V.

V IS the twenty-second letter of the English alphabet, and a labial articulation, formed by the junction of the upper teeth with the lower lip, as in pronouncing av, ev, ov, vain. It is not a close articulation, but one that admits of some sound. It is nearly allied to f, being formed by the same organs; but v is vocal, and f is aspirate, and this constitutes the principal difference between them. V and u were formerly the same letter, derived, no doubt, from the Oriental vau or vau; but they have now as distinct uses as any two letters in the alphabet, and are therefore to be considered as different letters. V has one sound only, as in very, vote, lavish.

As a numeral, V stands for 5. With a dash over it, in old books, V̄, it stands for 5000.

V, among the Romans, stood for uti rogas, as you desire; V. C. for vir consularis; V. G. for verbi gratia; V. L. for videlicet.

In music for instruments, V, stands for violin; V. for violins.

VEGETAL, a. Having power to cause growth. As a semen, a vegetable. [Not in use.]

VEGETATE, v. i. [L. vegeto; Fr. vegeter; from L. vigeo, to flourish.]

To sprout; to germinate; to grow; as plants; to grow and be enlarged by nutriment imbibed from the earth, air, or water, by means of roots and leaves. Plants will not vegetate without a certain degree of heat; but some plants vegetate with less heat than others. Potatoes will vegetate after they are pared, provided what are called the eyes or chits are not removed or injured.

See dying vegetables like animals, and see life dissolving vegetate again. Pope.

VEGETATING, pp. Germinating; sprouting; growing; as plants.

VEGETATION, n. [Fr.] The process of growing, as plants, by means of nourishment derived from the earth, or from water and air, and received through roots and leaves. We observe that vegetation depends on heat and on certain substances which constitute the nutriment of plants. Rapid vegetation is caused by increased heat and a rich soil.

2. Vegetables or plants in general. In June, vegetations in our climate wear a beautiful aspect.

Vegetation of salts, so called, consists in certain crystalline concretions formed by salts, after solution in water, when set in the air for evaporation. These concretions appear round the surface of the liquor, affixed to the sides of the vessel.

VEGETATIVE, a. [Fr. vegetatif.]

1. Growing, or having the power of growing, as plants.
2. Having the power to produce growth in plants; as, the vegetative properties of soil.

VEGETATIVENESS, n. The quality of producing growth.

VEGETIVE, n. [L. vegeto, vigeo.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants; as, vegetive life. [Little used.] Tusser.

VEGETIVE, n. A vegetable. [Not in use.] Sandys.

VEGETO-ANIMAL, a. Partaking of the nature both of vegetable and animal matter. Vegeto-animal matter, is a term formerly applied to vegetable gluten, which is found in the seeds of certain plants, in a state of union with fecula or starch. It is remarkably elastic, and when dry, semi-transparent. By distillation it affords, like animal substances, ammonia, and an empyreumatic oil. Cyc. Fourcroy.

VEGETOUS, a. Vigorous; lively; vegete. [Not in use.] B. Jonson.

VEHEMENCE, n. [Fr. vehemence; from L. vehementis, from veho, to carry, that is, to rush or drive.]

1. Violence; great force; properly, force derived from velocity; as, the vehemence of wind. But it is applied to any kind of forcible action; as, to speak with vehemence.
2. Violent ardor; great heat; animated fervor; as, the vehemence of love or affection; the vehemence of anger or other passion.

I tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.

VEHEMENT, a. [Fr., from L. vehementis.]

1. Violent; acting with great force; furious; very forcible; as, a vehement wind; a vehement torrent; a vehement fire or heat.
2. Very ardent; very eager or urgent; very fervent; as, a vehement affection or passion; vehement desire; vehement eloquence. Milton.

VEHEMENTLY, adv. With great force and violence.

2. Urgently; forcibly; with great zeal or pathos. Tillotson.

VEHICLE, (vé'he-kl.) n. [Fr. vehicule; L. vehiculum, from veho, to carry.]

1. That in which any thing is or may be carried; any kind of carriage moving on land, either on wheels or runners. This word comprehends coaches, chariots, gigs, sulkies, wagons, carts of every kind, sleighs, and sleds. These are all vehicles. But the word is more generally applied to wheel carriages, and rarely, I believe, to water craft.
2. That which is used as the instrument of conveyance. Language is the vehicle which conveys ideas to others. Letters are vehicles of communication.

A simple style forms the best vehicle of thought to a popular assembly. Wirt.

3. A substance in which medicine is taken.
4. A menstruum in which paints, gums, &c., are dissolved and prepared for use.

VEHICLE, a. Conveyed in a vehicle. Green.

VEHICULAR, a. Pertaining to a vehicle.

VEHMENT, a. Vehmisch courts were the tribunals of a secret society in Germany during the middle ages, which for a time held a powerful sway over the people by their terrible executions. Brande.

VEL, (vâle), n. [L. velum.]

1. A cover; a curtain; something to intercept the view and hide an object.
2. A cover; a disguise. [See VAIR. The latter orthography gives the Latin pronunciation as well as the English, and is to be preferred.]

VELL, (vâle), v. l. To cover with a veil; to conceal.

2. To invest; to cover.
3. To hide. [See VAIR.]

VEIN, n. [Fr. veine; L. vena, from the root of venio, to come, to pass. The sense is, a passage, a conduit.]

1. A vessel in animal bodies, which receives the blood from the extreme arteries, and returns it to the heart. The veins may be arranged in three divisions. (1.) Those that commence from the capillaries all over the body, and return the blood to the heart. (2.) The pulmonary veins. (3.) The veins of the vena porta, in which the blood that has circulated through the organs of digestion is conveyed to the liver. Cyc.
2. In plants, a tube, or an assemblage of tubes, through which the sap is transmitted along the leaves. The term is more properly applied to the finer and more complex ramifications, which interbranch with each other like net-work; the larger and more direct assemblages of vessels being called RIBS and NERVES. Veins are also found in the calyx and corol of flowers. Cyc.
- The vessels which branch or variously divide over the surface of leaves are called VEINS. Martyn.
3. In geology, a seam of any substance, more or less wide, intersecting a rock or stratum, and not corresponding with the stratification. Dana. Cyc.
4. A streak or wave of different color, appearing in wood, marble, and other stones; variegation.
5. A cavity or fissure in the earth or in other substance.
6. Tendency or turn of mind; a particular disposition or cast of genius; as, a rich vein of wit or humor; a satirical vein.

Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller.

VE-LOC'I-TY, (-los'e-te, n. [Fr. vélocité; L. velocitas, from velox, swift, allied to volo, to fly.]

1. Swiftness; celerity; rapidity; as, the velocity of wind; the velocity of a planet or comet in its orbit or course; the velocity of a cannon-ball; the velocity of light. In these phrases, velocity is more generally used than celerity. We apply celerity to animals; as, a horse or an ostrich runs with celerity, and a stream runs with rapidity or velocity; but bodies moving in the air or in ethereal space move with greater or less velocity, not celerity. This usage is arbitrary, and perhaps not universal.

2. In philosophy, velocity is that affection of motion by which a body moves over a certain space in a certain time. Velocity is in direct proportion to the space over which a body moves. Velocity is absolute or relative; absolute, when a body moves over a certain space in a certain time; relative, when it has respect to another moving body. Velocity is also uniform or equal; or it is unequal, that is, retarded or VELURE, n. [Fr. velours.] [accelerated. VENGE'ANCE, (venj'ance, n. [Fr., from venger, to revenge, L. vindico.]

The infliction of pain on another, in return for an injury or offense. Such infliction, when it proceeds from malice or mere resentment, and is not necessary for the purposes of justice, is revenge, and a most heinous crime. When such infliction proceeds from a mere love of justice, and the necessity of punishing offenders for the support of the laws, it is vengeance, and is warrantable and just. In this case, vengeance is a just retribution, recompense, or punishment. In this latter sense the word is used in Scripture, and frequently applied to the punishments inflicted by God on sinners.

To me belongeth vengeance and recompense. — Deut. xxxii.

The Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries. — Nahum 1.

With a vengeance, in familiar language, signifies with great violence or vehemence; as, to strike one with a vengeance.

These affinities lead to the true origin of these words. The primary sense of the root is, to shoot or rush, as light or wind. From light is derived the sense of white, fair, Venus, or it is from opening, parting; and from rushing, moving, comes wind, and the sense of raging, fury, whence L. venenum, poison, that which frets or causes to rage. These words all coincide with L. venio, which signifies to rush, to fall, to happen; venor, to hunt, &c. The Greeks had the same idea of the goddess of love, viz., that her name signified fairness, whiteness, and hence the fable that she sprung from froth, whence her Greek name Αφροδιτη, from αφρος, froth. But Venus may be from lust or raging.]

In a general sense, a person deputed or authorized to perform the functions of another; a substitute in office. The pope claims to be vicar of Jesus Christ on earth. He has under him a grand vicar, who is a cardinal, and whose jurisdiction extends over all priests, regular and secular. 2. In the canon law, the priest of a parish, the predial tithes of which are inappropriated or appropriated, that is, belong to a chapter or religious house, or to a layman, who receives them, and only allows the vicar the smaller tithes or a salary. Cyc. Apostolic vicar, in the Roman Catholic church, is an officer of high standing, who has received power from the pope to decide in certain cases without instructions. Encyc. Am.

VICAR-AGE, n. The benefice of a vicar. A vicarage, by endowment, becomes a benefice distinct from the parsonage. Cyc.

VICAR-GEN'ER-AL, n. A title given by Henry VIII. to the earl of Essex, with power to oversee all the clergy, and regulate all church affairs. It is now the title of an office, which, as well as that of official principal, is united in the chancellor of the diocese. The business of the vicar-general is to exercise jurisdiction over matters purely spiritual. Cyc.

VICAR-I-AL, a. [from vicar.] Pertaining to a vicar; small; as, vicarial tithes.

VICAR-SHIP, n. The office of a vicar; the ministry of a vicar.

VICE, n. [Fr. vici; It. vizio; Sp. vicio; L. vitium; W. gwyd.] 1. Properly, a spot or defect; a fault; a blemish; as, the vices of a political constitution. Madison. 2. In ethics, any voluntary action or course of conduct which deviates from the rules of moral rectitude, or from the plain rules of propriety; any moral unfitness of conduct, either from defect of duty or from the transgression of known principles of rectitude. Vice differs from crime in being less enormous. We never call murder or robbery a vice; but every act of intemperance, all falsehood, duplicity, deception, lewdness, and the like, is a vice. The excessive indulgence of passions and appetites, which in themselves are innocent, is a vice. The smoking of tobacco and the taking of snuff may, in certain cases, be innocent, and even useful; but these practices may be carried to such an excess as to become vices. This word is also used to denote a habit of transgressing; as, a life of vice. Vice is rarely a solitary invader; it usually brings with it a frightful train of followers. 3. Depravity or corruption of manners; as, an age of vice. When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway, The post of honor is a private station. Addison. 4. A fault or bad trick in a horse. 5. In the old English drama, (the mysteries, &c.,) a buffoon wearing a cap with ass's ears, whose office was to torment and belabor another buffoon who represented the devil. P. Cyc. 6. An iron press with a screw, for holding articles fast when filed, &c. [This would more properly be written VISE, like the French vis, a screw.] Shak. 7. A gripe or grasp. [Obs.] Shak. VICE, v. t. To press or screw up to a thing by a kind of violence. [Not in use.] [See VISE.] Shak. VICE [L. vice, in the turn or place] is used in composition to denote one qui vicem gerit, who acts in the place of another, or is second in authority. VICE-AD'MI-RAL, n. In the navy, the second officer in command. His flag is displayed at the fore top-gallant mast head. Mar. Dict. 2. A civil officer, in Great Britain, appointed by the lords commissioners of the admiralty for exercising admiralty jurisdiction within their respective districts. VICE-AD'MI-RAL-TY, n. The office of a vice-admiral; a vice-admiralty court. VICE-A'GENT, n. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another. Hooker. VICE-CHAM'BER-LAIN, (-lin), n. An officer in court next in command to the lord-chamberlain. England. VICE-CHAN'CEL-LOR, n. An officer in a university, in England, a distinguished member, who is annually elected to manage the affairs in the absence of the chancellor. Cyc. VICE-CONSUL, n. One who acts in the place of a consul. VICED, (vist), a. Vicious; corrupt. [Not in use.] Shak. VICED-DÖGE', n. A counselor at Venice who represents the doge when sick or absent. Cyc. VICE-GE'REN-CY, n. [See VICERENANT.] The office of a vicerent; agency under another; deputed power; lieutenantancy. South. VICE-GE'RENT, n. [L. vicem gerens, acting in the place of another.] A lieutenant; a vicar; an officer who is deputed by a superior or by proper authority to exercise the powers of another. Kings are sometimes called God's viceregents. It is to be wished they would always deserve the appellation. VICE-GE'RENT, a. Having or exercising delegated power; acting by substitution, or in the place of another. Milton. VICE-LEG'ATE, n. An officer employed by the pope to perform the office of spiritual and temporal governor in certain cities, when there is no legate or cardinal to command there. Cyc. VIC-EN-ARY, c. [L. vicenarius.] Belonging to twenty. VICE-PRES'I-DEN-CY, n. The office of vice-president. Story. VICE-PRES'I-DENT, n. An officer next in rank below a president. United States. VICE-RE'GAL, a. Pertaining to a viceroy or viceroyalty. VICEROY, n. [Fr. viceroi.] The governor of a kingdom or country who rules in the name of the king with regal authority, as the king's substitute. Swift. VICE-ROYAL-TY, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy. VICEROY-SHIP, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy. VICE-SUP-PRESS'ING, a. Adapted to suppress vice. VICE-TY, n. Nicety; exactness. B. Jonson. [Not in use; probably a mistake.] VICE VERS'A, (L.) The terms or the case being reversed. VIC'CI-ATE, (vish'ate), v. t. [L. vicio.] This verb is usually written VITIATE; but as vice, from L. vitium, is established, it would be well to write the verb VICIATE, as we write APPRECIATE and DEPRECIATE, from L. pretium.] 1. To injure the substance or properties of a thing so as to impair its value, and lessen or destroy its use; to make less pure, or wholly impure; to deprave, in a physical or moral sense; as, to viciate the blood; to viciate taste or style; to viciate a morals. 2. To render defective, and thus destroy the validity of; to invalidate by defect; as, to viciate a deed or bond. VIC'CI-ATED, (vish'ä-ted), pp. or a. Depraved; impaired in substance or quality; rendered defective and void. VIC'CI-TING, pp. Injuring in substance or properties; rendering defective; making void. VIC'CI-ATION, n. Depravation; corruption. VICIN-AGE, n. [from L. vicinia, neighborhood; vicinus, near.] Neighborhood; the place or places adjoining or near. A jury must be of the vicinage, or body of the country. In law, common because of vicinage is where the inhabitants of two townships contiguous to each other have usually intercommuned with one another; the beasts of one straying into the other's fields without molestation from either. Blackstone.

VIC'I-NAL, } a. Near; neighboring. [Little used.] VIC'INE, } Glanville.

VI-CINI-TY, n. [L. vicinitas.]

1. Nearness in place; as, the vicinity of two country seats.

2. A degree of nobility next below a count or earl. [See VISCOUNT.] Cyc.

VICTIM, n. [L. victima; Fr. victime.]

1. A living being sacrificed to some deity, or in the performance of a religious rite; usually, some beast slain in sacrifice; but human beings have been slain by some nations, for the purpose of appeasing the wrath or conciliating the favor of some deity.

2. A person or thing destroyed; a person or thing sacrificed in the pursuit of an object. How many persons have fallen victims to jealousy, to lust, to ambition!

VICTIM-ATE, v. t. To sacrifice. [Not in use.]

VICTIM-IZE, v. t. To make a victim of; to sacrifice or destroy. [A cant, but common word.]

VICTOR, n. [L. from vincio, victus, to conquer, or the same root. N not being radical, the root is victo or vigo; Sax. wig, wigg, war; wiga, a warrior, a hero, a victor; wigan, to war, to fight. The primary sense is, to urge, drive, or strive; hence, to subdue.]

1. One who conquers in war; a vanquisher; one who defeats an enemy in battle. Victor differs from conqueror. We apply conqueror to one who subdues countries, kingdoms, or nations; as, Alexander was the conqueror of Asia or India, or of many nations, or of the world. In such phrases, we can not substitute victor. But we use victor when we speak of one who overcomes a particular enemy, or in a particular battle; as, Cesar was victor at Pharsalia. The duke of Wellington was victor at Waterloo. Victor, then, is not followed by the possessive case; for we do not say, Alexander was the victor of Carius, though we say, he was victor at Arbela. Johnson.

2. One who vanquishes another in private combat or contest; as, a victor in the Olympic games.

3. One who wins or gains the advantage.

In love, the victors from the vanquished fly; They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

4. Master; lord.

[Not usual, nor legitimate.]

1. Having conquered in battle or contest; having overcome an enemy or antagonist; conquering; vanquishing; as, a victorious general; victorious troops; a victorious admiral or navy.
2. That produces conquest; as, a victorious day.

3. Emblematic of conquest; indicating victory; as, brows bound with victorious wreaths. Shak.

VIC-TOR-I-OS-LY, adv. With conquest; with defeat of an enemy or antagonist; triumphantly; as, grace will carry us victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VIC-TOR-I-OS-NESS, n. The state of being victorious.

VIC-TOR-Y, n. [L. victoria, from vincio, victus, to conquer; Fr. victoire.]

1. Conquest; the defeat of an enemy in battle, or of an antagonist in contest; a gaining of the superiority in war or combat. Victory supposes the power of an enemy or antagonist to prove inferior to that of the victor. Victory, however, depends not always on superior skill or valor; it is often gained by the fault or mistake of the vanquished.
Victory may be honorable to the arms, but shameful to the councils of a nation. Bolingbroke.

2. The advantage or superiority gained over spiritual enemies, over passions and appetites, or over temptations, or in any struggle or competition.

VICTRESS, n. A female that conquers. Shak.

VICTUAL, n. See VICTUALS

VICTUAL, (vit'l), v. t. [from victual, the noun.]

1. To supply with provisions for subsistence; as, to victual an army; to victual a garrison.

2. To store with provisions; as, to victual a ship.

VICTUAL-ED, (vit'ld), pp. Supplied with provisions.

VICTUAL-ER, (vit'ler), n. One who furnishes provisions.

3. A provision-ship; a ship employed to carry provisions for other ships, or for supplying troops at a distance.

VICTUAL-ING, (vit'ling), ppr. Supplying with provisions.

VICTUAL-ING-HOUSE, n. A house where provision is made for strangers to eat.

VICTUALS, (vit'ulz), n. pl. [Fr. victuailles; It. vettovaglia; Sp. vitualla; from L. victus, food, from the root of vico, which was vigo or vico, coinciding with vigo; Basque, vicia, life. This word is now never used in the singular.]

Food for human beings, prepared for eating; that which supports human life; provisions; meat; sustenance. We never apply this word to that on which beasts or birds feed, and we apply it chiefly to food for men when cooked or prepared for the table. We do not now give this name to flesh, corn, or flour in a crude state; but we say, the victuals are well cooked or dressed, and in great abundance. We say, a man eats his victuals with a good relish.

Such phrases as, to buy victuals for the army or navy, to lay in victuals for the winter, &c., are now obsolete. We say, to buy provisions; yet we use the verb, to victual an army or ship.

VI-DAME, n. In French feudal jurisprudence, a name given to a class of officers who represented the bishops, and who subsequently erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles. Brande.

She hung about my neck, and kiss and kiss
She vied so fast. [Not in use.] Shak.

VI-ELLE, (ve-yel'), n. [Fr.] A stringed instrument played upon with a wheel; a hurdy-gurdy. Buchana.

VI ET ARMIS, [L.] In law, with force and arms; words expressive of a trespass. Bowyer.

VIEW, (vu), v. t. [Fr. vie, from voir, to see, contracted from L. videre, Inss. vije, Sans. vid. This primary sense is, to reach or extend to.]

1. To survey; to examine with the eye; to look on with attention, or for the purpose of examining; to inspect; to explore. View differs from look, see, and behold, in expressing more particular or continued attention to the thing which is the object of sight. We ascended Mount Holyoke, and viewed the charming landscape below. We viewed with delight the rich valleys of the Connecticut about the town of Northampton.

Go up and view the country.—Josh. vii.
I viewed the walls of Jerusalem.—Neh. vii.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye. Pope.
3. To survey intellectually; to examine with the mental eye; to consider. View the subject in all its aspects.

4. Intellectual or mental sight. These things give us a just view of the designs of Providence.

5. Act of seeing. The facts mentioned were verified by actual view.

6. Sight; eye

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of larger size, that are more remote. Locks.

7. Survey; inspection; examination by the eye. The assessors took a view of the premises.

Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

8. Intellectual survey; mental examination. On a just view of all the arguments in the case, the law appears to be clear.

9. Appearance; show

Which, by the splendor of her view—
Dazzled, bore we never knew. Waller.

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of the mistaken pass of liberty. Locks.

11. Prospect of interest.

No man acts himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locks.

12. Intention; purpose; design. With that view he began the expedition. With a view to commence, he passed through Egypt.

13. Opinion; manner of seeing or understanding. These are my views of the policy which ought to be pursued.

View of frankpledge; in law, a court of record, held in a hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the lord. Blackstone.

Point of view; the direction in which a thing is seen.

VIEWED, (vud), pp. Surveyed; examined by the eye; inspected; considered.

VIEWER, (vu'er), n. One who views, surveys, or examines.

In New England, a town officer whose duty is to inspect something; as, a viewer of fences, who inspects them to determine whether they are sufficient in law.

 The sway or fashion of people at any particular time; temporary mode, custom, or practice; popular reception for the time. We say, a particular form of dress is now in vogue; an amusing writer is now in vogue; such opinions are in vogue. The phrase, the vogue of the world, used by good writers formerly, is nearly or quite obsolete.
 Use may revive the obsolete word,
 And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.
VOICE, n. [Fr. voix; L. vox; It. voce; Sp. voz; Gaelic, bagh, a word; baigham, to speak to; It. foce, a word; Sans. vac, to speak, L. voco. The sense of the verb is, to throw, to drive out sound; and voice is that which is driven out.]
 1. Sound or audible noise uttered by the mouth, either of human beings or of other animals. We say, the voice of a man is loud or clear; the voice of a woman is soft or musical; the voice of a dog is loud or harsh; the voice of a bird is sweet or melodious. The voice of human beings is articulate; that of beasts, inarticulate. The voices of men are different, and, when uttered together, are often dissonant.
 2. Any sound made by the breath; as, the trumpet's voice.
 3. A vote; suffrage; opinion or choice expressed. Originally voice was the oral utterance of choice, but it now signifies any vote, however given.
 Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
 Of holy senators, and elect by voice. Dryden.
 I have no words;
 My voice is in my sword. Shak.
 4. Language; word; expression.

VOL'ANT, a. [Fr., flying, from voler, L. volo, to fly.]

1. Flying; passing through the air; as, volant automata.

Wilkins.

2. Nimble; active; as, volant touch.

Milton.

3. In heraldry, represented as flying or having the wings spread.

VOL'A-TILE, a. [Fr., from L. volatilis, from volo, to fly.]

1. Flying; passing through the air on wings, or by the buoyant force of the atmosphere.

2. Having the power to fly; as, birds are volatils animals.

Ruy. Racon.

3. Capable of wasting away, or of easily passing into the aeriform state. Thus substances which affect the smell with pungent or fragrant odors, as musk, bartsborn, and essential oils, are called volatils substances, because they waste away on exposure to the atmosphere. Alcohol and ether are called volatils liquids for a similar reason, and because they easily pass into the state of vapor on the application of heat. On the contrary, gold is a fixed substance, because it does not suffer waste, even when exposed to the heat of a furnace; and oils are called fixed when they do not evaporate on simple exposure to the atmosphere.

4. Lively; gay; full of spirit; airy; hence, fickle; apt to change; as, a volatile temper.

Watts.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever.

Swift.

Volatile alkali; an old name of ammonia.

VOL'A-TILE, n. A winged animal. [Little used.]

Brown.

VOL'A-TILE-NESS, n. [Fr. volatilité.]

1. Disposition to exhale or evaporate; the quality of being capable of evaporation; that property of a substance which disposes it to rise and float in the air, and thus to be dissipated; as, the volatility of fluids. Ether is remarkable for its volatility. Many or most solid bodies are susceptible of volatility by the action of intense heat.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exudes spontaneously, and in which the odor or smell consists. Arbutnot.

2. Great sprightliness; levity; liveliness; whence, mutability of mind; fickleness; as, the volatility of youth.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-A-BLE, a. That may be volatilized.

VOL-A-TIL-I-ZA'TION, n. [from volatilis.] The act or process of rendering volatile, or rather of causing to rise and float in the air.

Boyle.

VOL'A-TIL-IZE, v. t. [Fr. volatiliser.]

To render volatile; to cause to exhale or evaporate; to cause to pass off in vapor or invisible effluvia; and to rise and float in the air.

The water — dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action.

Newton.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-ED, pp. Rendered volatile; caused to rise and float in air.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-ING, pp. Rendering volatile; causing to rise and float in air.

VOL-CAN'IC, a. [from volcano.] Pertaining to volcanoes; as, volcanic heat.

