"Danger invites rescue. The cry of distress is the summons to relief. The law does not ignore these reactions of the mind in tracing conduct to its consequences. It recognizes them as normal. It places their effects within the range of the natural and probable. The wrong that imperils life is a wrong to the imperiled victim; it is a wrong also to his rescuer. . . . The railroad company whose train approaches without signal is a wrongdoer toward the traveler surprised between the rails, but a wrongdoer also to the bystander who drags him from the path. . . . The emergency begets the man. The wrongdoer may not have foreseen the coming of a deliverer. He is accountable as if he had." Wagner v. International Ry. Co., 133 N.E. 437, 437-38 (N.Y. 1921).

rescue syndrome. Family law. A situation in which a child in a custody battle expresses a preference for the parent perceived by the child to be the "weaker" of the

rescussu. See DE RESCUSSU.

res derelicta (rays der-ə-lik-tə). [Latin] A thing thrown away or forsaken by its owner; abandoned property.

res dominans (rays dom-ə-nanz). [Latin] The dominant property entitled to enjoy a servitude. See dominant estate under ESTATE.

research and development. An effort (as by a company or business enterprise) to create or improve products or services, esp. by discovering new technology or advancing existing technology. — Abbr. R and D; R & D.

Research and Special Programs Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for conducting research and engaging in special programs through several offices, including the Office of Hazardous Materials Safety, the Office of Pipeline Safety, the Transportation Systems Center, the Office of Emergency Transportation, the Office of Program Management and Administration, and the Office of Aviation Information Management. — Abbr. RSPA.

research attorney. See ATTORNEY.

research memorandum. See MEMORANDUM.

reseiser (ri-see-zər). Hist. The taking of lands by the monarch in a case in which a general livery or ouster le main was previously misused.

resentencing, n. (1878) The act or an instance of imposing a new or revised criminal sentence. — resentence, vb.

reservation. (15c) 1. The creation of a new right or interest (such as an easement), by and for the grantor, in real property being granted to another. Cf. EXCEPTION (3). [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 141; Easements ⇨ 14.]

implied reservation. (1867) An implied easement that reserves in a landowner an easement across a portion of sold land, such as a right-of-way over land lying between the seller's home and the only exit. • An implied reservation arises only if the seller could have expressly reserved an easement, but for some reason failed to do so. See implied easement under EASEMENT. [Cases: Easements ⇨ 17.]

"If the implied easement is in favor of the conveyee and is appurtenant to the tract conveyed, it is called an implied grant; if the implied easement is in favor of the conveyor and is appurtenant to the tract retained, it is called an implied reservation." Ralph E. Boyer et al., The Law of Property 311 (4th ed. 1991).

2. The establishment of a limiting condition or qualification; esp., a nation's formal declaration, upon signing or ratifying a treaty, that its willingness to become a party to the treaty is conditioned on the modification or amendment of one or more provisions of the treaty as applied in its relations with other parties to the treaty. [Cases: Treaties ⇨ 3.] 3. A tract of public land that is not open to settlers but is set aside for a special purpose; esp., a tract of land set aside for use by indigenous peoples. — Also termed (in sense 3) reserve; reserved land; withdrawn land. [Cases: Indians ⇨ 12.]

reservation-of-rights letter. Insurance. A notice of an insurer's intention not to waive its contractual rights to contest coverage or to apply an exclusion that negates an insured's claim. — Also termed reservation of rights. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 3111(2), 3120.]

reserve, n. 1. Something retained or stored for future use; esp., a fund of money set aside by a bank or an insurance company to cover future liabilities.

amortization reserve. An account created for book-keeping purposes to extinguish an obligation gradually over time.

bad-debt reserve. A reserve to cover losses on uncollectible accounts receivable.

excess reserve. The portion of a bank's reserve against deposits in excess of the amount of reserve required by law.

legal reserve. The minimum amount of liquid assets that a bank or an insurance company must maintain by law to meet depositors' or claimants' demands. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 14, 503; Insurance ⇨ 1139.]

loss reserve. 1. An insurance company's reserve that represents the estimated value of future payments, as for losses incurred but not yet reported. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 1139.] 2. A bank's reserve set aside to cover possible losses, as from defaulting loans.

mean reserve. In insurance, the average of the beginning reserve (after the premium has been paid for the policy year) and the ending reserve of the policy year.

policy reserve. An insurance company's reserve that represents the difference between net premiums and expected claims for a given year. • This type of reserve is kept esp. by life-insurance companies. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 1139.]

required reserve. The minimum amount of money, as required by the Federal Reserve Board, that a bank must hold in the form of vault cash and deposits with regional Federal Reserve Banks. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 14, 351-359.]

sinking-fund reserve. A reserve used to pay long-term debt. See sinking fund under FUND (1).

unearned-premium reserve. An insurance company's reserve that represents premiums that have been received in advance but not yet applied to policy coverage. • If a policyholder cancels coverage before the policy expires but has already paid a premium for the full policy period, the insurance company refunds the policyholder out of this reserve. [Cases: Insurance ↻1139.]

2. RESERVATION (3). 3. See net value under VALUE (2). — reserve, vb.

reserve account. See impound account under ACCOUNT.

reserve bank. See member bank under BANK.

Reserve Board. See FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD OF GOVERNORS.

reserve clause. A clause in a professional athlete's contract restricting the athlete's right to change teams, even after the contract expires. • Reserve clauses are uncommon in modern professional sports. Cf. FREE AGENCY.

reserved easement. See EASEMENT.

reserved land. See RESERVATION (3).

reserved point of law. See POINT OF LAW.

reserved power. See POWER (3).

Reserved Power Clause. See TENTH AMENDMENT.

reserved surplus. See appropriated surplus (1) under SURPLUS.

reserve militia. See MILITIA.

reserve price. See PRICE.

reserve ratio. The Federal Reserve Board's measurement of a member bank's required reserves. See required reserve under RESERVE.

primary reserve ratio. The ratio between a bank's required reserves (cash in vault plus deposits with Federal Reserve Banks) and its demand and time deposits.

secondary reserve ratio. The ratio between a bank's government securities and its demand and time deposits.

reset, n. Scots law. 1. The act or an instance of knowingly receiving stolen goods. 2. Archaic. The harboring or sheltering of a criminal or outlaw. — resetter, n. — reset, vb.

resettlement, n. (17c) 1. The settlement of one or more persons in a new or former place. See SETTLEMENT (6). 2. The reopening of an order or decree for the purpose of correcting a mistake or adding something omitted. [Cases: Motions ↻49.] — resettle, vb.

res fit inempta (rays fit in-emp-tə), [Latin] Hist. The object is regarded as unbought. • This is the ancient way of saying, "The sale is off."

res fungibiles (rays fən-jīb-ə-leez), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Fungible things; things that are commercially interchangeable.

res gestae (rays jes-tee also jes-tī), n. pl. [Latin "things done"] (17c) The events at issue, or other events contemporaneous with them. • In evidence law, words and statements about the res gestae are usu. admissible under a hearsay exception (such as present sense impression or excited utterance). Where the Federal Rules of Evidence or state rules fashioned after them are in effect, the use of res gestae is now out of place. See Fed. R. Evid. 803(1), (2). — Also termed res gesta. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻363–368; Evidence ↻118–128.]

"The Latin expression 'res gestae' or 'res gesta,' literally 'things done' or 'thing transacted,' has long served as a catchword . . . [T]he phrase has frequently served both to let in utterances which in strictness were not admissible and to exclude utterances which might well have been admitted. And frequently also its indefiniteness has served as a basis for rulings where it was easier for the judge to invoke this imposing catchword than to think through the real question involved. The phrase is antiquated. By modern judges it is being gradually discarded. It is superfluous, and serves only to obscure the logic of the rules. It should be left to oblivion." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 279 (1935).

"The res gestae embraces not only the actual facts of the transaction and the circumstances surrounding it, but the matters immediately antecedent to and having a direct causal connection with it, as well as acts immediately following it and so closely connected with it as to form in reality a part of the occurrence." State v. Fouquette, 221 P.2d 404, 416–17 (Nev. 1950).

res gestae witness. See WITNESS.

res habiles (rays hab-ə-leez), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Things that may be acquired by prescription.

resiance (rez-ee-ənts), Archaic. Residence; abode.

resiant (rez-ee-ənt), adj. Archaic. Continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident.

resiant, n. Archaic. A resident.

residence. (14c) 1. The act or fact of living in a given place for some time . — Also termed residency. 2. The place where one actually lives, as distinguished from a domicile <she made her residence in Oregon>. • Residence usu. just means bodily presence as an inhabitant in a given place; domicile usu. requires bodily presence plus an intention to make the place one's home. A person thus may have more than one residence at a time but only one domicile. Sometimes, though, the two terms are used synonymously. Cf. DOMICILE (2). [Cases: Domicile ↻2.] 3. A house or other fixed abode; a dwelling . 4. The place where a corporation or other enterprise does business or is registered to do business <Pantheon Inc.'s principal residence is in Delaware>. [Cases: Corporations ↻52, 503(1), 666.]

habitual residence. 1. Family law. A person's customary place of residence; esp., a child's customary place of residence before being removed to some other place. • The term, which appears as an undefined term in the Hague Convention, is used in determining the country having a presumed paramount interest in the child. [Cases: Child Custody ↻804.] 2. Copyright. An established place, esp. a country, in which one lives for the long term, usu. without being a citizen of the place. • The Berne Convention makes habitual residence an alternative to legal domicile in a member country to qualify for copyright protection but leaves the exact definition of the term to member countries.

residency. (14c) 1. A place of residence, esp. an official one <the diplomat's residency>. 2. RESIDENCE (1) <one year's residency to be eligible for in-state tuition>.

resident, adj. 1. Affiliated with or working for a particular person or company <resident agent>. 2. Dwelling in a place other than one's home on a long-term basis <the hospital's resident patient>.

resident, n. (15c) 1. A person who lives in a particular place. 2. A person who has a home in a particular place. • In sense 2, a resident is not necessarily either a citizen or a domiciliary. Cf. CITIZEN (1); DOMICILIARY.

resident agent. See registered agent under AGENT (2).

resident alien. See ALIEN.

resident ambassador. See AMBASSADOR.

residential care. Family law. Foster-care placement involving residence in a group home or institution. • This type of foster care is most commonly used for adolescents who have been adjudged to be delinquents or status offenders.

residential cluster. Land-use planning. An area of land developed as a unit with group housing and open common space. Cf. PLANNED-UNIT DEVELOPMENT. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷66, 256.]

residential community treatment center. See HALFWAY HOUSE.

residential custody. See PHYSICAL CUSTODY (2).

residential parent. See PARENT.

residential responsibility. Overnight responsibility for a child. See Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution: Analysis and Recommendations § 3.02 (2000). See CUSTODY; dual-residential parent, residential parent under PARENT.

primary residential responsibility. Predominant overnight responsibility for a child.

residential time. See VISITATION (2).

residual, adj. (16c) Of, relating to, or constituting a residue; remaining; leftover  .

residual, n. 1. A leftover quantity; a remainder. 2. (often pl.) A disability remaining after an illness, injury, or operation. 3. (usu. pl.) A fee paid to a composer or performer for each repeated broadcast (esp. on television) of a film, program, or commercial. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷48.]

residual estate. See residuary estate under ESTATE (3).

residual value. See salvage value under VALUE (2).

residuary (ri-zij-oo-er-ee), adj. (18c) Of, relating to, or constituting a residue; residual .

residuary, n. 1. See residuary estate under ESTATE (3). 2. See residuary legatee under LEGATEE.

residuary clause. (18c) Wills & estates. A testamentary clause that disposes of any estate property remaining after the satisfaction of all other gifts. — Also termed omnibus clause. [Cases: Wills ↷586.]

residuary devise. See DEVISE.

residuary devisee. See DEVISEE.

residuary estate. See ESTATE (3).

residuary legacy. See LEGACY.

residuary legatee. See LEGATEE.

residue. (14c) 1. Something that is left over after a part is removed or disposed of; a remainder. 2. See residuary estate under ESTATE (3).

residuum (ri-zij-oo-əm). (17c) 1. That which remains; a residue. 2. See residuary estate under ESTATE (3). Pl. residua (ri-zij-oo-ə).

residuum rule. Administrative law. The principle that an agency decision based partly on hearsay evidence will be upheld on judicial review only if the decision is founded on at least some competent evidence. • The residuum rule has generally been rejected by federal and state courts. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↷784.]

resignation, n. (14c) 1. The act or an instance of surrendering or relinquishing an office, right, or claim. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷62.] 2. A formal notification of relinquishing an office or position. 3. Hist. The surrender to the lord of the vassal's interest in land. — resign, vb.

resile (ri-zil), vb. 1. To retract (a statement, allegation, etc.). 2. To draw back (from an agreement, contract, etc.). 3. To return to one's original position.

res immobiles (rays i-moh-bə-leez), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Immovable things; chattels real. See IMMOBILIA.

res incorporales (rays in-kor-pə-ray-leez), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Incorporal things; intangible things that are not perceptible to the senses. See incorporal thing under THING.

res in privatorum patrimonio. See RES PRIVATAE.

res integra (rays in-tə-grə also in-teg-rə). [Latin "an entire thing"] See RES NOVA.

res inter alios acta (rays in-tər ay-lee-ohs ak-tə). [Latin "a thing done between others"] 1. Contracts. The common-law doctrine holding that a contract cannot unfavorably affect the rights of a person who is not a party to the contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷186(1).] 2. Evidence. The rule prohibiting the admission of collateral facts into evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷338(1), 369.1; Evidence ↷99, 130.]

res ipsa loquitur (rays ip-sə loh-kwə-tər). [Latin "the thing speaks for itself"] (17c) Torts. The doctrine providing that, in some circumstances, the mere fact of an accident's occurrence raises an inference of negligence that establishes a prima facie case. — Often shortened to res ipsa. [Cases: Negligence ↷1610.]

"The phrase 'res ipsa loquitur' is a symbol for the rule that the fact of the occurrence of an injury, taken with the surrounding circumstances, may permit an inference or raise a presumption of negligence, or make out a plaintiff's prima facie case, and present a question of fact for defendant to meet with an explanation. It is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant on the accident are of such a nature as to justify a jury, in light of common sense and past experience, in inferring that the accident was probably the result of the defendant's negligence, in the absence of explanation or other evidence which the jury believes." Stuart M. Speiser, The Negligence Case: Res Ipsa Loquitur § 1:2, at 5-6 (1972).

"It is said that res ipsa loquitur does not apply if the cause of the harm is known. This is a dark saying. The application of the principle nearly always presupposes that some part of the causal process is known, but what is lacking is evidence of its connection with the defendant's act or omission. When the fact of control is used to justify the inference that defendant's negligence was responsible it must of course be shown that the thing in his control in fact caused the harm. In a sense, therefore, the cause of the harm must be known before the maxim can apply." H.L.A. Hart & Tony Honore, Causation in the Law 419-20 (2d ed. 1985).

"Res ipsa loquitur is an appropriate form of circumstantial evidence enabling the plaintiff in particular cases to establish the defendant's likely negligence. Hence the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, properly applied, does not entail any covert form of strict liability. . . . The doctrine implies that the court does not know, and cannot find out, what actually happened in the individual case. Instead, the finding of likely negligence is derived from knowledge of the causes of the type or category of accidents involved." Restatement (Third) of Torts § 15 cmt. a (Discussion Draft 1999).

A method for determining whether a defendant has gone beyond preparation and has actually committed an attempt, based on whether the defendant's act itself would have indicated to an observer what the defendant intended to do. — Also termed equivocality test. See ATTEMPT (2). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻44.]

resisting arrest. (1851) The crime of obstructing or opposing a police officer who is making an arrest. — Also termed resisting lawful arrest. [Cases: Obstructing Justice ↻3.]

resisting process. See OBSTRUCTION OF PROCESS.

resisting unlawful arrest. (1905) The act of opposing a police officer who is making an unlawful arrest. ● Most jurisdictions have accepted the Model Penal Code position prohibiting the use of force to resist an unlawful arrest when the person arrested knows that a police officer is making the arrest. But some jurisdictions allow an arrestee to use nondeadly force to prevent the arrest. See Model Penal Code § 3. [Cases: Obstructing Justice ↻3.]

res judicata (rays joo-di-kay-tə or -kah-tə). [Latin "a thing adjudicated"] (17c) 1. An issue that has been definitively settled by judicial decision. [Cases: Judgment ↻540, 584, 585.] 2. An affirmative defense barring the same parties from litigating a second lawsuit on the same claim, or any other claim arising from the same transaction or series of transactions and that could have been — but was not — raised in the first suit. ● The three essential elements are (1) an earlier decision on the issue, (2) a final judgment on the merits, and (3) the involvement of the same parties, or parties in privity with the original parties. Restatement

"Res judicata" has been used in this section as a general term referring to all of the ways in which one judgment will have a binding effect on another. That usage is and doubtless will continue to be common, but it lumps under a single name two quite different effects of judgments. The first is the effect of foreclosing any litigation of matters that never have been litigated, because of the determination that they should have been advanced in an earlier suit. The second is the effect of foreclosing relitigation of matters that have once been litigated and decided. The first of these, preclusion of matters that were never litigated, has gone under the name, 'true res judicata,' or the names, 'merger' and 'bar.' The second doctrine, preclusion of matters that have once been decided, has usually been called 'collateral estoppel.' Professor Allan Vestal has long argued for the use of the names 'claim preclusion' and 'issue preclusion' for these two doctrines [Vestal, Rationale of Preclusion, 9 St. Louis U. L.J. 29 (1964)], and this usage is increasingly employed by the courts as it is by Restatement Second of Judgments." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 100A, at 722-23 (5th ed. 1994).

Things that are in litigation; property or rights that are the subject of a pending action.

res mancipi (rays man-sə-pi). [Latin "things of mancipium"] Roman law. Property, specifically Italic land with its rustic servitudes and beasts of draft or burden, that can be transferred only by a formal ceremony of mancipation. — Also termed mancipi res; things mancipi. See MANCIPATION.

res merae facultatis (rays meer-ee fak-əl-tay-tis). [Law Latin] Scots law. A matter of mere power.

"Res merae facultatis . . . Such, for example, is the right which a proprietor has of building upon his own property, or which any one has of walking upon the seashore, or sailing upon the sea, or on any navigable river. It is a right which may or may not be exercised at the pleasure of him who holds it; and such rights are never lost by their non-exercise for any length of time, because it is of their essential character that they may be used or exercised at any time." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 554 (4th ed. 1894).

res mobiles (rays moh-bə-leez), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Movable things; chattels personal.

res nec mancipi (rays nek man-sə-pi). [Latin "things not of mancipium"] Roman law. Property that can be transferred without a formal ceremony of mancipation. — Also termed things nec mancipi.

res non est integra (rays non est in-tə-grə). [Latin] Hist. The original position has changed; performance has taken place (in whole or in part).

res nova (rays noh-və). [Latin "new thing"] 1. An undecided question of law. 2. A case of first impression. — Also termed res integra. See case of first impression under CASE.

res nullius (rays nə-ll-əs). [Latin "thing of no one"] A thing that can belong to no one; an ownerless chattel.

resolution. (17c) 1. Parliamentary law. A main motion that formally expresses the sense, will, or action of a deliberative assembly (esp. a legislative body). • A resolution is a highly formal kind of main motion, often containing a preamble, and one or more resolving clauses in the form, “Resolved, That . . .”

concurrent resolution. (17c) A resolution passed by one house and agreed to by the other. • It expresses the legislature’s opinion on a subject but does not have the force of law.

joint resolution. (17c) A legislative resolution passed by both houses. • It has the force of law and is subject to executive veto. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 22, 229.]

simple resolution. (18c) A resolution passed by one house only. • It expresses the opinion or affects the internal affairs of the passing house, but it does not have the force of law.

2. Formal action by a corporate board of directors or other corporate body authorizing a particular act, transaction, or appointment. — Also termed corporate resolution.

shareholder resolution. A resolution by shareholders, usu. to ratify the actions of the board of directors.

3. A document containing such an expression or authorization.

resolutions committee. See COMMITTEE.

Resolution Trust Corporation. A federal agency established to act as a receiver for insolvent federal savings-and-loan associations and to transfer or liquidate those associations’ assets. • The agency was created when the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation was abolished in 1989. — Abbr. RTC. See FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations ⇨ 42(6).]

resolutive (ri-zahl-yə-tor-ee), adj. (1818) Operating or serving to annul, dissolve, or terminate .

resolutive condition. See CONDITION (2).

resolving clause. See CLAUSE.

resort, n. Something that one turns to for aid or refuge <the court of last resort>. — resort, vb.

RESPA (res-pə). abbr. REAL ESTATE SETTLEMENT PROCEDURES ACT.

respite (res-pit), n. (14c) 1. A period of temporary delay; an extension of time. 2. A temporary suspension of a death sentence; a reprieve. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ⇨ 1798.] 3. A delay granted to a jury or court for further consideration of a verdict or appeal. 4. Civil law. An agreement between a debtor and several creditors for an extension of time to repay the various debts. La. Civ. Code art. 3084. — respite, vb.

forced respite. A respite in which some of the creditors are compelled by a court to give the same extension of time that the other creditors have agreed to.

voluntary respite. A respite in which all the creditors agree to the debtor’s proposal for an extension of time.

respondeat ouster (ri-spon-dee-at ow-stər). [Law Latin “let him make further answer”] An interlocutory judgment or order that a party who made a dilatory plea that has been denied must now plead on the merits. — Also termed judgment respondeat ouster. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 111.47.]

“In case of felony, if the plea be held bad, the judgment is respondeat ouster; or rather, as the defendant generally pleads over to the felony, the jury are charged again, and that at the same time with the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, to inquire of the second issue, and the trial proceeds as if no plea in bar had been pleaded.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 461 (2d ed. 1826).

respondeat superior (ri-spon-dee-at soo-peer-ee-ər or sə-peer-ee-ər). [Law Latin “let the superior make answer”] (17c) Torts. The doctrine holding an employer or principal liable for the employee’s or agent’s wrongful acts committed within the scope of the employment or agency. — Also termed master-servant rule. See SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 3026; Principal and Agent ⇨ 159(2).]

responde book. Hist. Scots law. The chancellery’s record of all duties payable by heirs who obtained royal warrants for possession of the decedent’s lands.

respondent. (16c) 1. The party against whom an appeal is taken; APPELLEE. • In some appellate courts, the parties are designated as petitioner and respondent. In most appellate courts in the United States, the parties are designated as appellant and appellee. Often the designations depend on whether the appeal is taken by writ of certiorari (or writ of error) or by direct appeal. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 326; Federal Courts ⇨ 545.1.] 2. The party against whom a motion or petition is filed. Cf. PETITIONER. 3. At common law, the defendant in an equity proceeding. 4. Civil law. One who answers for another or acts as another’s security.

respondent bank. See BANK.

respondentia (ree-spon-den-shee-ə or res-pon-). [Law Latin fr. Latin respondere “to answer”] A loan secured by the cargo on one’s ship rather than the ship itself. Cf. BOTTOMRY. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 88.]

respondentia bond. See BOND (2).

respondere non debet (ri-spon-də-ree non deb-ət). [Latin] Common-law pleading. The prayer of a plea in which the defendant insists that he or she does not have to answer — because of a privilege, for example.

responsalis (res-pon-say-lis). [Law Latin] 1. Hist. One who appears and answers for another. 2. Eccles. law. A proctor. See APOCRISARIUS. responsa prudentium (ri-spon-sə proo-den-shee-əm). [Latin "the answers of the learned"] Roman law. The opinions and judgments of eminent lawyers or jurists on questions of law addressed to them. • The responsa prudentium originally constituted part of the early Roman civil law. Roman citizens seeking legal advice, as well as magistrates and judges, often referred legal questions to leading jurists so as to obtain their opinions (responsa). The responsa of some leading jurists were collected, much in the manner of caselaw digests, and many of them passed into Justinian's Digest. The phrase responsa prudentium gradually migrated to the common law, but today it is of primarily historical use. — Also spelled responsa prudentum.

"[T]he judex, or as we would now call him, the referee, might have no technical knowledge of law whatever. Under such conditions the unlearned judicial magistrates naturally looked for light and leading to the juriconsults who instructed them through their responsa prudentium, the technical name given to their opinions as experts, which were promptly recorded on tablets by their students or disciples." Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 90-91 (1908).

"In [classical Latin] responsa prudentium is the usual form, but most of the legal sources . . . have prudentum following the example of Blackstone (1765)." The Oxford English Dictionary (2d ed. 1989).

response. Patents. A patent applicant's answer to an office action, usu. countering the examiner's rejections and objections and often amending the claims. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 109.]

responsibility, n. (18c) 1. LIABILITY (1). 2. Criminal law. A person's mental fitness to answer in court for his or her actions. See COMPETENCY. [Cases: Mental Health ⇨ 432.] 3. Criminal law. Guilt. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) criminal responsibility. — responsible, adj.

"[As for] the ambiguities of the word 'responsibility,' . . . it is, I think, still important to distinguish two of the very different things this difficult word may mean. To say that someone is legally responsible for something often means only that under legal rules he is liable to be made either to suffer or to pay compensation in certain eventualities. The expression 'he'll pay for it' covers both these things. In this the primary sense of the word, though a man is normally only responsible for his own actions or the harm he has done, he may be also responsible for the actions of other persons if legal rules so provide. Indeed in this sense a baby in arms or a totally insane person might be legally responsible — again, if the rules so provide; for the word simply means liable to be made to account or pay and we might call this sense of the word 'legal accountability'. But the new idea — the programme of eliminating responsibility — is not, as some have feared, meant to eliminate legal accountability: persons who break the law are not just to be left free. What is to be eliminated are enquiries as to whether a person who has done what the law forbids was responsible at the time he did it and responsible in this sense does not refer to the legal status of accountability. It means the capacity, so far as this is a matter of a man's mind or will, which normal people have to control their actions and conform to law. In this sense of responsibility a man's responsibility can be said to be 'impaired'." H.L.A. Hart, "Changing Conceptions of Responsibility," in Punishment and Responsibility 186, 196-97 (1968).

"Responsibility means answerability or accountability. It is used in the criminal law in the sense of 'criminal responsibility' and hence means answerability to the criminal law." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law and Procedure: Cases and Materials 399 (5th ed. 1977).

responsible broker-dealer. See BROKER.

responsive, adj. (15c) Giving or constituting a response; answering <the witness's testimony is not responsive to the question>. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 248.]

responsive action. Patents. A patent applicant's answer to an examiner rejections in an office action. • To be responsive, the answer must address all of the examiner's issues in detail, rather than merely submitting substitute claims. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 108.]

res privatae (rays pri-vay-tee), n. pl. [Latin "private things"] Roman & civil law. Things that can be owned by individuals or by the state and its political subdivisions in their capacity as private citizens. La. Civ. Code art. 450. — Also termed res in privatorum patrimonio.

res publicae (rays pab-li-see), n. pl. [Latin "public things"] Roman & civil law. Things that cannot be individually owned because they belong to the public, such as the sea, navigable waters, and highways. • Public things are owned by the state and its political subdivisions in their capacity as public persons. La. Civ. Code art. 449.

res quotidianae (rays kwoh-tid-ee-ay-nee), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Everyday matters; familiar points or questions.

res religiosae (rays ri-lij-ee-oh-see), n. pl. [Latin] Civil law. Religious things; esp., burial places.

res repetundae (rays rep-ə-tən-dee). [Latin "things due to be repaid"] Roman law. 1. Money or things that can be reclaimed by a person who was forced to give them to a public official. 2. The illegal act of forcing someone to give money or things; extortion. — Sometimes (erroneously) shortened to repetundae. See CRIMEN REPETUNDARUM.

res sanctae (rays sangk-tee), n. pl. [Latin "sacred things"] Roman law. The walls of a city. • The Romans considered maintenance of city walls so important that damage to a city's walls was a capital offense.

res serviens (rays sər-vee-enz). [Latin] The servient property subject to a servitude. See servient estate under ESTATE (4).

res singulorum (rays sing-gyə-lor-əm). [Latin] Hist. The property of individuals.

rest, vb. (1905) 1. (Of a litigant) to voluntarily conclude presenting evidence in a trial <after the police officer's testimony, the prosecution rested>. 2. (Of a litigant) to voluntarily conclude presenting evidence in (a trial) <the defense rested its case after presenting just two witnesses>. • In sense 1, the verb is intransitive; in sense 2, it is transitive.

Restatement. One of several influential treatises published by the American Law Institute describing the law in a given area and guiding its development. • The Restatements use a distinctive format of black-letter rules, official comments, illustrations, and reporter's notes. Although the Restatements are frequently cited in cases and commentary, a Restatement provision is not binding on a court unless it has been officially adopted as the law by that jurisdiction's highest court. Restatements have been published in the following areas of law: Agency, Conflict of Laws, Contracts, Employment Law, Foreign Relations Law of the United States, Judgments, Law Governing Lawyers, Property, Restitution, Security, Suretyship and Guaranty, Torts, Trusts, and Unfair Competition. — Also termed Restatement of the Law.

"We speak of the work which the organization should undertake as a restatement; its object should not only be to help make certain much that is now uncertain and to simplify unnecessary complexities, but also to promote those changes which will tend better to adapt the laws to the needs of life. The character of the restatement which we have in mind can be best described by saying that it should be at once analytical, critical and constructive." Committee on the Establishment of a Permanent Organization for the Improvement of the Law (Elihu Root, chairman), Report Proposing the Establishment of an American Law Institute, 1 ALI Proc. 14 (1923).

restaur (res-tor). 1. The recourse that insurers (esp. marine underwriters) have against each other according to the date of their insurance. 2. The recourse that marine insurers have against a ship's master if a loss occurs through the master's fault or negligence. 3. The recourse that one has against a guarantor or other person under a duty to indemnify. — Also spelled restor.

restitutio in integrum (res-tā-t[y]oo-shee-oh in in-tā-grəm). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Restoration to the previous condition or the status quo. • In Roman law, a praetor could accomplish this by annulling a contract or transaction that was strictly legally valid but inequitable and by restoring the parties to their previous legal relationship. The phrase is still sometimes used in American law (esp. in Louisiana) when a court annuls a contract and orders restitution on equitable grounds.

restitution, n. (13c) 1. A body of substantive law in which liability is based not on tort or contract but on the defendant's unjust enrichment. See UNJUST ENRICHMENT. 2. The set of remedies associated with that body of law, in which the measure of recovery is usu. based not on the plaintiff's loss, but on the defendant's gain. Cf. COMPENSATION; DAMAGES. 3. Return or restoration of some specific thing to its rightful owner or status. 4. Compensation for loss; esp., full or partial compensation paid by a criminal to a victim, not awarded in a civil trial for tort, but ordered as part of a criminal sentence or as a condition of probation. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 1; Implied and Constructive Contracts ⇨ 4; Infants ⇨ 224; Sentencing and Punishment ⇨ 1973, 2100-2217.] — restitutionary, adj.

"The term 'restitution' appears in early decisions, but general recognition probably began with the publication of the Restatement of Restitution [in 1937]. The term is not wholly apt since it suggests restoration to the successful party of some benefit obtained from him. Usually this will be the case where relief is given, but by no means always. There are cases in which the successful party obtains restitution of something he did not have before, for example a benefit received by the defendant from a third person which justly should go to the plaintiff." 1 George E. Palmer, The Law of Restitution § 1.1, at 4 (1978).

"'Restitution' is an ambiguous term, sometimes referring to the disgorging of something which has been taken and at times referring to compensation for injury done. Often, the result under either meaning of the term would be the same. If the plaintiff has been defrauded into paying $1,000 to the defendant, his loss and the defendant's gain coincide. Where they do not coincide, as where the plaintiff is out of pocket more than the defendant has gained and the defendant's conduct is tortious, the plaintiff will recover his loss in a quasi-contractual or equitable action for restitution. Unjust impoverishment as well as unjust enrichment is a ground for restitution. If the defendant is guilty of a non-tortious misrepresentation, the measure of recovery is not rigid but, as in other cases of restitution, such factors as relative fault, the agreed upon risks, and the fairness of alternative risk allocations not agreed upon and not attributable to the fault of either party need to be weighed." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-23, at 376 (3d ed. 1987).

restitutionary redress. See REDRESS.

restitution damages. See DAMAGES.

restitutione extracti ab ecclesia (res-tā-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee ek-strak-tī ab e-klee-z[h]ee-ə). [Latin] Eccles. law. A writ restoring someone who had been suspected or accused of a felony to the church.

restitutione temporalium (res-tā-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee tem-pə-ray-lee-əm). [Latin] Eccles. law. A writ directing the sheriff to restore the temporalities of a diocese to a bishop. See TEMPORALITY (2).

restorative justice. An alternative delinquency sanction focused on repairing the harm done, meeting the victim's needs, and holding the offender responsible for his or her actions. • Restorative-justice sanctions use a balanced approach, producing the least restrictive disposition while stressing the offender's accountability and providing relief to the victim. The offender may be ordered to make restitution, to perform community service, or to make amends in some other way that the court orders.

restoratory motion. See restorative motion under MOTION (2).

restraining order. (1876) 1. A court order prohibiting family violence; esp., an order restricting a person from harassing, threatening, and sometimes merely contacting or approaching another specified person. • This type of order is issued most commonly in cases of domestic violence. A court may grant an ex parte restraining order in a family-violence case if it is necessary to (1) achieve the government's interest in protecting victims of family violence from further abuse, (2) ensure prompt action where there is an immediate threat of danger, and (3) provide governmental control by ensuring that judges grant such orders only where there is an immediate danger of such abuse. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67, 92 S.Ct. 1983 (1972). — Also termed protection order; protective order; stay-away order. See ex parte motion under MOTION. [Cases: Protection of Endangered Persons ↷70–82.] 2. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER. 3. A court order entered to prevent the dissipation or loss of property.

restraining statute. See disabling statute under STATUTE.

restraint, n. (15c) 1. Confinement, abridgment, or limitation . See PRIOR RESTRAINT. 2. Prohibition of action; holding back <the victim's family exercised no restraint — they told the suspect exactly what they thought of him>. 3. RESTRAINT OF TRADE. 4. FORFEITURE RESTRAINT.

restraint of marriage. (16c) A condition (esp. in a gift or bequest) that nullifies the grant to which it applies if the grantee marries or remarries. • Restraints of marriage are usu. void if they are general or unlimited in scope. [Cases: Contracts ↷111.]

restraint of princes. Archaic. An embargo. • The phrase still occasionally appears in marine-insurance contexts. — Also termed restraint of princes and rulers; restraint of princes, rulers, and people. See EMBARGO.

restraint of trade. 1. A limitation on business dealings or professional or gainful occupations. 2. Antitrust. An agreement between two or more businesses or a combination of businesses intended to eliminate competition, create a monopoly, artificially raise prices, or otherwise adversely affect the free market. • Restraints of trade are usu. illegal, but may be declared reasonable if they are in the best interests of both the parties and the public. — Often shortened to restraint. — Also termed conspiracy in restraint of trade. See PER SE RULE; RULE OF REASON. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷537.]

horizontal restraint. A restraint of trade imposed by agreement between competitors at the same level of distribution. • The restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement. — Also termed horizontal agreement.

unreasonable restraint of trade. A restraint of trade that produces a significant anticompetitive effect and thus violates antitrust law.

vertical restraint. A restraint of trade imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution (as between manufacturer and retailer).

restraint on alienation. (18c) 1. A restriction, usu. in a deed of conveyance, on a grantee's ability to sell or transfer real property; a provision that conveys an interest and that, even after the interest has become vested, prevents or discourages the owner from disposing of it at all or from disposing of it in particular ways or to particular persons. • Restraints on alienation are generally unenforceable as against public policy favoring the free alienability of land. — Also termed unreasonable restraint on alienation. 2. A trust provision that prohibits or penalizes alienation of the trust corpus. [Cases: Perpetuities ↷6.]

restricted interpretation. See restrictive interpretation under INTERPRETATION.

restricted security. See SECURITY.

restricted stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

restricted surplus. See SURPLUS.

restricted visitation. See supervised visitation under VISITATION.

restriction. (15c) 1. A limitation or qualification. 2. A limitation (esp. in a deed) placed on the use or enjoyment of property. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4). [Cases: Covenants ↷49–52, 69.]

conservation restriction. See conservation easement under EASEMENT.

3. Military law. A deprivation of liberty involving moral and legal, rather than physical, restraint. • A military restriction is imposed as punishment either by a commanding officer's nonjudicial punishment or by a summary, special, or general court-martial. Restriction is a lesser restraint because it permits the restricted person to perform full military duties. See nonjudicial punishment under PUNISHMENT. [Cases: Military Justice ↷526, 1322.1.]

restriction in lieu of arrest. A restriction in which a person is ordered to stay within specific geographical limits, such as a base or a ship, and is permitted to perform full military duties. [Cases: Military Justice ↷935.1.]

4. Patents. A patent examiner's ruling that a patent application comprises two or more patentably distinct or independent inventions; the requirement that the applicant elect one invention to continue prosecuting under the original application by abandoning some of the original claims. • The applicant may defend the claims by traversing the requirement, abandon any nonelected invention, or continue prosecuting any nonelected invention under a separate divisional application. — Also termed requirement for restriction; restriction requirement; division. Cf. OBJECTION (2); REJECTION (4). [Cases: Patents ↷120.]

restriction requirement. See RESTRICTION (4).

restrictive condition. See negative condition under CONDITION (2).

restrictive principle of sovereign immunity. The doctrine by which a foreign nation's immunity does not apply to claims arising from the nation's private or commercial acts, but protects the nation only from claims arising from its public functions. See COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION; JURE GESTIONIS; JURE IMPERII. [Cases: International Law ⇨ 10.33.]

"[T]he [Foreign Sovereign] Immunities Act codified the so-called 'restrictive' principle of sovereign immunity, as recognized in international law. Under this doctrine, the immunity of a foreign state in the courts of the United States is 'restricted' to claims involving the foreign state's public acts and does not extend to suits based on its commercial or private conduct." 14A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3662, at 161-62 (3d ed. 1998).

resulting power. See POWER (3).

resulting trust. See TRUST.

resulting use. See USE (4).

resume consideration. See take from the table under TABLE.

resummons. (15c) A second or renewed summons to a party or witness already summoned. See SUMMONS.

resumption. 1. The taking back of property previously given up or lost. 2. Hist. The retaking by the Crown or other authority of lands or rights previously given to another (as because of false suggestion or other error).

res universitatis (rays yoo-nə-vər-sə-tay-tis), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Things belonging to a community or corporate body and free to be used by all its members.

resurrender, n. Hist. The return of a copyhold estate to a mortgagor by the mortgagee after the debt has been repaid. See SURRENDER OF COPYHOLD.

retail, n. The sale of goods or commodities to ultimate consumers, as opposed to the sale for further distribution or processing. — retail, adj. Cf. WHOLESALE. — retail, vb.

retailer, n. A person or entity engaged in the business of selling personal property to the public or to consumers, as opposed to selling to those who intend to resell the items.

retail installment contract. See CONTRACT.

retail installment contract and security agreement. See retail installment contract under CONTRACT.

retainage (ri-tayn-ij). (1901) A percentage of what a landowner pays a contractor, withheld until the construction has been satisfactorily completed and all mechanic's liens are released or have expired. — Also termed retained fund. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 214, 221(3).]

retained fund. See RETAINAGE.

retained income trust. See grantor-retained income trust under TRUST.

retainer, n. (18c) 1. A client's authorization for a lawyer to act in a case <the attorney needed an express retainer before making a settlement offer>. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 64.] 2. A fee that a client pays to a lawyer simply to be available when the client needs legal help during a specified period or on a specified matter. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 137.] 3. A lump-sum fee paid by the client to engage a lawyer at the outset of a matter. — Also termed engagement fee. 4. An advance payment of fees for work that the lawyer will perform in the future. — Also termed retaining fee. Cf. ATTORNEY'S FEES. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 137.] — retain, vb.

"Over the years, attorneys have used the term 'retainer' in so many conflicting senses that it should be banished from the legal vocabulary. . . . If some primordial urge drives you to use the term 'retainer,' at least explain what you mean in terms that both you and the client will understand." Mortimer D. Schwartz & Richard C. Wydick, Problems in Legal Ethics 100, 101 (2d ed. 1988).

general retainer. (18c) A retainer for a specific length of time rather than for a specific project. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 137.]

special retainer. (18c) A retainer for a specific case or project. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 137.]

retaliatory discharge. See DISCHARGE (7).

retaliatory eviction. See EVICTION.

retaliatory law. (1820) A state law restraining another state's businesses — as by levying taxes — in response to similar restraints imposed by the second state on the first state's businesses.

retalia (ri-tal-ee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. The sale of goods or commodities in small quantities; retail.

retenementum (ri-ten-ə-men-təm). Hist. A withholding; restraint or detention.

retenta possessione (ri-ten-tə pə-zes[h]-ee-oh-nee). [Latin] Hist. Possession being retained.

retention. Scots law. A possessor's right to keep a movable until the possessor's claim against the movable or its owner is satisfied; a lien.

general retention. Scots law. A possessor's right to keep all property owned by a debtor as security for the debt.

special retention. Scots law. A possessor's right to keep property owned by another until reimbursed for expenditures on the property for its repair or for its care and maintenance.

retinue. A group of persons who are retained to follow and attend to a sovereign, noble, or other distinguished person.

retired stock. See treasury stock under STOCK.

retirement, n. (16c) 1. Termination of one's own employment or career, esp. upon reaching a certain age or for health reasons; retirement may be voluntary or involuntary. 2. Withdrawal from action or for privacy <Carol's retirement to her house by the lake>. 3. Withdrawal from circulation; payment of a debt <retirement of a series of bonds>. See REDEMPTION. — retire, vb.

compulsory retirement. Mandatory retirement based on a person's age, esp. as specified in a union contract, by corporate policy, or by statute.

retirement annuity. See ANNUITY.

Retirement Equity Act of 1984. A federal law that requires private pension plans to comply with the court-ordered division of a pension between spouses and permits the plan administrator to pay all or part of a worker's pensions and survivor benefits directly to a former spouse if the plan has been served with a court order that meets the federal requirements for a qualified domestic-relations order. 29 USCA § 1056(d)(3). See QUALIFIED DOMESTIC-RELATIONS ORDER. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷594.]

retirement plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

retorna brevium (ri-tor-nə bree-vee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. The return of a writ. • This was the indorsement on a writ by a sheriff or other officer, reporting on the writ's execution.

retorno habendo. See DE RETORNO HABENDO.

retorsion (ri-tor-shən). Int'l law. An act of lawful retaliation in kind for another nation's unfriendly or unfair act. • Examples of retorsion include suspending diplomatic relations, expelling foreign nationals, and restricting travel rights. — Also spelled retortion. Cf. REPRISAL (2).

retraction, n. (14c) 1. The act of taking or drawing back <retraction of anticipatory repudiation before breach of contract>. 2. The act of recanting; a statement in recantation <retraction of a defamatory remark>. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷66.] 3. Wills & estates. A withdrawal of a renunciation <because of her retraction, she took property under her uncle's will>. See RENUNCIATION (3). 4. Copyright. The right of authors and artists to renounce their creative works and to forbid their sale or display. • Retraction is one of the moral rights of artists recognized in civil-law countries and much of Europe, but largely unavailable in the United States. — Also termed (in sense 4) withdrawal. — retract, vb.

retractus feudalis (ri-trak-təs fyoo-day-lis). [Law Latin] "a recall of the fee" Scots law. A superior's right to pay a debt of a vassal's lands in exchange for the return of the conveyance.

retraxit (ri-trak-sit). [Latin "he has withdrawn"] A plaintiff's voluntary withdrawal of a lawsuit in court so that the plaintiff forever forfeits the right of action. • In modern practice, retraxit is called voluntary dismissal with prejudice. A dismissal without prejudice does not operate as a retraxit. See judgment of retraxit under JUDGMENT.

retreat rule. (1935) Criminal law. The doctrine holding that the victim of an assault has a duty to retreat instead of resorting to deadly force in self-defense, unless (1) the victim is at home or in his or her place of business (the so-called castle doctrine), or (2) the assailant is a person whom the victim is trying to arrest. • A minority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. NO-RETREAT RULE. [Cases: Homicide ↷798.]

"The rationale for the retreat rule is not difficult to ascertain, at least in part. It rests upon the view that human life, even the life of an aggressor, is sufficiently important that it should be preserved when to do so requires only the sacrifice of the much less important interest in standing one's ground." George E. Dix, "Justification: Self-defense," in 3 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 946, 948-49 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

retrial, n. (18c) A new trial of an action that has already been tried. See trial de novo under TRIAL. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷2311; New Trial ↷0.5.] — retry, vb.

retribution, n. (14c) 1. Criminal law. Punishment imposed as repayment or revenge for the offense committed; requital. Cf. DETERRENCE; REHABILITATION (1). [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↷44.] 2. Something justly deserved; repayment; reward. — retributive, adj. — retribute, vb.

retributive danger. See DANGER.

retributive punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

retributivism (ri-trib-yə-tə-viz-əm). (1966) The legal theory by which criminal punishment is justified, as long as the offender is morally accountable, regardless of whether deterrence or other good consequences would result. • According to retributivism, a criminal is thought to have a debt to pay to society, which is paid by punishment. The punishment is also sometimes said to be society's act of paying back the criminal for the wrong done. Opponents of retributivism sometimes refer to it as "vindictive theory." Cf. hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM; UTILITARIAN-DETERRENCE THEORY. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↷44.]

maximalist retributivism. The classical form of retributivism, espoused by scholars such as Immanuel Kant, under which it is argued that society has a duty, not just a right, to punish a criminal who is guilty and culpable, that is, someone who has no justification or excuse for the illegal act.

minimalist retributivism. The more contemporary form of retributivism, which maintains that no one should be punished in the absence of guilt and culpability (that is, unless punishment is deserved), and that a judge may absolve the offender from punishment, wholly or partially, when doing so would further societal goals such as rehabilitation or deterrence.

retroactive, adj. (17c) (Of a statute, ruling, etc.) extending in scope or effect to matters that have occurred in the past. — Also termed retrospective. Cf. PROSPECTIVE (1). [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨419; Courts ⇨100(1); Statutes ⇨278.2.] — retroactivity, n.

"'Retroactivity' is a term often used by lawyers but rarely defined. On analysis it soon becomes apparent, moreover, that it is used to cover at least two distinct concepts. The first, which may be called 'true retroactivity,' consists in the application of a new rule of law to an act or transaction which was completed before the rule was promulgated. The second concept, which will be referred to as 'quasi-retroactivity,' occurs when a new rule of law is applied to an act or transaction in the process of completion. . . . [T]he foundation of these concepts is the distinction between completed and pending transactions . . ." T.C. Hartley, The Foundations of European Community Law 129 (1981).

retroactive law. (18c) A legislative act that looks backward or contemplates the past, affecting acts or facts that existed before the act came into effect. • A retroactive law is not unconstitutional unless it (1) is in the nature of an ex post facto law or a bill of attainder, (2) impairs the obligation of contracts, (3) divests vested rights, or (4) is constitutionally forbidden. — Also termed retrospective law; retroactive statute; retrospective statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨278.3, 278.9.] retrocession. (17c) 1. The act of ceding something back (such as a territory or jurisdiction). [Cases: United States ⇨3.] 2. The return of a title or other interest in property to its former or rightful owner. 3. The process of transferring all or part of a reinsured risk to another reinsurance company; reinsurance of reinsurance. • Subsequent retrocessions are referred to as first retrocession, second retrocession, and so on. 4. The amount of risk that is so transferred.

retrocessionaire. Reinsurance. A reinsurer of a reinsurer. See RETROCESSION.

retrocessional agreement. An agreement providing for reinsurance of reinsurance.

retrospectant evidence. See EVIDENCE.

retrospective, adj. See RETROACTIVE.

retrospective law. See RETROACTIVE LAW.

return, n. (15c) 1. A court officer's bringing back of an instrument to the court that issued it; RETURN OF WRIT . [Cases: Execution ⇨330–347.] 2. A court officer's indorsement on an instrument brought back to the court, reporting what the officer did or found . See FALSE RETURN (1). 3. TAX RETURN <file your return before April 15>. 4. (usu. pl.) An official report of voting results <election returns>. 5. Yield or profit <return on an investment>. See RATE OF RETURN. — return, vb.

capital return. Tax. Revenue that represents the repayment of cost or capital and thus is not taxable as income. — Also termed return of capital.

fair return on investment. The usual or reasonable profit in a business, esp. a public utility.

net return. The profit on an investment after deducting all investment expenses.

return of capital. See capital return.

return date. See return day under DAY.

return day. See DAY.

returnee. A refugee whom authorities have returned to the country of origin; one who has fled from the home country and then been sent back. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨644.]

returning board. An official body or commission that canvasses election returns.

return of process. See PROOF OF SERVICE.

return of service. See PROOF OF SERVICE.

return of writ. (18c) The sheriff's bringing back a writ to the court that issued it, with a short written account (usu. on the back) of the manner in which the writ was executed. — Often shortened to return. See RETURN (1). [Cases: Execution ⇨334; Sheriffs and Constables ⇨87.]

reunification. The return of a child who has been removed from his or her parents because of abuse or neglect by one or both of them. • When a child has been removed from the home because of abuse or neglect, the state's primary goal is family reunification as long as this is in the best interests of the child. The state is required, in most instances, to provide the parent or parents with services that will enable them to provide adequately for their child upon his or her return. After the enactment of the Adoption and Safe Families Act in 1997, states became more concerned with limiting the time that children are in foster care and less concerned with lengthy reunification plans. — Also termed family reunification. See ADOPTION AND SAFE FAMILIES ACT; PERMANENCY PLAN; ADOPTION ASSISTANCE AND CHILD WELFARE ACT. [Cases: Infants ⇨155, 231.] — reunify, vb.

re-up, vb. 1. To reenlist in one of the armed forces <the soldier re-upped the day after being discharged>. [Cases: Armed Services ⇨18.5.] 2. To sign an extension to a contract, esp. an employment agreement <the star athlete re-upped in a three-year deal worth $12 million>.

reus (ree-əs). [Latin] Roman & civil law. 1. A defendant. Cf. ACTOR (3). 2. A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. 3. A party to a contract or transaction, esp. one assuming a debt or obligation. 4. Roman law. In criminal law, an accused or convicted person. Pl. rei. Fem. rea, pl. reae.

reus promittendi (ree-əs proh-mi-ten-di). [Latin "party promising"] Roman law. The answerer in a Roman-law

reus stipulandi (ree-əs stip-yə-lan-dī). [Latin “party stipulating”] Roman law. The questioner in a Roman-law stipulation. — Also termed stipulator. See STIPULATION (3).

revalidation. See REPUBLICATION (2).

revaluation, n. An increase in the value of one currency in relation to another currency. Cf. DEVALUATION. — revalue, vb.

revaluation surplus. See SURPLUS.

rev'd. abbr. Reversed.

reve (reev). Hist. The bailiff of a franchise or manor. See REEVE.

revendication, n. 1. The recovery or claiming back of something by a formal claim or demand. 2. Civil law. An action to recover real rights in and possession of property that is wrongfully held by another. • This is analogous to the common-law replevin. [Cases: Replevin ⇨ 1.] — revendicate, vb.

revenue. (15c) Gross income or receipts.

general revenue. The income stream from which a state or municipality pays its obligations unless a law calls for payment from a special fund. See general fund under FUND (1). [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 886; States ⇨ 126.]

land revenue. Revenue derived from lands owned by the Crown in Great Britain. • Since, over the years, crown lands have been largely granted to subjects, they are now transferred within very narrow limits. See Crown land under LAND.

marginal revenue. The amount of revenue earned from the sale of one additional unit.

public revenue. A government's income, usu. derived from taxes, levies, and fees.

revenue agent's report. A report indicating any adjustments made to a tax return as a result of an IRS audit. • After an audit, this report is mailed to the taxpayer along with a thirty-day letter. — Abbr. RAR. See THIRTY-DAY LETTER.

Revenue Procedure. An official statement by the IRS regarding the administration and procedures of the tax laws. — Abbr. Rev. Proc. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3048.]

Revenue Ruling. An official interpretation by the IRS of the proper application of the tax law to a specific transaction. • Revenue Rulings carry some authoritative weight and may be relied on by the taxpayer who requested the ruling. — Abbr. Rev. Rul. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3043, 3049.]

revenue stamp. (1862) A stamp used as evidence that a tax has been paid. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4406; Taxation ⇨ 3679.]

re, verbis, literis, consensu (ree, vər-bis, lit-ər-is, kən-sen-s[y]oo). [Latin] Roman law. By the performance (namely, handing over), by words, by writing, by consent. • The phrase appeared in reference to the four classes of Roman contract.

reversal, n. (15c) 1. An appellate court's overturning of a lower court's decision. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 1156–1180; Criminal Law ⇨ 1185–1190; Federal Courts ⇨ 932.] 2. Securities. A change in a security's near-term market-price trend.

reverse, vb. To overturn (a judgment) on appeal. • Sometimes, the verb is used without a direct object <We reverse>. The equivalent expression in British English is to allow the appeal. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 1156–1180; Criminal Law ⇨ 1187; Federal Courts ⇨ 932.]

reverse annuity mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

reverse bear hug. See BEAR HUG.

reverse bonus. See reverse contingent fee under CONTINGENT FEE.

reverse condemnation. See inverse condemnation under CONDEMNATION.

reverse confusion. See CONFUSION.

reverse-confusion doctrine. Intellectual property. The rule that it is unfair competition if the defendant's use of a title that is confusingly similar to the one used by the plaintiff leads the public to believe that the plaintiff's work is the same as the defendant's, or that it is derived from or associated in some manner with the defendant. • Under the conventional passing-off form of unfair competition, similarity of titles leads the public to believe that the defendant's work is the same as the plaintiff's work, or is in some manner derived from the plaintiff. But in reverse confusion, the unfair competition results from the confusion created about the origin of the plaintiff's work. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨ 38; Trademarks ⇨ 1089.]

reverse consensus. Intellectual property. In a dispute-settlement procedure under TRIPS, an agreement between the parties that a dispute should not be submitted to a World Trade Organization panel for adjudication. • Before TRIPS, any party could delay formation of a WTO panel or adoption of its report by withholding consensus. Under TRIPS, each process is automatic unless all parties agree not to go forward.

reverse contingent fee. See CONTINGENT FEE.

reverse discovery. See reverse Jencks material under JENCKS MATERIAL.

reverse discrimination. See DISCRIMINATION.

reverse doctrine of equivalents. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

reverse-engineering. Intellectual property. The process of discovering how an invention works by inspecting and studying it, esp. by taking it apart in order to learn how it works and how to copy it and improve it.

• Reverse engineering is a proper means of discovering trade secrets, according to the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, and is a defense against a suit for misappropriation of trade secrets. But it is not a defense in a suit for patent infringement. — reverse-engineer, vb.

reverse Erie doctrine. 1. The rule that a state court must apply federal law when state law is preempted by federal law or federal law prevails by an Erie-like balancing of the facts in situations not already regulated by Congress or the Constitution. 2. Maritime law. The principle that a state court hearing an admiralty or maritime case must apply federal admiralty law even if that law conflicts with the law of the state. — Often shortened to reverse Erie. — Also termed converse-Erie doctrine; inverse-Erie doctrine. Cf. ERIE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Admiralty ⇨ 1.20.]

reverse FOIA suit (foy-ə). A lawsuit by the owner of a trade secret or other information exempt from disclosure under a freedom-of-information act to prevent a governmental entity from making that information available to the public. See FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT. [Cases: Records ⇨ 31, 63.]

reverse Jencks. See reverse Jencks material under JENCKS MATERIAL.

reverse mortgage. See reverse annuity mortgage under MORTGAGE.

reverse passing off. See PASSING OFF.

reverse spot zoning. See ZONING.

reverse stock split. See STOCK SPLIT.

reverse subsidiary merger. See reverse triangular merger under MERGER.

reverse transfer statute. See TRANSFER STATUTE.

reverse triangular merger. See MERGER.

reversio (ri-vər-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. The returning of land to the grantor.

reversion, n. (15c) 1. The interest that is left after subtracting what the transferor has parted with from what the transferor originally had; specif., a future interest in land arising by operation of law whenever an estate owner grants to another a particular estate, such as a life estate or a term of years, but does not dispose of the entire interest. • A reversion occurs automatically upon termination of the prior estate, as when a life tenant dies. — Also termed reversionary estate; estate in reversion; equitable reversion. [Cases: Reversions ⇨ 1.] 2. Loosely, REMAINDER. Cf. POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER; REMAINDER. — reversionary, adj. — revert, vb.

reversionary interest. See INTEREST (2).

reversionary lease. See LEASE.

reversioner. (17c) 1. One who possesses the reversion to an estate; the grantor or heir in reversion. [Cases: Reversions ⇨ 1.] 2. Broadly, one who has a lawful interest in land but not the present possession of it.

reversor. Scots law. A debtor who secures a debt by pledging property to a creditor and retaining a right of reversion.

reverter. See POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

reverter guarantee. Real estate. A mortgage clause protecting the mortgagee against a loss occasioned by the occurrence of a terminating event under a possibility of reverter. See POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 211.]

revest, vb. (16c) To vest again or anew <revesting of title in the former owner>. rev'g. abbr. Reversing.

review, n. (15c) 1. Consideration, inspection, or reexamination of a subject or thing. 2. Plenary power to direct and instruct an agent or subordinate, including the right to remand, modify, or vacate any action by the agent or subordinate, or to act directly in place of the agent or subordinate <Subject to the Assembly's review, the Council enjoys the same powers of review and delegation as the Assembly.>. — review, vb.

administrative review. (1928) 1. Judicial review of an administrative proceeding. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨ 651.] 2. Review of an administrative proceeding within the agency itself. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨ 513.]

appellate review. (1837) Examination of a lower court's decision by a higher court, which can affirm, reverse, modify, or vacate the decision. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 836; Federal Courts ⇨ 751.]

discretionary review. (1914) The form of appellate review that is not a matter of right but that occurs only with the appellate court's permission. See CERTIORARI. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 358; Federal Courts ⇨ 660.1.]

judicial review. See JUDICIAL REVIEW.

reviewable issue. See appealable decision under DECISION.

review hearing. See HEARING.

revision, n. (17c) 1. A reexamination or careful review for correction or improvement. 2. Parliamentary law. A general and thorough rewriting of a governing document, in which the entire document is open to amendment <bylaws revision>. 3. Military law. The reconvening of a general or special court-martial to revise its action or to correct the record because of an improper or inconsistent action concerning the findings or the sentence. • A revision can occur only if it will not materially prejudice the accused. [Cases: Military Justice ⇨ 1397.] 4. An altered version of a work.

revival, n. (17c) 1. Restoration to current use or operation; esp., the act of restoring the validity or legal force of an expired contract, an abandoned patent, or a dormant judgment. — Also termed (for a dormant judgment) revival of judgment. Cf. RENEWAL (2). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2399; Judgment ⇨ 857–872.] 2. Wills & estates. The reestablishment of the validity of a revoked will by revoking the will that invalidated the original will or in some other way manifesting the testator's intent to be bound by the earlier will. Cf. REPUBLICATION (2). [Cases: Wills ⇨ 196–202.] 3. Patents. Renewal of a patent prosecution that has been deemed abandoned because the applicant did not respond to an office action within the statutory period. • The applicant can petition for revival on the basis of unavoidable or unintentional delay. 37 CFR § 1.137. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 107.] — revive, vb.

revivor. (18c) A proceeding to revive an action ended because of either the death of one of the parties or some other circumstance. [Cases: Abatement and Revival ⇨ 72; Equity ⇨ 303–309.]

Revlon duty. Delaware law. The obligation of a company's board of directors, upon deciding to sell the company or when the sale of the company becomes inevitable, to act reasonably in seeking out and accepting a transaction that offers the best value to shareholders. • This duty was first applied in Revlon v. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc., 506 A.2d 173, 181–82 (Del. 1986). [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 310(1), 584.]

revocable (rev-ə-kə-bəl), adj. (15c) Capable of being canceled or withdrawn . [Cases: Licenses ⇨ 58.]

revocable guaranty. See GUARANTY.

revocable letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

revocable trust. See TRUST.

revocation (rev-ə-kay-shən), n. (15c) 1. An annulment, cancellation, or reversal, usu. of an act or power. 2. Contracts. Withdrawal of an offer by the offeror. Cf. REPUDIATION (2); RESCISSION; REJECTION (1). [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 19; Sales ⇨ 22(2), 23(2).] 3. Wills & estates. Invalidation of a will by the testator, either by destroying the will or by executing a new one. • A will, or parts of a will, may be revoked by operation of law. For example, most states have a statute providing for the revocation, upon divorce, of all provisions relating to the testator's former spouse. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 167–195.] — revoke, vb.

revocation hearing. See HEARING.

revocatory action (rev-ə-kə-tor-ee or ri-vok-ə-tor-ee). Civil law. An action brought by a creditor to annul a contract that has been entered into by the debtor and that will increase the debtor's insolvency. La. Civ. Code art. 2036. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ⇨ 205–328.]

revocatur (ree-voh-kay-tər). [Latin] Hist. It is recalled. • In former English practice, this was used as a notation on a judgment that was set aside because of a factual error (as opposed to being reversed because of legal error).

revolution, n. An overthrow of a government, usu. resulting in fundamental political change; a successful rebellion. — revolutionary, adj. & n. — revolt, vb.

Rev. Rul. abbr. REVENUE RULING.

Rev. Stat. See revised statutes under STATUTE.

reward, n. 1. Something of value, usu. money, given in return for some service or achievement, such as recovering property or providing information that leads to the capture of a criminal. Cf. BOUNTY (1). [Cases: Rewards ⇨ 0.5.] 2. SALVAGE (3). — reward, vb.

rewritten specification. See substitute specification under SPECIFICATION (3).

rex (reks). (usu. cap.) 1. A king. 2. The official title of a king. 3. The prosecution side (as representatives of the king) in criminal proceedings in a monarchy. — Abbr. R. Cf. REGINA.

rezone, vb. (1951) To change the zoning boundaries or restrictions of (an area) <rezone the neighborhood>. See ZONING. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 151–199.]

RFA. abbr. REQUEST FOR ADMISSION.

RFI. abbr. REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

RFP. abbr. 1. REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION. 2. See REQUEST FOR PROPOSAL.

rhadamanthine (rad-ə-man-thin), adj. (often cap.) (1840) (Of a judge) rigorous and inflexible <the judge's rhadamanthine interpretation of procedural requirements makes it essential to study the local rules before appearing in court>.

Rhodian law (roh-dee-ən). As legend would have it, the earliest known system or code of maritime law, supposedly dating from 900 B.C. and adopted intact by the Romans. • Rhodian law was purportedly developed by the people of the island Rhodes, located in the Aegean Sea and now belonging to Greece. The ancient inhabitants of Rhodes are said to have controlled the seas because of their commercial prosperity and naval superiority. Despite the uncertainties about its history, Rhodian law has often been cited as a source of admiralty and maritime law.

"A strong tradition says that a maritime code was promulgated by the Island of Rhodes, in the Eastern Mediterranean, at the height of its power; the ridiculously early date of 900 B.C. has even been assigned to this suppositious code — a date accepted uncritically by some legal scholars. But even the existence of such a code has been pretty well cast in doubt, and we know next to nothing of its contents, if it existed. It is interesting to note, however, that the root-principle of the highly distinctive maritime-law system of general average . . . is clearly stated in Justinian's Digest, and that the Rhodian Law is invoked as authority." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 1-2, at 3-4 (2d ed. 1975).

RHS. abbr. RURAL HOUSING SERVICE.

ribbon-matching rule. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE.

Richard Roe. A fictitious name for a male party to a legal proceeding, used because the party's true identity is unknown or because his real name is being withheld; esp., the second of two such parties. Cf. JOHN DOE. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻101; Parties ↻67, 73.]

RICO (ree-koh). abbr. (1972) RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT.

RICO person. Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, any individual or entity capable of holding a legal or beneficial interest in property and posing a continuous threat of engaging in the acts of racketeering. [Cases: Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations ↻64.]

rider. An attachment to some document, such as a legislative bill or an insurance policy, that amends or supplements the document. • A rider to a legislative bill often addresses subject matter unrelated to the main purpose of the bill. [Cases: Insurance ↻1845(1).]

rien culp (ryan kəlp). [Law French "not guilty"] Hist. A plea of not guilty.

rien dit (ryan dee). [Law French "says nothing"] Hist. A plea of nihil dicit. See NIHIL DICIT.

rien luy doit (ryan lwee dwah). [Law French "owes him nothing"] Hist. A plea of nil debet. See NIL DEBET.

riens en arrière (ryan aw-nah-ree-air). [Law French "nothing in arrear"] Hist. A plea in a debt action for arrearages of account.

riens passa per le fait (ryan pah-sah pair lə fay). [Law French "nothing passed by the deed"] Hist. A plea by which a party seeks to avoid the operation of a deed that has been enrolled or acknowledged in court.

riens per descent (ryan pair day-sawn). [Law French "nothing by descent"] Hist. The plea of an heir who is sued for the ancestor's debt and who received no land or assets from the ancestor.

rier county. See RERE-COUNTY.

RIF. abbr. Reduction in force. See LAYOFF.

rif, vb. Slang. To lay off (a worker). • The word derives from the acronym for reduction in force.

rigging the market. The practice of artificially inflating stock prices, by a series of bids, so that the demand for those stocks appears to be high and investors will therefore be enticed into buying the stocks. See MANIPULATION. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻60.25.]

right, n. (bef. 12c) 1. That which is proper under law, morality, or ethics <know right from wrong>. 2. Something that is due to a person by just claim, legal guarantee, or moral principle <the right of liberty>. 3. A power, privilege, or immunity secured to a person by law <the right to dispose of one's estate>. 4. A legally enforceable claim that another will do or will not do a given act; a recognized and protected interest the violation of which is a wrong . 5. (often pl.) The interest, claim, or ownership that one has in tangible or intangible property  <publishing rights>. 6. The privilege of corporate shareholders to purchase newly issued securities in amounts proportionate to their holdings. 7. The negotiable certificate granting such a privilege to a corporate shareholder.

"Right is a correlative to duty; where there is no duty there can be no right. But the converse is not necessarily true. There may be duties without rights. In order for a duty to create a right, it must be a duty to act or forbear. Thus, among those duties which have rights corresponding to them do not come the duties, if such there be, which call for an inward state of mind, as distinguished from external acts or forbearances. It is only to acts and forbearances that others have a right. It may be our duty to love our neighbor, but he has no right to our love." John Chipman Gray, The Nature and Sources of the Law 8-9 (2d ed. 1921).

"[T]he word 'right' is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified." American Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, 256 U.S. 350, 358, 41 S.Ct. 499, 500 (1921) (Holmes, J.).

"[In Hohfeldian terminology,] A is said to have a right that B shall do an act when, if B does not do the act, A can initiate legal proceedings that will result in coercing B. In such a situation B is said to have a duty to do the act. Right and duty are therefore correlatives, since in this sense there can never be a duty without a right." E. Allen Farnsworth, Contracts § 3.4, at 114. n.3 (3d ed. 1999).

absolute right. 1. A right that belongs to every human being, such as the right of personal liberty; a natural right. 2. An unqualified right; specif., a right that cannot be denied or curtailed except under specific conditions <freedom of thought is an absolute right>. • For example, a plaintiff has an absolute right to voluntarily nonsuit a case before it is finally submitted; after final submission, the court has discretion to grant or deny a voluntary nonsuit. Cf. relative right.

accessory right. A supplementary right that has been added to the main right that is vested in the same owner. • For example, the right in a security is accessory to the right that is secured; a servitude is accessory to the ownership of the land for whose benefit the servitude exists. Cf. principal right.

accrued right. A matured right; a right that is ripe for enforcement (as through litigation).

acquired right. A right that a person does not naturally enjoy, but that is instead procured, such as the right to own property.

civil right. See CIVIL RIGHT.

conditional right. A right that depends on an uncertain event; a right that may or may not exist. • For example, parents have the conditional right to punish their child, the condition being that the punishment must be reasonable.

conjugal rights. See CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

equitable right. A right cognizable within a court of equity. • If a legal right and an equitable right conflict, the legal right ordinarily prevails over and destroys the equitable right even if the legal right arose after the equitable right. Breaches of equitable rights are remedied by means other than monetary damages, such as an injunction or specific performance. With the merger of law and equity in federal and most state courts, the procedural differences between legal and equitable rights have been largely abolished. Cf. legal right (1), (2). [Cases: Equity ↷ 3.]

imperfect right. A right that is recognized by the law but is not enforceable. • Examples include time-barred claims and claims exceeding the local limits of a court's jurisdiction.

"[T]here are certain rights, sometimes called imperfect rights, which the law recognizes but will not enforce directly. Thus a statute-barred debt cannot be recovered in a court of law, but for certain purposes the existence of the debt has legal significance. If the debtor pays the money, he cannot later sue to recover it as money paid without consideration; and the imperfect right has the faculty of becoming perfect if the debtor makes an acknowledgment of the debt from which there can be inferred a promise to pay." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 286 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

imprescriptible right. A right that cannot be lost to prescription.

legal right. 1. A right created or recognized by law. • The breach of a legal right is usu. remediable by monetary damages. 2. A right historically recognized by common-law courts. Cf. equitable right. 3. The capacity of asserting a legally recognized claim against one with a correlative duty to act.

natural right. A right that is conceived as part of natural law and that is therefore thought to exist independently of rights created by government or society, such as the right to life, liberty, and property. See NATURAL LAW.

negative right. A right entitling a person to have another refrain from doing an act that might harm the person entitled. Cf. positive right.

perfect right. A right that is recognized by the law and is fully enforceable.

personal right. 1. A right that forms part of a person's legal status or personal condition, as opposed to the person's estate. 2. See right in personam.

political right. The right to participate in the establishment or administration of government, such as the right to vote or the right to hold public office. — Also termed political liberty. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷ 1460–1482; Elections ↷ 1; Officers and Public Employees ↷ 18.]

positive right. A right entitling a person to have another do some act for the benefit of the person entitled. Cf. negative right.

precarious right. A right enjoyed at the pleasure of another; a right that can be revoked at any time.

principal right. A right to which has been added a supplementary right in the same owner. Cf. accessory right.

proprietary right. A right that is part of a person's estate, assets, or property, as opposed to a right arising from the person's legal status.

public right. A right belonging to all citizens and usu. vested in and exercised by a public office or political entity. Cf. private right.

real right. 1. Civil law. A right that is connected with a thing rather than a person. • Real rights include ownership, use, habitation, usufruct, predial servitude, pledge, and real mortgage.

"The term 'real rights' (jura in re) is an abstraction unknown to classical Roman law. The classical jurists were preoccupied with the availability of remedies rather than the existence of substantive rights, and did not have a generic term to include all 'rights' which civilian scholars of following generations classified as 'real.' The expression ('real rights') was first coined by medieval writers elaborating on the Digest in an effort to explain ancient procedural forms of action in terms of substantive rights." A.N. Yiannopoulos, Real Rights in Louisiana and Comparative Law, 23 La. L. Rev. 161, 163 (1963).

remedial right. The secondary right to have a remedy that arises when a primary right is broken. See secondary right.

right in rem (in rem). A right, often negative, exercisable against the world at large. — Also termed real right; jus in rem. See IN REM.

"A right in rem need not relate to a tangible res. Thus a right that one's reputation should not be unjustifiably attacked is today described as a right in rem, since it is a right that avails against persons generally. This shows how far the conception has developed from the Roman notion of actio in rem, for one who sues to protect his reputation is not asking for judgment for a specific res. It should also be noticed that on breach of a right in rem, a right in personam arises against the aggressor." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 300 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

secondary right. A right prescribed by procedural law to enforce a substantive right, such as the right to damages for a breach of contract. • The enforcement of a secondary right is variously termed secondary enforcement, remedial enforcement, or sanctional enforcement. — Also termed remedial right; sanctioning right.

substantial right. (18c) An essential right that potentially affects the outcome of a lawsuit and is capable of legal enforcement and protection, as distinguished from a mere technical or procedural right.

substantive right (səb-stən-tiv). (18c) A right that can be protected or enforced by law; a right of substance rather than form. Cf. procedural right.

vested right. A right that so completely and definitely belongs to a person that it cannot be impaired or taken away without the person's consent. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 2630-2655.]

right against self-incrimination. (1911) A criminal defendant's or a witness's constitutional right — under the Fifth Amendment, but waivable under certain conditions — guaranteeing that a person cannot be compelled by the government to testify if the testimony might result in the person's being criminally prosecuted. • Although this right is most often asserted during a criminal prosecution, a person can also "plead the Fifth" in a civil, legislative, administrative, or grand-jury proceeding. — Also termed privilege against self-incrimination; right to remain silent. See SELF-INCRIMINATION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 393; Witnesses ⇨ 297.]

"The right against self-incrimination, protected by the Fifth Amendment, is central to the accusatorial system of criminal justice: together with the presumption of innocence, the right against self-incrimination ensures that the state must bear the burden of prosecution. . . . The right against self-incrimination is personal. It may be claimed only by the person who himself might be at risk for testifying. It may not be claimed on behalf of another. . . ." Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 481-82 (1992).

right-and-wrong test. See MCNAGHTEN RULES.

rightful, adj. 1. (Of an action) equitable; fair . 2. (Of a person) legitimately entitled to a position . 3. (Of an office or piece of property) that one is entitled to <her rightful inheritance>.

right of action. 1. The right to bring a specific case to court. [Cases: Action ⇨ 1, 2.] 2. A right that can be enforced by legal action; a chose in action. Cf. CAUSE OF ACTION. [Cases: Action ⇨ 1, 2; Property ⇨ 5.5.]

right of approach. Int'l law. The right of a warship on the high seas to draw near another vessel to determine its nationality. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨ 20.]

right of assembly. The constitutional right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — of the people to gather peacefully for public expression of religion, politics, or grievances. — Also termed freedom of assembly; right to assemble. Cf. FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION; unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1430, 1431.]

right of audience. A right to appear and be heard in a given court. • The term is chiefly used in England to denote the right of a certain type of lawyer to appear in a certain type of court.

right of common. See PROFIT À PRENDRE.

right-of-conscience law. A statute allowing healthcare professionals to refuse to provide services that they find morally objectionable.

right of contribution. See CONTRIBUTION (1).

right of discussion. Scots law. See BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION.

right of dissent and appraisal. See APPRAISAL REMEDY.

right of division. Scots law. See BENEFIT OF DIVISION.

right of election. Wills & estates. A surviving spouse's statutory right to choose either the gifts given by the deceased spouse in the will or a forced share or a share of the estate as defined in the probate statute. — Also termed widow's election. See ELECTION (2); augmented estate under ESTATE (3). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨ 64; Wills ⇨ 778-818.]

right of entry. 1. The right of taking or resuming possession of land or other real property in a peaceable manner. 2. POWER OF TERMINATION. 3. The right to go into another's real property for a special purpose without committing trespass. • An example is a landlord's right to enter a tenant's property to make repairs. [Cases: Trespass ⇨24.] 4. The right of an alien to go into a jurisdiction for a special purpose. • An example is an exchange student's right to enter another country to attend college. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨162, 163.]

right of entry for condition broken. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of exoneration. See EQUITY OF EXONERATION.

right of family integrity. A fundamental and substantive due-process right for a family unit to be free of unjustified state interference. • While not specifically mentioned in the U.S. Constitution, this right is said to emanate from it. The contours of the right are nebulous and incompletely defined, but it at least includes the right to bear children, to rear them, and to guide them according to the parents' beliefs, as well as the right of children to be raised by their parents free of unwarranted interference by state officials. The right restricts state action under the Fourteenth Amendment. Interference is not permitted in the absence of a compelling state interest and is reviewed under a strict-scrutiny standard. Most courts require a state to establish by clear and convincing evidence that interference in a familial relationship is justified. — Also termed right to family integrity. See PARENTAL-AUTONOMY DOCTRINE; PARENTAL-PRIVILEGE DOCTRINE. Cf. freedom of intimate association under FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨4382.]

right of first refusal. 1. A potential buyer's contractual right to meet the terms of a third party's higher offer. • For example, if Beth has a right of first refusal on the purchase of Sam's house, and if Terry offers to buy the house for $300,000, then Beth can match this offer and prevent Terry from buying it. Cf. RIGHT OF PREEMPTION. [Cases: Contracts ⇨16.5, 172; Sales ⇨24, 64; Vendor and Purchaser ⇨18(5), 57.] 2. Family law. The right of a parent to be offered the opportunity to have custody of a child other than during a usual visitation period before the other parent turns to a third-party caregiver. • The right may be exercised by either parent, and may exist in circumstances that are foreseeable (e.g., a business trip) or unforeseeable (e.g., an illness). [Cases: Child Custody ⇨149.]

right of innocent passage. See INNOCENT PASSAGE.

right of occupancy. See INDIAN TITLE.

right of petition. See RIGHT TO PETITION.

right of possession. The right to hold, use, occupy, or otherwise enjoy a given property; esp., the right to enter real property and eject or evict a wrongful possessor. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇨9(2).]

right of preemption. A potential buyer's contractual right to have the first opportunity to buy, at a specified price, if the seller chooses to sell within the contracted period. • For example, if Beth has a right of preemption on Sam's house for five years at $100,000, Sam can either keep the house for five years (in which case Beth's right expires) or, if he wishes to sell during those five years, offer the house to Beth, who can either buy it for $100,000 or refuse to buy. If Beth refuses, Sam can sell to someone else. — Also termed first option to buy. Cf. RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL. [Cases: Contracts ⇨16.5; Sales ⇨24; Vendor and Purchaser ⇨18(5).]

right of privacy. 1. The right to personal autonomy. • The U.S. Constitution does not explicitly provide for a right of privacy or for a general right of personal autonomy, but the Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled that a right of personal autonomy is implied in the "zones of privacy" created by specific constitutional guarantees. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨1210-1275.] 2. The right of a person and the person's property to be free from unwarranted public scrutiny or exposure. — Also termed right to privacy. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

right of publicity. The right to control the use of one's own name, picture, or likeness and to prevent another from using it for commercial benefit without one's consent. [Cases: Torts ⇨384.]

"The right of publicity is a state-law created intellectual property right whose infringement is a commercial tort of unfair competition. It is a distinct legal category, not just a 'kind of' trademark, copyright, false advertising or right of privacy." 1 J. Thomas McCarthy, The Rights of Publicity and Privacy § 1-3, at 1-2 (2d ed. 2000).

right of redemption. 1. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. 2. See STATUTORY RIGHT OF REDEMPTION.

right of reentry. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of reproduction. See REPRODUCTION RIGHT.

right of retainer. A trustee's power to withhold trust funds or property from distribution, exercisable when the beneficiary owes money to the trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨282.]

right of revolution. The inherent right of a people to cast out its rulers, change its polity, or effect radical reforms in its system of government or institutions, by force or general uprising, when the legal and constitutional methods of making such changes have proved inadequate or are so obstructed as to be unavailable.

right of search. Int'l law. The right to stop, visit, and examine vessels on the high seas to discover whether they or the goods they carry are liable to capture; esp., a belligerent state's right to stop any merchant vessel of a neutral state on the high seas and to search as reasonably necessary to determine whether the ship has become liable to capture under the international law of naval warfare. • This right carries with it no right to destroy without full examination, unless those on a given vessel actively resist. — Also termed right of visit; right of visit and search; right of visitation; right of visitation and search. See VISIT.

right of suit. A person's right to seek redress in a court. [Cases: Action ⇨ 1.]

right of support. Property. 1. A landowner's right to have the land supported by adjacent land and by the underlying earth. [Cases: Adjoining Landowners ⇨ 2.] 2. A servitude giving the owner of a house the right to rest timber on the walls of a neighboring house.

right of survivorship. A joint tenant's right to succeed to the whole estate upon the death of the other joint tenant. — Also termed jus accrescendi. See SURVIVORSHIP; joint tenancy under TENANCY. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ⇨ 6.]

right of termination. A remedy involving the ending of contractual relations, accorded to a party to a contract when the other party breaches a duty that arises under the contract. • The right of termination is contrasted with a right to rescind, which arises when the other party breaches a duty that arises independently of the contract. — Also termed right to terminate. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 217; Sales ⇨ 84.]

right of visit. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visit and search. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visitation. 1. VISITATION RIGHT. 2. RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right-of-way. 1. The right to pass through property owned by another. • A right-of-way may be established by contract, by longstanding usage, or by public authority (as with a highway). Cf. EASEMENT. [Cases: Easements ⇨ 1.] 2. The right to build and operate a railway line or a highway on land belonging to another, or the land so used. [Cases: Railroads ⇨ 69.] 3. The right to take precedence in traffic. [Cases: Automobiles ⇨ 154, 171(4); Highways ⇨ 99.] 3. The strip of land subject to a nonowner's right to pass through. — Also written right of way. Pl. rights-of-way.

public right-of-way. The right of passage held by the public in general to travel on roads, freeways, and other thoroughfares.

right of wharfing out. A right to the exclusive use of submerged lands, as by establishing a permanent structure or wharf on the land to dock oceangoing vessels. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨ 43(2).]

rights arbitration. See grievance arbitration under ARBITRATION.

rights-consciousness. See CLAIMS-CONSCIOUSNESS.

rights-management information. Intellectual property. Information about an intellectual-property right, affixed to the subject matter when it is communicated to the public, esp. in electronic form, and identifying the right's owner, terms of use, indexing numbers or codes, or other identifying information. • The information facilitates contracting with the owner of the rights. In digital technology, laws may ban the removal or alteration of rights-management information as a form of intellectual-property protection.

rights of attribution. See ATTRIBUTION RIGHTS.

rights off. See EX RIGHTS.

rights offering. See OFFERING.

rights on. See CUM RIGHTS.

right to assemble. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

right to assistance of counsel. See RIGHT TO COUNSEL.

right to bear arms. The constitutional right of persons to own firearms. U.S. Const. amend II. See SECOND AMENDMENT. [Cases: Weapons ⇨ 1.]

right to counsel. 1. Criminal law. A criminal defendant's constitutional right, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, to representation by a court-appointed lawyer if the defendant cannot afford to hire one. • The Supreme Court has recognized a juvenile delinquent defendant's right to counsel. In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428 (1967). — Also termed benefit of counsel; right to assistance of counsel. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 1766.] 2. Family law. The right of a defendant in a suit for termination of parental rights to representation by a court-appointed lawyer if the defendant cannot afford to hire one. • Although some states appoint counsel for indigent defendants in a suit for termination of parental rights, the Supreme Court has held that the Constitution does not require that counsel be appointed for indigent defendants in all termination suits, but if a criminal charge may be made, the right to counsel may attach. Lassiter v. Department of Soc. Servs., 452 U.S. 18, 101 S.Ct. 2153 (1981). — Also termed (in both senses) access to counsel. [Cases: Infants ⇨ 205.] See ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL.

right to die. The right of a terminally ill person to refuse life-sustaining treatment. — Also termed right to refuse treatment. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE. [Cases: Health ⇨ 914.]

right to exclude. Patents. A patentee's right to prevent others from making, using, selling, or offering for sale the patentee's invention. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 191.]

right-to-know act. A federal or state statute requiring businesses (such as chemical manufacturers) that produce hazardous substances to disclose information about the substances both to the community where they are produced or stored and to employees who handle them. — Also termed right-to-know statute. [Cases: Environmental Law ↷415.]

right to petition. (17c) The constitutional right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — of the people to make formal requests to the government, as by lobbying or writing letters to public officials. — Also termed right of petition; freedom of petition. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷1435–1438.]

right to rescind. The remedy accorded to a party to a contract when the other party breaches a duty that arises independently of the contract. • The right to rescind is contrasted with a right of termination, which arises when the other party breaches a duty that arises under the contract. — Also termed right of rescission. [Cases: Contracts ↷258.]

right-to-work law. (1958) A state law that prevents labor-management agreements requiring a person to join a union as a condition of employment. See open shop under SHOP. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷964, 1264.]

right-wrong test. See MCNAGHTEN RULES.

rigid constitution. See CONSTITUTION.

rigor juris (rig-ər joo-ris). [Latin] Strictness of law. Cf. GRATIA CURIAE.

rigor mortis (rig-ər mor-tis). The temporary stiffening of a body's joints and muscles after death. • The onset of rigor mortis can vary from 15 minutes to several hours after death, depending on the body's condition and on atmospheric factors.

ringing out. See RINGING UP.

ringing the changes. Fraud consisting in the offender's using a large bill to pay for a small purchase, waiting for the shopkeeper to put change on the counter, and then, by a series of maneuvers involving changes of mind — such as asking for some other article of little value or for smaller change for some of the money on the counter — creating a confused situation in which the offender picks up more the money than due. [Cases: Larceny ↷14(1).]

ringing up. A method by which commodities dealers cooperate to discharge contracts for future delivery in advance by using offsets, cancellations, and price

riot, n. (14c) 1. An assemblage of three or more persons in a public place taking concerted action in a turbulent and disorderly manner for a common purpose (regardless of the lawfulness of that purpose). 2. An unlawful disturbance of the peace by an assemblage of usu. three or more persons acting with a common purpose in a violent or tumultuous manner that threatens or terrorizes the public or an institution. Cf. unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY; CIVIL COMMOTION; ROUT; AFFRAY. [Cases: Riot ↷1.] — riotous, adj. — riot, vb.

"A riot is defined as an unlawful assembly (i.e. an assembly come together in pursuance of an unlawful purpose), consisting of at least three persons, which has begun to create a breach of the peace. At Common Law it is an indictable misdemeanour, punishable by a fine and imprisonment. But the statutory form of it, introduced by the Riot Act of 1714, is better known. By that statute, passed to deal with Jacobite disturbances, it was provided that the members of a riotous assembly of twelve or more persons which does not disperse within an hour after the reading by a magistrate of the proclamation contained in the Act, become guilty of felony, which, at the time of the passing of the Act, was a capital offence, and is, even now, punishable with imprisonment for life." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

"A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons acting together (a) in the commission of a crime by open force, or (b) in the execution of some enterprise, lawful or unlawful, in such a violent, turbulent and unauthorized manner as to create likelihood of public terror and alarm. . . . When they come together for this purpose they are guilty of unlawful assembly. When they start on their way to carry out their common design they are guilty of riot. In the actual execution of their design they are guilty of riot." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

Riot Act. A 1714 English statute that made it a capital offense for 12 or more rioters to remain together for an hour after a magistrate has officially proclaimed that rioters must disperse. • This statute was not generally accepted in the United States and did not become a part of American common law. It did, however, become a permanent part of the English language in the slang phrase reading the riot act (meaning "to reprimand vigorously"), which originally referred to the official command for rioters to disperse.

ripae muniendae causa (ri-pee myoo-nee-en-dee kaw-zə). [Latin] Hist. For the purpose of strengthening a riverbank.

riparian (ri-pair-ee-ən or ri-), adj. (1841) Of, relating to, or located on the bank of a river or stream (or occasionally another body of water, such as a lake) <riparian land> . Cf. LITTORAL. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷39–46; Waters and Water Courses ↷34–49, 109.]

riparian land. See LAND.

riparian proprietor. (1808) A person who is in possession of riparian land or who owns an estate in it; a landowner whose property borders on a stream or river. See

riparian right. (often pl.) (1860) The right of a landowner whose property borders on a body of water or watercourse. • Such a landowner traditionally has the right to make reasonable use of the water. — Also termed water right. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷39–46; Waters and Water Courses ↷34–47.]

riparian-rights doctrine. (1921) The rule that owners of land bordering on a waterway have equal rights to use the water passing through or by their property. Cf. PRIOR-APPROPRIATION DOCTRINE. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷39; Waters and Water Courses ↷40.]

ripeness, n. 1. The state of a dispute that has reached, but has not passed, the point when the facts have developed sufficiently to permit an intelligent and useful decision to be made. 2. The requirement that this state must exist before a court will decide a controversy. See JUSTICIABILITY. Cf. MOOTNESS DOCTRINE; PREMATURITY (1). [Cases: Action ↷6; Federal Courts ↷12.1.] — ripe, adj. — ripen, vb.

ripper act. Slang. A statute that gives a government's chief executive broad powers to appoint and remove department heads or other subordinate officials.

rise, vb. 1. (Of a court) to adjourn finally at the end of a term. 2. (Of spectators and participants in a courtroom) to stand when the judge enters or exits. 3. (Of a court) to take a recess or temporary break, as at the end of a day. 4. Parliamentary law. (Of a special committee that has exhausted its business) to dissolve and send a report to the referring body. • A committee's rising is equivalent to a deliberative assembly's adjourning sine die. — Also termed rise and report. Cf. adjourn sine die under ADJOURN (2).

risk, n. (17c) 1. The uncertainty of a result, happening, or loss; the chance of injury, damage, or loss; esp., the existence and extent of the possibility of harm <many feel that skydiving is not worth the risk>. See ASSUMPTION OF THE RISK. 2. Liability for injury, damage, or loss if it occurs <the consumer-protection statute placed the risk on the manufacturer instead of the buyer>. 3. Insurance. The chance or degree of probability of loss to the subject matter of an insurance policy <the insurer undertook the risk in exchange for a premium>. Cf. PERIL (2). [Cases: Insurance ↷1542.] 4. Insurance. The amount that an insurer stands to lose <the underwriter took steps to reduce its total risk>. 5. Insurance. A person or thing that an insurer considers a hazard; someone or something that might be covered by an insurance policy <she's a poor risk for health insurance>. [Cases: Insurance ↷1542(3).] 6. Insurance. The type of loss covered by a policy; a hazard from a specified source <this homeowner's policy covers fire risks and flood risks>. [Cases: Insurance ↷2097.] — risk, vb.

absorbable risk. A potential loss that a corporation believes that it can cover either with available capital or with self-insurance.

assigned risk. One who is a poor risk for insurance but whom an insurance company is forced to insure because of state law. • For example, an accident-prone driver is an assigned risk in a state with a compulsory motor-vehicle-insurance statute. [Cases: Insurance ↷1528.]

classified risk. In life- and health-insurance policies, the risk created by a policyholder's substandard health or other peril.

noninsurable risk. A risk for which insurance will not be written because the risk is too uncertain to be the subject of actuarial analysis.

pure risk. A risk that can only result in a loss. • Insurance protects only against pure risks. Cf. speculative risk.

shifting risk. The changing risk covered under an insurance policy insuring a stock of goods or similar property that varies in amount and composition in the course of trade. [Cases: Insurance ↷2138(1).]

speculative risk. A risk that can result in either a loss or a gain. Cf. pure risk.

risk arbitrage. See ARBITRAGE.

risk assessment. Family law. A process for ascertaining the likelihood that a person, usu. a parent, will harm a child. • Before a child can be removed from his or her family by a governmental entity, a risk assessment should be performed to determine the likelihood of the child's being harmed in the future. [Cases: Infants ↷192.]

risk-averse, adj. (Of a person) uncomfortable with volatility or uncertainty; not willing to take risks; very cautious .

risk-benefit test. See RISK-UTILITY TEST.

risk capital. See CAPITAL.

risk-capital test. Securities. A test of whether a transaction constitutes the sale of a security (and is thus subject to securities laws) based on whether the seller is soliciting risk capital with which to develop a business venture. Cf. CAPITAL-RISK TEST. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷5, 248, 249.]

risk distribution. The method by which a legal system allocates the risk of harm between the person who suffers it and the loss.

risk factor. Insurance. In life-insurance ratemaking, the estimated cost of present and future claims, based on a mortality table. • The risk factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See PREMIUM RATE. Cf. INTEREST FACTOR; MORTALITY FACTOR. [Cases: Insurance ↷1542.]

risk management. The procedures or systems used to minimize accidental losses, esp. to a business.

Risk Management Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for administering the programs of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation and for overseeing other programs relating to the risk management of crops and commodities. — Abbr. RMA.

risk of jury doubt. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

risk of loss. (18c) 1. The danger or possibility of damage to, destruction of, or misplacement of goods or other property <commercial transportation always carries some risk of loss>. 2. Responsibility for bearing the costs and expenses of such damage, destruction, or misplacement <the contract specifies who assumes the risk of loss>.

risk of nonpersuasion. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

risk-utility test. (1982) A method of imposing product liability on a manufacturer if the evidence shows that a reasonable person would conclude that the benefits of a product's particular design versus the feasibility of an alternative safer design did not outweigh the dangers inherent in the original design. — Also termed danger-utility test; risk-benefit test. Cf. CONSUMER-CONTEMPORATION TEST. [Cases: Products Liability ↷129.]

RIT. abbr. Rochester Institute of Technology. See NATIONAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF.

river. A natural, flowing body of water that empties into another body of water, such as a lake, sea, or channel. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷1; Waters and Water Courses ↷38.]

international river. A river that flows through or between two or more countries.

national river. A river wholly contained within a single country. • That country has exclusive territorial rights over the river. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷2.]

private river. A river to which a riparian owner may claim ownership of the riverbed because the river is unnavigable or navigable only by vessels with shallow drafts. • A navigable private river is not wholly owned by a private person and cannot be closed to public use; people may still make ordinary use of the river for transportation and navigation. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷4.]

RL/C. See revolving letter of credit under LETTER OF CREDIT.

RMA. abbr. RISK MANAGEMENT AGENCY.

RMS. abbr. REPRESSED-MEMORY SYNDROME.

roadstead. Maritime law. A convenient or safe place where vessels usu. anchor. [Cases: Collision ↷69.]

robbery, n. (12c) The illegal taking of property from the person of another, or in the person's presence, by violence or intimidation; aggravated larceny. • Robbery is usu. a felony, but some jurisdictions classify some robberies as high misdemeanors. — Also termed (in Latin) crimen roberiae. See LARCENY; THEFT. Cf. BURGLARY. [Cases: Robbery ↷1.] — rob, vb.

"Robbery is larceny from the person by violence or intimidation. It is a felony both at common law and under modern statutes. Under some of the new penal codes robbery does not require an actual taking of property. If force or intimidation is used in the attempt to commit theft this is sufficient." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 343 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated robbery. (1878) Robbery committed by a person who either carries a dangerous weapon — often called armed robbery — or inflicts bodily harm on someone during the robbery. • Some statutes also specify that a robbery is aggravated when the victim is a member of a protected class, such as children or the elderly. [Cases: Robbery ↷11.]

armed robbery. (1926) Robbery committed by a person carrying a dangerous weapon, regardless of whether the weapon is revealed or used. • Most states punish armed robbery as an aggravated form of robbery rather than as a separate crime. [Cases: Robbery ↷11.]

conjoint robbery (kən-joynt). A robbery committed by two or more persons. [Cases: Robbery ↷15.]

highway robbery. 1. Robbery committed against a traveler on or near a public highway. [Cases: Robbery ↷1.] 2. Figuratively, a price or fee that is unreasonably high; excessive profit or advantage.

simple robbery. (18c) Robbery that does not involve an aggravating factor or circumstance. [Cases: Robbery ↷1.] robe. (18c) 1. The gown worn by a judge while presiding over court. • In the U.S., judges generally wear plain black gowns. In the U.K., judicial robes vary in color and adornment, depending on the judge's rank, the season, and the court, and are traditionally worn with white horsehair wigs. — Also termed judicial robe. 2. (often cap.) The legal or judicial profession <eminent members of the robe>.

Robert's Rules. 1. A parliamentary manual titled Robert's Rules of Order, originally written in 1875–76 by Henry M. Robert (1837–1923). • The manual went through three editions under its original title and three more (beginning in 1915) under the title Robert's Rules of Order Revised. Since 1970 it has been titled Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised. It is the best selling and most commonly adopted parliamentary manual in the United States. 2. Any parliamentary manual that includes "Robert's Rules" in its title. • The copyright on the first several editions has expired, and many imitators have adapted those editions in varying degrees of faithfulness to the original. 3. (sing.) RULE (3). See PARLIAMENTARY MANUAL.

Robinson-Patman Act. A federal statute (specif., an amendment to the Clayton Act) prohibiting price discrimination that hinders competition or tends to create a monopoly. 15 USCA § 13. See ANTITRUST LAW; CLAYTON ACT. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷452.]

Rochin rule. The now-rejected principle that unconscionably obtained evidence is admissible against the accused unless the evidence was obtained in a manner that shocks the conscience (such as pumping the stomach of a suspect to obtain illegal drugs that the suspect has swallowed, as occurred in the Rochin v. California case). • The Supreme Court handed down Rochin before the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule applied to the states. Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 72 S.Ct. 205 (1952). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 394.]

rocket docket. (1987) 1. An accelerated dispute-resolution process. 2. A court or judicial district known for its speedy disposition of cases. 3. A similar administrative process, in which disputes must be decided within a specified time (such as 60 days).

ROD. abbr. See RECORD OF DECISION.

rogatio testium. The production of a witness who can testify to the making of a nuncupative will. • The witness must confirm that the testator declared or expressed that the words spoken were a will. See nuncupative will under WILL. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 142.]

rogatory letter (rog-ə-tor-ee). See LETTER OF REQUEST.

rogue court. See COURT.

rogue jury. See JURY.

roll, n. (14c) 1. A record of a court's or public office's proceedings. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 277; Records ⇨ 6, 32.] 2. An official list of the persons and property subject to taxation. — Also termed (in sense 2) tax roll; tax list; assessment roll. Cf. TAXPAYERS' LISTS. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2576.] 3. Parliamentary law. The roster of those entitled to vote. — Also termed roll of delegates; roll of members.

roll-call vote. See VOTE (4).

rolled-up plea. See PLEA (3).

rolling stock. Movable property, such as locomotives and rail cars, owned by a railroad.

roll of delegates. See ROLL (3).

rollover, n. 1. The extension or renewal of a short-term loan; the refinancing of a maturing loan or note. 2. The transfer of funds (such as IRA funds) to a new investment of the same type, esp. so as to defer payment of taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3587, 3594.] — roll over, vb.

rollover mortgage. See renegotiable-rate mortgage under MORTGAGE.

Roman-Dutch law. A system of law in Holland from the mid-15th century to the early 19th century, based on a mixture of Germanic customary law and Roman law as interpreted in medieval and Renaissance lawbooks. • This law forms the basis of modern South African law, the law of several other countries in southern Africa, and the law of Sri Lanka.

"The phrase 'Roman-Dutch Law' was invented by Simon van Leeuwen, who employed it as the sub-title of his work entitled Paratitla Juris Novissimi, published at Leyden in 1652. Subsequently his larger and better known treatise on the 'Roman-Dutch Law' was issued under that name in the year 1664.

"The system of law thus described is that which obtained in the province of Holland from the middle of the fifteenth to the early years of the nineteenth century. Its main principles were carried by the Dutch into their settlements in the East and West Indies; and when some of these, namely, the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, and part of Guiana, at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century, passed under the dominion of the Crown of Great Britain, the old law was retained as the common law of the territories which now became British colonies. With the expansion of the British Empire in South Africa, the sphere of the Roman-Dutch Law has extended its boundaries, until the whole of the area comprised within the Union of South Africa . . . has adopted this system as its common law. This is the more remarkable since in Holland itself and in the Dutch colonies of the present day the old law has been replaced by codes . . ." R.W. Lee, An Introduction to Roman-Dutch Law 2 (4th ed. 1946).

Romanesque law. See CIVIL LAW (1).

Romanist, n. One who is versed in or practices Roman law; a Roman-law specialist.

Roman law. (16c) The legal system of the ancient Romans, forming the basis of the modern civil law; CIVIL LAW (1).

"The Roman law is the body of rules that governed the social relations of many peoples in Europe, Asia, and Africa for some period between the earliest prehistoric times and 1453 A.D. This date should perhaps be extended to 1900 A.D., or even to the present time, and we might include America in the territory concerned. . . . Yet the essential fact is that no present-day community . . . consciously applies as binding upon its citizens the rules of Roman law in their unmodified form. That law is an historical fact. It would have only a tepid historical interest . . . if it were not for the circumstance that, before it became a purely historical fact, it was worked into the foundation and framework of what is called the civil law . . ." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 1 (1927).

"Roman law is not only the best-known, the most highly developed, and the most influential of all legal systems of the past; apart from English law, it is also the only one whose entire and unbroken history can be traced from early and primitive beginnings to a stage of elaborate perfection in the hands of skilled specialists." Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 5 (1951).

Rome Act. Copyright. A 1928 revision of the Berne Convention adding the moral rights of attribution and integrity to the minimum standards of protection that member nations must recognize, creating a compulsory license of recorded performances for radio broadcasting, and specifying that the term of protection for joint works must be measured from the death of the last surviving coauthor. — Also termed Rome Act of 1928; 1928 Rome Act.

Rome Convention. See ROME CONVENTION ON RELATED RIGHTS.

Rome Convention on Related Rights. Copyright. A 1961 treaty setting minimum standards for neighboring rights of performers, producers, and broadcasters. • The United States is not a signatory. Neighboring rights were not protected under the Paris Convention or the Berne Convention. They are part of the copyright protection under the Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property (TRIPs). — Also termed Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations. — Often shortened to Rome Convention. See NEIGHBORING RIGHT.

Rooker–Feldman doctrine. The rule that a federal court cannot consider claims actually decided by a state court or claims inextricably intertwined with an earlier state-court judgment. Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 415–16, 44 S.Ct. 149, 150 (1923); District of Columbia Ct. of App. v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 476, 103 S.Ct. 1303, 1311 (1983). • This doctrine precludes “a party losing in state court . . . from seeking what in substance would be appellate review of [a] state judgment in a United States district court, based on the losing party’s claim that the state judgment itself violates the loser’s federal rights.” Johnson v. De Grandy, 512 U.S. 997, 1005–06, 114 S.Ct. 2647, 2654 (1994). [Cases: Courts ⇨509.] root. Civil law. A descendant.

root of title. (1846) The recorded land transaction, usu. at least 40 years old, that is used to begin a title search. See CHAIN OF TITLE; TITLE SEARCH.

ROR. abbr. RELEASE ON RECOGNIZANCE.

Roth IRA. See INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNT.

round lot. See LOT (3).

round-up. See dragnet arrest under ARREST.

roup. Scots law. A sale by auction (usu. public).

rowt (rowt), n. (15c) The offense that occurs when an unlawful assembly makes some move toward the accomplishment of its participants’ common purpose. Cf. RIOT. [Cases: Riot ⇨1.]

“The word ‘rou’ comes from the same source as the word ‘route.’ It signifies that three or more who have gathered together in unlawful assembly are ‘on their way.’ It is not necessary for guilt of this offense that the design be actually carried out, nor that the journey be made in a tumultuous manner.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

routine-activities theory. (1985) The theory that criminal acts occur when (1) a person is motivated to commit the offense, (2) a vulnerable victim is available, and (3) there is insufficient protection to prevent the crime. Cf. CONTROL THEORY; RATIONAL-CHOICE THEORY; STRAIN THEORY.

Royal Marriages Act. A 1772 statute (12 Geo. 3, ch. 1) forbidding members of the royal family from marrying without the sovereign’s permission, except on certain conditions.

“Royal Marriages Act . . . An Act occasioned by George III’s fear of the effect on the dignity and honour of the royal family of members thereof contracting unsuitable marriages, two of his brothers having done so . . . It provided that marriages of descendants of George II, other than the issue of princesses who marry into foreign families, should not be valid unless they had the consent of the King in Council, or, if the parties were aged over 25, they had given 12 months’ notice to the Privy Council, unless during that time both Houses of Parliament expressly declare disapproval of the proposed marriage.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1091 (1980).

royalty. (1839) 1. Intellectual property. A payment — in addition to or in place of an up-front payment — made to an author or inventor for each copy of a work or article sold under a copyright or patent. • Royalties are often paid per item made, used, or sold, or per time elapsed. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨48; Patents ⇨217.1.]

established royalty. A royalty set at an agreed-on price.

• In the absence of an established royalty, a court will determine a remedy for infringement based on what a reasonable royalty would have been.

reasonable royalty. A royalty that a licensee would be willing to pay the holder of the thing’s intellectual-property rights while still making a reasonable profit from its use. • The reasonable-royalty standard often serves as the measure of damages in a claim of patent, copyright, or trademark infringement, or for misappropriation of trade secrets. In deciding what royalty is reasonable in a trade-secrets suit, courts consider the unique circumstances of the case, as well as (1) how the use affected the parties’ ability to compete; (2) the cost of past licenses; (3) the cost to develop the secret and its present value; (4) how the defendant intends to use the information; and (5) the availability of alternatives. [Cases: Patents ⇨319(1).]

2. Oil & gas. A share of the product or profit from real property, reserved by the grantor of a mineral lease, in exchange for the lessee’s right to mine or drill on the land. — Also termed (in sense 2) override. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨70, 79.]

haulage royalty. A royalty paid to a landowner for moving coal via a subterranean passageway under the landowner’s land from a mine located on an adjacent property. • The payment is calculated at a certain amount per ton of coal.

landowner’s royalty. A share of production or revenues provided for the lessor in the royalty clause of the oil-and-gas lease and paid at the well free of any costs of production. • Traditionally, except in California, the landowner’s royalty has been 1/8 of gross production for oil and 1/8 of the proceeds received from the sale of gas. But today the size is often negotiated. — Also termed leaseholder royalty. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨79.1(1).]

mineral royalty. A right to a share of income from mineral production. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨70, 79.]

nonparticipating royalty. A share of production — or of the revenue from production free its costs — carved out of the mineral interest. • A nonparticipating-royalty holder is entitled to the stated share of production or cash without regard to the terms of any lease. Nonparticipating royalties are often retained by mineral-interest owners who sell their rights. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨79.1(1).]

overriding royalty. A share of either production or revenue from production (free of the costs of production) carved out of a lessee's interest under an oil-and-gas lease. ● Overriding-royalty interests are often used to compensate those who have helped structure a drilling venture. An overriding-royalty interest ends when the underlying lease terminates. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷74.]

shut-in royalty. A payment made by an oil-and-gas lessee to the lessor to keep the lease in force when a well capable of producing is not utilized because there is no market for the oil or gas. ● Generally, without such a payment, the lease will terminate at the end of the primary term unless actual production has begun. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷78.1(3).]

royalty interest. Oil & gas. A share of production — or the value or proceeds of production, free of the costs of production — when and if there is production. ● A royalty interest is usu. expressed as a fraction (such as 1/6). A royalty-interest owner has no right to operate the property and therefore no right to lease the property or to share in bonuses or delay rentals. In some states a royalty owner has the right of ingress and egress to take the royalty production. Authorities are split over what costs are costs of production. Several different but related kinds of royalty interests are commonly encountered. See ROYALTY (2).

rubric (roo-brik). 1. The title of a statute or code <the rubric of the relevant statute is the Civil Rights Act of 1964>. 2. A category or designation <assignment of rights falls under the rubric of contract law>. 3. An authoritative rule, esp. for conducting a public worship service <the rubric dictates whether the congregation should stand or kneel>. 4. An introductory or explanatory note; a preface . 5. An established rule, custom, or law <what is the rubric in the Northern District of Texas regarding appearance at docket call?>.

rule, n. (13c) 1. Generally, an established and authoritative standard or principle; a general norm mandating or guiding conduct or action in a given type of situation.

default rule. A legal principle that fills a gap in a contract in the absence of an applicable express provision but remains subject to a contrary agreement. Cf. GAP-FILLER. [Cases: Contracts ↷168.]

general rule. A rule applicable to a class of cases or circumstances.

mandatory rule. A legal rule that is not subject to a contrary agreement. ● For example, the UCC obligation of good faith and fair dealing cannot be disclaimed.

peremptory rule. A court order that must be obeyed without an opportunity to respond. ● No objections may be lodged or arguments made.

special rule. See SPECIAL RULE (1).

2. A regulation governing a court's or an agency's internal procedures. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↷381; Courts ↷85; Federal Civil Procedure ↷21.] 3. Parliamentary law. A procedural rule (sense 1) for the orderly conduct of business in a deliberative assembly. — Also termed rule of order (often pl.).

Cordon rule. See CORDON RULE.

joint rule. A rule adopted by both houses of a bicameral legislature for the conduct of business or relations between them, such as when they meet in joint session, or for other matters in which they share an interest. See joint session under SESSION (1). [Cases: States ↷35.]

ordinary standing rule. See standing rule (1).

Ramseyer rule. See RAMSEYER RULE.

special rule. 1. See SPECIAL RULE (2). 2. See SPECIAL RULE (3).

standing rule. 1. A rule that relates to an organization's administration or operation rather than to its procedure in meetings. ● For example, a rule about the time and place of regular meetings, or about a committee's jurisdiction, is a standing rule. — Also termed ordinary standing rule. 2. A special rule of continuing force. ● Many conventions and other deliberative assemblies collect both their administrative and procedural rules into a set titled "standing rules." See special rule (1).

rule, vb. (13c) 1. To command or require; to exert control <the dictator ruled the country>. 2. To decide a legal point <the court ruled on the issue of admissibility>.

rule, the. An evidentiary and procedural rule by which all witnesses are excluded from the courtroom while another witness is testifying <invoking "the rule">. ● The phrase "the rule" is used chiefly in the American South and Southwest, but it is a common practice to exclude witnesses before they testify. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷665; Federal Civil Procedure ↷2012; Trial ↷41.]

rule against vitiation of a claim element. See ALL-ELEMENTS RULE.

Rule in Queen Caroline's Case. The common-law principle that a witness who is impeached with a prior inconsistent statement on cross-examination must be given the opportunity to admit, explain, repudiate, or deny it before the statement is admissible into evidence. ● In American law, Federal Rule of Evidence 613 embodies this principle, with some variations. The original rule is found in Queen Caroline's Case, (1820) 129 Eng. Rep. 976. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨388(2.1).]

Rule 10b-5. The SEC rule that prohibits deceptive or manipulative practices (such as material misrepresentations or omissions) in the buying or selling of securities. — Also termed antifraud rule. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨60.10–60.70.]

Rule 11. Civil procedure. 1. In federal practice, the procedural rule requiring the attorney of record or the party (if not represented by an attorney) to sign all pleadings, motions, and other papers filed with the court and — by this signing — to represent that the paper is filed in good faith after an inquiry that is reasonable under the circumstances. • This rule provides for the imposition of sanctions, upon a party's or the court's own motion, if an attorney or party violates the conditions stated in the rule. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement ⇨5; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2750–2831; Judgment ⇨72.] 2. In Texas practice, the procedural rule requiring agreements between attorneys or parties concerning a pending suit to be in writing, signed, and filed in the court's record or made on the record in open court. Tex. R. Civ. P. 11. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement ⇨5.]

Rule 109 statement. Patents. A statement by a patent examiner of the reasons for allowing a patent claim. • An examiner may file a Rule 109 statement at any time if it appears that the record does not adequately reflect the reasons for allowance. It should state how the claim differs from prior art and why that difference is nonobvious. PTO Reg. § 1.109; 37 CFR § 1.104(e). — Also termed Reasons for Allowance. [Cases: Patents ⇨104.]

Rule 116 amendment. See amendment after final action under PATENT-APPLICATION AMENDMENT.

Rule 312 amendment. See amendment after allowance under PATENT-APPLICATION AMENDMENT.

rule absolute. See decree absolute under DECREE.

rule against accumulations. See ACCUMULATIONS, RULE AGAINST.

rule against inalienability. The principle that property must not be made nontransferable. — Also termed rule against trusts of perpetual duration. Cf. RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES. [Cases: Property ⇨11.]

rule against perpetuities. (sometimes cap.) (18c) Property. The common-law rule prohibiting a grant of an estate unless the interest must vest, if at all, no later than 21 years (plus a period of gestation to cover a posthumous birth) after the death of some person alive when the interest was created. • The purpose of the rule was to limit the time that title to property could be suspended out of commerce because there was no owner who had title to the property and who could sell it or exercise other aspects of ownership. If the terms of the contract or gift exceeded the time limits of the rule, the gift or transaction was void. See MEASURING LIFE. Cf. ACCUMULATIONS, RULE AGAINST. [Cases: Perpetuities ⇨4.]

"The true form of the Rule against Perpetuities is believed to be this: — NO INTEREST SUBJECT TO A CONDITION PRECEDENT IS GOOD, UNLESS THE CONDITION MUST BE FULFILLED, IF AT ALL, WITHIN TWENTY-ONE YEARS AFTER SOME LIFE IN BEING AT THE CREATION OF THE INTEREST." John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 144 (1886).

"Another scholar who spent a substantial part of an academic lifetime attempting to bring order and add sense to the rule [against perpetuities], W. Barton Leach, described the rule as a 'technicality-ridden legal nightmare' and a 'dangerous instrumentality in the hands of most members of the bar.'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 178 (2d ed. 1984) (quoting Leach, Perpetuities Legislation, Massachusetts Style, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1349 (1954)).

"The Rule Against Perpetuities is a rule against remoteness of vesting. A contingent future interest is invalid under the orthodox rule if, at the time of the creation of the interest, the circumstances are such that the contingency may go unresolved for too long a time. The Rule is not concerned with the duration of interests, that is, the length of time that they endure. It is not a rule against suspension of the power of alienation, nor a rule against restraints on alienation. It is not a rule that directly limits the duration of trusts The orthodox rule is satisfied if all contingent future interests are so created that they must vest, if they vest at all, within the perpetuities period." Robert J. Lynn, The Modern Rule Against Perpetuities 9 (1966).

"The common law Rule Against Perpetuities (modified by statute in some states) provides that no interest is valid unless it must vest within 21 years after lives in being when the interest was created. The rule is something of a misnomer. It does not limit the duration of a condition in a bequest, but rather limits the testator's power to earmark gifts for remote descendants." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 18.7, at 394 (2d ed. 1977).

rule day. See return day (3) under DAY.

rule in Heydon's case. See MISCHIEF RULE.

Rule in Shelley's Case. (18c) Property. The rule that if — in a single grant — a freehold estate is given to a person and a remainder is given to the person's heirs, the remainder belongs to the named person and not the heirs, so that the person is held to have a fee simple absolute. • The rule, which dates from the 14th century but draws its name from the famous 16th-century case, has been abolished in most states. Wolfe v. Shelley, 76 Eng. Rep. 206 (K.B. 1581). [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨8.]

"[T]he rule in Shelley's Case, the Don Quixote of the law, which, like the last knight errant of chivalry, has long survived every cause that gave it birth and now wanders aimlessly through the reports, still vigorous, but equally useless and dangerous." Stamper v. Stamper, 28 S.E. 20, 22 (N.C. 1897).

Rule in Wild's Case. (1842) Property. The rule construing a grant to "A and A's children" as a fee tail if A's children do not exist at the effective date of the instrument, and as a joint tenancy if A's children do exist at the effective date. • The rule has been abolished along with the fee tail in most states.

rulemaking, n. (1926) The process used by an administrative agency to formulate, amend, or repeal a rule or regulation. — Also termed administrative rulemaking. Cf. ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATION; INFORMAL AGENCY ACTION. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↻381–427.] — rulemaking, adj.

formal rulemaking. (1960) Agency rulemaking that, when required by statute or the agency's discretion, must be on the record after an opportunity for an agency hearing, and must comply with certain procedures, such as allowing the submission of evidence and the cross-examination of witnesses. Cf. informal rulemaking. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↻381–427.]

informal rulemaking. (1968) Agency rulemaking in which the agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comments on the regulation, after which the regulation can take effect without the necessity of a formal hearing on the record. • Informal rulemaking is the most common procedure followed by an agency in issuing its substantive rules. — Also termed notice-and-comment rulemaking. See NOTICE-AND-COMMENT PERIOD. Cf. formal rulemaking. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↻381–427.]

rule of capture. 1. The doctrine that if the donee of a general power of appointment manifests an intent to assume control of the property for all purposes and not just for the purpose of appointing it to someone, the donee captures the property and the property goes to the donee's estate. • One common way for the donee to show an intent to assume control for all purposes is to include provisions in his or her will blending the appointing property with the donee's own property. 2. Property. The principle that wild animals belong to the person who captures them, regardless of whether they were originally on another person's land. [Cases: Animals ↻1.5(3).] 3. Water law. The principle that a surface landowner can extract and appropriate all the groundwater beneath the land by drilling or pumping, even if doing so drains away groundwaters to the point of drying up springs and wells from which other landowners benefit. • This doctrine has been widely abolished or limited by legislation. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻101.] 4. Oil & gas. A fundamental principle of oil-and-gas law holding that there is no liability for drainage of oil and gas from under the lands of another so long as there has been no trespass and all relevant statutes and regulations have been observed. — Also termed doctrine of capture; law of capture. Cf. AD COELUM DOCTRINE. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↻47.]

rule of construction. See canon of construction under CANON (1).

rule of court. (17c) A rule governing the practice or procedure in a given court <federal rules of court>. See LOCAL RULE. [Cases: Courts ↻85; Federal Civil Procedure ↻21.]

rule of decision. (18c) A rule, statute, body of law, or prior decision that provides the basis for deciding or adjudicating a case. [Cases: Courts ↻88.]

rule of doubt. 1. Copyright. The doctrine that unreadable or incomprehensible identifying material deposited with the U.S. Copyright Office may not be protected under copyright law because it cannot easily be examined to determine whether it qualifies. • This rule usu. applies to computer object code. • Unlike a Certificate of Registration, a filing under the rule of doubt is not prima facie evidence of a valid copyright. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻4.] 2. Patents. An abandoned judicial doctrine holding that when there is doubt whether an invention is patentable, the patent should be issued so that the inventor can test its validity in court.

rule of four. (1949) The convention that for certiorari to be granted by the U.S. Supreme Court, four justices must vote in favor of the grant. See CERTIORARI. [Cases: Federal Courts ↻452, 509.]

rule of inconvenience. (1934) The principle of statutory interpretation holding that a court should not construe a statute in a way that will jeopardize an important public interest or produce a serious hardship for anyone, unless that interpretation is unavoidable. — Often shortened to inconvenience. [Cases: Statutes ↻181(2).]

rule of justice. A jurisprudential principle that determines the sphere of individual liberty in the pursuit of individual welfare, so as to confine that liberty within limits that are consistent with the general welfare of humankind.

rule of law. (18c) 1. A substantive legal principle <under the rule of law known as respondeat superior, the employer is answerable for all wrongs committed by an employee in the course of the employment>. 2. The supremacy of regular as opposed to arbitrary power <citizens must respect the rule of law>. — Also termed supremacy of law. 3. The doctrine that every person is subject to the ordinary law within the jurisdiction <all persons within the United States are within the American rule of law>. 4. The doctrine that general constitutional principles are the result of judicial decisions determining the rights of private individuals in the courts <under the rule of law, Supreme Court caselaw makes up the bulk of what we call “constitutional law”>. 5. Loosely, a legal ruling; a ruling on a point of law <the ratio decidendi of a case is any rule of law reached by the judge as a necessary step in the decision>. [Cases: Courts ↻87.]

rule of lenity (len-ə-tee). The judicial doctrine holding that a court, in construing an ambiguous criminal statute that sets out multiple or inconsistent punishments, should resolve the ambiguity in favor of the more lenient punishment. — Also termed lenity rule. [Cases: Statutes ⇨241(1).]

rule of marshaling assets. An equitable doctrine that requires a senior creditor, having two or more funds to satisfy its debt, to first dispose of the fund not available to a junior creditor. • It prevents the inequity that would result if the senior creditor could choose to satisfy its debt out of the only fund available to the junior creditor and thereby exclude the junior creditor from any satisfaction. — Also termed marshaling doctrine; rule of marshaling securities; rule of marshaling remedies. [Cases: Debtor and Creditor ⇨13.]

rule of marshaling liens. See INVERSE-ORDER-OF-ALIENATION DOCTRINE.

rule of marshaling remedies. See RULE OF MARSHALING ASSETS.

rule of marshaling securities. See RULE OF MARSHALING ASSETS.

rule of necessity. A rule requiring a judge or other official to hear a case, despite bias or conflict of interest, when disqualification would result in the lack of any competent court or tribunal. — Often shortened to necessity. [Cases: Judges ⇨39.]

rule of operation. Patents. A method of using a machine to produce its intended useful result. • A rule of operation and moving parts generally distinguish a machine from an article of manufacture.

rule of optional completeness. (1983) The evidentiary rule providing that when a party introduces part of a writing or an utterance at trial, the opposing party may require that the remainder of the passage be read to establish the full context. • The rule has limitations: first, no utterance can be received if it is irrelevant, and second, the remainder of the utterance must explain the first part. In many jurisdictions, the rule applies to conversations, to an opponent's admissions, to confessions, and to all other types of writings — even account books. But the Federal Rules of Evidence limit the rule to writings and recorded statements. Fed. R. Evid. 106. In most jurisdictions, including federal, the remainder is admissible unless its admission would be unfair or misleading. — Also termed rule of completeness; doctrine of completeness; doctrine of optional completeness; completeness doctrine; optional-completeness rule; optional-completeness doctrine. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨396(2); Evidence ⇨155, 383(12).]

rule of rank. A doctrine of statutory construction holding that a statute dealing with things or persons of an inferior rank cannot by any general words be extended to things or persons of a superior rank. • Blackstone gives the example of a statute dealing with deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion. According to Blackstone, this statute is held not to extend to bishops, even though they have spiritual promotion, because deans are the highest persons named, and bishops are of a higher order. Cf. EJUSDEM GENERIS; EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS.

rule of reason. Antitrust. The judicial doctrine holding that a trade practice violates the Sherman Act only if the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, based on the totality of economic circumstances. See SHERMAN ANTITRUST ACT; RESTRAINT OF TRADE. Cf. PER SE RULE. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨535.]

rule of recognition. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, a legal system's fundamental rule, by which all other rules are identified and understood. • In The Concept of Law (1961), Hart contends that a society's legal system is centered on rules. There are primary rules of obligation, which prescribe how a person should act in society, and secondary rules, by which the primary rules are created, identified, changed, and understood. A "rule of recognition" is a secondary rule, and serves to instruct citizens on when a pronouncement or societal principle constitutes a rule of obligation. — Sometimes shortened to recognition. Cf. RULES OF CHANGE; basic norm under NORM.

"This rule [the rule of recognition] may amount to no more than specifying a list of primary rules carved on a public monument. Or it may actually be a complete set of rules . . ." Martin P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 44 (1975).

rule of right. (18c) The source of a right; the rule that gives rise to a right.

rule of 72. A method for determining how many years it takes to double money invested at a compound interest rate. • For example, at a compound rate of 6%, it takes 12 years (72 divided by 6) for principal to double.

rule of 78. A method for computing the amount of interest that a borrower saves by paying off a loan early, when the interest payments are higher at the beginning of the loan period. • For example, to determine how much interest is saved by prepaying a 12-month loan after 6 months, divide the sum of the digits for the remaining six payments (21) by the sum of the digits for all twelve payments (78) and multiply that percentage by the total interest. — Also termed rule of the sum of the digits.

rule of the floating subtrahend. The common-law doctrine that a plaintiff whose damage was not caused entirely by the defendant must prove the amount of damage that is not attributable to the defendant (the subtrahend) or else recover nothing. • The reasoning behind the rule is that damage is an essential element of a tort claim, and the plaintiff has the burden of proof. If proved, the subtrahend is subtracted from the total damage to determine the plaintiff's recovery.

rule of the last antecedent. (1919) An interpretative principle by which a court determines that qualifying words or phrases modify the words or phrases immediately preceding them and not words or phrases more remote, unless the extension is necessary from the context or the spirit of the entire writing. • For example, an application of this rule might mean that, in the phrase Texas courts, New Mexico courts, and New York courts in the federal system, the words in the federal system might be held to modify only New York courts and not Texas courts or New Mexico courts. — Also termed doctrine of the last antecedent; doctrine of the last preceding antecedent. [Cases: Statutes ⇨196.]

rule of the shorter term. Copyright. A provision of the Universal Copyright Convention stating that no member country is required to extend a longer term of protection than the work receives in the country where it is first published. — Also termed shorter-term rule.

rule of the sum of the digits. See RULE OF 78.

rule of universal inheritance. See UNIVERSAL-INHERITANCE RULE.

rules committee. See COMMITTEE.

rules of change. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, the fundamental rules by which a legal system's other rules are altered. • In Hart's theory, a legal system's primary rules are subject to identification and change by secondary rules. Among those rules are "rules of change," which prescribe how laws are altered or repealed. Cf. RULE OF RECOGNITION.

rules of court. See COURT RULES.

Rules of Decision Act. A federal statute (28 USCA § 1652) providing that a federal court, when exercising diversity jurisdiction, must apply the substantive law of the state in which the court sits. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨373.]

rules of evidence. See EVIDENCE (4); FEDERAL RULES OF EVIDENCE.

rules of navigation. Maritime law. The principles and regulations that govern the steering and sailing of vessels to avoid collisions. • Examples include the International Rules governing conduct on the high seas and the Inland Rules governing navigation on the inland waters of the United States and U.S. vessels on the Canadian waters of the Great Lakes. 33 USCA §§ 1602–1608, 2001–2073. [Cases: Collision ⇨3–16.]

rules of procedure. See PROCEDURE (2).

rule to show cause. 1. See SHOW-CAUSE PROCEEDING. 2. See show-cause order under ORDER (2).

ruling, n. (16c) 1. The outcome of a court's decision either on some point of law or on the case as a whole. — Also termed legal ruling. Cf. JUDGMENT (1); OPINION (1). [Cases: Courts ⇨88.]

"A distinction is sometimes made between rules and rulings. Whether or not a formal distinction is declared, in common usage 'legal ruling' (or simply 'ruling') is a term ordinarily used to signify the outcome of applying a legal test when that outcome is one of relatively narrow impact. The immediate effect is to decide an issue in a single case. This meaning contrasts, for example, with the usual meaning of 'legal rule' (or simply 'rule'). The term 'rule' ordinarily refers to a legal proposition of general application. A 'ruling' may have force as precedent, but ordinarily it has that force because the conclusion it expresses (for example, 'objection sustained') explicitly depends upon and implicitly reiterates a 'rule' — a legal proposition of more general application . . ." Robert E. Keeton, Judging 67–68 (1990).

2. Parliamentary law. The chair's decision on a point of order. — rule, vb.

ruling case. See LEADING CASE (3). ruling letter. See DETERMINATION LETTER.

RULPA. abbr. Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act. See UNIFORM LIMITED PARTNERSHIP ACT.

run, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To expire after a prescribed period <the statute of limitations had run, so the plaintiff's lawsuit was barred>. 2. To accompany a conveyance or assignment of (land) <the covenant runs with the land>. [Cases: Covenants ⇨53–84.] 3. To apply <the injunction runs against only one of the parties in the dispute>.

runaway. (16c) 1. A person who is fleeing or has escaped from custody, captivity, restraint, or control; esp., a minor who has voluntarily left home without permission and with no intent to return. Cf. THROWAWAY. [Cases: Infants ⇨151.] 2. An animal or thing that is out of control or has escaped from confinement. [Cases: Animals ⇨47.] — run away, vb.

runner. (18c) 1. A law-office employee who delivers papers between offices and files papers in court. 2. One who solicits personal-injury cases for a lawyer. — Also termed capper. 3. A smuggler. 4. BrE. Slang. An escape; flight (from something); a voluntary disappearance.

running account. See ACCOUNT.

running description. See METES AND BOUNDS.

running-down clause. Marine insurance. A provision for the hull insurer's paying a proportion of the damages sustained by the other vessel in a collision. [Cases: Insurance ⇨2367.]

running objection. See continuing objection under OBJECTION.

running policy. See floating policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

running with the land. Property law. See covenant running with the land under COVENANT (4).

runoff election. See ELECTION (3).

Rural Business-Cooperative Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for making loans and grants to public agencies and private parties to develop rural businesses. — Abbr. RBS. [Cases: United States ⇨53(7).]

Rural Electrification Administration. A former agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for making or guaranteeing loans to rural electric and telephone utilities. • Its duties were transferred to the Rural Utilities Service in 1994. — Abbr. REA. See

RURAL UTILITIES SERVICE. [Cases: United States ↪ 53(7).]

Rural Housing Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for making or guaranteeing loans for rural housing. — Abbr. RHS. [Cases: United States ↪ 53(7).]

rural servitude. See SERVITUDE (2).

Rural Utilities Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for making or guaranteeing loans to rural electric and telecommunication utilities. • The agency is the successor to the Rural Electrification Administration. — Abbr. RUS. [Cases: United States ↪ 53(7).]

RUS. abbr. RURAL UTILITIES SERVICE.

rustica et urbana (rəs-ti-kə et ər-bay-nə). [Latin] Hist. Rural and urban. • The phrase appeared in reference to servitudes. See SERVITUS.

rusticum forum (rəs-ti-kəm for-əm). Any nonjudicial body (such as an arbitral panel or workers'-compensation review board) that has authority to make a binding decision. — Also termed poor man's court.

rusticum iudicium (rəs-ti-kəm joo-dish-ee-əm). 1. The division of liability so that one party (usu. a defendant) must pay only part (usu. half) of another party's (usu. the plaintiff's) loss. • Rusticum iudicium originated in 17th century maritime law as a means of efficiently resolving collision cases in which both ships were at fault. In maritime law, damages were equally divided. — Also termed rusticum jus. Cf. comparative negligence under NEGLIGENCE. 2. Rare. Rough justice; a rustic tribunal. • This is a literal translation of the term, used colloquially rather than accurately. — Sometimes misspelled rusticum iudicum.

s. abbr. 1. STATUTE. 2. SECTION (1). 3. (usu. cap.) SENATE.

S-1. An SEC form that a company usu. must file before listing and trading its securities on a national exchange.

• Used primarily by first-time issuers of securities, this form is the basic, full-length registration statement that requires a great deal of information about the issuer and the securities being sold. The SEC has also adopted modified forms for smaller enterprises, such as Forms SB-1 and SB-2. — Also termed Form S-1.

Sabbath-breaking. The violation of laws or rules on observing the Sabbath; esp., the violation of a blue law.

Sabbath law. See BLUE LAW.

sabotage (sab-ə-tahzh), n. (1910) 1. The destruction, damage, or knowingly defective production of materials, premises, or utilities used for national defense or for war. 18 USCA §§ 2151 et seq. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↻53.] 2. The willful and malicious destruction of an employer's property or interference with an employer's normal operations, esp. during a labor dispute. — sabotage, vb.

saboteur (sab-ə-tər), n. (1921) A person who commits sabotage.

sac, n. See SOC.

sacer (sas-ər), adj. [Latin "sacred; forfeited to a god"] Roman law. (Of an outlaw or a wrongdoer) punished by being placed outside the law's protection. See CON-SECRATIO CAPITIS; OUTLAWRY.

sachbaro. See SAGIBARO.

Sache (zahk-ə). [German] A thing; an article or matter. See THING.

sacramentalis (sak-rə-men-tay-leez), n. pl. [Law Latin fr. Latin sacramentum "an oath-taker"] Hist. A compurgator; one who takes an oath swearing to a defendant's innocence. Pl. sacramentales.

sacramento (sak-rə-men-toh), n. [Latin "by oath"] Roman law. A legal action in the earliest form of civil procedure in which, at its commencement, each of the contending parties deposited or gave security for a certain sum (called the sacramentum), which the loser forfeited to the public. — Also termed legis actio sacramento. See LEGIS ACTIO.

sacramentum (sak-rə-men-təm), n. [Latin "an oath"] Roman law. 1. SACRAMENTO. 2. An oath of allegiance given by a soldier upon enlistment.

sacramentum decisionis (sak-rə-men-təm di-sizh-ee-oh-nis). [Latin "the oath of decision"] Civil law. The offer by one party to accept the opposing party's oath as decisive of the issues involved in a lawsuit. Pl. sacramenta decisionis.

"The defendant or person accused was . . . to make oath of his own innocence, and to produce a certain number of compurgators, who swore they believed his oath. Somewhat similar also to this is the sacramentum decisionis, or the voluntary and decisive oath of the civil law; where one of the parties to the suit, not being able to prove his charge, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary: which the adversary was bound to accept, or tender the same proposal back again; otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 342 (1768).

sacramentum fidelitatis (sak-rə-men-təm fi-del-ə-tay-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. The oath of fidelity, given by a vassal to a lord.

sacrilege (sak-rə-lij). 1. The act or an instance of desecrating or profaning a sacred thing. 2. Hist. Larceny of sacred objects, as from a church.

sacrilegium (sak-rə-lee-jee-əm), n. [Latin fr. sacer "sacred" + legere "to steal"] Roman law. 1. The theft of a sacred thing, usu. a capital offense. See CAPITALIS. 2. Violation of an imperial law.

"In the later Empire the conception of sacrilegium was somewhat distorted and those 'who through ignorance or negligence confound, violate and offend the sanctity of a divine law' . . . were considered guilty of sacrilegium. 'Divine' is here used in the sense of imperial, issued by the emperor . . . Thus sacrilegium and sacrilegus became rather general terms applied to the neglect or violation of imperial orders or enactments." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

sacrilegus (sə-kril-ə-gəs), adj. & n. [Latin "sacrilegious"] Roman law. (A person) guilty of sacrilegium. See SACRILEGIUM.

sacristan (sak-ri-stən). [Latin] Hist. A caretaker of a church; a sexton of a church.

sacristy (sak-ri-stee). See VESTRY (1).

sadaq. See MAHR.

saemend (see-mənd). [Old English] Hist. An arbitrator; an umpire.

SAET. abbr. SUBSTANCE-ABUSE EVALUATION AND TREATMENT.

saevitia (si-vish-ee-ə). [Latin fr. saevus "cruel"] Hist. Cruelty in a marriage, as a result of which cohabitation is dangerous enough to justify a decree of separation.

safe, adj. 1. Not exposed to danger; not causing danger <driving at a safe limit of speed>. 2. Unlikely to be overturned or proved wrong.

safe-berth clause. Maritime law. A provision in a voyage or time charterparty obligating the charterer to choose a berth for loading and unloading the chartered ship where the ship will be safe from damage. • The ship's master can refuse to enter the berth without breaching the charter. But if the master reasonably enters the berth and the ship is damaged, the charterer is liable. Cf. SAFE-PORT CLAUSE. [Cases: Shipping ↻54.]

safe blower. One who uses explosives to open a safe, esp. for the purpose of stealing the contents. Cf. SAFE CRACKER.

safe breaker. See SAFE CRACKER.

safe conduct. Int'l law. 1. A privilege granted by a belligerent allowing an enemy, a neutral, or some other person to travel within or through a designated area for a specified purpose. 2. A document conveying this privilege. — Sometimes written safe-conduct. — Also termed safeguard; passport.

"Passports and safeguards, or safe conducts, are letters of protection, with or without an escort, by which the person of an enemy is rendered inviolable. These may be given in order to carry on the peculiar commerce of war, or for reasons which have no relation to it, which terminate in the person himself." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 155, at 265 (5th ed. 1878).

"Safe-conduct . . . The grantee is inviolable so long as he complies with the conditions imposed on him or necessitated by the circumstances of the case. Unless stated, a safe-conduct does not cover goods or luggage. They may be given also for ships and for goods. To be effective under international law the grant must have been arranged between belligerents." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1098 (1980).

safe cracker. One who breaks into a safe, esp. for the purpose of stealing the contents. — Also termed safe breaker. Cf. SAFE BLOWER.

safe-deposit box. (1874) A lockbox stored in a bank's vault to secure a customer's valuables. • It usu. takes two keys (one held by the bank and one held by the customer) to open the box. — Often shortened to deposit box. — Also termed safety-deposit box. [Cases: Warehousemen ↻38.]

safe harbor. (1960) 1. An area or means of protection. 2. A provision (as in a statute or regulation) that affords protection from liability or penalty. • SEC regulations, for example, provide a safe harbor for an issuer's business forecasts that are made in good faith. — Also termed safe-harbor clause; safe-harbor provision. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻60.27(5).]

safe-haven law. Family law. A statute that protects a parent who abandons a baby at a designated place such as a hospital, a physician's office, or a fire station, where it can receive emergency medical assistance as needed. • The law typically stipulates that a parent who leaves a baby at such a place will not be publicly identified or prosecuted. Such laws have been enacted in many states in response to a perceived increase in incidents of child abandonment. — Also termed Baby Moses law.

safe house. A residence where people live under protection, usu. in anonymity. • Safe houses are operated for a range of purposes, both legal and illegal. Shelters for abused spouses and runaway children are safe houses. Law-enforcement agencies keep safe houses for undercover operations and to protect witnesses who have been threatened. Lawbreakers use them to shield criminal activity such as drug manufacturing.

safekeeping. 1. The act of protecting something in one's custody. 2. Under the Securities Investors Protection Act, the holding of a security on behalf of the investor or broker that has paid for it. 15 USCA § 7811(2). [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻185.13–185.16.]

safe-port clause. Maritime law. A provision in a voyage or time charterparty obligating the charterer to choose a port where the ship will be safe from damage. • The ship's master can refuse to enter the port without breaching the charter. But if the master reasonably enters the port and the ship is damaged, the charterer is liable. Cf. SAFE-BERTH CLAUSE. [Cases: Shipping ↻39, 55.]

safe-storage statute. A law that prohibits persons from leaving firearms unattended in places where children may gain access to them. — Also termed child-access prevention statute. [Cases: Weapons ↻4.]

Safety Appliance Act. A federal law regulating the safety of equipment used by railroads in interstate commerce. 49 USCA §§ 20301 et seq. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻2862–2864; Railroads ↻229.]

safety engineering. The inspection and study of potentially dangerous conditions, usu. in an industrial environment, so that precautionary measures can be taken.

safety officer. See OFFICER (1).

safe workplace. A place of employment in which all dangers that should reasonably be removed have been removed; a place of employment that is reasonably safe given the nature of the work performed. See OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH ADMINISTRATION. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻2832; Negligence ↻1204(4).]

sagibaro (sag-ə-bar-oh), n. [Old English] Hist. A determiner of disputes; a judge. — Also termed sachbaro (sak-bar-oh).

said, adj. (13c) Aforesaid; above-mentioned. • The adjective said is obsolescent in legal drafting, its last bastion being patent claims. But even in that context the word is giving way to the ordinary word the, which if properly used is equally precise. See AFORESAID.

"The word 'said' is used by many practitioners rather than 'the' to refer back to previously recited elements, sometimes to a previously cited anything. This practice is unobjectionable, although perhaps overly legalistic. If 'said' or 'thes' are used, one should be consistent in the usage and not alternate between those words in repetitions of the same element or among different elements." Robert C. Faber, Landis on Mechanics of Patent Claim Drafting § 23, at 50 (3d ed. 1990).

sailor's will. See soldier's will under WILL.

Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation. A wholly-owned corporation in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for developing, operating, sake and soke (sayk / sohk). Hist. A lord's right to hold court and compel attendance. — Also spelled sak and soc (sak / sok). See soc.

salable (say-lə-bəl or sayl-ə-bəl), adj. (16c) Fit for sale in the usual course of trade at the usual selling price; MERCHANTABLE. [Cases: Sales ↻272.] — salability (say-lə-bil-ə-tee or sayl-ə-bil-ə-tee), n.

salable value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

salarium (sə-lair-ee-əm), n. [Latin "salt money"] 1. Roman law. An allowance, esp. for living expenses, given to persons in noble professions (such as teachers or doctors) who were not allowed to sue for fees. 2. Roman law. Wages for persons engaged in military service on an emergency basis. • The regular soldier's pay is a stipendium. 3. Hist. The rent or profits of a hall or house.

salary. (13c) An agreed compensation for services — esp. professional or semiprofessional services — usu. paid at regular intervals on a yearly basis, as distinguished from an hourly basis. • Salaried positions are usu. exempt from the requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act (on overtime and the like) but are subject to state regulation. Cf. WAGE. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻168, 2264.]

accrued salary. A salary that has been earned but not yet paid.

sale, n. (bef. 12c) 1. The transfer of property or title for a price. See UCC § 2-106(1). [Cases: Sales ↻1; Vendor and Purchaser ↻1.] 2. The agreement by which such a transfer takes place. • The four elements are (1) parties competent to contract, (2) mutual assent, (3) a thing capable of being transferred, and (4) a price in money paid or promised.

absolute sale. A sale in which possession and title to the property pass to the buyer immediately upon the completion of the bargain. Cf. conditional sale. [Cases: Sales ↻454; Vendor and Purchaser ↻79.]

approval sale. See sale on approval.

auction sale. See AUCTION.

average gross sales. The amount of total sales divided by the number of sales transactions in a specific period.

bona fide sale. A sale made by a seller in good faith, for valuable consideration, and without notice of a defect in title or any other reason not to hold the sale. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ↻220.]

bootstrap sale. 1. A sale in which the purchase price is financed by earnings and profits of the thing sold; esp., a leveraged buyout. See BUYOUT. 2. A seller's tax-saving conversion of a business's ordinary income into a capital gain from the sale of corporate stock.

bulk sale. See BULK SALE.

cash-against-documents sale. See documentary sale.

cash sale. 1. A sale in which cash payment is concurrent with the receipt of the property sold. [Cases: Sales ↻82(1).] 2. A securities transaction on the stock-exchange floor requiring cash payment and same-day delivery.

compulsory sale. The forced sale of real property in accordance with either an eminent-domain order or an order for a judicial sale arising from nonpayment of taxes. [Cases: Taxation ↻2963.]

conditional sale. 1. A sale in which the buyer gains immediate possession but the seller retains title until the buyer performs a condition, esp. payment of the full purchase price. See retail installment contract under CONTRACT. [Cases: Sales ↻450.] 2. A sale accompanied by an agreement to resell upon specified terms. Cf. absolute sale.

consignment sale. A sale of an owner's property (such as clothing or furniture) by a third party entrusted to make the sale. UCC § 9-102(a)(20). See CONSIGNMENT. [Cases: Factors ↻5, 20; Sales ↻8.]

consumer-credit sale. A sale in which the seller extends credit to the consumer. • A consumer-credit sale includes a lease in which the lessee's rental payments equal or exceed the retail value of the item rented. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↻3.]

credit sale. A sale of goods to a buyer who is allowed to pay for the goods at a later time. [Cases: Sales ↻82(1).]

distress sale. 1. A form of liquidation in which the seller receives less for the goods than what would be received under normal sales conditions; esp., a going-out-of-business sale. 2. A foreclosure or tax sale. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4860; Taxation ↻2846, 2963.]

dock sale. A sale in which a purchaser takes possession of the product at the seller's shipping dock, esp. for transportation outside the state.

documentary sale. A sale in which the buyer pays upon the seller's tender of documents of title covering the goods, plus a sight draft requiring the buyer to pay "at sight." • This type of sale typically occurs before delivery of the goods, which might be en route when the buyer pays. — Also termed cash-against-documents sale.

exclusive sale. A sale made by a broker under an exclusive-agency listing. See exclusive-agency listing under LISTING. [Cases: Brokers ↻40.]

execution sale. A forced sale of a debtor's property by a government official carrying out a writ of execution. — Also termed forced sale; judgment sale; sheriff's sale. See EXECUTION. [Cases: Execution ↻213.]

executory sale. A sale agreed upon in principle but with a few minor details remaining.

fair sale. A foreclosure sale or other judicial sale conducted with fairness toward the rights and interests

fire sale. 1. A sale of merchandise at reduced prices because of fire or water damage. 2. Any sale at greatly reduced prices, esp. due to an emergency. ● Fire sales are often regulated to protect the public from deceptive sales practices.

forced sale. 1. See execution sale. 2. A hurried sale by a debtor because of financial hardship or a creditor's action. Cf. voluntary sale.

foreclosure sale. The sale of mortgaged property, authorized by a court decree or a power-of-sale clause, to satisfy the debt. See FORECLOSURE. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 360, 514.]

fraudulent sale. A sale made to defraud the seller's creditors by converting into cash property that should be used to satisfy the creditors' claims. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ⇨ 1.]

gross sales. Total sales (esp. in retail) before deductions for returns and allowances. — Also termed sales in gross.

installment sale. See INSTALLMENT SALE.

isolated sale. An infrequent or one-time sale that does not carry an implied warranty of merchantability because the seller is not a merchant with respect to goods of that kind. UCC § 2-314(1). [Cases: Sales ⇨ 272.]

judgment sale. See execution sale.

judicial sale. A sale conducted under the authority of a judgment or court order, such as an execution sale. — Also termed sheriff's sale. [Cases: Cases; Execution ⇨ 213; Judicial Sales ⇨ 1.]

lumping sale. A court-ordered sale in which several distinct pieces of property are sold together for a single sum.

memorandum sale. A conditional sale in which the buyer takes possession but does not accept title until approving the property. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 459.]

net sale. The amount of money remaining from a sale, after deducting returns, allowances, rebates, discounts, and other expenses.

present sale. Under the UCC, a sale accomplished by the making of a contract. UCC § 2-106(1). [Cases: Sales ⇨ 1(1).]

private sale. An unadvertised sale negotiated and concluded directly between the buyer and seller, not through an agent.

public sale. 1. A sale made after public notice, such as an auction or sheriff's sale; specif., a sale to which the public has been invited by advertisement to appear and bid at auction for the items to be sold. 2. Patents. sale by sample. A sale in which the parties understand that the goods exhibited constitute the standard with which the goods not exhibited correspond and to which all deliveries should conform. ● Any sample that is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods will conform to the sample or model. UCC § 9-102(a)(20). — Also termed sample sale. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 73.]

sale in gross. 1. A sale of a tract of land made with no guarantee about the exact amount or size of the land being sold. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 65(2).] 2. (pl.) See gross sales.

sale on approval. A sale in which completion hinges on the buyer's satisfaction, regardless of whether the goods conform to the contract. ● Title and risk of loss remain with the seller until the buyer approves. UCC § 2-326(1)(a). — Also termed approval sale. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 168.5(5).]

sale on credit. A sale accompanied by delivery of possession, but with payment deferred to a later date. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 82(1).]

sale or return. A sale in which the buyer may return the goods to the seller, regardless of whether they conform to the contract, if the goods were delivered primarily for resale. ● This transaction is a type of consignment in which the seller (usu. a distributor) sells goods to the buyer (often a retailer), who then tries to resell the goods, but a buyer who cannot resell is allowed to return them to the seller. Title and risk of loss are with the buyer until the goods are returned. UCC § 2-326(1)(b). — Also termed sale and return. Cf. SALES GUARANTEED. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 168.5(5).]

sale per aversionem (pər ə-vər-zhee-oh-nəm). Civil law. A conveyance of all immovable property that falls within the boundaries stated in a purchase agreement, as opposed to a specified amount of acreage. ● The sales price will not be modified because of a surplus or shortage in the amount of property that is exchanged, because the boundary description is the binding definition of the property conveyed. I.a. Civ. Code art. 2495. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 65(2).]

sales in gross. See gross sales.

sale short. See short sale.

sale with all faults. See sale as is.

sale with right of redemption. A sale in which the seller reserves the right to retake the goods by refunding the purchase price.

sample sale. See sale by sample.

sheriff's sale. 1. See execution sale. 2. See judicial sale.

short sale. Securities. A sale of a security that the seller does not own or has not contracted for at the time of sale, and that the seller must borrow to make delivery. ● Such a sale is usu. made when the seller expects the security's price to drop. If the price does drop, the seller can make a profit on the difference between the price of the shares sold and the lower price of the shares bought to pay back the borrowed shares. — Also termed sale short. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨45.17.]

short sale against the box. Securities. A short sale of a security by a seller who owns enough shares of the security to cover the sale but borrows shares anyway because the seller wants to keep ownership a secret or because the owned shares are not easily accessible. ● Delivery may be made with either the owned or the borrowed shares, so it is less risky than an ordinary short sale. The phrase against the box refers to the owned shares that are in safekeeping; formerly, the "box" was a container used to store stock certificates. — Often shortened to sale against the box.

similar sales. Eminent domain. Sales of like property in the same locality and time frame, admissible in a condemnation action to determine the market value of the particular property at issue. [Cases: Evidence ⇨142.]

simulated sale. A sale in which no price or other consideration is paid or intended to be paid, and in which there is no intent to actually transfer ownership. ● Simulated sales are usu. done in an attempt to put property beyond the reach of creditors. — Also termed simulated transaction. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ⇨1.]

tax sale. A sale of property because of nonpayment of taxes. See tax deed under DEED. [Cases: Taxation ⇨2900.]

voluntary sale. A sale made freely with the seller's consent. Cf. forced sale.

wash sale. Securities. A sale of securities made at about the same time as a purchase of the same securities (such as within 30 days), resulting in no change in beneficial ownership. ● A loss from a wash sale is usu. not tax-deductible. And securities laws prohibit a wash sale made to create the false appearance of market activity. — Also termed wash transaction. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3216; Securities Regulation ⇨60.25.]

sale and exchange. See SALE OR EXCHANGE.

sale and leaseback. See LEASEBACK.

sale and return. See sale or return under SALE.

sale-of-business doctrine. The outmoded rule holding that the transfer of stock incident to the sale of a business does not constitute a transfer of securities. ● This doctrine was rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court in Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681, 105 S.Ct. 2297 (1985), and its companion case, Gould v. Rufenacht, 471 U.S. 701, 105 S.Ct. 2308 (1985). [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨5.25(2).]

sale of land. A transfer of title to real estate from one person to another by a contract of sale. ● A transfer of real estate is often referred to as a conveyance rather than a sale. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨1, 3.]

sale on credit. See SALE.

sale or exchange. (1905) 1. Tax. A voluntary transfer of property for value (as distinguished from a gift) resulting in a gain or loss recognized for federal tax purposes. 2. A transfer of property; esp., a situation in which proceeds of a sale are to be vested in another estate of the same character and use. — Also termed (in both senses) sale and exchange. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3232; Taxation ⇨3469.]

sale or return. See SALE.

sale per aversionem. See SALE.

sale positive. See SALE.

sales agreement. (1920) A contract in which ownership of property is presently transferred, or will be transferred in the future, from a seller to a buyer for a fixed sum. UCC § 2-106(1). [Cases: Sales ⇨1(1), 3.1.]

sales-assessment-ratio study. A method for calculating the assessment level for taxable property in a jurisdiction, by comparing the assessed value and the actual sales price of a statistically reliable sample of the property in the jurisdiction, to determine the percentage by which the assessed values are above or below the sales prices. [Cases: Taxation ⇨2515.]

sales guaranteed. Hist. As used in a sale-of-goods contract, the seller's promise to accept the purchaser's return of unsold or unsalable goods and to grant the purchaser a proportional credit or refund. ● Under the UCC, the modern equivalent is sale or return. Cf. sale or return under SALE.

sale short. See short sale under SALE.

sales in gross. See gross sales under SALE.

sales invoice. See INVOICE.

sales journal. A book used to record sales of merchandise on account.

sales load. See LOAD.

sales mix. The relative combination of individual-product sales to total sales.

sales puffery. See PUFFING (1).

sales tax. See TAX.

sale with all faults. See sale as is under SALE.

sale with right of redemption. See SALE.

Salic law (sal-ik or say-lik). An influential early medieval Frankish code of law that originated with the Salian Franks and that deals with a variety of civil property and family issues but is primarily a penal code listing the punishments for various crimes. • Salic law is the principal compilation of the early Germanic laws known collectively as leges barbarorum ("laws of the barbarians"). Salic law also designated a rule barring females from the line of succession to the throne, as a result of which references to Salic law have sometimes referred only to the code provision excluding women from inheriting certain lands (which probably existed only because military duties were connected with the inheritance). In the late 19th century, Oliver Wendell Holmes revived scholarly interest in Salic law by referring to it throughout The Common Law (1881). — Also termed Salique law; law Salique (sə-leek or sal-ik); lex Salica (leks sal-ə-kə).

salic marriage. See morganatic marriage under MARRIAGE (1).

salting, n. Labor law. A union tactic that involves a paid union employee going to work for a targeted nonunion employer with the intention of organizing the workforce. • The union agent (known as a salt) is considered an employee of the nonunion company and is protected by the National Labor Relations Act.

salus (sal-əs), n. [Latin] Health; prosperity; safety.

salvage (sal-vij), n. 1. The rescue of imperiled property. 2. The property saved or remaining after a fire or other loss, sometimes retained by an insurance company that has compensated the owner for the loss. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2194, 2717.] 3. Compensation allowed to a person who, having no duty to do so, helps save a ship or its cargo. — Also termed (in sense 3) salvage award; reward. [Cases: Salvage ⇨ 1.] — salvage, vb.

"Salvage is a reward payable either by the shipowner or by the owners of goods carried in the ship to persons who save the ship or cargo from shipwreck, capture or other loss. The right to salvage is an ancient rule of maritime law and is not based on contractual rights. The actual amount payable is, as a rule, assessed by the Court. Sometimes an express agreement, fixing an amount, is made before the assistance is rendered, but this is not a question of salvage in the strict sense, which always implies service by persons who are under no obligation to render it." 2 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 98 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

"With reference to aid rendered to distressed property on navigable waters the word 'salvage' is often used indifferently to describe the salvage operation and the salvage operation and the salvage award — the latter being the compensation granted for the services rendered." Martin J. Norris, The Law of Salvage § 2, at 2 (1958).

"A salvage award, or reward, is the compensation allowed to the volunteer whose services on navigable waters have aided distressed property in whole or in part. The award is not regarded merely as pay on the principle of quantum meruit or as remuneration pro opera et labore, but as a reward to persons participating and the owners of salving property, voluntarily rendering their services and to encourage others to similarly undertake the saving of life and property. That part of the award constituting more than quantum meruit has, on occasions, been referred to as a 'bounty,' 'gratuity,' and 'bonus.'" Martin J. Norris, The Law of Salvage § 3, at 3–4 (1958).

salvage award. See SALVAGE (3).

salvage charges. Insurance. Costs necessarily incurred in salvage.

salvage loss. See LOSS.

salvager. See SALVOR.

salvage service. The aid or rescue given, either voluntarily or by contract, to a vessel in need of assistance because of present or apprehended danger. • Although salvage may involve towing, it is distinguished from towing service, which is rendered merely to expedite a voyage, not to respond to dangerous circumstances. [Cases: Salvage ⇨ 6.]

salvam fecit totius pignoris causam (sal-vəm fee-sit toh-shee-əs pig-nə-ris kaw-zəm). [Law Latin] Scots law. He furnished the means of saving the whole pledge. • A bottomry creditor posting the last bond obtained preference over the remaining bottomry creditors because the later loan preserved the property for the earlier creditors. See bottomry bond under BOND (2).

salva substantia (sal-və səb-stan-shee-ə). [Latin] Roman & civil law. The substance (of the property) being preserved; the substance remaining intact. — Also termed salva rei substantia.

"A right of liferent, therefore, cannot be constituted in a subject which necessarily perishes in the use; it must be a subject which can be used salva substantia." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 563 (4th ed. 1894).

salvo (sal-voh). [Latin fr. salvus "safe"] Hist. 1. Saving; excepting. • This term was used in deeds. 2. Safely.

salvo beneficio competentiae (sal-voh ben-ə-fish-ee-oh kom-pə-ten-shee-ee). [Latin] Hist. Saving the benefit of being held liable only to the extent that one's means permit. See BENEFICIUM COMPETENTIAE.

salvo conductu. See DE SALVO CONDUCTU.

salvo jure (sal-voh joor-ee). [Latin "the rule being safe"] Without prejudice to.

salvor (sal-vər), n. [Law Latin] A person who saves a vessel and its cargo from danger or loss; a person entitled to salvage. — Also termed salvager. [Cases: Salvage ⇨ 18, 19.]

"A 'salvor' is a person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of the ship. To be a salvor, one must have the intention and capacity to save the distressed property involved, but need not have an intent to acquire it." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Salvage § 2, at 270 (1993).

salvus plegius (sal-vəs plee-jee-əs). [Law Latin] Hist. A safe pledge; a satisfactory pledge. See PLEDGE. — Also termed certus plegius.

SAM. See shared-appreciation mortgage under MORTGAGE.

same, pron. (14c) The very thing just mentioned or described; it or them <two days after receiving the goods, Mr. Siviglio returned same>.

same-actor inference. Employment law. The doctrine that when an employee is hired and fired by the same person, and the termination occurs a reasonably short time after the hiring, the termination will be presumed not to be based on a discriminatory reason. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1534.]

same-conduct test. Criminal law. A test for determining whether a later charge arising out of a single incident is barred by the Double Jeopardy Clause; specif., an analysis of whether the later charge requires the state to prove the same conduct that it was required to prove in a previous trial against the same defendant. • The Supreme Court abandoned the Blockburger test and adopted the same-conduct test in 1990 (Grady v. Corbin, 495 U.S. 508, 110 S.Ct. 2084), but overruled that decision and revived Blockburger three years later (U.S. v. Dixon, 509 U.S. 688, 113 S.Ct. 2849 (1993)). Cf. BLOCKBURGER TEST; SAME-TRANSACTION TEST. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ⇨ 132.1.]

same-evidence test. See BLOCKBURGER TEST.

same invention. Patents. 1. A second invention claiming the identical subject matter as a previous invention. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 120.] 2. Within a reissue statute, the invention described in the original patent. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 141.]

same-invention double patenting. See statutory double patenting under DOUBLE PATENTING.

same-invention double patenting rejection. See statutory double patenting rejection under REJECTION.

same offense. See OFFENSE (1).

same-sex harassment. See same-sex sexual harassment under SEXUAL HARASSMENT.

same-sex marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

same-sex sexual harassment. See SEXUAL HARASSMENT.

same-transaction test. Criminal law. A double-jeopardy test, never adopted, that would require the government to bring all charges arising out of a single incident against a defendant in one prosecution. • Justice Brennan advocated the same-transaction test in a case involving a conviction for felony-murder and a later prosecution for the underlying felony. Harris v. Okla., 433 U.S. 682, 97 S.Ct. 2912 (1977). Cf. BLOCKBURGER TEST; SAME-CONDUCT TEST. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ⇨ 134.]

sampling, n. Copyright. The process of taking a small portion of a sound recording and digitally manipulating it as part of a new recording. • Sampling may infringe the copyright of the sample's source, esp. the musical-works and sound-recording copyrights. — Also termed digital sampling. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 67.2.]

S&T. abbr. SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY DIRECTORATE.

sanae mentis (san-ee men-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. Of sound mind; of sane mind.

sancire (san-si-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To enact; confirm; prescribe.

sanctio (sangk-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. sancio "to ordain, confirm, or forbid under penalty"] Roman law. A particular clause in a statute imposing a penalty on any violation of that statute. Pl. sanctiones (sangk-shee-oh-nee-z).

"Sanctio (legis). A clause in a statute which strengthens its efficacy by fixing a penalty for its violation, by forbidding its derogation through a later enactment, or by releasing from responsibility any one who by acting in accordance with the statute violated another law. The purpose of the sanction clause was to settle the relation between the new statute and former and future legislation. Thus the sanctio could also state that a previous statute remained fully or partially in force without being changed by the new one." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

sanction (sangk-shən), n. (15c) 1. Official approval or authorization <the committee gave sanction to the proposal>. Cf. RATIFICATION (1). 2. A penalty or coercive measure that results from failure to comply with a law, rule, or order . Cf. DISCIPLINE. [Cases: Costs ⇨ 2; Criminal Law ⇨ 627.8(6); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1278, 2750; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 44.]

"Without adequate sanctions the procedure for discovery would often be ineffectual. Under Rule 37 [of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure], . . . any party or person who seeks to evade or thwart full and candid discovery incurs the risk of serious consequences, which may involve imprisonment for contempt of court, an order that designated facts be taken to be established, an order refusing the delinquent party the right to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, striking out pleadings or parts of pleadings, rendering judgment by default, dismissal of the action or a claim therein, or assessment of expenses and attorney's fees. Sanctions are intended to prompt a party to respond." 8A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2281, at 595-95 (2d ed. 1994).

criminal sanction. (1872) A sanction attached to a criminal conviction, such as a fine or restitution. — Also termed penal sanction.

"A criminal sanction . . . is a legally authorized post-conviction deprivation suffered by a human being through governmental action. By using the words 'post-conviction' in that definition, criminal sanctions are thus limited to those imposed upon defendants in criminal proceedings who, by reason or in consequence of a judgment entered upon a verdict of guilty found by a jury, or judge sitting without a jury (the latter having been legally waived), or upon a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, stand convicted." A Treatise on the Law of Crimes § 2.00, at 66 (Marian Quinn Barnes ed., 7th ed. 1967).

death-penalty sanction. (1991) Civil procedure. A court's order dismissing the suit or entering a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff because of extreme discovery abuses by a party or because of a party's action or inaction that shows an unwillingness to participate in the case. • Such a sanction is rarely ordered, and is usu. preceded by orders of lesser sanctions that have not been complied with or that have not remedied the problem. — Often shortened to death penalty. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1278; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 46.]

shame sanction. (1991) A criminal sanction designed to stigmatize or disgrace a convicted offender, and often to alert the public about the offender's conviction. • A shame sanction usu. publicly associates the offender with the crime that he or she committed. An example is being required to post a sign in one's yard stating, "Convicted Child Molester Lives Here." — Also termed shame sentence; shaming sanction; shaming sentence; scarlet-letter punishment; scarlet-letter sentence.

3. Int'l law. An economic or military coercive measure taken by one or more countries toward another to force it to comply with international law <U.N. sanctions against a renegade nation>.

sanction, vb. (18c) 1. To approve, authorize, or support <the court will sanction the trust disposition if it is not against public policy>. 2. To penalize by imposing a sanction <the court sanctioned the attorney for violating the gag order>.

sanctionable, adj. (18c) (Of conduct or action) meriting sanctions; likely to be sanctioned. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1278, 2750–2848.]

sanctions tort. A means of recovery for another party's discovery abuse, whereby the judge orders the abusive party to pay a fine to the injured party for the discovery violation. • This is not a tort in the traditional sense, but rather a form of punishment that results in monetary gain for the injured party.

sanctity of contract. (1831) The principle that the parties to a contract, having duly entered into it, must honor their obligations under it. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 1.]

"[Sanctity of contract] is merely another facet of freedom of contract, but the two concepts cover, to some extent, different grounds. The sanctity of contractual obligations is merely an expression of the principle that once a contract is freely and voluntarily entered into, it should be held sacred, and should be enforced by the Courts if it is broken. No doubt this very sanctity was an outcome of freedom of contract, for the reason why contracts were held sacred was the fact that the parties entered into them of their own choice and volition, and settled the terms by mutual agreement." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 12 (3d ed. 1981).

sanctuary. (14c) 1. A safe place, esp. where legal process cannot be executed; asylum.

"Every consecrated church was a sanctuary. If a malefactor took refuge therein, he could not be extracted; but it was the duty of the four neighbouring vills to beset the holy place, prevent his escape and send for a coroner. . . . [A]fter he had enjoyed the right of asylum for forty days, he was to be starved into submission; but the clergy resented this interference with the peace of Holy Church." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 590–91 (2d ed. 1899).

"In medieval England, as elsewhere in Europe, there were a number of ecclesiastical places where the king's writ did not run. The underlying theory was that consecrated places should not be profaned by the use of force, but the result in practice was that thieves and murderers could take refuge and thereby gain immunity even against the operation of criminal justice. This was the privilege called 'sanctuary.' In the case of parochial churches, the sanctuary lasted for forty days only. Before the expiration of this period, the fugitive had to choose whether to stand trial or 'abjure' the realm . . . This was only permitted if he made a written confession to the coroner, which resulted in the forfeiture of his property as on conviction; his life only was spared . . ." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 585 (3d ed. 1990).

2. A holy area of a religious building; esp., the area in a church or temple where the main altar or tabernacle is located.

sandbagging, n. 1. A trial lawyer's remaining cagily silent when a possible error occurs at trial, with the hope of preserving an issue for appeal if the court does not correct the problem. • Such a tactic does not usu. preserve the issue for appeal because objections must be promptly made to alert the trial judge of the possible error. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 1030(1); Federal Courts ⇨ 611.] 2. Corporations. An antitakeover tactic wherein the target company delays a hostile bidder's final offer by agreeing to negotiate then prolonging bad-faith negotiations as long as possible. — sandbag, vb.

S & L. abbr. SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

sandpapering, n. A lawyer's general preparation of a witness before a deposition or trial. Cf. HORSESHEDDING.

sasine. See SEISIN.

satellite litigation. (1983) 1. One or more lawsuits related to a major piece of litigation that is being conducted in another court <the satellite litigation in state court prevented the federal judge from ruling on the issue>. 2. Peripheral skirmishes involved in the prosecution of a lawsuit <the plaintiffs called the sanctions "satellite litigation," drummed up by the defendants to deflect attention from the main issues in the case>.

satellite state. See client state under STATE.

satisdare (sat-is-dair-ee), vb. [Latin fr. satis "sufficient" + dare "to give"] Roman law. To give security in the form of satisdatio. See SATISDATIO.

satisdatio (sat-is-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. satisdare] Roman law. Security given by a person, such as a debtor, through a surety. Pl. satisdationes (sat-is-day-shee-oh-nee-z).

satisfaction, n. (14c) 1. The giving of something with the intention, express or implied, that it is to extinguish some existing legal or moral obligation. • Satisfaction differs from performance because it is always something given as a substitute for or equivalent of something else, while performance is the identical thing promised to be done. — Also termed satisfaction of debt. [Cases: Accord and Satisfaction ↻1.] 2. The fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the payment in full of a debt.

"Satisfaction closely resembles performance. Both depend upon presumed intention to carry out an obligation, but in satisfaction the thing done is something different from the thing agreed to be done, whereas in performance the identical act which the party contracted to do is considered to have been done. The cases on satisfaction are usually grouped under four heads, namely, (i) satisfaction of debts by legacies; (ii) satisfaction of legacies by legacies; (iii) satisfaction (or ademption) of legacies by portions; and (iv) satisfaction of portion-debts by legacies, or by portions. Strictly, however, only the first and last of these heads are really cases of satisfaction, for satisfaction presupposes an obligation, which, of course, does not exist in the case of a legacy in the will of a living person." R.E. Megarry, Snell's Principles of Equity 226-27 (23d ed. 1947).

satisfaction contract. See CONTRACT.

satisfaction of judgment. (17c) 1. The complete discharge of obligations under a judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻2398; Judgment ↻874-899.] 2. The document filed and entered on the record indicating that a judgment has been paid. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻2398; Judgment ↻897.]

"Generally, a satisfaction of a judgment is the final act and end of a proceeding. Satisfaction implies or manifests an expression of finality as to all questions of liability and damages involved in the litigation. Once satisfaction occurs, further alteration or amendment of a final judgment generally is barred. Satisfaction of a judgment, when entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent, and operates as an extinguishment of the judgment debt." 47 Am. Jur. 2d Judgments § 1006, at 443 (1995).

satisfaction of lien. (1833) 1. The fulfillment of all obligations made the subject of a lien. 2. The document signed by the lienholder releasing the property subject to a lien.

satisfaction of mortgage. (18c) 1. The complete payment of a mortgage. 2. A discharge signed by the mortgagee or mortgage holder indicating that the property subject to the mortgage is released or that the mortgage debt has been paid and the mortgage conditions have been fully satisfied. [Cases: Mortgages ↻309-315.]

satisfaction piece. (1831) A written statement that one party (esp. a debtor) has discharged its obligation to another party, who accepts the discharge. — Also termed certificate of discharge; satisfaction. [Cases: Mortgages ↻309.]

satisfactory evidence. See EVIDENCE.

satisfactory proof. See satisfactory evidence under EVIDENCE.

satisfied term. See TERM (4).

Saturday-night special. (1959) 1. A handgun that is easily obtained and concealed. [Cases: Weapons ↻4, 8.] 2. Corporations. A surprise tender offer typically held open for a limited offering period (such as one week) to maximize pressure on a shareholder to accept. • These tender offers are now effectively prohibited by section 14(e) of the Williams Act. 15 USCA § 78n(e).

saunkefin (sawn-kə-fan). [fr. Law French sang quifin] Hist. End of blood; the failure of a line of succession.

SAUSA. abbr. Special assistant to the united states attorney. See UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

sauvagine (soh-və-zheen). [Law French] Hist. 1. Wild animal. 2. Wild nature of an animal.

save, vb. 1. To preserve from danger or loss <save a ship in distress>. 2. To lay up; to hoard <save money>. 3. To toll or suspend (the operation, running, etc.) of something <save a statute of limitations>. 4. To except, reserve, or exempt (a right, etc.) <to save vested rights>. 5. To lessen or avoid (a cost, resource, etc.) <save labor>.

saver default (say-vər di-fawlt). [Law French] Hist. To excuse a default. — Also spelled saver de fault; saver default.

"Saver default is the same as to excuse a default. And this is properly when a man having made default in court, comes afterwards, and alleges a good cause why he did it, as imprisonment at the same time, or the like." Termes de la Ley 352 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

saving, n. An exception; a reservation.

saving clause. (17c) 1. A statutory provision exempting from coverage something that would otherwise be included. • A saving clause is generally used in a repealing act to preserve rights and claims that would otherwise be lost. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 228, 278.23.] 2. SAVING-TO-SUITORS CLAUSE. 3. SEVERABILITY CLAUSE. — Also termed savings clause.

savings account. A savings-bank depositor's account usu. bearing interest or containing conditions (such as advance notice) to the right of withdrawal.

savings-account trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

savings-and-loan association. (1884) A financial institution — often organized and chartered like a bank — that primarily makes home-mortgage loans but also usu. maintains checking accounts and provides other banking services. — Often shortened to S & L. — Also termed savings-and-loan bank; loan association; thrift institution; thrift. Cf. BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations ⇨ 1, 24–40.]

"The thrift institutions, mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions, originally were created to meet needs for saving, credit and loans of people whose resources and income were modest. Commercial banks, merchants, money lenders, and pawn shops often did not serve this demand for loans or savings as well, or with interest rates as favorable to poor individuals, and families. During the last two centuries, thrift institutions were gradually developed, therefore, by social reformers, philanthropic benefactors, religious and fraternal organizations, trade unions, employers, and thrift entrepreneurs (in most countries of the world) as a collateral type of banking or financial intermediation." William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 236 (1997).

saving-to-suitors clause. Maritime law. In the federal statutory provision granting admiralty and maritime jurisdiction to the federal courts, a clause that preserves the option to file suit in a nonadmiralty court. 28 USCA § 1333(1). • The nonadmiralty court is typically either a state court or a law-side federal court. Under the reverse-Erie doctrine, the nonadmiralty court is required to apply the same law that the admiralty court would have used. — Also termed saving clause. [Cases: Admiralty ⇨ 2.]

savor, vb. (16c) To partake of the character of or bear affinity to (something). • In traditional legal idiom, an interest arising from land is said to "savor of the realty." — Also spelled savour.

S.B. See senate bill under BILL (3).

SBA. abbr. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION.

SBIC. abbr. SMALL-BUSINESS INVESTMENT COMPANY.

sc. abbr. SCILICET.

S.C. abbr. 1. SUPREME COURT. 2. Same case. • In former practice, when put between two citations, the abbreviation indicated that the same case was reported in both places. 3. SENATUS CONSULTUM.

scab. (18c) A person who works under conditions contrary to a union contract; esp., a worker who crosses a union picket line to replace a union worker during a strike. — Also termed strikebreaker; (in BrE) black-leg labor.

scabini (skə-br-ni). [Law Latin] Hist. Judges or the judge's assessors in the court held by the count; magistrates. • The term was found in a charter from the wardens of Lynn in Norfolk, during the reign of Henry VIII. But even earlier than that, the title was used in Charlemagne's empire (the French equivalent being édevins) and later Germanized as Schöffen.

scalam (skay-ləm), n. [Latin] Hist. Scale. • Ad scalam was the method of paying money to the Exchequer, in which sixpence was added to each twenty shillings to compensate for a deficiency in weight, although no scales were actually used.

scale, n. 1. A progression of degrees; esp., a range of wage rates. 2. A wage according to a range of rates. 3. An instrument for weighing. 4. Hist. In the practice of the English Supreme Court of Judicature, the fee charged by a solicitor for a particular type of case. • Unless the court ordered otherwise, the lower scale applied to all causes and matters assigned by the Judicature Acts to the King's Bench, or the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty divisions; to all actions for debt, contract, or tort; and to almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the Chancery division and in which the amount in controversy was less than £1,000. The higher scale applied in all other cases, and in actions falling scale order. See ORDER (8).

scale tolerance. The nominal variation of the mass or weight of the same goods on different scales.

scaling law. (1882) Hist. A statute establishing a process for adjusting value differences between depreciated paper money and specie. • Statutes of this type were necessary when paper depreciated after both the American Revolution and the Civil War.

scalper. 1. A seller who buys something (esp. a ticket) at face value (or less) and then tries to resell it for a higher price. — Also termed ticket speculator. [Cases: Public Amusement and Entertainment ↻70.] 2. An investment adviser who buys a security before recommending it to clients. 3. A market-maker who puts an excessive markup or markdown on a transaction.

scalping, n. 1. The practice of selling something (esp. a ticket) at a price above face value once it becomes scarce (usu. just before a high-demand event begins). [Cases: Public Amusement and Entertainment ↻70.] 2. The purchase of a security by an investment adviser before the adviser recommends that a customer buy the same security. • This practice is usu. considered unethical because the customer's purchase will increase the security's price, thus enabling the investment adviser to sell at a profit. 3. The excessive markup or markdown on a transaction by a market-maker. • This action violates National Association of Securities Dealers guidelines. — scalp, vb.

scandal. 1. Disgraceful, shameful, or degrading acts or conduct. 2. Defamatory reports or rumors; esp., slander. See SCANDALOUS MATTER.

"Scandal consists in the allegation of anything which is unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear, or is contrary to decency or good manners, or which charges some person with a crime not necessary to be shown in the cause, to which may be added that any unnecessary allegation, bearing cruelly upon the moral character of an individual, is also scandalous. The matter alleged, however, must be not only offensive, but also irrelevant to the cause, for however offensive it be, if it be pertinent and material to the cause the party has a right to plead it. It may often be necessary to charge false representations, fraud and immorality, and the pleading will not be open to the objection of scandal, if the facts justify the charge." Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 50-51 (1916).

scandalous matter. (17c) Civil procedure. A matter that is both grossly disgraceful (or defamatory) and irrelevant to the action or defense. • A federal court — upon a party's motion or on its own — can order a scandalous matter struck from a pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Cf. IMPERTINENT MATTER. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1127; Pleading ↻364(4).]

scandalous subject matter. Trademarks. A word, phrase, symbol, or graphic depiction that the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office may refuse to register because it is shockingly offensive to social mores. • Although the Lanham Act uses the phrase "immoral, deceptive, or scandalous subject matter," courts have not

scandalum magnatum (skan-də-ləm mag-nay-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. Actionable slander of powerful people; specif., defamatory comments regarding persons of high rank, such as peers, judges, or state officials.

"Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm, which are called scandalum magnatum, are held to be still more heinous; and, though they be such as would not be actionable in the case of a common person, yet when spoken in disgrace of such high and respectable characters, they amount to an atrocious injury: which is redressed by an action on the case founded on many ancient statutes; as well on behalf of the crown, to inflict the punishment of imprisonment on the slanderer, as on behalf of the party, to recover damages for the injury sustained." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 123-24 (1768).

scarlet-letter punishment. See shame sanction under SANCTION.

scarlet-letter sentence. See shame sanction under SANCTION.

scatter-point analysis. (1993) A method for studying the effect that minority-population changes have on voting patterns, involving a plotting of the percentage of votes that candidates receive to determine whether voting percentages increase or decrease as the percentages of voters of a particular race increase or decrease.

scènes à faire (sen ah fair). [French "scenes for action"] Copyright. Standard or general themes that are common to a wide variety of works and are therefore not copyrightable. • Examples of scènes à faire are obvious plot elements and character types. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻12(2).]

schedule, n. (15c) A written list or inventory; esp., a statement that is attached to a document and that gives a detailed showing of the matters referred to in the document <Schedule B to the title policy lists the encumbrances on the property>. — schedule, vb. — scheduled, adj.

scheduled injury. See INJURY.

scheduled property. See PROPERTY.

scheme. (16c) 1. A systemic plan; a connected or orderly arrangement, esp. of related concepts <legislative scheme>. 2. An artful plot or plan, usu. to deceive others .

scheme of arrangement. English law. A court-approved reorganization of a company's capital structure or debts. • The company seeking to reorganize is usu. in financial trouble but may not yet be insolvent.

creditors' scheme of arrangement. A reorganization plan in which creditors agree to defer demands for payment, in hopes of eventually receiving more than they would if the company were immediately liquidated.

members' scheme of arrangement. A reorganization plan voted on and approved by the company's shareholders. • This type of scheme may be used to prepare shareholders' scheme of arrangement. See members' scheme of arrangement.

schism (siz-əm or skiz-əm). (14c) 1. A breach or rupture; a division, esp. among members of a group, as of a union. 2. A separation of beliefs and doctrines by persons of the same organized religion, religious denomination, or sect. [Cases: Religious Societies ↻23, 35.]

"It has been held that the civil courts are not concerned with mere schisms stemming from disputations over matters of religious doctrine, not only because such questions are essentially ecclesiastical rather than judicial, but also because of the separation between the church and the state However, it has also been held that the situation is different in the case of self-governing congressional churches, for here the courts do not hesitate to assume jurisdiction when a schism affects property rights, for in this form . . . each local congregation is independent and autonomous and there is no recourse within the denomination." 66 Am. Jur. 2d Religious Societies § 51, at 804 (1973).

school, n. 1. An institution of learning and education, esp. for children. [Cases: Schools ↻11.]

"Although the word 'school' in its broad sense includes all schools or institutions, whether of high or low degree, the word 'school' frequently has been defined in constitutions and statutes as referring only to the public common schools generally established throughout the United States When used in a statute or other contract, 'school' usually does not include universities, business colleges, or other institutions of higher education unless the intent to include such institutions is clearly indicated." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Schools § 1, at 355 (1993).

common school. See public school.

district school. A public school contained in and maintained by a school district. See SCHOOL DISTRICT.

private school. A school maintained by private individuals, religious organizations, or corporations, funded, at least in part, by fees or tuition, and open only to pupils selected and admitted based on religious affiliations or other particular qualifications. [Cases: Schools ↻1.]

public school. An elementary, middle, or high school established under state law, regulated by the local state authorities in the various political subdivisions, funded and maintained by public taxation, and open and free to all children of the particular district where the school is located. — Also termed common school. [Cases: Schools ↻11.]

2. The collective body of students under instruction in an institution of learning. 3. A group of people adhering to the same philosophy or system of beliefs.

school board. An administrative body, made up of a number of directors or trustees, responsible for overseeing public schools within a city, county, or district. Cf. BOARD OF EDUCATION. [Cases: Schools ↻51.]

school district. A political subdivision of a state, created by the legislature and invested with local powers of self-government, to build, maintain, fund, and support the public schools within its territory and to otherwise assist the state in administering its educational responsibilities. [Cases: Schools ↻21.]

consolidated school district. A public-school district in which two or more existing schools have consolidated into a single district. [Cases: Schools ↻33.]

school land. See LAND.

Schumer box. In a credit-card agreement, a table that summarizes all the costs for which the cardholder is liable, so that the cardholder can more easily compare credit-card agreements. • The term derives from the name of Senator Charles Schumer, who proposed the disclosure requirements. The box must contain the information listed in 15 USCA § 1637(c)(1)(A)-(B). — Also termed Schumer's box. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↻52.]

Science and Technology Directorate. The division of the Department of Homeland Security responsible for coordinating research and development, including preparing for and responding to terrorist threats involving weapons of mass destruction. • The Directorate also works with the Chemical, Biological, Radiological, and Nuclear Countermeasures Program and the Environmental Measurements Lab in the Department of Energy, the National BW (biological warfare) Defense Analysis Center in the Department of Defense, and the Plum Island Animal Disease Center — Abbr. S&T.

science of legislation. See LAW REFORM.

sciendum est (si-en-dəm est). [Latin] Roman law. It is to be known or understood. • This phrase often introduced a particular topic or explanation.

sciens et prudens (si-enz et proo-denz). [Latin] Hist. In full knowledge and understanding.

scienter (si-en-tər or see-), n. [Latin "knowingly"] (1824) 1. A degree of knowledge that makes a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission; the fact of an act's having been done knowingly, esp. as a ground for civil damages or criminal punishment. See KNOWLEDGE; MENS REA. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻20; Negligence ↻212, 302.] 2. A mental state consisting in an intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud. • In this sense, the term is used most often in the context of securities fraud. The Supreme Court has held that to establish a claim for damages under Rule 10b-5, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with scienter. Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 96 S.Ct. 1375 (1976). [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻60.45, 60.51(2).]

scienter action. A lawsuit in which the plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted knowingly or knew of the danger — e.g., at common law an action for damage caused by a domestic animal. See SCIENTER.

sci. fa. abbr. SCIRE FACIAS.

scil. abbr. SCILICET.

scilicet (sil-ə-set or -sit). [fr. Latin scire licet “that you may know”] (14c) That is to say; namely; VIDELICET. • Like videlicet, this word is used in pleadings and other instruments to introduce a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms. It has never been quite as common, however, as videlicet. — Abbr. sc.; scil.; (erroneously) ss.

SCIN. abbr. See self-canceling installment note under NOTE (1).

scintilla (sin-til-ə). (13c) A spark or trace <the standard is that there must be more than a scintilla of evidence>. Pl. scintillas (sin-til-əz). [Cases: Evidence ↷597; Federal Civil Procedure ↷2146; Judgments ↷185(5); Trial ↷139.1(8).]

scintilla juris (sin-til-ə juor-is). [Law Latin “a spark of right”] Hist. A fragment of law or right. • This refers to a figurative expression in the law of uses providing a trace of seisin rights to remain in the feoffees sufficient to allow contingent uses to be executed under the Statute of Uses. It was abolished in the Law of Property Amendment Act of 1860. See STATUTE OF USES.

scintilla-of-evidence rule. (1896) A common-law doctrine holding that if even the slightest amount of relevant evidence exists on an issue, then a motion for summary judgment or for directed verdict cannot be granted and the issue must go to the jury. • Federal courts do not follow this rule, but some states apply it. — Also termed scintilla rule. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷2146, 2546; Judgment ↷185(5); Trial ↷139.1(8).]

scire facias (sī-ree fay-shee-əs). [Law Latin “you are to make known, show cause”] (15c) A writ requiring the person against whom it is issued to appear and show cause why some matter of record should not be annulled or vacated, or why a dormant judgment against that person should not be revived. — Abbr. sci. fa. [Cases: Scire Facias ↷1.]

amicable scire facias to revive a judgment. A written agreement in which a person against whom a revival of an action is sought agrees to the entry of an adverse judgment.

scire facias ad audiendum errores (sī-ree fay-shee-əs ad aw-dee-en-dəm e-ror-eez). [Law Latin “that you cause to know to hear errors”] Hist. A common-law writ allowing a party who had assigned error to compel the opposing party to plead. • It was abolished in 1875.

scire facias ad disprobandum debitum (sī-ree fay-shee-əs ad dis-proh-ban-dəm deb-ə-təm). [Law Latin “that you cause to know to disprove the debt”] Hist. A writ allowing a defendant in a foreign attachment against the plaintiff to disprove or avoid the debt recovered by the plaintiff, within a year and a day from the time of payment.

scire facias ad rehabendam terram (sī-ree fay-shee-əs ad re-hə-ben-dəm ter-əm), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know to recover the land”] Hist. A writ allowing a judgment debtor to recover lands taken in execution after the debtor has satisfied the judgment.

scire facias quare restitutionem non kwair-ee res-tə-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nəm non), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know why (there is not) restitution”] Hist. A writ for restitution after an execution on a judgment is levied but not paid and the judgment is later reversed on appeal.

scire facias sur mortgage (sī-ree fay-shee-əs sər mor-gij), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know on mortgage”] Hist. A writ ordering a defaulting mortgagor to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed and the property sold in execution. [Cases: Mortgages ↷388.]

scire facias sur municipal claim (sī-ree fay-shee-əs sər myoo-nis-ə-pəl kləym), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know on municipal claim”] Hist. A writ compelling the payment of a municipal claim out of the property to which a municipal lien is attached.

scire feci (sī-ree fee-sī). [Latin “I have caused to know”] Hist. The sheriff’s return to a writ of scire facias, indicating that notice was given to the parties against whom the writ was issued.

scire fieri inquiry (sī-ree fī-ə-rī), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to ascertain the location of a testator’s property from an executor, when the sheriff returned nulla bona to a writ of execution fieri facias de bonis testatoris. See FIERI FACIAS.

site (sit). [fr. Latin situs] Archaic. 1. A location; a site. 2. The site of a capital message. 3. A municipal ordinance. — Also termed sité.

scofflaw (skof-law). (1924) 1. A person who treats the law with contempt; esp., one who avoids various laws that are not easily enforced <some scofflaws carry mannequins in their cars in order to drive in the carpool lane>. 2. Hist. A person who consumes illegally made or obtained alcoholic beverages. • This was the original meaning.

scold, n. Hist. A person who regularly breaks the peace by scolding people, increasing discord, and generally being a public nuisance to the neighborhood. • This behavior was formerly punishable in various ways, including having an iron bridle fitted to the person’s mouth. — Also termed common scold; objurgatrix. See BRANKS. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷45.25.]

scope note. (1903) In a digest, a précis appearing after a title and showing concisely what subject matter is included and what is excluded.

