IL/K, a. [Sax. elic, each.] The same; each. Spenser.
In Scottish, the phrase of that ilk denotes that a person's surname and title are the same; as, Grant of that ilk, i. e., Grant of Grant. Jamieson.

ILL, a. [Supposed to be contracted from evil, Sax. ylf]; but this is doubtful. It is in Swedish illa, and Dao, ill.
1. Bad or evil, in a general sense; contrary to good, physical or moral; applied to things; evil; wicked; wrong; iniquitous; as, his ways are ill; he sets an ill example.

2. Producing evil or misfortune; as, an ill star or planet.
3. Bad; evil; unfortunate; as, an ill end; an ill fate.
4. Unhealthy; insalubrious; as, an ill air or climate.
5. Cross; crabbed; surly; peevish; as, ill nature; ill temper.
6. Diseased; disordered; sick or indisposed; applied to persons; as, the man is ill; he has been ill a long time; he is ill of a fever.
7. Diseased; impaired; as, an ill state of health.
8. Discordant; harsh; disagreeable; as, an ill sound.
9. Homely; ugly; as, ill looks, or an ill countenance.
10. Unfavorable; suspicious; as when we say, this affair bears an ill look or aspect.
11. Rude; unpolished; as, ill breeding; ill manners.
12. Not proper; not regular or legitimate; as, an ill expression in grammar.

ILL, n. Wickedness; depravity; evil.
*Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill.* Dryden.

2. Misfortune; calamity; evil; disease; pain; whatever annoys or impairs happiness, or prevents success.
*Who can all sense of others' ills escape
Is but a brute at best in human shape.* Tate.

ILL, adv. Not well; not rightly or perfectly. He is ill at ease.
2. Not easily; with pain or difficulty. He is ill able to sustain the burden.
*Ill bears the sex the youthful lovers' fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state.* Dryden.

Ill is sometimes but erroneously used for ill.
ILL, prefixed to participles of the present tense, and prefixed to verbs, or to nouns, may be considered as a noun governed by the participle, or as making a part of a compound word; as, an ill-meaning man, an ill-designing man, an ill-boding hour; that is, a man meaning ill, an hour boding ill. It is more consonant, however, to the genius of our language, to treat these and similar words as compounds. In some cases, as before the participles of intransitive verbs, ill must be considered as a part of the compound, as in ill-looking. When used before the perfect participle, ill is to be considered as an adverb, or modifying word, or to be treated as a part of the compound; as in ill-bred, ill-governed, ill-fated, ill-favored, ill-formed, ill-minded. In these, and all similar connections, it might be well to unite the two words in a compound by a hyphen. As ill may be prefixed to almost any participle, it is needless to attempt to collect a list of such words for insertion.

Il, prefixed to words beginning with l, stands for in, as used in the Latin language, and usually denotes a negation of the sense of the simple word; as, illegal, not legal; or it denotes to or on, and merely negations or enforces the sense, as in illuminate.

IMAGINATION, n. [L. imaginatio; Fr. imagination.]
 1. The power or faculty of the mind by which it conceives and forms ideas of things communicated to it by the organs of sense. Ence.
Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Bacon.
 Our simple apprehension of corporeal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, is imagination, [conception]. Glanville.
Imagination, in its proper sense, signifies a lively conception of objects of sight. It is distinguished from conception as a part from a whole. Reid.
 The business of conception is to present us with an exact transcript of what we have felt or perceived. But we have also a power of modifying our conceptions, by combining the parts of different ones so as to form new wholes of our own creation. I shall employ the word imagination to express this power. I apprehend this to be the proper sense of the word, if imagination be the power which gives birth to the productions of the poet and the painter. Stewart.
 We would define imagination to be the will working on the materials of memory; not satisfied with following the order prescribed by nature, or suggested by accident, it selects the parts of different conceptions, or objects of memory, to form a whole, more pleasing, more terrible, or more awful, than has ever been presented in the ordinary course of nature. Ed. Ence.
 The two latter definitions give the true sense of the word, as now understood.
 2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.
 Sometimes Despair darkens all her imaginations. Sidney.
 His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.
 3. Contrivance; scheme formed in the mind; device.
 Thou hast seen all thy vengeance, and all thy imaginations against me. — Lam. iii.

IM-I-TA-BIL'I-TY, n. [See IMITABLE, IMITATE.] The quality of being imitable.

IM-I-TA-BLE, a. [Fr., from L. imitabilis. See IMITATE.]

1. That may be imitated or copied. Let us follow our Savior in all his imitable conduct and traits of character. There are some works of the ancients that are hardly imitable. The dignified style of Johnson is scarcely imitable.

2. Worthy of imitation.

IM-I-TATE, v. t. [Fr., imiter; Sp. and Port. imitar; L. imitare; L. imitor; allied, perhaps, to Gr. ἰμιος, similar, equal.]

1. To follow in manners; to copy in form, color, or quality. We imitate another in dress or manners; we imitate a statue, a painting, a sound, an action, when we make or do that which resembles it. We should seek the best models to imitate; and, in morals and piety, it is our duty to imitate the example of our Savior. But, as we can not always make an exact similitude of the original, hence,

2. To attempt or endeavor to copy or resemble; as, to imitate the colors of the rainbow, or any of the beauties of nature. Cicero appears to have imitated the Greek orators.

3. To counterfeit.
This hand appeared a shining sword to wield,
And that sustained an imitated shield. Dryden.

1. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use like images and examples. Johnson. Gay.

IM-I-TA-TED, pp. or a. Followed; copied.

IM-I-TA-TING, ppr. Following in manner; copying.

IM-I-TATION, n. [Fr., from L. imitatio; imitor, to imitate.]

1. The act of following in manner, or of copying in form; the act of making the similitude of any thing, or of attempting a resemblance. By the imitation of bad men or of evil examples, we are apt to contract vicious habits. In the imitation of natural forms and colors, we are often unsuccessful. Imitation in music, says Rousseau, is a reiteration of the same air, or of one which is similar, in several parts, where it is repeated by one after the other, either in unison or at the distance of a fourth, a fifth, a third, or any interval whatever. Imitation in oratory, is an endeavor to resemble a speaker or writer in the qualities which we propose to ourselves as patterns.

Encyc.

2. That which is made or produced as a copy; likeness; resemblance. We say, a thing is a true imitation of nature.

3. A method of translating, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestic for foreign, or in which the translator not only varies the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion. Johnson. Dryden.

IM-I-TA-TIVE, a. Inclined to follow in manner; as, man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; that is used in the business of forming resemblances. Painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after a model, pattern, or original.
This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitation of the first in Thracæ. Dryden.

Imitative music, is that which is intended to resemble some natural operation, the passions and the like.
Busby.

IM-PLI-CATE, v. t. [Fr. impliquer; It. implicare; L. implico, implicatus; in and plico, to fold; Gr. πιλεω, W. pilyu.]
1. To fold; to involve; to entangle. [Seldom used in its literal sense.]
2. To involve; to bring into connection with; also, to show or prove to be connected or concerned; as, the evidence does not implicate the accused person in this conspiracy.

IM-PLI-CATE-ED, pp. Infolded; involved.
2. Involved; connected; concerned; proved to be concerned or to have had a part. Twenty persons are implicated in the plot.

IM-PLI-CATE-TING, pp. Involving; proving to be concerned.

IM-PLI-CAT'ION, n. [L. implicatio, supra.]
1. The act of infolding or involving.
2. Involuption; entanglement.

Three principal causes of firmness are, the greenness, the quiet contact, and the implication of the component parts.

3. An implying, or that which is implied, but not expressed; a tacit inference, or something fairly to be understood, though not expressed in words.

The doctors are, by implication, of a different opinion.

IM-PLI-CAT-IVE, a. Having implication.

IM-PLI-CAT-IVELY, adv. By implication.

IM-PLIC'IT, (im-plis'it), a. [L. implicatus, from implico.]
1. Infolded; entangled; complicated.
2. Implied; tacitly comprised; fairly to be understood, though not expressed in words; as, an implicit contract or agreement.
3. Resting on another; trusting to the word or authority of another, without doubting or reserve, or without examining into the truth of the thing itself. Thus we give implicit credit or confidence to the declarations of a person of known veracity; we receive with implicit faith whatever God has clearly revealed.

IM-PLIC'IT-LY, adv. By inference deducible, but not expressed in words; virtually; in reality, but not in name.

He that denies the providence of God implicitly denies his existence.

2. By connection with something else; dependently; with unreserved confidence; without doubting, or without examining evidence. We are disposed to believe implicitly what a man of veracity testifies.

Learn not to dispute the methods of his providence, but humbly and implicitly to acquiesce in and adore them.

IM-PLIC'IT-NESS, n. The state of being implicit; the state of trusting without reserve.

IM-PL'Y'ED, pp. or a. [See IMPLY.] Involved; contained virtually, though not expressed; as, an implied promise.

IM-PL'Y'ED-LY, adv. By implication.

IM-PLO-RAT'ION, n. Earnest supplication.

IM-PLO-RA-TOR, n. One who implores.

IM-PLO'RE, v. t. [Fr. implorer; Sp. implorar; It. implorare; L. imploro; in and ploro, to cry out.]
1. To call upon for, in supplication; to beseech; to pray earnestly; to petition with urgency; to entreat; as, to implore the forgiveness of sins; to implore mercy.

Implores all the gods that reign above.

2. To ask earnestly; to beg.

IM-PLO'RE', v. t. To entreat; to beg.

IM-PLO'RE', n. Earnest supplication. [Not used.]

IM-PLO'R'ED, pp. Earnestly supplicated; besought.

IM-PLO'R'ER, n. One who prays earnestly.

IM-PLO'R'ING, pp. or a. Beseeching; entreating; praying earnestly.

IM-PLO'R'ING-LY, adv. In the manner of entreaty.

IM-PLUM'ED, a. Having no plumes or feathers.

IM-PLUM'OUS, a.

IM-PLUNGE', (im-plunj'), v. t. To plunge; to immerse.

IM-PLY, v. t. [Fr. impliquer; Sp. implicar; It. implicare; L. implico; in and plico, to fold. See IMPLICARE.]
1. Literally, to infold or involve; to wrap up. [Obs.]
2. To involve or contain in substance or essence, or by fair inference, or by construction of law, when not expressed in words.

Where a malicious act is proved, a malicious intention is implied.

When a man employs a laborer to work for him, or an agent to transact business for him, the act of hiring implies an obligation, and a promise that he shall pay him a reasonable reward for his services. Contracts are expressed or implied; expressed contracts are those in which an agreement or promise is expressed by words or in writing; implied contracts are such as arise from the presumption of law, or the justice and reason of the transaction.

IM-PLY'ING, pp. Involving; containing in substance, or by fair inference, or by construction of law.

IM-POCKET', v. t. To pocket. [Not used.]

IM-POIS'ON, (im-pois'zh), v. t. [Fr. empoisonner. See Poison.]
1. To poison; to impregnate with poison; to corrupt with poison.
2. To imbitter; to impair; as, grief impoisons the pleasures of life.
3. To kill with poison. [Rare.]

IM-PON-DER-OU-S, a. Not having sensible weight.

IM-PON-DER-OU-S-NESS, n. State of being imponderous.

IM-PON'E, v. t. [L.] To stake; to wager. [Obs.]

IM-POOR', v. t. [in and poor.] To impoverish. [Not in use.]

IM-PO-RÓ-SI-TY, n. [in and porosity.] Want of porosity; closeness of texture; compactness that excludes pores.

IM-PÓ-RÓUS, a. Destitute of pores; very close or compact in texture; solid.

IM-PÓ-R'Y, v. t. [Fr. importer; L. importo; in and porto, to bear. See BRAN.]
1. To bring from a foreign country or jurisdiction, or from another state, into one's own country, jurisdiction, or state; opposed to EXPORT. We import teas and silks from China, wines from Spain and France, and dry goods from Great Britain. Great Britain imports cotton from America and India. We may say also that Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Maine import flour from the Middle States.

2. To bear or convey, as signification or meaning; to mean; to signify; to imply. We are to understand by a term what it clearly imports.

3. To be of weight to; to be of moment or consequence to; to bear on the interest of, or to have a bearing on.

Her length of sickness, with what else more serious importeth these, I know, this bears. I endure it, what imports it you? [Shak. Dryden.]

IM-PÓRT, n. That which is borne or conveyed in words; meaning; signification; the sense which words are intended to convey to the understanding, or which they bear in sound interpretation. IMPORT differs from IMPLICATION in this, that the meaning of a term, or number of words, in connection, is less obscurely expressed. Import depends less on inference, or deduction, than implication, and is also applied more frequently to a single word. In all philosophical discussions, it is useful to ascertain the import of the terms employed. In the construction of laws and treaties, we are to examine carefully the import of words and phrases.

2. That which is imported or brought into a country from another country or state; generally in the plural. Our imports exceed our exports; the balance must be paid in specie; hence the scarcity of coin.

3. Importance; weight; consequence. [Formerly occurred on the second syllable.]

IM-PÓRT-A-BLE, a. That may be imported.
2. Insupportable; not to be endured. [Obs.]

IM-PÓRT'ANCE, n. [Fr.; Sp. importancia; It. importanza; from import.]
1. Weight; consequence; a bearing on some interest; that quality of any thing by which it may affect a measure, interest, or result. The education of youth is of great importance to a free government. A religious education is of infinite importance to every human being.

2. Weight or consequence in the scale of being.

3. Weight or consequence in self-estimation. He believes himself a man of importance.

4. Thing implied; matter; subject; impunity. [In these senses, obsolete.]

IM-PÓRT'ANT, a. [Fr.] Literally, bearing on or to. Hence, weighty; momentous; of great consequence; having a bearing on some interest, measure, or result, by which good or ill may be produced. Truth is important to happiness as well as to knowledge, but none so important as religious truth. The commerce of Great Britain is important to her navy, and her navy is important to her independence. Men often forget the important end for which they were created.

2. Bearing on; forcible; driving.

He fiercely at him flew, And with important outrage him assailed.

3. Important. [Not used.]

IM-PÓRT'ANT-LY, adv. Weightily; forcibly.

IM-PÓR-TAT'ION, n. [Fr.; from import.]
1. The act or practice of importing, or of bringing from another country or state; opposed to EXPORTATION. Nations forbid the importation of commodities which are produced or manufactured in sufficient abundance at home.

2. The wares or commodities imported. The importations, this season, exceed those of the last.

3. Conveyance.

IM-PÓR'T'ED, pp. or a. Brought from another country or state.

IM-PÓR'T'ER, n. He that imports; the merchant who, by himself or his agent, brings goods from another country or state.

IM-PORT'ING, pp. or a. Bringing goods, &c., into one's own country or state from a foreign or distant state

2. Bearing, as a signification; meaning.

3. Having weight or consequence.

IM-PORT'LESS, a. Of no weight or consequence. [Not used.] Shak.

2. Pressing; urgent; as, an importunate demand.

3. Inciting urgently for gratification; as, importunate passions and appetites.

IM-PORT'U-NATE-LY, adv. With urgent request; with pressing solicitation.

IM-PORT'U-NATE-NESS, n. Urgent and pressing solicitation. Digby.

IM-PORT'U-NA-TOR, n. One that importunes. [Not in use.] Sandeys.

IM-PORT'UNE, v. t. [Fr. importuner; Sp. importunar; It. importunare; from L. importunus; in and porte, to bear on.]

To request with urgency; to press with solicitation; to urge with frequent or incessant application.

Their ministers and residents here have perpetually importuned the court with unreasonable demands. Swift.

IM-PORT'UNE, a. [L. importunus. Formerly accented on the second syllable.]

1. Pressing in request; urgent; troublesome by frequent demands; vexatious; unreasonable. Spenser. Bacon. Milton.

2. Unseasonable. [This word is obsolete; being superseded by IMPORTUNATE, unless perhaps in poetry.]

IM-PORT'UN'ED, pp. Requested with urgency.

IM-PORT'UN'E-LY, adv. With urgent solicitation; incessantly; continually; troublesome. [Obs.] Spenser.

2. Unseasonably; improperly. [Obs.] Sanderson.

IM-PORT'UN'ER, n. One who urges with earnestness.

IM-PORT'UN'ING, pp. Soliciting with urgency.

IM-PORT'UN'ITY, n. [Fr. importunité; L. importunitas.]

Pressing solicitation; urgent request; application for a claim or favor, which is urged with troublesome frequency or pertinacity. Men are sometimes overcome by the importunity of their wives or children.

IM-PORT'U-OUS, a. [L. importunus; in and portus.]

Without a port, haven, or harbor.

IM-POS'ABLE, a. That may be imposed or laid on. Hammond.

IM-POS'ABLE-NESS, n. State of being impossible.

IM-POSE, v. t. [Fr. imposer; L. impositum, from impono; in and pono, to put. Pono, as written, belongs to Class Bn; and pono, to Class Bs or Bd. The latter coincides with Eg. put. But a and e may be convertible.]

1. To lay on; to set on; to lay on, as a burden, tax, toll, duty, or penalty. The legislature imposes taxes for the support of government; toll is imposed on passengers to maintain roads, and penalties are imposed on those who violate the laws. God imposes no burdens on men which they are unable to bear.

On impious realms and barbarous kings impose Thy plagues. Pope.

2. To place over by authority or by force. The Romans often imposed rapacious governors on their colonies and conquered countries.

3. To lay on, as a command; to enjoin, as a duty. These on the deep imposed nobler laws. Waller. Impose but your commands. Dryden.

4. To fix on; to impute. [Little used.] Brown.

5. To lay on, as hands in the ceremony of ordination, or of confirmation.

6. To obtrude fallaciously.

Our poet thinks not fit To impose upon you what he writes for wit. Dryden.

7. Among printers, to put the pages on the stone and fit on the chase, and thus prepare the form for the press.

To impose on; to deceive; to mislead by a trick or false pretense; vulgarly, to put upon. We are liable to be imposed on by others, and sometimes we impose on ourselves.

IM-POS'E, a. Command; injunction. [Not used.] Shak.

IM-POS'ED, (im-pôzd') pp. Laid on, as a tax, burden, duty, or penalty; enjoined.

Imposed on; deceived.

IM-POS'EMENT, n. Imposition. [Bad.] Moore.

IM-POS'ER, n. One who lays on; one who enjoins.

The imposers of these oaths might repent. Walton.

IM-POS'ING, pp. Laying on; enjoining; deceiving.

2. a. Commanding; adapted to impress forcibly; as, an imposing air or manner.

Large and imposing edifices, imbosomed in the groves of some rich valley. Bishop Hobart.

IM-POS'ING, n. Among printers, the act of putting the pages of a sheet in proper order on the imposing-stone, and preparing them to be printed. Brande.

IM-POS'ING-LY, adv. In an imposing manner.

IM-POS'ING-STONE, n. Among printers, the stone on which the pages or columns of types are imposed or made into forms.

IM-PO-SI'TION, (im-pô-sh'ün), n. [Fr., from L. impositio. See IMPOSE.]

1. In a general sense, the act of laying on.

2. The act of laying on lands in the ceremony of ordination, when the bishop in the Episcopal church, and the ministers in most other churches, place their hands on the head of the person whom they are ordaining, while one prays for a blessing on his labors. The same ceremony is used in other cases.

3. The act of setting on or affixing to; as, the imposition of names. Boyle.

4. That which is imposed; a tax, toll, duty, or excise, laid by authority. Tyrants oppress their subjects with grievous impositions. Milton.

5. Injunction, as of a law or duty.

6. Constraint; oppression; burden.

Let it not be made, contrary to its own nature, the occasion of strife, a narrow spirit, and unreasonable impositions on the mind and practice. Watts.

7. Deception; imposture.

Being acquainted with his hand, I had no reason to suspect an imposition. Smollett.

8. A superstitious exercise enjoined on students as a punishment. England.

"Every penny which whatever on young men in statu pupillari, should be abolished; the proper punishment is employing their minds in some useful imposition." Enormous Expence of Education in Cambridge.

"Literary tasks called impositions, or frequent compulsive attendances on tedious and unimproving exercises in a college hall." T. Warton, Minor Poems of Milton, p. 422.—E. H. B.

IM-POS-SI-BIL-ITY, n. [from impossible.] That which can not be; the state of being not possible to exist. That a thing should be and not be at the same time, is an impossibility.

2. Impracticability; the state or quality of being not feasible or possible to be done. That a man by his own strength should lift a ship of the line, is to him an impossibility, as the means are inadequate to the end. [See IMPOSSIBLE.]

IM-POS-SI-BLE, a. [Fr., from L. impossibilis; in and possibilis, from possum, to be able.]

1. That can not be. It is impossible that two and two should make five, or that a circle and a square should be the same thing, or that a thing should be and not be at the same time.

2. Impracticable; not feasible; that can not be done.

With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible.—Mat. xix.

Without faith it is impossible to please God.—Heb. xi.

There are two kinds of impossibilities, physical and moral. That is a physical impossibility, which is contrary to the law of nature. A thing is said to be morally impossible, when in itself it is possible, but attended with difficulties or circumstances which give it the appearance of being impossible. [See POSSIBLE, PRACTICABLE, and IMPRACTICABLE.] Encyc.

Impossible quantity. See IMAGINARY.

IM-POST, n. [Sp. and It. imposte; Fr. impôt, for impost; L. impositum, impono.]

1. Any tax or tribute imposed by authority; particularly, a duty or tax laid by government on goods imported, and paid or secured by the importer at the time of importation. Imposts are also called customs.

2. In architecture, that part of a pillar in vaults and arches on which the weight of the building rests; or the capital of a pillar or cornice which crowns the pier and supports the first stone or part of an arch. Sinsworth. Ash.

IM-POST'U-MATE, (im-pôst'u-mâte), v. i. [See IMPOSTHUME.] To form an abscess; to gather; to collect pus or purulent matter in any part of an animal body. Arbuthnot.

IM-POST'U-MATE, v. t. To affect with an imposthume or abscess.

IM-POST'U-MATING, pp. Forming into an abscess.

IM-POST'U-MATION, n. The act of forming an abscess; also, an abscess; an imposthume.

IM-POSTHUME, (im-pôst'hüme), n. [This word is a corruption of apostem, L. apostema, Gr. ἀποστήμι, from ἀποστημι, to separate, to withdraw, or to stand off; and σῆμα, to stand.]

An abscess; a collection of pus or purulent matter in any part of an animal body. Encyc.

[This word and its derivatives, being mere corruptions, might well be suffered to pass into oblivion.]

IM-POSTHUME, v. t. The same as IMPOSTHUMATE.

IM-POST'U-TO, n. [Fr. imposteur; Sp. and Port. impostor; It. impostore; from Low L. impostor, from impono. See IMPOSE.]

One who imposes on others; a person who assumes a character for the purpose of deception; a deceiver under a false character. It seems to be yet unsettled whether Perkin Warbeck was an impostor. A religious impostor may be one who assumes the character of a preacher without authority; or one who falsely pretends to an extraordinary commission from Heaven, and terrifies people with denunciations of judgments. Encyc.

IM-POST'U-RAGE, n. Imposition. [Not in use.] Ep. Taylor.

IM-POST'URE, n. [Fr., from L. impostura. See IMPOSE.]

Deception practiced under a false or assumed character; fraud or imposition practiced by a false pretender.

Form new legends, And fill the world with follies and impostures. Irens.

IM-POST'U-R-ED, a. Having the nature of imposture. Bacon. & Fl.

IM-POST'U-R-OUS, a. Deceitful. [Not used.] Bacon. & Fl.

IM-PO-TENCE, } n. [L. impotentia; in and potentia,

IM-PO-TENT-LY, adv. Weakly; without power over the passions.

IM-POUND, v. t. [in and pound. See POUND.]