2. Produced by a volcano; as, volcanic tufa.

3. Changed or affected by the heat of a volcano.

1. A flight of shot; the discharge of many small arms at once. Waller.

2. A burst or emission of many things at once; as, a volley of words. Shak.

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

VOL'LEY, v. t. To discharge with a volley.

VOL'LEY, v. i. To throw out or discharge at once. Shak.

VOL'LEY-ED, (vol'lid), a. [from volley.] Displaced; discharged with a sudden burst; as, volleyed thunder. Milton. Philips.

VOLT, n. [Fr. volte, a ring; It. volta, a turn; from L. voluta, volvo.]

1. A round or circular tread; a gait of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center. Far. Dict.

2. In fencing, a sudden movement or leap to avoid a thrust.

VOL'TA, in Italian music, signifies that the part is to be repeated one, two, or more times.

VOL-TA'IC, a. Pertaining to Volta, the discoverer of voltaism; as, the voltaic pile.

Voltaic apparatus; the apparatus used for accumulating galvanic electricity. The agent itself is denominated galvanism, after its discoverer, Galvani, while the instruments used for exciting and accumulating it are called voltaic, in honor of Volta, who first contrived this kind of apparatus.

Voltaic pile; a column formed by successive pairs of metallic disks, as silver and zinc, with moistened cloth between every two contiguous pairs.

Voltaic electricity; the kind of electricity which is evolved by voltaic apparatus.

Voltaic battery; the larger forms of voltaic apparatus, used for accumulating galvanic electricity.

VOL'TA-ISM, n. [from Volta, an Italian.] That branch of electrical science which has its source in the chemical action between metals and different liquids. It is more properly called GALVANISM, from Galvani, who first proved or brought into notice its remarkable influence on animals.

VOL-TAM'E-TER, n. [Volta and percep.] An instrument for measuring the voltaic electricity passing through it.

VOL'TY, (it.) In music, turn over.

VOL'TI-GEUR, (-zhur), n. A light-horseman or dragoon. In the army of the United States, each dragoon or horseman has a foot-soldier attached to him, who, in case of necessity, mounts behind on the same horse; thus presenting, whenever they meet the enemy, a line of infantry and of dragoons in the same regiment. Crittenden.

VOL'TY SÜBY'TO, (it.) Turn over quickly.

VOL'U-BIL-ATE, (a.) In garlequin, a volubilate stem

twining round another body.

VOL'U-BIL'I-TY, n. [Fr. volubilité; L. volubilitas, from volvo, to roll.]

1. The capacity of being rolled; aptness to roll; as, the volubility of a bowl. Watts.

2. The act of rolling.

By irregular volubility. Hooker.

3. Ready motion of the tongue in speaking; fluency of speech.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a groan reprimand from her father. Femais Quirce.

4. Mutability; inableness to revolution; as, the volubility of human affairs. [Unusual.] L'Estrange.

VOL'U-BLE, (vol'y'u-bl), (a.) [L. volubilis.]

VOL'U-BLY, adv. In a rolling or fluent manner. Hudibras.

VOL'UME, (vol'yum), n. [Fr., from L. volumen, a roll; volvo, to roll. To make a long, in this word, is palpably wrong.]

1. Primarily, a roll, as the ancients wrote on long strips of bark, parchment, or other material, which they formed into rolls or folds. Of such volumes, Ptolemy's library in Alexandria contained three or seven hundred thousand.

2. A roll or turn; as much as is included in a roll or coil; as, the volume of a serpent. Dryden.

3. Dimensions; compass; space occupied; as, the volume of an elephant's body; a volume of gas. Darwin. Parke.

4. A swelling or spherical body

The undulating willows rolling their silver volumes. Iring.

5. A book; a collection of sheets of paper, usually printed or written paper, folded and bound, or covered. A book consisting of sheets once folded is called a folio, or a folio volume; of sheets twice folded, a quarto; and thus, according to the number of leaves in a sheet, it is called an octavo or a duodecimo.

The Scriptures, or sacred writings, bound in a single volume, are called the Scriptures. The number of volumes in the Royal Library, in Rue de Richelieu, at Paris, is variously estimated. According to the returns in 1836, there were more than 700,000 volumes.

An old volume of a set of books bears not the value of its proportion to the set. Franklin.

6. In music, the compass of a voice from grave to acute; the tone or power of voice. Bushy.

VO-LU/TATION, n. [L. volutatio, from voluta, from volvo, Eng. to wallow.]

1. A wallowing; a rolling of the body on the earth. [See WALLOW.]

VO-LUTE, n. [Fr. volute; It. voluta; from L. voluta, volvo.]

1. In architecture, a kind of spiral scroll, used in the Ionic and Composite capitals, of which it is a principal ornament. The number of volutes in the Ionic order is four; in the Composite, eight. There are also eight angular volutes in the Corinthian capital, accompanied with eight smaller ones, called HELICÆ. Cyc.

2. In natural history, a name given to the mollusks of the genus Voluta. They have spiral, unilocular shells, with the pillar or columella plaited, and are prized for their beauty and rarity. P. Cyc.

VO-LUTE, a. Having a volute or spiral scroll.

VO-LUTION, n. A spiral turn or wreath.

VOM/I-CA, n. [L.] An abscess in the lungs.

VOM/IC-NUT, n. [L. tomica, emetic, and nux, a nut.]

The seed of the Stychnos nux vomica, a medium-sized tree growing in various parts of India; commonly called Nux Vomica. The fruit is of the size of a small orange, and of the same color, covered with a tough rind, and filled with a pulp, in which the seeds are imbedded. Almost all parts of this tree are medicinal, but more especially the seeds. They are not emetic, however, as their name implies. The snake-wood does not belong to this tree, as some have asserted, but to Stychnos colubrina, another species of the same genus.

VOM/IT, v. i. [L. vomo; Fr. vomir; It. vomire; Sans. vamathu.] Probably the Gr. emeto is the same word, with the loss of its first letter.]

To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth. Some animals vomit with ease, as cats and dogs; but horses do not vomit. Cyc.

VOM/IT, v. t. To throw up or eject from the stomach; to discharge from the stomach through the mouth. It is followed often by up or out, but without necessity, and to the injury of the language. In the yellow fever, the patients often vomit dark-colored matter, like coffee grounds.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. — Joah B.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place. Volcanoes vomit flames, ashes, stones, and liquid lava.

VOM/IT, n. The matter ejected from the stomach.

Sandys.

2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.

Black vomit; a copious vomiting of dark-colored matter, resembling coffee grounds; one of the most fatal attendants of the yellow fever.

VOM/IT-ED, pp. Ejected from the stomach through the mouth, or from any deep place through an opening.

VOM/IT-ING, ppr. Discharging from the stomach through the mouth, or ejecting from any deep place.

VOM/IT-ING, n. The act of ejecting the contents of the stomach through the mouth. Vomiting is essentially an inverted action of the stomach and esophagus. Cyc.

VUL'TUR-OUS, a. Like a vulture; rapacious.

VY'ING, ppr. Competing; emulating.

W.

W IS the twenty-third letter of the English alphabet. It takes its written form and its name from the union of two Vs, this being the form of the Roman capital letter which we call U. The name, double u, being given to it from its form or composition, and not from its sound, ought not to be retained. Every letter should be named from its sound, especially the vowels. W is properly a vowel, a simple sound, formed by opening the mouth with a close, circular configuration of the lips. It is precisely the ou of the French, and the u of the Spaniards, Italians, and Germans. With the other vowels it forms diphthongs, which are of easy pronunciation; as in well, want, will, dwell; pronounced ooul, ooant, ooill, dooell. In English, it is always followed by another vowel, except when followed by h or r, as in when, wreck; but this case is an exception only in writing, and not in pronunciation, for h precedes w in utterance; when being pronounced woen. In Welsh, w, which is sounded as in English, is used without another vowel, as in fwl, a fool; dw, dun; dwh, mortar; gw, a gun nod a gown.

It is not improbable that the Romans pronounced w as we do v, for their vulvus is our vallow; and volo, velle, is the English will, G. wollen. But this is uncertain. The German v has the sound of the English f, and v that of the English v.

W, at the end of words, is often silent after a and o, as in law, saw, low, cow. In many words of this kind, w represents the Saxon g; in other cases, it helps to form a diphthong, as in now, row, new, strew.

As an abbreviation, W. stands for west; W. N. for west-north-west; W. S. W. for west-south-west, &c.

WAB'BLE, (wob'bl), v. t. [W. wabian, to wander, to move in a circular form.]

To move from one side to the other; to vacillate; as a turning or whirling body. So it is said of top wabbles, when it is in motion, end deviates from a perpendicular direction; a spindle wabbles, when it moves one way and the other. A millstone in motion, if not well balanced, will wabble.

[This word is applied chiefly to bodies when turning with a circular motion, and its place can not be supplied by any other word in the language. It is neither low nor barbarous.]

WAB'BLE, n. A hobbling, unequal motion.

WAB'BLING, ppr. or a. Having an irregular motion, backward and forward.

WACK'E, } n. A rock nearly allied to basalt, of which WACK'Y, } it may be regarded as a more soft and

And wait with longing eyes their promised guide. Dryden.

[Elliptical for WAIT FOR.]

2. To attend; to accompany with submission or respect

He chose a thousand horse, the flower of all
His warlike troops, to wait the fender. Dryden.

[This use is not justifiable, but by poetical license.]

3. To attend as a consequence of something.

Such doom waits luxury. Philips.

[Not in use.] [In this sense, we use ATTEND or ATTEND ON.]

WAIT, n. Ambush. As a noun, this word is used only in certain phrases. To lie in wait, is to lie in ambush; to be secreted in order to fall by surprise on an enemy; hence, figuratively, to lay snares, or to make insidious attempts, or to watch for the purpose of insnaring. Josh. viii.

In wait is used in a like sense by Milton.

WAP'EN-TAKE, } n. [Sax. wapen-tac; but it is rather WAP'EN-TAC, } Gothic, as this division of a county was peculiar to the northern counties; wapen, a weapon, and tac, tace, touch; Goth. tekan. (See Touch.) This name had its origin in a custom of touching lances or spears when the hundred or chief entered on his office. "Cum quis accipiebat præfecturam wapentacii, die statuto in loco ubi conveniant congregari, omnes majores natu contra eum conveniebant, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant ei. Ipse vero erecta lancea sua, ab omnibus secundum morem fœdus accipiebat; omnes enim quotquot venissent cum lanceis suis ipsos hastam tangebant, et ita se confirmabant per contactum armorum, pace palam concessa. Wapnu enim arma sunt; tac, tactus est—hæc de eansa totus ille conventus dicitur Wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confederati erant." LL. Edward Confessor, 33. Wilkins.

Lyc seems to doubt this explanation of the word wapentac, because the word tac is not found in the Saxon. He seems not to have considered that the word is known only in the north of England, where the Gothic dialect prevailed; and surely the word must have been understood in the age of Edward the Confessor.

In some northern counties of England, a division or district, answering to the HUNDRED or CENTRE in other counties. Yorkshire is divided into wapentakes, instead of hundreds. The name was first given to the meeting, supra. Selden. Blackstone. Wilkins.

WAR, (wuar) n. [Sax. war; Fr. guerre; It. Sp. and Port. guerra; D. wärren, to quarrel, wrangle, entangle; Dan. værrer; G. vœrreren, to perplex, embroil, disturb. The primary sense of the root is, to strive, struggle, urge, drive, or to turn, to twist.]
1. A contest between nations or states, carried on by force, either for defense, or for revenging insults and redressing wrongs, for the extension of commerce or acquisition of territory, or for obtaining and establishing the superiority and dominion of one over the other. These objects are accomplished by the slaughter or capture of troops, and the capture and destruction of ships, towns, and property. Among rude nations, war is often waged and carried on for plunder. As war is the contest of nations or states, it always implies that such contest is authorized by the monarch or the sovereign power of the nation. When war is commenced by attacking a nation in peace, it is called an offensive war, and such attack is aggressive. When war is undertaken to repel invasion or the attacks of an enemy, it is called defensive, and a defensive war is considered as justifiable. Very few of the wars that have desolated nations and deluged the earth with blood, have been justifiable. Happy would it be for mankind, if the prevalence of Christian principles might ultimately extinguish the spirit of war, and if the ambition to be great, might yield to the ambition of being good.
Preparation for war is sometimes the best security for peace. Anon.

2. In poetical language, instruments of war. Its complement of stores, and total war. Prior.

WAR'RAN-TV, n. In law, a promise or covenant by deed, made by the bargainer for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs against all men in the enjoyment of an estate or other thing granted. Such warranty passes from the seller to the buyer, from the offeror to the feeoffee, and from the releaser to the releasee. Warranty is real, when annexed to lands and tenements granted in fee or for life, &c., and is in deed or in law; and personal, when it respects goods sold or their quality.
 In the contract of insurances there are also certain warranties which induce the insurer to enter into it, as that the vessel is seaworthy, &c.
 In common recoveries, a fictitious person is called to warranty. In the sale of goods or personal property, the seller warrants the title; for warranty is express or implied. If a man sells goods which are not his own, or which he has no right to sell, the purchaser may have satisfaction for the injury. And if the seller expressly warrants the goods to be sound and not defective, and they prove to be otherwise, he must indemnify the purchaser. But the warranty must be at the time of sale, and not afterward. In general, there is no implied warranty of the quality of the goods sold. Blackstone.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept. If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty to disobey likewise. Kantliwell.
 [In this sense, WARANT is now used.]

WATER, (wau'ter), n. [Sax. wæter, wæs; D. water; G. wasser; Dan. wæter; Sw. watten; Goth. wato; Russ. voda. This may be from the root of wet, Gr. wetros, Sans. udum. In Ar. wadi signifies a stream, or the channel where water flows in winter, but which is dry in summer; a thing common on the plains of Syria and Arabia.]

1. A fluid, the most abundant and most necessary for living beings of any in nature, except air. Water, when pure, is colorless, destitute of taste and smell, ponderous, transparent, and in a very small degree compressible. It is reposit in the earth in inexhaustible quantities, where it is preserved fresh and cool, and from which it issues in springs, which form streams and rivers. But the great reservoirs of water on the globe are the ocean, seas, and lakes, which cover more than three fifths of its surface, and from which it is raised by evaporation, and uniting with the air in the state of vapor, is wafted over the earth, ready to be precipitated in the form of rain, snow, or hail.

Water, by the abstraction or loss of heat, becomes solid, or, in other words, is converted into ice or snow; and by heat it is converted into steam, an elastic vapor, one of the most powerful agents in nature. Water is a compound of oxygen and hydrogen; two volumes or measures of hydrogen gas, and one of oxygen gas. The proportion of the ingredients in weight, is 88.9 parts of oxygen to 11.1 of hydrogen. Berzelius.

2. The ocean; a sea; a lake; a river; say great collection of water; as in the phrases, to go by water, to travel by water.

3. Urine; the animal liquor secreted by the kidneys and discharged from the bladder.

1. Exemption from misfortune, sickness, calamity, or evil; the enjoyment of health and the common blessings of life; prosperity; happiness; applied to persons.

2. Exemption from any unusual evil or calamity; the enjoyment of peace and prosperity, or the ordinary blessings of society and civil government; applied to states.

WELK, v. i. [G. and D. welken, to wither, to fade, to decay; primarily, to shrink or contract, as things in drying, whence the Saxon welc, a whilk or whelk, a shell; from its wrinkles.]

To decline; to fade; to decay; to fall.

When Paddy Phobus 'gins to welk in west. [Obs.] Spenser.

WELK, v. t. To contract; to shorten.

Now ead winter *welk*eth both the day. Spenser.

[This word is obsolete. But its signification has heretofore been misunderstood.]

WELK'ED, (welkt'), pp. or a. Contracted into wrinkles or ridges.

Horns *welk*ed and waved like the enlarged sea. Shak.

WELKIN, n. [Sax. walc, walcan, a cloud, the air, ether, the vault of heaven; G. wolke, a cloud. Qu. Sax. walcan, to roll, to fill.]

The visible regions of the air; the vault of heaven. Chaucer. Milton.

[This is obsolete, unless in poetry.]

Welkin eye, in Shakespeare, is interpreted by Johnson, a blue eye, from welkin, the sky; by Todd, a rolling eye, from Sax. walcan, to roll; and by Entick, a languishing eye. (See WELK.) It is obsolete, at least in New England.

WELK'ING, pp. Fading; declining; contracting.

WELL, n. [Sax. well, a spring or fountain; wellan, to well, to boil or bubble, to spring, to rise; D. wel, wellen, id.; G. quelle, a spring; quellen, to spring, to issue forth, to gush, to well, to swell; wallen, to swell. In G. welle is a wave. On this word I suppose well to be formed.]

1. A spring; a fountain; the issuing of water from the earth.

Begin, then, sisters of the sacred well. Milton.

[In this sense, obsolete.]

2. A pit or cylindrical hole, sunk perpendicularly into the earth to such a depth as to reach a supply of water, and walled with stone to prevent the earth from caving in.

1. To go; to pass to or from.

2. To turn round. [Obs.] [WENO and WIND are from the same root.]

WENNEL, n. A wrennel. [See WEANEL.] [Obs.]

WEN-NISH, a. [from wen.] Having the nature of WENNY, } a wcn.

WENT, pret. of the verb WENO. We now arrange went in grammar as the preterit of go, but in origin it has no connection with it.

WEPT, pret. and pp. of WERE.

When he had come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it. — Luke xix.

WERE, (pron. wer, which, when prolonged, becomes wære.) This is used as the imperfect tense plural of be; we were, you were, they were; and in some other tenses. It is the Danish verb wæere, to be, to exist, Sw. wæra, and its origin has no connection with be, nor with wære. It is united with be, to supply its want of tenses, is went is with go.

WERE, n. A dam. [See WEAR.]

WERE-GILD, n. [Sax. wer, man, and the estimated value of a man, and geld, money.] Formerly, the price of a man's head; a compensation paid for a man killed, partly to the king for the loss of a subject, and partly to the lord of the vassal, and partly to the next of kin. It was paid by the murderer. Blackstone.

WER-NER-I-AN, a. Pertaining to Werner, the German mineralogist and geologist who arranged minerals in classes, &c., according to their external characters, and advocated the theory that the strata of the earth's crust were formed by depositions from water. Dana.

WES-LEY-AN, n. One who adopts the principles of Wesleyanism.

WES-LEY-AN-ISM, n. Arminian Methodism; the system of doctrines and church polity inculcated by John Wesley.

WEST, n. [Sax. wæst; D. and G. west; Dan. west; Sw. wæster; Fr. ouest. This word probably signifies decline or fall, or departure; as in L. occident, and in other cases. In elements it coincides with wæst.] 1. In strictness, that point of the horizon midway between the north and south points, on the side where the heavenly bodies set; opposed to East, which is the corresponding point on the side where they rise. In a less strict sense, the region of the hemisphere near this point. Thus we say, a star sets in the west, a meteor appears in the west, a cloud rises in the west.

2. A country situated in a region toward the setting, with respect to another. Thus, in the United States, the inhabitants of the Atlantic States speak of the inhabitants of Ohio, Kentucky, or Missouri, and call them people of the west; and formerly, the empire of Rôme was called the empire of the West, in opposition to the empire of the East, the seat of which was Constantinople.

WEST, a. Being in a line toward the point in the horizon midway between the north and south points, on the side where the sun sets; or, in a looser sense, being in the region near the line of direction toward that point, either on the earth or in the heavens.

This shall be your west border. — Num. xxxiv.

2. Coming or moving from the west or western region; as, a west wind.

WEST, adv. To the western region; at the westward; more westward; as, Ireland lies west of England.

WEST, v. t. To pass to the west; to set, as the sun. [Not in use.] Chaucer.

WEST-ER-ING, a. Passing to the west. [I believe not now used.] Milton.

WEST-ER-LY, a. Being toward the west; situated in the western region; as, the westerly parts of England.

2. Moving from the westward; as, a westerly wind.

WEST-ER-LY, adv. Tending, going or moving toward the west; as, a man traveling westerly.

WEST-ERN, a. [west and Sax. arn, place.]

1. Being in the west, or in the region nearly in the direction of west; being in that quarter where the sun sets; as, the western shore of France; the western ocean.

2. Moving in a line to the part where the sun sets; as, the ship makes a western course.

WEST-ING, n. Space or distance westward; or departure westward; as, the westing and southing of a ship.

WEST-WARD, adv. [Sax. wæstward; wæst and weard, L. versus.] Toward the west; as, to ride or sail westward.

WEST-WARD-LY, adv. In a direction toward the west; as, to pass westwardly.

WET, a. [Sax. wæt; Sw. wæta, Dan. wæde, moisture, Gr. wæros; L. uduis.] 1. Containing water, or, as, wet land, or a wet cloth; or having water or other liquid upon the surface; as, a wet table. Wet implies more water or liquid than moist or hemio.

2. Rainy; as, wet weather; a wet season

WET, n. Water or wetness; moisture or humidity in considerable degree. Wear thick shoes or pattens to keep your feet from the wet.

2. Ramy weather; foggy or misty weather. Swift

WET, v. t.; pret. and pp. WET. But WATTO is sometimes used. [Sax. wætan; Sw. wæta; Dan. wæder.] 1. To fill or moisten with water or other liquid; to sprinkle or humectate; to cause to have water or other fluid adherent to the surface; to dip or soak in liquor; as, to wet a sponge; to wet the hands; to wet cloth.

Wet the thirsty earth with falling showers. Milton.

2. To moisten with drink. Wallon.

WETTER, n. [Sax. wæther or wædder. In Dan. wæder is a ram.] A ram castrated.

WET-NESS, n. The state of being wet, either by being soaked or filled with liquor, or by having a liquid adherent to the surface; as, the wetness of land; the wetness of a cloth. It implies more water or liquid than humidness or moisture.

2. A watery or moist state of the atmosphere; a state of being rainy, foggy, or misty; as, the wetness of weather or the season.

WET-NURSE, n. A nurse who suckles a child, opposed to a DAY NURSE, who brings up children by hand.

WET-TISH, a. Somewhat wet; moist; humid.

WEX, v. t. or i. To grow; to wax. [Not to be used.] [See WAX.]

WEY, (wā.) n. [from weigh.] A certain quantity. In England, a weigh of wool is 6½ tods, or 182 lbs.; a weigh of butter or cheese varies from 2 to 3 cwt.; a weigh of corn or salt is 40 bushels; a weigh of oats or barley, 48 bushels, &c. McCulloch. Cyc.

WEZ-AN, for WESANO. [See the latter.] Note.—In words beginning with wh, the letter h, or aspirate, when both letters are pronounced, precedes the sound of w. Thus what, when, are pronounced wæat, wæn. So they were written by our ancestors, and so they ought to be written still, as they are by the Danes and Swedes.

WHACK, (hwak.) v. t. To strike. This is probably the primary word on which is formed whack. [See Twir.] Whack is a vulgar word.

WHALE, (hwåle.) n. [Sax. hwæl, hwæl; G. walvisch, from wællan, to stir, agitate, or rove; D. walvisch; Sw. and Dan. hwål. This animal is named from roundness, or from rolling; for in Dan. hwål is arched or vaulted; hwæller, to arch or vault, D. wælcen.] The general name of an order of animals inhabiting the ocean, arranged in zoology under the name of Cete or Cetacea, and belonging to the class Mammalia, in the Linnæan system. The Greenland whale is of the genus Balaena. When fully grown, it is from fifty to sixty-five or seventy feet in length, and from thirty to forty feet in its greatest circumference. The whale furnishes us with oil, whalebone, &c. [See ACHALOTE.]

WHALE-BOAT, n. A long, narrow boat, sharp at both ends, used by whalers.

WHALE-BONE, n. [whale and bone.] A firm, elastic substance, taken from the upper jaw of the whale, used as a stiffening in stays, fans, screens, &c.

WHALL-Y, a. Having greenish-white eyes. [See WALL-EYE.]

WHAME, n. A species of fly, Tabanus, the burel fly, that annoys horses.

WHANG, n. [Sax. hwæng.] A leather thong. [Not in use.]

WHANG, v. t. To beat. [Not in use, or local.] Greco.

WHAP, n. A blow. [Vulgar.] [See AWHAP.]

WHAP-PEP, (hwop-pet.) n. Something uncommonly large of the kind. So thumper is connected with thump, to strike with a heavy blow; applied particularly to a hold lie. [Vulgar.]

WHARF, (hworf.) n. [Sax. hwarf, hworf; D. werf; Dan. werf; Russ. worph. In D. wæren signifies to raise or levy. In the plural, WHARFS and WHARVES are both used.] A perpendicular bank or mound of timber or stone and earth, raised on the shore of a harbor, river, canal, &c., or extending some distance into the water, for the convenience of lading and unlading ships and other vessels. The two longest wharfs in New England, are at Boston and at New Haven. The latter is much the longest, extending into the harbor about three quarters of a mile.

WHARF, v. t. To guard or secure by a wharf or firm wall of timber or stone; as, the western bank of the Connecticut is wharfed at Hartford, to prevent the river from wearing away the land.

WHARF-AGE, n. The fee or duty paid for the privilege of using a wharf for loading or unloading goods, timber, wood, &c.

WHARF'ING, n. Wharfs in general.

WHARF'IN-GER, n. A man who has the care of a wharf, or the proprietor of a wharf.