“In the Century and Decennial Digests, though not in the various digests of the Key-Number Series, there is printed immediately following each topic title a couple of paragraphs which are called the Scope-Note. The first paragraph of this scope-note shows very briefly the character of the subject-matter included under the title. The second paragraph shows the 'Exclusions' — i.e., what related matter has been excluded in order to conform to the plan of the Digest — and directs the reader to the proper title under which such related matter may be found. Consequently a little study of the scope-note will oftentimes repay the searcher for a few moments' time consumed in so doing." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 116 (3d ed. 1914).

scope of a patent. Patents. The limits of a patent's protection, as defined by the allowed claims. [Cases: Patents ↻ 165.] scope of authority. (1805) Agency. The range of reasonable power that an agent has been delegated or might foreseeably be delegated in carrying out the principal's business. See SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT; RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. [Cases: Principal and Agent ↻ 26, 92–137.]

scope of business. The range of activities that are reasonably necessary to operate a commercial venture successfully, as determined by the nature of the venture and the activities of others engaged in the same occupation in the same area.

scope of employment. (1836) The range of reasonable and foreseeable activities that an employee engages in while carrying out the employer's business; the field of action in which a servant is authorized to act in the master-servant relationship. See RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. Cf. COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT; ZONE OF EMPLOYMENT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻ 2769, 3044.]

scope-of-work clause. A contractual provision that highlights in summary fashion what work is to be performed under the contract.

scorched-earth defense. Corporations. An antitakeover tactic by which a target corporation sells its most valuable assets or divisions in order to reduce its value after acquisition and thus try to defeat a hostile bidder's tender offer. Cf. CROWN-JEWEL DEFENSE; PAC-MAN DEFENSE.

scriba (skri-bə), n. [Latin] Roman law. A court or office clerk; a scribe; a secretary. • In England, the scriba regis was the king's secretary. Cf. NOTARIUS.

scribe. See SECRETARY (3).

scribere est agere (skri-bə-ree est aj-ə-ree). [Latin] Hist. To write is to act.

"But now it seems clearly to be agreed, that, by the common law and the statute of Edward III, words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. For they may be spoken in heat, without any intention . . . If the words be set down in writing, it argues more deliberate intention; and it has been held that writing is an overt act of treason; for scribere est agere. But even in this case the bare words are not the treason, but the deliberate act of writing them." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 80 (1769).

Scribes. See AMERICAN SOCIETY OF WRITERS ON LEGAL SUBJECTS.

scrip. (18c) 1. A document that entitles the holder to receive something of value. See LAND SCRIP. 2. Money, esp. paper money, that is issued for temporary use.

scutage (skyoo-tij), n. [fr. Latin scutum “a shield”] Hist. 1. A monetary payment levied by the king on barons as a substitute for some or all of the knights to be supplied to the king by each baron. • This payment seems to date from the 12th century, Henry II (1154–1189) having levied five scutages in the first 11 years of his reign. 2. A fee paid by a tenant-in-chief by knight-service in lieu of serving in a war. 3. A tax on a knight’s estate to help furnish the army. — Also termed escuage.

“Scutage . . . Shield-money, in mediaeval feudal law, a payment in lieu of military service, paid by a tenant-in-chief in respect of the service of knights which he owed to the Crown. His personal obligation to serve could not be discharged by scutage but only by fine. Payment of scutage, though known in France and Germany, was most highly developed in England where it became a general tax on knights’ estates at rates which by the thirteenth century were standardized. King John demanded frequent and heavy scutages and Magna Carta forbade the levying of scutage without the consent of a general council. Scutage was divided between the King and the tenants-in-chief who gave personal service in the campaign. It became obsolete by the fourteenth century.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1121 (1980).

seal, n. (13c) 1. A fastening that must be broken before access can be obtained; esp., a device or substance that joins two things, usu. making the seam impervious. — Also termed common-law seal. 2. A piece of wax, a wafer, or some other substance affixed to the paper or other material on which a promise, release, or conveyance is written, together with a recital or expression of intention by which the promisor, releasor, or grantor manifests that a piece of wax, wafer, or other substance is a seal. • The purpose of a seal is to secure or prove authenticity. 3. A design embossed or stamped on paper to authenticate, confirm, or attest; an impression or sign that has legal consequence when applied to an instrument. [Cases: Seals ⇨1.]

“The time-honoured form of seal was a blob of wax at the foot of the document, bearing an imprint of some kind, often a crest or motto. The use of wax was not, however, necessary for a seal, and any mark or impression on the paper was sufficient as long as it was made with the intention of affixing a seal. Recent English cases have been willing to find the necessary intention in circumstances where courts in the past would almost certainly have declined; so much so that it may now be the common law that a document purporting to be executed as a deed but lacking actual sealing will be regarded as sealed as long as it contains a printed or written indication of where the mark or impression constituting the seal should be placed if it were to be affixed." Peter Butt, Land Law 481-82 (2d ed. 1988).

corporate seal. (18c) A seal adopted by a corporation for executing and authenticating its corporate and legal instruments. [Cases: Corporations ↷51.]

great seal. 1. The official seal of the United States, of which the Secretary of State is the custodian. — Also termed seal of the United States. [Cases: United States ↷5.5.] 2. The official seal of a particular state. — Also termed seal of the state; state seal. [Cases: States ↷23.] 3. The official seal of Great Britain, of which the Lord Chancellor is the custodian.

notary seal. See NOTARY SEAL.

private seal. (16c) A corporate or individual seal, as distinguished from a public seal. [Cases: Seals ↷1.]

public seal. (16c) A seal used to certify documents belonging to a public authority or government bureau.

quarter seal. A seal (originally a quarter section of the great seal) maintained in the Scotch chancery to be used on particular grants from the Crown. See great seal (3).

seal of the state. See great seal (2).

seal of the United States. See great seal (1).

state seal. See great seal (2).

wafer seal. A plastic or paper disk, usu. red or gold, affixed to a legal document as a substitute for a wax seal. • Wafers are more common in the U.K. than in the U.S. — Sometimes shortened to wafer.

seal, vb. (14c) 1. To authenticate or execute (a document) by use of a seal. 2. To close (an envelope, etc.) tightly; to prevent access to (a document, record, etc.).

sealed and delivered. See SIGNED, SEALED, AND DELIVERED.

sea lane. Int'l & maritime law. A designated course or regularly used route for ships, esp. in restricted waters such as harbors and straits. • Although sea lanes have obvious safety advantages, they were long resisted by sea captains, who saw them as a threat to their freedom to navigate.

sea law. See MARITIME LAW.

sealed-container rule. (1961) Products liability. The principle that a seller is not liable for a defective product if the seller receives the product from the manufacturer and sells it without knowing of the defect or having a reasonable opportunity to inspect the product. [Cases: Products Liability ↷168, 175; Sales ↷430.]

sealed contract. See contract under seal under CONTRACT.

sealed instrument. (17c) At common law and under some statutes, an instrument to which the bound party has affixed a personal seal, usu. recognized as providing indisputable evidence of the validity of the underlying obligations. • The common-law distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has been abolished by many states, and the UCC provides that the laws applicable to sealed instruments do not apply to contracts for the sale of goods or negotiable instruments. UCC § 2-203. See contract under seal under CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts ↷36; Seals ↷1.]

"At common law, the seal served to render documents indisputable as to the terms of the underlying obligation, thereby dispensing with the necessity of witnesses; the sealed instrument was considered such reliable evidence that it actually became the contract itself — called a 'specialty' — the loss of which meant loss of all rights of the obligee against the obligor. The seal also had many other consequences at common law, some of which have been retained in jurisdictions which still recognize the seal In states where the seal is still recognized, its primary legal significance is often the application of a longer statute of limitations to actions on sealed instruments." 69 Am. Jur. 2d Seals § 2, at 617-18 (1993).

"In medieval England a wax seal may have performed [the functions of a formality] tolerably well. But in the United States few people owned or used a seal and the ritual deteriorated to the point that wax was dispensed with and printing houses decorated the signature lines of their standard forms with the printed letters 'L.S.' for locus sigilli (place of the seal). Perfunctory invocation of the rules for sealed documents called into question the seal's utility in making promises enforceable." E. Allan Farnsworth, Changing Your Mind: The Law of Regretted Decisions 46 (1998).

sealed-record statute. See CONFIDENTIALITY STATUTE.

sealed testament. See mystic will under WILL.

sealed verdict. See VERDICT.

sealed will. See mystic will under WILL.

sea letter. Hist. A manifest issued during a war by authorities of a port where a neutral vessel is fitted, certifying the vessel's nationality, specifying the nature of and destination of the vessel's cargo, and allowing the vessel to sail under the neutral flag of its owner. • The last sea letter was issued at the Port of New York in 1806, and the use of sea letters was discontinued by proclamation of President James Madison. — Also spelled sea-letter. — Also termed sea brief; sea pass; passport.

"Our laws require masters of vessels, on entering a port for traffic, to lodge with the consul their registers, sea-letters, and passports . . ." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law 161-62 (5th ed. 1878).

sealing of records. (1953) The act or practice of officially preventing access to particular (esp. juvenile-criminal) records, in the absence of a court order. Cf. EXPUNGEMENT OF RECORD. [Cases: Records ↷32.]

seal of cause. Scots law. The seal of a burgh court, by which a royal burgh could, consistently with its charter powers, create a subordinate corporation by charter. • seal of the state. See great seal (2) under SEAL.

The seal of cause was most commonly used to create charitable corporations and craft guilds.

seal of the United States. See great seal (1) under SEAL.

seaman. Maritime law. Under the Jones Act and the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, a person who is attached to a navigating vessel as an employee below the rank of officer and contributes to the function of the vessel or the accomplishment of its mission. • Seamen's injuries are covered under the Jones Act and the general maritime law. — Also termed crew member; mariner; member of a crew. See JONES ACT. Cf. STEVEDORE. [Cases: Seamen ⇨2.]

"The Jones Act plaintiff must be a 'seaman' who is injured (or killed) 'in the course of his employment.' The 'course of . . . employment' requirement at least excluded passengers, guests, trespassers, pirates (unless of course the pirate was suing his own employer) and so on. Who else might be excluded (or included) was, as a matter of initial construction, impossible to say. After a half-century of litigation the answer to the riddle is not apparent. The Supreme Court has alternated between giving the term 'seaman' an exceedingly broad construction and giving it a much narrower one. Consequently defendants have been encouraged to argue, in all but the most obvious cases, that plaintiff is not a Jones Act seaman and that the action must be dismissed. Thus there has always been, there continues to be, and presumably there will go on being a substantial volume of depressing litigation of this type." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 6-21, at 328 (2d ed. 1975).

"The traditional seaman is a member of the crew of a merchant vessel However, vessels are not limited in their functions to the transportation of goods over water. The performance by a vessel of some other mission, such as operating as a cruise ship, necessitates the presence aboard ship of employees who do not 'man, reef and steer' the vessel Exploration for oil and gas on navigable waters has led to further expansion of the concept of a 'seaman.' In 1959, in the celebrated case of Offshore Oil Co. v. Robinson, 266 F.2d 769 (5th Cir. 1959), the Fifth Circuit held that floating drilling structures are 'vessels' and that the amphibious oil workers aboard them are entitled to the seaman's remedies against their employers and the operators of the 'vessels' on which they are employed." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 178-80 (2d ed. 1988).

able-bodied seaman. An experienced seaman who is qualified for all seaman's duties and certified by an inspecting authority. — Abbr. AB; ABS. — Also termed able seaman; bluewater seaman. [Cases: Seamen ⇨11, 29.]

merchant seaman. A sailor employed by a private vessel, as distinguished from one employed in public or military service. [Cases: Seamen ⇨2.]

ordinary seaman. A seaman who has some experience but who is not proficient enough to be classified as an able-bodied seaman. — Abbr. OS; OD. [Cases: Seamen ⇨11, 29.]

seaman's will. See soldier's will under WILL.

sea pass. See SEA LETTER.

search, n. (14c) 1. Criminal procedure. An examination of a person's body, property, or other area that the person would reasonably be expected to consider as private, conducted by a law-enforcement officer for the purpose of finding evidence of a crime. • Because the Fourth Amendment prohibits unreasonable searches (as well as seizures), a search cannot ordinarily be conducted without probable cause. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨13.]

"It must be recognized that whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has 'seized' that person. And it is nothing less than sheer torture of the English language to suggest that a careful exploration of the outer surfaces of a person's clothing all over his or her body in an attempt to find weapons is not a 'search.'" Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 16, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 1877 (1968) (Warren, J.).

administrative search. (1963) A search of public or commercial premises carried out by a regulatory authority to enforce compliance with health, safety, or security regulations. • The probable cause required for an administrative search is less stringent than that required for a search incident to a criminal investigation. — Also termed regulatory search; inspection search. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨79.]

border search. (1922) 1. A search conducted at the border of a country, esp. at a checkpoint, to exclude illegal aliens and contraband. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨440-446; Customs Duties ⇨126(1).]

"[W]arrantless searches and seizures conducted at national boundaries are permitted under the general authority of the United States to ensure the integrity of its borders. As the Supreme Court stated in Carroll v. United States, such activity ensures 'national self-protection reasonably requiring one entering the country to identify himself as entitled to come in, and his belongings as effects which may be lawfully brought in.' [267 U.S. 132, 154, 45 S.Ct. 280, 285 (1925).] Thus, the right to remain silent and protect one's personal belongings from government intrusion, normally afforded constitutional protection, are surrendered at the border." Charles H. Whitebread, Criminal Procedure § 12.02, at 227 (1980).

2. Loosely, a search conducted near the border of a country. • Generally, searches near the U.S. border are treated no differently from those conducted elsewhere in the country.

checkpoint search. (1973) 1. A search anywhere on a military installation. 2. A search in which police officers set up roadblocks and stop motorists to ascertain whether the drivers are intoxicated. [Cases: Automobiles ⇨349(9).]

Chimel search. See protective search.

consent search. (1965) A search conducted after a person with the authority to do so voluntarily waives Fourth Amendment rights. • The government has the burden to show that the consent was given freely — not under duress. Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543, 548-49, 88 S.Ct. 1788, 1792 (1968). — Also termed consensual search. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨171-186.]

"The voluntariness of a consent to search is 'to be determined from the totality of all the circumstances.' [Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S.Ct. 2041 (1973).] Among the factors to be considered in determining the effectiveness of an alleged consent to search are whether the defendant (1) has minimal schooling or was of low intelligence; (2) was mentally ill or intoxicated; (3) was under arrest at the time the consent was given; (4) was overpowered by officers, handcuffed, or similarly subject to physical restriction; (5) has seized from him by the police the keys to the premises thereafter searched; (6) employed evasive conduct or attempted to mislead the police; (7) denied guilt or the presence of any incriminatory objects in his premises; (8) earlier gave a valid confession or otherwise cooperated, as by instigating the search, or at least the investigation leading to the search; (9) was hesitant in agreeing to the search; or (10) was refused his request to consult with counsel. The presence of some of these factors is not controlling, however, as each case must stand or fall on its own special facts." Jerold H. Israel & Wayne R. LaFave, Criminal Procedure in a Nutshell 141-42 (5th ed. 1993).

constructive search. A subpoena of a corporation's records.

"[I]t is settled that the so-called 'constructive search' involved in an administrative subpoena of corporate books or records constitutes a 'search' or 'seizure' within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Searches and Seizures § 44, at 674 (1993).

emergency search. (1971) A warrantless search conducted by a police officer who has probable cause and reasonably believes that, because of a need to protect life or property, there is not enough time to obtain a warrant. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (3). [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨ 42.]

exigent search (eks-ə-jənt). (1974) A warrantless search carried out under exigent circumstances, such as an imminent danger to human life or a risk of the destruction of evidence. See exigent circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE. [Cases: Controlled Substances ⇨ 105, 114, 123, 130; Searches and Seizures ⇨ 42.]

illegal search. See unreasonable search.

inventory search. (1966) A complete search of an arrestee's person before that person is booked into jail. • All possessions found are typically held in police custody. [Cases: Automobiles ⇨ 349.5(12); Controlled Substances ⇨ 117; Searches and Seizures ⇨ 58.]

no-knock search. (1970) A search of property by the police without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry. • A no-knock search warrant may be issued under limited circumstances, as when a prior announcement would probably lead to the destruction of the objects searched for, or would endanger the safety of the police or another person. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨ 143.1; Controlled Substances ⇨ 153.]

private search. A search conducted by a private person rather than by a law-enforcement officer. • Items found during a private search are generally admissible in evidence if the person conducting the search was not acting at the direction of a law-enforcement officer. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨ 33.]

protective search. (1967) A search of a detained suspect and the area within the suspect's immediate control, conducted to protect the arresting officer's safety (as from a concealed weapon) and often to preserve evidence. • A protective search can be conducted without a warrant. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034 (1969). — Also termed search incident to arrest; Chimel search (shə-mel). [Cases: Arrest ⇨ 63, 63.5(8); Searches and Seizures ⇨ 70.]

regulatory search. See administrative search.

search incident to arrest. See protective search.

sector search. See zone search.

shakedown search. (1952) A usu. unannounced and warrantless search for illicit or contraband material (such as weapons or drugs) in a prisoner's cell. — Often shortened to shakedown. [Cases: Prisons ⇨ 134.]

strip search. (1955) A search of a person conducted after that person's clothes have been removed, the purpose usu. being to find any contraband the person might be hiding. [Cases: Controlled Substances ⇨ 126.]

unreasonable search. (18c) A search conducted without probable cause or other considerations that would make it legally permissible. — Also termed illegal search.

voluntary search. (1936) A search in which no duress or coercion was applied to obtain the defendant's consent. See consent search.

warranted search. (1968) A search conducted under authority of a search warrant. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨ 141.]

warrantless search. (1950) A search conducted without obtaining a proper warrant. • Warrantless searches are permissible under exigent circumstances or when conducted incident to an arrest. See exigent circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE; protective search. Arrest ⇨ 71.1(1); Searches and Seizures ⇨ 24, 42.1.]

zone search. A search of a crime scene (such as the scene of a fire or explosion) by dividing it up into specific sectors. — Also termed sector search.

2. An examination of public documents or records for information; esp., TITLE SEARCH. 3. Int'l law. The wartime process of boarding and examining the contents of a merchant vessel for contraband. • A number of treaties regulate the manner in which the search must be conducted. See RIGHT OF SEARCH. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨ 20.]

search-and-seizure warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

search book. (1912) A lawbook that contains no statements of the law but instead consists of lists or tables of cases, statutes, and the like, used simply to help a researcher find the law. • Most indexes, other than index-digests, are search books.

search committee. See COMMITTEE.

search incident to arrest. See protective search under SEARCH.

search of patentability. See PATENTABILITY SEARCH.

search report. Patents. A list of prior-art documents cited by the patent examiner during the patent application's preliminary examination.

search warrant. (18c) Criminal law. A judge's written order authorizing a law-enforcement officer to conduct a search of a specified place and to seize evidence. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 41. — Also termed search-and-seizure warrant. See WARRANT (1). [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨101.]

anticipatory search warrant. (1912) A search warrant based on an affidavit showing probable cause that evidence of a certain crime (such as illegal drugs) will be located at a specific place in the future. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨122.]

blanket search warrant. (1921) 1. A single search warrant that authorizes the search of more than one area. 2. An unconstitutional warrant that authorizes the seizure of everything found at a given location, without specifying which items may be seized.

covert-entry search warrant. A warrant authorizing law-enforcement officers to clandestinely enter private premises in the absence of the owner or occupant without prior notice, and to search the premises and collect intangible evidence, esp. photographs and eyewitness information. • Although previously used in federal criminal investigations, these types of warrants were first given express statutory authority by the USA Patriot Act. 18 USCA § 3103a. Information gathered while executing a sneak-and-peek warrant can later be used to support a search warrant under which physical evidence can be seized. — Also termed sneak-and-peek search warrant; surreptitious-entry search warrant. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨143.1.]

no-knock search warrant. (1972) A search warrant that authorizes the police to enter premises without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry because a prior announcement would lead to the destruction of the objects searched for or would endanger the safety of the police or another person. Cf. KNOCK-AND-ANNOUNCE RULE. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨143.1.]

sneak-and-peek search warrant. See covert-entry search warrant surreptitious-entry search warrant. See covert-entry search warrant.

search-warrant affidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

sea reeve (see reev). Hist. An officer appointed to watch the shore and enforce a lord's maritime rights, including the right to wreckage.

sea rover. 1. A person who roves the sea for plunder; a pirate. 2. A pirate vessel.

Sears-Compco doctrine. The principle that Congress, by passing copyright, trademark, and patent laws, has preempted some state-law protection of information that is not protected by those statutes. Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., 376 U.S. 225, 84 S.Ct. 784 (1964);

Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting, Inc., 376 U.S. 234, 84 S.Ct. 779 (1964). • The doctrine reflects a congressional policy decision that public access to information outweighs private economic incentives to collect and disseminate it. It limits how far states may protect against misappropriation. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨109.]

seasonable, adj. (15c) Within the time agreed on; within a reasonable time <seasonable performance of the contract>.

seasonal employment. See EMPLOYMENT.

seat, n. 1. Membership and privileges in an organization; esp., membership on a securities or commodities exchange <her seat at the exchange dates back to 1998>. [Cases: Exchanges ⇨7.] 2. The center of some activity <the seat of government>.

seated land. See LAND.

seat of government. The nation's capital, a state capital, a county seat, or other location where the principal offices of the national, state, and local governments are located. [Cases: Counties ⇨27; States ⇨22.]

seaward. See CUSTOS MARIS.

seaworthy, adj. (Of a vessel) properly equipped and sufficiently strong and tight to resist the perils reasonably incident to the voyage for which the vessel is insured. • An implied condition of marine-insurance policies, unless otherwise stated, is that the vessel will be seaworthy. [Cases: Seamen ⇨9; Shipping ⇨80, 121.] — seaworthiness, n.

seaworthy vessel. See VESSEL.

sec. abbr. 1. (all cap.) SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION. 2. Section. See SECTION (1).

secession. The process or act of withdrawing, esp. from a religious or political association <the secession from the established church> <the secession of 11 states at the time of the Civil War>.

seck (sek), adj. Hist. 1. Lacking the right or remedy of distress. 2. Lacking profits, usu. due to a reversion without rent or other service. See RENT SECK.

second, n. Parliamentary law. 1. A statement by a member other than a motion's maker that the member also wants the assembly to consider the motion <Is there a second to the motion?>. 2. Criminal law. A person who directs, assists, or supports another engaged in a duel. See DUEL (2). — second, vb.

Second Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, guaranteeing the right to keep and bear arms as necessary for securing freedom through a well-regulated militia. See RIGHT TO BEAR ARMS. [Cases: Weapons ⇨1.]

secondary, adj. (14c) (Of a position, status, use, etc.) subordinate or subsequent.

secondary, n. Hist. An officer of the courts of the King's Bench and common pleas, so called because he was next to the chief officer. • By the Superior Courts (Officers)

Act (1837), the secondary office was abolished. St. 7 Will. 4; 1 Vict., ch. 30.

secondary activity. Labor law. A union's picketing or boycotting of a secondary or neutral party, with the goal of placing economic pressure on that party so that it will stop doing business with the employer that is the primary subject of the labor dispute. • Secondary activities are forbidden by the Labor-Management Relations Act. 29 USCA § 158(b)(4). See secondary boycott under BOYCOTT; secondary picketing under PICKETING. Cf. PRIMARY ACTIVITY. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 1411, 1412.]

secondary conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

secondary creditor. See CREDITOR.

secondary devise. See alternative devise under DEVISE.

secondary distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

secondary easement. See EASEMENT.

secondary-effects test. A court's analysis of a regulation affecting free-speech interests to determine whether it is actually intended to diminish or eliminate an indirect harm flowing from the regulated expression. • The test is used to distinguish content-specific regulation from content-neutral regulation. A regulation that is facially content-specific may be treated as content-neutral if its purpose is to diminish or eliminate a secondary effect of the speech, such as a zoning regulation for adult theaters when it is intended to limit crime. The test was first enunciated in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925 (1986). [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 2213.]

secondary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

secondary factor. (usu. pl.) Patents. Objective evidence that courts consider in determining a patent claim's nonobviousness. • Secondary factors include "commercial success, long-felt but unsolved need, failure of others, and unexpected results." Graham v. John Deere Co., 383 U.S. 1, 17-18 (1966). — Also termed secondary consideration. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 36.1.]

secondary insured. See additional insured under INSURED.

secondary insurer. See excess insurer under INSURER.

secondary invention. Patents. An invention that uses or incorporates established elements or combinations to achieve a new and useful result. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 174.]

secondary lender. A wholesale mortgage buyer who purchases first mortgages from banks and savings-and-loan associations, enabling them to restock their money supply and loan more money.

secondary liability. See LIABILITY.

secondary-line competition. See vertical competition under COMPETITION.

secondary-line injury. Antitrust. Under the price-discrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, the act of hindering or seeking to hinder competition among a seller's customers by selling substantially the same products at favorable prices to one customer, or a select group of customers, to the detriment of others. 15 USCA § 13(a). • A secondary-line injury, which refers to competition among the seller's customers, is distinguishable from a primary-line injury, which refers to the anticompetitive effects that predatory pricing has on the direct competitors of the seller. Cf. PRIMARY-LINE INJURY.

secondary meaning. Intellectual property. A special sense that a trademark or tradename for a business, goods, or services has acquired even though the trademark or tradename was originally merely descriptive and therefore not protectable. • The term does not refer to a subordinate or rare meaning, but rather to a later meaning that has been added to the original one borne by the mark or name and that has now become in the market its usual and primary meaning. — Also termed special meaning; trade meaning. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1032.]

"Secondary meaning is association, nothing more. It exists only in the minds of those of the public who have seen or known or have heard of a brand of goods by some name or sign and have associated the two in their minds." Harry D. Nims, The Law of Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks 105 (1929).

secondary mortgage market. See MORTGAGE MARKET.

secondary motion. See MOTION (2).

secondary obligation. See OBLIGATION.

secondary offering. See OFFERING.

secondary party. Commercial law. 1. A party not primarily liable under an instrument, such as a guarantor. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 49; Guaranty ⇨ 33.] 2. The drawer or indorser of a negotiable instrument.

secondary picketing. See PICKETING.

secondary register. See SUPPLEMENTAL REGISTER.

secondary reserve ratio. See RESERVE RATIO.

secondary right. See RIGHT.

secondary strike. See STRIKE.

secondary term. Oil & gas. The term of an oil-and-gas lease after production has been established, typically lasting “as long thereafter as oil and gas is produced from the premises.” See HABENDUM CLAUSE; PRIMARY TERM. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨73.5.]

secondary trading. See TRADING.

secondary use. See shifting use under USE (4).

second chair, n. (1968) A lawyer who helps the lead attorney in court, usu. by examining some of the witnesses, arguing some of the points of law, and handling parts of the voir dire, opening statement, and closing argument <the young associate was second chair for the fraud case>. — second-chair, vb.

second-collision doctrine. See CRASHWORTHINESS DOCTRINE.

section 8(f) agreement. Labor law. A labor contract that is negotiated between an employer in the construction business and a union that cannot demonstrate that it represents a majority of the employees at the time the contract is executed. 29 USCA § 158(f). • This is an exception to the general rule that an employer need only negotiate with a union that can demonstrate majority status. It was enacted in part because of the nature of the construction industry, in which the employers may have several different jobs in different parts of the country, the jobs are typically completed in a relatively short time, and the workforce is often transient. Since the workforce often does not have sufficient ties to a particular employer to petition for a certification election, section 8(f) agreements provide a certain level of protection in recognition of that fact. But section 8(f) agreements are not equivalent to collective-bargaining agreements. For example, the employer can legally repudiate the agreement at any time, and the employees may not legally picket to enforce the agreement. The main protection such an agreement provides is a monetary obligation, which can be enforced, if necessary, in federal court. And if the union achieves majority status, the section 8(f) agreement will essentially become a fully enforceable collective-bargaining agreement.

security, n. (15c) 1. Collateral given or pledged to guarantee the fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the assurance that a creditor will be repaid (usu. with interest) any money or credit extended to a debtor. [Cases: Secured Transactions ↻ 11, 115.] 2. A person who is bound by some type of guaranty; SURETY. 3. The state of being secure, esp. from danger or attack. 4. An instrument that evidences the holder's ownership rights in a firm (e.g., a stock), the holder's creditor relationship with a firm or government (e.g., a bond), or the holder's other rights (e.g., an option). • A security indicates an interest based on an investment in a common enterprise rather than direct participation in the enterprise. Under an important statutory definition, a security is any interest or instrument relating to finances, including a note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in a profit-sharing agreement, collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any of these things. A security also includes any put, call, straddle, option, or privilege on any security, certificate of deposit, group or index of securities, or any such device entered into on a national securities exchange, relating to foreign currency. 15 USCA § 77b(1). — Also termed (in sense 4) evidence of indebtedness; evidence of debt. Cf. SHARE (2); STOCK (4). [Cases: Corporations ↻ 63.1, 470; Securities Regulation ↻ 5, 249.]

"Securities differ from most other commodities in which people deal. They have no intrinsic value in themselves — they represent rights in something else. The value of a bond, note or other promise to pay depends on the financial condition of the promisor. The value of a share of stock depends on the profitability or future prospects of the corporation or other entity which issued it; its market price depends on how much other people are willing to pay for it, based on their evaluation of those prospects." David L. Ratner, Securities Regulation in a Nutshell 1 (4th ed. 1992).

"What do the following have in common: scotch whisky, self-improvement courses, cosmetics, earthworms, beavers, muskrats, rabbits, chinchillas, fishing boats, vacuum cleaners, cemetery lots, cattle embryos, master recording contracts, animal feeding programs, pooled litigation funds, and fruit trees? The answer is that they have all been held to be securities within the meaning of federal or state securities statutes. The vast range of such unconventional investments that have fallen within the ambit of the securities laws' coverage is due to the broad statutory definition of a 'security' . . ." 1 Thomas Lee Hazen, Treatise on the Law of Securities Regulation § 1.5, at 28-29 (3d ed. 1995).

adjustment security. A stock or bond that is issued during a corporate reorganization. • The security holders' relative interests are readjusted during this process.

dematerialized security. See uncertificated security.

derivative security. See DERIVATIVE.

divisional security. A special type of security issued to finance a particular project.

equity security. A security representing an ownership interest in a corporation (such as a share of stock) rather than a debt interest (such as a bond); any stock or similar security, or any security that is convertible into stock or similar security or carrying a warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase stock or a similar security, and any such warrant or right. [Cases: Corporations ↻ 63.1; Securities Regulation ↻ 5.25.]

exempt security. A security that need not be registered under the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 and is exempt from the margin requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻ 14.10-14.40.]

fixed-income security. A security that pays a fixed rate of return, such as a bond with a fixed interest rate or a preferred stock with a fixed dividend.

government security. A security issued by a government, a government agency, or a government corporation; esp., a security (such as a Treasury bill) issued by a U.S. government agency, with the implied backing of Congress. — Also termed government-agency security; agency security; government bond. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 5.29; United States ↷ 91.]

heritable security. Scots law. A debt instrument secured by a charge on heritable property. — Also termed inheritable security. See heritable bond under BOND (2).

high-grade security. A security issued by a company of sound financial condition and having the ability to maintain good earnings (e.g., a utility company security).

hybrid security. A security with features of both a debt instrument (such as a bond) and an equity interest (such as a share of stock). • An example of a hybrid security is a convertible bond, which can be exchanged for shares in the issuing corporation and is subject to stock-price fluctuations.

investment security. An instrument issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 5.10, 252.]

junior security. A security that is subordinate to a senior security. • Junior securities have a lower priority in claims on assets and income.

landed security. A mortgage or other encumbrance affecting land. [Cases: Mortgages ↷ 1.]

letter security. See restricted security.

listed security. A security accepted for trading on a securities exchange. • The issuing company must have met the SEC's registration requirements and complied with the rules of the particular exchange. — Also termed listed stock. See DELISTING. [Cases: Exchanges ↷ 13.10.]

long-term security. 1. A new securities issue with an initial maturity of ten years or more. 2. On a balance sheet, a security with a remaining maturity of one year or more.

low-grade security. A security with low investment quality. • Low-grade securities usu. offer higher yields to attract capital. See high-yield bond under BOND (3).

marginable security. A security that can be bought on margin. — Also termed margin stock. See MARGIN.

marginied security. A security that is bought on margin and that serves as collateral in a margin account. See MARGIN.

marketable security. A security that the holder can readily sell on a stock exchange or an over-the-counter market.

mortgage-backed security. A security (esp. a pass-through security) backed by mortgages. • The cash flow from these securities depends on principal and interest payments from the pool of mortgages. See stripped mortgage-backed security. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 5.13.]

municipal security. See municipal bond under BOND (3).

noncallable security. A security that cannot be redeemed, or bought back, at the issuer's option. — Also termed (specif.) noncallable bond.

nonmarketable security. 1. A security that cannot be sold on the market and can be redeemed only by the holder. 2. A security that is not of investment quality.

outstanding security. A security that is held by an investor and has not been redeemed by the issuing corporation.

pass-through security. A security that passes through payments from debtors to investors. • Pass-through securities are usu. assembled and sold in packages to investors by private lenders who deduct a service fee before passing the principal and interest payments through to the investors.

personal security. 1. An obligation for the repayment of a debt, evidenced by a pledge or note binding a natural person, as distinguished from property. 2. A person's legal right to enjoy life, health, and reputation.

public security. A negotiable or transferable security that is evidence of government debt.

real security. The security of mortgages or other liens or encumbrances upon land. See COLLATERAL (2). [Cases: Mortgages ↷ 1.]

redeemable security. Any security, other than a short-term note, that, when presented to the issuer, entitles the holder to receive a share of the issuer's assets or the cash equivalent. — Also termed callable security.

registered security. 1. A security whose owner is recorded in the issuer's books. • The issuer keeps a record of the current owners for purposes of sending dividends, interest payments, proxies, and the like. 2. A security that is to be offered for sale and for which a registration statement has been submitted. — Also termed (specif.) registered stock. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 11.10–11.50.]

restricted security. A security that is not registered with the SEC and therefore may not be sold publicly unless specified conditions are met. • A restricted security is usu. acquired in a nonpublic transaction in which the buyer gives the seller a letter stating the buyer's intent to hold the stock as an investment rather than resell it. — Also termed restricted stock; letter security; letter stock; unregistered security.

- senior security. A security of a class having priority over another class as to the distribution of assets or the payment of dividends. 15 USCA § 77r(d)(4).
- shelf security. A security that is set aside for shelf registration.
- short-term security. A bond or note that matures and is payable within a brief period (often one year).
- speculative security. A security that, as an investment, involves a risk of loss greater than would usu. be involved; esp., a security whose value depends on proposed or promised future promotion or development, rather than on present tangible assets or conditions.
- stripped mortgage-backed security. A derivative security providing distributions to classes that receive different proportions of either the principal or interest payments from a pool of mortgage-backed securities. — Abbr. SMBS. See mortgage-backed security.
- structured security. (usu. pl.) 1. A security whose cash-flow characteristics depend on one or more indexes, or that has an embedded forward or option. 2. A security for which an investor's investment return and the issuer's payment obligations are contingent on, or highly sensitive to, changes in the value of the underlying assets, indexes, interest rates, or cash flows. SEC Rule 434(h) (17 CFR § 230.434(h)).
- treasury security. See treasury stock under STOCK.
- uncertificated security. A share or other interest in property or an enterprise, or an obligation of the issuer that is not represented by an instrument but is registered on the issuer's books. UCC § 8-102(a)(18).
• This term was called uncertified security in earlier versions of the UCC. — Also termed (in BrE) dematelized security.
- unlisted security. An over-the-counter security that is not registered with a stock exchange. — Also termed unlisted stock.
- unregistered security. See restricted security.
- voting security. See voting stock under STOCK.
- when-issued security. A security that can be traded even though it has not yet been issued. • Any transaction that takes place does not become final until the security is issued.
- worthless security. A security that has lost its value, for which a loss (usu. capital) is allowed for tax purposes. IRC (26 USCA) § 165. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3429.]
- zero-coupon security. A security (esp. a bond) that is issued at a large discount but pays no interest. • The face value of the bond is payable at maturity.
- security agreement. An agreement that creates or provides for an interest in specified real or personal property to guarantee the performance of an obligation.
• It must provide for a security interest, describe the collateral, and be signed by the debtor. The agreement may include other important covenants and warranties. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 41–51.]
- Security Council. A principal organ of the United Nations, consisting of five permanent members (China, France, Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States) and ten additional members elected at stated intervals, charged with the responsibility of maintaining international peace and security, and esp. of preventing or halting wars by diplomatic, economic, or military action. • The nonpermanent members are elected from each of the world's major regions, based on a distribution formula. [Cases: International Law ⇨ 10.45.]
- security deposit. See DEPOSIT (3).
- security for costs. (17c) Money, property, or a bond given to a court by a plaintiff or an appellant to secure the payment of court costs if that party loses. [Cases: Costs ⇨ 105, 302; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2732.]
- security grade. See SECURITY RATING.
- security grading. See SECURITY RATING.
- security interest. (1951) A property interest created by agreement or by operation of law to secure performance of an obligation (esp. repayment of a debt). • Although the UCC limits the creation of a security interest to personal property, the Bankruptcy Code defines the term to mean “a lien created by an agreement.” 11 USCA § 101(51). [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 2, 11.]
- perfected security interest. (1955) A security interest that complies with the statutory requirements for achieving priority over a trustee in bankruptcy and unperfected interests. • A perfected interest may also have priority over another interest that was perfected later in time. See PERFECT. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2952; Secured Transactions ⇨ 81–96, 138–145.]
- purchase-money security interest. (1957) A security interest that is created when a buyer uses the lender's money to make the purchase and immediately gives the lender security by using the purchased property as collateral (UCC § 9-107); a security interest that is either (1) taken or retained by the seller of the collateral to secure all or part of its price or (2) taken by a person who by making advances or incurring an obligation gives value to enable the debtor to acquire rights in or the use of collateral if that value is in fact so used. • If a buyer's purchase of a boat, for example, is financed by a bank that loans the amount of the purchase price, the bank's security interest in the boat that secures the loan is a purchase-money security interest. — Abbr. PMSI. — Also termed purchase-money interest. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 83, 146.]
- unperfected security interest. (1957) A security interest held by a creditor who has not established priority over any other creditor. • The only priority is over the debtor. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 139.]

security rating. 1. The system for grading or classifying a security by financial strength, stability, or risk. • Firms such as Standard and Poor's and Moody's grade securities. — Also termed security grade; security grading; security rate. 2. The classification that a given security is assigned to under this system.

secus (see-kās). [Latin] Otherwise; to the contrary.

sedato animo (si-day-toh an-ə-moh). [Latin] With stated or settled purpose.

se defendendo (see def-en-den-doh), adv. [Law Latin] In self-defense; in defending oneself <homicide se defendendo>.

"Homicide se defendendo is of two kinds. (1) Such, as tho it excuseth from death, yet it excuseth not the forfeiture of goods, . . . (2) Such as wholly acquits from all kinds of forfeiture." 1 Hale P.C. 478.

sedentary work. See WORK (1).

sedente curia (si-den-tee kyoor-ee-ə). [Latin] The court sitting; during the court sitting.

sede plena (see-dee plee-nə). [Latin] Hist. The see being filled. • This term indicated that a bishop's see was not vacant.

sederunt. See ACT OF SEDERUNT.

sedes (see-deez), n. [Latin "a seat"] 1. Roman law. A private residence. 2. Roman law. Judicial office; the bench. 3. Hist. A see; a bishop's dignity.

sede vacante (see-dee və-kan-tee). [Law Latin] Hist. The benefice being vacant.

sedge flat. A tract of land below the high-water mark.

sedition, n. (14c) 1. An agreement, communication, or other preliminary activity aimed at inciting treason or some lesser commotion against public authority. 2. Advocacy aimed at inciting or producing — and likely to incite or produce — imminent lawless action. • At common law, sedition included defaming a member of the royal family or the government. The difference between sedition and treason is that the former is committed by preliminary steps, while the latter entails some overt act for carrying out the plan. But if the plan is merely for some small commotion, even accomplishing the plan does not amount to treason. Cf. TREASON. [Cases: Insurrection and Sedition ⇨ 1.] — seditious, adj.

"Sedition — This, perhaps the very vaguest of all offences known to the Criminal Law, is defined as the speaking or writing of words calculated to excite disaffection against the Constitution as by law established, to procure the alteration of it by other than lawful means, or to incite any person to commit a crime to the disturbance of the peace, or to raise discontent or disaffection, or to promote ill-feeling between different classes of the community. A charge of sedition is, historically, one of the chief means by which Government, especially at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century, strove to put down hostile critics. It is evident that the vagueness of the charge is a danger to the liberty of the subject, especially if the Courts of Justice can be induced to take a view favourable to the Government." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

Sedition Act. Hist. A 1798 federal statute that prohibited the malicious publication of defamatory material about the government, Congress, or the President. • The act expired in 1801.

seditious conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

seditious libel. See LIBEL.

seditious speech. See SPEECH.

sed non allocatur (sed non al-ə-kay-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. But it is not allowed or upheld. • This phrase was formerly used to indicate the court's disagreement with the arguments of counsel.

sed per curiam (sed pər kyoor-ee-əm). [Latin] But by the court. • This phrase is used to introduce: (1) a statement made by the court disagreeing with counsel's arguments; or (2) the opinion of the whole court when different from the opinion of the single judge immediately before quoted.

sed quaere (sed kweer-ee). [Latin] But inquire; examine this further. • This remark indicates that the correctness of a particular statement is challenged.

seduction. (16c) The offense that occurs when a man entices a woman of previously chaste character to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, or bribes, or other means not involving force. • Many states have abolished this offense for persons over the age of legal consent. Traditionally, the parent of a young woman had an action to recover damages for the loss of her services. But in measuring damages, the jury could consider not just the loss of services but also the distress and anxiety that the parent had suffered in being deprived of her comfort and companionship. Though seduction was not a crime at common law, many American states made it a statutory crime until the late 20th century. [Cases: Seduction ⇨ 29–54.]

sed vide (sed vi-dee). [Latin] But see. • This remark, followed by a citation, directs the reader's attention to an authority or a statement that conflicts with or contradicts the statement or principle just given. — Also termed but see.

see, n. The area or district of a bishop's jurisdiction <the see of Canterbury>.

seed money. Start-up money for a business venture. — Also termed front money; front-end money.

segregation, n. (16c) 1. The act or process of separating.

punitive segregation. (1958) The act of removing a prisoner from the prison population for placement in separate or solitary confinement, usu. for disciplinary reasons. — Also termed punitive isolation. [Cases: Prisons ⇨ 231.]

2. The unconstitutional policy of separating people on the basis of color, nationality, religion, or the like. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1033(1, 1); Constitutional Law ⇨ 214; Schools ⇨ 13(5).] — segregate, vb. — segregative, adj.

de facto segregation. (1958) Segregation that occurs without state authority, usu. on the basis of socioeconomic factors. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1033(1); Schools ⇨ 13(5).]

de jure segregation. (1963) Segregation that is permitted by law. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1033(1); Schools ⇨ 13(5).]

seignior (seen-yər), n. [Law French] Hist. An owner of something; a lord of a fee or manor. — Also spelled seigneur (seen- or sayn-yər); seignor. See SEIGNIORY.

seignior in gross (seen-yər in grohs), n. [Law French] A lord having no manor but enjoying the other rights of lordship.

seigniorage (seen-yər-ij), n. [Law French] 1. Hist. The tenure existing between lord and vassal. 2. Hist. A prerogative of the Crown; specif., the charge for coining bullion into money; mintage. 3. A royalty. 4. A profit.

seignioress (seen-yər-es or -is), n. [Law French] Hist. A female superior; a lady.

seignory (seen-yər-ee), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. The rights and powers of a lord; esp., a grantor's retained right to have the grantee perform services in exchange for the transfer of land. 2. A lord's dominions; a feudal or manor lordship; esp., land held subject to such a retained right in the grantor. — Also spelled seignory.

seignory in gross (seen-yər-ee in grohs). See reputed manor under MANOR.

seise (seez), vb. To invest with seisin or establish as a holder in fee simple; to put in possession <he became seised of half a section of farmland near Amarillo>.

seised to uses. See STANDING SEISED TO USES.

seisin (see-zin), n. (14c) 1. Hist. Completion of the ceremony of feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into freehold. 2. Possession of a freehold estate in land; ownership. 3. Louisiana law. The right that the law accords universal successors to own and possess a person's estate directly and immediately upon that person's death. La. Civ. Code arts. 935 et seq. — Also spelled seizin. — Also termed vesture; seisina; (in Scots law) sasine. [Cases: Property ⇨ 10.]

"Originally, seisin meant simply possession and the word was applicable to both land and chattels. Prior to the fourteenth century it was proper to speak of a man as being seised of land or seised of a horse. Gradually, seisin and possession became distinct concepts. A man could be said to be in possession of chattels, or of lands wherein he had an estate for years, but he could not be said to be seised of them. Seisin came finally to mean, in relation to land, possession under claim of a freehold estate therein. The tenant for years had possession but not seisin; seisin was in the reversioner who had the fee. And although the word 'seisin' appears in modern statutes with a fair degree of frequency, it is usually treated as synonymous with ownership." Cornelius J. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 98-99 (2d ed. 1988).

"It is difficult to define seisin satisfactorily. It has nothing to do with 'seizing,' with its implication of violence. To medieval lawyers it suggested the very opposite: peace and quiet. A man who was put in seisin of land was 'set' there and continued to 'sit' there. Seisin thus denotes quiet possession of land, but quiet possession of a particular kind. . . . Although it seems impossible to frame a satisfactory definition . . . , to call it 'that feudal possession of land which only the owner of a freehold estate in freehold land could have' is to express the most important elements." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 27-28 (6th ed. 1993).

actual seisin. See seisin in deed.

constructive seisin. See seisin in law.

covenant of seisin. See COVENANT (4).

customary seisin. See quasi-seisin.

equitable seisin. 1. Possession or enjoyment of a property interest or right enforceable in equity. 2. See seisin in law.

fictitious seisin. See seisin in law.

legal seisin. See seisin in law.

livery of seisin. See LIVERY OF SEISIN.

primer seisin (prim-ər or pri-mər see-zin). Hist. A right of the Crown to receive, from the heir of a tenant who died in possession of a knight's fee, one year's profits of the inherited estate (or half a year's profits if the estate was in reversion); FIRST FRUITS (1). quasi-seisin. A copyholder's possession of lands, the freehold possession being in the lord. — Also termed customary seisin.

seisin in deed. (17c) Actual possession of a freehold estate in land, by oneself or by one's tenant or agent, as distinguished from legal possession. — Also termed seisin in fact; actual seisin. [Cases: Property ⇨ 10.]

seisin in fact. See seisin in deed.

seisin in law. (17c) The right to immediate possession of a freehold estate in land, as when an heir inherits land but has not yet entered it. — Also termed legal seisin; constructive seisin; equitable seisin; fictitious seisin. [Cases: Property ⇨ 10.]

"Seisin in law is, when something is done, which the law accounteth a seisin; as an inrollment." 2 E. Chambers, Cyclopaedia: Or, an Universal Dictionary of Arts and Sciences (1743), s.v. SEISIN IN FACT.

seisina (see-zin-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Seisin.

seisina habenda (see-zin-ə hə-ben-də). See DE SEISINA HABENDA.

seisor (see-zər), n. One who takes possession of a freehold.

seize, vb. (13c) 1. To forcibly take possession (of a person or property). 2. To place (someone) in possession. 3. To be in possession (of property). 4. To be informed of or aware of (something). See SEISIN; SEIZURE.

seizin. See SEISIN.

seizure, n. (15c) The act or an instance of taking possession of a person or property by legal right or process; esp., in constitutional law, a confiscation or arrest that may interfere with a person's reasonable expectation of privacy. [Cases: Arrest ↷68(4); Searches and Seizures ↷13.1.]

constructive seizure. A manifest intent to seize and take possession of another person's property, usu. either by lawfully acquiring actual custody and control of the property or by posting notice of the property's pending foreclosure. [Cases: Attachment ↷162; Execution ↷126.]

select committee. See special committee under COMMITTEE.

select council. See COUNCIL.

selecti judices (si-lek-ti joo-di-seez). [Latin] Roman law. Jurors on the official panel prepared by the praetor, who for a specific trial were drawn by lot subject to challenge and sworn to office in a similar manner to modern juries.

selective disclosure. (1963) The act of divulging part of a privileged communication, or one of several privileged communications, usu. because the divulged portion is helpful to the party giving the information, while harmful portions of the communication are withheld. • Such a disclosure can result in a limited waiver of the privilege for all communications on the same subject matter as the divulged portion. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ↷20.]

selective-draft law. A statute empowering the federal government to conscript citizens for military duty. • The constitutionality of the first selective-draft law was challenged and upheld in the Selective-Draft-Law Cases. See Arver v. United States, 245 U.S. 366, 38 S.Ct. 159 (1918). [Cases: Armed Services ↷20, 40.1.]

selective enforcement. (1958) The practice of law-enforcement officers who use wide or even unfettered discretion about when and where to carry out certain laws; esp., the practice of singling a person out for prosecution or punishment under a statute or regulation because the person is a member of a protected group or because the person has exercised or is planning to exercise a constitutionally protected right. — Also termed selective prosecution. Cf. vindictive prosecution under PROSECUTION. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷223, 250.1(3); Criminal Law ↷37.10.]

"The chief of police of a New England town once declared to the press that he believed in a strict curfew law, 'selectively enforced.' 'Selective enforcement' in this case means that the policeman decides for himself who ought to be sent home from the street; legislative candour would suggest that if this is the intention it ought to be expressed in the law itself, instead of being concealed behind words that are 'strict' and categorical." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 42 (1968).

selective prosecution. (1967) 1. SELECTIVE ENFORCEMENT. 2. The practice or an instance of a criminal prosecution brought at the discretion of a prosecutor rather than one brought as a matter of course in the normal functioning of the prosecuting authority's office. • Selective prosecution violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment if a defendant is singled out for prosecution when others similarly situated have not been prosecuted and the prosecutor's reasons for doing so are impermissible.

selective prospectivity. (1991) A court's decision to apply a new rule of law in the particular case in which the new rule is announced, but to apply the old rule in all other cases pending at the time the new rule is announced or in which the facts predate the new rule's announcement. [Cases: Courts ↷100(1).]

Selective Service System. The federal agency that registers all persons 18–26 who are eligible for military service military service and provides personnel to the Armed Forces during emergencies. • It was established in 1940 as a part of the War Manpower Commission and became independent in 1943. — Abbr. SSS. [Cases: Armed Services ↷20.8.]

selectman. A municipal officer elected annually in some New England towns to transact business and perform some executive functions. [Cases: Towns ↷26.]

self-applying, adj. (1894) (Of a statute, ordinance, etc.) requiring no more for interpretation than a familiarity with the ordinary meanings of words.

self-authentication. See AUTHENTICATION.

self-canceling installment note. See NOTE (1).

self-crimination. See SELF-INCRIMINATION.

self-critical-analysis privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

self-dealing, n. (1940) Participation in a transaction that benefits oneself instead of another who is owed a fiduciary duty. • For example, a corporate director might engage in self-dealing by participating in a competing business to the corporation's detriment. Cf. FAIR DEALING (1), (2). [Cases: Corporations ↷315, 316.] — self-deal, vb.

self-defense, n. (1651) 1. The use of force to protect oneself, one's family, or one's property from a real or threatened attack. • Generally, a person is justified in using a reasonable amount of force in self-defense if he or she reasonably believes that the danger of bodily harm is imminent and that force is necessary to avoid this danger. — Also termed defense of self. Cf. adequate provocation under PROVOCATION. [Cases: Assault and Battery ↷13, 67; Homicide ↷766.]

"The law of self-defence, as it is applied by the courts, turns on two requirements: the force must have been necessary, and it must have been reasonable." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 114 (1991).

imperfect self-defense. (1882) The use of force by one who makes an honest but unreasonable mistake that force is necessary to repel an attack. • In some jurisdictions, such a self-defender will be charged with a lesser offense than the one committed. [Cases: Homicide ↷686.]

perfect self-defense. (1883) The use of force by one who accurately appraises the necessity and the amount of force to repel an attack.

2. Int'l law. The right of a state to defend itself against a real or threatened attack. See United Nations Charter, art. 51 (59 Stat. 1031). — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) self-defence. — self-defender, n.

"Self-defence, properly understood, is a legal right, and as with other legal rights the question whether a specific state of facts warrants its exercise is a legal question. It is not a question on which a state is entitled, in any special sense, to be a judge in its own cause." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 319 (5th ed. 1955).

self-destruct clause. A provision in a trust for a condition that will automatically terminate the trust. • Discretionary trusts, esp. supplemental-needs trusts, often include a self-destruct provision. For example, a trust to provide for the needs of a disabled person may terminate if the beneficiary becomes ineligible for a government-benefits program such as Medicaid.

self-destruction. See SUICIDE (1).

self-determination contract. See CONTRACT.

self-determination election. See GLOBE ELECTION.

self-disserving declaration. Hist. See declaration against interest under DECLARATION (6).

self-employed retirement plan. See KEOGH PLAN.

self-employment tax. See TAX.

self-evaluation privilege. See self-critical-analysis privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

self-executing, adj. (1857) (Of an instrument) effective immediately without the need of any type of implementing action <the wills had self-executing affidavits attached>. • Legal instruments may be self-executing according to various standards. For example, treaties are self-executing under the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution (art. VI, § 2) if textually capable of judicial enforcement and intended to be enforced in that manner.

self-help, n. (1831) An attempt to redress a perceived wrong by one's own action rather than through the normal legal process. • The UCC and other statutes provide for particular self-help remedies (such as repossession) if the remedy can be executed without breaching the peace. UCC § 9-609. — Also termed self-redress; extrajudicial enforcement. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 228.]

"Notice to the debtor is generally not required prior to self-help repossession of collateral by the creditor upon default, although the provision for self-help repossession has been held to violate due process requirements in some instances, and states under the Uniform Consumer Credit Code require particular notice requirements. Furthermore, while the UCC generally does not require notice to the debtor upon self-help repossession of the collateral upon the debtor's default, the agreement between the parties may require such notice prior to repossession." 68A Am. Jur. 2d Secured Transactions § 608, at 466 (1993).

self-help remedy. See extrajudicial remedy under REMEDY.

self-incrimination. (1853) The act of indicating one's own involvement in a crime or exposing oneself to prosecution, esp. by making a statement. — Also termed self-crimination; self-inculpation. See RIGHT AGAINST

SELF-INCRIMINATION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 393; Witnesses ⇨ 297.]

Self-Incrimination Clause. (1925) The clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution barring the government from compelling criminal defendants to testify against themselves. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 299.]

self-inculpation. See SELF-INCRIMINATION.

self-induced frustration. See FRUSTRATION.

self-induced intoxication. See voluntary intoxication under INTOXICATION.

self-insurance. See INSURANCE.

self-insured retention. Insurance. The amount of an otherwise-covered loss that is not covered by an insurance policy and that usu. must be paid before the insurer will pay benefits <the defendant had a $1 million CGL policy to cover the loss, but had to pay a self-insured retention of $100,000, which it had agreed to so that the policy premium would be lower>. — Abbr. SIR. Cf. DEDUCTIBLE. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2283.]

self-killing. See SUICIDE (1).

self-liquidating mortgage. See amortized mortgage under MORTGAGE.

self-murder. See SUICIDE (1).

self-policing privilege. See self-critical-analysis privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

self-proved will. See WILL.

self-proving affidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

self-redress. See SELF-HELP.

self-regulation. See REGULATION (1).

self-regulatory organization. A nongovernmental organization that is statutorily empowered to regulate its members by adopting and enforcing rules of conduct, esp. those governing fair, ethical, and efficient practices. — Abbr. SRO.

self-represented litigant. See PRO SE.

self-serving declaration. See DECLARATION (6).

self-settled trust. See TRUST.

self-slaughter. See SUICIDE (1).

self-stultification. (1862) The act or an instance of testifying about one's own deficiencies. See STULTIFY.

sell, vb. (bef. 12c) To transfer (property) by sale.

seller. (13c) 1. A person who sells or contracts to sell goods; a vendor. UCC § 2-103(1)(d). [Cases: Sales ⇨ 15.] 2. Generally, a person who sells anything; the transferor of property in a contract of sale.

seller's market. See MARKET.

seller's option. See OPTION.

selling agent. See AGENT (2).

selling price. See sales price under PRICE.

sell-off, n. A period when heavy pressure to sell causes falling stock-market prices.

sell order. See ORDER (8).

semble (sem-bəl). [Law French] (1817) It seems; it would appear <semble that the parties' intention was to create a binding agreement>. • This term is used chiefly to indicate an obiter dictum in a court opinion or to introduce an uncertain thought or interpretation. — Abbr. sem.; semb.

semestria (si-mes-tree-ə), n. [Latin "half-yearly matters"] Roman law. The collected decisions of Roman emperors, issued every six months.

Semiconductor Chip Protection Act. Intellectual property. A 1984 statute protecting manufacturers against the unauthorized copying or use of semiconductor chips and the mask works used to manufacture them. • Semiconductor chips do not qualify for patent protection since technological advancements are small and usu. obvious. Mask works are multi-layered, three-dimensional templates used to produce semiconductor chips. Mask-work design is more functional than expressive and so traditional copyright protection was inapplicable until 1984. The Act provides copyright protection to the mask works for a period of ten years. 17 USCA §§ 901–914. — Abbr. SCPA. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨10.4.]

semi-free software. Software that does not include source code but comes with permission for individuals to use, copy, modify, and distribute the software for nonprofit purposes. Cf. FREWARE; PROPRIETARY SOFTWARE; SHAREWARE.

semi-matrimonium (sem-i ma-trə-moh-nee-əm), n. [Latin] A half-marriage.

seminary. 1. An educational institution such as a college, academy, or other school; esp., one that trains students for the clergy. [Cases: Colleges and Universities ⇨1.] 2. The building in which the institution performs its functions.

seminaufragium (sem-i-naw-fray-jee-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. A half-shipwreck, as when goods are cast overboard in a storm or when a damaged ship's repair costs are more than the ship's worth.

semiplena probatio (sem-i-plee-nə proh-bay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Half-proof.

"In actions of filiation, a pursuer was formerly entitled, on adducing a semiplena probatio, to her oath in supplement to prove that the defender was the father of her child. A semiplena probatio was such a proof as induced, not merely a suspicion, but a reasonable belief that the pursuer's case was well-founded, and consisted generally of a proof of opportunity for connection, acts of familiarity on the part of the defender towards the pursuer, &c. . . ." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 569 (4th ed. 1894).

semi-secret trust. See TRUST.

semi-skilled work. See WORK (1).

semper (sem-pər). [Latin] Always. • This term introduces several Latin maxims, such as semper in dubiis benigniora praeferenda sunt ("in doubtful cases, the more favorable constructions are always to be preferred").

semper paratus. A defendant's pleading that he or she has always been ready to perform as the plaintiff demanded.

senage (see-nij). [French] Money paid for synodals; tribute-money. See SYNODAL.

senate. (13c) 1. The upper chamber of a bicameral legislature. [Cases: States ⇨26.] 2. (cap.) The upper house of the U.S. Congress, composed of 100 members — two from each state — who are elected to six-year terms. — Abbr. S. [Cases: United States ⇨7.1.]

senate bill. See BILL (3).

senator. (13c) A person who is a member of a senate.

senatores (sen-a-tor-eez), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Members of the Roman senate. 2. Members of municipal councils.

senatorial courtesy. (1884) 1. The tradition that the President should take care in filling a high-level federal post (such as a judgeship) with a person agreeable to the senators from the nominee's home state, lest the senators defeat confirmation. [Cases: Judges ⇨3.]

"The risk of a deadlock is minimized by [the President's] consulting informally with the Senators from the State in which the office lies, if they are members of his own political party. Actually this amounts in most instances to his taking the advice of these two Senators as to a selection. A nomination approved by them is practically certain of final confirmation by the Senate as a whole. The arrangement is a 'log-rolling' one, which has been dignified by the name of 'Senatorial courtesy.' 'If you will help me to get the appointments I want in my State, I will help you get the appointments you want in your State.'" Herbert W. Horwill, The Usages of the American Constitution 129 (1925).

2. Loosely, civility among senators .

Senator of the College of Justice. Scots law. See LORD OF SESSION.

senatus (si-nay-təs), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. The Roman senate. 2. The meeting place for the Roman senate.

senatus consulto (si-nay-təs kən-səl-toh). [Latin] Roman law. By the decree of the Senate.

senatus consultum (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm). [Latin] Roman law. In the Republic, a resolution of the Roman Senate, which did not have the force of law (though usu. followed). • In the first century A.D., these resolutions replaced the legislation of the comitia, but by the end of the second century, they were merely the Senate's official expression of the imperial will. The senate often adopted the text of a speech (oratio) by the emperor. — Sometimes written senatusconsultum. — Also termed senatus consult. — Abbr. S.C. Pl. senatus consulta.

"Senatus consulta. — In the regal and republican periods the Senate enjoyed no legislative power. It was an advisory body, nominated by the King, and at first purely patrician. Later it . . . included patricians and plebeians . . . its chief duty still being to tender advice to the magistrates . . . The theory still was, till the time of Hadrian, that senatus consulta were directions to the magistrates, who were now in fact, if not in name, bound to give effect to them, till by a process of gradual usurpation senatus consulta came to be direct legislation." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 12–13 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

senatus consultum Macedonianum (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm mas-ə-doh-nee-ay-nəm). [Latin "Macedo's Resolution"] Roman law. A senate decree under Vespasian to protect fathers from children in their power who had borrowed excessive sums in expectation of their father's death, by making actions to recover such loans unlawful. — Also termed Macedonian Decree.

"In the principate of Vespasian, 69-79 A.D., a senatus consultum was passed which forbade loans to a filiius-familias. It was called the senatus consultum — Macedonianum, after one Macedo, a usurer who had made such a loan and thereby instigated a hard-pressed debtor to kill his father in order to enter into his inheritance. To prevent tragic possibilities like these, the senatus consultum declared that no action would lie to recover money lent to a filiius-familias." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 188-89 (1927).

"The senatus consultum Macedonianum reads as follows: 'Whereas Macedo's borrowings gave him an added incentive to commit a crime to which he was naturally predisposed and whereas those who lend money on terms which are dubious, to say the least, often provide evil men with the means of wrongdoing, it has been decided, in order to teach pernicious moneylenders that a son's debt cannot be made good by waiting for his father's death, that a person who has lent money to a son-in-power is to have no claim or action even after the death of the person in whose power he was.'" Digest of Justinian 14.6.1 (Ulpian, Ad Sabinum 49).

senatus consultum ultimum necessitatis (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm əl-tə-mee nə-ses-i-tay-tis). [Latin] Roman law. A decree of the senate of the last necessity. • This decree usu. preceded the nomination of a leader with absolute power in a time of emergency. — Also termed senatus consultum ultimae necessitatis.

senatus consultum Velleianum (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm vel-ee-ay-nəm). [Latin "Velleian Decree"] Roman law. A senate decree, probably of A.D. 46, to protect women from making unconscionable guarantees, suretyship undertakings, or debt assumptions for their husbands and for others generally, by making actions to enforce such undertakings unlawful.

senatus decreta (si-nay-təs di-kree-tə). [Latin] Roman law. The senate's decisions.

sending state. See STATE.

senescallus (sen-əs-kal-əs), n. [Law Latin] See SENESCHAL. seneschal (sen-ə-shəl), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. A French title of office, equivalent to a steward in England. • A seneschal was originally a duke's lieutenant or a lieutenant to other dignities of the kingdom. 2. The steward of a manor. 3. Hist. An administrative or judicial officer, such as the governor of a city or province. — Also termed senescallus.

senility. (18c) Mental feebleness or impairment caused by old age. • A senile person (in the legal, as opposed to the popular, sense) is incompetent to enter into a binding contract or to execute a will. — Also termed senile dementia (see-nil di-men-shee-ə). [Cases: Mental Health ↷ 3.] — senile, adj.

senior, adj. (14c) 1. (Of a debt, etc.) first; preferred, as over junior obligations. 2. (Of a person) older than someone else. 3. (Of a person) higher in rank or service. 4. (Of a man) elder, as distinguished from the man's son who has the same name.

senior counsel. 1. See lead counsel under COUNSEL. 2. See KING'S COUNSEL; QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

seniority. (15c) 1. The preferential status, privileges, or rights given to an employee based on the employee's length of service with an employer. • Employees with seniority may receive additional or enhanced benefit packages and obtain competitive advantages over fellow employees in layoff and promotional decisions. 2. The status of being older or senior.

seniority system. Employment law. Any arrangement that recognizes length of service in making decisions about job layoffs and promotions or other advancements.

senior judge. See JUDGE.

senior lien. See LIEN.

senior mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

senior partner. See PARTNER.

senior party. Intellectual property. In an interference proceeding, the first person to file an application for a property's legal protection, e.g., an invention patent or a trademark registration. • In the United States, merely being the first to file does not entitle the party to the protection. The proceeding's administrator also takes other factors into account. For instance, in a patent-interference proceeding the invention's conception date and the inventor's diligence in reducing the invention to practice are relevant factors. Priority in the filing date is prima facie evidence that the senior party is the first inventor, so the challenger has the burden of proof. Cf. JUNIOR PARTY. [Cases: Patents ↷ 106(1).]

senior status. (1970) The employment condition of a semiretired judge who continues to perform certain judicial duties that the judge is willing and able to undertake. [Cases: Judges ↷ 7.]

senior user. Trademarks. The first person to use a mark. • That person is usu. found to be the mark's owner. — Also termed first user. Cf. JUNIOR USER. [Cases: Trademarks ↷ 1137.]

sensitivity training. (1956) One or more instructional sessions for management and employees, designed to counteract the callous treatment of others, esp. women and minorities, in the workplace.

sensus (sen-səs). [Latin] Hist. Sense; meaning; signification. • The word appears in its inflected form in phrases such as malo sensu ("an evil sense"), mitiori sensu ("in a milder sense"), and sensu honesto ("in an honest sense").

sentence, n. (14c) The judgment that a court formally pronounces after finding a criminal defendant guilty; the punishment imposed on a criminal wrongdoer . See Fed. R. Crim. P. 32. — Also termed judgment of conviction. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1001.] — sentence, vb.

accumulative sentences. See consecutive sentences.

aggregate sentence. (1917) A sentence that arises from a conviction on multiple counts in an indictment. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻642–643.]

alternative sentence. (1841) A sentence other than incarceration. • Examples include community service and victim restitution. — Also termed creative sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻2049, 2100–2217.]

blended sentence. In a juvenile-delinquency disposition, a sanction that combines delinquency sanctions and criminal punishment.

concurrent sentences. (1905) Two or more sentences of jail time to be served simultaneously. • For example, if a convicted criminal receives concurrent sentences of 5 years and 15 years, the total amount of jail time is 15 years. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻547.]

conditional sentence. (1843) A sentence of confinement if the convicted criminal fails to perform the conditions of probation. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1960–1988.]

consecutive sentences. (1844) Two or more sentences of jail time to be served in sequence. • For example, if a convicted criminal receives consecutive sentences of 20 years and 5 years, the total amount of jail time is 25 years. — Also termed cumulative sentences; accumulative sentences. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻545.]

creative sentence. See alternative sentence.

death sentence. (1811) A sentence that imposes the death penalty. See Model Penal Code § 210.6. — Also termed judgment of blood. See DEATH PENALTY. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1610, 1787.]

deferred sentence. (1915) A sentence that will not be carried out if the convicted criminal meets certain requirements, such as complying with conditions of probation. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻2051–2054.]

delayed sentence. (1906) A sentence that is not imposed immediately after conviction, thereby allowing the convicted criminal to satisfy the court (usu. by complying with certain restrictions or conditions during the delay period) that probation is preferable to a prison sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻2051–2054.]

determinate sentence. (1885) A sentence for a fixed length of time rather than for an unspecified duration. — Also termed definite sentence; definitive sentence; fixed sentence; flat sentence; straight sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1053, 1054.]

excessive sentence. (1879) A sentence that gives more punishment than is allowed by law. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻34, 1480, 1483.]

fixed sentence. 1. See determinate sentence. 2. See mandatory sentence.

flat sentence. See determinate sentence.

general sentence. (1891) An undivided, aggregate sentence in a multicount case; a sentence that does not specify the punishment imposed for each count. • General sentences are prohibited. — Also termed consolidated sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1060.]

indeterminate sentence. (1885) 1. A sentence of an unspecified duration, such as one for a term of 10 to 20 years. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1057–1059, 1125–1127.] 2. A maximum prison term that the parole board can reduce, through statutory authorization, after the inmate has served the minimum time required by law. — Also termed indefinite sentence. See INDETERMINATE SENTENCING.

intermittent sentence. (1964) A sentence consisting of periods of confinement interrupted by periods of freedom. — Also termed (when served on weekends) weekend sentence.

life sentence. (1878) A sentence that imprisons the convicted criminal for life — though in some jurisdictions the prisoner may become eligible for release on good behavior, rehabilitation, or the like. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1055, 1120.]

mandatory sentence. (1926) A sentence set by law with no discretion for the judge to individualize punishment. — Also termed mandatory penalty; mandatory punishment; fixed sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1053, 1054.]

maximum sentence. (1898) The highest level of punishment provided by law for a particular crime. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1059, 1127.]

minimum sentence. (1891) The least amount of time that a convicted criminal must serve in prison before becoming eligible for parole. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1057, 1126.]

multiple sentences. (1938) Concurrent or consecutive sentences, if a convicted criminal is found guilty of more than one offense. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻500.]

nominal sentence. (1852) A criminal sentence in name only; an exceedingly light sentence.

noncustodial sentence. (1971) A criminal sentence (such as probation) not requiring prison time.

presumptive sentence. (1978) An average sentence for a particular crime (esp. provided under sentencing guidelines) that can be raised or lowered based on the presence of mitigating or aggravating circumstances. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻34, 654.]

prior sentence. (1863) A sentence previously imposed on a criminal defendant for a different offense, whether by a guilty verdict, a guilty plea, or a nolo contendere. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 630–637.]

split sentence. (1927) A sentence in which part of the time is served in confinement — to expose the offender to the unpleasantness of prison — and the rest on probation. See shock probation under PROBATION. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 1934, 1936.]

straight sentence. See determinate sentence.

suspended sentence. (1919) A sentence postponed so that the convicted criminal is not required to serve time unless he or she commits another crime or violates some other court-imposed condition. • A suspended sentence, in effect, is a form of probation. — Also termed withheld sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 1804–1810.]

weekend sentence. See intermittent sentence.

sentence bargain. See PLEA BARGAIN.

sentence cap. Military law. A pretrial plea agreement in a court-martial proceeding by which a ceiling is placed on the maximum penalty that can be imposed. [Cases: Military Justice ↻ 990, 1326.]

sentenced to time served. (1959) A sentencing disposition whereby a criminal defendant is sentenced to the same jail time that the defendant is credited with serving while in custody awaiting trial. • The sentence results in the defendant's release from custody. Cf. BALANCE OF SENTENCE SUSPENDED. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 1156.]

sentence-package rule. (1996) Criminal procedure. The principle that a defendant can be resentenced on an aggregate sentence — that is, one arising from a conviction on multiple counts in an indictment — when the defendant successfully challenges part of the conviction, as by successfully challenging some but not all of the counts.

sentencing. The judicial determination of the penalty for a crime.

determinate sentencing. See mandatory sentencing.

discretionary sentencing. See indeterminate sentencing.

fixed sentencing. See mandatory sentencing.

indeterminate sentencing. Sentencing that is left up to the court, with few or very flexible guidelines. — Also termed discretionary sentencing. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 1057–1059, 1125–1127.]

mandatory sentencing. A statutorily specified penalty that automatically follows a conviction for the offense, often with a minimum mandatory term. — Also termed determinate sentencing; fixed sentencing. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 1053, 1054.]

presumptive sentencing. A statutory scheme that prescribes a sentence or range of sentences for an offense but allows the court some flexibility in atypical cases. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 34, 654.]

sentencing council. (1973) A panel of three or more judges who confer to determine a criminal sentence.

• Sentencing by a council occurs less frequently than sentencing by a single trial judge.

sentencing entrapment. See ENTRAPMENT.

sentencing guidelines. (1970) A set of standards for determining the punishment that a convicted criminal should receive, based on the nature of the crime and the offender's criminal history. • The federal government and several states have adopted sentencing guidelines in an effort to make judicial sentencing more consistent. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 650–998.]

sentencing phase. See PENALTY PHASE.

Sentencing Reform Act of 1984. A federal statute enacted to bring greater uniformity to punishments assessed for federal crimes by creating a committee of federal judges and other officials (the United States Sentencing Commission) responsible for producing sentencing guidelines to be used by the federal courts. 28 USCA § 994(a)(1).

Sentencing Table. A reference guide used by federal courts to calculate the appropriate punishment under the sentencing guidelines by taking into account the gravity of the offense and the convicted person's criminal history. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 666–871.]

sententia (sen-ten-shee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law.

1. Sense; meaning. 2. An opinion, esp. a legal opinion. 3. A judicial decision.

sententia voluntatis (sen-ten-shee-ə vol-ən-tay-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. The determination of the will.

SEP. abbr. See simplified employee pension plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

separability. Copyright. An element of various judicial tests used to determine whether a design in a functional article is a copyrightable work of applied art, or an uncopyrightable industrial design, the test being based on whether the beholder separates the work's artistic appearance from its useful function. • Some courts use a strict physical separability test, but most look at whether the work's two roles are conceptually separate. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻ 4.]

separability clause. See SEVERABILITY CLAUSE.

separable, adj. (14c) Capable of being separated or divided .

separable controversy. See CONTROVERSY.

separaliter (sep-ə-ray-lə-tər). [Latin] Hist. Separately. • This term was formerly used in an indictment to emphasize that multiple defendants were being charged with separate offenses, when it appeared from the general language of the indictment that the defendants were jointly charged.

separate, adj. (15c) (Of liability, cause of action, etc.) individual; distinct; particular; disconnected.

separate action. See ACTION (4).

separate and apart. See LIVING SEPARATE AND APART.

separate-but-equal doctrine. (1950) The now-defunct doctrine that African-Americans could be segregated if they were provided with equal opportunities and facilities in education, public transportation, and jobs. • This rule was established in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138 (1896), and overturned in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686 (1954). [Cases: Schools ⇨ 13(2).]

separate caucus. See CAUCUS.

separate count. See COUNT.

separate covenant. See several covenant under COVENANT (1).

separate estate. See ESTATE (1).

separate examination. (18c) 1. The private interrogation of a witness, apart from the other witnesses in the same case. 2. The interrogation of a wife outside the presence of her husband by a court clerk or notary for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other instrument. • This was done to ensure that the wife signed without being coerced to do so by her husband.

separate goodwill. See personal goodwill under GOODWILL.

separate maintenance. See MAINTENANCE.

separate offense. See OFFENSE (1).

separate property. (18c) 1. Property that a spouse owned before marriage or acquired during marriage by inheritance or by gift from a third party, and in some states property acquired during marriage but after the spouses have entered into a separation agreement and have begun living apart or after one spouse has commenced a divorce action. — Also termed individual property. Cf. COMMUNITY PROPERTY; marital property under PROPERTY. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 252.3(3).] 2. In some common-law states, property titled to one spouse or acquired by one spouse individually during marriage. 3. Property acquired during the marriage in exchange for separate property (in sense 1 or sense 2).

separate-property state. See COMMON-LAW STATE (2).

separate return. See TAX RETURN.

separate-sovereigns rule. (1995) Criminal procedure. The principle that a person may be tried twice for the same offense — despite the Double Jeopardy Clause — if the prosecutions are conducted by separate sovereigns, as by the federal government and a state government or by two different states. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ⇨ 183.]

separate-spheres doctrine. Hist. Family law. The common-law doctrine that wives were limited to control

separate support. See separate maintenance under MAINTENANCE.

separate trading of registered interest and principal of securities. A treasury security by which the owner receives either principal or interest, but usu. not both. — Abbr. STRIP.

separate trial. See TRIAL.

separatim (sep-ə-ray-tim). [Latin] Hist. Severally. • This term referred to the formation of several covenants in a deed.

separatio (sep-ə-ray-shee-oh), n. See FRUCTUS (1).

separation. (17c) 1. An arrangement whereby a husband and wife live apart from each other while remaining married, either by mutual consent (often in a written agreement) or by judicial decree; the act of carrying out such an arrangement. — Also termed separation from bed and board. See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 155; Husband and Wife ⇨ 277.] 2. The status of a husband and wife having begun such an arrangement, or the judgment or contract that brought about the arrangement. — Also termed (in both senses) legal separation; judicial separation. 3. Cessation of a contractual relationship, esp. in an employment situation. — separate, vb.

separation agreement. (1886) 1. An agreement between spouses in the process of a divorce or legal separation concerning alimony, maintenance, property division, child custody and support, and the like. — Also termed separation order (if approved or sanctioned judicially). See temporary order under ORDER. 2. DIVORCE AGREEMENT. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 277.]

separation from bed and board. 1. SEPARATION (1). 2. See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE.

separation of patrimony. Civil law. The act of providing creditors of a succession the right to collect against the class of estate property from which the creditors should be paid, by separating certain succession property from property rights belonging to the heirs. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨ 137.]

separation of powers. (1896) The division of governmental authority into three branches of government — legislative, executive, and judicial — each with specified duties on which neither of the other branches can encroach; a constitutional doctrine of checks and balances designed to protect the people against tyranny. Cf. DIVISION OF POWERS. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 2330–2626.]

"[T]he doctrine of the separation of powers was adopted by the convention of 1787 not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power. The purpose was not to avoid friction, but, by means of the inevitable friction incident to the distribution of the governmental powers among three departments, to save the people from autocracy." Justice Louis Brandeis (as quoted in Roscoe Pound, The Development of Constitutional Guarantees of Liberty 94 (1957)).

"Although in political theory much has been made of the vital importance of the separation of powers, it is extraordinarily difficult to define precisely each particular power. In an ideal state we might imagine a legislature which had supreme and exclusive power to lay down general rules for the future without reference to particular cases; courts whose sole function was to make binding orders to settle disputes between individuals which were brought before them by applying these rules to the facts which were found to exist; an administrative body which carried on the business of government by issuing particular orders or making decisions of policy within the narrow confines of rules of law that it could not change. The legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes the law." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 330 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

"Separation of powers means something quite different in the European context from what it has come to mean in the United States. . . . Separation of powers to an American evokes the familiar system of checks and balances among the three coordinate branches of government — legislative, executive, and judiciary — each with its independent constitutional basis. To a European, it is a more rigid doctrine and inseparable from the notion of legislative supremacy." Mary Ann Glendon et al., Comparative Legal Traditions 67 (1994).

separation of witnesses. (1819) The exclusion of witnesses (other than the plaintiff and defendant) from the courtroom to prevent them from hearing the testimony of others. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 665; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2012; Trial ⇨ 41.]

separation order. 1. See SEPARATION AGREEMENT. 2. See ORDER (2).

separation pay. See SEVERANCE PAY.

separatio tori (sep-ə-ray-shee-oh tor-i). [Law Latin] Hist. A separation of the marriage bed. See A MENSA ET THORO.

separator, n. Oil & gas. Equipment used at a well site to separate oil, water, and gas produced in solution with oil. • Basic separators simply heat oil to speed the natural separation process. More complex separators may use chemicals.

separatum tenementum (sep-ə-ray-təm ten-ə-men-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. A separate tenement.

SEP-IRA. See simplified employee pension plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

sequatur sub suo periculo (si-kway-tər səb s[y]oo-oh pə-rik-[y]ə-loh), n. [Law Latin "let him follow at his peril"] Hist. A writ available when a sheriff returned nihil to several summonses; specif., a writ issued after the sheriff returned nihil to a warrant ad warrantizandum and following an alias and a pluries writ. See SICUT ALIAS.

sequela (si-kwee-lə), n. [Latin "that which follows"] Hist. Suit; process, as in sequela curiae ("a suit of court") and sequela causae ("the process of a cause"). Pl. sequelae (si-kwee-lee).

sequela villanorum (si-kwee-lə vil-ə-nor-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. The family and appurtenances to a villein's goods, which were at the lord's disposal.

sequence listing. Patents. A description of the nucleotide or amino-acid chain in a biotechnological invention.

sequential journal. See JOURNAL OF NOTARIAL ACTS.

sequential marriage. See BIGAMY (2).

sequester (si-kwes-tər), n. (14c) 1. An across-the-board cut in government spending. [Cases: States ⇨ 121.] 2. A person with whom litigants deposit property being contested until the case has concluded; a sequestrator.

sequester, vb. (15c) 1. To seize (property) by a writ of sequestration. [Cases: Sequestration ⇨ 15.] 2. To segregate or isolate (a jury or witness) during trial. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 665, 854; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2012; Trial ⇨ 41, 303.] 3. Eccles. law. To excommunicate. See EXCOMMUNICATION. — Also (erroneously) termed sequestrate. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 665, 854; Trial ⇨ 41, 303.]

sequestered account. See ACCOUNT.

sequesterer. See SEQUESTRATOR.

sequestrari facias (see-kwes-trair-i fay-shee-əs), n. [Law Latin "you are to cause to be sequestered"] Hist. Eccles. law. A process to enforce a judgment against a clergyman in a benefice, by which the bishop was ordered to sequester a church's rents, tithes, or other profits until the debt was paid.

sequestrate, vb. See SEQUESTER.

sequestratio (see-kwes-tray-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. The depositing of an object in dispute with a holder, the sequester, either voluntarily or by court order. Pl. sequestrationes (see-kwes-tray-shee-oh-nee-z).

sequestration (see-kwes-tray-shan), n. (16c) 1. The process by which property is removed from the possessor pending the outcome of a dispute in which two or more parties contend for it. Cf. ATTACHMENT (1); GARNISHMENT. [Cases: Sequestration ⇨ 1.]

conventional sequestration. The parties' voluntary deposit of the property at issue in a lawsuit.

judicial sequestration. The court-ordered deposit of the property at issue in a lawsuit. [Cases: Sequestration ⇨ 1.]

2. The setting apart of a decedent's personal property when no one has been willing to act as a personal representative for the estate. 3. The process by which a renounced interest is subjected to judicial management and is distributed as the testator would have wished if he or she had known about the renunciation. 4. A judicial writ commanding the sheriff or other officer to seize the goods of a person named in the writ. • This writ is sometimes issued against a civil defendant who has defaulted or has acted in contempt of court. [Cases: Sequestration ⇨ 13.] 5. The court-ordered seizure of a bankrupt's estate for the benefit of creditors. 6. Int'l law. The seizure by a belligerent power of enemy assets. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨ 12.] 7. The freezing of a government agency's funds; SEQUESTRATION (1). [Cases: States ⇨ 121.] 8. Custodial isolation of a trial jury to prevent tampering and exposure to publicity, or of witnesses to prevent them from hearing the testimony of others. — Also termed (in sense 8) jury sequestration. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2012; Trial ⇨ 41, 303.]

sequestration for rent. Scots law. A landlord's remedy to recover up to one year's unpaid rent by seizing and selling, under court order, the tenant's personal property. Cf. DISTRESS (2).

sequestrator (see kwes-tray-tər). (15c) 1. An officer appointed to execute a writ of sequestration.

"[A] sequestrator was an officer of the Court of Chancery acting under the order of that court in seizing property. The law courts appear, however, to have held that the holder of the property could resist seizure by the officer of the Court of Chancery, and indeed kill that officer if necessary to prevent the seizure. And if he killed the officer, he would not be held guilty of murder because the Court of Chancery was an illegal tribunal or its decrees were illegal, and could not justify an officer in seizing the property mentioned in the order." Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 306 (2d ed. 1952).

2. A person who holds property in sequestration. — Also termed sequesterer. [Cases: Sequestration ⇨ 14.]

sequestro habendo (si-kwes-troh hæ-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ from the sovereign to the bishop ordering the discharge of the sequestration of a benefice's profits.

serendipity doctrine. (1989) Criminal procedure. The principle that all evidence discovered during a lawful search is eligible to be admitted into evidence at trial. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 394.1(1).]

serf. Hist. A person in a condition of feudal servitude, bound to labor at the will of a lord; a villein. • Serfs differed from slaves in that they were bound to the native soil rather than being the absolute property of a master.

"As the categories became indistinct, the more abject varieties of slavery disappeared and in the twelfth century the word 'villein' became the general term for unfree peasants. 'Serf' did not become a legal term of art, and in so far as it remained in use it did not connote a status lower than that of villein. The merger was to the detriment of the villani, but it ensured that full slavery was not received as part of the common law." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 532 (3d ed. 1990).

sergeant. 1. Hist. A person who is not a knight but holds lands by tenure of military service. 2. Hist. A municipal officer performing duties for the Crown. 3. Hist. A bailiff. 4. SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. 5. A noncommissioned officer in the armed forces ranking a grade above a corporal. 6. An officer in the police force ranking below a captain or lieutenant. — Also spelled serjeant. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 180(2).]

sergeant-at-arms. 1. Hist. An armed officer attending a sovereign. 2. An officer the Crown assigns to attend a session of Parliament. 3. A legislative officer charged with maintaining order and serving notices and process on behalf of the legislative body and its committees. [Cases: States ⇨ 32.] 4. Parliamentary law. An officer charged with helping keep order in a meeting under the chair's direction. — Also spelled (in senses 1, 2, & 4) serjeant-at-arms. — Also termed (in sense 4) warden; warrant officer.

sergeantry. See SERJEANTY.

Sergeant Schultz defense. Slang. An assertion by a criminal or civil defendant who claims that he or she was not an active participant in an alleged scheme or conspiracy, and that he or she knew nothing, saw nothing, and heard nothing. • This defense is named after a character from the television series Hogan's Heroes, in which Sergeant Schultz, a German guard in charge of prisoners of war during World War II, would avoid responsibility for the prisoners' schemes by proclaiming that he saw nothing and knew nothing. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 31.5.] sergeanty. See SERJEANTY.

serial bond. See BOND (3).

serial consideration. See consideration seriatim under CONSIDERATION (2).

serial murder. See MURDER.

serial note. See installment note under NOTE (1).

serial number. 1. A number assigned to a specific thing, esp. a product, to identify it from other things of the same kind. • While serial numbers are usually assigned in numerical order, they may also be random. 2. Patents & Trademarks. An identifying number assigned to a completed patent or trademark application. • The serial number is assigned when the application is received or completed. See APPLICATION NUMBER.

serial polygamy. See POLYGAMY (2).

serial right. The right of publication; esp., a right reserved in a publishing contract giving the author or publisher the right to publish the manuscript in installments (as in a magazine) before or after the publication of the book. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 38.]

serial violation. (1989) Civil-rights law. The practice by an employer of committing a series of discriminatory acts against an employee, all of which arise out of the same discriminatory intent or animus. • Such a series of discriminatory acts will usu. be considered a continuing violation. For a claim on the violation to be timely, at least one of the discriminatory acts must have taken place within the time permitted to assert the claim (e.g., 300 days for a Title VII claim). Cf. SYSTEMATIC VIOLATION. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1505(7).]

seriatim (seer-ee-ay-tim), adj. Occurring in a series.

seriatim, adv. [Latin] One after another; in a series; successively <the court disposed of the issues seriatim>. See consideration seriatim under CONSIDERATION. — Also termed seriaty (seer-ee-ət-lee).

seriatim opinions. See OPINION (1).

series code. Patents & Trademarks. A numerical designation assigned to any of a group of applications for patent or trademark registration filed in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • The series code is part of an application number and is followed by a slash. For example, if the application number is 09/445,323, then 09 is the series code, and the application is the 445,323rd application in that batch. For ordinary patent applications, series codes are assigned for a group of applications filed during a particular period. Nonprovisional patent applications are assigned series codes from 01 to 10, depending on the period during which the application was filed. The series code for design applications is 29, for provisional applications 60, for ex parte reexamination proceedings 90, and for inter partes reexamination proceedings 95. For trademark applications, the series code usu. begins with numbers between 70 and 75. — Also termed batch number.

series rerum judicatarum (seer-ə-eez or seer-eez reer-əm joo-di-kə-tor-əm). [Law Latin] Scots law. A succession of decisions deciding a particular principle, as a result of which a precedent has been established.

serious, adj. 1. (Of conduct, opinions, etc.) weighty; important <serious violation of rules>. 2. (Of an injury, illness, accident, etc.) dangerous; potentially resulting in death or other severe consequences <serious bodily harm>.

serious and willful misconduct. Workers' compensation. An intentional act performed with the knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injury or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ⇨774; 2093.]

serious bodily harm. See serious bodily injury under INJURY.

serious bodily injury. See INJURY.

serious crime. 1. See serious offense under OFFENSE (1). 2. See FELONY (1).

serious felony. See FELONY.

serious health condition. Under the Family and Medical Leave Act, an illness, injury, or physical or mental state that involves in-patient care or continuing treatment by a healthcare provider for several days. • Excluded from the definition are cosmetic treatments and minor illnesses that are not accompanied by medical complications. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨351(2).]

serious illness. Insurance. A disorder that permanently or materially impairs, or is likely to permanently or materially impair, the health of the insured or an insurance applicant. [Cases: Insurance ⇨3003(9).]

seriously harmful behavior. See HARMFUL BEHAVIOR.

serious misdemeanor. See MISDEMEANOR.

serious offense. See OFFENSE (1).

serjeant. 1. See SERGEANT. 2. See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

serjeant-at-arms. See SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

serjeant-at-law. Hist. English law. A barrister of superior grade; one who had achieved the highest degree of the legal profession, having (until 1846) the exclusive privilege of practicing in the Court of Common Pleas. • Every judge of the common-law courts was required to be a serjeant-at-law until the Judicature Act of 1873. The rank was gradually superseded by that of Queen's Counsel. — Often shortened to serjeant. — Also termed serjeant at the law; serjeant of the law; serjeant of the coif; serviens narrator.

premier serjeant. The serjeant given the primary right of preaudience by royal letters patent. — Also termed prime serjeant. See PREAUDIENCE.

Serjeants' Inn. Hist. A building on Chancery Lane, London, that housed the Order of Serjeants-at-Law. • The building was sold and demolished in 1877. Until 1416, the Inn was called Faryndon's Inn or Faryndon Inn, after Robert Faryndon, who held the lease. Two other inns in the 15th and 16th centuries were also called Serjeants' Inn, one in Holborn (sometimes called Scroops's Inn) and one in Fleet Street.

serjeanty (sahr-jən-tee). Hist. A feudal lay tenure requiring some form of personal service to the king. • The required service was not necessarily military. Many household officers of the Crown, even those as humble as bakers and cooks, held lands in serjeanty. — Also spelled sergeanty. — Also termed sergeantry.

grand serjeanty. Hist. Serjeanty requiring the tenant to perform a service relating to the country's defense. • The required service could be as great as fielding an army or as small as providing a fully equipped knight. Sometimes the service was ceremonial or honorary, such as carrying the king's banner or serving as an officer at the coronation.

petit serjeanty (pet-ee). Hist. Serjeanty requiring only a minor service of small value, usu. with military symbolism. • Examples include presenting an arrow or an unstrung bow to the king.

serment (sər-mənt). Hist. An oath.

serological test (seer-ə-loj-ə-kəl). (1931) A blood examination to detect the presence of antibodies and antigens, as well as other characteristics, esp. as indicators of disease. • Many states require serological tests to determine the presence of venereal disease in a couple applying for a marriage license. See BLOOD TEST.

serpentine vote. See VOTE (4).

serva aliena. See SERVUS.

servage (sər-vij). Hist. A feudal service that a serf was required to perform for the lord or else pay the equivalent value in kind or money.

servant. (13c) A person who is employed by another to do work under the control and direction of the employer. • A servant, such as a full-time employee, provides personal services that are integral to an employer's business, so a servant must submit to the employer's control of the servant's time and behavior. See EMPLOYEE. Cf. MASTER (1). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 23.]

indentured servant. Hist. A servant who contracted to work without wages for a fixed period in exchange for some benefit, such as learning a trade or cancellation of a debt or paid passage to another country, and the promise of freedom when the contract period expired. • Indentured servitude could be voluntary or involuntary. A contract usu. lasted from four to ten years, but the servant could terminate the contract sooner by paying for the unexpired time. Convicts transported to the colonies were often required to serve as indentured servants as part of their sentences.

serve, vb. (15c) 1. To make legal delivery of (a notice or process) . 2. To present (a person) with a notice or process as required by law <the defendant was served with process>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 411; Process ⇨ 48.]

service, n. (15c) 1. The formal delivery of a writ, summons, or other legal process <after three attempts, service still had not been accomplished>. — Also termed service of process. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 411–518; Process ⇨ 48–150.] 2. The formal delivery of some other legal notice, such as a pleading <be sure that a certificate of service is attached to the motion>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 665.]

constructive service. (1808) 1. See substituted service. 2. Service accomplished by a method or circumstance that does not give actual notice.

service by publication. (1826) The service of process on an absent or nonresident defendant by publishing a notice in a newspaper or other public medium. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 414; Process ⇨ 84–111.]

sewer service. Slang. The fraudulent service of process on a debtor by a creditor seeking to obtain a default judgment.

substituted service. (1840) Any method of service allowed by law in place of personal service, such as service by mail. — Also termed constructive service. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 414; Process ⇨ 69–111.]

3. The act of doing something useful for a person or company, usu. for a fee <your services were no longer required>.

personal service. See PERSONAL SERVICE (2).

4. A person or company whose business is to do useful things for others .

civil service. See CIVIL SERVICE.

salvage service. See SALVAGE SERVICE.

5. An intangible commodity in the form of human effort, such as labor, skill, or advice <contract for services>. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 190.]

service, vb. (1927) To provide service for; specif., to make interest payments on (a debt) <service the deficit>.

service charge. 1. A charge assessed for performing a service, such as the charge assessed by a bank against the expenses of maintaining or servicing a customer's checking account. 2. The sum of (1) all charges payable by the buyer and imposed by the seller as an incident to the extension of credit and (2) charges incurred for investigating the collateral or creditworthiness of the buyer or for commissions for obtaining the credit. UCCC § 2.109. — Also termed (in sense 2) credit service charge. [Cases: Consumer Credit ⇨ 13.]

service establishment. Under the Fair Labor Standards Act, an establishment that, although having the characteristics of a retail store, primarily furnishes services to the public, such as a barber shop, laundry, or automobile-repair shop.

service life. The period of an asset's expected usefulness. • It may or may not coincide with the asset's depreciable life for income-tax purposes.

servicemark. (1945) Trademarks. A name, phrase, or other device used to identify and distinguish the services of a certain provider. • Servicemarks identify and afford protection to intangible things such as services, as distinguished from the protection already provided for marks affixed to tangible things such as goods and products. — Often shortened to mark. — Also spelled service mark; service-mark. Cf. TRADEMARK (1); registered trademark under TRADEMARK. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1024.]

servicemark application. See TRADEMARK APPLICATION.

service-occupation tax. See TAX.

service of process. See SERVICE (1).

serviens narrator (sər-vee-enz nə-ray-tər). See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

servient (sər-vee-ənt), adj. (17c) (Of an estate) subject to a servitude or easement. See servient estate under ESTATE (4). [Cases: Easements ⇨ 1.]

servient estate. See ESTATE (4).

servient property. See servient estate under ESTATE (4).

servient tenant. See TENANT.

servient tenement. See servient estate under ESTATE (4).

servitia solita et consueta (sər-vish-ee-ə sol-ə-tə kən-swē-tə). [Law Latin “services used and wont”] Scots law. A common return required by certain charters, usu. implying military service, from a vassal to a lord.

servitii praestatio (sər-vish-ee-ɪ pri-stay-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. The performance of services.

servitiis acquietandis (sər-vish-ee-is ə-kwi-ə-tan-dis), n. [Law Latin “for being quit of service”] Hist. A writ exempting a person from performing certain services, either because they are not due or because they are due someone other than the distrainer.

servitium (sər-vish-ee-əm), n. [Latin “service”] Hist. The duty of service; esp., a tenant’s duty of performance and obedience to the lord.

servitium feudale et praediale (sər-vish-ee-əm fee-ə-day-lee [or fyoo-day-lee] et pree-dee-ay-lee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A personal service due only by reason of lands held in fee.

servitium forinsecum (sər-vish-ee-əm fə-rin-si-kəm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A service due the king rather than a lord.

servitium intrinsecum (sər-vish-ee-əm in-trin-si-kəm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The ordinary service due from a tenant to the chief lord.

servitium liberum (sər-vish-ee-əm lib-ər-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The service by a free tenant (not a vassal) to the lord, as by attending the lord’s court or accompanying the lord into military service. — Also termed liberum servitium; servitium liberum armorum.

servitium regale (sər-vish-ee-əm ri-gay-lee). [Latin “royal service”] Hist. The right of a lord of a royal manor to settle disputes, make assessments, mint money, and the like.

servitium scuti (sər-vish-ee-əm sk[y]oo-ti). [Latin “service of the shield”] Hist. Knight-service.

servitium socae (sər-vish-ee-əm soh-see). [Latin “service of the plow”] Hist. Socage.

servitor of bills (sər-vi-tər). Hist. A messenger of the marshal of the King’s Bench, sent out to summon people to court. — Also termed tip-stave.

servitude. (16c) 1. An encumbrance consisting in a right to the limited use of a piece of land or other immovable property without the possession of it; a charge or burden on an estate for another’s benefit <the easement by necessity is an equitable servitude>. • Servitudes include easements, irrevocable licenses, profits, and real covenants. See EASEMENT; LICENSE; PROFIT (2); covenant running with the land under COVENANT (4). [Cases: Covenants ↷ 49, 53; Easements ↷ 1.] 2. Roman & civil law. The right exercised by a dominant tenement over a servient tenement, either adjoining or neighboring. • This right was perpetual except for personal servitudes; the land, rather than its owner, enjoyed the right. Although a servitude could not be possessed because it was incorporeal, it could be protected by interdict. Generally, a servitude had to be exercised civilliter, with as little inconvenience as possible. There was never a closed list of what constituted a servitude; for example, Justinian classed personal rights in re aliena as personal servitude. See SERVITUS (2). acquired servitude. (1971) A servitude requiring a special mode of acquisition before it comes into existence.

additional servitude. (18c) A servitude imposed on land taken under an eminent-domain proceeding for a different type of servitude, as when a highway is constructed on land condemned for a public sidewalk. • A landowner whose land is burdened by an additional servitude is entitled to further compensation.

affirmative servitude. Civil law. See positive servitude.

apparent servitude. (1834) Civil law. A servitude appurtenant that is manifested by exterior signs or constructions, such as a roadway. Cf. nonapparent servitude.

conservation servitude. See conservation easement under EASEMENT.

continuous servitude. Louisiana law. See continuous easement under EASEMENT. La. Civ. Code art. 646.

conventional servitude. Civil law. A servitude established by agreement or through acquisitive prescription. [Cases: Easements ↷ 5, 14.]

discontinuous servitude. See discontinuous easement under EASEMENT.

equitable servitude. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).

landed servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

legal servitude. (18c) Civil law. A limitation that the law imposes on the use of an estate for the benefit of the general public or of a particular person or persons. • Examples of legal servitudes are restrictions on certain uses of the shores of navigable rivers, and the obligation of a landowner to provide a passage to an enclosed estate.

mineral servitude. (1931) Louisiana law. A servitude granting the right to enter another’s property to explore for and extract minerals; specif., under the Louisiana Mineral Code, a charge on land in favor of a person or another tract of land, creating a limited right to use the land to explore for and produce minerals. • The servitude is generally equivalent to the severed mineral interest in a common-law state. Mines and Minerals ↷ 55(6), 62.1, 73.1(6).]

natural servitude. (18c) 1. A servitude naturally appurtenant to land, requiring no special mode of acquisition. • An example is the right of land, unencumbered by buildings, to the support of the adjoining land. 2. Civil law. A servitude imposed by law because of the natural situation of the estates. • An example of a natural servitude is a lower estate that is bound to receive waters flowing naturally from a higher estate.

navigation servitude. 1. An easement allowing the federal government to regulate commerce on navigable water without having to pay compensation for interfering with private ownership rights. See NAVIGABLE WATER. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷2.]

"The navigation servitude, because of its link to navigable waters and the protection of navigation, is often confused with the public trust doctrine. The navigation servitude, however, is a paramount federal servitude on navigable waters based on the commerce power rather than on ownership or trust responsibilities." Donna R. Christie, Coastal and Ocean Management Law in a Nutshell 34 (1994).

2. An easement, based on the state police power or public-trust doctrine, that allows a state to regulate commerce on navigable water and provide limited compensation for interference with private ownership rights. • A state servitude is inferior to the federal servitude. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷2.]

negative servitude. Civil law. A servitude appurtenant allowing a dominant landowner to prohibit the servient landowner from exercising a right. • For example, a negative servitude, such as jus ne luminibus officiatur, prevents a landowner from building in a way that blocks light from reaching another person's house.

nonapparent servitude. Civil law. A servitude appurtenant that is not obvious because there are no exterior signs of its existence. • An example is a prohibition against building above a certain height. Cf. apparent servitude.

personal servitude. (17c) 1. A servitude granting a specific person certain rights in property. 2. Roman law. A specific person's right over the property of another, regardless of who the owner might be. • A personal servitude lasted for the person's lifetime. 3. Louisiana law. A servitude that benefits a person or an immovable. La. Civ. Code art. 534. [Cases: Easements ↷1, 3.]

positive servitude. Civil law. A real servitude allowing a person to lawfully do something on the servient landowner's property, such as entering the property. — Also termed affirmative servitude.

predial servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

private servitude. (1922) A servitude vested in a particular person. • Examples include a landowner's personal right-of-way over an adjoining piece of land or a right granted to one person to fish in another's lake.

public servitude. (1805) A servitude vested in the public at large or in some class of indeterminate individuals. • Examples include the right of the public to use a highway over privately owned land and the right to navigate a river the bed of which is privately owned.

real servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

rural servitude. Roman law. A servitude chiefly affecting agricultural land or land in the country. • The four oldest types, iter, actus, via, and aqueductus were all res mancipi despite being incorporeal. Most rural servitudes were easements, but some were profits. — Also termed rustic servitude; praedium rusticum; jus rusticorum praediorum.

servitude appurtenant. (1893) A servitude that is not merely an encumbrance of one piece of land but is accessory to another piece; the right of using one piece of land for the benefit of another, such as the right of support for a building. — Also termed real servitude; predial (or praedial) servitude; landed servitude. La. Civ. Code art. 646. [Cases: Easements ↷3.]

servitude in gross. (1884) A servitude that is not accessory to any dominant estate for whose benefit it exists but is merely an encumbrance on a given piece of land. [Cases: Easements ↷3.]

servitude of drip. Louisiana law. A servitude appurtenant that binds the servient estate's owner to maintain a roof so that rainwater does not drip or drain onto the dominant estate. La. Civ. Code art. 664. — Also termed servitude of drip and drain. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↷121.]

servitude of view. Louisiana law. The dominant estate owner's right to enjoy a view through the servient estate and to prevent its obstruction. La. Civ. Code art. 701. [Cases: Adjoining Landowners ↷10; Easements ↷11, 19.]

urban servitude. (1831) 1. A servitude appertaining to the building and construction of houses in a city, such as the right to light and air. [Cases: Adjoining Landowners ↷10; Easements ↷11, 19.] 2. Roman law. A servitude that primarily affects buildings or urban land. • With the exception of oneris ferendi, urban servitudes were passive. They could be affected by planning legislation. — Also termed (in sense 2) praedium urbanum; jus urbanorum praediorum.

3. The condition of being a servant or slave <under the 15th Amendment, an American citizen's right to vote cannot be denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude>. 4. The condition of a prisoner who has been sentenced to forced labor <penal servitude>.

involuntary servitude. (18c) The condition of one forced to labor — for pay or not — for another by coercion or imprisonment. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷1101.]

servitus (sər-vi-təs), n. [Latin fr. servire "to serve"] Roman law. 1. Slavery; bondage. 2. A servitude, usu. a servitude appurtenant as opposed to a personal servitude such as usufruct; an easement. See rural servitude and urban servitude under SERVITUDE (2). Pl. servitutes.

servitus actus (sər-vi-təs ak-təs). [Latin "the servitude of driving cattle"] Roman law. A type of right-of-way; a rural servitude entitling one to walk, ride, or drive animals over another's property.

servitus altius non tollendi (sər-vi-təs al-shee-əs non tə-len-dī). [Latin “the servitude of not building higher”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing a person to prevent a neighbor from building a taller house.

servitus aquae ducendae (sər-vi-təs ak-wee d[y]oo-sen-dee). [Latin “the servitude of leading water”] Roman law. A rural servitude allowing one to bring water to property through another’s land, as by a canal. — Also termed aquaeductus.

servitus aquae educendae (sər-vi-təs ak-wee ee-d[y]oo-sen-dee). [Latin “the servitude of leading off water”] Roman law. An urban servitude entitling a person to discharge water onto another’s land.

servitus aquae hauriendae (sər-vi-təs haw-ree-en-dee). [Latin “the servitude of drawing water”] Roman law. See AQUAEHAUSTUS.

servitus aquaehaustus (sər-vi-təs ak-wee haws-təs). [Latin “the servitude of drawing water”] Roman law. See AQUAEHAUSTUS.

servitus fluminis (sər-vi-təs floo-mə-nəs). [Latin “the servitude of a stream of rainwater”] Roman law. An urban servitude consisting in the right to divert rainwater as opposed to drip (stillicidium) onto another’s land.

servitus fumi immittendi (sər-vi-təs fyoo-mī im-ə-ten-dī). [Latin “the servitude of discharging smoke”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing a person’s chimney smoke to be directed over a neighbor’s property.

servitus itineris (sər-vi-təs i-tin-ər-is). [Latin “the servitude of way”] See ITER.

servitus luminum (sər-vi-təs loo-mə-nəm). [Latin “the servitude of lights”] Roman law. An urban servitude entitling one to receive light from a neighbor’s land, as by building windows in a common wall to light a room.

servitus ne luminibus officiatur (sər-vi-təs nee loo-min-ə-bəs ə-fish-ee-ay-tər). [Latin “the servitude not to hinder light”] Roman law. An urban servitude preventing someone’s light from being obstructed by a neighbor’s building.

servitus ne prospectui officiatur (sər-vi-təs nee prə-spek-too-i ə-fish-ee-ay-tər). [Latin “the servitude not to intercept one’s prospect”] Roman law. An urban servitude entitling someone to an unobstructed view.

servitus oneris ferendi (sər-vi-təs on-ə-ris fə-ren-dī). [Latin “the servitude of bearing weight”] Roman law. The urban servitude allowing a person’s building to rest on a neighbor’s building, wall, or pillar. See ONERIS FERENDI; JUS ONERIS FERENDI.

servitus pascendi (sər-vi-təs pa-sen-dī). [Latin “the servitude of pasturing”] Roman law. A rural servitude allowing one to pasture cattle on another’s land. — Also termed jus pascendi.

servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsum (sər-vi-təs pek-ə-ris ad ak-wəm ad-pəl-səm). [Latin “the servitude to drive cattle to water”] Roman law. A rural servitude allowing one to drive cattle to water across another’s land.

servitus praedii rustici (sər-vi-təs pree-dee-i rəs-ti-sī). [Latin “the servitude of a country estate”] Roman law. A rural servitude; a servitude attached to land, as in servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsus. Cf. rural servitude under SERVITUDE (2).

servitus praedii urbani (sər-vi-təs pree-dee-i ər-bay-nī). [Latin “the servitude of an urban estate”] Roman law. An urban servitude; a servitude attached to a building, as in servitus oneris ferendi. See urban servitude under SERVITUDE (2).

servitus praediorum (sər-vi-təs pree-dee-or-əm). [Latin “praedial servitude”] Roman law. A burden on one estate for the benefit of another. See servitude appurtenant under SERVITUDE (2).

servitus projiciendi (sər-vi-təs prə-jish-ee-en-dī). [Latin “the servitude of projecting”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing a projection from one’s building into the open space over a neighbor’s property.

servitus stillicidii (sər-vi-təs stil-ə-sid-ee-i). [Latin “the servitude of drip”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing water to drip from one’s house onto a neighbor’s house or ground. Cf. AQUAE IMMITTENDAE; DRIP RIGHTS.

servitus tigni immittendi (sər-vi-təs tig-nī im-ə-ten-dī). [Latin “the servitude of letting in a beam”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing one to insert beams into a neighbor’s wall.

servitus viae (sər-vi-təs vi-ee). [Latin “the servitude of road way”] Roman law. A rural servitude allowing a right-of-way over another’s land. See VIA (2).

servus (sər-vəs), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A slave; a human being who was property, and could be bought, sold, pledged, and testated. ● A Roman slave who was formally freed became a Roman citizen. Cf. INGENUUS; LATINI JUNIANI; LIBERTINII. 2. Hist. A bondman; a servant.

sess, n. See CESS.

sessio (sesh-ee-oh), n. [Latin “a sitting”] Hist. A session; a sitting, as in sessio parliamenti (“the sitting of Parliament”).

session. (15c) 1. Parliamentary law. A meeting or series of related meetings throughout which a court, legislature, or other deliberative assembly conducts business in a continuing sequence <the court’s spring session>. — Also termed (for a court) sitting. See TERM (5).

“Parliament have three modes of separation, to wit, by adjournment, by prorogation, or dissolution by the king, or by the efflux of the term for which they were elected. Prorogation or dissolution constitutes there what is called a session, provided some act has passed. In this case all matters depending before them are discontinued, and at their next meeting are to be taken up de novo, if taken up at all. Adjournment, which is by themselves, is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, or for a fortnight, a month, &c. ad libitum. All matters depending remain in statu quo, and when they meet again, be the term ever so distant, are resumed without any fresh commencement, at the point at which they were left. Their whole session is considered in law but as one day, and has relation to the first day thereof." Thomas Jefferson, A Manual of Parliamentary Practice 127–28 (1801) (citations omitted).

biennial session. (1854) A legislative session held every two years. • Most state legislatures have biennial sessions, usu. held in odd-numbered years. [Cases: States ↷32.]

closed session. (1956) 1. See executive session. 2. A session to which parties not directly involved are not admitted. 3. Military law. A period during a court-martial when the members (or the judge, if trial is before a military judge) deliberate alone. — Also termed closed court. [Cases: Military Justice ↷122, 1270.]

executive session. A meeting, usu. held in secret, that only the members and invited nonmembers may attend. • The term originated in the United States Senate, which until 1929 sat behind closed doors when it advised the President about executive business such as appointments and treaties. — Also termed closed session; secret session. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↷124; Municipal Corporations ↷92.]

"Virtually all open meeting statutes expressly authorize the use of executive sessions, typically specifying the particular circumstances in which executive sessions are permitted. When the specific circumstances are specified, generally no other exceptions are permitted . . . Use of the executive session to discuss matters not properly hidden from the public is a clear violation of the open meeting law. Many states expressly or implicitly forbid use of the executive session as a subterfuge to defeat the purposes of the open meeting law." Ann Taylor Schwing, Open Meeting Laws § 7.1, at 357, 359 (2d ed. 2000).

extraordinary session. See special session.

extra session. See special session.

joint session. (1853) The combined meeting of two legislative bodies (such as the House of Representatives and the Senate) to pursue a common agenda. [Cases: United States ↷18.]

"When the two houses meet in a joint session, they, in effect, merge into one house where the quorum is a majority of the members of both houses, where the votes of members of each house have equal weight, and where special rules can be adopted to govern joint sessions or they can be governed by the parliamentary common law." National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 782, at 573 (2000).

lame-duck session. (1924) A post-election legislative session in which some of the participants are voting during their last days as elected officials. See LAME DUCK. [Cases: States ↷32.]

open session. (1810) 1. A session to which parties not directly involved are admitted. — Also termed public session. 2. Military law. The period during a court-martial in which all participants are in the courtroom. • Generally, the public may attend a court-martial's open session. [Cases: Military Justice ↷1210.1, 1222.]

plenary session. (1936) A meeting of all the members of a deliberative assembly, not just a committee.

pro forma session. A legislative session held not to conduct business but only to satisfy a constitutional provision that neither house may adjourn for longer than a certain time (usu. three days) without the other house's consent.

public session. See open session (1).

quarter session. 1. English law. The meetings held four times a year by a county's justices of the peace to transact business, including trying certain criminal and civil matters as specified by statute. • The quarter sessions were abolished in 1971 and replaced by the Crown Court system. 2. Scots law. A meeting formerly held four times a year by the justices to review criminal sentences. — Abbr. Q.S.

regular session. (18c) A session that takes place at fixed intervals or specified times.

secret session. See executive session.

special session. (17c) A legislative session, usu. called by the executive, that meets outside its regular term to consider a specific issue or to reduce backlog. — Also termed extra session; extraordinary session. [Cases: States ↷32.]

2. The period within any given day during which such a body is assembled and performing its duties <court is in session>. • The terms "meeting" and "session" have opposite but sometimes interchangeable meanings. An organization's annual convention may consist of several consecutive meetings that it calls "sessions," such as a morning session and an afternoon session, or a Friday session and a Saturday session, which are technically meetings rather than sessions. Likewise, the organization may call its convention an "annual meeting," which technically comprises several meetings that constitute a single session. Cf. MEETING. 3. A trading day in a stock market.

triple witching session. A stock-market session on the third Friday in March, June, September, and December during which stock options, index options and futures contracts all expire. • Stock-market volatility and share volume are often high on these days session laws. (18c) 1. A body of statutes enacted by a legislature during a particular annual or biennial session.

2. The softbound booklets containing these statutes. — Also termed acts of assembly; blue books; sheet acts.

sessions. See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

set-aside, n. (1943) Something (such as a percentage of funds) that is reserved or put aside for a specific purpose.

set aside, vb. (18c) (Of a court) to annul or vacate (a judgment, order, etc.) <the judge refused to set aside the default judgment>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷2441, 2641; Judgment ↷135, 336.]

setback, n. (1916) Real estate. The minimum amount of space required between a lot line and a building line . • Typically contained in zoning ordinances or deed restrictions, setbacks are designed to ensure that enough light and ventilation reach the property and to keep buildings from being erected too close to property lines. See BUSINESS LINE. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↻64, 252.]

set down, vb. (18c) To schedule (a case) for trial or hearing, usu. by making a docket entry.

se te fecerit securum (see tee fes-ər-it si-kyoor-əm). [Latin] See SI FECERIT TE SECURUM.

set forth. See SET OUT.

seti (set-ee). Mining law. A lease.

set of exchange. Commercial law. A single bill of lading drawn in a set of parts, each of which is valid only if the goods have not been delivered against any other part. • Bills may be drawn in duplicate or triplicate, the first part being “first of exchange,” the second part being “second of exchange,” and so on. When one part has been paid, the other parts become void.

setoff, n. (18c) 1. A defendant’s counterdemand against the plaintiff, arising out of a transaction independent of the plaintiff’s claim. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻772; Set-off and Counterclaim ↻8.] 2. A debtor’s right to reduce the amount of a debt by any sum the creditor owes the debtor; the counterbalancing sum owed by the creditor. — Also written set-off. — Also termed (in civil law) compensation; stoppage. See COUNTERCLAIM; OFFSET. Cf. RECOURPMENT (3). [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻134; Set-off and Counterclaim ↻8.] 3. The balancing of mutual liabilities with respect to a pledge relationship. — set off, vb.

“Before considering the counter-claim, a brief reference to ‘the set-off’ as known in former practice is necessary. By the common law, the setting off of one demand against another in the same action was unknown. If A had a cause of action in debt against B, and B had another cause of action in debt in equal amount against A, each must bring his action. One could not be set off against the other. This was changed by statute in England in 1729, by a provision which, somewhat enlarged and modified, has been generally adopted in this country.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 250-51 (2d ed. 1899).

“Set-off is defined to be a counter-demand, generally of a liquidated debt growing out of an independent transaction for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff.” Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 65 n.42 (1916).

set out, vb. (16c) To recite, explain, narrate, or incorporate (facts or circumstances) <set out the terms of the contract>. — Also termed set forth.

set over, vb. (16c) To transfer or convey (property) <to set over the land to the purchaser>.

setting, n. The date and time established by a court for a trial or hearing <the plaintiff sought a continuance of the imminent setting>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1991; Trial ↻6, 9.]

special setting. (1916) A preferential setting on a court’s calendar, usu. reserved for older cases or cases given priority by law, made either on a party’s motion or on the court’s own motion. • For example, some jurisdictions authorize a special setting for cases involving a party over the age of 70. — Also termed special trial setting; trial-setting preference. [Cases: Trial ↻13.]

settled estate. See ESTATE (1).

settled insanity. See DELIRIUM TREMENS.

settled land. See LAND.

settlement, n. (17c) 1. The conveyance of property — or of interests in property — to provide for one or more beneficiaries, usu. members of the settlor’s family, in a way that differs from what the beneficiaries would receive as heirs under the statutes of descent and distribution <in marriage settlements, historically, the wife waived her right to claim dower or to succeed to her husband’s property>. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↻515.]

strict settlement. Hist. A property settlement that aimed to keep the estate within the family by creating successive interests in tail and shielding remainders from destruction by the interposition of a trust. Cf. trader’s settlement.

trader’s settlement. Hist. A property settlement in which the land is put into a trust for sale, the proceeds to be either paid out to beneficiaries over time or divided among the settlor’s heirs. Cf. strict settlement.

voluntary settlement. A property settlement made without valuable consideration — other than psychological or emotional consideration such as love and affection — from the beneficiary.

2. An agreement ending a dispute or lawsuit <the parties reached a settlement the day before trial>. — Also termed settlement agreement. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement ↻1.]

derivative settlement. 1. The negotiated outcome of a derivative action. See DERIVATIVE ACTION. 2. A person’s legal-residence status that is acquired though another person, as with a child through one or both parents.

final settlement. A court order discharging an executor’s duties after an estate’s execution. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↻512.]

full settlement. A settlement and release of all pending claims between the parties. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement ↷1.]

judicial settlement. The settlement of a civil case with the help of a judge who is not assigned to adjudicate the dispute. • Parties sometimes find this procedure advantageous because it capitalizes on judicial experience in evaluating the settlement value of a claim.

mediated settlement agreement. A settlement agreement arrived at through mediation. — Abbr. MSA. [Cases: Alternative Dispute Resolution ↷484; Compromise and Settlement ↷2, 5.]

nuisance settlement. A settlement in which the defendant pays the plaintiff purely for economic reasons — as opposed to any notion of responsibility — because without the settlement the defendant would spend more money in legal fees and expenses caused by protracted litigation than in paying the settlement amount. • The money paid in such a settlement is often termed nuisance money.

out-of-court settlement. The settlement and termination of a pending suit, arrived at without the court's participation. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement ↷1.]

structured settlement. A settlement in which the defendant agrees to pay periodic sums to the plaintiff for a specified time. [Cases: Assignments ↷62; Compromise and Settlement ↷2.]

"Especially in personal injury and product liability cases, structured settlements — i.e., those which provide for an initial cash payment followed by deferred payments in future years, normally on some annuity basis — are becoming more frequent. . . . Such a structured settlement may have advantages over a lump-sum cash payment. Deferred payments or arranged settlements may serve particular purposes that a cash settlement could not reach, and there will be instances when a structured settlement will be in lieu of an all-cash settlement that would not be acceptable to one party or the other." Alba Conte, Attorney Fee Awards § 2.31, at 101 (1993).

3. Payment, satisfaction, or final adjustment <the seller shipped the goods after confirming the buyer's settlement of the account>.

viatical settlement (vī-at-ə-kəl). [fr. Latin viaticus "relating to a road or journey"] A transaction in which a terminally or chronically ill person sells the benefits of a life-insurance policy to a third party in return for a lump-sum cash payment equal to a percentage of the policy's face value. • Viatical settlements are common with AIDS patients, many of whom sell their policies at a 20% to 40% discount, depending on life expectancy. When the insured (called the "viator") dies, the investor receives the insurance benefit. — Also termed life settlement. [Cases: Insurance ↷1994.]

4. CLOSING <the settlement on their first home is next Friday>. 5. Wills & estates. The complete execution of an estate by the executor <the settlement of the estate was long and complex>. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷502–516.] 6. The establishment of a legal residence. • This sense was frequently used in poor-

settlement agent. 1. See AGENT (2). 2. See settlement attorney under ATTORNEY.

settlement agreement. See SETTLEMENT (2).

settlement attorney. See ATTORNEY.

settlement class. See CLASS (4).

settlement credit. (1979) Civil procedure. A court's reduction of the amount of a jury verdict — or the effect of the verdict on nonsettling defendants — to account for settlement funds the plaintiff has received from former defendants or from other responsible parties. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement ↷15(1); Damages ↷63.]

settlement-first method. (1996) A means by which to apply a settlement credit to a jury verdict, by first reducing the amount of the verdict by subtracting the amount of all settlements the plaintiff has received on the claim, then reducing the remainder by the percentage of the plaintiff's comparative fault. See SETTLEMENT CREDIT. Cf. FAULT-FIRST METHOD. [Cases: Damages ↷63.]

settlement option. See OPTION.

settlement right. Hist. A government-issued certificate granting land to a settler.

settlement statement. See CLOSING STATEMENT (2).

settlement value. See VALUE (2).

settler. (17c) 1. A person who occupies property with the intent to establish a residence. • The term is usu. applied to an early resident of a country or region. 2. SETTLOR.

settle up, vb. (1884) To collect, pay, and turn over debts and property (e.g., of a decedent, bankrupt, or insolvent business).

settlor (set-lər). (18c) 1. A person who makes a settlement of property; esp., one who sets up a trust. — Also termed creator; donor; trustor; grantor; founder. [Cases: Trusts ↷8.] 2. A party to an instrument. — Also spelled (in both senses) settler.

set up, vb. To raise (a defense) <the defendant set up the insanity defense on the murder charge>.

Seventeenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1913, transferring the power to elect U.S. senators from the state legislatures to the states' voters. [Cases: United States ↷11.]

Seventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, guaranteeing the right to a jury trial in federal civil cases that are traditionally considered to be suits at common law and that have an amount in controversy exceeding $20. [Cases: Jury ↷9–14.]

seven-years'-absence rule. (1920) The principle that a person who has been missing without explanation for at least seven years is legally presumed dead. Cf. ENOCH ARDEN LAW.

"[I]n the United States, it is quite generally held or provided by statute that a presumption of death arises from the continued and unexplained absence of a person from his home or place of residence without any intelligence from or concerning him for the period of 7 years. The presumption has been regarded as a procedural expedient and a rule of evidence." 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 551, at 527 (1988).

severability clause. (1935) A provision that keeps the remaining provisions of a contract or statute in force if any portion of that contract or statute is judicially declared void, unenforceable, or unconstitutional. — Also termed saving clause; separability clause. See severable contract under CONTRACT; severable statute under STATUTE. [Cases: Contracts ⇨137; Statutes ⇨64.]

severable contract. See CONTRACT.

severable statute. See STATUTE.

several, adj. (15c) 1. (Of a person, place, or thing) more than one or two but not a lot <several witnesses>. [Cases: Negligence ⇨484; Torts ⇨135.] 2. (Of liability, etc.) separate; particular; distinct, but not necessarily independent . 3. (Of things, etc.) different; various <several settlement options>.

several inheritance. See INHERITANCE.

several liability. See LIABILITY.

severally, adj. Distinctly; separately <severally liable>.

several obligation. See OBLIGATION.

several-remedies rule. (1975) A procedural rule that tolls a statute of limitations for a plaintiff who has several available forums (such as a workers'-compensation proceeding and the court system) and who timely files in one forum and later proceeds in another forum, as long as the defendant's right and claims are not affected. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ⇨105.]

several tail. See TAIL.

several tenancy. See TENANCY.

severalty (sev-[ə]-rəl-tee). (15c) The state or condition of being separate or distinct <the individual landowners held the land in severalty, not as joint tenants>.

severance, n. (15c) 1. The act of cutting off; the state of being cut off. 2. Civil procedure. The separation, by the court, of the claims of multiple parties either to permit separate actions on each claim or to allow certain interlocutory orders to become final. — Also termed severance of actions; severance of claims. See bifurcated trial under TRIAL. Cf. CONSOLIDATION (3). [Cases: Action ⇨60; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨81.]

3. The termination of a joint tenancy, usu. by converting it into a tenancy in common. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ⇨4.] 4. The removal of anything (such as crops or minerals) attached or affixed to real property, making it personal property rather than a part of the land. • Mineral rights are frequently severed from surface rights on property that may contain oil and gas or other minerals. 5. See SEVERANCE PAY. — sever, vb. — severable, adj.

severance damages. See DAMAGES.

severance of actions. See SEVERANCE (2).

severance of claims. See SEVERANCE (2).

severance pay. Money (apart from back wages or salary) paid by an employer to a dismissed employee. • The payment may be made in exchange for a release of any claims that the employee might have against the employer. — Sometimes shortened to severance. — Also termed separation pay; dismissal compensation. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨217.]

severance tax. See TAX.

seward. See CUSTOS MARIS.

sewer service. See SERVICE (2).

sex. (14c) 1. The sum of the peculiarities of structure and function that distinguish a male from a female organism; gender. 2. Sexual intercourse. 3. SEXUAL RELATIONS (2).

sex change. See SEX REASSIGNMENT.

sex discrimination. See DISCRIMINATION.

sex-offender registry. A publicly available list of the names and addresses of sex offenders who have been released from prison. • The registries were started by state statutes known as "Megan's laws." The lists are often posted on the Internet, and some states require publication of the offender's photograph, name, and address in local newspapers. See MEGAN'S LAW. [Cases: Mental Health ⇨469(1).]

sex reassignment. Medical treatment intended to effect a sex change; surgery and hormonal treatments designed to alter a person's gender. — Also termed sex change. [Cases: Health ⇨397, 481.]

sexual abuse. 1. See ABUSE. 2. See RAPE.

sexual activity. See SEXUAL RELATIONS.

sexual assault by contact. See sexual assault (2) under ASSAULT.

sexual battery. 1. See BATTERY. 2. See RAPE.

sexual exploitation. The use of a person, esp. a child, in prostitution, pornography, or other sexually manipulative activity that has caused or could cause serious emotional injury. — Sometimes shortened to exploitation. [Cases: Infants ↻13, 5–7; Obscenity ↻2.5.]

sexual harassment. (1973) A type of employment discrimination consisting in verbal or physical abuse of a sexual nature. See HARASSMENT. [Cases: Civil Rights ↻1181.]

hostile-environment sexual harassment. (1986) Sexual harassment in which a work environment is created where an employee is subject to unwelcome verbal or physical sexual behavior that is either severe or pervasive. • This type of harassment might occur, for example, if a group of coworkers repeatedly e-mailed pornographic pictures to a colleague who found the pictures offensive. [Cases: Civil Rights ↻1185.]

quid pro quo sexual harassment. (1982) Sexual harassment in which an employment decision is based on the satisfaction of a sexual demand. • This type of harassment might occur, for example, if a boss fired or demoted an employee who refused to go on a date with the boss. [Cases: Civil Rights ↻1184.]

same-sex sexual harassment. Sexual harassment by a supervisor of an employee of the same sex. — Also termed same-sex harassment. [Cases: Civil Rights ↻1187, 1194.]

sexually transmitted disease. A disease transmitted only or chiefly by engaging in sexual acts with an infected person. • Common examples are syphilis and gonorrhea. — Abbr. STD. — Also termed venereal disease.

sexually violent predator. See SEXUAL PREDATOR.

sexual orientation. (1931) A person's predisposition or inclination toward a particular type of sexual activity or behavior; heterosexuality, homosexuality, or bisexuality. • There has been a trend in recent years to make sexual orientation a protected class, esp. in employment and hate-crime statutes. [Cases: Civil Rights ↻1012, 1191.]

sexual predator. A person who has committed many violent sexual acts or who has a propensity for committing violent sexual acts. — Also termed predator; sexually dangerous person; sexually violent predator. [Cases: Mental Health ↻452.]

sexual relations. (1909) 1. Sexual intercourse. — Also termed carnalis copula. 2. Physical sexual activity that does not necessarily culminate in intercourse. • Sexual relations usu. involve the touching of another's breast, vagina, penis, or anus. Both persons (the toucher and the person touched) are said to engage in sexual relations. — Also termed sexual activity.

SF. See sinking fund under FUND (1).

shakedown. (1902) 1. An extortion of money using threats of violence or, in the case of a police officer, threats of arrest. 2. See shakedown search under SEARCH.

shakedown search. See SEARCH.

shaken-baby syndrome. The medical condition of a child who has suffered forceful shaking, with resulting brain injury. • The syndrome was first identified in the early 1970s. Common injuries include retinal hemorrhage and subdural and subarachnoid hemorrhage, with minimal or no signs of external cranial trauma. Many victims suffer blindness or death. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻474.4(4); Infants ↻13, 20.]

shakeout, n. An elimination of weak or nonproductive businesses in an industry, esp. during a period of intense competition or declining prices.

shall, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. Has a duty to; more broadly, is required to <the requester shall send notice> <notice shall be sent>. • This is the mandatory sense that drafters typically intend and that courts typically uphold. [Cases: Statutes ↻227.] 2. Should (as often interpreted by courts) <all claimants shall request mediation>. 3. May <no person shall enter the building without first signing the roster>. • When a negative word such as not or no precedes shall (as in the example in angle brackets), the word shall often means may. What is being negated is permission, not a requirement. 4. Will (as a future-tense verb) <the corporation shall then have a period of 30 days to object>. 5. Is entitled to <the secretary shall be reimbursed for all expenses>. • Only sense 1 is acceptable under strict standards of drafting.

sham, n. (17c) 1. Something that is not what it seems; a counterfeit. 2. A person who pretends to be something that he or she is not; a faker. — sham, vb. — sham, adj.

sham transaction. (1937) An agreement or exchange that has no independent economic benefit or business purpose and is entered into solely to create a tax advantage (such as a deduction for a business loss). • The Internal Revenue Service is entitled to ignore the purported tax benefits of a sham transaction. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3071.]

shanghaiing (shang-hi-ing). The act or an instance of coercing or inducing someone to do something by fraudulent or other wrongful means; specif., the practice of drugging, tricking, intoxicating, or otherwise illegally inducing a person to work aboard a vessel, usu. to secure advance money or a premium. — Also termed shanghaiing sailors. 18 USCA § 2194. [Cases: Seamen ↷34.]

share, n. (14c) 1. An allotted portion owned by, contributed by, or due to someone <each partner's share of the profits>.

intestate share. The share that the renouncer of a will would take in the decedent's assets if the decedent had left no will affecting in any way the distribution of assets. [Cases: Wills ↷717.]

2. One of the definite number of equal parts into which the capital stock of a corporation or joint-stock company is divided <the broker advised his customer to sell the stock shares when the price reaches $29>. • A share represents an equity or ownership interest in the corporation or joint-stock company. Cf. STOCK (4); SECURITY (4). [Cases: Corporations ↷62; Joint Ventures ↷6.]

American share. Securities. A share of stock in a foreign corporation issued directly to U.S. investors through a transfer agent.

qualifying share. A share of common stock purchased by someone in order to become a director of a corporation that requires its directors to be shareholders.

share, vb. (16c) 1. To divide (something) into portions. 2. To enjoy or partake of (a power, right, etc.).

share account. See share-draft account under ACCOUNT.

share acquisition. The acquisition of a corporation by purchasing all or most of its outstanding shares directly from the shareholders; TAKEOVER. — Also termed share-acquisition transaction; stock acquisition; stock-acquisition transaction. Cf. ASSET ACQUISITION. [Cases: Corporations ↷197; Securities Regulation ↷262.1.]

share and share alike. To divide (assets, etc.) in equal shares or proportions; to engage in per capita division. See PER CAPITA.

share certificate. See STOCK CERTIFICATE.

sharecropping. An agricultural arrangement in which a landowner leases land to a tenant who, in turn, gives the landlord a portion of the crop as rent. • The landlord usu. provides the seed, fertilizer, and equipment. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷319-333.] — sharecropper, n.

shared custody. See joint custody under CUSTODY (2).

shared-equity mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

shared parenting. See PARENTING.

share draft. See DRAFT.

share-draft account. See ACCOUNT.

shared residency. See joint physical custody under CUSTODY.

shareholder. (1832) One who owns or holds a share or shares in a company, esp. a corporation. — Also termed shareowner; (in a corporation) stockholder. [Cases: Corporations ↷170.]

controlling shareholder. A shareholder who can influence the corporation's activities because the shareholder either owns a majority of outstanding shares or owns a smaller percentage but a significant number of the remaining shares are widely distributed among many others. [Cases: Corporations ↷174.]

dummy shareholder. A shareholder who owns stock in name only for the benefit of the true owner, whose identity is usu. concealed.

interested shareholder. A person who owns enough of a corporation's stock to affect corporate decision-making, usu. at least 15-20% of the corporation's outstanding stock. — Also termed interested stockholder.

majority shareholder. A shareholder who owns or controls more than half the corporation's stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷182.3.]

minority shareholder. A shareholder who owns less than half the total shares outstanding and thus cannot control the corporation's management or singlehandedly elect directors. [Cases: Corporations ↷182.3.]

shareholder-control agreement. See POOLING AGREEMENT.

shareholder derivative suit. See DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

shareholder oppression. See OPPRESSION (4).

shareholder proposal. A proposal by one or more corporate stockholders to change company policy or procedure. • Ordinarily, the corporation informs all stockholders about the proposal before the next shareholder meeting.

shareholder resolution. See RESOLUTION (2).

shareholders' equity. See OWNERS' EQUITY.

shareholder's liability. See LIABILITY.

shareholders' scheme of arrangement. See SCHEME OF ARRANGEMENT.

shareholder voting agreement. See POOLING AGREEMENT.

shareowner. See SHAREHOLDER.

shares outstanding. See outstanding stock under STOCK.

share split. See STOCK SPLIT.

shareware. Software that can be redistributed but not modified and requires all users to pay a license fee. • The license fee applies to both originals and distributed copies. Cf. FREWARE; PROPRIETARY SOFTWARE; SEMI-FREE SOFTWARE.

share-warrant to bearer. A warrant providing that the bearer is entitled to a certain amount of fully paid stock shares. • Delivery of the warrant operates as a transfer of the shares of stock.

Sharia (shə-ree-ə). The body of Islamic religious law applicable to police, banking, business, contracts, and social issues. • Sharia is a system of laws, rather than a codification of laws, based on the Koran and other Islamic sources.

shark repellent. 1. TAKEOVER DEFENSE. 2. More specifically, a charter or bylaw provision designed to impede hostile bids to acquire a controlling interest in a corporation.

sharp, adj. (1886) (Of a clause in a mortgage, deed, etc.) empowering the creditor to take immediate and summary action upon the debtor's default. See DROP-DEAD PROVISION.

sharp practice. (1836) Unethical action and trickery, esp. by a lawyer. — Also termed (archaically) unhandsome dealing. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 32(4), 38.] — sharp practitioner, n.

shave, vb. (1832) 1. To purchase (a negotiable instrument) at a greater than usual discount rate. 2. To reduce or deduct from (a price).

sheer, n. Maritime law. A vessel's sudden deviation from its line of course; a swerve.

shelf security. See SECURITY.

shell corporation. See CORPORATION.

Shelley's Case, Rule in. See RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE.

shell game. A sleight-of-hand game that uses three cups or thimble-like objects, one of which has a pea, ball, or other small object underneath. • This is a game of chance in which one player bets that he or she can remember under which cup the object is. The cups are moved around so quickly that the player finds it difficult to remember where the object is. When played casually on public streets the shell game is usu. a swindle because the operator palms the object rather than leaving it under a cup, so the player has no chance of winning. — Also termed thimblery; thimbles and balls. See GAME OF CHANCE. [Cases: Gaming ⇨ 62, 68(0.5).] shelter, n. 1. A place of refuge providing safety from danger, attack, or observation.

homeless shelter. A privately or publicly operated residential facility providing overnight accommodation free of charge to homeless people. • Most homeless shelters accept occupants on a first-come-first-served basis and are open only from early evening to early morning. Those that serve homeless families may remain open throughout the day to women and children. Some shelters offer occupants help such as advice on finding and applying for public assistance, employment, and medical care. [Cases: Asylums and Assisted Living Facilities ⇨ 35(2).]

women's shelter. A privately or publicly operated residential facility providing women (and their children) who are victims of domestic violence with temporary lodging, food, and other services such as employment assistance, counseling, and medical care. — Also termed family shelter.

youth shelter. 1. A privately or publicly operated residential facility offering young runaway or throwaway children and homeless young people a safe place to stay, usu. for a short time. • The residents enter the shelter voluntarily and can leave anytime they wish. Some shelters offer long-term transitional training so that young people can leave street life and eventually lead independent, productive lives. 2. An alternative type of juvenile-detention center that is less physically restrictive than a jail or boot camp. • Delinquent juveniles are usu. brought to these shelters by police or ordered to reside there by a court. Residents attend school or work in the daytime and may be permitted weekend visits at their family homes.

2. See TAX SHELTER <the shelter saved the taxpayer over $2,000 in taxes>. — shelter, vb.

shelter-care hearing. See shelter hearing under HEARING.

shelter doctrine. (1955) Commercial law. The principle that a person to whom a holder in due course has transferred commercial paper, as well as any later transferee, will succeed to the rights of the holder in due course. • As a result, transferees of holders in due course are generally not subject to defenses against the payment of an instrument. This doctrine ensures the free transferability of commercial paper. Its name derives from the idea that the transferees "take shelter" in the rights of the holder in due course. [Cases: Bills and Notes ↷362.]

shelving. Patents. The failure to begin or the stopping of commercial use of a patent during a specified period, usu. the term of the license. • A licensor may place an anti-shelving provision in a license to ensure the licensed product's manufacture and sale. The term usu. applies to patented inventions, but licenses for trade-marked products may also address shelving.

shepardize, vb. (1928) 1. (often cap.) To determine the subsequent history and treatment of (a case) by using a printed or computerized version of Shepard's Citators. 2. Loosely, to check the precedential value of (a case) by the same or similar means. — shepardization, shepardizing, n.

sheriff. [Middle English shire reeve from Anglo-Saxon scirgerefa] 1. A county's chief peace officer, usu. elected, who in most jurisdictions acts as custodian of the county jail, executes civil and criminal process, and carries out judicial mandates within the county. — Also termed high sheriff; vice-comes. [Cases: Sheriffs and Constables ↷1.]

deputy sheriff. An officer who, acting under the direction of a sheriff, may perform most of the duties of the sheriff's office. • Although undersheriff is broadly synonymous with deputy sheriff, writers have sometimes distinguished between the two, suggesting that a deputy is appointed for a special occasion or purpose, while an undersheriff is permanent. — Also termed undersheriff; general deputy; vice-sheriff. [Cases: Sheriffs and Constables ↷16.]

2. Scots law. The chief judge at the county level, with limited criminal and unlimited civil jurisdiction. • A sheriff may not hear cases of murder or of some minor offenses. In medieval times, the sheriff was the king's representative in the shires, having military, administrative, and judicial functions. The office was hereditary until the Heritable Jurisdictions Act of 1746.

sheriff clerk. Scots law. The clerk of a sheriff's court.

sheriff-depute. Hist. Scots law. The qualified judge of a district or county, acting for the titular, unqualified sheriff.

sheriff principal. Scots law. The chief judge of a sheriffdom comprising one or more counties.

sheriff's court. See COURT.

sheriff's deed. See DEED.

sheriff's jury. See JURY.

sheriff's sale. See SALE.

Sherman Antitrust Act. A federal statute, passed in 1890, that prohibits direct or indirect interference with the freely competitive interstate production and distribution of goods. • This Act was amended by the Clayton Act in 1914. 15 USCA §§ 1–7. — Often shortened to

Sherman Act. — Also termed the Antitrust Law. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷523.]

Sherman–Sorrells doctrine. (1998) The principle that a defendant may claim as an affirmative defense that he or she was not disposed to commit the offense until a public official (often an undercover police officer) encouraged the defendant to do so. • This entrapment defense, which is recognized in the federal system and a majority of states, was developed in Sherman v. United States, 356 U.S. 369, 78 S.Ct. 819 (1958), and Sorrells v. United States, 287 U.S. 435, 53 S.Ct. 210 (1932). — Also termed subjective method. See ENTRAPMENT. Cf. HYPOTHETICAL-PERSON DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷37.]

shield law. (1971) 1. A statute that affords journalists the privilege not to reveal confidential sources. See journalist's privilege under PRIVILEGE (3). [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ↷404.]

"More than half of the states have 'shield laws' creating 'reporters' privileges' that are sometimes broader than the First Amendment version of that privilege." David A. Anderson, Freedom of the Press, 80 Texas L. Rev. 429, 432 (2002).

2. A statute that restricts or prohibits the use, in rape or sexual-assault cases, of evidence about the victim's past sexual conduct. — Also termed (in sense 2) rape shield law; rape shield statute. [Cases: Rape ↷40(1)–40(5).]

"The 'rape shield law.' At common law the character of the woman as to chastity or unchastity was held to be admissible in evidence on the theory that it had probative value in determining whether she did or did not consent. Defense counsel, in unrestrained zeal for an acquittal, took advantage of this to the point that it often seemed as if it was the victim of the rape, rather than the perpetrator, who was on trial. . . . A typical 'rape shield statute' does not prevent the introduction of any relevant and otherwise admissible evidence, but requires that the relevancy of any evidence of the previous sexual conduct of the complaining witness must be determined in a pretrial hearing before the judge in camera." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 206 (3d ed. 1982).

shifting, adj. (1874) (Of a position, place, etc.) changing or passing from one to another .

shifting clause. (1813) At common law, a clause under the Statute of Uses prescribing a substituted mode of devolution in the settlement of an estate. See STATUTE OF USES.

shifting executory interest. See EXECUTORY INTEREST.

shifting ground. Patents. The broadening of a patent application in an amendment by claiming a feature of the invention that was disclosed but not claimed in the original application. [Cases: Patents ↷109.]

shifting inheritance. See INHERITANCE.

shifting risk. See RISK.

shifting stock of merchandise. Merchandise inventory subject to change by purchases and sales in the course of trade.

shifting the burden of proof. (1805) In litigation, the transference of the duty to prove a fact from one party to the other; the passing of the duty to produce evidence in a case from one side to another as the case progresses, when one side has made a prima facie showing on a point of evidence, requiring the other side to rebut it by contradictory evidence. See BURDEN OF PROOF. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷327; Evidence ↷94.]

shifting trust. See TRUST.

shifting use. See USE (4).

skill. 1. A person who poses as an innocent bystander at a confidence game but actually serves as a decoy for the perpetrators of the scheme. 2. BY-BIDDER. — skill, vb.

shilling, n. 1. The practice of fraudulently bidding on items at an auction solely to drive up the price. • The seller might collude with another person to bid or might act alone and anonymously. Cf. BIDDING UP; BY-BIDDING. [Cases: Auctions and Auctioneers ↷7.] 2. Hist. An English coin equal to 12 pence or 1/20th of a pound. • Shillings were revalued as five pence and phased out when decimalization was adopted in the early 1970s. The modern five-pence coin, like its predecessor equal to 1/20th of a pound, is sometimes nostalgically referred to as a shilling.

shingle. A small, usu. dignified sign that marks the office door of a lawyer or other professional.

shingle theory. Securities. The notion that a broker-dealer must be held to a high standard of conduct because by engaging in the securities business ("hanging out a shingle"), the broker-dealer implicitly represents to the world that the conduct of all its employees will be fair and meet professional norms. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷27,21, 60,32(1).]

"[I]n judging the appropriate standard of care that attaches to a broker-dealer in recommending securities to his or her customers and in dealing with the customers' accounts, the Commission has relied upon the 'shingle theory.' The shingle theory is but an extension of the common law doctrine of 'holding out.' When brokers hold themselves out as experts either in investments in general or in the securities of a particular issuer, they will be held to a higher standard of care in making recommendations." Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 10.6, at 423 (2d ed. 1994).

shin plaster. Hist. Slang. 1. A bank note that has greatly depreciated in value; esp., the paper money of the Republic of Texas in relation to the U.S. dollar. 2. Paper money in denominations less than one dollar.

ship, n. A type of vessel used or intended to be used in navigation. See VESSEL. [Cases: Shipping ↷1.]

chartered ship. 1. A ship specially hired to transport the goods of only one person or company. [Cases: Shipping ↷34–58.] 2. A ship on which a shipper has chartered space for a cargo.

general ship. A ship that is set for a particular voyage to carry the goods of any persons willing to ship goods on it for that voyage.

ship, vb. To send (goods, documents, etc.) from one place to another, esp. by delivery to a carrier for transportation.

ship broker. Maritime law. 1. The business agent of a shipowner or charterer; an intermediary between an owner or charterer and a shipper. 2. One who negotiates the purchase and sale of a ship.

ship channel. Maritime law. The part of a navigable body of water where the water is deep enough for large vessels to travel safely. [Cases: Collision ↷89; Navigable Waters ↷1(5).]

shipmaster. See MASTER OF A SHIP.

shipment. 1. The transportation of goods; esp., the delivery of goods to a carrier and subsequent issuance of a bill of lading. 2. The goods so shipped; an order of goods.

shipment contract. See CONTRACT.

Ship Mortgage Act. A federal law regulating mortgages on ships registered as U.S. vessels by, among other things, providing for enforcement of maritime liens in favor of those who furnish supplies or maintenance to the vessels. 46 USCA §§ 30101, 31301–43. [Cases: Shipping ↷32.]

shipowner-negligence doctrine. The principle that a shipowner is liable for an assault on a crew member if the crew member was assaulted by a superior, during an activity undertaken for the benefit of the ship's business, and if the ship's officers could reasonably have foreseen the assault. [Cases: Seamen ↷29(3).]

shipper. 1. One who ships goods to another. 2. One who contracts with a carrier for the transportation of cargo. • As a legal term of art, the shipper may not be the person who owns the cargo, but an agent or an independent contractor. Cf. CARRIER (1). [Cases: Carriers ↷3.]

shipping articles. Maritime law. A document (provided by a master of a vessel to the mariners) detailing voyage information, such as the voyage term, the number of crew, and the wage rates. 46 USCA § 10302. [Cases: Seamen ↷7.]

shipping commissioner. An officer, appointed by the secretary of the treasury, who is posted at a port of entry, and vested with general supervisory authority over seamen's contracts and welfare. • In 1993, the term was changed to "master or individual in charge." See Pub. L. 103-206 § 403. [Cases: Seamen ↷5.]

shipping document. Any paper that covers a shipment in trade, such as a bill of lading or letter of credit. [Cases: Carriers ↷46–68; Shipping ↷106.]

shipping law. See LAW OF SHIPPING.

shipping order. A copy of the shipper's instructions to a carrier regarding the disposition of goods to be transported. [Cases: Carriers ↷61.]

ship's husband. Maritime law. A person appointed to act as general agent of all the coowners of a ship, as by contracting for all necessary services, equipment, and supplies. Cf. EXERCITOR. [Cases: Maritime Liens ↷28; Seamen ↷22; Shipping ↷74.]

ship's papers. Maritime law. The papers that a vessel is required to carry to provide the primary evidence of the ship's national character, ownership, nature and destination of cargo, and compliance with navigation laws. • These papers includes certificates of health, charter-party, muster-rolls, licenses, and bills of lading. [Cases: Shipping ↷5.]

shipwreck. Maritime law. 1. A ship's wreckage. [Cases: Shipping ↷212.] 2. The injury or destruction of a vessel because of circumstances beyond the owner's control, rendering the vessel incapable of carrying out its mission.

"There are two kinds of shipwreck: (1.) When the vessel sinks or is dashed to pieces. (2.) When she is stranded, which is, when she grounds and fills with water. The latter may terminate in shipwreck, or may not, and it depends on circumstances whether it will or will not justify an abandonment." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *323 n.(b) (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

shire. A county in Great Britain (esp. England), originally made up of many hundreds but later consisting of larger divisions set off by metes and bounds.

shire-gerefa. See shire-reeve under REEVE.

shire-reeve. See REEVE.

Shively presumption (shriv-lee). The doctrine that any prestatehood grant of public property does not include tidelands unless the grant specifically indicates otherwise. Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 548 (1894); United States v. Holt State Bank, 270 U.S. 49, 46 S.Ct. 197 (1925). See EQUAL-FOOTING DOCTRINE. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷36(1).]

shock, n. A profound and sudden disturbance of the physical or mental senses; a sudden and violent physical or mental impression depressing the body's vital forces, as by a sudden injury or medical procedure.

mental shock. Shock caused by agitation of the mental senses and resulting in extreme grief or joy, as by witnessing the horrific death of a family member or winning the lottery. Cf. EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

physical shock. Shock caused by agitation of the physical senses, as from a sudden violent blow, impact, collision, or concussion.

shock incarceration. See INCARCERATION.

shock probation. See PROBATION.

shock the conscience. To cause intense ethical or humanitarian discomfort. • This phrase is used as an equitable standard for gauging whether (1) state action amounts to a violation of a person's substantive-due-process rights, (2) a jury's award is excessive, (3) a fine, jail term, or other penalty is disproportionate to the crime, or (4) a contract is unconscionable. See CONSCIENCE OF THE COURT (2). [Cases: Appeal and Error ↷1004(5); Constitutional Law ↷3896; Contracts ↷1; Damages ↷127.1-127.3; New Trial ↷76.]

shop, n. (13c) A business establishment or place of employment; a factory, office, or other place of business.

agency shop. A shop in which a union acts as an agent for the employees, regardless of their union membership. • Nonunion members must pay union dues because it is presumed that any collective bargaining will benefit nonunion as well as union members.

closed nonunion shop. A shop in which the employer restricts employment to workers who are unaffiliated with any labor union.

closed shop. A shop in which the employer, by agreement with a union, employs only union members in good standing. • Closed shops were made illegal under the federal Labor-Management Relations Act. — Also termed closed union shop. See PREHIRE AGREEMENT. Cf. closed union under UNION. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷1264.]

open closed shop. A shop in which the employer hires nonunion workers on the understanding that they will become union members within a specified period. — Also termed open shop. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷1264.]

open shop. 1. A shop in which the employer hires workers without regard to union affiliation. See RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW. Cf. open union under UNION. 2. See open closed shop.

preferential nonunion shop. A shop in which nonunion members are given preference over main members in employment matters.

preferential shop. See preferential union shop.

preferential union shop. A shop in which union members are given preference over nonunion members in employment matters. — Also termed preferential shop.

union shop. A shop in which the employer may hire nonunion employees on the condition that they join a union within a specified time (usu. at least 30 days).

shop-book rule. (1898) Evidence. An exception to the hearsay rule permitting the admission into evidence of original bookkeeping records if the books' entries were made in the ordinary course of business and the books are authenticated by somebody who maintains them. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷436(2); Evidence ↷354.]

shop books. (17c) Records of original entry maintained in the usual course of business by a shopkeeper, trader, or other businessperson. — Also termed books of account; account books.

shop committee. A union committee that resolves employee complaints within a union shop. See union shop under SHOP.

shoplifting, n. (17c) Theft of merchandise from a store or business; specif., larceny of goods from a store or other commercial establishment by willfully taking and concealing the merchandise with the intention of converting the goods to one's personal use without paying the purchase price. See LARCENY. [Cases: Larceny ↷1.] — shoplift, vb.

"Shoplifting is a form of larceny. . . . As a practical matter, however, the difficulty of proving the wrongful taking and the felonious intent requisites for a conviction under the general larceny statutes, together with the risk of retributory civil action against the shopkeeper consequent to acquittal of an accused shoplifter, have caused shoplifting to be established as a specific statutory crime in many jurisdictions." 50 Am. Jur. 2d Larceny § 71, at 79-80 (1995).

shop right. (1879) Patents. An employer's right to an irrevocable, nonassignable, nonexclusive, royalty-free license in an employee's invention, if the employee conceived and developed the invention during the course of employment and used company funds and materials.

shore. (14c) 1. Land lying between the lines of high- and low-water mark; lands bordering on the shores of navigable waters below the line of ordinary high water. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨36(3); Waters and Water Courses ⇨90.] 2. Land adjacent to a body of water regardless of whether it is below or above the ordinary high- or low-water mark. — Also termed shore land. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨18, 33, 41; Waters and Water Courses ⇨90-96.]

short, adj. 1. Not holding at the time of sale the security or commodity that is being sold in anticipation of a fall in price <the trader was short at the market's close>. 2. Of or relating to a sale of securities or commodities not in the seller's possession at the time of sale . See short sale under SALE. Cf. LONG. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨45.17.]

short, adv. By a short sale <sold the stock short>. See short sale under SALE.

short, vb. To sell (a security or commodity) by a short sale <shorted 1,000 shares of Pantheon stock>. See short sale under SALE. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨45.17.]

short cause. See CAUSE (3).

short-cause calendar. See CALENDAR (2).

short-cause trial. See short cause under CAUSE (3).

shortened statutory period. Patents. An amount of time less than 6 months, but not less than 30 days, given in certain circumstances to a patent applicant to respond to an office action. • The period for most responses can be extended up to the statutory period of 6 months. MPEP 710.02. [Cases: Patents ⇨104.]

shorter-term rule. See RULE OF THE SHORTER TERM.

short-form agreement. Labor law. A contract usu. entered into by a small independent contractor whereby the contractor agrees to be bound by a collective-bargaining agreement negotiated between a union and a multiemployer bargaining unit.

show-cause motion. See MOTION.

show-cause order. See ORDER (2).

show-cause proceeding. (1922) A usu. expedited proceeding on a show-cause order. — Also termed rule to show cause; summary process; summary procedure; expedited proceeding.

show-cause rule. See show-cause order under ORDER (2).

shower (shoh-ər), n. A person commissioned by a court to take jurors to a place so that they may observe it as they consider a case on which they are sitting. See VIEW (3). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨651; Trial ⇨28.]

showing, n. (1857) The act or an instance of establishing through evidence and argument; proof .

show of hands. See vote by show of hands under VOTE (4).

show-stopper. Corporations. An antitakeover tactic by which the target company seeks an injunction barring the takeover offer, usu. because the proposed merger violates antitrust laws.

show trial. (1937) A trial, usu. in a nondemocratic country, that is staged primarily for propagandistic purposes, with the outcome predetermined.

showup, n. (1929) A pretrial identification procedure in which a suspect is confronted with a witness to or the victim of a crime. • Unlike a lineup, a showup is a one-on-one confrontation. Cf. LINEUP. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 339.8(5, 6).]

shrinkage. (1961) The reduction in inventory caused by theft, breakage, or waste.

shrink-wrap license. See LICENSE.

SHU. abbr. SPECIAL HOUSING UNIT.

shutdown. (1884) A cessation of work production, esp. in a factory.

shut-in royalty. See ROYALTY (2).

shut-in royalty clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease allowing the lessee to maintain the lease while there is no production from the property because wells capable of production are shut in. • The lessee pays the lessor a shut-in royalty in lieu of production. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 78.1(3).]

shuttle diplomacy. See DIPLOMACY.

si antecedit ictum licet non congressum (sɪ ən-ti-see-dit ɪk-təm lɪ-set non kən-gres-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. If it precedes the blow, although not actually connected with it. • The phrase appeared in reference to the malice sufficient to warrant a capital murder conviction.

SIB. abbr. 1. Securities and Investment Board. See FINANCIAL SERVICES AGENCY. 2. See survivor-income benefit plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

sibi imputet (sɪb-i ɪm-py-ə-tet). [Latin] Hist. Let it be imputed to himself.

sibi invigilare (sɪb-i ɪn-vij-ə-lair-ee). [Latin] Hist. To watch for themselves.

sibling. A brother or sister.

sibship. 1. The quality or state of being a blood relative, esp. a sibling. See DEGREE.

"[T]he ancient Germans knew yet another calculus of kinship, which was bound up with their law of inheritance.

Within the household composed of a father and children there was no degree; this household was regarded for this purpose as a unit, and only when, in default of children, the inheritance fell to remoter kinsmen, was there any need to count the grades of 'sibship.' Thus first cousins are in the first degree of sibship; second cousins in the second." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 386 (2d ed. 1899).

2. A group of blood relatives; kindred.

sic (sɪk). [Latin "so, thus"] (1859) Spelled or used as written. • Sic, invariably bracketed and usu. set in italics, is used to indicate that a preceding word or phrase in a quoted passage is reproduced as it appeared in the original document <"that case peeked [sic] the young lawyer's interest">.

sick leave. 1. An employment benefit allowing a worker time off for sickness, either with or without pay, but without loss of seniority or other benefits. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 182.] 2. The time so taken by an employee.

sickness and accident insurance. See health insurance under INSURANCE.

si constet de persona (sɪ kɒn-stet dee pər-soh-nə). [Latin] If it is certain who is the person meant.

si contingat (sɪ kɒn-ting-at). [Law Latin] If it happens. • This term was formerly used to describe conditions in a conveyance.

sicut alias (sɪ-kət əy-lee-əs), n. [Latin "as at another time"] Hist. A second writ issued when the first one was not executed.

"But where a defendant absconds, and the plaintiff would proceed to an outlawry against him, an original writ must then be sued out regularly, and after that a capias. And if the sheriff cannot find the defendant upon the first writ . . . there issues out an alias writ, and after that a pluries, to the same effect as the former: only after these words 'we command you,' this clause is inserted, 'as we have formerly,' or, 'as we have often commanded you;' 'sicut alias' . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 283 (1768).

sicut me Deus adjuvet (sɪk-ət mee dee-əs əj-ə-vet). [Latin] So help me God.

side, n. (13c) 1. The position of a person or group opposing another <the law is on our side>. 2. Either of two parties in a transaction or dispute <each side put on a strong case>. 3. Archaic. The field of a court's jurisdiction <equity side> <law side>. 4. Property. In a description of more or less rectangularly shaped land, either of the two long boundary lines.

sidebar. (1856) 1. A position at the side of a judge's bench where counsel can confer with the judge beyond the jury's earshot <the judge called the attorneys to sidebar>. 2. SIDEBAR CONFERENCE <during the sidebar, the prosecutor accused the defense attorney of misconduct>. 3. A short, secondary article within or accompanying a main story in a publication <the sidebar contained information on related topics>. 4. SIDEBAR COMMENT.

sidebar comment. (1922) An unnecessary, often argumentative remark made by an attorney or witness, esp. during a trial or deposition <the witness paused after testifying, then added a sidebar>. — Often shortened to sidebar. — Also termed sidebar remark. [Cases: Trial ↻113.]

sidebar conference. (1925) 1. A discussion among the judge and counsel, usu. over an evidentiary objection, outside the jury's hearing. — Also termed bench conference. [Cases: Trial ↻18, 50.] 2. A discussion, esp. during voir dire, between the judge and a juror or prospective juror. — Often shortened to sidebar.

sidebar remark. See SIDEBAR COMMENT.

sidebar rule. Hist. English law. An order or rule allowed by the court without formal application, such as an order to plead within a particular time. • Formerly, the rules or orders were made on the motion of the attorneys at the sidebar in court.

side judge. See JUDGE.

side lines. 1. The margins of something, such as property. 2. A different type of business or goods than one principally engages in or sells. 3. Mining law. The boundary lines of a mining claim not crossing the vein running on each side of it. — Also written sidelines. Cf. END LINES. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↻18.]

sidenote. See MARGINAL NOTE.

si deprehendatur (sɪ dep-ri-hen-day-tər). [Latin] Hist. If captured.

side reports. (1943) 1. Unofficial volumes of case reports. 2. Collections of cases omitted from the official reports.

sidesman. Eccles. law. A church officer who originally reported to the bishop on clerical and congregational misdeeds, including heretical acts, and later became a standing officer whose duties gradually devolved by custom on the churchwarden. — Also termed synodsman; questman.

si deventum sit ad actum maleficio proximum (sɪ di-ven-təm sit ad ak-təm mal-ə-fish-ee-oh prok-sə-məm). [Law Latin] Hist. If it approaches an act bordering on crime. • The phrase described the determination of a criminal attempt.

Sierra-Mobile doctrine. See MOBILE-SIERRA DOCTRINE.

si fecerit te securum (sɪ fes-ər-it tee si-kyoor-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. If he has made you secure. • These were the initial words of a writ ordering the sheriff, upon receipt of security from the plaintiff, to compel the defendant's appearance in court. — Also spelled (erroneously) se te fecerit securum.

sight. (1810) A drawee's acceptance of a draft <payable after sight>. • The term after sight means "after acceptance."

sight draft. See DRAFT.

sight strike. See STRIKE (2).

sigil (sij-əl), n. A seal or an abbreviated signature used as a seal; esp., a seal formerly used by civil-law notaries.

sigillum (si-jil-əm), n. [Latin] A seal, esp. one impressed on wax.

sigla (sig-lə), n. pl. [Latin] Abbreviations and signs used in writing, esp. by the Glossators.

sign, vb. (15c) 1. To identify (a record) by means of a signature, mark, or other symbol with the intent to authenticate it as an act or agreement of the person identifying it <both parties signed the contract>. 2. To agree with or join <the commissioner signed on for a four-year term>.

signal. (1949) 1. A means of communication, esp. between vessels at sea or between a vessel and the shore. • The international code of signals assigns arbitrary meanings to different arrangements of flags or light displays. [Cases: Collision ↻75-79, 81, 98, 100(2).] 2. In the citation of legal authority, an abbreviation or notation supplied to indicate some basic fact about the authority. • For example, according to the Bluebook, the signal See means that the cited authority plainly supports the proposition, while Cf. means that the cited authority supports a proposition analogous to (but in some way different from) the main proposition. For these and other signals, see The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation § 1.2, at 22-24 (17th ed. 2000). — Also termed (in sense 2) citation signal.

signatory (sig-nə-tor-ee), n. (1866) A person or entity that signs a document, personally or through an agent, and thereby becomes a party to an agreement <eight countries are signatories to the treaty>. — signatory, adj.

signatory authority. 1. License to make a decision, esp. to withdraw money from an account or to transfer a negotiable instrument. 2. Patents. In the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, the power of an examiner to approve an office action. [Cases: Patents ↻104.]

signature. (16c) 1. A person's name or mark written by that person or at the person's direction. — Also termed sign manual. [Cases: Signatures ↻1-5.] 2. Commercial law. Any name, mark, or writing used with the intention of authenticating a document. UCC §§ 1-201(37), 3-401(b). — Also termed legal signature. [Cases: Bills and Notes ↻54; Contracts ↻35; Sales ↻29.]

"The signature to a memorandum may be any symbol made or adopted with an intention, actual or apparent, to authenticate the writing as that of the signer." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 134 (1979).

digital signature. (1978) A secure, digital code attached to an electronically transmitted message that uniquely identifies and authenticates the sender. • A digital signature consists of a "hashed" number combined with a number assigned to a document (a private-encryption key). Generating a signature requires the use of private- and public-key-encryption software, and is often activated by a simple command or act, such as clicking on a “place order” icon on a retailer’s website. Digital signatures are esp. important for electronic commerce and are a key component of many electronic message-authentication schemes. Several states have passed legislation recognizing the legality of digital signatures. See E-COMMERCE; KEY ENCRYPTION. [Cases: Signatures ↻1, 2.]

electronic signature. An electronic symbol, sound, or process that is either attached to or logically associated with a document (such as a contract or other record) and executed or adopted by a person with the intent to sign the document. • Types of electronic signatures include a typed name at the end of an email, a digital image of a handwritten signature, and the click of an “I accept” button on an e-commerce site. The term electronic signature does not suggest or require the use of encryption, authentication, or identification measures. A document’s integrity (unaltered content), authenticity (sender’s identity), and confidentiality (of the signer’s identity or document’s contents) are not ensured merely because an electronic signature is provided for. [Cases: Signatures ↻1–3.]

facsimile signature. (1892) 1. A signature that has been prepared and reproduced by mechanical or photographic means. 2. A signature on a document that has been transmitted by a facsimile machine. See FAX.

private signature. Civil law. A signature made on a document (such as a will) that has not been witnessed or notarized. [Cases: Wills ↻149.]

unauthorized signature. (1859) A signature made without actual, implied, or apparent authority. • It includes a forgery. UCC § 1-201(43). [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻147; Bills and Notes ↻54, 279.]

signature card. (1902) A financial-institution record consisting of a customer’s signature and other information that assists the institution in monitoring financial transactions, as by comparing the signature on the record with signatures on checks, withdrawal slips, and other documents. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻133, 151.]

signature crime. See CRIME.

signature evidence. See EVIDENCE.

signature loan. See LOAN.

signed, sealed, and delivered. (17c) In a certificate of acknowledgment, a statement that the instrument was executed by the person acknowledging it. — Often shortened to sealed and delivered. [Cases: Acknowledgment ↻29.]

signed writing. See WRITING.

signet. 1. Civil law. An elaborate hand-drawn symbol (usu. incorporating a cross and the notary’s initials) formerly placed at the base of notarial instruments, later replaced by a seal. 2. Scots law. A seal used to authenticate summonses in civil matters before the Court of Session. • Originally, this was the monarch’s personal seal. Cf. WRITER TO THE SIGNET.

significant-connection jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

significant-connection/substantial-evidence jurisdiction. See significant-connection jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

significavit (sig-ni-fi-kay-vit), n. [Latin “he has signified”] Eccles. law. 1. A bishop’s certificate that a person has been in a state of excommunication for more than 40 days. 2. A notice to the Crown in chancery, based on the bishop’s certificate, whereby a writ de contumace capiendo (or, earlier, a writ de excommunicato capiendo) would issue for the disobedient person’s arrest and imprisonment. See DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO.

sign manual. 1. See SIGNATURE (1). 2. A symbol or emblem, such as a trademark, representing words or an idea.

signum (sig-nəm), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A sign; a seal.

“Signum. (On written documents.) A seal (a stamp) put on to close a document in order to make its contents inaccessible to unauthorized persons and protect against forgery, or at the end of it after the written text. In the latter case the seal (without or with a signature) indicated that the sealer recognized the written declaration as his Signum is also the seal of a witness who was present at the making of a document.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 707 (1953).

2. An indication of something seen or otherwise perceived by the senses, such as a bloodstain on a murder suspect. Pl. signa.

si institutus sine liberis decesserit (si in-sti-t[y]oo-təs si-nee lib-ər-is di-ses-ər-it). [Latin] Hist. If the instituted heir should die without issue. See SUBSTITUTION.

si ita est (si i-tə est). [Latin] If it be so. • This phrase was formerly used in a mandamus writ to order a judge to affix a seal to a bill of exceptions, if the facts were accurately stated.

silence, n. (13c) 1. A restraint from speaking. • In criminal law, silence includes an arrestee’s statements expressing the desire not to speak and requesting an attorney. 2. A failure to reveal something required by law to be revealed. See estoppel by silence under ESTOPPEL. — silent, adj.

silent confirmation. See CONFIRMATION.

silentiary (si-len-shee-air-ee), n. 1. Roman law. An official who maintains order in the imperial palace and on the imperial council; a chamberlain. 2. Hist. An officer who is sworn to silence about state secrets; esp., a privy councillor so sworn. 3. Hist. A court usher who maintains order and esp. silence in the court. — Also termed silentarius.

silent partner. See PARTNER.

silent record. See RECORD.

silent-witness theory. (1973) Evidence. A method of authenticating and admitting evidence (such as a photograph), without the need for a witness to verify its authenticity, upon a sufficient showing of the reliability of the process of producing the evidence, including proof that the evidence has not been altered. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻438, 444; Evidence ↻359, 380.]

silk gown. 1. The professional robe worn by a Queen's Counsel. 2. One who is a Queen's Counsel. — Often shortened (in sense 2) to silk. Cf. STUFF GOWN.

silver certificate. Hist. A banknote issued by the United States Treasury from 1878 to 1963 and redeemable in silver. • The notes represented that a certain amount of silver was on deposit with the government and would be paid to the bearer on demand. Originally, these notes were not legal tender and could be used only to pay taxes and other public obligations. In 1967, Congress abolished redemption in silver after June 1968. Silver certificates now have the same status as Federal Reserve notes, which are not redeemable for precious metal. Cf. FEDERAL RESERVE NOTE; GOLD CERTIFICATE.

silver-platter doctrine. (1958) Criminal procedure. The principle that a federal court could admit evidence obtained illegally by a state police officer as long as a federal officer did not participate in or request the search. • The Supreme Court rejected this doctrine in Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437 (1960). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻394.2.]

si malitia suppleat aetatem (sɪ mə-lish-ee-ə səp-lee-at ee-tay-təm). [Latin] Hist. If malice should supply the want of age.

similar happenings. Evidence. Events that occur at a time different from the time in dispute and are therefore usu. inadmissible except to the extent that they provide relevant information on issues that would be fairly constant, such as the control of and conditions on land on the day in question. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻369–374; Evidence ↻129–142.]

similarity. Intellectual property. The resemblance of one trademark or copyrighted work to another. • How closely a trademark must resemble another to amount to infringement depends on the nature of the product and how much care the typical buyer would be expected to take in making the selection in that particular market. It is a question of overall impression rather than an element-by-element comparison of the two marks. — Also termed imitation; colorable imitation. Cf. SUBSTANTIAL SIMILARITY. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1095.]

"It is the buyer who uses ordinary caution in making his purchase, who is buying with the care usually exercised in such transactions, who must be deceived by this similarity. He who buys a box of candy does not use as much care as he who buys a watch. He who buys a handkerchief does not usually examine the goods offered him as carefully as he who buys a suit of clothes." Harry D. Nims, The Law of Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks 836 (1929).

comprehensive nonliteral similarity. Copyright. Similarity evidenced by the copying of the protected work's general ideas or structure (such as a movie's plot) without using the precise words or phrases of the work. — Also termed pattern similarity.

fragmented literal similarity. Copyright. Similarity evidenced by the copying of verbatim portions of the protected work.

substantial similarity. Copyright. A strong resemblance between a copyrighted work and an alleged infringement, thereby creating an inference of unauthorized copying. • The standard for substantial similarity is whether an ordinary person would conclude that the alleged infringement has appropriated nontrivial amounts of the copyrighted work's expressions. — Also termed probative similarity. See derivative work under WORK (2). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻53(1).]

similar sales. See SALE.

similiter (si-mil-i-tər). [Latin "similarly"] Common-law pleading. A party's written acceptance of an opponent's issue or argument; a set form of words by which a party accepts or joins in an issue of fact tendered by the other side. See joinder of issue (2) under JOINDER. [Cases: Pleading ↻100, 186.]

si minor se majorem dixerit (sɪ mɪ-nər see mə-jor-əm dɪk-sər-it). [Latin] Hist. If the minor has said that he is major. • The phrase refers to a defense that might be raised in a suit for a minor's claim for restitution for minority.

simony (sim-ə-nee or sɪ-mə-nee), n. [fr. Latin simonia "payment for things spiritual," fr. the proper name Simon Magus (see below)] Hist. Eccles. law. The unlawful practice of giving or receiving money or gifts in exchange for spiritual promotion; esp., the unlawful buying or selling of a benefice or the right to present clergy to a vacant benefice.

"By simony, the right of presentation to a living is forfeited, and vested pro hac vice in the crown. Simony is the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money, gift, or reward. It is so called from the resemblance it is said to bear to the sin of Simon Magus, though the purchasing of holy orders seems to approach nearer to his offence. It was by the canon law a very grievous crime; and is so much the more odious, because, as sir Edward Coke observes, it is ever accompanied with perjury; for the presentee is sworn to have committed no simony." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 278 (1766).

"Simony is an offence which consists in the buying and selling of holy orders, and any bond or contract involving simony is illegal and void." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 195 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

simple, adj. (16c) 1. (Of a crime) not accompanied by aggravating circumstances. Cf. AGGRAVATED (1). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻28.] 2. (Of an estate or fee) heritable by the owner's heirs with no conditions concerning tail. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻11; Estates in Property ↻5; Wills ↻596.] 3. (Of a contract) not made under seal. [Cases: Contracts ↻36.]

simulated transaction. See simulated sale under SALE.

simulatio latens (sim-yə-lay-shee-oh lay-tenz). [Latin "hidden pretence"] Hist. Feigned enhancement of illness, as when symptoms are present but not nearly as severe as is pretended.

simulation. 1. An assumption of an appearance that is feigned, false, or deceptive. 2. Civil law. A feigned, pretended act, usu. to mislead or deceive. 3. See simulated contract under CONTRACT.

simul cum (sī-məl kəm). [Latin] Together with. ● This phrase was formerly used in an indictment or other instrument to indicate that a defendant had committed an injury jointly with others unknown.

simul et semel (sī-məl et sem-əl). [Latin] Together at one time.

simultaneous death. See DEATH.

simultaneous-death act. See UNIFORM SIMULTANEOUS DEATH ACT.

simultaneous-death clause. (1953) A testamentary provision mandating that if the testator and beneficiary die in a common disaster, or the order of their deaths is otherwise unascertainable, the testator is presumed to have survived the beneficiary. ● If the beneficiary is the testator's spouse, an express exception is often made so that the spouse with the smaller estate is presumed to have survived. See simultaneous death under DEATH. Cf. SURVIVAL CLAUSE.

simultaneous polygamy. See POLYGAMY (1).

sine (sī-nee or sin-ay), prep. [Latin] Without.

sine animo remanendi (sī-nee an-ə-moh rem-ə-nen-di). [Law Latin] Hist. Without the intention of remaining.

sine animo revertendi (sī-nee an-ə-moh ree-vər-ten-di). [Latin] Without the intention of returning. See animus revertendi under ANIMUS.

sine assensu capituli (sī-nee ə-sen-s[y]oo kə-pich-[y] ə-li), n. [Law Latin "without the consent of the chapter"] Hist. A writ for a successor to recover land that the former bishop, abbot, or prior had alienated without the chapter's permission.

sine consideratione curiae (sī-nee kən-sid-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee kyoor-ee-ī). [Law Latin] Without the judgment of the court.

sine cura et cultura (sī-nee kyoor-ə et kəl-t[y]oor-ə). [Latin] Hist. Without care and culture. ● Natural fruits fitting this description automatically passed to the purchaser of property. But industrial fruits that had to be cultivated required a special conveyance.

sinecure (sī-nə-kyoor or sin-ə-kyoor). [fr. Latin sine cura "without duties"] Hist. A post without any duties attached; an office for which the holder receives a salary but has no responsibilities. — sinecural (sī-nə-kyoor-əl or sī-nə-kyoor-əl), adj.

sine decreto (sī-nee di-kree-toh). [Latin] Without a judge's authority.

sine die (SI-nee di-ee or di- or sin-ay dee-ay). [Latin “without day”] (17c) With no day being assigned (as for resumption of a meeting or hearing). See adjourn sine die under ADJOURN (2); GO HENCE WITHOUT DAY. [Cases: Courts ↷76; States ↷32.]

sine fraude (SI-nee fraw-dee). [Latin] Hist. Without fraud.

sine hoc quod (SI-nee hok kwod). [Law Latin] Without this, that. See ABSQUE HOC.

single-date-of-removal doctrine. Civil procedure. The principle that the deadline for removing a case from state court to federal court is 30 days from the day that any defendant receives a copy of the state-court pleading on which the removal is based. • If a later-served defendant seeks to remove a case to federal court more than 30 days after the day any other defendant received the pleading, the removal is untimely even if effectuated within 30 days after the removing defendant received the pleading. One theory underlying this doctrine is that all defendants must consent to remove a case to federal court, and a defendant who has waited longer than 30 days to remove does not have the capacity to consent to removal. 28 USCA § 1446(b). See NOTICE OF REMOVAL. [Cases: Removal of Cases ↷79(1).] single demise. See DEMISE.

single-element means claim. See single-means claim under PATENT CLAIM.

single-entry bookkeeping. See BOOKKEEPING.

single-filing rule. Civil-rights law. The principle that an administrative charge filed by one plaintiff in a civil-rights suit (esp. a Title VII suit) will satisfy the administrative-filing requirements for all coplaintiffs who are making claims for the same act of discrimination. • But this rule will not usu. protect a coplaintiff’s claims if the coplaintiff also filed an administrative charge, against the same employer, in which different discriminatory acts were complained of, because the administrative agency (usu. the EEOC) and the employer are entitled to rely on the allegations someone makes in an administrative charge. [Cases: Civil Rights ↷1517.] single-impulse plan. See SINGLE-LARCENY DOCTRINE.

single-juror instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

single-larceny doctrine. (1969) Criminal law. The principle that the taking of different items of property belonging to either the same or different owners at the same time and place constitutes one act of larceny if the theft is part of one larcenous plan, as when it involves essentially one continuous act or if control over the property is exercised simultaneously. • The thief’s intent determines the number of occurrences. — Also termed single-impulse plan; single-larceny rule; single-criminal-intent doctrine. single-premium deferred annuity. See ANNUITY.

single-premium insurance. See single-premium life insurance under LIFE INSURANCE.

single-premium life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

single-publication rule. The doctrine that a plaintiff in a libel suit against a publisher has only one claim for each mass publication, not a claim for every book or issue in that run. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷26.]

single-purpose project. A facility that is designed, built, and used for one reason only, such as to generate electricity. • This term most often refers to large, complex, expensive projects such as power plants, chemical-processing plants, mines, and toll roads. Projects of this type are often funded through project financing, in which a special-purpose entity is established to perform no function other than to develop, own, and operate the facility, the idea being to limit the number of the entity's creditors and thus provide protection for the project's lenders. See project financing under FINANCING; SPECIAL-PURPOSE ENTITY; BANKRUPTCY-REMOTE ENTITY.

single-recovery rule. See ONE-SATISFACTION RULE.

single-registration rule. Copyright. The U.S. Copyright Office doctrine that permits only one registration for each original work. • Exceptions to the rule are routinely made for unpublished works that are later published. Generally, revised works cannot be registered a second time if the revisions are not substantial, but the creator may be allowed to file a supplemental registration. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷50.16.]

single-source requirement. Under the common-law tort of false advertising, the necessity to show that the plaintiff is the only supplier of the genuine goods in question and that buyers would have bought the plaintiff's goods if the true nature of the defendant's goods had been known. Ely-Norris Safe Co. v. Mosler Safe Co., 7 F.2d 603 (2d Cir. 1925). • This is a narrow exception to the common-law rule that the tort of false advertising applies only in instances of passing off, trade defamation, or trade disparagement. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷19.]

singles' penalty. See MARRIAGE BONUS.

single transferable vote. See VOTE (1).

singular, adj. 1. Individual; each <all and singular>. 2. Civil law. Of or relating to separate interests in property, rather than the estate as a whole <singular succession>.

singular successor. See SUCCESSOR.

singular title. See TITLE (2).

singuli in solidum (sing-gyə-lī in sol-ə-dəm). [Latin] Hist. Each for the whole.

"Where there are several co-obligants in one obligation, each bound in full performance, they are said to be liable singuli in solidum; and where each is liable only for his own proportion of the debt, they are said to be liable pro rata." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 580 (4th ed. 1894).

sinking fund. See FUND (1).

sinking-fund bond. See BOND (3).

sinking-fund debenture. See DEBENTURE.

si non jure seminis, saltem jure soli (sī non joor-ee sem-i-nis, sal-tem joor-ee soh-lī). [Law Latin] Hist. If not by right of seed, at least by right of soil.

si non omnes (sī non om-nee-z). [Latin "if not all"] Hist. A writ allowing two or more judges to proceed in a case if the whole commission cannot be present on the assigned day.

sin tax. See TAX.

SIPA (see-pə). abbr. SECURITIES INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT.

si parcere ei sine suo periculo non potest (sī pah-rsar-ee ee-i sī-nee s[y]oo-oh pə-rik-yə-loh non poh-test). [Latin] Roman law. If he could not spare him except at his own peril. • This phrase defined the circumstances in which a defendant could plead self-defense.

si paret (sī par-et). [Latin] If it appears. • In Roman law, this phrase was part of the praetor's formula by which judges were appointed and told how they were to decide.

SIPC. abbr. SECURITIES INVESTOR PROTECTION CORPORATION.

si petatur tantum (sī pi-tay-tər tan-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. If asked only.

"In blench holdings, where the return for the lands is generally elusory, that return is for the most part due and payable si petatur tantum; and this clause, by universal practice, has been interpreted to mean, if asked only within the year (si petatur intra annum). If the duty is not demanded within the year, the vassal is not liable for it." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 575 (4th ed. 1894).

si prius (sī pri-əs). [Law Latin] If before. • This phrase is used in a writ summoning a jury.

si quis (sī kwis). [Latin] Roman law. If any one. • This term was used in praetorian edicts. In England, it was also mentioned in notices posted in parish churches requesting anyone who knows of just cause why a candidate for holy orders should not be ordained to inform the bishop.

