From the last three words, it appears that sign is not radical; the elements being Sg. If so, and the G. zeichen is of this family, then we learn that sign is only a dialectical orthography of teken, for zeichen is the D. teeken, Dan. tegn, Sw. tecken, coinciding perhaps with Gr. tekevva.]
 1. A token; something by which another thing is shown or represented; any visible thing, any motion, appearance, or event, which indicates the existence or approach of something else. Thus we speak of signs of fair weather or of a storm, and of external marks, which are signs of a good constitution.
 2. A motion, action, nod, or gesture, indicating a wish or command.
They made signs to his father, how he would have him called. — Luke i.
 3. A wonder; a miracle; a prodigy; a remarkable transaction, event, or phenomenon.

 8. A mark of distinction.
 9. Typical representation.
The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative. Breweood.
 10. In astronomy, the twelfth part of the ecliptic or zodiac. The signs are reckoned from the point of intersection of the ecliptic and equator at the vernal equinox, and are named, respectively, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, Pisces. These names are borrowed from the constellations of the zodiac of the same denomination, which were respectively comprehended within the foregoing equal divisions of the ecliptic, at the time when those divisions were first made; but, on account of the precession of the equinoxes, the positions of these constellations in the heavens no longer correspond with the divisions of the ecliptic of the same name, but are considerably in advance of them. Thus the constellation Aries is now in that part of the ecliptic called Taurus.
 11. In algebra, a character indicating the relation of quantities, or an operation performed upon them; as the sign +, (plus,) prefixed to a quantity, indicates that the quantity is to be added; the sign — (minus) denotes that the quantity to which it is prefixed is to be subtracted. The former is prefixed to quantities called affirmative or positive; the latter to quantities called negative.
 12. The subscription of one's name; signature; as, a sign manual.
 13. Among physicians, an appearance or symptom in the human body, which indicates its condition as to health or disease.
 14. In music, any character, as a flat, sharp, dot, &c.
SIGN, (si), v. t. To mark with characters or one's name. To sign a paper, note, deed, &c., is to write one's name at the foot, or underneath the declaration, promise, covenant, grant, &c., by which the person makes it his own act. To sign one's name, is to write or subscribe it on paper. Signing does not now include sealing.

SIGNAL, n. [Fr. signal; Sp. señal; from L. signum.]
 A sign that gives or is intended to give notice; or the notice given. Signals are used to communicate notice, information, orders, and the like, to persons at a distance, and by any persons and for any purpose. A signal may be a motion of the hand, the raising of a flag, the firing of a gun, or any thing which, being understood by persons at a distance, may communicate notice.
 Signals are particularly useful in the navigation of fleets and in naval engagements. There are day-signals, which are usually made by the sails, by flags and pendants, or guns; night-signals, which are lanterns disposed in certain figures, or false fires, rockets, or the firing of guns; fog-signals, which are made by sounds, as firing of guns, beating of drums, ringing of bells, &c. There are signals of evolution, addressed to a whole fleet, to a division, or to a squadron; signals of movements to particular ships; and signals of service, general or particular. Signals used in an army are mostly made by a particular heat of the drum, or by the bugle.
Mar. Dict. Encyc.