WHAT, (hwot), pronoun relative or substitute. [Sax. hwæt; Goth. wait; D. wat; G. was; Dan. and Sw. head; Scot. quhat; L. quod, quid. The Sax. hwæt, hwæt, signifies brisk, lively, vigorous; which shows that this pronoun is the same word as wight, a living being, from the root of the L. vivō, for vigo. (See WIGHT.) The Gothic h represents the Latin e in victus.]

1. That which. Say what you will, is the same as say that which you will.

2. Which part. Consider what is due to nature, and what to art or labor.

3. What is the substitute for a sentence or clause of a sentence. "I tell thee what, corporal, I could tear her." Here what relates to the last clause, "I could tear her;" this is what I tell you.

4. What is used as an adjective, of both genders, often in specifying sorts or particulars. See what colors this silk exhibits. I know what qualities you desire in a friend; that is, I know the qualities which you desire.

5. What is much used in asking questions. What sort of character is this? What poem is this? What man is this we see coming?

6. What time; at the time or on the day when. What time the more mysterious visions brings. Pope.

7. To how great a degree. What partial judges are our love and hate! Dryden.

8. Whatever. Whether it was the shortness of his foresight, the strength of his will—or what it was. Bacon.

9. Some part, or some. "The year before, he had so used the matter, that what by force, what by policy, he had taken from the Christians above thirty castles;" that is, he had taken above thirty castles, a part or some by force, a part or some by policy; or what may be interpreted partly. Knolles.

Sometimes what has no verb to govern it, and it must be considered as adverbially used. "What with carrying apples and fuel, he finds himself in a hurry;" that is, partly, in part.

10. What is sometimes used elliptically for what is this? or how is this?

What could ye not watch with me one hour?—Matt. xxv.

11. What is used interrogatively and elliptically, as equivalent to what will be the consequence? What will follow? as in the phrase, what if I undertake this business myself?

What though; that is, grant this or that; allow it to be so.

What ho; an exclamation of calling. [Not in use.]

WHAT, (hwot), n. Fare; things; matter. [Not in use.]

WHAT-EVER, pron. WHENCE, adv. [Sax. hwanon.]

1. From what place. Whence and what art thou? Milton.

2. From what source. Whence shall we derive hope? Whence comes this honor? Whence hath this man this wisdom?—Matt. xlii.

3. From which premises, principles, or facts. These facts or principles are admitted, whence it follows that judgment must be entered for the plaintiff.

4. How; by what way or means. Mark xii.

5. In general, from which person, cause, place, principle, or circumstance. From whence may be considered as tautological, from being implied in whence; but the use is well authorized, and in some cases the use of it seems to give force or beauty to the phrase. We ascended the mountain, from whence we took a view of the beautiful plains below.

Of whence is not now used.

WHENCE-SO-EVER, adv. [whence, so, and ever.] From what place soever; from what cause or source soever. Any lieu, whencesoever we have it. Locke.

WHENCE-EVER, See WHENCESOEVER.

WHEN-EVER, adv. [when and ever.] At whatever time. Whenever you come, you will be kindly received.

3. At the place in which. Where I thought the remnant of my age Should have been cherished by her childlike duty. Shak.

4. Whither; to what places, or from what place. Where are you going? Where are you from? [These uses of where are common, and the first can not be condemned as vulgar.]

Any where; in any place. I sought the man, but could not find him any where.

Note.—Where seems to have been originally a noun, and was so used by Spenser. "He shall find no where safe to him." In this sense, it is obsolete; yet it implies place, its original signification.

WHERE-A-BOU'T, comp. [where and about.] Near what place. Whereabout did you meet your friend? 2. Near which place. 3. Concerning which.

The object whereabout they are conversant. Hooker.

[WHEREABOUTS is also used.]

WHERE-AS', (hwære-az'), comp. [where and as.] When in fact or truth; implying opposition to something that precedes. Are not those found to be the greatest scoundrels, who are most notoriously ignorant? whereas thou shalt always begin with true knowledge. Sprat.

2. The thing being so that; considering that things are so; implying an admission of facts, sometimes followed by a different statement, and sometimes by inferences or something consequent, as in the law style, where a preamble introduces a law.

Whereas wars are generally causes of poverty. Bacon.

3. Whereat; at which place. [Obs.] Spenser.

4. But on the contrary. [See No. 1.] Woodward.

WHER'Y, n. [A different orthography of FERRY, formed with a strong breathing, like whistle, from the root of L. festula.]

1. A shallow, light boat, built very sharp at both ends, for fast rowing or sailing, especially on tide rivers.

The term has also been applied to some decked vessels used in fishing, in different parts of Great Britain and Ireland. Mar. Dict.

2. A liquor made from the pulp of crabs, after the verjuice is expressed; sometimes called CRAB-WHER'Y. [Local.]

WHET, (hwet,) v. t. præs. and pp. WHETTED or WHET.

[Sax. hwetian; Sw. hwetisa; Dan. heas, sharp; heolser, to whet; D. wecten; G. wetzen.]

1. To rub for the purpose of sharpening; as an edge-tool; to sharpen by attrition; as, to whet a scythe or an ax.

2. To provoke; to excite; to stimulate; as, to whet the appetite.

3. To provoke; to make angry or acrimonious.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cesar, I have not slept. Shak.

To whet on, or etet forward; to urge on; to instigate. [Not used, nor proper.] Shak.

WHET, n. The act of sharpening by friction.

2. Something that provokes or stimulates the appetite; as, sips, drama, and whets. Spectator.

WHETHER, pronoun or substitute. [Sax. hwæther.]

This word seems to be connected with what and the L. uter, the latter not being aspirated. The sense seems to be what, or which of two, referring either to persons or to sentences.]

1. Which of two.

Whether of them twain did the will of his father? — Mat. xxi.

Here, whether is a substitute for one of two, and signifies which; which of the two; but in this sense it is obsolete.

2. Which of two alternatives, expressed by a sentence or the clause of a sentence, and followed by or. "Resolve whether you will go or not;" that is, you will go or not go; resolve which.

Note. — In the latter use, which is now most common, whether is called an adverb. This is a mistake. It is the same part of speech as in the former example. The only difference is, that in the former example it represents or refers to a noun, and in the latter to a sentence or clause.

WHETHER-ING, n. The retention of the after-birth in cows. Gardener.

WHETSTONE, n. [whet and stone.] A stone used for sharpening edged instruments by friction.

WHETSTONE-SLATE, {n. Navaculite, a variety

WHET-SLATE, } of slate used for sharpening instruments of iron. The light-green colored variety from the Levant is the most valuable, and is called HORTONSTONE. It should be kept in a damp place, that it may not become too dry and hard.

WHETTED, pp. Rubbed for sharpening; sharpened; provoked; stimulated.

WHETTER, n. He or that which whets or sharpens.

WHETTING, pp. Rubbing for the purpose of making sharp; sharpening; provoking; inciting; stimulating.

WHIEY'EV, (whä'e,) a. Partaking of whey; resembling whey. Bacon.

WHIEY'ISI, a. Having the qualities of whey. Philips.

WHIEY-TUB, n. A tub in which whey stands for yielding cream, &c. Cyc.

WHICH, pron. [If this is from the Saxon hwilc or hwylc, it is from the Gothic hwelika, which coincides with the Latin qualis; D. welk, G. welche, welcher, Dan. hwilken, hwilket, Sw. hwilken. This is the probable origin of the word, and its true sense is that of the Latin quis, qualis, quicunque. In these senses it occurs in all Saxon books. Its proper use was as a pronoun of interrogation, "Hwylc man is of cov?" "what man is there of you?" Matt. vii. 9. "Hwylc is min modor?" who is my mother? Mark iii. 33. Its use for who, Saxon heca, as in the Lord's prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," is an improper application of the word. In its original sense it is used for all genders; as, which man, which woman, which thing? As an interrogative we still use it in this manner. Its use for who was of long continuance, but is happily discontinued; and our present practice accords with its original use in the Saxon.]

1. A pronoun or word of interrogation in all genders; as, which man is it? which woman was it? which is the house?

2. In reference to things, or in the neuter gender, it is a relative referring to something before mentioned; as, "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Gen. ii. 2. In some phrases, the relative may precede the noun to which it refers.

3. Which, like other pronouns, may be used as a substitute for another word or for a sentence. "We are bound to obey all the divine commands, which we ran not do without divine aid." Here which is a substitute for obey all the divine commands. The man was said to be innocent, which he was not. Here which is a substitute for innocent.

4. That which; those which; as, take which you will.

The which, by the which, &c., are obsolete.

WHICH-EV'ER, } pron. Whether one or the oth-

WHICH-SO-EV'ER, } er. Whichever road you take, it will conduct you to town.

WHIFF, n. [W. gwif, a whiff or puff, a hiss; gwiffaw, to whiff, and gwof, a quick puff.]

1. A sudden expulsion of air from the mouth; a puff; as, the whiff of a smoker.

And seasons his whiffs with impertinent jokes. Pope.

2. In ichthyology, a flat-fish of the tarbot group, Rhombus negastomus. Jardine's Nat. Lib.

WHIFF, v. t. To puff; to throw out in whiffs; to consume in whiffs.

WHIFFLE, (whifd,) v. i. [D. weffelen, to waver; weffelen, to hover. This accords to sense with G. weffeln, to doubt, which would seem to be from weel, two, or to doubt. The G. has also scheiffen, to rove or wander, which seems to be allied to sweep. The D. has also twiffelen, to doubt, from twee, two, or its root; Sw. twiffa, Dan. twiffer, from the root of twee. Yet weffle seems to be directly from whiff.]

To start, shift, and turn; to change from one opinion or course to another; to use evasions; to prevaricate; to be fickle and unsteady.

A piece of whiffing and unsteady turn of mind, can not keep close to a point of a controversy. Watts.

WHIFFLE, v. t. To disperse with a puff; to scatter. More.

WHIFFLE, n. Anciently, a pipe or small flute.

WHIFFLE-TREE, {n. The bar to which the traces WHIFFLE-TREE, } of a carriage are fastened for draught.

WHIFFLER, n. One who whiffles or frequently changes his opinion or course; one who uses shifts and evasions in argument.

2. A harbinger; an officer who went before processions to clear the way by blowing the horn or trumpet. Tacon. Shak.

3. A young man who goes before a company in London on occasions of public solemnity. Cyc.

WHIFFLING, pp. Shifting and turning; prevaricating; shuffling.

WHIFFLING, n. Prevarication.

WHIG, (hwig,) n. [Sax. hwæg. See WHEY.]

Acidulated whey, sometimes mixed with buttermilk and sweet herbs; used as a cooling beverage. [Local.]

WHIG, n. [Ash, in his Dictionary, informs us that this word is from whiggam, a term used in Scotland in driving horses; whiggamor, one who drives horses. In 1648, a party of these people marched to Edinburgh to oppose the king and the duke of Hamilton; and hence the name of whig was given to the party opposed to the court.]

One of a political party which had its origin in England in the seventeenth century, in the reign of Charles I. or II., when great contests existed respecting the royal prerogative and the rights of the people. Those who supported the king in his high claims were called Tories, and the advocates of popular rights were called Whigs. During the revolution in the United States, the friends and supporters of the war and the principles of the revolution were called Whigs, and those who opposed them were called Tories and royalists.

Where, then, when Tories scarce get clear, Shall whigs and congresses appear? M'Fingal.

WHIG, a. Pertaining to or composed of whigs.

WHIGGARY, n. Government by whigs. [Cont.] Swift.

WHIGGER-Y, n. The principles of a whig.

WHILE, (hwile,) n. [Sax. hwilc; Goth. hwila; G. weil; D. wyl; time, while; Dan. hwil, Sw. hwila, repose; W. gwyl, a turn, Ir. foil, See the verb.]

Time; space of time, or continued duration. He was some while in this country. One while we thought him innocent.

Worth while; worth the time which it requires; worth the time and pains; hence, worth the expense. It is not always worth while for a man to prosecute for small debts.

WHILE, adv. During the time that. While I write,

2. As long as. [you sleep.]

Use your memory, and you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overlook it. Watts.

3. At the same time that. Pope.

WHILE, v. t. [W. gwylow, to turn, to run a course, to bustle; Eth. 𐤒𐤍 would, to pass the time, to spend the day or life, to remain; Amharic, id.; Dan. hwiler, Sw. hwila, to rest or repose; Ir. foillim, to stay, to rest, to tarry; G. weilen, verweilen, to abide, to stay; D. verwylen, id. Qu. the identity of these words.]

To while away, as time, in English, is to loiter; or, more generally, to cause time to pass away pleasantly, without irksomeness; as, we while away time in amusements or diversions.

Let us while away this life. Pope.

WHILE, v. i. To loiter. Spectator.

WHILE'RE, adv. [while and ere.] A little while ago. [Obs.]

WHILL'ING, pp. Loitering; passing time agreeably, without impatience or tediousness.

WIGHT, (wite), n. [Sax. wiht, G. weicht, a living he-log, Goth. wiht; L. victum, from vicio, to live, originally vigo or vico, and probably allied to vigo.
This, in the Celtic form, would be quic or quoig, Eng.
quick, alive; and hence L. qui, quis, quid, quod, contracted from quic, quicquid, quidquid; Scot. quhat.
The letter h, in the Gothic and Scottish, representing the c of the Latin, proves the word to be thus contracted.]

A being; a person. It is obsolete, except in irony or burlesque. [See AGHRT.]

The wight of all the world who loved thee best. Dryden.

WIGHT, (wite), a. [Sax. hwæt.]

 A species of mollusk. [See WHELK.]
WILL, n. [Sax. willa; Goth. wilja; D. wil, or wille; G. wille; Sw. wilje; Dan. willie; W. gwyl; Ir. oil; Gr. bovān, counsel; Slav. wolia. See the verb.]
 1. That faculty of the mind by which we determine either to do or forbear an action; the faculty which is exercised in deciding, among two or more objects, which we shall embrace or pursue. The will is directed or influenced by the judgment. The understanding or reason compares different objects, which operate as motives; the judgment determines which is preferable, and the will decides which to pursue. In other words, we reason with respect to the value or importance of things; we then judge which is to be preferred; and we will to take the most valuable. These are but different operations of the mind, soul, or intellectual part of man. Great disputes have existed respecting the freedom of the will.
 [Will is often quite a different thing from desire.]
 A power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will.
 2. Choice; determination. It is my will to prosecute the trespasser.
 3. Choice; discretion; pleasure.
 4. Command; direction.
 5. Disposition; inclination; desire. "What is your will, sir?" In this phrase, the word may also signify determination, especially when addressed to a superior.
 6. Power; arbitrary disposal.
 7. Divine determination; moral purpose or counsel.
 8. Testament: the disposition of a man's estate, to take effect after his death. Wills are written or nuncupative, that is, verbal.
 9. Right intention.
 10. Ill will; enmity; unfriendliness. It expresses less than malice.
 To have one's will; to obtain what is desired.
 To will. To hold an estate at the will of another, is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and he liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor.
 Will-with-a-wisp; Jack-with-a-lantern; ignis fatuus; a luminous appearance sometimes seen in the air over moist ground, supposed to proceed from hydrogen gas.

WILL, v. t. [Sax. willan; Goth. wiljan; D. willen; G. wollen; Sw. wilja; Dan. wille; L. wolo, welle; Gr. borōlōnai; Fr. wolair; It. wolera. The sense is, to set, or to set forward, to stretch forward. The sense is well expressed by the L. propono.]
 1. To determine; to decide in the mind that something shall be done or forbore, implying power to carry the purpose into effect. In this manner, God wills whatever comes to pass. So in the style of princes: "we will that execution be done."
 A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it.
 2. To command; to direct.
 3. To be inclined or resolved to have.
 4. To wish; to desire. What will you?
 5. To dispose of estate and effects by testament.
 6. It is sometimes equivalent to may be. Let the circumstances be what they will; that is, any circumstances, of whatever nature.
 7. Will is used as an auxiliary verb, and a sign of the future tense. When an auxiliary verb, the past tense is would. It has different significations in different persons.
 1. I will go, is a present promise to go; and with an emphasis on will, it expresses determination.
 2. Thou wilt go, you will go, express foretelling; simply stating an event that is to come.
 3. He will go, is also a foretelling. The use of will in the plural is the same. We will, promises; ye will, they will, foretell.

WIS, v. t. pret. WIST. (G. wissen; D. wisten; Dan. eider; Sw. weta. This is the Sax. witan, to wit.) To think; to suppose; to imagine. [Obs.] Spenser.

WIS'DOM, (wiz'dum), n. [Sax. id.; wise and dom; G. weisheit, (wischood); D. wysheid; Sw. wisdom and wised; Dan. visdom or eisdom. (See WISE.)] Wisdom, it seems, is from the Gothic dialect.

1. The right use or exercise of knowledge; the choice of laudable ends, and of the best means to accomplish them. This is wisdom in act, effect, or practice. If wisdom is to be considered as a faculty of the mind, it is the faculty of discerning or judging what is most just, proper, and useful; and if it is to be considered as an acquirement, it is the knowledge and use of what is best, most just, most proper, most conducive to prosperity or happiness. Wisdom in the first sense, or practical wisdom, is nearly synonymous with DISCRETION. It differs somewhat from PRUDENCE in this respect; prudence is the exercise of sound judgment in avoiding evils; wisdom is the exercise of sound judgment either in avoiding evils or attempting good. Prudence, then, is a species, of which wisdom is the genus.

Wisdom gained by experience is of inestimable value. Scott. It is hoped that our rulers will act with dignity and wisdom; that they will yield every thing to reason, and refuse every thing to force. Awee.

2. In Scripture, human learning; erudition; knowledge of arts and sciences.

Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. — Act vii.

3. Quickness of intellect; readiness of apprehension; dexterity in execution; as, the wisdom of Bezaleel and Aholiab. Exod. xxxi.

4. Natural instinct and sagacity. Job xxxix.

5. In Scripture theology, wisdom is true religion; godliness; piety; the knowledge and fear of God, and sincere and uniform obedience to his commands. This is the wisdom which is from above. Pa. xc. Job xxviii.

6. Profitable words or doctrine. Pa. xxxvii.

The wisdom of this world; mere human erudition; or the carnal policy of men, their craft and artifices in promoting their temporal interests; called also fleshly wisdom. 1 Cor. ii. 2 Cor. i.

The wisdom of words; artificial or affected eloquence; or learning displayed in teaching. 1 Cor. i. ii.

WIS, a. [Sax. wis, wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. vis; Sax. wissan; G. wissen, to know; Sans. vid. This, in Dutch, is wisten, to know, which is the Goth. witan, Sax. witan, Eng. to wit, perhaps Gr. eiden. So that wist, wit, wett, wot, are all from one root, or dialectical forms of the same word; Ir. fois, seas, knowledge; W. gwyb, gwyb, Sans. widyaj, intelligence. In general, the radical sense of know is to reach or to hold, from extension, stretching. In this case, it may be to show, to disclose, from a like sense; for in Sw. visa, Dan. riser, G. weisen, D. wysen, is to show. In this case, L. video, visum, which seems to be connected with this word, may coincide in origin with wido. Wifful, attentive, eager, is from reaching forward.]

1. Properly, having knowledge; hence, having the power of discerning and judging correctly, or of discriminating between what is true and what is false; between what is fit and proper and what is improper; as, a wise prince; a wise magistrate. Solomon was deemed the wisest man. But a man may be speculatively and not practically wise. Hence,

2. Discreet and judicious in the use or application of knowledge; choosing laudable ends, and the best means to accomplish them. This is to be practically wise. Gen. xli.

3. Skillful; dextrous. They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. — Jer. iv.

4. Learned; knowing; as, the wise and the unwise. Rom. i.

5. Skilled in arts, science, philosophy, or in magic and divination. 2 Sam. xiv.

6. Godly; pious. Prov. xiii.

The Holy Scriptures, which are able to make those wise to salvation. — 2 Tim. iii.

7. Skilled in hidden arts; a sense somewhat ironical; as, the wise woman of Brainford. Shak.

8. Dictated or guided by wisdom; containing wisdom; judicious; well adapted to produce good effects; applicable to things; as, a wise saying; a wise scheme or plan; wise conduct or management; a wise determination.

9. Becoming a wise man; grave; discreet; as, wise deportment. Milton.

WISE, n. [Sax. wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. vis; Fr. guise; It. guisa; Arin. gwis.] Manner; way of being or acting.

This song she sings in most commanding wise. Sidney. In fitted wise. Spenser.

In the foregoing form this word is obsolete. The use of it is now very limited. It is common in the following phrases.

1. In any wise. If he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it. — Lev. xxvii. First not thyself in any wise. — Pa. xxxvii.

2. On this wise. On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel. — Num. vi. 3. In no wise. He shall in no wise lose his reward. — Matt. x.

It is used in composition, as in likenesse, otherwise, lengthwise, &c. By mistake, ways is often used for it; as, lengthways for lengthwise.

WISE-À-CRE, (wiz'-à-ker), n. [G. weise, wise, and aeger, to say, G. weisager, a foreteller. The proper English word would be WISE-SAYER.]

WIT, n. [Sax. wit or ge-wit; G. witz; Dan. vid. See the verb and WISE.]

1. Primarily, the intellect; the understanding or mental powers. Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth. Davies. For wit and power their last endeavors bend To outshin each other. Dryden.

2. The association of ideas in a manner natural, but unusual and striking, so as to produce surprise joined with pleasure. Wit is defined

What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed, Wit consists in assembling, and putting together with quickness, ideas in which can be found resemblance and congruity, by which to make up pleasant pictures and agreeable visions in the fancy. Locke.

Wit consists chiefly in joining things by distant and fanciful relations, which surprise us because they are unexpected. Kames.

Wit is a property of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

3. The faculty of associating ideas in a new and unexpected manner.

4. A man of genius; as, the ngo of Addison abounded with wits.

5. A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young. A man of fancy or wit.

Intemperate wit will spare neither friend nor foe. L'Etrange. 6. Sense; judgment.

He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden. 7. Faculty of the mind. Shak.

8. Wits, in the plural; soundness of mind; intellect not disordered, or such an expedition. Have you lost your wits? Is he out of his wits?

9. Power of invention; contrivance; ingenuity. He was at his wits' end. Hooker.

WITCH, n. [Sax. wicca. See WICKER.] 1. A woman who, by compact with the devil, practices sorcery or enchantment.

2. A woman who is given to unlawful arts. 3. [Sax. wica.] A winding, sinuous bank. [Obs.] Spenser.

4. A piece of emient paper which is placed in a vessel of lard, and, being lighted, answers the purpose of a taper. [Qu. wick.] [Local.]

WITCH, v. t. To bewitch; to fascinate; to enchant. I'll wish sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shak.

WITCH/CRAFT, n. [witch and craft.] The practices of witches; sorcery; enchantments; intercourse with the devil. Bacon.

2. Power more than natural. He hath a witchcraft Over the king in 's tongue. Shak.

WITCH/ED, (witch), pp. Bewitched; fascinated. WITCH/ELM, n. A kind of elm, the Ulmus montana, properly WRECH-ELM. Loudon.

WITCH/ER-Y, n. Sorcery; enchantment. Milton. 2. Fascination.

WITCH-HAZEL, n. The Hammelis virginica, a shrub which flowers in autumn, when its leaves are falling. Lee. Bigelone.

2. The name has sometimes been given to the witch-elm or wych-elm, the Ulmus montana.

WITCH/ING, a. Suited to enchantment or witchcraft; as, the witching time of night. Shak.

WITCH/ING, pp. Fascinating; enchanting. WIT/-CRACK-ER, n. [wit and cracker.] One who breaks jests; a joker. [Not in use.] Shak.

WIT/-CRAFT, n. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. [Obs.] Camden.

WITE, v. t. [Sax. witan; the root of wit.] To reproach; to blame. [Obs.] Spenser.

WITE, n. Blame; reproach. [Obs.] Spenser. WITE/LESS, a. Blameless. [Obs.] Spenser. WIT/E-NA-GEE-MOTE', n. [Sax. witan, to know, and gemot, a meeting, a council.] A meeting of wise men; the national council or legislature of England, in the days of the Saxons, before the conquest.

WIT/I, prep. [Sax. wita, near, or against; Goth. ga-withan, to join. The primary sense is, to press, or to meet, to unite; hence, in composition, it denotes opposition, as in withstand and withdraw; hence against, Sax. withra, G. widder.]

1. By, noting cause, instrument, or means. We are distressed with pain; we are elevated with joy. With study men become learned and respectable. Fire is extinguished with water.

2. On the side of; noting friendship or favor.

Fear not, for I am with thee.—Gen. xxv.

3. In opposition to; in competition or contest; as, to struggle with adversity. The champions fought with each other an hour. He will lie with any man living.

10. In partnership. He shares the profits with the other partners. I will share with you the pleasures and the pains.

11. Noting connection.

Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dryden.

12. Immediately after.

With this he pointed to his face. Dryden.

13. Among. I left the assembly with the last. Tragedy was originally, with the ancients, a piece of religious worship. Rymer.

14. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those pagan philosophers. Addison.

15. In consent, noting parity of state.

See I where on earth the flowery glories lie, With her they flourished, and with her they die. Pope.

With and by are closely allied in many of their uses, and it is not easy to lay down a rule by which their uses may be distinguished. It is observed by Johnson that with seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause; as, he killed an enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. But this rule is not always observed.

With, in composition, signifies sometimes opposition, privation; or separation, departure.

WITH-AL', (with-al'), adv. [with and all.] With the rest; together with; likewise; at the same time.