SIR. abbr. 1. SELF-INSURED RETENTION. 2. STATUTORY INVENTION REGISTRATION.

si recognoscat (sī rek-əg-nos-kat). [Latin "if he acknowledges"] Hist. A writ allowing a creditor to obtain money counted — that is, a specific sum that the debtor had acknowledged in county court to be owed.

si sine liberis decesserit (sī sī-nee lib-ər-is di-ses-ər-it). [Latin] Hist. If he shall have died without children.

si sit admodum grave (sī sit ad-moh-dəm gray-vee). [Latin] Hist. If it be very heinous.

si sit incompomentis, fatuus, et naturaliter idiota (sī sit in-kom-pəs men-tis, fach-oo-əs et nach-ə-ray-li-tər id-ee-oh-tə). [Law Latin] Scots law. If he is of unsound mind, fatuous, and naturally an idiot. • The phrase appeared in reference to an inquiry that was posed to a jury required to make an idiocy determination.

si sit legitimæ ætatis (sī sit lə-jit-ə-mee ee-tay-tis). [Latin] Hist. If he (or she) is of lawful age.

sist (sist), n. Scots law. An order staying or suspending legal proceedings. — Also termed supersedere.

sist, vb. Scots law. 1. To bring into court; to summon. 2. To stay (a judicial proceeding, etc.), esp. by court order. 3. To intervene in legal proceedings as an interested third party, e.g., a trustee.

sister. (bef. 12c) A female who has one parent or both parents in common with another person.

consanguine sister (kahn-sang-gwin or kən-san-gwin). Civil law. A sister who has the same father, but a different mother.

half sister. A sister who has the same father or the same mother, but not both.

sister-german. A full sister; the daughter of both of one's parents. See GERMAN.

stepsister. (15c) The daughter of one's stepparent.

uterine sister (yoo-tər-in). Civil law. A sister who has the same mother, but a different father.

sister corporation. See CORPORATION.

sisterhood. See GIFTING CLUB.

sister-in-law. (15c) The sister of one's spouse or the wife of one's brother. • The wife of one's spouse's brother is also sometimes considered a sister-in-law. Pl. sisters-in-law.

sistership exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

sistren, n. Sisters, esp. those considered spiritual kin (such as female colleagues on a court). Cf. BRETHREN.

sit, vb. (14c) 1. (Of a judge) to occupy a judicial seat <Judge Wilson sits on the trial court for the Eastern District of Arkansas>. 2. (Of a judge) to hold court or perform official functions <is the judge sitting this week?>. 3. (Of a court or legislative body) to hold proceedings <the U.S. Supreme Court sits from October to June>.

sit-and-squirm test. A judicial doctrine, used esp. by administrative-law judges in disability-claim cases, whereby a court subjectively determines a set of traits that it expects the claimant to exhibit and denies relief if the claimant fails to exhibit those traits. • The doctrine is adhered to only in some federal circuits and has been expressly rejected in others. Generally, an administrative-law judge may observe a claimant's demeanor in evaluating the credibility of the complaint. Yet it is error for the judge to base a judgment solely on personal observation and not on the record as a whole.

sit-down strike. See STRIKE.

site. 1. A place or location; esp., a piece of property set aside for a specific use. 2. SCITE.

site assessment. See transactional audit under AUDIT.

site plan. (1937) An illustrated proposal for the development or use of a particular piece of real property. • The illustration is usu. a map or sketch of how the property will appear if the proposal is accepted. Some zoning ordinances require a developer to present a site plan to the city council and to receive council approval before certain projects may be completed. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↻ 245, 372.1.]

sit-in, n. An organized, passive demonstration in which participants usu. sit (or lie) down and refuse to leave a place as a means of protesting against policies or activities. • Sit-ins originated as a communal act of protesting racial segregation. People who were discriminated against would sit in places that were prohibited to them and refuse to leave. Later the term came to refer to any group protest, as with anti-Vietnam War protests and some labor strikes. Cf. sit-down strike under STRIKE.

sitio ganado mayor (sit-yoh gah-nah-doh mī-yor). Spanish & Mexican law. A square unit of land with each side measuring 5,000 varas (about 4,583 yards). • This term is found in old land grants in states that were formerly Spanish provinces or governed by Mexico. See VARA. Spanish & Mexican law. A unit of land shaped like a square with each side measuring 5,000 varas (about 4,583 yards). • This term is sometimes found in old land grants in states that were formerly Spanish colonies or governed by Mexico. See VARA.

slack tax. See pickup tax under TAX.

slamming. The practice by which a long-distance telephone company wrongfully appropriates a customer's service from another company, usu. through an unauthorized transfer or by way of a transfer authorization that is disguised as something else, such as a form to sign up for a free vacation. [Cases: Telecommunications ↷ 863.]

slander, n. (13c) 1. A defamatory assertion expressed in a transitory form, esp. speech. • Damages for slander — unlike those for libel — are not presumed and thus must be proved by the plaintiff (unless the defamation is slander per se). [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷ 1, 24, 32, 33.] 2. The act of making such a statement. See DEFAMATION. Cf. LIBEL (1). — slander, vb. — slandorous, adj.

"Although libel and slander are for the most part governed by the same principles, there are two important differences: (1) Libel is not merely an actionable tort, but also a criminal offence, whereas slander is a civil injury only. (2) Libel is in all cases actionable per se; but slander is, save in special cases, actionable only on proof of actual damage. This distinction has been severely criticised as productive of great injustice." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 139 (17th ed. 1977).

slander per quod. (18c) Slander that does not qualify as slander per se, thus forcing the plaintiff to prove special damages. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷ 11, 33.]

slander per se. (1841) Slander for which special damages need not be proved because it imputes to the plaintiff any one of the following: (1) a crime involving moral turpitude, (2) a loathsome disease (such as a sexually transmitted disease), (3) conduct that would adversely affect one's business or profession, or (4) unchastity (esp. of a woman). [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷ 7(2), 7(16), 8, 9(1), 33.]

trade slander. Trade defamation that is spoken but not recorded. See trade defamation under DEFAMATION. Cf. trade libel under LIBEL.

slander per se. See SLANDER.

SLAPP (slap). abbr. A strategic lawsuit against public participation — that is, a suit brought by a developer, corporate executive, or elected official to stifle those who protest against some type of high-dollar initiative or who take an adverse position on a public-interest issue (often involving the environment). — Also termed SLAPP suit. [Cases: Pleading ↻358, 360.]

slate. A list of candidates, esp. for political office or a corporation's board of directors, that usu. includes as many candidates for election as there are representatives being elected. [Cases: Corporations ↻283(2).]

slavery. 1. A situation in which one person has absolute power over the life, fortune, and liberty of another. 2. The practice of keeping individuals in such a state of bondage or servitude. • Slavery was outlawed by the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↻1101; Slaves ↻1.]

"Slavery was a big problem for the Constitution makers. Those who profited by it insisted on protecting it; those who loathed it dreaded even more the prospect that to insist on abolition would mean that the Constitution would die aborning. So the Framers reached a compromise, of sorts. The words 'slave' and 'slavery' would never be mentioned, but the Constitution would safeguard the 'peculiar institution' from the abolitionists." Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 493 (1992).

slavery, badge of. See BADGE OF SLAVERY.

slay, vb. To kill (a person), esp. in battle.

slayer rule. (1986) The doctrine that neither a person who kills another nor the killer's heirs can share in the decedent's estate. — Also termed slayer's rule.

slayer statute. Slang. A statute that prohibits a person's killer from taking any part of the decedent's estate through will or intestacy. • The Uniform Probate Code and nearly all jurisdictions have a slayer-statute provision. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻51; Wills ↻711.]

slight care. See CARE.

slight diligence. See DILIGENCE.

slight evidence. See EVIDENCE.

slight-evidence rule. (1936) 1. The doctrine that if evidence establishes the existence of a conspiracy between at least two other people, the prosecution need only offer slight evidence of a defendant's knowing participation or intentional involvement in the conspiracy to secure a conviction. • This rule was first announced in Tomplain v. United States, 42 F.2d 202, 203 (5th Cir. 1930). In the decades after Tomplain, other circuits adopted the rule, but not until the 1970s did the rule become widespread. Since then, the rule has been widely criticized and, in most circuits, abolished. See, e.g., United States v. Durrive, 902 F.2d 1379, 1380 n.* (7th Cir. 1990). But its vitality remains undiminished in some jurisdictions. [Cases: Conspiracy ↻47.] 2. The doctrine that only slight evidence of a defendant's participation in a conspiracy need be offered in order to admit a coconspirator's out-of-court statement under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. See Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻427.]

slight negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

See punitive damages under DAMAGES <although the jury awarded only $7,000 in actual damages, it also awarded $500,000 in smart money>.

smash-and-grab. Slang. The act of breaking a window or other glass barrier in order to seize goods beyond it before fleeing. • In a smash-and-grab, the criminal usu. breaks a shop window or a glass display case with a handheld tool and seizes whatever merchandise is nearest. Cf. RAM RAID.

SMBS. abbr. See stripped mortgage-backed security under SECURITY.

Smith Act. A 1948 federal antisection law that criminalizes advocating the forcible or violent overthrow of the government. 18 USCA § 2385. [Cases: Insurrection and Sedition ↻1.]

"The Smith Act is aimed at the advocacy and teaching of concrete action for the forcible overthrow of the government, and not at advocacy of principles divorced from action. The essential distinction is that those to whom the advocacy is addressed must be urged to do something, now or in the future, rather than merely to believe in something." 70 Am. Jur. 2d Sedition, Etc. § 63, at 59 (1987).

Smithsonian Institution. An independent trust of the United States responsible for conducting scientific and scholarly research; publishing its results; maintaining over 140 million artifacts, works of art, and scientific specimens for study, display, and circulation throughout the nation; and engaging in educational programming and international cooperative research. • It was created in 1846 to give effect to the terms of the will of a British scientist, James Smithson, who left his entire estate to the United States.

smoking gun. (1974) A piece of physical or documentary evidence that conclusively impeaches an adversary on an outcome-determinative issue or destroys the adversary's credibility.

Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. Hist. A 1930 protectionist statute that raised tariff rates on most articles imported into the U.S., and provoked U.S. trading partners to institute comparable tariff increases. • This act is often cited as a factor in precipitating and spreading the Great Depression. The Act was named for the legislators who sponsored it, Senator Reed Smoot of Utah and Representative Willis C. Hawley of Oregon. It is sometimes called the Grundy Tariff for Joseph Grundy, who was president of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association and the chief lobbyist supporting the Act. — Also termed Tariff Act of 1930.

— soca (soh-kə or sok-ə), n. See SOC.

socage (sok-ij). Hist. A type of lay tenure in which a tenant held lands in exchange for providing the lord husbandry-related (rather than military) service. • Socage, the great residuary tenure, was any free tenure that did not fall within the definition of knight-service, serjeanty, or frankalmoin. Cf. KNIGHT-SERVICE; VILLENAGE.

"If they [the peasant's duties] were fixed -- for instance, helping the lord with sowing or reaping at specified times -- the tenure was usually called socage. This was originally the tenure of socmen; but it became . . . a generic term for all free services other than knight-service, serjeanty, or spiritual service." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 260 (3d ed. 1990).

free socage. Socage in which the services were both certain and honorable. • By the statute 12 Car. 2, ch. 24 (1660), all the tenures by knight-service were, with minor exceptions, converted into free socage. — Also termed free and common socage; liberum socagium.

villein socage (vil-ən). Socage in which the services, though certain, were of a baser nature than those provided under free socage.

socida (sə-si-də), n. [Latin] Civil law. A contract of bailment by which the bailee assumes the risk of loss; specif., a bailment by which a person delivers animals to another for a fee, on the condition that if any animals perish, the bailee will be liable for the loss.

societas (sə-sī-ə-tas), n. [Latin] Roman law. A partnership between two or more people agreeing to share profits and losses; a partnership contract.

"Societas in its widest acceptation denotes two or more persons who unite or combine for the prosecution of a common object; in its more restricted sense it denotes a mercantile partnership . . . , the individual members being termed Socii." William Ramsay, A Manual of Roman Antiquities 316 (Rodolfo Lanciani ed., 15th ed. 1894).

societas leonina (sə-sī-ə-tas lee-ə-nī-nə). [Latin "partnership with a lion"] Roman law. An illegal partnership in which a partner shares in only the losses, not the profits; a partnership in which one person takes the lion's share. — Also termed leonina societas.

"But an arrangement by which one party should have all the gain was not recognized as binding; it was considered as contrary to the nature and purposes of the societas, the aim of which was gain for all the parties concerned. Such an arrangement the lawyers called societas leonina, a partnership like that which the lion in the fable imposed upon the cow, the sheep, and the she-goat, his associates in the chase." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 231-32 (1881).

societas navalis (sə-sī-ə-tas nə-vay-lis), n. [Latin] Hist. A naval partnership; an assembly of vessels for mutual protection. — Also termed admiralitas.

socna (sok-nə). Hist. A privilege; a liberty; a franchise.

Socratic method. (18c) A technique of philosophical discussion — and of law-school instruction — by which the questioner (a law professor) questions one or more followers (the law students), building on each answer with another question, esp. an analogy incorporating the answer. • This method takes its name from the Greek philosopher Socrates, who lived in Athens from about 469-399 B.C. His method is a traditional one in law schools, primarily because it forces law students to think through issues rationally and deductively — a skill required in the practice of law. Most law professors who employ this method call on students randomly, an approach designed to teach students to think quickly, without stage fright. — Also termed question-and-answer method. See QUESTION-AND-ANSWER (3). Cf. CASEBOOK METHOD; HORNBOOK METHOD.

"[Socrates] himself did not profess to be capable of teaching anything, except consciousness of ignorance He called his method of discussion (the Socratic method) obstetrics . . . because it was an art of inducing his interlocutors to develop their own ideas under a catechetical system." 5 The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia 5746 (rev. ed. 1914).

socrus (sok-rəs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A mother-in-law.

SODDI defense (sahd-ee). Slang. The some-other-dude-did-it defense; a claim that somebody else committed a crime, usu. made by a criminal defendant who cannot identify the third party.

sodomy (sod-ə-mee), n. (13c) 1. Oral or anal copulation between humans, esp. those of the same sex. [Cases: Sodomy ↻1.] 2. Oral or anal copulation between a human and an animal; bestiality. — Also termed buggery; crime against nature; abominable and detestable crime against nature; unnatural offense; unspeakable crime; (archaically) sodomitry; (in Latin) crimen innotinatum. Cf. PEDERASTY. — sodomize, vb. — sodomitic, adj. — sodomist, sodomite, n.

"Sodomitry is a carnal copulation against nature; to wit, of man or woman in the same sex, or of either of them with beasts." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 219 (1759).

"Sodomy was not a crime under the common law of England but was an ecclesiastical offense only. It was made a felony by an English statute so early that it is a common-law felony in this country, and statutes expressly making it a felony were widely adopted. 'Sodomy' is a generic term including both 'bestiality' and 'buggery.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 465 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated sodomy. (1965) Criminal sodomy that involves force or results in serious bodily injury to the victim in addition to mental injury and emotional distress. • Some laws provide that sodomy involving a minor is automatically aggravated sodomy. [Cases: Sodomy ⇨ 1.]

Cf. BARRISTER. 5. See special agent under INSURANCE AGENT. 6. A prosecutor (in some jurisdictions, such as solicitor general. (usu. cap.) (17c) The second-highest-ranking legal officer in a government (after the attorney general); esp., the chief courtroom lawyer for the executive branch. — Abbr. SG. Pl. solicitors general.

"By [federal] law, only the Solicitor General or his designee can conduct and argue before the Supreme Court cases 'in which the United States is interested.' Thus, if a trial court appoints a special, independent prosecutor in order to prosecute a criminal contempt of court, that court-appointed special prosecutor cannot represent the United States in seeking Supreme Court review of any lower court decision unless the Solicitor General authorizes the filing of such a petition. . . . Although the Solicitor General serves at the pleasure of the President, by tradition the Solicitor General also acts with independence. Thus, if the Solicitor General does not believe in the legal validity of the arguments that the government wants presented, he will refuse to sign the brief. In close cases the Solicitor General will sign the brief but tag on a disclaimer that has become known as 'tying a tin can.' The disclaimer would state, for example, 'The foregoing is presented as the position of the Internal Revenue Service.' The justices would then know that the Solicitor General, although not withholding a legal argument, was not personally sponsoring or adopting the particular legal position." Ronald D. Rotunda & John E. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law § 2.2, at 86-88 (3d ed. 1999).

solidarity. (1875) The state of being jointly and severally liable (as for a debt). See solidary obligation under OBLIGATION. [Cases: Action ↻14.] — solidarily, adv.

solidary (sol-ə-der-ee), adj. (Of a liability or obligation) joint and several. See JOINT AND SEVERAL. [Cases: Action ↻14.]

"It is a single debt of £100 owing by each of them, in such fashion that each of them may be compelled to pay the whole of it, but that when it is once paid by either of them, both are discharged from it. Obligations of this description may be called solidary, since in the language of Roman law, each of the debtors is bound in solidum instead of pro parte; that is to say, for the whole, and not for a proportionate part. A solidary obligation, therefore, may be defined as one in which two or more debtors owe the same thing to the same creditor." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 462-63 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

solidary liability. See LIABILITY.

Solomon of New York. 10 USCA § 983. [Cases: Colleges and Universities ↻4, 6(5).]

solo practitioner. See SOLE PRACTITIONER.

solum italicum (soh-ləm ɪ-tal-ə-kəm). [Latin "Italian land"] Roman law. Land in Italy (an extension of the old ager Romanus) needing, for full ownership to pass, to be transferred by formal methods, such as mancipatio or cessio in iure. Cf. solum provinciale.

solum provinciale (soh-ləm prə-vin-shee-ay-lee). [Latin "provincial land"] Roman law. Provincial land ultimately held by the Emperor or state, with private holders having only, in theory, a possessory title without the right to transfer the property by formal methods, as distinguished from solum italicum. • Justinian abolished all distinctions between the two, allowing all land to be conveyed by traditio. Cf. SOLUM ITALICUM.

"Ownership of provincial land. The dominium of this was in Caesar or the populus according as it was an imperial or a senatorial province. . . . The holders were practically owners, but as they were not domini formal methods of transfer were not applicable. The holdings were however transferable informally. . . . The case disappeared when Justinian abolished the distinction between Italic and provincial land. Not all land in the provinces was solum provinciale: many provincial communities were given ius italicum, the chief result being that the land was in the dominium of the holder and not of the State, so that it could be transferred and claimed at law by civil law methods." W.W. Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian 190 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

solus cum sola in loco suspecto (soh-ləs kəm soh-lə in loh-koh sə-spek-toh). [Law Latin] Hist. A man alone with a woman in a suspicious place.

Sonny Bono Copyright Term Extension Act. Copyright. A federal law extending the copyright term by 20 years for all works published in the U.S. after January 1, 1978, and settling the copyright term for works created before 1978 as 95 years from the original copyright date. • Before the extension, the copyright term was the life of the author plus 50 years. Pub. L. 105-298, 112 Stat. 2827. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨33.]

Son-of-Sam law. (1981) A state statute that prohibits a convicted criminal from profiting by selling his or her story rights to a publisher or filmmaker. • State law usu. authorizes prosecutors to seize royalties from a convicted criminal and to place the money in an escrow account for the crime victim’s benefit. This type of law was first enacted in New York in 1977, in response to the lucrative book deals that publishers offered David Berkowitz, the serial killer who called himself “Son of Sam.” In 1992, the U.S. Supreme Court declared New York’s Son-of-Sam law unconstitutional as a content-based speech regulation, prompting many states to amend their laws in an attempt to avoid constitutionality problems. Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. New York State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 112 S.Ct. 501 (1992). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨1221.]

sound, adj. (12c) 1. (Of health, mind, etc.) good; whole; free from disease or disorder. [Cases: Mental Health ⇨3.1.] 2. (Of property) good; marketable. 3. (Of discretion) exercised equitably under the circumstances. — soundness, n.

sound, vb. (18c) 1. To be actionable (in) <her claims for physical injury sound in tort, not in contract>. 2. To be recoverable (in) <his tort action sounds in damages, not in equitable relief>.

sound health. Insurance. 1. A policy applicant’s good mental and physical condition; a state of health characterized by a lack of grave impairment or disease, or of any ailment that seriously affects the applicant’s health. [Cases: Insurance ⇨1758, 3003(8).] 2. GOOD HEALTH.

sound mind. 1. MIND (2). 2. See testamentary capacity under CAPACITY (3).

Sound Recording Amendment of 1972. A Copyright Act of 1909 amendment that established copyright protection for sound recordings. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨10.2.]

source, n. The originator or primary agent of an act, circumstance, or result <she was the source of the information> <the side business was the source of income>.

source code. Copyright. The nonmachine language used by a computer programmer to create a program. • If it is not included with the software sold to the public, source code is protected by trade secret laws as well as copyright and patent laws. Source code may be deposited with the U.S. Copyright Office but, because of the need to protect a trade secret, and because a skilled programmer could figure out how to duplicate the source code's functions without necessarily copying it, strategic parts may be blacked out. Cf. OBJECT CODE. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ◊10.4.]

source of law. (1892) Something (such as a constitution, treaty, statute, or custom) that provides authority for legislation and for judicial decisions; a point of origin for law or legal analysis. — Also termed fontis juris.

"The term 'sources of law' is ordinarily used in a much narrower sense than will be attributed to it here. In the literature of jurisprudence the problem of 'sources' relates to the question: Where does the judge obtain the rules by which to decide cases? In this sense, among the sources of law will be commonly listed: statutes, judicial precedents, custom, the opinion of experts, morality, and equity. In the usual discussions these various sources of law are analyzed and some attempt is made to state the conditions under which each can appropriately be drawn upon in the decision of legal controversies. Curiously, when a legislature is enacting law we do not talk about the 'sources' from which it derives its decision as to what the law shall be, though an analysis in these terms might be more enlightening than one directed toward the more restricted function performed by judges. Our concern here will be with 'sources' in a much broader sense than is usual in the literature of jurisprudence. Our interest is not so much in sources of laws, as in sources of law. From whence does the law generally draw not only its content but its force in men's lives?" Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 69 (1968).

"In the context of legal research, the term 'sources of law' can refer to three different concepts which should be distinguished. One, sources of law can refer to the origins of legal concepts and ideas. . . . Two, sources of law can refer to governmental institutions that formulate legal rules. . . . Three, sources of law can refer to the published manifestations of the law. The books, computer databases, microforms, optical disks, and other media that contain legal information are all sources of law." J. Myron Jacobstein & Roy M. Mersky, Fundamentals of Legal Research 1-2 (5th ed. 1990).

South Eastern Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks, part of the West Group's National Reporter System, containing every published appellate decision from Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia, from 1887 to date. • The first series ran from 1887 to 1939; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. S.E.; S.E.2d.

Southern Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks, part of the West Group's National Reporter System, containing every published appellate decision from Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi, from 1887 to date. • The first series ran from 1887 to 1941; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. So.; So.2d.

South Western Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks, part of the West Group's National Reporter System, containing every published appellate decision from Arkansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, and Texas, from 1886 to date. • The first series ran from 1886 to 1928; the second series ran until 1999; the third series is the current one. — Abbr. S.W.; S.W.2d.; S.W.3d.

sovereign, adj. (Of a state) characteristic of or endowed with supreme authority <sovereign nation> <sovereign immunity>.

sovereign, n. (13c) 1. A person, body, or state vested with independent and supreme authority. 2. The ruler of an independent state. — Also spelled sovran. See SOVEREIGNTY.

sovereign equality. Int'l law. The principle that nations have the right to enjoy territorial integrity and political independence, free from intervention by other nations. • The United Nations "is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members." UN Charter art. 2, § 1. [Cases: International Law ◊10.45(1).]

sovereign people. (17c) The political body consisting of the collective number of citizens and qualified electors who possess the powers of sovereignty and exercise them through their chosen representatives.

sovereign political power. See POLITICAL POWER.

sovereign power. (15c) 1. The power to make and enforce laws. 2. See sovereign political power under POLITICAL POWER.

sovereign right. (16c) A unique right possessed by a state or its agencies that enables it to carry out its official functions for the public benefit, as distinguished from certain proprietary rights that it may possess like any other private person. [Cases: States ◊21.]

sovereign state. (17c) 1. A state that possesses an independent existence, being complete in itself, without being merely part of a larger whole to whose government it is subject. 2. A political community whose members are bound together by the tie of common subjection to some central authority, whose commands those members must obey. — Also termed independent state. Cf. client state, nonsovereign state under STATE. [Cases: International Law ◊3.]

"The essence of statehood is sovereignty, the principle that each nation answers only to its own domestic order and is not accountable to a larger international community, save only to the extent it has consented to do so. Sovereign states are thus conceived as hermetically sealed units, atoms that spin around an international orbit, sometimes colliding, sometimes cooperating, but always separate and apart." David J. Bederman, International Law Frameworks 50 (2001).

part-sovereign state. A political community in which part of the powers of external sovereignty are exercised by the home government, and part are vested in or controlled by some other political body or bodies. • Such a state is not fully independent because by the conditions of its existence it is not allowed full freedom of action in external affairs.

sovereignty (sahv-[ə-]rin-tee). (18c) 1. Supreme dominion, authority, or rule. [Cases: International Law ↻8.]

popular sovereignty. A system of government in which policy choices reflect the preferences of the majority of citizens.

state sovereignty. See STATE SOVEREIGNTY.

2. The supreme political authority of an independent state. 3. The state itself.

"It is well to [distinguish] the senses in which the word Sovereignty is used. In the ordinary popular sense it means Supremacy, the right to demand obedience. Although the idea of actual power is not absent, the prominent idea is that of some sort of title to exercise control. An ordinary layman would call that person (or body of persons) Sovereign in a State who is obeyed because he is acknowledged to stand at the top, whose will must be expected to prevail, who can get his own way, and make others go his, because such is the practice of the country. Etymologically the word of course means merely superiority, and familiar usage applies it in monarchies to the monarch, because he stands first in the State, be his real power great or small." James Bryce, Studies in History and Jurisprudence 504-05 (1901).

external sovereignty. The power of dealing on a nation's behalf with other national governments.

internal sovereignty. The power enjoyed by a governmental entity of a sovereign state, including affairs within its own territory and powers related to the exercise of external sovereignty.

spam. Unsolicited commercial e-mail. [Cases: Telecommunications ↻1343.]

sparsim (spahr-sim). [Latin] Hist. Scattered; here and there. • This term was used in several situations — for example, when an action to recover for waste not only when the injury was complete, but also when the injury was partial or scattered.

"And if waste be done sparsim, or here and there, all over a wood, the whole wood shall be recovered; or if in several rooms of a house, the whole house shall be forfeited; because it is impracticable for the reversioner to enjoy only the identical places wasted, when lying interspersed with the other. But if waste be done only in one end of a wood (or perhaps in one room of a house) if that can be conveniently separated from the rest, that part only is the locus vastatus, or thing wasted, and that only shall be forfeited to the reversioner." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 283-84 (1766).

- special pleading. (17c) 1. The common-law system of pleading that required the parties to exchange a series of court papers (such as replications, rebutters, and sur-rebutters) setting out their contentions in accordance with hypertechnical rules before a case could be tried. • Often, therefore, cases were decided on points of pleading and not on the merits. [Cases: Pleading ↷ 1.] 2. The art of drafting pleadings under this system. 3. An instance of drafting such a pleading. 4. A responsive pleading that does more than merely deny allegations, as by introducing new matter to justify an otherwise blameworthy act. 5. An argument that is unfairly slanted toward the speaker's viewpoint because it omits unfavorable facts or authorities and develops only favorable ones.
- special plea in bar. See PLEA IN BAR.
- special plea in error. At common law, a plea alleging some extraneous matter as a ground for defeating a writ of error (such as a release or expiration of the time within which error can be brought), to which the plaintiff in error must reply or demur.

species (spee-shee). 1. A taxonomic class of organisms uniquely distinguished from other classes by shared characteristics and usu. by an inability to interbreed with members of other classes.

candidate species. Environmental law. Plants and animals identified by the Fish and Wildlife Service or National Marine Fisheries Service as potentially endangered or threatened but not of high enough priority to develop a proposed listing regulation under the Endangered Species Act. • Candidate species are not protected by federal law. — Also termed listed species.

endangered species. A species in danger of becoming extinct; esp., under federal law, a species that is in danger of extinction throughout all or a significant part of its range. • Federal law excludes from the definition a species of the class Insecta if the Environmental Protection Agency determines that it constitutes a pest whose protection would present a significant risk to the human population. 50 CFR § 81. [Cases: Environmental Law ↻528.]

threatened species. A species that, within the foreseeable future, is likely to become an endangered species throughout all or a significant part of its range. 16

USCA § 1532(20). [Cases: Environmental Law ↷ 528.]

2. A specific class or kind of thing within a larger, general class. • For example, tort refers to a general class or genus. Slander refers to a specific kind of tort. Cf. GENUS. 3. Patents. An element, usu. one of several mutually exclusive alternatives, that may be used in an invention to achieve a desired result <magnetic metals, including iron and steel>. • Species may be structures, steps, parts, compounds, and so on.

ultimate species. A species that has been fully and narrowly defined. • For example, a species may be defined generally as “magnetic metals, including iron and steel,” or particularly, such as “sodium chloride.”

species facti (spee-shee-eez or spee-sheez fak-ti). [Latin] Scots law. The particular character of the thing done. • The phrase appeared in reference to the specific criminal act or civil wrong alleged.

specific, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or designating a particular or defined thing; explicit <specific duties>. 2. Of or relating to a particular named thing <specific item>. 3. Conformable to special requirements <specific performance>. — specificity (spes-ə-fis-i-tee), n. — specifically, adv.

specific appropriation. See APPROPRIATION (2).

specificatio (spes-ə-fi-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. species “form” + facere “to make”] Roman & civil law. 1. A giving of form to materials; the process of making something new from existing property. 2. A mode of acquisition by which a person makes something new from existing material (for example, wine from grapes or a ship from timber). See ACCESSION (4). Pl. specifications.

specification. (17c) 1. The act of making a detailed statement, esp. of the measurements, quality, materials, or other items to be provided under a contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷ 199(1).] 2. The statement so made. 3. Patents. The part of a patent application describing how an invention is made and used, the best mode of operation of the claimed invention, and the inventor’s claims. • The specification must be clear and complete enough to enable a person of ordinary skill in the art to make and use the invention. It must also disclose the best mode of working the invention. The term may also refer to the description as separate from the claims. — Abbr. spec. Cf. PATENT CLAIM. [Cases: Patents ↷ 99.]

“The specification and claims of a patent, particularly if the invention be at all complicated, constitute one of the most difficult legal instruments to draw with accuracy; and, in view of the fact that valuable inventions are often placed in the hands of inexperienced persons to prepare such specifications and claims, it is no matter of surprise that the latter frequently fail to describe with requisite certainty the exact invention of the patentee, and err either in claiming that which the patentee had not in fact invented, or in omitting some element which was a valuable or essential part of his actual invention.” Topliff v. Topliff, 145 U.S. 156, 170, 12 S.Ct. 825, 831 (1892).

substitute specification. A patent specification that is rewritten (1) to include amendments made to the specification after filing; (2) to replace an illegible or unreadable original; or (3) to prepare the papers for printing. • A substitute specification must be accompanied by a statement that it contains no new matter, and by a copy showing what has been added and deleted since the original specification. Substitute specifications are allowed under 37 CFR 1.125. — Also termed rewritten specification. [Cases: Patents ↷ 109.]

4. A statement of charges against one who is accused of an offense, esp. a military offense. [Cases: Military Justice ↷ 950–971.]

“A charge sets forth an offense — that is, a particular kind of act or conduct that the governing rules define as entailing liability to prescribed penalties — of which the accused is alleged to be guilty. A specification states what the accused is alleged to have done which, if true, constitutes an instance of the offense indicated in the charge. An accused must be found guilty of a charge before a penalty can be imposed.” Henry M. Robert, Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised § 61, at 636 (10th ed. 2002).

5. The acquisition of title to materials belonging to another person by converting those materials into a new and different form, as by changing grapes into wine, lumber into shelving, or corn into liquor. • The effect is that the original owner of the materials loses the property rights in them and is left with a right of action for their original value. — Abbr. spec.

specific-intent defense. Criminal law. A defendant’s claim that he or she did not have the capacity (often supposedly because of intoxication or mental illness) to form the intent necessary for committing the crime alleged. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 48–51, 55.]

specific jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

specific legacy. See LEGACY.

specific legatee. See LEGATEE.

specific lien. See LIEN.

specific main motion. See incidental main motion under MOTION (2).

specific objection. See OBJECTION.

specific performance. (18c) The rendering, as nearly as practicable, of a promised performance through a judgment or decree; specif., a court-ordered remedy that requires precise fulfillment of a legal or contractual obligation when monetary damages are inappropriate or inadequate, as when the sale of real estate or a rare article is involved. • Specific performance is an equitable remedy that lies within the court's discretion to award whenever the common-law remedy is insufficient, either because damages would be inadequate or because the damages could not possibly be established. — Also termed specific relief. [Cases: Specific Performance ⇨ 1.]

"In essence, the remedy of specific performance enforces the execution of a contract according to its terms, and it may therefore be contrasted with the remedy of damages, which is compensation for non-execution. In specific performance, execution of the contract is enforced by the power of the Court to treat disobedience of its decree as contempt, for which the offender may be imprisoned until he is prepared to comply with the decree. Actually, . . . it is not strictly accurate to say that the Court enforces execution of the contract according to its terms, for the Court will not usually intervene until default upon the contract has occurred, so that enforcement by the Court is later in time than performance carried out by the person bound, without the intervention of the Court." G.W. Keeton, An Introduction to Equity 304 (5th ed. 1961).

specific personal jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

specific policy. See basic-form policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

specific-purpose rule. Insurance. The principle that a nonowner driver of a vehicle is treated as an omnibus insured under the vehicle owner's liability coverage only if the driver's actual use of the vehicle at the time of the accident is the exact use that the owner contemplated when granting permission or consent to the nonowner driver. • The time at which the bailment of the vehicle was to expire must not have passed, the place where the vehicle was being used must be as specified or contemplated by the insured, and the use of the vehicle must comport with the type of use that the insured had in mind when the bailment was created. Otherwise, the permittee's use of the vehicle will be regarded as a conversion. — Also termed conversion rule; strict rule. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2667.]

specific relief. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

specific remedy. See REMEDY.

specific tax. See TAX.

specific traverse. See common traverse under TRAVERSE.

specimen. An actual sample of something; esp., an example of a trademark as it is used in commerce. • In the field of trademarks, a specimen typically consists of a label, a container, a display, or a photograph of the mark used for selling or advertising the goods or services. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1282.]

specious, adj. Falsely appearing to be true, accurate, or just <specious argument>.

spectrograph. (1884) An electromagnetic machine that analyzes sound, esp. a human voice, by separating and mapping it into elements of frequency, time lapse, and intensity (represented by a series of horizontal and vertical bar lines) to produce a final voiceprint. See VOICEPRINT. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 339.6, 388.2.]

speculation, n. (14c) 1. The buying or selling of something with the expectation of profiting from price fluctuations <he engaged in speculation in the stock market>. 2. The act or practice of theorizing about matters over which there is no certain knowledge <the public's speculation about the assassination of John F. Kennedy>. — speculate, vb. — speculative, adj.

speculative damages. See DAMAGES.

speculative risk. See RISK.

speculative security. See SECURITY.

speculator. A knowledgeable, aggressive investor who trades securities to profit from fluctuating market prices.

speech. (bef. 12c) 1. The expression or communication of thoughts or opinions in spoken words; something spoken or uttered. See FREEDOM OF SPEECH. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1492.]

commercial speech. (1963) Communication (such as advertising and marketing) that involves only the commercial interests of the speaker and the audience, and is therefore afforded lesser First Amendment protection than social, political, or religious speech. Cf. pure speech. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1535-1541.]

corporate speech. (1959) Speech deriving from a corporation and protected under the First Amendment. • It does not lose protected status simply because of its corporate source.

hate speech. (1988) Speech that carries no meaning other than the expression of hatred for some group, such as a particular race, esp. in circumstances in which the communication is likely to provoke violence. Cf. hate crime under CRIME; group libel under LIBEL. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1808; Constitutional Law ⇨ 1560.]

pure speech. (1943) Words or conduct limited in form to what is necessary to convey the idea. • This type of speech is given the greatest constitutional protection. Cf. commercial speech; symbolic speech.

sedition speech. (1920) Speech advocating the violent overthrow of government. See SEDITION. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1580.]

speech-plus. See symbolic speech.

symbolic speech. (1966) Conduct that expresses opinions or thoughts, such as a hunger strike or the wearing of a black armband. • Symbolic speech does not enjoy the same constitutional protection that pure speech does. — Also termed speech-plus. Cf. pure speech. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷90.1(1).]

2. English law. An opinion delivered by a Law Lord; JUDGMENT (2). 3. Parliamentary law. The unit of debate; specif., one statement, usu. subject to a time limit, on one question by one member. • When finished, the speaker must relinquish the floor and ordinarily cannot yield it to another member.

Speech Clause. The First Amendment provision that “Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech.” U.S. Const. amend I. — Also termed Freedom of Speech Clause. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷1490–2304.]

Speech or Debate Clause. (1965) The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving members of Congress immunity for statements made during debate in either the House or the Senate. • This immunity is extended to other areas where it is necessary to prevent impairment of deliberations and other legitimate legislative activities, such as subpoenaing bank records for an investigation. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6., cl. 1. — Also termed Speech and Debate Clause. See congressional immunity under IMMUNITY (1). [Cases: United States ↷12.] speech-plus. See symbolic speech under SPEECH.

speedy execution. See EXECUTION.

speedy remedy. See REMEDY.

speedy trial. (18c) Criminal procedure. A trial that the prosecution, with reasonable diligence, begins promptly and conducts expeditiously. • The Sixth Amendment secures the right to a speedy trial. In deciding whether an accused has been deprived of that right, courts generally consider the length of and reason for the delay, and the prejudice to the accused. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷577.1–577.16.]

Speedy Trial Act of 1974. A federal statute establishing time limits for carrying out the major events (such as information, indictment, arraignment, and trial commencement) in the prosecution of federal criminal cases. 18 USCA §§ 3161–3174. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷577.2, 577.5.]

spending bill. See appropriations bill under BILL (3).

spending power. See POWER (3).

spendthrift, n. One who spends lavishly and wastefully; a profligate. [Cases: Spendthrifts ↷3.] — spendthrift, adj.

spendthrift trust. See TRUST.

spent bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

spe numerandae pecuniae (spee n[y]oo-mə-ran-dee pi-kyoo-nee-ee). [Law Latin] Scots law. In the hope of the money being paid.

“So, also, where one delivers a conveyance, which acknowledges receipt of the consideration price, and discharges the disponent, this does not exclude his action for the price, if the disponent, on receiving delivery, refuses payment; the disponent is still liable ex dolo, the deed having been delivered spe numerandae pecuniae.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 582 (4th ed. 1894).

separate (speer-ət), adj. Archaic. (Of a debt) recoverable; not hopeless. • In determining whether a debt could be collected, consideration was formerly given to whether the debt was desperate or separate.

spes accrescendi (speez ak-rə-sen-dī). [Latin “hope of accrual”] Hope of acquiring an extra share of a legacy or inheritance by survival.

spes obligationis (speez ob-li-gay-shee-oh-nis). [Latin] Hist. The hope of an obligation yet to emerge.

spes recuperandi (speez ri-k[y]oo-pə-ran-dī). [Latin “hope of recovery”] Hope of recovering a prize, as from a captured vessel.

spes successionis (speez sək-sesh-ee-oh-nis). [Latin “hope of succession”] Hope of succeeding to a right.

“A mere spes successionis must be distinguished from a contingent right. If Matilda has nursed her invalid friend for thirty years, she may have every hope of succeeding to the property, but she has no right.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 306 (C.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

spes successionis in destinatione (speez sək-ses[h]-ee-oh-nis in des-ti-nay-shee-oh-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. A hope of succeeding under a destination (that is, an appointment by will).

spes successionis in obligatione (speez sək-ses[h]-ee-oh-nis in ob-li-gay-shee-oh-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. A hope of succeeding to a right under an existing obligation.

Spielberg doctrine. Labor law. The policy of the National Labor Relations Board to defer to an arbitrator’s decision regarding a contract dispute if (1) the decision is not repugnant to the NLRB, (2) the arbitration proceedings provided a hearing as fair as would have been provided before the NLRB, and (3) the contract requires binding arbitration. Spielberg Mfg. Co., 112 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 86 (1955). Cf. COLLYER DOCTRINE.

spigurnel (spig-ər-nel), n. Hist. An early officer of the Chancery, equivalent to the Sealer of the king’s writs in later times.

spillover. See EXTERNALITY.

spillover theory. (1985) The principle that a severance must be granted only when a defendant can show that a trial with a codefendant would substantially prejudice the defendant’s case, as when the jury might wrongly use evidence against the defendant. See BRUTON ERROR. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷622.7(8).]

“The spillover theory involves the question of whether a jury’s unfavorable impression of a defendant against whom the evidence is properly admitted will influence the way the jurors view a codefendant. . . . The test. . . is whether the jury can keep separate the evidence that is relevant to spinning. Securities. The giving of shares or preferred opportunities to buy shares in an initial public offering to key investment-banking clients in order to solicit or retain profitable business in the future.

spin-off, n. 1. A corporate divestiture in which a division of a corporation becomes an independent company and stock of the new company is distributed to the corporation's shareholders. [Cases: Corporations ↷445.] 2. The company created by this divestiture. — Also written spinoff. Cf. SPLIT-OFF; SPLIT-UP.

spirit of the law. (16c) The general meaning or purpose of the law, as opposed to its literal content. Cf. LETTER OF THE LAW. [Cases: Statutes ↷183.]

spiritual, adj. Of or relating to ecclesiastical rather than secular matters <spiritual corporation>.

spiritual corporation. See CORPORATION.

spiritual court. See ecclesiastical court under COURT.

spiritual lord. An archbishop or bishop having a seat in the House of Lords.

spiritual tenure. See TENURE.

spiritual-treatment exemption. See FAITH-HEALING EXEMPTION.

spital (spit-əl). Archaic. A hospital. — Also termed spittle.

spite fence. (1901) A fence erected solely to annoy a neighbor, as by blocking the neighbor's view or preventing the neighbor from acquiring an easement of light <the court temporarily enjoined the completion of the 25-foot spite fence>. Cf. LAWFUL FENCE. [Cases: Adjoining Landowners ↷10; Fences ↷22; Nuisance ↷3(12).]

spittle. See SPITAL.

split, vb. 1. To divide (a cause of action) into segments or parts. 2. To issue two or more shares for each old share without changing the shareholder's proportional ownership interest. See STOCK SPLIT; SPLIT-INTEREST PURCHASE OF PROPERTY. [Cases: Corporations ↷66.]

split custody. See CUSTODY (2).

split-dollar life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

split fund. See dual fund under MUTUAL FUND.

split-funded plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

split gift. See GIFT.

split income. See INCOME.

split-interest purchase of property. An arrangement between two parties to purchase an asset whereby one party (often a parent) purchases a life estate and the other party (often a child or grandchild of the life tenant) purchases a remainder interest. • Each party to a split pays the actuarial value of the interest purchased. — Often shortened to split. — Also termed joint-interest purchase.

split-interest trust. See charitable-remainder trust under TRUST.

split-level statute. See STATUTE.

split-off, n. 1. The creation of a new corporation by an existing corporation that gives its shareholders stock in the new corporation in return for their stock in the original corporation. 2. The corporation created by this process. — Also written splitoff. Cf. SPIN-OFF; SPLIT-UP.

split order. See ORDER (8).

split sentence. See SENTENCE.

splitting a cause of action. (1850) Separating parts of a demand and pursuing it piecemeal; presenting only a part of a claim in one lawsuit, leaving the rest for a second suit. • This practice has long been considered procedurally impermissible. [Cases: Action ↷53; Judgment ↷591.]

split-up, n. The division of a corporation into two or more new corporations. • The shareholders in the original corporation typically receive shares in the new corporations, and the original corporation goes out of business. — Also written splitup. Cf. SPIN-OFF; SPLIT-OFF.

split verdict. See VERDICT.

spoiled ballot. See BALLOT (2).

spoils system. The practice of awarding government jobs to supporters and friends of the victorious political party. Cf. MERIT SYSTEM. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷25.]

spoliation (sloh-lee-ay-shən), n. (18c) 1. The intentional destruction, mutilation, alteration, or concealment of evidence, usu. a document. • If proved, spoliation may be used to establish that the evidence was unfavorable to the party responsible. [Cases: Evidence ↷78; Federal Civil Procedure ↷1636; Pretrial Procedure ↷434.] 2. The seizure of personal or real property by violent means; the act of pillaging. 3. The taking of a benefit properly belonging to another. 4. Eccles. law. The wrongful deprivation of a cleric of his benefice. — spoliare (sloh-lee-ayt), vb. — spoliator (sloh-lee-ay-tər), n.

spolium (sloh-lee-əm), n. [Latin "booty"] Roman law. Something taken from an enemy in war or plundered from a fellow-citizen. • The plural spolia was more common than the singular.

Spondesne? Spondeo (spon-deez spon-dee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. Do you agree to undertake? I undertake. • This was the special phrase, available only to citizens, that created a sponsio. See SPONSIO; STIPULATIO.

spondet peritiam artis (spon-det pə-rish-ee-əm ahr-tis). [Latin "he guarantees his professional skill"] Hist. He promised to use the skill of his art. • This phrase is used in construction contracts to indicate an implied agreement to perform in a workmanlike manner.

sponge tax. See pickup tax under TAX.

sponsalia (spon-say-lee-ə), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. A betrothal; an engagement to marry. 2. An engagement gift. — Also termed stipulatio sponsalitia.

sponsalia per verba de futuro (spon-say-lee-ə pər vər-bə dee f[y]oo-t[y]oor-oh). [Latin “espousals by words about the future”] Hist. A promise to marry in the future.

sponsalia per verba de praesenti (spon-say-lee-ə pər vər-bə dee pri-zen-ti or pree-). Eccles. law. A type of informal marriage that occurred when the parties made an informal agreement to have each other as husband and wife. • This type of informal marriage was based on nothing more than the present consent to be married but was entirely valid and would take precedence over a later formal ceremonial marriage that either of the parties attempted to contract with someone else.

sponsio (spon-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. An undertaking, available only to citizens, in the form of an answer to a question using a solemn form of words with religious overtones. • This was the original form of stipulation. See STIPULATIO.

sponsio judicialis (spon-shee-oh joo-dish-ee-ay-lis). [Latin] Roman law. A formal promise that the judge is entitled to acquire by virtue of his office. Pl. sponsiones judiciales.

sponsio ludicra (spon-shee-oh loo-di-krə). [Latin “a laughable promise”] 1. Civil law. An informal or illicit understanding that is not enforceable. 2. Scots law. An obligation that a court will not enforce because it does not concern a worthy subject; e.g., a gambling agreement. Pl. sponsiones ludicrae.

sponsion (spon-shən), n. [fr. Latin spondere “to engage”] 1. The formal pledge by which a person becomes a surety. 2. Int’l law. An ultra vires promise of an official agent (such as a general in wartime), requiring later ratification by the principal. 3. Roman law. A form of guarantee accessory to an oral contract. • Only Roman citizens could make this type of guarantee. See ADPROMISSION (1). — sponsional (spon-shən-əl), adj.

sponsor. 1. One who acts as a surety for another. 2. A legislator who proposes a bill. 3. Civil law. One who voluntarily intervenes for another without being requested to do so. 4. GODPARENT.

spontaneous abortion. See MISCARRIAGE.

spontaneous crime. See CRIME.

spontaneous declaration. (1840) Evidence. A statement that is made without time to reflect or fabricate and is related to the circumstances of the perceived occurrence. — Also termed spontaneous statement; spontaneous exclamation; spontaneous utterance. See EXCITED UTTERANCE; PRESENT SENSE IMPRESSION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 363; Evidence ⇨ 120.]

sponte (spon-tee). [Latin] Hist. Spontaneously; voluntarily. See SUA SPONTE.

sponte oblata (spon-tee ə-blay-tə). [Latin “freely offered”] Hist. A gift to the Crown.

sports franchise. See FRANCHISE (4).

sportula (spor-chə-lə), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A present; a donation, as to the poor. 2. A fee paid to certain officials for performing judicial duties. — Also termed portella.

spot, adj. Made, paid, or delivered immediately  <spot commodities>.

spot market. See MARKET.

spot price. See PRICE.

spot zoning. See ZONING.

spousal abuse. See ABUSE.

spousal allowance. See ALLOWANCE (1).

spousal consortium. See CONSORTIUM.

spousal-impooverishment provision. A section of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act allowing the stay-at-home spouse of a person residing in a nursing home to retain certain assets and some joint income, and to earn income without jeopardizing the institutionalized spouse’s eligibility for Medicaid. • Before the provision was enacted in 1988, almost all of a couple’s joint assets and the noninstitutionalized spouse’s income had to go toward the cost of the nursing-home resident’s care before Medicaid provided any support. 42 USCA § 1396r-5. [Cases: Health ⇨ 471.]

spousal labor. Family law. Work by either spouse during the marriage. • This term is typically used in community-property states.

spousal privilege. See marital privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

spousal rape. See marital rape under RAPE.

spousals. Hist. Mutual promises to marry.

spousal support. See ALIMONY.

spousal-unity doctrine. Hist. 1. Family law. The common-law rule that a husband and wife were a legal unity. • Under the spousal-unity doctrine, the husband had all rights to the possession, management, control, and alienation of property. The wife had no interests in property. — Also termed doctrine of spousal unity. Cf. LEGAL-UNITIES DOCTRINE. See MARRIED WOMEN’S PROPERTY ACTS. 2. Tax. The rule that a person and that person’s spouse are treated as one. • This rule has been repealed. — Also termed spousal-unity rule. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3566; Taxation ⇨ 3484.]

spouse. One's husband or wife by lawful marriage; a married person. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷1.]

innocent spouse. (1924) Tax. A spouse who may be relieved of liability for taxes on income that the other spouse did not include on a joint tax return. • The innocent spouse must prove that the other spouse omitted the income, that the innocent spouse did not know and had no reason to know of the omission, and that it would be unfair under the circumstances to hold the innocent spouse liable. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3566.1; Taxation ↷3484.] putative spouse. Family law. A spouse who believes in good faith that his or her invalid marriage is legally valid. See putative marriage under MARRIAGE (1). [Cases: Marriage ↷54.]

surviving spouse. A spouse who outlives the other spouse.

spouse-breach. See ADULTERY.

spray trust. See sprinkle trust under TRUST.

spread, n. 1. Banking. The difference between the interest rate that a financial institution must pay to attract deposits and the rate at which money can be loaned. 2. Securities. The difference between the highest price a buyer will pay for a security (the bid price) and the lowest price at which a seller will sell a security (the asked price). 3. Securities. The simultaneous buying and selling of one or more options or futures contracts on the same security in order to profit from the price difference. 4. In investment banking, the difference between the price the underwriter pays the issuer of the security and the price the public paid in the initial offering. • The spread compensates the underwriter for its services; it comprises the manager's fee, the underwriter's discount, and the selling-group concession or discount. — Also termed (in sense 4) gross spread; underwriting spread.

spread eagle. See STRADDLE.

spreadsheet. A multicolumn worksheet used esp. by accountants and auditors to summarize and analyze financial transactions.

spread upon the minutes. Parliamentary law. To incorporate into the minutes a statement expressing a sentiment, such as a memorial celebrating a deceased member's life.

spreta auctoritate iudicis (spree-tə awk-tor-ə-tay-tee joo-di-sis). [Law Latin] Hist. The authority of the judge being disregarded.

spreta inhibitione (spree-tə in-hi-bish-ee-oh-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. In contempt of an inhibition.

springing durable power of attorney. See springing power of attorney under POWER OF ATTORNEY.

springing executory interest. See EXECUTORY INTEREST.

springing power of attorney. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

springing use. See USE (4).

spring tide. See TIDE.

sprinkle power. In a sprinkle trust, the trustee's discretion about when and how much of the trust principal and income are to be distributed to the beneficiaries. See sprinkle trust under TRUST.

sprinkle trust. See TRUST.

spuilzie (spuul-ye), n. Scots law. 1. The wrongful taking of corporeal movable property from another's possession. • This is the Scottish equivalent of common-law conversion. 2. An action to recover wrongfully taken movables, and often for either profits made with them while in the taker's possession or reparations for unjust dispossession. — Also spelled spulzie; spulyie. — spuilzied, adj.

spurious (spyoor-ee-əs), adj. (16c) 1. Deceptively suggesting an erroneous origin; fake <spurious trademarks>. 2. Of doubtful or low quality <spurious goods that fell apart>. 3. Archaic. Of illegitimate birth <spurious offspring>.

spurious bank bill. See spurious banknote under BANKNOTE.

spurious banknote. See BANKNOTE.

spurious class action. See CLASS ACTION.

spurius (spyuur-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A bastard; the offspring of unlawful intercourse. Pl. spurii (spyuur-ee-i). See NOTHUS.

SPV. abbr. Special-purpose vehicle. See SPECIAL-PURPOSE ENTITY.

spy. One who secretly observes and collects secret information or intelligence about what another government or company is doing or plans to do; one who commits espionage. See ESPIONAGE.

squalor carceris (skway-lor kahr-sər-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. The strictness of imprisonment.

"This term means merely the strictness of imprisonment which a creditor is entitled to enforce, with the view of compelling the debtor to pay the debt, or disclose any funds which he may have concealed. It does not imply (as it did with the ancient churchmen, from whom the term is derived) anything loathsome or unhealthy in the imprisonment in Scotland, which is indeed less close than in England. Squalor carceris is not necessary in imprisonment on meditatio fugae warrant, security being all that is required in such cases." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 1032 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

squalor morbi (skway-lor mor-bi). [Law Latin] Hist. The dregs of disease.

square, n. (17c) 1. A certain portion of land within a city limit. — Also termed block. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↷721(1).] 2. A space set apart for public use. 3. In a government survey, an area measuring 24 by 24 miles.

squatter. (18c) 1. A person who settles on property without any legal claim or title. 2. A person who settles on public land under a government regulation allowing the person to acquire title upon fulfilling specified conditions. [Cases: Public Lands ↷35.]

squatter's rights. (1855) The right to acquire title to real property by adverse possession, or by preemption of public lands. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

squeeze-out, n. An action taken in an attempt to eliminate or reduce a minority interest in a corporation. Cf. FREEZE-OUT. [Cases: Corporations ↷182.3, 584.]

Squires claim. See PATENT CLAIM.

Squires doctrine. Patents. A rule of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that a utility-patent claim may incorporate drawings or tables by reference, but only when there is no practical way to express the information in words, and when referring to the artwork is a concise way to communicate the information. • The namesake case involved a numerical font designed to be readable in the dim red light inside a submarine. It is allowed only when necessary, and is not available just for the convenience of an applicant. Ex parte Squires, 133 USPQ (BNA) 598 (Bd. App. 1961). [Cases: Patents ↷100.]

SRO. abbr. See SELF-REGULATORY ORGANIZATION.

ss. abbr. 1. Sections. 2. Subscripti (i.e., signed below). 3. Sans (i.e., without). 4. (Erroneously) scilicet.

"Many possible etymologies have been suggested for this mysterious abbreviation. One is that it signifies scilicet (= namely, to wit), which is usually abbreviated sc. or scil. Another is that ss. represents "[t]he two gold letters at the ends of the chain of office or "collar" worn by the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench . . ." Max Radin, Law Dictionary 327 (1955). Mellinkoff suggests that the precise etymology is unknown: "Lawyers have been using ss for nine hundred years and still are not sure what it means." David Mellinkoff, The Language of the Law 296 (1963). In fact, though, it is a flourish deriving from the Year Books — an equivalent of the paragraph mark: "¶." Hence Lord Hardwicke's statement that ss. is nothing more than a division mark. See Jodderrell v. Cowell, 95 Eng. Rep. 222, 222 (K.B. 1737) An early formbook writer incorporated it into his forms, and ever since it has been mindlessly perpetuated by one generation after another." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 825 (2d ed. 1995).

SSA. abbr. SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

SSDI. abbr. SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY INSURANCE.

SSI. abbr. SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME.

SSS. abbr. SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM.

stabilize, vb. 1. To make firm or steadfast <to stabilize the ship>. 2. To maintain a particular level or amount <stabilize prices>.

stable stand. Hist. In forest law, a person found standing in a forest either with a bow bent, ready to shoot a deer, or close to a tree with greyhounds on a leash and ready to slip, being presumptive evidence of an intent to steal the Crown's deer.

stacking. (1982) 1. Insurance. The process of obtaining benefits from a second policy on the same claim when recovery from the first policy alone would be inadequate. [Cases: Insurance ↷2108, 2799.]

judicial stacking. The principle that a court can construe insurance policies to permit stacking, under certain circumstances, when the policies do not specifically allow stacking but public policy is best served by permitting it. [Cases: Insurance ↷2799.]

policy stacking. Stacking that is permitted by the express terms of an insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance ↷2108.]

2. A gerrymandering technique in which a large political or racial group is combined in the same district with a larger opposition group. Cf. CRACKING; PACKING. [Cases: Elections ↷12(6).]

staff attorney. 1. See ATTORNEY. 2. See CLERK (5).

staff director. See EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.

staff judge advocate. See JUDGE ADVOCATE.

stagflation (stag-flay-shən), n. A period of slow economic growth or recession characterized by high inflation, stagnant consumer demand, and high unemployment. — stagflationary, adj.

staggered board of directors. See BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

stagiarius (stay-jee-air-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. Eccles. law. A resident canon; an ecclesiastic bound to keep terms of residence. 2. A stagiary; a law student keeping terms before admission to the bar.

stake, n. (bef. 12c) 1. Something (such as property) deposited by two or more parties with a third party pending the resolution of a dispute; the subject matter of an interpleader. [Cases: Interpleader ↷21.] 2. An interest or share in a business venture. 3. Something (esp. money) bet in a wager, game, or contest. [Cases: Gaming ↷1, 67.] 4. A boundary marker used in land surveys. [Cases: Boundaries ↷5.]

stakeholder. (18c) 1. A disinterested third party who holds money or property, the right to which is disputed between two or more other parties. See INTERPLEADER. [Cases: Interpleader ↷13.] 2. A person who has an interest or concern in a business or enterprise, though not necessarily as an owner. 3. One who holds the money or valuables bet by others in a wager. [Cases: Gaming ↷27, 72.5.]

stale check. See CHECK.

stale claim. See CLAIM (3).

stalking. (bef. 12c) 1. The act or an instance of following another by stealth. 2. The offense of following or loitering near another, often surreptitiously, to annoy or harass that person or to commit a further crime such as assault or battery. • Some statutory definitions include an element that the person being stalked must reasonably feel harassed, alarmed, or distressed about personal safety or the safety of one or more persons for whom that person is responsible. And some definitions include acts such as telephoning another and remaining silent during the call. Cf. CYBERSTALKING. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ↷25.1.]

stallage (stawl-ij), n. Hist. 1. The right to erect stalls in public markets. 2. The cost for that right.

stamp, n. (15c) An official mark or seal placed on a document, esp. to indicate that a required tax (such as duty or excise tax) has been paid. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 56; Internal Revenue ⇨ 4390–4409; Taxation ⇨ 2218, 3679.]

stamp acts. English statutes requiring and regulating stamps on deeds, contracts, legal papers, bills, or other documents.

stamp duty. Hist. A tax raised by requiring stamps sold by the government to be affixed to designated documents, thus forming part of the perpetual revenue. See stamp tax under TAX. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4390–4409; Taxation ⇨ 2218.]

“A fifth branch of the perpetual revenue consists in the stamp duties, which are a tax imposed upon all parchment and paper whereon any legal proceedings, or private instruments of almost any nature whatsoever, are written; and also upon licenses . . . and pamphlets containing less than six sheets of paper. These imposts are very various, according to the nature of the thing stamped, rising gradually from a penny to ten pounds.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 312–13 (1765).

stamp tax. See TAX.

stand adjourned. (Of a meeting or proceeding) to be in a state of adjournment <this court stands adjourned until 10:00 a.m. tomorrow>. • This status is usu. announced by a judge or other presiding officer concerning the business scheduled to continue at a later time. — Often shortened to adjourned. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 66.]

standard, n. (15c) 1. A model accepted as correct by custom, consent, or authority <what is the standard in the ant-farm industry?>. 2. A criterion for measuring acceptability, quality, or accuracy <the attorney was making a nice living — even by New York standards>. — standard, adj.

objective standard. (1915) A legal standard that is based on conduct and perceptions external to a particular person. • In tort law, for example, the reasonable-person standard is considered an objective standard because it does not require a determination of what the defendant was thinking.

subjective standard. (1915) A legal standard that is peculiar to a particular person and based on the person's individual views and experiences. • In criminal law, for example, a subjective standard applies to determine premeditation because it depends on the defendant's mental state.

Standard & Poor's. An investment-analysis and -advisory service. • Standard & Poor's rates the financial strength of businesses from AAA (strongest) to AA, A, BBB, and so on to CCC. Most grades may also be modified with a plus- or minus-sign according to the business's relative strength among similar companies. A rating of R means that the company is the subject of some regulatory action.

standard characteristics. See STANDARD DESCRIPTIVE CHARACTERISTICS.

standard deduction. See DEDUCTION.

standard descriptive characteristics. Parliamentary law. The basic rules that apply to and define a motion. • The characteristics include when the motion is in order; its rank — that is, what it takes precedence over, and what yields to it; whether making it may interrupt a speaker; whether it needs a second; whether it is debatable; whether it is amendable; what vote its adoption takes; and whether it can be reconsidered. — Also termed standard characteristics.

standard-form contract. See CONTRACT.

standard instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

standardized contract. See standard-form contract under CONTRACT.

standard mortgage clause. See MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

standard of care. (1890) Torts. In the law of negligence, the degree of care that a reasonable person should exercise. See CARE (2). [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 230–233.]

standard of need. In public-assistance law, the total subsistence resources required by an individual or family unit as determined by a state and, when unsatisfied by available resources, entitles the individual or family unit to public assistance. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨ 4.10, 194.7.]

standard of proof. (1922) The degree or level of proof demanded in a specific case, such as “beyond a reasonable doubt” or “by a preponderance of the evidence.” See BURDEN OF PERSUASION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 560; Evidence ⇨ 596.]

standard of review. The criterion by which an appellate court exercising appellate jurisdiction measures the constitutionality of a statute or the propriety of an order, finding, or judgment entered by a lower court. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 836–1099; Criminal Law ⇨ 1134.1–1180; Federal Courts ⇨ 751–917.]

standard-setting organization. A body that sets, describes, or documents uniform operating, technological, or other norms for participants in a particular field or industry. — Also termed standards body.

Standards for Imposing Lawyer Sanctions. The ABA's 1986 supplement to the Standards for Lawyer Discipline, prescribing a range of sanctions and guidelines for applying them. • Sanctions range from reprimands to disbarment. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨ 59.5(2).]

Standards for Lawyer Discipline. A set of model rules, created by the ABA in 1979, establishing procedures for disciplining lawyers who violate ethics rules or commit crimes. • The rules stress that the process is an inquiry to determine an attorney's fitness to practice, not to determine a punishment.

stand at ease. Parliamentary law. To take an informal pause during a meeting without taking a recess, at the instance of the chair.

standby charge. A property levy, often based on acreage, imposed on the mere availability of a service, whether or not the service is actually used.

standby commitment. An arrangement between an underwriter and an issuer of securities whereby the underwriter agrees, for a fee, to buy any unsold shares remaining after the public offering. — Also termed standby underwriting agreement.

standby counsel. See COUNSEL.

standby guardian. See GUARDIAN.

standby guardianship. See GUARDIANSHIP.

standby letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

standby trust. See TRUST.

standby underwriting. See UNDERWRITING.

standby underwriting agreement. See STANDBY COMMITMENT.

standing, n. (1924) A party's right to make a legal claim or seek judicial enforcement of a duty or right. ● To have standing in federal court, a plaintiff must show (1) that the challenged conduct has caused the plaintiff actual injury, and (2) that the interest sought to be protected is within the zone of interests meant to be regulated by the statutory or constitutional guarantee in question. — Also termed standing to sue. Cf. JUSTICIABILITY. [Cases: Action ⇨ 13; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 103.1.]

"Have the appellants alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions? This is the gist of the question of standing." Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S.Ct. 691, 703 (1962) (Brennan, J.).

"The word standing is rather recent in the basic judicial vocabulary and does not appear to have been commonly used until the middle of our own century. No authority that I have found introduces the term with proper explanations and apologies and announces that henceforth standing should be used to describe who may be heard by a judge. Nor was there any sudden adoption by tacit consent. The word appears here and there, spreading very gradually with no discernible pattern. Judges and lawyers found themselves using the term and did not ask why they did so or where it came from." Joseph Vining, Legal Identity 55 (1978).

third-party standing. (1968) Standing held by someone claiming to protect the rights of others. ● For example, in most jurisdictions, only a parent has standing to bring a suit for custody or visitation; in some, however, a third party — for instance, a grandparent or a person with whom the child has substantial contacts — may have standing to bring an action for custody or visitation. See GRANDPARENT RIGHTS. [Cases: Action ⇨ 13; Child Custody ⇨ 409; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 103.4.] standing aside a juror. The prosecution practice of provisionally placing a juror aside until the panel is exhausted, without providing a reason, instead of challenging the juror or showing cause. ● The practice originally developed as a method of avoiding the Challenge of Jurors Act (1305), which prohibited the Crown from challenging a juror without showing cause. A similar practice was formerly used in Pennsylvania. [Cases: Jury ⇨ 122.]

standing by. (14c) 1. The awaiting of an opportunity to respond, as with assistance. 2. Silence or inaction when there is a duty to speak or act; esp., the tacit possession of knowledge under circumstances requiring the possessor to reveal the knowledge. See estoppel by silence under ESTOPPEL.

standing committee. See COMMITTEE.

Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure. A group of judges, lawyers, and legal scholars appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States to advise the Judicial Conference of the United States on possible amendments to the procedural rules in the various federal courts and on other issues relating to the operation of the federal courts. 28 USCA § 331.

"[Under 28 USCA § 331], the Judicial Conference of the United States has created a Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure and has authorized the appointment from time to time of various advisory committees. These committees make recommendations regarding amendments of the rules to the Judicial Conference, which in turn transmits those recommendations if it approves to the Supreme Court. Under this new plan, as under the machinery in effect from 1934 to 1956, the Court retains the ultimate responsibility for the adoption of amendments to the rules." 4 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1007, at 35 (2d ed. 1987).

standing crops. See CROPS.

standing division. See standing vote under VOTE (4).

standing master. See MASTER.

standing mortgage. See interest-only mortgage under MORTGAGE.

standing mute. See MUTE (2).

standing offer. See OFFER.

standing order. See ORDER (2).

standing rule. See RULE (3).

standing seized to uses. The holding of title for the benefit or use of another, such as a relative in consideration of blood or marriage. ● A covenant to stand seized to uses is a type of conveyance that depends on the Statute of Uses for its effect. — Often shortened to seised to uses. See STATUTE OF USES.

standing to sue. See STANDING.

standing vote. See VOTE (4).

stand mute. (16c) 1. (Of a defendant) to refuse to enter a plea to a criminal charge. ● Standing mute is treated as a plea of not guilty. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 300.] 2. (Of any party) to raise no objections.

standstill agreement. (1934) Any agreement to refrain from taking further action; esp., an agreement by which a party agrees to refrain from further attempts to take over a corporation (as by making no tender offer) for a specified period, or by which financial institutions agree not to call bonds or loans when due.

stand trial. (17c) To submit to a legal proceeding, esp. a criminal prosecution.

stante matrimonio (stan-tee ma-trə-moh-nee-oh). [Latin] Hist. The marriage remaining undissolved.

staple (stay-pəl). 1. A key commodity such as wool, leather, tin, lead, butter, or cheese (collectively termed the staple). 2. Hist. A town appointed by the Crown as an exclusive market for staple products. See STATUTE STAPLE. 3. Patents. An unpatented thing or material that is a component of a patented product or is used in a patented process, but also has other practical uses. • Patentees may not gain control of the market for staples through tying agreements. Cf. NONSTAPLE.

Star Chamber. 1. Hist. An English court having broad civil and criminal jurisdiction at the king's discretion and noted for its secretive, arbitrary, and oppressive procedures, including compulsory self-incrimination, inquisitorial investigation, and the absence of juries. • The Star Chamber was abolished in 1641 because of its abuses of power. — Also termed Court of Star Chamber; Camera Stellata. 2. (usu. l.c.) Any secretive, arbitrary, or oppressive tribunal or proceeding.

stare decisis (stahr-ee di-si-sis or stair-ee), n. [Latin "to stand by things decided"] (18c) The doctrine of precedent, under which a court must follow earlier judicial decisions when the same points arise again in litigation. See PRECEDENT; NON QUIETA MOVERE. Cf. RES JUDICATA; LAW OF THE CASE; (in civil law) jurisprudence constante under JURISPRUDENCE. [Cases: Courts ↻89.]

"The rule of adherence to judicial precedents finds its expression in the doctrine of stare decisis. This doctrine is simply that, when a point or principle of law has been once officially decided or settled by the ruling of a competent court in a case in which it is directly and necessarily involved, it will no longer be considered as open to examination or to a new ruling by the same tribunal, or by those which are bound to follow its adjudications, unless it be for urgent reasons and in exceptional cases." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 321 (3d ed. 1914).

"The general orthodox interpretation of stare decisis . . . is stare rationibus decidendis ('keep to the rationes decidendi of past cases'), but a narrower and more literal interpretation is sometimes employed. To appreciate this narrower interpretation it is necessary to refer . . . to Lord Halsbury's assertion that a case is only authority for what it actually decides. We saw that situations can arise in which all that is binding is the decision. According to Lord Reid, such a situation arises when the ratio decidendi of a previous case is obscure, out of accord with authority or established principle, or too broadly expressed." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 100-01 (4th ed. 1991).

horizontal stare decisis. The doctrine that a court, esp. an appellate court, must adhere to its own prior decisions, unless it finds compelling reasons to overrule itself. [Cases: Courts ↻90(1).]

super stare decisis. The theory that courts must follow earlier court decisions without considering whether those decisions were correct. • Critics argue that strict adherence to old decisions can result in grave injustices and cite as an example the repudiation of vertical stare decisis. The doctrine that a court must strictly follow the decisions handed down by higher courts within the same jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts ↻91(0.5).]

stare decisis et non quieta movere (stair-ee di-si-sis et non kwī-ee-tə moh-veer-ee). [Latin] To stand by things decided, and not to disturb settled points. See STARE DECISIS.

stare enim religioni debet (stair-ee ee-nim ri-lij-ee-oh-nee dee-bet or deb-et). [Latin] Hist. For one ought to abide by one's solemn obligation.

stare in judicio (stair-ee in joo-dish-ee-oh). [Latin] Hist. To appear before a tribunal as either a plaintiff or a defendant.

star paging, n. (1873) 1. A method of referring to a page in an earlier edition of a book, esp. a legal source. • This method correlates the pagination of the later edition with that of the earlier (usu. the first) edition. 2. By extension, the method of displaying on a computer screen the page breaks that occur in printed documents such as law reports and law reviews. — Also termed star pagination. — star page, n.

starr (stahr), n. [fr. Latin starrum fr. Hebrew sh'tar "a writing"] Hist. A Jewish contract (esp. for release of an obligation) that Richard I declared to be invalid unless it was placed in a lawful repository, the largest being in the king's Exchequer at Westminster. — Also termed starra.

"It is well known that, before the banishment of the Jews under Edward I, their contracts and obligations were denominated in our ancient records starra or starrs, from a corruption of the Hebrew word, shet'ar, a covenant. . . . These starrs, by an ordinance of Richard the first . . . were commanded to be enrolled and deposited in chests under three keys in certain places; one, and the most considerable, of which was in the king's exchequer at Westminster. . . . [T]he room at the exchequer, where the chests containing these starrs were kept, was probably called the starr-chamber, and, when the Jews were expelled from the kingdom, was applied to the use of the king's council, when sitting in their judicial capacity." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 263 n.a (1769).

stash, vb. To hide or conceal (money or property).

stat. abbr. STATUTE.

state, n. (16c) 1. The political system of a body of people who are politically organized; the system of rules by which jurisdiction and authority are exercised over such a body of people <separation of church and state>. — Also termed political society. Cf. NATION. [Cases: International Law ↻3.]

"A STATE is a community of persons living within certain limits of territory, under a permanent organization which aims to secure the prevalence of justice by self-imposed law. The organ of the state by which its relations with other states are managed is the government." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 36, at 34 (5th ed. 1878).

"A state or political society is an association of human beings established for the attainment of certain ends by certain means. It is the most important of all the various kinds of society in which men unite, being indeed the necessary basis and condition of peace, order, and civilisation. What then is the difference between this and other forms of association? In what does the state differ from such other societies as a church, a university, a joint-stock company, or a trade union? The difference is clearly one of function. The state must be defined by reference to such of its activities and purposes as are essential and characteristic." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 129 (Clanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"A state is an institution, that is to say, it is a system of relations which men establish among themselves as a means of securing certain objects, of which the most fundamental is a system of order within which their activities can be carried on. Modern states are territorial; their governments exercise control over persons and things within their frontiers, and today the whole of the habitable world is divided between about seventy of these territorial states. A state should not be confused with the whole community of persons living on its territory; it is only one among a multitude of other institutions, such as churches and corporations, which a community establishes for securing different objects, though obviously it is one of tremendous importance; none the less it is not, except in the ideology of totalitarianism, an all-embracing institution, not something from which, or within which, all other institutions and associations have their being; many institutions, e.g. the Roman Catholic Church, and many associations, e.g. federations of employers and of workers, transcend the boundaries of any single state." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 118 (5th ed. 1955).

client state. A country that is obliged in some degree to cede some of the control of its external relations to some foreign power or powers. — Also termed satellite state. Cf. SOVEREIGN STATE.

composite state. A state that comprises an aggregate or group of constituent states.

dependent state. See nonsovereign state.

federal state. A composite state in which the sovereignty of the entire state is divided between the central or federal government and the local governments of the several constituent states; a union of states in which the control of the external relations of all the member states has been surrendered to a central government so that the only state that exists for international purposes is the one formed by the union. Cf. confederation of states under CONFEDERATION.

imperial state. Archaic. A composite state in which a common or central government possesses in itself the entire sovereignty, so that the constituent states possess no portion of this sovereignty.

nonsovereign state. A state that is a constituent part of a greater state that includes both it and one or more others, and to whose government it is subject; a state that is not complete and self-existent. • Among other things, a nonsovereign state has no power to engage in foreign relations. — Also termed dependent state. Cf. SOVEREIGN STATE.

part-sovereign state. See SOVEREIGN STATE.

police state. A state in which the political, economic, and social life of its citizens is subject to repressive governmental control and arbitrary uses of power by the ruling elite, which uses the police as the instrument of control; a totalitarian state.

receiving state. The country to which a diplomatic agent or consul is sent by the country represented by that agent. Cf. sending state. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ⇨ 3.]

satellite state. See client state.

sending state. The country from which a diplomatic agent or consul is sent abroad. Cf. receiving state. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ⇨ 3.] simple state. See unitary state.

social-service state. A state that uses its power to create laws and regulations to provide for the welfare of its citizens.

sovereign state. See SOVEREIGN STATE.

unitary state. A state that is not made up of territorial divisions that are states themselves. — Also termed (archaically) simple state.

2. An institution of self-government within a larger political entity; esp., one of the constituent parts of a nation having a federal government <the 50 states>. [Cases: States ⇨ 1.] 3. (often cap.) The people of a state, collectively considered as the party wronged by a criminal deed; esp., the prosecution as the representative of the people <the State rests its case>.

state action. (1893) Anything done by a government; esp., in constitutional law, an intrusion on a person's rights (esp. civil rights) either by a governmental entity or by a private requirement that can be enforced only by governmental action (such as a racially restrictive covenant, which requires judicial action for enforcement). [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1325; Constitutional Law ⇨ 1061.]

state-action doctrine. Antitrust. The principle that the antitrust laws do not prohibit a state's anticompetitive acts, or official acts directed by a state. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S.Ct. 307 (1943). — Also termed Parker doctrine. See MIDCAL TEST. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨ 901.]

State Justice Institute. A nonprofit federal corporation charged with improving judicial administration in state courts. • It was created by the State Justice Institute Act of 1984. 42 USCA §§ 10701-10713. — Abbr. SJI.

state law. (18c) A body of law in a particular state consisting of the state's constitution, statutes, regulations, and common law. Cf. FEDERAL LAW.

stateless person. Int'l law. A natural person who is not considered a national by any country. • The Convention Relating to Status of Stateless Persons (1954) provides these people with certain protections and obliges them to abide by the laws of the country where they reside.

statement. (18c) 1. Evidence. A verbal assertion or nonverbal conduct intended as an assertion. [Cases: Evidence ⇨ 412.] 2. A formal and exact presentation of facts. — Also termed (for plaintiff) statement of cause of action. 3. Criminal procedure. An account of a person's knowledge of a crime, taken by the police during their investigation of the offense. Cf. CONFESSION.

consonant statement. (1889) A witness's previous declaration, testified to by a person to whom the declaration was made and allowed into evidence only after the witness's testimony has been impeached. • This type of evidence would, but for the impeachment of the witness, be inadmissible hearsay. Cf. prior consistent statement. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 414(2).]

false statement. (18c) 1. An untrue statement knowingly made with the intent to mislead. See PERJURY. 2. Any one of three distinct federal offenses: (1) falsifying or concealing a material fact by trick, scheme, or device; (2) making a false, fictitious, or fraudulent representation; and (3) making or using a false document or writing. 18 USCA § 1001. [Cases: Fraud ⇨ 68.10(1).]

financial statement. See FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

incriminating statement. (1896) A statement that tends to establish the guilt of someone, esp. the person making it.

prior consistent statement. (1883) A witness's earlier statement that is consistent with the witness's testimony at trial. • A prior consistent statement is not hearsay if it is offered to rebut a charge that the testimony was improperly influenced or fabricated. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B). Cf. consonant statement.

prior inconsistent statement. (1885) A witness's earlier statement that conflicts with the witness's testimony at trial. • In federal practice, extrinsic evidence of an unsworn prior inconsistent statement is admissible — if the witness is given an opportunity to explain or deny the statement — for impeachment purposes only. Fed. R. Evid. 613(b). Sworn statements may be admitted for all purposes. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(A).

sworn statement. (1831) 1. A statement given under oath; an affidavit. Cf. AFFIDAVIT; DECLARATION (8). [Cases: Affidavits ⇨ 1.] 2. A contractor-builder's listing of suppliers and subcontractors, and their respective bids, required by a lending institution for interim financing.

voluntary statement. (1817) A statement made without the influence of duress, coercion, or inducement.

Statement and Account Clause. (1975) The clause of the U.S. Constitution requiring the regular publication of the receipts and expenditures of the federal government. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 7. [Cases: United States ⇨ 44.]

statement of account. 1. A report issued periodically (usu. monthly) by a bank to a customer, providing certain information on the customer's account, including the checks drawn and cleared, deposits made, charges debited, and the account balance. — Also termed bank statement. See ACCOUNT (4). [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 151.] 2. A report issued periodically (usu. monthly) by a creditor to a customer, providing certain information on the customer's account, including the amounts billed, credits given, and the balance due. — Also termed account statement.

statement of affairs. 1. STATEMENT OF FINANCIAL AFFAIRS. 2. A balance sheet showing immediate liquidation values (rather than historical costs), usu. prepared when insolvency or bankruptcy is imminent.

statement of cause of action. See STATEMENT (2).

statement of claim. 1. COMPLAINT (1). 2. English law. A plaintiff's initial pleading in a civil case; DECLARATION (7).

statement of condition. See BALANCE SHEET.

statement of confession. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

statement of defense. The assertions by a defendant; esp., in England, the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's statement of claim.

statement of fact. A form of conduct that asserts or implies the existence or nonexistence of a fact. • The term includes not just a particular statement that a particular fact exists or has existed, but also an assertion that, although perhaps expressed as an opinion, implies the existence of some fact or facts that have led the assertor to hold the opinion in question. See affirmative testimony under TESTIMONY. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷448; Evidence ↷471, 505.]

statement of facts. (18c) A party's written presentation of the facts leading up to or surrounding a legal dispute, usu. recited toward the beginning of a brief. Cf. STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

"The statement of facts is another of those critical parts of the brief Two principles are at war in drafting the statement of facts. First, judges want and some circuit rules require a nonargumentative, 'fair summary without argument or comment.' Conversely, you want a statement of facts that persuades the judges to rule for you as soon as they finish reading it. Satisfying both ends requires some balancing." David G. Knibb, Federal Court of Appeals Manual § 31.7, at 549 (4th ed. 2000).

agreed statement of facts. A narrative statement of facts that is stipulated to be correct by the parties and is submitted to a tribunal for a ruling. • When the narrative statement is filed on appeal instead of a report of the trial proceedings, it is called an agreed statement on appeal. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↷845(2); Stipulations ↷14(10), 18(7).]

statement of financial affairs. Bankruptcy. A document that an individual or corporate debtor must file to answer questions about the debtor's past and present financial status. — Also termed statement of affairs. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷2321.]

statement of financial condition. See BALANCE SHEET.

statement of financial position. See BALANCE SHEET.

statement of income. See INCOME STATEMENT.

statement of intention. Bankruptcy. A preliminary statement filed by an individual debtor in a chapter 7 case, in which the debtor details, among other things, whether property of the bankruptcy estate securing any debt will be retained or surrendered and whether the property is claimed as exempt. • The statement must be filed on or before the date of the first creditors' meeting or within 30 days after the bankruptcy petition is filed, whichever is earlier. 11 USCA § 521 (a)(2). [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷2851, 3022, 3034, 3415.1.] statement of particulars. See BILL OF PARTICULARS.

statement of principle. In legislative drafting, a sentence or paragraph that explains the legislature's purpose in passing a statute. • Although a statement of principle often resembles a preamble (usu. both do not appear in a single statute), it differs in that it typically appears in a numbered section of the statute. [Cases: Statutes ↷210.]

statement of prior-art references. See INFORMATION-DISCLOSURE STATEMENT.

statement of the case. In an appellate brief, a short review of what has happened procedurally in the lawsuit and how it reached the present court. • The statement introduces the reviewing court to the case by reciting the facts, procedures, decisions of the court or courts below as they are relevant to the appeal, and the reasons for those decisions. — Also termed proceedings below. Cf. STATEMENT OF FACTS. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↷757; Federal Courts ↷713.]

statement of use. See amendment to allege use under TRADEMARK-APPLICATION AMENDMENT.

statement of utility. Patents. The portion of a patent-application disclosure statement that explains how the invention is useful. [Cases: Patents ↷99.]

statement of work. A contractual provision or exhibit that defines what one party (e.g., the seller) is going to do for the other (e.g., the buyer). • The statement of work often covers such terms as (1) inspection and acceptance, (2) quality-assurance requirements, (3) packing and marking, (4) data requirements, and (5) training. There are generally two types of specifications in a statement of work: a performance specification establishing the minimum requirements for items to be supplied, and a design specification establishing the methods to be used in meeting those minimum requirements. — Also termed statement-of-work clause. — Abbr. SOW.

state of art. See STATE OF THE ART.

state of mind. (17c) 1. The condition or capacity of a person's mind; MENS REA. 2. Loosely, a person's reasons or motives for committing an act, esp. a criminal act.

state-of-mind exception. (1949) Evidence. The principle that an out-of-court declaration of an existing motive is admissible, even when the declarant cannot testify in person. • This principle is an exception to the general rule that hearsay is inadmissible. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷419(2.20); Evidence ↷268.]

state of nature. (16c) The lack of a politically organized society. • The term is a hypothetical construct for the period in human history predating any type of political society.

"[W]e may make use of the contrast, familiar to the philosophy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, between the civil state and the state of nature. This state of nature is now commonly rejected as one of the fictions which flourished in the era of the social contract, but such treatment is needlessly severe. The term certainly became associated with much false or exaggerated doctrine touching the golden age, on the one hand, and the bellum omnium contra omnes of Hobbes, on the other, but in itself it nevertheless affords a convenient mode for the expression of an undoubted truth. As long as there have been men, there has probably been some form of human society. The state of nature, therefore, is not the absence of society, but the absence of a society so organized on the basis of physical force as to constitute a state. Though human society is coeval with mankind, the rise of political society, properly so called, is an event in human history." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 103-04 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

state of the art. (1910) Products liability. The level of pertinent scientific and technical knowledge existing at the time of a product's manufacture, and the best technology reasonably available at the time the product was sold. — Also termed state of art. [Cases: Products Liability ↷178, 378.] — state-of-the-art, adj.

"While the statutes in effect in some jurisdictions speak in terms of a state of the art defense, statutes in other jurisdictions provide that state of the art evidence is admissible or may be considered by the trier of fact by statute, and that in determining whether a product was in a defective condition or unreasonably dangerous at the time it left the control of the manufacturer or seller, consideration is given to the state of scientific and technical knowledge available to the manufacturer or seller at the time the product was placed on the market, and to the customary designs, methods, standards, and techniques of manufacturing, inspecting, and testing used by other manufacturers or sellers of similar products." 63A Am. Jur. 2d Products Liability § 1319, at 472 (2008).

state of the case. The posture of litigation as it develops, as in discovery, at trial, or on appeal.

State of the Union. See Presidential message under MESSAGE.

state of war. A situation in which war has been declared or armed conflict is in progress. See WAR. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷7.]

state paper. 1. A document prepared by or relating to a state or national government and affecting the administration of that government in its political or international relations. 2. A newspaper officially designated for the publication of public statutes, resolutions, notices, and advertisements. [Cases: Newspapers ↷1-7.]

state paper office. Hist. An office established in London in 1578, headed by the Clerk of the Papers, to maintain custody of state documents.

state police. (1843) The department or agency of a state government empowered to maintain order, as by investigating and preventing crimes, and making arrests.

state police power. (1849) The power of a state to enforce laws for the health, welfare, morals, and safety of its citizens, if enacted so that the means are reasonably calculated to protect those legitimate state interests.

state religion. See RELIGION.

state's attorney. 1. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY. 2. See PROSECUTOR (1).

state seal. See great seal (2) under SEAL.

state secret. (1822) A governmental matter that would be a threat to the national defense or diplomatic interests of the United States if revealed; information possessed by the government and of a military or diplomatic nature, the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest. • State secrets are privileged from disclosure by a witness in an ordinary judicial proceeding. — Also termed governmental secret; government secret. See executive privilege & state-secrets privilege under PRIVILEGE (3). [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ↷360.]

state-secrets privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

state's evidence. See EVIDENCE.

state's evidence, turn. See TURN STATE'S EVIDENCE.

state sovereignty. (18c) The right of a state to self-government; the supreme authority exercised by each state. [Cases: States ↷1.]

state-sponsored terrorism. See TERRORISM.

states' rights. (1839) Under the Tenth Amendment, rights neither conferred on the federal government nor forbidden to the states. [Cases: States ↷4.16.]

State Street Bank. Patents. A landmark 1998 decision in the Federal Circuit that made it easier to get patents on computer software, and also rejected the long-accepted notion that business methods are per se unpatentable.

• The court struck down per se rules against patenting mathematical algorithms (the soul of software), focusing instead on whether the ultimate result was useful, concrete, and tangible in practice. State Street Bank & Trust C. v. Signature Fin. Group, Inc., 149 F.3d 1368 (Fed. Cir. 1998). [Cases: Patents ↷6.] state's ward. See ward of the state under WARD.

state tax. See TAX.

state terrorism. See TERRORISM.

state the question. Parliamentary procedure. (Of the chair) to formally state a motion as in order and ready for consideration. Cf. PUT THE QUESTION.

state trial. See TRIAL.

stateway, n. A governmental policy or law. • This term is formed on the analogy of folkway.

statim (stay-tim). [Latin] Hist. Immediately; at the earliest possible time when an act might lawfully be completed.

station. 1. Social position or status. See STATUS. 2. A place where military duties are performed or military goods are stored. 3. A headquarters, as of a police department. 4. A place where both freight and passengers are received for transport or delivered after transport. [Cases: Railroads ↷225.] 5. Civil law. A place where ships may safely travel. [Cases: Shipping ↷11.]

Stationers' Company. Hist. An association of stationers and their successors, formed in London in 1403 and granted a royal charter in 1557, entrusted, by order of the Privy Council, with censorship of the press. • This company was the holder of the first rights we associate today with copyright.

Stationers' Hall. Hist. The hall of the Stationers' Company, established in London in 1553, at which every person claiming a copyright was required to register as a condition precedent to filing an infringement action.

"Accordingly 'Entered at Stationers' Hall' on the title page of books was a form of warning to pirates that the owner of the copyright could and might sue. This requirement disappeared with the Copyright Act, 1911." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1182 (1980).

Stationery Office. Hist. English law. A government office established in 1786 as a department of the treasury, to supply government offices (including Parliament) with stationery and books, and to print and publish government papers. — Also termed Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

stationhouse. 1. A police station or precinct. 2. The lockup at a police precinct.

stationhouse bail. See cash bail under BAIL (1).

station-in-life test. Family law. An analysis performed by a court to determine the amount of money reasonably needed to maintain a particular person's accustomed lifestyle. • The elements were first set forth in Canfield vs. Security-First Nat'l Bank, 87 P.2d 830, 840 (Cal. 1939). The court takes into account the person's station in society and the costs of the person's support in that station, including housing and related expenses, medical care, further education, and other reasonably necessary expenses, but not including luxuries or extravagant expenditures. See NECESSARIES (1), (2). [Cases: Divorce ↷ 240(2); Husband and Wife ↷ 19.]

statist (stay-tist). 1. Archaic. A statesman; a politician. 2. A statistician.

statistical-decision theory. (1966) A method for determining whether a panel of potential jurors was selected from a fair cross section of the community, by calculating the probabilities of selecting a certain number of jurors from a particular group to analyze whether it is statistically probable that the jury pool was selected by mere chance. • This method has been criticized because a pool of potential jurors is not ordinarily selected by mere chance; potential jurors are disqualified for many legitimate reasons. See FAIR-CROSS-SECTION REQUIREMENT; ABSOLUTE DISPARITY; COMPARATIVE DISPARITY; DUREN TEST. [Cases: Jury ↷ 33(1.1, 1.2).]

statuliber (stach-ə-lī-bər), n. [Latin] Roman law. A person whose freedom under a will is made conditional or postponed; a person who will be free at a particular time or when certain conditions are met. — Also written statu liber (stay-t[y]oo lī-bər).

"The statuliber is one who has freedom arranged to take effect on completion of a period or fulfillment of a condition. Men become statuliberi as a result of an express condition, or by the very nature of the case. The meaning of 'express condition' presents no problem. The status arises from the very nature of the case when men are manumitted for the purpose of defrauding a creditor; for so long as it is uncertain whether the creditor will use his right, the men remain statuliberi, since fraud is taken in the lex Aelia Sentia to involve actual damage." Digest of Justinian 40.7.1 (Paul, ad Sabinum 5).

status. (17c) 1. A person's legal condition, whether personal or proprietary; the sum total of a person's legal rights, duties, liabilities, and other legal relations, or any particular group of them separately considered <the status of a landowner>. 2. A person's legal condition regarding personal rights but excluding proprietary relations <the status of a father> <the status of a wife>. 3. A person's capacities and incapacities, as opposed to other elements of personal status <the status of minors>. 4. A person's legal condition insofar as it is imposed by the law without the person's consent, as opposed to a condition that the person has acquired by agreement <the status of a slave>.

"By the status (or standing) of a person is meant the position that he holds with reference to the rights which are recognized and maintained by the law — in other words, his capacity for the exercise and enjoyment of legal rights." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 106 (1881).

"The word 'status' itself originally signified nothing more than the position of a person before the law. Therefore, every person (except slaves, who were not regarded as persons, for legal purposes) had a status. But, as a result of the modern tendency towards legal equality formerly noticed, differences of status became less and less frequent, and the importance of the subject has greatly diminished, with the result that the term status is now used, at any rate in English Law, in connection only with those comparatively few classes of persons in the community who, by reason of their conspicuous differences from normal persons, and the fact that by no decision of their own can they get rid of these differences, require separate consideration in an account of the law. But professional or even political differences do not amount to status; thus peers, physicians, clergymen of the established Church, and many other classes of persons, are not regarded as the subjects of status, because the legal differences which distinguish them from other persons, though substantial, are not enough to make them legally abnormal. And landowners, merchants, manufacturers, and wage-earners are not subjects of the Law of Status, though the last-named are, as the result of recent legislation, tending to approach that position." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 109 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

status, law of. See LAW OF STATUS.

STAT-USA. A unit in the U.S. Department of Commerce responsible for disseminating economics and trade information compiled by other federal agencies to businesses and individuals through subscription services and federal depository libraries. • STAT-USA is an agency within the Department's Economics and Statistics Administration.

status crime. See CRIME.

status de manerio (stay-təs dee mə-neer-ee-oh). [Law Latin "the state of a manor"] Hist. The assembly of tenants to attend the lord's court.

status offender. See OFFENDER.

status offense. See OFFENSE (1).

status-offense jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

status of irremovability. Hist. A pauper's right not to be removed from a parish after residing there for one year. Cf. SETTLEMENT (6).

status quo (stay-təs or stat-əs kwoh). [Latin "state in which"] (1807) The situation that currently exists.

status quo ante (stay-təs kwoh an-tee). [Latin "state in which previously"] (1877) The situation that existed before something else (being discussed) occurred.

statutable (stach-ə-tə-bəl), adj. (17c) 1. Prescribed or authorized by statute. 2. Conforming to the legislative requirements for quality, size, amount, or the like. 3. (Of an offense) punishable by law. See STATUTORY.

statute. (14c) A law passed by a legislative body; specif., legislation enacted by any lawmaking body, including legislatures, administrative boards, and municipal courts. • The term act is interchangeable as a synonym. For each of the subentries listed below, act is sometimes substituted for statute. — Abbr. s.; stat. [Cases: Statutes ⇨2.]

"[W]e are not justified in limiting the statutory law to those rules only which are promulgated by what we commonly call 'legislatures.' Any positive enactment to which the state gives the force of a law is a 'statute,' whether it has gone through the usual stages of legislative proceedings, or has been adopted in other modes of expressing the will of the people or other sovereign power of the state. In an absolute monarchy, an edict of the ruling sovereign is statutory law. Constitutions, being direct legislation by the people, must be included in the statutory law, and indeed they are examples of the highest form that the statute law can assume. Generally speaking, treaties also are statutory law, because in this country, under the provisions of the United States Constitution, treaties have not the force of law until so declared by the representatives of the people." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 8 (3d ed. 1914).

affirmative statute. (16c) A law requiring that something be done; one that directs the doing of an act. Cf. negative statute.

always-speaking statute. See speaking statute.

antideficiency statute. See antideficiency legislation under LEGISLATION.

codifying statute. (1908) A law that purports to be exhaustive in restating the whole of the law on a particular topic, including prior caselaw as well as legislative provisions. • Courts generally presume that a codifying statute supersedes prior caselaw. Cf. consolidating statute.

compiled statutes. Laws that have been arranged by subject but have not been substantively changed; COMPILATION (2). Cf. revised statutes.

"The term 'compiled statutes' is properly applied to a methodical arrangement, without revision or reenactment, of the existing statutes of a State, all the statutes on a given subject being collected in one place. The work is usually performed by private persons; and the former statutes, as they were before the compilation, remain the authority." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 12 (1922).

consolidating statute. (1886) A law that collects the legislative provisions on a particular subject and embodies them in a single statute, often with minor amendments and drafting improvements. • Courts generally presume that a consolidating statute leaves prior caselaw intact. Cf. codifying statute.

"A distinction of greater importance in this field is that between consolidating and codifying statutes. A consolidating statute is one which collects the statutory provisions relating to a particular topic, and embodies them in a single Act of Parliament, making only minor amendments and improvements. A codifying statute is one which purports to state exhaustively the whole of the law on a particular subject (the common law as well as previous statutory provisions). . . . The importance of the distinction lies in the courts' treatment of the previous case law, the existence of special procedural provisions with regard to consolidating statutes and the existence of a presumption that they do not change the law." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 5 (1976).

construction statute. A legislative directive included in a statute, intended to guide or direct a court's interpretation of the statute. • A construction act can, for example, be a simple statement such as "The word 'week' means seven consecutive days" or a broader directive such as "Words and phrases are to be read in context and construed according to the rules of grammar and common usage. Words and phrases that have acquired a technical or particular meaning, whether by legislative definition or otherwise, are to be construed accordingly." [Cases: Statutes ⇨179.] criminal statute. (18c) A law that defines, classifies, and sets forth punishment for one or more specific crimes. See PENAL CODE. [Cases: Statutes ⇨241.]

curative statute. 1. An act that corrects an error in a statute's original enactment, usu. an error that interferes with interpreting or applying the statute. Cf. validating statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨236, 278.11.] 2. See remedial statute.

declaratory statute. (17c) A law enacted to clarify prior law by reconciling conflicting judicial decisions or by explaining the meaning of a prior statute. — Also termed expository statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨236, 278.11.]

directory statute. (1834) A law that indicates only what should be done, with no provision for enforcement. Cf. mandatory statute; permissive statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨227.]

disabling statute. (18c) A law that limits or curbs certain rights.

enabling statute. (18c) A law that permits what was previously prohibited or that creates new powers; esp., a congressional statute conferring powers on an executive agency to carry out various delegated tasks. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨305; Statutes ⇨219.]

expository statute. See declaratory statute.

general statute. (16c) A law pertaining to an entire community or all persons generally. — Also termed public statute. See PUBLIC LAW (2). [Cases: Statutes ⇨68.]

imperfect statute. (1847) A law that prohibits, but does not render void, an objectionable transaction. • Such a statute provides a penalty for disobedience without depriving the violative transaction of its legal effect.

local statute. 1. See LOCAL LAW (1). 2. See LOCAL LAW (2).

mandatory statute. (18c) A law that requires a course of action as opposed to merely permitting it. Cf. directory statute; permissive statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨227.]

model statute. See uniform statute.

negative statute. (16c) A law prohibiting something; a law expressed in negative terms. Cf. affirmative statute.

nonclaim statute. (18c) 1. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

2. A law that sets a time limit for creditors to bring claims against a decedent's estate. • Unlike a statute of limitations, a nonclaim statute is usu. not subject to tolling and is not waivable. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷223, 225.]

organic statute. (1856) A law that establishes an administrative agency or local government. — Also termed organic act. Cf. ORGANIC LAW.

penal statute. (16c) A law that defines an offense and prescribes its corresponding fine, penalty, or punishment. — Also termed penal law; punitive statute. [Cases: Statutes ↷241.]

"It is a familiar and well-settled rule that penal statutes are to be construed strictly, and not extended by implications, intendments, analogies, or equitable considerations. Thus, an offense cannot be created or inferred by vague implications. And a court cannot create a penalty by construction, but must avoid it by construction unless it is brought within the letter and the necessary meaning of the act creating it." Henry Campbell Black, Handbook on the Construction and Interpretation of the Laws 287 (1896).

permanent statute. See perpetual statute.

permissive statute. A statute that allows certain acts but does not command them. • A permissive statute creates a license or privilege, or allows discretion in performing an act. Cf. directory statute; mandatory statute. [Cases: Statutes ↷227.]

perpetual statute. (16c) A law containing no provision for repeal, abrogation, or expiration. — Also termed permanent statute. Cf. temporary statute (1).

personal statute. Civil law. A law that primarily affects a person's condition or status (such as a statute relating to capacity or majority) and affects property only incidentally.

preceptive statute. A statute that is prescriptive, general, definite, and complete. • In form, a preceptive statute is similar to a rule.

private statute. See special statute.

prohibitive statute. A statute that forbids all acts that disturb society's peace or forbids certain acts on other grounds. • An example of a noncriminal prohibitive statute is one forbidding the execution of a mentally retarded criminal because a person who lacks mental capacity cannot understand the reason for the punishment.

prospective statute. (1831) A law that applies to future events.

public statute. See PUBLIC LAW (2).

punitive statute. See penal statute.

quasi-statute. An executive or administrative order, or a regulation promulgated by a governmental agency, that has the binding effect of legislation. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↷417.]

"Quasi-Statutes. Executive and administrative orders by the government as well as military regulations, while not called statutes, not originating as statutes usually do, are, nevertheless, in force and effect, laws. Copies of general orders and proclamations are issued to the public press for publication, but military regulations may for public reasons be kept private." Jesse Franklin Brumbaugh, Legal Reasoning and Briefing 223 (1917).

real statute. Civil law. A law primarily affecting the operation, status, and condition of property, and addressing persons only incidentally.

recording statute. See RECORDING ACT.

reference statute. A law that incorporates and adopts by reference provisions of other laws. [Cases: Statutes ↷51.]

remedial statute. (18c) A law that affords a remedy. — Also termed curative statute. [Cases: Statutes ↷236, 278.11.]

repealing statute. A statute that revokes, and sometimes replaces, an earlier statute. • A repealing statute may work expressly or by implication. [Cases: Statutes ↷151, 158.]

restraining statute. See disabling statute.

retroactive statute. See RETROACTIVE LAW.

retrospective statute. See RETROACTIVE LAW.

revised statutes. (18c) Laws that have been collected, arranged, and reenacted as a whole by a legislative body. — Abbr. Rev. Stat.; R.S. See CODE (1). Cf. compiled statutes. [Cases: Statutes ↷144–148, 231.]

revival statute. (1899) A law that provides for the renewal of actions, of wills, and of the legal effect of documents. • A revival statute cannot resurrect a time-barred criminal prosecution. Stegner v. California, 539 U.S. 607, 123 S.Ct. 2446 (2003).

severable statute. (1930) A law that remains operative in its remaining provisions even if a portion of the law is declared unconstitutional. [Cases: Statutes ↷64.]

single-act statute. See LONG-ARM STATUTE.

speaking statute. (2000) A statute to be interpreted in light of the understanding of its terms prevailing at the time of interpretation. — Also termed always-speaking statute.

special statute. (17c) A law that applies only to specific individuals, as opposed to everyone. — Also termed private statute. [Cases: Statutes ↷77–104.]

"It is ancient wisdom, tracing back at least as far as the Roman taboo against the privilegium, that laws ought to be general, they ought to be addressed, not to particular persons, but to persons generally or to classes of persons (say, 'all householders'). Accordingly, a number of American states have inserted in their constitutions prohibitions against 'private or special' statutes. These have given rise to endless difficulties." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 102–03 (1968).

split-level statute. (1980) A law that includes officially promulgated explanatory materials in addition to its substantive provisions, so that courts are left with two levels of documents to construe.

statute of descent and distribution. See STATUTE OF DISTRIBUTION.

statute of distribution. See STATUTE OF DISTRIBUTION.

statute of frauds. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

temporary statute. (17c) 1. A law that specifically provides that it is to remain in effect for a fixed, limited period. Cf. perpetual statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 172.] 2. A law (such as an appropriation statute) that, by its nature, has only a single and temporary operation.

uniform statute. A law drafted with the intention that it will be adopted by all or most of the states; esp., UNIFORM LAW. — Also termed model statute; uniform act. Cf. MODEL ACT. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 226.]

validating statute. (1882) A law that is amended either to remove errors or to add provisions to conform to constitutional requirements. — Also termed validation statute. Cf. curative statute. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 52, 236.]

statute book. (16c) A bound collection of statutes, usu. as part of a larger set of books containing a complete body of statutory law, such as the United States Code Annotated.

statute fair. Hist. A fair during which the fixed labor rates were announced and laborers of both sexes offered themselves for hire. — Also termed mop fair.

statute law. See STATUTORY LAW.

statute-making. See LEGISLATION (1).

statute merchant. Hist. 1. (cap.) One of two 13th-century statutes establishing procedures to better secure and recover debts by, among other things, providing for a commercial bond that, if not timely paid, resulted in swift execution on the debtor's lands, goods, and body. 13 Edw. I, ch. 6 (1283); 15 Edw. I, ch. 6 (1285). • These statutes were repealed in 1863. — Also termed pocket judgment. 2. The commercial bond so established. Cf. STATUTE STAPLE.

"It is not a little remarkable that our common law knew no process whereby a man could pledge his body or liberty for payment of a debt . . . Under Edward I, the tide turned. In the interest of commerce a new form of security, the so-called 'statute merchant,' was invented, which gave the creditor power to demand the seizure and imprisonment of his debtor's body." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 596–97 (2d ed. 1899).

statute mile. See MILE (1).

Statute of Accumulations. Hist. A statute forbidding the accumulation, beyond a certain period, of property settled by deed or will. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, ch. 98 (1800).

Statute of Allegiance de Facto. Hist. A statute requiring subjects to give allegiance to the actual (de facto) king, and protecting them in so doing. 11 Hen. 7, ch. 1.

Statute of Amendments and Jeofails (jef-aylz). Hist. One of several 15th- and 16th-century statutes allowing a party who acknowledges a pleading error to correct it. 1 Hen. 5, ch. 5 (1413); 32 Hen. 8, ch. 30 (1540); 37 Hen. 8, ch. 6 (1545). See JEOFAIL.

Statute of Anne. Hist. English law. 1. The Copyright Act of 1709, which first granted copyright protection to book authors. 8 Anne, ch. 19 (1709). 2. The statute that modernized the English bankruptcy system and first introduced the discharge of the debtor's existing debts. 4 Anne, ch. 17 (1705).

statute of bread and ale. See ASSISA PANIS ET CEREVISIAE.

statute of distribution. (18c) A state law regulating the distribution of an estate among an intestate's heirs and relatives. • Historically, the statute specified separate, and often different, patterns for distributing an intestate's real property and personal property. Generally, land descended to the heirs and personally descended to the next of kin. — Also termed statute of descent and distribution. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨ 1–43.]

Statute of Elizabeth. Hist. English law. A 1571 penal statute that contained provisions against conveyances made to defraud creditors. 13 Eliz., ch. 5. • The fundamental provisions of this statute formed the basis for modern laws against fraudulent conveyances.

statute of frauds. (18c) 1. Hist. (cap.) A 1677 English statute that declared certain contracts judicially unenforceable (but not void) if they were not committed to writing and signed by the party to be charged. • The statute was entitled "An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries" (29 Car. 2, ch. 3). — Also termed Statute of Frauds and Perjuries.

"The best known, and until recently, most important, Act prescribing written formalities for certain contracts only required that those contracts should be evidenced in writing, or to put it another way, that the contract would be unenforceable in a Court (but not void) in the absence of writing. This was the Statute of Frauds 1677, sections 4 and 17 of which required written evidence of a somewhat curious list of contracts. Today, all that is left of these provisions is that part of section 4, which requires contracts of guarantee to be evidenced in writing, and section 40 of the Law of Property Act 1925 (replacing another part of section 4), which deals with contracts of sale of an interest in land." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 141 (3d ed. 1981).

2. A statute (based on the English Statute of Frauds) designed to prevent fraud and perjury by requiring certain contracts to be in writing and signed by the party to be charged. • Statutes of frauds traditionally apply to the following types of contracts: (1) a contract for the sale or transfer of an interest in land, (2) a contract that cannot be performed within one year of its making, (3) a contract for the sale of goods valued at $500 or more, (4) a contract of an executor or administrator to answer for a decedent's debt, (5) a contract to guarantee the debt or duty of another, and (6) a contract made in consideration of marriage. UCC § 2-201. — Abbr. S/F; SOF. [Cases: Frauds, Statute of ⇨ 1–118.]

"[T]he primary theory of statutes of frauds, past and present, is that they are means to the end of preventing successful courtroom perjury. The means to this end is simply the requirement of a writing signed by the party to be charged. . . . [B]ut the statute of frauds writing requirement is . . . so far from any kind of guarantee against successful perjury that it is inappropriate even to call it a means to fraud prevention at all." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 2-8, at 82 (4th ed. 1995).

Statute of Frauds and Perjuries. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS (1).

Statute of Gloucester (glos-tər). Hist. English law. A 1278 statute providing for the award of costs in legal actions. 6 Edw., ch. 1.

statute of jeofails (jef-aylz). A law permitting a litigant to acknowledge an error in a pleading and correct or amend the pleading without risking dismissal of the claim. See JEOFAIL.

statute of limitations. (18c) 1. A law that bars claims after a specified period; specif., a statute establishing a time limit for suing in a civil case, based on the date when the claim accrued (as when the injury occurred or was discovered). • The purpose of such a statute is to require diligent prosecution of known claims, thereby providing finality and predictability in legal affairs and ensuring that claims will be resolved while evidence is reasonably available and fresh. — Also termed nonclaim statute; limitations period. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↻1.]

"Statutes of limitations, like the equitable doctrine of laches, in their conclusive effects are designed to promote justice by preventing surprises through the revival of claims that have been allowed to slumber until evidence has been lost, memories have faded, and witnesses have disappeared." Order of R.R. Telegraphers v. Railway Express Agency, 321 U.S. 342, 348–49, 64 S.Ct. 582, 586 (1944).

2. A statute establishing a time limit for prosecuting a crime, based on the date when the offense occurred. — Abbr. S/L; SOL. Cf. STATUTE OF REPOSE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻145.5–160.]

"The purpose of a statute of limitations is to limit exposure to criminal prosecution to a certain fixed period of time following the occurrence of those acts the legislature had decided to punish by criminal sanctions. Such a limitation is designed to protect individuals from having to defend themselves against charges when the basic facts have become obscured by the passage of time and to minimize the danger of official punishment because of acts in the far-distant past. Such a time limit may also have the salutary effect of encouraging law enforcement officials promptly to investigate suspected criminal activity." Toussie v. United States, 397 U.S. 112, 90 S.Ct. 858 (1970).

Statute of Monopolies. Hist. A 1624 act of the English Parliament banning the Crown's practice of granting monopolies with the single exception of letters patent, which gave an inventor the exclusive right to make and use the invention for 14 years. 21 Jac. 1, ch. 3.

statute of repose. (18c) A statute barring any suit that is brought after a specified time since the defendant acted (such as by designing or manufacturing a product), even if this period ends before the plaintiff has suffered a resulting injury. Cf. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↻1.]

much less have been discovered. Unlike an ordinary statute of limitations which begins running upon accrual of the claim, the period contained in a statute of repose begins when a specific event occurs, regardless of whether a cause of action has accrued or whether any injury has resulted." 54 C.J.S. Limitations of Actions § 4, at 20–21 (1987).

Statute of Uses. Hist. An English statute of 1535 that converted the equitable title held by a cestui que use (i.e., a beneficiary) to a legal one in order to make the cestui que use liable for feudal dues, as only a legal owner (the feoffee to uses) could be. 27 Hen. 8, ch. 10. • This statute was the culmination of a series of enactments designed by the Tudors to stop the practice of creating uses in land that deprived feudal lords of the valuable incidents of feudal tenure. The statute discouraged the granting of property subject to another's use by deeming the person who enjoys the use to have legal title with the right of absolute ownership and possession. So after the statute was enacted, if A conveyed land to B subject to the use of C, then C became the legal owner of the land in fee simple. Ultimately, the statute was circumvented by the courts' recognition of the use of equitable trusts in land-conveyancing. See CESTUI QUE USE; GRANT TO USES; USE (4).

"The Statute of 27 H.8. hath advanced Uses, and hath established Surety for him that hath the Use against the Feoffees: for before the Statute the Feoffees were Owners of the Land, but now it is destroyed, and the cestuy que use is the Owner of the same: before the Possession ruled the Use, but since the Use governeth the Possession." William Noy, A Treatise of the Principal Grounds and Maxims of the Laws of This Nation 73 (4th ed. 1677; repr. C. Sims ed., 1870).

statute of wills. (17c) 1. (cap.) An English statute (enacted in 1540) that established the right of a person to devise real property by will. — Also termed Wills Act. 2. A state statute, usu. derived from the English statute, providing for testamentary disposition and if certain requirements for valid execution in that jurisdiction are met. [Cases: Wills ↻1–20.]

Statute of Winchester. See WINCHESTER, STATUTE OF.

Statute of York. See YORK, STATUTE OF.

statute roll. Hist. A roll upon which a statute was formally entered after receiving the royal assent.

Statutes at Large. An official compilation of the acts and resolutions that become law from each session of Congress, printed in chronological order.

statute staple. Hist. 1. A 1353 statute establishing procedures for settling disputes among merchants who traded in staple towns. • The statute helped merchants receive swift judgments for debt. Cf. STATUTE MERCHANT. 2. A bond for commercial debt. • A statute staple gave the lender a possessory right in the land of a debtor who failed to repay a loan. See STAPLE.

"A popular form of security after 1285 . . . was the . . . 'statute staple' — whereby the borrower could by means of a registered contract charge his land and goods without giving up possession; if he failed to pay, the lender became a tenant of the land until satisfied . . . The borrower under a statute or recognizance remained in possession of his land, and it later became a common practice under the common-law forms of mortgage likewise to allow the mortgagor to remain in possession as a tenant at will or at sufferance of the mortgagee." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 354 (3d ed. 1990).

statuti (stā-t[y]oo-tī), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Licensed officials, esp. advocates, whose names are inscribed in registers of matriculation, forming part of the college of advocates. Cf. SUPERNUMERARI.

statuto mercatorio. See DE STATUTO MERCATORIO.

statutory (stach-ə-tor-ee), adj. (18c) 1. Of or relating to legislation <statutory interpretation>. 2. Legislatively created <the law of patents is purely statutory>. 3. Conformable to a statute .

statutory action. See ACTION (4).

statutory agent. See AGENT (2).

statutory arson. See ARSON (2).

statutory bar. Patents. A patent law provision that denies patent protection to inventors who wait too long to apply. • This "loss of right" may occur when an inventor publishes an article about the work, sells it, offers it for sale, or makes public use of the invention. The inventor has one year after the disclosure to apply for a patent. See BAR (7). Cf. GRACE PERIOD (2). [Cases: Patents ⇨ 80.]

statutory bond. 1. See BOND (2). 2. See BOND (3).

statutory construction. (1813) 1. The act or process of interpreting a statute. 2. Collectively, the principles developed by courts for interpreting statutes. — Also termed statutory interpretation. See CONSTRUCTION (2). [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 174–247.]

"[T]here is not, and probably never can be, anything meriting the description of a coherent body of case-law on statutory interpretation as a whole as distinct from the interpretation of a particular statute." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 39 (1976).

statutum (stə-t[y]oo-təm), adj. Established; determined.

statutum, n. 1. Hist. An act of Parliament, esp. one that has been approved by the monarch. Cf. ACTUS (2). 2. Roman law. An ordinance; esp., an imperial law.

Statutum de Nova Custuma (stə-t[y]oo-təm dee noh-və kəs-chə-mə or kəs-tyə-mə). See CARTA MERCATORIA.

stay, n. (16c) 1. The postponement or halting of a proceeding, judgment, or the like. 2. An order to suspend all or part of a judicial proceeding or a judgment resulting from that proceeding. — Also termed stay of execution; suspension of judgment. [Cases: Action ↷ 67; Execution ↷ 158; Federal Civil Procedure ↷ 2700.] — stay, vb. — stayable, adj.

automatic stay. Bankruptcy. A bar to all judicial and extrajudicial collection efforts against the debtor or the debtor's property, subject to specific statutory exceptions. 11 USCA §§ 362 (a)–(b). • The policy behind the automatic stay, which is effective upon the filing of the bankruptcy petition, is that all actions against the debtor should be halted pending the determination of creditors' rights and the orderly administration of the debtor's assets free from creditor interference. — Also termed automatic suspension. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷ 2391–2404.]

stay-away order. 1. In a domestic-violence case, an order forbidding the defendant to contact the victim. • A stay-away order usu. prohibits the defendant from coming within a certain number of feet of the victim's home, school, work, or other specific place. Stay-away orders are most often issued in criminal cases. [Cases: Breach of the Peace ↷ 16.] 2. RESTRAINING ORDER (1). 3. In a juvenile-delinquency case, an order prohibiting a youthful offender from frequenting the scene of the offense or from being in the company of certain persons. — Also termed no-contact order; stay-away order of protection.

stay of execution. See STAY.

stay of mandate. 1. The suspension of a lower court's order of execution, imposed by a higher court. 2. An appellate court's suspension of its own judgment for reconsideration.

stayor. Rare. Tennessee law. A surety for a judgment.

stay-put rule. School law. The principle that a child must remain in his or her current educational placement while an administrative claim under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (usu. for an alternative placement or for mainstreaming) is pending. 20 USCA § 1415(j). [Cases: Schools ↷ 148(2.1).]

STB. abbr. SURFACE TRANSPORTATION BOARD.

STD. abbr. SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASE.

steady course. Maritime law. A ship's path that can be readily ascertained either because the ship is on a straight heading or because the ship's future positions are easy to plot based on the ship's current position and movements. [Cases: Collision ↷ 35–38.]

steal, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To take (personal property) illegally with the intent to keep it unlawfully. [Cases: Larceny ↷ 1.] 2. To take (something) by larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses.

stealth. 1. Hist. Theft; an act or instance of stealing. • Etymologically, this term is the noun corresponding to the verb steal.

"Stealth is the wrongful taking of goods without pretence of title: and therefore altereth not the property, as a trespass doth, so as upon an appeal the party shall re-have them." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 210 (1759).

2. Surreptitiousness; furtive slyness.

stealth juror. See JUROR.

steganography (steg-ə-nog-rə-fee), n. A cryptographic method that digitally embeds or encodes one item of information within another. • Because digitized audio or visual files usu. have unused data areas, indelible (and nearly undetectable) information can be added without altering the file's quality. Copyright or trademark tags can be hidden in every fragment of a digital work, making disassociation almost impossible. — Also termed digital fingerprinting; digital watermarking.

stellionatus (stel-ee-ə-nay-təs or stel-yə-). [Latin "underhand dealing"] Roman & Scots law. Conduct that is fraudulent but does not fall within a specific class of offenses. • This term applies primarily to fraudulent practices in the sale or hypothecation of land. — Also termed (in Scots law) stellionate. Cf. COZENING.

"Though pignus and hypothec are almost different names for the same thing, there were differences. Hypothec was used mainly for land, which cannot be removed. A thing could be pledged only to one, but successive hypothecs might be created over a thing. There was no fraud in this but it was the offence of stellionatus to give a hypothec without declaring existing hypothecs." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 355 (2d ed. 1953).

"STELLIONATE . . . is a term applied, in the law of Scotland, either to any crime which, though indictable, goes under no general denomination, and is punishable arbitrarily, or to any civil delinquency of which fraud is an ingredient. Those, e.g., who grant double conveyances of the same subject, are guilty of this crime . . . and are punishable arbitrarily in their persons and goods, besides becoming infamous." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 940 (George Watson ed., 1882).

step-transaction doctrine. A method used by the Internal Revenue Service to determine tax liability by viewing the transaction as a whole, and disregarding one or more nonsubstantive, intervening transactions taken to achieve the final result. — Also termed step-transaction approach. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3071.]

sterilization. 1. The act of making (a person or other living thing) permanently unable to reproduce. 2. The act of depriving (a person or other living thing) of reproductive organs; esp., castration. — Also termed (in both senses) asexualization. [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control ↷133; Mental Health ↷57.]

sterling, adj. 1. Of or conforming to a standard of national value, esp. of English money or metal . 2. (Of an opinion, value, etc.) valuable; authoritative .

stet (stet), n. [Latin "let it stand"] (18c) 1. An order staying legal proceedings, as when a prosecutor determines not to proceed on an indictment and places the case on a stet docket. • The term is used chiefly in Maryland. 2. An instruction to leave a text as it stands.

stet processus (stet prā-sēs-əs), n. [Law Latin "let the process stand"] Hist. 1. A record entry, similar to a nolle prosequi, by which the parties agree to stay further proceedings. 2. The agreement between the parties to stay those proceedings. • This was typically used by a plaintiff to suspend an action rather than suffer a nonsuit.

stedore (stee-və-dor). Maritime law. A person or company that hires longshore and harbor workers to load and unload ships. Cf. SEAMAN; LONGSHOREMAN. [Cases: Shipping ↷84, 110.]

steward. 1. A person appointed to manage the affairs of another. 2. A union official who represents union employees and who oversees the performance of union contracts. — Also termed (in sense 2) union steward; shop steward.

steward of all England. Hist. An officer vested with various powers, including the power to preside over the trial of peers.

steward of a manor. Hist. An officer who handles the business matters of a manor, including keeping the court rolls and granting admittance to copyhold lands.

Steward of Chiltern Hundreds (chil-tərn). English law. Formerly, a royal officer charged with protecting residents from robbers and thieves who hid in the hundreds' wooded areas. • Today, a member of Parliament can accept this royal appointment as a step toward resigning, which is generally forbidden by statute. By law, for a member to accept this and certain other Crown appointments is to forfeit his or her seat. A resignation from the office of Steward completes the resignation process.

stickering. Securities. The updating of a prospectus by affixing stickers that contain the new or revised information. • Stickering avoids the expense of reprinting an entire prospectus.

stickler. Hist. An arbitrator.

stickup. (1904) An armed robbery in which the victim is threatened by the use of weapons. — Also termed holdup. See armed robbery under ROBBERY. [Cases: Robbery ↷11.]

stiffening note. Maritime law. A permit, issued by a customs collector to the ship's master, that authorizes the receipt and loading of heavy goods necessary to ballast a vessel before the inward-bound cargo has been completely unloaded.

stifling of a prosecution. An illegal agreement, in exchange for money or other benefit, to abstain from prosecuting a person. [Cases: Compounding Offenses ↷1.]

stigma-plus doctrine. The principle that defamation by a government official is not actionable as a civil-rights violation unless the victim suffers not only embarrassment but also the loss of a property interest (such as

still, n. An instrument or apparatus used for making distilled liquor or alcohol.

stillborn, adj. (Of an infant) born dead. — Also termed deadborn.

stillicidium (stil-ə-sid-ee-əm), n. [Latin fr. stilla “a drop” + cadere “to fall”] Roman law. Eavesdropping. See AQUAE IMMITTENDAE; servitus stillicidii under SERVITUS.

stilus curiae (sti-ləs kyoor-ee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. The form of court.

sting. (1976) An undercover operation in which law-enforcement agents pose as criminals to catch actual criminals engaging in illegal acts.

stint. 1. English law. Limitation; restriction .

2. A specific quantity of work; the time spent performing a specific activity <he has done his stint>.

stipend (sti-pend or -pənd). 1. A salary or other regular, periodic payment. 2. A tribute to support the clergy, usu. consisting of payments in money or grain. [Cases: Religious Societies ↻27(5).]

stipendiary estate (sti-pen-dee-er-ee). See ESTATE (1).

stipendiary magistrate. See MAGISTRATE.

stipendium (sti-pen-dee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. A soldier’s regular pay. Cf. SALARIUM.

stipes (sti-peez), n. [Latin “a trunk”] Hist. Family stock; a source of descent or title. Pl. stipites (stip-ə-teez).

stipital (stip-i-təl), adj. See STIRPITAL.

stipulated authority. See express authority under AUTHORITY (1).

stipulated damages. See liquidated damages under DAMAGES.

stipulated judgment. See agreed judgment under JUDGMENT.

stipulatio (stip-yə-lay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. An oral contract requiring a formal question and reply, binding the replier to do what was asked. • It is essential that both parties speak, and that the reply directly conforms to the question asked and is made with the intent to enter into a contractual obligation. No consideration is required. See actio ex stipulatu under ACTIO. Pl. stipulationes (stip-yə-lay-shee-oh-nee-z).

“[I]t must be remembered that the law-forms used by the Romans had their origin in times when writing was neither easy nor common. It is not surprising, therefore, that among them a form of spoken words, a verbal contract, should hold the place which among us is occupied by written notes. This form . . . stipulatio — was of a very simple character, consisting only of a question asked by one party, and an answer returned by the other . . . Such forms as Spondesne mihi decem aureos dare (do you engage to give me ten aurei, or gold-pieces): answer, Spondeo (I engage) . . .” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 210 (1881).

“The oldest Roman contract was the stipulatio, an oral promise made by an answer to an immediately preceding question, with the promisor using the same verb. The contract was unilateral. Only one party, the promisor, was legally liable, and he was bound strictly by the words used.” Alan Watson, Ancient Law and Modern Understanding 96 (1998).

stipulatio aquiliana (stip-yə-lay-shee-oh ə-kwil-ee-ay-nə). [Latin] Roman law. A type of stipulatio used to collect and discharge all the liabilities owed on various grounds by a single contract.

“[S]tipulatio Aquiliana, a device credited to Aquilius Gallus, of Cicero’s time. Where two persons with complex relations between them desired to square or simplify their accounts they could work out the items and arrive at the balance . . . This balance being paid or otherwise arranged, each party would then make with the other this stipulatio, which was a comprehensive formula . . . This would novate all the claims and turn them into a single promise, for an incertum. These mutual stipulations might then be released by acceptilatio.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 348 (2d ed. 1953).

stipulatio juris (stip-yə-lay-shee-oh joor-is). [Latin “stipulatio as to the law”] The parties’ agreement on a question of law or its applicability. • The court is not bound to accept the stipulation if it is erroneous. But the parties are allowed to stipulate the law to be applied to a dispute.

stipulation (stip-yə-lay-shən), n. (18c) 1. A material condition or requirement in an agreement; esp., a factual representation that is incorporated into a contract as a term <breach of the stipulation regarding payment of taxes>. • Such a contractual term often appears in a section of the contract called “Representations and Warranties.” [Cases: Contracts ↻173, 207, 218, 221.] 2. A voluntary agreement between opposing parties concerning some relevant point; esp., an agreement relating to a proceeding, made by attorneys representing adverse parties to the proceeding <the plaintiff and defendant entered into a stipulation on the issue of liability>. • A stipulation relating to a pending judicial proceeding, made by a party to the proceeding or the party’s attorney, is binding without consideration. [Cases: Stipulations ↻1.]

“Breach of a stipulation should not be confused with misrepresentation, which is a false statement made before or at the time the contract is made, and which induces the contract; only if it is incorporated into the contract does it become a stipulation or term, the breach of which will entitle the injured party to pursue the usual remedies which are available where there has been a breach of a warranty or of a condition.” 1 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 239 (P.W. French ed., 13th ed. 1950).

“Stipulations with respect to matters of form and procedure serve the convenience of the parties to litigation and often serve to simplify and expedite the proceeding. In some cases they are supported by the policy of favoring compromise in order to reduce the volume of litigation. Hence they are favored by the courts and enforced without regard to consideration.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 94 cmt. a (1979).

3. Roman law. A formal contract by which a promisor (and only the promisor) became bound by oral question and answer. • By the third century A.D., stipulations were always evidenced in writing. See REUS PROMITTENDI; REUS STIPULANDI. — stipulate (stip-yə-layt), vb. — stipulative (stip-yə-lə-tiv), adj.

"A stipulation consisted in a question and answer, the question being put by the person who was to acquire a right, the answer being given orally by the person who undertook the obligation. The matter of the agreement being stated, the binding words were usually simple; those used by (and peculiar to) Romans being Spondesne? or spondes? Spondeo. A stipulation made with a foreigner in these terms was invalid. The questioner was called stipulator, sometimes reus stipulandi ('[stipulating party]'), the answerer usually promissor (or reus promittendi [the promising party]) . . ." 2 Henry John Roby, Roman Private Law 12 (1902).

stipulation pour autrui (poor oh-troo-ee). [French "for other persons"] Civil law. A contractual provision that benefits a third party and gives the third party a cause of action against the promisor for specific performance. La. Civ. Code art. 1978. See third-party beneficiary under BENEFICIARY. [Cases: Contracts ↷187.] stipulatio sponsalitia (stip-yə-lay-shee-oh spon-sə-lish-ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. In early law a solemn promise by a father (paterfamilias) that his child would marry someone else's child. • In some cases, there was a penalty if the marriage did not occur. In classical and later Roman law, in which free marriage was the rule, such a promise was unenforceable because it was regarded as immoral (contra bonos mores).

stipulative definition. See DEFINITION.

stipulator. 1. One who makes a stipulation. 2. Civil law. The promisee in a stipulation pour autrui, accepting the promise of a benefit to a third party. See REUS STIPULANDI.

stirpes (stər-pee-z). (pl.) See STIRPES.

stirpital (stər-pə-təl), adj. (1886) Of or relating to per stirpes distribution. — Also termed stipital; stirpal. See PER STIRPES. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↷43; Wills ↷530.]

stirps (stərps), n. [Latin "stock"] (17c) A branch of a family; a line of descent. Pl. stirpes (stər-pee-z). See PER STIRPES.

stock, n. (14c) 1. The original progenitor of a family; a person from whom a family is descended; BRANCH (1) <George Harper, Sr. was the stock of the Harper line>. 2. A merchant's goods that are kept for sale or trade <the car dealer put last year's models on sale to reduce its stock>. 3. The capital or principal fund raised by a corporation through subscribers' contributions or the sale of shares <Acme's stock is worth far more today than it was 20 years ago>. 4. A proportional part of a corporation's capital represented by the number of equal units (or shares) owned, and granting the holder the right to participate in the company's general management and to share in its net profits or earnings <Julia

adjustable-rate preferred stock. Preferred stock whose dividend is periodically changed according to changes in a benchmark interest rate, such as that of Treasury bills.

assented stock. Stock that an owner deposits with a third person according to an agreement by which the owner voluntarily accepts a change in the corporation's securities.

assessable stock. Stock that is subject to resale by the issuer if the holder fails to pay any assessment levied on it. [Cases: Corporations ↷175.]

authorized stock. See capital stock (1).

bailout stock. Nontaxable preferred stock issued to stockholders as a dividend. • Bailout stock is issued to gain favorable tax rates by distributing corporate earnings at capital gains rates rather than by distributing dividends at ordinary income rates. This practice is now prohibited by the Internal Revenue Code. IRC (26 USCA) § 306.

barometer stock. A stock whose price fluctuates according to market conditions; an individual stock considered to be indicative of the strength of the market in general. — Also termed bellwether stock.

blank stock. Securities. Stock with voting powers and rights set by the issuer's board of directors after the stock has been sold. [Cases: Corporations ↷126.]

bonus stock. A stock share that is issued for no consideration, as an enticement to buy some other type or class of security. • It is considered a type of watered stock. — Also termed bonus share. [Cases: Corporations ↷99, 243(6).]

book-value stock. Stock offered to executives at a book-value price, rather than at its market value. • The stock is offered with the understanding that when its book value has risen, the company will buy back the stock at the increased price or will make payments in stock equal to the increased price.

callable preferred stock. Preferred stock that may be repurchased by the issuing corporation at a prestated price, usu. at or slightly above par value. [Cases: Corporations ↷68.]

capital stock. 1. The total number of shares of stock that a corporation may issue under its charter or articles of incorporation, including both common stock and preferred stock. • A corporation may increase the amount of capital stock if the owners of a majority of the outstanding shares consent. — Also termed authorized stock; authorized capital stock; authorized stock issue; authorized shares. [Cases: Corporations ↷60.] 2. The total par value or stated value of this stock; CAPITALIZATION (4). 3. See common stock.

cheap stock. Stock or stock options issued to the issuer's directors, employees, consultants, promoters, and the like at a price lower than the public-offering price up to 12 months before the offering.

common stock. A class of stock entitling the holder to vote on corporate matters, to receive dividends after other claims and dividends have been paid (esp. to preferred shareholders), and to share in assets upon liquidation. • Common stock is often called capital stock if it is the corporation's only class of stock outstanding. — Also termed ordinary shares. Cf. preferred stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷155.]

convertible stock. See convertible security under SECURITY.

corporate stock. An equity security issued by a corporation.

cumulative preferred stock. Preferred stock that must receive dividends in full before common shareholders may receive any dividend. • If the corporation omits a dividend in a particular year or period, it is carried over to the next year or period and must be paid before the common shareholders receive any payment. — Also termed cumulative stock; cumulative preference share. [Cases: Corporations ↷156.]

deferred stock. Stock whose holders are entitled to dividends only after the corporation has met some other specified obligation, such as the discharge of a liability or the payment of a dividend to preferred shareholders.

discount stock. A stock share issued for less than par value. • Discount stock is considered a type of watered stock, the issuance of which may impose liability on the recipient for the difference between the par value and the cash amount paid. — Also termed discount share.

donated stock. Stock donated to a charity or given to a corporation by its own stockholders, esp. for resale.

equity stock. Stock of any class having unlimited dividend rights, regardless of whether the stock is preferred.

floating stock. Stock that is offered for sale on the open market and that has not yet been purchased; the number of outstanding shares available for trading.

full-paid stock. Stock on which no further payments can be demanded by the issuing company. — Also termed paid-up stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷88, 89.]

growth stock. 1. Stock issued by a growth company.

• Because a growth company usu. reinvests a large share of its income back into the company, growth stock pays relatively low dividends, though its price usu. has a relatively high appreciation in market value over time. 2. Stock that has produced or is expected to produce above-average returns and usu. receives small or no dividends. — Also termed glamour stock.

guaranteed stock. Preferred stock on which a dividend is guaranteed by someone (usu. a parent corporation) other than the issuer. [Cases: Corporations ↷156.]

guarantee stock. A fixed, nonwithdrawal investment in a building-and-loan association. • This type of stock guarantees to all other investors in the association a fixed dividend or interest rate. See BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations ↷7.]

guaranty stock. A savings-and-loan association's stock yielding dividends to the holders after dividends have been paid to the depositors. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations ↷11.]

hot stock. See hot issue under ISSUE (2).

inactive stock. A low-volume stock.

income stock. A stock with a history of high yields or dividend payments (e.g., public utilities and well-established corporations).

issued stock. Capital stock that has been authorized and sold to subscribers, but may be reacquired, such as treasury stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷72, 159.]

joint stock. Capital invested in an unincorporated business and divided into shares proportionate to the size of each investment. [Cases: Joint-Stock Companies and Business Trusts ↷5.]

letter stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

listed stock. See listed security under SECURITY.

margin stock. See marginable security under SECURITY.

nonassessable stock. Stock owned by a holder whose potential liability is limited to the amount paid for the stock and who cannot be charged additional funds to pay the issuer's debts. • Stock issued in the United States is usu. nonassessable. [Cases: Corporations ↷78, 175.]

noncumulative preferred stock. Preferred stock that does not have to be paid dividends that are in arrears. • Once a periodic dividend is omitted, it will not be paid. — Also termed noncumulative stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷156.]

nonparticipating preferred stock. Preferred stock that does not give the shareholder the right to additional earnings — usu. surplus common-stock dividends — beyond those stated in the preferred contract.

nonvoting stock. Stock that has no voting rights under most situations. [Cases: Corporations ↷197.]

no-par stock. Stock issued without a specific value assigned to it. • For accounting purposes, it is given a legal or stated value that has little or no connection to the stock's actual value. — Sometimes shortened to no par. — Also termed no-par-value stock.

outstanding stock. Stock that is held by investors and has not been redeemed by the issuing corporation. — Also termed outstanding capital stock; shares outstanding.

paid-up stock. See full-paid stock. participating preferred stock. Preferred stock whose holder is entitled to receive stated dividends and to share with the common shareholders in any additional distributions of earnings.

participation stock. Stock permitting the holder to participate in profits and surplus.

par-value stock. Stock originally issued for a fixed value derived by dividing the total value of capital stock by the number of shares to be issued. • The par value does not bear a necessary relation to the actual stock value because surplus plays a role in the valuation. [Cases: Corporations ⇨62, 99(3).]

penny stock. An equity security that is not traded in established markets, represents no tangible assets, or has average revenues less than required for trading on an exchange. • Typically, a penny stock is highly speculative and can be purchased for less than $5 a share.

performance stock. See glamour stock.

phantom stock. Imaginary stock that is credited to a corporate executive account as part of the executive's compensation package. See PHANTOM STOCK PLAN. [Cases: Corporations ⇨308(3).]

preferred stock. A class of stock giving its holder a preferential claim to dividends and to corporate assets upon liquidation but that usu. carries no voting rights. — Also termed preference shares. Cf. common stock. [Cases: Corporations ⇨156.]

premium stock. Stock that carries a premium for trading, as in the case of short-selling.

prior preferred stock. Preferred stock that has preference over another class of preferred stock from the same issuer. • The preference usu. relates to dividend payments or claims on assets. [Cases: Corporations ⇨156.]

public stock. 1. See public security under SECURITY. 2. Stock of a publicly traded corporation.

reacquired stock. See treasury stock.

redeemable stock. Preferred stock that can be called by the issuing corporation and retired. [Cases: Corporations ⇨68.]

registered stock. See registered security under SECURITY.

restricted stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

retired stock. See treasury stock.

special stock. Hist. Corporate stock that guarantees investors an annual dividend and gives them creditor status to the extent that dividends have become payable. • In contrast, preferred-stock holders' claims for dividends payable are secondary to creditors' claims. Special stock was statutorily authorized only in Massachusetts. [Cases: Corporations ⇨71.]

subscribed stock. A stockholder's equity account showing the capital that will be contributed when the subscription price is collected. See SUBSCRIPTION (2). [Cases: Corporations ⇨88.]

tainted stock. Stock owned or transferred by a person disqualified from serving as a plaintiff in a derivative action. • A good-faith transferee is also disqualified from filing a derivative action.

treasury stock. Stock issued by a company but then reacquired and either canceled or held. • Some states have eliminated this classification and treat such stock as if it is authorized but unissued. — Also termed treasury security; treasury share; reacquired stock; retired stock. [Cases: Corporations ⇨72.]

unissued stock. Stock that is authorized by the corporate charter but not yet distributed.

unlisted stock. See unlisted security under SECURITY.

volatile stock. Stock subject to wide and rapid fluctuations in price. — Also termed yo-yo stock.

voting stock. Stock that entitles the holder to vote in the corporation's election of directors and on other matters that are put to a vote. — Also termed voting security. [Cases: Corporations ⇨197.]

watered stock. Stock issued for less than par value. [Cases: Corporations ⇨99.]

"The term 'watered stock' is a colorful common law phrase describing the situation where shareholders receive shares without paying as much for them as the law requires. . . . Much of the early common law relating to watered shares concerned the liability of shareholders receiving watered shares to pay the additional consideration needed to 'squeeze out the water.' . . . [It now] seems clear that a shareholder is liable to the corporation if he or she pays less for the shares than the consideration fixed by the directors, and this liability is measured by the difference between the fixed consideration and the amount actually paid." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 120-21 (3d ed. 1991).

whisper stock. The stock of a company that is rumored to be the target of a takeover attempt.

yo-yo stock. See volatile stock.

strand, n. (bef. 12c) A shore or bank of an ocean, lake, river, or stream.

stranding, n. Maritime law. A ship's drifting, driving, or running aground on a strand. • The type of stranding that occurs determines the method of apportioning the liability for any resulting losses. [Cases: Salvage ↻ 9, 30.]

accidental stranding. Stranding caused by natural forces, such as wind and waves. — Also termed involuntary stranding. See general average and particular average under AVERAGE.

"Damage to a vessel from involuntary stranding or wreck, and the cost of repairs, are particular average only. Where, however, the ship and cargo are exposed to a common peril by the accidental stranding, the expenses of unloading and taking care of the cargo, rescuing the vessel, reloading the cargo, and other expenses other than repairs requisite to enable the vessel to proceed on the voyage, are brought into general average, provided the vessel and cargo were saved by the same series of measures during the continuance of the common peril which created the joint necessity for the expenses." 70 Am. Jur. 2d Shipping § 961, at 1069 (1987).

voluntary stranding. Stranding to avoid a more dangerous fate or for fraudulent purposes.

"The loss occurring when a ship is voluntarily run ashore to avoid capture, foundering, or shipwreck is to be made good by general average contribution, if the ship is afterwards recovered so as to be able to perform its voyage, as such a claim is clearly within the rule that whatever is sacrificed for the common benefit of the associated interests shall be made good by all the interests exposed to the common peril which were saved from the common danger by the sacrifice A vessel cannot, however, claim contribution founded on even a voluntary stranding made necessary by . . . unseaworthiness or the negligence of those in charge, except in pursuance of a valid agreement to that effect." 70 Am. Jur. 2d Shipping § 961, at 1069 (1987).

stranger. (14c) 1. One who is not party to a given transaction; esp., someone other than a party or the party's employee, agent, tenant, or immediate family member. [Cases: Contracts ↻ 185.] 2. One not standing toward another in some relation implied in the context; esp., one who is not in privity. 3. A person who voluntarily pays another person's debt even though the payor cannot be held liable for the debt and the payor's property is not affected by the creditor's rights. • Subrogation does not apply to a stranger if the debtor did not agree to or assign subrogation rights.

stranger in blood. (17c) 1. One not related by blood, such as a relative by affinity. 2. Any person not within the consideration of natural love and affection arising from a relationship.

(1896) 1. A fictitious person, esp. one that is weak or flawed. 2. A tenuous and exaggerated counter-argument that an advocate makes for the sole purpose of disproving it. — Also termed straw-man argument. 3. A third party used in some transactions as a temporary transferee to allow the principal parties to accomplish something that is otherwise impermissible. 4. A person hired to post a worthless bail bond for the release of an accused. — Also termed stramineus homo. Cf. DUMMY.

straw-man scam. Criminal law. A scheme in which an innocent third person is hired to receive fraudulently obtained money and wire it to a location outside the country.

straw poll. A nonbinding vote, taken as a way of informally gauging support or opposition but usu. without a formal motion or debate.

stray remarks. Employment law. Statements to or about an employee by a coworker or supervisor, concerning the employee's race, sex, age, national origin, or other status, that are either objectively or subjectively offensive, but that do not represent harassment or discrimination by the employer because of (1) their sporadic, unsystematic, and unofficial nature, (2) the circumstances in which they were made, or (3) their not showing any intention to hamper the employee's continued employment. — Also termed stray comments. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1147, 1543.] stream. Anything liquid that flows in a line or course; esp., a current of water consisting of a bed, bank, and watercourse, usu. emptying into other bodies of water but not losing its character even if it breaks up or disappears. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ⇨ 38.]

private stream. A watercourse, the bed, channel, or waters of which are exclusively owned by private parties.

stream-of-commerce theory. (1942) 1. The principle that a state may exercise personal jurisdiction over a defendant if the defendant places a product in the general marketplace and the product causes injury or damage in the forum state, as long as the defendant also takes other acts to establish some connection with the forum state, as by advertising there or by hiring someone to serve as a sales agent there. Asahi Metal Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Superior Court of Cal., 480 U.S. 102, 107 S.Ct. 1026 (1987). [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 665(1); Courts ⇨ 12(2.25); Federal Courts ⇨ 76, 81.] 2. The principle that a person who participates in placing a defective product in the general marketplace is strictly liable for harm caused by the product. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A (1979). [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 164.]

street. A road or public thoroughfare used for travel in an urban area, including the pavement, shoulders, gutters, curbs, and other areas within the street lines. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 658.]

"Strictly speaking, a 'street' is a public thoroughfare in an urban community such as a city, town, or village, and the term is not ordinarily applicable to roads and highways outside of municipalities. Although a street, in common parlance, is equivalent to a highway, it is usually specifically denominated by its own proper appellation. . . . Whether a particular highway is to be regarded as a 'street' within the meaning of that term as used in a statute must, of course, be resolved by construction." 39 Am. Jur. 2d Highways, Streets, and Bridges § 8, at 588-89 (1999).

paper street. A thoroughfare that appears on plats, subdivision maps, and other publicly filed documents, but that has not been completed or opened for public use. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 646.]

street gang. See GANG.

street name. A brokerage firm's name in which securities owned by another are registered. • A security is held by a broker in street name (at the customer's request) to simplify trading because no signature on the stock certificate is required. A street name may also be used for securities purchased on margin. The word "street" in this term is a reference to Wall Street.

street-name security. See nominee account under ACCOUNT.

street sweep. Mergers & acquisitions. Slang. A bidder's cancellation of a tender offer followed by the open-market purchase of large blocks of stock in the target corporation.

street time. Criminal law. The period between a person's release from prison on parole and a court's revocation of that parole.

strepitus judicialis (strep-ə-təs joo-dish-ee-ay-lis), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Disruptive behavior in court.

strict, adj. (15c) 1. Narrow; restricted <strict construction>. 2. Rigid; exacting <strict statutory terms>. 3. Severe <strict punishment>. 4. Absolute; requiring no showing of fault <strict liability>.

stricto jure (strik-toh joor-ee). [Latin] In strict law.

strict products liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

strict rule. See SPECIFIC-PURPOSE RULE.

strict scrutiny. (1941) Constitutional law. The standard applied to suspect classifications (such as race) in equal-protection analysis and to fundamental rights (such as voting rights) in due-process analysis. • Under strict scrutiny, the state must establish that it has a compelling interest that justifies and necessitates the law in question. See COMPELLING-STATE-INTEREST TEST; SUSPECT CLASSIFICATION; FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT. Cf. INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY; RATIONAL-BASIS TEST. [Cases: Constitutional] Law ⇨ 3062, 3901.]

strict test. Evidence. The principle that disclosure of a privileged document, even when inadvertent, results in a waiver of the attorney-client privilege regarding the document, unless all possible precautions were taken to protect the document from disclosure. Cf. LENIENT TEST; HYDRAFLOW TEST. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ⇨ 168.]

strictum jus (strikt-əm jəs). See JUS STRICTUM.

strict underwriting. See standby underwriting under UNDERWRITING.

strike, n. (1810) 1. An organized cessation or slowdown of work by employees to compel the employer to meet the employees' demands; a concerted refusal by employees to work for their employer, or to work at their customary rate of speed, until the employer grants the concessions that they seek. — Also termed walkout. Cf. LOCKOUT; BOYCOTT; PICKETING. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 1384.]

ca'canny strike. See slowdown strike.

economic strike. A strike resulting from an economic dispute with the employer (such as a wage dispute); a dispute for reasons other than unfair labor practices. • An employer can permanently replace an economic striker but cannot prevent the worker from coming back to an unreplaced position simply because the worker was on strike.

general strike. A strike organized to affect an entire industry.

illegal strike. 1. A strike using unlawful procedures. 2. A strike to obtain unlawful objectives, as in a strike to force an employer to stop doing business with a particular company.

jurisdictional strike. A strike resulting from a dispute between members of different unions over work assignments.

organizational strike. See recognition strike.

outlaw strike. See wildcat strike.

quicke strike. See wildcat strike.

recognition strike. A strike by workers seeking to force their employer to acknowledge the union as their collective-bargaining agent. • After the National Labor Relations Act was passed in 1935, recognition strikes became unnecessary. Under the Act, the employer is required to recognize an NLRB-certified union for bargaining purposes. — Also termed organizational strike.

secondary strike. A strike against an employer because that employer has business dealings with another employer directly involved in a dispute with the union. See secondary boycott under BOYCOTT; secondary picketing under PICKETING.

sit-down strike. A strike in which employees occupy the workplace but do not work. See SIT-IN.

slowdown strike. A strike in which the workers remain on the job but work at a slower pace to reduce their output. — Also termed ca'canny strike.

sympathy strike. A strike by union members who have no grievance against their own employer but who want to show support for another union involved in a labor dispute. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 1385.]

whipsaw strike. A strike against some but not all members of a multiemployer association, called for the purpose of pressuring all the employees to negotiate a labor contract. • Employers whose workers are not on strike have the right to lock out employees to exert counterpressure on the union. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 1385.]

wildcat strike. A strike not authorized by a union or by a collective-bargaining agreement. — Also termed outlaw strike; quickie strike.

2. The removal of a prospective juror from the jury panel . See CHALLENGE (2). [Cases: Jury ↷83–142.] 3. A failure or disadvantage, as by a criminal conviction .

4. Parliamentary law. A form of the motion to amend by deleting one or more words. See amendment by striking out under AMENDMENT (3).

sight strike. The elimination of a veniremember based solely on appearance. See peremptory challenge under CHALLENGE (2). strike, vb. (14c) 1. (Of an employee or union) to engage in a strike <the flight attendants struck to protest the reduction in benefits>. 2. To remove (a prospective juror) from a jury panel by a peremptory challenge or a challenge for cause <the prosecution struck the panelist who indicated an opposition to the death penalty>. See peremptory challenge under CHALLENGE (2). [Cases: Jury ↷83–142.] 3. To expunge, as from a record <motion to strike the prejudicial evidence>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷2018.] 4. Parliamentary law. To amend by deleting one or more words. See amendment by striking out under AMENDMENT (3). — Also termed (in sense 4) strike out.

strike down. (1894) To invalidate (a statute); to declare void.

strike fund. A union fund that provides benefits to its members who are on strike, esp. for subsistence while the members are not receiving wages.

strike off. 1. (Of a court) to order (a case) removed from the docket. 2. (Of an auctioneer or sheriff) to announce, usu. by the falling of the hammer, that an item of personal or real property has been sold.

strike out. See STRIKE (4).

strike price. See PRICE.

strike suit. See SUIT.

strike zone. Slang. The period in jury selection in which veniremembers are subject to being struck by peremptory challenge before the jury is seated. • If a court requires 12 jurors and allows each side 10 peremptory strikes, the strike zone would be the first 32 veniremembers.

striking a jury. (1859) The selecting of a jury out of all the candidates available to serve on the jury; esp., the selecting of a special jury. See struck jury, special jury under JURY. [Cases: Jury ↷71.]

striking off the roll. See DISBARMENT.

striking price. See strike price under PRICE.

string of title. See CHAIN OF TITLE (1).

strip, n. (16c) 1. The act of separating and selling a bond's coupons and corpus separately. 2. The act of a tenant who, holding less than the entire fee in land, spoils or unlawfully takes something from the land. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷55(2).]

STRIP (strip). abbr. SEPARATE TRADING OF REGISTERED INTEREST AND PRINCIPAL OF SECURITIES.

stultiloquium (stəl-ti-loh-kwee-əm). [fr. Latin stultus "foolish" + loqui "to speak"] Hist. A frivolous pleading punishable by fine. • This may have been the origin of the beaupleader. See BEAUPLADER.

stumpage (stämp-ij). (1835) 1. The timber standing on land. 2. The value of the standing timber. 3. A license to cut the timber. [Cases: Logs and Logging ↷4.] 4. The fee paid for the right to cut the timber. [Cases: Logs and Logging ↷1-4.]

stuprum (st[y]oo-prəm), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. Disgrace by unchastity; a man's illegal sexual intercourse with a woman, usu. a virgin or widow, or with a male (pederasty). Pl. stupra.

"The law refers to stuprum and adultery indiscriminately and with rather a misuse of terms. But properly speaking adultery is committed with a married woman, the name being derived from children conceived by another (alter); stuprum, however, is committed against a virgin or a widow; the Greeks call it corruption." Digest of Justinian 48.5.6.1 (Papinian, De Adulteriis 1).

STV. See single transferable vote under VOTE (1).

style, n. 1. A case name or designation <the style of the opinion is Connor v. Gray>. — Also termed title. Cf. CAPTION (1). 2. Scots law. A form of writ or deed used in conveyancing. • A book of styles is essentially a formbook; a typical Scottish example is John Hendry's Styles of Deeds and Instruments (2d ed. 1862).

stylized drawing. See special-form drawing under DRAWING.

s.u. abbr. Straight up. • When a prosecutor writes this on a defendant's file, it usu. means that the prosecutor plans to try the case — that is, not enter into a plea bargain.

suable, adj. (17c) 1. Capable of being sued . [Cases: Action ↷14; Parties ↷21.] 2. Capable of being enforced . — suability, n.

illegal subdivision. The division of a tract of land into smaller parcels in violation of local subdivision regulations, as when a developer begins laying out streets, installing sewer and utility lines, and constructing houses without the local planning commission's authorization. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷372.1.]

legal subdivision. The governmentally approved division of a tract of land into smaller parcels using ordinary and legally recognized methods for surveying and platting land and publicly recording the results. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷245, 381.5.]

subdivision exaction. A charge that a community imposes on a subdivider as a condition for permitting recordation of the subdivision map and sale of the subdivided parcels. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷382.4.]

subdivision map. (1887) A map that shows how a parcel of land is to be divided into smaller lots, and generally showing the layout and utilities. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷29.5, 245.]

sub domino (səb dom-ə-noh). [Law Latin] Hist. Under a lord.

subfeudum (səb-fyoo-dəm). [Law Latin] Hist. A subfee.

subinfeudate (səb-in-fyoo-dayt), vb. Hist. (Of a subvassal) to grant land to another, who then holds the land as the grantor's vassal rather than as the vassal of the grantor's superior. — Also termed subinfeud (səb-in-fyood).

"[A] more common method of obtaining the annual quota of knights was to subinfeudate portions of the baronial lands to individual knights in exchange for their obligations to spend a fixed portion of time annually in the king's or baron's service. A knight who so received a portion of a baron's land would hold of his baron in much the same way as the baron held of the king." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 4 (2d ed. 1984).

subinfeudation (səb-in-fyoo-day-shən), n. Hist. The system under which the tenants in a feudal system granted smaller estates to their tenants, who in turn did the same from their pieces of land. • As this system proceeded down the social scale, the lords were deprived of their feudal profits, as a result of which the system was suppressed by the statute Quia Emptores in 1290. Instead of subinfeudation, alienation in the modern sense was introduced. Cf. INFEUDATION; SUPERINFEUDATION.

"The first step taken in mitigation of the rigors of the law of feuds, and in favor of voluntary alienations, was the countenance given to the practice of subinfeudations. They were calculated to elude the restraint upon alienation, and consisted in carving out portions of the fief to be held of the vassal by the same tenure with which he held of the chief lord of the fee. The alienation prohibited by the feudal law, all over Europe, was the substitution of a new feudatory in the place of the old one; but subinfeudation was a feoffment by the tenant to hold of himself. The purchaser became his vassal, and the vendor still continued liable to the chief lord for all the feudal obligations. Subinfeudations were encouraged by the subordinate feudatories, because they contributed to their own power and independence; but they were found to be injurious to the fruits of tenure, such as reliefs, marriages and wardships, belonging to the paramount lords." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *443-44 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

subinfeudatory (səb-in-fyoo-də-tor-ee), n. A tenant holding lands by subinfeudation.

subjacent (səb-jay-sənt), adj. (16c) Located underneath or below <the land's subjacent support>.

subjacent support. See SUPPORT (4).

subject, adj. Referred to above; having relevance to the current discussion <the subject property was then sold to Smith>.

subject, n. (14c) 1. One who owes allegiance to a sovereign and is governed by that sovereign's laws <the monarchy's subjects>.

"Speaking generally, we may say that the terms subject and citizen are synonymous. Subjects and citizens are alike those whose relation to the state is personal and not merely territorial, permanent and not merely temporary. This equivalent, however, is not absolute. For in the first place, the term subject is commonly limited to monarchical forms of government, while the term citizen is more specially applicable in the case of republics. A British subject becomes by naturalisation a citizen of the United States of America or of France. In the second place, the term citizen brings into prominence the rights and privileges of the status, rather than its correlative obligations, while the reverse is the case with the term subject. Finally it is to be noticed that the term subject is capable of a different and wider application, in which it includes all members of the body politic, whether they are citizens (i.e., subjects stricto sensu) or resident aliens. All such persons are subjects, all being subject to the power of the state and to its jurisdiction, and as owing to it, at least temporarily, fidelity and obedience." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 133 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

liege subject. See natural-born subject.

natural-born subject. A person born within the dominion of a monarchy, esp. England. — Also termed liege subject. Cf. NATIONAL.

2. The matter of concern over which something is created <the subject of the statute>. — Also termed (in sense 2) subject matter.

subject, adj. Referred to above; having relevance to the current discussion <the subject property was then sold to Smith>.

subjectation. (14c) 1. The act of subjecting someone to something <their subjectation to torture was unconscionable>. 2. The condition of a subject in a monarchy; the obligations surrounding such a person . 3. The condition of being subject, exposed, or liable; liability <the defendants' subjectation to the plaintiffs became clear shortly after the trial began>. — Also termed (in sense 3) liability; susceptibility.

subjective, adj. (18c) 1. Based on an individual's perceptions, feelings, or intentions, as opposed to externally verifiable phenomena <the subjective theory of contract — that the parties must have an actual meeting of the minds — is not favored by most courts>. 2. Personal; individual <subjective judgments about popular music>. Cf. OBJECTIVE.

subjective ethics. See MORAL RELATIVISM.

subjective impossibility. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

subjective meaning. See MEANING.

subjective method. See SHERMAN-SORRELLS DOCTRINE.

subjective novation. See NOVATION.

subjective standard. See STANDARD.

subjective theory of contract. (1928) The doctrine (now largely outmoded) that a contract is an agreement in which the parties have a subjective meeting of the minds. — Often shortened to subjective theory. See MEETING OF THE MINDS. Cf. OBJECTIVE THEORY OF CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts ↻15.]

subject matter. (16c) 1. The issue presented for consideration; the thing in which a right or duty has been asserted; the thing in dispute. 2. PATENTABLE SUBJECT MATTER. — Sometimes written (as a noun) subject-matter. See SUBJECT (2); CORPUS (1). — subject-matter, adj.

subject-matter jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

subject-matter-neutral. See NEUTRAL.

subject-matter test. (1974) A method of determining whether an employee's communication with a corporation's lawyer was made at the direction of the employee's supervisors and in the course and scope of the employee's employment, so as to be protected under the attorney-client privilege, despite the fact that the employee is not a member of the corporation's control group. Harper & Row Pubs., Inc. v. Decker, 423 F.2d 487 (7th Cir. 1970), aff'd per curiam by equally divided Court, 400 U.S. 348, 91 S.Ct. 479 (1971). — Also termed Decker test. Cf. CONTROL-GROUP TEST. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ⇨123.]

subject of an action. The right or property at issue in a lawsuit; the basis of a legal claim. Cf. object of an action under OBJECT (2). [Cases: Action ⇨1.]

subject of a right. (1876) 1. The owner of a right; the person in whom a legal right is vested. 2. OBJECT OF A RIGHT.

subject to liability, adj. (Of a person) susceptible to a lawsuit that would result in an adverse judgment; specif., having engaged in conduct that would make the actor liable for another's injury because the actor's conduct is the legal cause of the injury, the injured party having no disability for bringing the lawsuit. [Cases: Action ⇨14.]

subject to open. (1906) Denoting the future interest of a class of people when this class is subject to a possible increase or decrease in number.

sub judge (səb joo-di-see also suub yoo-di-kay), adv. [Latin "under a judge"] (17c) Before the court or judge for determination; at bar <in the case sub judge, there have been no out-of-court settlements>. • Legal writers sometimes use "case sub judge" where "the present case" would be more comprehensible.

subjugation. See DEBELLATIO.

sublease, n. A lease by a lessee to a third party, conveying some or all of the leased property for a term shorter than or equal to that of the lessee, who retains a reversion in the lease. — Also termed subtenancy; derivative lease; and (esp. in England) underlease. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨80.] — sublease, sublet, vb.

sublessee. (1882) A third party who receives by lease some or all of the leased property from a lessee. — Also termed subtenant and (esp. in England) undertenant. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨80.]

sublessor. (1884) A lessee who leases some or all of the leased property to a third party. — Also termed (esp. in England) underlessor. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨80.]

sublicense. (1880) A license or contract granting to a third party a portion or all of the rights granted to the licensee under an original license.

submission, n. (14c) 1. A yielding, or readiness to yield, to the authority or will of another <his resistance ended in an about-face: complete submission>. 2. A contract in which the parties agree to refer their dispute to a third party for resolution <in their submission to arbitration, they referred to the rules of the American Arbitration Association>. [Cases: Alternative Dispute Resolution ⇨160–174.] 3. An advocate's argument <neither the written nor the oral submissions were particularly helpful>. — submit, vb.

submission bond. See BOND (2).

submission of controversy. 1. The completion of the series of acts by which the parties to a particular dispute place any matter of real controversy existing between them before a court with jurisdiction for a final determination. 2. A statutory action in which the parties submit their dispute to a court that has jurisdiction, agree on and sign a statement of facts, swear that the controversy is real, and swear that the suit is brought in good faith. [Cases: Submission of Controversy ⇨1.]

submission to a finding. The admission to facts sufficient to warrant a finding of guilt. — Also termed admission to sufficient facts.

submission to the jury. (1818) The process by which a judge gives a case to the jury for its consideration and verdict, usu. after all evidence has been presented, arguments have been completed, and jury instructions have been given.

submit, vb. To end the presentation of further evidence in (a case) and tender a legal position for decision <case submitted, Your Honor>.

sub modo (səb moh-doh). [Latin] Subject to a modification or qualification <the riparian landowner enjoys the property sub modo, i.e., subject to the right of the public to reserve enough space for levees, public roads, and the like>.

submortgage. See MORTGAGE.

sub nomine (səb nom-ə-nee). [Latin] (1861) Under the name of. • This phrase, typically in abbreviated form, is often used in a case citation to indicate that there has been a name change from one stage of the case to another, as in Guernsey Memorial Hosp. v. Secretary of Health and Human Servs., 996 F.2d 830 (6th Cir. 1993), rev'd sub nom. Shalala v. Guernsey Memorial Hosp., 514 U.S. 87, 115 S.Ct. 1232 (1995). — Abbr. sub nom.

subordinate (sə-bor-də-nit), adj. (15c) 1. Placed in or belonging to a lower rank, class, or position . 2. Subject to another's authority or control .

subordinate (sə-bor-də-nayt), vb. (17c) To place in a lower rank, class, or position; to assign a lower priority to <subordinate the debt to a different class of claims>.

subordinated bond. See junior bond under BOND (3). subordinate debenture. See DEBENTURE.

subordinate debt. See DEBT.

subordinate legislation. See LEGISLATION.

subordinate officer. See OFFICER (1).

subordinate political power. See POLITICAL POWER.

subordination, n. 1. The act or an instance of moving something (such as a right or claim) to a lower rank, class, or position <subordination of a first lien to a second lien>. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨147.] 2. Parliamentary law. The status and relation of a lower-ranking governing document to a higher-ranking one. • A higher-ranking document supersedes and controls a subordinate document if there is any inconsistency between them. See governing document under DOCUMENT. — subordinate, adj.

subordination clause. 1. In a legal instrument, a clause that explicitly acknowledges the one party's claim of interest is inferior to that of another party. 2. A covenant in a junior mortgage enabling the first lien to keep its priority in case of renewal or refinancing. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨159.] 3. In a legal instrument, a clause that explicitly subjects its provisions to those in a higher-ranking document.

suborn (sə-born), vb. [Latin subornare, from sub "secretly + ornare "to furnish; equip"] (16c) 1. To induce (a person) to commit an unlawful or wrongful act, esp. in a secret or underhanded manner. 2. To induce (a person) to commit perjury. 3. To obtain (perjured testimony) from another. — subornation (səb-orn-ay-shən), n. — suborner (sə-bor-nər), n.

subornation of perjury. (16c) The crime of persuading another to commit perjury. — Sometimes shortened to subornation. [Cases: Perjury ⇨13.]

subparagraph form. A style of legal drafting that uses indented subparagraphs for enumerated items; esp., a style of drafting patent claims in this form so as to distinguish clearly between each of the claimed elements. — Also termed tabular form. Cf. COLON-SEMICOLON FORM; OUTLINE FORM; SINGLE-PARAGRAPH FORM.

subpartnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

sub pede sigilli (səb pee-dee si-jil-i). [Latin] Under the foot of the seal.

subpena. See SUBPOENA.

subpermittee. See PERMITTEE.

subpoena (sə-pee-nə), n. [Latin "under penalty"] (15c) A writ or order commanding a person to appear before a court or other tribunal, subject to a penalty for failing to comply. — Also spelled subpena. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨7.] Pl. subpoenas.

accommodation subpoena. See friendly subpoena.

administrative subpoena. A subpoena issued by an administrative agency to compel an individual to provide information to the agency. • The subpoena may take the form of a subpoena ad testificandum or a subpoena duces tecum. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨357, 358.]

alias subpoena (ay-lee-əs sə-pee-nə). (18c) A second subpoena issued after an initial subpoena has failed.

deposition subpoena. 1. A subpoena issued to summon a person to make a sworn statement in a time and place other than a trial. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1353; Pretrial Procedure ⇨129.] 2. In some jurisdictions, a subpoena duces tecum. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1354; Pretrial Procedure ⇨130.]

friendly subpoena. A subpoena issued to a person or entity that is willing to testify or produce documents, but only if legally required to do so. • The subpoena may protect the information provider from retaliation from others because the provider is required to comply. — Also termed accommodation subpoena.

subpoena ad testificandum (sə-pee-nə ad tes-tə-fi-kan-dəm). [Law Latin] (1807) A subpoena ordering a witness to appear and give testimony. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨7.]

subpoena duces tecum (sə-pee-nə d[y]oo-seez tee-kəm also doo-səz tay-kəm). [Law Latin] (18c) A subpoena ordering the witness to appear in court and to bring specified documents, records, or things. — Also termed deposition subpoena duces tecum. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨16.]

subpoena, vb. (17c) 1. To serve with a subpoena to appear before a court or other tribunal <subpoena the material witnesses>. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨7.] 2. To order the production of (documents or other things) by subpoena duces tecum <subpoena the corporate records>. — Also spelled subpena. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨16.]

subpoenal (sə-pee-nəl), adj. (1969) Required or done under penalty, esp. in compliance with a subpoena.

sub potestate (səb poh-tes-tay-tee). [Latin] Under the power of another, as with a child or other person not sui juris. Cf. SUI JURIS.

sub potestate parentis (səb poh-tes-tay-tee pə-ren-tis). [Latin] Hist. Under the authority of a parent.

sub potestate viri. Hist. (Of a wife) under the protection of a husband.

subprime loan. See LOAN.

subreptio (səb-rep-shee-oh), n. [Latin "surreptitious removal"] Roman law. 1. Theft. 2. The obtaining of a grant from the emperor under false pretenses. — Also termed (in French law) subreption. Pl. subreptiones (səb-rep-shee-oh-nee).

subreptione vel obreptione (səb-rep-shee-oh-nee vel ob-rep-shee-oh-nee), adv. [Latin] Hist. By deceit or surprise; by concealing the truth or affirming a falsehood.

subrogate (səb-rə-gayt), vb. (15c) To substitute (a person) for another regarding a legal right or claim. [Cases: Subrogation ⇨1.]

subrogation (səb-rə-gay-shən), n. (15c) 1. The substitution of one party for another whose debt the party pays, entitling the paying party to rights, remedies, or securities that would otherwise belong to the debtor. • For example, a surety who has paid a debt is, by subrogation, entitled to any security for the debt held by the creditor and the benefit of any judgment the creditor has against the debtor, and may proceed against the debtor as the creditor would. Subrogation most commonly arises in relation to insurance policies. [Cases: Subrogation ↷1, 33.] 2. The equitable remedy by which such a substitution takes place. 3. The principle under which an insurer that has paid a loss under an insurance policy is entitled to all the rights and remedies belonging to the insured against a third party with respect to any loss covered by the policy. See EQUITY OF SUBROGATION; ANTISUBROGATION RULE. [Cases: Insurance ↷3509, 3513.]

"Subrogation is equitable assignment. The right comes into existence when the surety becomes obligated, and this is important as affecting priorities; but such right of subrogation does not become a cause of action until the debt is fully paid. Subrogation entitles the surety to use any remedy against the principal which the creditor could have used, and in general to enjoy the benefit of any advantage that the creditor had, such as a mortgage, lien, power to confess judgment, to follow trust funds, to proceed against a third person who has promised either the principal or the creditor to pay the debt." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 205 (1950).

"Subrogation simply means substitution of one person for another; that is, one person is allowed to stand in the shoes of another and assert that person's rights against the defendant. Factually, the case arises because, for some justifiable reason, the subrogation plaintiff has paid a debt owed by the defendant." Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 4.3, at 404 (2d ed. 1993).

conventional subrogation. Subrogation that arises by contract or by an express act of the parties. [Cases: Subrogation ↷27.]

legal subrogation. Subrogation that arises by operation of law or by implication in equity to prevent fraud or injustice. • Legal subrogation usu. arises when (1) the paying party has a liability, claim, or fiduciary relationship with the debtor, (2) the party pays to fulfill a legal duty or because of public policy, (3) the paying party is a secondary debtor, (4) the paying party is a surety, or (5) the party pays to protect its own rights or property. — Also termed equitable subrogation. [Cases: Subrogation ↷1–25.]

real subrogation. Civil law. The substitution of one thing for another.

subrogation clause. 1. Insurance. A provision in a property- or liability-insurance policy whereby the insurer acquires certain rights upon paying a claim for a loss under the policy. • These rights include (1) taking legal action on behalf of the insured to recover the amount of the loss from the party who caused the loss, and (2) receiving a full or proportionate amount of the benefits (such as disability compensation) paid to the insured under a statutory plan. 2. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease permitting the lessee to pay taxes, mortgages, or other encumbrances on the leased property and to recover those payments out of future proceeds under the lease.

subrogative (səb-rə-gay-tiv), adj. Of or relating to subrogation <subrogative rights>. — Also termed subrogatory; subrogational.

subrogee (səb-rə-gee). One who is substituted for another in having a right, duty, or claim; esp., the person or entity that assumes the right to attempt to collect on another's claim against a third party by paying the other's claim-related debts or expenses. • An insurance company frequently becomes a subrogee after paying a policy claim, as a result of which it is then in a position to sue a tortfeasor who injured the insured or otherwise caused harm.

subrogor (səb-rə-gor). One who allows another to be substituted for oneself as creditor, with a transfer of rights and duties; esp., one who transfers a legal right to collect a claim to another in return for payment of the transferor's claim-related debts or expenses.

sub rosa (səb roh-zə), adj. [Latin "under the rose"] Hist. Confidential; secret; not for publication.

sub salvo et securo conductu (səb sal-voh et si-kyoor-oh kən-dək-t[y]oo). [Law Latin] Hist. Under safe and secure conduct. • This phrase was used in writs of habeas corpus.

subscribed capital. See CAPITAL.

subscribed stock. See STOCK.

subscribing witness. See WITNESS.

subscriptio (səb-skrip-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A signature, esp. a name written under or at the bottom of a document to authenticate it; an imperial rescript. 2. A signature to a will, required in certain cases in addition to the seals of witnesses. Pl. subscriptions (səb-skrip-shee-oh-nee-z).

subscription, n. (15c) 1. The act of signing one's name on a document; the signature so affixed. 2. Securities. A written contract to purchase newly issued shares of stock or bonds. — Also termed (in connection with stock) stock subscription. [Cases: Corporations ↷75.1.] 3. An oral or a written agreement to contribute a sum of money or property, gratuitously or with consideration, to a specific person or for a specific purpose. — Also termed subscription contract. 4. RESCRIPT (3). [Cases: Subscriptions ↷1.] — subscribe, vb. — subscriber, n.

subscription contract. See SUBSCRIPTION (3).

subscription list. An enumeration of subscribers to an agreement, periodical, or service.

subscription price. The fixed price at which investors can buy shares in a new stock offering before the shares are offered to the public. [Cases: Corporations ↷75, 158.]

subscription privilege. See PREEMPTIVE RIGHT.

subscription right. A certificate evidencing a shareholder's right (known as a preemptive right) to purchase newly issued stock before the stock is offered to the public. • Subscription rights have a market value and are actively traded because they allow the holder to purchase stock at favorable prices. — Also termed stock right. See PREEMPTIVE RIGHT. [Cases: Corporations ↻78, 158.]

subscriptor (səb-skrīp-tor or -tər), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A person who made or signed a written accusation of crime against a particular person. 2. The witness to a will. Pl. subscriptores.

subsellia (səb-sel-ee-ə), n. [Latin fr. sub “under” + sella “seat”] Roman law. Lower seats in a court, usu. occupied by the parties or their witnesses, as distinguished from the seat of the tribunal.

subsequent, adj. (15c) (Of an action, event, etc.) occurring later; coming after something else.

subsequent-advance rule. Bankruptcy. The principle that a preferential transfer by the debtor will not be avoided or rescinded by the debtor's bankruptcy trustee if (1) the creditor extended new value to the debtor after receiving the preferential transfer, (2) the new value is unsecured, and (3) the new value remains unpaid after its transfer. 11 USCA § 547(c)(4). [Cases: Bankruptcy ↻2613(4).]

subsequent creditor. See CREDITOR.

subsequente copula (səb-si-kwen-tee kop-yə-lə). [Law Latin] Hist. Carnal intercourse having followed.

subsequent negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

subsequent-negligence doctrine. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

subsequent remedial measure. (usu. pl.) (1956) Evidence. An action taken after an event, which, if taken before the event, would have reduced the likelihood of the event's occurrence. • Evidence of subsequent remedial measures, such as repairs made after an accident or the installation of safety equipment, is not admissible to prove negligence, but it may be admitted to prove ownership, control, feasibility, or the like. Fed. R. Evid. 407. [Cases: Evidence ↻219.10.]

subservant. See subagent under AGENT (2).

subsidence (səb-sīd-ən[t]s), n. Any downward movement of the soil from its natural position; esp., a sinking of soil.

subsidiarie (səb-sid-ee-air-ee-ee). [Law Latin] Scots law. Subsidiarily.

subsidiary (səb-sid-ee-er-ee), adj. Subordinate; under another's control. See subsidiary corporation under CORPORATION.

subsidiary, n. See subsidiary corporation under CORPORATION.

subsidiary corporation. See CORPORATION.

subsidiary merger. See triangular merger under MERGER.

subsidiary motion. See MOTION (2).

subsidy (səb-sə-dee), n. (14c) 1. A grant, usu. made by the government, to any enterprise whose promotion is considered to be in the public interest. • Although governments sometimes make direct payments (such as cash grants), subsidies are usu. indirect. They may take the form of research-and-development support, tax breaks, provision of raw materials at below-market prices, or low-interest loans or low-interest export credits guaranteed by a government agency. — Also termed grant. [Cases: United States ↻82(1).] 2. A specific financial contribution by a foreign government or public entity conferring a benefit on exporters to the United States. • Such a subsidy is countervailable under 19 USCA §§ 1671, 1677. [Cases: Customs Duties ↻21.5(2).]

countervailable subsidy (kown-tər-vayl-ə-bəl). A foreign government's subsidy on the manufacture of goods exported to another country, giving rise to the importing country's entitlement to impose a countervailing duty on the goods if their import caused or threatens to cause material injury to domestic industry. See countervailing duty under DUTY (4). [Cases: Customs Duties ↻21.5(2).]

3. Int'l law. Financial assistance given by one nation to another to preserve the receiving nation's neutrality or to support it in a war, even if the donor nation does not directly participate. — subsidize, vb.

sub sigillo (səb si-jil-oh). [Latin “under the seal (of confession)”] Hist. In the strictest confidence.

sub silentio (səb si-len-shee-oh). [Latin] (17c) Under silence; without notice being taken; without being expressly mentioned (such as precedent sub silentio).

subsistence. (17c) Support; means of support. See NECESSARIES.

sub spe reconciliationis (səb spee rek-ən-sil-ee-ay-shee-oh-nis). [Latin] Hist. Under the hope of reconciliation.

substance. (14c) 1. The essence of something; the essential quality of something, as opposed to its mere form <matter of substance>. 2. Any matter, esp. an addictive drug <illegal substance> <abuse of a substance>.

substance-abuse evaluation and treatment. (1983) A drug offender's court-ordered participation in a drug rehabilitation program. • This type of treatment is esp. common in DUI cases. — Abbr. SAET.

substantial-capacity test. (1968) Criminal law. The Model Penal Code's test for the insanity defense, stating that a person is not criminally responsible for an act if, as a result of a mental disease or defect, the person lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality of the conduct or to conform the conduct to the law. • This test combines elements of both the McNaghten rules and the irresistible-impulse test by allowing consideration of both volitional and cognitive weaknesses. This test was formerly used by the federal courts and many states, but since 1984 many jurisdictions (including the federal courts) — in response to the acquittal by reason of insanity of would-be presidential assassin John Hinckley — have narrowed the insanity defense and adopted a new test resembling the McNaghten rules, although portions of the substantial-capacity test continue to be used. Model Penal Code § 4.01. — Also termed Model Penal Code test; MPC test; American Law Institute test; ALI test. See INSANITY DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 48.]

substantial-cause test. (1929) Torts. The principle that causation exists when the defendant's conduct is an important or significant contributor to the plaintiff's injuries. — Also termed substantial-factor test. Cf. BUT-FOR TEST. [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 380.]

substantial-certainty test. Copyright. The test for deciding whether a second work was copied from the first. • The question is whether a reasonable observer would conclude with substantial certainty that the second work is a copy. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 53(1).]

substantial change in circumstances. See CHANGE IN CIRCUMSTANCES.

substantial-compliance rule. See SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

substantial-continuity doctrine. A principle for holding a successor corporation liable for the acts of its predecessor corporation, if the successor maintains the same business as the predecessor, with the same employees, doing the same jobs, for the same supervisors, under the same working conditions, and using the same production processes to produce the same products for the same customers. — Also termed continuity-of-enterprise doctrine. Cf. MERE-CONTINUATION DOCTRINE. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 445.1.]

substantial damages. See DAMAGES.

substantial equivalent. Patents. A device or process that falls outside a patent claim's literal scope but performs the same function in substantially the same way. — Also termed substantial equivalent of a patented device. See tripartite test. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 237.]

substantial error. See ERROR (2).

substantial evidence. See EVIDENCE.

substantial-evidence jurisdiction. See significant-connection jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

substantial-evidence rule. (1938) The principle that a reviewing court should uphold an administrative body's ruling if it is supported by evidence on which the administrative body could reasonably base its decision. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨ 791.]

substantial justice. See JUSTICE (1).

substantially justified. (Of conduct, a position, etc.) having a reasonable basis in law and in fact. • Under the Equal Access to Justice Act, a prevailing party in a lawsuit against the government will be unable to recover its attorney's fees if the government's position is substantially justified. [Cases: United States ⇨ 147(10).]

substantial new question of patentability. Patents. A significant, freshly arisen issue relating to the validity of a patent, triggering the statutory threshold required for the Director of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to order that a patent's validity be reexamined.

• An examination cannot be reopened solely on issues of prior art and issues that came up during the original examination. The Director's determination is final and not appealable. 35 USCA §§ 303–04. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 136.]

substantial noninfringing use. See COMMERCIALLY SIGNIFICANT NONINFRINGEMENT USE.

substantial performance. See PERFORMANCE.

substantial-performance doctrine. (1936) The rule that if a good-faith attempt to perform does not precisely meet the terms of an agreement or statutory requirements, the performance will still be considered complete if the essential purpose is accomplished, subject to a claim for damages for the shortfall. • Under the Uniform Probate Code, a will that is otherwise void because some formality has not been followed may still be valid under the substantial-performance doctrine. But this rule is not widely followed. — Also termed substantial-compliance rule. Cf. PERFECT-TENDER RULE. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 294.]

substantial-step test. (1980) Criminal law. The Model Penal Code's test for determining whether a person is guilty of attempt, based on the extent of the defendant's preparation for the crime, the criminal intent shown, and any statements personally made that bear on the defendant's actions. Model Penal Code § 5.01(1)(c). See ATTEMPT. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 44.]

substantiate, vb. (17c) To establish the existence or truth of (a fact, etc.), esp. by competent evidence; to verify.

substantive consolidation. See CONSOLIDATION.

substantive crime. See substantive offense under OFFENSE (1).

substantive due process. See DUE PROCESS.

substitutio heredis (səb-stə-t[y]oo-shee-oh hə-ree-dis). [Latin] Roman law. 1. See SUBSTITUTION (3). 2. See SUBSTITUTION (4).

substitution. (14c) 1. A designation of a person or thing to take the place of another person or thing. 2. The process by which one person or thing takes the place of another person or thing. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨351; Parties ⇨57.] 3. Parliamentary law. An amendment by replacing one or more words with others. See amendment by substituting under AMENDMENT (3). 4. Roman law. The nomination of a person to take the place of a previously named heir who has refused or failed to accept an inheritance. — Also termed common substitution; vulgar substitution. 5. Roman law. The nomination of a person to take the place of, or to succeed, a descendant who is under the age of puberty and in the potestas of the testator, if the descendant has died before reaching puberty. • This type of substitution was known as a pupillary substitution. If a descendant of any age failed to take by reason of lunacy, the substitution was known as an exemplary substitution or quasi-pupillary substitution. 6. Roman law. A testator's designation of a person to whom the property was to be given by the person named as heir, or by the heir of that person. — Also termed fideicommissary substitution. See FIDEICOMMISSUM. 7. Civil law. The designation of a person to succeed another as beneficiary of an estate, usu. involving a fideicommissum. — Also termed (in senses 6 & 7) fideicommissary substitution. [Cases: Wills ⇨553.]

prohibited substitution. Louisiana law. The designation of a person who is not a trustee to take full ownership of property and deliver it to another designated person at death. • The first donee is called the institute, the second the substitute. See INSTITUTE (5); SUBSTITUTE (2). [Cases: Wills ⇨553.]

substitutional, adj. (14c) Capable of taking or supplying the position of another <substitutional executor> <substitutional issue>. — Also termed substitutionary.

substitutional gift. See substitute gift under GIFT.

substitutional legacy. See LEGACY.

substitutional remedy. See REMEDY.

substitutionary. See SUBSTITUTIONAL.

substitutionary evidence. See secondary evidence under EVIDENCE.

substitutionary remedy. See REMEDY.

substitution-of-judgment doctrine. 1. Administrative law. The standard for reviewing an agency's decision, by which a court uses its own independent judgment in interpreting laws and administrative regulations — rather than deferring to the agency — when the agency's interpretation is not instructive or the regulations do not involve matters requiring the agency's expertise. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨760, 784, 796.] 2. Wills & estates. The principle that a guardian, conservator, or committee of an incompetent person may make gifts out of that person's estate.

substitution of parties. The replacement of one litigant by another because of the first litigant's death, incompetency, transfer of interest, or, when the litigant is a public official, separation from office. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷352; Parties ↷57.]

subtraction (səb-strək-shən), n. (1814) The secret misappropriation of property, esp. from a decedent's estate.

subsume (səb-s[y]oom), vb. (1825) To judge as a particular instance governed by a general principle; to bring (a case) under a broad rule. — subsumption (səb-səmp-shən), n.

sub suo periculo (səb s[y]oo-oh pə-rik-[y]ə-loh). [Law Latin] Hist. At his own risk.

subsurety (səb-shuur[-ə]-tee). (1916) A person whose undertaking is given as additional security, usu. conditioned not only on nonperformance by the principal but also on nonperformance by an earlier promisor as well; a surety with the lesser liability in a subsuretyship. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷191.]

subsuretyship (səb-shuur[-ə]-tee-ship). (1967) The relation between two (or more) sureties, in which a principal surety bears the burden of the whole performance that is due from both sureties; a relationship in which one surety acts as a surety for another. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷191.]

subsurface interest. 1. A landowner's right to the minerals and water below the property. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷47; Waters and Water Courses ↷100, 101.] 2. A similar right held by another through grant by, or purchase from, a landowner. Cf. SURFACE INTEREST; MINERAL INTEREST.

subterfuge (səb-tər-fyoj). (16c) A clever plan or idea used to escape, avoid, or conceal something .

subterfuge arrest. See ARREST.

subterranean water. See WATER.

subtraction. 1. The process of deducting one number from another number to determine the difference. 2. Hist. The act of neglecting a duty or service that one party owes to another, esp. one that arises out of land tenure.

"Subtraction, which is the fifth species of injuries affecting a man's real property, happens, when any person who owes any suit, duty, custom, or service to another, withdraws or neglects to perform it. It differs from a disseisin, in that this is committed without any denial of the right, consisting merely in non-performance; that strikes at the very title of the party injured, and amounts to an ouster or actual dispossession. Subtraction however, being clearly an injury, is remediable by due course of law: but the remedy differs according to the nature of the services; whether they be due by virtue of any tenure, or by custom only." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 230 (1768).

subtraction of conjugal rights. Hist. The act of a husband and wife unlawfully living apart.

subtrahend (səb-trə-hend). In a mathematical equation, the amount subtracted from another number (the minuend) to arrive at a remainder or balance. • The term is used in law in a variety of accounting contexts. Cf. MINUEND.

suburbani (səb-ər-bay-ni), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Husbandmen. 2. Large country estates just outside Rome. subvention (səb-ven-shən). A grant of financial aid or assistance; a subsidy. [Cases: United States ↷82.]

subversion. (14c) The process of overthrowing, destroying, or corrupting <subversion of legal principles> <subversion of the government>.

"Subversion can succeed where diplomacy has failed. Subversion exceeds the bounds of diplomacy in that it employs methods which diplomacy abhors; it does not wince at assassination, riot, pillage, and arson, if it believes these to be useful in the attainment of its ends. Subversion is a form of war. It may include the use of propaganda . . . to sway the thinking and action of influential social groups, especially attempting to discredit the leadership of the target area, labeling it as the 'tool' of . . . any convenient target for emotional hatred. By inflaming passion, the purveyors of violent propaganda can stir up peaceful citizens so that in minutes they are transformed into a terrifying mob. The art of subversion has developed the technique of the manipulation of mobs to a high degree." T. Wyckoff, War by Subversion, 59 South Atlantic Q. 36 (1960).

"Prior to World War II, subversive activities were thought to cover cases where states attempted to achieve certain political ends of fomenting civil strife in another state or by supporting rebellion against the legally established government of another state by giving to the rebels supplies of personnel, training facilities, war materials, or munitions and by engaging in hostile propaganda against the victim state and its government. . . . By the beginning of World War II, the concept of subversion had been expanded to include the attempt of one state to weaken or overthrow the government of another by means of infiltration of its governmental apparatus with conspirators who strongly opposed the domestic policy of their own government and willingly served as clandestine instruments in the conduct of an alien state's foreign policy. But with increased militancy of modern ideologies, . . . subversive activities are no longer seen in many quarters as advancing the foreign policy of a nation or nations, but rather are thought to advance universal human values, i.e., the specific ideological theory adhered to." Ann Van Wynen Thomas & A.J. Thomas Jr., The Concept of Aggression in International Law 72-73 (1972).