SIGNAL-LY, adv. Eminently; remarkably; memorably; in a distinguished manner.
SIGNA'TION, n. Sign given; act of betokening. [Not in use.]
SIGNA-TORY, a. Relating to a seal; used in sealing.
Dict.
SIGNA-TURE, n. [Fr., from L. signo, to sign.]
 1. A sign, stamp, or mark impressed.
The brain, being well furnished with various traces, signatures, and images. Waite.
The natural and ladelible signature of God, stamped on the human soul. Bentley.
 2. In old medical writers, an external mark or character on a plant, which was supposed to indicate its suitability to cure particular disease, or diseases of particular parts. Thus plants with yellow flowers were supposed to be adapted to the cure of jaundice, &c.
Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use. More.
 3. A mark for proof, or proof from marks.
 4. Sign-manual; the name of a person written or subscribed by himself.
 5. Among printers, a letter or figure at the bottom of the first page of a sheet or half sheet, by which the sheets are distinguished and their order designated, as a direction to the binder. Every successive sheet has a different letter or figure, and if the sheets are more numerous than the letters of the alphabet, then a small letter is added to the capital one; thus, A, A, B, B. In large volumes, the signatures are sometimes composed of letters and figures; thus, 5 A, 5 B. But some printers now use figures only for signatures.
 6. In physiognomy, an external mark or feature, by which some persons pretend to discover the nature and qualities of a thing, particularly the temper and genius of persons.
 7. In music, the flats and sharps at the beginning of each staff, to mark the key of the movement.
SIGNA-TURE, v. t. To mark; to distinguish. [Not in use.] Cheyne.
SIGNA-TUR-IST, n. One who holds to the doctrine of signatures impressed upon objects, indicative of character or qualities. [Little used.]
Brown.
SIGN'BOARD, n. A board on which a man sets a notice of his occupation, or of articles for sale.
SIGN'ED, pp. Marked; subscribed.
SIGN'ER, n. One that signs or subscribes his name; as, a memorial with a hundred signers.
SIGN'ET, n. A seal; particularly in Great Britain, the seal used by the king in sealing his private letters, and grants that pass by bill under his majesty's hand.
SIGNIFICANCE, n. [from L. significans. See SIGNIFICANT.]
SIGNIFICANT, a. Signifying.

1. Meaning; import; that which is intended to be expressed; as, the significance of a nod, or of a motion of the hand, or of a word or expression.

Stillingfleet.

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind; as, a duty enjoined with particular significance.

Atterbury.

3. Importance; moment; weight; consequence.

Many a circumstance of less significance has been construed into an overt act of high treason. Addison.

SIG-NI-FI-CANT, a. [L. significans.]

1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.

2. Bearing a meaning; expressing or containing signification or sense; as, a significant word or sound; a significant look.

3. Betokening something; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient. Raleigh.

4. Expressive or representative of some fact or event. The passover among the Jews was significant of the escape of the Israelites from the destruction which fell on the Egyptians. The bread and wine in the sacrament are significant of the body and blood of Christ.

5. Important; momentous. [Not in use.]

SIG-NI-FI-CANT-LY, adv. With meaning.

2. With force of expression. South.

SIG-NI-FI-CATION, n. [Fr., from L. significatio. See SIGNIFY.]

1. The act of making known, or of communicating ideas to another by signs or by words, by any thing that is understood, particularly by words.

All speaking or signification of one's mind implies an act or address of one man to another. South.

2. Meaning; that which is understood to be intended by a sign, character, mark, or word; that idea or sense of a sign, mark, word, or expression which the person using it intends to convey, or that which men in general, who use it, understand it to convey. The signification of words was originally arbitrary, and is dependent on usage. But when custom has annexed a certain sense to a letter or sound, or to a combination of letters or sounds, this sense is always to be considered the signification which the person using the word intends to communicate.

So, by custom, certain signs or gestures have a determined signification. Such is the fact also with figures, algebraic characters, &c.

SIG-NI-FI-CA-TIVE, a. [Fr. significatif.]

1. Betokening or representing by an external sign; as, the significative symbols of the eucharist.

Brewerwood.

2. Having signification or meaning; expressive of a certain idea or thing.

Neither in the degrees of kindred were they destitute of significative words. Camden.

SIG-NI-FI-CA-TIVE-LY, adv. So as to represent or express by an external sign. Usher.

SIG-NI-FI-CA-TIVE-NESS, n. The quality of being significative.

SIG-NI-FI-CA-TOR, n. That which signifies. Barton.

SIG-NI-FI-CA-TO-RY, n. That which betokens, signifies, or represents. Taylor.

SIG-NI-FI-ED, pp. Made known by signs or words.

SIG-NI-FI-ER, v. t. [Fr. signifier; L. significo; signum, a sign, and facio, to make.]

1. To make known something, either by signs or words; to express or communicate to another any idea, thought, wish, purpose, or command, either by words, by a nod, wink, gesture, signal, or other sign. A man signifies his mind by his voice, or by written characters; he may signify his mind by a nod or other motion, provided the person to whom he directs it, understands what is intended by it. A general, or an admiral, signifies his commands by signals to officers at a distance.