If you choose that, then I am yours withal. Shak.

How modest in exception, and withal How terrible in constant resolution! Shak.

2. It is sometimes used for with. But the word is not elegant, nor much used.

WITH-AMITE, n. A variety of epidote, of a red or yellow color, found in Scotland. Dana.

WITH-DRAW', v. t. [with and draw.] To take away what has been enjoyed; to take from. [With here has the sense of contrary; to withdraw is to draw the contrary way. See WITH.]

It is impossible that God should withdraw his presence from any thing. Hooker.

We say, to withdraw capital from a bank or stock in trade; to withdraw aid or assistance.

2. To take back; to recall or retract; as, to withdraw charges.

WITH-IN', prep. [Sax. withinnan.]

1. In the inner part; as, the space within the walls of a house; a man contented and happy within himself. Tillotson.

2. In the limits or compass of; not beyond; used of place and time. The object is within my sight; within the knowledge of the present generation; within a month or a year.

3. Not reaching to any thing external.

Were every action concluded within itself. Locke.

4. In the compass of; not longer ago than.

Within these five hours Hastings lived undaunted. Shak.

5. Not later than; as, within five days from this time, it will be fair weather.

5. Supposing the negation or omission of.

Without the separation of the two monarchies, the most advantageous terms from the French must end in our destruction. Addison.

6. Independent of; not by the use of. Men like to live without labor.

Wise men will do it without a law. Bacon.

7. On the outside of; as, without the gate; without doors.

8. With exemption from. That event can not happen without great damage to our interests.

9. Unless; except.

Without, when it precedes a sentence or member of a sentence, has been called a conjunction. This is a mistake. "You will not enjoy health, without you use much exercise." In this sentence, without is a preposition still, but followed by a member of a sentence, instead of a single noun. It has no property of a connective or conjunction, and does not fall within the definition. You will not enjoy health, this fact following being removed, or not taking place; you use exercise. This use of without is nearly superseded by unless and except, among good writers and speakers; but is common in popular discourse or parlance.

WITH-OUT', adv. Not on the inside; not within.

These were from without the growing miseries. Milton.

2. Out of doors.

3. Externally; not in the mind.

Without were fighting, within were fears.—2 Cor. vii.

WOM/EN, (wim'en, n.); pl. of WOMAN. But it is supposed the word we pronounce is from Sax. wifman, and therefore should be written WIFMEN.

WON, (wun, pret. and pp. of WIN; as, victories won. WON, (wun,) v. i. [Sax. wunian; G. wohnen; D. WONE, } woenen, to dwell, to continue; Ir. fanaim.]

To dwell; to abide. [Obs.] Its participle is retained in wone, that is, woned. Milton.

WON, (wun, n.) A dwelling. [Obs.] Spenser.

WON/DER, (wun'der, n.) [Sax. wunder; G. wunder; D. wonder; Sw. and Dan. under; qu. Gr. φαινω, to show; and hence a sight; or from the root of Sp. esponto, a panic.]

1. That emotion which is excited by novelty, or the presentation to the sight or mind of something new, unusual, strange, great, extraordinary, or not well understood; something that arrests the attention by its novelty, grandeur, or inexplicableness. Wonder expresses less than astonishment, and much less than amazement. It differs from admiration in not being necessarily accompanied with love, esteem, or approbation, nor directed to persons. But wonder sometimes is nearly allied to astonishment, and the exact extent of the meaning of such words can hardly be graduated.

They were filled with wonder and amazement.—Acts iii. Wonder is the effect of novelty upon ignorance. Johnson.

2. Cause of wonder; that which excites surprise; a strange thing; a prodigy.

To try things off, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon.

WORM, (wurm,) n. [Sax. wurm; G. wurm; D. worm; Dan. orm; Sw. id, a serpent.] This word is probably named from a winding motion, and the root of serpent.
1. In common usage, any small, creeping animal, or reptile, either entirely without feet, or with very short ones, including a great variety of animals of different classes and orders, viz., certain small serpents, as the blind-worm or slow-worm; the larvae of insects, viz., grubs, caterpillars, and maggots, as the wood-worm, causer-worm, silk-worm (the larva of a moth, [Phalæna], which spins the filaments of which silk is made), the grub that injures corn, grass, &c., the worms that breed in putrid flesh, the bots in the stomach of horses, and many others; certain wingless insects, as the glow-worm; the intestinal worms, or such as breed in the cavities and organs of living animals, as the tape-worm, the round-worm, the fluke, &c.; and numerous animals found in the earth, and in water, particularly in the sea, as the earth-worm or lumbricus, the hair-worm or gordius, the teredo, or worm that bores into the bottom of ships, &c. Worms, in the plural, in common usage, is used for intestinal worms, or those which breed in the stomach and bowels, particularly the round and thread worms, (ascarides and oxyurias), which are often found there in great numbers; as we say, a child has worms.

2. In zoölogy, the term Vermes or worms has been applied to different divisions of invertebral animals, by different naturalists. Linnæus's class of Vermes includes the following orders, viz., Intestina, including the proper intestinal worms, the earth-worm, the hair-worm, the teredo, and some other marine worms; Mollusca, including the slug, and numerous soft animals inhabiting the water, particularly the sea; Testacea, including all the proper shell-fish; Zoöphyta, or compound animals, including corals, polypes, and sponges; and Infusoria, or simple microscopic animals. His character of the class is, spiracles obscure, jaws various, organs of sense usually tentacula, no brain, ears, nor nostrils, limbs wanting, frequently hermaphrodite. This class includes all the invertebral animals, except the insects and crustacea. The term Vermes has been since greatly limited, particularly by the French naturalists. Lamarck confined it to the intestinal worms, and some others, whose organization is equally simple. The character of his class is, suboviparous, body soft, highly reproductive, undergo no metamorphosis; no eyes, nor articulated limbs, nor radiated disposition of internal organs. Linnæus, Cyc.

WORTH, (wurth,) a termination, signifies a farm or court; as, in Wordsworth.

WORTH, (wurth,) v. i. [Sax. weorthan, to be.] This verb is now used only in the phrases, we worth the day, we worth the man, &c., in which the verb is in the imperative mode, and the noun in the dative; wee be to the day.

WORTH, (wurth,) a. [Sax. weorth, wurth, wurth; G. werth; D. waarde; Sw. wurd; Dan. verd; W. gwerth; L. virtus, from the root of viro, The primary sense is strength.]

1. Value; that quality of a thing which renders it useful, or which will produce an equivalent good to some other thing. The worth of a day's labor may be estimated in money, or in wheat. The worth of labor is settled between the hirer and the hired. The worth of commodities is usually the price they will bring in market; but price is not always worth.

2. Value of mental qualities; excellence; virtue; usefulness; as, a man or magistrate of great worth.

3. Importance; valuable qualities; applied to things; as, these things have since lost their worth.

WORTH, (wurth,) a. Equal in value to. Silver is scarce worth the labor of digging and refining. In one country, a day's labor is worth a dollar; in another, the same labor is not worth fifty cents. It is worth while to consider a subject well before we come to a decision.

If your arguments produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me. Beattie.

2. Deserving of; in a good or bad sense, but chiefly in a good sense. The castle is worth defending.

To reign is worth ambition, though in hell. Milton. This is life indeed, life worth preserving. Addison.

3. Equal in possessions to; having estate to the value of. Most men are estimated by their neighbors to be worth more than they are. A man worth a hundred thousand dollars in the United States is called rich; but not so in London or Paris.

Worthiest of blood; an expression in law, denoting the preference of sons to daughters in the descent of estates.

WORTHY, (wur'the,) v. t. To render worthy; to exalt. [Not in use.] Shak.

WOT, v. i. [Originally WAT; the preterit of Sax. witan, to know, formerly used also in the present tense.]

To know; to be aware. [Obs.] Spenser. WOULD, (woud,) pret. of WIL. [G. wöllen; L. volo.]

Would is used as an auxiliary verb in conditional forms of speech. "I would go if I could." This form of expression denotes will or resolution, under a condition or supposition.

You would go, } denote simply an event under a condition or supposition. He would go, } condition or supposition.

The condition implied in would is not always expressed. "By pleasure and pain I would be understood to mean what delights or molests us;" that is, if it should be asked what I mean by pleasure and pain, I would thus explain what I wish to have understood. In this form of expression, which is very common, there seems to be an implied allusion to an inquiry, or to the supposition of something not expressed.

Would has the sense of wish or pray, particularly in the phrases "would to God," "would God we had died in Egypt," "I would that you knew what conflict I have;" that is, I could wish such a thing, if the wish could avail. Here also there is an implied condition.

Would is used also for wish to do, or to have. What wouldst thou? What would he?

WOULD'ING, (woud'ing,) n. Motion of desire. [Not in use.] Hammond.

WOUND, (wound or woond,) n. [Sax. wund; D. wond; G. wunde; W. greana, to thrust, to stab.]

1. A breach of the skin and flesh of an animal, or of the bark and wood of a tree, or of the bark and substance of other plants, caused by violence or external force. The self-healing power of living beings, animal or vegetable, by which the parts separated in wounds tend to unite and become sound, is a remarkable proof of divine benevolence and wisdom.

2. Injury; hurt; as, a wound given to credit or reputation.

[Walker condemns the pronunciation woond as a "capricious novelty." It is certainly opposed to an important principle of our language, viz., that words in os, of Saxon origin, retain the regular Saxon sound of oo, as sound, ground, found, &c., while words derived from the French have the sound of ou in that language, as soup, group, &c. It is very undesirable to break in upon this rule, though woond is undoubtedly the fashionable pronunciation. — Ed.]

WOUND, (wound or woond,) v. t. To hurt by violence; as, to wound the head or the arm; to wound a tree.

He was wounded for our transgressions. — Is. liii.

Y, THE twenty-fifth letter of the English alphabet, is taken from the Greek υ. At the beginning of words, it is called an articulation or consonant, and with some propriety, perhaps, as it brings the root of the tongue in close contact with the lower part of the palate, and nearly in the position to which the close g brings it. Hence it has happened that in a great number of words, g has been changed into y, as the Sax. gear into year, geornian into yearn, gyllan into yell, gealew into yellow.
 In the middle and at the end of words, y is precisely the same as i. It is sounded as i long, when accented, as in defy, rely; and as i short, when unaccented, as in vanity, glory, synonymous. This latter sound is a vowel. At the beginning of words, y answers to the German and Dutch j.
Y, as a numeral, stands for 150, and with a dash over it, Ȳ, for 150,000.
YACHT, (yot, n. [D. jagt; G. jacht, from jagen. It is originally a boat drawn by horses.] A light and elegantly furnished vessel, used either for private parties of pleasure, or as a vessel of state to convey princes, &c., from one place to another.

YES, adv. [Sax. gise.]
 A word which expresses affirmation or consent; opposed to No; as, are you married, madam? Yes. It is used, like Yea, to enforce, by repetition or addition, something which precedes. You have done all this; yes, you have done more.

Yes, you despise the man to books confined. Pope.

[Walker's pronunciation of this word as yis is now considered vulgar, and no polite speaker, as Jamieson remarks, would so pronounce it on his authority.]

YEST. See YEAST.

YESTER, a. [G. gestern; D. gisteren; Sax. yestern; L. hesternus.]

Last; last past; next before the present; as, yesterday.

Note.—This is seldom used except in the compounds which follow.

YESTER-DAY, n. [Sax. gyrstan-dæg, gyrsterlaic dæg. See YESTER.]

1. The day last past; the day next before the present.

All our yesterdays have lighted souls
The way to dusty death.

We are but yesterday, and know nothing.—Job vii.

2. Yesterday is used generally without a preposition; as, I went to town yesterday. Yesterday we received letters from our friends. In this case, a preposition is understood; as, on yesterday, or during yesterday. The word may be considered as adverbially used.

YESTERN, n. Relating to the day last past.

YESTER-NIGHT, (-nite), n. [yester and night.] The last night.

2. It is used without a preposition. My brother arrived yesternight; where on or during is understood, but it may be considered as adverbially used.

YEST'Y. See YEASTY.

YET, conj. [Sax. yet, yet; Gr. eti; W. etto. It seems to be from the root of the verb get.]

ZEALOUSNESS, (zel'us-ness), n. The quality of being zealous; zeal.

ZEBRA, n. A pachydermatous mammal, the Equus Zebra, a quadruped of Southern Africa, nearly as large as a horse, white, with numerous brownish-black bands, of greater or less intensity, and lighter down the middle of each band. It is one of the six species which constitute the genus to which the horse belongs.

ZEBU, n. A ruminant mammal of the bovid tribe, the Taurus Indicus or Bos Indicus of the naturalists. This bovine quadruped varies in size, from a large mastiff-dog to a full-grown European bull. It is ordinarily furnished with a fatty excrescence or hump on the shoulders, which has been said sometimes to reach the weight of fifty pounds. It is found extensively in India and also in Northern Africa. It is often called the IVOYAN BULL or Ox and Cow.

ZECHIN, (ze'kin), n. [It. zecchino.] An Italian gold coin; usually written ZECCHIN, which see. If named from Zecca, the place where minted, this is the correct orthography.

ZECHSTEIN, a. [Ger.] A magnesian limestone, inferior in relative position to the lias. Brande.

ZED, n. A name of the letter Z. Shak.

ZEDO-ARY, n. A medicinal root, belonging to Curcuma Zedoaria, a plant growing in the East Indies, whose leaves resemble those of ginger, only they are longer and broader. It comes in oblong pieces, about the thickness of the little finger, and two or three inches in length. It is a warm stomachic. Cyc.

ZERIN, n. The gluten of maize; a substance of a yellowish color, soft, insipid, and elastic, procured from the seeds of the Zea Mays, or Indian corn. It is said to differ essentially from the gluten of wheat. Gurham.

ZEM-IN-DAR', n. [from zem, zemin, land.] In India, a feudatory or landholder under the government, with the right of underletting the land and certain other privileges, leading to much oppression. Malcom.

ZEM-IN-DARY, n. The jurisdiction of a zemindar.

ZEND, n. A language that formerly prevailed in Persia.

ZEND-A-VES-TA, n. A sacred book of the Guebres or Parsees, ascribed to Zoroaster, and revered as a bible, or sole rule of faith and practice. It is often called Zevm, by contraction.

ZENITH, n. [Fr. it. zenit; Sp. zenit or cenit. I have not found the oriental original.] That point in the visible celestial hemisphere which is vertical to the spectator, and from which a direct perpendicular line passing through the spectator, and extended, would proceed to the center of the earth. It is opposed to NAOIN.

ZENITH-SECTOIR, n. An astronomical instrument for measuring with great accuracy the distances from the zenith of stars which pass near that point. Brande.

ZEO-LITE, n. [Gr. ζεω, to boil, to foam, and λιθος, stone.]

A mineral species in the early works on mineralogy, but now subdivided into several, both on chemical and crystallographic grounds. Some of them are Scillite, Natrolite, Apophyllite, Scolecite, Laumontite. The term is now used to designate a family including these and other hydrous silicates of alumina, with some of the earths or alkalies. These species are most abundant in the cavities of amygdaloids, basalts, and lavas, though occasionally found in granite or gneiss. They are always subsequent in origin to the formation of the containing rock. Dana.

ZEO-LIT'IC, a. Pertaining to zeolite; consisting of zeolite, or resembling it.

ZEO-LIT'IFORM, a. Having the form of zeolite.

ZEPHYR, (ze'fir), n. [L. zephyrus; Gr. ζεφειρος.] The west wind; and poetically, any soft, mild, gentle breeze. The poets personify Zephyrus, and make him the most mild and gentle of all the syvan deities. Cyc.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton.

ZEPHYRUS, n. [L.] The west wind or zephyr. Spenser.

ZER'DA, n. [Africann.] A canine quadruped of Africa, with large ears, belonging to the genus Megalotis of Illiger. It bears some resemblance to the fox and jackal, but is smaller. C. H. Smith.

ZERØ, n. [It.] Cipher; nothing. The point of a thermometer from which it is graduated. Zero, in the thermometers of Celsius and Reaumur, is at the point at which water congeals. The zero of Fahrenheit's thermometer is fixed at the point at which the mercury stands when immersed in a mixture of snow and common salt. In Wedgwood's pyrometer, the zero corresponds with 1077° on Fahrenheit's scale.

ZEST, n. [Pers. زستان zistan, to peel. Class Sd.]

1. A piece of orange or lemon peel, used to give flavor to liquor; or the fine, thin oil that spurts out of it when squeezed; also, the woody, thick skin quartering the kernel of a walnut. Cyc.

2. Relish; something that gives a pleasant taste; or the taste itself.

ZEST, v. t. To give a relish or flavor to; to lighten taste or relish.

2. To cut the peel of an orange or lemon from top to bottom into thin slips; or to squeeze the peel over the surface of any thing. Cyc.

ZETA, n. A Greek letter, ζ or ζ', corresponding to our z.

2. A little closet or chamber, with pipes running along the walls, to convey into it fresh air, or warm vapor, from below. Cyc.

ZE-TET'IC, a. [Gr. ζητεω, to seek.]

That seeks; that proceeds by inquiry. The zetetic method, in mathematics, is that used in investigation, or the solution of problems. [Rare.] Hutton.

ZEGU-UIA, n. A small withdrawing room.

ZEGG'MA, (zég'ma), n. [Gr. ζεγμα, from ζεγνυω, to join. See YOKE.]

A figure in grammar by which an adjective or verb which agrees with a nearer word, is, by way of supplement, referred also to another more remote. Thus, in Virgil, "Hic illius arma, hic currus fuit;" where fuit, which agrees directly with currus, is referred also to arma. Cyc.

ZIBETH, n. [See CIVET.] A digitigrade carnivorous mammal, the Viverra Zibetha. This is a small quadruped, somewhat resembling the weasel. It inhabits both India and Africa. It is distinct from the civet, though nearly allied to it.

ZIGZAG, a. Having short turns.

ZIGZAG, n. Something that has short turns or angles.

2. In architecture, a molding running in a zigzag line. Of. Glass.

ZIGZAG, v. t. To form with short turns.

ZIGZAG-GING, pp. Forming with short turns.

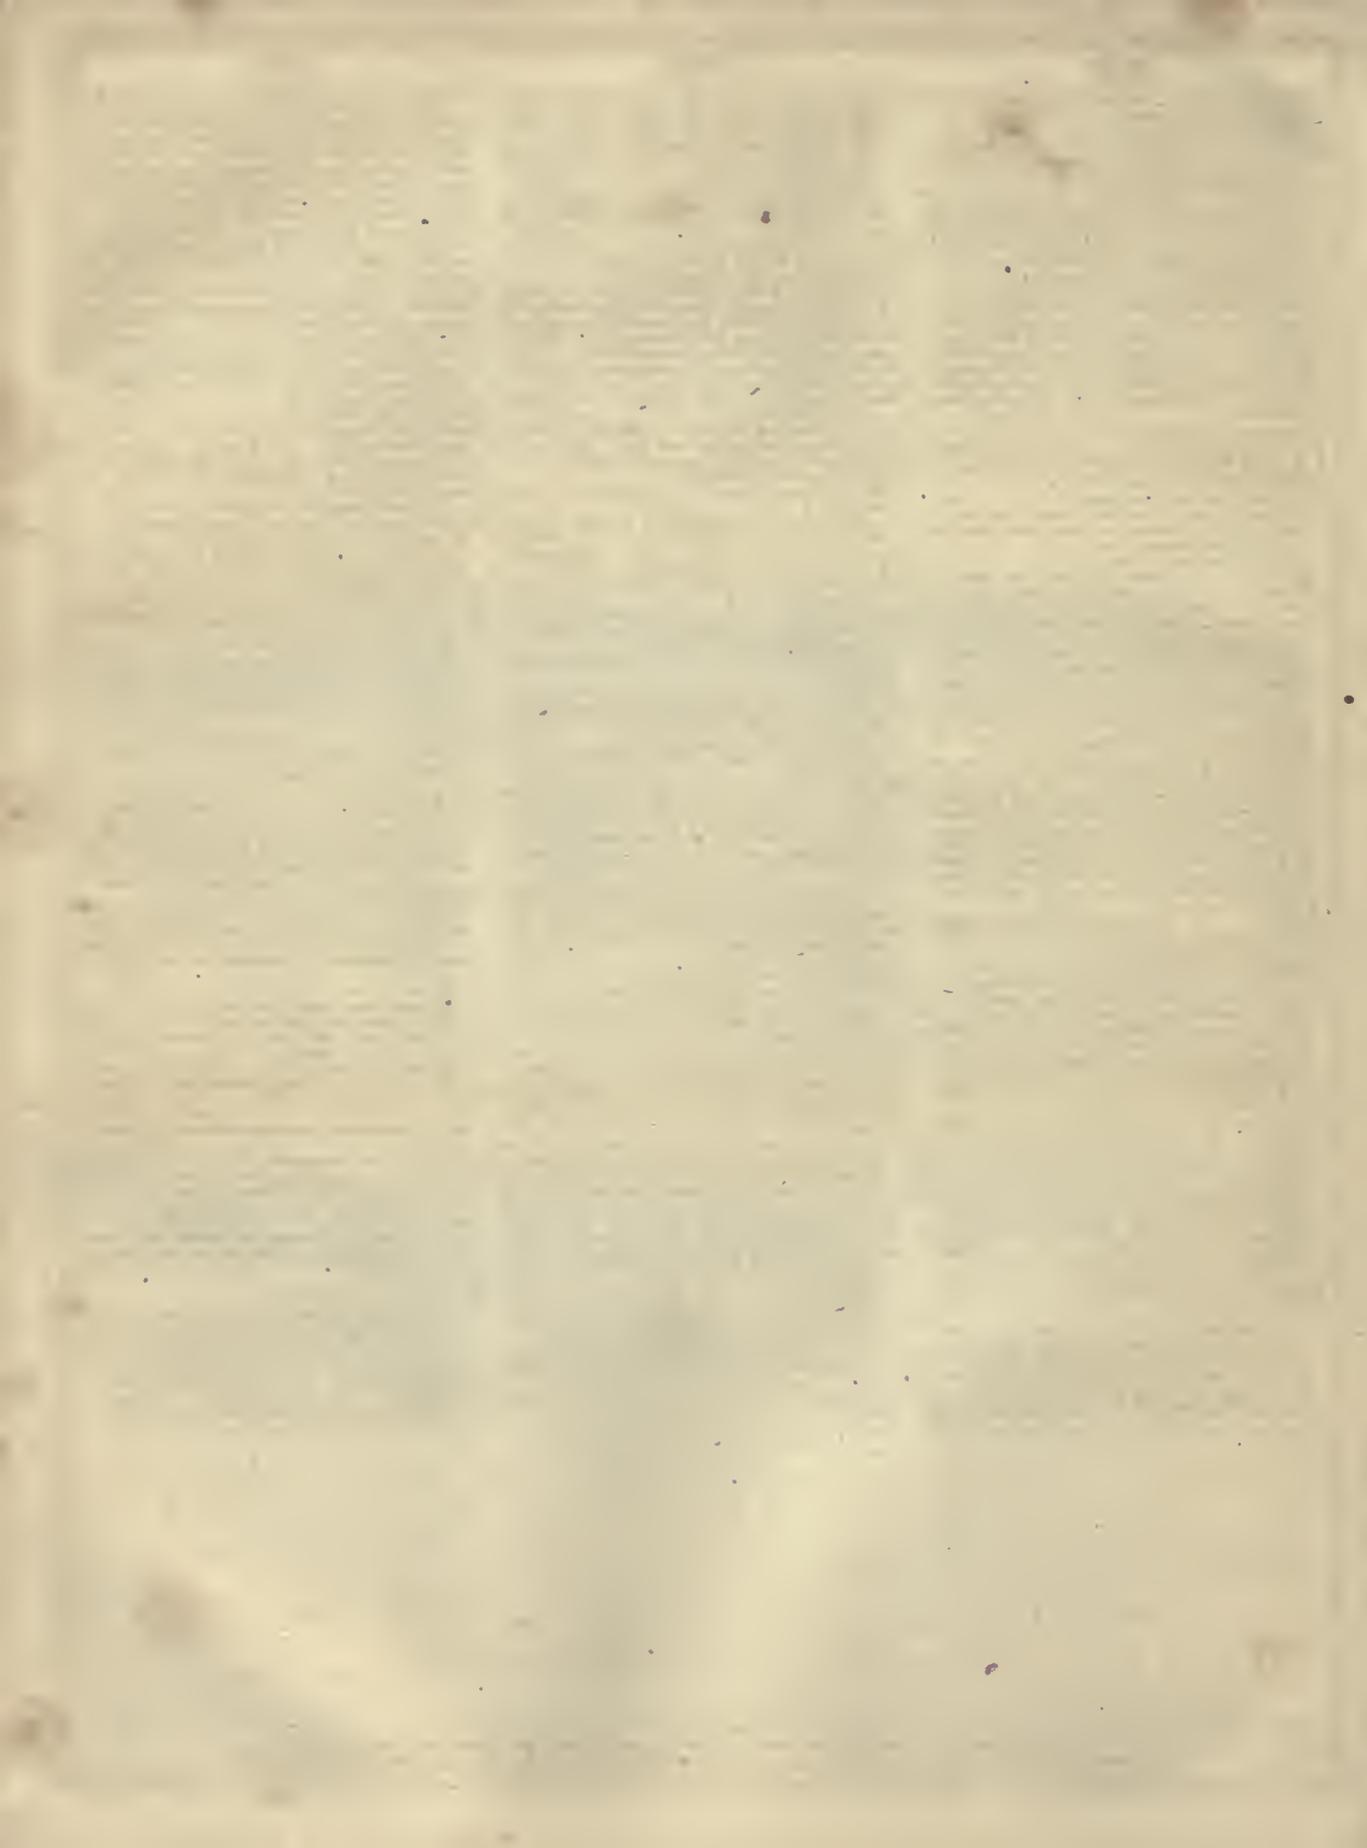

ZIGZAG-GING, pp. Forming with short turns.