"Today, the term subversion designates all illegal activities, whether direct or indirect, overt or covert, conducted under the auspices of a state and designed to overthrow the established government or vitally disrupt the public order of another state. Subversion combines psychological, political, social, and economic actions, as well as active military or paramilitary operations, and it is generally a sustained, long-run, intermeshed, and coordinated process. Consequently, it is usually impossible to place acts of subversion into neat little categorical definitions. Subversion, being a technique of opportunity, is successful mainly in areas where social and political revolution is at least incipient." Ann Van Wynen Thomas & A.J. Thomas Jr., The Concept of Aggression in International Law 80-81 (1972).

subversive activity. (1939) A pattern of acts designed to overthrow a government by force or other illegal means.

successio in universum jus (sək-ses[h]-ee-oh in yoo-nivər-səm jəs). [Latin "succession to universal right"] Roman law. The succession on death to the entirety of a deceased person's assets and liabilities. See hereditas jacens under HEREDITAS.

succession, n. (14c) 1. The act or right of legally or officially taking over a predecessor's office, rank, or duties. 2. The acquisition of rights or property by inheritance under the laws of descent and distribution; DESCENT (1). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻1-43.] — succeed, vb.

hereditary succession. See intestate succession.

intestate succession. (18c) 1. The method used to distribute property owned by a person who dies without a valid will. 2. Succession by the common law of descent. — Also termed hereditary succession; descent and distribution. See DESCENT (1). Cf. testate succession. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻20-43.]

irregular succession. (17c) Succession by special laws favoring certain persons or the state, rather than heirs (such as testamentary heirs) under the ordinary laws of descent. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻1.]

legal succession. (18c) The succession established by law, usu. in favor of the nearest relation of a deceased person.

lucrative succession. Scots law. See PRAECEPTIO HAEREDITATIS.

natural succession. (18c) Succession between natural persons, as in descent on the death of an ancestor. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻20-43.]

testamentary succession. Civil law. Succession resulting from the designation of an heir in a testament executed in the legally required form. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻44.]

testate succession. (18c) The passing of rights or property by will. Cf. intestate succession. [Cases: Wills ↻1.]

universal succession. Succession to an entire estate of another at death. • This type of succession carries with it the predecessor's liabilities as well as assets. Originally developed by Roman law and later continued by civil law, this concept has now been widely adopted as an option endorsed and authorized by the Uniform Probate Code. La. Civ. Code art. 3506(28).

vacant succession. Civil law. 1. A succession that fails either because there are no known heirs or because the heirs have renounced the estate. 2. An estate that has suffered such a failure. See ESCHEAT.

3. The right by which one group, in replacing another group, acquires all the goods, movables, and other chattels of a corporation. [Cases: Corporations ↻445.1.] 4. The continuation of a corporation's legal status despite changes in ownership or management. — Also termed artificial succession. [Cases: Corporations ↻1.1.]

perpetual succession. The continuous succession of a corporation — despite changes in shareholders and officers — for as long as the corporation legally exists. [Cases: Corporations ↻36.]

"As a general rule, the words 'perpetual succession,' as used in charters, often in connection with a further provision limiting the period of corporate existence to a certain number of years, mean nothing more than that the corporation shall have continuous and uninterrupted succession so long as it shall continue to exist as a corporation, and are not intended to define its duration." 18 Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 69, at 883 (1985).

successional, adj. (14c) Of or relating to acquiring rights or property by inheritance under the laws of descent and distribution.

successive, adj. 1. Archaic. (Of an estate) hereditary. 2. (Of persons, things, appointments, etc.) following in order; consecutive.

successive polygamy. See POLYGAMY (2).

successive tortfeasors. See TORTFEASOR.

successive-writ doctrine. (1987) Criminal procedure. The principle that a second or supplemental petition for a writ of habeas corpus may not raise claims that were heard and decided on the merits in a previous petition. Cf. ABUSE-OF-THE-WRIT DOCTRINE. [Cases: Habeas Corpus ↻894.]

successor. (14c) 1. A person who succeeds to the office, rights, responsibilities, or place of another; one who replaces or follows a predecessor. 2. A corporation that, through amalgamation, consolidation, or other assumption of interests, is vested with the rights and duties of an earlier corporation. [Cases: Corporations ↻445.1, 589, 590.]

particular successor. Civil law. One who succeeds to rights and obligations that pertain only to the property conveyed.

singular successor. One who succeeds to a former owner's rights in a single piece of property.

statutory successor. One who succeeds to the assets of a corporation upon its dissolution; specif., the person to whom all corporate assets pass upon a corporation's dissolution according to the statute of the state of incorporation applicable at the time of the universal successor. 1. One who succeeds to all the rights and powers of a former owner, as with an intestate estate or an estate in bankruptcy. 2. Louisiana law. An heir or legatee who succeeds in the entire estate of the deceased or a specified portion of it, rather than by particular title as legatee of a specific thing. • A universal successor succeeds in all of the decedent's rights and charges, whereas the particular legatee succeeds only to the rights and charges pertaining to the bequeathed thing. La. Civ. Code art. 3506(28).

successor agent. See AGENT (2).

successor fiduciary. See FIDUCIARY.

sudden-peril doctrine. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (1).

sudden-peril rule. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (1).

sue, vb. To institute a lawsuit against (another party).

sue-and-labor clause. Marine insurance. A provision in property- and marine-insurance policies requiring the insured to protect damaged property against further loss. • The clause generally requires the insured to “sue and labor” to protect the insured party’s interests. — Also termed rescue clause. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 2195, 2245(2).]

“Some insurance today is written against ‘all risks’ Besides the perils clause . . . recovery under the policy can be had on the entirely separate ‘sue and labor’ clause Under this clause, the underwriter may become liable for certain charges incurred by the assured in caring for the insured property, whether or not there is any actual loss or damage. Where sue-and-labor charges are incurred and loss also occurs, the underwriter may become liable for more than the policy amount, which limits only a claim for loss of or damage to the goods or vessel.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 2-10, at 75 (2d ed. 1975).

sue facts. (1980) Facts that determine whether a party should bring a lawsuit; esp., facts determining whether a shareholder-derivative action should be instituted under state law.

sue out, vb. (15c) 1. To apply to a court for the issuance of (a court order or writ). 2. To serve (a complaint) on a defendant.

suerte (swer-tə). Spanish law. 1. Chance; destiny; fate. 2. A small plot of land. 3. Land within a municipality’s boundaries, reserved for cultivating or planting because of its proximity to water. • This term appears in the caselaw of states that were formerly Spanish or Mexican possessions.

suffer, vb. (14c) 1. To experience or sustain physical or emotional pain, distress, or injury <suffer grievously><suffer damages>. [Cases: Damages ↷ 31, 57.1.] 2. To allow or permit (an act, etc.) <to suffer a default>.

suffragan (səf-rə-gən or -jən). A titular bishop ordained to assist a bishop of the diocese in the church business; a deputy or assistant bishop. • Suffragans were originally appointed only to replace absent bishops and were called chorepiscopi ("bishops of the county"), as distinguished from the regular bishops of the city or see.

suffrage (səf-rɪj). (14c) 1. The right or privilege of casting a vote at a public election. — Also termed right to vote. [Cases: Elections ⇨ 1.]

"In the United States suffrage is a privilege, franchise or trust conferred by the people upon such persons as it deems fittest to represent it in the choice of magistrates or in the performance of political duties which it would be inexpedient or inconvenient for the people to perform in a body. The person upon whom the franchise is conferred is called an elector or voter. No community extends suffrage to all persons, but places such restrictions upon it as may best subserve the ends of government." George W. McCrary, A Treatise on the American Law of Elections § 1, at 2 (Henry L. McCune ed., 4th ed. 1897).

2. A vote; the act of voting.

suffragium (sə-fray-jee-əm), n. [Latin "voting tablet"] Roman law. 1. A vote; the right to vote. 2. A recommendation of someone for a special privilege or office.

suggested retail price. See PRICE.

suggestibility, n. The readiness with which a person accepts another's suggestion. — suggestible, adj.

suggestio falsi (səg-jes-tee-oh fal-sɪ or fawl-sɪ). [Latin] A false representation or misleading suggestion. Cf. SUPPRESSIO VERI. suggestion, n. (14c) 1. An indirect presentation of an idea <the client agreed with counsel's suggestion to reword the warranty>. 2. Procedure. A statement of some fact or circumstance that will materially affect the further proceedings in the case <suggestion for rehearing en banc>. 3. Archaic. Wills & estates. UNDUE INFLUENCE. — suggest (for senses 1 & 2), vb.

suggestion of bankruptcy. (1869) A pleading by which a party notifies the court that the party has filed for bankruptcy and that, because of the automatic stay provided by the bankruptcy laws, the court cannot take further action in the case. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3418.]

suggestion of death. (18c) A pleading filed by a party, or the party's representatives, by which the court is notified that a party to a suit has died. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 353–357, 361; Parties ⇨ 61.]

suggestion of error. (1811) An objection made by a party to a suit, indicating that the court has committed an error or that the party wants a rehearing of a particular issue. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 758, 829; Criminal Law ⇨ 1133.]

suggestion on the record. A formal written or oral statement informing the court of an important fact that may require a stay of proceedings or affect the court's decision. • Suggestions on the record include suggestion of bankruptcy, suggestion of death, and suggestion of error.

suicide, n. (17c) 1. The act of taking one's own life. — Also termed self-killing; self-destruction; self-slaughter; self-murder; felony-de-se; death by one's own hand. [Cases: Suicide ⇨ 1.]

assisted suicide. (1976) The intentional act of providing a person with the medical means or the medical knowledge to commit suicide. — Also termed assisted self-determination; (when a doctor provides the means) physician-assisted suicide. Cf. EUTHANASIA. [Cases: Suicide ⇨ 3.] attempted suicide. (1880) An unsuccessful suicidal act. [Cases: Suicide ⇨ 2.]

physician-assisted suicide. See assisted suicide.

police-assisted suicide. See suicide-by-cop.

suicide-by-cop. Slang. A form of suicide in which the suicidal person intentionally engages in life-threatening behavior to induce a police officer to shoot the person. • Frequently, the decedent attacks the officer or otherwise threatens the officer's life, but occasionally a third person's life is at risk. A suicide-by-cop is distinguished from other police shootings by three elements. The person must: (1) evince an intent to die; (2) consciously understand the finality of the act; and (3) confront a law enforcement official with behavior so extreme that it compels that officer to act with deadly force. — Also termed police-assisted suicide; victim-precipitated homicide.

2. A person who has taken his or her own life. — Also termed felo-de-se; felon-de-se; felon of oneself. — suicidal, adj.

suicide clause. Insurance. A life-insurance-policy provision either excluding suicide as a covered risk or limiting the insurer's liability in the event of a suicide to the total premiums paid. [Cases: Insurance ↷2434.]

suicide letter of credit. See clean letter of credit under LETTER OF CREDIT.

sui generis (s[y]oo-1 or soo-ee jen-ə-ris). [Latin "of its own kind"] (18c) Of its own kind or class; unique or peculiar. • The term is used in intellectual-property law to describe a regime designed to protect rights that fall outside the traditional patent, trademark, copyright, and trade-secret doctrines. For example, a database may not be protected by copyright law if its content is not original, but it could be protected by a sui generis statute designed for that purpose.

sui heredes (s[y]oo-1 hə-ree-deez). [Latin "one's own heirs"] Roman law. A person's direct descendants who were unemancipated, and who would be heirs on intestacy. — Also spelled sui haeredes. — Often shortened to sui. See SUUS HERES.

"If a man died without a will, his property went to his sui heredes (own heirs, direct heirs), that is, to the persons who were previously under his potestas, but were released from it by his death. If he had adopted as son a person not connected with him by birth, that person was included among the sui heredes; on the other hand, a son by birth whom he had emancipated was . . . excluded from the sui heredes . . ." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 134 (1881).

sui juris (s[y]oo-1 or soo-ee joor-is). [Latin "of one's own right; independent"] (17c) 1. Of full age and capacity. 2. Possessing full social and civil rights. 3. Roman law. Of or relating to anyone of any age, male or female, not in the postestas of another, and therefore capable of owning property and enjoying private law rights. • As a status, it was not relevant to public law.

sui potens (s[y]oo-1 poh-tenz). [Latin] Hist. Able to do something, as in to enter a contract.

suit. (14c) Any proceeding by a party or parties against another in a court of law; CASE (1). — Also termed lawsuit; suit at law. See ACTION (4).

ancillary suit (an-sə-lee-ee). (1845) An action, either at law or in equity, that grows out of and is auxiliary to another suit and is filed to aid the primary suit, to enforce a prior judgment, or to impeach a prior decree. — Also termed ancillary bill; ancillary proceeding; ancillary process. [Cases: Federal Courts ↷20.1.]

blackmail suit. (1892) A suit filed by a party having no genuine claim but hoping to extract a favorable settlement from a defendant who would rather avoid the expense and inconvenience of litigation.

class suit. See CLASS ACTION.

derivative suit. See DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

frivolous suit. (1837) A lawsuit having no legal basis, often filed to harass or extort money from the defendant. [Cases: Action ↷8; Costs ↷2; Federal Civil Procedure ↷2767.]

official-capacity suit. A lawsuit that is nominally against one or more individual state employees but that has as the real party in interest the state or a local government. Cf. personal-capacity suit. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷119.]

personal-capacity suit. An action to impose personal, individual liability on a government officer. Cf. official-capacity suit.

petitory suit. See petitory action under ACTION (4).

plenary suit (plee-nə-ree or plen-ə-ree). (1817) An action that proceeds on formal pleadings under rules of procedure. Cf. summary proceeding under PROCEEDING.

sham suit. See sham action under ACTION (4).

strike suit. (1902) A suit (esp. a derivative action), often based on no valid claim, brought either for nuisance value or as leverage to obtain a favorable or inflated settlement. [Cases: Corporations ↷214.]

suit at law. A suit conducted according to the common law or equity, as distinguished from statutory provisions. • Under the current rules of practice in federal and most state courts, the term civil action embraces an action both at law and in equity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 2. See action at law under ACTION (4).

suit in equity. A civil suit stating an equitable claim and asking for an exclusively equitable remedy. — Also termed action in equity. [Cases: Action ↷21.]

suit of a civil nature. A civil action. See civil action under ACTION (4).

suitable, adj. (Of goods, etc.) fit and appropriate for their intended purpose.

suitas (s[y]oo-ə-tas), n. [Law Latin] The status of a proper heir.

suit for exoneration. (1928) A suit in equity brought by a surety to compel the debtor to pay the creditor. • If the debtor has acted fraudulently and is insolvent, a suit for exoneration may include further remedies to ensure that the debtor's assets are applied equitably to the debtor's outstanding obligations. — Also termed suit to compel payment. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷179.]

suit money. (1846) Attorney's fees and court costs allowed or awarded by a court; esp., in some jurisdictions, a husband's payment to his wife to cover her reasonable attorney's fees in a divorce action. [Cases: Divorce ↷220.]

suitor. (16c) 1. A party that brings a lawsuit; a plaintiff or petitioner. 2. An individual or company that seeks to take over another company.

Suitors' Deposit Account. English law. An account consisting of suitors' fees paid in the Court of Chancery that, by the Chancery Act of 1872, were to be invested in government securities bearing interest at 2% per annum on behalf of the investing suitor, unless the suitor directed otherwise.

Suitors' Fee Fund. Hist. A fund consisting largely of fees generated by the Court of Chancery out of which the court officers' salaries and expenses were paid. • In suit papers. See COURT PAPERS.

suit pro laesione fidei (proh lee-zhee-oh-nee fr-dee-i), n. [Latin “for injury to faith”] Hist. Eccles. law. A suit in ecclesiastical court for spiritual offenses against conscience, nonpayment of debts, or a breach of contract, esp. an oral contract made by oath.

Suits in Admiralty Act. A 1920 federal law giving injured parties the right to sue the government in admiralty. 46 USCA app. §§ 741–52. [Cases: United States ⇨ 78(7).]

summary court-martial. See COURT-MARTIAL.

summary disposition. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

summary eviction. See EVICTION.

summary judgment. (18c) A judgment granted on a claim or defense about which there is no genuine issue of material fact and upon which the movant is entitled to prevail as a matter of law. ● The court considers the contents of the pleadings, the motions, and additional evidence adduced by the parties to determine whether there is a genuine issue of material fact rather than one of law. This procedural device allows the speedy disposition of a controversy without the need for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. — Also termed summary disposition; judgment on the pleadings. See JUDGMENT. [Cases:

Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2461–2559; Judgment ⇨ 178–190.]

summary of the argument. The part of a brief, esp. an appellate brief, in which the advocate condenses the argument to a précis or synopsis, directing the court to the heart of the argument on each point. ● A summary typically runs from one to four pages. — Also termed summary of argument. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 761; Criminal Law ⇨ 1130(3); Federal Courts ⇨ 714.]

“A summary of the argument, suitably paragraphed. The summary should be a clear and concise condensation of the argument made in the body of the brief; mere repetition of the headings under which the argument is arranged is not sufficient.” Sup. Ct. R. 24.1(h).

summary of the invention. Patents. In a U.S. patent application, the section that describes the nature, operation, and purpose of the invention in enough detail that the examiner and anyone searching the patent literature for prior art can understand the unique character of the invention. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 99.]

summary plan description. Under the Employee Retirement Security Act (ERISA), an outline of an employee benefit plan, containing such information as the identity of the plan administrator, the requirements for eligibility and participation in the plan, circumstances that may result in disqualification or denial of benefits, and the identity of any insurers responsible for financing or administering the plan. ● A summary plan description must generally be furnished to all employee-benefit-plan participants and beneficiaries. 29 USCA § 1022. supplicatio (səp-li-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A petition to the emperor requesting him to decide a case, not already before a court, in first instance or, sometimes, to reopen a case in which no appeal is normally allowed. Pl. supplicationes (səp-li-kay-shee-oh).

"Another mode was supplicatio, petition to the Emperor by a private person, not allowed when the question was already before a court or had been decided and not properly appealed. It was mainly used to bring matters before the Emperor or his delegate, in first instance, where for any reason it was unlikely that justice would be done, e.g. where the claimant was humble and the opponent a 'potentior,' or where the claimant was of too high rank to go before the ordinary court, or the decision was of an unappealable magistrate." W.W. Buckland, Elementary Principles of the Roman Private Law 671 (1912).

2. A petition for a pardon on a first offense. 3. Hist. A pleading similar to a rejoinder.

supplicavit (səp-li-kay-vit). Hist. A writ issued by the King's Bench or Chancery for taking sureties of the peace, obligating a person to be on good behavior for a specified period. • It is commonly directed to the justices of the peace who are hesitant to intervene in their judicial capacities. See surety of the peace under SURETY.

"Any justices of the peace, by virtue of their commission, or those who are ex officio conservators of the peace . . . may demand such security according to their own discretion; or it may be granted at the request of any subject, upon due cause shewn . . . Or, if the justice is averse to act, it may be granted by a mandatory writ, called a supplicavit, issuing out of the court of king's bench or chancery; which will compel the justice to act, as a ministerial and not as a judicial officer . . ." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 250 (1769).

supplicium (sə-plish-ee-əm), n. [Latin "atonement"] Roman law. A punishment. • Ultimum supplicium is the death penalty.

sur disclaimer. Hist. A writ brought by a lord against a tenant who has disclaimed tenure, to recover the land.

surdus (sər-dəs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A deaf person. • A wholly deaf and mute person could not lawfully make a will before the time of Justinian, who modified the law.

surety (shuər[-ə]-tee). (14c) 1. A person who is primarily liable for paying another's debt or performing another's obligation. • Although a surety is similar to an insurer, one important difference is that a surety often receives no compensation for assuming liability. A surety differs from a guarantor, who is liable to the creditor only if the debtor does not meet the duties owed to the creditor; the surety is directly liable. Cf. GUARANTOR. [Cases: Principal and Surety ⇨1, 65, 66.]

"The words surety and guarantor are often used indiscriminately as synonymous terms; but while a surety and a guarantor have this in common, that they are both bound for another person, yet there are points of difference between them which should be carefully noted. A surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument, executed at the same time and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor and debtor from the beginning, and is held ordinarily to know every default of this principal. Usually the surety will not be discharged, either by the mere indulgence of the creditor to the principal, or by want of notice of the default of the principal, no matter how much he may be injured thereby. On the other hand, the contract of the guarantor is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. It is usually entered into before or after that of the principal, and is often founded on a separate consideration from that supporting the contract of the principal." 1 George W. Brandt, The Law of Suretyship and Guaranty § 2, at 9 (3d ed. 1905).

"A surety, in the broad sense, is one who is liable for the debt or obligation of another, whether primarily or secondarily, conditionally or unconditionally. In other words, the term surety includes anyone who is bound on an obligation which, as between himself and another person who is bound to the obligee for the same performance, the latter obligor should discharge. In this sense, suretyship includes all accessory obligations. By such terminology, guarantors and indorsers are kinds of sureties. . . . A surety, in the narrow sense, is one who is liable in form primarily on the debt or obligation of another. His obligation is accessory to that of the principal debtor, but it is direct and not conditioned on the principal debtor's default. In this sense, suretyship differs from guaranty and indorsement, which are conditional, secondary obligations. . . . The word surety is in the majority of American decisions used in the narrower sense to indicate a primary obligation to pay another's debt, to distinguish it from the secondary obligation of a guarantor. This terminology has the advantage of indicating by the use of the one word 'surety' an obligation which is at once one to pay another's debt, but which at the same time is not conditioned upon another's default." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 6, 8-9 (1950).

accommodation surety. See voluntary surety.

compensated surety. A surety who is paid for becoming obliged to the creditor; esp., one that engages in the business of executing suretyship contracts in exchange for premiums, which are determined by an actuarial computation of risks. • A bonding company is a typical example of a compensated surety. — Also termed commercial surety.

cosurety. See COSURETY.

gratuitous surety. A surety who is not compensated for becoming obliged to the creditor. • Perhaps the most common example is the parent who signs as a surety for a child.

subsurety. See SUBSURETY.

supplemental surety. A surety for a surety.

surety of the peace. Hist. A surety responsible for ensuring that a person will not commit a future offense. • It is required of one against whom there are probable grounds to suspect future misbehavior. See SUPPLICAVIT.

voluntary surety. A surety who receives no consideration for the promise to act as a surety. — Also termed accommodation surety.

2. A formal assurance; esp., a pledge, bond, guarantee, or security given for the fulfillment of an undertaking.

surety and fidelity insurance. See fidelity insurance under INSURANCE.

surety bond. See PERFORMANCE BOND.

surety company. See COMPANYY.

surety insurance. See guaranty insurance under INSURANCE.

suretyship. 1. The legal relation that arises when one party assumes liability for a debt, default, or other failing of a second party. • The liability of both parties begins simultaneously. In other words, under a contract of suretyship, a surety becomes a party to the principal obligation. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷ 1, 65, 66.]

2. The lending of credit to aid a principal who does not have sufficient credit. • The purpose is to guard against loss if the principal debtor were to default. 3. The position or status of a surety.

involuntary suretyship. A suretyship that arises incidentally, when the chief object of the contract is to accomplish some other purpose. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷ 11.]

personal suretyship. A suretyship in which the surety is answerable in damages. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷ 65.]

real suretyship. A suretyship in which specified property can be taken, but the surety is not answerable in damages. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷ 65.]

suretyship by operation of law. A suretyship that the law creates when a third party promises a debtor to assume and pay the debt that the debtor owes to a creditor. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷ 14.]

voluntary suretyship. A suretyship in which the chief object of the contract is to make one party a surety.

surface. 1. The top layer of something, esp. of land.

2. Mining law. An entire portion of land, including mineral deposits, except those specifically reserved.

• The meaning of the term varies, esp. when used in legal instruments, depending on the language used, the intention of the parties, the business involved, and the nature and circumstances of the transaction. 3. Mining law. The part of the geologic section lying over the minerals in question.

surface casing. See CASING.

surface-damage clause. Oil & gas. A lease provision requiring the lessee to pay the lessor or the surface-interest owner for all or for a specified kind or degree of damage to the surface that results from oil-and-gas operations. — Also termed location-damage clause; damages clause. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷ 120.]

surface interest. Oil & gas. Every right in real property other than the mineral interest. • The surface-interest owner has the right to the surface subject to the right of the mineral-interest owner to use the surface. The surface-interest owner is entitled to all whatever non-mineral substances are found in or under the soil. — Also termed surface right. Cf. MINERAL INTEREST; SUBSURFACE INTEREST. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷ 55(6).]

surface issue. See ISSUE (1).

Surface Transportation Board. A unit in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for the economic regulation of interstate surface transportation, primarily railroads. • Its jurisdiction includes railroad-rate and -service issues, railroad-company mergers and related labor matters; certain truck and ocean shipping rates; certain intercity bus-company structures; and certain pipeline matters not regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. — Abbr. STB. [Cases: Carriers ↷ 10.]

surface water. See WATER.

Surgeon General. (18c) 1. The chief medical officer of the U.S. Public Health Service or of a state public-health agency. 2. The chief officer of the medical departments in the armed forces. — Abbr. SG.

surmise (sər-mīz), n. (18c) 1. An idea based on weak evidence; conjecture. 2. Hist. A suggestion, esp. to a court. 3. Hist. Eccles. law. An allegation in the complaint. • A collateral surmise is a surmise of a fact not contained in the libel. See LIBEL (3).

surname. See NAME.

surplice fees (sər-plis feez). Eccles. law. Fees paid to clergy for performing occasional duties, such as marriages, funerals, and baptisms.

surplus. 1. The remainder of a thing; the residue or excess. 2. The excess of receipts over disbursements. 3. Funds that remain after a partnership has been dissolved and all its debts paid. 4. A corporation's net worth, beyond the par value of capital stock. — Also termed overplus.

accumulated surplus. Earnings in excess of a corporation's capital and liabilities.

acquired surplus. The surplus gained by the purchase of another business.

actuarial surplus. See ACTUARIAL SURPLUS.

appreciation surplus. See revaluation surplus.

appropriated surplus. 1. The portion of surplus earmarked for a specific purpose. — Also termed reserved surplus. 2. See appropriated retained earnings under EARNINGS.

capital surplus. 1. All surplus (such as paid-in surplus or donated surplus) not arising from the accumulation of profits; a company's surplus other than earned surplus, usu. created by financial reorganization or gifts. 2. See paid-in surplus.

donated surplus. 1. Assets (such as stock) contributed to a corporation. 2. The increase in the shareholders' equity account resulting from such a contribution.

earned surplus. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

initial surplus. The surplus that appears on the financial statement at the beginning of an accounting period, but that does not reflect the operations for the statement's period.

paid-in surplus. The surplus gained by the sale, exchange, or issuance of capital stock at a price above par value. — Also termed capital surplus; premium on capital stock.

reserved surplus. See appropriated surplus (1).

restricted surplus. A surplus with a limited or restricted use; esp., the portion of retained earnings that cannot be distributed as dividends. • The restriction is usu. due to preferred dividends in arrears, a covenant in a loan agreement, or some decision of the board of directors. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

revaluation surplus. Surplus that is gained when assets are reappraised at a higher value. — Also termed appreciation surplus.

trade surplus. The excess of merchandise exports over merchandise imports during a specific period. Cf. trade deficit under DEFICIT.

unearned surplus. Corporations. The total of amounts assigned to shares in excess of stated capital, surplus arising from a revaluation of assets above cost, and contributions other than for shares, whether from shareholders or others.

surplusage (sər-pləs-ij). (15c) 1. Redundant words in a statute or legal instrument; language that does not add meaning <the court must give effect to every word, reading nothing as mere surplusage>. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 202, 206.] 2. Extraneous matter in a pleading <allegations that are irrelevant to the case will be treated as surplusage>. [Cases: Indictment and Information ⇨ 118.]

"Surplusage is to be avoided. The perfection of pleading is to combine the requisite certainty and precision with the greatest possible brevity of statement. 'Surplusage' . . . includes matter of any description which is unnecessary to the maintenance of the action or defense. The rule requires the omission of such matter in two instances: (1) Where the matter is wholly foreign and irrelevant to the merits of the case. (2) When, though not wholly foreign, such matter need not be stated." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 316, at 514 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

surplus earnings. See EARNINGS.

surplus-lines insurance. See INSURANCE.

surplus profit. See PROFIT (1).

surplus revenue. See appropriated retained earnings under EARNINGS.

surplus water. See WATER.

surprise. (15c) An occurrence for which there is no adequate warning or that affects someone in an unexpected way. • In a trial, the procedural rules are designed to limit surprise — or trial by ambush — as much as possible. For example, the parties in a civil case are permitted to conduct discovery, to determine the essential facts of the case and the identities of possible witnesses, and to inspect relevant documents. At trial, if a party calls a witness who has not been previously identified, the witness's testimony may be excluded if it would unfairly surprise and prejudice the other party. And if a party has diligently prepared the case and is nevertheless taken by surprise on a material point at trial, that fact can sometimes be grounds for a new trial or for relief from the judgment under Rules 59 and 60 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

surrebuttal (sər-ri-bət-əl). (1853) The response to the opposing party's rebuttal in a trial or other proceeding; a rebuttal to a rebuttal <called two extra witnesses in surrebuttal>. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 683; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2015; Trial ⇨ 64.]

surrebutter (sər-ri-bət-ər). Common-law pleading. (17c) The plaintiff's answer of fact to the defendant's rebutter. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 185.]

surrejoinder (sər-ri-joyn-dər). Common-law pleading. (16c) The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rejoinder. See REPLICATION. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 184.]

"Where the common-law system of pleading is in force, the pleadings do not terminate with the plaintiff's replication. The defendant may interpose a rejoinder to the replication, and the plaintiff a surrejoinder to the defendant's rejoinder. Then follows the rebutter, which in turn may be met by a surrebutter." 61A Am. Jur. 2d Pleading § 193, at 192 (1981).

surrender, n. (15c) 1. The act of yielding to another's power or control. 2. The giving up of a right or claim; RELEASE (1). [Cases: Release ⇨ 1.] 3. The return of an estate to the person who has a reversion or remainder, so as to merge the estate into a larger estate. Cf. MERGER (4).

"Merger bears a very near resemblance, in circumstances and effect, to a surrender; but the analogy does not hold in all cases, though there is not any case in which merger will take place, unless the right of making and surrender resided in the parties between whom the merger takes place. To a surrender, it is requisite that the tenant of the particular estate should relinquish his estate in favor of the tenant of the next vested estate, in remainder or reversion. But merger is confined to the cases in which the tenant of the estate in reversion or remainder grants that estate to the tenant of the particular estate, or in which the particular tenant grants his estate to him in reversion or remainder. Surrender is the act of the party, and merger is the act of the law." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *100 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

4. Commercial law. The delivery of an instrument so that the delivery releases the deliverer from all liability. [Cases: Bills and Notes ↷ 438.] 5. A tenant's relinquishment of possession before the lease has expired, allowing the landlord to take possession and treat the lease as terminated. — Also termed (in sense 5) surrender of term. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷ 109.] — surrender, vb.

surrender by bail. (18c) A surety's delivery of a prisoner, who had been released on bail, into custody. [Cases: Bail ↷ 80.]

surrender by operation of law. (1836) An act that is an equivalent to an agreement by a tenant to abandon property and the landlord to resume possession, as when the parties perform an act so inconsistent with the landlord-tenant relationship that surrender is presumed, or when a tenant performs some act that would not be valid if the estate continued to exist. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷ 109, 110, 194.]

surrender clause. Oil & gas. A provision commonly found in oil-and-gas leases authorizing a lessee to release its rights to all or any portion of the leased property at any time and to be relieved of further obligations on the acreage surrendered. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷ 77.]

surrenderee. One to whom a surrender is made. See SURRENDER.

surrenderer. See SURRENDEROR.

surrender of a criminal. An officer's delivery of a prisoner to the authorities in the appropriate jurisdiction. See EXTRADITION; RENDITION. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ↷ 16, 36.]

surrender of a preference. Bankruptcy. The yielding of a voidable conveyance, transfer, assignment, or encumbrance by a creditor to the trustee as a condition of allowing the creditor's claim. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷ 2824.]

surrender of charter. Corporations. The dissolution of a corporation by a formal yielding of its charter to the state under which it was created and the subsequent acceptance of that charter by the state. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 610(1).]

"The surrender of a charter can be made only by some formal, solemn act of the corporation, and will be of no avail until accepted by the government. There must be the same agreement of the parties to dissolve that there was to form the compact. It is the acceptance which gives efficacy to the surrender. Consent of the state is sometimes given by general statute." 19 Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 2738, at 546 (1986).

surrender of copyhold. Hist. The transfer by a tenant of a copyhold estate by yielding it to the lord in trust for the transferee according to the terms in the surrender.

• In normal practice, the tenant went to the steward of the manor and delivered a rod, a glove, or other customary symbol, thereby conveying to the lord (through the steward) all interest and title to the estate, in trust, to be then granted by the lord to the transferee. See COPYHOLD.

surrender of term. See SURRENDER (5). surrenderor. One who surrenders; esp., one who yields up a copyhold estate for conveyance. — Also spelled surrenderer. See COPYHOLD.

surrender to uses of will. Hist. A required yielding of a copyhold interest passed by will to the will's uses. • The requirement was abolished by St. 55 Geo. 3, ch. 192.

surrender value. See cash surrender value under VALUE (2).

surreply. A movant's second supplemental response to another party's opposition to a motion. — Sometimes written sur-reply. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷ 921.]

surreptitious (sər-əp-tish-əs), adj. (15c) (Of conduct) unauthorized and clandestine; stealthily and usu. fraudulently done <surreptitious interception of electronic communications is prohibited under wiretapping laws>. [Cases: Telecommunications ↷ 1434.]

surreptitious-entry search warrant. See covert-entry search warrant under SEARCH WARRANT.

surreptitious-entry warrant. See WARRANT (1).

surrogacy. 1. The act of performing some function in the place of someone else. 2. The process of carrying and delivering a child for another person. [Cases: Child Custody ↷ 274.5; Child Support ↷ 63; Children Out-of-Wedlock ↷ 15; Parent and Child ↷ 20.]

gestational surrogacy. A pregnancy in which one woman (the genetic mother) provides the egg, which is fertilized, and another woman (the surrogate mother) carries the fetus and gives birth to the child.

traditional surrogacy. A pregnancy in which a woman provides her own egg, which is fertilized by artificial insemination, and carries the fetus and gives birth to a child for another person.

surrogacy contract. See SURROGATE-PARENTING AGREEMENT.

surrogate (sər-ə-git), n. (17c) 1. A substitute; esp., a person appointed to act in the place of another <in his absence, Sam's wife acted as a surrogate>. See SURROGACY; surrogate mother under MOTHER. 2. A probate judge <the surrogate held that the will was valid>. See probate judge under JUDGE. 3. One who acts in place of another. — surrogate, adj. — surrogacy (sər-ə-gə-see), surrogateship, n.

surrogate carrier. See surrogate mother (1) under MOTHER.

surrogate court. See probate court under COURT.

surrogate mother. See MOTHER.

surrogate parent. 1. See PARENT. 2. See surrogate mother under MOTHER.

surrogate-parenting agreement. (1985) A contract between a woman and typically an infertile couple under which the woman provides her uterus to carry an embryo throughout pregnancy; esp., an agreement between a person (the intentional parent) and a woman (the surrogate mother) providing that the surrogate mother will (1) bear a child for the intentional parent, and (2) relinquish any and all rights to the child. • If the surrogate mother is married, her husband must also consent to the terms of the surrogacy contract. The agreement usu. provides that the woman will relinquish to the couple any parental rights she may have upon the birth of the child. Complex issues arise concerning who is the parent of the resulting child: the genetic donor of egg or sperm, a spouse of either donor, the surrogate, or the person intending to care for the resulting child? American jurisdictions are split on the interpretation and enforceability of these contracts. — Also termed surrogacy contract. See surrogate mother under MOTHER; intended child under CHILD; intentional parent under PARENT. [Cases: Child Custody ↻274.5; Child Support ↻63; Children Out-of-Wedlock ↻15; Parent and Child ↻20.]

surrogate's court. See probate court under COURT.

surrounding circumstances. (1828) The facts underlying an act, injury, or transaction — usu. one at issue in a legal proceeding.

sursise (sər-sīz). [Law French] Hist. Neglect; omission.

sursum reddere (sər-səm red-ər-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. In conveyancing, to render up or surrender (property rights, etc.).

sursum redditio (sər-səm rə-dīsh-ee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. In conveyancing, a surrender of an estate by mutual agreement.

surtax. See TAX.

surtax exemption. (18c) 1. An exclusion of an item from a surtax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3633.] 2. An item or an amount not subject to a surtax. See surtax under TAX.

surveillance (sər-vay-lənts), n. (1802) Close observation or listening of a person or place in the hope of gathering evidence. — surveil (sər-vayl), vb.

survey, n. (16c) 1. A general consideration of something; appraisal . 2. The measuring of a tract of land and its boundaries and contents; a map indicating the results of such measurements <the lender requires a survey of the property before it will issue a loan>.

government survey. A survey made by a governmental entity of tracts of land (as of townships and sections and quarter-sections of land). — Also termed (when conducted by the federal government) congressional survey. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↻42; Public Lands ↻23–28.]

inclusive survey. A survey that includes within the described boundaries land that is owned or claimed by others and excluded from the survey's computed area.

topographical survey. A survey that determines a property's elevation above sea level.

3. A governmental department that carries out such measurements <please obtain the boundaries from survey>. 4. A poll or questionnaire, esp. one examining popular opinion <the radio station took a survey of the concert audience>. 5. Maritime law. A written assessment of the current condition of a vessel or cargo. — Also termed (in sense 5) survey of a vessel. [Cases: Shipping ↻12.] — survey, vb.

survey of a vessel. See SURVEY (5).

surveyor of the port. Hist. A U.S. customs revenue officer appointed for each principal port of entry to oversee the inspection and valuation of imports. • The office was abolished in 1953.

survival action. (1938) A lawsuit brought on behalf of a decedent's estate for injuries or damages incurred by the decedent immediately before dying. • A survival action derives from the claim that a decedent would have had — such as for pain and suffering — if he or she had survived. In contrast is a claim that the beneficiaries may have in a wrongful-death action, such as for loss of consortium or loss of support from the decedent. Cf. WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION. [Cases: Death ↻10.]

survival clause. Wills & estates. A testamentary provision conditioning a bequest on a beneficiary's living for a specified period, often 60 days, after the testator's death. • If the beneficiary dies within the stated period, the testamentary gift usu. accrues to the residuary estate. — Also termed survivorship clause. Cf. SIMULTANEOUS-DEATH CLAUSE.

survival statute. (1892) A law that modifies the common law by allowing certain actions to continue in favor of a personal representative after the death of the party who could have originally brought the action; esp., a law that provides for the estate's recovery of damages incurred by the decedent immediately before death. Cf. DEATH STATUTE. [Cases: Death ↻10.]

survivance. The right of succession (as to an office or to an estate) of a survivor named before the death of the incumbent or the holder.

surviving, adj. (16c) Remaining alive; living beyond the happening of an event so as to entitle one to a distribution of property or income <surviving spouse>. See SURVIVAL ACTION.

surviving corporation. See CORPORATION.

surviving partner. See PARTNER.

surviving spouse. See SPOUSE.

survivor. (15c) 1. One who outlives another. 2. A trustee who administers a trust after the cotrustee has been removed, has refused to act, or has died.

survivor-income benefit plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

survivorship. (17c) 1. The state or condition of being the one person out of two or more who remains alive after the others die. 2. The right of a surviving party having a joint interest with others in an estate to take the whole. See RIGHT OF SURVIVORSHIP.

survivorship annuity. See ANNUITY.

survivorship clause. See SURVIVAL CLAUSE.

survivorship policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

susceptibility. See SUBJECTION (3).

suspect, n. (14c) A person believed to have committed a crime or offense.

suspect, vb. 1. To consider (something) to be probable. 2. To consider (something) possible. 3. To consider (a person) as having probably committed wrongdoing, but without certain truth.

reasonably suspect. 1. To consider (something) to be probable under circumstances in which a reasonable person would be led to that conclusion. 2. To consider (someone) as having probably committed wrongdoing under circumstances in which a reasonable person would be led to that conclusion.

suspect class. (1952) A group identified or defined in a suspect classification.

suspect classification. (1949) Constitutional law. A statutory classification based on race, national origin, or alienage, and thereby subject to strict scrutiny under equal-protection analysis. • Examples of laws creating suspect classifications are those permitting only U.S. citizens to receive welfare benefits and setting quotas for the government's hiring of minority contractors. See STRICT SCRUTINY. Cf. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷3072, 3078.]

quasi-suspect classification. A statutory classification based on gender or legitimacy, and therefore subject to intermediate scrutiny under equal-protection analysis. • Examples of laws creating a quasi-suspect classification are those permitting alimony for women only and providing for an all-male draft. See INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷3074, 3081.]

suspend, vb. (14c) 1. To interrupt; postpone; defer <the fire alarm suspended the prosecutor's opening statement>. 2. To temporarily keep (a person) from performing a function, occupying an office, holding a job, or exercising a right or privilege <the attorney's law license was suspended for violating the Model Rules of Professional Conduct>. [Cases: Licenses ↷38; Officers and Public Employees ↷65.]

suspend the rules. Parliamentary law. To pass a motion that overrides an agenda or other procedural rule, for a limited time and purpose, so that the deliberative assembly may take some otherwise obstructed action.

"When a body wishes to do something that cannot be done without violating its own rules, but yet that is not in conflict with the constitution or with any controlling statutory provision, it 'suspends the rules that interfere with' the proposed action. Suspension differs from amendment because it is limited in scope and in time. The object of the suspension must be specified, and nothing falling outside the stated limits of the motion to suspend the rules can be done under the suspension." National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 279, at 211 (2000).

suspendatur per collum (səs-pen-day-tər pər kahl-əm). [Law French] Hist. Let him be hanged by the neck. • This phrase was written by a judge in the margin of the sheriff's calendar, opposite the name of a prisoner who had been sentenced to death. — Abbr. sus. per coll.

"And now the usage is, for the judge to sign the calendar, or list of all the prisoners' names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff. As, for capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, 'hanged by the neck;' formerly, in the days of Latin and abbreviation, 'sus. per coll.' for 'suspendatur per collum.' And this is the only warrant that the sheriff has for so material an act as taking away life of another." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 396 (1769).

suspended sentence. See SENTENCE.

suspended trading. See TRADING HALT.

suspense. (15c) The state or condition of being suspended; temporary cessation .

suspense account. See ACCOUNT.

suspense reserve. See appropriated retained earnings under EARNINGS.

suspension. (15c) 1. The act of temporarily delaying, interrupting, or terminating something <suspension of business operations> <suspension of a statute>. 2. The state of such delay, interruption, or termination <corporate transfers were not allowed because of the suspension of business>. 3. The temporary deprivation of a person's powers or privileges, esp. of office or profession; esp., a fairly stringent level of lawyer discipline that prohibits the lawyer from practicing law for a specified period, usu. from several months to several years <suspension of the bar license>. • Suspension may entail requiring the lawyer to pass a legal-ethics bar examination, or to take one or more ethics courses as continuing legal education, before being readmitted to active practice. [Cases: Licenses ↷38; Officers and Public Employees ↷65.] 4. The temporary withdrawal from employment, as distinguished from permanent severance <suspension from teaching without pay>. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷825.] 5. Eccles. law. An ecclesiastical censure that can be temporary or permanent, and partial or complete. See DEPRIVATION. 6. Scots law. The process of staying a judgment pending an appeal to the Supreme Court.

suspension of arms. See TRUCE.

suspension of judgment. See STAY.

suspension of trading. The temporary cessation of all trading of a particular stock on a stock exchange because of some abnormal market condition.

suspensive appeal. See APPEAL.

suspensive condition. See CONDITION (2).

suspensive veto. See suspensory veto under VETO.

suspensory veto. See VETO.

sus. per coll. abbr. SUSPENDATUR PER COLLUM.

suspicion. (14c) The apprehension or imagination of the existence of something wrong based only on inconclusive or slight evidence, or possibly even no evidence.

reasonable suspicion. (18c) A particularized and objective basis, supported by specific and articulable facts, for suspecting a person of criminal activity. • A police officer must have a reasonable suspicion to stop a person in a public place. See STOP AND FRISK. Cf. PROBABLE CAUSE. [Cases: Arrest ⇨ 63.5.]

suspicious-activity report. (1996) A form that, as of 1996, a financial institution must complete and submit to federal regulatory authorities if it suspects that a federal crime has occurred in the course of a monetary transaction. • This form superseded two earlier forms, the criminal-referral form and the suspicious-transaction report. — Abbr. SAR. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 151, 188.5; United States ⇨ 34.]

suspicious character. (18c) In some states, a person who is strongly suspected or known to be a habitual criminal and therefore may be arrested or required to give security for good behavior.

suspicious-transaction report. (1993) A checkbox on IRS Form 4789 formerly (1990–1995) requiring banks and other financial institutions to report transactions that might be relevant to a violation of the Bank Secrecy Act or its regulations or that might suggest money-laundering or tax evasion. • This checkbox, like the criminal-referral form, has since been superseded by the suspicious-activity report. — Abbr. STR. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 151.]

sustain, vb. (13c) 1. To support or maintain, esp. over a long period <enough oxygen to sustain life>. 2. To nourish and encourage; lend strength to <she helped sustain the criminal enterprise>. 3. To undergo; suffer <Charles sustained third-degree burns>. 4. (Of a court) to uphold or rule in favor of <objection sustained>. 5. To substantiate or corroborate <several witnesses sustained Ms. Sipes's allegation>. 6. To persist in making (an effort) over a long period <he sustained his vow of silence for the last 16 years of his life>. — sustainment, sustentation, n. — sustainable, adj.

suthdure (suuth-door). Hist. Eccles. law. The south door of a church, where purgations and other acts were performed and complaints were heard and resolved.

suum cuique tribuere (s[y]oo-əm k[w]I-kwee tri-byoo-ər-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To render to every person his due. • This was one of the three general precepts in which Justinian expressed the requirements of the law. Cf. ALTERUM NON LAEDERE; HONESTE VIVERE.

suus heres (s[y]oo-əs heer-eez). [Latin] Roman law. An heir in the power of the deceased, by whom acceptance of the inheritance was not necessary. See SUI HEREDES.

suzerainty (soo-zə-rin-tee or -rayn-tee). 1. Hist. The power of a feudal overlord to whom fealty is due. See FEALTY. 2. Int'l law. The dominion of a nation that controls the foreign relations of another nation but allows it autonomy in its domestic affairs.

"At the present time there appears to be no instance of a relation between states which is described as a suzerainty. The term was applied to the relation between Great Britain and the South African Republic, and also to that between Turkey and Bulgaria from 1878 to 1909, but it seems likely to disappear from diplomatic terminology." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 128 (5th ed. 1955).

suzereign. See SUZERAIN.

S.W. abbr. SOUTH WESTERN REPORTER.

swamp and overflowed land. See LAND.

swap, n. Commercial law. 1. An exchange of one security for another. 2. A financial transaction between two parties, usu. involving an intermediary or dealer, in which payments or rates are exchanged over a specified period and according to specified conditions.

currency swap. An agreement to swap specified payment obligations denominated in one currency for specified payment obligations denominated in a different currency.

stock swap. In a corporate reorganization, an exchange of one corporation's stock for another corporation's stock. — Also termed stock-for-stock exchange.

swarf money. Hist. A payment made in lieu of the service of maintaining a lord's castle.

swatting, n. Slang. The act of falsely telephoning a report of a serious crime or emergency in progress in order to provoke a response from a law-enforcement agency, esp. the dispatch of a SWAT (Special Weapons and Tactics) team. • Swatting schemes are often elaborate, involving the use of electronic tools to mask the caller's true identity and location, such as voice-changing devices, fake caller-IDs, and the like. — swatter, n.

swear, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To administer an oath to (a person). [Cases: Oath ⇨ 5.] 2. To take an oath. 3. To use obscene or profane language.

swearing behind. Patents. A patent applicant's showing that an invention was conceived of or reduced to practice before the effective date of a prior-art reference cited by a patent examiner as grounds for rejecting an application. 37 CFR § 1.131. — Also termed swearing behind the reference. See ANTEDATING OF A PRIOR-swearing contest. See SWEARING MATCH.

swearing-in, n. (1900) The administration of an oath to a person who is taking office or testifying in a legal proceeding. See OATH. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷36(1).]

swearing match. (1907) A dispute in which determining a vital fact involves the credibility choice between one witness's word and another's — the two being irreconcilably in conflict and there being no other evidence. • In such a dispute, the fact-finder is generally thought to believe the more reputable witness, such as a police officer over a convicted drug-dealer. — Also termed swearing contest; oath against an oath.

swearing the peace. Hist. The giving of proof to a magistrate that one fears for one's own safety, so that the magistrate will order the troublemaker to keep the peace by issuing a supplicavit. See SUPPLICAVIT.

swear out, vb. (1850) To obtain the issue of (an arrest warrant) by making a charge under oath <Franklin swore out a complaint against Sutton>.

sweating. (1824) Criminal procedure. The illegal interrogation of a prisoner by use of threats or similar means to extort information.

sweat-of-the-brow doctrine. Copyright. The now-discarded principle that copyrights can protect the labor and expense that went into a work, rather than the work's originality. • The Supreme Court rejected the sweat-of-the-brow doctrine in Feist Pubs., Inc. v. Rural Tel. Servs. Co., 499 U.S. 340, 111 S.Ct. 1282 (1991). Cf. SWEATWORK. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷12(1).]

sweatshop. (1890) Slang. A business where the employees are overworked and underpaid in extreme conditions; esp., in lawyer parlance, a law firm that requires associates to work so hard that they barely (if at all) maintain a family or social life — though the firm may, in return, pay higher salaries.

sweatwork. Slang. A compilation, esp. a searchable computer database, that does not qualify for U.S. copyright protection because the underlying facts are not copyrightable and the compilation is not a nontrivial arrangement. • New forms of intellectual-property laws are aimed at protecting the "sweat-of-the-brow" investment that goes into compiling databases. Cf. SWEAT-OF-THE-BROW DOCTRINE. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷12(3).]

sweeping, adj. 1. Comprehensive in scope <sweeping legislation>. 2. Overwhelming <sweeping voter turnout>.

Sweeping Clause. See NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE.

sweepstakes. 1. A race (esp. a horse race) in which the winner's prize is the sum of the stakes contributed by the various competitors. 2. A contest, often for promotional purposes, that awards prizes based on the random selection of entries. • State and federal laws prohibit conducting a sweepstakes as a scheme to obtain money or property through the mail by false representations. 39 USCA § 3005. [Cases: Gaming ↷62; Lotteries ↷3.]

sweetener. 1. An inducement offered to a brokerage firm to enter into an underwriting arrangement with an issuer. 2. A special stock feature (such as convertibility) that enhances the stock's marketability.

sweetheart deal. A collusive agreement; esp., a collective-bargaining agreement made as a result of collusion between an employer and a union representative, usually allowing the employer to pay lower wages in exchange for payoffs to the union representative.

swain (swayn). Hist. A forest freeholder. — Also spelled swain.

swainmote (swayn-moht). Hist. A forest court held three times a year, before verderors as judges and freeholders of the forest as jurors, to try forest offenses. — Also spelled swainmote; swanimote; swainmote; swaingemote.

"The court of swainmote is to be holden before the verderors, as judges, by the steward of the swainmote thrice in every year . . . The principal jurisdiction of this court is, first, to enquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest . . . and, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments against offences in vert and venison." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 72 (1768).

swell, n. 1. An expansion in the bulk of something . 2. A gradual rise of something . 3. A large, unbroken wave; the collective waves, particularly following a storm .

SYD method. See sum-of-the-year's-digits depreciation method under DEPRECIATION METHOD.

syllabus (sil-ə-bəs). 1. An abstract or outline of a topic or course of study. 2. A case summary appearing before the printed judicial opinion in a law report, briefly reciting the facts and the holding of the case. • The syllabus is ordinarily not part of the court's official opinion. — Sometimes termed headnote. Cf. HEADNOTE. Pl. syllabuses, syllabi (sil-ə-bi).

symbiotic-relationship test. (1973) The standard by which a private person may be considered a state actor — and may be liable for violating someone's constitutional rights — if the relationship between the private person and the government is so close that they can fairly be said to be acting jointly. • Private acts by a private person do not generally create liability for violating someone's constitutional rights. But if a private person violates someone's constitutional rights while engaging in state action, the private person, and possibly the government, can be held liable. State action may be shown by proving that the private person and the state have a mutually dependent (symbiotic) relationship. For example, a restaurant in a public parking garage was held to have engaged in discriminatory state action by refusing to serve African-Americans. Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715, 81 S.Ct. 856 (1961). There, the Court found a symbiotic relationship because the restaurant relied on the garage for its existence and significantly contributed to the municipal parking authority's ability to maintain the garage. But the symbiotic-relationship test is strictly construed. For example, the fact that an entity receives financial support from — or is heavily regulated by — the government is probably insufficient to show a symbiotic relationship. Thus, although a state had granted a partial monopoly to a public utility, the Court refused to find a symbiotic relationship between them. Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 95 S.Ct. 449 synergism (sin-ər-jiz-əm), n. Patents. 1. A combination of known elements or functions that create a result greater than the sum of the individual elements or functions. • Demonstrating that synergism exists is sometimes useful in proving nonobviousness. The U.S. Supreme Court held that synergism was a requirement for a combination patent in Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v.

Supermarket Equip. Corp., 340 U.S. 147 (1950). But that holding was overturned by the Patent Act of 1952. 35 USCA § 103. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 26(1.5).] 2. A patentable device that produces a new or different function or an unusual or surprising consequence. — Also termed synergy; synergistic result. — synergistic (sin-ər-jis-tik), synergetic (sin-ər-jet-ik), adj.

syngraph (sin-graf). A written contract or bond signed by all the parties.

synod (sin-əd). Eccles. law. An ecclesiastical council lawfully assembled to determine church matters; esp., a meeting of several adjoining presbyteries in the Presbyterian church. [Cases: Religious Societies ⇨ 11, 12.]

synthetic lease. See LEASE.

synthetic rule. See QUANTITATIVE RULE.

systematic jurisprudence. See expository jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

systematic violation. (1980) Civil-rights law. An employer's policy or procedure that discriminates against an employee. • Such a policy or procedure will usu. be considered a continuing violation. So an employee's claim of unlawful discrimination will not be barred as untimely as long as some discriminatory effect of the policy or procedure occurs within the limitations period (e.g., 300 days for a Title VII claim). Cf. SERIAL VIOLATION. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1505(7).]

T

T. Hist. 1. A letter branded on the base of the thumb of a person who claimed the benefit of clergy to prevent the person from claiming it again. • This practice was formally abolished by the Criminal Statutes (England) Repeal Act of 1827. 2. In Pennsylvania, a letter sewn onto the left sleeve of a convicted thief. • This letter — required by a 1698 statute — had to be at least four inches high and of a different color from the rest of the garment.

TAB. abbr. TAX-ANTICIPATION BILL.

table, n. 1. A synopsis representation, esp. in columnar form, of the particulars of a subject, usu. to present diverse items in a way that can be more easily understood. • Examples include actuarial tables, genealogical tables (which show the names and relationships of all the persons constituting a family), and interest tables. 2. A formulation of laws inscribed on tablets, such as the Twelve Tables of Roman law. See TWELVE TABLES. 3. Parliamentary law. The secretary's desk.

table, vb. (1849) Parliamentary law. (Of a deliberative assembly) to set aside the pending business until the assembly votes to resume its consideration. • A matter that has been tabled may be brought up again by a vote of the assembly. — Also termed lay on the table; postpone temporarily.

"The early name of the motion to postpone temporarily was 'lay on the table.' (In American usage the phrase has been shortened, and the motion is now generally referred to as the motion 'to table.')

The term grew out of the legislative custom of literally laying a bill awaiting further consideration on the clerk's table.

"The reference to 'laying the motion on the table' or 'tabling' is still widely used, but the more precise term, 'postpone temporarily,' is preferred when that is its purpose, because the term is self-explanatory.

"Sometimes, however, the purpose of the motion is not merely to postpone temporarily, but to set the motion aside indefinitely — in effect, to 'kill' it . . ." Alice Sturgis, The Standard Code of Parliamentary Procedure 70 (4th ed. 2001).

2. English law. To put forward (a bill, proposal, resolution, etc.) for consideration and discussion by a legislative or deliberative assembly.

[Law Latin] Hist. To be silent throughout the four years after majority. • A person is estopped from challenging a deed made when that person was a minor if the right is not exercised within the four years after the person reaches the age of majority.

tacit (tas-it), adj. (17c) 1. Implied but not actually expressed; implied by silence or silent acquiescence  . 2. Civil law. Arising by operation of law; constructive  <tacit relocation>. La. Civ. Code art. 3506(30). — tacitly, adv.

tacit acceptance. Civil law. 1. An acceptance of an offer indicated by circumstances or operation of law rather than express words. La. Civ. Code art. 1927. 2. An acceptance of an inheritance, indicated by the heir's doing some act that shows an intent to accept it and that the heir would have no right to do except in that capacity. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ☞ 72, 119(2).]

tacit admission. See implied admission under ADMISSION (1).

tacit collusion. See CONSCIOUS PARALLELISM.

tacit contract. See CONTRACT.

tacit dedication. See DEDICATION.

tacit hypothecation. See HYPOTHECATION.

tacit law. See LAW.

tacit mortgage. 1. See legal mortgage under MORTGAGE. 2. See tacit hypothecation under HYPOTHECATION.

tacit prorogation. See PROROGATION.

tacit relocation. The implied or constructive renewal of a lease, usu. on a year-to-year basis, when the landlord and tenant have failed to indicate their intention to have the lease terminated at the end of the original term. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨115(1).]

tacit-relocation doctrine. The principle under which a lease is presumed to continue (usu. for a one-year period) beyond its expiration date because of the parties' failure to indicate that the agreement should terminate at the stipulated date. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨115(1).]

tacit remission. See REMISSION.

tack, n. Scots law. A deed creating a lease of land or other immovable property for an annual rent payable in money, services, or fruits produced on the land. • The lessee may be referred to as a tacksman or tacks-woman. — tack, vb.

tack, vb. 1. To add (one's own period of land possession) to a prior possessor's period to establish continuous adverse possession for the statutory period. [Cases: Adverse Possession ⇨43.] 2. To annex (a junior lien) to a first lien to acquire priority over an intermediate lien.

"It is the established doctrine in the English law, that if there be three mortgages in succession, and all duly registered, or a mortgage, and then a judgment, and then a second mortgage upon the estate, the junior mortgagee may purchase in the first mortgage, and tack it to his mortgage, and by that contrivance 'squeeze out' the middle mortgage and gain preference over it. The same rule would apply if the first as well as the second incumbrance was a judgment; but the incumbrancer who tacks must always be a mortgagee, for he stands in the light of a bona fide purchaser, parting with his money upon the security of the mortgage." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *176 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

3. Scots law. To lease land or another immovable for an annual rent payable in money, services, or fruits produced on the land.

tacking. (18c) 1. The joining of consecutive periods of possession by different persons to treat the periods as one continuous period; esp., the adding of one's own period of land possession to that of a prior possessor to establish continuous adverse possession for the statutory period. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. [Cases: Adverse Possession ⇨43.] 2. The joining of a junior lien with the first lien in order to acquire priority over an intermediate lien. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨151(2).]

tail, n. (14c) The limitation of an estate so that it can be inherited only by the fee owner's issue or class of issue. See FEE TAIL; ENTAIL. — Also termed (in Scots law) tailzie (tay-lee). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨29; Estates in Property ⇨12; Wills ⇨604.]

several tail. A tail that designates two separate heirs or classes of heirs who are eligible to inherit.

tail female. (18c) A limitation to female heirs. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨12; Wills ⇨605.]

tail general. (15c) 1. A tail limited to the issue of a particular person, but not to that of a particular couple. — Also termed general tail. 2. See tail male. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨12; Wills ⇨604.]

tail male. (17c) A limitation to male heirs. — Also termed tail general. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨12; Wills ⇨604.]

tail special. (15c) A tail limited to specified heirs of the donee's body. — Also termed special tail. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨12; Wills ⇨604.]

"Estates-tail are either general, or special. . . . Tenant in tail-special is where the gift is restrained to certain heirs . . . and does not go to all of them in general. And this may happen in several ways. I shall instance in only one: as where lands and tenements are given to a man and the heirs of his body, on Mary his now wife to be begotten; here no issue can inherit, but such special issue as is engendered, between them two, not such as the husband may have by another wife: and therefore it is called special tail." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 113-14 (1766).

tail coverage. Insurance. An extension of a claims-made professional-liability policy to protect against claims and lawsuits filed after the end of the policy period but based on negligent acts that occurred during the policy period. — Also termed extended-reporting-period endorsement. Cf. PRIOR-ACTS COVERAGE. [Cases: Insurance ⇨2266.]

talisman (tal-is-mən), n. A charm, amulet, or other physical thing supposedly capable of working wonders <private property is not some sacred talisman that can never be touched by the state — it can be taken for public use as long as the owner is justly compensated>. — talismanic (tal-is-man-ik), adj.

talis qualis (tay-lis kway-lis). [Latin] Hist. Such as it is. • A purchaser who accepts title as it stands at the time of sale takes the title talis qualis.

tallage. 1. Hist. An arbitrary tax levied by the monarch on towns and lands belonging to the crown. • Royal tallages were abolished in the 14th century when Parliament gained the power to approve or disapprove the monarch's direct-taxation schemes. 2. Hist. A levy demanded by a feudal lord from tenants in lieu of the tenants' provision of goods and services. • The timing and amount of the levy varied according to local custom, type of tenure, and caprice. 3. TOLLAGE.

tally. 1. Hist. A stick cut into two parts and marked with notches to show what was due between a debtor and creditor.

"The tally, used as a receipt for money or chattels, was a narrow wooden stick with notches of varying dimensions to represent the amount received. After the notches had been cut, the stick was split lengthwise into two unequal pieces. The longer, which contained a stump or handle and was called the 'stock,' was given to the person making the payment, and the shorter, a flat strip called the 'foil,' to the other party. If the sum involved was disputed, the two pieces could be fitted one to the other to see if they would 'tally.'" C.H.S. Fifoot, History and Sources of the Common Law: Tort and Contract 223 (1949).

"A thousand pounds was marked by cutting out the thickness of the palm of the hand, a hundred by the breadth of the thumb, a score by the breadth of the little finger, one pound by that of a swelling barley-corn The terminology has left a permanent imprint on our language. If you lent money to the Bank of England, tallies were cut for the amount: the Bank kept the foil and you received the stock; you thus held 'Bank Stock' of the amount recorded upon it. When the form of cheque was adopted, it was not indeed called a foil, but the part retained by the payer is still the counterfoil; and the word 'cheque' itself goes back ultimately to the same root as 'exchequer.'" Reginald L. Poole, The Exchequer in the Twelfth Century 86-93 (1912).

"From early times tallies were used in the Exchequer and this lasted until 1826. The burning of a large quantity of old tallies led to the burning down of the old Houses of Parliament." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1207 (1980).

2. Anything used to record an account. 3. An account; a score.

Talmud (tahl-muud or tal-məd), n. A work embodying the civil and canonical law of the Jewish people. — Talmudic (tahl-moo-dik or tal-), adj.

tariff, n. 1. A schedule or system of duties imposed by a government on imported or exported goods. • In the United States, tariffs are imposed on imported goods only. [Cases: Customs Duties ↷23-38.] 2. A duty imposed on imported or exported goods under such a system. See DUTY (4).

ad valorem tariff. A tariff set as a percentage of the imported goods' value. • This is the primary method used to calculate customs duties.

antidumping tariff. A tariff equaling the difference between the price at which the product is sold in the exporting country and the price at which the importer will sell the product in the importing country. • These tariffs are designed to prevent foreign businesses from artificially lowering their prices and gaining unfair advantages outside their home market. — Also termed antidumping duty. See ANTIDUMPING LAW. [Cases: Customs Duties ↷21.5.]

autonomous tariff. A tariff set by legislation rather than by commercial treaty.

common external tariff. A tariff rate that members of a customs union, common market, or economic union uniformly apply to imports from nonmember nations. — Abbr. CXT. — Also termed tariff exterior commun.

discriminatory tariff. A tariff containing duties that are applied unequally to different countries or manufacturers.

preferential tariff. A tariff that favors the products of one country over those of another. Cf. MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE.

protective tariff. A tariff designed primarily to give domestic manufacturers economic protection against price competition from abroad, rather than to generate revenue.

retaliatory tariff. A tariff imposed to pressure another country into removing its own tariffs or making trade concessions.

revenue tariff. A tariff enacted solely or primarily to raise revenue.

tariff exterior commun. [French] See common external tariff. — Abbr. TEC.

task order. See task-order contract under CONTRACT.

task-order contract. See CONTRACT.

tax, n. (14c) A charge, usu. monetary, imposed by the government on persons, entities, transactions, or property to yield public revenue. • Most broadly, the term embraces all governmental impositions on the person, property, privileges, occupations, and enjoyment of the people, and includes duties, imposts, and excises. Although a tax is often thought of as being pecuniary in nature, it is not necessarily payable in money. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3001; Taxation ⇨ 2001.] — tax, vb.

"Taxes are the enforced proportional contributions from persons and property, levied by the state by virtue of its sovereignty for the support of government and for all public needs. This definition of taxes, often referred to as 'Cooley's definition,' has been quoted and indorsed, or approved, expressly or otherwise, by many different courts. While this definition of taxes characterizes them as 'contributions,' other definitions refer to them as 'imposts,' 'duty or impost,' 'charges,' 'burdens,' or 'exactions'; but these variations in phraseology are of no practical importance." 1 Thomas M. Cooley, The Law of Taxation § 1, at 61-63 (Clark A. Nichols ed., 4th ed. 1924).

accrued tax. (1872) A tax that has been incurred but not yet paid or payable.

accumulated-earnings tax. (1957) A penalty tax imposed on a corporation that has retained its earnings in an effort to avoid the income-tax liability arising once the earnings are distributed to shareholders as dividends. — Also termed undistributed-earnings tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3843-3845.]

additional tax. See stopgap tax.

admission tax. A tax imposed as part of the price of being admitted to a particular event. [Cases: Public Amusement and Entertainment ⇨ 50.]

ad valorem tax. (1810) A tax imposed proportionally on the value of something (esp. real property), rather than on its quantity or some other measure. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2061.]

"[A]n ad valorem tax is a tax of a fixed proportion of the value of the property with respect to which the tax is assessed, and requires the intervention of assessors or appraisers to estimate the value of such property before the amount due from each taxpayer can be determined." 71 Am. Jur. 2d State and Local Taxation § 20, at 355 (1973).

alternative minimum tax. (1972) A tax, often a flat rate, potentially imposed on corporations and higher-income individuals to ensure that those taxpayers do not avoid too much (or all) income-tax liability by legitimately using exclusions, deductions, and credits. — Abbr. AMT. — Also termed minimum tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3550.]

amusement tax. A tax on a ticket to a concert, sporting event, or the like. • The tax is usu. expressed as a percentage of the ticket price. [Cases: Public Amusement and Entertainment ⇨ 50.]

back tax. (oft. pl.) A tax that, though assessed for a previous year or years, remains due and unpaid.

betterment tax. See BETTERMENT TAX.

capital-gains tax. (1930) A tax on income derived from the sale of a capital asset. • The federal income tax on capital gains typically has a more favorable tax rate — for example, 20% for an individual and 34% for a corporation — than the otherwise applicable tax rate on ordinary income. See CAPITAL GAIN. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3230.1-3260.]

capital-stock tax. 1. A tax on capital stock in the hands of a stockholder. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2234.] 2. A state tax for conducting business in the corporate form, usu. imposed on out-of-state corporations for the privilege of doing business in the state. • The tax is usu. assessed as a percentage of the par or assigned value of a corporation's capital stock.

capitation tax. See poll tax.

child's income tax. See kiddie tax.

classified tax. A tax system in which different rates are assessed against different types of taxed property.

collateral-inheritance tax. A tax levied on the transfer of property by will or intestate succession to a person other than the spouse, a parent, or a descendant of the decedent. Cf. legacy tax. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3301.]

commutation tax. 1. A combination of two or more taxes that is or can be substituted for something else that could be imposed, such as a demand for other taxes or the performance of personal services. • For example, an excise or franchise tax may be combined with a local tax in lieu of all other taxes related to the subject matter. 2. Hist. A tax imposed on shipowners, requiring them to post a bond or remit a payment per foreign passenger. • In the 19th-century, the tax was used to discourage immigration and to raise revenue to defray the costs of supporting indigent immigrants who had remained in the U.S. 3. Hist. A 1784 tax intended to reduce tea-smuggling and increase tax revenue by cutting the tax on tea and raising the tax on windows. • To avoid payment of the tax, many people boarded up their windows.

consumption tax. A tax imposed on sale of goods or services to be consumed. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3602.]

death tax. 1. See estate tax. 2. See inheritance tax.

delinquent tax. A tax not paid when due. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4827; Taxation ⇨ 2760, 3554, 3697.]

direct tax. (18c) A tax that is imposed on property, as distinguished from a tax on a right or privilege. • A direct tax is presumed to be borne by the person upon whom it is assessed, and not “passed on” to some other person. Ad valorem and property taxes are direct taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3059–3064; Taxation ⇨ 2061.]

documentary-stamp transfer tax. See stamp tax.

erroneous tax. 1. A tax levied without statutory authority. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2062, 3404, 3607.] 2. A tax on property not subject to taxation. 3. A tax levied by an officer who lacks authority to levy the tax. — Also termed illegal tax.

estate tax. (1928) A tax imposed on the transfer of property by will or by intestate succession. — Also termed death tax; death duty. Cf. inheritance tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4145; Taxation ⇨ 3301.]

estimated tax. (1926) A tax paid quarterly by a taxpayer not subject to withholding (such as a self-employed person) based on either the previous year’s tax liability or an estimate of the current year’s tax liability. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4827, 4832, 5219.40; Taxation ⇨ 3554.]

excess-profits tax. (1918) A tax levied on profits that are beyond a business’s normal profits. • This type of tax is usu. imposed only in times of national emergency (such as war) to discourage profiteering. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4130–4136.]

excise lieu property tax. A tax on the gross premiums received and collected by designated classes of insurance companies. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2243.]

export tax. A tax levied on merchandise and goods shipped or to be shipped out of a country.

flat tax. (1952) A tax whose rate remains fixed regardless of the amount of the tax base. • Most sales taxes are flat taxes. — Also termed proportional tax. Cf. progressive tax; regressive tax. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3672, 3673.]

floor tax. A tax imposed on distilled spirits stored in a warehouse. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4314.]

franchise tax. A tax imposed on the privilege of carrying on a business (esp. as a corporation), usu.

measured by the business’s income. See FRANCHISE. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2233.]

general tax. (16c) 1. A tax that returns no special benefit to the taxpayer other than the support of governmental programs that benefit all. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2001, 2010.] 2. A property tax or an ad valorem tax that is imposed for no special purpose except to produce public revenue. Cf. special assessment under ASSESSMENT.

generation-skipping tax. (1977) A tax on a property transfer that skips a generation. • The tax limits the use of generation-skipping techniques as a means of avoiding estate taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4220.]

generation-skipping transfer tax. (1984) A gift or estate tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer or a generation-skipping trust. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601–2663. — Sometimes shortened to generation-skipping tax; transfer tax. See DIRECT SKIP; GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; TAXABLE DISTRIBUTION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4220–4228.]

gift tax. (1925) A tax imposed when property is voluntarily and gratuitously transferred. • Under federal law, the gift tax is imposed on the donor, but some states tax the donee. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4200; Taxation ⇨ 3381.]

graduated tax. 1. A tax employing a rate schedule with higher marginal rates for larger taxable bases (income, property, transfer, etc.) 2. See progressive tax.

gross-income tax. (1916) A tax on gross income, possibly after the deduction for costs of goods sold, rather than on net profits; an income tax without allowance for expenses or deductions. See gross income under INCOME. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3110; Taxation ⇨ 3447.]

gross-receipts tax. A tax on a business’s gross receipts, without a deduction for costs of goods sold, or allowance for expenses or deductions. See GROSS RECEIPTS. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3604.]

hidden tax. (1935) A tax that is paid, often unknowingly, by someone other than the person or entity on whom it is levied; esp., a tax imposed on a manufacturer or seller (such as a gasoline producer) who passes it on to consumers in the form of higher sales prices.

highway tax. A tax raised to pay for the construction, repair, and maintenance of highways. [Cases: Highways ⇨ 123.]

holding-company tax. A federal tax imposed on undistributed personal-holding-company income after allowing deductions for such things as dividends paid. IRC (26 USCA) § 545. — Also termed personal-holding-company tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3850.1–3858.]

illegal tax. 1. A tax that violates the law, esp. the constitution. • For an example, see poll tax. 2. See erroneous tax.

income tax. (18c) A tax on an individual's or entity's net income. • The federal income tax — set forth in the Internal Revenue Code — is the federal government's primary source of revenue, and most states also have income taxes. Cf. property tax; EXCISE. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3065–4122; Taxation ↻3401.]

indirect tax. (18c) A tax on a right or privilege, such as an occupation tax or franchise tax. • An indirect tax is often presumed to be partly or wholly passed on from the nominal taxpayer to another person. [Cases: Licenses ↻1.]

inheritance tax. (18c) 1. A tax imposed on a person who inherits property from another (unlike an estate tax, which is imposed on the decedent's estate). • There is no federal inheritance tax, but some states have an inheritance tax (though it is creditable or deductible under the federal estate tax). — Also termed succession tax; death tax. Cf. estate tax. [Cases: Taxation ↻3301.] 2. Loosely, an estate tax.

in lieu tax. A tax imposed as a substitute for another. [Cases: Taxation ↻2295.]

intangible tax. A state tax imposed on the privilege of owning, transferring, devising, or otherwise dealing with intangible property. [Cases: Taxation ↻2061.]

interest-equalization tax. A tax imposed on a U.S. citizen's acquisition of stock issued by a foreign issuer or a debt obligation of a foreign obligor, but only if the obligation did not mature within a year. • This tax was repealed in the mid-1970s. IRC (26 USCA) § 4911.

kiddie tax. (18c) Slang. A federal tax imposed on a child's unearned income (above an exempt amount) at the parents' tax rate if the parents' rate is higher and if the child is under 18 years old. — Also termed child's income tax.

land tax. See property tax.

legacy tax. A tax on a legacy, often with the provision that the rate increases as the relationship of the legatee becomes more remote from the testator. • In English law, this tax was known as a legacy duty; it was abolished in 1949. Cf. collateral-inheritance tax. [Cases: Taxation ↻3301.]

luxury tax. (1925) An excise tax imposed on high-priced items that are not deemed necessities (such as cars costing more than a specified amount). Cf. sin tax. [Cases: Taxation ↻3602.]

minimum tax. See alternative minimum tax.

nanny tax. (1993) Slang. A federal social-security tax imposed on the employer of a domestic employee if the employer pays that employee more than a specified amount in total wages in a year. • The term, which is not a technical legal phrase, was popularized in the mid-1990s, when several of President Clinton's nominees were found not to have paid the social-security tax for their nannies.

occupation tax. (1879) An excise tax imposed for the privilege of carrying on a business, trade, or profession. • For example, many states require lawyers to pay an occupation tax. — Also termed occupational tax. [Cases: Licenses ↻1.]

payroll tax. (1936) 1. A tax payable by an employer based on its payroll (such as a social-security tax or an unemployment tax). [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4849; Taxation ↻3560.] 2. A tax collected by an employer from its employees' gross pay (such as an income tax or a social-security tax). See withholding tax.

per capita tax. See poll tax.

personal-holding-company tax. See holding-company tax.

personal-property tax. (1863) A tax on personal property (such as jewelry or household furniture) levied by a state or local government. [Cases: Taxation ↻2176.]

pickup tax. Slang. A state death tax levied in an amount equal to the federal death-tax credit. — Also termed sponge tax; slack tax. [Cases: Taxation ↻3301.]

poll tax. (17c) A fixed tax levied on each person within a jurisdiction. • The 24th Amendment prohibits the federal and state governments from imposing poll taxes as a condition for voting. — Also termed per capita tax; capitation tax; capitation; head tax. [Cases: Elections ↻83; Taxation ↻2050.]

premium tax. A state tax paid by an insurer on premiums paid by the insured. [Cases: Taxation ↻2243.]

privilege tax. A tax on the privilege of carrying on a business or occupation for which a license or franchise is required. [Cases: Licenses ↻1.]

progressive tax. (1886) 1. A tax structured so that the effective tax rate increases more than proportionately as the tax base increases, or so that an exemption remains flat or diminishes. • With this type of tax, the percentage of income paid in taxes increases as the taxpayer's income increases. Most income taxes are progressive, so that higher incomes are taxed at a higher rate. But a tax can be progressive without using graduated rates. — Also termed graduated tax. Cf. regressive tax; flat tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3545–3552; Taxation ↻3526.] 2. See graduated tax.

property tax. (1808) A tax levied on the owner of property (esp. real property), usu. based on the property's value. • Local governments often impose property taxes to finance school districts, municipal projects, and the like. — Also termed (specif.) land tax. Cf. income tax; EXCISE. [Cases: Taxation ↻2170–2216.]

proportional tax. See flat tax.

regressive tax. (1893) A tax structured so that the effective tax rate decreases as the tax base increases. ● With this type of tax, the percentage of income paid in taxes decreases as the taxpayer's income increases. A flat tax (such as the typical sales tax) is usu. considered regressive — despite its constant rate — because it is more burdensome for low-income taxpayers than high-income taxpayers. A growing exemption also produces a regressive tax effect. Cf. progressive tax; flat tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3545–3552; Taxation ⇨ 3526.] repressive tax. See sin tax.

sales tax. (1921) A tax imposed on the sale of goods and services, usu. measured as a percentage of their price. — Also termed retail sales tax. See flat tax. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3602.]

“While the term ‘sales tax’ encompasses a large variety of levies, the term often refers to the ‘retail sales tax,’ where the tax is separately stated and collected on a transaction-by-transaction basis from the consumer; although the economic burden of the sales tax falls upon the consumer, the seller has the statutory duty to collect the tax for the taxing jurisdiction.” 68 Am. Jur. 2d Sales and Use Tax § 1, at 11 (1993).

self-employment tax. The Social-Security and Medicare tax imposed on the net earnings of a self-employed person. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4381.]

service-occupation tax. A tax imposed on persons who sell services, usu. computed as a percentage of net cost of the tangible personal property (e.g., materials and goods) transferred as an incident to the sale. [Cases: Licenses ⇨ 1; Taxation ⇨ 3658.]

severance tax. A tax imposed on the value of oil, gas, timber, or other natural resources extracted from the earth. [Cases: Logs and Logging ⇨ 4; Mines and Minerals ⇨ 87.]

sinking-fund tax. A tax to be applied to the repayment of a public loan.

sin tax. (1971) An excise tax imposed on goods or activities that are considered harmful or immoral (such as cigarettes, liquor, or gambling). — Also termed repressive tax. Cf. luxury tax.

slack tax. See pickup tax.

special tax. (18c) 1. A tax levied for a unique purpose. 2. A tax (such as an inheritance tax) that is levied in addition to a general tax. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 24.]

specific tax. (18c) A tax imposed as a fixed sum on each article or item of property of a given class or kind without regard to its value.

sponge tax. See pickup tax.

stamp tax. (18c) A tax imposed by requiring the purchase of a revenue stamp that must be affixed to a legal document (such as a deed or note) before the document can be recorded. — Also termed documentary-stamp transfer tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4390–4409.]

state tax. (18c) 1. A tax — usu. in the form of a sales or income tax — earmarked for state, rather than federal or municipal, purposes. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2001.] 2. A tax levied under a state law.

stock-transfer tax. A tax levied by the federal government and by some states on the transfer or sale of shares of stock. — Often shortened to transfer tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4404; Taxation ⇨ 2218.]

“Some state statutes impose special taxes, usually in the form of a stamp tax, upon sales and agreements for sale and other transfers of stock in corporations. Such a tax is in the nature of an excise tax on the transfer. Taxes on the issuance and transfer of corporate stock, commonly known as ‘stock transfer taxes’ and payable by means of stamps, are constitutional, as within the power of state governments.” 71 Am. Jur. 2d State and Local Taxation § 643, at 896 (1973).

stopgap tax. A tax, usu. temporary, levied during the term of a budget to cover an unexpected deficit. — Also termed additional tax.

succession tax. See inheritance tax (1).

surtax. (1881) An additional tax imposed on something being taxed or on the primary tax itself. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3527.]

tonnage tax. See tonnage duty under DUTY (4).

transfer tax. (1890) 1. A tax imposed on the transfer of property, esp. by will, inheritance, or gift. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4220–4228; Taxation ⇨ 2218, 3301, 3381.] 2. See stock-transfer tax. 3. See generation-skipping transfer tax.

undistributed-earnings tax. See accumulated-earnings tax.

unemployment tax. (1937) A tax imposed on an employer by state or federal law to cover the cost of unemployment insurance. ● The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) provides for a tax based on a percentage of employee earnings but allows a credit for amounts paid in state unemployment taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4305.]

unified transfer tax. The federal transfer tax imposed equally on property transferred during life or at death. ● Until 1977, gift-tax rates were lower than estate taxes. — Also termed unified estate-and-gift tax.

unitary tax. A tax of income earned locally by a business that transacts business through an affiliated company outside the state or country. See UNITARY BUSINESS. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3477.]

unrelated-business-income tax. (1962) A tax levied on a not-for-profit organization's taxable income, such as advertising revenue from a publication. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4068; Taxation ⇨ 3488.]

use tax. A tax imposed on the use of certain goods that are bought outside the taxing authority's jurisdiction. ● Use taxes are designed to discourage the purchase of products that are not subject to the sales tax. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3603.]

value-added tax. (1935) A tax assessed at each step in the production of a commodity, based on the value added at each step by the difference between the commodity's production cost and its selling price.

• A value-added tax — which is levied in several European countries — effectively acts as a sales tax on the ultimate consumer. — Abbr. VAT. [Cases: Taxation ⇨3602.]

windfall-profits tax. (1973) A tax imposed on a business or industry as a result of a sudden increase in profits.

• An example is the tax imposed on oil companies in 1980 for profits resulting from the Arab oil embargo of the 1970s. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4338.]

window tax. Hist. English law. A tax imposed on a house containing a certain number of windows (usu. more than six). • It was established under the Taxation Act of 1695 and replaced with a tax on inhabited houses established under the House Tax of 1851. See HOUSE-DUTY.

withholding tax. (1927) A portion of income tax that is subtracted from salary, wages, dividends, or other income before the earner receives payment. • The most common example is the income tax and social-security tax withheld by an employer from an employee's pay. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4849; Taxation ⇨3560.]

taxable, adj. (16c) 1. Subject to taxation <interest earned on a checking account is taxable income>. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3110; Taxation ⇨3446–3477.]

2. (Of legal costs or fees) assessable <expert-witness fees are not taxable court costs>. [Cases: Costs ⇨146–194; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2742.]

taxable cost. See COST (3).

taxable distribution. (1927) A generation-skipping transfer from a trust to the beneficiary (i.e., the skip person) that is neither a direct skip nor a taxable termination. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; SKIP PERSON. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4224.]

taxable estate. See ESTATE (3).

taxable gift. See GIFT.

taxable income. See INCOME.

taxable termination. (1988) A taxable event that occurs when (1) an interest in a generation-skipping trust property terminates (as on the death of a skip person's parent who possessed the interest), (2) no interest in the trust is held by a nonskip person, and (3) a distribution may be made to a skip person. • Before the creation of taxable terminations in 1976, a taxpayer could create a trust that paid income to a child for life, then to that child's child for life, and so on without incurring an estate or gift tax liability at the death of each generation's beneficiary. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; SKIP PERSON. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4224.]

taxable year. See tax year under YEAR.

tax accounting. The accounting rules and methods used in determining a taxpayer's liability.

tax-anticipation bill. A short-term obligation issued by the U.S. Treasury to meet the cash-flow needs of the government. • Corporations can tender these bills at par value to make quarterly tax payments. — Abbr. TAB.

tax-anticipation note. See NOTE (1).

tax-anticipation warrant. See WARRANT (2).

tax-apportionment clause. A testamentary provision directing how inheritance and estate taxes should be paid. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4824; Taxation ⇨3346.]

tax assessment. See ASSESSMENT (3).

tax assessor. See ASSESSOR (1).

taxation. (14c) 1. The imposition or assessment of a tax; the means by which the state obtains the revenue required for its activities. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3001–3007; Taxation ⇨2001.]

double taxation. (18c) 1. The imposition of two taxes on the same property during the same period and for the same taxing purpose. [Cases: Taxation ⇨2150–2156, 3435.] 2. The imposition of two taxes on one corporate profit; esp., the structure of taxation employed by Subchapter C of the Internal Revenue Code, under which corporate profits are taxed twice, once to the corporation when earned and once to the shareholders when the earnings are distributed as dividends. 3. Int'l law. The imposition of comparable taxes in two or more states on the same taxpayer for the same subject matter or identical goods. — Also termed duplicate taxation.

duplicate taxation. See double taxation.

equal and uniform taxation. A tax system in which no person or class of persons in the taxing district — whether it be a state, city, or county — is taxed at a different rate from others in the same district on the same value or thing. [Cases: Taxation ⇨2134, 3428, 3627.]

pass-through taxation. (1998) The taxation of an entity's owners for the entity's income without taxing the entity itself. • Partnerships and S corporations are taxed under this method. So are limited liability companies and limited liability partnerships unless they elect to be taxed as corporations by "checking the box" on their income tax returns. The election is made on Form 8832 (Entity Classification Election). See Treas. Reg. § 301.7701-(3)(b)(1). — Also termed conduit taxation. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3896, 3920–3924.]

taxation of costs. The process of fixing the amount of litigation-related expenses that a prevailing party is entitled to be awarded. — Sometimes shortened to taxation. [Cases: Costs ⇨195; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2742.1.]

tax audit. See AUDIT.

tax avoidance. (1927) The act of taking advantage of legally available tax-planning opportunities in order to minimize one's tax liability. Cf. TAX EVASION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3056–3058; Taxation ↷2220.]

tax base. The total property, income, or wealth subject to taxation in a given jurisdiction; the aggregate value of the property being taxed by a particular tax. Cf. BASIS (2).

tax basis. See BASIS (2).

tax-benefit doctrine. See TAX-BENEFIT RULE.

tax-benefit rule. (1942) The principle that if a taxpayer recovers a loss or expense that was deducted in a previous year, the recovery must be included in the current year's gross income to the extent that it was previously deducted. — Also termed tax-benefit doctrine. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3089, 3138.]

tax bracket. (1923) A categorized level of income subject to a particular tax rate under federal or state law <28% tax bracket>. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3545–3552; Taxation ↷3525–3529.]

tax certificate. An instrument issued to the buyer of property at a tax sale, certifying the sale and entitling the buyer to a tax deed and possession of the property upon the expiration of the redemption period. • If the property is redeemed, the tax certificate is voided. See REDEMPTION PERIOD; tax sale under SALE. Cf. tax deed under DEED. [Cases: Taxation ↷2986, 3064.]

tax court. (1841) 1. TAX COURT, U.S. 2. In some states, a court that hears appeals in nonfederal tax cases and can modify or change any valuation, assessment, classification, tax, or final order that is appealed. [Cases: Taxation ↷2691, 3548, 3695.]

Tax Court, U.S. A federal court that hears appeals by taxpayers from adverse IRS decisions about tax deficiencies. • The Tax Court was created in 1942, replacing the Board of Tax Appeals. — Abbr. T.C. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4645–4655.]

tax credit. (1946) An amount subtracted directly from one's total tax liability, dollar for dollar, as opposed to a deduction from gross income. — Often shortened to credit. Cf. DEDUCTION (2). [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3520–3537; Taxation ↷3517.]

child- and dependent-care tax credit. (2001) A tax credit available to a person who is employed full-time and who maintains a household for a dependent child or a disabled spouse or dependent. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3520, 3534; Taxation ↷3517.]

earned-income credit. (1927) A refundable federal tax credit on the earned income of a low-income worker with dependent children. • The credit is paid to the taxpayer even if it exceeds the total tax liability. See IRC (26 USCA) § 32. — Abbr. EIC. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3532.]

foreign tax credit. (1928) A tax credit against U.S. income taxes for a taxpayer who earns income overseas and has paid foreign taxes on that income.

See FOREIGN-EARNED-INCOME EXCLUSION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4098.]

"Since direct foreign investments and business operations of United States persons often attract foreign income taxes along with the baseline U.S. tax, the specter of double taxation is bound to haunt the pursuit of foreign income. The principal accommodation of the U.S. tax system to the possibility of source-based taxation by other countries is the foreign tax credit. From a simple idea — a dollar-for-dollar reduction of U.S. tax for income taxes paid to foreign countries — the foreign tax credit has evolved into an elaborate statutory structure capable of engulfing an entire professional career." Joseph Isenbergh, International Taxation 14 (2000).

investment tax credit. (1965) A tax credit intended to stimulate business investment in capital goods by allowing a percentage of the purchase price as a credit against the taxpayer's income taxes. • The Tax Reform Act of 1986 generally repealed this credit retroactively for most property placed in service after January 1, 1986. — Abbr. ITC. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3523; Taxation ↷3517.] unified credit. See unified estate-and-gift tax credit.

unified estate-and-gift tax credit. (1988) A tax credit applied against the federal unified transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) § 2001(c)(2). — Often shortened to unified credit. — Also termed applicable exclusion credit. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4182.30.]

tax deduction. See DEDUCTION (2).

tax-deferred, adj. (1948) Not taxable until a future date or event . [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3575–3615.]

tax-deferred account. See ACCOUNT.

tax-deferred annuity. See 403(b) plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

tax deficiency. See DEFICIENCY (2).

tax-deficiency notice. See NINETY-DAY LETTER.

tax denier. See TAX PROTESTER.

tax evasion. (1922) The willful attempt to defeat or circumvent the tax law in order to illegally reduce one's tax liability. • Tax evasion is punishable by both civil and criminal penalties. — Also termed tax fraud. Cf. TAX AVOIDANCE. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷5263; Taxation ↷3232, 3563, 3712.]

tax-exempt, adj. (1923) 1. By law not subject to taxation . [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4045–4071; Taxation ↷2309–2356, 3518, 3664.] 2. Bearing interest that is free from income tax <tax-exempt municipal bonds>. — Also termed tax-free.

tax ferret. A private person engaged in the business of searching for taxable property that has somehow not been taxed. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4442.]

tax foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

tax fraud. See TAX EVASION.

tax-free, adj. See TAX-EXEMPT.

tax-free exchange. (1927) A transfer of property for which the tax law specifically defers (or possibly exempts) income-tax consequences. • For example, a transfer of property to a controlled corporation under IRC (26 USCA) § 351(a) and a like-kind exchange under IRC (26 USCA) § 1031(a). — Also termed 1031 exchange. Cf. 1031 EXCHANGE. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3184; Taxation ⇨3466.]

tax haven. (18c) A jurisdiction, esp. a country, that imposes little or no tax on the profits from transactions carried on there or on persons resident there.

"Among the reasons for this complexity [in international taxation] is the elusive nature of tax havens. A tax haven is not always immediately obvious. What makes a particular environment a tax haven is not invariably a low rate of tax, but relations with other tax regimes that permit the ultimate deflection of income to a low-tax environment with which the income may have little indigenous connection." Joseph Isenbergh, International Taxation 16 (2000).

tax home. (18c) A taxpayer's principal business location, post, or station. • Travel expenses are tax-deductible only if the taxpayer is traveling away from home. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3343.]

tax-identification number. A nine-digit tracking number assigned by the Internal Revenue Service to the tax accounts of businesses and also to entities or individuals who are required to file business tax returns. — Abbr. TIN. — Often shortened to tax i.d. — Also termed employer-identification number (EIN); federal-employer-identification number (FEIN).

tax incentive. (18c) A governmental enticement, through a tax benefit, to engage in a particular activity, such as the contribution of money or property to a qualified charity.

tax-increment financing. A technique used by a municipality to finance commercial developments usu. involving issuing bonds to finance land acquisition and other up-front costs, and then using the additional property taxes generated from the new development to service the debt. — Abbr. TIF. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨953.]

taxing district. See DISTRICT.

taxing power. See POWER (3).

tax injunction act. A federal law prohibiting a federal court from interfering with the assessment or collection of any state tax where the state affords a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy in its own courts. 28 USCA § 1341. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨27.]

tax law. (18c) 1. INTERNAL REVENUE CODE. 2. The statutory, regulatory, constitutional, and common-law rules that constitute the law applicable to taxation. 3. The area of legal study dealing with taxation.

tax lease. See LEASE.

tax levy. See LEVY (1).

tax liability. (1932) The amount that a taxpayer legally owes after calculating the applicable tax; the amount of unpaid taxes.

tax lien. See LIEN.

tax list. An official schedule listing the taxable items within a jurisdiction; ROLL (2).

tax loophole. See LOOPHOLE.

tax-loss carryback. See CARRYBACK.

tax-loss carryforward. See CARRYOVER.

tax-loss carryover. See CARRYOVER.

tax negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

tax-option corporation. See S corporation under CORPORATION.

taxpayer. One who pays or is subject to a tax. Cf. TAX PROTESTER. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3560; Taxation ⇨2168, 3480–3495.]

taxpayers' bill of rights. (1988) Federal legislation granting taxpayers specific rights when dealing with the Internal Revenue Service, such as the right to have representation and the right to receive written notice of a levy 30 days before enforcement.

taxpayers' lists. Written exhibits required of taxpayers in some taxing districts, listing all property owned by them and subject to taxation, used as a basis for assessment and valuation. Cf. ROLL (2). [Cases: Taxation ⇨2462, 2493.]

taxpayer-standing doctrine. (1977) Constitutional law. The principle that a taxpayer has no standing to sue the government for allegedly mispending the public's tax money unless the taxpayer can demonstrate a personal stake and show some direct injury. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨683; Municipal Corporations ⇨987.]

tax-preference items. (1971) Certain items that, even though lawfully deducted in arriving at taxable income for regular tax purposes, must be considered in calculating a taxpayer's alternative minimum tax. See alternative minimum tax under TAX. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3550.]

tax protest. A taxpayer's formal, usu. written, statement that he or she does not acknowledge a legal or just basis for the tax or a duty to pay it. • The purpose of the protest is to make clear that any payment is made "under protest" and to avoid waiving the right to recover the money paid if the tax is later invalidated.

tax protester. 1. One who files a tax protest. 2. A person who opposes tax laws and seeks or employs ways, often illegal, to avoid the laws' effects; esp., a person who refuses to pay a tax on grounds that the government has no authority to levy the tax. — Sometimes spelled tax protestor. — Also termed tax denier. Cf. TAXPAYER.

illegal tax protester. Hist. The name once used by the IRS to designate a person believed to have used illegal means to avoid or reduce tax liability. • In the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, Congress forbade the IRS to continue using the label. Today the term nonfiler is typically used instead.

tax-protest scheme. A plan designed to avoid or express dissatisfaction with tax laws, usu. by unlawful means. • The most common schemes involve illegally evading or

- reducing tax liabilities, or interfering with the administration of the tax laws.
- tax rate. (1876) A mathematical figure for calculating a tax, usu. expressed as a percentage. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3545–3552; Taxation ↻3525–3529, 3672, 3673.]
- average tax rate. (1895) A taxpayer's tax liability divided by the amount of taxable income. — Also called effective tax rate.
- marginal tax rate. (1939) In a tax scheme, the rate applicable to the last dollar of income earned by the taxpayer. • This concept is useful in calculating the tax effect of receiving additional income or claiming additional deductions. See TAX BRACKET.
- tax-rate schedule. (1951) A schedule used to determine the tax on a given level of taxable income and based on a taxpayer's status (for example, married filing a joint income-tax return). — Also termed tax table. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3545–3552; Taxation ↻3525–3529.]
- tax rebate. See TAX REFUND.
- tax redemption. See REDEMPTION.
- tax refund. Money that a taxpayer overpaid and is thus returned by the taxing authority. — Also termed tax rebate. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4950; Taxation ↻2773, 3555, 3699.]
- tax return. (1870) An income-tax form on which a person or entity reports income, deductions, and exemptions, and on which tax liability is calculated. — Often shortened to return. — Also termed income-tax return. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4470; Taxation ↻3539, 3688.]
- amended return. (1861) A return filed after the original return, usu. to correct an error in the original. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4479; Taxation ↻3539, 3688.]
- consolidated return. A return that reflects combined financial information for a group of affiliated corporations. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3865–3880; Taxation ↻3541.]
- false return. See FALSE RETURN (2).
- information return. (1920) A return, such as a W-2, filed by an entity to report some economic information related to, but other than, tax liability.
- joint return. (1930) A return filed together by spouses. • A joint return can be filed even if only one spouse had income, but each spouse is usu. individually liable for the tax payment. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4481; Taxation ↻3540.]
- separate return. (1913) A return filed by each spouse separately, showing income and liability. • Unlike with a joint return, each spouse is individually liable only for taxes due on the separate return. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4481; Taxation ↻3540.]
- tax-return privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).
- tax roll. See ROLL (2).
- tax sale. See SALE.
- tax shelter, n. (1952) A financial operation or investment strategy (such as a partnership or real-estate investment trust) that is created primarily for the purpose of reducing or deferring income-tax payments. • The Tax Reform Act of 1986 — by restricting the deductibility of passive losses — sharply limited the effectiveness of tax shelters. — Often shortened to shelter. — tax-sheltered, adj.
- tax-sheltered annuity. See 403(b) plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.
- tax situs (sī-təs). A state or other jurisdiction that has a substantial connection with assets that are subject to taxation. [Cases: Taxation ↻2211.]
- tax-straddle rule. A rule preventing undue deferral of tax on income or conversion of ordinary income or short-term capital gain into long-term capital gain by disallowing the premature deduction of a loss on sale or disposition of one leg of a straddle position while retaining the other, offsetting leg or position. • For example, in a straddle position a promise to sell may be offset by a promise to buy, such as in a futures contract. This practice has been greatly restricted by the requirement that gains and losses on commodities transactions must be reported based on their value at year end. IRC (26 USCA) § 165(c)(2). See STRADDLE. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3397.]
- tax table. See TAX-RATE SCHEDULE.
- tax title. See TITLE (2).
- tax warrant. See WARRANT (1).
- tax write-off. (1955) A deduction of depreciation, loss, or expense from taxable income. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3310–3442, 3470–3505; Taxation ↻3501–3516.]
- tax year. See YEAR.
- TBC. abbr. Trial before the court. See bench trial under TRIAL.
- T-bill. abbr. TREASURY BILL.
- T-bond. abbr. TREASURY BOND.
- T.C. abbr. See TAX COURT, U.S.
- T.C.M. See T.C. MEMO.
- T.C. memo. abbr. A memorandum decision of the U.S. Tax Court. — Also abbreviated T.C.M.
- TDA. abbr. UNITED STATES TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT AGENCY.
- teach, vb. Patents. 1. (Of a patent specification) to instruct (a person of ordinary skill in the art how to make and use an invention). [Cases: Patents ↻99.] 2. (Of a prior-art reference) to anticipate (the invention being examined) by discussing, describing, or analyzing the invention's essential elements or technology. • In this sense, prior art that discourages an inventor from pursuing an invention "teaches away from" that invention. A teaching raises a statutory bar to an invention's patentability. [Cases: Patents ↻65.]

teamwork. (1828) Work done by a team; esp., work by a team of animals as a substantial part of one's business, such as farming, express carrying, freight hauling, or transporting material. • In some jurisdictions, animals (such as horses) that work in teams are exempt from execution on a civil judgment.

tear-me-open license. See shrink-wrap license under LICENSE.

TEAS. abbr. TRADEMARK ELECTRONIC APPLICATION SYSTEM.

TEC. abbr. Tariff exterior commun. See common external tariff under TARIFF (2).

TECA (tee-kə). abbr. TEMPORARY EMERGENCY COURT OF APPEALS.

technical adjustment. A brief change in the general upward or downward trend of stock-market prices, such as a short rally during a bear market.

Technical Advice Memorandum. (1967) A publication issued by the national office of the IRS, usu. at a taxpayer's request, to explain some complex or novel tax-law issue. — Abbr. TAM. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3044, 3051.]

technical conversion. See CONVERSION (2).

technical error. See harmless error under ERROR (2).

technical estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

technical mark. See technical trademark under TRADEMARK.

technical mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

technical trademark. See TRADEMARK.

technical trust. See passive trust under TRUST.

Technology Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Commerce responsible for working with industry on ways to use technology to stimulate economic growth. • The agency also carries out technology programs and disseminates information about technology. It has three offices: the Office of Technology Policy (OTP), the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), and the National Technical Information Service (NTIS). It was established in 1988. 15 USCA § 3704.

technology transfer. 1. The sale or licensing of intellectual property. 2. The field involving the sale and licensing of intellectual property. • Many major universities have an office of technology transfer to control the university's intellectual property and generate income from it. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻107.]

teen court. See COURT.

teind (teend). Scots law. (usu. pl.) A tithe. teind, vb. — teindable, adj.

Teind Court. Scots law. A court that adjudicates questions relating to teinds, esp. increases in the stipends of parish ministers. • It includes one of the judges of the Court of Session, sitting as Commissioner of Teinds. — Also termed Court of Teinds.

telecopier. See FAX (2).

teleological interpretation. See purposive construction under CONSTRUCTION.

telescram. A fraud committed by using telemarketing to induce the victim to disclose sensitive personal information or send money to the perpetrator. Cf. BOILER-ROOM TRANSACTION; PHISHING.

teller. 1. A bank clerk who deals directly with customers by receiving and paying out money. 2. Parliamentary law. A member of a tellers committee; esp., a vote-counter at an election. See tellers committee under COMMITTEE. [Cases: Elections ↻126(3), 209.]

Teller in Parliament. One of the members of the British House of Commons — two from government and two from the opposition — appointed by the Speaker to count votes.

teller's check. See CHECK.

tempus (tem-pəs), n. [Latin] Hist. Time; a specified duration.

tempus continuum (tem-pəs kən-tin-yoo-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. Time continuing without interruption; a continuous period.

tempus deliberandi (tem-pəs di-lib-ə-ran-di), n. [Latin] Hist. The period allowed for deliberation; esp., the time during which an heir could consider whether to accept or reject an inheritance. Cf. JUS DELIBERANDI.

tempus lugendi (tem-pəs loo-gen-di), n. See LUCTUS.

tempus semestre (tem-pəs si-mes-trə), n. [Latin] A period of 182 days (half a year).

tempus utile (tem-pəs yoo-tə-lee), n. [Latin “useful time”] Hist. Time that one can use to exercise his or her legal rights; the period within which an action or proceeding must be brought. • This is the period before prescription or limitation cuts off a right.

tenancy. (16c) 1. The possession or occupancy of land under a lease; a leasehold interest in real estate. 2. The period of such possession or occupancy. See ESTATE (1). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷20.] 3. The possession of real or personal property by right or title, esp. under a conveying instrument such as a deed or will.

at-will tenancy. See tenancy at will.

common tenancy. See tenancy in common.

cotenancy. (1875) A tenancy with two or more coowners who have unity of possession. • Examples are a joint tenancy and tenancy in common. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷1; Tenancy in Common ↷1.]

entire tenancy. (17c) A tenancy possessed by one person, as opposed to a joint or common tenancy. See estate by entirety under ESTATE (1).

general tenancy. (18c) A tenancy that is not of fixed duration under the parties’ agreement. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷114.]

holdover tenancy. See tenancy at sufferance.

joint tenancy. (17c) A tenancy with two or more coowners who take identical interests simultaneously by the same instrument and with the same right of possession. • A joint tenancy differs from a tenancy in common because each joint tenant has a right of survivorship to the other’s share (in some states, this right must be clearly expressed in the conveyance — otherwise, the tenancy will be presumed to be a tenancy in common). See RIGHT OF SURVIVORSHIP. Cf. tenancy in common. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷1, 6.]

“The rules for creation of a joint tenancy are these: The joint tenants must get their interests at the same time. They must become entitled to possession at the same time. The interests must be physically undivided interests, and each undivided interest must be an equal fraction of the whole — e.g., a one-third undivided interest to each of three joint tenants. The joint tenants must get their interests by the same instrument — e.g., the same deed or will. The joint tenants must get the same kinds of estates — e.g., in fee simple, for life, and so on.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 55 (2d ed. 1984).

periodic tenancy. (1891) A tenancy that automatically continues for successive periods — usu. month to month or year to year — unless terminated at the end of a period by notice. • A typical example is a month-to-month apartment lease. This type of tenancy originated through court rulings that, when the lessor received a periodic rent, the lease could not be terminated without reasonable notice. — Also termed tenancy from period to period; periodic estate; estate from period to period; (more specif.) month-to-month tenancy (or estate); year-to-year tenancy (or estate). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻ 114, 115.]

several tenancy. (17c) A tenancy that is separate and not held jointly with another person.

tenancy at sufferance. (18c) A tenancy arising when a person who has been in lawful possession of property wrongfully remains as a holdover after his or her interest has expired. • A tenancy at sufferance takes the form of either a tenancy at will or a periodic tenancy. — Also termed holdover tenancy; estate at sufferance. See HOLDING OVER (1). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻ 117, 119.]

"A tenancy at sufferance arises where a tenant, having entered upon land under a valid tenancy, holds over without the landlord's assent or dissent. Such a tenant differs from a trespasser in that his original entry was lawful, and from a tenant at will in that his tenancy exists without the landlord's assent. No rent, as such, is payable, but the tenant is liable to pay compensation for his use and occupation of the land. The tenancy may be determined [i.e., terminated] at any time, and may be converted into a yearly or other periodic tenancy in the usual way, e.g., if rent is paid and accepted with reference to a year in circumstances where the parties intended there to be a tenancy." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 319 (6th ed. 1993).

tenancy attendant on the inheritance. A tenancy for a term that is vested in a trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance. • The tenancy is a form of personal property to the trustee. — Also termed tenancy attendant on an inheritance; term attendant on the inheritance.

tenancy at will. (17c) A tenancy in which the tenant holds possession with the landlord's consent but without fixed terms (as for duration or rent); specif., a tenancy that is terminable at the will of either the transferor or the transferee and that has no designated period of duration. • Such a tenancy may be terminated by either party upon fair notice. — Also termed at-will tenancy; estate at will. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻ 117, 118, 120.]

tenancy by the entirety (en-tī-ər-tee). See estate by entirety under ESTATE (1). [Cases: Husband and Wife ↻ 14.2–14.11.]

"Tenancy by the entirety is a form of joint tenancy. It resembles joint tenancy in that upon the death of either husband or wife the survivor automatically acquires title to the share of the deceased spouse. Like a joint tenancy, also, it is necessary for the creation of a tenancy by the entirety that the husband and wife acquire title by the same deed or will." Robert Kratovil, Real Estate Law 198 (6th ed. 1974).

"Where [tenancy by the entirety] is recognized, it may exist only between a husband and a wife. It resembles, in most respects, the joint tenancy. The only major difference is that a tenant by the entirety may not destroy the other spouse's right of survivorship by transferring his or her interest to another. Whether a tenant by the entirety may transfer any interest to a third party — for example, the right of present possession or the contingent right of survivorship — is a matter on which the states differ. Most take the view that no interest may be transferred. The husband and wife may, of course, together convey their estate to a third person. If they both wish to convert their tenancy into a tenancy in common or a joint tenancy, they may do so. Upon the death of a tenant by the entirety, no interest passes, in theory, to the surviving spouse. As was true of the joint tenancy, the survivor's ownership is thought simply to expand to absorb the relinquished ownership of the decedent." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 55 (2d ed. 1984).

"A tenancy by the entirety could exist in any estate, whether in fee, for life, for years or otherwise. The nature of the tenancy was virtually that of an unseverable joint tenancy; neither husband nor wife could dispose of any interest in the land without the concurrence of the other, nor could one of them cause a forfeiture of the land. The unity of husband and wife was regarded as so complete that they were said to be seised 'per tout et non per mie,' the survivor being entitled to the whole of the land by force of the original limitation, discharged of the other's right to participate, and not, as in the case of joint tenancy, by virtue of survivorship on the death of the other tenant. Unlike joint tenants, neither tenant was regarded as having any potential share in the land; 'between husband and wife there are no moieties.'" Robert E. Megarry & P.V. Baker, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 232–33 (4th ed. 1969) (quoting Marquis of Winchester's Case, 3 Co. Rep. 1a, 5a (1583)).

tenancy by the rod. See COPYHOLD.

tenancy by the verge. See COPYHOLD.

tenancy for a term. (17c) A tenancy whose duration is known in years, weeks, or days from the moment of its creation. — Also termed tenancy for a period; tenancy for years; term for years; term of years; estate for a term; estate for years; lease for years. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻ 70, 72, 113–115.]

tenancy from period to period. See periodic tenancy.

tenancy in common. (17c) A tenancy by two or more persons, in equal or unequal undivided shares, each person having an equal right to possess the whole property but no right of survivorship. — Also termed common tenancy; estate in common. Cf. joint tenancy. [Cases: Tenancy in Common ↻ 1.]

"The central characteristic of a tenancy in common is simply that each tenant is deemed to own by himself, with most of the attributes of independent ownership, a physically undivided part of the entire parcel." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 54 (2d ed. 1984).

tenancy in coparcenary. See COPARCENARY.

tenancy in fee. See FEE SIMPLE.

tenancy in gross. (1860) A tenancy for a term that is outstanding — that is, one that is unattached to or disconnected from the estate or inheritance, such as one that is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance.

tenancy in tail. See FEE TAIL.

tenancy par la verge. See COPYHOLD.

year-to-year tenancy. See periodic tenancy.

tenant, n. (14c) 1. One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right or title. See TENANCY. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 1.] copyhold tenant. See customary tenant.

customary tenant. A tenant holding by the custom of the manor. • Over time, customary tenants became known as copyhold tenants. See COPYHOLD.

"The lord has a court; in that court the tenant in villeinage, even though he be personally unfree, appears as no mere tenant at will, but as holding permanently, often heritably, on fairly definite terms. He is a customary tenant, customarius, consuetudinarius; he holds according to the custom of the manor. . . . Then gradually . . . [d]ealings with villein tenements are set forth upon the rolls of the lord's court; the villein tenement is conceived to be holden 'by roll of court,' or even 'by copy of court roll,' and the mode of conveyance serves to mark off the most beneficial of villeinholds from the most onerous of freeholds In Henry III's time this process which secured for the tenant in villeinage a written, a registered title, and gave him the name of 'copyholder,' was but beginning . . ." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 361, 375 (2d ed. 1899).

dominant tenant. The person who holds a dominant estate and therefore benefits from an easement. Cf. servient tenant. [Cases: Easements ⇨ 2.]

holdover tenant. A person who remains in possession of real property after a previous tenancy (esp. one under a lease) expires, thus giving rise to a tenancy at sufferance. — Sometimes shortened to holdover. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 119(2).]

hypothetical tenant. See HYPOTHETICAL TENANT.

illusory tenant. 1. A fictitious person who, as the landlord's alter ego, subleases an apartment to permit the landlord to circumvent rent-law regulations. 2. A tenant whose business is to sublease rent-controlled apartments. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 200.16.]

joint tenant. See joint tenancy under TENANCY.

life tenant. See LIFE TENANT.

particular tenant. A tenant of a limited estate taken out of a fee. See particular estate under ESTATE (1).

prime tenant. A commercial or professional tenant with an established reputation that leases substantial, and usu. the most preferred, space in a commercial development. • A prime tenant is important in securing construction financing and in attracting other desirable tenants.

quasi-tenant. A sublessee that the new tenant or reversioner allows to hold over.

servient tenant. The person who holds a servient estate and is therefore burdened by an easement. Cf. dominant tenant. [Cases: Easements ⇨ 2.]

statutory tenant. A person who is legally entitled to remain on property after the tenancy expires. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 200.20, 278.4(5).]

tenant at sufferance. A tenant who has been in lawful possession of property and wrongfully remains as a holdover after the tenant's interest has expired. • The tenant may become either a tenant at will or a periodic tenant. — Also termed permissive tenant. See tenancy at will; periodic tenancy. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 117, 119.]

tenant by elegit. See ELEGIT.

tenant by the curtesy. A life tenant who receives the estate from his deceased wife by whom he has had legitimate children. • The children hold the remainder interest. See CURTESY. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨ 52–67; Dower and Curtesy ⇨ 5, 11, 113, 114; Wills ⇨ 496, 778–803.]

tenant by the verge. See COPYHOLDER.

tenant for a term. A tenant whose tenancy is for a defined number of years, months, weeks, or days, set when the tenancy is created.

tenant for life. See LIFE TENANT.

tenant in chief. Hist. A person who held land directly of the king. — Also termed tenant in capite. See IN CAPITE.

tenant in common. One of two or more tenants who hold the same land by unity of possession but by separate and distinct titles, with each person having an equal right to possess the whole property but no right of survivorship. See tenancy in common under TENANCY. [Cases: Tenancy in Common ⇨ 1.]

tenant in demesne (di-mayn or di-meen). A feudal tenant who holds land of, and owes services to, a tenant in service. Cf. tenant in service.

tenant in dower. A life tenant who is entitled to hold and use one-third of all the real property owned by her deceased husband. See DOWER. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy ⇨ 113, 114.]

tenant in fee. The owner of land held in fee. — Also termed tenant in fee simple. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨ 5.]

"A tenant in fee simple is [one who owns] lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs forever; generally, absolutely, and simply, without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure, or to the disposition of the law. An estate in fee simple is an estate of inheritance without condition, belonging to the owner, and alienable by him or transmissible to his heirs absolutely and simply; it is an estate or interest in land of one holding absolute and exclusive control and dominion over it, no matter how acquired." 31 C.J.S. Estates § 11, at 27 (1996).

tenant in service. A feudal tenant who grants an estate to another (a tenant in demesne) and is therefore entitled to services from the latter. Cf. tenant in demesne.

undertenant. See SUBLESSEE.

2. One who pays rent for the temporary use and occupation of another's land under a lease or similar arrangement. See LESSEE. 3. Archaic. The defendant in a real action (the plaintiff being called a demandant). See real action under ACTION (4).

tenancy by the curtesy. See CURTESY. tenantable repair. (17c) A repair that will render premises fit for present habitation. See HABITABILITY. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷150(1), 152(3), 160(2).]

tenantlike, adj. In accordance with the rights and obligations of a tenant, as in matters of repairs, waste, etc.

tenant paravail. Archaic. A tenant's tenant; a sublessor.

tenant par la verge. See COPYHOLDER.

tenant-right. English law. A tenant's right, upon termination of the tenancy, to payment for unexhausted improvements made on the holding. • This right is governed by the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1986.

tenantry. A body or group of tenants.

tenant's fixture. See FIXTURE.

tend, vb. 1. To be disposed toward (something). 2. To serve, contribute, or conduce in some degree or way; to have a more or less direct bearing or effect. 3. To be directed or have a tendency to (an end, object, or purpose).

ten-day rule. The doctrine that one who sells goods on credit and then learns that the buyer is insolvent has ten days after the buyer receives the goods to demand their return. • The seller has even longer to demand return if the buyer has made a written representation of solvency to the seller within three months before delivery. [Cases: Sales ↷316(1).]

tender, n. (16c) 1. A valid and sufficient offer of performance; specif., an unconditional offer of money or performance to satisfy a debt or obligation . • The tender may save the tendering party from a penalty for nonpayment or nonperformance or may, if the other party unjustifiably refuses the tender, place the other party in default. Cf. OFFER OF PERFORMANCE; CONSIGNATION. [Cases: Contracts ↷279; Sales ↷153, 185; Vendor and Purchaser ↷148, 170.]

tender of delivery. (1821) A seller's putting and holding conforming goods at the buyer's disposition and giving the buyer any notification reasonably necessary to take delivery. • The manner, time, and place for tender are determined by the agreement and by Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code. [Cases: Sales ↷153.]

tender of performance. (18c) An obligor's demonstration of readiness, willingness, and ability to perform the obligation; esp., a buyer's demonstration of readiness, willingness, and ability to pay the purchase money, or a seller's offer to deliver merchantable title. • An offer to perform is usu. necessary to hold the defaulting party to a contract liable for breach. [Cases: Contracts ↷279.]

2. Something unconditionally offered to satisfy a debt or obligation. [Cases: Tender ↷1, 10.] 3. Contracts. Attempted performance that is frustrated by the act of the party for whose benefit it is to take place. • The performance may take the form of either a tender of goods or services, or a tender of payment. Although this sense is quite similar to sense 1, it differs in making the other party's refusal part of the definition itself.

perfect tender. (18c) A seller's tender that meets the contractual terms entered into with the buyer concerning the quality and specifications of the goods sold. See PERFECT-TENDER RULE. [Cases: Sales ↷153, 177.]

4. An offer or bid put forward for acceptance . [Cases: Public Contracts ↷8.] 5. Something that serves as a means of payment, such as coin, banknotes, or other circulating medium; money <legal tender>. [Cases: Payment ↷10; United States ↷34.] — tender, vb.

tender, plea of. See PLEA OF TENDER.

tender offer. A public offer to buy a minimum number of shares directly from a corporation's shareholders at a fixed price, usu. at a substantial premium over the market price, in an effort to take control of the corporation. — Also termed takeover offer; takeover bid. Cf. public-exchange offer under OFFER. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷52.30–52.50.]

"Broadly speaking, a direct solicitation of a corporation's stockholders to sell their shares to an acquirer is known as a tender offer (because the acquirer is asking the existing stockholders to tender their shares for sale)." Franklin A. Gevurtz, Corporation Law § 7.3, at 673 (2000).

cash tender offer. A tender offer in which the bidder offers to pay cash for the target's shares, as opposed to offering other corporate shares in exchange. • Most tender offers involve cash. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷52.30–52.50.]

creeping tender offer. See creeping acquisition under ACQUISITION.

tender of issue. (1811) Common-law pleading. A form attached to a traverse, by which the traversing party refers the issue to the proper mode of trial. [Cases: Pleading ↷100, 112.]

"[I]t is the object of all pleadings to bring the parties, in the course of their mutual altercations, to an issue that is a single entire point, affirmed on the one side and denied on the other; and it is to effect this object that the above rule was established. There can be no arrival at this point until one or the other of the parties, by the conclusion of his pleading, offers an issue for the acceptance of his opponent, and this offer is called the 'tender of issue.'" Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 254, at 446 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

tender-years doctrine. (1954) Family law. The doctrine holding that custody of very young children (usu. five years of age and younger) should generally be awarded to the mother in a divorce unless she is found to be unfit. • This doctrine has been rejected in most states and replaced by a presumption of joint custody. See MATERNAL-PREFERENCE DOCTRINE; PRIMARY-CARE-GIVER DOCTRINE. [Cases: Child Custody ↷ 457.]

tender-years hearsay exception. See HEARSAY EXCEPTION.

tenement. (14c) 1. Property (esp. land) held by freehold; an estate or holding of land.

dominant tenement. See dominant estate under ESTATE (4).

servient tenement (sər-vee-ənt). See servient estate under ESTATE (4).

2. A house or other building used as a residence. 3. An apartment. 4. TENEMENT HOUSE.

tenement house. (1858) A low-rent apartment building, usu. in poor condition and at best meeting only minimal safety and sanitary conditions. — Sometimes shortened to tenement.

tenendas (tə-nen-das), n. [Law Latin “to be held”] Hist. The charter clause stating the nature of the tenure, so called because of the first word of the clause.

tenendum (tə-nen-dəm). [Latin “to be held”] (17c) A clause in a deed designating the kind of tenure by which the things granted are to be held. — Also termed tenendum clause; (in Scots law) tenendas. See HABENDUM ET TENENDUM. Cf. HABENDUM CLAUSE (1).

10-K. A financial report filed annually with the SEC by a registered corporation. • The report typically includes an audited financial statement, a description of the corporation’s business and financial condition, and summaries of other financial data. — Also termed Form 10-K. Cf. 8-K; 10-Q. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 60.27(6).]

Tennessee Valley Authority. A government-owned corporation, created in 1933, that conducts a unified program of resource development to advance economic growth in the Tennessee Valley region. • The Authority’s activities include flood control, navigation development, electric-power production, fertilizer development, recreation improvement, and forestry-and-wildlife development. Though its power program is financially self-supporting, the Authority’s other programs are financed primarily by congressional appropriations. — Abbr. TVA. [Cases: United States ↷ 53(6.1).]

tenor, n. 1. An exact copy of an instrument. 2. The exact words of a legal document, esp. as cited in a pleading. 3. The meaning of a legal document.

ten-percent bond. See BOND (2).

10-Q. An unaudited financial report filed quarterly with the SEC by a registered corporation. • The 10-Q is less detailed than the 10-K. — Also termed Form 10-Q. Cf. 10-K. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 60.27(6).]

tentative agenda. See proposed agenda under AGENDA.

tentative trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

Tenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified as part of the Bill of Rights in 1791, providing that any powers not constitutionally delegated to the federal government, nor prohibited to the states, are reserved for the states or the people. — Also termed Reserved Power Clause. [Cases: States ↷ 4.16.]

1031 exchange (ten-thər-tee-wən). (1972) 1. An exchange of like-kind property that is exempt from income-tax consequences under IRC (26 USCA) § 1031. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 3184.] Cf. TAX-FREE EXCHANGE. 2. See TAX-FREE EXCHANGE.

tenure (ten-yər), n. (15c) 1. A right, term, or mode of holding lands or tenements in subordination to a superior. • In feudal times, real property was held predominantly as part of a tenure system. 2. A particular feudal mode of holding lands, such as socage, gavelkind, villeinage, and frankalmoign.

“Most of the feudal incidents and consequences of socage tenure were expressly abolished in New York by the act of 1787; and they were [later] wholly and entirely annihilated by the New York Revised Statutes . . . They were also abolished by statute in Connecticut, 1793; and they have never existed, or they have ceased to exist, in all essential respects, in every other state. The only feudal frictions and services to be retained in any part of the United States consist of the feudal principle, that the lands are held of some superior or lord, to whom the obligation of fealty, and to pay a determinate rent, are due. . . . The lord paramount of all socage land was none other than the people of the state, and to them, and them only, the duty of fealty was to be rendered. . . .” 3 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *509-10 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

base tenure. Hist. The holding of property in villeinage rather than by military service or free service. See VILLEINAGE.

copyhold tenure. See COPYHOLD.

lay tenure. Hist. Any tenure not held through religious service, such as a base tenure or a freehold tenure. • The three historical types of lay tenures are knight-service, socage, and serjeanty. See KNIGHT-SERVICE; SOCAGE; SERJEANTY. Cf. tenure by divine service.

military tenure. A tenure that bears some relation to military service, such as knight-service, grand serjeanty, and cornage. — Also termed tenure in chivalry.

spiritual tenure. A tenure that bears some relation to religious exercises, such as frankalmoign and tenure by divine service.

tenure ad furcam et flagellum (ad fər-kəm et flə-jel-əm). [Latin] Hist. Tenure by gallows and whip. • This was the meanest of the servile tenures — the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb.

tenure by divine service. Hist. A tenure obligating the tenant to perform an expressly defined divine service, such as singing a certain number of masses or distributing a fixed sum of alms. Cf. lay tenure.

tenure in chivalry. See military tenure.

villein tenure. See VILLEINAGE.

3. A status afforded to a teacher or professor as a protection against summary dismissal without sufficient cause. • This status has long been considered a cornerstone of academic freedom. [Cases: Colleges and Universities ⇨ 8.1(2); Schools ⇨ 133.6.] 4. More generally, the legal protection of a long-term relationship, such as employment. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ⇨ 60.] — tenurial (ten-yuur-ee-əl), adj.

tenured faculty. The members of a school's teaching staff who hold their positions for life or until retirement, and who may not be discharged except for cause. [Cases: Colleges and Universities ⇨ 8.1(2).]

tenure in capite. See IN CAPITE.

tenure in chivalry. See military tenure under TENURE.

tepid bench. See lukewarm bench under BENCH.

teratogen (tə-rat-ə-jən), n. An agent, usu. a chemical, that causes injury to a fetus or causes any of various birth defects <alcohol is a teratogen to the developing brain of a fetus>. — teratogenic (tə-rat-ə-jen-ik), adj.

terce. Hist. Scots law. A widow's interest in one-third of her husband's real property, if she has not accepted some other special provision. • The couple must have been married at least a year and a day or else have produced a living child together. See DOWER.

terce land. Hist. Scots law. Income-producing real property in which a widow has a pecuniary interest because it was owned by her husband.

tercer. Hist. Scots law. A widow who has an interest in one-third of her husband's real property. — Also spelled tiercear.

tergiversatio (tər-jiv-ər-say-shee-oh), n. [Latin "being reluctant, hanging back"] Roman law. A delay tactic, esp. an accuser's failure to pursue a criminal charge, perhaps by not appearing at the trial. • To withdraw an accusation, it was necessary to obtain the court's permission for an annulment (abolitio). In A.D. 61, a law was passed by which anyone convicted of tergiversatio was subject to a fine. See CALUMNIA. Cf. PRAEVARICATIO. Pl. tergiversationes (tər-jiv-ər-say-shee-oh-nee-z).

term, n. (14c) 1. A word or phrase; esp., an expression that has a fixed meaning in some field <term of art>. 2. A contractual stipulation <the delivery term provided for shipment within 30 days>. See CONDITION (3).

essential term. See fundamental term.

fundamental term. (1873) 1. A contractual provision that must be included for a contract to exist; a contractual provision that specifies an essential purpose of the contract, so that a breach of the provision through inadequate performance makes the performance not only defective but essentially different from what had been promised. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 9(1), 15.] 2. A contractual provision that must be included in the contract to satisfy the statute of frauds. — Also termed essential term; vital term. [Cases: Frauds, Statute of ⇨ 113.]

implied term. (18c) A provision not expressly agreed to by the parties but instead read into the contract by a court as being implicit. • An implied term should not, in theory, contradict the contract's express terms. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 168.]

material term. (1839) A contractual provision dealing with a significant issue such as subject matter, price, payment, quantity, quality, duration, or the work to be done. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 9.]

nonessential term. See nonfundamental term.

nonfundamental term. (1969) Any contractual provision that is not regarded as a fundamental term. — Also termed nonessential term; nonvital term. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 9(1), 15.]

vital term. See fundamental term.

3. (pl.) Provisions that define an agreement's scope; conditions or stipulations <terms of sale>. 4. A fixed period of time; esp., the period for which an estate is granted <term of years>.

attendant term. (1983) A long period (such as 1,000 years) specified as the duration of a mortgage, created to protect the mortgagor's heirs' interest in the land by not taking back title to the land once it is paid for, but rather by assigning title to a trustee who holds the title in trust for the mortgagor and the mortgagor's heirs. • This arrangement gives the heirs another title to the property in case the interest they inherited proves somehow defective. These types of terms have been largely abolished. See tenancy attendant on the inheritance under TENANCY. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 54.]

"The advantage derived from attendant terms is the security which they afford to purchasers and mortgagees. If the bona fide purchaser or mortgagee should happen to take a defective conveyance or mortgage, by which he acquires a mere equitable title, he may, by taking an assignment of an outstanding term to a trustee for himself, cure the defect, so far as to entitle himself to the legal estate during the term, in preference to any creditor, of whose incumbrance he had not notice, at or before the time of completing his contract for the purchase or mortgage. He may use this term to protect his possessions, or to recover it when lost. This protection extends generally as against all estates and incumbrances created intermediately between the raising of the term and the time of the purchase or mortgage; and the outstanding term, so assigned to a trustee for the purchaser or mortgagee, will prevail over the intermediate legal title to the inheritance." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *87 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

satisfied term. (18c) A term of years in land that has satisfied the purpose for which it was created before the term's expiration.

term for deliberating. (1843) The time given a beneficiary to decide whether to accept or reject an inheritance or other succession.

term in gross. (1852) A term that is unattached to an estate or inheritance. See tenancy in gross under TENANCY.

term of years. 1. A fixed period covering a precise number of years. — Also termed tenancy for a term. 2. English law. A fixed period covering less than a year, or a specified number of years and a fraction of a year. • This sense applies under a seminal English statute — the Law of Property Act of 1925. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷70.]

"In effect, 'term of years' seems to mean a term for any period having a fixed and certain duration as a minimum. Thus, in addition to a tenancy for a specified number of years (e.g., 'to X for ninety-nine years'), such tenancies as a yearly tenancy or a weekly tenancy are 'terms of years' within the definition, for there is a minimum duration of a year or a week respectively. But a lease 'for the life of X' cannot exist as a legal estate, and the same, perhaps, applies to tenancies at will or at sufferance (if they are estates at all) for their duration is wholly uncertain." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 74 (6th ed. 1993).

unexpired term. The remainder of a period prescribed by law or by agreement.

5. The period or session during which a court conducts judicial business <the most recent term was busy indeed>. — Also termed (in sense 5) term of court. See SESSION. [Cases: Courts ↷63.]

additional term. A distinct, added term to a previous term. [Cases: Courts ↷64.]

adjourned term. (18c) A continuance of a previous or regular term but not a separate term; the same term prolonged. [Cases: Courts ↷66.]

appearance term. The regular judicial term in which a party is required to appear, usu. the first one after legal service has been made. [Cases: Courts ↷63.]

civil term. The period during which a civil court hears cases.

criminal term. A term of court during which indictments are found and returned, and criminal trials are held. [Cases: Courts ↷63.]

equity term. (1836) The period during which a court tries only equity cases.

general term. A regular term of court — that is, the period during which a court ordinarily sits. — Also termed stated term. [Cases: Courts ↷63.]

regular term. (1820) A term of court begun at the time appointed by law and continued, in the court's discretion, until the court lawfully adjourns. [Cases: Courts ↷63.]

special term. (1803) A term of court scheduled outside the general term, usu. for conducting extraordinary business. [Cases: Courts ↷64.]

stated term. See general term.

term probatory. Eccles. law. 1. The period given to the promoter of an ecclesiastical suit to produce witnesses and prove the case. 2. Hist. The time assigned for taking testimony. — Sometimes termed (in sense 2) probatory term.

term to conclude. Eccles. law. A deadline imposed by the judge for all parties to renounce any further exhibits and allegations.

term to propound all things. Eccles. law. A deadline imposed by the judge for the parties to exhibit all evidence supporting their positions.

6. Hist. English law. One of the four periods in a year during which the courts are in session to conduct judicial business. • Terms came into use in the 13th century, and their dates varied. The four terms — Hilary, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas — were abolished by the Judicature Acts of 1873–1875, and the legal year was divided into sittings and vacations. Terms are still maintained by the Inns of Court to determine various time periods and dates, such as a call to the bar or observance of a Grand Day.

term annuity. See annuity certain under ANNUITY.

term attendant on the inheritance. See tenancy attendant on the inheritance under TENANCY.

term bond. See BOND (3).

term clause. See HABENDUM CLAUSE.

term day. See quarter day under DAY.

term deposit. See time deposit under DEPOSIT.

term fee. English law. A sum that a solicitor may charge a client, and that the client (if successful) may recover from the losing party, payable for each term in which any proceedings following the summons take place.

term for deliberating. See TERM (4). term for years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

terminable interest. See INTEREST (2).

terminable property. See PROPERTY.

terminate, vb. 1. To put an end to; to bring to an end. 2. To end; to conclude.

termination, n. (15c) 1. The act of ending something; EXTINGUISHMENT <termination of the partnership by winding up its affairs>.

termination of conditional contract. The act of putting an end to all unperformed portions of a conditional contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷249.]

termination of employment. The complete severance of an employer–employee relationship. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷40(2), 825.]

2. The end of something in time or existence; conclusion or discontinuance <the insurance policy's termination left the doctor without liability coverage>. — terminate, vb. — terminable, adj.

termination clause. See CANCELLATION CLAUSE.

termination fee. A fee paid if a party voluntarily backs out of a deal to sell or purchase a business or a business's assets. • Termination fees are usu. negotiated and agreed on as part of corporate merger or acquisition negotiations. The fee is designed to protect the prospective buyer and to deter the target corporation from entertaining bids from other parties. — Also termed break-up fee. [Cases: Corporations ↷310(1), 582.]

termination-for-convenience clause. A contractual provision allowing the government to terminate all or a portion of a contract when it chooses. • Among the governmental contracts that often include a termination-for-convenience clause are service contracts, research-and-development contracts, and fixed-price contracts. See 48 CFR § 52.249-1--52.249-2. [Cases: United States ⇨70(35).]

termination hearing. See termination-of-parental-rights hearing under HEARING.

termination of parental rights. (1939) Family law. The legal severing of a parent's rights, privileges, and responsibilities regarding his or her child. • Termination of a parent's rights frees the child to be adopted by someone else. — Abbr. TPR. See termination-of-parental-rights hearing under HEARING; PARENTAL RIGHTS. [Cases: Infants ⇨155.]

termination-of-parental-rights hearing. See HEARING.

termination proceeding. (1939) An administrative action to end a person's or entity's status or relationship. • For example, the International Banking Act authorizes the International Banking Board to institute a termination proceeding when a foreign bank or its U.S. agency or branch is convicted of money-laundering. 12 USCA § 3105(e).

terminer. See OYER AND TERMINER.

term in gross. See TERM (4).

termini habiles (tər-mi-ni hab-ə-leez), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Sufficient grounds. • The phrase usu. referred to the facts necessary to establish a prescriptive right.

termini sanctorum (tər-mi-ni sangk-tor-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The limits of a sanctuary. See SANCTUARY (1).

term interest. Oil & gas. A mineral interest or royalty interest that is not perpetual. • A term interest may be for a fixed term (e.g., for 25 years) or defeasible (e.g., for 25 years and so long thereafter as there is production from the premises). [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨55.]

terminus ad quem (tər-mi-nəs ad kwem). [Law Latin] Hist. The point to which. • The phrase appeared in reference to the point before which some action must be taken.

terminus a quo (tər-mi-nəs ay kwoh). [Law Latin] Hist. The point from which. • The phrase appeared in reference to the point from which something is calculated, or the earliest time at which some action is possible.

term life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

term loan. See LOAN.

term of art. (17c) 1. A word or phrase having a specific, precise meaning in a given specialty, apart from its general meaning in ordinary contexts. • Examples in law include and his heirs and res ipsa loquitur. [Cases: Contracts ⇨152; Statutes ⇨192.] 2. Loosely, a jargonistic word or phrase. — Also termed word of art.

term-of-art canon. (1994) In statutory construction, the principle that if a term has acquired a technical or specialized meaning in a particular context, the term should be presumed to have that meaning if used in that context. [Cases: Statutes ⇨192.]

term of court. See TERM (5).

term of office. The period during which an elected officer or appointee may hold office, perform its functions, and enjoy its privileges and emoluments. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ⇨50–54.]

term of years. 1. See TERM (4). 2. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

termor (tər-mər). (14c) A person who holds lands or tenements for a term of years or for life.

term policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

term probatory. See TERM (5).

terre-tenant (tair ten-ənt). (15c) 1. One who has actual possession of land; the occupant of land. 2. One who has an interest in a judgment debtor's land after the judgment creditor's lien has attached to the land (such as a subsequent purchaser). — Also spelled tertenant (tər-ten-ənt). — Also termed land-tenant. [Cases: Judgment ⇨793, 794.] territorial, adj. Having to do with a particular geographical area.

territorial court. See COURT.

territorialism. (1977) The traditional approach to choice of law, whereby the place of injury or of contract formation determines which state's law will be applied in a case. See CHOICE OF LAW.

territoriality. Int'l law. The principle that a nation has the right of sovereignty within its borders. [Cases: International Law ⇨7.]

“Three maxims formulated by the seventeenth-century Dutch scholar Ulrich Huber undergird the modern concept of territoriality: (1) a state's laws have force only within the state's boundaries; (2) anyone found within the state's boundaries is subject to the state's authority; and (3) comity will discipline sovereign exercises of authority so that the territorial effect of each state's laws is respected.” Paul Goldstein, International Copyright: Principles, Law, and Practice 64 (2001).

territorial jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

territorial law. The law that applies to all persons within a given territory regardless of their citizenship or nationality. Cf. PERSONAL LAW.

"[T]he expression 'territorial law' . . . is not confined to the positive rules that regulate acts and events occurring within the jurisdiction, but includes also rules for the choice of law. English rules for the choice of law are part of the law of England and when a court, for instance, tests the substantial validity of a contract made by two foreigners in Paris by reference to French law, it applies a rule imposed by the English sovereign and it may accurately be described as putting into force part of the territorial law of England." G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 32 (6th ed. 1961).

territorial property. Land and water over which a state has jurisdiction and control, whether the legal title is held by the state or by a private individual or entity. • Lakes and waters wholly within a state are generally its property, as is the marginal sea within the three-mile limit, but bays and gulfs are not always recognized as state property. [Cases: States ⇨ 11.]

territorial sea. See territorial waters under WATER.

territorial waters. See WATER.

territory, n. (14c) 1. A geographical area included within a particular government's jurisdiction; the portion of the earth's surface that is in a state's exclusive possession and control. Cf. INSULAR AREA. [Cases: International Law ⇨ 5.]

non-self-governing territory. Int'l law. A territory that is governed by another country. • These types of territories are rarely allowed representation in the governing country's legislature.

trust territory. Int'l law. A territory to which the United Nations' international trusteeship system formerly applied; a territory once administered by the United Nations or a member state for the political, economic, educational, and social advancement of its inhabitants. • All territories that were subject to this system either became independent nations or opted to become part of another nation.

2. A part of the United States not included within any state but organized with a separate legislature (such as Guam and the U.S. Virgin Islands). Cf. COMMONWEALTH (2); DEPENDENCY (1). [Cases: Territories ⇨ 7.] — territorial, adj.

"The United States has had territories from its inception. The Northwest Territory, along with the thirteen original states, was a part of the nation when the constitution was ratified. The original U.S. constitution expressly granted Congress the power to govern territories. Before the Civil War all of the territories were on the North American continent and contiguous with the states or the other territories. After the Civil War with the purchase of Alaska in 1867 (called 'Seward's Folly' or 'Seward's Icebox' by detractors) came the United States' first acquisition of non-contiguous territory. Alaska did, however, have certain basics in common with earlier U.S. territories. Alaska was on the North American continent and sparsely populated. . . . In the latter part of the 19th century, the U.S. became interested in various islands around the world." Stanley K. Laughlin Jr., The Law of United States Territories and Affiliated Jurisdictions § 3.1, at 25-26 (1995).

territory of a judge. (18c) The territorial jurisdiction of a particular court. See JURISDICTION (3). [Cases: Courts ⇨ 29, 171; Judges ⇨ 30.]

terrorem clause. See NO-CONTEST CLAUSE.

terrorism, n. (18c) The use or threat of violence to intimidate or cause panic, esp. as a means of affecting political conduct. See 18 USCA § 2331. See also terroristic threat under THREAT; terrorism insurance under INSURANCE. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ⇨ 25.] — terrorist, adj. & n.

bioterrorism. Terrorism involving the intentional release of harmful biological agents, such as bacteria or viruses, into the air, food, or water supply, esp. of humans. — Also termed biological terrorism.

cyberterrorism. Terrorism committed by using a computer to make unlawful attacks and threats of attack against computers, networks, and electronically stored information, and actually causing the target to fear or experience harm.

domestic terrorism. 1. Terrorism that occurs primarily within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. 18 USCA § 2331(5). 2. Terrorism that is carried out against one's own government or fellow citizens. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨ 50.]

ecoterrorism. Terrorism related to environmental issues or animal rights. — Also termed enviroterrorism; ecological terrorism; environmental terrorism; ecosabotage; ecovandalism.

international terrorism. Terrorism that occurs primarily outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, or that transcends national boundaries by the means in which it is carried out, the people it is intended to intimidate, or the place where the perpetrators operate or seek asylum. 18 USCA § 2331(1). Cf. state-sponsored terrorism. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨ 50.]

state-sponsored terrorism. 1. International terrorism supported by a sovereign government to pursue strategic and political objectives. 2. See state terrorism (1). Cf. international terrorism.

state terrorism. 1. Terrorism practiced by a sovereign government, esp. against its own people. • Under international legal principles of sovereignty, a government's conduct that has effects only within its borders is generally not subject to interference from other nations. 2. See state-sponsored terrorism (1).

terrorism insurance. See INSURANCE.

terroristic threat. See THREAT.

terrorizing, n. Family law. A parent's or caregiver's act of orally assaulting, bullying, or frightening a child, or causing the child to believe that the world is a hostile place.

testamenti factio (tes-tə-men-ti fak-shee-oh). [Latin "right to make a testament"] Roman law. 1. Broadly, the capacity to take part in a will, as testator, heir, or witness. 2. The capacity to make a will, open to any citizen, male or female, sui juris, and over puberty. • This term is sometimes known as "active" testamenti factio or testamenti factio activa, though the latter phrase was not known to the Roman law. 3. The capacity to receive property by will. • Junian Latini and peregrini did not have this capacity. It is also known as "passive" testamenti factio or testamenti factio passiva, though the latter phrase was (like testamenti factio activa) unknown to the Roman law. 4. The capacity to witness a will. • Women did not have this capacity. — Also termed factio testamenti.

"Under the civil law, this was a power . . . vested only in the Roman citizen The testamenti factio was necessary to any participation whatever in a testament. Without it, no one could make a will, or take a legacy, or even be a witness to the execution of a will In Scotch law, this phrase can only signify the power of making a will, as any one may be a beneficiary under another's settlement." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 216–17 (4th ed. 1894).

testamentum (tes-tə-men-təm), n. [Latin] Roman law. A will. • In early and classical law, the mancipatory will was standard. It was still used in the Later Empire but the in A.D. 446, the holographic will was accepted in the Western Empire. A will could also be made by registration on the court acta. See holographic will, mancipatory will under WILL.

testamentum calatis comitiis (kə-lay-tis kə-mish-ee-is). [Latin "will made before the comitia curiata"] Roman law. In early Rome, a will made before the comitia curiata, having an effect comparable to adrogation. • The comitia curiata was known as the comitia calata when it met twice a year for the purpose of making wills. See comitia curiata under COMITIA.

testamentum holografum (tes-tə-men-təm hol-ə-graf-əm). [Latin] See holographic will under WILL.

testamentum in procinctu (in prə-singkt-[y]oo). [Latin "will made before the army"] Roman law. A will made by a soldier before a fellow soldiers while preparing for battle.

testamentum militum (tes-tə-men-təm mil-ə-təm). [Latin] See soldier's will under WILL.

testamentum tripartitum (tri-pər-ti-təm). [Latin "tripartite will"] Roman law. A will made without interruption, with seven witnesses to seal it, and signed by the testator. • This form of will was valid in Justinian's law. It was called "tripartite" because the authority for various parts of it derived from three sources: the civil law (requiring that the will be made at one and the same time before witnesses); the praetor's edict (requiring that there be seven witnesses and that they must seal it); and imperial constitutions (requiring that the testator must sign at the end).

testate (tes-tayt), adj. (15c) Having left a will at death <she died testate>. Cf. INTESTATE. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 1.]

testate, n. See TESTATOR.

testate succession. See SUCCESSION (2).

testatio mentis (tes-tay-shee-oh men-tis), n. [Latin] Hist. An expression of a testator's mind; a testament.

testation (te-stay-shən). 1. The disposal of property by will; the power to dispose of property by will. 2. Archaic. Attestation; a witnessing. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 1.]

testator (tes-tay-tər also te-stay-tər). (14c) A person who has made a will; esp., a person who dies leaving a will. • Because this term is usu. interpreted as applying to both sexes, testatrix has become archaic. — Also termed testate. Cf. INTESTATE. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 21–55.]

testatrix (te-stay-triks or tes-tə-triks). Archaic. A female testator. • In modern usage, a person who leaves a will is called a testator, regardless of sex. Pl. testatrixes, testatrices.

testatum (tes-tay-təm). [Latin "attested"] 1. A writ issued in a county where a defendant or a defendant's property is located when venue lies in another county. • This writ, when issued after a ground writ, allowed the seizure of the defendant or the defendant's property in another county. — Also termed writ of testatum fieri facias; writ fi. fa.; testatum bill; testatum writ; latitat (lat-ə-tat). Cf. ground writ under WRIT.

"But if the defendant had removed into another county, the next process the plaintiff might sue out against him was a testatum bill, directed to the sheriff thereof, which soon gained the name of a latitat, from that word being within it." 1 George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas xxxv (3d ed. 1787).

2. The operative part of a deed by which the seller acknowledges the amount and receipt of the purchase money, whether or not the buyer has actually paid any money to the seller. — Also termed witnessing part.

testatum clause. See TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE.

testatus (tes-tay-təs), n. [Latin] Civil law. See TESTATOR.

test case. See CASE.

teste (tes-tee). [Latin teste meipso "I myself being a witness"] 1. In drafting, the clause that states the name of a witness and evidences the act of witnessing. — Also termed teste of process; teste of writ. 2. The final clause in a royal writ naming the person who authorizes the affixing of the king's seal. • The clause generally contains the place and date of the sealing. When the monarch authenticates the sealing, the clause begins with the phrase teste meipso ("by my own witness"). Otherwise, the authenticator states his or her name and office.

teste meipso. See TESTE (2).

testifier. One who testifies; WITNESS. — Also termed (archaically) testificator (tes-tə-fi-kay-tər).

testify, vb. (14c) 1. To give evidence as a witness <she testified that the Ford Bronco was at the defendant's home at the critical time>. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 224.] 2. (Of a person or thing) to bear witness <the incomplete log entries testified to his sloppiness>.

testifying expert. See EXPERT.

testimonial evidence. 1. See TESTIMONY. 2. See EVIDENCE.

testimonial immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

testimonial incapacity. See INCAPACITY.

testimonial privilege. See PRIVILEGE (1).

testimonial proof. See PROOF.

testimonium clause. (1823) A provision at the end of an instrument (esp. a will) reciting the date when the instrument was signed, by whom it was signed, and in what capacity. • This clause traditionally begins with the phrase "In witness whereof." — Also termed testatum clause; witness clause. Cf. ATTESTATION CLAUSE. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 111(2).]

testimony, n. (14c) Evidence that a competent witness under oath or affirmation gives at trial or in an affidavit or deposition. — Also termed testimonial evidence; personal evidence. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2011; Trial ⇨ 33; Witnesses ⇨ 224.] — testimonial, adj.

affirmative testimony. (1806) Testimony about whether something occurred or did not occur, based on what the witness saw or heard at the time and place in question. — Also termed positive testimony; (formerly) statement of fact. See direct evidence under EVIDENCE. [Cases: Evidence ⇨ 586.]

cumulative testimony. (1818) Identical or similar testimony by more than one witness, and usu. by several, offered by a party usu. to impress the jury with the apparent weight of proof on that party's side. • The trial court typically limits cumulative testimony. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 675; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2011; Trial ⇨ 56.]

dropsy testimony. (1970) Slang. A police officer's false testimony that a fleeing suspect dropped an illegal substance that was then confiscated by the police and used as probable cause for arresting the suspect. •

Dropsy testimony is sometimes given when an arrest has been made without probable cause, as when illegal substances have been found through an improper search.

"Before [Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961)], the policeman typically testified that he had stopped the defendant for little or no reason, searched him, and found narcotics on his person. This had the ring of truth. It was an illegal search (not based upon 'probable cause'), but the evidence was admissible because Mapp had not yet been decided. Since it made no difference, the policeman testified truthfully. After, the decision in Mapp it made a great deal of difference. [¶] For the first few months, New York policemen continued to tell the truth about the circumstances of their searches, with the result that evidence was suppressed. Then the police made the great discovery that if the defendant drops the narcotics on the ground, after which the policeman arrests him, then the search is reasonable and the evidence is admissible. Spend a few hours in the New York City Criminal Court nowadays and you will hear case after case in which a policeman testifies that the defendant dropped the narcotics on the ground whereupon the policeman arrested him. [¶] Usually the very language of the testimony is identical from one case to another. This is now known among defense lawyers and prosecutors as 'dropsy' testimony. The judge has no reason to disbelieve it in any particular case, and of course the judge must decide each case on its own evidence, without regard to the testimony in other cases. Surely, though, not in every case was the defendant unlucky enough to drop his narcotics." Irving Younger, "The Perjury Routine," The Nation, May 3, 1967, at 596-97.

expert testimony. See expert evidence under EVIDENCE.

false testimony. (16c) Testimony that is untrue. • This term is broader than perjury, which has a state-of-mind element. Unlike perjury, false testimony does not denote a crime. — Also termed false evidence.

interpreted testimony. Testimony translated because the witness cannot communicate in the language of the tribunal. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 230.]

lay opinion testimony. (1942) Evidence given by a witness who is not qualified as an expert but who testifies to opinions or inferences. • In federal court, the admissibility of this testimony is limited to opinions or inferences that are rationally based on the witness's perception and that will be helpful to a clear understanding of the witness's testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. Fed. R. Evid. 701. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 449.1-467; Evidence ⇨ 470-503.]

mediate testimony. See secondary evidence under EVIDENCE.

negative testimony. See negative evidence under EVIDENCE.

nonverbal testimony. (1922) A photograph, drawing, map, chart, or other depiction used to aid a witness in testifying. • The witness need not have made it, but it must accurately represent something that the witness saw. See demonstrative evidence under EVIDENCE. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 437, 438; Evidence ⇨ 358, 359.]

opinion testimony. (1925) Testimony based on one's belief or idea rather than on direct knowledge of the facts at issue. • Opinion testimony from either a lay witness or an expert witness may be allowed in evidence under certain conditions. See opinion evidence under EVIDENCE. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 448-494; Evidence ⇨ 470-574.]

positive testimony. See affirmative testimony.

testimony de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay). (1805) Testimony taken because it is in danger of being lost before it can be given at a trial or hearing, usu. because of the impending death or departure of the witness. • Such testimony is taken in aid of a pending case, while testimony taken under a bill to perpetuate testimony is taken in anticipation of future litigation. See deposition de bene esse under DEPOSITION. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1291; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 61.]

written testimony. (17c) 1. Testimony given out of court by deposition or affidavit. • The recorded writing, signed by the witness, is considered testimony. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1432; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 201.] 2. In some administrative agencies and courts, direct narrative testimony that is reduced to writing, to which the witness swears at a hearing or trial before cross-examination takes place in the traditional way. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨ 461; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2011; Trial ⇨ 33.]

testing clause. Scots law. The clause at the end of a formal written instrument or deed by which it is authenticated according to the forms of law. • Traditionally, the clause states the name and address of the writer, the number of pages in the instrument, any alterations or erasures, the names and addresses of the witnesses, the name and address of the person who penned the instrument, and the date and place of signing.

testis. [Latin] Hist. A witness. Pl. testes.

test oath. See oath of allegiance under OATH.

test paper. A writing that has been proved genuine and submitted to a jury as a standard by which to determine the authenticity of other writings. • The court decides the test paper's authenticity as a matter of law before it is used by the jury. Direct evidence, such as a witness to the writing's creation or an admission by the party, is preferred, but strong circumstantial evidence is usu. acceptable. In Pennsylvania, a paper or instrument shown to the jury as evidence is still called a test paper (sometimes written test-paper).

Texas ballot. See BALLOT (4).

textbook digest. (1922) A legal text whose aim is to set forth the law of a subject in condensed form, with little or no criticism or discussion of the authorities cited, and no serious attempt to explain or reconcile apparently conflicting decisions.

textual citation. See CITATION (4).

textualism. See strict constructionism under CONSTRUCTIONISM.

thalweg (tahl-vayk or -veg). (1831) 1. A line following the lowest part of a (usu. submerged) valley. 2. The middle of the primary navigable channel of a waterway, constituting the boundary between states. — Also spelled talweg. — Also termed midway. [Cases: States ↷ 12.1.]

live thalweg. The part of a river channel that is most followed, usu. at the middle of the principal channel. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 466 U.S. 96, 104 S.Ct. 1645 (1984).

Thayer presumption. (1958) A presumption that allows the party against whom the presumption operates to come forward with evidence to rebut the presumption, but that does not shift the burden of proof to that party. See James B. Thayer, A Preliminary Treatise on Evidence 31–44 (1898). • Most presumptions that arise in civil trials in federal court are interpreted in this way. Fed. R. Evid. 301. Cf. MORGAN PRESUMPTION. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 324; Evidence ↷ 85, 89.]

The Federalist. See FEDERALIST PAPERS.

theft, n. (bef. 12c) 1. The felonious taking and removing of another's personal property with the intent of depriving the true owner of it; larceny. [Cases: Larceny ↷ 1.] 2. Broadly, any act or instance of stealing, including larceny, burglary, embezzlement, and false pretenses. • Many modern penal codes have consolidated such property offenses under the name "theft." — Also termed (in Latin) crimen furti. See LARCENY. Cf. ROBBERY.

"[T]he distinctions between larceny, embezzlement and false pretenses serve no useful purpose in the criminal law but are useless handicaps from the standpoint of the administration of criminal justice. One solution has been to combine all three in one section of the code under the name of 'larceny.' This has one disadvantage, however, because it frequently becomes necessary to add a modifier to make clear whether the reference is to common-law larceny or to statutory larceny. To avoid this difficulty some states have employed another word to designate a statutory offense made up of a combination of larceny, embezzlement, and false pretenses. And the word used for this purpose is 'theft.' 'Theft' is not the name of any common-law offense. At times it has been employed as a synonym of 'larceny,' but for the most part has been regarded as broader in its general scope. Under such a statute it is not necessary for the indictment charging theft to specify whether the offense is larceny, embezzlement or false pretenses." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 389–90 (3d ed. 1982).

cybertheft. See CYBERTHEFT.

identity theft. See IDENTITY THEFT.

petty theft. A theft of a small quantity of cash or of low-value goods or services. • This offense is usu. a misdemeanor. [Cases: Larceny ↷ 23.]

theft by deception. (1930) The use of trickery to obtain another's property, esp. by (1) creating or reinforcing a false impression (as about value), (2) preventing one from obtaining information that would affect one's judgment about a transaction, or (3) failing to disclose, in a property transfer, a known lien or other legal impediment. Model Penal Code § 223. [Cases: False Pretenses ↷ 1.]

theft by extortion. (1969) Larceny in which the perpetrator obtains property by threatening to (1) inflict bodily harm on anyone or commit any other criminal offense, (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense, (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or impair one's credit or business reputation, (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action, (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott, or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act, (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense, or (7) inflict any other harm that would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code § 223.4. — Also termed larceny by extortion. See EXTORTION. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ↷ 25.1.]

theft by false pretext. The use of a false pretext to obtain another's property. [Cases: False Pretenses ↷ 1.]

theft of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. (1973) Larceny in which one obtains control of property the person knows to be lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake (esp. in the amount of property or identity of recipient) and fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to the rightful owner. Model Penal Code § 223.5. — Also termed larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. [Cases: Larceny ↷ 10.]

theft of services. (1946) The act of obtaining services from another by deception, threat, coercion, stealth, mechanical tampering, or using a false token or device. See Model Penal Code § 223.7.

theftbote. (theft-boht) See BOTE (2).

theftuous (thef-choo-əs), adj. 1. (Of an act) characterized by theft. 2. (Of a person) given to stealing. — Also spelled theftous.

thence, adv. (13c) 1. From that place; from that time. • In surveying, and in describing land by courses and distances, this word, preceding each course given, implies that the following course is continuous with the one before it <south 240 feet to an iron post, thence west 59 feet>. 2. On that account; therefore.

thence down the river. (16c) With the meanders of a river. • This phrase appears in the field notes of patent surveyors, indicating that the survey follows a meandering river unless evidence shows that the meander line as written was where the surveyor in fact ran it. Meander lines show the general course of the river and are used in estimating acreage, but are not necessarily boundary lines. See MEANDER LINE. [Cases: Boundaries ↷ 12.]

theocracy (thee-ok-rə-see). (17c) 1. Government of a state by those who are believed to be or represent that they are acting under the immediate direction of God or some other divinity. 2. A state in which power is exercised by ecclesiastics.

Theodosian Code (thee-ə-doh-shən). Roman law. A compilation of imperial enactments prepared at the direction of the emperor Theodosius II and published in A.D. 438. • The Theodosian Code replaced all other imperial legislation from the time of Constantine I (A.D. 306–337), and remained the basis of Roman law until it was superseded by the first Justinian Code in A.D. 529. — Also termed (in Latin) Codex Theodosianus (koh-deks thee-ə-doh-shee-ay-nəs).

"As a literary work the Theodosian Code has a dismal reputation . . . Some quaestors possessed an elegant, powerful, or agreeably ornate style. . . . Against these may be set others with literary pretensions whose prose is ponderous or marred by excessive alliteration, assonance, pleonasm, or fondness for technical terms, or whose compositions are in other ways inept." Tony Honoré, Law in the Crisis of the Empire 379–455 AD 21 (1998).

theolonia. See DE THEOLONIO.

theory of law. The legal premise or set of principles on which a case rests.

theory-of-pleading doctrine. (1956) The principle — now outmoded — that one must prove a case exactly as pleaded. • Various modern codes and rules of civil procedure have abolished this strict pleading-and-proof requirement. For example, Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 allows amendment of pleadings to conform to the evidence. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨881; Pleading ⇨370.]

theory of the case. (1800) A comprehensive and orderly mental arrangement of principles and facts, conceived and constructed for the purpose of securing a judgment or decree of a court in favor of a litigant; the particular line of reasoning of either party to a suit, the purpose being to bring together certain facts of the case in a logical sequence and to correlate them in a way that produces in the decision-maker's mind a definite result or conclusion favored by the advocate. See CAUSE OF ACTION (1).

therapeutic abortion. See ABORTION.

therapeutic jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

therapeutic relief. See RELIEF.

thing. (bef. 12c) 1. The subject matter of a right, whether it is a material object or not; any subject matter of ownership within the sphere of proprietary or valuable rights. • Things are divided into three categories: (1) things real or immovable, such as land, tenements, and hereditaments, (2) things personal or movable, such as goods and chattels, and (3) things having both real and personal characteristics, such as a title deed and a tenancy for a term. The civil law divided things into corporeal (tangi possunt) and incorporeal (tangi non possunt). La. Civ. Code art. 461. [Cases: Property ◊ 1.] accessory thing. A thing that stands in a dependency relationship with another thing (the principal thing).

• An accessory thing ordinarily serves the economic or other purpose of the principal thing and shares its legal fate in case of transfer or encumbrance.

corporeal thing. (17c) The subject matter of corporeal ownership; a material object. — Also termed res corporales; tangible thing.

immovable thing. See IMMOVABLE.

incorporeal thing. (17c) The subject matter of incorporeal ownership; any proprietary right apart from the right of full dominion over a material object. — Also termed res incorporales; intangible thing.

movable thing. See MOVABLE (1).

real things. See REAL THINGS.

thin-skull rule. See EGGHELL-SKULL RULE.

Third Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified as part of the Bill of Rights in 1791, prohibiting the quartering of soldiers in private homes except during wartime.

third cousin. See COUSIN.

third degree, n. (1900) The process of extracting a confession or information from a suspect or prisoner by prolonged questioning, the use of threats, or physical torture <the police gave the suspect the third degree>.

third-degree instruction. See ALLEN CHARGE.

third-degree murder. See MURDER.

third estate. Property. A landowner's right to have the land supported below the surface against subsidence when it is undermined by tunnels, such as those made for mining operations. • The phrase appears most frequently in Pennsylvania, where the common law traditionally recognizes three estates in land: the surface (first or surface estate), the minerals (second or mineral estate), and an estate in the support of the surface (the third estate). The third estate originated with the common-law duty of miners to support the surface estate. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ◊ 55(6).]

third opposition. Civil law. A species of intervention, usu. in a real-property case, in which the third party asserts a claim of ownership or other real right to seized property, and the claim does not depend on the outcome of the original suit between the plaintiff and the defendant. La. Code Civ. Proc. art. 1092. See, e.g., Atkins v. Smith, 15 So. 2d 855 (La. 1943). See INTERVENTION (1).

third party, n. (1818) A person who is not a party to a lawsuit, agreement, or other transaction but who is usu. somehow implicated in it; someone other than the principal parties. — Also termed outside party; third person. See PARTY. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ◊ 281; Parties ◊ 49.] — third-party, adj.

third-party, vb. (1965) To bring (a person or entity) into litigation as a third-party defendant <seeking indemnity, the defendant third-partied the surety>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ◊ 281; Parties ◊ 49.]

third-party action. See ACTION (4).

third-party beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

third-party-beneficiary contract. See CONTRACT.

third-party business-buyout agreement. See AGREEMENT.

third-party check. (1904) A check that the payee indorses to another party — for example, a customer check that the payee indorses to a supplier. • A person who takes a third-party check in good faith and without notice of a security interest can be a holder in due course.

third-party complaint. See COMPLAINT.

third-party consent. (1942) A person's agreement to official action (such as a search of premises) that affects another person's rights or interests. • To be effective for a search, third-party consent must be based on the consenting person's common authority over the place to be searched or the items to be inspected. See COMMON-AUTHORITY RULE. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ↻173.]

third-party defendant. (1927) A party brought into a lawsuit by the original defendant. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻281; Parties ↻49.]

third-party equity lease. See leveraged lease under LEASE.

third-party insurance. See liability insurance under INSURANCE.

third-party logistical service provider. See FREIGHT FORWARDER. — Abbr. TPL.

third-party plaintiff. (1857) A defendant who files a pleading in an effort to bring a third party into the lawsuit. See third-party complaint under COMPLAINT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻281; Parties ↻49.]

third-party practice. See IMPLEADER.

third-party record-custodian summons. See John Doe summons under SUMMONS.

third-party standing. See STANDING.

third person. See THIRD PARTY.

third possessor. Civil law. A person who acquires mortgaged property but is not personally bound by the obligation secured by the mortgage. [Cases: Mortgages ↻277.]

Third World. Int'l law. 1. DEVELOPING COUNTRY. 2. The group of nations (esp. in Africa and Asia) not aligned with major powers, whether Western democracies (i.e., the First — or Free — World) or countries that were formerly part of the Soviet bloc (i.e., the Second World).
 • Although Third World nations are often underdeveloped, the term Third World may denote only their political rather than their economic status.

Third World country. See DEVELOPING COUNTRY.

Thirteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1865, that abolished slavery and involuntary servitude. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↻1101.]

"The thirteenth amendment is fairly unique in two respects. First, it contains an absolute bar to the existence of slavery or involuntary servitude; there is no requirement of 'state action.' Thus it is applicable to individuals as well as states Secondly, like the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, it contains an enforcement clause, enabling Congress to pass all necessary legislation." John E. Nowak & Ronald D. Rotunda, Constitutional Law § 15.6, at 918 (4th ed. 1991).

30(b)(6) deposition. See DEPOSITION.

thirty-day letter. (1929) A letter that accompanies a revenue agent's report issued as a result of an Internal Revenue Service audit or the rejection of a taxpayer's claim for refund and that outlines the taxpayer's appeal procedure before the Internal Revenue Service. • If the taxpayer does not request any such procedure within the 30-day period, the IRS will issue a statutory notice of deficiency. Cf. NINETY-DAY LETTER. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻4542.1, 5044.]

threat, n. (bef. 12c) 1. A communicated intent to inflict harm or loss on another or on another's property, esp. one that might diminish a person's freedom to act voluntarily or with lawful consent . [Cases: Extortion and Threats ↻25.1.]

terroristic threat. (1959) A threat to commit any crime of violence with the purpose of (1) terrorizing another, (2) causing the evacuation of a building, place of assembly, or facility of public transportation, (3) causing serious public inconvenience, or (4) recklessly disregarding the risk of causing such terror or inconvenience. Model Penal Code § 211. See TERRORISM. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ↻25.1.]

2. An indication of an approaching menace <the threat of bankruptcy>. 3. A person or thing that might well cause harm <Mrs. Harrington testified that she had never viewed her husband as a threat>. — threaten, vb. — threatening, adj.

three-judge court. See COURT.

three-mile limit. The distance of one marine league or three miles offshore, usu. recognized as the limit of territorial jurisdiction. [Cases: International Law ↻5.]

three-step test. Copyright. An analysis of an infringement defense under TRIPs and the Berne Convention, looking at whether the defendant's use of a protected work (1) is inherently limited to special cases, (2) did not conflict with the owner's normal exploitation of the work, and (3) did not unreasonably prejudice the legitimate interests of the owner. • The test is analogous to the analysis under the fair-use doctrine in U.S. law.

three-strikes law. (1984) Slang. A statute prescribing an enhanced sentence, esp. life imprisonment, for a repeat offender's third felony conviction. • About half the states have enacted a statute of this kind. — Also termed three-strikes-and-you're-out law. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1200-1219.]

three wicked sisters. Slang. The three doctrines — contributory negligence, the fellow-servant rule, and assumption of the risk — used by 19th-century courts to deny recovery to workers injured on the job.

"These three common law defenses, contributory negligence, fellow servant rule, and assumption of the risk, became known as the 'three wicked sisters,' because of their preclusive effect on the ability of injured workers to recover. . . . By precluding application of the traditional respondeat superior concept for acts of fellow servants and by presuming that workers assumed the risks associated with their employment, courts made it extremely difficult for employees to recover from their employers for the increasing number of work-related injuries. . . . By the late 1800s, courts began to recognize the harsh results generated by rote application of the fellow servant, assumption of the risk, and contributory negligence doctrines." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 7.2, at 404 (1994).

through bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

through lot. A lot that abuts a street at each end.

through rate. The total shipping cost when two or more carriers are involved. • The carriers agree in advance on a through rate, which is typically lower than the sum of the separate rates. [Cases: Carriers ⇨ 12(2), 29.]

throwaway, n. Slang. 1. An unemancipated minor whose parent or caregiver has forced him or her to leave home. 2. A runaway whose parent or caregiver refuses to allow him or her to return home. Cf. RUNAWAY.

throwback rule. (1972) Tax. 1. In the taxation of trusts, a rule requiring that an amount distributed in any tax year that exceeds the year's distributable net income must be treated as if it had been distributed in the preceding year. • The beneficiary is taxed in the current year although the computation is made as if the excess had been distributed in the previous year. If the trust did not have undistributed accumulated income in the preceding year, the amount of the throwback is tested against each of the preceding years. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 665–668. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4019.] 2. A taxation rule requiring a sale that would otherwise be exempt from state income tax (because the state to which the sale would be assigned for apportionment purposes does not have an income tax, even though the seller's state does) to be attributed to the seller's state and thus subjected to a state-level tax. • This rule applies only if the seller's state has adopted a throwback rule.

throw out, vb. (1817) To dismiss (a claim or lawsuit).

thrust-upon conflict. See CONFLICT OF INTEREST.

thumbprint. See FINGERPRINT.

ticket, n. 1. A certificate indicating that the person to whom it is issued, or the holder, is entitled to some right or privilege <she bought a bus ticket for Miami>. 2. CITATION (2) <he got a speeding ticket last week>. 3. BALLOT (2) <they all voted a straight-party ticket>.

ticket of leave. Archaic. The English equivalent of parole.

ticket-of-leave man. A convict who has obtained a ticket of leave.

ticket speculator. A person who buys tickets and then resells them for more than their face value; in slang, a scalper. See SCALPER (1).

tidal, adj. Affected by or having tides. • For a river to be "tidal" at a given spot, the water need not necessarily be salt, but the spot must be one where the tide, in the ordinary and regular course of things, flows and refluxes.

tide. The rising and falling of seawater that is produced by the attraction of the sun and moon, uninfluenced by special winds, seasons, or other circumstances that create meteorological and atmospheric meteorological tides; the ebb and flow of the sea. • Tides are used to measure a shore's upland boundary.

lower low tide. The lowest point of the daily tide.

mean high tide. The average of all high tides, esp. over a period of 18.6 years. — Also termed ordinary high tide.

mean lower low tide. The average of lower low tides over a fixed period.

mean low tide. The average of all low tides — both low and lower low — over a fixed period.

neap tide (neep). A tide, either high tide or low tide, that is lower than average because it occurs during the first or last quarter of the moon, when the sun's attraction partly counteracts the moon's.

ordinary high tide. See mean high tide.

spring tide. A tide, either high tide or low tide, that is higher than average because it occurs during the new moon and full moon.

tideland. (18c) Land between the lines of the ordinary high and low tides, covered and uncovered successively by the ebb and flow of those tides; land covered and uncovered by the ordinary tides. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨ 36(3).]

tidesman. English law. A customhouse officer appointed to watch or attend upon ships until the customs are paid. • A tidesman boards a ship at its arrival in the mouth of the Thames and comes up with the tide. See CUSTOMHOUSE.

tidewater. (18c) Water that falls and rises with the ebb and flow of the tide. • The term is not usu. applied to the open sea, but to coves, bays, and rivers.

tideway. (18c) Land between high- and low-water marks. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨ 36(3).]

tie, n. 1. An equal number of votes for two candidates in an election. [Cases: Elections ⇨ 238.] 2. An equal number of votes cast for and against a particular measure by a legislative or deliberative body. • In the U.S. Senate, the Vice President has the deciding vote in the event of a tie. U.S. Const. art. I, § 3. See tie vote under VOTE.

tied product. See TYING ARRANGEMENT (1).

tied service. See TYING ARRANGEMENT (1).

tie-in arrangement. See TYING ARRANGEMENT.

tiempo inhabil. Hist. Louisiana law. The time at which a person becomes insolvent.

tiercear. See TERCER.

tiered partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

tie vote. See VOTE (3).

TIF. abbr. TAX-INCREMENT FINANCING.

tight, adj. Slang. (Of a note, bond, mortgage, lease, etc.) characterized by summary and stringent clauses providing the creditor's remedies in case of default.

TILA. abbr. Truth in Lending Act. See CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷32.]

tillage (til-ij), n. (15c) A place tilled or cultivated; land under cultivation as opposed to land lying fallow or in pasture.

till-tapping. (1893) Slang. Theft of money from a cash register.

timber easement. See EASEMENT.

timber lease. See LEASE.

timber rights. See timber easement under EASEMENT.

time. (bef. 12c) 1. A measure of duration. 2. A point in or period of duration at or during which something is alleged to have occurred. 3. Slang. A convicted criminal's period of incarceration.

dead time. (1909) Time that does not count for a particular purpose, such as time not included in calculating an employee's wages or time not credited toward a prisoner's sentence. • The time during which a prisoner has escaped, for example, is not credited toward the prisoner's sentence. — Also termed nonrun time. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷2311; Sentencing and Punishment ↷1155–1182.]

earned time. A credit toward a sentence reduction awarded to a prisoner who takes part in activities designed to lessen the chances that the prisoner will commit a crime after release from prison. • Earned time, which is usu. awarded for taking educational or vocational courses, working, or participating in certain other productive activities, is distinct from good time, which is awarded simply for refraining from misconduct. Cf. good time. [Cases: Prisons ↷243.]

flat time. (1943) A prison term that is to be served without the benefit of time-reduction allowances for good behavior and the like.

good time. (1886) The credit awarded to a prisoner for good conduct, which can reduce the duration of the prisoner's sentence. Cf. GOOD BEHAVIOR; earned time. [Cases: Prisons ↷243.]

jail-credit time. See JAIL CREDIT.

nonrun time. See dead time.

street time. The time that a convicted person spends on parole or on other conditional release. • If the person's parole is revoked, this time may or may not be credited toward the person's sentence, depending on the jurisdiction and the particular conditions of that person's parole. See dead time.

time agreement. 1. A pact made by the party leaders in the U.S. Senate to limit the time allowed for debate on a bill or amendment. 2. See UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

time arbitrage. See ARBITRAGE.

time-bar, n. (1881) A bar to a legal claim arising from the lapse of a defined length of time, esp. one contained in a statute of limitations. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↷1.] — time-barred, adj.

time-bargain. See FUTURES CONTRACT.

time bill. See time draft under DRAFT.

time certain. 1. A definite, specific date and time. Cf. DATE CERTAIN. 2. Parliamentary law. A specified time or condition for which a matter's consideration is scheduled or to which its consideration is postponed. See postpone definitely under POSTPONE (3); special order under ORDER (4).

time charter. See CHARTER (8).

time check. See TIMESHEET.

time deposit. See DEPOSIT (2).

time draft. See DRAFT.

time immemorial. (17c) 1. A point in time so far back that no living person has knowledge or proof contradicting the right or custom alleged to have existed since then. • At common law, that time was fixed as the year 1189, the year that Henry II of England died. — Also termed time out of memory; time out of mind; time of memory. 2. A point in time beyond which legal memory cannot go. See LEGAL MEMORY. 3. A very long time.

time insurance. See INSURANCE.

time is of the essence. See OF THE ESSENCE.

time-is-of-the-essence clause. Contracts. A contractual provision making timely performance a condition. [Cases: Contracts ↷211; Vendor and Purchaser ↷78.]

time letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

time loan. See term loan under LOAN.

time note. See NOTE (1).

time of memory. Archaic. See TIME IMMEMORIAL (1).

time option. See OPTION (2).

time order. See ORDER (8).

time out of memory. See TIME IMMEMORIAL.

time out of mind. See TIME IMMEMORIAL.

time-place-or-manner restriction. (1974) Constitutional law. A government's limitation on when, where, or how a public speech or assembly may occur, but not on the content of that speech or assembly. • As long as such restrictions are narrowly tailored to achieve a legitimate governmental interest, they do not violate the First Amendment. — Also written time, place, or manner restriction. — Also termed time-place-and-manner restriction. See PUBLIC FORUM.

time policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

time-price differential. 1. A figure representing the difference between the current cash price of an item and the total cost of purchasing it on credit. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷4; Usury ↷32.] 2. The difference between a seller's price for immediate cash payment and a different price when payment is made later or in installments.

time-price doctrine. The rule that if a debt arises out of a purchase and sale, the usury laws do not apply. • If a higher price is charged for a deferred payment than for an immediate payment, the difference between the time price and the cash price is deemed compensation to the seller for the risk that the buyer will default and for the interest that the seller could have earned on an immediate payment. Because the buyer can usu. choose to postpone a purchase and save up the cash price, the buyer does not have the same status as a needy borrower who must deal with a potentially predatory lender. [Cases: Usury ↷32.]

time-sharing, n. (1976) Joint ownership or rental of property (such as a vacation condominium) by several persons who take turns occupying the property. — Also termed time-share. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷1.] — time-share, vb.

timesheet. (1970) 1. An employee's record of time spent on the job. 2. An attorney's daily record of billable and nonbillable hours, used to generate clients' bills. — Also termed (formerly) time check. See BILLABLE HOUR.

time-shifting. The practice of recording a broadcast for viewing at a later time. • Time-shifting was found to be a noninfringing fair use of videotape recorders in Sony Corp. v. Universal Studios, Inc., 464 U.S. 417, 104 S.Ct. 774 (1984). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷67.1.]

time unity. See unity of time under UNITY.

time value. The price associated with the length of time that an investor must wait until an investment matures or the related income is earned. Cf. YIELD TO MATURITY.

timocracy (ti-mok-rə-see). (15c) 1. An aristocracy of property; government by propertied, relatively rich people. 2. A government in which the rulers' primary motive is the love of honor.

TIN. abbr. See TAX-IDENTIFICATION NUMBER.

tin parachute. An employment-contract provision that grants a corporate employee (esp. one below the executive level) severance benefits in the event of a takeover. • These benefits are typically less lucrative than those provided under a golden parachute. — Also termed silver parachute. Cf. GOLDEN PARACHUTE.

tip, n. 1. A piece of special information; esp., in securities law, advance or inside information passed from one person to another. See INSIDE INFORMATION; INSIDER TRADING. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷60.28(2).] 2. A gratuity for service given. • Tip income is taxable. IRC (26 USCA) § 61(a). [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3163; Taxation ↷3455.]

tippee. Securities. A person who acquires material nonpublic information from someone in a fiduciary relationship with the company to which that information pertains. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷60.28(5).]

tipper. Securities. A person who is in a fiduciary relationship with a company that the person possesses material inside information about, and who selectively discloses that information for trading or other personal purposes <the tippee traded 5,000 shares after her conversation with the tipper>. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷60.28(5).]

tippling house. See PUBLIC HOUSE.

TIPS. abbr. See TIPS bond under TREASURY BOND.

tipstaff. A court crier. • The name derives from the crier's former practice of holding a staff tipped with silver as a badge of office. See CRIER. [Cases: Courts ↷58.] Pl. tipstaves, tipstoffs.

tip-stave. See SERVITOR OF BILLS.

tithe (tith), n. 1. A tenth of one's income, esp. in reference to a religious or charitable gift or obligation. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷15.] 2. Hist. A small tax or assessment, esp. in the amount of one-tenth. — tithe, vb. — tithable, adj.

"A tithe was the right of a rector to a tenth part of the produce of all the land in his parish. In some cases a rector was an individual, while in others the rectory was vested in a monastery, which appointed a vicar to perform the necessary ecclesiastical duties 'vicariously' for the monastery. On the dissolution of the monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII many rectories passed into the royal hands and were granted to laymen; the result was that the right to tithes in many cases passed into lay hands. Like advowsons, tithes were deemed to be land in which the various estates could exist." Robert E. Megarry & P.V. Baker, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 415 (4th ed. 1969).

great tithe. (usu. pl.) A tithe paid in kind and therefore considered more valuable than other tithes. • The great tithes often consisted of corn, peas, beans, hay, and wood.

mixed tithes. A tithe consisting of a natural product, such as milk or wool, obtained or cultivated by human effort.

"A second species of incorporeal hereditaments is that of tithes . . . the first species being usually called predial, as of corn, grass, hops, and wood; the second mixed, as of wool, milk, pigs, etc., consisting of natural products, but nurtured and preserved in part by the care of man; and of these the tenth must be paid in gross: the third personal, as of manual occupations, trades, fisheries, and the like; and of these only the tenth part of the clear gains and profits is due." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 24 (1766).

personal tithe. A tithe of profits from manual occupations or trades.

predial tithe. A tithe of crops (such as corn). — Also spelled praedial tithe.

vicarial tithe (vi-kair-ee-əl). A small tithe payable to a vicar.

tithe of agistment (ə-jist-mənt). Hist. A church-levied charge on grazing land. • The tithe was paid by the occupier of the land rather than the person whose cattle grazed on the land. See AGISTMENT.

tithing. See DECENARY.

Titius heres esto (tish-ee-əs heer-eez es-toh). [Latin] Roman law. Let Titius be my heir. • The phrase was the testamentary form for appointing an heir. Titius was a fictitious name often used by way of example in legal writing, esp. in forms.

title. (15c) 1. The union of all elements (as ownership, possession, and custody) constituting the legal right to control and dispose of property; the legal link between a person who owns property and the property itself <no one has title to that land>. Cf. OWNERSHIP; POSSESSION. 2. Legal evidence of a person's ownership rights in property; an instrument (such as a deed) that constitutes such evidence <record your title with the county clerk>.

"Though employed in various ways, [title] is generally used to describe either the manner in which a right to real property is acquired, or the right itself. In the first sense, it refers to the conditions necessary to acquire a valid claim to land; in the second, it refers to the legal consequences of such conditions. These two senses are not only inter-related, but inseparable: given the requisite conditions, the legal consequences or rights follow as of course; given the rights, conditions necessary for the creation of those rights must have been satisfied. Thus, when the word 'title' is used in one sense, the other sense is necessarily implied." Kent McNeil, Common Law Aboriginal Title 10 (1989).

aboriginal title. 1. Land ownership, or a claim of land ownership, by an indigenous people in a place that has been colonized. — Also termed native title. 2. INDIAN TITLE. [Cases: Indians ⇨151.]

absolute title. (17c) An exclusive title to land; a title that excludes all others not compatible with it. See fee simple absolute under FEE SIMPLE. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨5.]

adverse title. (18c) A title acquired by adverse possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. [Cases: Adverse Possession ⇨106.]

after-acquired title. (1810) Title held by a person who bought property from a seller who acquired title only after purporting to sell the property to the buyer. See AFTER-ACQUIRED-TITLE DOCTRINE. Cf. title by estoppel. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨8.]

apparent title. See COLOR OF TITLE.

bad title. 1. See defective title. 2. See unmarketable title.

clear title. (17c) 1. A title free from any encumbrances, burdens, or other limitations. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨130(2), 133.] 2. See marketable title. — Also termed good title.

defeasible title. (17c) A title voidable on the occurrence of a contingency, but not void on its face. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨6.]

defective title. (17c) A title that cannot legally convey the property to which it applies, usu. because of some conflicting claim to that property. — Also termed bad title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨129.]

derivative title. (17c) 1. A title that results when an already existing right is transferred to a new owner. 2. The general principle that a transferee of property acquires only the rights held by the transferor and no more. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨210.]

dormant title. (17c) A title in real property held in abeyance.

doubtful title. (17c) A title that exposes the party holding it to the risk of litigation with an adverse claimant. See unmarketable title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨129(1), 130(2).]

equitable title. (17c) A title that indicates a beneficial interest in property and that gives the holder the right to acquire formal legal title. • Before the Statute of Uses (1536), an equitable title was enforceable only in a court of chancery, not of law. Cf. legal title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨54.]

good title. (16c) 1. A title that is legally valid or effective. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨130(2), 133.] 2. See clear title (1). 3. See marketable title.

imperfect title. (18c) A title that requires a further exercise of the granting power to pass land in fee, or that does not convey full and absolute dominion.

Indian title. See INDIAN TITLE.

just title. In a case of prescription, a title that the possessor received from someone whom the possessor honestly believed to be the real owner, provided that the title was to transfer ownership of the property. [Cases: Adverse Possession ⇨69.]

legal title. (17c) A title that evidences apparent ownership but does not necessarily signify full and complete title or a beneficial interest. • Before the Statute of Uses (1536), a legal title was enforceable only in a court of law, not chancery. Cf. equitable title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨54.]

lucrative title. Civil law. A title acquired without giving anything in exchange for the property; title by which a person acquires anything that comes as a clear gain, as by gift, descent, or devise. • Because lucrative title is usu. acquired by gift or inheritance, it is treated as the separate property of a married person. Cf. onerous title.

marketable title. (18c) A title that a reasonable buyer would accept because it appears to lack any defect and to cover the entire property that the seller has purported to sell; a title that enables a purchaser to hold property in peace during the period of ownership and to have it accepted by a later purchaser who employs the same standards of acceptability. — Also termed good title; merchantable title; clear title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨130.]

"One definition of a marketable title which has been put forward repeatedly is one free from all reasonable doubt. Stated another way, a marketable title is one which does not contain any manner of defect or outstanding interest or claim which may conceivably operate to defeat or impair the interest which is bargained for and is intended to be conveyed. This negative concept of marketability has become an implied invitation for courts to declare titles unmarketable if an examiner has entertained any doubt whatever with respect to them. The digests attest the painful truth that claims of a bygone era cling like barnacles to land titles and encumber them long after they should have been scraped clean. . . . We need to replace this negative approach by a positive one which will make the marketability of titles depend solely upon their state during some recent interval of time rather than upon their entire history." Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 371, at 539 (1953).

native title. See aboriginal title (1).

nonmerchantable title. See unmarketable title.

onerous title (on-ər-əs). 1. Civil law. A title acquired by giving valuable consideration for the property, as by paying money or performing services. 2. A title to property that is acquired during marriage through a spouse's skill or labor and is therefore treated as community property. Cf. lucrative title.

original title. A title that creates a right for the first time.