2. To mean; to have or contain a certain sense. The word Sabbath signifies rest. Less, in composition, as in faithless, signifies destination or want. The prefix re, in recommend, seldom signifies any thing.

3. To import; to weigh; to have consequence; used in particular phrases; as, it signifies much or little; it signifies nothing. What does it signify? What signify the splendors of a court? Confession of sin, without reformation of life, can signify nothing in the view of God.

4. To make known; to declare.

The government should signify to the Protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied. Swift.

SIG-NI-FY, v. i. To express meaning with force. [Little used.]

SIG-NI-FY-ING, pp. Making known by signs or words.

SIL-I-CATE, n. A salt composed of silicic acid and a base.

SIL-I-CATE-TEC, a. Combined with silicic acid. [Rare.] Silliman.

SIL-I-CI-ACID, n. An acid, according to Thomson, composed of one equivalent of silicon and one of oxygen, or, according to Berzelius, one of silicon and three of oxygen. When pure, it is a light, white powder, which feels rough when rubbed between the fingers. It is both inodorous and insipid. It combines with bases, forming salts, which are called silicates. Rock crystal, flint, and other varieties of quartz, are nearly pure silicic acid.

SIL-I-CI-CAL-CI-RE-OUS, a. [Silicic and calcareous.] Consisting of silicic and calcareous matter.

SIL-I-CI-CAL-CE, n. [L. silex or silica and calx.] A silicious rock containing carbonate of lime. Saussure.

SIL-I-CI-FI-CATION, n. Petrification by flint or silicic acid.

SIL-I-CI-FY, v. t. To become flint. Mantell.

Virginia silk; a plant of the genus Periploca, which climbs and winds about other plants, trees, &c. No species of Periploca grows in Virginia, or any part of the United States.

SILL, n. [Sax. syl, syle, syl; Fr. seuil; G. schelle; W. sail, syl, or seiler.] foundation; seilium, to found; l. solium, allied to solid. The primary sense is, probably, to lay, set, or throw down.

1. Properly, the basis or foundation of a thing; appropriately, a piece of timber on which a building rests; the lowest timber of any structure; as, the sills of a house, of a bridge, of a loom, and the like.
2. The timber or stone at the foot of a door; the threshold.
3. The timber or stone on which a window-frame stands; or the lowest piece in a window-frame.
4. The shaft or thill of a carriage. [Local.] Grass.

SIL'LA-BUB, n. A liquor made by mixing wine or cider with milk, and thus forming a soft curd. King.

SIL'LI-LY, ade. [from sily.] In a silly manner; foolishly; without the exercise of good sense or judgment. Dryden.

SIL'LI-MAN-TTE, n. A mineral found at Saybrook, in Connecticut, so named in honor of Prof. Silliman, of Yale College. It occurs in long, slender, rhombic prisms, engaged in gneiss. Its color is dark gray and hair brown; luster shining upon the external planes, but brilliant and sub-metallic upon those produced by cleavage in a direction parallel with the longer diagonal of the prism; hardness about the same with quartz; specific gravity, 3.410. It is composed of silica and alumina, with some oxyd of iron.

SIL'LI-NESS, n. Weakness of understanding; want of sound sense or judgment; simplicity; harmless folly. L'Estrange.

SIL'LOCK, n. The name given in the Orkney Isles to the fry of the coal-fish, which is allied to the cod-fish; also spelled SILLIK and SILLIO.

SIL'VER, n. [Sax. seolfer, siluer; Goth. silubr; G. silber; D. siler; Sw. silfer; Dan. sølv; Lapponic, sellospe. Qu. Russ. sebro; r for l.]

1. A metal of a white color and lively brilliancy. It has neither taste nor smell; its specific gravity is 10.552, according to Bergman, but according to Kirwan, it is less. A cubic foot weighs about 660 lbs. It is exceedingly malleable, and its ductility is little inferior to that of gold. It is harder and more elastic than tin or gold, but less so than copper, platinum, or iron. It is found native in thin plates or leaves, or in fine threads, or it is found mineralized by various substances. Great quantities of this metal are furnished by the mines of South America and of Mexico; and it is found in small quantities in Norway, Germany, Spain, the United States, &c. Kirwan. Encycy.