ZIMENT WATER, or COPPER WATER, is a name given to water found in copper mines; water impregnated with copper.

ZYMOME, n. See ZYMOME.
ZINC, n. [G. Sw. and Dan. zink. The spelling Zinka, in accordance with the German, Swedish, and Danish, would be preferable.]
 A metal of a brilliant white color, with a shade of blue, and appearing as if composed of plates adhering together. It is not brittle, but less malleable than copper, lead, or tin. When heated, however, it is malleable, and may be rolled into plates. Cyc.
ZINC-IP'ER-OUS, a. [zinc and L. fero.]
ZINCK-IP'ER-OUS, a. [zinc and L. fero.]
 Containing or affording zinc; as, zinciferous ore.
Journ. of Science.
ZINC'ODE, n. The positive pole of a galvanic battery.
Graham.
ZINC'OUS, a. Pertaining to zinc, or to the positive pole of a galvanic battery.
Graham.
ZINCK'Y, a. Pertaining to zinc, or having its appearance.
 Some effervescence with acids, some not, though soluble therein, as to the zincy part.
Kirwan.
 The zincy ores are said to be grayed than other ores.
Kirwan.
ZINKEN-TRE, n. [from M. Zinken.]
 A steel-gray ore of antimony and lead. Dana.
Z'ON, n. A hill in Jerusalem, which, after the capture of that city, became the royal residence of David and his successors. Hence,
 2. The theocracy, or church of God. Kittó.
ZIR'CON, n. A mineral containing the earth zirconia and silica, occurring in square prisms with pyramidal terminations of a brown or gray color, occasionally red, and often nearly transparent. Hyacinth is the red variety. Dana.
ZIR-CO'NI-A, n. An oxyd of the metal zirconium, discovered by Klaproth, in the year 1789, in the zircon of Ceylon, and subsequently in the hyacinth of Expaty in France. It resembles alumina in appearance. It is so hard as to scratch glass. When pure, it is a white powder.
ZIR'CO-NITE, n. A variety of the zircon.
ZIR-CO'NI-UM, n. The metallic basis of zirconia. Berzelius first obtained zirconium in 1824; but Davy had previously rendered its existence quite probable. It is commonly obtained in the form of a black powder. Its metallic character is questioned by some.
ZIZ'EL, n. A rodent mammal, the Arctomys Citillus. It is found in Russia and Germany, and also in Asia. It is the Stalix, often called the Earless Marmot. It is a small quadruped.
ZOC'CO, n. [It. zoccolo; from L. soccus, a sock.]
ZOC'CO-LO, n.
 A sock, which see.
ZOD'IC-AC, n. [Fr. zodiacus; It. and Sp. zodiaco; L. zodiacus; Gr. zōdiakos, from zōon, an animal.]
 1. A broad circle in the heavens, containing the twelve signs through which the sun passes in its annual course. The center of this belt is the ecliptic, which is the path of the sun. It intersects the equator at an angle of about twenty-three degrees and twenty-eight minutes. This is called its obliquity.
 2. A girde.
ZOD'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to the zodiac.
Zodiacal light; a luminous track, of an elongated, triangular figure, lying nearly in the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes. In the evening, after twilight, it is in this latitude most conspicuous from January to April, and in the morning, before dawn, from September to December. Its nature is unknown. E. C. Herrick.
ZO'HAR, n. [Heb.] A Jewish book of enallactic commentaries on Scripture. Brande.
ZOIS'ITE, n. [from Van Zois, its discoverer.]
ZONE, n. [L. zona; Gr. ζώνη.]
 1. A girde.
 2. An embreiter'd zone surrounds bet water. Dryden.
 In geography, a division of the earth, with respect to the temperature of different latitudes. The zones are five; the torrid zone, extending from tropic to tropic 46° 50', or 23° 28', on each side of the equator; two temperate or variable zones, situated between the tropics and polar circles, and two frigid zones, situated between the polar circles and the poles.

 3. In natural history, a band or stripe running round any object. Gardner.
 4. Circuit; circumference. Milten.
ZON'ED, a. Wearing a zone.
 2. Having zones or concentric bands.
ZON'E-LESS, a. Not having a zone.
ZON'NAR, n. A belt or girde, which the Christians and Jews in the Levant are obliged to wear, to distinguish them from the Mohammedans. Cyc.
ZO-OG'IA-PHER, n. [See Zoögraphie.] One who describes animals, their forms, and habits.
ZO-O-GRAPH'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to the description of animals.
ZO-OG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and γραφία, to describe.]
 A description of animals, their forms, and habits. [But Zoölogy is generally used.]
ZO-OL'A-TRY, n. [Gr. ζῷον and λατρεία.]
 The worship of animals.
ZO'O-LITE, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and λίθος, stone.]
 An animal substance petrified or fossil. [Not in use.]
ZO-O-LOG'IC-AL, a. [from zoölogy.] Pertaining to zoölogy, or the science of animals.
ZO-O-LOG'IC-AL-LY, adv. According to the principles of zoölogy. Lawrence.
ZO-OL'O-GIST, n. [from zoölogy.] One who is well versed in the natural history of animals, or who describes animals.
ZO-OL'O-GY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and λογία, discourse.]
 That part of natural history which treats of the structure, habits, classification, and habitations of all animals, from man to the lowest of all the ZO-ON'IA, a. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal.] [tribe.]
 Pertaining to animals; obtained from animal substances.
ZO-ON'O-MY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and νομος, law.]
 The laws of animal life, or the science which treats of the phenomena of animal life, their causes and relations. Darwin.
ZO-OPH'A-GAN, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and φαγῶν, to eat.]
 An animal that feeds on animal food; a carnivorous quadruped.
ZO-OPH'A-GOUS, (zo-oph'a-gus), a. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and φαγῶν, to eat.]
 Feeding on animals. Kirby.
ZO'O-PHYTE. See Zoöphyte.
ZO-O-PHORE'IC, a. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and φορεῖν, to bear.]
 The zoöphoric column is one which supports the figure of an animal.
ZO-OPH'O-RUS, n. [Supra.] In ancient architecture, the same with the Faizze in modern architecture; a part between the architrave and cornice; so called from the figures of animals carved upon it. Dict.
ZO'O-PHYTE, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and φυτῶν, a plant.]
 A general term, applied to simple polyps, and compound individuals consisting of many polyps united together, as in most corals. They often branch like vegetation, and the polyps resemble flowers in form. The term formerly included sponges and corallines, in addition to the above. Dana.
ZO-O-PHYTIC, a. Pertaining to zoöphytes.
ZO-O-PHYTIC-LOG'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to zoöphytology.
ZO-O-PHYTOL'O-GY, n. [zoöphyte, and Gr. λογία, discourse.]
 The natural history of zoöphytes. Ed. Encyc.
ZO-O-TOM'IC-AL, a. Pertaining to zoötomy.
ZO-OT'OMIST, n. [See Zoötomy.] One who dissects the bodies of animals; a comparative anatomist.
ZO-OT'OMY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and τεμνω, to cut.]

The anatomy of all animals; the dissection of all animals for the purpose of discovering their structure, the functions of their several parts, &c. Zoötomy is divided into anthropotomy, or the anatomy of man; ornithotomy, or the anatomy of birds; ichthyotomy, or the anatomy of fishes, &c. The anatomy of brute animals, and more especially quadrupeds, is called COMPARATIVE ANATOMY.
ZOR'ILL, n. A fetid animal, a mere variety of the Memphis American, or skunk, found in South America. [In Sp. zorre is a fox, and zorillo the weasel of a fox.] Cyc.
ZOUNDS, n. An exclamation contracted from "God's wounds;" formerly used as an oath, and an expression of anger or wonder. Smart.
ZUF'FO-I-O, n. [It. zufolo, from zufolare, to hiss or whistle, L. sufflo.]
 A little flute or flageolet, especially that which is used to teach birds. Busby.
ZO'MATE. See ZYMATE.
ZO'MIC. See ZYMIC ACID.
ZU-MO-LOG'IC-AL, a. [See ZUMOLOOY.] Pertaining to zumology.
 [This word should be written ZYMOLOGICAL.]
ZU-MO-L'O-GIST, n. One who is skilled in the fermentation of liquors.
 [This word should be written ZYMOLOGIST.]
ZU-MO-L'O-GY, n. [Gr. ζυμῶν, ferment, from ζυμῶν, to ferment, and λογία, discourse.]
 A treatise on the fermentation of liquors, or the doctrine of fermentation. Cyc.
 [This word should be written ZYMOLOGY.]
ZU-MON'E-TER, n. [Gr. ζυμῶν, fermentation, and μετρεῖν, to measure.]
 An instrument proposed by Swammerdam for ascertaining the degree of fermentation occasioned by the mixture of different liquids, and the degree of heat which they acquire in fermentation. Cyc.
 [These should be written ZYMOΣΙΜΕΤΡΑ and ZY-MOMETEΡΑ.]
ZUR'LITE, n. A newly-discovered Vesuvian mineral, whose primitive form is a cube, or, according to some authors, a rectangular prism. Journ. of Science.
ZYG-O-DAC-TYL'IC, a. [Gr. ζυγῶν, to join, and ZYG-O-DAC'TYL-OUS, } δακτύλος, a finger.]
 Having the toes disposed in pairs; distinguishing an order of birds which have the feet furnished with two toes before and two behind, as the parrot, woodpecker, &c. Partington. Ed. Encyc.
ZYG-O-MAT'IC, a. [Gr. ζυγῶν, a joining.]
 Pertaining to a bone of the head, called also os jugale, or cheek-bone, or to the bony arch under which the temporal muscle passes. The term zygoma is applied both to the bone and the arch. Cyc.
Zygomatic arch. See ZYMO-MAT'IC.
Zygomatic bone; the cheek-bone.
Zygomatic muscles; two muscles of the face, which rise from the zygomatic bone, and are inserted into the corner of the mouth.
Zygomatic processes; the processes of the temporal and cheek-bones, which unite to form the zygomatic arch.
Zygomatic suture; the suture which joins the zygomatic processes of the temporal and cheek bones. Farr.
ZY'MATE, n. A supposed compound of the imagi-ZO'MATE, } nary zymic acid with a base. As there is no such acid, there can be no such salt.
ZY'MIC-AC'ID, n. [Gr. ζυμη, ferment.]
ZY'MIC-AC'ID, n. [Gr. ζυμη, ferment.]
 A supposed peculiar acid obtained by the acetous fermentation of vegetable substances. No such peculiar acid exists.
ZY'MOME, n. [Gr. ζυμη.]
ZYMOME, n. [Gr. ζυμη.]
 One of the supposed proximate principles of the gluten of wheat. It is a tough substance, insoluble in alcohol. There are doubts as respects the existence of zymome, as a truly distinct substance.
ZY-THEP'SA-RY, n. A brewery, or brew-house.
ZY'THUM, n. [Gr. ζῆω, to boil.]
 A beverage; a liquor made from malt and wheat.

P R E F A C E .

THE publishers of Webster's larger English Dictionary, desiring to append to it tables prepared expressly for their edition, which should exhibit the correct pronunciation of Scriptural, Classical, and Modern Geographical Names, requested the subscriber to undertake the direction of the work. This service has been performed in the following manner:—

The list of Scriptural Names added by Taylor to his edition of Calmet's "Dictionary of the Bible," has been carefully collated with that prepared by Walker. In those cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from Taylor's, Walker's method has been subjoined, or substituted in its place. The methods of Walker and of Taylor generally coincide, and the authority of Taylor has been preferred to that of Walker in those instances only in which Walker's is opposed by the best and the established usage. The words omitted by Taylor have been added from Walker, and the table, in the number of names and in their pronunciation, is substantially the same with that which usually accompanies Walker's "Key."

The table of Greek and Latin Proper Names contains all the classical names which are found in Walker's table, together with such as are furnished in addition by Trollope, in his edition of Walker's "Key," and by Thomas Swinburne Carr, in his "Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names." A few have also been taken from Pauly's "Encyclopedia of Classical Antiquities," and from Freund's "Dictionary of the Latin Language."

This table has been revised by Professor Thacher, of Yale College. In conducting this revision, he found it necessary to correct numerous errors, especially in the division of words into syllables, which, from errors of the press, a confusion of principles, and a want of care in the application of the rules, have been accumulated in other published tables of Proper Names. It will be seen, on noticing the changes which have been introduced, that the aim has been to remove all inconsistencies in the application of the rules of pronunciation which have been adopted by Walker in common with many others.

A few errors of accent have also been corrected, as more recent investigations have ascertained the quantity of some words, which earlier lexicographers, guided only by the general rules of quantity, had given erroneously.

The pronunciation of these names is in all cases determined by the place of the accent, and by the forms of the syllables which the accent determines. To attempt to indicate to the English ear the sounds of the vowels by marks which in classical usage are employed to indicate their quantity, would only lead to confusion, and cannot fail to be especially disadvantageous to students of the languages. The classical table is accompanied by a few rules, designed to guide the scholar in settling those questions of pronunciation which are not answered in the table itself. These rules do not disagree with those adopted in Walker's "Key;" but, in connection with the table, will guide to that pronunciation which is in vogue at the University of Oxford and other learned schools. It is believed that these few rules will be found to be more convenient and useful than the corresponding ones in Walker's "Key."

PREFACE.

The same preference will be given, it is believed, to the rules abridged from Walker, which accompany the Scripture Proper Names.

The Modern Geographical Names were mostly selected from Black's "General Atlas," (Edinburgh, 1846,) as being the latest and best authority. The design of the compiler was, primarily, to present the names of the countries, provinces, important towns, rivers, &c., on the continent of Europe and Spanish America, and to indicate their pronunciation as perfectly as this can be represented by English sounds. As these names frequently occur in books of all kinds, and occasion great perplexity to the reader and public speaker, and as their pronunciation is conformed to that of the languages to which they belong, it was thought advisable to prepare a copious list of words of this character, and to give them the chief place in the table. When these words have been Anglicized, the Anglicized has been subjoined to the native pronunciation.

To these European names many others have been added of places in Great Britain and the United States, in respect to the pronunciation of which, it was thought, information would be esteemed of any value, or could be given with any exactness. In a few instances, a provincial, and what will be thought by some an improper, method has been given. It was thought, however, to be impossible and useless to attempt to furnish a complete list of English and American names, with their pronunciation. The pronunciation of the great majority of these names is familiar to all, and is never sought for in a dictionary, while that of a very large number can hardly be considered as fixed.

A few names of places in other and ruder countries are given. There are two reasons, however, why it was not thought expedient to swell the list with names of this character. They are, in most cases, the result of an effort to represent native sounds by English spelling. If this representation is imperfect, it is of little authority, and is liable to constant changes. If it is perfect, or nearly so, the pronunciation is indicated by the name itself.

The catalogue of European names was prepared by a gentleman familiar with the countries and the languages in which the names occur; and it is believed that the pronunciation and the accent are as well represented as the nature of the work and the means at hand would allow. No pains have been spared to render this table as complete and convenient as any within reach of the public.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

OF

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

[ABRIDGED FROM WALKER'S KEY.]

1. In the pronunciation of the letters of the Hebrew proper names, we find nearly the same rules prevail as in those of Greek and Latin. Where the vowels end a syllable with the accent on it, they have their long, open sound; as, Na'bal, Jethu, Sira'ach, Go'shen, and Tu'bal.

2. When a consonant ends the syllable, the preceding vowel is short; as, Sam'u-el, Lem'u-el, Sim'e-on, Sol'o-mon, Suc'coth, Syn'togogue.

3. Every final i forming a distinct syllable, though unaccented, has the long, open sound; as, Al'i, A-ris'a-i.

4. Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, is pronounced like e; as, A'ri-el, Ab'di-el, pronounced A're-el, Ab'de-el.

5. The vowels ai are sometimes pronounced in one syllable, and sometimes in two; as, Ben-ai'ah, Hu'shai, Hu'rai, &c.; or, as Sham'ma-i, Shash'a-i, Ber-a-iah, &c., following in these, as in most Hebrew proper names, the pronunciation of the Septuagint version of the Bible.

6. Ch is pronounced like k; as, Chemosh, Enoch, &c., pronounced Kemosh, Enok, &c. Cherubin and Rachel seem to be perfectly Anglicized, as the ch in these words is always heard as in the English words cheer, child, riches, &c. The same may be observed of Cherub, signifying an order of angels; but when it means a city of the Babylonish empire, it ought to be pronounced Ke'rub.

7. Almost the only difference in the pronunciation of the Hebrew and the Greek and Latin proper names, is in the sound of the g before e and i. In the last two languages, this consonant is always soft before these vowels; as, Gellius, Gippius, &c., pronounced Jellius, Jippius, &c.; and in the first, it is hard; as, Gera, Gerizim, Gideon, Gilgal, Megiddo, &c. This difference is without foundation in etymology; for both g and c were always hard in the Greek and Latin languages, as well as in the Hebrew; but the latter language being studied so much less than the Greek and Latin, it has not undergone that change which familiarity is sure to produce in all languages. The solemn distance of this language has not been able, however, to keep the letter c from sliding into s before e and i, in the same manner as in the Greek and Latin. Thus, though Gehazi, Gideon, &c., have the g hard, Cedrom, Cedron, Cisai, and Cittern, have the c soft, as if written Sedrom, Sedron, &c. The same may be observed of Igeubarim, Igeal, Nagge, Shage, Pagiel, with the g hard; and Ocidelus, Ocina, and Pharacion, with the c soft, like s.

8. Gentiles, as they are called, ending in ines and ites, as Philistines, Hittites, &c., being Anglicized in the translation of the Bible, are pronounced like formatives of our own; as, Philistins, Whitfieldites, Jacobites, &c.

9. The unaccented termination ah, so frequent in Hebrew proper names, ought to be pronounced like the a in father. The a in this termination, however, frequently falls into the indistinct sound heard in the final a in Africa, Ætna, &c.; nor can we easily perceive any distinction in this respect between Elijah and Elisba; but the final h preserves the other vowels open, as Colhozeh, Shiloh, &c., pronounced Colhozee, Shilo, &c. The diphthong ei is always pronounced like ee; thus Sa-me'us is pronounced as if written Sa-mee'us. But if the accent be on the ah, then the a ought to be pronounced like the a in father; as, Tah'e-ra, Tah'pe-ne, &c.

10. It may be remarked, that there are several Hebrew proper names, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, have conformed to the Greek pronunciation; such as Acdama, Genezareth, Bethphage, &c., pronounced A-sel'da-ma, Jenez'a-reth, Beth'pha-je, &c. This is, in my opinion, more agreeable to the general analogy of pronouncing these Hebrew-Greek words than preserving the c and g hard.

Rules for the Quantity of the Vowels.

11. In dissyllables, with but one middle consonant, the first vowel is accented and pronounced long; as, Ko'rah, Mo'loch. The same analogy is observed in the penultimate of polysyllables; as, Baltha'sar.

12. When the accent is on the antepenultimate syllable, the vowel is always short, except when followed by two vowels; thus, Je-hos'a-phat. The secondary accent has the same shortening power when the primary accent is on the third and the secondary on the first syllable; as, Oth-o-n'as.

Rules for placing the Accent on Hebrew Proper Names.

13. The accent of Hebrew words cannot be better regulated than by the laws of the Greek language. By this it is not intended that every word which is Græcized in the Septuagint should be accented exactly according to the Greek rule of accentuation. For many words, that are purely Greek, do, when they are Anglicized, receive the Latin accentuation, instead of retaining the Greek. When the Hebrew word has been Græcized into the same number of syllables, we prefer the Latin accentuation to what may be called our own. Thus we accent Cathua on the penult, since it comes to us through the Greek Kathua, and because the Latins would have placed the accent on this syllable, and notwithstanding that the English ear would be better pleased with the antepenultimate accent. But when the Hebrew word does not contain the same number of syllables as the same word in the Greek, — as Mes'o-bah, Μεσσηβια, Id'u-el, Ἰδου'ελος, — it comes under our own analogy, and we place the accent on the antepenultimate.

14. As we never accent a proper name from the Greek on the last syllable, so, if the Greek word be accented on any other syllable, we seldom pay any regard to it, unless it coincide with the Latin accent. Thus the word Ged-e'rah is accented on the penultimate, because it is Græcized by Γεδρα, though it is accented on the antepenultimate, and this because the penultimate is long, and the long penultimate in Latin always has the accent.

15. All words ending in ias and iah have the accent on the i, without any foundation in the analogy of Greek and Latin pronunciation, except the very vague reason that the Greek word has the accent on this syllable. This reason is called vague, because the Greek accent has no influence on words in acl, iel, ial, &c.; as, Ισα'ιλ, Ἀβδ'ιλ, Βελ'ιαλ, &c. Hence the impropriety of pronouncing Messias with the accent on the first syllable. It is the broad, diphthongal sound of the English i, with the accent on it, which makes the word sound so much better in English than it does in French, or even in the true ancient Greek pronunciation.

16. The termination aim seems to attract the accent on the a only in words of more than three syllables; as Eph'raim, Miz'raim, have the accent on the antepenultimate, but Horon'a'im, Romath'a'im, &c., on the penultimate. This is the general rule; but if the Greek word have the penultimate long, the accent ought to be on that syllable; as, Phar'at'im, Φαρα'ων, &c.

17. Kemuel, Jemuel, Nemuel, and other words of the same form, having the same number of syllables as the Greek words into which they are translated, ought to have the accent on the penultimate, as that syllable is long in Greek; but Emanuel, Samuel, Lemuel, are irrecoverably accented on the antepenultimate, and follow the analogy of the English accentuation.

18. It is plain from these observations, that the Hebrew accent is regulated by a sort of compromise between this ancient language and our own; and the best we can do is to form a kind of compound ratio of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and English, and to let each of these prevail as usage has permitted them.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

The basis of the following Vocabulary is that of Taylor, in "Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible." To this has been added several hundred names from Walker. In the cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from that of Taylor, that of Walker is added or substituted in its place. The pronunciation of Walker is not always to be preferred, nor is it followed in actual usage by the best authorities. The notation of the vowel sounds may be consulted below.—ED.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

RULES

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

It will be perceived by a glance at the following table, that the indicated accentuation of the words, and their separation into syllables, prevent the necessity of inserting any thing here to guide to a correct pronunciation, except the rules for the sounds of the vowels and consonants.

In settling the place of the primary accent, which is the first and most important point in the pronunciation of a word, the aim, of course, has been to follow the ancient and simple rules, which direct, that, in words of two syllables, the penult be accented, and in words of more than two syllables, that the penult be accented if long in quantity, if not, the antepenult. The words have been divided into syllables, in accordance with the commonly received rules on that subject. The rules that follow have been derived, in the main, from Walker. Sometimes the language of Grant, or some other grammarian, has been preferred.

Rules for the Vowels.

1. Any vowel at the end of an accented syllable, and a, o, and u, at the end of an unaccented syllable, have the long English sound; as, Ca'to, Ce'crops, Di'do, So'lon, Cu'mæ, Me-lis'sa, Mo-los'sus, Tu-lin'gi; in which words the final vowels of the first syllables have the same sound as the corresponding vowels in the first syllables of the English words pa'per, ce'dar, sil'ent, eo'lon, du'ty.

2. A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the sound of a in fa'ther; as, Ga-bi'na, A-re'ne, pronounced Gah-bi'na, Ah-re'ne.

3. I, ending a final syllable, or preceding an accented vowel, has the long sound; as, I-u'li.

In all other cases, i, ending an unaccented syllable, is pronounced like e; as, Fa'bi-i, Ho-ra'ti-i, pronounced Fa'be-i, Ho-ra'te-i.

4. Y is pronounced as i would be in the same situation.

5. E and æ are pronounced as a would be in the same situation.

6. If a syllable end in a consonant, the vowel has the short English sound; as, Bal'bus, Del'phi, Cin'na, Mos'chus, Tus'cus, in which the vowels have the same sounds as in the English words man'ner, sel'dom, din'ner, scof'fer, mus'ter.

EXCEPTION.—E, in final es, is pronounced as in the familiar proper name An'des.

Rules for the Consonants.

1. C, before e, i, y, æ, and a, is pronounced like s; before a, o, and u, and before consonants, like k; as, Ce'a, Cic'e-ro, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cæ'li-a, Ca'to, Co'cles, Cu'mæ.

2. G, before e, i, y, æ, or another g followed by e, has the sound of j; before a, o, and u, and before consonants other than g, as above excepted, the hard sound, as in the English words gave, gone; as, Gello, Gi-gan'tes, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger, Ga'bi-i, Go'rgi-as, Sa-gun'tun.

3. Ch has the sound of k, except when preceding a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, when they are silent; as, Chtho'ni-a, pronounced Tho'ni-a.

4. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh. But when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant does not change into sh or zh, but preserves its pure sound; as, Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T, in the termination tion, also retains its original sound; as, The-o-do'ti-on.