"The catching of fish is an original title of the right of ownership, whereas the purchase of them is a derivative title. The right acquired by the fisherman is newly created; it did not formerly exist in any one." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 345 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

paper title. See record title.

paramount title. (18c) 1. Archaic. A title that is the source of the current title; original title. 2. A title that is superior to another title or claim on the same property.

particular title. Civil law. A title acquired from an ancestor by purchase, gift, or inheritance before or after the ancestor's death.

perfect title. 1. FEE SIMPLE. 2. A grant of land that requires no further act from the legal authority to constitute an absolute title to the land. 3. A title that does not disclose a patent defect that may require a lawsuit to defend it. 4. A title that is good both at law and in equity. 5. A title that is good and valid beyond all reasonable doubt.

presumptive title. (17c) A title of the lowest order, arising out of the mere occupation or simple possession of property without any apparent right, or any pretense of right, to hold and continue that possession.

record title. (18c) A title as it appears in the public records after the deed is properly recorded. — Also termed title of record; paper title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 132, 231(1).]

singular title. (17c) The title by which one acquires property as a singular successor.

tax title. (1831) A title to land purchased at a tax sale. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3060–3082.]

title by descent. (17c) A title that one acquires by law as an heir of the deceased owner.

title by devise. (1819) A title created by will.

title by estoppel. Title acquired from a person who did not have title at the time of a purported conveyance with a warranty but later acquired the title, which then inures to the benefit of the grantee. Cf. after-acquired title.

title by prescription. (17c) A title acquired by prescription. See PRESCRIPTION (5). [Cases: Adverse Possession ⇨ 106.]

title defective in form. (1836) A title for which some defect appears on the face of the deed, as opposed to a defect that arises from circumstances or extrinsic evidence. • Title defective in form cannot be the basis of prescription. See PRESCRIPTION (5). [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 129.]

title of entry. (16c) The right to enter upon lands.

title of record. See record title.

universal title. (17c) A title acquired by a conveyance causa mortis of a stated portion of all the conveyor's property interests so that on the conveyor's death the recipient stands as a universal successor.

unmarketable title. (18c) A title that a reasonable buyer would refuse to accept because of possible conflicting interests in or litigation over the property. — Also termed bad title; unmerchantable title; nonmerchantable title. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 130(2).]

3. The heading of a statute or other legal document <the title of the contract was "Confidentiality Agreement">. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 152; Statutes ⇨ 109.2.]

general title. A statute's name that broadly and comprehensively identifies the subject matter addressed by the legislature. Cf. restrictive title. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 109.2.]

long title. The full, formal title of a statute, usu. containing a brief statement of legislative purpose.

"The first Acts of Parliament did not have titles. The first time that an Act of Parliament was given a title was about 1495. Even when the long title came to be added to each Act of Parliament as a matter of course, as it did from about 1513, the long title was not regarded as part of the Act of Parliament itself. Today, however, the position is different: the long title is part of the Act of Parliament." D.J. Gifford & John Salter, How to Understand an Act of Parliament 19 (1996).

"Because Parliament's clerks, rather than Parliament, provided the titles of acts, the traditional rule has been that the title could not be used for interpretive purposes. . . . This is no longer the practice in most English-speaking jurisdictions, for the long title, and often a short title as well, are part of the legislative bill from the very beginning. In the United States, most state constitutions require the legislative enactment to have a title that gives accurate notice of the contents of the law." William N. Eskridge Jr. & Elizabeth Garrett, Legislation 831 (2001).

short title. The abbreviated title of a statute by which it is popularly known; a statutory nickname.

4. A subdivision of a statute or code <Title IX>.

restrictive title. A statute's name that narrowly identifies the particular subject matter addressed by the legislature. Cf. general title. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 109.2.]

5. The name by which a court case or other legal proceeding is distinguished from others; STYLE (1). 6. An appellation of office, dignity, or distinction <after the election, he bore the title of mayor for the next four years>.

title, warranty of. See warranty of title under WARRANTY (2).

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. A federal law that prohibits employment discrimination and harassment on the basis of race, sex, pregnancy, religion, and national origin, as well as prohibiting retaliation against an employee who opposes illegal harassment or discrimination in the workplace. • This term is often referred to simply as Title VII. 42 USCA §§ 2000e et seq. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1102.]

Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972. A federal statute generally prohibiting sex discrimination and harassment by educational facilities that receive federal funds. • This term is often referred to simply as Title IX. 20 USCA §§ 1681 et seq. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1067.]

title clearance. The removal of impediments to the marketability of land, esp. through title examinations.

title company. See COMPANY.

title deed. See DEED.

title division. Archaic. A common-law system for dividing property acquired during marriage upon the dissolution of the marriage, the divisions being based on who holds legal title to the property. • Under title division, when a marriage ends in divorce, property purchased during the marriage is awarded to the person who holds title to the property. Cf. COMMUNITY PROPERTY; EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION.

title-guaranty company. See title company under COMPANY.

title insurance. See INSURANCE.

title jurisdiction. See TITLE THEORY.

title member. See name partner under PARTNER.

title-object clause. See CLAUSE.

title of entry. See TITLE (2).

title of record. See record title under TITLE (2).

title of right. (1917) A court-issued decree creating, transferring, or extinguishing rights. • Examples include a decree of divorce or judicial separation, an adjudication of bankruptcy, a discharge in bankruptcy, a decree of foreclosure against a mortgagor, an order appointing or removing a trustee, and a grant of letters of administration. In all the examples listed, the judgment operates not as a remedy but as a title of right.

title opinion. See OPINION (2).

title registration. (1971) A system of registering title to land with a public registry, such as a county clerk's office. See TORRENS SYSTEM. [Cases: Records ⇨ 9.]

title retention. (1936) A form of lien, in the nature of a chattel mortgage, to secure payment of a loan given to purchase the secured item. [Cases: Chattel Mortgages ⇨ 1.]

title search. (1965) An examination of the public records to determine whether any defects or encumbrances exist in a given property's chain of title. • A title search is typically conducted by a title company or a real-estate lawyer at a prospective buyer's or mortgagee's request. [Cases: Abstracts of Title ⇨ 1-3; Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 231(2).]

title standards. (1938) Criteria by which a real-estate title can be evaluated to determine whether it is defective or marketable. • Many states, through associations of conveyancers and real-estate attorneys, still adhere to title standards. [Cases: Abstracts of Title ⇨ 1-3; Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 130(2).]

title state. See TITLE THEORY.

title theory. (1907) Property law. The idea that a mortgage transfers legal title of the property to the mortgagee, who retains it until the mortgage has been satisfied or foreclosed. • Only a few American states — known as title states, title jurisdictions, or title-theory jurisdictions — have adopted this theory. Cf. LIEN THEORY. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 136.]

title transaction. (1939) A transaction that affects title to an interest in land.

title unity. See unity of title under UNITY.

titulo lucrativo, qui titulus est post contractum debitum (tich-ə-loh loo-krə-ti-voh, kwī tich-ə-ləs est pohst kən-trak-təm deb-i-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. By a lucrative title, which occurs after the contracting of debt.

titulo singulari (tich-ə-loh sing-gyə-lair-i). [Law Latin] Hist. By a singular title. • Those acquiring property by means other than succession held the property under a titulus singularis.

titulo universalis (tich-ə-loh yoo-ni-vər-say-li). [Law Latin] Hist. By a universal title. • An heir succeeding to an ancestor's estate held title titulo universalis.

titulus transferendi (tich-ə-ləs trans-fər-en-di). [Law Latin] Hist. The legal title for transferring. — Also spelled titulus transferendi. Cf. MODUS TRANSFERENDI.

TM. abbr. TRADEMARK. • Typically used as a superscript after a mark (TM), it signals only that someone claims ownership of the mark; it does not mean that the mark is registered.

TMEP. abbr. TRADEMARK MANUAL OF EXAMINING PROCEDURE.

T-note. abbr. TREASURY NOTE.

tocher. Scots law. Dowry.

to-have-and-to-hold clause. See HABENDUM CLAUSE (1).

token, n. (bef. 12c) 1. A sign or mark; a tangible evidence of the existence of a fact. 2. A sign or indication of an intention to do something, as when a buyer places a small order with a vendor to show good faith with a view toward later placing a larger order. 3. A coin or other legal tender. • Although token most commonly refers to a piece of metal, the term may also denote a bill or other medium of exchange.

false token. A counterfeit coin, bill, or the like.

toleration, n. 1. The act or practice of permitting or enduring something not wholly approved of; the act or practice of allowing something in a way that does not hinder. 2. The allowance of opinions and beliefs, esp. religious ones, that differ from prevailing norms. 3. Archaic. Legal permission or authorization; LICENSE (1). — tolerate, vb.

toll, n. 1. A tax or due paid for the use of something; esp., the consideration paid either to use a public road, highway, or bridge, or to maintain a booth for the sale of goods at a fair or market. [Cases: Bridges ↷33; Turnpikes and Toll Roads ↷37.] 2. A right to collect such a tax or due. 3. The privilege of being free from such a tax or due. 4. A charge for a long-distance telephone call. [Cases: Telecommunications ↷950.]

toll, vb. (15c) 1. To annul or take away <toll a right of entry>. 2. (Of a time period, esp. a statutory one) to stop the running of; to abate <toll the limitations period>. See EQUITABLE TOLLING. 3. Hist. To raise or collect a tax or due for the use of something.

tollage (toh-lij). 1. Payment of a toll. 2. Money charged or paid as a toll. 3. The liberty or franchise of charging a toll.

tolling agreement. (1934) An agreement between a potential plaintiff and a potential defendant by which the defendant agrees to extend the statutory limitations period on the plaintiff's claim, usu. so that both parties will have more time to resolve their dispute without litigation. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↷14.]

tolling statute. (1899) A law that interrupts the running of a statute of limitations in certain situations, as when the defendant cannot be served with process in the forum jurisdiction. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↷43-138.]

tolt (tohl). Hist. A writ for removing a case pending in a court baron to a county court. — Also termed writ of tolt. See COURT BARON; county court under COURT.

"Where the disputed interest in the land was not a fee held of the king in chief but a fee held of a 'mesne lord' the writ was directed to him bidding him do full right between the parties in the matter of the land in question under pain of the case being removed from his court to the sheriff's court if he failed to do justice. This removal was effected tombstone. Securities. An advertisement (esp. in a newspaper) for a public securities offering, describing the security and identifying the sellers. • The term gets its name from the ad's traditional black border and plain print. — Also termed tombstone advertisement; tombstone ad. Cf. PROSPECTUS.

ton. A measure of weight fixed at either 2,000 pounds avoirdupois or 20 hundredweights, each hundredweight being 112 pounds avoirdupois. [Cases: Weights and Measures ↷3.]

long ton. Twenty long hundredweight (2,240 pounds), or 1.016 metric tons.

short ton. Twenty short hundredweight (2,000 pounds), or 0.907 metric tons.

ton mile. In transportation, a measure equal to the transportation of one ton of freight one mile.

tonnage (tən-ij). 1. The capacity of a vessel for carrying freight or other loads, calculated in tons. — Also termed net tonnage. [Cases: Shipping ↷7.] 2. The total shipping tonnage of a country or port. 3. See tonnage duty under DUTY (4). tonnage duty. See DUTY (4).

tonnage-rent. A rent reserved by a mining lease or similar transaction, consisting of a royalty on every ton of minerals extracted from the mine. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷70.]

tonnage tax. See tonnage duty under DUTY (4).

tonsure. Hist. The shaving of a person's (usu. a cleric's) head. • Serjeants-at-law supposedly wore coifs to conceal their shaved heads.

tontine (ton-teen or ton-teen), n. 1. A financial arrangement in which a group of participants share in the arrangement's advantages until all but one has died or defaulted, at which time the whole goes to that survivor. [Cases: Insurance ↷2441.] 2. A financial arrangement in which an entire sum goes to the contributing participants still alive and not in default at the end of a specified period.

tontine policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

top-hat pension plan. See PENSION PLAN.

top lease. See LEASE.

top management. See MANAGEMENT.

topographical survey. See SURVEY.

torpedo doctrine. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE.

Torrens system (tor-ənz or tahr-ənz). (1863) A system for establishing title to real estate in which a claimant first acquires an abstract of title and then applies to a court for the issuance of a title certificate, which serves as conclusive evidence of ownership. • This system — named after Sir Robert Torrens, a 19th-century reformer of Australian land laws — has been adopted in the United States by several counties with large metropolitan areas. — Also termed Torrens title system. See CAVEAT (3). [Cases: Records ↷9.]

tort (tort). (16c) 1. A civil wrong, other than breach of contract, for which a remedy may be obtained, usu. in the form of damages; a breach of a duty that the law imposes on persons who stand in a particular relation to one another. [Cases: Torts ↷106.] 2. (pl.) The branch of law dealing with such wrongs.

"To ask concerning any occurrence 'Is this a crime or is it a tort?' is — to borrow Sir James Stephen's apt illustration — no wiser than it would be to ask concerning a man 'Is he a father or a son?' For he may well be both." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 543 (16th ed. 1952).

"We may . . . define a tort as a civil wrong for which the remedy is a common-law action for unliquidated damages, and which is not exclusively the breach of a contract or the breach of a trust or other merely equitable obligation." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 13 (17th ed. 1977).

"It might be possible to define a tort by enumerating the things that it is not. It is not crime, it is not breach of contract, it is not necessarily concerned with property rights or problems of government, but is the occupant of a large residuary field remaining if these are taken out of the law. But this again is illusory, and the conception of a sort of legal garbage-can to hold what can be put nowhere else is of no help. In the first place, tort is a field which pervades the entire law, and is so interlocked at every point with property, contract and other accepted classifications that, as the student of law soon discovers, the categories are quite arbitrary. In the second, there is a central theme, or basis or idea, running through the cases of what are called torts, which, although difficult to put into words, does distinguish them in greater or less degree from other types of cases." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 1, at 2-3 (5th ed. 1984).

business tort. A tort that impairs some aspect of an economic interest or business relationship and causes economic loss rather than property damage or bodily harm. • Business torts include tortious interference with contractual relations, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, unfair business practices, misappropriation of trade secrets, and product disparagement. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷410; Libel and Slander ↷130; Torts ↷211, 241.]

constitutional tort. (1966) A violation of one's constitutional rights by a government officer, redressable by a civil action filed directly against the officer. • A constitutional tort committed under color of state law (such as a civil-rights violation) is actionable under 42 USCA § 1983. — Sometimes (informally) shortened to contort. [Cases: Civil Rights ↷1304.]

dignitary tort (dig-nə-tair-ee). (1996) A tort involving injury to one's reputation or honor. • In the few jurisdictions in which courts use the phrase dignitary tort (such as Maine), defamation is commonly cited as an example. — Also (erroneously) termed dignatory tort.

environmental tort. A tort involving exposure to disagreeable or harmful environmental conditions or harm to and degradation of an environment (e.g., the pouring of acid on golf greens). • An environmental tort is usu. harmful to land rather than people, though people may find it unpleasant (e.g., odors from a landfill). By contrast, toxic torts involve exposure to harmful substances that cause personal physical injury or disease. Cf. toxic tort.

government tort. (1945) A tort committed by the government through an employee, agent, or instrumentality under its control. • The tort may or may not be actionable, depending on whether the government is entitled to sovereign immunity. A tort action against the U.S. government is regulated by the Federal Tort Claims Act, while a state action is governed by the state's tort claims act. See FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT; sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY (1). [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↷723.]

intentional tort. (1860) A tort committed by someone acting with general or specific intent. • Examples include battery, false imprisonment, and trespass to land. — Also termed willful tort. Cf. NEGLIGENCE. [Cases: Torts ↷115.]

marital tort. A tort by one spouse against the other. • Since most jurisdictions have abolished interspousal tort immunity, courts have had to decide which tort claims to recognize between married persons. Among those that some, but not all, courts have chosen to recognize are assault and battery, including claims for infliction of sexually transmitted disease, and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. — Also termed domestic tort. Cf. husband-wife immunity under IMMUNITY. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷53, 205(2).] maritime tort. Any tort within the admiralty jurisdiction. [Cases: Admiralty ↷17.]

mass tort. (1940) A civil wrong that injures many people. • Examples include toxic emissions from a factory, the crash of a commercial airliner, and contamination from an industrial-waste-disposal site. Cf. toxic tort.

negligent tort. (1865) A tort committed by failure to observe the standard of care required by law under the circumstances. See NEGLIGENCE.

personal tort. (17c) A tort involving or consisting in an injury to one's person, reputation, or feelings, as distinguished from an injury or damage to real or personal property. [Cases: Torts ↷425.]

preconception tort. A tort that is committed before the victim has been conceived.

prenatal tort. (1960) 1. A tort committed against a fetus. • If born alive, a child can sue for injuries resulting from tortious conduct predating the child's birth. [Cases: Death ↷15; Infants ↷72(2).] 2. Loosely, any of several torts relating to reproduction, such as those giving rise to wrongful-birth actions, wrongful-life actions, and wrongful-pregnancy actions. [Cases: Health ↻686, 687.]

prima facie tort (prɪ-mə fay-shee-ee or -shee or -shə). (1938) An unjustified, intentional infliction of harm on another person, resulting in damages, by one or more acts that would otherwise be lawful. • Some jurisdictions have established this tort to provide a remedy for malicious deeds — esp. in business and trade contexts — that are not actionable under traditional tort law. [Cases: Torts ↻155.]

property tort. (1898) A tort involving damage to property. [Cases: Torts ↻429.]

public tort. (1949) A minor breach of the law (such as a parking violation) that, although it carries a criminal punishment, is considered a civil offense rather than a criminal one because it is merely a prohibited act (malum prohibitum) and not inherently reprehensible conduct (malum in se). — Also termed civil offense. Cf. civil wrong under WRONG; public delict under DELICT. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻26, 27.]

quasi-tort. (1809) A wrong for which a nonperpetrator is held responsible; a tort for which one who did not directly commit it can nonetheless be found liable, as when an employer is held liable for a tort committed by an employee. — Also spelled quasi tort. See vicarious liability under LIABILITY; RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

sanctions tort. See SANCTIONS TORT.

toxic tort. (1979) A civil wrong arising from exposure to a toxic substance, such as asbestos, radiation, or hazardous waste. • A toxic tort can be remedied by a civil lawsuit (usu. a class action) or by administrative action. Cf. mass tort; environmental tort. [Cases: Negligence ↻306; Products Liability ↻201, 217.]

willful tort. See intentional tort.

tortfeasor (tort-fee-zər). (17c) One who commits a tort; a wrongdoer.

concurrent tortfeasors. (1921) Two or more tortfeasors whose simultaneous actions cause injury to a third party. • Such tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable. [Cases: Negligence ↻421, 484; Torts ↻134, 135.]

consecutive tortfeasors. (1955) Two or more tortfeasors whose actions, while occurring at different times, combine to cause a single injury to a third party. • Such tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable.

joint tortfeasors. (1822) Two or more tortfeasors who contributed to the claimant's injury and who may be joined as defendants in the same lawsuit. See joint and several liability under LIABILITY. [Cases: Negligence ↻484; Torts ↻134, 135.]

successive tortfeasors. (1954) Two or more tortfeasors whose negligence occurs at different times and causes different injuries to the same third party. [Cases: Damages ↻34.]

tortious (tor-shəs), adj. (16c) 1. Constituting a tort; wrongful <tortious conduct>. [Cases: Torts ↻

106, 107.] 2. In the nature of a tort <tortious cause of action>.

tortious act. See ACT (2).

tortious battery. See BATTERY (2).

tortious conduct. See CONDUCT.

tortious interference with a business advantage. See TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE ADVANTAGE.

tortious interference with contractual relations. (1954) A third party's intentional inducement of a contracting party to break a contract, causing damage to the relationship between the contracting parties. — Also termed unlawful interference with contractual relations; interference with a contractual relationship; interference with contract; inducement of breach of contract; procurement of breach of contract. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻903-914; Torts ↻212.]

tortious interference with economic relations. See TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE ADVANTAGE.

tortious interference with prospective advantage. (1973) An intentional, damaging intrusion on another's potential business relationship, such as the opportunity of obtaining customers or employment. — Also termed interference with a business relationship; tortious interference with a business advantage; tortious interference with economic relations. [Cases: Torts ↻213.]

tortious liability. See LIABILITY.

tort-of-another doctrine. Torts. The principle that a party who must bring or defend an action against a third person based on a tort committed by another person is entitled to seek litigation-related damages from that other person. [Cases: Damages ↻73.]

tort reform. (1974) A movement to reduce the amount of tort litigation, usu. involving legislation that restricts tort remedies or that caps damages awards (esp. for punitive damages). • Advocates of tort reform argue that it lowers insurance and healthcare costs and prevents windfalls, while opponents contend that it denies plaintiffs the recovery they deserve for their injuries.

torture, n. (16c) The infliction of intense pain to the body or mind to punish, to extract a confession or information, or to obtain sadistic pleasure. — torture, vb.

"By torture I mean the infliction of physically founded suffering or the threat immediately to inflict it, where such infliction or threat is intended to elicit, or such infliction is incidental to means adopted to elicit, matter of intelligence or forensic proof and the motive is one of military, civil, or ecclesiastical interest." James Heath, Torture and English Law 3 (1982).

torture by proxy. See extraordinary rendition under RENDITION.

torture flight. See extraordinary rendition under RENDITION.

total, adj. (14c) 1. Whole; not divided; full; complete. 2. Utter; absolute.

total assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

total breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

total disability. See DISABILITY (2).

total-disability insurance. See general-disability insurance under INSURANCE.

total eviction. See EVICTION.

total failure of consideration. See FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

total incorporation. See INCORPORATION.

totality-of-the-circumstances test. (1959) Criminal procedure. A standard for determining whether hearsay (such as an informant's tip) is sufficiently reliable to establish probable cause for an arrest or search warrant. • Under this test — which replaced Aguilar-Spinelli's two-pronged approach — the reliability of the hearsay is weighed by focusing on the entire situation as described in the probable-cause affidavit, and not on any one specific factor. Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 103 S.Ct. 2317 (1983). Cf. AGUILAR-SPINELLI TEST. [Cases: Arrest ⇨ 63.4(7); Searches and Seizures ⇨ 115.1.]

total loss. See LOSS.

total-offset rule. Torts. A theory of damages holding that the eroding effect of inflation offsets the accrual of interest on an award and makes it unnecessary to discount future damages to their present value. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 226.]

total repudiation. See REPUDIATION.

tota re perspecta (toh-tə ree pər-spek-tə). [Latin] Hist. The whole matter being taken into account or considered. — Also termed tota materia perspecta.

totidem verbis. [Latin] In so many words.

toties quoties (toh-shee-eez kwoh-shee-eez or toh-sheez kwoh-sheez). [Latin] Hist. As often as.

toto caelo (toh-toh see-loh), adv. [Latin “by the whole extent of the heavens”] As far as possible; diametrically <the parties differ with each other toto caelo>.

toto genere (toh-toh jen-ə-ree). [Latin] Hist. In their whole character; entirely.

Totten trust. See TRUST.

touch, vb. Marine insurance. To stop at a port, usu. for a brief period. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 3059.]

touch and stay. Marine insurance. A right, granted by an insurer to an insured vessel, to stop and remain at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. • A vessel that has the power to touch and stay at a place must confine itself strictly to the terms of the permission given, and any deviation during a stay — for example, by shipping or landing goods — will discharge the underwriters, unless the vessel has permission to trade as well as to touch and stay. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 3059.]

Touhy regulations. The rules governing procedures for document production by federal agencies for purposes of litigation. 28 C.F.R. 16.21 et seq. • The term comes from United States ex rel. Touhy v. Ragen, 340 U.S. 462, 71 S.Ct. 416 (1951). In that case, an FBI agent refused to produce certain records under a subpoena duces tecum because a departmental regulation expressly stated that the Attorney General was the only person with authority to produce the documents. The United States Supreme Court upheld the regulation's validity. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 16.]

tout court (too koor), adv. [French “simply, without qualification”] Very briefly; without explanation.

tout ensemble (toot on-son-blə), n. [French “all together”] The overall visual effect of a design; general effect. • The phrase denotes a way of comparing two designs, by looking at the total impact rather than comparing individual design elements. That is the technique used in determining whether a design infringes someone's trade-dress rights, or if a design-patent application shows a novel and nonobvious change from existing designs. Although the phrase is adverbial in French, it is typically used as a noun in English. See ANTIDISSECTION RULE.

touting, n. The solicitation of business by highly recommending a security or product, esp. when the recommendation's basis is largely puffery.

tout temps prist et encore prist. [Law French] Common-law pleading. The clause in a plea of tender stating that the pleader is and always has been ready to pay. See PLEA OF TENDER.

towage (toh-ij), n. 1. The act or service of towing ships and vessels, usu. by means of a small vessel called a tug. [Cases: Towage ⇨ 1.] 2. The charge for such a service. [Cases: Towage ⇨ 5.]

toward, adj. 1. In the direction of; on a course or line leading to (some place or something). 2. Coming soon; not long before.

to wit (too wit), adv. (14c) Archaic. That is to say; namely <the district attorney amended the complaint to include embezzlement, to wit, “stealing money that the company had entrusted to the accused”>. — Sometimes spelled to-wit; towit.

town. 1. A center of population that is larger and more fully developed than a village, but that (traditionally speaking) is not incorporated as a city. [Cases: Towns ⇨ 1.] 2. The territory within which this population lives. 3. Collectively, the people who live within this territory. Cf. CITY.

“A town is a precinct anciently containing ten families, whereupon in some countries they are called tithings, within one of which tithings every man must be dwelling, and find sureties for his good behaviour, else he that taketh him into his house is to be amerced in the leet.” Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 80 (1759).

town-bonding act. A law authorizing a town, county, or other municipal corporation to issue its corporate bonds for the purpose of aiding in construction, often of railroads. — Also termed town-bonding law. [Cases: Towns ⇨ 52.]

town clerk. See CLERK (1).

town collector. A town officer charged with collecting the taxes assessed by a town. [Cases: Towns ↷59.]

town commissioner. See COMMISSIONER.

town crier. Hist. A town officer responsible for making proclamations related to town business.

town hall. A building that houses the offices of a town's government. [Cases: Towns ↷35.]

townhouse. A dwelling unit having usu. two or three stories and often connected to a similar structure by a common wall and (particularly in a planned-unit development) sharing and owning in common the surrounding grounds. — Also termed townhome.

town meeting. 1. A legal meeting of a town's qualified voters for the administration of local government or the enactment of legislation. • Town meetings of this type are common in some New England states. [Cases: Towns ↷17.] 2. More generally, any assembly of a town's citizens for the purpose of discussing political, economic, or social issues. 3. Modernly, a televised event in which one or more politicians meet and talk with representative citizens about current issues.

town order. An official written direction by the auditing officers of a town, directing the treasurer to pay a sum of money. — Also termed town warrant. [Cases: Towns ↷50.]

town purpose. A municipal project or expenditure that concerns the welfare and advantage of the town as a whole. [Cases: Towns ↷46(1).]

township. 1. In a government survey, a square tract six miles on each side, containing thirty-six square miles of land. 2. In some states, a civil and political subdivision of a county. — Abbr. tp. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↷6.]

township trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

townsite. A portion of the public domain segregated by proper authority and procedure as the site for a town.

town treasurer. An officer responsible for maintaining and disbursing town funds. [Cases: Towns ↷30.]

town warrant. See TOWN ORDER.

toxic, adj. Having the character or producing the effects of a poison; produced by or resulting from a poison; poisonous. — Also termed toxicol. [Cases: Environmental Law ↷413.]

toxicant (tok-si-kənt), n. (1879) A poison; a toxic agent; any substance capable of producing toxication or poisoning.

toxic asset. See troubled asset under ASSET.

toxicate, vb. Archaic. To poison. See INTOXICATION.

toxic convert. See DEATH-SPIRAL DEAL.

toxicology (tok-si-kol-ə-je). (18c) The branch of medicine that concerns poisons, their effects, their recognition, their antidotes, and generally the diagnosis and therapeutics of poisoning; the science of poisons. — toxicological (tok-si-kol-ə-je), adj.

toxic tort. See TORT.

toxic waste. See WASTE (2).

toxin, n. (1886) 1. Broadly, any poison or toxicant. 2. As used in pathology and medical jurisprudence, any diffusible alkaloidal substance — such as the ptomaines, abrin, brucin, or serpent venoms — and esp. the poisonous products of disease-producing bacteria.

tp, abbr. TOWNSHIP.

TPL, abbr. Third-party logistical service provider. See FREIGHT FORWARDER.

TPPM, abbr. TANGIBLE-PERSONAL-PROPERTY MEMORANDUM.

TPR, abbr. TERMINATION OF PARENTAL RIGHTS.

traces, n. See retrospectant evidence under EVIDENCE.

tract. (14c) A specified parcel of land .

tract index. See INDEX (1).

tractus futuri temporis (trak-təs fyoo-t[y]oor-i tem-pə-ris). [Latin] Hist. A tract of future time.

trade, n. (14c) 1. The business of buying and selling or bartering goods or services; COMMERCE.

inland trade. Trade wholly carried on within a country, as distinguished from foreign commerce.

precarious trade. Int'l law. Trade by a neutral country between two belligerent powers, allowed to exist at the latter's sufferance.

2. A transaction or swap. 3. A business or industry occupation; a craft or profession. — trade, vb.

trade acceptance. See ACCEPTANCE (4).

trade agreement. 1. An agreement — such as the North American Free Trade Agreement — between two or more nations concerning the buying and selling of each nation's goods. [Cases: Customs Duties ↷10.] 2. COLLECTIVE-BARGAINING AGREEMENT.

trade and commerce. Every business occupation carried on for subsistence or profit and involving the elements of bargain and sale, barter, exchange, or traffic.

Trade and Development Program. See UNITED STATES TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT AGENCY.

trade association. See ASSOCIATION.

trade council. A central labor union; the central organization of a local trade union. — Also termed trades council. See UNION.

trade defamation. See DEFAMATION.

trade deficit. See DEFICIT.

trade discount. See DISCOUNT.

trade disparagement. The common-law tort of belittling someone's business, goods, or services with a remark that is false or misleading but not necessarily defamatory. • To succeed at the action, a plaintiff must prove that (1) the defendant made the disparaging remark; (2) the defendant either intended to injure the business, knew the statement was false, or recklessly disregarded whether it was true; and (3) the statement resulted in special damages to the plaintiff, usu. by passing off. — Also termed commercial disparagement; product disparagement; injurious falsehood. Cf. trade defamation under DEFAMATION. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ◊25.]

trade dispute. 1. Int'l law. A dispute between two or more countries arising from tariff rates or other matters related to international commerce. 2. Labor law. A dispute between an employer and employees over pay, working conditions, or other employment-related matters. • An employee who leaves during a trade dispute is not entitled to benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

trade dollar. Hist. A United States dollar coin, made of silver, issued from 1873 to 1878 for use in foreign trade, esp. in eastern Asia. • A trade dollar was legal tender within the U.S. until 1876 when the coin's silver content fell to less than one dollar. From 1878 to 1885, trade dollars were minted only in proof sets, then discontinued.

trade draft. See DRAFT.

trade dress. Trademarks. The overall appearance and image in the marketplace of a product or a commercial enterprise. • For a product, trade dress typically comprises packaging and labeling. For an enterprise, it typically comprises design and decor. If a trade dress is distinctive and nonfunctional, it may be protected under trademark law. — Also termed get-up; look and feel. [Cases: Trademarks ◊1061.]

"The 'trade dress' of a product is essentially its total image and overall appearance. It 'involves the total image of a product and may include features such as size, shape, color or color combinations, texture, graphics, or even particular sales techniques.'" Two Pesos, Inc. v. Taco Cabana, Inc., 505 U.S. 763, 765 n.1, 112 S.Ct. 2755, 2755 n.1 (1992).

trade guild. See GUILD (1).

trade libel. Trade defamation that is written or recorded. See LIBEL; trade defamation under DEFAMATION; DISPARAGEMENT (3). Cf. trade slander under SLANDER. [Cases: Libel and Slander ◊130.]

trademark, n. (1838) 1. A word, phrase, logo, or other graphic symbol used by a manufacturer or seller to distinguish its product or products from those of others. • The main purpose of a trademark is to designate the source of goods or services. In effect, the trademark is the commercial substitute for one's signature.

To receive federal protection, a trademark must be (1) distinctive rather than merely descriptive or generic; (2) affixed to a product that is actually sold in the marketplace; and (3) registered with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. In its broadest sense, the term trademark includes a servicemark. Unregistered trademarks are protected under common-law only, and distinguished with the mark "TM." — Often shortened to mark. Cf. SERVICEMARK. [Cases: Trademarks ◊1021.] 2. The body of law dealing with how businesses distinctively identify their products. — Abbr. TM. See LANHAM ACT. Cf. SERVICEMARK; registered trademark; BRAND; TRADENAME.

"The protection of trade-marks is the law's recognition of the psychological function of symbols. If it is true that we live by symbols, it is no less true that we purchase goods by them. A trade-mark is a merchandising shortcut which induces a purchaser to select what he wants, or what he has been led to believe he wants. The owner of a mark exploits this human propensity by making every effort to impregnate the atmosphere of the market with the drawing power of a congenial symbol. Whatever the means employed, the aim is the same — to convey through the mark, in the minds of potential customers, the desirability of the commodity upon which it appears. Once this is attained, the trade-mark owner has something of value. If another poaches upon the commercial magnetism of the symbol he has created, the owner can obtain legal redress." Mishawaka Rubber & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. S.S. Kresge Co., 316 U.S. 203, 205, 62 S.Ct. 1022, 1024 (1942) (Frankfurter, J.).

"A trademark functions on three different levels: as an indication of origin or ownership, as a guarantee of constancy of the quality or other characteristics of a product or service, and as a medium of advertisement. Thus, a trademark guarantees, identifies, and sells the product or service to which it refers. These three facets of a trademark — of differing importance at different times, in different lines of business and for different products or services — are somewhat correlative. The classical function, that of identification, has been primarily responsible for molding the development of trademark law. The significance of the guarantee function has been somewhat exaggerated, while the implications of the advertisement function still await full recognition in the law." 3 Rudolf Callmann, The Law of Unfair Competition, Trademarks and Monopolies § 17.01, at 2 (4th ed. 1998).

abandoned trademark. A mark whose owner has discontinued using it and has no intent to resume using it in the ordinary course of trade, or has allowed it to become a generic term or otherwise to lose its distinctive significance. • Under § 45 of the Lanham Act, nonuse of a mark for three consecutive years is prima facie evidence of abandonment. The owner of an abandoned mark has no trademark rights to exclude others from using it. — Also termed abandoned mark. [Cases: Trademarks ◊1153, 1155.]

arbitrary trademark. A trademark containing common words that do not describe or suggest any characteristic of the product to which the trademark is assigned. • Because arbitrary marks are neither descriptive nor suggestive of the goods or services in connection with which they are used, they are inherently distinctive, require no proof of secondary meaning, and are entitled to strong legal protection. A name that would be generic if used with one product may be arbitrary if used with another. For example, "Bicycle" may be registered to identify playing cards, but it could not be protected as a mark to identify bicycles. — Also termed arbitrary mark; arbitrary name. [Cases: Trade Regulation ⇨ 1039.]

certification trademark. A word, symbol, or device used on goods or services to certify the place of origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, or other characteristic. See 15 USCA § 1127. — Also termed certification mark. Cf. collective trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1066.]

coined trademark. See fanciful trademark.

collective trademark. (1941) A trademark or servicemark used by an association, union, or other group either to identify the group's products or services or to signify membership in the group. • Collective marks — such as "Realtor" or "American Peanut Farmers" — can be federally registered under the Lanham Act. — Also termed collective mark. Cf. certification trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1067.]

Community trademark. A trademark registered with the European Union Trademark Office and recognized in all EU countries. — Also termed Community mark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1261.]

composite trademark. (kəm-poz-it mahrk). A trademark or servicemark made up of several words that form a distinctive whole, even if the individual words are ordinary. • Advertising slogans are often protectable as composite marks. A trademark registrant can establish ownership in the whole mark, but must disclaim ownership in any unregistrable parts. — Also termed composite mark; hybrid mark; hybrid trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1058.]

counterfeit trademark. A spurious mark that is identical to, or substantially indistinguishable from, a registered trademark. 15 USCA § 1116(d)(1)(B). — Also termed counterfeit mark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1432, 1787.]

descriptive trademark. A trademark that is a meaningful word in common usage or that merely describes or suggests a product. • This type of trademark is entitled to protection only if it has acquired distinctiveness over time. — Also termed descriptive mark; weak mark; weak trademark. See SECONDARY MEANING. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1035.]

"The bar against descriptive marks simply reflects the requirement of distinctiveness. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1052(e)(1). It often is said that a mark should not be analyzed in a piecemeal fashion. Instead, the mark as a whole must be tested for descriptiveness or secondary meaning. A mark that merely describes a product cannot possibly distinguish one producer from another. As an obvious example, 'apple' would be a descriptive name for that fruit, and, as a mark, would serve only to confuse the consumer, for it would tell nothing about the different origins of a selection of apples produced by different producers. Moreover, to allow an owner to pre-empt the term 'apple' would afford the owner a monopoly of something that is necessary to describe the goods for sale." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property: Patents, Trademarks, and Copyright in a Nutshell 163 (2d ed. 1990).

disparaging trademark. A trademark that tends to bring a person or class of people into contempt or disrepute. • Section 2(a) of the Lanham Act prohibits the registration of disparaging marks. 15 USCA § 1052(a). — Also termed disparaging mark. See prohibited and reserved trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1073.]

distinctive trademark. A very strong trademark, one that consumers immediately and consistently associate with specific goods and services. • Distinctive trademarks are usu. fanciful, arbitrary, or suggestive, but descriptive trademarks and common names can become distinctive if they become so well known as to acquire a secondary meaning. — Also termed distinctive mark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1029.]

evocative trademark. See suggestive trademark.

famous trademark. A trademark that not only is distinctive but also has been used and heavily advertised or widely accepted in the channels of trade over a long time, and is so well known that consumers immediately associate it with one specific product or service. • Only famous marks are protected from dilution. Eight nonexclusive statutory factors are often used in determining whether a particular mark is famous. See 15 USCA § 1125 (c)(1)(A)-(H). — Also termed famous mark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1468.]

fanciful trademark. A trademark consisting of a made-up or coined word; a distinctive trademark or tradename having no independent meaning. • This type of mark is considered inherently distinctive and thus protected at common law, and is eligible for trademark registration from the time of its first use. — Also termed fanciful mark; fanciful term; coined trademark; coined mark; coined term. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1039.]

"Arbitrary or fanciful marks convey nothing about the nature of the product except through knowledge of the market. For instance, Kodak conveys nothing about photographic equipment except to those knowledgeable about that trade." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 168 (2d ed. 1990).

geographically descriptive trademark. A trademark that uses a geographic name to indicate where the goods are grown or manufactured. • This type of mark is protected at common law, and can be registered only on proof that it has acquired distinctiveness over time. — Also termed geographically descriptive mark. See SECONDARY MEANING. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1047.]

house trademark. A trademark that identifies a company, a division of a company, or a company's product line as the source of a product or service. • A house mark and a product mark often appear together on a label. — Also termed house mark. Cf. product trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1060.]

hybrid trademark. See composite trademark.

product trademark. A trademark that identifies a single good or service, rather than the producing company, a division of a company, or a product line. • A product mark and a house mark often appear together on a label. — Also termed product mark. Cf. house trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1022.]

prohibited and reserved trademark. A mark that is not protected under the Lanham Act because it either fall into an expressly excluded category or else is similar to a mark granted by statute to another. 15 USCA § 1052. — Also termed prohibited and reserved mark. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1243.]

pure trademark. See technical trademark.

registered trademark. A trademark that has been filed and recorded with the Patent and Trademark Office. • A federally registered trademark is usu. marked by the symbol “®” or a phrase such as “Registered U.S. Patent & Trademark Office” so that the trademark owner can potentially collect treble damages or the defendant’s profits for an infringement. If the symbol is not used, the owner can collect these damages or profits only by proving that the defendant actually knew that the mark was registered. — Also termed registered mark. Cf. SERVICEMARK. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1240.]

strong trademark. An inherently distinctive trademark that is used — usu. by the owner only — in a fictitious, arbitrary, and fanciful manner, and is therefore given greater protection than a weak mark under the trademark laws. — Also termed strong mark. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1033.]

suggestive trademark. A trademark that suggests rather than describes the particular characteristics of a product, thus requiring a consumer to use imagination to draw a conclusion about the nature of the product. • A suggestive trademark is entitled to protection without proof of secondary meaning. — Also termed evocative mark; suggestive mark; suggestive name. See SECONDARY MEANING. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1038.]

technical trademark. A mark that satisfies all the elements of a common-law trademark. • The essential elements of a technical trademark are as follows: (1) its use to designate a commercial source would not interfere with anyone else’s right to use the mark; (2) it must primarily identify the source, rather than the product’s category or grade of quality; (3) it must be attached to the product, label, or collateral materials rather than merely used in advertising; and (4) its use must not undermine some public policy, as by being scandalous or deceptive. — Also termed pure trademark; technical mark; true trademark. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1039.]

true trademark. See technical trademark.

weak trademark. See descriptive trademark.

Trademark Act of 1946. See LANHAM ACT.

trademark application. A mark owner’s written request, filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, for federal registration of a mark, accompanied by a sample of the mark to be protected and the filing fee. • The application may describe either an existing mark that is in use or a proposed mark. — Also termed servicemark application. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1282.]

combined application. An application to register a mark to be used in more than one class of goods or services. • A combined application is given a single serial number, but it is examined as if it were a set of distinct single applications. Separate filing fees must be paid for each class. — Also termed multiple-class application. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1282.]

intent-to-use application. An application filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to protect a trademark or servicemark that is not currently in commercial use but whose owner has a bona fide intent to use the mark commercially in the foreseeable future. • Trademark rights have traditionally been restricted to marks actually used in trade, but a 1988 amendment to the Lanham Act permitted applications to be filed before actual use begins if the mark otherwise qualifies for the Principal Register. 15 USCA § 1051(b). See PRINCIPAL REGISTER. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1284.] multiple-class application. See combined application.

trademark-application amendment. A proposed modification to a registered trademark or to an application for trademark registration. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1251, 1282.]

amendment of registration. Trademarks. Amendment of an existing trademark registration to make minor changes in the design of a mark to reflect how the mark is actually used. • The U.S. Patent and Trademark Office permits an amendment of registration only if it does not materially alter the character of the mark. The PTO amends a registration by attaching to the printed registration a printed certificate showing the amendment. — Also termed amendment of mark in registration. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1251.]

amendment to allege use. Trademarks. A supplement to a trademark applicant’s intent-to-use application filed to inform the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that a trademark is actually in use in interstate commerce. • The form is titled “Allegation of Use for Intent to Use Application.” — Abbr. AAU. — Also termed statement of use; allegation of use. See DECLARATION OF USE. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1284.]

amendment to different register. Trademarks. An amendment to an application for registration on the Principal Register, requesting that the mark instead be placed on the supplemental register. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1283.]

trademark class. Any one of 42 international trademark-protection categories, each comprising similar goods or services. • There are 34 goods classes and 8 services classes. A trademark is protected in each class that is relevant to the product’s or service’s business area. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1369.]

Trademark Cyberpiracy Prevention Act. See ANTI-CYBERSQUATTING CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT.

Trademark Electronic Application System. A method of applying to the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office for a trademark over the Internet. • The system is available at <http://www.uspto.gov/teas/index.html>. — Abbr. TEAS.

trademark infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

Trademark Law Treaty. A 1994 treaty that reduces barriers to applying for and registering trademarks internationally, and establishes a model international-trademark-registration form acceptable by all signatory nations. • The United States is a party to the treaty. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1236.]

Trademark Manual of Examining Procedure. Trademarks. The U.S. Patent and Trademark Office book containing guidelines and procedures for trademark examiners. — Abbr. TMEP. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1280.]

Trademark Office. See UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE.

trademark-registration notice. A notice that a mark is protected by registration with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, shown by placing a symbol next to the mark. • In the U.S., the R-within-a-circle symbol (®) is common but the legend "Reg. U.S. Pat. Off." is acceptable. Only federally registered marks may use this notice. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1250.]

Trademark Trial and Appeal Board. An administrative body that hears and decides disputes involving trademark ownership, conflicts between marks, and registrability of marks. — Abbr. TTAB. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1313.]

"No judicial body has administered our trademark laws with more regularity than the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board . . . , the administrative tribunal of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that decides trademark proceedings. Established by Congress in 1958, the Board has seen its caseload increase dramatically over time, reflecting the growing importance of trademarks in our competitive marketplace." 1 Jeffery A. Handelman, Guide to TTAB Practice § 1.01, at 1-3 (2008).

trade meaning. See SECONDARY MEANING.

tradename. Intellectual property. 1. A name, style, or symbol used to distinguish a company, partnership, or business (as opposed to a product or service); the name under which a business operates. • A tradename is a means of identifying a business — or its products or services — to establish goodwill. It symbolizes the business's reputation. Cf. BRAND; D/B/A; TRADEMARK. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1026.] 2. A trademark that was not originally susceptible to exclusive appropriation but has acquired a secondary meaning. — Also termed brand name; commercial name.

trade or business. Tax. Any business or professional activity conducted by a taxpayer with the objective of earning a profit. • If the taxpayer can show that the primary purpose and intention is to make a profit, the taxpayer may deduct certain expenses as trade-or-business expenses under the Internal Revenue Code. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3314.1-3318.]

trade practice. A customary way of doing business; esp., a method of using specifications for size, thickness, shape, or quality adopted within a given industry. [Cases: Customs and Usages ⇨ 9.]

trader. 1. A merchant; a retailer; one who buys goods to sell them at a profit. 2. One who sells goods substantially in the form in which they are bought; one who has not converted them into another form of property by skill and labor. 3. One who, as a member of a stock exchange, buys and sells securities on the exchange floor either for brokers or on his or her own account. 4. One who buys and sells commodities and commodity futures for others or for his or her own account in anticipation of a speculative profit.

Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights. See TRIPS.

trader's settlement. See SETTLEMENT (1).

trades council. See TRADE COUNCIL.

trade secret. (1862) 1. A formula, process, device, or other business information that is kept confidential to maintain an advantage over competitors; information — including a formula, pattern, compilation, program, device, method, technique, or process — that (1) derives independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known or readily ascertainable by others who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use, and (2) is the subject of reasonable efforts, under the circumstances, to maintain its secrecy. • This definition states the majority view, which is found in the Uniform Trade Secrets Act. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨ 413.] 2. Information that (1) is not generally known or ascertainable, (2) provides a competitive advantage, (3) has been developed at the plaintiff's expense and is used continuously in the plaintiff's business, and (4) is the subject of the plaintiff's intent to keep it confidential. • This definition states the minority view, which is found in the Restatement of Torts § 757 cmt. b (1939). [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨ 413.]

"So long as the owner of a secret keeps it a secret he has a monopoly. While equity affords protection to trade secrets against betrayal by those under contract or in confidential relations with the owners of the secret, there is no difference between contracts as to trade secrets and contracts as to any other personal property, as far as restraint of trade is concerned." Harry D. Nims, The Law of Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks 406 (1929).

"The concept of protecting trade secrets is related to the principles of trademark and patent law. The scope of trade secret protection, however, goes well beyond that of patent law. Unlike patent law, protection under trade secret law is not tied to the information's novelty; rather, the essence of a trade secret is its relative secrecy. Additionally, unlike patent law, trade secret law draws less from property principles, and more from the equitable principles surrounding confidential relationships." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 8.18, at 516 (1994).

"The difficulty with defining 'trade secrets' in the abstract is that there are so many ways to go about it. In large part, this is a reflection of the fact that the law of trade secrets, unlike the law of patents or copyright, is a creature of the common law rather than of statute. In trying to impose a moral solution on cases of apparent breach of confidence, judges have juggled competing policy interests while trying to draw a line of protection that would lead to the result that they believed was right. . . . In other words, the development of trade secret law has been a bit chaotic" James Pooley, Trade Secrets § 1.01, at 1-1 to 1-3 (1998).

trade slander. See SLANDER.

tradesman (traydz-mən), n. 1. One who buys and sells things for profit; esp., a shopkeeper. 2. A shopkeeper's employee. 3. A mechanic or artisan whose livelihood depends on manual labor; one who is skilled in a trade. — Also termed tradesperson.

trade surplus. See SURPLUS.

trade union. See UNION.

trade usage. See USAGE.

trading. The business of buying and selling, esp. of commodities and securities. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation ↷11; Securities Regulation ↷35.10–67.15.]

day trading. The act or practice of buying and selling stock shares or other securities on the same day, esp. over the Internet, usu. for the purpose of making a quick profit on the difference between the buying price and the selling price.

secondary trading. The buying and selling of securities in the market between members of the public, involving neither the issuer nor the underwriter of the securities.

short-term trading. Investment in securities only to hold them long enough to profit from market-price fluctuations. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷53.10–53.22.]

trading corporation. See CORPORATION.

trading curb. A temporary restriction on trading in a particular security to curtail dramatic price movements. — Sometimes shortened to curb. Cf. TRADING HALT.

trading halt. A temporary suspension of trading in a particular security for a specific reason, such as an order imbalance or a pending news announcement. • Options can be exercised during a trading halt, and open orders may be canceled. — Also termed suspended trading. Cf. TRADING CURB.

trading partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

trading voyage. See VOYAGE.

trading with the enemy. The federal offense of carrying on commerce with a nation or with a subject or ally of a nation with which the United States is at war. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷514.]

traditio (trə-dish-ee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. The simple delivery of a piece of property by one person to another with the intention of transferring ownership. • This was the simplest form of transfer, and ultimately it was applied to land as well as movables. Constructive delivery was developed. — Also termed traditio

rei. See BREVI MANU; CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM. Pl. traditiones (trə-dish-ee-oh-nee-z).

traditio brevi manu (trə-dish-ee-oh bree-vi man-yoo). [Latin] Roman law. The surrender of the mediate possession of a thing to the person who is already in immediate possession of it. • This is a type of constructive delivery in which a delivery to the mediate possessor and redelivery to the immediate possessor are unnecessary. See BREVI MANU. For the other two types of constructive delivery, see ATTORNMENT; CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM.

"The first [type of constructive delivery] is that which the Roman lawyers termed traditio brevi manu, but which has no recognised name in the language of English law. . . . If, for example, I lend a book to someone, and afterwards, while he still retains it, I agree with him to sell it to him, or to make him a present of it, I can effectually deliver it to him in fulfilment of this sale or gift, by telling him that he may keep it. It is not necessary for him to go through the form of handing it back to me and receiving it a second time from my hands." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 306 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

traditio longa manu (trə-dish-ee-oh long-gə man-yoo). [Latin] Roman law. See CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM.

tradition. (14c) 1. Past customs and usages that influence or govern present acts or practices. [Cases: Customs and Usages ↷10.] 2. The delivery of an item or an estate.

traditional public forum. See PUBLIC FORUM.

traditional surrogacy. See SURROGACY.

traditionary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

traditio rei. See TRADITIO.

trado tibi ecclesiam (trad-oh tib-ī e-klee-z[h]ee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law & Scots law. I deliver this church (or living) to you. • A patron uttered this phrase when presenting an incumbent to a vacant church. Cf. ACCIPE ECCLESIAM.

traduce (trə-d[y]oos), vb. (16c) To slander; calumniate. — traducement, n.

traffic, n. (16c) 1. Commerce; trade; the sale or exchange of such things as merchandise, bills, and money. 2. The passing or exchange of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money. 3. People or things being transported along a route. 4. The passing to and fro of people, animals, vehicles, and vessels along a transportation route.

traffic, vb. To trade or deal in (goods, esp. illicit drugs or other contraband) <trafficking in heroin>. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷32, 82.] — trafficking, n. — trafficker, n.

traffic balance. The balance of moneys collected in payment for transporting passengers and freight.

traffic court. See COURT.

trafficking. The act of transporting, trading, or dealing, esp. in people or illegal goods. Cf. PEOPLE-SMUGGLING; SMUGGLING.

drug trafficking. The act of illegally producing, importing, selling, or supplying significant amounts of a controlled substance. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↻32, 82.]

human trafficking. The illegal recruitment, transportation, transfer, harboring, or receipt of a person, esp. one from another country, with the intent to hold the person captive or exploit the person for labor, services, or body parts. • Human-trafficking offenses include forced prostitution, forced marriages, sweat-shop labor, slavery, and harvesting organs from unwilling donors. — Also termed trafficking in persons. Cf. PEOPLE-SMUGGLING; organ trafficking.

organ trafficking. Illegal trafficking in human body parts, esp. transplantable organs that are offered to the highest bidder or that have been harvested without the consent of the donor or the donor's next of kin. • In international law, organ trafficking is broadly included in the offense of human trafficking. — Also termed trafficking in persons. Cf. human trafficking.

trafficking in persons. 1. See human trafficking. 2. See organ trafficking.

trafficking in persons. See TRAFFICKING.

traffic regulation. A prescribed rule of conduct for traffic; a rule intended to promote the orderly and safe flow of traffic. [Cases: Automobiles ↻5(5), 7, 335.]

trailer clause. An employee's promise to assign to the employer the rights to all inventions developed while employed and for a specified time afterward. • For the covenant to be enforceable, the time restriction must be reasonable. — Also termed holdover clause.

traitor, n. 1. A person who commits treason against his or her country. [Cases: Treason ↻10.] 2. One who betrays a person, a cause, or an obligation. — traitorous, adj.

tramp, n. 1. A person who roams about from place to place, begging or living without labor or visible means of support; a vagrant. 2. TRAMP STEAMER.

tramp corporation. See CORPORATION.

tramp steamer. A ship that is not scheduled to sail between prearranged ports of call but that stops at those ports for which it has cargo. • A tramp steamer typically carries bulk cargoes such as oil, grain, coal, steel, iron ore, or lumber, and is contracted with a charterparty rather than a bill of lading. — Often shortened to tramp.

tranche (transh), n. [French "slice"] Securities. 1. A bond issue derived from a pooling of similar debt obligations. • A tranche usu. differs from other issues by maturity date or rate of return. 2. A block of bonds designated for sale in a foreign country. — Also spelled tranch; trench. See COLLATERALIZED MORTGAGE OBLIGATION.

transact, vb. 1. To carry on or conduct (negotiations, business, etc.) to a conclusion <transact business>. 2. Civil law. To settle (a dispute) by mutual concession. See TRANSACTION (4). 3. To carry on or conduct negotiations or business <refuses to transact with the enemy>.

transactio (tran-sak-shee-oh), n. [Latin "compromise"] Roman law. The renunciation of a contested claim or defense in litigation in consideration of a quid pro quo. Pl. transactiones (tran-sak-shee-oh-nee-z).

transaction, n. (17c) 1. The act or an instance of conducting business or other dealings; esp., the formation, performance, or discharge of a contract. 2. Something performed or carried out; a business agreement or exchange. 3. Any activity involving two or more persons. 4. Civil law. An agreement that is intended by the parties to prevent or end a dispute and in which they make reciprocal concessions. La. Civ. Code art. 3071. — transactional, adj.

arm's-length transaction. 1. A transaction between two unrelated and unaffiliated parties. 2. A transaction between two parties, however closely related they may be, conducted as if the parties were strangers, so that no conflict of interest arises.

closed transaction. Tax. A transaction in which an amount realized on a sale or exchange can be established for the purpose of stating a gain or loss. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3393.]

colorable transaction. (18c) A sham transaction having the appearance of authenticity; a pretended transaction <the court set aside the colorable transaction>.

transactional audit. See AUDIT.

transactional immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

transactional lawyer. 1. See LAWYER. 2. See OFFICE PRACTITIONER.

transactional takeover defense. See TAKEOVER DEFENSE.

transaction causation. See CAUSATION.

transaction cost. See COST (1).

transaction-or-occurrence test. (1957) A test used to determine whether, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a), a particular claim is a compulsory counterclaim. • Four different tests have been suggested: (1) Are the legal and factual issues raised by the claim and counterclaim largely the same? (2) Would res judicata bar a later suit on the counterclaim in the absence of the compulsory-counterclaim rule? (3) Will substantially the same evidence support or refute both the plaintiff's claim and the counterclaim? (4) Are the claim and counterclaim logically related? See compulsory counterclaim under COUNTERCLAIM. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻776; Set-off and Counterclaim ↻60.] transaction slip. See CONFIRMATION SLIP.

transcarceration. (1987) The movement of prisoners or institutionalized mentally ill persons from facility to facility, rather than from a prison or an institution back to the community, as when a prisoner is transferred to a halfway house or to a drug-treatment facility. [Cases: Prisons ↻13.3, 13.5.]

transcribe, vb. (16c) To make a written or typed copy of (spoken material, esp. testimony).

transcript, n. (14c) A handwritten, printed, or typed copy of testimony given orally; esp., the official record of proceedings in a trial or hearing, as taken down by a court reporter. — Also termed report of proceedings; reporter's record. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 593–611; Criminal Law ⇨ 1104; Federal Courts ⇨ 694.]

transcription. (16c) 1. The act or process of transcribing. 2. Something transcribed; a transcript.

transcript of proceedings. A compilation of all documents relating to a bond issue, typically including the notices, affidavits of notices, a bond resolution (or bond ordinance), official statement, trust indenture and loan agreements, and minutes of meetings of all authorizing bodies.

transeunt cum universitate (tran-see-ənt kəm yoo-ni-vər-sə-tay-tee). [Latin] Hist. They are transferred with the whole estate.

transfer, n. (14c) 1. Any mode of disposing of or parting with an asset or an interest in an asset, including a gift, the payment of money, release, lease, or creation of a lien or other encumbrance. • The term embraces every method — direct or indirect, absolute or conditional, voluntary or involuntary — of disposing of or parting with property or with an interest in property, including retention of title as a security interest and foreclosure of the debtor's equity of redemption. 2. Negotiation of an instrument according to the forms of law. • The four methods of transfer are by indorsement, by delivery, by assignment, and by operation of law. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 176–222.] 3. A conveyance of property or title from one person to another. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 176–222.]

constructive transfer. (1852) A delivery of an item — esp. a controlled substance — by someone other than the owner but at the owner's direction. [Cases: Controlled Substances ⇨ 32, 82.]

incomplete transfer. Tax. A decedent's inter vivos transfer that is not completed for federal estate-tax purposes because the decedent retains significant powers over the property's possession or enjoyment. • Because the transfer is incomplete, some or all of the property's value will be included in the transferor's gross estate. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2036–2038. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4159(3).]

inter vivos transfer (in-tər vi-vohs or vee-vohs). (1930) A transfer of property made during the transferor's lifetime.

testamentary transfer. A transfer made in a will. • The transfer may be of something less than absolute ownership. Cf. testamentary gift under GIFT. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 86.]

transfer in contemplation of death. See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

transfer in fraud of creditors. (1883) A conveyance of property made in an attempt to prevent the transferor's creditors from making a claim to it. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ⇨ 1.]

transfer, vb. (14c) 1. To convey or remove from one place or one person to another; to pass or hand over from one to another, esp. to change over the possession or control of. 2. To sell or give.

transferable (trans-fər-ə-bəl), adj. (14c) Capable of being transferred, together with all rights of the original holder.

transferable letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

transferable vote. See single transferable vote under VOTE (1).

transfer agent. See AGENT (2).

transfer-agent-run dividend-reinvestment plan. See DIVIDEND-REINVESTMENT PLAN.

transferee. One to whom a property interest is conveyed.

transferee liability. (1951) Tax. The liability of a transferee to pay taxes owed by the transferor. • This liability is limited to the value of the asset transferred. The Internal Revenue Service can, for example, force a donee to pay the gift tax when the donor who made the transfer cannot pay it. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 6901–6905. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4817; Taxation ⇨ 3480.]

transference. Scots law. The act of substituting a representative for a deceased litigant in a pending action. • This is similar to the common law's substitution of parties.

transfer hearing. See HEARING.

transfer in fraud of creditors. See TRANSFER.

transfer of a case. (1843) The removal of a case from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority. — Also termed transfer of a cause. See REMOVAL (2). [Cases: Removal of Cases ⇨ 16.]

transfer of venue. See CHANGE OF VENUE.

transferor. (1875) One who conveys an interest in property.

transfer payment. (usu. pl.) (1945) A governmental payment to a person who has neither provided goods or services nor invested money in exchange for the payment. • Examples include unemployment compensation and welfare payments. [Cases: United States ⇨ 82(1).]

transfer price. See PRICE.

transferred intent. See INTENT (1).

transferred-intent doctrine. (1957) The rule that if one person intends to harm a second person but instead unintentionally harms a third, the first person's criminal or tortious intent toward the second applies to the third as well. • Thus, the offender may be prosecuted for an intent crime or sued by the third person for an intentional tort. See INTENT. [Cases: Assault and Battery ↷ 3, 49; Homicide ↷ 555, 702; Torts ↷ 115.]

transfer statute. A provision that allows or mandates the trial of a juvenile as an adult in a criminal court for a criminal act. • Every state has some form of transfer statute. The Supreme Court has held that a juvenile cannot be transferred to criminal court under a discretionary statute “without ceremony — without hearing, without effective assistance of counsel, without a statement of reasons.” Kent v. United States, 383 U.S. 541, 554, 86 S.Ct. 1045, 1053–54 (1966). [Cases: Infants ↷ 68.7.]

automatic-transfer statute. A law requiring the transfer from delinquency court to criminal court for certain statutorily enumerated offenses if certain statutory requirements are met. [Cases: Infants ↷ 68.5, 68.7(2).]

discretionary-transfer statute. A law that allows, but does not mandate, the transfer from delinquency court to criminal court for certain statutorily enumerated offenses if certain statutory requirements are met. • The prosecutor has discretion to request the transfer, and the judge has discretion to order the transfer. [Cases: Infants ↷ 68.7.]

reverse transfer statute. A provision that allows a criminal court to return certain cases to juvenile court. [Cases: Infants ↷ 68.6.]

Transfers to Minors Act. See UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINORS ACT.

transfer tax. See generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX.

transfer warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

transformative use. Copyright. The use of copyrighted material in a manner, or for a purpose, that differs from the original use in such a way that the expression, meaning, or message is essentially new. • The term was coined by Judge Pierre N. Leval in a 1990 law-review article entitled Toward a Fair Use Standard, 103 Harv. L. Rev. 1105, 1111 (1990). The concept was first applied by the U.S. Supreme Court in Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music, Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 114 S.Ct. 1164 (1994). The Court held that the transformative use in that case was a fair, noninfringing use of the plaintiff’s copyright. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷ 53.2.]

transgenic (tranz-jen-ik), adj. Patents. Of, relating to, or describing a living organism that has been genetically altered by introducing recombinant DNA from another organism.

transgress, vb. 1. To exceed the limits of (a law, rule, regulation, etc.); to break or violate. 2. To pass over (limits, boundaries, etc.). — transgressor, n.

transgression. Archaic. See MISDEMEANOR.

transgressione, ad audiendum et terminandum (trans-gres[h]-ee-oh-nee, ad aw-dee-en-dəm et tər-mə-nan-dəm). See DE TRANSGRESSIONE, AD AUDIENDUM ET TERMINANDUM.

transgressive trust. See TRUST.

transient (tran-shənt), adj. (16c) Temporary; impermanent; passing away after a short time.

transient, n. 1. A person or thing whose presence is temporary or fleeting. 2. TRANSIENT PERSON.

transient foreigner. One who visits a country without the intent to remain.

transient jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

transient merchant. A trader who sells merchandise at a temporary location without intending to become a permanent merchant in that place. [Cases: Licenses ↷ 15(2).]

transient person. (18c) One who has no legal residence within a jurisdiction for the purpose of a state venue statute. — Also termed transient. [Cases: Venue ↷ 18.]

transit, n. (15c) 1. The transportation of goods or persons from one place to another. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 2137(3).] 2. Passage; the act of passing.

transitional alimony. See rehabilitative alimony under ALIMONY.

transition phrase. Patents. In a patent claim, the word or phrase that relates the preamble to the body. • The transition is often the term “comprising,” “having,” “including,” “consisting of,” or “consisting essentially of.” Cf. PREAMBLE (2); BODY OF A CLAIM.

transitive covenant. See COVENANT (1).

transitory (tran-sə-tor-ee or tran-zə-), adj. (14c) Passing from place to place; capable of passing or being changed from one place to another.

transitory action. See ACTION (4).

transitory treaty. See TREATY (1).

transitory wrong. See WRONG.

transit passage. Int’l law. The right of a vessel or airplane to exercise freedom of navigation and overflight solely for the purpose of continuous and expeditious transit between one part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone and another part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone. — Also termed right of transit passage. Cf. INNOCENT PASSAGE.

transit terra cum onere (tran-sit [or tran-zit] tər-ə kəm on-ər-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. The land passes with its burdens.

translation, n. 1. The transformation of language from one form to another; esp., the systematic rendering of the language of a book, document, or speech into another language.

“Generally speaking, a translation need not consist of transferring from one language into another; it may apply to the expression of the same thoughts in other words of the same language.” Rasmussen v. Baker, 50 P. 819, 826 (Wyo. 1897).

2. Archaic. The transfer of property. 3. Eccles. law. The removal of a bishop from one diocese to another.

translative (trans- or tranz-lay-tiv), adj. Making or causing a transfer or conveyance.

translative fact. See FACT.

transmission. Civil law. The passing of an inheritance to an heir.

transmit, vb. (15c) 1. To send or transfer (a thing) from one person or place to another. 2. To communicate.

transmittal letter. (1914) A nonsubstantive letter that establishes a record of delivery, such as a letter to a court clerk advising that a particular pleading is enclosed for filing. • Lawyers have traditionally opened transmittal letters with the phrase “Enclosed please find,” even though that phrasing has been widely condemned in business-writing handbooks since the late 19th century. A transmittal letter may properly begin with a range of openers as informal as “Here is” to the more formal “Enclosed is.” — Also termed cover letter.

transmutation. A change in the nature of something; esp., in family law, the transformation of separate property into marital property, or of marital property into separate property. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 252.3(3); Husband and Wife ⇨ 249(6).]

transnational adoption. See international adoption under ADOPTION.

transnational corporation. See multinational corporation under CORPORATION.

transnational law. 1. The amalgam of common principles of domestic and international law dealing esp. with problems arising from agreements made between sovereign states and foreign private parties. 2. The problems to which such principles apply. Cf. INTERNATIONAL LAW.

transparency. Openness; clarity; lack of guile and attempts to hide damaging information. • The word is used of financial disclosures, organizational policies and practices, lawmaking, and other activities where organizations interaction with the public.

transport, vb. To carry or convey (a thing) from one place to another.

transportation, n. (16c) 1. The movement of goods or persons from one place to another by a carrier. 2. Criminal law. A type of punishment that sends the criminal out of the country to another place (usu. a penal colony) for a specified period. Cf. DEPORTATION.

Transportation Security Administration. The federal agency charged with promoting safety and security of air, water, rail, and highway transportation. • The agency was created in the Department of Transportation after the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, and was transferred to the Department of Homeland Security in 2002.

transracial adoption. See ADOPTION.

transsexual. A person born with the physical characteristics of one sex but who has undergone, or is preparing to undergo, sex-change surgery. See SEX REASSIGNMENT.

transshipment. Maritime law. The act of taking cargo out of one ship and loading it on another. • Transshipment may also involve transfer of cargo to another mode of transportation, such as rail or truck. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 112.] — transship, vb.

transvestitive fact. See FACT.

trap, n. (bef. 12c) 1. A device for capturing living creatures, such as a pitfall, snare, or machine that shuts suddenly.

mantrap. A booby-trap; esp., a device to catch a trespasser or burglar. • A mantrap is not illegal if it is designed merely to sound an alarm and not cause bodily harm. Illegal mantraps include manufactured devices such as spring guns, and dangerous hidden conditions (manufactured or natural) that can injure a person, such as pitfalls. — Also spelled man-trap.

2. Any device or contrivance by which one may be caught unawares; stratagem; snare. 3. Torts. An ultra-hazardous hidden peril of which the property owner or occupier, but not a licensee, has knowledge. • A trap can exist even if it was not designed or intended to catch or entrap anything. [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 1040(3).]

trashing. DECONSTRUCTION.

trauma-pricing. See DRAMA-PRICING.

travaux préparatoires (tra-voĥ pray-par-ə-twah[r]z). [French “preparatory works”] Materials used in preparing the ultimate form of an agreement or statute, and esp. of an international treaty; the draft or legislative history of a treaty. See LEGISLATIVE HISTORY.

travel-accident insurance. See INSURANCE.

Travel Act. A federal law, enacted in 1961, that prohibits conduct intended to promote, direct, or manage illegal business activities in interstate commerce. • This statute was enacted to create federal jurisdiction over many criminal activities traditionally handled by state and local governments to help those jurisdictions cope with increasingly complex interstate criminal activity. 18 USCA § 1952. [Cases: Commerce ⇨ 82.10.]

traveled place. (1894) A place where the public has, in some manner, acquired the legal right to travel.

traveler, n. A person who passes from place to place, for any reason.

traveler’s check. See CHECK.

traveler’s letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

travel expense. See EXPENSE.

traverse (trav-ərs), n. (15c) Common-law pleading. A formal denial of a factual allegation made in the opposing party’s pleading <Smith filed a traverse to Allen’s complaint, asserting that he did not knowingly provide false information>. See DENIAL. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 112–129.] — traverse (trav-ərs or trāv-ərs), vb.

"It is said that the technical term traverse, from transverso, to turn over, is applied to an issue taken upon an indictment for a misdemeanor, and means nothing more than turning over or putting off the trial to a following session or assize; and that thus it is that the officer of the court asks the party whether he is ready to try then, or will traverse to the next session; though some have referred its meaning originally to the denying or taking issue upon an indictment, without reference to the delay of trial, and which seems more correct." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 486 (2d ed. 1826).

common traverse. (1841) A traverse consisting of a tender of issue — that is, a denial accompanied by a formal offer for decision of the point denied — with a denial that expressly contradicts the terms of the allegation traversed. — Also termed specific traverse. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 117.]

"The common or specific traverse is an express denial of a particular allegation in the opposing pleading in the terms of the allegation, accompanied by a tender of issue or formal offer of the point denied for trial." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 168, at 303 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

cumulative traverse. (1848) A traverse that analyzes a proposition into its constituent parts and traverses them cumulatively. • It amounts to the same thing as traversing the one entire proposition, since the several parts traversed must all make up one entire proposition or point.

general traverse. (17c) A denial of all the facts in an opponent's pleading.

special traverse. (18c) A denial of one material fact in an opponent's pleading; a traverse that explains or qualifies the denial. • The essential parts of a special traverse are an inducement, a denial, and a verification. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 118.]

specific traverse. See common traverse.

traverse jury. See petit jury under JURY.

traverser, n. (14c) One who traverses or denies a pleading.

traverse the requirement, vb. Patents. To (1) respond in detail to a patent examiner's decision that the patent application claims more than one invention and (2) ask that the restriction requirement be reconsidered. • The traverse must specifically explain why restriction should not be required, not merely assert that the requirement is wrong. Failure to traverse a requirement forfeits any rights to appeal the decision. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 104.]

treachery, n. A deliberate and willful betrayal of trust and confidence.

treason, n. (13c) The offense of attempting to overthrow the government of the state to which one owes allegiance, either by making war against the state or by materially supporting its enemies. — Also termed high treason; alta proditio. Cf. SEDITION. [Cases: Treason ⇨ 1.] — treasonable, treasonous, adj.

"The judgment of high treason was, until very lately, an exception to the merciful tenor of our judgments. The least offensive form which is given in the books is, that the offender 'be carried back to the place from whence he came, and from thence to be drawn to the place of execution, and be there hanged by the neck, and cut down alive, and that his entrails be taken out and burned before his face, and his head cut off, and his body divided into four quarters, and his head and quarters disposed of at the king's pleasure.' Some of the precedents add other circumstances, of still more grossness and aggravation. But this horrible denunciation was very seldom executed in its more terrible niceties." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 702 (2d ed. 1826).

"[S]everal important characteristics marked off high treason from all other crimes. For one thing, it earned a peculiarly ghastly punishment. For another, it was 'unclergyable,' while every felony was 'clergyable' unless some statute had otherwise ordained. Thirdly, while the felon's land escheated to his lord, the traitor's land was forfeited to the king. This last distinction influenced the development of the law." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 500 (2d ed. 1899).

"Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court." U.S. Const. art. III, § 3.

constructive treason. 1. Speech that manifests a desire or intent to make war against the state or materially support an enemy, even though the speech is unaccompanied by acts that further the desire or intent. • There is no crime of constructive treason in U.S. law because treason requires an affirmative act, and intent alone cannot substitute for an act. Cf. SEDITION. [Cases: Treason ⇨ 1.] 2. Hist. Speech that is critical of the government. • This sense arose during the reign of Henry VIII of England. Critical speech remained a capital crime until the early 18th century.

petty treason. Archaic. Murder of one's employer or husband. • Until 1828, this act was considered treason under English law. — Also spelled petit treason.

"The frequent reference to high treason is a carry-over from an ancient division of the offense that has long since disappeared. In the feudal stage of history the relation of lord to vassal was quite similar to the relation of king to subject. The relation of husband to wife came to be regarded in the same category, as also did the relation of master to servant, and that of prelate to clergyman. And just as it was high treason to kill the king, so a malicious homicide was petit treason if it involved a killing of (originally, lord by vassal, and later) husband by wife, master by mistress or servant, or prelate by clergyman. When the special brutality provided by the common law for the punishment of petit treason disappeared, this crime became merged with murder and only one crime of treason remained." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 498-99 (3d ed. 1982).

treasonable misdemeanor. English law. An act that is likely to endanger or alarm the monarch, or disturb the public peace in the presence of the monarch. Cf. TREASON FELONY.

treason felony. English law. An act that shows an intention of committing treason, unaccompanied by any further act to carry out that intention. • This offense usu. results in life imprisonment rather than the death penalty. Cf. TREASONABLE MISDEMEANOR.

Treas. Reg. abbr. TREASURY REGULATION.

treasurer. An organization's chief financial officer. • The treasurer's duties typically include prudently depositing (or, if authorized, investing) and safeguarding the organization's funds and otherwise managing its finances; monitoring compliance with any applicable law relating to such finances and filing any required report; disbursing money as authorized; and reporting to the organization on the state of the treasury. — Also termed finance officer; financial secretary; quartermaster. [Cases: Corporations ↷301.]

city treasurer. A local officer who is responsible for managing municipal funds.

Treasurer, Lord High. See LORD HIGH TREASURER.

Treasurer of the United States. The officer in the U.S. Department of the Treasury responsible for overseeing the operations of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the U.S. Mint.

treasure trove. [Law French "treasure found"] (16c) Valuables (usu. gold or silver) found hidden in the ground or other private place, the owner of which is unknown. • At common law in the United States, the finder of a treasure trove can usu. claim good title against all except the true owner. But until 1996, any treasure trove found in the United Kingdom belonged to the Crown.

"Treasure hid in the earth, not upon the earth, nor in the sea, and coin though not hidden, being found is the king's; we call it treasure trove." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 177 (1759).

"Treasure trove consists essentially of articles of gold and silver, intentionally hidden for safety in the earth or in some secret place, the owner being unknown, although it is probable that the category might include articles made from the required metals buried in the ground for other purposes, for example in connection with an ancient sepulture. In the United States, the state has never claimed title to lost property by virtue of its character as treasure trove, and it has been stated that the law relating thereto is merged with that of lost goods generally, although there is authority for the proposition that while treasure trove in the United States belongs to the finder, found goods not of that character go to the owner of the locus in quo." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 13, at 27-28 (2d ed. 1955).

Treasuries. (1922) Debt obligations of the federal government backed by the full faith and credit of the government. See TREASURY BILL; TREASURY BOND; TREASURY CERTIFICATE; TREASURY NOTE. [Cases: United States ↷89-91.]

treasury. 1. A place or building in which stores of wealth are kept; esp., a place where public revenues are deposited and kept and from which money is disbursed to defray government expenses. [Cases: United States ↷81.] 2. (cap.) DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.

Treasury, First Lord. See FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.

Treasury Bench. In the British House of Commons, the first row of seats on the right hand of the speaker. • The Treasury Bench is occupied by the First Lord of the Treasury or principal minister of the Crown.

Treasury bill. (18c) A short-term debt security issued by the federal government, with a maturity of 13,

26, or 52 weeks. • These bills — auctioned weekly or quarterly — pay interest in the form of the difference between their discounted purchase price and their par value at maturity. — Abbr. T-bill. [Cases: United States ↷89.]

Treasury bond. (1858) A long-term debt security issued by the federal government, with a maturity of 10 to 30 years. • These bonds are considered risk-free, but they usu. pay relatively little interest. — Abbr. T-bond. [Cases: United States ↷91.]

TIPS bond. A treasury bond whose face value is adjusted to keep pace with the inflation rate. • The acronym TIPS stands for Treasury inflation-protected securities. — Abbr. TIPS.

treasury certificate. An obligation of the federal government maturing in one year and on which interest is paid on a coupon basis. [Cases: United States ↷90.]

Treasury Department. See DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.

Treasury inflation-protected securities. See TIPS bond under TREASURY BOND.

Treasury note. (18c) An intermediate-term debt security issued by the federal government, with a maturity of two to ten years. • These notes are considered risk-free, but they usu. pay relatively little interest. — Abbr. T-note. [Cases: United States ↷90.]

Treasury Regulation. (1860) A regulation promulgated by the U.S. Treasury Department to explain or interpret a section of the Internal Revenue Code. • Treasury Regulations are binding on all taxpayers. — Abbr. Treas. Reg. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3038-3042, 3045, 3048.]

treasury security. See treasury stock under STOCK.

treasury share. See treasury stock under STOCK.

treasury stock. See STOCK.

treasury warrant. See WARRANT (2).

treating-physician rule. The principle that a treating physician's diagnoses and findings about the degree of a social-security claimant's impairment are binding on an administrative-law judge in the absence of substantial contrary evidence. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ↷143.65.]

treaty. 1. An agreement formally signed, ratified, or adhered to between two nations or sovereigns; an international agreement concluded between two or more states in written form and governed by international law. — Also termed accord; convention; covenant; declaration; pact. Cf. EXECUTIVE AGREEMENT. [Cases: Treaties ↷1.]

"[T]he legal terminology used by the United States to describe international agreements is markedly different from that employed elsewhere. Under the U.S. Constitution, the term 'treaty' has a particular meaning — an agreement made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate." David J. Bederman, International Law Frameworks 158 (2001).

commercial treaty. A bilateral or multilateral treaty concerning trade or other mercantile activities. ● Such a treaty may be general in nature, as by supplying the framework of long-term commercial relations. Or it may be specific, as by detailing the conditions of particular branches of trade or other commercial transactions. Sometimes a treaty of this kind deals with an individual project, such as a guaranty agreement. [Cases: Treaties ↻ 8.]

defensive treaty. A treaty in which each party agrees to come to the other's aid if one is attacked by another nation. See treaty of alliance.

"Defensive treaties, as generally understood, are made to secure the parties to them against aggression from other states. They may, also, aim at the maintenance of internal quiet, or of neutrality amid the conflicts of neighboring powers. To attempt to gain any of these objects is not necessarily contrary to the law of nations or to natural justice. Mutual aid, indeed, against the disturbers of internal quiet, may secure an absolute government against popular revolutions in favor of liberty, but if a confederation or alliance may secure to its members the enjoyment of free institutions, there is no reason, as far as international law is concerned, why institutions of an opposite kind may not support themselves in the same way." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 107, at 171 (5th ed. 1878).

dispositive treaty (dis-poz-ə-tiv). A treaty by which a country takes over territory by impressing a special character on it, creating something analogous to a servitude or easement in private law.

guarantee treaty. An agreement between countries directly or indirectly establishing a unilateral or reciprocal guarantee. — Also spelled guaranty treaty. — Also termed treaty of guarantee; quasi-guarantee treaty; pseudo-guarantee treaty.

"In many instances where the term 'guarantee' is used in international treaties, the contracting parties merely intend to underline their willingness to comply with the obligation they have entered into. Obligations of this kind do not fall within the concept of guarantee in the proper sense of the term. In this particular respect, the expression 'pseudo-guarantees' or 'quasi-guarantee treaties' is used." George Ress, "Guarantee Treaties," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 634 (1995).

mixed treaty. A treaty with characteristics of different types of treaties, esp. contrasting types (e.g., permanent and transitory, or personal and real).

nonaggression treaty. See NONAGGRESSION PACT.

nonproliferation treaty. A treaty forbidding the transfer of nuclear weapons from a country with a nuclear arsenal to one that does not have nuclear-weapons capability. ● The first such treaty was concluded in 1968, and now more than 100 nations have agreed to its terms. — Also termed nuclear-nonproliferation treaty.

offensive treaty. A treaty in which the parties agree to declare war jointly on another nation and join forces to wage the war. See treaty of alliance.

peace treaty. A treaty signed by heads of state to end a war. — Also termed treaty of peace. Cf. TRUCE. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↻ 33.]

"A peace differs not from a truce essentially in the length of its contemplated duration, for there may be very long armistices and a state of peace continuing only a definite number of years. The ancients often concluded treaties of peace which were to expire after a certain time . . ." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 158, at 268 (5th ed. 1878).

permanent treaty. A treaty that contemplates ongoing performance (as with a treaty of neutrality).

personal treaty. Hist. A treaty relating exclusively to the contracting sovereign as a person. ● Examples of personal treaties are family alliances and treaties guaranteeing the throne to a particular sovereign and his or her family. With the advent of constitutional government in Europe, personal treaties have lost their importance.

pseudo-guarantee treaty. See guarantee treaty.

quasi-guarantee treaty. See guarantee treaty.

real treaty. A treaty relating solely to the subject matter of the compact, independently of the persons of the contracting sovereigns. ● Real treaties continue to bind the state even when the heads of government change.

transitory treaty. A treaty carried into effect once and for all, so that it is complete when the act has been performed (as with a treaty of cession).

treaty of alliance. A treaty establishing mutual and reciprocal support obligations. ● A treaty of alliance may be for support in defense, aggression, or both. See defensive treaty; offensive treaty.

"A treaty of alliance can bind the parties to no injustice, nor justify either of them in being accessory to an act of bad faith on the part of another. Hence a defensive, still more an offensive alliance, can only contemplate, if lawful, the warding off of intended injustice." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 107, at 172 (5th ed. 1878).

treaty of guarantee. See guarantee treaty.

treaty of neutrality. A treaty in which the parties agree not to engage in any aggressive action against one another, whether individually or jointly with others, and not to interfere with the other party's affairs. ● There is no commitment to aid another party in the event of war — only to refrain from becoming involved.

"Treaties of neutrality are reciprocal engagements to have no part in the conflicts between other powers — to remain at peace in an apprehended or an actual war. They are suggested by, and prevent the evils of that interference of nations in each other's affairs, for the preservation of the balance of power or the safety of the parties interfering, which is so common in modern history." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 107, at 172 (5th ed. 1878).

treaty of peace. See peace treaty.

2. A contract or agreement between insurers providing for treaty reinsurance. See treaty reinsurance under REINSURANCE. [Cases: Insurance ↻ 3593.] 3. A negotiated contract or agreement between private persons.

private treaty. An agreement to convey property negotiated by the buyer and seller or their agents. • This term is esp. common in the U.K.

Treaty Clause. The constitutional provision giving the President the power to make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate. U.S. Const. art. II, § 2. [Cases: Treaties ↻2.]

treaty-created law. See CONVENTIONAL LAW.

treaty-made law. See CONVENTIONAL LAW.

treaty of reinsurance. See REINSURANCE TREATY.

treaty power. (1835) The President's constitutional authority to make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate. See TREATY CLAUSE. [Cases: Treaties ↻2.]

treaty reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

treble damages. See DAMAGES.

trebucket (tree-bək-it). See CASTIGATORY.

trend. A price pattern in the stock market generally or in a particular stock.

major trend. A long-term trend of the stock market; a general increase or decrease of stock prices over an extended period. — Also termed fundamental trend.

market trend. The direction of stock-market prices over a several-month period.

trespass (tres-pəs or tres-pas), n. (13c) 1. An unlawful act committed against the person or property of another; esp., wrongful entry on another's real property. Cf. unlawful entry under ENTRY (1). [Cases: Trespass ↻1-15.] 2. At common law, a legal action for injuries resulting from an unlawful act of this kind. 3. Archaic. MISDEMEANOR. — trespass, vb. — trespassory (tres-pə-sor-ee), adj.

"The familiar legend on notice-boards, 'Trespassers will be prosecuted,' implies that it is a crime, but this may usually be dismissed as 'a wooden lie.' Yet in time past the idea was correct, for trespass of any sort was punishable by fine and imprisonment as well as redressible by an action for damages, and actually it was not until 1694 that the punitive element disappeared although it had faded into obsolescence long before that date. But nowadays trespass is never criminal except under special statutes which make it punishable . . ." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 90, at 307 (5th ed. 1950).

"The term trespass has been used by lawyers and laymen in three senses of varying degrees of generality. (1) In its widest and original signification it includes any wrongful act — any infringement or transgression of the rule of right. This use is common in the Authorised Version of the Bible, and was presumably familiar when that version was first published. But it never obtained recognition in the technical language of the law, and is now archaic even in popular speech. (2) In a second and narrower signification — its true legal sense — the term means any legal wrong for which the appropriate remedy was a writ of trespass — viz. any direct and forcible injury to person, land, or chattels. (3) The third and narrowest meaning of the term is that in which, in accordance with popular speech, it is limited to one particular kind of trespass in the second sense — viz. the tort of trespass to land (trespass quare clausum fregit)." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 4 (17th ed. 1977).

"Before the word 'misdemeanor' became well established the old writers tended to use the word 'trespass' to indicate an offense below the grade of felony. And it was used at times by Blackstone for this purpose, as in the phrase 'treason, felony, or trespass.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 405 (3d ed. 1982).

cattle-trespass. Hist. Trespass by one's cattle or other animals on another's land, as a result of which the other might either distrain them damage feasant or sue for trespass in the local courts. • At first (from the early 13th century) this type of trespass applied only to intentional trespass by the keeper of the cattle, but in 1353 it was extended to beasts that had merely escaped. This type of trespass gave rise to strict liability. [Cases: Animals ↻89.]

"It has long been settled that liability for cattle-trespass is independent of negligence, and it is that which constitutes its strictness. And, in spite of some confusion in time past, it is quite distinct from the scienter type of liability. In Lee v. Riley [(1865), 18 C.B. (N.S.) 722] the defendant's mare strayed through a gap in his fence, which it was his duty to repair, to the plaintiff's land and there quarrelled with and kicked the plaintiff's horse. The defendant was held liable for cattle-trespass. A great deal of argument was expended at the trial on whether the defendant had notice of the ferocious disposition of his mare, but Erle, C.J., pointed out that, however relevant that might have been in a scienter action, it was beside the mark in one for cattle-trespass." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 148, at 518 (5th ed. 1950).

constructive trespass. See trespass to chattels.

continuing trespass. A trespass in the nature of a permanent invasion on another's rights, such as a sign that overhangs another's property. [Cases: Trespass ↻51.]

criminal trespass. 1. A trespass on property that is clearly marked against trespass by signs or fences. [Cases: Trespass ↻81.] 2. A trespass in which the trespasser remains on the property after being ordered off by a person authorized to do so.

innocent trespass. A trespass committed either unintentionally or in good faith. [Cases: Trespass ↻2.]

joint trespass. A trespass that two or more persons have united in committing, or that some have actually committed while others commanded, encouraged, or directed it. [Cases: Trespass ↻31.]

permanent trespass. A trespass consisting of a series of acts, done on consecutive days, that are of the same nature and that are renewed or continued from day to day, so that the acts in the aggregate form one indivisible harm.

trespass ab initio (ab i-nish-ee-oh). An entry on land that, though begun innocently or with a privilege, is deemed a trespass from the beginning because of conduct that abuses the privilege. [Cases: Trespass ↻13.]

trespass by relation. A trespass committed when the plaintiff had a right to immediate possession of land but had not yet exercised that right. • When the plaintiff takes possession, a legal fiction treats the plaintiff as having had possession ever since the accrual of the right of entry. This is known as trespass by relation because the plaintiff's possession relates back to the time when the plaintiff first acquired a right to possession.

trespass de bonis asportatis (dee boh-nis as-pør-tay-tis). [Latin "trespass for carrying goods away"] 1. A wrongful taking of chattels. • This type of trespassing taking was also an element of common-law larceny. 2. At common law, an action to recover damages for the wrongful taking of chattels. — Abbr. trespass d.b.a. — Often shortened to trespass de bonis. — Also termed trespass to personal property. [Cases: Trespass ⇨6.]

trespass on the case. (15c) At common law, an action to recover damages that are not the immediate result of a wrongful act but rather a later consequence. • This action was the precursor to a variety of modern-day tort claims, including negligence, nuisance, and business torts. — Often shortened to case. — Also termed action on the case; breve de transgressionem super casum. [Cases: Trespass ⇨1, 16, 17.]

"The most important of the writs framed under the authority of the statute of Westminster 2 is that of 'trespass on the case,' to meet cases analogous to trespass in delict, but lacking the element of direct or immediate force or violence. This writ gave a form of action in which the court was enabled to render judgment of damages in cases of fraud, deceit, negligence, want of skill, defamation oral or written, and all other injurious acts or omissions resulting in harm to person or property, but wanting the vi et armis, the element of direct force and violence, to constitute trespass." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 7 (2d ed. 1899).

"Common law recognizes a distinction between the actions of trespass vi et armis (or simply trespass) and trespass on the case. This distinction has been expressed by stating that a tort committed by the direct application of force is remediable by an action for trespass, while a tort accomplished indirectly is a matter for trespass on the case. Other authority makes the distinction on the basis of the defendant's intent, stating that trespass involves a willful and deliberate act while trespass on the case contemplates an act or omission resulting from negligence." 1 Am. Jur. 2d Actions § 23, at 738 (1994).

trespass quare clausum fregit (kwair-ee-klaw-zəm-free-jit). [Latin "why he broke the close"] (17c) 1. A person's unlawful entry on another's land that is visibly enclosed. • This tort consists of doing any of the following without lawful justification: (1) entering upon land in the possession of another, (2) remaining on the land, or (3) placing or projecting any object upon it. 2. At common law, an action to recover damages resulting from another's unlawful entry on one's land that is visibly enclosed. — Abbr. trespass q.c.f. — Also termed trespass to real property; trespass to land; quare clausum querentis fregit. See trespass vi et armis. [Cases: Trespass ⇨10, 16, 17.]

"Every unwarrantable entry on another's soil the law entitles a trespasser by breaking his close; the words of the writ of trespass commanding the defendant to shew cause, quare clausum querentis fregit. For every man's land is in the eye of the law enclosed and set apart from his neighbour's: and that either by a visible and material fence, as one field is divided from another by a hedge; or, by an ideal invisible boundary, existing only in the contemplation of law, as when one man's land adjoins to another's in the same field. And every such entry or breach of a man's close carries necessarily along with it some damage or other: for, if no other special loss can be assigned, yet still the words of the writ itself specify one general damage, viz. the treading down and bruising his herbage." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 209–10 (1768).

trespass to chattels. (1843) The act of committing, without lawful justification, any act of direct physical interference with a chattel possessed by another. • The act must amount to a direct forcible injury. — Also termed trespass to goods; constructive trespass. [Cases: Trespass ⇨5.]

"Trespass to goods is a wrongful interference with the possession of them. It may take innumerable forms, such as scratching the panel of a coach, removing a tire from a car, injuring or destroying goods, or in the case of animals, beating or killing them, or infecting them with disease. All that is necessary is that the harm done should be direct . . ." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 99, at 345 (5th ed. 1950).

trespass to goods. See trespass to chattels.

trespass to land. See trespass quare clausum fregit (2).

trespass to personal property. See trespass de bonis asportatis.

trespass to real property. See trespass quare clausum fregit (2).

trespass to try title. (1826) 1. In some states, an action for the recovery of property unlawfully withheld from an owner who has the immediate right to possession. 2. A procedure under which a claim to title may be adjudicated.

trespass vi et armis (vi et ahr-mis). [Latin "with force and arms"] (17c) 1. At common law, an action for damages resulting from an intentional injury to person or property, esp. if by violent means; trespass to the plaintiff's person, as in illegal assault, battery, wounding, or imprisonment, when not under color of legal process, or when the battery, wounding, or imprisonment was in the first instance lawful, but unnecessary violence was used or the imprisonment continued after the process had ceased to be lawful. • This action also lay for injury to relative rights, such as menacing tenants or servants, beating and wounding a spouse, criminal conversation with or seducing a wife, or debauching a daughter or servant. 2. See trespass quare clausum fregit. • In this sense, the "force" is implied by the "breaking" of the close (that is, an enclosed area), even if no real force is used. [Cases: Trespass ⇨17.]

trespass d.b.a. See trespass de bonis asportatis under TRESPASS.

trespasser. (14c) One who commits a trespass; one who intentionally and without consent or privilege enters another's property. • In tort law, a landholder owes no duty to unforeseeable trespassers. Cf. INVITEE; LICENSEE (2). [Cases: Trespass ⇨9.]

"The word 'trespasser' has an ugly sound, but it covers the wicked and the innocent. The burglar and the arrogant squatter are trespassers, but so are all sorts of comparatively innocent and respectable persons such as a walker in the countryside who unhindered strolls across an open field. Perhaps much of the trouble in this area has arisen from 'the simplistic stereotype' of the definition. The courts are therefore beginning to recognise that the duty of the occupier may vary according to the nature of the trespasser." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 278 (17th ed. 1977).

innocent trespasser. (1888) One who enters another's land unlawfully, but either inadvertently or believing in a right to do so. [Cases: Trespass ↷2, 23.]

trespass for mesne profits. Hist. An action — supplementing an action for ejectment — brought against a tenant in possession to recover the profits wrongfully received during the tenant's occupation. [Cases: Ejectment ↷128.]

trespass q.c.f. See trespass quare clausum fregit under TRESPASS.

tret (tret), n. An allowance or abatement of a certain weight or quantity that a seller makes to a buyer because of water or dust that may be mixed with a commodity. Cf. TARE.

triable, adj. (15c) Subject or liable to judicial examination and trial .

triable either way. English law. (Of an offense) prosecutable either in the Crown Court or in a magistrates' court.

"The criminal courts in England and Wales are the magistrates' courts and the Crown Court. Those offences considered least serious are summary offences, triable only in the magistrates' courts. Those offences considered most serious are triable only on indictment, in the Crown Court. A large number of offences, such as theft and most burglaries, are 'triable either way,' in a magistrates' court or the Crown Court. For these offences the defendant can elect to be tried at the Crown Court, where there is a judge and jury. If the defendant does not wish a Crown Court trial, the magistrates may decide (having heard representations from the prosecutor) that the case is so serious that it should be committed to the Crown Court for trial." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 16 (1991).

trial. (15c) A formal judicial examination of evidence and determination of legal claims in an adversary proceeding. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷1951; Trial ↷18.]

abortive trial. See MISTRIAL.

bench trial. (1954) A trial before a judge without a jury. • The judge decides questions of fact as well as questions of law. — Also termed trial to the bench; nonjury trial; court trial; trial before the court (abbr. TBC); judge trial. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷247–260.13; Federal Civil Procedure ↷2251; Trial ↷367–387.]

bifurcated trial. (1945) A trial that is divided into two stages, such as for guilt and punishment or for liability and damages. — Also termed two-stage trial. Cf. SEVERANCE (2). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷1954; Sentencing and Punishment ↷334; Trial ↷3.]

closed trial. A trial that is not open to the public, usu. because of some overriding concern such as a need to protect a child's anonymity or for security. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷635; Federal Civil Procedure ↷1951; Trial ↷20.]

court trial. See bench trial.

fair trial. See FAIR TRIAL.

joint trial. (18c) A trial involving two or more parties; esp., a criminal trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷622.]

judge trial. See bench trial.

jury trial. (18c) A trial in which the factual issues are determined by a jury, not by the judge. — Also termed trial by jury.

mock trial. See MOCK TRIAL.

new trial. (16c) A postjudgment retrial or reexamination of some or all of the issues determined in an earlier judgment. • The trial court may order a new trial by motion of a party or on the court's own initiative. Also, when an appellate court reverses the trial court's judgment, it may remand the case to the trial court for a new trial on some or all of the issues on which the reversal is based. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 59; Fed. R. Crim. P. 33. See MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; REMAND. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷905–965; Federal Civil Procedure ↷2311; New Trial ↷0.5.] nonbinding minitrial. See summary jury trial.

nonbinding summary jury trial. See summary jury trial.

nonjury trial. See bench trial.

perfect trial. A trial free from all error.

political trial. (18c) A trial (esp. a criminal prosecution) in which either the prosecution or the defendant (or both) uses the proceedings as a platform to espouse a particular political belief; a trial of a person for a political crime. See SHOW TRIAL.

public trial. A trial that anyone may attend or observe. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷635; Federal Civil Procedure ↷1951; Trial ↷20.]

separate trial. (18c) 1. Criminal procedure. The individual trial of each of several persons jointly accused of a crime. Fed. R. Crim. P. 14. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷622] 2. Civil procedure. Within a single action, a distinct trial of a separate claim or issue — or of a group of claims or issues — ordered by the trial judge, usu. to conserve resources or avoid prejudice. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b). Cf. SEVERANCE (2). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷1953–1965; Trial ↷3.] short-cause trial. See short cause under CAUSE (3).

show trial. See SHOW TRIAL.

speedy trial. See SPEEDY TRIAL.

state trial. A trial for a political offense.

summary jury trial. (1984) A settlement technique in which the parties argue before a mock jury, which then reaches a nonbinding verdict that will assist the parties in evaluating their positions. — Also termed nonbinding summary jury trial; nonbinding minitrial. Cf. MOCK TRIAL. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2252.]

trial at bar. Hist. A trial before all the judges of the court in which the proceedings take place. — Also termed trial at the bar.

trial at nisi prius (ni-si pri-əs). Hist. A trial before the justices of assize and nisi prius in the county where the facts are alleged to have occurred, and from which county the jurors have been summoned.

trial before the court. See bench trial.

trial by battle. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

trial by certificate. Hist. A trial in which the issue is decided on evidence in the form of witnesses' certificates of what they individually know.

trial by combat. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

trial by duel. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

trial by inspection. Hist. A trial in which the judge decided the dispute by individual observation and investigation, without the benefit of a jury.

trial by jury. See jury trial.

trial by ordeal. See ORDEAL.

trial by record. Hist. A trial in which, a record having been pleaded by one party and denied by the other, the record is inspected in order to decide the dispute, no other evidence being admissible. See NUL TIEL RECORD.

trial by the country. See trial per pais.

trial by the record. A trial in which one party insists that a record exists to support its claim and the opposing party denies the existence of such a record. • If the record can be produced, the court will consider it in reaching a verdict — otherwise, it will rule for the opponent.

trial de novo (dee or di noh-voh). (18c) A new trial on the entire case — that is, on both questions of fact and issues of law — conducted as if there had been no trial in the first instance. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 892; Criminal Law ⇨ 260; Federal Courts ⇨ 776.]

trial in absentia. A trial held without the accused being present. • In the United States, a trial may be held in absentia only if the accused has either voluntarily left after the trial has started else has so disrupted the proceedings that the judge orders the accused's removal as a last resort. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 636.]

trial on the merits. (18c) A trial on the substantive issues of a case, as opposed to a motion hearing or interlocutory matter.

trial per pais (pär pay or pajs). [Law French "trial by the country"] (17c) Trial by jury. — Also termed trial by the country. Cf. CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY; GOING TO THE COUNTRY; PATRIA (3).

trial to the bench. See bench trial.

trifurcated trial. (1959) A trial that is divided into three stages, such as for liability, general damages, and special damages. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1961; Trial ⇨ 3(5.1).]

two-stage trial. See bifurcated trial.

trial brief. See BRIEF.

trial by combat. Hist. A trial that is decided by personal battle between the disputants, common in Europe and England during the Middle Ages; specif., a trial in which the person accused fought with the accuser, the idea being that God would give victory to the person in the right. • This method was introduced into England by the Normans after 1066, but it was a widely detested innovation and was little used. It became obsolete several centuries before being formally abolished in 1818, having been replaced in practice by the grand assize and indictment. — Also termed trial by battle; trial by wager of battle; trial by duel; judicial combat; duel; duellum; wager of battle; ornest; vadiatio duelli; wehading. See JUDICIUM DEI.

Tribal Court. Under the Indian Child Welfare Act, a court with child-custody jurisdiction that is (1) a Court of Indian Offenses, (2) a court established and operated under an Indian tribe's code or custom, or (3) any other tribal administrative body that is vested with authority over child-custody proceedings. • The Tribal Court is composed of tribal members, is usu. situated on the reservation, and varies in its characteristics from tribe to tribe. It is not part of any state's judicial system, instead operating more or less as a judicial system of a foreign nation. See INDIAN CHILD WELFARE ACT. [Cases: Indians ⇨ 134(3).] tribal-exhaustion doctrine. The general principle that when an Indian tribal court, original or appellate, has personal and subject-matter jurisdiction, the parties must pursue all remedies available under tribal law before turning to nontribal courts. • A federal court may review a challenge to jurisdiction only after the tribal court has established it has jurisdiction and determined the case on the merits. See National Farmer's Union Ins. Co. v. Crow Tribe, 471 U.S. 845, 856–57, 105 S.Ct. 2447, 2454 (1985).

tribal land. A part of an Indian reservation that is not allotted to or occupied by individual Indians but is held as the tribe's common land. Cf. INDIAN LAND. [Cases: Indians ↻151.]

tribunal (tri-byoo-nəl). (15c) 1. A court or other adjudicatory body. 2. The seat, bench, or place where a judge sits.

tributary (trib-yə-ter-ee), n. (14c) A stream flowing directly or indirectly into a river.

tribute (trib-yoot), n. (14c) 1. An acknowledgment of gratitude or respect. 2. A contribution that a sovereign raises from its subjects to defray the expenses of state. 3. Money paid by an inferior sovereign or state to a superior one to secure the latter's friendship and protection.

tributum (tri-byoo-təm), n. [Latin] Roman law. Originally, a war tax; later, a regular tax on land or persons in the Roman provinces.

tri-chad. See CHAD.

trier of fact. See FACT-FINDER.

trifurcated trial. See TRIAL.

trigamy (trig-ə-mee), n. (17c) The act of marrying a person while legally married to someone else and bigamously married to yet another. [Cases: Bigamy ↻1.]

"Trigamy, literally three marriages, is often used for a special situation. 'Trigamy,' in the sense of the special problem of the third wife, stems from the premise that invalidity of the alleged prior marriage is a good defense to a charge of bigamy. Thus in a bigamy prosecution a so-called common-law marriage can be relied upon to establish either the first or second marriage, if it is recognized in the jurisdiction as giving rise to the marital status, but cannot be relied upon where it is not so recognized. A logical result is that a charge of bigamy may be defeated by showing that the alleged prior marriage, relied upon to support the charge, was itself void because of an even earlier marriage existing at the time—as was held about 1648 in Lady Madison's Case. For example, D marries A, and afterward while A is alive marries B, and still later when A is dead but B alive, marries C. The marriage to C is not bigamy because the marriage to B was bigamous and void." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 458 (3d ed. 1982).

triggering condition. See CONDITION (2).

Trinity House. Maritime law. A British corporation chartered in 1514 to train and license pilots and officially regulate pilotage. • Trinity House has also erected and maintained aids to navigation, such as lighthouses and buoys, on the coasts of Great Britain.

Trinity sittings. English law. A term of court beginning on May 22 of each year and ending on June 12. • This was known until 1875 as Trinity term. Cf. EASTER SITTINGS; HILARY SITTINGS; MICHAELMAS SITTINGS.

tripartite (tri-pahr-tīt), adj. (15c) Involving, composed of, or divided into three parts or elements .

tripartite lease. See finance lease under LEASE.

tripartite test. Patents. A judicial test for determining patent infringement by looking at whether a challenged device or process, though outside the literal scope of the patent claims, performs the function in substantially the same way. See SUBSTANTIAL EQUIVALENT.

triple damages. See treble damages under DAMAGES.

triple net lease. See net-net-net lease under LEASE.

triple ordeal. See ORDEAL.

triple trigger. Insurance. (1981) A theory of coverage providing that all insurers on a risk must cover a loss from the day a claimant is first exposed to an injury-producing product (such as asbestos) to the date of diagnosis or death, whichever occurs first. • This term was first used in Keene Corp. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 667 F.2d 1034 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert denied, 445 U.S. 1007, 102 S.Ct. 1644 (1982). — Also termed continuous trigger. Cf. ACTUAL-INJURY TRIGGER; EXPOSURE THEORY; MANIFESTATION THEORY. [Cases: Insurance ↻2265.]

triplicatio (trip-li-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A defendant's response to a plaintiff's replicatio. Pl. triplicationes (trip-li-kay-shee-oh-nee-z). See REPLICATIO. Cf. QUADRUPPLICATIO.

TRIPs. abbr. Intellectual property. The Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, a treaty that harmonized and strengthened the intellectual-property laws of its signatories by linking the obligation to protect the intellectual-property rights of other members' citizens with a mechanism for settling international trade disputes. • TRIPs was negotiated at the 1994 Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). More than 150 nations are parties to the agreement. In the field of patents, TRIPs standardized patentable subject matter to include medicines, required testing for nonobviousness and utility, and protected patentees from infringing imports. In response to the agreement Congress (1) changed patent terms to 20 years from the date of application, rather than 17 years from the date of issue; (2) allowed foreign filers to prove priority by inventive efforts that preceded filing; (3) widened the definition of infringement to cover offering for sale and importing; and (4) permitted provisional applications, with brief descriptions and no claims, to establish priority. 33 I.L.M. 1197. In the field of copyrights, TRIPs incorporates most of the provisions of the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary or Artistic Works, and sets the length of copyright protection as the life of the author plus 50 years. In the field of trademarks, TRIPs sets the initial term of a trademark registration as not less than seven years, and makes it renewable indefinitely. Nations subject to TRIPs may make registrability dependent on use but may not require use as a condition for filing an application. — Also written TRIPS. — Also termed TRIPs Agreement.

"Articles 1-8 of TRIPS include the basic principles of national treatment and most-favoured-nation treatment. That is, each Member must give to the nationals of other Members treatment no less favourable than that given to its own nationals, and must give to the nationals of all Members the same privileges as are given to the nationals of any Member. Thus, subject to certain exemptions, bilateral agreements between Members should no longer be permitted." Philip W. Grubb, Patents for Chemicals, Pharmaceuticals and Biotechnology 31 (3d ed. 1999).

TRO (tee-ahr-oh). abbr. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER.

troubled asset. See ASSET.

trover (troh-vər). (16c) A common-law action for the recovery of damages for the conversion of personal property, the damages generally being measured by the property's value. — Also termed trover and conversion. Cf. DETINUE; REPLEVIN. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨ 1, 43.]

"Trover may be maintained for all kinds of personal property, including legal documents, but not where articles are severed from land by an adverse possessor, at least until recovery of possession of the land. It lies for the misappropriation of specific money, but not for breach of an obligation to pay where there is no duty to return specific money." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 43, at 99 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

truancy (troo-ən-see), n. (18c) The act or state of shirking responsibility; esp., willful and unjustified failure to attend school by one who is required to attend. [Cases: Schools ⇨ 161.] — truant, adj. & n.

truancy officer. An official responsible for enforcing laws mandating school attendance for minors of specified ages (usu. 16 and under). — Also termed truant officer; attendance officer. [Cases: Schools ⇨ 161.]

truant, n. A person who without permission is absent from work or school or who shirks a duty. [Cases: Schools ⇨ 161.]

truce. Int'l law. A suspension or temporary cessation of hostilities by agreement between belligerent powers. — Also termed armistice; ceasefire; suspension of arms. Cf. peace treaty under TREATY (1). [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨ 33.] — crucial, adj.

general truce. A truce suspending hostilities in all places.

special truce. A truce referring only to operations before a specific fortress or in a district, or between certain detachments of armies. — Also termed partial truce.

truck. Hist. Scots law. The payment of wages in scrip or goods. • Truck systems, once common where workers had to live in isolated areas and depended on company stores for food and clothing, were abolished in the 19th century.

"Truck was payment not in money but in goods or tickets which could be exchanged for goods. . . . The principle that contractors could buy in bulk and retail to the workmen, deducting the cost from their wages, was sound but was open to abuse; in fact truck became a means of robbery. Railway contractors frequently made more profit from truck than from the contract. . . . Truck shops, frequently called tommy shops or tally shops, might be run by the contractor or let by him to an associate or a shopkeeper for a rent or on the basis that part of the shop profits would go back to the contractor. The goods were frequently inferior and sold at excessive prices. David M. Walker, 6 A Legal History of Scotland 820 (2001).

true admission. See judicial admission under ADMISSION (1).

true and correct. Authentic; accurate; unaltered <we have forwarded a true and correct copy of the expert's report>. — Also termed true and exact.

true bill, n. (18c) A grand jury's notation that a criminal charge should go before a petty jury for trial <the grand jury returned a true bill, and the state prepared to prosecute>. — Also termed billa vera. Cf. NO BILL. [Cases: Grand Jury ⇨ 42.]

true-bill, vb. To make or deliver a true bill on <the grand jury true-billed the indictment>.

true copy. See COPY.

true defense. See DEFENSE (1).

true legal impossibility. See legal impossibility (1) under IMPOSSIBILITY.

true mark. See technical trademark under TRADEMARK.

true residue. See CLEAR RESIDUE.

true trademark. See technical trademark under TRADEMARK.

true value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

true-value rule. The rule requiring that one who subscribes for and receives corporate stock must pay par value for it, in either money or its equivalent, so that a corporation's real assets square with its books. • If true value is less than par value, the stock is deemed unpaid for to the full extent of the difference, and the affected shareholder is liable to creditors for the difference, notwithstanding the directors' good faith. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 232.]

trust, n. (15c) 1. The right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property to which another person holds the legal title; a property interest held by one person (the trustee) at the request of another (the settlor) for the benefit of a third party (the beneficiary). • For a trust to be valid, it must involve specific property, reflect the settlor's intent, and be created for a lawful purpose. The two primary types of trusts are private trusts and charitable trusts (see below). [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 1.] 2. A fiduciary relationship regarding property and charging the person with title to the property with equitable duties to deal with it for another's benefit; the confidence placed in a trustee, together with the trustee's obligations toward the property and the beneficiary. • A trust arises as a result of a manifestation of an intention to create it. See fiduciary relationship under RELATIONSHIP. 3. The property so held; CORPUS (1).

"One must distinguish, . . . [in] countries where English is spoken, between a wide and a narrow sense of the word 'trust.' In the wide sense a trust exists when property is to be held or administered by one person on behalf of another or for some purpose other than his own benefit. . . . In the narrow or strict sense a trust exists when the creator of the trust . . . hands over or is bound to hand over the control of an asset which, or the proceeds of which, is to be administered by another (the trustee or administrator) in his capacity as such for the benefit of some person (beneficiary) other than the trustee or for some impersonal object. A trust in this sense is a species of the genus 'trust' in the wide sense." Tony Honoré, The South African Law of Trusts §§ 1-2, at 1-3 (3d ed. 1985).

"Some courts and legal writers have defined a trust as a certain kind of right that the beneficiary has against the trustee, or a certain kind of interest that the beneficiary has against the trustee, or a certain kind of interest that the beneficiary has in the trust property, thus looking at it from the point of view of the beneficiary. While it is true that the beneficiary has the right or interest described, the trust is something more than the right or interest of the beneficiary. The trust is the whole juridical device: the legal relationship between the parties with respect to the property that is its subject matter, including not merely the duties that the trustee owes to the beneficiary and to the rest of the world, but also the rights, privileges, powers, and immunities that the beneficiary has against the trustee and against the rest of the world. It would seem proper, therefore, to define the trust either as a relationship having certain characteristics stated in the definition or perhaps as a juridical device or legal institution involving such a relationship." 1 Austin W. Scott & William F. Fratcher, The Law of Trusts § 2.4, at 42 (4th ed. 1987).

"In the strict, traditional sense, a trust involves three elements: (1) a trustee, who hold the trust property and is subject to deal with it for the benefit of one or more others; (2) one or more beneficiaries, to whom and for whose benefit the trustee owes duties with respect to the trust property; and (3) trust property, which is held by the trustee for the beneficiaries. In a more comprehensive sense, the trust purpose is often included in discussions of the elements of the trusts Although all of these elements are present in a complete trust, either or both of elements (1) and (2) above may be temporarily absent without destroying the trust or preventing its creation." Restatement (Third) of Trusts § 2 cmt. f (2003).

A-B-Q trust. See bypass trust.

A-B trust. See bypass trust.

accumulation trust. A trust in which the trustee must accumulate income and gains from sales of trust assets for ultimate disposition with the principal when the trust terminates. • Many states restrict the time over which accumulations may be made or the amount that may be accumulated. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 280.]

active trust. A trust in which the trustee has some affirmative duty of management or administration besides the obligation to transfer the property to the beneficiary. — Also termed express active trust; special trust; operative trust. Cf. passive trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 135.]

Alaska trust. See asset-protection trust (1).

alimony trust. A trust in which the payor spouse transfers to the trustee property from which the payee spouse, as beneficiary, will be supported after a divorce or separation.

annuity trust. A trust from which the trustee must pay a sum certain annually to one or more beneficiaries for their respective lives or for a term of years, and must then either transfer the remainder to or for the use of a qualified charity or retain the remainder for such a use. • The sum certain must not be less than 5% of the initial fair market value of the property transferred to the trust by the donor. A qualified annuity trust must comply with the requirements of IRC (26 USCA) § 664. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 281.]

asset-protection trust. 1. A trust designed specifically to insulate assets from the settlor's creditors. • When the trust is created using the law of a state, it is also termed a domestic asset-protection trust. It may also be referred to by the name of the specific state, e.g., Alaska trust, Delaware trust, or Nevada trust. If it is created under foreign law, even though the assets are within the United States, it is also termed an offshore asset-protection trust. 2. See self-settled trust.

bank-account trust. See Totten trust.

blended trust. A trust in which the beneficiaries are a group, with no member of the group having a separable individual interest. • Courts rarely recognize these trusts.

blind trust. (1969) A trust in which the settlor places investments under the control of an independent trustee, usu. to avoid a conflict of interest. • The beneficiary has no knowledge of the trust's holdings and no right to participate in the trust's management.

bond trust. A trust whose principal consists of bonds that yield interest income.

bypass trust. (1981) A trust into which just enough of a decedent's estate passes, so that the estate can take advantage of the unified credit against federal estate taxes. See 26 USCA § 2010. — Also termed credit-shelter trust; A-B trust; A-B-Q trust; marital life-estate trust. See unified estate-and-gift tax credit under TAX CREDIT.

charitable lead trust. An irrevocable trust made in favor of a charity and allowing the charity to receive income from the trust property for a specified period, after which the property reverts to the settlor's estate.

charitable-remainder annuity trust. A charitable-remainder trust in which the beneficiaries receive for a specified period a fixed payment of 5% or more of the fair market value of the original principal, after which the remaining principal passes to charity. — Abbr. CRAT. — Also termed charitable-remainder- trust retirement fund. [Cases: Charities ↷6; Trusts ↷281.]

charitable-remainder trust. A trust consisting of assets that are designated for a charitable purpose and paid over to the trust after the expiration of a life estate or intermediate estate. — Abbr. CRT. — Also termed split-interest trust. [Cases: Charities ↷4.] charitable-remainder-trust retirement fund. See charitable-remainder annuity trust.

charitable trust. (18c) A trust created to benefit a specific charity, specific charities, or the general public rather than a private individual or entity. • Charitable trusts are often eligible for favorable tax treatment. If the trust's terms do not specify a charity or a particular charitable purpose, a court may select a charity. See Uniform Trust Act § 405. — Also termed public trust; charitable use. See charitable deduction under DEDUCTION; CY PRES. Cf. private trust. [Cases: Charities ↷1; Internal Revenue ↷4048; Taxation ↷2337, 3328, 3488.]

Claflin trust. See indestructible trust.

Clifford trust. (1941) An irrevocable trust, set up for at least ten years and a day, whereby income from the trust property is paid to the beneficiary but the property itself reverts back to the settlor when the trust expires. • These trusts were often used by parents — with their children as beneficiaries — to shelter investment income, but the Tax Reform Act of 1986 eliminated the tax advantage by imposing the kiddie tax and by taxing the income of settlors with a reversionary interest that exceeds 5% of the trust's value. This term gets its name from Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331, 60 S.Ct. 554 (1940). — Also termed short-term trust. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3362.] common-law trust. See business trust under TRUST (4).

community trust. See COMMUNITY TRUST.

complete voluntary trust. See executed trust.

complex trust. 1. A trust having elaborate provisions.
2. See discretionary trust.

constructive trust. (18c) An equitable remedy that a court imposes against one who has obtained property by wrongdoing. • A constructive trust, imposed to prevent unjust enrichment, creates no fiduciary relationship. Despite its name, it is not a trust at all. — Also termed implied trust; involuntary trust; trust de son tort; trust ex delicto; trust ex maleficio; remedial trust; trust in invitum. See trustee de son tort under TRUSTEE. Cf. resulting trust. [Cases: Trusts ↷91–111.]

"A constructive trust is the formula through which the conscience of equity finds expression. When property has been acquired in such circumstances that the holder of the legal title may not in good conscience retain the beneficial interest, equity converts him into a trustee." Beatty v. Guggenheim Exploration Co., 122 N.E. 378, 380 (N.Y. 1919) (Cardozo, J.).

"It is sometimes said that when there are sufficient grounds for imposing a constructive trust, the court 'constructs a trust.' The expression is, of course, absurd. The word 'constructive' is derived from the verb 'construe,' not from the verb 'construct.' . . . The court construes the circumstances in the sense that it explains or interprets them; it does not construct them." 5 Austin W. Scott & William F. Fratcher, The Law of Trusts § 462.4 (4th ed. 1987).

contingent trust. An express trust depending for its operation on a future event.

credit-shelter trust. See bypass trust.

Crummey trust. A trust in which the trustee has the power to distribute or accumulate income and to give the beneficiary the right to withdraw an amount equal to the annual gift exclusion (or a smaller sum) within a reasonable time after the transfer. • This type of trust can have multiple beneficiaries and is often used when the beneficiaries are minors. Gifts to a Crummey trust qualify for the annual gift exclusion regardless of the age of the beneficiaries. The trust assets are not required to be distributed to the beneficiaries at age 21. The validity of this type of trust was established in Crummey v. Commissioner, 397 F.2d 82 (9th Cir. 1968). — Also termed discretionary trust. See CRUMMEY POWER; annual exclusion under EXCLUSION. Cf. 2503(c) trust.

custodial trust. A revocable trust for which a custodial trustee is named to manage the assets for an incapacitated or disabled beneficiary. • The beneficiary does not have to be disabled or incapacitated at the time the trust is created. An adult beneficiary who is not disabled or incapacitated may terminate the trust at any time before his or her disability, incapacity, or death.

declared trust. See express trust.

defective trust. A trust that is treated, for income-tax purposes, as if it were the same entity as the grantor, but for estate-tax purposes is treated as an entity separate from the grantor. • Typically a trust is an independent entity that is taxed separately from the settlor. Because trust income is taxed at higher rates than individual income, the settlor may intentionally create a defect in the trust terms so that the trust's income will be taxable to the grantor. This is achieved by violating the grantor-trust rules of IRC §§ 671–677 in a way that does not affect the completeness of the gift under IRC §§ 2035–2042. A violation renders the trust "defective" because the settlor must recognize the income even if the settlor does not actually receive it. The attribution of tax liability and payment of taxes on trust income do not give the grantor an ownership in the trust, which remains separate from the settlor's estate and is not subject to estate taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4023.]

Delaware trust. See asset-protection trust.

destructible trust. (1953) A trust that can be destroyed by the happening of an event or by operation of law.

directory trust. 1. A trust that is not completely and finally settled by the instrument creating it, but only defined in its general purpose and to be carried into detail according to later specific directions. 2. See fixed trust.

direct trust. See express trust.

discretionary trust. (1837) 1. A trust in which the settlor has delegated nearly complete or limited discretion to the trustee to decide when and how much income or property is distributed to a beneficiary. • This is perhaps the most common type of trust used in estate planning. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 150, 177.] 2. See Crummey trust. Cf. mandatory trust; CRUMMEY POWER.

domestic asset-protection trust. See asset-protection trust (1).

donative trust. A trust that establishes a gift of a beneficial interest in property for a beneficiary. • Most trusts are donative trusts. — Also termed gratuitous trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 35(1).]

donor-advised trust. A trust set up by a public charity using cash or other assets donated by a person who will act as a director of the trust. IRC (26 USCA) § 4966(d)(2). — Also termed donor-advised fund.

dry trust. 1. A trust that merely vests legal title in a trustee and does not require that trustee to do anything. 2. See passive trust.

dynasty trust. A generation-skipping trust funded with the amount that is permanently exempt from generation-skipping tax and designed to last more than two generations. • In 2000, a settlor could contribute $1 million to a dynasty trust. Almost half the states allow dynasty trusts, despite their potential for lasting more than 100 years. — Also termed GST supertrust. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4224.]

educational trust. 1. A trust to found, endow, or support a school. 2. A trust to support someone's education.

electing small-business trust. A trust of which the beneficiaries are individuals, estates, certain charitable organizations, or certain governmental entities, who did not purchase an interest in the trust, and for which the trustee has elected to be taxed under special rules. IRC (26 USCA) § 1391(e)(1). — Abbr. ESBT.

equipment trust. See EQUIPMENT TRUST.

estate trust. A trust that is established to qualify a deceased spouse's property for the marital deduction. • The trustee may be given discretion to distribute principal or income to the donor's spouse if the donor also provides that, at the surviving spouse's death, any accumulated income and remaining principal must be distributed to the surviving spouse's estate. See marital deduction under DEDUCTION.

ex delicto trust (də-lik-toh). A trust that is created for an illegal purpose, esp. to prevent the settlor's creditors from collecting their claims out of the trust property.

executed trust. A trust in which the estates and interests in the subject matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust and require no further instruments to complete them. — Also termed complete voluntary trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 114.]

executory trust (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). (18c) A trust in which the instrument creating the trust is intended to be provisional only, and further conveyances are contemplated by the trust instrument before the terms of the trust can be carried out. — Also termed imperfect trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 114.]

express active trust. See active trust.

express private passive trust. A trust in which land is conveyed to or held by one person in trust for another, without any power being expressly or impliedly given to the trustee to take actual possession of the land or exercise any ownership rights over it, except at the beneficiary's direction. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 136.]

express trust. (18c) A trust created with the settlor's express intent, usu. declared in writing; an ordinary trust as opposed to a resulting trust or a constructive trust. — Also termed direct trust; declared trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 1-61.5.]

family-pot trust. A trust in which all the assets are kept in a single fund for the trustee to use for multiple beneficiaries (usu. children). • Family-pot trusts are typically testamentary and used to administer a donor's property until the donor's minor children have completed their education.

family trust. A trust created to benefit persons who are related to one another by blood, affinity, or law.

fixed trust. A trust in which the trustee may not exercise any discretion over the trust's management or distributions. — Also termed directory trust; non-discretionary trust.

foreign-situs trust (sī-təs). A trust created under foreign law. • This type of trust usu. has no significant income-tax benefits and is subject to greater reporting requirements than a domestic trust. Because creditors cannot easily reach the foreign trust's assets, it is frequently used as a means of asset-protection. — Also termed foreign trust; offshore trust.

general trust. See passive trust.

generation-skipping trust. (1976) A trust that is established to transfer (usu. principal) assets to a skip person (a beneficiary more than one generation removed from the settlor). • The transfer is often accomplished by giving some control or benefits (such as trust income) of the assets to a nonskip person, often a member of the generation between the settlor and skip person. This type of trust is subject to a generation-skipping transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601 et seq. See DEEMED TRANSFEROR; GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; SKIP PERSON. Cf. dynasty trust. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4224.]

governmental trust. 1. A type of charitable trust established to provide a community with facilities ordinarily supplied by the government, esp. by a municipality, and to promote purposes that are sufficiently beneficial to the community to justify permitting the property to be perpetually devoted to those purposes. • Examples of such facilities include public buildings, bridges, streets, parks, schools, and hospitals. 2. A type of charitable trust established for general governmental or municipal purposes, such as defraying the expenses of a governmental entity or paying the public debt. Restatement (Second) of Trusts §§ 373, 374 (1959).

grantor-retained annuity trust. An irrevocable trust into which the grantor transfers property in exchange for the right to receive fixed payments at least annually, based on original fair market value of the property transferred. • At the end of the specified time, the principal passes to a noncharitable beneficiary such as the grantor's child or grandchild. Essentially, the grantor makes to the remainderman a current gift of the right to trust assets at a specified date in the future. — Abbr. GRAT.

grantor-retained income trust. A trust in which a gift's value can be reduced by the grantor's retaining an income interest, for a specified time, in the gifted property. • At the end of the specified time, the principal passes to a noncharitable beneficiary such as the grantor's child or grandchild. Essentially, the grantor makes to the remainderman a current gift of the right to trust assets at a specified date in the future. — Sometimes shortened to retained income trust. — Abbr. GRIT.

grantor-retained unitrust. An irrevocable trust into which the grantor transfers property in exchange for the right to receive annual payments, the amount of which fluctuates based on the increase or decrease in the value of the property transferred. — Abbr. GRUT. Cf. grantor-retained annuity trust.

grantor trust. A trust in which the settlor retains control over the trust property or its income to such an extent that the settlor is taxed on the trust's income. • The types of controls that result in such tax treatment are set out in IRC (26 USCA) §§ 671–677. An example is the revocable trust.

gratuitous trust. See donative trust.

GST supertrust. See dynasty trust.

honorary trust. (1844) A noncharitable trust that is of doubtful validity because it lacks a beneficiary capable of enforcing the trust. • Examples include trusts for the care and support of specific animals, or for the care of certain graves. The modern trend is to recognize the validity of such trusts, if the trustee is willing to accept the responsibility. If the trustee fails to carry out the duties, however, a resulting trust arises in favor of the settlor's residuary legatees or next of kin. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 1.]

Illinois land trust. See land trust.

illusory trust. (1939) An arrangement that looks like a trust but, because of powers retained in the settlor, has no real substance and is not a completed trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 1.]

imperfect trust. See executory trust.

implied trust. 1. See constructive trust. 2. See resulting trust.

indestructible trust. (1909) A trust that, because of the settlor's wishes, cannot be prematurely terminated by the beneficiary. — Also termed Clafin trust.

insurance trust. A trust whose principal consists of insurance policies or their proceeds.

inter vivos trust (in-tar vī-vohs or vee-vohs). (1921c) A trust that is created and takes effect during the settlor's lifetime. — Also termed living trust. Cf. testamentary trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 1, 58–61.]

investment trust. See investment company under COMPANY.

involuntary trust. See constructive trust.

irrevocable trust (i-rev-ə-kə-bəl). (1837) A trust that cannot be terminated by the settlor once it is created. • In most states, a trust will be deemed irrevocable unless the settlor specifies otherwise. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 59.]

land trust. A land-ownership arrangement by which a trustee holds both legal and equitable title to land while the beneficiary retains the power to direct the trustee, manage the property, and draw income from the trust. — Also termed Illinois land trust; naked land trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 140(1).]

life-insurance trust. A trust consisting of one or more life-insurance policies payable to the trust when the insured dies. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 37.]

limited trust. A trust created for a limited period. Cf. perpetual trust.

liquidating trust. A trust designed to be liquidated as soon as possible. • An example is a trust into which a decedent's business is placed to safeguard the business until it can be sold.

living trust. See inter vivos trust.

mandatory trust. A trust in which the trustee must distribute all the income generated by the trust property to one or more designated beneficiaries. — Also termed simple trust. Cf. discretionary trust.

marital-deduction trust. (1953) A testamentary trust created to take full advantage of the marital deduction; esp., a trust entitling a spouse to lifetime income from the trust and sufficient control over the trust to include the trust property in the spouse's estate at death. See marital deduction under DEDUCTION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4169.]

marital life-estate trust. See bypass trust.

Massachusetts trust. See business trust under TRUST (4).

Medicaid-qualifying trust. (1989) A trust deemed to have been created in an effort to reduce someone's assets so that the person may qualify for Medicaid, and that will be included as an asset for purposes of determining the person's eligibility. • A person who wants to apply and qualify for Medicaid, but who has too many assets to qualify, will sometimes set up a trust — or have a spouse or custodian set up a trust — using the applicant's own assets, under which the applicant may be the beneficiary of all or part of the payments from the trust, which are distributed by a trustee with discretion to make trust payments to the applicant. Such a trust may be presumed to have been established for the purpose of attempting to qualify for Medicaid, and may be counted as an asset of the applicant, resulting in a denial of benefits and the imposition of a penalty period during which the applicant cannot reapply. Nonetheless, Medicaid rules allow three types of trusts that do not impair Medicaid eligibility, since the trust assets are not considered the beneficiary's property: Miller trust, pooled trust, and under-65 trust. [Cases: Health ⇨471(6).]

Miller trust. An irrevocable trust funded with the income of an incompetent beneficiary who seeks to qualify for Medicaid in a state with an income cap. • Funding is strictly limited to the beneficiary's income (from any source). The assets in the trust are not included in the beneficiary's estate for Medicaid purposes if the trust assets will be used to reimburse the state after the beneficiary's death. Trust distributions are kept below the income cap in order to preserve the beneficiary's Medicaid eligibility. This type of trust was first judicially sanctioned in Miller v. Ibarra, 746 F.Supp. 19 (D. Colo. 1990). — Also termed Miller's trust; qualified income trust.

ministerial trust. See passive trust.

minor's trust. See 2503(c) trust.

mixed trust. A trust established to benefit both private individuals and charities.

naked land trust. See land trust.

naked trust. See passive trust.

Nevada trust. See asset-protection trust (1).

nominal trust. See passive trust.

nominee trust. 1. A trust in which the beneficiaries have the power to direct the trustee's actions regarding the trust property. 2. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more persons or corporations, under a written declaration of trust, declare that they will hold any property that they acquire as trustees for the benefit of one or more undisclosed beneficiaries. — Also termed (in sense 2) realty trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨133-140.]

nondiscretionary trust. See fixed trust.

nongrantor-owner trust. A trust in which the beneficiary has an unrestricted power to vest the principal or interest in him or herself. IRC (26 USCA) § 678. — Also termed 678 trust.

offshore asset-protection trust. See asset-protection trust (1).

offshore trust. See foreign-situs trust.

onerous trust. A trust that places exceptionally heavy and time-consuming duties of responsibility and care on the trustee, often without providing for compensation. • Because of the burden and inequity of requiring the trust to be administered voluntarily, courts often grant a trustee a reasonable sum for the tasks performed.

oral trust. 1. A trust created by the settlor's spoken statements as opposed to a written agreement. • Trusts of real property must usu. be in writing (because of the statute of frauds). Trusts of personal property may be created orally but require clear and convincing evidence to show that an oral trust was created. Uniform Trust Act § 8407. — Also termed parol trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨17.] 2. A trust created by operation of law, such as a resulting trust or a constructive trust.

parol trust. See oral trust (1). passive trust. A trust in which the trustee has no duty other than to transfer the property to the beneficiary. — Also termed dry trust; general trust; nominal trust; simple trust; naked trust; ministerial trust; technical trust. See bare trustee under TRUSTEE. Cf. active trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨136.]

pension trust. An employer-funded pension plan; esp., a pension plan in which the employer transfers to trustees amounts sufficient to cover the benefits payable to the employees. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨400.]

perpetual trust. A trust that is to continue as long as the need for it continues, such as for the lifetime of a beneficiary or the term of a particular charity. Cf. limited trust.

personal-residence trust. An irrevocable trust to which the settlor transfers ownership of his or her personal residence while retaining the right to live there for a specified term of years. • The trust cannot hold any assets other than the residence and proceeds resulting from damage to or destruction of the residence. Cf. qualified personal-residence trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨1.]

personal trust. See private trust.

pet trust. An honorary trust that is established for the care and maintenance of a particular animal or group of animals. • Pet trusts are generally invalid because animals are incapable of compelling a trustee to act, and animals have no standing in law. Effectively, the trust has no beneficiary. But some states (e.g., Colorado) statutorily recognize these trusts as valid. Pet trusts are covered in the Uniform Trust Code (§ 408).

pooled-income fund. See POOLED-INCOME FUND.

pooled trust. An irrevocable, discretionary trust that (1) is established and managed by a nonprofit association, (2) is funded with the assets of disabled persons, and (3) maintains a separate trust account for each beneficiary, but (4) pools the trust assets for investment purposes. • If the trust provides for distribution of a deceased beneficiary's interest to the state in reimbursement of Medicaid expenditures, a pooled-trust beneficiary may be eligible for Medicaid benefits. The assets contributed to the trust for the individual's benefit are not treated as the beneficiary's property. — Also termed pooled-assets trust. [Cases: Trusts ↷11(1).]

pourover trust. (1981) An inter vivos trust that receives property (usu. the residual estate) from a will upon the testator's death. Cf. pourover will under WILL.

power-of-appointment trust. (1848) A trust in which property is left in trust for the surviving spouse. • The trustee must distribute income to the spouse for life, and the power of appointment is given to the spouse or to his or her estate. A power-of-appointment trust is commonly used to qualify property for the marital deduction. See marital deduction under DEDUCTION.

precatory trust (prek-ə-tor-ee). (1878) A trust that the law will recognize to carry out the wishes of the testator or grantor even though the statement in question is in the nature of an entreaty or recommendation rather than a command. [Cases: Trusts ↷29.]

presumptive trust. See resulting trust.

private trust. A trust created for the financial benefit of one or more designated beneficiaries rather than for the public benefit; an ordinary trust as opposed to a charitable trust. • Three elements must be present for a private trust: (1) the demonstrated intent of the settlor, (2) trust property (as res), and (3) a certain beneficiary capable of enforcing the trust. — Also termed personal trust. Cf. charitable trust. [Cases: Trusts ↷1.]

protective trust. A trust that is designed to protect the trust property to ensure the continued support of the beneficiary. [Cases: Trusts ↷152.]

"In a broad sense, a spendthrift, support, or other similarly protective trust is one created to provide a fund for the maintenance of the beneficiary and at the same time to secure it against the beneficiary's improvidence or incapacity." 76 Am. Jur. 2d Trusts § 121 (1992).

public trust. See charitable trust.

purchase-money resulting trust. A resulting trust that arises when one person buys property but directs the seller to transfer the property and its title to another. • Although a purchase-money resulting trust is properly understood as a court-imposed equitable remedy rather than as a true trust, the buyer is occasionally referred to as the "beneficiary" and the titleholder as the "trustee." — Abbr. PMRT. [Cases: Trusts ↷72–83.]

QTIP trust (kyoo-tip). (1985) A trust that is established to qualify for the marital deduction. • Under this trust, the assets are referred to as qualified-terminable-interest property, or QTIP. See qualified-terminable-interest property under PROPERTY. Cf. qualified domestic trust. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4169(4).]

qualified domestic trust. A trust for a noncitizen spouse qualifying for the marital deduction. See 26 USCA § 2056(d). — Abbr. QDOT. See marital deduction under DEDUCTION. Cf. QTIP trust.

qualified income trust. See Miller trust.

qualified personal-residence trust. An irrevocable trust that is funded with cash and the personal residence of the grantor, who retains the right to dwell in the residence for a specified term of years. • The trust may receive and hold additional cash to pay for trust expenses, mortgage installments, and improvements to the residence. — Abbr. QPRT. Cf. personal-residence trust. [Cases: Trusts ↷1.]

qualified S-corporation trust. A trust that (1) owns stock in one or more S corporations, (2) distributes all income to one individual (who must be a United States citizen or resident), (3) requires only one beneficiary at a time, and (4) requires the income-beneficiary-elect to have the trust qualify as a QSST. • The trust is rarely termed a qualified subchapter-S corporation trust but the common abbreviation is QSST, not QSCT.

rabbicular trust. A rabbi trust that protects the trust assets against the claims of the employer's creditors by converting to a secular trust if the employer funding the trust becomes insolvent. • The term is a portmanteau word from rabbi and secular. Cf. rabbi trust; secular trust.

rabbi trust. Slang. An irrevocable grantor trust whose assets remain subject to the claims of the grantor's general creditors, and from which benefits are paid to the grantor's employees if a stipulated event occurs. • A rabbi trust is a form of nonqualified deferred-compensation plan. Because the trust can be reached by creditors, the participants can avoid being taxed on the constructive receipt of the benefits held in the trust. Its name derives from the IRS letter ruling that approved its use by a synagogue. Priv. Ltr. Rul. 81-13-107 (Dec. 31, 1980). Cf. rabbicular trust; secular trust. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷431.]

real-estate investment trust. See REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

real-estate mortgage trust. See REAL-ESTATE MORTGAGE TRUST.

realty trust. See nominal trust (2).

reciprocal trust. A trust arrangement between two parties in which one party is beneficiary of a trust established by the other party, and vice versa. • Such trusts are common between husband and wife.

remedial trust. See constructive trust.

resulting trust. (18c) A remedy imposed by equity when property is transferred under circumstances suggesting that the transferor did not intend for the transferee to have the beneficial interest in the property. — Also termed implied trust; presumptive trust. Cf. constructive trust. [Cases: Trusts ↷62–90.]

retained income trust. See grantor-retained income trust.

revocable trust (rev-ə-kə-bəl). A trust in which the settlor reserves the right to terminate the trust and recover the trust property and any undistributed income. [Cases: Trusts ⇨59.]

savings-account trust. See Totten trust.

savings-bank trust. See Totten trust.

secret trust. An instrument, usu. a will, that appears to give an absolute gift to another although the donee has orally agreed with the grantor that he or she is to use the property for the benefit of some third party.

• Courts admit evidence of the promise to prevent unjust enrichment and enforce it by imposing the remedy of a constructive trust upon the reneging "trustee." Cf. semi-secret trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨35(3).]

secular trust. An irrevocable trust, funded by an employer, that protects an employee-beneficiary's deferred compensation from the claims of creditors during an employer's bankruptcy or insolvency. • The trust provides the employee-beneficiary with exclusive rights. The employee enjoys security since the trust is funded and the funds are beyond the reach of creditors and immune from forfeiture, but the employee cannot defer income recognition. Cf. rab-bicular trust; rabbi trust.

self-settled trust. (1969) A trust in which the settlor is also the person who is to receive the benefits from the trust, usu. set up in an attempt to protect the trust assets from creditors. • In most states, such a trust will not protect trust assets from the settlor's creditors. Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 156 (1959). — Also termed asset-protection trust.

semi-secret trust. An instrument that indicates who is to serve as a trustee but fails to identify either the beneficiary or the terms of the trust, or both. • Traditionally, this trust was deemed to fail for want of an ascertainable beneficiary. But the modern view is to provide the same relief as that given for a secret trust: to receive evidence of the donor's intent, including the intended beneficiary, and impose a constructive trust in his or her favor. Cf. secret trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨1, 64.]

shifting trust. An express trust providing that, upon a specified contingency, it may operate in favor of an additional or substituted beneficiary.

short-term trust. See Clifford trust.

simple trust. 1. See mandatory trust. 2. See passive trust.

678 trust. See nongrantor-owner trust.

special-needs trust. See supplemental-needs trust.

special trust. See active trust.

spendthrift trust. (1878) 1. A trust that prohibits the beneficiary's interest from being assigned and also prevents a creditor from attaching that interest; a trust by the terms of which a valid restraint is imposed on the voluntary or involuntary transfer of the beneficiary's interest. [Cases: Trusts ⇨12, 141, 152.] 2. A similar trust in which the restraint on alienation results from a statute rather than from the settlor's words in the trust instrument.

"Origin of the term 'spendthrift trust.' The phrase 'spendthrift trust' seems to have been first used, as might be expected, in Pennsylvania. The earliest instance in which a use of the phrase has been found was in 1875, when it appeared in the syllabus of a case, though the court did not use it in its opinion. Four years later, in Overman's Appeal [88 Pa. 276 (1879)], the phrase is found in the auditor's report (in italics), while the opinion of the court in the same case refers to the trust in question as 'a trust for a spendthrift as it is termed' [id. at 278]. That the phrase had not become familiar by 1882 is indicated by Thackara v. Mintzer [100 Pa. 151 (1882)], where the head note refers to a 'spendthrift son trust,' but the court does not use that or any similar phrase. And in 1883, in the first edition of his Restraints on Alienation, [John Chipman] Gray used the phrase only rarely, and then spoke rather apologetically of 'spendthrift trusts so called.' In the second edition of this book, published twelve years later, the use of the phrase is frequent." Erwin N. Griswold, Spendthrift Trusts § 33, at 32 (2d ed. 1947).

split-interest trust. See charitable-remainder trust.

spray trust. See sprinkle trust.

sprinkle trust. A trust in which the trustee has discretion to decide how much will be given to each beneficiary. — Also termed spray trust. See SPRINKLE POWER.

standby trust. A trust created to manage a person's assets while he or she is out of the country or disabled. Trusts ⇨14.]

supplemental-needs trust. A trust established to provide supplemental income for a disabled beneficiary who is receiving or may be eligible to receive government benefits. • This type of irrevocable trust is often used by parents of disabled children to ensure the beneficiary's eligibility for government benefits by expressly prohibiting distributions that may be used for the beneficiary's food, shelter, or clothing. [Cases: Trusts ⇨11(1).]

support trust. (1946) A discretionary trust in which the settlor authorizes the trustee to pay to the beneficiary as much income or principal as the trustee believes is needed for support, esp. for "comfortable support" or "support in accordance with the beneficiary's standard of living." • The beneficiary's interest cannot be voluntarily transferred, but creditors who provide necessities can usu. reach it; general creditors cannot. [Cases: Trusts ⇨127.]

technical trust. See passive trust.

tentative trust. See Totten trust.

testamentary trust (tes-tə-men-tə-ree or -tree). (1832) A trust that is created by a will and takes effect when the settlor (testator) dies. — Also termed trust under will. Cf. inter vivos trust. [Cases: Wills ⇨669-694.]

Totten trust. (1931) A revocable trust created by one's deposit of money, typically in a savings account, in the depositor's name as trustee for another. • A Totten trust is an early form of "pay on death" account, since it creates no interest in the beneficiary unless the account remained at the depositor's death. Its name derives from the earliest decision in which the court approved the concept, even though the formalities of will execution were not satisfied: In re Totten, 71 N.E. 748 (N.Y. 1904). A Totten trust is commonly used to indicate a successor to the account without having to create a will, and thus it is a will substitute. — Also termed tentative trust; bank-account trust; savings-account trust; savings-bank trust; trustee bank account. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 34(1).]

"A deposit by one person of his own money, in his own name as trustee for another, standing alone, does not establish an irrevocable trust during the lifetime of the depositor. It is a tentative trust merely, revocable at will, until the depositor dies or completes the gift in his lifetime by some unequivocal act or declaration, such as delivery of the pass book or notice to the beneficiary. In case the depositor dies before the beneficiary without revocation, or some decisive act or declaration of disaffirmance, the presumption arises that an absolute trust was created as to the balance on hand at the death of the depositor." In re Totten, 179 N.Y. 112, 125-26 (1904) (Vann, J.).

transgressive trust. A trust that violates the rule against perpetuities. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.

trust de son tort (də sawn [or son] tor[t]). See constructive trust.

trust ex delicto. See constructive trust.

trust ex maleficio. See constructive trust.

trust for support. A trust that, by its terms, provides that the trustee must pay or apply only as much of the income and principal as is necessary for the education and support of the beneficiary. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 276, 280.]

trust in invitum. See constructive trust.

trust under will. See testamentary trust.

2503(b) trust. A trust that requires a distribution of income to the beneficiary at least annually, and provides that gifts to the trust qualifying as gifts of a present interest become eligible for the annual gift-tax exclusion. • It is named after the section of the IRS code on which it is based. IRC (26 USCA) § 2503(b). [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4206.]

2503(c) trust. A trust with only one beneficiary, who must be a minor and must have the power to withdraw all assets from the trust upon attaining the age of 21. • This type of trust derives its name from the requirements set forth in IRC (26 USCA) § 2503(c). Although the trust may continue after the beneficiary turns 21, gifts to the trust will no longer qualify for the annual exclusion if the beneficiary has no immediate right to withdraw the gift. — Also termed minor's trust. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4206.30.]

under-65 trust. A discretionary trust established for the sole benefit of a Medicaid recipient who is under the age of 65. • This type of trust may be established by anyone except the beneficiary, who must be less than 65 years old at the time of creation. The assets in trust will not be included in the beneficiary's estate for purposes of determining Medicaid eligibility. The beneficiary may receive distributions from the trust during life, but any balance remaining in the trust must be used to reimburse the state for the beneficiary's Medicaid expenditures.

unit-investment trust. 1. A trust in which funds are pooled and invested in income-producing securities. • Units of the trust are sold to investors, who maintain an interest in the trust in proportion to their investment. 2. An investment company that gives a shareholder an undivided interest in a fixed pool of securities held by the trustee. • This type of company can be organized in several ways (as by trust indenture, contract of custodianship or agency, or similar instrument), but is most commonly organized with a trust indenture. Such a company does not have a board of directors and issues only redeemable securities, each of which represents an undivided interest in a unit of specified securities. 15 USCA § 80a-4. See investment company under COMPANY.

unitrust. (1971) A trust from which a fixed percentage of the fair market value of the trust's assets, valued annually, is paid each year to the beneficiary. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 276.]

voluntary trust. 1. A trust that is not founded on consideration. • One having legal title to property may create a voluntary trust by (1) declaring that the property is to be held in trust for another, and (2) transferring the legal title to a third person who acts as trustee. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 13.] 2. An obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another.

voting trust. A trust used to hold shares of voting stock in a closely held corporation, usu. transferred from a parent to a child, and empowering the trustee to exercise the right to vote. • The trust acts as custodian of the shares but is not a stockholder. Cf. VOTING GROUP. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 198.1(1).]

"At common law there was great suspicion of voting trusts. One commentator described a voting trust as 'little more than a vehicle for corporate kidnapping.' This attitude has largely disappeared. State statutes now uniformly recognize the validity of voting trusts and they have received a more hospitable judicial reception." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 199 (3d ed. 1991).

wasting trust. A trust in which the trust property is gradually depleted by periodic payments to the beneficiary.

4. A business combination that aims at monopoly. See ANTITRUST LAW.

business trust. A form of business organization, similar to a corporation, in which investors receive transferable certificates of beneficial interest instead of stock shares. — Also termed Massachusetts trust; common-law trust. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4206; Joint-Stock Companies and Business Trusts ⇨ 1, 8.]

"The business trust was developed in Massachusetts from 1910 to 1925 to achieve limited liability and to avoid restrictions then existing there on a corporation's acquiring and developing real estate, by adoption of the trust device . . ." Henry G. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 58, at 117 (3d ed. 1983).

trust de son tort (də sawn [or son] tor[t]). See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

trustee (trās-tee), n. (17c) 1. One who stands in a fiduciary or confidential relation to another; esp., one who, having legal title to property, holds it in trust for the benefit of another and owes a fiduciary duty to that beneficiary. • Generally, a trustee's duties are to convert to cash all debts and securities that are not qualified legal investments, to reinvest the cash in proper securities, to protect and preserve the trust property, and to ensure that it is employed solely for the beneficiary, in accordance with the directions contained in the trust instrument. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 133, 171.]

bare trustee. A trustee of a passive trust. • A bare trustee has no duty other than to transfer the property to the beneficiary. See passive trust under TRUST.

corporate trustee. (1852) A corporation that is empowered by its charter to act as a trustee, such as a bank or trust company.

indenture trustee. A trustee named in a trust indenture and charged with holding legal title to the trust property; a trustee under an indenture.

joint trustee. See COTRUSTEE.

judicial trustee. (18c) A trustee appointed by a court to execute a trust.

quasi-trustee. (1830) One who benefits from a breach of a trust to a great enough degree to become liable as a trustee.

successor trustee. (1866) A trustee who succeeds an earlier trustee, usu. as provided in the trust agreement. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 169, 243.]

testamentary trustee (tes-tā-men-tā-ree or -tree). (1811) A trustee appointed by or acting under a will; one appointed to carry out a trust created by a will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 681.]

township trustee. One of a board of officers to whom, in some states, a township's affairs are entrusted. [Cases: Towns ⇨ 28.]

trustee ad litem (ad lī-tem or -tām). (1921) A trustee appointed by the court.

trustee de son tort (də sawn [or son] tor[t]). (1857) A person who, without legal authority, administers a living person's property to the detriment of the property owner. See constructive trust under TRUST. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 170.]

trustee ex maleficio (eks mal-ə-fish-ee-oh). (1837) A person who is guilty of wrongful or fraudulent conduct and is held by equity to the duty of a trustee, in relation to the subject matter, to prevent him or her from profiting from the wrongdoing.

2. Bankruptcy. A person appointed by the U.S. Trustee or elected by creditors or appointed by a judge to administer the bankruptcy estate during a bankruptcy case. • The trustee's duties include (1) collecting and reducing to cash the assets of the estate, (2) operating the debtor's business with court approval if appropriate to preserve the value of business assets, (3) examining the debtor at a meeting of creditors, (4) filing inventories and making periodic reports to the court on the financial condition of the estate, (5) investigating the debtor's financial affairs, (6) examining proofs of claims and objecting to improper claims, (7) furnishing information relating to the bankruptcy to interested parties, and (8) opposing discharge through bankruptcy, if advisable. A trustee is appointed or elected in every Chapter 7 case, and is appointed in every Chapter 12 and Chapter 13 case under the Bankruptcy Code. A trustee is not appointed or elected in a Chapter 11 case unless the court finds that a trustee is needed and appoints one. In most Chapter 11 cases, the bankruptcy estate is administered by the debtor in possession, rather than by a trustee. The role of a bankruptcy trustee varies depending on the type of bankruptcy case. 11 USCA §§ 701-03, 1104, 1202. — Also termed (in sense 2) bankruptcy trustee; trustee in bankruptcy. See UNITED STATES TRUSTEE. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3001-3011.]

interim trustee. A bankruptcy trustee appointed to perform all the functions and duties of a trustee until the regular trustee is selected and qualified. • Before the meeting of creditors, the interim trustee often preliminarily investigates the debtor's assets and financial affairs. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3002.]

3. DIRECTOR (2). 4. Parliamentary law. An officer who audits an organization's finances.

trustee, vb. (1818) 1. To serve as trustee. 2. To place (a person or property) in the hands of one or more trustees. 3. To appoint (a person) as trustee, often of a bankrupt's estate in order to restrain a creditor from collecting moneys due. 4. To attach (the effects of a debtor) in the hands of a third person.

trust ex delicto. See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust ex maleficio. See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust fund. (18c) The property held in a trust by a trustee; CORPUS (1). [Cases: Trusts ⇨1.] common trust fund. (1852) A trust fund set up within a trust department to combine the assets of numerous small trusts to achieve greater investment diversification. • Common trust funds are regulated by state law.

pooled-income fund. See POOLED-INCOME FUND.

trust-fund doctrine. (1892) The principle that the assets of an insolvent company, including paid and unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock, are held as a trust fund to which the company's creditors may look for payment of their claims. • The creditors may follow the property constituting this fund, and may use it to reduce the debts, unless it has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice. — Also termed trust-fund theory. [Cases: Corporations ⇨544(2).] trust indenture. See INDENTURE.

Trust Indenture Act. A federal law, enacted in 1939, designed to protect investors of certain types of bonds by requiring that (1) the SEC approve the trust indenture, (2) the indenture include certain protective clauses and exclude certain exculpatory clauses, and (3) the trustees be independent of the issuing company. 15 USCA §§ 77aaa et seq. • The Act is administered by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨29.10–29.14.]

TTB. abbr. ALCOHOL AND TOBACCO TAX AND TRADE BUREAU.

tubman (təb-mən). Hist. A junior barrister in the Court of Exchequer who made motions that were second in precedence to those of the postman. • The tubman was so called because he stood by a tub anciently used as a measure of capacity. Cf. POSTMAN.

Tucker Act. A federal law enacted in 1887 to ameliorate the inadequacies of the original authority of the Court of Claims by extending that court's jurisdiction to include (1) claims founded on the Constitution, a federal statute, or a federal regulation, and (2) damage claims in cases not arising in tort. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨1071.]

turncoat witness. See WITNESS.

turnkey, adj. (1927) 1. (Of a product) provided in a state of readiness for immediate use . 2. Of, relating to, or involving a product provided in this manner .

turnkey contract. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract under CONTRACT.

turnkey drilling contract. See DRILLING CONTRACT.

turnover duty. Maritime law. A shipowner's obligation to provide safe working conditions and to give notice of any nonobvious hazards regarding instruments and areas that the shipowner turns over to the stevedore and longshoremen while the ship is being loaded or unloaded. Cf. ACTIVE-OPERATIONS DUTY; INTERVENTION DUTY. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 84(3).]

turn state's evidence, vb. (1846) To cooperate with prosecutors and testify against other criminal defendants <after hours of intense negotiations, the suspect accepted a plea bargain and agreed to turn state's evidence>.

turntable doctrine. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE.

turpis causa (tər-pis kaw-zə). [Latin "immoral consideration"] See immoral consideration under CONSIDERATION (1).

turpitude (tər-pə-t[y]ood). See MORAL TURPITUDE.

tutela (t[y]oo-tee-lə), n. [Latin "tutelage"] Roman law. A type of guardianship either for those not having reached puberty (tutela impuberum) or for women (tutela mulierum). • The guardian was called the tutor, the ward the pupillus. Guardians for women no longer existed in Justinian's time. Cf. CURA.

tutelage (t[y]oo-tə-lij), n. 1. The act of protecting or guiding; guardianship. 2. Int'l law. The state of being under the care and management of an international organization such as the League of Nations or United Nations. • This term applies, for example, to the status of a people who do not yet benefit from a fully operational government of their own — such as people displaced by war and living in a territory that will in the future be given its autonomy.

tutor, n. 1. One who teaches; esp., a private instructor. Pl. tutors. 2. Roman & civil law. A guardian of a minor; a person appointed to have the care of the minor's person and estate. • The guardian of a minor past the age of puberty is called a curator and has duties somewhat different from those of a tutor. Pl. tutores. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨ 10, 17.]

tutor dativus (t[y]oo-tor [or -ər] də-ti-vəs). [Latin] Roman law. A tutor appointed by the court upon application. Pl. tutores dativi.

tutor gerens (t[y]oo-tor [or -tər] jeer-enz). [Latin] Roman law. A tutor who, though not sole tutor, actually administered the ward's affairs. Pl. tutores gerentes.

tutor legitimus (t[y]oo-tor [or -ər] lə-jit-i-məs). [Latin] Roman law. A tutor-at-law; a tutor by virtue of the relationship with the pupil, such as a paternal uncle. Pl. tutores legitimi.

tutor testamentarius (t[y]oo-tor [or -ər] tes-tə-men-tair-ee-əs). [Latin] Roman law. A tutor appointed by will to have the guardianship over the testator's children. Pl. tutores testamentarii.

undertutor. Civil law. A person appointed by a court to represent a minor under the care of a tutor when the interests of the minor conflict with that of the tutor. See TUTORSHIP. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨ 12.]

tutorio nomine (t[y]oo-tor-ee-oh nahm-ə-nee). [Latin] Hist. In the name and character of tutor.

tutor legitimus. See TUTOR.

tutorship. Civil law. The office and power of a tutor; the power that an individual has, sui juris, to take care of one who cannot care for himself or herself. • The four types of tutorship are (1) tutorship by nature, (2) tutorship by will, (3) tutorship by the effect of the law, and (4) tutorship by judicial appointment. La. Civ. Code art. 247. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨ 1.]

dative tutorship. Civil law. Tutorship that arises from a court's appointment, usu. on the advice of the family. — Also termed dative curatorship; tutorship by judicial appointment. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨ 10.]

legal tutorship. Civil law. Tutorship that is bestowed by statute and does not require a court's or family's approval. • For example, a spouse has the legal tutorship of the incompetent spouse. — Also termed tutorship by the effect of the law. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨ 10.]

tutorship by judicial appointment. Civil law. See dative tutorship.

tutorship by nature. 1. Tutorship of a minor child that belongs by right to a surviving parent. 2. Tutorship of a minor child that belongs to the parent under whose care the child has been placed following divorce or judicial separation. • If the parents are awarded joint custody, both have cotutorship and equal authority, privileges, and responsibilities. La. Civ. Code art. 250. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨ 1.]

tutorship by the effect of the law. Civil law. See legal tutorship.

tutorship by will. Tutorship that is created (1) by the will of the parent who dies last, or (2) by any declaration of the surviving father or mother (or the parent who is the curator of the other spouse), executed before a notary and two witnesses. La. Civ. Code art. 257.

tutor testamentarius. See TUTOR.

tutory (t[y]oo-tər-ee). 1. Guardianship; charge. 2. Tutorage; tutelage. — Also spelled tutry; tutory. Cf. TUTELAGE (1).

tutrix. Archaic. A female tutor. See TUTOR (2).

tutus accessus non fuit (t[y]oo-tas ak-ses-as non fyoo-it). [Latin] Hist. There was no safe access.

TVA. abbr. TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY.

Twelfth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1804, that altered the electoral-college system by separating the balloting for presidential and vice-presidential candidates. • In 1800, members of the Electoral College could cast votes only for the office of President, and Thomas Jefferson and his running mate Aaron Burr each received the same number of votes. The House of Representatives had to break the tie. [Cases: United States ⇨25.]

twelve-day rule. Criminal procedure. A rule in some jurisdictions requiring that a person charged with a felony be given a preliminary examination no later than 12 days after the arraignment on the original warrant. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨264.]

twelve-month liquidation. See LIQUIDATION.

Twelve Tables. Roman law. The earliest surviving legislation enacted by the Romans, written on 12 tablets in the 5th century B.C. • The Tables set out many rights and duties of Roman citizens, including debtors' rights, family law, wills, torts, civil procedure, and some public law. They substituted a written body of laws, easily accessible and binding on all citizens of Rome, for an unwritten usage accessible to only a few. The law of the Twelve Tables was also known as the Lex Duodecim Tabularum.

"The Twelve Tables continued to be recognized for many centuries as the fundamental law of the Romans; they did not formally lose this character until it was taken from them by the legislation of Justinian." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 74-75 (1881).

Twentieth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1933, that changed the date of the presidential and vice-presidential inaugurations from March 4 to January 20, and the date for congressional convention from March 4 to January 3, thereby eliminating the short session of Congress, during which a number of members sat who had not been reelected to office. — Also termed lame-duck amendment. [Cases: United States ⇨26.]

Twenty-fifth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1967, that established rules of succession for the presidency and vice presidency in the event of death, resignation, or incapacity. • Article II, § 1 of the Constitution provides for the Vice President to assume the President's powers and duties but does not clearly state that the Vice President also assumes the title of President. [Cases: United States ⇨26.]

Twenty-first Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1933, that repealed the 18th Amendment (which established national Prohibition) and returned the power to regulate alcohol to the states. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ⇨5.1, 17.]

2503(b) trust. See TRUST (3).

2503(c) trust. See TRUST (3).

Twenty-fourth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1964, that prohibits the federal and state governments from restricting the right to vote in a federal election because of one's failure to pay a poll tax or other tax. [Cases: Elections ⇨83.]

Twenty-second Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1951, that prohibits a person from being elected President more than twice (or, if the person succeeded to the office with more than half the predecessor's term remaining, more than once). [Cases: United States ⇨26.]

Twenty-seventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1992, that prevents a pay raise for senators and representatives from taking effect until a new Congress convenes. • This amendment was proposed as part of the original Bill of Rights in 1789, but it took 203 years for the required three-fourths of the states to ratify it. — Also termed Madison Amendment. [Cases: United States ⇨39(6).]

Twenty-sixth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1971, that sets the minimum voting age at 18 for all state and federal elections. [Cases: Elections ⇨18.]

Twenty-third Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1961, that allows District of Columbia residents to vote in presidential elections. [Cases: United States ⇨25.]

twist, n. Slang. An informant who provides testimony in exchange for leniency in sentencing, rather than for money. See INFORMANT.

twisting, n. An insurance agent's or company's misrepresenting or misstating facts, or giving an incomplete comparison of policies, to induce an insured to give up a policy in one company and buy another company's policy. [Cases: Insurance ⇨1563, 1618.]

two-controlled-studies standard. The requirement by the Federal Trade Commission that before the maker of an over-the-counter painkiller can advertise that it is better or has fewer side effects than another brand, the maker must verify the claim in two scientifically controlled studies.

two-dismissal rule. (1944) The rule that a notice of voluntary dismissal operates as an adjudication on the merits — not merely as a dismissal without prejudice — when filed by a plaintiff who has already dismissed the same claim in another court. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1714; Pretrial Procedure ⇨519.]

245(i) waiver. Immigration law. An Immigration and Nationality Act provision that allows certain qualified aliens who are otherwise ineligible for adjustment of their status to pay a penalty for the convenience of having their status adjusted to permanent-resident status without having to leave the United States. 8 USCA § 1255(i). Cf. ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨309.]

two-issue rule. (1929) The rule that if multiple issues were submitted to a trial jury and at least one of them is error-free, the appellate court should presume that the jury based its verdict on the proper issue — not on an erroneous one — and should therefore affirm the judgment. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻1068(2).]

two-party payment. See PAYMENT.

two-round voting. See VOTING.

two-stage trial. See bifurcated trial under TRIAL.

two-tier offer. A two-step technique by which a bidder tries to acquire a target corporation, the first step involving a cash tender offer and the second usu. a merger in which the target company's remaining shareholders receive securities from the bidder (these securities ordinarily being less favorable than the cash given in the first step).

two-witness rule. (1900) 1. The rule that, to support a perjury conviction, two independent witnesses (or one witness along with corroborating evidence) must establish that the alleged perjurer gave false testimony. [Cases: Perjury ↻34.] 2. The rule, as stated in the U.S. Constitution, that no person may be convicted of treason without two witnesses to the same overt act — or unless the accused confesses in open court. U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 2. [Cases: Treason ↻13.]

tying, adj. Antitrust. Of or relating to an arrangement whereby a seller sells a product to a buyer only if the buyer purchases another product from the seller <tying agreement>. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↻568.]

tying arrangement. Antitrust. (1953) A seller's agreement to sell one product or service only if the buyer also buys a different product or service; a seller's refusal to sell one product or service unless the buyer also buys a different product or service. • The product or service that the buyer wants to buy is known as the tying product or tying service; the different product or service that the seller insists on selling is known as the tied product or tied service. Tying arrangements may be illegal under the Sherman or Clayton Act if their effect is too anti-competitive. — Also termed tying agreement; tie-in; tie-in arrangement. Cf. RECIPROCAL DEALING. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↻568.]

"The courts have developed an easily articulated text for so-called per se illegal tying arrangements, although the test varies from one circuit court to another. . . . In operation, the tests are similar, and the three-part test combines elements that are separated in the tests of other circuits. For purpose of analysis we use this five-part test: (1) There must be separate tying and tied products; (2) there must be 'evidence of actual coercion by the seller that in fact forced the buyer to accept the tied product . . .'; (3) the seller must possess 'sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product . . .'; (4) there must be 'anticompetitive effects in the tied market . . .'; and (5) there must be 'involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the tied product market . . .'" Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy 392 (2d ed. 1999) (quoting Yetsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 56, 57 (2d Cir. 1980)).

"The traditional objection to tying arrangements is that they enable a firm having a monopoly in one market to obtain a monopoly in a second one. Thus, a firm having monopoly power in the market for business machines could obtain a monopoly on punch cards as well simply by refusing to sell or lease its machines unless the purchaser or lessee agreed to use only its punch cards in the machines." Richard A. Posner, Antitrust Law 197 (2d ed. 2001).

unconscionability (ən-kon-shə-nə-bil-ə-tee). (16c) 1. Extreme unfairness. • Unconscionability is normally assessed by an objective standard: (1) one party's lack of meaningful choice, and (2) contractual terms that unreasonably favor the other party. 2. The principle that a court may refuse to enforce a contract that is unfair or oppressive because of procedural abuses during contract formation or because of overreaching contractual terms, esp. terms that are unreasonably favorable to one party while precluding meaningful choice for the other party. • Because unconscionability depends on circumstances at the time the contract is formed, a later rise in market price is irrelevant. [Cases: Contracts ↻1.]

"Traditionally, a bargain was said to be unconscionable in an action at law if it was 'such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other;' damages were then limited to those to which the aggrieved party was 'equitably' entitled. Even though a contract was fully enforceable in an action for damages, equitable remedies such as specific performance were refused where 'the sum total of its provisions drives too hard a bargain for a court of conscience to assist.' Modern procedural reforms have blurred the distinction between remedies at law and in equity. For contracts for the sale of goods, Uniform Commercial Code § 2-302 states the rule of this Section without distinction between law and equity. Comment 1 to that section adds, 'The principle is one of the prevention of oppression and unfair surprise . . . and not of disturbance of allocation of risks because of superior bargaining power.'" Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 208 cmt. b (1979) (citations omitted).

"Nowhere among the [Uniform Commercial] Code's many definitions is there one of unconscionability. That the term is incapable of precise definition is a source of both strength and weakness." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 4.28, at 310 (3d ed. 1999) procedural unconscionability. (1973) Unconscionability resulting from improprieties in contract formation (such as oral misrepresentations or disparities in bargaining position) rather than from the terms of the contract itself. [Cases: Contracts ↻1.]

"Most cases of unconscionability involve a combination of procedural and substantive unconscionability, as it is generally agreed that if more of one is present, then less of the other is required." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 4.28, at 312 (3d ed. 1999).

substantive unconscionability. (1973) Unconscionability resulting from actual contract terms that are unduly harsh, commercially unreasonable, and grossly unfair given the existing circumstances. [Cases: Contracts ↻1.]

unconscionable (ən-kon-shə-nə-bəl), adj. (16c) 1. (Of a person) having no conscience; unscrupulous <an unconscionable used-car salesman>. 2. (Of an act or transaction) showing no regard for conscience; affronting the sense of justice, decency, or reasonableness <the contract is void as unconscionable>. Cf. CONSCIONABLE. [Cases: Contracts ↻1.]

unconscionable contract. See unconscionable agreement under AGREEMENT.

unconscious, adj. Without awareness; not conscious. • A person who commits a criminal act while unconscious may be relieved from liability for the act.

unconsciousness defense. See AUTOMATISM.

unconstitutional, adj. (18c) Contrary to or in conflict with a constitution, esp. the U.S. Constitution <the law is unconstitutional because it violates the First Amendment's free-speech guarantee>. Cf. NONCONSTITUTIONAL.

unconstitutional-conditions doctrine. Constitutional law. 1. The rule that the government cannot condition a person's receipt of a governmental benefit on the waiver of a constitutionally protected right (esp. a right under the First Amendment). • For example, a television station that receives public funds cannot be forced to refrain from endorsing political candidates. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↻1057.] 2. The rule that the government cannot force a defendant to choose between two constitutionally protected rights. — Also termed doctrine of unconstitutional conditions.

unconstitutionally vague. See VAGUE.

uncontestable clause. See INCONTESTABILITY CLAUSE.

uncontested divorce. See DIVORCE.

uncontested hearing. See HEARING.

uncontrollable, adj. Incapable of being controlled.

uncontrollable impulse. See IMPULSE.

uncontrolled-securities-offering distribution. See securities-offering distribution (2) under DISTRIBUTION.

uncopyrightable, adj. (Of a work) ineligible for copyright protection either because the work lacks originality or because it is an idea, concept, process, or other abstraction that is not included in one of the eight covered classifications of copyrightable works. 17 USCA §§ 101–106. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻4.]

uncore prist (ən[g]-kor prist). [Law French "still ready"] Hist. A plea by which a party alleges readiness to pay or perform what is justly demanded.

"Yet sometimes, after tender and refusal of a debt, if the creditor harasses his debtor with an action, it then becomes necessary for the defendant to acknowledge the debt, and plead the tender; adding, that . . . he is still ready, uncore prist, to discharge it . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 303 (1768).

incorrectability defense. Patents. An affirmative defense in an infringement suit, established by showing (1) that a coinventor's name was omitted from a patent, and (2) that the patent cannot be corrected because the named coinventor acted with deceptive intent. [Cases: Patents ↻283(1).]

uncounseled, adj. Without the benefit or participation of legal counsel <an uncounseled conviction> <an uncounseled defendant>.

uncovered option. See naked option under OPTION.

UNCRC. abbr. UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILD.

unde nihil habet (ən-dee ni-hil hay-bət). [Law Latin "whereof she has nothing"] Hist. A writ of dower for a widow where no dower had been assigned to her within the time allowed by law. See WRIT OF DOWER. Cf. DE DOTE UNDE NIL HABET.

undercapitalization. See CAPITALIZATION.

undercover agent. See AGENT.

undercurrent of surface stream. Water that moves slowly through the bed of a stream or the lands under or immediately adjacent to the stream. • This water is considered part of the surface stream. — Also termed underflow of surface stream.

underdeveloped country. See DEVELOPING COUNTRY.

underflow of surface stream. See UNDERCURRENT OF SURFACE STREAM.

underground economy. See SHADOW ECONOMY.

underground recording. See BOOTLEG RECORDING (1).

underinsurance. An agreement to indemnify against property damage up to a certain amount but for less than the property's full value.

underinsured-motorist coverage. Insurance that pays for the insured's losses and injuries negligently caused by a driver does not have enough liability insurance to cover the damages. Cf. UNINSURED-MOTORIST COVERAGE. [Cases: Insurance ↻2772, 2787.]

underlease. See SUBLEASE.

underlessor. See SUBLESSOR.

under one's hand. (Of a person's signature) affixed manually, as opposed to printed or stamped.

under protest. See PROTEST (3).

Undersecretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property. See DIRECTOR OF THE UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE.

undersheriff. See deputy sheriff under SHERIFF.

undersigned, n. (17c) A person whose name is signed at the end of a document <the undersigned agrees to the terms and conditions set forth above>.

under-65 trust. See TRUST.

understand, vb. To apprehend the meaning of; to know <the testator did not understand what he was signing>.

understanding, n. (bef. 12c) 1. The process of comprehending; the act of a person who understands something. 2. One's personal interpretation of an event or occurrence. 3. An agreement, esp. of an implied or tacit nature.

under submission. (18c) Being considered by the court; under advisement <the case was under submission in the court of appeals for more than two years>.

undertake, vb. (13c) 1. To take on an obligation or task <he has undertaken to chair the committee on legal aid for the homeless>. 2. To give a formal promise; guarantee <the merchant undertook that the goods were waterproof>. 3. To act as surety for (another); to make oneself responsible for (a person, fact, or the like) <her husband undertook her appearance in court>. [Cases: Undertakings ↻1.]

undertaking, n. (14c) 1. A promise, pledge, or engagement. [Cases: Undertakings ↻1.] 2. A bail bond. [Cases: Bail ↻54.]

of drugs or alcohol. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE. [Cases: Automobiles ↻332.]

Undertreasurer of England. Hist. An officer immediately subordinate to the Lord High Treasurer.

undertutor. See TUTOR.

underwriter. 1. INSURER. 2. One who buys stock from the issuer with an intent to resell it to the public; a person or entity, esp. an investment banker, who guarantees the sale of newly issued securities by purchasing all or part of the shares for resale to the public. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻11.18, 60.31.]

"The term 'underwriter' derives its meaning from former British insurance practices. When insuring their cargo shippers would seek out investors to insure their property. The insurers would add their signatures and would write their names under those of the shipper; hence the term 'underwriters.' Both in terms of the insurance industry and the securities markets, the concept of underwriting has expanded significantly since its inception." Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 2.1, at 57 (2d ed. 1994).

chartered life underwriter. An underwriter who has satisfied the requirements set forth by The American College (formerly The American College of Life Underwriters) to be designated a life insurance underwriter. — Abbr. CLU.

insurance underwriter. 1. INSURER. — Also termed writer. 2. An insurance-company employee who is responsible for determining whether to issue a policy and the amount to charge for the coverage provided. [Cases: Insurance ↻1515.]

underwriting, n. 1. The act of assuming a risk by insuring it; the insurance of life or property. See INSURANCE. [Cases: Insurance ↻1515.] 2. The act of agreeing to buy all or part of a new issue of securities to be offered for public sale. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻11.18, 60.31.] — underwrite, vb.

best-efforts underwriting. Underwriting in which an investment banker agrees to direct, but not guarantee, the public sale of the issuer's securities. • The underwriter, or underwriting group, sells the securities as agent for the issuer, and unsold securities are never issued.

firm-commitment underwriting. Underwriting in which the underwriter agrees to buy and sell all the shares to be issued and assumes full financial responsibility for any unsold securities. • The underwriter, or underwriting group, buys the securities from the issuer and resells them as principal. In this type of underwriting, securities that are not sold to the public are owned by the underwriter, and the issuer is paid for those securities as well as the others.

standby underwriting. Underwriting in which the underwriter agrees, for a fee, to buy from the issuer any unsold shares remaining after the public offering. — Also termed strict underwriting.

underwriting agreement. See AGREEMENT.

underwriting spread. See SPREAD (4). undesirable discharge. See DISCHARGE (8).

unde vi (ən-dee vi). [Latin] Roman law. A praetorian interdict allowing one who was violently dispossessed of a thing to recover it.

undue, adj. (14c) 1. Archaic. Not yet owed; not currently payable <an undue debt>. 2. Excessive or unwarranted <undue burden> <undue influence>. — unduly, adv.

undue-breadth rejection. See REJECTION.

undue burden, n. See BURDEN.

undue-burden test. (1992) Constitutional law. The Supreme Court test stating that a law regulating abortion will be struck down if it places a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman's right to obtain an abortion. • This test replaced the "trimester analysis" set forth in Roe v. Wade, in which the state's ability to restrict abortion increased after each trimester of pregnancy. Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (1992). [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control ⇨ 104.]

undue experimentation. Patents. An unreasonable amount of research and testing that would be required for a person skilled in the appropriate art to make and work an invention from the specification in the patent application. • If undue experimentation would be required, the application fails the embodiment requirement of 35 USCA § 112. See WANDS TEST. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 99.]

undue hardship. See HARDSHIP.

undue influence. (18c) 1. The improper use of power or trust in a way that deprives a person of free will and substitutes another's objective. • Consent to a contract, transaction, or relationship or to conduct is voidable if the consent is obtained through undue influence. — Also termed implied coercion; moral coercion. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 96.]

"Undue influence is unfair persuasion of a party who is under the domination of the person exercising the persuasion or who by virtue of the relation between them is justified in assuming that the person will not act in a manner inconsistent with his welfare." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 177(1) (1979).

"When at the turn of the twentieth century, the common law doctrine of duress was expanded to provide relief for coercion irrespective of the means of coercion, much of the work of undue influence became unnecessary. The doctrine has a much more specialized role today, although often enough the precedents decided when the more general doctrine prevailed are cited and quoted to the general confusion of the profession. Today the gist of the doctrine is unfair persuasion rather than coercion. Euphoria rather than fear is often, but certainly not always, the state of mind of the party unduly influenced." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-9, at 351-52 (3d ed. 1987).

2. Wills & estates. Coercion that destroys a testator's free will and substitutes another's objectives in its place.

• When a beneficiary actively procures the execution of a will, a presumption of undue influence may be raised, based on the confidential relationship between the influencer and the person influenced. — Also termed improper influence; (formerly, in both senses) suggestion. See COERCION; DURESS. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 154.]

undue multiplicity of claims. See AGGREGATION OF CLAIMS.

undue-multiplicity-of-claims rejection. See REJECTION.

unethical, adj. (1871) Not in conformity with moral norms or standards of professional conduct. See LEGAL ETHICS.

unexpected, adj. Happening without warning; not expected.

unexpired term. See TERM (4).

unfair competition. (1876) 1. Dishonest or fraudulent rivalry in trade and commerce; esp., the practice of endeavoring to pass off one's own goods or products in the market for those of another by means of imitating or counterfeiting the name, brand, size, shape, or other distinctive characteristic of the article or its packaging. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨40.] 2. The body of law encompassing various business and privacy torts, all generally based on deceitful trade practices, including passing off, false advertising, commercial disparagement, and misappropriation.

"The legal doctrine of unfair competition is a development of the fundamental idea that dealings based on deceit are legally wrong." Harry D. Nims, The Law of Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks 6 (1929).

unfair hearing. See HEARING.

unfair labor practice. Any conduct prohibited by state or federal law governing the relations among employers, employees, and labor organizations. • Examples of unfair labor practices by an employer include (1) interfering with protected employee rights, such as the right to self-organization, (2) discriminating against employees for union-related activities, (3) retaliating against employees who have invoked their rights, and (4) refusing to engage in collective bargaining. Examples of unfair labor practices by a labor organization include causing an employer to discriminate against an employee, engaging in an illegal strike or boycott, causing an employer to pay for work not to be performed (i.e., featherbedding), and refusing to engage in collective bargaining. 29 USCA §§ 151-169. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨1427-1504.]

unfair persuasion. (1931) Contracts. A type of undue influence in which a stronger party achieves a result by means that seriously impair the weaker party's free and competent exercise of judgment. • Unfair persuasion is a lesser form of undue influence than duress and misrepresentation. The two primary factors to be considered are the unavailability of independent advice and

unfair surprise. (1815) A situation in which a party, having had no notice of some action or proffered evidence, is unprepared to answer or refute it.

unfair trade. An inequitable business practice; esp., the act or an instance of a competitor's repeating of words in a way that conveys a misrepresentation that materially injures the person who first used the words, by appropriating credit of some kind earned by the first user. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨25.]

Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law. A model statute patterned on the Federal Trade Commission Act and proposed by the FTC in 1967 for adoption by the states; a state law providing consumer-protection remedies, including private causes of action, for deceptive trade practices and false advertising. • The Act gives the state attorney general power to regulate unfair and deceptive trade practices. It also gives consumers a right to sue offenders directly. — Abbr. UTPCPL. — Also termed Little FTC Acts. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨126.]

unfinished business. See BUSINESS.

unfinished business and general orders. See BUSINESS.

unfit, adj. (16c) 1. Unsuitable; not adapted or qualified for a particular use or service <the buyer returned the unfit goods to the seller and asked for a refund>. [Cases: Contracts ⇨312(5); Sales ⇨284(1).] 2. Family law. Morally unqualified; incompetent <the judge found the mother unfit and so found that awarding custody of the child to the father was in the child's best interests>. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨32; Infants ⇨154.1-159.]

unfitness of a parent. Family law. A parent's failure to exhibit a reasonable concern for, interest in, or responsibility for a child's welfare. • Regardless of the specific ground for an allegation of unfitness, a court considers the parent's actions and the circumstances surrounding the conduct in deciding whether unfitness has been demonstrated. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨51; Infants ⇨154.1-159.]

unforeseen, adj. Not foreseen; not expected <unforeseen circumstances>.

unfriendly suitor. See CORPORATE RAIDER.

unfriendly takeover. See hostile takeover under TAKEOVER.

unfunded deferred-compensation plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

unhandsome dealing. Archaic. See SHARP PRACTICE.

unharmful, adj. Not injured or damaged.

unica taxatio (yoo-nə-kə tak-say-shee-oh). [Law Latin "a single taxation"] Hist. The practice of having the jury assess damages against a defaulting defendant as well as a defendant who contests the case.

unico contextu (yoo-ni-koh kən-tekst-t[y]oo). [Law Latin] Hist. In one connection. • The phrase appeared in reference to that which was accomplished by the same act or by different acts performed at the same time.

"When there are more parties than one to a deed, it is not essential to the validity of its execution that they should subscribe unico contextu — i.e., it is not necessary for them to subscribe at the same time and place. But where (as was formerly required) two notaries subscribed for a person who could not write, it was necessary that they should subscribe unico contextu at the same time and place, and before the same witnesses." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 611 (4th ed. 1894).

uniform, adj. Characterized by a lack of variation; identical or consistent.

uniform act. 1. A law drafted with the intention that it will be adopted by all or most of the states; esp., a uniform law. See UNIFORM LAW. Cf. MODEL ACT. 2. See uniform statute under STATUTE. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 226.]

Uniform Adoption Act. A 1994 model statute aimed at achieving uniformity in adoption laws. • The current version of the Act was promulgated in 1994 by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. State adoption has been largely unsuccessful. Earlier versions, in 1953 and 1971, were amended many times but were enacted in only a few states. — Abbr. UAA. [Cases: Adoption ⇨ 1-25.]

Uniform Anatomical Gift Act. A 1968 model statute that created protocols that govern the giving and receiving of anatomical gifts. • Under the Act, persons may donate their body or parts of their body for purposes of transplantation, therapy, research, or education. The original Act has been adopted in some form in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. It was revised in 1987, and the revised version has been adopted in some form in at least 22 states. — Abbr. UAGA. [Cases: Dead Bodies ⇨ 1.]

Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. A 1968 model statute that sets out a standard (based on the child's residence in and connections with the state) by which a state court determines whether it has jurisdiction over a particular child-custody matter or whether it must recognize a custody decree issued by another state's court. • The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act was replaced in 1997 by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act. — Abbr. UCCJA. See HOME STATE. Cf. PARENTAL KIDNAPPING PREVENTION ACT; UNIFORM CHILD CUSTODY JURISDICTION AND ENFORCEMENT ACT. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨ 730-753.]

Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act. A 1997 model statute that provides uniform methods of expedited interstate custody and visitation orders. • This Act was promulgated as a successor to the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The UCCJEA brings the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act into conformity with the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act and the Violence Against Women Act. The Act revises child-custody jurisdiction, giving clearer standards for original jurisdiction and a standard for continuing jurisdiction. The Act also provides a remedial process for enforcing interstate child custody and visitation. — Abbr. UCCJEA. Cf. UNIFORM CHILD CUSTODY JURISDICTION ACT. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨ 730-753.]

Uniform Code of Military Justice. 1. CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE. 2. A model code promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws to govern state military forces when not in federal service. 11 U.L.A. 335 et seq. (1974). — Abbr. UCMJ. [Cases: Military Justice ⇨ 502.]

Uniform Commercial Code. A uniform law that governs commercial transactions, including sales of goods, secured transactions, and negotiable instruments. • The Code has been adopted in some form by every state and the District of Columbia. — Abbr. UCC. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 2; Sales ⇨ 3.1; Secured Transactions ⇨ 3.]

Uniform Computer Information Transactions Act. A model law that regulates software licensing and computer-information transactions. • The act draws upon contract law and the Uniform Commercial Code to create a regulatory scheme for licensing, rather than sales or lease, transactions. Among other things, UCITA applies to contracts for the licensing or purchase of software, contracts for software development, and contracts for access to databases through the Internet. It does not cover goods or services contracts within the scope of the UCC. — Abbr. UCITA.

Uniform Consumer Credit Code. A uniform law designed to simplify and modernize the consumer credit and usury laws, to improve consumer understanding of the terms of credit transactions, to protect consumers against unfair practices, and the like. • This Code has been adopted by only a few states. — Abbr. UCCC; U3C. — Also termed Consumer Credit Code. See CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT. [Cases: Consumer Credit ⇨ 1.]

Uniform Controlled Substances Act. A uniform act, adopted by many states and the federal government, governing the sale, use, and distribution of drugs. 21 USCA §§ 801 et seq. [Cases: Controlled Substances ⇨ 4, 20.]

Uniform Crime Reports. A series of annual criminological studies (each entitled Crime in the United States) prepared by the FBI. • The reports include data on eight index offenses, statistics on arrests, and information on offenders, crime rates, and the like. — Abbr. UCR.

Uniform Customs and Practice for Commercial Documentary Credits. A publication of the International Chamber of Commerce that codifies widespread customs of bankers and merchants relating to the mechanics and operation of letters of credit. • Courts use this publication to supplement and help interpret primary sources of credit law, such as UCC Article 5. — Abbr. UCP. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻191.]

Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act. A 1964 model state statute that codified many common-law intellectual-property torts, such as trademark infringement, passing off, trade disparagement, and false advertising, and that provided additional consumer protection against other forms of commercial deception. • The Act provides a laundry list of prohibited practices, all involving misrepresentation. — Abbr. UDTPA. See BABY FTC ACT. [Cases: Consumer Protection ↻6.] [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↻126.]