SIM'I-LAR, a. [Fr. similaire; It. simile; Sp. similar; L. similis; W. heval, henaly; from mal, like, Gr. bunalos. The Welsh mal signifies, small, light, ground, bruised, smooth, allied to mill, W. malu, to grind. But I am not confident that these words are of one family.]

Like; resembling; having a like form or appearance. Similar may signify, exactly alike, or having a general likeness, a likeness in the principal points. Things perfectly similar in their nature must be of the same essence, or homogeneous; but we generally understand similar to denote a likeness that is not perfect. Many of the statutes of Connecticut are similar to the statutes of Massachusetts on the same subjects. The manners of the several States of New England are similar, the people being derived from common ancestors.

In geometry, similar rectilinear figures are such as have their several angles respectively equal each to each, and their sides about the equal angles proportional. Similar solids are such as are contained by the same number of similar planes, similarly situated, and having like inclination to one another. Brande.

SIM-I-LAR-I-TY, n. Likeness; resemblance; as, a similarity of features. There is a great similarity in the features of the Laplanders and Samoides, but little similarity between the features of European and the woolly-haired Africans.

SIM'I-LAR-Y. The same as SIMILAR.

SIM'I-LE, n. [L.] In rhetoric, similitude; a comparison of two things, which, however different in other respects, have some strong point or points of resemblance; by which comparison the character or qualities of a thing are illustrated, or presented in an impressive light. Thus the eloquence of Demosthenes was like a rapid torrent; that of Cicero like a large stream that glides smoothly along with majestic tranquillity.

SIM'I-LI-TER, n. [L., in like manner.] In law, the technical designation of the form by which either party, in pleading, accepts the issue tendered by his opponent. Brande.

SIN, n. [Sax. sin and syn; G. sünde; D. zonde; Sw. and Dan. synd; Lapponic, Finnish, viadio; allied perhaps to Fr. saivism, to alter, to wander. The primary sense is, probably, to depart, to wander.]

1. The voluntary departure of a moral agent from a known rule of rectitude or duty, prescribed by God; any voluntary transgression of the divine law, or violation of a divine command; a wicked act; iniquity. Sin is either a positive act in which a known divine law is violated, or it is the voluntary neglect to obey a positive divine command, or a rule of duty clearly implied in such command. Sin comprehends not actions only, but neglect of known duty, all evil thoughts, purposes, words, and desires, whatever is contrary to God's commands or law. I John lii. Matt. xv. James iv.

Sinners neither enjoy the pleasures of sin, nor the peace of piety.

Among divines, sin is original or actual. Actual sin, above defined, is the act of a moral agent in violating a known rule of duty. Original sin, as generally understood, is notive depravity of heart; that want of conformity of heart to the divine will, that corruption of nature or deterioration of the moral character of man, which is supposed to be the effect of Adam's apostasy, and which manifests itself in moral agents by positive acts of disobedience to the divine will, or by the voluntary neglect to comply with the express commands of God, which require that we should love God with all the heart, and soul, and strength, and mind, and our neighbor as ourselves. This native depravity, or alienation of affections from God and his law, is supposed to be what the apostle calls the earnal mind or mindedness, which is enmity against God, and is therefore denominated sin or sinfulness.

Unpardonable sin, or blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, is supposed to be a malicious and obstinate rejection of Christ and the gospel plan of salvation, or a contemptuous resistance made to the influences and convictions of the Holy Spirit. Matt. xii.

2. A sin-offering; an offering made to atone for sin.

He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin.—2 Cor. v.

3. A man enormously wicked. [Not in use.]

Sin differs from crime, not in nature, but in application. That which is a crime against society, is sin against God.

SIN, v. t. [Sax. singian, syngian.]

1. To depart voluntarily from the path of duty prescribed by God to man; to violate the divine law in any particular, by actual transgression, or by the neglect or non-observance of its injunctions; to violate any known rule of duty.

All have sinned and come short of the glory of God.—Rom. iii.