1. To put, shut, or confine, in a pound or close pen; as, to impound unruly or stray horses, cattle, &c.

2. To confine; to restrain with limits. Bacon.

IM-POUND'ED, pp. Confined in a pound.

IM-POUND'ER, n. One who impounds the beasts of another.

IM-POUND'ING, pp. Confining in a pound; restraining.

IM-POV'ER-ISI, v. t. [Fr. appauvrir, appauverissant, from pauvre, poor; It. impoverire. See POOR.]

1. To make poor; to reduce to poverty or indigence. Idleness and vice are sure to impoverish individuals and families.

2. To exhaust strength, richness, or fertility; as, to impoverish land by frequent cropping.

IM-POV'ER-ISI-ED, (im-pôv'er-ish't), pp. or a. Reduced to poverty; exhausted.

IM-POV'ER-ISI-ER, n. One who makes others poor.

2. That which impairs fertility.

IM-POV'ER-ISI-ING, pp. Making poor; exhausting.

IM-POV'ER-ISI-ING, a. Tending or fitted to reduce to poverty, or to exhaust of fertility. White crops are impoverishing to land.

IM-POV'ER-ISI-LY, adv. So as to impoverish.

In, before l, is changed into il, as in illusion, and before r into ir, as in irregular; and into im before a labial, as in imbitter, immaterial, impatient.

IN, prep. [L. in; Gr. en; Goth. in; Sax. in; Fr. en; Sp. en; It. in; G. in; or ein; D. in; Dan. ind; Sw. in; W. yn; Sans. antu.]

In denotes present or inclosed, surrounded by limits; as, in a house; in a fort; in a city. It denotes a state of being mixed; as, sugar in tea; or combined, as carbonic acid in marble, or latent heat in air. It denotes present in any state; as, in sickness or health. It denotes present in time; as, in that hour or day. The uses of in, however, can not, in all cases, be defined by equivalent words, except by explaining the phrase in which it is used; as, in deed; in fact; in essence; in quality; in reason; in courage; in spirits, &c. A man in spirits or good courage, denotes one who possesses at the time spirits or courage; in reason, is equivalent to with reason; one in ten, denotes one of that number; and we say also one of ten, and one out of ten.

In the name, is used in phrases of invoking, swearing, declaring, praying, &c. In prayer, it denotes by virtue of, or for the sake of. In the name of the people, denotes on their behalf or part; in their stead, or for their sake.

In, in many cases, is equivalent to on. This use of the word is frequent in the Scriptures; as, let fowls multiply in the earth. This use is more frequent in England than in America. We generally use on in all similar phrases, and this is most correct.

In signifies by or through. I am glorified in them.

In a hill, properly denotes under the surface; but in a valley, denotes on the surface of the land.

In that, is sometimes equivalent to because.

Some things they do in that they are men; some things in that they are men misled and blinded with error. Hooker.

In these and similar phrases, that is an antecedent, substitute, or pronoun relating to the subsequent part of the sentence, or the subsequent clause. God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. That is, in the facts stated in the latter clause, for which that is the substitute. Rom. v.

In as much; seeing; seeing that; this being the fact. I will ride for health, inasmuch as I am infirm.

In is often used without the noun to which it properly belongs. I care not who is in, or who is out, that is, in office, or out of office. Come in, that is, into the house or other place. Who has or will come in, that is, into office. A vessel has come in, that is, into port, or has arrived.

To be or keep in with; to be close or near. Keep the ship in with the land.

IN-DICT'ION, n. [Fr., from Low L. indictio, indico.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

2. In chronology, a cycle of fifteen years, instituted by Constantine the Great; originally a period of taxation. Constantine, having reduced the time which the Romans were obliged to serve in the army to fifteen years, imposed a tax or tribute at the end of that term, to pay the troops discharged. This practice introduced the keeping of accounts by this period. But, as it is said, in honor of the great victory of Constantine over Maxentius, Sept. 24, A. D. 312, by which Christianity was more effectually established, the council of Nice ordained that accounts of years should no longer be kept by Olympiads, but that the indiction should be used as the point from which to reckon and date years. This was begun January 1, A. D. 313.

IN-DICT'IVE, a. Proclaimed; declared.

IN-DO'BI-TA-BLE-NESS, n. State of being indubitabile. Ash.

IN-DO'BI-TA-BLY, adv. Undoubtedly; unquestionably; in a manner to remove all doubt. Sprat.

IN-DO'BI-TATE, a. [L. indubitatus.]

Not questioned; evident; certain. [Not used.] Bacon.

IN-DOCE', v. t. [L. induco; in and duco, to lead; Fr. induire; it, induire.]

1. To lead, as by persuasion or argument; to prevail on; to incite; to influence by motives. The emperor could not be induced to take part in the contest.

2. To produce by influence.

As this belief is absolutely necessary for all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To produce; to bring on; to cause; as, a fever induced by extreme fatigue. The revolution in France has induced a change of opinions and of property.

4. To introduce; to bring into view.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first liad. Pope.

5. To offer by way of induction or inference. [Not used.] Brown.

6. In electricity, to transmit an electric influence through a non-conducting medium without any apparent communication of a spark.

IN-DOCE'D, (in-dost'.) pp. Persuaded by motives; influenced; produced; caused.

IN-DOCE'MENT, n. Motive; any thing that leads the mind to will or to act; any argument, reason, or fact, that tends to persuade or influence the mind. The love of ease is an inducement to idleness. The love of money is an inducement to industry in good men, and to the perpetration of crimes in the bad.

2. In law, a statement of facts introducing other material facts.

IN-DOCE'ER, n. He or that which induces, persuades, or influences.

IN-DO-C'I-BLE, a. That may be induced; that may be offered by induction. Brown.

2. That may be caused. Borrows.

IN-DOCT'ING, pp. Leading or moving by reason or arguments; persuading; producing; causing; transmitting electrical influence through a non-conducting medium.

IN-DUCT', v. t. [L. inductus, from induco; in and ducere, to lead.]

1. Literally, to bring in or introduce. Hence.

2. Appropriately, to introduce, as to a benefice or office; to put in actual possession of an ecclesiastical living, or of any other office, with the customary forms and ceremonies. Clerks or parsons are inducted by a mandate from the bishop to the archdeacon, who usually issues a precept to other clergymen to perform the duty. In the United States, certain civil officers, and presidents of colleges, are inducted into office with appropriate ceremonies.

IN-DUCT'ED, pp. Introduced into office with the usual formalities.

IN-DUC'TILE, a. [in and ductile.] Not capable of being drawn into threads, as a metal. [See Ductile.]

IN-DUC'TI-LI-TY, n. The quality of being ductile.

IN-DUCT'ING, pp. Introducing into office with the usual formalities.

IN-DUC'TION, n. [Fr., from L. inductio. See In-ducere.]

1. Literally, a bringing in; introduction; entrance. Hence.

2. The bringing forward of particulars or individual cases, with a view to establish some general conclusion.

3. A kind of argument which infers respecting a whole class what has been ascertained respecting one or more individuals of that class. Whately.

This is the inductive method of Bacon, and is the direct reverse of logical deduction. It ascends from the parts to the whole, and forms, from the general analogy of nature, or special presumptions in the case, conclusions which have greater or less degrees of force, and which may be strengthened or weakened by subsequent experience. It relates to actual existences, as in physical science, or the concerns of life. Deduction descends from the whole to some individual part, its inferences are necessary conclusions according to the laws of thought, being merely the mental recognition of some particular, as included or contained in something general.

4. The inference of some general truth from all the particulars embraced under it, as legitimated by the laws of thought, and abstracted from the conditions of any particular matter. This may be called metaphysical induction, and should be carefully distinguished from the illations of physics, spoken of above.

5. The conclusion or inference drawn from a process of induction.

6. The introduction of a clergyman into a benefice, or giving possession of an ecclesiastical living; or the introduction of a person into an office by the usual forms and ceremonies. Induction is applied to the introduction of officers, only when certain oaths are to be administered or other formalities are to be observed, which are intended to confer authority or give dignity to the transaction. In Great Britain, induction is used for giving possession of ecclesiastical offices. In the United States, it is applied to the formal introduction of civil officers, and the higher officers of colleges.

7. In electricity, an influence exerted by an electrified body through a non-conducting medium, without any apparent communication of a spark. Thus electrical attractions and repulsions may be transmitted by induction through glass, although no spark can pass through such a medium.

8. In old plays, an introductory scene, leading to the main action, as the episode of the Duke and the Tinker, in Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Toone.

IN-EFFI-CI/CIOUS, a. [It and Fr. inefficax; L. inefficax is in and efficax, efficax, to effect; ex and facio, to make.]

Not efficacious; not having power to produce the effect desired, or the proper effect; of inadequate power or force.

Ineffectual, says Johnson, rather denotes an actual failure, and inefficacious, an habitual impotence to any effect. But the distinction is not always observed, nor can it be; for we can not always know whether means are ineffectual, till experiment has proved them ineffectual; nor even then, for we can not be certain that the failure of means to produce an effect is to be attributed to habitual want of power, or to accidental and temporary causes. INEFFICACIOUS is therefore sometimes synonymous with INEFFECTUAL.

IN-EFF-IC-A-CIOUS, adj. Without efficacy or effect.

IN-EFF-IC-A-CIOUS-NESS, n. Want of power to produce the effect, or want of effect.

Not to be done; that can not be accomplished; impracticable.

IN-FECT', v. t. [Fr. infecter; Sp. infectar; It. infectare; L. infectus; in and facio.] In this application of infectio, as in inferior, to deny, we find the radical sense of facio, to make, which is, to thrust, to drive. To infect, is to thrust in; to deny, is to thrust against, that is, to thrust away, to repel. And here we observe the different effects of the prefix in upon the verb.]
1. To taint with disease; to infuse into a healthy body the virus, miasma, or morbid matter of a diseased body, or any pestilential or noxious air or substance by which a disease is produced. Persons in health are infected by the contagion of the plague, of syphilis, of small-pox, of measles, of malignant fevers. In some cases, persons can be infected only by contact, as in syphilis; in most cases, they may be infected without contact with the diseased body.

2. To taint or affect with morbid or noxious matter; as, to infect a lancet; to infect clothing; to infect an apartment.

3. To communicate bad qualities to; to corrupt; to taint by the communication of any thing noxious or pernicious. It is melancholy to see the young infected and corrupted by vicious examples, or the minds of our citizens infected with errors.

4. To contaminate with illegality.

IN-FECT', a. Infected. [Not used.]

IN-FECT'ED, pp. or a. Tainted with noxious matter; corrupted by poisonous exhalations; corrupted by bad qualities communicated.

IN-FECT'ING, n. He or that which infects.

IN-FECT-I-ON, n. [Fr., from L. infectio.]
1. The act or process of infecting.

2. The thing which infects. In medicine, the terms infection and contagion are used as synonymous in a great majority of cases. Different writers proposed and attempted to make a distinction between them, but there has been a great disagreement as to what the distinction should be; and in general no regard is paid to the proposed distinctions.

Infection is used in two acceptations; first, as denoting the effluvia or infectious matter exhaled from the person of one diseased, in which sense it is synonymous with contagion; and secondly, as signifying the act of communication of such morbid effluvia by which diseases are transferred.

3. That which taints, poisons, or corrupts, by communication from one to another; as, the infection of error or of evil example.

4. Contamination by illegality, as in cases of contraband goods.

5. Communication of like qualities.

Mankind are gay or serious by infection.

IN-FEC-TIOUS-NESS, n. Having qualities that may taint, or communicate disease to; as, an infectious fever; infectious clothing, infectious air, infectious miasma.

2. Corrupting; tending to taint by communication; as, infectious vices or manners.

3. Contaminating with illegality; exposing to seizure and forfeiture.

Contraband articles are said to be of an infectious nature.

4. Capable of being communicated by near approach.

Grief, as well as joy, is infectious.

IN-FEC-TIOUS-LY, adv. By infection.

IN-FEC-TIOUS-NESS, n. The quality of being infectious, or capable of communicating disease or taint from one to another.

IN-FEC-TIVE, a. Having the quality of communicating disease or taint from one to another.

IN-STATE', v. t. [in and state.] To act or place; to establish, as in a rank or condition; as, to instatate a person in greatness or in favor. South. Atterbury.

2. To invest. [Obs.]

IN-STAT'ED, pp. Set or placed.

IN-STAT'ING, ppr. Setting or placing.

IN-STAT'U Q'UO, [L.] In the former state or condition.

IN-STAURATE, v. t. [L. instaura.]

To reform; to repair. [Obsolete.]

IN-STAUR-A'TION, n. [Fr., from l. instauratio, instaurare, to renew.]

Renewal; repair; reestablishment; the restoration of a thing to its former state, after decay, lapse, or dilapidation.

IN-STAUR-A'TOR, n. One who renews or restores to a former condition.

IN-STEAD', (in-stéad), a. [A compound of in and stead, place; but stead retains its character of a noun, and is followed by of; instead of, in the same manner as in the stead of.]

Let thistles grow instead of wheat. — Job xxxi.

Abelnon made Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab. — 2 Sam. xvii.

This consideration is instead of a thousand arguments. In this use, instead may be equivalent to equal to.

When instead is used without following, there is an ellipsis, or some words are understood.

IN-STEEP', v. t. [in and steep.] To steep or soak; to drench; to macerate in moisture.

2. To keep under in water.

IN-STEEP'ED, (in-steep't), pp. Steeped; soaked; drenched; lying under water.

IN-STINCT', a. [L. instinctus. See the noun.] Moved; animated; excited; as, instinct with spirit.

Milton.

Betula — instinct with life. Faber.

IN-STING', n. [Fr.; It. instinto, instinto; Sp. and Port. instinto; from l. instinctus, inwardly moved; and instinguo, Gr. στίγω, στιγω (See DISTINGUISH, EXTINGUISH.) The sense of the root is to thrust; hence the compound, instinctus, signifies, properly, thrust in, infixed. See INSTIGATE.]

A certain power or disposition of mind, by which, independent of all instruction or experience, without deliberation, and without having any end in view, animals are unerringly directed to do spontaneously whatever is necessary for the preservation of the individual or the continuation of the kind. Such, in the human species, is the instinct of sucking, exerted immediately after birth, and that of insects in depositing their eggs in situations most favorable for hatching.

Instinct may be defined, the operation of the principle of organized life by the exercise of certain natural powers directed in the present or future good of the individual. Instinct is the general property of the living principle, or the law of organized life in a state of action. Good.

And reason rises o'er instinct as you can,
In this 'tis tied direct, in that 'tis man. Pope.

INSTINCT'ED, a. Impressed as an animating power. Bentley.

INSTINCT'ION, n. Instinct. [Not in use.] Elyot.

INSTINCTIVE, a. Prompted by instinct; spontaneous; acting without reasoning, deliberation, instruction, or experience; determined by natural impulse or propensity. The propensity of bees to form hexagonal cells for holding their honey and their young, must be instinctive.

INSTINCTIVE-LY, adv. By force of instinct; without reasoning, instruction, or experience; by natural impulse.

INSTITUTION, n. [Fr. from L. institutio.]

1. The act of establishing.

2. Establishment; that which is appointed, prescribed, or founded by authority, and intended to be permanent. Thus we speak of the institutions of Moses or Lycurgus. We apply the word institution to laws, rites, and ceremonies, which are enjoined by authority as permanent rules of conduct or of government.

3. An organized society, established either by law or by the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social. We call a college or an academy a literary institution; a Bible society a benevolent or charitable institution; a banking company and an insurance company are commercial institutions.

4. A system of the elements or rules of any art or science. Encyc.

5. Education; instruction.

His learning was not the effect of precept or institution. Bentley.

6. The act or ceremony of investing a clergyman with the spiritual part of a benefice, by which the care of souls is committed to his charge. Blackstone.

INSTITUTIONAL, a. Enjoined; instituted by authority. Dym. Vocabulary.

2. Elementary.

INSTITUTION-ARY, a. Elemental; containing the first principles or doctrines. Brown.

INSTITUTE-TIST, n. A writer of institutes or elementary rules and instructions. Hareey.

INSTITUTE-TIVE, a. That establishes; having the power to establish. Burton.

2. Established; depending on institution. Milton.

INSTITUTE-TOR, n. [L.] The person who establishes; one who enacts laws, rites, and ceremonies, and enjoins the observance of them.

3. The person who founds an order, sect, society, or scheme, for the promotion of a public or social object.

INSTRUMENT, n. [Fr. from L. instrumentum, from instruo, to prepare; that which is prepared.]

1. A tool; that by which work is performed, or any thing is effected; as a knife, a hammer, a saw, a plow, &c. Swords, muskets, and cannon, are instruments of destruction. A telescope is an astronomical instrument.

2. That which is subservient to the execution of a plan or purpose, or to the production of any effect; means used or contributing to an effect; applicable to persons or things. Bad men are often instruments of ruin to others. The distribution of the Scriptures may be the instrument of a vastly extensive reformation in morals and religion.

3. An artificial machine or body constructed for yielding harmonious sounds; as an organ, a harpsichord, a violin, or flute, &c., which are called musical instruments, or instruments of music.

4. In law, a writing containing the terms of a contract, as a deed of conveyance, a grant, a patent, an indenture, &c.; in general, a writing by which some fact is recorded for evidence, or some right conveyed.

5. A person who acts for another, or is employed by another for a special purpose; and if the purpose is dishonorable, the term implies degradation or meanness.

INSTRUMENTAL, a. Conducive, as an instrument or means, to some end; contributing aid; serving to promote or effect an object; helpful. The press has been instrumental in enlarging the bounds of knowledge.

2. Pertaining to instruments; made by instruments; as, instrumental music, distinguished from vocal music, which is made by the human voice.

INSTRUMENTAL-LY, n. Subordinate or auxiliary agency; agency of any thing, as means to an end; as, the instrumentality of second causes.

INSTRUMENTAL-LY, adv. By way or means of an instrument; in the nature of an instrument, as means to an end. South.

2. With instruments of music.

INSTRUMENTAL-NESS, n. Usefulness, as of means to an end; instrumentality. Hammond.

IN-STYLE, v. t. [in and style.] To call; to denominate. [Not used.] Crashaw.

1. The act of breathing on.

2. The act of blowing a substance into a cavity of the body. Core.

INSUIT'A-BLE, a. Unsuitable. [Little used.] Burnet.

INSULAR, } a. [L. insularis, from insula, an

INSULAR-RY, } isle.]

Belonging to an isle; surrounded by water; as, an insular situation.

INSULAR, n. One who dwells in an isle. Berkeley.

INSULAR-LY, n. The state of being insular. Insular in an insular manner.

INSUL-LATE, v. t. [L. insula, an isle.]

1. To place in a detached situation, or in a state to have no communication with surrounding objects.

2. In architecture, to set a column alone, or not contiguous to a wall.

3. In electrical experiments, to place electrified bodies, by means of non-conductors, in such a situation that the electricity is prevented from escaping.

4. To make an isle. [Little used.]

INSUL-LATED, pp. or a. Standing by itself; not being contiguous to other bodies; as, an insulated house or column.

2. In electrical experiments, placed, by means of non-conductors, so that the electricity is prevented from escaping.

INSUL-LATING, ppr. Setting in a detached position.

2. In electrical experiments, placing, by means of non-conductors, so that the electricity is prevented from escaping.

INSUL-LATION, n. The act of insulating; the state of being detached from other objects.

2. In electrical experiments, act of placing electrified bodies, by means of non-conductors, in such a situation that the electricity is prevented from escaping; the state of being thus placed.

INSUL-LATOR, n. In electrical experiments, the substance or body that insulates, or interrupts the communication of electricity to surrounding objects; a non-conductor, or electric. Ed. Encyc.

INSULOUS, a. Abounding in isles.

INSULS'IE, (-insuls'-ie), a. [L. insulsus.] Dull; insipid. [Not used.] Milton.

INSULT, n. [Fr. insulte; L. insultus, from insulto, to leap on; in and salto, to leap.]

1. The act of leaping on. [Little used.] Dryden.

2. Any gross abuse offered to another, either by words or actions; act or speech of insolence or contempt.

The ruthless sneer that insult adds to grief. Swagoe.

INSULT, v. t. [Fr. insultare; It. insultare; Sp. insultar.] L. insulto. [See the noun.]

To treat with gross abuse, insolence, or contempt, by words or actions; as, to call a man a coward or a liar, or to sneer at him, is to insult him.

IN-SULT', v. t. To behave with insolent triumph.

Evelyn.

IN-SU-PER-A-BIL'I-TY, n. [from insuperabilis.] The quality of being insuperable.

IN-SU-PER-A-BLE, a. [L. insuperabilis; in and superabilis, from supero, to overcome or surpass.]

1. That can not be overcome or surmounted; insurmountable; as, insuperable difficulties, objections, or obstacles.

2. That can not be passed over.

And middle nature, how they long to join!

Yet never pass the insuperable line.

Pope.

The latter application is unusual. This word is rarely or never used, in reference to an enemy, in the sense of invincible or unconquerable. We do not say that troops or armies are insuperable; but the word is applied chiefly to difficulties, objections, obstacles, or impediments.

IN-SU-PER-A-BLE-NESS, n. The quality of being insuperable or insurmountable.

IN-SU-PER-A-BLY, adv. In a manner or degree not to be overcome; insurmountably.

Greene.

IN-SU-POR-TA-BLE, a. [Fr. in and supportable.]

1. That can not be supported or borne; as, the weight or burden is insupportable.

2. That can not be borne or endured; insufferable; intolerable. We say of heat or cold, insult, indignity, or disgrace, it is insupportable.

IN-SU-POR-TA-BLE-NESS, n. The quality of being insupportable; insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Sidney.

IN-SU-POR-TA-BLY, adv. In a manner or degree that can not be supported or endured.

Dryden.

IN-SU-PRESS'-'IBLE, a. Not to be suppressed or concealed.

Young.

IN-SU-PRESS'-'IBLY, adv. In a manner or degree that can not be suppressed or concealed.

IN-SU-PRESS'-'IVE, a. Not tending to suppress.

Shak.

IN-SUR-A-BLE, (in-shür'-a-bl), a. [from insure.] That may be insured against loss or damage; proper to be insured.

The French law annuls the latter policy so far as they exceed the insurable interest which remained in the insured at the time of the subscription thereof.

Waltz.

IN-SUR'ANCE, (in-shür'-ans), n. [from insure.] The act of insuring or assuring against loss or damage; or a contract by which one engages for a stipulated consideration or premium per cent. to make up a loss which another may sustain. Insurance is usually made on goods or property exposed to uncommon hazard, or on lives.

2. The premium paid for insuring property or life.

Insurance company; a company or corporation whose business is to insure against loss or damage.

IN-SUR'AN-CER, n. An underwriter. [Not in use.]

R. Blair.

IN-SURE', (in-shür'-e), v. t. [in and sure. The French use assurer.]

1. To make sure or secure; as, to insure safety to any one.

2. To contract or covenant, for a consideration, to secure a person against loss; or to engage to indemnify another for the loss of any specified property, at a certain stipulated rate per cent., called a premium. The property usually insured is such as is exposed to extraordinary hazard. Thus the merchant insures his ship or his cargo, or both, against the dangers of the sea; houses are insured against fire; sometimes hazardous debts are insured, and sometimes lives.

IN-SURE', v. i. To underwrite; to practice making insurance. This company insures at three per cent., or at a low premium.

IN-SUR'ED, (in-shür'-d), pp. or a. Made sure; assured; secured against loss.

IN-SUR'ER, (in-shür'-er), n. One who insures; the person who contracts to pay the losses of another for a premium; an underwriter.

IN-SUR'GENT, a. [L. insurgens; in and surgo, to rise.]

Rising in opposition to lawful civil or political authority; as, insurgent chiefs.

Stephens.