Uniform Determination of Death Act. A 1978 model statute that provides a comprehensive basis for determining death. • This is a technical act that merely defines death clinically and does not deal with suicide, assisted suicide, or the right to die. The Act was revised in 1980. It has been adopted in almost all states. [Cases: Death ↻1.]

Uniform Disposition of Community Property at Death Act. A 1971 model statute designed for non-community-property states to preserve the rights of each spouse in property that was community property before the spouses moved to non-community-property states, unless they have severed or altered their community-property rights.

Uniform Division of Income for Tax Purposes Act. A uniform law, adopted by some states, that provides criteria to assist in assigning the total taxable income of a multistate corporation among the various states. — Abbr. UDITPA. [Cases: Taxation ↻3477.]

Uniform Divorce Recognition Act. A 1947 model code adopted by some states regarding full-faith-and-credit issues that arise in divorces. — Abbr. UDRA. [Cases: Divorce ↻351.]

Uniform Durable Power of Attorney Act. A 1979 model statute that provides a simple way for a person to deal with his or her property by providing a power of attorney that will survive after the incompetence of the principal. • The Act was revised in 1987 and has been adopted in almost every state. [Cases: Principal and Agent ↻42.]

Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act. A federal statute that governs the disposition of military pension benefits to former spouses of persons in the armed services. 10 USCA §§ 1401 et seq. • The Act permits state courts to treat military-retirement pay as marital property and to order payment of up to 50% of the retirement pay directly to the former spouse if the spouses were married for at least ten years while the employee served in the military. — Abbr. USFSPA. [Cases: Divorce ↻252.3(4).]

Uniform Electronic Transactions Act. A 1999 model law designed to support electronic commerce by providing means for legally recognizing and retaining electronic records, establishing how parties can bind themselves in an electronic transaction, and providing for the use of electronic records by governmental agencies. • UETA covers electronic records and digital signatures but applies only if all parties agree to do business electronically. — Abbr. UETA.

Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. A uniform state law giving the holder of a foreign judgment the right to levy and execute as if it were a domestic judgment. [Cases: Judgment ↻814–830.]

Uniform Fraudulent Conveyances Act. A model act adopted in 1918 to deal with issues arising from fraudulent conveyances by insolvent persons. • This act differentiated between conduct that was presumed fraudulent and conduct that required an actual intent to commit fraud. — Abbr. UFCA. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ↻2.]

Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. A model act designed to bring uniformity among the states regarding the definition of, and penalties for, fraudulent transfers. • This act was adopted in 1984 to replace the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyances Act. — Abbr. UFTA. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ↻2.]

Uniform Gifts to Minors Act. See UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINORS ACT. — Abbr. UGMA.

Uniform Health-Care Decisions Act. A 1993 model statute that facilitates and encourages adults to make advance directives. — Abbr. UHCDA. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE; LIVING WILL. [Cases: Health ↻912.]

Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. A 1992 model statute establishing a one-order system by which an alimony or child-support decree issued by one state can be enforced against a former spouse who resides in another state. • This statute has been adopted in every state and is the basis of jurisdiction in child-support suits. The purpose of the Act is to make the pursuit of interstate child support and paternity more effective, consistent, and efficient by requiring all states to recognize and enforce consistently support orders issued in other states. Before its enactment, there was considerable disparity among the states in the way they handled interstate child-support proceedings, since each state had differing versions of the earlier uniform law, the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. The Act was revised in 1996 and again in 2001. — Abbr. UIFSA. [Cases: Child Support ↻500–510.]

Uniform Interstate Juvenile Compact. An agreement that regulates the treatment of juveniles who are not under proper supervision or control, or who have run away or escaped, and who are likely to endanger their own or others' health, morals, or welfare. • The Compact is relied on by the state to transport juvenile runaways back to their home states. It has now been universally adopted in the United States, but not always in its entirety. — Abbr. UIJC.

Uniformity Clause. (1881) The clause of the U.S. Constitution requiring the uniform collection of federal taxes. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3022.]

Uniform Juvenile Court Act. A 1968 model statute designed to (1) provide for the care, protection, and moral, mental, and physical development of the children who come under its provisions, (2) provide juvenile delinquents with treatment, training, and rehabilitation rather than criminal punishment, (3) attempt to keep families together unless separation of parents and children is necessary for the children's welfare or is in the public interest, (4) provide a judicial procedure for a fair hearing and protection of juvenile delinquents' constitutional and other legal rights, and (5) provide simple interstate procedures to carry out cooperative measures among the juvenile courts of different states. — Abbr. UJCA. [Cases: Infants ↷131-254.]

uniform law. An unofficial law proposed as legislation for all the states to adopt exactly as written, the purpose being to promote greater consistency among the states. • All the uniform laws are promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. For a complete collection, see Uniform Laws Annotated. See uniform statute under STATUTE. Cf. MODEL ACT. [Cases: Statutes ↷226.]

Uniform Law Commissioners. See NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF COMMISSIONERS ON UNIFORM STATE LAWS.

Uniform Limited Partnership Act. A model law promulgated in 1916 for adoption by state legislatures to govern the relationship between the partners of a limited partnership. • At one time it was adopted in all states except Louisiana. The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws promulgated the Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act (RULPA) in 1976, and made substantial amendments to it in 1985. The amended RULPA has been adopted by most states. — Abbr. ULPA. [Cases: Partnership ↷351.]

Uniform Mandatory Disposition of Detainers Act. A 1958 model statute requiring a state to timely dispose of any untried charges against a prisoner in that state, on the prisoner's written request. • The Act has been adopted by several states. See INTERSTATE AGREEMENT ON DETAINERS ACT. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ↷51.]

Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act. A 1970 model statute that defines marriage and divorce. • Extensively amended in 1973, the Act was an attempt by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws to make marriage and divorce laws more uniform. The Act's greatest significance is that it introduced, as the sole ground for divorce, irreconcilable differences. Although the UMDA has been enacted in part in only a handful of states, it has had an enormous impact on marriage and divorce laws in all states. — Abbr. UMDA. — Also termed Model Marriage and Divorce Act. See IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCES.

Uniform Parentage Act. A 1973 model statute that provides a means for determining parenthood for the general welfare of the child and for assigning child support. • The Act abolishes distinctions between legitimate and illegitimate status for children. Instead, it directs courts to determine rights and responsibilities based on the existence of a parent-child relationship. The Act has been adopted in all states. The Act was revised in 2000 and amended in 2002. Among other changes, the revisions provided frameworks for establishing the parentage (esp. paternity) of children born to married or unmarried couples, and set standards and rules for genetic testing. A minority of states have enacted a version of the revised Act. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ↷31.]

Uniform Partnership Act. A 1914 model statute intended to bring uniformity to state laws governing general and limited partnerships. • The Act was adopted by almost all the states, but has been superseded in several of them by the Revised Uniform Partnership Act (1994). — Abbr. UPA. [Cases: Partnership ↷351.] [Cases: Partnership ↷1, 351.]

Uniform Premarital Agreement Act. A 1983 model statute that governs the drafting of prenuptial contracts and provides a more certain framework for drafting complete and enforceable agreements. • Under the UPAA, a premarital agreement must be in writing and signed by the parties. It becomes effective only upon marriage. The agreement may govern the parties' assets, support, and obligations during the marriage, at death, and upon divorce. The UPAA has been adopted in some form in about one-third of the states. — Abbr. UPAA. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷29.]

Uniform Principal and Income Act. A uniform code adopted by some states governing allocation of principal and income in trusts and estates. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷502; Trusts ↷272; Wills ↷684.]

Uniform Probate Code. A 1969 model statute that modernizes the rules and doctrines governing intestate succession, probate, and the administration of estates. • It has been extensively amended many times since 1969 and has been enacted in a majority of states. — Abbr. UPC. [Cases: Wills ↷3, 204.]

Uniform Prudent Investor Act. A 1994 model statute that sets a standard for the acts of a trustee, adopts a prudent-investor standard, and prefers a modern portfolio approach to investing. • Under the Uniform Prudent Investor Act, the trustee is given significant power to delegate the selection of investments. The prudent-investor standard replaces the prudent-person standard of investing. The portfolio approach provides that no investment will be viewed in isolation; rather, it will be viewed as part of the entire portfolio. Under this theory, even though an investor loses trust assets on an investment, if there is an overall positive return, the investor will not be liable to the beneficiaries. — Abbr. UPIA. See PRUDENT-INVESTOR RULE.

Uniform Putative and Unknown Fathers Act. A 1988 model statute aimed at codifying Supreme Court decisions on the rights of an unwed father in relation to his child. • The Act deals primarily with an unwed father's right to notice of a termination and adoption proceeding, to adjudication of paternity, to visitation, and to custody. — Abbr. UPUFA. — Also termed Model Putative Fathers Act; Putative Fathers Act.

Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. A 1950 model statute (now superseded) that sought to unify the way in which interstate support matters were processed and the way in which one jurisdiction's orders were given full faith and credit in another jurisdiction. • This Act, which was amended in 1958 and 1960, was replaced in 1997 with the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. — Abbr. URESA. See UNIFORM INTERSTATE FAMILY SUPPORT ACT. [Cases: Child Support ↷ 500–510.]

Uniform Simultaneous Death Act. A 1940 model statute creating a rule that a person must survive a decedent by at least 120 hours in order to avoid disputes caused by simultaneous deaths (as in a common disaster) or by quickly successive deaths of persons between whom property or death benefits pass on the death of one survived by the other. • In the absence of the 120-hour period of survival, each person is presumed to have survived the other for purposes of distributing their respective estates. The Act was revised in 1993 and has been adopted in some form by almost every state. See COMMORIENTES. [Cases: Death ↷ 5, 6.]

Uniform Status of Children of Assisted Conception Act. A 1988 model statute aimed at ensuring certainty of legal parentage when assisted conception has been used. • The adopting state has the option of regulating or prohibiting contracts with surrogate mothers.

uniform statute. See STATUTE.

Uniform Trade Secrets Act. A 1979 model statute, enacted by most states, defining trade secret differently from the common law by being at once broader (because there is no continuous-use requirement) and narrower (because information “readily ascertainable by proper means” cannot qualify). • The Act has three elements: (1) the information must qualify as a trade secret; (2) it must be misappropriated, either through wrongful means or by breaching a duty of confidentiality; and (3) the owner must have taken reasonable precautions to keep the information secret. — Abbr. UTSA. — Also termed Uniform Trade Secrets Protection Act. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷ 411.]

Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. A 1983 model statute providing for the transfer of property to a minor and permitting a custodian who acts in a fiduciary capacity to manage investments and apply the income from the property to the minor's support. • The Act has been adopted in most states. It was revised in 1986. — Abbr. UTMA. — Also termed Transfers to Minors Act. — Formerly also termed Uniform Gifts to Minors Act; Gifts to Minors Act. [Cases: Infants ↷ 28.]

units-of-production method. Tax. An accounting method in which the depreciation provision is computed at a fixed rate per product unit, based on an estimate of the total number of units that the property will produce during its service life. • This method is used in the oil-and-gas industry when the total number of units of production (i.e., barrels in a reserve) can be accurately estimated.

unity, n. (13c) 1. The fact or condition of being one in number; oneness. 2. Jointness in interest, possession, time, or title. • At common law, all four of these unities were required for the creation of a joint tenancy. See joint tenancy under TENANCY. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷1, 3.] — unitary, adj.

unity of interest. (18c) The requirement that all joint tenants' interests must be identical in nature, extent, and duration. — Also termed interest unity. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷ 1, 3.]

unity of possession. (18c) The requirement that each joint tenant must be entitled to possession of the whole property. — Also termed possession unity. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷ 1, 3.]

unity of time. (18c) The requirement that all joint tenants' interests must vest at the same time. — Also termed time unity. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷ 1, 3.]

unity of title. (18c) The requirement that all joint tenants must acquire their interests under the same instrument. — Also termed title unity. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ↷ 1, 3.]

unity of art. Copyright. The inseparable nature of utilitarian and functional aspects of applied art. • France uses the unity-of-art approach to applied art and industrial design, but stops short of protecting strictly utilitarian design under copyright. — Also termed cumulative approach. Cf. DUALITY OF ART.

unity of seisin (see-zin). (1800) The merging of seisin in one person, brought about when the person becomes seised of a tract of land on which he or she already has an easement. [Cases: Easements ↷ 27.]

universal agency. See general agency under AGENCY (1).

universal agent. See AGENT.

Universal Copyright Convention. A 1952 treaty binding signatories to give citizens of other member nations the same copyright protection that their own citizens receive. 25 U.S.T. 1341, T.I.A.S. No. 7868. • Administered by the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, the Convention does not apply between nations that are also signatories of the Berne Convention. The United States signed the treaty in 1955. — Abbr. UCC. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷ 34.]

Universal Declaration of Human Rights. An international bill of rights proclaimed by the United Nations in December 1948, being that body's first general enumeration of human rights and fundamental freedoms. • The preamble states that "recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." The Declaration contains a lengthy list of rights and fundamental freedoms. For the full text of the Declaration, see Appendix C. [Cases: International Law ↷ 10.45(1).]

"The Universal Declaration is the first comprehensive human rights instrument to be proclaimed by a universal international organization. Because of its moral status and the legal and political importance it has acquired over the years, the Declaration ranks with the Magna Carta, the French Declaration of the Rights of Man and the American Declaration of Independence as a milestone in mankind's struggle for freedom and human dignity. Its debt to all these great historical documents is unmistakable." Thomas Buergenthal et al., International Human Rights in a Nutshell 35-36 (3d ed. 2002).

universal defense. See real defense under DEFENSE (4).

universal inheritance. See INHERITANCE.

universal-inheritance rule. Wills & estates. A doctrine holding that an intestate estate escheats to the state only if the decedent leaves no surviving relatives, no matter how distant. • Through the first half of the 20th century, this rule was broadly followed in American jurisdictions. The Uniform Probate Code abandons the universal-inheritance rule and provides that if no member of the third or a nearer parentela survives the decedent, the intestate estate escheats to the state. — Also termed rule of universal inheritance. See PARENTELA. Cf. laughing heir under HEIR; GRADUAL METHOD. [Cases: Escheat ↷ 3.] universalist movement. Copyright. A 19th-century campaign in Europe to recognize a worldwide copyright law based on an author's moral rights.

"The universalist movement evolved both in and out of France, starting with an international Congress of Authors and Artists in Brussels in 1858, attended by delegates of literary societies and universities, as well as by authors, artists, journalists, librarians, and lawyers. The movement gained momentum at an 1878 international literary congress in Paris presided over by Victor Hugo." Paul Goldstein, International Copyright: Principles, Law, and Practice 19 (2001).

universality. 1. Equality of applicability. 2. Copyright. A nation's policy or practice of protecting artists' rights in their creations irrespective of the creator's nationality or where the work was created. • Universality, the most generous approach to international intellectual-property rights, is generally favored in countries that treat copyright as a moral right. Cf. RECIPROCITY; NATIONAL TREATMENT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷ 34.]

universitas (yoo-ni-vär-sə-tas), n. [Latin] Roman law. A union of persons or things considered as a whole; a corporation.

universitas facti (yoo-ni-vär-sə-tas fak-ti). [Law Latin] A plurality of corporeal things of the same kind regarded as a whole, such as a herd of cattle.

universitas juris (yoo-ni-vär-sə-tas joor-is). [Latin] Roman & civil law. The whole of a person's rights and liabilities; the totality of a person's legal relations.

"A universitas juris is a collection of rights and duties united by the single circumstance of their having belonged at one time to some one person." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 148 (17th ed. 1901).

universitas personarum (yoo-ni-vər-sə-tas pər-sə-nay-rəm). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A group of people that are legally considered an entity, such as a college or corporation. Pl. universitates personarum.

universitas rerum (yoo-ni-vər-sə-tas reer-əm). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A whole collection of things; a variety of individual things that are together regarded by the law as a whole. See JUS RERUM.

"In the time of Justinian the universitas rerum, or universitas iuris (both expressions are used) is a somewhat abstract conception: it means the sum or whole of a man's legal position so far as it concerns the ius rerum. The conception is important in law only on the occasions, of which death is by far the most important, on which the universitas passes from one to another. . . . The expression universitas rerum is also used in another sense, to denote any collection of objects considered as a whole." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 172 (2d ed. 1953).

universus (yoo-ni-vər-səs). [Latin] The whole; all together.

usage. (13c) 1. A well-known, customary, and uniform practice, usu. in a specific profession or business. See CUSTOM (1). Cf. CONVENTION (6). [Cases: Customs and Usages ⇨ 1-22.]

"A 'usage' is merely a customary or habitual practice; a 'convention' is a practice that is established by general tacit consent. 'Usage' denotes something that people are accustomed to do; 'convention' indicates that they are accustomed to do it because of a general agreement that it is the proper thing to do." Herbert W. Horwill, The Usages of the American Constitution 22 (1925).

"Although rules of law are often founded on usage, usage is not in itself a legal rule but merely habit or practice in fact. A particular usage may be more or less widespread. It may prevail throughout an area, and the area may be small or large — a city, a state or a larger region. A usage may prevail among all people in the area, or only in a special trade or other group. Usages change over time, and persons in close association often develop temporary usages peculiar to themselves." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 219 cmt. a (1979).

custom and usage. See CUSTOM AND USAGE.

general usage. (16c) A usage that prevails throughout a country or particular trade or profession; a usage that is not restricted to a local area. [Cases: Customs and Usages ↷1.]

local usage. (18c) A practice or method regularly observed in a particular place, sometimes considered by a court in interpreting a document. UCC § 1-205(2) (3). See CUSTOM AND USAGE. [Cases: Customs and Usages ↷9.]

trade usage. (1864) A practice or method of dealing having such regular observance in a region, vocation, or trade that it justifies an expectation that it will be observed in a given transaction; a customary practice or set of practices relied on by persons conversant in, or connected with, a trade or business. • While a course of performance or a course of dealing can be established by the parties' testimony, a trade usage is usu. established by expert testimony. — Also termed usage of trade; course of trade. Cf. COURSE OF DEALING; COURSE OF PERFORMANCE. [Cases: Customs and Usages ↷1.]

"The existence and scope of a usage of trade are to be determined as questions of fact. If a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is to be determined by the court as a question of law. Unless otherwise agreed, a usage of trade in the vocation or trade in which the parties are engaged or a usage of trade of which they know or have reason to know gives meaning to or supplements or qualifies their agreement." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 222 (1979).

use (yoos), n. (bef. 12c) 1. The application or employment of something; esp., a long-continued possession and employment of a thing for the purpose for which it is adapted, as distinguished from a possession and employment that is merely temporary or occasional <the neighbors complained to the city about the owner's use of the building as a dance club>.

accessory use. Zoning. A use that is dependent on or pertains to a main use. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷301-308.]

adverse use. A use without license or permission. Cf. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

beneficial use. Property. The right to use property and all that makes that property desirable or habitable, such as light, air, and access, even if someone else owns the legal title to the property.

collateral use. Intellectual property. The legal use of a trademark by someone other than the trademark owner, whereby the other party must clearly identify itself, the use of the trademark, and the absence of affiliation with the trademark owner.

commercial use. A use that is connected with or furthers an ongoing profit-making activity. Cf. non-commercial use.

conditional use. Zoning. A use of property subject to special controls and conditions. • A conditional use is one that is suitable to a zoning district, but not necessarily to every location within that district. — Also termed special exception. See SPECIAL EXCEPTION (2). [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷382.]

conforming use. Zoning. The use of a structure or of the land in conformity with the uses permitted under the zoning classifications of a particular area, such as the building of a single-family dwelling in a residential zone. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷271.]

double use. Patents. An application of a known principle or process to a new use without leading to a new result or product. [Cases: Patents ↷27.]

exclusive use. 1. Trademarks. The right to use a specific mark without exception, and to prevent another from using a confusingly similar mark. [Cases: Trademarks ↷1182.] 2. Property. The right of an adverse user to a property, exercised independently of any similar rights held by others; one of the elements of a prescriptive easement. See USER. [Cases: Adverse Possession ↷36, 37; Easements ↷8(4).]

experimental use. Patents. 1. The use or sale of an invention by the inventor for experimental purposes. 2. A defense to liability for patent infringement when the infringement took place only to satisfy curiosity or to complete an experiment, rather than for profit. [Cases: Patents ↷260.]

highest and best use. Real estate. In valuing property, the use that will generate the most profit. • This standard is used esp. to determine the fair market value of property subject to eminent domain. — Often shortened to best use. — Also termed most suitable use. [Cases: Eminent Domain ↷134; Taxation ↷2515.]

incidental use. Zoning. Land use that is dependent on or affiliated with the land's primary use. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷301–308.]

most suitable use. See highest and best use.

noncommercial use. A use for private pleasure or business purposes that non involving the generation of income or bestowing a reward or other compensation. Cf. commercial use.

nonconforming use. Zoning. Land use that is impermissible under current zoning restrictions but that is allowed because the use existed lawfully before the restrictions took effect. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷321–338.]

pious use. The designation and actual use of property for recognized religious or charitable purposes. Cf. superstitious use.

popular use. A person's imperfect right to enjoy public land. • A popular use is not legally enforceable. It is dependent on the government's will to allow access to the land.

public use. 1. Property. The public's beneficial right to use property or facilities subject to condemnation. See CONDEMNATION (2). [Cases: Eminent Domain ↷12–42.] 2. Patents. Any use of or offer to use a completed or operative invention in a nonsecret, natural, and intended manner. • A patent is invalid if the invention was in public use more than one year before the patent's application date. [Cases: Patents ↷75.]

"The term 'public use' is misleading, for any use from which the public is not excluded, even though none comes, is held to be public. Similarly, an actual public use of a machine, even though the invention feature be effectively concealed from inspection, is held to be public. It makes no difference whether the patent or other publication is that of the inventor or someone else." Roger Sherman Hoar, Patent Tactics and the Law 48 (3d ed. 1950) (citing Gillman v. Stern, 114 F.2d 28, 31 (2d Cir. 1940)).

reasonable use. Use of one's property for an appropriate purpose that does not unreasonably interfere with another's use of property. See REASONABLE-USE THEORY.

regular use. Insurance. A use that is usual, normal, or customary, as opposed to an occasional, special, or incidental use. • This term often appears in automobile-insurance policies in the definition of a nonowned automobile — that is, an automobile not owned by or furnished for the regular use of the insured. Nonowned automobiles are excluded from coverage under most liability policies. [Cases: Insurance ↷2657.]

superstitious use. A designation or use of property for religious purposes not legally recognized or tolerated (such as gifts either favoring an unrecognized religion or supporting the saying of prayers for the dead). Cf. pious use.

2. A habitual or common practice <drug use>. 3. A purpose or end served <the tool had several uses>. 4. A benefit or profit; esp., the right to take profits from land owned and possessed by another; the equitable ownership of land to which another person holds the legal title <cestui que use>. See CESTUI QUE USE. — use (yooz), vb.

contingent use. (17c) A use that would be a contingent remainder if it had not been limited by way of use. • An example is a transfer "to A, to the use of B for life, with the remainder to the use of C's heirs." — Also termed future use.

entire use. A use of property solely for the benefit of a married woman. • When used in the habendum of a trust deed for the benefit of a married woman, this phrase operates to keep her husband from taking anything under the deed. — Also termed entire benefit; sole use; sole and separate use.

executed use. Hist. A use resulting from combining the equitable title and legal title of an estate, done to comply with the Statute of Uses' mandate that the holder of an estate be vested with legal title to ensure the holder's liability for feudal dues. See STATUTE OF USES.

executory use. See springing use.

future use. See contingent use.

official use. Hist. A use imposing a duty on a person holding legal title to an estate on behalf of another, such as a requirement that a feoffee to uses sell the estate and apportion the proceeds among several beneficiaries. • The Statute of Uses eliminated this type of use.

permissive use. Hist. A passive use resorted to before passage of the Statute of Uses in 1535 to avoid an oppressive feudal law (such as mortmain) by naming one person as the legal owner of property while allowing another to possess the property and enjoy the benefits arising from it.

present use. Hist. A use that has an immediate existence and is subject to the Statute of Uses.

resulting use. (18c) A use created by implication and remaining with the grantor when the conveyance lacks consideration.

secondary use. See shifting use.

shifting use. (18c) A use arising from the occurrence of a certain event that terminates the preceding use. • In the following example, C has a shifting use that arises when D makes the specified payment: "to A for the use of B, but then to C when D pays $1,000 to E." This is a type of conditional limitation. — Also termed secondary use. See conditional limitation under LIMITATION. [Cases: Trusts ↷ 131; Wills ↷ 625.]

sole and separate use. See entire use.

springing use. (17c) A use arising on the occurrence of a future event. • In the following example, B has a springing use that vests when B marries: "to A for the use of B when B marries." — Also termed executory use. [Cases: Trusts ↷ 131; Wills ↷ 625.]

use-based license. See LICENSE.

use/derivative-use immunity. See use immunity under IMMUNITY (3).

usee. See USE PLAINTIFF.

useful, adj. Patents. (Of an invention) having a practical application. [Cases: Patents ↷ 46.]

"[M]ere curiosities of invention, which do not have any intelligent purpose, are not useful in a patentable sense." Roger Sherman Hoar, Patent Tactics and the Law 37 (3d ed. 1950).

"When applied to a machine, 'useful' means that the machine will accomplish its purpose practically when applied in industry. The word is given a practical and not a speculative meaning." 60 Am. Jur. 2d Patents § 131 (1987).

useful-article doctrine. See APPLIED-ART DOCTRINE.

useful life. (1923) The estimated length of time that depreciable property will generate income. • Useful life is used to calculate depreciation and amortization deductions. — Also termed depreciable life. See DEPRECIATION METHOD.

use immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

use in commerce. Trademarks. Actual use of a trademark in the advertising, marketing, promotion, sale, or distribution of goods or services. • Use of a trademark in commerce is a prerequisite to trademark registration. Regular use demonstrates that the trademark has become associated with currently available goods or services, as contrasted with a token use intended to reserve some right to use the trademark in the future. For goods, a trademark is used in commerce if it is displayed on or with goods offered for sale, or placed on documents related to the goods. For services, a mark is used in commerce if it appears in advertising or on documents related to the services. In addition, the goods must be used or the services rendered in more than one state, because use of a trademark in interstate commerce is a prerequisite to federal trademark registration. [Cases: Trademarks ↷ 1136, 1142.]

useless-gesture exception. (1970) Criminal procedure. An exception to the knock-and-announce rule whereby police are excused from having to announce their purpose before entering the premises to execute a warrant when it is evident from the circumstances that people inside the premises are of aware of the police officers' authority and purpose. See KNOCK-AND-ANNOUNCE RULE. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ↷ 54, 143.1.]

use plaintiff. Common-law pleading. A plaintiff for whom an action is brought in another's name. • For example, when the use plaintiff is an assignee ("A") of a chose in action and sues in the assignor's name ("B"), the assignor's name appears first on the petition's title: "B for the Use of A against C." — Also termed usee. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷ 131; Parties ↷ 4.]

user (yoʊz-ər). (15c) 1. The exercise or employment of a right or property <the neighbor argued that an easement arose by his continuous user over the last 15 years>. Cf. NONUSER.

user de action (yoo-zər dak-shən). [Law French] The pursuing or bringing of an action.

2. Someone who uses a thing <the stapler's last user did not put it away>.

end user. (1963) The ultimate consumer for whom a product is designed.

user agreement. See POINT-AND-CLICK AGREEMENT.

user confusion. See CONSUMER CONFUSION.

user fee. (1967) A charge assessed for the use of a particular item or facility.

usual, adj. (14c) 1. Ordinary; customary. 2. Expected based on previous experience, or on a pattern or course of conduct to date.

usuary (yoo-zhoo-er-ee), n. Civil law. A person who has the use (usus) of a thing to satisfy personal and family needs; a beneficiary. — Also termed (in Roman law) usuarius.

usucapio (yoo-zə-kay-pee-oh), n. Roman & civil law. The acquisition of ownership by long, continuous possession begun in good faith; esp., the acquisition of ownership by prescription. • In classical law, the minimum periods required were one year for movables and two for land. Under Justinian law, the minimum periods were three years for movables and ten years for land. See PRESCRIPTION (5). — Also termed usus (yoo-zoos); usucaption (yoo-zə-kap-shən); usucapion (yoo-zə-kay-pee-on or -ən). [Cases: Adverse Possession ⇨ 1.] — usucapt, vb.; usucaption, n.

"There is no principle in all law which the moderns, in spite of its beneficial character, have been so loath to adopt and to carry to its legitimate consequences as that which was known to the Romans as Usucapion, and which has descended to modern jurisprudence under the name of Prescription." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 236 (17th ed. 1901).

usufruct (yoo-zə-frəkt), n. [fr. Latin usufructus] Roman & civil law. A right for a certain period to use and enjoy the fruits of another's property without damaging or diminishing it, but allowing for any natural deterioration in the property over time. • In Roman law, the usufruct was considered a personal servitude, resulting in a real right. In modern civil law, the owner of the usufruct is similar to a life tenant, and the owner of the property burdened is known as the naked owner. La. Civ. Code art. 535. — Also termed perfect usufruct; usufructus; (in Scots law) liferent. Cf. HABITATION (3). [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨ 1.]

"Usufructus is . . . the right of using and enjoying property belonging to another provided the substance of the property remained unimpaired. More exactly, a usufruct was the right granted to a man personally to use and enjoy, usually for his life . . . , the property of another which, when the usufruct ended, was to revert intact to the dominus or his heir. It might be for a term of years, but even here it was ended by death, and in the case of a corporation (which never dies) Justinian fixed the period at 100 years. A usufruct might be in land or buildings, a slave or beast of burden, and in fact in anything except things which were destroyed by use . . . , the reason, of course, being that it was impossible to restore such things at the end of the usufruct intact . . ." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 181-82 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

legal usufruct. A usufruct established by operation of law, such as the right of a surviving spouse to property owned by the deceased spouse. La. Civ. Code art. 890. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⇨ 176; Husband and Wife ⇨ 273(2); Wills ⇨ 11.]

quasi-usufruct. 1. A right to use property that cannot be used without being expended or consumed, such as money or food. • Unlike an ordinary usufruct, a quasi-usufruct actually involves alteration and diminution of the property used. — Also termed imperfect usufruct. 2. Louisiana law. A usufruct over consumable things, such as money or harvested crops, the value of which must be delivered to the naked owner at the end of the usufruct's term. La. Civ. Code art. 538. • The usufructuary has the right to consume or alienate the consumables and, at the end of the usufruct, to deliver to the naked owner either the value that the things had when the usufruct began or things of the same quantity and quality. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⇨ 176.]

"The Roman jurists, therefore, would not acknowledge a usufruct of money; though, in their desire to carry out the wishes of testators, they came at length to recognize a quasi-usufruct. For testators, being seldom learned in the law, would often set forth as legacies in their wills the usufruct of a designated sum . . . In such a case the person named as legatee was allowed to receive the amount . . . on giving security that when he died the same amount should be paid out of his own estate to the heres, the heir of the testator. The relation here, though bearing some resemblance to the usufruct, was really quite different; the person who received the money became absolute owner of it; the heir had no ownership, nothing but the assurance of receiving an equal amount at some future time." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 193 (1881). usufructuary (yoo-zə-frək-choo-er-ee), adj. Roman & civil law. Of or relating to a usufruct; of the nature of a usufruct.

usufructuary, n. Roman & civil law. One having the right to a usufruct; specif., a person who has the right to the benefits of another's property; a life-renter. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷ 1.]

usufructus. See USUFRUCT.

usura (yoo-s[y]oor-ə or yoo-z[y]oor-ə). [Latin] Civil law.

1. The amount paid for the use of money; interest. 2. USURY. Pl. usurae (yoo-s[y]oor-ee).

usurae centesimae (yoo-s[y]oor-ee [or yoo-z[y]oor-ee] sen-tes-ə-mee). [Latin] Interest at the rate of 12% per year (1% per month), usu. the highest rate allowed by law. • The Romans calculated interest rates by dividing the principal sum into one hundred parts, with one part being payable monthly as interest.

usura manifesta (yoo-s[y]oor-ə [or yoo-z[y]oor-ə] man-ə-fes-tə). [Latin] Manifest or open usury. Cf. USURA VELATA.

usura maritima (yoo-s[y]oor-ə [or yoo-z[y]oor-ə] mā-rit-ə-mə). [Latin] Interest taken on a bottomry or respondentia bond, proportioned to the risk and so not restricted by any usury laws.

usurarius (yoo-s[y]ə-rair-ee-əs or yoo-z[y]ə-). [Law Latin] Hist. A usurer.

usura velata (yoo-s[y]oor-ə [or yoo-z[y]oor-ə] və-lay-tə). [Latin] Veiled or concealed usury. • A creditor was guilty of usura velata when the creditor added unlawfully high interest to the principal sum as if the interest amount were part of the original loan. Cf. UBI ABERAT ANIMUS FOENERANDI; USURA MANIFESTA.

usurious (yoo-z[y]oor-ee-əs or yoo-zhuu-ree-əs), adj. (17c) 1. Practicing usury . 2. Characterized by usury . [Cases: Usury ↷ 1, 10–42.]

usurpatio (yoo-sər-pay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. The interruption of usucaption by reason of loss of physical possession or a lawsuit by the true legal owner. Pl. usurpationes (yoo-sər-pay-shee-oh-nee-z).

usurpation (yoo-sər-pay-shən or yoo-zər-pay-shən), n. (14c) The unlawful seizure and assumption of another's position, office, or authority. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷ 86.] — usurp (yoo-sərp or yoo-zərp), vb.

usurpation of advowson (ad-vow-zən). Hist. An injury consisting in the absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron from the advowson. • This happens when a stranger, without the right to do so, presents a clerk who is installed in office. See ADVOWSON.

usury (yoo-zhə-ree), n. (14c) 1. Historically, the lending of money with interest. 2. Today, the charging of an illegal rate of interest as a condition to lending money. 3. An illegally high rate of interest. — Also termed illegal interest; unlawful interest. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↷ 181; Building and Loan Associations ↷ 33; Usury ↷ 1.] — usurer (yoo-zhər-ər), n.

usury law. A law prohibiting moneylenders from charging illegally high interest rates. [Cases: Usury ↷ 1.]

usus (yoo-səs or yoo-zəs), n. [Latin “use”] Roman law.

1. The right to use another's property, without the right to receive or retain the benefits or fruits (fructus) produced by the property. • Usus was a personal servitude; it gave the holder a right in rem. Cf. USUFRUCT.

“It is essentially a fraction of a usufruct, usus without the fructus. In strictness, there was no right to any fruits but this was somewhat relaxed in practice. The usuary of a house might consume the fruits of the gardens in his household, but he might not sell them, as a usufructuary might.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 165 (2d ed. 1953).

2. The factual possession required for usucapio. 3. Lapse of time by which a wife was brought into the husband's family and under his marital power. See MANUS (1). Cf. COEMPTIO; CONFARREATIO.

“Usus is the acquisition of [power over] a wife by possession and bears the same relation to coemptio as usucapio to a mancipation. A Roman citizen who bought some object of property and got possession of it, but not ownership, because he neglected to go through the mancipation prescribed by jus civile, might nevertheless become owner by usucapio, i.e. lapse of time; thus if the object was a movable, continuous possession for one year made him dominus. In like manner, if a man lived with a woman whom he treated as his wife, but whom he had not married by coemptio (or confarreatio), and the cohabitation lasted without interruption for a year, then at the end of that period the man acquired [power over] the woman as his wife, she passed to him in manum . . .” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 100 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

usus bellici (yoo-səs [or -zəs] bel-ə-sī). [Latin] Int'l law. Warlike objects or uses. • This phrase refers to items that, while not inherently of a military nature, are considered contraband because they are used by a belligerent to support its war effort.

Usus Feudorum (yoo-səs [or -zəs] fyoo-dor-əm). See FEUDORUM LIBRI.

ut currere solebat (ət kər-ər-ee sə-lee-bat). [Latin] As it was wont to run. • This referred to the course of a stream.

ut de feodo (ət dee fee-ə-doh or fyoo-doh). [Law Latin] As of fee.

uterine (yoo-tər-in), adj. Born of the same mother but having different biological fathers.

uterine brother. See BROTHER.

uterine sister. See SISTER.

uterque (yoo-tər-kwee). [Latin] Each of two; both (considered separately).

uterque nostrum (yoo-trəm-kwee nos-trəm). See UTRUMQUE NOSTRUM.

utfangthief (ət-fang-theef). See OUTFANGTHIEF.

ut hospites (ət hos-pə-teez). [Latin] As guests.

uti (yoo-tī), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To use.

uti frui (yoo-tī froo-ī). [Latin] Civil law. To have the full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance.

utilis (yoo-tə-lis), adj. [Latin] Civil law. Useful; beneficial; equitable. • This word appeared in phrases such as actio utilis (ak-shee-oh yoo-tə-lis), meaning "equitable action."

utilitarian-deterrence theory. (1983) The legal theory that a person should be punished only if the punishment benefits society — that is, only if the punishment would help to deter future harmful conduct. See hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM. Cf. RETRIBUTIVISM.

utilitarianism. (1827) The philosophical and economic doctrine that the best social policy is that which does the most good for the greatest number of people; esp., an ethical theory that judges the rightness or wrongness of actions according to the pleasure they create or the pain they inflict and recommends whatever action creates the greatest good for the greatest number of people. • This is a type of consequentialism. For example, utilitarianism analyzes intellectual-property rights from the point of view of society rather than the individual inventor, author, or artist, and justifies the rights as an incentive for social and technological progress. See CONSEQUENTIALISM. Cf. LOCKEAN LABOR THEORY; PERSONALITY THEORY. — utilitarian, adj. & n.

hedonistic utilitarianism. (1943) The theory that the validity of a law should be measured by determining the extent to which it promotes the greatest happiness to the greatest number of citizens. • This theory is found most prominently in the work of Jeremy Bentham, whose "Benthamite utilitarianism" greatly influenced legal reform in nineteenth-century Britain. Hedonistic utilitarianism generally maintains that pleasure is intrinsically good and pain intrinsically bad. Therefore, inflicting pain on an individual, as by punishing a criminal, is justified only if it results in a net increase of pleasure for society by deterring future harmful behavior. — Also termed Benthamism. See utilitarian-deterrence theory; BENTHAMITE. Cf. RETRIBUTIVISM.

utiliter et equalenter (yoo-til-ə-tər et i-kwiv-ə-len-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. Duly and with equal effect.

utiliter impensum (yoo-til-ə-tər im-pen-səm). [Latin] Hist. Usefully expended.

utility. (14c) 1. The quality of serving some function that benefits society; meritoriousness. 2. Patents. Capacity to perform a function or attain a result for which the patent applicant or holder claims protection as intellectual property. • In patent law, utility is one of the three basic requirements of patentability, the others being nonobviousness and novelty. In the calculation of damages for patent infringement, utility is the benefit or advantage of the patented product or process over the products or processes, if any, that previously had been used to produce similar results. [Cases: Patents ◊47.]

"[T]he utility requirement does not mandate that the invention be superior to existing products and processes in order to qualify for a patent. The utility standard reflects the judgment that society is better served by access to a library of issued patents describing as many inventions as possible, even if many of them do not achieve better results than public domain technology. This liberal view of utility allows subsequent inventors access to a greater variety of previous technologies, some of which may yet be judged the superior solution when employed within a different context." Roger E. Schechter & John R. Thomas, Intellectual Property § 15.1, at 316 (2003).

3. A business enterprise that performs an essential public service and that is subject to governmental regulation.

public utility. (1895) 1. A company that provides necessary services to the public, such as telephone lines and service, electricity, and water. • Most utilities operate as monopolies but are subject to governmental regulation. [Cases: Public Utilities ◊101.] 2. A person, corporation, or other association that carries on an enterprise for the accommodation of the public, the members of which are entitled as a matter of right to use the enterprises's facilities.

utility fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

utility model. Patents. A system of patent registration giving patent-like rights in some countries, usu. for a shorter term than a patent but with little or no search required. • Utility-model registration is not available in the U.S. or Great Britain, but is offered in Japan and many European countries, including Germany and France. They are available for machines only, and not for chemicals. — Also termed petty patent; second-tier patent; small invention.

utility patent. See PATENT (3).

uti mos est in feudifirmis (yoo-ti mahs est in fyoo-difər-mis). [Law Latin] Scots law. As is the custom in feueholdings.

ut infra (ət in-frə also uut). [Latin] Hist. As below.

uti possidetis (yoo-ti pah-si-dee-tis). [Latin] 1. Int'l law. The doctrine that the administrative boundaries will become international boundaries when a political subdivision or colony achieves independence. 2. Roman law. An interdict ordering each party to a lawsuit to maintain the possession of real property as it stands pending an official decision on who owns the property. Cf. UTRUBI. 3. The doctrine that personal property captured during wartime and still held by the captor when the war ends becomes the captor's legal property.

"The restoration of peace put an end . . . to all force, and then the general principle applied, that things acquired in war remain, as to title and possession, precisely as they stood when the peace took place. The uti possidetis is the basis of every treaty of peace, unless it be otherwise agreed. Peace gives a final and perfect title to captures without condemnation; and as it forbids all force, it destroys all hopes of recovery as much as if the vessel was carried infra presidia, and condemned." James Kent, 1 Commentaries on American Law *173 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

uti rogas (yoo-ti roh-gas or -gəs). [Latin] Roman law. As you ask. • This phrase was inscribed on a ballot to indicate a vote in favor of a bill or candidate. — Abbr. u.r.

utitur jure auctoris (yoo-ti-tər joor-ee awk-tor-is). [Latin] Hist. He exercises the right of his predecessor in title.

utitur jure communi (yoo-ti-tər joor-ee kə-myoo-ni). [Latin] Hist. He relies on the common law.

utitur jure privato (yoo-ti-tər joor-ee pri-vay-toh). [Latin] Hist. He relies on his own private right.

utitur jure suo (yoo-ti-tər joor-ee s[y]oo-oh). [Latin] Hist. He exercises his own right.

"The exercise of rights of property on the part of a proprietor . . . cannot be interfered with, even where they are injurious in their effects to the adjoining property. In such case the proprietor is only doing that which he has a right to do, utitur jure suo." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 618–19 (4th ed. 1894).

utlagare (ət-lag-ə-ree or ət-lə-gair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To put (an offender) outside the protection of the law. Cf. INLAGARE; OUTLAWRY (2).

utlagation (ət-lə-gay-shən), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The act of placing an offender outside the protection of the law; outlawry. — Also termed utlagatio. Cf. INLAGATION; OUTLAWRY (2).

utlagatus (ət-lə-gay-təs), n. [Latin] Hist. An outlawed person; an outlaw.

utlage (ət-lahzh or -lij), n. [Law French] An outlaw.

utlagh (ət-law). [Old English] Hist. A person outside the protection of the law; an outlaw.

utland (ət-lænd) [Old English] Hist. The outer portion of a lord's demesne, used to support the lord's tenants. — Also termed delantal (di-lan-təl). Cf. INLAND (2).

utlesse. Hist. A felon's escape from prison.

UTMA, abbr. UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINORS ACT.

utmost care. See great care under CARE.

ut nihil illi desit (ət ni-hil il-i dee-sit). [Latin] Hist. That nothing may be wanting to him.

UTPCPL, abbr. UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES AND CONSUMER PROTECTION LAW.

ut prosint ad veritatem indagandam (ət proh-sint ad ver-ə-tay-təm in-də-gan-dəm). [Law Latin] Hist. That they be of service for investigating the truth.

ut res magis valeat quam pereat (rays [or reez or rez] may-jis vay-lee-at kwam peer-ee-at). [Latin] "to give effect to the matter rather than having it fail" A maxim of document construction applied when alternative readings are possible, one of which (usu. the broader reading) would achieve the manifest purpose of the document and the other of which (usu. the narrower reading) would reduce the document's purpose to futility or absurdity, whereby the interpreter chooses the construction that gives greater effect to the document's primary purpose.

ut res valeat potius quam pereat (ət rays [or reez or rez] vay-lee-at poh-shee-əs kwam peer-ee-at). [Latin] Hist. That the thing may avail rather than perish; that the transaction may be valid rather than invalid.

utrubi (ət-rə-bi), n. [Latin] Roman law. An interdict for maintaining the status quo of possession of movable property pending a ruling to determine the property's rightful owner. • In Roman law, this interdict gave possession of movable property to the party who had held the property longer during the previous year. Justinian applied the rule of uti possidetis to movables. Cf. UTI POSSIDETIS (2).

utrumque nostrum (yoo-trəm-kwee nos-trəm). [Latin] Each of us. • This phrase usu. appeared in bonds. The accusative form is utrumque nostrum.

UTSA, abbr. UNIFORM TRADE SECRETS ACT.

ut supra (ət s[y]oo-prə also uut). [Latin] Hist. As above.

utter, adj. (15c) Complete; absolute; total <an utter denial>.

utter, vb. (15c) 1. To say, express, or publish <don't utter another word until your attorney is present>. 2. To put or send (a document) into circulation; esp., to circulate (a forged note) as if genuine <she uttered a counterfeit $50 bill at the grocery store>. [Cases: Counterfeiting ↻9; False Pretenses ↻6; Forgery ↻16.] — utterance (for sense 1), uttering (for sense 2), n.

utter bar. See OUTER BAR.

utter barrister. See outer barrister under BARRISTER.

uttering. (18c) The crime of presenting a false or worthless instrument with the intent to harm or defraud. — Also termed uttering a forged instrument. See FORGERY. [Cases: Counterfeiting ↻9; False Pretenses ↻6; Forgery ↻16.]

ut voluntas testatoris sortiatur effectum (ət və-lən-tas tes-tə-tor-is sor-shee-ay-tər i-fek-təm). [Latin] Hist. That the will of the testator may be effectuated.

uxor (ək-sor), n. [Latin] Wife. — Abbr. ux. See ET UXOR. Cf. VIR.

uxore rapta et abducta (ək-sor-ee [also əg-zor-ee] rap-tə et ab-dək-tə). See DE UXORE RAPTA ET ABDUCTA.

uxorial (ək-sor-ee-əl or əg-zor-), adj. Of, relating to, or characteristic of a wife <uxorial property>.

uxoricide (ək-sor-ə-std or əg-zor-), n. (18c) 1. The murder of one's wife. 2. A man who murders his wife. Cf. MARITICIDE. — uxoricidal, adj.

VA. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

vacancy, n. 1. The state or fact of a lack of occupancy in an office, post, or piece of property. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷55.] 2. The time during which an office, post, or piece of property is not occupied. 3. An unoccupied office, post, or piece of property; an empty place. • Although the term sometimes refers to an office or post that is temporarily filled, the more usual reference is to an office or post that is unfilled even temporarily. An officer’s misconduct does not create a vacancy even if a suspension occurs; a vacancy, properly speaking, does not occur until the officer is officially removed.

vacancy clause. Insurance. A special indorsement allowing premises to be unoccupied beyond the period stipulated in the original insurance policy, so that the insurance remains in effect during policy extensions, often for a reduced amount. [Cases: Insurance ↷2133, 3049(5).] vacant, adj. (13c) 1. Empty; unoccupied . • Courts have sometimes distinguished vacant from unoccupied, holding that vacant means completely empty while unoccupied means not routinely characterized by the presence of human beings. 2. Absolutely free, unclaimed, and unoccupied <vacant land>. 3. (Of an estate) abandoned; having no heir or claimant. — The term implies either abandonment or nonoccupancy for any purpose.

vacantia (və-kan-sh[ee]-ə). See bona vacantia under BONA.

vacantia bona (və-kan-sh[ee]-ə boh-nə). See bona vacantia under BONA.

vacant succession. See SUCCESSION (2).

vacate, vb. (17c) 1. To nullify or cancel; make void; invalidate <the court vacated the judgment>. Cf. OVERRULE. 2. To surrender occupancy or possession; to move out or leave <the tenant vacated the premises>.

vacatio (və-kay-shee-oh). Civil law. Exemption; immunity; privilege; dispensation.

vacation, n. (15c) 1. The act of vacating <vacation of the office> <vacation of the court’s order>. 2. The period between the end of one term of court and the beginning of the next; the space of time during which a court holds no sessions. [Cases: Courts ↷69.] • The traditional vacations in England were Christmas vacation, beginning December 24 and ending January 6; Easter vacation, beginning Good Friday and ending Easter Tuesday; Whitsun vacation, beginning on the Saturday immediately before and ending the Tuesday immediately after Whitsunday (i.e., Pentecost, the seventh Sunday after Easter); and the long vacation, beginning August 13 and ending October 23. 3. Loosely, any time when a given court is not in session. [Cases: Courts ↷69.] 4. Eccles. law. The act or process by which a church or benefice becomes vacant, as on the death or resignation of the incumbent, until a successor is appointed. — Also termed (in sense 4) vacatura.

vacation barrister. See BARRISTER.

vacatur (və-kay-tər), n. [Law Latin “it is vacated”] (17c) 1. The act of annulling or setting aside. 2. A rule or order by which a proceeding is vacated.

vacatura (vay-kə-t[y]oor-ə), n. [Latin] VACATION (4).

vacua possessio (vak-yoo-ə pə-zes[h]-ee-oh). [Latin “a vacant possession”] Roman & civil law. Free and unburdened possession, which a seller must convey to a purchaser.

vacuus (vak-yoo-əs), adj. [Latin] Hist. Empty; void; vacant; unoccupied.

vades. See VAS.

vadare duellum (vad-ee-air-ee d[y]oo-el-əm), vb. [Law Latin “to wage the duellum”] Hist. To give pledges mutually for engaging in trial by combat.

vadare legem (vad-ee-air-ee lee-jəm), vb. [Law Latin “to wage law”] Hist. (Of a defendant in a debt action) to give security to make one’s law on a day assigned — that is, the defendant would pledge, upon giving the security, to do two things on the appointed day in court: (1) take an oath in open court that the debt was not owed, and (2) bring 11 compurgators who would swear that they believed what the defendant said.

vadiatio (vad-ee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Wager. Cf. INVADIATIO. Pl. vadiationes (vad-ee-ay-shee-oh-neez).

vadiatio duelli (vad-ee-ay-shee-oh d[y]oo-el-i). [Law Latin “wager of battle”] See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

vadiatio legis (vad-ee-ay-shee-oh lee-jis). [Law Latin “wager of law”] See WAGER OF LAW.

vadimonium (vad-ə-moh-nee-əm), n. Roman law. 1. A guarantee (originally backed by sureties) that a litigant would appear in court. 2. A solemn promise to this effect. — Also termed vadimony.

vadium (vay-dee-əm), n. [Law Latin “pledge, bail, security”] Hist. 1. Security by a pledge of property.

vadium mortuum (vay-dee-əm mor-choo-əm). [Law Latin “dead pledge”] A mortgage. • This was considered a “dead pledge” because an estate was given as security by the borrower, who granted to the lender the estate in fee, on the condition that if the money were not repaid at the specified time, the pledged estate would continue as the lender’s — it would be gone from, or “dead” to, the borrower (mortgagor). — Also termed mortuum vadium. See MORTGAGE. [Cases: Mortgages ↻1.]

vadium vivum (vay-dee-əm vi-vəm). [Law Latin “live pledge”] A living pledge, which exists when an estate is granted by a borrower to a lender until a debt is paid out of the estate’s proceeds. • The pledge was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost; it was a “living pledge” because the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt. — Also termed vivum vadium; vif-gage.

2. Wages; salary.

vadium ponere (vay-dee-əm poh-nə-ree), vb. Hist. To take bail for the appearance of a person in court.

vagabond (vag-ə-bond), n. Archaic. A homeless wanderer without any means or an honest livelihood; VAGRANT. • This term became archaic over the course of the 20th century, as vagrants won the right not to be forcibly removed from cities in such cases as Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156, 92 S.Ct. 839 (1972). In the 1980s and 1990s, vagabonds came to be known as street people and homeless people, or the homeless. — Also termed vagabundus (vag-ə-bən-dəs).

“[A]ll idle persons or vagabonds [are] . . . divided into three classes, idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues; — all these are offenders against the good order, and blemishes in the government, of any kingdom. They are therefore all punished . . . rogues and vagabonds with whipping and imprisonment not exceeding six months . . .” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 170 (1769).

vagabondage (vag-ə-bon-dij). 1. The condition of a vagabond. 2. Vagabonds as a class. — Also termed (in sense 1) vagabondism; (in senses 1 & 2) vagabondry.

vagabundus (vag-ə-bən-dəs). [Law Latin] See VAGABOND.

vagrancy (vay-grən-see), n. (17c) 1. The state or condition of wandering from place to place without a home, job, or means of support. • Vagrancy is generally considered a course of conduct or a manner of living, rather than a single act. But under some statutes, a single act has been held sufficient to constitute vagrancy. One court held, for example, that the act of prowling about and creeping up on parked cars and their occupants at night, under circumstances suggesting an intent to commit a crime, constitutes vagrancy. See Smith v. Drew, 26 P.2d 1040 (Wash. 1933). Many state laws prohibiting vagrancy have been declared unconstitutionally vague. — Also termed vagrantism. [Cases: Vagrancy ↻1.] 2. An instance of such wandering. Cf. LOITERING.

“Vagrancy is a status resulting from misconduct and in the form of a socially harmful condition or mode of life which has been defined and made punishable by law. Until recently it was a misdemeanor, or group of misdemeanors, in most states.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 494 (3d ed. 1982).

vagrant, adj. (15c) 1. Of, relating to, or characteristic of a vagrant; inclined to vagrancy. 2. Nomadically homeless. [Cases: Vagrancy ↻1.]

vagrant, n. (15c) 1. At common law, anyone belonging to the several classes of idle or disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds. 2. One who, not having a settled habitation, strolls from place to place; a homeless, idle wanderer. • The term often refers to one who spends time in idleness, lacking any property and without any visible means of support. Under some statutes, a vagrant is an offender against or menace to the public peace, usu. liable to become a public burden. Cf. VAGABOND. [Cases: Vagrancy ↻1.]

vague, adj. (16c) 1. Imprecise; not sharply outlined; indistinct; uncertain.

unconstitutionally vague. 1. (Of a penal legislative provision) so unclear and indefinite as not to give a person of ordinary intelligence the opportunity to know what is prohibited, restricted, or required. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻13.1(1); Statutes 47.] 2. (Of a statute) impermissibly delegating basic policy matters to administrators and judges so such a degree as to lead to arbitrary and discriminatory application. [Cases: Statutes 47.]

2. (Of language) describing a distribution around a central norm, as opposed to a neatly bounded class; broadly indefinite; not clearly or concretely expressed.

3. Characterized by haziness of thought.

vague-and-indefinite rejection. See REJECTION.

vagueness. (18c) 1. Uncertain breadth of meaning <the phrase “within a reasonable time” is plagued by vagueness — what is reasonable?>. • Though common in writings generally, vagueness raises due-process concerns if legislation does not provide fair notice of what is required, restricted, or prohibited, because enforcement may become arbitrary. 2. Loosely, ambiguity. See AMBIGUITY.

vagueness doctrine. (1957) Constitutional law. The doctrine — based on the Due Process Clause — requiring that a criminal statute state explicitly and definitely what acts are prohibited or restricted, so as to provide fair warning and preclude arbitrary enforcement. — Also termed void-for-vagueness doctrine. See void for vagueness under VOID. Cf. OVERBREADTH DOCTRINE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↻4506.]

valeat quantum (vay-lee-at [or -ət] kwon-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. For as much as it is worth.

valens agere (vay-lenz əj-ər-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. Able to act.

“A person is said to be valens agere when, from age and position, he is able to protect his rights against the invasion of them by others: against such a person not protecting his rights prescription runs, while prescription does not run against one who is non valens agere." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 621 (4th ed. 1894).

valentia (və-len-shee-ə), n. [Law Latin from Latin valere "to be of value"] Hist. Value; worth. ● In old indictments for larceny, this term often appeared to express the value of the things taken.

valentia agendi (və-len-shee-ə ə-jen-di). [Law Latin] Hist. The power of acting. See VALENS AGERE.

valere seipsum (və-leer-ee see-ip-səm). [Law Latin] Hist. To be of its own value. ● The phrase usu. referred to land.

valid, adj. (16c) 1. Legally sufficient; binding . 2. Meritorious <that is a valid conclusion based on the facts presented in this case>. — validate, vb. — validation, validity, n.

valid agreement. See valid contract under CONTRACT.

validating statute. See STATUTE.

valid contract. See CONTRACT.

validity opinion. See OPINION (2). validity search. An exhaustive search for prior art or any other facts that can be used to invalidate a patent. See BREAKING A PATENT. Cf. INFRINGEMENT SEARCH; PATENTABILITY SEARCH.

valid judgment. See JUDGMENT.

valid marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

valid warrant. See WARRANT (1).

valise diplomatique (və-lees di-ploh-ma-teek). See DIPLOMATIC POUCH.

Vallescura rule. Maritime law. The holding that when a maritime loss is due to more than one cause, and the carrier is exempt from liability for at least one of them, the burden is on the carrier to prove what loss is due to the exempt cause. ● If the carrier fails to prove the exemption, it is liable for the entire loss. Schnell v. The Vallescura, 293 U.S. 296, 55 S.Ct. 194 (1934).

VA loan. See veteran's loan under LOAN.

valor (val-ər), n. [Latin] Hist. Value; worth; rate; a valuation. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) valour. See AD VALOREM.

valor beneficiorum (val-ər ben-ə-fish-ee-or-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. The value of all ecclesiastical benefices and spiritual preferments.

valor maritagii (val-ər mar-ə-tay-jee-i). [Latin] Hist. The value of a marriage. ● Under ancient tenures, this was the amount that a female ward forfeited to a guardian when the guardian had offered her a marriage without disparagement (inequality), and she refused. Likewise in feudal law, the guardian in chivalry had the right of tendering to a minor ward a suitable match, without disparagement. If the ward refused, she had to compensate the guardian for the value of the marriage (valor maritagii). — Also termed (in the accusative) valorem maritagii; (Scots law) avail of marriage.

"If an infant ward of a guardian in chivalry refused a match tendered by the guardian, he or she forfeited the value of the marriage (valorem maritagii) to the guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give to the guardian for such an alliance." 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 572-73 (2d ed. 1867).

valuable, adj. Worth a good price; having financial or market value.

valuable consideration. See CONSIDERATION (1).

valuable improvement. See IMPROVEMENT.

valuable papers. Documents that, upon a person's death, are important in carrying out the decedent's wishes and in managing the estate's affairs. ● Examples include a will, title documents, stock certificates, powers of attorney, letters to be opened on one's death, and the like. Some statutes require that, to be effective, a holographic will devising realty must be found among the decedent's valuable papers.

valuable-papers insurance. See INSURANCE.

valuation, n. (16c) 1. The process of determining the value of a thing or entity. 2. The estimated worth of a thing or entity. — value, valuate, vb.

assessed valuation. (1825) The value that a taxing authority gives to property and to which the tax rate is applied. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2512, 2520.]

special-use valuation. (1976) An executor's option of valuating real property in an estate, esp. farmland, based on its current use rather than for its highest potential value. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4183; Taxation ⇨ 3350.]

valuation date. See ALTERNATE VALUATION DATE.

valuation list. Hist. An inventory of all the ratable hereditaments in a parish, each item in the inventory recording the name of the occupier, the owner, the property, the extent of the property, the gross estimated rental, and the ratable value. ● The list was traditionally prepared by the overseers of each parish.

value, n. (14c) 1. The significance, desirability, or utility of something.

social value. The significance, desirability, or utility of something to the general public.

2. The monetary worth or price of something; the amount of goods, services, or money that something commands in an exchange.

actual cash value. Insurance. 1. Replacement cost minus normal depreciation. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2181.] 2. See fair market value.

actual market value. See fair market value.

actual value. See fair market value.

agreed value. A property's value that is fixed by agreement of the parties, esp. the property's owner and the person or entity valuating the property. ● An example is a list of property values contained in an insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2171.]

annual value. 1. The net yearly income derivable from a given piece of property. 2. One year's rental value of property, less the costs and expenses of maintaining the property.

assessed value. The value of an asset as determined by an appraiser for tax purposes. [Cases: Taxation ↷ 2510.]

book value. See BOOK VALUE.

cash surrender value. Insurance. The amount of money payable when an insurance policy having cash value, such as a whole-life policy, is redeemed before maturity or death. — Abbr. CSV. — Also termed surrender value; cash value. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 1957, 2037.]

cash value. 1. See fair market value. 2. See full cash value. 3. See cash surrender value.

clear annual value. The net annual value of property, after payment of taxes, interest on mortgages, and other charges.

clear market value. See fair market value.

clear value. Tax. For purposes of an inheritance tax, whatever remains of an estate after all claims against it have been paid. [Cases: Taxation ↷ 3351.]

commuted value (kə-myoo-tid). 1. In the assessment of damages, the present value of a future interest in property. 2. The value of future payments when discounted to their present value.

enterprise value. A measure of a company's market value, calculated by aggregating the value of the company's market capitalization, debt, and preferred stock, and subtracting cash and cash equivalents.

exchange value. The amount of money for which property or services could be exchanged or procured if there is a ready market continually resorted to by traders — or, in the absence of such a market, the amount that could be obtained in the usual course of finding a purchaser or hirer of similar property or services. [Cases: Evidence ↷ 113(20).]

fair market value. (18c) The price that a seller is willing to accept and a buyer is willing to pay on the open market and in an arm's-length transaction; the point at which supply and demand intersect. — Abbr. FMV. — Also termed actual value; actual cash value; actual market value; cash value; clear market value; fair and reasonable value; fair cash market value; fair cash value; fair market price; fair value; full value; just value; market value; salable value; true value. [Cases: Taxation ↷ 2515.]

"[A] forced sale price is not fair value though it may be used as evidence on the question of fair value. Likewise, the fair value of saleable assets is not what they would sell for in the slow process of the debtor's trade as if the debtor were continuing business unhampered. The general idea of fair value is the amount of money the debtor could raise from its property in a short period of time, but not so short as to approximate a forced sale, if the debtor operated as a reasonably prudent and diligent businessman with his interests in mind, especially a proper concern for the payment of his debts." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 6-18, at 307 (1993).

fair value. See fair market value.

full cash value. Market value for property tax purposes; estimated value derived by standard appraisal methods. — Also termed cash value. [Cases: Taxation ↷ 2515.]

full value. See fair market value.

future value. The value, at some future time, of a present sum or a series of monetary payments, calculated at a specific interest rate.

going-concern value. The value of a commercial enterprise's assets or of the enterprise itself as an active business with future earning power, as opposed to the liquidation value of the business or of its assets. • Going-concern value includes, for example, goodwill. — Also termed going value. Cf. GOODWILL.

highest proved value. In a trover action, the greatest value (as proved by the plaintiff) that the converted property reached from the time of the conversion until trial. • It is the highest amount that a plaintiff is entitled to recover. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ↷ 44.]

insurable value. See INSURABLE VALUE.

intrinsic value. The inherent value of a thing, without any special features that might alter its market value. • The intrinsic value of a silver coin, for example, is simply the value of the silver within it.

just value. See fair market value.

liquidation value. 1. The value of a business or of an asset when it is sold in liquidation, as opposed to being sold in the ordinary course of business. 2. See liquidation price under PRICE.

market value. See fair market value.

most-suitable-use value. See optimal-use value.

net value. 1. Insurance. The excess of a policyholder payments over the yearly cost of insurance; the part of an insured's annual premium that, according to actuarial tables, the insurer must set aside to meet the insurer's obligations to the insured. — Also termed reserve. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 2037.] 2. The fair market value of shares of stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 182.4(5), 584.]

new value. 1. A value that is newly given or freshly calculated. 2. The value obtained by taking a security, such as collateral, for any debt other than a preexisting one.

optimal-use value. Tax. The highest and best use of a thing from an economic standpoint. • If a farm would be worth more as a shopping center than as a farm, the shopping-center value will control even if the transferee (that is, a donee or heir) continues to use the property as a farm. — Also termed most-suitable-use value. [Cases: Taxation ↷ 2515.]

par value. See PAR VALUE.

policy value. See POLICY VALUE.

present value. See PRESENT VALUE.

residual value. See salvage value.

salable value. See fair market value.

salvage value. (1917) The value of an asset after it has become useless to the owner; the amount expected to be obtained when a fixed asset is disposed of at the end of its useful life. • Salvage value is used, under some depreciation methods, to determine the allowable tax deduction for depreciation. And under the UCC, when a buyer of goods breaches or repudiates the contract of sale, the seller may, under certain circumstances, either complete the manufacture of any incomplete goods or cease the manufacture and sell the partial product for scrap or salvage value. UCC § 2-704(2). — Also termed residual value; scrap value. See DEPRECIATION. [Cases: Sales ↻ 384(6).] scrap value. See salvage value.

settlement value. The value of a claim if the claimant settles immediately as opposed to pursuing the claim further through litigation.

surrender value. See cash surrender value.

true value. See fair market value.

use value. A value established by the utility of an object instead of its sale or exchange value.

value received. See VALUE RECEIVED.

3. Sufficient contractual consideration. — value, vb. — valuation, n.

"Value also includes paying or securing a preexisting debt, and in this regard value is broader than common-law consideration. Thus, a debtor receives value in satisfying an antecedent claim (as by paying an overdue account or an outstanding loan or by transferring property to vindicate a preexisting interest in it) or in providing collateral for a previously unsecured creditor. It makes no difference that the debtor got nothing new, in terms of property added to her estate, at the time of the transfer." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 6-49, at 374 (1993).

value-added card. See STORED-VALUE CARD.

value-added model. See LABOR-DESERT MODEL.

value-added tax. See TAX.

value date. The date when the proceeds of a bill of exchange (e.g., a check) or of a foreign-exchange transaction (e.g., a sale of dollars for euros) become available for use. — Also termed here and there.

valued policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

valued-policy law. A statute requiring insurance companies to pay the full amount of the insurance to the insured in the event of a total loss, regardless of the true value of the property at the time of loss. [Cases: Insurance ↻ 2171.]

value fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

valuer. See APPRAISER.

value received. (17c) Consideration that has been delivered. • This phrase is commonly used in a bill of exchange or promissory note to show that it was supported by consideration. [Cases: Bills and Notes ↻ 12, 40, 90, 98.]

valuta (və-loo-tə), n. [Italian fr. Latin] Value; worth; esp., the value of a currency in relation to that of the currency of some other country.

valvasor (valv-ə-sor), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A principal vassal who, though not holding directly of the sovereign, held of those who did so; a vassal of the second degree or rank. — Also spelled valvassor. See VAVASOR.

VA mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

vandal. [fr. Latin Vandalus, a member of the Germanic tribe known as Vandals] (17c) A malicious destroyer or defacer of works of art, monuments, buildings, or other property.

vandalism, n. (18c) 1. Willful or ignorant destruction of public or private property, esp. of artistic, architectural, or literary treasures. 2. The actions or attitudes of one who maliciously or ignorantly destroys or disfigures public or private property; active hostility to anything that is venerable or beautiful. — vandalize, vb. — vandalistic, adj.

vara (vah-rah). Spanish-Am. law. A measure of length equal to about 33 inches. • Local usage varies, so that a vara may sometimes be more and sometimes less than 33 inches. In Mexican land grants, the measure is equal to 32.9927 inches. The term is often found in old land grants in states that were formed from land governed by Spain or Mexico.

variable annuity. See ANNUITY.

variable annuity contract. See CONTRACT.

variable cost. See COST (1).

variable life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

variable rate. See INTEREST RATE.

variable-rate mortgage. See adjustable-rate mortgage under MORTGAGE.

variance. (14c) 1. A difference or disparity between two statements or documents that ought to agree; esp., in criminal procedure, a difference between the allegations in a charging instrument and the proof actually introduced at trial. — Also termed variation. [Cases: Indictment and Information ↻ 171.]

fatal variance. (18c) A variance that either deprives the defendant of fair notice of the charges or exposes the defendant to the risk of double jeopardy. • A fatal variance is grounds for reversing a conviction. [Cases: Indictment and Information ↻ 171.]

immaterial variance. (18c) A variance too slight to mislead or prejudice the defendant and is thus harmless error. [Cases: Indictment and Information ↻ 171.]

2. A license or official authorization to depart from a zoning law. — Also termed (in sense 2) zoning variance. See HARDSHIP (4). Cf. SPECIAL EXCEPTION (2); SPECIAL-USE PERMIT. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↻ 481-549.]

area variance. A variance permitting deviation from zoning requirements about construction and placement, but not from requirements about use. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↻503.]

use variance. A variance permitting deviation from zoning requirements about use. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↻481.]

varrantizatio (və-ran-ti-zay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Scots law. A warranty.

vas (vas), n. [Latin “surety”] A pledge, surety, bail; esp., in early law, security for a criminal defendant’s appearance in court. • In Roman law under the legis actio procedure, a vas was a special surety for the defendant if there was an adjournment in jure. Pl. vades (vay-deez). See IN JURE (2); LEGIS ACTIO.

vassal (vas-əl), n. [fr. Law Latin vassallus] Hist. The grantee of a fief, feud, or fee; a feudal tenant. Cf. FREEMAN (5).

arriere vassal (a-ree-air vas-əl), Hist. The vassal of a vassal.

vassalage (vas-əl-ij), n. Hist. 1. The state of being a vassal or feudatory. — Also termed vasseleria. 2. The service required of a vassal. — Also termed vassaticum; mainrent. 3. The territory held by a vassal; a fief or fee. 4. Vassals collectively. 5. The dominion or authority of a feudal superior over vassals. 6. Political servility; subjection.

vassalli ligii (vas-ə-lī lij-ee-ī), [Law Latin] Hist. Vassals holding immediately of the Crown.

vassallo et quibus dederit (vas-ə-loh et kwib-əs dee-dər-it), [Law Latin] Hist. To the vassal and to whomsoever he shall have given it. • The phrase was included in feudal grants.

“If the original grant had been destined to the vassal, ‘and his heirs and assignees whomsoever,’ this only bound the superior to receive the proper heirs of the vassal and not his assignee; but if the destination bore . . . [vassal] ‘et quibus dederit,’ this was construed as a consent on the part of the superior to alienation, and under which he was bound to receive as vassal his vassal’s dispoonee. This distinction . . . was practically abolished by the Act 20 Geo. II. c. 50, which introduced a mode by which either an heir or dispoonee could force an entry from the superior.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 622 (4th ed. 1894).

vassallo faciendo superiori quod de jure facere oportet (vas-ə-loh fay-shee-en-doh s[y]oo-peer-ee-or-ī kwod dee joor-ee fay-sə-ree ə-por-tet), [Law Latin] Hist. Upon the vassal performing that to the superior which, according to law, he ought to perform.

vassallus (vas-ə-ləs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A feudal tenant. Cf. VASSUS.

vassal state. Int’l law. A state that possesses only those rights and privileges that have been granted to it by a more powerful state.

vassaticum (və-sat-ə-kəm), [Law Latin] See VASSALAGE (2).

vasseleria (vas-ə-leer-ee-ə), [Law Latin] See VASSALAGE (1).

vassus (vas-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A feudal tenant who held immediately of the king. Cf. VASSALLUS.

vasto. See DE VASTO.

vastum (vas-təm), n. Hist. WASTE.

vastum forestae vel bosci (vas-təm for-es-tee vel bahs-ī), Hist. Waste of a forest or wood.

VAT. See value-added tax under TAX.

vauderie (vaw-dər-ee), Hist. Sorcery; witchcraft.

Vaughn index. A comprehensive list of all documents that the government wants to shield from disclosure in Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) litigation, each document being accompanied by a statement of justification for nondisclosure. • Supported by one or more affidavits, a Vaughn index has three purposes: (1) forcing the government to scrutinize all material withheld; (2) enabling the trial court to fulfill its duty of ruling on the factual basis of each claimed FOIA exemption; and (3) enabling the adversary system to operate by giving the requester as much information as possible. 5 USCA § 552 et seq. The name derives from Vaughn v. Reese, 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973). [Cases: Records 62.]

vavator (vav-ə-sor), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The vassal or tenant of a baron; one who held under a baron and also had subtenants. — Also spelled vavasour (vav-ə-suur). Cf. VALVASOR.

vectura (vek-t[y]oor-ə), Hist. Maritime law. Freight.

veggie-libel law. Slang. See AGRICULTURAL-DISPARAGEMENT LAW.

vehicle (vee-ə-kəl), n. 1. An instrument of transportation or conveyance. 2. Any conveyance used in transporting passengers or things by land, water, or air.

vehicular (vee-hik-yə-lər), adj. Of, relating to, or caused by a vehicle or vehicles.

vehicular homicide. See HOMICIDE.

veil-piercing. See PIERCING THE CORPORATE VEIL.

vein, n. Mining law. A continuous body of mineral or mineralized rock, filling a seam or fissure in the earth’s crust, within defined boundaries that clearly separate it from surrounding rock.

discovery vein. The primary vein for the purpose of locating a mining claim. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↻16, 30–33.]

vejour (və-zhoor), n. [Law French fr. Law Latin visores “viewers”] Hist. 1. One of several persons sent by the court to examine a place in question to help in the decision-making process. 2. A person sent to visit persons who claim they are unable to appear in court on account of illness, to see whether they are actually so sick that they cannot appear or whether they are malingering. — Also spelled veyor; veyour; vayowr; veiour; veighor.

vel faciendo vel delinquendo (vel fay-shee-en-doh vel dee-ling-kwen-doh). [Law Latin] Hist. Either by doing something or by leaving something undone. ● The phrase appeared in reference to what was accomplished by act or omission.

vel non (vel non). [Latin “or not”] (1895) Or the absence of it (or them) <this case turns solely on the finding of discrimination vel non>.

venal (vee-nəl), adj. (17c) 1. (Of a person) capable of being bribed. 2. Ready to sell one’s services or influence for money or other valuable consideration, usu. for base motives. 3. Of, relating to, or characterized by corrupt bargaining. 4. Broadly, purchasable; for sale.

vend, vb. (17c) 1. To transfer to another for money or something else of value. ● The term is not commonly applied to real estate, although its derivatives (vendor and vendee) are. 2. To make an object of trade, esp. by hawking or peddling. 3. To utter publicly; to say or state; to publish broadly.

vendee. (16c) A purchaser, usu. of real property; a buyer. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ↻1.]

vendee’s lien. See LIEN.

vendetta (ven-det-ə), n. (1855) A private blood feud in which family members seek revenge on one or more persons outside the family (often members of another family); esp., a private war in which the nearest of kin seek revenge for the slaying of a relative.

vend. ex. abbr. VENDITIONI EXPONAS.

vendible, adj. Salable; fit or suitable to be sold.

venditae (ven-də-tee). [fr. Latin vendere “to sell”] Hist. A tax on things sold in markets and at public fairs.

venditio (ven-dish-ee-oh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. 1. A sale; VENDITION. 2. A contract of sale. ● In this sense, the term is short for emptio et venditio. See EMPTIO. 3. Broadly, any contract by which the ownership of something may be transferred for value. Pl. venditiones.

venditio corporis (ven-dish-ee-oh kor-pə-ris). A sale of a specific thing. — Also termed venditio speciei.

venditio generis (ven-dish-ee-oh jen-ə-ris). A sale of goods of a class or general kind.

venditio nominis (ven-dish-ee-oh nom-ə-nis). A sale or conveyance of a debt.

venditio speciei (ven-dish-ee-oh spee-shee-i). See venditio corporis.

vendition, n. The act of selling; a sale. — Also termed venditio.

venditioni exponas (ven-dish-ee-oh-nī eks-poh-nās). [Latin “you are to expose for sale”] A writ of execution requiring a sale of particular goods to be made. ● The writ is directed to a sheriff who has levied upon goods under a fieri facias but has reported that the goods remain unsold for lack of buyers. In some jurisdictions, a venditioni exponas is issued to require a sale of property seized under an earlier writ, after the property has been condemned or passed upon by inquisition. — Abbr. vend. ex.; v. [Cases: Execution ↻217.]

vendor (ven-də-tər), n. Hist. See VENDOR.

vendor regis (ven-də-tər ree-jis). [Latin] Hist. The king’s seller; esp., the person who sold goods and chattels that had been seized or distrained to answer a debt due to the king.

venire (və-nī-ree or -neer-ee or -nīr or -neer). (1807) 1. A panel of persons selected for jury duty and from among whom the jurors are to be chosen. — Also termed array; jury panel; jury pool. [Cases: Jury ↻60–69.]

special venire. A panel of citizens summoned when there is an unexpected need for a larger pool from which to select jurors, or a panel summoned for a particular (usu. capital) case. [Cases: Jury ↻70.]

2. VENIRE FACIAS.

venire de novo. See venire facias de novo under VENIRE FACIAS.

venire facias (və-ni-ree [or -neer-ee or -nir or -neer] fay-shee-əs). (15c) A writ directing a sheriff to assemble a jury. — Often shortened to venire. — Also termed venire facias juratores (juur-ə-tor-eez). [Cases: Jury ⇨ 67.]

venire facias ad respondendum (ad ree-spon-den-dəm). A writ requiring a sheriff to summon a person against whom an indictment for a misdemeanor has been issued. • A warrant is now more commonly used.

venire facias de novo (dee or di noh-voh). (18c) A writ for summoning a jury panel anew because of some impropriety or irregularity in the original jury's return or verdict such that a judgment cannot be entered on it. • The result of a new venire is a new trial. In substance, the writ is a motion for a new trial, but when the party objects to the verdict because of a procedural error (and not an error on the merits), the form of motion was traditionally for a venire facias de novo. — Often shortened to venire de novo.

venire facias tot matronas (tot mə-troh-nəs). A writ requiring a sheriff to summon a jury of matrons to execute a writ de ventre inspiciendo. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO.

veniremember (və-ni-ree-mem-bər or və-neer-ee- or və-neer-). (1966) A prospective juror; a member of a jury panel. — Also termed venireman; venireperson; talesman. See TALESMAN.

venit et defendit (vee-nit et di-fen-dit). [Latin] Comes and defends. • The phrase appeared in old-style defensive pleadings.

venit et dicit (vee-nit et di-si-sit). [Latin] Comes and says. • The phrase appeared in old-style pleadings. Remnants of the phrase still occur in some American jurisdictions: Now comes the plaintiff, and respectfully says . . .

vente (vawnt or vont). [French] French law. A sale; contract of sale.

vente aléatoire (a-lay-ə-twahr). A sale subject to an uncertain event.

vente à réméré (ah ray-may-ray). A conditional sale, in which the seller reserves the right to redeem or repurchase the property at the same price. • The term is used in Louisiana and in some parts of Canada.

vente aux enchères (oh-zawn-shair). An auction. See AUCTION.

venter (ven-tər), n. [Latin “womb”] 1. The womb of a wife or mother. 2. One of two or more women who are sources of the same man's offspring.

“venter . . . is a term nowadays considered objectionable, as it refers to the woman merely as the possessor of a birth canal.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 910 (2d ed. 1995).

ventre inspiciendo. 1. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO; 2. See venire facias tot matronas under VENIRE FACIAS.

venture. (16c) An undertaking that involves risk; esp., a speculative commercial enterprise. Cf. JOINT VENTURE.

venture capital. See CAPITAL.

venturer, n. (16c) 1. One who risks something, and hopes to gain more, in a business enterprise. 2. One who participates in an association of two or more parties in a business enterprise. See JOINT VENTURE.

venue (ven-yoo). [Law French “coming”] (16c) Procedure. 1. The proper or a possible place for a lawsuit to proceed, usu. because the place has some connection either with the events that gave rise to the lawsuit or with the plaintiff or defendant. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 71; Venue ⇨ 1.5.] 2. The territory, such as a country or other political subdivision, over which a trial court has jurisdiction. Cf. JURISDICTION (1), (2). 3. Loosely, the place where a conference or meeting is being held. 4. In a pleading, the statement establishing the place for trial. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 94.] 5. In an affidavit, the designation of the place where it was made.

“Venue must be carefully distinguished from jurisdiction. Jurisdiction deals with the power of a court to hear and dispose of a given case; in the federal system, it involves questions of a constitutional dimension concerning the basic division of judicial power among the states and between state and federal courts. Venue is of a distinctly lower level of importance; it is simply a statutory device designed to facilitate and balance the objectives of optimum convenience for parties and witnesses and efficient allocation of judicial resources.” Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 2.1, at 10 (2d ed. 1993).

“The distinction must be clearly understood between jurisdiction, which is the power to adjudicate, and venue, which relates to the place where judicial authority may be exercised and is intended for the convenience of the litigants. It is possible for jurisdiction to exist though venue in a particular district is improper, and it is possible for a suit to be brought in the appropriate venue though it must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. The most important difference between venue and jurisdiction is that a party may consent to be sued in a district that otherwise would be an improper venue, and it waives its objection to venue if it fails to assert it promptly. This is in striking contrast to subject-matter jurisdiction, which cannot be conferred by the parties, if it has not been granted by Congress, whether by consent, waiver, or estoppel.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 42, at 257 (5th ed. 1994).

venue, change of. See CHANGE OF VENUE.

venue facts. (1936) Facts that need to be pleaded or established in a hearing to determine whether venue is proper in a given court. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 96; Venue ⇨ 68.]

venville (ven-vil), n. Hist. A tenure peculiar to the area of Dartmoor forest in Devonshire, whereby tenants have certain rights in the forest.

veracious (və-ray-shəs), adj. (17c) Truthful; accurate. — Also termed veridical.

veracity (və-ras-ət-ee), n. (17c) 1. Truthfulness <the witness's fraud conviction supports the defense's challenge to his veracity>. 2. Accuracy <you called into question the veracity of Murphy's affidavit>. — veracious (və-ray-shəs), adj.

veray (və-ray), adj. [Law French] Hist. True. • This word is an older form of the French vrai.

verba (vər-bə). [Latin] n. pl. Words — esp. oral as opposed to written words.

verba concepta. 1. See FORMULA (1). 2. See FORMULAE.

verba jactantia (vər-bə jak-tan-shee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. Boastful words. • These words — esp. in a marriage declaration — are not usu. binding. See JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE.

verbal, adj. (15c) 1. Of, relating to, or expressed in words. 2. Loosely, of, relating to, or expressed in spoken words.

verbal, n. English law. Slang. A statement, usu. oral and often incriminating, allegedly made by a criminal defendant and offered as evidence against the defendant at trial. • The term often implies that a police officer inaccurately recorded or invented a defendant's statement <the defense counsel challenged the verbals presented by the police>.

verbal, vb. English law. Slang. To improperly pressure a person to make a statement, esp. one that is damaging or false <the defendant recanted and claimed that he had been verbaled>.

verbal abuse. See ABUSE.

verbal-act doctrine. (1901) The rule that utterances accompanying conduct that might have legal effect are admissible when the conduct is material to the issue and is equivocal in nature, and when the words help give the conduct its legal significance. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨419(2.10); Evidence ⇨267.]

verbal contract. See parol contract (1) under CONTRACT.

verbal note. Diplomacy. An unsigned memorandum informally reminding an official of a pending request, an unanswered question, or the like.

vertical stare decisis. See STARE DECISIS.

verbal will. See nuncupative will under WILL.

verba precaria (vər-bə pri-kair-ee-ə). [Latin] Civil law. 1. Precatory words. 2. Words of trust; words of request used in creating a trust.

verba solennia (vər-bə sə-len-ee-ə). [Latin] Hist. Solemn words; formal words. — Also termed verba solennia (sə-lem-nee-ə).

verbatim (vər-bay-təm), adj. & adv. [fr. Latin verbum “word”] Word for word. • Courts have repeatedly held that, in the context of the requirement that a trial record must be “verbatim,” absolute word-for-word accuracy is not necessary — and insubstantial omissions do not make a transcript “nonverbatim.” [Cases: Military Justice 1354, 1356.]

verbatim ac litteratim (vər-bay-tim ak lit-ə-ray-tim), adv. (vər-bay-tim ak li-tər-ay-tim). [Latin] Word for word and letter for letter. — Also spelled verbatim ac litteratim; verbatim et litteratim. — Also termed verbatim et litteratim.

verbi gratia (vər-bī gray-shee-ə). [Latin “for example”] Words for the sake of example. — Abbr. V.G.

verbruikleening (ver-bruuk-layn-ing), n. Roman Dutch law. A loan for use; COMMODATUM.

verderer (vər-dər-ər), n. [fr. French verdier “caretaker of green things”] Hist. A judicial officer who, being in charge of the king's forest, is sworn to preserve the vert (foliage) and venison, to keep the assizes, and to view, receive, and enroll attachments and presentments on matters involving trespass. — Also spelled verderor.

verdict. (15c) 1. A jury's finding or decision on the factual issues of a case. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨870–894; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2191; Trial ⇨318.] 2. Loosely, in a nonjury trial, a judge's resolution of the issues of a case. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2251; Trial ⇨387.]

chance verdict. (1820) A now-illegal verdict, arrived at by hazard or lot. — Also termed gambling verdict; verdict by lot. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨798(2), 866; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1974.1; Trial ⇨315.]

compromise verdict. (1851) A verdict reached when jurors, to avoid a deadlock, concede some issues so that other issues will be resolved as they want. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨866; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1974.1; Trial ⇨315.]

defective verdict. (18c) A verdict on which a judgment cannot be based because of irregularities or legal inadequacies.

directed verdict. (1912) A ruling by a trial judge taking a case from the jury because the evidence will permit only one reasonable verdict. — Also termed instructed verdict. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨753; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2117; Trial ⇨167.]

excessive verdict. (1817) A verdict resulting from the jury's passion or prejudice and thereby shocks the court's conscience. [Cases: Damages ⇨127.9; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2194.1, 2345; New Trial ⇨77(2).]

false verdict. Archaic. A verdict so contrary to the evidence and so unjust that the judge may set it aside.

gambling verdict. See chance verdict.

general verdict. (17c) A verdict by which the jury finds in favor of one party or the other, as opposed to resolving specific fact questions. Cf. special verdict. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨881; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2191; Trial ⇨318.]

general verdict subject to a special case. Archaic. A court's verdict rendered without regard to the jury's general verdict, given when a party does not want to put the legal question on the record but merely wants the court to decide on the basis of a written statement of all the facts in the case, prepared for the opinion of the court by counsel on either side, according to the principles of a special verdict, whereupon the court decides the special case submitted and gives judgment accordingly.

general verdict with interrogatories. (1878) A general verdict accompanied by answers to written interrogatories on one or more issues of fact that bear on the verdict. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2211; Trial ⇨ 348.]

guilty verdict. (18c) A jury's finding that a defendant is guilty of the offense charged.

instructed verdict. See directed verdict.

joint verdict. (1825) A verdict covering two or more parties to a lawsuit.

legally inconsistent verdict. (1975) A verdict in which the same element is found to exist and not to exist, as when a defendant is acquitted of one offense and convicted of another, even though the offenses arise from the same set of facts and an element of the second offense requires proof that the first offense has been committed. — Also termed legal inconsistency. Cf. repugnant verdict. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 878(4); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2237; Trial ⇨ 358.]

majority verdict. A verdict agreed to by all but one or two jury members. • In some jurisdictions, a civil verdict supported by 10 of 12 jurors is acceptable. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2191; Trial ⇨ 321.5.]

open verdict. A verdict of a coroner's jury finding that the subject "came to his death by means to the jury unknown" or "came to his death at the hands of a person or persons to the jury unknown." • This verdict leaves open either the question whether any crime was committed or the identity of the criminal.

partial verdict. (1829) A verdict by which a jury finds a criminal defendant not guilty of some charges and guilty of other charges.

perverse verdict. (1870) A jury verdict so contrary to the evidence that it justifies the granting of a new trial. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2338; New Trial ⇨ 68.1.]

privy verdict (priv-ee). Hist. A verdict given after the judge has left or adjourned the court, and the jury, having agreed, obtains leave to give its verdict privately to the judge out of court so that the jurors can be delivered from their confinement. • Such a verdict was of no force unless afterwards affirmed in open court. This practice has been superseded by that of rendering a sealed verdict. See sealed verdict.

public verdict. (17c) A verdict delivered by the jury in open court.

quotient verdict. (1867) An improper damage verdict that a jury arrives at by totaling what each juror would award and dividing by the number of jurors. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1974.1; Trial ⇨ 315.]

repugnant verdict. (1883) A verdict that contradicts itself in that the defendant is convicted and acquitted of different crimes having identical elements. • Sometimes the inconsistency occurs in a single verdict (repugnant verdict), and sometimes it occurs in two separate verdicts (repugnant verdicts). Both terms are used mainly in New York. Cf. legally inconsistent verdict. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 878(4).]

responsive verdict. Civil law. A verdict that properly answers the indictment with specific findings prescribed by statute, the possible findings being guilty, not guilty, and guilty of a lesser included offense.

sealed verdict. (18c) A written verdict put into a sealed envelope when the jurors have agreed on their decision but court is not in session or the jury is continuing to deliberate other counts. • Upon delivering a sealed verdict, the jurors may separate. When court convenes again, this verdict is officially returned with the same effect as if the jury had returned it in open court before separating. [Cases: Trial ⇨ 324.]

special verdict. (17c) A verdict in which the jury makes findings only on factual issues submitted to them by the judge, who then decides the legal effect of the verdict. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 49. Cf. general verdict. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 870; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2231; Trial ⇨ 347.]

split verdict. (1886) 1. A verdict in which one party prevails on some claims, while the other party prevails on others. 2. Criminal law. A verdict finding a defendant guilty on one charge but not guilty on another. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 878.] 3. Criminal law. A verdict of guilty for one defendant and of not guilty for a codefendant. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 877.]

true verdict. (16c) A verdict that is reached voluntarily — even if one or more jurors freely compromise their views — and not as a result of an arbitrary rule or order, whether imposed by the jurors themselves, the court, or a court officer. [Cases: Trial ⇨ 314, 315.]

verdict by lot. See chance verdict.

verdict contrary to law. (18c) A verdict that the law does not authorize a jury to render because the conclusion drawn is not justified by the evidence. — Also termed wrong verdict. Cf. JURY NULLIFICATION. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2338; New Trial ⇨ 66.]

verdict subject to opinion of court. (1820) A verdict that is subject to the court's determination of a legal issue reserved to the court upon the trial, so that judgment is ultimately entered depending on the court's ruling on a point of law. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 199(4).]

wrong verdict. See verdict contrary to law.

verdicto. See NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

veredictum (ver-ə-dik-təm), n. Hist. A verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial.

verge (vərj), n. Hist. 1. The area within 12 miles of the place where the king held his court and within which the king's peace was enforced. • This area was commonly referred to as being in the verge. The verge got its name from the staff (called a "verge") that the marshal bore. 2. The compass of the royal court, within which the lord steward and marshal of the king's household had special jurisdiction. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) Court of Verge. 3. The neighborhood of Whitehall, the section of London in which British government offices have traditionally been located. 4. An uncertain quantity of land from 15 to 30 acres. 5. A stick or rod by which a person, after holding the stick and swearing fealty, is admitted as a tenant to a copyhold estate. — Also spelled virge. For tenant by the verge, see COPYHOLDER.

vergens ad inopiam (vər-jenz ad in-oh-pee-əm), adj. [Latin "verging on poverty"] Civil law. Tending to become insolvent.

"When a debtor is clearly vergens ad inopiam, a creditor may legally resort to certain measures, for the purpose of protecting his interests, which would not otherwise be competent to him. Thus if the debtor be bound under a bill, the creditor may, in consideration of his debtor's circumstances, obtain a precept of arrestment on the bill before it becomes due, on which he may arrest any funds due to his debtor. As this proceeding is only allowed, however, as a protective measure . . . he cannot . . . render the arrested funds available to himself until the bill falls due . . . The fact of the debtor's being vergens ad inopiam will be inferred from different circumstances in different cases, and the proof of that fact will also, necessarily, be varied." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 627 (4th ed. 1894).

verger, n. One who carries a verge (a rod) as an emblem of office; esp., an attendant on a bishop or justice.

veridical (və-rid-ə-kəl). See VERACIOUS.

verification, n. (16c) 1. A formal declaration made in the presence of an authorized officer, such as a notary public, or (in some jurisdictions) under oath but not in the presence of such an officer, whereby one swears to the truth of the statements in the document. • Traditionally, a verification is used as a conclusion for all pleadings that are required to be sworn. Cf. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (4). — Also termed affidavit of verification. [Cases: Acknowledgment ⇨ 8; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 662; Pleading ⇨ 289–304.] 2. An oath or affirmation that an authorized officer administers to an affiant or deponent. 3. Loosely, ACKNOWLEDGMENT (5). 4. See certified copy under COPY. 5. CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORITY (1). 6. Any act of notarizing. Cf. JURAT (1). — verify, vb. — verifier, n.

verified copy. See certified copy under COPY.

verified non est factum. See NON EST FACTUM.

verify, vb. 1. To prove to be true; to confirm or establish the truth or truthfulness of; to authenticate. 2. To confirm or substantiate by oath or affidavit; to swear to the truth of.

verily, adv. Archaic. Truly; in fact; certainly.

veritas (ver-i-tas or -tahs), n. [Latin] 1. Truth. 2. (cap.) An international institution of maritime underwriters for the survey and rating of vessels. • Founded in Belgium in 1828, it moved to Paris in 1832 and has long been represented all over the world. — Also termed Bureau Veritas.

veritas convicii (ver-i-tas kən-vish-ee-ī). [Law Latin] Hist. The truth of the accusation. • The phrase appeared in reference to a defense in a defamation action.

verity (ver-ə-tee). (14c) Truth; truthfulness; conformity to fact.

vermenging (vər-meng-ing), n. [Dutch "mingling"] The extinction of a debt when the debtor's and the creditor's interests merge, as in a corporate merger.

verna (vər-nə). Hist. A slave born in the slaveholder's house.

versans in illicito (vər-sanz in i-lis-i-toh). [Latin] Hist. Engaged in some unlawful occupation.

VESA. abbr. VIDEO ELECTRONICS STANDARDS ASSOCIATION.

vessel. A ship, brig, sloop, or other craft used — or capable of being used — to navigate on water. • To qualify as a vessel under the Jones Act, the structure's purpose must to some reasonable degree be to transport passengers, cargo, or equipment from place to place across navigable waters. [Cases: Shipping ↷1.]

"Despite the important role a 'vessel' plays in maritime law, there is no settled definition of the term. Congress has defined a vessel as including 'every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.' 1 U.S.C.A. § 3. The Supreme Court has defined vessels as 'all navigable structures intended for transportation.' Cope v. Vallette Dry-Dock Co., 119 U.S. 625 (1887)." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 14 (3d ed. 1996).

"The term vessel is defined in 1 U.S.C. § 3 as follows: 'The word "vessel" includes every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.' This definition has not been very influential in admiralty and maritime cases. Litigants contending for vessel status often invoke its remarkable breadth. Those opposing vessel status typically respond, 'But the present context indicates otherwise.' When courts mention the definition favorably, it usually seems to be a makeweight argument." David W. Robertson, Steven F. Friedell & Michael F. Sturley, Admiralty and Maritime Law in the United States 59 (2001).

foreign vessel. A vessel owned by residents of, or sailing under the flag of, a foreign nation. [Cases: Shipping ↷2.]

Jones Act vessel. A vessel whose crew members can qualify as seamen under the Jones Act; esp., a craft designed or used for transporting cargo or people on navigable waters, or that was being used for navigation at the time of a worker's injury. See JONES ACT. [Cases: Shipping ↷1.]

public vessel. A vessel owned and used by a nation or government for its public service, whether in its navy, its revenue service, or otherwise. See PUBLIC VESSELS ACT. [Cases: United States ↷125(11).]

seagoing vessel. A vessel that — considering its design, function, purpose, and capabilities — is normally expected both to carry passengers for hire and to engage in substantial operations beyond the boundary line (set by the Coast Guard) dividing inland waters from the high seas. • Typically excluded from the definition are pleasure yachts, tugs and towboats, fishing boats, and other vessels that do not carry passengers for hire. [Cases: Shipping ↷204.]

seaworthy vessel. A vessel that can withstand the ordinary stress of the wind, waves, and other weather that seagoing vessels might ordinarily be expected to encounter. • In some legal contexts, the question whether a vessel is seaworthy includes the question whether it is fit to carry an intended cargo properly. Under federal maritime law, a vessel's owner has the duty to provide a crew with a seaworthy vessel. See SEAWORTHY. [Cases: Seamen ↷9; Shipping ↷42, 121, 207.]

vest, vb. (15c) 1. To confer ownership (of property) upon a person. 2. To invest (a person) with the full title to property. 3. To give (a person) an immediate, fixed right of present or future enjoyment. 4. Hist. To put (a person) into possession of land by the ceremony of investiture. — vesting, n.

vested, adj. (18c) Having become a completed, consummated right for present or future enjoyment; not contingent; unconditional; absolute . [Cases: Estates in Property ↷1.]

"[U]nfortunately, the word 'vested' is used in two senses. Firstly, an interest may be vested in possession, when there is a right to present enjoyment, e.g. when I own and occupy Blackacre. But an interest may be vested, even where it does not carry a right to immediate possession, if it does confer a fixed right of taking possession in the future." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 305 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

"A future interest is vested if it meets two requirements: first, that there be no condition precedent to the interest's becoming a present estate other than the natural expiration of those estates that are prior to it in possession; and second, that it be theoretically possible to identify who would get the right to possession if the interest should become a present estate at any time." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 66–67 (2d ed. 1984).

vested in interest. (18c) Consummated in a way that will result in future possession and use. • Reversions, vested remainders, and any other future use or executory devise that does not depend on an uncertain period or event are all said to be vested in interest. [Cases: Wills ↷628–638.]

vie (vee). [French] Life. • The term occurs in such Law French phrases as cestui que vie and pur autre vie.

vi et armis (vi et ahr-mis). [Latin] Hist. By or with force and arms. See trespass vi et armis under TRESPASS.

"The words 'with force and arms,' anciently 'vi et armis,' were, by the common law, necessary in indictments for offences which amount to an actual disturbance of the peace, or consist, in any way, of acts of violence; but it seems to be the better opinion, that they were never necessary where the offence consisted of a cheat, or non-feazance, or a mere consequential injury." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 240 (2d ed. 1826).

"vi et armis . . . was a necessary part of the allegation, in medieval pleading, that a trespass had been committed with force and therefore was a matter for the King's Court because it involved a breach of the peace. In England, the term survived as a formal requirement of pleading until 1852." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 916 (2d ed. 1995).

view, n. 1. The common-law right of prospect — that is, an outlook from the windows of one's house. 2. An urban servitude that prohibits the obstruction of the outlook from a person's house. [Cases: Adjoining Landowners ↻ 10; Easements ↻ 11, 19, 45.] 3. A jury's trip to inspect a place or thing relevant to the case it is considering; the act or proceeding by which a tribunal goes to observe an object that cannot be produced in court because it is immovable or inconvenient to remove. • The appropriate procedures are typically regulated by state statute. At common law, and today in many civil cases, the trial judge's presence is not required. The common practice has been for the jury to be escorted by "showers" who are commissioned for this purpose. Parties and counsel are generally permitted to attend, although this is a matter typically within the trial judge's discretion. Cf. VIEW OF AN INQUEST. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 65; Federal Civil Procedure ↻ 1968; Trial ↻ 28.] 4. In a real action, a defendant's observation of the thing at issue to ascertain its identity and other circumstances surrounding it. Cf. DEMAND OF VIEW.

viewer. (15c) A person, usu. one of several, appointed by a court to investigate certain matters or to examine a particular locality (such as the proposed site of a new road) and to report to the court.

view of an inquest. (1837) A jury's inspection of a place or property to which an inquiry or inquest refers. Cf. VIEW (3).

view of frankpledge. Hist. The twice-yearly gathering and inspection of every freeman within the district who was more than 12 years old to determine whether each one had taken the oath of allegiance and had found nine freeman pledges for his peaceable demeanor. See FRANKPLEDGE.

viewpoint discrimination. See DISCRIMINATION.

viewpoint-neutral. See NEUTRAL.

vif-gage (veef-gayj or vif-). [Law French] See vadium vivum under VADIUM.

vigil. Eccles. law. The day before any solemn feast.

vigilance. (16c) Watchfulness; precaution; a proper degree of activity and promptness in pursuing one's rights, in guarding them from infraction, and in discovering opportunities for enforcing one's lawful claims and demands.

vigilant, adj. (15c) Watchful and cautious; on the alert; attentive to discover and avoid danger.

vigilante (vij-ə-lan-tee). (1856) A person who seeks to avenge a crime by taking the law into his or her own hands.

vigilantism (vij-ə-lan-tiz-əm). The act of a citizen who takes the law into his or her own hands by apprehending and punishing suspected criminals.

viis et modis (vi-is et moh-dis). [Latin] Eccles. law. By all ways and means. • In ecclesiastical courts, service of a decree or citation viis et modis is equivalent to substituted service in temporal courts. It requires posting of a notice where a person is likely to be found. This type of service is contrasted with personal service.

vi laica amovenda. See DE VI LAICA AMOVENDA.

vill (vil). Hist. 1. A part into which a hundred or wapentake was divided. 2. A town or village.

village. 1. Traditionally, a modest assemblage of houses and buildings for dwellings and businesses. 2. In some states, a municipal corporation with a smaller population than a city. — Also termed (in sense 2) town; borough. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↻ 1.1.]

villanis regis subtractis reducendis (vi-lay-nis ree-jis sɔb-trak-tis ree-d[y]oo-sen-dis), n. [Latin "for returning the king's villeins who have been removed"] Hist. A writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen who had been carried away by others out of his manors, where they belonged.

villanum servitium (vi-lay-nəm sər-vish-ee-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. See VILLEINAGE.

villein (vil-ən). Hist. A person entirely subject to a lord or attached to a manor, but free in relation to all others; a serf. • At the time of the Domesday Inquest (shortly after the Norman Conquest), about 40% of households were marked as belonging to villeins: they were the most numerous element in the English population. Cf. FREEMAN.

villein in gross. A villein who was annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another.

villein regardant (ri-gahr-dənt). A villein annexed to the manor of land.

villeinage (vil-ə-nij). Hist. 1. The holding of property through servitude to a feudal lord; a servile type of tenure in which a tenant was obliged to render base services to a lord. Cf. KNIGHT SERVICE; SOCAGE. 2. A villein's status, condition, or service. — Also spelled villenage; villainage; villanage. — Also termed villein tenure.

"The typical tenant in villeinage does not know in the evening what he will have to do in the morning. . . . [T] here is a large element of real uncertainty; the lord's will counts for much; when they go to bed on Sunday night they do not know what Monday's work will be; it may be threshing, ditching, carrying; they cannot tell. This seems the point that is seized by law and that general opinion of which law is the exponent: any considerable uncertainty as to the amount or kind of the agricultural services makes the tenure unfree. The tenure is unfree, not because the tenant 'holds at the will of the lord,' in the sense of being removable at a moment's notice, but because his services, though in many respects minutely defined by custom, cannot be altogether defined without frequent reference to the lord's will." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 371 (2d ed. 1898).

"At the lower level the services were not always defined. The duties of the peasant were chiefly agricultural. If they were unfixed, so that the lord might in theory demand all manner of work, the tenure was 'unfree' and was called villeinage." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 260 (3d ed. 1990).

privileged villeinage. Villeinage in which the services to be performed were certain, though of a base and servile nature.

pure villeinage. Villeinage in which the services were not certain, but the tenant was obliged to do whatever he was commanded whenever the command came.

villein in gross. See VILLEIN.

villein regardant. See VILLEIN.

villein service. Hist. A base service that a villein performed, such as working on the lord's land on certain days of the week (usu. two to four). • These services were not considered suitable to a man of free and honorable rank. — Also termed villein servitium. See WEEK-WORK.

villein socage (sok-ij). See SOCAGE.

villinous judgment (vil-ə-nəs). Hist. A judgment that deprived a person of his libera lex, as a result of which he was discredited and disabled as a juror and witness, forfeited his goods and chattels and land, had his houses razed and trees uprooted, and went to prison. — Also spelled villainous judgment.

vinagium (vi-nay-jee-əm). A payment in kind of wine as rent for a vineyard.

vinculación (vin-koo-lah-syohn). Spanish law. A linking or encumbering; esp., an entail.

vinculo (ving-kyə-loh), n. [Latin "by bond"] Spanish law. 1. A tie or bond; esp., the bond of marriage. See divorce a vinculo matrimonii under DIVORCE. 2. An entail.

vinculum juris (ving-kyə-ləm joor-is). [Latin "a bond of the law"] Roman law. The tie that legally binds one person to another; legal bond; obligation. Cf. SOLUTIO OBLIGATIONIS.

vinculum personarum ab eodem stirpite descenditium (ving-kyə-ləm pər-sə-nair-əm ab ee-oh-dəm sti-pə-tee dee-sen-den-shee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. The bond uniting persons descended from the same stock.

vindex (vin-deks), n. [Latin] Civil law. One who guaranteed the appearance of a defendant in court on pain of being liable for the judgment debt.

vindicare (vin-di-kair-ee), vb. [Latin "to claim or challenge"] Roman law & Hist. To demand as one's own; to assert a right in or to (a thing); to assert or claim ownership of (a thing).

vindicate, vb. (16c) 1. To clear (a person or thing) from suspicion, criticism, blame, or doubt <DNA tests vindicated the suspect>. 2. To assert, maintain, or affirm (one's interest) by action <the claimants sought to vindicate their rights through a class-action suit>.

3. To defend (one's interest) against interference or encroachment <the borrower vindicated its interest in court when the lender tried to foreclose>. 4. Roman & civil law. To assert a legal right to (a thing); to seek recovery of (a thing) by legal process <Antony Honoratus attempted to vindicate the sword he had lent his cousin>. — vindication, n. — vindicator, n.

vindicatio (vin-di-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin "claim"] Roman law. 1. An action by the owner to claim property.

vindicatio servitutis (vin-di-kay-shee-oh sər-və-t[y] oo-tis). [Latin "claim of servitude"] Roman law. An action against the owner of land over which the plaintiff claims that a servitude exists. — Also termed actio confessoria.

2. The claiming of a thing as one's own; the assertion of a right in or title to a thing. Pl. vindicaciones (vin-di-kay-shee-oh-nee-z).

vindicatory part (vin-də-kə-tor-ee). (1881) The portion of a statute setting forth the penalty for committing a wrong or neglecting a duty.

vindicta (vin-dik-tə), n. Roman law. 1. A rod or wand. 2. The assertion of freedom or ownership by symbolically touching the person or thing with a rod. See FESTUCA.

vindictive damages. See punitive damages under DAMAGES.

vindictive prosecution (vin-dik-tiv). See PROSECUTION.

viol (vyohl), n. [French] French law. Rape; indecent assault.

violation, n. (15c) 1. An infraction or breach of the law; a transgression. See INFRACTION. 2. The act of breaking or dishonoring the law; the contravention of a right or duty. 3. Rape; ravishment. 4. Under the Model Penal Code, a public-welfare offense. • In this sense, a violation is not a crime. See Model Penal Code § 1.04(5). — violate, vb. — violative (vi-ə-lay-tiv), adj. — violator, n.

violation warrant. See WARRANT (1).

violence. (14c) The use of physical force, usu. accompanied by fury, vehemence, or outrage; esp., physical force unlawfully exercised with the intent to harm. • Some courts have held that violence in labor disputes is not limited to physical contact or injury, but may include picketing conducted with misleading signs, false statements, erroneous publicity, and veiled threats by words and acts.

domestic violence. 1. Violence between members of a household, usu. spouses; an assault or other violent act committed by one member of a household against another. See BATTERED-CHILD SYNDROME; BATTERED-WOMAN SYNDROME. [Cases: Assault and Battery ◊48.] 2. The infliction of physical injury, or the creation of a reasonable fear that physical injury or harm will be inflicted, by a parent or a member or former member of a child's household, against a child or against another member of the household. — Also termed domestic abuse; family violence. 3. Archaic. Insurrection or unlawful force fomented from within a country.

Violence Against Women Act. A federal statute that established a federal civil-rights action for victims of gender-motivated violence, without the need for a criminal charge. 42 USCA § 13981. • In 2000, the Supreme Court invalidated the statute, holding that neither the Commerce Clause nor the Enforcement Clause of the 14th Amendment authorized Congress to enact the civil-remedy provision of this Act. United States v. Morrison, 120 S.Ct. 1740 (2000). — Abbr. VAWA. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1035.]

violent, adj. (14c) 1. Of, relating to, or characterized by strong physical force <violent blows to the legs>. 2. Resulting from extreme or intense force <violent death>. 3. Vehemently or passionately threatening <violent words>.

violent crime. See CRIME.

violent death. See DEATH.

violent felony. See violent offense under OFFENSE (1).

violent offense. See OFFENSE (1).

violent profits. Scots law. Penal damages imposed against a tenant who refused to surrender rented property to the landlord.

vir (veer), n. [Latin] 1. An adult male; a man. 2. A husband. • In the Latin phrases and maxims that once pervaded English law, vir generally means “husband,” as in the expression vir et uxor (husband and wife). See ET VIR. Cf. UXOR.

vires (vi-reez), n. (18c) 1. Natural powers; forces. 2. Granted powers, esp. when limited. See ULTRA VIRES; INTRA VIRES.

vir et uxor (veer et ək-sor). [Latin] Husband and wife.

virga (vər-gə). Hist. A rod or staff; esp., a rod as an ensign of office.

virgata (vər-gay-tə). 1. A quarter of an acre of land. See ACRE. 2. A quarter of a hide of land. See HIDE (1).

virgata regia (vər-gay-tə ree-jee-ə). [Latin “king’s verge”] Hist. The bounds of the king’s household, within which the court of the steward had jurisdiction.

virga terrae (vər-gə ter-ee), n. [Latin “branch of land”] Hist. A variable measure of land ranging from 20 to 40 acres. — Also termed virgata terrae. See YARDLAND.

virge. See VERGE.

viridario eligendo (vir-ə-dair-ee-oh el-ə-jen-doh). Hist. A writ for choice of a verderer in the forest.

virile share. Civil law. An amount that an obligor owes jointly and severally with another. I.a. Civ. Code art. 1804. — Also termed virile portion.

virtual adoption. See adoption by estoppel under ADOPTION.

virtual child pornography. See PORNOGRAPHY.

virtual representation. See REPRESENTATION (3).

virtual-representation doctrine. (1945) The principle that a judgment may bind a person who is not a party to the litigation if one of the parties is so closely aligned with the nonparty’s interests that the nonparty has been adequately represented by the party in court. • Under this doctrine, for instance, a judgment in a case naming only the husband as a party can be binding on his wife as well. See RES JUDICATA. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 677.]

virtue ethics. Ethics. An ethical theory that focuses on the character of the actor rather than on the nature of the act or its consequences. • This approach received its first and perhaps its fullest expression in the works of Aristotle, esp. in his Ethics. Cf. CONSEQUENTIALISM.

virtute cuius (vər-t[y]oo-tee k[y]oo-jəs), adv. [Latin] Hist. By virtue whereof. • This phrase began the clause in a pleading that attempted to justify an entry onto land by alleging that it was by virtue of an order from one entitled that the entry took place.

virtute officii (vər-t[y]oo-tee ə-fish-ee-ı), adv. [Latin] Hist. By virtue of one’s office; by the authority invested in one as the incumbent of a particular office. • An officer acts virtute officii when carrying out some official authority as the incumbent of an office.

vis (vis). [Latin “power”] (17c) 1. Any force, violence, or disturbance relating to a person or property.

“Vis, as a legal term, was understood to denote the organizing and arming of tumultuous bodies of men for the purpose of obstructing the constituted authorities in the performance of their duty, and thus interrupting the ordinary administration of the laws. No such offence was recognised by the Criminal Code until the last century of the republic, when violent riots by hired mobs became so frequent, that M. Plautius Silvanus, Tribune of the Plebs, B.C. 89, [secured the passing of] the lex Plautia de Vi, in terms of which, those convicted of such practices were banished.” William Ramsay, A Manual of Roman Antiquities 347 (Rodolfo Lanciani ed., 15th ed. 1894).

2. The force of law. • Thus vim habere (“to have force”) is to be legally valid. Pl. vires.

visa (vee-zə). An official indorsement made on a passport, showing that it has been examined and that the bearer is permitted to proceed; a recognition by the country in which a passport-holder wishes to travel that the holder’s passport is valid. • A visa is generally required for the admission of aliens into the United States. 8 USCA §§ 1181, 1184. — Also termed (archaically) visé (vee-zay or vi-zay). [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨ 170–207.]

vis ablativa (vis ab-lə-tı-və), n. [Latin “ablative force”] Civil law. Force exerted in taking something away from another. Pl. vires ablativae.

vis absoluta (vis ab-sə-loo-tə). Physical compulsion.

The difference is between compulsion of the will (vis compulsiva) which results in an act though not of free volition, and physical compulsion (vis absoluta) in which the unavoidable movement is no act at all." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1054-55 (3d ed. 1982).

vis armata (vis ahr-may-tə). [Latin "armed force"] Hist. Force exerted by means of weapons. Cf. VIS INERMIS. — Also termed armata vis.

vis aut metus qui cadit in constantem virum (vis awt mee-təs kwı kay-dit [or kad-it] in kən-stan-təm vı-rəm). [Latin] Hist. A force or fear sufficient to overcome a man of firmness and resolution.

vis-à-vis (veez-ə-vee). [French "face to face"] (18c) In relation to; opposite to <the creditor established a preferred position vis-à-vis the other creditors>.

Visby, laws of. See LAWS OF VISBY.

vis clandestina (vis klan-des-tı-nə), n. [Latin "clandestine force"] Hist. Force furtively used, esp. at night.

vis compulsiva (vis kom-pəl-sı-və), n. [Latin "compulsive force"] Hist. Force exerted to compel another to do something involuntarily; menacing force exerted by terror.

viscount (vı-kownt). 1. The title of the fourth rank of European nobility. • In the British peerage, viscount is placed between the dignity of earl and baron. 2. Hist. A sheriff.

viscountess (vı-kown-tis). 1. The wife of a viscount. — Also termed vice-comitissa. 2. A woman who holds the rank of viscount in her own right.

vis divina (vis di-vı-nə), n. Civil law. Divine or superhuman force; ACT OF GOD; VIS MAJOR.

visé. See VISA.

vis expulsiva (vis eks-pəl-sı-və), n. [Latin "expulsive force"] Hist. Force used to expel or dispossess another.

vis exturbativa (vis eks-tər-bə-tı-və), n. [Latin "eliminating force"] Hist. Force used to thrust out another, esp. when two claimants are contending for possession.

vis fluminis (vis floo-mə-nis), n. [Latin "the force of a river"] Civil law. The force exerted by a stream or river; waterpower.

visible, adj. 1. Perceptible to the eye; discernible by sight. 2. Clear, distinct, and conspicuous.

visible crime. See street crime under CRIME.

visible means of support. (1846) An apparent method of earning a livelihood. • Vagrancy statutes have long used this phrase to describe those who have no ostensible ability to support themselves.

vis illicita (vis il-lis-ə-tə). See VIS INJURIOSA.

vis impressa (vis im-pres-ə), n. [Latin "impressed force"] The original act of force from which an injury arises, as distinguished from the proximate (or immediate) force.

vis inermis (vis in-ər-mis), n. [Latin] Unarmed force. Cf. VIS ARMATA.

vis injuriosa (vis in-joor-ee-oh-sə), n. [Latin "injurious force"] Hist. Wrongful force. — Also termed vis illicita.

vis inquietativa (vis in-kwı-ə-tə-tı-və), n. [Latin "disquieting force"] Civil law. Force that prevents another from using his or her possession quietly and in peace.

visit, n. Int'l law. A naval officer's boarding an ostensibly neutral merchant vessel from another state to exercise the right of search. • This right is exercisable when suspicious circumstances exist, as when the vessel is suspected of involvement in piracy. — Also termed visitation. See RIGHT OF SEARCH. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨20.]

visitation (viz-ə-tay-shən). (14c) 1. Inspection; superintendence; direction; regulation. 2. Family law. A relative's, esp. a noncustodial parent's, period of access to a child. — Also termed parental access; access; parenting time; residential time. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨175-231.] 3. The process of inquiring into and correcting corporate irregularities. [Cases: Corporations ⇨394.] 4. VISIT.

grandparent visitation. A grandparent's court-approved access to a grandchild. • The Supreme Court recently limited a grandparent's right to have visitation with his or her grandchild if the parent objects, citing a parent's fundamental right to raise his or her child and to make all decisions concerning the child free from state intervention absent a threat to the child's health and safety. Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57, 120 S.Ct. 2054 (2000). [Cases: Child Custody ⇨282.]

stepped-up visitation. Visitation, usu. for a parent who has been absent from the child's life, that begins on a very limited basis and increases as the child comes to know the parent. — Also termed step-up visitation.

supervised visitation. Visitation, usu. court-ordered, in which a parent may visit with the child or children only in the presence of some other individual. • A court may order supervised visitation when the visiting parent is known or believed to be prone to physical abuse, sexual abuse, or violence. — Also termed restricted visitation. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨217.]

visitation books. Hist. Books compiled by the heralds, when royal progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families and to register whatever marriages and descents were verified to them upon oath.

visitation credit. Family law. A child-support reduction that reflects the amount of time the child lives with the noncustodial parent. [Cases: Child Support ⇨165.]

visitation order. (1944) Family law. 1. An order establishing the visiting times for a noncustodial parent with his or her child. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨525.] 2. An order establishing the visiting times for a child and a person with a significant relationship to the child. • Such an order may allow for visitation between (1) a grandparent and a grandchild, (2) a child and another relative, (3) a child and a stepparent, or (4) occasionally, a child and the child's psychological parent. — Also termed access order.

visitation right. (1935) 1. Family law. A noncustodial parent's or grandparent's court-ordered privilege of spending time with a child or grandchild who is living with another person, usu. the custodial parent. • The noncustodial parent with visitation rights may sometimes be a parent from whose custody the child has been removed because of abuse or neglect. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨ 175–231, 282.] 2. Int'l law. A belligerent nation's right to search a neutral vessel to find out whether it is carrying contraband or is otherwise engaged in nonneutral service. • If the searched vessel is doing either of these things, the searchers may seize the contraband and carry out an appropriate punishment. — Also termed (in both senses) right of visitation.

visitatorial (viz-ə-tə-tor-ee-əl), adj. Of or relating to on-site inspection or supervision. — Also termed visitorial.

"To eleemosynary corporations, a visitatorial power is attached as a necessary incident. . . . [P]rivate and particular corporations, founded and endowed by individuals for charitable purposes, are subject to the private government of those who are the efficient patrons and founder. If there be no visitor appointed by the founder, the law appoints the founder himself, and his heirs, to be the visitors. The visitatorial power arises from the property which the founder assigned to support the charity; and as he is the author of the charity, the laws give him and his heirs a visitatorial power; that is, an authority to inspect the actions and regulate the behavior of the members that partake of the charity. This power is judicial and supreme, but not legislative." 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 300–01 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

visitatorial power. See POWER (3).

visiting judge. See JUDGE.

visitor. 1. A person who goes or comes to a particular person or place.

business visitor. See BUSINESS VISITOR.

2. A person appointed to visit, inspect, inquire into, and correct corporate irregularities. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 394.]

vis laica (vis lay-ə-kə), n. [Latin "lay force"] Hist. An armed force used in holding possession of a church.

vis licita (vis lis-ə-tə), n. [Latin] Lawful force.

vis major (vis may-jər), n. [Latin "a superior force"] (17c)

1. A greater or superior force; an irresistible or overwhelming force of nature; FORCE MAJEURE. Cf. ACT OF GOD. 2. A loss resulting immediately from a natural cause without human intervention and that could not have been prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care. — Also termed act of nature; act of providence; superior force; irresistible force; vis divina.

vis major naturae (vis may-jər nə-tyoor-ee). [Latin] Hist. The superior force of nature. See FORCE MAJEURE.

visne (veen or veen-ee). [Law French fr. Latin visnetum] Neighborhood; at common law, the district from which juries were drawn; VICINAGE.

vis perturbativa (vis pər-tər-bə-tī-və), n. [Latin "perturbing force"] Hist. Force used between persons contending for possession of something.

vis proxima (vis prahk-sə-mə), n. [Latin "proximate force"] Hist. Immediate force.

vis simplex (vis sim-pleks), n. [Latin "simple force"] Hist. Mere force; sheer force.

VISTA (vis-tə). abbr. (1964) Volunteers in Service to America, a federal program established in 1964 to provide volunteers to help improve the living conditions of people in the poorest areas of the United States, its possessions, and Puerto Rico. [Cases: United States ⇨ 82(4).]

vi statuti (vī stə-t[ɹ]oo-trī). [Law Latin] Hist. By force of statute.

Visual Artists Rights Act. Copyright. A 1990 federal law giving a visual artist nontransferable moral rights of integrity and attribution in original and limited-edition creations. • Passed in order to meet Berne Convention standards, the Act protects the original artist — not the owner of the copyright — by granting some rights to prevent the work from being changed or destroyed, and by guaranteeing that the artist may claim authorship of the original work but may deny authorship if the work is modified. 17 USCA §§ 106A, 113. — Abbr. VARA. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 6.]

visus (vī-səs or vī-zəs), n. [Latin] Hist. An inspection of a place, person, or thing. See VIEW (3), (4).

vital statistics. (1837) Public records — usu. relating to matters such as births, marriages, deaths, diseases, and the like — that are statutorily mandated to be kept by a city, state, or other governmental division or subdivision. • On the admissibility of vital statistics, see Fed. R. Evid. 803(9). [Cases: Health ⇨ 395.]

vital term. See fundamental term under TERM (2).

vitiare (vish-ee-ayt), vb. (16c) 1. To impair; to cause to have no force or effect <the new statute vitiates any common-law argument that the plaintiffs might have>. 2. To make void or voidable; to invalidate either completely or in part <fraud vitiates a contract>. 3. To corrupt morally <Mr. Lawrence complains that his children were vitiated by their governess>. — vitiation, n. — vitiator, n.

vitiligate (vit-ə-lit-ə-gayt), vb. [fr. Latin vitiligare "to quarrel disgracefully"] Archaic. To litigate merely from quarrelsome motives; to carry on a lawsuit in an unduly contentious, wrangling way. — vitiligation, n. — vitiligious (vit-ə-li-tij-əs), adj.

vitious intromission. See INTROMISSION.

vitium clerici (vish-ee-əm kler-ə-sī). [Latin] See clerical error under ERROR.

vitium reale (vish-ee-əm ree-ay-lee). [Latin "true error"] Hist. & Scots law. A defect in a title that renders the movable property nontransferable; specif., an inherent vice in the title of anyone who holds a stolen thing, even if acquired honestly, so that the true owner can reclaim it. Cf. LABES REALIS QUAE REI INHAERET.

"A person who comes into possession of moveable property without any title to retain custody thereof is obliged to restore it to the person truly entitled to the possession thereof. . . . [P]roperty so acquired is affected by an inherent vitium reale which prevents the thief or fraudulent person from conferring a good title on anyone, even a taker from him in good faith, who has given value and taken without notice of the thief's defective title; such a person must return the property to the true owner, or pay compensation therefor. . . . An exception to the rule of vitium reale exists in the cases of money, bank-notes and negotiable instruments. . . ." 2 David M. Walker, Principles of Scottish Private Law: Law of Obligations 505-06 (1988).

vitium scriptoris (vish-ee-əm skrip-tor-is), n. [Latin "the mistake of a scribe"] Hist. A clerical error in writing.

vitricus (vi-trə-kəs), n. [Latin] Hist. A stepfather.

viva aqua (vi-və ak-wə), n. [Latin "living water"] Hist. Running water; water that comes from a spring or fountain.

viva pecunia (vi-və pi-kyoo-nee-ə), n. [Latin "living money"] Hist. Cattle, which obtained this name during the Saxon period, when they were received as money, usu. at regulated prices.

viva voce (vi-və voh-see also vee-və voh-chay), adv. [Law Latin "with living voice"] (16c) By word of mouth; orally. • In reference to votes, the term means a voice vote was held rather than a vote by ballot. In reference to the examination of witnesses, the term means that oral rather than written testimony was taken. See voice vote under VOTE (4). [Cases: Elections ⇨214.]

viva voce vote. See voice vote under VOTE (4).

vivisection, n. 1. Physiological or pathological experimentation on or investigation of living vertebrate animals using procedures likely to cause severe pain. 2. By extension, questioning or criticism that is intense, minute, and merciless.

vivum vadium (vi-vəm vay-dee-əm). See vadium vivum under VADIUM.

viz. (viz). abbr. [Latin videlicet] (16c) Namely; that is to say <the defendant engaged in fraudulent activities, viz., misrepresenting his gross income, misrepresenting the value of his assets, and forging his wife's signature>. See VIDELICET.

Voconian law (və-koh-nee-in). See LEX VOCONIA.

voice exemplar. (1954) A sample of a person's voice used for the purpose of comparing it with a recorded voice to determine whether the speaker is the same person. • Although voiceprint identification was formerly inadmissible, the trend in recent years has been toward admissibility. See Fed. R. Evid. 901. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨339.6; Evidence ⇨150.]

voiceprint. (1962) A distinctive pattern of curved lines and whorls made by a machine that measures human vocal sounds for the purpose of identifying an individual speaker. • Like fingerprints, voiceprints are thought to be unique to each person. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨339.6; Evidence ⇨150.]

void, adj. (14c) 1. Of no legal effect; null. • The distinction between void and voidable is often of great practical importance. Whenever technical accuracy is required, void can be properly applied only to those provisions that are of no effect whatsoever — those that are an absolute nullity. — void, avoid, vb. — voidness, n.

facially void. (1969) (Of an instrument) patently void upon an inspection of the contents. — Also termed void on its face.

void ab initio (ab i-nish-ee-oh). (17c) Null from the beginning, as from the first moment when a contract is entered into. • A contract is void ab initio if it seriously offends law or public policy, in contrast to a contract that is merely voidable at the election of one party to the contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨98, 136.]

void for vagueness. (1814) 1. (Of a deed or other instrument affecting property) having such an insufficient property description as to be unenforceable. [Cases: Deeds ⇨37.] 2. (Of a penal statute) establishing a requirement or punishment without specifying what is required or what conduct is punishable, and therefore void because violative of due process. — Also termed void for indefiniteness. See VAGUENESS DOCTRINE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨4506; Criminal Law ⇨13.1.]

2. VOIDABLE. • Although sense 1 above is the strict meaning of void, the word is often used and construed as bearing the more liberal meaning of "voidable."

voidable, adj. (15c) Valid until annulled; esp., (of a contract) capable of being affirmed or rejected at the option of one of the parties. • This term describes a valid act that may be voided rather than an invalid act that may be ratified. — Also termed avoidable. [Cases: Contracts ↻98, 136.] — voidability, n.

"Most of the disputed questions in the law of infancy turn upon the legal meaning of the word 'voidable' as applied to an infant's acts. The natural meaning of the word imports a valid act which may be avoided, rather than an invalid act which may be confirmed, and the weight of authority as well as reason points in the same direction. Certainly, so far as executed transfers of property are concerned the authority of the decisions clearly supports this view." 1 Samuel Williston, The Law Governing Sales of Goods § 12, at 28 (3d ed. 1948).

"The promise of an infant surety is voidable as distinguished from void. The infant may expressly disaffirm or assert the defense of infancy when sued at any time before the expiration of a reasonable time after majority." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 82 (1950).

voir dire (v^oahr deer also vor deer or vor dir), n. [Law French "to speak the truth"] (17c) 1. A preliminary examination of a prospective juror by a judge or lawyer to decide whether the prospect is qualified and suitable to serve on a jury. • Loosely, the term refers to the jury-selection phase of a trial. [Cases: Jury ↻131.] 2. A preliminary examination to test the competence of a witness or evidence. [Cases: Witnesses ↻77.] 3. Hist. An oath administered to a witness requiring that witness to answer truthfully in response to questions. — Also spelled voire dire. — Also termed voir dire exam; examination on the voir dire. — voir dire, vb.

voiture (v^oah-t[y]oor), n. Carriage; transportation by carriage.

volatile stock. See STOCK.

volatility. In securities markets, the quality of having sudden and extreme price changes.

volens (voh-len^z), adj. [Latin] (1872) Willing. See NOLENS VOLENS.

volenti non fit injuria (voh-len-ti non fit in-joor-ee-ə). [Law Latin "to a willing person it is not a wrong," i.e., a person is not wronged by that to which he or she consents] (17c) The principle that a person who knowingly and voluntarily risks danger cannot recover for any resulting injury. • This is the type of affirmative defense that must be pleaded under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c). — Often shortened to volenti. See ASSUMPTION OF THE RISK. [Cases: Negligence ↻550; Torts ↻126.]

"[T]he maxim 'Volenti non fit injuria' . . . is certainly of respectable antiquity. The idea underlying it has been traced as far back as Aristotle, and it was also recognized in the works of the classical Roman jurists, and in the Canon Law. In English law, Bracton in his De Legibus Angliae (ca. A.D. 1250-1258) uses the maxim, though not with the technicality that attached to it later, and in a Year Book case of 1305 it appears worded exactly as it is now. So far as actual citation of the maxim goes, most of the modern cases use it in connexion with harm to the person rather than to property." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 13, at 24 (5th ed. 1950).

volition (və-lish-ən or voh-), n. (17c) 1. The ability to make a choice or determine something. 2. The act of making a choice or determining something. 3. The choice or determination that someone makes. — volitional, adj.

volitional test. See IRRESISTIBLE-IMPULSE TEST.

Volksgerichtshof. See PEOPLE'S COURT (2)

Volstead Act (vol-sted). A federal statute enacted in 1919 to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of liquor. • Sponsored by Andrew Joseph Volstead of Minnesota, a famous Prohibitionist, the statute was passed under the 18th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. When the 21st Amendment repealed the 18th Amendment in 1933, the Volstead Act was voided. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ↻17.]

volume discount. See DISCOUNT.

volumen (vol-yoo-mən), n. [Latin "a rolled-up thing"] Civil law. A volume. Pl. volumina.

volumus (vol-ə-məs), vb. [Latin] Hist. We will; it is our will. • This was the first word of a clause in royal writs of protection and letters patent. It uses the royal we — the plural first person by which monarchs have traditionally spoken.

voluntariae jurisdictionis (vol-ən-tair-ee-ee juur-isdik-shee-oh-nis). [Latin] Hist. Of or pertaining to voluntary jurisdiction. See voluntary jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

voluntas testatoris (və-lən-tas tes-tə-tor-is). [Latin] Hist. The intention of a testator.

voluntatis non necessitatis (vol-ən-tay-tis non nə-ses-i-tay-tis). [Latin] Hist. A matter of choice, not of necessity.

volunteer. (16c) 1. A voluntary actor or agent in a transaction; esp., a person who, without an employer's assent and without any justification from legitimate personal interest, helps an employee in the performance of the employer's business. 2. The grantee in a voluntary conveyance; a person to whom a conveyance is made without any valuable consideration. See voluntary conveyance under CONVEYANCE. 3. Military law. A person who enters military service voluntarily and is then subject to the same rules as other soldiers. Cf. DRAFT (2). 4. Archaic. See OFFICIOUS INTERMEDDLER.

Volunteers in Service to America. See VISTA.

vote, n. (15c) 1. The expression of one's preference or opinion in a meeting or election by ballot, show of hands, or other type of communication <the Republican candidate received more votes than the Democratic candidate>.

absentee vote. See absentee voting under VOTING.

bullet vote. A vote cast for fewer nominees than are being elected. • A bullet vote slightly enhances the ballot's effect on the outcome. — Also termed bullet ballot.

casting vote. A deciding vote cast by the chair of a deliberative assembly when the votes are tied. • The U.S. Constitution gives the Vice President the casting vote in the Senate. U.S. Const. art. I, § 3. [Cases: United States ↷18.]

"One is, that to secure at all times the possibility of a definite resolution of the body, it is necessary that the President should have only a casting vote. And to take the senator of any State from his seat as senator, to place him in that of President of the Senate, would be to exchange, in regard to the State from which he came, a constant for a contingent vote." The Federalist No. 68 (Alexander Hamilton).

effective vote. A vote that counts toward a winning candidate, to the extent needed to win. • A vote that goes to a winning candidate is "effective" to the extent needed to win, and "excess" beyond that point. For example, if a candidate needs 100 votes and gets 150, then 50 votes are excess votes and each vote is two-thirds effective and one-third excess. Cf. excess vote; wasted vote.

excess vote. A vote that counts toward a winning candidate, beyond the extent needed to win. Cf. effective vote.

exhausted vote. A preferential vote on which all the ranked candidates have already been elected or eliminated. — Also termed exhausted ballot.

illegal vote. A vote that does not count because it was cast by someone not entitled to vote or for an ineligible choice, or in a form or manner that does not comply with the applicable rules. See spoiled ballot under BALLOT (2). [Cases: Elections ↷227.]

legal vote. A vote cast in the proper form and manner for an eligible choice by someone entitled to vote.

paired vote. An abstention resulting from a pairing. See PAIR.

preferential vote. A vote that ranks the choices in order of preference. • A preferential vote may be transferable or weighted. — Also termed preferential ballot. Cf. single transferable vote; weighted vote. [Cases: Elections ↷237.]

single transferable vote. A preferential vote that will migrate or "transfer" away from a candidate whom it will no longer help. • Under transferable voting, a candidate wins if his or her first-choice votes reach the number needed to win, or the "threshold." If no candidate reaches the threshold, the least-preferred candidate is dropped and his or her votes transfer to the next-preferred candidate on each ballot. If a candidate reaches the threshold with an excess, that excess still transfers — after being discounted by the non-excess fraction needed to reach the threshold — among the surviving candidates. Each transfer preserves each vote as long as at least one candidate that the voter ranked survives. The redistribution continues until enough candidates reach the threshold or the number of surviving candidates equals the number of representatives still to be elected. See DROOP QUOTA. — Also termed STV; transferable vote; choice voting. [Cases: Elections ↷237.] transferable vote. See single transferable vote.

unintelligible vote. An otherwise legal vote cast in a form from which the tellers cannot ascertain the voter's intent. • On a secret ballot, no voter may properly claim an unintelligible vote for the purpose of explaining it since the vote may have been cast by another voter who cannot contradict the claimant without sacrificing his or her right to secrecy.

vote of no confidence. See NO-CONFIDENCE VOTE.

wasted vote. A vote that does not count toward any winning candidate. Cf. effective vote; excess vote.

weighted vote. A nontransferable preferential vote whose strength is allocated among the ranked preferences either by the voter or according to a series of fixed weights. [Cases: Elections ↷237.]

2. The total number of votes cast in an election <the incumbent received 60% of the vote>. [Cases: Elections ↷1.] 3. The majority or supermajority needed for a certain question . [Cases: Elections ↷237.]

majority vote. See MAJORITY (2).

plurality vote. See PLURALITY.

tie vote. An equally divided vote. • A tie vote is not a deadlock unless the assembly is obliged to act, for example when electing an officer to an office that will otherwise be vacant. Cf. DEADLOCK. [Cases: Elections ↷238.]

unanimous vote. A vote in which every voter concurs. See UNANIMOUS (2).

winner-take-all vote. An election in which the majority (or sometimes the plurality) elects all the representatives. Cf. UNIT RULE; PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION; proportional voting under VOTING. [Cases: Elections ↷237.]

4. The act of voting, usu. by a deliberative assembly <the Senate postponed the vote on the gun-control bill>. [Cases: States ↷35.] — vote, vb.

counted vote. Parliamentary law. A vote taken in a way that individually counts each voter. • Examples of a counted vote are a show of hands, a standing vote, a roll-call vote, or a written ballot. See DIVISION (1).

division vote. See DIVISION (1).

lobby vote. A counted vote taken by each voter passing through a lobby between tellers. — Also termed teller vote.

rising vote. 1. See standing vote. 2. A vote of appreciation demonstrated by the members standing, sometimes silently but usu. with applause. — Also termed rising vote of thanks.

roll-call vote. A counted vote by roll call, in which the secretary calls each member's name, in answer to which the member casts aloud his or her vote. • The U.S. Constitution provides that "the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal." U.S. Const. art. I, § 5, cl. 3. — Also termed vote by yeas and nays; yeas and nays. See roll call under CALL (1). [Cases: United States ↷18.]

serpentine vote. A standing vote in which the voters count off and sit down, with the count progressing up one row and down the next until each member on the side of the question being counted has voted.

standing vote. A counted vote taken by each voter standing up when his or her side of the question is counted. — Also termed rising vote; standing division.

teller vote. See lobby vote.

viva voce vote. See voice vote.

voice vote. A vote taken by the voters collectively answering aloud, usu. with “aye” or “nay,” when their side of the question is called. — Also termed viva voce vote. [Cases: Elections ⇨214.]

vote by show of hands. A vote taken by the voters raising their hands when their side of the question is counted. — Often shortened to show of hands.

vote by yeas and nays. See roll-call vote.

vote dilution. See DILUTION (3).

vote immediately. See CLOSE DEBATE.

vote of no confidence. See NO-CONFIDENCE VOTE.

voter. (16c) 1. A person who engages in the act of voting. 2. A person who has the qualifications necessary for voting. — Also termed (in sense 2) legal voter; qualified voter. [Cases: Elections ⇨59–87.]

registered voter. A person who is qualified to vote and whose name is recorded in the voting district where he or she resides. [Cases: Elections ⇨95–119.]

voting. (16c) The casting of votes for the purpose of deciding an issue.

absentee voting. (1932) 1. Participation in an election by a qualified voter who is unable to appear at the polls on election day. 2. The practice of allowing voters to participate in this way. — Also termed (in sense 1) absentee ballot; absentee vote. See absentee ballot under BALLOT (2). Cf. early voting. [Cases: Elections ⇨126(6), 216.1.]

choice voting. See single transferable vote under VOTE (1).

class voting. (1941) A method of shareholder voting in which different classes of shares vote separately on fundamental corporate changes that affect the rights and privileges of that class. — Also termed voting by class; voting by voting group. [Cases: Corporations ⇨197.]

cumulative voting. (1884) A system in which each voter may cast more than one vote for the same candidate. • Cumulative voting helps a minority elect at least one representative. It is common in shareholder elections. [Cases: Corporations ⇨200, 283(2).]

early voting. (1984) Voting before the day of an election, esp. during a period designated for that purpose. • Unlike with absentee voting, taking advantage of early voting does not require the voter to swear to the inability to come to the polling place on election day. Cf. absentee voting. [Cases: Elections ⇨205.1.]

first-past-the-post voting. See plurality voting.

Hare-Ware voting. See instant-runoff voting.

instant-runoff voting. A system of preferential voting that mimics a runoff election by using each voter's ranked preferences instead of a second round of voting. See runoff election under ELECTION (3). — Also termed Hare-Ware voting; West Australian plan. Abbr. IRV. [Cases: Elections ⇨237.]

limited voting. A system in which each voter must cast fewer votes than the number of representatives being elected.

low-total voting. A system of weighted preferential voting that adds up the ranked preferences — “1” for a first choice, “2” for a second choice, and so forth — so that the most-preferred candidate wins by having the lowest total. See preferential voting; weighted vote under VOTE (1). [Cases: Elections ⇨237.]

majority voting. A system in which each voter may cast one vote per representative being elected, and a simple majority is required for election. [Cases: Corporations ⇨283(2).]

noncumulative voting. (1956) A corporate voting system in which a shareholder is limited in board elections to voting no more than the number of shares that he or she owns for a single candidate. • The result is that a majority shareholder will elect the entire board of directors. — Also termed straight voting. [Cases: Corporations ⇨283(2).]

plurality voting. Election by plurality. See PLURALITY. — Also termed first-past-the-post voting.

preferential voting. A system in which each voter ranks the choices in order of preference. • A preferential vote may be transferable or weighted. — Also termed rank-order voting. See single transferable vote under VOTE (1); weighted vote under VOTE (1). [Cases: Elections ⇨237.]

proportional voting. A system of transferable preferential voting in a multi-representative election. See preferential vote under VOTE (1); single transferable vote under VOTE (1). — Also termed proportional representation. [Cases: Elections ⇨237.]

rank-order voting. See preferential voting.

straight voting. See noncumulative voting.

two-round voting. A system in which the voting occurs in two rounds, with the first round determining the candidate's eligibility for the second round. • The second round may be a runoff between the top two candidates from the first round, an election by plurality among candidates who won their political parties' nominations in the first round, or an election by plurality among the candidates from the first round who reached a certain threshold. See runoff election under ELECTION (3). [Cases: Elections ⇨237.]

voting by class. See class voting.

voting by voting group. See class voting.

voting by yeas and nays. See roll-call vote under VOTE (4).

voting agreement. See POOLING AGREEMENT.

voting by class. See class voting under VOTING.

voting by voting group. See class voting under VOTING.

voting group. (1972) 1. A classification of shareholders by the type of stock held for voting on corporate matters. 2. Collectively, the shareholders falling within such a classification.

voting member. See MEMBER.

Voting Rights Act. The federal law that guarantees a citizen's right to vote, without discrimination based on race, color, or previous condition of servitude. 42 USCA §§ 1971–1974. [Cases: Elections ⇨12.]

voting security. See voting stock under STOCK.

voting stock. See STOCK.

voting-stock rights. A stockholder's right to vote stock in the affairs of the company. • Typically, holders of common stock have one vote for each share. Holders of preferred stock usu. have the right to vote when preferred dividends are in default for a specified period. [Cases: Corporations ⇨197.]

voting trust. See TRUST.

voting-trust certificate. A certificate issued by a voting trustee to the beneficial holders of shares held by the voting trust. • A voting-trust certificate may be as readily transferable as the underlying shares; it carries with it all the incidents of ownership except the power to vote. See voting trust under TRUST. [Cases: Corporations ⇨198.1(3).]

votum (voh-təm), n. [Latin] Hist. A vow; a promise. See dies votorum under DIES.

votum captandae mortis alienae (voh-təm kap-tan-dee mor-tis ay-lee-ee-nee or al-ee-). [Latin] Hist. An earnest desire for another's death. • An heir could not sell his or her rights to an ancestor's estate because such a transaction would likely induce votum captandae mortis alienae.

vouch, vb. (14c) 1. To answer for (another); to personally assure <the suspect's mother vouched for him>. 2. To call upon, rely on, or cite as authority; to substantiate with evidence <counsel vouched the mathematical formula for determining the statistical probability>. 3. Hist. To call into court to warrant and defend, usu. in a fine and recovery. See FINE (1). 4. Hist. To authenticate (a claim, etc.) by vouchers.

vouchee (vow-chee), n. Hist. 1. A person vouched into court; one who has been vouched over. See VOUCH OVER. 2. A person cited as authority in support of some fact.

voucher, n. (17c) 1. Confirmation of the payment or discharge of a debt; a receipt. 2. A written or printed authorization to disburse money. 3. Hist. A person who calls on another person (the vouchee) as a witness, esp. in support of a warranty of title. 4. Hist. The tenant in a writ of right.

voucher to warranty. Hist. The calling into court of a person who has warranted lands, by the person warranted, to come and defend a lawsuit.

vouching-in. (1849) 1. At common law, a procedural device by which a defendant may give notice of suit to a third party who may be liable to the defendant on the subject-matter of the suit, so that the third party will be bound by the court's decision. • Although this device has been largely replaced by third-party practice, it remains available under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Philadelphia Ship Maintenance Co., 444 F.2d 727, 735 (3d Cir. 1971). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨281; Parties ⇨49.] 2. The invitation of a person who is liable to a defendant in a lawsuit to intervene and defend so that, if the invitation is denied and the defendant later sues the person invited, the latter is bound by any determination of fact common to the two lawsuits. See UCC § 2-607. [Cases: Indemnity ⇨40, 79.] 3. IMPLEADER.

vouch over, vb. (16c) To cite (a person) into court in one's stead. See VOUCHER (1).

vox signata (vahks sig-nay-tə). [Law Latin] Hist. A technical word; a formal word. Pl. voces signatae.

voyage. Maritime law. The passing of a vessel by sea from one place, port, or country to another. • Courts generally hold that the term includes the entire enterprise, not just the route. [Cases: Shipping ⇨165.]

foreign voyage. A voyage to a port or place within the territory of a foreign nation. • If the voyage is from one port in a foreign country to another port in the same country, it is considered a foreign voyage. [Cases: Seamen ⇨18.]

freighting voyage. A voyage that involves a vessel's transporting cargo between terminal points.

trading voyage. A voyage that contemplates a vessel's touching and stopping at various ports to traffic in, buy and sell, or exchange commodities on the owners' and shippers' account.

W

W-2 form. (18c) (1948) Tax. A statement of earnings and taxes withheld (including federal, state, and local income taxes and FICA tax) during a given tax year. • The W-2 is prepared by the employer, provided to each employee, and filed with the Internal Revenue Service. Cf. W-4 FORM. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4849.]

W-4 form. (1955) Tax. A form indicating the number of personal exemptions an employee is claiming and that is used by the employer in determining the amount of income to be withheld from the employee's paycheck for federal-income tax purposes. — Also termed Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificate. Cf. w-2 FORM. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4849.]

wacreour (wah-kroor), n. [Law French] Hist. A vagrant.

Wade hearing. (1969) Criminal law. A pretrial hearing in which the defendant contests the validity of his or her out-of-court identification. • If the court finds that the identification was tainted by unconstitutional methods, the prosecution cannot use the identification and must link the defendant to the crime by other means. United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926 (1967). [Cases: Criminal Law ↷339.11(2).]

wadia (way-dee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Pledges.

wadset, n. Scots law. 1. A mortgage. — Also termed (in Roman law) fiducia. 2. A pledge or pawn.

wadset, vb. Scots law. 1. To mortgage. 2. To pledge.

wafer seal. See SEAL.

wafter (waf-tər), n. [Middle English “convoyer”] Hist. An English naval officer appointed under Edward IV to protect fishermen, esp. on the coast of Norfolk and Suffolk. — Also spelled waftor.

waga (way-gə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A measure of weight; a measure of goods.

wage, n. (usu. pl.) (14c) Payment for labor or services, usu. based on time worked or quantity produced; specif., compensation of an employee based on time worked or output of production. • Wages include every form of remuneration payable for a given period to an individual for personal services, including salaries, commissions, vacation pay, bonuses, and the reasonable value of board, lodging, payments in kind, tips, and any similar advantage received from the employer. An employer usu. must withhold income taxes from wages. Cf. SALARY. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷168.]

covered wages. Wages on which a person is required to pay social-security taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4374.]

current wages. Wages for the current period; wages that are not past due.

front wages. Prospective compensation paid to a victim of job discrimination until the denied position becomes available. [Cases: Civil Rights ↷1471, 1571, 1583(2).]

minimum wage. The lowest permissible hourly rate of compensation for labor, as established by federal statute and required of employers engaged in interstate commerce. 29 USCA § 206. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷2337.]

noncovered wages. Wages on which a person is not required to pay social-security taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4374.]

real wages. Wages representing the true purchasing power of the dollar, derived by dividing a price index into money wages.

wage, vb. 1. To engage in (a war, etc.). 2. Archaic. To give security for (a performance, etc.). Cf. GAGE.

Wage and Hour Division. The division of the Employment Standards Administration in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for enforcing the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Family and Medical Leave Act, the Employee Polygraph Protection Act, and other workplace-related statutes and regulations. — Abbr. WHD. See EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS ADMINISTRATION.

wage-and-hour law. A law (such as the federal Fair Labor Standards Act) governing minimum wages and maximum working hours for employees. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷2215.]

wage-and-price controls. A system of government-mandated maximum prices that can be charged for different goods and services or paid to various workers in different jobs.

wage-and-price freeze. See FREEZE.

wage assignment. 1. See attachment of wages under ATTACHMENT (1). 2. INCOME-WITHHOLDING ORDER. 3. ASSIGNMENT (2).

wage-assignment order. See INCOME-WITHHOLDING ORDER.

wage-earner's plan. See CHAPTER 13.

wager, n. (14c) 1. Money or other consideration risked on an uncertain event; a bet or gamble. 2. A promise to pay money or other consideration on the occurrence of an uncertain event. 3. See wagering contract under CONTRACT. [Cases: Gaming ↷1.] — wager, vb. — wagerer, n.

wagering contract. See CONTRACT.

wager of battle. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

wager of law. Hist. A method of proof in which a person defends against a claim by swearing that the claim is groundless, and by enlisting others (compurgators) to swear to the defendant's credibility. — Also termed gager del ley (gay-jør del lay); vadiatio legis (vad-ee-ay-shee-oh lee-jis). See COMPURGATION.

wager policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

wage-withholding order. See INCOME-WITHHOLDING ORDER.

Wagner Act. See NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT.

wagonage (wag-ə-nij). 1. Transportation by a wagon. 2. The fee for carriage by wagon. 3. A group of wagons.

waif, n. (14c) 1. An abandoned article whose owner is unknown, esp. something stolen and thrown away by the thief in flight, usu. through fear of apprehension. • At common law, if a waif, whether stolen or merely abandoned, was seized before the owner reclaimed it, the title vested in the Crown. The owner was thus punished for leaving the property or for failing to pursue the thief and attempting to recover the property. Today, however, the general rule is that a waif passes to the state in trust for the true owner, who may regain it by proving ownership.

"Waifs, bona waviata, are goods stolen, and waived or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. These are given to the king by the law, as a punishment upon the owner, for not himself pursuing the felon, and taking away his goods from him. And therefore if the party robbed do his diligence immediately to follow and apprehend the thief (which is called making fresh suit) or do convict him afterwards, or procure evidence to convict him, he shall have his goods again." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 286-87 (1765).

2. Hist. A homeless person, esp. a woman or child; a social outcast. See WAIVERY.

"[In the thirteenth century] a woman, though she cannot be outlawed, can be 'waived,' declared a 'waif,' and 'waiver' seems to have all the effects of outlawry." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 482 (2d ed. 1898).

wainable (way-nə-bəl), adj. Archaic. (Of land) plowable; tillable.

wainage (way-nij), n. Hist. 1. The plow, team, and other implements used by a person (esp. a villein) to cultivate the soil; instruments of husbandry. 2. Cultivated land or the profits from it. — Also termed wainagium; way-nagium (way-nay-jee-əm); (in sense 2) gainage.

wainbote. See BOTE (1).

wait-and-see principle. (1989) A modification to the rule against perpetuities, under which a court may determine the validity of a contingent future interest based on whether it actually vests within the perpetuities period, rather than on whether it possibly could have vested outside the period. — Also termed second-look doctrine. [Cases: Perpetuities ⇨ 4.]

waiting clerk. Hist. An officer who waits in attendance on the court of chancery. • The office of the waiting clerk was abolished in 1842 by the Court of Chancery Act. St. 5 & 6 Vict. ch. 103.

waiting period. (1897) A period that must expire before some legal right or remedy can be enjoyed or enforced. • For example, many states have waiting periods for the issuance of marriage licenses or the purchase of handguns.

waive (wayv), n. Archaic. A woman who has by her conduct deprived herself of the protection of the law; a female outlaw. • The term "outlaw" usu. referred only to a male. See OUTLAW (1), (2).

waive, vb. (14c) 1. To abandon, renounce, or surrender (a claim, privilege, right, etc.); to give up (a right or claim) voluntarily. • Ordinarily, to waive a right one must do it knowingly — with knowledge of the relevant facts. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 52.10.] 2. To refrain from insisting on (a strict rule, formality, etc.); to forgo. 3. Hist. To declare someone a waif. See WAIF (2).

waiver (way-vər), n. (17c) 1. The voluntary relinquishment or abandonment — express or implied — of a legal right or advantage; FORFEITURE (2) <waiver of notice>. • The party alleged to have waived a right must have had both knowledge of the existing right and the intention of forgoing it. Cf. ESTOPPEL. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 52.10.]

"The term waiver is one of those words of indefinite connotation in which our legal literature abounds; like a cloak, it covers a multitude of sins." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 419 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"'Waiver' is often inexactly defined as 'the voluntary relinquishment of a known right.' When the waiver is reinforced by reliance, enforcement is often said to rest on 'estoppel.' . . . Since the more common definition of estoppel is limited to reliance on a misrepresentation of an existing fact, reliance on a waiver or promise as to the future is sometimes said to create a 'promissory estoppel.' The common definition of waiver may lead to the incorrect inference that the promisor must know his legal rights and must intend the legal effect of the promise. But . . . it is sufficient if he has reason to know the essential facts." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 84 cmt. b (1979).

"Waiver is often asserted as the justification for a decision when it is not appropriate to the circumstances." Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law § 6.8, at 719 (1998).

"Although it has often been said that a waiver is 'the intentional relinquishment of a known right,' this is a misleading definition. What is involved is not the relinquishment of a right and the termination of the reciprocal duty but the excuse of the nonoccurrence of or a delay in the occurrence of a condition of a duty." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 8.5, at 561 (3d ed. 1999).

express waiver. (18c) A voluntary and intentional waiver. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 52.10(2).]

implied waiver. (18c) A waiver evidenced by a party's decisive, unequivocal conduct reasonably inferring the intent to waive. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 52.10(3).]

"An implied waiver may arise where a person has pursued such a course of conduct as to evidence an intention to waive a right, or where his conduct is inconsistent with any other intention than to waive it. Waiver may be inferred from conduct or acts putting one off his guard and leading him to believe that a right has been waived. Mere silence, however, is no waiver unless there is an obligation to speak." 28 Am. Jur. 2d Estoppel and Waiver § 160, at 845-46 (1966).

prospective waiver. (1889) A waiver of something that has not yet occurred, such as a contractual waiver of future claims for discrimination upon settlement of a lawsuit.

subject-matter waiver. A waiver that may result when a party voluntarily discloses a communication or privileged material about a particular topic to a third party. • A party's voluntary disclosure may lead a court to find an implied waiver that extends to all other communications relating to the same subject matter. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 219.]

waiver of notice. Parliamentary law. The waiver that occurs when a defective notice for a meeting is issued but every member attends and participates without objecting to the defect.

2. The instrument by which a person relinquishes or abandons a legal right or advantage <the plaintiff must sign a waiver when the funds are delivered>.

jury waiver. A form signed by a criminal defendant who relinquishes the right to have the trial conducted before a jury. [Cases: Jury ⇨ 29(6).]

lien waiver. A written and signed waiver of a subcontractor's mechanic's lien rights, usu. submitted to enable the owner or general contractor to receive a draw on a construction loan. [Cases: Mechanics' Liens ⇨ 208.]

waiver by election of remedies. (1873) A defense arising when a plaintiff has sought two inconsistent remedies and by a decisive act chooses one of them, thereby waiving the other. [Cases: Election of Remedies ⇨ 1.]

waiver hearing. See transfer hearing under HEARING.

waiver of claims and defenses. (1975) 1. The intentional relinquishment by a maker, drawer, or other obligor under a contract of the right to assert against the assignee any claims or defenses the obligor has against the assignor. [Cases: Assignments ⇨ 103; Bills and Notes ⇨ 314; Secured Transactions ⇨ 185.] 2. The contractual clause providing for such a waiver.

waiver of counsel. (1870) A criminal defendant's intentional relinquishment of the right to legal representation. • To be valid, a waiver of counsel must be made voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 1750-1757.]

waiver of defenses. Real estate. A document by which a mortgagor acknowledges that the mortgage is good and valid for the full amount of the mortgage note. • This document ensures that the mortgagor has no defenses to the mortgage. — Also termed estoppel certificate; no-setoff certificate; declaration of no defenses. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 415.]

waiver of exemption. (1846) 1. A debtor's voluntary relinquishment of the right to an exemption from a creditor's levy or sale of any part of the debtor's personal property by judicial process. [Cases: Exemptions ⇨ 89-99; Homestead ⇨ 169-176.] 2. The contractual clause expressly providing for such a waiver. [Cases: Exemptions ⇨ 92; Homestead ⇨ 170.]

waiver of immunity. (1883) The act of giving up the right against self-incrimination and proceeding to testify. See IMMUNITY (3). [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 305.]

waiver of notice. See WAIVER (1).

waiver-of-premium clause. Insurance. A provision for a waiver of premium payments after the insured has been disabled for a specified length of time, such as six months. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2035.]

waiver of protest. A relinquishment by a party to a negotiable instrument of the formality of protest in case of dishonor. See PROTEST (2). [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 422.]

waiver of service. A defendant's voluntary submission to the jurisdiction made by signing an acknowledgment of receipt of the petition and stating that he or she waives all further service. [Cases: Process ⇨ 67.]

waiver of tort. (1815) The election to sue in quasi-contract to recover the defendant's unjust benefit, instead of suing in tort to recover damages. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT. [Cases: Action ⇨ 28.]

"A person upon whom a tort has been committed and who brings an action for the benefits received by the tortfeasor is sometimes said to 'waive the tort.'" Restatement of Restitution § 525 (1937).

"'Waiver of tort' is a misnomer. A party only waives a tort in the sense that he elects to sue in quasi-contract to recover the defendant's unjust benefit rather than to sue in tort to recover damages; he has a choice of alternative remedies. But the tort is not extinguished. Indeed it is said that it is a sine qua non of both remedies that he should establish that a tort has been committed." Lord Goff of Chieveley & Gareth Jones, The Law of Restitution 605 (3d ed. 1986).

waivery. Hist. The act of putting a woman outside the protection of the law. • At common law, a woman could not be "outlawed" because she was not considered "in law" — that is, she could not undertake legal proceedings on her own. By Bracton's day, the effect of outlawing a woman was achieved by "waiving" her — the act being called waivery.

wakening. Scots law. The revival of an action in which no steps had taken for at least a year and a day.

walk, vb. (1958) Slang. 1. To be acquitted <though charged with three thefts, Robinson walked each time>. 2. To escape any type of real punishment <despite the seriousness of the crime, Selvidge paid only $750: he walked>.

walker, n. Hist. A forester who inspects an assigned area of land.

Walker Process claim. Patents. A counterclaim in an infringement suit, seeking a declaratory judgment that the patent is invalid because its owner defrauded the Patent Office. • The claim is based on antitrust law, alleging that the patentee wrongfully tried to monopolize a market. Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach.

& Chem., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S.Ct. 347 (1965). — Also termed Walker Process defense.

walkout. 1. STRIKE (1). 2. The act of leaving a work assignment, meeting, or other event as a show of protest. [Cases: Labor Relations ↷290.]

wall. An erection of stone, brick, or other material raised to varying heights, esp. inside or surrounding a building, for privacy, security, or enclosure.

ancient wall. A party wall that has stood for at least 20 years, thus giving each party an easement right to refuse to allow the other party to remove or substantially change the wall.

party wall. A wall that divides two adjoining, separately owned properties and that is shared by the two property owners as tenants in common. — Also termed common wall. [Cases: Party Walls ↷1-10.]

"There appears to be no precise legal definition of the term 'party wall.' Four possible meanings are as follows: (a) Tenancy in common: the two adjoining owners are tenants in common of the wall. (b) Divided: the wall is divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighbouring owners. (c) Divided with easements: the wall is divided as in (b), but each half is subject to an easement of support in favour of the owner of the other half. (d) Ownership subject to easement: the wall belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 303-04 (6th ed. 1993).

wallia (wahl-ee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A wall (such as a mound or bank) erected in marshy areas for protection against the sea; a seawall.

Walsh Act. A statute, originally enacted in 1926, giving federal courts the power to subpoena and compel the return, testimony, and (if requested) production of documents or other items of U.S. citizens or residents who are abroad. • The subpoena is available for criminal proceedings, including grand-jury proceedings. 28 USCA § 1783. [Cases: Grand Jury ↷36.2; Witnesses ↷6.]

Walsh-Healey Act. A federal law, enacted in 1936, stipulating that government contractors must: (1) pay their workers no less than the prevailing minimum wage; (2) observe the eight-hour day and 40-hour workweek (with time-and-a-half for work exceeding those hours); (3) employ no convict labor and no females under 18 or males under 16 years of age; and (4) maintain sanitary working conditions. 41 USCA §§ 35 et seq. — Also termed Public Contracts Act; Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

wampum (wom-pəm), n. Hist. Indian money consisting of shells, beads, or animal pelts. • In 1637, it became the first medium of exchange for the New England colonies by order of the General Court of Massachusetts, because England had not provided the colonies with a standard of exchange. The Court ordered that "wampampege should passe at 6 a penny for any sum under 12d." Wampum was used as the medium of exchange, esp. for small transactions, until 1652, when the General Court ordered the first metallic currency.

The last recorded exchange in wampum was in New York in 1701.

Wands test. Patents. A judicial test of "undue experimentation" for determining if a patent application's specification teaches one skilled in the art how to make and work the claimed invention. In re Wands, 858 F.2d 731 (Fed. Cir. 1988). • The test takes account of eight factors: (1) how much experimentation would be needed, (2) how much guidance is given, (3) whether there is a working example, (4) the nature of the invention, (5) the state of the prior art, (6) the level of skill of those in the art, (7) how predictable or unpredictable the art is, and (8) the breadth of the claims. The factors (often called Wands factors) are illustrative rather than mandatory. See UNDUE EXPERIMENTATION. [Cases: Patents ↷99.]

wanlass (wahn-ləs), Hist. An ancient form of tenure requiring the tenant to drive deer to a stand so that the lord can take a shot. — Also spelled wanlace.

wantage (wahn-tij), n. A deficiency of something; specif., a vessel's deficiency of not being full, due to leakage.

wanted person. A person sought by a law-enforcement agency because the person has escaped from custody or an arrest warrant has been issued for the person's arrest.

want of amicable demand. Louisiana law. A defensive pleading by a defendant who seeks to avoid, delay, or defeat the plaintiff's petition. • A defendant may (1) refuse to participate in the suit (a declinatory exception), (2) seek to delay the litigation in the suit (a dilatory exception), or (3) seek to dismiss or defeat the suit (a peremptory exception). See declinatory exception, dilatory exception, peremptory exception under EXCEPTION (1).

want of consideration. (18c) The lack of consideration for a contract. See CONSIDERATION (1). Cf. FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. [Cases: Contracts ↷54(1), 84; Sales ↷21.]

want of jurisdiction. A court's lack of power to act in a particular way or to give certain kinds of relief. • A court may have no power to act at all, may lack authority over a person or the subject matter of a lawsuit, or may have no power to act until the prerequisites for its jurisdiction have been satisfied. — Also termed lack of jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION. [Cases: Courts ↷39, 40; Federal Courts ↷30.]

want of prosecution. (17c) Failure of a litigant to pursue the case <dismissal for want of prosecution>. — Also termed lack of prosecution; no progress. — Abbr. w.o.p. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷1758; Pretrial Procedure ↷581.]

want of repair. (17c) A defective condition, such as a condition on a highway making it unsafe for ordinary travel. [Cases: Automobiles ↷252; Municipal Corporations ↷757(1).]

wanton (wahn-tən), adj. (14c) Unreasonably or maliciously risking harm while being utterly indifferent to the consequences. • In criminal law, wanton usu. connotes malice (in the criminal-law sense), while reckless does not. Cf. RECKLESS; WILLFUL. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷23; Negligence ↷275.]

"Wanton differs from reckless both as to the actual state of mind and as to the degree of culpability. One who is acting recklessly is fully aware of the unreasonable risk he is creating, but may be trying and hoping to avoid any harm. One acting wantonly may be creating no greater risk of harm, but he is not trying to avoid it and is indifferent to whether harm results or not. Wanton conduct has properly been characterized as 'vicious' and rates extreme in the degree of culpability. The two are not mutually exclusive. Wanton conduct is reckless plus, so to speak." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 879-80 (3d ed. 1982).

wanton and reckless misconduct. See wanton misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

wanton misconduct. See MISCONDUCT.

wanton negligence. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

wantonness, n. (14c) Conduct indicating that the actor is aware of the risks but indifferent to the results. • Wantonness usu. suggests a greater degree of culpability than recklessness, and it often connotes malice in criminal-law contexts. Cf. RECKLESSNESS. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷20, 23; Damages ↷87(1), 91.5(1); Negligence ↷275.] — wanton, adj.

wapentake (wəhp-ən-tayk or wəp-), n. [fr. Saxon waepen "weapons" + tac "touch"] Hist. 1. In some English counties, a division corresponding to the hundred or ward in other counties. See HUNDRED. 2. The court within such a division. 3. A bailiff who works in such a court.

war. 1. Hostile conflict by means of armed forces, carried on between nations, states, or rulers, or sometimes between parties within the same nation or state; a period of such conflict <the Gulf War>. • A state of war may also exist without armed conflict; for example, the treaty formally ending the World War II state of war between the United States and Japan was signed seven years after the fighting ended in 1945. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷1.] civil war. An internal armed conflict between people of the same nation; esp. (usu. cap.), the war from 1861 to 1865, resulting from the Confederate states' attempted secession from the Union.

imperfect war. A war limited in terms of places, persons, and things.

mixed war. A war between a nation and private individuals.

perfect war. A war involving an entire nation against another.

private war. A war between private persons.

public war. A war between two nations under authority of their respective governments.

solemn war. A war formally declared — esp. by public declaration — by one country against another.

war of aggression. A war that the attacking nation initiates for reasons other than self-defense. • This type of war is considered a crime against international peace under customary international law.

2. A dispute or competition between adversaries <fare wars are common in the airline industry>. 3. A struggle to solve a pervasive problem <America's war against drugs>.

warantizare. See WARRANTIZARE.

War Clause. (1943) U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11-14, giving Congress the power to declare war. — Also termed War Powers Clause. See WAR POWER. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷2.]

war contribution. Int'l law. An extraordinary payment imposed by an occupying power on the population of an occupied territory during wartime. — Often shortened to contribution. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷14.]

war crime. Conduct that violates international laws governing the conduct of international armed conflicts. • Examples of war crimes are the killing of hostages, abuse of civilians in occupied territories, abuse of prisoners of war, and devastation that is not justified by military necessity. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷11.]

ward. (15c) 1. A person, usu. a minor, who is under a guardian's charge or protection. See GUARDIAN (1). [Cases: Guardian and Ward ↷1, 9.5.]

permanent ward. (1927) A ward who has been assigned a permanent guardian, the rights of the natural parents having been terminated by a juvenile court. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ↷9.5; Infants ↷155.]

temporary ward. (1901) A minor who is under the supervision of a juvenile court but whose parents' parental rights have not been terminated. [Cases: Infants ↷154.1.]

ward-in-chancery. Hist. An infant under the superintendence of the chancellor.

ward of admiralty. A seaman — so called because of the legal view that a seaman, in contractual matters, should be treated as a beneficiary and the other contracting party as a fiduciary because of the perceived inequitability of their bargaining positions. [Cases: Seamen ↷1.]

ward of the state. (1832) A person who is housed by, and receives protection and necessities from, the government. — Also termed state's ward.

2. A territorial division in a city, usu. defined for purposes of city government. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↷40.] 3. The act of guarding or protecting something or someone. 4. Archaic. One who guards. 5. CASTLE-GUARD. — Formerly also termed warda.

warda (wɔr-də), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Wardship; guardianship.

wardage. See WARDPENNY.

warden. (13c) 1. A person in charge of something <game warden> <port warden>; esp., the official in charge of a prison, jail, or park <prison warden> <game warden>. [Cases: Prisons ↻390.] 2. SERGEANT-AT-ARMS (4).

warden of the cinque ports (singk ports). Hist. A magistrate with jurisdiction over the five cinque ports. • This office was created in imitation of the Roman policy of strengthening coasts against enemies. The warden, formally called the Lord Warden, presided over the Court of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, which was created in the 14th century and, over time, variously exercised civil, equity, and admiralty jurisdiction. — Formerly termed guardian of the cinque ports. See CINQUE PORTS.

ward holding. Scots law. The feudal tenure known in England as knight service. See KNIGHT SERVICE.

ward-horn. Hist. The duty of keeping watch and ward with a horn to blow in the event of a surprise. See WATCH AND WARD.

ward-in-chancery. See WARD.

wardite. Hist. A fine that a tenant was required to pay upon failing to fulfill the duty of castle-guard. See CASTLE-GUARD.

wardmote (word-moht). Hist. 1. A court maintained in every London ward. — Also termed wardmote court; inquest. 2. A meeting of a ward.

ward of admiralty. See WARD.

ward of the state. See WARD.

wardpenny, n. Hist. 1. Money paid in lieu of military service. 2. Money paid to the sheriff or castellans in exchange for watching and warding a castle. — Also termed wardage; warth.

wardship. (15c) 1. Guardianship of a person, usu. a minor. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ↻1.] 2. The condition of being a ward. 3. Hist. The right of the feudal lord to guardianship of a deceased tenant's minor heir until the heir reached the age of majority. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 3) guardage.

wardship in chivalry. Wardship as a feudal incident to the tenure of knight-service.

wardship in copyholds. Wardship by which the lord is guardian of an infant tenant by special custom.

wardstaff, n. Hist. A staff carried by an authority; esp., a constable's or watchman's staff.

wardwit, n. Hist. 1. An immunity or exemption from the duty of warding or contributing to warding. 2. A fine for failing to watch and ward. — Also termed warwit; wardwite.

warectare (wor-ək-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin "to let lie fallow"] Hist. To plow land in the spring and then let it lie fallow for a better wheat crop the next year.

warehouse. A building used to store goods and other items.

bonded warehouse. A special type of private warehouse used to store products subject to customs duties. See WAREHOUSE SYSTEM.

warehouse book. A book used by merchants to account for quantities of goods received, shipped, and in stock.

warehouseman. See WAREHOUSER.

warehouseman's lien. See warehouse's lien under LIEN.

warehouser. One who, as a business, keeps or stores the goods of another for a fee. • The transaction in which a warehouser engages is a bailment for the benefit of both parties, and the bailee is liable for ordinary negligence. — Also termed warehouseman. See BAILEE. [Cases: Warehousemen ↻3.]

warehouse receipt. A document evidencing title to goods stored with someone else; esp., a receipt issued by a person engaged in the business of storing goods for a fee. • A warehouse receipt, which is considered a document of title, may be a negotiable instrument and is often used for financing with inventory as security. See BAILMENT. [Cases: Warehousemen ↻11.]

warehouse's lien. See LIEN.

warehouse system. A system of maintaining bonded warehouses so that importers can either store goods for reexportation without paying customs duties or store the goods without paying duties until the goods are removed for domestic consumption. See bonded warehouse under WAREHOUSE.

warehouse-to-warehouse cover. Insurance coverage for goods protecting against damage at any time during the shipping process, including the loading and unloading of the goods. See COMPLETE-OPERATION RULE. Cf. COMING-TO-REST DOCTRINE. [Cases: Insurance ↻2681.]

warehousing. 1. A mortgage banker's holding of mortgages until the resale market improves. 2. A corporation's giving of advance notice of a tender offer to institutional investors, who can then buy stock in the target company before public awareness of the takeover inflates the stock's price. See TENDER OFFER.

warfare. 1. The act of engaging in war or military conflict. See WAR. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↻9.] 2. Loosely, the act of engaging in any type of conflict.

biological warfare. The use of biological or infectious agents in war, usu. by delivering them via airplanes or ballistic missiles. Cf. chemical warfare.

biochemical warfare. Warfare in which both biological and chemical weapons are used. See biological warfare, chemical warfare.

chemical warfare. Warfare in which deadly chemical agents, such as nerve gas, are used as weapons, usu. by delivering the chemicals via shells, missiles, or bombs. • Chemical weapons were first used in World War I. The first international treaty forbidding the use of both chemical and biological weapons, the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Biological Methods of Warfare was signed in 1925 and came into force in 1928. The United States is a signatory but with reservations. Cf. biological warfare.

economic warfare. 1. A hostile relationship between two or more countries in which at least one tries to damage the other's economy for economic, political, or military ends. 2. The collective measures that might be taken to achieve such ends. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷12, 14.]

guerrilla warfare. Hostilities that are conducted by individuals or small groups who are usu. not part of an organized army and who fight by means of surprise attacks, ambushes, and sabotage. • Formerly, it was thought that the hostilities had to be conducted in enemy-occupied territory. Typically, guerrilla warfare is carried out only when geographical conditions are favorable and when the civilian population is at least partly cooperative.

land warfare. Hostilities conducted on the ground, as opposed to at sea or in the air.

war-mongering propaganda. See PROPAGANDA.

WARN (worn). abbr. WORKER ADJUSTMENT AND RETRAINING NOTIFICATION ACT.

warning. (bef. 12c) The pointing out of a danger, esp. to one who would not otherwise be aware of it. • State and federal laws (such as 21 USCA § 825) require warning labels to be placed on potentially dangerous materials, such as drugs and equipment. [Cases: Products Liability ↷133.]

adequate warning. (1885) A warning that reasonably alerts a product's average user to a potential hazard, and the nature and extent of the danger. • Four elements have been articulated as comprising an adequate warning: (1) notice that a severe hazard exists, (2) a description of the hazard's nature, (3) a description of the hazard's possible consequences, and (4) instructions on how to avoid the hazard. In addition, the warning must be prominently displayed, and may have to illustrate the nature and severity of the hazard with pictographs. [Cases: Products Liability ↷133.]

warnistura (wor-nə-st[y]oor-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Furniture; provision.

warnoth (wor-noht). Hist. A defunct custom by which a tenant who failed to pay rent on a set day had to pay double the amount due, and on failing a second time had to pay triple (and so on).

war of aggression. See WAR.

war power. (18c) The constitutional authority of Congress to declare war and maintain armed forces (U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 11–14), and of the President to conduct war as commander-in-chief (U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1). [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷2.]

War Powers Clause. See WAR CLAUSE.

war-powers resolution. (1954) A resolution passed by Congress in 1973 (over the President's veto) restricting the President's authority to involve the United States in foreign hostilities without congressional approval, unless the United States or one of its territories is attacked. 50 USCA §§ 1541–1548. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷37.]

warrantice (wahr-ən-dis or -dɪs). Scots law. An obligation to indemnify the grantee or buyer of land if another person establishes a superior title and takes possession.

personal warrantice. An obligation to indemnify that binds the grantor and the grantor's heirs.

real warrantice. An obligation by which certain lands are made over as security for lands conveyed to the grantee and will be transferred to the grantee if he or she is evicted from the conveyed lands by a third party.

warrant, n. (14c) 1. A writ directing or authorizing someone to do an act, esp. one directing a law enforcer to make an arrest, a search, or a seizure.

administrative warrant. (1951) A warrant issued by a judge at the request of an administrative agency. • This type of warrant is sought to conduct an administrative search. See administrative search under SEARCH. — Also termed administrative search warrant. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ↷129.]

anticipatory search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

arrest warrant. (1894) A warrant, issued only on probable cause, directing a law-enforcement officer to arrest and bring a person to court. — Also termed warrant of arrest. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷215–220.]

bench warrant. (17c) A writ issued directly by a judge to a law-enforcement officer, esp. for the arrest of a person who has been held in contempt, has been indicted, has disobeyed a subpoena, or has failed to appear for a hearing or trial. • A bench warrant is often issued for the arrest of a child-support obligor who is found in contempt for not having paid the support obligation. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷263.]

blanket search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

border warrant. A writ of arrest or other warrant concerning debts owed, issued on one side of a national border for execution on the other side; esp., such a warrant issued on either side of the border between England and Scotland.

commitment warrant. See warrant of commitment.

death warrant. (18c) A warrant authorizing a warden or other prison official to carry out a death sentence. • A death warrant typically sets the time and place for a prisoner's execution. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↷1795.]

distress warrant. (18c) 1. A warrant authorizing a court officer to distrain property. See DISTRESS. 2. A writ allowing an officer to seize a tenant's goods for failing to pay rent due to the landlord. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷270(6).]

escape warrant. (18c) 1. A warrant directing a peace officer to rearrest an escaped prisoner. 2. Hist. A warrant granted to retake a prisoner who had escaped from a royal prison after being committed there. • The warrant was obtained on affidavit from the judge of the court in which the action had been brought, and was directed to all sheriffs throughout England, commanding them to retake and commit the prisoner to the nearest jail.

extradition warrant. (1876) A warrant for the return of a fugitive from one jurisdiction to another. Cf. rendition warrant. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ↻ 12, 36.]

fugitive warrant. (1900) A warrant authorizing law-enforcement officers to take into custody a person who has fled from one state to another to avoid prosecution or punishment.

general warrant. (16c) 1. Hist. A warrant issued by the English Secretary of State for the arrest of the author, printer, or publisher of a seditious libel, without naming the persons to be arrested. • General warrants were banned by Parliament in 1766.

"A practice had obtained in the secretaries office ever since the restoration, grounded on some clauses in the acts for regulating the press, of issuing general warrants to take up (without naming any person in particular) the authors, printers and publishers of such obscene or seditious libels, as were particularly specified in the warrant. When those acts expired in 1694, the same practice was inadvertently continued, in every reign and under every administration, except the four last years of queen Anne, down to the year 1763: when such a warrant being issued to apprehend the authors, printers and publishers of a certain seditious libel, its validity was disputed; and the warrant was adjudged by the whole court of king's bench to be void, in the case of Money v. Leach. Trin. 5 Geo. III. E.R. After which the issuing of such general warrants was declared illegal by a vote of the house of commons." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 288 n.i (1769).

2. A warrant giving a law-enforcement officer broad authority to search and seize unspecified places or persons; a search or arrest warrant that lacks a sufficiently particularized description of the person or thing to be seized or the place to be searched. • General warrants are unconstitutional because they fail to meet the Fourth Amendment's specificity requirements.

"But though there are precedents of general warrants to search all suspected places for stolen goods, these are not at common law legal, because it would be extremely dangerous to leave it to the discretion of a common officer to arrest what person, or search what houses he thinks fit. And in the great case of Money v. Leach, it was declared by Lord Mansfield, that a warrant to search for, and secure the person and papers of the author, printer and publisher of a libel, is not only illegal in itself, but is so improper on the face of it, that it will afford no justification to an officer acting under its sanction. And by two resolutions of the House of Commons such general warrants were declared to be invalid." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 66 (2d ed. 1826).

John Doe warrant. (1900) A warrant for the arrest of a person whose name is unknown. • A John Doe warrant may be issued, for example, for a person known by sight but not by name. This type of warrant is permitted in a few states, but not in federal practice.

justice's warrant. See peace warrant.

landlord's warrant. (1824) A type of distress warrant from a landlord to seize the tenant's goods, to sell them at public sale, and to compel the tenant to pay rent or observe some other lease stipulation. See DISTRAIN; DISTRESS.

no-knock search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

outstanding warrant. (1899) An unexecuted arrest warrant.

peace warrant. (18c) A warrant issued by a justice of the peace for the arrest of a specified person. — Also termed justice's warrant.

possessory warrant. (1850) A process, similar to a search warrant, used under certain circumstances by a plaintiff to search for and recover property wrongfully taken or held by another.

preliminary warrant. (1859) A warrant to bring a person to court for a preliminary hearing on probable cause.

probation-violation warrant. See violation warrant.

rendition warrant. (1881) A warrant requesting the extradition of a fugitive from one jurisdiction to another. Cf. extradition warrant. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ↻ 16, 36.]

search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

surreptitious-entry warrant. (1985) A warrant authorizing a law officer to enter and observe an ongoing criminal operation (such as an illegal drug lab).

tax warrant. (18c) An official process issued for collecting unpaid taxes and under which property may be seized and sold.

valid warrant. A warrant that is regular in form and is issued by a court, body, or official having both the authority to issue the warrant for the purpose stated and jurisdiction over the person named, all the requisite proceedings for its proper issuance having taken place. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ↻ 101.]

violation warrant. A warrant issued for the arrest of a convict who has violated the terms of probation, parole, or supervised release. — Also termed (narrowly) probation-violation warrant. [Cases: Pardon and Parole ↻ 81; Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 2012.]

warrant of arrest. See arrest warrant.

warrant of commitment. A warrant committing a person to custody. — Also termed commitment warrant.

warrant upon indictment or information. (1903) An arrest warrant issued at the request of the prosecutor for a defendant named in an indictment or information. Fed. R. Crim. P. 9.

2. A document conferring authority, esp. to pay or receive money.

deposit warrant. A warehouse receipt used as security for a loan.

dock warrant. See DOCK RECEIPT.

interest warrant. 1. An order by a corporation directing a bank to pay the interest due on a note, bond, or other debt to a corporate creditor. 2. A document by which a creditor, usu. a company, asks an insurer to pay all the interest due on the insurer's notes, bonds, or other debts held by the creditor.

municipal warrant. An order to draw money from a municipality's treasury for the payment of the municipality's expenses or debts. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↻895.]

tax-anticipation warrant. A warrant that is issued to raise public money and that is payable out of tax receipts when collected.

treasury warrant. An order in the form of a check on which government disbursements are paid. [Cases: United States ↻87.]

3. An order by which a drawer authorizes someone to pay a particular sum of money to another. [Cases: Bills and Notes ↻1.]

county warrant. A warrant drawn by a county official, directing the county treasurer to pay a sum of money out of county funds to bearer, to a named individual, or to the named individual's order. [Cases: Counties ↻163.]

4. Securities. An instrument granting the holder a long-term (usu. a five- to ten-year) option to buy shares at a fixed price. • It is commonly attached to preferred stocks or bonds. — Also termed stock warrant; subscription warrant. [Cases: Corporations ↻72.]

warrant, vb. (14) 1. To guarantee the security of (realty or personalty, or a person) <the store warranted the safety of the customer's jewelry>. 2. To give warranty of (title); to give warranty of title to (a person) <the seller warrants the property's title to the buyer>. [Cases: Covenants ↻45, 67.] 3. To promise or guarantee <warrant payment>.

"Even today lawyers use the verb 'to warrant' meaning to promise without necessarily indicating that the promise is a warranty." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 145 n.1 (3d ed. 1981).

4. To justify <the conduct warrants a presumption of negligence>. 5. To authorize <the manager warranted the search of the premises>.

warrant arrest. See lawful arrest under ARREST.

Warrant Clause. (1962) The clause of the Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution requiring that warrants be issued only on probable cause. [Cases: Arrest ↻63.1; Searches and Seizures ↻23, 24.]

warrant creditor. See CREDITOR.

warranted arrest. See ARREST.

warranted search. See SEARCH.

warrantee (wor-ən-tee or wahr-). A person to whom a warranty is given; esp., a person who receives a written warranty. • The term also sometimes applies to the beneficiary of an implied warranty.

warrantia chartae. See DE WARRANTIA CHARTAE.

warrantia custodiae (wə-ran-shee-ə kə-stoh-dee-ee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ for a purchaser of land held in knight's service against the seller (and heirs), who had warranted that the land was free of wardship when a wardship was later claimed.

warrantia diei. See DE WARRANTIA DIEI.

warrantizare (wor-ən-tə-zair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To warrant by covenant (in a deed of conveyance) to defend the grantee's title and possession. — Also spelled warantizare.

warrantless arrest. See ARREST.

warrantless search. See SEARCH.

warrant of arrest. See arrest warrant under WARRANT (1).

warrant of attorney. 1. POWER OF ATTORNEY (1). 2. Archaic. Written authority given by a client to a lawyer to appear in court and to confess judgment in favor of a specified party. • It usu. instructed the attorney not to bring any action, seek a writ of error, or file a bill in equity that might delay the judgment. The warrant was typically given as security for an obligation on which judgment was authorized. Cf. CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT; COGNOVIT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻2396; Judgment ↻43.]