It is followed by against.

Against thee, thee only, have I sinned.—Ps. li.

2. To offend against right, against men or society; to trespass.

I am a man More sinned against than sinning.

And who but wishes to invert the laws Of order, sins against th' eternal cause.

SIN, for SINCE, [Scot. synce.] is obsolete or vulgar.

SIN-A-T'IC, a. [from Sinal, the mountain.] Pertaining to Mount Sinal; given or made at Sinal.

SIN-A-PIS-IN, n. A principle extracted from mustard seed, Sinapis alba. It is white, crystallizable, inodorous, and bitter.

SIN-A-PIS-M, n. [L. sinapis, sinap, mustard, G. senf, Sax. senep.]

In pharmacy, a cataplasm composed of mustard seed pulverized, with some other ingredients, and used as an external application. It is a powerful irritant.

SIN-BORN, a. Derived from sin.

SINCE, prep. or adv. [Sw. sedan; Dan. siden; D. sint]; supposed to be contracted from Sax. sithian, which is from sithian, to pass, to go; and sithian may be the participle, and denote past, gone, and hence after, afterward. Sith, in Saxon, has a like sense. Our early writers used sith, sithen, sithence; the latter is evidently a corruption of sithian. It may be doubted whether Sw. sen, Dan. sen, slow, late, is a contraction of this word; more probably it is not.]

1. After; from time that. The proper signification of since is after, and its appropriate sense includes the whole period between an event and the present time. I have not seen my brother since January.

The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming.—Gen. xxx.

Holy prophets, who have been since the world began.—Luke i. John ix.

Since, then, denotes, during the whole time after an event; or at any particular time during that period.

2. Ago; past; before this. "About two years since, an event happened," that is, two years having passed.

3. Because that; this being the fact that.

Sin truth and constancy are vain, *Sin*cs neither love nor sense of pain Nor force of reason can persuade, Then let example be desired.

Since, when it precedes a noun, is called a prepositional, but when it precedes a sentence, it is called an adverb. The truth is, the character of the word is the same in both cases. It is probably an obsolete participle, and according to the usual classification of words, may be properly ranked with the prepositions. In strictness, the last clause of the passage above cited is the case absolute. "The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming," that is, my arrival being past. So, since the world began, is strictly, past the world began, the beginning of the world being past. In the first case, since, considered as a preposition, has coming, a noun, for its object, and in the latter case, the clause of a sentence. So we say, against your arrival, or against you come.

SIN-CERE, a. [Fr. from L. sincerus, which is said to be composed of sine, without, and cera, wax; as if applied originally to pure honey.]

1. Pure; unmixed.

As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word.—1 Pet. ii.

A joy which never was sincere till now.

There is no sincere acid in any animal juice. I would have all galliacs avoided, that our tongue may be sincere.

[This sense is, for the most part, obsolete. We use the phrases sincere joy, sincere pleasure, but we mean by them, unfeigned, real joy or pleasure.]

2. Unhurt; uninjured.

The inviolable body stood sincere. [Obs.]

3. Being in reality what it appears to be; not feigned; not simulated; not assumed or said for the sake of appearance; real; not hypocritical or pretended. This is the present use of the word. Let your intentions be pure, and your declarations sincere. Let love and friendship be sincere. No prayer can avail with a heart-searching God, unless it is sincere.

SIN-CERE/IV, adv. Honestly; with real purity of heart; without simulation or disguise; unfeignedly; as, to speak one's mind sincerely; to love virtue sincerely.