5. S has, in general, the sound of s in this.

Final s, preceded by e, or a liquid, has the sound of z.

6. Initial x has the sound of z.

7. Initial ph, before a mute, is silent, as, Phthi'a, pronounced Thi'a. Initial p, before s, is silent; as, Psy'che, pronounced Sy'ke. Initial p, before t, is silent; as, Ptol-e-mæ'us, pronounced Tol-e-mæ'us.

8. At the beginning of Greek words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants mn, tm, &c.; as, Mne-mos'y-ne, Tmo'lus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Ne-mos'y-ne, Mo'lus, &c.

OF

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

THE words in the following table to which a * is prefixed are taken from "The Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names," &c., by Thomas Swinburne Carr.

Those to which a † is prefixed are such as Trollope has added to his edition of Walker's Key.

Those marked with a ‡ are taken from Freund's "Wörterbuch der lateinischen Sprache."

Those marked with a ¶ are taken from Pauly's "Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Alterthumwissenschaft."

Those to which no mark is prefixed are found in the list usually published with Walker's Key.

It will be observed, by any who may compare this table with those of Walker and Trollope, that many changes in the division of words for pronunciation have been introduced; but it is believed that these changes are all required by a consistent application of the rules of classical pronunciation, as they are generally received.

OF
MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

ENTERED, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1855,
BY GEORGE AND CHARLES MERRIAM, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of Massachusetts.

BRIEF RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

FRENCH.

1. VOWELS.

A, ah, long and short, (marked a.)

ai, as e in there, when followed by e, re, rs, ts, s, and when it has the circumflex, thus, ai, (é.)

When in the middle or at the end of words, it has the sound of the open acute é, (é.)

au has the sound of ô, (o.)

E has three sounds:—

é as the English vowel a in fate, (e.)

è and ê are similar to the e in there, (è.)

E, not accented, is either,

(1.) open acute, as e in the English words met, ebb, when it is followed, in the same syllable, by a consonant that is pronounced, or when the following syllable begins with x, (é;)

(2.) guttural, and like e in her at the end of monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables, (è;) or,

(3.) is entirely mute at the end of polysyllables. It is like the second e in there, and generally serves to lengthen or open the preceding vowel. In other places, where it is more perceptible, it is like the s in battery or over; and even then the French suppress it as often as they can, especially when the preceding or following syllable has a full sound.—REM. Es, not accented, in polysyllables, is silent.

Ei has the sound of e in there, (éu.)

Eu has three sounds:—

(1.) long and close. This sound has no standard in English, but it may be obtained by pressing the lips a little forward, in such a manner as to leave to the breath a narrower passage than for the e in over, and by dwelling longer upon it, (eu.)

(2.) short, somewhat more open than e in over, (eu.)

(3.) long and open, by opening the lips somewhat wider and in a more circular form than for the e in over, and by protracting the sound, (eu.)

I is long, as in the English word marine, and short, as in fig, (i, i.)

O has three sounds:—

(1.) long and open, as in the English word robe, (ô.)

(2.) short, as in rob, (o.)

(3.) long and broad, (ô.)

oi as wa.

ou has two sounds,—long, as in mood; short, as in good, (oo.)

U has two sounds,—long, as in tue, (û;) short, as in but, (ü.)

There is no standard for these sounds in English. To form the first, observe the situation of the tongue in pronouncing the English letter a. It widens itself into the cheeks, so that it touches the first grinders. When the tongue is in this situation, advance both lips a little forward, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow, oval passage to the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the grinders, and its tip against the fore teeth of the inferior jaw, and thus let the breath pass, which is necessary to emit the sound of the French u. The short sound is formed by dwelling less upon it.

2. CONSONANTS.

DIVISION OF SYLLABLES.—When syllables in any word are separated by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is to be spelled and articulated with the following vowel, and not with the preceding one. By several consonants which cannot form a compound consonant, the first must be spelled with the preceding, and the remainder with the succeeding, simple or compound vowel.

Compound consonants are the following:—bl, br, ch, cl, chr, cr, dr, fl, fr, gl, gn, gr, il, and ill, (when liquid,) ph, phl, phr, pl, pr, rh, sc, sg, sl, sm, sn, sp, st, sr, th, thl, tr, tl, vr.

The French syllables are divided into masculine and feminine syllables, the latter being those that contain e mute.

GENERAL RULE.—Every masculine syllable before another masculine syllable is short, so that the accent lies upon the last syllable that is pronounced.

B has the same sound as in English.

C has,

(1.) the sound of English k before a, o, u, and before consonants;

(2.) the sound of hard s before e, i, y, and before the hard vowels, a, o, u, when with a cedilla, (ç.)

c, before g and c, and after a nasal sound, is always silent.

ch has the sound of sh, and followed by a consonant, it is like k. At the end, it sounds like k.

D is like English d. It is sounded at the end of words, unless followed by s or preceded by r or n.

F is like English f.

G has two sounds:—

(1.) the sound of g in go, before a, o, u.

(2.) the sound of s in pleasure before e, i, y.

The hard g is rendered soft before a, o, u, by inserting the letter e between g and a, o, u. The e after the g is then not to be sounded, but is considered as a mark to show that the g must be pronounced soft.

The soft g, on the other hand, is rendered hard before e, i, y, by writing the letter u between g and e, i, y. Therefore the u that is immediately after the g must not be sounded, but is to be considered as a sign that g must be articulated hard.

gn is pronounced like ni in onion, minion, (final gne, represented in the table ny.)

Final g is silent except in the noun bourg, and in nouns terminating in berg, where it has the sound of k.

H is either aspirated or silent

REMARK.—When h is deemed aspirate, it only communicates to the vowel the properties of a consonant; that is to say, when the preceding word ends with a vowel, that vowel is never suppressed; if it ends with a consonant, that consonant is never connected with the vowel that follows.

J has always the sound of z in azure, or s in pleasure.

L has two sounds:—

(1.) It is like the English l.

(2.) It is liquid, like l in brilliant.

N. B.—The modern pronunciation, however, lets the l entirely disappear, and substitutes a long é sound (l, ll) for it.

EXCEPTION.—All nouns in ville are not liquid.

l, ill, preceded by another vowel, are always liquid, in which case il, ill, are compound consonants, the i being considered as a mere sign to make the l liquid; therefore the i must not be combined with the preceding vowel, which preserves its natural sound.

M, N, } when not nasal, are like the English m, n.

m, n, preceded in the same syllable by a vowel, are always nasal, unless followed by a syllable that begins with a vowel or h mute, in which case, m and n resume their natural sound.

NASAL SOUND.—An exact standard for the nasal sound is not to be found in the English pronunciation. However, something like it is found in the sound of en in encore. But if, in pronouncing these sounds, the tongue should once touch the roof of the mouth, the French nasal sound would be ruined.

There are four nasal sounds:—

em, sm, } en, an, }	ang.	om, } on, } aun, }	ong, or ong.
------------------------	------	--------------------------	--------------

im, } in, } aim, } ain, } ein, } ein, } o-in, }	ang.	um, } un, } eun, }	ung.
---	------	--------------------------	------

P is like the same letter in the English language.

Q, except in a few words, is always followed by u, and these two letters together have the sound of English k in king.

R is much more rolled than the English r. At the end of a word it is always pronounced, when preceded by a, i, o, u, y, and their compounds r, preceded by e in polysyllables, is silent, and in this case the e has the acute sound e. In monosyllables, the r is pronounced, and the e has a more open sound, resembling é.

rh is like r.

S has two sounds:—

- (1.) the soft of rose, please, between two vowels and following b.
- (2.) the hard sound of sister, in the beginning, and in the middle of a word, when preceded or followed by a consonant.

Final s is silent, with a few exceptions.

T has two sounds:—

- (1.) soft, like c in cedar, civil, in the syllable tion, unless preceded by s or x, in which case the t is hard.
- (2.) hard, like t in tit, in all other cases

th has the single sound of t hard.

t, st, et, final, are silent.

V is like English v.

X, (1.) is like gs in all words beginning in x or cx, followed by a vowel or the letter h.

(2.) like k in words beginning in exce, ezci, exs.

(3.) like ss, in Aix, Aix la Chapelle, Auxerre, Auxonne, Bruxelles, Luxeuil, and some few others.

(4.) like ks in all other cases.

Final x is silent.

Z is like z in zone.

Final z is silent.

Y is like single French i, but like double i between two vowels.

ITALIAN.

I. VOWELS.

A is sounded as ah in English, (a.)

E has two sounds:—

(1.) the open, as in the English word fair, (e and è.)

(2.) close, as in the word pain, (e.)

I is sounded like ee in English.

O has two sounds:—

(1.) the open o; (2.) the close ò.

U is sounded like oo.

N. B.—When these vowels are at the end of words, marked with an accent, they have a quick and sharp sound.

2. CONSONANTS.

B is like the same letter in English.

C is like k before a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is pronounced like ch in the words cherry, chilly.

cc followed by e, i, is pronounced like ich in the English word match.

cià, ciò, ciù, are pronounced cha, cho, choo.

ch, followed by e, i, is pronounced like English k.

D and F are like the English d and f.

G is like the English g in go, when followed by a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is like j in English, or like g in the words gem, ginger.

gg, followed by e, i, is pronounced like dg in the English word lodge.

gh, followed by e, i, has the sound of g in go.

gl, followed by i, and in all words in which i is followed by another vowel, is pronounced like ll in brilliant.

But in all words in which gl is followed by a consonant, it is pronounced like gl in glimmer.

gn, followed by a, e, i, o, u, is somewhat like the English ni in onion, minion.

già, giò, giù, are pronounced like ja, jo, joo.

gua, gue, gui, are like gwa, gwei, gwce, in language, languai, languid.

H has no sound. It is only used to denote the hard sound of the consonants c, g, before the vowels e, i.

J is considered a vowel. It is used instead of ii at the end of words, and sounds like ee in the English word fee, each e being distinctly pronounced.

L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.

Q. Quà, què, quì, quò, are pronounced like qua, que, qui, quo, in the English words quality, question, quibble, quote; the vowels à, e, i, o, adhering to their proper pronunciation, as stated above.

R, in the beginning of words, or in the middle when it begins a syllable, is like r in the words rain, marine. At the end of words, or when it ends a syllable, or preceded by another consonant, or doubled, it has a rolling sound.

S, in the beginning of words, preceded or followed by another consonant, or when doubled, is pronounced sharp, like sister. Between two vowels, and in the last syllable of all substantive and adjective nouns that end in ese, uso, usa, it is pronounced like s in the English word rosa. In the last syllable of all adjective nouns in oso, osa, s preserves its sharp sound.

sc, followed by e, i, is pronounced like sh in shell.

sch, followed by e, i, is pronounced like sh.

scià, sciò, sciù, are like sha, sho, shoo.

T is always hard, and

V like the English v.

W and X are not found in the Italian alphabet.

Z. GENERAL RULE.—In the beginning of words, or when single, it is like ds in the English word Windsor. When preceded by a consonant, or when followed by two vowels, or when doubled, it is pronounced sharp, like ts in the word benefits.

REMARK.—Italian words are pronounced exactly as they are written, there being no silent letter, except h. Every vowel always preserves its proper sound, independently of the consonants which accompany it.

SPANISH.

I. VOWELS.

A. This letter is pronounced as ah in English, (a.)

E is pronounced as a in the alphabet in English, (e.) except before n, r, s, z, in which case it is more open, as in the English word care.

I is pronounced as e in English. It is long when under the acute accent, (í.)

O is generally pronounced as in English. It is, however, necessary to observe, that it is sometimes open, (o.) sometimes close, (ò.) and sometimes long, (ó.)

It is open in words of one syllable, when it is not immediately followed by another vowel, and before n and r at the end of a syllable; at the end of a word, when it is accented. It is long whenever it is immediately followed by another vowel.

U is pronounced oo.

N. B. — From this rule must be excepted the syllables guc, gui, que, qui, in which the u is not sounded, unless the u has two dots over it, (u.)

Y. This letter is sometimes a vowel and sometimes a consonant. It is a vowel when it is preceded by another vowel, making with it a diphthong; and then ay and ey are like i, (i;) oy and uy, like oi.

In almost every other case, it is a consonant.

2. CONSONANTS.

B, in the beginning of a word, is always pronounced as in English. In the middle of a word, between two vowels, b is softened into nearly a v.

C has the sound of th in English, as in the word pitch, before e and i; and the sound of k before a, o, u. Formerly the c with the cedilla (ç) was used to soften the c before a, o, u. The letter z, however, has now been substituted for it.

Double cc, followed by e, i. The first c is hard, the second soft.

ch. These two letters are pronounced as in English in the word check.

D is pronounced, in the beginning of a word, as in English; but when the d is between two vowels, it is as soft as the th in the words though, tho. It is pronounced lisping at the end of a word.

F is pronounced as in English.

G is pronounced as in English before a, o, u. It is guttural before e, i, (g.) Before n, it has the English pronunciation.

For the syllables guc, gui, see the vowel U.

H is mute, and only lightly aspirated before ue. The letter h has been retained in many words, though not pronounced, and in several it has taken the place of the letter f, formerly used.

th. The Academy suppresses h after t, and instead of ph uses f.

J is guttural before all the vowels, (g, h.)

L is pronounced as in English.

ll. When ll occurs in a word, it is liquid, and pronounced as in the words brilliant, seraglio, William.

M and N are pronounced as in English.

ñ, having this mark, (ñ), which the Spaniards call n with tildé, (till'dé), has the same sound as n in onion, minion.

P and Q are pronounced as in English.

As to the syllables que, qui, look for the vowel U.

N. B. — Q is changed into e in all words where it is followed by ua, uo, ue, ui, (the u in the latter two preserving its natural sound.)

R, in the beginning and middle of words, is pronounced a little stronger than in English; but double r is much stronger than the English rr.

S is always pronounced hard, like double s, even between two vowels.

T is always hard.

V. The Spaniards often confound the sound of this letter with that of b; but the Academy disapproves of it, and recommends that it should be pronounced as in English.

X is pronounced as s when followed by a consonant; and it is lightly sounded s when followed by ce, ci. It is pronounced like ks between two vowels. In a few words ending in x, it is guttural.

N. B. — X was formerly used as a guttural, (unless the following vowel had the circumflex accent;) but j is now used instead before a, o, u, and g before e and i.

Z is only used now before a, o, u, and is pronounced like the c before s and i. It is always pronounced lisping after a vowel.

The pronunciation of Spanish by the Mexicans is different from that by the Spaniards:—

- (1.) They pronounce the liquid ll like the modern French pronunciation long ee.
- (2.) They pronounce b and v interchangeably.
- (3.) They substitute, in general, the s sound for the th sound.

PORTUGUESE.

1. VOWELS.

The vowels are the same as in the Spanish language. So, the o having a deep sound, nearly oo, is somewhat like oung.

2. CONSONANTS.

The consonants, with the following exceptions, are like the English:—

C. ç is like the same French letter.

ch is like English sh.

G is like the French g.

H is always silent, and serves only, when immediately preceded by l or n, to make these letters liquid.

J is like the corresponding French letter.

M and N are like the same English letters, but have sometimes a nasal sound.

Q is like the French, being always accompanied by a silent u.

R is like the Spanish, rolling.

X is like English sh.

GERMAN.

1. VOWELS.

A has two sounds:—

(1.) long, (a), as in the English word half.

(2.) short, (a), which has no corresponding sound in English.

ae, or a. (1.) long, as the sound between name and care; (2.) short, nearly like e in the word rent.

ai and ay sound broader than the English i in kite.

au approaches the sound of the English ou in our, loud.

aeu or äu has nearly the same sound as the English oi.

E has three sounds:—

(1.) long; 1st, the close or acute sound (é), the French e fermé. 2d, the open sound, (è), the e ouvert of the French.

(2.) short, (ê), nearly like e in the word help.

(3.) obscure in all unaccented syllables, like a in the English word sofa, except before liquids, where it sounds like e in the last syllable of the word heaven.

ei, or ey, are like i in fine, kind.

eu is similar to oi, oy, in boil, toil, joint.

I has two sounds:—

(1.) long, as in mete, (i.)

(2.) short, nearly as i in pin, fig, (i.)

ie is like long i, (i.)

O is, (1.) long, as in bone, (o;) (2.) short, (o), as in got.

oe, ö. (1.) long, French œ; (2.) short, French ø.

oi, oy, are like the English oi, oy.

U has two sounds:—

(1.) long, (oo), as in to, do, more, prove.

(2.) short, (oo), resembling u in bull, full, bushel.

uc, u. (1.) long French û; (2.) short French ü.

N. B. — Aa, oo, ee, are pronounced as a single long a, o, e.

2. CONSONANTS.

B is like the English b. But when it ends a syllable, or stands next to the final consonant or consonants, not being liquids, or the consonant b, it approximates to the sound of p.

C before a, o, u, au, and before a consonant, is pronounced like k. Before the other vowels, with a few exceptions, it is like ts.

D is like the English d. But at the end of a syllable, it approximates to the sound of t.

F is like English f.

G, in the beginning of a syllable, is always like g in the English word go. After a, o, u, e, i, a, ö, a, l, r, it has a peculiar lingual sound, somewhat softer than the guttural ch. (See Ch.)

When preceded by n, g (except in derivative and compound words) has the sound of a gentle k.

H, in the beginning of a word or syllable, is aspirated, as in the English words have, hold. Between two vowels, the aspiration is less strong, and sometimes hardly perceptible. At any other place than in the beginning of a word or a syllable, h is mute, and indicates then the length of the preceding vowel.

th is pronounced as a single t.

BRIEF RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

J is pronounced as y, and always followed by a vowel.
K is like English k.
L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.
Q is always joined with u. It has the sound kw, but is uttered shorter than in English.
R is sounded stronger than in English.
S is always like z, except before a consonant and at the end of a word or syllable, where it is pronounced sharp. It is also pronounced like z between two vowels and after a liquid.
T is like English t. Before i and a following vowel, t is pronounced like ts. But when s precedes t, t keeps its proper sound.
V is always like f.
W is like v. The w in final ow is always silent.
X is like ks.
Z is like ts.

3. COMPOUND CONSONANTS.

Ch is always guttural when preceded by a vowel, or a vowel and a liquid. Ch, in the beginning of a word, followed by a, o, u, or a consonant, is like k.
Chs, in primitive words, is like ks.
Sch, in primitive words, is like sh.
Gn and Kn. Both the g and k are hard.
Ph is like f.
Sz is like hissing s.
Tz doubles the sound of z.

SPELLING. — When two vowels are divided by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is spelled and articulated with the second vowel; by more than one consonant, all but the last single or compound consonant belong to the first vowel.

DUTCH.

1. VOWELS.

A has two sounds, like the German a. aa, } are pronounced like long a.
ae, }
E has the three sounds of the German a.
ee is like long open e.
I has the two German i sounds.
ie is like the German ie.
O has the two German o sounds.
oo in ong o.
oe is pronounced as oo.
U has the two French u sounds.
ui resembles the English oi in boy.
Y, or sometimes spelt ij, is equivalent to the German ei, ey, or the English long i sound.

2. CONSONANTS.

The consonants are the same as the German, except the following ones: —
G is always strong guttural, unless spelt gh, which is like g in the English word go, or at the end of a word preceded by n.
Sch is not pronounced as sh, but as sk.

SWEDISH.

There are nine vowels, a, e, i, o, u, y, ä, å, (æ), ö, (ø); and it is to be remarked, that they are never found compound.

1. VOWELS.

A is like the German a.
ä is long o, (ö).
å (æ) is like the German a, (æ).
E has two different pronunciations: —
 (1.) long, (the close and acute sound of the German e, — e,) in the beginning of words, where a makes a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word, as also in all syllables that have the tonic accent, and in all words terminating in het.
 (2.) like æ, or German e short, when it precedes the consonants f, l, m, n, r, s.

I is like the German i.
O. (1.) O is like a deep oo, in the beginning of words, when it is a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word.
 (2.) It is like a long o, when it is immediately followed by one of the consonants f, l, m, n, r, æ, t, and before double consonants.
æ (ø) is like the corresponding German letter.
U has almost always a sound like that of t-oo combined.
Y is like the French u.

2. CONSONANTS.

The consonants are the same as the English, with the following modifications: —

G, before a, o, u, ä, is always hard, as in the English word go, and also before e, when it is pronounced like æ.
 Before i, y, æ, å, and before the close and acute e, it is like the English y; but the g retains its hard sound when the acute e terminates the syllable. See J.
gjo, gju, has, in common pronunciation, the sound of yo, yoo.
H is always aspirated, except before v and j, where it is silent, and in ch, which is pronounced like k.
J is like the English y. In all those words where j is changed into g, that g has a very slight guttural sound.
K is hard before a, o, u, ä, and e, (having the sound of æ.) and before e acute, terminating the syllable or word.
k, before the vowels i, y, æ, å, and e acute, is pronounced as if there were Swedish j between k and the vowel.
 In common pronunciation, k before the mentioned vowels, and kj before a, o, u, ä, sound like English ch.
L, beginning a word, and followed by y, is almost silent, the y alone being pronounced, with a slight liquid sound before it.
S is like English s. When followed by k, it is like sk English, in all those cases where k has its hard sound; but like sh (or French ch, or German sch) when k is followed by i, y, æ, å, and e acute, or when followed by j and any of the hard vowels.

T is always hard.
tj, followed by a vowel, has, in common language, a sound like English ch, but much softer; tj, followed by a vowel, like sh.

DANISH.

1. VOWELS.

The Danish language has eight vowels: — a, e, i, o, u, y, å, (æ), ø, (ø). There is but one combined vowel that changes pronunciation. The doubling of the other vowels, which hardly takes place except with e, i, u, indicates only the length of the syllable.

The diphthongs are ai, ei, oi, øi, (æi), av, ev, ou, ui. These make two distinct sounds, pronounced by a single emission of the voice.

A has the two sounds of German a, (a). aa is pronounced long o, (ö) æ (å) is like the corresponding German æ.
ai is similar to the German ai, (i) au is like the German au.
E has the three German sounds: —
a is mute after a vowel, which it then lengthens;
 (1.) at the end of substantives terminating in i, when they derive from the Latin ia;
 (2.) at the end of the infinitive of verbs after a vowel, (e being the proper termination of the infinitive of all verbs);
 (3.) at the end of adjectives that terminate in a vowel, under the inflection;
 (4.) in the middle of some words, after a long vowel, to distinguish two words, which without the e would have the same orthography, though the vowels have a different length in pronunciation.

æe. The vowels e, i, u, are doubled in the middle of mono syllables, to indicate the e, i, u, long, except before the consonants b, d, g, v, p.
ei is like the German ei.
eu is like the German eu.
I is like the German i.
ii. See ee.
O is like the German o.
oi, øi, or æi, resemble the English oi.
æ (ø) is like the German æ.
ou is like the English ou.

U is like the German u.
 ui resembles u French.
 Y is like French u.

2. CONSONANTS.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions:—

D is not sounded after a consonant; and this omission is observed even when, by addition, the d passes into the following syllable.

After a vowel, d is pronounced like th.

G is pronounced slightly guttural after a vowel, and when it terminates the syllable.

Preceded by n, it gives a certain nasal sound to the n, without the g being distinctly pronounced.

H is always aspirate, and only mute before v and j.

J is like the English y.

R is like the German r.

V is sometimes found after a, in which cases it takes the place of the vowel u, and combines with the preceding vowel.

W is actually no Danish consonant, but borrowed from the German language, and is only employed in words borrowed from this language. It has the sound of v.

NORWEGIAN.

The written language being the same as the Danish, the Norwegian pronunciation differs chiefly from the Danish in the following instances:—

D is always like the English d.

G is always hard.

O is like the same Swedish vowel.

HUNGARIAN.

I. VOWELS.

A accented (d) has always the long a sound in father, (a;) unaccented, has the French short o sound.

E accented (é) resembles the e indicated in the following list by é; unaccented, it has the German short sound in help.

I has the two German i sounds.

O accented (ó) has a long and deep o sound, (o;) unaccented, has the two sounds of morn, lot.

α (ö) has the two sounds of the corresponding German letter.

U accented (ú) has the deep and full sound of the Swedish letter o; unaccented, like English oo.

ue, or ü, has the two sounds of the German, ue, (ü.)

Y, when a vowel, has the sound of the Hungarian i.

2. CONSONANTS.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions:—

C is always joined with some other consonant.

cs is like ch.

cz is like ts.

D is like English d. Followed by j or y, is like d and a gentle aspiration, nearly like the Italian gg followed by a vowel.

G is always hard, like g in the English word go.

gh is like a simple g.

g, followed by j or y, is like dj, dy.

H is always aspirate.

J is like English e, unless preceded by d, g, t. (See these letters.)

R is like the German r.

sz is like ss.

T and th are always hard.

ts is like the English ch.

tz is like ts.

ty and ty is like t followed by a gentle aspiration, nearly like the Italian cc followed by a vowel, though the pronunciation does not sound as sharp.

Zs is like the French j.

Y is almost always a consonant. (See dy, gy, ty.) Immediately preceded by l and n, it serves to make these letters liquid, corresponding to the Spanish ll, ñ, as in brilliant, onion.

POLISH.

I. VOWELS.

A has the two sounds of the German a.

E accented (é) has the German long æ sound; unaccented, the German short e sound.

I corresponds to the German i.

O accented is like English oo; unaccented, like long o, (o.)

U is like the German u.

Y is like the German short i.