"A warrant of attorney was not required to be under seal, though it generally was so. In order to guard against any imposition in procuring debtors to execute warrants of attorney or cognovits in ignorance of the effect of such instruments, it is provided that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or cognovit actionem, given by any person, shall not be of any force, unless there is present some attorney of one of the superior courts on behalf of such person, expressly named by him and attending at his request, to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognovit, before the same is executed . . ." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 125 (11th ed. 1881).

warrant of commitment. See WARRANT (1).

warrant of confession. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

warrant officer. 1. OFFICER (2). 2. SERGEANT-AT-ARMS (4).

warrantor (wor-ən-tor or -tər or wahr-). (15c) A person who gives a written warranty or becomes obligated under an implied warranty. See 15 USCA § 2301(5).

warrant recall, n. A procedure for removing from government computers information about canceled warrants in order to avoid repeated or mistaken arrests.

warrant to sue and defend. Hist. 1. Written authority given by a client to a lawyer to authorize commencement or defense of a lawsuit. 2. A special warrant from the Crown authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend on the party's behalf.

warrant upon indictment or information. See WARRANT (1).

warranty (wor-ən-tee or wahr-), n. (14c) 1. Property. A covenant by which the grantor in a deed promises to secure to the grantee the estate conveyed in the deed, and pledges to compensate the grantee if the grantee is evicted by someone having better title. • The covenant is binding on the grantor's heirs. Historically, a warrantor was expected to turn over land. But cash compensation could be substituted. See COVENANT (4). Cf. quitclaim deed under DEED. [Cases: Covenants ⇨45, 67.]

collateral warranty. (16c) A warranty that is made by a stranger to the title, and that consequently runs only to the covenantee and not with the land. [Cases: Covenants ⇨45, 67.]

general warranty. (17c) A warranty against the claims of all persons. [Cases: Covenants ⇨47, 67.]

lineal warranty. Hist. A warranty existing when an heir derives title to land from the warrantor; a warranty from the same ancestor as the one from whom the land derived.

special warranty. (17c) A warranty against any person's claim made by, through, or under the grantor or the grantor's heirs. [Cases: Covenants ⇨48, 67.]

2. Contracts. An express or implied promise that something in furtherance of the contract is guaranteed by one of the contracting parties; esp., a seller's promise that the thing being sold is as represented or promised. • Although a court may treat a misrepresentation as an implied warranty, in general a warranty differs from a representation in four principal ways: (1) a warranty is conclusively presumed to be material, while the burden is on the party claiming breach to show that a representation is material; (2) a warranty must be strictly complied with, while substantial truth is the only requirement for a representation; (3) a warranty is an essential part of a contract, while a representation is usu. only a collateral inducement; and (4) an express warranty is usu. written on the face of the contract, while a representation may be written or oral. Cf. CONDITION (2), (3); GUARANTEE (1). [Cases: Contracts ⇨205.5; Sales ⇨246-288.5.]

"[T]wo points must be borne in mind. In the first place, the words 'condition' and 'warranty' are not invariably kept as distinct as accuracy of definition demands; and in insurance law especially 'warranty' is very commonly used in the sense ascribed to 'condition' In the second place, the injured party, if he chooses to waive his right to repudiate the contract on breach of a condition, may still bring an action for such damages as he has sustained." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 223 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"The terms 'warranty' and 'condition' are generally used interchangeably, for all practical purposes, and they refer to representations or promises by the insureds, incorporated into the contract itself, on the truthfulness or fulfillment of which it is agreed that the rights of the insured shall depend. The primary differences between a mere representation and a warranty or condition are (1) while the insurer has the burden of proving the materiality of a misrepresentation before it will be grounds for avoidance, the materiality of a warranty or condition is conclusively presumed; and (2) while a representation will not be grounds for avoidance as long as it is substantially true, a warranty or condition must be strictly complied with in order to preclude avoidance. As with the majority view in representations, good or bad faith on the part of the insured is irrelevant." John F. Dobbyn, Insurance Law in a Nutshell 201 (3d ed. 1996).

as-is warranty. (1976) A warranty that goods are sold with all existing faults. See AS IS. [Cases: Sales ⇨267.]

construction warranty. (1968) A warranty from the seller or building contractor of a new home that the home is free of structural, electrical, plumbing, and other defects and is fit for its intended purpose. [Cases: Contracts ⇨205.35(2).]

deceptive warranty. (1975) A warranty containing false or fraudulent representations or promises. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨204.]

express warranty. (17c) A warranty created by the overt words or actions of the seller. • Under the UCC, an express warranty is created by any of the following: (1) an affirmation of fact or promise made by the seller to the buyer relating to the goods that becomes the basis of the bargain; (2) a description of the goods that becomes part of the basis of the bargain; or (3) a sample or model made part of the basis of the bargain. UCC § 2-313. [Cases: Contracts ⇨205.10; Sales ⇨259.]

"An express warranty arises from the contract itself, from the 'dickered' aspects of the individual bargain. Any affirmation or promise relating to the goods, any description of the goods, and any sample or model of the goods becomes an express warranty if it is 'part of the basis of the bargain.'" 1 Julian B. McDonnell & Elizabeth J. Coleman, Commercial and Consumer Warranties ¶ 1.02[1], at 1-7 (1991).

extended warranty. (1936) An additional warranty often sold with the purchase of consumer goods (such as appliances and motor vehicles) to cover repair costs not otherwise covered by a manufacturer's standard warranty, by extending either the standard-warranty coverage period or the range of defects covered. — Also termed extended service warranty; extended service contract. [Cases: Sales ⇨279.]

full warranty. A warranty that fully covers labor and materials for repairs. • Under federal law, the warrantor must remedy the consumer product within a reasonable time and without charge after notice of a defect or malfunction. 15 USCA § 2304. See MAGNUSON-MOSS WARRANTY ACT. Cf. limited warranty. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨204.]

implied warranty. (18c) An obligation imposed by the law when there has been no representation or promise; esp., a warranty arising by operation of law because of the circumstances of a sale, rather than by the seller's express promise. [Cases: Contracts ⇨205.15; Sales ⇨262.5.]

implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. (1923) A warranty — implied by law if the seller has reason to know of the buyer's special purposes for the item — that the item is suitable for those purposes. — Sometimes shortened to warranty of fitness. [Cases: Contracts ↻205.15(3); Sales ↻273(1).]

"Those unfamiliar with the differences between the warranty of merchantability (fitness for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used) and the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose often confuse the two; one can find many opinions in which the judges used the terms 'merchantability' and 'fitness for a particular purpose' interchangeably. Such confusion under the Code is inexcusable." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 9-10, at 527 (4th ed. 1995).

implied warranty of habitability. (1900) In a residential lease, a warranty from the landlord to the tenant that the leased property is fit to live in and that it will remain so during the term of the lease. — Also termed covenant of habitability. • This warranty usu. applies to residential property, but a few courts, esp. in Utah, have applied it to commercial property as well. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻125(1).]

implied warranty of merchantability. (1896) A merchant seller's warranty — implied by law — that the thing sold is fit for its ordinary purposes. • Under the UCC, an implied warranty of merchantability arises whenever a merchant sells goods unless the agreement expressly provides otherwise. UCC 2-314. — Sometimes shortened to warranty of merchantability. [Cases: Contracts ↻205.15(3); Sales ↻272.]

"The implied warranty of merchantability attaches when the seller is a merchant with respect to the goods involved in the exchange. Accordingly, the product must meet certain standards; it must pass without objection in the trade under the contract description and it must be fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used. The concepts of marketability, operability, and repairability have emerged as varying criteria for merchantable goods." 1 Julian B. McDonnell & Elizabeth J. Coleman, Commercial and Consumer Warranties ¶ 1.02[1], at 1-7 (1991).

limited warranty. (1871) A warranty that does not fully cover labor and materials for repairs. • Under federal law, a limited warranty must be clearly labeled as such on the face of the warranty. See MAGNUSON-MOSS WARRANTY ACT. Cf. full warranty. [Cases: Sales ↻279.]

personal warranty. (18c) A warranty arising from an obligation to pay all or part of the debt of another.

presentment warranty. (1965) An implied promise concerning the title and credibility of an instrument, made to a payor or acceptor upon presentment of the instrument for payment or acceptance. UCC §§ 3-417, 3-418. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻149, 174; Bills and Notes ↻296, 326.]

transfer warranty. (1964) 1. An implied promise concerning the title and credibility of an instrument, made by a transferor to a transferee and, if the transfer is by indorsement, to remote transferees. UCC §§ 3-417, 4-207. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻149, 174; Bills and Notes ↻296, 326.] 2. A warranty made by a transferee of a document of title upon a transfer of the document for value to the immediate transferee. UCC § 7-507. [Cases: Carriers ↻58.]

warranty ab initio (ab i-nish-ee-oh). (12006) An independent subsidiary promise whose breach does not discharge the contract, but gives to the injured party a right of action for the damage sustained as a result of the breach. • Ab initio means that the warranty existed from the contract's inception. Cf. warranty ex post facto. [Cases: Contracts ↻318; Sales ↻282.]

warranty against infringement. A merchant's warranty that the goods being sold or licensed do not violate any patent, copyright, trademark, or other intellectual-property claim. • The warranty does not arise if the buyer provides the seller with the specifications for the goods purchased. Under § 2-312(3) of the Uniform Commercial Code, the warranty against infringement is a part of the warranty of title unless it is explicitly disclaimed.

warranty ex post facto (eks pohst fak-toh). (1961) A broken condition for which the injured party could void the contract, but decides instead to continue the contract, with a right of action for the broken condition (which amounts to a breached warranty). • The warranty is ex post facto because it was not originally part of the contract. It arises only after the injured party elects to continue the contract, thereby reducing the broken condition to a breached warranty. See CONDITION (2). Cf. warranty ab initio. [Cases: Contracts ↻318; Sales ↻282.]

warranty of actual title. See warranty of title.

warranty of assignment. (18c) An assignor's implied warranty that he or she (1) has the rights assigned, (2) will do nothing to interfere with those rights, and (3) knows of nothing that impairs the value of the assignment. [Cases: Assignments ↻97.]

warranty of authorship. Copyright. An author's contractual warranty that the work is an original work by that author. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻49.]

warranty of fitness. See implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose.

warranty of merchantability. See implied warranty of merchantability.

warranty of title. (18c) A warranty that the seller or assignor of property has title to that property, that the transfer is rightful, and that there are no liens or other encumbrances beyond those that the buyer or assignee is aware of at the time of contracting. • This warranty arises automatically whenever anyone sells goods. — Also termed warranty of actual title. [Cases: Covenants ↻38-48, 62-67; Sales ↻263.]

written warranty. (1807) A warranty made in writing; specif., any written affirmation or promise by a supplier of a consumer product to a buyer (for purposes other than resale), forming the basis of the bargain and providing that the material or workmanship is free of defects or will be repaired or replaced free of charge if the product fails to meet the required specifications. 15 USCA § 2301. [Cases: Sales ↻260.]

Y2K warranty. See Y2K WARRANTY.

3. Insurance. A pledge or stipulation by the insured that the facts relating to the person insured, the thing insured, or the risk insured are as stated. [Cases: Insurance ↷2967, 3036.]

affirmative warranty. A warranty — express or implied — that facts are as stated at the beginning of the policy period. • An affirmative warranty is usu. a condition precedent to the policy taking effect. [Cases: Insurance ↷2967.]

executory warranty. A warranty that arises when an insured undertakes to perform some executory stipulation, such as a promise that certain acts will be done or that certain facts will continue to exist. [Cases: Insurance ↷3036.]

promissory warranty. A warranty that facts will continue to be as stated throughout the policy period, such that a failure of the warranty provides the insurer with a defense to a claim under the policy. — Also termed continuing warranty. [Cases: Insurance ↷3036.]

warranty clause. 1. A contractual clause containing a warranty. 2. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease by which the lessor guarantees that title is without defect and agrees to defend it. • If the warranty is breached, the lessor may be held liable to the lessee to the extent that the lessor has received payments under the lease. Presence of a warranty in an oil-and-gas lease may also cause after-acquired interests to pass from the lessor to the lessee by application of estoppel by deed. [Cases: Estoppel ↷23; Mines and Minerals ↷73.1(5).] warranty deed. See DEED.

warren (wɔr-ən or wəhr-ən). 1. A place for the preservation of certain wildlife (such as pheasants, partridges, or rabbits). 2. A privilege to keep wildlife or game in a warren. 3. The area to which the privilege extends.

free warren. A warren privilege giving the grantee the sole right to kill the wildlife to the extent of the grantee's warren area. — Also termed libera warrena.

"Free warren is a . . . franchise, erected for preservation or custody . . . of beasts and fowls of warren; which being ferae naturae, every one had a right to kill as he could; but upon the introduction of the forest laws . . . these animals being looked upon as royal game and the sole property of our savage monarchs, this franchise of free warren was invented to protect them; by giving the grantee a sole and exclusive power of killing such game . . . on condition of his preventing other persons. A man therefore that has the franchise of warren is in reality no more than a royal gamekeeper; but no man, not even a lord of a manor, could by common law justify sporting on another's soil, or even on his own, unless he had the liberty of free warren." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 38-39 (1766).

war-risk insurance. See INSURANCE.

Warsaw Convention. Int'l law. A treaty (to which the United States is a party) negotiated in Warsaw, Poland, in 1929, consisting of uniform rules governing claims made for personal injuries arising out of international air travel. Cf. MONTREAL AGREEMENT. [Cases: Carriers ↷307; Treaties ↷8.]

"Under the [Warsaw] Convention . . . air carriers are absolutely liable up to a preset monetary ceiling for any accident in which a passenger suffers bodily injury or death, as long as the accident took place on board the aircraft or in the process of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking. The Convention limits the liability of the carrier for each passenger to the sum of 125,000 francs, unless the carrier and passenger by special contract agree to a higher limit of liability, or unless it can be established that the carrier has been guilty of 'willful misconduct.' The Convention contains a two-year time limitation for bringing suit, and also absolves the carrier from liability upon a showing of due care on its part." 8A Am. Jur. 2d Aviation § 149, at 160-61 (1997).

warship. Int'l law. A ship commissioned by a nation's military, operating with a military command and crew and displaying the nation's flag or other external marks indicating its country of origin. • Under international maritime laws, warships are not subject to many of the safety and environmental regulations that apply to shipping vessels and passenger ships.

warth. See WARDPENNY.

warwit. See WARDWIT.

war zone. Int'l law. A designated area, on land or at sea, within which the rights of neutral countries are not respected by belligerent countries. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷32.]

wash, n. 1. A situation in which two effects offset each other. • For example, if an event produces gross income and also a deduction in the same amount so that taxable income is unchanged, the event creates a wash. 2. The shallow part of a river or the arm of a sea; the sand, rocks, and gravel washed down by a mountain stream and deposited on level land near the mouth of a canyon.

wash sale. See SALE.

wash transaction. See wash sale under SALE.

waste, n. (15c) 1. Permanent harm to real property committed by a tenant (for life or for years) to the prejudice of the heir, the reversioner, or the remainderman. • In the law of mortgages, any of the following acts by the mortgagor may constitute waste: (1) physical damage, whether intentional or negligent, (2) failure to maintain and repair, except for repair of casualty damage or damage caused by third-party acts, (3) failure to pay property taxes or governmental assessments secured by a lien having priority over the mortgage, so that the payments become delinquent, (4) the material failure to comply with mortgage covenants concerning physical care, maintenance, construction, demolition, or casualty insurance, or (5) keeping the rents to which the mortgagee has the right of possession. — Also termed devastation; vastum. [Cases: Waste ↷1.]

"The old action of waste was a mixed action, being founded in part on the statute of Gloucester (A.D. 1278), which provided that 'he which shall be attainted of waste shall lose the thing wasted, and moreover shall recompense thrice as much as the waste shall be taxed at.' The action was to recover the land in which waste had been done and the treble damages. The statute of Gloucester was imported into this country, but many variant statutes now regulate the subject." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 13 (2d ed. 1899).

active waste. See commissive waste.

affirmative waste. See commissive waste.

ameliorating waste (ə-meel-yə-ray-ting). (1927) A lessee's unauthorized change to the physical character of a lessor's property — technically constituting waste, but in fact resulting in improvement of the property. • Generally, equity will not enjoin such waste. — Also termed ameliorative waste.

commissive waste (kə-mis-iv). (1868) Waste caused by the affirmative acts of the tenant. — Also termed active waste; affirmative waste; voluntary waste. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 55(2).]

double waste. Hist. The destruction occurring when a tenant having a duty to repair allows a house to deteriorate, and then unlawfully cuts down timber to repair it.

economic waste. See ECONOMIC WASTE.

equitable waste. (1842) Waste that abuses a privilege of nonimpeachability at common law, for which equity will restrain the commission of willful, destructive, malicious, or extravagant waste; esp., waste caused by a life tenant who, although ordinarily not responsible for permissive waste, flagrantly damages or destroys the property. [Cases: Waste ⇨ 4.]

"A life tenant with the benefit of an express exemption from liability for voluntary waste will nevertheless be restrained in equity from committing acts of flagrant destruction to the premises; hence the (seemingly paradoxical) term, 'equitable waste'. A life tenant who has engaged in, or who threatens to engage in, reprehensible acts of voluntary waste will not be permitted unconscientiously to shield behind his legal right to commit waste to the detriment of those next entitled to enjoyment of the property, for this would be to abuse the legal right." Peter Butt, Land Law 114-15 (2d ed. 1988).

permissive waste. (17c) A tenant's failure to make normal repairs to property so as to protect it from substantial deterioration. [Cases: Waste ⇨ 3.] voluntary waste. (16c) Waste resulting from some positive act of destruction. See commissive waste. [Cases: Waste ⇨ 1.]

"Voluntary waste. This involves some positive act of injury to the property, diminishing its value for the person next in succession; it is a deliberate and active change to the property. Examples are altering the character of premises by demolishing internal walls and fittings or opening and working a mine on the land (but not working a mine already opened, for the pre-existence of the mine shows an intention on the part of the grantor that the profits from the mine are to be enjoyed by the life tenant). A life tenant is liable for voluntary waste, unless the instrument conferring the interest expressly exempts liability for voluntary waste." Peter Butt, Land Law 114 (2d ed. 1988).

2. Refuse or superfluous material, esp. that remaining after a manufacturing or chemical process <toxic waste>.

hazardous waste. (1974) Waste that — because of its quantity, concentration, or physical, chemical, or infectious characteristics — may cause or significantly contribute to an increase in mortality or otherwise harm human health or the environment. 42 USCA § 6903(5). — Also termed hazardous substance. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨ 427.]

toxic waste. (1964) Hazardous, poisonous substances, such as dichlorodiphenyltrichloroethane (DDT). • Most states regulate the handling and disposing of toxic waste, and several federal statutes (such as the Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA), 42 USCA §§ 9601-9657) regulate the use, transportation, and disposal of toxic waste. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨ 427.]

waste book. A merchant's book for making rough entries of transactions before posting them into a journal. — Also termed blotter.

wasted vote. See VOTE (1).

wastewater. See WATER.

wasting asset. See ASSET.

wasting property. See PROPERTY.

wasting trust. See TRUST.

wastor, n. Hist. A type of thief, classified in a statute of Edward III with marauding vagabonds and burglars who entered premises by lifting door latches. 5 Edw. 3, ch. 14.

watch, n. Maritime law. 1. A division of a ship's crew <port or starboard watch>. [Cases: Collision ⇨ 77, 81, 99.] 2. The division of the day into time periods of service by officers and the crew <four-hour watch>.

watch, vb. Hist. To stand guard during the night.

watch and ward, n. Hist. A feudal duty that some tenants had to keep guard through continuous vigilance. • The phrase denotes keeping guard by night (watch) and by day (ward). — Also termed watching and warding.

water. 1. The transparent liquid that is a chemical compound of hydrogen and oxygen (H₂O). 2. A body of this liquid, as in a stream, river, lake, or ocean.

backwater. Water in a stream that, because of a dam or obstruction, cannot flow forward and sometimes flows back. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ⇨ 53, 159-175.]

coast water. Tidewater navigable by an ocean vessel; all water opening directly or indirectly into the ocean and navigable by a vessel coming in from the ocean. — Also termed coastal water.

developed water. Water brought to the surface and made available for use by the party claiming the water rights.

diffused surface water. Water, such as rainfall runoff, that collects and flows on the ground but does not form a watercourse. • Surface water is usu. subject to different regulations from water flowing in a watercourse. — Often shortened to surface water. See COMMON-ENEMY DOCTRINE; WATERCOURSE. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ⇨ 115.]

excess water. Water that is flowing in a stream in addition to what may be termed adjudicated waters; any water not needed for the reasonable beneficial uses of those having priority rights. — Also termed surplus water.

floodwater. Water that escapes from a watercourse in large volumes and flows over adjoining property in no regular channel.

foreign water. Water belonging to another nation or subject to another jurisdiction.

groundwater. Water found in layers of permeable rock or soil.

inland waters. See INTERNAL WATERS.

internal waters. See INTERNAL WATERS.

navigable water. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

navigable water of the United States. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

percolating water. Water that oozes or seeps through the soil without a defined channel (such as rainwater or other water that has lost its status as part of a stream). • Percolating water usu. constitutes part of the land on which it is found. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻101.]

posted water. (usu. pl.) A body of water that is reserved for the exclusive use of the person who owns the land surrounding it. • The owner secures the exclusive use by posting a notice prohibiting others from using the water.

private water. Nonnavigable water owned and controlled by one or more individuals and not subject to public use. • If a body of water is small and of little or no practical value for general public use, it is considered private.

public water. Water adapted for purposes of navigation or public access.

subterranean water. Water that lies or flows beneath the earth's surface and that is not artificially confined. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻99.]

surface water. 1. Water lying on the surface of the earth but not forming part of a watercourse or lake. • Surface water most commonly derives from rain, springs, or melting snow. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻115.] 2. See diffused surface water.

surplus water. 1. Water running off irrigated ground; water not consumed by the irrigation process. 2. See excess water.

territorial waters. The waters under a state's or nation's jurisdiction, including both inland waters and surrounding sea (traditionally within three miles of the coastline). — Also termed territorial sea; marine belt; maritime belt.

tidewater. See TIDEWATER.

wastewater. 1. Water that escapes from the canals, ditches, or other receptacles of the lawful claimant; water that is not used by the appropriator and is permitted to run off the appropriator's property. 2. Water that is left over, esp. after a chemical or manufacturing process.

water bayley (bay-lee). Hist. An officer (mentioned in the colony laws of New Plymouth in A.D. 1671) who primarily collects dues for fish taken out of the colony's waters.

waterboarding. A form of torture in which water is poured over the face of a supine, immobilized victim whose head is pulled back so that the victim cannot avoid inhaling water, and thus experiences the sensation of drowning. • In some variations, fabric or plastic may be draped over the victim's face or the victim may be gagged before the water is poured. See TORTURE.

watercourse. (16c) A body of water, usu. of natural origin, flowing in a reasonably definite channel with bed and banks. • The term includes not just rivers and creeks, but also springs, lakes, and marshes in which such flowing streams originate or through which they flow. — Also termed waterway. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻38.]

"Once water joins a watercourse it becomes subject to state control; in appropriation states it becomes available for appropriation to private uses according to state law . . . [A] watercourse could be defined to include not only rivers and lakes, but every tiny brook flowing into them, all the gullies through which water flows to the brooks, the snowpack and rainfall that feed them, and the evaporating or transpiring water in the process of forming clouds. But we need not require scientists to trace water to such remote sources because it would be beyond the ability of governments to regulate these sources. Legal definitions are intended to define a point beyond which a state does not regulate water use. Usually that point is when water is not in a 'natural stream'." David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 106-107 (3d ed. 1997).

ancient watercourse. A watercourse in a channel that has existed from time immemorial.

artificial watercourse. A man-made watercourse, usu. to be used only temporarily. • If the watercourse is of a permanent character and has been maintained for a sufficient length of time, it may be considered a natural watercourse to which riparian rights can attach. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻168.]

"An artificial waterway or stream may, under some circumstances, have the characteristics and incidents of a natural watercourse. In determining the question, three things seem generally to be taken into consideration by the courts: (1) whether the way or stream is temporary or permanent; (2) the circumstances under which it was created; and (3) the mode in which it has been used and enjoyed." 78 Am. Jur. 2d Waters § 196, at 644 (1975).

natural watercourse. A watercourse with its origin in the forces of nature. • A natural watercourse does not include surface water, which often flows intermittently and in an indefinite channel. In addition, a natural stream is distinguished from an artificial ditch or canal, which is typically not the subject of riparian rights. See RIPARIAN RIGHTS; WATER. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↻38.]

water district. See DISTRICT.

watered stock. See STOCK.

waterfront, n. Land or land with buildings fronting a body of water.

watergage, n. 1. A seawall. 2. An instrument used to measure the height of water.

watergavel, n. Hist. A fee paid for a benefit (such as fishing) obtained from a body of water.

watermark. 1. A mark indicating the highest or lowest point to which water rises or falls.

high-water mark. 1. The shoreline of a sea reached by the water at high tide. • The high-water mark is usu. computed as a mean or average high tide and not as the extreme height of the water. 2. In a freshwater lake created by a dam in an unnavigable stream, the highest point on the shore to which the dam can raise the water in ordinary circumstances. 3. In a river not subject to tides, the line that the river impresses on the soil by covering it long enough to deprive it of agricultural value. — Also termed high-water line.

low-water mark. 1. The shoreline of a sea marking the edge of the water at the lowest point of the ordinary ebb tide. 2. In a river, the point to which the water recedes at its lowest stage.

2. The transparent design or symbol seen when paper is held up to the light, usu. to indicate the genuineness of the document or the document's manufacturer.

water ordeal. See ordeal by water under ORDEAL.

waterpower. 1. The force obtained by converting water into energy. 2. The riparian owner's right consisting of the fall in the stream as it passes over or through the riparian owner's land; the difference of the level between the surface where the stream first touches one's land and the surface where the water leaves the land. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↷42.]

water right. (often pl.) (18c) The right to use water from a natural stream or from an artificial canal for irrigation, power, domestic use, and the like; RIPARIAN RIGHT. — Also termed aquatic right. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷39; Waters and Water Courses ↷40–47, 141, 168.]

waterscape, n. (1842) An aqueduct or passage for water.

waterway. See WATERCOURSE.

waveson (wayv-sən), n. Hist. Goods that float on the sea after a shipwreck. Cf. FLOTSAM; JETSAM; LAGAN (1).

wax scot (wak skot), n. Hist. A duty on wax candles used in churches, usu. paid twice a year. — Also termed cerage (seer-ij); ceratium (si-ray-shee-əm).

way. (bef. 12c) 1. A passage or path. 2. A right to travel over another's property. See RIGHT-OF-WAY. [Cases: Easements ↷1.]

private way. (17c) 1. The right to pass over another's land. [Cases: Easements ↷1.] 2. A way provided by local authorities primarily to accommodate particular individuals (usu. at the individual's expense) but also for the public's passage. [Cases: Private Roads ↷1.]

way of necessity. See implied easement under EASEMENT.

waybill. Maritime law. A document acknowledging the receipt of goods by a carrier or by the shipper's agent and the contract for the transportation of those goods. • Unlike a bill of lading, a waybill is not a document of title and is nonnegotiable. — Abbr. WB. Cf. BILL OF LADING. [Cases: Shipping ↷106(1).]

air waybill. A waybill for goods shipped by air. Cf. overseas bill of lading under BILL OF LADING. [Cases: Carriers ↷51, 153.]

way-going crop. A grain crop, formerly sown by a tenant during a tenancy (esp. in Pennsylvania), that did not ripen until after expiration of the lease. • In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the tenant was entitled to the crop. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷139(2).]

way-leave, n. (15c) 1. A right-of-way (usu. created by an express grant) over or through land for the transportation of minerals from a mine or quarry. 2. The royalty paid for such a right.

waynagium (way-nay-jee-əm). See WAINAGE.

way of necessity. See implied easement under EASEMENT.

ways-and-means committee. (1840) A legislative committee that determines how money will be raised for various governmental purposes. [Cases: United States ↷23.]

WB. abbr. WAYBILL.

WC. abbr. WORKERS' COMPENSATION.

WCT. abbr. WIPO COPYRIGHT TREATY.

W.D. abbr. Western District, in reference to U.S. judicial districts.

weak mark. See descriptive trademark under TRADEMARK.

weak trademark. See descriptive trademark under TRADEMARK.

wealreaf (weel-reef), n. Archaic. The robbery of a dead person in a grave.

wealth. 1. A large quantity of something. 2. The state of having abundant financial resources; affluence.

wealth maximization. A situation resulting from a change in the allocation of resources if the change benefits the winner — i.e., the one who benefits from the change — more than it harms the loser. • A situation in which all possible wealth-maximizing changes have occurred is described as Kaldor-Hicks efficient or as being potentially Pareto superior. See PARETO OPTIMALITY; PARETO SUPERIORITY.

weapon. (bef. 12c) An instrument used or designed to be used to injure or kill someone. [Cases: Weapons ↷4, 8.]

concealed weapon. (1833) A weapon that is carried by a person but that is not visible by ordinary observation. [Cases: Weapons ↷10.]

dangerous weapon. (17c) An object or device that, because of the way it is used, is capable of causing serious bodily injury. [Cases: Weapons ↷8.]

deadly weapon. (16c) Any firearm or other device, instrument, material, or substance that, from the manner in which it is used or is intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death. • In some states, the definition encompasses the likelihood of causing either death or serious physical injury. — Also termed lethal weapon. Cf. DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITY. [Cases: Assault and Battery ↷56.]

deadly weapon per se. (1872) A weapon that is deadly in and of itself or would ordinarily result in death by its use . — Also termed per se deadly weapon. [Cases: Assault and Battery ↷56.]

lethal weapon. See deadly weapon.

nondeadly weapon. See LESS-LETHAL.

nonlethal weapon. See LESS-LETHAL.

weapon of mass destruction. (usu. pl.) A weapon that is intended to kill human beings, without discriminating between combatants and noncombatants, on a massive scale. • Among the most frequently cited examples are nuclear weapons and chemical weapons. — Abbr. WMD.

wear, n. [fr. Saxon were "a taking"] Hist. A dam made of stakes interlaced by twigs of willows that are placed across a river to more easily accommodate the netting of fish. — Also termed weir.

wear and tear. (17c) Deterioration caused by ordinary use; the depreciation of property resulting from its reasonable use <the tenant is not liable for normal wear and tear to the leased premises>. — Also termed fair wear and tear; natural wear and tear. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷55, 160.]

"'Fair wear' is the deterioration caused by the reasonable use of the premises; 'fair tear' is the deterioration caused by the ordinary operation of natural forces. A tenant's repairing covenant commonly exempts the tenant from the obligation to repair damage characterisable as 'fair wear and tear' (sometimes called 'reasonable wear and tear'). In the absence of such an exempting provision, a covenant to repair requires the repairing of damage characterisable as fair wear and tear. Where a covenant to repair exempts the tenant from liability for 'fair wear and tear', he is not responsible for deterioration or dilapidation caused by 'the reasonable use of the house by the tenant and the ordinary operation of natural forces.'" Peter Butt, Land Law 256 (2d ed. 1988).

Webb-Pomerene Act. A federal law, originally enacted in 1918, that provides a qualified exemption for an export business against the prohibitions of the antitrust laws. 15 USCA §§ 61 et seq.

"The Webb-Pomerene Act was passed to aid and encourage our manufacturers and producers to extend our foreign trade. Congress believed that American firms needed the power to form joint export associations in order to compete with foreign cartels, but while Congress was willing to create an exemption from the antitrust laws to serve this narrow purpose, the exemption created by the Webb-Pomerene Act was carefully hedged in to avoid substantial injury to domestic interests. Organization under the Webb-Pomerene Act does not give an export association the right to agree with foreign competitors to fix prices . . . or establish exclusive markets . . ." 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 262, at 298 (1996).

website-user agreement. See POINT-AND-CLICK AGREEMENT.

web-wrap agreement. See POINT-AND-CLICK AGREEMENT.

wedding. See MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

wedge principle. (1951) The argument that relaxation of a constitutionally imposed restraint under specific circumstances may justify further relaxation in broader circumstances. • This principle is most often raised in the context of legalized human euthanasia. But it has frequently been invoked in other contexts, such as the right to protection from unreasonable search and seizure. — Also termed slippery-sloped principle; parade-of-horrors objection.

"[T]here is the familiar argument from the 'wedge principle,' which is used to deny the possibility of looking at particular circumstances in applying moral rules." Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 315 (1957).

wedlock. The state of being married; matrimony.

week. 1. A period of seven consecutive days beginning on either Sunday or Monday. 2. Any consecutive seven-day period. [Cases: Time ↷6.]

weekend sentence. See intermittent sentence under SENTENCE.

week-work. Hist. In feudal times, the obligation of a tenant to work two to four days in every week for his lord during the greater part of the year, and four or five during the summer months. See VILLEIN SERVICE.

wehading. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

weighage (way-ij). A duty or other payment required in return for weighing merchandise.

weight. A measure of heaviness; a measure of the quantity of matter. [Cases: Weights and Measures ↷3.]

gross weight. The total weight of a thing, including its contents and any packaging.

net weight. The total weight of a thing, after deducting its container, its wrapping, and any other extraneous matter. — Also termed neat weight.

weighted vote. See VOTE (1).

weight of the evidence. (17c) The persuasiveness of some evidence in comparison with other evidence <because the verdict is against the great weight of the evidence, a new trial should be granted>. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION. Cf. MANIFEST WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE; PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷549; Evidence ↷584.]

Weingarten right. Labor law. A union member's right to have a union representative present during an employment meeting that the member reasonably believes will result in disciplinary action. NLRB v. J. Weingarten, Inc., 420 U.S. 251, 95 S.Ct. 959 (1975). •

In July 2000, the NLRB extended Weingarten rights to nonunion employees. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻1469(1).]

weir. See WEAR.

welching. See WELSHING.

welfare. (14c) 1. Well-being in any respect; prosperity.

general welfare. (17c) The public's health, peace, morals, and safety.

public welfare. (16c) A society's well-being in matters of health, safety, order, morality, economics, and politics.

2. A system of social insurance providing assistance to those who are financially in need, as by providing food stamps and family allowances. — Also termed (historically) poor relief. [Cases: Agriculture ↻2.6; Social Security and Public Welfare ↻4.]

corporate welfare. Governmental financial assistance given to a large company, usu. in the form of a subsidy.

Welfare Clause. See GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE.

welfare plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

welfare state. (1894) A nation in which the government undertakes various social insurance programs, such as unemployment compensation, old-age pensions, family allowances, food stamps, and aid to the blind or deaf. — Also termed welfare-regulatory state.

well, adj. Marine insurance. (Of a vessel) in good condition; safe and sound <the vessel was warranted well on January 1>.

well, adv. (bef. 12c) In a legally sufficient manner; unobjectionable <well-pleaded complaint>.

well, n. A hole or shaft sunk into the earth to obtain a fluid, such as water, oil, or natural gas.

limited-capacity well. An oil or gas well that is limited to producing only a portion of its monthly allowable because of market demand.

stripper well. An oil or gas well that produces only small quantities. • In some states, such as Kansas and Illinois, stripper wells are common.

well-completion clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease specifying that a lessee who starts drilling before the lease terminates has the right to complete the well and to maintain the lease if the drilling achieves production. See OPERATIONS CLAUSE. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↻78.1(9).]

well-knowing, adj. (17c) Intentional . • This term was formerly used in a pleading to allege scienter. See SCIENTER.

well-pleaded complaint. See COMPLAINT.

welshing. (1857) 1. The act or an instance of evading an obligation, esp. a gambling debt. 2. The common-law act of larceny in which one receives a deposit to be paid back with additional money depending on the outcome of an event (such as a horse race) but at the time of the deposit the depositor intends to cheat and defraud the depositor by absconding with the money.

• Although this term is sometimes thought to be a slur against those hailing from Wales, etymologists have not been able to establish this connection. Authoritative dictionaries record the origin of the term as being unknown. — Also termed welching. — welsh, vb. — welsher, n.

Welsh mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

wend, n. Hist. A large section of land; a perambulation; a circuit.

wer. See BLOOD MONEY (1).

wergild (wǣr-gild). Hist. The fixed value of a person's life, being the amount that a homicide's kindred must pay to the kindred of the slain person so as to avoid a blood feud. — Also spelled wergeld; weregild; wehrgeld. See EFFUSIO SANGUINIS; LEODES.

West Australian plan. See instant-runoff voting under VOTING.

Westlaw. A West Group database for computer-assisted legal research, providing online access to legal resources, including federal and state caselaw, statutes, regulations, legal treatises, legal periodicals, and general and business news. — Abbr. WL.

Westminster Confession of Faith (west-min-stər). Hist. A document containing a statement of the religious doctrines of the Presbyterian Church, originating at a conference of British and continental Protestant divines at Westminster in 1643. • It was adopted by the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland and the Scottish Parliament, so becoming the basis of the Scottish Presbyterian Church. — Sometimes shortened to Westminster Confession.

Westminster the First, Statute of. Hist. An English statute divided into 51 chapters (later correlating to separate acts of Parliament), including provisions (1) protecting the property of the church from the violence and spoliation of the Crown and nobles; (2) providing for the freedom of popular elections; (3) enforcing the rules contained in Magna Carta against excessive fines; (4) enumerating and correcting the abuses of tenures (esp. concerning marriages of wards); (5) regulating the levying of tolls; (6) correcting and restraining the powers of the royal escheator and other officers; (7) amending the criminal law (esp. by classifying rape as a most grievous, though not capital, offense); and (8) making criminal and civil procedures more expeditious and less costly. 3 Edw. (1275).

West Point. See UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

West-Saxon law. Hist. A system of rules introduced by the West Saxons and one of the three principal legal systems prevailing in England in the beginning of the 11th century. • It was observed primarily in southern English counties from Kent to Devonshire. — Also termed West-Saxon lage. See MERCENLAGE; DANELAW.

private wharf. One that can be used only by its owner or lessee. [Cases: Wharves ↷4.]

public wharf. One that can be used by the public. [Cases: Wharves ↷4.]

wharfage (worf-ij), n. Hist. 1. The fee paid for landing, loading, or unloading goods on a wharf. [Cases: Wharves ↷15.] 2. The accommodation for loading or unloading goods on a wharf.

wharfinger (wor-fin-jər), n. Hist. The owner or occupier of a wharf; one who keeps a wharf to receive merchandise for forwarding or delivery to a consignee. [Cases: Wharves ↷20(1).]

wharfing out, right of. See RIGHT OF WHARFING OUT.

Wharton's rule ([h]wɔr-tən). (1940) Criminal law. The doctrine that an agreement by two or more persons to commit a particular crime cannot be prosecuted as a conspiracy if the crime could not be committed except by the actual number of participants involved. • But if an additional person participates so as to enlarge the scope of the agreement, all the actors may be charged with conspiracy. The doctrine takes its name from the influential criminal-law author Francis Wharton (1820–1889). — Also termed Wharton rule; concert-of-action rule. [Cases: Conspiracy ↷28(1).]

"Wharton's Rule applies only to offenses that require concerted criminal activity, a plurality of criminal agents. In such cases, a closer relationship exists between the conspiracy and the substantive offense because both require collective criminal activity. The substantive offense therefore presents some of the same threats that the law of conspiracy normally is thought to guard against, and it cannot automatically be assumed that the Legislature intended the conspiracy and the substantive offense to remain as discrete crimes upon consummation of the latter. Thus, absent legislative intent to the contrary, the Rule supports a presumption that the two merge when the substantive offense is proved. . . . More important, as the Rule is essentially an aid to the determination of legislative intent, it must defer to a discernible legislative judgment." Iannelli v. United States, 420 U.S. 770, 785–86, 95 S.Ct. 1284, 1293–94 (1975).

WHD. abbr. WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION.

wheel. Hist. 1. An instrument of torture used in medieval Europe, consisting of a wheel or cross on which a criminal was bound with arms and legs extended, while the criminal's bones were broken one by one with an iron bar, usu. until death. 2. The torture itself.

wheelage ([h]wēel-ij), n. Hist. A duty or toll for a vehicle to pass over certain property.

wheel conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

whereabouts, n. (17c) The general locale where a person or thing is <her whereabouts are unknown> <the Joneses' present whereabouts is a closely guarded secret>. • As the examples illustrate, this noun, though plural in form, may be construed with either a plural or a singular verb. — whereabouts, adv. & conj.

whereas, conj. (14c) 1. While by contrast; although <McWilliams was stopped at 10:08 p.m. wearing a green hat, whereas the assailant had been identified at 10:04 p.m. wearing a black hat>. 2. Given the fact that; since <Whereas, the parties have found that their 1994 agreement did not adequately address incidental expenses . . . ; and Whereas, the parties have now decided in an equitable sharing of those expenses . . . ; Now, Therefore, the parties agree to amend the 1994 agreement as follows . . . >. • In sense 2, whereas is used to introduce contractual recitals and the like, but modern drafters increasingly prefer a simple heading, such as "Recitals" or "Preamble," and in that way avoid the legalistic whereases. — whereas (recital or preamble), n.

whereas clause. 1. See PREAMBLE (1). 2. See RECITAL (2).

whereat, conj. (14c) 1. At or toward which <the point whereat he was aiming>. 2. As a result of which; whereupon <Pettrucione called Bickley a scurrilous name, whereat a fistfight broke out>.

whereby, conj. (13c) By which; through which; in accordance with which <the treaty whereby the warring nations finally achieved peace>.

wherefore, premises considered. (1867) For all these reasons; for the reason or reasons mentioned above. • The phrase is often used to begin the final paragraph of a motion, judgment, contract, or agreement.

wherefrom, conj. (14c) From which <the students sent two faxes to the president's office, wherefrom no reply ever came>.

wherein, conj. (14c) 1. In which; where <the jurisdiction wherein Lynn practices>. 2. During which <they listened intently at the concert, wherein both of them became convinced that the composer's "new" work was a fraud>. 3. How; in what respect <Fallon demanded to know wherein she had breached any duty>. — wherein, adv.

whereof, conj. (13c) 1. Of what <Judge Wald knows whereof she speaks>. 2. Of which <citations whereof even the most responsible are far afield from the true issue>. 3. Of whom <judges whereof only the most glowing words might be said>.

whereon, conj. (13c) On which <the foundation whereon counsel bases this argument>. — Also termed whereupon.

whereto, conj. (14c) To what place or time <at first, Campbell did not know whereto he was being taken>. — Also termed whereunto. — whereto, adv.

whereupon, conj. (14c) 1. WHEREON <the precedent whereupon the defense bases its argument>. 2. Soon after and as a result of which; and then .

wherewith, conj. (14c) By means of which <the plaintiff lacked a form of action wherewith to state a compensable claim>.

whim. A passing fancy; an impulse <the jury was instructed to render a verdict based solely on the evidence, not on a whim>.

whipping, n. A method of corporal punishment formerly used in England and a few American states, consisting of inflicting long welts on the skin, esp. with a whip.

whipsaw strike. See STRIKE.

whisper stock. See STOCK.

whistleblower, n. (1970) An employee who reports employer wrongdoing to a governmental or law-enforcement agency. • Federal and state laws protect whistleblowers from employer retaliation. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻775; Officers and Public Employees ↻66. — whistleblowing, n.

whistleblower act. (1984) A federal or state law protecting employees from retaliation for properly disclosing employer wrongdoing such as violating a law or regulation, mismanaging public funds, abusing authority, or endangering public health or safety. • Federal laws containing whistleblower provisions include the Whistleblower Protection Act (5 USCA § 1211), the Occupational Safety and Health Act (29 USCA § 660), CERCLA (42 USCA § 9610), and the Air Pollution and Control Act (42 USCA § 7622). [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻775; Officers and Public Employees ↻69.7.]

Whiteacre. (17c) A fictitious tract of land used in legal discourse (esp. law-school hypotheticals) to discuss real-property issues. See BLACKACRE.

white bonnet. Scots law. A fictitious bidder at an auction; a shill.

white book. 1. Hist. (cap.) ALBUS LIBER. 2. A government report bound in white, common esp. in European and papal affairs.

whitcapping. (1900) Criminal law. The criminal act of threatening a person — usu. a member of a minority group — with violence in an effort to compel the person either to move away or to stop engaging in a certain business or occupation. • Whitcapping statutes were originally enacted to curtail the activities of the Ku Klux Klan. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ↻25.1.]

white-collar crime. (1940) A nonviolent crime usu. involving cheating or dishonesty in commercial matters. • Examples include fraud, embezzlement, bribery, and insider trading.

whitehorse case. (1971) Slang. A reported case with facts virtually identical to those of the instant case, so that the disposition of the reported case should determine the outcome of the instant case. — Also termed horse case; goose case; gray mule case; red-cow case. Cf. ON ALL FOURS.

white knight. A person or corporation that rescues the target of an unfriendly corporate takeover, esp. by acquiring a controlling interest in the target corporation or by making a competing tender offer. — Also termed friendly suitor. See TAKEOVER. Cf. CORPORATE RAIDER.

Whiteley rule. See FELLOW-OFFICER RULE.

White model. Labor law. A method for determining whether a union member's state-law claim against the employer is preempted by federal law, by focusing on whether state law permits the claim to be waived by a private contract. • In Lingle v. Norge Division of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 U.S. 399, 108 S.Ct. 1877 (1988), the Supreme Court held that a union member's state-law retaliatory-discharge claim was not preempted by the Labor-Management Relations Act because the claim could be resolved without interpreting the collective-bargaining agreement. There are at least two models for applying the Lingle test: the White model, which focuses on whether the claim is negotiable or non-negotiable (that is, whether state law allows the claim to be waived by a private contract) and the Marcus model, which focuses on the independence of the claim in relation to the collective-bargaining agreement. Under the White model, all negotiable claims (those waivable by private contract) are necessarily preempted because their resolution will require an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. A nonnegotiable claims (one that state law does not permit to be waived by private contract) will be preempted only if its resolution requires an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. The White model is named for the author of the law-review article in which it was proposed. Rebecca Homer White, Section 301's Preemption of State Law Claims: A Model for Analysis, 41 Ala. L. Rev. 377 (1990). See LINGLE TEST. Cf. MARCUS MODEL.

white rent. Hist. A feudal rent paid in silver, rather than in work, grain, or money baser than silver. Cf. BLACK RENT.

white slavery. The practice of forcing a female (or, rarely, a male) to engage in commercial prostitution. • Trafficking in persons for prostitution is prohibited by the Mann Act (18 USCA §§ 2421–2424). [Cases: Prostitution ↻15.]

White Slave Traffic Act. See MANN ACT.

Whitsunday. See quarter day under DAY.

whole blood. See full blood under BLOOD.

whole law. The law applied by a forum court in a multistate or multinational case after referring to its own choice-of-law rules. [Cases: Action ↻17.]

whole life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

wholesale, n. The sale of goods or commodities usu. to a retailer for resale, and not to the ultimate consumer. Cf. RETAIL. — wholesale, vb. — wholesale, adj.

wholesale arrest. See dragnet arrest under ARREST.

wholesale dealer. One who sells goods in gross to retail dealers rather than selling in smaller quantities directly to consumers.

wholesale price. See PRICE.

wholesale price index. See PRODUCER PRICE INDEX.

wholesaler. One who buys large quantities of goods and resells them in smaller quantities to retailers or other merchants, who in turn sell to the ultimate consumer.

whole-stature rule. The principle of statutory construction that a statute should be considered in its entirety, and that the words used within it should be given their ordinary meanings unless there is a clear indication to the contrary. [Cases: Statutes ↻188, 205.]

wholly, adv. Not partially; fully; completely.

wholly and permanently disabled, adj. Insurance. (Of an insured) completely and continuously unable to perform work for compensation or profit. [Cases: Insurance ↻2035, 2553.]

wholly dependent, adj. Workers' compensation. (Of a person) deriving full support from a worker's wages. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↻412-486.]

wholly destroyed, adj. Insurance. (Of a building) so damaged that it is no longer capable of being classified as a building, although some parts may remain intact. [Cases: Insurance ↻2171.]

wholly disabled, adj. Insurance. (Of a person) unable to perform the substantial and material acts necessary to carry on a business or occupation in the customary and usual manner. [Cases: Insurance ↻2561.]

whorehouse. See BROTHEL.

widow, n. A woman whose husband has died and who has not remarried. [Cases: Death ↻31(6); Descent and Distribution ↻52(1); Dower and Curtesy ↻1-118; Executors and Administrators ↻180.]

widower, n. A man whose wife has died and who has not remarried.

widower's allowance. See spousal allowance under ALLOWANCE (1).

widow's allowance. See spousal allowance under ALLOWANCE (1).

widow's election. See RIGHT OF ELECTION.

wifa (wi-fə), n. [Old English] Hist. A mark or sign; esp., a landmark showing exclusive occupation or to prohibit an entry.

wife. A married woman; a woman who has a lawful spouse living. [Cases: Bigamy ↻1.] common-law wife. 1. The wife in a common-law marriage; a woman who contracts an informal marriage with a spouse and then holds herself out to the community as being married to that spouse. See common-law marriage under MARRIAGE (1). 2. Archaic. Loosely, a concubine. [Cases: Marriage ↻22.]

plural wife. One of two or more women married simultaneously to the same spouse in a polygamous marriage. [Cases: Marriage ↻22.]

wife beating. See spousal abuse under ABUSE.

wife's settlement. See EQUITY TO A SETTLEMENT.

wild animal. See ANIMAL.

wildcat strike. See STRIKE.

wild creature. See wild animal under CREATURE.

wild deed. See DEED.

Wild's Case, Rule in. See RULE IN WILD'S CASE.

wilful. See WILLFUL.

will, n. (bef. 12c) 1. Wish; desire; choice <employment at will>. 2. The legal expression of an individual's wishes about the disposition of his or her property after death; esp., a document by which a person directs his or her estate to be distributed upon death <there was no mention of his estranged brother in the will>. — Also termed testament; will and testament; (archaically) testamentary instrument. [Cases: Wills ↻1-202.] — will, vb.

"The word 'will' has two distinct meanings. The first, and strict, meaning is metaphysical, and denotes the sum of what the testator wishes, or 'wills,' to happen on his death. The second, and more common, meaning is physical, and denotes the document or documents in which that intention is expressed." Anthony R. Mellows, The Law of Succession 6 (3d ed. 1977).

ambulatory will. (1909) A will that can be altered during the testator's lifetime. [Cases: Wills ↻78.]

antenuptial will. See prenuptial will.

attested will. A will that has been signed by a witness. [Cases: Wills ↻113.]

bogus will. An unauthentic will, esp. one involving fraud or unauthorized changes.

closed will. See mystic will.

conditional will. A will that depends on the occurrence of an uncertain event for the will to take effect.

• Most jurisdictions hold a conditional will valid even though the testator's death does not result from or on the occasion of the condition mentioned in the will. The courts generally hold that the condition is the inducement for making the will rather than a condition precedent to its operation. See Eaton v. Brown, 193 U.S. 411, 24 S.Ct. 487 (1904); In re Will of Cohen, 491 A.2d 1292 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1985). Cf. contingent will. [Cases: Wills ↻80.]

conjoint will. See joint will.

contingent will. A will that takes effect only if a specified event occurs. Cf. conditional will. [Cases: Wills ↻80.]

counter will. See mutual will.

double will. See mutual will.

duplicate will. (1855) A will executed in duplicate originals by a testator who retains one copy and gives the second copy to another person. • The rules applicable to wills apply to both wills, and upon application for probate, both copies must be tendered into the registry of the probate court. [Cases: Wills ↻175.]

holographic will (hol-ə-graf-ik). (1850) A will that is handwritten by the testator. • Such a will is typically unattested. Holographic wills are rooted in the civil-law tradition, having originated in Roman law and having been authorized under the Napoleonic Code. French and Spanish settlers introduced holographic wills in America, primarily in the South and West. Today they are recognized in about half the states. — Also termed olographic will. See HOLOGRAPH. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 130–135.]

inofficious will. See inofficious testament under TESTAMENT.

international will. A will that is executed according to formalities provided in an international treaty or convention, and that will be valid although it may be written in a foreign language by a testator domiciled in another country. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 238–246.]

invalid will. (18c) A will that fails to make an effective disposition of property.

joint and mutual will. (1841) A single will executed by two or more people — to dispose of property they own separately, in common, or jointly — requiring the surviving testator to dispose of the property in accordance with the terms of the will. • A joint and mutual will is drafted to be contractually binding on the survivor. The word “joint” indicates the form of the will. The word “mutual” describes the substantive provisions. — Also termed joint and reciprocal will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 56–68, 100.] joint and reciprocal will. See joint and mutual will.

joint will. (18c) A single will executed by two or more testators, usu. disposing of their common property by transferring their separate titles to one devisee. — Also termed conjoint will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 56–68, 100.]

last will. (16c) The most recent will of a deceased; the instrument ultimately fixing the disposition of real and personal property at the testator's death. — Also termed last will and testament.

“A will is the disposition of real and personal property to take effect after the death of the testator. When the will operates upon personal property, it is sometimes called a testament, and when upon real estate, a devise; but the more general and the more popular denomination of the instrument, embracing equally real and personal estate, is that of last will and testament.” 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *501 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

last will and testament. See last will.

living will. See LIVING WILL.

lost will. An executed will that cannot be found at the testator's death. • Its contents can be proved by parol evidence in many jurisdictions. But the overwhelming majority of American jurisdictions follow the common-law presumption of revocation if a will is proved to have been in the possession of the testator and has since been lost. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 234, 293(4), 302(8).]

mancipatory will (man-sip-i-tor-ee). Roman law. In early and classical law, a formal will sealed by seven witnesses and submitted to the praetor. See TESTAMENTUM.

mariner's will. See soldier's will.

mutual will. (usu. pl.) (1837) One of two separate wills in which two persons, usu. a husband and wife, establish identical or similar testamentary provisions disposing of their estates in favor of each other. • It is also possible (though rare) for the testators to execute a single mutual will, as opposed to separate ones. And it is possible (though, again, rare) for more than two parties to execute mutual wills. — Also termed reciprocal will; counter will; double will; mutual testament. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 56–68.]

mystic will. Civil law. A secret will signed by the testator, sealed and delivered to a notary in the presence of three to seven witnesses, accompanied by the testator's declaration that it is a valid will. • The notary is then required to indorse on the envelope containing the will a statement of all the facts surrounding the transaction, and this is signed by the notary and all the witnesses. — Also termed mystic testament; secret will; secret testament; closed will; closed testament; sealed will; sealed testament. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 124.]

nonintervention will. A will that authorizes an independent executor. See independent executor under EXECUTOR.

notarial will. A will executed by a testator in the presence of two witnesses and a notary public.

nuncupative will (nəŋg-kyə-pay-tiv or nəŋg-kyoo-pə-tiv). (18c) An oral will made in contemplation of imminent death, esp. from a recent injury. • Nuncupative wills are invalid in most states. Even in states allowing them, the amount that may be conveyed is usu. limited by statute. Traditionally, only personal property may be conveyed. — Also termed oral will; unwritten will; verbal will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 136–150.]

nuncupative will by public act. Hist. Louisiana law. A will dictated by the testator to a notary in the presence of a specified number of witnesses. • The notary had to read the will back to the testator. The testator and the witnesses then signed the will. If the testator was physically unable to sign, another person could sign in the testator's presence on the testator's behalf. The number of required witnesses varied depending on the circumstances. This type of will was abolished in 1997. See La. Civ. Code art. 1574. — Also termed nuncupative testament by public act.

olographic will. See holographic will.

oral will. (1853) A will made by the spoken declaration of the testator and usu. dependent on oral testimony for proof. See nuncupative will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 136–150.]

parliamentary will. Slang. The legislation that governs the distribution of an intestate's property. ● The term arose because the legislature effectively makes an intestate's will by passing statutes regulating descent and distribution. The terms of the parliamentary will are gathered from the statutes in effect when the intestate died.

postnuptial will (pohst-nəp-shəl). A will executed after marriage.

pourover will (por-oh-vər). (1946) A will giving money or property to an existing trust. Cf. pourover trust under TRUST.

prenuptial will (pree-nəp-shəl). (1914) A will executed before marriage. ● At common law, marriage automatically revoked a spouse's will, but modern statutes usu. provide that marriage does not revoke a will (although divorce does). But if this marriage was not contemplated by the will and there is nothing otherwise on its face to indicate that the testator intentionally left nothing to any future spouse, the pretermitted spouse may be entitled to a special forced share of the estate. Uniform Probate Code § 2-508. — Also termed antenuptial will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 60.] reciprocal will. See mutual will.

sealed will. See mystic will.

seaman's will. See soldier's will.

secret will. See mystic will.

self-proved will. (1963) A will proved by a self-proving affidavit. See self-proving affidavit under AFFIDAVIT. ● This method of proof, recognized in a growing number of states, eliminates the practical problems of obtaining the live testimony of witnesses. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 113.]

soldier's will. A soldier's informal oral or written will that is usu. valid despite its noncompliance with normal statutory formalities, as long as the soldier was in actual service at the time the will was made. — Also termed seaman's will; mariner's will; military testament; soldier's and sailor's will.

undutiful will. Civil law. See unnatural will.

unnatural will. (1854) A will that distributes the testator's estate to strangers rather than to the testator's relatives, without apparent reason. — Also termed (in civil law) undutiful will. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 82.]

unofficial will. See inofficial testament under TESTAMENT.

unsolemn will. Civil law. A will in which an executor is not named.

unwritten will. See nuncupative will.

verbal will. See nuncupative will.

will and testament. See WILL.

will contest. Wills & estates. The litigation of a will's validity, usu. based on allegations that the testator lacked capacity or was under undue influence. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 203-434.]

willful, adj. (13c) Voluntary and intentional, but not necessarily malicious. — Sometimes spelled wilful. Cf. WANTON. — willfulness, n.

"The word 'wilful' or 'wilfully' when used in the definition of a crime, it has been said time and again, means only intentionally or purposely as distinguished from accidentally or negligently and does not require any actual impropriety; while on the other hand it has been stated with equal repetition and insistence that the requirement added by such a word is not satisfied unless there is a bad purpose or evil intent." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 875-76 (3d ed. 1982).

"Almost all of the cases under [Bankruptcy Code § 523(a)(6)] deal with the definition of the two words 'willful' and 'malicious.' Initially one might think that willful and malicious mean the same thing. If they did, Congress should have used one word and not both. Most courts feel compelled to find some different meaning for each of them." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-30, at 531 (1993).

willful and malicious injury. See INJURY.

willful and wanton misconduct. See MISCONDUCT.

willful and wanton negligence. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

willful blindness. (1927) Deliberate avoidance of knowledge of a crime, esp. by failing to make a reasonable inquiry about suspected wrongdoing despite being aware that it is highly probable. ● A person acts with willful blindness, for example, by deliberately refusing to look inside an unmarked package after being paid by a known drug dealer to deliver it. Willful blindness creates an inference of knowledge of the crime in question. See Model Penal Code § 2. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 20, 314.]

willful-blindness instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

willful, continued, and obstinate desertion. See obstinate desertion under DESERTION.

willful homicide. See HOMICIDE.

willful indifference to the safety of others. See willful and wanton misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

willful infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

willful misconduct. See MISCONDUCT.

willful misconduct of an employee. See MISCONDUCT.

willful murder. See MURDER.

willful neglect. See NEGLECT.

willful negligence. 1. See advertent negligence under NEGLIGENCE. 2. See gross negligence (2) under NEGLIGENCE.

willfulness. (13c) 1. The fact or quality of acting purposely or by design; deliberateness; intention. ● Willfulness does not necessarily imply malice, but it involves more than just knowledge. 2. The voluntary, intentional violation or disregard of a known legal duty. — Also termed legal willfulness. [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 275.]

willful tort. See intentional tort under TORT.

willful wrong. See intentional wrong under WRONG.

Williams Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1968, that amended the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 by requiring investors who own more than 5% of a company's stock to furnish certain information to the SEC and to comply with certain requirements when making a tender offer. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷ 52.10-52.50.]

Wills Act. 1. STATUTE OF WILLS (1). 2. An 1837 English statute that allowed people to dispose of every type of property interest by will and that had an elaborate set of requirements for valid execution. • Some states today continue to adhere to these stringent requirements. Cf. Uniform Probate Code § 2-502. — Also termed (in sense 2) Lord Langdale's Act.

will substitute. A document or instrument that allows a person, upon death, to dispose of an estate in the same or similar manner as a will but without the formalities and expense of a probate proceeding. • The most common will substitutes are trusts, life-insurance plans, and retirement-benefits contracts. The creation of will substitutes has been one of the most important developments in the area of decedents' estates in the past 50 years. Cf. nonprobate asset under ASSET. [Cases: Wills ↷ 86.]

Winchester, Statute of. Hist. A statute passed in the 13th year of the reign of Edward I, requiring every man to provide himself with armor to keep the peace, recognizing and regulating the offices of high and petty constables, organizing the police, and enforcing the old Saxon police laws. • It was repealed in 1827 by the Criminal Statutes (England) Repeal Act. St. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, ch. 27.

Winchester measure. Hist. The standard weights and measures of England, originally kept at Winchester.

windfall. (15c) An unanticipated benefit, usu. in the form of a profit and not caused by the recipient.

windfall-profits tax. See TAX.

winding up, n. (1858) The process of settling accounts and liquidating assets in anticipation of a partnership's or a corporation's dissolution. Cf. DISSOLUTION (4). [Cases: Corporations ↷ 618; Partnership ↷ 277.] — wind up, vb. — wind up, n.

window-dressing. (1898) The deceptive arrangement of something, usu. facts or appearances, to make it appear more attractive or favorable. • The term is often used to describe the practice of some financial managers, esp. some managers of mutual funds, to sell certain positions at the end of a quarter to make an investment's quarterly performance appear better than it actually was. See PORTFOLIO PUMPING.

window tax. See TAX.

WIPO. abbr. WORLD INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY ORGANIZATION.

WIPO Copyright Treaty. A 1996 treaty that made changes in the Berne Convention in light of the TRIPs Agreement and dealt with new copyright issues raised by the emergence of the Internet and other digital technology. • The WIPO Treaty expressly protects computer software and databases and expressly excludes from protection "ideas, procedures, methods of operation or mathematical concepts as such." The WIPO Copyright Treaty was adopted simultaneously with the WIPO Performances and Phonograms Treaty. — Abbr. WCT.

WIPO digital agenda. See DIGITAL AGENDA.

WIPO Performances and Phonograms Treaty. A 1996 treaty giving performers the rights of attribution and integrity in their performances, and giving producers the rights of reproduction, distribution, rental, and availability. — Abbr. WPPT.

wire fraud. See FRAUD.

wiretapping, n. (1904) Electronic or mechanical eavesdropping, usu. done by law-enforcement officers under court order, to listen to private conversations. • Wiretapping is regulated by federal and state law. — Often shortened to tapping. See BUGGING; EAVESDROPPING. Cf. PEN REGISTER. [Cases: Telecommunications ↷ 1434-1441, 1460-1479.] — wiretap, vb. — wiretap, n.

wish, vb. 1. To desire; to hope. 2. To will; to devise; to give.

witan (wit-ən). [Anglo-Saxon "wise men"] Hist. The members of the king's council who sat to assist the king in administrative and judicial matters. • Among the members were ealdormen, bishops, abbots, high officers, and occasionally the king's friends and relatives.

witchcraft. The practices of a witch, esp. in black magic; sorcery. • Under the Witchcraft Act of 1541 (33 Hen. 8, ch. 8) and the Witchcraft Act of 1603 (1 Jac. ch. 12), witchcraft was a felony punishable by death without benefit of clergy. The last execution in England for witchcraft occurred in 1716. The Acts were repealed in 1736. In the United States, the most conspicuous (and nearly the last) persecution for witchcraft occurred in Salem, Massachusetts, where 19 people were hanged for this offense in 1692.

wite (wit). Hist. A penal fine exacted by the Crown or other authority for a serious crime, such as murder. — Also spelled wyte.

witenagemot (wit-ə-nə-gə-moht). [Anglo-Saxon "a meeting of the wise"] Hist. A national assembly of noblemen, high ecclesiastics, and other great thanes of England who advised and aided the king in the general administration of the government. • Its composition depended on the will of the king. It passed out of existence with the Norman Conquest (1066). Although it was a precursor to the British Parliament, that was a separate growth — not a continuation of the witenagemot. — Also spelled witenagemot; wittenagemot; witanagemote.

"[T]he ancient Anglo-Saxon general assembly of the notables [was] called the Witenagemot. . . . At first the power of the Anglo-Saxon Witenagemot appears to have been considerable, and in fact so much so that the kings were dependent on appointment to that office by the Witan in the early period before the royal succession became hereditary. With the tenth century centralization of power in the Alfredian line of kings, it appears that the power of the Witan began to decline." Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 262 (2d ed. 1952).

witepenny. Hist. In early English law, money paid in satisfaction of a wite.

The removal of money from a depository <withdrawal of funds from the checking account>. 4. RENUNCIATION (3) <withdrawal from the conspiracy to commit arson>. 5. RETRACTION (4). 6. Parliamentary law. A motion's removal from consideration by its mover. • The mover controls a motion only until the chair states the question, after which the motion belongs to the assembly and the mover cannot withdraw it without the assembly's permission. See request for permission to withdraw a motion under REQUEST. 7. Parliamentary law. See DISCHARGE (9). — withdraw, vb.

withdrawal of charges. (1842) The removal of charges by the one bringing them, such as a prosecutor. See NOLLE PROSEQUI. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨303.5.]

withdrawal of counsel. (1875) An attorney's termination of his or her role in representing a party in a case. • Normally, the attorney must have the court's permission to withdraw from a case. Permission is usu. sought by a written motion (1) explaining the reason for the requested withdrawal (often, a conflict between attorney and client over a matter such as strategy or fees), and (2) stating whether the client agrees. — Also termed withdrawing of counsel. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨76(1).]

withdrawing a juror. (18c) The act or an instance of removing a juror, usu. to obtain a continuance in a case or, sometimes in English practice, to end the case, as when the case has settled, the parties are too anxious to proceed to verdict, or the judge recommends it because the action is not properly before the court.

withdrawing of record. 1. With the court's permission, taking the record or any portion of it out of the office of the clerk of the court. 2. Hist. A plaintiff's removing of the nisi prius or trial record to prevent the case from being tried, usu. either before the jury is sworn or afterwards with the consent of defense counsel.

withdrawn land. 1. See reserved land under LAND. 2. See RESERVATION (3).

withernam (with-ər-nahm), n. [fr. Saxon weder "other" + naam "a taking"] Hist. A reciprocal taking or distress in place of a previous one. See capias in withernam under WITHERNAM.

withersake (with-ər-sayk). Archaic. An enemy; esp., a deliberately faithless renegade.

withholding, n. (1940) 1. The practice of deducting a certain amount from a person's salary, wages, dividends, winnings, or other income, usu. for tax purposes; esp., an employer's practice of taking out a portion of an employee's gross earnings and paying that portion to the government for income-tax and social-security purposes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4849; Taxation ⇨3560.] 2. The money so deducted. — Also termed income-tax withholding. — withhold, vb.

withholding of evidence. (1848) The act or an instance of obstructing justice by stifling or suppressing evidence knowing that it is being sought in an official investigation or a judicial proceeding. See OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE. [Cases: Obstructing Justice ⇨5.]

withholding tax. See TAX.

without day. See GO HENCE WITHOUT DAY.

without delay. (13c) 1. Instantly; at once. 2. Within the time reasonably allowed by law.

without dissent. See WITHOUT OBJECTION.

without impeachment of waste. (16c) (Of a tenant) not subject to an action for waste; not punishable for waste. • This clause is inserted in a lease to give a tenant the right to take certain actions (such as cutting timber) without being held liable for waste. But a tenant cannot abuse the right and will usu. be held liable for maliciously committing waste. — Also termed absque imptitione vasti. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨55(2).]

without notice. (16c) Lacking actual or constructive knowledge. • To be a bona fide purchaser, one must buy something "without notice" of another's claim to the item or of defects in the seller's title. To be a holder in due course, one must take a bill or note "without notice" that it is overdue, has been dishonored, or is subject to a claim. UCC § 3-302(a)(2). See NOTICE; bona fide purchaser under PURCHASER. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨331, 336; Sales ⇨234(1), 473; Vendor and Purchaser ⇨220.]

without prejudice, adv. (15c) Without loss of any rights; in a way that does not harm or cancel the legal rights or privileges of a party <dismissed without prejudice>. See dismissal without prejudice under DISMISSAL (1).

without recourse. (18c) (In an indorsement) without liability to subsequent holders. • With this stipulation, one who indorses an instrument indicates that he or she has no further liability to any subsequent holder for payment. — Also termed sans recours. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨293.]

without reserve. Of or relating to an auction at which an item will be sold for the highest bid price. [Cases: Auctions and Auctioneers ⇨7.]

without this, that. See ABSQUE HOC.

with power. See committee with power under COMMITTEE (1).

with prejudice, adv. With loss of all rights; in a way that finally disposes of a party's claim and bars any future action on that claim <dismissed with prejudice>. See dismissal with prejudice under DISMISSAL (1).

with recourse, adv. (In an indorsement) with liability to subsequent holders. • With this stipulation, one who indorses an instrument indicates that he or she remains liable to the holder for payment. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨280, 286.]

with reserve. Of or relating to an auction at which an item will not be sold unless the highest bid exceeds a minimum price. [Cases: Auctions and Auctioneers ⇨7.]

with strong hand. With force. • In common-law pleading, this term implies a degree of criminal force, esp. as used in forcible-entry statutes.

witness, n. (bef. 12c) 1. One who sees, knows, or vouches for something . 2. One who gives testimony under oath or affirmation (1) in person, (2) by oral or written deposition, or (3) by affidavit <the witness to the signature signed the affidavit>. • A witness must be legally competent to testify. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨224.] — witness, vb.

"The term 'witness,' in its strict legal sense, means one who gives evidence in a cause before a court; and in its general sense includes all persons from whose lips testimony is extracted to be used in any judicial proceeding, and so includes deponents and affiants as well as persons delivering oral testimony before a court or jury." 97 C.J.S. Witnesses § 1, at 350 (1957).

"Every witness is an editor: he tells you not everything he saw and heard, for that would be impossible, but what he saw and heard and found significant, and what he finds significant depends on his preconceptions." Patrick Devlin, The Criminal Prosecution in England 66 (1960).

accomplice witness. (1853) A witness who is an accomplice in the crime that the defendant is charged with. • A codefendant cannot be convicted solely on the testimony of an accomplice witness. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨507–512.] adverse witness. See hostile witness.

alibi witness. (1897) A witness who testifies that the defendant was in a location other than the scene of the crime at the relevant time; a witness who supports the defendant's alibi.

attesting witness. (18c) One who vouches for the authenticity of another's signature by signing an instrument that the other has signed <proof of the will requires two attesting witnesses>. — Also termed subscribing witness. [Cases: Evidence ⇨374; Wills ⇨113.]

character witness. (1893) A witness who testifies about another person's character traits or community reputation. See character evidence under EVIDENCE. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨37(4), 274.]

competent witness. (17c) A witness who is legally qualified to testify. • A lay witness who has personal knowledge of the subject matter of the testimony is competent to testify. Fed. R. Evid. 601–602. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨35–79.]

corroborating witness. (1853) A witness who confirms or supports someone else's testimony. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨410.]

court witness. A witness called or re-called to testify by the judge. • The witness called to testify by the court usu. has expertise in the subject matter of the trial and is considered necessary to resolve a conflict in the testimony. The court's discretion to call its own witnesses exists in both civil and criminal cases. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨246(2).]

credible witness. (16c) A witness whose testimony is believable.

disinterested witness. (18c) A witness who has no private interest in the matter at issue. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨91.]

expert witness. (1858) A witness qualified by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education to provide a scientific, technical, or other specialized opinion about the evidence or a fact issue. Fed. R. Evid. 702–706. — Also termed skilled witness. See EXPERT; DAUBERT TEST; expert opinion under OPINION (3). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨478–480; Evidence ⇨535–546.]

going witness. Archaic. A witness who is about to leave a court's jurisdiction, but not the country. • An example is the witness who leaves one state to go to another.

grand-jury witness. (1947) A witness who is called to testify before a grand jury. [Cases: Grand Jury ⇨36.]

hostile witness. (1852) A witness who is biased against the examining party, who is unwilling to testify, or who is identified with an adverse party. • A hostile witness may be asked leading questions on direct examination. Fed. R. Evid. 611(c). — Also termed adverse witness. See adverse party under PARTY (2). [Cases: Witnesses ⇨244.]

interested witness. (18c) A witness who has a direct and private interest in the matter at issue. • Most jurisdictions provide that a person witnessing a will may not be a devisee under the will. The Uniform Probate Code, however, has abrogated this rule. [Cases: Witnesses ↷91.]

lay witness. (1853) A witness who does not testify as an expert and who is therefore restricted to giving an opinion or making an inference that (1) is based on firsthand knowledge, and (2) is helpful in clarifying the testimony or in determining facts. Fed. R. Evid. 701. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷448-467; Evidence ↷470-503.]

material witness. (17c) A witness who can testify about matters having some logical connection with the consequential facts, esp. if few others, if any, know about those matters. [Cases: Witnesses ↷4.]

percipient witness. (1913) A witness who has perceived the things about which he or she testifies. See EYEWITNESS; EARWITNESS.

prosecuting witness. (1823) A person who files the complaint that triggers a criminal prosecution and whose testimony the prosecution usu. relies on to secure a conviction. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷210.]

qualified witness. (1845) A witness who, by explaining the manner in which a business records are made and kept, is able to lay the foundation for the admission of those records under an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803(6). [Cases: Criminal Law ↷444.9; Evidence ↷373.]

rebuttal witness. (1891) A witness who contradicts or attempts to contradict evidence previously presented.

res gestae witness. (1894) A witness who, having been at the scene of an incident, can give a firsthand account of what happened. See RES GESTAE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷363; Evidence ↷120.]

skilled witness. 1. See expert witness. 2. A witness whose degree of knowledge in a particular subject or field is short of the standard for an expert but greater than the knowledge possessed by a typical layperson. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷452, 478; Evidence ↷474, 536.]

subscribing witness. (17c) One who witnesses the signatures on an instrument and signs at the end of the instrument to that effect. See attesting witness. [Cases: Evidence ↷373; Wills ↷123.]

supernumerary witness. An unrequired witness, such as a third witness to a will where only two are required. [Cases: Wills ↷712.]

swift witness. See zealous witness.

target witness. (1965) 1. The person who has the knowledge that an investigating body seeks. [Cases: Grand Jury ↷37.] 2. A witness who is called before a grand jury and against whom the government is also seeking an indictment.

turncoat witness. (1947) A witness whose testimony was expected to be favorable but who becomes (usu. during the trial) a hostile witness.

ultroneous witness. Scots law. A witness who comes forward without being summoned to appear in court.

zealous witness (zel-əs). (1868) A witness who shows partiality toward the litigant that called him or her to testify and who seems eager to help that side in the lawsuit. — Also termed swift witness.

witness box. See WITNESS STAND.

witness clause. See TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE.

witnesseth, vb. Shows; records. • This term, usu. set in all capitals, commonly separates the preliminaries in a contract, up through the recitals, from the contractual terms themselves. Modern drafters increasingly avoid it as an antiquated relic. Traditionally, the subject of this verb was This Agreement: the sentence, boiled down, was This Agreement witnesseth [i.e., shows or records] that, whereas [the parties have agreed to contract with one another], the parties therefore agree as follows . . . Many modern contracts erroneously retain the Witnesseth even though a new verb appears in the preamble: This Agreement is between [one party and the other party]. After the preamble is a period, followed by an all-capped WITNESSETH. It is an example of a form retained long after its utility, and most lawyers do not know what it means or even what purpose it once served.

witness fee. See FEE (1).

witnessing part. 1. See ATTESTATION CLAUSE. 2. See TESTATUM (2).

witness jurat. See JURAT.

witness-protection program. (1970) A federal or state program in which a person who testifies against a criminal is assigned a new identity and relocated to another part of the country to avoid retaliation by anyone convicted as a result of that testimony. • The Federal Witness Protection Program was established by the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970 and is administered by the marshals of the U.S. Justice Department.

witness stand. (1853) The space in a courtroom, usu. a boxed area, occupied by a witness while testifying. — Often shortened to stand. — Also termed witness box. [Cases: Witnesses ↷228.]

witness-tampering. (1924) The act or an instance of obstructing justice by intimidating, influencing, or harassing a witness before or after the witness testifies. • Several state and federal laws, including the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 (18 USCA § 1512), provide criminal penalties for tampering with witnesses or other persons in the context of a pending investigation or official proceeding. See OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE. [Cases: Obstructing Justice ↷5.]

witword (wit-wǝrd). Hist. 1. A legally allowed claim; esp., the right to vindicate ownership or possession by one's affirmation under oath. 2. A will or testament.

W.L. abbr. WESTLAW.

wobbler. Slang. A crime that can be charged as either a felony or a misdemeanor. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 27.]

wolf's head. Hist. An outlaw, who was formerly often referred to as carrying a wolf's head (caput lupinum) and to be no more than a wild beast or wolf who could be slain and whose head could be carried to the king. — Also termed woolfertthod. See OUTLAW.

"Outlawry is the last weapon of ancient law, but one that it must often use. As has been well said, it is the sentence of death pronounced by a community which has no police constables or professional hangmen. To pursue the outlaw and knock him on the head as though he were a wild beast is the right and duty of every law-abiding man. 'Let him bear the wolf's head:' this phrase is in use even in the thirteenth century." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 476 (2d ed. 1898).

Women's Bureau. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for formulating policies and standards to promote the welfare of wage-earning women.

women's shelter. See SHELTER.

Women's Suffrage Amendment. See NINETEENTH AMENDMENT.

wood-corn, n. Hist. A quantity of oats or grain paid by customary tenants to a lord for the privilege of picking up dead or broken wood.

wood-geld (wuud-geld). Hist. 1. Money paid for the privilege of taking wood from a forest. 2. Immunity from paying money for this privilege. — Also termed puðzeld.

wood-leave. Hist. A license or right to cut down, remove, and use standing timber.

wood-mote (wuud-moht). See COURT OF ATTACHMENTS.

Wood-Plea Court. Hist. A court held twice a year in Clun Forest, in Shropshire, to determine matters of wood and agistments.

woodshedding. See HORSESHEDDING.

woodward (wuud-word), n. Hist. A forest officer who patrols and protects the forest. [Cases: Woods and Forests ⇨ 7.]

woolfertthod. See WOLF'S HEAD.

w.o.p. abbr. WANT OF PROSECUTION.

word of art. See TERM OF ART.

words actionable in themselves. (18c) Language that is libelous or slanderous per se. See slander per se under SLANDER; libel per se under LIBEL. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⇨ 33.]

words of limitation. (16c) Language in a conveying instrument — often nonliteral language — describing the extent or quality of an estate. • For example, under long-standing principles of property law, the phrase

"to A and her heirs" creates a fee simple in A but gives nothing to A's heirs. See LIMITATION (4). [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 120-136; Wills ⇨ 591, 597(4).]

"Words of limitation' is the phrase used to describe the words which limit (i.e., delimit or mark out) the estate to be taken. Thus in a conveyance today 'to A in fee simple,' the words 'in fee simple' are words of limitation, for they show what estate A is to have." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 29 (6th ed. 1993).

words of negotiability. See NEGOTIABLE WORDS.

words of procreation (prɔh-kree-ay-shən). (18c) Language in a deed essential to create an estate tail, such as an estate "to A and the heirs of his body." [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 127.]

words of purchase. (17c) Language in a deed or will designating the persons who are to receive the grant. • For example, the phrase "to A for life with a remainder to her heirs" creates a life estate in A and a remainder in A's heirs. See PURCHASE (2). [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 105, 120-136; Wills ⇨ 597(4).]

words of severance. In a grant of lands, words showing that the tenants were each to take a distinct share in the property as opposed to undivided portions. • Typical words of severance are share and share alike, to be divided among, equally, and between. [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 123, 136.]

work, n. 1. Physical and mental exertion to attain an end, esp. as controlled by and for the benefit of an employer; labor.

additional work. 1. Work that results from a change or alteration in plans concerning the work required, usu. under a construction contract; added work necessary to meet the performance goals under a contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 232(1).] 2. See extra work.

extra work. In construction law, work not required under the contract; something done or furnished in addition to the contract's requirements; work entirely outside and independent of the contract and not contemplated by it. • A contractor is usu. entitled to charge for extra work consisting of labor and materials not contemplated by or subsumed within the original contract, at least to the extent that the property owner agrees to a change order. Materials and labor not contemplated by the contract, but that are required by later changes in the plans and specifications, are considered to be extra work. — Also termed additional work. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 232(1).]

heavy work. Work involving frequent lifting and carrying of large items. • Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker's physical limitations, heavy work involves lifting no more than 100 pounds, with frequent lifting or carrying of objects weighing up to 50 pounds. 20 CFR § 404. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨ 140.40, 143.70-143.80.] inherently dangerous work. Work that can be carried out only by the exercise of special skill and care and that involves a grave risk of serious harm if done unskillfully or carelessly. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨2872.]

light work. Work involving some limited lifting and moving. ● Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker's physical limitations, light work includes walking, standing, sitting while pushing or pulling arm or leg controls, and lifting no more than 20 pounds, with frequent lifting or carrying of objects that weigh up to 10 pounds. 20 CFR § 404. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.85.]

medium work. Work involving some frequent lifting and moving. ● Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker's physical limitations, medium work includes lifting up to 50 pounds, with frequent lifting or carrying of objects weighing up to 25 pounds. 20 CFR § 404. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.70–143.80.]

sedentary work. Work involving light lifting and only occasional walking or standing. ● Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker's physical limitations, sedentary work involves lifting of no more than ten pounds, occasionally carrying small items such as docket files and small tools, and occasional standing or walking. 20 CFR § 404. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.85.]

semi-skilled work. Work that may require some alertness and close attention, such as inspecting items or machinery for irregularities, or guarding property or people against loss or injury. 20 CFR § 404.1568(b). — Also written semiskilled work. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.70–143.85.]

skilled work. Work requiring the worker to use judgment, deal with the public, analyze facts and figures, or work with abstract ideas at a high level of complexity. 20 CFR § 404. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.70–143.85.]

unskilled work. Work requiring little or no judgment, and involving simple tasks that can be learned quickly on the job. 20 CFR § 404. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.70–143.85.]

very heavy work. Work involving frequent lifting of very large objects and frequent carrying of large objects. ● Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker's physical limitations, very heavy work involves lifting 100 pounds or more, and frequent lifting or carrying of objects weighing 50 pounds or more. 20 CFR § 404.1567(e). [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨140.40, 143.70–143.80.]

work of necessity. Work reasonably essential to the public's economic, social, or moral welfare as determined by the community standards at a particular time, and (formerly) excepted from the operation of blue laws. See BLUE LAW. [Cases: Sunday ⇨7.]

2. Copyright. An original expression, in fixed or tangible form (such as paper, audiotape, or computer disk), that may be entitled to common-law or statutory copyright protection. ● A work may take many different forms, including art, sculpture, literature, music, crafts, software, and photography. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨3.]

anonymous work. A work that, on copies or phonorecords, does not identify any natural person as the author. 17 USCA § 101.

architectural work. The copyrightable design of a building, as fixed in tangible media such as plans, drawings, and the building itself. 17 USCA § 102(8). ● Only the overall design is protected, not each design element. This category of works was added to U.S. law by the Berne Convention Implementation Act of 1988. It is one of eight categories eligible for copyright protection. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨6.]

artistic work. Any visual representation, such as a painting, drawing, map, photograph, sculpture, engraving, or architectural plan. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨6.]

audiovisual work. A work consisting of related images that are presented in a series, usu. with the aid of a machine, and accompanied by sound. ● An example of an audiovisual work is a lecture illustrated with a film strip, or a movie with a soundtrack. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨10.1.]

collective work. (1870) 1. A publication (such as a periodical issue, anthology, or encyclopedia) in which several contributions, constituting separate and independent works in themselves, are assembled into a copyrightable whole. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨41(3).] 2. A selection and arrangement of brief portions of different movies, television shows, or radio shows into a single copyrightable work. ● If the selecting and arranging involves any originality, the person who selects and arranges the clips may claim a copyright even if copyright cannot be claimed in the individual component parts. Cf. COMPILATION (1). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨12(3).]

"If a work is not joint and not derivative but nevertheless consists of works of authorship created by more than one person, it is a compilation of some sort except for the possibility that it is a work for hire. . . . If the component parts have an independent identity, that is, they are works of authorship, then the compilation is a collective work, a type of compilation." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 374 (2d ed. 1990).

composite work (kəm-poz-ĭt). (1910) An original publication that relates to a variety of subjects and includes discrete selections from many authors. ● Although the distinguishable parts are separately protectable, the owner of the composite work — not the individual authors — owns the renewal term, if any. 17 USCA § 304(a). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨38.]

creative work. See work of authorship.

derivative work. (1965) A copyrightable creation that is based on a preexisting product; a translation, musical arrangement, fictionalization, motion-picture version, abridgment, or any other recast or adapted form of an original work. • Only the holder of the copyright on the original form can produce or permit someone else to produce a derivative work. 17 USCA § 101. — Sometimes shortened to derivative. Cf. COMPILATION (1). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 12(3).]

"[W]hile a compilation consists merely of the selection and arrangement of pre-existing material without any internal changes in such material, a derivative work involves recasting or transformation, i.e., changes in the pre-existing material, whether or not it is juxtaposed in an arrangement with other pre-existing materials. A catalog constitutes a compilation, and a translation of a pre-existing work constitutes a derivative work." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 3.02, at 3-5 (Supp. 1997).

dramatic work. Any form of nonliterary work created for performance and viewing. • The term includes plays, scripts, films, choreographic works, and similar creations. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 7.]

joint work. A work created or developed by two or more people whose contributions blend inseparably or interdependently into the whole work. • The cocreators have equal legal rights to register and enjoy the copyright, but this does not affect any other contractually unequal ownership arrangements. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 41(3).]

literary work. (18c) A nonaudiovisual work that is expressed in verbal, numerical, or other symbols, such as words or musical notation, and embodied in some type of physical object. • Literary works are one of eight general categories that are eligible for copyright protection. 17 USCA § 102. Cf. LITERARY COMPOSITION. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 5.]

"Copyright protection extends to literary works which are defined as works, other than audiovisual works, expressed in words, numbers, or other verbal or numerical symbols or indicia, regardless of the nature of the material objects, such as books, periodicals, manuscripts, phonorecords, film, tapes, disks, or cards in which they are embodied. The term 'literary work' does not connote any criterion of literary merit or qualitative value and includes catalogs and directories; similar factual, reference or instructional works; compilations of data; computer data bases, and computer programs." 18 Am. Jur. 2d Copyright and Literary Property § 25, at 360 (1985).

pictorial, graphic, and sculptural work. Two- or three-dimensional works of graphic, fine, or applied art that are eligible for copyright protection. • This is one of eight general classifications covered by copyright law. Examples include globes, architectural drawings, photographs, and models. 17 USCA § 102. — Abbr. PGS. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 6.] posthumous work. The product of an author who died before publication. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 33.]

pseudonymous work. A work done by an author who uses a fictitious name.

work for hire. A copyrightable work produced either by an employee within the scope of employment or by an independent contractor under a written agreement; esp., a work specially ordered or commissioned for use as (1) a contribution to a collective work, (2) a translation, (3) a supplementary work, (4) a part of a movie or other audiovisual work, (5) a compilation, (6) an instructional text, (7) a test, (8) answer material for a test, or (9) an atlas. • If the work is produced by an independent contractor, the parties must agree expressly in writing that the work will be a work for hire. The employer or commissioning party owns the copyright. 17 USCA § 101. — Also termed work made for hire. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 41(2).]

work of authorship. The product of creative expression, such as literature, music, art, and graphic designs. • Copyright protects a work of authorship if it meets three criteria. First, the work must be original, not a copy. Second, the work must be presented in a fixed medium, such as a computer disk, a canvas, or paper. Finally, some creativity must have been involved in the work's creation, although the amount of creativity required depends on the particular work. — Also termed creative work. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 4.] work of the United States government. A work created by a U.S. government officer or employee in the course of performing official duties. • By statute, federal-government works may not be copyrighted. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 10.3.]

work, vb. 1. To exert effort; to perform, either physically or mentally <lawyers work long hours during trial>. 2. To function properly; to produce a desired effect <the strategy worked>. 3. Patents. To develop and use (a patented invention, esp. to make it commercially available) <the patentee failed to work the patent>. • Failure to work a patent in a specified amount of time is grounds for a compulsory license in some countries. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 191.]

"A patentee has the exclusive right to make, use, or sell the invention. 35 U.S.C.A. § 154. The right includes the right to refrain from making, using, or selling the invention. In many foreign countries, the inventor is obliged to 'work' the patent and if he does not do so, he can be required to grant a compulsory license to others who wish to exploit the invention. But an American patentee is under no such duty, although there are antitrust implications involved in the failure to work a patent." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 128-29 (2d ed. 1990).

work and labor. Hist. A common count in an action of assumpsit for the work and labor performed and materials furnished by the plaintiff. See ASSUMPSIT. [Cases: Assumpsit, Action of ⇨ 5.]

worker. 1. One who labors to attain an end; esp., a person employed to do work for another. 2. A person who offers to perform services for compensation in the employ of another, whether or not the person is so employed at a given time.

Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act.

A federal law that requires an employer to provide notice of a plant closing or mass layoff, 60 days before the closing or layoff, to the employees, the state-dislocated-workers unit, and the chief elected official of the unit of local government where the plant closing or layoff is to occur. 29 USCA §§ 2101–2109. — Abbr. WARN. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷3202.]

workers' compensation. A system of providing benefits to an employee for injuries occurring in the scope of employment. • Most workers'-compensation statutes both hold the employer strictly liable and bar the employee from suing the employer in tort. — Abbr. WC. — Also termed workmen's compensation; employers' liability. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↷11.]

"Workers' compensation laws were designed to provide employees with expansive protection against the consequences of employment-related injuries. Injured workers no longer had to establish negligence attributable to their employer in order to obtain legal redress. They merely had to demonstrate that their conditions arose out of and during the course of their employment." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 7.3, at 406 (1994).

workers'-compensation act. A statute by which employers are made responsible for bodily harm to their workers arising out of and in the course of their employment, regardless of the fault of either the employee or the employer. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↷1, 6.]

workers'-compensation board. An agency that reviews cases arising under workers'-compensation statutes and administers the related rules and regulations. — Also termed workers'-compensation commission. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↷1076–1096.10.]

"Workers' compensation boards . . . are tribunals . . . of limited and special jurisdiction and have only such authority and power as have been conferred upon them by express grant, or by implication as necessary and incidental to the full exercise of their authority. The functions of such agencies may include the settlement of disputes with respect to the right to and the amount of compensation, the supervision of voluntary settlements or agreements, the collection and administration of compensation funds, and the supervision and regulation of matters pertaining to compensation insurance." 82 Am. Jur. 2d Workers' Compensation § 56, at 65 (1992).

workers'-compensation lien. See LIEN.

workers'-compensation subrogation lien. See workers'-compensation lien under LIEN.

workfare. (1969) A system of requiring a person receiving a public-welfare benefit to earn that benefit by performing a job provided by a government agency or undergoing job training. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ↷4.15.]

work for hire. See WORK (2).

work furlough (fər-lōh). (1960) A prison-treatment program allowing an inmate to be released during the day to work in the community. See WORK-RELEASE PROGRAM. [Cases: Prisons ↷174.]

work-furlough program. See WORK-RELEASE PROGRAM.

workhouse. (17c) A jail for criminals who have committed minor offenses and are serving short sentences. [Cases: Prisons ↷213.]

working capital. See CAPITAL.

working capital acceptance. See finance bill under BILL (6).

working control. See CONTROL.

working example. See EXAMPLE.

working interest. Oil & gas. The rights to the mineral interest granted by an oil-and-gas lease, so called because the lessee acquires the right to work on the leased property to search, develop, and produce oil and gas, as well as the obligation to pay all costs. See ROYALTY (2). — Also termed leasehold interest; operating interest. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷73.1(2).]

working model. Patents. A sample of an invention, usually built for testing and for displaying to potential buyers.

• The building of a working model is called "actual reduction to practice." It is not required for a patent, but it can help the applicant to clarify the description and to establish a date of invention in the event of an interference. [Cases: Patents ↷90(6).]

working papers. 1. WORK PERMIT; esp., an employment certificate or permit required of an employer in some states before a minor may be hired. 2. Accounting. The records kept by an independent auditor of the procedures followed, tests performed, information obtained, and conclusions reached in an audit. • A reviewer may evaluate the quality of an audit by examining the working papers.

work-in-process. A product being manufactured or assembled but not yet completed. — Abbr. WIP. — Also termed work-in-progress.

work made for hire. See work for hire under WORK (2).

workmen's compensation. See WORKERS' COMPENSATION.

work of authorship. See WORK (2).

work of necessity. See WORK (1).

work of the United States government. See WORK (2). workout, n. 1. The act of restructuring or refinancing overdue loans. 2. Bankruptcy. A debtor's agreement, usually negotiated with a creditor or creditors out of court, to reduce or discharge the debt. — work out, vb.

work permit. An alien's documentary work authorization from the Immigration and Naturalization Service. • Under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, it is illegal for an employer to hire an alien who lacks a work permit. 8 USCA § 1324(a)(1). — Also termed working papers.

workpiece. Patents. The embodiment of an invention, usually a device, as the patent claims describe how to make and use it. [Cases: Patents ↷165(4).]

workplace. A person's place of employment or work setting in general. See SAFE WORKPLACE.

work product. (1947) Tangible material or its intangible equivalent — in unwritten or oral form — that was either prepared by or for a lawyer or prepared for litigation, either planned or in progress. • Work product is generally exempt from discovery or other compelled disclosure. The term is also used to describe the products of a party's investigation or communications concerning the subject matter of a lawsuit if made (1) to assist in the prosecution or defense of a pending suit, or (2) in reasonable anticipation of litigation. Fed. R. Evid. 26. — Also termed attorney work product. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨627.5(6); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1604; Pretrial Procedure ⇨35, 358.]

core work product. See opinion work product.

fact work product. A lawyer's tangible work product that includes facts but not the lawyer's mental impressions. • Fact work product is subject to a qualified privilege. It is not discoverable unless the party seeking discovery can show (1) a substantial need for the materials and (2) an inability to acquire the information by any other means without undue hardship. See Fed. R. Evid. 26(b)(3). — Also termed ordinary work product. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨627.5(6); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1604; Pretrial Procedure ⇨35, 358.]

opinion work product. A lawyer's opinions, mental impressions, conclusions, and legal theories arising from a client's case. • An adversary usu. cannot gain access to this work product despite showing substantial need and undue hardship. Fed. R. Evid. 26(b)(3). — Also termed core work product. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨627.5(6); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1604; Pretrial Procedure ⇨35, 358.]

ordinary work product. See fact work product.

work-product rule. (1954) The rule providing for qualified immunity of an attorney's work product from discovery or other compelled disclosure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3). • The exemption was primarily established to protect an attorney's litigation strategy. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947). — Also termed work-product immunity; work-product privilege; work-product exemption; attorney-work-product privilege. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨627.5(6); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1604; Pretrial Procedure ⇨35.]

"Although the work-product rule has often been spoken of as creating a 'privilege,' it is a qualified one that does not grant full immunity from discovery. To the extent the term 'privilege' causes confusion between the work-product rule and the absolute privilege for confidential communications between attorney and client, it is important to keep in mind this distinction. . . . Rule 26(b)(3) provides that work-product material is subject to discovery 'only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has substantial need of the materials in the preparation of the party's case and that the party is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means.'" 8 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2025, at 371, 373-74 (2d ed. 1994).

work-release program. (1964) A correctional program allowing a prison inmate — primarily one being readied for discharge — to hold a job outside prison. — Also works. 1. A mill, factory, or other establishment for manufacturing or other industrial purposes; a manufacturing plant; a factory. 2. Any building or structure on land. • Some states also include structures built in the sea, such as offshore-drilling platforms.

new works. Civil law. A structure newly commenced on a particular estate. • A denunciation of new works is a remedy allowed for an adjacent landowner whose property will be injured if the structure is completed.

public works. Structures (such as roads or dams) built by the government for public use and paid for by public funds. [Cases: States ⇨83.]

work stoppage. A cessation of work; STRIKE.

world. 1. The planet Earth <the world has limited natural resources>. 2. All the Earth's inhabitants; the public generally <the world will benefit from this discovery>. 3. All persons who have a claim or acquire an interest in a particular subject matter .

World Bank. A U.N. specialized agency established in 1945 to provide loans that aid in economic development, through economically sustainable enterprises. • Its capital derives from both U.N. member states and loans on the open market. — Also termed International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. [Cases: International Law ⇨10.45(2).]

World Court. See INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE.

world fund. See global fund under MUTUAL FUND.

World Intellectual Property Organization. An agency of the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization formed in 1967 to (1) promote intellectual-property protection worldwide through cooperation among nations, and (2) administer multilateral treaties dealing with legal and administrative aspects of intellectual property. • The organization's headquarters are in Geneva, Switzerland. — Abbr. WIPO.

worldly, adj. Of or relating to the present state of existence; temporal; earthly <worldly possessions>. See SECULAR.

World Trade Organization. The body charged with enforcing intellectual-property provisions of the GATT treaty. • WTO comprises the signatories of the Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations. — Abbr. WTO. See TRIPS.

worldwide military-locator service. A search service that locates the current duty station of a member of any branch of the United States military services, esp. for enforcing the service member's child-support obligations. • Each branch of the armed forces maintains a worldwide locator service that is available to military and nonmilitary persons, their counsel, and Title IV-D agencies. Use of the locator service requires the member's full name and social-security number.

worship. 1. Any form of religious devotion, ritual, or service showing reverence, esp. for a divine being or supernatural power <freedom of worship>. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷1.]

public worship. 1. Worship conducted by a religious society according to the society's system of ecclesiastical authority, ritual propriety, and rules and regulations. 2. Worship under public authority. 3. Worship in a public place, without privacy or concealment. 4. Worship allowed by all members of the public equally.

2. English law. A title of honor or dignity used in addressing certain magistrates or other high officers. • The title is always preceded by a possessive pronoun, usu. your <your worship>.

wort (wǽrt), n. Archaic. A country farm; a curtilage. — Also termed worth.

worth, n. (bef. 12c) 1. The monetary value of a thing; the sum of the qualities that render a thing valuable and useful, expressed in the current medium of exchange. 2. The emotional or sentimental value of something. 3. The total wealth held by a person or entity.

net tangible worth. A corporation's net physical value, calculated by subtracting the liabilities from the value of the tangible assets then dividing by the number of outstanding shares.

net worth. A measure of one's wealth, usu. calculated as the excess of total assets over total liabilities. — Also termed net assets. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4530.]

tangible worth. The amount of wealth held in the form of physical, valuable assets, such as cash and equipment.

4. WORT.

worthier-title doctrine. (1935) 1. Hist. The common-law doctrine that if a beneficiary of a will would receive an identical interest as an heir under the laws of intestacy, the person takes the interest as an heir rather than as a beneficiary. • The doctrine has been abolished in most states. [Cases: Wills ↷713.] 2. Property. The doctrine that favors a grantor's intent by construing a grant as a reversion in the grantor instead of as a remainder in the grantor's heirs. — Also termed doctrine of worthier title. See REMAINDER; REVERSION.

worthiest of blood, n. Hist. Of or relating to males, because of the preference given them in the laws of descent. See PRIMOGENITURE.

"Thus sons shall be admitted before daughters; or, as our male lawgivers have somewhat uncomplaisantly expressed it, the worthiest blood shall be preferred. As if John Stiles hath two sons, Matthew and Gilbert, and two daughters, Margaret and Charlotte, and dies; first Matthew, and (in case of his death without issue) then Gilbert shall be admitted to the succession in preference to both the daughters." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 213 (1766).

worthless, adj. Totally lacking worth; of no use or value.

worthless check. See bad check under CHECK.

worthless person. Archaic. A person who owns nothing.

worthless security. See SECURITY.

worthy, adj. Having worth; possessing merit; valuable.

wounded feelings. (18c) Injuries resulting from insults, indignity, or humiliation, as distinguished from the usual mental pain and suffering consequent to physical injury. [Cases: Damages ↷57.11, 57.17, 57.24.]

wounding. (14c) 1. An injury, esp. one involving a rupture of the skin. 2. An injury to feelings or reputation. 3. Hist. An aggravated type of assault and battery in which one person seriously injures another.

wrap account. See ACCOUNT.

wraparound mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

wrap-fee account. See wrap account under ACCOUNT.

wreck, n. 1. SHIPWRECK. 2. Goods cast ashore from a wrecked vessel and not claimed by the owner within a specified period (such as one year).

wreckfree, adj. (Of a port, etc.) exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the Crown.

writ (rit). (bef. 12c) A court's written order, in the name of a state or other competent legal authority, commanding the addressee to do or refrain from doing some specified act. [Cases: Injunction ↷202.]

"[W]rits have a long history. We can trace their formal origin to the Anglo-Saxon formulae by which the king used to communicate his pleasure to persons and courts. The Anglo-Norman writs, which we meet with after the Conquest, are substantially the Anglo-Saxon writs turned into Latin. But what is new is the much greater use made of them, owing to the increase of royal power which came with the Conquest." W.S. Holdsworth, Sources and Literature of English Law 20 (1925).

alias writ. (18c) An additional writ issued after another writ of the same kind in the same case. • It derives its name from a Latin phrase that formerly appeared in alias writs: sicut alias praecipimus, meaning "as we at another time commanded." Cf. alias execution under EXECUTION. [Cases: Process ↷45.]

alternative writ. (1827) A common-law writ commanding the person against whom it is issued either to do a specific thing or to show cause why the court should not order it to be done. [Cases: Mandamus ↷158.]

close writ. Hist. 1. A royal writ sealed because the contents were not deemed appropriate for public inspection. Cf. patent writ; CLAUSE ROLLS. 2. A writ directed to a sheriff instead of to a lord.

concurrent writ. A duplicate of an original writ (esp. a summons), issued either at the same time as the original writ or at any time while the original writ is valid.

counterpart writ. (1841) A copy of an original writ, to be sent to a court in another county where the defendant is located.

extraordinary writ. (17c) A writ issued by a court exercising unusual or discretionary power. • Examples are certiorari, habeas corpus, mandamus, and prohibition. — Also termed prerogative writ. Cf. extraordinary relief under RELIEF. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 207.]

ground writ. Hist. A writ issued in a county having venue of an action in order to allow a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum or of fieri facias to be executed in a county where the defendant or the defendant's property was found. • These two writs could not be executed in a county other than the county having venue of the action until a ground writ and then a testatum writ were first issued. This requirement was abolished in 1852. Cf. TESTATUM.

judicial writ. (16c) 1. A writ issuing from the court to which the original writ was returnable; a writ issued under the private seal of the court and not under the great seal of England. Cf. original writ. 2. Any writ issued by a court.

junior writ. (1839) A writ issued at a later time than a similar writ, such as a later writ issued by a different party or a later writ on a different claim against the same defendant.

optional writ. (18c) At common law, an original writ issued when the plaintiff seeks specific damages, such as payment of a liquidated debt. • The writ commands the defendant either to do a specified thing or to show why the thing has not been done.

original writ. (16c) A writ commencing an action and directing the defendant to appear and answer. • In the United States, this writ has been largely superseded by the summons. At common law, this type of writ was a mandatory letter issuing from the court of chancery under the great seal, and in the king's name, directed to the sheriff of the county where the injury was alleged to have occurred, containing a summary statement of the cause of complaint, and requiring the sheriff in most cases to command the defendant to satisfy the claim or else appear in court to account for not satisfying it. — Sometimes shortened to original. See SUMMONS. [Cases: Process ⇨ 8.]

patent writ (pay-tənt). Hist. An open writ; one not closed or sealed up. Cf. close writ.

peremptory writ (pə-emp-tə-ree). (18c) At common law, an original writ issued when the plaintiff seeks only general damages, as in an action for trespass. • The writ, which is issued only after the plaintiff gives security for costs, directs the sheriff to have the defendant appear in court. [Cases: Mandamus ⇨ 179.]

pluries writ. See PLURIES.

prerogative writ. See extraordinary writ.

testatum writ (tes-tay-təm). See TESTATUM.

vicontiel writ (vi-kon-tee-əl). Hist. A writ triable in the county court. • In the 13th–14th centuries, civil litigation could originate in the county court either by oral plaint or by a writ from the Chancery ordering the sheriff to do justice in a case. The writ that began such a proceeding was called vicontiel because it was addressed to the sheriff. See VICONTIEL (2).

"Vicontiel writs were of two sorts, the one founded on Torts, the other on Contracts. The vicontiel writs adapted for torts, were those of trespass, replegiari facias, nuisance, and others of the like nature; and those of matters of contract were called writs of justicies, which was a command to the sheriff to do justice between the parties . . ." 1 George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas vii–viii (3d ed. 1787).

writ of capias. See CAPIAS.

writ de haeretico comburendo. See DE HAERETICO COMBURENDO.

write off, vb. Accounting. To transfer the entire balance (of an asset account) to an expense or loss account to reflect the asset's total loss of value <the partnership wrote off the bad debt>. — write-off, n. See TAX WRITE-OFF. — write-off, n.

writer. Securities. 1. A person or institution that sells securities or futures option contracts. 2. See insurance underwriter (1) under UNDERWRITER.

writer of the tallies. English law. An officer of the Exchequer who writes on the tallies the letters of tellers' bills. See TALLY.

Writer to the Signet. Scots law. 1. Hist. A member of the College of Justice, founded in 1532. 2. A member of an Edinburgh society of solicitors who hold a few special privileges in the preparation of official documents.

write-up, n. 1. A memorandum of a conference between an employer and an employee, usu. held to discuss the employee's poor work performance or a disciplinary action against the employee. 2. A publication (such as a newspaper article) about a particular person, thing, or event.

write-up, vb. Accounting. To increase the valuation of an asset in a financial statement to reflect current value. • With a few minor exceptions, this is generally not permitted.

writ fi fa. See TESTATUM (1).

writing, n. Any intentional recording of words that may be viewed or heard with or without mechanical aids. • This includes hard-copy documents, electronic documents on computer media, audio and videotapes, e-mails, and any other media on which words can be recorded.

signed writing. A writing to which a person's signature has been affixed in some form. See SIGNATURE.

writing obligatory, n. A bond; a written obligation, as technically described in a pleading.

writ of ad quod damnum. See AD QUOD DAMNUM.

writ of aiel (ay-əl). See AIEL (2).

writ of assistance. 1. A writ to enforce a court's decree transferring real property, the title of which has been previously adjudicated. [Cases: Assistance, Writ of ↷ 1.] 2. Hist. A writ issued by the Court of Exchequer ordering the sheriff to assist in collecting a debt owed the Crown. 3. Hist. In colonial America, a writ issued by a superior colonial court authorizing an officer of the Crown to enter and search any premises suspected of containing contraband. • The attempted use of this writ in Massachusetts — defeated in 1761 — was one of the acts that led to the American Revolution.

writ of association. Hist. English law. A writ whereby certain persons (usu. the clerk of assize and subordinate officers) were directed to associate themselves with the justices and serjeants so that there would be an adequate supply of commissioners for the assizes.

writ of attachment. See ATTACHMENT (3).

writ of audita querela. See AUDITA QUERELA.

writ of capias. See CAPIAS.

writ of capias ad respondendum. See CAPIAS.

writ of capias ad satisfaciendum. See CAPIAS.

writ of certiorari. See CERTIORARI.

writ of conspiracy. Hist. A writ against one who conspired to injure the plaintiff, esp. by indicting the plaintiff for treason or felony. • Under common law, all other circumstances of conspiracy were actions on the case. [Cases: Conspiracy ↷ 15.]

writ of consultation. An extraordinary writ issued by an appellate court ordering a lower court to proceed in a matter that the lower court previously refused to hear. Cf. PROHIBITION (2).

writ of coram nobis. See CORAM NOBIS.

writ of coram vobis. See CORAM VOBIS.

writ of course. (17c) A writ issued as a matter of course or granted as a matter of right. — Also termed writ of right; breve de cursu.

writ of covenant. Hist. A writ for one claiming damages as a result of a breach of a promise under seal or other covenant. — Also termed breve de conventionione (breev or bree-vee dee kən-ven-shee-oh-nee).

"The writ of covenant (breve de conventionione) is not mentioned by Glanvill; but it appears within a short time after the publication of his book and already in the early years of Henry III. It can be had 'as of course,' at all events when the tenement that is in question is of small value. Before Henry's death it has become a popular writ . . . The great majority of actions of covenant are brought merely in order that they may be compromised. We doubt whether any principle was involved in the choice; but may infer that the procedure instituted by this writ was cheap and expeditious for those who wished to get to their final concord." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 216-17 (2d ed. 1899).

writ of debt. See DEBT (4).

writ of deceit. Hist. A writ against one who deceives and damages another by acting in the other's name.

writ of deliverance. See DELIVERANCE (3).

writ of detinue. (17c) A writ in an action for detinue. See DETINUE. [Cases: Detinue ↷ 1.]

writ of dower. 1. DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. 2. A widow's writ of right of dower providing her the remainder of the dower to which she is entitled after part of it had been assigned by the tenant. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy ↷ 70.1.]

writ of ejectment. (17c) The writ in an action of ejectment for the recovery of land. See EJECTMENT. [Cases: Ejectment ↷ 120.]

writ of elegit. See ELEGIT.

writ of entry. (16c) A writ that allows a person wrongfully dispossessed of real property to enter and retake the property.

writ of error. (15c) 1. A writ issued by an appellate court directing a lower court to deliver the record in the case for review. Cf. ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↷ 5, 398.]

"The writ of error is the most common of all the forms of remedial process available to an unsuccessful party after a final determination of the merits of the action, and is in common use in this country at the present time, where the common-law modes of procedure are followed. Its object . . . is to obtain a reversal of the judgment, either by reason of some error in fact affecting the validity and regularity of the legal decision itself, or on account of some mistake or error in law, apparent upon the face of the record, from which the judgment appears to have been given for the wrong party." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 337, at 538 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

writ of error coram nobis. See CORAM NOBIS.

writ of error coram vobis. See CORAM VOBIS.

2. Hist. A writ issued by a chancery court, at the request of a party who was unsuccessful at trial, directing the trial court either to examine the record itself or to send it to another court of appellate jurisdiction to be examined, so that some alleged error in the proceedings may be corrected.

writ of escheat. Hist. A writ allowing a lord to take possession of lands that had escheated to him. See ESCHEAT (1).

writ of monstravunt. See MONSTRAVUNT.

writ of ne exeat. See NE EXEAT.

writ of perambulation. Hist. A common-law writ issued by agreement of both parties when they are in doubt about the bounds of their respective properties, directing the sheriff to walk the jury around the property to set the boundaries with certainty. See PERAMBULATION. [Cases: Boundaries ↷26.]

writ of possession. (17c) A writ issued to recover the possession of land. [Cases: Ejectment ↷120.]

writ of praecipe. See PRAECIPE (1).

writ of prevention. (17c) A writ to prevent the filing of a lawsuit. See QUIA TIMET.

writ of privilege. Hist. An action to enforce or maintain a privilege, usu. one granted by statute or by a court. • Traditionally, the writ was used to protect legislators from arrest in civil suits during a legislative session. Parties and witnesses who did not reside within a court's jurisdiction were also privileged against service of process in civil suits while attending the court and while traveling to or from it.

"The privilege of a suitor or witness to be exempt from service of process while without the jurisdiction of his residence for the purpose of attending court in an action to which he is a party, or in which he is to be sworn as a witness, is a very ancient one. It has always been held to extend to every proceeding of a judicial nature taken in or emanating from a duly-constituted tribunal which directly relates to the trial of the issues involved. It is not simply a personal privilege, but it is also the privilege of the court, and is deemed necessary for the maintenance of its authority and dignity and in order to promote the due and efficient administration of justice. At common law a writ of privilege or protection would be granted to the party or witness by the court in which the action was pending, which would be respected by all other courts. . . . [T]he writ may still be granted by courts possessing a common law jurisdiction; but while the granting of the writ is proper, it is not necessary for the enjoyment of the privilege, and the only office which it can is to afford convenient and authentic notice to those about to do what would be a violation of the privilege, and to set it forth and command due respect to it. The tendency has been not to restrict, but to enlarge, the right of privilege so as to afford full protection to parties and witnesses from all forms of civil process during their attendance at court, and for a reasonable time in going and returning." Parker v. Marco 32 N.E. 989, 989 (N.Y. 1893) (citations omitted).

writ of probable cause. See CERTIFICATE OF APPEALABILITY.

writ of proclamation. Hist. A writ, issued at the time an exigent was issued, ordering the sheriff of the county of a defendant's residence to make three proclamations of outlawry in a public and notorious place a month before the outlawry is declared. See OUTLAW.

writ of prohibition. See PROHIBITION (2).

writ of protection. (17c) 1. A writ to protect a witness in a judicial proceeding who is threatened with arrest. 2. A writ exempting anyone in the Crown's service from arrest in a civil proceeding for a year and a day.

writ of quare impedit. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

writ of quominus. See QUOMINUS.

writ of quorum nobis. See CORAM NOBIS.

writ of quo warranto. See QUO WARRANTO (1).

writ of rebellion. See COMMISSION OF REBELLION.

writ of recaption. Hist. A writ allowing a plaintiff to recover goods and damages from a defendant who makes a second distress while a replevin action for a previous distress is pending. See RECAPTION.

writ of replevin. See REPLEVIN (2).

writ of restitution. (17c) 1. The process of enforcing a civil judgment in a forcible-entry-and-detainer action or enforcing restitution on a verdict in a criminal prosecution for forcible entry and detainer. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer ↷41; Landlord and Tenant ↷291(17).]

"In some states, following the British statutes, the prosecutor may have a writ of restitution for the premises immediately on the rendition of a verdict of guilty on an indictment for forcible entry and detainer; and the operation of such writ of restitution is not suspended by an appeal by the defendant." 35 Am. Jur. 2d Forcible Entry and Detainer § 61, at 931 (1967).

2. A common-law writ issued when a judgment is reversed, whereby all that was lost as a result of the judgment is restored to the prevailing party. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↷1179.]

writ of review. (18c) A general form of process issuing from an appellate court to bring up for review the record of the proceedings in the court below; the common-law writ of certiorari. [Cases: Courts ↷207.1; Review ↷1.]

writ of right. See WRIT OF COURSE.

writ of second deliverance. See second deliverance under DELIVERANCE.

writ of sequestration. (18c) A writ ordering that a court be given custody of something or that something not be taken from the jurisdiction, such as the collateral for a promissory note. • Such a writ is usu. issued during litigation, often so that the object will be available for attachment or execution after judgment. [Cases: Sequestration ↷13.]

writ of summons. English law. A writ by which, under the Judicature Acts of 1873–1875, all actions were commenced. See SUMMONS.

writ of superseedeas. See SUPERSEDEAS.

writ of supervisory control. (1901) A writ issued to correct an erroneous ruling made by a lower court either when there is no appeal or when an appeal cannot provide adequate relief and the ruling will result in gross injustice. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 207.1.]

writ of testatum fieri facias. See TESTATUM (1).

writ of threats. See SECURITATE PACIS.

writ of toll (tohtl). See TOLT.

writ of trial. Hist. English law. By the Civil Procedure Act of 1835, a writ ordering an action brought in a superior court to be tried in an inferior court or before the undersheriff. • It was superseded by the County Courts Act of 1867, ch. 142, § 6 authorizing a defendant, in certain cases, to obtain an order that an action is to be tried in a county court. St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 42.

writ of venire facias. See VENIRE FACIAS.

writ of waste. Hist. A writ to recover damages against a tenant who committed waste. See WASTE (1). [Cases: Waste ⇨ 14.]

"After waste had been actually committed, the ancient corrective remedy, in a court of common law, was by a writ of waste for the recovery of the place wasted, and treble damages as a compensation for the injury done to the inheritance." 78 Am. Jur. 2d Waste § 29, at 417 (1975).

writ of withernam. See capias in withernam under WITHERNAM.

writ pro retorno habendo (proh ri-tor-noh hæ-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin "for return to be had"] Hist. A writ ordering the return of goods to a defendant who, upon the plaintiff's default, obtained a favorable judgment in a replevin action. See DELIVERANCE (4).

writ system. (1890) The common-law procedural system under which a plaintiff commences an action by obtaining the appropriate type of original writ.

written contract. See CONTRACT.

written description. See DESCRIPTION (5).

written directive. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE (2).

written law. See LAW.

written testimony. See TESTIMONY.

written warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

wrong, n. (bef. 12c) Breach of one's legal duty; violation of another's legal right. [Cases: Torts ⇨ 107.] — wrong, vb.

"A wrong may be described, in the largest sense, as anything done or omitted contrary to legal duty, considered in so far as it gives rise to liability." Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 68 (1896).

"A wrong is simply a wrong act — an act contrary to the rule of right and justice. A synonym of it is injury, in its true and primary sense of injuria (that which is contrary to ius) . . ." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 227 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

civil wrong. (17c) A violation of noncriminal law, such as a tort, a breach of contract or trust, a breach of statutory duty, or a defect in performing a public duty; the breach of a legal duty treated as the subject matter of a civil proceeding. See TORT (1). Cf. CRIME.

continuing wrong. (1846) An ongoing wrong that is capable of being corrected by specific enforcement.

• An example is the nonpayment of a debt.

intentional wrong. (18c) A wrong in which the mens rea amounts to intention, purpose, or design. — Also termed willful wrong.

legal wrong. (18c) An act that is a violation of the law; an act authoritatively prohibited by a rule of law.

moral wrong. (18c) An act that is contrary to the rule of natural justice. — Also termed natural wrong.

personal wrong. An invasion of a personal right.

positive wrong. (18c) A wrongful act willfully committed.

private wrong. (16c) An offense committed against a private person and dealt with at the instance of the person injured.

public wrong. (16c) An offense committed against the state or the community at large, and dealt with in a proceeding to which the state is itself a party. • Not all public wrongs are crimes. For example, a person that breaches a contract with the government commits a public wrong, but the offense is a civil one, not a criminal one.

real wrong. An injury to the freehold.

transitory wrong. (2004) A wrong that, once committed, belongs to the irrevocable past. • An example is defamation.

willful wrong. See intentional wrong.

wrong of negligence. (1902) A wrong in which the mens rea is a form of mere carelessness, as opposed to wrongful intent.

wrong of strict liability. (1986) A wrong in which a mens rea is not required because neither wrongful intent nor culpable negligence is a necessary condition of responsibility.

wrongdoer, n. (15c) One who violates the law <both criminals and tortfeasors are wrongdoers>. — wrongdoing, n.

wrongful, adj. (14c) 1. Characterized by unfairness or injustice <wrongful military invasion>. 2. Contrary to law; unlawful <wrongful termination>. 3. (Of a person) not entitled to the position occupied <wrongful possessor>. — wrongfully, adv.

wrongful act. See wrongful conduct under CONDUCT.

wrongful adoption. 1. An adoption in which the adoption agency fails to provide adoptive parents with full or accurate information regarding the child's physical or psychological background. • The adoptive parents normally do not seek to nullify the adoption. Rather, they seek damages, usu. for medical care and for emotional distress. 2. An adoptive parent's legal claim against an adoption agency for not fully or accurately disclosing the child's physical or psychological background. Cf. ABROGATION OF ADOPTION. [Cases: Infants ↷17.]

wrongful-birth action. (1972) A lawsuit brought by parents against a doctor for failing to advise them prospectively about the risks of their having a child with birth defects. [Cases: Health ↷687.] wrongful-conception action. See WRONGFUL-PREGNANCY ACTION.

wrongful conduct. See CONDUCT.

wrongful-death action. (1926) A lawsuit brought on behalf of a decedent's survivors for their damages resulting from a tortious injury that caused the decedent's death. — Also termed death action; death case. Cf. SURVIVAL ACTION. [Cases: Death ↷7–33.]

wrongful-death statute. (1904) A statute authorizing a decedent's personal representative to bring a wrongful-death action for the benefit of certain beneficiaries. — Formerly also termed death-damage statute. [Cases: Death ↷11.]

wrongful discharge. See DISCHARGE (7).

wrongful-discharge action. (1957) A lawsuit brought by an ex-employee against the former employer, alleging that the termination of employment violated a contract or was illegal. — Also termed wrongful-termination action. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷850.]

wrongful dishonor, n. (1895) A refusal to accept or pay (a negotiable instrument) when it is properly presented and is payable. Cf. DISHONOR (1).

wrongful- eviction action. A lawsuit brought by a former tenant or possessor of real property against one who has put the plaintiff out of possession, alleging that the eviction was illegal. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷180, 278, 278.17, 292, 318.]

wrongful garnishment. See GARNISHMENT.

wrongful levy. See LEVY.

wrongful-life action. (1963) A lawsuit brought by or on behalf of a child with birth defects, alleging that but for the doctor-defendant's negligent advice, the parents would not have conceived the child or, if they had, would have aborted the fetus to avoid the pain and suffering resulting from the child's congenital defects. • Most jurisdictions reject these claims. [Cases: Health ↷687.]

wrongful-pregnancy action. (1979) A lawsuit brought by a parent for damages resulting from a pregnancy following a failed sterilization. — Also termed wrongful-conception action. [Cases: Health ↷686.]

wrongful process. See ABUSE OF PROCESS.

wrongful-termination action. See WRONGFUL-DISCHARGE ACTION.

wrong of negligence. See WRONG.

wrong of strict liability. See WRONG.

wrong verdict. See verdict contrary to law under VERDICT.

WTO. See WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION.

wyte (wit). Hist. 1. An immunity from an amercement. See AMERCEMENT. 2. See WITE.

X

X. abbr. 1. EX DIVIDEND. 2. EX RIGHTS. 3. EX DISTRIBUTION. 4. EX WARRANTS.

X. 1. A mark serving as the signature of a person who is physically handicapped or illiterate. • The signer's name usu. appears near the mark, and if the mark is to be notarized as a signature, two signing witnesses are ordinarily required in addition to the notary public. [Cases: Signatures ⇨ 5.] 2. A symbol equivalent to "by" when used in giving dimensions, as in 3 x 5 inches. 3. A mark placed on a document (such as an application) to indicate a selection, such as "yes" or "no"; esp., a mark on a ballot to indicate a vote.

XD. abbr. EX DIVIDEND.

XDIS. abbr. EX DISTRIBUTION.

xenodochium (zen-ə-də-ki-əm or -dok-ee-əm), n. [fr. Greek xenos "a guest" + dochein "to receive"] Roman law. 1. An inn. 2. A hospital. • This was a charitable institution to which donations and legacies might validly be given. — Also termed xenodochion; xenodochium; xenodochy.

X-patent. Patents. An early U.S. patent, granted before the numbering system set up in the Patent Act of 1836 and so named because an X was added to the numbers of existing patents to avoid duplicate numbers.

XQ. See cross-question under QUESTION (1).

XR. abbr. EX-RIGHTS.

XW. abbr. EX-WARRANTS.

xylon (zi-lon), n. [fr. Greek xulon "wood"] Archaic. A Greek punishment apparatus similar to stocks.

XYY-chromosome defense. Criminal law. A defense, usu. asserted as the basis for an insanity plea, whereby a male defendant argues that his criminal behavior is due to the genetic abnormality of having an extra Y chromosome, which causes him to have uncontrollable aggressive impulses. • Most courts have rejected this defense because its scientific foundations are uncertain. — Also termed XYY defense. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

"As one commentator has suggested . . . 'an attorney defending an XYY individual will be required to call upon both a geneticist and a psychiatrist to give expert testimony. The geneticist's role would be to testify with respect to the individual's genetic structure, any distinguishing characteristics which are relevant to an insanity defense, and the result of family studies designated to determine the influence of genetics and environment on the development of this individual. The psychiatrist's testimony would focus upon the defendant's mental capacity or condition.' But in the absence of sound medical support for an XYY defense, courts are understandably unsympathetic to defense efforts to obtain such expert testimony." Wayne R. LaFare & Austin W. Scott Jr., Criminal Law § 4.8, at 380 (2d ed. 1986) (quoting Note, 57 Geo. L.J. 892, 902-03 (1969)).

XYY syndrome. The abnormal presence of an extra Y chromosome in a male, theoretically resulting in increased aggressiveness and antisocial behavior sometimes resulting in criminal conduct. See XYY-CHROMOSOME DEFENSE.

Y

Y2K warranty. abbr. Year 2000 warranty; a warranty that software, hardware, or a product having computer hardware or software components will function properly on and after January 1, 2000. • These warranties were common in the late 1990s.

yank-cheating, n. The illegal practice of inserting paper money into a vending machine, then pulling the money out again after the machine has recognized it, thereby retaining the cash and unlawfully obtaining merchandise.

yardland, n. Hist. A variable quantity of land, often 20 acres. — Also termed virgata terrae (var-gay-tə-tee).

yardstick theory. Antitrust. A method of determining damages for lost profits (and sometimes overcharges) whereby a corporate plaintiff identifies a company similar to the plaintiff but without the impact of the antitrust violation. Cf. BEFORE-AND-AFTER THEORY; MARKET-SHARE THEORY.

"To the extent that either the markets or firms being compared are dissimilar, the yardstick theory will not produce a trustworthy estimate of what the plaintiff would have earned but for the defendant's conduct. The method therefore works best in markets that are both local and relatively homogeneous." Herbert Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law § 16.7, at 454 (1985).

yea, n. Parliamentary law. An affirmative vote.

yea and nay (yay / nay). Yes and no. • In old records, this was a mere assertion and denial without the necessity of an oath.

year, 1. Twelve calendar months beginning January 1 and ending December 31. — Also termed calendar year. 2. A consecutive 365-day period beginning at any point; a span of twelve months. [Cases: Time ↻4.]

fiscal year. An accounting period of 12 consecutive months <the company's fiscal year is October 1 to September 30>. • A fiscal year is often different from the calendar year, esp. for tax purposes. — Also termed fiscal period.

half-year. In legal computation, a period of 182 days.

natural year. Hist. The period of 365 days and about 6 hours, or the time it takes the earth to orbit the sun.

tax year. The period used for computing federal or state income-tax liability, usu. either the calendar year or a fiscal year of 12 months ending on the last day of a month other than December. — Also termed taxable year. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3075–3093; Cases: Taxation ↻3509, 3538.]

Year 2000 warranty. See Y2K WARRANTY.

year and a day. The common-law time limit fixed for various purposes, such as claiming rights, exemptions, or property (such as rights to wreckage or estrays), or for prosecuting certain acts — so called because a year was formerly counted to include the first and last day, meaning that a year from January 1 was December 31, so a year and a day would then mean a full year from January 1 through January 1. — Also termed year and day; (formerly in Scots law) zeir and day. See YEAR-AND-A-DAY RULE; YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE.

year-and-a-day rule. (1876) Criminal law. The common-law principle that an act causing death is not homicide if the death occurs more than a year and a day after the act was committed. • In Latin, the phrase year and a day was commonly rendered annus et dies. [Cases: Homicide ↻510.]

"It has long been the rule that no one can be convicted of the murder or manslaughter of another person who does not die within a year and a day of the blow received or other cause of death. 'Day' was here added merely to indicate that the 365th day after that of the injury must be included. Such an indication was rendered necessary by an old rule (now obsolete) that, in criminal law, in reckoning a period 'from' the doing of any act, the period was (in favour of prisoners) to be taken as beginning on the very day when this act was done." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 105 (16th ed. 1952).

"The phrase 'year and a day,' in this test [for proving causation of a person's death], means no more than a year. The accepted method of computing time today is by excluding the first day and including the last. Thus a year from January first is the first day of the following January. In ancient times, however, there was a tendency to include both the first day and the last day so that a year from January first was thought of as the thirty-first of the following December, and 'the day was added that there might be a whole year.' The use of this peculiar phrase to mean just a year in the homicide cases has found expression in some of the statutes. Other enactments have wisely dropped this ancient jingle." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 778 (3d ed. 1982).

"Several centuries ago, when doctors knew very little about medicine, the judges created an absolute rule of law: one cannot be guilty of murder if the victim lives for a year and a day after the blow. The difficulty in proving that the blow caused the death after so long an interval was obviously the basis of the rule. Now that doctors know infinitely more, it seems strange that the year-and-a-day rule should survive to the present, but it has done so in most of the American states, either by judicial decision or by statute." Wayne R. LaFave & Austin W. Scott Jr., Criminal Law § 3.12, at 299 (2d ed. 1986).

"The year and a day rule is widely viewed as an outdated relic of the common law." Rogers v. Tennessee, 532 U.S. 451, 462, 121 S.Ct. 1693, 1701 (2001) (O'Connor, J.).

year and day. See YEAR AND A DAY.

Year Books. Hist. Books of cases anonymously and fairly regularly reported covering primarily the period from the reign of Edward I to the time of Henry VIII. • The title "Year Books" derives from their being grouped under the regnal years of the sovereigns in whose reigns the reported cases were cited. The reports were probably originally prepared by law teachers and students and later by professional reporters or scribes. — Also written Year-Books; year-books; yearbooks. — Also termed terms. Cf. ABBREVIATIO PLACITORUM.

"[F]rom 1300 there is a continuous stream of reports of arguments in the common Pleas. The reports were written in Anglo-French, the language of courtly speech. Their authorship is unknown, and they are referred to by the generic name 'year-books' If we have to account for their beginning, the most likely explanation is that they arose from a case-method of instruction in the law school which served the apprentices of the Bench before the emergence of the inns of court For the same reason, the contemporary value of the earliest reports lay not in their historical authenticity as precedents but in the ideas and suggestions which they contained Once the age of experiment was over, the reports settled into a more uniform and at times apparently single series The year-books did not end at any fixed date. What has usually been taken as their end is the result of two concurrent factors: the advent of printing, and the practice of identifying reports by the name of the author." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 205-07 (3d ed. 1990).

year, day, and waste. Hist. A right of the Crown to the profits and waste for a year and a day of the land of persons convicted of petty treason or felony (unless the lord made redemption), after which the Crown had to restore the property to the lord of the fee. The right was abrogated by the Corruption of Blood Act of 1814. — Also termed (in Law French) ann, jour, et wast; (in Law Latin) annus, dies, et vastum.

year-end dividend. See DIVIDEND.

year in mourning. See ANNUS LUCTUS.

Year of Our Lord. See ANNO DOMINI.

year-to-year tenancy. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

yeas and nays. The affirmative and negative votes on a bill or resolution before a deliberative assembly. See roll-call vote under VOTE (4). [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 19.]

yellow-dog contract. An employment contract forbidding membership in a labor union. • Such a contract is generally illegal under federal and state law.

yeoman (yoh-mən). 1. Hist. An attendant in a royal or noble household. 2. Hist. A commoner; a freeholder (under the rank of gentleman) who holds land yielding 40 shillings per year.

"A yeoman is he that hath free land of forty shillings by the year, who was thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo [an upright and law-abiding man]." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 394 (1765).

3. English law. One who owns and cultivates property.

4. A petty officer performing clerical work in the U.S. Navy. — Also sometimes spelled yoman.

yeoman of the guard. A member of a corps of officers whose primary duties are to ceremonially guard the English royal household. • A yeoman is usu. at least six feet tall, is of the best rank under the gentry, and is generally exempt from arrest on civil process. — Also termed yeoman of the guard of the royal household.

yeomanry (yoh-mən-ree). 1. The collective body of yeomen. 2. Volunteer cavalry units in Great Britain, later transferred to the Territorial Army.

yeven (yev-ən or yiv-ən). Hist. Given; dated. — Also spelled yeoven (yoh-vən).

Yick Wo doctrine (yik woh). (1958) The principle that a law or ordinance giving a person or entity absolute discretion to give or withhold permission to carry on a lawful business violates the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064 (1886).

yield, n. (bef. 12c) Profit expressed as a percentage of the investment. — Also termed yield on investment; return. See RATE OF RETURN.

coupon yield. The annual interest paid on a security (esp. a bond) divided by the security's par value. — Also termed nominal yield.

current yield. The annual interest paid on a security (esp. a bond) divided by the security's current market price.

discount yield. The yield on a security sold at a discount.

earnings yield. The earnings per share of a security divided by its market price. • The higher the ratio, the better the investment yield. — Also termed earnings-price ratio. Cf. PRICE-EARNINGS RATIO.

net yield. The profit or loss on an investment after deducting all appropriate costs and loss reserves.

nominal yield. See coupon yield.

yield, vb. 1. To give up, relinquish, or surrender (a right, etc.) <yield the floor>. 2. Parliamentary law. (Of a motion) to give way to a higher-ranking motion. Cf. PRECEDENCE (3).

"If two motions 'A' and 'B' are related under rules of parliamentary procedure in such a way that motion 'B' can be made while motion 'A' is pending and, when stated by the chair, can thus temporarily replace 'A' as the immediately pending question, motion 'B' takes precedence over (or takes precedence of) motion 'A,' and motion 'A' yields to motion 'B.' A secondary motion thus takes precedence over the main motion; and a main motion takes precedence over nothing and yields to all applicable secondary motions." Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 5, at 57-58 (10th ed. 2000).

3. Hist. To perform a service owed by a tenant to a lord <yield and pay>. See YIELDING AND PAYING.

yield on investment. See YIELD.

yield spread. The differences in yield between various securities issues.

yield to maturity. The rate of return from an investment if the investment is held until it matures. — Abbr. YTM. Cf. TIME VALUE.

yokelet (yohk-lit), n. Hist. A small farm requiring only one yoke of oxen to till it.

yoman. See YEOMAN.

York, custom of. Hist. A custom prevalent in York whereby a male intestate's effects were divided according to the doctrine of pars rationabilis (“a reasonable part”) — that is, one-third each to the widow, children, and administrator, one-half to the administrator if the man was married but had no children or was single but had children, or all to the administrator if the man was single with no children.

York, Statute of. Hist. An English statute passed in York in the twelfth year of Edward II’s reign, and including provisions on the subject of attorneys, witnesses, and the taking of inquests by nisi prius.

York–Antwerp rules. Maritime law. A set of rules relating to the settlement of maritime losses and disputes arising from bills of lading. • Although these rules have no statutory authority, they are incorporated into almost all bills of lading. The Rules are maintained and updated by the Comité Maritime International (CMI). [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 186, 187, 197.]

Younger abstention. See ABSTENTION.

younger-generation devise. See DEVISE.

young offender. See youthful offender under OFFENDER.

your Honor. (16c) A title customarily used when directly addressing a judge or other high official. Cf. HIS HONOR.

your witness. See TAKE THE WITNESS.

Youth Correction Authority Act. A model act, promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1940, that proposed the creation of central state commissions responsible for setting up appropriate agencies that would determine the proper treatment for each youthful offender committed to the agency by the courts. • The Act is noteworthy for its emphasis on rehabilitating juvenile offenders, as opposed to punishing them.

youth court. See teen court under COURT.

youthful offender. 1. See OFFENDER. 2. JUVENILE DELINQUENT.

youth shelter. See SHELTER.

yo-yo stock. See volatile stock under STOCK.

YTM. abbr. YIELD TO MATURITY.

Z

zap. See INTERSUBJECTIVE ZAP.

ZBA. abbr. ZERO-BRACKET AMOUNT.

Z-bond. See accrual bond under BOND (3).

zealous witness. See WITNESS.

zeir and day (yeer). See YEAR AND DAY. • Zeir is an obsolete graphic variant of year.

zero-bracket amount. A tax deduction formerly available to all individual taxpayers, regardless of whether they itemized their deductions. • In 1944 this was replaced by the standard deduction. — Abbr. ZBA. See standard deduction under DEDUCTION.

zero-coupon bond. See BOND (3).

zero-coupon security. See SECURITY.

zero-rate mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

zero-tolerance policy. (1990) An established plan or method of action stating that certain acts will not be permitted or condoned. • School districts often have a zero-tolerance policy regarding the use of drugs and alcohol on school premises or at school-sponsored functions. In 1995 Congress enacted a nationwide zero-tolerance statute to combat underage drinking.

zetetic (zi-tet-ik), adj. Hist. Proceeding by inquiry; investigative. — Also spelled zetetick.

ZIFT. abbr. ZYGOTE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER.

zipper clause. Contracts. A contractual provision that operates both as an integration clause and as a no-oral-modification clause. See INTEGRATION CLAUSE; NO-ORAL-MODIFICATION CLAUSE.

"[A] 'zipper clause' . . . so called because the combination of the integration clause and the no-oral-modification clause is intended to foreclose claims of any representations outside the written contract . . ." Pace v. Honolulu Disposal Serv., 227 F.3d 1150, 1159 (9th Cir. 2000).

zone. 1. An area that is different or is distinguished from surrounding areas <zone of danger>. 2. An area in a city or town that, through zoning regulations, is under particular restrictions as to building size, land use, and the like <the capitol is at the center of the height-restriction zone>. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷31.]

floating zone. An amount of land assigned for a particular use but in no particular location. • An applicant who owns the specified amount of land can apply for a use permit in a specific location. See floating zoning under ZONING.

holding zone. Temporary, low-density zoning used until a community determines how the area should be rezoned.

zone-of-danger rule. (1966) Torts. The doctrine allowing the recovery of damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress if the plaintiff was both located in the dangerous area created by the defendant's negligence and frightened by the risk of harm. [Cases: Damages ↷57.10, 57.16(2), 57.23(2), 57.27.]

zone of employment. Workers' compensation. The physical place of employment within which an employee, if injured there, can receive compensation. Cf. COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT; SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↷604–618, 704–770.]

zone of interests. (1969) The class or type of interests or concerns that a statute or constitutional guarantee is intended to regulate or protect. • To have standing to challenge a ruling (esp. of an administrative agency), the plaintiff must show that the specific injury suffered comes within the zone of interests protected by the statute on which the ruling was based. [Cases: Action ↷13; Administrative Law and Procedure ↷666; Federal Civil Procedure ↷103.2.]

zone of privacy. (1964) Constitutional law. A range of fundamental privacy rights that are implied in the express guarantees of the Bill of Rights. See PENUMBRA; RIGHT OF PRIVACY. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷1210–1275.]

zone search. See SEARCH.

zoning, n. (1912) The legislative division of a region, esp. a municipality, into separate districts with different regulations within the districts for land use, building size, and the like. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷1, 4.] — zone, vb.

aesthetic zoning. Zoning designed to preserve the aesthetic features or values of an area. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷36.]

bonus zoning. See incentive zoning.

cluster zoning. Zoning that favors planned-unit development by allowing a modification in lot size and frontage requirements under the condition that other land in the development be set aside for parks, schools, or other public needs. — Also termed density zoning. See PLANNED-UNIT DEVELOPMENT. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷85, 245.]

conditional zoning. Zoning in which a governmental body (without definitively committing itself) grants a zoning change subject to conditions that are usu. not imposed on similarly zoned property. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷382, 382.1.]

"Conditions imposed are designed to protect adjacent land from the loss of use value which might occur if the newly authorized use was permitted without restraint of any kind. Thus, conditional zoning seeks to minimize the potentially deleterious effect of a zone change on neighboring properties through reasonably conceived conditions which harmonize the landowner's need for rezoning with the contextual zoning. An approach to zoning that considers appropriate use of a lot based on the scale and types of nearby buildings. • Contextual zoning has been used, for example, to prevent the destruction of older, smaller residences to make room for larger houses disparagingly called "monster homes" or "mc mansions." in established neighborhoods.

contract zoning. 1. Zoning according to an agreement, by which the landowner agrees to certain restrictions or conditions in exchange for more favorable zoning treatment. • This type of contract zoning is usu. considered an illegal restraint of the government's police power, because by private agreement, the government has committed itself to a particular type of zoning. 2. Rezoning of property to a less restrictive classification subject to the landowner's agreement to observe specified limitations on the use and physical development of the property that are not imposed on other property in the zone. • This device is esp. used when property is located in a more restrictive zone that borders on a less restrictive zone. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 160.]

cumulative zoning. A method of zoning in which any use permitted in a higher-use, less intensive zone is permissible in a lower-use, more intensive zone. • For example, under this method, a house could be built in an industrial zone but a factory could not be built in a residential zone.

density zoning. See cluster zoning.

Euclidean zoning (yoo-klid-ee-ən). Zoning by specific and uniform geographical division. • The purpose of Euclidean zoning is to ensure a municipality's orderly development by detailing what uses are permitted and where, and seeing that conflicting land uses are clearly separated. Its name comes from the Supreme Court case that approved it: Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114 (1926). — Also termed use zoning. Cf. non-Euclidean zoning. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 1, 31.]

"Operating from the premise that everything has its place, zoning is the comprehensive division of a city into different use zones. Use zoning is also known as Euclidean zoning, taking the name from the leading case of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., which upheld its validity. . . . In the typical zoning ordinance each zone has three varieties of uses: permitted, accessory and conditional. Ordinances may also specifically prohibit some uses." Julian Conrad Juergensmeyer & Thomas E. Roberts, Land Use Planning and Development Regulation Law § 4.2, at 69 (2003).

exclusionary zoning. Zoning that excludes a specific class or type of business from a district. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 1.]

floating zoning. Zoning that allots land for particular uses but does not specify the geographic locations for those uses. • This is a type of non-Euclidean zoning. It allows a zoning board to make individual rulings on every application for a particular use and take into account the community's current feelings about where or if the use should be allowed. See non-Euclidean zoning.

incentive zoning. A relaxation in zoning restrictions (such as density limits) that offers an incentive to a developer to provide certain public benefits (such as building low-income housing units). — Also termed bonus zoning. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 382.1.]

interim zoning. Temporary emergency zoning pending revisions to existing ordinances or the development of a final zoning plan. — Also termed stopgap zoning. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 22.]

inverse zoning. Zoning that attempts to disperse particular types of property use rather than concentrate them.

non-Euclidean zoning. Zoning that allows a mix of land uses in the same area if the uses are or can be made nonconflicting. • For example, a business might be permitted to operate in a residential area if the business adopts a certain architecture to blend in with other structures and has sufficient landscaping and setback to guarantee that nearby residents will not suffer excessive noise, pollution, or other nuisances. Cf. Euclidean zoning.

partial zoning. Zoning that affects only a portion of a municipality's territory, and that is usu. invalid because it contradicts the comprehensive zoning plan. — Also termed piecemeal zoning. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 35, 162.]

private zoning. The use of restrictive covenants in private agreements to restrict the use and occupancy of real property. • Private zoning often covers such things as lot size, building lines, architectural specifications, and property uses. [Cases: Covenants ⇨ 1, 49, 69.]

reverse spot zoning. Zoning of a large area of land without regard for the zoning of a small piece of land within that area. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 35, 162.]

"When parcels around a given property are rezoned to allow for higher uses leaving an island of less intensive use, reverse spot zoning is the result." Donald G. Hagman & Julian Conrad Juergensmeyer, Urban Planning and Land Development Control Law § 5.4, at 136 (2d ed. 1986).

spot zoning. Zoning of a particular piece of land without regard for the zoning of the larger area surrounding the land. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⇨ 35, 162.]

"To the popular mind, spot zoning means the improper permission to use an 'island' of land for a more intensive use than permitted on adjacent properties. The popular definition needs several qualifications. . . . The set of facts usually involves an 'island' of more intensive use than surrounding property. . . . Usually the 'island' is small. . . . Furthermore, the term is not properly applied to development permission that comes about by variance or special exception. Rather, the term refers to a legislative act, such as a rezoning, or to a situation in which the 'island' is created by the original ordinance." Donald G. Hagman & Julian Conrad Juergensmeyer, Urban Planning and Land Development Control Law § 5.4, at 136 (2d ed. 1986).

stopgap zoning. See interim zoning.

use zoning. See Euclidean zoning.

zoning map. The map that is created by a zoning ordinance and shows the various zoning districts. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↪30.]

zoning ordinance. (1919) A city ordinance that regulates the use to which land within various parts of the city may be put. • It allocates uses to the various districts of a municipality, as by allocating residences to certain parts and businesses to other parts. A comprehensive zoning ordinance usu. regulates the height of buildings and the proportion of the lot area that must be kept free from buildings. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↪4, 21.]

zoning variance. See VARIANCE (2).

zygomic (zig-noh-mik), adj. Of, relating to, or involving an act whose evolution directly abridges the freedom of a person who bears a duty in the enjoyment of a legal advantage. • This rather abstract term was coined by the philosopher Albert Kocourek in his book Jural Relations (1927). Cf. MESONOMIC. zygocephalum (zi-gə-sef-ə-ləm), n. [Greek fr. zygo- “yoke, pair” + kephalos “head”] Hist. A measure of land, esp. the amount that can be plowed in one day.

zygostates (zi-goh-stay-teez), n. [Greek] Roman law. An officer who resolved controversies over weight; a public weigher.

zygote. A two-celled organism formed by the joining of egg and sperm. Cf. EMBRYO; FETUS.

zygote intrafallopian transfer. A procedure in which mature eggs are fertilized in a test tube or petri dish and then injected into a woman’s fallopian tubes. — Abbr. ZIFT. — Also termed zygote intrafallopian-tube transfer. Cf. ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION; GAMETE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER; IN VITRO FERTILIZATION.

Table of Legal Abbreviations

L. Kurt Adamson*

This table is a working table of abbreviations, i.e. abbreviations cited in American cases, books, articles, and texts, and not restricted to standard abbreviations found in legal citation manuals. The scope of abbreviations includes the names of common federal and state primary sources, legal periodicals, treatises, and organizations, as well as selected words or phrases commonly found in American publications from the 19th century forward. There are also selected abbreviations for English, Canadian, Australian, and international sources.

The table has unique features in its two-part format. The main table lists fuller publication titles than may be found in other abbreviation tables. The second part lists the full names of individual authors referred to in the main abbreviation table. These fuller titles and author names may help in finding publications through a library catalog.

Not every variation for a publication's abbreviation is listed. But the table can be used to interpret abbreviations not listed. First, the same publication or organization may be abbreviated with or without periods, such as "UPA" or "U.P.A." This table lists only one version. Second, standardized citations and abbreviations were not adopted until the 20th century. For example, Willard Phillips's Treatise on the Law of Evidence is cited in various sources as:

Phillips, Law of Evidence

Phillips on Evidence

Phillips, Evidence

Phillips, Ev.

Phil. Ev.

So the reader may use this table's information to interpret other variations of a publication's abbreviation. Many 19th-century treatises were published in numerous editions. Other parts of the citation are therefore essential to identify which edition of a work is being cited. Furthermore, the format "author on ____" (such as Phillips on Evidence) was a common citation practice throughout the 19th and early 20th centuries, even though it was only a common shorthand for the work or perhaps the title that appeared on its spine, but not the formal title of the work as found on its title page. Thus, this table provides at least the beginning portion of titles to treatises.

The table is arranged in alphabetical order as if each abbreviation is one word without punctuation or spacing. Organizations are commonly cited without periods in the abbreviation. If an author's name is abbreviated, the full last name precedes the listed title. An author's initials are also included if there is more than one author with the same last name in the table. Finally, the ampersand (&) is treated, for purposes of order, as the word "and" in the abbreviation.

This table is not intended to be comprehensive. Other abbreviations may be found in the following sources, Mary M. Prince, Bieber's Dictionary of Legal Abbreviations: A Reference Guide for Attorneys, Legal Secretaries, Paralegals and Law Students, 5th ed. (2001), Donald Raistrick, Index to Legal Citations and Abbreviations, 2d ed. (1993), Charles C. Soule, The Lawyer's Reference Manual (1884), or John G. Marvin, Legal Bibliography, or A Thesaurus of American, English, Irish and Scotch Law Books (1847). For non-English language abbreviations, see Bieber and Raistrick, above, but also Igor I. Kavass and Mary M. Prince, A World Dictionary of Legal Abbreviations (1991-) or Arturo L. Torres and Francisco Avalos, Latin American Legal Abbreviations: A Comprehensive Spanish/Portuguese Dictionary with English Translations (1989).

Appendix B

Legal Maxims

In the first edition of this dictionary, published in 1891, Henry Campbell Black remarked that the book contained “a complete collection of legal maxims,” adding: “These have not been grouped in one body, but distributed in their proper alphabetical order through the book. This is believed to be the more convenient arrangement” (p. iv). Although it might indeed have been more convenient for readers who knew the maxims they wanted to look up — as 19th-century readers might have been apt to — spreading Latin sentences throughout the book is decidedly inconvenient for most dictionary users today. We have therefore collected them for ease of reference. A bibliography of works cited appears on page 1909.

Of course, many scholars have long been intolerant with those who use maxims to decide cases. As James Fitzjames Stephen, one of the great 19th-century legal scholars, incisively put it before Black’s work appeared:

It seems to me that legal maxims in general are little more than pert headings of chapters. They are rather minims than maxims, for they give not a particularly great but a particularly small amount of information. As often as not, the exceptions and disqualifications to them are more important than the so-called rules.¹

Other scholars have been equally derisive.²

But there is an element of fun in legal maxims: they sometimes express surprising insights — and these from ancient writers. Though they will not clinch arguments, they will delight many readers who have a historical bent.

Ab abusu ad usum non valet consequentia. A conclusion about the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria. No injury is done by things long acquiesced in.

Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est ut concessio non sit inanis. Such number and sense is to be given to abbreviations that the grant may not be void.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loco in quo petitur. We must consider a person absent who is not in that place in which he is sought.

Absentia ejus qui reipublicae causa abest neque ei neque alii damnosa esse debet. The absence of a person who is abroad in service to the state ought to be prejudicial neither to that person nor to another. Dig. 50.17.140.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. A simple proposition needs no expositor.

Abundans cautela non nocet. Abundant caution does no harm.

Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur, suum principale. An accessory does not lead, but follows, its principal.

Accessorium non trahit principale. The accessory does not carry the principal with it.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. An accessory follows the nature of his principal.

Accipere quid ut justitiam facias non est tam accipere quam extorquere. To accept anything as a reward for doing justice is rather extorting than accepting.

Accusare nemo debet se, nisi coram Deo. No one is obliged to accuse himself, except before God.

Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audiendus, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit. A person who makes an accusation after a reasonable time has passed is not to be heard unless the person makes a satisfactory excuse for the omission.

A communi observantia non est recedendum. Common observance (or usage) is not to be departed from.

A communi observantia non est recedendum et minime mutandae sunt quae certam interpretationem habent. Common observance is not to be departed from, and things that have certain meaning are to be changed as little as possible.

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta. Outward acts indicate the thoughts hidden within.

Acta in uno judicio non probant in alio nisi inter easdem personas. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it is between the same parties.

Actio non datur non damnificato. An action is not given to one who is not injured.

Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make a person guilty unless the mind is guilty. • Properly, Actus non reum (q.v.).

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona. A personal action dies with the person.

Actio quaelibet it sua via. Every action proceeds in its own course.

Actore non probante, reus absolvitur. If the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant is acquitted.

Actori incumbit onus probandi. The burden of proof rests on the plaintiff.

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit non est audiendus. A pleader ought not to be heard who advances a proposition contrary to the rule (of law).

Actor sequitur forum rei. The plaintiff follows the forum of the defendant.

Actus curiae neminem gravabit. An act of the court will prejudice no one.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. An act of God does wrong to no one. • That is, no one is responsible in damages for inevitable accidents.

Actus Dei nemini nocet. An act of God does wrong to no one.

Actus inceptus cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiae personae, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest. An act already begun whose completion depends on the will of the parties may be recalled; but if it depends on consent of a third person or on a contingency, it cannot be recalled.

Actus judicarius coram non iudice irritus habetur; de ministeriali autem a quocumque provenit ratum esto. A judicial act before one not a judge (or without jurisdiction) is void; as to a ministerial act, from whomsoever it proceeds, let it be valid.

Actus legis nemini est damnosus. An act of the law prejudices no one.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. An act of the law does no one wrong.

Actus legitimi non recipiunt modum. Acts required by law admit of no qualification.

Actus me invito factus non est meus actus. An act done (by me) against my will is not my act.

Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make a person guilty unless the mind is guilty; an act does not make the doer criminal unless his mind is criminal. • Coke gives the maxim in a slightly different form: Actus non reum facit nisi mens sit rea. 3 Co. Inst. 54; 107.

Actus repugnans non potest in esse produci. A repugnant act cannot be brought into being (that is, cannot be made effectual).

Actus servi, in iis quibus operaejus communiter adhibita est, actus domini habetur. The act of a servant in those things in which he is usually employed is considered the act of his master.

Additio probat minoritatem. An addition proves inferiority. • That is, if it be said that a person has a fee tail, it is less than if the person has the fee.

Ad ea quae frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. The laws are adapted to those cases that occur more frequently.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio. The denomination and explanation ought to be derived from the more worthy.

Adjuvari quippe nos, non decipi, beneficio oportet. Surely we ought to be helped by a benefit, not be entrapped by it.

Ad officium justiciariorum spectat unicuique coram eis placitanti justitiam exhibere. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to everyone pleading before them.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio, nisi impediatur sententia. A relative is to be referred to the nearest antecedent, unless prevented by the sense.

Ad quaestiones facti non respondent iudices; ad quaestiones legis non respondent juratores. Judges do not answer questions of fact; jurors do not answer questions of law.

Ad quaestiones legis iudices, et non juratores, respondent. Judges, and not jurors, answer questions of law.

Ad recte docendum oportet primum inquirere nomina, quia rerum cognitio a nominibus rerum dependet. In order rightly to comprehend a thing, it is necessary first to inquire into the names, for a right knowledge of things depends on their names.

Ad reges enim potestas omnium pertinet; ad singulos, proprietas. Kings have (political) power over all things, while individuals own them.

Adversus extraneos vitiosa possessio prodesse solet. Possession though faulty is usually sufficient against outsiders. • Prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitos non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit. No one is held to answer for the effects of superior force or accidents, unless his own fault has contributed.

Aedificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. It is not lawful to build on one's own land what may be injurious to another.

Aedificatum solo solo cedit. What is built on the land goes with the land.

Aedificia solo cedunt. Buildings go with the land.

Aequior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The law's disposition is more impartial than man's.

Aequitas agit in personam. Equity acts on the person.

Aequitas est correctio legis generaliter latae qua parte deficit. Equity is the correction of some part of the law where by reason of its generality it is defective.

Aequitas est perfecta quaedam ratio quae jus scriptum interpretatur et emendat; nulla scriptura comprehensa, sed sola ratione consistens. Equity is a sort of perfect reason that interprets and amends written law; comprehended in no written text, but consisting of reason alone.

Aequitas est quasi equalitas. Equity is as it were equality.

Aequitas ignorantiae opitulatur, oscitantiae non item. Equity assists ignorance but not complacency (or carelessness).

Aequitas non facit jus, sed juri auxiliatur. Equity does not create a right, but aids the right.

Aequitas nunquam contravenit leges. Equity never contravenes the laws.

Aequitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. [Cases: Equity ↪62.]

Aequitas supervacua odit. Equity abhors superfluous things.

Aequum et bonum est lex legum. What is equitable and good is the law of laws.

Aestimatio praeteriti delicti ex postremo facto nunquam crescit. The assessment of a past offense never increases from a subsequent fact.

Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo. Your motive gives a name to your act.

Affectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus. The intention is punished even if the object is not achieved.

Affinis dicitur, cum duae cognationes, inter se divisae, per nuptias copulantur, et altera ad alterius fines accidit. Persons are said to be bound by affinity when two families, divided from one another, are united by marriage, and each approaches the borders of the other.

Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis. A person connected by marriage to someone connected by marriage to me is no connection of mine.

Affirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. The proof is incumbent on the one who affirms, not on the one who denies.

Affirmantis est probare. The person who affirms must prove.

Agentes et consentientes pari poena plectentur. Acting and consenting parties will be liable to the same punishment.

A jure suo cadunt. They fall from their right. • That is, they lose their right.

A justitia (quasi a quodam fonte) omnia jura emanant. From justice, as from a fountain, all rights flow.

Aliena negotia exacto officio geruntur. The business of another is conducted with scrupulous attention.

Alienatio licet prohibeatur, consensu tamen omnium in quorum favorem prohibita est potest fieri; et quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. Even if

- alienation is prohibited, it may yet take place by the consent of all in whose favor it is prohibited; it is in the power of anyone to renounce a right introduced for his own benefit.
- Alienatio rei praefertur juri accrescendi. Alienation of property is favored over the right to accumulate.
- A l'impossible nul n'est tenu. No one is bound to do what is impossible.
- Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneat impunita quod alias non concederetur. Something is conceded that otherwise would not be conceded, so that a wrong not remain unpunished.
- Aliquis non debet esse judex in propria causa, quia non potest esse judex et pars. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act both as judge and party.
- Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. To conceal is one thing, to be silent another.
- Aliud est distinctio, aliud separatio. Distinction is one thing, separation another.
- Aliud est possidere, aliud esse in possessione. It is one thing to possess, another to be in possession.
- Aliud est vendere, aliud vendenti consentire. To sell is one thing, to give consent to the seller another.
- Allegans contraria non est audiendus. A person making contradictory allegations is not to be heard.
- Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus. A person alleging his own wrong is not to be heard. [Cases: Contracts ↷138]
- Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat. What is not relevant if proved ought not to have been alleged.
- Allegatio contra factum non est admittenda. An allegation contrary to the deed (or fact) is not admissible.
- Alietius circumventio alii non praebet actionem. A deception practiced on one person does not give a cause of action to another.
- Alternativa petitio non est audienda. An alternative petition is not to be heard.
- Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est accipienda. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against the party who offers it.
- Ambiguus casibus semper praesumitur pro rege. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.
- Ambiguitas contra stipulatorem est. A dubious expression is construed against the party using it. [Cases: Contracts ↷155.]
- Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur. A latent ambiguity in wording is resolved by evidence; for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact is resolved by extrinsic evidence.
- Ambiguitas verborum patens nulla verificatione excluditur. A patent ambiguity is not removed by extrinsic evidence (or is never helped by averment).
- Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it.
- Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitae supremum exitum. The will of a decedent is ambulatory (that is, can be altered) until the last moment of life.
- Ancupia verborum sunt iudice indigna. Quibbling over words is unworthy of a judge.
- Angliae jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem. The laws of England are favorable in every case to liberty.
- Animus ad se omne jus ducit. The mind brings every right unto itself. • Often explained: It is to the intention that all law applies. [Cases: Deeds ↷93.]
- Animus hominis est anima scripti. The intention of the person is the soul of the instrument.
- Anniculus trecentesimo sexagesimo-quinto die dicitur, incipiente plane non exacto die, quia annum civiliter non ad momenta temporum sed ad dies numeramus. We call a child a year old on the 365th day, when the day is clearly begun but not ended, because we calculate the civil year not by moments, but by days.
- Annua nec debitum iudex non separat ipse. Even the judge apports neither annuities nor debt.
- Annus est mora motus quo suum planeta pervolvat circum. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit.
- Annus inceptus pro completo habetur. A year begun is held as completed. • Said to be of very limited application.
- A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarie negative, licet non affirmative. From impossibility to nonexistence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative.
- Apices juris non sunt jura. Legal niceties are not law.
- A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanent. Those captured by pirates or robbers remain free.
- A piratis et latronibus capta dominium non mutant. Things captured by pirates or robbers do not change their ownership.
- Applicatio est vita regulae. The application is the life of a rule.
- Aqua cedit solo. The water goes with the ground. • A grant of the land includes the water on it.
- Aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat. Water runs and ought to run as it is wont to run. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↷51.]
- Arbitramentum aequum tribuit cuique suum. A just arbitration renders to each his own.
- Arbitrium est iudicium. An award is a judgment.

Arbor dum crescit; lignum dum crescere nequit. It is a tree while it is growing; wood when it cannot grow.

A rescriptis valet argumentum. An argument from rescripts (i.e., original writs in the register) is valid.

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege. An argument drawn from authority is the strongest in law.

Argumentum ab impossibili plurimum valet in lege. An argument deduced from an impossibility has the greatest validity in law.

Argumentum ab inconvenienti plurimum valet in lege. An argument drawn from what is unsuitable (or improper) has the greatest validity in law. Co. Litt. 66a.

Argumentum a communiter accidentibus in jure frequensest. An argument from things commonly happening is frequent in law.

Argumentum a divisione est fortissimum in jure. An argument based on a subdivision of the subject is most powerful in law.

Argumentum a majori ad minus negative non valet; valet e converso. An argument from the greater to the lesser is of no force in the negative; conversely (in the affirmative) it is valid.

Argumentum a simili valet in lege. An argument by analogy (from a similar case) has force in law.

Arma in armatos sumere jura sinunt. The laws permit taking up arms against the armed.

Assignatus utitur jure auctoris. An assignee is clothed with the rights of the principal.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus neque auxilium. From the highest remedy to an inferior action there is no recourse or assistance.

Auctoritates philosophorum, medicorum et poetarum sunt in causis allegandae et tenendae. The authoritative opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be adduced and regarded in causes.

Audi alteram partem. Hear the other side. • No one should be condemned unheard.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law there is to be no departure.

Baratriam committit qui propter pecuniam justitiam baractat. A person is guilty of barratry who sells justice for money.

Bastardus non potest habere haeredem nisi de corpore suo legitime procreatum. A bastard cannot have an heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body.

Bastardus nullius est filius, aut filius populi. A bastard is nobody's son, or the son of the people.

Bello pacta cedunt reipublicae. In war contracts give way to the state.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione. Blessed is the exposition when a thing is saved from destruction.

Beneficium invito non datur. A privilege or benefit is not granted against a person's will.

Beneficium non datum nisi propter officium. A remuneration is not given, unless on account of a duty performed.

Beneficium non datur nisi officii causa. A benefice is not granted except on account or in consideration of duty.

Beneficium principis debet esse mansurum. The benefaction of a prince ought to be lasting.

Benigne faciendae sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et quaelibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Deeds should be subject to liberal interpretation, so that the matter may take effect rather than fail; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor.

Benigne faciendae sunt interpretationes propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire. Constructions (of written instruments) are to be made liberally, for the simplicity of laymen, in order that the matter may have effect rather than fail (or become void); and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words.

Benignior sententia in verbis generalibus seu dubiis est preferenda. The more favorable construction is to be preferred in general or doubtful expressions.

Benignius leges interpretandae sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur. Laws are to be more liberally interpreted so that their intent may be preserved.

Bigamus seu trigamus, etc., est qui diversis temporibus et successive duas seu tres uxores habuit. A bigamus or trigamus, etc., is one who has had two or more wives in succession, each at a different time. 3 Co. Inst. 88.

Bis dat qui cito dat. He pays twice who pays promptly.

Bis idem exigi bona fides non patitur, et in satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. Good faith does not allow the same thing to be exacted twice; and in satisfying claims, it is not permitted that more should be done after satisfaction has once been rendered.

Bonae fidei non congruit de apicibus juris disputare. It is incompatible with good faith to insist on the extreme subtleties of the law.

Bonae fidei possessor in id tantum quod ad se pervenerit tenetur. A possessor in good faith is liable only for that which he himself has obtained (literally, what has come to him). 2 Co. Inst. 285.

Bona fide possessor facit fructus consumptos suos. A possessor in good faith is entitled to the fruits (or produce) that he consumes.

Bona fides exigit ut quod convenit fiat. Good faith demands that what is agreed on shall be done.

Bona fides non patitur ut bis idem exigatur. Good faith does not allow payment to be exacted twice for the same thing.

Boni iudicis est ampliare jurisdictionem (or justitiam). It is the role of a good judge to enlarge (or use liberally) his jurisdiction (or remedial authority). [Cases: Courts ↪200.5.]

Boni iudicis est ampliare justitiam. It is the role of a good judge to enlarge or extend justice.

Boni iudicis est causas litium dirimere. It is the role of a good judge to remove causes of litigation.

Boni iudicis est iudicium sine dilatione mandare executioni. It is the role of a good judge to render judgment for execution without delay.

Boni iudicis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oriatur. It is the role of a good judge to dispose of litigations so that one suit should not grow from another. 5 Coke 31a.

Bonum defendentis ex integra causa; malum ex quolibet defectu. A good outcome for the defendant comes from a sound case; a bad outcome from some defect.

Bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum. A thing good from necessity is not good beyond the limits of the necessity.

Bonus iudex secundum aequum et bonum iudicat, et aequitatem stricto juri praefert. A good judge decides according to fairness and the good and prefers equity to strict law.

Breve ita dicitur, quia rem de qua agitur, et intentionem petentis, paucis verbis breviter enarrat. A writ is called a "breve" because it briefly states, in few words, the matter in dispute, and the object of the party seeking relief.

Breve iudiciale debet sequi suum originale, et accessorium suum principale. A judicial writ ought to follow its original, and an accessory its principal.

Breve iudiciale non cadit pro defectu formae. A judicial writ does not fail for a defect of form.

Brevia, tam originalia quam iudicialia, patiuntur anglica nomina. Writs, original as well as judicial, bear English names.

Cancellarii angliae dignitas est, ut secundus a rege in regno habetur. The dignity of the chancellor of England is (such) that he is considered second in the realm from the sovereign.

Carcer ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos, dari debet. Imprisonment should be imposed for keeping people in confinement, not for punishing them (further). Co. Litt. 260a.

Carcer non supplicii causa sed custodiae constitutus. A prison is established not for the sake of punishment, but for detention under guard.

Casus fortuitus non est sperandus, et nemo tenetur divinare. A chance event is not to be expected, and no one is bound to foresee it. [Cases: Carriers ↪119.]

Casus fortuitus non est supponendus. A chance event is not to be presumed.

Casus omissus et oblivioni datus dispositioni communis juris relinquitur. A case omitted and forgotten (not provided for in statute) is left to the disposal of the common law.

Casus omissus pro omisso habendus est. A case omitted is to be held as (intentionally) omitted.

Catalla iuste possessa amitti non possunt. Chattels rightly possessed cannot be lost.

Catalla reputantur inter minima in lege. Chattels are considered in law among things of least consequence.

Causa causae est causa causati. The cause of a cause is the cause of the effect.

Causa causantis causa est causati. The cause of the thing causing is the cause of the effect.

Causa ecclesiae publicis aequiparatur; et summa est ratio quae pro religione facit. The cause of the church is equal to public causes; and paramount is the reason that acts in favor of religion.

Causae dotis, vitae, libertatis, fisci sunt inter favorabilia in lege. Causes of dower, life, liberty, revenue are among the things favored in law.

Causae ecclesiae publicis causis aequiparantur. The causes of the church are equal to public causes.

Causa et origo est materia negotii. The cause and origin of a matter are the substance of it. • "The law regards the original act"; as in the case of a man who attempts suicide in madness, but dies after regaining sanity; such is not suicide. 1 Coke 99.

Causa patet. The reason is obvious.

Causa proxima non remota spectatur. The immediate and not the remote cause is considered. [Cases: Damages ↪17; Insurance ↪2165 (1), 2230, 2590(1).]

Causa vaga et incerta non est causa rationabilis. A vague and uncertain cause is not a reasonable cause.

Caveat emptor. Let the buyer beware. [Cases: Sales ↪41; Vendor and Purchaser ↪37.]

Caveat emptor qui ignorare non debuit quod jus alienum emit. Let the buyer beware; for he ought not act in ignorance when he buys what another has right to. [Cases: Sales ↪43, 269.]

Caveat venditor. Let the seller beware.

Caveat viator. Let the traveler beware.

Cavendum est a fragmentis. Beware of fragments.

Certa debet esse intentio et narratio et certum fundamentum et certa res quae deducitur in iudicium. The design and narration ought to be certain, the foundation certain, and the matter certain that is brought into court to be tried.

Certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be rendered certain. [Cases: Contracts ↪9; Deeds ↪38.]

Cessante causa, cessat effectus. The cause ceasing, the effect ceases.

Cessante ratione legis cessat et ipsa lex. When the reason of the law ceases, the law itself also ceases.

Cessante statu primitivo, cessat derivativus. When the original estate comes to an end, the derivative estate is also at an end.

Cessa regnare, si non vis judicare. Cease to reign if you wish not to adjudicate.

C'est le crime qui fait la honte, et non pas véchafaud. It is the crime that causes the shame, and not the scaffold.

Cestuy que doit inheriter al père doit inheriter al fils. The person who should have inherited from the father should also inherit from the son.

Chacea est ad communem legem. A chase (or hunting ground) exists by common law.

Charta de non ente non valet. A deed of a thing not in being is not valid.

Charta non est nisi vestimentum donationis. A deed is nothing else than the vestment (or clothing) of a gift.

Chartarum super fidem, mortuis testibus, ad patriam de necessitudine recurrendum est. (A dispute) regarding the veracity of deeds, with the witnesses dead, must necessarily be referred to the country (or jury).

Chirographum apud debitorem repertum praesumitur solutum. When the evidence (or voucher) is found in the debtor's possession, the debt is presumed to be paid.

Chirographum non extans praesumitur solutum. When the evidence of a debt is not in existence, it is presumed to have been discharged.

Circuitus est evitandus. Circuitry (roundabout proceeding) is to be avoided.

Circuitus est evitandus; et boni judicis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oriatur. Circuitry is to be avoided; and it is the role of a good judge to determine (or dispose of) litigations so that one lawsuit may not arise from another.

Citatio est de juri naturali. A summons is by natural right.

Citationes non concedantur priusquam exprimatur super qua re fieri debet citatio. Citations should not be granted before it is stated about what matter the citation is to be made.

Clam delinquens magis punitur quam palam. A person who does wrong secretly is punished more severely than one who acts openly. 8 Coke 127.

Clam factum id videtur esse, quod quisque, quum controversiam haberet, habiturumve se putaret, fecit. That is considered done secretly which someone did when he had a legal dispute or thought he would have one.

Clausulae inconsuetae semper inducunt suspicionem. Unusual clauses always arouse suspicion.

Clausula generalis de residuo non ea complectitur quae non ejusdem sint generis cum iis quae specialim dicta fuerant. A general clause of remainder does not embrace those things that are not of the same kind as those that had been specially mentioned.

Clausula generalis non refertur ad expressa. A general clause does not refer to things expressly mentioned.

Clausula quae abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. A clause that precludes abrogation is invalid from the beginning.

Clausula vel dispositio inutilis per praesumptionem remotam vel causam ex post facto non fulcitur. A useless clause or disposition is not supported by a remote presumption or by a cause arising afterwards. ● A useless clause or disposition is one that expresses no more than the law by intendment would have supplied; it is not supported by a remote presumption or foreign intendment of some purpose, in regard whereof it might be material, or by a cause arising afterwards that may induce an operation of those idle words.

Clerici non ponentur in officiis. The clergy should not be placed in temporal offices.

Cogitationis poenam nemo meretur. No one deserves punishment for his thoughts.

Cogitationis poenam nemo patitur. No one is punished for his thoughts.

Cognomen majorum est ex sanguine tractum, hoc intrinsecum est; agnomen extrinsecum ab eventu. The cognomen is derived from the blood of ancestors and is intrinsic; an agnomen (or honorary title) arises from an event, and is extrinsic.

Cohaeredes sunt quasi unum corpus aut una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Coheirs are deemed as one body, or one person, on account of the unity of right that they possess.

Cohaeredes una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Coheirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right that they possess.

Collegium est societas plurimum corporum simul habitantium. A college is a society of several people dwelling together.

Commenda est facultas recipiendi et retinendi beneficium contra jus positivum a suprema potestate. A commendam is the power of receiving and retaining a benefice contrary to positive law, by supreme authority.

Commercium jure gentium commune esse debet et non in monopolium et privatum paucorum quaestum convertendum. Commerce, by the law of nations, ought to be common and not converted into a monopoly and the private gain of a few.

Commodum ex injuria sua non habere debet. (The wrongdoer) should not derive any benefit from his own wrong.

Communis error facit jus. A common error (one often repeated) makes law.

Communis error non facit jus. A common error does not make law. • This maxim expresses a view directly contradictory to the view of the immediately preceding maxim. Both are attested in legal literature.

Compendia sunt dispensia. Abridgments are hindrances. Shortcuts or time-saving measures are often a loss. • Coke continues, Melius est petere fontes. Co. Litt. 305b.

Compromissarii sunt iudices. Arbitrators are judges.

Compromissum ad similitudinem iudiciorum redigitur. A compromise is brought into affinity with judgments.

Conatus quid sit non definitur in jure. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

Concessio per regem fieri debet de certitudine. A grant by the king ought to be made of a certainty. • Coke explains, "If the king grants to me that I shall not be sheriff, without showing of what county, it is void for uncertainty." 9 Coke 46b.

Concessio versus concedentem latam interpretationem habere debet. A grant ought to have a liberal interpretation against the grantor.

Concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To make laws agree with laws is the best mode of interpreting them.

Concordia parvae res crescunt et opulentia lites. Small means increase by concord and litigations by opulence.

Conditio beneficialis, quae statum construit, benigne secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem quae statum destruit stricte, secundum verborum proprietatem, accipienda. A beneficial condition that creates an estate ought to be construed favorably, according to the intention of the words; but a condition that destroys an estate is odious and ought to be construed according to the strict sense of the words.

Conditio dicitur cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse confertur. It is called a condition when something is given for an uncertain event that may or may not come into existence.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjecta. An unlawful condition is considered unconnected.

Conditiones quaelibet odiosae; maxime autem contra matrimonium et commercium. Any conditions are odious, but especially those against matrimony and commerce.

Conditio praecedens adimpleri debet prius quam sequatur effectus. A condition precedent ought to be fulfilled before the effect can follow.

Confessio facta in iudicio omni probatione major est. A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof.

Confessus in iudicio pro iudicato habetur et quodammodo sua sententia damnatur. A person who has confessed his guilt when arraigned is considered to have been tried and is, as it were, condemned by his own sentence.

Confirmare est id quod prius infirmum fuit simul firmare. To confirm is to make firm at once what before was not firm.

Confirmare nemo potest priusquam jure ei acciderit. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him.

Confirmatio est nulla ubi donum praecedens est invalidum. A confirmation is null where the preceding gift is invalid.

Confirmatio omnes supplet defectus, licet id quod actum est ab initio non valuit. Confirmation supplies all defects, even if that which has been done was not valid at the beginning.

Confirmat usum qui tollit abusum. • One confirms a use who removes an abuse.

Conjunctio mariti et feminae est de jure naturae. The union of husband and wife derives from the law of nature.

Conscientia dicitur a con et scio, quasi scire cum Deo. Conscience is so called from con and scio, to know, as it were, with God.

Consecratio est periodus electionis; electio est praeambula consecrationis. Consecration is the termination of election; election is the preamble of consecration.

Consensus est voluntas plurium ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta. Consent is the conjoint will of several people to whom the thing belongs.

Consensus facit legem. Consent makes law. • A contract constitutes law between the parties agreeing to be bound by it.

Consensus, non concubitus, facit matrimonium. Consent, not coition (or sharing a bed), constitutes marriage.

Consensus, non concubitus, facit nuptias vel matrimonium, et consentire non possunt ante annos nubiles. Consent, and not coition (or sharing a bed), constitutes nuptials or marriage, and persons cannot consent before marriageable years.

Consensus tollit errorem. Consent removes an error. • A person cannot object to something he has consented to. [Cases: New Trial ↻ 10.]

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinet simul juncta. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject matter.

Consentientes et agentes pari poena plectentur. Those consenting and those perpetrating will receive the same punishment.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra (ante) annos nubiles. Persons cannot consent to marriage before marriageable years.

Consequentiae non est consequentia. The consequence of a consequence does not exist.

Consilia multorum quaeruntur (requiruntur) in magnis. The advice of many is sought in great affairs.

Consortio malorum me quoque malum facit. The company of wicked men makes me also wicked.

Constitutiones tempore posteriores potiores sunt his quae ipsas praecesserunt. Later laws prevail over those that preceded them.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas haberet, suarumque rerum constitutionem fecisset. It is a settled principle that what ought to be considered the home of each of us is where he has his dwelling, keeps his records, and has established his business.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam. The construction of the law does not work an injury.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called a usurpation than a custom.

Consuetudo debet esse certa. Custom ought to be fixed.

Consuetudo debet esse certa, nam incerta pro nulla (nullius) habetur. Custom ought to be fixed, for if variable it is held as null (or of no account).

Consuetudo debet esse certa, nam incerta pro nullis habentur. A custom should be certain, for uncertain things are held as nothing. ● This maxim is sometimes written Consuetudo debet esse certa, nam incerta pro nulla (nullius) habetur (meaning “custom should be certain, for if uncertain it is held as nothing”).

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum. Custom is the best expounder of the law.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis. Custom and common usage overcome the unwritten law if it is special; and interpret the written law if the law is general.

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem. Custom observed by reason of a certain and reasonable cause supersedes the common law.

Consuetudo, licet sit magnae auctoritatis, nunquam tamen praepjudicat manifestae veritati. A custom, even if it is of great authority, is never prejudicial to plain truth.

Consuetudo loci observanda est. The custom of the place is to be observed.

Consuetudo manerii et loci observanda est. The custom of a manor and place is to be observed.

Consuetudo neque injuria oriri neque tolli protest. A custom can neither arise nor be abolished by a wrong.

Consuetudo non habitur (trahitur) in consequentiam. Custom is not held as (or drawn into) a precedent.

Consuetudo praescripta et legitima vincit legem. A prescriptive and lawful custom overrides the law.

Consuetudo regni Angliae est lex Angliae. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci. A custom once disallowed cannot again be introduced.

Consuetudo tollit communem legem. Custom takes away the common law.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem. Custom overrules common law.

Consuetudo volentes ducit, lex nolentes trahit. Custom leads the willing; law drags the unwilling.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. A contemporaneous exposition is the best and most powerful in the law. ● A statute is best explained by following the construction put on it by judges who lived at the time it was made, or soon after.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictorios. An issue requires terms of contradiction. ● That is, there can be no issue without an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other).

Contractus est quasi actus contra actum. A contract is, as it were, act against act.

Contractus exturpi causa vel contra bonos mores nullus est. A contract founded on a wrongful consideration or against good morals is null.

Contractus legem ex conventionem accipiunt. Contracts receive legal validity from the agreement of the parties.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibet; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit. A person acts contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; a person acts in fraud of the law who, without violating the wording, circumvents the intention. Dig. 1.3.29.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum. There is no disputing against one who denies first principles.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio. No prescription runs against a person unable to act (or bring an action). [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↪ 43, 70, 95.]

Contrariorum contraria est ratio. The reason of contrary things is contrary.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permittit. The law never allows anything contrary to truth.

Contrectatio rei alienae animo furandi est furtum. Touching or taking another's property with an intention of stealing is theft.

Conventio omnis intelligitur clausula rebus sic stantibus. Every contract is to be understood as being based on the assumption of things remaining as they were (that is, at the time of its conclusion).

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare.

An agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right. • That is, it cannot prevent the application of general rules of law, or render valid any contravention of law.

Conventio vincit legem. The express agreement of the parties overrides the law.

Convicia si irascaris tua divulgas; spreta exolescunt. If you are moved to anger by insults, you spread them abroad; if despised, they die out.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu. Coupling words together shows that they ought to be understood in the same sense.

Corporalis injuria non recipit aestimationem de futuro. A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from proceedings yet in the future.

Corpus humanum non recipit aestimationem. The person of a human being can have no price put on it.

Creditorum appellatione non hi tantum accipiuntur qui pecuniam crediderunt, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causa debetur. Under the name of creditors are included not only those who have lent money, but also all to whom a debt is owed from any cause.

Crescente malitia crescere debet et poena. With increase of malice, punishment ought also to increase.

Crimen falsi dicitur, cum quis illicitus, cui non fuerit ad hoes data auctoritas, de sigillo regis rapto vel invento brevia cartasve consignaverit. It is called “crimen falsi” when anyone to whom power has not been given for such purposes has illicitly signed writs or grants with the king’s seal, either stolen or found.

Crimen laesae majestatis omnia alia crimina excedit quoad poenam. The crime of treason exceeds all other crimes in its punishment.

Crimen omnia ex se nata vitiat. Crime taints everything that springs from it.

Crimen trahit personam. The crime brings with it the person. • That is, the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it is committed jurisdiction over the person of the offender.

Crimina morte extinguuntur. Crimes are extinguished by death.

Cuicumque aliquis quid concedit concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. One who grants something to another grants also that without which the thing granted could not exist. • This maxim is also sometimes written Cuicumque aliquid conceditur, conceditur etiam et id sine quo res ipsa non esse potuit (meaning “To whomever anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing itself could not exist”).

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest. To whom jurisdiction is given, those things also are considered to be granted without which the jurisdiction cannot be exercised. • That is, the grant of jurisdiction implies the grant of all powers necessary to its exercise.

Cui jus est donandi eidem et vendendi et concedendi jus est. A person who has a right to give has also a right to sell and to grant.

Cuilibet in arte sua perito est credendum. Credence should be given to a person skilled in his art (that is, when speaking of matters connected with that art).

Cuilibet licet juri pro se introducto renunciare. Anyone may waive or renounce the benefit of a principle or rule of law that exists only for his protection.

Cui licet quod majus non debet quod minus est non licere. A person who has authority to do the more important act ought not to be debarred from doing what is of less importance.

Cui pater est populus non habet ille patrem. That person to whom the people is father has not a father.

Cuique in sua arte credendum est. Everyone is to be believed in his own area of expertise. [Cases: Evidence ↻508.]

Cujus est commodum, ejus debet esse incommodum. The person who has the advantage should also have the disadvantage.

Cujus est commodum, ejus est onus. The person who has the benefit has also the burden.

Cujus est dare, ejus est disponere. The person who has a right to give has the right of disposition. • That is, the bestower of a gift has a right to regulate its disposal.

Cujus est divisio, alterius est electio. When one of two parties has the division (of an estate), the other has the choice (of the shares). • In partition between coparceners, where the division is made by the eldest, the rule in English law is that she shall choose her share last.

Cujus est dominium, ejus est periculum. The risk lies on the owner.

Cujus est instituere, ejus est abrogare. Whoever can institute can also abrogate.

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum. The person who owns the soil owns up to the sky. • One who owns the surface of the ground owns, or has an exclusive right to everything that is on or above it to an indefinite height. [Cases: Property ↻7.]

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos. Whoever owns the soil owns everything up to the sky and down to the depths. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↻47; Property ↻7; Waters and Water Courses ↻101.]

Cujus juris (i.e., jurisdictionis) est principale, ejusdem juris erit accessorium. An accessory matter is subject to the same jurisdiction as its principal.

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, ejus consulto dati donatio est. A thing given by mistake can be recovered; if given purposely, it is a gift. Dig. 50.17.53.

Cujusque rei potissima pars est principium. The principal part of everything is the beginning.

- Culpa caret qui scit sed prohibere non potest. A person is free of blame who knows but cannot prevent.
- Culpa poena par esto. Let the punishment be equal to the crime.
- Culpa est immiscere se rei ad se non pertinenti. It is a fault for anyone to meddle in a matter not pertaining to him.
- Culpa lata dolo aequiparatur. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.
- Culpa tenet (teneat) suos auctores. A fault binds (or should bind) its own authors.
- Cum actio fuerit mere criminalis, institui poterit ab initio criminaliter vel civiliter. When an action is purely criminal, it can be instituted from the beginning either criminally or civilly.
- Cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verbis? When the proofs of facts are present, what need is there of words?
- Cum aliquis renunciaverit societati, solvitur societas. When any partner has renounced the partnership, the partnership is dissolved.
- Cum confitente sponte mitius est agendum. One making a voluntary confession is to be dealt with more leniently.
- Cum de lucro duorum quaeritur melior est causa possidentis. When there is a question of gain between two people, the cause of the possessor is the better.
- Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est. When two clauses in a will are found to be contradictory, the last in order prevails.
- Cum duo jura concurrunt in una persona, aequum est ac si essent in duobus. When two rights meet in one person, it is the same as if they were in two persons.
- Cum in corpore dissentitur, apparet nullam esse acceptionem. When there is a disagreement in the substance, there is clearly no acceptance.
- Cum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum, est benigne interpretari, et secundum id quod credible est cogitatum credendum est. When an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs in a will, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with the testator's probable meaning.
- Cum legitimae nuptiae factae sunt, patrem liberi sequuntur. Children born under a legitimate marriage follow the condition of the father.
- Cum par delictum est duorum, semper oneratur petitor, et melior habetur possessoris causa. Where two parties are equally at fault, the claimant always is at the disadvantage, and the party in possession has the better cause.
- Cum quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When that which I do is of no effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can (that is, in some other way).
- Curatus non habet titulum. A curate has no title (to tithes).
- Curia cancellariae officina justitiae. The court of chancery is the workshop of justice.
- Curia parlamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit. The court of parliament is governed by its own laws.
- Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur. An overnice and captious interpretation in the law is rejected.
- Currit tempus contra desides et sui juris contemptores. Time runs against the indolent and those who are not mindful of their rights.
- Cursus curiae est lex curiae. The practice of the court is the law of the court.
- Customeserra prise stricte. Custom shall be construed strictly.
- Custos statum haereditatis in custodia existentis meliorem, non deteriorem, facere potest. A guardian can make the estate of an heir living under his guardianship better, not worse.
- Damnum sentit dominus. The damage falls on the owner.
- Damnum sine injuria esse potest. There can be damage without any act of injustice.
- Dans et retinens nihil dat. One who gives and yet retains (possession) does not give effectually (literally, gives nothing).
- Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt. Give the things which are yours while they are yours; after death they are not yours.
- Datur digniori. It is given to the more worthy.
- Debet esse finis litium. There ought to be a limit to litigation.
- Debet quis juri subjacere ubi delinquit. Any offender should be subject to the law of the place where he offends.
- Debet sua cuique domus esse perfructum tutissimum. Every person's house should be his safest refuge.
- Debile fundamentum fallit opus. A weak foundation frustrates the work (built on it).
- Debitor sequuntur personam debitoris. Debts follow the person of the debtor. • That is, debts belong to no locality and may be collected wherever the debtor can be found.
- Debitor non praesumitur donare. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift.
- Debitorum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli nec minui potest. The creditors' suit can be neither quashed nor diminished by the contracts of their debtors.
- Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci. Debt and contract belong to no particular place.
- Deceptis, non decipientibus, jura subveniunt. The laws help persons who have been deceived, not those deceiving.

