Arab. al-zahr (pronounced az-zahr), 'the die'. This derivation is rightly doubted by most lexicographers (see e.g. Devic's Supplement to Littré's Dictionnaire de la langue française, s.v. hasard, and Skeat's Etymological Dictionary, s.v. hazard), owing to the fact that the word zahr does not occur in the dictionaries of Classical Arabic. According to my opinion

Sp. azar derives fr. Arab. yāsara, 'he played at dice'; z is the regular Spanish equivalent of Arabic s. — The d in OF. hasard (whence E. hazard) is due to a confusion of the ending -ar with suff. -ard (see -ard).

hazzan, chazzan, also spelled hazan, chazan, n., Jewish cantor. — Mishnaic Heb. and Aram. hazzān, 'superintendent, officer', later 'cantor', prob. borrowed fr. Akkad. hazānu, hazannu, 'chief magistrate of a town' (cp. Aram. hazzānē mātāhā, 'superintendents of the town', Talmud Babha Metz'ia, 93b). It is very probable, however, that Akkad. hazānu was borrowed from a WSem. language and that the word orig. meant 'overseer', from a verb meaning 'to see'; cp. Heb. hāzāh, Aram. hāzā, 'he saw'. (In Akkadian, the verb hazā, 'to see', does not occur; if it had existed, hazānu might be its derivative.) If Akkad. hazānu is a WSem. loan word, then Heb. and Aram. hazzān were reborrowed from Akkadian. See Heinrich Zimmern, Akkadische Fremdwörter als Beweis für babylonischen Kultureinfluß, Leipzig, 1917, p. 6, Note 3.

-let, dimin. suff. — Not a contraction of the two dimin. suffixes -el and -et (as most lexicographers suggest), but the dimin. suff. -et, to which the letter l was prefixed. The addition of the l is due to a misdivision of words that had an organic l before the suff., as e.g. in circlet, islet, etc. (which were misdivided into circ-let, is-let, etc.; in reality they stand for circlet, islet as diminutives of circle, resp. isle). From the generalization of the ending -let in the above and similar words with organic l arose the new dimin. suff. -let.

lethal, adj., deadly, mortal. — L. lētālis (less correctly lēthālis), 'deadly, fatal', fr. lētum (lēthum), 'death', which is of uncertain etymology. letter, n., graphic symbol, character. — ME. lettre, fr. OF. (= F.) lettre, fr. L. littera, 'letter of the alphabet' (in pl. 'epistle, document'), which is of uncertain origin. Ernout and Meillet (in DELL., p. 363) point out that since the Latin alphabet was borrowed from the Greeks (through the medium of the Etruscans), it is not improbable that littera itself would be of Greek origin. According to Bréal (quoted by Ernout-Meillet l.c.) littera would derive fr. Gk. δὶφθέρα, 'tablet', a word glossed by Hesychius; for the change of d- to l- see lachrymal. maranatha, n., a curse. — Gk. μαρανθά, usually explained as transliteration of Aram. mārān āthā, 'the Lord has come', or 'O Lord, come'. But the association of μαρανθά with ἀνάθεμα in ἡτῶ ἀνάθεμα, μαρανθά, 'let him be anathema, maranatha' (1st Corinth. 16:22), makes it probable that the words ἀνάθεμα, μαρανθά express a double or intensified curse. It is very probable that μαρανθά is the transliteration of Heb. moḥōrām attāh, 'thou art put under the ban', the short Qamatz in the first syllable of the word moḥōrām having been mistaken for the long one (= ā) and the letter ת (= h), which has no exact equivalent in the Greek alphabet, having been dropped in the transliteration. The omission of the letter ת is the rule in the transliteration of PN.'s in the LXX. Cp. e.g. Ἐνώχ, translit. of חֲנוּךְ (Hānōkh), Nōe, translit. of נֹחַ (Nōh), Ἰσάακ, translit. of יִצְחָק (Yitzhāk), Ζαορά, translit. of זֶרַח (Zerah, Zarah), Ὀφέρ, translit. of וֹפֶר (Hēpher), Σαλαμάνδα, translit. of צְלָפוֹרָד (Tzēlōphād), Ἄγγι, translit. of אֲנִי

(Haggī), Ἀγγαῖος, rendering of אֲנִי (Haggāy). The Hebrew word moḥōrām is the Hoph'al (= passive of the causative) part. of hārām, 'he devoted, banished', which is rel. to Arab. hāruma, 'was forbidden, unlawful'; see herem and cp. harem. For the change of m to n cp. marrano. The identification of μαρανθά with Heb. moḥōrām attāh is supported by the fact that the LXX usually renders the Heb. noun hērem (e.g. in Lev. 27: 28, 29) by ἀνάθεμα (see anathema) and the verb heḥērīm (e.g. in Nu. 21: 2,3) by ἀναθεματίζειν (see anathematize).

Cp. also marasmus, amaranth. The sense development of Gk. μάρμαρος was influenced by μαρμαίρειν, 'to shine', to which, however, it is not related. OHG. marmul, murmul, G. Marmel, Murmel, 'marble', are Latin loan words. G. Marmor, 'marble', has been refashioned after L. marmor.

According to this derivation the words of Pharaoh's daughter in Ex. 2: 10, 'for out of the water I drew him' are not the explanation of the Hebrew name Mōshē<sup>h</sup>, but express the idea that the Egyptian name given by Pharaoh's daughter resembles in sound, and therefore, reminds us of, the Hebrew verb māshā<sup>h</sup>, 'he drew out', which is suggestive of the words spoken by Pharaoh's daughter. — As a Hebrew word, Mōshē<sup>h</sup> is the active part. of māshā<sup>h</sup>, 'he drew out', and accordingly means 'he who draws out', whence 'deliverer, savior'.