2. CONSONANTS.

B is always hard.

C is like the German c.

ch like the German ch.

cz like the English ch.

D, F, and G, are always hard.

H is always aspirate.

J is like the German j.

K, L, M, N, P, like the corresponding English letters; but n accented (n') is like the Spanish ñ.

R is like the German r.

S is always sharp. S accented (s') has a sound of s mixed with German j.

sc, both accented, (s'c') resembles sts.

sz is like English sh.

T is always hard.

W is like the German w.

Z is like English z. Z, with a point over it, (z') is like French j; and z with an accent, (z'), which has no exact equivalent in English, resembles somewhat the ž.

WELSH.

The consonants are divided into mutes and semivowels, and again into labials, dentals, and palatals.

The vowels are of two kinds — the immutable and the mutable.

The mutable vowels are, a, e, o, w; the vowels that suffer no change, i, u, y.

The consonants, under the class of mutes, are b, p, c, g, d, t.

The semivowels are vocal and aspirated.

Vocal semivowels, z, x, l, m, n, r; and the aspirated, ç, ng, ngh, f, h, th.

L, m, n, r, are also distinguished by the name of liquids.

The consonants may be thus classed:—

Labials. Dentals. Palatals.

b, v, f, m, p, mh. | d, z, n, t, th, nh, s. | c, ç, ngh, g, ng, h, ll, l, r

There are various combinations of the vowels in the Welsh, forming diphthongs, triphthongs, and others, to the extent, in some cases, of six coming together.

All the vowels preserve their own primitive sounds under every circumstance of combination, without any deviation. So, therefore, whatever number come together, the sounds to be expressed are those of all such combined vowels, but rapidly passed over. There are instances of six vowels coming together, requiring so many quick inflections of the voice to express them.

The following is a list of the common combinations of the vowels:—

aa	ea	ey	iy	ow	uy	wy
ae	ei	ia	oa	ua	wa	ya
ai	eo	ie	oe	ue	we	yo aw	eu	io	oi	no	wi	yo
ay	ew	iw	ou	uw	wo	yw

aca aia aua awa awy eia eno ewy iau ieu ieu was wei aeo aie aus awe eai eio ewa iae iaw oea wai wiv sew aio auo awo eaw eua ewi iai ici oia waw wyw

1. VOWELS.

- A*, (1.) short or open a, in man, bar, as, glass.
 (2.) long, or á, is the same sound extended, as in care, dare.
- E*, (1.) short, as in men, bed, fervent.
 (2.) long, or é, as the French é, as in même.
- I*, (1.) long, as in street, keep (2.) short, as in king, sing.
- O*, (1.) long, or ó, as in the words note, bone, gone.
 (2.) short, as in go, no, got, not, lat, from.
- U* has the sound of English u in busy, and of i as in sin, thin, live.
- W*, (1.) is sounded as oo in good, hood; and as u in the word full.
 (2.) long, or ô, has the sound of oo in mood, rood.
- Y*, (1.) has the sound of u, as in the words run, turn, and of i as in first.
 (2.) long, or y, is sounded like the English y in Sunday, and is like the Welsh u, or less open than the y short.

2. CONSONANTS.

The names of the consonants were anciently formed by sounding the vowel i after all of them; but in the present popular mode, the following are exceptions to that rule, and they begin their sounds with e, c, ç, z, v, f, g, ng, ngh, h, ll, l, m, n, r, s.

The sounds of the consonants, like the vowels, are preserved invariably in all their combinations. The sounds of the letters must be considered as the perfect standard of the pronunciation of the Welsh language.

(A.) Labial Sounds.

The letters b, v, f, m, p, have the same sound as in English.

The mutation of the p, denoted by mh, is a kind of aspirated m, whose power may be found by uniting the sound of m, in the word am, to h, in the word here, by a quick pronunciation of the phrase I am here.

(B.) Dental Sounds.

The d, n, s, are the same as the corresponding English letters.

The z, which is a mutation of d; has the soft or flat sound of th, as in the words thus, neither.

The t has the sound of English t in not, ten, to, but does not take the sound of s in any case.

The th, which is a mutation of t, has always the sharp and hard sound of English th, in the words thank, both, nothing.

The nh, another mutation of t, is a sort of aspirated n, whose power is perceivable in the word inherent.

(c.) Palatal Sounds.

The h, l, n, r, are similar to the same English letters.

The c is always sounded like English k.

The ç, (or ch), being a mutation of c, is a sound which has no standard in English, but is the same as the ch of the German, or the χ of the Greek.

It is produced by the contact of the tongue and the palate about the eighth of an inch farther back than when k is expressed.

The ng is another modification of c, the power of which may be made out in the word Nottingham, by suspending the breath on the letter i, instead of the proper division of the word.

The g is always like the English hard g, as in go, give, again, leg, peg.

The ll is a sound peculiar to the Welsh; but the Spanish ll approaches very near to it. The sound is produced by touching the palate with the tongue, about an eighth of an inch farther back than when l is articulated.

The accentuation of all words is known by one general rule; that is, such as consist of several syllables have the accent on the penultima, and upon every second syllable backwards. The same principle is applied to several monosyllables coming together, by accenting every second word to the last but one inclusively.

GAELIC.

The Gaelic language has five vowels and thirteen consonants

1. VOWELS.

A is sounded as in the English words hall, halt; but before dh and gh, it has often the sound of the diphthong ao.

E represents two different sounds:—

- (1.) that of the Greek ε, or ea in the English word bear
 (2.) that of a in care.

I is like ee in English.

O has the different sounds of bonc, morn, lot.

U is like oo in moon, foot.

The vowels are divided into broad, a, o, u, and small, e, i.

In a word of two or more syllables, if the former ends with a broad vowel, the next syllable must begin with a broad vowel; if with a small vowel, with a small, though these inserted vowels are never pronounced. But in compound words, this rule may often be properly dispensed with.

All the vowels are either long or short. When long, they are generally accented.

In all the syllables of polysyllables, except the first, the vowels have a short and obscure sound, as in the English words sun, bird, mother; and the broad, and sometimes the small, are used for one another.

There are thirteen diphthongs, which are either proper or improper.

Ao and eu are improper, representing simple sounds; the former of which is only attainable by the ear; the latter is like that of the Greek ε, (epsilon.) All the other diphthongs are proper, the sound of each of the vowels being more or less heard. In a, ai, ei, oi, io, ia, ua, ui, the last vowel, and in ia, io, iu, the first vowel, is but faintly sounded.

There are five triphthongs, aoi, eoi, iai, iui, uai. They are pronounced like the diphthongs ao, eo, io, iu, ua, with the addition of a short i. They are all long, and never occur but in monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables.

2. CONSONANTS.

The consonants are, b, c, d, f, g, h, l, m, n, p, r, s, t.

Consonants are mutable or immutable.

Mutable are such as, by having an h subjoined to them, either alter or lose their usual sound, viz., b, c, d, f, g, m, p, s, t.

Immutable are such as are never aspirated, or have an h subjoined to them, viz., the liquids l, n, r.

After a short vowel or diphthong, the consonants are generally pronounced as when written double in English.

A consonant standing alone is sounded as if it were the initial letter of the following word, if it begins with a vowel, or as the final letter of the preceding word, if it ends with a vowel.

Bh and mh have the sound of v in English. Mh, in the middle or end of polysyllables, is either silent or stands for a gentle aspiration.

C is always sounded as English k. Ch has the sound of the Greek χ, or of gh in lough, as the Irish pronounce it.

Dh and gh, in the beginning of words, are commonly sounded like the English consonant y. In the middle or end of words, they are often silent, or have the sound of a

Fh is silent. [faint aspiration.]

G is always sounded as in the English words get, good.

Ph has the sound of English f.

S, before or after a broad vowel in the same syllable, is as in English. But when immediately before or after a small vowel, it has the sound of sh. S, in the beginning of words, when preceded by the article with t intervening, is silent.

Sh and th, in the beginning of words, have the sound of h alone. Th, after a long vowel, diphthong, or triphthong, is nearly silent; but after a short vowel or diphthong, it has the force of a rapid aspiration.

The immutable consonants l, n, r, when initials of words, not connected with others in a sentence, have a soft double sound, to be learned only by the ear. But whenever the order of construction requires that the mutable consonants should be aspirated, the immutable lose their double sound, and are pronounced nearly as in English.

When the consonants l, n, r, have their double sound in the middle or end of words, they are written double.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE TABLE.

In the preparation of the following table, the compiler has aimed at the utmost possible simplicity. For this reason, he has employed in his key as small a number of English sounds as was possible, and has preferred to refer most of the sounds in the several languages to their nearest English equivalents, rather than to introduce a separate notation and key for each language. To do the last, would have been to destroy the simplicity, and, in a great measure, to defeat the object, of the table, which was designed for easy reference, by all classes of readers. It will be sufficient, once for all, to observe, that certain sounds in several of the languages of Europe can be but imperfectly represented by the English letters and syllables which are given as their equivalents. The Swedish u is represented by the English oo or the French u. The Danish g final, not preceded by n, corresponds nearly to the English h guttural. The Dutch ui, uy, is represented by the English oi. In the German, a is indicated by the English a in far; g and ch are marked as gutturals; o, a, and u, correspond to the French eu and u; ai is indicated by i long; eu by the English oi. The Polish z has no corresponding English sound. The Spanish g soft and j differ from the German ch guttural in being pronounced also from the palate. In the French, u has no corresponding English sound; eu is nearly like the u in the English spur; m and n nasal are indicated by ng, but the sound of g should not be heard in the pronunciation; l mouillé final is indicated by ly, gne final by ny; in both these cases, the sound of y consonant being added to that of the l and n, as in brilliant and mignonette; oi is also expressed by wa, a being sounded as in far, except oin, in which a is sounded as in bat. In all names not English, ch at the end of syllables not guttural is tch.

YET IS SOLD AT A TRIFLING ADVANCE ABOVE THE COST OF OTHER AND LIMITED DICTIONARIES.

OPINIONS

STATE SUPERINTENDENTS OF COMMON SCHOOLS, AND LITERARY AND EDUCATIONAL JOURNALS.

I. MAINE.

From the State Superintendent.

From the "Common School Advocate," edited by the State Superintendent, HON. WM. G. CROSER.

"In presenting to the public this beautiful edition of a work which should be found in every family and school-room, and upon the table of every man of business and of letters, the publishers have rendered a service which richly entitles them to the commendation and gratitude of every patron and friend of American learning and art."

II. NEW HAMPSHIRE.

From the State Commissioner.

From HON. R. E. RUST, Commissioner of Public Schools for the State of New Hampshire.

"CONCORD, N. H., June 7, 1850.

"MESSRS. MERRIAM:

"Command my services in the circulation of the best Dictionary of the English Language. Yours, &c., R. S. RUST."

From the Commissioner of Common Schools in Cheshire County.

"Intending positively to retire from public life at the close of the present school year, the Commissioner most respectfully recommends to the honorable Legislature of New Hampshire, now to convene, that a resolution be passed to this effect:

That 'WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY, (UNABRIDGED),' be furnished, at public expense, to every School District in the State, to be carefully kept and preserved for the benefit both of teachers and pupils.

"JOSEPH PERRY,

"Commiss. of Common Schools in Cheshire Co.

"April 10, 1851."

[The other County Commissioners express similar views.]

New Hampshire Board of Education.—The County Commissioners of Common Schools, organized as a Board of Education, at Concord, Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1850, recommended WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY UNABRIDGED, as a book of reference to be used in District Schools.

"The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."—William Russell Esq., Teacher of Elocution.

III. VERMONT.

From the State Superintendent.

PROFESSOR EATON, State Superintendent of Public Schools in Vermont, and late Governor of that State, in a letter under date of October 9, 1850, remarks as follows:—

"It was my lot to be present and preside, about four years since, at a State meeting of our County Superintendents,—then the appointed Board for recommending books for School purposes,—when I had the gratification of seeing WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY adopted as the standard Dictionary for the schools of Vermont. I was gratified, because I felt that this work was worthy to be a standard,—that it afforded a safe harbor after long tossings upon a sea of doubt and uncertainty,—a secure resting-place from the fluctuations to which our language had been long subjected, and to which, without this work, it would still, as much as ever, be exposed."

At a meeting of the Teachers' Association, of Vermont, held at Montpelier, October 16, 1850, the following resolution was adopted:—

"Resolved, That, in the opinion of this Association, the placing a copy of Webster's Quarto Dictionary in each of our District Schools and higher literary institutions, as a book of reference, both for teachers and pupils, would be of incalculable benefit to the cause of education, by the influence it would exert in creating habits of investigation and accuracy as to the use of language, as well as by placing before our youth an amount of information which can be found in no other uninspired volume."

IV. MASSACHUSETTS.

From the State Superintendent.

"So far as I know, there is a unanimity of opinion that Dr. Webster's is the best defining Dictionary in the English language. Whoever may choose to purchase the Dictionary of other lexicographers, I should earnestly advise to purchase Mr. Webster's also; and I assure you it will give me pleasure, as far as I have the opportunity and ability, to recommend to Students, and ESPECIALLY ALL THOSE WHO ARE MAINLY DEPENDENT ON SELF-CULTURE, OR SELF-EDUCATION, TO KEEP A COPY OF THIS WORK BY THEIR SIDE, AS A HAND-BOOK."—Hon. Horace Mann, late Sec'y Board of Education for Massachusetts.

The Committee on Education, of the Massachusetts Legislature, speak of the work in the following terms:—

"Webster's Dictionary is widely and favorably known to the public, not only in this country, but in all others where the English language is used. As a defining dictionary, its superiority over all others is universally admitted. It is, indeed, a most learned and valuable work, reflecting high honor upon the literary character of our country, and cost the author the labor and research, more or less continuous, of sixty years of his life. It has received the highest commendations from persons of the greatest consideration in this country and in England. In the latter it has been republished, and it is, at the present time, the avowed basis of an 'Imperial Dictionary,' in the course of publication in Great Britain. It may be justly regarded, not only as a most reliable and exact defining dictionary, but a complete encyclopedia of the technical terms of science and the arts."

"The copious list of Geographical Names is an important feature of this work for schools, and is itself WORTH THE COST OF THE WHOLE WORK."
—School Committee of Framingham.

In 1850, the Legislature of Massachusetts passed a law, giving, at the expense of the State, a copy of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, or Worcester's Dictionary, at its option, to each School District that would provide a desk for its safe keeping. On the 1st instant, one year from the time the law took effect, of the 3700 Districts, 3065 had taken Webster, and 105 Worcester, leaving say 450 only that have not availed themselves of the appropriation. A gentleman, who visited the schools of the State last summer and autumn, cooperating with the Board of Education, says, "No measure of our Legislature was more popular or useful. In many towns, the Dictionary [Webster's] was the only authoritative judge and umpire in literary matters," &c.

V. RHODE ISLAND.

From the City Superintendent.
From PAOR. S. S. GREEN, recently elected Superintendent of Public Schools for Providence.

"All our teachers should have access to a work of this kind. They need to consult it to enable them to give their pupils exact ideas of the many difficult words which are constantly occurring, particularly scientific or technical terms, and also for the purpose of giving the appropriate pronunciation to Geographical and other names. Pupils should be accustomed from the very first to acquire well-defined and distinct ideas of the meaning of words. This gives an exactness to their knowledge which will be of invaluable service to them through life. But a large portion of our teachers are not able to impart this critical and exact information without access to just such a work as Dr. Webster's Dictionary, and but few have the means to provide it for themselves. The pupils, too, especially those of more mature minds, should have the advantage of consulting such a work. If their teachers are critical in their habits, the pupils also will soon acquire the same. They will be willing to pass over no word occurring in their lesson, without endeavoring to understand its full and exact meaning, if the means of information are accessible to them."

VI. CONNECTICUT.

"The etymological department throws new and striking light on the history of language. The vocabulary is enlarged by the addition of many thousand words, comprising the technical words of science and the arts—words not found in any other dictionary, and many of them the words for the precise meaning of which the general reader is most frequently at a loss. The orthography of several classes of words, instead of following capricious and obsolete modes of spelling, is conformed to the present usage of the best writers; and the definitions have a character of discrimination, copiousness, perspicuity, and accuracy, not found, we believe, in any other dictionary of the English language."

Jeremiah Day, S. T. D., LL. D., Pres. Yale College; Simeon Baldwin, late Judge of the Superior Court; David Daggett, LL. D., Prof. Law, Yale College, and Judge Superior Court; Benjamin Silliman, M. D.,

"So complete as to be a substitute for all other dictionaries of the language."

The capital of the Fund, Sept. 2, 1849, was $2,076,602.75. Dividend to each scholar, $1.50. Number of School Districts, 1649. Children between 4 and 16 years of age, 92,055.

VII. NEW YORK.

From the State Superintendent.

From the Annual Report of HON. CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Secretary of State, and Superintendent of Public Schools for the State, presented to the New York Legislature, January, 1850.

"In connection with the subject of district libraries, the Superintendent deems it his duty particularly to direct the attention of the trustees and inhabitants of the several school districts to a work of undoubted utility, and preëminently of a national character, which should find a place in every library, viz.: Webster's Unabridged Quarto Dictionary, published by Messrs. G. & C. Merriam, of Springfield, Massachusetts. As a standard of orthography and orthoepy, its claims to general adoption have been recognized by the most eminent scholars and statesmen of our land; and as a purely American work, prepared at great expense, and emanating from a source entitled to the highest credit and respect, it commends itself strongly to the adoption of our School Districts generally."

State of New York, Secretary's Office, Department of Common Schools.

ALBANY, Dec. 24, 1849.

"Messrs. G. & C. MERRIAM:
"Independently of the great merits of this truly national work as a complete exposition of the English language, the style in which it is presented is creditable in the extreme to the enterprise and taste of the publishers, and honorable to the country. * * * Whatever this Department can do to place it within the reach of the officers and inhabitants of the several School Districts of the State, will most cheerfully be done."

"If the use of my name can be of any service whatever in further extending the knowledge of the great accession which the publication of this work has made to our national literature, and of the high appreciation with which it is regarded by the friends of education generally, you are at perfect liberty to add it to the list of those already obtained; and any thing I can do, as the editor of an educational journal, to promote its circulation, will be most cheerfully performed."

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
SAMUEL S. RANDALL,
Dept. Supt. Com. Schools, and Ed. N. Y. State District School Journal."

"While this Dictionary is the most complete work of the kind that any nation can boast of, it is also one of the cheapest books ever printed in this country."
—N. Y. State District School Journal.

The Standard in the State Normal School.

"Resolved, unanimously, That Webster's Quarto Dictionary be the standard in the New York State Normal School."
WAL. R. CAMPBELL, Clerk Ex. Com.

ALBANY, March 12, 1850.

Recommended by the Regents.

At a meeting of the Regents, held at the Capitol, Albany, February 14, 1850,— "Resolved, unanimously, That the new edition of Webster's Dictionary in Quarto, edited by Prof. Chauncey A. Goodrich, and published by G. & C. Merriam, Springfield, Mass., be recommended to be purchased for the libraries of academies under the visitation of the Regents. [About 150 in number.]

"A true copy,
T. ROMEYN BECK."
From Hon. JOHN C. SPENCER, formerly Secretary of State, and State Superintendent of Com. Schools.
ALBANY, June 18, 1851.

"Messrs. G. & C. MERRIAM.
"Gentlemen: After the testimony to the extraordinary merit of Dr. Webster's Dictionary of the English language, which has been borne by the illustrious Statesmen, Scholars, and Writers of this country, and by the most competent Judges in England, it seems almost presumptuous for me to express an opinion on the subject; but as your polite note of the 16th inst. seems to invite such an expression, I comply."

"More than twenty years ago I procured the Quarto edition, and have used it constantly ever since. My pursuits in life have rendered it necessary to consult it frequently, as well as other works of a kindred or similar character, particularly Dr. Johnson's Quarto, of the latest and best edition, Richardson's Dictionary, Crabbe's Synonymes, and Horne Tooke's Diversions of Purley. In professional, political, and literary discussions, the turning-point of the argument has often been the exact meaning of words, as ascertained not only from their use, but from their derivation. While in many cases, perhaps in the majority of them, the works referred to have failed to give the desired information, that of Dr. Webster has always furnished precisely what has been desired; and I have long felt individually indebted to the illustrious author for the labor and time he has saved me by his unwearied patience, profound learning, and unsurpassed industry."

"It is unquestionably the very best Dictionary of our language extant. It is a model of copiousness and precision; and its great accuracy in the definition and derivation of words gives it an authority that no other work on the subject possesses. It is constantly cited and relied on in our Courts of Justice, in our Legislative bodies, and in public discussions, as entirely conclusive."

"It is scarcely necessary to add that such a work is a treasure which cannot be dispensed with by any one who would thoroughly understand and correctly use his mother tongue. It should be in every school in our land, that our youth may not be obliged, as I have been, to unlearn the false pronunciation, the unsound philology, and the erroneous definitions, which were taught me in my childhood."

"The elegance and correctness of your edition—so cheap for a book of its size—one third of what I gave for the first edition— are alike creditable to your taste and enterprise, and worthy of the great work which will ever stand forth a monument of the science and literature of our country."

(Signed,)

John C. Spencer.

Legislative Provision.

"The Legislature of New York, at its recent session, made provision for each School District placing a copy of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary in its library, and on the teacher's desk. The cities of New York, Buffalo, Utica, Troy, &c., had previously supplied their own schools."

VIII. NEW JERSEY.

From the State Superintendent.

"In the exhibition of the Etymology of the language, it is superior to any other Dictionary."

"The Definitions are given by a precise and full description, and not by a loose collection of terms more or less synonymous."

"The Vocabulary has been judiciously enlarged by the addition of all the words in actual use, that are properly English."

"In Orthography the changes proposed by Dr. Webster, which have not been sanctioned by general adoption, and which seem to be too violent departures from the general spelling, have been judiciously omitted, while real and important improvements have been wisely retained."

EDUCATIONAL TESTIMONIALS.

"In Pronunciation the scheme of notation is simple, and in cases which demand it, the words are respelled. The aim has been to give the actual pronunciation, as practised by the truly educated among the English and American people, ascertained by actual observation, inquiries, and correspondence. The artificial and affected pronunciation is avoided. The whole subject has been elaborated by Professor Goodrich, whose professional duty it has been to train public speakers for thirty years."

"The Table of Scriptural Names has been carefully revised. The Classical Table has received large additions, and has been revised and corrected in some important particulars, in which the table of Walker is deficient and erroneous."

"The List of Geographical Names is the most extensive that we have seen in connection with any English Dictionary, comprising, as it does, 12,000 to 13,000 names. The pronunciation, as given by respelling the names with figured vowels, is easily indicated. By means of the table, the most important names, especially those of the continent of Europe, can be correctly pronounced."

"It is with pleasure that we greet this new and valuable contribution to American literature. We recommend it to all who desire to possess THE MOST COMPLETE, ACCURATE, AND RELIABLE DICTIONARY OF THE LANGUAGE."

"THEODORE F. KING,
"Superintendent of Schools in New Jersey."

IX. OHIO.

From the State Superintendent.

From Hon. SAMUEL GALLOWAY, Secretary of State, and Superintendent of Common Schools for the State of Ohio.

"SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE, COLUMBUS, OHIO, Jan. 2, 1850."

"Messrs. G. & C. Merriam, Springfield, Mass.:—I have used, exclusively, within the last year, in all my investigations and in all cases of doubt and difficulty in language, 'Webster's Unabridged Dictionary,' revised by Prof. Goodrich, and I can, as I do, cordially recommend it as the best Dictionary of the English language extant with which I am acquainted. It will be my pleasure to promote as fully as I can its use and circulation. It is gratifying to me, as it must be gratifying to every lover of English literature, that a work so preëminent in merit and so indispensable to our wants, has been furnished.

Respectfully,
"SAMUEL GALLOWAY."

X. MICHIGAN.

From the State Superintendent.

From the Annual Report of the Hon. F. W. SHERMAN, Superintendent of Public Instruction; presented to the Legislature of Michigan, Jan. 1, 1851.

"No reason need be assigned for recommending a return to the elementary works of Dr. Webster. Although perhaps subject to objection, others in some respects are no more perfect. Besides, his Dictionary is the standard of our language, and has become a national treasure, as well as the monument of his industry and genius.

"This work has been adopted as the standard Dictionary in the schools and colleges of most of the States of the Union, and State officers in charge of the system and subject of Education, in various States, have recommended appropriations for its purchase by the Legislature. Of its intrinsic worth, no one can doubt, and its inestimable value as a book of reference, in each township library, cannot be too fully appreciated. The Legislature of Massachusetts have made provision for furnishing a copy, at the expense of the State, to every school district who desire to possess it. In short, the great ability of the work, its wide-spread reputation, the copiousness of its information, its exactness and fullness in definition and its usefulness in all respects, indicate it as the great "uninspired" book of the English language, and, as such, demanding at the hands of the constituted authorities, a permanent place in the archives of each and all of our townships."

[Similar language has been used by the late Superintendent, Mr. Mayhew, Senator Felch, Hon. Lewis Cass, &c.]

XI. ILLINOIS.

From the State Superintendent.

From Hon. DAVID L. GREGG, Secretary of State, and Superintendent of Public Schools for the State of Illinois, Dec. 5, 1850.