IN-SUR'GENT, n. A person who rises in opposition to civil or political authority; one who openly and actively resists the execution of laws. [See INSURRECTION.]

An INSURGENT differs from a REBEL. The insurgent opposes the execution of a particular law or laws; the rebel attempts to overthrow or change the government, or he revolts, and attempts to place his country under another jurisdiction. All rebels are insurgents, but all insurgents are not rebels.

IN-SUR'ING, (in-shür'-ing), ppr. Making secure; assuring against loss; engaging to indemnify for losses.

IN-SUR-MOUNT'A-BLE, a. [Fr. insurmountable. See SCRAMOUNT.]

1. Insuperable; that can not be surmounted or overcome; as, an insurmountable difficulty, obstacle, or impediment.

2. Not to be surmounted; not to be passed by ascending; as, an insurmountable wall or rampart.

IN-SUR-MOUNT'-'BLY, adv. In a manner or degree that to be overcome.

IN-SUR-REC'TION, n. [L. insurgo; in and surgo, to rise.]

1. A rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state. It is equivalent to SEDITION, except that sedition expresses a less extensive rising of citizens. It differs from REBELLION, for the latter expresses a revolt, or an attempt to overthrow the government, to establish a different one, or to place the country under another jurisdiction. It differs from MUTINY, as it respects the civil or political government; whereas a mutiny is an open opposition to law in the army or navy. Insurrection is, however, used with such latitude as to comprehend either sedition or rebellion.

2. A rising in mass to oppose an enemy. [Little used.]

IN-SUR-REC'TION-AL, a. Pertaining to insurrection; consisting in insurrection.

Am. Rev.

IN-SUR-REC'TION-ARY, a. Pertaining or suitable to insurrection.

Burke.

IN-SUR-REC'TION-IST, n. One who favors insurrection.

IN-SUS-CEPT-I-BIL'I-TY, n. [from insusceptible.] Want of susceptibility, or capacity to feel or perceive.

IN-SUS-CEPT-I-BLE, a. [in and susceptible.] Not susceptible; not capable of being moved, affected, or impressed; as, a limb insusceptible of pain; a heart insusceptible of pity.

2. Not capable of receiving or admitting.

IN-SUS-UR-RATION, n. [L. insusurro.] The act of whispering into something.

IN-TACT', a. Untouched.

IN-TACT'A-BLE, a. [L. intactum; in and tactum, tango, to touch.]

Not perceptible to the touch.

IN-TAG'L-I-A-TED, (in-täl'-yá-ted), a. [See INTAGLIO.] Engraved or stamped on.

IN-TAG'L-IO, (in-täl'-yo), n. [It., from intagliare, to carve; in and tagliare, to cut, Fr. tailleur.] Literally, a cutting or engraving; hence, any thing engraved, or a precious stone with a head or an inscription cut in or hollowed out. It is the opposite of a CAMEO.

Addison.

IN-TANG'I-BLE, e. [in and tangible.] That can not or may not be touched.

Wilkins.

A corporation is an artificial, invisible, intangible being.

Marshall.

IN-TANG'I-BLE-NESS, { n. The quality of being in-

IN-TANG'I-BIL'I-TY, { tangible.

IN-TANG'I-BLY, adv. So as to be intangible.

IN-TAST'A-BLE, a. [in and tastable, taste.] That can not be tasted; that can not affect the organs of taste.

Greene.

IN-TE-GER, n. [L. See ENTIRE.] The whole of any thing; particularly, in arithmetic, a whole number, in contradistinction to a fraction. Thus, in the number 51.7, in decimal arithmetic, 51 is an integer, and 7 a fraction, or seven tenths of a unit.

IN-TEGRAL, a. [Fr., from integrare.] Whole; entire.

A local motion keepeth bodies integral.

Bacon.

2. Making part of a whole, or necessary to make a whole.

3. Not fractional.

4. Uninjured; complete; not defective. Holder.

Integral calculus. See CALCULUS.

Integral molecules; the smallest particles into which a body can be supposed to be divided by mechanical means.

Olmsted.

Whitaker.

IN-TEGRANT, a. Making part of a whole; necessary to constitute an entire thing.

Burke.

Integral parts or particles of bodies, are those into which bodies are reduced by mechanical division, as distinct from elementary or constituent particles.

Branda.

IN-TE-GRATE, v. t. [L. integro.]

To renew; to restore; to perfect; to make a thing entire.

South.

IN-TE-GRATE-D, pp. Made entire.

IN-TE-GRATING, ppr. Making entire.

IN-TE-GRATION, n. The act of making entire.

IN-TEGRI-TY, n. [Fr. intégrité; L. integritas, from integer.]

1. Wholeness; entireness; unbroken state. The constitution of the United States guarantees to each state the integrity of its territories. The contracting parties guaranteed the integrity of the empire.

2. The entire, unimpaired state of any thing, particularly of the mind; moral soundness or purity; incorruptness; uprightness; honesty. Integrity comprehends the whole moral character, but has a special reference to uprightness in mutual dealings, transfers of property, and agencies for others.

The moral grandeur of independent integrity is the sublimest thing in nature, before which the pomp of Eastern magnificence and the splendor of conquest are odious as well as perishable.

Buckminster.

3. Purity; genuine, unadulterated, unimpaired state; as, the integrity of language.

IN-TEG-U-MATION, n. [L. intego, to cover.] That part of physiology which treats of the integuments of animals and plants.

Eneye.

IN-TEG-U-MENT, n. [L. integumentum, intego, to cover; in and tego. See DECO.]

That which naturally invests or covers another thing; but appropriately and chiefly, in anatomy, a covering which invests the body, as the skin, or a membrane that invests a particular part. The skin of seeds and the shells of crustaceous animals are denominated integuments.

Eneye.

IN-TEG-U-MENT'-'ARY, a. Belonging to or composed of integuments.

IN-TEL-LECT, n. [Fr., from L. intellectus, from intellego, to understand. See INTELLEO.]

That faculty of the human soul or mind which receives or comprehends the ideas communicated to it by the senses, or by perception, or by other means; the faculty of thinking; or otherwise called the UNDERSTANDING. IN-TIRE', IN-TIRE'LY. See ENTIRE and its derivatives.

IN'TO, prep. [in and to.] Noting entrance, or a passing from the outside of a thing to its interior parts. It follows verbs expressing motion. Come into the house; go into the church; one stream falls or runs into another. Water enters into the fine vessels of plants.

2. Noting penetration beyond the outside or surface, or access to it. Look into a letter or book; look into an apartment.

3. Noting insertion. Infuse more spirit or animation into the composition.

4. Noting mixture. Put other ingredients into the compound.

5. Noting inclusion. Put these ideas into other words.

6. Noting the passing of a thing from one form or state to another. Compound substances may be resolved into others which are more simple; ice is convertible into water, and water into vapor. Men are more easily drawn than forced into compliance. We reduce many distinct substances into one mass. We are led by evidence into belief of truth. Men are often enticed into the commission of crimes. Children are sometimes frightened into fits, and we are all liable to be seduced into error and folly.

IN-TOL'ER-A-BLE, a. [Fr., from L. intolerabilis, tolero, to bear.]

1. Not to be borne; to that can not be endured; as, intolerable pain; intolerable heat or cold; an intolerable burden.

IN-VENTION, n. [Fr., from L. inventio.] [See IN-VENT'.]

1. The action or operation of finding out something new; the contrivance of that which did not before exist; as, the invention of logarithms; the invention of the art of printing; the invention of the organ. INVENTION differs from DISCOVERY. INVENTION is applied to the contrivance and production of something that did not before exist. DISCOVERY brings to light that which existed before, but which was not known. We are indebted to invention for the thermometer and barometer. We are indebted to discovery for the knowledge of the isles in the Pacific Ocean, and for the knowledge of galvanism, and many species of earth not formerly known. This distinction is important, though not always observed.

2. That which is invented. The cotton gin is the invention of Whitney; the steamboat is the invention of Fulton. The Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian orders are said to be inventions of the Greeks; the Tuscan and Composite are inventions of the Latins.

3. Forgery; fiction. Fables are the inventions of ingenious men.

4. In painting, the finding or choice of the objects which are to enter into the composition of the piece. Encyc.

IODIC, a. Iodic acid is an acid compound consisting of iodine oxygenized to the highest point.
IODID, n. A non-acid compound of iodine with a metal or other substance.
IODINE, n. [Gr. iodes, resembling a violet.]
 In chemistry, a peculiar substance discovered by Courtois, a manufacturer of saltpeter in Paris. It is obtained from certain sea-weeds or marine plants. At the ordinary temperature of the atmosphere, it is a solid, apparently a simple substance, at least hitherto undecomposed. It is incombinable, but, in combining with several bodies, it exhibits the phenomena of combustion; hence it has been considered a supporter of combustion. Like chlorine, it destroys vegetable colors, but with less energy. Its color is bluish-black or grayish-black, of a metallic luster. It is often in scales, resembling those of micaceous iron ore; sometimes in brilliant rhomboidal plates, or in elongated octahedrons. Its taste is acrid, and it is somewhat poisonous. It is fusible at 225° of Fahrenheit. The color of its vapor is a beautiful violet, whence its name. Henry. Ure.
IODOUS, a. Iodous acid is a compound of iodine and oxygen, containing less of the latter than iodic acid.
IODURET, n. A non-acid compound of iodine and a metallic or other base. Synonymous with IODIDE.
IO-LITE, n. [Gr. iou, a violet, and lithos, stone.] A mineral having a glassy appearance, remarkable for presenting a blue or violet-blue color in one direction, and, at right angles with this direction, a yellowish-gray or brownish color. It consists of silica, alumina, and magnesia, with some oxyd of iron. The name dichroite, often applied to this mineral, alludes to its colors, and is from the Greek dis, two, and chroma, color. Dana.
Note.—By the regular principles of pronouncing the Greek iota and the Semicitic jod, this word ought to be pronounced yo-lite.
ION, n. A name given to the elements which appear at the respective poles when a body is subjected to electro-chemical decomposition. Silliman.
IONIC, a. [from Ionis.] The Ionis order, in architecture, is that species of column named from Ionis, in Greece, whose distinguishing feature is the volute of its capital. It is more slender than the Doric and Tuscan, but less slender and less ornamented than the Corinthian and Composite. It is simple, but majestic. Its height is about 15 modules, and that of the entablature four and a half. Encyc. Brande.
 2. The Ionis dialect of the Greek language was the dialect used in Ionis.

 1. A metal, the hardest, most common, and most useful, of all the metals; of a livid whitish color inclined to gray, internally composed, to appearance, of small facets, and susceptible of a fine polish. In this condition of steel, it is so hard and elastic as to be capable of destroying the aggregation of any other metal. Next to tin, it is the lightest of all metallic substances, and next to gold, the most tenacious. It may be hammered into plates, but not into leaves. Its ductility is more considerable. It has the property of magnetism; it is attracted by the lodestone, and will acquire its properties. It is found rarely in native masses; but in ores, unmineralized by difficult substances, it abounds in every part of the earth. Its medicinal qualities are valuable. Fourcroy. Encyc.

IT, pron. [Sax. hit; D. het; G. es; L. id.]
1. A substitute or pronoun of the neuter gender, sometimes called demonstrative, and standing for any thing except males and females. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Prov. iv. Here it is the substitute for heart.
2. It is much used as the nominative case or word to verbs called impersonal; as, it rains; it snows. In this case, there is no determinate thing to which it can be referred.
In other cases, it may be referred to matter, affair, or some other word. Is it come to this?
3. Very often, it is used to introduce a sentence, preceding a verb as a nominative, but referring to a clause or distinct member of the sentence "It is well ascertained that the figure of the earth is an oblate spheroid." What is well ascertained? The answer will show; The figure of the earth is an oblate spheroid; it [that] is well ascertained. Here it represents the clause of the sentence, "the figure of the earth," &c. If the order of the sentence is inverted, the use of it is unperceived. The figure of the earth is an oblate spheroid; that is well ascertained. It, like that, is often a substitute for a sentence or clause of a sentence.
4. It often begins a sentence, when a personal pronoun, or the name of a person, or a masculine noun follows. It is I; be not afraid. It was Judas who betrayed Christ. When a question is asked, it follows the verb; as, who was it that betrayed Christ?
5. It is used also for the state of a person or affair. How is it with our general? Shak.
6. It is used after intransitive verbs very indefinitely, and sometimes ludicrously, but rarely in an elevated style.

JEAL'OUS, (Jel'us), a. [Fr. jaloux; It. geloso.] The Spanish word zeloso, from zelo, zeal; but the Italian word seems to be of distinct origin from zeal, and to belong to Class G.]

1. Suspicious; apprehensive of rivalry; uneasy through fear that another has withdrawn or may withdraw from one the affections of a person he loves, or enjoy some good which he desires to obtain; followed by, and applied both to the object of love and to the rival. We say, a young man is jealous of the woman he loves, or jealous of his rival; a man is jealous of his wife, and the wife of her husband.
2. Suspicious that we do not enjoy the affection or respect of others, or that another is more loved and respected than ourselves.
3. Envious; full of competition. Dryden.
4. Solicitous to defend the honor of; concerned for the character of.

JEAL'OUS-Y, (Jel'us-y), n. [Fr. jalousie; It. gelosia.]
1. That passion or peculiar uneasiness which arises from the fear that a rival may rob us of the affection of one whom we love, or the suspicion that he has already done it; or it is the uneasiness which arises from the fear that another does or will enjoy some advantage which we desire for ourselves. A man's jealousy is excited by the attentions of a rival to his favorite lady; a woman's jealousy is roused by her husband's attentions to another woman; the candidate for office manifests a jealousy of others who seek the same office; the jealousy of a student is awakened by the apprehension that his fellow will bear away the palm of praise. In short, jealousy is awakened by whatever may exalt others, or give them pleasures and advantages which we desire for ourselves. Jealousy is nearly allied to envy; for jealousy, before a good is lost by ourselves, is converted into envy, after it is obtained by others.

Jealousy is the apprehension of superiority. Shenstone.
Whoever had qualities to alarm our jealousy, had excellence to deserve our fondness. Rambler.

2. Suspicious fear or apprehension. Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution or vigilance; an earnest concern or solicitude for the welfare or honor of others. Such was Paul's godly jealousy for the Corinthians.

4. Indignation. God's jealousy signifies his concern for his own character and government, with a holy indignation against those who violate his laws, and offend against his majesty. Ps. lxxix.

JUDGMENT, n. [Fr. jugement.]

1. The act of judging; the act or process of the mind in comparing its ideas, to find their agreement or disagreement, and to ascertain truth; or the process of examining facts and arguments, to ascertain propriety and justice; or the process of examining the relations between one proposition and another.

Locke. Encyc. Johnson.

2. The faculty of the mind by which man is enabled to compare ideas, and ascertain the relations of terms and propositions; as, a man of clear judgment, or sound judgment. The judgment may be biased by prejudice. Judgment supplies the want of certain knowledge.

3. The determination of the mind, formed from comparing the relations of ideas, or the comparison of facts and arguments. In the formation of our judgments, we should be careful to weigh and compare all the facts connected with the subject.

4. In law, the sentence or doom pronounced in any cause, civil or criminal, by the judge or court by which it is tried. Judgment may be rendered on demurrer, on a verdict, on a confession or default, or on a nonsuit. Judgment, though pronounced by the judge or court, is properly the determination or sentence of the law. A pardon may be pleaded in arrest of judgment.

5. The right or power of passing sentence. Shak.

6. Determination; decision.

Let reason govern us in the formation of our judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Anon.

JURIS-PRUDENTIAL, a. Pertaining to jurisprudence. Ward.

JURIST, n. [Fr. juriste; It. giurista; Sp. jurista; from L. jus, juris, law.]

1. A man who professes the science of law; one versed in the law, or more particularly, in the civil law; a civilian. Bacon.

2. One versed in the law of nations, or who writes on the subject.

JUROR, n. [L. jurator; or rather juror, to swear.]

One that serves on a jury; one sworn to deliver the truth on the evidence given him concerning any matter in question or on trial.

JURY, n. [Fr. juré, sworn; L. juro, to swear.]

A number of freeholders, selected in the manner prescribed by law, impaneled and sworn to inquire into and try any matter of fact, and to declare the truth on the evidence given them in the case. Grand juries consist usually of twenty-four freeholders at least, and are summoned to try matters alleged in indictments. Petty juries, consisting usually of twelve men, attend courts to try matters of fact in civil causes, and to decide both the law and the fact in criminal prosecutions. The decision of a petty jury is called a verdict.

In addition to these, there are juries of inquest, which are summoned occasionally in cases of sudden or violent death, to examine into the cause.

JURY-MAN, n. One who is impaneled on a jury or who serves as a juror.

JURY-MAST, n. A mast erected in a ship, to supply the place of one carried away in a tempest or an engagement, &c. The most probable origin of the word jury, in this compound, is that proposed by Thomson, viz., from the Fr. jur, day, quasi jouré, temporary, or from L. jurore, to assist.

K.

K, the eleventh letter of the English alphabet, is borrowed from the Greeks, being the same character as the Greek kappa, answering to the Oriental kaph. It represents a close articulation, formed by pressing the root of the tongue against the upper part of the mouth, with a depression of the lower jaw and opening of the teeth. It is usually denominated a guttural, but is more properly a palatal. Before all the vowels, it has one invariably sound, corresponding with that of c before a, o, and u, as in keel, ken. In monosyllables, it is used after c, as in crack, check, deck, being necessary to exhibit a correct pronunciation in the derivatives, cracked, checked, decked, cracking; for without it, c, before the vowels e and i, would be sounded like s.

Formerly, k was added to e in certain words of Latin origin, as in musick, publik, republick. But in modern practice, k is very properly omitted, being entirely superfluous, and the more properly as it is never written in the derivatives, musical, publication, republican.

K is silent before n, as in know, knife, knee.
As a numeral, K stands for 250; and with a stroke over it, thus, K̄, for 250,000.
This character was not used by the ancient Romans, and rarely in the later ages of their empire. In the place of k, they used c, as in clino, for the Greek καλιω. In the Teutonic dialects, this Greek letter is sometimes represented by k. [See H.]

KYRI-E is a word used at the beginning of all masses. It is sometimes used to denote the movement itself. It is the vocative case of the Greek Κυριε, Lord.

KYRI-O-LOG'IC, a. [G. κυριολογικός; κυριολογία, a discourse consisting of proper words; and λογος, to speak properly.]

Serving perfectly to denote objects by conventional signs or alphabetical characters. [Lefronne.]

The original Greek alphabet of sixteen letters was called kyriologic, because it represented the pure elementary sounds.

L.

The twelfth letter of the English alphabet, is usually denominated a semi-vowel, or a liquid. It represents an imperfect articulation, formed by placing the tip of the tongue against the gum that incloses the roots of the upper teeth; but the sides of the tongue not being in close contact with the roof of the mouth, the breath of course not being entirely intercepted, this articulation is attended with an imperfect sound. The shape of the letter is evidently borrowed from that of the Oriental lamed, or lomad, nearly coinciding with the Samaritan Z.

L has only one sound in English, as in like, canal. At the end of monosyllables, it is often doubled, as in fall, full, tell, bell; but not after diphthongs and digraphs: foal, fool, gravel, goal, foal, &c., being written with a single L.

With some nations, l and r are commutable; as in Greek λίπος, L līnos; λί σκορτα, an escort, Sp. and Port. escorta. Indeed, l and r are letters of the same organ.

By some nations of Celtic origin, l at the beginning of words is aspirated and doubled in writing, as in the W. lled, L latus; llan, a tawa; llaur, a floor; Sp. llana, L clana.

In some words, l is mute, as in half, calf, walk, talk, chalk.

In our mother tongue, the Anglo-Saxon, l is sometimes preceded by k, and aspirated, as in klaf, loaf, kladan, to lade or load; klot, lot; klatan, klonion, to leap, Gr. κλίνο, L clino. In the latter word, the Saxon k represents the Greek κ and Latin c, as it does in many other words.

In English words, the terminating syllable le is unaccented, the e is silent, and l has a feeble sound; as in able, angle, pronoced, eat, eag.

As a numeral, L denotes 50, and with a dash, L, 50,000. As an abbreviation, in accounts, L stands for pound, [L libra, pound.] It is also used for book, or division of a work, [L liber.] In Latin, it stands for Lucine; and L. L. S. for a sesterce, or two libre and a half. [Encyc.]

LA, exclam. [Perhaps corrupted from look; but this is doubtful.] Look; see; behold. [Shak.]

LAMP'REY, n. [Fr. lampreie; Sax. lampreda; G. lamprete; D. lampri; Dan. lampret; Sp. and Port. lamprea; It. lampreda; W. lleiprag; Arm. lampretzean.]

In Arm. lampri signifies to slip or glide. In Welsh, lleiprag is to lick or lap, and lleiprac, to make floppy. If m is casual, which is probable, the Armoric lampra, for lapra, coincides with L. labor, to slip, and most probably the animal is named from slipping. If, however, the sense is taken from licking the rocks, as Camden supposes, it accords with the sense of the technical name of the genus Petronyzon, the rock-sucker.]

The popular name of several species of Petronyzon, a genus of anguilliform fishes, resembling the eel, and moving in water by winding, like the serpent on land. This fish has seven spiracles on each side of the neck, and a fistula or aperture on the top of the head, but no pectoral or ventral fins. It seems to be connected with lingua, to lick; the n is evidently casual, for lingua, in Latin, is a little tongue, and this signifies also a strap or lace, as if the primary sense were to extend.*]

1. Human speech; the expression of ideas by words or significant articulate sounds, for the communication of thoughts. Language consists in the oral utterance of sounds, which usage has made the representatives of ideas. When two or more persons customarily annex the same sounds to the same ideas, the expression of these sounds by one person communicates his ideas to another. This is the primary sense of language, the use of which is to communicate the thoughts of one person to another through the organs of hearing. Articulate sounds are represented by letters, marks, or characters, which form words. Hence language consists also in,

2. Words duly arranged in sentences, written, printed, or engraved, and exhibited to the eye.

3. The speech or expression of ideas peculiar to a particular nation. Men had originally one and the same language; but the tribes or families of men, since their dispersion, have distinct languages.

LAW, n. [Sax. laga, lage, lag, or lah; Sw. lag; Dan. lov; It. legge; Sp. ley; Fr. loi; L. lex; from the root of lay, Sax. leagan, Goth. lagjan. (See LAV.) A law is that which is laid, set, or fixed, like statute, constitution, from L. statua.]

1. A rule, particularly an established or permanent rule, prescribed by the supreme power of a state to its subjects, for regulating their actions, particularly their social actions. Laws are imperative or mandatory, commanding what shall be done; prohibitory, restraining from what is to be forbore; or permissive, declaring what may be done without incurring a penalty. The laws which enjoin the duties of piety and morality are prescribed by God and found in the Scriptures.

2. Municipal law, is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state, commanding what its subjects are to do, and prohibiting what they are to forbear; a statute.

3. Municipal or civil laws are established by the decrees, edicts, or ordinances of absolute princes, as emperors and kings, or by the formal acts of the legislatures of free states. Law, therefore, is sometimes equivalent to DECREE, EDICT, or ORDINANCE.

4. Law of nature, is a rule of conduct arising out of the natural relations of human beings, established by the Creator, and existing prior to any positive precept. Thus it is a law of nature that one man should not injure another, and murder and fraud would be crimes, independent of any prohibition from a supreme power.

5. Laws of animal nature; the inherent principles by which the economy and functions of animal bodies are performed, such as respiration, the circulation of the blood, digestion, nutrition, various secretions, &c.

6. Laws of vegetation; the principles by which plants are produced, and their growth carried on till they arrive to perfection.