SKILL, n. [Sax. scyllan, to separate, to distinguish; Ice. and Sw. skilla, Dan. skiller, to divide, sever, part; whence shield, that which separates, and hence that which protects or defends; D. scheelen, to differ; schillen, to peel or pare. Scule is from the root of these words, as in shell, Sax. scyl, secal. In Heb. כסל, foolish, perverse, and as a verb, to pervert, to be foolish or perverse; in Ch. to understand or consider, to look, to regard, to cause to know, whence knowledge, knowing, wise, wisdom, understanding; Rab. to be ignorant or foolish; Syr. to be foolish, to wander in mind, also, to cause to understand, to know, to perceive, to discern, also, to err, to do wrong, to sin, to fall in duty; whence, foolish, folly, ignorance, error, sin, and understanding; Sam. to be wont or accustomed, to look or behold. The same verb with ו Heb. שכל, signifies, to understand, to be wise, whence wisdom, understanding, also, to waste, to scatter, or destroy, to bereave, also, to prosper; Ch. to understand; שכל to complete, to perfect; כל with a prefix. This signifies, also, to found, to lay a foundation; Syr. to found, also, to finish, complete, adorn, from the same root; Ar. شكك shakala, to bind or tie, whence Eng. shackle; also, to be dark, obscure, intricate, difficult, to form, to make like, to be of a beautiful form, to know, to be ignorant, to agree, suit, or become. These verbs appear to be formed on the root כל, כל to hold, or restrain, which coincides in signification with the Ch. and Eth. כלה, to be able, L. calleo, that is, to strain, stretch, reach, and with כלל, to perfect, that is, to make sound, or to reach the utmost limit. The sense of folly, error, sin, perverseness, is from wandering, deviation, Gr. σκελος; the sense of skill and understanding is from separation, discernment, or from taking, holding, or reaching to, for strength and knowledge are allied, and often from tension. The sense of ignorance and error is from wandering or deviation, or perhaps it proceeds from a negative sense given to the primary verb by the prefix, like ex in Latin and s in Italian. The Arabic sense of binding and shackles is from straining. The Eng. shall and should belong to this family.

1. The familiar knowledge of any art or science, united with readiness and dexterity in execution or performance, or in the application of the art or science to practical purposes. This word is commonly deduced from Slavai, Slavonians, the name of a people who were made slaves by the Venetians. But this is not certain.]

1. A person who is wholly subject to the will of another; one who has no freedom of action, but whose person and services are wholly under the control of another. In the early state of the world, and to this day, among some barbarous nations, prisoners of war are considered and treated as slaves. The slaves of modern times are more generally purchased, like horses and oxen.

2. One who has lost the power of resistance; or one who surrenders himself to any power whatever; as, a slave to passion, to lust, to ambition. Waller.

3. A mean person; one in the lowest state of life.

4. A drudge; one who labors like a slave.

SLAY, v. t.; pret. SLEW; pp. SLAIN. [Sax. slagan, slagan; Gotb. slahan; G. schlagen; D. slaan; Sw.

slai; Dan. slaaer, to strike, to kill. The proper sense is to strike, and as beating was an early mode of killing, this word, like smite, came to signify to kill. It seems to be formed on the root of lay; as we say, to lay on.]

1. To kill; to put to death by a weapon or by violence. We say, he slaw a man with a sword, with a stone, or with a club, or with other arms; but we never say, the sheriff slays a malefactor with a halter, or a man is slain on the gallows or by poison. So that slay retains something of its primitive sense of striking or beating. It is particularly applied to killing in battle, but is properly applied also to the killing of an individual. [vid. nian or beast.]

Though he slay me, yet will I treat him. — Job xiii. 15.

SLAYER, n. One that slays; a killer; a murderer; an assassin; a destroyer of life.

6. To be careless, inattentive, or unconcerned; not to be vigilant. Shak.

SLEEP, n. A natural and healthy, but temporary and periodical suspension of the functions of the hemispheres of the cerebrum, or, in other words, of the intellectual powers. Sleep may be complete or incomplete. That state of an animal in which the voluntary exercise of his mental and corporeal powers is suspended, and he rests unconscious of what passes around him, and not affected by the ordinary impressions of external objects. Sleep is generally attended with a relaxation of the muscles, but the involuntary motions, as respiration and the circulation of the blood, are continued. The mind is often very active in imperfect sleep, but its powers not being under the control of reason, its exercises are very irregular. Sleep is the natural rest or repose intended by the Creator to restore the powers of the body and mind, when exhausted or fatigued.

Sleep of plants; a state of plants, usually at night, when their leaflets approach each other, and conceal the flowers, as if in repose. Linnaus.

SLEEP-CHARG-ED, a. Heavy with sleep. Lamb.