"I have long regarded Dr. Webster's Dictionary as by far the best which the English language affords, and I most fully concur in the commendations bestowed upon it, both in Great Britain and America. It is truly complete, accurate, and reliable—precise in its definitions—profoundly learned as to etymology—and in orthography and pronunciation conformable to the best usage. It may well be said to stand without a rival in the annals of English lexicography."

"The merits of this work are above all praise. It is pronounced by all competent judges to be the only reliable Dictionary of the language. Every family should possess it, and especially should it be a permanent fixture of every school in the land."—Illinois Journal of Education, June 1, 1850.

XII. IOWA.

From the State Superintendent.

"As an American, I am proud of the work. It is gratifying to see that it gives such universal satisfaction. I shall recommend it as the standard in the PUBLIC SCHOOLS of this State."—Thomas H. Benton, Jr., Superintendent of Public Instruction in Iowa.

XIII. MISSOURI.

Webster's Quarto Dictionary for the School Room.

At a meeting of the Board of Public Instruction of St. Louis, March 13, 1849,—

"Resolved, That a copy of Webster's Unabridged Quarto Dictionary be placed upon the desk of each teacher in the Grammar department of the St. Louis Public Schools, as a book of reference for teachers and pupils."

XIV. PENNSYLVANIA.

From Rev. Dr. Ely.

"PHILADELPHIA, April 26, 1830.

XVI. CANADA.

Webster's Quarto Dictionary Unabridged.

"In the unanimous judgment of the leading literary press of Great Britain and the United States, Webster's Dictionary is the most learned, the most comprehensive, and the most complete work of the kind in the English language; containing all that is excellent in Dr. Johnson's great work, with numerous philological corrections, more concise and accurate definitions, in many instances, and the addition of some sixteen thousand words—these additions consisting for the most part of terms used in the various departments of science and the arts, in commerce, manufactures, merchandise, and the liberal professions."—Jour. of Education for Upper Canada, Toronto, Jan., 1849.

XVII. GREAT BRITAIN.

"This volume must find its way into all our public and good private libraries, for it provides the English student with a mass of the most valuable information, which he would in vain seek for elsewhere."—London Literary Gazette.

English Standard Lexicography.

DR. WEBSTER'S SERIES OF DICTIONARIES.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY:

THE ENTIRE WORK UNABRIDGED.

PUBLISHED BY G. & C. MERRIAM, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

WEBSTER'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES;

PUBLISHED BY MASON BROTHERS, 23 PARK ROW, OPPOSITE THE ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK.

The sales of this Standard Dictionary in 1852, including the various editions for Schools and Colleges, the Quarto Unabridged, and Octavo, exceeded and since then, their average increase has been nearly ONE HUNDRED PER CENT.

125,000 COPIES,

There is no other acknowledged standard in this country or Great Britain. The vast proportion of the Elementary School Books in use, in the United States, are based on Webster; thus securing to us the inestimable advantage of uniform pronunciation, and entirely excluding those provincialisms which render the language of some Counties in England wholly unintelligible in others.

The publishers have the gratification of presenting the work in all the various forms most useful, and best adapted to the wants of the community. COLLEGES, ACADEMIES, the HIGHER SCHOOLS and SEMINARIES, our COMMON and PRIMARY SCHOOLS as well as PROFESSIONAL and BUSINESS men of the country, may each and all here find a in one or another of the following forms in which the work is presented, containing every thing they may require, and in the most economical shape.

I. THE QUARTO UNABRIDGED.

In One Volume, Crown Quarto, of 1452 pp.—Price reduced to Six Dollars;

Being an AMERICAN DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, containing the whole vocabulary of the first edition in two volumes quarto; the entire corrections and improvements of the second edition in two volumes royal octavo; to which is prefixed an Introductory Dissertation on the Origin, History, and Connection of the Languages of WESTERN ASIA and EUROPE, with an Explanation of the Principles on which Languages are formed. By NOAH WEBSTER, LL. D. New Edition, greatly enlarged and improved. By PROF. GOODRICH, of YALE COLLEGE.

GENERAL SUBJECTS OF THIS WORK.

- I. Etymologies of English Words, reduced from an examination and comparison of words of corresponding elements in twenty languages of Asia and Europe.
- II. The true Orthography of Words, as corrected by their Etymologies.
- III. Pronunciation exhibited and made obvious by the division of Words into Syllables, by Accentuation, by marking the sounds of the accented vowels, when necessary, or by general rules.
- IV. Accurate and discriminating Definitions illustrated, when doubtful or obscure, by examples of their use, selected from respectable authors, or by familiar phrases of undisputed authority.

This work is, by a vast majority of our fellow-countrymen of all classes, acknowledged to be the MOST COMPLETE, ACCURATE, AND RELIABLE DICTIONARY OF THE LANGUAGE.

II. THE UNIVERSITY EDITION.

550 pages, Imperial Duodecimo, for Colleges, Professional and Business men; containing between 60 and 70,000 words. $1 75.

"It is the first characteristic of a well-dressed gentleman," says Trench in his admirable treatise on the Study of Words, "that his clothes fit him; they are not too small and shrunken here, too large and loose there. Now, it is precisely such a prime characteristic of a good style, that the words fit close to the THOUGHTS: they will not be too big here, hanging like a giant's robe on the limbs of a dwarf; nor too small there, as a boy's garments, into which the roan has with difficulty and ridiculously thrust himself. You do not feel in one place that the writer means more than he has succeeded in saying; in another that he has said more than he means; or in a third, something beside what his intention was; and all this, from a lack of dexterity in employing the instrument of language, of precision in knowing what words would be the exactest correspondents and fittest exponents of his thought."

For these good and substantial reasons, the UNIVERSITY DICTIONARY should be the HAND BOOK of every American desiring a thorough and exact knowledge of his mother tongue.

III. THE ACADEMIC QUARTO.

432 Pages, Cap Quarto. $1 25. Designed for the Higher Schools, Academies, and Colleges. To aid the pupil in understanding the structure and grammatical relations of our language, the irregular plurals or nouns are given, with the preterites and perfect participles of irregular verbs. As a means of creating an interest in etymological inquiries, the derivations of words are frequently traced. As an aid to pronunciation, the words are carefully divided into syllables, on the principles adopted by the author as the result of his latest inquiries into the subject. The Vocabulary is very copious, more so than any similar work. It contains all the important words of our language,

Some of the greatest names in this country and Great Britain are earnest in their recommendation of the above works. Have teachers sufficiently considered the importance of having a good DICTIONARY of some sort, in the hands of every scholar? Can the Reading Lesson be perfectly gone through with, unless the meaning of the author is justly appreciated by a correct understanding of the words he employs? or the Parsing Lesson, without a similar investigation? In Mathematics, must not the terms employed be exactly understood? and so of almost every exercise—the DICTIONARY needs to be constantly consulted.

Liberal discounts made for quantities.

in connection with those exact and comprehensive definitions, for which Dr. Webster's Dictionary has been so much distinguished; with vocabularies of Greek, Latin, Scripture, and Modern Geographical names, with rules for the pronunciation prefixed to each. Also a collection of Familiar Phrases, Words, and Proverbs, from the Latin, French, Italian, Spanish, and Greek, with brief definitions; a concise account of some of the principal Heathen Deities, Heroes, &c., and an extensive list of Abbreviations with their explanations. No pains have been spared to make this work suited to the important place which it is designed to occupy in the Schools and Colleges of our country.

IV. THE HIGH SCHOOL EDITION.

360 pages, Medium Duodecimo. 80 cents.

The SCHOOLMASTER'S USE OF WORDS is a matter of the gravest consideration. His words, his voice and tone, his pronunciation, all are imitated by his pupils. He, of all men, therefore, should not be without a DICTIONARY, both for himself and his pupils. In the HIGH SCHOOL, he has one fitted with great pains to his hand. The power of saying exactly what we mean, of neither more nor less than we mean, is an elegant mental accomplishment. Perhaps there is no power so surely indicative of high and accurate training of the intellectual faculties. But it is also much more than this; it has a moral meaning as well. It is nearly allied to morality, inasmuch as it is nearly connected with truthfulness. Every man who has himself in any degree cared for the truth, and occupied himself in seeking it, is more or less aware how much of the falsehood in the world passes current under the concealment of words, how many strifes find much of their fuel in words carelessly or ignorantly employed. Let the teacher who desires and would deserve the love and gratitude of his pupils impart a thorough acquaintance of that instrument, by which all knowledge and thought as well as his every want, is made known.

V. THE PRIMARY SCHOOL EDITION.

320 pages, Square 16mo, for our Common Schools, containing 10,000 more words than Walker's Dictionary. 45 cents.

THE SCHOOLMASTER SHOULD INSIST ON THE USE OF THE DICTIONARY IN HIS SCHOOL. It is the only way in which precision and accuracy in words can be secured, and copiousness and facility in their use attained. As Professor Porter very justly remarks, "It requires a mature mind to take very much interest in a dictionary of its own accord." Hence the necessity, as well as the duty of a good teacher. "Let a word or two," the same writer remarks, "be selected as the lesson of the day. Let the scholar be directed to prepare to give as many sentences as there are definitions of the word, in each of which, one of the words given as the definition shall be prominent." In this way, this important, though naturally dry and dull study, can be made a loving and delightful occupation. That the community are everywhere awakening to the importance of these suggestions, is evidenced by the fact that nearly one hundred thousand copies of the PRIMARY DICTIONARY have been published the past year, and thus far the demand has greatly increased.

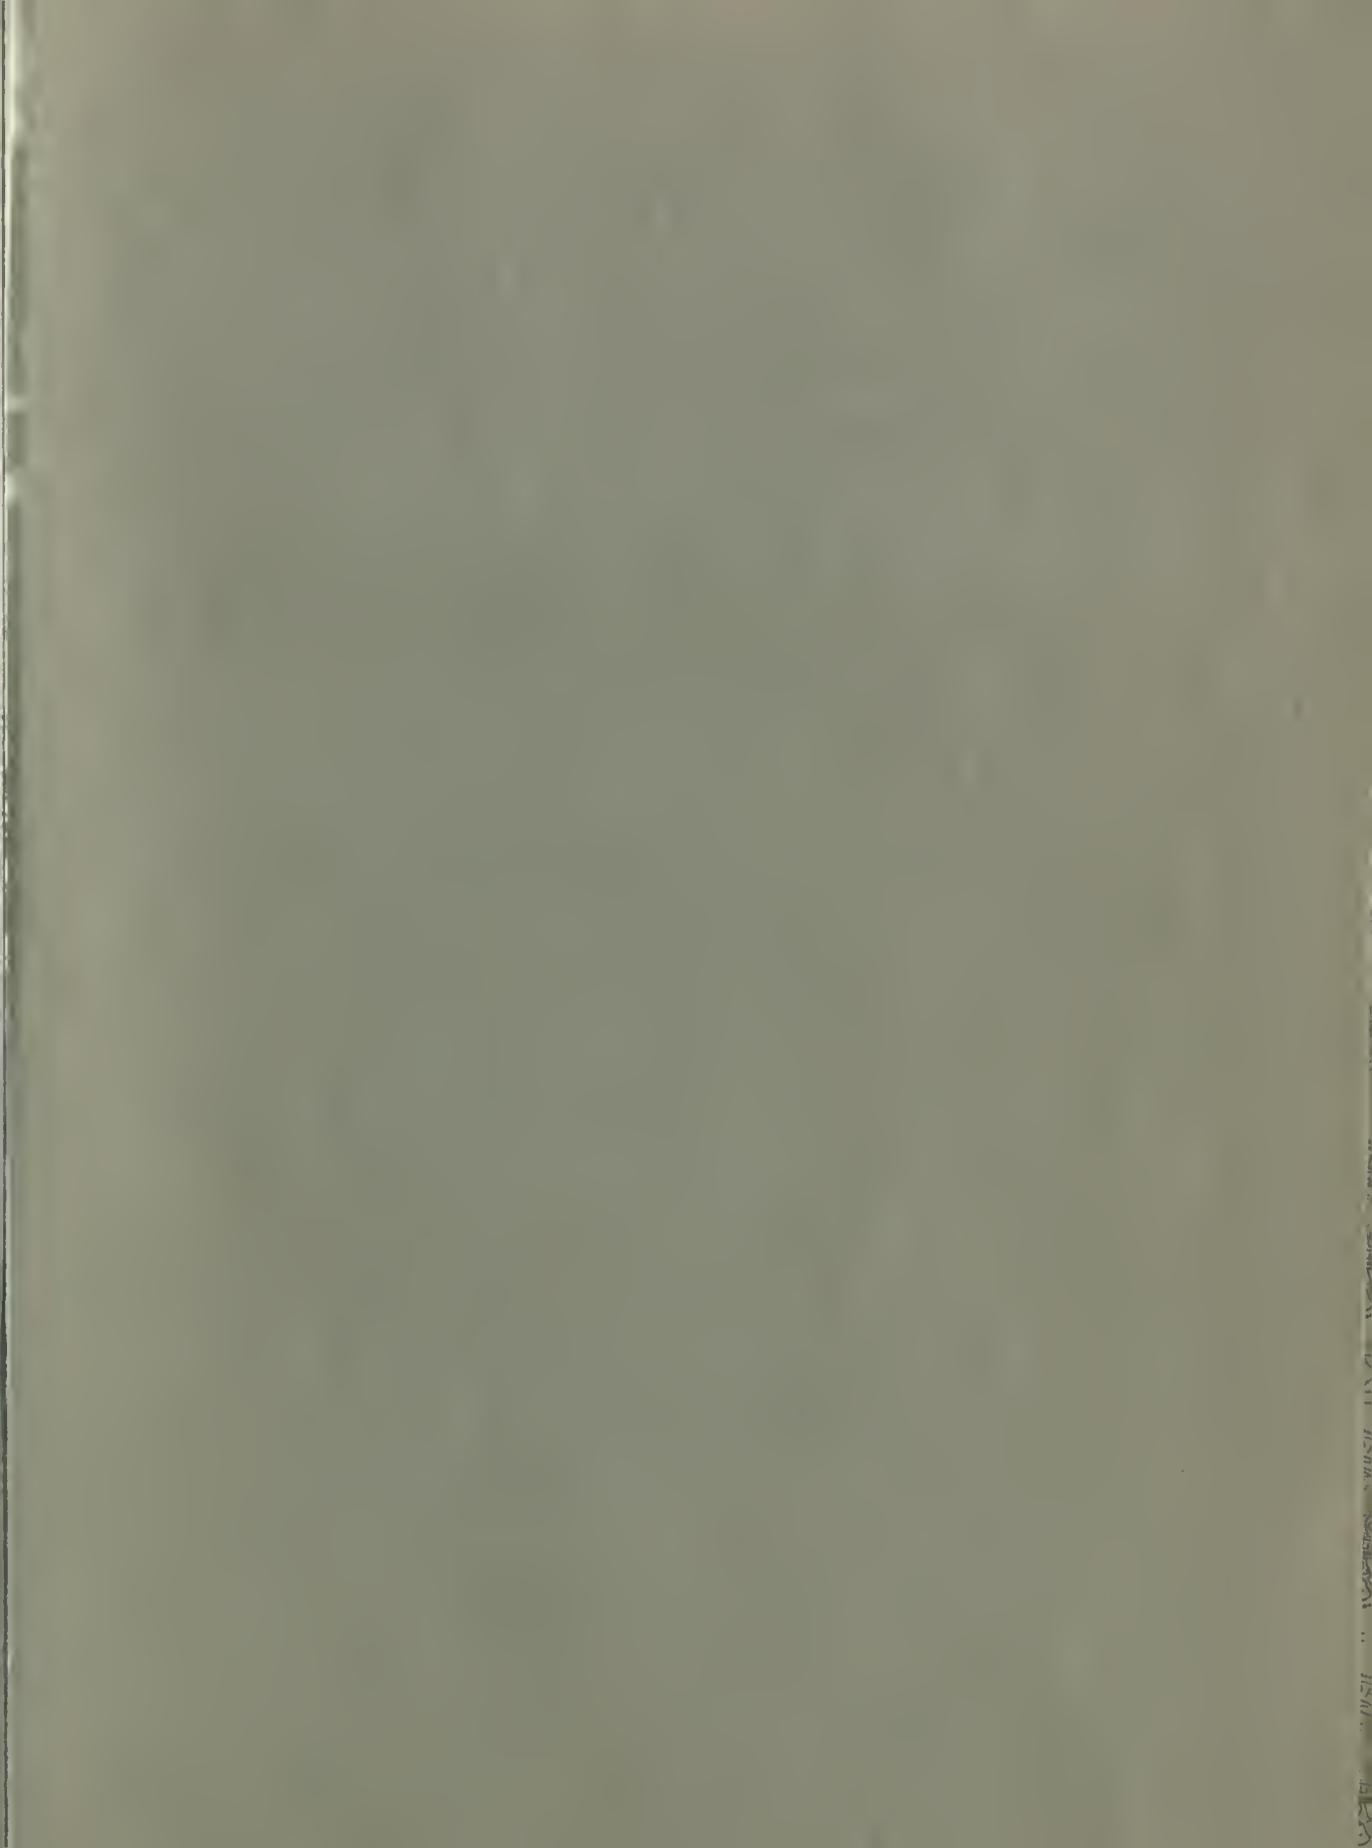

VI. THE POCKET EDITION.

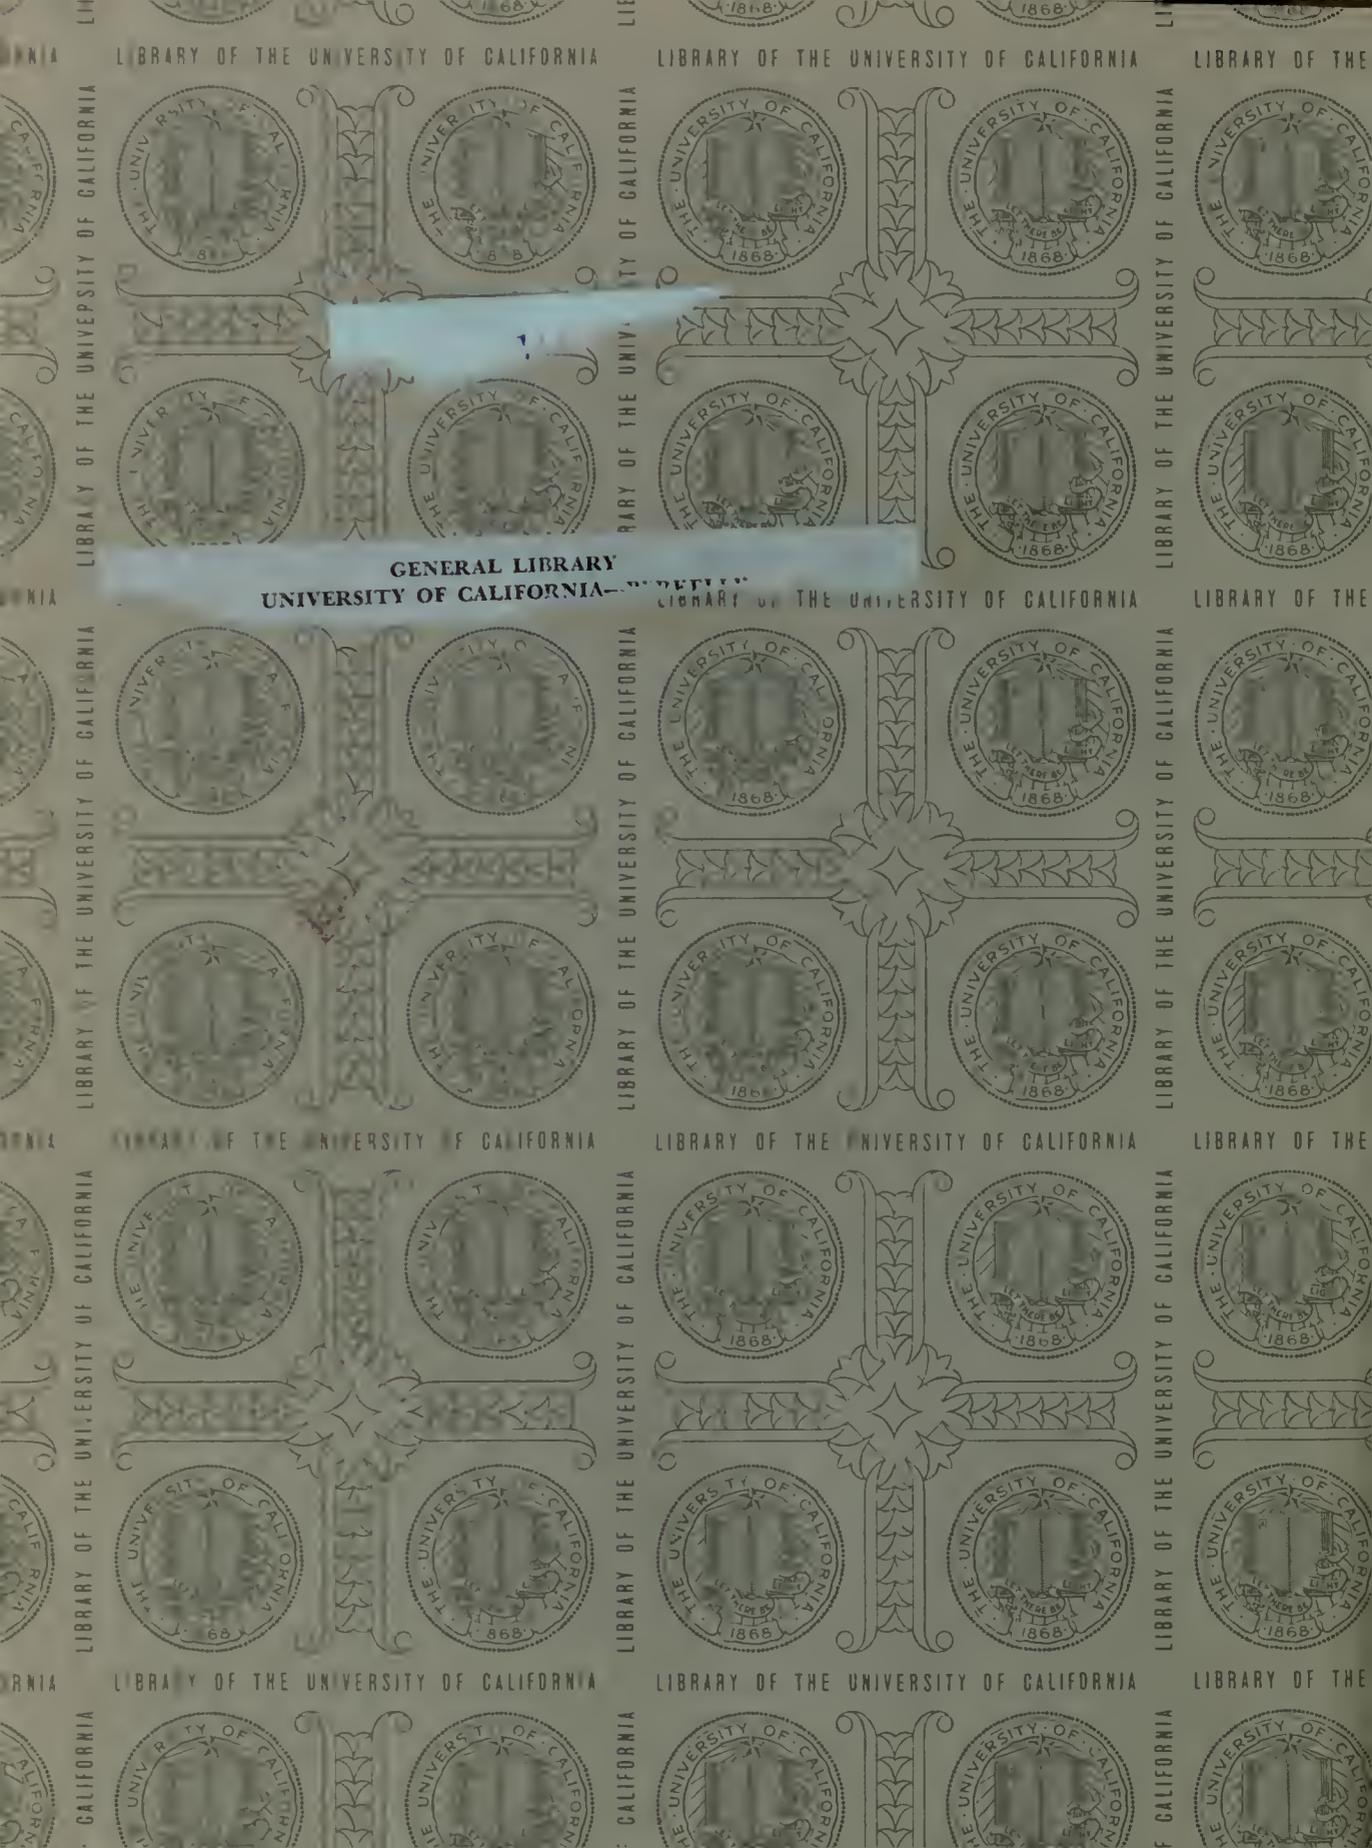

Diamond 32mo, put up in every style of binding for pocket and every-day use. This work gives the spelling of the irregular participles, also the irregular formed plurals of nouns and other derivatives, the rules for the correct orthography of which being so perplexed and difficult to retain in the memory, that persons of good education are not unfrequently betrayed into errors. Price 37½, 50 and 62½ cents, in various styles of binding.