7. Physical laws, or laws of nature; the invariable tendency or determination of any species of matter to a particular form with definite properties, and the determination of a body to certain motions, changes, and relations, which uniformly take place in the same circumstances, is called a physical law. These tendencies or determinations, whether called laws or affections of matter, have been established by the Creator, and are, with a peculiar felicity of expression, denominated, in Scripture, ordinances of Heaven.

8. Laws of nations; the rules that regulate the mutual intercourse of nations or states. These rules depend on natural law, or the principles of justice which spring from the social state; or they are founded on customs, compacts, treaties, leagues, and agreements, between independent communities.

By the law of nations, we are to understand that code of public instruction, which defines the rights and prescribes the duties of nations, in their intercourse with each other. Kent.

9. Moral law; a law which prescribes to men their religious and social duties, in other words, their duties to God and to each other. The moral law is summarily contained in the decalogue, or ten commandments, written by the finger of God on two tables of stone, and delivered to Moses on Mount Sinai. Ex. XX.

10. Ecclesiastical law; a rule of action prescribed for the government of a church.

11. Canon law; the body of ecclesiastical Roman law.

12. Written or statute law; a law or rule of action promulgated or enacted by the legislative power, and prescribed and recorded in writing; a written statute, ordinance, edict, or decree.

13. Unwritten or common law; a rule of action which derives its authority from long usage or established custom, which has been immemorably received and recognized by judicial tribunals. As this law can be traced to no positive statutes, its rules or principles are to be found only in the records of courts, and in the reports of judicial decisions.

14. By-law; a law of a city, town, or private corporation. [See BY.]

15. Mosaic law; the institutions of Moses, or the code of laws prescribed to the Jews, as distinguished from the gospel.

16. Ceremonial law; the Mosaic institutions, which prescribe the external rites and ceremonies to be observed by the Jews, as distinct from the moral precepts, which are of perpetual obligation.

16. A rule of direction; a directory; as reason and natural conscience.

These, having not the law, are a law to themselves. — Rom. ii.

17. That which governs or has a tendency to rule; that which has the power of controlling.

But I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. — Rom. vii.

18. The word of God; the doctrines and precepts of God, or his revealed will.

But his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night. — Ps. i.

19. The Old Testament.

Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? — John ii.

20. The institutions of Moses, as distinct from the other parts of the Old Testament; as, the law and the prophets.

21. A rule or axiom of science or art; settled principle; as, the laws of versification or poetry.

22. Law martial, or martial law; the rules ordained for the government of an army or military force.

23. Marine laws; rules for the regulation of navigation and the commercial intercourse of nations.

24. Commercial law, law-merchant; the system of rules by which trade and commercial intercourse are regulated between merchants.

25. Judicial process; prosecution of right in courts of law.

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body.

Hence the phrase to go to law, to prosecute; to seek redress in a legal tribunal.

26. Jurisprudence; as in the title doctor of laws.

27. In general, law is a rule of action prescribed for the government of rational beings or moral agents, to which rule they are bound to yield obedience, in default of which they are exposed to punishment; or law is a certain inherent, instinctive propensity of irrational animals to particular actions; or an invariable determination or tendency of inanimate bodies to certain motions, combinations, and forms.

Law is not a series of actions, but the cause or principle from which they proceed, and of which they are the evidence.

Civil law, Criminal law. See CIVIL and CRIMINAL.

Laws of honor. See HONOR.

Law language; the language used in legal writings and forms, particularly the Norman dialect or Old French, which was used in judicial proceedings from the days of William the Conqueror to the 36th year of Edward III.

Wager of law; a species of trial formerly used in England, in which the defendant gave security that he would, on a certain day, make his law; that is, he would make oath that he owed nothing to the plaintiff, and would produce eleven of his neighbors as compurgators, who should swear that they believed in their consciences that he had sworn the truth.

LESS, for USELESS. [Not in use.]

LESS, a terminating syllable of many nouns and some adjectives, is the Sax. leas, Goth. laus, belonging to the verb lysian, looseyan, to loose, free, separate. Hence it is a privative word, denoting destitution; as, a witless man, a man destitute of wit; childless, without children; fatherless; faithless; pernicious; lawless, &c.

LESS, a. [Sax. leas perhaps allied to Dan. liser, to abate, to lessen, to relieve, to ease. Less has the sense of the comparative degree of little.] Smaller; not so large or great; as, a less quantity or number; a horse of less size or value. We are all destined to suffer affliction in a greater or less degree.

LESS, adv. Not so much; in a smaller or lower degree; as, less bright or loud; less beautiful; less obliging; less careful. The less a man praises himself, the more disposed are others to praise him. Less, n. Not so much. They gathered some more, some less. — Exod. xvi.

2. An inferior. The less is blessed by the better. — Heb. vii.

LESS, v. t. To make less. [Not in use.] Goiter.

LES'SEE', n. [from leasse.] The person to whom a lease is given, or who takes an estate by lease. Blackstone.

LESS'EN, (les'n) v. t. [from less.] To make less; to diminish; to reduce in bulk, size, quantity, number, or amount; to make smaller; as, to lessen a kingdom or its population.

2. To diminish in degree, state, or quality; as, awkward manners tend to lessen our respect for men of merit.
3. To degrade; to reduce in dignity. St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when fil men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury.

LESS'EN, (les'n) v. i. To become less; to shrink; to contract in bulk, quantity, number, or amount; to be diminished. The apparent magnitude of objects lessens as we recede from them.

2. To become less in degree, quality, or intensity; to decrease. The strength of the body, and the vivacity of the temper, usually lessen as we advance in age.

LESS'EN-ED, pp. Made smaller; diminished.

LESS'EN-ING, ppr. Reducing in bulk, amount, or degree; degrading.

LESS'EN'T, a. [Sax. leassa, leasar, from leas. This word is a corruption, but too well established to be discarded.] Less; smaller. Authors always write, the Lesser Asia. By the same reason may a man in a state of nature punish the lesser branches of that law. Locke. God made the lesser light to rule the night. — Gen. i.

LES'SES, n. pl. [Fr. laissés.] The leavings or dung of hens.

LES'SON, (les'son) n. [This word we probably have received from the Fr. leçon, L. lectio, from lego, to read, Fr. lire, lisant; Sp. leccion; It. lezione; Sw. leza; and not from the D. lezenen, G. lesen, to read.]

1. Any thing read or recited to a teacher by a pupil or learner for improvement; or such a portion of a book as a pupil learns and repeats at one time. The instructor is pleased when his pupils recite their lessons with accuracy and promptness.
2. A portion of Scripture read in divine service. Thus endeth the first lesson.

3. A portion of a book or manuscript assigned by a preceptor to a pupil to be learnt, or for an exercise; something to be learnt. Give him his lesson.
4. Precept; doctrine or notion inculcated.

Be not jealous over the wife of thy bosom, and teach her not an evil lesson against herself. Eccles.

5. Severe lecture; reproof; rebuke.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late. Sidney.

6. Tune written for an instrument. Davies.

7. Instruction or truth, taught by experience. The lessons which sickness imparts, she leaves to be practiced when health is established.

LES'SON, (les'n), v. t. To teach; to instruct.

Children should be lesioned into a contempt and detestation of this vice. L'Estrange.

LES'SON-ED, pp. Taught; instructed.

LES'SON-ING, ppr. Teaching.

LES'SOR, n. [from lease.] One who leases; the person who lets to farm, or gives a lease. Blackstone.

LEST, part. [from the Sax. leas, Goth. laus, loose, separate. In Saxon, it was preceded by the, the leas, that less, that not, ne forte. Hence it denotes a losing or separation, and hence it comes to express prevention.]

That not; for fear that.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die. — Gen. iii.

The phrase may be thus explained: Ye shall not touch it; that separated or dismissed, ye die. That here refers to the preceding command or sentence; that being removed, or not observed, the fact being not so, ye will die.

Sin no more, lest a worse thing come to thee. — John v.

Sin no more; that fact not taking place, a worse thing will happen to thee.

LET, v. t.; pret. and pp. LET. LETTER is obsolete. Sax. letan, letan, Goth. letan, to permit, to hinder, to dismiss or send away, to let go, to leave, to admit, to think or suppose, to disseminate, to retard, to be late or slow, to dally or trifle, to lease or let out; letan aeweg, to let away, to throw; W. lutz, hindrance; luxuose, to hinder; D. laaten, to permit, to suffer, to give, to leave, to loose, to put, to stow; G. lassen, to let, to permit, grant, allow, suffer; verlassen, to forsake; unterlassen, to cease, to forbear; Sw. låta, to permit; Dan. lade, to let, permit, allow, grant, suffer, give leave. But in the four latter dialects, there is another verb, which corresponds with let in some of its significations; D. liden, G. leiden, Sw. lida, Dan. liden, to suffer, endure, undergo, to permit. With this verb corresponds the English late, D. laat, Sw. lat, Dan. lad, altho' lazy; and the G. lass, feeble, lazy, coincides with lassen, supra, and this may be the Eng. lazy. To let out, like L. elocare, is to lease, Fr. laisser. Let is the Fr. laisser, in a different dialect. By the German and Welsh, it appears that the latter radical may have originally been th, ts, or tz, or other compound. See Class Ld, No. 2, 15, 19, 23, 32, and Class Ls, No. 30.]

1. To permit; to allow; to suffer; to give leave or power by a positive act, or negatively, to withhold restraint; not to prevent. A leaky ship lets water enter into the hold. Let is followed by the infinitive without the sign to.

Pharaoh said, I will let you go. — Ex. viii.

When the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive. — Act. xviii.

2. To lease; to grant possession and use for a compensation; as, to let a farm; to let an estate for a year; to let a room to lodgers; often followed by out, as, to let out a farm; but the use of out is unnecessary.

3. To suffer; to permit; with the usual sign of the infinitive.

There's a letter for you, sir, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is. (Not used.) Shak.

4. In the imperative mode, let has the following uses. Followed by the first and third persons, it expresses desire or wish; hence it is used in prayer and entreaty to superiors, and to those who have us in their power; as, let me not wander from thy commandments. Ps. cxli.

Followed by the first person plural, let expresses exhortation or entreaty; as, rise, let us go.

Followed by the third person, it implies permission or command addressed to an inferior. Let him go, let them remain, are commands addressed to the second person. Let thou, or let ye, that is, do thou or you permit him to go.

Sometimes let is used to express a command or injunction to a third person. When the signal is given to engage, let every man do his duty.

When applied to things not rational, it implies allowance or concession.

O'er golden sands let rich Pactolus flow. Pope.

5. To retard; to hinder; to impede; to interpose obstructions. 2 Thess. ii.

[This sense is now obsolete, or nearly so.]

To let alone; to leave; to suffer to remain without intermeddling; as, let alone this idle project; let me alone.

To let down; to permit to sink or fall; to lower.

She let them down by a cord through the window. — Josh. ii.

To let loose; to free from restraint; to permit to wander at large.

To let in or into; to permit or suffer to enter; to admit. Open the door, let in my friend. We are not let into the secrets of the cabinet.

2. To insert, as a piece of wood, into a space formed for the purpose.

To let blood; to open a vein and suffer the blood to flow out.

To let out; to suffer to escape, as an animal; to extend or loosen, as a rope or the folds of a garment; also, to lease or let to hire.

To let off; to discharge; to let fly, as an arrow; or cause to explode, as a gun.

To let fly; to send forth or discharge with violence, as an arrow or stone.

LET, v. i. To forbear. [Obs.] Bacon.

LET, n. A retarding; hindrance; obstacle; impediment; delay. [Obsolete, unless in some technical phrases.]

2. One who retards or hinders.

3. One who gives vent; as, a blood-letter.

LET'TER, n. [Fr. lettre; It. lettera; L. littera; W. lythyr.]

1. A mark or character, written, printed, engraved, or painted; used as the representative of a sound, or of an articulation of the human organs of speech. By sounds, and articulations or closures of the organs, are formed syllables and words. Hence a letter is the first element of written language, as a simple sound is the first element of spoken language or speech. As sounds are audible, and communicate ideas to others by the ear, so letters are visible representatives of sounds, and communicate the thoughts of others by means of the eye.

2. A written or printed message; an epistle; a communication made by visible characters from one person to another at a distance.

The style of letters ought to be free, easy, and natural. Walah.

LI-A-BLE, a. [Fr. lier, to bind, L. ligis; Norm. lige, a bond. See LIGGE.]
1. Bound; obliged in law or equity; responsible; answerable. The surety is liable for the debt of his principal. The parent is not liable for debts contracted by a son who is a minor, except for necessities.

This use of liable is now common among lawyers. The phrase is abridged. The surety is liable; that is, bound to pay the debt of his principal.

2. Subject; obnoxious; exposed.

Profoundly secure, yet liable to fall. Milton.

Liable, in this sense, is always applied to evils. We never say, a man is liable to happiness or prosperity, but he is liable to disease, calamities, censure; he is liable to err, to sin, to fall.

LI-A-BLE-NESS, n. The state of being bound or liable. LI-A-BIL-I-TY, n. The office in law or justice; responsibility. The officer wishes to discharge himself from his liability.

2. Exposedness; tendency; a state of being subject; as, the liableness of a man to contract disease in an infected room; a liability to accidents.

LI'AR, n. [from lie.] A person who knowingly utters falsehood; one who declares to another as a fact what he knows to be not true, and with an intention to deceive him. The uttering of falsehood by mistake, and without an intention to deceive, does not constitute one a liar.

2. One who denies Christ. 1 John ii.

LI'ARD, a. Gray. [Obs.] Chaucer.
This old English word is still used in Scotland, with the spelling LIART, or LYART; as, lyart haffits, gray hairs on the temples. Burns.

1. The act of pouring a liquor, usually wine, either on the ground, or on a victim in sacrifice, in honor of some deity. The Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, practiced libation. This was a solemn act and accompanied with prayer. Eneye.

2. The wine or other liquor poured out in honor of a deity. Sillinger Lect. Dryden.

LI'BARD; an obsolete spelling of LEOPARD. Spenser. Milton.

LI'BARD'S-BANE, n. A poisonous plant. L. BELL, n. [L. libellus, a little book, from liber, a book, from the sense of bark, and this from stripping, separating. Hence liber, a book, and liber, free, are the same word. Class Lb, No. 24, 27, 30, 31.]

1. A defamatory writing. [L. libellus, famosus.] Hence, the epithet being omitted, libel expresses the same thing. Any book, pamphlet, writing, or picture, containing representations, maliciously made or published, tending to bring a person into contempt, or expose him to public hatred and derision. The communication of such defamatory writing to a single person, is considered in law a publication.

It is immaterial, with respect to the essence of a libel, whether the matter of it be true or false, since the provocation, and not the falsity, is the thing to be punished criminally. But in a civil action, a libel must appear to be false, as well as scandalous.

Blackstone.

In a more extensive sense, any blasphemous, treasonable, or immoral writing, or picture, made public, is a libel, and punishable by law.

2. In the civil law, and in courts of admiralty, a declaration or charge in writing exhibited in court, particularly against a ship or goods, for violating the laws of trade or of revenue.

LI'BEL, v. t. To defame or expose to public hatred and contempt by a writing or picture; to lampoon.

Some wicked wits have libelled all the fair. Pope.

2. To exhibit a charge against any thing in court, particularly against a ship or goods, for a violation of the laws of trade or of revenue.

LI'BEL, v. i. To spread defamations, written or printed, with against. He libels against the peers of the realm. [Not now in use.]

LI'BEL-ANT, n. One who libels; one who brings a libel or institutes a suit in an admiralty court.

The counsel for the libellant contended they had a right to read the instructions. Cranch, Rep.

LI'BEL-ED, pp. Defamed by a writing or picture made public.

2. Charged or declared against in an admiralty court.

LI'BEL-ER, n. One who libels or defames by writing or pictures; a lampooner.

It is ignorance of ourselves which makes us the libelers of others. Lockminster.

LI'BEL-ING, ppr. Defaming by a published writing or picture.

2. Exhibiting charges against in court.

LI'BEL-OUS, a. Defamatory; containing that which exposes a person to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule; as, a libellous pamphlet or picture.

LI'BER, n. [L.] In botany, the inner, newly-formed bark of a plant.

LI'BER-AL, a. [Fr., from L. liberalis, from liber, free. See LIBER.]
1. Of a free heart; free to give or bestow; not close or contracted; munificent; bountiful; generous; giving largely; as, a liberal donor; the liberal founders of a college or hospital. It expresses less than PROFUS or EXTRAVAGANT.

2. Generous; ample; large; as, a liberal donation; a liberal allowance.

3. Not selfish, narrow, or contracted; catholic; enlarged; embracing other interests than one's own; as, liberal sentiments or views; a liberal mind; liberal policy.

4. General; extensive; embracing literature and the sciences generally; as, a liberal education. This phrase is often, but not necessarily, synonymous with COLLEGIATE; as, a collegiate education.

5. Free; open; candid; as, a liberal communication of thoughts.

6. Large; profuse; as, a liberal discharge of matter by secretions or excretions.

7. Free; not literal or strict; as, a liberal construction of law.

8. Not mean; not low in birth or mind.

9. Licentious; free to excess. Shak.

Liberal arts, as distinguished from mechanical arts, are such as depend more on the exertion of the mind than on the labor of the hands, and regard amusement, curiosity, or intellectual improvement, rather than the necessity of subsistence, or manual skill. Such are grammar, rhetoric, painting, sculpture, architecture, music, &c.

Liberal has of before the thing bestowed, and to before the person or object on which any thing is bestowed; as, to be liberal of praise or censure; liberal to the poor.

LI'BER-AL, n. One who advocates greater freedom from restraint, especially in political institutions. Brande.

LI'BER-AL-HEART'ED, a. Having a generous heart.

1. Munificence; bounty.

That liberality is but east away, which makes us borrow what we can not pay. Denham.

2. A particular set of generosity; a donation; a gratuity. In this sense, it has the plural number. A prudent man is not impoverished by his liberalities.

3. Largeness of mind; catholicism; that comprehensiveness of mind which includes other interests besides its own, and duly estimates in its decisions the value or importance of each. It is evidence of a noble mind to judge of men and things with liberality.

Many treat the gospel with indifference under the name of liberality. J. M. Mason.

4. Candor; impartiality.

LI'BER-AL-IZE, v. t. To render liberal or catholic; to enlarge; to free from narrow views or prejudices; as, to liberalize the mind. Burke. Walsk.

LI'BER-AL-IZ-ED, pp. Freed from narrow views and prejudices; made liberal.

LI'BER-AL-IZ-ING, ppr. Rendering liberal; divesting of narrow views and prejudices.

LI'BER-AL-LY, adv. Bountifully; freely; largely; with munificence.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. — James i.

2. With generous and impartial regard to other interests than our own; with enlarged views; without selfishness or meanness; as, to think or judge liberally of men and their actions.

3. Freely; not strictly; not literally.

LI'BER-AL-MIND'ED, a. Having a liberal mind.

LI'BER-AL-SOUL-ED, a. Having a generous soul.

LI'BER-ATE, v. t. [L. libera, from liber, free; Fr. liberer; it. liberare.]
1. To free; to release from restraint or bondage; to set at liberty; as, to liberate one from dross or imprisonment; to liberate the mind from the shackles of prejudice.

2. destroyer of liberty. Wade.

LI'BER-TIN-AGE, n. Libertinism, which is most used.

LI'BER-TINE, (-tin), n. [L. libertinus, from liber, free.]

1. Among the Romans, a freedman; a person manumitted or set free from legal servitude.

2. One unconfined; one free from restraint. Shak.

3. A man who lives without restraint of the animal passion; one who indulges his lust without restraint; one who leads a dissolute, licentious life; a rake; a debauchee.

LI'BER-TINE, a. Licentious; dissolute; not under the restraint of law or religion; as, libertine principles; a libertine life.

LI'BER-TIN-ISM, n. State of a freedman. [Little used.] Hammond.

2. Licentiousness of opinion and practice; an unrestrained indulgence of lust; debauchery; lewdness. Atterbury.

LI'BER-TY, n. [L. libertas, from liber, free; Fr. liberté; it. libertà; Sp. libertad. Class Lb, No. 24, 27, 30, 31.]

1. Freedom from restraint, in a general sense, and applicable to the body, or to the will or mind. The body is at liberty when not confined; the will or mind is at liberty when not checked or controlled. A man enjoys liberty when no physical force operates to restrain his actions or volitions.

2. Natural liberty consists in the power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, except from the laws of nature. It is a state of exemption from the control of others, and from positive laws, and the institutions of social life. This liberty is abridged by the establishment of government.

3. Civil liberty is the liberty of men in a state of society, or natural liberty, so far only abridged and restrained, as is necessary and expedient for the safety and interest of the society, state, or nation. A restraint of natural liberty, not necessary or expedient for the public, is tyranny or oppression.

Civil liberty is an exemption from the arbitrary will of others, which exemption is secured by established laws, which restrain every man from injuring or controlling another. Hence the restraints of law are essential to civil liberty.

The liberty of one depends not so much on the removal of all restraint from him, as on the due restraint upon the liberty of others. Ames.

In this sentence, the latter word liberty denotes natural liberty.

4. Political liberty is sometimes used as synonymous with civil liberty. But it more properly designates the liberty of a nation, the freedom of a nation or state from all unjust abridgment of its rights and independence by another nation. Hence we often speak of the political liberties of Europe, or the nations of Europe.

5. Religious liberty is the free right of adopting and enjoying opinions on religious subjects, and of worshipping the Supreme Being according to the dictates of conscience, without external control.

6. Liberty, in metaphysics, as opposed to necessity, is the power of an agent to do or forbear any particular action, according to the determination or thought of the mind, by which either is preferred to the other. Locke.

Freedom of the will; exemption from compulsion or restraint in willing or volition.

7. Privilege; exemption; immunity enjoyed by prescription or by grant; with a plural. Thus we speak of the liberties of the commercial cities of Europe.

8. Leave; permission granted. The witness obtained liberty to leave the court.

9. A space in which one is permitted to pass without restraint, and beyond which he may not lawfully pass; with a plural; as, the liberties of a prison.

10. Freedom of action or speech beyond the ordinary bounds of civility or decorum. Females should repel all improper liberties.

To take the liberty to do, or say any thing, to use freedom not specially granted.

To set at liberty; to deliver from confinement; to release from restraint.

To be at liberty; to be free from restraint.

Liberty of the press, is freedom from any restriction on the power to publish books; the free power of publishing what one pleases, subject only to punishment for abusing the privilege, or publishing what is mischievous to the public or injurious to individuals.

Blackstone.

shave, to make smooth; Chal. khalaka, to measure, to form, to create, to make smooth and equable, to be beautiful; derivatives, creature, man, people. We see the radical sense is, smooth, or rather, to make even, equal, smooth; hence, like, likeness, and a body. We have here an instance of the radical sense of man and body, almost exactly analogous to that of Adam, from אדם, to make equal, to be like.]

LICHEN, (*l'*ken or *l'*ich'en), n. [L., from Gr. λειχην.]

1. In botany, the name for an extensive division of cryptogamous plants, constituting a genus in the order of Alge, in the Linnæan system, but now forming a distinct natural order. They appear in the form of thin, flat crusts, covering rocks and the bark of trees, or in foliaceous expansions, or branched like a shrub in miniature, or sometimes only as a gelatinous mass or a powdery substance. They are called rack-moss and tree-moss, and some of the liverworts are of this order. They also include the Iceland moss and the reindeer moss; but they are entirely distinct from the true mosses, (Musci). Ed. Encyc.

2. In medicine, a popular cutaneous eruption, consisting of diffuse red pimples, which are attended with a troublesome sense of tingling and pricking. A common variety of this affection resembles the effect of stinging with nettles, and is called nettle-lichen.

LICK, n. In America, a place where beasts of the forest lick for salt, at salt springs.