- Decet (tamen) principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est. It is proper (nonetheless) for the prince to preserve the laws by which he himself is preserved.
- Decimae de decimatis solvi non debent. Tithes ought not to be paid from that which is given for tithes.
- Decimae de jure divino et canonica institutione pertinent ad personam. Tithes belong to the parson by divine right and canonical institution.
- Decimae non debent solvi ubi non est annua renovatio, et ex annuatis renovantibus simul semel. Tithes ought not to be paid where there is not an annual renovation, and from annual renovations once only.
- Decipi quam fallere est tutius. It is safer to be deceived than to deceive.
- Decreta conciliorum non ligant reges nostros. The decrees of councils do not bind our kings.
- De facto jus oritur. From fact springs law; law arises from fact.
- Deficiente uno sanguine, non potest esse haeres. For lack of one blood, he cannot be heir. • Coke explains, “The blood of the father and of the mother are but one inheritable blood, and both are necessary to procreation of an heir.” 3 Coke 41.
- De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quaestio, sed de scientia sive sit error juris sive facti. The good faith and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his knowledge may be impugned if there is an error either of law or of fact.
- De jure decimarum, originem ducens de jure patronatus, tunc cognitio spectat at legem civilem, i.e., communem. With regard to the right of tithes, deducing its origin from the right of the patron, then the cognizance of them belongs to the civil law, i.e., common law.
- De jure judices, de facto juratores, respondent. The judges answer regarding the law, the jury on the facts.
- Delegata potestas non potest delegari. A delegated authority cannot be delegated.
- Delegatus non potest delegare. A delegate (or deputy) cannot appoint another. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷ 110; Principal and Agent ↷ 54.]
- Deliberandum est diu quod statuendum est semel. What is to be resolved once and for all should be long deliberated on.
- Delicatus debitor est odiosus in lege. A luxurious debtor is hateful in the law.
- Delinquens per iram provocatus puniri debet mitius. A wrongdoer provoked by anger ought to be punished less severely. 3 Co. Inst. 55.
- De majori et minori non variant jura. Concerning greater and lesser, rights do not vary (or justice does vary).
- De minimis non curat lex. The law does not notice or concern itself with trifling matters. [Cases: Common Law ↷ 9.]
- De molendino de novo erecto non jacet prohibitio. A prohibition does not lie against a newly erected mill.
- De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. When the death of a human being is concerned, no delay is long.
- Denominatio fieri debet a dignioribus. Denomination should be made from the more worthy.
- De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantia non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles. As to the proper name, it is not to be regarded when there is no error in substance; because names are changeable, but things are immutable.
- De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio. The rule is the same respecting things that do not appear and things that do not exist.
- De nullo quod est sua natura indivisibile et divisionem non patitur nullam partem habebit vidua, sed satisfaciatur ei ad valentiam. A widow shall have no part from that which in its own nature is indivisible and is not susceptible of division; but let (the heir) satisfy her with an equivalent.
- De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum. For no tenement that is held for a term is there the oath of homage, but there is the oath of fealty.
- Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitiva. Power that is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived.
- Derogatur legi cum pars detrahitur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. There is derogation from a law when part of it is taken away; there is abrogation of a law when it is abolished entirely.
- Designatio justiciariorum est a rege; jurisdictio vero ordinaria a lege. The appointment of justices is by the king, but their ordinary jurisdiction is by the law.
- Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum facit cessare tacitum. The designation of one is the exclusion of the other; and what is expressed prevails over what is implied.
- De similibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est. From like things to like things we are to proceed by the same rule. • That is, we are allowed to argue from the analogy of cases.
- De similibus idem est iudicium. Concerning like things the judgment is the same.
- Destruere, id quod prius structum, et factum fuit, penitus evertere et diruere. To destroy that which was previously built and made is utterly to overturn and wreck it; to destroy is to overturn and demolish what was built and done before. • This is a maxim cited against any type of revolutionary action.
- Deus solus haeredem facere potest, non homo. God alone, and not man, can make an heir.
- Dies dominicus non est iudicidius. Sunday is not a judicial day. [Cases: Sunday ↷ 1, 30.]

Dies inceptus pro completo habetur. A day begun is held as complete.

Dies incertus pro conditione habetur. An uncertain day is considered as a condition.

Dilationes in lege sunt odiosae. Delays in law are odious.

Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum. Discretion is to discern through law what is just.

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum. Discretion consists in knowing what is just in law.

Disparata non debent jungi. Dissimilar things ought not to be joined.

Dispensatio est mali prohibiti provida relaxatio, utilitate seu necessitate pensata; et est de jure domino regi concessa, propter impossibilitatem praevidendi de omnibus particularibus. A dispensation is the provident relaxation of a malum prohibitum weighed from utility or necessity; and it is conceded by law to the king on account of the impossibility of foreknowledge concerning all particulars.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, because it wounds a common right.

Disseisinam satis facit qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, licet omnino non expellat. A person commits disseisin if he does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes the possessor's enjoyment less useful, even if the disseisor does not expel the possessor altogether. Co. Litt. 331.

Dissimilium dissimilis est ratio. Of dissimilars the rule is dissimilar.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria. Injury is wiped out by reconciliation.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; aliud est facere, aliud perficere. Times must be distinguished; it is one thing to do a thing, another to complete it.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; distingue tempora, et concordabis leges. Times are to be distinguished; distinguish times, and you will harmonize laws.

Divinatio, non interpretatio, est quae omnino recedit a litera. It is a guess, not interpretation, that altogether departs from the letter.

Divortium dicitur a divertendo, quia vir divertitur ab uxore. Divorce is so called from divertendo, because a man is diverted from his wife.

Dolo facit qui petit quod redditurus est. A person acts with deceit who seeks what he will have to return.

Dolo malo pactum se non servabit. A pact made with evil intent will not be upheld. • This maxim is sometimes written Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum (meaning "an agreement induced by fraud will not stand").

Dolus versatur in generalibus. A deceiver deals in generalities.

Dolum ex indicis perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear proofs.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor does not prejudice the successor.

Dolus circuitu non purgatur. Fraud is not purged by circuitry.

Dolus est machinatio, cum aliud dissimulat aliud agit. Deceit is an artifice, since it pretends one thing and does another.

Dolus et fraus nemini patrocinentur (patrocinari debent). Deceit and fraud should excuse or benefit no one (they themselves require some excuse).

Dolus et fraus una in parte sanari debent. Deceit and fraud should always be remedied.

Dolus latet in generalibus. Fraud lurks in generalities. • This maxim is also sometimes written Dolus versatur in generalibus (meaning "fraud deals in generalities").

Dominium non potest esse in pendenti. The right of property cannot be in abeyance.

Dominus capitalis loco haeredis habetur, quoties per defectum vel delictum extinguitur sanguis sui tenentis. The supreme lord takes the place of the heir, as often as the blood of the tenant is extinct through deficiency or crime.

Dominus non maritabit pupillum nisi semel. A lord cannot give a ward in marriage but once.

Dominus rex nullum habere potest parem, multo minus superiorem. The king cannot have an equal, much less a superior.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. Everyone's house is his safest refuge.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum sit. Everyone's house should be his safest refuge and shelter.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious.

Donari videtur quod nullo jure cogente conceditur. That is considered to be given which is granted when no law compels.

Donatio non praesumitur. A gift is not presumed.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta; ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditio nondum fuerit subsecuta. Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect; for example, if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed.

Donatio perficitur possessione accipientis. A gift is rendered complete by the possession of the receiver.

Donatio principis intelligitur sine praejudicio tertii. A gift of the prince is understood without prejudice to a third party.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere antequam donatarius incipiat possidere. A donor never ceases to have possession until the donee obtains possession.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur. Laws sometimes sleep but never die.

Dos de dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be sought from dower.

Dos rationabilis vel legitima est cujuslibet mulieris de quocunque tenemento tertia pars omnium terrarum et tenementorum, quae vir suus tenuit in dominio suo ut de feodo, etc. Reasonable or legitimate dower belongs to every woman of a third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in his demesne, as of fee, etc.

Doti lex favet; praemium pudoris est, ideo parcatur. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity; therefore let it be preserved.

Do ut des. I give that you may give.

Do ut facias. I give that you may do.

Droit ne done plus que soit demaunde. The law gives no more than is demanded.

Droit ne poet pas morier. Right cannot die.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non licet. It is not lawful to have two wives at one time.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Two cannot possess one thing each in entirety.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot belong to two persons.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confirmandas aut impugnandas, ratio et auctoritas. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning everything: reason and authority.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur. The law does not allow a duplication of possibility.

Eadem causa diversis rationibus coram iudicibus ecclesiasticis et secularibus ventilatur. The same cause is argued on different principles before ecclesiastical and secular judges.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex. (If) the reason is the same, the law is the same.

Eadem mens praesumitur regis quae est juris et quae esse debet, praesertim in dubiis. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be the same as that of the law, and the same as what it ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters.

Ea est accipienda interpretatio quae vitio caret. That interpretation is to be received that is free from fault.

Ea quae commendandi causa in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam appareant venditorem non obligant. Those things that, by way of commendation, are stated at sales, if they are openly apparent, do not bind the seller.

Ea quae dari impossibilia sunt, vel quae in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur. Those things that cannot be given, or that are not in the nature of things, are considered as not added (as no part of the agreement).

Ea quae in curia nostra rite acta sunt debitae executioni demandari debent. Those things that are properly transacted in our court ought to be committed to a due execution.

Ea quae raro accidunt non temere in agendis negotiis computantur. Those things that rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business, without sufficient reason.

Ecclesia ecclesiae decima solvere non debet. A church should not pay tithes to a church.

Ecclesia est domus mansionalis omnipotentis dei. The church is the mansion house of the omnipotent God.

Ecclesia est infra aetatem et in custodia domini regis, qui tenetur jura et haereditates ejusdem manu tenere et defendere. The church is underage and in the custody of the king, who is bound to uphold and defend its rights and inheritances.

Ecclesia fungitur vice minoris; meliorem conditionem suam facere potest, deteriolem nequaquam. The church enjoys the privilege of a minor; it can make its own condition better but not worse.

Ecclesiae magis favendum est quam personae. The church is to be more favored than the person (or an individual).

Ecclesia meliorari non deteriorari potest. A church can (lawfully) be improved but not made worse.

Ecclesia non moritur. The church does not die.

Effectus sequitur causam. The effect follows the cause.

Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat. The burden of the proof rests on the person who affirms, not the one who denies. [Cases: Evidence ↻92.]

Ei nihil turpe, cui nihil satis. Nothing is immoral to the person to whom nothing is enough.

Eisdem modis dissolvitur obligatio quae nascitur ex contractu, vel quasi, quibus contrahitur. An obligation that arises from a contract or quasi contract is dissolved in the same ways in which it is contracted.

Ejus est interpretari cujus est condere. It is that person's to interpret whose it is to enact.

Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle. A person who can will (exercise volition) has a right to refuse to will (withhold consent).

Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle. A person may consent tacitly who can consent expressly.

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum. He who has the dominion or advantage has the risk.

Ejus nulla culpa est cui parere necesse sit. No guilt attaches to a person who is compelled to obey.

Electa una via, non datur recursus ad alteram. When one way has been chosen, no recourse is given to another.

Electio est interna libera et spontanea separatio unius rei ab alia, sine compulsione, consistens in animo et voluntate. Choice is an internal, free, and spontaneous

- separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will.
- Electiones fiant rite et libere sine interruptione aliqua. Let choices be made in due form and freely, without any interruption.
- Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum, non patitur regressum. A choice once made, and a plea witnessed (or intent shown), allows no going back.
- Electio semel facta non patitur regressum. An election once made cannot be recalled.
- Emptor emit quam minimo potest; venditor vendit quam maximo potest. The buyer buys for as little as possible; the vendor sells for as much as possible.
- En eschange il covient que les estates soient egales. In an exchange it is desirable that the estates be equal.
- Enitia pars semper praeferenda est propter privilegium aetatis. The part of the elder sister is always to be preferred on account of the privilege of age.
- Enumeratio infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated.
- Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius. Specification of one thing is an exclusion of the other.
- Eodem ligamine quo ligatum est dissolvitur. An obligation is dissolved by the same bond by which it is contracted.
- Eodem modo quo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur. It is discharged in the same way as it is created.
- Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, dissolvitur. In the same way as anything is constituted, it is dissolved (or destroyed). 6 Coke 53.
- Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, eodem modo destruitur. In the same way in which something is constituted, it may be destroyed.
- Episcopus alterius mandato quam regis non tenetur obtemperare. A bishop need not obey any mandate save the king's.
- Equitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law.
- Errores ad sua principia referre est refellere. To refer errors to their origin is to refute them.
- Errores scribentis nocere non debent. The mistakes of the scribe (or copyist) ought to do no harm.
- Error fucatus nuda veritate in multis est probabilior; et saepenumero rationibus vincit veritatem error. Error artfully colored is in many instances more probable than naked truth; and frequently error conquers truth by argumentation.
- Error juris nocet. An error of law injures.
- Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat. Mistake in the name never injures if the identity of the thing is certain.
- Error qui non resistitur approbatur. An error that is not resisted is approved.
- Error scribentis nocere non debet. The error of a scribe (or copyist) ought not to injure.
- Erubescit lex filios castigare parentes. The law blushes when children correct their parents.
- Est aliquid quod non oportet etiam si licet; quicquid vero non licet certe non oportet. There is that which is not proper, even though permitted; but whatever is not permitted is certainly not proper.
- Est autem jus publicum et privatum quod ex naturalibus praeceptis aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected either from natural precepts of the (law of) nations or from civil precepts; and that which in the civil law is called jus is said in the law of England to be right. Co. Litt. 558.
- Est autem vis legem simulans. Violence may also put on the mask of law.
- Est boni judicis ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the role of a good judge to extend the jurisdiction.
- Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox. The voice of the legislators themselves is like a living voice. • That is, the provisions of a statute are to be understood and interpreted as practical rules for real circumstances. Coke adds, Rebus et non verbis legem imponimus. 10 Coke 101.
- Estoveria sunt ardendi, arandi, construendi et claudendi. Estovers (tenants' rights to material at hand) are for burning, plowing, building, and fencing.
- Est quiddam perfectius in rebus licitis. There is something more perfect in things that are permitted.
- Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est aequum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim nocentium nota esse oportet et expedit. It is not just and proper that one who speaks ill of a bad person should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the wrongdoings of bad people should be known.
- Eventus est qui ex causa sequitur; et dicitur eventus quia ex causis evenit. An event is what follows from a cause; and is called an event, because it results from causes.
- Eventus varios res nova semper habet. A novel matter always produces various results.
- Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from what precedes and what follows. [Cases: Wills ☞ 470.]
- Exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio nulla est. There is no exception based on the very matter for which a solution is being sought.
- Exceptio falsi est omnium ultima. The exception for falsehood is last of all.
- Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis. An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted.
- Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium. An exception affirms a rule to the contrary.

- Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quae exceptionem perimit. There is no exception against an action that extinguishes the exception.
- Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. An exception proves a rule concerning things not excepted.
- Exceptio quae firmat legem exponit legem. An exception that confirms the law expounds the law.
- Exceptio quoque regulam declarat. The exception also declares the rule.
- Exceptio semper ultima ponenda est. An exception is always to be put last.
- Excessus in jure reprobatur. Excess in law is condemned.
- Excessus in re qualibet jure reprobatur communi. Excess in anything at all is condemned by common law.
- Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. That excuses or extenuates a wrong in capital causes which does not have the same effect in civil suits.
- Ex diuturnitate temporis omnia praesumuntur solenniter esse acta. From length of time, all things are presumed to have been done in due form.
- Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. An action does not arise from a fraud. [Cases: Action ↪4.]
- Executio est executio juris secundum iudicium. Execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment.
- Executio est finis et fructus legis. Execution of the law is its end and fruition.
- Executio legis non habet injuriam. Execution of the law cannot work an injury.
- Exempla illustrent, non restringunt, legem. Examples make the law clearer, and do not restrict it.
- Ex facto jus oritur. The law arises out of the fact.
- Ex frequenti delicto augetur poena. Punishment increases with repeated offense. 2 Co. Inst. 479.
- Ex maleficio non oritur contractus. A contract does not arise out of an illegal act.
- Ex malis moribus bonae leges natae sunt. Good laws are born from evil morals.
- Ex multitudine signorum colligitur identitas vera. From a great number of signs true identity is ascertained.
- Ex nihilo nihil fit. From nothing nothing comes.
- Ex non scripto jus venit quod usus comprobavit. Unwritten law is that which custom has sanctioned.
- Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. No action arises on a contract without a consideration. [Cases: Contracts ↪47.]
- Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. From an illicit contract no action arises.
- Expedit rei publicae ne sua re quis male utatur. It is to the advantage of the state that a person should not make bad use of his own property.
- Expedit rei publicae ut sit finis litium. It is to the advantage of the state that there should be a limit to litigation.
- Experientia per varios actus legem facit. Experience through various acts makes law.
- Expositio quae ex visceribus causae nascitur, est aptissima et fortissima in lege. An exposition that springs from the vitals of a cause is the fittest and most powerful in law.
- Ex praecedentibus et consequentibus est optima interpretatio. The best interpretation takes account of what precedes and follows.
- Expressa nocent, non expressa non nocent. Things expressed do harm; things not expressed do not.
- Expressa non prosunt quae non expressa proderunt. There is no benefit in expressing what will benefit when unexpressed.
- Expressio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur. The expression of those things that are tacitly implied is of no consequence.
- Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. • Also termed Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius or enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius. [Cases: Contracts ↪152; Statutes ↪195.]
- Expressum facit cessare tacitum. Something expressed nullifies what is unexpressed. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↪594; Statutes ↪195.]
- Ex procedentibus et consequentibus optima fit interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from things preceding and following (i.e., the context). [Cases: Wills ↪470.]
- Exterus non habet terras. An alien holds no lands.
- Extincto subjecto, tollitur adjunctum. When the substance is gone, the adjunct disappears.
- Extortio est crimen quando quis colore officii extorquet quod non est debitum, vel supra debitum, vel ante tempus quod est debitum. Extortion is a crime when, by color of office, any person extorts what is not due, or more than due, or before the time when it is due.
- Ex tota materia emergat resolutio. The construction or explanation should arise out of the whole subject matter.
- Extra legem positus est civiliter mortuus. An outlaw is dead as a citizen.
- Extraneus est subditus qui extra terram, i.e. potestam regis, natus est. A foreigner is a subject who is born out of the territory — that is, the jurisdiction — of the king.
- Extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur. One who gives a judgment outside his jurisdiction is disobeyed with impunity. • There is no punishment for disobeying. Dig. 2.1.20.
- Extra territorium jus dicenti non paretur impune. One who gives a judgment outside his jurisdiction is not

- obeyed with impunity. • Anyone who executes such a judgment may be punished. 10 Coke 77.
- Extremis probatis praesumuntur media. Extremes having been proved, intermediate things are presumed.
- Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. No action arises out of a wrongful consideration. [Cases: Action ↻4; Contracts ↻138.]
- Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. No action arises from a wrongful contract.
- Facinus quos inquinat aequat. Guilt makes equal those whom it stains.
- Facio ut des. I do that you may give.
- Facio ut facias. I do that you may do.
- Facta sunt potentiora verbis. Deeds (or facts) are more powerful than words.
- Facta tenent multa quae fieri prohibentur. Deeds contain many things that are prohibited to be done.
- Factum a iudice quod ad ejus officium non spectat, non ratum est. A judge's act that does not pertain to his office is of no force.
- Factum cuique suum, non adversario, nocere debet. Anyone's act should injure himself, not his adversary.
- Factum infectum fieri nequit. What is done cannot be undone.
- Factum negantis nulla probatio. No proof is incumbent on a person who denies a fact.
- Factum non dicitur quod non perseverat. That is not said to be done which does not last.
- Factum unius alteri nocere non debet. The deed of one should not hurt the other.
- Facturi quod ad justitiam pertinet secundum legem, et consuetudinem Angliae. (One is bound) to do justice according to the law and custom of England. • This was once a part of judicial oaths.
- Facultas probationum non est angustanda. The capability of offering proofs is not to be narrowed.
- Falsa causa non nocet. A false motive does no injury. • Generally, an erroneous motive does not invalidate.
- Falsa demonstratione legatum non perimi. A legacy is not destroyed by an incorrect description. • This maxim is sometimes written Falsa demonstratione legatum non perimitur (same sense).
- Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpore (persona) constat. False description does not injure or vitiate, provided the thing or person intended has once been sufficiently described. • Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative. [Cases: Deeds ↻42; Wills ↻520, 581.]
- Falsa grammatica non vitiat chartam. False grammar does not vitiate a charter.
- Falsa grammatica non vitiat concessionem. False or bad grammar does not vitiate a grant. • Neither false Latin nor false English will make a deed void when the intent of the parties plainly appears.

Falsa orthographia sive falsa grammatica non vitiat concessionem. Error in spelling or grammar does not vitiate a grant.

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. False in one thing, false in everything. [Cases: Trial ↻236(2); Witnesses ↻317.]

Fama, fides, et oculus non patiuntur ludum. Reputation, plighted faith, and eyesight do not endure deceit.

Fama, quae suspicionem inducit, oriri debet apud bonos et graves, non quidem malevolos et maledicos, sed providas et fide dignas personas, non semel sed saepius, quia clamor minuit et defamatio manifestat. Report, which induces suspicion, ought to arise from good and grave men; not, indeed, from malevolent and malicious men, but from cautious and credible persons; not only once, but frequently, for clamor diminishes, and defamation manifests.

Fatetur facinus qui iudicium fugit. A person who flees judgment confesses guilt.

Fatuus, apud jurisconsultos nostros, accipitur pro non compos mentis; et fatuus dicitur, qui omnino desipit. "Fatuus," among our jurisconsults, is applied to a man not of sound mind; one is also called "fatuus" who is altogether foolish.

Fatuus praesumitur qui in proprio nomine errat. A person is presumed to be incompetent who makes a mistake in his own name (that is, does not know his own name).

Favorabilia in lege sunt fiscus, dos, vita, libertas. The treasury, dower, life, and liberty are things favored in law.

Favorabiliores rei potius quam actores habentur. Defendants are rather to be favored than plaintiffs.

Favorabiliores sunt executiones alii processibus quibuscunque. Executions are preferred to all other processes whatever.

Favores ampliandi sunt; odia restringenda. Favorable inclinations are to be enlarged; animosities restrained.

Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas. Happy is he who could apprehend the causes of things.

Felonia, ex vi termini, significat quodlibet capitale crimen felleo animo perpetratum. Felony, by force of the term, signifies any capital crime perpetrated with a malicious intent.

Felonia implicatur in quolibet prodicione. Felony is implied in every treason.

Feodum est quod quis tenet ex quacunque causa, sive sit tenementum sive redditus. A fee is what anyone holds from whatever cause, whether tenement or rent.

Feodum simplex quia feodum idem est quod haereditas, et simplex idem est quod legitimum vel purum; et sic feodum simplex idem est quod haereditas legitima vel haereditas pura. "Fee simple" is so called because fee is the same as inheritance and simple is the same

- as lawful or pure; and thus fee simple is the same as a lawful inheritance or a pure inheritance.
- Fere secundum promissorem interpretatur. We generally interpret in favor of the promisor.
- Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii. The hurrying of justice is the stepmother of misfortune.
- Fiat justitia pereat mundus. Let justice be done though the world perish.
- Fiat justitia ruat caelum. Let justice be done though the heavens fall. • The word caelum sometimes appears coelum, but the form caelum is considered better Latin.
- Fiat prout fieri consuevit, nil temere novandum. Let it be done as it is accustomed to be done; let no innovation be made rashly.
- Fictio cedit veritati; fictio juris non est ubi veritas. Fiction yields to truth; where the truth appears, there is no fiction of law.
- Fictio est contra veritatem, sed pro veritate habetur. Fiction is contrary to the truth, but it is regarded as truth.
- Fictio juris non est ubi veritas. Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.
- Fictio legis inique operatur alicui damnum vel injuriam. Fiction of law works unjustly if it works loss or injury to anyone.
- Fictio legis neminem laedit. A fiction of law injures no one.
- Fides est obligatio conscientiae alicujus ad intentionem alterius. Faith is an obligation of conscience of one to the will of another.
- Fides servanda est. Faith must be observed. • An agent must not violate the confidence reposed in him or her.
- Fides servanda est; simplicitas juris gentium praevaleat. Faith is to be preserved; the simplicity of the law of nations should prevail.
- Fieri non debet, sed factum valet. It ought not to be done, but if done it is valid.
- Filiatio non potest probari. Filiation cannot be proved. • That is, the husband is presumed to be the father of a child born during coverture.
- Filius est nomen naturae, sed haeres nomen juris. “Son” is a name of nature, but “heir” a name of law.
- Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris. A child in the mother’s womb is part of the mother’s vitals.
- Finis est amicabile compositio et finalis concordia ex concensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum. A fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord, the king, or his justices.
- Finis finem litibus imponit. A fine puts an end to litigation.
- Finis rei attendendus est. The end of a thing is to be attended to.
- Finis unius diei est principium alterius. The end of one day is the beginning of another.
- Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis. The operation of law is firmer and more powerful than the will of man.
- Flumina et portus publica sunt, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est. Rivers and ports are public; and therefore the right of fishing is common to all.
- Foeminae ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remotae sunt. Women are excluded from all civil and public charges or offices.
- Foeminae non sunt capaces de publicis officiis. Women are not qualified for public offices.
- Forma dat esse. Form gives being.
- Forma legalis forma essentialis. Legal form is essential form.
- Forma non observata, infertur adnullatio actus. When form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred.
- Forstellarius est pauperum depressor, et totius communitatis et patriae publicus inimicus. A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy of the whole community and the country.
- Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man.
- Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is stronger and more powerful than that of man.
- Fractionem diei non recipit lex. The law does not regard a fraction of a day.
- Frater fratri uterino non succedit in haereditate paterna. A brother shall not succeed a uterine brother in the paternal inheritance.
- Fraus est celare fraudem. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud.
- Fraus est odiosa et non praesumenda. Fraud is odious and not to be presumed.
- Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent. Fraud and deceit should excuse no one.
- Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant. Fraud and justice never dwell together.
- Fraus latet in generalibus. Fraud lies hidden in general expressions.
- Fraus meretur fraudem. Fraud deserves fraud.
- Frequentia actus multum operatur. The frequency of an act has much effect. • Continual usage establishes a right.
- Fructus augent haereditatem. Fruits enhance an inheritance.
- Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur. Hanging fruits are considered part of the parcel of land.

Fructus perceptos villae non esse constat. It is agreed that gathered fruits are not a part of the farm.

Frumenta quae sata sunt solo cedere intelliguntur. Grain that has been sown is understood to belong to the soil.

Frustra agit qui iudicium prosequi nequit cum effectu. A person sues in vain who cannot prosecute his judgment with effect.

Frustra est potentia quae nunquam venit in actum. Power that never comes to be exercised is useless.

Frustra expectatur eventus cujus effectus nullus sequitur. An event is vainly awaited from which no effect follows.

Frustra feruntur leges nisi subditis et obedientibus. Laws are made to no purpose except for those who are subject and obedient.

Frustra fit per plura quod fieri potest per pauciora. That is done vainly through many measures if it can be accomplished through fewer.

Frustra legis auxilium quaerit qui in legem committit. Vainly does a person who offends against the law seek the help of the law.

Frustra petis quod mox es restitutus. Vainly you seek what you are soon to restore.

Frustra petis quod statim alteri reddere cogaris. Vainly you seek what you will immediately be compelled to give back to another.

Frustra probatur quod probatum non relevat. It is useless to prove what if proved would not aid the matter in question.

Furiosi nulla voluntas est. An insane person has no will.

Furiosus absentis loco est. An insane person is considered as absent.

Furiosus nullum negotium contrahere (gerere) potest (quia non intelligit quod agit). An insane person cannot make a contract (because he does not understand what he is doing).

Furiosus solo furore punitur. An insane person is punished by insanity alone.

Furiosus stipulari non potest nec aliquod negotium agere, qui non intelligit quid agit. An insane person who knows not what he does cannot make a bargain or transact any business.

Furor contrahi matrimonium non sinit, quia consensu opus est. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed.

Furtum est contrectatio rei alienae fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo dominocujus res illa fuerat. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another's property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it had been.

Furtum non est ubi initium habet detentionis per dominium rei. There is not theft where the holder has a beginning of detention (began holding the object) through ownership of the thing.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum. A general expression is to be construed generally.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum: generalia verba sunt generaliter intelligenda. A general statement is to be construed generally; general words are to be understood generally.

Generale nihil certi implicat. A general expression implies nothing certain.

Generale tantum valet in generalibus quantum singulare in singulis. What is general has as much validity among things general as what is particular does among things particular.

Generalia praecedunt, specialia sequuntur. Things general precede; things special follow.

Generalia specialibus non derogant. Things general do not restrict (or detract from) things special. [Cases: Statutes ↻ 162, 194.]

Generalia sunt praeposenda singularibus. General things are to be put before particular things.

Generalia verba sunt generaliter intelligenda. General words are to be understood in a general sense.

Generalibus specialia derogant. Things special restrict things general.

Generalis clausula non porrigitur ad ea quae antea specialiter sunt comprehensa. A general clause does not extend to those things that have been previously provided for specifically.

Generalis regula generaliter est intelligenda. A general rule is to be understood generally.

Glossa viperina est quae corrodit viscera textus. It is a poisonous gloss that gnaws away the vitals of the text.

Grammatica falsa non vitiat chartam. False grammar does not vitiate a deed.

Gravius est divinam quam temporalem laedere majestatem. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty.

Habemus optimum testem, confitentem reum. We have the best witness, a confessing defendant.

Haeredem Deus facit, non homo. God, and not man, makes the heir.

Haeredipetae suo propinquo vel extraneo, periculoso sane custodi, nullus committatur. Let no ward be entrusted to the next heir in succession, whether his own relation or a stranger, as the next heir is surely a dangerous guardian. Co. Litt. 88b.

Haereditas est successio in universum jus quod defunctus habuerat. Inheritance is the succession to every right possessed by the late possessor.

Haereditas nihil aliud est quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuerat. The right of inheritance is nothing other than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased.

Haereditas nunquam ascendit. An inheritance never ascends.

Haeredum appellatione veniunt haeredes haeredum in infinitum. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity.

Haeres est alter ipse, et filius est pars patris. An heir is another self, and a son is a part of the father.

Haeres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis. A person is an heir by either right of property or right of representation.

Haeres est eadem persona cum antecessore. The heir is the same person as the ancestor.

Haeres est nomen collectivum. "Heir" is a collective noun.

Haeres est nomen juris, filius est nomen naturae. "Heir" is a term of law; "son" is one of nature.

Haeres est pars antecessoris. An heir is a part of the ancestor.

Haeres haeredis mei est meus haeres. The heir of my heir is my heir.

Haeres legitimus est quem nuptiae demonstrant. The lawful heir is the one whom the marriage indicates (i.e., who is born in wedlock).

Haeres minor uno et viginti annis non respondebit, nisi in casu dotis. An heir under 21 years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of the dower.

Hoc servabitur quod initio convenit. That shall be preserved which is useful in the beginning.

Home ne sera puny pur suer des briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A person shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether the person is right or wrong.

Hominum causa jus constitutum est. Law was established for the benefit of humankind.

Homo et capax et incapax esse potest in diversis temporibus. A person may be capable and incapable at different times. • This maxim is sometimes written Homo potest esse habilis et inhabilis diversis temporibus (same sense).

Homo vocabulum est naturae; persona juris civilis. "Man" (homo) is a term of nature; "person" (persona), a term of civil law.

Hora non est multum de substantia negotii, licet in appello de ea aliquando fiat mentio. The hour is not of much consequence to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; caeteri proditores vel praedones sunt. Enemies are those on whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates.

Ibi semper debet fieri triatio ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. A trial should always be held where the jurors can have the best information.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be made certain.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, sed id magis certum est quod de semetipso est certum. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself.

Idem agens et patiens esse non potest. The same person cannot be both agent and patient (i.e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done).

Idem est facere et nolle prohibere cum possis. It is the same thing to commit an act and to refuse to prohibit it when you can.

Idem est facere et non prohibere cum possis; et qui non prohibet cum prohibere possit in culpa est (aut jubet). It is the same thing to commit an act and not to prohibit it when you can; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is at fault (or does the same as ordering it to be done).

Idem est nihil dicere et insufficienter dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing and not to say enough. • To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner.

Idem est non esse et non apparere. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. • What does not appear on the record is considered nonexistent.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus sed probatio. It is the same thing not to be proved and not to exist; the law is not deficient but the proof.

Idem est scire aut scire debere aut potuisse. To be bound to know or to have been able to know is the same as to know.

Idem non esse et non apparere. It is the same thing not to exist and not to appear.

Idem semper antecedenti proximo refertur. Idem (the same) always refers to the nearest antecedent.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum. True identity is collected from a great number of signs.

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat. That is perfect which is complete in all its parts.

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat; et nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum. That is perfect which is complete in all its parts; and nothing is perfect while anything remains to be done.

Id possumus quod de jure possumus. We are able to do that which we can do lawfully.

Id quod est magis remotum non trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni casu. That which is more removed does not draw to itself what is more closely joined, but to the contrary in every case.

Id quod nostrum est sine facto nostro ad alium transferri non potest. What belongs to us cannot be transferred to another without our act (or deed).

Id solum nostrum quod debitis deductis nostrum est. That alone is ours which is ours after debts have been deducted.

Id tantum possumus quod de jure possumus. We can do only what we can lawfully do.

Ignorantia eorum quae quis scire tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things that anyone is bound to know does not excuse.

Ignorantia excusatur non juris sed facti. Ignorance of fact is excused but not ignorance of law.

Ignorantia facti excusat, ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of fact excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse. • Every person must be considered cognizant of the law; otherwise, there is no limit to the excuse of ignorance. [Cases: Contracts ↷93; Criminal Law ↷33; Equity ↷6.]

Ignorantia iudicis est calamitas innocentis. The ignorance of the judge is the misfortune of the innocent.

Ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of the law does not excuse. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷32; Equity ↷7.]

Ignorantia juris quod quisque scire tenetur neminem excusat. Ignorance of the law, which everyone is bound to know, excuses no one.

Ignorantia juris sui non praejudicat juri. Ignorance of one's right does not prejudice the right.

Ignorantia legis neminem excusat. Ignorance of law excuses no one.

Ignorantia praesumitur ubi scientia non probatur. Ignorance is presumed where knowledge is not proved.

Ignorare legis est lata culpa. To be ignorant of the law is gross neglect of it.

Ignoratis terminis artis, ignoratur et ars. Where the terms of an art are unknown, the art is also unknown.

Ignoscitur ei qui sanguinem suum qualiter redemptum voluit. A person is forgiven who chose to purchase his own blood (or life) on any terms whatsoever. • Whatever a person may do under the fear of losing life or limb will not be held binding on him in law. 1 Bl. Com. 127.

Illud quod alias licitum non est, necessitas facit licitum, et necessitas inducit privilegium quod jure privatur. That which is not otherwise lawful, necessity makes lawful; and necessity brings in as a privilege what is denied by right. 10 Coke 61.

Illud quod alteri unitur extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it again be detached.

Immobilia situm sequuntur. Immovables follow (the law of) their locality.

Imperii majestas est tutelae salus. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.

Imperitia culpaenumeratur. Unskillfulness is reckoned as a fault (as blameworthy conduct or neglect). • Also termed Imperitia enumeratur culpaen.

Imperitia est maxima mechanicorum poena. Unskillfulness is the greatest punishment of mechanics (i.e., from its effect in making them liable to those by whom they are employed).

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds.

Impius et crudelis iudicandus est qui libertati non favet. A person is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty.

Impossibile nulla obligatio est. There is no obligation to perform impossible things.

Impotentia excusat legem. Powerlessness excuses (or dispenses with) law. • The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses nonperformance or non-enforcement. 2 Bl. Com. 127.

Improbi rumores dissipati sunt rebellionis prodromi. Wicked rumors spread abroad are the forerunners of rebellion.

Impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. Impunity provides a constant inclination to wrongdoing. 4 Coke 45.

Impunitas semper ad deteriora invitat. Impunity invites (an offender) to ever worse offenses.

In aequali jure melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties have equal rights, the condition of the possessor is the better.

In alta proditione nullus potest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo. In high treason no one can be an accessory but only a principal.

In alternativis electio est debitoris. The debtor has the choice among alternatives.

In ambigua voce legis ea potius accipienda est significatio quae vitio caret; praesertim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit. In an ambiguous expression of the law, the meaning will be preferred that is free of defect, especially when the intent of the law can be gathered from it.

In ambiguis casibus semper praesumitur pro rege. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.

In ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eas protulisset. In ambiguous expressions, the opinion (or meaning) of the person who made them is chiefly to be regarded.

In ambiguo sermone non utrumque dicimus sed id duntaxat quod volumus. When the language we use is ambiguous, we do not use it in a double sense, but merely in the sense that we intend.

In Anglia non est interregnum. In England there is no interregnum. • The heir to the throne is understood to succeed from the instant of his predecessor's death or removal.

In atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus licet non sequatur effectus. In the more atrocious crimes, the intent (or attempt) is punished even if the effect does not follow.

In casu extremae necessitatis omnia sunt communia. In a case of extreme necessity, everything is in common.

Incaute factum pro non facto habetur. An alteration done carelessly (inadvertently) will be taken as not done. Dig. 28.4.1.

Incendium aere alieno non exuit debitorem. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt.

Incerta pro nullis habentur. Things uncertain are considered as nothing.

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege prospecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice on any single clause of it.

Incivile est, nisi tota sententia inspecta, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to give an opinion on any part of a passage without examining the whole.

In civilibus ministerium excusat, in criminalibus non item. In civil matters, agency (or service) excuses, but not so in criminal matters.

In claris non est locus conjecturis. In obvious instances there is no room for conjectures.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. See Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Incolas domicilium facit. Literally, the domicile makes the residents. • That is, the principal place of residence establishes legal residency. Often rendered conversely, Incola domicilium facit (residence creates domicile).

In commodato haec pactio, ne dolus praestetur, rata non est. In a loan for use (commodatum), a pact excluding liability for fraud is invalid. • Often extended to contracts for loans in general. Dig. 13.6.17.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum. An inconvenience does not solve (or demolish) an argument.

In conjunctivis oportet utramque partem esse veram. In conjunctive constructions, each part must be true.

In consimili casu consimile debet esse remedium. In a similar case, the remedy should be similar.

In consuetudinibus non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. In customs, not length of time but the soundness of the reason should be considered.

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. In contracts, the interpretation or construction should be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.

In contractibus, rei veritas potius quam scriptura perspicitur. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded rather than the writing.

In contractibus tacite insunt quae sunt moris et consuetudinibus. In contracts, matters of custom and usage are tacitly implied. • A contract is understood to contain the customary clauses, although they are not expressed.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est. In the contract of sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller.

In conventionibus, contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectari placuit. In agreements, the intention of the contracting parties should be regarded more than their words.

Incorporalia bello non adquiruntur. Incorporal things are not acquired by war.

In criminalibus probationes debent esse luce clariores. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than light.

In criminalibus sufficit generalis malitia intentionis cum facto parus gradus. In criminal cases, a general wickedness of intention is sufficient if combined with an act of equal or corresponding degree.

In criminalibus voluntas reputabitur pro facto. In criminal matters, the intent will be reckoned as the deed. • In criminal attempts or conspiracy, the intention is considered in place of the act. 3 Inst. 106.

Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power.

Indefinitum aequipollet universali. The undefined is equivalent to the whole.

Indefinitum supplet locum universalis. The undefined supplies the place of the whole.

Independentem se habet assecuratio a viaggio navis. The route insured is distinct from the voyage of the ship.

Index animi sermo. Speech is the index of the mind. • This maxim is also sometimes written Index animi sermo est (and can also be translated as, "Speech is an indication of thought").

Indictment de felony est contra pacem domini regis, coronam et dignitatem suam, in genere et non in individuo; quia in Anglia non est interregnum. Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity, in general and not in his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. In disjunctive constructions, it is sufficient if either part is true.

In dubiis benigniora praeferenda sunt. In doubtful cases, the more liberal constructions are to be preferred.

In dubiis magis dignum est accipiendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be accepted.

In dubiis non praesumitur pro testamento. In doubtful cases, there is not presumption in favor of the will.

In dubio, haec legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. In a doubtful case, the construction of the law is what the words indicate.

In dubio, pars mitior est sequenda. In a doubtful case, the gentler course is to be followed.

In dubio, pro lege fori. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum (is to be favored).

In dubio, sequendum quod tutius est. In a doubtful case, the safer course is to be followed.

In eo quod plus sit semper inest et minus. The lesser is always included in the greater.

Inesse potest donationi modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, or cause; as (ut) introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum magis de bona quam de malo lex intendit. In an act (or deed) that may be considered good or bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad.

Infans non multum a furioso distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet. In things favored, what does good is more regarded than what does harm.

In favorem vitae, libertatis, et innocentiae omnia praesumuntur. All presumptions are in favor of life, liberty, and innocence.

In fictione juris semper aequitas existit. In a fiction of law there is always equity. • A legal fiction is always consistent with equity.

In fictione juris semper subsistit aequitas. In a legal fiction equity always abides (or prevails).

Infinitum in jure reprobatur. That which is endless is condemned in law.

In generalibus latet error. Error lurks in general expressions. • This maxim is sometimes written In generalibus versatur error (meaning "error dwells in general expressions").

In genere quicunque aliquid dicit, sive actor sive reus, necesse est ut probat. In general, whoever alleges anything, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it.

In haeredes non solent transire actiones quae poenales ex maleficio sunt. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs.

In his enim quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made.

In his quae de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriae vel loci non est alleganda. In those things that by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be adduced.

Iniquissima pax est anteponenda justissimo bello. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others to do so.

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem. It is unjust for anyone to be judge in his own cause.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is unjust for freeborn individuals not to have the free disposal of their own property.

In judiciis minori aetati succurritur. In judicial proceedings, allowance is made for a minor (in age).

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. In court no one is trusted except those sworn.

In jure non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is regarded. [Cases: Negligence ☞ 383.]

In jure omnis definitio periculosa est. In law every definition is dangerous.

Injuria fit ei cui convicium dictum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to the person of whom an insult was said, or concerning whom an infamous song was made.

Injuria illata judici, seu locum tenenti regis, videtur ipsi regi illata, maxime si fiat in exercente officium. An injury offered to a judge, or person representing the king, is considered as offered to the king himself, especially if it is done in the exercise of his office.

Injuria non excusat injuriam. A wrong does not excuse a wrong.

Injuria non praesumitur. A wrong is not presumed.

Injuria propria non cadet beneficium facientis. No benefit shall accrue to a person from his own wrongdoing.

Injuria servi dominum pertingit. The servant's wrongdoing reaches the master. • The master is liable for injury done by his servant.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere. It is unjust to give judgment or opinion concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law.

In majore summa continetur minor. In the greater sum is contained the less.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur, non exitus. In criminal offenses, the intention is regarded, not the event.

In maleficio ratihabitio mandato comparatur. In delict (or tort), ratification is equivalent to authorization. Dig. 43.16.1.15.

In maxima potentia minima licentia. In the greatest power there is the least license.

- In mercibus illicitis non sit commercium. Let there be no commerce in illicit goods.
- In novo casu novum remedium apponendum est. In a novel case a new legal remedy must be applied.
- In obscuris inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. In obscure cases it is usual to regard what is more probable or what is more often done.
- In obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases, we follow what is least so.
- In odium spoliatoris omnia praesumuntur. Everything is presumed to the prejudice of the despoiler. [Cases: Evidence ↷78.]
- In omni actione ubi duae concurrunt distractiones, videlicet in rem et in personam, illa distractio tenenda est quae magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses (or forms of distraint) concur, that is in rem and in personam, the distraint is to be chosen that is more dreaded and that binds more firmly. Bracton 372.
- In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In all contracts, whether express or implied, there must be something given in exchange. 2 Bl. Com. 444.
- In omnibus (fere) poenalibus judiciis, et aetati et imprudentiae succurritur. In almost all penal judgments, allowance is made for age (or youth) and lack of discretion. Dig. 50.17.108.
- In omnibus obligationibus, in quibus dies non ponitur, praesenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no date is fixed (for performance), the thing is due the same day.
- In omnibus quidem, maxime tamen in jure, aequitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but especially in those that concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded.
- In omni re nascitur res quae ipsam rem exterminat. In everything, the thing is born that ends the thing itself.
- In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet. When two parties have equal claims, the possessor should be considered the stronger. • The phrase is also translated in this way: in an equal case the possessor ought to be preferred.
- In pari causa potior est conditio possidentis. When two parties have equal claims, the position of the possessor is the stronger.
- In pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis. When both parties are equally at fault, the position of the possessor is the better.
- In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. Where both parties are equally in the wrong, the position of the defendant is the stronger. [Cases: Action ↷4; Equity ↷65.]
- In poenalibus causis benignius interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more liberal interpretation is to be made.
- In praeparatoriis ad iudicium favetur actori. In things preparatory to trial, the plaintiff is favored.
- In praesentia majoris cessat potentia minoris. In the presence of the superior, the power of the inferior ceases. • This maxim is sometimes written In praesentia majoris potestatis, minor potestas cessat (meaning “in the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases”).
- In pretio emptionis et venditionis naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In setting the price for buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to get the better of each other.
- In propria causa nemo iudex. No one can be judge in his own cause.
- In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus. In whatever matter one offends, in that the person is rightfully to be punished. • Coke refers to forfeiture of the office abused. Co. Litt. 233b.
- In rebus manifestis errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. A person errs who adduces authorities on the law in matters self-evident; because obvious truths need not be proved.
- In rebus quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti. In things that are favorable to people, though injurious to the things, a statute should sometimes be extended.
- In re communi neminem dominorum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse. In common property no one of the coproprieters can do (or make) anything against the will of the other. Dig. 10.3.28.
- In re dubia benigniorem interpretationem sequi non minus justius est quam tutius. In a doubtful matter, to follow the more liberal interpretation is as much the more just as it is the safer course.
- In re dubia magis infitatio quam affirmatio intelligenda. In a doubtful matter, the negation is to be understood rather than the affirmation.
- In re lupanari testes lupanares admittentur. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes will be admitted as witnesses.
- In re pari potiorem causam esse prohibentis constat. Where the parties have equal rights (in common property), it is an established principle that the one prohibiting has the stronger cause. Dig. 10.3.28.
- In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiae. It is extremely unjust to assign anyone the privilege of judgment in his own cause.
- In republica maxime conservanda sunt jura belli. The laws of war must be especially preserved in the state.
- In restitutionem, non in poenam, haeres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions.

Insanus est qui, abstracta ratione, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. The person is insane who, having cast aside reason, does everything with violence and rage.

In satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, it is not permitted that more be received than has been received once for all (i.e., after payment in full).

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another.

In stipulationibus cum quaeritur quid actum sit, verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. In agreements, when there is a question whether action has been taken, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them.

In stipulationibus id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, there is regard to the time at which we reach agreement.

In suo quisque negotio hebetior est quam in alieno. Everyone is less perceptive (of flaws) in his own business than in that of another.

Intentio caeca mala. A concealed intention is an evil one.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. The intention ought to be subject to the laws, not the laws to the intention.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. My intent gives a name to my act.

Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse praejudicium facere saepe constitutum est. It has been often decided that matters transacted between other parties cannot cause prejudice (to those who were not involved).

Inter arma silent leges. Amid the arms of war the laws are silent.

Interdum venit ut exceptio quae prima facie justa videtur tamen inique noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea that seems prima facie just is nevertheless injurious and unfair.

Interest reipublicae ne maleficia remaneant impunita. It is in the interest of the state that crimes not remain unpunished.

Interest reipublicae ne sua quis male utatur. It is in the interest of the state that no one misuse his own property.

Interest reipublicae quod homines conserventur. It is in the interest of the state that people should be protected.

Interest reipublicae res judicatas non rescindi. It is in the interest of the state that judgments already given not be rescinded.

Interest reipublicae suprema hominum testamenta rata haberi. It is in the interest of the state that a person's last will should be held valid.

Interest reipublicae ut carceres sint in tuto. It is in the interest of the state that prisons should be secure.

Interest reipublicae ut pax in regno conservetur et quaecunque paci adversentur provide declinentur. It is in the interest of the state to preserve peace in the kingdom and prudently to decline whatever is adverse to it.

Interest reipublicae ut quilibet re sua bene utatur. It is in the interest of the state that each person make good use of his own property.

Interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium. It is in the interest of the state that there be a limit to litigation.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To interpret and reconcile laws so they harmonize is the best mode of construction.

Interpretatio chartarum benigne facienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. The construction of a deed is to be made liberally, that the thing may rather take effect than perish.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Such a construction should be made that the measure may take effect rather than fail.

Interpretatio talis in ambiguis semper fienda est ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. In ambiguities, a construction should always be found such that what is unsuitable and absurd may be avoided.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit praescriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not remove a prescription (or acquisition by long use) once it has been obtained.

Intestamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur. In wills we diligently examine the testator's intention.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testantium interpretantur. In wills the intentions of the testators are more fully (or liberally) construed.

Intestatus decedit qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit aut non jure fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo haeres exstitit. A person dies intestate who either has made no will at all or has not made it legally, or when the will that he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or when there is no living heir.

In toto et pars continetur. In the whole the part also is included.

In traditionibus scriptorum (chartarum) non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum (factum) est, inspicitur. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said but what is done is to be considered.

Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis. Useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur. A person who discovers a libel and does not destroy it is punished.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accessit. Let the surety be held for the true amount unless he agreed for a certain amount.

In verbis non verba sed res et ratio quaerenda est. In wording, it is not the words but the substance and the meaning that is to be sought.

Invito beneficium non datur. No benefit is given to one unwilling. • No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig. 50.17.69.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur. In discourse it is not the point from which but the end to which it is drawn that should be regarded.

Ipsae leges cupiunt ut jure regantur. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right.

Ira furor brevis est. Anger is a short insanity.

Ita lex scripta est. So the law is written.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. A way is a right of going or walking for a human being, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Judex aequitatem semper spectare debet. A judge ought always to regard equity.

Judex ante oculos aequitatem semper habere debet. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat nec propositione domesticae voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet. A good judge should do nothing from his own preference or from the prompting of his private desire; but he should pronounce according to law and justice.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur. The judge is condemned when the guilty party is acquitted.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata. The judge ought to give judgment according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex est lex loquens. The judge is the speaking law.

Judex habere debet duos sales, salem sapientiae, ne sit insipidus, et salem conscientiae, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts: the salt of wisdom, lest he be foolish; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish.

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause.

Judex non potest injuriam sibi datum punire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself.

Judex non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff himself demands.

Judicandum est legibus non exemplis. Judgment must be given by the laws, not by examples.

Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiae suae. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their judgments.

Judicia in curia regis non adnihilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attinctam adnullentur. Let judgments in the king's court not be invalidated but remain in force until annulled by error or attain. 2 Inst. 360.

Judicia in deliberationibus crebro maturescunt, in accelerato processu nunquam. Judgments often ripen in the course of deliberation, never in hurried proceeding. 2 Inst. 210.

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora. The later decisions are stronger in law.

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipiuntur. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta (or sayings) of the law, and are received as truth.

Judiciis posterioribus fides est adhibenda. Trust should be put in the later decisions.

Judici officium suum excedenti non paretur. A judge who exceeds his office (or jurisdiction) is not obeyed.

Judici satis poena est quod Deum habet ultorem. It is punishment enough for a judge that he has God to take vengeance on him.

Judicis est in pronuntiando sequi regulam, exceptione non probata. It is the proper role of a judge in rendering his decision to follow the rule, when the exception has not been proved.

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. It is the proper role of a judge to decide according to the allegations and proofs.

Judicis est jus dicere, non dare. It is the proper role of a judge to state the right, not to endow it. • Generally interpreted, it is the duty of the judge to administer justice and not to make law.

Judicis officium est opus diei in die suo perficere. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day.

Judicis officium est ut res ita tempora rerum quaerere; quaesito tempore tutus eris. It is the duty of a judge to inquire into the timing of events as much as the matters themselves; by inquiring into the time, you will be safe.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by a person who is not its proper judge (not in the proper jurisdiction) is of no consequence. 10 Coke 76.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. Judgment is, as it were, a pronouncement of the right (or a saying of the law).

Judicium non debet esse illusorium, suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory (or deceptive); it ought to have its proper effect. 2 Co. Inst. 341.

Judicium redditur in invitum, in praesumptione legis. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against one's will.

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. A judgment is always taken for truth.

Juncta juvant. Things joined together are helpful.

Jura ecclesiastica limitata sunt infra limites separatos. Ecclesiastical laws are limited within separate bounds.

Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituuntur. Laws are abrogated or repealed by the same means by which they are made.

Juramentum est indivisibile, et non est admittendum in parte verum et in parte falsum. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be accepted as partly true and partly false.

Jura naturae sunt immutabilia. The laws of nature are unchangeable.

Jura publica anteferenda privatis. Public rights are to be preferred to private.

Jura publica ex privato promiscue decidi non debent. Public rights ought not to be determined in confusion, from private considerations. ● In Coke's example, the validity of a sheriff's warrant is not affected by a dispute among the parties. Co. Litt. 181b.

Jurare est Deum in testem vocare, et est actus divini cultus. To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion.

Jura regis specialia non conceduntur per generalia verba. The special rights of the king are not granted by general words.

Jura sanguinis nullo jure civili dirimi possunt. The rights of blood (or kinship) cannot be destroyed by any civil law.

Jurato creditur in judicio. In judgment credit is given to the swearer.

Juratores debent esse vicini, sufficientes et minus suspecti. Jurors ought to be neighbors, of sufficient means and free from suspicion (literally, less suspected).

Juratores sunt iudices facti. The jurors are the judges of fact.

Juratus creditur in judicio. In judgment a person who has sworn an oath is believed.

Jure naturae aequum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiozem. By the law of nature, it is just that no one should be enriched to the detriment and injury of another.

Juri non est consonum quod aliquis accessorius in curia regis convincatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit attinctus. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before anyone has been attainted of the fact (i.e., under sentence of attainder for committing the act). ● The accessory should not be convicted before the principal is proved guilty. 2 Co. Inst. 183.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice.

Juris effectus in executione consistit. The effect of law (or of a right) consists in the execution.

Juris ignorantia est cum jus nostrum ignoramus. It is ignorance of law when we do not know our own right.

Juris praecepta sunt haec, honeste vivere, alterum non laedere, suum cuique tribuere. These are the precepts of the law: to live honorably, not to injure another, to render to each person his due. Just. Inst. 1.1.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justis atque injustis scientia. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of the just and the unjust. Just. Inst. 1.1.1.

Jurisprudentia legis communis Angliae est scientia socialis et copiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a social science comprehensive in scope.

Juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti verum ignorantiam non nocere. Ignorance of law is prejudicial to everyone, but ignorance of fact is not.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. For the good of commerce, the right of survivorship has no place among merchants. [Cases: Partnership ↻ 76.]

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores, pro beneficio commercii locum non habet. For the benefit of commerce, there is no right of accrual among merchants.

Jus accrescendi praefertur oneribus. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances.

Jus accrescendi praefertur ultimae voluntati. The right of survivorship is preferred to a last will.

Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit. The civil law is what a people has established for itself.

Jus constitui oportet in his quae ut plurimum accidunt, non quae ex inopinato. Law ought to be made with a view to the cases that happen most frequently, and not to those that are unexpected.

Jus descendit, et non terra. A right descends, and not the land.

Jus dicere (et) non jus dare. To state the right (and) not to endow it. ● Generally interpreted, to declare the law (and) not to make it.

Jus est ars boni et aequi. Law is the science of what is good and just.

Jus est norma recti; et quicquid est contra normam recti est injuria. The law is the rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury.

Jus et fraus nunquam cohabitant. Right and fraud never abide together.

Jus ex injuria non oritur. A right does not arise from a wrong.

Jus in re inhaerit ossibus usufructuarii. A right in the thing cleaves to the person (literally, the bones) of the usufructuary.

Jusjurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. The form of taking an oath differs in language, but agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that God is invoked.

Jusjurandum inter alios factum nec nocere nec prodesse debet. An oath made between third parties ought neither to hurt nor to profit.

Jus naturale est quod apud homines eandem habet potentiam. Natural right is that which has the same force among (all) mankind.

Jus non habenti tute non paretur. It is safe not to obey a person who has no right.

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest. A public right cannot be changed by agreements of private parties.

Jus publicum et privatum est quod ex naturalibus praeceptis, aut gentium, aut civilibus est collectum et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from the precepts of nature, of peoples in general, or of particular states; and what in written law is called "jus" by the law of England is said to be "right."

Jus quo universitates utuntur est idem quod habent privati. The right that corporations exercise is the same as the right that individuals possess.

Jus respicit aequitatem. Law regards equity.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori. An additional or enhanced right for the possessor accrues to the successor.

Justitia debet esse libera, quia nihil iniquius venali justitia; plena, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et celer, quia dilatio est quaedam negatio. Justice ought not to be bought, for nothing is more hateful than venal justice; full, for justice ought not to be defective; and quick, for delay is a certain denial.

Justitia est constans et perpetua voluntas jus suum cuique tribuendi. Justice is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every person his due.

Justitia est duplex: severe puniens et vere praeveniens. Justice is double: punishing with severity, and truly preventing.

Justitia est virtus excellens et Altissimo complacens. Justice is an excellent virtue and pleasing to the Most High.

Justitia firmatur solium. By justice the throne is strengthened.

Justitia nemini neganda est. Justice is to be denied to no one.

Justitia non est neganda, non differenda. Justice is not to be denied or delayed.

Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem, solum veritatem spectat justitia. Justice knows neither father nor mother; justice looks to truth alone.

Justum non est aliquem antenatum mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habetur. It is not just to make a bastard after his death an elder child who all his life has been accounted legitimate.

Jus vendit quod usus approbavit. The law dispenses what use has approved.

La conscience est la plus changeante des règles. Conscience is the most changing of rules.

La ley favour la vie d'un home. The law favors a man's life.

La ley favour l'inheritance d'un home. The law favors a man's inheritance.

La ley voit plus tost suffer un mischiefe que un inconvenience. The law will sooner suffer a mischief than an inconvenience.

Lata culpa dolo aequiparatur. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Le contrat fait la loi. The contract makes the law.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone.

Legatus regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is appointed, and is to be honored in the same way as the person whose place he fills.

Legem enim contractus dat. The contract gives the law.

Legem terrae amittentes perpetuam infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt. Those who lose the law of the land thereby justly incur an eternal stigma of infamy.

Leges Angliae sunt tripartitae: jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges et constitutiones futuris certum est dare formam negotiis non ad facta praeterita revocari; nisi nominatim et de praeterito tempore et adhuc pendentibus negotiis cautum sit. Laws and statutes are regarded as regulating future negotiations not past transactions; unless they are expressly made to apply to both past and to pending matters.

Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima. The practice of adding and annulling laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Coke pref.

Leges fixit pretio atque refixit. He shaped and reshaped laws for a price; he promulgated and annulled laws at a price. • The reference is to a judge who took bribes.

Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. Laws that humans have made are born, live, and die.

Leges naturae perfectissimae sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it that can stand forever.

Leges non verbis sed rebus sunt impositae. Laws are imposed on affairs, not words.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones. [Cases: Statutes ↷ 159, 162.]

Leges suum ligent latorem. Laws should bind their own author.

Leges vigilantibus, non dormientibus subveniunt. The laws aid those who keep watch, not those who sleep (that is, the vigilant, not the negligent). [Cases: Action ↷ 63; Equity ↷ 64.]

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege naturae utendum est. Where manmade laws fail, the law of nature must be used.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam. The construction of law does not do wrong.

Legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The interpretation of law obtains the force of law. [Cases: Courts ↷ 108.]

Legislatorum est viva vox, rebus et non verbis legem imponere. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on (actual) affairs and not on (mere) words.

Legis minister non tenetur, in executione officii sui, fugere aut retrocedere. The minister of the law is not bound, in the execution of his office, either to flee or to retreat.

Legitime imperanti parere necesse est. One who commands lawfully must be obeyed.

Legitimus haeres et filius est quem nuptiae demonstrant. A lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage declares to be lawful.

Le ley de Dieu et ley de terre sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both promote and favor the common and public good of the land.

Le ley est le plus haut enheritance que le roy ad, car par le ley, il mesme et tous ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul enheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Le salut du peuple est la suprême loi. The safety of the people is the highest law.

Les fictions naissent de la loi, et non la loi des fictions. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

Les lois ne se chargent de punir que les actions exterieures. Laws undertake to punish only outward actions.

Lex aequitate gaudet. Law delights in equity.

Lex aequitate gaudet; appetit perfectum; est norma recti. The law delights in equity; it covets perfection; it is a rule of right.

Lex aliquando sequitur aequitatem. The law sometimes follows equity.

Lex Angliae est lex misericordiae. The law of England is a law of mercy.

Lex Angliae lex terrae est. The law of England is the law of the land.

Lex Angliae non patitur absurdum. The law of England does not allow an absurdity.

Lex Angliae nunquam matris sed semper patris conditionem imitari partum judicat. The law of England rules that the offspring always follows the condition of the father, never that of the mother.

Lex Angliae nunquam sine parlamento mutari potest. The law of England can never be changed without (act of) parliament. • This maxim is sometimes written Lex Angliae sine Parlamento mutari non potest (also translatable as “the law of England cannot be changed but by Parliament”).

Lex beneficialis rei consimili remedium praestat. A beneficial law affords a remedy in a similar case.

Lex citius tolerare vult privatum damnum quam publicum malum. The law would sooner endure a private loss than a public evil.

Lex contra id quod praesumit probationem non recipit. The law accepts no proof against that which it presumes.

Lex deficere non potest in justitia exhibenda. The law cannot fail in dispensing justice.

Lex de futuro, judex de praeterito. The law (provides) for the future, the judge for the past.

Lex dilationes semper exhorret. The law always abhors delays.

Lex est ab aeterno. The law is from eternity.

Lex est dictamen rationis. Law is the dictate of reason.

Lex est exercitus judicum tutissimus ductor. The law is the safest leader of the army of judges.

Lex est norma recti. Law is a rule of right.

Lex est ratio summa, quae jubet quae sunt utilia et necessaria, et contraria prohibet. Law is the highest form of reason, which commands what is useful and necessary and forbids the contrary.

- Lex est sanctio sancta, jubens honesta et prohibens contraria. Law is a sacred sanction, commanding what is right and prohibiting the contrary.
- Lex est summa ratio. Law is the highest reason.
- Lex est tutissima cassis; sub clypeo legis nemo decipitur. Law is the safest helmet; under the shield of the law no one is deceived.
- Lex facit regem. Law makes the king (i.e., makes the monarch king).
- Lex favet doti. The law favors dower.
- Lex fingit ubi subsistit aequitas. Law creates a fiction where equity abides.
- Lex intendit vicinum vicini facta scire. The law presumes that one neighbor knows the actions of another.
- Lex judicat de rebus necessario faciendis quasi re ipsa factis. The law judges of things that must necessarily be done as if actually done.
- Lex necessitatis est lex temporis, i.e., instantis. The law of necessity is the law of time, i.e., time present.
- Lex neminem cogit ad vana seu inutilia peragenda. The law forces no one to do vain or useless things. [Cases: Specific Performance ↻13.]
- Lex neminem cogit ostendere quod nescire praesumitur. The law forces no one to make known what he is presumed not to know.
- Lex nemini facit injuriam. The law does wrong to no one. [Cases: Equity ↻54.]
- Lex nemini operatur iniqum, nemini facit injuriam. The law works an injustice to no one and does wrong to no one. [Cases: Equity ↻54.]
- Lex nil facit frustra, nil jubet frustra. The law does nothing in vain and commands nothing in vain.
- Lex non a rege est violanda. The law is not to be violated by the king.
- Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. The law does not compel to impossible ends.
- Lex non curat de minimis. The law is not concerned with matters of least consequence. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻1171; Equity ↻34.]
- Lex non debet deficere conquerentibus in justitia exhibenda. The law ought not to fail in dispensing justice to those with a grievance.
- Lex non deficit in justitia exhibenda. The law does not fail in showing justice.
- Lex non exacte definit, sed arbitrio boni viri permittit. The law does not define exactly, but trusts in the judgment of a good man.
- Lex non favet votis delicatorum. The law does not favor the wishes of the fastidious.
- Lex non intendit aliquid impossibile. The law does not intend anything impossible.
- Lex non novit patrem, nec matrem; solam veritatem. The law knows neither father nor mother; only the truth.
- Lex non oritur ex injuria. The law does not arise from an unlawful act.
- Lex non patitur fractiones et divisiones statuum. The law does not tolerate fractions and divisions of estates. 1 Coke 87a.
- Lex non praecipit inutilia, quia inutilis labor stultus. The law does not command useless things, because useless labor is foolish. [Cases: Mandamus ↻16.]
- Lex non requirit verificari quod apparet curiae. The law does not require that to be proved which is apparent to the court.
- Lex plus laudatur quando ratione probatur. The law is more praised when it is consonant with reason.
- Lex posterior derogat priori. A later statute repeals an earlier one.
- Lex prospicit, non respicit. The law looks forward, not backward.
- Lex punit mendaciam. The law punishes falsehood.
- Lex rejicit superflua, pugnancia, incongrua. The law rejects superfluous, contradictory, and incongruous things.
- Lex reprobat moram. The law disapproves of delay.
- Lex respicit aequitatem. Law regards equity.
- Lex scripta si cesset, id custodiri oportet quod moribus et consuetudine inductum est; et, si qua in re hoc defecerit, tunc id quod proximum et consequens ei est; et, si id non appareat, tunc jus quo urbs Romana utitur servari oportet. If the written law is silent, that which is drawn from manners and custom ought to be observed; and, if that is in any manner defective, then what is next and consistent with it; and, if that does not appear, then the law that Rome uses should be followed.
- Lex semper dabit remedium. The law will always give a remedy.
- Lex semper intendit quod convenit rationi. The law always intends what is agreeable to reason.
- Lex spectat naturae ordinem. The law regards the order of nature.
- Lex succurrit ignoranti. The law assists the ignorant.
- Lex succurrit minoribus. The law assists minors.
- Lex uno ore omnes alloquitur. The law speaks to all with one mouth.
- Lex vigilantibus, non dormientibus, subvenit. Law aids the watchful, not the sleeping.
- Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem. The return of money does not free the party presenting it (from liability).
- Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Liberty is the natural power of doing whatever one pleases, except what is prevented by law or force.
- Libertas est res inestimabilis. Liberty is an inestimable thing.

Libertas inaestimabilis res est. Liberty is a priceless good.

Libertas non recipit aestimationem. Freedom does not admit of valuation.

Libertas omnibus rebus favorabilior est. Liberty is more favored than all things.

Libertates regales ad coronam spectantes ex concessione regum a corona exierunt. Royal franchises relating to the Crown have emanated from the Crown by grant of kings.

Libertinum ingratum leges civiles in pristinam servitutem redignant; sed leges Angliae semel manumissum semper liberum judicant. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a person once manumitted as ever after free.

Liberum corpus nullam recipit aestimationem. The body of a free person allows no price to be set on it. Dig. 9.3.7.

Liberum est cuique apud se explorare an expediat sibi consilium. Everyone is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to him.

Librorum appellatione continentur omnia volumina, sive in charta, sive in membrana sint, sive in quavis alia materia. Under the name of books are contained all volumes, whether on paper, or on parchment, or on any other material.

Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis, tamen potest fieri declaratio praecedens quae sortiatur effectum interveniente novo actu. Even if the grant of a future interest is inoperative, yet a declaration precedent may be made that may take effect, provided a new act intervenes.

Licita bene miscentur, formula nisi juris obstet. Lawful acts are well joined together, unless some form of law prevents it.

Ligeantia est quasi legis essentia; est vinculum fidei. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of the law; it is the bond of faith.

Ligeantia est vinculum fidei; ligeantia est legis essentia. Allegiance is the bond of fealty and the essence of law.

Ligeantia naturalis nullis claustris coercetur, nullis metis refranatur, nullis finibus premitur. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, curbed by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

Ligna et lapides sub armorum appellatione non continentur. Sticks and stones are not contained under the name of arms.

Linea recta est index sui et obliqui; lex est linea recta. A right line is an index of itself and of an oblique; law is a right line. Co. Litt. 158b.

Linea recta semper praefertur transversali. The right line is always preferred to the collateral.

Litterae patentes regis non erunt vacuae. Letters patent of the king will not be void.

Litterae scriptae manent. Written words last.

Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, sive in rem, sive in personam sit. The word "lis" (a lawsuit) signifies every action, whether it is in rem or in personam.

Litus est quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached.

L'obligation sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet. An obligation without consideration, or on a false consideration, or on unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect.

Locus contractus regit actum. The place of the contract governs the act. [Cases: Contracts ↪ 144.]

Locus pro solutione redditus aut pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandus. The place for the payment of rent or money is to be strictly observed according to the condition of the lease or obligation.

Longa patientia trahitur ad consensum. Long sufferance is construed as consent.

Longa possessio est pacis jus. Long possession is a right of peace.

Longa possessio jus parit. Long possession begets a right.

Longa possessio parit jus possidendi et tollit actionem vero domino. Long possession produces the right of possession and deprives the true owner of his action.

Longum tempus et longus usus qui excedit memoriam hominum sufficit pro jure. Long time and long use beyond the memory of men suffice for right.

Loquendum ut vulgus, sentiendum ut docti. We should speak as the common people; we should think as the learned.

L'ou le ley done chose, la ceo done remedie a vener a ceo. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover.

Lubricum linguae non facile trahendum est in poenam. A slip of the tongue ought not to be easily subject to punishment.

Lucrum facere ex pupilli tutela tutor non debet. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward.

Lunaticus, qui gaudet in lucidis intervallis. A person is (still) a lunatic who enjoys lucid intervals.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. ● When an agreement's words are susceptible of both a favorable and unfavorable meaning, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned to assign all offices will be construed to apply to assignable offices.

Magister rerum usus; magistra rerum experientia. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sont appelés les deux grandes charters. Magna Carta and the Charter of the Forest are called the two great charters.

Magna culpa dolus est. Great fault (or gross negligence) is equivalent to fraud.

Magna negligentia culpa est; magna culpa dolus est. Great negligence is fault; great fault is fraud.

Maihemium est homicidium inchoatum. Mayhem is incipient homicide.

Maihemium est inter crimina majora minimum, et inter minora maximum. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest among small.

Maihemium est membri mutilatio, et dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliqua parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnandum. Mayhem is the mutilation of a limb, and can be said (to occur) when a person is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in a fight.

Major continet in se minus. The greater includes the less.

Majore poena affectus quam legibus statuta est non est infamis. A criminal afflicted with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous. 4 Co. Inst. 66.

Major haereditas venit unicuique nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than comes from parents.

Majori summae minor inest. The lesser is included in the greater sum.

Major numerus in se continet minorem. The greater number contains in itself the less.

Majus continet minus. The greater contains the less.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.

Majus est delictum seipsum occidere quam alium. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam; sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed; but in the construction of instruments, bad grammar, as far as possible, is to be avoided.

Maledicta expositio quae corrumpit textum. It is a cursed construction that corrupts the text.

Maleficia non debent remanere impunita, et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished, and impunity affords continual incitement to wrongdoing. 4 Coke 45.

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur. Misdeeds are distinguished from proposals; crimes are distinguished by the intention (with which they are committed).

Malitia est acida, est mali animi affectus. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind.

Malitia supplet aetatem. Malice makes up for age.

Malitiis hominum est obviandum. The malicious designs of men must be thwarted. • Also found as Malum hominum est obviandum.

Malum non habet efficientem sed deficientem causam. Evil has not an efficient but a deficient cause.

Malum non praesumitur. Evil is not presumed.

Malum quo communius eo pejus. The more common the evil, the worse.

Malus usus est abolendus. An evil custom ought to be abolished; a bad usage should be abolished.

Malus usus est abolendus, quia in consuetudinibus, non diuturnitas temporis, sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. An evil custom is to be abolished, because, in customs, not length of time, but solidity of reason, is to be considered.

Mandata licita strictam recipiunt interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful ones receive a wide and an expansive interpretation.

Mandatarius terminos sibi positos transgredi non potest. A mandatary cannot exceed the bounds of his authority.

Mandatum nisi gratuitum nullum est. Unless a mandate is gratuitous (without payment), it is not a mandate.

Manifesta probatione non indigent. Obvious facts are not in need of proof.

Maris et faeminae conjunctio est de jure naturae. The union of male and female is founded on the law of nature.

Matrimonia debent esse libera. Marriages ought to be free.

Matrimonium subsequens legitimos facit quoad sacerdotium non quoad successionem propter consuetudinem regni quae se habet in contrarium. Subsequent marriage legitimates as regards priesthood but not as regards succession because of the custom of the kingdom, which is to the contrary.

Matrimonium subsequens tollit peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage removes preceding fault.

Matter en ley ne serra mise en bouche del jurors. Matter of law shall not be put into the mouths of jurors.

Maturiora sunt vota mulierum quam virorum. The wishes of women are of quicker maturity than those of men. • That is, women arrive earlier at eligibility for marriage. 6 Coke 71.

Maxime ita dicta quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur. A maxim is so called because its dignity is chiefest and its authority is the most certain, and because it is most approved by all.

Maxime paci sunt contraria vis et injuria. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong.

Maximus erroris populus magister. The people are the greatest master of error.

Meliores conditionem suam facere potest minor, deteriores nequaquam. A minor can improve or make his condition better, but in no way worse. • This maxim is sometimes written Meliores conditionem facere potest minor, deteriores nequaquam (also translatable as “a minor can make his condition better, but by no means worse”).

Melior est causa possidentis. The cause of the possessor is preferable.

Melior est conditio defendentis. The condition of the defendant is the better.

Melior est conditio possidentis et rei quam actoris. Better is the condition of the possessor, and that of the defendant (is better) than that of the plaintiff.

Melior est conditio possidentis, ubi neuter jus habet. Better is the condition of the possessor where neither of the two has the right.

Melior est justitia vere praeveniens quam severe puniens. Justice that truly prevents a crime is better than that which severely punishes it.

Melius est in tempore occurrere quam post causam vulneratum remedium quaerere. It is better to oppose in time than to seek a remedy after a wrong has been inflicted. • Coke introduces this maxim with the phrase ne per negligentiam damnum incurrat: “lest he incur damage through negligence.” 2 Co. Inst. 299.

Melius est jus deficiens quam jus incertum. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire. It is better to suffer every wrong than to consent to wrong.

Melius est petere fontem quam sectari rivulos. It is better to go to the fountainhead than to follow the streams.

Melius est recurrere quam male currere. It is better to run back than to run wrong (or badly). • It is better to retrace one’s steps than to proceed improperly.

Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est. In wills, the intention of the testator is to be regarded.

Mentiri est contra mentem ire. To lie is to go against the mind.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet. The term “merchandise” belongs to movable things only.

Mercis appellatione homines non contineri. Under the name of merchandise human beings are not included.

Merito beneficium legis amittit qui legem ipsam subvertere intendit. A person deservedly loses the protection of the law who attempts to overturn the law itself.

Merito retribuatur Rex legi quod lex attribuat ei. The king rightly repays the law what (i.e., the power that) the law ascribes to him; let the king repay to the law what the law attributes to him.

Merx est quidquid vendi potest. Merchandise is whatever can be sold.

Meum est promittere, non dimittere. It is mine to promise, not to discharge.

Minatur innocentibus qui parcit nocentibus. A person threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.

Minima poena corporalis est major qualibet pecuniaria. The smallest bodily punishment is greater than any pecuniary one.

Minime mutanda sunt quae certam habuerunt interpretationem. Things that have had a fixed interpretation are to be altered as little as possible.

Minimum est nihilo proximum. The least is next to nothing.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis, nec etiam convenire. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, not even to agree.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis, nec etiam convenire; differetur usque aetatem; sed non cadit breve. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, not even to agree; it will be deferred until majority; but a writ does not fail.

Minor jurare non potest. A minor cannot take an oath.

Minor minorem custodire non debet; alios enim praesumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit. A minor ought not be guardian of a minor, for he is presumed to govern others ill who does not know how to govern himself.

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori aetati, nisi in causa dotis, propter favorem. A minor is not bound to answer during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

Minor qui infra aetatem 12 annorum fuerit utlagari non potest nec extra legem poni, quia ante talem aetatem, non est sub lege aliqua nec in decenna. A minor who is under 12 years of age cannot be outlawed nor placed beyond the law, because before that age he is not under any law nor in a decennary.

Minor septemdecim annis non admittitur fore executorem. A person under 17 years of age is not admitted to be an executor.

Minus solvit qui tardius solvit; nam et tempore minus solvitur. A person pays too little who pays too late; for, from the delay, the payment is less.

Misera est servitus ubi jus est vagum aut incertum. It is a miserable slavery where the law is vague or uncertain.

Mitius imperanti melius paretur. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed.

Mobilia non habent situm. Movables have no fixed site or locality.

Mobilia personam sequuntur, immobilia situm. Movable things follow the person; immovable ones, their locality.

Mobilia sequuntur personam. Movables follow the person. [Cases: Taxation ↪98.]

Modica circumstantia facti jus mutat. A small circumstance attending an act alters the right.

Modus de non decimando non valet. A prescription not to pay tithes is void.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem. Customary form and the agreement of the parties overcome the law. • One of the first principles relative to the law of contract. 2 Coke 73.

Modus legem dat donationi. Custom (or form) gives law to a gift.

Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetae fit omnium rerum conveniens et justa aestimatio. Money is the just medium and measure of all exchangeable things, for by the medium of money a suitable and just estimation of all things is made.

Monetandi jus comprehenditur in regalibus quae nunquam a regio sceptro abdicantur. The right of coining is included among those rights of royalty that are never relinquished by the kingly scepter.

Monumenta quae nos recorda vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia. The monuments that we call records are the vestiges of truth and antiquity.

Mora debitoris non debet esse creditori damnosa. Delay by a debtor ought not to be injurious to a creditor.

Mora reprobatur in lege. Delay is disapproved of in law.

Mors dicitur ultimum supplicium. Death is called the extreme penalty.

Mors omnia solvit. Death dissolves all things.

Mortis momentum est ultimum vitae momentum. The moment of death is the last moment of life.

Mortuus exitus non est exitus. A dead issue is not issue.
• That is, a child born dead is no child.

Mos retinendus est fidelissimae vetustatis. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.

Mulcta damnum famae non irrogat. A fine does not impose a loss of reputation.

Multa conceduntur per obliquum quae non conceduntur de directo. Many things are conceded indirectly that are not allowed directly.

Multa fidem promissa levant. Many promises lessen confidence.

Multa ignoramus quae nobis non laterent si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris. We are ignorant of many things that would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors were familiar to us.

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi pro communi utilitate introducta sunt. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, that are contrary to logical reasoning. Co. Litt. 70b.

Multa multo exercitatione facilius quam regulis percipies. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.

Multa non vetat lex quae tamen tacite damnavit. The law does not forbid many things that yet it has silently condemned.

Multa transeunt cum universitate quae non per se transeunt. Many things pass with the whole that would not pass separately.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit. Many men know many things; no one knows everything.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et quaestiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion; the simpler questions are, the more lucid they are.

Multiplicata transgressione crescat poenae inflictio. The infliction of punishment should increase with the repetition of the offense. Coke continues, Ex frequenti delicto augetur poena (q.v.). 2 Co. Inst. 479.

Multitudinem decem faciunt. Ten make a multitude.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium. The multitude of those who err does not produce indulgence for error.

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam. A multitude of ignorant practitioners destroys a court.

Multo utilius est pauca idonea effundere, quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. It is much more useful to pour forth a few suitable things than to burden mankind with many useless things.

Nasciturus pro jam nato habetur quamdiu agitur de ejus commodo. One about to be born is held as already born as long as the issue is to his benefit; a child conceived is treated as born to the extent that it is to his or her benefit.

Natura appetit perfectum, ita et lex. Nature aspires to perfection, and so does the law.

Naturae vis maxima; natura bis maxima. The force of nature is greatest; (and, as some say,) nature is doubly greatest. 2 Co. Inst. 564.

Natura fide jussionis sit strictissimi juris et non durat vel extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de tempore ad tempus. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and does not endure or should not be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time.

Naturale est quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be dissolved in the same way in which it is bound.

Natura non facit saltum, ita nec lex. Nature makes no leap, and neither does the law.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supervacuum. Nature makes no vacuum, and the law nothing purposeless.

Nec curia deficeret in justitia exhibenda. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice.

Necessarium est quod non potest aliter se habere. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci. Necessity is the law of time and place.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Necessity excuses or extenuates delinquency in capital cases, but does not have the same effect in civil cases.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum. Necessity makes lawful what otherwise is unlawful. [Cases: Criminal Law ↪38.]

Necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata. Necessity creates a privilege with regard to private rights.

Necessitas non habet legem. Necessity has no law.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata. Public necessity is greater than private necessity.

Necessitas quod cogit defendit. Necessity defends what it compels.

Necessitas sub lege non continetur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum. Necessity is not restrained by law; since what otherwise is not lawful necessity makes lawful.

Necessitas vincit legem. Necessity overcomes the law.

Necessitas vincit legem; legum vincula irridet. Necessity overcomes the law; it laughs at the fetters of laws.

Nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum mittemus, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum. Nor shall we go upon him, nor send upon him, except by the lawful judgment of his peers; we will not go against him or send against him except by the lawful judgment of his peers. • This language appears in Magna Carta, ch. 39.

Nec tempus nec locus occurrit regi. Neither time nor place thwarts the king.

Nec veniam effuso sanguine casus habet. Where blood has been spilled, the case is unpardonable.

Nec veniam, laeso numine, casus habet. Where the Divinity has been insulted, the case is unpardonable.

Negatio conclusionis est error in lege. The denial of a conclusion is error in law.

Negatio destruit negationem, et ambae faciunt affirmationem. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative.

Negatio duplex est affirmatio. A double negative is an affirmative.

Negligentia semper habet infortuniam comitem. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion.

Neminem laedit qui jure suo utitur. A person who exercises his own rights injures no one.

Neminem oportet esse sapienterem legibus. No one ought to be wiser than the laws.

Nemo admittendus est inhabilitare seipsum. No one is allowed to incapacitate himself.

Nemo agit in seipsum. No one acts against himself.

Nemo alienae rei, sine satisfactione, defensor idoneus intelligitur. No one is considered a competent defender of another's property, without security.

Nemo alieno nomine lege agere potest. No one can sue at law in the name of another.

Nemo aliquam partem recte intelligere potest, antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit. No one can properly understand any part of a thing until he has read through the whole again and again.

Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiendus est. No one testifying to his own wrong is to be heard as a witness. [Cases: Estoppel ↪59.]

Nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans. No one is heard when alleging his own wickedness; no one can be heard whose claim is based on his own disgraceful behavior.

Nemo bis punitur pro eodem delicto. No one is punished twice for the same offense.

Nemo cogitationis poenam patitur. No one suffers punishment for his thoughts.

Nemo cogitur rem suam vendere, etiam justo pretio. No one is bound to sell his property, even for a just price.

Nemo commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria. No one can derive benefit from his own wrong.

Nemo contra factum suum (proprium) venire potest. No one can contradict his own deed. 2 Co. Inst. 66.

Nemo damnum facit, nisi qui id fecit quod facere jus non habet. No one does damage except the person who did what he has no right to do.

Nemo dare potest quod non habet. No one can give that which he does not have.

Nemo dat qui non habet. No one gives who does not possess.

Nemo dat quod non habet. No one gives what he does not have; no one transfers (a right) that he does not possess. • According to this maxim, no one gives a better title to property than he himself possesses. A variation of this maxim is Nemo dat qui non habet (no one gives who does not have).

Nemo debet bis puniri pro uno delicto. No one ought to be punished twice for the same offense.

Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa. No one should be twice troubled for the same cause. [Cases: Judgment ↪540.]

Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa. No one ought to be twice troubled for one and the same cause. [Cases: Judgment ↪540.]

Nemo debet bis vexari, si constet curiae quod sit pro una et eadem causa. No one ought to be twice troubled, if it appears to the court that it is for one and the same cause of action.

- Nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa. No one should be judge in his own cause. [Cases: Judges ↷42.]
- Nemo debet immiscere se rei alienae ad se nihil pertinenti. No one should interfere in another's business that does not at all concern him.
- Nemo debet in communione invitus teneri. No one should be retained in a partnership against his will.
- Nemo debet locupletari aliena jactura. No one ought to be enriched at another's expense.
- Nemo debet locupletari ex alterius incommodo. No one ought to be enriched out of another's disadvantage.
- Nemo debet rem suam sine factu aut defectu suo amittere. No one should lose his property without his own act or negligence.
- Nemo de domo sua extrahi potest. No one can be dragged (taken by force) from his own house. Dig. 50.17.103.
- Nemo duobus utatur officiis. No one should exercise two offices.
- Nemo ejusdem tenementi simul potest esse haeres et dominus. No one can be both heir and owner of the same land at the same time.
- Nemo enim aliquam partem recte intelligere possit antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit. No one may be able rightly to understand one part before he has again and again read through the whole.
- Nemo est haeres viventis. No one is an heir of someone living. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↷68; Wills ↷506(6).]
- Nemo est supra leges. No one is above the laws.
- Nemo ex alterius facto praegravari debet. No one ought to be burdened in consequence of another's act.
- Nemo ex consilio obligatur. No one is bound for the advice he gives.
- Nemo ex dolo suo proprio relevetur aut auxilium capiat. Let no one be relieved or gain advantage by his own fraud.
- Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem. No one acquires a right of action from his own wrong (or deception). [Cases: Action ↷4.]
- Nemo ex suo delicto meliorem suam conditionem facere potest. No one can improve his condition by his own wrong.
- Nemo inauditus condemnari debet, si non sit contumax. No one ought to be condemned unheard, unless for contempt. • This maxim is sometimes written Nemo inauditus nec insummonitus condemnari debet, si non sit contumax (meaning "no one should be condemned unheard and unsummoned, unless for contempt").
- Nemo in communione potest invitus detineri. No one can be held (to act) in common against his will; no one can be forced to remain in common ownership against his will. • This maxim states the premise that a coowner can always insist on the division of the property owned.
- Nemo in propria causa testis esse debet. No one can be a witness in his own cause.
- Nemo jus sibi dicere potest. No one can give judgment for himself.
- Nemo militans Deo implicetur secularibus negotiis. No one warring for God should be troubled by secular business.
- Nemo nascitur artifex. No one is born an expert. • Wisdom in the law is acquired only through diligent study. Co. Litt. 97b.
- Nemo patriam in qua natus est exuere, nec ligeantiae debitum ejurare possit. No one can cast off his native land or refuse the obligation of allegiance to it.
- Nemo plus commodi haeredi suo relinquit quam ipse habuit. No one leaves a greater asset to his heir than he had himself.
- Nemo plus juris ad alienum transferre potest quam ipse haberet. No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself might have. Dig. 50.17.54. [Cases: Sales ↷226.]
- Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patriam. No one can verify by the country against a record. • Certain matters of record cannot be contested in court. 2 Co. Inst. 380.
- Nemo potest esse dominus et haeres. No one can be both owner and heir.
- Nemo potest esse simul actor et iudex. No one can be at the same time suitor and judge.
- Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus. No one can be at the same time tenant and landlord (of the same tenement).
- Nemo potest exuere patriam. No one can cast off his own country.
- Nemo potest facere per alium quod per se non potest. No one can do through another what he cannot do by himself.
- Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest facere per directum. No one can do indirectly what he cannot do directly.
- Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam. No one can change his purpose to the injury of another.
- Nemo potest nisi quod de jure potest. No one is able to do a thing, unless he can do it lawfully.
- Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferre quam ipse habet. No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself (actually) has. Co. Litt. 309.
- Nemo potest praecise cogi ad factum. No one can be compelled to perform a specific act. • The effect of this maxim is that an order of specific performance is not available.
- Nemo potest sibi debere. No one can owe to himself.
- Nemo praesens nisi intelligat. One is not present unless he understands.

Nemo praesumitur alienam posteritatem suae praetulisse. No one is presumed to have preferred another's posterity to his own.

Nemo praesumitur donare. No one is presumed to make a gift.

Nemo praesumitur esse immemor suae aeternae salutis, et maxime in articulo mortis. No one is presumed to be forgetful of his eternal welfare, and especially at the point of death.

Nemo praesumitur ludere in extremis. No one is presumed to trifle at the point of death.

Nemo praesumitur malus. No one is presumed to be bad.

Nemo prohibetur plures negotiationes sive artes exercere. No one is prohibited from exercising several kinds of business or arts.

Nemo prohibetur pluribus defensionibus uti. No one is forbidden to employ several defenses.

Nemo prudens punit ut praeterita revocentur, sed ut futura praeveniantur. No one who is wise gives punishment so that past deeds may be revoked, but so that future deeds may be prevented.

Nemo punitur pro alieno delicto. No one is punished for the crime or wrong of another.

Nemo punitur sine injuria, facto, seu defalta. No one is punished unless for some wrong, act, or default.

Nemo qui condemnare potest absolvere non potest. No one who can condemn is unable to acquit.

Nemo sibi esse iudex vel suis jus dicere debet. No one ought to be his own judge or to administer justice in cases where his relations are concerned.

Nemo sine actione experitur, et hoc non sine breve sive libello conventionali. No one goes to trial without an action, and no one can bring an action without a writ or bill.

Nemo tenetur ad impossibile. No one is bound to an impossibility.

Nemo tenetur armare adversarium contra se. No one is bound to arm his adversary against himself.

Nemo tenetur divinare. No one is bound to foretell the future.

Nemo tenetur edere instrumenta contra se. No one is bound to produce writings against himself.

Nemo tenetur informare qui nescit sed quisquis scire quod informat. No one who is ignorant of a thing is bound to give information of it, but everyone is bound to know what he gives information of.

Nemo tenetur jurare in suam turpitudinem. No one is bound to swear to his own criminality.

Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum. No one is bound to betray himself. • In other words, no one can be compelled to incriminate himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. No one is bound to accuse himself. • This is a formulation of the privilege against self-incrimination. In good Latin, se ipsum appears as two words; but in law the phrase is usually combined to one (seipsum).

Nemo tenetur seipsum infortuniis et periculis exponere. No one is bound to expose himself to misfortune and dangers.

Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere. No one is bound to betray himself.

Nemo unquam judicet in se. Let no one ever be a judge in his own cause.

Nemo unquam vir magnus fuit sine aliquo divino afflatu. No one was ever a great man without some divine inspiration.

Nemo videtur fraudare eos qui sciunt et consentiunt. No one is considered as deceiving those who know and consent.

Neque leges neque senatus consulta ita scribi possunt ut omnes casus qui quandoque inciderint comprehendantur; sed sufficit ea quae plerumque accidunt contineri. Neither laws nor acts of senate can be so written as to include all cases that have happened at any time; it is sufficient that those things that usually occur are encompassed. Dig. 1.3.10. pr.

Ne quid in loco publico vel itinere fiat. Let nothing be done (put or erected) in a public place or way. • The title of an interdict in the Roman law.

Nigrum nunquam excedere debet rubrum. The black should never go beyond the red. • That is, the text of a statute should never be read in a sense more comprehensive than the rubric, or title.

Nihil aliud potest rex quam quod de jure potest. The king can do nothing but what he can do legally; the king can do nothing except by law.

Nihil consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus. Nothing is so opposite to consent as force and fear.

Nihil dat qui non habet. A person gives nothing who has nothing.

Nihil de re accrescit ei qui nihil in re quando jus accresceret habet. Nothing from a property accrues to a person who had no interest in the property when the right accrued. Co. Litt. 188.

Nihil dictum quod non dictum prius. Nothing is said that was not said before.

Nihil est enim liberale quod non idem justum. For there is nothing generous that is not at the same time just.

Nihil est magis rationi consentaneum quam eodem modo quodque dissolvere quo conflatum est. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that everything should be dissolved in the same way as it was made.

Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat. An error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the person.

Nihil habet forum ex scena. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

Nihil infra regnum subditos magis conservat in tranquillitate et concordia quam debita legum administratio. Nothing better preserves the subjects of the realm in tranquillity and concord than a due administration of the laws. 2 Co. Inst. 158.

Nihil iniquius quam aequitatem nimis intendere. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far.

Nihil in lege intolerabilius est (quam) eandem rem diverso jure censerī. Nothing in law is more intolerable than that the same case should be subject (in different courts) to different views of the law.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est. Nothing is more just than what is necessary.

Nihil nequam est praesumendum. Nothing wicked is to be presumed.

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum. Nothing is perfect while something remains to be done.

Nihil peti potest ante id tempus quo per rerum naturam persolvi possit. Nothing can be demanded before the time when, in the nature of things, it can be paid.

Nihil possumus contra veritatem. We have no power against truth.

Nihil praescribitur nisi quod possidetur. There is no prescription for what is not possessed.

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum. Nothing that is against reason is lawful.

Nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. Nothing that is improper is lawful. Co. Litt. 66a.

Nihil quod est licitum est inconveniens. Nothing that is lawful is improper.

Nihil simul inventum est et perfectum. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali aequitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Nothing is so consonant with natural equity as that each thing should be dissolved by the same means as it was bound.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali aequitati quam voluntatem domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre ratam haberi. Nothing is more consistent with natural equity than to confirm the will of an owner who desires to transfer his property to another.

Nihil tam naturale est quam eo genere quidque dissolvere quo colligatum est. Nothing is so natural as that an obligation should be dissolved by the same principle by which it was contracted.

Nihil tam naturale est quam eo genere quidque dissolvere quo colligatum est; ideo verborum obligatio verbis tollitur; nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur. Nothing is so natural as to dissolve anything in the way in which it was bound together; therefore the obligation of words is taken away by words; the obligation of mere consent is dissolved by the contrary consent.

Nihil tam proprium imperio quam legibus vivere. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live according to the law.

Nil agit exemplum litem quod lite resolvit. A precedent accomplishes nothing if it settles one dispute by raising another.

Nil facit error nominis cum de corpore vel persona constat. An error in the name is immaterial when the body or person is certain.

Nil sine prudenti fecit ratione vetustas. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason.

Nil temere novandum. Nothing should be rashly changed.

Nimia certitudo certitudinem ipsam destruit. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Too much subtlety in law is condemned.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur, et talis certitudo certitudinem confundit. Too great subtlety is disapproved of in law, and such certainty confounds certainty.

Nimum altercando veritas amittitur. By too much quarreling truth is lost.

Nobiles magis plectuntur pecunia, plebes vero in corpore. The higher classes are more punished in money, but the lower in person.

Nobiles sunt qui arma gentilitia antecessorum suorum proferre possunt. The gentry are those who are able to produce the heraldic arms of their own ancestors.

Nobiliores et benigniores praesumptiones in dubiis sunt praeferendae. When in doubt, the more generous and kind presumptions are to be preferred.

Nobilitas est duplex, superior et inferior. There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.

Nomen est quasi rei notamen. A name is, as it were, the distinctive sign (or signifier) of a thing.

Nomen non sufficit si res non sit de jure aut de facto. A name does not suffice if the thing does not exist by law or by fact.

Nomina si nescis, perit cognitio rerum. If you do not know the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes.

Nomina si nescis, perit cognitio rerum; et nomina si perdas, certe distinctio rerum perditur. If you do not know the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes; and, if you lose the names, the distinction of the things is certainly lost.

Nomina sunt mutabilia, res autem immobiles. Names are mutable, but things immutable.

Nomina sunt notae rerum. Names are the marks of things.

Nomina sunt symbola rerum. Names are the symbols of things.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, quae competunt in limitationem veram. Words ought not to be accepted to import a false description when they are consistent with a true definition.

Non alio modo puniatur aliquis, quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio. A person may not be punished otherwise than according to what the sentence enjoins.

Non aliter a significatione verborum recedi oportet quam cum manifestum est aliud sensisse testatorem. We must depart from the (ordinary) significance of words only when it is evident that the testator had a different understanding. Dig. 32.69. pr.

Non auditur perire volens. One who wishes to perish is not heard.

Non bis in idem (or imperative, ne bis in idem). Not twice for the same thing. • That is, a person shall not be twice tried for the same crime. This maxim of the civil law expresses the same principle as the familiar rule against “double jeopardy. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ⇨ 183.1.]

Non concedantur citationes priusquam exprimatursuper qua re fieri decet citatio. Summonses should not be granted before it is expressed on what ground a summons should be issued.

Non consentit qui errat. A person who errs does not consent.

Non dat qui non habet. A person who does not have does not give.

Non debeo melioris conditionis esse quam auctor meus a quo jus in me transit. I ought not to be in better condition than the person to whose rights I succeed.

Non deberet alii nocere quod inter alios actum esset. A person ought not to be injured by what has taken place between other parties.

Non debet actori licere quod reo non permittitur. What is not permitted to the defendant ought not to be allowed to the plaintiff.

Non debet adduci exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio. An exception (or plea) should not be made on the very matter of which a determination is sought (in the case at hand).

Non debet alii nocere quod inter alios actum est. A person ought not to be prejudiced by what has been done between others.

Non debet alteri per alterum iniqua conditio inferri. An unfair condition ought not to be brought on one person by the act of another.

Non debet cui plus licet quod minus est non licere. A person who is permitted to do the greater thing ought not to be forbidden to do the lesser.

Non debet dici tendere in praejudicium ecclesiasticae libertatis quod pro rege et republica necessarium videtur. What seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to tend to the prejudice of spiritual liberty.

Non decet homines dedere causa non cognita. It is unbecoming to surrender people when no cause has been shown.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi. A person is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived.

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

Non differunt quae concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things that agree in substance, even if not in the same words, do not differ.

Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that even if the vendor has not given a special guarantee, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows.

Non erit alia lex Romae, alia Athaenis; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et sempiterna, et immortalis continebit. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. There is no closer (or firmer) link among men than an oath.

Non est certandum de regulis juris. There is no disputing rules of law.

Non est consonum rationi quod cognitio accessorii in curia christianitatis impediatur, ubi cognitio causae principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. There is no disputing against a person who denies first principles.

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum qui toto tempore vitae suae pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elderborn a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahantur. It is not an innovation to adapt earlier laws to later ones. Dig. 1.3.26.

Non est recedendum a communi observantia. There should be no departure from a common observance.

Non est regula quin fallat. There is no rule that may not deceive (or disappoint).

Non est reus nisi mens sit rea. A person is not guilty unless his mind is guilty. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 20.]

Non est singulis concedendum quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus

- faciendi. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumult.
- Non exemplis sed legibus judicandum est. Not by examples but by the laws must judgment be made.
- Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals.
- Non facias malum ut inde veniat bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it.
- Non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made.
- Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. The laws consist not in reading but in understanding.
- Non in tabulis est jus. It is not in books that the law is to be found.
- Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law.
- Non jus, sed seisinam facit stipitem. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock (from which the inheritance must descend).
- Non licet quod dispendio licet. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted.
- Non nasci et natum mori paria sunt. Not to be born and to be born dead are equivalent.
- Non obligat lex nisi promulgata. A law is not binding unless it has been promulgated.
- Non observata forma, infertur annullatio actus. When the form has not been observed, an annulment of the act is inferred.
- Non officit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. Sed in atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus, licet non sequatur effectus. The intention is not an offense unless an effect follow. But in the most atrocious crimes the intention is punished, although no effect follow.
- Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follows.
- Non omne damnum inducit injuriam. Not every loss produces an injury (i.e., gives a right to action).
- Non omne quod licet honestum est. Not everything that is lawful is honorable; not everything that is allowable is morally right.
- Non omnium quae a majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. Reason cannot always be given for the institutions of our ancestors.
- Non pertinet ad iudicem secularem cognoscere de iis quae sunt mere spiritualia annexa. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things that are merely spiritual.
- Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere. It is not incumbent on the possessor of property to prove that his possessions belong to him.
- Non potest adduci exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio. An exception cannot be brought on the same matter whose determination is at issue (in the action at hand).
- Non potest probari quod probatum non relevat. That cannot be proved which, when proved, is irrelevant.
- Non potest quis sine brevi agere. No one can sue without a writ.
- Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuria et damno aliorum. The king cannot confer a favor that occasions injury and loss to others.
- Non potest rex subditum renitentem onerare impositionibus. The king cannot load a subject with impositions against his consent.
- Non potest videri desisse habere qui nunquam habuit. A person cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing who never had it.
- Non praestat impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. A thing that has no effect in law is not an impediment.
- Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, inspicitur. Not what has been said but what has been done is regarded. [Cases: Wills ☞ 108.]
- Non quod voluit testator, sed quod dixit in testamento inspicitur. Not what the testator wanted, but what he said in the will, is regarded.
- Non refert an quis assensum suum praefert verbis an rebus ipsis et factis. It is immaterial whether a person gives assent by words or by acts themselves and deeds.
- Non refert quid ex aequipollentibus fiat. It does not matter which of two equivalents happens.
- Non refert quid notum sit iudici, si notum non sit in forma iudicii. It matters not what is known to the judge if it is not known to him judicially.
- Non refert verbis an factis fit revocatio. It does not matter whether a revocation is made by words or by acts.
- Non respondebit minor, nisi in causa dotis, et hoc pro favore doti. A minor shall not answer except in a case of dower, and here in favor of dower.
- Non solent quae abundant vitiare scripturas. Superfluous expressions do not usually vitiate writings.
- Non solum quid licet sed quid est conveniens considerandum, quia nihil quod inconveniens est licitum. Not only what is permitted but what is proper is to be considered, because nothing improper is lawful.
- Non sunt longa ubi nihil est quod demere possis. There is no prolixity where there is nothing that you can omit.
- Non temere credere est nervus sapientiae. Not to believe rashly is the sinew of wisdom.

Non valebit felonis generatio nec ad haereditatem paternam vel maternam; si autem ante feloniam generationem fecerit, talis generatio succedit in haereditate patris vel matris a quo non fuerit felonia perpetrata. The offspring of a felon cannot succeed either to a maternal or paternal inheritance; but if the felon had offspring before the felony, the offspring may succeed to the inheritance of the father or mother by whom no felony was committed.

Non valet confirmatio, nisi ille, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit sit in possessione. Confirmation is not valid unless the person who confirms is in possession either of the thing or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless that person to whom confirmation is made is in possession.

Non valet donatio nisi subsequatur traditio. A gift is not valid unless delivery (or transference) follows.

Non valet exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio. An exception based on the very matter of which the determination is sought is not valid.

Non valet impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. An impediment that does not derive its effect from the law has no force.

Non verbis sed ipsis rebus leges imponimus. Not on words, but on affairs themselves do we impose laws.

Non videntur qui errant consentire. They who err are not considered as consenting. [Cases: Contracts ↷93.]

Non videntur rem amittere quibus propria non fuit. They are not considered as losing a thing if it was not their own.

Non videtur consensum retinuisse si quis ex praescripto minantis aliquid immutavit. If a person has changed anything at the demand of a party threatening, he is not considered to have maintained his consent.

Non videtur perfecte cujusque id esse quod ex casu auferri potest. A thing is not considered completely to belong to anyone if it can be taken from him by chance (or occasion).

Non videtur quisquam id capere quod ei necesse est alii restituere. A person is not considered to acquire property in a thing that he must restore to another. Dig. 50.17.51.

Non videtur vim facere qui jure suo utitur et ordinaria actione experitur. A person is not judged to use force who exercises his own right and proceeds by ordinary action.

Noscitur a sociis. It is known from its associates. [Cases: Contracts ↷152; Statutes ↷193.]

Noscitur ex socio qui non cognoscitur ex se. A person who is not known for himself is known from his associate.

Notitia dicitur a noscendo; et notitia non debet claudicare. Notice is named from knowledge; and notice ought not to limp (that is, be imperfect).

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non praeteritis. A new enactment ought to impose form on what is to come, not on what is past. • A new regulation should not apply retroactively but from its enactment. 2 Co. Inst. 292.

Novatio non praesumitur. A novation is not presumed.

Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat. Novelty does not as much benefit by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not make a new right, but declares the old.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum; quia judicium est juris dictum, et per judicium jus est noviter revelatum quod diu fuit velatum. A new judgment does not make a new right, but declares the old; because adjudication is the declaration of a right, and by adjudication the right is newly revealed which has long been hidden. 10 Coke 42.

Noxa caput sequitur. The liability follows the head or person. • Liability to make good an injury caused by a slave attaches to the master. Dig. 2.14.7.4.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. A naked agreement (i.e., without consideration) does not create an obligation. Dig. 2.14.7.4.

Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem. Bare reason and naked agreement do not bind any debtor.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa praeter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Naked agreement (nudum pactum) is where there is no consideration besides the agreement; but when there is a consideration, an obligation is created and it gives a right of action.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio. Naked agreement (nudum pactum) is that from which no action arises. [Cases: Contracts ↷75.]

Nul charter, nul vente, ne nul done vault perpetualment, si le donor n'est seise al temps de contracts de deux droits, sc. del droit de possession et del droit de propperite. No grant, no sale, no gift, is valid forever unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seised of two rights, namely, the right of possession and the right of property.

Nulla curia quae recordum non habet potest imponere finem neque aliquem mandare carceri; quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curias de recordo. No court that does not have a record can impose a fine or commit any person to prison; because those powers look only to courts of record.

Nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest. There can be no sale without a price.

Nulla impossibilia aut inhonesta sunt praesumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia. No impossible or dishonorable things are to be presumed; but things true, honorable, and possible.

Nulla pactione effici potest ne dolus praestetur. No agreement is sufficient to effect that there be no liability for fraud. Fig. 2.14.27.3.

Nulla virtus, nulla scientia locum suum et dignitatem conservare potest sine modestia. Without moderation, no virtue, no knowledge can preserve its place and dignity.

Nulle règle sans faute. There is no rule without fault.

Nulle terre sans seigneur. No land without a lord.

Nulli enim res sua servit jure servitutis. No one can have a servitude over his own property.

Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no person ought to have (such) power among us that we should not follow better (opinions) if anyone presents them.

Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum vel justitiam. We shall sell to no one, deny to no one, or delay to no one, equity or justice. • This language appeared in Magna Carta.

Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia. No crime is greater than disobedience.

Nullum exemplum est idem omnibus. No example is the same for all purposes.

Nullum iniquum est praesumendum in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law.

Nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. No marriage, there no dowry.

Nullum simile est idem. Nothing that is like another is the same. • That is, no likeness is exactly identical.

Nullum simile est idem nisi quatuor pedibus currit. Nothing similar is identical, unless it run on all fours.

Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit. No simile runs on four feet (on all fours). • No simile holds in every respect.

Nullum tempus aut locus occurrit regi. No time or place bars the king.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi. No period of time bars the Crown; no length of time runs against the king. • This maxim expresses the idea that the king is not bound by any statute of limitations. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↪ 11.]

Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicae. No time runs against the commonwealth (or state). [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↪ 11.]

Nullus alius quam rex possit episcopo demandare inquisitionem faciendam. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria. No one can gain advantage by his own wrong.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alia actio subest. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo.

Nullus dicitur accessorius post feloniam sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et confortavit. No one is called an accessory after the fact but that person who knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him.

Nullus dicitur felo principalis nisi actor aut qui praesens est, abettans aut auxilians actorem ad feloniam faciendam. No one is called a principal felon except the party actually committing the felony, or the party who was present aiding and abetting the perpetrator in its commission.

Nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur. No one is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause.

Nullus jus alienum forisfacere potest. No one can forfeit another's right.

Nullus liber homo capiatur, aut imprisonetur. Let no free man be taken or imprisoned. • This expression derives from Magna Carta, ch. 39

Nullus recedat e curia cancellaria sine remedio. Let no one depart from the court of chancery without a remedy.

Nullus videtur dolo facere qui suo jure utitur. No one is to be regarded as acting by fraud who exercises his legal right.

Nul ne doit s'enrichir aux dépens des autres. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

Nul prendra avantage de son tort demesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong.

Nul sans damage avera error ou attainit. No one shall have error or attainit unless there has been damage.

Nunquam crescit ex post facto praeteriti delicti aestimatio. The valuation (or assessment of damage) for a past offense is never increased by what happens subsequently. Fig. 50.17.138.1.

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. One never resorts to the extraordinary but when the ordinary fails.

Nunquam fictio sine lege. There is no fiction without law.

Nunquam nimis dicitur quod nunquam satis dicitur. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much.

Nunquam praescribitur in falso. There is never prescription in case of falsehood (or forgery).

Nunquam res humanae prospere succedunt ubi negliguntur divinae. Human affairs never prosper when divine ones are neglected.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit. Not sharing a bed but consent makes the marriage.

Obedientia est legis essentia. Obedience is the essence of the law.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed like law.

Occultatio thesauri inventi fraudulosa. The concealment of discovered treasure is fraudulent.

Occupantis fiunt derelicta. Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant.

Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege praesumenda. Odious and dishonest acts are not to be presumed in law.

Odiosa non praesumuntur. Odious things are not presumed.

Officia judicialia non concedantur antequam vacent. Judicial offices ought not to be granted before they are vacant.

Officia magistratus non debent esse venalia. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold.

Officit conatus si effectus sequatur. The attempt becomes of consequence if the effect follows.

Officium nemini debet esse damnosum. An office ought to be injurious to no one.

Omissio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur. The omission of those things that are silently implied is of no consequence.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est iudicandum. Every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer.

Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit. Drunkenness both inflames and reveals every crime.

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. Every right has been derived from consent, established by necessity, or confirmed by custom.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, even if the less worthy is more ancient.

Omne magnum exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitate compensatur. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by its public utility.

Omne majus continet in se minus. Every greater thing contains in itself the less. [Cases: Indictment and Information ↷189.]

Omne majus dignum continet in se minus dignum. Every more worthy thing contains in itself the less worthy.

Omne majus minus in se complectitur. Every greater thing embraces in itself the lesser.

Omne principale trahit ad se accessorium. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory.

Omne quod solo inaedificatur solo cedit. Everything that is built on the soil belongs to the soil.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora habent limitationem. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods.

Omnes licentiam habere his quae pro se indulta sunt renunciare. All have liberty to renounce these things that have been granted in their favor.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solent quae probantur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent people are accustomed to admit those things that are approved by those who are skilled in their profession.

Omnes sorores sunt quasi unus haeres de una haereditate. All sisters are as it were one heir to one inheritance.

Omnes subditi sunt regis servi. All subjects are the king's servants.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est. Every will is consummated by death.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter.

Omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem. All presumptions are against one who wrongfully dispossesses another (a despoiler). [Cases: Evidence ↷8.]

Omnia praesumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved.

Omnia praesumuntur rite ac sollemniter esse acta. All things are presumed to be done in proper and regular form; all things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done. • Sollemniter is sometimes written sollemniter. — Also written Omnia praesumuntur rite et sollemniter acta.

Omnia praesumuntur rite et sollemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regularly and with due formality until the contrary is proved.

Omnia quae jure contrahuntur contrario jure pereunt. All obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary.

Omnia quae sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri. All things that are the wife's belong to her husband.

Omnia rite esse acta praesumuntur. All things are presumed to have been done in due form. [Cases: Evidence ↷82, 83.]

Omnis actio est loquela. Every action is a complaint.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri iudicii sequitur ex bonis et veris praemissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment follows from good and true premises and the verdicts of jurors.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. Every consent removes an error. 2 Co. Inst. 123. [Cases: New Trial ↷10.]

Omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown.

Omnis exceptio est ipsa quoque regula. Every exception is itself also a rule.

- Omnis indemnatus pro innoxio legibus habetur. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent.
- Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs by its novelty more than it benefits by its usefulness.
- Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. Every interpretation of instruments is to be made, if it can be, so that all contradictions may be removed.
- Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation explains, or extends, or restricts.
- Omnis nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, et non praeteritis. Every new enactment should regulate future, not past transactions; every new law must impose its form on future cases and not past ones. • This maxim states the presumption against retroactivity. The phrase is sometimes written Omnis nova constitutio futuris (temporibus) formam imponere debet, non praeteritis.
- Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim. Every person is a human being, but not every human being a person.
- Omnis privatio praesupponit habitum. Every privation presupposes possession. • “Every discontinuance is a privation . . . and he cannot discontinue that estate which he never had.” Co. Litt. 339a.
- Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within fixed times.
- Omnis rati habitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori aequiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect and is equivalent to a prior command. [Cases: Principal and Agent ↪ 175(3); Torts ↪ 130.]
- Omnis regula suas patitur exceptiones. Every rule of law allows its own exceptions.
- Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est. What has been given for all should be compensated by the contribution of all.
- Omnium rerum quarum usus est, potest esse abusus, virtute solo excepta. Of everything of which there is a use, there can be abuse, virtue alone excepted.
- Opinio quae favet testamento est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.
- Oportet quod certa res deducatur in iudicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be definite.
- Oportet quod certa sit res quae venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be definite.
- Optima enim est legum interpretatio consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. Dig. 1.3.37.
- Optima est lex quae minimum relinquit arbitrio iudicis; optimus iudex qui minimum sibi. It is the best law that leaves the least to the discretion of the judge; the best judge is he who leaves least to himself.
- Optima legum interpretatio est consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of law.
- Optimam esse legem quae minimum relinquit arbitrio iudicis; id quod certitudo ejus praestat. The law is the best that leaves the least discretion to the judge; this advantage results from its certainty.
- Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpreter of a statute is (when all the separate parts of it have been considered) the statute itself.
- Optimus interpretatio rerum usus. Usage is the best interpreter of things.
- Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretare ut leges legibus accordant. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make laws agree with laws.
- Optimus iudex qui minimum sibi. He is the best judge who (leaves) the least to his own discretion.
- Optimus legum interpretatio consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws.
- Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. When order of pleading has been preserved, the law is also preserved.
- Origine propria neminem posse voluntate sua eximi manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can be stripped of his origin (or be banished from his place of origin).
- Origo rei inspicere debet. The origin of a thing ought to be regarded.
- Pacta conventa quae neque contra leges neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts that have been entered neither illegally nor with fraud must in all respects be observed.
- Pacta dant legem contractui. Agreements give law to the contract.
- Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. Private contracts cannot restrict (or take away from) public law.
- Pacta quae contra leges constitutionesque vel contra bonos mores fiunt nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. It is a matter of unquestionable law that contracts against the laws and statutes, or against moral standards, have no force.
- Pacta quae turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Contracts founded on an immoral consideration are not to be observed.
- Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. There is no derogation from public law by private contracts.
- Pactum aliquid licitum est quod sine pacto non admittitur. By agreement (or contract) something is permitted that, without agreement, is not allowed. • Coke continues, “but not in violation of public law.” Co. Litt. 166.
- Parent est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis. “Parent” is a general name for every kind of relationship.

Parentum est liberos alere etiam nothos. It is the role of parents to support their children even when illegitimate.

Paria copulantur paribus. Similar things unite with similar.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. When opinions are evenly divided, the defendant is acquitted. 4 Co. Inst. 64.

Par in parem imperium non habet. An equal has no power over an equal.

Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit. No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again.

Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum. When any essential part has been removed, the whole is removed (or destroyed).

Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suum. The offspring of a legitimate bed does not know his mother more certainly than his father.

Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follows the condition of the mother (literally, the womb).

Parum est latam esse sententiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that judgment has been given if it is not committed to execution.

Parum proficit scire quid fieri debet si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It does little good to know what ought to happen, if you do not know how it will take effect.

Pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant. The father is the man whom the marriage indicates. • This expresses the idea that a child born to a married woman is presumed begotten by her husband. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ↻3.]

Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant. The father is he whom the marriage indicates.

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be wearied with labors and expenses.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate consistere. Parental authority should consist in devotion, not dread.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima. Offenses against nature are the most serious.

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpa quam facit patrocium defensionis adjungit. A person adds one offense to another, who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defense.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur. During litigation, let nothing be changed.

Per alluvionem id videtur adici, quod ita paulatim adicitur ut intelligere non possimus quantum quoque momento temporis adiciatur. That is considered "added by alluvion" which accumulates so gradually that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41.1.7.1.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suae perfectionis vel naturae modum. That is perfect which lacks nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature.

Periculosum est res novas et inusitatas inducere. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things.

Periculum rei venditae, nondum traditae, est emptoris. The purchaser assumes the risk for a thing sold, but not yet delivered.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. Those who preserve the words of an oath but deceive the ears of those who accept it are perjurers. • Coke adds, "By ancient law of England, in all oaths equivocation is utterly condemned." 3 Co. Inst. 166.

Perpetua lex est nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quae abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law that precludes abrogation is void from the outset.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. By reasoning we come to legal reason.

Per rerum naturam factum negantis nulla probatio est. By the nature of things, a person who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Persona conjuncta aequiparatur interesse proprio. A personal connection is equivalent to one's own interest.

Persona est homo cum statu quodam consideratus. A person is a human being considered with reference to a certain status.

Personae vice fungitur municipium et decuria. Towns and boroughs act in the role of persons.

Personalia personam sequuntur. Personal things follow the person.

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Plain truths are not to be proved.

Per varios actus legem experientia facit. In the course of various acts, experience frames the law.

Pirata est hostis humani generis. A pirate is an enemy of the human race.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt. Two negative pleas do not form an issue.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus. Let the parties have full and speedy justice.

Pluralis numerus est duobus contentus. The plural number is satisfied with two.

Plures cohaeredes sunt quasi unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several coheirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right that they possess.

Plures participes sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent. Several coheirs (or parceners) are as one body in that they have one right. Co. Litt. 164.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. Examples hurt more than offenses.

Plus peccat auctor quam actor. The instigator of a crime is a worse offender than the perpetrator.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis quam auriti decem. One eyewitness is better than ten earwitnesses.

Plus valet vulgaris consuetudo quam regalis concessio. Common custom is better than royal grant.

Plus vident oculi quam oculus. Several eyes see more than one.

Poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. Let punishment be inflicted on a few, dread on all.

Poenae potius molliendae quam exasperandae sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated.

Poenae sunt restringendae. Punishments should be restrained.

Poena ex delicto defuncti haeres teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be penalized for the wrong (or crime) of the decedent.

Poena non potest, culpa perennis erit. Punishment cannot be, guilt will be, perpetual.

Poena suos tenere debet actores et non alios. Punishment should take hold of the guilty (who commit the wrong), and not others. Bracton 380b.

Poena tolli potest, culpa perennis erit. The punishment can be removed, but the guilt will be perpetual.

Politiae legibus, non leges politiis, adaptandae. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, not the laws to politics.

Polygamia est plurium simul virorum uxorumve conubium. Polygamy is being married to more than one husband or wife at one time.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

Posito uno oppositorum negatur alterum. One of two opposite positions having been affirmed, the other is denied.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse haeredem. Possession by the brother in fee simple makes the sister an heir.

Possessio pacifica per annos 60 facit jus. Peaceable possession for 60 years gives a right.

Posteriora derogant prioribus. Later things restrict (or detract from) earlier ones.

Posthumus pro nato habetur. A posthumous child is considered as though born (before the father's death).

Postliminium fingit eum qui captus est semper in civitate fuisse. Postliminy (restoration of rights) imagines that a person who has been captured has never left the state.

- A person captured by the enemy, who later returns, is restored to all his former rights. Just. Inst. 1.12.5.

Potentia debet sequi justitiam, non antecedere. Power ought to follow, not to precede, justice.

Potentia inutilis frustra est. Useless power is in vain.

Potentia non est nisi ad bonum. Power is not conferred but for the (public) good.

Potestas stricte interpretatur. A power should be strictly interpreted.

Potestas suprema seipsum dissolvere potest, ligare non potest. Supreme power can dissolve (or release), but cannot bind, itself.

Potest quis renunciare, pro se et suis, jus quod pro se introductum est. A person may relinquish, for himself and his heirs, a right that was introduced for his own benefit.

Potior est conditio defendentis. Stronger is the condition of the defendant (than that of the plaintiff).

Potior est conditio possidentis. Stronger is the condition of the possessor.

Praedium servit praedio. Land is under servitude to land.

- A servitude is not a personal right, but attaches to the dominant tenement.

Praepropera consilia raro sunt prospera. Hasty counsel are seldom prosperous.

Praescriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Prescription is a title derived from usage and time, given substance by the authority of law. Co. Litt. 113.

Praescriptio et executio non pertinent ad valorem contractus, sed ad tempus et modum actionis instituendae. Prescription and execution do not affect the validity of the contract, but affect the time and manner of bringing an action.

Praesentare nihil aliud est quam praesto dare seu offerre. To present is nothing other than to give or offer on the spot.

Praesentia corporis tollit errorem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The presence of the body cancels an error in the name; the truth of the name cancels an error in the description.

Praestat cautela quam medela. Prevention is better than cure.

Praesumatur pro justitia sententiae. Let there be a presumption of sentence's justice.

Praesumitur pro legitimatione. There is a presumption in favor of legitimacy.

Praesumptio cedit veritati. A presumption yields to the truth.

Praesumptio ex eo quod plerumque fit. A presumption arises from what generally happens.

Praesumptiones sunt conjecturae ex signo verisimili ad probandum assumptae. Presumptions are conjectures

- based on indications of probable truth, assumed for the purpose of establishing proof.
- Praesumptio opponitur probationi. A presumption is distinguished from proof.
- Praesumptio violenta plena probatio. Forceful presumption is full proof.
- Praesumptio violenta valet in lege. Forceful presumption is effective in law.
- Praetextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. What is illegal ought not to be admitted under pretext of legality.
- Praxis judicum est interpret legum. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws.
- Pretium succedit in locum rei. The price takes the place of the thing sold.
- Prima pars aequitatis aequalitas. The first part of equity is equality.
- Primo executiunda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstruatur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis. The force of a word is to be first examined, lest by the fault of diction the sentence be destroyed or the law be without arguments.
- Princeps et respublica ex justa causa possunt rem meam auferre. The king and the commonwealth can take away my property for just cause.
- Princeps legibus solutus est. The emperor is not bound by statutes. Dig. 1.3.31.
- Principalis debet semper excuti antequam perveniat ad fideijussores. The principal should always be exhausted before resorting to the sureties.
- Principia probant, non probantur. Principles prove; they are not proved.
- Principiis obsta. Oppose beginnings. • Oppose a thing in its inception in order to have any success against it.
- Principiorum non est ratio. There is no reasoning of principles.
- Principium est potissima pars cujusque rei. The beginning is the most powerful part of each thing.
- Prior tempore, potior jure. Earlier in time, stronger in right.
- Privatio praesupponit habitum. Deprivation presupposes possession.
- Privatis pactionibus non dubium est non laedi jus caeterorum. There is no doubt that the rights of others (not party to the agreement) cannot be prejudiced by private agreements.
- Privatorum conventio juri publico non derogat. An agreement of private persons does not derogate from public law.
- Privatum commodum publico cedit. Private yields to public advantage.
- Privatum incommodum publico bono pensatur. Private disadvantage is made up for by public good.
- Privilegium est beneficium personale et extinguitur cum persona. A privilege is a benefit belonging to a person, and it dies with the person.
- Privilegium est quasi privata lex. A privilege is, as it were, a private law.
- Privilegium non valet contra rempublicam. A privilege has no force against the commonwealth.
- Probandi necessitas incumbit illi qui agit. The necessity of proving rests on the one who sues (or claims some right). Just. Inst. 2.20.5.
- Probationes debent esse evidentes, (id est) perspicuae et faciles intelligi. Proofs ought to be evident, (that is) clear and easily understood.
- Probatis extremis, praesumitur media. When the extremes have been proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed.
- Processus legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus. The process of the law is heavy hardship; the execution of the law crowns (or rewards) the work.

- Proprietates verborum observandae sunt. The proprieties (i.e., proper meanings) of words are to be observed.
- Prosecutio legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus. Litigation is a heavy hardship, but execution of the law crowns (or rewards) the work.
- Protectio trahit subjectionem, subjectio protectionem. Protection brings submission; submission (brings) protection.
- Proviso est providere praesentia et futura, non praeterita. A proviso is to provide for things present and future, not past.
- Prudenter agit qui praecepto legis obtemperat. A person acts prudently who obeys the precept of law.
- Pueri sunt de sanguine parentum, sed pater et mater non sunt de sanguine puerorum. Children are of the blood of their parents, but the father and mother are not of the blood of their children.

Pupillus pati posse non intelligitur. A pupil is not considered able to suffer. • That is, a pupil is not competent to permit or do what would be prejudicial to him. Dig. 50.17.110.2.

Quae ab hostibus capiuntur, statim capientium fiunt. Things taken from public enemies immediately become the property of the captors.

Quae ab initio inutilis fuit institutio, ex post facto convalescere non potest. An institution void in the beginning cannot acquire validity by a subsequent act.

Quae ab initio non valent, ex post facto convalescere non possunt. Things invalid from the beginning cannot be made valid by a subsequent act.

Quae accessionum locum obtinent, extinguuntur cum principales res peremptae fuerint. When the principal is extinguished, those things that are accessory to it are also extinguished. Dig. 33.8.2.

Quae ad unum finem locuta sunt, non debent ad alium detorqueri. What speaks to one purpose ought not to be twisted to another.

Quae cohaerent personae a persona separari nequeunt. Things that belong to the person cannot be separated from the person.

Quae communi legi derogant stricte interpretantur. (Statutes) that derogate from the common law should be strictly construed.

Quae contra rationem juris introducta sunt, non debent trahi in consequentiam. Things introduced contrary to the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents. • “We do find divers precedents . . . which are utterly against law and reason and for that void.” 12 Coke 75.

Quaecunque intra rationem legis inveniuntur, intra legem ipsam esse judicantur. Whatever appears within the reason of the law is considered within the law itself.

Quae dubitationis causa tollendae inseruntur communem legem non laedunt. Whatever is inserted for the purpose of removing doubt does not hurt the common law.

Quae dubitationis tollendae causa contractibus inseruntur jus commune non laedunt. Clauses inserted in agreements to remove ambiguity do not prejudice the general law. Dig. 50.17.81.

Quae incontinenti (vel certo) fiunt inesse videntur. Things that are done immediately (or with certainty) are considered part of the same transaction. Co. Litt. 236b.

Quae in curia acta sunt rite agi praesumuntur. What is done in court is presumed to be rightly done.

Quae in curia regis acta sunt rite agi praesumuntur. Things that are done in the king's court are presumed to be rightly done.

Quae in partes dividi nequeunt solida a singulis praestantur. Things (such as services) that cannot be divided into parts are rendered entire by each severally.

Quae inter alios acta sunt nemini nocere debent, sed prodesse possunt. Transactions between others can benefit, but should not injure, anyone who is not party to them.

Quae in testamento ita sunt scripta ut intelligi non possint, perinde sunt ac si scripta non essent. Things that are so written in a will that they cannot be understood are as if they had not been written.

Quae legi communi derogant non sunt trahenda in exemplum. Things that derogate (or detract) from the common law are not to be drawn into precedent.

Quae legi communi derogant stricte interpretantur. Things that derogate (or detract) from the common law are construed strictly.

Quaelibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Every grant is to be construed most strongly against the grantor.

Quaelibet jurisdictio cancellos suos habet. Every jurisdiction has its boundaries.

Quaelibet poena corporalis, quamvis minima, major est qualibet poena pecuniaria. Every corporal punishment, although the very least, is greater than any pecuniary punishment.

Quae mala sunt inchoata in principio vix bono peraguntur exitu. Things bad in the commencement seldom end well.

Quae non fieri debent, facta valent. Things that ought not to be done are held valid when they have been done.

Quae non valeant singula, juncta juvant. Things that may not avail individually have effect when united.

Quae praeter consuetudinem et morem majorum fiunt, neque placent neque recta videntur. What is done contrary to the custom and usage of our ancestors neither pleases nor is considered right.

Quae propter necessitatem recepta sunt, non debent in argumentum trahi. Things that are accepted as a matter of necessity ought not to be brought into the argument. Dig. 50.17.162.

Quaeras de dubiis, legem bene discere si vis. Inquire into doubtful points if you wish to understand the law well.

Quaere de dubiis, quia per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. Inquire into doubtful points, because through reasoning we arrive at legal reason.

Quaerere dat sapere quae sunt legitima vere. To investigate is the way to know what things are truly lawful.

Quae rerum natura prohibentur nulla lege confirmata sunt. What is prohibited by the nature of things can be confirmed by no law.

Quae singula non prosunt, juncta juvant. Things that are of no advantage individually are helpful when taken together.

Quae sunt minoris culpa sunt majoris infamiae. Offenses that are of lesser guilt are of greater infamy.

Qualitas quae inesse debet, facile praesumitur. A quality that ought to be inherent is easily presumed.

Quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus, non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione iusticiariorum. How long a time should be "reasonable" the law does not define; it depends on the discretion of the judges.

Quam rationabilis debet esse finis, non definitur, sed omnibus circumstantiis inspectis pendet ex iusticiariorum discretione. How reasonable a fine should be is not defined, but depends on the discretion of the judges, after all the circumstances have been considered.

Quamvis aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Although in itself a thing may not be bad, yet if it serves as a bad example, it is not to be done.

Quamvis lex generaliter loquitur, restringenda tamen est, ut cessante ratione et ipsa cessat. Although a law speaks generally, it must bear some restriction, since the law ceases (or loses effect) when the reason ceases.

Quando aliquid conceditur, conceditur id sine quo illud fieri non possit. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which it cannot take effect.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When anything is commanded, everything by which it can be accomplished is also commanded.

Quando aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. When anything by itself is not evil, and yet if it is an example for evil, it is not to be done.

Quando aliquid prohibetur ex directo, prohibetur et per obliquum. When anything is prohibited directly, it is also prohibited indirectly.

Quando aliquid prohibetur, prohibetur omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When anything is prohibited, everything by which it is arrived at is prohibited.

Quando aliquis aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res uti non potest. When a person grants a thing, he is supposed to grant that also without which the thing cannot be used.

Quando charta continet generalem clausulam, posteaque descendit ad verba specialia quae clausulae generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. When a deed contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words that are consistent with the general clause, the deed is to be construed according to the special words.

Quando de una et eadem re, duo onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientia alterius, de integro onerabitur. When two persons are liable concerning one and the same thing, if one makes default, the other must bear the whole liability.

Quando dispositio referri potest ad duas res, ita quod secundum relationem unam vitiatur et secundum alteram utilis sit, tum facienda est relatio ad illam ut valeat dispositio. When a disposition can refer to two matters, so that according to one reference it would be void and by another it would be effective, reference must be made to the latter, so that the disposition may take effect.

Quando diversi desiderantur actus ad aliquem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. When different acts are required to the formation of any estate, the law chiefly regards the original act.

Quando duo jura concurrunt in una persona, aequum est ac si essent in diversis. When two rights run together in one person, it is the same as if they were in separate persons.

Quando jus domini regis et subditi concurrunt, jus regis praeferri debet. When the right of the sovereign king and of the subject run together (or clash), the right of the king ought to be preferred.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, concedere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When the law grants anything to anyone, it is considered to grant that without which the thing itself cannot be (the sine qua non). 5 Coke 47.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, omnia incidentia tacite conceduntur. When the law gives anything to anyone, it gives tacitly all that is incident to it.

Quando lex est specialis, ratio autem generalis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. When the law is special, but its reason is general, the law is to be understood generally.

Quando licit id quod majus, videtur licere id quod minus. When the greater is allowed, the lesser is considered to be allowed also.

Quando mulier nobilis nupserit ignobili desinit esse nobilis nisi nobilitas nata fuit. When a noble woman marries a man not noble, she ceases to be noble, unless she was born noble.

Quando plus fit quam fieri debet, videtur etiam illud fieri quod faciendum est. When more is done than ought to be done, that at least is considered as performed that should have been performed.

Quando quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When what I do does not have effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can.

Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When the thing is of no force as I do it, let it have as much as it can have.

Quando verba et mens congruunt, non est interpretationi locus. When the words and the mind agree, there is no room for interpretation.

Quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason for it general, the statute is to be construed generally.

- Quemadmodum ad quaestionem facti non respondent iudices, ita ad quaestionem juris non respondent iuratores. In the same manner that judges do not answer questions of fact, so jurors do not answer questions of law.

Quod est inconueniens aut contra rationem non permissum est in lege. What is unsuitable or contrary to reason is not allowed in law.

Quod est necessarium est licitum. What is necessary is lawful.

Quod fieri debet facile praesumitur. That which ought to be done is easily presumed.

Quod fieri non debet, factum valet. What ought not to be done, when done, is valid.

Quod inconsulto fecimus, consultius revocemus. What we have done without due consideration we should, revoke with better consideration.

Quod initio non valet, tractu temporis non valet. What is void in the beginning does not become valid by passage of time.

Quod initio vitiosum est non potest tractu temporis convalescere. What is defective in origin cannot be mended by passage of time.

Quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. What in the civil law (literally, written law) is called jus, in the law of England is said to be rectum (right).

Quod in minori valet, valebit in majori; et quod in majori non valet, nec valebit in minori. What avails in the less will avail in the greater; and what does not avail in the greater will not avail in the less.

Quod in uno similibus valet, valebit in altero. What avails in one of two similar things will avail in the other.

- Quod ipsis, qui contraxerunt, obstat, et successoribus eorum obstat. That which bars those who have contracted will bar their successors also.
- Quod jussu alterius solvitur pro eo est quasi ipsi solutum esset. That which is paid at the bidding of another has the same effect as if it had been paid to that person himself. • The party who has a debt paid for him is in the same position as though the money were paid to him directly. Dig. 17.180.
- Quod meum est sine facto meo vel defectu meo amitti vel in alium transferri non potest. What is mine cannot be lost or transferred to another without my act or through my forfeiture.
- Quod meum est, sine facto sive defectu meo amitti seu in alium transferri non potest. What is mine cannot be lost or transferred to another without my own act or default.
- Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest. What is mine cannot be taken away without me (i.e., my consent).
- Quod minus est in obligationem videtur deductum. That which is the lesser is held to be imported into the contract.
- Quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium. What natural reason has established among all men is called the law of nations.
- Quod necessarie intelligitur id non deest. What is necessarily understood is not lacking.
- Quod necessitas cogit, defendit. What necessity compels, it justifies.
- Quod non apparet non est, et non apparet judicialiter ante judicium. What appears not does not exist, and nothing appears judicially before judgment.
- Quod non capit Christus, capit fiscus. What Christ (or the church) does not take, the treasury takes.
- Quod non habet principium non habet finem. What has no beginning has no end.
- Quod non legitur non creditur. What is not read is not believed.
- Quod non valet in principali, in accessorio seu consequenti non valebit; et quod non valet in magis propinquo, non valebit in magis remoto. What is not valid in the principal will not be valid in the accessory or consequence; and what has no effect in the nearer instance will be of no effect in the more remote.
- Quod nostrum est, sine facto sive defectu nostro, amitti seu in alium transferri non potest. That which is ours cannot be lost or transferred to another without our own act, our own default.
- Quod nullius esse potest, id ut alicujus fieret nulla obligatio valet efficere. What can belong to no one no agreement (or obligation) can make property of anyone. Dig. 50.17.182.
- Quod nullius est, est domini regis. That which belongs to nobody belongs to our lord the king.
- Quod nullius est id ratione naturali occupanti conceditur. What belongs to no one, by natural reason becomes property of the first occupant. Dig. 41.1.3.
- Quod nullum est, nullum producit effectum. That which is null produces no effect.
- Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet supportari. What touches (or concerns) all ought to be supported by all.
- Quod per me non possum, nec per alium. What I cannot do in person, I also cannot do through the agency of another.
- Quod per recordum probatum non debet esse negatum. What is proved by the record ought not to be denied.
- Quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto. What the people have last enacted, let that be the established law.
- Quod principi placuit legis habet vigorem; utpote cum lege regia, quae de imperio ejus lata est, populus ei et in eum omne suum imperium et potestatem conferat. A decision of the emperor has the force of law; for, by the royal law that has been made concerning his authority, the people have conferred on him all their sovereignty and power. Dig. 1.4.1.
- Quod prius est verius est; et quod prius est tempore potius est jure. What is prior is truer; and what comes earlier in time is stronger in right.
- Quod privilegia quae re vera sunt in praejudicium rei publicae, magis tamen speciosa habent frontispicia, et boni publici praetextum, quam bonae et legales concessionis, sed praetextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. There are privileges that are really detrimental to the state, but that have a more colorful appearance and show of public good than good and lawful concessions. But the unlawful should not be accepted as valid on the ground of a showing of legality.
- Quod pro minore licitum est et pro majore licitum est. What is lawful in the lesser is also lawful in the greater.
- Quod pure debetur praesenti die debetur. That which is due unconditionally is due the same day.
- Quodque dissolvitur eodem modo quo ligatur. In the same manner that anything is bound, it is unbound.
- Quod quis ex culpa sua damnum sentit, non intelligitur damnum sentire. The damage that any person suffers by his own fault he is not considered to suffer as damage. Dig. 50.17.203.
- Quod quisque norit, in hoc se exerceat. Let every one employ himself in what he knows.
- Quod quis sciens indebitum dedit hac mente, ut postea repeteret, repetere non potest. What one has paid knowing that it is not owed, with the intention of reclaiming it afterwards, he cannot recover. Dig. 12.6.50.
- Quod remedio destituitur ipsa re valet si culpa absit. What is without a remedy is by that very fact valid if there is no fault.

- Quod semel aut bis existit praetereunt leges. Legislators pass over what happens (only) once or twice.
- Quod semel meum est amplius meum esse non potest. What is once mine cannot be any more completely mine.
- Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest. That which in making his election a man has once decided, he cannot afterwards disavow.
- Quod solo inaedificatur solo cedit. Whatever is built on the soil goes with the soil.
- Quod sub certa forma concessum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem. That which has been granted or reserved under a certain form is not to be drawn into valuation or compensation.
- Quod subintelligitur non deest. What is understood is not lacking.
- Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. What is tacitly understood does not appear to be lacking.
- Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit. The law does not require what is vain and useless.
- Quod vero contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. But what has been admitted contrary to the reason of law ought not to be drawn into precedents.
- Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur. As a thing is bound, so it is unbound.
- Quo modo quid constituitur eodem modo dissolvitur. In whatever mode a thing is constituted, in the same manner it is dissolved.
- Quorum praetextu nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat praemissa. “Quorum praetextu” neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms what went before.
- Quotiens dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum libertatem respondendum erit. Whenever there is an interpretation doubtful as to liberty (or slavery), the decision must be in favor of liberty.
- Quotiens idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum accipiatur quae rei gerendae aptior est. Whenever the same words express two meanings, that is to be taken most strongly which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end.
- Quoties in stipulationibus ambigua oratio est, commodissimum est id accipi quod res de quo agitur in tuto sit. Whenever in stipulations the expression is ambiguous, it is most proper to give it that interpretation by which the subject matter may be in safety.
- Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba expressa fienda est. Whenever there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made.
- Quum de lucro duorum quaeratur, melior est conditio possidentis. When there is a question of gain (to one) of two parties, the condition of the possessor is the better.
- Quum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpretari et secundum id quod credible est cogitatum, credendum est. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning (of the testator).
- Quum principalis causa non consistit, ne ea quidem quae sequuntur locum habent. When the principal cause does not stand, neither do the accessories (or consequences) obtain.
- Ratihabiliti mandato aequiparatur. Ratification is equal to a command. • This maxim is sometimes written Ratihabitio mandato comparatur (meaning “ratification is equivalent to a command”).
- Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis. Reason is the source and formal cause of custom.
- Ratio est legis anima, mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; when the reason of the law has been changed, the law is also changed. [Cases: Common Law ↷9.]
- Ratio et auctoritas duo clarissima mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world.
- Ratio in jure aequitas integra. Reason in law is perfect equity.
- Ratio legis est anima legis. The reason of the law is the soul of the law. [Cases: Statutes ↷184.]
- Ratio non clauditur loco. Reason is not confined to any place.
- Ratio potest allegari deficiente lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. A reason can be adduced when the law is defective, but it must be a true and legal reason, and not specious (or apparent).
- Receditur a placitis juris potius quam injuriae et delicta maneant impunita. One departs from settled rules of law, rather than let crimes and wrongs remain unpunished.
- Recipitur in modum recipientis. A thing is received in the way the recipient intends.
- Recorda sunt vestigia vetustatis et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth.
- Recurrendum est ad extraordinarium quando non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.
- Reddenda singula singulis. Each must be put in each separate place. • That is, the several terms or items apply distributively, or each to its proper object.
- Regnum non est divisibile. The kingdom is not divisible.
- Regula est, juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. The rule is that ignorance of the law is harmful (or prejudicial) to anyone, but ignorance of a fact is not. • Ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct, but not ignorance of law.

Regula pro lege, si deficit lex. If the law is inadequate, the maxim serves in its place.

Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda. As a rule, a contract not to alienate my property is not binding.

Reipublicae interest voluntates defunctorum effectum sortiri. It is in the interest of the state that the wills of the dead should have their (intended) effect.

Rei turpis nullum mandatum est. There is no mandate for a thing immoral (or illegal). • Hence, there is no action for failing to act on such a mandate. Dig. 17.1.6.3.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. • Coke explains, "Relatio is a fiction of law to make a nullity of a thing ab initio"; obstacles are removed for the one purpose, ut res magis valeat, that the matter have effect. 3 Coke 28.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio. Reference should always be made in such a manner that a disposition (in a will) may have effect.

Relativorum cognito uno, cognoscitur et alterum. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is also known.

Religio sequitur patrem. Religion follows the father. • The father's religion is prima facie the infant's religion.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur. A person commanding not too strictly is better obeyed.

Remoto impedimento, emergit actio. When the impediment has been removed, the action arises.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is prevented from taking an oath.

Repellitur exceptione cedendarum actionum. (The litigant) is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem. Money refused releases the person paying (or offering payment).

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge.

Rerum ordo confunditur, si unicuique jurisdictio non servetur. The order of things is confounded if the proper jurisdiction of each is not maintained.

Rerum progressus ostendunt multa, quae in initio praecaveri seu praevideri non possunt. The course of events reveals many things that in the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the manager and disposer of his own matters.

Res accendent lumina rebus. Matters will throw light on (other) matters.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory follows its principal.

Rescriptum principis contra jus non valet. The prince's rescript, if contrary to law, is of no avail.

Res denominatur a principaliori parte. A thing is named from its more essential (or primary) part.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficuis ipsis quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain.

Res generalem habet significationem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis naturae sive speciei, comprehendit. The word "things" has a general signification, because it comprehends corporeal as well as incorporeal objects, of whatever sort, nature, or species.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous rejection of one's own right.

Res inter alios acta aliis non nocet. A thing done between two parties does not damage other parties; a matter transacted between parties (e.g., to a contract) does not prejudice nonparties.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Things done between others ought not to injure an outsider (not party to them). [Cases: Evidence ↷130; Judgment ↷665.]

Res inter alios judicatae nullum alii praejudicium faciunt. Matters adjudged in the lawsuits of others do not prejudice those who were not parties to them.

Res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A matter adjudged makes white black; black white; the crooked straight; the straight crooked.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A matter adjudged is taken for truth.

Res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis. A thing that has no owner naturally belongs to the first taker.

Resoluto jure concedentis, resolvitur jus concessum. When the right of the grantor has been extinguished, the right granted is extinguished.

Res perit domino suo. The destruction of the thing is a loss to its owner.

Res per pecuniam aestimatur, et non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to things.

Respicendum est judicanti nequid aut durius aut remissius constituatur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiae gloria affectanda est. The person judging must see to it that nothing should be either more severely or more leniently construed than the cause itself demands; neither for severity nor clemency is glory to be sought after.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward.

Respondeat superior. Let the principal answer. [Cases: Principal and Agent ↷159(1).]

Responsio unius non omnino audiatur. The answer of one witness should not be heard at all.

Res propria est quae communis non est. A thing is private that is not common.

Res quae intra praesidia perductae nondum sunt quanquam ab hostibus occupatae, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things that have not yet been brought within the enemy's camp, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed.

Ressacra non recipit aestimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation.

Res sua nemini servit. No one can have a servitude over his own property. [Cases: Easements ↷27.]

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden.

Reus excipiendo fit actor. The defendant by a plea (or exception) becomes plaintiff.

Reus laesae majestatis punitur, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish.

Re, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, junctura vestes sumere pacta solent. Compacts usually take their clothing from the thing itself, from words, from writings, from consent, from delivery, from the joining together.

Reversio terrae est tanquam terra revertens in possessione donatori sive haeredibus suis post donum finitum. A reversion of land is as it were the return of the land to the possession of the donor or his heirs after the termination of the gift.

Rex est caput et salus reipublicae. The king is the head and safety of the commonwealth.

Rex est legalis et politicus. The king is (the fount of) both law and policy.

Rex est major singulis, minor universis. The king is greater than any single person: less than all.

Rex non debet esse sub homine sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law.

Rex non debet judicare sed secundum legem. The king ought to judge only according to law.

Rex non potest fallere nec falli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived.

Rex non potest gratiam facere cum injuria et damno aliorum. The king cannot confer a favor on anyone to the injury and damage of others.

Rex non potest peccare. The king can do no wrong. [Cases: United States ↷125(1).]

Rex nunquam moritur. The king never dies.

Rex quod injustum est facere non potest. The king cannot do what is unjust.

Rex semper praesumitur attendere ardua regni pro bono publico omnium. The king is always presumed to attend to the business of the realm, for the public good of all.

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of riverbanks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself.

Roy n'est lie per ascun statute, si il ne soit expressement nosme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem justitiam et judicium: veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et judicium in judice. An oath has in it three components — truth, justice, and judgment: truth in the party swearing, justice and judgment in the judge (administering the oath).

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, does not make perjury.

Sacrilegus omnium praedonum cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person surpasses the greed and wickedness of all other robbers.

Saepe constitutum est res inter alios judicatas aliis non praejudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties.

Saepe numero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently where propriety of words is given attention, the meaning of truth is lost.

Saepe viatorem nova, non vetus, orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, that deceives the traveler.

Salus populi (est) suprema lex. The safety of the people is the supreme law. • The phrase is sometimes put in the imperative: Salus populi suprema lex esto (let the safety of the people be the supreme law). [Cases: Common Law ↷9.]

Salus reipublicae suprema lex. The safety of the state is the supreme law.

Salus ubi multi consiliiarii. Where there are many counselors, there is safety.

Sanguinis conjunctio benevolentia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes human beings through benevolence and family affection.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise person begins from

- the end, and what is first in intention is last in execution.
- Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio. A wise man does everything advisedly.
- Sapientia legis nummario pretio non est aestimanda. No price in money is to be put on the wisdom of the law.
- Sapientis iudicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the mark of a wise judge to suppose that he is permitted only so much as has been committed and entrusted to him.
- Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the sources than to follow tributaries.
- Scientia sciorum est mixta ignorantia. The knowledge of smatterers is ignorance diluted.
- Scientia utrimque par pares contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal.
- Scienti et volenti non fit injuria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and assents to it.
- Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you make an agreement.
- Scire et scire debere aequiparantur in jure. To know a thing and to be bound to know it are regarded in law as equivalent.
- Scire leges non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws is to observe not their (mere) words, but their force and power.
- Scire proprie est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing in its reason and by its cause.
- Scribere est agere. To write is to act.
- Scriptae obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are undone by writing, and the obligation of mere consent (or naked agreement) is dissolved by a bare consent to the contrary.
- Scripta litera manet. The written word endures.
- Secta est pugna civilis, sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle; just as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and, as it were, girded with swords, so (against them) the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended as though by shields.
- Secta quae scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet. A suit that relies on a writing ought not to vary from the writing.
- Secundum naturam est commoda cujusque rei eum sequi quem sequentur incommoda. It is according to nature that the advantages in any matter should come to the person to whom the disadvantages will attend.
- Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business entrusted to several people is done more reliably, and (several) eyes see more than (one) eye does.
- Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↪11.]
- Semel civis semper civis. Once a citizen, always a citizen.
- Semel malus semper praesumitur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same kind of affair.
- Semper in dubiis benigniora praeferenda sunt. In dubious cases, the more favorable constructions are always to be preferred.
- Semper in dubiis id agendum est, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quum aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always in doubtful cases that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the safest condition, except when it has been drawn up clearly contrary to law.
- Semper in obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases we always follow what is least obscure.
- Semper in stipulationibus et in caeteris contractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts, we always follow what was done (or agreed to). Dig. 50.17.34.
- Semper ita fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail.
- Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit. The necessity of proving always rests on the claimant.
- Semper praesumitur pro legitimatione puerorum, et filiatio non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy of children, and filiation cannot be proved.
- Semper praesumitur pro negante. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies.
- Semper praesumitur pro sententia. The presumption is always in favor of a judgment (or sentence).
- Semper pro matrimonio praesumitur. There is always a presumption in favor of marriage.
- Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire mandare creditur. A person who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is always believed to authorize it. [Cases: Principal and Agent ↪119(2).]
- Semper sexus masculinus etiam faemininum continet. The masculine gender always includes the feminine as well. Dig. 32.63.
- Semper specialia generalibus insunt. Special clauses are always included in general ones.
- Senatores sunt partes corporis regis. Senators are part of the body of the king.
- Sensus verborum est anima legis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law.
- Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. The meaning - of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are always to be received in their milder sense.

- Sensus verborum ex causa dicendi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject matter.
- Sententia a non iudice lata nemini debet nocere. A judgment pronounced by one who is not a judge should harm no one.
- Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem iudicatam. A sentence against marriage never becomes a final judgment (i.e., res iudicata).
- Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The judgment creates the right, and the interpretation of the law obtains the force of law.
- Sententia facit jus, et res iudicata pro veritate accipitur. The judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth.
- Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest. An interlocutory judgment may be revoked, but not a final one.
- Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis. Judgment is not given on matters that are not clear.
- Sequi debet potentia iustitiam, non praecedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it.
- Sermo index animi. Speech is an index of the mind.
- Servanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur. The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed.
- Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. Personal services follow the person (of the lord). • Such “personal services” were those “annexed to the person of the Mesne, as homage, fealty, etc.” 2 Co. Inst. 374.
- Si aes pro auro veneat non valet. If bronze is sold for gold (the contract) is invalid.
- Si a jure discedas, vagus eris et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander (without a guide), and everything will be in a state of uncertainty to everyone.
- Si alicujus rei societas sit et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases.
- Si aliquid ex solemnibus deficiat, cum aequitas poscit subveniendum est. If anything is lacking from formal requirements, when equity requires, it will be supplied.
- Si assuetis mederi possis, nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried.
- Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Everyone ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor’s.
- Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectū. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may be taken with effect.
- Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. Use your property so as not to damage another’s; so use your own as not to injure another’s property. [Cases: Negligence ↪ 1010; Nuisance ↪ 3.]
- Sicut natura nil facit persaltum, ita nec lex. Just as nature does nothing with a leap, so neither does the law.
- Si duo in testamento pugnante reperientur, ultimum est ratum. If two conflicting provisions are found in a will, the latter is decisive.
- Sigillum est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal.
- Si iudicas, cognosce. If you judge, understand.
- Silentium in senatu est vitium. Silence in the senate is a fault.
- Silent leges inter arma. Laws are silent amid arms.
- Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If the better are those whom love leads, the greater number are those whom fear corrects.
- Similitudo legalis est casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Legal similarity is a similar reason that governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other.
- Simonia est voluntas sive desiderium emendi vel vendendi spiritualia vel spiritualibus adhaerentia. Contractus ex turpi causa est et contra bonos mores. Simony is the will or desire of buying or selling spiritualities, or things pertaining to them. It is a contract founded on a bad cause, and against morality.
- Simplex commendatio non obligat. A simple recommendation does not bind. [Cases: Sales ↪ 261(5).]
- Simplex et pura donatio dici poterit ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification has been annexed.
- Simplicitas est legibus amica, et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is a friend to the laws, and too much subtlety in law is condemned.
- Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest. Without possession, prescription (Roman usucapio) cannot proceed.
- Singuli in solidum tenentur. Each individual is bound for the whole.
- Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequentatur. If it is not clear what was done (or agreed on), the consequence will be that we follow what is commonly done in the place where the agreement was made. ■ig. 50.17.34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quae ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there is no inference that leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical but in a popular and ordinary sense.

Si plures condiciones ascriptae fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulative requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera, si divisim, quilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If several conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or the other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, however many they will be in number, they are individually liable for the whole.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, praenomine, agnomine legatarii testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, praenomen, or title of the legatee, when there is certainty about the person, the legacy is nonetheless valid.

Si quid universitati debetur, singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. If anything is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes.

Si quis cum totum petiisset partem petat, exceptio rei judicatae vocet. If anyone sues for a part when he should have sued for the whole, the judgment should constitute res judicata (against another suit). [Cases: Judgment ↻ 592.]

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian commits fraud against his ward, he is to be removed from the guardianship.

Si quis praegnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If anyone dies leaving his wife pregnant, he is not considered as having died childless.

Si quis unum percusserit cum alium percutere vellet, in feloniam tenetur. If a person kills one when he meant to kill another, he is held guilty of felony.

Si suggestio non sit vera, literae patentes vacuae sunt. If the suggestion is not true, the letters patent are void.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum emptor in venditorem. If the property is taken from the purchaser by eviction, whether whole or in part, he has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21.2.1.

Socii mei socius meus socius non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner.

Socii plures sunt quasi unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum et quod in nulla parte sit defectus. Several partners are as one body, since they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be defect in no part.

Sola ac per se senectus donationem, testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate gift, will or transaction.

Solemnitates juris sunt observandae. The solemnities of law must be observed.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. • This maxim is sometimes written Solo cedit, quicquid solo plantatur (translatable as “what is affixed to the soil belongs to the soil”).

Solo cedit quod solo inaedificatur. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil.

Solus Deus haeredem facit. God alone makes the heir.

Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solidum potest solvere. No one is understood to be in a state of solvency except the one who can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50.16.114.

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii. A partnership is also dissolved by the death of a partner.

Solvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur. It is released by the bond with which it is bound.

Solvitur in modo solventis. A payment is made for the purpose the payer intends.

Sommonitiones aut citationes nullae liceant fieri infra palatium regis. No summonses or citations should be permitted to be served within the king’s palace.

Specilia generalibus derogant. Special words derogate from general ones.

Spes impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity supplies a constant inclination to wrongdoing.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restitui. A party forcibly deprived of possession ought first of all to have restitution.

Spoliatus episcopus ante omnia debet restitui. A bishop despoiled of his see ought, above all, to be restored.

Spondet peritiam artis. He promises (to use) the skill of his art. • That is, he engages to do the work in a skillful manner.

Sponsalia dicuntur futurarum nuptiarum conventio et repromissio. A betrothal is the agreement and promise of a future marriage.

Sponte virum fugiens mulier et adultera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponsi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord and committing adultery should lose her dower, unless she is taken back by her husband of his own accord.

- Stabit praesumptio donec probetur in contrarium. A presumption will stand until proof is given to the contrary.
- Stare decisis et non quietamovere. Literally, to stand by previous decisions and not to disturb settled matters. - To adhere to precedents, and not to depart from established principles. [Cases: Courts ↷89, 90.]
- Stat pro ratione voluntas. The will stands in place of a reason. [Cases: Wills ↷82.]
- Stat pro ratione voluntas populi. The will of the people stands in place of a reason.
- Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur. Statutes made for the public advantage ought to be broadly construed.
- Statuta suo clauduntur territorio, nec ultra territorium disponunt. Statutes are confined to their own territory and have no extraterritorial effect.
- Statutum affirmativum non derogat communi legi. An affirmative statute does not take away from the common law.
- Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. A statute is to be understood generally when the words of the statute are special but its reason is general.
- Statutum speciale statuto speciali non derogat. ● One special statute does not take away from another special statute.
- Sublata causa tollitur effectus. Remove the cause and the effect ceases.
- Sublata veneratione magistratum, respublica ruit. When respect for magistrates has been destroyed, the commonwealth perishes.
- Sublato fundamento, cadit opus. When the foundation has been removed (or demolished), the structure collapses. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷112.]
- Sublato principali, tollitur adjunctum. When the principal has been taken away, the adjunct is also taken away.
- Subsequens matrimonium tollit peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage removes the previous sin.
- Succurritur minori; facilis est lapsus juventutis. Aid is given to a minor; easy is the slip-up of youth (i.e., youth is liable to err).
- Summa caritas est facere justitiam singulis et omni tempore quando necesse fuerit. The greatest charity is to do justice to each individual and at every time when it is necessary.
- Summa est lex quae pro religione facit. The highest law is the one that acts on behalf of religion.
- Summa ratio est quae pro religione facit. The highest reason is that which acts in favor of religion. ● Also found in indirect form, Summam esse rationem quae pro religione facit.
- Summum jus, summa injuria. The highest right is the utmost injury. ● That is, law too rigidly interpreted produces the greatest injustice.
- Super falso et certo fingitur, super incerto et vero jure sumitur. A fiction assumes that the thing feigned is certainly untrue.
- Superficies solo cedit. The surface goes with the land. - That is, whatever is attached to the land forms part of it.
- Super fidem chartarum, mortuis testibus, erit ad patriam de necessitate recurrendum. The truth of charters is necessarily to be referred to a jury when the witnesses are dead.
- Superflua non nocent. Superfluities do no injury.
- Suppressio veri, expressio falsi. Suppression of the truth (is equivalent to) the expression of what is false. [Cases: Deeds ↷70(4); Fraud ↷16.]
- Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi. Suppression of the truth (is equivalent to) the suggestion of what is false.
- Surplusagium non nocet. Extraneous matter does no harm. ● Superfluous allegations, not proper to the case, should have no effect.
- Tacita quaedam habentur pro expressis. Certain things though unexpressed are considered as expressed.
- Talis interpretatio semper fienda est ut evitetur absurdum, et inconueniens, et ne iudicium sit illusorium. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and improper is avoided, and so that the judgment is not a mockery.
- Talis non est eadem, nam nullum simile est idem. “Such” is not “the same,” for nothing similar is the same thing.
- Tantum bona valent, quantum vendi possunt. Things are worth as much as they can be sold for.
- Tantum concessum quantum scriptum. So much is granted as is written.
- Tantum habent de lege, quantum habent de justitia. (Precedents) have value in the law to the extent that they represent justice.
- Tantum operatur fictio in casu ficto quantum veritas in casu vero. A legal fiction operates to the same extent and effect in the supposed case as the truth does in a real case.
- Tantum praescriptum quantum possessum. There is only prescription insofar as there has been possession.
- Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemp-tores. For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against those who are inactive and show little respect for their own rights.
- Tempus ex sua pte natura vim nullam effectricem habet. Time, of its own nature, has no effectual force.
- Tempus mortis inspiciendum. (One must) look to the time of death.

Tenor est pactio contra communem feudi naturam ac rationem in contractu interposita. The tenure (of an agreement) is a compact contrary to the common nature and reason of the fee, put into a contract.

Tenor est qui legem dat feudo. It is the tenor that gives law to the fee. • That is, the tenor of the feudal grant regulates its effect and extent.

Terminus annorum certus debet esse et determinatus. A term of years ought to be certain and definite (with a fixed end).

Terminus et (ac) feodum non possunt constare simul in una eademque persona. Term and fee cannot both be vested in one and the same person at the same time.

Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur. Land lying unoccupied is given to the occupant.

Terra transit cum onere. Land passes with the incumbrances.

Testamenta, cum duo inter se pugnancia reperiuntur, ultimum ratum est; sic est, cum duo inter se pugnancia reperiuntur in eodem testamento. When two conflicting wills are found, the last prevails; so it is when two conflicting clauses occur in the same will.

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent. Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation.

Testamentum est voluntatis nostrae justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which anyone wishes done after his death. • Or, as Blackstone renders it, a testament is “the legal declaration of a man’s intentions which he wills to be performed after his death.” 2 Bl. Com. 499.

Testamentum omne morte consummatum. Every will is completed by death.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero, dignioribus est credendum. When the number of witnesses giving testimony is equal on both sides, the more trustworthy are to be believed.

Testibus, non testimoniis, credendum est. The witnesses must be believed, not (simply) their testimony.

Testimonia ponderanda sunt, non numeranda. Testimonies are to be weighed, not counted.

Testis de visu praeponderat aliis. An eyewitness outweighs others.

Testis lupanaris sufficit ad factum in lupanari. Someone from a brothel is a sufficient witness to a happening in a brothel.

Testis nemo in sua causa esse potest. No one can be a witness in his own cause.

Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem. One eyewitness is worth more than ten earwitnesses.

Testmoignes ne poent testifier le negative, mes l’affirmative. Witnesses cannot testify to a negative; they must testify to an affirmative.

Thesaurus inventus est vetus dispositio pecuniae, &c., cujus non extat modo memoria, adeo ut jam dominum non habeat. Treasure trove is an ancient hiding of money, etc., of which no recollection exists, so that it now has no owner.

Thesaurus non competit regi, nisi quando nemo scit qui abscondit thesaurum. Treasure does not belong to the king, unless no one knows who hid it.

Timores vani sunt aestimandi qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Those fears must be considered vain (or frivolous) that do not affect a man of steady character.

Titius haeres esto. Let Titius be my heir. • Titius was the Roman counterpart of John Doe.

Titulus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est. Title is the just cause of possessing that which is ours.

Tolle voluntatem et erit omnis actus indifferens. Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent.

Totum praefertur unicuique parti. The whole is preferred to any single part.

Tout ce que la loi ne defend pas est permis. Everything that the law does not forbid is permitted.

Toute exception non surveillée tend à prendre la place du principe. Every exception not watched tends to assume the place of the principle.

Tractent fabrilia fabri. Let smiths perform the work of smiths.

Traditio loqui facit chartam. Delivery makes the deed (document) speak.

Traditionibus et usucapionibus, non nudis pactis, transferuntur rerum dominia. Rights of property are transferred by delivery and by prescription (founded on lengthy possession), not by naked agreements.

Traditio nihil amplius transferre debet vel potest ad eum qui accipit quam est apud eum qui tradit. Delivery neither can nor should transfer anything more to the recipient than is in possession of the one who delivers.

Trado tibi ecclesiam. I deliver this church (or living) to you.

Transgressione multiplicata, crescat poenae inflictio. When transgression is repeated, let the infliction of punishment be increased. 2 Co. Inst. 479.

Transit in rem judicatam. It passes into a judgment. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 582.]

Transit terra cum onere. The land passes with its burdens.

Tres faciunt collegium. Three form a corporation.

Triatio ibi semper debet fieri ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. Trial ought always to be held where the jurors can have the better information.

Triennalis pacificus possessor beneficii est inde securus.

The undisturbed possessor of a benefice for three years is thereafter secure (from challenge).

Turpis est pars quae non convenit cum suo toto. The part is bad that does not accord with its whole.

Tuta est custodia quae sibimet creditur. The guardianship is secure that is entrusted to itself alone.

Tutius erratur ex parte mitiori. It is safer to err on the gentler side (or on the side of leniency).

Tutius est rei incumbere quam personae. It is safer to rely on a thing than on a person. • Real security is safer than personal security.

Tutius semper est errare in acquietando quam in puniendo, ex parte misericordiae quam ex parte iustitiae. It is always safer to err in acquitting than in punishing, (and) on the side of mercy than of justice.

Tutor incertus dari non potest. An uncertain person cannot be given or appointed as tutor.

Tutor in rem suam auctor fieri non potest. A tutor cannot act for his own interest.

Tutor praesumitur intus habere, ante redditas rationes. A tutor is presumed to have funds in his own hands until his accounts have been rendered.

Tutor rem pupilli emere non potest. A tutor cannot purchase the property of his ward.

Ubi aliquid conceditur, conceditur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing itself cannot exist.

Ubi aliquid impeditur propter unum, eo remoto, tollitur impedimentum. When anything is impeded by reason of one thing, when that is removed, the impediment is removed.

Ubi cessat remedium ordinarium, ibi decurritur ad extraordinarium. When a common remedy ceases to be of service, recourse is had to an extraordinary one.

Ubi culpa est, ibi poena subesse debet. Where the fault is, there the punishment should be imposed.

Ubi quae est injuria, ibi damnum sequitur. Wherever there is a legal wrong, there damage follows.

Ubi damna dantur victus victori in expensis condemnari debet. Where damages are awarded, the party that did not succeed ought to be adjudged to pay expenses for the party that prevailed.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus. Where there is the same reason, there is the same law. — Also rendered Ubi eadem est ratio, ibi idem est jus.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus; et de similibus idem est iudicium. Where there is the same reason, there is the same law; and the same judgment should be rendered on comparable facts.

Ubi est forum, ibi ergo est jus. Where the forum (or place of jurisdiction) is, there accordingly is the law.

Ubi et dantis et accipientis turpitudine versatur, non posse repeti dicimus; quotiens autem accipientis turpitudine versatur, repeti posse. Where there is misconduct on the part of both giver and receiver, we say the thing cannot be recovered; but as often as the misconduct is on the side of the receiver (alone), it can be recovered.

Ubi factum nullum, ibi fortia nulla. Where there is no fact, there are no strong points.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium. Where there is a right, there is a remedy. [Cases: Equity ↷ 55.]

Ubi jus incertum, ibi jus nullum. Where the right is uncertain, there is no right.

Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima. Where the law compels someone to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and legal.

Ubi lex deest, praetor supplet. Where the law is deficient, the praetor supplies the deficiency.

Ubi lex est specialis et ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda est. Where the law is special and the reason of it is general, it ought to be taken as general.

Ubi lex non distinguit, nec nos distinguere debemus. Where the law does not distinguish, we ought not to distinguish.

Ubi major pars est, ibi totum. Where the greater part is, there is the whole.

Ubi matrimonium, ibi dos. Where there is marriage there is dower.

Ubi non adest norma legis, omnia quasi pro suspectis habenda sunt. Where there is no rule of law, everything must be held, as it were, suspect.

Ubi non est condendi auctoritas, ibi non est parendi necessitas. Where there is no authority to establish (a rule), there is no necessity to obey.

Ubi non est directa lex, standum est arbitrio iudicis, vel procedendum ad similia. Where there is not direct law, one must rely on the judgment of the judge or refer to similar cases.

Ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio quoad mundum. Where there is not law, there is not transgression, as far as this world is concerned.

Ubi non est manifesta injustitia, iudices habentur pro bonis viris, et iudicatum pro veritate. Where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth.

Ubi non est principalis, non potest esse accessorius. Where there is no principal, there can be no accessory.

Ubi nulla est conjectura quae ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate non grammatica sed populari ex usu. Where there is no inference that would lead in another direction, the words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not strictly according to grammar but according to popular usage.

Ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. Where there is no marriage, there is no dower.

Ubi onus ibi emolumentum. Where the burden is, there is the profit or advantage.

Ubi periculum, ibi et lucrum collocatur. Where the risk is, there also the profit accrues.

Ubi pugnantia inter se in testamento juberentur, neutrum ratum est. When two directions conflicting with each other were given in a will, neither is held valid.

Ubi quid generaliter conceditur, inest haec exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque. Where a thing is granted in general terms, this exception is implied: if there is not anything contrary to law and right.

Ubi quis delinquit ibi punietur. Where anyone commits an offense, there will he be punished.

Ubi remedium, ibi ius. Where there is a remedy, there is a right.

Ubi verba conjuncta non sunt, sufficit alterutrum esse factum. Where words are not conjoined, it is enough that one or another (of the things enumerated) has been done.

Ultima voluntas testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Ultimum supplicium esse mortem solam interpretamur. We consider death alone to be the extreme punishment.

Ultra posse non potest esse et vice versa. What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse (what cannot exist is not possible).

Una persona vix potest supplere vices duarum. One person can scarcely supply the place of two.

Unaquaeque gleba servit. Every lump of earth (on the land) is subject to the servitude.

Uniuscujusque contractus initium spectandum est et causa. The beginning and cause of each and every contract must be considered.

Unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur. Let the evidence of one witness not be heard at all.

Universalia sunt notiora singularibus. Things universal are better known than things particular.

Universitas vel corporatio non dicitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi major pars id faciat. A university or corporation is not said to take any action unless the action was resolved by it as a body, even if a greater part of the body should act.

Un ne doit prise avantage de son tort demesne. One should not take advantage from his own wrong.

Uno absurdo dato, infinita sequuntur. When one absurdity has been allowed, an infinity follows.

Unumquodque dissolvitur eodem ligamine quo ligatur. Everything is dissolved by the same binding by which it is bound together.

Unumquodque eodem modo dissolvitur quo colligatur. Any obligation is discharged in the same manner as it is constituted.

Unumquodque eodem modo quo colligatum est dissolvitur. In the same manner in which anything was bound, it is loosened.

Unumquodque est id quod est principalius in ipso. That which is the principal part of a thing is the thing itself.

Unumquodque ligamen dissolvitur eodem ligamine qui et ligatur. Every obligation is dissolved in the same manner in which it is contracted.

Unumquodque principiorum est sibimet ipsi fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Each and every one of the general principles is its own pledge of trust, and plain truths need not be proved.

Unusquisque debet esse gnarus conditionis ejus cum quo contrahit. Everyone ought to be cognizant of the condition of the person with whom he makes contract.

Usucapio constituta est ut aliquis litium finis esset. Prescription (Roman usucapio) was instituted that there might be some end to lawsuits. Dig. 41.10.5.

Usus est dominium fiduciarium. Use is a fiduciary ownership.

Usus fit ex iteratis actibus. Usage arises from repeated acts.

Utile per inutile non vitiatur. What is useful is not vitiated by the useless. [Cases: Trial ↻336.]

Utlagatus est quasi extra legem positus: caput gerit lupinum. An outlaw is, as it were, put out of the protection of the law: he carries the head of a wolf.

Ut poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. So that punishment afflict few, (and) fear affect all. • Blackstone cites Cicero (pro Cluentio 46) emphasizing deterrence. 4 Bl. Com. 11.

Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. (Interpret the law, contract, etc.) so that the transaction is upheld rather than lost (or so that a matter may avail rather than perish). • The phrase can be literally translated as “that the matter may have effect rather than fail.” [Cases: Contracts ↻153; Patents ↻157(2); Wills ◆449.]

Uxor et filius sunt nomina naturae. Wife and son are names of nature.

Uxor non est sui juris sed sub potestate viri. A wife is not in her own right (i.e., she cannot act independently), but under the power of her husband.

Uxor sequitur domicilium viri. A wife follows the domicile of her husband.

Vagabundum nuncupamus eum qui nullibi domicilium contraxit habitationis. We call the person a vagabond who has acquired nowhere a domicile of residence.

Valeat quantum valere potest. Let it have effect as far as it can have effect.

Vana est illa potentia quae nunquam venit in actum. Vain is that power that never comes into action.

Vani timores sunt aestimandi, qui non cadunt in constantem virem. Those fears are to be considered groundless that do not affect a man of steady character.

Vani timoris justa excusatio non est. There is no legal excuse based on a groundless fear.

Velle non creditur qui obsequitur imperio patris vel domini. A person is not presumed to act of his own will who obeys the orders of his father or his master.

Vendens eandem rem duobus falsarius est. A vendor is fraudulent if he sells the same thing to two (separate) buyers.

Veniae facilitas incentivum est delinquendi. Ease of winning pardon is an incentive to committing crime.

Verba accipienda sunt secundum subjectam materiam. Words are to be interpreted according to the subject matter.

Verba accipienda ut sortiantur effectum. Words are to be taken so that they may have some effect.

Verba aequivoca ac in dubio sensu posita intelliguntur digniori et potentiori sensu. Equivocal words and those in a doubtful sense are understood in the more suitable and more effective sense.

Verba aliquid operari debent — debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to have some effect — words ought to be understood so as to have some effect.

Verba aliquid operari debent; verba cum effectu sunt accipienda. Words ought to have some effect; words must be taken so as to have effect.

Verba artis ex arte. Terms of art (should be explained) from the art.

Verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. The words of deeds are taken most strongly against the person offering them.

Verba cum effectu accipienda sunt. Words must be taken so as to have effect.

Verba currentis monetae tempus solutionis designant. The words “current money” refer to the time of payment.

Verba debent intelligi cum effectu. Words ought to be understood with effect.

Verba debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to be so understood that they may have some effect.

Verba dicta de persona intelligi debent de conditione personae. Words spoken of the person are to be understood of the condition of the person.

Verba fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. Words are interpreted more strongly against the party who puts them forward; words are most readily accepted against the one putting them forward.

Verba generalia generaliter sunt intelligenda. General words are to be understood generally.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel aptitudinem personae. General words are limited to the capability of the subject matter or the aptitude of the person.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel personae. General words are limited to the capability of the subject matter or of the person. [Cases: Release ↩31.]

Verba illata (relata) inesse videntur. Words referred to are considered as if incorporated.

Verba in differenti materia per prius, non per posterius, intelligenda sunt. Words referring to a different subject are to be understood by what goes before, not by what follows.

Verba intelligenda sunt in casu possibili. Words are to be understood in reference to a possible case.

Verba intentioni, et non e contra, debent inservire. Words should be subject to the intention, not the reverse.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Words are to be so understood that the matter may have effect rather than fail.

Verba mere aequivoca, si per communem usum loquenti in intellectu certo sumuntur, talis intellectus praefereendus est. When words are purely equivocal, if by common usage of speech they are taken in a certain meaning, such meaning is to be preferred.

Verba nihil operari melius est quam absurde. It is better that words should have no effect than an absurd effect.

Verba non tam intuenda quam causa et natura rei, ut mens contrahentium ex eis potius quam ex verbis, appareat. The words (of a contract) are not to be looked to so much as the cause and nature of the matter, so that the intention of the contracting parties may appear from these rather than from the (mere) words.

Verba offendi possunt, immo ab eis recedere licet, ut verba ad sanum intellectum reducantur. The words can be faulted — indeed, it is permitted to depart from them, in order that the words may be restored to a sensible meaning.

Verba ordinationis, quando verificari possunt in sua vera significatione, trahi ad extraneum intellectum non debent. When the words of an ordinance can be made true in their true signification, they ought not to be warped to a foreign meaning.

Verba posteriora propter certitudinem addita, ad priora quae certitudine indigent, sunt referenda. Later words added for the purpose of certainty are to be referred to preceding words in which certainty is wanting.

Verba pro re et subjecta materia accipi debent. Words should be taken most in favor of the thing and the subject matter.

- Verba quae aliquid operari possunt non debent esse superflua. Words that can have some effect ought not to be (treated as) superfluous.
- Verba quantumvis generalia ad aptitudinem restringuntur, etiamsi nullam aliam paterentur restrictionem. Words, howsoever general, are confined to fitness (i.e., to harmonize with the subject matter), even if they would bear no other restriction.
- Verba relata hoc maxime operantur per referentiam ut in eis inesse videntur. Words to which reference is made have, by the reference, this particular effect, that they are considered to be incorporated in those (clauses). ● Words to which reference is made in an instrument have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clause referring to them.
- Verba relata inesse videntur. Words to which reference is made are considered incorporated.
- Verba secundum materiam subjectam intelligi nemo est qui nescit. There is no one who does not know that words should be understood according to the subject matter.
- Verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiori sensu. Words are always to be taken in their milder sense.
- Verba strictae significationis ad latam extendi possunt, si subsit ratio. Words of a strict signification can be given a wide signification if there is reason for it.
- Verba sunt indices animi. Words are indications of the intention.
- Verbis standum ubi nulla ambiguitas. One must abide by the words where there is no ambiguity. [Cases: Statutes ↻190.]
- Verborum obligatio verbis tollitur. An obligation verbally incurred is verbally extinguished.
- Verbum imperfecti temporis rem adhuc imperfectam significat. The verb in the imperfect tense indicates a matter as yet incomplete.
- Veredictum quasi dictum veritatis; ut iudicium quasi juris dictum. A verdict is, as it were, the saying of the truth, in the same manner that a judgment is the saying of the law (or right).
- Veritas, a quocunque dicitur, a Deo est. Truth, by whomsoever pronounced, is from God.
- Veritas demonstrationis tollit errorem nominis. The truth of the description removes the error of the name.
- Veritas est justitiae mater. Truth is the mother of justice.
- Veritas habenda est in iuratore; justitia et iudicium in iudice. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment in a judge.
- Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi. Truth fears nothing but to be hidden.
- Veritas nimium altercando amittitur. By too much quarreling the truth is lost.
- Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The truth of the name takes away the error of the description.
- Veritatem qui non libere pronunciat, proditor est veritatis. One who does not speak the truth freely is a traitor to the truth.
- Via antiqua via est tuta. The old way is the safe way.
- Via trita est tutissima. The beaten road is the safest.
- Via trita, via tuta. The beaten way is the safe way.
- Vicarius non habet vicarium. A deputy does not have a deputy.
- Vicini viciniore praesumuntur scire. Neighbors are presumed to know things of the immediate vicinity.
- Videtur qui surdus et mutus ne poest faire alienation. A deaf and mute person is considered not to be able to alienate.
- Vigilantibus et non dormientibus jura subveniunt. The laws aid the vigilant, not those who sleep. [Cases: Equity ↻64.]
- Vim vi repellere licet, modo fiat moderamine inculpatatae tutelae, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad propulsandam injuriam. It is lawful to repel force by force; but let it be done with the self-control of blameless defense — not to take revenge, but to repel injury.
- Violenta praesumptio aliquando est plena probatio. A very powerful presumption is sometimes full proof.
- Viperina est expositio quae corrodit viscera textus. That is a viperous exposition that gnaws away the innards of the text.
- Vir et uxor censentur in lege una persona. Husband and wife are considered one person in law.
- Vis legibus est inimica. Force is inimical to the laws.
- Vitium clerici nocere non debet. A clerical error ought not to prejudge.
- Vitium est quod fugi debet, ne, si rationem non invenias, mox legem sine ratione esse clames. It is a fault that ought to be avoided, that if you do not discover the reason, you quickly exclaim that the law is without reason.
- Vix ulla lex fieri potest quae omnibus commoda sit, sed si majori parti prospiciat, utilis est. Scarcely any law can be made that is advantageous to all; but if it benefits the majority, it is useful.
- Vocabula artium explicanda sunt secundum definitiones prudentium. Terms of art are to be explained according to the definitions of those who are experienced in that art.
- Volenti non fit injuria. There is no injury to one who consents. [Cases: Negligence ↻550.]
- Voluit sed non dixit. The person willed but did not say.
- Voluntas donatoris in charta doni sui manifeste expressa observetur. The will of the donor, if clearly expressed in the deed of his gift, should be observed.

- Voluntas et propositum distinguunt maleficia. The will and the purpose distinguish crimes.
- Voluntas facit quod in testamento scriptum valeat. The will (of the testator) gives validity to what is written in the will (testament).
- Voluntas in delictis non exitus spectatur. In offenses, the will and not the outcome is regarded.
- Voluntas reputatur pro facto. The will is to be taken for the deed.
- Voluntas testatoris ambulatoria est usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is changeable right up until death.
 • That is, the testator may change the will at any time. This maxim is sometimes written Voluntas testatoris est ambulatoria usque ad extremum vitae exitum (same sense).
- Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam. The will of the testator should receive a broad and liberal interpretation.
- Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.
- Vox emissa volat; litera scripta manet. The uttered voice flies; the written letter remains. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↪ 15.]
- Vulgaris opinio est duplex: orta inter graves et discretos, quae multum veritatis habet, et opinio orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis. Common opinion is double: that proceeding from grave and discreet men, which has much truth in it, and that proceeding from foolish vulgar men, without any semblance of truth in it.

Appendix C

The Constitution of the United States

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of Honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to the House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Section 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Controul of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under the Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be a Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.

Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

Articles in addition to, and amendment of, the Constitution of the United States of America, proposed by Congress, and ratified by the Legislatures of the Several States pursuant to the Fifth Article of the original Constitution.

Amendment I [1791]

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II [1791]

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III [1791]

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV [1791]

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V [1791]

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI [1791]

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII [1791]

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Amendment VIII [1791]

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX [1791]

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X [1791]

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Amendment XI [1798]

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

Amendment XII [1804]

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest Number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII [1865]

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XIV [1868]

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV [1870]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI [1913]

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII [1913]

[1] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

[2] When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

[3] This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII [1919]

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX [1920]

[1] The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

[2] Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XX [1933]

Section 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If the President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

Amendment XXI [1933]

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. The article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXII [1951]

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of the President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXIII [1961]

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV [1964]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV [1967]

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Amendment XXVI [1971]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXVII [1992]

No law, varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives, shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

Appendix D

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

On December 10, 1948, the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted and proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the full text of which appears in the following pages. Following this historic act, the Assembly called upon all Member countries to publicize the text of the Declaration and “to cause it to be disseminated, displayed, read and expounded principally in schools and other educational institutions, without distinction based on the political status of countries or territories.”

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

Whereas it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

Now, Therefore

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

THIS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

- Article 1. All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.
- Article 2. Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.
- Article 3. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.
- Article 4. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms.
- Article 5. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
- Article 6. Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.
- Article 7. All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.
- Article 8. Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.
- Article 9. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.
- Article 10. Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him.
- Article 11. (1) Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.
- (2) No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offence was committed.
- Article 12. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.
- Article 13. (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State.
- (2) Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.
- Article 14. (1) Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.

- (2) This right may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from nonpolitical crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 15. (1) Everyone has the right to a nationality.

- (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.

Article 16. (1) Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.

- (2) Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.
- (3) The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

Article 17. (1) Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

- (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Article 18. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

Article 19. Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Article 20. (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.

- (2) No one may be compelled to belong to an association.

Article 21. (1) Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.

- (2) Everyone has the right to equal access to public service in his country.
- (3) The will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government; this shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures.

Article 22. Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to realization, through national effort and international cooperation and in accordance with the organization and resources of each State, of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for his dignity and the free development of his personality.

Article 23. (1) Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment.

- (2) Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.
- (3) Everyone who works has the right to just and favourable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.
- (4) Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

- Article 24. Everyone has the right to rest and leisure, including reasonable limitation of working hours and periodic holidays with pay.
- Article 25. (1) Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.
- (2) Motherhood and childhood are entitled to special care and assistance. All children, whether born in or out of wedlock, shall enjoy the same social protection.
- Article 26. (1) Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory. Technical and professional education shall be made generally available and higher education shall be equally accessible to all on the basis of merit.
- (2) Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.
- (3) Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.
- Article 27. (1) Everyone has the right freely to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits.
- (2) Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author.
- Article 28. Everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration can be fully realized.
- Article 29. (1) Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible.
- (2) In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.
- (3) These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.
- Article 30. Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.