LICK, n. [W. lag, a lick, a slap, a ray, a blade; Ugarian, to lick, to shoot out, to throw or lay about, to cudgel. Qu. the root of flog and slay, to strike. See licka, to lank, for in D. the verb signifies also to make sleek or smooth, and in G. to lick, which unites the word with lick, and perhaps with like. In Sax. liccra is a glutton, and this is the Italian lecco, a glutton, a lecher; leccarda, greedy; leccare, to lick. The Aria has licker, lickerish. The phrase, the mouth waters for a thing, may throw light on this word, and if the first syllable of delight, delicious, and delicate, is a prefix, these are of the same family, as may be the Gr. λυκος, ewet. The senses of water, smooth, sweet, are allied; liceness is often connected with smoothness, in radical sense, and sleek is probably from the root of lick, like.]

1. Nice in the choice of food; dainty; as, a lickerish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager to taste or enjoy; having a keen relish. Sidney. Dryden. Locke. Milton.

LIGHT, (lite,) n. [Sax. leoht, lit; D. and G. licht; L. lux, light, and lucco, to shine; Port. and Sp. luz, light; W. lluz, tending to break out or open, or to shoot, to gleam, and as a noun, a breaking out in blotches, a gleam, indistinct light; lluz, that is apt to break out, that is bright, a tumor, an eruption; lluz, to make bright, to clear, to break out, to appear in spots; lluz, a darting, sudden throw, glance, flash; lluziau, to throw, to fling, to pelt; lluzed, a gleam, lightning. This word furnishes a full and distinct explanation of the original sense of light, to throw, dart, shoot, or break forth; and it accords with Eng. luck, both in elements and radical sense. Class. Lg. No. 6, 7, 23, 24.]

L The agent which produces vision. The phenomena of light may be explained, either on the supposition that light is a material fluid of extreme subtilty, emanating in particles from a lambous body, or that it is produced by the undulations of an independent medium, set in motion by the luminous body. The former supposition is called the theory of emanations; the latter, the theory of undulations. White light is a compound of seven different colors, viz., red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. The sun is the principal source of light in the solar system; but light is also emitted from bodies ignited, or in combustion, and is reflected from enlightened bodies, as the moon. Light is also emitted from various substances, which are hence said to be phosphorescent. It is usually united with heat, but it exists also independent of it.
Olmosted. Nicholson.

2. That flood of luminous rays which flows from the sun and constitutes day.
 God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. — Gen. l.

3. Day; the dawn of day.
 The murderer, rising with the light, killeth this poor and needy. — Job xxiv.

LIKE, a. [Sax. lic, gelic, Goth. leiks, D. lyk, gelyk, G. gleich, Sw. lik, Dan. lig, lige, like, plain, even, equal, smooth. The sense of like, similar, is even, smooth, equal; but this sense may be from laying, pressing; and hence this word may be allied to the Eth. ἄλλο lakeo, to stamp, seal, impress, whence its derivative, an image; or the sense be taken from rubbing or shaving. We observe that like has also the sense of please; to like is, to be pleased. Now, if p in L. placebo is a prefix, the latter may be formed on the root of like. And if de is a prefix in delight, delecto, delectious, delicate, these may be of the same family. Like is evidently from the same root as the Ch.

and Heb. פָּלַח, Ar. حَلَل cholaha, to be or make smooth. Qu. Gr. ἄλλικος, ἄλλικτα. See LICK and LICKENESS.]

1. Equal in quantity, quality, or degree; as, a territory of like extent with another; men of like excellence.

2. Similar; resembling; having resemblance. More clergymen were impoverished by the late war than ever in the like space before. Sprat.

3. Equal in quantity, quality, or degree; as, a territory of like extent with another; men of like excellence.

More clergymen were impoverished by the late war than ever in the like space before. Sprat.

2. Similar; resembling; having resemblance.

Ellijah was a man subject to like passions as we are. — James v. Why might not other planets have been created for like uses with the earth, each for its own inhabitants? Bentley.

Like is usually followed by to, but it is often omitted.

What city is like to this great city? — Rev. xviii. I saw three unclean spirits like frogs. — Rev. xvi. Among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. — Dan. i.

3. Probable; likely; that is, having the resemblance or appearance of an event; giving reason to expect or believe.

He is like to die of hunger in the place where he is, for there is no more bread. — Jer. xxxviii. Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules. Clarendon.

Like figures, in geometry. See under SIMILAR.

LIKE, n. [Elliptically, for like thing, like event, like person.]

LIKE, v. t. [Sax. licean, lician; Goth. leikan; probably L. placeo, and delecto, with prefixes.]

1. To be pleased with in a moderate degree; to approve. It expresses less than love and delight. We like a plan or design when we approve of it as correct or beneficial. We like the character or conduct of a man when it comports with our view of rectitude. We like food that the taste relishes. We like whatever gives us pleasure.

He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

2. To please; to be agreeable to.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one codicil lease. [Obs.] Bacon.

3. To liken. [Obs.]

LIKE, v. i. To be pleased; to choose.

He may go or say, as he likes. Locke.

2. To like of; to be pleased. [Obs.]

LIKE/LI-HOOD, n. [likely and hood.] Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth or reality. There is little likelihood that an habitual drunkard will become temperate. There is little likelihood that an old offender will be reformed. Prudence directs us not to undertake a design, when there is little or no likelihood of success.

2. Appearance; show; resemblance. [Obs.] Shak.

LIKE/LI-NESS, n. [from likely.] Probability.
2. The qualities that please. [See Likely.]
LIKE/LY, a. [that is, like-like.] Probable; that may be rationally thought or believed to have taken place in time past, or to be true now or hereafter; such as is more reasonable than the contrary. A likely story is one which evidence or the circumstances of the case render probable, and therefore credible.

2. Such as may be liked; pleasing; as, a likely man or woman.

[This use of likely is not obsolete, as Johnson affirms, nor is it vulgar. But the English and their descendants in America differ in the application. The English apply the word to external appearance, and with them likely is equivalent to handsome, well-formed; as, a likely man, a likely horse. In America, the word is also sometimes applied to the endowments of the mind, or to pleasing accomplishments. A likely man is a man of good character and talents, or of good dispositions or accomplishments, that render him pleasing or respectable.]

LIKE/LY, adv. Probably.

While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing important for him to know. Glanville.

LIKE-MIND-ED, a. Having a like disposition or purpose. Rom. xv.

LIK'EN, (lik'n), v. t. [Sw. likena; Dan. ligner.]

To compare; to represent as resembling or similar.

LOAD, (lode, n.) [Sax. lad or lade; W. lwyth. See LOAD.]

1. A burden; that which is laid on or put in any thing for conveyance. Thus we lay a load on a beast or on a man's shoulders, or on a cart or wagon; and we say, a light load, a heavy load. A load, then, is indefinite in quantity or weight. But by usage, in some cases, the word has a more definite signification, and expresses a certain quantity or weight, or as much as is usually carried, or as can be well sustained. Load is seldom used, except by poets, for the cargo of a ship; this is called loading, lading, freight, or cargo.

2. Any heavy burden; a large quantity borne or sustained. A tree may be said to have a load of fruit upon it.

3. That which is borne with pain or difficulty; a grievous weight; encumbrance, in a literal sense.

John lightened of his load

The enormous mass.

In a figurative sense, we say, a load of care or grief; a load of guilt or crimes.

4. Weight or violence of blows.

5. A quantity of food or drink that expresses, or as much as can be borne.

Among viagers, the quantity of nine dishes of ore, each dish being about half a hundred weight.

6. A burden; that which is laid on or put in any thing for conveyance. Thus we lay a load on a beast or on a man's shoulders, or on a cart or wagon; and we say, a light load, a heavy load. LOG'-REEL, n. A reel in the gallery of a ship, on which the log-line is wound. Encyc. Mar. Dict.

LOG'-ARITHM, n. [Fr. logarithme; Gr. λογος, ratio, and αριθμος, number.]
Logarithms are the exponents of a series of powers and roots. Day.
 The logarithm of a number is that exponent of some other number, which renders the power of the latter, denoted by the exponent, equal to the former. Cyc.

When the logarithms form a series in arithmetical progression, the corresponding natural numbers form a series in geometrical progression. Thus,
 Logarithms, 0 1 2 3 4 5
 Natural numbers, 1 10 100 1000 10000 100000

The addition and subtraction of logarithms answer to the multiplication and division of their natural numbers. In like manner, involution is performed by multiplying the logarithm of any number by the number denoting the required power; and evolution, by dividing the logarithm by the number denoting the required root.

Logarithms are the invention of Baron Napier, lord of Merchiston, in Scotland; but the kind now in use were invented by Henry Briggs, professor of geometry in Gresham College, at Oxford. They are extremely useful in abridging the labor of trigonometrical calculations.

LOG-A-RITH-MET'IC, } a. Pertaining to logarithms, consisting of LOG-A-RITH-MET'IC-AL, } logarithms.

LOO-BLY, adv. [See Looer.] Like a looby; in an awkward, clumsy manner.

LOO'BY, n. [W. looby, a tall, lank person, a looby, a lubber, a clumsy fellow; loob, a blockhead, an unwieldy lump.]

An awkward, clumsy fellow; a lubber.

Who could give the looby such airs?

LOOF, n. The after part of a ship's bow, or the part where the planks begin to be incurvated, as they approach the stem.

LOOF, See LOOF, which is the word used.

LOOF'ED, (looft,) a. [See Aloor.] Gone to a distance. [Not used.]

LOOK, v. t. [Sax. loocian; G. lügen; Sans. loch, lokhan. It is perhaps allied to W. lygu, to appear, to shine. (See LIGHT.) The primary sense is to stretch, to extend, to shoot; hence, to direct the eye. We observe its primary sense is nearly the same as that of seek. Hence, to look for is to seek.]

1. To direct the eye toward an object, with the intention of seeing it.

When the object is within sight, look is usually followed by on or at. We look on or at a picture; we look on or at the moon; we can not look on or at the unclouded sun without pain.

At, after look, is not used in our version of the Scriptures. In common usage, at or on is now used indifferently in many cases, and yet in other cases usage has established a preference. In general, on is used in the more solemn forms of expression. Moses was afraid to look on God. The Lord look on you and judge. In these and similar phrases, the use of at would be condemned, as expressing too little solemnity.

In some cases, at seems to be more properly used before very distant objects; but the cases can hardly be defined.

The particular direction of the eye is expressed by various modifying words; as, to look down, to look up, to look back, to look forward, to look from, to look round, to look out, to look under. When the object is not in sight, look is followed by after, or for. Hence, to look after, or look for, is equivalent to seek or search, or to expect.

2. To see; to have the sight or view of.

Fate sees by the lid bigged in a brittle glass, And looks it through, but to it can not pass.

LOOK, n. c. To beat the opponents by winning every trick at the game.

5. Bewildered; perplexed; being in a maze; as, a speaker may be lost in his argument.

6. Alienated; insensible; hardened beyond sensibility or recovery; as, a profligate lost to shame; lost to all sense of honor.

7. Not perceptible to the senses; not visible; as, an isle lost in a fog; a person lost in a crowd.

8. Shipwrecked or foundered; sunk or destroyed; as, a ship lost at sea, or on the rocks.

LOT, n. [Sax. lot, hlot, hlet, hlyt; Goth. hlauts; D. and Fr. lot; Sw. lott; Dan. and Arm. lod; G. lose; It. lotto; Sp. loteria, a lottery. The primary sense is, that which comes, falls, or happens, or a part, a division, or share. The French, from lot, have lotir, to divide; Ara. loda, id, whence lodeca, a co-heir.]

1. That which, in human speech, is called chance, hazard, fortune, but, in strictness of language, is the determination of Providence; as, the land shall be divided by lot. Num. xxvi.

2. That by which the fate or portion of one is determined; that by which an event is committed to chance, that is, to the determination of Providence; as, to cast lots; to draw lots.

The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord.—Prov. xvi.

3. The part, division, or fate, which falls to one by chance, that is, by divine determination.

The second lot came forth to Simon.—Josh. xix.
He was but born to try.
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

4. A distinct portion or parcel; as, a lot of goods; a lot of boards.

5. Proportion or share of taxes; as, to pay scot and lot.

6. In the United States, a piece or division of land perhaps originally assigned by drawing lots, but now any portion, piece, or division. So we say, a man has a lot in Broadway, or in the meadow; he has a lot in the plain, or on the mountain; he has a home-lot, a house-lot, a wood-lot.

The defendants leased a house and lot in the city of New York. Kent. Franklin. Law of Penn.

To cast lots, is to use or throw a die, or some other instrument, by the unforeseen turn or position of which, an event is, by previous agreement, determined.

To draw lots; to determine an event by drawing one thing from a number whose marks are concealed from the drawer, and thus determining an event.

LOT, v. t. To allot; to assign; to distribute; to sort; to catalogue; to portion. Prior.

LÖTE, n. [Gr. λωτος; L. lotus, lotos.]

1. The modern popular name of several plants, more especially of the Zizyphus Lotus of Africa, which is three or four inches high, and produces a fruit about the size of a sloe, with a large stone, which grows on every part of the branches.

2. A little muddy fish, like an eel. Cotgrave.

LOT'I, a. [Sax. lath, Sw. led, Dan. leede, odious, hated. The common orthography is loath, pronounced with a long, but both the orthography and pronunciation originally followed the analogy of cloth, Sax. clath. I have followed Milton, Dryden, Waller, Spenser, and Shakspeare, in the orthography of this word. The verb, also, with the derivatives, was originally spelt without the letter a, and this spelling would be preferable. The primary sense is to thrust, to turn or drive away. See the verb, and Class L4, No. 9, 15.]

1. Literally, hating, detesting; hence, 2. Unwilling; disliking; not inclined; reluctant.

Long doth he stay, as loth to leave the land. Davies.
To pardon willing, and to punish loth. Waller.

LOT'TED, pp. Allotted; assigned; sorted; portioned.

LOT'TER-Y, n. [Fr. loterie; Sp. loteria. See LOT.]

1. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance, or the distribution itself. Lotteries are often authorized by law, but many good men deem them immoral in principle, and almost all men concur in the opinion that their effects are pernicious.

2. Allotment. [Not used.]

LOT'TING, ppr. Assigning; distributing; sorting.

LÖT'US, n. [Gr. λωτος.]

The name of a genus of leguminous plants. The ancients applied the name lotus to the Zizyphus Lotus of Africa, [see LOTE], the Nymphaea Lotus, an Egyptian water plant, and to the several species of the genus Lotus.

LÖUD, a. [Sax. lud, or lud; G. laut; D. liud; Dan. lyd; L. laudo, to praise, and with a prefix, plaudo; W. clod, praise, formed from lod, which signifies what is forcibly uttered; lodi, to reach out; laved, that shoots out, that is productive, also a lad. This is the Ch. Syr. Heb. and Sam. לוד , Eth. ጋለ walad, Ar. وَالِد walada, to bring forth. The primary sense is obvious. LOVABLE, a. Worthy of love; amiable. Sherwood.

LOVAGE, n. An herb of the genus Ligusticum, sometimes cultivated as a potherb. London.

LOVE, (luv), e. a. [Sax. lufan, lufian; D. lueve; G. lubeve; Russ. lubya; L. libes, lubes; Sans. lubh, love, desire. (See LIBE.) The sense is probably to be prompt, free, willing, from leaning, advancing, or drawing forward.]

1. In a general sense, to be pleased with; to regard with affection on account of some qualities which excite pleasing sensations, or desire of gratification. We love a friend on account of some qualities which give us pleasure in his society. We love a man who has done us a favor; in which case gratitude enters into the composition of our affection. We love our parents and our children, on account of their connection with us, and on account of many qualities which please us. We love to retire to a cool shade in summer. We love a warm room in winter. We love to hear an eloquent advocate. The Christian loves his Bible. In short, we love whatever gives us pleasure and delight, whether animal or intellectual; and if our hearts are right, we love God above all things, as the sum of all excellence, and all the attributes which can communicate happiness to intelligent beings. In other words, the Christian loves God with the love of complacency in his attributes, the love of benevolence toward the interests of his kingdom, and the love of gratitude for favors received.

2. To have benevolence or good will for. John iii.

LOVE, v. i. To delight; to take pleasure. Smart.

LOVE, (luv), n. An affection of the mind excited by beauty and worth of any kind, or by the qualities of an object which communicate pleasure, sensual or intellectual. It is opposed to HATRED. Love between the sexes is a compound affection, consisting of esteem, benevolence, and animal desire. Love is excited by pleasing qualities of any kind, as by kindness, benevolence, charity, and by the qualities which render social intercourse agreeable. In the latter case, love is ardent friendship, or a strong attachment springing from good will and esteem, and the pleasure derived from the company, civilities, and kindnesses of others.

Between certain natural relatives, love seems to be in some cases instinctive. Such is the love of a mother for her child, which manifests itself toward an infant, before any particular qualities in the child are unfolded. This affection is apparently as strong in irrational animals as in human beings.

We speak of the love of amusement, the love of books, the love of money, and the love of whatever contributes to our pleasure or supposed profit.

The love of God is the first duty of man, and this springs from just views of his attributes or excellences of character, which afford the highest delight to the sanctified heart. Esteem and reverence constitute ingredients in this affection, and a fear of offending him is its inseparable effect.

2. Courtship; chiefly in the phrase to make love, that is, to court; to woo; to solicit union in marriage.

3. Patriotism; the attachment one has to his native land; as, the love of country.

Under this phraseology, females may be comprehended. So a law restraining man, or every man, from a particular act, comprehends woman and children, if of competent age to be the subjects of law.

8. Man is sometimes opposed to boy or child, and sometimes to beast.

9. One who is master of his mental powers, or who conducts himself with his usual judgment. When a person has lost his senses, or acts without his usual judgment, we say, he is not his own man. Ainsworth.

10. It is sometimes used indefinitely, without reference to a particular individual; any person; one. This is as much as a man can desire.

A man, in an instant, may discover the assertion to be impossible. More.

This word, however, is always used in the singular number, referring to an individual. In this respect it does not answer to the French on, nor to the use of man by our Saxon ancestors. In Saxon, man signifies, they slew; man setts up, they act or fitted out. So in German, man sagt may be rendered, one says, it is said, they say, or people say. So in Danish, man siger, one says, it is said, they say.

11. In popular usage, a husband. Every wife ought to answer for her man. Addison.

12. A movable piece at chess or draughts.

13. In feudal law, a vassal; a liege subject or tenant.

The vassal or tenant, kneeling, ungirt, uncovered and holding up his hands between those of his lord, professed that he had become his man from that day forth, of life, limb, and earthly honor. Blackstone.

MAN-MID/WIFE, n. A man who practices obstetrics.

MAN, v. t. To furnish with men; as, to man the lines of a fort or fortress; to man a ship or a boat; to man the yards; to man the capstan; to man a prize. It is, however, generally understood to signify, to supply with the full complement or with a sufficient number of men.

MAN'LY, adv. With courage like a man.

MAN'-MILL-ER, n. A male maker of millinery.

MAN'NA, n. [Ar. مان mannā, to provide necessities for one's household, to sustain, to feed them; 5 - 3] مونة manakon, provisions for a journey. This seems to be the true original of the word. In Irish, mannā is wheat, bread, or food. Class Mn. No. 3.

1. A substance miraculously furnished as food for the Israelites in their journey through the wilderness of Arabia. Ex. xvi.

Josephus, Ant. R. lib. 1., considers the Hebrew word man to signify scat. In conformity with this idea, the Seventy translate the passage, Ex. xvi. 15. *τις τὸν ἄρτον? what is this? which rendering seems to accord with the following words, "for they knew not what it was." And in the Encyclopedin, the translators are charged with making Moses fall into a plain contradiction. Art. Manna. But Christ and his apostles confirm the common version: "Not as your fathers ate manna, and are dead." Joh. vi. 58. Heb. ix. 4. And we have other evidence, that the present version is correct; for in the same chapter, Moses directed Aaron to "take a pot and put a homer full of manna therein." Now, it would be strange language to say, put a homer full of scat, or scat is it. So also verse 35: "The children of Israel ate manna forty years," &c. In both verses, the Hebrew word is the same as in verse 15.*

2. In the materia medica, the juice of a certain tree of the ash kind, the Fraxinus ornus, or flowering ash, a native of Sicily, Calabria, and other parts of the south of Europe. It is either naturally concreted, or exsiccated, and purified by art. The best manna is in oblong pieces or flakes of a whitish or pale-yellow color, light, friable, and somewhat transparent. It is a mild laxative. Encyc. Hopper.

MAN'NED, pp. Furnished with men; guarded with men; fortified.

MAN'NER, n. [Fr. manière; It. maniera; Sp. manera; Arm. manevell; D. and G. manier; Dan. maneer; Sw. maner.] This word seems to be allied to Fr. manier, Arm. manea, to handle, from Fr. main, Sp. and It. mano, Port. man, L. manus, the hand.]

1. Form; method; way of performing or executing.
Fool thou the manner, and the means prepare. Dryden.

They shall say all manner of evil against you falsely. — Matt. v.

In this application, manner has the sense of a plural word; all sorts or kinds.

4. Certain degree or measure. It is in a manner done already.
The bread is in a manner common. — 1 Sam. xxi.

This sense may also be sometimes defined by sort or fashion; as we say, a thing is done after a sort or fashion, that is, not well, fully, or perfectly.

Augustinus does in a manner confess the charge. Baker.

5. Mien; cast of look; mode.
Air and manner are more expressive than words. Clarendon.

MAN'OR, n. [Fr. manoir, Arm. maner, n country, house, or gentleman's seat; W. maenan, or maenanor, a manor, a district bounded by stones, from maen, a stone. The word in French and Armoric signifies a house, a habitation, as well as a manor; and in this sense, the word would be naturally deducible from L. maneo, to abide. But the etymology in Welsh is not improbably the true one.]
The land belonging to a lord or nobleman, or so much land as a lord or great personage formerly kept in his own hands for the use and subsistence of his family. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site; for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowel.

MAN'OR-HOUSE, } n. The house belonging to a MAN'OR-SEAT, } manor.

MASS, n. [Sax. mass, masse; Fr. messe; It. massa; Sp. masa; D. masse; G. and Dan. messe; Sw. massa; Low L. missa, from mitto, to dismiss. In the ancient churches, the public services at which the catechumens were permitted to be present, were called missa catechumenorum, because at the close of their proclamation was made thus: Ite, missa est, &c. ecclesia.

Then followed the communion service, which was called missa fidelium; and which, under the name of missa, or the mass, still constitutes the principal part of public worship in the Roman Catholic churches. Murdock.

The word signifies, primarily, leisure; cessation from labor, from the L. missus, remissus, like the L. ferias; hence, a feast or holiday. Laws of Alfred, 30. "Be missa dege freolse." De festivitate diei festi. See also Laws of Cnut, Lib. 1, 14, and 2, 42. Hence, Sax. hlafmasse, lemmas, bread-feast, and Martin-mas, Michael-mas, Candlemas, Christmas.]
 The communion service, or the consecration and oblation of the host, in the Roman Catholic churches. Murdock.

High mass, is that which is publicly performed with music; as distinguished from low mass, which is more private, and without music. Encyc. Am.

MAS-SA-CRE, (mas'sa-ker), n. [Fr. massacre; Arm. magzar; It. mazzicare, to beat, from matza, a club, a mace. So mit in English signifies to kill, as well as to beat.]
 1. The murder of an individual, or the slaughter of numbers of human beings, with circumstances of cruelty; the indiscriminate killing of human beings, without authority or necessity, and without forms, civil or military. It differs from assassination, which is a private killing. It differs from carnage, which is rather the effect of slaughter than slaughter itself, and is applied to the authorized destruction of men in battle, or other great destruction of lives by violence. Massacre is sometimes called butchery, from its resemblance to the killing of cattle. If a soldier kills a man in battle in his own defence, it is a lawful act; it is killing, and it is slaughter, but it is not a massacre. Whereas, if a soldier kills an enemy after he has surrendered, it is massacre, a killing without necessity, often without authority, contrary to the usages of nations, and of course with cruelty. The practice of killing prisoners, even when authorized by the commander, is properly massacre; as the authority given proceeds from cruelty. We have all heard of the massacre of the Protestants in France, in the reign of Charles IX.; and frequent instances of barbarous massacre occur in the war between the Turks and Greeks. Shak.
 2. Murder. Shak.

MAS-SA-CRE, v. t. To murder human beings with circumstances of cruelty; to kill men with indiscriminate violence, without authority or necessity, and contrary to the usages of nations; to butcher human beings. Nymphidius endeavored to save himself in a tent, but was pursued and massacred on the spot. Murphy's Travels.

MAS/SER, n. A priest who celebrates mass.

MAS/SE-TER, n. [Gr., from μασσαια, to chew.] A muscle which raises the under jaw, and assists MAS/STI-GOT, } n. [Fr. massicot.] [in chewing.]
MAS/TI-COT, }

Protyd of lead or yellow oxyd of lead, composed of one equivalent of lead and one equivalent of oxygen. Lead exposed to the air while melting is covered with a gray, dusky pellicle. This pellicle, carefully taken off, is reduced, by exposure to the joint action of heat and air, to a greenish-gray powder, inclining to yellow. This oxyd, separated from the grains of lead by sifting, and exposed to a more intense heat, sufficient to make it red hot, assumes a deep yellow color. In this state it is called massicot. Massicot, slowly heated by a moderate fire, takes a beautiful red color, becomes a salt composed of two equivalents of the protyd of lead, and one equivalent of the deutoxyd, and obtains the name of minium. Fourcroy.

Massicot is sometimes used by painters, and it is used as a drier in the composition of ointments and plasters. Encyc.

MAS/SIVE-NESS, } n. [See Mass, MASSIVE.] The

MAS'TER, n. [Fr. maitre, for maister; Russ. master; D. meester; G. meister; Sw. mastare; Dan. master; Arn. mastar; It. and Sp. maestro; L. magister, compounded of the root of magis, major, greater, and the Teutonic stem, Sax. steoran, to steer. (See STEER.) The word, then, signifies a chief director. See MINISTRAS.]

1. A man who rules, governs, or directs, either men or business. A man who owns slaves is their master; he who has servants is their master, he who has apprentices is their master, as he has the government and direction of them. The man who superintends and directs any business, is master, or master workman.

2. The owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing. The master of a house may be the owner, or the occupant, who has a temporary right of governing it.

It would be believed that he rather took the horse for his subject, than his master.

3. A director, head, or chief manager; as, the master of a feast.

4. The owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing. The master of a house may be the owner, or the occupant, who has a temporary right of governing it.

MAT'TER, n. [L. Sp. and It. materia; Fr. matiere; Arn. mater; W. mater, what is produced, occasion, affair, matter; madres, pus, matter; madru, to putrefy or dissolve. Owen deduces mater from mad, what proceeds or advances, a good; mada, to cause to proceed, to render productive; mad, good, beneficial, that is, advancing, progressive. Here we have a clear idea of the radical sense of good, which is, proceeding, advancing. A good is that which advances or promotes; and hence we see the connection between this word mad and matter, pus, both from progressiveness. The original verb is in the Ar. No mada, to extend, to reach or stretch, to be tall, to thrust out, to excrete, to produce pus, to yawn; derivatives, pus, sanies, matter. This verb, in Heb. and Ch., signifies, to measure, and is the same as the L. metior, Gr. metreo. In Syriac, it signifies, to escape.]

1. Substance extracted from living animal bodies; that which is thrown out or discharged in a tumor, boil, or abscess; pus; purulent substance collected in an abscess, the effect of suppuration more or less perfect; as, digested matter; sanious matter.

2. Body; substance extended; that which is visible or tangible; as, earth, wood, stone, air, vapor, water.

3. In a more general and philosophic sense, the substance of which all bodies are constituted.

Matter is usually divided by philosophical writers into three kinds or classes; solid, liquid, and aërial. Solid substances are those whose parts firmly cohere and resist impression, as wood or stone; liquids have free motion among their parts, and easily yield to impression, as water and wine. Aërial substances are elastic fluids, called vapors and gases, as air and oxygen gas.

4. Subject; thing treated; that about which we write or speak; that which employs thought or excites emotion; as, this is matter of praise, of gratitude, or of astonishment.

Son of God, Savior of men, thy name Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milton.

5. The very thing supposed or intended. He grants the thing to have come so very near the matter, that he was escaped. Tillotson.

6. Affair; business; event; thing; course of things. Matters have succeeded well thus far; observe how matters stand; thus the matter rests at present; thus the matter ended.

To help the matter, the alchemists call in many vanities from astrology. Bacon. Some young female seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spectator.

7. Cause of any event, as of any disturbance, or of a disease, or of a difficulty. When a moving machine stops suddenly, we ask, what is the matter? When a person is ill, we ask, what is the matter? When a tumult or quarrel takes place, we ask, what is the matter?

8. Subject of complaint; suit; demand. If the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon. Every great matter they shall bring to thee, but every small matter they shall judge. — Exod. xviii.

9. Import; consequence; importance; moment. A prophet came, and some a poet cry; No matter which, so neither of them lie. Dryden.

10. Space of time; a portion of distance. I have thought to try a small matter. Congreve. A way he goes, a matter of seven miles. L'Estrange.

Upon the matter: considering the whole; taking all things into view. This phrase is now obsolete; but in lieu of it, we sometimes use, upon the whole matter. Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in horse, but were, upon the whole matter, equal in foot. Clarendon.

Matter of record; that which is recorded, or which may be proved by record.

MAT'TER, e. i. To be of importance; to import; used with it, that, or what. This matters not; that matters not; chiefly used in negative phrases; as, what matters it?

MAY, verb. aux.; pret. MOHT. [Sax. magan, to be strong or able, to prevail; D. meijen, or mogen; G. mügen; Russ. mago. The old pret. MOHT is obsolete, but not wholly extinct from our common people. The sense is, to strain or press.
 1. To be possible. We say, a thing may be, or may not be; an event may happen; a thing may be done, if means are not wanting.
 2. To have physical force; to be able.
 Make the most of life you may.
 3. To have moral power; to have liberty, leave, license, or permission; to be permitted; to be allowed. A man may do what the laws permit. He may do what is not against decency, propriety, or good manners. We may not violate the laws or the rules of good breeding. I told the servant he might be absent.
 That mayest be no longer steward. — Luke xvi.
 4. It is used in prayer and petitions to express desire. O, may we never experience the evils we dread. So also is expressions of good will. May you live happily, and be a blessing to your country. It was formerly used for CAN, and its radical sense is the same.
May be, it may be, mayhap, are expressions equivalent to perhaps, by chance, peradventure, that is, it is possible to be.

(See ADMIRABLE and MIRACLE.) A mayor, then, was originally so overseer, and, among country gentlemen, a steward, a kind of domestic bailiff; rendered in the writing of the middle ages villanus. (See Spelman, ad voc.) The derivation of the word from L. major is undoubtedly an error.
 The chief magistrate of a city, who, in London and York, is called lord mayor. The mayor of a city, in America, is the chief judge of the city court, and is assisted, in some cases at least, by two or more aldermen. To the lord mayor of London belong several courts of judicature, as the hustings, court of requests, and court of common council.

MAY/OR-AL-TY, n. The office of a mayor. Bacon.
MAY/OR-ESS, n. The wife of a mayor.

In Gr. μῆδος is wine, as is madja in Sanscrit, and meda in Zend. In Russ. med or meda is honey. If the word signifies primarily liquor in general, it may be allied to Gr. μῆδος, L. mædo, to be wet. But it may have had its name from honey.]
 A fermented liquor consisting of honey and water, sometimes enriched with spices.
MEAD, (meed,) n. [Sax. mead, mædora; G. mead.]
MEAD'OW, (med'ow,) n. malte, a mat, and a meadow; Ir. madh. The sense is, extended or flat, depressed land. It is supposed that this word enters into the name Mediolanum, now Milan, in Italy; that is, mead-land.
 A tract of low land. In America, the word is applied particularly to the low ground on the banks of rivers, consisting of a rich soil or an alluvial soil, whether grass land, pasture, tillage, or wood land; as, the meadows on the banks of the Connecticut. The word, with us, does not necessarily imply wet land. This species of land is called, in the Western States, bottoms, or bottom-land. The word is also used for other low or flat lands, particularly lands appropriated to the culture of grass.
 The word is said to be applied, in Great Britain, to land somewhat watery, but covered with grass.
Meadow means pasture or grass land, usually mown for hay; but more particularly, land too moist for cattle to graze on in winter, without spoiling the sward.
 [Sax. is used chiefly in poetry.]
MEAD'OW-LARK, n. A well-known, beautiful bird. Alauda magna of Wilson, often seen in meadows and open fields in the United States. Its note is clear, but melancholy.

MEAK, (meek,) n. A hook with a long handle.
MEAL, n. [Sax. mel, a part or portion; D. maal; G. mahl; probably from breaking. See the next word.]
 1. A portion of food taken at one time; a repast. It is customary, in the United States, to eat three meals in a day. The principal meal of our ancestors was dinner, at noon.
 2. A part; a fragment; in the word piecemeal.
MEAL, n. [Sax. mealewe, melwe; G. mehl; Sw. mjöl; Dan. and D. meel; G. meklich, menly, mellow; W. mel, bruised, ground, smooth. This word seems to be allied to mill, L. mala, and to L. mollis, Eng. mellow. The radical sense is, probably, to break, comminute, or grind to fine particles, and hence the sense of softness; or the sense of softness may be from yielding or smoothness, and the verb may be from the noun.]
 1. The substance of edible grain ground to fine particles, and not bolted or sifted. Meal primarily includes the bran as well as the flour. Since bolting has been generally practiced, the word meal is not generally applied to the finer part, or flour, at least in the United States, though I believe it is sometimes so used. In New England, meal is now usually applied to ground maize, whether bolted or unbolted, called Indian meal or corn-meal. The words wheat-meal and rye-meal are rarely used, though not wholly extinct; and meal occurs, also, in oatmeal.
 2. Flour; the finer part of pulverized grain. [This sense is now uncommon.]
MEAL, v. t. To sprinkle with meal, or to mix meal with. [Little used.]
MEALINESS, n. The quality of being meal; softness or smoothness to the touch.

 2. Like meal; farinaeous; soft; dry and friable; as, a meal potato; a meal apple.
 3. Overspread with something that resembles meal; as, the meal wings of an insect. Thomson.
MEAL/Y-MOUTH-ED, a. Literally, having a soft mouth; hence, unwilling to tell the truth in plain language; inclined to speak of any thing in softer terms than the truth will warrant. L'Estrange.
MEAL/Y-MOUTH'ED-NESS, n. Inclination to express the truth in soft words, or to disguise the plain fact; reluctance to tell the plain truth.
MEAN, (meen,) a. [Sax. meane, gemane; the latter word signifies common, L. communis. Mean coincides in elements with Sax. manig, many, and the primary sense may be a crowd, like vulgaris, from L. vulgaris. If the primary sense is small, it coincides with Ir. mion, W. mên, or main, Fr. menu, It. meso, L. minor and minus, to diminish; but I think the word belongs to the root of common. See Class Mn, No. 2 and 5.]
 1. Wanting dignity; low in rank or birth; as, a man of mean parentage, mean birth or origin.
 2. Wanting dignity of mind; low-joined; base; destitute of honor; spiritless.

MEAS'URE, (mezhr'ur) n. [Fr. mesure; It. misura; Sp. medida; Arm. mesur or mesur; It. meas; W. mesur and mesur; G. mass, measure, and masson, to measure; D. maat; Sw. matt; Dan. maade, measure, and mode; L. mensura, from mensus, with a casual n, the participle of metior, to measure, Eng. to mete; Gr. metron, propous. With these correspond the Eng. meet, fit, proper, and meet, the verb; Sax. gemaet, meet, fit; meta and metmetta, to meet or meet with, to find, to mete or measure, and to paint. The sense is, to come to, to fall, to happen, and this sense is connected with that of stretching, extending, that is, reaching to; the latter gives the sense of measure. We find in Heb. רז, measure; רז, to meto, to measure.

This word, in Ar. No madia, signifies to stretch or extend, to draw out in length or time; as do other verbs with the same elements, under one of which we find the meta of the Latins. The Ch. מצי signifies, to come to, to arrive, to reach, to be mature, and מצו, in Heb. Ch. and Eth., signifies, to find, to come to. Now, the Saxon verb unites in itself the significations of all three of the Oriental verbs.]

1. The whole extent or dimensions of a thing, including length, breadth, and thickness. The measure thereof is longer than the earth and broader than the sea. — Job xi.

It is applied, also, to length or to breadth separately.

2. That by which extent or dimension is ascertained, either length, breadth, thickness, capacity, or amount; as, a rod or pole is a measure of five yards and a half; an inch, a foot, a yard, are measures of length; a gallon is a measure of capacity. Weights and measures should be uniform. Silver and gold are the common measures of value.

3. A limited or definite quantity; as, a measure of wine or beer.

4. Determined extent or length; limit. Lord, make me to know my end, and the measure of my days. — Ps. xxxix.

5. A rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned. God's goodness is the measure of his providence. More.

6. Proportion; quantity settled. I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet there is such a law. Locke.

7. Full or sufficient quantity. I'll never pause a gain, Till either death hath closed three eyes of mine, Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaks.

8. Extent of power or office. We will not boast of things without our measure. — 2 Cor. x.

MES-MER-IST, n. One who practices or believes in mesmerism.
MES-MER-I-ZA/TION, n. The act of mesmerizing.
MES/MER-IZE, v. t. To affect with a kind of sleep called sleep-waking, a state in which the external senses are closed, while the mind is awake.
MESNE, (meen), a. [Old Fr.] In law, middle; Intervening; as, a mesne lord, that is, a lord who holds land of a superior, but grants a part of it to another person. In this case, he is a tenant to the superior, but lord or superior to the second grantee, and called the mesne lord.
Mesne process; that part of the proceedings in a suit which intervenes between the original process or writ and the final issue, and which issues, pending the suit, on some collateral matter; and sometimes it is understood to be the whole process preceding the execution. Blackstone.
Mesne profits; the income of land received by one who is wrongfully in possession, and which may be recovered by the rightful owner in an action of trespass. Bovier.
MES/O-CO-LON, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and colon.] In anatomy, that part of the mesentery, which, having reached the extremity of the ileum, contracts, and changes its name, or that part of the mesentery to which the colon is attached. Encyc. Hooper.
MES/O-LABE, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and λαβανω, to take.] An instrument employed by the ancients for finding two mean proportionals between two given lines, which were required in the problem of the duplication of the cube. Brande.
MES/OLE, n. A zeolitic mineral allied to meotopye. Dana.
MES-O-LEU/CYS, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and λευκος, white.] A precious stone with a streak of white in the middle. [Obs.] Ash.
MES/O-LITE, n. A mineral of the zeolite family.
MES-O-LOG/A-RITHM, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and λογαριθμ.] A logarithm of the cosines and cotangents. [Obs.] Kepler. Hutton.
MES-ON/E-LAS, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and μελας, black.] A precious stone with a black vein pouring every color in the midst. [Obs.] Ash.
MES/O-SPERM, n. [Gr. mecos and σπερμα.] In botany, a membrane of a seed synonymous with secundine, the second membrane from the surface. Lindley.
MES-O-THO/RAX, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and θωραξ, breast.] In entomology, the middle segment of the thorax in insects. Brande.
MES/O-TYPE, n. [Gr. mecos, middle, and τυπος, form, type.] A zeolitic mineral, occurring in slender crystals, and delicately-radiated concretions, lately subdivided into the species Nitrolite, Scolocite, and Mesole. They consist of silica, alumina, and lime or soda, with 10 to 14 per cent. of water. Nitrolite is a soda Mesotype, and Scolocite a lime Mesotype; Mesole contains both lime and soda. Dana.
MES-PRISE, n. Contempt; a French word. [Not in use.]
MESS, n. [In Fr. mets is a mess of meat, perhaps meat.] In Goth. mes is dish, Ir. meis. In Sax. meat is a table, Sp. mesa, L. mensa. But mets, mess, is probably a different word.
 1. A dish or a quantity of food prepared or set on a table at one time; as, a mess of pottage; a mess of herbs; a mess of broth. Milton. Pope.
 2. A medley; a mixed mass; a quantity.
 3. As much provender or grain as is given to a beast at once.
 4. A number of persons who eat together; among seamen and soldiers.
MESS, v. t. To eat; to feed.

2. To associate at the same table; to eat in company, as seamen.
MESS, v. t. To supply with a mess.
MESS/SAGE, n. [Fr. from L. messus, mitto, to send; Sp. mensaje.] 1. Any notice, word, or communication, written or verbal, sent from one person to another. We send a servant with a verbal or written message.
 The welcome message made, was soon received. Dryden.
 2. An official written communication of facts or opinions sent by a chief magistrate to the two houses of a legislature or other deliberative body. Congress receive a message from the president of the United States at the opening of the session. The governors of some of the States communicate to the legislature by message, others by address.
 3. An official verbal communication from one branch of a legislature to the other.
MESS/ED, (mesht), pp. Associated at the same table.
MES/SEN-GER, n. [Fr. messenger; It. messaggiere; Sp. mensajero.] The correct orthography is MESSENGER.
 1. One who bears a message or an errand; the bearer of a verbal or written communication, notice, or invitation, from one person to another, or to a public body; one who conveys dispatches from one prince or court to another.
 2. A harbinger; a forerunner; he or that which foreshows. Yon gray lines, That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shak.
 3. Messenger; in naval language, a hawser, or small cable, about sixty fathoms long, wound round the capstan, and having its two ends lashed together. Brande.
MES-STAI, n. [Heb. משיח, anointed.] Christ, the anointed; the Savior of the world. I know that when Messiah cometh, who is called Christ, he will tell us all things. Jesus answered her, I that speak to thee am he.—John iv.
MES-STAI-SHIP, n. The character, state, or office of the Savior. Josephus—whose prejudices were against the Messiahship and religion of Jesus. Buckminster.
MES-SI-AN/IC, a. Relating to the Messiah.
MES/SI-EURS, (mesht'ezrs), n. pl. [Fr. pl. of monsieur, my lord.] Sirs; gentlemen; abbreviated to Messas.
MESS/MATE, n. An associate in eating; one who eats ordinarily at the same table.
MES/SU-AGE, (mes'swage), n. [from Old Fr. meson, mesonage, a house, or house room; mesuenges, household.] The French now write maison.
 In law, a dwelling-house and adjoining land, appropriated to the use of the household, including the adjacent buildings. Encyc.
MES-TI-ZO, n. [Sp. mixed.] In Spanish America, the child of a Spaniard or creole and a native Indian. Brande.
MES-YM/N-I-CUM, n. In ancient poetry, a repetition at the end of a stanza.
MET, prct. and pp. of METE.
ME/TAB-A-SIS, n. [Gr. from meta, beyond, and taivo, to go.] In rhetoric, transition; a passing from one thing to another.
ME-TAB/O-LA, n. [Gr. μεταβολη, from meta, beyond, and ballein, a casting.] In medicine, a change of air, time, or disease. [Little used.] Dict.
MET-A-BO/LI-AN, n. [Gr. μεταβολη, a change.] An insect which undergoes a metamorphosis. The metabolians form a sub-class of insects. Brande.
MET-A-CAR/PAL, a. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the metacarpus.
MET-A-CAR/PUS, n. [Gr. μετακαρπιον; meta, beyond, and καρπος, the wrist.] In anatomy, the part of the hand between the wrist and the fingers.
MET/TACH/RO-NISM, n. [Gr. meta, beyond, and χρονος, time.] An error in chronology, by placing an event after its real time.
MET/A-CISM, n. A defect in pronouncing the letter m.
MET/PAGE, n. [from meto.] Measurement of coal; price of measuring.
MET-A-GRAM/MAT-ISM, n. [Gr. meta, beyond, and γραμμα, a letter.] Analogrammatism, or Metagrammatism, is the transposition of the letters of a name into such a connection as to express some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.
MET/AL, (met'ul), n. [Fr. from L. metallum; Gr. μεταλλον; Sw. and G. metall; D. metaal; Dan. metal; Sp. id. It. metallo; Ir. mialtal; W. mettell.] 1. A simple, fixed, shining, opaque body or substance, having a peculiar lustre, known as the metallic lustre, insoluble in water, fusible by heat, and a good conductor of heat and electricity. Many of the metals are also malleable or extensible by the hammer, and some of them extremely ductile. Metals are mostly fossil, sometimes found native or pure, but more generally combined with other matter. Some metals are more malleable than others; and this circumstance gave rise to the distinction of metals and semi-metals—a distinction little regarded at the present day. Recent discoveries have enlarged the list of the metals. Twelve are malleable, viz., platinum, gold, silver, mercury, lead, copper, tin, iron, zinc, palladium, nickel, and cadmium. The following sixteen are not sufficiently tenacious to bear extension by heating; viz., arsenic, antimony, bismuth, cobalt, manganese, tellurium, titanium, columbium, molybden, tungsten, chrome, osmium, iridium, rhodium, uranium, and cerium.

Encyc. Nicholson. Thomson. Phillips. Ure.
To these may be added potassium, sodium, barium, strontium, calcium, lithium, and several others.

2. Courage; spirit; so written, by mistake, for METLE.

3. The broken stone used for covering macadamized roads. [Eng.]

MET-A-LEP'SIS, n. [Gr. μεταληψις, participation; meta, beyond, and λαμβανω, to take.]

In rhetoric, the continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations, or the union of two or more tropes of a different kind in one word, so that several gradations or intervening senses come between the word expressed and the thing intended by it; as, "in one Cesar there are many Mariuses." Here Marius, by a synecdoche or antonomasia, is put for any ambitious, turbulent man, and this, by a metonymy of the cause, for the ill effects of such a temper to the public. [Bailey. Encyc.]

MET-A-LEP'TIC, a. Pertaining to a metalepsis or participation; transitive.

2. Transverse; as, the metaleptic motion of a muscle. [Bailey.]

3. In natural science, denoting the substitution of one substance for another which is displaced or removed. [Dana.]

MET-A-LEP'TIC-AL-LY, adv. By transposition.

MET-TAL'IC, a. [L. metallicus.]

Pertaining to a metal or metals; consisting of metal; partaking of the nature of metals; like a metal; as, a metallic substance; metallic ore; metallic brightness.

MET-AL-LIF'ER-OUS, a. [L. metallum, metal, and fero, to produce.]

Producing metals; yielding metals. [Kirwan.]

ME-TAL'LI-FORM, a. Having the form of metals; like metal. [Kirwan.]

MET'AL-LINE, a. Pertaining to a metal; consisting of metal.

2. Impregnated with metal; as, metalline water. [Bacon.]

MET'AL-LIST, n. A worker in metals, or one skilled in metals. [Morton.]

MET-AL-LI-ZA'TION, n. The act or process of forming into a metal; the operation which gives to a substance its proper metallic properties. [Encyc. Dict.]

MET'AL-LIZE, v. t. To form into metal; to give to a substance its proper metallic properties. [Dict.]

MET'AL-LIZ-ED, pp. Formed into metal.

MET'AL-LIZ-ING, pp. Forming into metal.

MET-AL-LOG'IC-AL-PHY, n. [Gr. μεταλλω, metal, and λογω, description.]

An account of metals, or a treatise on metallic substances. [Dict.]

MET'AL-LOID, n. [metal and Gr. ειδω, to know.]

A name sometimes applied to the metallic bases of the alkalies and earths.

MET-AL-LOID'AL, a. Having a form or appearance like that of a metal.

MET-AL-LUR'GIC, a. [See METALLURGY.] Pertaining to metallurgy, or the art of working metals.

MET'AL-LUR-GIST, n. One whose occupation is to work metals, or to purify, refine, and prepare metals for use.

MET'AL-LUR-GY, n. [Gr. μεταλλω, metal, and εργω, work.]

The art of working metals, comprehending the whole process of separating them from other matters in the ore, smelting, refining, and parting them. Gilding is also a branch of metallurgy. But in a more limited and usual sense, metallurgy is the operation of separating metals from their ores. [Herbert.]

The French include in metallurgy the art of drawing metals from the earth. [Dict.]

MET'AL-MAN, n. A worker in metals; a copper-smith or tinsman.

MET-A-MORPHIC, a. In geology, pertaining to changes which minerals or rocks may have undergone since their original deposition; usually applied to changes which sedimentary rocks have undergone through the influence of heat. [Dana.]

MET-A-MORPH'ISM, n. In geology, the state or quality of being metamorphic. [N. A. Rev.]

MET-A-MORPH'OSE, v. t. [Gr. μεταμορφωω; meta, over, beyond, and μορφη, form.]

To change into a different form; to transform; particularly, to change the form of insects, as from the larva to a winged animal. The ancients pretended that Jupiter was metamorphosed into a bull, and Lycaon into a wolf.

And earth was metamorphosed into man. [Dryden.]

MET-A-MORPH'O-SED, pp. Changed into a different form.

MET-A-MORPH'O-SER, n. One that transforms or changes the shape.

MET-A-MORPH'O-SIC, a. Changing the form; transforming.

MET-A-MORPH'O-SING, pp. Changing the shape.

MET-A-MORPH'O-SIS, n. [Gr.] Change of form or shape; transformation; particularly, a change in the form of being; as, the metamorphosis of an insect from the aurelia or chrysalis state into a winged animal.

2. Any change of form or shape.

MET-A-MORPHOS'TIC-AL, a. Pertaining to or effected by metamorphosis. [Pops.]

MET'A-PHOR, n. [Gr. μεταφορα, from μεταφω, to transfer; meta, over, and φωω, to carry.]

A short similitude; a similitude reduced to a single word; or a word expressing similitude without the signs of comparison. Thus, "that man is a fox," is a metaphor; but "that man is like a fox," is a similitude or comparison. So when I say, "the soldiers were lions in combat," I use a metaphor; but when I say, "the soldiers fought like lions," I use a similitude. In metaphor, the similitude is contained in the name; a man is a fox, means, a man is as crafty as a fox. So we say, a man bridle his anger, that is, restrains it as a bridle restrains a horse. Beauty awakens love of tender passions; opposition fires courage.

MET-A-PHOR'IC, a. Pertaining to metaphor; MET-A-PHOR'IC-AL, a. comprising a metaphor; not literal; as, a metaphorical use of words; a metaphorical expression; a metaphorical sense.

MET-A-PHOR'IC-AL-LY, adv. In a metaphorical manner; not literally.

MET'A-PIOR-IST, n. One that makes metaphors. [Pope.]

MET'A-PHRASE, (met'a-fra-ze), n. [Gr. μεταφρασις; meta, over, according to, or with, and φρασις, phrase.]

A verbal translation; a version or translation of one language into another, word for word; opposed to PARAPHRASE. [Dryden.]

MET'A-PHRAST, n. A person who translates from one language into another, word for word. [Encyc.]

MET-A-PHRAST'IC, a. Close or literal in translation.

MET-A-PHY'SIC, a. [See METAPHYSICS.] Pertaining or relating to metaphysics.

2. According to rules or principles of metaphysics; as, metaphysical reasoning.

3. Preternatural or supernatural. [Not used.]

MET-A-PHY'SIC-AL-LY, adv. In the manner of metaphysical science. [Shak.]

MET-A-PHY-SIT'ICIAN, (met-a-fo-zish'an), n. One who is versed in the science of metaphysics.

MET-A-PHY'SICS, n. [Gr. μετα, after, and φυσικη, physics. It is said that this name was given to the science by Aristotle or his followers, who considered the science of natural bodies, physics, as the first in the order of studies, and the science of mind, or intelligence, to be the second.]

The science of the principles and causes of all things existing; hence, the science of mind or intelligence. This science comprehends ontology, or the science which treats of the nature, essence, and qualities, or attributes of being; cosmology, the science of the world, which treats of the nature and laws of matter and of motion; anthroposophy, which treats of the powers of man, and the motions by which life is produced; psychology, which treats of the intellectual soul; pneumatology, or the science of spirits or angels, &c. Metaphysical theology, called by Leibnitz and others theology, treats of the existence of God, his essence and attributes. These divisions of the science of metaphysics, which prevailed in the ancient schools, are now not much regarded. The natural division of things that exist is into body and mind, things material and immaterial. The former belong to physics, and the latter to the science of metaphysics. [Encyc.]

MET'A-PLASM, n. [Gr. μεταπλασμα, transformation; meta, over, and πλασσω, to form.]

In grammar, a change made in a word by the augmentation, diminution, or immutation, of a syllable or letter.

ME-TAS'TA-SIS, n. [Gr. μεταστασις, mutation; meta, over, and στημι, to place.]

A translation or removal of a disease from one part to another, or such an alteration as is succeeded by a solution. [Coze. Encyc.]

MET-A-TAR'SAL, a. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

MET-A-TAR'SUS, n. [Gr. meta, beyond, and ταρπος, tarsus.]

The middle of the foot, or part between the ankle and the toes. [Coze.]

ME-TATHI'E-SIS, n. pl. METATHESSES. [Gr. μεταθησις; meta, over, and τιθημι, to set.]

1. Transposition; a figure by which the letters or syllables of a word are transposed; as pistria for pistis. [Encyc.]

2. In medicine, a change or removal of a morbid cause, without expulsion. [Coze. Encyc.]

MET-A-THO'RAX, n. [Gr. meta, after, and θωραξ, breast.]

In entomology, the last or posterior segment of the thorax in insects. [Brande.]

MET'A-TOME, n. [L. metatus, measured.]

In architecture, the space between one dentil, or denticle, and another. [Elmes.]

MET'AYER, n. [Fr.] In France and Italy, a farmer holding land on condition of yielding half the produce to the proprietor, from whom he receives stock and tools. [Brande.]

METE, v. t. [Sax. metan, ametan, gemetan; D. meten; G. messen; Sw. meta; Sp. medir; L. metior; Gr. μετροω; W. medraw; Ch. and Heb. צר, to measure;]

Ar. مدا madda, to extend. See MEASURE, and Class Md, No. 2.]

To measure; to ascertain quantity, dimensions, or capacity, by any rule or standard. [Obsolete.]

METE, n. [Sax. mita.]

Measure; limit; boundary; used chiefly in the plural, in the phrase metes and bounds.

MET'ED, pp. Measured.

ME-TEMP-SY-CHOSE, v. t. To translate from one body to another, as the soul. [Gr. μεταφωρισις; meta, beyond, and φωρωσις, animation, life; φωρω, to animate.]

Transmigration; the passing of the soul of a man after death into some other animal body. Pythagoras and his followers held that after death the souls of men pass into other bodies; and this doctrine still prevails in some parts of Asia, particularly in India and China. [Encyc.]

MET-EMP'TO'SIS, n. [Gr. meta, after, tv, in, and πτωω, to fall.]

In chronology, the solar equinox necessary to prevent the new moon from happening a day too late, or the suppression of the bissextile once in 134 years. The opposite to this is the PROCLEPTOSIS, or the addition of a day every 330 years, and another every 2400 years. [Brande.]

METE-OR, n. [Gr. μετεωρος, sublime, lofty.]

1. In a general sense, a body that flies or floats in the air, and in this sense it includes clouds, rain, hail, snow, &c. [Burke.]

But in a restricted sense, in which it is commonly understood,

2. A fiery or luminous body or appearance flying or floating in the atmosphere, or in a more elevated region. We give this name to the brilliant globes or masses of matter which are occasionally seen moving rapidly through our atmosphere, and which throw off, with loud explosions, fragments that reach the earth, and are called falling stars. We call by the same name those fire-balls which are usually denominated falling stars or shooting stars; also, the lights which appear over moist grounds and grave-yards, called ignis fatui.

And, meteor-like, flame lawless through the sky. [Pope.]

3. Figuratively, any thing that transiently dazzles or strikes with wonder. [Smart.]

METE-OR'IC, a. Pertaining to meteors; consisting of meteors.

2. Proceeding from a meteor; as, meteoric stones. Meteoric iron; iron in the metallic state, as found in meteors.

Meteoric showers: periodical exhibitions of shooting stars, occurring about the 9th of August and 13th of November, and more rarely in April and December. [Olmeted.]

METE-OR-ITE, n. A solid substance or body falling from the high regions of the atmosphere. [Mantell.]

METE-OR-IZE, v. i. To ascend in vapors. [Not used.]

METE-OR-O-LITE, n. A meteoric stone; a stone or solid compound of earthy and metallic matter, which falls to the earth after the explosion of a luminous meteor or fire-ball; called also AROLITE.

METE-OR-O-LOG'IC, a. Pertaining to the at-

METE-OR-O-LOG'IC-AL, a. mosphere and its phenomena. A meteorological table or register is an account of the state of the air and its temperature, weight, dryness, or moisture, winds, &c., ascertained by the barometer, thermometer, hygrometer, anemometer, and other meteorological instruments.

METE-OR-OL'O-GIST, n. A person skilled in meteorology.

METE-OR-OL'O-GY, n. [Gr. μετεωρος, lofty, and λογω, discourse.]

The science which treats of the atmosphere and its phenomena, particularly in its relation to heat and moisture. [Olmeted.]

METE-OR-O-MAN-CY, n. [Gr. μετεωρον, a meteor, and μαντις, divination.]

A species of divination by meteors, chiefly by thungenerally more or less transparent, and is used like glass for lanterns, and for the doors of stoves. There are three or four species of mica, differing in composition and crystalline form, called hexagonal mica, oblique or common mica, rhombic mica, litia mica. This last is of a lilac color, and is also called lepidolite.

Mica is an essential constituent of granite, gneiss, and mica slate.

MICA-SCHIST, n. A schistose rock consisting of mica and quartz.

MICA-SLATE, n. A mica and quartz.

MIC-ACCEOUS, (-shus), a. Pertaining to or containing mica; resembling mica, or partaking of its properties.

MIC-A-REL, n. A species of argillaceous earth; a mineral of a brownish or blackish-red color, commonly crystallized in rhomboidal prisms, or in prisms of six sides.

MICE, n. pl. of Mouse.

MICHAELITE, n. A sub-variety of silicious sinter, found in the Isle of St. Michael. J. W. Webster.

MICHAEL-MAS, n. The feast of St. Michael, a festival of the Roman Catholic church, celebrated September 29th; hence,

1. In colloquial language, autumn.

MICHE, (nich), v. t. [Imlid, perhaps, to Sw. maka, to withdraw; Sax. smagan, to creep. Μικχηνικον or Μεσσηνικον is still used by some of our common people in the sense of mean, cowardly, retiring.]

1. To lie hid; to skulk; to retire or shrink from view.

2. To pilfer. [Obs.]

MICHER, n. One who skulks, or creeps out of sight; a thief. [Obs.]

MICHER-Y, n. Theft; cheating. [Obs.]

MICHPING, ppr. or a. Retiring; skulking; creeping from sight; mean; cowardly. [Ylugar.]

MICKLE, a. [Sax. micel, muel; Scot. myche, meky, muckle; Sw. mycken; Sp. muelo; Gr. μεγας, μεγαλη. See Micu.]

Much; great. [Obsolete, but retained in the Scottish language.]

MICO, n. A small South American monkey, with hair shining and entirely white, the tail black, and the face and hands of a deep flesh-color. Jardine.

MICRO-COSM, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and κοσμος, world.]

Literally, the little world; but used for man, supposed to be an epitome of the universe or great world.

Microcosmic salt; a triple salt of soda, ammonia, and phosphoric acid, originally obtained from urine.

MICRO-COS-MIC-AL, a. Pertaining to the microcosm.

MICRO-COS-MOG-RA-PHY, n. [Gr. μικρος, κοσμος, and γραφω, to describe.]

The description of man as a little world.

MICRO-COS-TIC, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and ακωωω, to hear.]

An instrument to augment small sounds, and assist in hearing.

MICRO-GR-APHY, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and γραφω, to describe.]

The description of objects too small to be discerned without the aid of a microscope.

MICROME-TER, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and μετρον, measure.]

An instrument for measuring small objects or spaces, by the help of which, the apparent magnitude of objects viewed through the microscope or telescope is measured with great exactness.

MICRO-MET-RIC-AL, a. Belonging to the micrometer; made by the micrometer.

MICRO-PHONE, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and φωνη, sound.]

An instrument to augment small sounds; a microcosmic.

MICRO-PSLE, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and ψλη, mouth.]

In botany, the mouth of the foramen of an ovulum.

MICRO-SCOPE, n. [Gr. μικρος, small, and σκοπεω, to view.]

An optical instrument, consisting of lenses or mirrors, which magnify objects, and thus render visible minute objects, which can not be seen by the naked eye, or enlarge the apparent magnitude of small visible bodies.

MICRO-SCOPTIC, a. Made by the aid of a microscope.

MICRO-SCOPIC-AL, a. croscopic; as, microscopic observation.

2. Assisted by a microscope.

3. Resembling a microscope; capable of seeing small objects.

4. Very small; visible only by the aid of a microscope; as, a microscopic insect.

MICRO-SCOPIC-AL-LY, adv. By the microscope; with minute inspection.

MICRO-SCOPIC, n. One skilled in microscopy.

MICRO-CO-PY, n. The use of the microscope.

MICRO-TINE, (-tin), a. [Gr. μικρος, small.]

Having or consisting of small crystals. Shepard.

MIC-TU-RIT-TION, (-rish'un), n. [L. micturio.]

The desire of making water, or passing the urine.

MID, a. [Sax. midd, midds; L. medius; W. mid, an inclosure.]

1. Middle; at equal distance from extremes; as, the mid hour of night.

2. Intervening.

No more the mountain larks, while Daphne sings, Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.

MID-A, n. [Gr. midas.]

A worm, or the bean-fly.

MID-AGE, n. The middle of life, or persons of that age.

MID-COURSE, n. The middle of the course or way.

MID-DAY, a. Being at noon; meridional; as, the midday sun.

MID-DAY, n. The middle of the day; noon.

MID-DEN, (mid'dn), n. A dunghill.

MID-DEST, a. superl. of Mid.

Among the middest crowd. [Not used.]

MID-DLE, (mid'dl), a. [Sax. middel; D. middel; G. mittel; Dan. middel; perhaps mid and deel; Sans. medhi and madhyam; L. medius; Gr. μεσος; It. mezzo; Sp. medio; Port. mayo, mediano; Ir. madham, muadh; Fr. midi, maye, [mitan, obs.]; Ch. yoo.]

This word has the elements of the Sax. mid, D. medel, Sw. and Dan. mede, G. mit, with Gr. μεσος, which is from the root of the English meet, which see. Qu. has not the L. medius, in the phrase medius fidius, the sense of with or by; by or with my faith. In W. mid signifies an inclosure, a hem or list round a place. In Rusa. mejda signifies among. See Class Ms, No. 21, 27.

1. Equally distant from the extremes; as, the middle point of a line or circle; the middle station of life; the middle path or course is most safe.

2. Intermediate; intervening.

Will, seeking good, finds many middle ends. Davies.

MIN'XON, } n. [Fr. voeux, small.]

MIN'XON, }
 A name applied to several species of very small fresh-water fish, and even to the young of larger kinds. The minnow of England, from which the term is derived, is a species of the Cyprinus of Linnæus, Leuciscus phoxinus of Cuvier. Encyc. Zner. P. Cye.

MIN'XON, a. [L.; the comparative degree of a word not found in that language, but existing in the Celtic dialects, V. main, Ar. mana, Ir. min, mion, the root of L. minuo, to diminish. See MINXON.]
 1. Less; smaller; sometimes applied to the bulk or magnitude of a single object; more generally, to amount, degree, or importance. We say, the minor divisions of a body, the minor part of a body; opposed to the major part. We say, minor sums, minor faults, minor considerations, minor details or arguments. In the latter phrases, minor is equivalent to small, petty, inconsiderable, not principal, important, or weighty.
 2. In music, less or lower by a fesser semitone; as, a third minor. Encyc.
 Minor key, in music, is that key, or arrangement of tones and semitones, which is chiefly used for solemn and mournful subjects.

 MIS'CHIEV-OUS-NESS, n. Hurtfulness; noxious-ness.
 2. Disposition to do harm, or to vex or annoy; as,
 the mischievousness of youth.
 Mischief denotes injury, harm, or damage of less malignity and magnitude than what are usually called crimes. We never give the name of mischief to theft, robbery, or murder. And it so commonly implies intention in committing petty offenses, that it shocks us to hear the word applied to the calamities inflicted by Providence. We say, a tempest has done great damage, but not mischief. In like manner, the adjective mischievous is not applied to thieves, pirates, and other felons, but to persons committing petty trespasses and offenses.

MIS-REP-RE-SENT-A'TION, n. The act of giving a false or erroneous representation. Swift.

2. A false or incorrect account given, either from mistake, carelessness, or malice. Atterbury.

Note.—This word is so customarily used for an euphemism, or as a softer expression for lie or falsehood, as to convey the idea generally of intentional falsehood. This signification, however, is not necessarily implied.

MIS-REP-RE-SENT'ED, pp. Falsely or erroneously represented.

MIS-REP-RE-SENT'ER, n. One who gives a false or erroneous account.

MIS-REP-RE-SENT'ING, pp. Giving a false or erroneous representation.

MIS-RCLE, n. Disorder; confusion; tumult from insubordination. Enormous riot and murals. Pope.

2. Unjust domination. Lord of Misrule. See LORO.

MIS-RO'LY, a. Unruly; ungovernable; turbulent. Hall.

MISSE, n. [Supposed by Bailey to be contracted from mistress. But probably it is from the Armoic mesell, a young lady, or contracted from Fr. demoiselle, Sp. damisela. See DAMESEL.]

1. The title of a young woman or girl; as, little masters and misses. Swift.

2. A kept mistress; a prostitute retained; a concubine. Dryden.

[When this title is applied to two or more ladies of the same name, there is a diversity of usage. In conversation, we say, the Miss Smiths, and this was formerly the custom in writing, as shown in the practice of Burke, Boswell, and many others. Of late, it has become customary, in writing, to use misses; as, the Misses Smith; and although there is still some diversity, this may be considered as the prevailing usage. Such are the statements of the latest English grammarians. Et.]

MISS, v. t. [Sax. missian; D. and G. missen; Sw. mista; Dan. mister; allied perhaps to L. mitta, missi; omitto, omisi. But this is not certain. The Welsh has the word in methu, to fail, to miss, to become abortive, to miscarry, to decay. See Class. Md. No. 8, 12, 13, 14, 16. Hence the prefix miss.]

1. To fail in aim; to fail of reaching the object; not to hit; as, to miss the mark; to miss the object intended.

MOD'EST-Y, n. [L. modestia.]

1. That lowly temper which accompanies a moderate estimate of one's own worth and importance. This temper, when natural, springs in some measure from timidity, and in young and inexperienced persons, is allied to bashfulness and diffidence. In persons who have seen the world, and lost their natural timidity, modesty springs no less from principle than from feeling, and is manifested by retiring, unobtrusive manners, assuming less to itself than others are willing to yield, and conceding to others all due honor and respect, or even more than they expect or require.

2. Modesty, as an act or series of acts, consists in humble, unobtrusive deportment, as opposed to extreme boldness, forwardness, arrogance, presumption, audacity, or impudence. Thus we say, the petitioner urged his claims with modesty; the speaker addressed the audience with modesty.

3. Moderation; decency. Shak.

4. In females, modesty has the like character as in males; but the word is used also as synonymous with chastity, or purity of manners. In this sense, modesty results from purity of mind, or from the fear of disgrace and ignominy, fortified by education and principle. Unaffected modesty is the sweetest charm of female excellence, the richest gem in the diadem of their honor.

2. A mortal substance of terrestrial mold. Hoole.
3. A substance like down, which forms on bodies which lie long in warm and damp air. The microscope exhibits this substance as consisting of small plants. Encyc.

MÓLD, n. [Sp. molde, a mold or matrix; moldar, móldar, amoldar, to cast; Port. molde, moldar, id.; Fr. mouler; Arn. moult; Dan. mul, muld; W. mold, whence moldaw, to mold, work, or knead. This may be radically the same word as mold, fine earth, a name taken from the material of molds. The connection of matrix with mater and materia fortifies this conjecture. For spelling, see MOLA, above.]

1. The matrix in which any thing is cast and receives its form. Molds are of various kinds. Molds for casting cannon and various vessels are composed of some species of earth, particularly clay. Molds for other purposes consist of a cavity in some species of metal, cut or formed to the shape designed, or are otherwise formed, each for its particular use.

2. Cast; form; as, a writer of vulgar mold. Waller.
Crowded with an architecture of antique mold. Pope.

MON'ARCH-Y, n. [Gr. μοναρχία. See MONARCH.]
 1. A state or government in which the supreme power is lodged in the hands of a single person. Such a state is usually called an empire or a kingdom; and we usually give this denomination to a large state only. But the same name is sometimes given to a kingdom or state in which the power of the king or supreme magistrate is limited by a constitution, or by fundamental laws. Such is the British monarchy. Hence we speak of absolute or despotic monarchies, and of limited monarchies.
 A free government has a great advantage over a simple monarchy. J. Adams.
 2. A kingdom; an empire. Shak.
MON-AS'TE'RI-AL, a. Pertaining to a monastery.

 1. Coin; stamped metal; any piece of metal, usually gold, silver, or copper, stamped by public authority, and used as the medium of commerce. We sometimes give the name of money to other coined metals, and to any other material which rude nations use as a medium of trade. But, among modern commercial nations, gold, silver, platinum, and copper, are the only metals used for this purpose. Gold, platinum, and silver, containing great value in a small compass, and being, therefore, of easy conveyance, and being, also, durable, and little liable to diminution by use, are the most convenient metals for coin or money, which is the representative of commodities of all kinds, of lands, and of every thing that is capable of being transferred in commerce.

2. Bank notes or bills of credit issued by authority, and exchangeable for coin, or redeemable, are also called money: as such notes, in modern times, represent coin, and are used as a substitute for it. If a man pays in hand for goods in bank notes which are current, he is said to pay in ready money.

3. Wealth; affluence.

MORAL, a. [Fr. and Sp. moral; It. morale; L. moralis; from mas, moris, manner. The elements of this word are probably Mr; but I know not the primary sense. The word coincides in elements with Ar.

μορρα, to pass, to walk. If the original sense of the L. mas, moris, was settled custom, the word may be from the root of moror, to stop, delay; Eug. demar.]

1. Relating to the practice, manners, or conduct of men, as social beings, in relation to each other, and with reference to right and wrong. The word moral is applicable to actions that are good or evil, virtuous or vicious, and has reference to the law of God as the standard by which their character is to be determined. The word, however, may be applied to actions which affect only, or primarily and principally, a person's own happiness.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker. Mankind is broken loose from moral bands. Dryden.

2. Subject to the moral law, and capable of moral actions; bound to perform social duties; as, a moral agent or being.

3. Supported by the evidence of reason or probability; founded on experience of the ordinary course of things; as, moral certainty, distinguished from physical or mathematical certainty or demonstration.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be styled infallible, and moral certainty may be properly styled indubitable. Wilkins.

Things of a moral nature may be proved by moral arguments. Tillotson.

4. Conformed to rules of right, or to the divine law respecting social duties; virtuous; just; as when we say, a particular action is not moral.

5. Conformed to law and right in exterior deportment; as, he leads a good moral life.

6. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and cri'st. Shak.

7. In general, moral denotes something which respects the conduct of men, and their relations as social beings whose actions have a bearing on each other's rights and happiness, and are therefore right or wrong, virtuous or vicious; as, moral character; moral views; moral knowledge; moral sentiments; moral maxims; moral approbation; moral doubts; moral justice; moral virtues; moral obligations, &c. Or moral denotes something which respects the intellectual powers of man, as distinct from his physical powers. Thus we speak of moral evidence, moral arguments, moral persuasion, moral certainty, moral force, which operate on the mind.

Moral law: the law of God, which prescribes the moral or social duties, and prohibits the transgression of them.

Moral philosophy: the science of duty; the science which treats of the nature and condition of man as a social being, of the duties which result from his social relations, and the reasons on which they are founded.

Moral sense: an innate or natural sense of right and wrong; an instinctive perception of what is right or wrong in moral conduct, which approves some actions and disapproves others, independent of education or the knowledge of any positive rule or law. But the existence of any such moral sense is very much doubted. Paley. Encyc. Prior.

MOR'AL, n. Morality; the doctrine or practice of the duties of life. [Not much used.]

1. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals. Dryden.

1. One who teaches the duties of life, or a writer of essays intended to correct vice and inculcate moral duties. Addison.

2. One who practices moral duties; a mere moral person. Hammond.

MOR'AL-I-TY, n. [Fr. moralité.]

1. The doctrine or system of moral duties, or the duties of men in their social character; ethics.

The system of morality to be gathered from the writings of ancient sages falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Saif.

2. The practice of the moral duties; virtue. We often admire the politeness of men whose morality we question.

3. The quality of an action which renders it good; the conformity of an act to the divine law, or to the principles of rectitude. This conformity implies that the act must be performed by a free agent, and from a motive of obedience to the divine will. This is the strict theological and scriptural sense of morality. But we often apply the word to actions which accord with justice and human laws, without reference to the motives from which they proceed.

4. A kind of allegorical play, so termed because it consisted of moral discourses in praise of virtue, between such characters as Charity, Faith, Death, &c. Such plays were occasionally exhibited as late as the reign of Henry VIII. Encyc. Amer. Walton.

By good, morally so called, bonum honestum ought chiefly to be understood. South.

2. Virtuously; honestly; according to moral rules in an external deportment. He resolves to live morally.

3. According to the rules of the divine law. An action is not in strictness morally good, which does not proceed from good motives, or a principle of love and obedience to the divine law and to the lawgiver. Charity bestowed to gratify pride, or justice done by compulsion, can not be morally good in the sight of God.

4. According to the evidence of human reason, or of probabilities, founded on facts or experience; ne-ceding to the usual course of things and human judgment.

It is morally impossible for a hypocrite to keep himself long on his guard. L'Estrange.

From the nature of things, I am morally certain that a man will free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgment than one biased by affection and interest. Wilkins.

Or in the natal or the mortal hour. Pope.
4. Deadly in malice or purpose; as, a mortal foe. In colloquial language, a mortal foe is an inveterate foe.
5. Exposing to certain death; incurring the penalty of death; condemned to be punished with death; not venial; as, a mortal sin.
6. Human; belonging to man who is mortal; as, mortal wit or knowledge; mortal power.
The voice of God
To mortal ear is dreadful. Milton.

7. Extreme; violent; as, a mortal fright. [Not elegant.]
8. Vexing; tormenting; as, six mortal hours did I endure her loquacity; usually a portion. Walter Scott.
The oymph grew pale, and in a mortal fright. Dryden.

MORTAL, n. Man; a being subject to death; a human being.
Warm poor mortals left behind. Tytel.
It is often used in ludicrous and colloquial language.
I can behold so mortal oow. Prior.

MORTAL'I-TY, n. [L. mortalitas.]
1. Subjective to death, or the necessity of dying.
When I saw her die,
I then did think on your mortality. Carew.
2. Death.
Gladly would I meet
Mortality, my sentence. Milton.
3. Frequency of death; actual death of great numbers of men or beasts; as, a time of great mortality.
4. Human nature.
Take these tears, mortality's relief. Pope.
5. Power of destruction.
Mortality and mercy, in Vienna,
Live in thy tongue and heart. Shak.

MORTAL-I-ZE, v. t. To make mortal. Broome.
MORTAL-I-Z-ED, pp. Made mortal.
MORTAL-I-Z-ING, ppr. Making mortal.
MORTAL-LY, ade. Irrevocably; in a manner that must cause death; as, mortally wounded. Dryden.
2. In the highest possible degree.
Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and artificers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel. Bacon.

MORTAR, n. [L. mortarium; Fr. mortier; Sp. mortero; It. mortajo; Dan. morter; D. mortier; G. mörser; Russ. mortier; Arm. mortier; It. mortale; allied perhaps to Fr. marceau; Sp. martillo, a hammer, and named from beating. See Class Mr, No. 10, 16, 25.]
1. A vessel of wood, metal, stone, glass, &c., in form of an inverted bell, in which substances are pounded or bruised with a pestle.
2. A short piece of ordnance, thick and wide, used for throwing bombs, carcasses, shells, &c.; so named from its resemblance in shape to the utensil above described.

MORTAR, n. [D. mortel; Fr. mortier; G. mörtel; Sp. mortero; It. mortale. In other languages, as in English, the orthography of this word and of the last is the same, and perhaps this name is taken from beating and mixing.]
A mixture of lime and sand with water, used as a cement for uniting stones and bricks in walls. If the lime is recently slaked, and the materials mixed with lime-water, the cement will be much stronger. Thomson.

MORT D'ANCES-TOR, [Fr., death of the ancestor.] In law, a writ of assize, by which a defendant recovers possession of an estate from which he has been ousted, on the death of his ancestor. Blackstone.

MORTER, n. [Fr. mortier.] Chaucer.
MORT'GAGE, (mor'gaje), n. [Fr. mort, dead, and gage, pledge.]
1. Literally, a dead pledge; the grant of an estate in fee as security for the payment of money, and on the condition that if the money shall be paid according to the contract, the grant shall be void, and the mortgagee shall reconvey the estate to the mortgager. Formerly the money was, that if the mortgager should repay the money at the day specified, he might then re-enter on the estate granted in pledge; but the modern practice is for the mortgagee, on receiving payment, to reconvey the land to the mortgager. Before the time specified for payment, that is, between the time of contract and the time limited for payment, the estate is conditional, and the mortgagee is called tenant in mortgage; but on failure of payment at the time limited, the estate becomes absolute in the mortgagee. But in this case, courts of equity interpose, and if the estate is of more value than the debt, they will, on application, grant a reasonable time for the mortgager to redeem the estate. This is called the equity of redemption. Blackstone.

2. The state of being pledged; as, lands given in mortgage.
3. A pledge of goods or chattels by a debtor to a creditor, as security for the debt. Kent.
[This use is of modern origin.]
MORT'GAGE, (mor'gaje), v. t. To grant an estate in fee as security for money lent or contracted to be paid at a certain time, on condition that if the debt shall be discharged according to the contract, the grant shall be void, otherwise to remain in full force. It is customary to give a mortgage for securing the repayment of money lent, or the payment of the purchase money of an estate, or for any other debt.
2. To pledge; to make liable to the payment of any debt or expenditure.
Already a portion of the entire capital of the casino is mortgaged for the support of drunkards. L. Becher.

MORT'GAG-ED, (mor'gajd), pp. or a. Conveyed in fee as security for the payment of money.
MORT'GAGE-DEED, (mor'gaje-deed), n. A deed given by way of mortgage.

MORT-GA-GEE', (mor-ga-jee'), n. The person to whom an estate is mortgaged.
MORT-GA-GER, (mor-ga-ger), n. [from mortgage. Mortgagor is an orthography that should have no countenance. If accented on the last syllable, the spelling should be ΜΟΡΤΑΓΟΡΟΝ.]
The person who grants an estate as security for debt, as above specified.
MORT'GA-GING, (mor'ga-jing), ppr. Conveying in fee as security for the payment of money; pledging.
MORT-IF-ER-ÖUS, a. [L. mortifer; mors, death, and fero, to bring.]
Bringing or producing death; deadly; fatal; destructive. Hannond.

MORT-I-FI-CAT'ION, n. [Fr. See MORTIFY.]
1. In medicine and surgery, the death of one part of an animal body, while the rest is alive; or the loss of vitality in some part of a living animal; gangrene; sphacelus. Mortification is the local death of a part of a living animal body, which, if not arrested, soon extinguishes life in the whole body. We usually apply mortification to the local extinction of life

Sans. mada, madra, modira, or mata, mother.
 Russ. mat, water, mother; matka, a female, a matrix.
 Fr. mere, mother, contracted from the Latin.
 W. madres, matter, purulent discharge.
 We observe that in some other languages, as well as in English, the same word signifies a female parent, and the thick slime formed in vinegar; and in all the languages of Europe here cited, the orthography is nearly the same as that of mad and matter. The question then occurs, whether the name of a female parent originated in a word expressing matter, mold; either the soil of the earth, as the producer, or the like substance, when shaped and fitted as a mold for castings; or whether the name is connected with the opinion that the earth is the mother of all productions; whence the word mother-earth. We are informed by a fragment of Sanchoniathon, that the ancient Phenicians considered mud, poor, to be the substance from which all things were formed. (See Muo.) The word matter is evidently from the

Ar. Ma madda, to secrete, eject, or discharge a purulent substance; and I think can not have any direct connection with mud. But in the Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, the same word madre signifies mother, and a mold for castings; and the northern languages, particularly the German and Danish, seem to establish the fact that the proper sense of mother is matrix. Hence mother of pearl, the matrix of pearl. If this word had its origin in the name of the earth used for the furrows of castings, it would not be a singular fact; for our word mold, in this sense, I suppose to be so named from mold, fine earth. The question remains sub judice.

1. A female parent; especially, one of the human race; a woman who has borne a child; correlative to SO or DAUGHTER.
 2. That which has produced any thing.

Alas! poor country! It can not be called our mother, but our grave. Shak.

So our native land is called mother country, and a plant from which a slip or cion is taken is called the mother plant. In this use, mother may be considered as an adjective.

3. That which has preceded in time; the oldest or chief of any thing; as, a mother-church.

4. Hysterical passion. [Not used.] Granaet.

5. A familiar term of address or appellation of an old woman or matron.

6. An appellation given to a woman who exercises care and tenderness toward another, or gives parental advice; as, when one says, a "woman has been a mother to me."

7. A thick, slimy substance concreted in liquors, particularly in vinegar, very different from scum or common lees.

MOTHER OF PEARLS, (per-l), n. The hard, silvery, brilliant, internal layer of several kinds of shells, particularly oysters, which is often variegated with changing purple and azure colors. Ure.

MOTHER OF THYME, n. A small aromatic plant, also called WILD THYME; Thymus serpyllum. P. Cye.

MOTHER, (moth'er), a. Native; natural; received by birth; as, mother wit.

2. Native; vernacular; received from parents or ancestors; as, mother tongue.

MOTHER, (moth'er), c. i. To concreted, as the thick matter of liquors. Dryden.

MOTHER, v. l. To adopt as a son or daughter. Hovell.

MOTHER CAREY'S CHICK'EN, n. A name given by sailors to the storm-petrel. Donne.

MOTHER-HOOD, n. The state of being a mother. Donne.

MOTHER-ING, n. To go a mothering, is to visit parents on Midlent Sunday. This is also called MIX-LENTING.

MOTHER-IN-LAW, n. The mother of a husband or wife.

MOTHER-LAND, n. The land of one's mother or parents.

MOTHER-LESS, a. Destitute of a mother; having lost a mother; as, motherless children.

MOTHER-LY, (moth'er-ly), a. Pertaining to a mother; as, motherly power or authority. Hooker.

2. Becoming a mother; tender; parental; as, motherly love or care. Arbutnot.

MOTHER-LY, adv. In the manner of a mother. Donne.

MOTHER-WATER, n. A solution from which crystals have been obtained, and which still contains deliquescent salts and impurities. Ure.

MOTHER-WIT, n. Native wit; common sense.

MOTHER-WORT, (moth'er-wurt), n. An herb of the genus Leonurus, of a bitter taste, used popularly in medicine.

MOTHER-Y, (moth'er-y), a. Concreted; resembling or partaking of the nature of mother; as, the mother-y substance in liquors.

MOTH-WORT, (moth'wurt), n. A plant.

MOTHY, a. [from moth.] Full of moths; as, an old moth-y saddle. Shak.

MOTIF, a. [L. motus and facio.] Good.

MOTION, n. [L. motio. Fr. motion. See MOVE.]

1. The act or process of changing place; change of local position; the passing of a body from one place to another; change of distance between bodies; opposed to Rest.

Animal motion is that which is performed by animals in consequence of volition, or an act of the will; but how the will operates on the body in producing motion, we can not explain. Mechanical motion is effected by the force or power of one body acting on another. Perpetual motion is that which is effected or supplied by itself, without the impulse or intervention of any external cause. Hitherto it has been found impossible to invent a machine that has this principle.

2. Animal life and action.

3. Manner of moving the body; gait; gait; uir. Each member move and every motion polite. Blackmore.

4. Change of posture; action. Watching the motion of her patron's eye. Dryden.

5. Military march or movement. Agitation; as, the motions of the sea. Milton.

6. Internal action; excitement; as, the motions of the breast. Gay.

7. Direction; tendency. Milton.

8. Direction; tendency. Milton.

9. The effect of impulse; action proceeding from any cause, external or internal. In the growth of plants and animals, there must be a motion of the component parts, though invisible. Attraction or chemical affinity produces sensible motion of the parts of bodies. Motions of the mind, ascribed to the invisible agency of the Supreme Being, are called good motions.

10. Proposal made; proposition offered; particularly, a proposition made in a deliberative assembly. A motion is made for a committee; a motion for introducing a bill; a motion to adjourn.

1. A puppet-show or puppet. [Not used.] Shak.

MOTION, c. l. To propose. [Little used.] [See MOVE.]

MOTION, v. i. To make a significant movement or gesture, as with the hand; as, to motion to one to take a seat. Walter Scott.

2. To make proposal; to offer plans. [Little used.] Milton.

MOTION-ED, pp. Moved; proposed.

MOTION-ER, n. A mover. [Not used.]

MOTION-ING, pp. Proposing.

MOTION-IST, n. One who makes a motion.

MOTION-LESS, a. Wanting motion; being at rest. I grow a statue, fixed and motionless. Dryden.

MOTIVE, a. [See the noun.] Causing motion; having power to move or tending to move; as, a motive argument; motive power. Hooker. Bentley.

MOTIVE, n. [L. Sp. and Port. motivo; Fr. motif. See MOVE.]

1. That which incites to action; that which determines the choice, or moves the will. Thus we speak of good motives and bad motives; strong and weak motives. The motive to continue at rest is ease or satisfaction; the motive to change is uneasiness, or the prospect of good.

2. That which may or ought to incite to action; reason; cause. Shak.

3. A mover. [Not in use.]

MOTIVATY, n. The power of producing motion. 2. The quality of being influenced by motives. Dr. Dwight.

MOTLEY, a. [W. yomat, a spot; yomatia, to spot, to dapple; Sp. motear, id.; Eng. yote.]

1. Variegated in color; consisting of different colors; dappled; as, a motley coat.

The domestic fool of the great formerly wore a party-colored coat of calfskin. Hence, in Shakpeare, Lear says,

A worthy fool; motley's your only wear.

2. Composed of different or various parts, characters, or kinds; diversified; as, a motley style.

And double of motley hue. Dryden.

[This word primarily means spotted; but it may signify, also, striped.]

MOTLEY-MINDED, a. Having diversified views and feelings. Shak.

MOTOR, n. [L. from movere, to move.] A mover. The metals are called motors of electricity. Volta.

MOTORY, a. Giving motion; as, motory muscles. Rap.

MOTTLED, (mot'ld), a. Marked with spots of different colors or shades of color, as if stained; maculated.

MOTTO, n.; pl. MOTTOES. [L. id.; Sp. and Port. mote; Fr. mol; Sax. methelan, to speak; Ir. meathair, talk, discourse; Goth. mathlei, id.; Gr. μῦθος, μῦθω, μυθημαι.]

Primarily, a word; but more commonly, a sentence or phrase prefixed to an essay or discourse, containing the subject of it, or added to a device.

In heraldry, the motto is carried in a scroll, alluding to the bearing or to the name of the bearer, or expressing some important idea.

MOUGHT, (mo'wt), the obsolete preterite of MAY. We now use Mayest.

MOULD, (n. [Sax. mold, olda, myl; W. mol; D. mol MÖLD]. [Dia. mol; Sw. and G. mull; probably allied to mollew; L. mollis. (See MELLOW, MEAL, and MILL.) The prevalent spelling is Mould; but in the u has been omitted in the other words of this class, as bold, gold, old, cold, &c., it seems desirable to complete the analogy by dropping it in this word, as was done by Spenser, South, and many others.]

1. Fine, soft earth, or earth easily pulverized, such as constitutes soil; as, black mold. Edwards, Hist. W. Indies.

A mortal substance of terrestrial mould. Hoole.

2. A substance like down, which forms on bodies which lie long in warm and damp air. The microscope exhibits this substance as consisting of small plants. Encyc.

3. Matter of which any thing is formed. Addison.

Nature formed me of her softest mould. Addison.

MOULD, (n. [Sp. molde, a mold or matrix; moldar, MÖLD]. [amoldar, to cast; Port. molde, moldar, id.; Fr. moule; Arab. moule; Dan. muel, muld; W. mold, whence molldiax, to mold, work, or knead. This may be radically the same word as mold, fine earth, a name taken from the material of molds. The connection of matrix with matter and materia fortifies this conjecture. For spelling, see Mould, above.]

1. The matrix in which any thing is cast and receives its form. Molds are of various kinds. Molds for casting cannon and various vessels are composed of some species of earth, particularly clay. Molds for other purposes consist of a cavity in some species of metal, cut or formed to the shape designed, or are otherwise formed, each for its particular use.

2. Cast; form; as, a writer of vulgar mold. Waller.

Crowned with an architecture of antique mould. Pope.

3. The suture or contecture of the skull. Ainsworth.

4. The body as giving shape to the garments. Shak.

5. In ship-building, a thin, flexible piece of timber, used as a pattern by which to form the curves of the timbers and compassing pieces. Encyc.

6. Among gold-beaters, a number of pieces of vellum, or a like substance, laid over one another, between which the leaves of gold and silver are laid for beating. Encyc.

MOULD, (c. l. [For spelling, see Mould, above.] To MOLD, (v. i.) cause to contract mold. Knolles.

2. To cover with mold or soil. Edwards.

MOULD, (v. i.) To contract mold; to become moldy. Bacon.

MOLD, (v. l.) To form into a particular shape; to MOLD, (v. l.) shape; to mould. Holl.

He forgeth and mouldeth metals. Holl.

Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay To mould me man? Milton.

2. To knead; as, to mold dough or bread. Ainsworth.

MOULD'A-BLE, (a.) That may be moulded or forced. Bacon.

MOULD'ED, (pp.) Forced into a particular shape; kneaded. Edwards.

2. Covered with mold.

MOULD'ER, (n.) He who molds or forms into shape. Mould'er, (c. l.) [Dan. mulner; Sv. multna, to MOLD'ER, (v. l.) grow moldy.]

1. To turn to dust by natural decay; to crumble; to perish; to waste away by a gradual separation of the component particles, without the presence of water. In this manner, animal and vegetable substances moulder, and so also do stones and shells.

When statues moulder, and when arches fall. Prior.

2. To be diminished; to waste away gradually. If he had sat still, the enemy's army would have mouldered to nothing. Clarendon.

MOULD'ER, (v. l.) To turn to dust; to crumble; to MOLD'ER, (v. l.) waste. Pope.

Some felt the silent stroke of mouldering age. Pope.

MOULD'ER-ED, (pp. or a.) Turned to dust; wasted MOLD'ER-ED, (pp.) away.

MOULD'ER-ING, (pp. or a.) Turning to dust; crumbling; wasting away.

MOULD'ER-NESS, (n.) [from moldy.] The state of being moldy; as, log moldy. Bacon.

MOULD'ING, (pp. [from mold].) Forming into shape; kneading.

MOULD'ING, (n.) Any thing cast in a mold, or which appears to be so; hence, in architecture, a projecting beyond the wall, column, waistcoat, &c., an assemblage of which forms a cornice, a door-case, or other decoration. Encyc.

MOLD-WARP, n. [Sax. mold and weorpan, to mold; WARP, v. turn. See MOLE.]
 A mole; a small animal of the genus Talpa, that moves under ground, and turns up the mold or surface of the earth. Spenser. Caron.
MOLDY, v. a. [from mold.] Overgrown with mold. Addison.
MOLT, v. i. [W. mool, bald, bare, also as a noun, MOLT, v. a. heap, pile, or conical hill with a smooth top; molt, to heap or pile, to make bald. So bald, in English, seems to be connected with bald, that is, prominent. The prevalent spelling is MOLT; but as the v has been omitted in the other words of this class, as bolt, dolt, colt, &c., it would be desirable to complete the analogy by dropping it in this word, as many distinguished writers have done.]
 To shed or cast the hair, feathers, skin, horns, &c.; as an animal. Birds molt by losing their feathers, beasts by losing their hair, serpents by casting their skins, and deer their horns. The molting of the hawk is called mezing.
MOLT, n. The act or process of changing the feathers, skin, &c.; molting. P. Cyc.
MOLTING, ppr. Casting or shedding a natural covering, as hair, feathers, skin, or horns.
MOLTING, n. The act or operation by which certain animals annually or at certain times, cast off or lose their hair, feathers, skins, horns, &c.
MOUNCH, v. t. To chew. [See MUNCH.] [Obs.]
MOUNCH, n. Chaucer.
MOUND, n. [Sax. mund; W. mont, from mon; L. mons. See MOUNT.]
 Something raised as a defense or fortification, usually a bank of earth or stone; a bulwark; a rampart or fence.
 -God has thrown
 That mountain as his garden mound high raised.
Milton.
 To dirl the thickets or to leap the mounds.
Dryden.
 2. Something raised; an artificial elevation of earth.
MOUND, v. t. To fortify with a mound. Johnson.
MOUNDED, pp. Surrounded or defended by mounds.
MOUNDING, ppr. Defending by a mound.
MOUNT, n. [Fr. mont; Sax. mnt; It. Port and Sp. monte; Arm. metet, mece; W. mont, a mount, mountain, or mound, a heap; L. mons, literally a heap or an elevation; It. mois or muine; Basque, mendia. Qu. Gr. Barb. c.]
 1. A mass of earth, or earth and rock, rising considerably above the common surface of the surrounding land. Mount is used for an eminence or elevation of earth, indefinite in height or size, and may be a hillock, hill, or mountain. We apply it to Mount Blanc, in Switzerland, to Mount Tom and Mount Holyoke, in Massachusetts, and it is applied, in Scripture, to the small hillocks on which sacrifice was offered, as well as to Mount Sinai. Jacob offered sacrifice on the mount or heap of stones raised for a witness between him and Laban. Gen. xxxi.
 2. A mound; a bulwark for offense or defense.
 Hew ye down trees and cast a mound against Jerusalem.—
Jer. vi.
 3. Formerly, a bank or fund of money. [Obs.]
Bacon.
